Prologue

1 The most cunning Serpent, bent on utterly destroying the whole human race, attacked the very First-formed themselves, so that, their stock left undealt with, the virus conceived might diffuse itself more widely through all their posterity; in no other way do Heretics — especially in our own age, the most prolific of sectaries — have dared by impious audacity to cast a deadly Aconite into the very fountain of truth itself, so that from where the edifice of the Christian empire has risen the higher,[1] from there it might fall to the ground root and branch; and with faith denied — resting upon the veracity of the First Truth — all the rest might readily be shown suspect of falsehood. Hence they insinuate into the credulous vulgar, in place of faith an empty confidence, in place of hope a presumption to be despaired of, and finally, in place of charity, an Impossibility of loving. So did these eminent little theologians learn to speak of God; thus Luther with his followers, while he grows insolent over his tumid certainty of salvation, concludes by an impious dogma that Christ the Lord underwent the penalties of the Abyss, no less in soul and body than in divinity; for so he proclaims his madness on Psalm 16, as our Boverius notes in his second examination on the unity of faith, article 5. Calvin, indeed, while he swells with the presumption of having justice imputed to himself, cries out that Christ the Savior was desperate in the very vestibule of his glory and amid the heaps of his merits: so he barks on Matthew 26, as Boverius also notes, exam. 1, Atheism 9. Finally, both hold the same view of charity, that with shameless brows they assert it was only ironically that God, as well as the commandments, prescribed it in those words of the Gospel: If you would enter into life, keep the commandments. Very many have professedly taken care to root out these, and others like them, errors, and indeed effectually; but by what means, or by what arguments, will become clear in the course of this treatise, whenever it falls to discuss each opinion or error according to the mind of St. Bonaventure.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'Christiani Iuperij moles'; rendered 'of the Christian empire' ('imperii') because 'Iuperii' is not a Latin word and the antithesis (heretics casting poison into the very fountain from which the Christian edifice rose, that it might collapse from its source) requires 'imperii'.

> ASTUTISSIMUS Serpens, totum prorsus perempturus hominum genus, ipsos Protoplastos adortus est, ut infecta stirps conceptum virus in totam propaginem latius diffunderet; Haud secus Heretici, hoc nostro praesertim saeculo, sectariorum feracissimo, in ipsum veritatis fontem lethale Aconitum iniicere nefario sunt ausu moliti, ut unde Christiani imperii moles altius surrexerit, inde radicitus corrueret; et negata fide, primae veritatis veracitate nixa, caetera quaeque falsitatis suspecta, facile arguerentur: Hinc pro fide inanem fiduciam, pro spe desperandam praesumptionem, pro denique charitate, dilectionis Impossibilitatem credulo Vulgo insinuant. Ita eximii hi Theologastri de Deo eloqui didicere; sic Lutherus cum sequacibus, dum in tumidam suae salutis certitudinem insolescit, Christum Dominum Barathri poenas, non minus anima, et corpore, quam divinitate subiisse, impio dogmate concludit; sic enim promit suam insaniam ad Psalm. 16. ut notat noster Boverius examine secundo de fidei unitate, art. 5. Calvinus vero, dum in imputandae sibi iustitiae praesumptionem intumescit, Christum Salvatorem in ipsius gloriae vestibulo, et inter meritorum cumulos desperabundum clamat: ita latrat ad 26. Matthaei, ut notat etiam Boverius exam. 1. Atheismo 9. De charitate denique ita sentit uterque, ut non nisi Ironice eam Deum, sicut et mandata, praecepisse perfrictis frontibus asserant in ea Evangelii verba: Si vis ingredi ad vitam, serva mandata. Hos, uti et caeteros huiusmodi, errores expungendos curarunt ex professo plurimi, et quidem efficaciter; sed cuius, vel quibus rationibus, in huius tractatus decursu patebit, dum unamquamque opinionem, errroremve ad mentem D. Bonaventurae discutere contigerit.

Disputation I: On Faith

1 The SUN is not seen otherwise than by the light which it itself gives; nor does God suffer himself to be seen by another's light: Faith alone points the way from where it itself has come. This is that light created first in the first Microcosm, separating night from day, indeed the first-born of the heavenly virtues, and therefore to be set forth in the first place: On one side it shines forth, and on the other it darkens, like that pillar of cloud, bright indeed to the Israelites, but dark to the Egyptians: It is indeed a Mirror, veiled with much obscurity, yet with no stain of error, exhibiting the great in a small form: It is also that triangular Shield, which, showing God to us as three and one, extinguishes all the darts of the most wicked one: Taking it up in all things, we shall resist valiantly in faith, defending it with those reasons which it itself brings forth, in place of the virtues.

> SOL non aliter, quam lumine, quod ipse dederit, videtur; nec aliena luce Deus patitur videri: Sola fides, unde ipsa venerit, eo viam demonstrat. Haec est lux illa in Microcosmo primo creata, noctem a die segregans, caelicarum virtutum quidem primogenita, ideo primo loco proponenda: Ex parte affulget, et ex parte offuscat, uti Columna illa nubis, Israëlitis sane lucida, AEgyptiis vero tenebrosa: Est quidem Speculum, multa obscuritate, nulla tamen erroris macula offusum, in modica specie, magna exhibens: Est etiam Scutum illud triangulum, quod Deum nobis trinum et unum ostendens, omnia nequissimi tela extinguit: Ipsum in omnibus sumentes, in fide fortiter resistemus, suis, quas parturit rationibus, ipsam pro virtutibus propugnantes.

Question I: What faith signifies, and what it is

1 FIDES is said from fit (is made), and that is said to be made which is said. So St. Augustine, epist. 19, ad Hieronymum. He took this, however, from Tully, lib. 1, offic., where he says: Credimus, quia fiat, quod dictum est, appellatam fidem.

> Quid FIDES significet, et quid sit.
> FIDES dicitur ex fit, et dicitur, eo quod fit, quod dicitur. Ita D. Augustin. epist. 19. ad Hieronymum. Sumpsit autem hoc ex Tullio, lib. 1. offic. ubi ait: Credimus, quia fiat, quod dictum est, appellatam fidem.

2 FROM this, ten modes have flowed forth in which Fides is taken according to St. Bonaventure. First it is taken for a Betrothal (Sponsio), in which sense the Apostle says of some, 1 Timoth. 5: Habentes damnationem, quia primam fidem irritam fecerunt — that is, the first faith owed by vow, because they vowed and did not render it, as St. August. explains, psalm. 75; and in the same sense, L. de Spiritu et lit. cap. 31: Aliter (he says) dicimus, non mihi habuit fidem: aliter autem, non mihi servavit fidem. Nam illud est, non credidit quod dixi: istud, non fecit quod dixit. Hence Fides is taken secondly for Fidelity in keeping a promise. Thus God is called faithful, Psalm. 144 and 1 Corinth. 10; the same, conversely, says of men, Hierem. 7: Periit fides in terra. Thirdly, Fides is taken for Conscience, Rom. 14: Omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est. Fourthly it is taken for the Sacrament of faith, or Baptism, in which sense St. August., epist. 23, ad Bonifacium, says: Non est aliud, parvulos habere fidem, quam habere fidei Sacramentum. Fifthly it is taken for the Assent to a conclusion proved by reason. In accordance with this Boët. says: Argumentum est ratio rei dubiae, faciens fidem. Sixthly it is taken for the Knowledge of comprehension. Thus it is said, Rom. 1: Iustitia Dei revelatur ex fide in fidem. Gloss: In fidem spei, quae dicitur fides, quia fidentissima et certissima est. Seventhly it is taken for the Habit of unformed faith, James 2: Fides sine operibus mortua est. Eighthly, for the Habit of faith formed, Rom. 1: Iustus ex fide vivit. Ninthly, for the Act of faith, as St.

Augustine says, Tract. 40 in Ioan.: Fides est credere, quod non vides. Tenthly it is taken for the Object of faith, as it is said in the Athanasian Symbol: Haec est fides Catholica. Apoc. 2: Non negasti fidem.

> HINC decem modi emanarunt, quibus Fides accipitur apud D. Bonaventuram. Primo enim sumitur pro Sponsione, quo sensu de nonnullis ait Apostolus, prima Timoth. 5. Habentes damnationem, quia primam fidem irritam fecerunt; idest, primam fidem ex voto debitam, quia voverunt, et non reddiderunt, ut explicat S. August. psalm. 75. et eodem sensu, L. de Spiritu, et lit. cap. 31. Aliter (inquit) dicimus, non mihi habuit fidem: aliter autem, non mihi servavit fidem. Nam illud est, non credidit quod dixi: istud, non fecit, quod dixit. Inde fides sumitur secundo pro Fidelitate in servando promisso. Sic Deus dicitur fidelis, Psalm. 144. et prima Corinth. 10. Idem e regione Hierem. 7. ait de hominibus: Periit fides in terra. Tertio sumitur Fides pro Conscientia, Rom. 14. Omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est. Quarto sumitur pro Sacramento fidei, seu Baptismo, quo sensu D. August. epist. 23. ad Bonifacium ait: Non est aliud, parvulos habere fidem, quam habere fidei Sacramentum. Quinto sumitur pro Assensu conclusionis, per rationem probatae. Secundum hoc ait Boët. Argumentum est ratio rei dubiae, faciens fidem. Sexto sumitur pro Cognitione comprehensionis. Sic dicitur Rom. 1. Iustitia Dei revelatur ex fide in fidem. Glossa: In fidem spei, quae dicitur fides, quia fidentissima, et certissima est. Septimo sumitur pro Habitu fidei informis, Iacobi 2. Fides sine operibus mortua est. Octavo pro Habitu fidei formatae, Rom. 1. Iustus ex fide vivit. Nono pro Actu fidei, ut dicit S. Augustinus Tract. 40. in Ioan. Fides est credere, quod non vides. Decimo sumitur pro Obiecto fidei, ut dicitur in Symbolo Athanasii: Haec est fides Catholica. Apoc. 2. Non negasti fidem.

3 It is taken also more broadly for a good reputation: as when someone is said to be of no one's fides. Eccl. 17: Qui detegit arcana, fidem perdit; conversely, he is called worthy of credit (fide dignus) who is said to have obtained belief.

4 In these modes Fides is named by a certain analogy. But in this disputation we shall treat of Theological faith, which is a Habit belonging to the intellect, by which we believe infallibly, and without any misgiving, the things revealed by God, on account of the authority of God revealing; and it is the beginning of our Justification and the Root and Foundation of the remaining virtues.

> His modis analogia quadam nominatur Fides. Nos vero in hac disputatione agemus de fide Theologica, quae est Habitus ad intellectum pertinens, quo infallibiliter, et sine ulla formidine credimus revelatis a Deo, ob Dei revelantis authoritatem; et est nostrae Iustificationis initium, et reliquarum virtutum Radix, et Fundamentum.

5 FURTHER, that faith of which James, chap. 1, says, Postulet autem in fide, nihil haesitans; and Matth. 14: Modicae fidei, quare dubitasti? and Marc. 11: Si habueritis fidem, dicetis monti huic, etc. — is rather reduced to Hope, and is confidence (fiducia), as Suarez admonishes, sect. 1, although Caspensis, disp. 1, sect. 1, wishes it to include Catholic faith, which I do not refuse. For this reason I judge the Apostle said: Et si habuero omnem fidem, ita ut montes transferam, etc., 1 Corinth. 13.

> PORRO illa fides, de qua Iacob. cap. 1. Postulet autem in fide, nihil haesitans: et Matth. 14. Modicae fidei quare dubitasti? Et Marci 11. Si habueritis fidem, dicetis monti huic, etc. Potius ad Spem reducitur, et est fiducia, ut monet Suarez sect. 1. tametsi Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 1. velit includere fidem Catholicam, quod non renuo. Ideo enim arbitror dixisse Apostolum: Et si habuero omnem fidem, ita ut montes transferam, etc. prima Corinth. 13.

6 The definition of faith handed down, Heb. 11, shows faith conjoined with its Hope: Est sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium. It is called substantia, or subsistence of things hoped for, because it is the foundation of hope, for through it the things we hope for in some manner subsist in us, because it is proper to faith to buttress Hope and Confidence; for a man could not hope unless he believed. It is called argumentum, or conviction, because faith ought to be an assent no less firm from Divine authority than that evident assent is by which the intellect is convinced and induced by necessity. Non apparentium is added, because faith ought to be about things that are not seen. So it is expounded by St. Bonavent., quaest. 3, drawing on St. Augustine lib. 2 de peccatorum meritis et remiss. cap. 21 and other Fathers. Whence Erasmus, tastelessly and insolently, denies that this is a definition of faith. See the Holy Doctor, and Valencia disp. 1, quaest. 4, puncto 1, with St. Thom. quaest. 4, art. 1; Morandus, Tract. de fide, quaest. 12. To this agree the other definitions of faith adduced by the Fathers, some of which Tannerus reports, quaest. 7, dub. 5.

> FIDEM suae cum Spe connexam ostendit definitio fidei, tradita Heb. 11. Est sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium. Dicitur: substantia*, seu subsistentia rerum sperandarum, quia est fundamentum spei, nam per eam subsistunt quodammodo in nobis res, quas speramus, quia proprium est fidei fulcire Spem, et Fiduciam; non enim posset homo sperare, nisi crederet. Dicitur* argumentum*, sive convictio, quia fides debet esse assensus non minus ex Divina authoritate firmus, quam sit assensus evidens, quo intellectus convincitur, et ex necessitate inducitur. Additur* non apparentium*, quia fides debet esse de rebus, quae non videntur. Ita exponitur a D. Bonavent.* quaest. 3. adducta ex D. Augustino lib. 2. de peccatorum meritis, et remiss. cap. 21. et aliis. Patribus. Quapropter insulse, et insolenter Erasmus negat, hanc esse fidei definitionem. Vide S. Doctorem, et Valentiam disp. 1. quaest. 4. puncto 1. cum D. Thom. quaest. 4. art. 1. Morandum Tract. de fide, quaest. 12. Cum hac conveniunt aliae definitiones fidei, allatae a Patribus, e quibus aliquas refert Tannerus quaest. 7. dub. 5.

[7] That this is the true definition of faith, all Theologians teach with the holy Fathers: Basil on psalm. 115, Gregory of Nyssa, lib. de vita Moysis, before the middle; Chrysostom, homil. 21 in epist. ad Heb.; Augustine, above; Hieron., in cap. 5 epistolae ad Galat.; Bernard, epist. 190. St. Thomas nevertheless confesses that it is not handed down in Scholastic terms.

> Hanc vero esse veram fidei definitionem, docent omnes Theologi cum sanctis Patribus, Basilio in psalm. 115. Gregorio Nyss. lib. de vita moysis ante medium*, Chrysostomo* homil. 21. in epist. ad Heb. Augustino supra*, Hieron.* in cap. 5. epistolae ad Galat. Bernardo epist. 190. Fatetur tamen D. Thom. eam non tradi terminis Scholasticis.

[8] It is proved, however, by St. Bonaventure that this definition is quidditative, to which St. Thomas and Richardus, 3 dist. 23, subscribe. For the Habit of a virtue can be made known from two heads, namely from the Object and the ultimate End; in the first way indeed a certain firm and certain intellectual habit is called the substance of the habit of virtue, which is the beginning and foundation of salvation, and hence the inchoation of eternal life. For just as substance is the prop of accidents, and the matter of the form and of the accidents themselves, so transumptively faith is called substance, because it is the foundation of the whole spiritual edifice; and therefore St. Damascene, lib. 4 de fide, cap. 11, defines it thus: Fides est hypostasis eorum, quae sperantur; et redargutio eorum, quae non videntur, as the Holy Doctor observes, ad 1.

> Probatur vero a D. Bonavent. eam definitionem esse quidditativam, cui subscribunt D. Thomas, Richardus 3. dist. 23. Nam Habitus virtutis potest e duplici capite notificari, nempe ex Obiecto, et Fine ultimo; primo quidem vocatur substantia habitus virtutis quidam intellectualis firmus, et certus, qui sit initium, et fundamentum salutis, adeoque inchoatio vitae aeternae. Sicut enim substantia est fulcrum accidentium; et materia formae, et ipsorum accidentium; ita transumptive, fides dicitur substantia, quia est fundamentum totius fabricae spiritualis, et ideo S. Damascenus lib. 4.

de fide, cap. 11. sic definit: Fides est hypostasis eorum, quae sperantur; et redargutio eorum, quae non videntur, ut observat S. Doctor ad 1.

9 ¶ Then its essence is expounded from the acts and the object; for habits are distinguished, or even specified, by acts, and acts by objects. It therefore expounds its act concerning the ultimate end believed, that is, God, who is not yet possessed, but hoped for, and therefore it says: sperandarum. And that that assent concerning the ultimate end may be shown not evident, it says: non apparentium — for in this Faith is distinguished from science; and yet that that assent may be acknowledged most certain, it says argumentum, or convictio, as others read.

10 That the Apostle is there speaking of Theological Faith is evident from the Councils, which, to show the necessity of faith, bring forward testimonies from this passage of the Apostle. It is confirmed, for there, chap. 10, the Apostle adduces that word of Habacuc, Iustus ex fide vivit. See the Holy Doctor on several Martyrs, sermone 18.

Ibi autem loqui Apostolum de Fide Theologica constat ex Conciliis, quae, ut ostendant necessitatem fidei, afferunt ex hoc loco Apostoli testimonia. Confirmatur; nam ibi cap. 10. affert Apostolus illud Abac. Iustus ex fide vivit. Vide S. Doctorem de pluribus Martiribus sermone 18.

11 You object first: No habit is a substance; Faith is a habit: Therefore.

Obiicies primo: Nullus habitus est substantia; Fides est habitus: Ergo.

12 The Holy Doctor answers that faith is called substance transumptively, as I said.

Respondet S. Doctor, vocari fidem substantiam transumptive, ut dixi.

13 You object secondly: No virtue is an argument. Faith is a virtue: Therefore. If you say that argument is taken transumptively: On the contrary; because it implies being an argument, and yet of things not apparent.

Obiicies secundo: Nulla virtus est argumentum. Fides est virtus: Ergo. Si dicas sumi argumentum transumptive. Contra; quia implicat esse argumentum, et tamen non apparentium.

14 The Holy Doctor answers that argument is said in two ways, properly and transumptively. Properly it is taken in four ways. First, Ratiocination is called argument, which is divided into six principal species: Syllogism, Induction, Enthymeme, Example, Sorites, and Dilemma. Secondly, argument is called a brief collection of a prolix discourse. Thirdly, the argument is called the very medium, in which the strength of the arguing stands. Fourthly, the argument is called the very maximal proposition, in which consists the whole force of the illation. In all these ways faith is called argument, because it convinces and illuminates the mind to adhere firmly to the object. And it is called the argument of things not apparent: because it makes one adhere more firmly to the object believed than a Demonstration makes one adhere to the object demonstrated.

> Respondet S. Doctor, dupliciter dici argumentum, proprie, et transumptive. Proprie accipitur quadrupliciter. Primo dicitur Ratiocinatio, quae dividitur in sex species principales: Syllogismum, Inductionem, Enthymema, Exemplum, Soritem, et Dilemma. Secundo, argumentum dicitur brevis collectio prolixi discursus. Tertio, dicitur argumentum ipsum medium, in quo stat robur arguitionis. Quarto, dicitur argumentum ipsa maxima propositio, in qua consistit tota vis illationis. His omnibus modis, fides dicitur argumentum, quia mentem arguit, et illuminat ad firmiter obiecto adhaerendum. Et dicitur: argumentum rerum non apparentium*: quia firmius facit adhaerere obiecto credito, quam Demonstratio faciat obiecto demonstrato.*

15 You object thirdly. This definition can also fit Hope, which is the substance of things hoped for and the argument of things not apparent; because through it we are certified that we shall have the things we do not see.

> Obiicies tertio. Haec definitio potest convenire etiam Spei, quae est substantia rerum sperandarum, et argumentum non apparentium; quia per eam certificamur, nos esse habituros res, quas non videmus.

16 It is answered that Faith is the substance, or foundation, of all the virtues; but not Hope, which is neither an argument, etc., because it does not make one assent to the truth.

> Respondetur*, Fidem esse substantiam, seu fundamentum omnium virtutum; non autem Spem, quae neque est argumentum, etc. quia non facit assentiri veritati.*

17 You object fourthly. To Faith it belongs to believe also the eternal punishments, which are not hoped for, but feared: Therefore it is not sufficiently called the argument of things hoped for.

> Obiicies quarto. Ad Fidem spectat credere etiam poenas aeternas; quae non sperantur, sed timentur: Ergo non satis dicitur argumentum rerum sperandarum.

18 The Holy Doctor answers that the punishments are contained under the things hoped for, as it were under the end, though not as under the object; for one believes eternal punishments precisely in order that he may attain the eternal goods to be hoped for.

> Respondet S. D. supplicia contineri sub rebus sperandis, quasi sub fine, licet non ut sub obiecto; ideo enim quis credit aeterna supplicia, ut assequatur bona aeterna speranda.

19 You object fifthly. A thing prior ought not to be defined by things posterior and less known: But Faith is posterior to Hope, and better known than the things that are not apparent: Therefore.

> Obiicies quinto. Non debet definiri res prior per posteriora, et ignotiora: Sed Fides est posterior Spe; et notior quam ea, quae non apparent: Ergo.

20 St. Bonaventure answers by denying the Minor; For it is defined by the end and the object; and although the end of faith itself, which is the things hoped for, is posterior in execution, yet it is prior in intention. And although the object of faith, not apparent in truth, is unknown to the infidel man, yet it is known to the man having faith. And even if it is unknown what sort of thing it is, yet it is known that it does not appear, and thus the definition is not by the posterior and the less known, but by what is prior and known.

> Respondet S. Bonav. negando Minorem; Nam definitur per finem, et obiectum; licet autem, finis ipsius fidei, quae sunt res sperandae, sit posterior in executione; tamen est prior in intentione. Licet etiam obiectum fidei in veritate non apparente sit homini infideli incognitum; tamen cognitum est homini fidem habenti. Quamvis etiam sit incognitum, quale sit; tamen notum est, ipsum non apparere, et ita definitio non est per posterius, et per incognitius, sed per prius notum.

21 You object sixthly. For the clearness of a definition it belongs that prior things be set before posterior ones. If, therefore, cognition precedes affection, and faith, insofar as it is an argument, regards cognition, while insofar as it is the substance of things hoped for it regards affection: therefore the definition is confused, while it says first: substantia rerum sperandarum.

Obiicies sexto. Ad evidentiam definitionis spectat, ut priora praemittantur posterioribus. Si ergo cognitio praecedit affectionem, et fides, in quantum argumentum, respicit cognitionem: in quantum vero substantia rerum sperandarum, respicit affectionem; ergo confusa est definitio, dum prius dicitur: substantia rerum sperandarum.

22 The Holy Doctor answers that the intellect follows the affection when it is inclined to assent to a thing by the command of the will, and in this way faith is a Virtue, because its assent is from the principle of the will; and therefore rightly the Apostle puts first that which regards the affection before that which pertains to the intellect.

Respondet S. D. quod intellectus sequitur affectum, quando inclinatur ad assentiendum alicui rei ex imperio voluntatis, et hoc modo fides est Virtus, quia eius assensus est a principio voluntatis, et ideo recte Apostolus prius ponit id, quod respicit affectum, quam id, quod spectat ad intellectum.

23 You object seventhly. Faith is the foundation not only of Hope, but also of Charity, and of the whole spiritual edifice: Therefore it is the substance also of things to be loved, and not only of things to be hoped for; and the more it ought to have enumerated these, the more noble they are. Item, it is about things both past and future: Therefore it is badly defined as being only of things hoped for.

Obiicies septimo. Fides est fundamentum non modo Spei, sed etiam Charitatis, et totius aedificii spiritualis: Ergo est substantia etiam rerum amandarum, et non solum sperandarum; et eo magis debuit ea recensere, quo nobiliora sunt. Item est de rebus, et praeteritis, et futuris: Ergo male definitur, esse solum rerum sperandarum.

24 The Holy Doctor answers that faith is defined in order to the end toward which it tends; and therefore it is defined in order to the things to be hoped for, which are the end of the virtue, and of our whole expectation of beatitude in the wayfaring state, which stands in the vision and love of God.

Respondet S. D. definiri fidem in ordine ad finem, ad quem tendit; et ideo in ordine ad res sperandas definitur, quae sunt finis virtutis, et totius nostrae, per viam, expectationis de beatitate, quae in visione, et amore Dei stat.

25 You object eighthly. Unformed faith is true faith; and yet it is not the foundation of the spiritual edifice. Therefore it is badly defined as formed faith alone.

Obiicies octavo. Fides informis est vera fides; et tamen non est fundamentum Fabricae spiritualis. Ergo male definitur, sola fides formata.

26 The Holy Doctor answers in corpore that if foundation be taken for what is actual and sufficient, formed faith alone is understood, for unformed faith is still an unformed foundation. This same St. Thomas intends, quaest. 5, art. 7, ad 4, as Valencia notes, ad 3.

Respondet S. D. in corpore*, quod si accipiatur fundamentum pro actuali, et sufficienti; sola fides formata intelligitur, nam informis est adhuc informe fundamentum. Idipsum intendit D. Thom.* quaest. 5. art. 7. ad 4. ut notat Valentia ad 3.

27 You object ninthly. A believer in despair has faith without hope.

> Obiicies nono. Fidelis desperans habet fidem sine spe.

28 Valencia answers: For this reason faith is said to be the foundation of the things to be hoped for, not hoped. From what has been said the definitions of Calvin and Kemnitius collapse — that faith is a certain credulity of the Divine benevolence and grace toward us. For these suppose that heresy, that we are held to believe that we ourselves are predestined, and in grace.

> Respondet Valentia, Ideo dici fidem esse fundamentum rerum sperandarum*, non speratarum. Ex dictis ruunt definitiones Calvini, et Kemnitii, fidem esse certam credulitatem benevolentiae Divinae et gratiae erga nos. Hae enim supponunt haeresim illam, teneri nos credere, nosmet praedestinatos esse, et in gratia.*

Question II: What the object of faith is

1 That we may find the most excellent definition and essence of FAITH, we must examine the object, from which the essence is taken, or at least is known a posteriori.

> Ut praeclare definitionem, et essentiam Fidei inveniamus, oportet obiectum scrutari, a quo sumitur essentia, vel saltem a posteriori cognoscitur.

2 D. Bonaventure observes in the body of the text that a twofold object is assigned, one material, called the Quod (That which); the other formal, the Quo (That by which), concerning which see p. 1. tract. 1. quaest. 4. The material is the thing considered; the formal is the ratio by which, and under which, it is considered.

> Observant ex D. Bonav. in corpore*, duplex assignari obiectum et alterum materiale, et dicitur* Quod*: alterum formale* Quo*, de quibus p. 1. tract. 1. quaest. 4. Materiale est res considerata: Formale est ratio, quae, et sub qua consideratur.*

3 All concede that God is the principal Quod object of our faith, against Calvin, book 2. Institut. cap. 6., who holds that not God alone is the object of faith, but also Christ, as He is Man. So the Holy Doctor here, and D. Thomas here, and p. 1. quaest. 1. art. 7.; Alensis 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 6.; Albert. 3. dist. 23. art. 12.; Durand. ibi quaest. 1.; Capreolus in Prol. sent. quaest. 4. art. 2. around the fifth conclusion; Caiet. ad art. cit. of D. Thomas; Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. punct. 1.; Caspens. tract. 15. sect. 1.; Morand. tract. unico in 2. 2. quaest. 1.; Scotus 3. dist. 23. quaest. un.; G. and his followers; Mastrius tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 1. art. 1.; Vulpes tom. 2. p. 3. disp. 30. art. 2.; Arriaga tom. 5. tract. 1. disput. 1. sect. 1.; Suarez disp. 2. sect. 1. and 2.; Cardinal Lugo tract. de fide disp. 3. sect. 2.; Amicus tom. 4. disp. 1. sect. 1. and following; Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 2., who say it is the common view. Yet some deny that God is the object of attribution as God, but will have it to be God complexly, as willing to beatify. So Vulpes with Gregory quaest. 4. prol. art. 2. and other Nominalists. They rely on John 20. These things are written, that you may believe, and that believing you may have life in his name; but this opinion is refuted even by the Scotists; nor does it rest on Scotus, as Mastrius notes num. 8. Arriaga indeed grants that God is the principal object of faith; but he denies that He is the object of attribution; and Mastrius notes that many Recentiores stumble here, confusing the principal object with the object of attribution, which many call the adequate object.

> Omnes concedunt, Deum esse obiectum principale Quod nostrae fidei, contra Calvinum lib. 2. Institut. *cap. 6. qui vult, non Deum solum esse obiectum fidei, sed, ut est etiam Homo, Christus. Ita S. Doctor hic, et D. Thom. hic, et p. 1. quaest. 1. art. 7. Alensis 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 6. Albert. 3. dist. 23. art. 12. Durand. ibi quaest. 1. asseclae, Mastrius tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 1. art. 1. Vulpes tom. 2. p. 3. disp. 30. art. 2. Arriaga tom. 5. tract. 1. disput. 1. sect. 1. Suarez disp. 2. sect. 1. et 2. Cardinalis Lugo tract. de fide disp. 3. sect. 2. Amicus tom. 4. disp. 1. sect. 1. et sequentibus. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 2. qui aiunt esse communem. Aliqui tamen negant, Deum esse obiectum attributionis, ut Deus, sed volunt, esse Deum complexe, ut volentem beare. Ita Vulpes cum Gregorio quaest. 4. prol. art. 2. et aliis Nominalibus; Nituntur autem eo Ioan. 20. Haec scripta sunt, ut credatis, et ut credentes vitam habeatis in nomine eius; sed hanc sententiam refellunt etiam Scotistae; neque Scoto nititur, ut advertit Mastrius num. 8. Arriaga concedit quidem, Deum esse obiectum principale fidei; sed negat esse obiectum attributionis; et Mastrius advertit, multos Recentiores in hoc impingere, confundendo obiectum principale cum obiecto attributionis, quod vocant multi adaequatum.

4 OTHERS, however, distinguishing these two objects, assert that God is the object in both ways. So Morandus.

ALII vero haec duo obiecta distinguentes asserunt, Deum esse utroque modo obiectum. Ita Morandus.

5 OTHERS distinguish the principal object, and the material object of attribution, from the adequate, as Caspensis with Suarez. These, however, are disputes of no great weight.

ALII, obiectum principale, et attributionis materiale, distinguunt ab adaequato, ut Caspensis, cum Suarez: Haec tamen sunt dissidia non gravia.

6 D. Bonaventure holds that the principal material object, and the object of attribution, is God; yet it is not the adequate material object. This is the common opinion, from Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 2. and Fulsens. lib. 3. cap. 1.

D. Bonaventura vult, obiectum materiale principale, et attributionis, esse Deum; non tamen est materiale adaequatum. Est communis sententia ex Tannero disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 2. Fulsensi lib. 3. cap. 1.

7 I ASSERT first, that the principal object, and the object of attribution, of faith is God.

ASSERO primo, obiectum principale, et attributionis fidei, esse Deum.

8 It is PROVED first from D. Bonav., because Faith is a Theological virtue, which has God for its object. For this reason Faith is often denominated from God: Mark 11. Have the faith of God. John 14. You believe in God, believe also in me. Ephes. 4. One Lord, one faith. From the unity of God note the unity of faith: 1 Thessal. 1. In every place your faith, which is towards God, has gone forth. Hebr. 6. Not casting aside again the foundation from dead works, and of faith towards God. Hebr. 11. He that comes to God must believe that he is. It is confirmed by the Holy Doctor from the Symbol: I believe in God. The same is taught by the Holy Fathers: Aug. lib. 4. de civit. cap. 20.; Cyril of Jerusalem catech. 5.; Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 13.; and others. So argue Caspens. and others.

PROBATUR primo a D. Bonav. quia Fides est virtus Theologica, quae habet Deum pro obiecto. Ideo enim saepe denominatur Fides a Deo, Marci 11. Habete fidem Dei. Ioan. 14. Creditis in Deum, et in me credite. Ephes. 4. Unus Dominus, una fides. Vide, ex unitate Dei elici unitatem fidei, Prima Thessal. 1. In omni loco fides vestra, quae est ad Deum, profecta est. Hebr. 6. Non rursus iacientes fundamentum ab operibus mortuis, et fidei ad Deum. Hebr. 11. Accedentem ad Deum oportet credere, quia est. Confirmatur a S. D. ex Symbolo: Credo in Deum. Idem docent SS. PP. Aug. lib. 4. de civit. cap. 20. Cyrill. Hierosol. catech. 5. Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 13. et alii. Sic arguunt Caspens. et alii.

9 It is PROVED second from D. Bonav. Every simple habit ought to have one object, to which all things are reduced; but faith is one habit, and has no other to which all objects are reduced than the Uncreated True, that is, God: Therefore. The major is clear. The minor is proved first from the Apostle, who often testifies that our faith is ordered to the knowledge of God. So Ephes. 1. Coloss. 2. and 3., as cited by Valentia; and from D. August. l. 1. de civitate, cap. 2. It is confirmed: for God is the most excellent object of faith.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonav. Omnis habitus simplex debet habere unum obiectum, ad quod omnia reducantur; sed fides est unus habitus, nec habet aliud, ad quod omnia obiecta reducantur, quam Verum increatum, idest Deum: Ergo. Maior est clara. Minor probatur primo ex Apostolo, qui saepe protestatur, fidem nostram ordinari ad Dei cognitionem. Sic. Ephes. 1. Coloss. 2. et 3. apud Valentiam, et ex D. August. l. 1. de civitate*, capite 2. Confirmatur; Nam Deus est praestantissimum obiectum fidei.*

10 I ASSERT second, that the adequate material object comprises many things besides God.

> ASSERO secundo, obiectum adaequatum materiale complecti multa, praeter Deum.

11 It is PROVED from S. Bonav. first from the Symbol, in which are proposed, besides God, the things to be believed: Creation, Incarnation, and other Mysteries of the Redemption, the Universal Judgment, the Church, the remission of sins, the resurrection, and eternal life.

> PROBATUR a S. Bonav. primo e Symbolo, in quo proponuntur credenda, praeter Deum, Creatio, Incarnatio, et alia Mysteria Redemptionis, Iudicium universale, Ecclesia, remissio peccatorum, resurrectio, et vita aeterna.

12 It is PROVED second from D. Bonav. Faith is of as great amplitude as charity; for we believe the things that are to be loved, and the things that are believed are loved supernaturally. Indeed faith believes even things not to be loved, as eternal punishments; but charity loves not only the Uncreated Good, but also our neighbor and other created things: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonau. Tantae amplitudinis est fides, quantae est charitas; nam credimus ea, quae amanda sunt; et amantur supernaturaliter ea, quae creduntur. Imo fides credit etiam non amanda, ut poenas aeternas; At charitas non solum diligit bonum increatum, sed et proximum, et alia creata: Ergo.

13 It is PROVED third from the Holy Doctor, because no future thing is God. But future things are believed, namely eternal life, retribution, and the infliction of punishments: Therefore. The major is evident; for God is eternal.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. D. quia nullum futurum est Deus. Sed creduntur futura, nempe vita aeterna, retributio, et poenarum inflictio: Ergo. Maior patet; nam Deus est aeternus.

14 It is PROVED fourth from the Holy Doctor. If anyone did not believe the histories of Scripture, even the smallest details, as that Saul sought the asses, 1 Reg. 9., or that Tobias's dog wagged his tail, he would be a heretic.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. D. Si quis non crederet historias Scripturae, et minutula, ut Saulem quaesiisse asinas, 1. Reg. 9. et Tobiae canem movisse caudam; esset haereticus.

15 But Arriaga denies that these are ordered to God. Indeed Scotus, 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2., denies that the faith of such things is ordered to God. Yet surely these too are not proposed in vain to be believed on faith: For with the heart we believe unto justice: but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation: Roman. 10.

> NEGAT autem Arriaga, haec ordinari ad Deum. Imo eorum fidem ordinari ad Deum negat Scotus 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. Sane, et haec non frustra de fide credenda proponuntur: Corde enim creditur ad iustitiam: ore autem confessio > fit ad salutem: Roman. 10.

16 He ANSWERS, then, that such minutiae are ordered to God, who is truthful even in the smallest things. Moreover Saul's solicitude denotes his obedience, by which he made himself worthy of command; and the exultation of the dog indicates the Divine goodness, which sent forward even a rejoicing little creature as a messenger to the blind man FOR HIM. Nevertheless faith is denominated from the principal object, that is, from God and from Christ, because this is our faith properly so called. Hence Calvin is mocked.

> RESPONDET ergo, ea minuta ordinari ad Deum, qui et in minutulis verax est. Insuper illa sollicitudo Saülis denotat eius obedientiam, qua dignum se reddebat imperio; et exultatio canis indicat Divinam bonitatem, quae bestiolam etiam laetabundam nunciam praemisit caeco ILLI. Denominatur tamen fides ab obiecto principali; idest Deo, et a Christo, quia haec est nostra fides propria. Hinc illuditur Calvinus.

17 It is PROVED finally, because prophecy accompanies faith; and that is concerning created good.

> PROBATUR tandem, quia prophetia concomitatur fidem; illa autem est de bono creato.

18 AS REGARDS the formal object, there is greater difficulty.

> QUOAD obiectum formale, est maior difficultas.

19 The FIRST opinion, which is ascribed to Aureolus 3. dist. 24. art. 2. and is defended by Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 1. art. 1., asserts that the formal object of faith is God under the ratio of first truth in being, and consequently under the ratio of deity. Bannes seems to follow him here, Valent. quaest. 1. p. 1., Tann. num. 25., and others cited by him. These, however, call the formal object the Quod.

> PRIMA sententia, quae adscribitur Aureolo 3. dist. 24. art. 2. et defenditur a Caietano 2. 2. quaest. 1. art. 1. asserit, obiectum formale fidei esse Deum sub ratione primae veritatis in essendo, et consequenter sub ratione deitatis. Sequi videntur Bannes hic, Valent. quaest. 1. p. 1. Tanner. num. 25. et alii apud eum. Hi tamen vocant formale, Quod.

20 The TRUE opinion is, that the formal object of faith is God under the ratio of the truthful revealer. So S. Bonav. in the body of the text, where he brings forward a similitude: For just as a Luminous body moves a power, as its object, when it is set before it either in Light, or as incorporated into earthly matter, as in the adamant and the carbuncle; so Divine truth moves the intellect in a twofold way, either as it is per se in the articles referring to God, or as united to a creature, as in the humanity of Christ, or in some other work. All the Thomists and Scotists follow him, with Scotus quaest. 1. Prol. and others as related by Mastrius num. 21., Tannerus dub. 3., Valent. quaest. 1. p. 1. §. 4., Fulsens. lib. 3. cap. 1., Bassaeus v. Fides.

> VERA sententia est, obiectum formale fidei esse Deum sub ratione veracis revelantis. Ita S. Bonav. in corpore, ubi affert similitudinem: Sicut enim Lucidum movet, ut obiectum, potentiam, dum illi exponitur, vel in Lumine, vel ut est materiae terrenae incorporatum, puta adamante, et carbunculo; ita Divina veritas dupliciter movet intellectum, vel ut est per se in articulis ad Deum spectantibus, vel ut unita creaturae, puta in humanitate Christi, vel in alio opere. Eum sequuntur omnes Thomistae, et Scotistae cum Scoto quaest. 1. Prol. et aliis relatis a Mastrio num. 21. Tannero dub. 3. Valent. quaest. 1. p. 1. §. 4. Fulsensi lib. 3. cap. 1. Bassaeo v. Fides.

21 VULPES, however, declines aside with a crooked nail, saying that God, as willing to reveal, is the formal object of faith. Surely He is believed because we have in fact that God has already revealed; yet we may say that faith embraces everything that God shall will to reveal, for we are bound to believe also what the Church is going to declare in a Council, Decree, or the like.

> UULPES tamen transverso ungue declinat, dicens, Deum, ut volentem revelare, esse obiectum formale fidei. Sane creditur, quia Deum habemus de facto iam revelasse; possumus tamen dicere fidem amplecti omne, quod Deus voluerit revelare, tenemur enim credere etiam, quod Ecclesia declaratura sit in Concilio. Decreto, vel simili.

22 THEREFORE our opinion is also that of Alensis 3. p. quaest. 78. membr. 4.; Alberti 3. dist. 23. art. 7. and 12.; Altisiodor. lib. 3. summa, Tract. 3. cap. 1. quaest. 3.; Richardi 3. dist. 23. art. 4. quaest. 3.; Durand. ibi, quaest. 7. num. 12., and dist. 24. quaest. 1. and quaest. 2.; Capreol. dist. 24. quaest. unica, art. 1. concl. 4.; Gabrielis dist. 23. quaest. 2. art. 1.; Marsil. 3. quaest. 14.; Cani. Lib. 12. de locis Theolog. cap. 3.; and the rest cited above.

> ITAQUE nostra sententia est etiam Alensis 3. p. quaest. 78. membr. 4. Alberti 3. dist. 23. art. 7. et 12. Altisiodor. lib. 3. summa, Tract. 3. cap. 1. quaest. 3. Gabrielis dist. 23. quaest. 2. art. 1. Marsil. 3. quaest. 14. Cani. Lib. 12. de locis Theolog. cap. 3. et caeterorum supra.

23 Soto 3. dist. 23. quaest. un. art. 2. and Gulielm. Paris. de fide DECLINE from it, saying that we believe God, not because He is truthful, or because what He says is true, but because He commands it to be so believed; and thus faith would be an effect of the obedience of the intellect exhibited to God.

> DECLINANT Soto 3. dist. 23. quaest. un. art. 2. Gulliel. Paris. de fide, dicendo, credi Deo; non quia verax est, aut quia verum est, quod ipse loquitur; sed quia iubet sic credi, et sic fidem esse effectum obedientiae intellectus, Deo exhibitae.

24 I ASSERT with D. Bonaventure that the formal object of faith, the Quo, is the first truth revealing.

25 It is PROVED first from the Holy Doctor in foundation 4. In that is the formal ratio of faith by which we firmly assent to the articles and mysteries; but this is the Divine truth and authority revealing: Therefore. So argue Valentia, Mastrius, and the rest. The minor is proved: for Scripture testifies to this in 1 John 5., where He gives as the reason why we should believe none other than that: The Spirit is he who testifies; and he argues from the lesser: If we receive the testimony of men; the testimony of God is greater. 1 Thessal. 2. When you had received from us the word of hearing, that is, of God, you received it not as the word of men, but (as it is indeed) the word of God, who works in you that have believed. And 1 Timot. 3. All Scripture inspired of God, etc. And 2 Peter 1. The holy men of God spoke, inspired by the Holy Ghost. The same is found in Matth. 16. Flesh and blood has not revealed it to you, but my Father. John 1. The Only-begotten, who is in the bosom of the Father, he has declared it. 2 Corinth. 4. God has shone in our hearts, etc. Galat. 1. For neither did I receive it (the Gospel) of man, but by revelation.

> PROBATUR primo a S. Doctore in fundamento 4. In eo est ratio formalis fidei, secundum quod firmiter assentimur articulis, et mysteriis; sed hoc est Divina veritas, et authoritas revelans: Ergo. Ita arguunt Valentia, Mastrius, et caeteri. Minor probatur: nam Scriptura id testatur prima Ioan. 5. ubi rationem, ut credamus ait, nullam aliam esse, nisi quia: Spiritus est, qui testificatur; et arguit a minori: Si testimonium hominum accipitis; testimonium Dei maius est. Prima Thessal. 2. Cum accepissetis a nobis verbum auditui Dei, accepistis illud, non ut verbum hominum, sed (sicut est vere) verbum Dei, qui operatur in vobis, qui credidistis. Et 1. Timot. 3. Omnis Scriptura divinitus inspirata, etc. Et Secunda Petri 1. Spiritu Sancto inspirati locuti sunt Sancti. Eadem habentur Matth. 16. Caro, et sanguis non revelavit tibi, sed Pater meus. Ioan. 1. Unigenitus, qui est in sinu Patris, ipse narravit. Secunda Corinth. 4. Deus illuxit in cordibus, etc. Galat. 1. Neque enim ego ab homine accepi illud (Evangelium,) sed per revelationem.

26 The same holds S. Dion. cap. 7. de Divinis nominibus; Irenaeus libro 4. cap. 14.; Athan. in oratione, quod unus sit Christus; Chrysost. homil. 8. in secundam ad Corinth.; Ambrosius serm. 21.; Hieron. in cap. 1. ad Titum,; August. contra epist. fundam. capite 14. The Holy Doctor confirms it from Richard of S. Victor.

IDEM habet S. Dion. cap. 7. de Divinis nominibus. Irenaeus libro 4. cap. 14. Athan. in oratione, quod unus sit Christus. Chrysost. homil. 8. in secundam ad Corinth. Ambrosius serm. 21. Hieron. in cap. 1. ad Titum, August. contra epist. fundam. capite 14. Confirmat id S. Doct. ex Richardo de S. Victore.

27 From these you have that the Divine truth entitatively in being is rather the Quod object, partial, of our faith. I know that the Divine truth in being is the first root of belief: for when I believe some revealed thing, I believe it because it is revealed by God, who cannot lie.

Ex his habes, veritatem Divinam entitative in essendo esse potius obiectum Quod, partiale fidei nostrae. Scio, veritatem Divinam in essendo, esse primam radicem credulitatis: cum enim revelatum aliquod credo; idco credo, quia est revelatum a Deo, qui non potest mentiri.

28 But a difficulty arises that twists exceedingly. For if the first root of our belief is the veracity of God, a circle follows: for when I ask, why do I believe the Incarnation? and answer, because God revealed it: and then am asked again: Why do you believe the revelation? and say: Because God cannot lie. Again, when it is asked: Why do I believe Him truthful? I answer: Because He Himself said and revealed that He is truthful. Behold a circle.

ENIM vero insurgit difficultas admodum torquens. Si enim prima radix nostrae credulitatis est veracitas Dei, sequitur circulus: Cum enim interroger, quare credo Incarnationem? et respondeam, quia Deus revelavit: Et rursus interroger: Cur credo revelationi? et dico: Quia Deus mentiri non potest. Rursus, cum quaeritur: Cur credo ipsum veracem? Respondeo: Quia ipse dixit, et revelavit, se esse veracem. En circulus.

29 FURTHER, revelation is obscure, therefore it cannot of itself produce assent: so it must be reduced to human faith, so that I believe because it is revealed by the Church, which says that revelation was made to it by God; But whence do I know that this was revealed to it by God? Thus there will never be an end.

DEINDE revelatio est obscura, ideo non potest parere sui assensum: Ergo oportet, ut reducatur in fidem humanam, ut ideo credam, quia revelatur ab Ecclesia, quae id revelatum sibi dicit a Deo; At unde; nam sciam hoc a Deo illi revelatum? Sic nunquam erit finis.

30 SOME seem to hold that our belief is reduced to human faith as its root. And this seems to be the view of Scotus, because at dist. 23. art. 1. he said with D. August. contra Manichaeos: I would not believe the Gospel, unless I believed the Catholic Church. But truly Scotus does not hold this, as Caspensis d. 1. sect. 3. and Mastrius num. 37. note very well; for Scotus knew that human faith is fallible, and therefore cannot be the basis of our belief.

ALIQUI videntur sentire, nostram credulitatem reduci in fidem humanam, tanquam radicem. Et videtur Scoti, eo quod dist. 23. art. 1. dixit cum D. August. contra Manichaeos: Non crederem Evangelio, nisi crederem Ecclesiae Catholicae. Sed vere id non sentit Scotus, ut optime advertunt Caspensis d. 1. sect. 3. et Mastrius num. 37. nam sciebat Scotus, fidem humanam esse fallibilem, atque adeo non posse esse nostrae credulitatis basim.

31 It WILL seem, then, that our belief is resolved into God the truthful, who, however, since He is incidental to me, must become an evident revelation through something: Does another revelation then come forth? surely, and this too will be through another; and so to infinity: Or it is necessary that it rest in some revelation which first makes me certain; but every one is unevident unless some Light is added: Will there be a habit which carries us to assent? But surely then the assent would not be on account of the extrinsic authority of the one declaring; and so it will not be an act of Faith. Nor will it be a free act, but necessary. For thus a boy, arriving at the age of discretion, would be determined by an infused habit to the articles to be believed, the terms alone being foreknown; just as, the terms of natural principles being known, we assent to them. Scotus is agitated by these doubts, yet he inclines to our way of speaking, which resolves faith into the veridical revelation of God, as Smisingh, Aretinus, and Mastrius observe.

> VIDEBITUR ergo resolvi nostra credulitas in Deum veracem, qui tamen, cum mihi sit incidens, debet fieri evidens revelatio per aliquid: Exitne igitur alia revelatio? sane, et haec erit per aliam; et sic in infinitum: Vel oportet, ut sistatur in aliqua revelatione, quae me primo certiorem reddat; quaelibet autem est inevidens, nisi addatur Lumen aliquod: Eritne habitus, qui nos ferat in assensum? Sed profecto tunc non esset assensus propter extrinsecam authoritatem dicentis; et ita non erit actus Fidei. Neque erit actus liber; sed necessarius. Sic enim puer, ad discretionem perveniens, habitu infuso determinatus erit ad articulos credendos, praecognitis solis terminis; sicuti cognitis terminis principiorum naturalium assentimur illis. His dubiis agitatur Scotus, inclinat tamen in nostrum modum dicendi, qui fidem in veridicam Dei revelationem resolvit, ut observant Smisingh. Aretinus, et Mastrius.

32 THEREFORE it must be known that the formal cause of my assent is the revelation of God the truthful declaring: but the material cause is the article itself; and among the articles, that one: I believe the holy Church, to which I believe, not simply moved by its bare attestation; for whence should I know that it cannot err? I am moved, therefore, dispositive by the Church: Because faith is from hearing: Rom. 10. It is, moreover, worthy of belief for many reasons: on account of the authority of so many wise men, on account of its integrity, on account of miracles which cannot be done by human power, etc. Nevertheless not even this suffices, but an efficient Light is required. Hence Ephes. 2. it is said: Faith is the gift of God, and John 6. No man comes to me unless the Father, who sent me, has drawn him. Thus, then, the Light of the Holy Spirit, with the infused habit also operating, inclines our will, so that it commands the intellect to give assent to the articles handed down by the Church, to which Church I believe as to a mistress of truth proposed to me by God, attesting, and dictating to me with His infallible truth, that she teaches the true faith. So D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 23. quaest. ult. and in 3. dist. 24. dub. 2. litt.

> IGITUR sciendum, causam formalem mei assensus esse revelationem Dei veridici dicentis: Causa vero materialis est ipse articulus, et inter articulos, ille: Credo sanctam Ecclesiam, cui credo, non simpliciter motus attestatione nuda eius; unde enim sciam, illam non posse errare? Moveor igitur dispositive ab Ecclesia: Quia fides ex auditu: Rom. 10. Est autem multis de causis fide digna; tum ob authoritatem tot sapientum, ob integritatem, ob miracula, quae humanitus fieri nequeunt, etc. Attamen neque haec sufficit, sed requiritur efficiens Lumen. Ideo Ephes. 2. dicitur: Fides donum Dei, et Ioan. 6. Nemo venit ad me, nisi Pater, qui misit me, traxerit eum. Sic igitur Lumen Spiritus Sancti, operante etiam habitu infuso, inclinat nostram voluntatem, ut praecipiat intellectui assensum dare articulis traditis ab Ecclesia, cui credo tanquam mihi propositae magistrae veritatis a Deo, attestante, et mihi dictante sua infallibili veritate, eam docere veram fidem. Ita D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 23. quaest. ult. et in 3. dist. 24. dub. 2. litt.

33 If, therefore, you are asked: Why do you believe the Symbol? Say: because God revealed it, who is truthful. By what means do you know this was revealed by God? Say: The Church tells me so. But whence do you know the Church does not err? Because the first Truth said that she is the mistress of truth; and this alone is the principle credible per se by divine faith, the divine light of the Holy Spirit operating, and the infused habit inclining. And thus one arrives at the root, which is the veracity of God; but this must be preceded by some disposition, lest a circle arise; and surely also by natural reason it is established that God is truthful, because He is the highest Being. See Valentia at the place cited; Artiagam disp. 1. sect. 4. num. 58.; Cardinalem de Lugo disp. 1. sect. 6.; Caspensem sect. 3.

> Si igitur interrogeris: Cur credis Symbolum? Dic: quia Deus revelavit, qui verax est. Quo pacto scis hoc a Deo revelatum? Dic: Ecclesia hoc mihi dicit. Unde autem scis, Ecclesiam non falli? Quia prima Veritas dixit, hanc esse magistram veritatis; et hoc solum principium est per se divina fide credibile, agente divino lumine Spiritus Sancti, et habitu infuso inclinante. Et ita devenitur ad radicem, quae est Dei veracitas; haec vero praecedi debet aliqua dispositione, ut vitetur circulus, et sane etiam ratione naturali constat, Deum veracem, quia est summum Ens. Vide Valentiam loco cit. Artiagam disp. 1. sect. 4. num. 58. Cardinalem de Lugo disp. 1. sect. 6. Caspensem sect. 3.

34 From which it comes about that the Veracity of God is as it were the principle; but the Truth of revelation is the conclusion deduced, as Lugo shows sect. 7.

> Ex quo fit, ut Veracitas Dei sit veluti principium; Veritas vero revelationis sit conclusio deducta, ut ostendit Lugo sect. 7.

35 Nor indeed is the natural disposition for believing the veracity of God, and for inferring the truth of the articles, sufficient, but the concurrence of the supernatural is required.

> Neque vero dispositio naturalis ad Dei veracitatem credendam, et articulorum veritatem inferendam, est satis, sed requiritur concursus supernaturalis.

36 HENCE a certain argument of Poncius is solved, disput. 27. quaest. 2. What connection (he says) has the veracity of God with the coming of Antichrist? For God would be truthful even if Antichrist were not to be: Therefore the veracity of God is not the formal object of faith. It is confirmed: for we believe even if we do not think about this veracity of God.

> HINC solvitur quoddam argumentum Poncii disput. 27. quaest. 2. Quam (ait) connexionem habet veracitas Dei cum adventu Antichristi? Esset enim Deus verax, etiamsi Antichristus non esset futurus: Ergo veracitas Dei non est obiectum formale fidei. Confirmatur; nam credimus, etiamsi non cogitemus de hac Dei veracitate.

37 It is ANSWERED, that the Veracity of God, not entitative, but declaring, is the formal object of faith; and thus, although God could not reveal Antichrist, yet, revelation supposed, he is the material object, believed because revealed by God, whence arises the very formal ratio.

> RESPONDETUR, Veracitatem Dei, non entitativam, sed dicentem, esse obiectum formale fidei; et ita, licet posset Deus non revelate Antichristum; tamen supposita revelatione, est obiectum materiale, creditum, quia a Deo revelatum, unde oritur ratio ipsius formalis.

38 You will say with Vulpes, and the Author of the Controv. among the Scotists. If the ratio of belief is the Divine veracity, insofar as God willed to reveal. Therefore the will of God is the formal ratio of faith.

> Dices cum Vulpio, et Auctore Controv. inter Scotistas. Si ratio credulitatis est Divina veracitas, quatenus voluit Deus revelare. Ergo voluntas Dei est ratio formalis fidei.

39 It is answered, that the will does not enter into the object of faith, but is supposed as a condition. From what has been said that question is almost solved: Whether revelation enters into the formal object of faith.

> Respondetur, voluntatem non ingredi obiectum fidei, sed supponi ut conditionem. Ex dictis fere solvitur quaestio illa: An revelatio intret in obiectum formale fidei.

40 The FIRST opinion is, that it is a mere condition, that the articles be believed. So commonly the Scotists: Smisingh, Vulpes disp. 19. art. 1., Arretinus, and others, as cited by Meldula Tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 2. Suarez seems to approve this mode disp 3. sect. 2. et alii.

> Prima opinio est, eam esse meram conditionem, ut articuli credantur. Ita communiter Scotistae: Smisingh. Vulpes disp. 19. art. 1. Arretinus, et alii apud Meldulam Tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 2. Hunc modum videtur approbare Suarez disp 3. sect. 2. et alii.

41 The SECOND opinion is, that it alone is the formal object of faith. So Poncius disp. 17. quaest. 2.

> Secunda sententia est, eam solam esse obiectum formale fidei. Sic Poncius disp. 17. quaest. 2.

42 The THIRD opinion is, that the formal object of faith is the Divine Veracity declaring and revealing, and that in this way revelation is of the formal object of faith. So Suarez loc. cit.; Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 1.; Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 2. at the end; Turrianus, Lugo, Coninch disp. 9. dub. 4.; Torres, Amicus, Arriaga, Tannerus, and other Recentiores, as cited by Meldula num. 54. The same is held by D. Bonav. at the very end.

> Tertia sententia est, obiectum formale fidei esse Divinam Veracitatem dicentem, et revelantem, et hoc modo esse de obiecto formali fidei. Ita Suarez loc. cit. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 1. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 2. in fine, Turrianus, Lugo, Coninch disp. 9. dub. 4. Torres, Amicus, Arriaga, Tannerus, et alii Recentiores apud Meldulam num. 54. Idem sentit D. Bonav. ad ultimum.

43 It is proved from the Holy Doctor in foundation 6. That belongs to the formal ratio which constrains us to believe; but this is the article as revealed by God: Therefore. The minor is proved: for whenever there is talk of faith, it is expounded in reference to revelation, to testimony, and to the word, as is evident from the Scriptural testimonies alleged above.

> Probatur a S. D. fundamento 6. Id spectat ad rationem formalem, quod nos arctat ad credendum; sed hoc est articulus, ut a Deo revelatus: Ergo. Minor probatur; Nam semper, quando est sermo de fide, explicatur in ordine ad revelationem, ad testimonium, et ad verbum, ut constat ex testimoniis Scripturae supra allegatis.

44 Nor is it enough to say that this is a condition; for we are said through faith to receive the word of God; but surely we do not receive a condition, as Arriaga and another note.

> Nec sufficit dicere, hanc esse conditionem; Nam dicimur per fidem accipere verbum Dei; At profecto non accipimus conditionem, ut advertunt Arriaga, et alius.

45 Mastrius answers that we believe by the revelation of God insofar as He is truthful, or insofar as He is an infallible witness, and that this is understood tacitly in the Scriptures; therefore the formal ratio of our belief is the veracity of God; but revelation is a condition, as the application of fire is the cause of heat.

46 Against this: for from Mastrius num. 55., the sole internal speech of God does not suffice for the formal object of faith in complete act; but external revelation is required: therefore this enters into the formal object. And that the Veracity of God also intervenes is no obstacle; for it intervenes as declaring and revealing. Wherefore revelation does not stand to the assent of faith in the same way as the knowledge of the good stands to appetite, which is only a condition; for revelation is the connection of the Veracity of God with things, and it is the object of belief; for veracity entitatively is not the formal ratio, but in declaring, as Mastrius asserts num. 23. — surely not as asserting within itself, for that matters nothing, but as it says to me externally by revealing. Hence just as in a Syllogism not only the evidence of the premises is the cause of assent to the conclusion, but also the evidence of the consequence — for I assent to the conclusion because I see that it follows from the premises, which I know to be true — so also here. See Coninch. disp. 9. dub. 4. It is confirmed: for the external attestation of God has the same certitude as the first truth itself, as Amicus notes; and it unites the first truth with the object. Yet this question is of small moment.

> Contra; nam ex Mastrio num 55. Sola interna Dei locutio non sufficit ad obiectum formale fidei in actu completo; sed requiritur externa revelatio: Ergo haec ingreditur obiectum formale. Quod vero interveniat etiam Veracitas Dei, nihil obest; nam intervenit ut dicens, et revelans. Quare non eodem modo se habet revelatio ad assensum fidei, sicut cognitio boni ad appetitum, quae est tantum conditio; nam revelatio est connexio Veracitatis Dei cum rebus, et est obiectum credulitatis; non enim veracitas entative est ratio formalis, sed in dicendo, ut asserit Mastrius num. 23. sane non ut asserit intra se, hoc enim nil refert, sed ut extra dicit mihi revelando. Unde sicut in Syllogismo non sola evidentia praemissarum est causa assensus conclusionis, sed etiam evidentia consequentiae; ideo enim conclusioni assentior, quia video sequi e praemissis, quas scio, esse veras; ita etiam hic. Vide Coninch. disp. 9. dub. 4. Confirmatur; nam testificatio externa Dei habet eandem certitudinem, quam habet ipsa prima veritas, ut advertit Amicus; et unit primam veritatem cum obiecto. Haec tamen quaestio est parvi momenti.

47 From what has been said there also arises the question: Whether the formal ratio of the object of faith includes revelation as obscure, in such a way that it is not exposed to a clear instruction.

> Ex dictis etiam oritur quaestio: An de ratione formali obiecti fidei sit revelatio, ut obscura est, ita, ut non exponatur institutioni clarae.

48 The FIRST opinion is that it pertains to the formal object of faith. So Suarez disp. 3. sect. 7.; Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 8. dub. 1.; Albertinus tom. 1. corol. quaest. 4. disp. 3.; and very many others; and it is D. Bonav., Foundation 3.

> Prima opinio est spectare ad obiectum formale fidei, ita Suarez disp. 3. sect. 7. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 8. dub. 1. Albertinus tom. 1. corol. quaest. 4. disp. 3. et alii plurimi, est D. Bonav. Fundamento 3.

49 The SECOND opinion says it is only a condition. So Scotus 3. dist. 31. quaest. unica, C. ad 2., whom the Scotists follow, and Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 1. art. 6.; Bannes ibi, art. 4. disp. 1.; Durandus 3. dist. 24. quaest. 1.; Coninch. disp. 11. dub. 1.; Amicus disp. 2. sect. 4.; Bassol. 3. disp. 24. quaest. unic. art. 1.; Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 3. art. 1.

> Secunda sententia dicit, esse tantum conditionem. Ita Scotus 3. dist. 31. quaest. unica, C. ad 2. quem sequuntur Scotistae, et Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 1. art. 6. Bannes ibi, art. 4. disp. 1. Durandus 3. dist. 24. quaest. 1. Coninch. disp. 11. dub. 1. Amicus disp. 2. sect. 4. Bassol. 3. disp. 24. quaest. unic. art. 1. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 3. art. 1.

50 I ASSERT with the first opinion that obscure revelation enters into the formal ratio of faith.

> Assero cum priori sententia, revelationem obscuram ingredi rationem fidei formalem.

51 It is proved most effectively by D. Bonav. loc. cit. That in which Faith differs from the other habits of the intellect pertains to the formal ratio; but faith essentially differs from science through inevidence: Therefore. The minor is proved: for that which is essentially destroyed when clear science arrives is opposed according to a difference; but this is obscurity: Therefore. The minor is proved: for when the vision of the fatherland arrives, faith is emptied out, 1 Corinth. 13. But even though there can be science and faith about the same object, as I shall say in quaest. 5., still faith retains its obscurity, because in believing it rests on an obscure authority, not on demonstration.

> Probatur efficacissime a D. Bonav. loco cit. Id, in quo Fides differt ab aliis habitibus intellectus, spectat ad rationem formalem; Sed fides essentialiter differt a scientia per inevidentiam: Ergo. Minor probatur; nam id quod essentialiter destruitur, adveniente scientia clara, est oppositum secundum differentiam; sed haec est obscuritas: Ergo. Minor probatur; nam adveniente visione patriae, evacuatur fides, prima Corinth. 13. Esto autem possit esse scientia, et fides de eodem obiecto, ut dicam quaest. 5. tamen fides adhuc retinet obscuritatem, quia nititur authoritate obscura, non demonstratione, in credendo.

52 Scotus answers that the greater or lesser clarity comes from the greater or lesser approximation of agent and patient, which is a mere condition: thus from a greater nearness to the light, a body is more illuminated, and yet there is not another formal ratio of acting. So also Mastrius.

> Respondet Scotus, maiorem, vel minorem claritatem venire ex maiori, vel minori approximatione agentis, et passi, quae est mera conditio: Sic ex maiori vicinitate ad lumen, magis illuminatur corpus, neque tamen est alia formalis ratio agendi. Ita, et Mastrius.

53 Secondly, Mastrius answers with Amicus by denying that the act of faith differs through obscurity, but through its proper formal object, which is the attestation of the truthful God declaring.

> Respondet secundo cum Amico Mastrius, negando, actum fidei differre per obscuritatem, sed per proprium obiectum formale, quod est testificatio Dei veracis dicentis.

54 But these things are empty; for about the same object there is the science of vision and faith; and not only according to the material ratio, but even as revealed by God Himself, and yet faith, when vision arrives, is destroyed: therefore by an opposed difference. But what is it for faith to be from God revealing, or declaring, something different from what is revealed clearly in the fatherland, if not what I say? for that authority, conceived in the revelation of the way, will by no means cease, but will be seen evidently, the obscurity of the way being removed.

> Sed haec sunt inania; nam circa idem obiectum est scientia visionis, et fides; neque solum secundum rationem materialem; sed etiam, ut revelatum a Deo ipso, et tamen fides, adveniente visione, destruitur: Ergo ab opposita differentia. Quid autem est, fidem esse a Deo revelante, aut dicente diversum a revelante clare in patria, nisi id quod dico? nam neque cessabit omnino authoritas illa concepta in revelatione viae, sed evidenter videbitur, amota viae obscuritate.

55 I know that the obscurity of the enigma is a condition added to the state of this blind man, as I said p. 1. tract. 4. disp. 5. quaest. 2. and tract. 10. disp. 1. quaest. 9.

> Scio obscuritatem aenigmatis esse conditionem, additam statui huic caeco, ut dixi p. 1. tract. 4. disp. 5. quaest. 2. et tract. 10. disp. 1. quaest. 9.

56 Surely obscurity is handed down in the definition of faith by the Apostle, by whom faith is called the argument of things not appearing: Therefore. It is confirmed: for in this everywhere faith is expressly shown forth. But for this state 1. Cor. 13. calls it AEnigmatical. And 2 Peter 1. compares it to a lamp in a dark place. Hence D. August. Tract. 40. in Ioan.: What is faith? to believe what you do not see. It is confirmed by Suarez with the argument of D. Bonav. in the opusculo, Principium Scripturae, taken from D. August. lib. de utilitate credendi, cap. ult.: What we understand we must refer to reason; what we believe, to authority; but authority does not show the thing in itself: Therefore the obscurity of the object is of the ratio of faith.

> Profecto obscuritas in definitione fidei traditur ab Apostolo, a quo dicitur argumentum non apparentium: Ergo. Confirmatur; Nam in hoc ubique expresse ostenditur fides. Pro hoc statu autem 1. Cor. 13. dicitur AEnigmatica. Et secunda Petri 1. comparatur lucernae in caliginoso loco. Idco D. August. Tract. 40. in Ioan. Quid est fides? credere, quod non vides. Confirmatur Suarez argumento D. Bonav. opusculo, Principium Scripturae*, sumpto ex D. August.* lib. de utilitate credendi, cap. ult. Quod intelligimus, debemus rationi; quod credimus, auctoritati; Sed auctoritas non ostendit rem in se: Ergo obscuritas obiecti est de ratione fidei.

57 Mastrius answers num. 83. that this is not a definition of faith, which he proves because the principal element in faith is omitted, that is, the authority of God.

> Respondet Mastrius num. 83. illam non esse definitionem fidei, quod probat, quia omittitur praecipuum in fide, idest auctoritas Dei.

58 But the Holy Fathers clearly say that it is a definition. I cited them in quaest. 1. That the authority of God is also posited there, Mastrius admits num. 64.

> At SS. Patres clare dicunt, esse definitionem. Eas retuli quaest. 1. Quod vero ibi ponatur etiam auctoritas Dei, fatetur Mastrius num. 64.

59 There arises, however, this doubt: Would there be an assent of faith concerning an obscure thing, if I knew evidently that it was so revealed by God, and thus that it was evident on the part of the revealer?

> Occurrit vero dubium: An esset assensus fidei de re obscura, quam scirem evidenter, ita a Deo esse revelatam, et ita evidens esset ex parte revelantis.

60 The FIRST opinion is the negative one: Durandi 3. dist. 23. quaest. unica; Suarez disp. 3. sect. 8. p. 3.; Turriani disp. 8. dub. 1.; Coninch. disp. 9. dub. 8.; Hurtadi disp. 27. sect. 1.; Lugo disp. 2. sect. 1.; Bannes ad articulum citatum of D. there he speaks of the evidence of credibility, as Morandus weighs at the place cited, and Cardinal de Lugo in his tom. de fide, disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 46., who nevertheless says the former opinion is the common and truer one.

62 Becanus cap. 1. quaest. 5. and Arriaga disp. 4. sect. 4. seem to have followed the MIDDLE opinion, as I shall report in the arguments.

> MEDIAM sententiam videntur secuti Becanus cap. 1. quaest. 5. Arriaga disp. 4. sect. 4. ut referam in argumentis.

63 I CONFESS that in D. Bonav., where he is cited on 3. dist. 24. art. 2. quaest. 3., I do not find what is sought here, but only that faith can coexist with some scientific cognition. Yet he seems to indicate that opinion in the Hexaem. serm. 2. and 9.; but he teaches the opposite in the places to be cited.

> FATEOR, me in D. Bonav. ubi allegatur 3. dist. 24. art. 2. quaest. 3. non invenire id, quod quaeritur hic, sed solum, posse dari fidem cum cognitione aliqua scientifica. Eam tamen sententiam videtur in Hexamor. serm. 2. et 9. indicare: sed oppositam docet locis citandis.

64 I ASSERT with D. Bonav. that the evidence of the attester would put the thing outside the object of faith.

> ASSERO cum D. Bonav. evidentiam attestantis reddere rem extra obiectum fidei.

65 It is PROVED from Suarez with the argument of S. Bonavent. 3. dist. 24. dub. 1. litt. The assent of our faith is free, and hangs on the will. Hence Rom. 10. says: All do not believe the Gospel. But if there were evidence on the part of the revealer, so that we would clearly know that the revealer is God, who is the first infallible Truth; already the intellect would necessarily assent to the clear thing: Therefore it would not be an assent of faith. The minor is proved by this Syllogism, to which we necessarily assent. Whatever the first Truth reveals is true; but this the first Truth, by supposition, reveals, namely that God is Three: Therefore this is true.

> PROBATUR a Suarez argumento S. Bonavent. 3. dist. 24. dub. 1. litt. Assensus fidei nostrae est liber, et pendet a voluntate. Ideo Rom. 10. dicitur: Non omnes credunt Evangelio. At si esset evidentia revelantis, ut clare cognosceremus, revelantem esse Deum, qui est prima Veritas infallibilis; iam intellectus necessario rei clarae assentiret: Ergo non esset assensus fidei. Minor probatur hoc Syllogismo, cui necessario assentimur. Quidquid prima Veritas revelat, est verum; sed hoc prima Veritas, ex suppositione, revelat, puta, Deum Trinum: Ergo hoc est verum.

66 RESPONDS Becanus, and Arriaga: the object of faith adequately includes not only revelation, but also the veracity of God. But when God the revealer is recognized, only the evidence of the revelation is clearly recognized, not the veracity of God; and therefore it is not evident according to the whole ratio of the formal object.

> RESPONDET Becanus, et Arriaga; obiectum fidei includere adaequate non solam revelationem, sed etiam veracitatem Dei. Iam vero Deo revelante agnito, agnoscitur clare sola evidentia revelationis, non autem veracitatis Dei, atque adeo non est evidens secundum totam rationem obiecti formalis.

67 BUT the argument proved that the veracity of God is also clear, for when it is evidently known that the revealer is God, the first Truth is also known. Hence in the major is assumed: Whatever God reveals is true.

> AT argumentum probavit, claram esse etiam veracitatem Dei, nam cognito evidenter revelantem esse Deum; cognoscitur etiam prima Veritas. Unde in maiori assumitur: Quidquid Deus revelat, est verum:

68 Responds Mastrius num. 91. that the consequence does not follow in that Syllogism, namely: Therefore it is evident that God is trine. But: Therefore it is true, is a testimony that the truth about the Trinity is true. Therefore the evidence is only extrinsically, not in the object.

> Respondet Mastrius num. 91. non sequi in illo Syllogismo consequentiam. Ergo evidens est, Deum esse trinum. Sed: Ergo verum est; testimonium de Trinitate verum esse. Igitur evidentia est solum extrinsece, non autem in obiecto.

69 Against this argues Suarez, for it is the same for this to be true, and for this to be so; for a proposition to be true is nothing else than for it to be so.

> Contra arguit Suarez, nam idem est, verum esse hoc, et hoc ita esse; nam propositionem esse veram, nihil aliud esse, quam ita esse.

70 Mastrius answers, conceding that they are the same when cognition of the thing is had through intrinsic principles, or through effects intrinsically flowing from it; but not when cognition is had through an extrinsic principle, the attester. So he concludes with Amicus, that the known conclusion is deduced in the same way from known principles in the attester.

> Respondet Mastrius, concedendo, ea esse idem, quando habetur cognitio de re per principia intrinseca, vel per effectus inetrinsece manantes; non vero quando cognitio habetur per principium extrinsecum attestantis. Ita concludit cum Amico, ex principiis notis in attestante, deduci conclusionem notam eodem modo.

71 Cardinal de Lugo num. 9. protests that he cannot grasp this solution, and deservedly. Against it I argue thus: Every truth evident a posteriori infers an evident consequence; but this proposition: God, who is the first Truth, known evidently, has said that the Incarnation has taken place: Therefore it evidently follows that it has taken place; for this evidence does not arise from revelation alone, in the way in which this utterance: The Pontiff is ill, pronounced to me by a Notary, who can lie, and so the object is obscure to me, even though it is evident that he is a Notary of Rome; but in the evidence of the revealer the truth of the thing is included as evident, because God cannot lie. From this the argument of Mastrius num. 86. falls to the ground utterly. It can be evident that some witness asserts this, e. g. that Constantinople was burned, and yet remain unevident that the thing is so; for the ratio is disparate, as I said.

> Cardinalis de Lugo num. 9. protestatur, se non capere hanc solutionem, et merito. Contra eam arguo sic: Omnis veritas a posteriori evidens, infert consequentiam evidentem; sed haec propositio: Deus, qui est prima Veritas, cognitus evidenter dixit, Incarnationem factam: Ergo evidenter sequitur, eam esse factam: Nam non ex sola revelatione oritur haec evidentia ad modum, quo haec dictio: Pontifex aegrotas, mihi pronunciata a Tabellione, qui potest mentiri, et ita obscurum est mihi obiectum, tametsi evidens sit, illum esse Tabellionem Romae; sed in evidentia revelantis includitur veritas rei evidens, quia Deus non potest mentiri. Ex quo ruit funditus argumentum Mastrii num. 86. Potest esse evidens, testem quempiam hoc asserere, v. g. Constantinopolim incensam, et tamen manere inevidens, rem ita esse; est enim dispar ratio, ut dixi.

72 LET there be, therefore, this argument: It is evident that everything revealed by God is true, because God is the first Truth: but it is evident that this is a revelation of God: The Son of God is Incarnate: Therefore it is evident that it is true.

FIAT ergo hoc argumentum: Evidens est, omne revelatum a Deo, esse verum, quia Deus est prima Veritas: Sed evidens est, hanc esse revelationem Dei: Filius Dei est Incarnatus: Ergo evidens est, esse verum.

73 YOU WILL ASK: Whether a Syllogism consisting of one premise of faith and another naturally evident has a conclusion of faith.

QUAERES: An Syllogismus constans una praemissa de fide; altera evidenti naturaliter, habeat conclusionem de fide.

74 IT IS ANSWERED, by denying it, for the conclusion follows the weaker part; but the weaker is natural truth than truth of faith. See Caspensem sect. 6. Valentiam puncto 2.

RESPONDETUR*, negando, nam conclusio sequitur debiliorem partem; debilior autem est veritas naturalis, quam veritas de fide. Vide Caspensem* sect. 6. Valentiam puncto 2.

Question III: Whether the object of faith is something complex

1 THEY treat this question in agreement with the Holy Doctors: Alens. 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 5. Albert. in 3. dist. 24. art. 5. Altisiodor. lib. 3. tract. 3. cap. 2. quaest. 2. Richard. dist. 24. quaest. 2. Durand. ibi, et alii; nor is there almost any difficulty.

HANC quaestionem agunt cum SS. Doctoribus Alens. 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 5. Albert. in 3. dist. 24. art. 5. Altisiodor. lib. 3. tract. 3. cap. 2. quaest. 2. Richard. dist. 24. quaest. 2. Durand. ibi, et alii; nec ulla est fere difficultas.

2 THE FIRST opinion is that the object of faith is something Incomplex, as God, the Incarnation, etc. Thus, as regards God, the principal object seems to be a clear reality.

PRIMA opinio est, obiectum fidei, esse quid Incomplexum, ut Deum, Incarnationem, etc. Sic, quoad Deum, obiectum principale videtur res clara.

3 St. Bonaventure refutes this view, because, although God in himself is simple, he is nevertheless believed not incomplexly, but complexly, as Valentia also notes quaest. 1. p. 2. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 1. art. 1. Caspensis sect. 1. num. 9. Since, therefore, the object must be taken not materially, as a thing; but under that aspect under which it is regarded by the habit, and by the potency, and the potency regards the object as complex; therefore it must be so enunciated.

HUNC modum redarguit S. Bonav. quia, licet Deus in se simplex sit, tamen non creditur incomplexe, sed complexe, ut notant etiam Valentia quaest. 1. p. 2. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 1. art. 1. Caspensis sect. 1. num. 9. Cum igitur debeat obiectum sumi non materialiter, ut res; sed sub ea ratione, qua respicitur ab habitu, et potentia, et potentia respiciat obiectum ut complexum; ideo sic enunciandum.

4 The SECOND opinion is that the object of faith is about complex truth, not only because faith regards the object as enunciated, and our intellective potency does not grasp it except by way of composition; but also because it is objected according to some difference of time, as: The Incarnation has been made: The Judgment has not been made. And if you say that faith must be changed while the enunciables are changed at different times. The Nominalists respond that the enunciates are not changed, because it is the same true enunciate, you will run, you are running, you have run, despite the diversity of times. Then, even if the enunciables were changed; still they say that Faith is not changed.

> SECUNDA sententia est, obiectum fidei esse circa verum complexum, non solum quia fides respicit obiectum, ut enunciatur, et potentia intellectiva nostra non capit, nisi per modum compositionis; sed etiam, quia obiicitur secundum differentiam aliquam temporis, ut: Incarnatio est facta: Iudicium non est factum. Et si dicas, mutandam fidem, dum mutantur enunciabilia temporibus diversis. Respondent Nominales, non mutari enunciata, quia est idem enunciatum verum, te cursurum, te currere, te cucurrisse pro temporum diversitate. Deinde, esto mutentur enunciabilia; tamen aiunt, non mutari Fidem.

5 Yet St. Bonaventure in 1. dist. 41. quaest. ult. rejected this view, because the enunciate signifies not only the thing, but the mode of its being, and since one is the mode by which the Judgment will be; and another, by which it is; and then again, by which it was; the enunciation also varies, and its truth varies. And if, on account of the immutability of the account, the enunciations of faith are immutable; they will also be one article, because one is the reason of all believing.

> HUNC tamen modum repulit S. Bonav. in 1. dist. 41. quaest. ult. quia enunciabile significat non solum rem, sed et modum se habendi, et cum alius sit modus, quo se habebit Iudicium; et postea, quo se habet; et deind, quo se habuit; varia est etiam enunciatio, et variatur eius veritas. Et si ob immutabilitatem rationis sunt immutabiles enunciationes fidei; erunt etiam unus articulus, quia una est ratio omnes credendi.

6 Therefore the Holy Doctor ASSERTS that the object of faith, as it is regarded by the believer, according to assent, is complex.

7 IT IS PROVED by the Holy Doctor, first from D. August. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 2. where he says: To believe is to think with assent.

> PROBATUR a S. D. primo ex D. August. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 2. ubi ait: Credere, esse cogitare cum assensione.

8 SECOND, because faith regards the object as true, and therefore as to be asserted. It is confirmed, because faith is opposed to error; but error is about the complex, attributing to a thing what it does not have: Therefore.

9 FINALLY, if the object of faith were Incomplex, say the coming of the Messiah, or the Universal Judgment: Then the Jews would not err in saying that they believe the coming of the Messiah, but that it has not yet come: Nor would he err who said that the Judgment had already been made. Therefore the Holy Doctor notes that the explicit object of faith includes even the differences of time, so that, e. g., it be believed that the Incarnation has already taken place, etc.

> TANDEM*, si obiectum fidei esset Incomplexum, puta adventus Messiae, aut Universale Iudicium: Ergo non errarent Iudaei dicentes, se credere adventum Messiae; sed adhuc non venisse: Neque erraret, qui diceret, Iudicium iam factum esse. Advertit ergo S. D. obiectum explicitum fidei includere etiam differentias temporis, ut credatur v. g. Incarnatio iam facta, etc.*

10 I ASSERT, second, that some object of faith, as it is a thing, say God, is incomplex. So D. Thom. Valentia, Caspensis, Mastrius; nor does S. Bonav. disagree, for God is most simple in himself.

> ASSERO secundo, aliquod obiectum fidei, ut res est, puta Deum, esse incomplexum. Ita D. Thom. Valentia, Caspensis, Mastrius; nec dissentit S. Bonav. est enim Deus simplicissimus in se.

11 IT IS PROVED, second, by the Holy Doctor. For those who of old believed the Incarnation implicitly did not believe it necessarily under some difference of time, but were able to suspend judgment: whether he had been born; or not.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. D. Nam credentes olim implicite Incarnationem, non credebant necessario sub aliqua differentia temporis, sed poterant suspendere: an esset natus; vel non.

12 YOU WILL OBJECT against the first assertion. Hope and Charity are about incomplexes: Therefore also faith.

> OBIICIES contra primum assertum. Spes, et Charitas sunt circa incomplexa: Ergo et fides.

13 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS by denying the consequence, because Hope and Charity are affections, and therefore regard things, say beatitude, God, etc. But faith deals in the intellect, composing, dividing, etc.

> RESPONDET S. D. negando consequentiam, quia Spes, et Charitas sunt affectus, ideo respiciunt res, puta beatitudinem, Deum, etc. At fides negotiatur in intellectu, componendo, dividendo, etc.

Question IV: Whether the object of faith can be false

1 The theologians answer UNANIMOUSLY that falsity cannot underlie the object of faith. So the Holy Doctors here; Alens. 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 1. Albert. 3. dist. 25. art. 3. Altisiodor. lib. 3. tract. 3. cap. 2. quaest. 3. Richardus 3. dist. 24. quaest. 3. and all the others, in Tanner disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 5. where he has nearly everything from the Holy Doctors.

> UNANIMES respondent Theologi, obiecto fidei non posse falsum subesse. Ita Sancti Doctores hic; Alens. 3. p. quaest. 79. membr. 1. Albert. 3. dist. 25. art. 3. Altisiodor. lib. 3. tract. 3. cap. 2. quaest. 3. Richardus 3. dist. 24. quaest. 3. et alii omnes apud Tanncrum disp. 1. quaest. 1. dub. 5. ubi omnia fere e S. Doct. habet.

2 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonav. first. Faith in the way belongs only to that of which there will be vision in the fatherland; but falsity cannot underlie the vision in the fatherland: Therefore.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo. Illius tantum est fides in via, cuius erit visio in patria; sed visioni in patria non potest subesse falsum: Ergo.

3 SECOND. As Charity is related to good, so is Faith to truth; but Charity does not desire except the good: Therefore Faith never makes one believe except the truth.

> SECUNDO. Sicut se habet Charitas ad bonum, ita Fides ad verum; sed Charitas non appetit nisi bonum: Ergo Fides nunquam facit credere, nisi verum.

4 THIRD. Everything that falls under faith falls under revelation from the first Truth; but nothing false can fall into the first Truth: Therefore neither into Faith. The major is proved; for the first Truth, as revealing, is the formal aspect under which that of faith itself [is believed]; but nothing falls into any habit except under the formal aspect of its own object, nor even into any potency. For nothing is attained by the visual potency except under the aspect of the luminous. The minor is proved by D. Bonav. For the false fights directly with the first truth, and is opposed to it as evil to good; and not being to being. This is the principal argument by which nearly all the others proceed, as Valentia says quaest. 1. puncto 3.

> Tertio. Omne, id quod cadit sub fidem, cadit sub revelationem a prima Veritate; sed nihil falsum potest cadere in primam Veritatem: Ergo neque in Fidem. Maior probatur; nam prima Veritas, ut revelans, est ratio formalis, sub qua ipsius fidei; nihil autem cadit in aliquem habitum, nisi sub ratione formali obiecti ipsius, ut neque etiam in potentiam aliquam. Nihil enim attingitur a potentia visiva, nisi sub ratione lucidi. Minor probatur a D. Bonav. Nam falsum pugnat directe cum prima veritate, et opponitur illi, sicut malum bono; et non ens enti. Hoc est praecipuum argumentum, quo caeteri fere utuntur, ut ait Valentia quaest. 1. puncto 3.

5 YOU WILL SAY, many things revealed depend on human faith, e. g. the authority of Clement X. from the fact that he is canonically elected. The Council of Trent, that it is canonically convened, and the like.

> Dices, multa revelata pendent ex fide humana, v. g. authoritas Clementis X. ex eo, quod sit canonice electus. Concilium Tridentinum, quod sit canonice congregatum, et similia.

6 IT IS ANSWERED, these depend on human faith as on a disposition; But the election is certain, because in Matth. 16. it is promised that the assistance of God will not be wanting to the Church.

> RESPONDETUR, ea pendere ex fide humana tanquam ex dispositione; At electionem esse certam, quia Matth. 16. promittitur, Ecclesiae non defuturam Dei assistentiam.

7 It is confirmed by the Holy Doctor. For the cognition under which falsity can lie is rather deception than illumination; But faith is the illumination of the mind, as D. August. says lib. com. epist. fund. cap. 14.

> Confirmatur a S. D. Nam cognitio, cui potest subesse falsum, est potius deceptio, quam illuminatio; At fides est mentis illuminatio, ut ait D. August. lib. com. epist. fund. cap. 14.

8 It is confirmed second by the Holy Doctor; for the Theological Virtue is more certain than every art and science; But falsity cannot underlie the sciences: Therefore.

9 IT IS PROVED by S. Bonav. in the body [of the article], because our faith relies on Divine cognition; but God comprehends all things, so that he knows even future contingents with certainty: Therefore. Here the Holy Doctor, taking his occasion from the Minor of the third argument, settles that question: Whether God can deceive; which question he also treats in 2. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 1. and Cano examines it on purpose, quaest. 3. de Locis Theol.

> PROBATUR a S. Bonav. in corpore, quia fides nostra nititur Divina cognitione; sed Deus omnia comprehendit, ita ut etiam futura contingentia certo sciat: Ergo. Hic S. Doctor, ansam arripiens a Minori tertii argumenti, definit eam quaestionem: An Deus possit decipere; quam quaestionem agit etiam in 2. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 1. et ex proposito quaest. 3. eam perlustrat Cano de Locis Theol.

10 For if God can deceive, the way will not lie open to us for knowing this or that infallible thing; since they cannot be reduced to the first truth.

Si etenim potest Deus decipere, non patebit nobis via ad cognoscendum hoc, vel illud infallibile; cum nequeant reduci in primam veritatem.

11 IT is the most certain assertion of all Catholics that it is heretical to say that God, by himself or through another, ever taught falsity, or that by ordinary law he can teach it. So Valentia admonishes. It is against the Priscillianists, in D. August. de haeres. haeresi 70.

EST certissima assertio omnium Catholicorum, haereticum esse dicere, Deum per se, vel per alium, unquam docuisse falsum, vel de lege ordinaria posse docere. Ita admonet Valentia. Est contra Priscillianistas apud D. August. de haeres. haeresi 70.

12 IT IS PROVED first by the Holy Doctor on 3. Ioan. He who receives his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true, and it is added on Rom. 3. But God is true: but every man a liar. Thence he deduces there also that whoever speaks the words of God, or in the name of God, is truthful, and thus God cannot deceive through another.

PROBATUR primo a S. Doct. ad 3. Ioan. Qui accipit eius testimonium, signavit quia Deus verax est, et additur ad Rom. 3. Est autem Deus verax: omnis autem homo mendax. Hinc deducit ibi etiam, quemcumque loquentem verba Dei, seu nomine Dei, esse veracem, et ita non posse Deum per alium decipere.

13 The Holy Doctor proves the SAME on cap. 8. Ioan. with those words: He that sent me is true. There he also elegantly solves the doubt: Why the Father is called Truthful: But the Son Truth: I am the way, the truth, and the life. Ioan. 14. And the Church sings in the office of the Most Holy Trinity Truthful the Father, Truth the Son. This doubt moved S. August. tract. 30. in Ioan. For since Truth says something more than Truthful, just as Piety says more than Pious; for pious is said from piety, not the other way around: Therefore truth ought to be appropriated to the Father, from whom is the Son.

IDEM probat S. D. ad cap. 8. Ioan. illis verbis: Qui misit me, verax est. Ibi autem solvit lepide dubium: Cur Pater dicatur Verax: At filius Veritas: Ego sum via, veritas, et vita. Ioan. 14. Et cantat Ecclesia in officio Sanctissimae Trinit. Verax Pater, Veritas filius. Movit hoc dubium S. August. tract. 30. in Ioan. Cum enim Veritas dicat quid amplius quam Verax, sicuti Pietas plus dicit, quam Pius; pius enim dicitur a pietate non e contra: Ergo veritas debuit appropriari Patri, a quo est Filius.

14 S. Bonav. ANSWERS from D. August. that the Father is truthful, because he spoke the true Word, which is Truth. And so he is not called Truthful by participation.

RESPONDET S. Bonav. ex D. August. Patrem esse veracem, quia dixit Verbum verum, quod est Veritas. Itaque non participatione dicitur Verax.

15 The Holy Doctor shows the same on 14. Ioan. with those words of Christ: I am the way, the truth, and the life, and he brings forward the exposition of Chrysost. homil. 27. and of D. August. tract. 69. and serm. 54. de verbis Domini. He shows it also on 16. Lucae, from Psalm 116. The truth of the Lord endureth for ever, and Psalm. 118. Unto generation and generation thy truth, and of mediated truth: But he that doth truth cometh to the light, that his works may be made manifest, because they are done in God. Ioan. 3. and cap. 8. If you shall abide in my word, you shall know the truth, and the truth shall liberate you.

Idem ostendit S. D. ad 14. Ioan. illis verbis Christi: Ego sum via, veritas, et vita, et affert expositionem Chrysost. homil. 27. et D. August. tract. 69. et serm. 54. de verbis Domini. Id ostendit etiam ad 16. Lucae ex Psalmo 116. Veritas Domini manet in aeternum, et Psalm. 118. In generationem, et generationem veritas tua, et de veritate mediata: Qui autem facit veritatem, venit ad lucem, ut manifestentur opera eius, quia in Deo sunt facta. Ioan. 3. et cap. 8. Si manseritis in sermone, cognoscetis veritatem, et veritas liberabit vos.

16 IT IS PROVED second. Whatever God can make has its exemplar in God; but a false enunciation, as false, has no exemplar in God: Therefore. The minor is proved; For truth is the ground of exemplarity.

PROBATUR secundo. Quidquid Deus potest facere, habet exemplar in Deo; sed enunciatio falsa, ut falsa, non habet exemplar in Deo: Ergo. Minor probatur; Nam veritas est ratio exemplandi.

17 IT IS PROVED third by the Holy Doctor. As goodness is related to malice, so is truth related to falsity; but from supreme goodness malice can in no way be: Therefore from supreme truth falsity cannot be. This argument is from proportion; for guilt repugns God more, although both intrinsically repugn the most perfect Being, as the Holy Doctor notes in the body.

PROBATUR tertio a S. D. Sicut se habet bonitas ad malitiam, sic se habet veritas ad falsitatem; sed a summa bonitate nullo modo potest esse malitia: Ergo a summa veritate non potest esse falsitas. Hoc argumentum est a proportione; nam culpa magis Deo repugnat, tametsi Enti perfectissimo utrumque intrinsece repugnet, ut advertit S. Doctor. in corpore.

18 IT IS PROVED fourth by the Holy Doctor. True and Being are convertible: But there cannot be from God anything that is not a being: Therefore neither can it be true[1]: But a false enunciation says the privation of the true: Therefore.

[1] Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'Ergo neque potest esse, sit veram' (djvu layer: 'Ergo ncque ootcft eflc , qood non fic vcmm'); rendered as 'Ergo neque potest esse, quod non sit verum' — the print fragment shows 'quod non' after 'esse', which the transcription had dropped.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore. Verum, et Ens convertuntur: Sed non potest a Deo esse aliquid, quod non sit ens: Ergo neque potest esse, quod non sit verum: Sed enunciatio falsa dicit privationem veri: Ergo.

19 IT IS PROVED fifth. If he can say a false thing; either ignorantly, or knowingly; Not ignorantly, because God is of infinite wisdom; Nor knowingly, because thus he would lie; But to say that God lies is profane and impious against Scripture and the Fathers. Therefore: The subsumption is proved. Num. 23. God is not as a man, that he may lie. Psal. 5. Thou wilt destroy all that speak a lie.

PROBATUR quinto. Si potest dicere falsum; vel hoc ignoranter, vel scienter; Non ignoranter, quia Deus est infinitae sapientiae; Neque scienter, quia sic mentiretur; At dicere, Deum mentiri, est prophanum, et impium contra Scripturam, et Patres. Ergo: Subsumptum probatur. Num. 23. Non est Deus quasi homo, ut mentiatur. Psal. 5. Perdes omnes, qui loquuntur mendacium.

20 The same the Holy Fathers proclaim with one voice: Athan. lib. de Incarn. Verbi. Chrysost. homil. in Symbolum Apostolorum, Cyrill. Alex. lib. 2. in Ioan. cap. 69. Ambros. lib. 6. epistolarum, epistola 57. where he brings forward that of Numer. 23. and Hebr. 6. It is impossible for God to lie. D. August. 22. de civit. cap. 25. and lib. 1. de Symbolo ad Cathec. cap. 1. Anselm. lib. 1. Cur Deus homo, cap. 22. Valentia cites them.

Idem conclamant SS. Athan. lib. de Incarn. Verbi. Chrysost. homil. in Symbolum Apostolorum, Cyrill. Alex. lib. 2. in Ioan. cap. 69. Ambros. lib. 6. epistolarum, epistola 57. ubi affert id Numer. 23. et Hebr. 6. Impossibile est mentiri Deum. D. August. 22. de civit. cap. 25. et lib. 1. de Symbolo ad Cathec. cap. 1. Anselm. lib. 1. Cur Deus homo, cap. 22. Eos refert Valentia.

21 From these Fathers S. Bonav. extracts an argument. That which says imperfection is impossible to God; But lying says imperfection; likewise also deception through falsity; for it says the lack of truth: Therefore. This is the argument of these Fathers to the letter, who from the omnipotence of God gather, indeed, that he cannot lie; because to lie is to fail, not to be able.

> Ex his Patribus eruit S. Bonav. argumentum. Id, quod dicit imperfectionem, est Deo impossibile; At mendacium dicit imperfectionem; similiter et deceptio per falsitatem; dicit enim carentiam veritatis: Ergo. Hoc est ad litteram argumentum horum Patrum, qui ex omnipotentia Dei imo colligunt, eum non posse mentiri; quia mentiri, est deficere, non autem posse.

22 YOU WILL OBJECT first with certain Scriptures fighting in words. Exod. 20. I am a mighty and jealous God, punishing the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the fourth generation. And yet in Ezech. 18. it is said: The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father.

> OBIICIES primo aliquas Scripturas verbis pugnantes. Exod. 20. Ego sum Deus fortis, et Zelotes, puniens peccata Patrum in filios usque ad quartam generationem. Et tamen Ezech. 18. dicitur: Filius non portabit iniquitatem Patris.

23 LIKEWISE in Iob. 1. it is said: In all these things Job did not sin, nor did he speak any foolish thing against God. The contrary of which Iob 39. and 42. signifies. Similarly cap. 7. he says: I have sinned, what shall I do to thee; But cap. 27. For my heart hath not reproved me.

> ITEM Iob. 1. dicitur: In omnibus his non peccavit Iob, neque stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est. Cuius contrarium significat Iob 39. et 42. Similiter cap. 7. ait: Peccavi, quid faciam tibi; At cap. 27. Neque enim reprehendit me cor meum.

24 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS that these do not clash; and to that of Exodus he responds, in the sermon on the ten commandments, that God punishes with temporal inconveniences; (for, as regards these, the Son is part of the Father) but not with eternal punishments, and in this sense Ezechiel speaks.

> RESPONDET S. D. haec non implicare, et ad id Exodi respondet, sermone de decem praeceptis, Deum punire temporalibus incommodis; (nam, quoad haec, Filius est pars Patris) non autem poenis aeternis, et hoc sensu loquitur Ezechiël.

25 To the places of Job I say that he sinned lightly, cap. 7. not gravely, cap. 37. and cap. 39. and 42. he confesses he spoke foolishly; yet did not sin. See D. Gregory lib. 32. Moral. cap. 1.

> Ad loca Iob dico, eum peccasse leviter, cap. 7. non graviter cap. 37. et cap. 39. et 42. insipienter locutum se fatetur; non tamen peccasse. Vide D. Gregorium lib. 32. Moral. cap. 1.

26 THEY OBJECT second with the Scriptures in which God seems to have deceived, which Melchior Cano reports at length lib. 2. de locis, cap. 2. Genes. 22. Abraham said: Stay you here, I and the boy: after we have worshipped, we will return; and yet he wished to immolate his son. That he spoke, however, by divine instinct, Ambr. asserts lib. 1. de Abraham, cap. 8.

> OBIICIUNT secundo Scripturas, in quibus videtur Deus decepisse, quas refert late Melchior Cano lib. 2. de locis, cap. 2. Genes. 22. Abraham dixit: Expectate hic Ego et puer, postquam adoraverimus, revertemur; et tamen volebat immolare filium. Locutum autem divino instinctu, asserit Ambr. lib. 1. de Abraham, cap. 8.

27 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS 3. dist. 38. quaest. 2. that Abraham did not lie, because he thought that the son, once immolated, was to be raised again, as is said in Hebr. 11. and therefore would return. So D. August. expounds it serm. 71. and 72. de tempore. Gabriel 3. dist. 30. Carthus. on that place, and Valentia loc. cit. follow them.

> RESPONDET S. D. 3. dist. 38. quaest. 2. Abraham non esse mentitum, quia putabat, filium immolatum resuscitandum, ut dicitur Hebr. 11. et ideo reversurum. Ita exponit D. August. serm. 71. et 72. de tempore. Eos sequuntur Gabriel 3. dist. 30. Carthus. in eum locum Valentia loc. cit.

28 THEY OPPOSE Genes. 27. where Jacob lied. I am Esau, which he yet said by the instinct of God, as Pope Innocent teaches, cap. Gaudemus extra, de divortiis.

29 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS 3. dist. 38. dub. 4. litt. that Jacob spoke the truth; for he was Esau not indeed in person, but by election to the primogeniture, of which he had been instructed by his mother, who had been taught that the elder would serve the younger, Genes. 25. Nor did he deceive by the garment, but he signified mysteries. So with D. August. contra mendacium cap. 10. and Ambrose de Iacob. Cano, Valentia, and others follow them. See Pererius and Ribeta on those places, on cap. 11. Hebr.

> RESPONDET S. D. 3. dist. 38. dub. 4. litt. Iacob verum dixisse; nam erat Esau non quidem persona, sed electione ad primogenituram, de quo instructus erat a matre, quae edocta erat, Maiorem serviturum minori Genes. 25. Neque etiam vestitu decepit, sed mysteria signavit. Ita cum D. August. contra mendacium cap. 10. Ambrosio de Iacob. Sequuntur Cano, Valentia, et alii. Vide ad ea loca Pererium, et Ribetam ad cap. 11. Hebr.

30 THEY OBJECT also Isa. 38. and 4. Reg. 20. where the Lord through Isaiah announced death to Ezechias; yet he did not die. So also Ninive was not overthrown, Ionae 2.

> OBIICIUNT id Isa. 38. et 4. Reg. 20. ubi Dominus per Isaiam nunciavit Ezechiae mortem; nec tamen mortuus est. Sic et Niniue non est subversa, Ionae 2.

31 TO THIS, and the like, I responded p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 8. quaest. 1. from D. Bonav. lib. 1. compend. Theolog. verit. cap. 19. that Ezechias was to die according to natural causes, but God delivered him by a miracle. So also Ninive was to be destroyed according to its demerits, yet was delivered on account of penance, which, if it had not done, it would have perished.

> HUIC, et similibus respondi p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 8. quaest. 1. ex D Bonav. lib. 1. compend. Theolog. verit. cap. 19. Ezechiam moriturum secundum causas naturales, sed Deus eum miraculo liberavit. Sic et Niniue secundum demerita erat destruenda, liberata tamen ob poenitentiam, quam si non fecisset, periisset.

32 THEY OBJECT also 3. Reg. 22. where the Lord says: Who shall deceive Achab? and there went forth a wicked spirit, which took upon itself to deceive all the prophets. And the Lord: Go forth, and do so. And the prophet subjoins: Behold the Lord hath given a lying spirit in the mouth of all the prophets.

> OBIICIUNT etiam id 3. Reg. 22. ubi ait Dominus: Quis decipiet Achab? et prodiit Spiritus nequam, qui suscepit decipiendos omnes prophetas. Et Dominus: Egredere, et fac ita. Et subdit propheta: Ecce dedit Dominus spiritum mendacem in ore omnium prophetarum.

33 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS in 2. dist. 10. dub. 1. and dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 1. to the arguments, that by those words is not signified the command of God, but permission, which is often in the Scriptures expressed in the same manner of speaking as the command, as Ioan. 13. That which thou dost, do quickly, on which see S. Bonav. there, where he brings forward other expositions. On the same answer rely Morandus, Cano, Valentia, and the rest.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. in 2. dist. 10. dub. 1. et dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad argumenta, illis verbis non signari praeceptum Dei, sed permissionem, quae saepe in Scripturis eodem modo dicendi explicatur, quo et praeceptum, ut Ioan. 13. Quod facis, fac citius, de quo vide S. Bonav. ibi, ubi alias expositiones affert. Eodem responso nituntur Morandus, Cano, Valentia, et reliqui.

34 I ASSERT consequently, second, that no power can cause God to teach falsity. It is against Gabriel 3. dist. 38. quaest. unica Aliacum p quaest. 12. Hybernicum, and Adam, whom Gregory cites primo, dist. 42. quaest. 2. but it is the common [opinion] of the Theologians.

> ASSERO consequenter secundo, nulla potentia Deum posse docere falsum. Est contra Gabrielem 3. dist. 38. quaest. unica Aliacum p quaest. 12. Hybernicum, et Adamum, quos refert Gregorius primo, dist. 42. quaest. 2. est vero communis Theologorum.

35 IT IS PROVED first. Hebr. 6. where it says: It is impossible for God to lie, which all the arguments of S. Bonav. prove, drawn from the nature of God, and strengthened with the Holy Fathers; For they deny that God can lie for this reason, because this is an imperfection simply repugning the nature, or the Divine perfection.

> PROBATUR primo. Hebr. 6. ubi ait: Impossibile est mentiri Deum, quod probant rationes omnes S. Bonav. sumptae ex natura Dei, et cum Sanctis Patribus roboratae; Illi enim propterea negant, posse Deum mentiri, quia haec est imperfectio repugnans simpliciter naturae, seu perfectioni Divinae.

36 Hence the Holy Doctor argues: he, of whom all perfection is simply to be asserted, and authority, and all imperfection to be denied, cannot take on the imperfection of lying: But God has supreme perfection, and authority for persuading: Therefore lying repugns him.

> Hinc arguit S. Doct. is, de quo omnis perfectio simpliciter est asserenda, et authoritas, atque omnis imperfectio neganda, non potest capere imperfectionem mentiendi: Sed Deus habet summam perfectionem, et authoritatem ad persuadendum: Ergo ei repugnat mentiri.

37 IT IS PROVED by another argument by the Holy Doctor in the body, from the consequence of guilt. It is certain that God cannot be the author of guilt. It is also certain that it would be a most grievous thing for us, unless we believed most firmly all the things revealed by God that are of faith; for to doubt of them is heresy, or at least mortal sin; but to deny them is open heresy. But if God could lie, we should not be held to believe firmly the things revealed by God; indeed we could justly always doubt: whether God willed to lie, or to deceive us: Therefore. It is proved that this follows, for we could not be certified of the nature of God on the hypothesis that lying does not repugn him; Nor from ordinary law, because if he can lie, we are not certain: whether in some thing he willed to lie: Therefore. And so our credulity would not be reduced to the solid root of the truthfulness of God, as Morandus notes. This is the genuine argument of the Seraphic Doctor, if it be thoroughly pondered, and it is of such weight with Valentia that nothing further for persuading would be desired. For the argument of the Seraphic Doctor is not absolutely from the mere proportion of deception with guilt; as if, since God cannot sin, neither can he deceive; for to sin is graver than to deceive another by a word, as the Holy Doctor himself notes; But it is from the consequence inducing guilt. On account of these things the assertion is held to be of faith by Morandus T. VII. quaest. 2. Pasqualigo disp. 31. sect. 1. and others.

> PROBATUR alia ratione S Doct. in corpore ex consequentia culpae. Certum est, Deum non posse esse authorem culpae. Certum est etiam, culpam esse nobis gravissimam, nisi credamus firmissime omnia a Deo revelata de fide; nam de eis dubitare, est haeresis, vel saltem culpa mortalis; negare vero, est haeresis aperta. At si Deus posset mentiri, non teneremur firmiter credere revelata a Deo; imo possemus iuste semper dubitare: an Deus voluerit mentiri, seu nos deciperet: Ergo. Probatur, hoc consequi, non enim possemus certificari de natura Dei ex hypothesi, quod non repugnat ei mentiri; Neque ex lege ordinaria, quia si potest mentiri, non sumus certi: an in aliquo mentiri voluerit: Ergo. Itaque non reduceretur nostra credulitas in radicem solidam veracitatis Dei, ut advertit Morandus. Hoc est germanum Seraphici argumentum, si penitus pensitetur, quod tanti ponderis est apud Valentiam, ut nil ad persuadendum desideretur. Neque enim argumentum Seraphici est absolute a sola proportione deceptionis cum culpa; ut sicuti non potest Deus peccare, ita nequeat decipere; nam peccare est gravius, quam dicto alium decipere, ut ipse S. Doct. advertit; Sed ex consequentia inducente culpam. Propter haec censetur assertio de fide a Morando T. VII. quaest. 2. Pasqualigo disp. 31. sect. 1. et aliis.

Question V: Whether the object of faith can be evident scientifically

1 The FIRST opinion denies that there can be, concerning the same thing, both science and faith. So D. Thomas here, where all Thomists follow him, as is seen among the Complutenses disp. 20. Logic, quest. 4. Pasqualigo disp. 33. sect. 2 and 3; Valentia cites Scotus too, 3. dist. 24. quest. unic. §. ad quaest. and §. sed si aliter.

> PRIMA opinio negat, posse simul de eodem esse scientiam, et fidem. Ita D. Thom. hic, ubi omnes Thomistae, ut videre est apud Complutenses disp. 20. Logica, quaest. 4. Pasqualigo disp. 33. sect. 2. et 3. citatur a Valentia etiam Scotus 3. dist. 24. quaest. unic. §. ad quaest. et §. sed si aliter.

2 The SECOND opinion is affirmative. So D. Bonaventure here, Alexander of Hales 3. p. quest. 79. memb. 3. Albert the Great 3. dist. 24. art. 9. Valentia disp. 1. quest. 1. p. 4. Suarez 3. p. Tom. 2. disp. 19. sect. 2. Vasquez p. p. disp. 4. Caspens. Tract. 15. disp. 7. sect. 10. Tannerus disp. 1. quest. 1. num. 169. Morandus Tract. unic. quest. 3. There follow Coninch, Arriaga, Amicus, De Lugo, and others as gathered by Mastrius disp. 6. quest. 4. and Tannerus above.

> SECUNDA sententia est assertiva, Ita D. Bonavent. hic, Alens. 3. p. quaest. 79. memb. 3. Albertus 3. dist. 24. art. 9. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 4. Suarez 3. p. Tom. 2. disp. 19. sect. 2. Vasquez p. p. disp. 4. Caspens. Tract. 15. disp. 7. sect. 10. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 1. num. 169. Morandus Tract. unic. quaest. 3. sequuntur Coninch, Arriaga, Amicus, De Lugo, et alii apud Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 4. et Tannerum supra.

3 The THIRD opinion holds a middle course: actual faith cannot coexist with actual science; but habitual faith can. It is the common opinion of the Scotists, with Scotus 3. dist. 24. quest. unic., as gathered by Mastrius. Some, however, say that by the absolute power of God actual faith and actual science can exist together. So Poncius disp. 22. Log. quest. 2. Yet the opposite is held not only by the authors of the first opinion but also, commonly, by the Scotists.

> TERTIA sententia media tenet, fidem actualem cum scientia actuali esse non posse; sed tamen habitualem. Est communis Scotistarum cum Scoto 3. dist. 24. quaest. unic. apud Mastrium. Aliqui tamen dicunt, de potentia Dei absoluta posse esse simul fidem, et scientiam actualem. Ita Poncius disp. 22. Log. quaest. 2. Oppositum tamen tenent non modo authores primae sententiae, sed etiam communiter Scotistae.

4 I ASSERT first, that the habit of faith and the habit of science can be in the same subject in view of their acts.

> ASSERO primo, posse de eodem esse habitum fidei, et scientiae in ordine ad actus.

5 It is PROVED first by D. Bonaventure from certain passages of Scripture, in which there are proposed things to be believed that fall under science, such as: that God is. Heb. 11: For he that cometh to God must believe that he is. Rom. 4: Abraham by faith held that God would stand to his promises, and Gen. 1; and in the Symbols it is proposed that God is to be believed to be one, and to be the Creator of heaven and earth. And Exod. 20 and Deut. 6: it is proposed that by faith one must believe there is one God. Yet these things can be demonstrated, as I showed above in Tract. 1, in the disputations on the Existence of God and on unity, and in Tract. 3 on Creation. Tannerus and others press this point.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonavent. ex quibusdam Scripturae locis, quibus proponuntur credenda, quae cadunt sub scientiam, ut: quod Deus sit. Hebr. 11. Credere enim oportet accedentem ad Deum, quia est. Rom. 4. Abraham fide tenuit Deum stare promissis, et Genes. 1. et in Symbolis proponitur, Deum credendum esse unum, esseque Creatorem coeli, et terrae. Et Exodi 20. et Deuterr. 6. proponitur, fide credendum, esse unum Deum. At vero haec demonstrari possunt, ut ostendi p. p. Tract. 1. in disputationibus de Existentia Dei, de unitate, et Tract. 3. de Creatione. Haec urget Tannerus et alii.

6 The Thomists RESPOND that in the learned, or in those skilled in these demonstrations, the habit of faith does not remain for the sake of eliciting acts about these objects; it remains only materialiter.

> RESPONDENT Thomistae, habitum fidei in eruditis, seu peritis harum demonstrationum, non manere ad actus, circa haec obiecta eliciendos; sed manere tantum materialiter.

7 CONTRA: for thus the condition of the learned would be worse than that of the unlearned, as Valentia and Tannerus infer, num. 171. Moreover, the Fathers propose these articles as to be believed to all, even to the wise: Cyril of Jerusalem, catech. 6; Chrysostom, homil. 2 on the Apostles' Creed; Augustine, book De fide et Symbolo cap. 1, and book 4 De civitate cap. 20; as gathered by Valentia.

> CONTRA, quia sic esset deterior conditio scientium, quam idiotarum, ut infert Valentia, et Tannerus num. 171. Deinde Patres omnibus, etiam sapientibus, hos articulos proponunt credendos: Cyrillus Hierosol. cathec. 6. Chrysost. homil. 2. in Symb. Apostolorum. Augustinus L. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1. et Lib. 4. de civit. cap. 20. apud Valentiam.

8 That this habit has its act is proved by the holy Doctor in the body of the text, against the third opinion, which he reports: God and nature do nothing in vain; but they give the habit of faith to the wise even with respect to what they know scientifically, nor is the power impeded; therefore it has its acts even with respect to those things.

> QUOD vero ille habitus habeat suum actum, probatur a S. Doctore in corpore, contra tertiam sententiam, quam refert: Deus, et natura nil frustra faciunt; sed dat sapientibus habitum fidei, etiam quod ad cognita ab eis scientifice, neque potentia est impedita; Ergo quod ad ea habet suos actus.

9 It is CONFIRMED by the holy Doctor: because these habits are not opposed, since they convince from different motives, and the habit of science is strengthened in its certitude by faith, which has a firmer prophetic word, as D. Peter says. Then, because the habit of science instructs imperfectly; for it does not show perfectly that the unity of God can be in several supposits.

> CONFIRMATUR a S. Doctore; quia non opponuntur isti habitus, cum sint ex diversis motivis convincentes, et habitus scientiae firmetur in certitudine a fide, quae habet firmiorem propheticum sermonem, ut ait D. Petrus. Deinde, quia habitus scientiae imperfecte instruit; nam non ostendit perfecte, Dei unitatem esse posse in pluribus suppositis.

10 MASTRIUS, num. 132, and Soto in the first book, dist. 2. q. 3, say that there is proposed to us to be believed by faith even something known, such as that God is: for these things must be handed on to the community of men, both on account of men's negligence in seeking the truth, and on account of the weakness of the intellect, and because of the danger to those who seek the truth by demonstrations, in which many false things are mixed in, as D. Augustine says, book 18 De civitate, cap. 41; and this is clear from the philosophers in error. Therefore authority was necessary for perfect certitude; for the motive of faith often supplies the defect of our intellect, as D. Bonaventure also teaches in this question, at the end of the body of the text.

MASTRIUS num. 132. e Soto in primo, dist. 2. q. 3. dicit, proponi nobis fide credenda etiam aliqua nota, ut, Deum esse: Nam haec debent communitati hominum tradi, tum ob negligentiam hominum in quaerenda veritate; tum propter imbecillitatem intellectus, et propter periculum inquirentium veritatem demonstrationibus, qui multa falsa permiscet, ut ait D. Augustinus 18. de civitate, cap. 41. et constat ex philosophis errantibus. Fuit igitur necessaria authoritas ad perfectam certitudinem; nam motivum fidei saepe supplet defectum nostri intellectus, ut docet etiam D. Bonavent. quaestione hac, in fine corporis.

11 Yet this doctrine of the Seraphic Doctor does not hinder me at all in this matter; for from it I rather argue against Mastrius, from the second argument of D. Bonaventure. When one act is ordered to perfecting another, there is no repugnance; thus he who has known by an a posteriori demonstration can, while the same cognition remains, come to know the same thing by an a priori demonstration; and this knowledge does not take away the preceding one, because it arises from a different motive, just as intellectual cognition supervening on sensitive cognition does not destroy the latter. But the cognition of faith supervening upon actual demonstrative cognition is related in just this way: therefore they can exist together. The whole argument is Mastrius's here, and so it contradicts his own second assertion.

HAEC tamen Seraphici doctrina, quoad hanc rem nil mihi obest; Nam hinc potius arguo contra Mastrium ex D. Bonavent. argumento secundo. Quando unus actus ordinatur ad alium perficiendum, non repugnat, sic qui cognovit per demonstrationem a posteriori, potest, manente eadem cognitione, idem cognoscere demonstratione a priori; et haec notitia non tollit praecedentem, quia e diverso motivo oritur, sicut cognitio intellectiva superveniens sensitivae, non hanc destruit; Sed ita se habet per te cognitio fidei superveniens cognitioni actuali demonstrativae: Ergo possunt esse simul. Totum argumentum est Mastrii hic, et ita repugnat suo secundo asserto.

12 WHY, the argument of St. Bonaventure in the body of the text is most powerful, which Suarez, Amicus, Caspens, and others use: that no implication is found here; because that evidence and non-evidence are not opposed; for the evidence of science is such that it can be increased by the certitude of faith from authority; and so they assist one another, as the holy Doctor and Amicus infer. From these you have that acts of faith and of science concerning the same object can exist.

QUARE validissimum est argumentum S. Bonav. in corpore, quo utuntur Suarez, Amicus, Casp. et alii, nullam hic reperiri implicantiam; quia evidentia illa, et inevidentia non repugnant; nam evidentia scientiae est talis, ut possit augeri certitudine fidei ex authoritate; atque adeo se iuvant, ut infert S. D. et Amicus. Ex his habes, posse dari actus fidei, et scientiae de eodem obiecto.

13 I ASSERT second, that there cannot be intellectual vision and faith concerning the same thing.

ASSERO secundo, non posse dari visionem intellectivam, et fidem de eodem.

14 It is PROVED by the holy Doctor in the body of the text and ad 2, from 1 Cor. 13: We see now through a glass in an obscure manner. But when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away. Then thus: Things that expel one another cannot stand together: such is the vision of the fatherland, which expels faith; therefore.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctor in corpore, et ad 2. ex prima Cor. 13. Videmus nunc per speculum in aenigmate. Cum autem venerit quod perfectum est, evacuabitur, quod ex parte est. Tunc sic: Ea, quae se expellunt, nequeunt stare simul: Talis est visio patriae, quae pellit fidem; Ergo.

15 Mastrius RESPONDS, num. 110, that this holds commonly even for intellectual cognition, viz. ...; Contra: for it would follow that the habit of faith would be evacuated by the habit of science, viz. ... The consequence is proved: Things opposed in the same degree exclude one another in the same degree; but the habits of faith and of science, viz., of themselves and in the same way and in the same degree are opposed, just as the habit of faith is opposed to the vision of God: therefore, just as faith is evacuated by the vision with respect to the habit, so it would be evacuated by the habit of science, against your first assertion. Moreover, that the habit of faith is evacuated in the fatherland is clear from the Apostle in the place cited, where he speaks of habits.

> RESPONDET Mastrius num. 110. hoc esse commune etiam intellectivae cognitioni viz. Contra; nam sequeretur, habitum fidei evacuari ab habitu scientiae viz. Probatur sequela. Ea, quae eodem gradu opponuntur, eodem gradu se excludunt; sed habitus fidei, et scientiae viz eodem modo per te, eodemque gradu opponuntur, sicut habitus fidei cum visione Dei: Ergo sicuti fides evacuatur per visionem, quod ad habitum, ita evacuabitur per habitum scientiae, contra tuum primum assertum. Porro evacuari habitum fidei in patria, constat ex Apostolo loco cit. ubi de habitibus loquitur.

16 I ASSERT third, that even by the power of God the clear vision of the fatherland cannot stand together with faith. So St. Bonaventure, whom all the Thomists and almost all the Scotists follow: among recent authors, Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Turrianus disp. 8. dub. 5, and others against the current of the Recentiors: Suarez, Coninch, Granado, Amicus, Arriaga, Hurtado, and others, as gathered by Mastrius art. 2, quest. four.

> ASSERO tertio, neque per Dei potentiam posse stare visionem claram patriae cum fide. Ita S. Bonav. quem sequuntur omnes Thomistae, et fere Scotistae: E recentibus. Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Turrianus disp. 8. dub. 5. et alii contra torrentem Recentiorum, Suarez, Coninch, Granadum, Amicum, Arriagam, Hurtadum, et alios apud Mastrium art. 2 quaest. quarta.

17 It is PROVED first by many from the argument of D. Bonaventure, 2. dist. 24. dub. 1, which I brought forward in quest. 2 at the end. Of the nature of the assent of faith it is that it be free, as is said in Rom. 10: All do not believe the Gospel. So too it is read in Mark 16, John 12, Acts 20; and it is gathered from the Council of Orange 2, can. 5, and Trent sess. 6. cap. 6. But a free assent does not stand with an assent that is simply necessary. So also D. Thomas, quest. 1. art. 4.

> PROBATUR primo a multis argumento D. Bonavent. 2. dist. 24. dub 1. quod attuli quaest. 2. ad finem. De ratione assensus fidei est, ut sit liber, ut dicitur Rom. 10. Non omnes credunt Evangelio. Sic etiam Marci 16. Ioan. 12. Act. 20. legitur; et colligitur e Concil. Araus. 2. can. 5. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. sed assensus liber non stat cum assensu necessario simpliciter. Ita et D. Thom. quaest. 1. art. 4.

18 Mastrius answers that an assent necessary from the motive of science does not exclude a free one from the motive of faith.

19 Contra, first, ad hominem: The same effect cannot come from two adequate causes, especially opposed ones, according to Scotus. The assent exhibited to the Gospel, an object proposed to us, is adequately from the beatific vision, necessitating immutably and most clearly. Therefore it cannot be produced by faith, which is contingently free and obscure, mutably. This is the argument of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 15, Heb. 11, as I showed in quest. 1 and 2, and it will be confirmed in quest. 6 ad 4.

> Contra primo ad hominem: Non potest idem effectus esse a duabus causis adaequatis, maxime oppositis apud Scotum. Assensus exhibitus Evangelio, nobis obiecto, est adaequate a visione beata immutabiliter necessitante, et clarissima. Ergo nequit produci a fide, quae est contingenter libera, et obscura mutabiliter. Est argumentum Apostoli 1. Cor. 15. Hebr. 11. ut ostendi quaest. 1. et 2. et confirmabitur quaest. 6. ad 4.

20 Contra, second, from D. Bonaventure here: because the motive of faith cannot have the power to move the intellect freely in the presence of evidence and of vision, which moves necessarily, as Mastrius says, num. 111 and 117; and this holds even by the absolute power, as he confesses, num. 126, and as Cardinal Lugo notes, disp. 2. num. 81. For it is an essential repugnance; therefore, while the forms remain, it is not separable. Hence falls the response of Tannerus, num. 176, that this repugnance is only moral, and of decorum.

> Contra secundo ex D. Bonav. hic, quia motivum fidei non potest habere vim ad libere movendum intellectum in praesentia evidentiae, et visionis, moventis necessario, ut ait Mastrius num. 111. et 117. et hoc etiam de potentia absoluta, ut fatetur num. 126. et advertit Card. Lugo disp. 2. num. 81. Est enim essentialis repugnantia; ideo stantibus formis non est separabilis. Hinc ruit responsio Tanneri num. 176. hanc repugnantiam esse tantum moralem, et decentiae.

21 The second assertion is proved from D. Bonaventure, disp. 31. art. 2: Whenever the essential object is taken away, the habit is also taken away: But in the fatherland the essential object of faith is taken away, namely obscurity, which is placed in the definition of the Apostle, Heb. 11: Therefore. It is confirmed: for, once the evidence of the fatherland is posited, the motive of faith no longer remains, namely from mere revelation, to move the intellect; and there arrives an essential repugnance, as Cardinal de Lugo warns, disp. 2. num. 81.

> Probatur secundo assertio a D. Bonav. disp. 31. art. 2. Quandocunque tollitur obiectum essentiale, tollitur et habitus: Sed in patria tollitur obiectum essentiale fidei, nempe obscuritas, quae in definitione Apostoli ponitur Hebr. 11. Ergo. Confirmatur: nam posita evidentia patriae, non manet amplius motivum fidei ex mera revelatione ad movendum intellectum; et advenit repugnantia essentialis; ut monet Cardinalis de Lugo disp. 2. num. 81.

22 Arriaga answers that the intellect can, from evidence, assent in the fatherland to that object, and yet leave to faith another motive; thus, because of several evidences, one can assent to the same thing.

> Respondet Arriaga, posse intellectum ex evidentia assentiri in patria illi obiecto, et tamen relinquere fidei aliud motivum; sic potest ob plures evidentias eidem assentiri.

23 Contra: Grant that because of several evidences the intellect can assent to the same thing; yet, if once it shall have assented most clearly, it can no longer be free to assent from an obscure motive.

> Contra: Esto ob plures evidentias possit intellectus eidem assentiri; tamen, si semel clarissime assentietur, non potest amplius ex motivo obscuro esse liber ad assentiendum.

24 Nor let Amicus say that God can, by his testimony, move the intellect above every certitude; for, if once the testimony of God seen shall have moved it, no place is left for a free assent on account of the obscure testimony of God.

> Neque dicat Amicus, posse Deum, suo testimonio summe intellectum movere super omnem certitudinem; nam, si semel testimonium Dei visi moverit, non relinquitur locus assensui libero ob testimonium Dei obscurum.

25 Yet it is not the same with abstractive assent; for, as Cardinal de Lugo says, there is still left to abstractive cognition a place for greater clarity, as St. Bonaventure teaches in the body of the text against Mastrius, num. 129.

> Non est tamen eadem ratio de assensu abstractivo; Nam, ut ait Card. de Lugo, cognitioni abstractivae adhuc relinquitur locus maioris claritatis, ut docet S. Bonav. in corpore contra Mastrium num. 129.

26 It is proved third from D. Bonaventure, in the same dist. 31, loc. cit., at the end, by the argument on which Vulpes relies, disp. 28. art. 2. The Light of faith is related to the light of glory as the Sun to the glow-worm; but the light of the sun overwhelms the light of the glow-worm and leaves it unable to appear. Indeed, while I see the Sun, and some Astrologer says to me: The sun shines; I am not moved at all by his word, even if I know that the Astrologer cannot err.

> Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. ea dist. 31. loc. cit. ad ultimum, argumento, quo nititur Vulpes disp. 28. art. 2. Ita se habet Lumen fidei ad lumen gloriae; sicut Sol ad noctilucam; sed lumen solis obruit lumen noctilucae, nec relinquit, quod appareat. Profecto dum video Solem; et mihi aliquis Astrologus dicat: Sol lucet; non moveor ullo pacto illius dicto, etiamsi sciam, eum Astrologum non posse errare.

27 You will object first against the first assertion. As CHARITY is related to its object, so FAITH to its; but charity does not admit together with itself love of a creature above all things: therefore neither does faith the object of science.

28 St. Bonaventure answers that the truth known from the motive of science and the truth known from revelation are not opposed as the love of God and libidinous love are; for these are opposed: but those two cognitions are related as perfecting and perfected, and since they convince from different motives, not from supreme ones, neither are they opposed; for faith sanely believes from things obscure; but natural science does not altogether evacuate the obscurity of the mystery, even though it has evidence in its own genus. Hence the act of faith gives the principal assent, and science one less principal. Therefore those Samaritans said, John 4: Now we believe, not for thy word, that is, on account of human knowledge, but from faith in Christ attesting.

> Respondet S. Bonav. non ita opponi verum ex scientiae motivo, et verum ex revelatione, sicut amor Dei, et amor libidinosus; nam hi sunt oppositi: At illae duae notitiae se habent ut perficiens, et perfectum, et cum ex diversis motivis convincant, non summis; neque opponuntur; Fides enim ex obscuris sane credit; sed scientia naturalis non omnino evacuat obscuritatem mysterii, esto habeat in suo genere evidentiam. Unde actus fidei dat principalem assensum, et scientia minus principalem. Ideo dixere illi Samaritae Ioan. 4. Iam non propter verbum tuum credimus, idest ob notitiam humanam, sed ex fide in Christo attestante.

29 You will object second. The vision of the fatherland evacuates faith, 1 Cor. 13: therefore also our science.

Obiicies secundo. Visio patriae fidem evacuat, prima Cor. 13. Ergo et scientia nostra.

30 The holy Doctor answers by denying the consequence: for vision excludes all hiddenness, not so natural science.

Respondet S. Doct. negando Consequentiam: Nam visio excludit omnem latentiam, non sic scientia naturalis.

31 You will object third. The assent of faith is free, Rom. 10; but the assent of science is necessary, especially concerning first principles; for you cannot deny that a triangle has three angles equal to two right angles.

Obiicies tertio. Fidei assensus est liber Rom. 10. at scientiae assensus est necessarius, maxime in primis principiis; non enim negare potes, triangulum habere tres angulos, aequales duobus rectis.

32 The holy Doctor answers that in science something of God lies hidden, to which Faith adds something; for instance, that God is of that infinite simplicity simply, which I expounded in tract. first, q. 1. That he is a Trinity; whence at once he begins: I believe in God the Father, etc.

Respondet S. Doct. in scientia aliquid Dei latere, cui addit Fides; puta, quod Deus sit ea infinita perfectione simpliciter, quam tract. primo, q. 1. Exposui. Quod sit Trinitas; unde illico incipit: Credo in Deum Patrem, etc.

33 You will object fourth. The same thing cannot be above reason and under it: Science is subject to reason; faith exceeds it: therefore.

34 St. Bonaventure answers that there is no implication in some object being under reason on one count, while on another it is above reasons; such is the object of faith, which in one respect is subjected to reason, as: that God is; yet it is above reason that he be so perfect as to be Three in persons, that one person be incarnate, etc. Indeed the Apostle said deservedly: God hath made the wisdom of this world foolish, for without faith it is insane.

Respondet S. Bonav. non implicare aliquod obiectum ex uno capite esse sub rationibus; ex alio vero, supra rationes; tale est obiectum fidei, quod secundum aliquid subiicitur rationi, ut: quod Deus sit; attamen est supra rationem, quod sit ita perfectus, ut sit Trinus personis, quod una persona sit incarnata, etc. Sane Apostolus merito ait: Stultam fecit Deus sapientiam huius saeculi, nam sine fide est insana.

35 You will object against the last assertion with Poncius: Faith and vision no more repugn than two bodies in the same place, or heat and cold, as octaves, in the same subject; but these can stand together by the power of God: therefore.

Obiicies contra ultimum assertum cum Poncio: Non magis repugnat fides, et visio, quam duo corpora in eodem loco, vel calor, et frigus ut octo, in eodem subiecto; Sed haec per Dei potentiam stare simul possunt: Ergo.

36 It is answered from D. Bonaventure, loc. cit. that this repugns more; because it repugns according to the intrinsic nature of the essence, since the formal object of vision destroys the formal element of faith: but heat and cold are opposed only according to contrariety in a subject, which can be overcome by God, as Mastrius says.

Respondetur ex D. Bonav. loc. cit. hoc magis repugnare; quia repugnat secundum intrinsecum essentiae, quia formale obiecti visionis destruit formale fidei: At calor, et frigus opponuntur solum secundum contrarietatem in subiecto, quae potest a Deo superari, ut ait Mastrius.

Question VI: Whether faith is concerned with those things which are seen by vision in this life

1 The TRUE opinion is negative. So D. Bonaventure, whom all Scotists and Thomists commonly follow. And among the more recent, Card. de Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Turrian. disp. 8. dub. 5. Pasqualigo disp. 33. sect. 1.

> VERA sententia est negativa. Ita D. Bonav. quem sequuntur omnes Scotistae, et Thomistae communiter. Et ex recentioribus Card. de Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Turrian. disp. 8. dub. 5. Pasqualigo disp. 33. sect. 1.

2 The OPPOSITE, however, is held by Valentia p. 4. col. 62. where he says Bonaventure denies it without cause; Tanner. quaest. 1. disp. 6. Morand. quaest. 3. and very many others collected by Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 4. art. 2.

> OPPOSITUM tamen tenent Valentia p. 4. col. 62. ubi ait, sine causa Bonaventuram id negare; Tanner. quaest. 1. disp. 6. Morand. quaest. 3. et alii plurimi apud Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 4. art. 2.

3 I ASSERT with D. Bonaventure that FAITH cannot be had concerning things that are clearly seen here.

> ASSERO cum D. Bonav. non posse haberi Fidem de rebus, quae videntur hic clare.

4 It is proved first from S. Thomas, from D. Aug. on 14. Ioan. on these words: I go to prepare a place for you. Go away lest it appear; let it be hidden that it may be believed, and tract. 40. in Ioan. Faith is to believe what you do not see. And lib. 2. qq. Euang. cap. 39. Faith is the virtue by which things are believed that are not seen.

> Probatur primo a S. Doct. ex PP. D. Aug. ad 14. Ioan. ad ea verba: Vado parare vobis locum. Eat ne videatur; lateat ut credatur, et tract. 40. in Ioan. Fides est credere, quod non vides. Et lib. 2. qq. Euang. cap. 39. Fides est virtus, qua creduntur, quae non videntur.

5 From D. Gregory homil. 36. in Euang. Things that are seen do not have faith, but recognition. And Chrysost. homil. 21. ad Hebr. says: He wishes to destroy faith, those who want to see the things believed. The Saints commonly think the same, as S. Thomas relates quaest. 3. in corpore.

> Ex D. Gregorio homil. 36. in Euang. Quae videntur, fidem non habent, sed agnitionem. Et Chrysost. homil. 21. ad Hebr. ait: Eos perdere velle fidem, qui credita volunt videre. Idem sentiunt communiter Sancti, ut refert S. Doct. quaest. 3. in corpore.

6 It is proved secondly from S. Thomas. Faith will be evacuated in the fatherland, as is gathered from prima Corinth. 13. but bodily vision manifests the Humanity of Christ just as spiritual vision in the fatherland manifests the Deity: Therefore just as faith of the Divinity cannot be about things seen in the fatherland, so neither can faith of the humanity be in the way about a thing seen. Hence they deny the parity gratuitously, as Mastrius notes n. 110. who used this argument.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. Fides in patria evacuabitur, ut colligitur ex prima Corinth. 13. sed visio corporalis ita manifestat Christi Humanitatem, sicut visio spiritualis in patria Deitatem: Ergo sicut fides Divinitatis non potest esse circa visa in patria, ita nec fides humanitatis in via visae. Hinc gratis negant paritatem, ut notat Mastrius n. 110. hac ratione usus.

7 It is PROVED thirdly from S. Thomas. To believe is free Rom. 10. But to believe what I see is entirely necessary.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. credere est liberum Rom. 10. At credere, quod video, est penitus necessarium.

8 It is PROVED fourthly in corpore. That which repugns the essence of faith cannot stand together with faith: But sensible vision repugns: Therefore. The minor is proved; for from the Apostle loc. cit. Faith is obscure knowledge, and now AEnigmatic: but Vision is most clear; and these are contradictory. The Scotists and Thomists use this argument.

PROBATUR quarto in corpore. Id, quod repugnat essentiae fidei, non potest stare cum fide: Sed sensibilis visio repugnat: Ergo. Minor probatur; nam ex Apostolo loc. cit. Fides est cognitio obscura, et nunc AEnigmatica: at Visio est clarissima; haec autem sunt contradictoria. Hoc argumento utuntur Scotistae, et Thomistae.

9 Nor does the response avail, that these are not contradictory, because they arise from different motives. For the argument resists just so much, because from the intrinsic formal side the object of FAITH must be obscure; whence, upon the arrival of vision, it no longer has anything obscure, concerning which it might render faith to the revealer; and the formal reason of the one, that is, of science, destroys the formal reason of the object of FAITH. Nor do they differ according to the perfect and the imperfect, as the adversaries think; but they differ according to their essentials, namely the positive and the privative; from which Card. de Lugo deduces disp. 2. num. 81. that, since this repugnance is formal and intrinsic, it convinces that vision and FAITH cannot stand together, even by the power of God. Vain also is the response of Valentia, that faith is of things not seen by faith itself; for, as Mastrius says num. 109. the Fathers and Scripture would have spoken ridiculously, and the sense would be to see nothing by an act of faith. Tanner. also errs num. 176. denying that these repugn.

Nec valet responsio, haec non esse contradictoria, quia ex diversis motivis. Contra enim tam resistit argumentum, quia ex intrinseco formali obiectum Fidei debet esse obscurum; unde adveniente visione non habet amplius obscurum, de quo fidem praestet revelanti; et ratio formalis unius, idest scientiae, destruit rationem formalem obiecti Fidei. Neque differunt secundum perfectum, et imperfectum, ut putant adversarii; sed differunt secundum essentialia eorum, positivum, scilicet et privativum; ex quo deducit Card. de Lugo disp. 2. num. 81. quod, cum haec repugnantia sit formalis intrinseca, convincit, non posse, etiam per Dei potentiam, stare visionem, et Fidem. Inanis etiam est responsio Valentiae, fidem esse de non visis per fidem ipsam; nam, ut ait Mastrius num. 109. ridicule locuti essent Patres, et Scripturae, et sensus esset nullum videre per actum fidei. Fallitur et Tanner. num. 176. negans, haec repugnare.

10 You OBJECT first that Ioan. 20. it is said: Because you have seen me, Thomas, you have believed; therefore concerning this he had faith and vision.

OBIICIES primo Ioan. 20. dicitur: Quia vidisti me Thoma, credidisti; ergo de hoc habuit fidem, et visionem.

11 D. Bonav. and Scotus RESPOND from D. Gregory homil. 26. in Euang. that: Thomas saw one thing, and believed another; He saw a man, and believed God. The same is the response of D. August. tract. 79. in Ioannem.

RESPONDENT D. Bonav. et Scotus ex D. Gregorio homil. 26. in Euang. quod: Thomas aliud vidit, et aliud credidit; Vidit hominem, et Deum credidit. Eadem est responsio D. August. tract. 79. in Ioannem.

12 Arriaga INSTANCES that this exposition is not consonant with the text. First, because Christ did not speak equivocally, but of the same thing about which he said: You have seen, he also said you have believed. Then, if he believed what he did not see: Therefore he did not have less merit than the others, who, not seeing, believed, whom nevertheless Christ there prefers to Thomas. Thirdly, because there Thomas believed nothing about the Deity, but about the Resurrection, about which he doubted, which nevertheless he saw no less than I see Peter present; and yet you deny that vision can stand together with faith.

> INSTAT Arriaga, hanc expositionem non esse textui consonam. Primo, quia Christus non est locutus aequivoce, sed de eodem, de quo dixit: Vidisti*, dixit et* credidisti. Deinde, si quod non vidit, credidit: Ergo non habuit minus meritum, quam alii, qui, non videntes, crediderunt, quos tamen ibi Christus praefert Thomae. Tertio, quia ibi Thomas nil credidit de Divinitate, sed de Resurrectione, de qua dubitabat, quam tamen videbat non minus, quam ego video Petrum praesentem; et tamen vos negatis, visionem cum fide stare.

13 For in truth these things are frivolous against the exposition of the Fathers; Nor indeed did Christ speak equivocally, but with a mystery, so that the sense is: Because you have seen me raised from the dead, you have believed God, since a mere man cannot raise himself. Now just as you heard me: I have power to lay down my life, and to take it again, so now you have seen, and therefore you believe God. See S. Bonaventure in the sermon on S. Thomas.

> ENIM vero frivola haec sunt contra Patrum expositionem; Neque vero Christus aequivoce locutus est, sed cum mysterio, ut sensus sit: Quia vidisti me a mortuis suscitatum, credidisti Deum, cum purus homo non valeat seipsum suscitare. Iam sicuti me audisti: Potestatem habeo ponendi animam meam, et iterum sumendi eam*, ita nunc vidisti, et ideo credis Deum. Vide S. Bonaventuram* sermone de S. Thoma.

14 From this the second objection falls: For the sense is, that there is more merit in those who neither saw me raised, and believed, without this miracle, that I am God.

> Ex quo ruit secunda oppositio: Sensus enim est, plus meriti esse eorum, qui, nec me viderunt suscitatum, et crediderunt, absque miraculo hoc, me esse Deum.

15 To the third I say, that Thomas confessed: My Lord, and my God. For he doubted about the Deity while he saw him dead; nor did he believe until he saw him raised.

> AD tertium dico, Thomam confessum: Dominus meus, et Deus meus. De divinitate enim dubitavit, dum mortuum vidit; neque credidit, donec vidit suscitatum.

16 You OBJECT secondly from Prima Ioan. first: What we have seen, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; But the Apostles also had faith concerning the same Christ.

> OBIICIES secundo Prima Ioan. primo: Quod vidimus, et manus nostrae contrectaverunt de Verbo vitae; At Apostoli habebant de eodem Christo etiam fidem.

17 D. Bonav. RESPONDS that the Apostles had faith concerning the mysteries seen; for although they saw the man die; nevertheless they believed him God. And so they had faith concerning This person, as he is God. Mastrius num. 133. prefers this exposition, Scotistically.

> RESPONDET D. Bonav. Apostolos habuisse fidem de mysteriis visis; nam tametsi viderent hominem mori; credebant tamen illum Deum. Itaque habuere fidem de Hac persona, ut est Deus. Hanc expositionem Mastrius num. 133. praefert Scotice.

18 You OBJECT thirdly. The Blessed Virgin knew by sensible experience that she had conceived of the Holy Spirit, and nevertheless believed; Therefore Elisabeth says: Blessed are you, who have believed, etc.

> OBIICIES tertio. B. Virgo sensibili experimento novit, se concepisse de Spiritu Sancto, et tamen credidit; Ideo Elisabeth ait: Beata, quae credidisti, etc.

19 S. Bonav. RESPONDS that the Blessed Virgin perceived that she had conceived without a man; nevertheless she did not perceive that she had conceived the Son of God. Thus Mastrius also responds.

> RESPONDET S. Bonav. Beatam Virginem sensisse, se concepisse sine viro; attamen non sensisse, se concepisse filium Dei. Sic respondet et Mastrius.

20 You OBJECT fourthly. It would follow that the learned are of worse condition, and those who saw, as the Apostles.

> OBIICIES quarto. Sequeretur, peioris conditionis esse doctos, et qui viderunt, ut Apostolos.

21 It is RESPONDED with D. Bonav. that those who saw believed something else.

> RESPONDETUR cum D. Bonav. eos, qui viderunt, aliquid aliud credidisse.

22 MASTRIUS responds from D. Bonav. quaest. 3. denying the sequel, as to the wise, who have science concerning the same thing, because they did not know perfectly through the sciences that God is, and that he is one, or that he is infinite simply speaking, to be in three persons, whence they lacked the light of faith, without which the Philosophers erred. He says this response is conformable to the doctrine of Scotus; whence it is clear how even the learned exercise supernatural acts of faith.

> MASTRIUS respondet ex D. Bonav. quaest. 3. negando sequelam, quoad sapientes, qui de eodem habent scientiam, quia illi non cognovere perfecte per scientias, Deum esse, esseque unum, aut infinitum simpliciter esse in tribus personis, unde eguere lumine fidei, sine quo Philosophi errarunt. Hoc responsum ait, esse conforme doctrinae Scoti; unde patet, quomodo et docti actus supernaturales fidei exerceant.

23 For in truth he does not remember that he said in the first assertion num. 108. that acts of faith and of science cannot be simultaneously about the same conclusion in the same intellect. Wherefore he abuses the doctrine of S. Bonaventure.

> ENIM vero non recordatur, se dixisse in primo asserto num. 108. non posse actus fidei, et scientiae simul esse de eadem conclusione in eodem intellectu. Quare abutitur doctrina S. Bonaventurae.

24 MOST FIRMLY therefore has our assertion been proved. It is confirmed by the principal argument of S. Bonav. in corpore, which Suarez uses disp. 3 sect. 9. Coninch. disp. 11. dub. 1. Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Vasquez disp. 53. et 62. Mastrius num. 115. where he teaches it to be a firm argument; for clear vision so ravishes assent, that not only is place denied to the liberty necessary for faith; but neither does the motive of assent remain; thus, while I see the Sun, however much someone may say to me that it is day, even if he were an Angel; I do not believe from authority, but because I see. Coninch. and Suarez render the reason; because, since the intellect has been actualized by the most perfect formal assent, no place is left for assenting by another form.

> FERMISSIME igitur probata est nostra assertio. Confirmatur argumento S. Bonav. principali in corpore, quo utuntur Suarez disp. 3 sect. 9. Coninch. disp. 11. dub. 1. Lugo disp. 2. sect. 2. Vasquez disp. 53. et 62. Mastrius num. 115. ubi docet esse firmam rationem; nam visio clara ita rapit assensum, ut non modo libertati ad fidem necessariae negetur locus; sed neque remaneat motivum assensus; sic, dum video Solem, quantumvis aliquis dicat mihi, diem esse, etiamsi is esset Angelus; non credo ex authoritate, sed quia video. Rationem reddunt Coninch. et Suarez; quia cum actuatus sit intellectus formali assensu perfectissimo, non relinquitur alteri formae assentiendi locus.

25 BUT they argue against this: for the Blessed have intuitive cognition of creatures, and nevertheless can also have abstractive. The same, the Theologians say, of the most holy Soul of Christ.

SED contra arguunt: nam Beati habent cognitionem intuitivam creaturarum, et tamen possunt habere etiam abstractivam. Idem de anima Christi sanctissima aiunt Theologi.

26 Mastrius RESPONDS from Scotus ad 3. that the reason is, because the medium of faith is impeded by the medium of vision, so that it may not move, and is rendered insufficient to move in its presence: for the medium of faith has no power to move, except when the intellect needs it, and because it does not otherwise have the truth. Lugo responds the same.

RESPONDET Mastrius e Scoto ad 3. rationem esse, quia medium fidei, a medio visionis impeditur, ne moveat, redditurque insufficiens ad movendum in praesentia eius: medium enim fidei non habet virtutem ad movendum, nisi quando indiget intellectus illo, ed quod aliunde veritatem non habeat. Idem respondet Lugo.

27 BUT the same difficulty is incurred which they opposed to Suarez, because the clear vision of creatures in God suffers its abstractive [cognition].

SED eadem difficultas incurritur, quam Suarezio opposuerunt, quia visio clara creaturarum in Deo suum patitur abstractivum.

28 The REASON therefore is that which S. Thomas brings in corpore, because they are intrinsically opposed formally, whence, with the object clearly seen, it implies that faith is busied about that thing in vain, because it is intrinsically enigmatic, or at least obscure, and the obscure requires an obscure object.

RATIO igitur est, quam affert S. Doct. in corpore, quia intrinsece opponuntur formaliter, unde obiecto clare viso, implicat versari fidem circa illud, quia intrinsece est aenigmatica, vel saltem obscura, et obscurum exigit obiectum.

Question VII: Whether the articles of faith are evidently credible

1 I have treated THIS question sufficiently p. 1 tract. 1. disp. 1. quaest 9. with D. Bonav. in the sermons Hexaëmer. especially §. 9. and 10. and in the little work: Principium Scripturae.

An articuli FIDEI sint evidenter credibiles.

HANC quaestionem satis tractavi p. 1 tract. 1. disp. 1. quaest 9. cum D. Bonav. sermonibus Hexaëmer. praecipue §. 9. et 10. et in opusculo: Principium Scripturae.

2 The testimonies of God are exceedingly credible, as Psal. 92. proclaims. On which arguments see also Valentia disput. 1. quaest. 1. p. 4. Scotus quaest. 2. Proleg. sent. and the Scotists. Medina tract. de fide Poncius disp. 28.

Testimonia Dei credibilia sunt nimis, ut clamat Psal. 92. De quibus argumentis vide etiam Valentiam disput. 1. quaest. 1. p. 4. Scotum quaest. 2. Proleg. sent. et Scotistas. Medinam tract. de fide Poncium disp. 28.

3 The PRINCIPAL argument is taken from the excellence of Christ, on which Valentia relies disp. 17. drawn from D. Bonav. p. prima of the goads of Divine love, cap. 6. If Christ had falsely wished to arrogate to himself the name and dignity of the Son of God; he would assuredly have acted insanely, and wrongly; nor would God have confirmed his words with so many miracles, and his adversaries would have found follies and errors in his sayings, which they could not. But celebrated even among foreigners are his innocence, wisdom, and prophecy, miracles, etc. the efficacy of his words, etc.

> PRAECIPVUM argumentum sumitur e Christi praestantia, quo nititur Valentia disp. 17. eruto e D. Bonav. p. prima stimuli Divini amoris, cap. 6. Si Christus falso voluisset sibi nomen, ac dignitatem filii Dei arrogare; profecto insane, et perperam fecisset; nec Deus tot miraculis eius dicta confirmasset, et adversarii in dictis eius insipientias, et errores invenissent, quod non potuere. At celebres sunt etiam apud exteros, eius innocentia, sapientia, et prophetiae, miracula, etc. efficacia sermonum, etc.

4 The SECOND is the multitude of prophecies concerning our faith.

> SECUNDUM est prophetiarum multitudo de nostra fide.

5 The THIRD is the firmness of the Church amid so many tempests.

> TERTIUM est firmitas Ecclesiae inter tot tempestates.

6 The FOURTH is the victory over so many wise men, and Tyrants.

> QUARTUM est victoria de tot sapientibus, et Tyrannis.

7 The FIFTH is the knowledge of the witnesses, and their illustrious fame.

9 The SEVENTH, the concord of the witnesses, with the parts of so many lands divided; and with so many different times.

> SEPTIMUM, testificantium concordia tot terrarum dissitis partibus; totque diversis temporibus.

10 The EIGHTH is the unshaken firmness of those things which faith teaches.

> NONUM, ineptiae, et absurda tot adversantium sectarum.

12 The TENTH, the fruits which abound from this holiness of the law.

> DECIMUM, fructus, qui ex hac legis sanctitate exuberant.

13 The ELEVENTH, the testimony of foreigners.

Question VIII: Whether the things to be believed are rightly arranged in articles

[1] D. Thomas says an article is named from ἄρθρον, which signifies the fitting together of the parts for motion: St. Bonaventure acknowledges this too, question 1. article 3. Calepinus, however, took the name from artus, a joint, because it is a particle into which the joints, or the members of the body, are resolved; and it is called articulus from arctando, constraining, a term applied both actively and passively to the mysteries to be believed: passively indeed, because it is a thing constrained, and just as the knots in the body are the parts into which the joints, or members, are resolved; so the articles are, as it were, the first principles into which the parts of the whole habit of FAITH are resolved: actively, however, because they constrain to belief.

> D. Thomas, articulum, ait nominari a ἄρθρον, quod significat coaptationem partium ad motum: Id agnoscit etiam S. Bonav. quaest. 1. art. 3. Calepinus vero a nomine artus sumpsit, eo quod sit particula, in quam resolvuntur artus, seu membra corporis, dicitur vero articulus ab arctando, quod active, et passive applicitum est mysteriis credibilibus: Passive quidem; quia est quid arctatum, et sicuti nodi in corpore, sunt partes in quas artus, seu membra resolvuntur; ita articuli sunt veluti prima principia, in quae resolvuntur partes totius habitus Fidei: Active vero, quia arctant ad credendum.

[2] HENCE St. Bonaventure gathers that the articles of faith are the first principles in faith, into which all the objects of belief are resolved, in the way that the joints are in the body, into which the members are resolved, even the tiniest of the fingers; and just as in the sciences, and in acts, there are first principles into which the conclusions are resolved, nor are those resolved into others, as Caspens also notes, disp. 1. sect. 12. Likewise they are the first distinguishers of the object of belief, in the way that the articles in Grammar distinguish the genders, and the cases. And in Rhetoric an article is called the distinction that is made in the science, and in the uttering. Since, therefore, the sciences, and the arts are the handmaids of Theology, as St. Bonaventure splendidly demonstrates in his opusc. On the reduction of the arts to Theology, for that reason it received the name of article, to signify the first heads, and principles into which all things believed are resolved, which are called the object of faith. Hence the Seraphic Doctor praises the definition of an article handed down by Richard of St. Victor: An article is an indivisible truth about God, constraining us to believe. It is called an indivisible truth, because things believed are ultimately resolved into the articles, for resolution stops at the indivisible. It is called constraining, etc., for it constrains, as a directive rule, toward all things to be believed. See Caspens, Cardinal de Lugo, Morandus, and others agreeing.

> HINC colligit S. Bonav. articulos fidei esse prima principia in fide, in quae resolvuntur omnia obiecta credibilia ad modum, quo articuli in corpore sunt, in quos resolvuntur membra, etiam minuta digitorum; et sicuti in scientiis, et actibus prima principia sunt, in quae resolvuntur conclusiones, nec illa resolvuntur in alia, ut notat etiam Caspens. disp. 1. sect. 12. Itidem sunt primo distinguentes obiectum credibile ad modum, quo articuli in Grammaticis distinguunt genera, et casus. Et in Rhetoricis vocatur articulos distinctio, quae fit in scientia, et prolatione. Quoniam igitur scientiae, et artes sunt Theologiae ancillae, ut egregie demonstrat S. Bonav. opusc. De reductione artium ad Theologiam, ideo accepit nomen articuli ad significanda prima capita, et principia, in quae omnia credita resolvuntur, quae dicuntur obiectum fidei. Hinc S. Doctor laudat definitionem articuli, traditam a Richardo Victorino: Articulus est veritas indivisibilis de Deo, arctans nos ad credendum. Dicitur veritas indivisibilis, quia ultimo credita resolvuntur in articulos, resolutio enim stat ad indivisibile. Dicitur arctans, etc. arctat enim, ut regula directiva ad omnia credibilia. Vide Caspensem, Cardinalem de Lugo, Morandum, et alios consentientes.

3 The Seraphic Doctor OBJECTS to himself against this definition, first, because an article is a divisible proposition.

4 HE ANSWERS that it is indivisible formally, because it is not divided into other articles, as credible things.

> RESPONDET, esse indivisibilem formaliter, quia non dividitur in alios articulos, ut credibiles.

5 He objects second. If an article is an indivisible truth. Therefore it is one article, because truth is one. Then truth is God: Therefore it is not about God.

> OBIICIT secundo. Si articulus est veritas indivisibilis. Ergo est unus articulus, quia una est veritas. Deinde veritas est Deus: Ergo non est de Deo.

6 The Seraphic Doctor answers that an article is a truth as it is compared to something about God to be asserted, as that God is one; that there is a Trinity, etc.; and thus God is the subject of these truths.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. articulum esse veritatem, prout comparatur ad aliquid de Deo asserendum, ut esse Deum unum; esse Trinitatem, etc. et ita Deus est subiectum harum veritatum.

7 He objects third. Among the articles there are some that are not about God, as the Resurrection of the flesh. It is answered that the resurrection of the flesh pertains to the Divine power.

> OBIICIT tertio. Inter articulos sunt aliqui, qui non sunt de Deo, ut Resurrectio carnis. Respondetur, carnis resurrectionem esse de virtute Divina.

8 He objects fourth. Because the articles of faith do not convince by reasonings: Therefore they do not constrain to believe. HE ANSWERS that they constrain the faithful who are enlightened, by the authority of the revealer; they constrain indeed not by compelling; but by removing every ambiguity: they constrain also by obliging; and by restricting, and by resolving into distinct principles the object of faith.

> OBIICIT quarto. Quia articuli fidei non convincunt rationibus: Ergo non arctant ad credendum. RESPONDET, arctare fideles illuminatos ex authoritate revelantis; arctant vero non cogendo; sed omnem tollendo ambiguitatem: arctant etiam obligando; et restringendo, et resolvendo in principia distincta obiectum fidei.

9 Presently the Seraphic Doctor, question 2., hands down another definition of the Article from D. Isidore. An article is a perception of Divine truth, tending to it. And he explains it thus: It is called a perception of Divine truth causally, because it is that by which we perceive the first truths of faith. It is called tending to God himself, whereby he shows that faith directs the will to God, to whom we are roused by the articles of faith. From this the Seraphic Doctor deduces the definition of the article, as it is the object of faith formed.

> Mox S. Doct. quaest. 2. tradit aliam definitionem Articuli ex D. Isidoro. Articulus est perceptio Divinae veritatis, tendens in ipsam. Sic autem declarat: Dicitur perceptio Divinae veritatis causaliter, quia est id, quo primas fidei veritates percipimus. Dicitur tendens in ipsum Deum, quo ostendit fidem dirigere voluntatem in Deum, in quem excitamur fidei articulis. Ex quo deducit S. Doct. definiti articulum, prout est obiectum fidei formatae.

10 By this exposition the oppositions that are made against this definition collapse. See St. Bonaventure.

11 The ORDER of the things to be believed is given in the Symbol. Now the Symbol signifies a judgment, or mark, by which others may be distinguished from one another, and the bringing together of many into one, as D. Bonaventure notes, disp. 25. question 1. For the Symbol is said from Syn, which is together; and bole, which is opinion; hence a Symbol is the opinion of many, constituted out of several articles, by which the faithful are set apart from the unfaithful, like a watchword, as Valencia also notes, disp. 1. question 1. p. 5., from Rufinus in his exposition of the Symbol, and Cassian, book 6. de Incarn. to Leo the Pope. See also Tanner, disp. 8.

> ORDO credibilium in Symbolo habetur. Significat autem Symbolum iudicium, sive notam, qua alii ab aliis dignosci queant, et collationem plurium in unum, ut notat D. Bonav. disp. 25. quaest. 1. dicitur enim Symbolum a Syn*, quod est simul; et* bole*, quod est sententia; unde Symbolum est plurium sententia, constituta e pluribus articulis, quibus fideles ab infidelibus, veluti tessera, secernuntur, ut advertit etiam Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 5. ex Ruffino* in expositione Symboli*, et Cassiano lib. 6.* de Incarn. ad Leonem P. Vide etiam Tannerum disp. 8.

12 Now there is a THREEFOLD Symbol in the Church, as D. Bonaventure notes on the cited 5th question. The first is that of the Apostles, which is recited in the office. That it was composed by the twelve Apostles the old Fathers commonly assert; Clement I. epistle 1. Irenaeus book 1. chapter 2. Tertullian in the praescriptiones, Ambrose epistle 81. Rufinus in the exposition, Jerome epistle to Pammach. and on the errors of John of Jerusalem, Chrysostom homilies 1. and 2. on the Symbol, Augustine sermons 115. and 180. de tempore, Leo sermon 11. on the Passion of the Lord, and epistle 13. to Pulcheria, and with them St. Bonaventure and others.

> TRIPLEX autem Symbolum existit in Ecclesia, ut notat D. Bonav. ad 5. quaest. cit. Primum est Apostolorum, quod recitatur in officio. Hoc vero a duodecim Apostolis compositum asserunt communiter Patres veteres; Clemens I. epist. 1. Irenaeus lib. 1. cap. 2. Tertullianus in praescriptionibus*, Ambros. epist. 81. Ruffinus* in expositione*, Hieron. epist. ad Pammach. et* de erroribus Ioan. Hierosol. Chrysost. homil. 1. et 2. in Symb. August. serm. 115. et 180. de tempore, Leo serm. 11. de Passione Domini, et epist. 13. ad Pulcheriam, et cum eis S. Bonav. et alii.

13 The Seraphic Doctor adds, with Augustine and Leo above, that each Apostle set forth one article.

> Addit S. Doct. cum August. et Leone supra, singulos Apostolos apposuisse unum articulum.

14 The SECOND Symbol is Athanasius's, which, as the Seraphic Doctor says, was drawn up chiefly against Arius. It is the one that is recited at the first Hour of Sunday. So testify Sts. Augustine on Psalm 120. in the enchiridion chapter 36. and book 5. on the Trinity, chapter 8. and epistle 174. and sermon 195. de Tempore. And St. Gregory Nazianzen on the praises of Athanasius; and, which is the chief point, the whole Church receives it. It is kept at Rome, written by him in Latin.

> SECUNDUM Symbolum est Athanasii, quod, ut ait S. Doct. fuit contextum praecipue contra Arium. Est autem illud, quod recitatur in Hora prima Dominicae. Ita testantur SS. August. in Psalm. 120. in enchir. cap. 36. et lib. 5. de Trinitate, cap. 8. et epist. 174. et serm. 195. de Tempore. Et S. Gregorius Nazianzenus de laudibus Athanasii, et quod caput est, universa Ecclesia illud recipit. Habetur Romae, ab eo Latinae Scriptum.

15 The THIRD Symbol is the Nicene, which is recited in the Mass with certain additions in the first Council of Constantinople: Toledo 8. and Florence; and separately by the Church there was added that clause: proceeding from the Son (Filioque), as we saw p. 2. tract. 1. disp. 10. question 2.

> TERTIUM Symbolum est Nycaenum, quod in Missa recitatur cum quibusdam additis in CC. Constantinopolitano primo: Toletano 8. et Florentino; et seorsim ab Ecclesia addita est illa particula: Filioque procedit, ut vidimus p. 2. tract. 1. disp. 10. quaest. 2.

16 SUITABLY, however, the Seraphic Doctor shows that faith was ordered into articles first, that it might be Catholic, that is, a universal uniformity of faith among all peoples, which Irenaeus taught before, book 1. chapter 3.

> CONVENIENTER autem fidem in articulos ordinatam ostendit S. Doct. primo, ut esset Catholica, idest universalis uniformitas fidei apud omnes gentes, quod ante docuit Irenaeus lib. 1. cap. 3.

17 SECOND, because Faith had to be handed on to all, even the simple, which would not be explicit enough in general terms, nor could they be instructed by profuse eruditions, as D. Augustine teaches, book on faith, and the Symbol chapter 1., Cyril of Jerusalem catech. 5.

> SECUNDO, quia omnibus, etiam simplicibus debuit tradi Fides, quae non satis esset explicita in genere, nec profusis eruditionibus potuissent erudiri, ut docent D. August. lib. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1. Cyrill. Hierosol. catech. 5.

18 Valencia adds, with D. Bonaventure, that it is useful, indeed most necessary, against heretics, to have a formula of faith, which, therefore, as heresies arose with the passage of the times, was enlarged, as I shall say in the following question.

> ADDIT Valentia cum D. Bonav. utile, imo pernecessarium esse, contra haereticos habere formulam fidei, quae ideo, exurgentibus haeretibus temporum decursu, adaucta est, ut dicam quaestione sequenti.

19 The Seraphic Doctor shows, with D. Thom. question 1. article 8., that the articles are placed in a fitting order. He takes this order from the heads of things to be believed. First, then, the Divinity is to be believed: then the Trinity of persons: third the Humanity: fourth the Operations of the divinity; and last the works of Christ incarnate. As to the Divine essence, there is one article, just as the essence of God is most simple: I believe in God. As to the most holy Trinity, there are three articles. The first is: I believe in God the Father; the second is: In Jesus Christ, his son, etc.; the third: I believe in the Holy Spirit. As to the Operations of the deity, they are threefold. The first is the creation of nature, and it is noted when it is said: I believe in the Creator of heaven, and earth. The second is the bestowal of grace, and it is noted when it is said: I believe the Holy Catholic Church: the communion of Saints, the remission of sins. The third is the bestowal of glory: the resurrection of the flesh, life everlasting. And so there are seven articles concerning the divinity, looking to the divine essence itself: One looking to the Deity in itself; Three looking to the Trinity of persons, and the other three to the works of the Deity. Likewise concerning the humanity of Christ there are seven articles, according to the seven acts of the Redemption, which are ordered to our salvation. The first is the Incarnation, and on this is the article: Who was conceived of the Holy Spirit. The second is to be Born: Born of the Virgin Mary. The third is Redemption: He suffered under Pontius, and was crucified, dead, and buried. The fourth is the despoiling of hell: He descended into hell. The fifth is the triumph over death: On the third day he rose again from the dead. The sixth is the Ascension into heaven: He ascended into heaven, and sits at the right hand of the Father. The seventh is the Coming to judgment: From thence he shall come to judge, etc. See the Seraphic Doctor, dist. 25. question 1., assigning to each Apostle his own article.

ORDINE autem congruo articulos collocatos ostendit S. Doct. cum D. Thom. quaest. 1. art. 8. Sumit autem ordinem hunc e capitibus credendorum. Primum enim credenda est Divinitas: deinde Trinitas personarum: tertio Humanitas: quarto Operationes divinitatis; et ultimo opera Christi incarnati. Quoad Divinam essentiam, est unus articulus, sicut essentia Dei est simplicissima: Credo in Deum. Quoad Trinitatem sanctissimam, tres sunt articuli. Primus est: Credo in Deum Patrem, Secundus est: In Iesum Christum, filium eius, etc. Tertius: Credo in Spiritum Sanctum. Quoad Operationes deitatis, tripartitae sunt. Prima est naturae creatio, et notatur, cum dicitur: Credo in Creatorem caeli, et terrae. Secunda est, gratiae collatio, et notatur, cum dicitur: Credo Sanctam Ecclesiam Catholicam: Sanctorum communionem, remissionem peccatorum. Tertia est collatio gloriae: Carnis resurrectionem, vitam aeternam. Et sic septem sunt articuli circa divinitatem, respicientes ipsam divinam essentiam: Unus Deitatem in se; Tres respicientes Trinitatem personarum, et alii tres opera Deitatis. Similiter circa humanitatem Christi sunt septem articuli, secundum septem actus Redemptionis, qui ordinantur ad nostram salutem. Primus est Incarnatio, et de hoc est articulus: Qui conceptus est de Spiritu Sancto. Secundus est Nasci: Natus ex Maria Virgine. Tertius est Redemptio: Passus sub Pontio, et crucifixus, mortuus, et sepultus. Quartus est Inferni spoliatio: Descendit ad inferos. Quintus est triumphus de morte: Tertia die resurrexit a mortuis. Sextus est Ascensio in caelum: Ascendit ad caelos, sedet ad dexteram Patris. Septimus est Adventus ad iudicium: Inde venturus est iudicare, etc. Vide S. Doct. dist. 25. quaest. 1. singulis Apostolis proprium articulum: assignantem.

20 The Seraphic Doctor marvels that these fourteen articles are set forth in Apoc. 1., where Christ was seen among seven golden candlesticks, and he had in his right hand seven stars; now the stars are the heavenly articles of the deity: but the seven golden candlesticks, of earthly substance, yet precious, are the seven articles of the humanity. The same he teaches in Hexaemer. sermon 8. and in the Centilog. sect. 38. and in the Diaeta, chapter 5. title 3.

Hos quatuordecim articulos miratur S. Doct. expressos Apoc. 1. ubi inter septem candelabra aurea visus est Christus, et habebat ad dexteram septem stellas, sunt autem stellae articuli caelestes deitatis: At septem candelabra aurea, e terrena substantia, sed pretiosa, sunt septem humanitatis articuli. Eadem docet in Hexaemer. serm. 8. et in Centilog. sect. 38. et in Diaeta, cap. 5. titulo 3.

21 He notes, however, that the articles are reduced to twelve; for the first contains the Deity; and the first Person, who is the Fount of all the communications of the Deity; and the work of Creation, all of which St. Peter asserts; and so there are twelve articles in a broad sense. See the Seraphic Doctor.

ADVERTIT autem, reductos articulos in duodecim; nam primus continet Deitatem; et primam Personam, quae est Fons omnium communicationum Deitatis; et opus Creationis, quae omnia S. Petrus asserit, et ita duodecim sunt articuli, lato modo. Vide S. Doctorem.

22 Therefore the Seraphic Doctor proves the sufficiency of the Symbol first from Cassian book 6. de Incarn. to Pope Leo.

PROBAT igitur S. Doct. sufficientiam Symboli primo ex Cassiano lib. 6. de Incarn. ad Leonem Papam.

23 SECOND, because faith is concerned with God: Now God is regarded in two ways, either in himself, as One, and Three; or in the Humanity assumed. Again. The Deity is not known on the way, except through the works; now three of these are the chief ones, Creation, Gratification, and Glorification. But the works of the humanity are related in the Symbol, which, since it was composed by the Apostles, full of the Holy Spirit, there is no doubt that it is fitting; for they were the masters of the Catholic Church. And so, although fourteen can also be counted, as St. Bonaventure teaches, loc. cit., Scotus dist. 25. question 1., nevertheless they are reduced to twelve.

SECUNDO, quia fides versatur circa Deum: Dupliciter autem Deus respicitur, vel in se, ut Unus, et Trinus; vel in Humanitate assumpta. Rursus. Deitas non cognoscitur in via, nisi per opera; haec vero tria sunt praecipua, Creatio, Gratificatio, et Glorificatio. Opera vero humanitatis sunt relata in Symbolo, quod, cum ab Apostolis, plenis Spiritu Sancto compositum fuerit, non est dubium, quin congruum sit; fuere enim magistri Ecclesiae Catholicae. Itaque, licer quatuordecim possint etiam numerari, ut docent S. Bonav. loc. cit. Scotus dist. 25. quaest. 1. tamen ad duodecim rediguntur.

24 Valencia, however, loc. cit., Morand. q. 4., Cardinal Lugo disp. 3. sect. 4., observes that the Symbol is not Canonical Scripture, because it was composed by the Apostles, as a brief formula for professing the faith already possessed. You will wonder, here, that the Mystery of faith, that is, the Eucharist, is omitted. But it is included in the omnipotence. See D. Th. article 8. to 6. It is also enclosed in the Church.

OBSERVAT autem Valentia loc. cit. Morand. q. 4. Card. Lugo disp. 3. sect. 4. Symbolum non esse Scripturam Canonicam, quia compositum fuit ab Apostolis, tanquam formula brevis profitendi fidem, iam praehabitam. Miraberis, hic omitti Mysterium fidei, idest Eucharistiam Sed includitur in omnipotentia. Vide D. Th. art. 8. ad 6. Clauditur etiam in Ecclesia.

Question IX: Whether the articles of faith have grown over the course of time

1 The COMMON opinion of Theologians is that all the articles of faith have always been believed implicitly, though not explicitly: so D. Bonaventure and D. Thomas here, where the Thomists, and all the Sententiarii with the Master, 3. dist. 25., where also Albert. art. 1 to 1. Scotus question 1. Durand. question 1. Richard. art. 3. question 2. Valencia question 1. p. 6. et others in Suarez on Faith disp. 2. sect. 6. Cardinal Lugo disp. 3. sect. 5. Aragon. here. Tanner. disp. 1. q. 1. n. 101.

COMMUNIS Theologorum sententia est, articulos omnes fidei implicite semper fuisse creditos, non tamen explicite: Sic D. Bonav. et D. Thom. hic, ubi Thomistae, et Sententiarii omnes cum Magistro 3. dist. 25. ubi Albert. art. 1 ad 1. Scotus quaest. 1. Durand. quaest. 1. Richard. art. 3. quaest. 2. Valentia quaest. 1. p. 6. et alii apud Suarez de Fide disp. 2. sect. 6. Card. Lugo disp. 3. sect. 5. Aragon. hic. Tanner. disp. 1. q. 1. n. 101.

2 I ASSERT first, that the articles of Faith, as to implicit belief, have not grown.

ASSERO primo, articulos Fidei, quoad credulitatem implicitam non crevisse.

3 It is PROVED by the Seraphic Doctor first, because the Christian Faith is contained wholly in the new law, and the new law was enfolded in the old, as the whole in the wheel, as is said Ezech. 1.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. primo, quia Fides Christiana tota continetur in lege nova, et lex nova involvebatur veteri, veluti tota in rota, ut dicitur Ezech. 1.

4 It is PROVED second by the Seraphic Doctor. When the object is changed substantially, the habit is changed: Therefore if faith had a new object, believing what it did not believe before, it would be changed; but Faith, according to the diverse times, has not been changed, from D. Augustine epistle 51., Irenaeus book 4. chapter 13., and other Fathers; and so indeed what we believe, the Fathers believed explicitly as to substance, at least implicitly, so that even the holy Doctors who use this term teach, that it has not been changed as to substance, but according to accident; because what was believed implicitly of old is now believed explicitly, and so these articles were contained in the ancient ones, as more remote and more distinct concepts in the universal ones, as Valencia notes.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. Mutato obiecto substantialiter, mutatur habitus: Ergo si fides haberet obiectum novum credens, quod ante non credebat, mutata esset; sed Fides secundum diversa tempora non est mutata ex D. August. epist. 51. Irenaeo lib. 4. cap. 13. et aliis Patribus, atque adeo id, quod credimus nos, explicite credidere Patres, quoad substantiam, saltem implicite, ut docent etiam Sancti Doctores, qui hoc termino utuntur, non esse mutata, quoad substantiam, sed secundum accidens; quia implicite olim creditum, iam creditur explicite, atque adeo continebantur hi articuli in antiquis, sicut conceptus ulteriores, et distinctiores in universalibus, ut notat Valentia.

5 It is PROVED third by the Seraphic Doctor. For in ancient times all expected the Redeemer; but that he was to be a God-man, not all knew. So of the remaining articles looking to the passion, resurrection, and Ascension of Christ. The Seraphic Doctor explains this more fully in the body. These are the arguments for the opposite, granted in this sense in the replies.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. Nam antiquitus omnes expectabant Redemptorem; sed quod futurus esset homo Deus, non omnes sciebant. Sic de reliquis articulis spectantibus ad passionem, resurrectionem, et Ascensionem Christi. Hoc magis explicat S. Doct in corpore. Haec sunt argumenta ad oppositum, hoc sensu concessa in responsis.

6 It is PROVED fourth. As the object of Charity grew, so also of Faith; but all things must now be loved explicitly, even enemies; in ancient times they were to be loved implicitly: Therefore.

PROBATUR quarto. Sicuti crevit obiectum Charitatis, ita et Fidei; sed omnia nunc diligenda explicite, etiam inimici, erat antiquitus diligenda implicite: Ergo.

7 I ASSERT second, that not all things that are now believed explicitly were believed in the same way in ancient times.

ASSERO secundo, non omnia, quae nunc creduntur explicite, fuisse credita eodem modo antiquitus.

8 It is proved first by the Seraphic Doctor from that of Exodus 6. I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and my Name Adonai I did not show them, that is, I did not impart to them a clear knowledge of my Simplicity, and Unity, as D. Thom. expounds, question 174. article 6.

Probatur primo a S. Doct. ex illo Exodi 6. Ego sum Deus Abraham, Isaac, et Iacob: et Nomen meum Adonai non indicavi eis*, idest, non impertivi illis claram notitiam Simplicitatis, et Unitatis meae, ut exponit D. Thom. quaest. 174. art. 6.*

9 It is proved second by the Seraphic Doctor. As the Evangelical Law is related to the Mosaic as to morals, so also the faith of the new law to the faith of the old as to things to be believed; but the Gospel adds many counsels above the old law: Therefore the new law adds more things to be believed; yet not otherwise than by unfolding the implicit, as is clear from the foregoing. It is almost the argument of D. Irenaeus, book 4. chapter 47.

Probatur secundo a S. Doct. Sicut se habet Lex Evangelica ad Mosaicam; quoad moralia ita et fides legis novae ad fidem veteris quoad credibilia; sed Evangelium supra legem veterem addit multa consilia: Ergo lex nova addit plura credibilia; non tamen aliter, quam implicita explicando ut patet ex supradictis. Est fere Argumentum D. Irenaei lib. 4. cap. 47.

10 It is proved third by the Seraphic Doctor. For the Mysteries of the Incarnation, the Sacraments, and other things believed in the Church were not believed explicitly of old.

Probatur tertio a S. Doct. Nam Mysteria Incarnationis, Sacramenta, et alia Ecclesiae credita, non credebantur olim explicite.

11 It is proved fourth by the Seraphic Doctor. The new Church knows many things that lay hidden from the Angels, as is said Ephes. 3. Therefore much more did these things lie hidden from the men of the old law.

> Probatur quarto a S. Doct. Ecclesia nova, multa novit, quae Angelos latebant, ut dicitur Ephes. 3. Ergo multo magis haec latebant homines veteris legis.

Question X: Whether faith has grown as regards its light

1 I assert that Faith has grown in light from the beginning of the world.

> Utrum FIDES creverit quoad lumen.
> Assero, Fidem secundum lumen crevisse ab initio mundi.

2 It is PROVED first by the Seraphic Doctor from D. Gregor. homily 16. on Ezech., where, expounding that of Luke 10. Blessed are the eyes that see the things which you see, he says: With the increases of the times the knowledge of the Saints, and of the spiritual Fathers, grew. And the nearer they stood to the coming of the Savior, the more fully they perceived the mystery of salvation: Therefore they knew with a fuller light; but not except by the light of faith: Therefore. D. Thom. means the same, question 1. art. 4. to 4.: those nearer, namely to Christ, were suffused with a greater light — not all, indeed, but some. Valencia adds another limitation, that this is true of the infused light; for by natural light Theologians now know more things. But we were already speaking of the infused light of Faith.

> Probatur primo a S. Doct. ex D. Gregor. homil. 16. in Ezech. ubi exponens id Lucae 10. Beati oculi, qui vident, quae vos videtis*, ait:* Secundum incrementa temporum crevit scientia Sanctorum, et spiritualium Patrum. Et quanto adventui Salvatoris viciniores extiterunt, tanto mysterium salutis plenius perceperunt: Ergo pleniori lumine cognoverunt; sed non nisi lumine fidei: Ergo. Idem sentit D. Thom. quaest. 1. art. 4. ad 4. viciniores, nempe Christo, maiori lumine fuisse perfusos, non omnes sane, sed aliquos. Addit Valentia aliam limitationem, hoc verum esse de lumine infuso; nam lumine naturali nunc iam Theologi plura cognoscunt. Sed iam nos loquebamur de lumine infuso Fidei.

3 Tanner adds, disp. 1. question 1. number 206., that not even one of the Doctors, succeeding in the Church, received the mysteries of faith more explicitly than the Apostles.

> Addit Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 1. num. 206. nullum etiam e Doctoribus, succedentibus in Ecclesia, explicatius Apostolis mysteria fidei accepisse.

4 But this is truly PROVED. John 14. The Paraclete will teach you all things; and chapter 15. All things that I have heard from the Father, I have made known to you. And chapter 16. When the Paraclete shall come, he will teach you all things, and at the end of Luke: Then he opened their sense, that they might understand the Scriptures, as the Seraphic Doctor observes in his commentaries. And 2 Corinth. 3. Beholding with unveiled face the glory of the Lord. The Seraphic Doctor adds that of Acts 2., where Peter admonishes the Jews, the prophecy of Joel, chapter 2., being now fulfilled: And it shall be in the last days I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh, and they shall prophesy, and shall see visions.

> PROBATUR vero hoc. Ioan. 14. Paracletus vos docebit omnia; et cap. 15. Omnia, quae audivi a Patre, nota feci vobis. Et cap. 16. Cum venerit Paracletus, ille vos docebit omnia, et Lucae ultimo: Tunc aperuit illis sensum, ut intelligerent Scripturas*, ut observat S. Doct. in commentariis. Et secunda Corinth. 3.* Nos revelata facie gloriam Domini speculantes. Addit S. Doct. illud Act. 2. ubi Petrus admonet Iudaeos, iam impleti Ioëlis prophetiam capite 2. Et erit in novissimis diebus effundam de spiritu meo super omnem carnem, et prophetabunt, et visiones videbunt.

5 The Seraphic Doctor adds, to those words at the end of Luke, an argument from the Scriptures; For Christ has the key of knowledge, as is said Isa. 22. and Apoc. 5. The Lamb opened the Book of revelations, hidden before, and the four animals, which accompany the Evangelists, and the twenty-four elders standing about, saw the secrets. Therefore, the nearer the disciples were to Christ, the wiser they were.

Addit S. Doct. ad ea verba Lucae ultimo*, argumentum e Scripturis; Nam Christus habet clavem scientiae, ut dicitur Isa. 22. et Apoc. 5. Agnus aperuit Librum revelationum, antea occultatum, et quatuor animalia, quae Evangelistas comitantur, et vigintiquatuor seniores circumstantes viderunt arcana. Igitur, quo viciniores fuere discipuli Christo; eo sapientiores.*

6 But D. Bonan. on chapter 16. of John objects. How does he say, chapter 15. I have made all things known to you, when here he says: I have many things to say to you? He answers with D. August. Tract. 96. that he speaks of those things that were revealed at the coming of the Holy Spirit, to which they were not yet disposed. For all things, written with canonical authority before the coming of the spirit (says St. Augustine), who hears, or reads? And he puts the past for the future; and signifies, I have made known, that is, I shall make known so certainly that you may hold them as things possessed.

Obiicit vero sibi D. Bonan. ad cap. 16. Ioan. Quomodo ait, cap. 15. Omnia nota feci vobis*, at hic ait:* Multa habeo vobis dicere? Respondet cum D. August. Tract. 96. eum loqui de his, quae revelata sunt in adventu Spiritus sancti, ad quae non erant adhuc dispositi. Omnia enim, Canonica (ait S. August) authoritate conscripta ante adventum spiritus, quis audit, vel legit? ponit autem praeteritum pro futuro; et significat, nota feci*, idest, nota adeo certe faciam, ut ea possitis, ut habita, tenere.*

7 But the Seraphic Doctor has most splendid things on this, sermon 9. on the day of Pentec., where he observes that the Apostles are called heavens formed by the Holy Spirit, Iob. 26. The spirit of the Lord adorned the heavens. Psal. 116. The heavens show forth the glory of God. Psal. 32. By the word of the Lord the heavens were made firm, and by the spirit of his mouth all their power, as the Fathers expound: and he joins this with that of John 16. When he, the Spirit of truth, shall come, he will teach you all truth, and says: As the heavens are, in which is the fountain of light, and the Luminaries, so in the Apostles shone forth the most splendid Lights of faith. And as in the foundations there is the greater substance, so in the Apostles, who are called the foundations of the Church, Ephes. 2. Apoc. 21. And as the Holy Spirit is called the Fount of the water leaping forth, poured out, which Christ was to give; so they who were nearer to this Fount drank in more: Therefore the holy Apostles were endowed with a greater Light of faith. By these arguments this is proved by the holy Fathers: Cyprian epistle 74. Ambrose sermon 24. Augustine book 5. on Baptism, against the Donatists, chapter 26., in Valencia. And Morand. question 5., who observes with Aragon here art. 7. Cardinal Lugo disp. 3. sect. 5., that the Apostles had explicit faith of all those things which the faithful are now bound to believe; But Suarez book 2. sect. 6. num. 18. holds that this is true only of things looking to the substance of those times, not of contingents, for instance, that the Council of Trent was lawfully convened, which nevertheless was then of faith, but only now declared; so assert Vualdens. book 2. of the doctrinal faith, chapter 22. Lyrin. against heresies chapter 17. Therefore, say Cano, Castr., and others, we are not to expect a new revelation unknown to the Apostles.

Praeclara vero habet de hoc S. Doct. serm. 9. in die Pentec. ubi observat, Apostolos vocari caelos a Spiritu Sancto formatos, Iob. 26. Spiritus Domini ornavit caelos. Psal. 116. caeli enarrant gloriam Dei. Psal. 32. Verbo Domini caeli firmati sunt, et spiritu oris eius omnis virtus eorum*, ut Patres exponunt: haec autem componit cum illo Ioan. 16.* Cum venerit ille Spiritus veritatis, docebit vos omnem veritatem*, et ait: Sicut caeli sunt; in quibus est fons lucis, et Luminaria, ita in Apostolis splenduere Lumina fidei praeclarissima. Et sicuti in fundamentis est maior substantia, sic in Apostolis, qui dicuntur fundamenta Ecclesiae, Ephes. 2. Apoc. 21. Et sicut Spiritus Sanctus dicitur Fons aquae salientis effusus, quem Christus erat daturus; ita qui fuere viciniores huic Fonti, magis ebibere: Ergo Sancti Apostoli maiori Lumine fidei praediti sunt. His argumentis, hoc probant SS. PP. Cyprianus* epist. 74. Ambros. serm. 24. August. lib. 5. de Baptismo, contra Donatistas, cap. 26. apud Valentiam. Et Morand. quaest. 5. qui observat cum Aragonio hic art. 7. Card. Lugo disp. 3. sect. 5. Apostolos habuisse fidem explicitam eorum omnium, quae nunc fideles tenentur credere; At Suarez lib. 2. sect. 6. num. 18. tenet, hoc verum solum de spectantibus ad substantiam illorum temporum, non de contingentibus, puta, quod fuerit Tridentinum legitime congregatum, quae tamen fuisse de fide etiam tunc, sed nunc solum declarata; asserunt Vualdens. lib. 2. doctrinalis fidei, cap. 22. Lyrin. contra haeres. cap. 17. Ideo inquiunt Cano, Castr. et alii, nobis non esse expectandam novam revelationem, Apostolis ignotam.

8 Indeed Peter doubted about this great point: Whether the Gospel was to be preached to the nations. Acts 10. and chapter 11.; he is in some way reproved by Paul concerning the use of legal observances.

Profecto Petrus dubitavit de hoc magno puncto: An Evangelium esset praedicandum gentibus. Act. 10. et cap. 11. aliquo modo reprehenditur circa usum legalium a Paulo.

9 The Seraphic Doctor goes on to prove the excellence of our faith in the Evangelical law above the Mosaic; because, as the prophecies were ever made clearer even in the old law — whence David says Psal. 118. I have understood above the ancients, and he was esteemed a prophet above the earlier ones; so likewise the later ones were irradiated by the new light, as it were, of the day of grace approaching; so up to the Gospel, in which is the perpetual, resplendent day, the faith is more resplendent. For the Gospel is Light; and the old Law is a Shadow; and so the interior illumination is more resplendent, and the exterior instruction, and therefore the faith is adorned with a greater light.

Pergit S. Doct. probare praecellentiam fidei nostrae in lege Evangelica supra Mosaicam; quia sicuti prophetiae semper fiebant clariores etiam in lege veteri; unde ait David Psal. 118. Super senes intellexi*, et fuit aestimatus propheta, super antetiores; similiter et posteriores novo veluti diei gratiae advenientis lumine, fuere irradiati; sic usque ad Evangelium, in quo est dies perpetua praeclara, praeclarior est fides. Est enim Evangelium Lux; et Lex antiqua est Umbra; atque adeo praeclarior est illuminatio interior, et exterior instructio, ac proinde maiori lumine decoratur fides.*

10 You will object first. What is above time is not increased by time. Such is faith: Therefore.

Obiicies primo. Quod est supra tempus, non augetur tempore. Talis est fides: Ergo.

11 The Seraphic Doctor answers that it is above time as to the moving reason, which is the first truth; but as to instruction it grew from night into day.

Respondet S. Doct. esse supra tempus, quoad rationem moventem, quae est prima veritas; at quoad instructionem crevit e nocte, in diem.

12 You will object second. That which shows a more hidden object is a more intense light; but the ancient faith showed the Redeemer to come, who was more hidden than now, since he has already come: Therefore.

> Obiicies secundo. Id, quod ostendit occaltius obiectum, est lumen intensius; sed fides antiqua ostendebat Redemptorem futurum, qui erat magis occultus, quam nunc; cum iam advenerit: Ergo.

13 The Seraphic Doctor answers first that it would be truer, if such light showed the hidden thing more intensely, and more clearly, by revealing more of it: But if it reveals less, it is denied: Hence the light of faith, although it shows God hidden on the way, is less than the light of glory, which exhibits more, by making God, who is hidden from us, clearer. So the light of the old faith, showing Christ obscure, was more remiss, because it uncovered little of him, and less than ours.

> Respondet S. Doct. primo, Maiorem esse veram, si tale lumen ostendat rem occultam intensius, et clarius, plus de ea patefaciendo: At si minus pandat, negatur: Hinc lumen fidei, etsi ostendat Deum in via occultum, est minus lumine gloriae, quod plus exhibet, reddendo Deum, qui nobis est occultus, clarius. Ita lumen veteris fidei, ostendens Christum obscurum, erat remissius, quia parum de eo detegebat, minusque nostro.

14 He answers second that the light which unfolds an object obscure in itself, and makes it appear clearer to the powers, is resplendent; But if it shows it in an obscuring cloud, it is not such. Now Christ was obscure in himself in ancient times; and as to the powers he was shown with little light, in shadowy manner; now, however, although he has already come, still objectively, in a natural way, he is little exhibited. For even if we know that there was in Judaea a famous man, called Jesus; and we read many things about him in the historians of the world; nevertheless we have received the knowledge of the Divine Person, of the truth of the doctrine, of the holiness, and of the miracles, by the light of faith, by which we believe the Gospels; and therefore the light that makes this hidden thing known to our minds is clearer than that light infused into the ancients. This reply contains, and explains the preceding one.

> Respondet secundo, lumen, quod pandit obiectum in se obscurum, illudque potentiae facit clarius apparere, esse praeclarum; At si ostendat in nubilo, non est tale. Iam vero Christus erat antiquitus in se obscurus; et ex parte potentiarum parum lumine umbroso ostensus; nunc autem tametsi iam venerit, tamen obiective via naturali parum exhibetur. Esto enim sciamus, fuisse in Iudaea hominem celebrem, vocatum Iesum; multaque de eo apud historicos mundi legamus; attamen notitiam Personae Divinae, veritatis doctrinae, sanctitatis, et miraculorum, accepimus lumine fidei, quo Evangelia credimus; et ideo lumen, hoc occultum reddens mentibus notum, est clarius lumine illo, antiquis infuso. Haec responsio continet, et explicat praecedentem.

15 The same light suffused those who touched Jesus in the flesh; whence very many, although they saw the miracles, etc., did not believe, as D. Bonav. says, on 3.

> Idem lumen perfudit eos, qui in carne Iesum contrectarunt; unde plurimi, tametsi viderint miracula, etc. non credidere, ut ait D. Bonav. ad 3.

16 You will object third. The light of faith that shows things to come is greater than that which shows things past: But the ancients saw things to come; We things past: Therefore.

> Obiicies tertio. Maius est lumen fidei, quod ostendit futura, quam quod praeterita: Sed antiqui videbant futura; Nos praeterita: Ergo.

17 The Seraphic Doctor answers that things above natural cognition are equally obscure whether they be past, and that of such things there is prophecy. Thus Moses prophesied, describing the creation of the world Genes. 1., and other past things. And Elizabeth Luke 1. says: Blessed art thou that hast believed, and of such things is faith, as that Jesus the son of God died, etc., which are not accessible to natural light.

> Respondet S. Doct. ea, quae sunt supra naturalem cognitionem, esse aeque obscura, si praeterita sint, et de talibus esse prophetiam. Sic prophetavit Moyses describens creationem mundi Genes. 1. et alia praeterita. Et Elisabeth Lucae 1. ait: Beata, quae credidisti*, et de his est fides, ut quod Iesus filius Dei sit mortuus, etc. quae naturali lumini non sunt pervia.*

18 You will object fourth. The illumination is greater where the communication of light is greater: But our faith is confirmed by the light even of the ancient Fathers: therefore it receives light from the ancients.

19 The Seraphic Doctor answers that this happens per accidens, insofar as those Fathers were set forth as lampstands for the posterity of the grace of the new law also. Thus the patience of Job, and of Tobias was set forth; the faith of Abraham, etc., that those first ones should be the exemplars of virtue, and that we, animated, might see what higher sanctity we are bound to climb in the testament of graces, to which indeed innumerable ones have flown over by the observance of the perfection of the counsels, although many have lain hidden under a bushel.

> Respondet S. D. id evenire per accidens, quatenus expositi sunt Patres illi super candelabra posteris novae etiam legis gratiae. Sic exposita est Iobi, et Tobiae patientia; Abrahae fides, etc. ut illi primi essent Ideae virtutis, nosque animati videremus quam altiorem sanctitatem scandere teneamur in testamento gratiarum, ad quam sane innumeri supervolarunt consiliorum perfectionis observantia, etsi sub Modio latuerint multi.

Question XI: Whether faith has grown in certitude

1 I assert first, that faith does not grow in the respect of its intrinsic certainty.

> An Fides creverit certitudine.
> Assero primo, fidem non crescere in ratione sua intrinsecae certitudinis.

2 It is proved by D. Bonav. first, because it hangs on the first truth, which is immutable.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo, quia pendet a prima veritate, quae immutabilis est.

3 Second, because it hangs on the Divine foreknowledge, and decree, which are immutable.

> Secundo*, quia pendet a Divina praescientia, et decreto, quae immutabilia sunt.*

4 Third, because it hangs on the divine predictions, which are always certain in the same way.

> Tertio*, quia pendet ex divinis praedictionibus, quae semper eodem modo sunt certae.*

5 Fourth. That is more certain which is further removed from error, as that is whiter which recedes more from black, as Aristotle has it 3. Top. chapter 4.; but the ancient faith, and ours, are equally removed from all error: Therefore.

> Quarto. Id est certius, quod magis ab errore est remotum, sicut id est albius, quod magis a nigro recedit, ut habet Atistoteles 3. Top. cap. 4. sed fides antiqua, et nostra, sunt aeque remotae ab omni errore: Ergo.

6 I assert second, that faith grows on the side of the believers, by reason of clearer instruction, and devotion.

> Assero secundo, fidem crescere ex parte credentium, ob clariorem instructionem, et devotionem.

7 It is proved by D. Bonav. first. For that is more certain which is made known by more means; but the mysteries have been expounded with new light, and in new ways: Therefore.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo. Certius enim est, quod pluribus mediis notificatur; sed mysteria novo lumine, novisque modis sunt exposita: Ergo.

8 Second, because the mysteries of Christ, which were to come, are now rendered more certain from the fact.

> Secundo*, quia mysteria Christi, quae futura erant, iam certiora* ex facto redduntur.

9 Third, because faith abounds with many witnesses, namely, those who have received the Catholic faith. By which argument D. August. was moved, book against the letter of Fundam. chapter 4. and book on the profit of believing, chapter 14. How much more does the consensus of those who came after St. August. move? Surely so many men did not come to the faith for private advantages, but so many rich, so many wise, so many Princes ran to despoilings of their goods, to prisons, to martyrdoms, as St. Justin argues Apol. 2. to the Emperor. Behold even in our times so many Heroes turning the ribbons of the world into haircloth, and proud roofs into humble little cells.

> Tertio*, quia fides pluribus testibus abundat, nempe, qui fidem Catholicam receperunt. Quo argumento movetur D. August.* lib. contra epist. fundam. cap. 4. et lib. de utilitate credendi, cap. 14. Quanto magis movet consensus eorum, qui post S. August. venere? Sane tot homines non ob privata commoda ad fidem veniebant, sed ad expoliationes bonorum, ad carceres, ad martyria currebant tot divites, tot sapientes, tot Principes, ut arguit S. Iustinus Apol. 2. ad Imperatorem. Inspice nostris etiam temporibus tot Heroes, mundi infulas in cilicia, superbaque tecta in humiles cellulas vertentes.

10 Then there are the most splendid testimonies of so many martyrs triumphing amid torments, from which, even in our times, in England, and other northern regions, whence every evil is spread, by the cruelty, and unbelief of the sectaries, and Mahometans, have been produced men most wise, and most holy.

> Deinde sunt testimonia praeclara tot martyrum, inter tormenta triumphantium, e quibus viri sapientissimi, et sanctissimi, nostris etiam temporibus in Anglia, et aliis Poli plagis, unde panditur omne malum, sectariorum, et Mahumetanorum crudelitate, et incredulitate inductum.

11 Fourth, of so many Kings, Emperors, flourishing with the torque of wisdom in the world, there are testimonies; I mean of those who came to the faith by most splendid conversions down to these very times.

> Quarto*, tot Regum, Imperatorum, torque florentium in orbe sapientia, sunt testimonia; eorum inquam, qui praeclaris conversionibus ad fidem venerunt ad haec usque tempora.*

12 Fifth, the assaults, wars, persecutions surmounted by the Church against heretical sectaries, who watered France, Germany, England with blood, that they might overturn the Catholic faith: Surely these seem to have far surpassed the savageries of the pagan Roman Caesars.

13 Sixth, the miracles multiplied down to these very times, even in the most remote Indians beyond the seas: By which argument Christ used Matth. 11. But if the miracles are not, and without miracles the Church stands, and grows; what greater miracle can there be? Thus argues St. August. 22. de civitate, chapter 5.: It is a great miracle that the Church navigates safe amid innumerable storms down to these times.

Sexto, multiplicata miracula ad haec usque tempora, etiam in remotissimis ultramarinis Indorum: Quo argumento usus est Christus Matth. 11. Quod si miracula non sunt, et sine miraculis stat, et crescit Ecclesia; quod maius esse potest miraculum? Sic arguit S. August. 22. de civitate, cap. 5. Magnum esse miraculum, Ecclesiam ad haec usque tempora inter innumeras procellas incolumem navigare.

14 Seventh, even our enemies are witnesses Deuter. 32. Josephus the Hebrew book 18. antiq. chapter 9. the pagan Emperors in Eusebius book 4. Hist. chapter 13. and book 9. chapter 9. and Justin Apol. 2. to the Emperor.

Septimo, etiam inimici nostri sint testes Deuter. 32. Iosephus Hebraeus lib. 18. antiq. cap. 9. Imperatores Pagani apud Eusebium lib. 4. Hist. cap. 13. et lib. 9. cap. 9. et Iustinum Apol. 2. ad Imperatorem.

15 Eighth, let them testify with the characters of blood, who assailed our faith. I pass over the ancients: Luther died suddenly: Calvin eaten by worms, and others: Adolphus King of Sweden crushed in war. But if in ancient times this was an incentive to faith, while they saw the pagan Caesars slain, Arius pouring out his bowels, Julian the Apostate struck by lightning, how much more ought it now to move, while we have beheld all the others suddenly snatched from the midst by a terrible death?

Octavo, testentur sanguinis characteribus, qui fidem nostram oppugnarunt. Omitto veteres: Lutherus raptim mortuus: Calvinus a vermibus depastus, et alii: Adolphus Rex Suecus contritus in bello. Quod si temporibus antiquis hoc erat ad fidem incentivum, dum videbant Paganos Caesares peremptos, Arium viscera fundentem, Iulianum Apostatam fulminatum, quanto magis nunc id debeat movere, dum omnes alios terribili nece e medio repentine sublatos, spectavimus?

16 Let there come forward so many Councils of Wise men, and of Saints, so many prophetic oracles confirmed, so many arduous labors endured by the Confessors, so many wonders wrought in the Church, which now prevails with the highest majesty, and power: And there is the acclamation Math. 16. The gates of hell shall not prevail. How rightly Richard of St. Victor, book 1. on the Trinity, chapter 2. Lord, if we are deceived, thou hast deceived us; But that God cannot deceive I showed question 4. The Seraphic Doctor shows his indefectible perpetuity in Hexaëm. and Boët. in demonstr. 8.

Accedant tot Concilia Sapientum, et Sanctorum, tot prophetarum vaticinia firmata, tot Confessorum ardua exantlata, tot mira in Ecclesia patrata, quae nunc summa maiestate, et potentia praevalet: Et acclamatur id Math. 16. Portae inferi non praevalebunt. Quam recte Richardus Victor, lib. 1. de Trinitate, cap. 2. Domine, si decepti sumus, tu nos decepisti; At Deum non posse decipere ostendi quaest. 4. Eius indefectibilem perpetuitatem ostendit S. Doct. in Hexaëm. et Boët. in demonstr. 8.

17 At last the Seraphic Doctor proves that faith has been made more certain, or, let me say, more founded, by devotion, which fosters faith. Surely the devotion of our Church is marveled at everywhere in the ancient Canticles, as the Fathers expound. For now the army of Saints, the ranks of Martyrs, the choirs of Virgins abound, as St. Bonav. discourses most sweetly here, and in the sermons of the Hexaëmer., especially 8. and following.

Tandem probat S. Doct. fidem certiorem factam, seu dixero fundatiorem, devotione, quae fovet fidem. Sane Ecclesiae nostrae devotionem demiratur Antiqua in Canticis passim, ut Patres exponunt. Iam enim Sanctorum exercitus, Martyrum acies, Virginum chori abundant, ut melliflue disserit S. Bonav. hic, et in sermonib. Hexaëmer. maxime 8. et sequent.

Question XII: Whether the articles of faith are to be expounded by some authority which is an infallible teacher, and what it is 1 This question suggests the weightiest disputations against the sectaries, who, by their own strength and an empty, though inflated, little spirit, urge that it is lawful for all to interpret the Scriptures, and the articles of faith: But I have treated of these p. p. Tract. first, disp. 2. Prooemial, On the Theological Places, where I reduced the whole power of the key of knowledge to the seat of the Pope. The Seraphic Doctor demonstrates this most beautifully in the Apolog. of the poor, resp. 1. chapter 1., where he brings forward the precept of Deut. 17. of fleeing in doubts to the Pontiff.

An Fidei articuli exponendi sint auctoritate aliqua, quae sit infallibilis magistra, et quae sit.

Haec quaestio insinuat disputationes gravissimas contra sectarios, qui proprio marte et spiritulo inani, inflato tamen, urgent, omnibus licere Scripturarum, et articulorum fidei interpretationem: Sed de his egi p. p. Tract. primo, disp. 2. Prooemiali, De Locis Theologicis, ubi summam clavis scientiae potestatem ad sedem Papae deduxi. Id praeclare demonstrat S. Doctor in Apolog. pauper. resp. 1. cap. 1. ubi adducit praeceptum Deut. 17. confugiendi in dubiis ad Pontificem.

Question XIII: What are the marks of the true Church, in which the authority of expounding faith resides

1 The Church was founded from the beginning of the world, as S. Bonaventure asserts on Psalm 61, which all follow. But that she began more from Abel than from Adam, he explains: because Abel was slain as a figure of Christ, whereas Adam did not slay others. Then too, Abel was a virgin, a Martyr, and a Pastor, or Doctor. Finally, because a truncated branch is not reckoned, as is evident in the tree of consanguinity. Add that Abel began the multiplication: for the Church is a union of many faithful. Indeed Cain was a heretic, and killed Abel out of hatred of the faith. This is clear from Genesis 4, where we read: Cain said to Abel: Let us go out into the open. The Chaldean reads: Cain said: There is no Law, no judge, nor retribution. When Abel detested that proposition, Cain was aroused.

Quae sint notae verae Ecclesiae, apud quam stat authoritas exponendi FIDEM.

ECCLESIAM ab origine mundi fundatam asserit S. Bonavent. in Psalm. 61. quem omnes imitantur. Incepisse autem magis ab Abel, quam ab Adam, edisserit; quia fuit Abel occisus in Christi figuram; non autem occidit alios, ut Adam. Deinde fuit virgo, Martyr, et Pastor, seu Doctor. Tandem quia truncus non computatur, ut constat in consanguinitatis Arbore. Adde, Abelem incepisse multiplicationem: Nam Ecclesia est adunatio multorum fidelium. Sane Cain fuit haereticus, et odio fidei occidit Abelem. Hoc constat ex Genes. 4. ubi enim habemus: Dixit Cain ad Abel: Egrediamur foras. Chaldaeus legit: Dixit Cain: Non est Lex, non est iudex, nec retributio. Quam propositionem detestatus Abel, Cain concitavit.

2 This mark has always remained intact in some, as S. Bonaventure runs through in sermon 16 of the Hexaëmeron. The true Marks of the Church are chiefly those read in the Creed, when it is said: I believe One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church.

Haec semper in aliquibus integra permansit, ut discurrit S. Bonavent. serm. 16. Hexaëmer. Verae Notae Ecclesiae sunt praecipuae, quae in Symbolo leguntur, dum dicitur: Credo Unam, Sanctam, Catholicam, Apostolicam Ecclesiam.

3 The FIRST Mark is that she be one. On this account (as S. Bonaventure observes on chapter 1 of Wisdom) it is said in Canticles 6: One is my dove, my perfect one.

PRIMA Nota est, ut sit una. Propter hoc enim (ut observat S. Bonavent. in cap. 1. Sap.) dicitur Cant. 6. Una est columba mea, perfecta mea.

4 On this account, she is said also to be compared to the world. Hence in Wisd. 1 it is said: The spirit of the Lord hath filled the whole world, both to signify that she is one; and her perfection in the world; and to show that she is Catholic, that is, universal, as the holy Doctor there remarks, describing from the parallel of the world the other perfections of the Church: stability in her seat, the gates of hell shall not prevail (Matt. 16), just as the earth standeth for ever (Eccl. 1); the spherical motion for communicating heavenly goods; the nobler ornaments of the virtues in the stars; the lower ones in herbs and plants, etc.

Propter hoc, comparatam ait etiam orbi. Ideo Sap. 1. dicitur: Spiritus Domini replevit orbem terrarum*, tum ut unam significet; tum ut perfectionem in orbe; tum ut Catholicam, idest universalem ostendat, ut advertit S. Doctor ibi describens alias, e parallelo orbis, Ecclesiae perfectiones, stabilitatem in sua sede,* Portae inferi non praevalebunt. Matth. 16. sicuti et: terra in aeternum stat*, Eccl. 1. motum sphaericum ad bona coelestia communicanda: ornamenta nobiliora virtutum in stellis; inferiora in herbis, plantis, etc.*

5 With similar parallels S. Bonaventure applies to the Church the name of the Dove, to those words of Psalm 67: If you sleep in the midst of lots, the wings of the dove overlaid with silver, and the hinder parts of her back in the paleness of gold, but he chiefly pursues the likeness from the fruitfulness by which she has brought forth all the faithful throughout the whole world, so that all may acknowledge one mother, the spouse of Christ, may confess one faith of Christ, united in the head, her Vicar, the Roman Pontiff. So teach Irenaeus, book 3, chap. 3; Cyprian, book 1, epist. 3, and book 4, epist. 8; Ambrose, on the death of Satyrus; Jerome, epistle to Damasus, who also, in the Epitaph on Marcella, writes that SS. Athanasius and his successor Peter of Alexandria, Bishops, fleeing the persecution of the Arians and their heresies, took refuge with the Roman See as with a Mother. The same doctrine is held by Optatus, book 1, contra Parmen.; Augustine, epist. 162; Leo, epist. 87.

CONSIMILIBUS parallelis applicat S. Bonavent. Ecclesiae nomen Columbae, ad ea verba Psalm 67. Si dormiatis inter medios cleros, pennae columbae de argentatae, et posteriora dorsi eius in pallore auri*, praecipue vero aucupatur similitudinem e foecunditate, qua omnes fideles peperit in toto orbe, ut omnes unam matrem cognoscant Christi sponsam, unam fidem Christi confiteantur, uniti in capite Vicario eius Romano Pontifice. Sic docent Irenaeus Lib. 3. cap. 3. Cyprianus Lib. 1. epist. 3. et Lib. 4. epist. 8. Ambros. de obitu Satyri, Hieron. epist. ad Damasum, qui, et in Epitaphio Marcellae, scribit SS. Athanasium, et eius successorem, Petrum Alexandrinum, Episcopos, persecutionem* Arianorum, eorumque haereses declinantes, ad Romanam sedem, tanquam Matrem, confugisse. Eandem doctrinam tenet Optat: L. 1. cont. Parmen. Augustinus epist. 162. Leo epist. 87.

6 From one birth through Baptism, and one rite, the holy Doctor gathers in 4 dist. 3, part 1, quest. 2, one mother with the Apostle, Ephes. 4: One spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism. The Roman Church, therefore, has always been united in her members, as the holy Doctor shows in the Hexaëmeron, sermon 22. This the holy Doctor shows admirably on chapter 10 of John, in those words of the Lord Jesus: and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. Hence Ephes. 2: He is our peace, who hath made both one: and Isa. 28: He is the corner stone made into the head of the corner, uniting two walls, and Job 38: Who laid the one corner stone? God surely wills this great work of uniting so many foreign peoples scattered through the whole world into one house, into one fold, to be ascribed to Himself. Magnificently therefore God promised this Shepherd in Ezechiel 34: I will raise up one shepherd over them. Thus the holy Doctor.

Ex una nativitate per Baptismum, unoque ritu, colligit S. Doctor in 4. dist. 3. p. 1. quaest. 2. unam matrem cum Apostolo, Ephes. 4. Unus spiritus, unus Dominus, una fides, unum Baptisma. Unita igitur semper in membris Ecclesia Romana fuit, ut ostendit S. Doctore in Hexaëmer. sermone 22. Hoc egregie ostendit S. Doctore ad cap. 10. Ioan. illis verbis Domini Iesu: et fiet unum ovile, et unus Pastor. Hinc Ephes. 2. Ipse est pax nostra, qui fecit utraque unam: et Isa 28. Ipse est lapis angularis factus in caput anguli uniens duos parietes, et Iob 38. Quis demisit lapidem angularem unum? sibi profecto adscribi vult Deus hoc opus grande uniendi e tot exteris, diffusisque toto orbe gentibus in unam domum, in unum ovile. Magnifice ideo Deus hunc Pastorem promisit Ezechiel. 34. Suscitabo super eos Pastorem unum. Haec S. Doctor.

7 HENCE he takes up at a deeper level the coherence of our Church and the ruin of so many sects, with an argument drawn from Christ, Luke 11: Every kingdom divided against itself shall be laid waste: For, as D. Jerome says in the Monastic Rule on charity and peace, from Sallust on the Jugurthine war: Concord makes small things grow; discord brings down the greatest. Three confederations of the Rhaeti, it seems, seized on that saying and ascribed it to their three coats of arms, on which are depicted the Ibex in one, in another the Satyr, in the third the Cross between the fasces; and these three, joined together by chains, with that inscription hanging, would prevail! But the wretched Rhaeti, having fallen into heresies, tearing one another to pieces, preserve only that kind of union which is among enemies, and are perpetually at variance with their Catholics. The Devil accomplishes in the sects of heretics what came about in the Academies of the Philosophers, which, divided into sects, fell most miserably, as S. Augustine remarks, book 18, de civitate, chap. 52. Run through the sects of heretics in Bellarmine, chap. 10. The sectaries, the heretics of our age, are torn into almost innumerable sects.

HINC altius exorditur Ecclesiae nostrae consistentiam, et tot sectarum ruinam, argumento, sumpto e Christo, Lucae 11. Omne regnum in se divisum desolabitur: Nam, ut ait D Hieron. in Regula Monach. de charitate, et pace, ex Sallustio de bello Iugurtino. Concordia parvae res crescunt; discordia maximae dilabuntur. Quod dictum affumpsere tres Rhetorum excelsae confoederationes, idque suis tribus adscripsere insignibus, quibus depicti sunt Hyrcus in una, in alia Satyrus, in tertia Crux inter fascias, et haec tria, catenis collegata, illa pendente inscriptione, enirent! At Rheti miseri in haereses delapsi, mutuo seipsos dilacerantes, eam tantum servant collegationem, quae est inter hostes, et cum Catholicis suis perpetuo disceptantur. Id efficit Diabolus in sectis haereticorum, quod Academiis effectum est Philosophorum, quae, in sectas divisae, miserrime sunt delapsae, ut advertit S. Augustinus Lib. 18. de civit. cap. 52. Percurrito haereticorum sectas apud Bellarminum cap. 10. Sectarii, haeretici saeculi nostri, in innumeras sunt fere sectas lacerati.

8 BUT the Roman Church has always remained whole under one head, and indeed unharmed through so many centuries. So observed S. Augustine, epist. 162, and on the Psalm against the party of Donatus; and Leo, epist. 87; and Cyprian, book 9, epist. 4, and book 1, epist. 3. This I shall show also in the Tractate on Religion, disputation 1, last question.

> AT Romana Ecclesia semper sub capite uno integra, atque adeo incolumis tot saecula permansit. Sic observavit S. Augustinus epist. 162. et in Psalm. contra partem Donati et Leo epist. 87. et Cyprianus Lib. 9. epist. 4. et Lib. 1. epist. 3. Hoc ostendam etiam Tract. de Relig. disp. 1. quaest. ult.

9 That which Calvin mutters in the preface to his devastations — not his Institutions — that we too are divided in the Schools of the Thomists and the Scotists: I answer with D. Augustine, book 1, contra Julianum, that our Schools are not divided as to the things that belong to the faith.

> QUOD vero Calvinus obmurmurat in praef. suarum desolationum, non Institutionum, etiam nos in Scholas Thomistarum, Scotistarum dividi; dico cum D. Augustino Lib. 1. contra Iulianum, Scholas nostras non dividi, quod ad ea, quae sunt fidei.

10 The SECOND Mark of the Church is that she be Holy. Now she is Holy for many reasons. First, because she teaches a holy doctrine, which contains nothing false, nothing iniquitous, as is said in Psalm 18: The law of the Lord is unspotted, converting souls. And he proves this, because it was efficacious for alluring, indeed for drawing after it, the souls of so many nations, because they saw the holiness of our Law, as the holy Doctor runs through on this Psalm.

> SECUNDA Nota Ecclesiae est, ut sit Sancta: Multis autem de causis est Sancta. Primo, quia doctrinam sanctam docet, quae nil falsum, nil iniquum continet, ut dicitur Psalm. 18. Lex Domini immaculata convertens animas. Id vero probat, quia efficax fuit ad animos tot gentium alliciendos, imo pertrahendos, quia viderunt Legis nostrae sanctitatem, ut discurrit S. Doctor ad hunc Psalmum.

11 HENCE she is called the Unica dove, one perfect one, as the holy Doctor expounds on chapter 1 of Wisdom. But he adds, on Psalm 118, cap. 8, vers. 6, and on Psalm 76, and in sermons 8, 9, 16, 22 of the Hexaëmeron, other reasons also for which the Church is called Holy.

> HINC dicitur Unica columba, una perfecta, ut S. Doctor edisserit ad cap. 1. Sapientiae. Addit vero ad Psalm. 118. cap. 8. vers. 6. et ad Psalm. 76. et in sermonibus 8. 9. 16. 22. Hexaëmer. alias etiam rationes, ob quas Ecclesia dicitur Sancta.

12 FIRST, because she shines with almost countless holy members, because she is founded on the dignity of the person and merits of Christ. Therefore, on this unshaken foundation, so that the gates of hell and its phalanxes may not prevail, with this Leader she is most excellently established, like an army in battle array, that she yield to no weapons of Tartarus, to no forces of tyrants. Therefore S. Augustine teaches the saying: Thou hast founded her upon her own stability; she shall not be moved for ever and ever, Psalm 103; and Peter, epist. 1, chap. 2, calls Christians a holy nation, a purchased people.

> PRIMA, quia innumeris fere membris sanctis splendet, quia fundata est dignitate personae, et meritorum Christi. Ideo hoc fundamento inconcussa, ut inferorum portae atque phalanges non praevaleant, hoc Duce optime constituta, veluti castrorum acies ordinata, nullis Tartari armis, nullis Tyrannorum viribus cedat. Ideo deca dictum: Fundasti eam super stabilitatem suam; non inclinabitur in saeculum saeculi, Psalm. 103. docet S. Augustinus; et Petrus epist. 1. cap. 2. vocat Christianos, Gentem sanctam, populum acquisitionis.

13 Moreover, the holiness of our Catholics, or even of Bernard, Dominic, and Francis, Luther himself confessed in de captivitate Babyloniae, chap. 2, and Philip in the Apology, articles 5 and 27.

> PORRO sanctitatem nostrorum Catholicorum, vel etiam Bernardi, Dominici, Francisci fassi sunt Luther. de captivitate Babyl. cap. 2. Philip. in Apol. art. 5. et 27.

14 BUT we shall find the troops of the opposing sectaries, defiled by wicked and impious errors, springing from the most criminal of men. Read Bellarmine from chapter 11, Hosius in the Confession of Poland, Valencia in the Analysis, and others. Moreover, I showed the holiness of our Church with D. Bonaventure, p. p. Tractate 1, disputations 1 and 2.

> AT Sectarum adversantium turmas, pravis, et impiis erroribus conspurcatas, ex hominibus scelestissimis oriundas inveniemus. Lege Bellarminum a cap. 11. Hosium in confess. Polon. Valentiam in Analysi, et alios. Porro sanctitatem nostrae Ecclesiae ostendi cum D. Bonavent. p. p. Tract. 1. disp. prima, et 2.

15 The THIRD MARK of the Church is that she be Catholic, that is, universal. Now the holy Doctor observes in Psalm 47 and Psalm 114 that she is universal first of all in time, because beginning in Adam or Abel from the beginning, she is to last until the end of the world. Second, in such a way that she has been propagated through the whole world. Third, as to doctrines, because she hands on all the knowledge necessary to be had. Fourth, as to persons, because she has been diffused and propagated among every people.

> TERTIA NOTA Ecclesiae est, ut sit Catholica, idest universalis. Observat autem S. Doctor in Psalm. 47. et Psalm. 114. eam esse universalem primo tempore, quia ab initio in Adam, vel Abel incipiens, usque ad finem mundi est duratura. Secundo loco, ita ut in universo mundo sit propagata. Tertio quo ad doctrinas, quia universa necessaria scienda tradit. Quarto, quo ad personas, quia in omni gente diffusa et propagata est.

16 FIRST, therefore, as to her duration through all times, she is Universal: For from the beginning of the world until Christ; and from Christ she has come down even to us, as the holy Doctor rightly shows in the sermons of the Hexaëmeron, especially sermon 16, where he observes that promise of Christ: Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her: For she has endured perennially down to these times in the Pontiffs, as I showed in the place cited, in the arguments and dogmas. On the contrary, indeed, the Greeks, others of the Orientals, and the Africans, among whom Heroes, Councils, Fathers flourished, as soon as they departed from our Church, were torn, scattered, split asunder, consumed. For, failing from the unity of the universal Church, they vanished, torn into sects. See the holy Doctor there narrating these things.

> PRIMO igitur, quo ad durationem per omnia tempora, est Universalis: Nam ab exordio mundi usque ad Christum; et a Christo ad nos usque devenit, ut recte ostendit S. Doctor in sermonibus Hexaëmer. praecipue 16. ubi observat illud Christi promissum: Super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam, et portae inferi non praevalebunt adversus eam: Duravit enim ad haec usque tempora perennis in Pontificibus, ut ostendi loco cit. in rationibus, et dogmatibus. E contra vero, Graeci, aliique Orientales, et Africani, apud quos florebant Heroes, Concilia, Patres; statim ac discessere a nostra Ecclesia, lacerati sunt, dissipati, difficissi, consumpti. Ab unitate namque Ecclesiae universalis deficientes, in sectas dilacerati evanuere. Vide S. Doctorem ibi haec enarrantem.

17 The PERPETUITY of the Church was shown in Luke 1: Of his kingdom there shall be no end, as the holy Doctor there discusses in his commentary, and confirms with that of Daniel 7: His power is an everlasting power, which shall not be taken away, and his kingdom that shall not be destroyed. The same the holy Doctor shows in 4 dist. 4, part 2, dub. 2, from the end of Matthew: Behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world. Where he remarks that it is not necessary for the Church, in order to be Catholic, that she remain among all men at all times. With this argument from the antiquity of the Church the Fathers gladly made use: Tertullian, de praescriptionibus; Optatus, book 2, contra Parmen.; Hilary, book 6, de Trinitate; Jerome, to Pammachius and contra Luciferianos; Augustine, contra epistulam fundamenti, chap. 4. Therefore, since our Church has lasted from Christ even to this day, she will surely be the true Church. Let the Lutherans find their Church before the year 1517. I showed ours p. p. Tractate 1, disputation 2.

> PERPETUITAS Ecclesiae ostensa fuit Lucae primo. Regni eius non erit finis, ut ibi in commentario disserit S. Doctor et confirmat illo Dan. 7. Potestas eius aeterna, quae non auferetur, et regnum, quod non corrumpetur. Idipsum ostendit S. Doctor in 4. dist. 4. part. 2. dub. 2. ex ult. Matth. Ecce ego vobiscum sum omnibus diebus, usque ad consummationem saeculi. Ubi advertit, non esse necesse Ecclesiae, ut sit Catholica, apud omnes permaneat omnibus temporibus. Hoc argumento ab antiquitate Ecclesiae usi sunt Patres libenter Tertull. de praescrip. Optat. lib. 2. cont. Parmen. Hilarius lib. 6. de Trin. Hieronymus ad Pammach. et contra Luciferian. Augustin. contra epist. fund. cap. 4. Igitur cum nostra Ecclesia e Christo hucusque duraverit, profecto vera erit Ecclesia. Inveniant Lutherani suam Ecclesiam ante annum 1517. Ego nostram ostendi p. p. Tract. 1. disput. 2.

18 NEXT the holy Doctor, with Lyranus, names the Catholic Church from the universality of places and nations, for so it had been foretold in Psalm 2: I will give thee the Gentiles for thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession, and Psalm 71: He shall rule from sea to sea. And the Lord in Luke, last chapter, says the Gospel is to be preached in the whole world, where the holy Doctor learnedly, in his commentary, adds other testimonies to confirm it. Gen. 49: He shall be the expectation of nations. Isa. 49: It is a small thing that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to convert the dregs of Israel. I have given thee to be the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayst be my salvation even to the farthest part of the earth. And Psalm 109: The Lord will send forth the sceptre of thy power out of Sion: rule thou in the midst of thy enemies. Therefore he observes that there it is said one must begin from Jerusalem, and Psalm 18: Their sound hath gone forth into all the earth: and their words unto the ends of the world.

> DEINDE Ecclesiam Catholicam ab universitate locorum, et gentium nominat S. Doctor cum Lyrin. sic enim praedictum erat Psalm. 2. Dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam, et possessionem tuam terminos terrae, et Psalm. 71. Dominabitur a mari, usque ad mare. Et Dominus Lucae ult. ait, praedicandum Evangelium in toto mundo, ubi erudite S. Doctor in commentario, apponit alia testimonia ad id confirmandam. Genes. 49. Ipse erit expectatio gentium. Isa 49. Parum est, ut sis mihi servus ad suscitandas tribus Iacob, et faeces Israel convertendas. Dedi te in lucem gentium, ut sis salus mea usque ad extremum terrae. Et Psalm. 109. Virgam virtutis tuae emittet Dominus ex Sion: dominare in medio inimicorum tuorum. Ideo observat, ibi dici incipiendum a Hierusalem, et Psalm. 18. In omnem terram exivit sonus eorum: et in fines orbis terrae verba eorum.

19 HE HIMSELF confirms this on chapter 1 of John, with that: He enlighteneth every man that cometh into this world. Of which he there discusses admirably with the Fathers.

> IDIPSUM confirmat ad cap. 1. Ioan. illo: Illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum. De quo ibi egregie cum Patribus disserit.

20 He remarks, moreover, in 4 dist. 4, part 1, dub. 2, litt., with D. Augustine, epist. 80, that for the Church to be Catholic it is not necessary that she be in all the men of the whole world, but that she become known in all Provinces. Nor is it required that this come about at once, as Driedo also remarks, book 4, chap. 2, part 2, de Ecclesiae Dogmatibus.

ADVERTIT autem in 4. dist. 4. p. 1. dub. 2. litt. cum D. Augustino epist. 80. ut sit Ecclesia Catholica, non esse necesse, ut sit in omnibus hominibus totius orbis, sed ut innotescat in omnibus Provinciis. Neque requiri, ut fiat simul, ut etiam advertit Driedo Lib. 4. cap. 2. p. 2. de Eccles. Dogmatibus.

21 NOW indeed the holy Doctor shows our Church scattered through the whole world, S. Bonaventure, serm. 16 of the Hexaëmeron; and indeed in the times of Irenaeus he himself testifies to it, book 1, chap. 3; Tertullian in his time, book contra Iudaeos, chap. 3; Cyprian, de unitate Ecclesiae; Athanasius, book de humanitate verbi; Jerome and Chrysostom, on Matt. 24; Augustine, epist. 78 and 80; Theodoret, book de legibus; Leo the Great, sermon on SS. Peter and Paul; Prosper, book de ingratis. But because down to the times of Gregory the adversaries concede this, and confess that even from the time of Leo to Gregory the Canonical Laws had been spread through the whole world, as the holy Doctor expounds — now he goes on to show it from the time of Gregory, who died in the year 604, down to Adrian, who died in the year 795, which time the holy Doctor calls the lofty Chair; and indeed from the epistles of D. Gregory to the Bishops of the East, of Africa, of Spain, of Gaul, of England, of Sicily — this is gathered from Bede, who lived about the year 662, on chap. 6 of the Canticles; from Bernard, who died about the year 1153. For he, disputing before Roger, King of Sicily, asserts this, as is had in his life, book 2, chap. 7.

IAM vero Ecclesiam nostram, toto orbe sparsam ostendit S. Bonavent. serm. 16. Hexaëmer. et quidem temporibus Irenaei testatur ipse Lib. 1. cap. 3. Tertullianus suo tempore Lib. cont. Iudaeos, cap. 3. Cyprianus de unit. Eccles. Athan. Lib. de humanitate verbi. Hieron. et Chrysost. in 24. Matth. Augustinus epist. 78. et 80. Theodotetus Lib. de legibus. Leo M. serm. de SS. Petro, et Paulo. Prosper Lib. de ingratis. Sed quia usque ad tempora Gregorii, hoc, adversarii concedunt, atque fatentur etiam a tempore Leonis usque ad Gregorium, latas fuisse Leges Canonicas toto orbi, ut edisserit S. Doctor. Iam id ostendere pergit a tempore Gregorii, qui obiit anno 604. usque ad Adrianum, qui cessit anno 795. quod tempus sublimis Cathedrae vocat S. Doctor; et quidem ex epist. D. Gregorii ad Episcopos orientis, Africae, Hispaniae, Galliae, Angliae, Siciliae, hoc colligitur ex Beda, qui vixit circa annum 662. in cap. 6. Canticorum, Bernardo, qui obiit circa annum 1153. Is enim disputans coram Rogerio Rege Siciliae, hoc asserit, ut habetur in eius vita Lib. 2. cap. 7.

22 IN OUR own times also Catholics are everywhere not only in this world, but in the new world: to the East in the Indies and China; to the West in America; to the North in Japan; to the South in Brazil, in Manicongo. But neither has the sect of the Mahometans, nor the fables of the sectaries, flown through the whole universe; indeed now they are much restricted. Let our Church live, therefore, rightly and deservedly acclaimed Catholic, on account of the perseverance of the faith in all times, on account of the union of the faithful converging into one flock in charity, and communication, and communion with all nations, as the holy Doctor wisely expounds on Psalm 114, where the Seraphic Doctor concludes one faith, just as there is one Lord, and one Baptism, as the one faith of the Church spread through the universe, according to the saying of the Apostle, Ephes. 4; and on Psalm 47: As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of our God, etc. According to thy name, O God, so also is thy praise unto the ends of the earth.

NOSTRIS etiam temporibus non modo in orbe isto sunt ubique Catholici, sed in novo orbe ad Orientem in Indiis, et Sinis; ad Occidentem in America; ad Septentrionem in Iaponia; ad Meridiem in Brasilia in manicongo. At neque Mahumetanorum secta, neque sectariorum fabulae per universum orbem evolarunt; imo vero nunc eae et multum restringuntur. Vivat igitur Ecclesia nostra iure, ac merito Catholica acclamata ob fidei perseverantiam in omnibus temporibus, ob fidelium in unum gregem convenientium unionem ad charitatem, et communicationem, atque communionem omnibus gentibus, ut sapienter edisserit S. Doctor ad Psalm. 114. ubi Unam fidem, sicuti, et unus est

Dominus; unumque Baptismum, sicuti est una Ecclesiae fides in universo dilatata, iuxta dictum Apostoli Ephes. 4. concludit Seraphicus ibi, et ad Psalm. 47. Sicut audivimus, sic vidimus in civitate Dei nostri, etc. secundum nomen tuum Deus, sic et laus tua in fines terrae.

23 Wherefore he goes on in the following Psalm 115 to show that there is one faith among us, of which Athanasius in the Symbol says: firm, persevering, faithfully whole and inviolate.

Itaque pergit Psalm. 115. sequenti, ostendere, unam esse inter nos fidem, de qua Athanas. in Symbol. firmam, perseverantem, fideliter integram, et inviolatam.

24 HENCE he draws the fourth Mark of the Church, that she be Apostolic, which he expounds at length in sermons 16 and 22 of the Hexaëmeron. With which argument the marks of the true Church have been argued by Irenaeus, book 3, chap. 3; Tertullian, book de praescriptionibus; Eusebius, in the history and Chronicle; Jerome and Prosper, who continued the Chronicle of Eusebius; Epiphanius, heresy 27, who, having enumerated the Roman Pontiffs, concludes at last: And let no one wonder that we enumerate each item so exactly. For through these things the splendour is ever shown.

HINC educit Ecclesiae quartam Notam, ut sit Apostolica, quod late edisserit serm. 16. et 22. Hexaëmer. Quo argumento verae Ecclesiae nota argumentati sunt Irenaeus Lib. 3. cap. 3. Tertullianus Lib. de praescript. Eusebius in hist. et Chron. Hieronymus, et Prosper, qui Chronicum Eusebii continuarunt. Epiph. haeresi 27. qui enumeratis Romanis Pontificibus, tandem concludit: Et ne quis miretur, quod tam exacte singula recensemus. Per haec enim semper claritas ostenditur.

25 Optatus, book II, contra Parmen., enumerates the Roman Pontiffs from Peter down to Siricius, to show that the Church is not among the Donatists, who do not enjoy such a succession. Therefore he concludes: Show the origin of your own Chair, you who wish to claim for yourselves the holy Church.

Optatus Lib. II. cont. Parmen. enumerat Romanos Pontifices a Petro usque ad Siricium, ut ostendat, non esse Ecclesiam apud Donatistas, qui tali successione non gaudent. Ideo concludit: Vos vestrae Cathedrae originem ostendite, qui vobis vultis sanctam Ecclesiam vendicare.

26 The same thing D. Augustine does in epist. 165, and in the psalm against the party of Donatus, and contra epistulam fundamenti, chap. 4, and contra epistulam Manichaei, chap. 4, testifying: There are many things that most justly keep me in the bosom of the Church. The consent of peoples and nations keeps me: the authority begun in miracles, nourished in hope, increased in charity, confirmed in antiquity keeps me. The succession of priests from the very Seat of the Apostle Peter, to whom the Lord after his Resurrection committed the feeding of his sheep, even to the present Episcopate, keeps me.

IDEM praestat D. August. epist. 165. et in psalm. cont. part. Donat. et cont. epist. fund. cap. 4. et cont. epist. Manich. cap. 4. testatur: Multa sunt, quae me in Ecclesiae gremio iustissime tenent. Tenet consensio populorum atque gentium: tenet authoritas miraculis inchoata, spe nutrita, charitate aucta, vetustate firmata. Tenet ab ipsa Sede Apostoli Petri, cui pascendas oves suas Dominus post Resurrectionem commendavit, usque ad praesentem Episcopatum Sacerdotum successio.

27 BUT to press this argument further: I observe from D. Bonaventure, in the sermons cited, that the Church can in no way stand without Pastors, as S. Cyprian teaches, epist. 9, book 4, and Jerome contra Luciferianos, as is said in Ephes. 4, Acts 20. The holy Doctor proves this on chapter 10 of John, with those words: I am the good shepherd, and I know my sheep: and other sheep I have, that are not of this fold; them also must I bring, that is, through the Apostles and other Pastors: and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, Eph. 2. He is the corner stone. Isa. 28. See the Seraphic Doctor.

> UT autem hoc argumentum urgeat; observo ex D. Bonavent. sermonibus allegatis, non posse ullo modo Ecclesiam stare sine Pastoribus, ut docet S. Cyprianus epist. 9. Lib. 4. et Hieronymus contra Luciferianos, ut dicitur: Ephes. 4. Act. 20. Id probat S. Doctor ad 10. Ioan. illis verbis: Ego sum Pastor bonus, et cognosco oves meas: et alias oves habeo, quae non sunt ex hoc ovili; et illas oportet me adducere, idest per Apostolos, et Pastores alios: et fiet unum ovile, et unus Pastor. Ipse enim est pax nostra, qui fecit utraque unum, Eph. 2. Ipse est lapis angularis. Isa 28. Vide Seraphicum.

28 Of the stable Monarchy of his religion Daniel, chap. 2, foretells: In the days of those kingdoms the God of heaven will set up a kingdom that shall never be destroyed, and his kingdom shall not be delivered up to another people: and it shall break in pieces, and shall consume all these kingdoms: and itself shall stand for ever. I ponder that the Hebrew reads thus in Pagninus: ובְיוֹמֵיהוֹן דִּי מַלְכַיָּא אִנַּן: And in the days of those kings of theirs; where note that the kingdom of the Messias was not foretold for the times of the four kingdoms already foreseen reigning at once, but of the Roman monarchies, with which, once subjected, while in the temporal Empire successors followed, parallel successors would reign conjointly in the Roman See, in the place of Christ, the Pontiff Monarchs: In the days of those kings of theirs. Now the phrase is emphatic. He adds: It shall not be destroyed, and his kingdom shall not be delivered up to another people. If these things fell to the person of Christ; who does not know that his divine sceptre is not to be transferred to others; but that it is promised that in the Church a Monarch shall succeed perpetually in the seat of Christ, not an outsider but a Catholic, the Pontiff in the Roman See. This is the genuine sense. Therefore the Fathers expound this prophecy of the Church of Christ with common applause. Origen, hom. 30 in Luc.; Jerome, on chap. 1 of Ecclesiastes, and 21 of Ezechiel, and 27 of Matthew; Augustine, tract. 51 and 117 in Ioannem, and book 83 qq.; Gregory of Nyssa, de oratione; Epiphanius, book 1, contra haereses. Fin. Adrian, chap. 10 of book 5 of the scourge of the Jews, and others among the Expositors. Accursius on Isa. 9: His empire shall be multiplied. It is one without multiplication, nor is it multiplied by multiplied seats, but the same is increased and extended. Therefore it perseveres in the succession of Monarchs in the Roman See, never interrupted, but sworn perpetual for ever, or לעולמים, for ages. So Psalm 80: I will set his throne as the days of heaven, truly, since days succeed continually until the end of the world.

> RELIGIONIS eius stabilem Monarchiam Daniel cap. 2. praenunciat: In diebus regnorum illorum, suscitabit Deus caeli regnum, quod in aeternum non dissipabitur, et regnum eius alteri populo non tradetur: comminuet autem, et consumet universa Regna haec: et ipsum stabit in aeternum. Pondero Hebraeum sic legere Pagn. ובְיוֹמֵיהוֹן דִּי מַלְכַיָּא אִנַּן : Et in diebus Eorum regum ipsorum, ubi adverte, non praedici Messiae regnum temporibus quatuor simul regnantium iam praevisorum, sed Romanorum monarchiarum, quibuscum subaectis, sed in temporali Imperio succedentibus, conregnarent paralleli successores in sede Romana, Christi loco, Monarchae Pontifices: In diebus eorum Regum ipsorum. Est autem locutio emphatica. Addit: Non dissipabitur, et alteri populo regnum eius non tradetur. Si haec in personam Christi caderent; quis ignorat sceptrum eius divinum non transferendum ad alienos; At sponder in Ecclesia perpetuo successurum in Christi sede Monarcham non exterum, sed Catholicum, in sede Romana Pontificem. Hic genuinus est sensus. Ideo de Christi Ecclesia hoc vaticinium exponunt communi plausu Patres. Origen. hom. 30. in Luc. Hieronym. in cap. 1. Eccles. et 21. Ezech. et 27. Matth. August. tract. 51. et 117. in Ioan. et lib. 83. qq. Greg. Nyss. de orat. Epiph. lib. 1. cont. haer. Fin. Adrianus cap. 10. libri 5. flagell. Iudaeorum, et alii apud Expositores. Accinit Isa 9. Multiplicabitur eius Imperium. Est sine unum, nec multiplicatur multiplicatis sedibus, sed augetur, et extenditur idem. Igitur perseverat in successione Monarcharum in sede Romana nunquam interrupta, sed iurata perpetua in aeternum seu לעולמים in saecula. Sic Psalm. 80. Ponam thronum eius sicut dies caeli*, sane dies dici succedit continue usque ad finem mundi.*

29 I ASSUME Christ's promise, Matt. 16: And I say to thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her, and soon he foretells that he must be killed and rise again the third day. The Greek has ἐγερθῆναι, to be raised up. The building is not completed in the supreme Pontificate of Peter, but he promises it, to found along this line a perpetual one, so that such a regimen, beginning in Peter, may rise up in his successors. And the Empire is raised up with Christ, Ioan. 21: Feed my sheep, as the Fathers cited note, p. p. tract. 1, disput. prima, quest. 4, especially Bernard, book 3, de consideratione, chap. 8.

ASSUMO Christi sponsionem Matth. 16. Et ego dico tibi, quia tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam, et portae inferi non praevalebunt adversus eam*, mox praenunciat oportere se occidi, et tertia die resurgere. Graecus ἐγερθῆναι excitari. AEdificium non complet in Petri Pontificatu summo, sed eum promittit, ad lineam hanc fundare perpetuum, ut tale regimen in Petro incipiens, in successoribus consurgat. Suscitatur vero Imperium cum Christo* Ioan. 21. Pasce oves meas*, ut notant Patres allati* p. p. tract. 1. disp. prima quaest. 4. praecipue Bernardus lib. 3. de consider. cap. 8.

30 THEREFORE the Church remained a virgin not for the first five hundred years only, as Calvin fancies, book 1, Inst. chap. 1, §. 13, and book 4, chap. 2, §. 3, but even to this day: Much less true is what Faius says, Ench. disp. 65, conc. 83 and seq., with Calvin, book 4, c. 2, §. 1, that she was destroyed in the first century. For I ask this Proteus what he means in turn, book 4, Inst. chap. 9, §. 8, saying: So those ancient Synods, such as the Nicene, the Constantinopolitan, the first Ephesine, the Chalcedonian, and the like, which were held for the refutation of errors, we gladly embrace, and reverence as most sacred, as far as concerns the dogmas of the faith; for they contain nothing but the pure and native interpretation of Scripture, which the holy Fathers, with spiritual prudence, adapted to breaking the enemies of religion, who had then emerged.

IGITUR non solis quingentis primis annis mansit Ecclesia virgo, ut fingit Calvin. Lib. 1. Inst. cap. 1. §. 13. et lib. 4. cap. 2. §. 3. sed hucusque: Multo minus verum, quod ait Faius Enchit. disp. 65. conc. 83. et seq. cum Calvino lib. 4. c. 2. §. 1. eam sub primo saeculo dirutam. Quaero enim ab hoc Prothaeo, quid rursum velit lib. 4. Inst. cap. 9. §. 8. dicens: Sic priscas illas Synodos, ut Nicaenam, Constantinopolitanam, Ephesinam primam, Chalcedonensem, ac similes, quae confutandis erroribus habitae sunt, libenter amplectimur, reveremurque ut Sacrosanctas, quantum attinet ad fidei dogmata; nihil enim continent, quam puram, et nativam Scripturae interpretationem, quam Sancti Patres spirituali prudentia ad frangendos Religionis hostes, qui tunc emerserant, accommodarunt.

31 BUT what Faius barks from D. Augustine, epist. 159, chap. 19, as though complaining of the ruin of the Church, are fabrications, as is plain to the reader, and as Bouerse shows, dem. 8, art. 2. Indeed the promises, Matt. 16 as cited, and the last chapter: Behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world. Luke 22: I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not. Ioan. 14: I will ask the Father, and he shall give you another Paraclete, that he may abide with you for ever, these are certain from the mouth of Christ.

QVae vero Faius latrat e D. Augustin. epist. 159. cap. 19. quasi de ruina ecclesiae conqueratur, conficta sunt, ut patet legenti, et ostendit Bouer. dem. 8. art. 2. Sane promissa Matth. 16. cit. et ult. cap. Ecce ego vobiscum sum, usque ad consummationem saeculi. Lucae 22. Rogavi pro te Petre, ut non deficiat fides tua. Ioan. 14. Rogabo Patrem, et alium Paraclitum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiscum in aeternum*, haec sunt certa ex ore Christi.*

32 The eternal stability of the Church the holy Fathers proclaim aloud, with whom Calvin himself above confesses the same. So D. Chrysostom, on chap. 2 of Isaiah; Basil, on chap. 8 of Isaiah; Gregory, book 9 in Iob, chap. 6; Ambrose, book on Solomon, chap. 4; Augustine, on Psalm 47; Leo the Great, serm. 1 on SS. Peter and Paul.

> ILLIUS aeternam stabilitatem conclamant SS. Patres, quibuscum confitetur id ipsum supra Calvinus. Sic D. Chrysost. ad cap. 2. Isa. Basil. in cap. 8. Isaiae, Gregor. lib 9. in Iob, cap. 6. Ambrosius lib. de Salom. cap. 4. August. in Psalm. 47. Leo M. serm. 1. de SS. Petro, et Paulo.

33 GREAT is the reason which the holy Doctor brings, in the Diaeta, tit. 5, chap. 3, and the Hexaëmeron. For the Church is the wife of Christ, Osee 2, Apoc. 21, Ephes. 5. And this bond is indissoluble.

> MAGNA ratio est, quam affert S. Doctor in Diaet. tit. 5. cap. 3. et Hexaëmer. Est enim Ecclesia uxor Christi. Osee 2. Apoc. 21. Ephes. 5. Est autem hoc vinculum insolubile.

34 Hence D. Cyprian, on the unity of the Church, says: The spouse of Christ cannot be adulterous; she is incorrupt and chaste; she knows one home; with chaste modesty she guards the sanctity of one bedchamber. Why then do these disfigurers, not reformers, give a bill of divorce? Surely the Catholic Church is called such on account of the perpetual constancy of the faith, on account of marital love, and the communion of the Sacraments, as the holy Doctor says, on Psalm 114.

> Hinc D. Cyprian. de unitate Ecclesiae ait: Adulterari non potest sponsa Christi, incorrupta est, et pudica, unam domum novit, unius cubiculi sanctitatem casto pudore custodit. Cur ergo hi deformatorest, non reformatores, libellum repudii dant? Sane Ecclesia Catholica, dicitur propter fidei constantiam perpetuam, propter dilectionem maritalem, et Sacramentorum communionem, ut ait S. D. ad Psalm. 114.

35 WELL does this spouse say, can. 3: I held him, and I will not let him go, as the holy Doctor says, on Psalm 118, cap. 8, vers. 7. He pursues this at length from sermon 8 of the Hexaëmeron, and on Luke 9, where he brings various reasons for the indefectibility of the Church, which for that reason he compares to the firmament; namely, because she leans on the firmness of the divine promises. So also D. Gregory, on Psalm 5 of Penance; Damascene, oration on the Transfiguration. For Christ promised, Luke 22: I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not. Nor does he speak of him as a private man, as Calvin prattles, but as a Prelate, as the holy Doctor warns, on Luke 9. Therefore he adds, that thou being converted, confirm thy brethren, as D. Augustine notes, qq. testamenti, quest. 75.

> BENE can. 3. haec sponsa dicit: Tenui eum, nec dimittam, ut ait S. Doctor ad psalm. 118. cap. 8. vers. 7. Haec late prosequitur a serm. 8. Hexaëmer. et ad 9. Lucae, ubi varias rationes indefectibilitatis Ecclesiae affert, quam ideo comparat firmamento; Quia scilicet in firmitate divinarum nititur sponsionum. Ita et D. Gregor. in psalm. 5. Poenit. Damascenus orat. de Transfigur. Promisit enim Christus, Lucae 22. Rogavi pro te Petre, ut non deficiat fides tua. Neque loquitur de eo, ut privato, sicuti nugatur Calvin. sed ut Praelato, ut monet S. Doctor ad 9. Lucae. Ideo addit, ut conversus confirmes fratres tuos, ut notat D. August. qq. testam. quaest. 75.

36 Another reason is taken from the immovable Doctrine of Christ, whose words shall not fail. On this Eusebius of Caesarea leans, book 4, demonstr. Evangelii, chap. 19: For heaven and earth shall pass away first, etc.

> Alia ratio sumitur ex immobili Christi Doctrina, cuius verba non deficient. Hac nititur Euseb. Caesar. lib. 4. demonstr. Euang. cap. 19. Prius enim caelum, et terra transibunt, etc.

37 A THIRD reason, because she is the Ark, the Column, and the firmament of Truth, for nothing is firmer, more stable, or more certain than Truth. This is the reason of D. Hilary, book 7, de Trinitate, and of Jeremiah of Constantinople, resp. 1 to Crusius. Surely it is said of Christ, Ioan. 17: thy word is truth.

> TERTIA ratio, quia Veritatis est Arca, Columna, et firmamentum, nil enim Veritate firmius, stabilius aut certius. Est ratio D. Hilarii lib. 7. de Trinit. Et Hierem. Constantinop. resp. 1. ad Crusium. Sane dicitur Christo, Ioan. 17. sermo tuus veritas est.

38 The Church is compared to the Moon, because she is ever illumined by the Sun, and when her light does not appear to us, she is illumined more highly from above, as he argues everywhere in the sermons of the Hexaëmeron, and with him Philo Carpathius, on Canticles, and Rabanus Maurus, on Ecclesiastes, book 9, chap. 7.

> Ecclesia Lunae comparatur, quia semper illuminata a Sole, et dum nobis non apparet lumen, altius illustrata est desuper, ut arguit passim in sermonibus Hexaëmer. et cum eo Philo Carpath. ad id Cant. et Raban. Maur. in Eccles. lib. 9. cap. 7.

39 Another reason is taken from D. Bonaventure in the Hexaëmeron, and from S. Leo, sermon 1 on the holy Apostles Peter and Paul. From the merits of Christ, and his death on the Cross, by which he conquered the devil.

> Alia ratio sumitur a D. Bonavent. in Hexaëmer. et S. Leone serm. 1. de SS. Apostolis Petro, et Paulo. E meritis Christi, et morte in Cruce, qua diabolum devicit.

40 Many other reasons you will see there with the holy Doctor.

> Multas alias rationes vide ibi apud S. Doctorem.

41 GREAT indeed is the argument for the true Church this perpetuity of the Pontificate and of the religion, as Tertullian discussed, de praescriptionibus, chap. 32; Optatus against the Donatists, book 2; Irenaeus, book 4.

> MAGNUM vero est argumentum verae Ecclesiae haec Pontificatus perpetuitas, et Religionis, ut disserunt Tertullian. de praescript. cap. 32. Optatus contra Donatistas lib. 2. Irenaeus lib. 4.

42 With this argument the Jews won their case at Jerusalem against the Samaritans, before Alexander the Great and the wise men; and the Samaritans were condemned, as Josephus relates, book 13, antiquities, chap. 6.

> Hoc argumento litem vicere Iudaei Hierosolymis, contra Samaritanas apud Alexandrum M. et sapientes; Et Samaritae damnati sunt, ut refert Ioseph lib. 13. antiq. cap. 6.

43 AND since we have this succession from Matt. 16, as I said, as Sergius Cyprius notes, who flourished in the year 650, epist. to Theodorus P.; Ignatius of Constantinople, epist. to Nicholas, which is had in act. 3 of the eighth Synod; Gabriel, Patriarch of Alexandria, epist. to Clement VIII, with D. Bernard, book 3, chap. 8, de consideratione; and from the things said above, and p. p. Tractate 1, in the Prooemial questions — I do not see what those Tartarean drones dare to buzz against these things.

> CUMQUE hanc successionem habeamus ex Matth. 16. ut dixi, et notant Sergius Cyprius, qui anno 650. floruit, epist. ad Theodorum P. Ignat. Constantinop. epist. ad Nicolaum, quae habetur act. 3. Synodi 8. Gabriel Patriarcha Alexandriae epist. ad Clem. VIII. cum D. Bernardo lib. 3. cap. 8. de consider. Et e supra dictis, et p. p. Tract. 1. in qq. Proaemialibus, Non video quid ad haec muffitare audeant Crabrones illi Tartarei.

44 Now, therefore, we have the order of Pontiffs from Peter even to Clement X, and the ordination of the other lesser Pastors from them consequently legitimate, as I showed, p. p. Tractate 1, disp. 2.

45 INDEED let the sectarian enemies show where their Church was before the year 1517. With which argument, with which interrogation, the heretics were hard pressed by Gregory Nazianzen, epist. 2, to Chelidonius; Jerome, to Pammachius; Tertullian, in the Praescription; Irenaeus, book 4, chap. 4 and chap. 45.

> Enim vero ostendant hostes sectarii, ubinam eorum fuerit Ecclesia ante annum 1517. Quo argumento, qua interrogatione haereticos exagitabant Gregorius Nazianzenus epist. 2. ad chelid. Hieronymus ad Pammach. Tertullianus in praescript. Irenaeus Lib. 4. cap 4. et cap. 45.

46 BUT they claim to be ordained in an extraordinary manner. Here, then, must those most wicked usurpers of an Apostolate — Luther of course, Calvin, Beza, and others worthy of an extraordinary apostolate — be accounted such? Surely since they were not sent by the true Shepherd, from elsewhere they climbed up, thieves and robbers, as Christ argues, Ioan. 10, and as S. Bonaventure expounds there of heretics, and Valencia, p. 7, §. 25. Bouterius shows them to be such in his Demonstrationes.

> AT extraordinario modo se ordinatos clamant. Hinc igitur nequissimi Apostolatus arrogatores, Lutherus nimirum, Calvinus, Beza, aliique egregio Apostolatu digni sunt? Sane cum a vero Pastore missi non sint; aliunde ascenderunt fures, et latrones, ut arguit Christus Ioan. 10. et exponit de haereticis S. Bonavent. ibi, et Valentia p. 7. §. 25. Tales eos ostendit Bouterius in suis Demonstrationibus.

47 Luther boasts in the preface of the doctrine published at Leipzig in the year 60 that Christ was first published by him, and that the articles of the faith were not known from the times of the Apostles down to his own day. O madness! Therefore there was no Church from the time of the Apostles; or if there was, surely that was fulfilled which is in Matt. 16: The gates of hell shall not prevail against her, as S. Bonaventure shows, sermon 16 of the Hexaëmeron. Or the flock of Christ, abandoned, was first devoured by wolves; but it arose from the sacrilegious prating of Luther, who, an apostate monk, espoused to himself Catherine of Bora, a nun. O sacrilegious offspring that has issued forth! But Calvin says the Church was invisible. Indeed the Church is a union of believers professing the same faith, to be governed by a visible regimen, as is had in Num. 20, Act. 10; otherwise, how could these Gypsies institute their churches?

> GLORIATUR Lutherus in praef. doctrinae, editae Lypsiae, anno 60. Christum primo ab eo vulgatum, et articulos fidei ab Apostolorum temporibus ad suam usque diem non esse cognitos. O insanum! Ergo non fuit Ecclesia a tempore Apostolorum, aut si fuit; sane fuit verificatum id Matth. 16. Portae inferi non praevalebunt adversus eam*, ut ostendit S. Bonav. serm. 16. Hexaëmer. Vel grex Christi derelictus, fuit a Lupis depastus primo tempore; surrexit vero e Lutheri semore Sacrilego, qui Monachus apostata Catharinam Bernensem, monialem, sibi desponsavit. O proles sacrilega, quae prodiit! At dicit Calvinus, invisibilem fuisse Ecclesiam. Equidem Ecclesia est adunatio fidelium, eandem fidem profitentium, regimine visibili regendam, ut habetur Num. 20. Act. 10. alioqui, quo pacto hi Cingari Ecclesias suas instituunt.*

48 The remaining things, which pertain to the authority of the Pontiff, of Councils, etc., and what the authority of the Scriptures, of Traditions, etc. is, I discussed in the preceding Tractate the first,

> Caetera, quae ad authoritatem Pontificis, Conciliorum, etc. pertinent, et quae sit authoritas Scripturarum, Traditionum, etc. disserui p. p. Tractu primo, disput. 2.

Question XIV: What must be believed by the necessity of means

1 A TWOFOLD necessity is assigned by the Theologians, after D. Bonaventure here, and in 4. dist. 12. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. and dist. 3. p. 1. articulo 1. quaest. 3.

> Quidnam sit necessario credendum, necessitate medii.
> DUPLEX necessitas assignatur a Theologis, post D. Bonavent. hic, et in 4. dist. 12. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. et dist. 3. p. 1. articulo 1. quaest. 3.

2 ONE is the necessity of means; another of precept. With the necessity of means, or of the end, that thing is necessary which, from the Law of God, by ordinary institution, is necessary for salvation, so much so that neither ignorance supplies for it, nor excuses it. That is necessary from precept which must be carried out necessarily, where the faculty and the occasion are at hand; yet not in such a way that, on account of ignorance or a lack of opportunity, the attainment of salvation is impeded. But some things are necessary in both ways, such as Penance after sin, the vow of Baptism, and faith, as the holy Doctor says at dist. 3. in the place cited.

> ALIA est necessitas medii; alia praecepti. Necessitate medii, sive finis, illud est necessarium, quod e Lege Dei, ordinaria ex institutione, est ad salutem necessarium, adeo ut neque ignorantia suppleat, aut excuset. Necessarium ex praecepto est, quod exequendum est necessario, ubi facultas suppetit, et occasio; non tamen ita, ut ob ignorantiam, vel opportunitatis defectum impediatur salutis consecutio. Aliqua vero sunt utroque modo necessaria, ut Poenitentia post peccatum, votum Baptismi, et fides, ut ait S. Doctor dist. 3. loco citato.

3 THAT faith has always been necessary for the justification of adults, and for salvation, I proved in the first part of the Summa, Tract. 5. disput. 3. quaest. 10. And it is established by that passage of Hebr. 11. Without faith it is impossible to please God. For he that cometh to God must believe, etc. And Ioan. 3. He who does not believe is already judged, as the holy Doctor discusses on cap. 3. Ioan. To this also pertains what is said in Sap. 9. Through wisdom they were healed, whosoever pleased thee, O Lord, from the beginning, as the holy Doctor indicates on that passage, for by wisdom he understands Doctrine from revelation. So also D. Ambrose on the First Epistle to Tim. 3. by Wisdom understands Faith.

> FVISSE autem semper fidem necessariam ad iustificationem in adultis, et ad salutem, probavi prima secundae, Tract. 5. disput. 3. quaest. 10. Et constat illo Hebr. 11. Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo. Credere enim oportet accedentem, etc. Et Ioan. 3. Qui non credit, iam iudicatus est*, ut disserit S. Doctor ad cap. 3. Ioan. Huc spectat etiam id, quod dicitur Sap. 9.* Per sapientiam sanati sunt, quicumque placuerunt tibi Domine a principio*, ut indicat S. Doctor ad eum locum, nam per sapientiam intelligit Doctrinam e revelatione. Sic et D. Ambrosius in Primam Tim. 3. per Sapientiam, Fidem accipit.*

4 THIS is the Catholic teaching. So D. Bonaventure in the places alleged, and in the prologue of the Breviloquium, and Lib. 2. of the Pharetra, cap. 23. where he brings forward many holy Fathers, and in the Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. and tit. 9. cap. 5. in which places he proves it from the Scriptures testifying that faith is the foundation of salvation, as Matth. 16. Upon this rock I will build my Church, namely upon Peter's confession, and upon faith founded on Christ as base. And in Hebr. 11. it is called Substance, or Foundation. And in the Hexaëmeron, serm. 8. he compares it to the Firmament. He proves it from

Rom. 10. With the heart we believe unto justice: but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Heb. 11. Faith is the substance of things to be hoped for. Act. 15. Purifying their hearts by faith. And in serm. 9. he pursues the same point, proving the firmness of faith from many headings. And in serm. 10. he compares it to heaven, which is the universal cause of living things.

> EST Catholica sententia. Ita D. Bonavent. locis allegatis, et in Breviloquii prooemio, et Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 23. ubi multos Sanctos Patres adducit, et in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. et tit. 9. cap. 5. quibus locis id probat Scripturis testantibus, fidem esse fundamentum salutis, ut Matth. 16. Super hanc Petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam*, nempe super Petri confessionem, et fidem Christo basi fundatam. Et Hebr. 11. dicitur Substantia, seu Fundamentum. Et in Hexaëmer. serm. 8. eam comparat Firmamento. Probat Rom. 10.* Corde creditur ad iustitiam: ore autem confessio fit ad salutem. Heb. 11. Fides est substantia rerum sperandarum. Act. 15. Fide purificans corda eorum. Et serm. 9. idem prosequitur, firmitatem fidei e multis capitibus probans. Et serm. 10. eam coelo comparat, quod est causa animantium universalis.

5 THERE FOLLOW D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 3. where the Thomists. The Master 3. dist. 23. where the Sententiarii. Cano relect. de Sacram. in genere, p. 2. quaest. 2. Becan. summae p. 2. cap. 12. and it is a dogma of faith. Nor had even the heretics almost ever denied it, except the Manichaeans, and the Pelagians, as Tannerus says, quaest. 7. num. 28. Scarcely one, Zuinglius, tom. 2. art. 12. says that Socrates, Aristides, Numa, Camillus, the Catos, the Scipios, Seneca, and others, were saved without faith, and Erasmus in the Tusculan Questions says the same of Cicero.

> SEQUUNTUR D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 3. ubi Thomistae. Magister 3. dist. 23. ubi Sententiarii. Cano relect. de Sacram. in genere, p. 2. quaest. 2. Peter. ad Rom. d. 17. et cap. 2. d. 8. Socratem, Aristidem, Nummam, Camillum, Catones, Scipiones, Senecam, et alios, sine fide salvos ait, et Erasmus in Tuscul. qq. Ciceronem.

6 BUT Christ cries out against this, Matth. last chapter: He who does not believe shall be condemned. And also the Council of Trent, sess. 6. cap. 7., which same thing D. Bonaventure says, 4. dist. 3. p. 1. art. 1. quaest. 3.

> AT Christus reclamat, Matth. ult. Qui non crediderit, condemnabitur. Et etiam Concil. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 7. quod idem ait D. Bonavent. 4. dist. 3. p. 1. art. 1. quaest. 3.

7 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctor in the Pharetra, from the Fathers, especially D. Augustine homil. de centum ovibus: and Lib. 5. com. Iulianum, cap. 3. de verbis Apostoli, serm. 1. serm. 18. and 38. de Tempore; de verbis Domini, serm. 61. Chrysostom homil. 62. in Ioan. Bernard epist. 77. and serm. 28. Cant. and serm. 1. Annunc. where he also assigns those things which are necessarily to be believed, saying: For it is necessary, first of all, to believe that you cannot have the remission of sins except by the indulgence of God: then, that you can have nothing at all of a good work unless he himself has given even this; finally, that you cannot merit eternal life by any works, unless it also be given gratuitously, namely, the grace by which we are enabled. See Fagundez Lib. 1. cap. 2. Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 4. Morandus quaest. 10. Tannerus quaest. 7. dub. 2. Bouer. demonst. 2. Arragon. art. 3. Cardinal Lugo disp. 12. sect. 2. who also refute Vega Lib. 6. in Trident. cap. 20. and Soto Lib. 2. de natura, et gratia, cap. 11. who say that faith regarding the supernatural object is not necessary, but only supernatural on the part of the principle: indeed Soto says, that all this is supplied by natural faith; although he retracted this in 4. dist. 1. quaest. 2. art. 3. and at the end of the question, in the recognition, frightened by D. Augustine's de natura, et gratia.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore in Pharetra, ex Patribus, praesertim praesertim D. Augustino homil. de centum ovibus: et Lib. 5. com. Iulianum, cap. 3. de verbis Apostoli, serm. 1. serm. 18. et 38. de Tempore; de verbis Domini, serm. 61. Chrysostomo homil. 62. in Ioan. Bernardo epist. 77. et serm. 28. Cant. et serm. 1. Annunc. ubi ea etiam assignat, quae sunt necessario credenda, dicens: Necesse est enim primo omnium credere, quod remissionem peccatorum habere non possis, nisi per indulgentiam Dei: deinde, quod nihil prorsus habere queas operis boni, nisi etiam hoc dederit ipse; postremo quod aeternam vitam promereri nullis potes operibus, nisi gratis detur et illa, scilicet gratia, qua promeatamur. Vide Fagundez Lib. 1. cap. 2. Caspensem disp. 3. sect. 4. Morandum quaest. 10. Tannerum quaest. 7. dub. 2. Bouer. demonst. 2. August. de natura, et gratia.

8 I ASSERT, therefore, that the acts of faith necessary for salvation are supernatural.

> ASSERO igitur, actus fidei, necessarios ad salutem, esse supernaturales.

9 ¶ IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure in the places alleged. From Hebr. 11. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and is a rewarder. It is confirmed by the Fathers alleged and by the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 6. and can. 3. It is a matter de fide.

> ¶ PROBATUR a D. Bonav. locis allegatis. Ex Hebr. 11. Accedentem ad Deum oportet credere, quia est, et quia remunerator. Confirmatur ex PP. allatis et Concilio Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. et can. 3. Quaere est de fide.

10 YOU WILL OBJECT first from Rom. 2. where it is said of the infidels: Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God.

> OBIICIES primo id Rom. 2. ubi de infidelibus dicitur: Cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt.

11 IT IS ANSWERED that only this is meant: that certain gentiles, by natural knowledge, with the added supernatural light, could have come to the knowledge of God; but that they were unwilling.

> RESPONDETUR, solum intendi, gentes aliquas potuisse cognitione naturali, addito lumine supernaturali, venire in cognitionem Dei; sed noluisse.

12 YOU WILL OBJECT secondly. If Baptism in voto suffices: Therefore also faith, in the same way.

> OBIICIES secundo. Si sufficit Baptismus in voto: Ergo et pari modo fides.

13 IT IS ANSWERED by denying the consequence; for faith is a per se disposition necessary for the natural intrinsic mutation: not so external acts, such as Baptism and confession, as Fagundez rightly observes, number 13.

> RESPONDETUR, negando consequentiam; nam fides ad naturalem intrinsecam mutationem necessaria est per se dispositio: non ita actus externi, ut Baptismus, et confessio, ut recte observat Fagundez, numero 13.

14 ¶ IT IS ASKED, first: Whether before the Incarnation implicit faith in the Trinity, and in Christ the Lord, sufficed: And, likewise, whether it sufficed after the Incarnation up to the sufficient promulgation of the Gospel. The holy Doctor treats of this, 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2.

> ¶ QUAERITUR autem primo: An ante Incarnationem suffecerit fides implicita Trinitatis, et Christi Domini: Et, num item, post Incarnationem usque ad sufficientem Evangelii promulgationem. De hoc agit S. Doctor. 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2.

15 ALL indeed agree that faith in the Incarnation, or faith regarding Christ, was implicit, from Adam up to Christ. So the Theologians commonly, 3. dist. 25. with D. Bonaventure. Albertus art. 1. Scotus quaest. 1. Gabr. quaest. 1. art. 2. Alens. 3. part. quaest. 82. memb. 3. art. 1. Richardus art. 3. Durandus quaest. 1. and others. > OMNES quidem consentiunt, fidem Incarnationis, seu fidem de Christo necessariam, fuisse implicitam, ab Adam usque ad Christum. Ita communiter Theologi 3. dist. 25. *cum D. Bonavent. 16 SOME, however, say that it was necessary explicitly, even before the promulgation of the Gospel. So Becanus, alleging D. Bonaventure and others. Others, indeed, hold that even after the promulgation of the Gospel implicit faith regarding Christ suffices: So Soto above, and in 4. dist. 5. quaest. unic. art. 2. Canus loco cit. concl. 3. Vega loco cit. and it seems D. Thom. 3. p. quaest. 69. art 4. ad 2. Richardus art. 4. quaest. 1. Medina lib. 4. de recta fide, cap. 20. Maldonat. Ioan. 5. num. 25. Arretinus 3. dist. 25. quaest. 1. art. 8. Suarez, Couninch. > ALIQUI tamen dicunt, necessariam fuisse explicitam, etiam ante Evangelii promulgationem. Ita Becanus, allegans D. Bonavent. et alios. Alii vero tenent etiam post promulgationem Evangelii sufficere implicitam fidem de Christo: Ita Sotus supra, et in 4. dist. 5. quaest. unic. art. 2. Canus loco cit. concl. 3. Vega loco cit. et videtur D. Thom. 3. p. quaest. 69. art 4. ad 2. Richardus art. 4. quaest. 1. Medina lib. 4. de recta fide, cap. 20. Maldonat. Ioan. 5. num. 25. Arretinus 3. dist. 25. quaest. 1. art. 8. Suarez, Couninch. Lugo, Arriaga, Turtianus, Poncius apud Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 16.

17 OTHERS, indeed, say such faith is necessary for beatitude, but not for justification. So Caietanus relect. de Sacram. p. 2. quaest. 2. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 8. and certain other Thomists, who are commonly rejected; for the reason is the same for both. Therefore in Act. 10. it is said: To receive the remission of sins through his name: and cap. 15. Purifying their hearts by faith, and c. 26. it is related that Paul was sent by God to preach, that they may receive the remission of sins through faith which is in Christ. But Fuliensis says that explicit faith regarding Christ is not required with the necessity of means.

> ALII vero, necessariam aiunt talem fidem ad beatitudinem, non tamen ad iustificationem. Ita Caietanus relect. de Sacram. p. 2. quaest. 2. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 8. et quidam alii Thomistae, qui communiter reiiciuntur; nam eadem est ratio de utraque. Ideo Act. 10. dicitur: Remissionem peccatorum accipere per nomen eius: et cap. 15. Fide purificans corda eorum, et c. 26. refertur, Paulum missum a Deo ad praedicandum, ut remissionem peccatorum accipiant per fidem, quae est in Christo. Fuliens. vero ait, non exigi, necessitate medii, explicitam de Christo fidem.

18 THE TRUE teaching is that after the promulgation of the Gospel explicit faith regarding Christ is necessary. So the others commonly, to whom add Toletus, Summa p. p. cap. 2. Lorin. Act. 4. Molina p. p. quaest. 9. punct 4. and others in Mastrius loco cit. Tannerus num. 46. who also brings forward D. Bonaventure 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. whom Bassaeus also alleges num. 7.

> VERA sententia est, post Evangelii promulgationem, necessariam esse fidem explicitam de Christo. Ita caeteri communiter, quibus adde Toletum, Summa p. p. cap. 2. Lorin. Act. 4. Molinam p. p. quaest. 9. punct 4. et alios apud Mastrium loco cit. Tannerum num. 46. qui adducit etiam D Bonav. 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. quem allegat etiam Bassaeus num. 7.

19 I ASSERT first, that before the Incarnation up to the promulgation of the Gospel, implicit faith regarding Christ sufficed, but explicit faith was not necessary.

20 NOTE with D. Bonaventure in the body. Those things are believed implicitly which are not believed expressly, and in particular, or perfectly in themselves; but only in something else, e.g. when someone believes what the Church believes; he believes also that Christ the Lord died, etc. So also it was believed implicitly in ancient times, if they believed that God would save the world, or redeem it from sins, in the manner in which it had already been revealed to the holy Church. Becanus above thinks this mode explicit, and therefore the Seraphic Doctor added it for the sake of his own teaching, while nevertheless saying that implicit faith sufficed. For this express faith in God the Liberator, D. Bonaventure is cited by Tannerus num 42. dist 25. quaest. 2. with D. Thom. art. 7. ad 3. and others.

> OBSERVA cum D. Bonavent. in corpore. Implicite ea credi, quae non creduntur expresse, et in particulari, siue in seipsis perfecte; sed tantum in alio, v. g. cum quis credit id, quod credit Ecclesia; credit etiam Christum Dominum mortuum, etc. Sic etiam implicite creditum fuisse antiquo tempore, si credidissent Deum saluaturum mundum, seu redempturum a peccatis eo modo, quo sanctae Ecclesiae iam reuelatum erat. Hunc modum Becanus supra putat explicitum, et ideo Seraphicum addidit pro sua sententia, cum tamen dicat, suffecisse fidem implicitam. Pro hac fide expressa Dei Liberatoris citatur a Tannero num 42. D. Bonavent. dist 25. quaest. 2. cum D. Thom. art. 7. ad 3. et alii.

21 EXPLICITLY are believed those things which are believed distinctly in themselves, as when you believe that the Messiah was the Son of God, incarnate, etc. But that which is believed explicitly must be known. Now that Christ was believed in that implicit manner before his coming, S. Bonaventure teaches and proves, Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 23. from D. Bernard epist. 77. ad Hugonem de S. Victore, where he says: Many, before the coming of the Savior, fearing and loving God the omnipotent, with him as the most gracious promiser of their salvation, hoping in him as the most certain Redeemer, were saved in this faith and expectation, although they did not know when, and how, and in what order the promised salvation would be accomplished.

> EXPLICITE creduntur, quae in se distincte creduntur, ut cum credis, Messiam fuisse filium Dei, incarnatum, etc. Debet autem id, quod explicite creditur, esse scitum. Porro illo implicito modo creditum esse Christum, ante eius aduentum, docet, et probat S. Bonavent. Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 23. ex D. Bernardo epist. 77. ad Hugonem de S. Victore, ubi ait: Multi, ante aduentum Saluatoris, Deum omnipotentem timentes, et diligentes sua salutis gratissimum promissorem, sperantes certissimum Redemptorem in hac fide, et expectatione saluati sunt, licet quando, et qualiter, et quo ordine salus repromissa fieret, ignorarent.

22 ¶ IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure, first with the Master, from 4 Act. There is no other name under heaven given to men, whereby we must be saved. Similar things are found. Rom 3. 4. and 5. Galat. 2. and 3. Prima Corinth. 3.

> ¶ PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. primo cum Magistro ex 4. Act. Nullum nomen sub caelo datum aliud est hominibus, in quo oporteat nos saluos fieri. Similia habentur. Rom 3. 4. et 5. Galat. 2. et 3. Prima Corinth. 3.

23 THEN, because Christ is the Head of the whole Church, as is had in Ephes. first, and the following. Prima Corinth. 3. Coloss. 1. Therefore he flowed into the motion and vital sense of all; But he cannot infuse unless they are united to him in faith, as the Apostle discusses there: Therefore.

> DEINDE, quia Christus est Caput totius Ecclesiae, ut habetur Ephes. primo, et sequenti. Prima Corinth. 3. Coloss. 1. Ergo iufluit motum, et sensum vitalem omnibus; At non potest influere, nisi unitis sibi in fide, ut ibi disserit Apostolus: Ergo.

24 THIRD, No one could be saved unless he were justified, nor justified except through grace: but this was not given except through the merits of the Redeemer, who therefore is called: The Lamb slain from the beginning of the world. Apoc. 13. and who opened the closed Book, cap. 5. And Ioan. first, Grace and truth were made through Jesus Christ. Therefore Galat. 3. The Scripture concluded all under sin, that the promise might be given by the faith of Jesus Christ to those who believe, namely, grace and the other gifts were given in that faith. Next it is shown that implicit faith regarding Christ sufficed.

> TERTIO, Nullus potuit saluari, nisi iustificaretur, nec iustificari, nisi per gratiam: haec autem non dabatur, nisi in meritis Redemptoris, qui ideo dicitur: Agnus occisus ab origine mundi. Apoc. 13. et aperuisse Librum clausum, cap. 5. Et Ioan. primo, Gratia et veritas per Iesum Christum facta est. Ideo Galat. 3. Scriptura conclusit omnia sub peccato, ut promissio ex fide Iesu Christi daretur credentibus, nempe, gratia, et alia dona in fide ista dabantur. Deinde ostenditur, sufficientem fuisse fidem implicitam de Christo.

25 IT IS PROVED first, by the example of Cornelius, Act. 10. who is called just before he learned faith in Christ, as the holy Doctor intimated in the text.

> PROBATUR primo, exemplo Cornelii Act. 10. qui dicitur iustus, antequam fidem Christi edisceret, ut innuit S. Doctor in littera.

26 IT IS PROVED secondly by the holy Doctor in the body, and on the arguments, with the reasoning that Fagundez uses. No divine thing obliges one to believe unless it be revealed; but before the preaching of the Gospel, that Law, and its articles, were not manifest to the gentiles; indeed not revealed except to very few: Therefore.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. in corpore, et ad argumenta, ratione, qua utitur Fagundez. Nulla res divina obligat ad credendum; nisi reveletur; sed ante Evangelii praedicationem, Lex ista, eiusque articuli non erant manifestati gentibus; imo neque revelati, nisi perpaucis: Ergo.

27 NOTE, however, with D. Bonaventure here on 5. that before the sufficient publication of the Gospel, some renowned worshippers of God knew the Mysteries of Redemption, as Iob 19. testifies, and the Sibyls in the law of Nature; and in the written law Moses, David, and others, as the holy Doctor observes on those words of Lucae 24. All things must needs be fulfilled, which are written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me. And on Ioan. 5. on those words: For if you did believe Moses, you would perhaps believe me also: for he wrote of me. And so those knew and believed Christ expressly. The Master seems to indicate the same regarding Cornelius, whom the holy Doctor points out, dist. 25. in littera. But in the question he maintains that all of them had only implicit faith until Christ was revealed, excepting the distinguished ones, among whom Cornelius is not counted, who certainly had that faith only implicitly, as S. Augustine indicates, quaest. 84. in Levit. and lib. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 7. Therefore the holy Doctor, dub. 4. in fine says that the things said about the faith of Cornelius are plain.

ADVERTE autem cum D. Bonav. hic ad 5. ante sufficientem Evangelii propalationem, aliquos famosos Dei cultores novisse Mysteria Redemptionis, ut testatur Iob 19. et Sybillae in lege Naturae; et in lege Scripta Moyses, David, et alii, ut observat S. Doct. ad ea verba Lucae 24. Necesse est impleri omnia, quae scripta sunt in lege Moysis, Prophetis, et Psalmis de me. Et ad Ioan. 5. ad ea verba: Si enim crederetis Moysi, crederetis forsitan et mihi: de me enim ille scripsit. Itaque illi expresse sciebant, et credebant Christum. Videtur Magister idem indicare de Cornelio, quem indicat S. Doct. dist. 25. in littera. Sed in quaestione persistit, habuisse tantum fidem implicitam eos omnes, usque dum revelatus est Christus, exceptis insignibus, inter quos non numeratur Cornelius, qui implicite profecto solum habuit eam fidem, ut indicat S. August. quaest. 84. in Levit. et lib. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 7. Ideo S. Doct. dub. 4. in fine ait, ea, quae de fide Cornelii dicuntur, esse plana.

28 I ASSERT secondly, that after the Gospel was promulgated, explicit faith regarding Christ is necessary.

ASSERO secundo, post Evangelium promulgatum, necessariam esse fidem explicitam de Christo.

29 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctor on 3. Ioan. with those words: But he who does not believe is already judged: because he has not believed in the name of the only-begotten Son of God. Actorum 4. For in this alone is salvation, and there is no other name under heaven given, whereby we must be saved.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. ad 3. Ioan. illis verbis: Qui autem non credit, iam iudicatus est: quia non credidit in nomine unigeniti filii Dei. Actorum 4. In hoc enim solo est salus, et non est aliud nomen sub caelo datum, in quo oporteat, nos salvos fieri.

30 IT IS PROVED secondly by the holy Doctor on that passage Ioan. 17. Now this is eternal life, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent, where the Seraphic Doctor also notes that explicit knowledge of the Holy Trinity is already necessary; hence Rom. 3. The justice of God through the faith of Jesus Christ in all, and upon all, who believe in him. Galat. 2. Man is not justified except through the faith of Jesus Christ.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. ad illud Ioan. 17. Haec est autem vita aeterna, ut cognoscant te solum Deum, et quem misisti Iesum Christum, ubi etiam cognitionem SS. Trinitatis explicitam necessariam iam esse, advertit inde Seraphicus Rom. 3. Iustitia Dei per fidem Iesu Christi in omnes, et super omnes, qui credunt in eum. Galat. 2. Non iustificatur homo, nisi per fidem Iesu Christi.

31 IT IS PROVED thirdly by the holy Doctor with the reasoning that he uses, and Fagundez before num. 21; this reasoning is had in dub. 2. litt. and here is its first foundation: since Christ has now been made known to be the Head of the Church, and to have redeemed us by his merits, and founded our Church, we rightly owe him confession, and consequently to believe explicitly. Therefore in Matth. last chapter it is said: Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. ratione, qua utitur, Fagundez ante num. 21. habetur autem haec ratio dub. 2. litt. et hic fundamento primo, quia cum Christus sit iam notificatus, esse Caput Ecclesiae, et nos suis meritis redemisse, et nostram fundasse Ecclesiam, merito debemus eum confiteri, et consequenter credere explicite. Ideo Matth. ultimo dicitur: Docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti.

32 THE holy Doctor CONFIRMS this whole matter from other Scriptures. And first on cap. 6. Ioan. from that passage: He who believes in me has eternal life, Ioan. 14. You believe in God, believe also in me. The holy Doctor strengthens these passages with other testimonies of Scripture and of the Fathers. Now there is an outstanding discourse of Christ, Ioan. 3. which the holy Doctor solemnly runs through for the matter: And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the desert: so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believes in him may not perish, but may have life everlasting. He infers that all who believe in his Divine Person incarnate and lifted up on the cross are saved from death, just as those were saved who, seeing the brazen Serpent distinctly, believed and hoped for salvation from the Lord. For the holy Doctor observes the parallels and notes that the humanity is signified when it is said: Son of man; death on the cross, when it is said; So must the Son of man be lifted up: the efficacy: that whosoever believes in him may not perish, etc.

CONFIRMATUR a S. Doct. hoc totum ex aliis Scripturis. Et primo ad cap. 6. Ioan. ex illo: Qui credit in me, habet vitam aeternam, Ioan. 14. Creditis in Deum, et in me credite. Quae loca aliis testimoniis Scripturae, et Patrum roborat S. Doct. Est autem eximius discursus Christi, Ioan. 3. quem graviter S. Doct. percurrit ad rem: Sicut Moyses exaltavit serpentem in deserto: ita exaltari oportet filium hominis: ut omnis, qui credit in illum, non pereat, sed habeat vitam aeternam. Infert, omnes credentes in suam Divinam personam incarnatam, exaltatam in cruce, salvari a morte, sicuti salvabantur, qui distinctim videntes Serpentem aeneum, credebant, et sperabant a Domino salutem. Observat enim S. Doct. parallelos, et advertit, notari humanitatem, dum dicitur: Filius hominis: mortem in cruce, dum dicitur; Ita exaltari oportet filium hominis: efficaciam: ut omnis, qui credit in ipsum, non pereat, etc.

33 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctor also from other Scriptures. First from that passage of Lucae last chapter: Then he opened their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said to them, that thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead the third day, and that penance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. Then the holy Doctor argues thus in his commentary: Christ was given, that he might open the way to heaven. Therefore it is said Isaïae 12. I will give the key of David upon his shoulder, and he shall open. Therefore it is said Dan. 2. He reveals deep things. But to this end he reveals, that he, being known, may be adored. Wherefore in Apoc. 5. he is introduced as the Lamb to open the sealed Book, from which the Elders, and the Animals, and the Nations confessed him expressly: The Lamb that was slain is worthy to receive Divinity, because, namely, he opened the Mysteries that are referred to him, as to the Head; and to the body of the Church, compared to him from the fact that it ought to acknowledge him as the principle of its salvation, which he distributed only to those willing, through penance and Baptism, that is, in a manner fitting to a free nature; But they could not consent to these things unless they acknowledged him as the principle; which Valentia also notes. And he strengthens this with accumulated testimonies of the Scriptures.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore, etiam ex aliis Scripturis, Primo ex illo Lucae ultimo: Tunc aperuit illis sensum, ut intelligerent Scripturas, et dixit eis, quoniam sic scriptum est, et sic oportebat Christum pati, et resurgere a mortuis tertia die, et praedicari in nomine eius poenitentiam, et remissionem peccatorum in omnes gentes, incipientibus ab Hierosolyma. Tunc sic arguit S. Doct. in commentario: Christus datus est, ut viam ad caelum aperiat. Ideo dicitur Isaïae 12. Dabo clavem David super humerum eius, et aperiet. Ideo dicitur Dan. 2. Ipse revelat profunda. Ad hunc autem finem revelat, ut ipse cognitus, adoretur. Quare Apoc. 5. introducitur, ut Agnus, aperire Librum sigillatum, ex quo Seniores, et Animalia, et Gentes eum expresse confessi sunt: Dignus est Agnus, qui occisus est, accipere Divinitatem, quia scilicet aperuit Mysteria, quae ad eum referuntur, tanquam ad Caput; et ad corpus Ecclesiae, ex eo comparatum, quod debuit eum agnoscere, ut principium suae salutis, quam, non nisi volentibus, per poenitentiam, et Baptismum distribuit, modo scilicet convenienti naturae liberae; Non poterant autem in haec consentire, nisi agnoscerent eum, ut principium; quod notat etiam Valentia. Haec autem constipatis Scripturarum testimoniis robotat.

34 For in him all nations were to be blessed. Genes. 22. Therefore the nations ought to acknowledge the Fountain of their blessings. So in Genes. 49. he is called: He shall be the expectation of the nations; But only a good, well known, is awaited. In Psal. 2. it is said: Ask of me, and I will give thee the gentiles for thy inheritance. Therefore the nations, from whom he was to be named, ought to acknowledge their Christ the Lord distinctly. And in Psal. 116. it is said: Praise him, all ye nations. Certainly they ought to acknowledge him, that they might praise him; for in Isa. 49. it is said: I have given thee to be the light of the gentiles. And Isa. 2. Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall come forth from Sion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge the gentiles, etc. And cap. 61. For Sion's sake I will not hold my peace, until her just one go forth as brightness, and her Savior be lighted as a lamp. And the gentiles shall see thy Just One. Thou shalt no more be called Forsaken, etc. Behold the Lord hath made it to be heard in the ends of the earth, say to the daughter of Sion: Behold thy Savior cometh: Behold his reward is with him, and his work before him. And they shall call him, A holy people, redeemed by the Lord. But thou shalt be called: A sought-out city, and not Forsaken.

> In ipso enim benedicendae erant omnes gentes. Genes. 22. Ergo debebant gentes agnoscere Fontem suarum benedictionum. Sic Genes. 49. dictus est: Ipse erit expectatio gentium; At non expectatur, nisi bonum, bene cognitum, Psal. 2. dicitur: Postula a me, et dabo tibi gentes haereditatem tuam. Igitur debebant gentes, ab eo denominandae, agnoscere suum Christum Dominum distincte. Et Psal. 116. dicitur: Laudate eum omnes gentes. Profecto debebant eum agnoscere, ut laudarent; nam et Isa. 49. dicitur: Dedi te in lucem gentium. Et Isa. 2. Venite, ascendamus ad montem Domini, et ad domum Dei Iacob, et docebit nos vias suas, et ambulabimus in semitis eius: quia de Sion exibit Lex, et Verbum Domini de Hierusalem. Et iudicabit gentes etc. Et cap. 61. Propter Sion non tacebo, donec egrediatur ut splendor iustus eius, et Salvator eius ut lampas accendatur. Et videbunt gentes Iustum tuum. Non vocaberis ultra derelicta, etc. Ecce Dominus auditum fecit in extremis terrae, dicite filiae Sion: Ecce Salvator tuus venit: Ecce merces eius cum eo, et opus eius coram illo. Et vocabunt eum, Populus sanctus, redempti a Domino. Tu autem vocaberis: Quaesita civitas, et non Derelicta.

35 Christ PROCEEDS: But you are witnesses of all these things. Therefore Act. 1. You shall be witnesses to me in Judea, and Samaria, and even to the ends of the earth, and therefore Peter says, Act. 10. We are witnesses of all things which he did, etc. whom they slew, hanging him on a tree. Him God raised up the third day, and gave him to be made manifest to witnesses preordained, etc. And he commanded us to preach to the people, and to testify that he is the one appointed by God to be judge of the living and of the dead. Therefore our faith stands especially in the distinct acknowledgment of Christ the Lord.

> PERGIT Christus: Vos autem testes estis omnium. Ideo Act. 1. Eritis mihi testes in Iudaea, et Samaria, et usque ad ultimum terrae, et ideo ait Petrus, Act. 10. Nos testes sumus omnium, quae fecit, etc. quem occiderunt suspendentes in ligno. Hunc Deus suscitavit tertia die, et dedit eum manifestum fieri testibus praeordinatis, etc. Et praecepit nobis praedicare populo, et testificari, quia ipse est, qui constitutus est a Deo Iudex vivorum, et mortuorum. Igitur fides nostra specialiter stat in agnitione distincta Christi Domini.

36 The holy Doctor confirms this further on cap. 3. of John with those words: The Father loves the Son, and has given all things into his hand, as is said in Matth. 11. All things are delivered to me by my Father. Therefore he adds: He who believes in the Son has life everlasting, because, as is said Ioan. 17. Now this is eternal life, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. They have (I say) life everlasting in pledge, and in root, as is said 2. Corinth. 5. There Ioan. continues: But he who does not believe the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides on him, etc. But the holy Doctor observes that John threatens more vehemently, and more intensely, than Christ did before, those who do not believe in the Son of God; for Christ only said: He who does not believe is already judged: because he does not believe in the name of the only-begotten Son of God. But he spoke more gently, lest he might seem to speak out of love for himself. Then the holy Doctor observes that the Wrath of God remains; First sin, second punishments, third dereliction; fourth the sentence of damnation, so as to infer that he is excluded from grace and glory who does not believe in the Son of God.

> Hoc amplius confirmat S. Doct. ad cap. 3. Ioannis illis verbis: Pater diligit Filium, et omnia dedit ei, ut dicitur Matth. 11. Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre meo. Ideo subdit: Qui credit in Filium, habet vitam aeternam, quia, ut dicitur Ioan. 17. Haec est vita aeterna, ut cognoscant te solum Deum, et quem misisti Iesum Christum. Habent (inquam) vitam aeternam in pignore, et radice, ut dicitur 2. Corinth. 5. Pergit ibi Ioan. Qui autem est incredulus Filio, non videbit vitam, sed ira Dei manet, etc. Observat autem S. Doct. vehementius hementius minari Ioannem, quam antea Christum, eos, qui non credunt in filium Dei; nam Christus solum dixit: Qui non credit, iam iudicatus est: quia non credit in nomine unigeniti filii Dei. Mitius autem locutus est, ne videretur amore sui loqui. Deinde observat S. Doct. manere Iram Dei; Primo peccatum, secundo poenas, tertio derelictionem; quarto sententiam damnationis, ut inferat, eum excludi a gratia, et gloria, qui non credit in filium Dei.

37 S. Bonaventure PROVES it further, serm. 8. Hexaemer. from that passage of 1. Ioan. 5. There are three who give testimony in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three who give testimony on earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood: and these three are one; namely, in the Spirit the Divinity; in the Water the Humanity; in the blood the Life, poured out in redemption. These things, therefore, must be believed absolutely; for he had already said: Every one who believes that Jesus is the Christ is born of God. And afterwards he adds: He who believes in the Son of God has the testimony of God in himself. He who does not believe the Son makes him a liar. He notes the same thing, that the Trinity and the Incarnation are set down distinctly in the Symbol.

> PROBAT adhuc S. Bonav. serm. 8. Hexaemer. ex illo 1. Ioan. 5. Tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in caelo: Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus sanctus: et hi tres unum sunt. Et tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in terra:

spiritus, aqua, et sanguis: et hi tres unum sunt; nempe in Spiritu Divinitas; in Aqua Humanitas; in sanguine Vita, profusa in redemptionem. Haec igitur debent omnino credi; iam enim dixerat: Omnis qui credit, quoniam Iesus est Christus, ex Deo natus est. Et postea subdit: Qui credit in filium Dei, habet testimonium Dei in se. Qui non credit filio, mendacem facit eum. Idem advertit, poni in Symbolo distincte Trinitatem, et Incarnationem.

38 The holy Doctor also uses a lofty argument, serm. 9. Hexaemer. which the holy Fathers used: Ambrose lib. 1. offic. cap. 29. Hieron. in cap. 1. ad Ephes. Gregory lib. 7. epist. 47. taken from the first Corinth. 3. where Christ is called the Foundation of the Church. And Isaia 28. where he is called (as also in Ephes. 1. 2. Petri 2.) the foundational, angular stone; And on Ephes. 1. and 3. where he is called the Origin of our salvation. Now S. Bonaventure thus discourses: The Testimony of Faith is to be taken from the Father, and the Word, and the Holy Ghost, as is said in the first epistle of Ioan. 5. For by the word of the Lord the heavens were made firm. Psal. 32. namely, the heaven of the Church. For the whole new testament consists in declaring Christ. Therefore the Father also bears testimony from heaven, Matth. 3. But of this faith Christ is the Foundation, as is said in the first epistle to Corinth. 3. Another foundation no one can lay, besides that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus. He is the angular stone Isa. 28. the first epistle of Petri 2. Ephes. 2. Upon this stone the whole Church leans. Therefore it was necessary that this be believed most distinctly. Therefore the Apostle in Hebr. 1. says: God, who at sundry times spoke in times past to the fathers in the prophets; last of all has spoken in his Son. And he adds: Who, being the brightness of his glory (namely, according to the deity,) making purgation of sins, through his humanity: For the faith and confession of Christ the Martyrs were slain, the Apostles toiled, etc. Who, therefore, will deny that express faith in Christ is necessary? It is confirmed from the practice of the Church, which questions those to be baptized regarding explicit faith in Christ.

Alto etiam argumento utitur S. Doct. serm. 9. Hexaemer. quo usi sunt SS. PP. Ambrosius lib. 1. offic. cap. 29. Hieron. in cap. 1. ad Ephes. Gregorius lib. 7. epist. 47. sumpto ex prima Corinth. 3. ubi Christus dicitur Fundamentum Ecclesiae. Et Isaia 28. ubi dicitur (sicuti et Ephes. 1. 2. Petri 2.) Fundamentalis petra angularis; Et ad Ephes. 1. et 3. ubi dicitur Origo nostrae salutis. Sic autem discurrit S. Bonaventura: Testimonium Fidei sumendum est a Patre, et Verbo, et Spiritu Sancto, ut dicitur prima Ioan. 5. Sane verbo Domini caeli firmati sunt. Psal. 32. nempe caelum Ecclesiae. Nam totum testamentum novum est in declarando Christo. Ideo et Pater de caelo testimonium perhibet, Matth. 3. Huius autem fidei Christus est Fundamentum, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 3. Fundamentum aliud nemo potest ponere, praeter id, quod positum est, quod est Christus Iesus. Is est lapis angularis Isa. 28. prima Petri 2. Ephes. 2. Huic lapidi tota nititur Ecclesia. Igitur oportuit, hunc esse maxime distincte creditum. Ideo Apostolus Hebr. 1. ait: Multifarie Deus olim loquens Patribus in prophetis; novissime locutus est in filio. Et subdit: Qui cum sit splendor gloriae (secundum scilicet deitatem,) Purgationem peccatorum faciens, per humanitatem: Propter fidem, et confessionem Christi occisi sunt Martyres, insudarunt Apostoli, etc. Ecquis igitur negabit, necessariam esse expressam fidem Christi? Confirmatur e praxi Ecclesiae, quae baptizandos interrogat de explicita fide in Christum.

39 YOU WILL OBJECT first against the first assertion, from Hebr. 11. it is said: He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and is a rewarder: Therefore faith in the Redeemer was not necessary.

40 Valentia ANSWERS from Marsilius 3. quaest. 14. art. 3. It would have been better to have said, from D. Bonaventure on the first, that the Apostle does not enumerate all things necessary for salvation, but only asserts that it is necessary to believe those two things: That God is, and that he is a Rewarder. But he enumerates these, because they were necessary to be believed even in the state of integral nature. But I do not know why Valentia col. 317. Assertion one says that in the state of integral nature they ought to have believed more concerning the Incarnation of Christ, and by what means he was going to redeem mankind through death; Certainly in the state of integral nature the Redeemer was not revealed; nor was he necessary, nor would the Son of God have come into the world, as he himself maintains.

> Respondet Valentia ex Marsilio 3. quaest. 14. art. 3. Satius dixisset ex D. Bonav. ad primum, Apostolum non recensere omnia necessaria ad salutem, sed solum asserere necessarium esse, duo illa credere: Quod Deus sit, et quod Remunerator. Haec autem recenset, quia etiam in statu naturae integrae erant creditu necessaria. Nescio autem, cur Valentia col. 317. Assertione prima dicat, In statu naturae integrae maiores debuisse credere Incarnationem Christi, et qua ratione per mortem erat redempturus genus humanum; Sane in statu naturae integrae non est revelatus Redemptor; nec erat necessarius, nec venisset filius Dei in mundum, ut ipse tuetur.

41 YOU WILL OBJECT secondly. That faith suffices which sufficiently directs one to Hope, and Charity. Such is faith in God the Rewarder: Therefore.

> Obiicies secundo. Fides illa sufficit, quae satis dirigit ad Spem, et Charitatem. Talis est fides in Deum Remuneratorem: Ergo.

42 The holy Doctor ANSWERS by denying the minor; because we ought to hope for salvation through the merits of Christ, and to love God, not only as Creator; but also as Savior.

> Respondet S Doct. negando minorem; quia debemus sperare per merita Christi salutem, Deumque amare, non modo ut Creatorem; sed etiam ut Salvatorem.

43 YOU WILL OBJECT thirdly. Many were saved who did not know that Christ was to come to death for our salvation.

> Obiicies tertio. Multi salvati sunt, qui non cognoverunt venturum Christum ad mortem pro nostra salute.

44 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that all believed implicitly in the Redeemer, whom the wiser expressed in their sacrifices; but the rest awaited implicitly some one to come by whom they would be saved, even if they were ignorant: Whether he was the Son of God: Whether he was to die, etc. And in this act there was implicit faith regarding Christ. So AEgidius; whom Gaspar disp. 3. sect. 5. praises as the author of this view, although it is also the Seraphic Doctor's in the body.

> Respondet S. Doct. omnes implicite credidisse Redemptorem, quem in suis sacrificiis exprimebant sapientiores; reliqui vero expectabant implicite aliquem venturum per quem salvaremtur, esto ignorarent: An filius Dei: An moriturus, etc. Et in hoc actu erat implicita fides de Christo. Ita AEgidius; quem Gaspar disp. 3. sect. 5. laudat, ut authorem huius modi, cum tamen sit Seraphici etiam in corpore.

45 But it was certainly a supernatural FAITH, which is wholly necessary for a supernatural end, and so the Councils speak against Ripalda primo de Ente supernaturali, disp. 29. and 63. who devised, I know not what broad faith from natural human knowledge. For against him is the sense of the Councils, especially the Tridentine sessione 6. See Lugum disp. 11. sect. 1.

> Fuit autem profecto Fides supernaturalis, quae ad finem supernaturalem est omnino necessaria, et ita loquuntur Concilia contra Ripaldam primo de Ente supernaturali, disp. 29. et 63. qui nescio, quam fidem latam excogitavit ex humana notitia naturali. Contra est enim sensus CC. praesertim Tridentini sessione 6. Vide Lugum disp. 11. sect. 1.

46 YOU WILL OBJECT fourthly. No man is bound to know what the Angels are ignorant of; but before the Incarnation, the Angels were ignorant of this Mystery: Therefore. The major is certain. The minor is proved by that passage Isa. 63. Who is this that cometh from Edom? For it is the exclamation of the Angels, as the Gloss says: And Ephes. 3. That it may be made known to the Principalities and Powers, as Chrysostom expounds, and the Gloss on that passage Ephes. 3. What is the dispensation of the Mystery hidden from eternity in God.

> Obiicies quarto. Nullus homo tenetur nosse, quod ignorant Angeli; sed ante Incarnationem, Angeli hoc Mysterium ignorabant: Ergo. Maior est certa. Minor probatur illo Isa. 63. Quis est iste, qui venit de Edom? Est enim exclamatio Angelorum, ut ait Glossa: Et Ephes. 3. Ut innotescat Principatibus, et Potestatibus*, ut exponit Chrysost. et Glossa ad id* Ephes. 3. Quae sit dispensatio Mysterii absconditi a saeculis in Deo.

47 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that the Angels all knew that a Savior was to come: for they announced the Mysteries to the prophets, especially Isaiah. But they admired and learned each thing with singular wonder. Nor is there invincible ignorance of these things, according to D. Bonaventure and others.

48 YOU WILL OBJECT fifthly. He who fulfilled the law according to the dictate of nature arrived at salvation, as the Apostle intimated, Rom. 2. The gentiles, who have not the law, do naturally those things that are of the law. And: The doers of the law shall be justified: But in the law of nature, or the written law, there is no necessity of believing in the Mediator: Therefore.

> Obiicies quinto. Qui adimplebat legem iuxta dictamen naturae, perveniebat ad salutem, ut innuit Apostolus, Rom. 2. Gentes, quae legem non habent, naturaliter ea, quae legis sunt, faciunt. Et: Factores legis iustificabuntur: Sed in lege naturae, vel scripta, non est necessitas credendi Mediatorem: Ergo.

49 D. Bonaventure ANSWERS that the law of nature sufficed, aided by the gift of grace and of faith, which dictated the Mediator implicitly. So also Vasquez disp. 190. cap. 15. Fagundez lib. 1. Decal. cap. 2. num. 10. from D. Augustine lib. de spiritu et litt. cap. 27. where he expounds the word naturally thus: without the written law, but with natural aid from grace, they do the things that are of the law.

> Respondet D. Bonav. legem naturae sufficere, adiutam dono gratiae, et fidei, quae dictabat implicite Mediatorem. Ita etiam Vasquez disp. 190. cap. 15. Fagundez lib. 1. Decal. cap. 2. num. 10. ex D. August. lib. de spiritu et litt. cap. 27. ubi id, naturaliter*, sic exponit, sine lege scripta, sed cum naturali, adiuta a gratia, quae legis sunt, faciunt.*

50 YOU WILL OBJECT sixthly. No one is bound to believe what he cannot learn; but in the law of nature no one could learn of the Incarnation, nor was there anyone teaching it: Therefore.

> Obiicies sexto. Nullus tenetur credere, quod non potest discere; sed in lege naturae non poterat aliquis ediscere Incarnationem, nec erat ullus docens: Ergo.

51 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that some were taught even then in this mystery, as Iob testifies cap. 19. Now he was before the written law, as Lyra notes, and Henoch also, as is said by D. Jude, vers. 14. Now Henoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying: Behold the Lord cometh with his holy thousands to execute judgment against all, etc. Where he calls Christ the Judge, and therefore supposes him incarnate.

Respondet S. Doct. fuisse aliquos etiam tunc edoctos in hoc mysterio, ut Iob testatur cap. 19. Fuit autem hic ante legem scriptam, ut notat Lyra, et etiam Henoch, ut dicitur a D. Iuda, vers. 14. Prophetavit autem de his septimus ab Adam Henoch, dicens: Ecce venit Dominus in Sanctis millibus suis facere iudicium contra omnes, etc. Ubi Christum Iudicem ait, proptereaque Incarnatum supponit.

52 I ASSERT thirdly, for the same reason, that before the coming of Christ explicit faith in the Most Holy Trinity was not necessary.

ASSERO tertio, eadem ratione, ante Christi adventum, non fuisse necessariam fidem explicitam Sanctissimae Trinitatis.

53 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure, because before the Incarnation of Christ, as I showed above, the Son of God was unknown: Therefore also the Father; for he who knows the Son knows also the Father, as Christ says. Ioan. 15. Yet the holy Doctor adds, quaest. 2. that some had even then this explicit knowledge, which is asserted of the Sibyls, Henoch, Iob, Adam, and others.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. quia ante Christi Incarnationem, ut supra ostendi, erat ignotus Filius Dei: Ergo et Pater; nam, qui novit Filium, novit et Patrem, ut ait Christus. Ioan. 15. Addit tamen S. Doct. quaest. 2. aliquos habuisse etiam tunc hanc notitiam explicitam, quod asserunt de Sybillis, Henoch, Iob, Adamo, et aliis.

54 I ASSERT fourthly; that now, with the necessity of means, explicit knowledge of the Most Holy Trinity is necessary. So D. Bonaventure quaest. 5. D. Thom. art. 8. q. 2. Valentia quaest. 2. p. 5. assert. 2. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 24. Becanus quaest. 2. and quaest. 8. dub. primo, Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 5. num. 3. Maestr. disp. 19. sect. 2. and others, whom Morand. quaest. 10. follows, against some who say it is not necessary with the necessity of means, but only of precept, even after the promulgated Gospel. See Palaum tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. p. 9. citing many. With these is also Ful. lib. 3. cap. 5.

ASSERO quarto; nunc, necessitate medii, necessariam esse cognitionem explicitam Sanctissimae Trinitatis. Ita D. Bonav. quaest. 5. D. Thom. art. 8. q. 2. Valentia quaest. 2. p. 5. assert. 2. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 24. Becanus quaest. 2. et quaest. 8. dub. primo, Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 5. num. 3. Maestr. disp. 19. sect. 2. et alii, quos sequitur Morand. quaest. 10. contra aliquos dicentes, non esse necessarium necessitate medii, sed tantum praecepti, etiam post promulgatum Evangelium. Vide Palaum tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. p. 9. multos referentem Cum his est et Ful. lib. 3. cap. 5.

55 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 3. p. 1. quaest. 2. The same faith is intrinsically necessary which is intimated to each one externally, that he may profess it expressly: For with the heart we believe unto justice; but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation; but faith expressly in the Most Holy Trinity is intimated to all to be professed expressly in baptism, through the form drawn from Matth. last chapter, where Christ commands: Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. But to infants it is intimated through the Sponsor, that he may profess it in his name, and afterwards teach it: Therefore.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 3. p. 1. quaest. 2. Eadem fides est necessaria intrinsece, quae extrinsece cuique intimatur, ut eam expresse profiteatur: Corde enim creditur ad iustitiam; ore autem confessio fit ad salutem; sed fides expressa Sanctissimae Trinitatis intimatur omnibus expresse profitenda in baptismo, per formam erutam e Matth. ult. ubi Christus praecipit: Docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos in nomine Patris, et filii, et Spiritus Sancti. Infantibus vero intimatur in Patrino, ut nomine eius profiteatur, et postea ipsam doceat: Ergo.

56 I ASSERT fifthly, that all are held, with the necessity of means, to believe all the articles of FAITH implicitly, in such a way that each one be ready to believe them, if he is taught. See Becanum quaest.

4. Valentiam quaest. 2 p. 6. Indeed Valentia loc. cit. Aragon. art. 5. Tannerus n. 51. say one is held explicitly. Especially Baptism, Penance, and the Eucharist.

> ASSERO quinto, tenere omnes necessitate medii credere omnes articulos Fidei implicite, ita ut quisque sit paratus, eos credere, si doceatur. Vide Becanum quaest. 4. Valentiam quaest. 2 p. 6. Imo teneri explicite aiunt Valentia loc. cit. Aragon. art. 5. Tannerus n. 51. Praecipue Baptismum, Poenitentiam, et Eucharistiam.

Question XV: What things are to be believed by the necessity of precept

1 I PREMISE first, with Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 3., Valencia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 3. in calce, Azor tom. 1. lib. 8. cap. 7. quaestio 1., that the faithful are bound to learn those things which they must believe. Hence see how necessary the School of Christian doctrine is. The reason is, because it is a necessary means; for faith comes from hearing: Rom 10.

> PRAEMITTO primo cum Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 3. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 3. in calce, Azorio tom. 1. lib. 8. cap. 7. quaestio 1. Fideles ea teneri discere, quae debent credere. Hinc vide quam necessaria sit doctrinae Christianae Schola. Ratio est, quia est medium necessarium; nam fides ex auditu: Rom 10.

2 I PREFACE secondly, that Doctors and Pastors are bound to know not only the articles, but also other truths of FAITH, as D. Thomas teaches art. 5., D. Bonaventure de 6. aliis Seraphim, and de Eccl. Hierarch.

> PRAELIBO secundo, Doctores, et Pastores teneri scire non modo articulos; sed alias etiam Fidei veritates, ut docet D. Thomas art. 5. D. Bonav. de 6. alis Seraphim, et de Eccl. Hierarch.

3 CONCERNING the question, the first opinion is that it is enough for rustics to believe the articles of faith implicitly, and consequently to know them, namely by believing what the Church believes; and therefore they are guilty of no fault if they ignore the Mystery of the Trinity. So Innocent in cap. Firmiter in fine de summa Trinitate. Jo. Andreas rubr. eo tit. num. 26. Abbas num. 6. Hostiensis num. 11. et 18. Imola num. 11. et 12. Ananias cap. firmissime, num. 7. de haeret. Bald. C. de Summa Trinit. in rubr. num. 7 et 8. Zanchinus de haeret. cap. 2. and Rosella verb. Fides, provided they believe that God exists and rewards. This opinion is proclaimed erroneous by Valencia quaest. 2. p. 4. Petrus Ledefma 2. Tom. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 3.; indeed it is proclaimed heretical by Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 2. col. 3. and Eymericus in 2. p. direct. Inq quaest. 10. haeresi 8., condemned by Gregory II. See also de Lugo disp. 13. sect. 4. num. 60. For my part I do not believe that those Doctors spoke of all rustics, but only of certain ruder ones, nearly incapable, such as abound in desert places, as Vasq. notes 1 2 disp 121. cap. 2.

> CIRCA quaestionem, prima opinio est, Rusticis satis esse articulos fidei implicite credere, et consequenter scire, nempe credendo, quod credit Ecclesia; ac proinde nullius culpae reos, si Mysterium Trinitatis ignorent. Ita Innocentius in cap. Firmiter in fine de summa Trinitate. Ioan. Andrea rubr. eo tit. num. 26. Abbas num. 6. Hostiens. num. 11. et 18. Imola num. 11. et 12. Ananias cap. firmissime, num. 7. de haeret. Bald. C. de Summa Trinit. in rubr. num. 7 et 8. Zanchinus de haeret. cap. 2. et Rosella verb. Fides, dummodo credant, Deum esse, et remunerari. Hanc opinionem erroneam proclamant Valentia quaest. 2. p. 4. Petrus Ledefma 2. Tom. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 3. Imo eam haereticam proclamant Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 2. col. 3. et Eymericus in 2. p. direct. Inq quaest. 10. haeresi 8. damnatam a Gregorio II. Vide etiam de Lugo disp. 13. sect. 4. num. 60. Equidem non credo, eos Doctores locutos de omnibus rusticis, sed solum de quibusdam rudioribus, fere incapacibus, quales abundant in locis desertis, ut notat Vasq. 1 2 disp 121. cap. 2.

4 The SECOND opinion is that all are bound to believe all the articles of the Apostles' Creed. But they seem to rely on this, that the Holy Fathers say it was composed by the Apostles, as D. August. lib. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1., Cyril catech. 5., and this is supposed in many decrees which Gratian collected de consecr. dist. 4. So think Gabriel 3. dist. 25. quaest. un. art. 2., Marsil. 3. quaest. 14. art. 3. concl. 5., Castro lib. 1. de iusta haeret. punit. cap. 9., Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2., Aragon. eadem quaest. 2. art. 6., Valent. quaest. 2. p. 3. et p. 4., Sayr. in Claui Reg. lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 15., Suarez de fide, disp. 13. sect. 14., although not all say this absolutely: Becanus p. 2. cap. 12. n. 8., Bellarm. in Symbolo, §. 3. et 5., Laym. tract. 1. cap. 9., Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 6. num. 40., Tanner. quaest. 7. dub. 3., Lugo disp. 13. sect. 4., Fuliesc. lib. 3. cap. 5., Morandus quaestione 10., Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 30., Nauar. lib. 5. Consil. tit. de paen. consil. 6. quaest. 1. In the second edit. consil. 10. quaest. 1. and Azor. p. 1. lib. 8. cap. 6. they say it is necessary to believe either the articles of the Apostles' Creed, or the Creed of 14 articles, which is called the children's catechism.

> SECUNDA sententia est, teneri omnes credere omnes articulos Symboli Apostolici. Videntur autem niti, quia Sancti Patres dicunt, ideo ab Apostolis compositum, ut D. August. lib. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1. Cyrillus catech. 5. et hoc supponitur in multis decretis, quae collegit Gratianus de consecr. dist. 4. Ita sentiunt Gabriel. 3. dist. 25. quaest. un. art. 2. Marsil. 3. quaest. 14. art. 3. concl. 5. Castro lib. 1. de iusta haeret. punit. cap. 9. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2. Aragon. eadem quaest. 2. art. 6. Valent. quaest. 2. p. 3. et p. 4. Sayr. in Claui Reg. lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 15. Suarez de fide, disp. 13. sect. 14. quamvis non absolute omnes id dicant: Becanus p. 2. cap. 12. n. 8. Bellarm. in Symbolo, §. 3. et 5. Laym. tract. 1. cap. 9. Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 6. num. 40. Tanner. quaest. 7. dub. 3. Lugo disp. 13. sect. 4. Fuliesc. lib. 3. cap. 5. Morandus quaestione 10. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 30. Nauar. lib. 5. Consil. tit. de paen. consil. 6. quaest. 1. In secunda edit. consil. 10. quaest. 1. et Azor. p. 1. lib. 8. cap. 6. dicunt, necessarium esse vel articulos Symboli Apostolorum, vel 14. articulorum credere Symbolum, quod dicitur catechismus puerorum.

5 The THIRD opinion is that not all are bound to believe explicitly the articles of the Creed as they are contained in the children's Catechism, but those which the Church celebrates with solemn title and proposes as to be learned. So Scotus dist. 25. quaest. 1. § sed posito., Richard. art. 4. quaest. 7., Angel. verb. fides num 7., and there Sylvest. quaest 3., Tabiena v. credere, q. 3., Michaël Medina lib. 4. de recta in Deum fide, cap. 6., Albertus 3. dist. 25. art. 6., Dugand. quaest. 1. num 9., Almain. quaest. un. It is cited from Sanchez, Fagundez, and others commonly to D. Bonaventure dist. 25. quaest. 3., but undeservedly, as I shall say.

> *TERTIA sententia est, non teneri omnes, articulos Symboli credere explicite, ut in Catechismo puerorum habentur; sed eos, quos Ecclesia solemni titu celebrat, et discendos proponit. 6 The FOURTH opinion is that all are bound to believe the fourteen articles contained in the children's Catechism; because the Holy Church opens them up so much by preaching and solemn expositions that no one can plead ignorance. This is the opinion of D. Bonaventure, who explains of which articles he speaks, and refers to the articles of the children's catechism: the Mystery of the Trinity and other articles, all of which, concerning God, are seven; and seven concerning Christ as man; and the effective remission of sins, resurrection, and glorification are reduced to the divinity; but meritoriously to Christ, who justifies through the Sacraments, especially Baptism and Penance; while through the Eucharist the worship of God is principally sustained. This is also the opinion of > *QUARTA sententia est, teneri omnes quatuordecim articulos, in Catechismo puerorum contentos, credere; quia eos adeo praedicatione, et solemnibus expositionibus Sancta Ecclesia patefacit, ut nullus praetendere valeat ignorantiam. Est sententia D. Bonav. qui explicat, de quibus articulis loquatur, et refert articulos catechismi puerorum; Mysterium Trinitatis, et alios articulos, qui omnes, de Deo sunt septem; et septem de Christo homine, et ad deitatem reducitur effective remissio peccatorum, resurrectio, et glorificatio; at meritorie ad Christum, qui per Sacramenta, praecipue Baptismi, et Poenitentiae iustificat; per Eucharistiam vero principaliter cultus Dei sustinetur. 7 I ASSERT with D. Bonaventure first, that not all the articles must be believed by necessity of precept, but only those which the Church proposes and teaches in the Creed of the Catechism and of the Apostles.

> ASSERO cum D. Bonav. primo, non omnes articulos esse necessitate praecepti credendos, sed eos tantum, quos in Symbolo Catechismi, et Apostolorum proponit, et docet Ecclesia.

8 It is PROVED from the Holy Doctor, because the Creed is handed down and composed for this purpose, as the Holy Fathers teach, especially D. August. serm. 130. de tempore, and the Councils to be cited shortly.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore, quia Symbolum ad hoc traditur, et compositum est, ut docent SS. PP. praecipue D. August. serm. 130. de tempore, et Concilia mox alleganda.

9 And the Catechism of Pius V. declares: Those things which Christian men must first hold are those which the Holy Apostles, breathing with the divine Spirit, distinguished in the twelve articles of the Creed.

> Et Catechismus Pii V. declarat. Quae primum Christiani homines tenere debent, illa sunt, quae SS. Apostoli divino Spiritu afflati, duodecim Symboli articulis distinxerunt.

10 It is PROVED indeed from St. Bonaventure that one is not bound to know all the contents of the Creed most distinctly, for there are some things in it, such as the Communion of Saints, and much more the emanation of the Holy Spirit from the Father, and from the Son through the way of the will, and of the Son through the intellect, which Theologians scarcely grasp; and if we were bound to know all these entirely distinctly, very few would be saved, which is incredible.

PROBATUR vero a S. Bonav. non teneri distinctissime omnia Symboli scire, nam ibi sunt aliqua, ut Sanctorum communio, ac multo magis emanatio Spiritus Sancti a Patre, filioque per viam voluntatis; et Filii per intellectum, quae vix Theologi capiunt; Et si haec omnino distincte scire teneremur, paucissimi salvarentur, quod est incredibile.

11 Therefore it suffices to believe explicitly indeed, and expressly, the seven Mysteries of the Godhead and the seven of the Humanity, to which are reduced the works of Creation, Justification, and Glorification, as the Holy Doctor concludes in corpore. But they must know the means to Justification, namely Baptism, Penance, and add also the Eucharist.

Igitur sufficit explicite quidem, et expresse credere septem Mysteria Deitatis, et septem Humanitatis, ad quae reducuntur opera Creationis, Iustificationis, et Glorificationis, ut concludit S. Doct. in corpore. Debent autem media ad Iustificationem scire, Baptismum scilicet, Poenitentiam, adde et Eucharistiam.

12 But all the rest they must believe implicitly, believing whatever the Holy Mother Church believes. And they must believe the Church itself united under the Roman Pontiff.

Caetera vero omnia implicite credere debent, credendo quidquid Sancta Mater credit Ecclesia. Ipsam vero Ecclesiam sub Pontifice credant Romano coadunatam.

13 But the rule of the Holy Doctor is excellent, that those articles are to be believed explicitly which the Holy Church expounds in the Creed, asserts as necessary by preaching, and celebrates with solemnities. Here he does not wish to say that only those which are solemnized are to be believed, as Valencia, Fagundez, and Caspensis ascribe to him, who infer that the mystery of the Circumcision, of the Epiphany, etc. must also be believed as necessary in this way. For he does not say that all Mysteries are to be believed which are celebrated on feastdays; but those which are in the Creed; especially those which are more frequently handed down and expounded, such as the Incarnation, Nativity, Death, Resurrection, Ascension, etc. Hence it is clear that Tanner also spoke badly of the Holy Doctor num. 68.

Regula vero S. Doctoris est optima, eos articulos esse credendos explicite, quos Sancta Ecclesia in Symbolo exponit, praedicatione asserit necessarios, et solennitatibus celebrat. Ubi non vult dicere, eos solos, qui solemnizantur, esse credendos, ut ei adscribunt Valentia, Fagundez, et Caspensis, qui inferunt, fuisse sic necessario credendum etiam mysterium Circumcisionis, Epiphaniae, etc. Non enim omnia Mysteria credenda ait, quae celebrantur festivitatibus; sed ea, quae in Symbolo sunt; maxime quae frequentius traduntur, et exponuntur, ut Incarnatio, Nativitas, Mors, Resurrectio, Ascensio, etc. Hinc patet, male etiam Tannerum de S. Doctore locutum num. 68.

14 It is proved by the third argument 2. against the objection with a reply; As obedience stands with respect to precepts, and charity with respect to things to be loved, so faith with respect to the articles. But obedience is not true unless one is ready to obey all precepts, and accepts what is imposed according to place and time; nor is there charity unless one is ready to love God and neighbor explicitly, when it is enjoined on him: Therefore also faith is not whole unless all things necessary for one's state are believed.

Probatur tertio argumento 2. ad oppositum cum responso; Sicut se habet obedientia, respectu praeceptorum, et charitas diligendorum; ita fides respectu articulorum. Sed non est vera obedientia, nisi quis promptus sit obedire omnibus praeceptis, et pro loco, et tempore imposita recipiat; neque est charitas, nisi sit promptus diligere explicite Deum, et proximum, cum ei iniungitur: Ergo et fides non est integra, nisi omnia, quae pro eius statu sunt necessaria, credantur.

15 I assert secondly: As those things which are in the Creed are necessarily to be believed with respect to knowledge, so with respect to action those things are necessarily to be known and believed which are necessary for exercising the Christian life: this is clear from the argument cited above.

16 But these are: the Sacrament of Baptism, necessary for professing the faith and for fulfilling the obligations owed to the Christian name; the Sacrament of Penance as the necessary means of salvation to be had after Baptism by those who have fallen mortally: And the Eucharist, because we are bound to receive it; and it is the chief Sacrament of faith, by which we venerate the Lord Jesus.

> Haec autem sunt, Sacramentum Baptismi, necessarium ad profitendam fidem, et ad obligationes, Christiano nomini debitas; obeundas: Sacramentum Poenitentiae ad medium necessarium salutis habendum post Baptismum lapsis lethaliter: Et Eucharistiam, eo quod illam tenemur recipere; et est praecipuum fidei Sacramentum, quo Dominum Iesum veneremur.

17 As to the other Sacraments, some, according to Suarez disp. 13. sect. 4., think they must be believed as necessary; but Suarez loc. cit., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. and Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 40. deny it, because they are not simply necessary. As to the other three, these assert with Henriquez lib. 6. de Poenit. cap. 28., Valencia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 5., Becanus p. 2. cap. 12. n. 111., Bannes quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2., Petrus Ledesma tom. 2. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2. But this is the opinion of D. Bonaventure dist. 25. quaest. 1. ad 3., who says that this knowledge is reduced to the article of the Church and the remission of sins: the Eucharist indeed is the Sacrament of union, by which we are deeply joined to Christ: but Baptism and Penance are the Sacraments of justification; therefore, as the Holy Doctor observes, it is said in the Nicene Symbol: I confess one baptism for the remission of sins.

> Quoad alia Sacramenta, aliqui apud Suarez disp. 13. sect. 4. censent, ea necessario credenda, sed Suarez loc. cit. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. et Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 40. id negant, quia non sunt necessaria simpliciter. Quoad alia tria, asserunt hi cum Henriquez lib. 6. de Poenit. cap. 28. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 5. Becano p. 2. cap. 12. n. 111. Bannes quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2. Petro Ledesma tom. 2. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2. Est autem sententia D. Bonav. dist. 25. quaest. 1. ad 3. qui ait, reduci hanc notitiam ad articulum Ecclesiae, et remissionis peccatorum: Eucharistia quidem est Sacramentum unionis, quo Christo alte coniungimur: Baptismus vero, et Poenitentia sunt Sacramenta iustificationis; ideo, ut observat S. D. in Symbolo Nicaeno dicitur: Confiteor unum baptisma in remissionem peccatorum.

18 I add that faith in the Decalogue is also necessary for its observance. So Suarez disp. 13. sect. 4. num. 11., Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 41. And as to knowing it, Sylv. verb. scientia, num. unico asserts it, Angelus there num. 1., Tabiena ad fin., Armilla num. 2., Bannes quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2., Ledesma tom. 1. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2., Clavis Reg. lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 30., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. num. 10., Valencia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 5., Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 5.

> Addo necessariam esse etiam fidem Decalogi ad observantiam. Ita Suarez disp. 13. sect. 4. num. 11. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 41. Et quoad sciendum, asserunt Sylv. verb. scientia, num. unico Angelus ibi num. 1. Tabiena ad fin. Armilla num. 2. Bannes quaest. 2. art. 8. disp. 2. Ledesma tom. 1. summae, tract. 1. cap. 2. Clavis Reg. lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 30. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. num. 10. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 2. p. 5. Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 5.

19 But the Holy Doctor notes serm. 2. Decalogi that the first three precepts are referred to the articles of the Godhead; but the others to the unity knit together among men in charity.

> Notat autem S. Doct. serm. 2. Decalogi*, tria prima praecepta referri ad articulos Deitatis; alios vero ad unitatem compactam inter homines in charitate.*

20 It is proved by D. Bonaventure arg. 5. with the reply added, for the reason which Sanchez, Fagundez, and others use. That which is simply necessary for observance cannot be observed unless it is known; and if it is for a supernatural end, it cannot be sufficiently known unless it is believed by faith: But the precepts of the Decalogue must necessarily be observed on account of the supernatural end; nor is invincible ignorance of them possible in those who are educated among Christians: Therefore. And indeed that invincible ignorance of these is not given, they assert with D. Bonaventure, D. Thom. 1. Corinth. 11. lect. 4., Durand. 3 dist. 25. quaest. 1., Gabriel quaest. enarrat. 2., Manuel tom. 1. summae, secundae edit. cap. 88. num. 4. The reason of St. Bonaventure is in corpore, because with such an abundance of instructions no one can be excused, since he can easily learn them by heart.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. arg. 5. addito responso*, ratione qua utuntur Sanchez, Fagundez, et alii. Id, quod ad observantiam simpliciter est necessarium, non potest observari, nisi sciatur; et si est ad finem supernaturalem, non potest satis sciri, nisi fide credatur: Sed praecepta Decalogi sunt necessario observanda ob finem supernaturalem; nec datur de eis ignorantia invincibilis in his, qui inter Christianos sunt educati: Ergo. Et quidem de his non dari ignorantiam invincibilem, asserunt cum D. Bonav. D. Thom.* 1. Corinth. 11. lect. 4. Durand. 3 dist. 25. quaest. 1. Gabriel quaest. enarrat. 2. Manuel. tom. 1. summae, secundae edit. cap. 88. num. 4. Ratio S. Bonav. est in corpore*, quia cum tanta sit eruditionum frequentia, nullus potest excusari, cum facile possit ediscere.*

21 But that there may be some rustic folk in whom there is some invincible ignorance, I would almost grant to Navarro, Bannes, Ledesma above, Azor lib. 8. cap. 6. quaestio 7. et cap. 7. quaestio 3. et cap. 8. quaestio ult., Vasquez disp. 121. cap. 2., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. num. 20., Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 67. But the opposite is more certain, as I said 1. 2. tract. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 2.

> Quod vero dentur aliqui Sylvestres, in quibus sit aliqua ignorantia invincibilis, concederem fere Navarro, Bannes, Ledesmae supra, Azorio lib. 8. cap. 6. quaestio 7. et cap. 7. quaestio 3. et cap. 8. quaestio ult. Vasquez disp. 121. cap. 2. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. num. 20. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 67. Sed oppositum est certius, ut dixi 1. 2. tract. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 2.

22 I add with D. Bonaventure ad 5. that we are bound to know also the Lord's Prayer, by which we must know to ask all things from God. The Holy Doctor indicates this more clearly 4. dist. 16. p. 2. dubio litt. et S. p. Breviloq. in fine, et S. p. Centilog. sect. 46. et p. 3. Stimuli Divini Amoris, cap. 17. et in cap. 3. Regulae nostrae, and it is the opinion of D. Aug. lib. de fide, et operibus, cap. 6. et 9. lib. de fide, et Symb. et in serm. in vig. Paschae, et Pentecost. The Councils prescribe this: Brach. II. and Cabil. cap. 46. relata de consecr. dist. 4. c. 20. et seq., Mogunt. cap. 46., Foroliense, and Rhem. according to Fagundez num. 59., Autel. cap. 10. et 19., Later. under Leo sess. 9. et, Trid. sess. 6. cap. 7. et sess. 24. cap. 4., according to Tanner num. 66. So also Fuliensis.

> Addo cum D. Bonau. ad 5. teneri nos scire etiam Orationem Dominicam, qua scire debemus omnia a Deo petenda. Id clarius indicat S. Doct. 4. dist. 16. p. 2. dubio litt. et S. p. 23 The reason of these Councils, which is frequent and familiar to St. Bonaventure, is, because this is the mark of a Christian, and without this prayer one does not know how to ask what is necessary for salvation.

Ratio horum Conciliorum, quae est D. Bonaventurae frequens, et familiaris, est, quia hoc est signaculum Christiani, et sine hac oratione nescitur petere, quod est necessarium ad salutem.

24 But the Councils cited teach that all should commit the Creed and the Lord's Prayer to memory faithfully. And the VII. Synod can. 7. says that he who does not know the Creed is not to be reckoned a Catholic.

Docent vero allata Concilia, debere omnes Symbolum, et orationem Dominicam memoriae commendate. Et VII. Synodus can. 7. dicit, non esse censendum Catholicum, qui Symbolum non sciat.

25 The Holy Doctor adds in Confessionali, cap. 2. particula 9. that the Confessor ought to ask penitents whether they know the aforesaid, as often as he rightly suspects it: For it is a sin not to know these things, as I said. So also Bannes loc. cit., Azor. lib. 8. cap. 8., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. n. 21., Fagundez n. 68.

Addit S. Doct. in Confessionali, cap. 2. particula 9. Confessarium debere interrogare poenitentes, an praedicta sciant, quoties iure suspicatur: Est enim peccatum, haec nescire, ut dixi. Ita etiam Bannes loc. cit. Azor. lib. 8. cap. 8. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. n. 21. Fagundez n. 68.

26 From the Councils cited Fagundez, Sanchez, Suarez, and others with them add that even the words ought to be learned by memory, and that absolution is to be suspended for those who, though admonished repeatedly, refuse to learn them.

Addunt ex allegatis Conciliis Fagundez, Sanchez, Suarez, et alii apud hos, debere disci memoria etiam verba, et eis, qui pluries moniti nolunt discere, absolutionem suspendendam.

27 You will ask at what time the precept of believing and knowing the aforesaid Mysteries begins to bind.

Quaeres quo tempore obligare incipiat praeceptum credendi, et sciendi supradicta Mysteria.

28 It is answered, that the obligation begins in the seventh year. So Suarez de fide disp. 13. sect. 5. num. 6., Azor. T. 1. lib. 8. cap. 7. quaestio. 1., Sanchez lib. 2. Decal. cap. 3. num. 12., with D. Bonaventure here quaest. 3., where Fagundez cites num. 57. and others with him. Nevertheless they are not bound at once to know, but to begin to learn, and to apply moral diligence, that they may learn those things which I have mentioned, and the five precepts of the Church. These are the obligations of all the faithful.

Respondetur, incipere obligationem in septennio. Ita Suarez de fide disp. 13. sect. 5. num. 6. Azor. T. 1. lib. 8. cap. 7. quaestio. 1. Sanchez lib. 2. Decal. cap. 3. num. 12. cum D. Bonau. hic quaest. 3. ubi cum allegat Fagundez num. 57. et alii apud hos. Non tenentur tamen statim scire, sed incipere discere, et moralem adhibere diligentiam, ut ea discant, quae tetuli, et praecepta quinque Ecclesiae. Hae sunt obligationes omnium fidelium.

29 But indeed the Holy Doctor notes ad 1. et 2. that Doctors and Pastors ought to know all things which are to be taught in the Church: but the others ought to know those which belong to their state. See also Azorius lib. 2. cap. 2. quaestio 3., Sanchez num. 11., Fagundez num. 48., where he says it is the common opinion, with D. Thom. quaest. 2. art. 6.

> Enim vero advertit S. Doct. ad 1. et 2. Doctores, et Pastores debere omnia scire, quae sunt docenda in Ecclesia: caeteros vero scire debere, quae sunt sui status. Vide etiam Azorium lib. 2. cap. 2. quaestio 3. Sanchez num. 11. Fagundez num. 48. ubi ait, esse communem sententiam, cum D. Thom. quaest. 2. art. 6.

30 Therefore the Holy Doctor dist. 25. quaest. 1. expounds the Creed divinely, and ad 2. says that many things are drawn from the Creed which are to be discussed by Theologians.

31 But in the reply ad 5. he explains why other things were added to the Creed of the Apostles, namely the Nicene and that of Athanasius: namely to uproot heresies. Therefore it is said: I believe in one God, to confound the Manichaean, who posited two principles. One the origin of corporeal things, that is, an evil God: the other the good one, of spiritual things; but this is blunted by those words: Creator of heaven and earth, of all things visible and invisible. To confute the Arians it is said: And in one Lord Jesus Christ the only-begotten Son of God, and born of the Father before all ages, God of God, Light of light, true God of true God, consubstantial with the Father, by whom all things were made. But for the confutation of Macedonius, and of Nestorius, and of Eutyches, who said the Holy Spirit was a servant; it is said: and in one Holy Spirit the Lord and life-giver, who proceeds from the Father. The Church added: who proceeds from the Son (Filioque) to refute the error of the Greeks. It is added: Who spoke through the prophets to eliminate some who said they spoke like phantoms. See the Holy Doctor distinguishing excellently why these Creeds are employed at various times.

> In responsione vero ad 5. differit; cur Symbolo Apostolorum alia sint addita, nempe Nicaenum, et Athanasii; scilicet ad haereses evellendas. Ideo dicitur: Credo in unum Deum*, ad confundendum Manichaeum, qui duo principia ponebat. Alterum retum corporearum, idest, Deum malum: Alterum bonum, spiritualium; sed hoc retunditur illis verbis:* Creatorem caeli, et terrae, visibilium omnium, et invisibilium. Ad confutandos vero Arrianos dicitur: Et in unum Dominum Iesum Christum filium Dei unigenitum, et ex patre natum ante omnia saecula, Deum de Deo, Lumen de lumine, Deum verum de Deo vero, consubstantialem Patri, per quem omnia facta sunt. Ad confutationem vero Macedonii, et Nestorii, et Eutychis, qui dicebant, Spiritum Sanctum servum; dicitur: et in unum Spiritum Sanctum Dominum, et vivificantem, qui ex Patre procedit. Addidit Ecclesia: Filioque procedit ad Graecorum errorem refellendum. Additur: Qui locutus est per prophetas ad aliquos elidendos, qui dicebant eos locutos, ut phantasticos. Vide S. Doctorem egregie differentem, cur variis temporibus adhibeantur haec Symbola.

32 But it is a divine precept to know these things, as I said with D. Bonaventure quaest. praecedenti, since Christ commanded, Matth. ult. Teach all nations, etc.

> Est autem praeceptum divinum haec scire, ut dixi cum D. Bonav. quaest. praecedenti*, cum Christus praecepit, Matth. ult.* Docete omnes gentes, etc.

Question XVI: Whether we are bound to confess faith, and when

1 Faith exacts from us the duty of the heart and of the tongue, as D. August. says lib. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1. I have already treated of the Acts of the heart; now of the Confession of faith.

Fides a nobis exigit officium cordis, et linguae, ut ait D. August. lib. de fide, et Symb. cap. 1. Iam egi de Actibus cordis; nunc de Confessione fidei.

2 But it is certain concerning the faith that there exists a divine precept against denying the faith. So D. Bonaventure ad 9. Lucae, which he proves from there: Whoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words: of him the Son of man shall be ashamed, when he shall come in his Majesty. There follow D. Thom. quaest. 3. art. 1., Valencia quaest. 3. p. 2., Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 3. So the Councils teach: Nicaenum can. 11. et 12., Ancyr. almost entirely, and Elibert. can. 1. et 2., where they testify that innumerable Martyrs underwent torments and deaths on account of the confession of the faith, which we are bound rather to undergo than to deny the faith. Therefore it is said Matth. 10. Whoever shall deny me before men, I will also deny him before my Father. Fear not those who kill the body, as the Holy Doctor notes in 3. dist. 39. art. 3. quaest. 2. et sermone 18. de pluribus Martyribus. See Valencia quaest. 3. p. 1., Fagundez cap. 3., Tanner disp. 1. quaest. 7. dub. 5., Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 5.

Certum est autem de fide, extare praeceptum divinum de non neganda fide. Ita D. Bonavent. ad 9. Lucae, quod inde probat: Qui me erubuerit, et meos sermones: hunc filius hominis erubescet, cum venerit in Maiestate sua. Sequuntur D. Thom. quaest. 3. art. 1. Valentia quaest. 3. p. 2. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 3. Ita docent Concilia, Nicaenum can. 11. et 12. Ancyr. totum fere, et Elibert. can. 1. et 2. ubi testantur, innumeros Martyres tormenta, et mortes ob fidei confessionem subiisse, quae tenemur potius subire, quam fidem negare. Ideo dicitur Matth. 10. Qui me negaverit coram hominibus, negabo et ego eum coram Patre meo. Nolite timere eos, qui occidunt corpus, ut advertit S. Doct. in 3. dist. 39. art. 3. quaest. 2. et sermone 18. de pluribus Martyribus. Vide Valentiam quaest. 3. p. 1. Fagundez cap. 3. Tannerum disp. 1. quaest. 7. dub. 5. Fuliensem lib. 3. cap. 5.

3 Observe that some acts of a virtue are produced by the habit itself, and are physical, and in this way only the internal acts are acts of FAITH; for they are produced by the same habit, of which this is the sign, that they reside in the same potency in which the habit is. Secondly, some are acts of the virtue only morally, because they have praise on account of the formal object of the Virtue, and are ordered to it as to their end; and in this way even the external confession of faith is an act of the virtue of faith. It is proved: for it is ordered to the same end and the same object, as is had in 2. Corinth. 4. Having the same spirit of faith, we believe, for which cause we also speak. Hence it can be said that the Confession of faith pertains to various virtues; for instance to Religion, insofar as it begets honor for God: and to fortitude, insofar as on account of imminent peril it can be arduous, as the Holy Doctor teaches de Dono fortitudinis.

Observa, actus virtutis aliquos esse ab ipso habitu productos, et sunt physici, et hoc modo soli actus interni sunt actus Fidei; nam producuntur ab eodem habitu, cuius signum est, quia resident in eadem potentia, in qua est habitus. Secundo, aliqui sunt actus virtutis tantum moraliter, quia habent laudem ob obiecto formali Virtutis, et in illud, tanquam in finem, ordinantur, et hoc modo Confessio etiam exterior fidei est actus virtutis fidei. Probatur: nam ordinatur ad eundem finem, et idem obiectum, ut habetur 2. Corinth. 4. Habentes eundem spiritum fidei, credimus, propter quod et loquimur. Hinc potest dici Confessio fidei ad diversas virtutes pertinere; puta ad Religionem, quatenus parit Deo honorem: et ad fortitudinem quatenus ob imminens periculum, potest esse ardua, ut docet S. Doct. de Dono fortitudinis.

4 The Confession of FAITH therefore binds in two cases. First, when the worship due to God would otherwise be withheld. Secondly, if a grave spiritual benefit would be withheld from the people.

Confessio igitur Fidei obligat in duobus casibus. Primo, quando alioqui subtraheretur Deo debitus cultus. Secundo, si subtraheretur populo gravis utilitas spiritualis.

5 It is proved by D. Thom. ad primum. The act of some Virtue is necessary then, when it is necessary for the end of charity toward God or neighbor. But in those two cases the confession of faith is necessary for the end of charity. Therefore. The major is proved, for the end of every virtue is ordered to charity. The minor is proved; for, when one can attend to the honor of God or the salvation of his neighbor, and does not wish to, he is not judged to provide for charity. Add the times assigned by the Council of Trent for the profession of faith. See Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 4., Bassaeum verb. fides 2. num. 5.

> Probatur a D. Thom. ad primum. Tunc actus Virtutis alicuius est necessarius, quando necessarius est ad finem charitatis erga Deum, vel proximum. Sed in illis duobus casibus confessio fidei est necessaria ad charitatis finem. Ergo. Maior probatur, nam finis cuiuslibet virtutis ordinatur ad charitatem. Minor probatur; nam, cum potest quis honori Dei, vel saluti proximi consulere, et non vult, non censetur providere charitati. Adde tempora, a Concilio Tridentino assignata pro fidei professione. Vide Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 4. Bassaeum verb. fides 2. num. 5.

6 The first question therefore is: Whether in some case one can deny that he is a believer. But this can be denied in two ways. First, lest it be believed that he is a Christian or Catholic by those who understand by that name some wicked and odious nation; and in this sense it is not a sin to deny that one is a Catholic or Christian, by which someone of such a wicked nation is understood. Valencia brings examples: see him. But in the second way, to deny oneself a Christian to one who understands rightly, is not licit. So commonly all the Doctors with D. Bonaventure 3. dist. 25. et p. 6., Breuil. cap. 8., D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 2., where Cajetanus, Aragon. and other Thomists; Azor lib. 8. cap. 27., Suarez disp. 4. sect. 1., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5., Becanus p. 2. cap. 9. n. 30. and others, cited by Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 3., Tanner. loc. cit.

> Quaestio ergo prima est: An in aliquo casu possit quis negare fidelem se esse. Dupliciter autem potest hoc negari. Primo ne credatur, se esse Christianum, vel Catholicum ab iis, qui hoc nomine intelligunt nationem pravam aliquam et odibilem; et hoc sensu non est peccatum negare, se Catholicum, vel Christianum, per quem intelligitur aliquis talis pravae nationis. Exempla affert Valentia: Vide illum. Secundo vero modo negare se Christianum recte intelligenti, non licet. Ita communiter Doctores omnes cum D. Bonau. 3. dist. 25. et p. 6. Breuil. cap. 8. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 2. ubi Caietanus, Aragon. et alii Thomistae; Azor lib. 8. cap. 27. Suarez disp. 4. sect. 1. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 5. Becanus p. 2. cap. 9. n. 30. et alii apud Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 3. Tanner. loc. cit.

7 It is proved from the Holy Doctor in the places cited, and ad 22. Lucae, et 19. Ioannis from the fault of Peter, who denied Christ out of fear of death, and sinned gravely, as the Fathers confess, especially those cited by him, Chrysost. homil. 82., August. tract. 113., Gregory homil. 21. in Evangelia.

> Probatur a S. Doct. allegatis locis, et ad 22. Lucae, et 19. Ioannis ex culpa Petri, qui timore mortis negavit Christum, et graviter peccavit, ut fatentur Patres, praecipue, allati ab eo, Chrysost. homil. 82. August. tract. 113. Gregorius homil. 21. in Evangelia.

8 Next it is doubted: Whether one who is questioned about the faith by a Tyrant out of hatred for it can keep silence or change the subject.

> Deinde dubitatur: An, qui a Tyranno interrogatur de fide in odium eius, possit tacere, vel divertere.

9 D. Thom. quaest. 2. art. 2. denies it, as often as by that silence or answer he could be judged not to have the faith. Others follow him. The foundation is taken from the chapter Nolite timere 11. quaest. 3. It seems D. Bonaventure holds it ad 12. Lucae on those words: Be not terrified by those who kill the body. And he brings 1. Machab. 2. for it: Fear not the words of a sinful man. Take courage, and act manfully in the Law.

> D. Thom. quaest. 2. art. 2. negat, quoties eo silentio, vel responso posset existimari, non habere fidem. Eum sequuntur alii. Fundamentum sumitur ex cap. Nolite timere 11. quaest. 3. Videtur D. Bonau. ad 12. Lucae ad ea verba: Ne terreamini ab his, qui occidunt corpus. Et affert id 1. Machab. 2. A verbis viri peccatoris ne timueritis. Vos confortamini, et viriliter agite in Lege.

[10] Others say he can keep silence or change the subject. So Aragon. quaest. 3. art. 2., Roder. cap. 119. Summae.

> Alii dicunt, posse tacere, vel divertere. Ita Aragon. quaest. 3. art. 2. Roder. cap. 119. Summae.

[11] Others bring forward that one is bound to confess clearly, if he be a grave person, such as a Bishop or Doctor. So Valencia disp. 1. quaest. 3., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 4.

> Alii afferunt, teneri clare confiteri, si sit persona gravis, ut Episcopus, vel Doctor. Ita Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 3. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 4.

[12] Others say one is bound, if he is questioned publicly by a Tyrant. So Valencia loc. cit., Azor. cap. 27. quaestio 1., Tanner. num. 120., Aragon. quaest. 3. art. 2., Bannes q. 3. art. 2. et others cited by Fagundez cap. 5. The reason is; because then honor is detracted from God, if you do not confess. This the Holy Doctor seems to hint serm. 18. Martyrum. Accinit Fuliens.

> Alii dicunt, teneri, si a Tyranno publice interrogetur. Ita Valentia loc. cit. Azor. cap. 27. quaestio 1. Tanner. num. 120. Aragon. quaest. 3. art. 2. Bannes q. 3. art. 2. et alii apud Fagundez cap. 5. Ratio est; quia tunc detrahitur Dei honori, si non confitearis. Hoc videtur innuere S. Doct. serm. 18. Martyrum. Accinit Fuliens.

[13] It is asked thirdly. Whether through feigned external acts of a false religion it is licit to conceal the true faith, for instance by bending the knee to an Idol.

> Quaeritur tertio. An per actus externos fictos falsae religionis, liceat fidem veram occultare, puta genua Idolo flectendo.

[14] ADRIANUS in 4. Tract. de Baptismo, quaest. 1. art. 1. ad 5. says it is licit when a most grave cause urges. He brings D. Hieronymum 2. ad Galat. et epist. 89. ad August., where he teaches that the Apostles by cautious simulation exercised the ceremonies of the Law, now deadly.

> ADRIANUS in 4. Tract. de Baptismo, quaest. 1. art. 1. ad 5. ait, licere urgente gravissima causa. Adducit D. Hieronymum 2. ad Galat. et epist. 89. ad August. ubi docet, Apostolos cauta simulatione exercuisse caeremonias legis, iam mortiferae.

[15] It is PROVED first from 1. Reg. 5., where Naaman petitioned Eliseus: But this only is that for which you shall beseech the Lord for your servant, when my master goes into the temple of Remmon to adore, and he leans upon my hand: if I adore in the temple of Remmon, when he adores in the same place, that the Lord may forgive your servant for this thing, to which Eliseus answered: Go in peace, signifying that it was licit.

> PROBAT primo ex 1. Reg. 5. ubi Naaman petiit ab Elisaeo: Hoc autem solum est, de quo depreceris Dominum pro servo tuo, quando ingredietur Dominus meus templum Remmon, ut adoret, et illo innitente super manum meam, si adoravero in templo Remmon, adorante eo in eodem loco, ut ignoscat mihi Dominus servo suo pro hac re, cui respondit Elisaeus: Vade in pace, significans id licitum.

[16] SECONDLY from 4. Reg. 10. the example of Jehu, who feigned that he wished to sacrifice to Baal, that he might draw the priests of Baal into the snare, and he seems to be praised by God: Diligently you did what was right, and pleased in my eyes. This example D. Bonaventure brought 3. dist. 38. quaest. 1. ad 3., where he says that the simulation of Jehu, feigning that he wished to adore Baal, is not a lie, but a simulation of prudence. On account of these words some draw the Seraphic Doctor to the opinion of Adrian. But the Holy Doctor does not exempt Jehu from sin against faith.

> SECUNDO ex 4. Reg. 10. exemplo Iehu, qui finxit se velle sacrificare Baal, ut ad muscipulam sacerdotes Baal traheret, et videtur laudari a Deo: Studiose egisti, quod rectum erat, et placebat in oculis meis. Hoc exemplum adduxit D Bonav. 3. dist. 38. quaest. 1. ad 3. ubi ait, simulationem Iehu fingentis, se velle adorare Baal, non esse mendacium, sed simulationem cautelae. Propter haec verba trahunt aliqui Seraphicum ad opinionem Adriani. At S. Doct. non eximit Iehu a peccato contra fidem.

17 The true opinion therefore is, that it is not licit: So it seems to D. Bonaventure 4. dist. 33. dub. 8. litt. et loc. cit. Brevil. and D. Thom. quaest. 3. art. 2., where Cajetanus, Valencia quaest. 3. p. 2. dub. 4. and other Interpreters, Ales. 3. p. quaest. 183. membr. 2., D. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 22. cap. 6., Sylvest. verb. fides, quaest. 5., Armil. ibi num. 9., Ang. verbo Infidelitas, num. 8, Nauar. cap. 11. num. 23., Toletus lib. 4. summae, cap. 2., Vasquez disp. 182. cap. 5., Suarez de fide disp 14. sect. 4. et lib. 9. de leg. cap. 17. et in defensione fidei, lib. 6. cap. 9., Becanus 2. p. summae, cap. 9. quaest. 5., and others commonly, Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 6., Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 7. num. 61., Tanner. quaest. 7. disp. 5., Morand. quest. 11., Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 14., who condemn the opposing opinion as error. And because they involve the Seraphic Doctor in it, I shall bring other passages in which he holds this second opinion absolutely. The first is prima parte Centil. sect. 26., where he wills that idolatry is committed absolutely by genuflecting, or evaporating incense to an Idol. The same he teaches ad caput 15. Sap. on these words: They are worthy of death who hope in such things.

> Vera igitur sententia est, non licere: Videtur D. Bonau. 4. dist. 33. dub. 8. litt. et loc. cit. Brevil. est D. Thom. quaest. 3. art. 2. ubi Caietanus, Valentia quaest. 3. p. 2. dub. 4. et alii Interpretes, Ales. 3. p. quaest. 183. membr. 2. D. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 22. cap. 6. Sylvest. verb. fides, quaest. 5. Armil. ibi num. 9. Ang. verbo Infidelitas, num. 8 Nauar. cap. 11. num. 23. Toletus lib. 4. summae, cap. 2. Vasquez disp. 182. cap. 5. Suarez de fide disp 14. sect. 4. et lib. 9. de leg. cap. 17. et in defensione fidei, lib. 6. cap. 9. Becanus 2. p. summae, cap. 9. quaest. 5. et alii communiter Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 6. Caspens. disp. 3. sect. 7. num. 61. Tanner. quaest. 7. disp. 5. Morand. quest. 11. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 14. qui oppositam sententiam erroris damnant. Et quia in ea involvunt Seraphicum, afferam alia loca, quibus hanc secundam tenet absolute. Primus est prima parte Centil. sect. 26. ubi vult, committi absolute Idolatriam genuflectendo, vel thus evaporando ad Idolum. Idem docet ad caput 15. Sap. in ea verba: Digni sunt morte, qui spem habent in talibus.

18 It is proved first from that 1. Cor. 10. I would not have you become partakers of demons: you cannot drink the chalice of the Lord and the chalice of demons. The same is gathered from chapter 10.

> Probatur primo ex illo 1. Cor. 10. Nolo vos fieri socios daemoniorum: non potestis calicem Domini bibere et calicem daemoniorum. Idem colligitur ex capite 10.

19 It is proved by the reasoning of D. Bonaventure, because external worship contains superstitious worship intrinsically, because it was instituted for religious use.

> Probatur ratione D. Bonau. quia cultus externus continet intrinsece superstitiosum cultum, quia institutus est ad usum religiosum.

20 To D. Hieronymus it is answered, that those ceremonies were for the worship of the true God, and were not yet declared harmful. See Tract. de Legibus, disput. penultima.

> Ad D. Hieronymum respondetur, illas caeremonias fuisse ad veri Dei cultum, neque fuerant adhuc declaratae noxiae. Vide Tract. de Legibus, disput. penultima.

21 To the example of Jehu it is answered with D. Bonaventure loc. cit., D. August. lib. cont. Mendacium, and D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 1., that Jehu is not excused from lying, or from the simulation of religion. Therefore he is not praised thus: Diligently you spoke. But: you did it, by killing the sons of Achab. See Vasquez num. 70., Tanner. 104, Fulsensem loc. cit.

> Ad exemplum Iehu respondetur cum D. Bonavent. loc. cit. D August. lib. cont. Mendacium, et D. Thoma 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 1. non excusari Iehu a mendacio, vel simulatione religionis. Ideo non sic laudatur: Studiose locutus es. Sed: egisti, occidendo filios Achab. Vide Vasquez num. 70. Tanner. 104 Fulsensem loc. cit.

22 Therefore he is excused only with respect to the prudence directed to the worship and obedience of God, not with respect to the sheer falsehood and simulation.

23 As to Naaman it is answered, that he asked only that he might show political deference to his lord, as Abul. quaest. 20. explains it, Cajetanus, Lyra, and Burgen. ibi. Then, even supposing he had asked to worship the Idol with external worship. Valencia and Fagundez answered: Eliseus did not consent, but only said: Go in peace, which could also have the sense of one reproving.

24 I answer more easily, that he asked that Eliseus should pray for him on account of the sin of entering the temple of Remmon, for which he ought to have been rebuked by Eliseus, and he did not improve. Therefore he says: Go in peace, as if to say: Since there is no hope of amendment, I shall pray for you: Go. Certainly Eliseus had admonished him as an idolater about this superstitious worship; for why else would his stricken conscience say to him that he should pray for him on account of this sin? Therefore the prophet does not retract, but only dismisses him; just as a poor man is dismissed to whom you do not wish to give alms: Go in peace: For prayer is a spiritual alms.

> Facilius respondeo, eum petiisse, ut Elisaeus oraret pro eo ob peccatum ingrediendi in Mesquitam Remmon, de quo oportuit, ut fuerit correptus ab Elisaeo, nec profecerit. Ideo ait: Vade in pace, quasi dicat: Quoniam non est spes emendationis, orabo pro te: Vade. Profecto Elisaeus eum idolatram monuerat de hoc cultu superstitioso; Cur enim aliter conscientia punctus diceret ipsi, ut oraret pro se de hoc peccato? Igitur propheta non retractat, sed solum dimittit; sicut dimittitur pauper, cui non vis dare eleemosynam: Vade in pace: Est enim oratio, spiritualis eleemosyna.

25 From what has been said it is gathered that neither can garments expressing superstitious worship be used, which are the sign of a Sect (although Fulsens. hints otherwise). As to garments signifying only politically a false sect, such as the yellow cap of the Hebrews, there are various opinions: some affirm; others deny. See Fagundez cap. 7., where he cites ten authors for the affirmative, namely that it is licit; and the same number for the negative. But garments which signify only the usage of a people are not forbidden. It is licit even to go to the temples of heretics, to confute their sermons. See Valencia quaest. 3. p. 2., Azor. cap. 27. quaestio 5., Tanner. num. 123. Not, however, where worship is presumed, as in England, by the Decree of Paul V.

> Ex dictis habetur, neque posse adhiberi vestes exprimentes cultum superstitiosum, quae sunt signum Sectae (etsi Fulsens. nutet.) Quoad vestes vero significantes tantum politice falsam sectam, ut est pileus flavus Hebraeorum variae sunt opiniones Aliqui afferunt; alii negant. Vide Fagundez cap. 7. ubi decem authores pro affirmativa refert, nempe licere; et totidem pro negativa. Vestes vero, quae solum usum gentis significant, non sunt vetitae Licet etiam ad haereticorum Fana, ad conciones confutandas, ire. Vide Valentiam quaest. 3. p. 2. Azor. cap. 27. quaestio 5. Tanner. num. 123. Non tamen, ubi praesumitur cultus, ut in Anglia, ex Decreto Pauli V.

Question XVII: Whether it is lawful to dispute about faith, and when

1 It is CERTAIN that disputation about the faith is licit, as all concede with D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 11. dub. 1., where he says: disputation about the things of the faith is licit for their defense; for so the Holy Fathers also disputed, and Act. 6. et 7. Stephen: and Act. 9. Paul with the Jews.

CERTUM est, licitam esse disputationem de fide, ut omnes concedunt cum D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 11. dub. 1. ubi ait; licere disputationem de rebus fidei ad defensionem, sic enim et SS. PP. disputarunt, et Act. 6. et 7. Stephanus: et Act. 9. Paulus cum Iudaeis.

2 But it is ILICIT to dispute so that by reasons and arguments we attain something above reason, or that the faith, already sufficiently proposed, be tested by way of argument. So also D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 7., Bannes ibi, Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 10., Becan. cap. 15. quaest. 7., Suarez disp. 20. sect. 1., Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 8. Nevertheless it will not be illicit for him to whom the faith has not yet been sufficiently proposed. So Suarez, Sanchez, Fagundez, and Valencia disp. 1. quaest. 4. p. 1.

ILLICITUM vero ait, disputare, ut rationibus, et argumentis assequamur aliquid supra rationem, vel ut experiatur fidem satis editam, arguendo. Ita etiam D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 7. Bannes ibi, Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 10. Becan. cap. 15. quaest. 7. Suarez disp. 20. sect. 1. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 8. Non erit tamen illicitum illi, cui nondum satis proposita est fides. Ita Suarez, Sanchez, Fagundez, et Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 4. p. 1.

3 OBSERVE that it is forbidden to Laymen to dispute about the faith, by the decree of Alexander, cap. quicunque §. Inhibemus, etc., and it is defined there: Whoever acts against this shall be entangled in the snare of excommunication, where even learned Laymen are understood, as the Doctors commonly say, fourteen of whom are cited by Fagundez cap. 8.; although Cajetanus, and Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 7., Petrus Ledefma 2. Tom. tract. 1. cap. 5. exclude the learned, since also Albertus Pighius Comes, and Ioannes Echius, and Henry VIII. King of England, while he was a Catholic, disputed against Luther, and were praised; Fulsensis adds lib. 3. cap. 6. that this is licit to an erudite Layman, if necessity or great utility is present.

OBSERVA, Laicis vetitum esse disputare de fide, decreto Alexandri, cap. quicunque §. Inhibemus, etc. et definitur: Qui contra fecerit, excommunicationis laqueo innodetur, ubi intelliguntur etiam docti Laici, ut dicunt communiter Doctores, e quibus quatuordecim afferuntur a Fagundez cap. 8. licet Caietanus, et Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 7. Petrus Ledefma 2. Tom. tract. 1. cap. 5. doctos excludant, quia etiam Albertus Pighius Comes, et Ioannes Echius, et Henricus VIII. Rex Angliae, cum erat Catholicus, contra Lutherum disputarunt, et fuere laudati; Addit Fulsensis lib. 3. cap. 6. id licere Laïco erudito, si necessitas vel magna utilitas adsit.

Question XVIII: Whether faith resides in the intellect

1 It is the most certain assertion among all Theologians that faith is in the intellect as its proximate subject, as Valentia notes quaest. 6. p. 2., Caspensis disp. 4. sect. 1., Tanner disp. 1. quaest. 6. num. 8. The Seraphic Doctor, probing the nature and acts of faith more acutely, does not at once concede that Faith exists in the intellect alone.

EST apud omnes Theologos certissima assertio, fidem esse in intellectu, tanquam subiecto proximo, ut advertit Valentia quaest. 6. p. 2. Caspensis disp. 4. sect. 1. Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 6. num. 8. Seraphicus perscrutans acutius fidei naturam, et actus, non statim concedit, Fidem in intellectu solo existere.

2 THEREFORE he sets out three opinions on this matter.

PONIT igitur tres opiniones de hac re.

3 THE FIRST is that faith is in the speculative intellect. So D. Thomas quaest. 4. art. 2. and Tanner disp. 1. quaest. 6. dub. 2.

PRIMA est, fidem esse in intellectu speculativo. Ita D. Thomas quaest. 4. art. 2. et Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 6. dub. 2.

4 IT IS PROVED first. The speculative intellect is that which tends to the true, under the aspect of the true: Now faith makes one believe the articles under the aspect of the true, not because they are good; for thus one believes the damnation of the wicked just as one believes the clarification of the good.

PROBATUR primo. Intellectus speculativus est ille, qui tendit in verum, sub ratione veri: At fides facit credere articulos sub ratione veri, non quia boni, ita enim credit quis damnationem malorum; sicut clarificationem bonorum.

5 IT IS PROVED second. Diverse virtues have diverse objects; but Charity, which is a virtue distinct from faith, as the Apostle says 1 Corinth. 13., tends to God as good: Therefore faith does not tend to him under this aspect of good, but tends under the aspect of the first truth speaking and revealing, as I showed quaest. 2. Therefore Faith regards its object as true; but this belongs to the speculative intellect: Therefore.

PROBATUR secundo. Diversarum virtutum sunt diversa obiecta, sed Charitas, quae est virtus, diversa a fide, ut ait Apostolus prima Corinth. 13. tendit in Deum, ut bonum: Ergo fides non tendit in eum sub hac ratione boni, tendit autem sub ratione primae veritatis dicentis, et revelantis, ut ostendi quaest. 2. Ergo Fides respicit suum obiectum, ut verum, sed hoc est intellectus speculativus: Ergo.

6 ANOTHER is the opinion which asserts that faith is in the Intellect, without defining whether in the speculative or the practical; and this is the common one. Another says it is in the Intellect eminently: so each of Cajetan and Aragon here, Valentia quaest. 4. p. 2., Suarez tom. 1. de Relig. lib. 1. cap. 2.

ALIA est sententia, quae asserit, fidem esse in Intellectu, non definiens: an speculativo, vel practico, et haec est communis. Alia dicit esse in Intellectu eminenter: ita uterque Caiet. et Arag hic, Valent quaest. 4. p. 2. Suar. tom. 1. de Relig. lib. 1. cap. 2.

7 The former opinion is PROVED from the foundations laid by S. Thomas out of D. Augustine cap. 2. de praedest. Sanctorum, where he says: To believe is to think with assent. That this is faith he says in Tract. 40. in Ioan., and serm. 14. de verb. Apost., and 4. de CIVI. cap. 20.

PROBATUR prior opinio a S. Doct. in fundamentis ex D. August. cap. 2. de praedest. Sanctorum; ubi ait: Credere, est cogitare cum assensione. Hanc esse fidem ait: Tract. 40. in Ioan. et serm. 14. de verb. Apost. et 4. de CIVI. cap. 20.

8 THEN he proves it from the Gloss on Rom. 10., which is S. Gregory's lib. 1., for that Gloss, expounding the words Fides ex auditu, says: It gives understanding, while it illuminates the mind concerning the things heard. So Cyril lib. 11. Ioan. cap. 16., and Cyril of Jerusalem Cat. 5.

DEINDE id probat ex Glossa ad Rom. 10. quae est S. Gregorii lib. 1. exponens enim illa verba: Fides ex auditu ait: Dat intellectum, dum de auditis mentem illustrat. Sic Cyrill. lib. 11. Ioan. cap. 16. et Cyrill. Hier. Cat. 5.

9 IT IS PROVED third from S. Thomas. The Theological Virtues are for reforming the image with respect to the powers, the cognitive and the appetitive: But the appetitive is reformed with respect to the concupiscible by charity, and with respect to the irascible by Faith: Therefore faith presides over the cognitive.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. Virtutes Theologicae sunt ad reformandam imaginem quoad potentias, Cognitivam, et Affectivam: Sed affectiva reformatur quoad concupiscibilem a charitate, et quoad irascibilem a Fide: Ergo fides praeficit cognitivam.

10 IT IS PROVED fourth. In the same faculty there is both a gratuitous virtue and the dower that succeeds it in the fatherland. But the vision, which succeeds faith, is in the cognitive power, as is evident: Therefore so is Faith.

PROBATUR quarto. In eadem facultate est virtus gratuita, et dos illi succedens in patria. Sed visio, quae succedit fidei est in potentia cognitiva, ut patet: Ergo et Fides.

11 IT IS PROVED from S. Thomas fifth. A virtue is in that power of the soul as in a subject, around whose act it unfolds and removes the difficulty in operating; for a habit is placed in that power whose work it enables; but by faith the intellect is captured into obedience to Christ: Therefore faith expedites the act of the intellective power itself.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. quinto. In ea potentia animae est virtus, tanquam in subiecto, circa cuius actum explicat, et tollit difficultatem in operando; habitus enim in ea potentia collocatur, ad cuius opus habilitat, sed per fidem captivatur intellectus in obsequium Christi: Ergo fides expedit actum ipsius potentiae intellectivae.

12 THE THIRD opinion is that Faith is in the practical intellect.

TERTIA opinio est, Fidem esse in intellectu Practico.

13 But S. Thomas observes out of Aristotle 2. de anima, cap. de movent. et. 49. that the speculative intellect becomes practical by extension. Now it happens in three ways that the intellect is extended: either by its conjunction with the affection by which it is inclined; or by the conjunction of itself with the affection to which it inclines; or by its conjunction with the operation which it directs. But in all these ways it happens that faith is placed in the extended, or practical, intellect, according to the various states of faith itself. For faith simply so called, whether formed or unformed, which makes a man believe God in things he does not see, is in the intellect itself insofar as it is inclined by the will itself; for he would not believe unless he willed. But formed faith, by which one believes in God, is in the intellect itself insofar as it inclines the affection. For one to believe in God through formed faith, it is necessary that he tend to him by loving, as is had in the text. But perfect faith, insofar as it operates through love, is in the intellect inasmuch as, through the medium of affection, it directs the work.

Observat autem S. Doct. ex Aristotele 2. de anima, cap. de movent. et. 49. Intellectum speculativum extensione fieri practicum. Contingit autem tripliciter intellectum extendi, vel per coniunctionem cum affectione, a qua inclinatur. Vel per coniunctionem sui cum affectione, ad quam inclinat. Vel per coniunctionem sui ad operationem, quam dirigit:

> Omnibus autem his modis contingit, fidem poni in intellectu extenso, sive practico, secundum varios ipsius fidei status. Nam fides simpliciter dicta, sive formata, sive informis, quae facit hominem credere Deo in his, quae non videt, est in ipso intellectu in quantum inclinatur ab ipsa voluntate; non enim crederet, nisi vellet. Fides autem formata, qua quis credit in Deum, est in ipso intellectu, in quantum inclinat affectum. Ad hoc enim ut quis credat in Deum per fidem formatam, oportet ut in ipsum amando tendat, secundum quod habetur in littera. Fides autem perfecta, in quantum operans per dilectionem, est in intellectu, quatenus, mediante affectu, dirigit opus.

14 The FIRST reason, however, is from Aristotle and Tully, who say that the virtues are in practical intelligence.

> RATIO autem prima est ex Aristotele, et Tullio, dicentibus, Virtutes esse in intelligentia practica.

15 The SECOND reason is. A habit about which there is praise or blame is voluntary: But about faith there is praise: Therefore.

> SECUNDA ratio est. Habitus, circa quem est laus, aut vituperatio, est voluntarius: Sed circa fidem est laus: Ergo.

16 The LAST opinion is that faith is materially in the cognitive power; but formally in the appetitive, because the formal ratio of virtue is to make the act laudable. For virtue is defined by D. Augustine de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 15: Est amor ordinatus — it is ordered love. This is the opinion of Hugh lib. de Sacramentis.

> ULTIMA opinio est, fidem esse in potentia cognitiva materialiter; in affectiva vero formaliter, quia ratio formalis virtutis est facere laudabilem actum. Virtus enim definitur a D. August. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 15. Est amor ordinatus. Haec est sententia Hugonis lib. de Sacramentis.

17 SECOND, it is proved from S. Thomas. No virtue is in a power simpliciter which can be coerced; but the cognitive power can be coerced: Therefore.

> SECUNDO probatur a S. Doct. Nulla virtus est in potentia simpliciter, quae possit cogi; sed potentia cognitiva potest cogi: Ergo.

18 THIRD it is proved. Virtue is formally in that power which is the principle of the act and operation due to that virtue; but no one assents to the truth not seen unless because he wills: Therefore if the principle of the act of seeing is from the will, faith will be in it formally.

> TERTIO probatur. In illa potentia est virtus formaliter, quae est principium actus, et operationis, illi virtuti debitae; sed nullus assentit veritati non visae, nisi quia vult: Ergo si principium actus videndi est a voluntate, erit fides in ea formaliter.

19 S. Thomas OBSERVES, for laying bare the truth: virtue is a habit according to which praise and merit consist, just as a bad habit and fault are those according to which blame consists, as all the Moralists teach. Whence it follows that it must be placed in that power which is the principle of the first laudable work; but this power is free choice. Indeed it is necessary that the habit be placed in that subject in which there is difficulty for acts; but this is the intellective power with respect to faith, which is ordered to capturing the intellect into obedience to Christ, to assenting to the first truth; and in this way it is in the speculative intellect; but since the intellect is inclined to believe the first truth not according to its own judgment, but according to the command of the will, therefore faith does not regard the intellect according to its purely speculative being, but as extended and inclined by affection. And since the very willing to believe is essential to faith, hence it is that that habit regards the affection as well.

> OBSERVAT S. Doct. ad veritatem enucleandam; Virtutem esse habitum, secundum quem consistit laus, et meritum; sicut habitus malus, et culpa, secundum quae consistit vituperatio, ut docent omnes Morales. Quo fit, ut in ea potentia sit ponenda, quae est principium primi operis laudabilis; haec autem potentia est liberum arbitrium. Enim vero necesse est, habitum in eo subiecto poni, in quo est difficultas ad actus; haec autem est potentia intellectiva, respectu fidei, quae ordinat ad captivandum intellectum in obsequium Christi, ad assentiendum primae veritati, et hoc pacto est in intellectu speculativo; sed quoniam intellectus inclinatur ad credendum ipsi veritati primae non secundum suum iudicium; sed secundum voluntatis imperium; ideo fides non respicit intellectum secundum esse pure speculativum; sed prout extensus ab affectu inclinatur. Et quoniam ipsum velle credere, est essentiale fidei; hinc est quod habitus ille respicit etiam affectum.

20 But that these things may be perceived, certain doctrines and questions must be discussed. First must be deferred that question: Whether every assent of faith depends necessarily on the will.

> Ut autem haec percipiantur, discutiendae sunt aliquae doctrinae et quaestiones. Primo differenda est illa quaestio: An omnis fidei assensus necessario a voluntate dependeat.

21 For the NOMINALES, whom some of the Recentiores follow, deny it.

> NOMINALES enim, quos sequuntur aliqui Recentiores, id negant.

22 The second opinion is that of D. Bonaventure here, whom the Thomists follow, affirming that the first assent of faith depends on the will commanding explicitly; but that the following acts are from the will not refusing, but virtually and freely willing. It also seems to be Scotus's 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2.

> Secunda vero sententia est D. Bonav. hic, quem sequuntur Thomistae, affirmans, primum assensum fidei pendere a voluntate, imperante explicite; sequentes vero actus esse a voluntate non renuente, sed virtualiter volente libere. Videtur etiam Scoti 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2.

23 But that D. Bonaventure so understood it is evident from the body of questions, where he places the habit of faith in the intellect to remove the intellect's difficulties, with the will moving; whence it comes about that, the difficulties removed and the intellect captured, the explicit will is not necessary.

> Hoc autem ita sensisse D. Bonaventuram constat e corpore quaestioniss*, ubi habitum fidei in intellectu ponit ad removendas intellectus difficultates; voluntate movente, quo fit, ut remotis difficultatibus, et intellectu captivato, non sit necessaria voluntas explicita.*

24 But this dependence is proved by D. Bonaventure from D. Augustine above, alluding to Rom. 10. Corde creditur ad iustitiam. The same I shall soon prove from D. Augustine.

> PROBATUR vero haec dependentia a D. Bonav. ex D. August. supra, alludente ad id Rom. 10. Corde creditur ad iustitiam. Idem e D. August. mox probabo.

25 S. Thomas adds, to confirm this, serm. 1. de pluribus Martyribus, and Act. 15. Fide purificans corda. But it is proved by him there, and in this quaest. arg. ultimo, because the object proposed obscurely and in an enigma, such as the object of faith is, is not sufficient to determine the intellect not yet convicted; nor is the intellect determinative of itself, being a free power: Therefore it needs the extrinsic command of the will determining it to believe what it does not see, but which is obscure to it, as Scotus observes above, as do Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 8. num. 237. and Coninck disp. 13. dub. 4., who use this reasoning.

> Addit S. Doct. ad hoc confirmandum serm. 1. de pluribus Martyribus, id Act. 15. Fide purificans corda. Probatut vero ab eo ibi, et in hac quaest. arg. ultimo, quia obiectum obscure, et in aenigmate propositum, quale est obiectum fidei, non est sufficiens ad determinandum intellectum, non adhuc convictum; neque intellectus est sui determinativus, cum potentia libera : Ergo eget extrinseco voluntatis imperio determinantis ad credendum, quod non videt, sed est ei obscurum, ut observat etiam Scotus supra, Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 8. num. 237. et Coninch. disp. 13. dub. 4. qui hac ratione utuntur.

26 It is proved third from S. Thomas fundamento 2. et argumento 4. ad oppositum, where he brings forward that saying of D. Augustine, Tract. 26. in Ioan.: Multa potest facere homo, non volens; credere autem non potest, nisi volens — Man can do many things unwillingly; but he cannot believe unless he wills. Which he puts together in the body: That which is the disposition of virtue to the supernatural gifts, and to grace and merit, is from the will: Such is the act of faith, for by its act sinners are disposed to justice, while, stirred by divine grace, conceiving faith from hearing, they are freely moved toward God, believing that the things revealed are true, as the Council of Trent says sess. 6. cap. 6. The major is proved; for since such things are laudable, they are from a power capable of praise, which is free; for this is the object of praise, inasmuch as it freely performs studious acts. D. Augustine has the same in de spir. et litt. cap. 35.

> Probatur tertio a S. Doct. fundamento 2. et argumento 4. ad oppositum, ubi affert illud D. August. effatum, Tract. 26. in Ioan. Multa potest facere homo, non volens; credere autem non potest, nisi volens; Quae in corpore componit : Id, quod est dispositio virtutis ad supernaturalia dona, et gratiam, ac meritum, est a voluntate : Talis est actus fidei, per eius enim actum disponuntur peccatores ad iustitiam, dum excitati divina gratia, fidem ex auditu concipientes, libere moventur in Deum, credentes, vera esse, quae revelata sunt, ut ait Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. Maior probatur; nam cum talia sint laudabilia, sunt a potentia capaci laudis, quae est libera; haec enim est obiectum laudis, quatenus libere operatur actus studiosos. Eadem habet D. August. de spir. et litt. cap. 35.

27 It is confirmed from the Council of Orange cap. 5., where it teaches that affectum credendi, esse initium fidei, quo in eum credimus, qui iustificat impium — the affection of believing is the beginning of faith, by which we believe in him who justifies the ungodly. The reason is, as D. Bonaventure says in corpore, that, since it directs to the supernatural work of congruous justification, as S. Thomas taught 1. dist. 41. quaest. 1. et in 4. dist. 15. p. 1. quaest. 5., it must also be from the will, even mediately, with respect to merit; for God did not justify you without you. The same is gathered from the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 5. et 6.

> Confirmatur ex Concilio Araus. cap. 5. ubi docet, affectum credendi, esse initium fidei, quo in eum credimus, qui iustificat impium : Ratio est, ut ait D. Bonan. in corpore, quia, cum dirigat ad opus supernaturale iustificationis de congruo, ut docuit S. Doct. 1. dist. 41. quaest. 1. et in 4. dist. 15. p. 1. quaest. 5. etiam mediate ad meritum debet esse a voluntate; non enim Deus iustificavit te, sine te. Idem colligitur e Concil. Trid. sess. 6. cap. 5. et 6.

28 Then I say that, speaking regularly, the will determines the intellect in the assent of faith, not only with respect to exercise, but also with respect to the specification of the act. It is the opinion of S. Bonaventure here, and the common one, as with Coninck cit., Arendt 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2., Poncius disp. 27. quaest. 2., Mastrius disp 6. num. 239., Tanner num. 9., Albertinus T. 1. princ. 3. coroll. 5., Bouëtius dem. 2. Symb. art. 6.

Deinde dico, regulariter loquendo, voluntatem in assensu fidei determinare intellectum, non solum ad exercitium, sed etiam quoad specificationem actus. Est sententia S. Bonau. hic, et communis apud Coninch. cit. Aretinum 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. Poncium disp. 27. quaest. 2. Mastrium disp 6. num. 239. Tannerum num. 9. Albertinum T. 1. princ. 3. coroll. 5. Bouëtium dem. 2. Symb. art. 6.

29 It is proved from S. Thomas in corpore, et argumento ultimo, because regularly men are not moved to believe the articles so as to be determined to the species of act concerning what they believe about divine truth; for some believe the pastors or parents teaching them, which motive does not suffice for the specification of the act. I said regularly, because the motives of authority and revelation can be so firm that it need not be determined by the command of the will to explicit specification, but only to exercise, since it is not yet of such evidence as to compel exercise.

Probatur a S. Doct. in corpore, et argumento ultimo, Quia regulariter non moventur homines ad credendum articulis, ut determinentur ad speciem actus circa id, quod credunt de divina veritate; aliqui enim credunt Pastoribus, vel parentibus docentibus, quod motivum non sufficit ad specificationem actus. Dixi regulariter, quia possunt motiva authoritatis, revelationisque adeo constare, ut non egeat ex imperio voluntatis determinari ad specificationem explicite, sed solum ad exercitium, cum adhuc non sit tantae evidentiae, ut cogat ad exercitium.

30 I say third, that the believer, already grounded in faith, does not need in each individual act the command of the will in order to assent, but only in order to be applied to thinking about the things of faith. So Suarez disp. 6. sect. 7., and we often experience this; unless you say with Arriaga disp. 7. sect. 1. that the will only makes obedience easier to find in the intellect, while yet always commanding.

Dico tertio, fidelem, in fide iam fundatum, non egere in singulis actibus imperio voluntatis, ut assentatur, sed solum, ut applicetur ad cogitandum de rebus fidei. Ita Suarez disp. 6. sect. 7. et hoc saepe experimur; nisi dicas cum Arriaga disp. 7. sect. 1. solum faciliorem invenire voluntatem in intellectu obedientiam; semper tamen imperare.

31 You will object. The will is not occupied with the true, and accordingly it belongs to the intellect to determine itself concerning its proper object.

32 It is answered, that the motives of credibility are not such as to have absolute force of determining, but only dictate that they should prudently be assented to; but it belongs to the will to command that it obey; and in this the adversaries also agree, who for the assent of faith require at least that the will not resist. Therefore the command of the will is required extrinsically, moving the intellect. For many reject the faith, as is said Act. 13.; nor does anyone believe unwillingly, as D. Augustine says de spir. et litt. cit. 31. et tract. 26. in Ioan., noting that: Credere non poterant, and lib. 1. ad Simpl. quaest. 2. et contra. 2. epist. Pel. cap. 19.; Cyril of Jerusalem Procat.; Chrysostom homil. 34. in cap. 13. ad Hebr.; and D. Gaudencius, Bishop of Brescia tract. 6. Exodi.

Respondetur, motiva credibilitatis non esse talia, ut absolutam vim determinandi habeant, sed solum dictant, prudenter eis assentiendum; spectat vero ad voluntatem imperare, ut obsequatur; et in hoc consentiunt etiam adversarii, qui ad assensum fidei exigunt saltem non contranitentiam voluntatis. Requiritur ergo imperium voluntatis extrinsecus, inducens intellectum. Multi enim repellunt fidem, ut dicitur Act. 13. nec nolens credit quisquam, ut ait D. August. de spir. et litt. cit. 31. et tract. 26. in Ioan. notans id : Credere non poterant, et lib. 1. ad Simpl. quaest. 2. et contra. 2. epist. Pel. cap. 19. Cyrill. Hier. Procat. Chrysost. homil. 34. in cap. 13. ad Hebr. et D. Gaudentius Brixiae Episcopus tract. 6. Exodi.

33 Hence arises the question: Whether the pious affection of belief is from faith, and therefore also resides in the will; or whether there is in it another habit for commanding the acts of faith.

Hinc oritur quaestio : An pia credulitatis affectio sit a fide; et ideo resideat etiam in voluntate; an detur ad id alius in ea habitus, ad actus fidei imperandos.

34 Scotus in 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2., with the followers of his School, seems to deny that any habit is required, especially a supernatural one, but that the natural command of the will suffices; because, the supernatural truth having been known, the will can move the intellect instructed by habit.

Scotus in 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. cum asseclis suae Scholae videtur negare, requiri aliquem habitum, maxime supernaturalem, sed sufficere imperium naturale voluntatis, quia cognito vero supernaturali, potest voluntas movere intellectum, habitu instructum.

35 The second, opposite opinion is that some habit is required. But these are divided. For some will this habit to be the virtue of obedience; others, studiousness; others say it is a peculiar habit inclining to these acts. So Suarez, Arriaga, Coninck, and the other Recentiores.

Secunda sententia opposita est, requiri aliquem habitum. Sed hi dividuntur. Aliqui enim volunt, hunc habitum esse virtutem obedientiae : Alii studiositatem : Alii dicunt esse peculiarem habitum, ad hos actus inclinantem. Ita Suarez, Arriaga, Coninch. et caeteri Recentiores.

36 The opinion of D. Bonaventure is that the habit of faith itself supplies this. So in ultimo argumento, et in corpore Alens. 3. p. quaest. 66. memb. 8.

Sententia D. Bonau. est, habitum fidei hoc ipsum praestare. Ita in ultimo argumento, et in corpore Alens. 3. p. quaest. 66. memb. 8.

37 We must suppose that affection of the will for believing to be supernatural. So the Council of Orange declares 2. can. 2. 5. et 6., where it defines that the pious affection of belief, which it calls the beginning of faith, is a gift of the grace of God. And although can. 5. speaks of the first act of converts to faith, nevertheless in can. 6. it speaks of all, inasmuch as for all the acts of the virtues it teaches that a gratuitous will is presupposed, and preventing aid is required, in order to justification and merit. And the Council of Trent defines the same sess. 6. cap. 6., where it teaches that man is freely moved by the grace of God to faith. Nor does Scotus refuse it, but only says that, by a natural act of the will's impulse, one can apply oneself to considering the matter of faith, and afterwards, by the infused habit, exercise the act of believing without another motion of the will, as Mastrius observes disp. 6. num. 265. The Council of Toledo 4. cap. 55. says the same with us, as related by Gratian cap. de Iudaeis, dist. 45.

Supponere debemus, affectum illum voluntatis ad credendum, esse supernaturalem. Ita declarat Concil. Araus. 2. can. 2. 5. et 6. ubi definit, pium credulitatis affectum, quem initium fidei vocat, esse donum gratiae Dei. Et quamvis can. 5. loquatur de primo actu conversorum ad fidem; tamen in can. 6. loquitur de omnibus; quatenus ad omnes actus virtutum docet praerequiri voluntatem gratuitam, ac requiri auxilium praeveniens, in ordine ad iustificationem, et meritum. Et idipsum definit C. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. ubi docet, hominem ex gratia Dei libere moveri ad fidem. Neque Scotus renuit, sed solum ait, per actum naturalem impetii voluntatis posse se applicare ad considerandum in materia fidei, et postea per habitum infusum exercere actum credendi, sine alia motione voluntatis, ut observat Mastrius disp. 6. num. 265. Idem nobiscum ait C. Tol. 4. cap. 55. relatom a Gratian. cap. de Iudaeis, dist. 45.

38 But that this pious affection of believing ought to be supernatural is proved by D. Bonaventure in 2. dist. 28. art. 2. quaest. 1. fundamento 3. A disposition must be proportioned to the form to which it disposes; for a disposition is in some way the cause of the form. Since therefore faith is a disposition to grace and holiness, inasmuch as it is free, by the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 6. et 7., and is not formally free except by the command of the will, it follows that the natural command of the will is not a proportioned disposition.

Cur autem haec pia credendi affectio debeat esse supernaturalis, probatur a D. Bonau. in 2. dist. 28. art. 2. quaest. 1. fundamento 3. Dispositio debet proportionari formae, ad quam disponit : est enim dispositio aliquo modo causa formae. Cum igitur fides sit dispositio ad gratiam, et sanctitatem, quatenus libera est, ex Concilio Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. et 7. neque sit libera formaliter, nisi ex voluntatis imperio; sequitur, imperium voluntatis naturale, non esse dispositionem proportionatam.

39 I say therefore that the habit of faith gives the will its virtue, that it may command its acts to the intellect.

Dico igitur, Fidei habitum dare virtutem voluntati, ut imperet suos actus intellectui.

40 It is proved 1. from S. Thomas out of D. Augustine loc. cit., Hugh lib. 1. de Sacram p. 10. cap. 2. He confirms it from the definition of faith given Hebr. 11.: Est sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium — the substance of things to be hoped for, the evidence of things that appear not — where substantia, or the true foundation, regards the intellect; and rerum sperandarum, for which affection is required.

Probatur 1. a S. Doct. ex D. August. loc. cit. Hugone lib. 1. de Sacram p. 10. cap. 2. Confirmat ex definitione fidei lata Hebr. 11. Est sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium, ubi ponitur substantia, seu fundamentum verificum, spectans ad intellectum; et rerum sperandarum, ad quod requiritur affectio.

41 It is proved second, because no habit is a virtue unless it rectifies the will: Therefore neither faith. It is confirmed by S. Thomas; for even prophecy illuminates the intellect concerning divine things, and yet is not a virtue, because the will does not cooperate in that illumination.

Probatur secundo, quia nullus habitus est virtus, nisi rectificet voluntatem : Ergo neque fides. Confirmatur a S. Doct. nam etiam prophetia illuminat intellectum ad divina, neque tamen est virtus; quia ad eam illuminationem non cooperatur voluntas.

42 You will object with Vulpes dispm. 33. art. 4., Mastrius disp. 6. num. 278.: A habit cannot operate outside the power in which it inheres, nor inhere in several powers; but faith is in the intellect: Therefore it cannot be also in the will, or, existing only in the intellect, operate also in the will. It is confirmed because faith regards God; but that habit by which it commands the will is the very created act of faith, or its uprightness, whence it cannot be from a Theological virtue.

Obiicies cum Vulpe dispm. 33. art. 4. Mastrio disp. 6. num. 278. Non potest habitus operari extra potentiam, in qua inhaeret, nec pluribus potentiis inhaerere; At fides est in intellectu : Ergo non potest esse etiam in voluntate, aut in solo existens intellectu, operari etiam in voluntate. Confirmatur, quia fides respicit Deum; at habitus ille, quo voluntati imperat, est actus ipse creatus fidei, seu honestas eius, unde non potest esse a virtute Theologica.

43 S. Bonaventure saw this argument well here and resolved it. He answers therefore that free choice embraces both appetite and reason, as D. Augustine teaches t. 2. de Trinit. cap. 8.; and therefore it is not inconvenient that every virtue which is placed in one of these powers be placed in free choice, insofar as it is virtue and the principle of merit.

> Hoc argumentum bene vidit, atque resolvit S. Bonan. hic. Respondet igitur, liberum arbitrium complecti appetitum, et rationem, ut docet D. August. t 2. de Trinit. cap. 8. et ideo non est inconveniens, quod quaelibet virtus, quae reponitur in una istarum potentiarum, reponatur in libero abitrio, secundum quod virtus est, et principium meriti.

44 Similarly. There is no inconvenience in positing one habit in reason and will, such that it regards one of those powers as to the material act, the other as to the formal. Thus the habit of science, as to the retention of species, regards memory; and, as to the facility of recollection, regards intelligence, and yet it is one simple habit. For although the powers are distinct, they are not really but formally distinct, and they are continued in one subject, by reason of which there can be in them a unity of property, just as one health is posited in many members of the body inwardly, and one uprightness in many outwardly. From these he draws the general rule about the subject of any virtue or vice. Similarly faith, insofar as it is a meritorious virtue, is in free choice; yet insofar as it is a habit rendering the power facile, it must be placed in the cognitive power, as Hugh teaches. Therefore by D. Augustine it is called: Amor ordinatus. From these the knot of the whole question is untied. Gather from what has been said that Calvin lies, 3. Instit. cap. 2., in saying that F. [faith] is mere knowledge: For assent is also required. See Bouërius loc citato.

> Similiter. Nullum est inconveniens, ponere, unum habitum esse in ratione, et voluntate; ita ut unam illarum potentiarum respiciat, quantum ad actum materialem: alteram, quoad formalem. Sic habitus scientiae, quoad retentionem specierum, respicit memoriam; et quod facilitatem convectionis, spectat ad intelligentiam, et tamen est unus simplex habitus. Quamvis enim potentiae distinctae sint; non tamen realiter, sed formaliter, et continuantur in uno subiecto, ratione cuius potest esse in eis unitas proprietatis, sicut una sanitas ponitur in multis membris corporis interius; et una honestas in multis exterius. Ex his elicit generalem regulam de subiecto virtutis cuiuscumque, vel vitii. Similiter fides, in quantum est virtus meritoria, est in libero arbitrio; tamen in quantum est habitus, reddens potentiam facilem, ponenda est in potentia cognitiva, ut docet Hugo. Ideo a D. August. dicitur: Amor ordinatus. Ex his totius quaestionis nodus solvitur. Collige ex dictis, mentiri Calvinum 3. Instit. cap. 2. F. dein esse meram notitiam: Exigitur enim etiam assensus. Vide Bouërium loc citato.

Question XIX: Whether faith is perfected by charity, as by its form

1 All Theologians in 3. dist. 23. together with the Master there, this having been stated, agree that Faith and the other Virtues are formed by charity; not indeed so that charity is the form of faith, either essential, as the soul is to man; or accidental, as whiteness to the Swan; for this is false, as the Saintly Doctor notes, argument 4. p. 1. with the solution added. For from things of different genera one thing does not come to be one by essence: but Faith and Charity are distinct virtues, as the Apostle has it, first Corinthians 13. Faith, Hope, Charity, these three remain. Therefore charity cannot inform Faith essentially: Nor accidentally, as the Saintly Doctor shows, ad 5. for faith, even unformed, is a virtue, abstracted even from charity, and although upon the arrival of charity and grace it is adorned, like colors by light (as the Saintly Doctor says in the body of the text), nevertheless it does not inhere in faith itself, which is not the subject of accidents, since it is a mere accident, and carries with it its potencies, and virtues, and accidents; but it comes to grace, like rain upon dry ground. Therefore charity is called the form of faith only metaphorically. See also Valencia disp. 1. question 4. p. 3. I shall treat this question again disp. 8. question 8.

> An Fides perficiatur per Charitatem, tanquam per formam.
> Omnes Theologi in 3. dist. 23. cum Magistro ibi, hoc effato consentiunt, Fidem, aliasque Virtutes a charitate formari; non quidem, ut charitas sit forma fidei, aut essentialis, ut anima homini; vel accidentalis, ut albedo Olori; hoc enim falsum est, ut advertit S. Doct. argumento 4. p. 1. addita solutione. Ex his enim, quae sunt diversi generis, non fit unum per essentiam: Fides autem, et Charitas sunt diversae virtutes, ut habet Apostolus prima Corinth. 13. Manent fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec. Igitur non potest esse, ut charitas informet essentialiter Fidem: Neque accidentaliter, ut ostendit S. Doct. ad 5. nam fides, etiam informis, est virtus, abstracta etiam charitate, et quamvis adveniente charitate, et gratia ornetur, veluti colores a luce (ut ait S. Doct. in corpore*) tamen non inhaeret ipsi fidei, quae non est subiectum accidentium, cum sit merum accidens, et habeat secum suas potentias, et virtutes, atque accidentia; sed advenit gratiae, sicuti pluvia terrae aridae. Igitur charitas dicitur forma fidei metaphorice tantum. Vide etiam Valentiam* disp. 1. quaest. 4. p. 3. Hanc quaestionem tractabo rursus disp. 8. quaest. 8.

2 I assert that faith is formed by charity, that is, perfected in ordination toward merit. For it directs its act rightly toward the ultimate end.

> Assero, fidem a charitate formari, idest, perfici in ordine ad meritum. Dirigit enim recte actum suum ad ultimum finem.

3 It is proved by St. Bonaventure first in 2. dist. 27. question 2. from first Corinthians 13. If I should have all faith, but have not charity, I am nothing.

> Probatur a S. Bonav. primo in 2. dist. 27. quaest. 2. ex prima Corinth. 13. Si habuero omnem fidem, charitatem autem non habuero, nihil sum.

4 Then in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. and art. 2. question 1. ad the arguments, and dist. 24. art. 2. question 2. ad arg. from the second of James. Faith without works is dead. And Opusc. on the seven gifts. On the gift of Understanding, cap. 1. from that Galat. 5. In Christ Jesus, neither does Circumcision avail anything: but Faith, which works through charity.

> Deinde in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. et art. 2. quaest. 1. ad argumenta*, et* dist. 24. art. 2. quaest. 2. ad arg. ex secundo Iacobi. Fides sine operibus mortua est. Et Opusc. de septem donis. De dono Intellectus, cap. 1. ex illo Galat. 5. In Christo Iesu, neque Circumcisio aliquid valet: sed Fides, quae per charitatem operatur.

5 It is proved secondly by the reasons of the Saintly Doctor. The first is. It is certain that faith is not lost through every mortal sin, as I shall show in the following question, as defined. Therefore there remains an unformed faith, that is, without that perfection by which faith was perfected for meriting: Therefore one restored to grace again has formed faith.

> Probatur secundo hic rationibus S. Doct. Prima est. Certum est, per omne peccatum mortale non amitti fidem, ut ostendam quaest. sequenti definitum. Ergo manet fides informis, idest sine ea perfectione, qua fides perficiebatur ad merendum: Ergo restitutus in gratia, rursus habet fidem formatam.

6 Second: Faith comes closer to grace, and charity, than nature does; But nature is perfected by grace; Therefore much more faith.

> Secunda: Magis accedit fides ad gratiam, et charitatem, quam natura; Sed natura per gratiam perficitur; Ergo multo magis fides.

7 The third reason is: An infused habit agrees more with grace, which is infused, than acquired habits do; but acquired habits are informed by the arrival of grace, which is evident because in their use and exercise man merits: Therefore much more the habit of unformed faith is formed by grace itself supervening.

> Tertia ratio est: Plus convenit habitus infusus cum gratia, quae est infusa, quam habitus acquisiti; sed habitus acquisiti per adventum gratiae informantur, quod patet, quia in eorum usu, et exercitio, homo meretur: Ergo multo magis habitus fidei informis formatur per ipsam gratiam supervenientem.

8 Fourth reason: Infused habits that remain in the sinner are no less vivified than merits are in justification: But these, having been deadened, revive: Therefore also THOSE.

> Quarta ratio: Non minus vivificantur habitus infusi, qui remanent in delinquente, quam merita in iustificatione: Sed haec mortificata reviviscunt: Ergo et ILLI.

9 Fifth reason: A habit is living is nothing other than that one can merit eternal life through it: but unformed faith, upon the arrival of charity, has everything necessary for merit: Therefore, if its act is meritorious unto eternal life, it is a sign that the habit has been formed. That it has everything necessary for merit is clear, since the work is of itself good, and right, and commanded by charity. Whence St. Augustine, 15. de Trinitate, cap. 18., speaking of charity, says: As much good as it is, without which no such good things lead anyone to eternal life — this is faith, and the others, of which Augustine asserted there, that they avail nothing without charity, as the Apostle says above.

> Quinta ratio: Nihil est aliud, habitum vivum esse, quam per illum vitam aeternam mereri posse: sed fides informis adveniente charitate habet omne, quod necessarium est ad meritum: Ergo, si actus eius est meritorius ad vitam aeternam, signum est, habitum esse formatum. Quod autem habeat omne, quod necessarium est ad meritum; clarum est, cum ipsum opus de se sit bonum, et rectum, et a charitate imperatum. Unde D. August. 15. de Trinitate, cap. 18. loquens de charitate ait: Quantum bonum est, sine quo ad aeternam vitam neminem bona tanta perducunt, hoc est fides, et alia, de quibus ibi August. asseruit, ea sine charitate nihil valere, ut ait Apostolus supra.

10 Sixth reason: Everything that is said to be dead from mere defect, or from the mere absence of something, upon that thing supervening is vivified; but unformed faith is said to be dead on account of the mere defect of grace, and of fruitful operation: Therefore upon these supervening it revives: But, when it revives, it is formed: Therefore unformed faith can become formed; and this is what is found in the Gloss upon that text of James 2. Faith without works is dead. Faith revives from works: Therefore from works it has life, and form.

> Sexta ratio: Omne illud, quod dicitur esse mortuum e solo defectu, seu e sola absentia alicuius, illo superveniente vivificatur; sed fides informis dicitur mortua ob solum defectum gratiae, et operationis fructuosae: Ergo ipsis supervenientibus reviviscit: Sed, cum reviviscit, formatur: Ergo fides informis potest fieri formata; et hoc est, quod habetur in Glossa super illud Iacobi 2. Fides sine operibus mortua est. Reviviscit ex operibus fides: Ergo ex operibus habet vitam, et formam.

11 Therefore the formation of faith by grace, and charity, denotes a twofold perfection supervening. The first in ordination toward meritorious works to be done. The second, because the act of faith, by the command of charity, is referred to the ultimate end, that is, insofar as one believes on account of God, as the highest good, the act of faith pertains to the same species of rectitude to which charity itself pertains, and accordingly it is of the same species as charity itself, with this difference however, that this rectitude is essential to charity itself; but it comes to faith as an extrinsic perfection, just as light comes to colors, making them luminous and attractive, and adorned; and just as Light together with colors does not make one composite by essence, but by a certain ordination; so neither from unformed faith and grace is there made one per se, but by a certain ordination, and relation to God. This is St. Bonaventure's with St. Thomas, question 4. art. 3., whom Valencia explains, question 4. p. 3.

> Igitur formatio fidei a gratia, et charitate, dicit perfectionem duplicem supervenientem. Prima in ordine ad opera meritoria facienda. Secunda, quia fidei actus per imperium charitatis refertur ad ultimum finem, hoc est, quatenus credit aliquis propter Deum, ut summum bonum, pertinet actus fidei ad eandem specie rectitudinem, ad quam ipsa charitas, ac proinde est eiusdem speciei, cuius est charitas ipsa, cum hoc tamen discrimine, quod rectitudo haec est essentialis ipsi charitati; at fidei advenit tanquam perfectio extrinseca, sicuti lux advenit, coloribus, eosque lucidos, venustosque reddit, et ornatos; et sicut Lux cum coloribus non facit unum compositum per essentiam, sed per ordinationem quandam; sic neque ex fide informi, et gratia, fit unum per se, sed per quandam ordinationem, et relationem ad Deum. Haec S. Bonan. cum D. Thom. quaest. 4. art. 3. quos explicat Valentia quaest. 4. p. 3.

12 You will object first. Of opposites the same account holds: But vice, and sin cannot be formed: Therefore neither can the opposite virtue be unformed, and consequently neither be formed.

> Obiicies primo. Oppositorum eadem est ratio: Sed vitium, et peccatum non potest esse formatum: Ergo nec virtus opposita potest esse informis, atque adeo, nec formari.

13 The Saintly Doctor answers first, that the opposition is not equal in this case; for formation is a good that needs more in order to come to be than deformation, which is an imperfection. Therefore it does not follow that, if sin cannot be formed, neither can the virtue fail, and be made unformed.

> Respondet primo. S. Doct. non esse in hoc parem oppositionem; nam formatio est bonum, quod pluribus indiget, ut fiat, quam deformatio, quae est imperfectio. Ideo non sequitur, quod, si peccatum non potest formari; neque virtus possit deficere, et reddi informis.

14 He answers secondly, that sin is taken in two ways: abstractly, and concretely. If it is taken abstractly, it is impossible that it can be formed, since it is mere malice; but if it is taken concretely, so that some act of virtue is said to be deformed from the end — as when, for example, someone abstains on account of vain glory, the abstinence itself is a fault in him — and in this way, by reason of the underlying act, or habit, it can be rectified by grace, if he abstains on account of God. In this way we say that a formed virtue becomes unformed, namely by reason of the underlying habit, since it is indifferent to the state of fault, and of grace; indeed, if it is an act of abstinence, it is good by its nature, and zealous.

> Respondet secundo, peccatum dupliciter accipi: abstracte, et concrete. Si abstracte accipiatur, impossibile est, quod possit formari, cum sit mera malitia; si autem accipiatur concrete, ut dicatur aliquis actus virtutis deformatus a fine; cum quis, v. g. abstinet ob inanem gloriam, ipsa abstinentia sit ei culpa; et hoc modo, ratione actus substrati, vel habitus, potest rectificari a gratia, si propter Deum abstineat. Hoc modo dicimus, virtutem formatam, fieri informem, ratione videlicet habitus substrati, quoniam indifferens est ad statum culpae, et gratiae; imo si est actus abstinentiae, est natura sua bonus, et studiosus.

15 You will object secondly. No dead work can become living; faith without grace is dead, from 2. James: Therefore. The major is proved; for a work done in sin is not vivified by grace.

> Obiicies secundo. Nullum opus mortuum potest fieri vivum; fides sine gratia est mortua, ex 2. Iacobi: Ergo. Maior probatur; nam opus factum in peccato, non vivificatur per gratiam.

16 The Saintly Doctor answers, that a dead act is not capable of life, because it has already passed away, nor does it remain in any root; but faith remains in the sinner, although unformed; therefore it can be vivified, beautified, and adorned by grace arriving; just as merits that have been deadened return unto a reward.

> Respondet S. Doct. actum mortuum non esse capacem vitae, quia iam transiit, nec manet in aliqua radice; at fides in peccatore manet, licet informis; ideo potest vivificari, venustari, et adornari per gratiam advenientem; sicuti redeunt ad praemium merita mortificata.

17 You will object thirdly. No accident can be altered: unformed faith is an accident: Therefore it cannot be altered; but that which is formed from unformed is altered: Therefore.

> Obiicies tertio. Nullum accidens potest alterari: fides informis est accidens: Ergo non potest alterari; sed quod ex informi formatur, alteratur: Ergo.

18 The Saintly Doctor answers, that the accident is not altered formally, but the subject is altered, and by reason of the subject also the accident; as when color is illuminated upon a wall.

> Respondet S. Doct. accidens non alterari formaliter, sed alterari subiectum, et ratione subiecti etiam accidens; ut cum color illuminatur in pariete.

19 You will object fourthly. From things diverse in genus one thing per essence cannot come to be; but formed faith denotes one habit per essence: Therefore it is impossible that it consist also of sanctifying grace, which is diverse in genus.

> Obiicies quarto. Ex his, quae sunt genere diversa, non potest fieri unum per essentiam; sed fides formata dicit habitum unum per essentiam: Ergo impossibile est, eam constare etiam ex gratia sanctificante, quae est genere diversa.

20 The Saintly Doctor answers, that from faith and grace there is not made one formal thing, but by ordination; just as when I say "illuminated color," I say two things, yet in the manner of one, because of this, that it is ordained to one act, namely to moving Sight; so also faith and grace denote one thing, insofar as they are ordained to a meritorious work.

> Respondet S. Doct. ex fide, et gratia non fieri unum formale, sed per ordinationem; sicuti cum dico, colorem illuminatum, dico duo, per modum tamen unius, propter hoc, quia ordinatur ad unum actum, nempe ad movendum Visum; sic et fides, et gratia dicunt unum, quatenus ordinantur ad opus meritorium.

21 You will object fifthly. Unformed faith is transmuted by the arrival of grace only accidentally: therefore if by the arrival of grace it is made formed, it accrues to faith, as it were accidentally, that it be formed; If therefore no genus accrues to the species; faith is not a species of virtue properly so called: But this is false: Therefore also that from which it follows, namely, that the habit of unformed faith is formed by the arrival of grace.

> Obiicies quinto. Fides informis per adventum gratiae transmutatur solum accidentaliter: ergo si per adventum gratiae efficitur formata, accidit fidei, ut sit formata; Si ergo nullum genus accidit speciei; fides non est species virtutis propriae dictae: Sed hoc est falsum: Ergo et illud, ex quo sequitur, videlicet, quod habitus fidei informis, per adventum gratiae formetur.

22 The Saintly Doctor answers, that an accidental transmutation in the genus of nature can be essential in the genus of morals, as is evident in acts, which by the mutation of some accidental circumstance change the moral being of virtue, or vice. Therefore also for faith, although it accrues to it, as it is a habit, to be formed by grace, or without it; nevertheless it is necessary and intrinsic to it in ordination toward acquiring merit, or, as it is the principle of merit: Moreover, unformed faith itself, even with grace set aside, is a habit of virtue, therefore it cannot be inferred that faith is not under its own genus of virtue.

> Respondet S. Doct. transmutationem accidentalem in genere naturae, posse esse essentialem in genere moris, ut patet in actibus, qui per mutationem alicuius circumstantiae accidentalis mutant esse morale virtutis, aut vitii. Igitur et fidei, licet accidat, prout est habitus, esse formatam gratia, vel sine ea; tamen est ei necessarium, et intrinsecum in ordine ad meritum acquirendum, seu, ut est principium meriti: Praeterea ipsa fides informis, etiam gratia circumscripta, est habitus virtutis, ideo non potest inferri, quod fides non sit sub proprio genere virtutis.

23 You will object sixthly. As the soul is infused into the body; so also grace into the soul; but the soul, arriving, carries with it its potencies: therefore also grace its habits of the virtues: therefore also formed faith: Therefore formed faith is not the same as that which was previously in the soul: therefore no faith that pre-exists unformed is informed.

> Obiicies sexto. Sicut infunditur anima in corpus; ita et gratia in animam; sed adveniens anima secum fert suas potentias: ergo et gratia suos habitus virtutum: ergo et fidem formatam: Ergo fides formata non est eadem cum illa, quae prius erat in anima: ergo non informatur aliqua fides, quae praeexisteret informis.

24 The Saintly Doctor answers, by denying the parity; for the virtues are not Potencies of grace, through which it operates, but they differ really, as he shows in 2. dist. 27. question 2. nor does grace come into the soul as the soul into the body with its potencies; for then, grace receding, the virtues would also recede, which is heretical. Furthermore the Saintly Doctor gives another, more fitting similitude. As rain watering the earth makes the herb germinate, but when it dries in the heat, the rain returning again does not make that herb germinate; but makes the germinated one grow green; so also grace carries with it the Virtues, but when these have dried up in the heat of mortal sin, the rain of grace returning again does not reproduce the infused virtues; but bathes them in verdure. That however the Seminaries of the virtues are in the soul, the Saintly Doctor proves from St. Augustine and Bernard. Therefore charity adorns the virtues, and gives them verdure for bearing fruit. For faith is thus called living, because it flowers, and yields the fruits of merit, and without charity it is without flowers, and buds, and thus is called dead, even if it be green in the root, in the manner in which plants in winter are said to be dead, as St. Bonaventure teaches, whom Caspens imitates, disp. 4 sect. 2. St. Gregory uses the same similitude, 6. Moral. cap. 8. cited in St. Bonaventure, sermon 3. Dom. 23. after Pentecost.

> Respondet S. Doct. negando paritatem; nam virtutes non sunt Potentiae gratiae, per quas operetur, sed differunt realiter, ut ostendit in 2. dist. 27. quaest. 2. neque venit gratia in animam, sicut anima in corpus cum suis potentiis; tunc enim recedente gratia, recederent et virtutes, quod est haereticum. Aliam porro similitudinem aptiorem dat S. Doct. Sicut pluvia rigans terram facit germinare herbam, hac vero aestu arescente, iterum rediens pluvia non facit germinare herbam illam; sed germinatam facit virescere; sic et gratia fert secum Virtutes, illis autem arescentibus ardore peccati mortalis, rursus rediens pluvia gratiae, non reproducit virtutes infusas; sed eas virore perfundit. Quod autem Seminaria virtutum sint in anima, probat S. Doct. ex D. August. et Bernardo. Igitur charitas exornat virtutes, datque eis virorem ad fructificandum. Sic enim dicitur fides viva, quia floret, et fructificat merita, et sine charitate est sine floribus, fondibus, et ita dicitur mortua, etiamsi in radice vireat, ad modum, quo plantae in hyeme dicuntur mortuae, ut docet S. Bonav. quem imitatur Caspens. disp. 4 sect. 2. eadem similitudine utitur D. Gregorius 6. Moral. cap. 8. apud D. Bonav. serm. 3. Dom. 23. post Pentecost.

Question XX: Whether it is certain that faith remains without charity

1 From what has been said it is clear that Faith remains without Charity. But this must be proved more deeply against the heretical sectaries, who mock that distinction of faith formed and unformed, as Luther and his followers do.

> An certum sit, FIDEM sine CHARITATE manere.
> Ex dictis liquet, manere Fidem sine Charitate. Id vero altius probandum contra haereticos sectarios, qui distinctionem illam fidei formatae, et informis, subsannant, ut Lutherus, et eius asseclae.

2 It is DEFINED, moreover, in C. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 15. et can. 28. that true Theological faith remains unformed in a sinner.

> DEFINITUM est autem in C. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 15. et can. 28. veram fidem Theologicam in peccatore manere informem.

3 It is PROVED first by D. Bonau. ad 12. Ioannis with those words: Nevertheless many even of the rulers believed in him: but they did not confess him; for they loved the glory of men more than the glory of God.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonau. ad 12. Ioannis illis verbis: Verumtamen, et ex Principibus multi crediderunt in eum: sed non confitebantur; dilexerunt enim magis gloriam hominum, quam gloriam Dei.

4 But S. Doct. OBSERVES that they had true faith, yet out of fear abandoned the confession due. He adds, however, that these men did not have perfect faith, which demands also the confession that is necessary. So D. August. tract. 54.

> OBSERVAT autem S. Doct. eos habuisse veram fidem, sed propter timorem dimisisse confessionem debitam. Addit vero, non habuisse hos perfectam fidem, quae exigit etiam necessariam confessionem. Ita D. August. tract. 54.

5 The adversaries RESPOND that these men did not have true faith, but a certain imperfect knowledge.

> RESPONDENT adversi, non habuisse istos veram fidem; sed notitiam imperfectam quandam.

6 TO THE CONTRARY; because in the same chapter he often uses the same phrase, and always means true faith: Many went away because of him, and believed in Jesus. Though he had done so many signs, they did not believe in him: that the word of Isaiah might be fulfilled: Lord, who hath believed our hearing? which passage of Isaiah Paul alleges Rom. 10. of justifying faith: I am come: that every one who believeth in me may not remain in darkness. Ioan. 12.

> CONTRA; quia in eodem capite, saepe eadem phrasi utitur, et semper veram fidem intelligit: Multi propter illum abibant, et credebant in Iesum. Cum tanta signa fecisset, non credebant in eum: ut sermo Isaiae impleretur: Domine, quis credidit auditui nostro, quem locum Isaiae allegat Paulus Rom. 10. de fide iustificante: Ego veni: ut omnis, qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat. Ioan. 12.

7 The faith of these men is said to be not right, because by their deeds they denied what they believed in their heart. Therefore he said to them cap. 5.: How can you believe, who receive glory from one another? As he expounds with D. August. serm. 3. post Pentec. Dom. 23.

> DICITUR vero fides horum non recta, quia factis negabant, quod corde credebant. Ideo eis dixit cap. 5. Quomodo potestis credere, qui gloriam ab invicem accipitis? Ut exponit cum D. August. serm. 3. post Pentec. Dom. 23.

8 It is PROVED secondly by D. Bonav. 3. dist. 25. dub. 4. ex 13. primae ad Corinth.: If I should have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, but have not charity, I am nothing.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonav. 3. dist. 25. dub. 4. ex 13. primae ad Corinth. Etsi habuero omnem fidem, ita ut montes transferam, charitatem autem non habuero, nihil sum.

9 Some RESPOND that the Apostle speaks of the faith of signs.

> RESPONDENT aliqui, loqui Apostolum de fide signorum.

10 TO THE CONTRARY: For the faith of signs is an effect of Christian faith, as is said at the end of Mark: He that believeth shall be saved. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name they shall cast out devils, etc. And cap. 11. ad Hebr., speaking of the faith by which the just man lives, enumerates the signs: the saints by faith conquered kingdoms, etc. stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, as S. Doct. runs through it at length serm. 1. de pluribus Martyribus. For this reason (he says) S. Bonav., for the same faith some were racked, sawn asunder, etc., namely the Martyrs, for the Christian, or Theological, faith. Therefore the faith of signs is an excellent Christian faith. Therefore the Apostle says: If I should have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, etc.

> CONTRA: Nam fides signorum est effectus fidei Christianae, ut dicitur Marci ultimo: Qui crediderit, salvus erit. Signa autem eos, qui crediderint, haec sequentur, In nomine meo daemonia eiicient, etc. Et cap. 11. ad Hebr. loquens de fide, ex qua iustus vivit, recenset signa: Sancti per fidem vicerunt regna, etc. obturaverunt ora Leonum, extinxerunt impetum ignis, ut late discurrit S. Doct. serm. 1. de pluribus Martyribus. Ideo enim (ait) S. Bonav. ob eandem fidem alii distenti sunt, secti sunt, etc. nempe Martyres, ob fidem Christianam, seu Theologicam. Igitur fides signorum est fides Christiana excellens. Ideo ait Apostolus: Etsi habuero omnem fidem, ita ut montes transferam, etc.

11 S. Doct. explains this more fully at those words, Lucae 17.: If you have faith like a grain of mustard seed, you shall say to this mulberry tree: be thou rooted up, and transplanted into the sea: and it shall obey you. But that it is the justifying Theological faith S. Doct. proves: for when Christ was urging works of piety, of charity, etc., of which works faith is the root, and when for those works the disciples confessed themselves weak, namely for always forgiving injuries; they said: Increase our faith; and they ask for faith as the primary gift, which the Apostle defines in Hebr. 11.: It is the substance of things to be hoped for, etc. And: Without faith it is impossible to please God. And which extends even to signs: the saints by faith conquered kingdoms, stopped the mouths of lions, etc.

> Id latius explicat S. Doct. ad ea verba, Lucae 17. Si habueritis fidem sicut granum sinapis, dicetis huic arbori Moro: eradicare, et transplantare in mare: et obediet vobis. Quod autem ea sit fides Theologica iustificans, probat S. Doct. nam cum Christus hortaretur ad opera pietatis, charitatis, etc. quorum operum radix est fides, cumque ad ea opera discipuli, infirmos se faterentur, nempe ad remittendas semper iniurias; dixerunt: Adauge nobis fidem, petunt autem fidem, tanquam donum primarium, quam Apostolus Hebr. 11. definit: Est sperandarum substantia rerum, etc. Et: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo. Et quae etiam ad signa extenditur: Sancti per fidem vicerunt regna, obturaverunt ora Leonum, etc.

12 At last the Apostle concludes: There remain faith, hope, Charity, these three: where he concludes that he is dealing with the Theological faith, which is the same as the faith of signs, as D. Bonav. notes in 3. dist. 36. quaest. quinta. And more clearly in the Diaeta tit. 5. cap. 1., and with him Boëtius demonstr. 2. Symb. 2. art. 3., and D. August. lib. 1. de Bapt. cap. 8. et de fide et oper. cap. 4., Hier. in Matth. lib. 2. cap. 13., Chrysost. serm. de Ava hem.,[1] Anselm. in cap. 13., here Cypr. de unit. Eccl., Basil. Reg. brev. cap. 179.

Tandem concludit Apostolus: Manent fides, spes, Charitas, tria haec: ubi concludit, se agere de fide Theologica, quae est eadem cum fide signorum, ut notat D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 36. quaest. quinta. Et clarius in Diaeta tit. 5. cap. 1. et cum eo Boëtius demonstr. 2. Symb. 2. art. 3. et D. August. lib. 1. de Bapt. cap. 8. et de fide et oper. cap. 4. Hier. in Matth. lib. 2. cap. 13. Chrysost. serm. de Ava hem. Anselm. in cap. 13. hic Cypr. de unit. Eccl. Basil. Reg. brev. cap. 179.

[13] They RESPOND secondly that the Apostle speaks, drawing the argument from the impossible, to show the necessity of charity, without which we should be nothing, even if we were Angels.

[14] BUT it is not an argument from the impossible; for to move mountains by faith is possible, as is clear in B. Gregory Thaumaturgus: to give away also all one's substance to the poor, to hand over one's body to Martyrdom, is not impossible: to speak even in all tongues, as the Apostles could, or those of Angels, unfolding the thoughts within, can come to pass, God granting.

AT non est argumentum ab impossibili; nam transferre fide montes, est possibile, ut constat in B. Gregorio Thaumaturgo: Erogare quoque omnem substantiam pauperibus, tradere corpus Martyrio, non est impossibile: Loqui etiam linguis omnibus, sicuti potuere Apostoli, vel Angelorum, exponendo intus suos conceptus, fieri potest, Deo donante.

[15] It is PROVED thirdly by S. Doct. at the aforesaid passage of Luke, from that Iacobi 2. where he took it upon himself to prove that faith without works exists, but does not justify: What shall it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but hath not works? Shall faith be able to save him? But that he speaks of true faith, not of the shadow of faith which Calvin dreams of in lib. 3. Inst. cap. 2., is proved by D. Bonav., because, speaking of Abraham, he says he was justified by works, with which faith cooperated: But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? Abraham our father, was he not justified by works, offering up his son Isaac upon the altar? Thou seest that faith cooperated with his works: and by his works faith was made perfect. Who will deny that Abraham had true faith? and he calls it dead without works. It is confirmed by the Fathers, who understood this passage of true faith: Hieron. ad Galat. in cap. 5., Chrysost. homil. 2. in Genes. et homil. 2. in epist. ad Philem., August. lib. 21. de civit. Dei, cap. 26. et Libro unico de baptismo, cap. 10., Cyrillus libro 10. in Ioannem, capite decimo octavo.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. ad praefatum locum Lucae ex illo Iacobi 2. ubi assumpsit probare, fidem sine operibus existere, sed non iustificare. Quid proderit fratres mei, si fidem quis dicat se habere, opera autem non habeat? numquid poterit fides salvare illum? Quod autem de vera fide loquatur, non de umbra fidei, quam somniat Calvinus lib. 3. Inst. cap. 2. probatur a D. Bonav. quia loquens de Abrahamo dicit, eum iustificatum ex operibus, quibus fides cooperata est: Vis autem scire o homo inanis, quoniam fides sine operibus mortua est? Abraham pater noster nonne ex operibus iustificatus est, offerens filium suum Isaac super altare? Vides quoniam fides cooperabatur operibus illius: et ex operibus illius fides consummata est. Fidem sane veram in Abrahamo quis negabit? eam vero sine operibus mortuam vocat. Confirmatur ex PP. qui hunc locum de vera fide intellexerunt, Hieron. ad Galat. in cap. 5. Chrysost. homil. 2. in Genes. et homil. 2. in epist. ad Philem. August. lib. 21. de civit. Dei, cap. 26. et Libro unico de baptismo, cap. 10. Cyrillus libro 10. in Ioannem, capite decimo octavo.

16 Calvin PRESSES first, because the Apostle says: What shall it profit, if a man say he hath faith, when he ought to have said: if he hath faith.

> INSTAT Calvinus primo, quia Apostolus ait: Quid proderit, si fidem quis dicat habere*, cum debuisset dicere: si fidem habeat.*

17 It is RESPONDED that the Apostle noted the boast of the wicked, who indeed have true faith, but without charity. Therefore he adds: Shall faith be able to save him? — therefore they are supposed to have faith, and to say this boastfully.

> RESPONDETUR*, Apostolum notasse iactantiam improborum, qui habent quidem veram fidem, sed sine charitate. Ideo subdit:* Numquid fides poterit salvare illum*, ergo supponuntur habere fidem, et id dicere iactanter.*

18 He presses secondly that that faith is called dead, and the faith of devils.

> Instat secundo, eam fidem vocari mortuam, et fidem daemonum.

19 S. Doct. RESPONDS in serm. 3. Dominic. 23. post Pentec. et in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. et art. 2. quaest. 1. ad argumenta, that it is true faith, as a lifeless body is a true body; and as water that does not move is called dead; yet it is still true water. Secondly, Faith is called dead through the defect of the extrinsic accidental form, and of the intrinsic one, in the order of meriting eternal life.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. serm. 3. Dominic. 23. post Pentec. et in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. et art. 2. quaest. 1. ad argumenta*, eam esse veram fidem, sicut corpus exanime, est verum corpus; et sicut aqua, quae non movetur, dicitur mortua; sed tamen est vera aqua. Secundo dicitur Fides mortua per defectum formae extrinsecae accidentalis, et intrinsecae in ordine ad merendum vitam aeternam.*

20 To that about the faith of devils, he responds in 3. dist. 23. quaest. 3. that the faith of devils is true on the side of the object, as D. August. notes loc. cit. de bapt. even if extorted, because against their will they believe those things to be true which we believe; while they see that those who have the faith of Christ, and answer to it with works, cannot be damned; for hence they are tormented into believing that our faith is true. And so they are not compared with us in the habit of faith, but in the object, or act of believing, as is clear.

> Ad illud de fide daemonum, respondet in 3. dist. 23. quaest. 3. fidem daemonum esse veram ex parte obiecti, ut notat D. August. loc. cit. de bapt. etiamsi extortam, eo quod inviti credant vera esse ea, quae nos credimus; dum vident, eos, qui fidem Christi habent, et operibus respondent, non posse damnari; hinc enim torquentur ad credendum, nostram fidem veram esse. Itaque non comparantur nobis in habitu fidei, sed in obiecto, seu actu credendi, ut constat.

21 It is PROVED fourthly by D. Bonav. 3. dist. 25. art. 1. quaest. 1. et 2. with the argument drawn from the Scriptures and from experience, which show that there are given some sinners who are nevertheless faithful, and strive for the faith. So Matth. 22. All came to the marriage. Matth. 25. The five faithful Virgins confessing: Lord, Lord, open to us, were rejected, because they lacked the lighted oil of charity; and in the judgment very many are condemned, not from defect of faith, but of works; although they knew, and believed, that these things are necessary and that by them obedience is rendered to Christ. So observe D. August. de fide, et oper. cap. 15. and other Fathers.

> PROBATUR quarto a D. Bonav. 3. dist. 25. art. 1. quaest. 1. et 2. argumento sumpto e Scripturis, et experimento, ostendentibus, dari aliquos peccatores, qui tamen sunt fideles, et pro fide certant. Sic Matth. 22. Omnes venerunt ad nuptias. Matth. 25. Quinque Virgines fideles confitentes Domine, Domine aperi nobis, reiectae sunt, quia oleo charitatis accenso carebant; et in iudicio damnantur plurimi, non ex defectu fidei, sed operum; cum tamen scirent, et crederent, ea necessaria esse et per ea obsequium praestari Christo. Sic observant D. August. de fide, et oper. cap. 15. et alii PP.

22 It is PROVED fifthly by S. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae cap. 23. ex P. P. Augustino de verbis Domini, serm. 61. et 15. de Trinitate, cap. 18. In 3. autem dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 1. he brings forward D. Augustine lib. de vera innocentia. The same has lib. 6. in Iulianum, cap. 117. Isidore de summo bono, lib. 2. cap. 2. The same assert Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 25., Cyprianus serm. de Zelo., Ambros. lib. 2. offic. cap. 2. et in Psal. 1., Hieronym. in 32. Hieremiae, and others in Valentia quaest. 4. p. 4., Bellarm. lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 15., where D. Bonav. argues with the same means.

PROBATUR quinto a S. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae cap. 23. ex P. P. Augustino de verbis Domini, serm. 61. et 15. de Trinitate, cap. 18. In 3. autem dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 1. affert D. Augustinum lib. de vera innocentia. Idem habet lib. 6. in Iulianum, cap. 117. Isidoro de summo bono, lib. 2. cap. 2. Idem asserunt Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 25. Cyprianus serm. de Zelo. Ambros. lib. 2. offic. cap. 2. et in Psal. 1. Hieronym. in 32. Hieremiae, et alii apud Valentiam quaest. 4. p. 4. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 15. ubi eisdem mediis D. Bonav. argumentatur.

23 It is PROVED by S. Doct. here. For that which is not perfected by another intrinsically, but comes to it extrinsically and freely, can stand without it: such is faith, which is perfected by charity extrinsically only, which comes freely from justification: Therefore: so also D. Thom. argues.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. hic. Nam id, quod non perficitur ab alio intrinsece, sed extrinsece advenit libere, potest stare sine illo: Talis est fides, quae extrinsece tantum perficitur a charitate, quae advenit libere ex iustificatione: Ergo: sic etiam D. Thom. arguit.

24 You OBJECT first with Calvin, that the assent of faith is an affection toward God, as we have it Rom. 10.: With the heart we believe unto justice.

OBIICIES primo cum Caluino, assensus fidei est affectus in Deum, ut habetur Rom. 10. Corde creditur ad iustitiam.

25 It is RESPONDED that by these Calvin is run through; for the Apostle wants the confession of the divinity and of the resurrection of Christ to be unto salvation, if it be made from the heart, not feignedly; but from true faith, which is the basis of their justice. So Chrysostom homil. 25. in 9. Matth.; and Augustine accords, tract. 26. in Ioan.

RESPONDETUR his confodi Caluinum; vult enim Apostolus, confessionem deitatis, et resurrectionis Christi, esse ad salutem, si ex corde non ficte fiat; sed ex vera fide, quae horum iustitiae est basis. Sic Chrysostomus homil. 25. in 9. Matth. accinit August. tract. 26. in Ioan.

26 You OBJECT secondly with some PP. saying that Faith without charity is not true faith.

OBIICIES secundo aliquos PP. dicentes, Fidem sine charitate, non esse veram fidem.

27 It is RESPONDED from D. Bonav. dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 1. that Faith is called not true in that sense, that is, imperfect, lacking its own operations for merit, as I shall say in the next quaest.

RESPONDETUR ex D. Bonav. dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 1. eo sensu vocari Fidem non veram, idest imperfectam, suis operationibus ad meritum carentem, ut dicam quaest. sequenti.

28 You OBJECT thirdly with the many passages of Scripture ascribing Justification to Faith Matth. 9. Lucae 8. Ioan. 3. Rom. 5. They press especially that passage of Luke: Believe only, and she shall be safe.

OBIICIES tertio loca plurima Scripturae, adscribentis Iustificationem Fidei Matth. 9. Lucae 8. Ioan. 3. Rom. 5. Premunt praesertim locum illum Lucae: Crede tantum, et salva erit.

29 S. Doct. responds that faith is the beginning and root of salvation; yet not faith alone. But in that passage of Luke only faith is demanded for a miracle. So also Ioan. 11. says: If thou believest, thou shalt see the glory of God, but I have treated of this in prima 2. tract. 5. disp. 3. quaest. 11.

Respondet S. Doct. fidem esse initium, et radicem salutis; non tamen solam. In illo autem Lucae exigi solam fidem ad miraculum. Sic et Ioan. 11. ait: Si credideris, videbis gloriam Dei, sed de hoc egi prima 2. tract. 5. disp. 3. quaest. 11.

30 Truly Justification is ascribed also to Love, Lucae septimo. to Hope, Rom. 8. to Fear, Ecclesiastici 2. See the question cited.

PROFECTO Iustificatio adscribitur etiam Dilectioni, Lucae septimo. Spei. Rom. 8. Timori Ecclesiastici 2. Vide quaestionem citatam.

Question XXI: Whether, and how, faith is a virtue

1 The MASTER sent. 3. dist. 23., D. Thom. here, Albertus in 3. dist. 23. art. 5., Richard. art. 4. quaest. 1., and almost all the other Theologians, with whom D. Bonav. also is commonly cited, say that faith formed by charity is a true virtue, because it renders its acts perfect toward God: but that unformed faith is not simply a virtue, because it does not render its act perfect — with which D. August. lib. 4. cont. Iulianum cap. 3. seems to smile. See Pasqualigum disp. 36. sect. 2., Lugum disp. 15. sect. 2., Merac. disp. 22. sect. 1., Morandum tract. un. quaest. 12.

MAGISTER sent. 3. dist. 23. D. Thom. hic Albertus in 3. dist. 23. art. 5. Richard. art. 4. quaest. 1. et alii fere Theologi, quibuscum allegatur communiter etiam D. Bonav. dicunt, fidem, charitate formatam, esse veram virtutem, quia reddit actus suos perfectos ad Deum: at vero fidem informem non esse simpliciter virtutem, quia non reddit actum suum perfectum, quibus videtur arridere D. August. lib. 4. cont. Iulianum cap. 3. Vide Pasqualigum disp. 36. sect. 2. Lugum disp. 15. sect. 2. Merac. disp. 22. sect. 1. Morandum tract. un. quaest. 12.

2 I ASSERT first; that Faith not formed by charity is most properly a virtue.

ASSERO primo; Fidem, charitate non formatam, esse propriissime virtutem.

3 It is PROVED by D. Bonav. first from D. Augustine de vera innocentia, asserting it so.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo ex D. Augustino de vera innocentia, ita asserente.

4 SECONDLY, because about difficult things an art, or virtue, is necessary to the rational mind, from 2. Ethic. cap. 3.; but the articles of faith are difficult to believe, and are believed by sinners; therefore for this the art, or virtue, that is necessary is conferred on them. Not art: Therefore the virtue of faith.

SECUNDO, quia circa difficilia, necessaria est menti rationali ars, aut virtus ex 2. Ethic. cap. 3. sed articuli fidei sunt creditu difficiles, et creduntur a peccatoribus; ergo eis ad hoc necessaria, confertur ars, vel virtus. Non ars: Ergo virtus fidei.

5 THIRDLY. It is more difficult to believe the articles than to be held back from lust, but for this a virtue is necessary. Therefore also for that; and sinful man believes through unformed faith: therefore this is a virtue.

TERTIO. Difficilius est credere articulos, quam contineri a libidine, sed ad hoc necessaria est virtus. Ergo et ad illud; sed homo etiam peccator credit per fidem informem: ergo haec est virtus.

6 FOURTHLY. What is essentially opposed to vice and sin is a virtue; but the act of unformed faith is directly and essentially opposed to the vice of heresy and of infidelity: Therefore.

QUARTO. Quod essentialiter opponitur vitio, et peccato, est virtus; sed actus fidei informis directe, et essentialiter opponitur vitio haeresis, et infidelitatis: Ergo.

7 FIFTHLY. To what the specific ratio belongs, the generic belongs too; but to unformed faith belongs the specific ratio of faith, which is to captivate the intellect into the obedience of Christ: therefore also the generic ratio of virtue. Hence therefore S. Doct. deduces, and with him the rest, that unformed faith is a virtue essentially, though imperfect, because it has not the perfect operation through the defect of the extrinsic, that is, of charity, which makes one for merit — one, I say, physically accidental, but morally essential. And in this way also Cajetan and Aragon. speak, ad art. 4. D. Thomae.

QUINTO. Cui convenit ratio specifica, convenit et generica, sed fidei informi convenit ratio specifica fidei, quae est captivare intellectum in obsequium Christi: ergo et ratio generica virtutis. Hinc igitur deducit S. Doct. et cum eo caeteri, fidem informem esse virtutem essentialiter, tamen imperfectam, quia non habet perfectam operationem ex defectu extrinseci, idest charitatis, quacum facit unum ad meritum, unum inquam physice accidentale, sed moraliter essentiale. Et hoc modo loquuntur etiam Caietanus, et Aragon. ad art. 4. D. Thomae.

8 I ASSERT secondly, in this sense, that unformed faith is not a perfect virtue.

ASSERO secundo, hoc sensu, fidem informem non esse perfectam virtutem.

9 It is PROVED by D. Bonav. first, because it is called dead in Iacobi primo, in the sense given in quaest. 20.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo, quia dicitur mortua Iacobi primo, sensu dicto quaest. 20.

10 SECONDLY, because the perfect virtue is that which operates well and perfectly, from D. August. in the Master dist. 23.

SECUNDO, quia virtus perfecta est, quae bene, perfecteque operatur ex D. August. apud Magistrum dist. 23.

11 Yet S. Doct. NOTES ad 4. that the ratio of unformed faith in a faithful sinner is not the same as that of partial faith in a heretic, who believes only some articles; for the latter falls short of the essence, since it has not the formal ratio, that is, the assent rendered to the articles under the ratio of the first truth speaking; for by denying even one attribute of God, it already denies God to be truthful.

ADVERTIT tamen S. Doct. ad 4. non esse eandem rationem fidei informis in peccatore fideli, et fidei partialis in haeretico, qui aliquos articulos tantum credit; nam haec deficit ab essentia, cum non habeat rationem formalem, idest assensum exhibitum articulis sub ratione primae veritatis dicentis; nam tantum unum Dei affectum negans, iam negat Deum veracem.

12 S. Doct. SOLVES some arguments in quaest. 1. The first is: the extremes and the mean are in the same genus; for the mean shares the nature of the extremes. But faith is a mean between opinion and science, as Hugh says: therefore it is in the same genus with the extremes: but science and opinion are not virtues: Therefore neither is faith.

ALIQUA argumenta solvit S. Doct. quaest. 1. Primum est in eodem genere sunt extrema, et medium; nam medium participat naturam extremorum. Sed fides est medium inter opinionem, et scientiam, ut ait Hugo: ergo in eodem genere est cum extremis: sed scientia, et opinio non sunt virtutes: Ergo neque fides.

13 S. Doct. RESPONDS first, that faith is a mean between these as to certitude, but it is not on that account necessary that it be in the same proximate genus with the extremes.

RESPONDET S. Doct. primo, fidem esse medium inter haec, quoad certitudinem, non est autem ob id necesse, ut sit in eodem genere proximo, cum extremis.

14 He RESPONDS secondly, that the MAJOR is false in morals, for the mean is often a virtue, and the extremes are vices.

RESPONDET secundo, Maiorem esse falsam in moralibus, nam medium saepe est virtus, et extrema sunt vitia.

15 You OBJECT secondly. Habits are distinguished by acts, and acts by objects. Now virtue and science are distinguished in this, from Aristotle 6. Metaph. t. 8., that virtue is about the good, and science about the true. But faith is about the true under the ratio of the true: Therefore it is not a virtue. The MINOR is proved, because the act of faith is to assent to the first truth.

OBIICIES secundo. Habitus distinguuntur per actus, et actus per obiecta. In hoc autem distinguitur virtus, et scientia ex Aristotele 6. Metaph. t. 8. quod virtus est in bonum, et scientia in verum. Sed fides est in verum sub ratione veri: Ergo non est virtus. Minor probatur, quia actus fidei est assentiri primae veritati.

16 S. Doct. RESPONDS that the true is the object of faith as salutary unto eternal life; for since it is obscure truth, it demands another habit diverse from science; and because it is health-giving, it therefore orders directly to salvation, and so has the ratio of virtue, because it regards obscure truth, captivating the intellect, and orders it freely to salvation; therefore it is a virtue.

RESPONDET S. Doct. verum esse obiectum fidei, ut salubre ad vitam aeternam, quia enim est verum obscurum, exigit alium habitum diversum a scientia; et quia est salutiferum, ideo directe ad salutem ordinat, et ideo habet rationem virtutis, quia respicit veritatem obscuram captivando intellectum, et illum ordinat ad salutem libere; ideo est virtus.

17 You OBJECT thirdly. It is blameworthy in a rational man to will anything without reason; but faith does not require reason: Therefore.

OBIICIES tertio. Vituperabile est homini rationali, velle aliquid sine ratione; sed fides non requirit rationem: Ergo.

18 S. Doct. responds that the MAJOR is false, where authority supplies the reason; now faith believes God revealing, even if the object be obscure, and this indeed is praiseworthy and reasonable.

Respondet S. Doct. falsam maiorem, ubi authoritas supplet rationem; nunc autem fides credit Deo revelanti, etiamsi obiectum sit obscurum, et hoc quidem est laudabile, et rationabile.

19 You OBJECT fourthly. The nobler the ratio an act has, the nearer it is to virtue: Therefore to believe by compelling reason looks more to virtue than to believe without reason; but necessary assent is not a virtue: Therefore much less will faith, which assents supported by no reason, be a virtue.

OBIICIES quarto. Quanto aliquis actus habet rationem nobiliorem, tanto est virtuti vicinior: Ergo credere per rationem cogentem plus spectat ad virtutem, quam credere absque ratione; at assensus necessarius non est virtus: Ergo multo minus fides, quae nulla ratione nixa assentitur, erit virtus.

20 S. Doct. RESPONDS by denying the MAJOR, if we speak of credulity resting on natural reason, which often deceives; and so it is more to the purpose to believe without reason the first truth revealing, even if those things seem irrational. For many things have been revealed that are contrary to philosophy, as altogether to live continent, to beg, etc. Likewise to believe one essence in three Persons: two natures with one subsistence, etc.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. negando Maiorem si loquamur de credulitate nixa ratione naturali, quae saepe fallit, itaque studiosius est credere absque ratione veritati primae revelanti, etiamsi ea videantur irrationalia. Multa enim sunt revelata, quae contraria sunt philosophiae, ut omnino continere, mendicare, etc. Similiter credere unam essentiam in tribus Personis: Duas naturas cum una subsistentia, etc.

Question XXII: Whether faith is one virtue

1 The true and common opinion of the Theologians in 3. dist. 23. is that faith is one single virtue in species, because the formal object is one; even if by reason of its subjects it is multiplied in number.

> VERA, et communis sententia Theologorum in 3. dist. 23. est, fidem esse unicam virtutem specie, eo quod unum est obiectum formale; etsi ratione subiectorum multiplicetur numero.

2 AS FOR the acts of faith, many judge that they differ in species. So Arriaga disp. 15. sect. 4., Poncius disp. 27. sect. 5., Hurtad. disp. 56. sect. 1., Lugo disp 8. sect. 1., and others. The OPPOSITE is commonly held with D. Bonav. here in fundamentis, et corpore, Suarez disp. 6. sect. 3., Coninch. disp. 16. dub. 2. num. 18., Mastrius disp. m. 6. quaest. 13. num. 354. I ASSERT first, that the habit of faith is one. It is PROVED by D. Bonav. first from 4. Ephes. One Lord, one faith, one Baptism; but Baptism is one in species: Therefore. It is PROVED secondly by D. Bonav. from 1. Cor. 13. And now there remain faith, hope, Charity, these three: but charity is one in species: Therefore also faith. It is PROVED thirdly by S. Doctor. Habits derive their unity from the unity of the formal object: but the formal object of faith is unique, however diverse the material objects to be believed may be, namely the veracity of God, and his revelation of it: Therefore the habit also will be unique.

> QUOAD actus fidei multi censent, eos specie differre. Ita Arriaga disp. 15. sect. 4. Poncius disp. 27. sect. 5. Hurtad. disp. 56. sect. 1. Lugo disp 8. sect. 1. et alii. OPPOSITUM censent communiter cum D. Bonav. hic in fundamentis, et corpore, Suarez disp. 6. sect. 3. Coninch. disp. 16. dub. 2. num. 18. Mastrius disp. m. 6. quaest. 13. num. 354. Assero primo, habitum fidei esse unum. PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo ex 4. Ephes. Unus Dominus, una fides, unum Baptisma, sed Baptisma est unum specie: Ergo. PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonav. ex 1. Cor. 13. Nunc autem manent fides, spes, Charitas, tria haec: sed charitas est una specie: Ergo et fides. PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore. Habitus desumunt suam unitatem ex obiecti formalis unitate: Sed obiectum formale fidei est unicum, quantumvis obiecta materialia credibilia sint diversa, nempe veracitas Dei, eiusque revelatio: Ergo habitus etiam erit unicus.

3 It is explained by S. Doct. in corpore; for even in the rest there is one habit where there is one formal object, e.g. one is the habit of seeing, though it regards innumerable things diverse in species, as Men, Horses, Elements, Heavens; yet there is one potency, and one habit, because it regards all these under one formal ratio, as they are visible, or as colored, or luminous. So the habit of faith is one, because, though it has many articles, diverse and revealed, it nevertheless regards all under one formal ratio, as they are from the first truth revealing. Thomists commonly use this argument, and Scotus 3. dist. 21. quaest. un. art. 1. §. Secundo de fide infusa, and disp. 25. quaest. 2., as Mastrius notes num. 350.

Explicatur a S. Doct. in corpore; nam etiam in reliquis est unus habitus, ubi est unum obiectum formale v. g. unus est habitus videndi, licet respiciat innumera, specie diversa, puta Homines, Equos, Elementa, Caelos; una tamen est potentia, unusque habitus, quia haec omnia sub una ratione formali respicit, ut sunt visibilia, seu ut colorata, vel lucida. Sic habitus fidei est unus, quia, licet habeat multos articulos diversos revelatos; tamen omnes respicit sub una ratione formali, ut sunt a prima veritate revelante. Hac ratione utuntur communiter Thomistae, et Scotus 3. dist. 21. quaest. un. art. 1. §. Secundo de fide infusa*, et* disp. 25. quaest. 2. ut notat Mastrius num. 350.

4 From this you have the Marginist of the Seraphic Doctor deceived, when he says that this argument is attacked by Scotus, while he attacks the argument of D. Thomae, proving that faith has only one formal object, which is the first truth. For Scotus attacks that argument of D. Thomae, that faith is one because, though the material objects are many, they are nevertheless reduced to one principal object, namely God. But he attacks it thus: because God does not contain the other objects as objects; for neither from the assent of faith about God do we gather the other assents about the remaining material objects of faith; nor are we moved to assent to them by that primary object of faith, which is God. This argument is indicated also by S. Bonav. initio corporis, but at last he concludes with that argument of his, brought forward fundam. 3., namely, that faith is one because there is one formal ratio, namely the first Truth, as revealing; just as I would believe with one human faith a Master teaching me various things, as Geometry, Physics, Astronomy, etc., because I would believe them under that one ratio, because he is my Master teaching, whose wisdom I trust. The same Scotus teaches word for word.

Ex quo habes, deceptum Marginistam Seraphici, dum ait, hanc rationem a Scoto impugnari, dum impugnat rationem D. Thomae, probantis, fidem habere unum tantum obiectum formale, quod est prima veritas. Scotus enim eam rationem D. Thomae impugnat. Quod una sit fides, quia, licet obiecta materialia sint plura, reducuntur tamen ad unum obiectum principale, videlicet in Deum. Impugnat autem sic, quia Deus non continet alia obiecta, ut obiectum sunt; nam neque ex assensu fidei circa Deum colligimus assensus alios circa reliqua fidei obiecta materialia; neque movemur ad assentiendum illis ex illo obiecto primario fidei, quod est Deus. Indicatur vero haec ratio etiam a S. Bonav. initio corporis*, sed tandem concludit sua illa ratione, allata* fundam. 3. nempe, unam esse fidem, quia una est ratio formalis, nimirum prima Veritas, ut revelans; Sicuti ego una fide humana crederem Magistro, docenti me varia, puta Geometrica, Physica, Astronomica, etc. quia sub una ea ratione crederem, quia est Magister meus docens, cuius Sapientiae fido. Idem docet ad verbum Scotus.

5 That argument, however, Cajetan and Valentia defend, namely because, though the objects are many, all are believed in order to God as the principal object, so that faith would not assent to them unless they had order to God, whom the Theological Virtue regards. But AGAINST the argument of D. Bonav. Arriaga argues disp. 16. sect. 3.: because the formal ratio of faith is also revelation: but revelations are diverse: Therefore. S. Doct. RESPONDS that the diversity of revelations is material, for their formality stands in this, that they have been revealed by God, who is the infallible truth. It is PROVED fourthly by S. Doct.: He who believes God is not judged faithful unless he believe all the articles; but faith is the virtue that makes every one faithful; therefore it is not a true virtue unless all the things to be believed are believed through it, and gathered into one; but they would not be gathered into one perfectly unless faith were one: Therefore, etc. It is PROVED fifthly by S. Doct. Faith is related to its object as obedience to its own; but there is one obedience, which obeys God in all the various precepts contained in the first and second tablet, because under one formal ratio obedience is rendered: Therefore etc.

Theologica respicit. CONTRA rationem vero D. Bonav. arguit Arriaga disp. 16. sect. 3. quia ratio formalis fidei est etiam revelatio: at revelationes sunt diversae: Ergo. RESPONDet S. Doct. revelationum diversitatem materiali modo se habere, nam eorum formalitas stat in hoc, ut a Deo revelata sint, qui est veritas infallibilis. PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. Qui credit Deo, non iudicatur esse fidelis, nisi credat omnibus articulis; sed fides virtus facit, unumquemque esse fidelem; ergo non est vera virtus, nisi omnia credibilia per eam credantur, et in unum colligantur; sed non colligerentur in unum perfecte, nisi fides esset una: Ergo, etc. PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. Ita se habet fides ad suum obiectum, sicut obedientia ad suum; sed una est obedientia, quae obedit Deo in omnibus praeceptis variis, prima, et secunda tabula contentis, eo quod sub una ratione formali obeditur: Ergo etc.

6 I ASSERT secondly, that all the acts of faith are of the same species. It is PROVED by the arguments made above, because all are elicited under one formal ratio, even if among the acts some are dissents, as that Christ did not die twice: others assents, as while I believe that Christ died once; for that variety in the acts is very material, even if some acts are speculative, as that God is three and one; others practical, as that God is to be loved; nevertheless these are united under one formal ratio; because the ratio of Practical and speculative is still material in this ratio of the object. HENCE he says it is not alike with science, which has various objects for its several acts; nor with the will, which tends to the appetible under diverse ratios; whence there are various virtues, and vices; as various sciences; and so neither are alike those things which regard good and evil as such; for Faith regards these, e.g. God, and devils, under one ratio of the true, under which it regards also the matters of the other virtues, which it directs. Wherefore it is not a general virtue. Thus S. Doctor elucidates everything.

ASSERO secundo, omnes actus fidei esse eiusdem speciei. PROBATUR rationibus supra factis, quia omnes sub una ratione formali eliciuntur, etiam si inter actus aliqui sint dissensus, ut Christum non esse bis mortuum: alii assensus, ut dum credo, semel Christum mortuum; nam illa varietas in actibus valde materialis est, esto aliqui actus sint speculativi, ut Deum esse trinum, et unum; alii practici, ut Deum esse amandum; tamen haec sub una ratione formali uniuntur; quia ratio Practici, et speculativi, adhuc materialis est in hac ratione obiecti. HINC ait, non esse simile de scientia, quae pro singulis habet obiecta varia; neque de voluntate, quae sub diversis rationibus tendit in appetibilia; unde sunt variae virtutes, et vitia; sicut variae scientiae, et ita nec similia sunt ea, quae respiciunt bonum, et malum, ut talia; nam Fides respicit haec, v. g. Deum, et daemones sub una ratione veri, qua respicit etiam materias aliarum virtutum, quas dirigit. Quare neque est virtus generalis. Sic elucidat omnia S. Doctor.

7 From these S. Doct. gathers in 3. dist. 25. quaest. 1. that the Catholic faith of the Universal Church is one, and not diverse in different men, as the heretics admit, Calvin. lib. 3. cap. 2. §. 31. Confessio Helvet. cap. 17., Beza lib. cont. Brentium, Smidellinus contra Staphylum. INDEED the Church, which is Catholic, that is, Universal, ought in its kind to agree everywhere under one Lord and Spouse, not an adulteress, Oseae 2. I will espouse thee to me in faith. This he calls the spirit in which we live, Paulus 1. Cor. 4.; more clearly Ephes. 4. Careful to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. One body and one Spirit; as you are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one Baptism. Hence in Coloss. 2. he compares it to the root of one tree, and the foundation of one building. And 1. Tim. 5. to one house. And in 1. Cor. 2. he likens us to the unity of the body in one spirit, sealed with one Baptism. The SS. Fathers urge this as necessary: Irenaeus lib. 1. cap. 3., Hilar. contra Constantium, Chrysost. hom. 1. in 1. ad Cor. Nay, Christ in Ioan. 10. asks that there be made one fold and one shepherd, as S. Bonav. notes there, and he pursues it more fully in Hexaemer.

Ex his colligit S. Doct. 3. dist. 25. quaest. 1. ut unam esse fidem Catholicam Universalis Ecclesiae, et non diversam in diversis, ut admittunt haeretici, Calvin. lib. 3. cap. 2. §. 31. Confessio Helvet. cap. 17. Beza lib. cont.

Brentium, Smidellinus contra Staphylum. SANE Ecclesia, quae Catholica est, seu Universalis, debet in genere undique convenire sub uno Domino sponso, non adultera, Oseae 2. Desponsabo te mihi in fide. Hanc vocat spiritum, in quo vivimus, Paulus 1. Cor. 4. clarius Ephes. 4. Solliciti servare unitatem spiritus in vinculo pacis. Unum corpus, et unus Spiritus, sicut vocati estis in una spe vocationis vestrae. Unus Dominus, una fides, unum Baptisma. Hinc ad Coloss. 2. comparat eam radici unius arboris, et fundamento unius aedificii. Et 1. Tim. 5. uni domui. Et 1. Cor. 2. unitati corporis in uno spiritu nos assimilat, uno signatos Baptismo. Hanc urgent necessariam SS. Bonav. et latius in Hexaemer. prosequitur.

Question XXIII: Whether faith is the first of the virtues

1 The SS. Doctors ASSERT that Faith is the Charioteer of the virtues.

An FIDES sit prima Virtutum.

ASservnt SS. Doctores, Fidem esse virtutum Aurigam.

2 And indeed that it is a virtue I showed in quaest. 21., and he proves it again here: As it is honorable to subject our appetite to the divine goodness, so it is honorable to subject the intellect to the first truth, and to be led captive into the obedience of God speaking; but to captivate the affection to God is a virtue: Therefore. That it is, moreover, as it were the Charioteer of the virtues, S. Doct. proves first. What is necessary directly for freely attaining the highest good has the ratio of the first virtue; such is the voluntary knowledge through faith: Therefore. The MAJOR is evident. The MINOR is proved: for faith directs hope and charity, as the rule showing that good to be desired, awaited, and loved. He builds the same argument in dist. 23. dub. 6. litt. Yet he sets it forth under the ratio of his revealed truth, as I said. It is confirmed by S. Doct.: Without knowledge of the highest good there cannot be direct intention; for that is done with right intention which is done for the honor of God, but without right intention no act of virtue goes forward. Since therefore the habit of faith is that by which the highest good is known by us; hence it is that Faith directs our intention, and by this it is the rule of every good operation, and of every meritorious virtue, and consequently it is the first of the virtues in order, as knowledge precedes the affection. It is proved by this argument also by D. Thom. loc. cit. and Valentia puncto 7.

Et quidem esse virtutem ostendi quaest. 21. et iterum hic probat: Sicut honestum est, appetitum nostrum subiici divinae bonitati; ita honestum est, intellectum subiici primae veritati, et captivari in obsequium Dei dicentis; sed captivare affectum in Deum, est virtus: Ergo. Quod vero sit veluti virtutum Auriga, probat S. Doct. primo. Quod est necessarium directe ad summum bonum consequendum libere, habet rationem primae virtutis; talis est cognitio voluntaria per fidem: Ergo. Maior est evidens. Minor probatur: nam fides dirigit spem, et charitatem, tanquam regula ostendens bonum illud appetendum, expectandum, et amandum. Idem argumentum struit dist. 23. dub. 6. litt. Illud tamen exhibet sub ratione sua veri revelati, ut dixi. Confirmatur a S. Doct. Sine cognitione Summi boni non potest esse intentio directa; haec enim fit recta intentione, quod fit ad honorem Dei, sine vero recta intentione nullus actus virtutis incedit. Quoniam ergo habitus fidei est, quo summum bonum a nobis cognoscitur; hinc est, ut Fides dirigat nostram intentionem, et per hoc regula est omnis operationis bonae, et omnis virtutis meritoriae, et consequenter est prima virtutum ordine, sicut cognitio affectum praecedit. Haec ratione probatur etiam a D. Thom. loc. cit. et Valentia puncto 7.

3 The argument of D. Bonav. is CONFIRMED from D. Ambrose lib. de Cain, et Abel, cap. 9. where he says: Why do you wonder that he did not acknowledge piety (Cain), who did not acknowledge the Author; and therefore you are taught by this series of Scriptures that faith is the root of all the virtues; whence the Apostle also says: Because our foundation is Christ. Prima Corinth. 3.

> Confirmatvr ratio D. Bonan. ex D. Ambrosio lib. de Cain, et Abel, cap. 9. ubi ait: Quid miraris, si pietatem non agnovit (Cain) qui non agnovit Authorem; et ideo doceris hac serie Scripturarum, fidem esse radicem virtutum omnium; unde et Apostolus ait: Quia fundamentum nostrum Christus est. Prima Corinth. 3.

4 From August. lib. de agone, cap. 13. Faith is the first thing that subjugates the soul to God; then the precepts of living.

> Ex August. lib. de agone, cap. 13. Fides est prima, quae subiugat animam Deo; deinde praecepta vivendi.

5 From S. Prosper lib. de vocat. gent. cap. 8. Faith is the mother of good will, and of good action.

> Ex S. Prospero lib. de vocat. gent. cap. 8. Fides bonae voluntatis, et bonae actionis est genitrix.

6 But it can be doubted: whether Faith is ever infused earlier in time than the other virtues.

> Potest vero dubitari: an unquam prius tempore, quam aliae virtutes, Fides infundatur.

7 I ASSERT with D. Bonau. dist. 23. dub. 6. et dist. 22. quaest. 5. et in 4. dist. 14. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 3., Scotus in 3. dist. 36. q. 4., Capens. disp. 4. sect. 1. n. 12., that Faith is always infused together. So it seems declared in Concil. Tridentino sect. 6. cap. 7. Whereby in the very sanctification, with the remission of sins, man receives these infused together, etc. faith, hope, and charity. It is the common opinion of the ancients, at Lugo disp. 16. sect. 2., against Suarez 3. p. t. 3. disp. 38. sect. 3. et hic disp. 7. sect. 5., Salam t. 2. tom. 2. tract. 11. disp. 5. sect. 3., Valentia quaest. 6. p. 2., Turrianus disp. 41. dub. 9., Granad. tract. 13. disp. 5. num. 9.

> Assero cum D. Bonau. dist. 23. dub. 6. et dist. 22. quaest. 5. et in 4. dist. 14. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 3. Scoto in 3. dist. 36. q. 4. Capens. disp. 4. sect. 1. n. 12. semper Fidem simul infundi. Ita videtur declaratum in Concil. Tridentino sect. 6. cap. 7. Unde in ipsa sanctificatione cum remissione peccatorum haec simul infusa accipit homo, etc. fidem, spem, et charitatem. Est communis sententia antiquorum apud Lugum disp. 16. sect. 2. contra Suarez 3. p. t. 3. disp. 38. sect. 3. et hic disp. 7. sect. 5. Salam t. 2. tom. 2. tract. 11. disp. 5. sect. 3. Valentiam quaest. 6. p. 2. Turrianum disp. 41. dub. 9. Granad. tract. 13. disp. 5. num. 9.

8 Vasquez responds in 3. p. disp. 158. that the particle Simul signifies the same as pariter: or, if it signifies duration, it does not signify the instant of the infusion of habitual grace, but the whole duration of justification, as justification is taken for the series of dispositions from the first aid to the infusion of grace: But the Council says that faith is living, which works through charity. Then thus: Therefore in its infusion it is with charity; for esse is put for operation: But faith from its infusion is operative through charity: Therefore.

> Respondet Vasquez 3. p. disp. 158. particulam, Simul*, idem significare, ac* pariter*: vel si significat durationem, non significat instans infusionis gratiae habitualis, sed totam durationem iustificationis; ut iustificatio sumitur pro serie dispositionum a primo auxilio usque ad infusionem gratiae: Sed Concilium ait, esse fidem vivam, quae per charitatem operatur. Tunc sic: Ergo in sua infusione est cum charitate; nam* esse supponitur operationi: Sed fides a sui infusione operativa est per charitatem: Ergo.

Question XXIV: Whether faith is more certain than any science, or than any intellectual habit

[1] The first opinion is Durandus's, who denies it entirely in 3. dist. 23. question 4. Others are with him.

> An FIDES sit certior quacumque scientia; vel habitu quocumque intellectivo.
> PRima opinio est Durandi, omnino id negantis in 3. dist. 23. quaest. 4. Cum eo sunt alii.

[2] The second opinion asserts it absolutely. So Scotus 3. dist. 23. and 24., whom the Scotists commonly follow, and some moderns at Mastrius disp. 6. num. 144., and likewise Bassaeus verb. Fides, 1. num. 2.

> Secvnda sententia absolute asserit. Ita Scotus 3. dist. 23. et 24. quem sequuntur communiter Scotistae, et aliqui moderni apud Mastrium disp. 6. num. 144. nec non Bassaeus verb. Fides, 1. num. 2.

[3] The third opinion distinguishes: Faith in itself is more certain than any intellectual habit; but on our part, by reason of its inevidence, because of which we can deny the articles of faith, whereas we cannot deny demonstrations and first principles, other habits are more known to us. So D. Thomas here, Albertus in 3. dist. 23. art. 17., Richard art. 7. question 1., Valent. question 4. p. 8., Suarez disp. 6. sect. 5., Molina p. 1. question 1. art. 5., Maetac. disp. 12. sect. 1., Pasqualig. disp. 35. sect. 2., De Lugo disp. 6. sect. 3., where he uses the very same terms as the Seraphic Doctor.

> Tertia sententia distinguit, Fidem secundum se esse certiorem quovis habitu intellectivo: at nobis ratione inevidentiae, ob quam possumus negare articulos fidei, cum alioqui non possimus negare demonstrationes, et prima principia, notiores esse habitus alios. Ita D. Thom. hic*, Albertus* in 3. dist. 23. art. 17. Richard. art. 7. quaest. 1. Valent. quaest 4. p. 8. Suarez disp. 6. sect. 5. Molina p. 1. quaest. 1. art. 5. Maetac. disp. 12. sect. 1. Pasqualig. disp. 35. sect. 2. De Lngo disp. 6. sect. 3. ubi eisdem terminis Seraphici usus est.

[5] He supposes, however, that he is not comparing faith with the beatific vision, since that is more certain in every respect. As regards the sciences, in one way. This is understood either of those things about which there is also faith: and of these, speaking simply, Faith is more certain than science. Hence if some philosopher has known scientifically that God is one creator, etc., he nevertheless never recognizes it so certainly through science as the faithful man knows it through faith. Or science is understood of other knowables. In this way, faith is in a certain respect more certain, in a certain respect not. If we speak of the certainty of affective adherence, then the certainty in faith itself is greater than that in the habit of science, because true faith brings it about that we adhere more firmly to the truth believed than any science adheres to some thing known: for we see that true believers can be inclined to deny the faith they believe neither by arguments nor by torments: But surely you will find no Mathematician who would prudently offer his throat for the demonstrations of Euclid. But if it is understood of speculative cognition, then by reason of evidence a demonstration adheres more firmly in us.

> Svpponit autem, se non comparare fidem cum visione beata, quia haec undequaque est certior. Quoad scientias in una. Hoc vel intelligitur de his, de quibus est etiam fides: Et de his, simpliciter loquendo, certior est Fides, quam scientia. Unde si aliquis philosophus cognovit scientifice, Deum esse unum creatorem, etc. nunquam tamen ita certo agnoscit per scientiam, ficuti per fidem cognoscit fidelis. Vel intelligitur scientia de aliis cognoscibilibus. Sic, quodammodo certior est fides, quodammodo non. Si loquamur de certitudine adhaesionis affectu; sic maior est certitudo in ipsa fide, quam sit in habitu scientiae, quia vera fides efficit, ut firmius adhaereamus veritati creditae, quam aliqua scientia alicui rei scitae: Videmus enim, veros fideles neque per argumenta, neque per tormenta inclinari posse ad fidem creditam negandam: At profecto nullum Mathematicum invenies, qui prudenter iugulum pro demonstrationibus Euclidis praebeat. Si vero intelligatur de cognitione speculativa; sic ratione evidentiae nobis firmius adhaeret demonstratio.

6 I assert first, that faith simply, and in itself, is more certain, and of firmer adherence, than science is.

Assero primo, fidem simpliciter, et secundum se, esse certiorem, et firmioris adhaesionis, quam sit scientia.

7 It is proved by D. Bonaventure in the Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. from 1 John 5. This is the victory which overcometh the world, our faith.

Probatvr a D Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. ex prima Ioan. 5. Haec est victoria, quae vincit mundum, fides nostra.

8 He shows it profusely in the sermons of S. Doctor On the Hexaëmeron 8. 9. and 10.

Profuse id ostendit S. Doct sermonibus Hexaëmeronis 8. 9. et 10.

9 First from the definition of faith Hebr. 11. where it is called Substance, or conviction.

Primo ex definitione fidei Hebr. 11. ubi dicitur Substantia, vel convictio.

10 Then from the obligation which the articles of faith impose on us, he argues it with the Apostle, Hebr. 2. Therefore we ought to observe the more abundantly the things we have heard, lest perhaps we let them slip. For if the word, spoken by Angels, was made firm, etc. He proves the same with the Apostle Hebr. 1. from the dignity of Christ revealing, who is the Wisdom of the Father, and since we have the most firm testimony from the prophets, divining future things, he brings every certainty to bear. Therefore 2 Peter 1. We have the more firm prophetic word, to which you do well to attend, as to a lamp shining in a dark place.

Deinde ex obligatione, quam nobis adiungunt articuli fidei, id arguit cum Apostolo, Hebr. 2. Propterea abundantius oportet observare nos ea, quae audivimus, ne forte pereffluamus Si enim, qui per Angelos dictus est sermo, factus est firmus, etc. Idipsum probat cum Apostolo Hebr. 1. ex dignitate Christi revelantis, qui est Sapientia Patris, cumque firmissimum habeamus testimonium a prophetis, divinantibus futura, omnem certitudinem affert. Ideo secunda Petri 1. Habemus firmiorem propheticum sermonem, cui benefacitis attendentes, tanquam lucernae, lucenti in caliginoso loco.

11 See the Seraphic Doctor in the sermons cited, proving it wondrously.

12 It is PROVED indeed by S. Bonaventure in those passages especially. That habit is in itself more certain than all others which rests upon a more infallible cause or reason: Such is faith: Therefore. The major is proved; for the perfection of the cause redounds to the effect. The minor is proved, because faith rests upon divine revelation; but other cognitions upon natural reason. He repeats the same argument here. The whole argument, however, and especially the firmness of divine revelation, he confirms with very many testimonies of Scripture in the sermons cited.

PROBATUR vero a S. Bonav. illis praecipue locis. Ille habitus secundum se est certior omnibus aliis, qui innititur causa, sive ratione magis infallibili: Talis est fides: Ergo. Maior probatur; nam perfectio causae redundat in effectum. Minor probatur, quia fides nititur revelatione divina; aliae vero cognitiones ratione naturali. Eandem rationem refricat hic. Totum autem argumentum, maxime vero divinae revelationis firmitatem, plurimis scripturarum testimoniis confirmat sermonibus allegatis.

13 It is PROVED secondly here by another argument, which Valencia uses. The certainty of a habit, or of the assent of the intellect, as it is an accident distinct from evidence and other things, properly consists in this: that as long as the certain habit or assent is retained in the intellect, one cannot deliberately fear that what is persuaded to him by such a habit or assent may not be true; But he who is truly faithful can doubt the truths of faith far less than any other evident truths, and would more easily deny any truths whatsoever than the truths of faith: Therefore etc. Albertus used the same argument.

PROBATUR secundo hic alio argumento, quo utitur Valentia. Certitudo habitus, vel assensus intellectus, ut est accidens distinctum ab evidentia, et aliis, in hoc proprie consistit, ut quamdiu certus habitus, vel assensus in intellectu retinetur, nequeat aliquis deliberate vereri, ne non sit verum, quod per talem habitum, sive assensum sibi persuadet; Sed qui vere fidelis est, multo minus dubitare potest de veritatibus fidei, quam de ullis aliis veritatibus evidentibus, et facilius quasque veritates negaret, quam veritates fidei: Ergo etc. eodem argumento usus est Albertus.

14 It is CONFIRMED from the Fathers: S. Augustine 7. confessions cap. 10. I would more easily doubt that I live, than that those things are true which I have heard.

CONFIRMATUR ex Patribus: S. August. 7. confess cap. 10. Facilius dubitarem vivere me, quam esse vera, quae audivi.

15 The same Saints affirm: Dionysius cap. 7. on the divine names. Basil. epist. 43. and on Psal. 115. Chrysost. homil. 12. on the epistle to the Hebrews. Ambrose on Psal. 40. Finally, most fittingly for the argument of the Seraphic Doctor, Jerome, epist. 61. cap. 3. Do you wish to know how great is the ardor of those who believe well? Hear the Apostle: And if we, or an Angel from heaven, should preach otherwise to you; let him be anathema. And in cap. 1. to the Galatians the Apostle shows the firmness of his faith, saying: I know that neither death, etc. Aptly S. Bonaventure serm. 2. on several martyrs runs through the firmness of faith from 1. cap. ad Hebr., considering the miracles wrought by the power of faith, the torments overcome, etc. Which he likewise sets forth in the sermons on the Hexaemeron cited, which one ought to transcribe word for word; for they are more precious than gold of Peru: read them through with him.

IDEM afferunt Sancti, Dionysius cap. 7. de divinis nominibus. Basil. epist. 43. et in Psal. 115. Chrysost. homil. 12. in epist. ad Hebr. Ambr. in Psalm. 40. Tandem aptissime ad argumentum Seraphici, Hieronymus, epist. 61. cap. 3. Vis scire quantus sit ardor bene credentium? Audi Apostolum: Et si nos, aut Angelus de caelo aliter evangelizaverit vobis; anathema sit. Et in cap. 1. ad Galat. Apostolus firmitatem fidei suae ostendit dicens: Scio, quia neque mors, etc. Apte S. Bonavent. serm. 2. de pluribus martyribus firmitatem fidei ex 11. cap. ad Hebr. discurrit, considerans mirabilia, fidei virtute exantlata, tormenta superata, etc. Quae pariter excurrit sermonibus Hexaemeronis allegatis, quos oporteret ad verbum transcribere, sunt enim Peruano pretiosiores auro: eos Perlegite apud ipsum.

16 MASTRIUS answers that even the act of faith is subjectively more certain, because the act ought to be informed according to the whole perfection of its certainty. But he is mistaken, first, because otherwise all would believe in the highest degree. Secondly, I say it does not inform according to evidence, which makes the assent firmer; for the certainty of an act or habit is not taken from the certainty of the object in itself, but from the light also by which it is applied to us.

MASTRIUS respondet, etiam subiective fidei actum esse certiorem, quia actus debet informari secundum totam perfectionem suae certitudinis. Sed fallitur primo, quia alioqui omnes summe crederent. Secundo dico, non informare secundum evidentiam, quae reddit firmiorem assensum; neque enim certitudo actus, vel habitus sumitur e certitudine obiecti secundum se, sed ex lumine etiam, quo nobis applicatur.

17 I assert secondly; On our part indeed, by one and the same reason other habits are more certain than faith, insofar as by reason of its inevidence we can deny the articles of faith.

ASSERO secundo; Quoad nos quidem, una quadam ratione sunt habitus alii fide certiores, quatenus ratione inevidentiae possumus fidei articulos negate.

18 In this sense Hugh of St. Victor lib. 1. de Sacram. p. 10. cap. 1. says: Faith is the certainty of the soul concerning absent things, constituted above opinion and below science, as S. Bonaventure relates.

Hoc sensu Hugo Victorinus lib. 1. de Sacram. p. 10. cap. 1. ait: Fidem esse certitudinem animi de rebus absentibus, supra opinionem, et infra scientiam constitutam, ut refert S. Bonav.

19 It is proved by D. Bonaventure's other arguments. That is known more certainly of which one cannot doubt, because it is known by clear vision, than what is in an enigma; and that is known more certainly which can be evidently proved, than what cannot be so proved: Such is the object of science, which is evidently demonstrated, in contrast to faith: therefore. For indeed we experience first principles as such, so that they appear more certain, especially universals, such as: Whatever is, is. Every whole is greater than its part, as the Arretine notes.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. argumentis aliis. Certius cognoscitur id, de quo non potest dubitari, eo quod cognoscitur aperta visione, quam quod in aenigmate; et certius noscitur, quod potest evidenter probari, quam quod ita nequit probari: Tale est obiectum scientiae, quod evidenter demonstratur, e regione fidei: ergo. Profecto enim principia prima talia experimur, ut certiora appareant, maxime universalia, ut: Quodlibet est, vel non est. Omne totum est maius sua parte*, ut notat Arretinus.*

20 But what S. Doctor said, that those sciences which pertain to faith are more certain, is proved; for the motive of reason and of authority is present, which assist one another in strengthening the truth, as Amicus observes.

QUOD vero dicebat S. Doct. ea scita, quae spectant ad fidem, esse certiora, probatur; nam adest motivum rationis, et authoritatis, quae se adiuvant ad roborandam veritatem, ut advertit Amicus.

21 YOU WILL SAY, this question seems useless, because, just as one truth is not greater than another, since it consists in an indivisible, so neither is one certainty more perfect than another.

DICES, videri hanc quaestionem inutilem, quia, sicut non est una veritas maior alia, cum consistat in indivisibili, ita nec una certitudo est alia perfectior.

22 It is ANSWERED with Lugo disp. 6. sect. 2. that the reason of truth and of certainty is different; for truth is considered in itself as the conformity of the object, and it stands in an indivisible; But certainty is relative by reason of the knowledge, which can be greater or less; according as it is more strongly represented to our intellective powers. In another way Arriaga answers disp. 3. sect. 4. num. 77.

RESPONDETUR cum Lugo disp. 6. sect. 2. diversam esse rationem veritatis, et certitudinis; nam veritas in se consideratur, ut est conformitas obiecti, et stat in indivisibili; At certitudo est ratione notitiae relativa, quae potest esse maior, vel minor; prout potentiae nostrae intellectivae fortius repraesentatur. Alio modo respondet Arriaga disp. 3. sect. 4. num. 77.

Question XXV: Whether one can know with certainty that he has faith

1 HAnc treats of this 1. 2. tract. 5. disp. 2. question 8., where I reviewed the opinions.

An quis certo scire possit, se FIDEM habere.

HAnc pertractani 1. 2. tract. 5. disp. 2. quaest. 8. ubi opiniones recensui.

2 I assert with D. Bonaventure that someone can know with theological and moral certainty that he has the habit of faith.

Assero cum D. Bonau. posse aliquem scire certitudine Theologica, et morali, se habere fidei habitum.

3 It is PROVED from D. Bonaventure dub. 1. Whoever knows his acts by experience knows also the habit from which they come. A man can know his supernatural acts of faith: Therefore. The major is evident: for habits are known with certainty through acts, as Scotus teaches, cited p. 1. tract. 9. disp. 2. question 3. The minor is evident; for acts are known through objects, from Scotus loc. cit. Mastrius admits it in 3. dist. 6. question 14. num. 368. with Scotus 3. dist. 23. question unica, where they admit the major also. They confirm it with D. Bonaventure from the force of experience. For just as by experience I know that I believe a man narrating something; so (they say) we evidently experience that we believe the mysteries of faith, which have been revealed by God. Mastrius confirms it; for we clearly experience that we are not moved to that assent by the evidence of the object, since it is obscure to us, nor from anywhere else than from authority. And in this sense he says D. Augustine said with Scotus lib. 13. de Trin. cap. 1. Nothing is more certain to man than his faith. Yet these things conflict with what he adds from Scotus num. 369. that it cannot be evidently known whether we have this knowledge in act, from the divine revelation of the act alone.

PROBATUR a D. Bonau. dub. 1. Qui actus experimento novit; novit et habitum ex quo veniunt. Homo potest nosse suos actus fidei supernaturales: Ergo. Maior patet: nam habitus per actus certo noscuntur, ut docet Scotus, relatus p. 1. tract. 9. disp. 2. quaest. 3. Minor patet; nam actus per obiecta noscuntur, e Scoto loc. cit. Eam fatetur Mastr. in 3. dist. 6. quaest. 14. num. 368. cum Scoto 3. dist. 23. quaest. un. ubi et maiorem confitentur. Id confirmant cum D. Bonau. ex vi experimenti. Sicut enim experimento novi, nos credere homini aliquid narranti; ita experimur evidenter (aiunt) nos credere mysteria fidei, quae a Deo sunt revelata. Confirmat Mastr. nam clare experimur, nos ad illum assensum non moveri ex obiecti evidentia, cum sit nobis obscurum, neque aliunde, quam authoritate. Et hoc sensu ait cum Scoto dixisse D. August. lib. 13. de Trin. cap. 1. Nihil est homini certius sua fide. Haec tamen pugnant cum his, quae e Scoto addit num. 369. non posse evidenter cognosci; an hanc notitiam habeamus actu, e sola divina actus revelatione.

4 It is PROVED secondly, that it is known with theological certainty. Whoever has a pious affect for believing the things that are of faith, knows that he assents to them from above. The faithful man experiences in himself this pious affect: Therefore. The major is certain, because that affect is the supernatural principle of the assent, as I showed 1. 2. Tract. 5. disp. 1. question 6. The minor is granted by Mastrius num. 373. conseq. recta. It is the argument of S. Bonaventure loc. cit. Observe the fallacy of Mastrius and Scotus, who infer that evidence cannot be had of the direct act and habit of faith by a reflected act; because the direct act is incuidens from its object, as I shall say presently.

PROBATUR secundo, id sciri Theologice certo. Qui habet pium affectum credendi ea, quae sunt fidei; eis assentiri se novit superne. Fidelis experitur in se hunc pium affectum: Ergo. Maior est certa, quia affectus ille est principium supernum assensus, ut ostendi 1. 2. Tract. 5. disp. 1. quaest. 6. Minor conceditur a Mastr. num. 373. conseq. recta. Est argumentum S. Bonau. loc. cit. Observa fallaciam Mastrii, et Scoti, qui inferunt, non posse haberi evidentiam actu reflexo actus directi, et habitus fidei; quia actus directus ex obiecto est incuidens, ut mox dicam.

5 It is PROVED thirdly from D. Bonaventure in his answer; for the faithful Christian knows that he believes in his mind the articles of the true faith; otherwise he could doubt whether he is a Christian.

PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonau. in responsione; nam fidelis Christianus novit, se in mente credere articulos verae fidei; alioqui posset dubitare: an sit christianus.

6 Mastrius answers that one can know with certainty that he has faith objectively, that is, that he believes true things; but not that he formally elicits an act of faith.

Respondet Mastrius, posse aliquem certo scire, se habere fidem obiective, idest vera credere; non autem formaliter se elicere actum fidei.

7 CONTRA, from D. Bonaventure serm. 9. Hexaemeron. For the firmness of faith, from our attending, and indeed, with the object known from which the act is elicited, the act too is known to be natural or supernatural, because acts are specified, or known, through objects. This S. Doctor shows from that 2. Peter 1.: Having the more firm prophetic word: to which you do well to attend, as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the morning star arise in your hearts. The Apostle wills the same 2. Cor. last chapter. Try your own selves, whether you are in the faith: prove yourselves.

CONTRA ex D Bonavent. serm. 9. Hexaemer. Nam firmitas fidei a nobis attendentibus atque adeo, cognito obiecto, ex quo elicitur actus, cognoscitur etiam actus esse naturalis, vel supernaturalis, quia actus specificantur, vel cognoscuntur per obiecta. Hoc autem ostendit S. Doct. ex illo 2. Petri primo: Habentes firmiorem propheticum sermonem: cui benefacitis attendentes, quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco, donec dies illucescat, et Lucifer oriatur in cordibus vestris. Hoc idem vult Apostolus 2. Cor. ultimo. Vosmetipsos tentate, si estis in fide: ipsi vos probate.

8 Mastrius answers with Becanus that the faithful can be certain of the truth of the object through the assent of faith: but that he cannot be certain of the certainty of the assent except through a reflected act, which is fallacious. Contra, because although the direct act is obscure, since it is about the object of faith; nevertheless the reflected act, which bears upon its own present act, through which the habit becomes known with certainty, is not doubtfully recognized, as Mastrius admits, but in some way even evident, much less merely certain, as Scotus indicates loc. cit., as the Arretine thought disp. 23. question unica. art. 12.

Respondet Mastrius cum Becano, fidelem de veritate obiecti posse esse certum per assensum fidei: at de certitudine assensus non posse esse certum, nisi per actum reflexum, qui est fallax. Contra, quia etsi actus directus sit obscurus, quia est de obiecto fidei; attamen actus reflexus, qui fertur in actum suum praesentem, quo habitus certo innotescit; non est dubie agnitus, ut fatetur Mastr. sed aliquo modo etiam evidens, nedum certus, ut indicat Scot. loc. cit. ut sensit Aretin. disp. 23. quaest. un. art. 12.

9 It is confirmed by Mastrius himself num. 368. from experience. For we know that we are not moved to the assent of faith by the evidence of the object, since it plainly stands to us that it is in itself inevident, and that we believe from authority alone, namely divine revelation, by which I sense that I am moved to assent, as Mastrius says num. 367., which the following num. denies, discordant with himself, as I said.

> Confirmatur ab ipso Mastrio num. 368. experientia. Cognoscimus enim, ad assensum fidei nos non moveri ex obiecti evidentia, cum nobis aperte constet in se esse inevidens, et sola nos authoritate credere, utique divina revelatione, qua sentio me moveri ad assensum, ut ait Mastr. num. 367. quod num. seq. negat, a se dissonus, ut dixi.

10 You will OBJECT, that it is not certain that the habit of faith is given.

> Obiicies, non esse certum dari habitum fidei.

11 It is ANSWERED, that it is certain with theological certainty, even if some deny it. Therefore one knows it with a certainty somehow evident in experience, as Mastrius admits num. 375., saying this is commonly accepted among Scholastics.

> Respondetur, certum esse certitudine Theologica, esto aliqui negent. Id igitur novit certitudine aliquo modo in experientia evidenti, ut fatetur Mastr. num. 375. dicens, communiter Scholasticis id esse acceptum.

Question XXVI: In whom faith is found

1 I suppose, that it is in men as wayfarers; and that it has existed in Angels as wayfarers.

> Suppono, eam in hominibus viatoribus esse; et in Angelis viatoribus extitisse.

2 It is proved from D. Bonaventure 3. dist. 25. question 2. ad 2. from 11. ad Hebr. He that cometh to God must believe. Without faith it is impossible to please God.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. ad 2. ex 11. ad Hebr. Accedentem ad Deum oportet credere. Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo.

3 I suppose secondly, that in the blessed faith is evacuated, as is said 1. Cor. 13.; that it nevertheless remains in purgatory, because they are just, and pilgrims away from the Lord.

> Suppono secundo, in beatis evacuatam fidem, ut dicitur 1. Cor. 13. manere tamen in purgatorio, quia iusti sunt, et peregrinantur a Domino.

4 The question is about damned men and demons.

> Quaestio est de damnatis hominibus, et daemonibus.

5 I assert first, that in demons there is no infused habit of faith. This is so certain that Suarez lib. 8. de Angelis, cap. 6. says it is temerarious to concede to demons the habit of faith. Nearly the same Bannes says question 5. art. 2., but asserting it free from every known view; so assert Hurtado disp. 59. sect. 2., Granado tract. 13. sect. 1., Lugo disp. 17. sect. 1.

> Assero primo, in daemonibus non esse habitum infusum fidei. Hoc adeo certum est, ut Suarez lib. 8. de Angelis, cap. 6. dicat esse temerarium concedere daemonibus habitum fidei. Idem fere ait Bannes quaest. 5. art. 2. sed ab omni nota ita asserentes liberant Hurtado disp. 59. sect. 2. Granado tract. 13. sect. 1. Lugo disp. 17. sect. 1.

6 The foundation of D. Bonaventure and D. Thomas is, because infused faith is a gift of God, ordered to good works, and to merit and eternal life; but demons, most obstinate, are unfit for merit and eternal life: Therefore. So also Valencia question 5. p. 2.

> Fundamentum D. Bonav. et D. Thom. est, quia fides infusa, est donum Dei, ordinatum ad opera bona, et ad merita, ac vitam aeternam; sed daemones obstinatissimi inepti sunt ad meritum, et vitam aeternam: Ergo. Sic etiam Valentia quaest. 5. p. 2.

7 I assert secondly, that in demons there is a faith of a kind.

> Assero secundo, in daemonibus esse fidem aliqualem.

8 It is proved first from S. Bonaventure from that James 2. The devils believe, and tremble. Secondly from the Gloss on the first epistle to the Romans, asserting it. Thirdly from Mark 1., and other places, where demons cry out that Christ is the Son of God. Hence S. Doctor deduces that they know the Trinity; for they also acknowledged it on the way.

> Probatur primo a S. Bonav. ex illo Iacobi 2. Daemones credunt, et contremiscunt. Secundo ex Glossa in primum ad Rom. id asserente. Tertio ex Marci primo*, et aliis locis, ubi daemones clamant, Christum esse filium Dei. Hinc deducit S. Doct. eos cognoscere Trinitatem; nam eam etiam in via agnovere.*

9 It is also doubted of heretics: whether they retain the habit of faith.

> Dubitatur etiam de haereticis: an retineant habitum fidei.

10 It must be asserted, that they do not retain faith.

> Asserendum, eos non retinere fidem.

11 It is proved from 1. Timothy 1. where heretics are said to have made shipwreck concerning the faith: Some have made shipwreck concerning the faith, of whom are Hymeneus and Alexander.

> Probatur ex prima Timot. 1. ubi haeretici dicuntur, naufragasse in fide: Quidam circa fidem naufragarunt, ex quibus est Hymenaeus et Alexander.

12 It is proved also from the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 15. Therefore the opposite is erroneous, as Fulient. says lib. 3. cap. 3.; otherwise heretics would be faithful.

> Probatur etiam ex Concilio Tridentino sess. 6. cap. 15. Ideo oppositum est erroneum, ut ait Fulient. lib. 3. cap. 3. alioqui haeretici essent fideles.

13 The reason is, because there does not remain in them the formal reason of the habit of faith, so as to incline them to believe all things credible, as revealed by the First Truth; for when one article is denied, the First Truth is denied. It is the common opinion of the Theologians 3. dist. 23., and of D. Thomas question 5. art. 3., at Lugo disp. 17. sect. 4. D. Bonaventure art. 2. question 2.

> Ratio est, quia non manet in eis ratio formalis habitus fidei, ut inclinet ad credendum omnia credibilia, ut a prima veritate revelata; negato enim uno articulo, negatur prima Veritas. Est communis sententia Theologorum 3. dist. 23. et D. Thom. quaest. 5. art. 3. apud Lugum disp. 17. sect. 4. D. Bonav. art. 2. quaest. 2.

14 You will ask: Whether the habit of faith is destroyed by heresy physically, or morally.

> Quaeres: An habitus fidei destruatur ab haeresi physice, an moraliter.

15 It is ANSWERED, that it is more probable that it is expelled demeritoriously, just as grace is expelled by sin, as I said prima secunda, tract. 3. disp. 1. question 6. So Scotus, Gabriel, D. Bonaventure and others, at Suarez disp. 7. sect. 4. and tom. 3. in 3. partem, question 63. art. 5. and lib. 11. de gratia, cap. 7. Maldonatus, Lorca, and others at Coninck disp. 18. dub. 4. num. 35.; others at Lugo disp. 17. sect. 4.

Respondetur, probabilius esse, eum expelli demeritorie, sicut et gratia pellitur a peccato, ut dixi prima secunda, tract. 3. disp. 1. quaest. 6. Ita Scotus, Gabriel, D. Bonav. et alii, apud Suarez disp. 7. sect. 4. et tom. 3. in 3. partem, quaest. 63. art. 5. et lib. 11. de gratia, cap. 7. Maldorus, Lorca, et alii apud Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 4. num. 35. aliique apud Lugo disp. 17. sect. 4.

Question XXVII: Whether faith is a substantial gift of God

1 Now we must treat of the efficient cause of Faith.

Iam de causa efficiente Fidei agendum.

2 Catholics are unanimous that for the assent of Faith, besides the external object proposed, an internal help of grace is required, by which man is helped to believe as he ought. It is defined against Pelagius in the Council of Orange 2. can. 5. and in the Tridentine sess. 6. can. 3. On which see S. Augustine de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 3. de bono perseverantiae, cap. 20. and 21. and lib. 1. retract. cap. 23. The reason is, because to believe as is required for salvation is a disposition to sanctifying grace: therefore it is not made without grace moving within, as the Council of Trent infers; otherwise justification would take its beginning from us; and thus it would not be gratuitous but owed. So also D. Bonaventure in the body of the text.

Catholici unanimes ad assensum Fidei, praeter obiectum externum propositum, exigunt internum gratiae auxilium, quo homo iuvetur ad credendum, ut oportet. Est definitum contra Pelagium in Concilio Arausic. 2. can. 5. et in Tridentino sess. 6. can. 3. De quo vide S. August. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 3. de bono perseverantiae, cap. 20. et 21. et lib. 1. retract. cap. 23. Ratio est, quia credere, ut oportet ad salutem, est dispositio ad gratiam sanctificantem: ergo non fit sine gratia intus movente, ut infert Concilium Tridentinum; alioqui iustificatio initium sumeret ex nobis; atque ita non esset gratuita, sed debita. Ita etiam D. Bonav. in corpore.

3 S. Doctor observes secondly that faith is had from hearing, as to its material element, and this is acquired; for by the ordinary law the articles of faith are not imprinted in the intellect, but only the habit is infused which raises the intellect to an assent above nature. Therefore a baptized infant, even if he has the habit; if nevertheless he is not instructed, will easily fall into errors, in the same way as if he did not have the habit, as S. Doctor observes at the very end.

Observat secundo S. Doct. fidem ex auditu haberi, quoad illius materiale, et hoc est acquisitum; non enim lege ordinaria imprimuntur in intellectu articuli fidei, sed solus habitus infunditur qui elevet intellectum ad assensum super naturam. Ideo parvulus baptizatus, etiamsi habeat habitum; si tamen non instruatur, facile cadet in errores, eodem modo ac si habitum non haberet, ut advertit S. Doct. ad ultimum.

4 There were indeed some Scholastics who seemed to assert the acquired habit of faith, as sufficient for believing the articles of faith simply; nevertheless the supernatural habit as necessary for believing more firmly. So Durandus dist. 28. question 1. Gabriel dist. 23. question 2. and others. The Nominalists, for which opinion Amicus disp. 15. sect. 1. and others, adduce Scotus 3. dist. 23. question unica. But Mastrius reports some passages of Scotus in which he asserts the supernatural habit to be necessary simply, on account of the supernaturalness of the act, as quodl. 14. art. 1. and quodl. 17. §. contra the conclusion, and in 1. dist. 17. question 2. and more clearly in 1. dist. 1. question 4. ad 4. for the 4. article, and in 4. dist. 49. question 5. ad 2.

Fuere vero nonnulli Scholastici, qui habitum acquisitum fidei videntur, tanquam sufficientem asserere ad simpliciter credendum articulis fidei; attamen necessarium habitum supernaturalem ad firmius credendum. Ita Durand. dist. 28.

quaest. 1. Gabr. dist. 23. quaest. 2. et alii. Nominales, pro qua sententia Amicus disp. 15. sect. 1. et alii adducunt Scotum 3. dist. 23. quaest. unica. Sed Mastrius aliqua Scoti loca refert, in quibus asserit, necessarium esse habitum supernaturalem simpliciter, ob actus supernaturalitatem, ut quodl. 14. art. 1. et quodl. 17. §. contra conclusionem, et in 1. dist. 17. quaest. 2. et clarius in 1. dist. 1. quaest. 4. ad 4. pro 4. articulo, et in 4. dist. 49. quaest. 5. ad 2.

5 The PRINCIPAL question is, how the act of faith is supernatural; for it can be supernatural in two ways. First according to substance, in that according to its entity it transcends every order of the beings of nature, not only by reason of the agent, since there is no agent in the course of nature able to produce that being; but also subjectively, insofar as that entity, say of faith, grace, or the Light of glory, is of a higher order: as I said p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 11. from num. 113. Secondly a being is said to be supernatural according to mode, and is called supernatural, because, although according to its entity it can be produced by a natural cause; yet the mode is above nature; thus vision, given to a blind man, is supernatural; just as health given in an instant, which would require a very long duration, is above nature.

QUAESTIO praecipua est, quomodo actus fidei supernaturalis sit; nam dupliciter potest esse supernaturalis. Primo secundum substantiam, eo quod secundum suam entitatem transcendat omnem ordinem entium naturae, non ratione agentis tantum, eo quod non detur agens in cursu naturae, potens illud ens producere; sed etiam subiective, quatenus illa entitas, puta fidei, gratiae, aut Luminis gloriae, est ordinis altioris: ut dixi p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 11. a num. 113. Secundo dicitur ens supernaturale secundum modum, diciturque supernaturale, quia, licet secundum suam entitatem produci queat a causa naturali; tamen modus est super naturam; sic visio, data caeco, est supernaturalis; sicut et sanitas data in instanti, quae durationem permultam exigeret, est supra naturam.

6 The FIRST opinion is, that the assent of infused faith is not supernatural as to substance, but only as to mode; and consequently the help of grace, which is required for the act of faith, is not required for the entity of the act, but only as to some mode added to such an entity. So Scotus 1. dist. 17. question 2. and quodl. 17. art. 3. and in 3. dist. 23. question unica; Although Suarez lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 4. tries to recall him to a better fruit. All the Scotists follow him, and the Nominalists at Mastrius disp. 6. question 6. So Ocham quodl. 13: question 7. Gabriel 3. dist. 23. question 2. Durandus 1. dist. 17. question 2. Bassolis 3. dist. 23. question un. Vulpes p. 2. tom. 2. disp. 52. art. 7. Caietanus p. 2. question 109. art. 4. and 2. 2. question 171. art. 2. ad 3. where he contends that this is the opinion of D. Thomas. Capreolus 1. dist. 17. question 1. art. 3. Palud. 3. dist. 23. question 3. §. 3. tertio dicendum.

PRIMA opinio est, assensum fidei infusae non esse supernaturalem quoad substantiam, sed solum quoad modum; et proinde auxilium gratiae, quod actum fidei requiritur, non requiri ad entitatem actus, sed solum quoad modum aliquem, tali entitati additum. Ita Scotus 1. dist. 17. quaest. 2. et quodl. 17. art. 3. et in 3. dist. 23. quaest. unica; Ipsum tametsi Suarez lib. 2. de gratia*, cap. 4. ad meliorem frugem revocare conetur. Eum sequuntur omnes Scotistae, et Nominales apud* Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 6. Ita Ocham quodl. 13: quaest. 7. Gabr. 3. dist. 23. quaest. 2. Durand. 1. dist. 17. quaest. 2. Bassolis 3. dist. 23. quaest. un. Vulpes p. 2. tom. 2. disp. 52. art. 7. Caietanus p. 2. quaest. 109. art. 4. et 2. 2. quaest. 171. art. 2. ad 3. ubi contendit, hanc esse D. Thomae sententiam. Capreolus 1. dist. 17. quaest. 1. art. 3. Palud. 3. dist. 23. quaestione 3. §. 3. tertio dicendum.

7 The SECOND opinion asserts that it is substantially supernatural. So D. Bonaventure here, whom D. Thomas follows 1. 2. question 6. art. 2., and the Thomists, and all the Doctors of the Society of Jesus suppose it, Suarez loc. cit. cap. 4. and lib. de auxil. cap. 1. Vasquez prima 2. disp. 187. cap. 2. Coninck de actibus supernaturalibus disp. 4. dub. 3. Molina in concordia, question 14. art. 13. disp. 7. and disputation 14. member 1. although Lorca disp. 9. de gratia, adduces him to the contrary, because in in concordia, question 14. art. 13. disp. 14. and 15. he says that to believe, to love, and to hope are natural acts as to substance; but Lorca does not notice that he wills only what other Scholastics, with D. Thomas question 171. art. 2., have signified in the same manner of speaking: that those acts, according to the generic reason, or as far as the part of the object is concerned, can be natural. The same think Medina p. 2. question 62. art. 2. Bannes 2. 2. question 6. art. 1. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 46. dub. 3. Lugo disp. 9. sect. 2. Amicus disp. 10. de fide, sect. 2. and other Recentiores everywhere, as Morandus in his single tractate, question 12. Peter a S. Joseph lib. 3. de fide, etc. cap. 3. resol. 5.

SECUNDA sententia asserit, esse substantialiter supernaturalem. Ita D. Bonau. hic, quem sequuntur D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 6. art. 2. ac Thomistae, et eam supponunt omnes Doctores Societatis Iesu, Suarez loc. cit. cap. 4. et lib. de auxil. cap. 1. Vasquez prima 2. disp. 187. cap. 2. Coninch. de actibus supernaturalibus disp. 4. dub. 3. Molina in concordia*, quaest. 14. art. 13. disp. 7. et disputatione 14. membro 1. tametsi* Lorca disp. 9. de gratia*, eum in contrarium afferat, eo quod* in concordia*, quaest. 14. art. 13. disp. 14. et 15. dicat, credere, diligere, et sperare esse naturales actus, quoad substantiam; sed non advertit Lorca, eum velle solum, quod alii Scholastici cum* D. Thom. quaest. 171. art. 2. eodem modo loquendi significarunt, actus illos secundum rationem genericam, seu quantum est ex parte obiecti, posse esse naturales. Idem sentiunt Medina p. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 6. art. 1. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 46. dub. 3. Lugo disp. 9. sect. 2. Amicus disp. 10. de fide*, sect. 2. et alii Recentiores passim, ut* Morandus tract. unico, quaest. 12. Petrus a S. Ioseph lib. 3. de fide*, etc. cap. 3. resol. 5.*

8 I ASSERT first, that the assent of faith is substantially supernatural.

ASSERO primo, assensum fidei esse substantialiter supernaturalem.

9 It is PROVED first from D. Bonaventure on 6. John. This is the work of God, that you believe, where he was speaking of faith: And below: No man can come to me, unless the Father, who sent me, draw him. Then S. Doctor proves it in 1. dist. 21. question last ad 1. from Matth. 11. No one knoweth the Son, but the Father: neither doth anyone know the Father, but the Son, and he to whom it shall please the Son to reveal him. He urges this passage also in de 7. Itineribus Aeternitatis, dist. 5. of the third Itinerary, and Itinerary 5. dist. 4. where he brings together many passages of Scripture: Matth. 16. Flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father. Psalm 84. I shall hear what the Lord God shall speak in me. Psalm 118. Reveal thou my eyes, and I shall consider the wondrous things of thy law. John 16. When the Paraclete shall come, he will teach you all things. 1 John 2. His unction will teach you of all things. 1 Cor. 2. But God hath revealed to us by his Spirit. And in 1. dist. 46. dub. 8. litt. he proves it by that 1 Corinthians 12. No man can say the Lord Jesus, but by the Holy Ghost.

PROBATUR primo a D. Bonau. ad 6. Ioan. Hoc est opus Dei, ut credatis*, ubi de fide loquebatur: Et infra:* Nemo potest venire ad me, nisi Pater, qui misit me, traxerit eum. Deinde id probat S. Doct. in 1. dist. 21. quaest. ult. ad 1. ex Matth. 11. Nemo novit Filium, nisi Pater: neque Patrem quis novit, nisi filius, et cui voluerit filius revelare. Hunc locum urget etiam de 7. Itineribus AEternitatis*, dist. 5.* Itineris tertii*, et* Itinere 5. dist. 4. ubi plura loca Scripturae conglobata affert, Matth. 16. Caro, et sanguis non revelavit tibi, sed Pater meus. Psal. 84. Audiam quid loquatur in me Dominus Deus. Psal. 118. Revela oculos meos, et considerabo mirabilia de lege tua. Ioan. 16. Cum venerit Paraclitus, ille docebit vos omnia. Prima Ioan. 2. Unctio docebit vos omnia. Prima Cor. 2. Nobis autem revelavit Deus per spiritum suum. Et in 1. dist. 46. dub. 8. litt. id probat illo prima Corinth. 12. Nemo potest dicere Dominus Iesus, nisi in Spiritu Sancto.

10 He proves the same here from 1 Cor. 12. To another is given faith in the same Spirit: but he is speaking of graces freely given: Therefore also of the act of formless faith. Then from the Gloss on that 1 Cor. 13. And if I should have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, where he notes that it must be a gift of God, since it works miracles above nature.

> Idem probat hic ex prima Cor. 12. Alii datur fides in eodem Spiritu: loquitur autem de gratiis gratis datis: Ergo et de actu fidei informis. Deinde ex Glossa ad id prima Cor. 13. Et si habuero omnem fidem, ita ut montes transferam*, ubi adnotat, debere esse donum Dei, cum mirabilia supra naturam operetur.*

11 He also brings forward that Rom. 8. You have not received the spirit of bondage again in fear. Now fear arises from formless faith, as the Council of Trent teaches.

> AFFERT etiam id Rom. 8. Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore. Timor autem oritur ex fide informi, ut docet Concilium Tridentinum.

12 FINALLY the Councils define that faith is supernatural and a gift of God. So the Second Council of Orange cap. 6. 8. 16. 25. and 27. Milevis cap. 4. Trident. sess. 6. can. 3. and cap. 5. 6. and 12. Celestine epist. 1. to the Bishops of Gaul. Innocent I. epist. 25. and 26. which are 92. and 93. among the epistles of D. Augustine. The same is taught everywhere by S. Augustine de praedest. Sanctorum; de bono perseverantiae. S. Prosper con. Collatorem, from cap. 36. and dub. 8. ad capit. Gallorum, and S. Fulgentius de Incar. cap. 8.

> TANDEM definiunt Concilia, fidem esse supernaturalem et donum Dei. Sic Arausicanum secundum cap. 6. 8. 16. 25. et 27. Milevit. cap. 4. Trident. sess. 6. can. 3. et cap. 5. 6. et 12. Caelestinus epist. 1. ad Episcopos Galliae. Innocentius I. epist. 25. et 26. quae sunt 92. et 93. inter epistolas D. August. Idem docent passim S. August. de praedest. Sanctorum; de bono perseverantiae. S. Prosper con. Collatorem*, a cap. 36. et dub. 8.* ad capit. Gallorum*, et* S. Fulgentius de Incar. cap. 8.

13 MASTRIUS ANSWERS that the Scriptures, the Councils, and the Fathers indeed require a special help of God for the act of faith, not on account of its substantial supernaturalness, but on account of its mode. Therefore he says the Tridentine Council declares the help of God necessary that the act of faith be elicited as it ought, namely for justification. Therefore the help of God is necessary that we assent to the articles as we ought, that is, on account of the testimony of God. And therefore the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 6., describing that faith which disposes to justification, says that it is that by which we are freely moved toward God, believing that the things which have been divinely revealed and promised are true. Therefore they require the infused habit for the infallibility of the assent, not for the substance.

> RESPONDET Mastrius*, Scripturas, Concilia, et Patres exigere quidem auxilium Dei speciale ad actum fidei, non propter supernaturalitatem substantialem eius, sed propter modum eius. Ideo ait Tridentinum, auxilium Dei necessarium esse, ut eliciatur actus fidei* sicut oportet*, nempe ad iustificationem. Itaque auxilium Dei necessarium est, ut assentiamur articulis,* sicut oportet*, idest propter testimonium Dei. Et ideo Concil. Tridentinum sess. 6. cap. 6. eam fidem describens, quae ad iustificationem disponit, ait, eam esse, qua libere movemur in Deum, credentes, vera esse, quae divinitus revelata, et promissa sunt. Igitur habitum infusum exigunt ad infallibilitatem assensus, non ad substantiam.*

14 But the formality of the Divine revelation is the essence of faith, not an accidental mode, nor is the infallibility of the assent the formality of the supernatural act; for the heretic also firmly assents to the articles in which he agrees with us; and yet that is not supernatural faith. Nor let Mastrius say that those articles are believed by the heretic with human faith; for he believes them as revealed in the divine Scriptures, to which he gives credence.

> At formalitas revelationis Divinae est essentia fidei, non modus accidentalis, neque infallibilitas assensus est formalitas actus supernaturalis; nam et haereticus firmiter assentitur articulis, in quibus nobiscum convenit; et tamen illa non est fides supernaturalis. Neque dicat Mastrius*, eos articulos credi ab haeretico fide humana; nam credit ea, ut revelata Scripturis divinis, quibus credit.*

15 It is PROVED from D. Bonaventure secondly, by a reason deduced from this. By no natural or acquired habit is the intellect raised above itself, so as to assent to the First Truth for its own sake, and above all things: But by the habit of faith the intellect is raised in the manner said: Therefore.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. secundo, ratione hinc deducta. Secundum nullum habitum naturalem, vel acquisitum, elevatur intellectus supra se, ut assentiat primae veritati propter se, et super omnia: Sed habitu fidei elevatur intellectus modo dicto: Ergo.

16 It is PROVED thirdly from D. Bonaventure. That which produces substantially supernatural effects is of the same order, because there is no effect above the cause; but faith is the cause of miracles, not only according to the subject or mode, but also according to substance: Therefore. The minor is proved Matth. 7. and at the end Act. 19. and elsewhere.

> PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonau. Id, quod producit effectus substantialiter supernaturales, est eiusdem ordinis, quia non est effectus super causam; sed fides est causa miraculorum, non modo secundum subiectum vel modum, sed etiam secundum substantiam: Ergo. Minor probatur Matth. 7. et ult. Act. 19. et alibi.

17 It is PROVED fourthly in the body of the text. That which takes away from faith the reason of virtue takes away the substantial reason; but to believe from a human motive takes away the reason of virtue from faith: Therefore. The major is evident. The minor is proved; for to believe a man speaking is not praiseworthy in itself, but indeed often blameworthy.

> PROBATUR quarto in corpore. Id, quod tollit a fide rationem virtutis, tollit rationem substantialem; sed credere ex motivo humano tollit rationem virtutis a fide: Ergo. Maior est evidens. Minor probatur; nam credere homini dicenti, non est laudabile per se, imo saepe vituperabile.

18 It is PROVED fifthly from S. Doctor in the body of the text, because if, as to mode only, of greater certainty, help were given for the act of faith; it would follow that nature could, of itself, without elevation above nature, attain that greater intensity, if an intense cogitation were given in the order of nature: But this is false: Therefore. The minor is proved from 1 Timothy 1. I have obtained the mercy of God, that I may be faithful, where, as S. Augustine rightly weighs, he did not say that I may be more faithful, but that I may be faithful. See Cardinal de Lugo num. 33. Suarez tom. 4. in 3. p. disp. 3. sect. 6. and Vasq. 1. 2. disp. 187. cap. 2.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. in corpore, quia si quo ad modum tantum maioris certitudinis daretur auxilium ad actum fidei; sequeretur, naturam posse seipsa, absque elevatione supra naturam, attingere illam maiorem intentionem, si daretur cogitatio intensa in ordine naturae: Sed hoc est falsum: Ergo. Minor probatur ex prima Timoth. 1. Misericordiam Dei consecutus sum, ut essem fidelis*, ubi ut bene ponderat* S. August. non dixit, ut essem fidelior, sed, ut essem fidelis. Vide Cardinalem de Lugo num. 33. Suarez tom. 4. in 3. p. disp. 3. sect. 6. et Vasq. 1. 2. disp. 187. cap. 2.

19 From what has been said I conclude that the faithful have a permanent habitual gift for believing; otherwise they would not permanently have the help, so that whenever they will, they may elicit the act of faith. That this habit is given is so certain that it cannot be denied without temerity and error, as Lugo observes disp. 9. sect. 3., Salas tom. 2. in primam 2. tract. 10. disp. 3. sect. 4 and others at him, who indeed say that it is of faith. It was defined in the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 7. and in the Council of Mainz, celebrated in the year 1549.; and Peter John, in the time of Innocent III. was for this reason condemned and exhumed. See Lugo.

> Ex dictis colligo, fideles habere donum permanens habituale ad credendum, alioqui non haberent permanenter auxilium, ut semper, quando volunt, actum fidei eliciant. Hunc habitum dari, adeo certum est, ut sine temeritate, et errore negari non possit, ut advertunt Lugo disp. 9. sect. 3. Salas tom. 2. in primam 2. tract. 10. disp. 3. sect. 4 et alii apud eum, qui immo dicunt, esse de fide. Id definitum est in Concilio Trident. sess. 6. cap. 7. et in Concilio Moguntino, celebrato, anno 1549. et Petrus Ioannes, tempore Innocentii III. fuit ob id damnatus, et exhumatus. Vide Lugum.

20 You will OBJECT first with Mastrius, that the Councils speak of the acts of the way and of the acts of the fatherland with such diversity; for toward the latter they require supernatural help; but for the acts of the way they do not require absolutely the help of grace, but that they be made as they ought: Therefore they signify that these are not absolutely supernatural, but by reason of mode, so that there are given other acts of these virtues which are not as they ought, namely proportionate to justification, but natural: Thus Aversa urges p. 2. question 55. sect. 4.

> Obiicies primo cum Mastrio, Concilia tali diversitate loquuntur de actibus viae, et de actibus patriae; nam ad hos, exigunt auxilium supernaturale; ad actus autem viae non exigunt absolute auxilium gratiae, sed ut fiant, sicut oportet: Ergo significant, eos non esse supernaturales absolute, sed ratione modi, ita ut dentur alii actus istarum virtutum, qui non sint, sicut oportet, nempe ad iustificationem proportionati, sed naturales: Sic urget Aversa p. 2. quaest. 55. sect. 4.

21 It is ANSWERED, that that clause is added to define what pertains only to faith; because the Fathers of the Council knew that the opinions of the Nominalists and others existed, saying that natural acts of these virtues are given; and of others denying that the habits of Faith, Hope, and Charity are infused for supernatural acts, because the Council of Vienna had accepted the assertive part only as the more probable. Therefore the Council of Trent, willing to eradicate every contrary opinion, defines that the virtues are infused for these acts, although it does not call them habits, as Vega observes lib. 7. in Trident. cap. 24., who was himself present at it. The same says Soto, an eyewitness lib. 2. de natura, et gratia, cap. 19. Therefore the Council does not suppose that there are given other natural acts of these virtues and others as they ought, but whatever is opinionatively circulated, it decrees that these acts are supernatural, and that for eliciting them habits are infused for eliciting their substance simply.

> Respondetur, particulam illam apponi ad definiendum id, quod solum ad fidem spectat, quia sciebant Patres Concilii, extare opiniones Nominalium, et aliorum, dicentium, dari actus harum virtutum naturales: et aliorum negantium, infundi habitus Fidei, Spei, et Charitatis ad actus supernaturales, eo quod Viennense Concilium partem assertivam, solum ut probabiliorem, acceptasset. Igitur Concilium Trident. omnem contrariam opinionem volens eradicare, definit, infundi virtutes ad hos actus, licet non nominet eos, habitus, ut observat Vega lib. 7. in Trident. cap. 24. cui ipse interfuit. Idem dicit Soto, testis oculatus lib. 2. de natura, et gratia, cap. 19. Itaque non supponit Concilium, dari

alios actus virtutum istarum naturales, et alios sicut oportet*, sed quidquid opiniative circumferatur, statuit, hos actus esse supernaturales, et ad eos eliciendos infundi habitus ad simpliciter substantiam eorum eliciendam.*

22 But suppose it grants that there are given some natural acts similar to them, imitating those which are perfect as they ought; it is not inferred that true acts of faith, resting on human authority, are given, as Coninck notes from D. Bonaventure in the body of the text.

At esto supponat, dari aliquos actus similes naturales, imitantes eos, qui sunt perfecti, sicut oportet; non infertur, dari actus fidei veros, humana nixos authoritate, ut notat Coninchius ex D. Bonau. in corpore.

23 Mastrius INSISTS. If the mind of the Council was that we can elicit acts indeed similar, but not of the same substantial reason; there was no reason for adding as it ought, but it would have said absolutely that the acts of faith cannot be elicited; just as the Council of Vienna speaks absolutely, that a special help is necessary for seeing God.

Instat Mastrius. Si mens Concilii erat, nos posse elicere actus quidem similes, non autem eiusdem substantialis rationis; non erat cur adiiceret sicut oportet*, sed absolute dixisset, non posse elici actus fidei; sicut C. Viennense absolute loquitur, necessarium esse speciale auxilium ad Deum videndum.*

24 I shall say, that the Council of Trent adds that clause to exclude all acts whatsoever that were circulated as sufficient, even as to mode supernatural, introduced by Scotus and his followers, and on that account to define the necessity of the infused habits; and although it does not define as to this, it nevertheless defines as to excluding other opinions, asserting that natural acts of the virtues of Faith, Hope, etc. are given; and that these suffice — which nevertheless are not acts of true virtue of faith, as S. Bonaventure teaches in the body of the text. The Council of Vienna, however, speaks absolutely, because the Beguines and Beghards, against whom it acts, ascribed to natural intellectual virtue the efficacious power of seeing God; nor was anything else circulated. And if you say that then the writings of Scotus existed, saying that God can by absolute power raise someone with natural powers to seeing God, or at least that the light of glory is not necessary. I say, that first thing is not asserted by Scotus, nor is he rightly involved among the Beghards; rather it is related in his life that he died of the pains that assailed him, bathed in sweat, after the disputation against the Beghards; nor did the Council wish to condemn the opinion of Scotus, who judges that yet an actual help is required, substantially necessary, as is evident I. dist. 6. question 2. art. 1. but on this p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 11. from num. 145.

Dicam*, Concilium Trident. apponere illam particulam ad excludendos omnes actus quoscumque, qui circumferebantur sufficientes, etiam quoad modum supernaturales, a Scoto, et asseclis invectos, et ob id definire necessitatem infusorum habituum; et licet hoc non definiat, quoad hoc; tamen definit quoad alias opiniones excludendas, asserentes actus naturales virtutum Fidei, Spei, etc. dari; et hos sufficere, qui tamen non sunt verae virtutis fidei actus, ut docet S. Bonau.* in Corpore. Concilium autem Viennae absolute loquitur, quia Beguinae, et Beguardi, contra quos agit, adscribebant virtuti naturali necessariae intellectivae virtutem efficacem ad Deum videndum; nec aliud circumferebatur. Et si dicas, tunc extitisse scripta Scoti, dicentis, posse Deum absoluta potentia elevare aliquem naturalibus viribus ad Deum videndum, vel saltem non esse necessarium lumen gloriae. Dico, illud primum non asseri a Scoto, neque ipsum recte involvi inter Beguardos; imo refertur in eius vita, quod sit mortuus vi dolorum, qui eum invaserunt, sudore madentem, post disputationem contra Beguardos; neque Concilium voluit damnare opinionem Scoti, qui existimat requiri tamen auxilium actuale substantialiter necessarium, ut constat I. dist. 6. quaest. 2. art. 1. sed de hoc p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 11. a num. 145.

25 You will OBJECT secondly with Scotus 1. dist. 17. question 2. and quodl. 17. art. 2. If the act of faith were substantially of a higher order, such that man cannot attain such acts with his own powers, as to physical entity; man could know that he is in grace from the promptitude and facility with which he would experience in himself the crediting and loving of God, and everyone would know by experience when he exercises supernatural acts.

> Obiicies secundo cum Scoto 1. dist. 17. quaest. 2. et quodl. 17. art. 2. Si actus fidei esset substantialiter altioris ordinis, ut nequeat homo propriis viribus tales actus attingere, quoad physicam entitatem; posset homo cognoscere, se esse in gratia ex promptitudine, et facilitate, qua experiretur in seipso ad credendum, et diligendum Deum, et unusquisque experimento sciret, quandonam exercet actus supernaturales.

26 It is ANSWERED first from D. Bonaventure dist. 25. that knowing faith implies nothing; but it does not follow that one knows that he is in grace, because many unknown things are required for this, as, that that act of charity be above all, while I can have, from vincible ignorance, aversion from God, and conversion to some created object. Further, Cardinal Lugo proceeds disp. 5. sect. 7., and exceeding, receding disp. 5. sect. 7. num. 115. Then Scotus's inference does not follow (let them say secondly) because from infused faith alone one cannot elicit an act of believing, from Scotus quodl. 14 art. 1. H. and Mastr. 191. Therefore he does not argue well here, that I, eliciting a supernatural act of faith, already clearly recognize it, because a natural act is mixed with it, which does not allow him to distinguish it from the supernatural act. Add, that the habit does not at once give that facility, for we experience that such acts are arduous. Hence neither do we perceive the habit immediately by touch; and the facility, if any comes, you ascribe to the acquired habit.

> Respondetur primo ex D. Bonau. dist. 25. nihil implicare, sciri fidem; at non sequitur, sciri, se esse in gratia, quia ad hoc requiruntur multa ignota, ut, quod actus ille charitatis sit super omnia, dum possum habere ex ignorantia vincibili aversionem a Deo, et conversionem ad aliquod creatum obiectum. Amplius procedit Lugo Cardin. disp. 5. sect. 7. atque excedit recedens disp. 5. sect. 7. num. 115. Deinde non sequitur Scoti illatio (dicant secundo) quia ex fide sola infusa non potest quis elicere actum credendi ex Scoto quodl. 14 art. 1. H. et Mastr. 191. Igitur non bene hic arguit, me elicientem actum fidei supernum, illum iam clare agnoscere, quia ei admixtus est naturalis, qui non sinit illum distinguere ab actu superno. Adde, habitum non illico dare illam facilitatem, nam experimur arduos esse tales actus. Unde nec habitum palpo statim percipimus; et facilitatem, si quae adveniat, habitui acquisito adscribas.

27 You will OBJECT thirdly. That which can be actualized by another is not of a different order from it: the natural act is perfectible by the supernatural: Therefore.

> Obiicies tertio. Quod est actuabile ab alio, non est diversi ordinis ab eo: actus naturalis est perfectibilis a superno: Ergo.

28 It is ANSWERED easily, that the natural act has its ultimate specific gradual being, nor is it potential as to the supernatural act except by moral potency, and that they are twins specifically distinct. So also natural and supernatural potency differ in genus.

> Respondetur facile, actum naturalem habere suum esse ultimum graduale specificum, nec esse potentialem ad actum supernaturalem, nisi morali potentia, esseque geminos specie distinctos. Sic et potentia naturalis, et supernaturalis differunt genere.

Question XXVIII: Whether the difference between faith and other acts, natural as opposed to supernatural moral acts, always arises from the object

[1] This difficulty is common also to the other virtues: whether natural and supernatural acts always differ from their objects, formal objects certainly; for the material object can be attained by several virtues.

> Utrum differentia FIDEI, et aliorum actuum naturalium a supernaturalibus moralibus proveniat semper ex obiecto.
> Haec difficultas est communis etiam aliis virtutibus: an differant semper actus naturales, et supernaturales earum ex obiectis, formalibus sane; nam materiale obiectum potest a pluribus attingi virtutibus.

[2] The first opinion is negative; for although very many differ thus, still other natural acts differ from supernatural ones only on the part of the principle, inasmuch as one requires to be made by a solely natural principle, while the other requires to arise from a supernatural principle. So Scotus 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. and dist. 27. quaest. 1. whom the Scotists follow, as Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 7. and Molina in concordia, disput. 7. and disp. 13. and 14. and disp. 52. Coninck de supernaturalitate actuum, disp. 5. dub. 1. 2. and 3. Granado in p. 1. in prooem. disp. 5. sect. 4 num 13. and quaest. 12. tract. 5. disp. 8. num. 6. and 1. 2. tract. 1. disp. 4. sect. 3. Salas in primam 2. tom. 2. tract. 11. disput. 6. THE SECOND opinion is that these acts differ from the formal object. So St. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 3. Cajetan, Conrad, and Medina as at Salas loc. cit. Vasquez tom. 1. in primam secundae, disp. 86. cap. 6. and tom. 2. disp. 195. cap. 3. Suarez lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 11. and tom. 4. in 3. p. disp. 3. sect. 6. num. 10. and the following section. The same Turrianus opusc. 2. de gratia, disp. 8. and opusc. 13. dub. 3. Curiel in the present quaest. 109. art. 1. dub. 3. §. 4. Tanner. Bannes, Amicus disp. 10. sect. 4. and others as at Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 7. in 3. Cardinal de Lugo disp. 9. sect. 1. The Mediator comes forward saying that, possibly, an act of natural virtue and an infused one are not distinguished on the part of the formal object; in fact, however, natural acts are given around the same object as supernatural ones.

> Prima opinio est negativa; esto enim quamplures ita differant; adhuc tamen alii actus naturales a supernaturalibus differunt solum ex parte principii, quatenus unus petit fieri a solo principio naturali; alter vero exigit oriri a principio supernaturali. Ita Scotus 3. dist. 25. quaest. 2. et dist. 27. quaest. 1. quem sequuntur Scotistae apud Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 7. et Molina in concordia, disput. 7. et disp. 13. et 14. et disp. 52. Coninch. de supernaturalitate actuum, disp. 5. dub. 1. 2. et 3. Granado in p. 1. in prooem. disp. 5. sect. 4 num 13. et quaest. 12. tract. 5. disp. 8. num. 6. et 1. 2. tract. 1. disp. 4. sect. 3. Salas in primam 2. tom. 2. tract. 11. disput. 6. *SECUNDA sententia est, eos actus differre ex obiecto formali. [3] I ASSERT with the second opinion that supernatural acts differ from natural acts by the formal object.

4 It is PROVED first here by St. Bonaventure from the Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers alleged in the preceding question, which distinguish supernatural acts as substantially requiring the help of Divine grace in order to attain their object. Hence the Second Council of Orange, can. 5. and 25. condemns those who say that the faith by which we believe in God is natural, as he confirms by the testimony of the Apostle Philip. 1. To you it is given for Christ, not only to believe in him, etc. And the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 6. teaches that man is disposed to justification while he is freely moved to believe in God that those things which he has said are true. And this is that as is fitting, can. 3. From these the Holy Doctor draws the fourth fundamental argument, on which he relies in the body: By no natural or acquired habit is the intellect raised above itself, so as to assent to the first truth for its own sake, and above all things: Therefore the habit of Inform Faith has acts from the object not attainable by natural or acquired virtue, by reason of the object. On this argument Suarez relies, lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 11. It is confirmed, moreover, because the supernatural virtues would be superfluous, if their object could be attained by nature. And if the act is supernatural, it must be occupied about an object of a higher order, not attainable by natural virtue; and thus exceed the mode of acting of the natural potency.

> PROBATUR primo hic a D. Bonav. e Scripturis, Conciliis, et Patribus, allegatis quaestione praecedenti, distinguentibus actus supernaturales substantialiter exigentes auxilium Divinae gratiae, ut obiectum suum attingant. Hinc Concilium Araus. 2. can. 5. et 25. damnat eos, qui dicunt, fidem, qua in Deum credimus, esse naturalem, ut confirmat testimonio Apostoli Philip. 1. Vobis datum est pro Christo, non solum ut in eum credatis, etc. Et Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. docet, hominem ad iustificationem disponi, dum libere movetur in Deum credens, vera esse, quae ab ipso dicta sunt. Et hoc est illud sicut oportet, can. 3. Ex his eruit S. Doct. argumentum quartum fundamentale, quo nititur in corpore: Secundum nullum habitum naturalem, vel acquisitum, elevatur intellectus supra se, ut assentiat primae veritati propter se, et super omnia: Ergo habitus fidei informis habet actus ex obiecto, non attingibiles a virtute naturali, vel acquisita, ratione obiecti. Hoc argumento nititur Suarez lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 11. Confirmatur, alioqui virtutes supernaturales essent superfluae, si earum obiectum posset a natura attingi. Et si actus est supernaturalis, debet versari circa obiectum altioris ordinis, non attingibile a virtute naturali; et ita excedere modum agendi potentiae naturalis.

5 Mastrius ANSWERS num. 223. that although the supernatural object, say God as beatifying supernaturally, cannot first be attained without revelation, nevertheless what is revealed can be naturally desired, or the Mystery believed with someone narrating it; and then the supernatural object does not exercise the reason of its supernaturalness; and thus with respect to such an act it is not a supernatural object in the act exercised; but only in the act signified. Therefore the supernaturalness of the act is not attended to on the part of the object; but on the part of the subject.

> RESPONDET Mastrius num. 223. licet obiectum supernaturale, puta Deus, ut beans supernaturaliter, nequeat primo attingi sine revelatione, tamen revelatum, posse naturaliter desiderari, vel Mysterium credi aliquo narrante; et tunc obiectum supernaturale non exercere rationem suae supernaturalitatis; et ita respectu talis actus, non est supernaturale obiectum in actu exercito; sed solum in actu signato. Itaque supernaturalitas actus non attenditur ex parte obiecti; sed ex parte subiecti.

6 Yet this stinks badly, and savors of Pelagianism, that after revelation has been made man could believe by his own powers; for he always needs, by virtue of supernatural help, otherwise at the first elicited act, the help of God would be superfluous for subsequent ones, by reason of the excellence of the object, which always sufficiently exceeds natural powers.

Hoc tamen male olet, et sapit Pelagianismum, quod facta revelatione possit homo credere suis viribus; nam semper virtute auxilii supernaturalis eget, alioqui elicito primo actu, superfluum est Dei auxilium ad subsequentes, ratione excellentiae obiecti, quod satis vires naturales semper excedit.

7 Suarez URGES: If anyone could attain by a natural act the truth of God as revealing the Mystery of the Incarnation, that act will be as certain as the supernatural one: Therefore it will have every condition in order to salvation, and will be as is fitting. It is confirmed; for since Trent defines that the gift of the Holy Spirit is necessary that anyone may be able to believe, hope, love and repent, as is fitting; he speaks also of the believer, who otherwise also had similar acts, while he was otherwise converted; otherwise someone could be converted a tenth time by natural powers.

URGET Suarez. Si quis posset actu naturali attingere veracitatem Dei, ut est revelans Mysterium Incarnationis, ille actus erit tam certus, quam supernaturalis: Ergo habebit omnem conditionem in ordine ad salutem, et erit sicut oportet. Confirmatur; nam cum Tridentinum definit, necessarium esse donum Spiritus Sancti, ut quispiam credere, sperare, diligere et poenitere valeat, sicut oportet*; loquitur etiam de fideli, qui alias etiam habuit similes actus, dum alias conversus est; alioqui posset aliquis decima vice converti viribus naturalibus.*

8 Arriaga ANSWERS sect. 2. that the Philosopher can assent by a natural act to this article: God is one, with as much certainty as is assented to from revelation, on the part of the object; wherefore he says, help is required not on account of certainty; but on account of proportion with grace, which is supernatural.

RESPONDET Arriaga sect. 2. posse Philosophum assentiri actu naturali huic articulo: Deus unus est*, tanta certitudine, quanta assentitur ex revelatione, ex parte obiecti; quare ait, auxilium requiri non propter certitudinem; sed propter proportionem cum gratia, quae est supernaturalis.*

9 But Mastrius, conceding that it is required on account of greater certainty as well, denies that the assent of the philosopher would be equally certain as that of the believer.

Mastrius vero concedens, requiri propter maiorem etiam certitudinem, negat, fore aeque certum assensum philosophi, ac fidelis.

10 Suarez INSISTS that each relies on the truth of God, which is one.

INSTAT Suarez, utrumque niti Dei veracitate, quae una est.

11 Mastrius ANSWERS that the philosopher relies on the truth of God, known by human faith, which is fallible, and therefore that act is not so certain.

RESPONDET Mastrius, philosophum niti veracitate Dei, cognita fide humana, quae est fallibilis, et ideo actus ille non est ita certus.

12 YET the Holy Doctor ARGUES better, and urges, from the disproportion of the object, on account of which the help of God is still necessary; otherwise the help would be superfluous, if nature could attain it; for the Truth of God is regarded by a supernatural act for its own sake, as the Holy Doctor says, but the truth is regarded by the philosopher on account of natural reasons, which are of a lower order.

MELIUS tamen arguit, et urget S. Doct. ex improportione obiecti, ob quam necessarium adhuc est Dei auxilium; alioqui superfluum esset auxilium, si natura eo possit attingere; Veracitas enim Dei actu supernaturali respicitur propter se, ut ait S. Doct. at veracitas a philosopho respicitur ob rationes naturales, quae sunt inferioris ordinis.

13 It is PROVED second by St. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 13. quaest. 3. ad 1. and dist. 26. quaest. 2. ad 1. Virtues and habits are specified by acts; and acts by formal objects: Therefore virtues of diverse species must have objects of diverse species; but infused and acquired faith are of diverse species: therefore they must have objects of diverse species. It is confirmed from St. Bonaventure loc. cit. in 3. whom Scotus follows 3. dist. 23. §. ad quaestionem; and quodl. 14. ac. 17. where he distinguishes infused faith from acquired on the part of the motive and the formal object; because infused faith relies on the immediate testimony of God, beneath which falsehood cannot subsist. But acquired faith relies on created testimony, beneath which falsehood can subsist.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 13. quaest. 3. ad 1. et dist. 26. quaest. 2. ad 1. Virtutes, et habitus specificantur ab actibus; et actus ab obiectis formalibus: Ergo virtutes diversae speciei debent habere obiecta diversae speciei; sed fides infusa, et acquisita sunt diversae speciei: ergo debent habere obiecta diversae speciei. Confirmatur ex D. Bonavent. loc. cit. in 3. quem sequitur Scotus 3. dist. 23. §. ad quaestionem; et quodl. 14. ac. 17. ubi fidem infusam ab acquisita distinguit ex parte motivi, et obiecti formalis; eo quod fides infusa nititur immediate testimonio Dei, cui nequit subesse falsum. Fides vero acquisita, testimonio creato, cui potest subesse falsum.

14 Mastrius ANSWERS num. 228. from what was said num. 208. that virtues indeed of the same order have a diverse object, but not so virtues of diverse orders, because they are often subordinate; for to the supernatural habit is subordinated the habit of the natural order, as to its proper rule.

> RESPONDET Mastrius num. 228. ex dictis num. 208. quod virtutes quidem eiusdem ordinis habent diversum obiectum, non sic virtutes diversi ordinis, quia saepe sunt subordinatae; habitui enim supernaturali subordinatur habitus ordinis naturalis, tanquam propriae regulae.

15 CONTRA; because subordination, or subalternation always adds something, accidental indeed to the subalternating, but essential to the subalternated. Thus Perspective adds to the Geometric object, which is figure, being visual; and Music to Arithmetic, of numbers, being of sounds; whence the subalternating is always distinct as to object. Next it is false that the natural habit is subalternated to the supernatural, first, because the latter contains more than the natural. Then, because for this reason supernatural things require the help of God, because they exceed the whole order of nature; otherwise if such an object can be attained by natural virtue, grace is certainly superfluous, which is Pelagian, as Suarez also infers. I suppose, moreover, that they are supernatural substantially, but grant it as to mode; still that mode cannot be attained, and is essential to that habit: and it adds a new formal reason, because by this it transcends the power of nature. That it constitutes the formal reason is proved; because the honesty of that virtue, as far as we are concerned, with divine revelation removed, holds itself as the object; for it moves to that virtue under this reason, as Lugo advertises num. 19.

> CONTRA; quia subordinatio, seu subalternatio semper addit aliquid, accidentale quidem subalternanti; sed essentiale subalternato. Sic Perspectiva addit obiecto Geometrico, quod est figura, esse visuale; et Musica Arithmeticae numeris, esse sonorum; unde subalternans semper obiecto distincta est. Deinde falsum est, naturalem habitum subalternari supernaturali, primo, quia iste plus continet, quam naturalis. Deinde, quia ideo supernaturalibus necessarium est Dei auxilium, quia totum ordinem naturae excedunt; alioqui si tale obiectum potest attingi a virtute naturali, profecto superfluit gratia, quod est Pelagianum, ut infert etiam Suarez. Suppono autem, esse supernaturales substantialiter, at esto quoad modum; adhuc ille modus nequit attingi, et est essentialis illi habitui: atque rationem novam addit formalem, quia per hanc transcendit naturae vim. Quod vero constituat rationem formalem, probatur; quia honestas illius virtutis, ut nobis, ablata divina revelatione, se tenet ut obiectum; movet enim sub hac ratione ad virtutem illam, ut advertit Lugo num. 19.

16 But Mastrius ANSWERS 232. and Lugo num. 25. that the necessity of grace is not destroyed by that opinion; because this necessity is not proved from the motive or the object, but from the proportion which these acts have with supernatural beatitude, to which faith is ordered, and from the excellent mode of attaining such an object.

RESPONDET vero Mastrius 232. et Lugo num. 25. non destrui illa opinione necessitatem gratiae; quia haec necessitas non probatur ex motivo, vel obiecto, sed ex proportione, quam hi actus habent cum beatitudine supernaturali, ad quam fides ordinatur, et ex modo excellenti attingendi tale obiectum.

17 BUT on the contrary it was shown above that this supernaturalness is substantial to the acts, and accordingly arises from the objects from which the acts are specified, according to the doctrine of Aristotle.

AT contra ostendi supra, hanc supernaturalitatem esse substantialem actibus, atque adeo provenire ex obiectis unde specificantur actus, iuxta Aristotelis doctrinam.

18 You will object first. Natural and supernatural love of God regard the same object, namely the divine goodness. And if you say that natural love regards God as the author of nature, but supernatural love as the author of supernatural gifts: Scotus REPLIES 3. dist. 27. quaest. unica, art. 2. grant some diversity comes from this in the love of concupiscence; nevertheless none will come in the love of friendship, by which God is loved for his own sake, and by which he is good in himself.

Obiicies primo. Amor Dei naturalis, et supernaturalis respiciunt idem obiectum, nempe divinam bonitatem. Et si dicas, amorem naturalem respicere Deum, ut est auctor naturae, amotem vero supernaturalem, ut est auctor donorum supernaturalium: Replicat Scotus 3. dist. 27. quaest. unica, art. 2. esto aliqua diversitas inde eveniat in amore concupiscentiae; nulla tamen eveniet in amore amicitiae, quo amatur Deus propter se, et qua est bonus in se.

19 But in truth I answer, that the love of friendship also regards God as a good by absolute goodness, which is supernaturally communicable, and indeed this known and objected through revelation; but that he is loved by natural love of friendship as a good by goodness communicable through nature, naturally objected. From which the opposition of Mastrius num. 215. and of Coninck disp. 5. dubio 3. also collapses.

Enim vero respondeo*, etiam amorem amicitiae respicere Deum, ut bonum bonitate absoluta, quae supernaturaliter est communicabilis, et hac quidem cognita, et obiecta per revelationem; at vero amore amicitiae naturali amari, ut bonum bonitate communicabili per naturam, naturaliter obiecta. Ex quo ruit etiam oppositio Mastrii* num. 215. et Coninchii disp. 5. dubio 3.

20 You will object secondly. If acquired virtue cannot tend to the same object to which infused tends, we would easily discern when we elicit an act of Faith, and of supernatural Charity; and accordingly we would know ourselves constituted in the grace of God.

Obiicies secundo. Si virtus acquisita non possit tendere in idem obiectum, in quod tendit infusa, facile discerneremus, quando elicimus actum Fidei, et Charitatis supernaturalem; atque adeo sciremus, nos in Dei gratia constitutos.

21 It is answered from what was said in the preceding quaest., that it is not certain to me that the supernatural object is loved above all things, because by invincible ignorance there can be some obstacle of sin.

> Respondetur ex dictis quaest. praecedenti, non constare mihi, obiectum supernaturale amari super omnia, quia potest esse ex ignorantia vincibili aliquod obstaculum peccati.

22 You will object thirdly. When someone narrates to me that the Son of God was incarnate, or another similar article, I naturally hear those voices, and can naturally conceive that whole supernatural object; and then the will can be borne to such an object with love, loving Christ, emptied for me, so that this may be the motive reason. So Mastrius, and Auversa.

23 It is answered from St. Bonaventure. that hearing that is indeed the material [element] of faith, but formally it is not perceived by assent, or not thought by assent, as faith requires, unless the Divine light be present, or the habit of faith, without which he will not assent to any article, nor believe, nor apprehend it as possible; since it is against the course of nature, and consequently neither will he love.

> Respondetur ex D. Bonav. auditum illum esse quidem materiale fidei, sed formaliter non percipi assensu, seu non cogitari assensione, ut fides exigit, nisi adsit lumen Divinum, vel habitus fidei, sine quibus non assentietur articulo alicui, neque credet, neque apprehender, eum possibilem; cum sit contra naturae cursum, et consequenter neque diliget.

24 You will insist. By acquired faith anyone can believe God to be Triune, even after becoming a heretic he loses faith, then he believes that by human faith, even if he believes by the motive of the first truth revealing in the same way as before he believed clothed with faith; otherwise he would acknowledge that he has lost faith.

> Instabis. Fide acquisita potest quispiam credere Deum Trinum, etiam postquam factus haereticus amittit fidem, tunc id credit fide humana, etiamsi credat motivo veritatis primae, revelantis eodem modo, quo ante credebat fide amictus; alioqui agnosceret, se amisisse fidem.

25 They commonly answer from St. Bonaventure. that the heretic believes the Mystery of the Trinity in a diverse manner before the fall, and after he has lost faith, denying e. g. the Church, and still believing the Trinity: for before he believed immediately, as revealed by divine faith; now however by human faith; And indeed that revelation enters the formal object I showed quaest. 2. Therefore he no longer believes revelation, or the divine truth revealing, while he denies the Church, through which it is revealed; and moreover he has a perverse affection about the motives of faith, and about the formal object, which Arriaga disp. 14. num. 18. and Mastrius, n. 219. undeservedly deny. Nor does he sufficiently advert to the difference of assents, because in these internal acts natural and supernatural motives are found, as Suarez advertises lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 11. nor is it so easy as Arriaga and Mastrius feign to themselves.

> Respondent communiter ex D. Bonau. diverso modo credere haereticum Mysterium Trinitatis ante lapsum, et postquam amisit fidem, negando v. g. Ecclesiam, et adhuc credendo Trinitatem: nam ante credebat immediate, ut fide divina revelatum; nunc autem fide humana; Et sane revelationem ingredi obiectum formale, ostendi quaest. 2. Igitur non amplius credit revelationi, seu divinae veritati revelanti, dum negat Ecclesiam, per quam revelatur; et praeterea habet affectum pravum circa motiva fidei, et circa obiectum formale, quod immerito negat Arriaga disp. 14. num. 18.

et Mastrius, n. 219. Neque satis advertit differentiam assensuum, quia in his actibus internis reperiuntur motiva naturalia, et supernaturalia, ut advertit Suarez lib. 2. de gratia, cap. 11. nec adeo facile est, ut sibi fingunt Arriaga, et Mastrius.

26 You will object fourthly. Grant that the distinction of objects would infer the distinction of acts; nevertheless the specific unity of the object does not always conclude the unity of act and potency, because potencies diverse in species, by acts diverse in species, can be occupied about the same object, not only material; but even formal. It is proved. For the same object is the object of every intellect of the blessed, and also of every will of the blessed, and yet volition is not of the same species as intellection. Nor did Aristotle say that acts have unity from the unity of the object, but distinction. And although acts are specified on account of objects, they are not nevertheless specified as from an adequate principle; for they are specified also in order to the principles; indeed more from those on which they more depend.

Obiicies quarto. Esto distinctio obiectorum inferret distinctionem actuum; non tamen unitas obiecti specifica semper concludit unitatem actus, et potentiae, quia diversae specie potentiae, diversis specie actibus possunt circa idem obiectum, nedum materiale; sed etiam formale versari. Probatur. Idem enim obiectum est obiectum omnis intellectus beati, et etiam omnis voluntatis beatae, nec tamen volitio est eiusdem speciei cum intellectione. Neque Aristoteles dixit, quod actus habeant unitatem ab unitate obiecti, sed distinctionem. Et licet actus specificentur ob obiectis, non tamen tanquam a principio adaequato; specificantur enim etiam in ordine ad principia; imo magis ab his, a quibus magis pendent.

27 It is answered according to the oft-repeated principle of Scotus, that the same principle is constitutive and distinctive, giving to being [to be] one and in itself undivided, and distinct from any other; and accordingly if acts specify, or the specified show objects, they give them both. But what he says about intellect and will is most false; for they are borne to the material object by entirely diverse formal reasons. The Intellect, taking into itself the object, as true, for knowledge; the Will, going forth outside with love to the good, just as among all [authors] these potencies are also diverse. I equally deny what he said about the principle; for the potencies, which are principles, are made so much the more diverse inasmuch as they are so instituted for such operations, and accordingly natural potencies in order to various acts have been made various. Whence it comes about that the whole reason of diversity is excellently taken from the acts.

Respondetur iuxta principium decantatum Scoti*, idem esse principium constitutivum, et distinctivum, dans enti esse unum, et in se indivisum, et distinctum a quocumque alio; atque adeo si actus specificant, vel specificata ostendunt obiecta, dant eis utrumque. Quod vero dicit de intellectu, et voluntate, falsissimum est; nam diversis omnino rationibus formalibus feruntur in obiectum materiale. Intellectus, accipiendo in se obiectum, ut verum ad notitiam; Voluntas, extra amore egrediendo ad bonum, sicuti apud omnes diversae etiam sunt hae potentiae. Nego pariter id, quod dicebat de principio; nam potentiae, quae sunt principia, in tantum diversae sunt factae, in quantum taliter institutae sunt ad tales operationes, ac proinde potentiae naturales in ordine ad actus varios, factae sunt variae. Quo fit, ut optime tota ratio diversitatis ex actibus accipiatur.*

28 You will object fifthly. Let certain virtues be compared as to their acts. Natural mercy is borne to the needy, that it may relieve him; so also infused [mercy] is borne to the needy by the same motive of piety. So natural and infused Justice are borne to the restitution of a stolen thing, on account of the turpitude of theft.

29 It is answered with Vasquez, that they have a diverse formal object; for natural Justice and Mercy regard the neighbor as a political fellow-citizen; but infused [Justice and Mercy regard the neighbor] as joined to him in Christ, as a member of one body of the Church, and thus the virtues are distinguished; for as Aristotle says 3. Polit. cap. 3. Virtues are distinguished according to the diverse polities to which they order the subject.

Respondetur cum Vasquez, diversum habere obiectum formale; nam Iustitia, et Misericordia naturalis respicit proximum, ut concivem politicum; infusa vero, ut in Christo sibi, tanquam membrum unius corporis Ecclesiae, coniunctum, et sic distinguuntur virtutes; nam ut ait Aristoteles 3. Polit. cap. 3. Virtutes distinguuntur secundum diversas politias, ad quas ordinant subiectum.

30 But what Lugo explains num. 9. is against experience, and against the reason of merit; for thus one acting from a natural motive merits nothing, and Preachers ought to advert to this, lest so many works perish.

Quod vero explicat Lugo num. 9. esse contra experimentum, et contra meriti rationem; nam sic agens ex motivo naturali nihil meretur, atque deberent Praedicatores hoc adverterte, ne tot opera pereant.

31 The Holy Doctor resolves it in the Diaeta, at the end of title 1. that one must admonish him who makes alms, with what end he expends it, that he may obtain the merit of alms; for not every end is sufficient; but a supernatural end proportioned to the reward. Therefore at the end of the world the kingdom of heaven will be given with these words: For I was hungry, and you gave me to eat, etc. not because it is necessary to intend giving to Christ; but to give to the needy on account of the divine command.

Resolvit S. Doct. in Dieta, in fine tituli 1. admonendum, qui facit eleemosynam, quo fine eroget, ut meritum eleemosynae obtineat; non enim omnis finis est satis; sed finis supernaturalis proportionatus praemio. Ideo in fine mundi dabitur regnum caelorum, his verbis: Esurivi enim, et dedistis mihi manducare, etc. non quia necesse sit intendere dare Christo; sed dare inopi ob divinum praeceptum.

Question XXIX: On the effects of faith

1 § St. Thomas, quaest. 7. in two articles.

De FIDEI effectibus.

§ D. Thom. quaest. 7. per duos articulos.

2 St. Thomas enumerates twin effects of faith, namely Fear and the Purification of the heart. He gathers each from Scripture: Fear indeed from 2. of James: The demons believe, and tremble: Purification, from 15. Acts: Faith purifying hearts.

Geminos fidei effectus recenset D. Thomas, scilicet Timorem, et Purificationem cordis. Utrumque colligit e Scriptura: Timorem quidem ex 2. Iacobi: Daemones credunt, et contremiscunt: Purificationem, ex 15. Act. Fide purificans corda.

3 But St. Bonaventure more elegantly, serm. 1. de pluribus Martyribus, considering that chapter 11. ad Hebr. where the Apostle places the definition of faith, and establishes it as the foundation of the whole spiritual edifice, shows that almost all good things are derived from faith.

4 He PROVES it, however, because Every cause, the more first it is, so much the more universal for producing all effects, as is had in the book de causis. But he confirms this with examples; for the supreme Pontiff inflows more into the Church than the Archbishop; and the latter more than the Bishop; and he more than the Archdeacon. Similarly the heavens, the higher they are, the more universal causes of effects. Finally the root inflows more than the Trunk; and the latter more than the branches for producing fruits. Since therefore faith is the foundation and root of the virtues, it must have very many effects.

> PROBAT autem, quia Omnis causa quanto est prima, tanto universalis ad omnes effectus producendos, ut habetur in lib. de causis. Hoc autem exemplis confirmat; nam in Ecclesiam plus influit summus Pontifex, quam Archiepiscopus; et hic magis, quam Episcopus; et hic magis, quam Archidiaconus. Similiter caeli, quo superiores sunt, eo universaliores effectuum causae. Tandem radix influit magis, quam Truncus; et hic magis, quam rami ad fructus producendos. Cum itaque fides sit fundamentum, et radix virtutum; oportet, ut plurimos effectus habeat.

5 FIRST therefore he asserts with the Apostle ad Ephes. and Hebr. 11. The saints by faith conquered kingdoms, etc. that faith is a Shield for resisting the adversary, and conquering him. This encomium of faith St. Cyril of Jerusalem ascribes catech. 5.

> PRIMO igitur fidem esse Scutum ad resistendum adversario, atque vincendum, asserit cum Apostolo ad Ephes. et Hebr. 11. Sancti per fidem vicerunt regna*, etc. Hoc elogium fidei adscribit D. Cyrillus Hierosol.* catech. 5.

6 THEN he says that good works arise from faith: Whence it is said Hebr. 11. They wrought justice, that is, good works, which he enumerates at length in the Saints with an amphitheater erected. Thirdly faith is said to be the beginning of salvation: They obtained the promises.

> DEINDE ait, opera bona e fide exurgere: Unde dicitur Hebr. 11. Operati sunt iustitiam idest bona opera, quae late in Sanctis erecto Amphitheatro enumerat. Tertio dicitur fides esse initium salutis: Adepti sunt repromissiones.

7 Fourthly, he asserts faith to be illuminative of the intellect, and purgative of the affect, and fortificative of effects, and thus to rule all the potencies, which are sufficiently divided into the Cognitive, Volitive, and Operative.

> Quarto, fidem esse illuminativam intellectus asserit, et purgativam affectus, et effectus fortificativam, et ita omnes potentias regere, quae satis dividuntur in Cognitivam, Volitivam, et Operativam.

8 It is THEREFORE illuminative, like a ray of the Sun. But as the ray more illuminates the subject that is disposed, e. g. the air than water; water than earth, and a golden tablet more than a silver one, and silver more than wood; so also faith; whence Peter 2. cap. 1. having related the glorious transfiguration of the Son of God in the figure of the Sun, says: We have the more firm prophetic word: whereunto you do well to attend, as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. The Holy Doctor continues, that the sun illuminates and warms more quiet bodies, because man becomes wise and understanding while the soul rests, as Aristotle says 7. Phys. t. 20.

Therefore the Sun warms quiet water, not flowing. Thus therefore he illuminates and warms quiet minds with the ray of faith. From which he infers that heretics, because they are unstable and unquiet, are never illuminated or warmed. See the Seraphic Doctor wonderfully eloquent in his discourse.

> EST igitur illuminativa, veluti Solis radius. Sicut autem radius magis illuminat, quod subiectum est dispositum, v. g. aërem, quam aquam; aquam, quam terram, et tabulam auream, magis quam argenteam, et argenteam, plus quam ligneam; ita etiam fides; unde Petrus 2. cap. 1. relata gloriosa filii Dei transfiguratione in figuram Solis, ait: Habemus firmiorem propheticum sermonem: cui benefacitis attendentes, quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco, donec dies illucescat, et Lucifer oriatur in cordibus vestris. Pergit S. Doct. solem illuminare magis, et calefacere corpora quieta, quia homo fit sapiens, et intelligens, dum anima quiescit, ut ait Aristoteles 7. Phys. t. 20. Ideo Sol calefacit aquam quietam, non defluentem. Sic igitur mentes quietas radio fidei illuminat, et calefacit. Ex quo infert, haereticos, quia instabiles sunt, et inquieti, nunquam illuminari, vel calefieri. Vide Seraphicum mirabili discursu eloquentem.

9 Wherefore he says that that blind man Lucae 18. received light from Faith: Look, your faith has made you safe. For this is the first Light to salvation. Therefore Hebr. 11. it is said: It is the argument of things not appearing.

> Propterea ait, caecum illum Lucae 18. a Fide lucem accepisse: Respice, fides tua, te salvum fecit. Haec enim est primum Lumen ad salutem. Ideo Hebr. 11. dicitur: Est argumentum non apparentium.

10 SECONDLY he proves Faith to be purgative. And he proves it with St. Thomas first from that Act. 15. Then, because the soul, since it is the most noble image of God, drinks in impurities while it is mixed with earth through faults, and unlike God, appears monstrous. But Faith, like the Sun, purges the earthly dregs, raises the humors to heaven, resolves them into showers, and sends forth the flowing ones into rains, to adorn the earth with flowers and enrich it with fruits, and vivifies it lying half-dead with horrible rigidity in winter. Therefore it is said Rom. 1. to give life: The just lives by faith; for Faith is, let it be said, the Dawn, fleeing the shadows of nights. Whence also Baptism, which is the Sacrament of light, as is said in the same epistle ad Hebr. and regeneration, is called the Sacrament of faith. See the Holy Doctor.

> SECUNDO Fidem probat esse purgativam. Id vero probat cum D. Thom. primo ex illo Act. 15. Deinde, quia anima, cum sit nobilissima imago Dei, impuritates ebibit, dum terrae miscetur per culpas, et a Deo dissimilis, monstrosa apparet. Fides autem, veluti Sol expurgat terreas faeces, humores elevat ad caelum, in imbres resolvit, et defluentes in pluvias emittit ad ornandam floribus, et fructibus ditandam terram, eamque hyeme semimortuam, horribili rigore iacentem, vivificat. Ideo dicitur Rom. 1. dare vitam: Iustus ex fide vivit; est enim Fides, dici Aurora, fugans tenebras noctium. Unde et Baptismus, qui est Sacramentum luminis, ut dicitur eadem epistola ad Hebr. et regeneratio, dicitur Sacramentum fidei. Vide S. Doctorem.

11 THIRDLY he shows faith to be operative; for the more a virtue is first, and root, and foundation, so much the more does it inflow into operation. So (he says) the virtue of the heart, which is the root or foundation of all the members, inflows most, and makes the part more robust into which it inflows from nearer, and thus renders the right part stronger, whence the right arm is stronger for fighting. From which Aristotle says lib. 2. de hist. animalium cap. 2. that the Lion first moves the right foot to walking; And the woman who is pregnant with a male, when suddenly called, first moves the right foot rather than the left. Now faith is the foundation or substance Hebr. 11. because as substance is the foundation and basis of all accidents; so also Faith, of the virtues. Hence in the chapter brought forward the highest and glorious works of the Saints are enumerated: The saints by faith, etc. See the Seraphic Doctor, whose words I am reluctant to transfer, discoursing at length loc. cit.

> TERTIO fidem operativam ostendit; nam virtus quanto prior est, et radix; ac fundamentum, tanto plus influit operationis. Sic (ait) virtus cordis, quae est omnium membrorum radix, sive fundamentum, maxime influit, et robustiorem facit partem, in quam e viciniori influit, sic partem dexteram reddit fortiorem, unde brachium dextrum fortius est ad pugnandum. Ex quo ait Aristoteles lib. 2. de hist. animalium cap. 2. Leonem primum movere pedem dextrum ad ambulandum; Et mulier, quae praegnans est masculo, subito vocata, prius mover pedem dextrum, quam sinistrum. Iam vero fides est fundamentum, seu substantia Hebr. 11. quia sicut substantia est omnium fundamentum, et basis accidentium; ita et Fides, virtutum. Hinc allato cap. recensentur altissima, et gloriosa opera Sanctorum: Sancti per fidem, etc. Vide Seraphicum, cuius piget verba transferre loc. cit. prolixe disserentem.

12 He PROCEEDS indeed to show that Faith is the principle of Fear; Servile fear indeed has Inform Faith as its principle; for through faith we fear the eternal punishments believed; but the beginning of Filial fear is Formed Faith, which proposes to us the benefits of God, his goodness, promises, etc.

> PERGIT vero ostendere, Fidem esse Timoris principium; Servilis quidem est principium fides informis; nam per fidem timemus poenas creditas aeternas; Filialis vero timoris initium est fides formata, quae nobis proponit Dei beneficia, bonitatem, promissiones, etc.

13 St. Augustine enumerates the fruits of Faith serm. 10. de verbis Apostoli. Ambrose serm. 8. in Psalm. 118. and other Fathers as at St. Bonaventure in Pharetra lib. 2. cap. 23. and in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. and tit. 8. cap. 5. and p. 1. Brevil. cap. 2. and the following: and lib. 5. Compendii Theologicae veritatis, from cap. 19. to 21. In these places he says marvelous things, which it would be difficult to report worthily, unless transcribed word for word. Nor does he set forth less splendid things in the sermons of the Hexaemeron 2. 6. 8. Similarly also in other little works, which if I were to report, I would fill very many leaves; but I deliberately send you back to the Fountain, whence you may drink the veins of Paradise. I return to that sermon, in which the Holy Doctor seemed to concede Inform Faith to the demons; but he understands it, according to what was said by us with him quaest. 26.

> FIDEI fructus enumerat S. August. serm. 10. de verbis Apostoli. Ambrosius serm. 8. in Psalm. 118. et alii Patres apud D. Bonav. in Pharetra lib. 2. cap. 23. et in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 3. et tit. 8. cap. 5. et p. 1. Brevil. cap. 2. et sequentibus: et lib. 5. Compendii Theologicae veritatis, a cap. 19. ad 21. His locis mira dicit, quae arduum esset pro dignitate referre, nisi transcripta ad verbum. Nec minus praeclara in sermonibus Hexaemeronis 2. 6. 8. edisserit. Similiter et in aliis opusculis, quae si referrem, plurima replerem folia, sed consulto ad Fontem remitto, unde Paradisi venas haurietis. Revertor ad sermonem illum, in quo visus est S. Doctor, Fidem informem daemonibus concedere; sed intelligit, iuxta dicta a nobis cum illo quaest. 26.

Question XXX: On the gift of understanding

1 Faith is followed by understanding, which penetrates those things which, covered with shadows, are proposed to be believed, and, with the help of reason, makes the things believed in a certain way seen; hence the Holy Doctor quaest. 3. ad 1. says that Understanding is related to Faith as Wisdom to charity; for the latter deals about eternal things according to eternal reasons in order to the vision of truth; the former is occupied about the same things, according to the same reasons too, but in order to the taste of love; science differs from those because it is occupied about creatures through created reasons, as I shall say below.

> De DONO INTELLECTUS.

FIDEM consequitur intellectus, qui penetrat ea, quae tenebris offusa, credenda proponuntur, et rationis adminiculo, credita faciat quodammodo visa; hinc S. Doctor quaest. 3. ad 1. dicit, Intellectum se habere ad fidem, sicut Sapientia ad charitatem; illa enim negotiatur circa aeterna secundum rationes etiam aeternas in ordine ad veritatis visionem; Ista vero circa eadem, iuxta easdem quoque rationes, versatur, sed in ordine ad dilectionis gustum; ab illis differt scientia, quod versetur circa creaturas per creatas rationes, ut infra dicam.

2 But since it is clear that Understanding is implied together with faith, since faith only simply assents, and captivates the mind into its service: but Understanding proceeds further, and is as it were a knowledge by vision, as the Seraphic Doctor says in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 3. de Dono Intellectus, therefore I shall treat of this by doubts.

CUM autem implicare pateat, Intellectum simul esse cum fide, cum fides tantum simpliciter assentiatur, et captivet mentem in suum obsequium: Intellectus vero ulterius procedat, et sit quasi cognitio per visum, ut ait Seraphicus in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 3. de Dono Intellectus*, ideo de hoc per dubitationes agam.*

Doubt I: Whether understanding is a gift of the Holy Ghost

1 I ASSERT. It is proved from St. Bonaventure in the places alleged, especially de Dono intellectus, cap. 2. and St. Thomas art. 1. Understanding imports a certain intimate cognition; for to understand is said as it were to read within, and this is clear to one considering the difference between the cognition of the Intellect and of the senses; for sensitive cognition is occupied about sensible things outside; but intellectual cognition, as nobler and subtler, penetrates even to the interior quiddities of things, because the object of the intellect is whatever is, from Aristotle 3. de anima, text. 37. Whence human cognition begins from sense, nor is it perfected unless it arrives at the Intellect, which truly knows what a thing is. For it is said in the book de spiritu, et anima, cap. 11. that: Whatever the senses perceive outwardly, the imagination represents inwardly, reason investigates, the intellect judges, intelligence comprehends, and leads to contemplation, which memory preserves. But it must be adverted that intellect is sometimes taken as it is the natural power of the soul, and thus the author of the Book de Spiritu, et anima speaks of it, while he says, that the intellect is the power of the soul by which it perceives invisible things, with which Aristotle de anima concurs. And this intellect is for the most part blinded: Whence Psal. 81. They did not know, nor understand. Sometimes the Intellect is taken as the intellectual virtue, or the habit of the first natural principles, which subsist beneath the light of the intellect, as is clear from Aristotle 6. Eth. cap. 6. But neither of these is the Gift of the Holy Spirit.

An INTELLECTUS sit donum Spiritus Sancti.

ASSERO. Probatur a D. Bonav. allatis locis, praecipue de Dono intellectus, cap. 2. et D. Thom. art. 1. Intellectus importat quandam intimam cognitionem; dicitur enim intelligere quasi intus legere, et hoc patet consideranti differentiam inter cognitionem Intellectus, et sensus; nam cognitio sensitiva occupatur circa sensibilia extra; cognitio autem intellectiva, tanquam nobilior, atque subtilior, penetrat usque ad quidditates rerum interiores, quia obiectum intellectus est quid quid est, ex Aristotele 3. de anima, text. 37. Unde cognitio humana incipit a sensu, neque perficitur, nisi perveniatud ad Intellectum, qui vere cognoscit, quid est res. Dicitur enim in lib. de spiritu, et anima, cap. 11. quod: Quidquid sensus respicit exterius, imaginatio repraesentat interius, ratio investigat, intellectus diiudicat, intelligentia comprehendit, et ad contemplationem adducit, quae memoria conservat. Sed advertendum est, quod intellectus interdum accipitur, ut est Vis animae naturalis, et ita de eo loquitur author Libri de Spiritu, et anima, dum ait, quod intellectus est vis animae, qua invisibilia percipit*, cui concordat Aristoteles de anima. Et hic intellectus, ut plurimum caecutiens est: Unde Psal. 81.* Nescierunt, neque intellexerunt. Sumitur interdum Intellectus, ut dicit virtutem intellectualem, seu habitum primorum principiorum naturalium, quae subsunt lumini intellectus, ut patet ex Aristotele 6. Eth. cap. 6. Sed neuter istorum est Donum Spiritus Sancti, licet sit a Deo, atque adeo a Spiritu etiam Sancto.

2 Since however man is ordered to beatitude as to a supernatural end, as appears from his image; therefore one must posit an intellect, or some light, as the supernatural habit of supernatural principles, which are the articles of faith, and in consequence the operation of certain [virtues] which are ordered to the end, because: Faith works through love, as the Apostle says Galat. 5. and this supernatural light is called the gift of Understanding, which names a certain excellence of cognition, penetrating supernatural things, which cannot be had by natural light.

Quoniam vero ordinatur homo ad beatitudinem, tanquam finem supernaturalem, ut apparet ex eius imagine; ideo oportet ponere intellectum, sive lumen aliquod, ut est habitus supernaturalis principiorum supernaturalium, quae sunt articuli fidei, et ex consequenti quarundam operationem, quae ordinantur ad finem, quia: Fides per dilectionem operatur*, ut ait Apostolus Galat. 5. et hoc lumen supernaturale vocatur donum Intellectus, quod nominat quandam excellentiam cognitionis, penetrantis supernaturalia, quae non potest haberi lumine naturali.*

3 But it is DESCRIBED in the book de spiritu, et anima, loc. cit. Intelligence is that power of the soul which is immediately subjoined to God: for it discerns the highest truth itself.

DESCRIBITUR autem lib. de spiritu, et anima, loc. cit. Intelligentia ea vis animae est, quae immediate supponitur Deo: cernit siquidem ipsum summum verum.

4 AGAIN it is defined there cap. 37. The Intellect is that power of the soul by which, as far as is possible to man, the Divine things are known, for penetrating the heavenly secrets, which cannot be penetrated except through his spirit, who also searches the deep things of God. Whence the Apostle says 1. Cor. 2. But to us God has revealed by his Spirit, who searches all things, even the deep things of God. This is St. Bonaventure literally, and almost St. Thomas.

RURSUS definitur ibi cap. 37. Intellectus, ea vis animae est, qua de Divinis, quantum homini possibile est, cognoscitur, ad caelestia arcana penetranda, quae penetrari nequeunt, nisi per spiritum eius, qui etiam profunda Dei scrutatur. Unde ait Apostolus 1. Cor. 2. Nobis autem revelavit Deus per spiritum suum, qui omnia scrutatur, etiam profunda Dei. Haec D. Bonav. ad litteram, et fere D. Thomas.

5 The Holy Doctor proves the same thing by the testimonies of the Scriptures, and of the Fathers. Prima Ioan. 2. The anointing of the Spirit teaches us. Ioan. 16. When the Paraclete shall come, he will teach you all truth. He proves the same in Diaeta loc. cit. from 2. Timot. 2. The Lord will give you understanding in all things. He proves the same in 3. dist. 34. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 2. The spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the Spirit of wisdom, and of understanding.

Id ipsum probat S. Doct. Scripturarum, et Patrum testimoniis. Prima Ioan. 2. Unctio Spiritus docet nos. Ioan. 16. Cum venerit Paraclitus, docebit vos omnem veritatem. Idipsum probat in Diaeta loc. cit. ex 2. Timot. 2. Dabit tibi Dominus in omnibus intellectum. Idem probat in 3. dist. 34. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 2. Requiescit super eum spiritus Domini, Spiritus sapientiae, et intellectus.

6 St. Bonaventure elegantly discourses on the most noble and delightful cognition which the Gift of understanding communicates, under the metaphor of a banquet, de septem donis, cap. 7. Where he first asserts that by the gift of Understanding celestial dishes are set forth, and he reports St. Gregory lib. 1. Moral. cap. 32. saying: Understanding prepares a banquet in its day: because in that it penetrates what is heard, refreshing the heart, it illuminates its shadows: Therefore in the penetration of the things heard, the truth having been found, the mind is refreshed. The reason is, because it does not suffice the mind to taste the coverings of truths, but the kernel. Since therefore the gift of Understanding, according to Gregory, penetrates all the coverings of divine truth, both in the Scriptures and in doctrine, it reaches even to the intimate truth to be tasted, by a certain intellectual experience, which belongs to the most perfect, as Bernard says in Cantica; therefore the gift of Understanding refreshes the mind most sweetly. Speaking of this taste of experience, Bernard in the book de amore Dei cap. 10. says: The taste of the experience of the Scriptures, and of the Sacraments of God, which is in Christ, gives us sense, that we may understand the Scriptures. Whence the Lord after the resurrection opened the sense of the disciples, that they might understand the Scriptures, at the end of Luke. See the Seraphic Doctor delighting divinely in this bread having all savor of sweetness, Sap. 16. For he feeds them with the bread of life, and understanding. Eccles. 15.

> DE nobilissima, et delitiosa cognitione, quam communicat Donum intellectus, eleganter disserit sub metaphora convivii S. Bonav. de septem donis, cap. 7. Ubi primo asserit, pet donum Intellectus caelestes epulas apponi, et refert D. Gregorium lib. 1. Moral. cap. 32. dicentem: Intellectus in die suo convivium parat: quia in eo quod audita penetrat reficiendo cor, tenebras eius illustrat: Ergo in penetratione auditorum, inventa veritate, mens reficitur. Ratio est, quia menti non sufficit gustare velamina veritatum, sed nucleum. Cum igitur donum Intellectus, secundum Gregorium, penetret omnia velamina veritatis divinae, tam in Scripturis, quam in doctrina, usque ad intimam veritatem degustandam, quadam intellectuali experientia pertingat, quod perfectissimorum est, ut ait Bernardus in Cantica; ideo donum Intellectus dulcissime mentem reficit. De hoc gustu experientiae Bernardus loquens in lib. de amore Dei cap. 10. ait: Gustus experientiae Scripturarum, et Sacramentorum Dei, qui est in Christo, facit nobis sensum, ut intelligamus Scripturas. Unde Dominus post resurrectionem aperuit discipulis sensum, ut intelligerent Scripturas*, Lucae ultimo. Vide Seraphicum divinitus delitiantem pane hoc* habente omnem saporem suavitatis*, Sap. 16.* Cibat enim pane vitae, et intellectus. Eccles. 15.

Doubt II: Whether the gift of understanding can coexist with faith

1 I ASSERT. It is proved from St. Thomas here, and St. Bonaventure de 7. donis, cap. 7. by that of Luke at the end: He opened their sense, that they might understand the Scriptures. I shall prove the same in the following doubt.

> Utrum DONUM INTELLECTUS possit esse simul cum FIDE.
> ASSERO. Probatur a D. Thoma hic, et D. Bonav. de 7. donis, cap. 7. illo Lucae ultimo: Aperuit illis sensum, ut intelligerent Scripturas. Idem probabo, dubio sequenti.

2 It is PROVED from St. Bonaventure loc. cit. by the discourse of the Lincolnian upon the beginning of the Mystical Theology, which he uses as St. Thomas does, because the gift of Understanding raises [the mind] to the senses of the Scriptures, and the understanding of the Mysteries, in a manner proportioned to the way; yet where God does not seem to be [seen] without Symbols, even in the anagogic senses, not to mention the literal, allegorical, and moral; for he still enters with Moses into the cloud, as is said Exodus 24.

> PROBATUR a S. Bonav. loc. cit. discursu Linconiensis super principium Mysticae Theologiae, quo uti ur D. Thom. quia donum Intellectus erigit ad sensus Scripturarum, et intelligentiam Mysteriorum, modo proportionato viae; ubi tamen non videtur Deus sine Symbolis, etiam in sensibus anagogicis, ne dum litteralibus allegoricis, et moralibus; intrat enim adhuc cum Moyse caliginem, ut dicitur Exodi 24.

3 THEN he proves it, because this gift raises the mind as much as is necessary for merit; Therefore it is said Luke 10. Moreover one thing is necessary; and accordingly, as much as it does not detract from faith in the way, it raises the mind, as necessary for the ordinary mode of merit.

> DEINDE id probat, quia elevat hoc donum mentem, quantum necessarium ad meritum; Ideo dicitur Lucae 10. Porro unum est necessarium; atque adeo, quantum non detrahit fidei in via, necessatiae ad modum meriti ordinarium, mentem erigit.

4 Which doctrine of St. Thomas solves the objections of those striving [to prove] that the gift of understanding, as clearly showing the object of faith, is repugnant to be shown.

> QUAE doctrina S. Thom. solvit obiecta conantis, donum intellectus, tanquam clare ostendens obiectum fidei, repugnans ostendere.

Doubt III: Whether the gift of understanding consists in the contemplation of the Creator and of the creature

1 QUAERIT the holy Doctor what the proper act of the gift of Understanding is, and what its object. He supposes, moreover, that knowledge of God can be had in three ways. First, by a simple and immediate assent, and this belongs to faith. Second, by the assistance of reason, namely by perceiving the instinct of the Holy Spirit, whereby one is led to the assent of faith. ¶ Third, by a simple intuition, and this belongs to that beatitude which consists in the cleanness of heart, whose prerogative it is to see God.

> QUAERIT S Doct. qui sit actus proprius doni Intellectus, et quod obiectum. Supponit autem, cognitionem de Deo posse tripliciter haberi. Primo per simplicem, et immediatum assensum, et hoc est fidei. Secundo per rationis adminiculum, nempe percipiendo Spiritus Sancti instinctum, quo ad assensum fidei. ¶ Tertio per simplicem intuitum, et hoc est illius beatitudinis, quae stat in munditia cordis, cuius est Deum videre.

2 Since, therefore, the reasons, or motives, by which one is helped toward understanding the things believed, are taken not only from the conditions of the Creator, but also from the conditions of spiritual creatures, which among creatures hold a closer assimilation to the Creator; hence it is that the gift of Understanding, whose act is to be raised up to the contemplation of the Supreme Truth by a light that not only makes one assent, but also to understand the things believed through fitting reasons, is directed not only to the contemplation of the creative essence, but also of spiritual creatures.

> Quoniam ergo rationes, seu motiva, quibus iuvantur ad credita intelligenda, accipiuntur non solum a conditionibus Creatoris, sed etiam a conditionibus Creaturae spiritualis, quae inter creaturas viciniorem habet assimilationem ad Creatorem; hinc est, ut donum Intellectus, cuius actus est in contemplationem Summi veri elevari per lumen, quod non solum facit assentire, sed etiam per congruas rationes credita intelligere, non solum attenditur in contemplatione creatricis essentiae, sed etiam spiritualis creaturae.

3 From these considerations he deduces what the act and the object of the gift of Understanding are. Its object, indeed, is the eternal True, insofar as it is intelligible, not only according to its proper conditions, but also according to the properties of creatures that are like God, as the Master says. But its act is to contemplate the very Truth believed, so that it may be believed more devoutly and loved more ardently.

Ex his deducit, quis sit actus, et obiectum doni Intellectus. Obiectum enim eius est Verum aeternum, in quantum intelligibile, non solum secundum proprias conditiones, sed etiam secundum proprietates creaturarum Deo similium, ut dicit Magister. Actus vero eius est contemplari ipsum Verum creditum, ut devotius credatur, et ardentius diligatur.

4 Whence it follows that its act is speculative, because it looks to the assent of faith, but also practical, because it looks to the articles as ordered to Charity; for faith works through love, as the Apostle says, Gal. 5. Therefore the gift of Understanding extends itself to certain things to be done, not indeed so as to be principally occupied with them; but insofar as in our actions we are ruled by the eternal reasons, in the beholding and consulting of which, according to Aug. 12 de Trin. cap. 7., the soul adheres to the superior reason, which is perfected by the gift of understanding, as St. Thomas also teaches. The holy Doctor confirms this with St. Thomas, from that Psalm 110: Intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum — a good understanding to all that do it.

Ex quo fit, ut actus eius sit speculativus, quia respicit assensum fidei, sed practicus etiam, quia respicit articulos, ut ordinatos ad Charitatem; nam fides per dilectionem operatur*, ut ait Apostolus* Galat. 5. Itaque donum Intellectus ad quaedam operabilia se extendit, non quidem, ut circa ea principaliter versetur; sed in quantum in agendis regulamur rationibus aeternis, quibus conspiciendis, et consulendis, secundum August. 12. de Trin. cap. 7. adhaeret superior ratio, quae dono intellectus perficitur, ut docet etiam D. Thomas. Id confirmat S. Doct. cum D. Thom. illo Psalm. 110. Intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum.

5 He ASSERTS, therefore, that the object of this Gift is the CREATOR, even as He shines forth in spiritual creatures, which are the Images of God.

ASSERIT igitur, obiectum huius Doni esse CREATOREM, etiam ut relucentem in creaturis spiritualibus, quae sunt Imagines Dei.

6 It is PROVED from the holy Doctor, first, from the Master in littera, saying that Understanding concerns not only eternal things, but also things invisible and spiritual, arisen in time.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. primo ex Magistro in littera dicente Intelligentiam non tantum de aeternis esse, sed etiam de rebus invisibilibus, et Spiritualibus, in tempore exortis.

7 SECOND, from St. Dionysius, cap. 1. de coelesti hierarchia, circa medium, where he has: It is impossible that, so long as we are on the way, the divine ray shine forth upon us unveiled; but the creature that is spiritual is that veil showing God in an image: Therefore, if the understanding is directed to the Creator, it must also be directed to the knowledge of the creature.

SECUNDO ex D. Dionysio cap. 1. de coelesti hierarchia, circa medium*, ubi habet:* Impossibile est quamdiu in via sumus, relucere nobis divinum radium, nisi circumvelatum; hoc autem velamen ostendens Deum in imagine, est creatura spiritualis: Ergo si intellectus est ad Creatorem, debet etiam esse ad creaturae cognitionem.

8 THIRD. There is no perfect love of God unless God is loved in Himself and in His image: Therefore likewise there is no perfect gift of Understanding unless God is known through it both as to His conditions and as to the conditions of the creatures that are like Him.

TERTIO. Non est perfectus amor in Deum, nisi ametur Deus in se, et in sua imagine: Ergo similiter non est perfectum donum Intellectus, nisi Deus per illud cognoscatur, et quoad conditiones suas, et quoad conditiones creaturarum, quae sunt ei similes.

9 FOURTH, Understanding and Faith belong to the same mind, according to St. Gregory 1. Moral. cap. 18., who says that: God gives understanding when He enlightens the mind concerning the things heard; but Faith regards not only the divine essence in itself, but also in its comparison with the creature: Therefore the gift of Understanding is ordered to the contemplation of both. See the holy Doctor in Dicta loc. cit., where he opens the Books in which the CREATOR is read in creatures, which Gulielmus imitates in his discourses, written in Italian.

> QUARTO de eisdem est Intellectus, et Fides, ex D. Gregorio 1. Moral. cap. 18. dicente, quod: Deus intellectum dat, dum de auditis mentem illustrat; sed Fides non tantum respicit divinam essentiam in se, sed etiam in comparatione ad creaturam: Ergo donum Intellectus ad duo illa contemplanda ordinatur. Vide S. Doct. in Dicta loc. cit. ubi Libros aperit, in quibus CREATOR in creaturis legitur, quem imitatur Glielmus in suis discursibus, Italice conscriptis.

10 You will OBJECT first. The gift of Wisdom is concerned with eternal things: but the gift of Science is concerned with created things, according to St. Aug. 12. de Trinitate, cap. 14. Therefore either the gift of Understanding is superfluous, or its act is not concerned with those two.

11 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that the gifts of Wisdom and of Understanding are concerned with eternal things in different ways: for the gift of Wisdom regards eternal things according to the eternal reasons, insofar as those eternal reasons are the way to the taste and experimental knowledge of divine sweetness; but the gift of Understanding deals with eternal things according to the eternal reasons, which are the way to the knowledge of the truth, whereby it is thus rendered by the Holy Spirit mobile toward perceiving the truths of faith. Hence St. Bernard appropriates the gift of Understanding to faith: but the gift of Wisdom he appropriates to Charity, whose prerogative it is to dispose one to the tasting of God.

> RESPONDEt S. Doct. diverso modo versari Sapientiae, et Intellectus dona circa aeterna: nam Sapientiae donum respicit aeterna secundum aeternas rationes; secundum quod illae aeternae rationes sunt via ad gustum, et experimentalem cognitionem divinae suavitatis; Donum vero Intellectus negotiatur circa aeterna, secundum rationes aeternas, quae sunt via ad cognitionem veritatis, quo sic a Spiritu Sancto redditur mobilis ad veritates fidei percipiendas. Hinc D. Bernardus donum Intellectus, fidei appropriat: donum vero Sapientiae, appropriat Charitati, cuius est disponere ad gustandum Deum.

12 SIMILARLY the gift of Science is concerned with created things in a different way; for it regards being according to created reasons, whence it deals also with bodily creatures, which have the character of a vestige: but the gift of Understanding deals only with creatures according to the eternal reasons. And therefore it is concerned only with spiritual creatures, in which the eternal reasons shine forth as in an image.

> SIMILITER donum Scientiae diverso modo versatur circa creata; nam respicit ens secundum rationes creatas, unde negotiatur etiam circa creaturas corporeas, quae habent rationem vestigii: Donum vero Intellectus negotiatur solum circa creaturas secundum rationes aeternas. Et ideo est tantum circa creaturas spirituales, in quibus rationes aeternae relucent, ut in imagine.

13 You will OBJECT secondly. Wisdom and Science differ, because the latter is concerned with temporal things, but the former with eternal things. Therefore the gift of Understanding cannot be concerned with both these opposite characters, which are the objects of diverse good habits.

OBIICIES secundo. Sapientia, et Scientia differunt, quia haec versatur circa temporalia; illa vero circa aeterna. Igitur non potest donum Intellectus versari circa ambas has rationes oppositas, quae sunt obiecta diversorum bonorum habituum.

14 The holy Doctor ANSWERS by denying the consequence; because Wisdom and Science, as I have said, are concerned with those objects as opposites; but the gift of Understanding regards created things as ordered to the eternal reasons, and the one is on account of the other, and thus they are one object. Hence the holy Doctor deduces that the gift of Understanding is below wisdom and above science, and thus in the middle.

Respondet S. Doct. negando consequentiam; quia Sapientia, et Scientia, ut dixi versantur circa ea obiecta, ut opposita; at donum Intellectus respicit creata, ut ordinata ad rationes aeternas, et unum est propter aliud; atque adeo unum obiectum. Hinc deducit S. Doct. donum Intellectus esse infra sapientiam, et supra scientiam; et ita in medio.

15 You will OBJECT thirdly. Either the gift of Understanding consists in knowing only, or in knowing and being affected. If the first: Therefore it is not meritorious, because a cognitive act is not meritorious. If the second: Therefore it does not differ from Wisdom.

OBIICIES tertio. Aut donum Intellectus consistit in cognoscendo tantum, aut in cognoscendo, et afficiendo. Si primum: Ergo non est meritorium, quia actus cognitivus non est meritorius. Si secundum: Ergo non differt a Sapientia.

16 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that Wisdom and the gift of Understanding are related in different ways; for the former consists in the experience of divine sweetness, the latter in a knowledge extended to practice, as a way to the taste; just as the knowledge of faith is ordered to the delight, or love, of Charity, which indeed paves the way to infused wisdom, since it is founded upon the assent of faith, and moreover orders it to the taste of wisdom. Nevertheless, in the gift of Understanding too there is a certain delight in the truth, which is a kind of beatitude. To this he recalls in Dicta ad Psal. 33. Gustate, et videte quoniam suavis est Dominus — Taste, and see that the Lord is sweet. To taste belongs to wisdom; to see, to understanding; and he cites St. Gregory, homil. 19. in Ezech. The sum of this difference is that the gift of Understanding is properly penetrative; but the gift of Wisdom is properly savoring.

RESPONDEt S. Doct. diverso modo se habere Sapientiam, et donum Intellectus; nam illa consistit in experientia divinae suavitatis; hoc vero in cognitione extensa ad praxim, ut via ad gustum; sicut cognitio fidei ad delectationem, seu dilectionem Charitatis, quae quidem viam sternit ad sapientiam gratuitam, quoniam super assensum fidei fundatur, et insuper ordinat ad sapientiae gustum. Nihilominus in dono etiam Intellectus est quaedam delectatio de veritate, quae est beatitudo quaedam. Huc revocat in Dicta ad Psal. 33. Gustate, et videte quoniam suavis est Dominus. Gustare, ad sapientiam pertinet: Videre, ad intellectum, et allegat D. Gregorium homil. 19. in Ezech. Summa huius differentiae est, quod donum Intellectus est proprie penetrativum; sed donum Sapientiae est proprie saporativum.

17 You will OBJECT fourthly. If the gift of Understanding regards creatures, so that from them it may rise to the knowledge of God, it must regard not only spiritual but also bodily creatures; for in these also the Divine Goodness shines forth.

OBIICIES quarto. Si donum Intellectus respicit creaturas, ut ex eis consurgat in Dei cognitionem, debet respicere non modo spirituales, sed etiam corporeas; nam etiam in his relucet Divina Bonitas.

18 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that in bodily creatures the goodness of God shines forth only obscurely, as in a vestige, but in spiritual things more clearly, as in an image; and because the gift of understanding concerns a contemplation clearer than is the knowledge of faith, hence it is that it regards only those creatures in which God shines forth more clearly; but these are those which have the character of an image.

> RESPONDEt S. Doct. in creaturis corporeis relucere Dei bonitatem solum obscure, ut in vestigio, in spiritualibus vero clarius, ut in imagine; et quia ad donum intellectus spectat contemplatio clarior, quam sit cognitio fidei; hinc est, ut respiciat eas tantum creaturas, in quibus clarius elucet Deus; hae autem sunt, quae habent rationem imaginis.

19 You will OBJECT fifthly. Gifts that are combined with one another are concerned with the same thing: such is the gift of Understanding, which is combined with the gift of Wisdom: Therefore. But the gift of Wisdom is concerned only with eternal things, therefore also the gift of Understanding.

20 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that, because the gift of Wisdom consists in taste, but the gift of Understanding in the light of reason, and affection ascends higher than reason, and union than knowledge, as St. Dionysius says, hence it is that the gift of Wisdom has not so much need of the assistance of creatures as the gift of Understanding has. Therefore the latter is concerned also with creatures, as assistances for ascending to God. And so, when it is said that gifts which are combined with one another have the same object, this is true of the principal object, not of the assisting one.

> RESPONDEt S. Doct. quod quia donum Sapientiae consistit in gustu; donum vero Intellectus in lumine rationis, et altius ascendit affectio, quam ratio, et unio, quam cognitio, ut ait S. Dionysius; hinc est, ut donum Sapientiae non sic indigeat adminiculo creaturae, sicut donum Intellectus. Ideo hoc versatur etiam circa creaturas, ut adminicula ad ascendendum in Deum. Itaque cum dicitur, dona, quae invicem combinantur, habere idem obiectum; id verum est de obiecto principali, non de adminiculante.

21 You will object sixthly. The gift of Understanding is concerned with creatures insofar as they lead to the knowledge of the Creator: Therefore it contemplates God through a mirror: Therefore it does not differ from Faith.

22 The holy Doctor answers that faith and the gift of Understanding contemplate God in a mirror in different ways; for there are various degrees of the cognition of one who contemplates. Faith, therefore, renders one able to assent to the articles of faith immediately, though preceded by the knowledge, through creatures, of that which is signified by such a name. Thus it moves one to assent to the article of the Trinity, though preceded by the knowledge of the number three. But the gift of Understanding further illuminates one to know the motive on account of which the Trinity ought to be posited in the Divinity; namely, because it sees in the rational creature the going forth of the Word from the mind by the way of generation, and of Love from both, by the way of connection. And so the reason is evident why there ought to be diverse habits.

> Respondet S. Doct. diverso modo fidem, et donum Intellectus contemplari Deum in speculo; sunt enim varii gradus cognitionis speculantis. Fides igitur habilitat ad assentiendum articulis fidei, immediate, praecedente tamen per creaturas cognitione illius, quod per tale, nomen dicitur. Sic movet ad assentiendum articulo Trinitatis, praevia tamen cognitione numeri ternarii. At vero donum Intellectus ulterius illuminat ad cognoscendum motivum, propter quod debeat

Trinitas poni in Divinis; nempe, quia videt in creatura rationali egressum Verbi e mente per viam generationis, et Amoris, ab utroque per viam connexionis. Et ideo constat ratio, ob quam debeant esse habitus diversi.

23 From these considerations you have what the object of the gift of Understanding is, and what its act, and what the difference of this gift from the other habits.

Ex his habes; quodnam sit obiectum doni Intellectus; et quis actus illius; et quae sit huius doni ab aliis habitibus differentia.

Doubt IV: Whether the gift of understanding is found in all who have grace, and whether in these alone

1 I ASSERT first that Understanding is in all who have sanctifying grace.

Utrum DONUM INTELLECTUS insit omnibus habentibus gratiam, et an his solis.

Assero primo, Intellectum esse in omnibus, habentibus gratiam sanctificantem.

2 It is proved from St. Bonav. in Diaeta from that Psalm 110: Intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum — a good understanding to all that do it.

Probatur a D. Bonav. in Diaeta ex illo Psal. 110. Intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum.

3 It is proved from the holy Doctor de septem donis, cap. 1. from the progress of our conversion, as assigned by the Council of Trent sess. 6. et 14., from which he also deduces the order of the Gifts of the Holy Spirit; for, as St. Anselm says, lib. de simil. cap. 130.: First the Holy Spirit makes the mind fear through the gift of Fear; and compassionate with itself through the gift of Piety; and He manifests the things that are to be done through the gift of Science, and carries them out firmly through the gift of Fortitude; these three gifts belong to the appetitive power, and in this they differ from the gift of Understanding, which belongs first to the intellective power, according to St. Thomas, art. 6., and concerning those He makes us consult through the gift of Counsel, whereby there is an application of means to individual works, as St. Thomas says. Then the Holy Spirit kindles the mind to understand why this and that should be done, so that the affection of charity may follow: for this follows the perfect discovery of the truth; and this is from the understanding. Therefore even natural understanding itself is called, 3. de anima, text. 18., a Light penetrating to the innermost essences; nor indeed can the will be rightly ordered to the good unless some knowledge of the truth pre-exists, because the object of the will is the good understood, as is said in 3. de anima, text. 34. et 49. From these things it follows that the gift of Understanding is given together with grace, as the ultimate disposition to wisdom, or the Divine Savor. Therefore St. August., lib. 2. de doctrina christiana, cap. 7., speaking of the seven gifts, says of the gift of Understanding: After the fifth step, namely the gift of Counsel, through which the soul is raised up from the appetite for the filth of lower things, it ascends to the sixth step, that is, to the gift of understanding, where it cleanses that very eye by which God can be seen by those who die to this world; who see insofar as they die to the world.

Probatur a S. Doct. de septem donis, cap. 1. ex progressu nostrae conversionis, assignato a Concilio Trident. sess. 6. et 14. ex quo deducit etiam ordinem Donorum Spiritus Sancti; nam, ut ait D. Anselmus lib. de simil. cap. 130. Primo Spiritus Sanctus mentem facit pauentem per donum Timoris; sibique compatientem per donum Pietatis; et ea, quae sunt facienda, manifestat per donum Scientiae, et illa fortiter exequitur per donum Fortitudinis, quae tria dona ad appetitivam pertinent vim; et in hoc differunt a dono Intellectus, quod primo ad intellectivam pertinet, secundum D. Thomam art. 6. et de ipsis facit consulere per donum Consilii, quo fit applicatio mediorum ad singularia opera, ut ait D. Thomas. Post Spiritus Sanctus accendit mentem ad intelligendum, cur haec, et illa fieri debeant, ut affectio charitatis sequatur: haec enim sequitur perfectam veritatis inventionem; haec vero est ab intellectu. Ideo Intellectus ipse naturalis dicitur 3. de anima, text. 18. Lumen penetrans ad intimas essentias; neque vero potest voluntas recte ordinari ad bonum, nisi praeexistente aliqua cognitione veritatis, quia obiectum voluntatis est bonum intellectum, ut dicitur 3. de anima, text. 34. et 49. Ex quibus fit, donum Intellectus dari cum gratia, ut ultimam dispositionem ad sapientiam, seu Divinum Saporem. Ideo D. August. lib. 2. de doctrina christiana, cap. 7. loquens de septem donis, ait de dono Intellectus: Post quintum gradum, scilicet donum Consilii, per quod anima levatur ab appetitu sordium inferiorum, ascendit in sextum gradum, idest in donum intellectus, ubi ipsum oculum purgat, quo videri potest Deus ab his, qui huic saeculo moriuntur; qui in tantum vident, in quantum moriuntur saeculo.

4 The holy Doctor observes, however, cap. 4., that a threefold truth is irradiated by the gift of Understanding: the truth of cognition, by showing us the faith of Christ to be most true: the truth of operation, by showing the most perfect operation; and the truth of love, by showing us charity. But the Holy Spirit works this revelation through the gift of Understanding, while He raises up, purifies, and inflames the mind from earthly things. For an earthly and animal affection impedes the understanding from understanding spiritual things, because: The animal man perceiveth not those things that are of the Spirit of God, as is said in 1 Corinth. 2. From these things it follows that the gift of Understanding is in the just, who have a right will through charity, which presupposes a right understanding; and that it is given in the ultimate preparation for charity, but not to sinners in the composite sense; for of these (the holy Fathers say), Psalm 81: They have not known nor understood, they walk on in darkness.

Observat autem S. Doct. cap. 4. triplicem veritatem irradiari dono Intellectus: Veritatem cognitionis, ostendendo nobis fidem Christi verissimam: Veritatem operationis, ostendendo operationem perfectissimam; et veritatem dilectionis, ostendendo nobis charitatem. Hanc autem revelationem operatur Spiritus Sanctus per donum Intellectus, dum mentem a terrenis elevat, purgat, et inflammat. Affectus enim terrenus, et animalis impedit intellectum, ne spiritualia intelligat, quia: Animalis homo non percipit ea, quae Dei sunt, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 2. Ex his sequitur, donum Intellectus esse in iustis, qui rectam habent voluntatem, per charitatem, quae supponit rectam intelligentiam; dari vero in ultima praeparatione ad charitatem, non autem peccatoribus in sensu composito; de his enim (aiunt SS. DD.) Psalm. 81. Nescierunt, neque intellexerunt, in tenebris ambulant.

5 And although the actual gift of Understanding is convertible with Faith, which is also in sinners; nevertheless, as it is a habitual gift, it is only in him who has a right cognition and a direction of the will toward the end, as St. Bonav. says, ad 3.

Quamvis autem actuale donum Intellectus convertatur cum Fide, quae est etiam in peccatoribus; tamen ut est donum habituale, est solum in eo, qui habet rectam cognitionem, et directionem voluntatis ad finem, ut ait S. Bonav. ad 3.

6 But that it is given in the ultimate disposition to grace is proved by that John 6: Every one that hath heard of the Father, and hath learned, cometh to me. But we learn this through the Understanding, as St. Gregory teaches, primo Moral. cap. 32. Therefore whoever has understanding comes to Christ through grace that makes one pleasing. Hence this passage is not rightly cited here by St. Thom. art. 5. to prove that this gift of God is not present except in those already established in grace; for these do not come to Christ, but have come.

Quod vero detur in ultima dispositione ad gratiam, probatur illo Ioan. 6. Omnis qui audivit a Patre, et didicit, venit ad me. Haec autem ediscimus per Intellectum, ut docet D. Gregorius primo Moral. cap. 32. Ergo quicumque habet intellectum, venit ad Christum per gratiam gratum facientem. Unde non recte affertur hic locus a D. Thom. art. 5.

ad probandum, non esse hoc donum Dei, nisi in iam constitutis in gratia; hi enim non veniunt ad Christum, sed venerunt.

Doubt V: What is the necessity and utility of the gift of understanding

1 The holy Doctor begins, cap. 3., to enumerate the necessity and utilities of this gift.

Qua sit necessitas, et utilitas DONI INTELLECTUS.

Incipit S. Doct. cap. 3. necessitatem, et utilitates huius doni recensere.

2 The first necessity indeed is for the faith to make manifest the hidden truths, veiled by so many Scriptures and Sacraments, since the human understanding without supernal light cannot reach out to apprehend them. He proves this from Richard, lib. 3. de contempl. cap. 6. Hence St. August., lib. de spiritu, et anima, cap. 36.: By this light man can acknowledge that he was created to the image of God, and therefore capable of God, and therefore that God is trine and one, as the Son from the Father; and the Holy Spirit from both; and in a like manner from the understanding the Will; and from both the memory, and the word from the understanding; and from both love. See the Seraphic Doctor.

Prima quidem necessitas est, fidei manifestate veritates reconditas, tot Scripturis, atque Sacramentis obvelatas, cum intellectus humanus absque lumine superno nequeat ad eas apprehendendas pertingere. Hoc probat ex Richardo lib. 3. de contempl. cap. 6. Hinc D. August. lib. de spiritu, et anima, cap. 36. Potest homo hoc lumine agnoscere, se ad imaginem Dei conditum, et ideo capacem Dei, atque ideo Deum trinum, et unum, ut filius a Patre; et ab utroque Spiritus Sanctus, et simili modo ab intellectu Voluntas; et ab utroque memoria, et verbum ab intellectu; et ab utroque amor. Vide Seraphicum.

3 He proceeds, cap. quarto, to describe by what manner the truths of the divine Scriptures shine forth upon us through the gift of understanding; as is said, 1 John 2: The anointing of the Holy Spirit teacheth.

Pergit cap. quarto describere, quo pacto veritates Scripturarum divinarum nobis dono intellectus illucescant; ut dicitur prima Ioan. 2. Unctio Spiritus Sancti docet.

4 In the fifth chapter he shows by what manner the veils of the Sacraments are revealed through the gift of understanding.

Capite quinto ostendit, quo pacto velamina Sacramentorum, dono intellectus revelentur.

5 In the sixth chapter he shows by what manner the spiritual day appears through this gift, as I shall say below.

Capite sexto ostendit; quo pacto dies spiritualis per hoc donum appareat, ut dicam infra.

6 In the seventh chapter he demonstrates that the spiritual banquet is prepared by this gift. See the holy Doctor; for it does not please me to transcribe whole chapters verbatim hither.

Capite septimo, convivium spirituale, hoc dono praeparari, demonstrat. Vide S. Doctorem; non enim libet capita integra verbatim huc transcribere.

Doubt VI: Whether the sixth beatitude, Blessed are the clean of heart, corresponds to the gift of understanding

1 St. Bonav. de 7. donis, cap. 3. and St. Th. here, together with St. August. lib. 1. de serm. Domini in monte, cap. 9., assert that it does.

Utrum DONO INTELLECTUS respondeat sexta beatitudo, scilicet Beati mundo corde, etc.

Asserunt D. Bonav. de 7. donis, cap. 3. et D. Th. hic cum D. August. lib. 1. de serm. Domini in monte, cap. 9.

2 It is proved from the Seraphic Doctor, cap. 4. de dono Intellectus. As the light of the sun is related to the seeing of sensible things, and to the purifying of the air, so is Understanding related to the vision of spiritual things; but the cleanness of the air arises from the solar light, so that the Sun itself is clearly seen, and in the absence of this light the air is darkened, and as it were sullied: Therefore. To this the holy Doctor adduces that Psalm 81: They have not known nor understood, they walk on in darkness, where the cause of the soul's being darkened is referred back to a defect of Understanding. Then the holy Doctor assigns three degrees of the cleanness of heart, which are as it were the morning, the midday, and the evening of Understanding.

Probatur a Seraphico cap. 4. de dono Intellectus. Sicut se habet lux solaris ad videnda sensibilia, et ad purgandum aërem, ita se habet Intellectus ad visionem spiritualium; sed munditia aëris oritur a luce solari, ita ut clare videatur ipse Sol, et absente hac luce, aër obscuretur, et veluti deturpetur: Ergo. Ad hoc adducit S. Doct. illud Psalmi 81. Nescierunt neque intellexerunt, in tenebris ambulant, ubi causa, unde anima obtenebretur, refunditur in defectum Intellectus. Deinde assignat S. Doctor. tres gradus munditiae cordis quae sunt veluti mane, meridies, et vespera Intellectus.

3 The first degree is when, through the Gift of Understanding, being recalled to our interior self, with the light of compunction we wipe away all the stains and darknesses of sins, and there shines upon us a certain twilight of divine light, whence may arise the morning cleanness of heart, which corresponds to the morning of understanding.

Primus gradus est, quando per Donum Intellectus ad nostra interiora revocati lumine compunctionis omnes peccatorum maculas, et tenebras abstergimus, et sublucet nobis quoddam divinae lucis crepusculum, unde oriatur matutina cordis munditia, quae respondet ad mane intellectus.

4 The second degree is a certain excess of light and fervor of heart, penetrating all the veils that overshadow the rays of truth, illuminating, strengthening(?) and inflaming the mind with clarity and at the same time with charity: And hence is born the midday of Understanding, and the midday cleanness of heart.

Secundus gradus est nimietas quaedam lucis, et cordis fervor, penetrans omnia velamina, obumbrantia veritatis radios, illuminans pariter et inflammans mentem claritate, et simul charitate: Et hinc nascitur meridies Intellectus, et meridiana cordis munditia.

5 The third degree is when this fervent clarity declines toward evening, the Lord nevertheless remaining as the fount of all clarity and fervor; Hence at once the sleep of contemplation is begun, and the nocturnal delights are celebrated, with the lamps of divine splendor lit on every side; see the Seraphic Doctor himself, saying marvelous things about these, beyond human understanding, through several chapters.

Tertius gradus est, quando fervida haec claritas advesperascit, manente tamen Domino, omnis claritatis, et fervoris fonte; Hinc mox inchoatur somnus contemplationis, et nocturnae deliciae celebrantur, accensis undique divini fulgoris lampadibus; vide ipsum Seraphicum, de his mira, et super humanum intellectum per plura capita dicentem.

Doubt VII: Whether faith, among the fruits of the Holy Ghost, corresponds to the gift of understanding

[1] The holy Doctors assert that to the gift of Understanding there corresponds, among the fruits of the Holy Spirit, faith, and they prove it; Since, indeed, the Theological and Divine truths, which are revealed to us by faith for salvation, are veiled beneath the veil of many figures, the obscurity of prophecies, and the diversity of expositions, it was necessary that another supernatural light be superadded, causing the certitude of the former, penetrating with a certain experimental clarity to the inner veils, and in a certain way making one see what faith made one believe; whence it is said, John 10(13): Unless you believe, you shall not Understand; for these the Seraphic Doctor cites St. Bernard, serm. 33. in cantica, where he discoursed most excellently on the correspondence of faith and understanding as follows: Truth is set before me, but in a Sacrament. The Angel is fed on the fatness of the wheat, and I must meanwhile be content with the naked grain beneath a certain rind of the Sacrament, with the husk of the flesh, with the chaff of the letter, with the veil of faith. And these are such things as, when tasted, bring death, if they do not receive from the first-fruits of the Spirit however little a seasoning, which comes about through the gift of Understanding; and he adds: In all these things faith is rich to me, understanding poor: but is savor not given to the understanding and to the faith, since the one is in merit, the other in reward.[1] See the Seraphic Doctor, cap. quinto de dono Intellect.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'numquid verò per sapor intellectui, fideique, cum sit in meritum ista, in praemium illa' — a garbled Bernard citation (serm. 33 in Cantica) whose syntax cannot be restored with confidence; rendered as a rhetorical question ('is savor not given to the understanding and to the faith?'), taking 'sapor' (the taste of the gift of Understanding) as subject.

An DONO INTELLECTUS respondeat, inter fructus Spiritus Sancti, Fides.

Dono Intellectus inter fructus Spiritus Sancti respondere fidem asserunt SS. Doctores, et probant; Cum enim veritates Theologicae, et Divinae, quae nobis fide revelantur ad salutem, sint velatae sub plurium figurarum velamine, prophetiarum obscuritate, et expositionum diversitate, necesse fuit superaddi aliud lumen supernaturale, prioris causans certitudinem, et experimentali quadam claritate penetrans ad interiora velamina, faciensque quodammodo videre, quod fides fecit credere, unde dicitur Ioan. 10. Nisi credideritis, non Intelligetis; pro his affert Seraphicus Doctor D. Bernardum serm. 33. in cantica, ubi praeclare de fidei, et intellectus correspondentia sic disserit: Mihi apponitur veritas, sed in Sacramento. Angelus ex adipe frumenti saginatur, et nudo grano me oportet interim quodam Sacramenti cortice esse contentum, carnis furfure, palea litterae, fidei velamine. Et haec talia sunt, quae gustata afferunt mortem, si non de primitiis Spiritus, quantulumque accipiant condimentum, quod fit per donum Intellectus, et subdit: In his omnibus fides est mihi locuples, intellectus pauper: numquid vero per sapor intellectui, fideique, cum sit in meritum ista, in praemium illa. Vide Seraphicum cap. quinto de dono Intellect.

Question XXXI: On the gift of knowledge

[1] To faith also pertains the gift of science; since, indeed, faith in itself is obscure, indicating what is to be done, but not in all things how to act, this gratuitous Gift is given by the Holy Spirit, through which faith is begotten, nourished, defended, and strengthened, whose proper act is to render man easily mobile by the Holy Spirit toward judging well and discriminating according to the rules of the eternal law in those things to be done whose manner of acting is not determined, as far as we are concerned, because they do not always come about uniformly. So the holy Doctor, cap. 3. de dono scientiae. Hence there is made known divinely to man the right judgment in his actions, and it extends itself to the things to be believed and done which are proposed to us in Holy Scripture: Of this gift St.

Greg. speaks thus, lib. 10. Moral. apud D. Bonav. de dono scientiae, cap. 2., indicating that it is especially cultivated by the reading of Holy Scripture: From earthly desires it invites the heart to the embracing of things above; it aids the mind of the reader with humble words, and raises it with sublime sentences. It stirs the soul especially toward charity, manifesting the many lovelinesses of the Creator, and proposing the many ways in which He may be loved. The rest I shall indicate through certain doubts.

> Ad fidem spectat etiam donum scientiae; cum enim fides in se sit obscura, indicans quid, sed non in omnibus quomodo agendum, datur hoc Donum gratuitum a Spiritu Sancto, per quod fides gignitur, nutritur, defenditur, et roboratur, cuius proprius actus est reddere hominem facile mobilem a Spiritu Sancto ad bene discernendum, et diiudicandum secundum legis aeternae regulas in his agibilibus, quorum non est determinatus agendi modus, quoad nos, eo quod non semper uniformiter fiant. Ita S. Doct. cap. 3. de dono scientiae. Hinc homini divinitus innotescit rectum iudicium in agendis, seque extendit ad credibilia, et factibilia, quae nobis in Scriptura Sacra proponuntur: De hoc dono ita loquitur D. Greg. lib. 10. Moral. apud D. Bonav. de dono scientiae, cap. 2. indicans, ipsum lectione Sacrae Scripturae maxime conciliari: A terrenis desideriis ad superna amplectenda cor invitat, legentis animum humilibus verbis adiuvat, sublimibus vero sententiis levat. Animam praecipue provocat ad charitatem, manifestando plures Creatoris amabilitates, et proponendo plures, quibus ametur, modos. Reliqua per aliquas dubitationes indicabo.

Doubt I: Whether knowledge is a gift of the Holy Ghost

1 The holy Doctor asserts that Science is a Gift of the Holy Spirit. He shows this from what was said above, and it is evident from that Wisdom 10: The Lord led the just, etc. he gave him the science of holy things. Hence also he infers that science is an infused habit, in which man has judgment concerning his actions, so that he may in no way stray from it, but whatever he judges is to be done, he may order to be done promptly and expeditiously. For as Understanding does two things concerning truths, perceiving them, and directing the will, while it obeys them, so our mind, irradiated by the gift of Science, first, receives the supernal truths; second, it discerns without error how they are to be observed in practice.

> An SCIENTIA sit donum Spiritus Sancti.
> Asserit S. Doctor, Scientiam esse Donum Spiritus Sancti. Hoc ostendit ex dictis supra, et patet ex illo Sapient. 10. Iustum deduxit Dominus, etc. dedit illi scientiam Sanctorum. Hinc etiam infert, scientiam esse habitum infusum, in quo homo habeat illud circa agenda iudicium, ut in nullo deviet, sed prompte, et expedite, quicquid agendum iudicet, agi iubeat. Nam sicut Intellectus duo circa veritates cognoscit, eas percipiendo, et voluntatem, dum eis obsequitur, dirigendo. Ita mens nostra, dono Scientiae irradiata, primo supernas veritates Capit; secundo, quomodo in praxi observentur, absque errore discernit.

2 Since, moreover, man is blind with respect to supernatural things by his own light, he cannot proceed safely among so many precepts unless a certain light shine upon him from above, joining what is to be done to what is to be believed, whence through this gift the actions of man are resolved to the articles of faith as to their principles, which only the Holy Spirit can accomplish in man.

> Cvm enim homo ad res supernaturales proprio lumine caecutiat, non possit inter tot praecepta tuto procedere, nisi desuper ipsi illuceat quaedam lux, componens cum credendis agenda, unde per hoc donum hominis actiones resolvuntur ad fidei articulos, tanquam ad sua principia, quod solus Spiritus Sanctus in homine praestare potest.

3 And in order that this science be distinguished from the other, which is acquired by one's proper powers, the holy Doctor relates the description and distinction of both; first, indeed, from St. Bernard upon the Canticles: There is a certain secular science, secular, which inebriates not with Charity, but with curiosity; it fills, but does not nourish; it puffs up, and does not build up; it swells, and does not strengthen. Second, from St. August. lib. 14. de Trinit. cap. 1.: There is a Science which is not of vain things, nor of curious ones, but is begotten concerning those things upon which the most salubrious faith leads to true beatitude, is nourished, etc., and this the Seraphic Doctor concludes to be the gift of the Holy Spirit.

> Ut autem discernatur haec scientia ab alia, quae propriis viribus acquiritur, refert S. Doctor descriptionem, et discretionem utriusque, et primo quidem e D. Bernardo super Cantica: Scientia quaedam est saecularis, saecularis, quae inebriat non Charitate, sed curiositate, implet sed non nutrit; inflat, et non aedificat, ingurgitat, et non confortat. Secundo e D. August. lib. 14. de Trinit. cap. 1. Est Scientia, quae non est rerum vanarum, nec curiosarum, sed de his, quibus fides saluberrima, quae ad veram beatitudinem ducit, gignitur, nutritur, etc. et hanc concludit Seraphicus esse donum Spiritus Sancti.

Doubt II: Whether knowledge is concerned with divine things

1 It must be said that science concerns only created things in their order to God. Since, indeed, the soul experiences difficulty, and in a certain manner grows torpid, with respect to supernatural acts; according to the kinds of difficulty, habits are infused into it, whereby it may be made mobile for the service of the Holy Spirit: whence, since especially the will is held back from acting on account of a defect of cognition in the intellect, two habits are given to remove this defect, the first of which is concerned with created things, and concerning them passes judgment through their causes, and is called the Gift of science: the other is concerned with divine things through the most exalted principles, and it is Wisdom.

> Dicendum, scientiam esse de rebus tantum creatis in ordine ad Deum. Cum enim anima patiatur difficultatem, et quodammodo torpescat ad actus supernaturales; iuxta difficultatum genera, ipsi infunduntur habitus, quibus fiat mobilis in obsequium Spiritus sancti: unde cum praecipue voluntas ab agendo retardetur ob defectum cognitionis in intellectu; dantur ad removendum hunc defectum duo habitus, quorum primus versatur circa creata, et de ipsis per suas causas iudicium fert, vocaturque Donum scientiae: alter versatur circa divina per altissima principia, et est Sapientia.

2 But the created things with which Science is concerned are, first, the other sciences, acquired by study and teaching, concerning which by the gift of infused science we judge rightly and with sound sense; and this, considered in this present state, the holy Doctor calls the morning hour; because it is still mixed with darkness.

> Creata autem, circa quae versatur Scientia, sunt primo aliae scientiae, studio, et doctrina acquisitae, circa quas dono infusae scientiae iuste sentimus, et recte iudicamus; et hanc, hoc statu consideratam, vocat Sanctus Doctor horam matutinam; quia adhuc tenebris admiscetur.

3 Second, the Gift of science is concerned with the things to be believed and done, contained in the sacred letters. For from these it draws forth a most ardent light, whereby it inflames and illuminates the mind, as with the midday sun; of this he says, Isaias 18: As the light of midday, it is clear.

> Secundo versatur Donum scientiae circa credibilia, et agibilia, sacris litteris contenta. Ex his enim eruit lucem ardentissimam, qua inflammat, et illuminat mentem, veluti Sole meridiano; de hac dicit Isaias 18. Sicut lux meridiana, clara est.

4 Third, this science is occupied with the other moral matters, establishing and quieting the mind in truth, lessening the labor by the intuition of eternal quiet, and bringing it to its terminus: This is the end, and the evening twilight, of this gift; on account of these things it is said, Psalm 103., says the Seraphic Doctor here at the end of chapter 1: Man goeth forth in the morning to his work, until the evening.

> Tertio occupatur haec scientia circa caetera moralia, mentem in veritate stabiliens, et quietans, laborem intuitu quietis aeternae minuens, et terminans: Hic est finis, et vespertinum huius doni crepusculum; propter haec dicitur Psal. 103. inquit Seraphicus hic ad finem capitis 1. Exibit homo mane ad operationem suam usque ad vesperam.

Doubt III: Whether the gift of knowledge is speculative

1 Since Science is borne especially toward doing and believing, so that it may pass judgment on these according to truth, St. Thom. and St. Bonav. cap. 3. de dono scientiae assert here that it is primarily speculative: it is nevertheless secondarily practical, because it is also ordered to operation, insofar as it prescribes that charity be begotten and defended in this or that way. Both holy Doctors prove that this gift is at once speculative and practical from St. Greg. 1. Moral. cap. 6., who says: Science in its day makes a banquet, because it makes a fast from the ignorance in the womb of the mind. But the fast of ignorance is not broken except by both science, speculative and practical; for he who has contracted an ignorance of supernatural things by acting perversely must needs expel it not only by knowing rightly, but also by acting well.

> Cum Scientia praecipue feratur in agenda, et credenda, ut de ipsis secundum veritatem iudicium ferat, eam esse primario speculativam afferunt hic D. Thom. et D. Bonav. cap. 3. de dono scientiae: est tamen secundario practica, quia etiam ad operationem ordinatur, quatenus charitatem his, aut illis modis gignendam, tuendamque praescribit. Probat uterque Sanctus Doctor, hoc donum speculativum simul esse, et practicum, e D. Greg. 1. Moral. cap. 6. dicente: Scientia in die sua convivium facit, quia in ventre mentis ignorantiae ieiunium facit. Sed ignorantiae ieiunium non solvitur, nisi per utramque scientiam speculativam, et practicam; qui enim rerum supernaturalium ignorantiam perverse agendo contraxit, necesse est, ut non solum recte sciendo, sed et bene agendo eam expellat.

2 Then, speculation, or practice, of Science is drawn from the condition of the object; but the object of this science, although primarily speculable, is nevertheless in certain respects operable; for it supplies the medium and manner by which the practice of divine love is had; indeed, for this present state it would be in vain unless it illuminated toward the exercise of charity, as the Seraphic Doctor has from Hugh, lib. de vanitate mundi, where he says: In vain does the abundance of divine cognition grow in us, unless the flame of divine love increase in us.

> Deinde speculatio, vel praxis Scientiae desumitur a conditione obiecti; sed obiectum huius scientiae, quamvis primario speculabile, est tamen in aliquibus operabile; haec enim praestat medium, et modum, quibus praxis divinae dilectionis habeatur, imo pro hoc statu frustra esset, nisi ad charitatis exercitium illuminaret, ut habet Seraphicus ex Hugone lib. de vanitate mundi, ubi dicit: Frustra in nobis divinae cognitionis abundantia crescit, nisi in nobis divinae dilectionis flamma augescat.

3 Then, the Gift of science follows the nature of faith; for it also passes judgment on this; but faith, although primarily it does nothing concerning its object, nevertheless, once perfected, works abundantly through charity. Galat. 5.

> Deinde Donum scientiae sequitur naturam fidei; de hac enim etiam iudicat; sed fides, licet primario nihil operetur circa suum obiectum, abunde tamen, iam perfecta, operatur per charitatem. Galat. 5.

4 Finally, to these considerations add that spiritual banquet of science, where the Seraphic Doctor feeds the whole throng at the threefold table of History, Allegory, and Anagoge with most savory and sweetest dishes, through the whole of chapter 3; see them there, for those dishes translated hither would perhaps lose their native savor.

> His denique adiice convivium illud spirituale scientiae, ubi ad triplicem mensam Historiae, Allegoriae, et Anagogiae sapidissimis, et dulcissimis ferculis cibat Seraphicus totam turbam, per totum caput 3. ipsorum ibi vide, istinc enim fercula illa huc translata nativum saporem forsan amitterent.

Doubt IV: Whether the third beatitude, Blessed are they that mourn, corresponds to the gift of knowledge

1 Since temporal things are possessed with excessive joy because the vileness of these things is not known, and heavenly things still, beneath the bitter rind of the letter, are found tasteless; hence the mind cannot acknowledge its blindness, and much less can the will turn it away by a salutary mourning:

> Cum temporalia ideo cum laetitia nimia possideantur, quia harum vilitas ignoratur, et adhuc caelestia sub amaro litterae cortice insipida probentur; hinc nequit mens suam agnoscere caecitatem, multoque minus salutari luctu valet voluntas eam avertere:

2 Therefore the holy Doctors, St. Thomas here, St. Bonaventura, cap. 3. de septem Donis, assert that the third beatitude corresponds to the Gift of science.

> Asserunt igitur SS. Doctores, S. Thomas hic, S. Bonaventura, cap. 3. de septem Donis, tertiam beatitudinem respondere Dono scientiae.

3 It is proved first from St. August. supra de sermone Domini in monte, cap. 9. Then, because the gift of science teaches one to pass right judgment on the creatures on account of which man is turned away from God and slides into miseries, and therefore to that right judgment of science there corresponds the mourning, whereby one is turned away from the evil of lust, and from the languor of concupiscence, and is converted to the evil of one's own blindness, to be bitterly bewailed, as that word of the Psalmist says: I shall reflect upon all my years in the bitterness of my soul. From this Gift of science also arises the reward of this beatitude, namely that supernal consolation, whereby man, having clearly seen the vanity of the creature,[1] and tasting the goodness of God, is filled to the marrow. But this consolation is promised not to those who revel, but to those who mourn; nor can they mourn who do not pass through the gift of science to the contemplation of pure truth, as the Seraphic Doctor concludes here.

> Probatur primo ex D. August. supra de sermone Domini in monte, cap. 9. Deinde, quia donum scientiae docet rectum ferre iudicium creaturarum, ob quas homo avertitur a Deo, et in miserias labitur, et ideo illi iudicio recto scientiae respondet luctus, quo avertitur a malo libidinis, et a languore concupiscentiae, et convertitur ad propriae caecitatis malum amare deflendum, ut dicat illud Psalmistae: Recogitabo omnes annos meos in amaritudine animae meae. Ex hoc etiam Dono scientiae oritur huius beatitudinis praemium, nimirum consolatio illa superna, qua homo perspecta creaturae vanitatem, et Dei gustans bonitatem, medullitus repletur. Verum haec consolatio non luxuriantibus, sed lugentibus promittitur, nec lugere queunt, qui per donum scientiae ad contemplationem purae veritatis non transeunt, ut concludit hic Seraphicus Doctor.

Disputation II: On Unbelief

1 Among the unfaithful there are some who never received the faith, and these are the pagans: Others are those who rejected the faith once received, and these are heretics: Others, finally, who long worshiped the faith of the Savior under figures, but did not acknowledge it when it was manifested, and these are the Jews: Here we are to treat of unfaithfulness in general for the absence of faith, and when something is to be touched upon concerning the unbaptized unfaithful: in the following disputation, however, we shall discourse on heresy.

> Infidelium alii sunt, qui nunquam fidem receperunt, et hi sunt pagani: Alii sunt, qui fidem receptam respuerunt, et hi sunt haeretici: Alii denique, qui Salvatoris fidem diu sub figuris coluerunt, sed eam exhibitam non agnoverunt, et isti sunt Iudaei: Hic de infidelitate in genere pro fidei carentia agendum, et cum aliquid de infidelibus, non baptizatis, libandum: In sequenti vero disputatione de haeresi disseremus.

Question I: What unbelief is, and what kind of sin it is 1 It is TO BE NOTED, from St. Bonaventura on those words Lucas 19. Non relinquent in te lapidem super lapidem: eo quod non cognoveris tempus visitationis tuae — There shall not be left in thee a stone upon a stone: because thou hast not known the time of thy visitation — that Infidelity is the ruin of the spiritual edifice; just as faith, on the contrary, is the foundation of that edifice. But this is Infidelity, not that which is opposed to Fidelity, which is a moral virtue inclining toward faith, or a promise to be kept, of which Eccles. 5. Displicet Deo infidelis promissio — An unfaithful promise displeaseth God — as the holy Doctor warns on that passage; but it is the infidelity that is opposed to the Theological virtue, as I said, disp. 1. quaest. 1., with St. Bonau. That Infidelity is a sin, I showed in disput. 1. quaest. 14. and the following, where the obligation to believe the articles of faith, and other matters, were treated of; and therefore it can be sinned against by grave omission, in not learning the things of faith that have been sufficiently proposed.

> Quid, et quale peccatum sit INFIDELITAS.
> NOTANDUM ex D. Bonaventura ad ea verba Lucae 19. Non relinquent in te lapidem super lapidem: eo quod non cognoveris tempus visitationis tuae*, Infidelitatem esse ruinam aedificii spiritualis; sicut fides e contra est fundamentum eius aedificii. Haec autem est Infidelitas, non quae opponitur Fidelitati, quae est virtus moralis inclinans ad fidem, seu promissum servandum, de qua* Eccles. 5. Displicet Deo infidelis promissio*, ut monet S. Doct. ad eum locum; sed est infidelitas, quae opponitur virtuti Theologicae, ut dixi* disp. 1. quaest. 1. cum D. Bonau. Infidelitatem esse peccatum, ostendi disput. 1. quaest. 14. et sequentibus, ubi actum est de obligatione credendi articulos fidei, et alia; atque adeo peccari posse omissione gravi, non discendo res fidei, sufficienter propositas.

2 But Infidelity can be sinned against in TWO WAYS: either positively, by attacking and refusing the truth of faith once acknowledged, and this is called infidelity of contrariety; Or privatively, by lacking the due knowledge. Some add another negative lack, which is through invincible ignorance, but this the majority do not admit, with St. Bonavent. 3. dist. 21. art. 1. quaest. 3., of which I treated in Prima secundae, tract. de peccato, disp. 1. quaest 1.

> DUPLICITER vero potest Infidelitate delinqui, vel positive, veritatem fidei agnitam impugnando, et recusando, et haec dicitur infidelitas contrarie: Vel privatime, carendo notitia debita. Aliqui addunt aliam carentiam negativam, quae sit per ignorantiam invincibilem, sed hanc non admittunt plurimi cum D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 21. art. 1. quaest. 3. de quibus egi Prima secundae, tract. de peccato, disp. 1. quaest 1.

3 Infidelity is DIVIDED, moreover, into Heresy, Judaism, and Paganism, by St. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 5. and St. Bonau. p. 1. Gentil. sect. 26. There the holy Doctor proves that infidelity is the greatest sin among sins, viz. Ioan. 16. Arguet mundum de peccato, etc. quia non crediderunt in me — He will argue the world of sin, etc. because they believed not in me. He calls this Sin antonomastically. And Ioan. 3. Qui non credit, iam iudicatus est: quia non credidit in nomine Unigeniti filii Dei — He that doth not believe is already judged: because he hath not believed in the name of the Only-begotten Son of God. And of Mark, at the end: Qui vero non crediderit, condemnabitur — But he that believeth not shall be condemned — as if the supreme punishment were prepared for the unfaithful. I said, with St. Bonau., that infidelity is the greatest sin among sins, because no one on the way hates God expressly, but only interpretatively, as St. Bonau. teaches on those words Ioan. 15. Et oderunt me, et Patrem meum — And they hated me, and my Father. Interpretatively indeed they hate, insofar as they are turned away from Him through sins, or would not be punished; but formal hatred is the proper possession of the damned.

DIVIDITUR autem Infidelitas in Haeresim, Iudaismum, et Paganismum a D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 5. et D. Bonau. p. 1. Centil. sect. 26. Ibi probat S. Doct. infidelitatem esse peccatum, maximum inter peccata viz Ioan. 16. Arguet mundum de peccato, etc. quia non crediderunt in me. Vocat hoc Peccatum antonomastice. et Ioan. 3. Qui non credit, iam iudicatus est: quia non credidit in nomine Unigeniti fily Dei. Et Marci ultimo: Qui vero non crediderit, condemnabitur, quasi poena summa infidelibus praeparata sit. Dixi, inter peccata viz infidelitatem esse peccatum maximum, cum D. Bonau. quia nullus in via odit Deum expresse, sed solum interpretative, ut docet D. Bonau. ad ea verba Ioan. 15. Et oderunt me, et Patrem meum. Interpretative quidem oderunt, quatenus ab eo avertuntur per peccata, vel nollent puniri; odium vero formale, est damnatorum proprium.

4 St. THOMAS compares infidelity with the hatred of God, and says that this is worse, because it is opposed to Charity, which is greater, 1 Corinth. 13. But that Infidelity is greater, he says, than Despair, as I shall say in disp. 6. quaest. un., although the latter is more perilous. See also Tannerus T. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 1.

D. THOMAS comparat infidelitatem cum odio Dei, et ait, hoc esse peius, quia opponitur Charitati, quae maior est prima Corinth. 13. Infidelitatem vero maiorem, ait, Desperatione, ut dicam disp. 6. quaest. un. tametsi haec sit periculosior. Vide etiam Tannerum T. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 1.

5 Furthermore, the holy Doctor places infidelity in the intellect, in 3. dist. 5. quaest. 5. ad 4.; for it is opposed to faith, which is in the intellect and the will, or in free choice, as I said, disp. 1. quaest. 18. Of this treat Suarez disp. 16. sect. 3., Hurtado disp. 67., Lugo disp. 18. sect. 1. They ask especially: whether the sin of infidelity is always consummated in the intellect; whether sometimes in the Will alone.

PORRO infidelitatem in intellectu ponit S. Doct. in 3. dist. 5. quaest. 5. ad 4. opponitur enim fidei, quae est in intellectu, et voluntate, seu in libero arbitrio, ut dixi disp. 1. quaest. 18. De quo agunt Suarez disp. 16. sect. 3. Hurtado disp. 67. Lugo disp. 18. sect. 1. Quaerunt praecipue: an peccatum infidelitatis semper consummetur in intellectu; an in sola aliquando Voluntate.

6 Suarez loc. cit., Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 3., Tannerus 2. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 8. dubio secundo, Fuliens. lib. 3. cap 6. DENY it.

NEGANT Suarez loc. cit. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 3. Tannerus 2. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 8. dubio secundo, Fuliens. lib. 3. cap 6.

7 Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 10. p. 1., Hurtado disp. 68. sect. 2. ASSERT it, which opinion, understood Metaphysically, pleases Lugo, num. 9, although, speaking commonly, he adheres to the former. Fuliens., however, says that the objective malice is in the intellect, which fails from faith; but the formal [malice] in the will, from which the perverse act of the intellect freely goes forth.

ASSERUNT Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 10. p. 1. Hurtado disp. 68. sect. 2. quae sententia Metaphysice intellecta placet Lugo num. 9 licet communiter loquendo, priori adhaereat. Fuliens. vero malitiam obiectivam in intellectu ait, qui deficit a fide; formalem vero in voluntate, a qua libere exit actus intellectus pravus.

Question II: Whether all the works of unbelievers are sins

1 The sectaries of this time clamor that all the works of infidels are sins. So Luther, art. 36. among those condemned by Leo X; Melanchthon in Apol. confess. Augustana; Bucerus lib. de concordia communi; Calvin lib. 2. Instit. cap. 3.; Kemnitius in examine sess. 6. can. 7.

An opera omnia Infidelium sint peccata.

SECTARII huius temporis omnia opera infidelium, peccata esse clamant. Sic Lutherus art. 36. ex damnatis a Leone X. Melanchthon in Apol. confess. Augustana, Bucerus lib. de concordia communi. Calvinus lib. 2. Instit. cap. 3. Kemnitius in examine sess. 6. can. 7.

2 But the opinion of Gregory of Rimini was, 2. sent. dist. 41. quaest. un. art. 2., that every action of that infidel is evil who is wholly ignorant of God; but not the actions of heretics, who at least acknowledge God. Capreolus, however, in 2. dist. 41. quaest. un. art. 3., thinks that at least every commanded action, done by an infidel at the time it is commanded, is evil, because it ought to be referred to the true God, which infidels do not do, since they do not know the true God: and in this he favors Gregory.

FVIT vero sententia Gregorii Arim. 2. sent. dist. 41. quaest. un. art. 2. omnem actionem istius infidelis esse malam, qui omnino Deum ignoret; non autem haereticorum, qui Deum saltem agnoscunt. Capreolus vero in 2. dist. 41. quaest. un. art. 3. putat, saltem omnem actionem praeceptam, factam ab infideli, quo tempore praecipitur, esse malam, quia deberet referri in Deum verum, quod non faciunt infideles, qui Deum verum ignorant: et in hoc Gregorio favet.

3 Yet it is most true that some works of infidels are good.

VERISSIMUM tamen est, aliqua opera infidelium esse bona.

4 It is proved first from St. Bonaventure, 3. dist. 38. dub. 2. ex 7 primo Exodi, where the midwives of Egypt are praised, because against the king's command they kept alive the Hebrew infants, to which they were bound by both Divine and natural law. Now those midwives were infidels. And of them it is said: Quia timuerunt Deum, aedificavit eis domos — Because they feared God, he built them houses. There St. Jerome says: AEdificavit eis domos spirituales: Ergo aliquam spiritualem rem adeptae sunt — He built them spiritual houses: therefore they attained some spiritual thing.

PROBATUR primo a S. Bonau. 3. dist. 38. dub. 2. ex 7 primo Exodi, ubi Obstetricaes AEgyptiae laudantur, quia contra Regis mandatum servabant vivos infantulos Hebraeorum, ad quod lege Divina, et naturali tenebantur. Illae autem Obstetricaes infideles erant. De his vero dicitur: Quia timuerunt Deum, aedificavit eis domos. Ubi D. Hieronymus: AEdificavit eis domos spirituales: Ergo aliquam spiritualem rem adeptae sunt.

5 It is proved second from the Saintly Doctor, from what is said in prima secundae, tract. 5. qui de Gratia, disp. 1. quaest. 10., where it is shown that by the powers of nature one can perform a good moral work.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. ex dictis prima secundae, tract. 5. qui de Gratia, disp. 1. quaest. 10. ubi ostendi, posse aliquem viribus naturae, agere bonum opus morale.

6 It is proved third from the Saintly Doctor here, because neither faith nor sanctifying grace is required for a good moral work, as the Council of Trent defines, sess. 6. cap. 7., where under anathema they condemn those who say that every action of man before justification is sin.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. hic, quia ad opus bonum morale non requiritur fides, neque gratia sanctificans, ut definit C. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 7. ubi sub anathemate damnantur dicentes, omnem actionem hominis ante iustificationem esse peccatum.

7 The same is proved from the Fathers: Ambrose lib. 1. de Abraham, cap. 2.; Jerome in fine lib. 2. com. in epistolam ad Galat.; Augustine lib. de spiritu, et litt. cap. 27. et 28.; Chrysostom homil. 67. ad popul. See Tanner disp. 1. q. 8. dub. 4.

> Idem probatur ex PP. Ambrof. lib. 1. de Abraham, cap. 2. Hieron. in fine lib. 2. com. in epistolam ad Galat. August. lib. de spiritu, et litt. cap. 27. et 28. Chrysost. homil. 67. ad popul. Vide Tannerum disp. 1. q. 8. dub. 4.

8 They object certain passages of Scripture, Matth. 7. Non potest arbor mala bonos fructus facere — A bad tree cannot bring forth good fruit.

> OBIICIUNT aliqua loca Scripturae, Matth. 7. Non potest arbor mala bonos fructus facere.

9 The Saintly Doctor answers here, from St. Augustine lib. 1. cont. Iulianum, cap. 3. et in Enchir. cap. 15., that the bad tree is said to be the will, insofar as it wills something badly, or insofar as the will of that infidel is not perfectly good. So also Tanner and others.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. hic ex D. August. lib. 1. cont. Iulianum, cap. 3. et in Enchir. cap. 15. dici arborem malam voluntatem, quatenus male aliquid vult, vel ut voluntas est illius infidelis, non perfecte bona est. Ita etiam Tannerus, et alii.

10 Second they object that word of Ioan. 15. Sine me nihil potestis facere — Without me you can do nothing.

> SECUNDO obiiciunt illud Ioan. 15. Sine me nihil potestis facere.

11 The Saintly Doctor answers on that passage, and in 2. dist. 28. art. 2. quaest. 3., that He speaks of meritorious works, and of those which are a disposition to salvation de congruo. Then it suffices that the help of God be present, so that one may act on account of God known as the author of nature, even if faith is absent.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. ad eum locum, et in 2. dist. 28. art. 2. quaest. 3. loqui de operibus meritoriis, et de his, quae sunt dispositio ad salutem de congruo. Deinde sufficit, si auxilium Dei adsit, ut operetur ob Deum cognitum authorem naturae, etiamsi absit fides.

12 They object third, Rom. 14. Omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est — All that is not of faith is sin.

> OBIICIUNT tertio Rom. 14. Omne, quod non est ex fide, peccatum est.

13 The Saintly Doctor answers, in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. et in 4. dist. 39. q. 3., that he there speaks of conscience in the manner of a work, so that a deed done against conscience is evil. Thus it is expounded by St. Chrysostom, homil. 26. in epistolam ad Romanos, and by others. So also Tanner loco citato.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. in 3. dist. 23. dub. 2. et in 4. dist. 39. q. 3. ibi loqui de conscientia, ut opus, contra conscientiam factum, malum sit. Sic exponitur a D. Chrysost. homil. 26. in epistolam ad Romanos, et aliis. Ita etiam Tannerus loco citato.

14 They object fourth that word of Titus 1: Coinquinatis, et infidelibus nihil est mundum — To the defiled and unbelieving nothing is clean.

> OBIICIUNT quarto id Titi primo: Coinquinatis, et infidelibus nihil est mundum.

15 It is answered from St. Bonaventure here, and St. Chrysostom homil. 3. ibi, that all things are unclean to infidels when they superstitiously perform their actions; for an infidel can judge one thing unclean, for instance a little wine, as well as a sow. See the rest in Valencia quaest. 10. p. 2.; Tanner loco citato.

> Respondetvr ex D. Bonav. hic, et D. Chrysost. homil. 3. ibi; omnia esse immunda infidelibus, superstitiose suas actiones peragentibus; tam enim potest infidelis unum existimare immundum, puta vinulum, quam Suem. Vide reliqua in Valentia quaest. 10. p. 2. Tannero loco citato.

Question III: Whether unbelievers can be compelled to hear the faith

1 We now speak of Infidels who are without, not baptized.

> LOQUIMUR nunc de Infidelibus, qui extra sunt, non baptizati.

2 The Saintly Doctor proves this power admirably, first on 14. Lucae, where the King commands: Go out into the highways and hedges: and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. There those ministers are the preachers, who are commanded by Christ to seek the gentiles outside the city, in the highways and hedges, according to the exposition of St. Gregory in the Gloss. in cap. 14. Lucae, et homil. 36. in Evang.; but by the ways, however, of the city they seek the Jews, who were known to keep the law under urban conversation. And He commands them to compel these by terrors of eternal punishments, not by the torments of war, as the Saintly Doctor notes, but by most efficacious reasons, as St. Thomas also notes, quaest. 22. de ver. art. 9. et alii.

> POTESTATEM hanc egregie probat S. Doct. primo ad 14. Lucae, ubi Rex praecipit: Exi in vias, et sepes: et compelle intrare, ut impleatur domus mea. Ubi ministri illi praedicatores sunt, qui praecipiuntur a Christo, ut extra civitatem in vias, et sepes quaerant gentiles, iuxta expositionem D. Gregorii in Gloss. in cap. 14. Lucae, et homil. 36. in Evang. per vias autem urbis quaerunt Iudaeos, qui tenere legem sub urbana conversatione noverant. Hos vero compellere terroribus aeternorum suppliciorum iubet, non bellicis tormentis, ut advertit S. Doct. sed rationibus efficacissimis, ut notant etiam D. Thom. quaest. 22. de ver. art. 9. et alii.

3 The Saintly Doctor shows the same at the end of Lucae, on those words of Christ: Sic oportebat Christum pati, et resurgere a mortuis: et praedicari in nomine eius poenitentiam, et remissionem peccatorum in omnes gentes — Thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead: and that penance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all nations. And He shows this right from Genesis 22: Benedicentur in semine tuo omnes gentes — In thy seed shall all nations be blessed. Genesis 49: Ipse erit expectatio gentium — He shall be the expectation of nations. Psalm 2: Postula a me, et dabo tibi gentes —

Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations. Ego autem sum Rex ab eo constitutus, praedicans praeceptum eius — But I am a king set up by him, preaching his command. Isaiah 49: Dedi te in lucem gentium — I have given thee for a light of the nations.

> IDIPSUM ostendit S. Doct. ad ultimum Lucae ad ea verba Christi: Sic oportebat Christum pati, et resurgere a mortuis: et praedicari in nomine eius poenitentiam, et remissionem peccatorum in omnes gentes. Hoc autem ius ostendit ex Genes. 22. Benedicentur in semine tuo omnes gentes. Genes. 49. Ipse erit expectatio gentium. Psal. 2. Postula a me, et dabo tibi gentes. Ego autem sum Rex ab eo constitutus, praedicans praeceptum eius. Isa. 49. Dedi te in lucem gentium.

4 The Saintly Doctor confirms this, in 3. dist. 14. dub. 4., on that word of Matthew at the end: Data est mihi omnis potestas in caelo, et in terra. Euntes ergo docete omnes gentes — All power is given to me in heaven and on earth. Going therefore, teach all nations. Having premised this, he shows it from this place in 4. dist. 3. p. 2. quaest. 1. ad quintum.

> CONFIRMAT S. Doct. in 3. dist. 14. dub. 4. illo Matth. ultimo: Data est mihi omnis potestas in caelo, et in terra. Euntes ergo docete omnes gentes. Praemissis id ostendit ex hoc loco in 4. dist. 3. p. 2. quaest. 1. ad quintum.

5 And the Apostle, 2 Corinthians 5: Posuit in nobis verbum reconciliationis: Pro Christo ergo legatione fungimur — He hath placed in us the word of reconciliation: for Christ therefore we are ambassadors.

> ET Apostolus secunda Corinth. 5. Posuit in nobis verbum reconciliationis: Pro Christo ergo legatione fungimur.

6 Since, therefore, with his divine power He has sent preachers as Legates to announce the Gospel, they have the right of coercing those who would wish to hinder this preaching; for such power belongs to a King for coercing those who would wish to hinder his own Legates, as is clear ex l. 2. ff. de his, quibus mandata est iurisdictio, C. Praeterea de officio delegati. Thus the Doctors commonly hold, as in Tanner 2. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1. num. 10. et sequent.

> CUM igitur divina sua potestate miserit praedicatores Legatos ad annunciandum Evangelium, habent ius illi coërcendi eos, qui praedicationem hanc vellent impedire: Talis enim potestas inest Regi ad eos coërcendos, qui suos vellent impedire Legatos, ut constat ex l. 2. ff. de his, quibus mandata est iurisdictio, C. Praeterea de officio delegati: Ita sentiunt communiter Doctores apud Tannerum 2. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1. num. 10. et sequent.

7 There are, however, several questions about these.

> De his vero sunt nonnullae quaestiones.

8 The first is: To whom belongs the authority of sending preachers to the Infidels.

> PRIMA est: Ad quos pertinet authoritas mittendi praedicatores ad Infideles.

9 The Saintly Doctor answers, in opusculo. Quare fratres minores praedicent, that it belongs to the Pope and to the other Pastors, from Lucae 10. Hence Innocent, on that word of Rom. 10, Quomodo praedicabunt, nisi mittantur — How shall they preach unless they be sent, cited in cap. cum ex iniuncto de haereticis, says that no one ought to usurp the office of preaching for himself indiscriminately. This the Saintly Doctor proves from those words of Christ: Rogate ergo dominum messis, ut mittat operarios in messem suam — Pray therefore the lord of the harvest, that he send labourers into his harvest. Matthew 9.

RESPONDET S. Doct. in opusculo. Quare fratres minores praedicent; competere Papae, et aliis Pastoribus ex Lucae 10. Unde Innocentius in illud Rom. 10. Quomodo praedicabunt, nisi mittantur relatus in cap. cum ex iniuncto de haereticis, ait, quod non debet sibi quisquam indifferenter praedicationis officium usurpare. Quod probat S. Doct. illis verbis Christi: Rogate ergo dominum messis, ut mittat operarios in messem suam. Matth. 9.

10 But it belongs to Princes to defend the Missionaries, not directly by reason of their own jurisdiction, but as they are ministers of the Pontiff. Thus Alexander VI divided the Provinces of the Indies between the Kings of Castile and Portugal, so that they might defend the preachers and those sent into them.

PERTINET vero ad Principes defendere Missionarios, non directe ratione suae iurisdictionis, sed ut sunt ministri Pontificis. Sic Alexander VI. divisit Regibus Castellae, et Lusitaniae Provincias Indiarum, ut praedicatores, et missos in his defenderent.

11 That they may be accompanied by armed armies, so that they may go in safety, is taught by Maior 2. dist. 44. quaest. 2. et newly by Joannes Solorzano in Diana, 6. p. tract. 4. resol. 15.

Posse vero eos comitari exercitibus armatis, ut securi eant, docent Maior 2. dist. 44. quaest. 2. et noviter Ioannes Solorzano apud Dianam, 6. p. tract. 4. resol. 15.

12 The opposite, however, is held by Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 1., together with Suarez disp. 18. de fide.; Hurtado disp. 75.; Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 5.

OPPOSITUM tamen sentiunt Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 1. cum Suarez disp. 18. de fide. Hurtad. disp. 75. Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 5.

13 They prove it from that Matth. 10., where Christ sends the Apostles: Sicut agnos inter Lupos, sine baculo, etc. — As sheep among wolves, without staff, etc. But now our question is: Whether, if the preaching of the Gospel is offered peacefully and the Infidels refuse to hear it, they can be compelled by force of arms to hear it.

PROBANT illo Matth. 10. ubi Christus mittit Apostolos: Sicut agnos inter Lupos, sine baculo, etc. Iam vero est nostra quaestio: An, si praedicatio Evangelii pacifice offeratur, et Infideles renuant audire, cogi armorum vi possint ad eam audiendam.

14 The first opinion is the affirmative one of Maior loc. cit.

PRIMA opinio est assertiva Maioris loc. cit.

15 The second is negative. So Valencia quaest. 10. p. 6. et, as Salmeron indicates, T. 12. tract. 38.; Coninck disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 24.; Cajetan, Bannes, Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 8. et others commonly, as in Tanner disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1. It seems also to be St. Bonaventure's, ad 9. Lucae, on those words: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis — You know not of what spirit you are.

SECUNDA est negativa. Ita Valentia quaest. 10. p. 6. et indicat Salmeron T. 12. tract. 38. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 24. Caietanus, Bannes, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 8. et alii communiter apud Tannerum disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1. Videtur D. Bonav. ad 9. Lucae in ea verba: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis.

16 The third, middle opinion asserts that unbaptized infidels are subjects of Christian Princes only. So Suarez disp. 18. sect. 2.; Hurtado disp. 75. sect. 3., who prove it from the Bull of Gregory XIII, compelling the Jews to hear our faith every week, only from a sermon. The same holds Scotus, 4. dist. 4. quaest. ult.; Castro lib. 2. de haeret. punit. cap. 14.

TERTIA sententia media asserit, quoad non baptizatos infideles, eos esse subditos Principibus Christianis tantum. Ita Suarez disp. 18. sect. 2. Hurtado disp. 75. sect. 3. qui id probant ex Bulla Gregorii XIII. cogentis Iudaeos ad audiendam singulis hebdomadibus fidem nostram e concione solum. Idem vult Scotus 4. dist. 4. quaest. ult. Castro lib. 2. de haeret. punit. cap. 14.

17 I assert this opinion with St. Bonaventure. It is proved from him. For Christ rebuked the disciples wishing to punish the Samaritans who refused to receive Christ, Lucae 9; and they are rebuked because it did not belong to the Apostles to coerce with punishments, since it had been said to them: Sicut misit me Pater, et ego mitto vos — As the Father hath sent me, I also send you. He Himself, when sent, was to announce to the gentle, anointed with the unction of love, as is said Isaie 61. et .42.: Dedi spiritum meum super eum: Calamum quassatum non conteret, et linum fumigans non extinguet — I have given my spirit upon him: the bruised reed he shall not break, and the smoking flax he shall not extinguish. Hence He answered the disciples there: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis. Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, sed salvare — You know not of what spirit you are. The Son of man came not to destroy souls, but to save. For this advent was not of justice, but of mercy, Ioan. 3: Non misit Deus Filium suum, ut iudicet mundum, sed ut salvetur mundus per ipsum — God sent not his Son to judge the world, but that the world be saved by him; whence from this He took the name JESU, Matth. 1., not Alexander's, not Caesar's. And therefore whoever has the Spirit of God ought not to seek vengeance, but to show patience, as Ambrose says in the Gloss there: Perfecta virtus non habet studium ultionis. Nec ulla est iracundia charitatis, sed plenitudo — Perfect virtue has no zeal for revenge. Nor is there any anger in charity, but fullness. Therefore it is said, Rom. 12. Non vosmetipsos defendentes charissimi, etc. — Not defending yourselves, most beloved, etc. These things, St. Bonaventure, locis citatis.

ASSERO cum hac D. Bonav. sententia. Probatur ab illo. Christus enim corripuit discipulos volentes punire Samaritas, recusantes recipere Christum Lucae 9. corripiuntur vero, quia ad Apostolos non pertinebat poenis coërcere, cum illis dictum esset: Sicut misit me Pater, et ego mitto vos. Ipse autem missos est mansuetis annunciare, unctus unctione amoris, ut dicitur Isaie 61. et .42. Dedi spiritum meum super eum: Calamum quassatum non conteret, et linum fumigans non extinguet. Unde ibi respondit discipulis: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis. Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, sed salvare. Quoniam hic adventus non erat iustitiae, sed misericordiae, Ioan. 3. Non misit Deus Filium suum, ut iudicet mundum, sed ut salvetur mundus per ipsum; unde hinc nomen IESU accepit Matth. 1. non Alexandri, non Caesaris. Et ideo qui Spiritum Dei habet, non debet expetere vindictam, sed exhibere patientiam, ut ait Ambrosius in Glossa ibi: Perfecta virtus non habet studium ultionis. Nec ulla est iracundia charitatis, sed plenitudo. Ideo dicitur Rom. 12. Non vosmetipsos defendentes charissimi, etc. Haec S. Bonav. locis citatis.

18 From which I see that he inclines to the opinions denying that any coercion whatsoever can be inflicted upon Infidels.

Ex quibus video, ipsum inclinare ad sententias, negantes coactionem quamcumque Infidelibus posse inferri.

19 Nor does the power of preaching given by Christ entail the power of compelling to the sermon; otherwise a Preacher sent by a Bishop could compel hearers to the sermon.

NEQUE ex potestate praedicandi data a Christo, sequitur potestas cogendi ad concionem; alioqui Concionator missus ab Episcopo, posset cogere auditores ad concionem.

20 The common opinion, therefore, is that outside infidels cannot be compelled to hear the faith; for no power for this given by Christ is found, as Lugo notes, loco citato, num. 65.

Communis igitur sententia est, non posse cogi infideles extraneos ad fidem audiendam; nulla enim ad hoc potestas data a Christo invenitur, ut notat Lugo loco citato, num. 65.

Question IV: Whether unbelievers can be compelled to embrace our faith, when it has been sufficiently set forth

1 The first opinion is that infidels can be compelled to embrace the faith when sufficiently propounded. So Maior, 2. dist. 4., and indeed Genesius Sepúlveda, as in the Cardinal de Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 2.

An cogi queant Infideles ad FIDEM nostram, sufficienter propositam, amplectendam.

Prima opinio est, posse infideles cogi ad amplectendam fidem, sufficienter propositam. Ita Maior 2. dist. 4. et quidem Genesius sepulueda apud Cardinalem de Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 2.

2 The second opinion asserts this of infidels who are subjects in temporal things of a Prince coercing them to the faith; yet they assert this speaking of Divine law; for by Human law this coercion is prohibited. This Scotus teaches, 4. dist. 4. quaest. 7. at the end, and some of his School; Lorca asserts it probable, 3. disp. 36.

Secunda sententia id asserit de infidelibus, qui sunt subditi in temporalibus Principi, eos ad fidem cogenti; id tamen asserunt, loquendo de iure Divino; nam iure Humano haec coactio prohibetur. Hanc docet Scotus 4. dist. 4. quaest. 7. in fine, et aliqui ex eius Schola; eam probabilem asserit Lorca 3. disp. 36.

3 Others limit it to indirect coercion; but they deny it of direct. So Gabriel, dicta dist. 4. quaest. 2.; Angelus, as in Suarez disp. 18. sect. 3.

Alii id limitant ad coactionem indirectam; negant vero de directa. Ita Gabriel dicta dist. 4. quaest. 2. Angelus apud Suarez disp. 18. sect. 3.

4 The common and true opinion altogether denies that infidels, whether they are subjects or not subjects, can be compelled to embrace the faith. So St. Thomas, quaest. 10. art. 8. and 12., where Cajetan and the other Thomists, Paludanus, Durandus, Antonius, Richardus, Sotus, Abul., Sylvester, Castro, Victoria and others, whom Suarez cites and follows above; Bannes, Aragon, Turrianus, Valencia, Azorias and others, whom Hurtado cites, disp. 75. sect. 2.; Coninck, disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 125.; Castro Palao, Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 6.; Lugo, disp 19. sect. 2. §. 2.; Tannerus, disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1., who reviews others. Add Bass., verb. Fides, 2. num. 8. And it is the opinion of St. Bonaventure, in 4. dist. 4. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1. arg. 4. opp., which he admits also in other places, adduced quaest. 3.

Communis, et vera sententia negat omnino, posse infideles, sive subditi sint, sive non subditi, cogi ad amplectendam fidem. Ita D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 8. et 12. ubi Caietanus, et alii Thomistae, Paludanus, Durandus, Antonius, Richardus, Sotus, Abul. Sylvester, Castro, Victoria, et alii, quos affert, et sequitur Suarez supra, Bannes, Aragon, Turrianus, Valentia, Azorias, et alii, quos afferunt Hurtad. disp. 75. sect. 2. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 125. Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 6. Lugo disp 19. sect. 2. §. 2. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 1. qui alios recensent. Adde Bass. verb. Fides, 2. num. 8. Est autem sententia D Bonau. in 4. dist. 4. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1. arg. 4. opp. quod admittit etiam aliis locis, adductis quaest. 3.

5 I assert with this opinion that infidels, whether subjects or not subjects, cannot be compelled to embrace the faith.

Assero cum hac sententia, non posse infideles, sive subditos, sive non subditos, cogi ad fidem amplectendam.

[6] St. Gregory the Great commands this, lib. 11. epist. 15., cited in cap. Qui sincera, dist. 45., and the Fourth Council of Toledo, cap. 56. relatum eadem dist. cit. de Iudaeis. And Innocent III decrees the same in cap. Maiores, de Baptismo, where the Pontiff gives the reason: because it is against the Christian religion, which is the reason of St. Bonaventure: because the Evangelical Law is free; and it does not judge those that are outward, as the Apostle teaches, prima Corinth. 5., as St. Bonaventure notes, in 4. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 1.; and therefore the Saintly Doctor observes, ad 10. Lucae, the Mission of Christ: Ecce ego mitto vos, sicut Agnos inter Lupos — Behold I send you as sheep among wolves, where he says that the arms with which He wills the world to be brought to the faith are meekness, and not arms after the ancient manner; and he notes that Paul himself was thus converted, of whom it had been said, Genesi. 49. Beniamin Lupus rapax — Benjamin a ravening wolf, who, having been thrown from his horse by Christ the Monarch, yet convicted by arguments and lights, came of his own accord to the faith. Hence the adversaries bring forward this example in vain, as Lugo notes, num. 85. In this sense he expounds also that word of Lucae 14. Compelle eos intrare — Compel them to come in; that is, not by arms, but by heavenly motives; not by temporal punishments, but at most by the terror of eternal punishments, as St. Bonaventure expounds on this place: Arma enim militiae Christianae non sunt carnalia — For the arms of Christian warfare are not carnal, as is said 2. Cor. 10. St. Ambrose notes this, lib. 7. in Lucam. And he observes that the Apostles are forbidden to take up rods, which are signs of power, as the Saintly Doctor describes ad Psal. 22.; and in the commentary, cap. 22. Lucae, St. Bonaventure observes with St. Ambrose lib. 10. in Lucam, that it is commanded that for the time of the Passion alone the Apostles take up two swords for mere defense, and the Gloss adds: Donec sopita persecutorum insania, tempus euangelizandi redeat — Until the madness of the persecutors having been lulled, the time of evangelizing return. But if this coercive force did not remain in the Church, it does not appear how it could remain in Princes in regard to infidels: for to judge of the things of faith belongs to the Church.

Id praecipit S. Gregorius Magn. lib. 11. epist. 15. relatus in cap. Qui sincera, dist. 45. et Concilium Tolet. 4. cap. 56. relatum eadem dist. cit. de Iudaeis. Et id ipsum decernit Innocentius III. in cap. Maiores, de Baptismo*, ubi Pontifex reddit rationem; quia est contra Christianam religionem, quae est ratio D. Bonau. quia Lex Euangelica libera est; nec de his, quae foris sunt iudicat, ut docet Apostolus* prima Corinth. 5. ut notat S. Bonau. in 4. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 1. et ideo observat S. Doct. ad 10. Lucae Missionem Christi: Ecce ego mitto vos, sicut Agnos inter Lupos*, ubi arma, quibus vult, mundum reduci ad fidem, esse mansuetudinem, ait; non autem arma, more antiquo, et sic conuertisse ipsummet Paulum, aduertit; de quo dictum erat,* Genesi. 49. Beniamin Lupus rapax*, qui conversus fuit, ex Equo sane a Christo Monarcha deturbatus; sed convictus argumentis, et luminibus, sponte ad fidem venit. Unde frustra exemplum hoc adducunt adversarii, ut advertit Lugo* num. 85. Hoc sensu explicat, et illud Lucae 14. Compelle eos intrare*, idest non armis, sed motivis caelestibus; non poenis temporalibus, sed terrore, ad summum, poenarum aeternarum, ut exponit D. Bonau. ad hunc locum:* Arma enim militiae Christianae non sunt carnalia*, ut dicitur* 2. Cor. 10. Id aduertit S. Ambrosius lib. 7. in Lucam. Et observat, prohiberi Apostolos tollere virgas, quae sunt signa potestatis, ut describit S. Doct. ad Psal. 22. et in commentario, cap. 22. Lucae S. Bonau. observat cum D. Ambrosio lib. 10. in Lucam*, praecipi, ut pro tempore solo passionis sumant Apostoli duos gladios ad meram defensionem, et addit Glossa:* Donec sopita persecutorum insania, tempus euangelizandi redeat. Quod si in Ecclesia non mansit haec vis coactiva, non appareat quomodo manere possit in Principibus, in ordine ad infideles: nam de rebus fidei iudicare ad Ecclesiam spectat.

7 But the Saintly Doctor proves this admirably ad 9. Lucae, on that remarkable event, when Christ was going to Samaria, and because the Samaritans were unwilling to receive Him for preaching, James and John wished to punish them with fire from heaven; but Christ rebuked them. Nescitis cuius spiritus estis. Filius hominis non venit animas hominum perdere, sed salvare — You know not of what spirit you are. The Son of man came not to destroy the souls of men, but to save; which place I weighed in the preceding question with St. Bonaventure. If some had weighed this, they would not have raged with such slaughter and savagery against the wretched infidels in distant lands, under the pretext of winning them to the Christian religion; on this see the Archbishop of Valencia in the history of America,[1]

> Egregie autem id probat S. Doct. ad 9. Lucae facto illo insigni, quando Christus ibat Samariam, et quia Samaritae noluerunt recipere illum ad praedicandum; Iacobus, et Ioannes volebant igne eos punire e caelo; at Christus eos reprehendit. Nescitis cuius spiritus estis. Filius hominis non venit animas hominum perdere, sed salvare*, quem locum, quaestione superiori perpendi cum D. Bonau. Hoc si nonnulli pensassent, non tanta strage et immanitate saeviissent in miseros infideles, apud exoticas terras, sub praetextu Christianam religionem ipsis conciliandi; de hoc vide Archiepiscopum Valentiz in historia Americz.*

8 It is proved by the Saintly Doctor ad 9. Lucae with reasons, because the nations ought to be moved to the faith voluntarily, in the spirit of rectitude; otherwise contentions and scandals arise, so that the nations say: Haeccine hic Christus eorum praecepit, qui se Salvatorem mundi praedicandum mandavit? — Did this Christ of theirs command, who bade himself be preached as the Savior of the world? Tanner also uses these, num. 4.

> Probatvr a S. Doct. ad 9. Lucae rationibus, quia gentes ad fidem debent moueri voluntarie, spiritu rectitudinis; alioqui contentiones, et scandala oriuntur, ut dicant gentes: Haeccine hic Christus eorum praecepit, qui se Salvatorem mundi praedicandum mandavit? His utitur etiam Tannerus num. 4.

9 You will object, that Sisebutus King of Spain once compelled the Jews to Baptism, and he is praised by the Fourth Council of Toledo, cap. 56.; but King Ferdinand expelled the Jews from the kingdom.

> Obiicies*, Sisebutum Regem Hisp. olim Iudaeos ad Baptismum coëgisse, qui laudatur a Concilio Toletano 4.* cap. 56. Rex vero Ferdinandus Iudaeos e regno expulit.

10 It is answered, that the zeal of Sisebutus is praised, not the deed. Ferdinand indeed expelled the Jews by right, not wishing them to dwell in his kingdoms, lest they harm his subjects. So would that the bloodsuckers be driven out on every side.

> Respondetvr*, laudari Sisebuti Zelum; non factum. Ferdinandus vero iure expulit Iudaeos, nolens habitare in suis regnis, ne suis subditis nocerent. Sic utinam sanguisugae undique pellantur.*

11 You will object second, that St. Gregory Magn. lib. 3. epist. 26., cited in cap. Iam vero, 23. quaest. 6., seems to wish infidels to be compelled by exactions.

> Obiicies secundo, S. Gregorius Magn. lib. 3. epist. 26. relatus, cap. Iam vero, 23. quaest. 6. videtur velle, cogendos infideles exactionibus.

12 It is answered, that they are compelled indirectly and by right, by not remitting to them the tributes due, unless they be converted.

Respondetvr, cogi indirecte, et iure, non remittendo eis tributa debita, nisi convertantur.

13 You will object third, the Laws enacted against Pagans and their rites, ut Lex prima, Lex Ne quis. Lex Nemo ea. Lex Nemo venerandi, C. de Paganis, which laws are praised by the Councils and Fathers, as in Suarez sect. 4.

Obiicies tertio Leges latas contra Paganos, et eorum ritus, ut Lex prima, Lex Ne quis. Lex Nemo ea. Lex Nemo venerandi, C. de Paganis*, quae leges laudantur a Conciliis, et PP. apud Suarez* sect. 4.

14 It is answered, that those laws prohibit the sacrilegious cults of Demons and other things against the natural law, to which Princes have right by nature.

Respondetvr, eas leges prohibere cultus Daemoniorum sacrilegos, et alia, quae sunt contra legem naturae, ad quod Principes naturale habent ius.

15 You will object fourth. Those baptized unwillingly are compelled to obey the Church, as is clear from the Fourth Council of Toledo, cap. 56., cited in cap. de Iudaeis, dist 45.

Obiicies quarto. Baptizati inuiti coguntur ad obediendum Ecclesiae, ut constat e Concilio Tolet. 4. cap. 56. relato cap. de Iudaeis, dist 45.

16 Lugo answers, num. 91., from St. Bonaventure, in 4. dist. 3. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1., that not all who are baptized unwillingly are so esteemed; but those who, driven by fear, so that they may avoid inconveniences, approach baptism; and these are said to be unwilling only in a certain respect.

Respondet Lugo num. 91. e D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 3. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1. non omnes inuitos aestimari baptizatos; sed eos, qui metu adacti, ut vitent incommoda, baptismum adeunt; et hi dicuntur tantum secundum quid inuiti.

Question V: Whether unbaptized unbelievers can be compelled to abandon errors or rites contrary to natural reason

1 The first opinion is affirmative. So Maior, and Sepúlveda, as in Suarez disput. 18. sect. 4. They are cited by Coninck disput. 18. num. 184.; St. Antoninus 3. p. tit. 22. cap. 1. §. 6. et 8., but there he speaks according to the mind of Augustinus Anconitanus. Sylvester is also adduced, under the word Papa, quaestione 7., who speaks in the same way. Panormitanus is also cited, cap. Quod super his, de voto; and after Panormitanus, Hostiensis, and Innocent on cap. Quod super his, extra de voto.

An Infideles non baptizati, cogi queant ad relinquendos errores, vel ritus, rationi naturali contrarios.

Prima opinio est assertiua. Sic Maior, et Sepulueda apud Suarez disput. 18. sect. 4. Citantur a Coninchio disput. 18. num. 184. D. Antonin. 3. p. tit. 22. cap. 1. §. 6. et 8. sed ibi loquitur ad mentem Augustini Anconitani. Adducitur etiam Syluest. verbo Papa, quaestione 7. qui eodem modo loquitur. Citantur etiam Panormitanus cap. Quod super his, de voto, et a Panormitano, Hostiensis, et Innocentius in cap. Quod super his, extra de voto.

2 The common opinion of Theologians grants this of subject infidels only. So Caietan. Victoria, Soto, Valentia, Aragon, and others, whom Suarez disp. 18. sect. 4. cites and follows; Turtianus disp. 52. dub. 2.; Coninck disp. 18. dub. 12. num. 187.; Hurtad. disp. 75. §. 23.; Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2.; Bassaeus v. Fides 2. 8., who cite others. Others hold the same with Tanneto disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2., who also say it is lawful if they are burdensome and a scandal to Christians. The Saintly Doctor, de Eccl. Hierarch. p. 2. cap. 3. proves it from the deed of Iudae Machabaei lib. 1. cap. 3.

SENTENTIA communis Theologorum id concedit de infidelibus tantum subditis. Ita Caietan. Victoria, Soto, Valentia, Aragon, et alii, quos refert, et sequitur Suarez disp. 18. sect. 4. Turtianus disp. 52. dub. 2. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 12. num. 187. Hurtad. disp. 75. §. 23. Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. Bassaeus v. Fides 2. 8. qui alios afferunt. Idem sentiunt alii cum Tanneto disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. qui etiam dicunt, licere, si infensi, et scandalo sint Christianis. Id probat S. Doct. de Eccl. Hierarch. p. 2. cap. 3. ex facto Iudae Machabaei lib. 1. cap. 3.

3 It is proved by Suarez from the example of God, who, when He wished to destroy or punish the nations dwelling in the land of promise, nevertheless willed them not to be warred down by the Israelites for the crime of Idolatry, but for the denial of peaceful passage through their lands; and it is gathered from 20. Numer., and St. August. signifies this, cited in cap. 3. d. 23. quaest. 2.

PROBATUR a Suarez exemplo Dei, qui cum vellet destruere, vel punire gentes habitantes in terra promissionis, noluit tamen eas debellari ab Israëlitis propter crimen Idolatriae; sed propter negatum transitum pacificum per terras suas, et colligitur ex 20. Numer. et hoc significat S. August. relatus cap. 3. d. 23. quaest. 2.

4 But Coninck num. 193. says this deed was done by a special concession of God, the supreme Lord.

At Coninchius num. 193. hoc factum ait speciali concessione Dei supremi Domini.

5 Lugo num. 97. adds that the mere denial of passage did not bring those evils upon the Chanaanites, nor sufficiently justify all the wars of the Jews. Hence when they crossed the Jordan, they killed them, yet not on account of the denied passage. Moreover even little ones were killed, who were ignorant of that barbarity. You will find the better course with St. Bonaventure, ad 12. Sap., for the universal cause of the just war of the Israelites: because certainly those Pagans, corrupted, were unwilling to cease from works against the law of nature; and thus he speaks: O quam bonus, et suavis est Domine spiritus tuus in omnibus! Ideoque eos, qui exerrant, partibus corripis: et de quibus peccant, admones, et alloqueris: ut relicta malitia, credant in te Domine. Illos enim antiquos inhabitatores terrae sanctae tuae, quos exhorruisti, quoniam odibilia opera tibi faciebant per medicamina, et sacrificia iniusta; et filiorum suorum necatores sine misericordia, et comestores viscerum hominum, et devoratores sanguinis a medio Sacramento tuo, et auctores parentes animarum inauxiliatarum perdere voluisti per manus parentum nostrorum, ut dignam perciperent peregrinationem puerorum Dei, quae sibi omnium charior est terra — O how good and sweet is thy spirit, O Lord, in all things! And therefore thou correctest those that err by little and little: and admonishest and speakest to them of the things wherein they sin: that leaving wickedness they may believe in thee, O Lord. For those ancient inhabitants of thy holy land, whom thou didst abhor, because they did odious works to thee by potions and unjust sacrifices; and murderers of their own children without mercy, and eaters of the bowels of men, and devourers of blood from the midst of thy Sacrament, and authors and parents of souls without help, thou didst will to destroy by the hands of our parents, that they might receive a pilgrimage worthy of the children of God, the land most dear to them of all.

Addit Lugo num. 97. solum transitum denegatum non induxisse mala illa Chananaeis, neque satis iustificasse omnia bella Iudaeorum. Unde quando transgressi sunt Iordanem, eos occidebant, non tamen ob transitum denegatum. Praeterea occidebantur etiam parvuli, huius barbariae inscii. Melius cum D. Bonau. ad 12. Sap. inuenies causam universalem belli iusti Israëlitarum, quia nempe Pagani illi corrupti, nolebant delinquere opera contra ius naturae; sic autem loquitur: O quam bonus, et suavis est Domine spiritus tuus in omnibus! Ideoque eos, qui exerrant, partibus corripis: et de quibus peccant, admones, et alloqueris: ut relicta malitia, credant in te Domine. Illos enim antiquos inhabitatores terrae sanctae tuae, quos exhorruisti, quoniam odibilia opera tibi faciebant per medicamina, et sacrificia iniusta; et filiorum suorum necatores sine misericordia, et comestores viscerum hominum, et devoratores sanguinis a medio Sacramento tuo, et auctores parentes animarum inauxiliatarum perdere voluisti per manus parentum nostrorum, ut dignam perciperent peregrinationem puerorum Dei, quae sibi omnium charior est terra.

6 These are the causes, as the Saintly Doctor says there, for which He willed those peoples not to dwell with the faithful people, nor to make a covenant with them; nay rather to be expelled and killed, because incorrigible they accomplished enormous works against nature, to the ruin, scandal, and damnation of the faithful. But the little ones were killed in punishment of the scandals of the adults.

Hae sunt causae, ut ait S. D. ibi, ob quas populos illos noluit cum fideli populo habitare, neque foedus cum eis inire; imo expelli, et occidi, quia opera enormia contra naturam incorrigibiles patrabant in ruinam, scandalum, et damnationem fidelium. Occidebantur vero parvuli in poenam scandalorum patentum.

7 Pope NICOLAUS, answering the questions of the Bulgarians, speaking of Idolaters as such, says: De his, qui idolis immolant, nihil aliud dicere possumus, nisi quod ratione potius, quam vi, convincendi sunt — Of those who sacrifice to idols we can say nothing else, but that they are to be convinced rather by reason than by force.

NICOLAUS Papa ad interrogationes Bulgarorum, loquens de Idolatris, ut sic, ait: De his, qui idolis immolant, nihil aliud dicere possumus, nisi quod ratione potius, quam vi, convincendi sunt.

8 And Paul III, as in Lugo n. 102. et Coninch. 160., declared that the Indians, as infidels, are the true lords of their goods, nor can they be despoiled of them;

Et Paulus III. apud Lugo n. 102. et Coninch. 160. declaravit, Indos infideles, esse veros Dominos suorum bonorum, nec posse eis spoliari, 9 But Bannes quaest. 10. art. 10. dub. 2.; Suarez, above, num. 8.; Coninck num. 188.; Lugo n. 116. note that the Prince must first enact a law, prohibiting; and afterwards punish the delinquents.

Advertunt vero Bannes quaest. 10. art. 10. dub. 2. Suarez supra num. 8. Coninch. num. 188. Lugo n. 116. debere prius Principem legem ferre, prohibendo; et postea delinquentes punire.

10 Lugo adds that they ought to be punished in the mildest way possible; nevertheless, the same says, the more atrocious crimes related above are to be punished most severely. It is a wonder, however, that in the Laws of Solon and Romulus no penalty for parricides is prescribed. Certainly I think with Tullius, oratione pro Rossio Amerino, and Plutarch in vita Romuli, that the cause was that they did not believe so great a crime would ever happen. But when the case should occur, the parricide ought to be chastised with the most atrocious death, as was Francis Ravaillac of Angoulême, who stabbed Henry IV, the Great, the legitimate King of the Gauls, as Lugo Hispanus observes. For this Monarch was great, not inferior to Alexander or Caesar, as his deeds show in Matthaeus and Davila. He had been made most sincerely Catholic, but he wished first to acquire the Kingdom by the sword, lest anyone should ever induce in his mind the hope of capturing the kingdom by the flood of the Sacraments of the reconciled Church; nor indeed had he relapsed by his own judgment, because as an adolescent, with the terror of death struck into him by Charles IX, he had received the Catholic faith. Truly, however, if he had abjured before a Judge, he was not excused, as P. Cyprianus fol. 748. P. Bonagratia v. Absolutio says, even though this doctrine was declared by the Most Eminent only in the year 1068.[1]

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'declarata solum an. 1068'; the year is chronologically impossible here (the volume was printed in 1655 and the authors discussed are 16th–17th century), and the djvu OCR layer could not be aligned to verify the figures; the true reading (perhaps 1568 or 1668 of the Congregation's decree) cannot be established, so the print's '1068' is kept.

Addit Lugo*, suauiori, quo potest modo, punire debere: attamen atrociora crimina, supra relata, gravissime punienda, ait idem. Mirum autem, in Legibus Solonis, et Romuli nullam poenam parricidis praescribi. Profecto reor cum* Tullio, oratione pro Rossio Amerino*, et* Plutarcho in vita Romuli*, causam extitisse, quia tantum scelus non credebant unquam futurum. At casu adveniente, debet parricida atrocissima morte plecti, sicuti fuit Franciscus Ravaellac ab Angolemo, qui Henricum IV. Magnum Galliarum legitimum Regem confodit, ut observat* Lugo Hispanus. Fuit enim magnus hic Monarcha, Alexandro, et Caesare non inferior, ut facta eius apud Matthaeum, et Davilam ostendunt. Fuit Catholicus sincerissime factus, sed voluit prius Regnum ense adquirere, ne unquam aliquis in animum induceret, eum regni captandi eluuie Sacramentis Ecclesiae reconciliarum, neque vero fuerat suo iudicio relapsus, quia adolescens, mortis terrore a Carolo nono incusso, fidem Catholicam susceperat. Enim vero, si coram Iudice abiurarat, non excusabatur, ut ait P. Cyprianus fol. 748. P. Bonagratia v. Absolutio*, etsi haec doctrina sit ab Eminentiss. declarata solum an. 1068.*

Question VI: Whether the rites of unbelievers are to be permitted

[1] The certain rule is that these rites are not to be permitted by Christians to subject infidels without a most grave cause.

An permittendi sint ritus Infidelium.

REGULA certa est, hos ritus non esse absque gravissima causa a Christianis permittendos infidelibus subditis.

[2] The most grave causes, however, are twofold: to avoid greater evils, or lest a greater good be impeded. So the Theologians commonly with St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 11. et St. Bonau. locis allegandis. So Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2.; Card. Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 4.; Bassaeus v. Fides, 2. num. 9.

CAUSAE autem gravissimae geminae sunt; ad vitanda maiora mala, vel ne impediatur maius bonum. Sic Theologi communiter cum D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 11. et D. Bonau. locis allegandis. Sic Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. Card. Lugo disp. 19. sect. 2. §. 4. Bassaeus v. Fides, 2. num. 9.

[3] I assert first, that for the causes adduced, subject infidels can be tolerated by Christian Princes.

ASSERO primo, ob causas allatas posse sustineri a Principibus Christianis infideles subditos.

[4] It is proved from the Saintly Doctor, opusc. de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 7., from that word of Matth. 13., where the Father of the family, expostulated with about eradicating the Zizanias, answered: Non: ne forte eradicetis et triticum. Sinite utraque crescere, etc. — No: lest perhaps you root up the wheat also. Suffer both to grow, etc. For this is the general rule, observed at that time by Pontiffs and Kings, lest seditions and confusions boil up in the Church. For thus God also tolerates certain evils for these causes, as Tanner. notes after St. Bonau. in 1. dist. 47. quaest. 3., where he infers our conclusion, certainly for this reason, because our goods ought to have their exemplars in God.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. opusc. de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 7. ex illo Matth. 13. ubi Paterfamilias expostulatus de eradicandis Zizaniis, respondit: Non: ne forte eradicetis et triticum. Sinite utraque crescere, etc. Haec enim est regula generalis, et a Pontificibus, et Regibus eo tempore servata, ne in Ecclesia seditiones, et confusiones ebullirent. Sic enim et Deus mala quaedam tolerat ob has causas, ut notat Tanner. post D. Bonau. in 1. dist. 47. quaest. 3. ubi nostram infert conclusionem, ea sane ratione, quia bona nostra debent habere exemplaria in Deo.

[5] I assert second, that for this cause also the Jews are tolerated, both because as it were shadows they confirm the truth of our faith, and they exhibit the sacred Books to us for convincing the Pagans. So it is had in can. Qui sincera, dist. 45. et St. August. l 8. de ciuit. cap. 46. The legitimate Books of the old testament are indeed to be received from them, but the truly Talmudic, Cabalistic, and similar ones, vomiting forth insults against Christ, are to be given to the flames, as was long ago decreed by Gregory IX, Innocent IV, Julius III, Paul IV, and recently by Clement VIII.

ASSERO secundo, hac de causa sustineri etiam Iudaeos, tum quia velut umbrae veritatem confirmant nostrae fidei, et Libros sacros nobis exhibent ad Paganos convincendos. Ita habetur can. Qui sincera, dist. 45. et D. August. l 8. de ciuit. cap. 46. Libri sane legitimi veteris testamenti ab eis sunt accipiendi, et vero Thalmudici, Cabalastici, et similes, contumelias in Christum euomentes, flammis tradendi, ut iam olim statutum a Gregorio IX. Innocentio IV. Iulio III. Paulo IV. et nuper a Clemente VIII.

[6] I assert third, that outside these cases subject infidels are not to be tolerated. So it is defined in the Fourth Council of Carthage, can. 15. Elibertino; cap. 44. et Clem. un. de Iudaeis, et Saracenis, et leg. Nemo, C. de Paganis.

ASSERO tertio, extra hos casus non sunt infideles subditi tolerandi. Sic definitur in Concil. Carthag. 4. can. 15. Elibertino; cap. 44. et Clem. un. de Iudaeis, et Saracenis, et leg. Nemo, C. de Paganis.

[7] It is proved from Suarez disp. 18 sect. 4.; Tannero disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2.; Lugo disp. 19 sect. 2. §. 4.; by the argument of St. Bonau ad Psal. 118. cap. 2. vers. 11., expounding that word of Matthaei 20: Principes gentium dominantur eorum — The princes of the nations lord it over them; because they are bound to remove their subjects from the perdition of souls, from scandals, and to promote them to good. For this reason Constantine burned the Temples of the Pagans and forbade the sacrifices; and he is praised by the Saints, Ambr. epist. 30. August. epist. 48. 50. et 104., and Nicephorus lib. 8. cap. 33. et de Iouiniano lib. 10. cap. 39. et Theodosio lib. 12. c. 25. relates it; thus Josias, Ezechias, Iosaphat are praised, who took away the high places, 3. et 4. Reg., and others are blamed who did not take them away, as St. August. epist. 50. notes.

PROBATUR a Suarez disp. 18 sect. 4. Tannero disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. Lugo disp. 19 sect. 2. §. 4. argumento D. Bonau ad Psal. 118. cap. 2. vers. 11. explicantis id Matthaei 20. Principes gentium dominantur eorum, quia tenentur suos subditos removere ab animarum perditione, a scandalis, et ad bonum promovere. Ideo enim Constantinus Templa Paganorum combussit, vetuit sacrificia; et laudatur a Sanctis, Ambr. epist. 30. August. epist. 48. 50. et 104. et refert Nicephorus lib. 8. cap. 33. et de Iouiniano lib. 10. cap. 39. et Theodosio lib. 12. c. 25. sic laudantur Iosias, Ezechias, Iosaphat, qui excelsa abstulere 3. et 4. Reg. et culpantur alii, qui ea non abstulere, ut notat S. August. epist. 50.

[8] Here they ask: whether a Prince can grant a safe-conduct to infidels without a faculty of the Pontiff.

Hic quaerunt : an possit Princeps absque Pontificis facultate salvum conductum infidelibus concedere.

[9] Hurtadus answers, disp. 79. sect. 5., that it can be granted to unbaptized infidels; not to heretics, who are subjects of the Church.

Respondet Hurtadus disp. 79. sect. 5. posse infidelibus non baptizatis concedi; non haereticis, qui Ecclesiae sunt subditi.

10 Therefore, notwithstanding any safe-conduct of the Kings, the Church can punish heretics, as the Council of Constance defines, sess. 19.; yet if she herself has given the safe-conduct, she is bound to keep it: as the Master Joannes Marq., the Augustinian, teaches, lib. 2. de gubernatore Christiano. cap. 24., who on pagina 301. says that faith is to be kept with them, especially when confirmed by oath.

> Igitur, non obstante quovis Regum salvo conducto, potest Ecclesia haereticos punire, ut definit Concilium Constantiae sess. 19. si tamen ipsa dederit salvum conductum, tenetur servare: ut docet Magister Ioan. Marq. Augustinianus lib. 2. de gubernatore Christiano. cap. 24. qui pagina 301. ait, iis servandam fidem, praesertim iuramento firmatam.

Question VII: Whether it is lawful to make agreements with unbelievers about the toleration of their rites

1 This is a most weighty question, and necessary in our times.

> An liceat cum infidelibus pacisci de eorum ritibus tolerandis.
> Gravissima haec quaestio est, et his temporibus necessaria.

2 I assert first: it is not lawful for a Christian Prince to make compacts on this matter without most grave causes. The Catholics agree with D. Bonav. in the places to be cited. So D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 11. Molanus lib 1. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 20. Lenaeus de unica religione servanda. Becanus lib. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 10. Iacobus Simanc. lib. Cathol. Instit. cap. 46. Conradus Brunus de haeret. lib. 3. cap. 15. Petrus Ribadeniera lib. 1. de Inst. Principis, cap. 17. and others cited by Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 3. num. 66.

> Assero primo; non licet absque gravissimis causis Principi Christiano de hoc pacisci. Conveniunt Catholici cum D. Bonav. locis citandis. Sic D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 11. Molanus lib 1. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 20. Lenaeus de unica religione servanda. Becanus lib. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 10. Iacobus Simanc. lib. Cathol. Instit. cap. 46. Conradus Brunus de haeret. lib. 3. cap. 15. Petrus Ribadeniera lib. 1. de Inst. Principis, cap. 17. et alii apud Tannerum disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 3. num. 66.

3 It is proved first by D. Bonav. on 12. Wisdom, in these words: Those ancient inhabitants of thy holy land, whom thou didst abhor, because they did hateful works to thee by charms, and unjust sacrifices, etc. thou didst will to destroy from the midst of thy Sacrament by the hands of our forefathers.

> Probatur primo a D. Bonav. ad 12. Sapientiae, illis verbis: Illos antiquos habitatores terrae sanctae tuae, quos exhorruisti, quoniam odibilia opera tibi faciebant per medicamina, et sacrificia iniusta, etc. perdere voluisti a medio Sacramento tuo per manus parentum nostrorum.

4 It is proved secondly by S. Doct. there from Deuter. 7. You shall not make a covenant with them, nor show mercy to them; nor shall you join with them in marriage. You shall not give your daughter to his son, nor take his daughter for your son: for she will lead your son astray, lest he follow me, so that he may serve strange gods rather: and the wrath of the Lord will be kindled, and he will quickly destroy you. The same is commanded Exodus 34. Hence Solomon is reproved for transgressing, 3. Reg. 11. and Josaphat, otherwise pious, 2. Paral. 19. and 20. for that he had imprudently made a covenant with the infidel Kings of Israël.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. ibi ex Deuter. 7. Non initis cum eis foedus, nec misereberis earum; nec sociabis cum eis connubia. Filiam tuam non dabis filio eius, nec filiam illius accipies filio tuo: quia seducet filium tuum, ne sequatur me, ut magis serviat diis alienis: irasceturque furor Domini, et delebit te cito. Idem praecipitur Exodi 34. Hinc reprehenditur Salomon transgrediens 3. Reg. 11. et Iosaphat, alioqui pius 2. Paral. 19. et 20. eo quod incaute foedus iniisset cum Regibus Israël infidelibus.

5 It is proved thirdly by S. Doct. opusc. de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 7. from cap. 5. ad Galat. A little leaven corrupts the whole mass, etc. But he that troubles you shall bear judgment, etc. would that they were cut off who trouble you. And 1 Corinth. 5. Put away the evil from among yourselves. And Luke 13. Cut it down. Similar things are found 2. Timot. 2. Tit. 3. Ioan. epist. 2. Apocal. 2.

Probatur tertio a S. Doct. opusc. de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 7. ex cap. 5. ad Galat. Modicum fermentum totam massam corrumpit, etc. Qui autem conturbat vos, portabit iudicium, etc. utinam abscindantur qui vos conturbant. Et prima Corinth. 5. Auferte malum ex vobismetipsis. Et Lucae 13. Succide illam. Similia habentur 2. Timot. 2. Tit. 3. Ioan. epist. 2. Apocal. 2.

6 It is proved fourthly by S. Doct. serm. 6. Hexaemer. from the practice of the Church, especially of the supreme Pontiffs, and of Councils, condemning and separating heretics. Likewise of Emperors, especially Constantine, Charlemagne, and Theodosius. For there exists a famous Constitution of Theodosius, Gratian, and Valentinian, and it is found l. Cod. de summa Trinitate, where it is defined: We will that all peoples, whom the clemency of our empire rules, dwell in such a Religion as the divine Peter handed on to the Romans, which the Religion hitherto revealed to us by himself declares, which it is clear the Roman Pontiff follows. Similar is the rescript of the Emperors Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius, who impose perpetual silence on all heretics l. 2. C. de haeret. similar things are found l. 3. C. de haeret. and in Eusebius on the life of Constantine lib. 3. cap. 6. et 62.

Probatur quarto a S. Doct. serm. 6. Hexaemer. ex praxi Ecclesiae, maxime summorum Pontificum, et Conciliorum, damnantium, et separantium haereticos. Similiter Imperatorum, praesertim Constantini, Caroli Magni, et Theodosii. Extat enim insignis Theodosii, Gratiani, et Valentiniani Constitutio, et habetur l. Cod. de summa Trinitate, ubi definitur: Cunctos populos, quos clementia nostrae regit imperium, in tali volumus Religione versari, quam Divum Petrum tradidisse Romanis, Religio usque adhuc ab ipso insinuata declarat, quam Pontificem Romanum sequi claret. Simile est rescriptum Gratiani, Valentiniani, et Theodosii Imperatorum, qui omnibus haereticis perpetuum silentium indicunt l. 2. C. de haeret. similia habentur l. 3. C. de haeret. et apud Eusebium in vita Constantini lib. 3. cap. 6. et 62.

7 It is also proved by the reasons brought forward quaest. 6. for these pacts bring grave harm and scandal, and are extorted by force and fraud, as is evident from the compacts with the sectaries of these times, which brought most grave wars and ruins, as Davila relates in the history of Gallia, and Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 3. Bassaeus verb. Infidelitas, 10.

Probatur etiam rationibus allatis quaest. 6. nam haec pacta grave damnum, et scandalum afferunt, et vi, ac dolo extorquentur, ut constat ex foederibus cum sectariis horum temporum, quae gravissima bella, et ruinas attulere, ut refert Davila in historia Galliae, et Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 3. Bassaeus verb. Infidelitas, 10.

8 I add, however, that for most grave causes it is lawful to make compacts and to tolerate. The reason is that of Tannerus num. 99. for it is lawful to pact concerning those things which it is lawful to tolerate.

Addo tamen, ob gravissimas causas licere pacisci, et tolerare. Ratio est Tanneri num. 99. ea enim licet pacisci, quae licet tolerare.

9 I assert secondly. If at any time such pacts are entered into by Kings for grave causes, they are not to be violated. So Molanus lib. 1. cap. 25. et sequent. Becanus disp. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 7. Letmatius de fide haereticis servanda, and others cited by Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 4. This is the opinion of S. Bonav. in the places to be alleged.

> Assero secundo. Si quando talia pacta a Regibus ineantur ob graves causas, non esse violanda. Ita Molanus lib. 1. cap. 25. et sequent. Becanus disp. de fide haereticis servanda, cap. 7. Letmatius de fide haereticis servanda, et alii apud Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 4. Haec est sententia S. Bonav. locis allegandis.

10 It is proved first by S. Doct. in 3. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 3. where from the fact, that it is lawful to enter into treaties with infidels, S. Doct. gathers that oaths may be received from them according to their sects, as from Mahometans upon the Alcoran, as I shall show tract. de Relig. disp. de iuramento, quaest. 2.

> Probatur primo a S. Doct. in 3. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 3. ubi ex eo*, quod liceat foedera cum infidelibus inire, colligit S. Doct. posse ab eis recipi iuramenta, iuxta eorum sectas, ut a Mahumetanis super Alcoranum, ut ostendam* tract. de Relig. disp. de iuramento, quaest. 2.

11 But he proves that treaties are to be kept, and that they were at times legitimately entered into; first by the example of Iacob Genesis 31. where he made a treaty with Laban the Pagan.

> Probat autem, servanda foedera, eaque esse legitime aliquando inita; primo exemplo Iacob Genesis 31. ubi foedera iniit cum Laban Pagano.

12 Next he proves it by the example of Iudas, the holy Leader of the Machabees, who made treaties with the Romans 1. Machab. cap. 8. and is not reproved.

> Deinde id probat exemplo Iudae, Sancti Ducis Machabaeorum, qui cum Romanis foedera iniit 1. Machab. cap. 8. neque reprehenditur.

13 It is proved next by S. Doct. in the same dist. art. 3. quaest. 3. by the example of Iosuë, the most holy Leader, who kept the treaty, though imprudently made, with the Gabaonites, and in this he is praised by D. Ambr. lib. de officiis. Abulensis disputes ad 9. Iosue, from quaest. 17. to 27. Whether an oath bound to it: for he asserts that it was not obligatory, Lyranus striving for the opposite. With Tostatus is Tannerus also disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 4. num. 119.

> Probatur deinde a S. Doct. eadem dist. art. 3. quaest. 3. exemplo Iosuë Sanctissimi Ducis, qui foedus, licet incaute initum, Gabaonitis servavit, et in hoc laudatur a D. Ambr. lib. de officiis. Disputat Abulensis ad 9. Iosue, a quaest. 17. ad 27. An iuramentum ad illud obligaret: Ille enim asserit, non fuisse obligatorium, nitente Lyrano ad oppositum. Cum Tostato est etiam Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 4. num. 119.

14 S. Bonau. indeed supposes that foundation by which Tostatus chiefly strives: that the Hebrews were obliged simply to kill the Gabaonites, who were Chananaeans; concerning whose killing without mercy the command of God was at hand. Deuter. 20. Num. 33. Nor is any revelation of God dispensing found. From which the whole argumentation of Lyranus collapses.

> Svpponit quidem S. Bonau. illud fundamentum, quo maxime nititur Tostatus, obligatos fuisse simpliciter Hebraeos ad occidendum Gabaonitas, qui erant Chananaei; de quibus occidendis absque misericordia aderat Dei praeceptum. Deuter. 20. Num. 33. Neque invenitur aliqua revelatio Dei dispensans. Ex quo ruit tota argumentatio Lyrani.

15 He brings forward one reason, which is that of D. Ambrosii loc. cit. who says, Iosue judged that the peace which he had given was not to be recalled, because it had been confirmed by the religion of a Sacrament, lest, while he reprehended the perfidy of another, he should dissolve his own faith. Therefore by reason of scandal he seems to intimate that the oath is to be kept.

> Unam rationem ille affert, quae est D. Ambrosii loc. cit. dicentis, Iosue pacem, quam dederat, revocandam non censuit, quia firmata erat Sacramenti religione, ne, dum alienam perfidiam redargueret, suam fidem solveret. Ratione igitur scandali videtur innuere, iuramentum servandum.

16 Abulensis quaest. 22. answers however that no scandal was given, because the Gabaonites, as deceivers, had extorted this oath, feigning that they were not Chananaeans.

17 The reason by which D. Bonau. asserts that the oath was rightly kept is, that the precept concerning the killing of the Chananaeans was laid down insofar as they were incorrigible: Therefore Iosue 11. it is said: For the sentence of the Lord was, that their hearts should be hardened, and that they should fight against Israël, and fall, and not merit any clemency, and so perish, as the Lord had commanded Moses. Therefore since the Gabaonites were not hardened, but gave themselves to the Hebrews, there was no precept to kill them.

> Ratio, qua D. Bonau. asserit, recte servatum iuramentum, est, quia praeceptum de occidendis Chananaeis latum erat, quatenus erant incorrigibiles: Ideo Iosue 11. dicitur: Domini enim sententia fuerat, ut indurarentur corda eorum, et pugnarent contra Israël, et caderent, et non mererentur ullam clementiam, ac sic perirent, sicut praeceperat Dominus Moysi. Cum igitur Gabaonitae non essent indurati, sed se dederent Hebraeis, non erat praeceptum eos occidere.

18 Tostatus quaest. 21. answers first, that the sentence of the Lord was against all the Chananaeans, nor was any exception declared, except afterwards cap. 11. Iosue, which was not then known to the Israelites.

> Respondet Tostatus quaest. 21. primo, quia sententia Domini erat contra omnes Chananaeos, nec fuit declarata exceptio, nisi postea cap. 11. Iosue*, quae tunc non constabat Israëlitis.*

19 I say that clear evidence is had that this precept was so declared to Iosuë, and to the princes, because two chapters later it is described, not as laid down then only, but as manifest for the just preservation of the Gabaonites. And therefore it is said: As the Lord had commanded Moses, so Moses commanded Iosue, and he accomplished all things: there did not pass from all the mandata, not even one word, which the Lord had commanded Moses: But then he immediately subjoins the exception in the law of killing the Chananaeans: Since therefore Moses at the beginning declared it to Iosuë, and he fulfilled it to the finest point; it follows, that the precept was laid down in this form, in which it is thus related: then it is from Iosue. That certain Chananaeans were afterwards killed, is nothing against me; for they were obstinate, rebellious, just like the rest before the killing. S. Doct. adds that they were punished civilly with perpetual servitude, in which the Princes judged they acted better than by killing them, since they voluntarily subjected themselves to servitude. S. Doct. nevertheless does not accept this reason, because if the oath was valid, they ought not to be punished with the other penalty of perpetual servitude, as Tostatus argues quaest. 24. who excuses their ignorance. And in this alone he adheres to S. Doctor, that it did not tend to an evil outcome, so to receive them unto salvation.

> Ego dico, signum evidens haberi, ita declaratum praeceptum Iosuë, et principibus, quia post duo capita describitur, non tanquam latum tunc solum, sed tanquam manifestum iustae servationis Gabaonitarum. Et ideo dicitur: Sicut praeceperat Dominus Moysi, sic praecepit Moyses Iosue, et ille universa complevit: non praeteriit de universis mandatis, ne unum quidem verbum, quod iusserat Dominus Moysi: Mox vero subdit exceptionem in lege occidendi Chananaeos: Cum igitur Moyses initio declarasset Iosuë, et hic ad unguem impleverit; sequitur, latum praeceptum hac forma, qua sic fertur: tunc est a Iosue. Quod vero aliqui postea Chananaei sint interfecti, nihil contra me; erant enim pertinaces, rebelles, sicuti et caeteri ante occisionem. Addit S. Doct. fuisse civiliter punitos perpetua servitute, in quo Principes melius se agere arbitrati sunt, quam eos occidendo, cum servitute se sponte subderent. Hanc tamen rationem non accipit S. Doct. quia si validum erat iuramentum, non debebant puniri alia poena perpetuae servitutis, ut arguit Tostatus quaest. 24. qui eorum ignorantiam excusat. Et in hoc solum S. Doctori adhaeret, quod in malum exitum non vergebat, ita eos recipere ad salutem.

20 Truly for our purpose it suffices that the holy man Iosue, of whom it is said that he kept the law of the Lord adamussim, entered into treaties with these men, whom he knew to be Pagans, even though from far off.

> Enim vero ad rem nostram sufficit, sanctum virum Iosue, qui dicitur, adamussim legem Domini servasse, foedera iniisse cum istis, quos sciebat Paganos, esto e longinquis.

21 The reason of D. Bonav. from D. Ambrosio loc. cit. which Tannerus uses num. 104. is, that it is of Divine and Natural Law to keep pacts; otherwise the whole bond of human society will be broken.

> Ratio D. Bonav. ex D. Ambrosio loc. cit. qua utitur Tannerus num. 104. est, quia Iuris Divini, et Naturalis est, pacta servare; alioqui rumpetur omnis humanae societatis nexus.

22 The heretics object to us, as holding that no pacts are to be kept.

> Obiiciunt haeretici nobis, quasi tenentibus, nulla pacta servanda.

23 First the Council of Constance, which did not keep faith with Ioanni Hus, and the Pragensi.

> Primo Concilium Constantiae, quod fidem non servavit Ioanni Hus, et Pragensi.

24 It is answered, that the Council only declared that the safe-conduct of Kings does not avail to the prejudice of the power of the Church over Heretics. But those two were justly condemned. And indeed Hieronymus a Praga had from the Council a safe-conduct, but with the addition, salva semper iustitia. Hus however from the Emperor. Add that heretics have often been perfidious, as the Hugonotti toward Carolus IX. as Davila relates.

> Respondetur, Concilium solum declarasse, non iuvare salvum conductum Regum in praeiudicium potestatis Ecclesiae super Haereticos. Illi vero duo fuere iuste damnati. Et quidem Hieronymus a Praga habuit a Concilio salvum conductum, sed addito, salva semper iustitia. Hus vero ab Imperatore. Adde haereticos saepe extitisse perfidos, ut Hugonotti in Carolum IX. uti refert Davila.

25 They object many Councils, Romanum IV. and Later. III.

> Obiiciunt multa Concilia, Romanum IV. et Later. III.

26 These however only absolve subjects from the oath of fidelity to Kings excommunicated, and deprived of their jurisdiction by the Pontiff.

> Haec tamen solum absolvunt a iuramento fidelitatis subditos, Regibus excommunicatis, et privatis per Pontificem eorum iurisdictione.

27 I assert thirdly, these pacts are to be kept, even if imprudently made. So D. Bonav. 3. dist. 39. art. 3. quaest. 3. whom the others commonly follow, cited by Tannerus num. 112.

> Assero tertio, haec pacta servanda, etiamsi incaute inita. Ita D. Bonav. 3. dist. 39. art. 3. quaest. 3. quem sequuntur communiter alii apud Tannerum num. 112.

28 It is proved by D. Bonav. with the argument of D. Ambrosii loc. cit. because it is a greater evil to break faith than to keep such pacts; for thereby the common good of human society is harmed.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. argumento D. Ambrosii loc. cit. quia maius est malum, fidem frangere, quam talia pacta servare; inde enim laeditur bonum commune societatis humanae.

Question VIII: Whether unbaptized unbelievers can retain power over the faithful, and whether they can be deprived of it

1 It is certain that such infidel Princes, or even private persons, are capable of dominion. And indeed to have dominion over goods is defined by Paulus III. in a certain Bull cited by Coninch. disput. 1. dub. 10. num. 160. Of dominion also over persons as over slaves, it is certain that it can be with them if they hold slaves by a just title, say a just war, etc.

> Certum est, huiusmodi Principes infideles, seu etiam privatas personas, esse dominii capaces. Et quidem habere dominium bonorum, definitur a Paulo III. in quadam Bulla apud Coninch. disput. 1. dub. 10. num. 160. De Dominio etiam super personas tanquam servos, certum est, illud posse apud eos esse si iusto titulo, puta belli iusti, etc. retineant servos.

2 From many Scriptures S. Doct. shows that jurisdiction can be in infidels over the faithful. First from 1. a Petri 2. Subiecti estote omni humanae creaturae propter Deum: sive Regi, tanquam praecellenti. Be subject to every human creature for God's sake: whether to the King, as preeminent.

> E multis Scripturis ostendit S. Doct. iurisdictionem esse posse in infidelibus super fideles. Primo ex pri.: a Petri 2. Subiecti estote omni humanae creaturae propter Deum: sive Regi, tanquam praecellenti.

3 Next by that of Rom. 13. Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit. Et infra: Non solum propter iram, sed etiam propter conscientiam. Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. And below: Not only because of wrath, but also because of conscience. Finally from the other epistles of Paul S. Doctor gathers the same.

> Deinde illo Rom. 13. Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit. Et infra: Non solum propter iram, sed etiam propter conscientiam. Tandem ex aliis epistolis Pauli id colligit S. Doctor.

4 Thirdly from that of Matth. 22. Reddite ergo, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari. Render therefore to Caesar what is Caesar's. The Apostles inculcated this precept to refute the calumny, as if our faith denied obedience to Princes. Whence Paul ad Titum 3: Admone illos, ut Principibus obediant. Admonish them, that they obey Princes. The same precept the PP. enjoined: Clemens P. lib. 4. constitut. cap. 12. et lib. 7. cap. 17. Tertullianus lib. ad scapulam, cap. 2. Polycarpus cited by Euseb. lib. 4. hist. cap. 14. Basil. in Moral. reg. 79. Hieron. epist. 4. Chrysostomus homil. 23. in epist. ad Rom. Origenes lib. 9. in eandem epist. Oecumenius, Nazianzenus, Epiphan. and others, whom Suarez relates de defensione fidei, lib. 3. cap. 1.

> Tertio ex illo Matth. 22. Reddite ergo, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari. Hoc praeceptum inculcabant Apostoli ad eluendam calumniam, quasi nostra fides negaret Principibus obedientiam. Unde Paulus ad Titum 3: Admone illos, ut Principibus obediant. Idem praeceptum iniungebant PP. Clemens P. lib. 4. constitut. cap. 12. et lib. 7. cap. 17.

Tertullianus lib. ad scapulam, cap. 2. Polycarpus apud Euseb. lib. 4. hist. cap. 14. Basil. in Moral. reg. 79. Hieron. epist. 4. Chrysostomus homil. 23. in epist. ad Rom. Origenes lib. 9. in eandem epist. Oecumenius, Nazianzenus, Epiphan. et alii, quos refert Suarez de defensione fidei, lib. 3. cap. 1.

5 It is proved fourthly by S. Doct. by the reason of the Apostle. Omnis potestas est a Deo, atque ordinata; et qui ei resistit, Deo resistit, et damnationem incurrit: All power is from God and ordained; and he who resists it resists God and incurs damnation: but by the law of nature many are given having power of jurisdiction, by a just title, whether by war, or custom, or prescription, or translation of dominion, whether into a true person, as is a King; or a fictitious one, such as a Republic. Nor indeed is it once acquired lost on account of the infidelity of the Prince, or through the faith of subjects; for an infidel can well rule the faithful people of God, even with just laws.

Probatur quarto a S. Doct. ratione Apostoli. Omnis potestas est a Deo, atque ordinata; et qui ei resistit, Deo resistit, et damnationem incurrit: sed dantur iure naturae multi habentes potestatem iurisdictionis, titulo iusto, sive bello, sive consuetudine, sive praescriptione, vel translatione dominii sive in personam veram, ut est Rex; vel fictam, qualis est Respublica. Neque vero semel acquisita amittitur ob infidelitatem Principis, vel per fidem subditorum; potest enim infidelis bene regere populum fidelem Dei, etiam legibus iustis.

6 It is confirmed by D. Bonav. because to serve is not an evil, but meritorious: Therefore by Baptism we are not absolved from that servitude.

Confirmatur a D. Bonav. quia servire non est malum, sed meritorium: Ergo ab illa servitute non absolvimur per Baptismum.

7 Of dominion therefore even real over faithful slaves it is proved by S. Doct. from that of Ephes. 6. Servi obedite Dominis carnalibus cum timore, et tremore, in simplicitate cordis vestri, sicut Christo: non ad oculum servientes, quasi hominibus placentes, sed ut servi Christi, facientes voluntatem Dei ex animo, cum bona voluntate servientes, sicut Domino, et non hominibus: Servants, obey your carnal masters with fear and trembling, in the simplicity of your heart, as to Christ: not serving to the eye, as pleasing men, but as servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart, serving with good will, as to the Lord, and not to men: The same he repeats ad Coloss. 3. ad Titum 2. But then all the princes were, nay, almost all even private masters, infidels. But Peter speaks of the slaves of infidel masters epist. 1. cap. 2. in those words: Servi subditi estote in omni timore dominis, non tantum bonis, et modestis, sed etiam discolis, Servants, be subject in all fear to your masters, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward: as S. Bonaventura observes, and Lugo num. 133. S. Bonav. renders the reason of this fundamento 4. with D. August. in Psalm. 124. because Christ did not make free men of slaves, but of bad slaves, good slaves, which S. August. also confirms conc. 31. in Psal. 118. and the author of the qq. novi, et veteris testamenti, under the name of August: quaest. 15. and in the Council of Gangra can. 3. it is related cap. si quis servum 17. quaest. 14. that anathema is inflicted on him who, under pretext of religion, urged a slave to flee. It was however celebrated in the time of Pope Sylvester, in which Gentile masters had many Christian slaves.

De dominio igitur etiam reali in servos fideles probatur a S. Doct. ex illo Ephes. 6. Servi obedite Dominis carnalibus cum timore, et tremore, in simplicitate cordis vestri, sicut Christo: non ad oculum servientes, quasi hominibus placentes, sed ut servi Christi, facientes voluntatem Dei ex animo, cum bona voluntate servientes, sicut Domino, et non hominibus: Idem repetit ad Coloss. 3. ad Titum 2. Erant autem tunc principes omnes, imo et Domini privati fere omnes infideles. De servis autem dominorum infidelium loqui Petrum epist. 1. cap. 2. illis verbis: Servi subditi estote in omni timore dominis, non tantum bonis, et modestis, sed etiam discolis, observat S. Bonaventura, et Lugo num. 133. Huius rationem reddit S. Bonav. fundamento 4. cum D. August. in Psalm. 124. quia Christus non fecit de servis liberos, sed de malis servis, bonos servos, quod etiam confirmat S. August. conc. 31. in Psal. 118. et author qq. novi, et veteris testamenti, sub nomine August: quaest. 15. et in Concilio Gangrensi can. 3. relato cap. si quis servum 17. quaest. 14. anathema infligitur ei, qui, praetextu religionis, servo fugam suaserit. Fuit autem celebratum tempore Sylvestri Papae, in quo Domini gentiles plures habebant servos christianos.

8 The authors of the contrary opinion object first, from that of 1 Cor. 7. Nolite fieri servi hominum, pretio empti estis. Do not become the slaves of men; you were bought with a price.

Obiiciunt primo opinionis adversae authores, id prima Cor. 7. Nolite fieri servi hominum, pretio empti estis.

9 Some answer with Suarez, that Paul is not there speaking of civil, or penal servitude: for of this he had said a little before: Servus vocatus es? non sit tibi curae. Were you called a slave? let it not be a care to you. And he concludes: Unusquisque in quo vocatus est fratres, in this let each remain with God. He speaks therefore of vitious servitude, by which one, in order to serve another, offends God: Nemo enim potest duobus dominis servire. For no one can serve two masters.

Respondent aliqui cum Suarez, Paulum ibi non loqui de servitute civili, vel poenali: de hac enim paulo ante dixerat: Servus vocatus es? non sit tibi curae. Et concludit: Unusquisque in quo vocatus est fratres, in hac permaneat apud Deum. Loquitur ergo de servitute vitiosa, qua unus, ut alteri obsequatur, Deum offendit: Nemo enim potest duobus dominis servire.

10 Cornelius there, Lugo n. 136. and others affirm that the exposition of D. Bonau. in the body of the text is BETTER, that those words are to be understood of civil servitude also, namely, that those compelled indeed into servitude ought patiently to bear it; yet if they are not compelled, and can be free, they ought not to reduce themselves into the servitude of infidels, for thus they will be able more promptly, more readily, and more freely to attend to religion, and the preceding words intimate this, as S. Doct. relates Servus vocatus es? non sit tibi curae: sed et si potes fieri liber, magis utere, that is, if it is in your power not to be a slave, use it: but if you have been compelled, bear it patiently.

MELIOREM esse expositionem D. Bonau. in corpore afferunt Cornelius ibi, Lugo n. 136. et alii, intelligi verba illa de civili etiam servitute, nempe, coactos quidem in servitutem, debere illam patienter sustinere; si tamen non cogantur, et liberi esse possint, non debere, se redigere in infidelium servitutem, quia sic promptius, et expeditius, et liberius religioni vacare poterunt, et hoc innuunt verba praecedentia, ut refert S. Doct. Servus vocatus es? non sit tibi curae: sed et si potes fieri liber, magis utere*, idest, si in tua libertate est, non servum esse, utere ea: si vero coactus sis, patienter sustine.*

11 Yet it SEEMS that by fundamento 4. he does not reject the exposition of others on these words, namely, that even if one could go out from servitude, it is meritorious to remain in it; and therefore on this occasion it is to be used for the merit of humility. Indeed S. Doct. shows that they can sell themselves, 4. dist. 36. dub. 3. Simply however, that servants ought to obey their Princes, and Masters, the Apostle enjoins also 1 Timot. VI. Quicumque sunt sub iugo servitutis, dominos suos omni honore dignos arbitrentur, ne nomen Domini, et doctrina blasphemetur. Si quis aliter docet, et non acquiescit sanis sermonibus Domini nostri Iesu Christi: superbus est, et nihil sciens. Whoever are under the yoke of servitude, let them judge their masters worthy of all honor, lest the name of the Lord and his doctrine be blasphemed. If anyone teaches otherwise, and does not assent to the sound words of our Lord Jesus Christ: he is proud, and knowing nothing. And he proves this earnestly ad Rom. 13.

VIDETUR tamen fundamento 4. non respuere aliorum expositionem ad haec verba, nempe, etiam si posset quis e servitute egredi, meritorium esse in ea permanere; et ideo hac occasione utendum ad meritum humilitatis. Imo posse seipsos vendere ostendit S. Doct. 4. dist. 36. dub. 3. Simpliciter tamen debere subditos Principibus, et Dominis servos obedire, iniungit Apostolus prima etiam Timot. VI. Quicumque sunt sub iugo servitutis, dominos suos omni honore dignos arbitrentur, ne nomen Domini, et doctrina blasphemetur. Si quis aliter docet, et non acquiescit sanis sermonibus Domini nostri Iesu Christi: superbus est, et nihil sciens. Et hoc probat enixe ad Rom. 13.

12 They OBJECT secondly, that the Evangelical Law carries liberty with it: For therefore, when Matth. 17. the tribute was demanded from the Apostles, the Lord asked Peter: Reges terrae a quibus accipiunt tributum, vel censum? a filiis suis, an ab alienis? The Kings of the earth, from whom do they receive tribute, or custom? from their own sons, or from strangers? Christ concluded: Ergo liberi sunt filii. Therefore the sons are free. In which place, under the name of sons, he seems to have understood all the faithful, as Lyra and Hieronymus indicate.

OBIICIUNT secundo, Legem Evangelicam secum ferre libertatem: Ideo enim cum Matth. 17. tributum ab Apostolis exigeretur, interrogavit Dominus Petrum: Reges terrae a quibus accipiunt tributum, vel censum? a filiis suis, an ab alienis? Christus conclusit: Ergo liberi sunt filii. Quo loco, filiorum nomine, omnes fideles intellexisse videtur, ut indicat Lyra, et Hieronymus.

13 Suarez relates the VARIOUS expositions of that passage, lib. 1. cit. cap. 4. and lib. 4. cap. 5. and cap. 8.

VARIAS loci illius expositiones refert Suarez lib. 1. cit. cap. 4. et lib. 4. cap. 5. et cap. 8.

14 S. Doct. ANSWERS that Christ ascribes this immunity to himself, as being the son of God by nature. Therefore from this passage the Fathers prove the natural filiation of God, because by it he declares himself not to be subject to the paying of tribute. So Chrysost. and Hilar. cited by Suarez cap. 5. num. 5. But they say he could have extended this exemption to his family, the Apostles, and others, who left all things and followed him, and Hieronymus speaks in this sense: but he communicated it especially to Peter, and his successors, as those words signified: Ut autem non scandalizemuseos, solve pro me, et te, But that we may not scandalize them, pay for me and you; for with the scandal removed, Peter could have not paid, the immunity having been communicated to him by Christ, as Lugo notes n. 138. with D. Bonau. prima parte Centil. sect. 31. Tannerus subscribes disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. num. 44.

RESPONDET S. Doct. immunitatem hanc sibi Christum adscribere, ut pote filio Dei per naturam. Ideo ex hoc loco Patres probant filiationem Dei naturalem, quia inde se declarat, non esse subiectum ad tributa solvenda. Ita Chrysost. et Hilar. apud Suarez cap. 5. num. 5. Hanc vero exemptionem, dicunt eum potuisse extendere ad suam familiam Apostolorum, et aliorum, qui omnia reliquerunt, et secuti sunt eum, et hoc sensu loquitur Hieronymus: praecipue vero eam Petro, et successoribus communicavit, ut significarunt verba illa: Ut autem non scandalizemuseos, solve pro me, et te*, secluso enim scandalo, potuisset Petrus non solvere, communicata sibi a Christo immunitate, ut notat Lugo n. 138. cum D. Bonau. prima parte Centil. sect. 31. subscribit Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. num. 44.*

15 They OBJECT thirdly from the first of Iacobi: Qui autem perspexerit in lege perfecta libertatis, But he that has looked into the perfect law of liberty, where the Gloss: Lex libertatis est lex Evangelica. The law of liberty is the Evangelical law.

16 S. Doct. ANSWERS that the Evangelical Law makes us free from the servitude of sin, and the servitude of the old law, as is said Rom. 8. Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed accepistis Spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus: Abba, (Pater.) You have not received again the spirit of servitude in fear, but you have received the Spirit of adoption of sons, in which we cry: Abba, (Father.)

RESPONDET S. Doct. Legem Evangelicam liberos nos reddere a servitute peccati, et servitute legis antiquae, ut dicitur Rom. 8. Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed accepistis Spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus: Abba, (Pater.)

17 They OBJECT fourthly. The law of charity, composing all into one, makes all things common; whence 1 Cor. 3. Omnia vestra sunt, sive mors, sive vita. All things are yours, whether death, or life. And ad Ephes. et Coloss. Omnes sumus in Christo, etc. We are all in Christ, etc.

OBIICIUNT quarto. Lex charitatis omnes in unum componens, omnia facit communia; unde prima Cor. 3. Omnia vestra sunt, sive mors, sive vita. Et ad Ephes. et Coloss. Omnes sumus in Christo, etc.

18 S. Doct. ANSWERS that charity makes us one by a certain communication of graces, and affections; but not of temporal dominion; otherwise it would be forbidden that even some Christians be unequal, say one a King: another a prisoner in the Ergastulum.

RESPONDET S. Doct. charitatem facere nos unum per quandam communicationem gratiarum, et affectuum; non autem temporalis dominii; alioquin vetitum esset, etiam aliquos Christianos esse inaequales, puta unum Regem: alterum Ergastulum.

19 They OBJECT fifthly. The bond of the Divine law is greater than that of the human; but the Evangelical law absolves from the obligation of the old divine law: Therefore.

OBIICIUNT quinto. Maius est vinculum legis Divinae, quam humanae; sed lex Evangelica absolvit ab obligatione legis veteris divinae: Ergo.

20 S. Doct. ANSWERS that it is not alike; for the new Law evacuates the old law, as truth the figure; but it is not thus with human Law, which aids the Divine to be observed: Whence the Apostle 1. Timot. 2. commands that prayer be made for Princes, that we may lead a quiet and tranquil life under them.

RESPONDET S. Doct. non esse simile; nam Lex nova evacuat legem veterem, tanquam veritas figuram; non sic autem est de Lege humana, quae adiuvat ad Divinam observandam: Unde Apostolus 1. Timot. 2. mandat, ut oretur pro Principibus, ut quietam, et tranquillam vitam sub eis agamus.

21 They OBJECT sixthly. Christ willed to redeem us by himself, that he might restore us to our pristine liberty, and that man might be subject to himself, as S. Anselmus says Lib. Cur Deus homo, cap. 5. since therefore we have been bought with the great price of the blood of Christ the Lord; we are his alone: Therefore it seems that a Christian, who has been reborn in Christ, is not bound to any servitude.

OBIICIUNT sexto. Christus per se nos redimere voluit, ut in pristinam restitueret libertatem, et sibi homo subiectus esset, ut ait S. Anselmus Lib. Cur Deus homo, cap. 5. cum ergo empti simus pretio magno sanguinis Christi Domini; ipsius tantum sumus: Ergo videtur, quod Christianus, qui renatus est in Christo, adstrictus non sit alicui servituti.

22 S. Doct. ANSWERS that we do not attain the liberty bought for us by Christ, unless translated into glory. Whence here liberty is begun from guilt; but there it is consummated, liberty from misery, and from every human power; Whence it does not follow that, if we are bought by Christ, we are not the servants of any man: The dominion indeed of the devil, or of sin, is excluded, according to that Matth. 6. Non potestis Deo servire, et Mammonae. You cannot serve God and Mammon.

RESPONDET S. Doct. nos non assequi libertatem, emptam nobis a Christo, nisi translatos in gloriam. Unde hic inchoatur libertas a culpa; sed ibi consummatur libertas a miseria, et ab omni humana potentia; Unde non sequitur, quod, si sumus empti a Christo, non simus servi alicuius hominis: Excluditur quidem dominium diaboli, vel peccati, secundum id Matth. 6. Non potestis Deo servire, et Mammonae.

23 But there is still a controversy: whether the Church can deprive infidel Princes of the temporal dominion which they exercise over the faithful.

EST autem adhuc controversia: an possit Ecclesia Principes infideles privare dominio temporali, quod in fideles exercent.

24 INDIRECTLY indeed the Church has this power, by the right of defense, and the right of governance, because the Church can rule her faithful everywhere. So D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 1. and Bannes, Aragon there, Valentia quaest. 10. p. 8. and Tanner. says it probable disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. num. 53.

INDIRECTE quidem habet Ecclesia hanc potestatem, iure defensionis, et iure gubernationis, quia Ecclesia potest suos fideles ubique regere. Ita D. Thom. quaest. 10. art. 1. et Bannes, Aragon ibi, Valentia quaest. 10. p. 8. et probabile ait Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 2. num. 53.

25 COMMONLY however the Doctors hold that the Church does not have this indirect power over infidel Princes, precisely as they are infidels, unless it redound to the prejudice of the faith. So Bellarm. Tom. 1. lib. 5. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 7. Lorca, Caietanus, and others cited by Hurtadum disp. 77. sect. 2. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 10. num. 160. Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 1. Castro Palao T. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 8. num. 6. who adduces others; and Tannerus judges it probable in the place cited.

COMMUNITER vero sentiunt Doctores, Ecclesiam non habere hanc potestatem indirectam in Principes infideles, praecise ut infideles sunt, nisi redundet in fidei praeiudicium. Ita Bellarm. Tom. 1. lib. 5. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 7. Lorca, Caietanus, et alii apud Hurtadum disp. 77. sect. 2. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 10. num. 160. Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 1. Castro Palao T. 1. tract. 4. disp. 2. p. 8. num. 6. qui alios afferunt; et Tannerus probabile censet loco citato.

26 There is REQUIRED therefore, that the Church be compelled by a persecuting infidel Prince, or that a moral danger of persecution be imminent, as Suarez notes sect. 5. Lugo sect. 1. num. 148. See also D. Bonau. serm. 16. in Hexaëmerone, indicating some things.

REQUIRITUR ergo, ut cogatur Ecclesia a Principe infideli persequente, vel ut periculum morale persecutionis instet, ut notat Suarez sect. 5. Lugo sect. 1. num. 148. Vide etiam D. Bonau. serm. 16. in Hexaëmerone, aliqua indicantem.

Disputation III: On Heresy

1 As among the Turks (as is commonly noted) that man is the most bitter enemy of the Christian name who, born of Christian parents, is enrolled into a Mahometan family: so among infidels none more cruelly assaults the Church than he who, having been for some time nourished in it itself, and formed by the Sacrament of faith, pertinaciously adheres to his error, and is thrust the deeper into darkness the more the ray of truth shines around him, willingly blinding himself. This heresy works, building for itself, after the likeness of an Ape, a Synagogue, which it strives to dignify with a counterfeit title of religion; of its nature, state, and condition something must be said here as the subject matter requires.

> De Haeresi.
> Ut Inter Turcas (ut vulgo notatur) ille Christiani nominis infensissimus est hostis, qui Christianis natus parentibus, in Mahumetanam familiam adsciscitur: Ita inter infideles nullus atrocius in Ecclesiam grassatur, quam qui in ipsa aliquantisper nutritus, et fidei Sacramento formatus, pertinaciter suo errori adhaerescit, eoque crassiores in tenebras protruditur, quo circumlucente veritatis radio libens excaecatur. Haec operatur haeresis, ad Simiae instar Synagogam sibi struens, quam ementito religionis titulo honestare contendit; de eius natura, statu, et conditione hic pro subiecta materia agendum est.

Question I: What heresy is

1 The NAME of Heresy has its origin from eligo, in Greek αἵρεσις, and it signifies an Opinion which one voluntarily and pertinaciously elects for himself, as they commonly teach with D. Bonav. here. Whence it is also called a Sect, because we follow it; and in that sense the various sects of the Philosophers were so called, because, withdrawing from the common body, they erected new Schools, as S. Bonaventura says here.

> Quid sit HAERESIS.
> NOMEN Haeresis ab eligo ortum habet, Graece αἵρεσις et significat Opinionem, quam quis sibi voluntarie et pertinaciter eligit, ut docent communiter cum D. Bonav. hic. Unde et Secta dicitur, quia eam sequimur, et eo sensu dicebantur variae Philosophorum sectae, quia a communitate recedentes, novas Scholas erigebant, ut ait S. Bonaventura hic.

2 But the name of Sect was once in a good sense, as Act. 24. et 26. Now however the name of sect must be abstained from for indicating our religion, as Suarez says disp. 19. sect. 2. Lugo disp. 20. sect. 1. because it avails for expressing only alien religions, as Beda notes ad 24. Act. and we now call heretics Sectaries, and we derive sect not from following, but from persecuting, as S. Doct. notes here.

> FUIT autem nomen Sectae in bono sensu, ut Act. 24. et 26. Nunc vero a nomine sectae abstinendum, ad nostram religionem indicandam, ut ait Suarez disp. 19. sect. 2. Lugo disp. 20. sect. 1. quia ad alienas tantum religiones exprimendas valet, ut notat Beda ad 24. Act. et haereticos iam Sectarios dicimus, et sectam non a sequendo, sed persequendo, ut notat S. Doct. hic, deducimus.

3 Heresy is DEFINED: Est error, fidei Catholicae contrarius, cui pertinaci animo inhaereat is, qui est professus fidem in Baptismo. It is an error contrary to the Catholic faith, to which he who has professed the faith in Baptism adheres with pertinacious mind. Thus Turrecremata defines it, lib. 4. Summae, p. 2. cap. 1. from the common mind of the Doctors in 4. dist. 13. where D. Bonav. dub. 4. D. Thom. quaest. 11. art. 2. ad 3. and his Interpreters. And more safely D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. and p. 1. Centil. sect. 26. But in the former place D. Bonau. defines a heretic in these words: Haereticus est qui divinae legis ignorantia, vel contemptu, pertinax inventor proprii erroris, aut alieni sectator, Catholicae veritati mavult adversari, quam subiici. A heretic is he who, through ignorance or contempt of the divine law, a pertinacious inventor of his own error or a follower of another's, would rather oppose the Catholic truth than submit to it. Concerning this definition many questions occur.

> DEFINITUR haeresis: Est error, fidei Catholicae contrarius, cui pertinaci animo inhaereat is, qui est professus fidem in Baptismo. Sic definit Turrecremata lib. 4. Summae, p. 2. cap. 1. ex communi mente Doctorum in 4. dist. 13. ubi D. Bonav. dub. 4. D. Thom. quaest. 11. art. 2. ad 3. et Interpretes eius. Et tutius D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. et p. 1. Centil. sect. 26. Priori autem loco D. Bonau. haereticum his verbis definit: Haereticus est qui divinae legis ignorantia, vel contemptu, pertinax inventor proprii erroris, aut alieni sectator, Catholicae veritati mavult adversari, quam subiici. Circa hanc definitionem multae occurrunt quaestiones.

4 The FIRST is: Whether error from ignorance is heresy: whether doubt, or merely probable assertion about matters of faith is heresy. What pertinacity is required for heresy: Whether it is required for heresy that it be in a baptized person, and other similar questions, which we shall run through.

> PRIMA est: An error ex ignorantia sit haeresis: an dubitatio, vel probabilis tantum assertio de rebus fidei sit haeresis. Quae pertinacia requiratur ad haeresim: An requiratur ad haeresim, ut sit personae baptizatae, et aliae similes, quas discurremus.

5 Meanwhile I note that heresy is divided into Formal, and Objective. Formal is that actual sin by which someone is formally denominated a heretic: Objective indeed is the object which is falsely believed or asserted by the heretic, v. g. that Christ is not God, etc.

> Interim adverto, dividi haeresim in Formalem, et Obiectivam. Formalis est peccatum illud actuale, a quo aliquis formaliter denominatur haereticus: Obiectiva vero est obiectum, quod falso creditur, vel asseritur ab haeretico, v. g. Christum non esse Deum*, etc.*

Question II: Whether one who doubts about the articles of faith is a heretic

1 The FIRST opinion is negative. Cited by Cano lib. 12. de locis cap. 9. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 5. num. 83. Diana follows it primo Tom. 2. p. tract. 2. miscell. resol. 53. Many say the same with these, concerning one suspending the act of judgment. Sanch. consents T. 1. lib. 2. cap. 7. Portel addit. ad dub. Reg. v. Haeresis, Puteanus 2. 2. quaest. 21. art. 2. disp. 2. Ballaeus num. 3.

> An dubitans de articulis FIDEI sit haereticus.
> PRIMA opinio est negativa. Referuntur Cano lib. 12. de locis cap. 9. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 5. num. 83. Sequitur Diana primo Tom. 2. p. tract. 2. miscell. resol. 53. Idem aiunt multi cum his de suspendente actum iudicii. Consentiunt Sanch. T. 1. lib. 2. cap. 7. Portel addit. ad dub. Reg. v. Haeresis*, Puteanus 2. 2.* quaest. 21. art. 2. disp. 2. Ballaeus num. 3.

2 BUT the common opinion proclaims as a heretic him who voluntarily and pertinaciously doubts concerning the faith, judging that thing to be doubtful, or that it can be otherwise, (which judgment Sanchez, Vasquez 1. 2. disp. 65. and Tannerus loc. cit. with Maldeno call wrongly reflexum; for an actus reflexus has another act for its object, as Coninch. notes disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 86. and Card. Lugo disp. 17. sect. 5. num. 85. but these judgments have the thing itself for their object, saying that that matter of faith is uncertain. Villalob. consents tom. 2. tract. 1. disp. 10. Sylu. 2. 2. quaest. 1. Faber de Sacr. ord. disp. 3. cap. 4. num. 112. Homob. de exam. Eccl. p. 2. tract. 12. cap. 16. Molf. 1. 1. tract. 8. cap. 8. Lara 2. 2. quaest. 11. art. 3. disp. 42. and sixteen others cited by Sanch. Therefore D. Thom. and others proclaim this voluntary judgment pertinacious [to be] heresy, whom Suarez follows disp. 19. sect. 3. Hurtad. disp. 80. sect. 4. §. 21. Coninch. dub. cit. num. 102. Lorca disp. 42. Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 9. and others besides these, with whom Card. Lugo subscribes disp. 20. sect. 1. num. 17. Fulienfis lib. 3. de fide, cap. 7.

> AT Haereticum clamat communis sententia eum, qui voluntarie, et pertinaciter dubitat circa fidem, iudicando, rem illam esse dubiam, vel posse aliter se habere, (quod iudicium male Sanchez, Vasquez 1. 2. disp. 65. et Tannerus loc. cit. vocant reflexum, cum Maldeno; nam actus reflexus habet pro obiecto alium actum, ut advertit Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 86. et Card. Lugo disp. 17. sect. 5. num. 85. haec autem iudicia habent pro obiecto rem ipsam, dicendo, rem illam fidei esse incertam. Consentiunt Villalob. tom. 2. tract. 1. disp. 10. Sylu. 2. 2. quaest. 1. Faber de Sacr. ord. disp. 3. cap. 4. num. 112. Homob. de exam. Eccl. p. 2. tract. 12. cap. 16. Molf. 1. 1. tract. 8. cap. 8. Lara 2. 2. quaest. 11. art. 3. disp. 42. et alii sexdecim apud Sanch. Igitur voluntarium hoc iudicium pertinax conclamant haeresim D. Thom. et alii, quos sequuntur Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. Hurtad. disp. 80. sect. 4. §. 21. Coninch. dub. cit. num. 102. Lorca disp. 42. Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 9. et alii apud hos, quibus subscribit Card. Lugo disp. 20. sect. 1. num. 17. Fulienfis lib. 3. de fide, cap. 7.

[3] I suppose from D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 17. dub. 3. that doubt is properly called the indifference of the judgment of reason, with respect to either part of the contradiction, so that it prefers neither to the other.

> Suppono ex D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 17. dub. 3. dubium proprie dici indifferentiam iudicii rationis, respectu utriusque partis contradictionis, ita ut neutrum praeeligat alteri.

[4] I SUPPOSE secondly, from the same D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 13. dub. 4. that Heresy, so called from eligere, is that in which a false opinion is deliberately elected. From which he deduces that to opine is not heresy; just as neither is to doubt. And so he seems [to side] with the former opinion.

> SYPPONO secundo ex eodem D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 13. dub. 4. Haeresim, dictam ab eligere*, eam esse, in qua deliberate eligitur sententia falsa. Ex quo deducit, opinari, non esse haeresim; sicuti etiam nec dubitare. Itaque videtur cum priori sententia.*

[5] S. Doct. also TEACHES in opusc. de profectu religios. cap. 3. that certain doubts about the faith are often assailed by the devil, which are rather to be despised; because, the more we are indignant with ourselves, and dispute with them, the more their rage is kindled. Gerson attends to this admonition tract. de foeda tentatione, alph. 62. lit. O. usque ad T. Sanchez lib. 2. decal. cap. 7. num. 13. and all the others also of the second opinion.

> DOCET etiam S. Doct. in opusc. de profectu religios. cap. 3. dubia saepe aliqua de fide invehi a daemone, quae potius contemnenda sunt; quia, quanto magis indignamur nobismetipsis, et disputamus cum eis, tanto magis eorum rabies accenditur. Attidet Gerson huic monito tract. de foeda tentatione, alph. 62. lit. O. usque ad T. Sanchez lib. 2. decal. cap. 7. num. 13. et omnes alii etiam secundae sententiae.

[6] I ASSERT first, with D. Bonau., that one doubting concerning matters of faith is not properly a heretic.

ASSERO primo cum D. Bonau. dubitantem de rebus fidei, non esse proprie haereticum.

7 It is PROVED first by the authors of the prior opinion, by the argument of D. Bonau. loc. cit. in 4. taken from D. August. lib. de utilitate credendi, cap. 1. and it is cited cap. Haereticus, 24. quaest. 3. and by D. Hieronymo cap. 5. ad Galat. et ad Tit. 3. and it is cited cap. Haeresis, 24. quaest. 3. and D. Thom. also uses it 1. Corinth. 11. lect. 4. et 2. 2. quaest. 11. art. 2. ad 3. Of the nature of heresy is the pertinacious election of doctrine contrary to the faith: but one doubting precisely does not elect, etc. but is suspended: Therefore.

PROBATUR primo ab authoribus prioris sententiae, argumento D. Bonau. loc. cit. in 4. sumpto e D. August. lib. de utilitate credendi, cap. 1. et refertur cap. Haereticus, 24. quaest. 3. et D. Hieronymo cap. 5. ad Galat. et ad Tit. 3. et refertur cap. Haeresis, 24. quaest. 3. eoque utitur etiam D. Thom. 1. Corinth. 11. lect. 4. et 2. 2. quaest. 11. art. 2. ad 3. De ratione haeresis est electio pertinax doctrinae contrariae fidei: sed dubitans praecise non eligit, etc. sed pendulus est: Ergo.

8 It is CONFIRMED; for heresy is an error contrary to the faith; but error implies assent, or dissent. It is confirmed, because heresy is opposed to faith; but doubt is a mean.

CONFIRMATUR*; nam haeresis est error fidei contrarius; error autem assensum, vel dissensum importat. Confirmatur, quia haeresis est fidei opposita; dubium autem est medium.*

9 I ASSERT secondly, that one doubting is an infidel privatively, because he is deprived of the certainty of assent, necessary for retaining the habit of faith.

ASSERO secundo, dubitantem esse infidelem privative, quia privatur certitudine assensus, necessaria ad habitum fidei retinendum.

10 It is PROVED; for in this sense cap. 1. de haereticis it is said, that one doubting in the faith is an infidel, not contrarily, as if he had an assent contrary to the faith, but privatively, because he lacks the necessary assent. Thus doubt of the faith can be condemned, just as those are condemned who deny that the soul is the form of the body, or doubt about it, as is found Clem. 1. §. Porro; and those who doubt of the immortality of the soul are condemned by Leo X. in Conc. Later. In the same sense the Fathers spoke, whom Franciscus Suarez adduces num. 12. Lorca num. 5. From which the text cap. 1. de haeret. remains exposed [to objection], which is of Pope Stephen, to whom others answer, that one doubting in the faith is called an infidel with respect to the external forum.

PROBATUR*; hoc enim sensu* cap. 1. de haereticis dicitur, dubitantem in fide esse infidelem, non contrarie, quasi assensum fidei contrarium habeat, sed privative, quia caret assensu necessario. Sic potest damnari dubium fidei, sicut damnantur, qui negant animam esse formam corporis, vel de hoc dubitant, ut habetur Clem. 1. §. Porro*; et qui dubitant de animae immortalitate, damnantur a Leone X. in Conc. Later. eodem sensu locuti sunt Patres, quos aggerant Franciscus Suarez* num. 12. Lorca num. 5. Ex quo manet expositus textus cap. 1. de haeret. qui est Steph. Papae, cui alii respondent, dubium in fide dici infidelem quoad forum externum.

11 A third opinion of OTHERS says, that it is true when he reflects upon his own doubtful thought, and in fact elicits an erroneous judgment concerning matters of faith, so that he may judge them only probable. But these men confound the questions.

ALII tertio dicunt, id verum esse, quando reflectit supra suam cogitationem dubiam, et de facto elicit iudicium erroneum circa res fidei, ut putet eas tantum probabiles. Sed hi quaestiones confundunt.

Question III: Whether one who gives merely opinionative assent to an article of faith is a heretic

1 The SERAPHIC Doctor, loc. cit. in 3, whom Suarez follows disp. 19. sect. 4., and Cardinal Lugo disp. 17. sect. 5. n. 96., distinguish two ways of taking a probable opinion. First, as one that rests only on probable reasons. Second, as one that has joined to it a fear of the opposite. And indeed they declare that one who opines with fear is a heretic — Suarez and Lugo, following D. Bonaventure here; but in the former sense, by no means.

> An, qui actu opinativo mero assentitur articulo FIDEI, sit haereticus.
> SERAPHICUS loc. cit. in 3. quem imitantur Suarez disp. 19. sect. 4. Card. Lugo disp. 17. sect. 5. n. 96. distinguunt, dupliciter accipi opinionem probabilem. Primo ut constat rationibus tantum probabilibus. Secundo ut habet adiunctam formidinem oppositi. Et quidem opinantem cum formidine, haereticum clamant Suarez, et Lugo post D. Bonav. hic; in priori vero sensu nequaquam.

2 OTHERS, however, call one who opines about matters of faith a heretic absolutely. So Castro, Aragonius, and Azorius, as cited by Suarez, Coninck. disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 105., Castro Palao Tomo 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 12.

> ALII vero, opinantem de rebus fidei, absolute haereticum vocant. Ita Castro, Aragonius, et Azorius apud Suarez, Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 105. Castro Palao Tomo 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 12.

3 I ASSERT first, with D. Bonaventure, that one who opines with fear about matters of faith loses faith.

> ASSERO primo cum D. Bonav. opinantem cum formidine de rebus fidei, amittere fidem.

4 IT IS PROVED first from D. Bonaventure in corpore, et ad 3. et 4., by the reasoning which others employ: What denies the certitude of the object of faith removes it: Such is fearful opinion: Therefore.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonav. in corpore, et ad 3. et 4. ratione, qua nituntur alii. Id, quod negat certitudinem obiecti fidei, eam tollit: Talis est opinatio formidolosa: Ergo.

5 I ASSERT second, that one who opines about matters of faith from probable reasons, without excluding a more certain assent from elsewhere, is not a heretic.

> ASSERO secundo, opinantem de rebus fidei rationibus probabilibus, non excluso certiori assensu aliunde, non esse haereticum.

6 IT IS PROVED from D. Bonaventure, because Theology deals with matters of faith, and proceeds opinionatively with probable reasons, by which we are bound to be ready to render a reason to those who ask, as it is said in 1 Peter 3.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. quia Theologia est de rebus fidei, et opinative incedit rationibus probabilibus, quibus tenemur esse parati rationem reddere poscentibus, ut dicitur 1. Petri 3.

7 INDEED, if anyone were to say that the object, that God is, is probable, he would err, understanding that it ought not to be believed with certainty. And this alone do the arguments of Coninck show, as the Most Eminent Lugo observes.

ENIM vero; Si quis diceret, obiectum, Deum esse probabile esse, erraret, intelligens, id non debere certo credi. Et hoc solum ostendunt rationes Coninchii, ut advertit Eminentissimus Lugo.

8 I SEE that the dispute is more about the word than about the thing, and that it is sufficiently resolved by the distinction of the Seraphic Doctor.

VIDEO, disputationem esse magis de nomine, quam de re, et distinctione Seraphici satis resolvi concludit.

Question IV: Whether ignorance excuses from heresy, and what ignorance

1 THE DIFFICULTY is, because heresy means error with pertinacity, whether ignorance includes pertinacity, and what that may be.

An, et Quae Ignorantia excuset ab Haeresi.

DIFFICULTAS est, quia haeresis dicit errorem cum pertinacia, num ignorantia includat pertinaciam, et quae haec sit.

2 THE FIRST opinion is, that no gravely culpable ignorance excuses from heresy. So Sotus 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 3. Lopez 2. part of the Instructorius, where he treats of excommunication, cap. 20. Palacius 3. dist. 25. disp. 2. and Lorca disp. 41. de fide, having abandoned the contrary opinion he had taught in the prima secundae, disp. 33. membr. 2. ad 3. The same seems to be the mind of D. Bonav. here, as Sanchez reports num. 19. in the place to be cited.

PRIMA opinio est, nullam ignorantiam graviter culpabilem excusare ab haeresi. Ita Sotus 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 3. Lopez 2. parte Instructoriii, ubi de excommunicatione, cap. 20. Palacius 3. dist. 25. disp. 2. et Lorca disp. 41. de fide relicta opinione contraria, quam tradiderat prima secunda, disp. 33. membr. 2. ad 3. Idem videtur sentire D. Bonav. hic, ut refert Sanchez num. 19. loco adducendo.

3 THE SECOND opinion asserts the same thing, when the ignorance is exceedingly gross and easily vincible. So Sayrus, and Valentia thinks it probable.

SECUNDA sententia idipsum asserit, quando ignorantia est crassa nimis, et facile vincibilis. Ita Sayrus, et probabile putat Valentia.

4 THE THIRD opinion admits it, when the ignorance is affected. So Cano, Navar, Corduba, and Torrensis, whom Suarez reports disp. 19. sect. 3. and Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 15. p. 1. diffic. 4.

TERTIA sententia id admittit, quando ignorantia est affectata. Ita Cano, Navar, Corduba, et Torrensis, quos refert Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. et Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 15. p. 1. diffic. 4.

5 THE FOURTH opinion distinguishes regarding affected ignorance; for if it is affected out of a false opinion against the Church, as if the proposition of the Church were of small moment, or with a view to erring more freely in faith, it does not excuse from heresy: But if it is affected only out of negligence and weariness of learning, or from any other cause, it does not make one a heretic. So Thomas Sanchez lib. 2. in decal. cap. 7. num. 33. citing Vasquinus prima secundae, disp. 126. cap. 2. Zumel prima 2. quaest. 76. art. 4. disp. 1. and nearly Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 8. disp. 5. who adheres to this partly with Soto and Valentia.

QUARTA sententia distinguit de ignorantia affectata; nam si affectetur ex falsa opinione contra Ecclesiam, quasi parvi momenti sit Ecclesiae propositio, vel ad finem liberius errandi in fide, non excusat ab haeresi: Si vero affectetur tantum ex negligentia, et taedio discendi, vel ex quavis alia causa, non constituit haereticum. Ita Thomas Sanchez lib. 2. in decal. cap. 7. num. 33. adducens Vasquinum prima secundae, disp. 126. cap. 2. Zumel prima 2. quaest. 76. art. 4. disp. 1. et fere Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 8. disp. 5. qui ex parte etiam Soto, et Valentiae adhaeret.

6 THE FIFTH opinion is, that any ignorance at all, both gross and affected, excuses from heresy. So Sylvester v. haeresis, Azorius t. 1. lib. 8. cap. 9. quaestio. 8. Bannes, Aragon. quaest. 11. art. 2. Conchinchius, and others, whom Castro Palao cites and follows, tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 5. Suarez in the said sect. 3. num. 9. Hurtad. disp. 81. §. 10. where others assert the same; and Card. Lugo disp. 16. de poenit. sect. 4. §. 6. and disp. 17. de fide, sect. 4. and disput. 20. sect. 6. Diana p. 1. tract. 5. Resol. 1. Fagund. lib. 1. cap. 4. saying this is the view of D. Bonav. and D. Thom.

QUINTA sententia est, quamlibet ignorantiam, et crassam, et affectatam excusare ab haeresi. Ita Sylvester v. haeresis, Azorius t. 1. lib. 8. cap. 9. quaestio. 8. Bannes, Aragon. quaest. 11. art. 2. Conchinchius, et alii, quos affert, et sequitur Castro Palao, tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. num. 5. Suarez dicta sect. 3. num. 9. Hurtad. disp. 81. §. 10. ubi alios asserunt; et Card. Lugo disp. 16. de poenit. sect. 4. §. 6. et disp. 17. de fide, sect. 4. et disput. 20. sect. 6. Diana p. 1. tract. 5. Resol. 1. Fagund. lib. 1. cap. 4. dicens esse D. Bonav. et D. Thom.

7 I ASSERT therefore, first, that the first opinion is probable, which the holy Doctor indicates with a single word in the cited dubium.

ASSERO ergo, primam sententiam esse probabilem, quam uno verbulo indicat S. Doct. dub. cit.

8 IT IS PROVED first by the authors of the first opinion, with D. Bonav., from D. August. epist. 162. which is found in decret. 24. quaest. 3. cited there; the Apostle said, where he says: Those who defend their own opinion, however false and perverse it may be, with no pertinacious obstinacy, but seek the truth with careful diligence, ready to be corrected when they shall have found it, are not to be reckoned among heretics.

PROBATUR primo ab auctoribus primae sententiae cum D. Bonav. ex D. August. epist. 162. et habetur in decret. 24. quaest. 3. cit. dixit Apostolus, ubi ait: Qui sententiam suam, quantumvis falsam, atque perversam, nulla pertinaci animositate defendunt; quaerunt autem cauta sollicitudine veritatem, corrigi parati, ubi invenerint, non sunt inter haereticos computandi.

9 With these words of D. August. he excuses from the plague of heresy only those who diligently seek the truth; not those who neglect to find it, and much less those who deliberately flee lest they find it.

His verbis D. August. eos tantum ab haeresis lue excusat, qui sollicite veritatem quaerunt; non qui negligunt invenire, et multo minus eos, qui ex industria fugiunt, ne eam inveniant.

10 Card. Lugo RESPONDS num. 176. that Augustine excuses indeed those who seek the truth; but others he neither excuses nor declares heretics; what was certain he decided; what was less certain, about that he did not dispute.

RESPONDET Card. Lugo num. 176. Augustinum excusare quidem eos, qui veritatem quaerunt; alios autem nec excusare, nec haereticos declarare; sed, quod certum erat statuisse; quod autem minus certum, de eo non disputasse.

11 But Lugo TWISTS the authority, because S. August. lib. contra Manichaeos, reported in cap. Qui in Ecclesia, 24. quaest. 3. declares as heretics only those who, admonished that the Church teaches the contrary, still resist pertinaciously: Who in the Church, he says, hold some diseased and perverse sentiment, if corrected so as to hold what is sound and right, resist contumaciously, and are unwilling to amend their pestilential and deadly dogmas, but persist in defending them, are heretics. The same he teaches in lib. 4. de Baptismo, contra Donatistas, cap. 16. saying: The one who through error believes the same as Photinus is first a heretic when, the doctrine having been made manifest to him, he prefers to resist the Catholic faith, and chooses to hold what he held. Fulensis urges this in lib. 3. cap. 6.

> RETORQUET autem Lugo authoritatem, quia S. August. lib. contra Manichaeos, relatus cap. Qui in Ecclesia, 24. quaest. 3. eos solos declarat haereticos, qui admoniti, quod Ecclesia contrarium doceat, adhuc pertinaces resistunt: Qui in Ecclesia ait, morbidum aliquid, pravumque quid sapiunt, si correpti, ut sanum, rectumque sapiant, resistant contumaciter, suaque pestifera, et mortifera dogmata emendare nolunt, sed defensare persistunt, haeretici sunt. Quod idem docet lib. 4. de Baptismo, contra Donatistas, cap. 16. dicens: Ex errore credentem idem cum Photino, tum primum esse haereticum, cum manifestata sibi doctrina, Catholicae fidei maluerit resistere, et illud, quod tenebat, elegerit. Hoc urget Fulensis lib. 3. cap. 6.

12 Yet these things avail Lugo nothing: For in the former passage I would have him find where S. August. has the particle only. He puts it well that pertinacious persons knowingly are heretics; but in the passage alleged by us he assigns all the conditions lest anyone be a heretic for any cause, and therefore there it is extended more broadly.

13 In the other passage he evidently speaks of one who is invincibly ignorant, for he says: Let us suppose two men, one of whom holds about Christ what Photinus held, and is baptized in his heresy outside the communion of the Catholic Church: but the other holds the same, yet is baptized in the Catholic Church, thinking it to be the Catholic faith. Him I do not yet call a heretic, unless, the doctrine having been made manifest to him, he should prefer to resist the Catholic faith.

> IN altero loco evidenter loquitur de eo, qui invincibiliter ignorat, ait enim: Constituamus duos, unum eorum id sentire de Christo, quod Photinus opinatus est, et in eius haeresi baptizari extra Ecclesiae Catholicae communionem: alium vero hoc idem sentire, sed in Catholicae baptizari, existimantem ipsam esse Catholicam fidem. Istum nondum haereticum dico, nisi manifestata sibi doctrina, Catholicae fidei resistere maluerit.

14 MOREOVER Lugo concedes it to be certain that one who ignorantly, with inculpable ignorance, is ignorant of the articles is not a heretic, because he seeks the truth; and that it is an opinion, uncertain, which says that those ignorantly culpable are not heretics.

> PRAETEREA fatetur Lugo, certum esse, eum, qui ignorantia inculpabili ignorat articulos, non esse haereticum, quia veritatem quaerit, et opinionem esse incertam, quae dicit, culpabiliter ignorantes, non esse haereticos.

15 It is proved secondly by D. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 22. art. 2. quaest. 2. in corpore. In all other matters sin from ignorance and sin from knowledge share the same malice and belong to the same species (although one offending from knowledge may offend more gravely within the same species;) thus he who kills knowingly and he who kills from culpable ignorance is guilty of homicide, and so of the rest: Therefore also he who falls into heresy from such ignorance is a heretic. This argument is commonly used.

> Probatur secundo a D. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 22. art. 2. quaest. 2. in corpore. In omnibus materiis aliis peccatum ex ignorantia, et ex scientia eandem malitiam participant, et ad eandem speciem spectant (esto ex scientia delinquens, gravius delinquat in eadem specie;) sic qui scienter, et qui ignorantia culpata occidit, est homicidii reus, et sic de aliis: Ergo et qui ex ignorantia tali haeresim admittit, est haereticus. Hoc argumento utuntur communiter.

16 They heap up many responses of no weight, which are refuted by Hurtado disp. 82. §. 56. and Lugo in the place cited de Poenitentia, who also refutes the responses of Hurtado.

> Multa responsa aggerunt nullius momenti, quae refelluntur ab Hurtado disp. 82. §. 56. et Lugo loco cit. de Poenitentia, qui etiam responsa Hurtadi refellit.

17 Lugo responds that they do not differ indeed in species, yet have different effects, just as casual homicide and voluntary homicide; for this latter has joined to it a graver irregularity; thus neither do they damn the heretic from ignorance and the heretic from mere malice with the same punishments.

> Respondet Lugo, non differre quidem specie, tamen habere diversos effectus, sicuti, et homicidium casuale, et homicidium voluntarium; nam hoc habet adiunctam irregularitatem graviorem, sic neque haereticum ex ignorantia, et ex malitia mera eisdem poenis damnant.

18 Lugo is mistaken; for first he concedes that heresy is that of one who offends from ignorance; and consequently that before God he is guilty of this crime, and that is what I ask. But since the heretic is condemned by the Church with excommunication, it follows that this man is condemned, since he is a heretic. Hence, by saying that this man is not punished by the Church, even if it be conceded that he is a heretic, the principle is begged and a contradiction involved.

> Fallitur Lugo; primo enim fatetur, haeresim esse eius, qui ex ignorantia delinquit; atque adeo huius criminis apud Deum esse reum, et hoc quaero. Cum autem haereticus damnetur ab Ecclesia excommunicatione; sequitur, hunc esse damnatum, cum sit haereticus. Unde dicendo hunc non esse punitum ab Ecclesia, etiamsi concedatur haereticus, petitur principium, et implicatur.

19 It is proved thirdly by D. Bonavent. from foundation 3. on which the others principally rely, as Lugo says n. 182. To know what is to be believed and done belongs to faith, as its acts: Therefore the opposite, namely to be culpably ignorant, belongs to infidelity: But it does not belong precisely to Paganism or Judaism, since the confession of the Christian Religion is still retained: Therefore it belongs to heresy; for there are no other species of infidelity. Nor let them say that it belongs incompletely to heresy; for since it is a most grave sin, it ought to be in some species as a complete individual, as Lorca num. 16. and Lugo num. 182. concede; nor does he solve it by saying that it is a sin against faith; yet not heresy, Paganism, or Judaism, since it is also a proper infidelity, which is divided into three heads. For the contrary is true, because one must find the species under which this sin stands.[1]

1 N. Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'oportet inveniat speciem'; rendered as 'one must find the species' because the syntax is anomalous (expected 'oportet inveniri speciem') but the sense is clear.

> Probatur tertio a D. Bonavent. fundamento 3. quo principaliter nituntur caeteri, ut ait Lugo n. 182. Cognoscere credenda, et operanda, spectat ad fidem, tanquam actus eius: Ergo oppositum, nempe culpabiliter ignorare, spectat ad infidelitatem: Non pertinet autem praecise ad Paganismum, aut Iudaismum, cum adhuc retineatur confessio Religionis Christianae: Ergo pertinet ad haeresim; non enim sunt aliae infidelitatis species. Neque dicant, pertinere incomplete ad haeresim; nam cum sit peccatum gravissimum, debet esse in aliqua specie tanquam individuum completum, ut fatentur Lorca num. 16. et Lugo num. 182. qui neque solvit dicendo, esse peccatum contra fidem; non tamen haeresim, Paganismum, vel Iudaismum, cum etiam sit propria infidelitas, quae in tria capita dividitur. Contra enim est, quia oportet inveniat speciem, sub qua stet hoc peccatum.

20 It is confirmed by D. Bonavent. because for the other species of infidelity, namely Judaism and Paganism, culpable ignorance suffices.

Confirmatur a D. Bonavent. quia ad alias species infidelitatis, nempe Iudaismum, et Paganismum, sufficit ignorantia culpabilis.

21 It is proved fourthly most effectually by D. Bonavent. in corpore, for since it is necessary for salvation not to be ignorant of the things of faith, certainly all are bound to know them, and few are they who deliberately refuse to know, by affecting ignorance; but for the most part they are ignorant; and if heretics are only those who know and affect ignorance, very few will be heretics; for, as I have seen by experience, disputing with heretics, they labor under great gross ignorance, as the Most Eminent Lugo concedes num. 194.

Probatur quarto efficacissime a D. Bonavent. in corpore, nam cum necessarium sit ad salutem, non ignorare ea, quae sunt fidei, profecto omnes tenentur scire, et pauci sunt, qui consulto nolint scire, affectando ignorantiam, sed ut plurimum ignorantes et si haeretici sunt, tantum scientes, et affectantes ignorantiam, paucissimi erunt haeretici; nam, ut experimento vidi, cum haereticis disputans, magna ignorantia crassa laborant, ut fatetur Eminentissimus Lugo num. 194.

22 Hence culpable ignorance rightly does not excuse in the external forum, as Castro Palao notes, Tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. and Menochius, Farinacius, Peña, Simancas, Albertinus, and others, cited by Diana 4. p. Tract. 7. resol. 36. Yet sometimes it helps to diminish the punishment; yet not entirely, as these assert. But all these things are true much more of affected ignorance.

Unde merito ignorantia culpabilis in foro externo non excusat, ut advertunt Castro Palao Tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 2. Menochius, Farinacius, Peña, Simancas, Albertinus, et alii apud Dianam 4. p. Tract. 7. resol. 36. Aliquando tamen ad diminuendam poenam iuvat; non tamen omnino, ut asserunt hi. Haec vero omnia multo magis de ignorantia affectata vera sunt.

23 You will object. One sinning from ignorance can have a universal will of eliciting acts of faith, and of believing all things that are sufficiently proposed: But heresy essentially is pertinacity.

Obiicies. Peccans ex ignorantia, potest habere voluntatem universalem eliciendi actus fidei, et credendi omnia, quae sufficienter proponentur: At haeresis essentialis est pertinacia.

24 D. Bonavent. responds in the places cited that such a man has lost faith. For truly in the cited dubium he admits this argument.

Respondet D. Bonavent. locis adductis, hunc amisisse fidem. Enim vero dub. cit. hanc rationem admittit.

25 I assert therefore, secondly, that the fifth opinion is probable. It is evident from the argument adduced.

Assero ergo secundo quintam sententiam esse probabilem. Patet ex allata ratione.

Question V: What pertinacity is required for heresy

1 Pertinacity, from D. Bonaventura prima parte 26 Centil. sect. 18: is the Will fleeing any lessening of its excellence, irrevocably defending what it has said or done. And from the same holy Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. it is: Perseverance in an evil purpose against the will of superiors.

Pertinacia, ex D. Bonaventura prima parte 26 Centil. sect. 18: est Voluntas fugiens minorationem probitatis, dicta vel facta sua irrevocabiliter defendens. Et ex eodem S. Doctore in speculo animae, cap. 1. est: Perseverantia in malo proposito contra voluntatem superiorum.

2 All concede it, and place pertinacity in the definition of heresy. So D. Bonavent. in the places alleged quaest. 4. See Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 76. Farinacius de haeresi, quaest. 196. Diana 4. p. Tract. 7. resol. 36. Sanchez Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 7.

> Omnes concedunt, et in definitione haeresis ponunt pertinaciam. Ita D. Bonavent. locis allegatis quaest. 4. Vide Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. Coninch. disp. 18. dub. 7. num. 76. Farinacium de haeresi, quaest. 196. Dianam 4. p. Tract. 7. resol. 36. Sanchez Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 7.

3 Therefore the truest opinion is, that pertinacity is required. But it is doubtful: whether this pertinacity can exist before one is admonished of his error, and he himself scorns the admonition.

> Verissima ergo sententia est, requiri pertinaciam, Sed dubium est: an haec pertinacia dari queat, antequam de suo errore admoneatur, et ipse monitionem contemnat.

4 The first opinion is assertive, requiring a delay of time, so that incorrigibility may appear in the faith. So Alciatus Leg. 2. Cod. de summa Trinitate, Menoch. volum. 2. consil. 149. num. 49. citing Lupus, and Turrecremata. They can be founded on the words of Paul Tit. 3. Avoid a heretical man after a first and second admonition. To me, however, these Jurists seem to speak in the external forum.

> Prima opinio est assertiva, exigens temporis moram, ut incorrigibilitas appareat in fide. Ita Alciatus Leg. 2. Cod. de summa Trinitate, Menoch. volum. 2. consil. 149. num. 49. adducens Lupum, et Turrecrematum. Fundari possunt verbis Pauli Tit. 3. Haereticum hominem, post primam, et secundam admonitionem, devita. Mihi tamen videntur hi Iuristae loqui in foro externo.

5 Therefore the truest opinion of the Theologians is, that this admonition and delay are not required for one to be a heretic, but that it suffices that he adhere to the error with full deliberation. So D. Bonavent. in the places cited in the preceding quaestio. See Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. num. 23. Vasquez p. 1. disp. 126. Valentia disput. 1. quaest. 11 p. 1. and innumerable others, whom Sanchez reports in the said cap. 7. num. 7. Diana in the said resol. 36. who rightly adds, with the Most Eminent Lugo num. 158. that this admonition is not required even in the external forum, and this is more true now, after the decree of Alex. VII. has been published.

> Verissima igitur sententia Theologorum est, eam monitionem, et moram non requiri, ut aliquis haereticus sit, sed sufficere, ut plena deliberatione errori adhaereat. Ita D. Bonavent. locis adductis quaest. praecedenti. Vide Suarez disp. 19. sect. 3. num. 23. Vasquez p. 1. disp. 126. Valentiam disput. 1. quaest. 11 p. 1. et alios innumeros, quos referunt Sanchez dicto cap. 7. num. 7. Diana dicta resol. 36. qui bene addit cum Eminentissimo Lugo num. 158. neque in foro externo eam admonitionem exigi, et hoc magis est verum nunc, post editum decretum Alex. VII.

6 The reason is, because the admonition serves only that one may take note that he holds a view against the Church; but this he can learn from another source; and he is bound to strive to learn it.

> Ratio est, quia monitio solum infervit, ut advertatur, se contra Ecclesiam sentire; hoc autem aliunde discere potest; et tenetur conari ediscere.

7 The words of the Apostle presuppose that the man, before the admonition, is already a heretic, and after it to be avoided.

> Verba Apostoli supponunt, eum hominem, ante monitionem iam haereticum, post eam vitandum.

8 I assert secondly, in the internal forum it does not suffice to be corrected by his Bishop, or by the Inquisitor, because these are not an infallible rule of faith. So Sanchez asserts num. 25. with Cano, Vasquez, and others. Valentia, Torres, Salas, and others, cited by Diana 6. The first opinion denies it. These indeed say it does not suffice even in the external forum, which however Suarez asserts num. 21. Lorca and others, cited by Diana, say it does suffice, and indeed on this account he allows it in those constituted in the holy Tribunal.

> Assero secundo, in foro interno non sufficere, si corripiatur a suo Episcopo, aut ab Inquisitore, quia hi non sunt regula fidei infallibilis. Ita cum Cano, Vasquez, et aliis asserit Sanchez num. 25. Valentia, Torres, Salas, et alii apud Dianam 6. Prima opinio negat. Hi sane dicunt, neque in foro externo sufficere, quod tamen asserit Suarez num. 21. Lorca et alii apud Dianam, sufficere, et sane propter hoc, sinit in sancto Tribunali constituti.

9 To me the opinion of the Most Eminent Lugo is proved, that there is no difference in either Forum, because if the assertion of the Bishop is not sufficient to make it credible, in no forum will it accomplish that.

> Mihi probatur sententia Eminentissimi Lugo, non esse differentiam in alterutro Foro, quia si propositio Episcopi non est satis, ut faciat credibile, in nullo foro id praestabit.

10 I assert thirdly, for pertinacity it suffices that a man wish indirectly to resist the authority of the Church. So Suarez in the said sect. 3. num. 22. Vasquez prima secundae, disp. 126. Sanchez in the said cap. 7. num. 4. See the Cardinal Dinalus Lugo num. 163. who explains indirect pertinacity thus: if he knows that this is against the sense of the Church; and yet holds it, from any end whatsoever, whether out of grief, or honor, or some other affection. This is the exposition of D. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 26. taken from D. Augustine Lib. de utilitate credendi initio, where he says: A heretic is one who, for the sake of some temporal gain, and especially of glory and of his own supremacy, begets or follows false and new opinions about the faith.

> Assero tertio, ad pertinaciam sufficere, quod homo velit indirecte resistere auctoritati Ecclesiae. Ita Suarez dicta sect. 3. num. 22. Vasquez prima secundae, disp. 126. Sanchez dicto cap. 7. num. 4. Vide Cardinalem dinalem Lugum num. 163. qui ita explicat pertinaciam indirectam, si sciat, id esse contra sensum Ecclesiae; et tamen id teneat, ex quovis fine, sive ob luctum, sive honorem, sive alium affectum. Haec est expositio D. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 26. sumpta e D. Augustino Lib. de utilitate credendi initio*, ubi ait:* Haereticus est, qui alicuius temporalis lucri, et maxime gloriae, principatusque sui gratia, falsas opiniones de fide ac novas gignit, aut sequitur.

11 IT IS CONFIRMED in other sins, for which it suffices that they be willed indirectly, even if the disobedience, irreligion, etc. be not willed directly.

> CONFIRMATUR in aliis peccatis, quae sufficit, volita esse indirecte, etiamsi non sit volita directe inobedientia, irreligio, etc.

12 Lugo INFERS num. 166. that he is not excused from pertinacity who is prepared to acquiesce to the Church, when nevertheless he is convinced by her with arguments, as Vasquez and Ledesma say, cited by Sanchez num. 6. Suarez num. 13. and others. For he is not prepared to obey the authority of the Church.

> INFERT Lugo num. 166. non excusari a pertinacia, qui paratus est Ecclesiae acquiescere, quando tamen ab ea argumentis convincatur, ut cum Vasquez, et Ledesma aiunt Sanchez num. 6. Suarez num. 13. et alii. Is enim non est paratus obedire Ecclesiae authoritati.

13 NEXT he notes that a protestation of faith excuses from pertinacity, as some signify, with Palao dist. 3. p. 2. num. 7. he himself adds that it is not sufficient in rigor.

DEINDE admonet, protestationem fidei excusare a pertinacia, ut significant aliqui, cum Palao dist. 3. p. 2. num. 7. addit ipse non esse in rigore sufficientem.

Question VI: Whether, for one to be deemed a heretic, it is necessary that he have been baptized and one of the faithful

1 I SUPPOSE with D. Bonavent. prima parte Centil. sect. 26. that one can be a heretic even if he is not an apostate from the faith altogether, or from the Church; which he proves from D. Hieronymus in cap. 5. epist. ad Galat. saying that a heretic is one who understands Scripture against the sense of the Church, even though he does not depart from it. He will therefore be a heretic if he perverts one passage of Scripture.

An, ut quis censeatur Haereticus, necesse sit, ut fuerit baptizatus, et fidelis.

SUPPONO cum D. Bonavent. prima parte Centil. sect. 26. posse aliquem esse haereticum, etiamsi non sit apostata a fide omnino, vel ab Ecclesia; quod probat ex D. Hieronymo in cap. 5. epist. ad Galat. dicente, haereticum esse, qui Scripturam contra Ecclesiae sensum intelligit, quamvis ab ea non discedat. Erit igitur haereticus, si unum Scripturae locum invertat.

2 That baptism is not required for the note of heresy, that one must first have been baptized, Castro asserts Lib. 1. de iusta haeret. punit. cap. 8. so also Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 3. citing D. Thomam, whom Bannes also reports thus 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 5. but wrongly, as Caietanus, Aragon, and others note. Fuliensis subscribes lib. 3. cap. 6.

Non requiri ad notam haeresis, ut quis prius fuerit baptizatus, asserit Castro Lib. 1. de iusta haeret. punit. cap. 8. sic et Tanner. disp. 1. quaest. 8. dub. 3. adducens D. Thomam, quem ita refert etiam Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 10. art. 5. sed perperam, ut notant Caietanus, Aragon, et alii. Subscribit Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 6.

3 ALL the others reject this opinion, whom Suarez cites and follows disp. 19. sect. 5. Sanchez Lib. 2. in decal. cap. 7. num. 34. Hurtadus disp. 82. sect. 2. §. 11. Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 1. num. 20. Card. Lugo disp. 20. sect. 4.

HANC sententiam omnes alii reiiciunt, quos afferunt, et sequuntur Suarez disp. 19. sect. 5. Sanchez Lib. 2. in decal. cap. 7. num. 34. Hurtadus disp. 82. sect. 2. §. 11. Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 3. p. 1. num. 20. Card. Lugo disp. 20. sect. 4.

4 The REASON is intimated by D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 2. in corpore taken from the Apostle prima Cor. 5. which the Council of Trent uses, sess. 14. cap. 2. Since the Church exercises judgment on no one who has not first entered her by the gate of baptism. For what have I, says the Apostle, to do with judging those who are without. Whence it comes about that neither can a Catechumen be esteemed a heretic, if he falls away from the belief of some article.

RATIO innuitur a D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 2. in corpore sumpta ex Apostolo prima Cor. 5. qua utitur Concilium Trident, sess. 14. cap. 2. Cum Ecclesia in neminem iudicium exerceat, qui non prius in ipsam per baptismi ianuam fuerit ingressus. Quid enim mihi, inquit Apostolus, de iis, quae foris sunt, iudicare. Quo fit, ut neque Cathecumenus queat censeri haereticus, si deficiat a credulitate articuli alicuius.

5 The Most Eminent Lugo notes that one baptized with an invalid baptism, namely on account of a substantial defect, is not a heretic, if afterwards he denies some article. So also Sanchez cap. 7. num.

34. Castro Palao in the place cited, Suarez sect. 5. num. 8. Hurtado disp. 82. §. 17. for there the reason of the Council of Trent still holds.

> Advertit Eminentissimus Lugo, baptizatum baptismo invalido, ob defectum scilicet substantialem, non esse haereticum, si postea neget articulum aliquem. Ita et Sanchez cap. 7. num. 34. Castro Palao loco citato, Suarez sect. 5. num. 8. Hurtado disp. 82. §. 17. nam ibi adhuc ratio Concilii Tridentini valet.

6 YOU WILL SAY in the year 1619. Maurus, who offended against our religion, was punished, even though he was not found to be baptized, and he himself alleged this.

> DICES anno 1619. Maurus, qui adversus nostram religionem deliquit, punitus est, etiamsi non inveniretur esse baptizatus, et ipse id allegaret.

7 Card. Lugo RESPONDS that he was punished on account of excess against our Religion: for the Church may punish Pagans and Jews subject to Christian Princes, either when they deny articles which they hold in common with us, as to believe in one God the Creator; or when they sacrifice to demons, or when they try to seduce Christians, as is evident from the Bull of Gregory XI. beginning: Admodum dolemur audivimus, and the Bull of Gregory XIII. which begins: Antiqua Iudaeorum improbitas, which Peña reports, among the Apostolic letters at the end of the directorium, about which Diana treats 4. p. Tract. 7. de poenis debit. etc. resol. 2. and Castro Palao §. 6. There those are decreed to be punished also for other causes, for instance if they vomit heretical blasphemies against Christ, saying that he was a sinner; that the Mother of God was not a Virgin (for that reason lately a Jew, whom I know of, was beaten with scourges at Cremona) If they aid heretics: if they carry about, retain, or divulge prohibited books: if they hold Christians up to derision, spitting upon the sacred Host, the Cross, Christ the Lord: if they have Christian nurses, or force them, when they communicate, to pour milk into privies in contempt of the sacred communion.

> RESPONDET Card. Lugo, hunc punitum ob excessum in nostram Religionem: Ecclesiae enim licet punire Paganos, et Iudaeos subditos Principibus Christianis, sive quando negant articulos, quos habent nobiscum communes, ut credere in unum Deum Creatorem; sive cum Daemonibus sacrificant, sive cum seducere conantur Christianos, ut constat ex Bulla Gregorii XI. incipiente: Admodum dolemur audivimus, et Bulla Gregorii XIII. quae incipit: Antiqua Iudaeorum improbitas, quas refert Peña, inter litteras Apostolicas in fine directorii, de quibus agit Diana 4. p. Tract. 7. de poenis debit. etc. resol. 2. et Castro Palao §. 6. Ibi puniendi decernuntur illi etiam ob alias causas, puta si blasphemias haereticales evomant in Christum, dicendo, eum peccatorem; Deiparam non esse Virginem (ob id enim nuper Iudaeus, quem novi, flagris caesus est Cremonae) Si haereticos adiuvent: si libros prohibitos deferant, retineant, divulgent: si derisioni habeant Christianos, Sacram Hostiam, Crucem, Christum Dominum conspuentes: si Christianas nutrices habeant, vel cogant eas, quando communicant, effundere lac in cloacas in sacrae communis despectum.

8 IT IS USUALLY DOUBTED also about one doubtfully baptized; see Diana Tract. 8. resol. 113. where he reports the opinion of Didaci Canterae in qq. crim. cap. 1. de haeret. num. 5. who says, if he was born and educated among Christians, he is presumed baptized.

> DUBITARI solet etiam de dubie baptizato; vide Dianam Tract. 8. resol. 113. ubi refert sententiam Didaci Canterae in qq. crim. cap. 1. de haeret. num. 5. dicentis, si ille natus est, et educatus inter Christianos, praesumi baptizatum.

9 The SECOND part of the quaestio requires, whether he who is to be punished as a heretic must previously have been a believer, or have believed.

> SECUNDA pars quaestionis exigit, an, qui puniendus est ut haereticus, debuerit prius fuisse fidelis, seu credidisse.

10 The SENSE of the Church is, that he is esteemed a heretic even if he has not believed before. See Suarez disput. 16. sect. 4. and disp. 19. sect. 5. and others, cited by the Cardinal Lugus disp. 18. sectione tertia.

> SENSUS Ecclesiae est, eum censeri haereticum, etiamsi non crediderit ante. Vide Suarez disput. 16. sect. 4. et disp. 19. sect. 5. et alios apud Cardinalem Lugum disp. 18. sectione tertia.

Question VII: Whether the Church can compel heretics to receive the Catholic faith

1 ON this Bellarmine disputes at greater length Tom. 1. Lib. 3. de Laicis, cap. 21. et 22. Valencia disp. 1. q. 11. puncto 3. Suarez disp. 20. sect. 3.

> Utrum Ecclesia cogere possit haereticos ad FIDEM Catholicam recipiendam.
> DE hoc latius disputant Bellarminus Tom. 1. Lib. 3. de Laicis, cap. 21. et 22. Valentia disp. 1. q. 11. puncto 3. Suarez disp. 20. sect. 3.

2 HERETICS — certain very ancient lovers of liberty, and of a bad peace, cried out that all should be left in their own religion, and cherished and kept in fraternal peace. So a certain Apelles, in Eusebius lib. 5. hist. cap. 13. Nicephorus lib. 4. cap. 29. provided, however (they say), that they confess Christ the Redeemer. Much the same did George Cassander teach in our own time, in Bellarm. cap. 19. But let these men hear the Apostle Paul: What concord hath Christ with Belial?

> HAERETICI nonnulli perantiqui, libertatis, et malae pacis amatores conclamarunt, omnes in sua religione relinquendos, et fraterna pace adamandos, atque retinendos. Sic Apelles quidam apud Eusebium lib. 5. hist. cap. 13. Nicephorum lib. 4. cap. 29. dummodo tamen (aiunt) fateantur Christum Redemptorem. Idem fere docuit nostro tempore Georgius Cassander, apud Bellarm. cap. 19. sed audiant isti Paulum Apostolum: Quae consensio Christi ad Belial?

3 HERETICS, sectarians, enemies of Catholics, and lovers of a most foul liberty, have said that such men are not to be punished in any way. So thought of old the Donatists, and recently John Hus, and Luther, in Bellarmine, cap. 21. and it is the universal complaint of heretics against us. It is truly marvelous that they, execrating the just punishments of the most holy Inquisition, found in England so many unusual kinds of torments for putting Catholics to death, that they far surpassed the tyrannies of the Barbarians.

> HAERETICI sectarii Catholicorum hostes, et libertatis teterrimae amatores, dixere, non esse huiusmodi ullo modo puniendos. Id sensere olim Donatistae, et noviter Ioannes Hus, et Lutherus apud Bellarminum, cap. 21. et est universalis haereticorum quaerimonia contra nos. Mirum sane, eos, execrantes Inquisitionis sanctissimae iustas punitiones, tot in Anglia tormentorum inusitata genera invenisse ad Catholicos enecandos, ut Barbarorum tyranides longe praecelluerint.

4 The unshaken truth of the holy Church asserts that heretics are justly punished, and can be compelled to profess the faith.

> Constans Ecclesiae sanctae veritas asserit, haereticos iuste puniri, et ad fidem posse compelli profitendam.

5 THIS was defined in the Council of Constance sess. 15. and by Leo X. in the Bull against the articles of Luther, and in cap. ad abolendam, and cap. excommunicamus, and other de haeret. cap. super eo, of the same title, Lib. 6. from Leo Pope epist. 2. to the Bishops of Italy, and other letters, cited by Suarez num. 11. and by Lucius P. epist. to the Bishops of France. The Fourth Council of Toledo, cap. 57. and 59. from the Nicene, where it was requested of Constantine that he punish the Arian heretics.

ID definitum est in Concilio Constantiae sess. 15. et a Leone X. in Bulla contra articulos Lutheri, et cap. ad abolendam, et cap. excommunicamus, et aliis de haeret. cap. super eo, eodem titulo, Lib. 6. ex Leone P. epist. 2. ad Episcopos Italiae, et aliis epistolis, relatis a Suarez num. 11. et a Lucio P. epist. ad Episcopos Galliae. Concilio Tolet. 4. cap. 57. et 59. ex Nycaeno, ubi postulatum est a Constantino, ut haereticos Arianos puniret.

6 The same is evident from the Laws of the best Princes, who established the gravest penalties against heretics: Leg. Manichaeos. Leg. Arrianis. Leg. quicunque Cod. de haeret. which laws St. Augustine praises, Lib. 1. contra epist. Parmen. c. 7. and epist. 166. ad Donatistas, where he adds that only the Emperor Julian the Apostate left heretics unpunished. Wherefore in Lib. 2. Retract. cap. 5. and epist. 48. and 50. he retracts what he had said before, that heretics were not to be punished with bodily punishment; and in Lib. 1. contra epist. Parmeniani, cap. 7. and tract. 11. in Ioan. and epist. 50. ad Bonifacium, he asserts that the punishment of death is owed to them. D. Gregory also may seem [to hold this], Lib. 1. epist. 72. Bernard serm. 66. in Cant. and Lib. 4. de consider. Leo epist. 91. et 923.

Idem constat ex Legibus optimorum Principum, qui gravissimas poenas in haereticos statuerunt Leg. Manichaeos. Leg. Arrianis. Leg. quicunque Cod. de haeret. quas laudat S. Augustinus Lib. 1. contra epist. Parmen. c. 7. et epist. 166. ad Donatistas, ubi addit, solum Imperatorem Iulianum Apostatam haereticos reliquisse impunitos. Quare Lib. 2. Retract. cap. 5. et epist. 48. et 50. retractat id, quod ante dixerat, non esse poena corporali puniendos haereticos, et Lib. 1. contra epist. Parmeniani, cap. 7. et tract. 11. in Ioan. et epist. 50. ad Bonifacium, asserit, poenam mortis eis deberi. Videri etiam potest D. Gregorius Lib. 1. epist. 72. Bernardus serm. 66. in Cant. et Lib. 4. de consider. Leo epist. 91. et 923.

7 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure on 2. Ioan. on these words: Having made a whip of cords, he cast out those selling doves, sheep, and oxen. Where he exercised the power of the forum, showing that sellers of doves, that is, of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, were to be punished for simony: the oxen, who undergo Ecclesiastical labors for merely temporal reward: and the sheep, who call away the sheep of Christ from his pastures, and sell the truths of the faith to the devil, perverting them and dragging them into heresies, as the Fathers expound.

PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. ad 2. Ioan. ad ea verba: Cum fecisset flagellum de funiculis, eiecit vendentes columbas, oves, et boves. Ubi potestatem fori exercuit, ostendens, puniendos vendentes columbas, idest dona Spiritus sancti, simonia: Boves, qui labores Ecclesiasticos pro mercede temporali mere subeunt: et Oves, qui oves Christi ab eius pascuis avocant, et diabolo vendunt veritates fidei, pervertendo, et ad haereses trahendo, ut exponunt Patres.

8 The holy Doctor observes, moreover, that he had twice reproved their acts, saying: But you have made the house of my Father, a den of thieves.

Observat autem S. Doctor actus iterum exprobrasse dicendo: Vos autem fecistis domum Patris mei, speluncam latronum.

9 IT IS PROVED secondly by the holy Doctor in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. from 1 Corinthians 5. where he delivered the incestuous man to satan for the destruction of the flesh; and 1. ad Timot. 1. He delivered Hymenaeus and Alexander to satan, to torture even of the body, as he observes on the last.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. ex prima Corinth. 5. ubi incestuosum tradidit sathanae in interitum carnis, et 1. ad Timot. 1. Tradidit Hymenaeum, et Alexandrum sathanae ad torturam etiam corporalem, ut observat ad ultimum.

10 IT IS PROVED thirdly by D. Bonaventure on 22. Lucas and 19. Ioannis, where Peter drawing a sword struck the servant of the Pontiff, whose name was Malchus. There he shows the Pontifical power of Peter, in that he struck the servant of the Pontiff, Malchus, which means King, understanding the people of the Jews, which was made a servant by its unbelief, whose right ear he cut off, that it might no longer hear error. And if he was corrected, it was not because he was to use the sword; but because not for the occasion, as D. Bernard notes, Lib. 4. de consideratione ad Eugenium. That the sword, even the temporal and material one, was understood to be given to the Church, Sanderus proves learnedly de clave David, lib. 2. cap. 11. from D. Augustine contra Faustum.

> PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonavent. ad 22. Lucae et 19. Ioannis*, ubi Petrus educens gladium, percussit servum Pontificis, cui nomen Malchus, Ubi Pontificiam Petri potestatem ostendit, dum percussit servum Pontificis Malchum, quod sonat Regem, intelligens populum Iudaeorum, qui incredulitate factus est servus, cui amputavit auriculam dexteram, ut iam erronea non audiret. Quod si correctus fuit, non est quia uteretur gladio; sed quia non ad rem, ut notat D. Bernardus Lib. 4.* de consideratione ad Eugenium. Gladium vero etiam temporalem, et materialem intelligi datum Ecclesiae, probat erudite Sanderus de clave David, lib. 2. cap. 11. ex D. Augustino contra Faustum.

11 IT IS PROVED fourthly by D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. for since the Church is a well-ordered Monarchy, it ought to have a power proportioned to amending the fallen and coercing rebels and the contumacious; for so it is done in every rightly ordered Republic; and no crime is more pernicious than heresy. As therefore the Physician, when a soothing remedy does not help, uses the knife and fire; so in our matter the Lord, the best founder and institutor of the Church, gave arms for governance, and remedies apt for preserving the body of the Church unharmed, that when soothing remedies do not avail, they may be cut with the sword of excommunication and burned with a punishment worthy of their most pestilent disease.

> PROBATUR quarto a D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. nam cum Ecclesia sit Monarchia bene ordinata, debuit habere potestatem proportionatam ad emendandos lapsos, et coercendos rebelles, et contumaces; sic enim in omni recta Republica fit; nullum autem scelus est perniciosius haeresi. Sicut igitur Medicus, non iuvante linitivo, utitur ferro, et igne; ita in re nostra Dominus optimus institutor, et fundator Ecclesiae dedit arma ad regimen, et remedia apta ad corpus Ecclesiae incolume servandum, ut lenientibus non proficientibus, scindantur gladio excommunicationis, urantur poena, digna eorum pestilentissimo morbo.

12 THIS power is FOUNDED on Matth. 16. where it is said to Peter: Whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, it shall be bound also in heaven, etc. And Matth. 18. If he will not hear the Church, let him be to thee as the heathen and publican, as D. Bonaventure teaches, eadem dist. p. 2. quaest. 5.

> FUNDATUR haec potestas Matth. 16. ubi dicitur Petro: Quodcumque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum et in caelis, etc. Et Matth. 18. Si Ecclesiam non audierit, sit tibi sicut ethnicus, et publicanus, ut docet D. Bonavent. eadem dist. p. 2. quaest. 5.

13 THAT THIS power was prefigured by Phinees, son of the Pontiff, Numer. 25. when he pierced the fornicating sacrilegious Idolaters, and that work was by God rewarded to him with the supreme priesthood, D. Bonaventure notes on the place secondly cited, Lucas 22. from the Interlinear Gloss. Nor can this power be denied without error, as Suarez admonishes num. 21. Cast. Lugo num. 10. disp. 21. sect. 1. and it is evident from the definition of Innocent IV. in the Council of Lyons, and cited in cap. Ad Apostolicae, de sentent. et re iudicata, in 6.

HANC potestatem fuisse praeostensam a Phinees, filio Pontificis Numer. 25. cum fornicarios sacrilegos Idolatras confodit, et fuit a Deo illi sacerdotio summo opus illud remuneratum, notat D. Bonavent. ad locum secundo allegatum Lucae 22. ex Glossa Interlineari. Neque absque errore haec potestas potest negari, ut admonent Suarez num. 21. Cast. Lugo num. 10. disp. 21. sect. 1. et constat ex definitione Innocentii IV. in Concilio Lugdun. et relata in cap. Ad Apostolicae, de sentent. et re iudicata, in 6.

14 With these means of D. Bonaventure all the more recent authors make use.

His D. Bonaventurae mediis utuntur omnes Recentiores.

15 YOU OBJECT first. In Scripture we are only commanded to avoid heretics, not to kill them: Ad Titum 3. secunda Timoth. 2. prima Thessal. 3. and prima Ioan. Hence Christ did not punish the disciples withdrawing from him, but said to the others: Will you also go away? Ioan. 6. as Cyprian also noted, epist. 55. Matth. 18. however commands only separation from the heretic: Let him be to thee as the Ethnic.

OBIICIES primo. In Scriptura solum praecipimur haereticos vitare, non autem occidere: Ad Titum 3. secunda Timoth. 2. prima, Thessal. 3. et prima Ioan. Unde Christus recedentes a se discipulos non punivit, sed caeteris dixit: Numquid et vos vultis abire? Ioan. 6. ut notavit etiam Cyprianus epist. 55. Matth. 18. vero solam separationem ab haeretico iubet: Sit tibi sicut Ethnicus.

16 The holy Doctor RESPONDS to that place of John, that Christ said this lest he seem to flatter the disciples, and he was unwilling to hold them by force and necessity in the following of him of such great perfection, of which the others had shown themselves unworthy and incapable. He did not dismiss them, therefore, to the world, or to errors; but he was unwilling to use coercive power.

RESPONDET S. Doctor ad illum locum Ioannis, id dixisse Christum, ne videretur blandiri discipulis, et noluisse eos vi, et necessitate detinere in sua tantae perfectionis sequela, cuius non dignos, et capaces se ostenderant alii. Non eos dimisit ergo ad mundum, aut ad errores; sed noluit uti potestate coactiva.

17 To that of Matth., the holy Doctor observes in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. fundamento primo, that Christ immediately added: Amen I say to you: Whatsoever you shall bind upon earth, shall be bound also in heaven, giving them the power of punishing those whom he had said were to be cast out with anathema. Wherefore even the Apostles indeed applied separation, but also coercive punishments. The holy Doctor observes further, in Hexaëmer. serm. 16. that the Church could not always coerce rebels, because she lay under Pagan Princes; but in the time of Constantine she raised her head, and began to use her power against heretics, decreeing in the Council of Nicaea that the Arians be punished.

Ad illud Matth. observat S. Doctor in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. fundamento primo*, Christum statim subiecisse:* Amen dico vobis: Quaecumque alligaveritis super terram, erunt ligata et in caelis*, dando eis potestatem puniendi eos, quos anathemate proiectos dixerat. Itaque etiam Apostoli separationem quidem adhibuere, sed poenas etiam coercitivas. Observat autem amplius S. Doctor in* Hexaëmer. serm. 16. Ecclesiam non potuisse semper rebelles coercere, quia sub Principibus Paganis iacebat; sed tempore Constantini, caput erexit, et coepit uti potestate contra haereticos, decernens in Concilio Nicaeno, ut Arriani punirentur.

18 YOU OBJECT secondly, Lucas 11. to James and John, wishing to call down fire from heaven against the Samaritans, Christ objected.

OBIICIES secundo Lucae 11. Iacobo, et Ioanni, volentibus ignem e caelo rapere contra Samaritas, obstitit Christus.

19 The holy Doctor RESPONDS that at that place those Disciples were led by a bitter, not a reasonable, zeal, against those who were still infidels and not yet instructed. Then he adds that Christ wished to admonish them, that he willed in that first coming of his to show humility and patience toward blind infidels, as Jerome interprets, ad Algasiam.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor illo loco, Discipulos illos, ductos esse zelo amaro, non rationabili, in illos, qui adhuc infideles nondum instructi erant. Deinde addit, voluisse Christum eos admonere, se velle in illo primo suo adventu humilitatem, et patientiam in infideles caecos prae se ferre, ut interpretatur Hieronymus ad Algasiam.

20 YOU OBJECT thirdly, Matth. 13. the Lord reproved the servants wishing to pluck up the Zizania: but heretics are understood, as Cyprian expounds, Lib. 3. epist. 3. Chrysost. and Ambr. in Maldonatus.

> OBIICIES tertio Matth. 13. servos reprehendit Dominus volentes Zizania evellere: Intelliguntur autem haeretici, ut exponunt Cyprianus Lib. 3. epist. 3. Chrysost. et Ambr. apud Maldonatum.

21 IT IS ANSWERED from D. Bonaventure, de sex alis Seraph. cap. 7. and sermone Dominica prima in Quadragesima, that by the Zizania are understood all the impious whatever, and not heretics: whence also D. Augustine, who had understood heretics by it, afterwards retracted it, Lib. 2. Retract. cap. 18. where from Cyprian he understands all the wicked. The same think Gregory, Ambrose, Theophylactus, in Cornelius there; and as he does not command thieves, adulterers, etc. to be killed, so neither heretics; and yet he does not prohibit all these from being rooted up: he only prohibits that they be taken away rashly, lest with the wicked the good also. Lest gathering the zizania, you root up also the wheat together with it, as D. August. warns, Lib. 3. cont. epist. Parmen. cap. 2.

> RESPONDETUR ex D. Bonavent. de sex alis Seraph. cap. 7. et sermone Dominica prima in Quadragesima, intelligi per Zizania impios quoscunque, et non haereticos: Unde et D. Augustinus, qui per ea haereticos intellexerat, postea retractavit Lib. 2. Retract. cap. 18. ubi ex Cypriano intelligit omnes malos. Idem sentiunt Gregorius, Ambrosius, Theophylactus apud Cornelium ibi; Et sicut non iubet, occidi fures, adulteros, etc. ita neque haereticos; neque tamen omnes hos prohibet exstirpari: solum prohibet ne auferantur incaute cum malis etiam boni. Ne forte colligentes zizania, eradicetis simul et triticum, ut monet D. August. Lib. 3. cont. epist. Parmen. cap. 2.

22 From what has been said they infer that this power of the Church extends even to those who were baptized in infancy and fall away from the faith. Nay, the Fourth Council of Toledo, can. 55. includes even those baptized out of fear.

> Ex dictis inferunt, potestatem hanc Ecclesiae extendi ad eos etiam, qui in infantia baptizati, a fide deficiunt. Imo Concilium Toletanum 4. can. 55. etiam metu baptizatos includit.

23 THEY INFER secondly, that the sons of heretics can be led to baptism per se. See Suarez 3. part. Tom. 3. disp. 25. sect. 3. I said per se, because per accidens say the opposite, if it be certain that those boys are to be brought up by their parents in heresy; for then it would redound to the injury of Baptism. See Suarez here disp. 25. sect. 5. and Card. Lugo disp. 21. sectione 1.

> INFERUNT secundo, posse filios haereticorum per se ad baptismum deduci. Vide Suarez 3. part. Tom. 3. disp. 25. sect. 3. Dixi per se, quia per accidens oppositum dic, si certum sit, illos pueros educandos a parentibus in haeresi; tunc enim in iniuriam Baptismi redundaret. Vide Suarez hic disp. 25. sect. 5. et Card. Lugo disp. 21. sectione 1.

Question VIII: On the other means the Church uses against heretics, by forbidding their books

De alio medio, quo utitur Ecclesia contra haereticos prohibendo eorum Libros.

CONCLAMANT haeretici ululantes contra hoc Antidotum sane efficax, quorum querimonias refellunt Bellarminus Lib. 3. de Laicis, cap. 20. Suarez disp. 20. sect. 2.

2 Nor is this remedy new in the Church, for in Actorum 19. many brought vain and superstitious Books to be burned.

Non est autem novum in Ecclesia hoc remedium, nam Actorum 19. multi attulerunt Libros vanos, et superstitiosos comburendos.

3 St. CLEMENS, Lib. 1. constitut. Apost. cap. 7. reports that the Books of the Gentiles and of false prophets were prohibited to the faithful by the Apostles; and in the Council of Nicaea, by the testimony of Nicephorus, Lib. 8. cap. 18. it was decreed that the Books of Arius be burned, and Constantine added the penalty of death for those who concealed them.

S. CLEMENS Lib. 1. constitut. Apost. cap. 7. refert Libros Gentilium, et falsorum prophetarum fuisse fidelibus ab Apostolis prohibitos, et in Concilio Nicaeno, teste Nicephoro, Lib. 8. cap. 18. statutum est, ut Arrii Libri cremarentur, et Constantinus addidit poenam capitis eos occultantibus.

4 IN the Fourth Council of Carthage, can. 16. it is permitted to Bishops alone, in case of necessity, to read the Books of heretics; and Theodosius, in the Lege damnato, Cod. de haereticis, by the precept of the Council of Ephesus, ordered the Books of Nestorius to be burned. Leo I. epist. 91. and Gelasius, in cap. Sancta Romana, dist. 15. prohibited the Books of heretics; and Leo adds that those Bishops are to be judged heretics who would permit Books of this kind in the houses of the faithful. The same is evident from the Fifth Synod, act. 1. and by L. quicunque, §. nulli, and §. omnes, Cod. de haeret. all the Books of Eutyches are prohibited and adjudged to the fire, by the precept of the Council of Chalcedon, act. 3. See the Allegati Doctores reporting other things, with Basilio Pontio in Appendice, post Lib. 12. de matrimonio, cap. 2.

IN Concil. Carthag. 4. can. 16. solis Episcopis permittitur in casu necessitatis haereticorum Libros legere, et Theodosius in Lege damnato, Cod. de haereticis, e praescripto Conc. Ephesini, iussit comburi Nestorii Libros. Leo I. epist. 91. et Gelasius in cap. Sancta Romana, dist. 15. Libros haereticorum prohibuere; et addit Leo, haereticos censendos illos Episcopos, qui huiusmodi Libros in domibus fidelium permitterent. Idem constat ex quinta Synodo, act. 1. et L. quicunque, §. nulli, et §. omnes, Cod. de haeret. prohibentur, et igni adiudicantur omnes Libri Eutychetis, ex praecepto Conc. Chalced. act. 3. Vide Allegatos Doctores alia referentes cum Basilio Pontio in Appendice, post Lib. 12. de matrimonio, cap. 2.

5 The RATIO is from D. Bonaventure, in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 3. because sincere instruction is necessary to us for salvation and the knowledge of God; for we draw spiritual things through corporeal ones. Two senses are chiefly those by which the discipline to be learned is taken in, Sight, and Hearing. And indeed by sight we read the book of creatures, and therefore we rise up into the knowledge of God. For the invisible things of God, being understood by those things that are made, are seen, Rom. 1. We also read Books cut with letters; and truly the Books of Scripture are most apt for this: whence also Christ, Lucae 24. He opened their sense, that they might understand the scriptures. See therefore on the contrary how much books teaching heresies can harm; for they are more subversive and pestilential, since they contain sacrilegious doctrines. For these move most powerfully, since they are more diligently elaborated, and they endure. Hence the Gentiles cautiously prohibited Books adverse to their sects, as Valerius Maximus reports, Lib. 1. cap. 1. and Tullius, Lib. 1. de natura Deorum.

RATIO est ex D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 3. quia necessaria est nobis ad salutem, et Dei cognitionem, instructio sincera; nam spiritualia per corporea haurimus. Duo autem sunt praecipue sensus disciplinae capiendae, Visus, et Auditus, Et quidem visu legimus Librum creaturarum, et ideo in cognitionem Dei assurgimus. Invisibilia enim Dei, per ea quae facta sunt, intellecta, conspiciuntur, Rom. 1. Legimus etiam Libros excusos; et sane Scripturae Libri aptissimi sunt: Unde et Christus Lucae 24. Aperuit illis sensum, ut intelligerent scripturas. Vide igitur e contrario, quam nocere possint libri, docentes haereses; sunt enim subversiores, pestilentes, cum doctrinas sacrilegas contineant. Hi enim vehementissime movent, cum sint diligentius elaborati, et permaneant. Hinc caute Gentiles prohibebant Libros, suis sectis adversos, ut referunt Valerius Maximo Lib. 1. cap. 1. et Tullius Lib. 1. de natura Deorum.

6 Let the Heretics not grieve that the reading of the Books of the Gentiles is permitted to us, for the Books of Heretics are adorned for that very end with specious titles and doctrines, to seduce: but the Books of the Gentiles report errors already outworn and exploded, which are not so dangerous. Indeed certain Books of the Jews and Turks are prohibited, in which there are some things more dangerous.

NEQUE doleant Haeretici, permitti nobis Lectiones Librorum Gentilium, nam Libri Haereticorum sunt eum in finem speciosis titulis et doctrinis adornati ad seducendum: Libri vero Gentilium iam antiquatos, et explosos errores, qui non sunt tam periculosi, recensent. Prohibentur sane aliqui Libri Iudaeorum, et Turcarum, in quibus sunt aliqua periculosiora.

7 But the Books of Heretics are prohibited in the Bull of the Supper which contain heresy, or treat of religion.

PROHIBENTUR autem in Bulla Coenae Libri Haereticorum, haeresim continentes, vel de religione tractantes.

8 He includes, moreover, there also one epistle of a heretic, as Suarez brings forward, disp. 20. sect. 2. Hugolinus in him, Megala 3. p. lib. 3. cap. 1. num. 55. Farinacius de haeresi quaest. 180. num. 70.

Includit vero ibidem etiam unam epistolam haeretici, afferunt Suarez disp. 20. sect. 2. Hugolinus apud eum, Megala 3. p. lib. 3. cap. 1. num. 55. Farinacius de haeresi quaest. 180. num. 70.

9 OTHERS, however, deny it with sufficient probability: Sanchez 42 cap. 10. num. 20. Durandus, and Bonacina, whom Palao reports and follows, primo Tract. 4. disp. 2. part. 10. Layman, Pottel, and Sousa, whom Diana brings forward and seems to approve, p. 1. Tract. de Bulla Cruciata, resol. 34. and Card. Lugo disp. 21. sect. 2. §. 1. The ratio is, because odia are rather to be restricted. It is confirmed, because although it is not licit to print books without the author's name on sacred subjects, the prohibition of the Council of Trent sess. 4. remaining in force, usage itself has nevertheless declared that these small writings are not contained under that decree, as Azorius testifies, Tract. 1. Lib. 8. cap. 8. cap. 17. quaestio 4. Lugo num. 33.

ALII tamen satis probabiliter negant; Sanchez 42 cap. 10. num. 20. Durandus, et Bonacina, quos refert, et sequitur Palao primo Tract. 4. disp. 2. part. 10. Layman, Pottel, et Sousa, quos affert, et videtur approbare Diana p. 1. Tract. de Bulla Cruciata, resol. 34. et Card. Lugo disp. 21. sect. 2. §. 1. Ratio est, quia odia sunt potius restringenda. Confirmatur, quia quamvis non liceat libros sine authoris nomine imprimere de rebus sacris, stante prohibitione Concilii Trident. sess. 4. has tamen parvas scripturas sub illo decreto non contineri usus ipse declaravit, ut testatur Azorius Tract. 1. Lib. 8. cap. 8. cap. 17. quaestio 4. Lugo num. 33.

10 ALL persons, however, are included in this prohibition, according to the decree of Urban VIII. de motu proprio, 2. Aprilis 1631.

OMNES autem personae includuntur in hac prohibitione, iuxta decretum Urbani VIII. de motu proprio, 2. Aprilis 1631.

11 But those are excommunicated who read, or retain, print, or in any way whatsoever defend them, for any cause whatever, publicly or secretly, by any device or pretext. See Cardinal Lugo, and what was said Tomo 4. disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. ad proposit. ultimam.

Excommunicantur autem legentes, aut retinentes, imprimentes, seu quomodolibet defendentes ex quavis causa publice, vel occulte, quovis ingenio, vel colore. Vide Cardinalem Lugo, et ea, quae dicta sunt Tomo 4. disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. ad proposit. ultimam.

Question IX: Whether we are bound to avoid the conversation of heretics

1 Soto ASSERTS it, 4. dist. 25. quaest. 1. art. 1. et 3. and dist. 20. quaest. 1. art. 5.

An teneamur haereticorum conversationem vitare.

ASSERIT Soto 4. dist. 25. quaest. 1. art. 1. et 3. et dist. 20. quaest. 1. art. 5.

2 The COMMON opinion, however, denies it, as long as the heretic has not been juridically declared and denounced, because the Council of Constance indulged communication with all excommunicates, except those denounced by name and public strikers of clerics. So the authors in Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 9. So Henriquez with others, Lib. 13. cap. 5. Suarez 3. p. Tract. 5. disp. 9. sect. 2. Toletus Lib. 1. summae, cap. 9. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 5.

COMMUNIS tamen sententia id negat, quam diu haereticus non est iuridice declaratus, et denunciatus, quia Concilium Constant. indulsit, communicare cum omnibus excommunicatis, exceptis nominatim denunciatis, et publicis clericorum percussoribus. Ita authores apud Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 9. Sic cum aliis Henriquez Lib. 13. cap. 5. Suarez 3. p. Tract. 5. disp. 9. sect. 2. Toletus Lib. 1. summae, cap. 9. Tannerus disp. 1. quaest. 9. dub. 5.

3 Whence it is to be noted that the Seraphic Doctor, in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. q. 1. asserts the opinion of Soto, but before the Council of Constance: at that time, however, it was the common opinion.

Ex quo adnotandum est, Seraphicum in 4. dist. 18. p. 2. q. 1. asserere sententiam Soti, sed ante Concilium Constantiense: Tunc autem erat communis sententia.

4 The DIFFICULTY, however, is: whether it is sufficient for someone to be declared a heretic; or whether it is also required that he be declared excommunicate.

DIFFICULTAS vero est; num satis sit, aliquem declarari haereticum; an vero exigatur etiam, ut declaretur excommunicatus.

5 TO ME it seems sufficient that he be declared a heretic; for excommunication is infallibly linked to heresy. So both Soto, Medina, Henriquez, and others, whom Sanchez reports, Lib. 2. cap. 9. who however holds the opposite with others; and Suarez, de censuris, disput. 9. thinks it probable with Card. Lugo disp. 22. sect. 1.

MIHI satis videtur esse, declarari haereticum; nam haeresi est infallibilitet nexa excommunicatio. Ita uterque Sotus, Medina, Henriquez, et alii, quos refert Sanchez Lib. 2. cap. 9. qui tamen oppositum tenet cum aliis; et Suarez de censuris, disput. 9. probabilem putat cum Card. Lugo disp. 22. sect. 1.

6 WE MAY also communicate with them in sacred things, namely by assisting at Mass together with a heretic. So all the Doctors in Sanchez, dicto cap. 9. against Basilium Poncium, in Appendice de matrimonio Catholici cum haeretico, cap. 9.

> POSSUMUS etiam eis in sacris communicare, nempe assistendo missae simul cum haeretico. Ita omnes Doctores apud Sanchez dicto cap. 9. contra Basilium Poncium in Appendice de matrimonio Catholici cum haeretico, cap. 9.

7 WE MAY also receive the Sacraments from a heretic, in the manner of our Church, in necessity, unless scandal arise from another source. See Sanchez num. 10.

> POSSUMUS etiam ab haeretico Sacramenta, more Ecclesiae nostrae, sumere in necessitate, nisi aliunde scandalum surgat. Vide Sanchez num. 10.

8 Many other things on this matter Sanchez discusses, Lib. 2. in Decal. c. 9. Card. Lugo disp. 14. sect. 5. §. 5. and d. 22. sect. 2.

> Multa alia de hac re discutiunt Sanchez Lib. 2. in Decal. c. 9. Card. Lugo disp. 14. sect. 5. §. 5. et d. 22. sect. 2.

9 I shall touch upon SOME doubts which I find discussed in the Seraphic Doctor. The first is: Whether marriage with a heretic, or heretic woman, is valid.

> ALIQUA dubia tangam, quae apud Seraphicum invenio discussa. Primum est: An matrimonium cum haeretico, vel haeretica, sit validum.

10 On these, Thomas Sanchez Lib. VII. de matrim. disp. 72. Ferrarius, opusc. de matrim. Catholici cum haeretico. Basilius Poncius in his Appendice, post Lib. XII. de matrim. In common, however, the Doctors of Law and the Theologians assert with D. Bonaventure, 4. dist. 39. quaest. 1. whom Sanchez reports, num. 2. and Poncius, and it is gathered from cap. decernit de haereticis, in 6.

> De his Thomas Sanchez Lib. VII. de matrim. disp. 72. Ferrarius opusc. de matrim. Catholici cum haeretico. Basilius Poncius in sua Appendice, post Lib. XII. de matrim. Communiter vero asserunt Iuris Doctores, et Theologi cum D. Bonavent. 4. dist. 39. quaest. 1. quos refert Sanchez num. 2. et Poncius, et colligitur ex cap. decernit de haereticis, in 6.

11 But if the heretic promise to convert, and there be moral certitude, the marriage will be not only valid but even licit, as is had in the C. Chalcedonensi cap. 14. So Hurtado disp. 76. §. 229. Sà, under the word matrim. num. 8. Card. Lugo disp. 22. sect. 1. Although Sanchez denies it, disp. 72. num. 4. Poncius in Appendice, capite 8.

> Quod si haereticus spondeat converti, et sit moralis certitudo, non modo validum, sed etiam licitum erit matrimonium, ut habetur in C. Chalcedonensi cap. 14. Ita Hurtado disp. 76. §. 229. Sà verbo matrim. num. 8. Card. Lugo disp. 22. sect. 1. Tametsi neget Sanchez disp. 72. num. 4. Poncius in Appendice, capite 8.

12 The second is, whether a spouse may put away a spouse fallen into heresy; and indeed it was defined in the C. Trident. sess. 24. cap. 5. that marriage is not on that account dissolved.

> Secundum est, an possit coniux dimittere coniugem lapsum in haeresim; et quidem non ob id solui matrimonium definitum est in C. Trident. sess. 24. cap. 5.

13 That they may be separated, however, is certain; for besides fornication, the Tridentine defines other causes for which they may be separated, sess. 24. can. 8. The same is evident from cap. Quanto, de divortiis, and from cap. litteras at the end, and cap. transmissa, de restit. spoliat. and cap. 1. ut lite non contestata.

Quod vero possit separari, certum est; nam praeter fornicationem alias causas definit Tridentinum, ob quas possunt separari sess. 24. can. 8. Idem constat ex cap. Quanto, de divortiis, et ex cap. litteras in fine, et cap. transmissa, de restit. spoliat. et cap. 1. ut lite non contestata.

14 The sectarian heretics urge the place of Matth. 5. and 19. But I say to you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, excepting the cause of fornication, maketh her to commit adultery: and he that shall marry her that is put away, committeth adultery.

Haeretici sectarii urgent locum Matth. 5. et 19. Ego autem dico vobis, quia omnis qui dimiserit uxorem suam, excepta fornicationis causa, facit eam moechari: et qui dimissam duxerit, adulterat.

15 Cardinal Lugo RESPONDS, disp. 22. sect. 3. with Sanchez Lib. X. disp. 15. cap. 14. Bellarmine Lib. I. de matrim. cap. 14. that Christ speaks of perpetual separation, and by his own authority, without the consent of the wife put away.

Respondet Cardin. Lugo disp. 22. sect. 3. cum Sanchez Lib. X. disp. 15. cap. 14. Bellarminus Lib. I. de matrim. cap. 14. Christum loqui de separatione perpetua, et propria auctoritate, sine consensu coniugis dimissae.

16 This exposition, however, as to his own authority, D. Bonaventure refutes, in 4. dist. 35. quaest. 3. where he shows from usage that the judgment of the Church is necessary.

Hanc tamen expositionem, quoad propriam auctoritatem, refellit D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 35. quaest. 3. ubi ex usu ostendit, necessarium esse iudicium Ecclesiae.

17 Therefore the holy Doctor RESPONDS, quaest. 1. ad 5. that fornication is there expressed as the cause of separating himself perpetually, because among the causes it is evident, since it is against the faith directly belonging to marriage; but the remaining causes he holds are to be litigated: And that he speaks of perpetual separation is proved; for there, cap. 5. he had premised the use of divorce, which was toward perpetual separation. The holy Doctor observes also that the divorce of the Church now used is different from that old repudium. See the holy Doctor, q. 1. On these things, however, I shall treat in the Tractate on marriage.

Respondet igitur S. Doctor quaest. 1. ad 5. exprimi ibi fornicationem, ut causam separandi se perpetuo, quia inter causas est evidens, cum sit contra fidem directam matrimonii; reliquas vero causas diffutiendas censet: Et quod loquatur de separatione perpetua, probatur; nam ibi cap. 5. praemisit usum repudii, quod erat ad separationem perpetuam. Observat etiam S. Doctor divortium Ecclesiae nunc usitatum, diversum esse a repudio illo veteri. Vide S. Doctorem q. 1. De his vero, Tractatu de matrimonio agam.

Question X: What excommunication is inflicted upon heretics

1 We must now treat of the punishments of heretics, and first of the spiritual ones.

Quae excommunicatio haereticis infligatur.

Iam de poenis haereticorum agendum, et primo de spiritualibus.

2 The first and most ancient spiritual punishment of heretics is excommunication, as is clear from the chapter Achaina, 24. q. 1, the chapter Ad abolendum, the chapter Excommunicamus, 1. and 2. de haeret., the chapter Quicunque, eodem titulo in 6., the chapter Noverit.

Prima, et antiquissima haereticorum poena spiritualis, est excommunicatio, ut constat ex capite Achaina*, 24. quaest. 1. cap.* Ad abolendum*, cap.* Excommunicamus*, 1. et 2.* de haeret. cap. Quicunque, eodem titulo in 6. cap.

> Noverit.

3 Moreover, in the Bulla Coenae an excommunication is imposed, and renewed yearly, reserved to the Supreme Pontiff. Now this is the most ancient of all excommunications, as Azorius notes, Tomo I, lib. VIII, cap. 10, quaestio 1.

> Porro in Bulla Coenae imponitur, et quotannis renovatur excommunicatio, summo Pontifici reservata. Est autem haec antiquissima omnium excommunicatio, ut notat Azorius Tomo I. lib. VIII. cap. 10. quaestio 1.

4 It is incurred for external heresy, not for mental heresy, as the Doctors of Law teach commonly, whom Sanchez reports, Lib. II, cap. 8, num. 2. The Church does not judge of merely occult things, that is, of merely internal ones; but the external heretic, though occult, incurs it, as is taught commonly, as reported by Hurt., sect. 4, n. 36.

> Incurritur autem ob haeresin exteriorem, non ob mentalem, ut docent communiter Iuris Doctores, quos refert Sanchez Lib. II. cap. 8. num. 2. Ecclesia etiam de mere occultis non iudicat, seu de mere internis; haereticus vero externus, sed occultus incurrit istam, ut docent communiter apud Hurt. sect. 4. n. 36.

5 Yet Arez, disp. 21, sect. 2, reports that some held that in general censures are not incurred for an occult crime, which Croufers teaches concerning heresy in reg. S. Francisci, cap. 7, sect. 4, fol. 518, as reported by Diana, 6. parte, Tract. 6, miscel. resol. 51. But a great question concerns absolution from heresy, which question depends on knowing the quality of this censure.

> Arez tamen disp. 21. sect. 2. refert aliquos tenuisse de censuris in genere non incurri ob crimen occultum, quod de haeresi docet Croufers in reg. S. Francisci, cap. 7. sect. 4. fol. 518. apud Dianam 6. parte, Tract. 6. miscel. resol. 51. Magna vero quaestio est de absolutione ab haeresi, quae quaestio pendet ex cognitione qualitatis huius censurae.

6 I shall therefore set out the Anathema hurled by the Bulla Coenae against heretics, according to the modern exemplars of Urban VIII, and also according to the Bulls of Paul V and Gregory XV. Moreover, from the aforesaid sentences, no one can be absolved by anyone other than the Roman Pontiff, unless he be in articulo mortis; nor even then, unless he gives caution of standing by the mandates of the Church and of making satisfaction, even under pretext of any faculties and indults whatsoever granted by us and the said See, and by the decrees of any Council, to any Ecclesiastical secular persons, and of any Orders, even Mendicant, even military Regulars, even those endowed with Episcopal or any other greater dignity, etc. See disp. 17, quaest. 10, sect. 3, tom. 4, de actibus humanis.

> Referam igitur Bullae Coenae Anathema iactum contra haereticos, iuxta exemplaria moderna Urbani VIII. iuxta Bullas etiam Pauli V. et Gregorii XV. Caeterum a praedictis sententiis, nullus per alium, quam per Romanum Pontificem, nisi in mortis articulo constitutus; nec etiam tunc, nisi de stando Ecclesiae mandatis, et satisfaciendo cautione praestita, absolui possit, etiam praetextu quarumcumque facultatum, et indultorum, quibuscumque personis Ecclesiasticis secularibus, et quorumvis Ordinum, etiam Mendicantium, etiam militarium Regularibus, etiam Episcopali, vel alia maiori dignitate praeditis, etc. per nos, et dictam sedem, ac cuiusvis Concily decreta concessorum, etc. Vide disp. 17. quaest. 10. sect. 3. tom. 4. de actibus humanis.

7 A grave question however arises, because in the Council of Trent, sess. 24, cap. 6, Bishops are granted the faculty of absolving from occult heresy and other occult cases reserved to the Apostolic See.

Gravis autem oritur quaestio, quia in C. Tridentino sess. 24. cap. 6. conceditur Episcopis facultas absolvendi ab haeresi occulta, et aliis occultis casibus Apostolicae sedi reservatis.

8 Two celebrated opinions exist: The first is that the faculty granted to Bishops by the Tridentine Council still exists, and was not removed by the Bulla Coenae: Sanchez reports the Doctors, Lib. I, Decal., cap. 21, who admits that opinion to be probable. Others are reported by Diana, p. p., Tract. de Absol. ab haeresi, resol. 2, to whom he adds others in 4. p., tract. 4, miscel. resol. 239, and 5. p., tract. 13, miscel. resol. 43. Suarez called it probable, Tract. de censuris, disp. 21, sect. 3, though afterwards he attacks it. Hurtado defends it most strongly, disp. 84, sect. 2, §. 11, and Fagundez, lib. I, cap. 15, reporting twenty Doctors on the second precept of the Church, lib. VIII, cap. 8; Bass., V. Haeresis, num. 18, reporting many.

Geminae opiniones celebres extant: Prima est, facultatem a Trident. Concilio concessam Episcopis adhuc exstare, nec esse Bulla Coenae sublatam: Doctores refert Sanchez Lib. I. Decal. cap. 21. qui eam sententiam probabilem fatetur. Alios refert Diana p. p. Tract. de Absol. ab haeresi, resol. 2. quibus alios addit 4. p. tract. 4. miscel. resol. 239. et 5. p. tract. 13. miscel. resol. 43. Eam probabilem dixit Suarez Tract. de censuris, disp. 21. sect. 3. licet postea impugnet. Eam acerrime defendit Hurtado disp. 84. sect. 2. §. 11. et Fagundez lib. I. cap. 15. referens viginti Doctores de secundo praecept. Eccles. lib. VIII. cap. 8. Bass. V. Haeresis, num. 18. multos referens.

9 The second opinion asserts that the faculty was taken from the Bishops by the Bulla Coenae.

Secunda sententia asserit, ablatam esse Episcopis a Bulla Coenae facultatem.

10 Navarr. holds this, summa Latina nova, cap. 27, num. 275, adding that Pius V and Gregory XIII so declared; Peña, in directorio Inquisit., 3. p., quaest. 92, com. 141, saying it was so often declared in the supreme Roman General Inquisition; and Azorius says Clement VIII so declared; Suarez says the Congregation of the Most Eminent Cardinals so declared. Many others agree, as reported by Diana, and Castrum Palaeum, Tract. 4, disp. 4, p. 3, § 1.

Hanc tenent Navar. summa Latina nova, cap. 27. num. 275. addens ita declarasse Pium V. et Gregorium XIII. Peña in directorio Inquisit. 3. p. quaest. 92. com. 141. dicens, ita saepe declaratum esse in suprema Generali Inquisitione Romana, et Azorius ait, ita declarasse Clementem VIII. Suarez dicit ita declarasse Congregationem Eminentissimorum Cardinalium. Consentiunt alii plurimi apud Dianam, et Castrum Palaum Tract. 4. disp. 4. p. 3. § 1.

11 Cardinal Lugo, disp. 23, sect. 3, §. 1, thus reconciles the opinions: if a Bishop does not believe that the Pontiff wished to revoke the faculty, he may probably embrace the first opinion, which has so many, and therefore weighty, authors; but if he believes it, he must stand by the second opinion. He himself, however, testifies that he cannot agree with the first, because morally he is certain that the will of the Apostolic See is contrary. But Fagundez says Gregory XIII declared the opposite, and that this is not established by the S. Congr. Bass. adds that in the S. Congr. in the year 1639 it was permitted.

Cardinalis Lugo disp. 23. sect. 3. §. 1. sic concordat sententias. Si Episcopus non credat, voluisse Pontificem revocare facultatem, posse primam sententiam probabiliter amplecti, quae tot authores, adeoque graves habet; Si vero id credat, debere stare secundae sententiae. Ipse autem testatur, se non posse cum prima consentire, quia moraliter de voluntate Apostolicae Sedis contraria est certus. Enim vero Fagundez ait Gregor. XIII. oppositum declarasse, et de Sacr. Congr. non constare. Addit Bass. in S. Congr. anno 1639. fuisse permissam.

12 For my part it does not appear whence derogation was so immediately made from so great a Council; for what is said, Etiam si concessum virtute alicuius Concilii Generalis, does not sufficiently distinguish what was withdrawn from the Tridentine faculty; a later law speaking indistinctly and generally must be limited by the earlier one specially contrary to it, as Fagundez says, also praec. 2. eccl., lib. VIII, cap. 8.

> Equidem non apparet, unde tanto Concilio statim derogatum sit; nam quod dicitur. Etiam si concessum virtute alicuius Concily Generalis, non satis distinguitur facultati Tridentinae detractum; Lex autem posterior indistincte loquens, et generaliter, limitanda est per anteriorem, specialiter contrariam, ut ait Fagundez etiam praec. 2. eccl. lib. VIII. cap. 8.

13 He adds that nothing certain is established concerning the Oracles of Pius V, Gregory XIII, or Clement VIII, or of the former Congr., which would exclude even the Most Reverend who hold this faculty from the Council, which Lugo, n. 87. The distinction of Fagundez, that it was derogated in law but not in fact, is empty, because the law is uncertain.

> Addit, nil certi constare de Oraculis Pii V. Gregor. XIII. vel Clem. VIII. aut olim Congr. quae excluderent etiam Reverendissimos qui hanc facultatem a Concilio habent, quae is Lugo n. 87. Inanis autem est distinctio Fagundez, iure derogatum; non de facto, quia incertum est ius.

14 Included in this faculty are Prelates having quasi-episcopal power: thus Rodr., tomo 2, c. 10, and tom. p. 99, reg. quaest. 24, art. 16, and quaest. 61, art. 9; Henriq., lib. 4, de irreg., cap. 18; Sanchez, lib. 2, decis., cap. 11; Sayrus, lib. 11; Auil., de cens., p. 7, disp. 10; Flor. de mena, lib. 3, var. quaest. 23. For the Bulla Coenae does not take from them that faculty which they had before, as Fagundez says, num. 21.

> CONTINENTUR hac facultate Praelati, habentes potestatem quasi episcopalem: sic Rodr. tomo 2. c. 10. et tom. p. 99. reg. quaest. 24. art. 16. et quaest. 61. art. 9. Henriq. lib. 4. de irreg. cap. 18. Sanchez lib. 2. decis. cap. 11. Sayrus lib. 11. Auil. de cens. p. 7. disp. 10. Flor. de mena lib. 3. var. quaest. 23. Bulla enim Coenae eam facultatem eis non aufert, quam ante habebant, ut ait Fagundez num. 21.

15 These PRELATES, I say Ecclesiastical ones having a diocese, not regulars, as the authors cited note.

> PRAELATOS hos, dico Ecclesiasticos, habentes dioecesim, non regulares, ut notant relati.

16 That regular Prelates do not have this by law Suarez proclaims, lib. 4, de Poenit., disp. 30, sect. 2; Garc., de benef., p. 7, cap. 11; Armenda, addit. ad recopil. Nauar., tit. 18; lib. 7, de irreg.; Fagundez, num. 21. For before the Council they did not have that right, nor is it given them by the Council.

> PRAELATOS vero regulares non habere hoc a iure conclamant Suarez lib. 4. de Poenit. disp. 30. sect. 2. Garc. de benef. p. 7. cap. 11. Armenda addit. ad recopil. Nauar. tit. 18. lib. 7. de irreg. Fagundez num. 21. Neque enim ante Concil. id iuris habebant, nec eis a Concil. datur.

17 AS FOR privileges, our P. Bonagratia, published in the year 1667 at Cologne, reports: the privilege of Pius V given to the Preachers, that they may do what the Bishops also can, in this matter. And from Suarez, Tom. 4, de Relig., tract. 8, lib. 2, c. 20, and from Urban ab Ascens., tract. 2, cap. 3: regular Prelates can absolve their subjects from all censures from law or from man, even public ones, Clement IV and Sixtus IV excepted, namely the 4 cases of the Bulla Coenae: relapse into heresy, schism, falsification of Apostolic letters, carrying prohibited things to infidels. But the other cases, even simony, are included. See Com. Priv. mend., tit. Absol., where this is granted to Ministers, VICs, and Custodes. Sigism. de elect., num. 2, disp. 66, extends this to the contentious forum, an author of the Rota, per Pluteum, decis. 90 — except the cases of the S. Officii.

> QUOAD privilegia, refert P. Bonagratia noster, editus anno 1667. Coloniae; privilegium Pii V. datum Praedicatoribus, ut possint, quod et Episcopi, in hoc. Et e Suarez Tom. 4. de Relig. tract. 8. lib. 2. c. 20. et ex Urbano ab Ascens. tract. 2. cap. 3. Praelatos Regulares absolvere posse sibi subditos ab omnibus censuris a Iure, vel ab homine, etiam publicis, Clem. IV. et Sixti IV. Exceptis 4. Bullae Coenae. Relapsu scil. in haeresim, Schismate, Falsificatione litt. Apost. Delatione prohibitorum ad infideles. Caeteri vero casus etiam Simoniae includunt. Vide Com. Priu. mend. tit. Absol. ubi id conceditur Ministris, VIC. et Custodibus. Haec vero ad forum contentiosum extendit Sigism. de elect. num. 2. disp. 66. author Rotae, penes Pluteum decis. 90. excipe casus S. Officii.

18 MOREOVER Gregory XIII grants the 4 cases adduced together with the others to the Society of Jesus, as Suarez reports, loc. cit. But the ample privilege granted by Pius V to the Cassinese Prelates is reported by Tamburin., de cas. reserv., t. 1, §. 1; which privilege is extended to those sharing with them; that they may absolve all their own, even persevering novices, from all cases, censures, punishments incurred through them before, as well as after entry, and even those of the Bulla Coenae to be incurred. Hence, he says, this is extended to the notorious in the forum of conscience.

> PORRO et 4. casus allatos cum caeteris, concedit Greg. XIII. Societati Iesu, ut refert Suarez loc. cit. Amplum vero a Pio V. concessum Praelatis Cassin. refert Tamburin. de cas. reserv. t. 1. §. 1. quod privilegium extenditur ad participantes cum eis; ut possint absolvere omnes suos, etiam novitios perseverantes, ab omnibus casibus, censuris, poenis, per eos iam ante, quam post ingressum subitis, et incurrendis etiam Bullae Coenae. Hinc hoc extendi, ait, ad notorios in foro conscientiae.

19 BUT IF it were probable that the privileges of the Mendicants were not derogated by the year of the publication of the Bulla Coenae, as Rodriq. teaches, tomo 1, qq. quaest. 10, art. 9; Suarez, de relig., tom. 4, tract. 10, lib. 9, cap. 20, num. 18; Diana, p. 1, tract. 5, resol. 6; Sousa, in Bulla coenae, cap. 23, disp. 100; Bonagratia, V. Absolutio; Eligius Bassaeus, V. haeresis, num. 18, and others as reported by these, then approved Mendicant religious, according to the form of law, could absolve seculars from the cases of the Bulla Coenae, and even from heresy, provided it be occult; and this latter part is proved by them first from the concession of Urban IV, as reported by Rodriq., tom. 1, qq. quaest. 61, art. 3, Compend. Privileg. mendic.

> QUOD si probabile esset Privilegiis mendicantium per annum Bullae Coenae publicationem non esse derogatum, ut docent Rodriq. tomo 1. qq. quaest. 10. art. 9. Suarez de relig. tom. 4. tract. 10. lib. 9. cap. 20. num. 18. Diana p. 1. tract. 5. resol. 6. Sousa in Bulla coenae cap. 23. disp. 100. Bonagratia, V. Absolutio, Eligius Bassaeus, V. haeresis, num. 18. et alii apud hos, possent religiosi mendicantes approbati iuxta formam iuris absolvere saeculares a casibus Bullae Coenae, et etiam ab haeresi, modo sint occulti; et haec posterior pars probatur ab illis primo ex concessione Urbani IV. apud Rodriq. tom. 1. qq. quaest. 61. art. 3. Compend. Privil. mendic.

20 V. Absolutio, as to seculars, num. 19, in which he grants to the Carmelite Brothers that, by the license of the Ecclesiastical Prelates — that is, as Sixtus IV declared, provided confessors presented according to the form of law — they may hear the confessions of all Christ's faithful, on account of the devotion of those recurring to them, unless they have committed such things for which the Apostolic See would deservedly need to be consulted. But for a mere relapse, after heresy abjured before a Judge, the Apostolic See must be consulted, because Sixtus IV, as is had in the Monum. ordinum, concession 348, declares that only relapsed ones are to be sent to the Apostolic See, together with Schismatics, falsifiers of Apostolic letters, and those carrying forbidden things to infidels: Therefore, from occult heresy, that probability being posited, it would be lawful for the aforesaid to absolve.

> V. Absolutio, quo ad saeculares num. 19. in qua concedit fratribus Carmelitis, ut de licentia Praelatorum Ecclesiae, idest, ut declaravit Sixtus IV. modo sint confessores secundum formam iuris praesentati, possint audire confessiones omnium Christi fidelium, causa devotionis ad eos recurrentium, nisi talia commisissent, propter quae esset sedes Apostolica merito consulenda. Sed pro solo relapso, post abiuratam coram Iudice haeresim, est consulenda sedes Apostolica, quia Sixtus IV. pro ut habetur in Monum. ordinum, concessione 348. declarat, solos relapsos ad sedem Apostolicam destinandos una cum Schismaticis, et falsificantibus litteras Apostolicas, et deferentibus vetita ad infideles: Ergo ab haeresi occulta, posita illa probabilitate, praefatis liceret absolvere.

21 IT IS PROVED secondly from the concession of Sixtus IV made to the Order of Minors, as is had in the aforesaid Comp., num. 20 of the same title, in which he grants to those mentioned the faculty of hearing confessions, and of absolving from all cases of excommunication, suspension, interdict, and any irregularity whatsoever reserved to the Ordinary both by law and by man, as often as necessary, of dispensing, of commutting and relaxing any vows whatsoever, and of enjoining a salutary penance, just as the Diocesan can. But heresy, at least occult, or not yet brought to judgment, is reserved to the Ordinary both by the old law and by the new of Trent: Therefore. The minor is proved from the Tridentine, sess. 24, cap. 6, as Sanchez notes, lib. 4, moral., cap. 54, num. 27; Diana, part. 1, tract. 11, resol. 28, and p. 3, tract. 3, resol. 13. Further, he says, p. 4, tract. 4, resol. 239: it can rightly be said that the Bulla Coenae only prohibits the absolution of heresy and other crimes when they are public, and therefore does not derogate from the Tridentine faculty, which speaks of occult crimes.

> PROBATUR secundo ex concessione Sixti IV. facta Ordini minimorum, ut habetur in Comp. praedicto, num. 20. eiusdem tituli, qua dictis concedit facultatem confessiones audiendi, et ab omnibus casibus excommunicationis, suspensionis, interdicti, ac super quacunque irregularitate, Ordinario tam a Iure quam ab homine reservatis, toties quoties opus fuerit absolvendi, dispensandi, ac vota quaecunque permutandi, et relaxandi, et poenitentiam salutarem iniungendi, sicut potest Dioecesanus. At haeresis saltem occulta, seu in iudicium nondum deducta, tam iure antiquo, quam novo Tridentini, reservatur Ordinario: Ergo. Minor probatur ex Trident. sess. 24. cap. 6. ut notant Sanchez lib. 4. moral. cap. 54. num. 27. Diana part. 1. tract. 11. resol. 28. et p. 3. tract. 3. resol. 13. Amplius dicit p. 4. tract. 4. resol. 239. Recte dici posse, Bullam Coenae solum prohibere absolutionem haeresis, et aliorum criminum, quando publica sunt, et ideo non derogare facultati Tridentini, in qua de occultis criminibus sermo est.

22 Bassaeus ADDS at the place cited that the aforesaid opinion was seen and tolerated on 18 July 1629 in the Consistory of the S. Congregation of the Most Eminent Cardinals, and admitted even by many Doctors of S. Theology of the royal Academy of Douai.

> ADDIT bassaeus loco citato, praedictam sententiam, anno 1629. 18. Iulii in Consistorio S. Congregationis Eminentiss. Cardinalium visam, et toleratam, etiam a multis regalis Academiae Duacensis S. Theol. Doctoribus admissam.

23 But he says, V. Irregularitas, 11, num. 5, that that crime is occult which is not notorious by the sentence of a Judge, or by a confession of the crime made in judgment, or by fame among the people, in a College, or in the neighborhood; or if it has not yet been brought to the contentious forum; and Bassaeus says, from the sense of others, that this last seems to be the sense of the Council of Trent, loc. cit.

Occultum vero ait, V. Irregularitas, 11. num. 5. esse illud delictum, quod non est notorium Iudicis sententia, vel per confessionem criminis factam in iudicio; vel fama in populo, Collegio, aut Vicinia. Sive non adhuc deductum est ad forum contentiosum; atque hoc ultimum videtur Concilii Trident. loco cit. ait Bassaeus ex aliorum sensu.

24 BUT indeed a Decree has now been published by Alex. VII, in the year 1665, 24 Sept., in which among other propositions he condemns this one: The opinion asserting that the Bulla Coenae only prohibits the absolution of heresy and other crimes when they are public, and that this does not derogate from the Tridentine faculty, which speaks of occult crimes, was seen and tolerated on 18 July 1629 in the Consistory of the S. Congr. of the Most Eminent Cardinals.

ENIM vero nunc editum est Decretum ab Alex. VII. anno 1665. 24. sept. ubi inter alias propositiones damnat istam: Sententia asserens Bullam Coenae solum prohibere absolutionem haeresis, et aliorum criminum, quando publica sunt, et id non derogare facultati Tridentini, in quo de occultis criminibus sermo est, anno 1629. 18. Iulii in Consistorio S. Congr. Eminentiss. Cardinalium visa, et tolerata est.

25 YET P. Bonagratia says, V. Absolutio, as to seculars, num. 44, at the end, that the Pontiff makes no mention of revoking the privileges of the regulars, and that those privileges still remain in force; see what was said in session 11, quaest. 10, disp. 17, de conscientia, tom. 4, de actibus humanis.

AT tamen P. Bonagratia, V. Absolutio, quo ad saeculares num. 44. ad finem, Pontificem nullam facere mentionem revocandi privilegia regularium, ea, quae adhuc in vigore suo permanere, vide quae dicta sunt sessione 11. quaest. 10. disp. 17. de conscientia, tom. 4. de actibus humanis.

26 FOR MY PART, with the things reported from the mind of others, I judge that nothing is safe in these absolutions, and accordingly I do not embrace the first opinion. For since the value of absolution hangs on the will of the Pontiff, and that appears to me to refuse it, I exhort no one to use it in the meantime.

EGO his, ex aliorum mente relatis, arbitror nil tutum esse in his absolutionibus, atque adeo primam sententiam non amplector. Cum enim ex Pontificis voluntate pendeat absolutionis valor, et ea mihi appareat renuens, nullum exhortor, ut interim eis utatur.

Question XI: On the other spiritual punishments of heretics

1 Card. Lugo, disp. 23, sect. 4, Fagundez, and Suarez, at the places cited, enumerate THESE.

De aliis Poenis spiritualibus haereticorum.

HAS recenset Card. Lugo disp. 23. sect. 4. Fagundez, et Suarez locis cit.

2 THE FIRST is, that they be not buried in sacred ground: cap. Quicunque, de haeret. in 6. Yet Suar., de Cens., disp. 12, sect. 4, num. 13; Coninch., disp. 14, dub. 8, mem. 64; Hurtad., disp. 76, sect. 1, subsect. 1; Lugo, disp. 14, sect. 5, §. 5, num. 159, understand this text of those alone condemned by sentence. Whence he infers that now the Church is polluted only by the burial of those to be avoided.

PRIMA est, ne in loco sacro sepeliantur: cap. Quicunque, de haeret. in 6. Hunc tamen textum de solis damnatis sententia intelligunt Suar. de Cens. disp. 12. sect. 4. num. 13. Coninch. disp. 14. dub. 8. mem. 64. Hurtad. disp. 76. sect. 1. subsect. 1. Lugo disp. 14. sect. 5. §. 5. num. 159. Unde infert, nunc pollui Ecclesiam, solum per sepulturam vitandorum.

[3] The SECOND punishment is irregularity. See Sanch., lib. 1, cap. 15; Suar., disp. 21, sect. 5, and disp. 43, de Cens., sect. 1; Diana, 2. p., tract. 1, misc. R. 24, and others as reported by these.

> SECUNDA poena est irregularitas. Vide Sanch. lib. 1. cap. 15. Suar. disp. 21. sect. 5. et disp. 43. de Cens. sect. 1. Dianam 2. p. tract. 1. misc. R. 24. et alios apud hos.

[4] Yet others judge it probable that the occult heretic is not irregular. Diana reports them, p. 1, supr. R. 114, and 2. p. supra, resol. 24, and p. 4, tract. 1, de Irreg., resol. 46.

> Alii tamen probabile existimant haereticum occultum non esse irregularem. Eos refert Diana p. 1. supr. R. 114. et 2. p. supra, resol. 24. et p. 4. tract. 1. de Irreg. resol. 46.

[5] The third punishment is infamy: cap. Excommunicamus, l. §. Credentes, and cap. Statuimus, eodem tit. de haeret. in 6, and cap. Infames, 6. quaest. 1, and Authent. Gazaros, C. de haeret. initio, and L. Cunctos populos, de Summa Trin. See Suar., disp. 21, sect 5.

> Tertia poena est infamia : cap. Excommunicamus, l. §. Credentes, et cap. Statuimus, eodem tit. de haeret. in 6. et cap. Infames, 6. quaest. 1. et Authent. Gazaros, C. de haeret. initio et L. Cunctos populos, de Summa Trin. Vide Suar. disp. 21. sect 5.

[6] The fourth punishment is, that the heretic be deprived of benefices and offices acquired, and be rendered incapable of future ones. See Lugo, disp. 23, sect. 4, §. 2.

> Quarta poena est, ut haereticus privetur beneficiis, et officiis acquisitis, et inhabilis reddatur ad futura. Vide Lugum disp. 23. sect. 4. §. 2.

Question XII: On the temporal punishments of heretics

> De poenis temporalibus Haereticorum.

[2] The general Rule, however, is, that all the stable and movable goods, even the rights and actions of the heretic, pass to the fisc, and in general all and only those things which the heretic himself could have transferred to an extraneous heir, if he could freely make a will. The Doctors establish this rule, as reported by Sanchez, Lib. 1, cap. 14; Suarez, disp. 22, sect. 5; Card. Lugo, disp. 24, sect. 1, §. unicos — see them.

> Regula autem generalis est, bona omnia stabilia, et mobilia, iura etiam, et actiones haeretici ad fiscum transire, et in universum omnia, et sola, quae ipse haereticus in haeredem extraneum transferre potuisset, si libere testari posset. Hanc regulam statuunt DD. apud Sanchez Lib. 1. cap. 14. Suarez disp. 22. sect. 5. Card. Lugo disp. 24. sect. 1. §. unicos*, quos vide.*

[3] The second punishment is capital. This controversy against heretics is eruditely treated by Bellarmine, Lib. 3, de Laicis, cap. 21 and 22; Valentia, disp. 1, quaest. 11, p. 3. And it is established from the Extravag. Unam Sanctam, de maioritate, et obedientia, and cap. ad Apostolicae, de sententia, et re iudicata, in 6.

Secunda poena est capitalis. Haec controversia contra haereticos erudite tractatur a Bellarmino Lib. 3. de Laicis, cap. 21. et 22. Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 11. p. 3. Et constat ex Extrauag. Unam Sanctam, de maioritate, et obedientia, et cap. ad Apostolicae, de sententia, et re iudicata, in 6.

4 The Reason is, because an ordered Republic must punish the most atrocious crimes of its subjects. Lugo uses this reason, disp. 2, and it is that of D. Bonavent., dist. 18, p. 2, quaest. 1. Hence also the secular Princes imposed this punishment on heretics, L. Quicunque and L. Arrian. Cod. de haeret. See other laws in Farinac., de haeresi quaest. 178, 193, and 196.

Ratio est, quia Respublica ordinata debet punire scelera maxime atrocia subditorum. Hac ratione utitur Lugo disp. 2. et est D. Bonavent. dist. 18. p. 2. quaest. 1. Ideo et Principes saeculares hanc poenam haereticis imposuere, L. Quicunque et L. Arrian. Cod. de haeret. Vide alia iura in Farinac. de haeresi quaest. 178. 193. et 196.

5 Above all, the relapsed are to be handed over to the supreme punishment: cap. Accusatus, and cap. super eo, de haeret. in 6, and L. commissi, and cap. ad abolendam, extra de haereticis.

Maxime vero relapsi ultimo supplicio tradendi sunt: cap. Accusatus, et cap. super eo, de haeret. in 6. et L. commissi, et cap. ad abolendam, extra de haereticis.

6 Otherwise we assert that far greater punishments must also be inflicted on heretics, for instance perpetual imprisonment: cap. excommunicamus, de haeret. See Cardinal de Lugo, disp. 24, sectione 3.

Alias etiam poenas multo magis infligendas haereticis asserimus, puta carcerem perpetuum: cap. excommunicamus, de haeret. Vide Cardinalem de Lugo disp. 24. sectione 3.

7 In the Bulla coenae receivers, favorers, and defenders of heretics are also included. See Sanchez, Libro secundo Decalogi, capite 10; Cardinal de Lugo, disputatione vigesima quinta.

In Bulla coenae includuntur etiam receptores, fautores, et defensores haereticorum. Vide Sanchez Libro secundo Decalogi, capite 10. Cardinalem de Lugo disputatione vigesima quinta.

Disputation IV: On Hope

1 The Seraphic Doctor, in his Diaeta, titulo 5, cap. 4, de spe, on that text Deuteron. 24: You shall not take in pledge the lower millstone, nor the upper, among the other virtues warns that hope and fear are not to be withheld from the sinner: for spiritual Hope is the lower millstone, and sustains the soul from below, and raises it upward, lest through excessive dejection it rush into despair. But Fear is the upper millstone, pressing the soul downward, lest it vanish through elation: between these millstones (says the holy Doctor) the best milling of the soul takes place, that is, the contrition of sin. Of the first millstone, namely of hope, we must treat here; but of fear I shall treat in the following disputation.

> De Spe.
> INGENVE Seraphicus in Diaeta, titulo 5. cap. 4. de spe*, ad illud* Deuteron. 24. Non accipias loco pignoris inferiorem, et superiorem molam*, inter caeteras virtutes monet, spem et timorem peccatori non subtrahendum: Spes etenim spiritualis mola est, et Inferius sustinet animam; sursumque elevat, ne per nimiam deiectionem in desperationem ruat. Timor vero est mola superior, animam deorsum premens, ne per elationem evanescat: inter has molas optima fit (inquit S. Doctor) animae molitura, seu peccati contritio. De prima mola, nimirum de spe agendem hic; de timore autem, sequenti disputatione agam.*

Question I: What hope is

1 I do not treat of Hope as it is a passion, which is defined in lib. 2, Rhet. cap. 5 by Aristotle thus: Hope is a surmise of the supreme good, as the holy Doctor reports, 3. p. Coemil., sect. 39, and in 3. dist 26, dub. 2, but as it is a Theological virtue.

> Quid sit SPES.
> NON ago de Spe, ut est passio, quae definitur, lib. 2. Rhet. cap. 5. ab Aristotele Spes est suspicio summi boni*, ut refert S. Doctor 3. p. Coemil.* sect. 39. et in 3. dist 26. dub. 2. sed pro ut est virtus Theologica.

2 It is defined first by the Master, dist. 26, as cited by the Seraphic Doctor, in that dist., dub. 2: It is the virtue by which spiritual and eternal goods are hoped for, that is, awaited with confidence.

> Definitur primo a Magistro dist. 26. apud Seraphicum, ea dist. dub. 2. Est virtus, qua spiritualia, et aeterna bona sperantur, idest, cum fiducia expectantur.

3 The holy Doctor observes, however, that Hope is here defined in order to the object, which is eternal and glorious good; but this is twofold: uncreated, which is God; and created, which is beatitude, to which grace, forgiveness, perseverance, and the other things leading to glory are also reduced. Therefore when spiritual goods are said, the generic object is touched; but when eternal is said, the specific object is touched.

> Observat autem S. Doctor, hic definiri Spem in ordine ad obiectum, quod est bonum aeternum, et gloriosum, hoc autem est duplex: Increatum, quod est Deus; et creatum, quod est beatitudo, ad quam reducuntur etiam gratia, venia, perseverantia, et caetera ad gloriam perducentia. Dum igitur dicuntur, bona spiritualia*, tangitur obiectum genericum; dum vero dicitur,* aeterna*, tangitur obiectum specificum.*

4 It is defined secondly by the Master from Haymo, as the holy Doctor reports at the places cited: Hope is a certain expectation of future beatitude, coming from the grace of God and from preceding merits. This definition is broad in order to the object and to the principle, as the holy Doctor notes there.

> Definitur secundo a Magistro ex Haymone, ut refert S. Doctor locis citatis: Spes est certa expectatio futurae beatitudinis, veniens ex Dei gratia, et meritis praecedentibus. Quae definitio lata est in ordine ad obiectum, et ad principium, ut advertit S. Doctor ibi.

5 It is defined thirdly by D. Augustine, Lib. de civitate Dei, passim: Hope is the virtue by which one presumes that he will arrive at that which he believes. This definition is broad in order to the object and the habit.

> Definitur tertio a D. Augustino Lib. de civitate Dei passim: Spes est virtus, qua quis se ad illud, quod credit, perventurum praesumit. Quae definitio lata est in ordine ad obiectum, et habitum.

6 ¶ The holy Doctor distinguishes these definitions in ANOTHER way. The first is broad by genus and difference; and it is Formal. The second is Causal, broad by act and cause. The third is partly causal, partly formal, because it is given by the object of Hope and by the preamble virtue of faith.

> ¶ ALIO modo has definitiones distinguit S. Doctor. Prima lata est per genus, et differentiam; et est Formalis. Secunda Causalis, lata per actum, et causam. Tertia partim est causalis, partim formalis, quia datur per obiectum Spei, et praeambulam virtutem fidei.

7 Then in dub. 3 the holy Doctor considers that both Hope and faith are of invisible things, as the Master says; but faith is of invisible things inasmuch as they are not seen, whereas Hope is of invisible things as they are not possessed.

> Considerat deinde dub. 3. S. Doct. tam Spem, quam fidem esse de invisibilibus, ut ait Magist. sed fides est de invisibilibus, in quantum non sunt visa, at Spes est de invisibilibus, ut sunt non habita.

8 He observes also in dub. 4 that Hope, even as a passion and as a virtue, differs from joy and sorrow, because these are of a present object; but Hope is of the future, and by this Hope differs also from beatitude, while it agrees with love, which is also of the future.

> Observat etiam dub. 4. Spem, etiam ut passionem, et ut virtutem, differre a gaudio, et dolore, quia sunt de obiecto praesenti; sed Spes est de futuro, et per hoc differt Spes etiam a beatitudine; convenire vero cum amore, qui est etiam de futuro.

9 But it differs from Fear, because fear is with respect to evil, whereas Hope is with respect to good. Wherefore if hope is sometimes said with respect to evil, it is said improperly, as when Cicero, Lib. 1, ad Atticum, speaks of the hope of evils, and Virgil, AEneid. 4:

> Differre autem a Timore, quia hic est respectu mali; Spes vero respectu boni. Quare si aliquando respectu mali dicitur spes, improprie dicitur, ut cum Cicero Lib. 1. ad Atticum, spem malorum dicit, et Virg. AEneid. 4.

10 Hunc ego si potui tantum sperare dolorem.

> Hunc ego si potui tantum sperare dolorem.

11 The holy Doctor notes this with D. Augustine, cap. 8, Enchiridii.

> Id observat S. Doctor cum D. Augustino, cap. 8. Enchiridii.

12 Our Hope, however, can thus be defined: *It is the Theological Virtue by which the will is borne toward God as our beatitude, arduous to attain, which nevertheless can be obtained by the help of God. It is called a Virtue, because it makes morally good the one having it; for this is the notable mark of virtue, from Aristotle, 2 Eth., cap. 6.

> Potest autem sic definiri Spes nostra: Est Theologica Virtus, qua voluntas fertur in Deum, ut est beati- tudo nostra, ardua ad consequendum, quae obtineri tamen queat Dei auxilio. Dicitur Virtus*, quia reddit bonum moraliter, eam habentem; haec enim est nota virtutis insignis, ex Aristotele 2. Eth. cap. 6.*

13 It is called Theological; for it is exercised about God, exceeding our natural capacity, as is said, 1 Corinth. 2: The eye has not seen, etc. That Hope is a gift of God is had in Rom. 15: Now the God of hope fill you with all joy, etc. that you may abound in hope, and in 1 Peter, first: Who has regenerated us unto a living hope. Therefore the Council of Trent, sess. 6, can. 7, defines that it is infused; and can. 3 says it is a gift of grace.

> Dicitur Theologica; versatur enim circa Deum, excedentem nostram naturalem capacitatem, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 2. Oculus non vidit, etc. Spem autem esse Dei donum, habetur Rom. 15. Deus autem spei repleat vos omni gaudio, etc. ut abundetis in spe*, et* Prima Petri*, primo.* Qui regeneravit nos in spem vivam. Ideo Concilium Trident. sess. 6. can. 7. definit, eam infundi; et can. 3. ait, esse donum gratiae.

14 The remaining parts of the definition will be explained in the questions, when we shall examine the Object of Hope and discuss its subject. I gather this definition from D. Bonavent., at the places adduced, and in the little work Declaratio terminorum Theologiae, and in the Diaeta, tit. 5, cap. 4, where he most beautifully likens Hope to precious things, and in Lib. 5, Compend. Theologiae, cap. 2.

> Reliquae particulae definitionis explicabuntur in quaestionibus, dum Obiectum Spei examinabimus et subiectum eius discutiemus. Hanc definitionem colligo ex D. Bonavent. locis adductis, et in opusculo Declaratio terminorum Theologiae*, et in* Diaeta*,* tit. 5. cap. 4. ubi praeclare Speim pretiosis rebus assimilat, et Lib. 5. Compend. Theologiae, cap. 2.

Question II: What the material object of hope is 1 All AGREE that the primary matter of this virtue is eternal Beatitude, as we saw in the definitions of hope adduced from S. Bonavent., and it is deduced from that text, Rom. 5: We glory in the hope of the glory, etc., and 1 ad Titum: according to the hope of eternal life, which God, who does not lie, has promised.

> Quodnam sit obiectum materiale SPEI.
> CONVENIUNT omnes, primariam huius virtutis materiam esse Beatitudinem aeternam, ut vidimus in definitionibus spei, allatis a S. Bonavent. et deducitur ex illo Rom. 5. Gloriamur in spe gloriae, etc. et 1. ad Titum secundum spem vitae aeternae, quam promisit, qui non mentitur, Deus.

2 The question is therefore raised, whether formal beatitude, which is the vision of God, and love, and fruition; or rather objective beatitude, that is, God himself, be the object of this virtue.

> QUAERITUR ergo, num beatitudo formalis, quae est visio Dei, et dilectio, ac fruitio; an vero obiectiva, idest ipse Deus, sit huius virtutis obiectum.

3 The FIRST opinion is that Hope is concerned proximately with formal beatitude; with God, however, remotely, and accordingly that this virtue does not attain God immediately in himself. Thus Durandus, 3 dist. 26, quaest. 2; Palud., ibi, and other older authors, among whom S. Bonavent. is also renewed by many.

PRIMA opinio est, Spem versari circa beatitudinem formalem proxime; circa Deum autem remote, atque adeo hanc virtutem non attingere Deum immediate in se. Ita Durandus 3. dist. 26. quaest. 2. Palud. ibi, et alii antiquiores, inter quos recentetur etiam S. Bonavent. a multis.

4 The SECOND opinion, diametrically opposite, is that Hope is concerned proximately with God; the vision, however, being a mere expository condition.

SECUNDA sententia*, e diametro opposita, est, Spem proxime versari circa Deum; visionem vero esse meram conditionem exponentem.*

5 The THIRD opinion, the middle one, is that Hope is concerned with God and with Beatitude as referred to God. Thus D. Thom., prima secundae, quaest. 1, art. 3, ad 3; Becanus, cap. 17, quaest. 1; Poncius, disp. 31, quaest. 2; Coninchyus, disp. 19, dub. 3; Mastrius, disp. 6, de virtutibus Theol. quaest. 17, num. 442; Caspens., disp. 1, sect. 1, num. 3; Morandus, Tract. unic. quaest. 15; Tannerus, disp. 2, quaest. 1, dub. 1, num. 16; Valentia, disp. 2, quaest. 1, puncto 1, and other recent authors commonly; and this same is the will of those who say that God is the object just as beatitude is to be attained, so that we attain God immediately. Thus Scotus, 2 dist. 26 and 27; Gabriel, dist. 26; Almainus, Tract. 2, cap. 7; Suarez, de spe, disp. 1, sect. 3, num. 4; Fagundez, in primum praeceptum Decalogi, Lib. 1, cap. 31; Tannerus, disputatione 2, quaestione prima, dub. 1, num. 14; Fuliens., lib. 3, cap. 7.

TERTIA sententia*, media, est, Spem versari circa Deum, et circa Beatitudinem, ut ad Deum refertur. Ita D. Thom.* prima secundae, quaest. 1. art. 3. ad 3. Becanus cap. 17. quaest. 1. Poncius disp. 31. quaest. 2. Coninchyus disp. 19. dub. 3. Mastrius disp. 6. de virtutibus Theol. quaest. 17. num. 442. Caspens. disp. 1. sect. 1. num. 3. Morandus Tract. unic. quaest. 15. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 1. num. 16. Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 1. puncto 1. et alii recentes communiter; Et hoc idem volunt, qui dicunt esse Deum, ut beatitudine consequendum, ita ut Deum immediate attingamus. Ita Scotus 2. dist. 26. et 27. Gabriel dist. 26. Almainus Tract. 2. cap. 7. Suarez de spe, disp. 1. sect. 3. num. 4. Fagundez in primum praeceptum Decalogi Lib. 1. cap. 31. Tannerus disputatione 2. quaestione prima, dub. 1. num. 14. Fuliens. lib. 3. cap. 7.

6 This surely is the opinion of D. Bonavent. in corpore, as is clear to one reading.

HAC sane est D. Bonavent. sententia in corpore*, ut constat legenti.*

7 I ASSERT first, with this opinion, that not the vision itself alone, but God also, is the material object of Hope.

ASSERO primo cum hac sententia, non solam visionem ipsam, sed etiam Deum, esse obiectum materiale Spei.

8 It is PROVED from the authors alleged, with D. Bonav., ex 15 Genes., where God says to Abraham: I am your protector, and your reward exceeding great. Hence D. Augustine, 22 de civitate, cap. ultimo: The reward of virtue will be he himself, who gave the virtue, and who promised himself to it.

PROBATUR ab authoribus allegatis cum D. Bonau. ex 15. Genes. ubi Deus ait Abrahamo: Ego protector tuus sum, et merces tua magna nimis. Hinc D. Augustinus 22. de civitate, cap. ultimo: Praemium virtutis erit ipse, qui virtutem dedit, eique seipsum promisit.

9 Isidore, Lib. 8, Ethymolog. cap. 2, however, seems to intimate this when he says: Hope is said, as it were, the foot of advancing toward God.

VIDETUR autem id innuere Isidorus Lib. 8. Ethymolog. cap. 2. cum ait: Spes dicitur, quasi pes progrediendi ad Deum.

10 And D. Gregory, Lib. 10, moral. cap. 12, when he says: Hope in God rises the more solid, the graver the things you have borne for him — as the holy Doctor reports in Pharetra Lib. 2, cap. 24.

> ET D. Gregorius Lib. 10. moral. cap. 12. dum ait: Spes in Deum surgit solidior, quanto pro eo graviora pertuleris, ut refert S. Doctor in Pharetra Lib. 2. cap. 24.

11 It is PROVED by the reason of D. Bonavent. given by Mastrius; for God, not only by reason of the vision, but also by reason of his intrinsic goodness, is our supreme good: Therefore, as such, love of concupiscence tends toward him; for he himself is given to us per se, and is joined to us, as is said Ioan. 14, Rom. 5, and this very thing is our greatest good.

> PROBATUR ratione D. Bonavent. a Mastrio; nam Deus non tantum ratione visionis, sed etiam ratione suae bonitatis intrinsecae, est summum bonum nostrum: Ergo, ut sic, in illud tendit amore concupiscentiae; nam ipse per se nobis datur, et nobis coniungitur, ut dicitur Ioan. 14. Rom. 5. et hoc ipsum est maximum bonum nostrum.

12 It is confirmed by foundation 4: for the object of Hope is the same as that of delight, which succeeds hope, the thing already obtained; but the object of delight is God himself; for the will delights in the object known and possessed, as I showed in prima secundae, Tract. 1, disp. 2, quaest. 7.

> Confirmatur fundamento 4. nam idem est obiectum Spei, quod est delectationis, quae spei succedit, re iam obtenta; sed obiectum delectationis est Deus ipse; nam voluntas delectatur de obiecto cognito, et possesso, ut ostendi prima secundae, Tract. 1. disp. 2. quaest. 7.

13 It is confirmed secondly, because otherwise it would not be a Theological Virtue, since it would not attain God, as Mastrius infers from D. Bonavent., 3 dist. 26, art. 1, quaest. 3, and here at argument two, with the response.

> Confirmatur secundo, alioqui non esset Virtus Theologica, quia Deum non attingeret, ut infert Mastrius ex D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 26. art. 1. quaest. 3. et hic argumento secundo, cum responso.

14 I ASSERT secondly, that formal beatitude also enters into the reason of the object of this virtue.

> ASSERO secundo, etiam beatitudinem formalem ingredi rationem obiecti huius virtutis.

15 It is PROVED first from S. Doct. at the places adduced of the Fathers, quaest. 1; he also brings forward many in Lib. 2, Pharetrae, cap. 24: D. Gregory, Lib. 6, moral. cap. 14, and Lib. 10, cap. 12; August., Lib 10, confess. cap. 43, and epist. 120; Bernard, Lib. de diligendo Deo, cap. 14.

> PROBATUR primo a S. Doct. locis allatis Patrum, quaest. 1. multos etiam affert Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 24. D. Gregorium Lib. 6. moral. cap. 14. et Lib. 10. cap. 12. August. Lib 10. confess. cap. 43. et epist. 120. Bernardum Lib. de diligendo Deo, cap. 14.

16 It is PROVED secondly from D. Bonavent., by the reason which Morandus, Mastrius, and others use: for Hope tends toward its object because it is the good of those hoping; but it is the good of those hoping that the habit in beatitude, or beatitude itself, is a good for us: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonavent. ratione, qua utuntur Morandus, Mastrius, et alii: nam Spes tendit in suum obiectum, quia est bonum sperantibus; sed est bonum sperantibus, ut habitum in beatitudine, seu ipsa beatitudo nobis est bona: Ergo.

17 It is PROVED thirdly from S. Doct. at argument 3, with the response. The object is the same which we hope for and which we desire; but desire is of supernatural beatitude: Therefore so is Hope.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore argumento 3. cum responso. Idem est obiectum, quod speramus, et quod desideramus; sed desiderium est supernaturalis beatitudinis: Ergo et Spes.

18 You will OBJECT. Love of concupiscence orders the thing loved to something else, as to an end; but to order God to another end is perverse: Therefore.

OBIICIES. Amor concupiscentiae ordinat amatum ad aliud, ut finem; sed ordinate Deum ad alium finem, est perversum: Ergo.

19 It is ANSWERED that what is loved with love of concupiscence need not be ordered to something else as to an end; but it suffices that it be willed for another; nor is it necessary that it be willed on account of that. Whence this love, by which we love God for ourselves, is good. Hence S. Augustine, manuali, cap. 10: Kindle in me, O Lord, your will, and your concupiscence, which is holy and good, and Psalm. 83: My soul longs and faints for the courts of the Lord.

RESPONDETUR, non esse necesse, ut id, quod amatur amore concupiscentiae, ordinetur in aliud, ut in finem; sed sufficit, ut sit volitum alii; neque est necesse, ut sit volitum propter illud: Unde bonus est hic amor, quo Deum nobis amamus. Hinc S. Augustinus, manuali, cap. 10. Accende me Domine voluntate, et concupiscentia tua, quae sancta est, et bona*, et* Psalm. 83. Concupiscit, et deficit anima mea in atria Domini.

20 The REASON is, because God is not compared as a lesser good, as something to be perfected; hence the reason of use, reproved by D. Augustine in Lib. 83, qq., quaest. 30 — Perverse is the love that uses what should be enjoyed — does not intervene; nor is our appetite ended in beatitude, but through the conjunction with the uncreated, whence finally the appetite terminates in God, as D. Bonav. acutely answers in primo, dist. 1, at the end of the cited quaest., and with him Arriaga, disp. 27, sect. 2; Mastrius, num. 448, with his Scotus, 3 dist. 26, quaest. unic.; Caspens., num. 5; and soon again, in setting out the third opinion of quaest. 1, I shall recall it: for Hope tends toward God as seen. Hence in the hymn Te Deum it is said: AEterna fac in gloria munerari, that is, with God.

RATIO est, quia non comparatur Deus, ut minus bonum, tanquam perficiendum; unde non intervenit ratio usus, a D. Augustino Lib. 83. qq. quaest. 30. reprobatus: Perversus est amor uti fruendis*, at in beatitudine beata non finitur noster appetitus; sed per coniunctionem cum increata, unde tandem terminatur appetitus in Deum, ut acute respondet D. Bonau. in* primo, dist. 1. in calce cit. quaest. et cum eo Arriaga disp. 27. sect. 2. Mastrius num. 448. cum suo Scoto 3. dist. 26. quaest. unic. Caspens. num. 5. et mox iterum in referenda tertia sententia quaest. 1. refricabo: Spes enim tendit in Deum visum. Hinc hymno Te Deum dicitur: AEterna fac in gloria munerari*, idest, Deo.*

Question III: What the formal object of hope is

1 THREE opinions in this question as well are adduced from the holy Doctors cited above.

Quodnam sit obiectum formale SPEI.

TRES opiniones etiam in hac quaest. referunt SS. Doctores supra cit.

2 THE FIRST is, that beatitude is the formal object of Hope, as it is arduous. Henry, Richard, Durandus, Paludanus, D. Bonaventure and other ancients are alleged. Amicus follows it, disp. 19. sect. 1.

PRIMA est, beatitudinem esse obiectum formale Spei, ut est ardua. Allegantur Henricus, Richardus, Durandus, Paludanus, D. Bonavent. et alii veteres. Eam sequitur Amicus disp. 19. sect. 1.

[3] The SECOND opinion is, that the formal object of Hope is the aid of God's omnipotence, just as the testimony of the first truth is the formal object of faith. So Vasquez p. p. disp. 84. cap. 1. and disp. 139., whom Turrianus and Meracius follow, alleging D. Thom. qq. disp. quaest. de spe, art. 1. and here, art. 1. and 5.

> SECUNDA sententia est, obiectum formale Spei esse auxilium omnipotentiae Dei, sicut testimonium primae veritatis est obiectum formale fidei. Ita Vasquez p. p. disp. 84. cap. 1. et disp. 139. quem sequuntur Turrianus, Meracius, allegantes D. Thom. qq. disp. quaest. de spe, art. 1. et hic, art. 1. et 5.

[4] The THIRD opinion is, that the object of Hope is God, as the highest good, lovable by the love of concupiscence, as it were for the lover's advantage; or that the formal object of Hope is objective beatitude, insofar as it is our good. So Scotus 3. dist. 26. quaest. unic. q. ad quaest., Suarez disp. 1. sect. 3., Coninchius, Arriaga as reported by Mastrius, Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 2. Mastrius loco cit., Morandus quaest. 15., Aragon quaest. cit. art. 2., Falsensis lib. 3. cap. 7., Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 1. num. 19., who at n. 20. carps at the holy Doctor, whom he reports mutilated, as I shall say.

> TERTIA sententia est, obiectum Spei esse Deum, ut summum bonum, amabile amore concupiscentiae, quasi in commodum amantis; seu obiectum formale Spei, esse beatitudinem obiectivam, quatenus bonum nostrum. Ita Scotus 3. dist. 26. quaest. unic. q. ad quaest. Suarez disp. 1. sect. 3. Coninchius, Arriaga apud Mastrium, Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 2. Mastrius loco cit. Morandus quaest. 15. Aragon quaest. cit. art. 2. Falsensis lib. 3. cap. 7. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 1. num. 19. qui n. 20. carpit S. Doctorem, quem mutilum refert, ut dicam.

[5] HERE I halt: for Vulpius disp. 50. art. 4. denies that this is Scotus's opinion, but holds that God, under the absolute aspect of the Deity, is the formal object of Hope; not, however, as he is a good for us. Vulpius was moved because Scotus, in the body of the text, proposes this Instance: if it be said that to desire a good for me varies the formal aspect of the object, because it changes the good of honesty into the useful good. He answers that it is false, because that condition, or circumstance, For whom, is not a condition of the object per se; indeed such a condition can be added upon the object, the formal aspect of the object standing.

> HIC sisto: nam Vulpes disp. 50. art. 4. negat, hanc esse Scoti sententiam, sed Deum, sub absoluta ratione Deitatis, esse formale obiectum Spei; non autem, ut est bonum nobis. Motus est autem Vulpes, quia Scotus in corpore, proponit hanc Instantiam: si dicatur, quod desiderare bonum mihi, variat rationem formalem obiecti, quia commutat bonum honestum in bonum utile. Respondet, falsum esse, quia conditio illa, vel circumstantia Cui, non est conditio obiecti per se, imo talis conditio potest addi super obiectum, stante ratione formali obiecti.

[6] For indeed Lichetus and Arretinus expound these words thus, that the act of Hope, which is to desire the infinite good, is terminated first, and immediately, to that good under its absolute formal aspect; not that the act is terminated to such a good as in itself, and for itself, but to it as a good for me; a good indeed superabundant, and ultimately perfecting me, but in that mode whereby an object can perfect a power; because it perfects not intrinsically, but only extrinsically. The reason of this is, that if the will willed that good only as convenient to itself, that volition would not be right; it would be an illicit mercenary love, which Lichetus declares, bringing forward a notable doctrine of Scotus ex 1. dist. 6. quaest. 2. inf. L., where he says that to desire a perfect act, whereby the object may be more loved in itself, comes from the affection of justice; because from the fact that I love something in itself, thence I will something in itself; and thus the good Angels could desire beatitude, so that possessing it they might love the Highest good more perfectly, and that act of concupiscence for beatitude would be meritorious, because it does not use by enjoying, but enjoys it, because the good it covets for itself it covets for this, that it may love that good in itself the more. Mastrius reports this at n. 459. from D. Bonaventure in 1. dist. 1. quaest. ult., and refutes the opinion of Vulpius n. 458., against D. Bonaventure here, in its foundations, in which he shows that the formal object of Hope is not the goodness of God as such, against Vulpius.

> ENIM vero haec verba sic exponunt Lichetus, et Arretinus, quod actus Spei, qui est desiderare bonum infinitum, terminatur primo, et immediate ad illud bonum sub sua ratione formali absoluta; non quod ille actus terminetur ad tale bonum, ut in se, et propter se, sed ad illud, ut bonum mihi; bonum quidem superabundans, et me ultimate perficiens, eo tamen modo, quo obiectum potest perficere potentiam; quia perficit, non intrinsece, sed tantum extrinsece. Ratio huius est, quia si voluntas illud bonum tantum ut sibi commodum vellet, illa volitio non esset recta; esset enim amor mercenarius illicitus, quod declarat Lichetus, adducendo notabilem Scoti doctrinam ex 1. dist. 6. quaest. 2. inf. L. ubi ait, quod appetere actum perfectum, ut per illam magis ametur obiectum in se, est ex affectione iustitiae, quia ex eo, quod amo aliquid in se, inde volo aliquid in se; et ita boni Angeli potuerunt appetere beatitatem, ut illam habentes, perfectius amarent Summum bonum, et ille actus concupiscendi beatitatem esset meritorius, quia non utitur fruendo, sed fruitur eo, quia bonum, quod concupiscit sibi, ad hoc concupiscit, ut plus amet illud bonum in se. Haec refert Mastr. n. 459. ex D. Bonav. in 1. dist. 1. quaest. ult. et refutat sententiam Vulpii n. 458. a D. Bonav. hic, in fundamentis, in quibus ostendit obiectum formale Spei non esse bonitatem Dei, ut talis est, contra Vulpem.

7 The opinion of the holy Doctor is, that the formal object of Hope is God, the good appetible by the love of concupiscence, not as a good, but as a great, arduous good awaited by us; yet to be attained by divine liberality, truth, and omnipotence upheld. So he explains himself in the body of the text.

> SENTENTIA S. Doctoris est, obiectum formale Spei esse Deum bonum, amore concupiscentiae appetibile, non ut bonum, sed ut magnum arduum expectatum a nobis; consequendum tamen divina liberalitate, veritate, et omnipotentia innixis. Ita in corpore se explicat.

8 Therefore of the three opinions which I referred to above, he gathers and reconciles the diversity; and the Moderns accordingly report the opinion of the Seraphic Doctor mutilated, which frequently happens, because they allege the holy Doctor from others, not read in the fountain. Amicus, however, seems more faithful in interpreting the Seraphic Doctor rightly.

> Itaque trium sententiarum, quas supra retuli, colligit, et conciliat diversitatem, atque adeo mutilam afferunt Moderni sententiam Seraphici, quod frequenter evenit, quia S. Doctorem ex aliis allegant, non in fonte perlectum. Videtur autem Amicus fidelior Seraphicum recte interpretari.

9 I ASSERT first, against Vulpius, that the formal object of Hope is not God as a good.

> ASSERO primo contra Vulpem, obiectum formale Spei non esse Deum, ut bonum.

10 IT IS PROVED from D. Bonaventure first. Distinct virtues ought to have distinct objects; but the Theological virtues are three distinct ones, as is had in 1 Corinthians 13: And now there remain faith, hope, charity, these three: but the greater of these is charity: Therefore their objects are distinct: But also Charity is borne toward God as a good: Therefore.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo. Virtutes distinctae debent habere obiecta distincta; sed virtutes Theologicae sunt tres distinctae, ut habetur prima Corinth. 13. Manent fides, Spes, charitas, tria haec: maior autem horum est charitas: Ergo earum sunt obiecta distincta: At etiam Charitas fertur in Deum, ut bonum: Ergo.

11 They answer that Hope regards the good, as good indeed, but future.

RESPONDENT, Spem respicere bonum, ut bonum quidem, sed futurum.

12 Against this St. Bonaventure says, that the good as future is loved by charity, much less merely desired.

Contra ait S. Bonav. quia bonum, ut futurum, amatur charitate, nedum desideratur.

13 I ASSERT second, that the formal object is rightly assigned by St. Bonaventure.

ASSERO secundo, obiectum formale bene assignari a S. Bonaventura.

14 IT IS PROVED from him in the body of the text, that the aspect of the Arduous enters into the notion of the object. As the rational tends to the true, so the appetite to the good: but the appetite is divided into the concupiscible and the irascible; now the concupiscible is borne toward the good as good, and the irascible toward the good as arduous and great; but both powers had to be ordained to God: therefore, as the rational is perfected by Faith, and the concupiscible by Charity, so the irascible by Hope.

PROBATUR ab eo in corpore, quod ratio Ardui ingrediatur rationem obiecti. Sicut rationalis tendit in verum, ita appetitus in bonum: Appetitus autem dividitur in concupiscibilem, et irascibilem; sed Concupiscibilis fertur in bonum, ut bonum; et irascibilis in bonum, ut arduum, et magnum; Oportuit autem, utramque potentiam ordinari ad Deum: ergo, sicuti rationalis Fide, et concupiscibilis Charitate perficitur; ita Irascibilis Spe.

15 IT IS PROVED second from the holy Doctor. Of contraries there is the same account; but hope and fear are contraries: now fear regards an evil as exceeding its power; therefore also hope regards a good as superexcellent and arduous.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore. Contrariorum eadem est ratio; sed spes, et timor sunt contraria: Timor autem respicit malum, ut excedens suam potestatem; ergo et spes respicit bonum, ut superexcellens, et arduum.

16 IT IS PROVED third, because the office of Hope is to raise up the soul, as is indicated Isa. 64. and 1 Corinth. 2.: The eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, what things God hath prepared for them that love him. Heb. 6. he says, That we may have the hope: entering in even within the veil; and chapter 11. Faith is defined: the substance of things to be hoped for, the evidence of things that appear not.

PROBATUR tertio, quia Spei officium est animum erigere, ut indicatur Isa. 64. et prima Corinth. 2. Oculus non vidit, auris non audivit, in cor hominis non ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus se. Hebr. 6. ait, Habere nos spem: incedentem usque ad interiora velaminis, et cap. 11. Definitur Fides: sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium.

17 This arduous object is expressed almost always in the Scriptures whenever they name Hope, namely amid many difficulties, oppositions, and assaults, almost beyond belief as insuperable; thus Iob. 14.: There is hope for a tree: if it be cut down, it will green again. This is read everywhere in the Psalms. If armies should stand together against me, in this will I trust. Psalm 26. In thee, O Lord, have I hoped, let me never be confounded, etc. Psalm 90. And I will show him my salvation. Rom. 8. We ourselves also groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption of the sons of God, the redemption of our body. For we are saved by hope. But hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he hope for? But if we hope for that which we see not, we wait for it with patience. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmity, etc. the Spirit himself asketh for us with unspeakable groanings. The holy Doctor often brings forward that of Rom. 5.: Tribulation worketh patience, and patience trial, and trial hope, and hope confoundeth not. He also brings forward in the body of the text that of Genes. 15.: I am thy reward exceeding great.

> Hoc obiectum arduum exprimitur fere semper in Scripturis, dum Spem nominant, nempe inter multas difficultates, repugnantias, et oppugnationes, fere creditu insuperabiles, sic Iob. 14. Lignum habet spem: si praecisum fuerit, rursum virescit. Id passim legitur in Psalmis. Si consistant adversum me castra, in hoc ego sperabo. Psalmo 26. In te Domine speravi, non confundantur in aeternum, etc. Psalm. 90. Et ostendam illi salutare meum. Rom. 8. Ipsi intra nos gemimus, adoptionem filiorum Dei expectantes, redemptionem corporis nostri. Spe enim salvi facti sumus. Spes autem, quae videtur, non est spes: nam quod videt quis, quid sperat? Si autem, quod non videmus, speramus: per patientiam expectamus. Similiter autem Spiritus adiuvat infirmitatem nostram, etc. ipse Spiritus postulat pro nobis gemitibus inenarrabilibus. Affert saepe S. Doct. id Rom. 5. Tribulatio patientiam operatur, patientia autem probationem, probatio vero spem, spes autem non confundit. Adducit etiam in corpore id Genes. 15. Ego ero merces tua magna nimis.

18 HENCE is solved the argument upon which Scotus, Mastrius, Caspensis, Suarez lay such weight: what is meant by the name Arduous. For I say that is meant the good as great and excellent, and to be obtained through many difficulties.

> HINC solvitur argumentum, quod tanti pendunt Scotus, Mastrius, Caspens. Suarez. Quid intelligatur nomine Ardui. Dico enim intelligi bonum, ut magnum, et excellens, multisque difficultatibus obtinendum.

19 Caspensis, Suarez, and Mastrius object: For difficulties do not move to willing, but draw back; whereas Hope is a volition.

> INSTANT Caspensis, Suarez, et Mastrius; Nam difficultates non movent ad volendum, sed retrahunt; at vero Spes est Volitio.

20 BUT they meet with a ready answer in the holy Doctor: for difficulty in a good is the object not of the concupiscible, but of the irascible, which rises up toward the impeded good, and toward removing obstacles; and Hope perfects the irascible.

> SED obviam responsionem habent in S. Doct. nam difficultas in bono est obiectum, non concupiscibilis, sed irascibilis, quae insurgit ad bonum impeditum, et ad obstacula removenda; Spes autem perficit irascibilem.

21 There is also solved another objection of Suarez, Mastrius, and Caspensis, from Scotus dist. 26.: God, as good to me, is the object of some virtue, but not of charity; for this loves God for himself; not as a good to me; Nor does it belong to faith, as is evident; therefore to Hope.

> SOLVITUR etiam alia obiectio Suarez, Mastrii, et Caspensis, ex Scoto dist. 26. Deus, ut mihi bonus, est obiectum alicuius virtutis, sed non charitatis; nam haec amat Deum propter se; non autem, ut mihi bonum; Neque ad fidem spectat, ut patet; ergo ad Spem.

22 IF Scotus and Mastrius had weighed their own remarkable doctrine reported above, they would have found that the love of concupiscence toward God does not change the object of the amity of friendship; for it tends to loving God for himself; and although it loves a good for itself, yet not on its own account; and so it pertains to the same charity; for he who loves one thing on account of another, loves with the same love, as the holy Doctor said, dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 3. ad 3.

> SI Scotus, et Mastrius insignem suam doctrinam supra relatam pensitassent; invenissent, amorem concupiscentiae in Deum, non mutare obiectum amotis amicitiae; nam ad Deum propter se amandum tendit; et licet amet bonum sibi, non tamen propter se; atque adeo ad eandem charitatem pertinet; qui enim amat unum propter aliud, eodem amore amat, ut dixit S. Doct. dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 3. ad 3.

23 HENCE indeed the argument of St. Bonaventure presses the more: for the perfection of all the powers of the rational soul is necessary; but no other virtue is found perfecting the irascible in ordination to God besides Hope. For that Charity also regards the supernatural good matters nothing; for it does not regard it under this aspect, or under the aspect of the Arduous, but as a good; nor is it new that many habits should concur in one material object, and in our question all three Theological virtues regard God.

HINC sane magis urget argumentum S. Bonav. nam perfectio omnium animae rationalis potentiatum, est necessaria; at non alia virtus invenitur perficiens irascibilem in ordine ad Deum, praeter Spem. Quod enim etiam Charitas respiciat bonum supernaturale, nihil refert; non enim illud respicit sub hac ratione, vel sub ratione Ardui, sed ut bonum; non est autem novum in obiecto materiali multos habitus convenire, et in nostra quaestione omnes tres virtutes Theologicae Deum respiciunt.

24 YOU HAVE also from what has been said, that the argument of Mastrius at num. 456. is feeble, by which with Coninchius he tries to show that the omnipotence, liberality, and fidelity of God do not pertain to the formal object, because that only looks to the formal object of the act of the will, which moves it to desire or shun some thing; but the aid of God does not move to beatitude: Therefore.

HABES etiam ex dictis, imbelle esse argumentum Mastrii num. 456. quo ostendere nititur cum Coninchio, omnipotentiam, liberalitatem, et fidelitatem Dei non pertinere ad obiectum formale, quia id solum spectat ad obiectum formale actus voluntatis, quod eam movet ad aliquam rem appetendam, vel fugiendam; sed auxilium Dei non movet ad beatitudinem: Ergo.

25 BUT since the object of Hope is beatitude as arduous, and the arduous does not move according to the adversaries, the divine power, liberality, and truth ought to excite and animate the pursuit of beatitude, as I shall soon say.

AT cum obiectum Spei sit beatitudo, ut ardua, neque arduitas secundum adversarios moveat; deberet excitare, et animare Divina potentia, liberalitas, et veritas ad prosecutionem beatitudinis, ut mox dicam.

26 YOU WILL SAY with Tannerus: God is arduous even to Charity to attain. It is answered, that this belongs to the material object of Charity.

DICES cum Tannero: Deus est arduus, etiam Charitati ad consequendum. Respondetur, hoc spectare ad materiale obiectum Charitatis.

Question IV: Whether a certain object is set forth for hope, and is hoped for 1 FROM the definitions of Hope its certainty seems to be gathered; for it is called a certain expectation of beatitude. For indeed, since the outcome depends on the aids of God and our merits, and no one knows: Whether he be worthy of love or of hatred, Ecclesiastes 9, it does not seem that a certain expectation can be had, as D. Bonaventure notes in the opposing arguments.

An SPE certo obiectum exhibeatur, et speretur.

EX definitionibus Spei videtur colligi eius certitudo; dicitur enim certa expectatio beatitudinis. Enim vero, cum eventus pendeat ex auxiliis Dei, et nostris meritis, et nemo sciat: An amore dignus sit, an odio. Eccel. 9. non videtur, quae certa expectatio haberi possit, ut notat D. Bonavent. in argumentis oppositis.

2 OBSERVE that certainty pertains properly and formally to the intellect; for it is an effect of truth, which is the formal object of the intellect: but the will is said to be certain insofar as it can infallibly attain its end.

> OBSERVA, certitudinem proprie, et formaliter ad intellectum pertinere; est enim veritatis effectus, quae est obiectum formale intellectus: Voluntas vero dicitur certa, quatenus suum finem infallibiliter consequi potest.

3 That Hope is most certain, all concede.

> CERTISSIMAM esse Spem omnes concedunt.

4 IT IS PROVED from D. Bonaventure first from the Apostle, who hoped for glory most certainly for himself, Rom. 8.: For I am sure that neither death, nor life, etc. will be able to separate us from the charity of God. And chapter 5.: Hope confoundeth not. And 1 to Timothy 1.: I know whom I have believed, and I am certain that the just judge is able to keep my deposit. And Heb. 6.: That we may have the strongest comfort, who have fled for refuge to hold fast the hope proposed to us, which we have as a sure anchor. Which passage the holy Doctor urges in Diata, tit. 5. cap. 4., where he notes that for this reason the Helmet is compared to Hope, 1 Thessal. 5., which is safe in battle; and Heb. 6. an anchor, which makes safe in a ship, as he notes also here on the last foundation. St. Thomas shows this most beautifully in Psal. 30.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo ex Apostolo, qui certissimam sibi gloriam sperabat, Rom. 8. Certus sum, quia neque mors, neque vita, etc. poterit nos separare a charitate Dei. Et cap. 5. Spes non confundit. Et prima ad Timoth. 1. Scio cui credidi, et certus sum, quia potens est depositum meum servare iustus iudex. Et Hebr. 6. Fortissimum solatium habentes, quo confugimus per propositam spem, quam veluti anchoram tutam habemus. Quem locum urget S. Doct. in Diata, tit. 5. cap. 4. ubi advertit ideo Galea Spem comparari, prima Thessal. 5. quae tutum in pugna; et Hebr. 6. anchora, quae tutum in navi reddit, ut notat etiam hic fundamento ultimo. Praeclare id ostendit S. Doct. in Psal. 30.

5 HENCE in the little work on the seven gifts, on the Gift of piety near the end he notes that Hope is called full of immortality, Sap. 3. But more beautifully in the Commentaries. And Rom. 5.: We glory in the hope of the sons of God. Therefore session 6. cap. 13. the Council of Trent says all ought to place a most certain Hope in the aid and mercy of God. For God, unless his graces fail, will perfect as he began. Hence the holy Doctor asserts certainty thus here, and in Compend. Theolog. verit. lib. 5. cap. 22. From this it begins to appear in what this certainty consists.

> HINC opusc. de septem donis, de Dono pietatis circa finem notat, Spem dici immortalitate plenam, Sap. 3. Praeclarius vero in Commentariis. Et Rom. 5. Gloriamur in spe filiorum Dei. Ideo sess. 6. cap. 13. ait C. Trident. omnes in Dei auxilio, et misericordia debere certissimam Spem ponere. Deus enim nisi gratiae illius defuerint, sicut coepit, ita perficiet. Hinc certitudinem sic asserit S. Doct. hic, et in Compend. Theolog. verit. lib. 5. cap. 22. Ex quo incipit elucescere, in quo haec certitudo posita sit.

6 The holy Doctor reports some saying that the certainty of faith gives to Hope all its certainty; but that it has no certainty of its own, just as particular science obtains all its certainty from universal science. For by faith man believes that all the good will be saved; but by Hope he believes that he himself in particular will be saved; whence he appropriates to himself what he believed universally; and since there is no certainty about singulars except insofar as they are referred to the universal, therefore hope does not appropriate to itself the certainty of faith absolutely, but under a condition, namely, if he shall have persevered unto the end. Whence they call the certainty of faith that of fidelity, because God cannot deny himself, since he promised salvation to those who persevere; but the certainty of hope is called that of confidence; and confidence is nothing else than a kind of fidelity turned upon oneself.

> REFERT S. Doct. quosdam dicentes certitudinem fidei dare Spei omnem certitudinem; hanc vero nullam a se habere certitudinem, sicut scientia particularis omnem certitudinem obtinet a scientia universali. Per fidem enim credit homo omnes bonos salvandos; per Spem autem credit, seipsum in particulari salvandum, unde appropriat sibi id, quod universaliter credebat; et quoniam non est certitudo circa singularia, nisi in quantum referuntur ad universale, ideo spes non appropriat sibi certitudinem fidei absolute, sed sub conditione, videlicet, si perseverarit usque in finem. Unde certitudinem fidei vocant fidelitatis, quia Deus seipsum negare non potest, cum salutem perseverantibus promiserit; certitudo vero spei dicitur confidentiae; confidentia autem non est aliud, quam fidelitas quaedam ad se conversa.

7 BUT this mode is not proved by the Seraphic Doctor, because Hope has its own certainty, as the Gloss on Rom. 5. says: Trial worketh hope, that is, the certainty of hope; otherwise it would not have its own proper aspect of a habit per se, but only a subaltern one, as Bellarmine also notes lib. 3. de Iustificatione, cap. 11. Therefore Hope has a proper certainty on the part of the will; another on the part of the intellect. On the part of the will, the certainty of hope is the firm adherence of the will to the thing hoped for, and this can be most great, even if on the part of the intellect man is not certain that he will attain that thing. Indeed, Hope seems not only not to require, but not even to be able to bear on the part of the intellect an absolute certainty: For what we certainly know we shall have, we do not properly hope for, but absolutely expect, as the holy Doctor hints argumento 4. opp. For in this way the souls of the blessed do not properly hope for the resurrection of the body, but only expect it, because on the part of the intellect they are most certain that it cannot be wanting to them. Hence Bellarmine infers that the sectary heretics, who require an absolute certainty on the part of the intellect about Justification and salvation, leave no place for Hope, properly so called.

> AT iste modus non probatur Seraphico, quia Spes habet suam certitudinem, ut ait Glossa ad id Rom. 5. Probatio operatur spem, idest spei certitudinem; alioqui non haberet propriam rationem habitus per se, sed subalternatam tantum, ut advertit etiam Bellarminus lib. 3. de Iustificatione, cap. 11. Habet igitur Spes propriam certitudinem ex parte voluntatis; alteram ex parte intellectus. Ex parte voluntatis certitudo spei est firma adhaesio voluntatis ad rem speratam, et haec maxime esse potest, etiamsi ex parte intellectus non sit homo certus, se rem illam consecuturum. Imo videtur Spes, non solum non exigere, sed nec ferre posse ex parte intellectus certitudinem absolutam: Nam quod certo scimus, nos habituros, non proprie speramus, sed absolute expectamus, ut innuit S. Doct. argumento 4. opp. Hoc enim modo animae beatorum non proprie sperant corporum resurrectionem, sed tantum expectant, quia certissimae sunt ex parte intellectus, eam sibi deesse non posse. Hinc infert Bellarminus, haereticos sectarios, qui certitudinem absolutam ex parte intellectus requirunt de Iustificatione, et salute, nullum locum relinquere Spei, proprie dictae.

8 HOWEVER, although Hope does not require an absolute certainty on the part of the intellect, yet hence it has also a twofold certainty. One arises from the primary foundation of hope, which is the promise of God. For we are certain that God cannot deceive. And indeed if nothing were required for our justification or salvation except the promise of God, we should have about these things an absolute and infallible certainty too; but because other things are also required, about which we are not so certain, therefore Hope does not expel all fear. The other certainty of Hope on the part of the intellect arises from charity, and by this it does not belong except to the just; for a friend can hope all good things from a friend, nor is he confounded, as is said Rom. 5.: And hope confoundeth not: because the charity of God is poured forth in our hearts, etc. for charity is the form which perfects Hope.

> QUAMVIS autem Spes absolutam certitudinem non requirat ex parte intellectus; tamen hinc habet etiam duplicem certitudinem. Altera oritur ex fundamento spei primario, quod est promissio Dei. Certi enim sumus, Deum non posse fallere. Et siquidem nihil requireretur ad nostram iustificationem, vel salutem, nisi promissio Dei, haberemus etiam de his rebus absolutam, et infallibilem certitudinem; tamen quia requiruntur etiam alia, de quibus non sumus tam certi, ideo Spes non expellit omnem timorem. Altera certitudo Spei ex parte intellectus oritur ex charitate, ac per hoc non convenit, nisi iustis; amicus enim ab amico omnia bona sperare potest, neque confunditur, ut dicitur Rom. 5. Spes autem non confundit: quia charitas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris, etc. charitas enim est forma, quae perficit Spem.

9 Therefore Christian Hope has a certainty distinct from Faith, as the holy Doctor gathers: because faith is certain about this enunciation: I believe that there is eternal life; but Hope is borne toward eternal life incomplextly.

> Igitur Spes christiana habet certitudinem distinctam a Fide, ut colligit S. Doct. quia fides certa est de hac enunciatione: Credo vitam aeternam esse; At Spes fertur in vitam aeternam incomplexe.

10 He proves this also from contraries; for one thing is opposed to one: but the certainty of faith is opposed to error and doubt; whereas the certainty of hope is repugnant to diffidence and despair.

> Hoc etiam probat a contrariis; nam unum uni opponitur: Certitudo autem fidei opponitur errori, et dubitationi; at certitudo spei repugnat diffidentiae, et desperationi.

11 But just as the certainty of faith in this life does not make it impossible that we fall into error against the truth believed, although it can overcome every error: so Hope does not make every diffidence impossible, although it carries with it a manly adherence.

> Sicut autem certitudo fidei in via non reddit invincibilem, ne labamur in errorem contra veritatem creditam, tametsi possit omnem errorem superare: ita Spes non reddit impossibilem omnem diffidentiam, tametsi virilem adhaesionem secum ferat.

12 Doubt can indeed befall our hope per accidens, on the part of the subject; if it does not take care to correspond to the grace of God by working faithfully. From this others deduce that the certainty of hope is conditional, which the Council of Trent seems to hint at, defining that the Just ought to hope for beatitude if they shall have persevered in well-doing unto the end. So they discourse at length in Bassaeus.

> Potest vero ingruere dubium per accidens in spem nostram, ratione subiecti; si non curet gratiae Dei correspondere, fideliter operando. Ex quo deducunt alii certitudinem spei esse conditionatam, quod videtur innuere Concilium Trident. definiens, Iustos debere sperare beatitudinem, si bene agendo perseveraverint usque in finem. Sic disserunt apud Bassaeum.

13 It is proved, because beatitude is to be hoped for in the same mode in which God promised it, but he promised conditionally, Rom. 8.: If so be that we suffer with him. And Matth. 8.: If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments: Therefore. So the holy Doctor runs through it in the body of the text, and ad 4.

> Probatur, quia eodem modo speranda est beatitudo, quo Deus eam promisit, sed promisit conditionaliter, Rom. 8. Si tamen compatimur. Et Matth. 8. Si vis ad vitam ingredi, serva mandata: Ergo. Ita discurrit S. Doct. in corpore, et ad 4.

14 Therefore what D. Thomas says at quaest. 18. art. 4. does not please him, that the certainty of hope is such as is the certainty of nature; but he adduces this as absolute in 3. dist. 26. quaest. 2. Nor does the argument of Caisensis press, namely, that we hope in God, whose power is insuperable, and whose will is ready to do good; and the certainty of hope is the determination of the inclination to its proper object.

> Ideo non placet id, quod ait D. Thom. quaest. 18. art. 4. certitudinem spei esse, qualis est certitudo naturae; haec autem absoluta afferitur ab eo in 3. dist. 26. quaest. 2. Neque ratio Caisensis urget, nempe quia speramus in Deo, cuius potentia est insuperabilis, et voluntas ad benefaciendum parata; et spei certitudo est determinatio inclinationis ad proprium obiectum.

15 These things are indeed frivolous; for the determination of hope to the object is, as it is proposed to us by faith, that we may be certain of beatitude if we persevere; to which end the inclination tends, desiring absolutely; but it does not hope absolutely, but with the due means, as the Council of Trent says.

> Haec sane frivola sunt; nam determinatio spei ad obiectum, est, prout nobis proponitur a fide, ut certi simus beatitudinis, si perseveremus; ad quem finem inclinatio tendit, absolute appetens; sed non sperat absolute, sed debitis mediis, ut ait C. Tridentinum.

16 Caisensis objects. If the certainty of hope were conditional, it could not fail; for as that truth cannot fail: He that shall persevere to the end, he shall be saved; so neither this: If I shall persevere, I shall be saved.

> Obiicit Caisensis. Si certitudo spei esset conditionata, non posset deficere; sicut enim non potest deficere illa veritas: Qui perseveraverit usque in finem, salvus erit; ita neque haec: Si ego perseveravero, salvus ero.

17 It is answered, by conceding that the conditional truth of Hope does not fail.

> Respondetur*, concedendo non deficere conditionatam veritatem Spei.*

18 He objects secondly. Fear is opposed to Hope; but fear is not borne conditionally, thus: If I die in mortal sin, I shall be damned; for he is certain of this.

> Obiicit secundo. Timor opponitur Spei; at timor non fertur conditionate, sic: Si moriar in peccato mortali, damnabor; est enim de hoc certus.

19 It is answered, that Fear is borne toward an imminent evil. Therefore it is borne conditionally. If therefore I do not do what I am bound to, I shall lose perseverance, without which I shall certainly not be saved.

> Respondetur*, Timorem ferri in malum imminens. Itaque conditionate fertur. Si ergo non egero, quod teneor, amittam perseverantiam, sine qua certo non salvabor.*

20 From these the holy Doctor gathers first ad 2. that the certainty of Hope does not rest on the firmness of the will alone; but that the will rests on God, who is our firmness, as D. August. says, lib. 11. Confess. cap. 30.

> Ex his colligit primo S. Doct. ad 2. certitudinem Spei non inniti sola firmitate voluntatis; sed ut voluntas innititur Deo, qui est firmitas nostra, ut ait D August. lib. 11. Confess. cap. 30.

21 He gathers secondly, that Hope has the certainty of order, because hope orders to salvation efficaciously and infallibly; but there is no certainty about the event, and thus even the foreknown are bound to hope, according to that: In him hath every congregation of the people hoped.

Colligit secundo, Spem habere certitudinem ordinis, quia efficaciter, et infallibiliter spes ordinat ad salutem; non est autem certitudo de eventu, et ita etiam praesciti sperare tenentur, iuxta id: Sperate in eo omnis congregatio populi.

22 Caspensis says the Tridentine spoke of this certainty of the event, when he appends the condition: But the words of the Council mean something else; for it says: Let no man promise himself anything with absolute certainty; although all ought to place and repose in the aid of God a most firm hope.

De hac certitudine eventus, ait Caspensis, locutum Tridentinum, dum conditionem apponit: Sed verba Concilii aliud sentiunt; ait enim: Nemo sibi certi aliquid absoluta certitudine polliceatur; tametsi in Dei auxilio firmissimam spem collocare et reponere omnes debent.

23 He gathers thirdly lib. 5. Compendii Theolog. cap. 12. that the Hope of the souls in Purgatory, and of the Fathers in the Limbo, declined somewhat from the notion of Hope toward that which is the certainty of science. So, he says, the high faith of Paul to the third heaven declined; and that of Stephen, when he saw Christ, Act. 7.; and of Adam in the state of innocence.

Colligit tertio lib. 5. Compendii Theolog. cap. 12. Spem animarum Purgatorii, et Patrum in Lymbo, declinasse aliquantulum a ratione Spei, in illam, quae est certitudo scientiae. Sic etiam declinare, ait, altam fidem Pauli ad tertiam caelum; Stephani, cum vidit Christum Act. 7. et Adae in statu innocentiae.

Question V: Whether hope is a virtue

1 The holy Doctor prefaces that Hope is sometimes taken for the affection: and thus the Philosophers and the holy Fathers say there are four affections of the soul: Joy, and Sorrow, Hope, and Fear. Sometimes it is taken for the thing expected, or hoped for, Tit. 2.: Waiting for the blessed hope. But it is taken thirdly for the habit directing the motion and affection of the soul toward that which is to be expected.

Praemittit S. Doct. Spem sumi aliquando pro affectione: et sic Philosophi, et SS. PP. dicunt quatuor esse affectiones animi: Gaudium, et Dolorem, Spem, et Timorem. Aliquando sumi pro re expectata, vel sperata, Tit. 2. Expectantes beatam spem. Sumi vero tertio pro habitu dirigente animae motum, et affectum in illud, quod expectandum est.

2 I assert first, that Hope is a Virtue.

Assero primo, Spem esse Virtutem.

3 It is proved from D. Bonaventure foundation 3. A habit repugnant to fault is a virtue; Hope is repugnant to Presumption and Despair: Therefore.

Probatur a D. Bonau. fundamento 3. Habitus, repugnans culpae, est virtus; Spes repugnat Praesumptioni, et Desperationi: Ergo.

4 It is proved secondly from the holy Doctor foundation 4., by the argument which D. Thomas uses: A habit rectifying the soul is a Virtue: for Virtue is a habit regulative and confirmative of a power, which makes the soul rejoice in those things which are right, as the Philosopher says, 2. Eth. cap. 3. 4. and 6. and 2. Rhet. and 7. Eth. cap. 14. Hope is of this kind. But there is a twofold rule, or measure, of human acts: One proximate and homogeneous, that is, reason: Another supreme and exceeding, that is, God; and on this account every act reaching to reason and to God is good; but the act of hope reaches to God: for the object of hope is the arduous good, possible to be had: Now something is possible to us in a twofold way: First, by ourselves. Secondly, by others, as is evident 3. Eth. cap. 3.

Therefore insofar as we hope for something possible by the aid of God, our Hope reaches to God himself, on whose aid it rests. Therefore Hope is a Virtue, and indeed a supernatural and gratuitous one.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. fundamento 4. ratione, qua utitur D. Thom. Habitus rectificans animam, est Virtus: Virtus enim est habitus potentiae regulativus, et confirmativus, qui facit animam gaudere circa ea, quae recta sunt, ut ait Philosoph. 2. Eth. cap. 3. 4. et 6. et 2. Rhet. et 7. Eth. cap. 14. Spes est huiusmodi. Humanorum vero actuum duplex est regula, seu mensura; Una proxima, et homogenea, idest ratio: Alia suprema excedens, idest Deus, et ob id omnis actus, attingens ad rationem, et Deum, est bonus; actus autem spei attingit ad Deum: obiectum enim spei est bonum arduum, possibile haberi: Possibile autem est aliquid nobis dupliciter: Primo per nos metipsos. Secundo per alios, ut patet 3. Eth. cap. 3. In quantum ergo speramus aliquid per Dei auxilium possibile, Spes nostra attingit ad ipsum Deum, cuius auxilio innititur. Igitur Spes est Virtus, et quidem supernaturalis, et gratuita.

5 I assert therefore secondly, that Hope is a gratuitous virtue.

> Assero igitur secundo, Spem esse virtutem gratuitam.

6 It is proved from St. Bonaventure first. That which makes one attain to salvation is from grace. Such is Hope, as is said Rom. 8.: For we are saved by hope: Therefore.

> Probatur a S. Bonau. primo. Id, quod ad salutem facit pervenire, est a gratia. Talis est Spes, ut dicitur Rom. 8. Spe salvi facti estis: Ergo.

7 It is proved secondly. That which renders acceptable to God is gratuitous: Such is Hope, Psal. 32.: The Lord is well pleased in them that fear him; and in them that hope in his mercy: Therefore.

> Probatur secundo. Quod reddit Deo acceptum, est gratuitum: Talis est Spes, Psal. 32. Beneplacitum est Domino super timentes eum; et in eis, qui sperant super misericordia eius: Ergo.

8 It is proved thirdly. A habit directly repugnant to a fault which immediately attains God is a supernatural virtue. Such is Hope, repugnant to presumption of beatitude without merits, and to despair of the Divine mercy: Therefore.

> Probatur tertio. Habitus directe repugnans culpae, quae Deum immediate attingit, est virtus superna. Talis est Spes repugnans praesumptioni beatitudinis absque meritis, et desperationi de Divina misericordia: Ergo.

9 It is proved fourthly. To expect that which is above every grasp of the natural appetite is as believing everything that is above every grasp of the intellect: But from this head Faith is a supernatural virtue: Therefore also Hope, which expects the things that transcend our heart, as is said 1 Corinth. 2.

> Probatur quarto. Ita se habet expectare, quod est supra omnem appetitus naturae captum, sicut credere omne, quod est supra omnem captum intellectus: Sed ex hoc capite Fides est virtus supernaturalis: Ergo et Spes, quae expectat ea, quae transcendunt cor nostrum, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 2.

10 Finally it is proved on the last foundation, and in the body of the text, by the argument made for the first assertion.

> Tandem probatur fundamento ultimo, et in corpore, ratione facta pro primo asserto.

11 YOU OBJECT first. No passion is a virtue, ex 2. Eth. cap. 5. and lib. 3. where he says: In the soul there are three things, Powers, Passions, and Habits; but virtue is concerned among the habits. But hope is a passion ex Boët. de consol. Therefore.

OBIICIES primo. Nulla passio est virtus, ex 2. Eth. cap. 5. et lib. 3. ubi ait: In anima tria sunt, Potentiae, Passiones, et Habitus; inter habitus autem versatur virtus. Sed spes est passio ex Boët. de consol. Ergo.

12 The holy Doctor answers that Hope is taken here as it is regulative of the passions, and it is a Virtue.

RESPONDET S. Doct. hic sumi Spem, ut est regulativa passionum, et est Virtus.

13 YOU OBJECT secondly. As it happens to expect future things, so to remember past things: But this is not a virtue: Therefore neither that; for Hope is either the expectation of future things, or arises from it.

OBIICIES secundo. Sicut contingit expectare futura, ita rememorari praeterita: Sed hoc non est virtus: Ergo neque illud; nam Spes, vel est expectatio futurorum, vel ab ea oritur.

14 He answers by denying the parity; for virtue stands more in regulating actions to be done than in acts. Moreover remembering stands in Cognition; but expectation in the Affective; and virtue regards more the regulating of the affect. Hence also the act of virtue is linked to remuneration, as it is joined to affection: for instance, that of prudence, or penance, or charity, insofar as it recalls past deeds done, that it may act better in the future; or past evils, that it may sorrow; or benefits, that it may give thanks.

RESPONDET, negando paritatem; nam virtus magis stat in regulandis agendis, quam actis. Deinde rememoratio stat in Cognitione; expectatio vero in Affectiva; virtus autem magis respicit regulare affectum. Hinc etiam remunerationi, ut iungitur affectioni, adnectitur actus virtutis; puta prudentiae, vel poenitentiae, vel charitatis, quatenus recordatur praeteritorum factorum, ut futura melius agat; vel praeteritorum malorum, ut doleat; vel beneficiorum, ut gratias agat.

15 YOU OBJECT thirdly. As it happens to hope rightly, so also to fear rightly: but the habit which directs the soul in fearing is not a virtue: Therefore.

OBIICIES tertio. Sicut contingit recte sperare, ita et recte timere: sed habitus, qui dirigit animam in timendo, non est virtus: Ergo.

16 The holy Doctor answers by denying the parity, because Fear stands in recoiling; Hope in pursuing: and therefore Fear has more of passion; Hope indeed of action; and because the habits of the virtues direct the soul in those acts in which the rectitude of life consists, according to that which is said: Virtue is a good quality of the mind, whereby one lives rightly; hence it is that Hope is more in the genus of virtue than Fear. Hence also it is clear why the habit of virtue stands more about the affection of Hope than about the other three affections related above; for Joy, and Sorrow, because they have a conjoined object, stand more in sustaining; but the affection of Hope, among the others, stands more in acting; and therefore although, as it is a passion, it is not a virtue, yet as it is the stretching forth of the soul toward the thing hoped for, it is a virtue.

RESPONDET S. Doct. negando paritatem, quia Timor stat in resilitione; Spes in prosecutione: et ideo Timor magis habet de passione; Spes vero de actione; et quia habitus virtutum dirigunt animam in actibus, in quibus consistit rectitudo vitae, iuxta id, quod dicitur: Virtus est bona qualitas mentis, qua recte vivitur; hinc est, quod Spes magis est in genere virtutis, quam Timor. Hinc etiam patet; cur magis circa affectionem Spei consistat habitus virtutis, quam circa alias tres affectiones, supra relatas; nam Gaudium, et Dolor, quia habent obiectum coniunctum, magis sunt in sustinendo; affectus vero Spei inter caeteras, magis stat in agendo; et ideo licet, ut est passio, non sit virtus, tamen ut est protensio animae in rem speratam, est virtus.

17 YOU OBJECT fourthly: Every moral virtue stands about the good and the difficult, ex Aristotle 2. Eth. cap. 3. But in the expectation of the goods promised by God there is no difficulty, since God cannot lie: Therefore.

> OBIICIES quarto; Omnis virtus moralis consistit circa bonum, et difficile, ex Aristotele 2. Eth. cap. 3. Sed in expectatione bonorum promissorum a Deo, non est difficultas, cum Deus nequeat mentiri: Ergo.

18 He answers, that as to believe the things which are naturally proved to us is easy, so also to hope for what is naturally obvious: But to hope for supernatural things, which neither sense nor intellect perceives, and to despise our goods for these, is arduous and worthy of great praise.

> RESPONDET, quod sicut credere ea, quae naturaliter probata nobis sunt, est facile; ita et sperare, quae naturaliter obvia: At sperare supernaturalia, quae nec sensus, nec intellectus percipit, et pro his bona nostra contemnere, est arduum, et magna dignum laude.

19 YOU OBJECT fifthly. No gratuitous virtue in its act is repugnant to the perfection of merit; but Hope in its act is repugnant to the perfection of merit; for it proceeds from imperfection that anyone serve God on account of a future retribution; because, as St. Bernard says de diligendo Deo, cap. 4.: Charity does not look upon the reward. But Hope makes one expect a future retribution for merits: Therefore it is not a gratuitous virtue.

> OBIICIES quinto. Nulla virtus gratuita in suo actu repugnat perfectioni meriti; sed Spes in suo actu repugnat perfectioni meriti; ex imperfectione enim procedit, ut quis serviat Deo propter retributionem futuram; quia, ut ait S. Bernardus de diligendo Deo, cap. 4. Charitas praemium non intuetur. At vero Spes facit expectare pro meritis retributionem futuram: Ergo non est virtus gratuita.

20 The holy Doctor answers first, that the act of Hope does not diminish merit; but, as the Apostle says, it rises up from the perfection of merit: For the greater merits anyone has, the more firmly and more certainly does he hope. Nor is detracted from Charity the expecting of God himself, whom it loves, as the reward wherewith it may be united; for the greatest charity most of all desires to be united to God. But this reward we hope for, as is had Genes. 15.: I am thy reward exceeding great. And the holy Doctor shows this a posteriori: for the true Saints, who expect beatitude, are little solicitous about themselves; much about God. Thus they despise all things, that they may be united to God in the fatherland.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. primo, Spei actum, non minuere meritum; sed, ut ait Apostolus, illum consurgere ex meriti perfectione: Quanto enim aliquis maiora habet merita; tanto firmius, et certius sperat. Neque detrahitur Charitati, expectando ipsum Deum, quem diligit, in mercedem, cui uniatur; maxima enim charitas maxime desiderat Deo uniri. Hanc autem mercedem speramus, ut habetur Genes. 15. Ego ero merces tua magna nimis. Et hoc a posteriori ostendit S. Doct. nam veri Sancti, qui expectant beatitudinem, parum de se; multum de Deo sunt solliciti. Sic spernunt omnia, ut Deo uniantur in patria.

21 MOREOVER, the mercenary Hope is evil in that it places the end in its own advantage, as Caspensis also says sect. 4.; but to serve God on account of a reward according to the Divine will, which declares that he wills to give it, Matth. 20.: Call the workmen, and pay them their reward; is not a defect, but an honest act, as the Council of Trent defines, sess. 6. cap. 11. and can. 31.: If anyone shall say that the justified sins, while he does good works in view of an eternal reward; let him be anathema. The Fathers of the Council prove this from Psal. 118.: I have inclined my heart to do thy justifications in eternity, on account of the retribution. And Hebr. 11. Paul reports that Moses, most holy, underwent most studious labors, because he looked upon the recompense. Therefore God often proposes the sweetness of the reward, Deuter. 11., Apoc. ult. For it is honest to seek one's own last end.

> CAETERUM Spes mercenaria ea mala est, quae ponit finem in proprio commodo, ut ait etiam Caspensis sect. 4. servire autem Deo ob mercedem iuxta Divinam voluntatem, quae declarat, se velle dare Matth. 20. Voca operarios, et redde illis mercedem; non est defectus, sed actus honestus, ut definit Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 11. et can. 31. Si quis dixerit, iustificatum peccare, dum intuitu aeternae mercedis bene operatur; anathema sit. Probant hoc Patres Concilii ex Psal. 118. Inclinavi cor meum ad faciendas iustificationes tuas in aeternum, propter retributionem. Et Hebr. 11. refert Paulus, Moysen sanctissimum studiosissima opera exantlasse, quia aspiciebat in remunerationem. Ideo saepe Deus proponit oblectam praemii Deuter. 11. Apoc. ult. honestum est enim ultimum suum finem appetere.

22 Hence against the Sectaries I hold that it is honest to expect eternal glory, as the crown of labors. For thus also Paul, 2. Timot. 4.: I have fought the good fight, etc. Therefore there is laid up for me a crown of justice. And Tobias 4.: Great will be the confidence before the most high God for alms to all those who do it. I add, that it is lawful to hope also from prayers, and studious works, for a temporal good, provided that in this the last end is not placed.

> Hinc contra Sectarios habeo, honestum esse gloriam aeternam expectare, ut coronam laborum. Sic enim et Paulus 2. Timot. 4. Bonum certamen certavi, etc. Ideo reposita est mihi corona iustitiae. Et Tobias 4. Fiducia magna erit coram summo Deo eleemosyna omnibus facientibus eam. Addo, licitum esse etiam sperare ex orationibus, et operibus studiosis bonum temporale, dummodo in hoc non ponatur finis ultimus.

Question VI: Whether hope is a theological virtue

1 By the calculations of all Theologians it is established that Hope is a Theological virtue.

> OMNIUM Theologorum calculis statuitur, Spem esse Theologicam virtutem.

2 It is PROVED first by St. Bonaventure, because the Apostle places it in order with Faith and Charity, 1. Corinth. 13.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo, quia Apostolus eam ponit in ordine cum Fide, et Charitate 1. Corinth. 13.

3 It is PROVED second by the Holy Doctor, because that virtue which is the end of the Cardinal virtues is Theological: Such is Hope; Therefore. The minor is proved, because it tends to God as the beatific object, to which the objects of the other virtues serve as means.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. quia illa virtus, quae est finis virtutum Cardinalium, est Theologica: Talis est Spes; Ergo. Minor probatur, quia tendit in Deum, ut obiectum beatificum, ad quod obiecta aliarum virtutum inserviunt, ut media.

4 It is PROVED third by St. Bonaventure cap. 6. ad Hebr. where it is said, to have Hope entering even within the veil, that is, even to the hidden things of God, as Valencia also notes disp. 2. quaest. 1. puncto primo.

> PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonaventura cap. 6. ad Hebr. ubi dicitur, habere Spem incedentem usque ad interiora velaminis, idest usque ad recondita Dei, ut advertit etiam Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 1. puncto primo.

5 It is PROVED fourth by the Holy Doctor: it is of the same reason a mean between the extremes: But Hope is a mean between faith, which begins the spiritual building; and Charity, which completes it; for Hope raises one up to God: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. eiusdem rationis est medium cum extremis: Sed Spes est media inter fidem, quae inchoat aedificium spirituale; et Charitatem, quae consummat; nam Spes erigit in Deum: Ergo.

6 It is PROVED fifth by the Holy Doctor: The image of creation is reformed through re-creation; but the image of creation requires three powers: Therefore also the image of re-creation requires three virtues. Since therefore the image is reformed through the Theological virtues: therefore they are three, but none other than faith, Hope, and Charity: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. Imago creationis reformatur per recreationem; sed imago creationis exigit tres potentias: Ergo et imago recreationis requirit tres virtutes. Cum ergo imago reformetur per virtutes Theologicas: ergo sunt tres, sed non aliae praeter fidem, Spem, et Charitatem: Ergo.

7 Finally it is proved in the body from the object; because it regards God immediately, as the object to be acquired in beatitude. Therefore, just as faith is Theological because it leans on God revealing the truth; so Hope, because it leans on God promising great things.

> TANDEM probatur in corpore ex obiecto; quia respicit immediate Deum, ut obiectum acquirendum in beatitudine. Igitur, sicuti fides est Theologica, quia nititur Deo revelanti vera; ita Spes, quia nititur Deo promittenti magna.

8 It is proved also on the part of the subject; because the higher portion of the soul is reformed in order to God by the Theological virtues: But Hope is one of the reforming virtues; for just as the rational is reformed by faith, the concupiscible by charity, so the irascible is reformed by Hope. This is also shown, because the dowries of the soul in the fatherland correspond to the reformation. Thus to faith will correspond the vision, reforming the Rational; to charity the consummated Charity of the way, reforming the Concupiscible. Thus also to the third, corresponding to Hope, will correspond that which will reform the Irascible.

> PROBATUR etiam ex parte subiecti; quia portio superior animae reformatur in ordine ad Deum virtutes Theologicas: At Spes est una e virtutibus reformantibus; nam sicuti rationalis fide, concupiscibilis charitate, ita Spe reformatur irascibilis. Hoc etiam ostenditur, quia dotes animae in patria respondent reformationi. Sic fidei respondebit visio, reformans Rationalem; charitati viae Charitas consummata, reformans Concupiscibilem. Sic et tertio respondens Spei, Irascibilem reformabit.

9 You will object first. No virtue, around whose act excess can be found, is Theological; for God is never believed too much, nor loved too much; but in Hope there can be excess, for some hope for more than their merits require: Therefore.

> Obiicies primo. Nulla virtus, circa cuius actum potest reperiri excessus, est Theologica; nunquam enim nimis Deo creditur, aut nimis amatur; sed in Spe potest esse excessus, aliqui enim plus sperant, quam merita exigunt: Ergo.

10 The Holy Doctor answers that that virtue, in whose acts there is excessive intensity, is truly not Theological; but in the acts of Hope there is no excessive intensity; for no one hopes in the Lord too much; but the excess is not in the genus of hope, but of presumption, on the part of the subject, from a defect of the condition of hope, which requires that one hope in God in the manner revealed by God. Therefore excess of intensity cannot be in the acts of the Theological virtues, which have an infinite object; but in the object of the Cardinal virtues, which is finite and determinate, whence if the act, transgressing the limits, exceeds, declining to the extremes, it deviates into vices.

Respondet S. Doct. illam virtutem, in cuius actibus est nimia intensio, vere non esse Theologicam; at in Spei actibus non est nimia intensio; nemo enim nimis sperat in Domino; sed excessus non est in genere spei, sed praesumptionis, ex parte subiecti, ex defectu conditionis spei, quae exigit, ut speretur in Deo, modo a Deo revelato. Excessus igitur intensionis non potest esse in actibus virtutum Theologicarum, quae habent obiectum infinitum; sed in obiecto virtutum Cardinalium, quod est finitum, et determinatum, unde si limites transgrediens, actus excedat, declinans ad extrema, deviat ad vitia.

11 You will object second. A virtue which is a mean between two malices is Cardinal, not Theological: But Hope is a mean between despair and presumption: Therefore.

12 The Holy Doctor answers that a virtue which is a mean between two malices, by participating in the extremes with respect to those things which are good, is Cardinal, or of the Cardinal species: Thus Liberality is a mean between avarice, participating in its material subject, keeping what is to be kept, and between prodigality, participating in its material subject, inasmuch as it gives what is to be given. But truly, if it is a mean only in an eliminative way with respect to each extreme, it can be Theological. Such is Hope, a mean between despair and presumption; for it frees from that twofold evil; just as faith concerning the Trinity and unity frees from the extremes, the error of Arius and the error of Sabellius.

Respondet S. Doct. Virtutem, quae est media inter duas malitias, participando de extremis quoad ea, quae bona sunt, esse Cardinalem, vel Cardinalis speciem: Sic Liberalitas est media inter avaritiam participans de eius materiali subiecto, tenens tenenda, et inter prodigalitatem, participans de eius materiali subiecto, quatenus dat danda. At vero, si sit media tantum, ut eliminativa utriusque extremi, potest esse Theologica. Talis est Spes, media inter desperationem, et praesumptionem; liberat enim ab illo duplici malo; sicut fides de Trinitate, et unitate liberat ab errore Arrii, et ab errore Sabellii, extremis.

13 You will object third. A virtue which is concerned with means to the ultimate end is Cardinal. Hope is concerned with grace, perseverance, and the other means of salvation: Therefore.

Obiicies tertio. Virtus, quae versatur circa media ad finem ultimum, est Cardinalis. Spes versatur circa gratiam, perseverantiam, et caetera media salutis: Ergo.

14 The Holy Doctor answers that the genus or species of virtue is not determined by any object whatever, but by that object which has the character of motive; and although Hope is concerned also with means to salvation, nevertheless its motive object is God; as the ultimate end, beatitude, to which grace and the other means, which it hopes from him, are ordered.

Respondet S. Doct. non determinari genus, vel speciem virtutis penes obiectum quodcumque, sed penes illud obiectum, quod habet rationem motivi; quamvis autem Spes versetur etiam circa media ad salutem, tamen obiectum motivum est Deus; ut finis ultimus beatus, ad quem ordinantur gratia, et alia media, quae sperat ab eo.

15 If you say that also Latria and the whole virtue of Religion regard God; nevertheless it is not a Theological virtue, because it regards also a created thing as object, namely such worship.

Si dicas, etiam Latriam, et Religionis totius virtutem respicere Deum; attamen non esse virtutem Theologicam, quia respicit etiam rem creatam tanquam obiectum, nempe cultum talem.

16 The Holy Doctor answers that it is not similar, because Latria regards that created act as object; and thus does not regard God immediately, as Hope does.

> Respondet S. Doct. non esse simile, quia Latria respicit actum illum creatum, ut obiectum; atque adeo non respicit Deum immediate, sicuti facit Spes.

17 You will object fourth. Habits are distinguished by acts: But the acts of hope and the acts of longanimity are the same, namely, to await good things: Therefore Hope and Longanimity are of the same genus; But Longanimity is Cardinal: Therefore also Hope.

> Obiicies quarto. Habitus per actus distinguuntur: Sed actus spei, et actus longanimitatis sunt iidem, nempe, expectare bona: Ergo Spes, et Longanimitas sunt eiusdem generis; Sed Longanimitas est Cardinalis: Ergo et Spes.

18 The Holy Doctor answers that Hope awaits eternal goods, and those promised by God: But Longanimity, which is a part of Fortitude, awaits by constancy and strength of soul to triumph over afflictors; and therefore its object is of an inferior order.

> Respondet S. Doct. Spem expectare bona aeterna, ipsamque Dei promissis: Longanimitas vero, quae est pars Fortitudinis, constantia, et robore animi expectat de affligentibus triumphare; et ideo eius obiectum est inferioris ordinis.

19 You will object fifth. It belongs to Fortitude to strengthen against afflictors: But this also pertains to Hope, because it makes a man rejoice in adversities: Therefore.

20 The Holy Doctor answers that an act can be of some virtue, either as eliciting, or as commanding, or as assisting. To endure terrible things is of fortitude, as eliciting; but of faith as commanding and dictating, as is said Hebr. 11. The Saints by faith conquered kingdoms, etc. They were made strong in battle, but of Hope and Charity, as assisting. For the love of God and the hope of beatitude greatly assist the virtue of Fortitude, that it may be able to bear all evils, according to that saying of B. Gregory: The hope of reward diminishes the force of the scourge.

> Respondet S. Doct. actum posse esse alicuius virtutis, vel sicut elicientis, vel sicut imperantis, vel sicut adiuvantis. Perferre terribilia est fortitudinis, sicut elicientis; sed fidei sicut imperantis, et dictantis, sicut dicitur Hebr. 11. Sancti per fidem vicerunt regna, etc. Fortes facti sunt in bello*, sed Spei, et Charitatis, ut adiuvantis. Amor enim Dei, et Spes beatitudinis multum adiuvant virtutem Fortitudinis, ut possit omnia mala perferre iuxta id B. Gregorii:* Spes praemii minuit vim flagelli.

Question VII: Whether hope is at times formless

1 I assert most certainly that Hope is at times unformed.

> Certissime assero, Spem aliquando esse informem.

2 It is proved first by St. Bonaventure from St. Augustine de vera Innocentia, where he attributes being unformed to Charity alone.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo ex D. August. de vera Innocentia, ubi soli Charitati tribuit, esse tantum informem.

3 Second, because just as formed Hope arises from formed faith; so unformed Hope ought to arise from unformed faith: But unformed faith is granted, as is said 1 Corinth. 13. Therefore.

Secundo, quia sicuti Spes formata oritur e fide formata; ita Spes informis a fide informi debet oriri: Sed datur fides informis, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 13. Ergo.

4 Third. For thus Hope arises from faith in rewards, just as fear from faith in punishments: But fear can be unformed: Therefore.

Tertio. Sic enim Spes consurgit ex fide praemiorum, sicuti timor ex fide suppliciorum: Sed timor potest esse informis: Ergo.

5 Fourth. For many sinners hope that they will obtain mercy and glory; But this act ought to arise from some good habit, because it rectifies the power to the Divine rule, which most of all forbids despairing of the mercy of God. For thus also faith strengthens reason to believe the things revealed, even when stained by deadly sin. And the Holy Doctor concludes that those things which were said of unformed faith are to be applied to Hope.

Quarto. Multi enim peccatores sperant, se misericordiam consecuturos, et gloriam; Iste autem actus ab aliquo habitu bono oriri debet, quia rectificat potentiam ad Divinam regulam, quae maxime prohibet desperare de misericordia Dei. Sic enim et fides roborat rationem ad credendum revelata, etiam in peccato maculati mortifero. Concludit autem S. D. ea, quae dicta sunt de fide informi, applicari Spei.

6 You will object first. Hope is a certain expectation of glory proceeding from grace and merits; as is said in the definition of Hope.

Obiicies primo. Spes est certa expectatio gloriae prouentiens ex gratia, et meritis; ut dicitur in definitione Spei.

7 The Holy Doctor answers in four ways that hope arises from grace and merits; Either as they are had in act, and this is the formed faith of the iusti emeriti: Or as they are had in proposal, and in root; but not in effect, and thus he who was lately justified has merits, has the root of grace, but has not yet exercised the virtues: Or someone hopes from merits in proposal; but not in effect, nor in the root of grace; and this is unformed faith: Or one hopes without merits even in proposal; and this is presumption. Since therefore Hope is defined expectation from merits, it is defined from merits, at least in proposal.

Respondet S Doct: quatuor modis spem ex gratia, et meritis oriri; Vel ut habentur actu, et haec est fides formata iusti emeriti: Vel ut habentur in proposito, et in radice; sed non in effectu, et sic ille, habet merita, qui nuper iustificatus, habet radicem gratiae, sed nondum exercuit virtutes: Vel aliquis sperat ex meritis in proposito; sed non in effectu, nec in radice gratiae; et haec est fides informis: Vel sperat sine meritis etiam in proposito; et haec est praesumptio. Cum igitur definitur Spes expectatio ex meritis*, definitur ex meritis, saltem in proposito.*

8 And by this he answers the second, opposing that Hope without merits is evil.

Et per haec respondet ad secundum, opponens, Spem sine meritis esse malam.

9 You will object second. With the proximate subject disordered, the virtue existing in it is taken away; but Hope is in the affect; therefore, this being disordered, Hope is taken away together with charity, which, if faith remains, this is because it has being also in the intellect.

Obiicies secundo. Deordinato subiecto proximo, tollitur virtus in eo existens; at Spes est in affectu; ergo, hoc deordinato, tollitur Spes simul cum charitate, quod si manet fides, hoc est, quia habet esse etiam in intellectu.

10 The Holy Doctor answers that Hope remains even when Charity is destroyed, because it stands in awaiting eternal things; but this stands without Charity; just as it stands to believe the things revealed without sanctifying grace. Therefore the ratio of the subject is not adequate, because the affect disordered in loving can be with some order to hoping from merits, certainly in proposal.

> Respondet S. Doct. quod Spes manet etiam destructa Charitate, quia stat in expectandis aeternis; hoc autem stat sine Charitate; sicut stat credere revelata absque gratia sanctificante. Ideo ratio subiecti non est adaequata, quia affectus deordinatus in amando potest esse cum aliquo ordine ad sperandum ex meritis sane in proposito.

11 You will object lastly. Faith is then formed, when it does not believe God, but believes in God, tending to him: Therefore Hope, which tends to God, is always formed.

> Obiicies ultimo. Fides tunc est formata, quando non credit Deo, sed credit in Deum, tendens in illum: Ergo Spes, quae tendit in Deum, semper est formata.

12 The Holy Doctor answers that the perfect tendency is from grace; but this tendency is not in him who believes and hopes, while he is in sin.

> Respondet Respondet S. Doct. tendentiam perfectam esse a gratia, haec autem tendentia non est in eo, qui credit, et sperat, dum est in peccato.

Question VIII: Whether hope arises from merits

1 Calvin, with impious mouth, lib. 3. Instit. cap. 2. §. last, against the Master and St. Bonaventure and others saying that Hope is begotten in us from the grace of God and merits, thus barks deeply: Who would not deservedly execrate such beasts? O a Master worthy of Tartarean disciples!

> An SPES oriatur ex meritis.
> Calvinus ore infando lib. 3. Instit. cap. 2. §. ultimo, contra Magistrum, et D. Bonaventuram, aliosque dicentes, Spem gigni in nobis ex gratia Dei, et meritis; sic alte oblatrat: Quis non merito tales bestias execretur? O magistrum Tartareis dignum discipulis!

2 But Wicleph taught an error plainly contrary to this, following Pelagius. Bellarmine reports them lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 7.

> Ar Vuicleph. errorem huic plane contrarium docuit, secutus Pelagium. Eos refert Bellarminus lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 7.

3 The Catholic Church teaches indeed that the principal Hope and confidence is to be placed in the grace of God; yet also some in merits from grace.

> Catholica Ecclesia praecipuam quidem Spem, et fiduciam in gratia Dei ponendam docet; aliquam tamen etiam in meritis ex gratia.

4 I assert first, that the confidence of the Saints is born also from good merits.

> Assero primo, Fiduciam Sanctorum ex bonis etiam meritis nasci.

5 It is proved first by St. Bonaventure from the Scriptures, Rom. 5. Tribulation worketh patience; and patience trial; and trial hope; And hope confoundeth not. Thus the same Apostle speaks also 1 Timot. 3. They who have ministered well shall acquire to themselves a good degree, and much confidence. Hebr. 10. You had compassion on them that were in bonds, and took with joy the spoiling of your goods. Do not therefore lose your confidence. Thus Tobias 4. Great confidence shall there be before the most high God for them who do alms. Iob. 11. If thou shalt take away the iniquity that is in thy hand; and if iniquity remain not in thy tabernacle: then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot: and thou shalt have confidence, hope being set before thee, and shalt be buried in peace and shalt sleep secure.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. primo e Scripturis, Rom. 5. Tribulatio patientiam operatur patientia autem probationem, probatio vero spem; Spes autem non confundit. Sic idem Apostolus loquitur etiam prima Timot. 3. Qui bene ministraverint, gradum bonum sibi acquirent, et multam fiduciam. Hebr. 10. Vinctis compassi estis, et rapinam bonorum vestrorum cum gaudio suscepistis. Nolite itaque amittere confidentiam vestram. Sic Tobias 4. Fiducia magna erit coram summo Deo eleemosyna omnibus facientibus eam. Iob. 11. Si iniquitatem, quae in manu tua est, abstuleris a te; et non manserit in tabernaculo tuo iniustitia: tunc levare poteris faciem tuam: et habebis fiduciam proposita tibi spe, et defossus securus dormies.

6 This is confirmed by examples Psal. 17. Most holy David says: And the Lord will reward me according to my justice. The Holy Doctor observes this in the Commentary, that merit arises from faith, hope, and charity, but again hope, or confidence, from merit, by which charity also is increased.

> Id exemplis confirmatur Psal. 17. David sanctissimus ait: Et retribuet mihi Dominus secundum iustitiam meam. Id observat S. Doct. in Commentario, meritum oriri ex fide, spe, et charitate, sed rursum spem, seu fiduciam ex merito, quo augetur et charitas.

7 The same Holy Doctor shows in the Bibliis, cap. 16. from other prayers of the Saints, of Ezechias: I beseech thee, O Lord, remember, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth; Isaie 38. Hester, cap. 14. Thou knowest my necessity, that I abhor the sign of pride, etc. Hear the voices of those who have no other hope, and deliver us.

> Idem ostendit S. Doct. in Bibliis, cap. 16. ex aliis Sanctorum orationibus, Ezechie: Obsecro Domine, memento quaeso quomodo ambulaverim coram te in veritate; Isaie 38. Hester, cap. 14. Tu scis necessitatem meam, quod abominer signum superbiae, etc. Exaudi voces eorum, qui nullam aliam spem habent, et libera nos.

8 It is proved also from the Fathers, by Cyprian serm. de eleemosyna: A splendid and Divine thing, a saving work, a bulwark of hope, etc.

> Probatur etiam ex Patribus, Cypriano serm. de eleemosyna: Praeclara, et Divina res, salutaris operatio, munimentum spei, etc.

9 Other Fathers have similar things with St. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 49. St. Gregory homil. 40. in Evang. on that of Luke 16. Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of iniquity, where he says: If the heavenly patrimony is purchased by almsdeeds, the poor are to be entreated as patrons. See others there.

> Similia habent alii Patres apud D. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 49. S. Gregorius homil. 40. in Evang. in illud Lucae 16. Facite vobis amicos de mammona iniquitatis, ubi ait: Si coeleste patrimonium eleemosynis emitur, pauperes, ut patroni, sunt exorandi. Vide alios ibi.

10 The Holy Doctor reports others in the same book cap. 24. thus St. Gregory, lib. 10. Moral. cap. 12. The firmer Hope in God rises, the heavier things for him each one has endured. St. Bernard. de diligendo Deo, cap. 14. From the faith of the precepts arises the hope of pardon, etc. You have very many testimonies in the same Book of the Seraphic Doctor, and the following.

> Alios refert S. Doct. eodem lib. cap. 24. sic D. Gregorius, lib. 10. Moral. cap. 12. Tanto in Deum Spes solidior surgit, quanto pro illo quisque graviora pertulerit. S. Bernard. de diligendo Deo, cap. 14. De fide praeceptorum oritur spes veniae, etc. Plurima habes testimonia eodem Libro Seraphici, et sequentibus.

11 It is proved second by the Holy Doctor from the definition of hope. It is the expectation of beatitude from grace and merits.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. ex definitione spei. Est expectatio beatitudinis ex gratia, et meritis.

12 It is proved third by the argument which Bellarmine uses. From faith we have the promises of God, given to those who keep the law and love God, as is established by very many testimonies of Scripture, as I shall soon relate; Therefore our hope, just as it is from faith, is certain; but faith proposes the promises of God from works through grace; what difficulty therefore is there that we can hence hope?

> Probatur tertio ratione, qua utitur Bellarminus. Nos ex fide habemus promissa Dei, data servantibus legem, et diligentibus Deum, ut plurimis constat Scripturae testimoniis, ut mox referam; Igitur spes nostra, sicuti est ex fide, certa est; fides autem promissa Dei ex operibus per gratiam proponit; quae igitur difficultas est, posse nos hinc sperare?

13 I shall add the Example of the Seraphic Father St. Francis, whose last words were, as St. Bonav. reports and Bellarmine weighs: Bring my soul out of prison, that it may confess to thy name: the just await me, until thou reward me. The same Jerome reports of St. Hilarion, and Sulpitius of Saint Martin.

> Apponam Exemplum Seraphici P. S. Francisci, cuius extrema verba fuere, ut refert S. Bonav. et ponderat Bellarminus: Educ de custodia animam meam ad confitendum nomini tuo, me expectant iusti, donec retribuas mihi. Idem de S. Hilarione refert D. Hieronymus, et de Sancto Martino Sulpitius.

14 Truly those things which the adversaries oppose prove only that, on account of the uncertainty of our own justice and the danger of vain glory, we should rest safely in the bosom of the mercy of God.

> Ea vero, quae opponunt adversarii, solum probant, nos propter incertitudinem propriae iustitiae, et periculum inanis gloriae, tute in Dei misericordiae sinu requiescere.

15 That indicates that saying of Luke 17. When you shall have done all these things, say: we are unprofitable servants, as St. Bonav. observes in the Commentary, where he also gives other reasons why we ought thus to humble ourselves.

> Id indicat illud Lucae 17. Cum feceritis haec omnia, dicite: servi inutiles sumus, ut observat S. Bonav. in Commentario, ubi alias etiam rationes reddit, cur ita humiliari debeamus.

16 The first is, because the price by which we render our works precious and worthy of eternal life is not our own arbitrium; but grace, which was bought with a great price, namely the blood of Christ, as is said 1 Cor. 6. and 1 Peter 1. therefore we have all merits from the grace of God. Therefore he here reports that of James 1. Every best gift is from above. See ad 1. here.

> Prima est, quia pretium, quo reddimus opera pretiosa, et digna vita aeterna, non est nostrum arbitrium; sed gratia, quae pretio magno empta est, Christi nimirum sanguine, ut dicitur prima Cor. 6. et prima Petri 1. omnia igitur merita ex Dei gratia habemus. Ideo hic refert illud Iacobi 1. Omne datum optimum deorsum est. Vide ad 1. hic.

17 Second, because whatever we give to God contributes nothing to him, Psal. 15. I said to the Lord: Thou art my God, for thou hast no need of my goods.

> Secunda, quia quaecumque demus Deo, nihil ei conferunt, Psal. 15. Dixi Domino: Deus meus es tu, quoniam bonorum meorum non eges.

18 Third, because whatever we do is nothing compared with that which we are bound to do, Psal. 115. What shall I render to the Lord for all the things that he hath rendered to me.

> Tertia, quia quidquid facimus nihil est, comparatum cum eo, quod facere tenemur, Psal. 115. Quid retribuam Domino pro omnibus, quae retribuit mihi.

19 Fourth, because what we work and suffer is not equal to the reward, Rom. 8. The sufferings of this time are not worthy to be compared with the future glory, etc. Therefore he observes that the twenty-four Seniores Apoc. 4. cried out, casting their crowns before the throne of God and of the Lamb: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour, and Daniel. cap. 9. Confusion of face is ours, O our kings, who have sinned. But to thee, O Lord, mercy and propitiation. See the Holy Doctor.

> Quarta, quia quod operamur, et patimur, non est aequale praemio, Rom. 8. Non sunt condignae passiones huius temporis ad futuram gloriam, etc. Ideo observat, vigintiquatuor Seniores Apoc. 4. clamasse, mittentes coronas ante thronum Dei, et Agni: Dignus es Domine accipere gloriam, et honorem, et Daniel. cap. 9. Nobis confusio faciei, regibus nostris, qui peccavimus. Tibi autem Domino misericordia, et propitiatio. Vide Sanctum Doctorem.

20 From these also you have that which I proved quaest. 5. ad 6. ultimam, that it is lawful to work with the intention and hope of reward. For God so promised it, Matth. 4. Do penance; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand: Matth. 5. Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven, etc. Hence John took the beginning of his preaching, Matth. 3. Hence Christ commanded the Apostles to begin the preaching Matth. 10. and therefore, 1 Corinth. 9. He who ploughs ought to plough in Hope: and he who threshes, in the hope of receiving fruit. See Bellarmine lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 8.

> Ex his etiam habes id, quod probavi quaest. 5. ad 6. ultimam, licitum esse operari intuitu, et spe mercedis. Deus enim eam sic promisit, Matth. 4. Poenitentiam agite; appropinquavit enim regnum caelorum: Matth. 5. Beati pauperes spiritu, quoniam ipsorum est regnum caelorum, etc. Hinc enim Ioannes exordium sumpsit praedicationis, Matth. 3. Hinc Christus iussit, Apostolos praedicationem exordiri Matth. 10. et ideo, prima Corinth. 9. Debet in Spe, qui arat, arare: et qui triturat, in spe fructus percipiendi. Vide Bellarminum lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 8.

21 From which it appears that Calvin, lib. 3. Instit. cap. 6. §. 3. and cap. 18., was scrupulously depraved to fear hence to begin sermons: Rather shall I say, he impiously lay in ambush against vital works.

> Ex quo apparet, scrupulose depravatum Calvini lib. 3. Instit. cap. 6. §. 3. et cap. 18. timuisse hinc conciones exordiri: Satius dixero, infandum maligne vitalibus operibus insidiari.

22 But that you may perceive in what way the Hope of glory arises from merits, since merits suppose hope, and indeed even charity; The Holy Doctor observes in the body, that Hope sometimes names the habit of virtue; sometimes names the act; sometimes names the state; sometimes the term, or object. The virtue, which is a habit, does not arise from merits; but on the contrary, merits arise from it. The act of hope arises from the regard of merits; for no one hopes for beatitude except he who has served God, or who proposes to serve. Hope, as it names the state, has its origin from preceding and concomitant merits, and in this way the Apostle speaks Rom. 5. Tribulation worketh patience: and patience trial; and trial hope, where the Gloss has, certitudinem spei. But according as hope signifies the thing hoped for, it arises from preceding merits; and in this way the objection related is solved, and the other which the Holy Doctor adds: Just as despair arises only from demerits, so Hope from the merits alone of our will.

> Ut autem percipias, quo pacto Spes gloriae ex meritis oriatur, cum merita supponant spem, imo et charitatem; Observat S. Doct. in corpore, quod Spes aliquando nominat habitum virtutis; aliquando nominat actum; aliquando nominat statum; aliquando terminum, sive obiectum. Virtus, quae est habitus, non oritur e meritis; sed e contra, merita oriuntur ex ea. Actus spei oritur ex meritorum intuitu; nullus enim sperat beatitudinem, nisi, qui Deo servivit, vel qui proponit servire. Spes, ut nominat statum, ortum habet ex meritis praecedentibus, et concomitantibus, et hoc modo loquitur Apostolus Rom. 5. Tribulatio operatur patientiam: patientia probationem; probatio vero spem, ubi habet Glossa, certitudinem spei. Secundum autem quod spes dicit rem speratam, oritur ex meritis praecedentibus; et hoc modo solvitur obiectio relata, et alia, quam addit S. Doctor: Sicuti desperatio ex demeritis tantum oritur, ita Spes e solis meritis nostrae voluntatis.

23 The Holy Doctor answers by denying the parity, because evil is from us only, since it is a defect; But the meritorious good, since it is a supernatural good, is from the grace elevating, as is said Iacob. 1.

> Respondet S. Doct. negando paritatem, quia malum est a nobis tantum, cum sit defectus; At bonum meritorium, cum sit bonum supernaturale, est a gratia elevante, ut dicitur Iacob. 1.

24 Finally he notes lastly, that to hope from merits ought to be without elation; lest one say: Our own high hand, and not God, hath done all these things, Deuter. 32. and lest you say: For my justice the Lord hath brought me in, etc. But with humility; and in this way it was lawful for the Apostle, 1 Corinth. 15. More abundantly than they all I have laboured: yet not I, but the grace of God with me. Thus he admonishes Dan. cap. 9. Not in our justifications do we cast down our prayers. And the Church: O God, who seest that we trust in no action of ours: mercifully grant, that against all adversities we may be fortified by the protection of the Doctor of the Gentiles. And rightly the Doctor of the Gentiles is adduced in this, as I said.

> Tandem ad ultimum advertit, sperare ex meritis, debere esse absque elatione; ne dicat: Manus nostra excelsa, et non Deus, fecit haec omnia, Deuter. 32. et ne dicas: Propter iustitiam meam introduxit me Dominus, etc. Sed cum humilitate; et hoc pacto licuit Apostolo, prima Corinth. 15. Abundantins illis omnibus laboravi: non ego autem, sed gratia Dei mecum. Sic admonet Dan. cap. 9. Non in iustificationibus nostris prosternimus preces nostras. Et Ecclesia: Deus, qui conspicis, quia ex nulla nostra actione confidimus: concede propitius, ut contra adversa omnia, Doctoris gentium protectione muniamur. Recte autem adducitur Doctor gentium in hoc, ut dixi.

25 The same the Holy Fathers admonish, Chrysostomus homil. 21. in Genes. and homil. 3. in id: Elatum est cor Oziae, and homil. 3. in Matth. August. lib. 3. cont. Cresconium, cap. 80. Bernardus serm. 9. in Psal. Qui habitat.

> Eadem admonent Sancti PP. Chrysostomus homil. 21. in Genes. et homil. 3. in id: Elatum est cor Oziae, et homil. 3. in Matth. August. lib. 3. cont. Cresconium, cap. 80. Bernardus serm. 9. in Psal. Qui habitat.

26 Hence St. Ambrose with Paulinus: I have not so lived that I should be ashamed to live among you, nor do I fear to die, because we have a good Lord. Which words St. August. was accustomed to praise and admire, as Possidonius and Ribadeneira in his life report.

> Hinc S. Ambrosius apud Paulinum: Non sic vixi, ut me pudeat inter vos vivere, nec mori timeo, quia bonum Dominum habemus. Quae verba S. August. laudare, et admirari solebat, ut refert Possidonius, et Ribadeneira in eius vita.

Question IX: Whether hope precedes charity

1 From what has been said the question is now almost settled.

> Ex dictis iam fere soluta iacet quaestio.

2 I suppose that Faith is first; for it belongs to the intellect, illuminating it, so that from it the appetite—which cannot be carried toward the unknown—may rise, by an elicited act, to hoping and loving: for just as the things we see and hold we do not hope for, so we do not hope for the things we do not understand, but only for things that are to come; whence a certain difference also arises between hope and faith; for faith is concerned with past evils and goods, whereas hope is concerned only with future goods, as D. Augustine teaches in Enchir. cap. 8, from which it is clear that the Sectarians wrongly confuse Faith with Hope.

> Suppono, Fidem esse primam; est enim ex parte intellectus, illuminans illum, ut inde appetitus, qui in incognita ferri non potest, actu elicito consurgat ad sperandum, et amandum: Sicuti enim ea, quae videmus, atque tenemus, non speramus; ita ea, quae non intelligimus, non speramus; sed ea quae futura sunt: ex quo etiam differentia quaedam oritur inter spem, et fidem; nam fides est de rebus praeteritis malis, et bonis; spes autem est tantum de bonis futuris, ut docet D. August. in Enchir. cap. 8. ex quo patet perperam Sectarios confundere Fidem cum Spe.

3 Therefore Faith is prior by nature to Hope; for we hope because we believe. The same is held by the Holy Doctor lib. 5. Compendium Theologiae, cap. 22.

> Igitur Fides est prior natura Spe; speramus enim, quia credimus. Eadem habet S. Doct. lib. 5. Compendium Theologiae, cap. 22.

4 As for Charity, I say that it is posterior to Hope.

> Quoad Charitatem dico, eam esse posteriorem Spe.

5 It is proved by St. Bonaventure, first from the Gloss, which adduces this.

> Probatur a S. Bonav. primo ex Glossa id afferente.

6 Secondly, because the foundation is prior to the building and to its perfection: but faith is the foundation of the spiritual building; for it is the substance of things to be hoped for: therefore first is Faith, second Hope, which rises like a wall; and finally Charity, which is the bond of perfection.

> Secundo*, quia fundamentum est prius aedificio et illius perfectione: Sed fides est fundamentum aedificii spiritualis; est enim substantia rerum sperandarum: Ergo primo est Fides, secundo Spes, quae est veluti murus consurgens; et tandem Charitas, quae est vinculum perfectionis.*

7 Third. Because according to the order of nature, the imperfect precedes the more perfect; but Charity is more perfect than Faith and Hope, ex prima Cor. 13. Ergo.

> Tertio. Quia secundum ordinem naturae, imperfectum praecedit perfectius; sed Charitas est perfectior Fide, et Spe, ex prima Cor. 13. Ergo.

8 Fourth: No one can love a good recognized as impossible to him: therefore he must first hope.

> Quarto: Nullus potest amare bonum sibi agnitum impossibile: Ergo prius debet sperare.

9 The Holy Doctor notes, however, in the body of the text, that the Habits of Hope and Charity are indeed infused together, but in respect of act Hope operates first, which prepares for the act of charity; for that which we would not hope to obtain would not be loved.

> Advertit autem S. Doct. in corpore, Habitus quidem Spei, et Charitatis simul infundi, sed in ordine ad actum prius operari Spem, quae praeparat ad actum charitatis; non enim amaretur id, quod non speraremus obtinere.

10 You will object first. Hope is the expectation of beatitude from merits; but merits are from grace: therefore grace is presupposed to Hope itself.

> Obiicies primo. Spes est expectatio beatitudinis ex meritis; at merita sunt ex gratia: Ergo supponitur gratia ipsi Spei.

11 The Holy Doctor answers that there Hope is taken for the state, or for the thing hoped for, as I explained quaest. 8.

> Respondet S. Doct. ibi accipi Spem pro statu, vel pro re sperata, ut explicui quaest. 8.

12 You will object secondly. Every affection arises from love, as D. Augustine says 14. de civitate, cap. 6. et 15. Therefore also Hope.

> Obiicies secundo. Omnis affectio oritur ex amore, ut ait D. August. 14. de civitate, cap. 6. et 15. Ergo et Spes.

13 The Holy Doctor answers that imperfect love is the root moving all the affections; yet perfect love is the term of all of them, whence all the affections are ordered so that God may be loved perfectly: but Charity does not name just any love, but perfect love.

> Respondet S. Doct. amorem in statu imperfecto esse radicem moventem omnes affectiones; tamen perfectum esse terminum omnium, unde omnes affectiones ordinantur, ut Deus ametur perfecte: Charitas vero non nominat quemcumque amorem, sed perfectum.

14 You will object thirdly. No one hopes for what he does not love; for what is not a good loved by me, I do not hope for; therefore the rectitude of love precedes the rectitude of expectation. But charity directs in loving; hope in expecting: therefore Charity is before Hope.

> Obiicies tertio. Nullus sperat, nisi quod amat; quod enim non est mihi bonum amatum, non spero; ergo rectitudo amoris praecedit rectitudinem expectationis. Sed charitas dirigit in amando; spes autem in expectando: Etgo Charitas est ante Spem.

15 The Holy Doctor answers that nothing is loved except what is hoped for; thus, by the love of concupiscence, charity does not love God as a good for itself unless it hopes to obtain Him; likewise not by the love of friendship, unless it trusts in Him; even though no one hopes except what he loves imperfectly.

> Respondet S. Doct. non amari, nisi quod speratur; Sic amore concupiscentiae non amat charitas Deum, ut sibi bonum, nisi speret obtinendum: Similiter nec amore amicitiae, nisi confidat in eum; esto nullus speret, nisi quod imperfecte amat.

16 You will object fourthly. Fear and Hope are two affections running together; therefore they are called two millstones by the Gloss ad 24. Deuter. But every fear proceeds from love: therefore also every Hope: therefore gratuitous hope arises from gratuitous love.

> Obiicies quarto. Timor, et Spes sunt duae affectiones simul currentes; ideo dicuntur duae molae a Glossa ad 24. Deuter. Sed omnis timor procedit ex amore: Ergo et omnis Spes: ergo Spes gratuita oritur ex amore gratuito.

17 The Holy Doctor answers that love of self is the origin of fear of punishments, but not so the love of God. Therefore it does not follow that the act of Charity precedes the act of Fear; rather from filial Fear arises Love, as the Council of Trent teaches.

> Respondet S. Doct. amorem sui esse originem timoris poenarum, non sic autem amorem Dei. Ideo non sequitur, quod actus Charitatis praecedat actum Timoris, imo ex Timore filiali oritur Amor, ut docet Concilium Tridentinum.

18 You will object fifthly. That which is more common is prior, of which the converse does not hold; but loving is more common than hoping: therefore that is prior. The minor is proved; for everything to be hoped for is to be loved, not the reverse.

> Obiicies quinto. Prius est, quod est communius, a quo non convertitur consequentia; sed communius est diligere, quam sperare: Ergo illud est prius. Minor probatur; nam omne sperandum est amandum, non e contra.

19 He answers that the Major is true of those things which essentially follow one another mutually; not of those which accompany one another; and thus it follows: If there is snow: therefore something white; not conversely; and yet the whiteness of snow does not precede the substance of snow. Therefore, since hoping and loving accompany one another, although the act of loving extends to more lovable things, it need not be prior in the order of nature.

> Respondet, veram esse Maiorem de his, quae essentialiter consequuntur ad invicem; non de his, quae se comitantur; et sic sequitur: Si est nix: Ergo album quid; non e contra; et tamen albedo nivis non praecedit nivis substantiam. Quia igitur sperare, et amare se concomitantur, ideo, quamvis actus amandi se extendat ad plura diligibilia, non oportet, quod sit prius ordine naturae.

20 Moreover, although Charity is more general on the side of the object, yet Hope is more universal on the side of the subject. For every wayfarer who has Charity has Hope; but not conversely; and therefore the act of hope precedes in origin the act of Charity with respect to the subject, from which both acts take their origin.

> Praeterea, licet Charitas sit generalior ex parte obiecti, tamen Spes est universaliot ex parte subiecti. Omnis enim viator, qui habet Charitatem, habet Spem; sed non e contra; et ideo actus spei origine praecedit actum Charitatis respectu subiecti, a quo uterque actus sumit originem.

21 You will object sixthly. The order of virtue to virtue is the same as the order of dowry to dowry; but perfect tension, which is the dowry corresponding to Hope, follows perfect dilection, which is the dowry corresponding to Charity: therefore also in the wayfare Charity precedes Hope.

> Obiicies sexto. Is est ordo virtutis ad virtutem, qui est ordo dotis ad dotem; sed perfecta tentio, quae est dos, respondens Spei, sequitur perfectam dilectionem, quae est dos, respondens Charitati: Ergo et in via Charitas praecedit Spem.

22 The Holy Doctor answers by denying the parity; because the dowries in the fatherland will be of equal perfection; but in the wayfare Charity, in the respect of virtue, is greater than Hope, and therefore it does not follow that if in the wayfare expectation precedes some dilection, also in the fatherland tension should precede perfect dilection. For although the virtues are equal with respect to the reason of tending, yet the act of dilection is more perfect than that of Hope; but in glory it will be equally perfect to hold and to love; whence although in the wayfare the act of the Irascible precedes the act of the Concupiscible, it need not be so also in the fatherland, where there is perfect reformation.

> Respondet S. Doct. negando paritatem; quia dotes in patria erunt aequalis perfectionis; in via autem Charitas, in ratione virtutis, est maior Spe, et ideo non sequitur, quod si in via expectatio praecedit dilectionem aliquam, etiam in patria tensio praecedat dilectionem perfectam. Quamvis enim virtutes aequales sint quoad rationem nitendi; perfectior tamen est actus dilectionis, quam Spei; sed in gloria aeque perfectum erit tenere, et diligere; unde quamvis in via actus Irascibilis praecedat actum Concupiscibilis; non tamen oportet, sic esse etiam in patria, ubi est reformatio perfecta.

Question X: What the proximate subject of hope is 1 I ASSERT that Hope is in the will, against some who follow Suarez disp. 1. sect. 2, saying that it is in the judgment of the intellect. So D. Thom. and D. Bonau., whom others follow in Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

Quodnam sit SPEI subiectum proximum.

ASSERO, Spem esse in voluntate, contra quosdam apud Suarez disp. 1. sect. 2. dicentes, esse in iudicio intellectus. Ita D. Thom. et D. Bonau. quos alii sequuntur apud Tannerum disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

2 It is PROVED by the Holy Doctor, first from the Philosophers and the Holy Fathers.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. primo ex Philosophis, et Sanctis PP.

3 SECONDLY. To hope belongs to the same power as to fear; but to fear is an affection: therefore.

SECUNDO. Eiusdem potentiae est sperare, cuius est timere; sed timere est affectus: Ergo.

4 THIRDLY. Opposites are about the same thing; but despair is in the affection: therefore also hope, its opposite. The major is Aristotle's in postpraed.

TERTIO. Opposita sunt circa idem; sed desperatio est in affectu: Ergo et spes opposita. Maior est Aristotelis in postpraed.

5 FOURTHLY, because in the rational and concupiscible power some directive rule must be placed, since they can go awry. Therefore in the Rational is placed Faith; in the Concupiscible, Charity: therefore in the Irascible, no less prone to err, the Virtue of Hope ought to be placed, ruling and directing toward God as toward an arduous good.

QUARTO*, quia oportet in potentia rationali, concupiscibilique ponere aliquam regulam directivam, quia possunt obliquari. Ideo in Rationali ponitur Fides; in Concupiscibili Charitas: Ergo in Irascibili, non minus erratica, poni debet Virtus Spei, regens et dirigens ad Deum, ut arduum.*

6 FIFTHLY it is proved by the argument used by Caspensis disp. 16. sect. 7., Valencia disp. 2. sect. 1. p. 1., Fulsens. lib. 3. cap. 7.: A virtue that has for its object a good, as arduous, is in the will. Hope is of this kind: therefore. The minor is proved from what has been said. The major is certain; for good is the object of the will; the arduous is the object of the Irascible, which is part of the affective power. Hope indeed raises one up toward the supernatural end as arduous.

QUINTO probatur argumento, quo utuntur Caspensis disp. 16. sect. 7. Valentia disp. 2. sect. 1. p. 1. Fulsens. lib. 3. cap. 7. Virtus, quae habet pro obiecto bonum, ut arduum, est in voluntate. Spes est huiusmodi: Ergo. Minor probatur ex dictis. Maior est certa; nam bonum est obiectum voluntatis; arduum est obiectum Irascibilis, quae est pars affectivae. Spes vero erigit in finem supernaturalem, ut arduum.

7 OBICTION first. Hope is called conscience in the Gloss ad primam Timot. primo.

OBIICIES primo. Spes dicitur conscientia in Glossa ad primam Timot. primo.

8 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS that Hope is called conscience in the manner of an effect, because it is expectation rising from grace and merits; but merits cannot exist except where the conscience is pure.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. Spem dici conscientiam ad modum effectus, quia est expectatio consurgens ex gratia, et meritis; merita autem esse non possunt, nisi ubi conscientia pura.

9 OBICTION secondly from D. Bernard in Cant.: God to come is the continuation of eternity in memory, which is called tension, corresponding to hope, namely.

> OBIICIES secundo ex D. Bernardo in Cant. Deus futurus est memoriae continuatio aeternitatis, quae dicitur tensio, respondens spei viz.

10 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS that God will be the continuation of eternity, which continuation is in the memory mediately, inasmuch as it preserves the species of the retribution to come, never to be lost, and of the perpetual merits in the hope answering to it.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. Deum fore continuationem aeternitatis, quae continuatio mediate est in memoria, quatenus conservat species futurae, nunquam amittendae, retributionis, et perpetuorum meritorum in spe respondentis.

11 OBICTION thirdly. According to D. Augustine in the Books de Civitate Dei: Hope is the virtue by which one presumes that he will arrive at that which he believes: therefore to hope is to believe firmly, which belongs to the cognitive power. Therefore also Rom. 4: Abraham believed God, and it was reputed to him unto justice, and there is added: Who against hope, believed in hope. Which authority the Sectarians abuse, so as to confuse Hope with faith.

> OBIICIES tertio. Spes ex D. August. in Libris de Civitate Dei: Est virtus, qua quis se ad illud, quod credit, perventurum praesumit: Ergo sperare est firmiter credere, quod est potentiae cognitivae. Ideo et Rom. 4. Abraham credidit Deo, et reputatum est ei ad iustitiam, et subditur: Qui contra Spem, in spem credidit. Qua authoritate abutuntur Sectarii, ut Spem cum fide confundant.

12 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS that Hope, taken broadly, signifies a kind of firm belief with respect to attaining some good. Thus Abraham is said to have believed in hope, because in faith in the promises of God he founded his hope against hope, which nature could supply; yet he does not will that to hope and to believe be the same. For to hope properly is to trust, and from that confidence, with a certain security, to tend toward the attaining of an arduous good; and these two, namely confidence and secure tending, St. Augustine understands by the word presuming. See Caspensem numero 42.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. Spem large sumptam, dicere credulitatem quodammodo firmatam respectu alicuius boni assequendi. Sic Abraham dicitur, credidisse in Spem, quia in fide promissionum Dei fundavit suam spem contra spem, quam natura, praestare poterat; non tamen vult, sperare, et credere esse idem. Sperare enim proprie est confidere, et ex illa confidentia, cum quadam securitate tendere ad bonum arduum consequendum, et haec duo, nempe confidentiam, et securam tendentiam, intelligit S. August. verbo praesumendi. Vide Caspensem numero 42.

13 THAT the Apostle distinguishes there faith from Hope is proved from Bellarmine lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 5: He was not weakened in faith, nor did he consider his own body now dead, and the dead womb of Sara. He staggered not by distrust at the promise of God, but was strengthened by faith, giving glory to God: most fully knowing that whatsoever God has promised, he is able to perform. Therefore also it was reputed to him unto justice, where he speaks of justifying faith, as is clear from the last words; but what kind of faith that was he shows by the words denying: He did not consider; and by the words asserting: Most fully knowing.

Which pertain to the understanding. But when he says: He staggered not by distrust; he signifies that his faith was outstanding and repelled all distrust, begetting hope. Next, distrust here signifies unbelief, for in the Greek you have ἀπιστία, as Bellarminus notes lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 11. Hence Ephes. 3: In whom we have confidence and access in trust by his faith: If therefore we have confidence through faith; it follows that faith is the cause of confidence, and not confidence itself; for nothing causes itself.

> QUOD vero Apostolus distinguat ibi fidem a Spe; probatur a Bellarmino lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 5. Non infirmatus est fide, nec consideravit corpus suum emortuum, et emortuam vulvam Sarae. In repromissione etiam Dei non haesitavit diffidentia, sed confortatus est fide, dans gloriam Deo: plenissime sciens, quia quaecumque promisit Deus, potens est facere. Ideo et reputatum est illi ad iustitiam*, ubi loquitur de fide iustificante, ut patet ex ultimis verbis; quae autem fuerit illa fides, ostendit verbis negantibus:* Non consideravit; et afferentibus: Plenissime sciens. Quae ad intellectum pertinent. Quod autem ait: Non haesitavit diffidentia; significat, fidem insignem fuisse, et omnem diffidentiam repulisse, spem pariendo. Deinde diffidentia hic significat incredulitatem, nam in Graeco habes ἀπιστία, ut notat Bellarminus lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 11. Hinc Ephes. 3. In quo habemus fiduciam, et accessum in confidentia per fidem eius: Si ergo habemus fiduciam per fidem; sequitur, ut fides sit causa fiduciae, non autem ipsa fiducia; nihil enim causat seipsum.

14 ABSURDLY, however, does Kemnitius say in exam. that D. Bonaventure asserts Hope, as to its certainty, to belong to the intellect, and, as to expectation, to look to the will; for the Holy Doctor dist. 26. quaest. 5. asserts that Hope belongs to the will even as to its certainty; he does indeed grant that it is caused by the intellect, as Bellarminus also notes lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 6.

> INSULSE autem Kemnitius in exam. dicit, D. Bonaventuram asserere; Spem, quantum ad certitudinem, pertinere ad intellectum; quantum ad expectationem spectare ad voluntatem; nam S. Doct. dist. 26. quaest. 5. asserit, Spem etiam quoad certitudinem pertinere ad voluntatem; fatetur quidem esse ab intellectu causaliter, ut notat etiam Bellarminus lib. 1. de Iustificatione, cap. 6.

15 The Holy Doctor says moreover in the body of the text: It belongs to Hope to establish, and in a manner to make secure, the attaining of future beatitude; but establishment and confirmation pertain to the irascible power, which is part of the affective power. What could be clearer? But you will hear clearer things still.

> Ait autem S. Doct. in corpore: Spei est stabilitio, et quodammodo assecurare de assequenda futura beatitudine; stabilitio autem, et confirmatio pertinet ad potentiam irascibilem, quae est pars potentiae affectivae. Quid clarius? Sed ad ultimum clariora audies.

16 Faith, however, is placed in the intellect, as I said Tract. de fide, disp. 1. quaest. 18. Therefore the Apostle secunda Cor. 10. says, The understanding is taken captive unto faith. And if they should always wish to take believing as, having confidence, they will infer things absurdly, as when Christ says: Do you not believe, because I am in the Father, and the Father in me? Act. 8: I believe that Jesus is the Son of God. Rom. 10: With the heart we believe unto justice, which they will explicate most unfittingly of confidence, saying: I have confidence that Jesus is the Son of God, etc.

> Fides autem in intellectu ponitur, ut dixi Tract. de fide, disp. 1. quaest. 18. Ideo Apostolus secunda Cor. 10. ait, Captivari per fidem intellectum. Et si credere pro, fiduciam habere*, accipere semper velint, absona inferent, ut cum ait Christus:* Non creditis, quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me est? Act. 8. Credo, filium Dei esse Iesum. Rom. 10. Corde creditur ad iustitiam*, quae ineptissime de fiducia explicabuntur, dicendo: confido filium Dei esse Iesum, etc.*

17 OBICTION fourthly. The image of God is reformed by re-creation; but the essence of the soul is made deiform by grace; the powers, however, by the Theological virtues, of which faith restores the Intellect, Charity the Will: therefore Hope the Memory.

> OBIICIES quarto. Imago Dei reformatur recreatione; sed essentia animae gratia fit deiformis; potentiae vero Theologicis virtutibus, e quibus fides restaurat Intellectum, Charitas Voluntatem: ergo Spes Memoriam.

18 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS that the Image is reformed by re-creation, as is fitting. But since the Image is according to natural things, therefore it is more in cognition, and accordingly two powers correspond to it, memory and Intellect; and one of the affective, the Will. But the Likeness is according to the will the more, whereby by aversion from God it is made unlike in the unbridled concupiscible and irascible; therefore two virtues are required: one, Hope, for reforming the irascible; the other, Charity, for the concupiscible; and one, Faith, for the intellect. But in truth Hope also reforms the memory (which has sympathy/conformity in retaining what it perceived) by reforming the irascible. This he says is according to the mind of D. Augustine.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. Imaginem reformari recreatione, ut decet. Quia autem Imago est secundum naturalia, ideo magis est in cognitione, ac proinde geminae respondent potentiae memoria, et Intellectus; et una affectivae, Voluntas. Similitudo vero sit secundum voluntatem magis, qua et aversione a Deo dissimilatur concupiscibili, et irascibili effraenibus; ideo duae virtutes exiguntur; altera Spes reformandae irascibili: altera Charitas concupiscibili, et una Fides intellectui. Enim vero Spes reformat et memoriam (cui est Sympathia in retentione eorum, quae percepit) reformando irascibilem. Haec ait, esse ad mentem D. August.

> Reformat autem irascibilem formaliter, et efficienter memoriam, hoc secundo modo tantum. Vide haec p. 1. tract. 10. disp. 1. quaest. 2.

20 Objection fifth. Certitude looks to the cognitive power; but Hope is a certain expectation of future beatitude: therefore it is in the cognitive power.

> Obiicies quinto. Certitudo respicit cognitivam potentiam; sed Spes est certa expectatio futurae beatitudinis: ergo est in potentia cognitiva.

21 The Holy Doctor answers again that the certitude of Hope does not look to the cognitive power, but rather to the affective power, which certitude is a kind of assurance, holding itself on the side of the irascible power. Do you hear this, deaf and mute Kemniti?

> Respondet iterum S. Doct. certitudinem Spei non spectare ad cognitivam potentiam; sed magis ad potentiam affectivam, quae quidem certitudo est quaedam assecuratio, tenens se ex parte potentiae irascibilis. Haecne audis Surde, et mute Kemniti?

Question XI: Whether hope remains in the blessed

1 D. Bonav. book 3, dist. 31, question 2. D. Thom. 1. 2. question 18, article 2.

> D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 31 quaest. 2. D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 18. art. 2.

2 The first opinion is that the habit of hope remains in the blessed: So Suarez disp. 1. sect. 8. Hurtado disp. 108. sect. 4. Poncius disp. 31. quaest. 4. Vulpes disp. 51. art. 1. Coninck disp. 19. dub. 10. Amicus disp. 22.

Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 9. Arriaga disp. 26. sect. 4. Mastrius book 3. disp. 6. quaest. 18. who nevertheless says it does not remain under the denomination of hope. This was the opinion of Scotus book 3, dist. 31. §. Viso de fide, et spe, at the end. These concede that Hope remains even as to some act.

> Prima opinio est, in beatis manere habitum spei: Ita Suarez disp. 1. sect. 8. Hurtadus disp. 108. sect. 4. Poncius disp. 31. quaest. 4. Vulpes disp. 51. art. 1. Coninch. disp. 19. dub. 10. Amicus disp. 22. Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 9. Arriaga disp. 26. sect. 4. Mastrius 3. disp. 6. quaest. 18. qui tamen ait, non manere sub denominatione spei. Haec fuit opinio Scoti 3. dist. 31. §. Viso de fide, et spe, in fine. Hi concedunt, manere Spem etiam quoad aliquem actum.

3 The second opinion is that the habit of Hope does not remain in the fatherland. So D. Bonaventure and D. Thomas and all the Thomists here, and it seems that of Scotus book 3, dist. 31, single question, where Lychetus, Tartaretus, Arretinus, and the other ancients agree. The Moderns nearly all agree, as gathered by Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 2. although some concede some act of hope in the blessed, as Suarez book 3, part T. 3. quaest. 7. art. 4. and de Spe disp. 1. sect. 8. Others give it to the blessed souls in relation to the resurrection, as Vasquez book 3, disp. 44. cap. 22.

> Secunda sententia est, non manere habitum Spei in patria. Ita D. Bonav. et D. Thom. et omnes hic Thomistae, et videtur Scoti 3. dist. 31. quaest. un. ubi Licherus, et Tartaretus, Arretinus, et caeteri antiquiores. Consentiunt fere Moderni apud Tannetum disp. 2. quaest. 1. dub. 2. etsi aliqui actum aliquem spei concedant in beatis, ut Suarez 3. p. T. 3. quaest. 7. art. 4. et de Spe disp. 1. sect. 8. Alii animabus beatis id dant in ordine ad resurrectionem, ut Vasquez 3. p. disp. 44. cap. 22.

4 I assert with this opinion that in the blessed hope does not remain.

> Assero cum hac sententia, in beatis spem non manere.

5 It is proved first by D. Bonaventure. When the object is removed, the habit is removed; but from the blessed the object of hope is removed: Therefore. The minor is proved from Rom. 8, Hope that is seen is not hope: for what does a man see, why doth he hope for it? Therefore since the Blessed necessarily see God, they cannot hope.

> Probatur a D. Bonan. primo. Ablato obiecto tollitur habitus; sed beatis tollitur obiectum spei: Ergo. Minor probatur ex Rom. 8. Spes, quae videtur, non est spes: nam quod videt quis, quid sperat? Cum igitur Beati necessario Deum videant, non possunt sperare.

6 Mastrius answers first, with Bassolio disp. 31, single question, art. 2. that it is per accidens that the object of hope is present or absent.

> Respondet primo Mastrius cum Bassolio disp. 31. quaest. un. art. 2. per accidens esse obiecto spei, ut sit praesens, vel absens.

7 But D. Paulus is altogether amazed that anyone should want to hope for things he possesses.

> At D. Paulus omnino miratur, velle aliquem sperare ea, quae habet.

8 Mastrius answers second, that Hope in the blessed has no act more known as desire, from which Hope is denominated; although they have an act of delight and joy, produced from hope.

> Respondet Mastrius secundo, Spem in beatis non habere actum magis notum desiderii, a quo denominatur Spes; tametsi habeant actum delectationis, et gaudii, a spe productos.

9 But I have already shown quaest. 3. that there is no delight in the object of hope; for delight is about an object present, and thus the first response of Caspensis is blunted.

> Sed iam ostendi quaest. 3. non esse delectationem in obiecto spei; nam delectatio est de obiecto praesenti, et ita retunditur prima responsio Caspensis.

10 Caspensis answers second, that the blessed can have desire even for the beatitude of others.

> Respondet secundo Caspensis, posse beatos habere desiderium etiam beatitudinis aliorum.

11 But hope is only of good things, nor only of future things, and pertaining to the one who is said to bear the hope of them, as D. Augustine says in Enchir. cap. 8. cited by Caspensis sect. 3. Therefore to desire beatitude for another, as it is a good, is not an act of Hope; but of Charity, as Vasquez holds too book 3, disp. 45. cap. 2. and Caspens. there. It is confirmed; for by Hope the mind is roused to overcome the difficulties that stand in the way of attaining the good hoped for; but this affection cannot be had with respect to the beatitude of another, as Turrianus observes disput. 60. dub. 4.

> At spes non nisi bonarum rerum est, nec nisi futurarum, et ad eum pertinentium, qui earum spem gerere perhibetur, ut ait D. August. in Enchir. cap. 8. apud Caspensem sect. 3. Igitur appetere beatitudinem alteri, ut bona est, non est actus Spei; sed Charitatis, ut habet etiam Vasquez 3. p. disp. 45. cap. 2. et Caspens. ibi. Confirmatur; nam Spe erigitur animus ad vincendas difficultates, quae sunt in consecutione boni sperati; sed hic affectus nequit esse respectu beatitudinis alterius, ut advertit Turtianus disput. 60. dub. 4.

12 You will say that the beatitude of another can be desired insofar as it redounds to an accidental beatitude for us.

> Dices, posse desiderari alterius beatitudinem, ut redundet in accidentalem beatitudinem nobis.

13 It is answered first, that the object of Hope is still not had, which is God, as to be arduously attained by the blessed, as I said quaest. 3. and as the Seraphic Doctor observes ad 3. Hence accidental beatitude does not suffice for Hope, which is a Theological virtue, attaining God immediately.

> Respondetur primo, adhuc non haberi obiectum Spei, quod est Deus, ut beatis ardue consequendus, ut dixi quaest. 3. et observat S. Doct. ad 3. Unde beatitudo accidentalis non sufficit ad Spem, quae est virtus Theologica, immediate Deum attingens.

14 It is proved second from this by D. Bonaventure. Hope is the expectation of our future beatitude, as the Gloss says on Rom. 5. But beatitude in the fatherland is present; Therefore.

> Probatur secundo hinc a D. Bonav. Spes est expectatio futurae nostrae beatitudinis, ut ait Glossa ad 5. Rom. Sed beatitudo in patria est praesens; Ergo.

15 It is proved third from 1 Cor. 13, Faith, hope, Charity, these three remain: but the greater of these is charity, where the Gloss: Charity, when Faith and Hope depart, shall remain increased. It is concluded, moreover, that it is greater for that very reason, that it alone is said never to fall away.

> Probatur tertio ex prima Cor. 13. Manent fides, spes, Charitas, tria haec: Maior autem horum est charitas, ubi Glossa: Charitas, Fide, et Spe discedentibus, permanebit aucta. Concluditur autem, eo ipsam esse maiorem, quod sola dicta est, nunquam excidere.

16 Mastrius and Caspensis respond that the Apostle does not say that Hope falls away, but only faith, prophecy, and tongues; or that it is evacuated as to its principal act, which is to hope.

Respondent Mastrius, et Caspensis, Apostolum non dicere, Spem excidere, sed solum fidem, prophetiam, et linguas; vel evacuari, quoad actum principalem, qui est sperare.

17 On the contrary, because the Apostle says: But when that which is perfect shall come, that which is in part shall be done away, because, as the Seraphic Doctor urges, it is intrinsic to the notion of the object of hope that it be future, and that the soul rise toward it, so as to overcome difficulties.

Contra, quia ait Apostolus: Cum autem venerit quod perfectum est, evacuabitur quod ex parte est, quia, ut S. Doct. urget, in ratione obiecti spei intrinseca, est ut sit futurum, et ad illud exurgat, ut vincat difficultates.

18 It is proved fourth by the Seraphic Doctor. As Faith is related to what is not seen, so Hope to what is not possessed; but faith is necessarily done away when clear vision supervenes: Therefore also hope, when the attainment, or the most certain stretching toward it, supervenes.

Probatur quarto a S. Doctore. Sicut se habet Fides respectu non visi, ita Spes respectu non habiti; sed fides necessario evacuatur superveniente clara visione: Ergo et spes, superveniente comprehensione, sive certissima tensione.

19 Mastrius answers num. 481. by denying the parity, because faith can exercise no act in the fatherland; for all its acts denote an imperfection repugnant to the state of the fatherland; but not so hope, which has its imperfection, the absence of its object, in desire alone, but has other acts. So Maracius answers too disp. 34. sect. 3.

Respondet Mastrius num. 481. negando paritatem, quia fides nullum actum in patria potest exercere; omnes enim actus eius imperfectionem dicunt repugnantem statui patriae; non sic autem spes, quae in solo desiderio habet imperfectionem carentiae obiecti, sed alios habet actus. Sic respondet etiam Maracius disp. 34. sect. 3.

20 But Paul Rom. 5. denies that Hope is there where its object is possessed, which is God seen, the beatific object present; toward attaining and awaiting which hope raises the soul; But the blessed, since they already possess God, cannot await in desire what is absent and arduous.

At vero Paulus Rom. 5. negat ibi dari Spem, ubi possidetur eius obiectum, quod est Deus visus, obiectum beatificum praesens; ad quod spes erigit consequendum, et expectandum; At beati, cum iam possideant Deum, nequeunt expectare desiderio absentem, et arduum.

21 Mastrius answers num. 479. that Hope then has no act of desire, but of tension and possession.

Respondet Mastrius num. 479. Spem non habere tunc actum desiderii, sed tentionis, et possessionis.

22 I am simply amazed that he says this: for the same virtue cannot be borne toward an object under notions of substance opposites.[1] But Hope, since it walks together with Faith as to the absence of the object, as is said Hebr. 11. Faith is the substance of things to be hoped for, the evidence of things that appear not; I do not see how it can have an act of tension and possession of the beatific object.

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'sub ratione substantiae literer opposita'; 'literer' is not a Latin form and the OCR layer gave no witness; rendered as 'literaliter opposita' (opposite in substance, literally), with 'opposites' plural by sense.

Haec plane ipsum dicere Miror: nam eadem virtus non potest ferri in obiectum, sub ratione substantiae literaliter opposita. Spes autem, utpote simul cum Fide incedens quoad absentiam obiecti, ut dicitur Hebr. 11. Fides est sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium; non video, quo pacto, actum tensionis, et possessionis habere queat obiecti beatifici.

23 He answers second, with Arriaga, that neither the act of justice of rendering to each his own, nor that of fortitude for overcoming difficulties, is found in the blessed; and yet these habits remain, because they can have an act of complacency and joy about their proper object.

> Respondet secundo cum Arriaga, neque actum iustitiae reddendi cuique suum, neque fortitudinis ad vincendas difficultates, in beatis reperiri; et tamen hi habitus manent, quia possunt circa proprium obiectum habere actum complacentiae, et gaudii.

24 But even in the fatherland the blessed render to each his own, to God the honor of latria, and to the blessed the service due them; whereas the habit of Fortitude directly conflicts with the state of the blessed, as D. Bonaventure says dist. 26. quaest. 3. at the very end.

> Sed et in patria beati dant cuique suum, Deo honorem latriae; beatisque debitum obsequium; habitus vero Fortitudinis directe repugnat cum statu beatorum, ut dicit D. Bonav. dist. 26. quaest. 3. ad ultimum.

25 You will object first. In Sap. 3 it is said: Their hope full of immortality. The Gloss postills: It is itself effectual. If you say that Hope is there taken for the thing hoped for; on the contrary I prove it of the very act of hoping; for Christ was blessed, and yet had Hope, as the Gloss says on that Ps. 30, In thee, O Lord, have I hoped.

> Obiicies primo. Sap. 3. dicitur: Spes illorum immortalitate plena. Glossa postillat: Ipsa effectiua est. Si dicas, ibi sumi Spem pro re sperata. Contra probo de ipso actu sperandi; nam Christus fuit beatus, et tamen habuit Spem, ut ait Glossa ad id Psal. 30. In te Domine speravi.

26 The Seraphic Doctor answers that Christ had hope not in himself, but in his members; in himself, however, he had a certain expectation of some spiritual benefit, which nevertheless is not hope, because it did not look to God as the object to be enjoyed immediately. Then neither was the glory of his body itself arduous for Christ, as Coninck thinks disp. 17. dub. 11. because it follows naturally from the glory of the soul, as Mastrius notes num. 470. although it was to be acquired through the cross under the title of merit.

> Respondet S. Doct. Christum non in se, sed in membris habere spem; in se autem habuit aliquam expectationem alicuius beneficii spiritualis, quae tamen non est spes, quia non respiciebat Deum, ut obiectum immediate fruendum. Deinde nec gloria ipsa corporis erat Christo ardua, ut putat Coninchius disp. 17. dub. 11. quia naturaliter sequitur ad gloriam animae, ut notat Mastrius num. 470. etsi esset per crucem acquirenda sub titulo meriti.

27 You will OBJECT second. Where there is desire, there can be Hope; but in the Blessed there is the highest desire without end, as is said 1 Peter 1, Into which the Angels desire to look: Therefore. It is confirmed; for they can desire the continuation of their beatitude.

> OBIICIES secundo. Ubi est desiderium, ibi potest esse Spes; sed in Beatis sine aeterna est summum desiderium, ut dicitur prima Petri 1. In quem desiderant Angeli prospicere: Ergo. Confirmatur; possunt enim appetere continuationem suae beatitatis.

28 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS that the desire of acquiring goes with Hope: but the desire of continuing a good that cannot be lost in no way goes with hope; because there is not there an expectation, or tending, toward an absent good. Therefore in the fatherland there is desire, in that he calls it ineffable delight and unendingness, never sated, but always with the highest delight. Wherefore vainly do some argue from the volition of the continuation of beatitude that there is hope in the blessed; for, as Mastrius candidly confesses num. 472. the continuation of beatitude is not arduous for the Blessed, but on the contrary easy and necessarily unfailing. By this reasoning he also confesses that Arduous is the formal reason of the object of hope, with which posited, Hope is posited; and with it lacking, removed. The Seraphic Doctor answers the same dub. 5. of the text.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. desiderium acquirendi esse cum Spe: desiderium vero continuandi bonum, quod amitti non potest, nullo modo esse cum spe; quia non est ibi expectatio, vel tendentia in bonum absens. Igitur in patria est desiderium, ut dicit ineffabilem delectationem, et indeficientiam, nunquam saturam, sed semper cum summa delectatione. Quare frustra nonnulli ex volitione continuationis beatitudinis arguunt in beatis spem; nam, ut ingenue fatetur Mastrius num. 472. beatitudinis continuatio Beatis non est ardua, sed imo facilis, et necessario indeficiens. Qua ratione etiam fatetur, Arduum*, esse rationem formalem obiecti spei, quo posito, ponitur Spes; et quo deficiente, tollitur. Idem respondet S. Bonav.* dub. 5. litterae.

29 You will OBJECT third with Vulpes, Morando, Caspensis, and others: The Blessed hope for and expect the future resurrection of bodies.

> OBIICIES tertio cum Vulpe, Morando, Caspensi, et aliis: Beati sperant, et expectant futuram corporum resurrectionem.

30 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS that this argument errs in two ways. First, because the beatitude of bodies is not arduous for the Saints of the fatherland. But Hope is of the supreme good as arduous.

> RESPONDET S. Bonav. dupliciter peccare hoc argumentum. Primo, quia beatitudo corporum non est Sanctis patriae ardua. Spes autem est de summo bono arduo.

31 You will SAY with Amicus that it is arduous because excellent.

> DICES cum Amico, arduum esse, quia excellens.

32 On the CONTRARY, because this is not what is arduous for hope, as I said quaest. 3.; otherwise the object would be the same for charity too; for its object is most excellent, as Mastrius notes num. 455. and 470.

> CONTRA, quia hoc non est arduum spei, ut dixi quaest. 3. alioqui idem esset obiectum etiam charitatis; nam obiectum eius est excellentissimum, ut notat Mastrius num. 455. et 470.

33 SECOND the argument errs, because the act of expecting the resurrection does not look to the Theological virtue, because the resurrection of the body is not an uncreated good, which is the object of the Theological virtue; nay, it is not even necessary for attaining that good, as Arriaga loc. cit. and Mastrius num. 471. rightly observe too.

> SECUNDO peccat argumentum, quia actus expectandi resurrectionem, non spectat ad virtutem Theologicam, quia resurrectio corporis non est bonum increatum, quod est obiectum virtutis Theologicae; imo neque ad illud bonum consequendum necessaria, ut bene advertunt etiam Arriaga loc. cit. et Mastrius num. 471.

34 Amicus INSTANCES num. 20. that there is some participation of the uncreated good, inasmuch as with the beatitude of the soul it beatifies the whole man.

> INSTAT Amicus num. 20. esse aliquam participationem boni increati, quatenus cum beatitudine animae beat totum hominem.

35 But these are pure words; for the beatitude of the soul is not intensified in relation to God immediately.

> Sed haec sunt pura verba; nam beatitudo animae non intenditur in ordine ad Deum immediate.

36 You will OBJECT fourth: The habits of opposites are opposite; but in the damned there is despair: Therefore in the blessed there is Hope.

> OBIICIES quarto: Oppositorum oppositi sunt habitus; sed in damnatis est desperatio: Ergo in beatis est Spes.

37 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS that it is not similar, because despair makes for the culmination of evil, and therefore ought to be in the damned; But hope denotes a defect of complement in the good, that is, the absence of that supreme good; hence it cannot be in the blessed, in whom all good things absolutely complete in every measure are heaped up.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. non esse simile, quia desperatio facit ad cumulum mali, ideo esse debet in damnatis; At vero spes dicit defectum complementi in bono, idest absentiam eiusdem summi boni; unde nequit esse in beatis, in quibus bona omnia omnibus numeris absoluta cumulantur.

38 You will OBJECT fifth. It is an act of hope to trust in the Lord; But the blessed trust in him: Therefore.

> OBIICIES quinto. Actus spei est, confidere in Domino; At beati in eo confidunt: Ergo.

39 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS that there is not in the blessed the confidence of Hope, which is with stretching, panting, and rising toward the arduous; but the confidence of the love of friendship in fruition.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. non esse in beatis confidentiam Spei, quae est cum protensione, anhelatione, et erectione in arduum; sed esse confidentiam amoris amicitiae in fruitione.

40 You will OBJECT sixth. To hope pertains the certainty of beatitude; but this will be in glory: Therefore. Then the blessed expect beatitude as to succeeding times, for those who already have beatitude today do not yet have it tomorrow. And therefore in Apoc. 6. it was said to them that they should wait.

> OBIICIES sexto. Ad spem pertinet certitudo beatitudinis; sed haec erit in gloria: Ergo. Deinde beati expectant beatitudinem quoad succedentia tempora, qui enim iam habent beatitudinem hodie, nondum habent cras. Et ideo Apoc. 6. dictum est eis, ut expectarent.

41 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS that there is not there an expectation of a new good, or of an arduous one, but of a possession eternally unlosable, not to be acquired; nor is there there found a certainty of promise alone; but of tension and fruition, which is not of Hope.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. non esse ibi expectationem novi boni, aut ardui, sed possessi inamissibilis aeterne, non acquirendi; neque ibi certitudo reperitur sola promissionis; sed tentionis, et fruitionis, quae non est Spei.

42 You will OBJECT seventh. Because hope has some acts not repugnant to the fatherland, as to delight in, to rejoice in an infinite and agreeable good, which is the formal object of Hope. This is the Achilles of Scotus loc. cit. and of Mastrius num. 473.

> OBIICIES septimo. Quia spes habet aliquos actus non repugnantes patriae, ut delectari, gaudere bono commodo infinito, quod est obiectum formale Spei. Hic est Achilles Scoti loc. cit. et Mastrii num. 473.

43 The Seraphic Doctor ANSWERS in the body that the formal object of hope is the good of glory, as arduous and absent, as the Apostle says loc. cit. and that to delight in that good already acquired looks not to hope, but to charity; otherwise faith also ought to remain; for the blessed soul delights in the good believed on the way, and is beatified in it; for beatitude is joy concerning the truth, as D. Augustine says.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. in corpore*, obiectum formale spei esse bonum gloriae, ut arduum absens, ut ait Apostolus* loc. cit. neque delectari bono illo iam acquisito, spectare ad spem, sed ad charitatem; alioqui debet manere etiam fides; nam beatus delectatur bono credito in via, et in eo beatur; est enim beatitudo gaudium de veritate, ut ait D. Augustinus.

44 But WHY is the act by which I will for myself future beatitude not Charity, but Hope: The reason is, because, although I will it for myself, nevertheless the object is God, as beatifying, toward whom the ultimate act is ordered. Mastrius indicates this mode at the end, to the mind also of Cardinal de Lugo disp. 3. de Poenit. sect. 2. num. 41. But the beatitude desired is ultimately referred to God; otherwise it would be an inordinate appetite. Hence one good is constituted, although several goods are named in the definition of beatitude, whereby it is said: Hope is the virtue by which eternal goods are awaited; as the Seraphic Doctor explains dub. 1. litt. dist. 26. and Mastrius num. 487. The Seraphic Doctor indeed observes dub. 2. that the expectation of an absent good is of the notion of Hope. Moreover, expectation can materially denote rest, as when I sit awaiting a companion, yet it denotes a motion of the mind. The same he teaches in book 1, dist. 17. p. 1. quaest. 2. ad 3. Then dub. 3. the Seraphic Doctor explains how you are to understand the saying of Paul: What does a man see, why doth he hope? Hence hope is of invisible things; yet it is not confused with faith; for Faith is of things not seen as such; but Hope of things not seen insofar as they are not possessed.

> CUR vero actus, quo mihi futuram volo beatitudinem, non sit Charitas, sed Spes: Ratio est, quia, licet id velim mihi, tamen obiectum est Deus, ut beans, ad quem ordinatur ultimus actus. Hunc modum indicat Mastrius in fine ad mentem etiam Cardinalis de Lugo disp. 3. de Poenit. sect. 2. num. 41. Est autem concupita beatitudo ad Deum ultimod; alioqui esset inordinata appetitio. Unde unum bonum constituitur, licet plura bona nominentur in definitione beatitudinis, qua dicitur: Spes est virtus, qua aeterna bona expectantur; ut explicat S. Doct. dub. 1. litt. dist. 26. et Mastrius num. 487. Advertit vero S. Doct. dub. 2. expectationem boni absentis esse de ratione Spei. Porro expectationem materialiter dicere posse quietem, ut cum sedeo expectans socium, tamen dicit motum animi. Eadem docet in 1. dist. 17. p. 1. quaest. 2. ad 3. Deinde dub. 3. explicat S. Doct. quo pacto intelligas dictum Pauli: Quod videt quis, quid sperat? Unde spes est de invisibilibus; non tamen confunditur cum fide; nam Fides est de non visis, ut sic; Spes vero de non visis, prout sunt non habita.

45 He EXPLAINS dub. 4. that Hope cannot be of a present good, because of this there is Joy, which is an affection distinct from Hope, according to all the wise.

> EXPLICAT dub. 4. Spem non posse esse de bono praesenti, quia de hoc est Gaudium, quod est affectio distincta a Spe, secundum omnes sapientes.

46 In the FIFTH doubt he treats this our question, and concludes that neither did Christ on the way have Hope, because he was not borne toward the beatific God as to be obtained, because the blessed enjoy the Supreme good, which is the object of Hope, and the beatific. Then, because Hope leans on Faith, which it has annexed; but Faith is essentially obscure knowledge. Such knowledge is removed by vision, and consequently, faith being done away, he does away with Hope.

> DUBIO quinto tractat quaestionem nostram hanc, et concludit, nec Christum in via habuisse Spem, quia non ferebatur in Deum beatificum, ut obtinendum, quia beati fruuntur Summo bono, quod est obiectum Spei, et beatificum. Deinde, quia Spes nititur Fide, quam habet annexam; Fides autem est cognitio obscura essentialiter. Talis cognitio tollitur visione, et consequenter evacuando fidem, evacuat Spem.

Question XII: Whether there is a precept of hoping in God

[1] The Seraphic Doctor DISTINGUISHES book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, cap. 22. a threefold Hope, namely, of Pardon, Ps. 30. In thee, O Lord, have I hoped, let me never be confounded. Of Grace: But he that hopeth in the Lord, mercy shall encompass him. Ps. 31. Of Glory: Proverbs 28. He that hopeth in the Lord shall be saved. He also notes its effects, so that the necessity of hope may appear. For it frees from tribulation, Ps. 21. Our fathers hoped in thee, and thou didst deliver them, and it stands shown in Dan. 13. by the example of Susanna. It strengthens in the crisis, 2 Machab. 7. Beholding the seven sons perishing within the space of one day, the mother bore it with a good courage, because of the hope she had in God. It strengthens and raises the mind, Isa. 40. They that hope in the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall take wings as eagles. It saves, Ps. 16. O thou that savest them that trust in thee. It ministers temporal things, Ps. 144. The eyes of all hope in thee, O Lord.

> An detur praeceptum sperandi in DEUM.
> DISTINGUIT S. Doct. lib. 5. Compendii Theol. cap. 22. Spem triplicem, idest, Veniae, Psal. 30. In te Domine speravi, non confundar in aeternum. Gratiae: Sperantem autem in Domino misericordia circumdabit. Psal. 31. Gloriae: Proverb. 28. Qui sperat in Domino, salvabitur. Adnorat etiam effectus, ut appareat spei necessitas. Haec enim a tribulatione liberat, Psal. 21. In te speraverunt Patres nostri, et liberasti eos, et constat Dan. 13. exemplo Susannae. Confortat in discrimine, 2. Machab. 7. Perenntes septem filios sub unius diei tempore, conspiciens mater, bono animo ferebat, propter spem, quam in Deum habebat. Confortat, et mentem elevat, Isa. 40. Qui sperant in Domino, mutabunt fortitudinem, assument pennas ut aquilae. Salvat, Psal. 16. Qui salvos facis sperantes in te. Temporalia ministrat, Psal. 144. Oculi omnium in te sperant Domine.

[2] HOPE is compared to many things necessary: to the Helmet for fighting, 1 Thessal. 5. Putting on the helmet of salvation. To the Anchor Hebr. 6. Who have fled for refuge to hold fast the hope set before us: which we have as an anchor of the soul, sure and firm. To Medicine: He that trusteth in the Lord shall not be weakened, Ps. 25. To the Gem: Most precious is the expectation, Prov. 17. it is called the strongest solace Hebr. 6. The wood of life, Sap. 3. If they have suffered torments before men, their hope is full of immortality. Keys, and the Gloss on that Ps. hope in the Lord.

> SPES multis rebus necessariis comparatur: Galeae ad praeliandum, prima Thessal. 5. Induti Galeam salutis. Anchorae Hebr. 6. Qui confugimus ad tenendam propositam spem: quam sicut anchoram habemus animae tutam, ac firmam. Medicinae: Sperans in Domino non infirmabitur Psal. 25. Gemmae: Gemma gratissima expectatio Prou. 17. solatium dicitur fortissimum Hebr. 6. Lignum vitae, Sap. 3. Si coram hominibus tormenta passi sunt, spes illorum immortalitate plena est. Clavi, et Glossa in id Psal. sperate in Domino.

[3] IN the Dial. of salvation, tit. 10. cap. 5. he again sets forth a threefold Hope, of Pardon, of Grace, and of Glory. But he proves that the hope of Pardon puts every sin to flight. All they that trust in him shall not offend. Ps. 33. The hope of grace is that by which one, trusting in Divine help alone, not in human strength, acquires salvation, Jerem. 17, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and the Lord will be his trust. The hope of glory makes strong even unto death; thus the martyrs conquered their torments. Thus Moses Heb. 11. thus the Ps., Sacrifice a sacrifice of justice, and trust in the Lord, and to Titus 2. he urges to patience and perseverance: Waiting for the blessed hope, and the coming of the Lord. From these the Theologians commonly gather that Hope is a necessary means to salvation, and that from the beginning, as is said Hebr. 11, For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and is a rewarder to them that seek him. And Rom. 8, By hope we are saved. And in the Tridentine Council sess. 6. cap. 6. and 7. and can. 5. Hope is numbered among the dispositions necessary for justification. The reason is, because he cannot be saved who does not believe God to be a supernatural rewarder, and unless he be converted to God by loving him above all things; but these things involve, unless he hope, that this good is to be attained, as Caspensis argues num. 32. with D. Bonaventure book 3, dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 3. in the body: Therefore.

> IN Diaeta salutis, tit. 10. cap. 5. ponit iterum triplicem Spem, Veniae, Gratiae, et Gloriae. Probat autem, spem Veniae fugare omne peccatum. Non delinquent omnes, qui sperant in eo. Psal. 33. Spes gratiae, est, qua quis confisus soli Divino auxilio, non humanis viribus, acquirit salutem, Hierem. 17. Maledictus homo, qui confidit in homine, et ponit carnem brachium suum. Beatus, qui confidit in Domino, et erit Dominus fiducia eius. Spes gloriae reddit fortes usque ad mortem; sic martyres tormenta vicerunt. Sic Moyses Heb. 11. sic Psal. Sacrificate sacrificium iustitiae, et sperate in Domino, et ad Titum 2. hortatur ad patientiam, et perseverantiam: Expectantes beatam spem, et adventum Domini. Ex his colligunt Theologi communiter, Spem esse medium necessarium ad salutem, et hoc ab initio, ut dicitur Hebr. 11. Accedentem enim ad Deum, credere oportet quia est, et inquirentibus se remunerator sit. Et Rom. 8. Spe salvi facti estis. Et in Tridentino sess. 6. cap. 6. et 7. et can. 5. numeratur Spes inter dispositiones necessarias ad iustificationem. Ratio est, quia non potest salvari, qui non credit Deum remuneratorem supernaturalem, et nisi ad Deum convertatur diligendo super omnia; implicant autem haec, nisi speret, hoc bonum consequendum, ut arguit Caspensis num. 32. cum D. Bonav. 3. dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 3. in corpore: Ergo.

4 You will say. Without Hope God can be loved with the love of friendship.

> Dices. Sine Spe potest amari Deus amore amicitiae.

5 It is ANSWERED, that one must hope from God at least mercy, pardon, and grace, as the Seraphic Doctor says above.

> RESPONDETUR, debere sperare a Deo saltem misericordiam, veniam, et gratiam, ut ait S. Bonav. supra.

6 THEREFORE ALTHOUGH there are not found in the scriptures words expressing the force of a precept; yet from the necessities related the Doctors gather that a precept of Hope is given. So Suarez de Spe, disp. 2. sect. 1. Sanchez lib. 1. Decal. lib. 2. cap. 33. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 31. num. 4. with D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 1. The Seraphic Doctor dist. 26. quaest. 2. where he proves it, because it is declared in scripture that one must hope in God alone, and that cursed is he who does not hope in him, but in creatures.

> QUAMVIS igitur non inveniantur in scripturis verba, praecepti vim exprimentia; tamen ex necessitatibus relatis colligunt Doctores, dari praeceptum Spei. Ita Suarez de Spe, disp. 2. sect. 1. Sanchez lib. 1. Decal. lib. 2. cap. 33. Fagundez lib. 1. cap. 31. num. 4. cum D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 1. S. Bonav. dist. 26. quaest. 2. ubi id probat, quia pronunciatur in scriptura, sperandum in Deo solo, et maledictum esse, qui non sperat in eo, sed in creaturis.

7 Hence D. Augustine tract. 83. says, It is a precept to us to hope for the things that have been promised.

> Hinc D. August. tract. 83. ait, Praeceptum esse nobis sperare, quae promissa sunt.

8 Therefore the argument is thus formed: Every act that is a necessary means to salvation falls under a precept, as Suarez shows de fide disp. 13 sect. 2. and lib. 8. de gratia, cap. 18. and 19. But the act of hope is a necessary means to salvation, as the Council of Trent declares sess. 6. cap. 6. for unless we hope for glory, our faith is vain: Therefore a precept of it is given. So also Fagundez num. 4. The minor is proved by the Seraphic Doctor book 5, Brevil. cap. 4. because for salvation the rectification of the soul toward God is necessary; but this is done through the three Theological virtues, for by faith the reason, by hope the irascible, by charity the concupiscible is rectified.

> Sic igitur formatur argumentum: Actus omnis, qui est medium necessarium ad salutem, cadit sub praeceptum, ut ostendit Suarez de fide disp. 13 sect. 2. et lib. 8. de gratia, cap. 18. et 19. Sed actus spei est medium necessarium ad salutem, ut declarat Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 6. nisi enim speremus gloriam, inanis est fides nostra: Ergo datur de illa praeceptum. Ita etiam Fagundez num. 4. Minor probatur a D. Bonav. 5. p. Brevil. cap. 4. quia ad salutem necessaria est rectificatio animae in Deum; haec autem fit per tres virtutes Theologicas, nam per fidem ratio, per spem irascibilis; per charitatem concupiscibilis rectificatur.

9 But the minor is explained by the Seraphic Doctor book 3, Canti. sect. 39. because to attain beatitude one must expect and ask help from God; one must detest faults, endure punishments, undertake terrible things, rise toward arduous precepts, conquering the demons, the flesh, and the world: but these things are not done without hope, which resides in the irascible, and moves the other powers, fortitude, etc.

> Minor vero explicatur a S. Doct. 3. p. Canti. sect. 39. quia ad consequendam beatitudinem oportet a Deo auxilium expectare, et petere; oportet detestari culpas, tolerare poenas, aggredi terribilia, erigi ad ardua praecepta, vincendo daemones, carnem, et mundum: haec autem absque spe non fiunt, quae in irascibili residet, movetque alias vires, fortitudinem, etc.

10 But this precept is affirmative, yet including a negative, of not despairing; and insofar as it includes the negative, it obliges always, as Sanchez notes lib. 1. Decal. cap. 33. Suarez de spe, disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 7. D. Thom. loc. cit. Fagundez num. 5. For the acts contrary to Hope are intrinsically evil. Some, however, cited by Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 5. think this precept to be merely negative; he himself nevertheless says that both the affirmative is given, and indeed a special one, and not only a general one; as some Summists think. So also Fulgentius lib. 3. cap. 7.

> Est autem hoc praeceptum affirmativum, includens tamen negativum, non desperandi; et prout includit negativum, obligat ad semper, ut notant Sanchez lib. 1. Decal. cap. 33. Suarez de spe, disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 7. D. Thom. loc. cit. Fagundez num. 5. Nam actus contrarii Spei sunt intrinsece mali. Existimant tamen aliqui apud Caspensem disp. 2. sect. 5. praeceptum hoc esse mere negativum; ipse tamen ait dari et affirmativum, et quidem speciale, et non tantum generale; ut putant aliqui summistae. Sic et Fuliens. lib. 3. cap. 7.

11 Insofar, however, as it is an affirmative precept, it obliges at some time to acts of Hope at some time; but it is doubtful at what time it obliges.

> Quatenus vero est praeceptum affirmativum, obligat aliquando ad actus Spei aliquo tempore; sed dubium est quo tempore obliget.

12 Some, cited by Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 1. dub. 1. think that, once an act of Hope has been had, this precept no longer obliges.

> Quidam apud Aragonium 2. 2. quaest. 22. art. 1. dub. 1. existimant, habito semel actu Spei, hoc praeceptum non amplius obligare.

13 But it obliges after the use of reason, not immediately, but not after much time, and sometimes even during life, by the judgment of the prudent, so that one is not without an act of hope for many years. See on the act of faith what I said in the preceding Treatise disp. 1. quaest. 14. and following. And I shall say in the following Treatise on the precept of Charity disp. 8. from quaest. 50. So Suarez disp. 2. sect. 1. Caspens. num. 19. He adds, with Castro Palao, that regularly men satisfy this precept when they grieve over their sins, which is almost never without an act of Hope. Fulgentius adds, that one is obliged at the end of life, and when one is gravely tempted to despair, and as often as the precept of faith urges, For he that cometh to God must believe that he is a rewarder. Hebr. 11. So also Bassaeus.

> Obligat vero post usum rationis, non statim, sed non post multum tempus, et aliquando etiam in vita, prudentis iudicio, ut non sit per multos annos sine actu spei. Vide de actu fidei, quae dixi Tract. praecedenti disp. 1. quaest. 14. et sequenti. Et dicam tract. sequent. de praecepto Charitatis disp. 8. a quaest. 50. Ita Suarez disp. 2. sect. 1. Caspens. num. 19. Addit cum Castro Palao, regulariter homines huic praecepto satisfacere, cum de peccatis dolent, quod fere nunquam sit sine actu Spei. Addit Fuliens. obligate in fine vitae, et cum desperationis quis tentaretur graviter, et quoties urget fidei praeceptum, Accedentem enim ad Deum oportet credere, quod remunerator sit. Hebr. 11. Sic et Bassaeus.

Sole Doubt: Whether this precept would bind one to whom certain damnation had been revealed

[1] Yet the Seraphic Doctor believes this impossible case, book 1, dist. 48, dub. 1 of the text. D. Thomas there art. 4. ad 2. inclines to it. The same has Dionysius the Carthusian in his dialogue on the judgment of the soul, art. 5. where he reports Alexander, William, Halensis. The same thinks Albert the Great, and others.

> Hunc tamen casum impossibilem credunt S. Bonav. 1. dist. 48. dub. 1. litt. Inclinat D. Thom. ibi art. 4. ad 2. Idem habet Dionysius Carthus. dial. de Iudicio animae, art. 5. ubi refert Alensem, Guillelmum, Altisiodor. Idem sentit Argent. et alii.

[2] The OTHERS indeed say that it can be revealed. So D. Thom. loc. cit. and quaest. 23. de ver. art. 8. ad 2. Maior book 3, dist. 26. quaest. 3. Gabriel lect. 68. and 69. on the Canon. Caspens. de spe disp. 3. sect. 2. Vasquez 1. 2. disp. 22. Fagundez lib. 1. in Decal. cap. 31. n. 13. The Thomists everywhere, Vulpes disp. 59. art. 3. who says it can happen even regularly. Finally, of the absolute power, the Scholastics commonly assert it, with whom Mastrius subscribes, book 3, disp. 6. quaest. 19. Arriaga disp. 30. sect. 2. who, together with Arretinus the Scotist, says that in that case one cannot despair, although he is not bound to hope. The others indeed say that he can not will beatitude. So Suarez, Turrianus, Fagundez, Coninck, Amicus, Mastrius, Poncius, and others.

> CAETERI vero dicunt id posse revelari. Ita D. Thom. loc. cit. et quaest. 23. de ver. art. 8. ad 2. Maior 3. dist. 26. quaest. 3. Gabr. lect. 68. et 69. in Can. Caspens. de spe disp. 3. sect. 2. Vasquez 1. 2. disp. 22. Fagundez lib. 1. in Decal. cap. 31. n. 13. Thomistae passim, Vulpes disp. 59. art. 3. qui dicit, posse id fieri etiam regulariter. Tandem de absoluta potentia id asserunt communiter Scholastici, quibus subscribit Mastrius 3. disp. 6. quaest. 19. Arriaga disp. 30. sect. 2. qui una cum Arretino Scotista dicit, in eo casu, non posse desperare, licet non teneatur sperare. Caeteri vero aiunt, posse nolle beatitudinem. Ita Suarez, Turrian. Fagundez, Coninch. Amicus, Mastrius, Poncius, et alii.

[3] I say therefore that this revelation cannot happen.

> Dico igitur, non posse fieri hanc revelationem.

[4] It is PROVED by the Seraphic Doctor, because this revelation would cause evil, and no good; for then that man would have to will to be separated from God, as an enemy, nor could he keep the precepts, but would have to go away headlong in looseness, and despair. Which the adversaries vainly deny, whence also it would follow that the precept of hoping does not urge, since it would be about a thing impossible of attainment.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. quia haec revelatio malum causaret, et nullum bonum; tunc enim deberet ille velle a Deo separari, ut hostis, neque posset is praecepta servare, sed deberet laxe praeceps abire, et desperare. Quae frustra negant adversi, unde etiam sequeretur, praeceptum sperandi non urgere, cum esset circa rem obtentu impossibilem.

5 They OBJECT. We know that the Antichrist is to be damned, and when he comes, he will be recognized from his works, and thus some of the just will flee from him. Similarly the damnation of Judas was revealed, Matth. 26, Woe to that man, etc. and Ioan. 17 he calls him the son of perdition.

OBIICIUNT. Scimus Antichristum fore damnandum, et cum venerit, agnoscetur ex operibus, et ita iusti aliqui effugient eum. Similiter Iudae damnatio revelata est, Matth. 26. Vae homini illi, etc. et Ioan. 17. vocat eum filium perditionis.

6 Mastrius answers num. 498. that the perdition of Judas and of the Antichrist was revealed not to Judas himself, but to the Church, and therefore the induced inconveniences do not follow.

Respondet Mastrius num. 498. non fuisse revelatam Iudae ipsi, sed Ecclesiae perditionem Iudae, et Antichristi, ideo non sequuntur incommoda inducta.

Disputation V: On the Gift of Fear

1 Of that fear there is chiefly to be disputed, whence God begins to taste of wisdom to the mind, and the creature to be foolish; of this the Seraphic Doctor says on the seven Gifts, cap. 3. on the gift of fear, that it never departs from wisdom, but grows with it, and advances unto the perfect day: and he brings forward Hugh of S. Vict. lib. 2. de Arca morali, cap. ult. saying: In the hearts of the Saints Wisdom is sown through fear, watered through grace, dies through sorrow, is rooted through faith, germinates through devotion, rises through compunction, grows through desire, is strengthened through charity, flourishes through Hope, buds and spreads its branches through circumspection, etc. With this gradation the Seraphic Doctor shows also in this fear the twilight, the noon, and the evening of Wisdom: but since it seems to be identified with hope, therefore this must first be seen.

> DE illo timore praecipue disputandum est, unde incipit Deus menti sapere, creaturaeque desipere; de hoc dicit Seraphicus de septem Donis, cap. 3. de Dono timoris, quod a sapientia nunquam recedit, sed cum ea crescit, et proficit in perfectum diem: affertque Hugonem de S. Vict. lib. 2. de Arca morali, cap. ult. dicentem: In cordibus Sanctorum per timorem Sapientia seminatur, per gratiam rigatur, per dolorem moritur, per fidem radicatur, per devotionem germinat, per compunctionem oritur, per desiderium crescit, per charitatem roboratur, per Spem viret, per circumspectionem frondet, et expandit ramos, etc. Hac gradatione ostendit etiam Seraphicus in hoc timore Sapientiae crepusculum, meridiem, et vesperam: verum cum spei videatur identificari, ideo de hoc primo videndum est.

Question I: Whether fear is a habit distinct from hope

1 To the virtue of Hope is attached the gift of Fear, which labors in the flight from evil, as will be clear from what is to be said.

> VIRTUTI Spei adnexum est Timoris donum, quod in fuga mali insudat, ut constabit ex dicendis.

2 NOTE that Fear is sometimes taken for a sensible affection, which consists in the flight from an evil apprehended [by the senses]. Second, for the flight from evil as apprehended by the intellect. Third, for the flight from some future evil, which bears some order toward God, and in this way it is considered by the Theologian; and among these Fears is also the gift of Fear.

> NOTA, Timorem aliquando sumi pro affectione sensibili, quae in fuga mali apprehensi consistit. Secundo pro fuga mali, apprehensi intellectu. Tertio pro fuga alicuius mali futuri, quae ordinem aliquem habeat ad Deum, et tali modo consideratur a Theologo, et inter hos Timores, est etiam Timoris donum.

3 I ASSERT that this Fear differs from Hope.

> ASSERO, hunc Timorem a Spe differre.

4 IT IS PROVED from Cardinal Bonaventure first, because according to the Saints and the Philosophers there are four distinct affections of the soul: Joy and Sorrow; Hope and Fear. Now thus they retain their essentials in respect of any evil whatsoever.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo, quia secundum Sanctos, et Philosophos, quatuor sunt affectiones animi distinctae. Gaudium, et Dolor: Spes, et Timor. Sic autem retinent sua essentialia in ordine ad quodcumque malum.

5 SECOND: Because just as the affections concerning the present are opposed, such as Joy and Sorrow, so too are the affections that look to the future, such as Hope and Fear.

> SECUNDO: Quia sicut affectiones de praesenti opponuntur, ut Gaudium, et Dolor; ita et affectiones, quae respiciunt futurum, ut Spes, et Timor.

6 THIRD. The habit of a virtue differs more from the habits of the gifts than the habits of the virtues differ from one another: but the habit of Fear is reckoned among the Gifts, and the habit of Hope among the virtues, as Cardinal Gregory says, book 11, Moralia, chapter 4.

> TERTIO. Plus differt habitus virtutis ab habitibus donorum, quam habitus virtutum ab invicem: Sed habitus Timoris computatur inter Dona: Habitus spei inter virtutes, ut ait D. Greg. 11. Moral. cap. 4.

7 FOURTH: When things are separable, they are distinguished really: but the fear of the Lord is holy, enduring unto ages of ages, Psalm 18; hope, however, is emptied in the fatherland, as I showed in disputation 4, question 11. Therefore.

> QUARTO: Quando aliqua sunt separabilia, distinguuntur realiter: sed Timor Domini sanctus permanet in saeculum saeculi, Psal. 18. spes autem evacuatur in patria, ut ostendi disp. 4. quaest. 11. Ergo.

8 FIFTH: The causes of things whose effects are opposed are themselves opposed. But Fear makes one timid; hope makes one secure: Therefore.

> QUINTO: Quorum effectus opponuntur, etiam causae opponuntur. Sed Timor pavidum reddit; spes securum: Ergo.

9 SIXTH. Whose formal acts are diverse, their habits also are diverse; but the act of hope is a kind of confidence and stretching forth toward arduous eternal good; while that of Fear is a flight from evil; Therefore. That these acts are diverse also comes from the variety of objects, for Potencies are distinguished by acts, and acts by objects, as Aristotle has it, book 2, de anima, 33, as Cardinal Bonaventure teaches 1 dist. 7 art. 1 q. 1 ad argumenta, and q. 3 ad argumenta, and in 2 dist. 7 p. 1 art. 2 q. 1 ad arg., and dist. 24 p. 1 art. 2 q. 1 ad arg., and in 3 dist. 23 art. 1 q. 3 ad arg., and dist. 26 art. 1 q. 2 ad arg. — they are distinguished, I say, at least a posteriori by their objects, insofar as they have the character of motive. But the object of hope is good, future, eternal, arduous: the object of Fear is a future evil, surmountable: Therefore.

> SEXTO. Quorum actus formales sunt diversi, etiam habitus sunt diversi; sed actus spei est quaedam confidentia, et erectio in bonum aeternum arduum; Timoris vero est fuga a malo; Ergo. Quod etiam diversi sint actus, venit ex varietate obiectorum, nam Potentiae per actus, et actus per obiecta distinguuntur, ut habet Aristoteles 2. de anima, 33. ut docet D. Bonav. 1. dist. 7. art. 1. quaest. 1. ad argumenta, et quaest. 3. ad argumenta, et in 2. dist. 7. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad arg. et dist. 24. p. 1. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad arg. et in 3. dist. 23. art. 1. quaest. 3. ad arg. et dist. 26. art. 1. quaest. 2. ad arg. distinguuntur inquam, saltem a posteriori per obiecta, ut habent rationem motivi. Sed obiectum spei est bonum, futurum, aeternum, arduum: obiectum Timoris est malum futurum superabile: Ergo.

10 YOU WILL OBJECT first: The same power abstracts from one extreme and is drawn toward the other; for indeed the same weight abstracts from the summit and is drawn to the center. The same is the power in spirits that weight is in bodies, as Cardinal Augustine says, book 11 de civitate Dei, chapter 18, and book 6 de Trinitate, chapter 10, and book 13 of the Confessions, chapter 9. Therefore there is one habit by which we flee from evil in fearing, and tend toward good in hoping.

OBIICIES primo: Eadem virtus abstrahit ab uno extremo, et attrahit ad alterum, sic enim idem pondus abstrahit a summo, et detrahit ad centrum. Eadem autem est virtus in spiritibus, quod in corporibus est pondus, ut ait D. August. lib. 11. de civit. cap. 18. et lib. 6. de Trinit. cap. 10. et lib. 13. confess. cap. 9. Ergo unus est habitus, quo refugimus a malo timendo; et tendimus in bonum sperando.

11 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS by denying the parity; for in local motion, by the same motion we recede from the terminus a quo and approach the terminus ad quem, because local motion is between two extremes, one of which has the character of a principle, the other of a terminus. But in voluntary matters it happens otherwise; for when there are two opposites, the soul can be affected with regard to one while considering nothing with regard to the other; for it can be affected with regard to the good while considering nothing regarding the evil, and conversely; and therefore it is moved by diverse affections with regard to opposites.

RESPONDET S. Doct. negando paritatem; nam in motu locali eodem motu recedimus a termino a quo*, et accedimus ad terminum* ad quem. Idco, quia motus localis est inter duo extrema, quorum alterum habet rationem principii: alterum termini. In voluntariis autem secus evenit; quando enim sunt duo opposita, potest anima affici circa unum, nihil circa alterum considerando; potest enim affici circa bonum, nihil considerando circa malum, et e contra; et ideo diversis affectibus movetur circa opposita.

12 YOU WILL OBJECT second: In the disciplines there is one discipline of opposites, as of the straight and the curved, of the healthy and the sick: But the habit of virtue is a kind of art: Therefore it directs toward opposites: Therefore the same moves both to pursuing the good and to fleeing evil.

OBIICIES secundo: In disciplinis una est oppositorum disciplina, ut recti, et curvi, sani, et aegri: Sed habitus virtutis est quaedam ars: Ergo dirigit ad opposita: Ergo idem movet ad prosequendum bonum, et ad malum fugiendum.

13 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS by denying the likeness with the habits of the virtues, for two reasons. The first is, because the will separates things that are really conjoined; hence someone wills the antecedent, and yet does not will the consequent. But cognition does not separate things that are naturally conjoined; hence whoever knows and asserts the antecedent asserts also the consequent. And since, by reason of consequence, opposite properties follow opposites in the very thing by which they are to be known — as if white gathers, black gathers — hence it is that there can be one cognitive habit of opposites, although there is not one affective habit.

RESPONDET S. Doct. negando similitudinem cum habitibus virtutum, duplici de causa: Prima est, quia voluntas separat ea, quae realiter sunt coniuncta, unde aliquis vult antecedens; et tamen non vult consequens: Cognitio autem non separat ea, quae naturaliter sunt coniuncta; unde qui novit, et asserit antecedens, asserit et consequens. Quoniam vero per consequentiam in ipso ad opposita, oppositae consequuntur proprietates, per quas habent cognosci, ut si album congreget, nigrum congreget, hinc est, ut unus possit esse habitus cognitivus oppositorum, quamvis non sit unus habitus affectivus.

14 The second dissimilitude is, because the cognitive power can busily deal with either opposite by a like act; for it judges of the oblique by the rule of the straight itself; but the affective power not so; rather, if it appetites one of two opposites, it rejects the other; if it loves one, it hates the other, speaking per se. The reason is, because the affective power is more united to the appetible than the cognitive to the knowable; hence love transforms the lover into the beloved; and therefore it does not follow that, if there could be one science of opposites, there could also be one affection, or one directive virtue of affection.

SECUNDA dissimilitudo est, quia potentia cognitiva consimili actu negotiari potest super utrumque oppositum: iudicat enim de recto, et obliquo per regulam ipsius recti; sed affectiva non sic; imo si appetit unum oppositorum; alterum respuit; Si amat unum, alterum odit, per se loquendo; ratio est, quia affectiva magis unit ipsi appetibili, quam cognitiva cognoscibili, unde amor transformat amantem in amatum; et propterea non sequitur, quod si una esse possit scientia oppositorum; etiam valeat esse una affectio, vel una virtus affectionis directiva.

15 YOU WILL OBJECT third. Of two extremes there is one mean: but between Despair and Presumption Hope and Fear intervene: Therefore they are one.

OBIICIES tertio. Duorum extremorum unum est medium: sed inter Desperationem, et Praesumptionem mediat Spes, et Timor: Ergo sunt unum.

16 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS: between two extremes there is one mean dividing equally, and this is a point; but with the mean taken broadly, which is not indivisibly between the extremes, there can be several means: Thus between Brixia and Venice lies Verona, Vicenza, Padua. Therefore between the extremes of presumption and of Despair there are Hope and Fear, yet so that Fear inclines more toward despair, and Hope declines more toward presumption; yet neither reaches the defect of the other.

RESPONDET S. Doct. inter duas extremitates unam esse medietatem dividentem ex aequo, et haec est punctum: at late sumpta medietate, quae non est inter extrema indivisibiliter, possunt esse plures medietates: Sic inter Brixiam, et Venetias est Verona, Vincentia, Patavium. Igitur inter extrema praesumptionis, tionis, et Desperationis sunt Spes, et Timor, ita tamen, ut Timor magis ad desperationem; Spes magis declinet ad praesumptionem; neutra tamen ad alterutrius defectum pertingat.

17 The Holy Doctor ALSO answers otherwise: that this is to be understood of a mean which is composed of both extremes, as Liberality intervenes between Prodigality and Avarice: but Hope and Fear do not intervene in this manner.

ALITER etiam respondet S. Doctor, illud intelligi de medietate, quae consistitur ex utroque extremo, sicut Largitas inter Prodigalitatem mediat, et Avaritiam: Spes autem, et Timor, non mediant hoc pacto.

18 THIRD he answers, by denying that Fear and Hope are means of the same extremes: For Hope holds the middle between Despair and Presumption; but Fear between Rashness and Timidity, or pusillanimity; and thus it is not necessary that Fear and Hope agree in the unity of virtue, unity of affection, etc.

TERTIO respondet, negando, Timorem, et Spem esse medietates eorundem extremorum: Spes enim medium tenet inter Desperationem, et Praesumptionem; sed Timor inter Temeritatem, et Timiditatem, sive pusillanimitatem; et sic non oportet, ut Timor, et Spes conveniant in unitate virtutis, unitate affectionis, etc.

19 YOU WILL OBJECT fourth. What is begotten is like its begetter; but Hope is begotten from faith, which believes both good and evil: Therefore Hope also tends toward goods and flees evils.

OBIICIES quarto. Genitum est simile generanti; sed Spes gignitur e fide, quae credit bona, et mala: Ergo et Spes tendit in bona, et fugit a malis.

20 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS by denying that there should be a likeness in this, all the more because Hope is produced by faith as an equivocal cause; for faith, because it regards goods and evils under the aspect of the truth revealed, can regard both: but Hope and Fear are affective habits, which do not regard good and evil [indifferently]. Furthermore, faith is a habit directed to cognition, which is not diversified on account of the contrariety of objects; but affective habits must be diverse, because they regard under diverse aspects: the good indeed under the aspect of the fitting, but evil under the aspect of the noxious.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor negando, in hoc esse debere similitudinem, eo magis, quod producitur Spes a fide, ut causa aequivoca; nam fides, quia respicit bona, et mala sub ratione veri revelati, potest utraque respicere: Spes autem, et Timor sunt habitus affectivi, qui non respiciunt bonum, et malum. Deinde fides est habitus spectans ad cognitionem, quae non diversificatur propter obiectorum contrarietatem; at vero habitus affectivi diversi esse debent, quia respiciunt sub diversa ratione; bonum quidem sub ratione convenientis; malum vero sub ratione noxii.

21 YOU WILL OBJECT fifth. Of opposites the same is the reason; but vice, the opposite of virtue, turns away from good and turns toward evil: Therefore the same virtue performs the same.

> OBIICIES quinto. Oppositorum eadem est ratio; sed vitium, oppositum virtuti, avertit a bono, et convertit ad malum: Ergo eadem virtus idem praestat.

22 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS that the acts of aversion from God and conversion to creatures are two, although they can be referred to one sin; because one and the same can be compared and referred to diverse things; and thus it is not the same with the affection of Fear and Hope, because one potency cannot at once and in one act be affected with regard to diverse contraries; therefore it does not follow that, if aversion and conversion can be about one action and form, likewise Fear and Hope have being about one and the same affection.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, actus aversionis a Deo, et conversionis ad creaturas, esse duos; licet possint esse circa unum peccatum relati; quia unum, et idem potest ad diversa comparari, et referri; et sic non est simile de affectione Timoris, et Spei, quia non potest simul, et semel una potentia uno actu circa diversa contraria affici, propterea non sequitur, quod si aversio, et conversio possunt esse circa unam actionem, et formam; similiter Timor, et Spes habeant esse circa unam, et eandem affectionem.

Question II: What the object of fear is

1 FEAR has for its object evil, professedly to be fled.

> TIMOR habet pro obiecto malum, professo fugiendum.

2 The Holy Doctor observes here, in dub. 1 and 2, that there are four Fears. The first is worldly, and it is that by which someone, fearing some inconvenience of this life, in order to escape it, offends God.

> Observat autem S. Doctor dub. primo, et secundo, hic, quatuor esse Timores: Primus mundanus, et est is, quo quis, timens aliquod huius vitae incommodum, ut hoc effugiat, offendit Deum.

3 From this fear Christ taught us to beware, Matthew 10: Do not fear those who kill the body. The second Fear is servile, by which one is frightened away from sins on account of punishments. This however is twofold: one is merely servile, mechanical, which is so frightened by punishments that, if these did not loom, it would still commit sins freely; and this is still inordinate, and is therefore censured by all, especially by Cardinal Bonaventure; the other is indeed servile but does not exclude flight from fault, such as that of a man who is crushed by his committed sins out of fear of gehenna, and such is good and a gift of the Holy Spirit, as the Council of Trent teaches, session 14, chapter 4, and session 6, canon 8, as I shall say in question 3. Christ enjoins this fear at once in the place cited of Matthew: Fear him, who after he has killed the body has power to send into Gehenna, and 1 John 4: Fear is not in Charity: but perfect

Charity casts out fear. In this text the third Fear is also hinted at, which is called Initial, by which one so fears God's offense that he fears punishment at the same time; and this is touched in the place cited where it is said: Fear is not in Charity: but perfect Charity casts out fear. He means that this is not with charity — truly perfect — which is clear from that clause, but perfect Charity, etc.

> Ab hoc cavere docuit Christus Matth. 10. Nolite timere eos, qui occidunt corpus. Secundus Timor est servilis, quo quis terretur a peccatis ob poenas: Hic autem duplex est; alius mere servilis mechanicus, qui ita poenis terretur, ut si illae non imminerent, adhuc resolute peccata committeret; et hic est adhuc inordinatus, qui propterea ab omnibus, maxime a D. Bonavent. vituperatur; alius vero est servilis, non excludens fugam culpae, qualis est hominis, qui atteritur de peccatis commissis ob metum gehennae, et talis est bonus, et donum Spiritus Sancti, ut docet Concilium Trident. sess. 14. cap. 4. et sess. 6. can. 8. ut dicam quaest. 3. Hunc timorem iniungit Christus statim loco cit. Matthaei: Timete eum, qui postquam occiderit corpus, habet potestatem mittendi in Gehennam, et prima Ioan. 4. Timor non est in Charitate: sed perfecta Charitas foras mittit timorem. Hoc textu innuitur etiam tertius Timor, qui dicitur Initialis, quo quis adeo timet Dei offensam, ut simul timeat poenam; et hic tangitur loco cit. dum dicitur: Timor non est in Charitate: sed perfecta Charitas foras mittit timorem: Vult dicere, hunc non esse cum charitate, sane perfecta, quod constat illa coniunctione, sed perfecta Charitas, etc.

4 The FOURTH Fear is filial, which detests evil insofar as it is against God and redounds to his offense. Of this it is said, Romans 8: You have not received the spirit of servitude again in fear — that is, you have not received servile fear, like the ancients, who heard the observance of the law through terrors and threats — but you have received the Spirit of adoption of sons, in which we cry Abba (Father). Of this fear it is also said, Psalm 18: The fear of the Lord is holy, enduring unto ages of ages. Where Augustine and others read chaste; for the just are compared to God as a most chaste bride to her bridegroom, acting indeed out of fear lest they wound the bridegroom, but with love. So 1 Corinthians 10 [actually 2 Cor. 11]: I have espoused you, etc.

> QUARTUS Timor est filialis, qui est detestans malum, quatenus est contra Deum, et in eius offensam redundat. De hoc dicitur, Rom. 8. Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore; idest, non accepistis timorem servilem, sicuti veteres, qui legis observantiam terroribus et minis audiere; Sed accepistis Spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus Abba (Pater.) De quo timore dicitur etiam Psalm. 18. Timor Domini Sanctus, permanens in saeculum saeculi. Ubi Augustinus, et alii legunt: castus, Iusti enim comparantur Deo, ut sponsa castissima ad sponsum, operantes timore quidem, ne sponsum laedant; sed cum amore. Sic prima Corinth. 10. Despondi enim vos, etc.

5 One must then note with Cardinal Bonaventure, opusculum 15, On the Seven Gifts: On the Gift of Fear, chapter 1, that the variety of Fears is born from the variety of loves; for Fear is love fleeing whatever opposes it, from Cardinal Augustine, book 14, de civitate Dei, chapter 7. And in the Gloss on John 10, which is St. Augustine's, we have: Fear is a flight, lest man lose what he loves. Therefore Fear arises from love, and thus from ordered love arises ordered fear, and from inordinate love, inordinate fear; and such as is the love of the good, such is the fear of the opposite evil.

> OPORTET deinde adnotare cum D. Bonav. opusc. 15 de septem Donis: De Dono Timoris, cap. 1. Varietatem Timorum ex varietate amorum nasci; Timor enim est amor fugiens quidquid adversatur, ex D. Augustino 14. de civit. Dei cap. 7. Et in Glossa ad Ioan. 10. quae est S. Augustini, habetur: Timor est fuga, ne perdat homo, quod amat. Igitur Timor oritur ex amore, et ita ex amore ordinato oritur timor ordinatus: et ex amore inordinato, inordinatus timor; et qualis est amor boni, talis est timor mali oppositi.

6 Hence Adam, who at first loved God filially, feared to offend him; but after he offended out of inordinate love, he feared servilely and said: Lord, I heard your voice, and I feared, Genesis 3.

> Hinc Adam, qui primo amabat Deum filialiter, timebat eum offendere, postquam vero ex inordinato amore offendit, timuit serviliter, et ait: Domine audivi vocem tuam, et timui, Genesis 3.

7 HUGH, book 2 de sacramentis, part 13, chapter 5, distinguishes five Fears. The first is Human, or natural, which is a passion, arising from natural love, by which each one fears harm to his nature; but by passions we neither merit nor demerit, because they are not subject to free will, except when one conducts himself rationally with regard to them. With this fear Christ feared to die, but only as much as he willed, for our example and instruction.

> HUNC Hugo lib. 2. de sacr. part. 13. cap. 5. quinque distinguit Timores: Primus est Humanus, seu naturalis, quae est passio, oriens ex naturali amore, quo quisque timet naturae nocumentum; passionibus autem nec meremur, nec demeremur, quia non subiacent libero arbitrio, nisi quando quis rationabiliter se habet circa eas. Isto timore Christus timuit mori, sed non nisi quantum voluit nobis in exemplum, et documentum.

8 The SECOND is Worldly, which is truly born of inordinate love of the present life or of things pertaining to it, and is always evil; because, as John says, 1 John 2: Whoever loves the world is constituted an enemy of God. This, however, according to the variety of the goods of the world, of the flesh, etc., of its loved objects, is subdivided materially, as Cardinal Bonaventure notes, dub. 1 literal.

> SECUNDUS est Mundanus, qui sane ex inordinato amore nascitur vitae praesentis, vel rerum ad eam pertinentium, et est semper malus; quia, ut ait Ioan. prima c. 2. Qui diligit mundum, inimicus Dei constituitur. Hic vero iuxta varietatem bonorum mundi, carnis, etc. amatorum, subdividitur materialiter, ut notat D. Bonavent. dub. 1. litterali.

9 The THIRD is Servile, which from God is (as the Holy Doctor says) not as "merely servile" sounds, but as implicitly excluding offense; of this Psalm 118: Pierce my flesh with your fear, and Cardinal Augustine, enarratio 25: The servile fear, the pedagogue of the law, came first, which leads to Christ; it arises from love of eternal things, lest one lose them by eternal damnation; it is twofold, as I shall say in question 3, near the end of the arguments.

> TERTIUS est Servilis, qui a Deo est (ut ait S. D.) non ut mere servile sonat, sed ut implicite excludit offensam; de hoc Psalm. 118. Confige timore tuo carnes meas*, et D. Augustinus, enarrat. 25.* Timor servilis, legis paedagogus nova, praecessit, qui ad Christum ducit*, oritur ex amore aeternorum, ne ea perdat aeterna damnatione, qui est duplex, ut dicam* quaest. 3. circa finem argumentorum.

10 The FOURTH is the filial fear of beginners, of which it is said: The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and it is from charity begun. Therefore of this it is said that it is not with charity, that is, perfect, because: perfect charity casts out fear, 1 John 4; and Cardinal Bernard, sermon 22 on the Song of Songs, says: Not undeservedly this Fear is called the beginning of wisdom, which often first sets itself against folly. For this fear is a kind of entrance to wisdom.

> QUARTUS est filialis incipientium, de quo dicitur: Initium sapientiae Timor Domini*, et est a charitate inchoata: Ideo de hoc dicitur, non esse cum charitate, idest perfecta, quia:* perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem*, prima Ioan. 4. et D. Bernardus* serm. 22. in Cant. ait: Non immerito hic Timor dicitur initium sapientiae, qui saepe se insipientiae primus opponit. Hic enim timor est quidam ingressus ad sapientiam.

11 The FIFTH is the Fear filial, which arises from charity perfected, as I said.

> QUINTUS est Timor filialis, qui ex charitate oritur perfecta, ut dixi.

12 OBSERVE third, with Cardinal Bonaventure, here dist. 34, dub. 3, that this last fear is divided with respect to specific objects, so that one is the chaste Fear, which is the bride's; another the friendly, that is, of the Friend; another the son's: for the son fears to offend the Father, the Friend his friend, the bride her bridegroom. But with respect to God there is one, both because of the motive, in which generically those mentioned also agree, and because there is one grace with respect to God, constituting the soul daughter, spouse, and friend of God.

> OBSERVA tertio cum D. Bonavent. hic dist. 34. dub. 3. dividi hunc ultimum timorem in ordine ad obiecta specifica, ut alius sit Timor castus, qui est sponsae: Alius amicabilis, idest, Amici; alius filii: filius enim timet offendere Patrem: Amicus amicum: sponsa sponsum; At in ordine ad Deum, unus est, tum ex motivo, in quo generice etiam allati conveniunt; tum quia una est gratia in ordine ad Deum, constituens animam filiam, sponsam, et amicam Deo.

13 He also notes, in dub. 4, that Initial and servile Fear agree in some way, for each is the beginning of wisdom, but servile begins from outside, the other through some charity. Fear is truly called the beginning of wisdom because it begins to ascend gradually to the gifts, up to the highest, which is wisdom.

> ADVERTIT etiam dub. 4. Timorem initialem, et servilem, aliquo modo convenire, nam uterque est initium sapientiae, sed servilis incipit extra; alter vero per aliquam charitatem. Dicitur vero Timor initium sapientiae, quia incipit gradatim ad dona ascendere usque ad supremum, quod est sapientiae.

14 From what has been said, then, elicit with Cardinal Bonaventure, dub. 1, that Fear regards evil by fleeing it; and because from the varying of objects arises the variety of Fears, by a broad division the definitions of each fear can also be given. Fear, therefore, is thus defined by Cardinal Augustine, Tractate 46 on John: Fear is the flight of the soul, lest it lose what it loves. For it flees the evil, which is the loss of the beloved good. It is also defined by Damascene, book 2 de fide, chapter 18: Fear is the expectation of a future evil; and expectation is taken broadly for the estimation, shuddering at the looming danger; for thus unlucky tidings are awaited, as the Holy Doctor notes, dub. 1. Therefore Fear in general is the flight from an arduous evil to be avoided, and from a good to be reverenced, as St. Bonaventure teaches, part 3 of the Centiloquium, section 45.

> Ex dictis igitur elice cum D. Bonavent. dub. 1. Timorem respicere malum fugiendo; et quia ex variatis obiectis oritur varietas Timorum, hinc lata divisione possunt etiam ferri definitiones cuiusque timoris. Timor igitur sic definitur a D. Augustino Tract. 46. in Ioan. Timor est fuga animi, ne amittat quod amat. Fugit enim malum, quod est carentia boni amati. Definitur etiam a Damasceno 2. de fide, cap. 18. Timor est expectatio futuri mali*, sumitur vero expectatio late pro aestimatione, imminens periculum horrescente; sic enim nuncia infausta expectantur, ut advertit S. Doctor dub. 1. Igitur Timor in genere est fuga mali ardui ad vitandum, et boni ad reverendum, ut docet S. Bonavent. 3. part. centil. sect. 45.*

15 HENCE, given this division of Fears, each can be defined from its various motives. Thus natural Fear is the flight from an evil noxious to nature. Worldly Fear is defined: it is the inordinate flight from the evils of this life. Servile Fear: it is the flight from penal evils, without excluding the flight from offense against God, and so with the rest.

> HINC vero data divisione Timorum, ex variis motivis possunt singuli definiri. Sic Timor naturalis: est fuga mali noxii naturae. Timor mundanus definitur: est inordinata fuga a malis huius vitae. Timor servilis: est fuga malorum poenalium, non exclusa fuga offensae in Deum*, et sic de reliquis.*

16 Fear, therefore, of whatever kind, is a recoil from the arduous — which is evil in the fears adduced, and also good in the perfect filial fear; for it recoils, not indeed from the good, but from the arduousness, which is the excellence of the good, yet it recoils with reverence; and for this reason they admit filial Fear even in the fatherland, as is said, Psalm 18: Enduring unto ages of ages — truly in this life it recoils from evil as it is offense, as I shall say in question 7.

> Timor itaque quicumque, est resilitio ab arduo, quod est malum in allatis timoribus; et etiam bonum in timore perfecto filiali; resilit enim, non quidem a bono, sed ab arduitate, quae est excellentia boni, sed resilit cum reverentia, et ob id etiam in patria Timorem filialem admittunt, ut dicitur Psal. 18. Permanens in saeculum saeculi*, sane in hac vita resilit a malo, ut est offensa, ut dicam quaest. 7.*

17 From this variety of objects the Holy Doctor deduces that there is not one univocal specific object of all, but an analogical one; for the good which is the object of perfect filial fear — which fears to lose the highest good on the way, and in the fatherland is borne reverently toward that sublime good — are analogical objects.

> Ex hac obiectorum varietate deducit S. Doctor non esse unum omnium obiectum specificum univocum, sed analogum; nam bonum, quod est obiectum timoris filialis perfecti, qui timet amittere bonum summum in via; et in patria reverenter in bonum illud sublime fertur, sunt obiecta analoga.

18 IT IS PROVED, therefore, by the Holy Doctor that the Object of Fear is arduous with respect to flight; for just as hope is borne toward the arduous in pursuit, so, in the opposite way, Fear ought to recoil from that arduous thing by flight, since it is disposed in the opposite manner. And just as Hope tends toward the arduous good, which is the object of pursuit, so fear [tends] toward the evil, which is the object of flight; but under the aspect of evil is included also the arduousness of the good, which will be explained in its place.

> PROBATUR igitur a S. Doctore, Obiectum Timoris esse arduum secundum fugam; nam sicuti spes fertur in arduum prosecutione, ita opposito modo Timor fuga debet ab eo arduo resilire, cum opposito modo se habeat. Sicut autem Spes in bonum tendit arduum, quod est obiectum prosecutionis; ita timor in malum, quod est obiectum fugae; sub ratione autem mali includitur etiam boni arduitas; Quod explicabitur suo loco.

Question III: Whether worldly fear is always evil

1 I ASSERT that such is the case.

> An mundanus Timor semper sit malus.
> ASSERO, ita rem se habere.

2 IT IS PROVED from Cardinal Bonaventure, in the places adduced, and especially On the Seven Gifts; because worldly Fear arises from worldly love; but worldly love is iniquitous: Therefore. The major is proved from the definitions of Fear adduced; the minor is proved by the Holy Doctor, because such love prefers creatures to the Creator. Thus it is proved also by Cardinal Cusanus, disp. 2, sect. 2.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. locis adductis, et praecipue de septem donis; Quia Timor mundanus oritur ex amore mundano; sed amor mundanus est iniquus: Ergo. Maior probatur ex definitionibus allatis Timoris: Minor probatur a S. Doctore; quia talis amor praefert creaturas Creatori. Sic probatur etiam a Caspensi disp. 2. sect. 2.

3 NOTE, however, that worldly love, from mere intensity in the absolute order of its own, is not sin, as Adrian thought, Quodlibet 2, question 2; for intensity, which is an increase according to more and less, does not vary the species: thus a growing love of self does not make the city of the Devil unless it arrives comparatively at contempt of God, as Cardinal Augustine has it, book 14, de civitate Dei, chapter 28. Thus also Christ suffered a fear most intense even unto death, and yet did not sin, as Cusanus warns, number 13, from Cardinal Bonaventure in the place cited, On the Seven Gifts.

> ADVERTE autem, amorem mundanum ex intensione mera absoluta sua non esse peccatum, ut putavit Adrianus quodl. 2. quaest. 2. nam intensio, quae est augmentum secundum magis, et minus, non variat speciem: sic amor sui crescens, non facit civitatem Diaboli, nisi quatenus pervenit comparative ad contemptum Dei, ut habet D. Augustinus 14. de civit. cap. 28. sic etiam Christus passus est timorem intensissimum usque ad mortem, neque tamen peccavit, ut monet Caspensis num. 13. ex D. Bonavent. loco cit. de septem donis.

4 It is therefore evil when it arrives at preferring a temporal good to God; and if indeed in that temporal good it constitutes the ultimate end, it will be mortal. But if it lightly prefer a created thing to God, for instance by lying, or by stealing two pence, it will be venial, as St. Augustine says, book 22, de civitate Dei, chapter 26; and in this sense St. Jerome also speaks against Jovinian.

> Tunc igitur est malus, cum pervenit ad praeferendum bonum temporale Deo; et si quidem in illo bono temporali finem ultimum constituit, erit mortale. Si vero leviter praeferat rem creatam Deo, puta mentiendo, vel furando dipondium, erit veniale, ut ait S. Augustinus 22. de civit. cap. 26. et hoc sensu loquitur etiam S. Hieronymus contra Iovinianum.

5 YOU WILL OBJECT. We are bound to renounce all things, Luke 15 [actually Luke 14]: Everyone who does not renounce all that he has cannot be my disciple; but he who intensely loves creatures has not a mind prepared to despise them for Christ: Therefore.

> OBIICIES. Teneremur omnibus renunciare, Lucae 15. Omnis, qui non renunciaverit omnibus, non potest meus esse discipulus; sed qui intense diligit creaturas, non habet animum paratum ad eas spernendas propter Christum: Ergo.

6 The Holy Doctor ANSWERS, as to that passage, that there is a twofold discipleship of Christ: one of necessity, the other of supererogation, or perfection. Disciples by necessity are bound to renounce all things in affection — that is, to use worldly things, not to enjoy them, but to tend toward eternal things, so as not to wish to prefer temporal things to eternal, and so to offend God on their account, as Cusanus also notes, number 14.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor ad locum illum, duplicem esse discipulatum Christi; alterum necessitatis; alterum supererogationis, seu perfectionis: Discipuli ex necessitate tenentur omnibus renunciare affectu; idest uti rebus mundanis, non frui; sed tendere in aeterna, ut non velint temporalia praeferre aeternis, atque adeo propter ea Deum offendere, ut notat etiam Caspensis num. 14.

7 But discipleship by perfection must renounce all things even in effect, and leave them. Hence Matthew 19: Behold, we have left all things, and have followed you.

> Discipulatus vero ex perfectione debet omnibus renunciare, etiam effectu, eaque relinquere. Unde Matth. 19. Ecce nos reliquimus omnia, et secuti sumus te.

8 YOU WILL SAY: Love, if it is intensified toward creatures, ought to be remitted toward God.

> DICES: Amor, si intenditur in creaturas, debet remitti in Deum.

9 IT IS ANSWERED that intensity does not take away the appreciative love of God, as St. Bonaventure and Cusanus note, number 15.

> RESPONDETUR, intensionem non tollere amorem Dei appretiativum, ut notat S. Bonav. et Caspens. n. 15.

Question IV: Whether servile fear is honorable, and a gift of God

1 I JOIN together these two questions of St. Bonaventure, because they have much in common and the one proves the other; for if it is a gift of the Holy Spirit, it is certainly a good.

> An Timor servilis sit honestus, et Donum Dei.
> HAS duas quaestiones S. Bonaventurae coniungo, quia multa habent communia et uno probatur alterum; Si enim est donum Spiritus Sancti, certe est bonum.

2 I ASSERT, I ASSERT, that servile fear is honorable, and a gift of the Holy Spirit.

> ASSERO ASSERO, timorem servilem esse honestum, et donum Spiritus Sancti.

3 IT SEEMS defined in the Council of Trent session 14, chapter 4, where it teaches that Attrition, by which we detest sins for fear of eternal punishment, is a gift of God, and is brought about by the impulse of the Holy Spirit.

> VIDETUR definitum in Concilio Trident. sess. 14. cap. 4. ubi docet, Attritionem, qua detestamur peccata propter metum poenae aeternae, esse donum Dei, et fieri ex impulsu Spiritus Sancti.

4 So too D. Bonaventure says, dub. 1. Fear indeed from grace is either from grace freely given, and so it is servile; or from grace that makes pleasing, inchoate, and so it is initial; or from perfect grace, and so it is filial. In this sense the Council of Trent also speaks, defining also session 6, canon 8: If anyone shall say that the fear of hell, by which we take refuge in the mercy of God grieving for sins, or by which we abstain from sinning, is itself a sin, or makes sinners worse; let him be anathema. Hence in question 1 he says it is a gift of the Holy Spirit, which the Alexians also assert part 3, question 76, member 2, and D. Augustine, and D. Gregory, to cite them.

> Sic et D. Bonavent. ait, dub. 1. Timor vero ex gratia, vel est ex gratia gratis data, et sic est servilis; vel ex gratia gratum faciente, inchoata, et sic est initialis; aut ex gratia perfecta, et sic est filialis. Hoc sensu loquitur etiam Concilium Trident. definiens etiam sess. 6. can. 8. Si quis dixerit, gehennae metum, per quem ad misericordiam Dei de peccatis dolendo confugimus, vel a peccando abstinemus, peccatum esse, aut peccatores peiores facere; anathema sit. Hinc quaest. 1. ait esse donum Spiritus Sancti, quod asserunt etiam Alensis 3. part. quaest. 76. memb. 2. et D. Augustinus, et D. Gregorius citandi.

5 IT IS PROVED by the Saintly Doctor from the authorities of Scripture and of the Fathers.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore authoritatibus Scripturae, et Patrum.

6 Isaiah 26: Like as a woman with child, when she draws near the time of her delivery, cries out in her pangs: so have we been in thy sight. Where St. Bonaventure reads according to the LXX: From thy fear, O Lord, we have conceived, and been delivered of the Spirit of salvation. Where by servile fear the prophets call the Spirit of salvation, says St. Jerome.

> Isaix 26. Sicut quae concipit, cum appropinquaverit ad partum, dolens clamat in doloribus suis: sic facti sumus apud te. Ubi S. Bonavent. iuxta LXX. legit: A timore tuo Domine concepimus, et parturivimus Spiritum salutis. Ubi S. Hieronymus, timorem servilem prophetas vocat Spiritum salutis.

7 He also brings forward in the Diaeta that Psalm 118: Pierce my flesh with thy fear, according to the exposition of D. Augustine enarr. 25, related in question 2 and chapter 4, there; and here he brings forward that Ecclesiasticus 1: The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, as St. Augustine expounds Tractate 9 on the epistle of John. Which the Saints also teach: Basil in the oration on the beginning of Proverbs; Bede on the first chapter of Proverbs; Gregory homily 19 on Ezechiel; Bernard homily 23 on the Song. The Master with the Scholastics dist. 34, and to Luke 12 St. Bonaventure brings forward that: Do not fear those who kill the body, and after that have not more that they can do; but fear him who after he has killed has power to cast into hell. Where he first turns away from worldly fear. Of which also Isaiah 51: Who art thou, that thou shouldst fear a mortal man, and the son of man, who shall wither like grass, and 1 Machabees 2: Fear not the words of a sinful man: for his glory is dung, and worms.

Affert etiam in Diaetae id Psal. 118. Confige timore tuo carnes meas, iuxta expositionem D. Augustini enarr. 25. relatum quaest. 2. et cap. 4. ibi, et hic affert illud Eccles. 1. Initium sapientiae timor Domini, ut exponit S. Augustinus Tract. 9. in epist. Ioan. Quod docent etiam Sancti: Basilius oratione in princ. Proverb. Beda in cap. primo. Proverbiorum. Gregorius homil. 19. in Ezech. Bernardus homil. 23. in Cant. Magister cum Scholasticis dist. 34. et ad 12. Lucae affert S. Bonavent. id. Nolite timere eos, qui occidunt corpus, animam autem non possunt occidere; sed timere eum, qui postquam occiderit, habet potestatem mittere in gehennam. Ubi primo divertit a timore mundano. De quo etiam Isaiae 51. Quis tu, ut timeres ab homine mortali, et a filio hominis, qui quasi foenum ita arescet, et primo Machab. 2. A verbis viri peccatoris ne timueritis: quia gloria eius stercus, et vermis est.

8 Next he urges holy servile fear: Fear, etc. So Jeremias 10: Fear them not, for they can do no evil, nor any good. And after: Who shall not fear thee, O King of nations? etc. the earth shall be moved at his indignation. And Psalm 32: Let all the earth fear the Lord: and let all the inhabitants of the world be moved at him. And Isaiah 8: Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself: and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And Jeremias 5: Will you not then fear me, saith the Lord: and will you not dread at my presence? He adds here that of Proverbs 15: In the fear of the Lord every one declines from evil.

Deinde timorem servilem sanctum suadet: Timete, etc. Sic est Hierem. 10. Nolite timere ea, quia nec male possunt facere, nec bene. Et post: Quis non timebit te o Rex gentium? etc. ab indignatione eius commovebitur terra. Et Psal. 32. Timeat Dominum omnis terra: ab eo autem commoveantur omnes inhabitantes orbem. Et Isa 8. Ipsum Dominum sanctificate: ipse pavor vester, et ipse terror vester. Et Hierem. 5. Me ergo non timebitis, ait Dominus: et a facie mea non dolebitis? Addit hic illud Proverb. 15. In timore Domini declinat omnis a malo.

9 Hence the Saintly Doctor in question 2 draws out, that it is a good, because the habit of this is a gift of God: Therefore also the act. The consequence is proved, because as the habits are, such are the acts; otherwise if its use were evil, it would not be from God.

Hinc S. Doctor quaest. 2. eruit, esse bonum, quia huius habitus est donum Dei: Ergo et actus. Probatur consequentia, quia quales sunt habitus, tales sunt actus; alioqui si usus eius esset malus, non esset a Deo.

10 IT IS PROVED secondly by the Saintly Doctor from the Gloss on Romans 8: You have not received again the spirit of slavery, where it has: Take care lest, because he says the spirit of slavery and of adoption, you understand a different spirit, since it is one and the same spirit; but the Spirit of adoption is the gift of the Holy Spirit: Therefore. It is confirmed. For he teaches that the spirit of slavery was received divinely by the ancients, as Bellarmine notes. For God gave also the old law.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore ex Glossa, ad id Rom. 8. Non accepistis iterum spiritum servitutis*, ubi habet:* Cave ne ex eo, quod ait, spiritum servitutis, et adoptionis, diversum intelligas spiritum, cum sit unus, atque idem spiritus, sed Spiritus adoptionis est donum Spiritus Sancti: Ergo. Confirmatur. Nam docet, spiritum servitutis acceptum divinitus ab antiquis, ut notat Bellarminus. Deus enim dedit etiam legem veterem.

11 NEXT he proves it from D. Augustine on Psalm 127: Servile fear is good and useful, whereby the habit of justice is gradually formed.

> DEINDE id probat ex D. Augustino in Psal. 127. Bonus est timor servilis, et utilis, per quem sit paulatim consuetudo iustitiae.

12 IT IS PROVED thirdly by the Saintly Doctor questions 1 and 2 in the foundation, by reason. That which prepares for justice and grace is from the Holy Spirit: Servile fear is of this kind: Therefore.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore quaest. 1. et 2. in fundamento*, ratione. Id, quod praeparat ad iustitiam, et gratiam, est a Spiritu Sancto: Timor servilis est huiusmodi: Ergo.*

13 This is the argument which the Council of Trent uses above, where it also declares that it is such only as excludes the will of sinning, in which way the Saintly Doctor also speaks in the places cited.

> Hoc est argumentum, quo utitur Concilium Trident. supra, ubi etiam declarat, eum tantum esse, qui voluntatem peccandi excludat, quo pacto loquitur etiam S. Doctor locis allegatis.

14 IT IS PROVED fourthly by the Saintly Doctor. To fear God is more than to believe: for many believe who do not fear; and holy fear arises from faith in life eternal, etc. But faith is a gift of God, as I showed in dispute one: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore. Plus est timere Deum, quam credere: Multi enim credunt, qui non timent; et Sanctus timor oritur ex fide vitae aeternae, etc. Sed fides est donum Dei, ut ostendi disput. prima: Ergo.

15 IT IS PROVED fifthly. That which opens the heart, that we may receive God through sanctifying grace, is a gift of God; for the disposition is toward the supernatural form, and therefore must be of the same order: but servile fear is of this kind from the Council of Trent. Therefore: The minor is expounded by St. Augustine tractate 9 on the epistle of John, in D. Bonaventure question 3 in the body: If there is no fear, there is no one who enters into charity. As we see by the seta the linen thread is introduced, when anything is sewn, the seta first enters, but unless it goes out, the linen does not succeed; so fear first occupies the mind, but fear does not remain there, because it entered for this reason, that it might introduce Charity. For John expounds it: Perfect charity casts out fear. Then the minor is proved by D. Bonaventure from the opposite, in those words, Isaiah 63: You have hardened our heart, that we might not fear you: for God hardens by not giving grace, as Bellarmine notes from D. Augustine epistle 105.

> PROBATUR quinto. Id qnod aperit cor, ut Deum per gratiam sanctificantem accipiamus, est donum Dei; nam dispositio est ad formam supernaturalem, atque adeo eiusdem ordinis esse debet: sed timor servilis est huiusmodi ex Concilio Trident. Ergo: Minor explicatur a S. Augustino tract. 9. in epist. Ioan. apud D. Bonav. quaest. 3. in corpore: Si nullus timor, non est qui intret charitas. Sicut videmus per setam introduci linum, quando aliquid suitur, seta prius intrat, sed nisi exeat, non succedit linum; sic timor primo occupat mentem, non autem ibi remanet timor, quia ideo intravit, ut introduceret Charitatem. Explicat enim id Ioan. Charitas perfecta foras mittit timorem. Probatur deinde minor a D. Bonavent. ex opposito, illis verbis, Isa. 63. Indurasti cor nostrum, ut non timeremus te: indurat enim Deus, non dando gratiam*, ut notat Bellarminus ex D. Augustino* epist. 105.

16 IT IS PROVED sixthly by the Saintly Doctor. An act takes its species from its object; but the object of servile fear is an honorable good, namely eternal punishment, making sin displeasing from the motive of Divine justice, and through fear of those punishments man ceases from the perpetration of sins, though he does not altogether cease from the will, as the Gloss on Psalm 118 says, which is D. Augustine's above; which whole thing (says the Saintly Doctor) is from the divine gift. Whence he concludes that it is a gift of the Holy Spirit; and question 1 and question 2 he infers that it is a good, because by it sins are avoided.

PROBATUR sexto a S. Doctore. Actus sumit suam speciem ab obiecto; obiectum autem timoris servilis est bonum honestum, scilicet poena aeterna, faciens displicere peccatum ex motivo Divinae iustitiae, et propter illarum poenarum timorem cessat homo a peccatorum perpetratione, licet non omnino cesset a voluntate, ut dicit Glossa ad Psal. 118. quae est D. Augustini supra; quod totum (ait S. Doctor) est ex divino munere. Unde concludit, esse donum Spiritus sancti; quaest. autem 1. et quaest. 2. infert esse bonum, quia eo vitantur peccata.

17 For the understanding of these words note from D. Bonaventure question 2 that two quasi-degrees can be distinguished in holy servile fear. The first is, when it impedes the external work of sin, but because it is joined with an evil will, it does not beget Contrition, nor Attrition. The second is, when it not only impedes the external act, but also coerces the will, and this is the Fear of which the Council of Trent says it is the motive of attrition, and with the sacrament accompanying it justifies, as I related from the Council of Trent session 14, chapter 4, saying that Attrition disposes to justification, if it excludes the will of sinning: And it is the better.

Pro intelligentia horum verborum adverte ex D. Bonavent. quaest. 2. duos quasi gradus posse distingui in timore servili sancto. Primus est, quando impedit opus peccati externum, sed quia coniunctus est cum mala voluntate, non gignit Contritionem, neque Attritionem. Secundus est, quando non solum actum externum impedit, sed etiam voluntatem coercet, et hic est Timor, de quo loquitur Concilium Trident. esse motivum attritionis, et sacramento accedente iustificare, ut retuli ex Concilio Tridentino sess. 14. cap. 4. dicens, Attritionem disponere ad iustificationem, si voluntatem peccandi excludat: Et est melior.

18 Of the former, moreover, D. Augustine spoke sermon 25 on Psalm 118, on those words which he relates in question 1. The Saintly Doctor in the body, and question 2 ad 1: Pierce my flesh with thy fear: The fear by which justice is not loved, but punishment is feared, is servile, because it is carnal, and therefore does not crucify the flesh. For the will of sinning lives: which then appears in act, when impunity is hoped for. But when punishment is believed to follow, it lives hidden, yet it lives: for it would rather be lawful, and it grieves that it is not lawful, which the law forbids: because it does not spiritually delight in its good, but carnally fears the evil threatened. This is the Gloss which D. Bonaventure brings forward, who says that through this fear the will of sinning does not altogether cease habitually, though it ceases in some manner; whence it is evil; for if the will remains still actually resolved, such a will of sinning, if there were no punishment, would already be inordinate, as St. Bonaventure says question 2.

De priori autem locutus est D. Augustinus conc. 25. in Psalm. 118. ad ea verba, quae refert quaest. 1. S. Doct. in corpore, et quaest. 2. ad 1. Confige timore tuo carnes meas: Timor, quo non amatur iustitia, sed timetur poena, servilis est, quia carnalis est, et ideo non crucifigit carnem. Vivit enim peccandi voluntas: quae tunc apparet in opere, quando speratur impunitas. Cum vero poena creditur secutura, latenter vivit, vivit tamen: mallet enim licere, et dolet, non licere, quod lex vetat: quia non spiritualiter delectatur eius bono, sed carnaliter malum metuit, quod minatur. Haec est Glossa, quam affert D. Bonavent. qui ait, per hunc timorem non omnino cessare voluntatem peccandi habitualiter, licet aliquo cesset modo; unde est malus; nam si adhuc manet voluntas actu resoluta; talis voluntas peccandi, si poena non esset, iam esset inordinata, ut ait S. Bonavent. quaest. 2.

19 Therefore this Saintly Doctor thus receives the servile fear brought in above, and likewise concerning the seven gifts, in the place cited.

Igitur timorem servilem supra allatum sic accipit hic S. Doctor, et de septem donis, loco cit.

20 IT IS PROVED secondly by D. Bonaventure in the places cited, and in the Biblia Pauperum, chapter 38, for God himself therefore struck into the scriptures the terrors of punishments, that he might deter from sins: but surely God would not send an evil fear, as is plain, Exodus 14 and 20, when he gave the law. Whence also Job 31: I always feared God as waves swelling over me. Deuteronomy 32: A fire is kindled in my wrath, and shall burn even to the lowest hell. Psalm 7: Except you be converted, he will whet his sword. Isaiah 33: Who of you shall dwell with devouring fire? Jonas 3: Yet forty days, etc. Matthew 3: Every tree that does not bring forth good fruit shall be cut down, etc. Matthew 5. 13. 24. 25. Mark 9. Luke 12, and elsewhere.

PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonavent. locis allegatis, et in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 38. etenim Deus ipse ideo incussit in scripturis terrores poenarum, ut a peccatis deterretet: sane vero Deus timorem malum non immitteret, ut patet, Exodi 14. et 20. dum legem dabat. Unde et Iob 31. semper quasi tumentes super me fluctus, timui Deum. Deuter. 32. Ignis succensus est in furore meo, et ardebit usque ad inferni novissima. Psalm. 7. Nisi conversi fueritis, gladium suum vibrabit. Isa 33. Quis poterit habitare de vobis cum igne devorante? Ionas 3. Adhuc quadraginta dies, etc. Matth. 3. Omnis arbor, quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, etc. Matth. 5. 13. 24. 25. Marci 9. Lucae 12. et alibi.

21 LET THERE COME FORWARD the holy Fathers related by Bellarmine Book 2 on Penance, chapter 17, where he uses the same means as St. Bonaventure.

ACCEDANT Sancti Patres relati a Bellarmino Lib. 2. de Poenitent. cap. 17. ubi eisdem mediis S. Bonavent. utitur.

22 From these is washed away the error of Luther, who at the beginning of his perversion condemned this Fear, although the Lutherans now confess with us that it is useful. To these is added Calvin Book 3 of the Institutes, chapter 3, § 7.

Ex quibus eluitur error Lutheri, qui initio suae perversionis Timorem hunc damnavit, tametsi Lutherani iam cum nobis eum confiteantur utilem. Quibus accedit Calvinus Lib. 3. instit. cap. 3. §. 7.

23 YOU WILL OBJECT first. Every gift of the Holy Spirit stands with him himself; but while the Holy Spirit is infused through grace, servile fear is taken away: therefore. The minor is from D. Augustine above on the epistle of John.

OBIICIES primo. Omne donum Spiritus sancti stat cum ipso; sed dum infunditur Spiritus sanctus per gratiam, aufertur timor servilis: ergo. Minor est D. Augustini supra ad epist. Ioan.

24 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that the Major is false concerning the gift of the Holy Spirit, which is a disposition and preparation to grace; such is servile fear, which upon the coming of Sanctifying grace is not altogether taken away, but is perfected. The Minor also is false.

RESPONDET S. Doctor, falsam esse Maiorem de dono Spiritus sancti, qui est dispositio, et praeparatio ad gratiam; talis est timor servilis, qui adveniente gratia Sanctificante neque tollitur omnino, sed perficitur. Falsa est etiam Minor.

25 YOU WILL OBJECT secondly. The gift of the Holy Spirit has a corresponding exemplar in God; but in God there is no exemplar of fear: Therefore.

> OBIICIES secundo. Donum Spiritus sancti habet exemplar correspondens in Deo; sed in Deo, non est exemplar timoris: Ergo.

26 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that there exists an exemplar only as to those things which are said of perfection, as in fear it is to turn away from evil: for God turns away from evil.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor extare exemplar solum quo ad ea, quae dicunt perfectionem, ut in timore est avertere a malo: Deus enim malum aversatur.

27 YOU WILL OBJECT thirdly. The gifts of the Holy Spirit are given to raise up the soul to noble things; but servile fear rather depresses: Therefore.

> OBIICIES tertio. Dona Spiritus sancti dantur ad erigendam animam ad praeclara; sed timor servilis potius deprimit: Ergo.

28 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that holy servile fear turns away from evil and raises up to good. For by it one begins to revere God.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, timorem servilem sanctum amovere a malo, et ad bonum erigere. Eo enim incipit Deum revereri.

29 YOU WILL OBJECT fourthly. Fear is related as love is: but to love God for temporal goods is not a gift of the Holy Spirit. Therefore neither to fear.

> OBIICIES quarto sic se habet timor, sicut amor: at Deum amare ob bona temporalia non est donum Spiritus sancti. Ergo nec timere.

30 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that love toward God on account of temporal things, inasmuch as they are ordered to him as a supernatural end, is holy: so also the fear of the Justice of God from eternal or even temporal punishments, as scourges for stirring up toward the justice of God to be reverenced, and him to be reverenced, is holy; not inasmuch as they regard precisely this life. Therefore he says, not always, etc.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, amorem in Deum ob temporalia, ut ordinant ad eum ut finem supernum, esse sanctum: sic et timorem Iustitiae Dei ex poenis aeternis, vel etiam temporariis, ut flagellis ad excitandum ad Dei iustitiam reverendam, eumque reverendum esse sanctum; non ut praecise vitam respiciunt hanc. Idco ait, non semper, etc.

31 YOU WILL OBJECT fifthly. To fear the gallows the robber has no need of a holy Gift: Therefore still less to fear heavier punishments. But these are equal, those who fear only punishments.

> OBIICIES quinto. Ad timendum suspendium non eget latro Dono sancto: Ergo minus ad timendas poenas graviores. Sunt autem pares hi, timentes solum poenas.

32 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS by denying that they are equal; for the fear of God is from faith, and is of some goodness disposing to grace. Nor indeed is it unfruitful for this, but only for merit, as St. Bonaventure says at the end of the body, question 2. As of faith also St. Paul says 1 Corinthians 3: If I should have all faith, etc. Nor is it hypocrisy, because it is not made simulatedly, nor duplicity of heart with God turned away, as Luther feigns; indeed from this begins the conversion of the sinner. Nor is it evil, because it regards punishment more than fault, although the one having it, because he is a servant, still acts imperfectly; whence this malice is of the subject, not of the form, even if it itself be imperfect. See Bellarmine at the end. Nor is it from fear, though it is from fear; but fear, and pride, can be concomitant by reason of the subject, which is a sinner not yet justified. And in this sense D. Gregory says in D. Bonaventure: When punishment is feared, and the face of God is not loved, fear is from fear.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor negando esse pares; nam timor Dei est ex fide, et est alicuius bonitatis disponens ad gratiam. Neque enim est infructuosus ad hoc, sed solum ad meritum, ut ait S. Bonavent. in fine corporis, quaest. 2. Sicuti de fide etiam ait S. Paulus prima Corinth. 3. Si habuero omnem fidem, etc. Neque est hypocrisis, quia non fit simulate, neque corde reduplicative a Deo averso, ut fingit Lutherus, imo hinc incipit conversio peccatoris. Neque est malus, eo quod magis respicit poenam, quam culpam, quamvis ipse habens, quia servus est, imperfecte adhuc agit; unde haec malitia est subiecti, non formae, esto et ipsa imperfecta sit. Vide Bellarminum in fine. Neque est ex timore, licet sit ex timore; sed timor, et superbia potest esse concomitans ratione subiecti, quod est peccator nondum iustificatus. Et hoc sensu ait D. Gregorius apud D. Bonavent. Cum poena timetur, et Dei facies non amatur, timor ex timore est.

33 YOU WILL OBJECT fifthly. Every fear arises from love; for we fear lest the beloved good be snatched away, as D. Augustine teaches brought in above, question 2. But servile fear does not arise from Charity in the sinner, nor from natural love; otherwise it would be natural fear: Therefore from lustful.

> OBIICIES quinto. Omnis timor oritur ex amore; nam timemus, ne bonum amatum rapiatur, ut docet D. Augustinus allatus quaest. 2. sed Timor servilis non oritur ex Charitate in peccatore, neque ex amore naturali; alioqui esset timor naturalis: Ergo ex libidinoso.

34 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that it does not arise from Charity; but from love of his own eternal good, which he fears may be snatched from him through hell, which he knows from faith; and so it is from natural and gratuitous love, arising from the supernatural knowledge of faith, though not from the habit of charity.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, non oriri ex Charitate; sed ex amore sui boni aeterni, quod timet per gehennam sibi eripi, quam novit ex fide; et ita est ab amore naturali, et gratuito, orto ex cognitione supernaturali fidei, licet non ex habitu charitatis.

35 YOU WILL OBJECT sixthly. No act incompossible with Charity is good: The act of servile fear is of this kind: Therefore. The Major is evident, because Charity does not conflict with good. The Minor is proved from D. Augustine tractate 9 on the first epistle of John, and from the Apostle Romans 8, where the spirit of slavery is said to conflict with the spirit of adoption.

> OBIICIES sexto. Nullus actus, Charitati incompossibilis, est bonus: Actus timoris servilis est huiusmodi: Ergo. Maior est evidens, quia Charitas bono non repugnat. Minor probatur ex D. Augustino tract. 9. in primam Ioan. et Apostolo Rom. 8. ubi spiritus servitutis dicitur repugnans spiritui adoptionis.

36 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that the act which is from its intrinsic nature incompossible with charity is evil; but the act of servile fear is not intrinsically conflicting with charity, because a just man can fear God from the motive of hell: it conflicts indeed per accidens by reason of the subject; Whence it does not follow that it is evil.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, actum, qui ex intrinseco est incompossibilis charitati, esse malum; sed actus timoris servilis non est intrinsece repugnans charitati, quia potest iustus ex motivo gehennae timere Deum: repugnat vero per accidens ratione subiecti; Unde non sequitur esse malum.

37 YOU WILL OBJECT seventhly. As it is to love God, so also to fear; but to love God on account of temporal goods is evil: Therefore also to fear on account of punishments.

> OBIICIES septimo. Sicuti se habet amare Deum, sic et timere; sed amare Deum propter bona temporalia est malum: Ergo et timere propter poenas.

38 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS by denying the likeness; for he who loves on account of temporal things only places the end in them, and therefore is depraved, while he enjoys what he should use; not so he who fears God on account of punishments, in the way said ad 4.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor negando simile; nam amans propter temporalia solum ponit in eis finem et ideo pravus est, dum fruitur utendis; non sic qui timet Deum propter poenas, modo dicto ad 4.

39 Then by another reason the parity is denied; for he who loves God on account of temporal things loves two things: but he who fears God on account of punishments fears one thing; for he who fears one holding a sword, fears at once the sword and the blow, as one and the same thing.

> Deinde alia ratione negatur paritas; nam qui amat Deum propter temporalia, duo amat: sed qui timet Deum propter poenas, unum timet; qui enim timet habentem gladium, timet simul gladium, et ictum, ut unum et idem.

40 YOU WILL OBJECT eighthly. Servile fear is named from the slavery of sin: Therefore no one fears servilely without the circumstance of sin.

> OBIICIES octavo. Timor servilis dicitur a servitute peccati: Ergo nullus serviliter timet absque circumstantia peccati.

41 The SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, that the circumstance is placed in the subject, not in the act, which is not deformed by reason of the subject, since it takes its essence from the object, from which it is good.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, circumstantiam poni in subiecto, non in actu, qui non deformatur ratione subiecti, cum essentiam sumat ab obiecto, a quo est bonus.

Question V: Whether servile fear is cast out when grace comes

1 The FIRST opinion is, that it is expelled as to the deformity attached to the subject of the man who is justified, not by reason of the gift itself.

> PRIMA opinio est, eum expelli quo ad deformitatem adnexam subiecti hominis, qui iustificatur, non ratione ipsius doni.

2 The SECOND opinion is, that it is expelled formally, because it has an essential imperfection attached, which conflicts with Charity, namely, to act from the motive of punishment more than of some good; and this seems to be the sense of D. Augustine's words brought in in the preceding question, where he says that servile fear is related to charity as the awl-thread (seta) of the shoemaker to the thread, which introduces the thread, but is itself driven out by it.

> SECYNDA opinio est, pelli formaliter, quia habet adnexam imperfectionem essentialem, quae repugnat Charitati, nempe operari ex motivo magis poenae, quam alicuius boni, et hic videtur sensus D. Augustini allati q. praecedenti, ubi dicit, timorem servilem respectu charitatis se habere veluti setam caligarii respectu fili, quae filum inducit, sed ab eo pellitur.

3 The THIRD opinion, the third opinion is the middle one, distinguishes three things in servile fear. The first is material, namely, to fear eternal punishment. The second formal, which is to be moved principally by punishment. The third is attached, namely, to have a deformed will.

> TERTIA Tertia opinio media, tria distinguit in timore servili. Primum est materiale, timere scilicet poenam aeternam. Secundum formale, quod est moveri principaliter a poena. Tertium est adnexum, nempe habere voluntatem deformem.

4 I assert first, That Fear is taken away as to the formal, upon the coming of grace.

> Assero primo, Timorem tolli quo ad formale, adveniente gratia.

5 It is proved by D. Bonaventure first from D. Augustine in the place cited, on those words of the first epistle of John, chapter 5: Perfect charity casts out fear.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. primo ex D. Augustino loco cit. ad ea verba Ioan. prima, cap. 5. Perfecta charitas foras pellit timorem.

6 Secondly, the Spirit of adoption and of slavery conflict, from chapter 8 of Romans. But grace is the Spirit of adoption; servile fear comes from the Spirit of slavery: Therefore.

> Secundo Spiritus adoptionis, et servitutis, repugnant ex cap. 8. Rom. Sed gratia est Spiritus adoptionis; Timor servilis venit e Spiritu servitutis: Ergo.

7 Thirdly, because one who has charity is moved by love, not principally by fear of punishment: Therefore Fear is taken away as to this, upon the coming of Charity.

> Tertio, quia habens charitatem, movetur amore, non timore poenae principaliter: Ergo tollitur quo ad hoc Timor, adveniente Charitate.

8 Fourthly. As love, which is before sanctifying grace, is related to infused charity, so also is servile Fear related to initial. But the love of charity is other than the love preceding justification: Therefore also fear: And since servile fear cannot become initial, or be changed into it: Therefore it is expelled.

> Quarto. Sicut se habet amor, qui est ante gratiam sanctificantem, ad charitatem infusam; ita et Timor servilis ad initialem. Sed amor charitatis alius est ab amore, praecedente iustificationem: Ergo et timor: Et cum servilis nequeat fieri initialis, seu in eum mutari: Ergo pellitur.

9 Yet the SAINTLY DOCTOR answers by denying the parity, because Charity cannot be made formless and be transmuted, as is plain when someone falls from charity, and yet after the fall the fear of hell remains. And if you object, that love is the root of fear? Therefore it ought to run pari passu. It is answered that it does not avail, because it is likewise the root of Hope, and yet Hope can be formless and formed; and so it does not conclude that fear is altogether expelled, because it has something which can be together with Charity and without it; but Charity is wholly taken away.

> Respondet tamen S. Doctor negando paritatem, quia Charitas non potest fieri informis, et transmutari, ut patet, cum aliquis cadit a charitate, et tamen post lapsum remanet timor gehennae. Et si obiicias, quod amor est radix timoris? Ergo debet currere pari passu. Respondetur, non valere, quia similiter est radix Spei, et tamen Spes potest esse informis, et formata; et ita non concludit, quod timor omnino expellatur, quia habet aliquid, quod potest esse simul cum Charitate, et sine ea; Charitas vero tota tollitur.

10 I assert secondly, that fear is not taken away as to the material, that is, operating from fear of hell. This the arguments to be brought forward prove; which he nevertheless solves, because the material does not make a thing to be said to remain.

Assero secundo, non tolli timorem quo ad materiale operandi ex metu gehennae. Hoc probant argumenta afferenda; quae tamen solvit, quia materiale non facit, ut res dicatur permanere.

11 It is proved first; because as faith is related to grace, so also is the gift of fear; but faith is not taken away, but formed: Therefore.

Probatur primo; quia sicut se habet fides ad gratiam, ita et donum timoris; sed fides non tollitur, sed formatur: Ergo.

12 Yet the SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that it is not alike, because faith remains as to its essence, namely, assenting to truths from revelation: But servile fear, upon the coming of grace, does not flee evil principally from the motive of punishments.

Respondet tamen S. Doctor, non esse simile, quia fides manet quo ad essentiam, nempe assentiendi veris ex revelatione: At timor servilis, adveniente gratia, non fugit malum, principaliter e motivo poenarum.

13 It is proved secondly. Nature stands further from sanctifying grace than sanctifying grace from grace freely given; but upon the coming of sanctifying grace, nature is not taken away: Therefore neither the gift of grace: Therefore neither holy fear.

Probatur secundo. Plus distat natura a gratia gratum faciente, quam gratia gratum faciens a gratia gratis data; sed adveniente gratia sanctificante, non tollitur natura: Ergo nec donum gratiae: Ergo nec sanctus timor.

14 Yet the SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that it is not alike, because nature is given as permanent, that it may be perfected by grace; but there are some graces which are given for a time, and therefore are taken away upon the coming of grace, as befitting an imperfect state.

Respondet tamen S. Doctor, non esse simile, quia natura datur permanens, ut a gratia perficiatur; At vero sunt aliquae gratiae, quae dantur ad tempus, ideo tolluntur superveniente gratia, tanquam statui imperfecto convenientes.

15 It is proved thirdly: That which contains another, by adding something, does not destroy what is contained, but perfects it: Initial fear contains servile; for both operate from the motive of punishment: Therefore.

Probatur tertio: Quod aliud continet, aliquid addendo, non destruit illud contentum, sed perficit: Timor initialis continet servilem; nam ambo operantur ob motivum poenae: Ergo.

16 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that that which adds an opposite difference does not perfect, but take away: thus filial fear adds a difference opposed to servile fear, which is to act not principally from the motive of punishment; Therefore it takes it away.

Respondet S. Doctor, id, quod addit differentiam oppositam, non perficere, sed auferre: sic timor filialis addit differentiam oppositam timori servili, quae est operari non principaliter motivo poenae; Ideo ipsum tollit.

17 It is proved fourthly. Grace in itself conflicts only with sin. But servile fear is not a sin: Therefore it is not expelled by grace.

Probatur quarto. Gratia secundum se non repugnat, nisi peccato. Sed Timor servilis non est peccatum: Ergo non pellitur a gratia.

18 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers; that servile fear regards punishment, which is from sin. Therefore grace, which is the dower of the sons of God, does not allow one to act principally from punishment, even though it allows punishments also to be regarded, because sons act in a different manner than servants not yet reconciled, but only tending toward reconciliation.

Respondet S. Doctor; timorem servilem respicere poenam, quae est ex peccato. Ideo gratia, quae est dos filiorum Dei, non sinit operari magis principaliter ex poena, esto sinat respicere etiam poenas, quia filii operantur diverso modo, ac servi non adhuc reconciliati, sed solum tendentes ad reconciliationem.

Question VI: Whether initial and filial fear differ specifically

1 We must discern the object of each, that we may perceive the distinction of the habits.

Oportet utriusque obiectum discernere, ut distinctionem habituum percipiamus.

2 Concerning the object of Initial Fear they say that its medium is between the object of servile Fear, which is punishment; and the object of filial fear, which is the reason of the offense of God. Therefore the object of Initial Fear is both offense and punishment; but offense the more principal. The object of filial Fear, moreover, has for its object the evil of fault, inasmuch as it is an offense of God, not simply, but attending to the supreme reverence of the Father.

Circa obiectum Timoris initialis aiunt, medium esse inter obiectum Timoris servilis, quod est poena; et obiectum timoris filialis, quod est ratio offensae Dei. Itaque obiectum Timoris Initialis est tam offensa, quam poena; sed principalior offensa. Obiectum vero Timoris filialis habet pro obiecto malum culpae, ut est offensa Dei, non simpliciter, sed attendens summam Patris reverentiam.

3 It is proved by the Saintly Doctor on the seven gifts. On the Gift of Fear, and here dist. 36, art. 2, question 1, because it arises from filial charity, by which we love God with no respect had to our own advantage or disadvantage; and in this way it fears separation from God, as the Saintly Doctor shows dub. 3, the text being as follows: that it is not a fear of separation from God inasmuch as it is our good, as Durandus thinks dist. 3, dist. 34, saying that the pain of sense is regarded and fled from by servile fear; but the pain of loss by filial Fear; surely a fear of separation here would be from the love of concupiscence, and not from perfect Charity, that is, the love of friendship, as Caspensis notes disput. 2, sect. 1, num. 5.

Probatur a S. Doctore de septem donis. De Dono Timoris, et hic dist. 36. art. 2. quaest. 1. quia oritur ex charitate filiali, qua diligimus Deum, nullo habito respectu ad nostrum commodum, vel incommodum et hoc modo timet separationem a Deo, ut ostendit S. Doctor dub. 3. litt. ita, ut non sit timor separationis a Deo, quatenus est bonum nostrum, ut putat Durandus 3. dist. 34. dicens, poenam sensus respici, et fugi a timore servili; poenam vero damni a Timore filiali; sane timor hic separationis esset ab amore concupiscentiae, non autem a Charitate perfecta, seu amore amicitiae, ut notat Caspensis disput. 2. sect. 1. num. 5.

4 Hence therefore I assert that these loves are divided into diverse ones, at least modally.

Hinc igitur assero, hos amores dividi in diversos, saltem modaliter.

5 It is proved by St. Bonaventure first, because thus the Fears are divided by D. Augustine, by the Master, and by other Fathers into Initial, Filial, etc.

Probatur a S. Bonavent. primo, quia sic Timores dividuntur a D. Augustino, a Magistro, et aliis Patribus in Initialem, Filialem, etc.

6 Next, because the principal objects are diverse, as I showed, for Initial regards punishment more principally than offense: But filial flees principally the offense of God.

Deinde, quia diversa sunt obiecta principalia, ut ostendi, nam Initialis respicit principalius poenam, quam offensam: At filialis principalius offensam Dei refugit.

7 You will object. If one of two opposites is not multiplied, neither is the other multiplied; but Hope, the opposite of Fear, is not multiplied: Therefore neither is Fear.

Obiicies. Si unum oppositorum non multiplicatur; neque multiplicatur alterum; sed Spes, opposita Timori, non multiplicatur: Ergo neque Timor.

8 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that the major is true of the division of univocals, as Aristotle testifies in the Post-praedamenta, chapter on opposites; and Metaphysics 3, tract 4. But hope and fear are not opposed univocally. Fear, moreover, is divided more than Hope, because the latter always tends toward one supreme good; but Fear flees from many evils principally, according to the diverse states, as I said.

Respondet S. Doctor, maiorem esse veram de divisione univocorum, ut testatur Aristoteles in post praedic. cap. de oppositis: et 3. Metaph. tract. 4. At spes, et timor non opponuntur univoce. Dividitur autem magis Timor, quam Spes, quia haec semper in unum bonum tendit summum; Timor vero e multis malis, principalius fugit, secundum diversos status, ut dixi.

9 You will object secondly. More and less do not vary the species: but initial and filial Fear differ as the less perfect from the more perfect: Therefore.

Obiicies secundo. Magis, et minus non variant speciem: sed Timor initialis, et filialis differunt, ut minus perfectum a magis perfecto: Ergo.

10 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that there is not there on that account a specific difference; otherwise we should have to posit also another middle fear, that is, of the proficient. Then he answers that they do not differ only as the less perfect from the more perfect; but by the principal motive, although one in a certain way supposes the other, and what was formal with respect to the initial becomes material to the filial.

Respondet S. Doctor, non esse ibi proptiam differentiam; alioqui deberemus etiam alterum timorem medium ponere, idest proficientem. Deinde respondet, non differre solum, ut minus perfectum a magis perfecto; sed per motivum principale, licet unum quodammodo supponat alterum, et quod erat formale respectu initialis, fiat materiale filiali.

11 You will object thirdly. If it is pleasing thus to distinguish Fear; one can also distinguish Love, from which Fear remains, into Initial and Perfect: But Love is not distinguished in species by these differences: Therefore neither is Fear.

Obiicies tertio. Si libet sic distinguere Timorem; potest distinguere se Amorem, a quo Timor manet, in Initialem, et Perfectum: Sed Amor per has differentias non distinguitur specie: Ergo neque Timor.

12 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers by denying the parity, because love has no diverse motives, but is perfected only by reason of state.

Respondet S. Doctor negando paritatem, quia amor non habet diversa motiva, sed solum ratione status perficitur.

13 You will object fourthly. As is the univocal cause, so is the effect; but both these Fears arise from gratuitous love, from D. Augustine Tractate 43 on John. Therefore.

Obiicies quarto. Qualis causa univoca, talis effectus; sed uterque iste Timor oritur ex amore gratuito ex D. Augustino Tract. 43. in Ioan. Ergo.

14 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers that love is not the univocal cause of Fear, whence from one love are generated not only diverse differences of Fears; but even three genera of affections, as D. Augustine teaches Tractate 9 on the epistle of John.

Respondet S. Doctor amorem non esse causam univocam Timoris, unde ex uno amore genitantur, non modo diversae differentiae Timorum; sed etiam tria genera affectionum, ut docet D. Augustinus Tract. 9. in epist. Ioan.

15 You will object fifthly. If there are several gratuitous Fears: therefore the gifts of the Holy Spirit are eight.

Obiicies quinto. Si plures sint Timores gratuiti: ergo dona Spiritus sancti sunt octo.

16 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers, that one fear, which is the initial, is included in the other as to what is said of nobility; and therefore is included in the one Spirit of the Fear of the Lord.

Respondet S. Doctor, unum timorem, qui est initialis, includi in alio quo ad id, quod dicit nobilitatis; et ideo includi in uno Spiritu Timoris Domini.

17 You will object sixthly. If these Fears differ, because Initial flees also punishment, and Filial the offense of God: Then thus: In the offense there is to offend God, which is fault; and to be separated from God through enmity, which are diverse: Therefore two Fears.

Obiicies sexto. Si Timores isti differunt, quia Initialis refugit etiam poenam, et Filialis offensam Dei, Tunc sic: In offensa est Deum offendere, quod est culpa; et a Deo separari per inimicitiam, quae sunt diversa: Ergo duo Timores.

18 The SAINTLY DOCTOR answers. That initial Fear regards two things; but principally one, consequentially the other: Similarly also the Filial; therefore there is one principal motive, diverse in both, whence the Fears ought to vary. The reason of the offense, inasmuch as it signifies the separation, which is a punishment, is less regarded by the Filial; and principally by the Initial.

Respondet S. Doctor. Timorem initialem ad duo respicere; sed ad unum principaliter; ad alterum consequenter: Similiter et Filialem; ideo est unum motivum principale, diversum in ambobus, unde variari debent Timores. Ratio vero offensae, prout dicit separationem, quae est poena, minus respicitur a Filiali; et principaliter ab Initiali.

Question VII: Whether, as charity grows, fear diminishes

1 The holy Doctor reports many opinions on this matter. The first is that, as Charity grows with respect to the habit, Fear also grows with respect to the habit, because gratuitous habits are equal; but with respect to use, as Charity grows, Fear diminishes; and the more the use of charity presses forward, the less the use of Fear prevails, and this appears from experience: for at the beginning of his conversion a man does many things out of fear, but when he has tasted the Spirit of devotion and of sweetness, which is in love, as he draws near to the state of perfection he is now drawn more to act well by the generosity of love than he is spurred by the penalty of fear.

An crescente Charitate Timor decrescat.

Multas hac de re sententias refert S. Doctor. Prima est, crescente charitate quo ad habitum, crescere etiam Timorem quo ad habitum, quia habitus gratuiti sunt aequales; At quo ad usum, crescente charitate, decrescere Timorem; quantoque magis urget usus charitatis, tanto minus vigere usum Timoris, et illud experimento apparet: Homo enim initio suae conversionis multa ex timore facit, sed cum gustaverit Spiritum devotionis, et dulcedinis, quae est in amore, approximans ad statum perfectionis, iam ad bene operandum magis trahitur liberalitate amoris, quam stimuletur poenalitate timoris.

2 Yet in this manner the holy Doctor finds an inconsistency; for if the magnitude of a habit is discerned from the magnitude of its acts, then as the acts diminish, the habit too should be argued to diminish; or if the habit grows, the acts too should be intensified.

In hoc modo tamen invenit S. Doctor implicantiam; si enim magnitudo habitus dignoscitur ex magnitudine actuum; decrescentibus actibus, debet argui decrescere etiam habitum; vel si habitus crescit; et intendentur etiam actus.

3 The second opinion is that Fear — not merely servile but even Initial — diminishes as charity grows, because that Fear shares with servile fear, operating also through fear of punishments; but filial Fear is not lessened as Charity grows; for the more one loves God, the more he flees offense against Him. This is the opinion of St. Thomas.

Secunda sententia est, Timorem quidem, nedum poenalem, imo Initialem decrescere crescente charitate, quia iste Timor communicat cum servili, operans metu etiam poenarum: Timorem vero filialem non minui crescente Charitate; quia quanto magis aliquis Deum amat, tanto Divinam refugit offensam. Haec est opinio D. Thomae.

4 But the holy Doctor argues against it: because filial fear, whereby one fears to offend God, has pain, and the soul is much afflicted by that dread. Yet Blessed John chapter 4 says: Perfect charity casts out Fear, on account of its attached penal aspect.

Sed contra arguit S. Doctor; quia timor filialis, quo quis timet Deum offendere, poenam habet, et multum affligitur anima illa formidine. Beatus autem Ioannes prima, cap. 4. dicit: Perfecta charitas foras mittit Timorem*, propter adnexam poenalitatem,*

5 The third opinion, therefore, is that there is a twofold use of gratuitous fear. One is whereby the heart of man is stirred from consideration of his own fragility; the other, whereby he is humbled from consideration of his own smallness and of the divine majesty; and the first use is diminished as charity is perfected, because confidence rises from the perfection of charity, so that man may then say the word of the Apostle: Who shall separate us from the Charity of Christ? But the other use grows as charity grows, like the habit of fear: hence the more one has of the Spirit of love, the more he has of the Spirit of fear.

Tertia igitur opinio est, duplicem esse usum timoris gratuiti. Alter est quo cor hominis sollicitatur e consideratione suae fragilitatis: Alter, quo humiliatur e consideratione suae parvitatis, et divinae maiestatis; et primus usus minuitur, cum charitas perficitur, quia confidentia consurgit ex perfectione charitatis, ut iam homo dicat illud Apostoli: Quis nos separabit a Charitate Christi? Alter vero usus crescit, charitate crescente, sicut timoris habitus: Unde quanto quis habet plus de Spiritu amoris, tanto plus habet de Spiritu timoris.

6 I assert first, that as charity grows, Fear diminishes with respect to anxiety.

Assero primo, crescente charitate, minui Timorem quo ad anxietatem.

7 It is proved by the holy Doctor, from that passage of 1 John 4, and by St. Augustine Tractate 9, there.

Probatur a S. Doctore, ex illa prima Ioan. 4. et D. Augustino Tract. 9. ibi.

8 It is proved secondly by the holy Doctor; for as charity grows in anyone, so much the more does he hope: Therefore he fears less to be separated from God, because he is bound more closely to God.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doctore; quia quanto crescit charitas in aliquo, tanto magis is sperat: Ergo minus timet separari a Deo, quia strictius Deo alligatur.

9 Finally, as love grows, delight grows: Therefore Pain is diminished.

> Tandem crescente amore, crescit delectatio: Ergo minuitur Poena.

10 I assert secondly, that as charity grows, reverential fear grows.

> Assero secundo, crescente charitate, crescere reverentialem timorem.

11 It is proved by the holy Doctor first. When the cause is increased, the effect is increased; but faith and love cause gratuitous fear: Therefore, as faith and charity grow, gratuitous Fear grows. St. Thomas uses this argument too, but St. Bonaventure moderates it, as above.

> Probatur a S. Doctore primo. Augmentata causa, augetur effectus; sed fides, et amor causant timorem gratuitum: Ergo fide, et charitate crescente, crescit Timor gratuitus. Hac ratione utitur etiam D. Thomas sed moderatur eam S. Bonavent. ut supra.

12 Secondly. The more one loves, the more tightly he holds a good and esteems it; and if it exceeds, he reveres it.

> Secundo. Quanto aliquis amat, tanto arctius tenet bonum, et illud aestimat; et si excedit, reveretur.

13 Finally. The more intense anyone's charity is, the greater his solicitude to serve God, lest he offend the will of God, according to that of Micah 6: I will show thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee. And afterward: and to walk solicitously with thy God; and the greater the solicitude, the greater the fear of losing the good.

> Tandem. Quanto alicuius intensior est charitas, tanto maior sollicitudo ad serviendum Deo, ne Dei voluntatem offendat, iuxta id Micheae 6. Indicabo tibi o homo quid sit bonum, et quid Deus requirat a te. Et postea: et sollicitum ambulare cum Deo tuo*, quanto autem est maior sollicitudo, tanto maior est timor amittendi bonum.*

14 The holy Doctor answers that not all solicitude arises from fear: for the solicitude whereby one raises his soul to serve God arises from Charity.

> Respondet S. Doctor, non omnem sollicitudinem esse ex timore: sollicitudo enim, qua quis animo erigitur, ut Deo inserviat, oritur ex Charitate.

15 You will say: One is solicitous also lest he offend.

> Dices*: Sollicitus est is etiam ne offendat.*

16 The holy Doctor answers that this is a solicitude of diligence, which in perfected men has fear attached to it not so deeply, except for a time, while they are shaken in soul from consideration of the divine judgments.

> Respondet S. Doctor, illam esse sollicitudinem diligentiae, quae in viris perfectis non adeo haerentem habet timorem, nisi ad aliquod tempus, dum ex consideratione divinorum iudiciorum animo concutiuntur.

17 From these he draws out another way of answering the question, namely that the use of any habit is said to grow or diminish in two ways: first in intensity; second in the number of acts. Therefore, as charity grows, filial fear diminishes with respect to the number of acts; because the perfected man does not need to be stirred so often as the imperfect man does, who is anxious both on account of a past fault, lest perhaps it still be unremitted, and on account of a future one, lest he relapse through frailty.

> Ex his elicit alium modum respondendi quaestioni, quod usus alicuius habitus dupliciter dicitur crescere, vel decrescere: Primo intensione: Secundo numero actuum. Igitur crescente charitate, decrescit timor filialis actuum numero; quia vir perfectus non eget sollicitari tam saepe, sicut imperfectus, qui tum ratione culpae praeteritae, ne forte adhuc remissa sit; tum ratione futurae ne ex fragilitate recidat, anxiatur.

Question VIII: Whether gratuitous fear remains in heaven

1 It is indeed difficult to admit Fear in the Blessed, however holy it may be; and yet all the Scholastics admit it, lest they strip them of a signal gift of the Holy Spirit; so much so that Valentia calls it erroneous to deny it to the blessed, disp. 2, quest. 2, point 5; for it is said even in the Mass: The powers tremble. There are various ways of speaking, so that the motive of filial fear may be saved, which is flight from the Divine offense; for the blessed are impeccable.

> An Timor gratuitus maneat in patria.
> Difficile est quidem, in Beatis Timorem, quantumvis sanctum, admittere; et tamen omnes Scholastici illud admittunt, ne dono insigni Spiritus sancti eos expolient; adeo ut illum beatis negare erroneum dicat Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 2. puncto 5. nam in Missa etiam dicitur: Tremunt potestates. Varii modi dicendi extant, ut salvent motivum timoris filialis, qui est Divinae offensae fuga; etenim beati sunt impeccabiles.

2 The FIRST way of speaking is that of Suarez, disp. 1, sect. 4, num. 20: the gift of Fear remains in the Blessed in the manner in which infused Temperance and the other virtues, which remain in them, remain not only as to the habits but as to the simple acts of the will, by which they take complacency in their objects and their goodness, and detest the opposed uglinesses; for the hatred of evil is formally and explicitly love of the contrary good, e.g. hatred of darkness is love of Light, as Hurtado says, disputation 113, sect. 9; Caspensis subscribes, disp. 2, sect. 1, num. 10. Since, therefore, fear is hatred of sin or of punishments, it is formally love of the absence of punishments or of sin, which absence the Blessed love, but as a thing not contingent, since they are impeccable.

> PRIMUS modus dicendi est Suarez disp. 1. sect. 4. num. 20. Timoris donum manere in Beatis eo modo, quo Temperantia infusa, et aliae virtutes, quae manent in eis, non modo quoad habitus, sed quo ad actus simplices voluntatis, quibus complacent in suis obiectis, et honestatibus eorum, et detestantur oppositas turpitudines; Quia odium mali formaliter, et expresse est amor boni contrarii, v. g. odium tenebrarum est amor Lucis, ut ait Hurtado disput. 113. sect. 9. subscribit Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 1. num. 10. Cum igitur timor sit odium peccati, aut poenarum, est formaliter amor carentiae poenarum, aut peccati, quam carentiam amant Beati, sed tanquam rem non contingentem, cum sint impeccabiles.

3 The SECOND way is that of Medina, cited in Caspensis, cited disputation: the Fear of the Lord in heaven loses the name of filial Fear, because sin is no longer found to be feared, neither as separation from God nor as offense against Him, and it takes the name of reverential fear, because in a new way it tends toward God.

> SECUNDUS modus est Medinae apud Caspensem disput. cit. Timorem Domini in patria amittere nomen Timoris filialis, quia iam non invenitur peccatum, quod timeatur, neque, ut est separatio a Deo, neque ut offensa eius, et inducere nomen timoris reverentialis, quia novo modo tendit in Deum.

4 The THIRD way is that of Cajetan and Bannes, cited article of St. Thomas: the reverential Fear in heaven looks upon the omnipotence of God, as able indeed to inflict evil, whether of punishment, by inflicting it, or of fault, by permitting it; but not as that He will actually inflict it. For thus they are cast down with a certain reverential fear. To this Valentia smiles assent, to be cited below.

> TERTIUS modus est Caietani, et Bannes, art. cit. D. Thom. Timorem reverentialem patriae respicere omnipotentiam Dei, ut potest sane inferre malum, seu poenae, inferendo; sive culpae, permittendo; non tamen ut actu inferet. Sic enim reverentiali quodam timore demittuntur. Huic arridet Valentia citandus infra.

5 The FOURTH way is that that fear of the blessed is not a flight, since they are no longer in the struggle, but a reverential pursuit, arising from consideration of their own smallness and of God's magnitude and justice, which could have punished, and yet had mercy, and rewards beyond what is deserved; and thus they prostrate themselves in reverence. Nor is it admiration, as Caspensis infers, num. 10, but profound humiliation, even if with admiration. Thus think, with St. Bonaventure here, St. Thomas in the body of the text, Valentia disp. 2, quest. 2, point 5.

> QUARTUS modus est, timorem illum beatorum non esse fugam, cum non amplius sint in pugna, sed reverentialis prosecutionis, ortum ex consideratione suae parvitatis, et Dei magnitudinis, et iustitiae, quae potuisset punire, et tamen miserta est, et praemiat ultra condignum, et ita prosternuntur reverentes. Neque est admiratio, ut infert Caspensis num. 10. sed humiliatio profunda, esto cum admiratione. Ita sentiunt cum D. Bonavent. hic, D. Thomas in corpore*, Valentia* disp. 2. quaest. 2. puncto 5.

6 THEREFORE I assert first, that filial Fear is in the Blessed.

> ASSERO igitur primo, Timorem filialem esse in Beatis.

7 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure, first, from that passage of Psalm 18: The fear of the Lord is holy, enduring unto eternity of eternities.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonaventura, primo, ex illo Psalm. 18. Timor Domini sanctus permanens in saeculum saeculi.

8 SECONDLY, from that of Isaiah 11, where he says: The Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him; the Spirit of Fear. But Christ was always a comprehensor.

> SECUNDO ex illo Isaiae 11. ubi ait: Requiescet super eum Spiritus Domini; Spiritus Timoris. Christus autem fuit semper comprehensor.

9 THIRDLY, The fullness of wisdom is the fear of the Lord, Ecclesiasticus 1: therefore, since in the blessed there is the fullness of the perfection of wisdom, there will also be Fear.

> TERTIO, Plenitudo sapientiae Timor Domini, Eccl. 1. ergo cum in beatis sit plenitudo perfectionis sapientiae, erit et Timor.

10 FOURTHLY. As the highest love is owed to the highest goodness, so the highest reverential Fear is owed to the highest majesty.

> QUARTO. Sicut summae bonitati debetur summus amor, ita summae maiestati, summus reverentialis Timor.

11 FINALLY, in the body of the text, he hints at the testimonies of Scripture and of the Church asserting that this Fear is in the Angels. Thus in Apocalypse 14 and 15, Jeremiah 10, Job 26, and in the Preface of the Mass: The Powers tremble. Therefore our holy Doctors add, from St. Augustine 14 de civitate, chapter

9, and from Gregory, Book 7, Morals, chapter 15, to those words of Job 26: The pillars of heaven tremble, and are awed at his nod, that the filial fear of the way is different from that of heaven; and also that that fear in Christ was different from ours, which I shall show in Part 3, Tractate 1.

> TANDEM in corpore*, innuit testimonia Scripturae, et Ecclesiae, asserentia, Timorem istum in Angelis esse. Sic* in Apoc. 14. et 15. Hierem. 10. Iob 26. et in Praefatione Missae: Tremunt Potestates. Addunt igitur Sancti nostri DD. ex D. Augustino 14. de civit. cap. 9. ex Gregorio Lib. 7. moral. cap. 15. ad ea verba Iob 26. Columnae caeli contremiscunt, et pavent ad nutum eius; diversum esse timorem filialem viae, et patriae; et etiam timorem illum in Christo fuisse diversum a nostro, ostendam 3. part. Tract. 1.

12 YOU OBJECT first. Hope is more perfect than Fear: but it does not remain in heaven: Therefore.

> OBIICIES primo. Perfectior est Spes, quam Timor: sed illa non manet in patria: Ergo.

13 The holy Doctor ANSWERS that, with respect to the act of recoiling from evil, Hope is more perfect; but with respect to revering the supreme Majesty while recoiling into one's own smallness, the act of Fear is more excellent.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, quoad actum resiliendi a malo, perfectiorem esse Spem, sed quo ad reverendam summam Maiestatem resiliendo in propriam parvitatem, excellentiorem esse actum Timoris.

14 THE REST are resolved by the distinction between fleeing fear and revering fear.

> CAETERA resolvuntur per distinctionem timoris fugacis, et reverentis.

15 MOST EXCELLENTLY, however, the holy Doctor discourses on this matter de septem Donis, On the Gift of Fear, chapter 2, where he also explains what fear is excluded from the perfection of charity on the way; he supposes, however, that word of the first John, chapter 4: Perfect charity casts out fear.

> EGREGIE autem hac de re discurrit S. Doctor de septem Donis. De Dono Timoris, cap. 2. ubi etiam edisserit, qui timor in via excludatur a perfectione charitatis, supponit autem illud Ioan primae, cap. 4. Perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem.

16 But he distinguishes the PERFECT of one sort by a perfection of necessity, who are in grace, of whom Deuteronomy 18: Thou shalt be perfect and without spot before the Lord; others by a perfection of excellence. St. Prosper distinguishes both, Book 3, de vita contemplativa, chapter 15. Those he calls perfect in excellence who hasten to the virtues with the greatest striving, of whom Bernard also says in his letters: And this Charity expels all their fear, which has pain. For what will Charity fear, says Gilbert, sermon 19 on the Canticles, of past offenses? For Charity covers a multitude of sins, from 1 Peter 4. What? The infirmity of conscience? It is strong as death, love, Canticles 8. What? Temporal troubles? Since even if they were eternal, consummated love could not be wearied or vanish? Not for this does Charity love, lest it perish, but rather it wishes the eternal to perish than to be deprived eternally of the use of internal love. If indeed a man shall give all his substance for charity, he shall as it were despise nothing of it; that is, substance.

> PERFECTOS autem alios perfectione necessitatis distinguit, qui sunt in gratia; de quibus Deuter. 18. Perfectus eris, et absque macula coram Domino. Alios perfectione excellentiae. Utrosque distinguit S. Prosper Lib. 3. de vita contemplativa, cap. 15. Perfectos autem excellentia vocat eos, qui maximo enixu ad virtutes properant, de quibus etiam Bernardus in epistolis ait: Et haec Charitas horum pellit omnem timorem, qui poenam habet. Quid enim timebit Charitas ait Gilbertus, serm. 19. in Cant. veteres offensas? Nam Charitas operit multitudinem peccatorum, ex 1. Petri 4. Quid? Infirmitatem conscientiae? Fortis est, ut mors dilectio, Cant. 8. Quid? temporales molestias? Cum nec etiamsi aeterna sint, diffatigari, aut evanescere poterit dilectio consummata? Non ideo amat Charitas ne pereat, sed magis vult perire aeternum, quam privari usu amoris interni aeternaliter. Si enim dederit homo omnem substantiam pro charitate, quasi nihil despiciet eam; idest substantiam.

17 He CONCLUDES that perfect and consummated Charity does not expel the most perfect filial fear, which is now almost love, since it has almost ceased to be fear, having nothing to fear, nor does it dread to offend. He says this fear is a reverence and a votive subjection; for there is a necessity of obeying, or of condition, but liberty of love knows no necessity.

CONCLUDIT, perfectam Charitatem consummatam non expellere timorem filialem perfectissimum, qui iam fere est amor, cum fere desierit esse timor, qui non habet quid timeat, nec offendere metuit. Hunc timorem ait esse reverentiam, et votivam subiectionem; est enim necessitas obsequendi, sive conditionis, sed necessitatem ignorat libertas dilectionis.

18 SOME say, as Bernard, Book on the Love of God, toward the end, that filial Fear is increased as Charity is increased; and with Charity perfected, it will be perfected, and therefore it will have in heaven the very same act it now has; and they bring forward the authority of Augustine, Book 14, de civitate, chapter 9, where he says: That chaste Fear enduring unto eternity of eternities, if it shall be in the future age, will not be a fear terrifying from an evil that can happen, but holding itself in a good that cannot be taken away; and thus it will have another act than it now has. So St. Bonaventure. The reason of this is, that where the love of the good attained is immutable, certainly, if it can be said, the fear of avoiding evil is secure.

QUIDAM dicunt, ut Bernardus Lib. de diligendo Deo, circa Finem*, quod Timor filialis augetur, augmentata Charitate; et Charitate perfecta, perficietur, et ideo habebit in patria eundem omnino actum, quem habet modo, et illi adducunt authoritatem Augustini* Lib. 14. de civitate, cap. 9. ubi ait: Timor ille castus permanens in saeculum saeculi, si erit in futuro saeculo, non erit timor exterrens a malo, quod accidere potest, sed tenens se in bono, quod adimi non potest, et ita alium actum habebit, quam modo. Haec S. Bonavent. Ratio huius est, quia ubi boni adepti amor immutabilis est, profecto si dici potest, mali cavendi timor securus est.

19 But MOST BEAUTIFULLY in chapter 3 he shows how the Fear of the Lord, like the Light of the first day, makes for us the Morning and the Dawn of the spiritual life, the Midday and the Evening, enduring unto eternity of eternities. See it.

PRAECLARE vero cap. 3. ostendit, quo pacto Timor Domini, quasi Lux primae diei faciat nobis Mane, et Auroram vitae spiritualis, Meridiem, et Vesperam, permanens in saeculum saeculi. Ipsum vide.

20 NEXT, in chapter 4, he shows that the Fear of the Lord prepares for us a heavenly banquet, whence the psalmist exclaims, Psalm 30: How great is the multitude of thy sweetness, O Lord, which thou hast hidden for them that fear thee. Read it, I beseech thee, and thou shalt taste the delicacies of Paradise at his table.

DEINDE cap. 4. Timorem Domini convivium nobis parare ostendit caelicum, unde exclamat psalmista, Psalm. 30. Quam magna multitudo dulcedinis tuae Domine, quam abscondisti timentibus te. Ipsum Lege obsecro, et Paradisi epulas degustabis ad eius mensam.

21 But he relies on that of Ecclesiasticus 1 and Psalm 111: The beginning of wisdom, that is, of savory knowledge, is the Fear of the Lord; the Fear of the Lord shall delight the heart. See it.

Nititur autem illo Eccles. 1. et Psalm. 111. Initium sapientiae, idest, sapidae cognitionis. Timor Domini; Timor Domini delectabit cor. Ipsum vide.

Question IX: Whether poverty of spirit corresponds to the gift of fear

1 The BEATITUDES are not habits distinct from the Virtues and the Gifts, but acts elicited from them. By poverty of Spirit, St. Augustine understands humility; because the humble man is not puffed up in Spirit. Ambrose, however, understands the renunciation of temporal things; and in both senses poverty of Spirit is elicited by filial Fear, as Caspensis notes, disp. 2, sect. 4, num. 26, and St. Bonaventure, Part 5, Breviloquium, chapter 6, and Part 3, Centiloquium, sect. 45 and 46, and opuscule on the seven gifts, chapter 3.

> BEATITUDINES non sunt habitus distincti a Virtutibus, et Donis, sed actus ab eis eliciti. Per paupertatem vero Spiritus intelligit S. Augustinus humilitatem; quia humilis non est Spiritu inflatus. Ambrosius vero intelligit abdicationem rerum temporalium, et utroque sensu paupertas Spiritus est elicita a Timore filiali, ut notat Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 4. num. 26. et D. Bonavent. 5. part. Brevil. cap. 6. et 3. part. Centil. sect. 45. et 46. et opusc. de septem donis, cap. 3.

2 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctor; for unto perfection one must first withdraw from evil, as it is said Psalm 33: Decline from evil, and do good. But from evil one is first deterred by the threats of punishments; then by initial fear, etc., as the Council of Trent also teaches, session 14, chapter 4; and because the root of evils is covetousness, 1 Timothy 6, therefore Fear disposes unto poverty, in which humility is at the same time joined with poverty, so that man may thus be removed far from the fountain of every fault, that is, covetousness, of which I have spoken, and from pride; for the beginning of all sin is pride. See there the holy Doctor speaking most excellently.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore; quia ad perfectionem primo recedendum est a malo, ut dicitur Psalm. 33. Declina a malo, et fac bonum. A malo autem primo deterretur poenarum minis; deinde timore initiali, etc. ut etiam docet Concilium Trident. sess. 14. cap. 4. et quia radix malorum est cupiditas, prima Timot 6. Ideo Timor disponit ad paupertatem, in qua simul iungitur humilitas cum paupertate, ut sic elongetur homo a fonte omnis culpae, idest, cupiditate, de qua dixi, et superbiam; nam Initium omnis peccati superbia. Vide ibi S. Doctorem egregie dicentem.

3 IT IS PROVED secondly by the holy Doctor, Book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, chapter 48, from St. Gregory, book 16, Morals, chapter 20: The poor in spirit are the humble, and they that fear God.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore, Lib. 5. compendii Theolog. cap. 48. ex D. Gregorio lib. 16. moral. cap. 20. Pauperes spiritu, sunt humiles, et Deum timentes.

Question X: On the effects, and the precept, of the fear of God

1 MANY holy effects there, chapter 59, of the Fear of the Lord does St. Bonaventure recount: to expel sin, Ecclesiasticus 1; to beget Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus 7; to steady the mind, Ecclesiasticus 27; to enrich with Spiritual riches, Psalm 32; to heap up good works, Ecclesiasticus 15; to delight the heart, Ecclesiasticus 1; to prolong life, Proverbs 10; to irrigate devotion, Proverbs 14; to reward eternally, Ecclesiasticus 1. He goes on to teach there that servile Fear is from the Holy Spirit, even if not with Him, but is cast out, as a she-ass by a hair of the eyelash, as St. Augustine says, Tractate 9 on the first Epistle of John. That Initial fear begins intrinsic perfection he proves in chapter 41, and that it perfects it he shows in chapter 42. See the holy Doctor.

> MULTOS sanctos effectus ibi, cap. 59. Timoris Domini recenset S. Bonavent. expellere peccatum Eccles. 1. Sapientiam gignere. Eccles. 7. Mentem stabilire. Eccles. 27. Ditare opibus Spiritualibus Psalm. 32. Bona opera cumulare Eccles. 15. Cor delectare. Eccles. 1. Vitam prolongare, Prov. 10. Devotionem irrigare, Proverb. 14. AEternaliter remunerare, Eccles. 1. Pergit docere ibi, Timorem servilem esse a Spiritu Sancto, etiamsi non cum eo, sed pellitur, ut Sera a filo caligatii, ut ait D. Augustinus Tract. 9. in primam Ioan. Initialem vero incipere intrinsece perfectionem, probat cap. 41. et perficere, ostendit cap. 42. Vide S. Doctorem.

2 MANY things, and those most excellent, the holy Doctor hands down about this beatitude on chapter 6 of Luke, in those words: Blessed are the poor in spirit, where he shows that by the Fear of the Lord heaven is opened to us: Blessed is he who is always in fear. Blessed is the man who feareth the Lord; in his commandments he desireth exceedingly, O truly golden words. Psalm 111, of which see the most excellent exposition of the Seraphic Doctor.

MULTA, eaque praeclara de hac beatitudine tradit S. Doctor ad cap. 6. Lucae in ea verba: Beati pauperes Spiritu, ubi ostendit Timore Domini nobis aperiri coelum: Beatus enim qui semper est pavidus. Beatus vir, qui timet Dominum, in mandatis eius cupit nimis, o vere aurea verba. Psalm. 111. cuius vide praeclaram Seraphici expositionem.

3 From the effects of the Fear of the Lord it is understood that there exists a precept. Thus Deuteronomy 10: What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but that thou fear the Lord thy God? He speaks of filial Fear; and of servile fear, Luke 12: Fear him, who after he hath killed the body, hath power to cast both body and soul into hell.

Ex effectibus Timoris Domini intelligitur, extare praeceptum. Sic Deuter. 10. Quid Dominus Deus petit a te, nisi ut timeas Dominum Deum tuum. Loquitur de Timore filiali; et de servili, Lucae 12. Timete eum, qui postquam occiderit corpus, habet potestatem, et corpus, et animam perdere in gehennam.

4 Caspensis ADDS at the end, num. 34, that these precepts of the fear of God are not special, and thus are not distinguished from the precepts of the other virtues, insofar as they require filial and servile fear, whereby man is held back from sins, both against charity and against the other virtues; and accordingly from a defect of fear one never commits a special sin that must necessarily be expounded in confession, as Valentia also observes, disp. 2, quest. 4, point 2, and Sanchez, Book 2, chapter 33, num. 4. And it is proved; because confessors learned in this do not ask about it, as Fagundez says, num. 19.

ADDIT Caspensis in fine num. 34. haec praecepta timoris Dei non esse specialia, sicque non distingui a praeceptis aliarum virtutum, quatenus exigunt timorem filialem, et servilem, ut per hos retrahatur homo a peccatis, tam contra charitatem, quam contra alias virtutes; et proinde ex defectu timoris nunquam committit speciale peccatum, quod sit necessario in confessione explicandum, ut observat etiam Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 4. punct. 2. Sanchez Lib. 2. cap. 33. num. 4. Et probatur; quia de hoc neque confessarii eruditi interrogant, ut ait Fagundez num. 19.

Disputation VI: On Despair

1 ALTHOUGH Hope is assailed in its ruin by Presumption as well as by Desperation, St. Chrysostom saying with the Seraphic Doctor, book 3, Pharetra, chapter 14: Excessive confidence overthrows one standing, and desperation after the fall does not permit one to rise again; yet the latter opposes hope more than the former, since it fails from it entirely, and casts one down even in this life into the abyss of Anxiety: therefore of what power it is, and what sin it is, must first be briefly seen.

> LICET a Praesumptione, pariter et Desperatione Spes experiatur in ruinam, dicente D. Chrysostomo apud Seraphicum lib. 3. Pharetrae cap. 14. Confidentia nimia stantem evertit, et desperatio post lapsum non permittit resurgere, posterior tamen plus spei adversatur, quam prior, cum tota ab ea deficiat, et in Anxietatis barathrum etiam in hac vita deiiciat: Ideo cuius sit potentiae, et quod peccatum, prius breviter videndum.

Sole Question: Of what power despair is an act, and what sin it is 1 ALMAIN holds, in distinction 26, and in the moral treatise 2, chapter 3, that Desperation is an act of the intellect, and consists in the judgment whereby one judges it impossible for himself to attain beatitude or pardon; and accordingly that no act of the will is required.

> ALMAYNUS in 3. dist. 26. et in moral. tract. 2. cap. 3. censet, Desperationem esse actum intellectus, et consistere in iudicio, quo quis iudicat, impossibile esse, se consequi beatitudinem, aut veniam; ac proinde non requiri actum voluntatis.

2 Yet this opinion is commonly rejected by the Theologians with St. Bonaventure, dist. 26, article 2, question 5, St. Thomas, first part of the second part, question 23, article 2, and question 40, article 4.

> Haec tamen sententia communiter reiicitur a Theologis cum D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 5 D. Thom. prima secundae, quaest. 23. art. 2. et quaest. 40 art. 4.

3 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctor: Opposites are about the same subject; but hope is in the will: Therefore Desperation also. Thus others argue too, especially Caspensis, disp. 3, sect. 1, num. 2.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore: Opposita sunt circa idem subiectum; sed spes est in voluntate: Ergo et Desperatio. Sic arguunt etiam alii, praecipue Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 1. num. 2.

4 Whence it follows that what Turrianus says is false, disp. 64, doubt 2: that for the sin of Desperation it suffices to have a free and imprudent judgment, whereby one judges that he will not attain beatitude.

> Quo fit, falsum esse id, quod ait Turrianus disp. 64. dub. 2. ad Desperationis peccatum sufficere liberum, et imprudens iudicium, quo quis iudicet, se non consecuturum beatitudinem.

5 For Caspensis ANSWERS that this judgment is against hope, but is not yet desperation: I see Caspensis fighting with himself. For opposites are about the same thing, as Caspensis says; but that judgment is in the intellect: Therefore it is not contrary to Hope.

> RESPONDET enim Caspensis, hoc iudicium esse contra spem, sed non adhuc esse desperationem: ego video Caspensem secum pugnare. Opposita enim sunt circa idem, ut ait Caspensis; sed iudicium illud est in intellectu: Ergo non est contrarium Spei.

6 I SHALL SAY, therefore, that it is opposed only in disposition, not formally; for even with that judgment posited, no sin has yet been committed, because one can be deceived invincibly; and if he is deceived vincibly, he sins against the precept not indeed of Hope, but of knowing what is necessary.

> DICAM igitur, opponi tantum in dispositione, non formaliter; nam posito adhuc eo iudicio, non est factum peccatum, quia potest falli invincibiliter; et si vincibiliter fallitur, peccat contra praeceptum, non quidem Spei, sed sciendi necessaria.

7 Hence that question is resolved: Whether Desperation is always with Infidelity.

> Hinc resolvitur illa quaestio: An Desperatio sit semper cum Infidelitate.

8 It is ANSWERED negatively with St. Bonaventure, cited doubt in the margin, St. Thomas, question XX, article II, whom the rest follow, as is seen in Caspensis, cited place, num. IV, and Valentia, disp. II, quest. III, point first.

> RESPONDETUR RESPONDETUR enim negative cum D. Bonavent. dub. citato in margine*, D. Thom.* quaest. XX. art. II. quos caeteri sequuntur, ut videre est in Caspensi loco citato num. IV. Valentia disp. II. quaest. III. puncto primo.

9 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctors. In this Faith differs from Hope, that Faith regards the very object in the universal, but Hope regards it in the particular, namely with respect to the one hoping; and also in this, that Faith asserts certitude in the intellect, Hope asserts certitude in the affect. Therefore, as it sometimes happens that something is unknown in the particular and known in the universal, as the Philosopher says, first of the Posteriors, chapter I — as in the case of him who knows that every Mule is sterile, and yet thinks this one is with young — so one who has certitude concerning faith can lack Hope; and as one can have certitude in the intellect without having it in the affect, so one can, not having Hope, have faith.

> PROBATUR a Sanctis Doctoribus. In hoc differt Fides a Spe, quod Fides respicit ipsum obiectum in universali, sed Spes respicit in particulari, videlicet respectu sperantis, et in hoc etiam, quod Fides dicit certitudinem in intellectu, Spes dicit certitudinem in affectu. Sicut igitur contingit aliquando, ignorari aliquid in particulari, et sciri in universali, sicut ait Philosophus, primo Poster. cap. I. sicut est de illo, qui scit, omnem Mulam esse sterilem; et tamen existimat, hanc habere in utero; sic potest aliquis habens certitudinem circa fidem, carere Spe, et sicut potest aliquis non habens certitudine de aliquo in affectu, habere illam in intellectu; sic potest aliquis, non habens Spem, habere fidem.

10 AGAINST this argument Valentia objects, that one who has a negative judgment about some particular proposition does not grant it to be universally true. Wherefore, one who, despairing, judges that he cannot hope for pardon, by this very fact denies that pardon is possible for all sinners.

> CONTRA hanc rationem arguit Valentia, quia, qui habet iudicium negativum de aliqua propositione particulari, non concedit, esse universaliter verum. Quare, qui desperans iudicat, se non posse sperare veniam, hoc ipso negat, possibilem esse omnibus peccatoribus veniam.

11 BUT Caspensis, num. V, observes with St. Bonaventure that a speculative judgment can be had of God as prepared to have mercy on all; and that if one even speculatively says that the mercy of God is not such as to exceed our sins, he is a heretic; but if, oppressed by passion, his judgment succumbs out of pusillanimity, such desperation is without infidelity.

> SED Caspensis num. V. observat cum S. Bonavent. posse haberi iudicium speculativum de Deo, parato ad miserendum omnibus; quod si etiam speculative quis dicat, non esse talem misericordiam Dei, ut excedat nostra peccata, is est haereticus; si vero passione oppressum iudicium succumbat ex pusillitate, talis desperatio est sine infidelitate.

12 THEREFORE he does not exempt himself from the universal proposition of God's mercy, as Valentia thinks, but, erring in himself, he invents something new whereby the universal proposition might not be true; namely, that God is not about to give a congruous help, or efficacious grace, because he is of the number of those, probably, whom God abandons, as some Theologians assert, saying that sufficient helps are denied to certain ones; for that opinion is not under this anathema. Nor does it follow what Valentia says: that if that opinion were true, one could despair without sin; for still, since he does not know himself to be of that number, he is bound to hope. The holy Doctor concludes that that estimation can arise rather from the subversion of confidence than from the subversion of knowledge. For thus a man, although he knows something, is nevertheless carried by a dominating affection to the opposite; or it may rather be called inadvertence, as St. Augustine says, de poenitentia, chapter V, cited by St. Bonaventure in the Pharetra, Book III, chapter XIV, because with eyes closed he precipitates himself, as St. Gregory says, Morals, chapter VIII, as St. Bonaventure notes, cited place of the Pharetra.

ITAQUE is non eximit se a propositione universali misericordiae Dei, ut putat Valentia, sed aliquid novi excogitat in se aberrans, propter quod universalis propositio non sit vera, puta, quod non sit Deus daturus auxilium congruum, vel gratiam efficacem, eo quod talis sit ex illis probabiliter, qui derelinquuntur a Deo, ut aliqui Theologi asserunt, dicentes, negari quibusdam auxilia sufficientia; haec enim opinio non est anathemate ista: Neque sequitur id, quod ait Valentia; si vera esset illa opinio, posse aliquem desperare sine peccato; nam adhuc ille, cum nesciat, se esse de numero eorum, tenetur sperare: Concludit S. Doctor, illam existimationem oriri potius ex subversione confidentiae, quam ex subversione notitiae. Sic enim homo, licet sciat aliquid, tamen affectione dominante rapitur ad oppositum; vel dici inadvertentiam potius, ut ait D. Augustinus de poenit. cap. V. apud D. Bonavent. in Pharetra, Lib. III. cap. XIV. quia clausis oculis praecipitatur, ut ait D. Gregorius XVI. moral. cap. VIII. ut notat D. Bonavent. loco citato Pharetrae.

13 The SECOND reason of St. Bonaventure, which St. Thomas and Caspensis also use, num. IV: When the posterior is removed, the prior is not removed. But Hope is posterior to faith: Therefore, Hope being removed, faith can still remain, and consequently not everyone who despairs is an infidel. The minor is proved by the holy Doctor; for Faith is in the intellect, Hope in the affect, which is posterior.

RATIO secunda D. Bonavent. est, qua utitur etiam D. Thom. et Caspensis num. IV. Remoto posteriori, non removetur prior. Sed Spes est posterior fide: Ergo remota Spe, potest adhuc manere fides, et consequenter non quicumque desperat, est infidelis: Minor probatur a S. Doctore; nam Fides est in intellectu, Spes in affectu, qui est posterior.

14 HENCE also is inferred in what the reason of the sin of desperation consists; which is indeed most grave, as being opposed to a Theological virtue, as the holy Doctor argues in dist. XXVI of the third book, article II, question II, ad 1. Whence Jeremiah XVIII: Who have said: We have despaired; for after our thoughts we will go, etc. Therefore the Lord says: Ask the nations: Who hath heard such horrible things? Shall the snow of Lebanon fail from the rock of the field? Or can the cold, flowing waters be plucked away, and flow away? Truly golden words, and penetrating the inmost limbs: hence the holy Doctor there calls this sin an abyss of guilt, because the one despairing hurls himself headlong into the depths. Therefore Ephesians IV: Despairing, they gave themselves up to impurity, etc.

HINC etiam infertur, in quo consistat ratio peccati desperationis, quod sane est gravissimum, quippe oppositum virtuti Theologicae, ut arguit S. Doctor in III. dist. XXVI. art. II. quaest. II. ad 1. Unde Hierem. XVIII. Qui dixerunt: desperavimus: post cogitationes enim nostras ibimus, etc. Ideo dicit Dominus: Interrogate gentes: Quis audivit talia horribilia? Numquid deficiet de petra agri nix Libani? aut evelli possunt aquae erumpentes frigidae, et defluentes? Aurea sane verba, et intimos artus penetrantia: Hinc S. Doctor ibi hoc peccatum vocat abyssum culpae, quia desperans se agit per praeceps in profundum. Ideo Ephes. IV. Desperantes, semetipsos tradiderunt impudicitiae, etc.

15 THEREFORE this sin consists in a certain flight and precipitate rush of the will, whereby it desists from beatitude, or any other object of Hope, as to its being attained by oneself; for in this the contrariety with Hope consists; for as hope is an erection of the soul toward pursuing an arduous good, so the casting down of the soul, desisting from the pursuit of such a good, is the opposite act.

CONSISTIT igitur hoc peccatum in quadam voluntatis fuga, et praecipitio, quo desistit a beatitudine, vel quovis alio obiecto Spei, ut a se consequendo; in hoc enim consistit contrarietas cum Spe; nam sicut spes est erectio animi ad prosequendum bonum arduum, ita demissio animi, desistens a prosecutione talis boni, est actus oppositus.

16 HENCE, however, it is doubted whether the formal object of Desperation is evil, as evil; for since it is a flight of the will, its object seems to be evil.

HINC tamen dubitatur, an obiectum formale Desperationis sit malum, ut malum; cum enim sit fuga voluntatis, videtur eius obiectum esse malum.

17 It is ANSWERED that Desperation is a flight from beatitude, not as evil, but as impossible; therefore it is defined: Desperation is a will oppressing with heaviness, distrusting of help and reward, as St. Bonaventure notes, opuscule, Declaration of the Terms of Theology; and in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter III, toward the end he says it is most evil, because, considering the impunity of sins and distrusting the mercy of God, it slackens the rein to sins: And this indeed is the most grave sin, which is said to be against the Holy Spirit, of which the Lord, Matthew XII: It shall not be remitted, neither in this world nor in the future. Not that it cannot be remitted, but because it can scarcely be remitted; or because there is no reason of excuse there, whereby it might make room for the Divine mercy. This sin is commonly said to arise from Acedia, because, as was said, the slothful man finds no complacency in some good, and therefore withdraws himself from good work; but Hope comes from the merit of the work: So the holy Doctor.

RESPONDETUR, Desperationem esse fugam a beatitudine, non ut mala, sed ut impossibili; Ideo definitur: Desperatio est voluntas gravedine opprimens, de adiutorio, et remuneratione diffidens, ut notat S. Bonavent. opusc. declaratio terminorum Theologiae; et in speculo animae, cap. III. circa finem ait, esse pessimum, quia peccatorum immunitatem considerans, et de Dei misericordia diffidens, laxat fraenum peccatis: Et hoc quidem gravissimum est peccatum, quod dicitur in Spiritum sanctum, de quo Dominus Matth. XII. Non remittetur neque in hoc saeculo, neque in futuro. Non quod non possit dimitti, sed quia vix dimitti potest; vel quia non est ibi ratio ulla excusationis, qua locum praestet Divinae misericordiae. Hoc autem peccatum communiter ex Acedia oriri dicitur, quia, ut dictum est, acediosus complacentiam aliquam in bono non invenit, et ideo a bono opere se subtrahit; Spes autem ex merito operis provenit: Haec S. Doctor.

18 Therefore Desperation stands in a flight from beatitude, and in a willing of the means. So also Aegidius, distinction XX, doubt X, St. Thomas, first part of the second part, question XXV, article III, Caspensis, num. VII, cited place, Valentia, disp. II, quest. III, point I, citing St. Gregory, Book III, Morals, chapter XXXI, and St. Thomas here, article IV.

Igitur Desperatio stat in fuga beatitudinis, et volitione mediorum. Ita etiam AEgidius dist. XX. dub. X. D. Thom. prima secundae, quaest. XXV. art. III. Caspensis num. VII. loco citato. Valentia disp. II. quaest. III. puncto I. allegans D. Gregorium Lib. III. moral. cap. XXXI. et D. Thom. hic, art. IV.

19 St. Gregory truly teaches, Morals, book XII, chapter V, that it arises also from pride, as St. Bonaventure notes, cited place of the Pharetra.

> Docet vero S. Gregorius XII. moral. cap. V. oriri etiam ex superbia, ut notat D. Bonavent. loco citato Pharetrae.

20 MOST BEAUTIFULLY St. Chrysostom, homily X on penance: Both are perilous: perverse confidence and desperation. For excessive confidence overthrows one standing; and desperation, after the fall, does not permit one to rise, as I noted also above, at the Disputation.

> PERBELLE S. Chrysostomus homil. X. de poenit. Utrumque periculosum est, et confidentia perversa, et desperatio. Nam confidentia nimia stantem pervertit; et desperatio, post lapsum, non permittit exsurgere*, ut etiam supra, ad Disputationem notavi.*

21 St. ISIDORE in the Synonyms, chapter I: Do not despair of salvation, if thou turn to better things: for he who despairs of pardon for sin condemns himself more by his desperation than by the crime committed. For desperation augments sin, and is worse than every sin.

> D. ISIDORUS in Synonymis cap. I. Non desperes de salute, si ad meliora converteris: qui enim veniam de peccato desperat, plus se desperatione, quam commisso scelere damnat. Desperatio namque auget peccatum, et peior est omni peccato.

22 But he WANTS to say "worse," that is, more pernicious; for without doubt the hatred of God, which is against Charity, the Queen of the virtues, is worse, as St. Thomas also teaches, article III, and Valentia, cited place, who say that Infidelity is worse, because it is against God in Himself, as He is truth; but Desperation is against God as participated by us, namely through the diffusion of goodness. Now it is a worse evil to fight against God as He is truthful, by infidelity, or as He is good in Himself, by hatred, than to despair of being about to participate in His goodness, as St. Thomas argues, article III, and with him Fuliensis, book III on faith and hope, chapter VI, after St. Bonaventure, cited place, where he admonishes that the one despairing often believes God to be truthful in what He has said, and faithful in His promises universally; but he applies badly, in the particular, that fidelity of the divine promises to himself; for as error and doubt against faith make the intellect doubt or disagree, so desperation weakens the affect and makes it distrust, with faith standing only in the intellect, and no application thence arising into the will.

> VULT autem dicere, peiorem, idest, perniciosiorem; nam procul dubio peius est odium Dei, quod est contra Charitatem, Reginam virtutum, ut docet etiam D. Thom. art. III. et Valentia loco citato*, qui dicunt peiorem esse Infidelitatem, quia est contra Deum in se, ut est veritas; at Desperatio est contra Deum, ut participatur a nobis, nempe per bonitatis diffusionem. Est autem peius malum pugnare contra Deum, ut est verax, per infidelitatem; vel ut est bonus in se, per odium, quam desperare, se participaturum de bonitate, ut arguit S. Thom.* art. III. et cum eo Fuliensis lib. III. de fide, et Spe, c. VI. post D. Bonav. loco cit. ubi admonet, desperantem saepe credere, Deum in dictis veracem; et in promissis fidelem universaliter; sed male particulari sibi applicare illam divinarum promissionum fidelitatem, nam sicut error, et dubitatio contra fidem facit, ut Intellectus dubitet, vel discordat, ita desperatio infirmat affectum, et facit, ut diffidat, stante fide tantum in intellectu, nullaque inde proveniente applicatione in voluntatem.

Disputation VII: On Presumption

1 PResumption is taken in various ways: and indeed among the Jurists, by interpreting, or consenting for the absent, or judging according to presumed causes, it signifies nothing illicit: but in the discipline of morals, one sort is interior, whereby one who prefers his own sense wrongly to another's; another is exterior, whose signs are (says the Seraphic Doctor, part 1, in the Mirror of Discipline, chapter 5) eyes too lofty, the head raised, and a haughty countenance. But how it is to be taken here, I shall show below.

> De Praesumptione.
> PRaesumptio variis modis sumitur: et quidem apud Iuristas, interpretando, vel consensum absentis, vel iudicando iuxta praesumptas causas, non illicitum quid sonat: in Disciplina vero morum, alia est interior, qua sensum proprium perperam qui praefert alieno; alia exterior, cuius indicia sunt (inquit Seraphicus Doctor part. 1. in speculo disciplinae, cap. 5.) sublimiores oculi, elatum caput, et facies vultuosa. Hic autem quomodo sumatur, infra indicabo.

Sole Question: What presumption is, and what kind of sin

1 Here Presumption is taken for the act opposed to Hope by excess.

> Quid sit PRAESUMPTIO, et quale peccatum.
> Hic sumitur Praesumptio pro actu opposito Spei per excessum.

2 Now Hope is of obtaining from God grace, and glory, and the other supernatural gifts inordinately, that is, otherwise than God has ordained that they be obtained. Therefore it fights against the glory of God, as the Holy Doctor observes, in the first sermon of the Hexaëmeron.

> Est autem Spes obtinendi a Deo gratiam, et gloriam, et reliqua dona supernaturalia inordinate, idest, aliter, quam Deus ea obtinenda statuit. Ideo contra Dei gloriam pugnat, ut advertit S. Doctor, sermone primo Hexaëmeron.

3 HENCE you have, that it is a sin mortal in genus: for it gravely fights against God's judgment and will. So D. Bonaventure, in the place cited, D. Thomas 2. 2. question 21. article 1. Suarez disp. 1. sect. 3. Sanchez Tom. 1. Decal. Lib. 2. cap. 14. Valencia disp. 2. question 3. part 2. Bannes question 21. article 2. disp. 2. Fagundez on the first precept of the Decal. cap. 31. num. 20.

> HINC habes, esse peccatum ex genere mortale: nam graviter contra Dei iudicium, et voluntatem pugnat. Ita D. Bonavent. loco citando, D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 21. art. 1. Suarez disp. 1. sect. 3. Sanchez Tom. 1. Decal. Lib. 2. cap. 14. Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 3. puncto 2. Bannes quaest. 21. art. 2. disp. 2. Fagundez in primum praeceptum Decal. cap. 31. num. 20.

4 IT SEEMS, moreover, that Despair is graver than Presumption: for the latter is against God's mercy, which is most natural to him and proper in its effects; but Presumption is against Justice, as D. Bonaventure notes in 3. dist. 26. dub. 2. at the end, and D. Thomas question 1. article 2. Suarez disp. 2. sect. 3. Fagundez Lib. 1. cap. 31. n. 26.

> VIDETUR autem gravior Desperatio, quam Praesumptio: nam illa est contra Dei misericordiam, quae est illi maxime naturalis, et in effectibus propria; Praesumptio vero est contra Iustitiam, ut notat D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 26. dub. 2. in fine, et D. Thom. quaest. 1. art. 2. Suarez disp. 2. sect. 3. Fagundez Lib. 1. cap. 31. n. 26.

5 Presumption, moreover, is opposed not only to Hope, but also to Fear, as Holy Thomas teaches, article 3. Valencia disp. 2. question 3. part 2. and D. Bonaventure dist. 34.

> OPPONITUR autem Praesumptio non modo Spei, sed etiam Timori, ut docet S. Thom. art. 3. Valentia disp. 2. quaest. 3. puncto 2. et D. Bonavent. dist. 34.

6 The Holy Doctor observes, moreover, dist. 26. art. 1. question 3. ad 2. that Hope is a mean between presumption and despair, not after the manner of a participation of the extremes, but as excluding the extremes.

> OBSERVAT autem S. Doctor dist. 26. art. 1. quaest. 3. ad 2. Spem esse mediam inter praesumptionem, et desperationem, non ad modum participationis de extremis, sed excludentis extrema.

7 THEREFORE Presumption can be manifold: First, by willing beatitude by one's own powers, with Pelagius. Second, without penance and works, with Luther, etc. Third, by willing at the end of life, after a lax life, to be raised up by God. So Suarez disp. 2. section 4. Sanchez Tom. 1. Decal. Lib. 2. cap. 33. Medina Lib. 1. of the summa, cap. 14. §. 2. folio 79. Bannes in the place cited, Azorius Tom. 1. Lib. 9. cap. 2. question 7. Fagundez number 2.

> IGITUR Praesumptio potest multipliciter esse: Primo, volendo beatitudinem propriis viribus cum Pelagio. Secundo, sine poenitentia, et operibus, cum Luthero, etc. Tertio, volendo in fine vitae, post laxam vitam, sublevari a Deo. Ita Suarez disp. 2. sectione 4. Sanchez Tom. 1. Decal. Lib. 2. cap. 33. Medina Lib. 1. summae, cap. 14. §. 2. folio 79. Bannes loco citato, Azorius Tom. 1. Lib. 9. cap. 2. quaestio 7. Fagundez numero 2.

8 MOREOVER it can be with heresy and without heresy. It will be with heresy if there be present the judgment that salvation can be had by one's own powers, or without merits. So Valencia question 3. part 2. Sanchez num. 8. Fagundez 1. 2. Bassaeus V. Spes.

> POTEST autem esse et cum haeresi, et sine haeresi. Erit cum haeresi, si adsit iudicium, posse haberi salutem propriis viribus, vel sine meritis. Ita Valentia quaest. 3. puncto 2. Sanchez num. 8. Fagundez 1. 2. Bassaeus V. Spes.

9 BUT NOTE that Presumption can be against humility, as D. Bonaventure teaches p. p. Cenil. sect. 17. and it is a species of pride. It can be against fortitude, and coincide with temerity, etc. But of these species of presumption this is not the place to treat.

> ADVERTE vero, Praesumptionem posse esse contra humilitatem, ut docet D. Bonav. p. p. Cenil. sect. 17. et est species superbiae. Potest esse contra fortitudinem, et coincidere cum temeritate, etc. Verum de his praesumptionis speciebus, non est hic agendi locus.

Disputation VIII: On Charity

1 ON CHARITY, the Seraphic Bonaventure left monuments of his divine nature indeed brilliant and worthy, written as if with solar rays, that they might gleam in the eyes of all, everywhere in his Opuscula, and in other books; but especially in the Diaeta salutis, tit. 5. c. 2. he illustrates it with various comparisons, by which he symbolically epitomizes whatever he has said of it more fully elsewhere, reducing the whole to its figurative Type, its virtual act, and its final fruit.

> De Charitate.
> DE CHARITATE, Seraphicus Bonaventura praeclara quidem, et digna, quod solaribus radiis exarata, omnium in oculis rutilent, in Opusculis passim, aliisque in libris, Divinae suae indolis monumenta reliquit; praecipue vero in Diaeta salutis, tit. 5. c. 2. variis eam comparationibus illustrat, quibus Symbolice epilogat, quicquid alibi de ea fusius dixerit, totum autem reducit ad Typum eius figuralem, actum virtualem, et fructum finalem.

2 TRULY, since these things serve more for inflaming the affections than for Scholastic erudition, I refer the reader to that place, where he will admire Charity as gold proved, most precious; as burning iron, everywhere Ductile; as wine seasoned, always sweet. He will also behold it as a noble bird, ever flying upward and touching the earth only by necessity of sustenance; as a laden ship, sailing over the sea of this world by the breath of the Holy Spirit alone; as, finally, death slaying the wicked sense of the flesh, or Carnality. But here, as the gift of the school, we shall discourse on Charity, as the Seraphic Doctor handed it down in the various distinctions, on the books of the Sentences.

> VERUM haec cum magis inflammando affectui, quam Scholasticae inserviant eruditioni, eo lectorem remitto, ubi Charitatem, tanquam aurum probatum, maxime pretiosam; tanquam ferrum ignitum, ubique Ductilem; tanquam vinum conditum, semper dulcem admirabitur. Eam etiam ut nobilem avem, sursum semper volantem nec terram, nisi necessitate victus, tangentem; ut navim onustam, solo Spiritus sancti flatu in huius mundi Pelago navigantem; ut denique mortem, Carnis improbum sensum, seu Carnalitatem suspiciet perimentem; hic vero pro munere scholae de Charitate disseremus, pro ut eam Seraphicus variis distinctionibus, in libros Sententiarum, tradiderit.

Question I: What charity is

1 I ASSUME first, that Charity is here taken for supernatural love. For it can be assumed for natural love, which is divided into Friendship and Concupiscence. Second, for supernatural love, which is divided in the same way. I omit the third member of the division, of shameful love, which is indeed improperly called Charity, Judges 9. You shall strike him with the charity of my lips, that is, with lips simulating while speaking a flattering love.[1] See D. Bonaventure Lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 24. Charity is truly so called from charis, which signifies grace in Greek, as D. Bonaventure notes dist. 27. question 3.

[1] N. Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'labiis simulantibus lantibus amorem blandum'; 'lantibus' is not Latin and the print itself shows the same garble; rendered from the evident sense ('simulating a flattering love with the lips').

> Quid sit CHARITAS.
> SUPPONO primo, Charitatem hic accipi pro amore supernaturali. Potest enim supponi pro amore naturali, qui dividitur in Amicitiam, et Concupiscentiam. Secundo pro amore supernaturali, qui eodem modo dividitur. Omitto divisionis tertium membrum amoris turpis, qui sane improprie dicitur Charitas, Iudit. 9. Percuties eum labiis charitatis meae, idest labiis simulantibus amorem blandum. Vide D. Bonavent. Lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 24. Dicitur vero Charitas a charis, quod significat gratiam in Graeco, ut notat D. Bonavent. dist. 27. quaest. 3.

2 Now Charity, Dilection, and love of God are the same, as D. Bonaventure notes de profectu Religiosi, Book 2. cap. 23. Therefore Charity is love.

Est autem Charitas, Dilectio, et amor Dei, idem, ut notat D. Bonavent. de profectu Religiosi, Libro 2. cap. 23. Itaque Charitas est amor.

3 For this reason Christ first asked Peter: Dost thou love me more than these? and afterward: Lovest thou me? Wherefore St. Dionysius, and St. Augustine, cited below at D. Bonaventure in primo, dist. 10. dub. 1., reprehend those saying that Love signifies a libidinous affection, but Dilection an ordered one. Yet the Holy Doctor finds some distinction among these three: that Love signify the adherence of the affections to the beloved; whence St. Dionysius cap. 4. de divin. nom. says: We call love unitive. Dilection moreover signifies election; for dilection is so called from choosing among many, as we have Can. 5. Dilectus meus, electus e millibus. Charity, however, adds a pre-esteemedness; for that is called charum which is esteemed greatly on that account.[1] Thus the Apostle 1. Timot. 1. calls the faithful charissimi (most dear). The same the Holy Doctor teaches, in primo, in the exposition of the Prologue, dub. 4. which pertains to the Etymology of Charity; but as to love and charity together dist. 10. of the first Sent. dub. 4. I shall bring other distinctions below.

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'charum enim dicitur, quod magni terea aestimatur'; 'terea' is a stray or defective letterform; the Latin was rendered 'quod magni aestimatur' (which is greatly esteemed).

Ideo enim Christus primo quaesivit a Petro: Diligis me plus his? et postea: Amas me? Propterea S. Dionysius, et S. Augustinus, infra citandi apud D. Bonavent. in primo, dist. 10. dub. 1. reprehendunt dicentes, Amorem significare affectum libidinosum: Dilectionem vero ordinatum: Attamen aliquam distinctionem invenit in his tribus S. Doctor, ut Amor significet affectus adhaesionem ad amatum; quare S. Dionysius cap. 4. de divin. nom. ait: Amorem unitivum dicimus. Dilectio vero praeterea dicit electionem, dicitur enim dilectio e pluribus, ut habetur Can. 5. Dilectus meus, electus e millibus. Chatitas vero addit praeappretiationem; charum enim dicitur, quod magni aestimatur. Sic Apostolus 1. Timot. 1. vocat fideles charissimos. Idem docet S. Doctor, in primo, expositione Prologi, dub. 4. quod spectat ad Ethymologiam Charitatis; quo ad amorem vero, et charitatem simul dist. 10. primi sent. dub. 4. Alias distinctiones afferam infra.

4 I assume second, with D. Bonaventure in primo, dist. 17. part. 1. question 1. and 2., as I shall show also in question 4., as I showed in the prima secundae, tract. 5. disp. 3. q. 2., that Charity is a created habit. But the Apostle bears witness, Rom. 5. it is poured forth in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, who is given to us, where he speaks of the charity by which we love God, as D. Augustine teaches Lib. de Spiritu, et littera, cap. 32. and 1 Corinthians 13. Faith, Hope, Charity remain, these three: but the greater of these is Charity. Whence the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 7. defines that in justification faith, hope, and inhering charity are infused. They define it in many ways, as the Holy Doctor relates in 3. dist. 27. dub. 1.

Suppono secundo cum D. Bonavent. in primo, dist. 17. part. 1. quaest. 1. et 2. ut ostendam etiam quaestione 4. ut ostendi prima secundae, tract. 5. disp. 3. q. 2. Charitatem esse habitum creatum, Teste autem Apost. Rom. 5. ea diffusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum Sanctum, qui datus est nobis, ubi sermo est de charitate, qua Deum diligimus, ut docet D. Augustinus Lib. de Spiritu, et littera, cap. 32. et prima Corinth. 13. Manent fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec: maior autem horum est Charitas. Quare Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 7. definit, in iustificatione infundi fidem, Spem, et Charitatem inhaerentem. Hanc multis modis definiunt, ut refert S. Doctor in 3. dist. 27. dub. 1.

5 It is defined by D. Augustine Lib. 1. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 11. Charity is the most just affection of the soul, joining us with God, and in the soliloq. Charity is the virtue by which we desire to see God and to enjoy him, and Lib. de Spiritu, et anima, cap. 16. Charity is the life coupling the lover with the beloved, and by the Apostle, 1 Timot. 1. the end of the precept is charity from a pure heart, a good conscience, and an unfeigned faith.

> Definitur a D. Augustino Lib. 1. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 11. Charitas est animi affectio iustissima, coniungens nos cum Deo*, et in soliloq.* Charitas est virtus, qua Deum videre, eoque perfrui desideramus*, et* Lib. de Spiritu, et anima, cap. 16. Charitas est vita copulans amantem cum amato*, et ab Apostolo,* prima Timot. 1. finis praecepti est charitas de corde puro, conscientia bona, et fide non ficta.

6 But to explain these definitions, he sets up something against each.

> Ut autem has definitiones explanet, aliquid contra singulas opponit.

7 Against the first. Dilection and charity are the same; therefore, since the Master defines charity by dilection, he defines the same by itself. Moreover, this definition befitted natural love in the state of innocence: therefore it is not proper to charity.

> Contra primam. Idem est dilectio, et charitas; cum ergo Magister definit charitatem per dilectionem, definit idem per se ipsum. Deinde amori naturali in statu innocentiae conveniebat haec definitio: Ergo non est propria charitatis.

8 Against the second, because the affection of the soul is from the soul: but Charity is from God. Moreover, this definition can befit Hope: therefore it is not proper to Charity.

> Contra secundam, quia affectio animi est ab animo: Charitas autem est a Deo. Deinde haec definitio potest convenire Spei: Ergo non est propria Charitatis.

9 Against the third. Vision corresponds to faith, and fruition to every virtue: therefore charity is ill-defined by seeing and enjoying. Moreover, desire is in the absence, and something imperfect; but Charity is most perfect: therefore it is ill-defined by Desire.

> Contra tertiam. Visio respondet fidei, et fruitio est ad omnem virtutem: Ergo male definitur charitas per videre, et frui. Deinde desiderium est in absens, et quid imperfectum; sed Charitas est perfectissima: Ergo male definitur per Desiderium.

10 Against the fourth it is, because to unite the lover with the beloved befits every love, as D. Dionysius teaches, cap. 4. de divin. nomib. part. 4. Therefore it is not proper to charity. Moreover, life is an absolute perfection: the coupling of the lover with the beloved is a respective quality: therefore it is ill-defined: Charity is the life coupling.

> Contra quartam est, quia unire amantem cum amato, competit omni amori, ut docet D. Dionysius, cap. 4. de divin. nomib. part. 4. Ergo non est proprium charitatis. Deinde vita est perfectio absoluta: copulatio amantis cum amato, est qualitas respectiva: Ergo male definitur: Charitas est vita copulans.

11 Against the last he objects. Charity is the root of the virtues, and the principle of merit: therefore it is not the end. Moreover, purity of heart is from faith, as is said Acts 15. faith purifying hearts: therefore it is not from charity.

> Contra ultimam obiicit. Charitas est radix virtutum, et principium metendi: Ergo non est finis. Deinde puritas cordis est a fide, ut dicitur Actorum 15. fide purificans corda: Ergo non est a charitate.

12 The Holy Doctor answers. That Charity is defined in a manifold way according to its manifold comparison.

> Respondet S. Doctor. Charitatem secundum multiplicem comparationem multipliciter definiri.

13 For Charity is compared to the object, and in this way it is defined by the Master. Although love and dilection are the same really, yet they differ formally in reason. For Dilection is broader than Charity. Whence it is customary to say: Love is of nature; dilection of the deliberative will; and Charity of grace. Moreover, Charity names the habit: Dilection names the act; and thus Charity is defined by dilection, as the less common by the more common, and the habit by its act; nor did it befit in the state of innocence as to the motive, but as to the formal reason.

> Comparatur enim Charitas ad obiectum, et hoc modo definitur a Magistro. Quamvis autem sint idem amor, et dilectio realiter, tamen ratione differunt formali. Dilectio enim latius patet, quam Charitas. Unde solet dici: Amor est naturae; dilectio voluntatis deliberativae; et Charitas gratiae. Praeterea Charitas nominat habitum: Dilectio nominat actum; et ita definitur Charitas per dilectionem, tanquam minus commune, per magis commune, et habitus per suum actum, neque conveniebat in statu innocentiae quo ad motivum, sed quoad rationem formalem.

14 Second, Charity can be compared to its proper act, and thus it is defined by D. Augustine de moribus Ecclesiae, and Lib. de spiritu, et anima; and when it is said: It is an affection of the soul, there is a causal predication, nor does it befit Hope, whose property is to raise up, not to unite: for it belongs to Faith to direct; to Hope to raise up; and to Charity to unite: to couple also, in an autonomastic way, befits charity, as he says in the act second of the relation.

> Secundo potest Charitas comparari ad actum proprium, et sic definitur a D. Augustino de moribus Ecclesiae, et Lib. de spiritu, et anima*, et cum dicitur:* Est animi affectio*, ibi est praedicatio causalis, neque convenit Spei, cuius proprium est erigere, non unire: Fidei enim est dirigere; Spei erigere; et Charitatis unire: copulare etiam modo Autonomastico convenit charitati, ut dicit in actu secundo relationem.*

15 Third, it can be compared to the ultimate end, and thus it is defined by D. Augustine in the soliloquies: for the desire of seeing God is from charity. Charity of the way is defined, which is imperfect: Or say, that desire is posited, with distaste excluded, which is also toward a thing present, as D. Peter says of the Angels, epist. 1. Into which things the Angels desire to look.

> Tertio potest comparari ad finem ultimum, et sic definitur a D. Augustino in soliloquiis: nam desiderium videndi Deum est a charitate*, Definitur autem charitas viae, quae est imperfecta: Vel dic, poni desiderium, excluso fastidio, quod est etiam rei praesentis, ut de Angelis ait: D. Petrus,* epist. 1. In quem desiderant Angeli prospicere.

16 Fourth, it can be compared to the habit, which is the principle of charity. Thus it is defined by the Apostle. Nor does it repugn that it be the form, and the end, and the efficient: for these causes can coincide. For the form is the end of generation, and the efficient of the operations of the composite.

> Quarto potest comparari ad habitum, qui est charitatis principium. Sic definitur ab Apostolo. Neque repugnat, eam esse formam, et finem, ac efficientem: hae enim causae coincidere possunt. Sic enim forma est finis generationis, et efficiens operationum compositi.

17 The Holy Doctor brings the same definitions of charity Lib. 5. compend. cap. 23., where he expresses the Apostle's description more fully. It is called the end, that is, the complement of the law, and the end to which all the precepts are ordered, that charity itself may be increased. It is said: from a pure heart, that is, intellect, or intellection, as the Gloss says; for the act of charity is caused from intellection: for the more purely and more perfectly a man understands God, the more apt he is to love. It is said: from a good conscience, that is, a pure conscience, which whoever has, hopes securely; and an unfeigned faith, that is, not fragile, nor feigned, but strong amid adversities.

> Easdem definitiones charitatis affert S. Doctor Lib. 5. compend. cap. 23. ubi latius exprimit descriptionem Apostoli. Dicitur enim finis*, idest, complementum legis, et finis ad quem omnia ordinantur praecepta, ut augeatur ipsa charitas. Dicitur:* de corde puro*, idest intellectu, seu intellectione, ut ait Glossa; ab intellectione enim causatur actus charitatis: quanto enim homo Deum purius, et perfectius intelligit, tanto aptior est ad diligendum. Dicitur:* de conscientia bona*, idest conscientia pura, quam qui habet, secure sperat,* et fide non ficta*, idest non fragili, nec simulata, sed inter adversa forti.*

18 There he brings a full description of Charity from D. Prosper Lib. 3. de vita contemplativa, cap. 13. Charity is the right will utterly turned away from all things earthly, present, and future, joined to God inseparably, and united, kindled by a certain fire of the Holy Spirit, from whom it is, and to whom it is referred, wholly alien to every defilement, knowing not how to be corrupted, subject to no vice of changeableness, raised above all things that are loved carnally, most powerful over all affections, avid for divine contemplation, always unconquered in all things, the sum of good actions, the health of morals, the end of the celestial precepts, the death of crimes, the life of the virtues, the virtue of those fighting, the palm of the just, the armature of holy minds, the cause of good merits, the reward of the perfect: without which no one has pleased God, with which no one could displease him, fruitful in penitents, joyful in those progressing, glorious in those persevering, victorious in Martyrs, laborious in all the faithful without exception, from which whatever of good work there is, lives.

> Affert ibi amplam discriptionem Charitatis ex D. Prospero Lib. 3. de vita contemplativa, cap. 13. Charitas est recta voluntas ab omnibus terrenis, et praesentibus, ac futuris prorsus aversa, iuncta Deo inseparabiliter, et unita, igne quodam Spiritus Sancti, a quo est, et ad quem refertur, incensa, inquinamenti omnino extranea, corrumpi nescia, nulli vitio mutabilitatis obnoxia, super omnia, quae carnaliter diliguntur, excelsa, affectionum omnium potentissima, divinae contemplationis avida, in omnibus semper invicta, summa bonarum actionum, salus morum, finis caelestium praeceptorum, mors criminum, vita virtutum, virtus pugnantium, palma iustorum, sanctarum mentium armatura, causa meritorum bonorum, praemium perfectorum: sine qua nullus Dei placuit, cum qua aliquis Deo displicere non potuit, fructuosa in poenitentibus, laeta in proficientibus, gloriosa in perseverantibus, victoriosa in Martyribus, operosa in omnibus omnino fidelibus, ex qua, quidquid est boni operis, vivit.

19 This definition embraces the perfections of charity for every state, but not for the way alone. He defines it again in the opusc. Declaratio terminorum Theologiae: Charity is the virtue by which God is loved for himself; and the neighbor for God: but he says that Love is a natural affection, common to rational and irrational beings: that Dilection is the affection of rational beings. He has the same definition of charity in the opusc. de tribus ternariis pecc. cap. 4.

> Haec definitio complectitur perfectiones charitatis pro omni statu, non autem pro sola via. Eam rursus definit opusc. Declaratio terminorum Theologiae: Charitas est virtus, qua diligitur Deus propter se; et proximus propter Deum: Amorem vero ait esse naturalem affectionem, communem rationalibus, et irrationalibus: Dilectionem esse affectionem rationalium. Eandem definitionem charitatis habet opusc. de tribus ternariis pecc. cap. 4.

20 But he hands down the definition of Charity most exactly in the septem Itineribus aeternitatis, itinerary 4.

> Exacte vero de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, itinere 4. definitionem tradit Charitatis.

21 First, moreover, he prefaces that in divine matters Love, Dilection, and Charity can be taken for the same, as have St. Dion. cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, and D. Augustine Lib. 8. de Trinitate, cap. 10.

> Praelibat autem primo, in divinis pro eodem posse sumi Amorem, Dilectionem, et Charitatem, ut habent SS. Dion. cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, et D. Augustinus Lib. 8. de Trinitate, cap. 10.

22 But that he may the more segregate Divine love, he observes that many loves are given. The first is natural, which is an inclination to a good, not supposing cognition; thus all things love their own conservation. Whence Job 37. The clouds desire the grain, that is, it has a natural inclination to this good. The second is animal love, supposing sensible cognition, and this is in animals alone. The third is intellectual love, supposing intellective cognition; and this is twofold: one supposing an intellective cognition merely natural, or light; and it is from a will not deliberated; another supposes a deliberated cognition with respect to a good related to another, as end; and this is elective love: the former is still called natural. But if that love be toward a supernatural good, it will be from supernatural charity, as it is founded on the supernal cognition of faith. This also in the Angel is Angelic.

> Ut autem magis Divinum amorem segreget, observat, dari multos amores. Primus est naturalis, qui est inclinatio ad bonum, non supponens cognitionem; sic omnes res amant sui conservationem. Ideo Iob 37. Frumentum desiderat nubes, idest, naturalem habet inclinationem ad hoc bonum. Secundus est amor animalis, supponens cognitionem sensibilem, et hic est in solis animalibus. Tertius est amor intellectualis, supponens cognitionem intellectivam; et hic est duplex, alius supponens cognitionem intellectivam tantum naturalem, seu lumen; et est a voluntate non deliberata: quidam supponit cognitionem deliberatam respectu boni relati ad aliud, ut finem; et hic est amor electivus: ille vero dicitur adhuc naturalis. Quod si ille amor sit ad bonum supernaturale, erit a charitate supernaturali, sicuti fundatur cognitione superna fidei. Hic etiam in Angelo est Angelicus.

23 Therefore Love is the unitive virtue of the lover with the beloved proportionally, in the ways said.

> Igitur Amor est virtus unitiva amantis cum amato proportionaliter, modis dictis.

24 But that he may the more separate the dross of other affections from the gold of charity, he again distinguishes in man five loves.

> Ut autem magis aliorum affectuum amoris scoriam ab auro charitatis separet, in homine iterum distinguit quinque amores.

25 The first is natural affection, such as that of anyone toward his own body: For no man ever hated his own flesh, Ephes. 5. Likewise of a mother toward her son, of which Isa. 49. Can a woman forget her infant, the child of her womb? Indeed, as it is impossible for this affection not to harm unless bridled by reason, so that it not follow is the height of virtue.

> Primus est affectus naturalis, qualis est cuiuslibet ad corpus suum: Nemo enim unquam carnem suam odio habuit, Ephes. 5. Item matris ad filium, de quo Isa. 49. Numquid oblivisci potest mulier infantem uteri sui? Hunc sane affectum, sicut non nocere impossibile est, nisi ratione fraenetur; ita non sequi, summae virtutis est.

26 This affection always gladly embraces the delicate, but shuns the rough. Of this immoderate one Christ speaks, Ioan. 12. He who loves his soul shall lose it. Whence St. Augustine tract. 51. If thou lovest ill, then thou hatest; if thou hatest well, then thou hast loved. Hence you will grasp the saying of Cicero de amicitia: The charity that is between parents and children cannot be broken, except by a detestable crime. For he speaks as to the natural moderate inclination.

Semper iste affectus delicata libenter amplectitur; aspera vero refugit. De hoc immoderato loquitur Christus, Ioan. 12. Qui amat animam suam, perdet eam. Proinde S. Augustinus tract. 51. Si male amas, tunc odisti, si bene oderis, tunc amasti. Hinc capies dictum Ciceronis de amicitia: Charitatem, quae est inter parentes, et liberos, dirimi, nisi detestabili scelere, non posse. Loquitur enim quo ad naturalem moderatam inclinationem.

27 The second is carnal affection, which is twofold. One is a certain propensity toward some habit of someone, as the sweetness of eloquence, the elegance of countenance; thus Exodi 2. the daughter of Pharaoh loved Moses, an infant of elegant countenance, and adopted him as a son. The other, however, allures to things noxious; such was David's 2. Reg. 11. and Solomon's 3. Reg. 11. St. Dionysius de Ang. Hier. cap. 2. calls this affection a distant Idol of true love, and it is full of anxiety; but Charity is delightful.

Secundus est affectus carnalis, qui duplex est. Alius, quaedam propensio ad aliquam habitudinem alicuius, puta eloquii suavitatem, vultus elegantiam, sic Exodi 2. filia Pharaonis Moysen, infantem vultus elegantis amavit, et in filium adoptavit. Alter vero ad noxia pellicit; talis fuit Davidis 2. Reg. 11. et Salomonis 3. Reg. 11. Hunc affectum vocat S. Dionysius de Ang. Hier. cap. 2. Longinquum Idolum veri amoris, estque plenus anxietate; at Charitas iucunda est.

28 The third affection is dutiful, or official, as Richard says de Trinitate, Lib. 3. cap. 3., which inclines souls to services and duties, which is a sign of a grateful mind: therefore it is to be admitted, though it be perilous. From this affection charity differs, which does not seek the things that are its own, 1 Corinth. 13.

Tertius affectus est officiosus, seu officialis, ut ait Richardus de Trinitate, Lib. 3. cap. 3. qui ad obsequia, et officia animos inclinat, qui grati animi est signum: Ergo admittendus, tametsi periculosus sit. Ab hoc affectu distat charitas, quae non quaerit, quae sua sunt, prima Corinth. 13.

29 The fourth is Rational, of which D. Gregory Lib. 10. moral. cap. 4., which arises from the consideration of another's virtue. This is the affection that animates the soul, from the splendid deeds of elders, to undergo eminent things. It differs from charity, which arises from the interior breathing of the Holy Spirit.

Quartus est Rationalis, de quo D. Gregorius Lib. 10. moral. cap. 4. qui ex consideratione alienae virtutis oritur. Hic est affectus, qui ex praeclare maiorum gestis animum ad eximia animat exantlanda. Differt a charitate, quae ab interiori Spiritus Sancti afflatu oritur.

30 The fifth is spiritual affection, and this is threefold: one breathed in by a malignant spirit; another by the human spirit; another by the Holy Spirit. By a malignant spirit Amnon burned for Thamar, 2. Reg. 13. and Judas for gold against Christ Ioan. 13. From the human spirit arise spirits resembling charity; thus many laid down their life for their fatherland and citizens, as D. Augustine relates Lib. 5. de civit. cap. 18. and Cicero Lib. 1. de offic., where he relates that there were two precepts of Plato, given to those willing to benefit the Republic. The first, that they so defend the utility of the citizens that whatever they do they refer to it, forgetful of their own advantages. The second, that they care for the whole body of the Republic principally, lest while they defend some part they desert the rest. From the Divine spirit, however, the affection of charity is infused.

Quintus est affectus spiritualis, et hic est triplex: Alius immissus a Spiritu maligno; alius a Spiritu humano; alius a Sancto Spiritu. A Spiritu maligno afflatus Amnon exarsit in Thamar, 2. Reg. 13. et Iudas in aurum contra Christum Ioan. 13. A Spiritu humano oriuntur Spiritus similes charitati; sic multi animam pro patria, et civibus posuere, ut referunt D. Augustinus Lib. 5. de civit. cap. 18. et Cicero Lib. 1. de offic. ubi refert, duo fuisse Platonis praecepta, data volentibus Reipublicae prodesse. Primum, ut utilitatem civium sic tueantur, ut quaecumque agant, ad eam referant, obliti suorum commodorum. Secundum, ut totum corpus Reipublicae curent principaliter, ne dum aliquam partem tuentur, reliquas deserant. A Spiritu autem Divino affectus charitatis infunditur.

31 Truly this differs from the others. First in origin, because it is infused by God alone, as is said Rom. 5. The natural is born with nature, and the other is acquired. Second it differs formally, because it is the life of the soul; not so that one. Third, because it is the form of the other virtues; not so that one. Fourth in end, because it is toward a supernal end, leading out of guilt and conducting into grace; not so the others. These differences St. Bernard serm. 50. in Cant. and D. Bonaventure in the place cited intimate.

Differt vero hic ab aliis. Primo origine, quia a Deo solo infunditur, ut dicitur Rom. 5. Naturalis vero cum natura enascitur, et altera acquiritur. Secundo differt formaliter, quia est vita animae; non sic ille. Tertio, quia est forma aliarum virtutum, non sic ille. Quarto in fine, quia haec est ad finem supernum, educens e culpa, et in gratiam conducens; non sic alii. Has differentias innuunt S. Bernardus serm. 50. in Cant. et D. Bonavent. loco citato.

32 From this doctrine St. Bonaventure elicits what Charity is: Charity is a created supernatural virtue, by which men love God inasmuch as he is a certain Good looking to a supernatural order for himself; and so its object is the goodness of God immediately; therefore it is a Theological virtue. So commonly the Theologians, at D. Thom. question 23. Valencia disp. 3. question 1. part 1. Palau tract. 6. disp. 1. p. 1. Caspesius tract. 17. disp. 1. sect. 2. Morandus tract. unico, question 21.

Ex hac doctrina elicit S. Bonavent. quid sit Charitas: Charitas est virtus creata supernaturalis, qua homines Deum diligunt, quatenus Bonum quoddam spectans ad ordinem supernaturalem propter se, atque adeo eius obiectum est bonitas Dei immediate, ideo est virtus Theologica. Ita communiter Theologi apud D. Thom. quaest. 23. Valentiam disp. 3. quaest. 1. puncto 1. Palaum tract. 6. disp. 1. p. 1. Caspensem tract. 17. disp. 1. sect. 2. Morandum tract. unico, quaest. 21.

33 The name of charity in Hebrew is חבה: Haabat. Not Nabaa, as Valencia reads disp. 3. question 1. part 1. it signifies gratuitous love, Hierem. 31. In perpetual charity I have loved thee.

Nomen charitatis in Haebreo est חבה : Haabat. Non Nabaa*, ut legit Valentia* disp. 3. quaest. 1. puncto 1. significat gratuitum amorem, Hierem. 31. In charitate perpetua dilexi te.

34 Therefore charity is defined, Virtue, which indeed is in the genus of a good habit: but I shall prove it to be a habit, and a good, and to be a special Theological virtue. It is called supernatural Haabat. Then it is said that God is loved by charity for himself, as he is good, not for me, but in himself. Although St. Augustine in primo solil. cap. 6. say that charity is the desire of seeing God, it does not stand in the way; for this desire also refers beatitude to God himself, as I shall say with D. Bonaventure question 17., and Caspesius notes disp. 1. sect. 1. num. 5. Moreover, the Definition will be expounded in the questions.

Igitur charitas definitur, Virtus*, quae sane est in genere habitus boni: eam vero probabo esse habitum, et bonum, esseque virtutem specialem Theologicam. Dicitur supernaturalis* Haabat. Deinde dicitur charitate amari Deus propter se, ut est bonus, non mihi, sed in se. Quamvis autem S. Augustinus in primo solil. cap. 6. dicat, charitatem esse desiderium videndi Deum, non obstat; nam et hoc desiderium refert beatitudinem in Deum ipsum, ut dicam cum D. Bonavent. quaest. 17. et advertit Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 1. num. 5. Porro quaestionibus explicabitur Definitio.

Question II: What the object of charity is

1 I assume from what was said in the Tract. de fide, that the object of the Virtues is twofold: the Material, which is the thing that is looked at; and the Formal, which is the reason under which it is looked at. Of both I inquire.

> Suppono ex dictis Tract. de fide, duplex esse obiectum Virtutum: Materiale, et est res quae respicitur; et Formale, quod est ratio sub qua respicitur. De utroque quaero.

2 THE COMMON opinion is, that the material object of charity is God, and the neighbor, and whatever can be loved for God, as the end is supernatural; yet so that God is the principal object of attribution, on account of which the rest are loved: for thus it was found in Hope, and in faith. And yet we do not confuse the material object with the formal, as Arriaga disp. 31. sect. 2. thinks; for the formal object is the reason under which God is loved, namely, as good in himself, as I shall say; and also as good to us: for the formal object is that which is the motive and specificative of the act itself, or determinant of the potency and habit toward acting about the material subject, as Mastrius disp. 6. question 20. num. 516. observes.

> COMMUNIS sententia est, obiectum materiale charitatis esse Deum, et proximum, et quidquid propter Deum diligi potest, ut finis est supernaturalis; ita vero, ut Deus sit obiectum principale attributionis, propter quod reliqua amentur: sic enim, et in Spe, et in fide inventum est. Neque tamen nos confundimus obiectum materiale cum formali, ut putat Arriaga disp. 31. sect. 2. nam obiectum formale est ratio, sub qua amatur Deus, nempe, ut in se bonus, ut dicam; et etiam ut bonus nobis: Obiectum enim formale est, quod est motivum, et specificativum ipsius actus, sive determinativum potentiae, et habitus ad agendum circa materiale subiectum, ut observat Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 20. num. 516.

3 I ASSERT first, that the material object of the attribution of Charity is God.

> ASSERO primo, obiectum materiale attributionis Charitatis esse Deum.

4 IT IS PROVED first by the Holy Doctor dist. 27. in dubiis litt. and dist. 28. question 6. First from the definitions of charity brought above question 1.

> PROBATUR primo a S. Doct. dist. 27. in dubiis litt. et dist. 28. quaest. 6. Primo ex definitionibus charitatis supra quaest. 1. allatis.

5 THEN from Deuter. 6. Matth. 20. Lucae 10. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, etc. Which the Holy Doctor pursues at length on Lucae 10.

> DEINDE ex Deuter. 6. Matth. 20. Lucae 10. Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo etc. Quod late prosequitur S. Doct. ad 10. Lucae.

6 IT IS PROVED second by the Holy Doctor 3. dist. 26. art. 2. question 4. Because the virtues looking to God immediately look to God distinctly, as an immediate object; such is Charity: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. 3. dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 4. Quia virtutes Deum immediate respicientes distincte respiciunt Deum, ut obiectum immediate; Talis est Charitas: Ergo.

7 IT IS PROVED third by the Holy Doctor, the same dist. question 5. That Theological virtue which is reformatory of the will; and stands in the will as concupiscible, is borne toward the highest Good, God: Charity is such a Virtue: Therefore.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. eadem dist. quaest. 5. Virtus illa Theologica, quae est reformativa voluntatis; et in voluntate stat concupiscibili, fertur in summum Bonum Deum: Charitas est talis Virtus: Ergo.

8 IT IS PROVED fourth by St. Bonav. dist. 28. question 6. and D. Thom. question 25. art. 1. That is the first object of Charity, in which goodness first shines forth: such is God: therefore. This Fulgent. lib. 3. cap. 9. urges.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Bonav. dist. 28. quaest. 6. et D. Thom. quaest. 25. art. 1. Id primum est obiectum Charitatis, in quo primo relucet bonitas: Talis est Deus: ergo. Id urget Fulient. lib. 3. cap. 9.

9 I ASSERT second, that other things also pertain to the material object of charity, namely those which can have fellowship in the supernatural end, namely the neighbor, in whom we ourselves are included, as also our bodies look to it, and other men, as I shall say in question 28.

ASSERO secundo, alia etiam ad obiectum materiale charitatis pertinere, nempe ea, quae ad finem supernaturalem possunt habere societatem, scilicet proximus, in quo includimur nos ipsi, sicut et corpora nostra eo spectant, aliique homines, ut dicam quaest. 28.

10 IT IS PROVED first by St. Bonav. in the places brought from the Scriptures, which place the neighbor also in the precepts of charity. This the Holy Doctor pursues at length in cap. 14. and following of Ioannis.

PROBATUR primo a S. Bonav. locis adductis e Scripturis, quae ponunt in praeceptis charitatis etiam proximum. Haec late prosequitur S. Doct. in cap. 14. et sequentis Ioannis.

11 IT IS PROVED second by the Holy Doctor dist. 28. question 1. He who loves God wills him the good of his; but we with the neighbor can be loved in order to God, as his good: Therefore we can love the neighbor by the act of charity, by which we love God, and will him good. Whence Ioan. 1. cap. 4. If we love one another, the charity of God is perfect in us. D. August. 10. de Trinitate, cap. 8. consents. Whence Matth. 25. What you have done to one of these my least, you have done to me. For if Christ reckons as his goods those goods that are conferred upon men, men act most prudently when they will good to men, that in those the same goods may be attributed to God. I confirm it, because the neighbor is a something of God, partaker of beatitude: but it belongs to perfect friendship not only to love him with whom friendship is contracted primarily and principally, but also on account of him the things that pertain to him: for thus a friend loves a friend, and for him also the friend's son; yet this love of friendship does not extend by the same reason to the friend's Dog, as the Holy Doctor observes, who thence elicits that irrational things are not loved with charity, because they do not communicate with us in the supernatural good.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. dist. 28. quaest. 1. Amans Deum vult illi bonum illius; sed nos cum proximo possumus amari in ordine ad Deum, ut bonum eius: Ergo possumus diligere proximum per actum charitatis, quo diligimus Deum, et volumus illi bonum. Ideo Ioan. 1. cap. 4. Si diligamus invicem, charitas Dei in nobis perfecta est. Consentit D. August. 10. de Trinitate, cap. 8. Ideo Matth. 25. Quod uni ex minimis meis fecistis, mihi fecistis. Si enim Christus bona sua reputat illa, quae hominibus conferuntur, prudentissime homines operantur, quando volunt bona hominibus, ut in illis eadem bona Deo tribuantur. Confirmo, quia proximus est quid Dei, particeps beatitudinis: Ad perfectam autem amicitiam spectat non solum diligere eum, quocum primario, et principaliter amicitia contrahitur, sed etiam ratione illius ea, quae ad ipsum spectant: Sic enim amicus diligit amicum, et propter eum etiam filium amici; non tamen hic amor amicitiae se extendit eadem ratione ad Canem amici, ut advertit S. Doct. qui inde eruit, non diligi charitate irrationalia, quia non communicant in bono supernaturali nobiscum.

12 Wherein Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 1. with D. Bonav. loc. cit. and dist. 9. art. 2. question 4. observes that the neighbor can be honestly loved in two ways. First, on account of God's goodness alone, that is, from the desire of the divine good, because the good bestowed on the neighbor is in a certain way the good of God, and this dilection manifestly pertains to Theological charity; for it is one act by which we love God, and the neighbor for God, as the Holy Doctor notes ad 3. and D. Thom. question 25. art. 1., and therefore it pertains to the same virtue. In another way the neighbor can be loved, either on account of the likeness in rational nature, or on account of the virtues, etc. and this dilection is not Charity, as D. Thom. also teaches question 103. art. 3. ad 2. Vasquez lib. 1. de ador. disp. 6. cap. 2. and lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6. Caspens. loc. cit. num. 3. Valencia disp. 3. question 1. p. 1. at the end.

> Pro quo advertit Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 1. cum D. Bonav. loc. cit. et dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4. proximos duobus modis posse honeste diligi. Primo, propter solam Dei bonitatem, idest ex desiderio divini boni, quia bonum collatum in proximum, quodammodo est bonum Dei, atque haec dilectio manifeste pertinet ad charitatem Theologicam; unus est enim actus, quo diligimus Deum, et proximum propter Deum, ut notat S. Doct. ad 3. et D. Thom. quaest. 25. art. 1. atque adeo ad eandem pertinet virtutem. Alio modo potest diligi proximus, vel propter similitudinem in natura rationali, vel propter virtutes, etc. et haec dilectio non est Charitas, ut docet etiam D. Thom. quaest. 103. art. 3. ad 2. Vasquez lib. 1. de ador. disp. 6. cap. 2. et lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6. Caspens. loc. cit. num. 3. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 1. p. 1. in fine.

13 I ASSERT third, that the formal object of Charity is God as good in himself. So D. Bonav. 3. dist. 26. art. 2. question 4. and 5. and dist. 27. and 28. passim, and frequently in the opuscula, and commonly the Theologians.

> ASSERO tertio, formale obiectum Charitatis esse Deum ut bonum in se. Ita D. Bonav. 3. dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 4. et 5. et dist. 27. et 28. passim, atque in opusculis frequenter, et communiter Theologi.

14 IT IS PROVED first by the Holy Doctor. The dilection by which someone is loved for himself ought to be absolute; but this dilection of charity is of this kind: Therefore.

> PROBATUR primo a S. Doct. Dilectio, qua quis diligitur propter se, debet esse absoluta; sed haec dilectio charitatis est huiusmodi: Ergo.

15 IT IS PROVED second, because Charity is the virtue perfecting the will in order to God, therefore as object; but it is the object as good: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo, quia Charitas est virtus perficiens voluntatem in ordine ad Deum, ergo ut obiectum; sed est obiectum ut bonum: Ergo.

16 But in truth, because also Natural love loves God's goodness, it is necessary to find something formal by which Charity is distinguished from it.

> At vero, quia etiam Amor naturalis Dei diligit eius bonitatem, oportet aliquid formale invenire, per quod ab eo Charitas distinguatur.

17 COMMONLY the Thomists teach with the Angelic Doctor 1. 2. question 109. art. 3. ad 1. that the formal object of charity is God, inasmuch as he is in himself good, with a goodness pertaining to the supernatural order, or with the goodness by which God is the principle of supernatural goods. So Suarez disp. 1. sect. 2. Casp. disp. 1. sect. 1. Amicus, and other Recentiores, and it seems D. Bonav. de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere 4. cap. 2. and dist. 27. dub. 1. litt. around the definition of charity, from D. Aug. soliloq. 1. cap. 6. in haec 3. sent. and more fully dist. 28. question 1. whole, and dist. 27. question 2. ad 3.

COMMUNITER Thomistae docent cum Doctore Angelico 1. 2. quaest. 109. art. 3. ad 1. Formale obiectum charitatis esse Deum, quatenus in se bonum, bonitate pertinente ad ordinem supernaturalem, vel bonitate, qua Deus est principium bonorum supernaturalium. Ita Suarez disp. 1. sect. 2. Casp. disp. 1. sect. 1. Amicus, et alii Recentiores, et videtur D. Bonav. de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere 4. cap. 2. et dist. 27. dub. 1. litt. circa definitionem charitatis, ex D. Aug. soliloq. 1. cap. 6. in haec 3. sent. et elatius dist. 28. quaest. 1. tota, et dist. 27. quaest. 2. ad 3.

18 MANY, however, say that the formal reason of the object of charity is expanded more broadly, and that it is the goodness of God, by which he is in himself infinitely good and perfect, according to every reason of being. Whence they infer that the same supernatural habit inclines to loving God as a natural end, and as the author of natural and supernatural goods. So Vasquez p. 2. disp. 195. cap. 2. and 3. Coninch. disp. 21. dub. 2. For which opinion they bring Scotus 3. dist. 27. question unica, §. contra primam viam. And §. quantum ad istum articulum, and Arriaga judges it probable disp. 31. sect. 2. and 3. and Mastrius 3. disp. 6. question 20. num. 519. with Bassoli 3. dist. 28. question un. art. 1. Poncio disp. 32. question 1. and other Scotists. This opinion seems to be D. Bonav.'s dist. 28. question 1. ad 3. and dist. 26. art. 2. question 4. fund. 1.

MULTI tamen dicunt, rationem formalem obiecti charitatis latius expandi, esseque bonitatem Dei, qua in se infinite bonus, et perfectus est, secundum omnem rationem entis. Unde inferunt, eumdem habitum supernaturalem inclinare ad diligendum Deum, ut finem naturalem, authoremque bonorum naturalium, et supernaturalium. Ita Vasquez p. 2. disp. 195. cap. 2. et 3. Coninch. disp. 21. dub. 2. pro qua sententia adducunt Scotum 3. dist. 27. quaest. unica, §. contra primam viam. Et §. quantum ad istum articulum, et probabile censet Arriaga disp. 31. sect. 2. et 3. et Mastrius 3. disp. 6. quaest. 20. num. 519. cum Bassoli 3. dist. 28. quaest. un. art. 1. Poncio disp. 32. quaest. 1. et aliis Scotistis. Videtur haec sententia D. Bonav. dist. 28. quaest. 1. ad 3. et dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 4. fund. 1.

19 I ASSERT, that God is the formal object of Theological Charity, inasmuch as he is a supernatural good in himself.

ASSERO, Deum esse obiectum formale Charitatis Theologicae, quatenus est bonum supernaturale in se.

20 IT IS PROVED, otherwise supernatural Charity would not be distinguished from natural love; because it would not have a distinct formal object; but this repugns the Fathers. It is confirmed; for God has a different lovableness, inasmuch as he is a natural end, and as a supernatural end. Of this I have treated sufficiently disp. 1. question 28. See there. It is confirmed by D. Bonav. dist. 26. dubio 1. from the definition of Charity, which is the desire of supernatural beatitude, or of having God. It is confirmed by the Holy Doctor in Cantic. 3. p. sect. 40. Charity is the virtue ultimately rectifying the will in order to its object: therefore to the highest good under the reason of the highest; but this is the ultimate attainment of supernatural beatitude: Therefore.

PROBATUR, alioqui non distingueretur Charitas supernaturalis ab amore naturali; quia non haberet distinctum obiectum formale; hoc autem repugnat Patribus. Confirmatur; nam Deus diversam habet amabilitatem, prout est finis naturalis, et ut finis supernaturalis. De hoc satis egi disp. 1. quaest. 28. Vide ibi. Confirmatur a D. Bonav. dist. 26. dubio 1. ex definitione Charitatis, quae est desiderium beatitudinis supernaturalis, seu habendi Deum. Confirmatur a S. Doct. in Cantic. 3. p. sect. 40. Charitas est virtus ultimo rectificans voluntatem in ordine ad eius obiectum: ergo ad summum bonum sub ratione suprema; sed haec est ultima consecutio beatitudinis supernaturalis: Ergo.

21 Mastrius answers num. 529. That God also, as the author of creatures, can be the object of supernatural charity; whence the Saints were often roused from the love of creatures to the love of God, and since they burned so ardently into the love of God, it is incredible that they elicited only acts of natural love, as Coninch. notes disp. 5. dub. 3. It is confirmed by D. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 25. around the middle from D. August. lib. 10. confess. cap. 6. where he cries out: Lord, thou hast struck my heart with thy love, and I loved thee. But heaven and earth, and all things that are in them, behold, on every side they say to me, that I should love thee, nor do they cease saying to all, that they may be inexcusable, and there St. Augustine pours himself out, rising from the creatures into the love of God, from the light, from music, from foods, from odors; and Lib. de spiritu et anima, cap. 17. Wretched I, how much I ought to love my God, who made me when I was not, redeemed me when I had perished. I was not, and from nothing he made me; not a stone, not a tree, not a bird, or any of the animals; but he willed me to be a man: he gave me to live, to sense, to discern, and to understand. I had perished, and he descended to the mortal, took on mortality, endured the passion, conquered death, and thus restored me.

> RESPONDET Mastrius num. 529. Deum etiam, ut authorem creaturarum, esse posse obiectum charitatis supernaturalis; unde Sancti saepe ex amore creaturarum in amorem Dei excitabantur, et cum tam ardenter exargerent in Dei amorem, incredibile est, elicuisse solos actus amoris naturalis, ut advertit Coninch. disp. 5. dub. 3. Confirmatur a D. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 25. circa medium ex D. August. lib. 10. confess. cap. 6. ubi clamat: Domine amore tuo percussisti cor meum, et amavi te. Sed et caelum et terra, et omnia, quae in eis sunt, ecce undique mihi dicunt, ut te amem, nec cessant dicere omnibus, ut sint inexcusabiles*, et ibi diffunditur S. Augustinus ex creaturis exurgens in Dei amorem, e luce, e musicis, e cibis, ex odoribus, et Lib. de spiritu et anima, cap. 17.* Miser ego quantum deberem diligere Deum meum, qui me fecit, cum non eram, redemit cum perieram. Non eram, et de nihilo me fecit, non lapidem, non arborem, non avem, aut aliquod de animalibus; sed voluit me esse hominem: dedit mihi vivere, sentire, discernere, et intelligere. Perieram, et ad mortalem descendit, mortalitatem suscepit, passionem sustinuit, mortem vicit et sic me restauravit.

22 The same St. August. epist. 3. to Volusianus, at D. Bonav. loc. cit. Pharetrae: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole mind: and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Here is the Physica: because all the causes of all natures are in God the Creator. Here is the Ethica: because the good and honest life is formed from nothing else than when the things that are to be loved are loved as they ought to be loved, that is, God, and the neighbor. Here is the Logica: because truth, and the Light of the rational soul, is nothing but God. See other things there in the Holy Doctor.

> Idem S. August. epist. 3. ad Volusianum apud D. Bonav. loc. cit. Pharetrae: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, et ex tota anima tua, et ex tota mente tua: et diliges proximum tuum, sicut teipsum. Hic Physica: quoniam omnes omnium naturarum causae, in Deo Creatore sunt. Hic Ethica: quoniam vita bona, et honesta non aliunde formatur, quam cum ea, quae diligenda sunt, quemadmodum diligenda sunt, diliguntur, hoc est Deus, et proximus. Hic est Logica: quoniam veritas, Lumenque animae rationalis non nisi Deus est. Vide alia ibi in S. Doctore.

23 You can bring with the Seraphic Doctor the example of St. P. Francis, who rose from the creatures to the Creator: Commanding praise to praise him, praise was always present to him; I say, the praise of the Savior: he invites the birds, the beasts, and the other creatures to the praise of the Creator. Although he loved them with a love not of charity, but of piety, as the Holy Doctor says dist. 28. question 1., yet from thence he flew upward to the supernal love of God.

> Afferre potes cum Seraphico exemplum S. P. Francisci, qui ex creaturis in Creatorem assurgebat: Laudans laudare monuit, laus illi semper affuit, laus inquam Salvatoris: invitat aves, bestias, et creaturas alias ad laudem Conditoris. Quamvis autem eas amore non charitatis, sed pietatis diligeret, ut ait S. Doct. dist. 28. quaest. 1. tamen inde ad Dei amorem supernum evolabat.

24 Truly, however, charity regards both reasons of goodness, so that as to the supernatural it needs the supernal light, as the Holy Doctor notes loc. cit. de 4. Itinere aeternit. cap. 2.; nevertheless it can, from the natural object known, with the light of faith added, rise to a supernatural act.

> Ita vero charitas respicit utramque rationem bonitatis, ut ad supernaturalem egeat lumine superno, ut advertit S. Doct. loc. cit. de 4. Itinere aeternit. cap. 2. attamen potest ex obiecto naturali cognito, lumine fidei addito, consurgere ad actum supernaturalem.

25 For indeed disp. 1. de fide, question 28. I have already maintained that supernatural acts are distinguished from natural ones by the objects. Therefore the answer to the authorities is, that the Saints rose from the creatures to God by natural love, by which they were disposed, that they might be raised up to God, as a supernatural end.

> Enim vero disp. 1. de fide, quaest. 28. iam sustinui, actus supernaturales a naturalibus distingui ex obiectis. Ideo ad authoritates respondetur, Sanctos consurrexisse ex creaturis in Deum amore naturali, quo disponebantur, ut elevarentur in Deum, ut finem supernaturalem.

26 Scotus objects, and with him Mastrius num. 519. That God, by the power of charity, is to be loved so, that he would still be loved even if he were never willing to be for us the cause of supernatural gifts: and in this way the Saints, burning with charity, love God. Otherwise, however, the Thomists, constituting God the object of Charity as he is the author of supernatural goods, make charity to be a love of concupiscence.

> Obiicit Scotus, et cum eo Mastrius num. 519. Deus ex virtute charitatis ita amandus est, ut adhuc amaretur, etiamsi nunquam vellet nobis esse causa donorum supernaturalium: et hoc pacto Sancti, charitate ardentes, Deum diligunt. Alias vero Thomistae constituentes Deum Charitatis obiectum, ut est author bonorum supernaturalium, ponunt, charitatem esse amorem concupiscentiae.

27 Yet this argument is weak, as Arriaga himself notes: for we do not say that we love God with charity only as a good for us; but as in himself a good diffusive of supernatural goods, or naturally communicable as to supernatural things; and under this reason he can excite a love of friendship.

> Hoc tamen argumentum debile est, ut ipse advertit Arriaga: Non enim dicimus, nos charitate amare Deum solum, ut bonum nobis; sed ut in se bonum diffusivum bonorum supernaturalium, seu natura communicabilem secundum supernaturalia; et sub hac ratione potest excitare amorem amicitiae.

28 Mastrius presses num. 520. That God, even if he were not communicable in this way, would still be lovable by Charity, because in himself good, he is infinitely perfect.

> Instat Mastrius num. 520. Deus, etiamsi non esset communicabilis hoc modo, adhuc esset Charitate amabilis, quia in se bonus, est infinite perfectus.

29 It is answered, that he is lovable as good in every way, but with natural love also; whence it does not follow that he ought to be the object of supernatural charity, otherwise the natural and supernatural habits would be confounded; and if the natural can attain the supernatural object, in vain would the Councils, and the Scriptures, have required help through Christ, as I argued at length disp. 1. question 28.

> Respondetur, esse amabilem, ut bonus usquequaque, sed amore etiam naturali; unde non sequitur, quod debeat esse obiectum charitatis supernaturalis, alioqui confunderentur habitus naturales, et supernaturales; et si naturalis potest attingere obiectum supernaturale, frustra Concilia, et Scripturae exigent auxilium per Christum, ut late argumentabar disp. 1. quaest. 28.

Question III: Whether charity is properly the friendship of God

1 From the fact that God in himself is the object of Charity, it seems that charity is a friendship between God and men.

> Ex eo, quod Deus in se est obiectum Charitatis, videtur, charitatem esse amicitiam inter Deum, et homines.

2 Some have denied that there is friendship between God and men.

> Negarunt aliqui, amicitiam inter Deum, et homines.

3 Yet the true opinion is affirmative. So D. Bonav. 3. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 2. and in 1. dist. 48. quaest. ult. argumento 3. which D. Thom. concedes quaest. 23. art. 1., whom others commonly follow, as Valencia reports disp. 3. quaest. 1. p. 2., Casp. Tract. 17. disp. 1. sect. 2., Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 20. num. 535., Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1., Fulgent. lib. 3. cap. 8., Bassaeus v. Charit. I discussed this question p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 17. quaestione 3.

> Vera tamen sententia est assertiva. Ita D. Bonav. 3. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 2. et in 1. dist. 48. quaest. ult. argumento 3. quod concedit D. Thom. quaest. 23. art. 1. quos alii sequuntur communiter, ut referunt Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 1. p. 2. Casp. Tract. 17. disp. 1. sect. 2. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 20. num. 535. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1. Fulient. lib. 3. cap. 8. Bassaeus v. Charit. Hanc quaestionem discussi p. 1. tract. 1. disp. 17. quaestione 3.

4 I assert with this opinion that there is friendship between God and just men.

> Assero cum hac sententia, dari amicitiam inter Deum, et homines iustos.

5 It is proved by D. Bonav. ad 14. Ioan. with those words: You are my friends.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. ad 14. Ioan. illis verbis: Vos amici mei estis.

6 It is proved secondly by S. Doct. loc. cit. in 3. and by Aristotle 8. Eth. cap. 10, where he says: The friendship of sons toward parents, and of men toward God, is like that toward something excellent. And in lib. 10. cap. 8 he says: The wise, whose Wisdom extends to an honest life, are most dear to the Gods.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. loc. cit. in 3. et Aristotele 8. Eth. cap. 10. ubi ait: Filiorum ad parentes, et hominum ad Deum esse amicitiam, sicut ad aliquid excellens. Et lib. 10. cap. 8. ait: Sapientes, quorum Sapientia extenditur ad vitam honestam, esse Diis amicissimos.

7 Now friendship is not of equality, but of excellence toward one supernal end, by communicating in goods; for equality is not essential to friendship; a Geometric proportion suffices. Moreover, Scripture asserts this friendship of God with men: Iudit. 8. Abraham was made the friend of God. Psal. 138. Exceedingly honored are your friends, O God. Sap. 7. They were made partakers of the Friendship of God. Isa. 41. The seed of Abraham, my friends. Lucae 12. But I say to you, my friends, where he also adds the mutual love of benevolence, which is the foundation of friendship, according to Ioan. 16. The Father himself loves you, because you have loved me.

> Est autem amicitia non aequalitatis, sed excellentiae ad finem unum supernum, communicando in bonis; non enim aequalitas est essentialis amicitiae; sed sufficit proportio Geometrica. Hanc porro Dei amicitiam cum hominibus asserunt Scripturae, Iudit. 8. Abraham Dei amicus effectus est. Psal. 138. Nimis honorati sunt amici tui Deus. Sap. 7. Participes facti sunt Amicitiae Dei. Isa. 41. Semen Abraham amici mei. Lucae 12. Dico autem vobis amicis meis, ubi etiam mutuum amorem benevolentiae, qui est fundamentum amicitiae, apponit, iuxta id Ioan. 16. Ipse Pater amat vos, quia vos me amastis.

8 Then Ioan. 15. at those words: I will no longer call you servants, but friends, he puts another condition of friendship, which is communication in goods, and therefore says: All things whatsoever I have heard from the Father, I have made known to you. Hence also D. Peter: You shall be made partakers of the divine nature. And Rom. 8. You have received the spirit of adoption, in which we cry: Abba (Father.)

> Deinde Ioan. 15. ad ea verba: Iam non dicam vos servos, sed amicos, ponit aliam conditionem amicitiae, quae est communicatio in bonis, ideo ait: Quaecumque audivi a Patre, nota feci vobis. Unde et D. Petrus: Divinae efficiamini consortes naturae. Et Rom. 8. Accepistis spiritum adoptionis, in quo clamamus: Abba (Pater.)

9 That he be loved by the Lord for our own good is proved from the form of the precept: You shall love the Lord your God, etc. As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you.

> Quod vero ad bonum nostrum diligatur a Domino, probatur ex forma praecepti: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum, etc. Sicut dilexit me Pater, et ego dilexi vos.

10 That this love exists, fourthly, is clear from Rom. 8. The Spirit gives testimony to our spirit, etc., that is, in that moral mode by which it can stand firm while we are on earth.

> Quod quarto constet de hoc amore, patet Rom. 8. Spiritus testimonium reddit spiritui nostro, etc. eo scilicet modo morali, quo licet in terris id constare.

11 Thus the conditions of friendship, set out broadly by Aristotle 8. Eth. c. 3. 4. 5. and 9. and D. Thom. here, are proved. See Gregory of Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 1. puncto 2.

> Sic probatae sunt conditiones amicitiae, late ab Aristotele 8. Eth. c. 3. 4. 5. et 9. et D. Thom. hic. Vide Gregorium de Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 1. puncto 2.

Question IV: Whether charity is a created habit

1 The MAGISTER, 1. dist. 17, is seen to assert that the charity by which we love God is the Holy Spirit himself, moving the will of man to love without any infused habit; yet he is interpreted most benignly by S. Doct.: not because the Holy Spirit is the form of the soul disposing it to love, but because he moves the affection immediately without a habit. Yet even in this he falls short.

> Utrum Charitas sit Habitus creatus.
> MAGISTER 1. dist. 17. visus est asserere, charitatem, qua Deum diligimus, esse ipsum Spiritum Sanctum, moventem hominis voluntatem ad amandum sine aliquo habitu infuso; eum tamen perbenigne interpretatur S. Doct. non quia Spiritus Sanctus sit forma animae disponens ad amandum, sed quia immediate absque habitu moveat affectum. Attamen et in hoc etiam deficit.

[2] I assert therefore that Charity is a habit. This is the common view of Theologians, and after the Council of Trent certain from faith.

> Assero igitur, Charitatem esse habitum. Est communis Theologorum, et post Concil. Trident. certa ex fide.

[3] IT IS PROVED by D. Bonav. That which has the ratio of a form infused by God, or by the Holy Spirit, is something created, distinct from its efficient cause, namely from the Holy Spirit; but the Charity of God is poured forth in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, who is given to us from cap. 5. ad Rom. The Major is evident: for God cannot be a form, otherwise he would be an imperfect inexisting part, and every cause differs really from its effect. By this argument the Council of Trent, session 6, defines, cap. 7, The charity of God is poured forth in the hearts of those who are justified, and inheres in them. And can. 11 defines that men are not justified by the sole remission of sins, with grace and charity excluded, which is poured forth and inheres in their hearts. Again, the Minor is proved from the Council of Orange, can. 25. It is altogether a Gift of God to love God; for the Spirit of the Father and the Son pours charity into our hearts, whom we love with the Father and the Son. The same is proved in the Council of Vienne, as is related in Clement. unica, de summa Trinitate. The Minor is confirmed again; for as Faith and Hope are ordered to reforming the mind, so much more is Charity, which is the life of the soul: therefore a form. But God cannot be a form, because he cannot enter into composition with another being, as is necessary for the esse of a form.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. Id quod habet rationem formae infusae a Deo, seu Spiritu Sancto, est quid creatum, distinctum a sua causa efficiente, nempe a Spiritu Sancto; sed Charitas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum Sanctum, qui datus est nobis ex cap. 5. ad Rom. Maior est evidens: Deus enim non potest esse forma, alioqui esset pars inexistens imperfecta, et omnis causa differt realiter a suo effectu. Hoc argumento, Concilium Trident. sess. 6. definit, cap. 7. Charitas Dei diffunditur in cordibus eorum, qui iustificantur, atque ipsis inhaeret. Et can. 11. definit, Homines non iustificari per solam remissionem peccatorum, exclusa gratia, et charitate, quae in illorum cordibus diffundatur, et inhaereat. Rursus Minor principalis probatur ex Concilio Araus. can. 25. Prorsus Donum Dei est diligere Deum, diffundit enim charitatem in cordibus nostris Spiritus Patris, et Filii, quem cum Patre amamus, et Filio. Idem probatur in Concil. Vien. ut refertur in Clement. unica, de summa Trinitate. Confirmatur rursum Minor; nam sicut Fides, et Spes ordinatae sunt ad reformandum animum, ita et multo magis Charitas, quae est vita animae: Ergo forma. Deus autem non potest esse forma, quia nequit ingredi compositionem cum alio ente, sicut ad esse formae est necesse.

[4] IT IS PROVED by S. Doct. fundamento 4. from all the Scriptures which assert that Charity grows, diminishes, is lost, and recovered. Prima Ioan. 2. Whoever keeps his word, truly in this the Charity of God is perfected. Philip. 1. This I pray, that the Charity of God may abound more and more. Apoc. 2. You have left your first Charity. Be mindful therefore from where you have fallen: and do penance.

> PROBATUR a S. Doct. fundamento 4. ex omnibus Scripturis, quae asserunt Charitatem crescere, minui, amitti, et recuperari. Prima Ioan. 2. Qui servat verbum eius, vere in hoc Charitas Dei perfecta est. Philip. 1. Hoc oro, ut Charitas Dei magis, ac magis abundet. Apoc. 2. Charitatem primam reliquisti. Memor esto itaque unde excideris: et age poenitentiam.

[5] IT IS PROVED lastly. That which distinguishes the just man from the impious not only in act but also in rest, and which those who cannot have proper acts, such as infants, must have, must be created and inhering habitually: for the first cause is related in one way to all; such is Charity according to the Councils cited, defining that it is therefore also infused into infants. Only the Council of Vienne does not define it.

PROBATUR ultimo. Id, quod distinguit iustum ab impio, non tantum in actu, sed etiam in quiete; et eos, qui nequeunt habere actus proprios, ut parvulos, debet esse creatum, et habitualiter inhaerens: nam prima causa uno modo se habet ad omnes; Talis est Charitas e Conciliis allatis, definientibus, eam ideo etiam parvulis infundi. Solum Viennense non definit.

6 IT IS PROVED also in corpore by S. Doct. If the Holy Spirit were charity, he would be unifiable, and then either by nature or by grace: not by nature, as is evident. If by grace, then again by means of something else, etc.

PROBATUR etiam in corpore a S. Doct. Si Spiritus Sanctus esset charitas, esset unibilis, et tunc vel per naturam, vel per gratiam: non per naturam, ut constat. Si per gratiam, rursum per aliud, etc.

7 IT IS PROVED there also by the argument which Valencia uses: That by which the will, as principal cause, elicits the act of love must be created; but Charity is that by which it elicits, etc. Therefore.

PROBATUR ibi etiam argumento, quo utitur Valentia Id, quo voluntas, tanquam causa principalis, elicit actum dilectionis, debet esse creatum; sed Charitas est ea, qua elicit, etc. Ergo.

8 YOU OBJECT first. No accident is better than a substance: Charity is better than the soul, for it elevates and perfects it, and nothing is better than it, from D. August. lib. 1. de moribus Ecclesiae: Therefore.

OBIICIES primo. Nullum accidens est melius substantia: Charitas est melior anima, nam eam elevat, et perficit, et nihil ea melius, ex D. August. lib. 1. de moribus Ecclesiae: Ergo.

9 S. Doct. answers that Charity is better as the medium without which the soul lacking it cannot be ordered to the supernatural end: for it is proper to accidents to perfect a substance accidentally. But those things infused by God above nature perfect it intimately, of which they are the illustrious similitude and participation. Such an accident is charity, as is said in 2 Peter, 1, as Valencia notes with D. Thomas.

RESPONDet S. Doct. Charitatem esse meliorem, ut medium, quo carens anima nequit ordinari ad finem supernaturalem: proprium est enim accidentium perficere accidentaliter substantiam. Intime vero ea perficiunt, quae super naturam a Deo infunduntur, cuius sunt praeclara similitudo, et participatio. Tale accidens est charitas, ut dicitur secunda Petri, 1. ut notat cum D. Thoma, etiam Valentia.

10 YOU OBJECT secondly. No created goodness is equivalent to beatitude; but charity is equivalent to Beatitude; for by it we merit glory: Therefore.

OBIICIES secundo. Nulla bonitas creata aequivalet beatitudini; sed charitas aequivalet Beatitudini; nam per eam meremur gloriam: Ergo.

11 S. Bonav. answers that it is equivalent by divine estimation, which deems the work of charity worthy of eternal life.

RESPONDet S. Bonav. aequivalere divina aestimatione, quae opus charitatis aestimat dignum vita aeterna.

12 YOU OBJECT thirdly. Every created good is good by participation, and therefore can fail to be good: therefore lacking order.

OBIICIES tertio. Omne bonum creatum est bonum per participationem, atque adeo potest non esse bonum: ergo carens ordine.

13 IT IS answered that the thing ordered is one thing; the order another; and this cannot fail to be good.

> RESPONDetur aliam esse rem ordinatam; aliam esse ordinem; et haec non potest, non esse bona.

14 YOU OBJECT fourthly. The Holy Spirit can inflame the affection by himself; therefore a habit is required in vain. The Antecedent is proved: for God is charity, prima Ioan. 4. Therefore prima Cor. 6. it is said: Who cleaves to God is made one spirit with him.

> OBIICIES quarto. Spiritus Sanctus seipso potest inflammare affectum; ergo frustra requiritur habitus. Probatur Antecedens. Deus enim charitas est, prima Ioan. 4. Ideo prima Cor. 6. dicitur: Qui adhaeret Deo, unus spiritus efficitur cum eo.

15 S. Doct. answers that God himself is signified there, and yet Charity is required, informed by which we may work: For we are God's helpers, prima Cor. 3. Therefore inhering charity is posited not from a defect of divine power, but so that we may cooperate with God in a connatural mode, moving through something formally determining.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. ibi significari Deum ipsum, sed tamen requiritur Charitas, qua informati operemur: Dei enim adiutores sumus prima Cor. 3. Igitur ponitur charitas inhaerens non ex defectu divinae virtutis, sed ut nos modo connaturali cooperemur Deo, moventi per aliquid formaliter determinans.

16 YOU OBJECT fifthly. A natural virtue is farther from God than the will; but God moves nature immediately: Therefore.

> OBIICIES quinto. Plus distat a Deo virtus naturalis, quam voluntas; sed Deus immediate movet naturam: Ergo.

17 S. Doct. answers that nature, because it operates uniformly and necessarily, determined to one thing, does not need a regulating habit; unlike the will, which moves non-uniformly, being indifferent. Next, the soul is moved only within the limits of nature; but the will above nature, therefore it needs an elevating habit.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. naturam, quia uniformiter necessario operatur determinata ad unum, non egere habitu regulante; sicuti voluntas, quae movet difformiter, quippe indifferens. Deinde anima movetur solum intra terminos naturae; at voluntas supra naturam, ideo eget habitu elevante.

18 YOU OBJECT sixthly. Where there is a first mover, another virtue is superfluous; but God always moves the soul: Therefore.

> OBIICIES sexto. Ubi est primus motor, superfluit alia virtus; sed Deus semper movet animam: Ergo.

19 IT IS answered that another virtue is required for operating in the connatural mode, that it may be formally perfected.

> RESPONDetur, aliam virtutem requiri ad modum connaturalem operandi, ut formaliter perficiatur.

20 YOU OBJECT seventhly. No lesser virtue is necessary for reforming than for creating; but an infinite virtue is required for creating: Therefore also for reforming: but reformation is done through charity: Therefore this is the infinite Virtue of God.

> OBIICIES septimo. Non minor virtus est necessaria ad reformandum, quam ad creandum; sed ad creandum requiritur virtus infinita: Ergo et ad reformandum: sed reformatio fit per charitatem: Ergo haec est Virtus Dei infinita.

21 S. Doct. answers that reformation is from God as efficient, but because this is an elevation to works above nature, some disposing form is required.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. recreationem esse a Deo efficiente, sed quia haec est elevatio ad opera supra naturam, requiritur aliqua forma disponens.

22 YOU OBJECT eighthly. No vanity can be united to God; every creature is vanity: Therefore it cannot unite to God; but charity unites to God: Therefore it is not a creature.

> OBIICIES octavo. Nulla vanitas potest Deo unire; omnis creatura est vanitas: Ergo non potest unire Deo; sed charitas unit Deo: Ergo non est creatura.

23 S. Doct. answers that grace, as a creature, is empty; but as it is a Divine influence it is not vanity.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. gratiam, ut creaturam, esse inanem; sed ut est influentia Divina non est vanitas.

24 YOU OBJECT ninthly. That which orders to the ordered love must be proportioned; but charity orders to loving God, who is an infinite good: Therefore infinitely: Therefore it must be something infinite.

> OBIICIES nono. Id, quod ordinat ad ordinatum amorem, debet esse proportionatum; sed charitas ordinat ad amandum Deum, qui est bonum infinitum: Ergo infinite: Ergo debet esse aliquid infinitum.

25 S. Doct. answers that Charity does not make us love God as much as he is lovable, but as much as he ought to be loved by us, so that he be esteemed above all creatures, which could be infinite in number; and for this finite supernatural Charity suffices, that it be preferred in estimation to the other goods.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. Charitatem non facere diligere Deum, quantum diligibilis est, sed quantum a nobis debet diligi, ut aestimetur super creaturas omnes, quae esse possent in infinitum, et ad hoc sufficit Charitas supernaturalis finita, ut caeteris bonis praeferatur aestimatione.

26 From what has been said you have what censure was owed to those denying that charity is a habit: for I judge with Valencia here, and Soto lib. 2. de natura, et gratia, cap. 17. et 18., Bannes quaest. 23. art. 2., that it is indeed not heresy to deny it, from the Council of Vien. loc. cit. and Innocent, cap. Maiores de Baptismo, where the denying opinion is not condemned; but only the opposite is asserted as more probable. Yet I say it is rash, and proximate to error, as Valencia notes with Gabriel dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 2.

> Ex dictis habes, quae censura debeatur negantibus, charitatem esse habitum: arbitror enim cum Valentia hic, Soto lib. 2. de natura, et gratia, cap. 17. et 18. Bannes quaest. 23. art. 2. non esse quidem haeresim negare, ex Concilio Vienn. loc. cit. et Innocentio cap. Maiores de Baptismo*, ubi sententia negans non damnatur; sed opposita tantum probabilior asseritur: Attamen dico, esse temerarium, et errori proximum, ut notat Valentia cum Gabriele* dist. 23. art. 2. quaest. 2.

27 For the Church in the Council of Trent seems to define this equivalently. And the Scriptures speak of charity as of a permanent habit: Charity never falls away, prima Corinth. 13. There remain Faith, Hope, Charity, these three: Apoc. 2. You have left your first Charity, etc. But if charity were not a habit, it would not incline so perfectly, easily, and delectably to loving God, as D. Thom. also argues with D. Bonav. ad argumenta; for potencies do not have a perfect connection to acts except through habits, which were instituted by God for eliciting acts, giving the potency a mode of facility; and if they are supernatural, they elevate the potency even to sustaining acts.

> Ecclesia enim in Concilio Trident. videtur id definire aequivalenter. Et Scriptura de charitate, ut de habitu permanente, loquuntur: Charitas nunquam excidit, prima Corinth. 13. Manent fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec: Apoc. 2. Charitatem primam reliquisti, etc. Quod si charitas non esset habitus, non inclinaretur adeo perfecte, et facile, ac delectabiliter in amandum Deum, ut arguit etiam D. Thom. cum D. Bonav. ad argumenta; nam potentiae non habent perfectam connexionem ad actus nisi per habitus, qui a Deo ad actus eliciendos instituti sunt; dando potentiae modum facilitatis, et si quidem sunt supernaturales, elevant potentiam etiam ad substentandum actus.

28 From these you will understand what the Magister opposes from prima Ioan. 3. God is charity, and he who abides in charity abides in God, and God in him. He means to say that God is the author of charity. For it is said also: our Patience, causally, and he who abides in charity, namely infused, etc. It is thus expounded by S. Doct. opusculo Reductio artium ad Theologiam; et de septem donis, de Dono intellectus, cap. 5. et de 7. Itineribus aeternitatis, dist. 6.

> Ex his intelliges id, quod opponit Magister ex prima Ioan. 3. Deus charitas est, et qui manet in charitate in Deo manet, et Deus in eo. Vult dicere, Deum esse charitatis authorem. Sic enim dicitur etiam: Patientia nostra, causaliter, et qui manet in charitate, infusa scilicet, etc. Ita exponitur a S. Doct. opusculo Reductio artium ad Theologiam; et de septem donis, de Dono intellectus, cap. 5. et de 7. Itineribus aeternitatis, dist. 6.

Question V: Whether charity is one special virtue

1 There WERE some with D. Bonau. asserting that all the Virtues are indivisibly one substance, multiplied in acts, yet in such a way that one has the acts of the others; whence Justice is prudent, and Prudence is just, Faith loves, Charity believes, and especially Charity, which, as the Apostle says, 1. Corinth. 13. is patient, is benign, and enumerates there fifteen works of virtue. They strongly lean on this opinion of D. August. from his saying de moribus Ecclesiae, where he says: Virtue is nothing but the highest love of God.

> FUERUNT aliqui apud D. Bonau. asserentes, Virtutes omnes esse indivisim unam substantiam, multiplicatas actibus, ita vero, ut una aliarum actus habeat; unde et Iustitia est prudens, et Prudentia est iusta, Fides amat, Charitas credit, et magis Charitas, quae, ut ait Apostolus 1. Corinth. 13. Patiens est, benigna est, et enumerat ibi quindecim opera virtutum. Roborate nituntur hanc opinionem D. August. effato de moribus Ecclesiae, ubi ait: Nihil esse virtutem, nisi summum amorem Dei.

2 OTHERS said that Charity, since it perfects the concupiscible power, which is diffused through all the other powers, is a general virtue, embracing the rest.

> ALII dixere, Charitatem, quippe perficientem vim concupiscibilem, quae per omnes alias diffunditur vires, esse generalem virtutem, caeteras amplectentem.

3 The TRUE opinion is that Charity is a special Virtue, distinct from the others. So S. Bonau., D. Thom., and the rest of the Theologians.

> VERA sententia est, Charitatem esse Virtutem specialem, ab aliis distinctam. Ita S. Bonau. D. Thom. et caeteri Theologi.

4 I ASSERT first that Charity is a special virtue, distinct from the others.

> ASSERO primo, Charitatem esse virtutem specialem, ab aliis distinctam.

5 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonau. first from the Apostle 1. Cor. 13. There remain Faith, Hope, Charity, these three: but the greater of these is Charity. Since therefore he calls charity one of the Theological virtues, and greater than the others; he admits that it is distinct, as Valencia also notes disp. 3. quaest. 1. p. 1.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. primo ex Apostolo 1. Cor. 13. Manent fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec: Maior autem horum est Charitas. Cum igitur charitatem unam e Theologicis, et caeteris maiorem dicat; fatetur, eam esse distinctam, ut notat etiam Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 1. p. 1.

6 IT IS PROVED secondly by S. Doct. with the reason used by D. Thom., Valencia loc. cit., Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 3., Fuliens. lib. 3. cap. 8. That is a special virtue which has a special formal object. Such is charity: Therefore. The Minor is proved, because it tends to God insofar as in himself he is the highest good of the supernatural order, which cannot be had naturally. But no other Virtue regards this formal ratio, neither a moral one, as is evident per se, nor a Theological one; for Faith and Hope, which are Theological virtues, regard God under other ratios. For Faith regards him as he is the first and highest Truth: Hope regards God as a supernatural good, and the object of our beatitude, not in any way whatever, but as arduous to attain.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. ratione, qua utitur D. Thom. Valentia loc. cit. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 3. Fuliens. lib. 3. cap. 8. Illa est specialis virtus, quae habet speciale obiectum formale. Talis est charitas: Ergo. Minor probatur, quia tendit in Deum, quatenus in se est summum bonum supernaturalis ordinis, quod non potest naturaliter haberi. Hanc autem rationem formalem nulla alia Virtus respicit, neque moralis, ut per se patet, neque Theologica; nam Fides, et Spes, quae sunt virtutes Theologicae, sub aliis rationibus Deum respiciunt. Fides enim respicit eum, ut est prima, et summa Veritas: Spes autem Deum, ut bonum supernaturale; et obiectum beatitudinis nostrae, non utcumque; sed ut est arduum ad consequendum.

7 IT IS PROVED thirdly by S. Doct. from the acts. Habits are found to differ by diverse acts; but the acts of charity are altogether diverse from the acts of the other virtues: Therefore.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. ex actibus. Habitus per actus diversi comperiuntur; sed actus charitatis sont omnino diversi ab actibus aliarum virtutum: Ergo.

8 IT IS PROVED fourthly by S. Doct. from the subject. The Theological virtues are ordered to rectifying the powers in relation to God; but charity rectifies a different power, namely the concupiscible; as Faith the rational, and Hope the irascible: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. ex subiecto. Virtutes Theologicae ordinatae sunt ad rectificandas potentias in ordine ad Deum; sed charitas diversam potentiam rectificat, nempe concupiscibilem; sicut Fides rationalem, et Spes irascibilem: Ergo.

9 IT IS PROVED fifthly by S. Doct. by comparison to its opposite. Because the vice opposed to charity, namely the hatred of God, is distinguished from all the others: Therefore by reason of a special habit of one opposed Virtue; for one thing is opposed to one.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. per comparationem ad suum oppositum. Quia vitium oppositum charitati, nempe odium Dei, distinguitur ab omnibus aliis: Ergo ratione habitus specialis unius Virtutis oppositae; nam unum uni opponitur.

10 IT IS PROVED sixthly by comparison to the reward. When some things are so related that when one is perfected the others are evacuated, those habits must differ essentially; but the habit of Charity is perfected and consummated in the fatherland; while the habit of Faith and Hope is evacuated, as is said in prima Corinth. 13. Therefore.

PROBATUR sexto per comparationem ad praemium. Quando aliqui sic se habent, ut quando unus perficitur, alii evacuentur, necesse est, illos habitus essentialiter differre; sed habitus Charitatis in patria perficitur, et consummatur; habitus vero Fidei, et Spei evacuantur, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 13. Ergo.

11 IT IS PROVED seventhly in corpore from the principle which it represents. That the image of God be in the soul expressly, it is necessary that three distinct potencies be found; and that, reformed supernaturally, they have similitude, it is necessary that they be clothed with supernatural habits toward God; but on account of the image of creation they are one essence in three potencies, representing one Divine essence in three Persons: Therefore that it may express the supernatural similitude, for which it was created Genes. 1. God created man to his Image and similitude, it is necessary that the essence be endowed with sanctifying grace, and the three potencies with Theological habits: the Intellect indeed with Faith; Memory with Hope; and the Will with Charity. See disp. 6. quaest. 10. in calce.

PROBATUR septimo in corpore ex principio, quod repraesentat. Ut imago Dei sit in anima expresse, oportet, ut tres potentiae distinctae reperiantur; et ut reformatae supernaturaliter habeant similitudinem; oportet, ut habitibus supernaturalibus in Deum vestiantur; sed ob imaginem creationis sunt una essentia in tribus potentiis, repraesentantes unam essentiam Divinam in tribus Personis: Ergo ut exprimat similitudinem supernaturalem, ad quam condita est Genes. 1. Creavit Deus hominem ad Imaginem, et similitudinem suam*, oportet, ut essentia dotetur gratia sanctificante, et tres potentiae habitibus Theologicis, Intellectus quidem Fide; Memoria Spe; et Voluntas Charitate; Vide* disp. 6. quaest. 10. in calce.

12 YOU OBJECT first, prima Corinth. 13. Charity is patient, benign, etc. Therefore it is general.

OBIICIES primo, prima Corinth. 13. Charitas patiens est, benigna, etc. Ergo est generalis.

13 S. Doct. answers that the acts of the other virtues are elicited by them; but commanded by charity, which also elicits its proper acts of loving God.

RESPONDet S. Doct. actus aliarum virtutum elici ab eis; at imperari a charitate, quae et proprios elicit actus amandi Deum.

14 YOU OBJECT secondly: Charity is that Virtue by which every thing to be loved is loved, as D. Hieronymus says.

OBIICIES secundo Virtus est charitas, qua omne diligendum diligitur, ut ait D. Hieronymus.

15 S. Doct. answers that this definition is causal, because Charity moves all the virtues to operating, and what is chief, meritoriously; for without charity nothing profits for eternal life, as is said 1. Cor. 13.

RESPONDet S. Doct. hanc definitionem esse causalem, quia Charitas movet omnes virtutes ad operandum, et quod caput est, meritorie; nam sine charitate nihil prosunt ad vitam aeternam, ut dicitur 1. Cor. 13.

16 YOU OBJECT thirdly, from D. Bernardo lib. de diligendo Deo, and D. August. lib. 15. de civit. cap. 22. Virtue is nothing other than the order of love.

OBIICIES tertio ex D. Bernardo lib. de diligendo Deo*, et D. August*. lib. 15. de civit. cap. 22. Virtus non est aliud, quam ordo amoris.

17 S. Doct. answers first that this is a causal definition; for charity is the commanding Cause, and thus even the efficient of the acts of the other virtues. It is also a form; for it gives to all their perfect being in the genus of merit. Finally it is the End of the whole law and of the precepts, and joins to the ultimate End.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. primo, hanc esse definitionem causalem; nam charitas est Causa imperans, atque adeo sic efficiens actus aliarum virtutum: Est etiam forma; nam omnibus dat esse perfectum in genere meriti. Tandem est Finis totius legis, et praeceptorum, et Fini ultimo coniungit.

18 RESPONDET: S. Doct. answers secondly that that love which is put in the definition of Virtue is the love of whatever virtue, not charity.

> RESPONDET Respondet S. Doct. secundo, amorem illum, qui ponitur in definitione Virtutis, esse amorem cuiuscumque virtutis, non charitatem.

19 You object fourthly. As the precept of charity is related to the other precepts, so the habit of charity to the other habits: but the precept of charity embraces the other precepts: Therefore also the habit of charity all the other habits.

> Obiicies quarto. Sicut se habet praeceptum charitatis ad alia praecepta; ita habitus charitatis ad alios habitus: sed praeceptum charitatis complectitur alia praecepta: Ergo et habitus charitatis omnes alios habitus.

20 S. Doct. answers that Charity comprehends the other precepts not by identity, but by a certain reduction, in that they are reduced to the root of charity, as D. Gregor. says, homil. 27. in Evang.: not that the other virtues do not fulfill the precepts in their own genus, as Temperance abstaining from fornication; but because the other virtues without charity do not execute the precepts according to the divine execution.

> Respondet S. Doct. Charitatem comprehendere non per identitatem, sed per quandam reductionem alia praecepta, quae ad radicem charitatis reducuntur, ut ait D. Gregor. homil. 27. in Evang. non quod, et aliae virtutes non adimpleant in suo genere praecepta, ut Temperantia abstinere a fornicatione; sed quia aliae virtutes sine charitate non exequuntur praecepta secundum executionem divinam.

21 You object fifthly. As the object of charity is related to the objects of the other virtues, so the acts of charity to the acts of the other virtues; but the object of charity is the good, which is the common object of all the objects of the other virtues: Therefore the habit also is common.

> Obiicies quinto. Sicut se habet obiectum charitatis ad obiecta aliarum virtutum; ita actus charitatis ad actus aliarum virtutum; sed obiectum charitatis est bonum, quod est obiectum commune omnibus obiectis aliarum virtutum: Ergo et habitus est communis.

22 S. Doct. answers that Charity does not regard the Good as it is a passion of being, but the highest good immediately; and this is its material object, by which it is distinguished from the Cardinal virtues, which regard created good: Nor does it regard a good begun in any way whatever, but under the formal motivating ratio, as I said quaest. 2.

> Respondet S. Doct. Charitatem non respicere Bonum, ut est passio entis, sed summum bonum immediate; et hoc est obiectum eius materiale, quo distinguitur a virtutibus Cardinalibus, quae bonum respiciunt creatum: Neque utcumque bonum inchoatum respicit, sed sub ratione formali motiva, ut dixi quaest. 2.

23 You object sixthly. That which is superfluous is not admitted by God and nature; but the other virtues are superfluous: Therefore. The Minor is proved; for Charity suffices for merit. Therefore D. August. says Hold charity, and do whatever you wish. It suffices also for beatitude; for to enjoy is to adhere in love, as D. August. says, lib. 1. de Doctrina christ. cap. 4. Therefore either the other virtues are superfluous; or Charity itself is General.

> Obiicies sexto. Id, quod est superfluum, non admittitur a Deo, et natura; sed aliae virtutes sunt superfluae: Ergo. Minor probatur; nam Charitas ad meritum sufficit. Ideo ait D. August. Tene charitatem, et fac quidquid vis. Sufficit etiam ad beatitudinem; nam frui, est amore inhaerere, ut ait D. August. lib. 1. de Doctrina christ. cap. 4. Ergo vel aliae virtutes superfluunt; vel Charitas ipsa est Generalis.

24 S. Doct. answers that charity is said to suffice for merit and for reward on account of the connection it has with the other virtues and dowries. For whoever has Charity has the other virtues; and whoever has the corresponding dowry has also the other dowries. Therefore it is not rightly inferred that the others are superfluous, because no one can merit unless he believes and hopes; nor is he fit for believing and hoping except through Hope and Faith.

> Respondet S. Doct. charitatem dici sufficere ad meritum, et ad praemium, propter connexionem, quam habet cum aliis virtutibus, et dotibus. Qui enim habet Charitatem, habet alias virtutes; et qui dotem correspondentem, habet etiam alias dotes. Non itaque infertur recte, superfluere alias, quia non potest aliquis mereri, nisi credat, et speret; neque est habilis ad credendum, et sperandum, nisi per Spem, et fidem.

Question VI: Whether charity is of a most special species

1 I assert that it is one ultimate in species. So the Theologians commonly hold, as at Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1. num. 19.

> An Charitas sit una specie specialissima.
> Assero, esse unam specie ultima. Ita communiter Theologi apud Tannerum disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1. num. 19.

2 It is proved first by D. Bonaventure. Just as Faith regards God as the highest truth, so Charity regards him as the highest goodness; but because the first Truth is one, Faith is one, as the Apostle says Ephes. 4. One faith: Therefore. It is confirmed by 1 Corinth. 13. And now there remain Faith, Hope, Charity, these three: where Faith and Charity are said to be one in the same way. With this argument Valencia deals in disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 1.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo. Sicut Fides respicit Deum, ut summam veritatem; ita Charitas eum respicit, ut summam bonitatem; sed quia prima Veritas est una, Fides est una, ut ait Apostolus Ephes. 4. Una fides: Ergo. Confirmatur prima Corinth. 13. Manent Fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec: ubi eodem modo una dicitur Fides, et Charitas. Hoc argumento utitur Valentia disp. 1. quaest. 1. p. 1.

3 It is proved secondly by S. Thomas. As the rational power is related to the true, and the irascible to the arduous, so the concupiscible is related to the good; but the rational power is perfected by one virtue in believing the truth, and the irascible in hoping for the arduous: Therefore also the concupiscible in loving the good; but this virtue is charity: Therefore.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. Sicut se habet rationalis ad verum, irascibilis ad arduum; ita concupiscibilis ad bonum; sed rationalis in credendo verum, una virtute perficitur; et irascibilis in sperando arduo: Ergo et concupiscibilis in amando bonum; sed haec virtus est charitas: Ergo.

4 It is proved thirdly by S. Thomas. The more unitive a thing is, the more one it is in itself; but Charity is the bond of perfection from 3. ad Coloss. Therefore.

Probatur tertio a S. Doct. Quanto aliquid est unitivum, tanto in se est unum; sed Charitas est vinculum perfectionis ex 3. ad Coloss. Ergo.

5 It is proved fourthly by S. Thomas. In every genus in which there is an order of motions, the first mover must be one; but charity is the mover of all the virtues, commanding all the others: Therefore it is altogether one in species in all.

Probatur quarto a S. Doct. In omni genere, in quo est ordo motuum, oportet, ut primus motor sit unus; sed charitas est motrix omnium virtutum, caeteris omnibus imperans: Ergo est omnino una specie in omnibus.

6 It is proved fifthly by S. Thomas in corpore. If the ultimate object is one and the principal act is one, the habit is one; but the object of charity is one as ultimate, because it is the highest good, and the act of willing that highest good is one: Therefore, although that highest good be willed — God loved for his own sake, and for itself, and for the neighbor — there will be one Virtue; and by this the opposite argument is resolved, which labors to multiply charities because Charity is borne toward God and the neighbor.

Probatur quinto a S. Doct. in corpore. Cuius unum est ultimum obiectum, et unus actus principalis, unus est habitus; sed obiectum charitatis est unum ultimum, quia est summum bonum, et unus actus volendi illud summum bonum; Ergo, licet illud summum bonum velit, Deo amato propter ipsum, et sibi, et proximo, erit una Virtus; et per hoc resolvitur argumentum oppositum, nitens multiplicare charitates, quia fertur Charitas in Deum, et proximum.

7 For S. Thomas answers, and Valencia with him, that both are loved for the sake of one thing under one formal aspect, by which the habit is unified and distinguished.

Respondet enim S. Doct. et cum eo Valentia, utrumque amari propter unum sub una ratione formali, a qua unificatur, et distinguitur habitus

8 And if you say that charity wills for the neighbor not only the highest good but also other goods.

Et si dicas, charitatem velle proximo non solum bonum summum, sed etiam alia bona.

9 S. Thomas answers that the principal act is to will the highest good; the others only secondarily; and not elicited, but imperative, commanding the other virtues, say almsgiving, that it may give succor, etc.

Respondet S. Doct. actum principalem esse velle bonum summum; caetera vero secundario; nec elicitive, sed imperative, praecipiendo aliis virtutibus, puta eleemosynae, ut subveniat, etc.

10 You will object secondly. Where there are two diverse precepts, there are several habits enabling; but there are two precepts of charity: Therefore.

Obiicies secundo. Ubi sunt duo praecepta diversa, ibi sunt plures habitus habilitantes; sed duo sunt praecepta charitatis: Ergo.

11 S. Thomas answers that those two precepts are diverse materially, not formally; because one is included in the other. Hence it does not follow that the habit of charity is diversified formally.

Respondet S. Doct. Illa duo praecepta esse diversa materialiter, non formaliter; quia unum includitur in altero. Unde non sequitur, habitum charitatis diversificari formaliter.

12 You will object thirdly. Where there are diverse acts, there are diverse habits; but the acts of loving God for himself and the neighbor for God are diverse in genus: Therefore.

Obiicies tertio. Ubi sunt diversi actus, ibi sunt diversi habitus; sed diversi genere sunt actus amandi Deum propter se, et proximum propter Deum: Ergo.

13 S. Thomas answers that that diversity comes from a diverse comparison of the same formal object, not from a diversity of object, which is one; and therefore it does not follow that the formal object is diverse.

Respondet S. Doct. illam diversitatem venire ex comparatione diversa eiusdem obiecti formalis, non ex diversitate obiecti, quod unum est; et ideo non sequitur, esse diversum obiectum formale.

14 You will object fourthly. Wisdom, which is about eternal things, is another habit than science, which is about temporal things: And likewise Latria, which is the worship of God, is another virtue than Dulia, which is the worship given to one superior: Therefore by equal reason, the virtue by which God is loved is other than that by which the neighbor is loved.

Obiicies quarto. Sapientia, quae est de aeternis, est alius habitus, quam scientia, quae est de temporalibus: Et similiter Latria, quae est cultus Dei, est alia virtus, quam Dulia, quae est cultus proximi: Ergo pari ratione, et alia est virtus, qua diligitur Deus, et proximus.

15 S. Thomas answers by denying the parity: for Wisdom deals with eternal things according to eternal reasons; Science with temporal things, with a motive diverse from wisdom, namely according to temporal reasons; but Charity has one motivating aspect, namely the Divine goodness, which, since it is supremely lovable by any will whatsoever, not only as it is in itself but as it is participated by a creature, loves it under both aspects under one formal motivating aspect. The same diversity is found between Dulia and Latria, which worship with diverse motives.

Respondet S. Doct. negando paritatem: nam Sapientia negotiatur circa aeterna secundum rationes aeternas: Scientia circa temporalia, diverso motivo a sapientia, nempe secundum rationes temporales; sed Charitas unam habet rationem motivam, nempe Divinam bonitatem, quae cum sit summe amabilis a voluntate quacumque, non solum prout est in se, sed prout participatur a creatura, utraque ratione eam amat sub una ratione formali motiva. Eadem diversitas invenitur inter Duliam, et Lattiam, quae diversis motivis colunt.

16 You will object fifthly. Just as the Contemplative and the Active life differ from each other, so the acts of the contemplative and the active life ought to differ more than the acts of the contemplative life among themselves: Likewise the habit rectifying contemplation ought to differ more from the habit rectifying action than two habits rectifying contemplation itself differ; but Faith and Charity rectify contemplation and action, and they are not diverse; as appears from 1 Corinth. 13. Therefore charity does not differ in species according as it regards God or the neighbor, but only as the motive differs, according as it bears on contemplation or action.

Obiicies quinto. Sicuti differunt vita Contemplativa, et Activa inter se; ita debent differre actus vitae contemplativae, et activae magis, quam actus contemplatinae inter se: Similiter plus debet differre habitus rectificans contemplationem, ab habitu rectificante actionem, quam duo habitus rectificantes ipsam contemplationem: Sed Charitas Dei et Fides, rectificantes contemplationem, sunt diversi; ut dicitur prima Corinth. 13. Ergo et charitas Dei, quae pertinet ad contemplationem; differt multo magis a charitate proximi, quae spectat ad actionem.

17 S. Thomas answers that "contemplative" and "active" denominate a state or the exercise of the virtues; but the diversity of state does not induce a diversity of habits, which arises rather from the diversity of objects. Hence the same virtues direct men in both lives. Thus Faith directs toward both lives. Likewise Charity; hence it is not necessary that there be several.

> Respondet S. Doct. contemplativam, et activam denominare statum, seu exercitium virtutum; diversitas autem status non inducit diversitatem habituum, quae oritur potius ex diversitate obiectorum. Unde eaedem virtutes dirigunt homines in utraque vita. Sic Fides ad utramque vitam dirigit. Similiter et Charitas; unde non est necesse, plures esse.

18 You will object sixthly. Love of friendship and love of concupiscence are objects of Charity; but these two loves are diverse in genus: Therefore.

> Obiicies sexto. Amor amicitiae, et amor concupiscentiae sunt obiecta Charitatis; sed hi duo amores sunt diversi genere: Ergo.

19 Responds S. Thomas that Charity cleaves to the Highest Good with both loves, of concupiscence and of friendship, the latter indeed being principal, as D. Augustine says de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 14. to which the other love of concupiscence is reduced; for something is loved with the love of concupiscence by him who is loved with the love of friendship. Therefore, because the formal object is one, namely God as good, to be united to whom, as D. Dionysius says cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, p. 1. according to the opinion of Hierotheus; Therefore there is one virtue in both loves, of friendship and of concupiscence.

> Respondet S. Doct. Charitatem adhaerere Summo bono, amore utroque concupiscentiae, et amicitiae, qui quidem est principalis, ut ait D. August. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 14. ad quem alter concupiscentiae reducitur; amatur enim aliquid amore concupiscentiae ei, qui est amatus amore amicitiae. Igitur quia unum est obiectum formale, nempe Deus ut bonus, cui uniatur, ut ait D. Dion. cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, p. 1. ex sententia Hierothei; Ideo una est virtus in utroque amore amicitiae, et concupiscentiae.

Question VII: Whether charity is the most excellent of the virtues

1 I assert that Charity is the most excellent of the Virtues.

> An Charitas sit virtutum praestantissima.
> Assero, Charitatem esse Virtutum excellentissimam.

2 It is proved by D. Bonaventure first in 3. dist. 23. dub. 6. from 1 Corinth. 13. where it is said: And the greater of these is Charity. He gives the reason, because it alone is the mother, giving the form of virtue to the other virtues for merit, and giving them life, as S. Ambrose says in the epistle to the Romans.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo in 3. dist. 23. dub. 6. ex prima Corinth. 13. ubi dicitur: Maior horum est Charitas. Rationem affert, quia ea sola est mater, dans formam virtutis aliis virtutibus ad meritum; dansque eis vitam, ut ait S. Ambrosius in epistola ad Romanos.

3 It is proved secondly by D. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 36. dub. 3. and in 1. dist. 17. dub. 4. and art. un. dist. 36. quaest. 6. because it is the form of the other virtues, as I shall show in the following question: It is the bond of perfection. Coloss. 3. It is the end of the law. 1 Timothy 1. Hence in Matth. 22. it is said: This is the great first commandment. For although in Rom. 13. it is said: He that loveth his neighbor hath fulfilled the law, S. Thomas answers 3. dist. 36. dub. 5. that the Love of God is contained in it, or that it is contained in the love of God, to which it is ordered.

Probatur secundo a D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 36. dub. 3. et in 1. dist. 17. dub. 4. et art. un. dist. 36. quaest. 6. quia est forma aliarum virtutum, ut ostendam quaest. sequenti: Est vinculum perfectionis. Coloss. 3. Est finis legis prima Timoth. 1. Unde Matth. 22. dicitur: Hoc est primum magnum mandatum. Quamvis enim Rom. 13. dicatur: Qui diligit proximum, legem implevit. Respondet S. Doct. 3. dist. 36. dub. 5. in eo contineri Amorem Dei, vel illum in amore Dei, ad quem ordinatur.

4 It is proved thirdly by D. Bonaventure first dist. 17. p. 1. dub. 6. for D. Augustine 15. de Trinitate, cap. 17. and serm. 35. de Tempore, and tract. 5. in 1. epist. Ioan. says that charity alone distinguishes between the children of the kingdom and the children of perdition, and that it is the precious evangelical Pearl.

Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. primo dist. 17. p. 1. dub. 6. nam D. August. 15. de Trinitate, cap. 17. et serm. 35. de Tempore, et tract. 5. in 1. epist. Ioan. ait, solam esse charitatem, quae distinguit inter Filios regni, et filios perditionis, illamque esse Margaritam pretiosam euangelicam.

5 It is proved fourthly by S. Bonaventure here, with the reason which D. Thomas also uses art. 6. That virtue is the most excellent of all which regards God under the most excellent formal aspect: Such a virtue is Charity, which regards God as good in himself, which is the most excellent aspect according to our manner of understanding: Therefore. He pursues the same argument in dist. 15. p. 1. dub. 4. and with him Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1. num. 23.

Probatur quarto a S. Bonav. hic, ratione, qua utitur etiam D. Thom. art. 6. Illa est virtus omnium praestantissima, quae respicit Deum sub praestantissima ratione formali: Talis virtus est Charitas, quae respicit Deum, ut in se bonum, quae est ratio praestantissima secundum nostrum modum intelligendi: Ergo. Idem argumentum prosequitur dist. 15. p. 1. dub. 4. et cum eo Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 1. num. 23.

6 It is proved fifthly by S. Thomas 3. dist. 34. p. 1. quaest. 3. from that text 1 Corinth. 12. Yet I show unto you a more excellent way. The Gloss indicates the reason brought forward: I show you a way of going to God, that is, Charity. He adduces the same in dist. 26. quaest. 5. adding that: The greater of these is Charity, 1 Cor. 13.

Probatur quinto a S. Doct. 3. dist. 34. p. 1. quaest. 3. ex illo prima Corinth. 12. Adhuc excellentiorem viam vobis demonstro. Glossa indicat rationem allatam: Demonstro vobis viam eundi ad Deum, idest Charitatem. Idem adducit dist. 26. quaest. 5. addens illud: Maior horum est Charitas, prima Cor. 13.

7 S. Thomas runs through the excellence of Charity with brilliance in the Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. and proves it from that text 1. Cor. 13. And now there remain faith, hope, charity, these three: but the greater of these is charity. Apoc. 3. I counsel thee to buy gold tried in the fire; for charity is among the virtues as gold is among the metals. See, I beseech you, S. Thomas, who shows it compared in the Scriptures with many noble things. See also the Pharetra, lib. 2. cap. 25. where he gathers many most excellent things from the Fathers. Read the same in lib. 5. Compendii Theologiae from cap. 23. to 27. which is an Encomium of Charity. And in the de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, the fourth Journey.

Praeclare Charitatis praestantiam discurrit S. Doct. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. eamque probat illo 1. Cor. 13. Manent fides, Spes, Charitas, tria haec: Maior autem horum est Charitas. Apoc. 3. Suadeo tibi emere aurum ignitum; est enim charitas inter virtutes, sicut aurum inter metalla. Vide obsecro S. Doct. qui multis praeclaris eam comparatam in Scripturis ostendit. Vide etiam in Pharetra, lib. 2. cap. 25. ubi plurima e Patribus congerit eximia. Eundem lege lib. 5. Compendii Theologiae a cap. 23. usque ad 27. quod est Encomium Charitatis. Et de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere quarto.

[8] Observe, that it is called the wedding garment, of which Matth. 22. speaks, and he who lacked it was cast out, as D. Bonaventure saw in the Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. after the middle; for so it is expounded by the Fathers, as Valencia also notes disp. 31. quaest. 1. p. 3. So D. Gregory homil. 18. in Evangelia. Indeed Christ, who is the bridegroom, has it; but he has not faith, which the Sectarians wrongly understand by that wedding garment.

> Observa, illam vocari vestem nuptialem, de qua Matth. 22. qua qui caruit, eiectus est, ut vidit D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. post medium; sic enim exponitur a Patribus, ut advertit etiam Valentia disp. 31. quaest. 1. p. 3. Sic D. Gregorius homil. 18. in Evangelia. Sane Christus, qui est sponsus, eam habet; non habet autem fidem, quam intelligunt perperam Sectarii per vestem illam nuptialem.

[9] You will object first. Scripture ascribes to faith the power of justifying, as is seen in the Apostle to the Romans and Galatians, and it is called the foundation of the spiritual edifice. Hebr. 11. Charity is its cause.

> Obiicies primo. Scriptura adscribit fidei vim iustificandi, ut videre est in Apostolo ad Rom. et Galat. et vocatur fundamentum aedificii spiritualis. Hebr. 11. est causa charitatis.

[10] S. Thomas answers dist. 31. quaest. 1. ad 1. and dist. 23. passim, that faith is called the foundation of the rude edifice, which rises and is erected through Hope, and is made firm in Charity. Moreover, justification is ascribed to faith as a disposition for grace, and form to charity, as I shall show in dist. 36. quaest. 6.

> Respondet S. Doct. dist. 31. quaest. 1. ad 1. et dist. 23. passim, fidem vocari fundamentum rude aedificii, quod per Spem consurgit, et erigitur, et in Charitate firmatur. Fidei porro adscribitur iustificatio, tanquam dispositioni ad gratiam, et charitatem, quae est forma, ut ostendit dist. 36. quaest. 6.

Question VIII: Whether charity is the form of the virtues

[1] The Sectarians laugh foolishly, hearing this title asserted by the Catholics.

> An Charitas sit Forma Virtutum.
> Rident Sectarii stulte, audientes hunc titulum, a Catholicis assertum.

[2] Nevertheless it must be observed with caution, with D. Bonaventure, in what sense Charity can be called the form of the Virtues, as I said also in disp. 1. quaest. 19. where I treated this question more fully.

> Oportet tamen eum D. Bonav. caute observare, quo sensu Charitas dici queat forma Virtutum, ut dixi etiam disp. 1. quaest. 19. ubi hanc quaestionem latius tractavi.

[3] ¶ For the Virtues can be considered in three ways. First in order to the object, and in this sense, since they are specified or known by it, they must be formed by it, not by another extrinsic habit. Secondly they can be compared in order to the subject in which they are. Thus, although they are informing forms, they can nevertheless be perfected and actualized in order to God, inasmuch as, with Grace and Charity supervening, they are living and efficacious for meritorious works. Thirdly they are compared to the end; thus they are disposing forms, yet they are perfected and directed by charity, which is the directing weight. For the end, as end, is a good, which is the object of charity; and so, as regards this tendency, the remaining virtues are directed and completed in order to the end.

¶ Tripliciter enim possunt Virtutes considerari. Primo in ordine ad obiectum, et hoc sensu cum ab eo specificentur, vel cognoscantur, oportet ab eo formari, non ab alio habitu extrinseco. Secundo comparari possunt in ordine ad subiectum, in quo sunt. Sic, licet sint formae informantes, tamen perfici, et actuari valent in ordine ad Deum, quatenus Gratia adveniente, et Charitate, vividae, et efficaces sunt ad meritoria opera. Tertio comparantur ad finem, ita sunt formae disponentes, tamen perficiuntur, et diriguntur charitate, quae est pondus dirigens. Finis enim, ut finis, est bonum, quod est obiectum charitatis; et ita quoad hanc tendentiam, reliquae virtutes diriguntur, et complentur in ordine ad finem.

4 I assert therefore, in the last two senses, that Charity is the form of the Virtues.

Assero igitur, in ultimis duobus sensibus, Charitatem esse formam Virtutum.

5 It is proved by D. Bonaventure first, from that text to the Galatians 5. where the first fruit of the Holy Spirit is said to be Charity, as the life, according to 1 John 3. He that loveth not, abideth in death. And chapter 4. He that abideth in charity, abideth in God. And James 2. As the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead. Where the Apostle speaks of the works of Charity, according to that text Galat. 5. Faith, which worketh by charity. Hence D. Augustine, in the book on the knowledge of the true life, cap. 28. says: Faith is animated by love, as the body is vivified by the soul. And Dionysius, cap. 2. de Eccl. Hierarch. says: Charity most fittingly gives form to the habits of our soul. And D. Bernard, serm. 2. de resurrect.: Faith (he says) is animated by love, and charity is the life of faith.

Probatur a D. Bonav. primo, ex illo ad Galat. 5. ubi primus fructus Spiritus Sancti dicitur Charitas, tanquam vita, iuxta Id prima Ioan. 3. Qui non diligit, manet in morte. Et cap. 4. Qui manet in charitate, in Deo manet. Et Iacobi 2. Sicut corpus sine anima mortuum est, ita fides sine operibus mortua est. Ubi Apostolus loquitur de operibus Charitatis, iuxta id Galat. 5. Fides, quae per dilectionem operatur. Unde D. August. lib. de cognitione verae vitae, cap. 28. ait: Fides dilectione animatur, sicut corpus anima vivificatur. Et Dion. cap. 2. de Eccl. Hierarch. ait: Charitatem aptissime formare habitus animae nostrae. Et D. Bernardus, serm. 2. de resurrect. Fidem (ait) dilectione animari, et charitatem esse vitam fidei.

6 It is proved thirdly by D. Bonaventure. That which rectifies the principle of works also actualizes and perfects the works; but charity rectifies the affection, which is the principle of the works of the other virtues, which depend on it: Therefore it also perfects and informs.

Probatur tertio a D. Bonavent. Id, quod rectificat principium operum, actuat, et perficit etiam opera, sed charitas rectificat affectum, qui est principium operum aliarum virtutum, quae ab eo dependent: Ergo et perficit, et informat.

7 It is proved fourthly. In moral matters the complement and the species are considered in order to the end; but the love of the highest good is that which makes the others tend toward their due end: Therefore the love of the highest good gives form and complement to all the gratuitous habits and to their works; but that love is Charity: Therefore. The same holds in Fulgentius, lib. 3. cap. 8. Basil, see Charitas, num. 3.

Probatur quarto. In moralibus complementum, et species attenditur in ordine ad finem; sed amor summi boni est illud, quod facit caetera in finem debitum tendere: Ergo amor summi boni dat omnibus habitibus gratuitis, et eorum operibus formam, et complementum; sed ille amor est Charitas: Ergo. Id viget Fulgent. lib. 3. cap. 8. Basilius v. Charitas, num. 3.

8 Hence it remains explicit by what reason Charity is the form of the Virtues; for it does not accomplish this by informing intrinsically, but by producing its own acts and commanding the others with the due ordination to the supernatural end, to which the studious life is ordered; the acts of the other virtues are rendered in the genus of completed operation when they are rightly ordered to the end of eternal life. So D. Thomas also holds, 2. 2. quaest. 4. art. 3. ad 2. and quaest. 23. art. 8. ad 2.

> Hinc manet explicitum, qua ratione Charitas sit forma Virtutum; non enim id praestat intrinsece informando, sed efficiendo suos actus, et alios imperando cum debita ordinatione ad finem supernaturalem, ad quem vita studiosa ordinata est; Redduntur actus aliarum virtutum in genere operationis completi, cum ad finem vitae aeternae recte ordinati sint. Ita sentit etiam D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 4. art. 3. ad 2. et quaest. 23. art. 8. ad 2.

9 ¶ But it does not inform intrinsically, because it is not joined intrinsically to the other virtues or to their acts, as a part; as Capreolus notes, disp. 1. sect. 5. num. 35. with D. Bonaventure in corpore, where he explains it outstandingly.

> ¶ Non autem informat intrinsece, quia non unitur aliis virtutibus, aut actibus earum intrinsece, ut pars; ut advertit Capensis disp. 1. sect. 5. num. 35. cum D. Bonav. in corpore, ubi egregie id explicat.

10 Therefore charity is called the form of the remaining virtues, either because it gives to their acts a certain moral dignity and meritorious being; or inasmuch as it refers them to the highest end they can have, that is, to God, inasmuch as he is good in himself. Thus S. Thomas explains it, also with respect to the arguments which are solved by this distinction: that Charity is not the intrinsic form constituting the Virtues in essential being; but only in right operation toward merit, as the end of eternal life; and accordingly they are not informed intrinsically, since all have their form in order to the objects, but only in order to the operations. From which it follows that faith and the other virtues without charity are still virtues, as I showed concerning faith in disp. 1. quaest. 21.

> Igitur charitas dicitur forma reliquarum virtutum, vel quia earum actibus tribuit quandam moralem dignitatem, et esse meritorium; vel quatenus illas ad altissimum finem, quem habere possunt, hoc est ad Deum, quatenus est bonus in se, eas refert. Sic explicat S. Doct. etiam ad argumenta, quae solvuntur hac distinctione, Charitatem non esse formam intrinsecam constituentem Virtutes in esse essentiali; sed solum in recta operatione ad meritum, ut finem vitae aeternae; Atque adeo non informantur intrinsece, cum suam formam omnes habeant in ordine ad obiecta, sed solum in ordine ad operationes. Ex quo fit, ut fides, et aliae virtutes sine charitate, sint adhuc virtutes, ut ostendi de fide disp. 1. quaest. 21.

11 Here the Doctors dispute: Whether Charity is distinct from the grace of God. This I have sufficiently done in the prima secundae, Tract. de Gratia, disp. 2. quaest. 3. But S. Thomas inquires into it under a certain Title, dist. 27. quaest. 3. Whether the Habit of Charity is merely gratuitous. Here indeed an opening is given to another controversial question, which is treated under another title, namely:

> Hic disputant Doctores: An Charitas sit distincta a gratia Dei. Hoc satis egi prima secundae, Tract. de Gratia, disp. 2. quaest. 3. Id vero quaerit S. Doct. sub quodam Titulo dist. 27. quaest. 3. An Habitus Charitatis sit mere gratuitus. Hic vero ansam aperit alteri quaestioni controversae, quae sub alio titulo fertur, nempe.

Question IX: Whether besides infused charity there is another charity, acquired by our own acts

1 Many questions are enclosed in this one. The first is: Whether besides the acts of supernatural charity there are given acts of natural charity. Next, whether, if such acts are given, a habit of natural charity is generated from them. The other question: Whether besides the infused habit a natural habit is acquired from supernatural acts, a new habit of charity.

> An praeter Charitatem infusam detur alia charitas, nostris actibus acquisita.

Multae in hac quaestiones clauduntur. Prima est: An praeter charitatis supernaturalis actus, dentur actus charitatis naturalis. Deinde an, si dantur tales actus, generetur ex eis habitus charitatis naturalis. Altera vero quaestio: An praeter habitum infusum naturalem acquiratur ex actibus supernaturalibus novus habitus charitatis.

2 As to the first question: whether there is given a natural love of God as the author of nature, distinct from the supernatural, there was a variety of opinions.

Quoad primam quaestionem: an detur amor naturalis in Deum, ut authorem naturae, distinctus a supernaturali, fuit opinionum varietas.

3 The negative opinion is defended by Vasquez in the prima secundae, 1. 2. disp. 195. adducing others from the school of D. Thomas, especially Bannez 2. 2. quaest. 23. art. 1. Likewise Alvarez 2. p. quaest. 30. memb. 1. art. 2. §. 2. ad 1. Albert 2. p. tract. 4. quaest. 14. memb. 4. art. 2. Scotus in 3. dist. 27. quaest. 1. but wrongly, as Tannerus notes, disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 2. num. 37. And indeed Vasquez himself recognized that this was a novelty.

Negativam sententiam tuetur Vasquez prima secundae, 1. 2. disp. 195. alios adducens e schola D. Thomae, praecipue Bannem 2. 2. quaest. 23. art. 1. Similiter Alensem 2. p. quaest. 30. memb. 1. art. 2. §. 2. ad 1. Albertum 2. p. tract. 4. quaest. 14. memb. 4. art. 2. Scotum in 3. dist. 27. quaest. 1. sed perperam, ut notat Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 2. num. 37. Et sane ipse Vasquez cognovit, hanc esse novitatem.

4 The true opinion therefore is, that a twofold love of God is given, certainly of friendship; one, God being the natural end; the other, the end being supernatural. So D. Bonaventure in 2. dist. 3. p. 2. art. 3. quaest. 1. in corpore, and ad 3. which he referred to this. And in the prima secundae, tract. de Gratia, disp. 7. quaest. 11. §. Nota secundo. The same thought Alvarez 2. p. quaest. 131. membr. 3. and quaest. 91. membr. 1. ad 7. Alexander of Hales lib. 2. summae, tract. 1. cap. 4. Richard 2. dist. 3. art. 7. and dist. 28. art. 1. quaest. 1. Astim. in 2. dist. 39. quaest. 1. art. 2. Abul. in cap. 19. Matth. quaest. 177. Soto lib. 1. de natura, et gratia, cap. 22. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 2.

Vera igitur sententia est, dari duplicem amorem Dei, utique amicitiae; alterum, ut finis naturalis; alterum ut finis est supernaturalis. Ita D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 3. p. 2. art. 3. quaest. 1. in corpore, et ad 3. quem retulit ad hoc. Et prima secundae, tract. de Gratia, disp. 7. quaest. 11. §. Nota secundo. Idem sensere Alensis 2. p. quaest. 131. membr. 3. et quaest. 91. membr. 1. ad 7. Altisiodor. lib. 2. summae, tract. 1. cap. 4. Richard. 2. dist. 3. art. 7. et dist. 28. art. 1. quaest. 1. 5 The same S. Thomas taught most clearly in p. 1. quaest. 60. art. 5. and in the prima secundae, quaest. 109. art. 3. ad 1.

Idem praeclare docuit S. Thomas p. 1. quaest. 60. art. 5. et prima secundae, quaest. 109. art. 3. ad 1.

6 And indeed that it is given is defined by Pius V. and Gregory XIII., condemning proposition 34. of Michael Baius, who denied this division.

Et sane id dari, definiunt Pius V. et Gregorius XIII. damnantes propositionem 34. Michaelis Baii, qui hanc divisionem negabat.

7 It is proved also by the reason brought forward in the prima secundae, in the place cited, because God can be known under both aspects, and precisely as the author of nature, as the Philosophers acknowledged him: and as the author of grace and glory, as faith teaches: Therefore the will, under these distinct aspects, can pursue him with love, namely of friendship, since the end is twofold, and a good, and therefore to be loved, as S. Thomas argues ad 3.

> Probatur etiam ratione allata prima secundae, loco adducto, quia Deus potest cognosci utraque ratione, et ut author naturae praecise, sicut agnovere ipsum Philosophi: et ut author gratiae, et gloriae, ut fides docet: Ergo voluntas sub his rationibus distinctis potest eum amore prosequi, nempe amicitiae, ut est duplex finis, et bonus, atque adeo amandus, ut arguit S. Doct. ad 3.

8 Vasquez answers, cap. 4. that the goodness of God is indeed known by natural reason; but that it is not shown here that he is to be loved with the love of friendship, since not even among the gentiles is any trace of such love found; indeed Aristotle denied friendship between God and men.

> Respondet Vasquez cap. 4. ratione quidem naturali cognosci bonitatem Dei; at vero non hic ostendi amandum amore amicitiae, cum neque inter gentiles aliquod talis amoris vestigium inveniatur; quin Aristoteles amicitiam inter Deum, et homines negavit.

9 But Aristotle in 8. and 9. Eth. conceded from this chapter true friendship between God and men, inasmuch as God is loved as an end; although from another chapter he may assert it is not entirely complete, since it is a total sharing in goods; and indeed you will find no philosopher denying that God is loved for himself as a natural end, as Tanner noted, num. 42.

> At Aristoteles 8. et 9. Eth. ex hoc capite concessit veram amicitiam inter Deum, et homines, quatenus amatur Deus ut finis; esto ex alio capite non omnino completam astruat, cum sit totalis communicatio in bonis; et sane nullum invenies philosophum negantem, amari Deum propter se, ut finem naturalem, ut notavit Tanner. num. 42.

10 You will object first, that this twofold love is not found in Scripture or the Fathers, as is seen in D. Augustine on Ps. 53. I will sacrifice to thee willingly, and epist. 113. and in Bernard in the book on loving God.

> Obiicies primo, non inveniri in Scriptura, vel Patribus hunc duplicem amorem, ut videre est in D. August. in id Psal. 53. Voluntarie sacrificabo tibi*, et epist. 113. ac Bernardo lib. de diligendo Deo.*

11 It is answered, that a twofold love is found in exercise; for the Scriptures and the Fathers preach that God is to be loved from diverse motives and from a twofold principle, whether from the benefits of nature or from the gifts of grace: For thus also they propose a twofold faith to the objection, as Tanner noted, num. 47.

> Respondetur*, haberi duplicem amorem in exercitio; nam ex diversis motivis, duplicique ex capite diligendum Deum praedicant Scripturae, et Patres, sive ex beneficiis naturae, sive ex donis gratiae: Sic enim etiam duplicem obiectioni fidem proponunt, ut notavit Tanner num. 47.*

12 You will object secondly. That love could be had without grace, and yet the love of God as friendship is repugnant to mortal sin.

> Obiicies secundo. Amor ille haberi posset sine gratia, cum tamen amor Dei amicitiae repugnet peccato lethali.

13 It is answered, that this is not inconvenient; nor does every love of friendship conflict with sin, but only the supernatural one.

> Respondetur, hoc non esse inconveniens; Neque omnis amor amicitiae repugnat peccato, sed supernaturalis.

14 Whether, however, from this a natural habit of the love of God is produced; Cajetan denies it, prima secundae, quaest. 62. art. 3. and quaest. 109. art. 3. and Valencia here p. 1. §. 4.

> An vero hinc producatur habitus naturalis amoris Dei; Negant Caietanus prima secundae, quaest. 62. art. 3. et quaest. 109. art. 3. Valentia hic p. 1. §. 4.

15 But more correctly Aragon affirms it: 2. 2. quaest. 25. art. 1. ad ult. Tanner disp. 2 q. 2. dub. 2. n. 52. where he says it is the common opinion. Otherwise the foundation for finding acquired habits would vanish for us; and as to this, Meldula argues well, 3. disp. 6. quaest. 23. num. 589. since we find by clear experience that such habits are acquired. But those err, as I shall soon prove, who will that they are acquired by acts.

> Rectius tamen affirmant Aragon: 2. 2. quaest. 25. art. 1. ad ult. Tanner. disp. 2 q. 2. dub. 2. n. 52. ubi ait, esse communem sententiam. Alioqui evanesceret nobis fundamentum inveniendi acquisitos habitus, et quoad hoc, bene arguit Meldula 3. disp. 6. quaest. 23. num. 589. cum liquido experimento inveniamus, sic habitus acquiri. Fallunt vero, ut mox probabo, volens, eos acquiri actibus.

16 It can moreover be inquired, with Tanner, num. 64. Whether the habit and acts of charity, granted above, always differ in the formal object.

> Potest autem inquiri cum Tannero num. 64. An habitus, et actus charitatis, concessi supra, differant semper in obiecto formali.

17 I assert that natural and supernatural acts can indeed have the same material object, but the adequate formal object must always be distinct. So D. Bonaventure and the others cited above, as Tannerus notes, to whom Curielem adds, p. 1. quaest. 109. art. 3. For acts are specified by the object, or are known as specified by it: But the acts of natural friendship have as object the goodness of God as it is the end of nature; but the acts of supernatural charity have as object the goodness of God inasmuch as it is a supernatural end. It is confirmed; for acts bear an intrinsic order to the formal object. What is objected on this will easily collapse.

> Assero, posse quidem actus naturales, et supernaturales habere idem obiectum materiale, attamen semper formale adaequatum esse distinctum. Ita D. Bonavent. et alii supra allegati, ut notat Tannerus, quibus addit Curielem p. 1. quaest. 109. art. 3. Nam actus specificantur ab obiecto, vel ab eo specificati agnoscuntur: At vero actus amicitiae naturalis habent pro obiecto bonitatem Dei, ut est finis naturae, Actus vero charitatis supernaturalis habent obiectum bonitatem Dei, quatenus est finis supernaturalis. Confirmatur; nam actus dunt intrinsecam ordinem ad formale obiectum. Ea, quae obiiciuntur, hinc facile ruent.

18 As to the other question: Whether from supernatural acts a new habit of charity is acquired, distinct from the infused one; or whether that habit is perfected by those acts, with new degrees added: And indeed I shall inquire into the latter in quaest. 11.

> Quoad alteram quaestionem: An actibus supernaturalibus acquiratur novus habitus charitatis, distinctus ab infuso: An vero ille per eos actus perficiatur, additis novis gradibus: Et quidem hoc secundum inquiram quaest. 11.

19 As to the former part, some hold that from the acts of Faith, Hope, and Charity new habits are generated, which are not Theological virtues, since they are not infused by God; yet they are Theological, because they are concerned immediately with God. So the Nominalists, and Scotus in 3.

dist. 23. and 26. whom his disciples follow, Arretinus disp. 27. art. 6. Poncius disp. 26. quaest. 2. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 23. and other Scotists.

> Quoad priorem partem censent aliqui, ex actibus Fidei, Spei, et Charitatis generari novos habitus, qui non sunt virtutes Theologicae, cum non sint a Deo infusi; esse tamen Theologicos, quia circa Deum immediate versantur. Ita Nominales, et Scotus in 3. dist. 23. et 26. quem sequuntur discipuli, Arretinus disp. 27. art. 6. Poncius disp. 26. quaest. 2. Mastrius disp. 6. quaest. 23. et alii Scotistae.

20 The same think Aversa quaest. 55. sect. 7. Coninch. lib. 1. de virtutibus, disp. 7. dub. 3. Oviedo 1. 2. tract. 3. controv. 2. p. 4.

> Idem sentiunt Aversa quaest. 55. sect. 7. Coninch. lib. 1. de virtutibus, disp. 7. dub. 3. Oviedo 1. 2. tract. 3. controv. 2. p. 4.

21 The second opinion denies that an acquired Charity is given. So D. Thomas 1. 2. quaest. 51. art. 4. ad 3. and the Thomists. This seems to be the opinion of D. Bonaventure 3. dist. 27. quaest. 3. in corpore, and in the de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, Itinere 4. cap. 3. at the end, where he always persists, that from the acts of the supernatural habit of charity one indeed advances in the perfection of the same habit, but no new one is produced; but that habits produced anew are from natural acts.

> Secunda sententia negat, dari Charitatem acquisitam. Ita D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 51. art. 4. ad 3. et Thomistae. Haec videtur sententia D. Bonav. 3. dist. 27. quaest. 3. in corpore, et de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, Itinere 4. cap. 3. ad finem, ubi semper persistit, ex actibus habitus supernaturalis charitatis proficere quidem in perfectione eiusdem habitus, non tamen novum produci; sed habitus de novo productos esse ex naturalitate.

22 The same think Vasquez p. 2. disp. 79. cap. 10. Caspens. de charitate, dist. 2. sect. 2. and commonly, as Tanner relates, disp. 2. quaest. 2. dubio 4.

> Idem sentiunt Vasquez p. 2. disp. 79. cap. 10. Caspens. de charitate, dist. 2. sect. 2. et communiter, ut refert Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 2. dubio 4.

23 I assert with this opinion, that no acquired habit of Charity is given.

> Assero cum hac sententia, non dari habitum Charitatis acquisitum.

24 It is proved. Either that habit, acquired from the acts of the infused habit, would be of the same species as the infused habit, or of a diverse one. Not the first, because an infused habit is such that it cannot be made by nature: Nor the second, because a habit is made from acts of the same species.

> Probatur. Vel is habitus, acquisitus ex actibus infusi habitus, esset eiusdem speciei cum habitu infuso, vel diversae. Non primum, quia habitus infusus talis est, ut per naturam fieri non possit: Neque secundum, quia habitus fit ex actibus eiusdem speciei.

25 I urge: Either this habit, acquired from the acts of the infused virtue, would be natural, or supernatural; not the first, because it would not be of the same species as the acts from which it is obtained; but a natural habit is of the same species as the acts from which it is generated. Nor the second, because otherwise it would not be made from our acts.

> Urgeo: Vel hic habitus, acquisitus ex actibus virtutis infusae, esset naturalis, vel supernaturalis; non primum, quia non esset eiusdem speciei, cuius sunt actus, e quibus comparatur; habitus autem naturalis est eiusdem speciei cum actibus, ex quibus generatur. Neque secundum, quia alioqui ex actibus nostris non fieret.

26 Mastrius answers, that it would be a natural habit, because the acts of these virtues are supernatural only as regards the manner, not the substance.

> Respondet Mastrius, fore habitum naturalem, quia actus harum virtutum sunt supernaturales tantum, quoad modum, non quoad substantiam.

27 But this answer was refuted in disp. 1. quaest. 27.

> Sed haec responsio revulsa est disp. 1. quaest. 27.

28 You will object, because a Catholic, accustomed to elicit acts of faith and charity, acquires facility in believing; but this does not come from the infused habit, because it would produce the same effect in a Neophyte. Next it is proved, because a heretic, after the supernatural habit is lost, retains the same facility regarding those things which he still believes: Therefore from a habit acquired by supernatural acts. The same argument holds for Hope and Charity; for the same heretic experiences himself prompt to love and to hope.

> Obiicies, quia Catholicus, assuetus elicere actus fidei, et charitatis, acquirit facilitatem credendi; sed haec non provenit ex habitu infuso, quia eundem effectum produceret in Neophyto. Deinde probatur, quia haereticus, post amissum habitum supernaturalem, retinet eandem facilitatem circa illa, quae adhuc credit: Ergo ex habitu acquisito per actus supernaturales. Idem argumentum viget de Spe, et Charitate; nam idem haereticus se promptum experitur ad amandum, et sperandum.

29 S. Thomas answers, dist. 27. cit. from D. Augustine in the book de spiritu, et anima, near the beginning, that by the acts of the infused virtue the infused habit is perfected and increased by God, but no new one is acquired. So the other Thomists also answer. And indeed, as it has its origin from God, so it is increased by God, as D. Bonaventure teaches, 1. dist. 17. p. 2. quaest. 2. Therefore by supernatural acts the increase of charity is measured out to man, as D. Augustine teaches, epist. 106. cited by S. Bonaventure, fundamentum 1. and I shall show in quaest. 11. That something of facility remains in the heretic; it is answered that this is done through the acts of the natural order, which are usually elicited together with the supernatural ones.

> Respondet S. Doct. dist. 27. cit. ex D. August. in lib. de spiritu, et anima, circa principium per actus virtutis infusae perfici, et augeri a Deo habitum infusum, non vero novum acquiri. Sic respondent etiam alii Thomistae. Ita vero ut sicut a Deo habet ortum; ita a Deo augeatur, ut docet D. Bonavent. 1. dist. 17. p. 2. quaest. 2. Itaque actibus supernaturalibus metetur homo augmentum charitatis, ut docet D. August. epist. 106. apud S. Bonavent. fundamento 1. et ostendam quaest. 11. Quod vero maneat aliquid facilitatis in haeretico; Respondetur id fieri per actus ordinis naturalis, qui simul elici solent cum supernaturalibus.

Question X: Whether charity can be formless

1 I assert that Charity is never formless.

> An Charitas possit esse informis.
> Assero, Charitatem nunquam esse informem.

2 It is proved by St. Bonaventure. A virtue which makes a man beloved of God, and just and perfect, is always formed: such is Charity: Therefore. The minor is proved from John 14: He that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father. Colossians 3: Above all these things have charity, which is the bond of perfection. First Corinthians 13, where the perfections of charity are described, and without it the remaining virtues are counted as nothing, as if without form. Therefore the form of the virtues cannot be formless: Charity is the form of the virtues, from what was said in question 8. Therefore.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. Virtus; quae dilectum facit Deo, et iustum, ac perfectum, semper est formata: Talis est Charitas: Ergo. Minor probatur Ioan. 14. Qui diligit me, diligetur a Patre meo. Coloss. 3. Super omnia haec charitatem habete, quod est vinculum perfectionis. Prima Cor. 13. ubi perfectiones charitatis describuntur, et sine ea reliquae virtutes nihili pendentur, tanquam sine forma. Igitur forma virtutum non potest esse informis: Charitas est forma virtutum ex dictis quaest. 8. Ergo.

3 It is proved secondly. That virtue by which a man is perfectly converted to God, loving Him above all things and keeping His law, cannot be formless: such is charity, which is the end of the Law, First to Timothy 1, the bond of perfection, Colossians 3. The same is said in Matthew 22 and Luke 10: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, etc. And thy neighbor as thyself: on these two commandments dependeth the whole law; this do, and thou shalt live.

> Probatur secundo. Ea virtus, qua perfecte conversus homo in Deum, illum diligit super omnia, observando eius legem, non potest esse informis: Talis est charitas, quae est finis Legis*, prima ad Timot. 1.* Vinculum perfectionis*, Coloss. 3. Idem Matth. 22. et Lucae 10. dicitur:* Diliges Dominum Deum tuum, etc. Et proximum, sicut te ipsum: hoc fac, et vives.

4 It is proved thirdly from the Saintly Doctor. That virtue which is opposed to every mortal sin is always formed; such is Charity: Therefore. The major is evident. The minor is proved first from St. Augustine, de libero arbitrio, cap. 3, where it is said that every sin arises from concupiscence. Then it is proved from the Saintly Doctor, from St. Augustine, 14 de civitate Dei, cap. 18, where he says: that every affection arises from love, and the city of the devil is built up from disordered love; but the city of God from right love.

> Probatur tertio a S. Doct. Virtus illa, quae omni peccato opponitur lethali, semper est formata; talis est Charitas: Ergo. Maior est evidens. Minor probatur primo ex D. August. de lib. arbitr. cap. 3. ubi dicitur, omne peccatum esse ex libidine. Deinde probatur a S. Doct. ex D. August. 14. de civit. cap. 18. ubi ait: Quod omnis affectio oritur ex amore, et civitas diaboli ex amore inordinato aedificatur; civitas autem Dei ex recto amore.

5 That which he objects to himself, the Saintly Doctor easily resolves from the doctrine brought forward, drawn from the nature of charity, which either is sanctifying grace; or, if distinct, as is more certain, it always stands together with it, and accordingly, although there can be Fear, Faith, Hope, and the other virtues, it does not therefore follow that there can be Charity, which is the form and perfection of the virtues. Wherefore it implies a contradiction to have charity and to be impious.

> Ea vero, quae sibi obiicit, S. Doct. facile solvit ex doctrina allata, sumpta ex natura charitatis, quae vel est gratia sanctificans; vel si distincta, ut certius est, cum ea semper stat, atque adeo, licet possint esse Timor, Fides, Spes, et aliae virtutes; non ideo potest esse et Charitas, quae est forma, et perfectio virtutum. Quare implicat, habere charitatem, et esse impium.

6 From all these questions we have that Charity is supernaturally infused, and cannot be had by the powers of nature. For so it is said in Romans 5: The charity of God is poured forth in our hearts; or infused, as Cyprian signifies in libro de exhortatione ad Martyrium, cap. 9, and as the Council of Trent understands and defines, session 6, cap. 9, and in other places above.

> Ex his omnibus quaestionibus habemus, Charitatem esse supernaturaliter infusam, neque viribus naturae haberi posse. Sic enim Rom. 5. dicitur : Charitas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris : vel infusa*, ut significat Cyprianus* lib. de exhortatione ad Martyrium, cap. 9. et intelligit, ac definit Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 9. et aliis locis supra.

7 The REASON of St. Bonaventure is formed from all the questions brought forward, especially from this one, thus: That virtue which infallibly raises to a supernatural end, and to supernatural friendship with God, is an infused supernatural virtue, or entity; such is Charity, from what has been said: Therefore. That it is from God as efficient cause, the Scriptures testify, Romans 5, 2 Timothy 1, First John 3 and 4.

RATIO D. Bonavent. ex omnibus allatis qq. praecipue ex ista, sic formatur : Illa virtus, quae infallibiliter elevat ad finem supernaturalem, et ad Dei amicitiam supernaturalem, est virtus, seu entitas supernaturalis infusa; Talis est Charitas, ex dictis : Ergo. Eam vero esse a Deo efficiente testantur Scripturae Rom. 5. 2. Timot. 1. Prima Ioan. 3. et 4.

Question XI: Whether charity increases, and how

1 IOVINIANUS established by this heresy that there is no augmentation of charity, but that all are equal in merits and all in reward; which error I refuted in prima parte, Tract. 1. disput. 11, and prima secunda, Tract. de Gratia, disput. 4. Thus also I expelled, as infected, the Sectarians.

IOVINIANUS haeresi hac statuit, nullum esse augmentum charitatis, sed omnes meritis, omnesque praemio esse aequales, cuius errorem repuli prima parte Tract. 1. disput. 11. et prima secunda, Tract. de Gratia, disput. 4. Sic etiam Sectarios infectatus explosi.

2 OTHERS with St. Bonaventure said that Charity is increased by another diverse one succeeding, as days are said to grow, not by addition to the days, for instance of April, but by others of May succeeding.

ALII apud D. Bonav. dixere, augeri Charitatem per aliam diversam succedentem, sicuti dicuntur crescere dies, non per additionem ad dies, puta Aprilis, sed per alios succedentes Maii.

3 Others said that charity is increased, but by a deeper rooting alone in the subject. Thus the Thomists with St. Thomas here, and Valencia quaest. 1. p. 3.

Alii dixere, augeri charitatem, sed per maiorem solam radicationem in subiecto. Ita Thomistae cum D. Thom. hic, Valentia quaest. 1. p. 3.

4 The TRUE opinion of the Theologians, however, is that charity is increased by the addition of degrees: to this Cajetan tries to reduce St. Thomas.

VERA tamen sententia Theologorum est, augeri charitatem per additionem graduum : Ad hanc conatur Caietanus reducere D. Thomam.

5 St. Bonaventure observes, however, in quaest. 5. that augmentation is a passion of quantity, which is twofold: one of bulk, the other of virtue, from St. Augustine libro de quantitate animae, cap. 3. In spiritual things, indeed, that is virtue which in bodily things is bulk. Increment is also given in qualities according to the intension of degrees, as in heat up to the eighth; and in this way the question is raised about the augmentation of charity: whether it is increased according to intension and virtue, which is truly a physical augmentation, by which other forms also grow. But a moral augmentation can also be given, by which the subject, growing morally in the order of merit, meritoriously causes such an augmentation; and in this sense St. Augustine spoke, epist. 106, apud D. Bonav.: Charity merits to be increased, that, when increased, it may merit to be perfected.

> ADVERTIT autem quaest. 5. S. Bonavent. augmentum esse passionem quantitatis, quae duplex est; alia molis, alia virtutis, ex D. August. lib. de quantitate animae, cap. 3. In spiritualibus vero id est virtus, quod in corporalibus moles. Datur etiam incrementum in qualitatibus secundum intensionem graduum, ut in calore usque ad octavum, et hoc modo quaeritur de augmento charitatis: An augeatur secundum intensionem, et virtutem, quod sane augmentum est physicum, quo aliae etiam formae crescunt. Dari vero potest etiam augmentum morale, quo moraliter in ratione meriti crescens subiectum meritorie causet tale augmentum, et hoc sensu locutus est D. August. epist. 106. apud D. Bonav. Charitas meretur augeri, ut aucta mereatur perfici.

6 Secondly, the Saintly Doctor observes, in the following question, that some said charity is increased by the sole diminution of the contrary concupiscence: but he himself asserts outright that it is increased by the intension of itself; otherwise it could not have been increased either in the Angels or in innocent man.

> ADVERTIT secundo, S. Doct. quaest. sequenti, aliquos dixisse, augeri charitatem per diminutionem solam contrariae cupiditatis: Sed omnino ipse asserit, eam augeri per intensionem ipsius; alioqui, neque in Angelis, neque in homine innocente potuisset augeri.

7 I ASSERT first that Charity is intensified substantially and meritoriously.

> ASSERO primo, Charitatem intendi substantialiter, et meritorie.

8 It is PROVED first by St. Bonaventure with the argument of St. Augustine epist. 106, which the Council of Trent uses, sess. 6. de Iustificatione cap. 10. The increment of charity is made by merit in Charity itself, which the just man has on the way, and it is perfected in the fatherland: but this is the true physical Charity, poured forth in our hearts: therefore. This argument supposes first that we can merit the increment of charity, which is proved from 4. ad Ephes.: Let us grow in charity. Philip. 1: This I pray, that your charity may more and more abound; and first Thessal. 3: May the Lord multiply you, and make you abound in charity. Apoc. 1: He that is just, let him be justified still. Eccles. 18: Fear not to be justified even to death. Prima Cor. 9: He will increase the growths of the fruits of your justice. Whence St. Augustine above: Grace merits to be increased, that, when increased, it may merit to be perfected. And St. Gregory, homil. 15. in Evang.: Every virtue is increased, as it were, by certain degrees; and thus, by the increments of merits, it is led to the summit. Finally Iacob. 2: You see that a man is justified by works, and not by faith only.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonav. argumento D. August. epist. 106. quo utitur Concilium Trident. sess. 6. de Iustificatione cap. 10. Incrementum charitatis fit per meritum in Charitate ipsa, quam habet iustus in via, et perficitur in patria : Sed haec est vera Charitas physica, diffusa in cordibus nostris : ergo. Hoc argumentum supponit primo, nos posse mereri incrementum charitatis, quod probatur ex 4. ad Ephes. Crescamus in charitate. Philip. 1. Hoc oro, ut charitas vestra magis abundet, et prima Thessal. 3. Vos Dominus multiplicet, et abundare faciat in charitate. Apoc. 1. Qui iustus est, iustificetur adhuc. Eccles. 18. Ne verearis usque ad mortem iustificari. Prima Cor. 9. Augebit incrementa frugum iustitiae vestrae. Unde D. August. supra : Gratia meretur augeri, ut aucta mereatur perfici. Et D. Gregorius, homil. 15. in Evang. Unaquaque virtus, quasi quibusdam gradibus augetur; et sic per incrementa meritorum ad summum perducitur. Tandem Iacob. 2. Videtis quod ex operibus iustificatur homo, et non ex fide tantum.

9 Next, the argument supposes that the augmentation of the same charity is brought about, which the cited passages of Scripture prove; and therefore the Church prays: Grant us, O Lord, the increase of faith, hope, and Charity; and the philosophical reason is at hand, for intension is the addition of a new degree, or of virtue, to the same thing, as Aristotle teaches 1. de Gener. text. 31, and St. Bonaventure observes quaest. 2. fund. 2.

> DEINDE supponit argumentum, fieri augmentum eiusdem charitatis, quod probant loca scripturarum allata, et ideo orat Ecclesia : Da nobis Domine, fidei, spei, et Charitatis augmentum; et ratio philosophica adest, nam intensio, est additio novi gradus, vel virtutis ad idem, ut docet Aristoteles 1. de Gener. text. 31. et advertit S. Bonavent. quaest. 2. fund. 2.

10 THIRDLY it supposes that the same charity is perfected in the fatherland,[1] which is asserted in prima Cor. 13: Charity never falleth away. And therefore the Apostle says, prima Corinth. 15, speaking of merit and reward, to which it corresponds: One is the brightness of the sun, another the brightness of the moon, another of the stars. For star differeth from star in brightness: so also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it shall rise in incorruption. It is sown in ignominy, it shall rise in glory.

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'eandem chastatem perfici in patria'; 'chastatem' (chastity) contradicts the context, which is entirely about charity (1 Cor. 13 is quoted immediately after); rendered as 'charitatem' (charity).

> TERTIO supponit, eandem charitatem perfici in patria, quod asseritur prima Cor. 13. Charitas nunquam excidit. Et ideo ait Apostolus prima Corinth. 15. loquens de merito, et praemio, illi respondente : Alia claritas solis, Alia claritas Lunae, alia stellarum. Stella enim a stella differt in claritate : sic et resurrectio mortuorum. Seminatur in corruptione, surget in incorruptione. Seminatur in ignobilitate, surget in gloria.

11 The MINOR is of faith, proved in prima secunda, Tract. de Gratia, disp. 3. This argument is strengthened also by the other foundations of the Seraphic Doctor.

> MINOR est de fide probata prima secunda, Tract. de Gratia, disp. 3. Hoc argumentum caeteris etiam fundamentis Seraphici roboratur.

12 THE SECOND foundation, therefore, is: Every motion from lesser to greater, the thing remaining, is an augmentation: but Charity, remaining essentially the same that it is on the way, is increased in the fatherland: Therefore. The major is evident. The minor is proved from 1. Cor. 13: Charity never falleth away.

> SECUNDUM ergo fundamentum est: Omnis motus a minori ad maius, re manente, est augmentum : Sed Charitas manens eadem essentialiter, quae in via, augetur in patria : Ergo. Maior est evidens. Minor probatur ex 1. Cor. 13. Charitas nunquam excidit.

13 THE THIRD foundation. To the quantity of the charity of the way there corresponds the reward of glory and of the charity of the fatherland; but in the fatherland the rewards will be unequal, as I showed from prima Cor. 15. Therefore.

> TERTIUM fundamentum. Quantitati charitatis viae respondet praemium gloriae, et charitatis patriae; sed in patria erunt praemia inaequalia, ut ostendi ex prima Cor. 15. Ergo.

14 THE FOURTH. A being which is not the highest can be made better: Charity is not the highest good; otherwise it would be the same in each individual, and accordingly would have equal effects in all and each, which is false; for in one just man it works more and higher things than in another. Nor is it the highest, that it could be, since it is the perfection by which a man is formally constituted on the way toward the ultimate term of the fatherland. Whence the Saintly Doctor forms the argument thus, which St. Thomas also uses, art. 4. That perfection by which a man is formally constituted on the way toward a term can be increased; but Charity is that perfection by which a man is constituted on the way toward beatitude, which is the ultimate term: Therefore. The major is evident; for it belongs above all to a wayfarer that he be able to advance on the way. The minor is proved by St. Bonaventure quaest. 2. fundamento 3, because Charity is as it were a Light, growing from the dawn of grace to the most brilliant noon of glory. Therefore Proverb. 4: The path of the just, as a shining light, goeth forward, and groweth even to the perfect day. Valencia uses the same reason disp. 3. quaest. 2. p. 3.

> QUARTUM. Ens, quod non est summum, potest meliorari : Charitas non est summum bonum, alioqui esset in singulis idem; atque adeo haberet in omnibus, et singulis, aequales effectus, quod est falsum; nam in uno iusto plura, et altiora operatur, quam in alio. Neque est summam, quod possit esse, cum sit perfectio, per quam homo constituitur formaliter in via ad ultimum terminum patriae. Ex quo sic format S. Doct. argumentum, quo utitur etiam D. Thom. art. 4. Illa perfectio, per quam homo constituitur formaliter in via ad terminum, potest augeri; sed Charitas est illa perfectio, per quam homo in via constituitur ad beatitudinem, quae est ultimus terminus: Ergo. Maior est evidens; nam ad viatorem maxime pertinet, ut in via progredi queat. Minor probatur a D. Bonavent. quaest. 2. fundamento 3. quia Charitas est quasi Lux, crescens ab aurora gratiae ad meridiem praeclarissimam gloriae. Ideo Proverb. 4. Iustorum semita, quasi Lux splendens, procedit, et crescit usque ad perfectum diem. Eadem ratione utitur Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 2. p. 3.

15 I ASSERT secondly that this augmentation is physically from God.

> ASSERO secundo, hoc augmentum physice esse a Deo.

16 IT IS PROVED IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure, quaest. 2, fundamento 4, and his reply. A thing is increased by the same by which it is produced: but charity is infused by God: Therefore. The major is proved, because the same virtue is capable of acting upon the essence, and upon the degrees of the essence, and its accidents; the minor is proved from Romans 5: The charity of God is poured forth in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, who is given to us. Second Timothy 1: God hath given us the spirit of love; first John 3: Behold what manner of charity God hath given us, that we should be called, and be, the sons of God; and cap. 4: Charity is of God. Cajetan uses this argument on art. 6 of St. Thomas, and Valencia, disput. 3, quaest. 2, p. 3, assert. 7, where he discusses: whether, at least by God's absolute power, man could be, at least instrumentally, the physical cause of the augmentation of charity: and indeed he himself asserts it, thinking that charity is not created. But this was exploded in p. 1, Tract. 3, disputation 1, where I showed that infused habits are created.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. quaest. 2. fundamento 4. et corpore. Ab eodem res augetur, a quo producitur: Sed chatitas infunditur a Deo: Ergo. Maior probatur, quia eadem est virtus potens in essentiam, et in gradus essentiae, et accidentia eius, Minor probatur Rom. 5. Charitas Dei diffusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum Sanctum, qui datus est nobis. Secunda Timoth. 1. Dedit nobis Deus spiritum dilectionis, prima Ioan. 3. Videte qualem charitatem dedit nobis Deus, ut filii Dei nominemur, et simus, et cap. 4. Charitas ex Deo est. Hoc argumento utuntur Caietanus ad art. 6. D. Thom. et Valentia disput. 3. quaest. 2. p. 3. assert. 7. ubi discutit: An saltem absoluta Dei potentia posset homo, saltem instrumentaliter, esse causa physica augmenti charitatis: Et quidem ipse id asserit, putans, charitatem non creari. Sed hoc explosum est p. 1. Tract. 3. disputatione 1. ubi ostendi, habitus infusos creari.

17 You will object first. Every form is unchangeable, consisting in something indivisible.

> Obiicies primo. Omnis forma est invariabilis, consistens in indivisibili.

18 The Saintly Doctor answers that this is true as to universal essences, and even singular ones as to what is essential, but not by reason of the subject, against Scotus, 1. dist. 17, quaestione 4. The Saintly Doctor does not will that the form be changed essentially in subjects, but by a certain substantial perfection of the individual, as is clear in the rational soul; but he wills that it be varied accidentally by intensive degrees per se.

> Respondet S. Doct. verum esse quoad essentias universales, et etiam singulares quoad essentialia, non autem ratione subiecti, contra Scotum 1. dist. 17. quaestione 4. Non vult S. Doctor, formam in subiectis essentialiter mutari, sed quadam substatiali individui perfectione, ut patet de anima rationali; accidentalem vero gradibus intensivis per se vult variari.

19 You will object secondly. Simplicity does not admit magnitude.

> Obiicies secundo. Simplicitas non admittit magnitudinem.

20 He answers that it does not admit magnitude of bulk; but of virtue.

> Respondet*, non admittere magnitudinem molis; sed virtutis.*

21 You will object thirdly. Augmentation in bodily things is according to accident, from 5 Phys. t. 8.

> Obiicies tertio. Augmentum in corporalibus est secundum accidens ex 5. Phys. t. 8.

22 The Saintly Doctor answers that quantity is accidental to the how-much; but the augmentation of quantity is substantial to it; for it is made from its own entity by degrees, which in moral virtue are essential.

> Respondet S. Doct. quantitatem esse quanto accidentalem; at quantitatis augmentum sibi substantiale esse; fit enim ex propria entitate per gradus, qui in virtute morali essentiales sunt.

23 He answers secondly that the term of augmentation in bodily things is a quantity perfect per se; but per accidens it is increased also by the addition of substance, unless it comes about by rarefaction or protension; for when quantity is increased, the subject also is increased, in which it may be, although the formal term of augmentation is the quantity itself; so therefore in spiritual things the quantity of virtue is increased in Charity, which is indeed an accident, but one consubstantial with that form; as the third degree of heat, and the following ones, according to which it is intensified.

> Respondet secundo, terminum augmenti in corporeis esse quantitatem perfectam per se; at per accidens augeri etiam additione substantiae, nisi fiat per rarefactionem, vel protensionem; cum enim augetur quantitas, augetur et subiectum, in quo illa sit, licet terminus formalis augmentationis sit ipsa quantitas; sic igitur in spiritualibus augetur quantitas virtutis in Charitate, quae est accidens quidem, sed tamen est illi formae consubstantialis; sicuti calori tertius gradus, et sequentes, secundum quos intenditur.

24 You will object fourthly. If Charity is increased substantially, it is changed substantially; but Charity never falleth away, from prima Cor. 13. Therefore.

> Obiicies quarto. Si Charitas substantialiter augetur, mutatur substantialiter, sed: Charitas nunquam excidit, ex prima Cor. 13. Ergo.

25 The answer is made that Charity remains with respect to its being of itself; yet it is simply increased by degrees.

> Respondetur*, Charitatem manere respectu esse sui; simpliciter tamen augeri per gradus.*

26 You will object first, to prove that charity is increased by itself, because it is more powerful than fire; but fire by its own heat increases itself by combustion: Therefore.

> Obiicies primo, ad probandum, charitatem augeri a seipsa, quia potentior est, quam ignis; sed ignis suo calore seipsum auget combustione: Ergo.

27 The Saintly Doctor answers that Charity is not active as to creation.

> Respondet S. Doct. Charitatem non esse activam ad creationem.

28 You will object secondly, with St. Thomas, to prove that it is not increased by the addition of degrees, because it is simple.

> Obiicies secundo cum D. Thom. ad probandum, eam non augeri per additionem graduum, quia est simplex.

29 The Saintly Doctor answers that Charity has degrees of perfection, and therefore can be increased; nor do degrees according to intension repugn to a quality, even if it be a simple quality, for thus also heat is intensified. In the same way the Saintly Doctor answers in 2. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 2. ad 1.

> Respondet S. Doct. Charitatem habere gradus perfectionis, ideo posse augeri; neque qualitati repugnant gradus secundum intensionem, etiamsi sit simplex qualitas, sic enim etiam calor intenditur. Eodem modo respondet S. Doct. in 2. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 2. ad 1.

30 You will say: The point has a quantity of virtue, and yet cannot be increased.

> Dices: Punctum habet quantitatem virtutis, nec tamen augeri potest.

31 The Saintly Doctor answers that this happens because the point is complete in an indivisible of its genus, whence nothing can be united to it so as to be increased, because it is essentially such.

> Respondet S. Doct. id evenire, quia punctum est in suo genere indivisibili completum, unde nihil ei potest uniri, ut augeatur, quia essentialiter est tale.

32 NEXT he answers that the point is indivisible in the genus of quantity of bulk; but in the genus of quantity of virtue, no perfection is indivisible simply, except the Divine. Moreover, the point is an act, imperfect in the genus of quantity, which is not perfect in act; but only terminative with respect to lines; therefore it has not an infinite active power, but passive; whence it cannot produce lines, but terminate them; wherefore it is not compared to the Divine virtue, nor can it be augmented, as Charity can.

> DEINDE respondet, punctum esse in genere quantitatis molis indivisibile; at in genere quantitatis virtutis, nulla perfectio est indivisibilis simpliciter, praeter Divinam. Praeterea punctum est actus, in genere quantitatis imperfectus, qui non est perfectus in actu; sed solum terminativus respectu linearum; ideo non habet potentiam infinitam activam, sed passivam; unde nequit lineas producere, sed terminare; quare non comparatur virtuti Divinae, nec potest augmentari, sicut Charitas.

33 You will object secondly. Every addition implies composition, and this induces a diminution of virtue: Therefore, the greater the addition, the feebler charity becomes; and the feebler, the less.

> Obiicies secundo. Omnis additio dicit compositionem, et haec diminutionem virtutis inducit: Ergo quanto maior sit additio, tanto impotentior fit charitas; et quanto impotentior, tanto minor.

34 The Saintly Doctor answers first that as much as is added of formal parts to anything, so much is added of act and virtue; otherwise a lesser fire would be more powerful than a greater; and a syrup composed of many things would be feebler than one of its ingredients. Therefore charity is increased according to the degrees of the form.

> Respondet S. Doct. primo, quantum additur de partibus formalibus alicui, tantum addi de actu, et virtute, alioqui minor ignis esset potentior, quam maior; et Sirupus compositus ex multis, esset impotentior, quam unum ex ingredientibus illius. Itaque charitas augetur secundum gradus formae.

35 He answers secondly that increased Charity is not more composite, but more simple; for things stand in a contrary way in the quantity of bulk and in the quantity of virtue; for in the quantity of bulk the simplest is the least and weakest, as the point; and therefore in that genus approach to simplicity is diminution; but recession from the simplicity of the point is by addition: but in the how-much of virtue, the simplest is the greatest, namely God; therefore approach to simplicity is by addition; for the more degrees of perfection a creature has, the more it approaches the perfection, and accordingly the simplicity, of God: thus the Soul and the Angel excel the other creatures in the imitation of God, and yet do not exclude the simplicity of quantity. Therefore also charity, the more perfect, the more like to God.

> Respondet secundo, Charitatem augmentatam non esse magis compositam, sed magis simplicem; contrario enim modo se habet res in quantitate molis, et in quantitate virtutis; in quantitate enim molis simplicissimum est minimum, et debilissimum, ut punctus; et ideo in hoc genere accessus ad simplicitatem est diminutio; recessus vero a simplicitate puncti est per additionem: at in quanto virtutis, simplicissimum est maximum, nempe Deus, ideo accessus ad simplicitatem, est per additionem; quanto enim creatura plures gradus habet perfectionis, tanto magis ad Dei perfectionem, atque adeo simplicitatem accedit: Sic Anima, et Angelus praecellunt in Dei imitatione reliquis creaturis, neque tamen excludunt simplicitatem quantitatis. Ideo et charitas, quo perfectior, eo similior Deo.

36 You will object thirdly. If some degree is added to charity; either it is charity, or it is not. If not: Therefore it does not increase it. If the first: Therefore the first charity, with respect to the incoming charity, is material: Or if they do not stand thus, one will not be made, because one is not made out of many, unless one be as matter; the other, as act.

> Obiicies tertio. Si additur charitati aliquis gradus; vel is est charitas, vel non. Si non: Ergo non auget illam. Si primum: Ergo charitas prima, respectu charitatis advenientis, est materialis: Vel si non sic se habent, non fiet unum, quia non fit unum ex pluribus, nisi unum sit ut materia; alterum, ut actus.

37 The Saintly Doctor answers that the imperfect stands in the manner of the material with respect to a more perfect degree; thus heat as four stands with respect to itself intensified as eight; and in this way charity as four stands as in potency to the eighth degree, nor is there any inconvenience.

> Respondet S. Doct. Imperfectum se habere ad modum materialis, respectu gradus perfectioris, sic calor ut quatuor, se habet, respectu sui, ut octo intensi; et hoc modo charitas ut quatuor se habet, ut in potentia ad octavum gradum, nec est ullum inconveniens.

38 ¶ From this the argument of Valencia assert. 4. is resolved, by which he strives to prove that charity is not increased by the addition of some degree of charity, otherwise there would be several charities: for by those degrees one intensified quality is made; as from several degrees of heat one heat is made as four, or as eight.

39 ¶ But what he himself teaches, assert. 5. that the augmentation of charity is made by a certain mode of perfection actualizing the subject; I confess to be unintelligible to me, because a natural virtue always acts with its whole self in the same subject: ergo, remaining the same, it always does the same: Therefore the just man is not apt to elicit more perfect acts, even if he grows in charity, as the Saintly Doctor argued in quaestione 1, fundamento 5. For the greatness of the effect comes from the greatness of the virtue; and the greatness of the virtue from the greatness of the essence. For either that virtue is the essence itself, or not. If the first: Therefore, the virtue being increased, the essence is increased. If the second: Either that virtue has an essence from which it flows, or not; if it has one; either it is the essence itself of charity, or another; if the essence itself of charity: Therefore, the virtue being increased, charity must have been increased; but if it has another essence, I ask about it: whether it is charity or not; and then it will be necessary either to go on to infinity, or to arrive at some new entity of charity, which may be the cause of that virtue.

¶ Quod vero ipse docet assert. 5. augmentum fieri charitatis per quemdam modum perfectionis in subiecto actuando; fateor mihi inintelligibile esse, quia virtus naturalis agit semper tota in eodem subiecto: ergo manens eadem, semper facit idem: Ergo iustus non est aptus perfectiores actus elicere, quamvis crescat in charitate, ut arguebat S. Doct. quaestione 1. fundamento 5. Nam maioritas effectus venit ex maioritate virtutis; et maioritas virtutis ex maioritate essentiae. Vel enim illa virtus est ipsa essentia, vel non. Si primum: Ergo aucta virtute augetur essentia. Si secundum: Vel illa virtus habet essentiam a qua fluat, vel non; si habet; vel est ipsa essentia charitatis, vel alia; Si ipsa essentia charitatis: Ergo aucta virtute, oportet, auctam esse charitatem; si vero habet aliam essentiam. Quaero de illa: An sit charitas, necne; et tunc oportebit, vel abire in infinitum, vel devenire ad aliquem novam charitatis entitatem, quae sit causa illius virtutis.

40 It is confirmed by St. Bonaventure fundamento 1, and quaest. 2, fundamento 4, because the moral act by which that charity is increased is new, from St. Augustine epist. 106. Likewise the physical act of God influencing: Therefore a new entity of Charity is produced.

Confirmatur a D. Bonav. fundamento 1. et quaest. 2. fundamento 4. quia actio moralis, qua augetur illa charitas, est nova ex D. August. epist. 106. Similiter actio Physica Dei influentis: Ergo nova entitas Charitatis producitur.

41 Valencia answers that it is enough if a new effect, formally distinct, accede to the new act. Thus to a new local motion a new mode accedes.

Respondet Valentia, satis esse, si novae actioni adveniat novus effectus formaliter distinctus. Sic novo motui locali, novus modus advenit.

42 Against this, first, because he equivocates: for that place, or Ubi, is an entity making in itself a new predicament, while with respect to the located thing it is a mode. Therefore let him concede to me that a new entity accedes to charity, which, since it is a virtue, must also accede with the new entity of Charity; and not a solitary new mode in the subject, without a new addition made to charity.

Contra primo, quia aequivocat: nam locus ille, seu Ubi est entitas in se faciens novum praedicamentum, isto respectu locati sit modus. Igitur concedat mihi, novam entitatem advenire charitati, quae cum sit virtus, oportet ut et cum nova entitate Charitatis adveniat; non autem novus modus solitarius in subiecto, absque nova additione facta charitati.

43 Therefore let there be the third Assertion, and proved, that the augmentation of charity is made by a newly added degree of charity. It is common to the Philosophers, and to almost all the Theologians.

> Igitur sit Assertio tertia, probataque, augmentum charitatis fieri per novum additum gradum charitatis. Est communis Philosophis, et Theologis fere omnibus.

44 Here many things are disputed by the Doctors. First: whether grace and charity are increased by whatever works of whatever Virtues; but of this I treated in t. 2, Tract. de Gratia, disp. 4. quaest. 4. Next: whether by every work, or act, the remission and the augmentation of charity are acquired together. Of this I treated loc. cit. quaest. 12. Thirdly: whether this augmentation accedes immediately. Of this I discoursed there, disp. 3, from quaest. 2, against Scotus; and it is the common opinion of the Theologians, according to Turrianus disp. 68. dub. 4. Therefore the Council of Trent, sess. 6. cap. 10. defines that the justified, by the observance of the commandments, grow in justice itself by the grace of God received: and therefore it says that the Church prays: Grant us the increase of faith, Hope, and Charity. And indeed the arguments brought forward above show that this augmentation is made immediately after meritorious acts, as it were through moral causes, upon whose operation God physically infuses charity. Therefore, on account of the authority of the Council of Trent, Mastrius asserts, in 2. disputatione 7. numero 359, that the opposing opinion cannot be sustained, and he reprehends Faber.

> Hic multa disputantur a Doctoribus. Primo: An quibuscumque operibus quorumcumque Virtutum augeatur gratia, et charitas; Sed de hoc egi t. 2. Tract. de Gratia, disp. 4. quaest. 4. Deinde: An quolibet opere, seu actu remissio acquiratur augmentum charitatis. De hoc egi loc. cit. quaest. 12. Tertio: An hoc augmentum illico adveniat. De hoc disserui ibi, disp. 3. a quaest. 2. contra Scotum; et est sententia communis Theologorum apud Turrianum disp. 68. dub. 4. Ideo Concil. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 10. definit, Iustificatos, per observationem mandatorum, crescere in ipsa iustitia per gratiam Dei acceptam: Et ideo ait, Ecclesiam orare: Da nobis fidei, Spei, et Charitatis augmentum. Et sane argumenta supra allata ostendunt, hoc augmentum fieri statim post actus meritorios, tanquam per causas morales, ad quarum operationem Deus physice infundit charitatem. Ideo propter authoritatem Concilii Tridentini, Mastrius 2. disputatione 7. numero 359. oppositam sententiam non posse sustineri, asserit, et reprehendit Fabrum.

45 You will say: If the augmentation is conferred immediately after the first instant: Therefore, if the act of charity is continued for some time, in which there are infinite instants, it will be increased to infinity.

> Dices: Si statim confertur post primum instans augmentum: Ergo si continuetur actus charitatis per aliquod tempus, in quo sunt instantia infinita, augebitur in infinitum.

46 It is answered with Suarez opusc. de revivisc. merit. disp. 2. sect. 5, Caspensis disp. 2. sect. 6, from St. Bonaventure dist. 17. quaest. ult. that the augmentation is finite, because it is not reckoned according to duration by the division of time and of the act into aliquot parts; but according to the succession, or instantaneousness, of the work, in a physical manner; and works are done in a finite time; and according to the instants of the equal parts in which there is the operation; for as to the aliquot parts, to which finite things correspond, there are infinite instants, to which the aliquot parts of acts correspond; but they are not measured in this way, but according to a scarcely determined time.

> Respondetur cum Suarez opusc. de revivisc. merit. disp. 2. sect. 5. Caspensi disp. 2. sect. 6. ex D. Bonavent. dist. 17. quaest. ult. augmentum esse finitum, quia non computatur secundum durationem per divisionem temporis, et actus in partes aliquotas; sed secundum successionem, vel instantaneitatem operis, modo physico; fiunt autem opera tempore finito; et secundum instantia partium aequalium, in quibus est operatio; nam quoad partes aliquotas, quibus respondent finita, sunt infinitae, quibus respondent partes aliquotae actuum; sed hoc pacto non mensurantur, sed secundum tempus vix determinatum.

47 From what has been said also, Disp. de merito, in the questions cited, especially 8, and from what is said here, that question lies resolved: whether the augmentation of Charity, of merit, and of glory grows from the inequality of the works which are commanded by Charity; so that, if charity, the same as four, commands two acts, one of Temperance, the other of Faith, the merit is increased from the mere inequality of these works, even though the commanding charity is equal.

Ex dictis etiam Disp. de merito, quaestionibus allegatis maxime 8. et ex dictis hic resoluta iacet illa quaestio: An augmentum Charitatis, meriti, et gloriae, crescat ex inaequalitate operum, quae imperantur a Charitate; ita ut, si charitas, eadem ut quatuor, imperet duos actus; alterum Temperantiae; alterum Fidei, augeatur meritum ex mera inaequalitate horum operum; cum tamen charitas imperans sit aequalis.

48 And indeed the opinion of Bannes is false, quaest. 25. art. 6. dub. 5, saying that it grows only unto an accidental reward. But the true opinion is that of Victoria relect. de augmento charit. num. 11, Valencia disput. 3. quaest. 2. p. 3, and Caspensis sect. 7, after St. Thom. p. 2. quaest. 114. art. 4. ad 2, that merit grows substantially.

Et quidem falsa est opinio Bannes quaest. 25. art. 6. dub. 5. dicens, crescere solum ad praemium accidentale. Vera est autem sententia Victoriae relect. de augmento charit. num. 11. Valentia disput. 3. quaest. 2. p. 3. et Caspensis sect. 7. post D. Thom. p. 2. quaest. 114. art. 4. ad 2. crescere meritum substantialiter.

49 It is proved from the said cited passages. As simply corresponds to simply, so more to more: but merit simply is had from the acts of the other virtues: Therefore also its augmentation. Therefore in the Council of Nicaea, in which the heresy of Jovinian was condemned, excluding the inequality of merits, when the Pontiff had condemned it, he writes to Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, and to the others, epist. 81: The rustic, that is, the howling of wolves, is he who maintains no grace of virginity, no order of chastity, abolishing for different persons the degrees of different merits, as if there were one palm, and the titles of rewards did not abound. Here he beats back Jovinian, who wished conjugal continence from unlawful things to be as meritorious as virginity, which is against the Apostle, prima Corinth. 7: He that joineth his virgin in marriage doth well: and he that giveth her not in marriage doth better, which words the Council adduces, and subjoins: Better is virginity, by which the inheritance of the heavenly kingdom is acquired, and the succession of heavenly merits is found. By which it is shown that he speaks of the reward, and of essential merit: for he names virginity simply better, as the Saintly Doctor also observes, in 4. dist. 31. quaest. 1.

Probatur ex dictis locis citatis. Sicut se habet simpliciter ad simpliciter; ita magis ad magis: sed meritum simpliciter habetur ex actibus aliarum virtutum: Ergo et augmentum. Ideo in Concilio Thelensi, in quo haeresis Ioviniani damnata est, excludens inaequalitatem meritorum, cum Pontifex eam damnasset, scribit Episcopo Mediolanensi Ambrosio, et aliis, epist. 81. Agrestis, idest, Luporum ululatus est, nullam virginitatis gratiam, nullam castitatis ordinem servare, diversis diversorum gradus abrogare meritorum, quasi una sit palma, et non abundent tituli praemiorum. Retundit hic Iovinianum, qui volebat, ita meritoriam esse coniugalem continentiam ab illicitis, sicuti virginitatem, quod est contra Apostolum, prima Corinth. 7. Qui iungit virginem suam, benefacit: et qui non iungit, melius facit, quae verba adducit Concilium, et subdit: Melior virginitas, per quam regni caelestis haereditas acquisita, et caelestium meritorum reperta successio. Quo ostenditur, loqui de praemio, et merito essentiali: nam virginitatem simpliciter meliorem nominat, ut advertit etiam S. Doct. in 4. dist. 31. quaest. 1.

50 This is also expressed in those words Matth. 19: There are eunuchs who have castrated themselves for the kingdom of heaven, which St. Jerome uses, lib. 1. cont. Iovinianum. The same St. Bonaventure uses in Diaeta, titulo 6. capite 2.

> Id etiam exprimitur illis verbis Matth. 19. Sunt qui seipsos castraverunt propter regnum caelorum, quo utitur D. Hieron. lib. 1. cont. Iovinianum. Eodem utitur D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, titulo 6. capite 2.

51 The same is proved by St. Bonaventure ad 21. Lucae, by the example of that Widow, who, one mite cast into the Gazophylacium, pleased God more than those who were throwing in whole gold coins; but this was done because she cast in of her want: Therefore merit grows from the force of the work, as St. Gregory, homil. 5 in Evang., and Beda upon those words expound.

> Idem probatur a D. Bonavent. ad 21. Lucae, exemplo illius Viduae, quae uno minuto demisso in Gazophylacium, plus Deo placuit, quam illi, qui integros aureos iaciebant; hoc autem factum est, quia de sua penuria misit: Ergo ex vi operis crescit meritum, ut exponunt S. Gregorius homil. 5. in Evang. et Beda ad ea verba.

52 Bannes answers that she prevailed by a greater charity: it is confirmed by him from St. Gregory loc. cit., and the Glossa Interlin. on this passage, and St. Vincent, serm. 4. in septuag., saying that God weighs, not how much is offered, but from how much affection, as St. Bonaventure relates on that passage.

> Respondet Bannes, eam praevaluisse ex maiori charitate: Confirmatur ab eo ex D. Gregorio loc. cit. et Glossa Interlin. ad hunc locum, et D. Vincentio serm. 4. in septuag. dicentibus, Perpendere Deum, non quantum offertur, sed ex quanto affectu, ut refert S. Bonavent. ad eum locum.

53 But it teems with equivocation: for they wish to say that God regards not only that which is given, but rather with what affection, which indeed is not only from charity, but from the object of that virtue. Therefore Christ says Matth. 10: Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water to one of the least of these, shall not lose his reward, as the Saintly Doctor observes on that passage of Luca, where he brings forward other passages of Scripture proving that even the affection of the other virtues pertains to essential merit. Thus 66. Isaia: Upon whom shall I look, except upon the poor, and the contrite of heart, and trembling at my words. Psalm. 101: He hath regarded the prayer of the humble. And Eccl. 35: Do not the tears of the widow go down to the cheek? for from the cheek they go up even to heaven. And Tobiae 4: If thou have but little, be studious to impart even a little gladly.

> Sed aequivoco scatet: Volunt enim dicere, Deum non respicere solum id, quod datur; sed magis quo affectu, qui quidem est, non solum ex charitate, sed ex obiecto illius virtutis. Ideo ait Christus Matth. 10. Qui dederit uni ex minimis meis calicem aquae frigidae, non perdet mercedem, ut observat ad eum locum Luca S. Doct. ubi alia affert Scripturae loca probantia, etiam affectum aliarum virtutum esse ad meritum essentiale. Sic 66. Isaia: Ad quem respiciam nisi ad pauperculum, et contritum corde, et trementem sermones meos. Psalm. 101. Respexit in orationem humilium. Et Eccl. 35. Nonne lachrymae viduae ad maxillam descendunt: a maxilla enim ascendunt usque ad caelum. Et Tobiae 4. Si exiguum tibi fuerit, etiam exiguum libenter impertiri stude.

Question XII: Whether charity can be increased without limit

1 Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole strength; but this precept is fulfilled with perfect execution only in the fatherland. Therefore it must be granted that it is then fulfilled completely when there is no other capacity in the heart; otherwise it would not be said with the whole heart. Nor is it true that a more intense quality makes the nature of the subject more disposed beyond its capacity; but within its limits. Therefore, if some subject is apt to receive so much heat as 4, it will not be able for 5 to accede. Thus therefore neither does the supernatural disposition dilate the power of capacity to infinity, but unto a limited term.

> Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, ex tota anima tua, ex tota virtute, hoc vero praeceptum perfecta executione solum in patria impletur. Igitur oportet dari, ut tunc complete impleatur, quando non est alia capacitas in corde, alioqui non diceretur in toto corde. Neque est verum, qualitatem intensiorem reddere magis dispositam naturam subiecti ultra eius capacitatem; sed intra limites eius. Itaque, si aliquod subiectum est aptum recipere tantum calorem ut 4. non poterit advenire ut 5. Sic igitur neque supernaturalis dispositio dilatat potentiam capacitatis in infinitum, sed usque ad terminum limitatum.

2 It is PROVED secondly by the Saintly Doctor. What in bodily things is bulk, that in spiritual things is virtue, and they stand proportionally, as St. Augustine teaches de quantitate animae, cap. 3. but in the quantity of bulk, by reason of the subject, the whole augmentation has a certain fixed state, because, as Aristotle says, 2 de anima, textu 41: Of all things constituted by nature there is a term, and a ratio, of magnitude and of augmentation: Therefore similarly in the quantity of virtue. Gallus uses this reason 3. dist. 13. quaest. 1. cap. 3, and the author of the controversiae, Sotus contr. 10, secunda Pars.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore. Quod est in corporeis moles, hoc est in spiritualibus virtus, et proportionaliter se habent ut docet D. Augustinus de quantitate animae, cap. 3. sed in quantitate molis ratione subiecti totum augmentum habet certum statum, quia, ut ait Aristoteles 2. de anima, textu 41. Omnium natura constantium terminus est, et ratio magnitudinis, et augmenti: Ergo similiter in quantitate virtutis. Hac ratione utuntur Gallus 3. dist. 13. quaest. 1. cap. 3. et author controvers. Sotus contr. 10. secunda, Parti.

3 But the reason is taken in both genera also from the finitude of perfection; for as the quantity of bulk is finite according to the natural and ordinary course, so also grace, which is a participation of God. Therefore it is said Sap. 11: Thou hast ordered all things in number, measure, and weight. Thus Scotus also argues. For it is a finite participation of the infinite; otherwise heat could be infinite. By which the response of Mastrius is refuted, disp. 10. Phys. quaest. 4. n. 65: That the fire of hell can grow on the part of the receptive subject.

> Ratio autem sumitur in utroque genere etiam ex finitate perfectionis; Sicuti enim quantitas molis est finita secundum cursum naturalem ordinarium, ita et gratia, quae est participatio Dei. Ideo ait Sap. 11. Omnia in numero, mensura, et pondere disposuisti. Sic arguit etiam Scotus. Est enim participatio finita infiniti, alioqui calor esse posset infinitus. Quo refellitur Mastrii responsio disp. 10. Phys. quaest. 4. n. 65. Ignem inferni crescere posse e parte subiecti receptivi.

4 Cajetan answers that the reason is not the same concerning natural things and supernatural things: for heat, for example, is a participation of the infinite, not with formal congruence; but Charity is with formal congruence; for God is formally Charity, but heat is not formally God. Further, concerning natural things Aristotle indeed says, 2 Animae text. 41: Of natural things also the augmentation has a state.[2]

[2] Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'Omnium naturalium etiam statum augmentum'; kept as printed because both the scan transcription and the OCR dump agree, though the Aristotle quotation (2 Animae text. 41) appears garbled in the 1655 print itself.

Respondet Caietanus, non esse parem rationem de naturalibus, et supernaturalibus: Nam calor, v. g. est participatio infiniti, non cum convenientia formali; Charitas autem est cum convenientia formali; nam Deus formaliter est Charitas, non autem formaliter est calor. Porro de naturalibus quidem ait Aristoteles 2. Animae text. 41. Omnium naturalium etiam statum augmentum.

5 BUT this response is cold; for it seems to suppose that Charity, by which we are perfected, is God himself, and not a created habit, which is an error. But suppose that God is formally Charity; nevertheless he himself is not that Charity by which we are perfected by habit, or act. Whence the parity runs, that since Charity is a created participation of God, it has a finite and terminated perfection. But that the object of love is infinite makes nothing, as the Saintly Doctor observes ad ultimum; for the object is God, infinite, with whom our created Charity is not commensurate.

SED haec responsio frigida est; nam videtur supponere, Charitatem, qua perficimur, esse ipsum Deum, non autem habitum creatum, quod est error. Esto autem Deus sit formaliter Charitas, attamen ipse non est illa Charitas, qua nos perficimur habitu, vel actu. Unde currit paritas, quod cum Charitas sit participatio creata Dei, habeat finitam, et terminatam perfectionem. Quod vero obiectum amoris sit infinitum, nil facit, ut observat S. Doctor ad ultimum; nam obiectum est Deus infinitus, cui non commensuratur Charitas nostra creata.

6 Caspensis answers that the habit is not varied by the multiplication of the parts continuing it, and participating the same nature, but by the diversity of the essential degrees, of which the quiddity and the species of it consist; and this has more place in acts, which regard an infinite object. Mastrius answers the same loco citato, Scrin 3. disp. 2. quaest. 3. art. 1.

Respondet Caspensis; non variari habitum ex multiplicatione partium continuantium, atque eamdem naturam participantium, sed ex diversitate graduum essentialium, e quibus constat quidditas, et species illius, et hoc magis locum habet in actibus, qui respiciunt obiectum infinitum. Idem respondet Mastrius loco citato Scrin 3. disp. 2. quaest. 3. art. 1.

7 BUT this response is frivolous: for in accidental beings the degrees of intension are substantial, for example in heat eight degrees signify the summit of the perfection of heat, nor can it ascend to nine; for the virtue arises from the essence, nor does it transcend it. Therefore the degrees of Charity, since they arise from a finite essence, must be finite, as the Saintly Doctor argues; for an effect is not nobler than its cause. But although acts regard an infinite object, nevertheless they regard it, as the habit also does, according to their own capacity, and virtue, which is created; and accordingly from a finite potency they have a finite intension. This argument, however, is not to the taste of the Saintly Doctor, as I said p. p. Tract. 5. disp. 8. quaest. 5.

SED haec responsio frivola est: Nam in entibus accidentalibus gradus intensionis sunt substantiales, v. g. in calore octo gradus dicunt summam perfectionem caloris, neque potest ad novem ascendere; nam virtus oritur ex essentia, nec eam transcendit. Itaque gradus Charitatis, cum ex essentia finita oriantur, debent esse finiti, ut arguit S. Doctor; non enim est effectus nobilior sua causa. Quamvis vero actus respiciant obiectum infinitum, illud tamen respiciunt, sicuti et habitus, secundum suam capacitatem, et virtutem, quae creata est; atque adeo a potentia finita habent finitam intensionem. Hoc tamen argumentum non est ad quadrum S. Doctoris, ut dixi p. p. Tract. 5. disp. 8. quaest. 5.

8 It is PROVED thirdly. That is perfect to which in its genus no addition is possible: but there is given a perfect Charity in the fatherland: Therefore. The major is Aristotle's, primo caeli, textu 12. The minor is proved from prima Corinth. 13: When that which is perfect shall come, that which is in part shall be done away; but this perfect, he says, is Charity.

PROBATUR tertio. Perfectum est, cui in suo genere non est possibilis additio: sed datur Charitas perfecta in patria: Ergo. Maior est Aristotelis primo caeli, textu 12. Minor probatur ex prima Corinth. 13. Cum advenerit quod perfectum est, evacuabitur, quod ex parte est; hoc autem perfectum, ait, esse Charitatem.

9 It is PROVED fourthly by the Saintly Doctor. The more perfect anything is among creatures, the more it is joined to an end: but Charity is perfect: Therefore; but if it were augmentable to infinity, it would have no end.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore. Quanto aliqua res perfectior est inter creaturas, tanto fini coniungitur: sed Charitas est perfecta: Ergo; at si esset in infinitum augmentabilis, non haberet finem.

10 St. Thomas ANSWERS that Charity has an end, but in the other life. Yet this does not resolve it, because an end, which is a terminus, must be given to each finite thing in itself.

RESPONDET D. Thomas, Charitatem habere finem, sed in alia vita. Hoc tamen non solvit, quia finis, qui est terminus, debet dari cuique finito in se.

11 They have ONE reason only, taken from the infinity of God the agent, and from the part of the object, which is infinitely lovable.

UNICAM rationem habent, sumptam ex infinitate agentis Dei, et ex parte obiecti, quod est infinite amabile.

12 BUT these are worn away by St. Bonaventure. For although the object be infinitely lovable, nevertheless the power of the creature is finite; whence, as it is infinitely intelligible, nevertheless the intelligibility is limited by reason of the created intellective power; so also in our matter. But that the principal agent is infinite makes nothing; otherwise all the effects of God would be infinite; but they are limited by their own capacity; for God does not act as much as he can act, as the Saintly Doctor observes.

SED haec atteruntur a S. Bonavent. Nam licet obiectum sit infinite amabile, tamen potentia creaturae est finita; unde, sicuti est infinite intelligibile, attamen ratione potentiae creatae intellectivae limitatur intelligibilitas; ita etiam in re nostra. Quod vero agens principale sit infinitum, nihil facit, alioqui omnes effectus Dei essent infiniti, sed limitantur ex propria capacitate; non enim Deus agit, quantum potest agere, ut observat S. Doctor.

Question XIII: Whether, and how, charity in this life is perfect

1 IT IS CERTAIN, as the holy Doctor says dist. 17, last question, that there are some perfect in Charity, even in the wayfaring state. That perfection is twofold, as D. Bonaventure teaches 3. dist. 30, question 2. One is of necessity, which excludes mortal sin, by observing the law: the other of supererogation, of which Matth. 19. If thou wilt be perfect, go, etc. But the perfection of this life is that in Charity of which the latter speaks, Ioan. 3, not one that excludes even venial sins; for this is the perfection of the fatherland, while this other is that of the way, of Christ, and of his sweetest mother, as S. Bonaventure indicates loco cit. and the Council of Milevis defines cap. 6, 7, and 8. and the Council of Trent session 6, cap. 11 and can. 13. Hence D. Augustine Lib. 1. de doct. Christ. cap. 39. concludes that there is no perfection in the way equal to the perfection of some blessed soul. Therefore in this life there is perfect charity, as D. Augustine says above, and D. Bernard serm. 2. de S. Michaële, when, the passions having been tamed, the soul is found expedite for the acts of the virtues. The Charity of the way is divided into the Charity of Beginners, of the Proficient, and of the Perfect. See D. Thom. art. 8.

CERTUM est, ut ait S. Doctor dist. 17. quaest. ultima, dari aliquos in Charitate perfectos, etiam in via. Ea vero perfectio est duplex, ut docet D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 30. quaest. 2. Alia necessitatis, quae excludit peccatum mortale, observando legem: alia supererogationis, de qua Matth. 19. Si vis perfectus esse, vade, etc. Ea autem est huius vitae perfectio in Charitate, de qua secunda, Ioan. 3. non quae excludat etiam venialia; haec enim est perfectio patriae, et in via, Christi, et dulcissimae matris, ut indicat S. Bonavent. loco cit. et definit Concilium Milevit. cap. 6. 7. et 8. et Tridentinum sess. 6. cap. 11. et can. 13. Unde D. Augustinus Lib. 1. de doct. Christ. cap. 39. concludit, nullam esse perfectionem in via, quae sit aequalis cum perfectione alicuius beati. Igitur in hac vita est perfecta charitas, ut ait D. August. supra, et D. Bernardus serm. 2. de S. Michaële, quando edomitis passionibus expedita invenitur anima ad actus virtutum. Dividitur Charitas viae in Charitatem Incipientium, Proficientium, et Perfectorum. Vide D. Thom. art. 8.

2 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure primo, dist. 27. part. 2. quaest. 2. Forms are intensified by approach to their term and by the removal of the admixture of the contrary, from Aristotle 3. Top. cap. 4. and 3. Phys. text 19. but as concupiscence diminishes, Charity in the way is increased and perfected, from D. Augustine Lib. 83. qq. question 36. and in Enchir. last chapter; which is 121. For the fervor of Charity is intensified, which leads to perfection, although the degrees of Charity themselves would also be increased even if concupiscence were not present, as is evident in the Angels, and in Adam innocent, in whom Charity would have been increased confess. cap. 29. He loves thee less who loves something with thee which he does not love for thy sake.

PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. primo, dist. 27. part. 2. quaest. 2. Formae intenduntur per accessum ad terminum, et impermixtionem contrarii, ex Aristotele 3. Top. cap. 4. et 3. Phys. textu 19. sed quo minuitur concupiscentia, edaugetur, et perficitur Charitas in via, ex D. Augustino Lib. 83. qq. quaest. 36. et in Enchir. cap. penultimo; quod est 121. intenditur enim fervor Charitatis, qui ad perfectionem deducit, licet et gradus ipsi Charitatis augeantur, etiamsi non adesset concupiscentia, sicut patet in Angelis, et in Adamo innocente, in quibus aucta esset Charitas confess. cap. 29. Minus te amat, qui aliquid tecum amat, quod non propter te amat.

Question XIV: Whether charity can be diminished

1 The holy Doctor answers, Charity is diminished as to fervor. And although by venial sin one disposes oneself to the ruin of Charity; yet God does not on that demerit, congruously, diminish charity; just as he increases it from the disposition of good acts, because God is more prone to show mercy than to punish. Hence the following objection is solved.

Respondet S. Doctor, minui Charitatem quoad fervorem. Quamvis autem per veniale peccatum se disponat ad ruinam Charitatis; tamen non minuit Deus ex hoc demerito congruo charitatem; sicut auget ex dispositione actuum bonorum, quia pronior est Deus ad miserendum, quam ad puniendum. Hinc solvitur sequens obiectio.

2 You object secondly. As man advances while profiting, so he falls back; but by progress Charity is increased: Therefore while he falls back, it is diminished.

Obiicies secundo. Sicut homo progreditur proficiens, ita retrocedit; sed per profectum augetur Charitas: Ergo dum retrocedit, minuitur.

3 The holy Doctor answers, from what has been said, that man in falling back is only weakened as to fervor, because Charity is not destroyed except by the mortal contrary; while he profits, he ascends as to the degrees of Charity meritoriously. Moreover God is more prone to bestow graces than to inflict punishments.

> Respondet S. Doctor, ex dictis, hominem retrocedendo solum debilitari quoad fervorem, quia Charitas non destruitur, nisi a mortali contrario, dum autem proficit, ascendit quoad gradus Charitatis meritorie. Deinde pronior est Deus ad gratias, quam ad poenas immittendas.

4 You object thirdly. That which is the cause of its own weakening in the term is the cause of diminution in the way; but the will in aversion is the cause of the destruction of Charity: Therefore also in disposition it is the cause of diminution.

> Obiicies tertio. Id, quod est causa suae debilitationis in termino, est causa diminutionis in via; sed arbitrium in aversione est causa destructionis Charitatis: Ergo et in dispositione est causa diminutionis.

5 The holy Doctor answers, by denying the Major: for a substantial form is destroyed only in the term, and no part of it in the time of the dispositions.

> Respondet S. Doctor, negando Maiorem: forma enim substantialis destruitur solum in termino, et nulla pars eius in tempore dispositionum.

6 He answers secondly, that the Major is true when the disposition and the term are of the same rational character; but in our case the term is mortal sin; the disposition, however, is venial.

> Respondet secundo, Maiorem esse veram, quando dispositio, et terminus sunt eiusdem rationis; at in casu nostro, terminus est peccatum mortale; dispositio autem est veniale.

7 He answers thirdly, that Charity depends on the Divine influence and acceptance; and thus God increases it, accepting the works; nor does he impute venial sins to this penalty.

> Respondet tertio, Charitatem pendere a Divina influentia, et acceptatione; et ita auget, acceptans opera; neque venialia ad hanc poenam imputat.

8 You object fourthly. Opposites naturally come to be about the same thing; but charity is increased: Therefore it is also diminished.

> Obiicies quarto. Opposita nata sunt fieri circa idem; sed charitas augetur: Ergo et minuitur.

9 The holy Doctor answers, granting the Major, unless one be present by nature and the other not: increase is in Charity by nature, with the acceptance of God added; but diminution comes only from our own will: Therefore.

> Respondet S. Doctor, Maiorem veram, nisi alterum insit per naturam, alterum non sit: augmentum inest ex natura Charitati, addita Dei acceptatione; diminutio autem ex nostro arbitrio tantum venit: Ergo.

10 You object fifthly. Things that are separable can be separated; but the first degrees of Charity were without the degrees added by increase: Therefore.

> Obiicies quinto. Quae sunt separabilia, possunt separari; sed primi gradus Charitatis erant sine gradibus additis per augmentum: Ergo.

11 The holy Doctor answers, that there is nothing to separate them, and therefore they cannot be separated; for neither can we do it, who do not physically influence the habit of Charity; nor yet God, who does not influence it except to destruction, and indeed with man first turning himself away.

> Respondet S. Doctor, nihil esse quod eos separet, ideo nequeunt separari; non enim nos id possumus, qui non influimus physice in Charitatis habitum; neque etiam Deus, qui non influit nisi ad destructionem, et quidem homine se prius avertente.

Question XV: Whether charity can be lost, and how

1 Of old there was the error of the Jovinians, who said that Charity and grace, once had, cannot be lost. So reports D. Jerome Lib. 1 [contra Iovinianum] and 1 against the same.

> An Charitas corrumpi queat, et quomodo.
> Fuit antiquitus error Ioviniani dicentis, charitatem, et gratiam semel habitam, amitti non posse. Sic refert D. Hieronymus Lib. 1. et 1. contra eundem.

2 In that error was also Pelagius, as is clear from D. Augustine Lib. de haeresibus, cap. 88. Likewise the Beghards and Beguines, as is clear from the Clementine, Ad nostram. Wycliffe, as Vega reports Lib. 12 super Concilium, cap. 22. Finally Calvin, who devoured nearly all heresies, swallowed this one too Lib. 3 Instit. cap. 4. Bellarmine reports and refutes them Lib. 3 de Iustific. cap. 14. Bouetius demonstr. 2 Symb. 2 art. 3. Valencia 1. 2 disp. 3 q. 2 puncto 4. S. Bonaventure calls this error madness.

> In eo errore fuit etiam Pelagius, ut constat ex D. Augustino Lib. de haeresibus, cap. 88. Similiter Beguardi, et Beguinae, ut constat ex Clementina, Ad nostram. Vuicleph, ut refert Vega Lib. 12. super Concilium, cap. 22. Tandem Calvinus, qui omnes fere devoravit haereses, hanc quoque deglutivit Lib. 3. Instit. cap. 4. eos refert, et refellit Bellarminus Lib. 3. de Iustific. cap. 14. Bouetius demonst. 2. Symb. 2. art. 3. Valentia 1. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 2. puncto 4. Hunc errorem S. Bonaventura vocat insaniam.

3 Yet the true and Catholic de fide teaching is that a just man can fall from Charity.

> Vera tamen, et Catholica de fide sententia est, posse iustum cadere a Charitate.

4 It is proved by D. Bonaventure first by examples recounted many times in Scripture.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. primo exemplis in Scriptura pluries enarratis.

5 For first Adam and Eve, established in grace, sinned most grievously; whence the sin of Adam found death Rom. 5. By one man sin entered into this world, and by sin death.

> Primo enim Adam, et Eva, in gratia constituti, gravissime peccarunt; unde peccatum Adae mortem invenit Rom. 5. Per unum hominem peccatum intravit in mundum, et per peccatum mors.

6 Next Saul was just; for so you have 1 Reg. 9. Saul was elect and good: and there was not among the sons of Israel a man better than he. The same is intimated cap. 15 and 16, and adduced by D. Augustine Lib. 2 ad Simplicianum, quaest. 1. Cyprian Lib. 1 epist. 5. Whence you see Calvin lying, who denies it.

> Deinde Saul erat iustus; Sic enim habes primo Reg. 9. Erat Saul electus, et bonus: et non erat vir de filiis Israel melior illo. Idiplum insinuatur cap. 15. et 16. et afferunt D. Augustinus Lib. 2. ad Simplicianum, quaest. 1. Cyprianus Lib. 1. epist. 5. Ex quo vides mentiri Calvinum, id negantem.

7 Accordingly David was so just that of him it was said, Act. 13. I have found David the man after my own heart, who shall do all my wills. This testimony was taken from 1 Reg. 16. But who will deny that he sinned gravely by the homicide of Urias and adultery with Bethsabee? Surely his penitential Psalms openly testify to his repentance, which presupposes sin.

Proinde David adeo iustus erat, ut de eo dictum sit, Act. 13. Inveni David virum secundum cor meum, qui faciet omnes voluntates meas. Sumptum est autem hoc testimonium ex primo Reg. 16. At eum graviter peccasse homicidio Uriae, et adulterio cum Bethsabea, quis negabit? Sane Psalmi eius poenitentiales aperte testantur poenitentiam ipsius, quae peccatum supponit.

8 The son of David also, Solomon, was just; for of him 2 Reg. 7. the Lord says: I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a son; and cap. 12. And he called his name Solomon, and the Lord loved him. And he sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, and called his name, Beloved of the Lord, because the Lord loved him. He was the son of David, a holy man, from which Calvin and Peter Martyr infer that he was holy. But that this man in old age fell from justice, Scripture testifies 3 Reg. 11. where his Idolatries are enumerated, and his filthy loves with forbidden women Exodi 34, and he is proclaimed condemned by many holy Fathers, whom Serlogus reports in the Antilogiae of the Canticle, Pineda de rebus Salomonis, and others. Hear D. Augustine Lib. 22 cont. Faustum, cap. 88. What shall I say of Solomon? Whom holy Scripture vehemently charges and condemns; and it commemorates nothing at all of his repentance or of God's indulgence toward him.

Filius etiam Davidis Salomon erat iustus, de eo enim 2. Reg. 7. ait Dominus: Ego ero illi in Patrem, et ipse erit mihi in filium, et cap. 12. Et vocavit nomen eius Salomon, et Dominus dilexit eum. Misitque in manu Nathan prophetae, et vocavit nomen eius, Amabilis Domino, eo quod eum Dominus diligeret. Davidis viri sancti erat filius, ex quo inferunt Calvinus, et Petrus Martyr, fuisse sanctum. Hunc autem virum in senectute a iustitia excidisse, testatur Scriptura 3. Reg. 11. ubi Idolatriae eius recensentur, et spurci amores in foeminas vetitas Exodi 34. et a pluribus SS. PP. damnatus conclamatur, quos referunt Serlogus in Antilogiarum Cant. Pineda de rebus Salomonis, et alii. Audi D. Augustinum Lib. 22. cont. Faustum, cap. 88. De Salomone quid dicam? Quem vehementer arguit sancta Scriptura, atque condemnat; nihilque de poenitentia eius, vel in eum indulgentia Dei, omnino commemorat.

9 Let us come to the just of the New Testament. Peter without doubt was just, of whom Matth. 16. Blessed art thou Simon Bar-Iona. And Ioan. 13. He who is washed, needeth not but to wash his feet, etc. And you are clean, but not all. For he knew who was about to betray him. Therefore he acclaims all the Apostles as just, Judas excepted; and yet he sinned lethally, denying Christ, as he notes from D. Augustine tract. 66 in Ioan. S. Bonaventure ad eum locum, and the Magdeburgenses confess it Centur. 1 Lib. 2 cap. 10.

Veniamus ad iustos novi testamenti, Petrus sine dubio iustus erat, de quo Matth. 16. Beatus es Simon Bar-Iona. Et Ioan. 13. Qui lotus est, non indiget, nisi ut lavet pedes, etc. Et vos mundi estis, sed non omnes. Sciebat enim quis esset eum traditurus. Ideo omnes Apostolos iustos acclamat, Iuda excepto; et tamen lethaliter peccavit, negando Christum, ut notat ex D. Augustino tract. 66. in Ioan. S. Bonavent. ad eum locum, et fatentur Magdeburgenses Centur. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 10.

10 Iudas therefore was previously just, as D. Jerome shows Lib. 3 adversus Pelagianos, from those words of the Lord, Ioan. 17. Father, those whom thou hast given me I have kept, and none of them is lost but the son of perdition, as S. Bonaventure saw in his commentary.

Ivdas igitur fuit antea iustus, ut ostendit D. Hieron. Lib. 3. adversus Pelagianos, ex illis verbis Domini, Ioan. 17. Pater quos dedisti mihi custodivi, et nemo ex eis periit, nisi filius perditionis, ut vidit S. Bonau. in commentario.

11 Similarly the other Apostles, whom I showed above to be just, doubted in faith, as it is had in Mark and Luke, last chapter.

> Similiter alii Apostoli, quos supra iustos ostendi, dubitaverunt in fide, ut habetur. Marci, et Lucae ultimo.

12 Some disciples also Ioannis 6. went back and left Christ.

> Aliqui etiam discipuli Ioannis 6. retro abeuntes, Christum dereliquerunt.

13 It is proved secondly by S. Thomas from the testimonies of Scripture asserting it. Prima Corinth. 10. He who thinks himself to stand, let him take heed lest he fall. Ezech. 18. When the just man shall turn himself away from his justice and do iniquity, he shall die in it. The same is had in chapter 33. Bouer adds these.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doctore testimoniis Scripturarum, id asserentibus. Prima Corinth. 10. Qui se existimat stare, videat ne cadat. Ezech. 18. Cum averterit se iustus a iustitia sua, et fecerit iniquitatem, morietur in illa. Idem habetur capite 33. Subsumit Bouer.

14 By yourselves justice stands in Faith alone: Therefore it also is lost. Lucae 8. For that on the rock, who when they hear the word with joy receive it; but these have no roots, for they believe for a while, and in time of temptation fall away. To which passage S. Thomas adds Deuter. 32. of the people: He forsook God his saviour. And Oseae 7. Woe to them, for they have departed from me. Ioan. 15. Every branch in me not bearing fruit, he will take it away. Where S. Bonaventure observes that these branches were once living, and are taken away because the graces of God are lacking, contrary to the warning Heb. 12. and are taken away stripped of grace and cast into the fire, as D. Augustine expounds tract. 81.

> Per vos iustitia stat in sola Fide: Ergo et haec amittitur. Lucae 8. Nam quod super petram, qui cum gaudio suscipiunt verbum, sed hi radices non habent, sed ad tempus credunt, et in tempore tentationis recedunt. Ad quem locum S. Doctor addit id Deuter. 32. de populo: Recessit a Deo salutari suo. Et Oseae 7. Vae eis, quoniam recesserunt a me. Ioan. 15. Omnem palmitem, in me non ferentem fructum, tollet eum. Ubi observat S. Bonavent. palmites hos vivos aliquando fuisse, et tolli, quia desunt gratiae Dei contra monitum Heb. 12. tolli autem privatos gratia, et mitti in ignem, ut exponit D. Augustinus tract. 81.

15 Matth. 24. Iniquity shall abound, and the Charity of many shall grow cold. But he that shall persevere to the end, he shall be saved. Prima Cor. 9. I chastise my body, lest perhaps, when I have preached to others, I myself should become a reprobate. Galat. 5. You are made void of Christ, who are justified in the Law; you are fallen from grace. Prima Timot. first chapter. Some have suffered shipwreck concerning the faith. And cap. 4. In the last days some shall depart from the Faith; and cap. 6. Which some seeking after, have erred from the Faith. Heb. 6. It is impossible for those who were once illuminated, have tasted also the heavenly gift, and been made partakers of the Holy Spirit; have nevertheless tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, and are fallen away, to be renewed again unto repentance. Apoc. 2. I have somewhat against thee: that thou hast left thy first Charity; be mindful from whence thou art fallen, etc.

> Matth. 24. Abundabit iniquitas, refrigescet Charitas multorum. Qui autem perseveraverit usque finem, hic salvus erit. Prima Cor. 9. Castigo corpus meum, ne forte cum aliis praedicavero, ipse reprobus efficiar. Galat. 5. Evacuati estis a Christo, qui in Lege iustificamini, a gratia excidistis. Prima Timot. primo. Quidam circa fidem naufragaverunt. Et cap. 4. In novissimis diebus discedent quidam a Fide; et cap. 6. Quam quidam appetentes, erraverunt a Fide. Heb. 6. Impossibile est, eos, qui semel illuminati sunt, gustaverunt etiam donum caeleste, et participes facti sunt Spiritus sancti; gustaverunt nihilominus bonum Dei verbum, virtutesque saeculi venturi, et prolapsi sunt, renovari iterum ad poenitentiam. Apoc. 2. Habeo adversum te pauca: quod Charitatem primam reliquisti; memor esto unde excideris, etc.

16 It is PROVED thirdly from the definition of the Church. In the Council of Vienne, as is had in the Clementine cis; of Trent sess. 6 cap. 12 and 13 and can. 23. where it is said: If anyone shall say that a man once justified cannot sin again, nor lose grace, and therefore that he who falls and sins was never truly justified; let him be anathema.

> PROBATUR tertio ex definitione Ecclesiae. In Conciliis Vien. ut habetur in Clement. cis. Tridentino sess. 6. cap. 12. et 13. et can. 23. ubi dicitur: Si quis dixerit, hominem semel iustificatum, amplius peccare non posse, neque gratiam amittere, atque ideo eum, qui labitur, et peccat, nunquam vere fuisse iustificatum; anathema sit.

17 It is PROVED fourthly by S. Thomas from the authorities of the Fathers which the Master reports. To these add the holy Augustine Lib. de corrept. et gratia, cap. 13 and Lib. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 14. Cyprian Lib. de Lapsis, Ambrose exhort. ad Poenit. Jerome Lib. 2 contra Iovinianum, Gregory lib. 1 moral. c. 42 and lib. 30 cap. 32. Chrysostom homil. 24 in Matth.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore authoritatibus Patrum, quas refert Magister. His adde SS. Augustinum Lib. de corrept. et gratia, cap. 13. et Lib. de praedest. Sanctorum, cap. 14. Cyprianum Lib. de Lapsis*, Ambros.* exhort. ad Poenit. Hieron. Lib. 2. contra Iovinianam*, Gregor.* lib. 1. moral. c. 42. et lib. 30. cap. 32. Chrysost. homil. 24. in Matth.

18 It is PROVED fifthly by S. Thomas: It is certain that baptized infants are justified and enriched with grace and Charity, and yet many in adult age sin gravely, even by falling away from the Faith. The major is conceded also by the Lutherans; indeed Calvin, Peter Martyr, and Bucer assert it even without baptism, as Bellarmine reports, who presses this argument.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doctore: Certum est, parvulos baptizatos iustificari, et ditari gratia et Charitate, et tamen multi in aetate adulta peccant graviter, etiam deficiendo a Fide. Maior conceditur etiam a Lutheranis, imo sine baptismo id asserunt Calvinus, Petrus Martyr, Bucerus, ut refert Bellarminus, qui hanc rationem urget.

19 But who will say that all of them are predestinated and impeccable? Yet if all baptized in infancy are predestinated and cannot perish, by what reasoning do we cry all the baptized children of Antichrist and miserably fallen?

> Quis autem dicet, eos omnes esse praedestinatos, et impeccabiles? At si omnes baptizati in infantia praedestinati sunt, et perire non possunt, qua ratione nos omnes baptizatos, filios clamant Antechristi, et misere elapsos?

20 It is PROVED sixthly. It is easier to fall away from Charity than to make progress; and to fall than to rise; it is easier also to lose Charity than faith; because when Faith is lost, Charity is lost, but not the reverse; but it is possible for a man who has not Charity to acquire it: it is possible also for a man having Faith to fall away from the Faith: Therefore it is easier for one having Charity to fall from it.

> PROBATUR sexto. Facilius est deficere a Charitate, quam proficere; et cadere, quam resurgere; facilius est etiam perdere Charitatem, quam fidem; quia perdita Fide, perditur Charitas, sed non e contra; sed possibile est, hominem, qui non habet charitatem, eam acquirere: possibile est etiam, hominem habentem Fidem, a Fide deficere: Ergo facilius est, habentem Charitatem ab ea cadere.

21 It is PROVED seventhly by S. Thomas: The state of the way is such that free will is free for good and for evil, which is clear from so many precepts, exhortations, promises for good works, threats against sins, with which the whole of Scripture is filled for the present state; all of which would be in vain if man could not fall and did not have liberty toward either.

PROBATUR septimo a S. Doctore: Status viae est talis, ut liberum arbitrium ad bonum, et ad malum sit liberum, quod constat ex tot praeceptis, exhortationibus, promissis pro bonis operibus, minis peccatorum, quibus tota referta est Scriptura pro statu praesenti; quae omnia essent frustra, si non posset homo cadere, et ad utrumque libertatem haberet.

22 The heretics OBJECT with many authorities, Cant. 8. Many waters cannot extinguish Charity.

OBIICIUNT haeretici multas authoritates, Cant. 8. Aquae multae non potuerunt extinguere Charitatem.

23 S. Thomas responds in the Diaeta, tit. 5 cap. 2. that Charity is that fire of which Lucae 12. I am come to cast fire on the earth, and what will I, if it be kindled? and it is kindled by our will cooperating, as S. Thomas observes ad 12 Lucae. And so Charity is not extinguished so long as we do not will it to be extinguished. Water indeed that is natural extinguishes fire naturally; but waters that are not natural, among which tribulations also are reckoned, do not extinguish Charity. S. Ambrose Lib. 1 de Iacob cap. 7. and Gregory to this passage understand tribulations by these waters: for Charity endureth all things, from prima Cor. 13.

Respondet S. Doctor in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. Charitatem esse ignem illum, de quo Lucae 12. Ignem veni mittere in terram, et quid volo, nisi ut accendatur? accenditur autem arbitrio nostro cooperante, ut observat S. Doctor ad 12. Lucae. Itaque Charitas non extinguitur quamdiu nos nolumus eam extingui. Aqua sane naturalis, naturaliter extinguit ignem; sed aquae non naturales, inter quas etiam tribulationes computantur, non extinguunt Charitatem. Per has autem aquas intelligunt tribulationes S. Ambrosius Lib. 1. de Iacob cap. 7. Gregorius ad hunc locum: Charitas enim omnia suffert, ex prima Cor. 13.

24 They OBJECT secondly with Ioan. 4. Whoever shall drink of this water shall not thirst forever; but there shall be made in him a fountain of water springing up unto life eternal.

OBIICIUNT secundo id Ioan. 4. Qui biberit ex aqua hac, non sitiet in aeternum; sed fiet in eo fons aquae salientis in vitam aeternam.

25 S. Thomas responds to this passage that he who, drinking of this water, rests in it forever, does not thirst for the waters of concupiscence; and while he refuses the waters of the concupiscence of Egypt, he does not lose these waters: For they that drink me shall yet thirst. Eccl. 24, says the Wise Man. Therefore if beside the precious fountain of spiritual goods, which when had are ever more dear, standing in them we hold our lips greedily, as St. Augustine says Lib. 1 de doct. Christiana, cap. 38. and Gregory homil. 36 in Evang. and ever drink greedily, he will give perennial waters. See also collation 21 of S. Bonaventure on cap. 4 Ioannis, where he treats of it admirably.

Respondet S. Doctor ad hunc locum; illum, qui bibens ex aqua hac, semper in ea quiescit, non sitire aquas concupiscentiae; et dum renuit aquas AEgypti concupiscentiae, non amittere aquas istas: Qui enim bibunt me, adhuc sitient. Eccl. 24. ait Sapiens. Igitur si iuxta pretiosum fontem bonorum spiritualium, quae habita semper Chariora sunt, stantes in eis labia avide teneamus, ut ait Sancti, Augustinus Lib. 1. de doct. Christiana, cap. 38. et Gregorius homil. 36. in Evang. semperque avide biberimus; perennes dabit aquas. Vide etiam collationem 21. S. Bonav. in cap. 4. Ioannis, ubi egregie differit.

26 They OBJECT thirdly with Rom. 8. For I am sure that neither death, nor life, etc. shall be able to separate us from the Charity of God.

OBIICIUNT tertio id Rom. 8. Certus sum enim, quia neque mors, neque vita, etc. poterit nos separare a Charitate Dei.

27 S. Thomas responds in the Diaeta, tit. 5 cap. 2, and de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 2 and 7 and 8, and de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, dist. 6 and Itinere 4 dist. 5 art. 2. with D. Augustine Lib. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 11. that the power of Charity is here expressed, that if it burn in us it makes us undaunted against all tribulations; provided however that we wish to be constant, as Bellarmine also says; and therefore Augustine warns in the same place that Charity can be lost in the way.

> Respondet S. Doctor in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 2. et de sex alis Seraphim, cap. 2. et 7. et 8. et de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, dist. 6. et Itinere 4. dist. 5. art. 2. cum D. Augustino Lib. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 11. hic exprimi virtutem Charitatis, ut si ardeat in nobis, reddat nos intrepidos contra omnes tribulationes; si tamen nos constantes esse velimus, ut ait etiam Bellarminus; ideo enim ibidem S. Augustinus monet, posse Charitatem in via amitti.

28 S. Thomas responds secondly de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, Itinere 4 dist. 5, and in the little work on the Incendium amoris, cap. 2. that the Apostle speaks with a certain vehemence of resolve, inflamed in prayer, and promising to himself a certain moral security from the grace of God.

> Respondet secundo S. Doctor de septem Itineribus AEternitatis, Itinere 4. dist. 5. et opusculo Incendii amoris, cap. 2. loqui Apostolum ex quadam vehementia propositi, in oratione accensi, et Dei gratia moralem quandam securitatem sibi promittentis.

29 They OBJECT fourthly with prima Corinrh. 13. Charity never falleth away.

> OBIICIUNT quarto id prima Corinrh. 13. Charitas nunquam excidit.

30 S. Thomas responds 3 dist. 31 art. 3 quaest. 1. that it does not fall away of itself, because both in this life and in the future it has its place, as the Gloss says: but in contrast to Faith and Hope, which cease from their entity; the Apostle does not will, however, that no one fall from Charity. S. Thomas also refers to the responses of the Master.

> Respondet S. Doctor 3. dist. 31. art. 3. quaest. 1. eam ex se non excidere, quia et in hac vita, et in futura locum suum habet, ut ait Glossa: ad oppositum sane Fidei, et Spei, quae ex sua entitate cessant; non vult autem Apostolus, nullum a Charitate excidere. Remittit S. Doctor etiam ad responsiones Magistri.

31 They OBJECT fifthly, prima Ioan. 3. Whoever is born of God sinneth not: for his seed abideth in him, and he cannot sin; because he is born of God.

> OBIICIUNT quinto*, prima Ioan. 3.* Qui natus est ex Deo, peccatum non facit: quoniam semen illius in eo manet, et non potest peccare; quoniam ex Deo natus est.

32 It is answered from D. Augustine tract. 5 in epist. Ioan. Jerome Lib. 1 adversus Pelag. and Lib. 2 contra Iovinianum, that while grace abides in us, preserving us in the state of sons of God, we cannot sin; for on that supposition Charity abides, which is contrary to aversion from God: This response is also D. Bonaventure's ad tertium.

> Respondetur ex D. Augustino tract. 5. in epist. Ioan. Hieronymo Lib. 1. adversus Pelag. et Lib. 2. contra Iovinianum*, manente gratia in nobis, in esse filiorum Dei conservante, nos peccare non posse; nam ex suppositione manet Charitas, contraria aversioni a Deo: Haec responsio est etiam D. Bonaventurae* ad tertium.

33 They also ADD the presumptuous saying attributed to Augustine epist. 111. Charity which can be deserted was never true.

> Addunt etiam, dictum praesumptum Augustini epist. 111. Charitas, quae deseri potest, nunquam vera fuit.

34 It is answered, that this is not D. Augustine's.

> Respondetur, illud non esse D. Augustini.

35 S. Thomas responds secondly 3 dist. 31 dub. 1. that the major is true, that is, with respect to the accomplishment of the End, whence it is rather called vain, or void of the end of Faith.

> Respondet secundo S. Doctor 3. dist. 31. dub. 1. maiorem esse veram, idest quo ad confectionem Finis, unde potius dicitur vana, seu fine Fide.

36 You OBJECT first, Charity is stronger than natural love; but the latter unites indissolubly: Therefore.

> OBIICIES primo, Fortior est Charitas amore naturali; sed hic unit indissolubiliter: Ergo.

37 S. Thomas responds, that Charity is not more noble than natural love in indissolubility, but in object and term and supernatural end.

> Respondet S. Doctor, Charitatem non esse nobiliorem amore naturali in indissolubilitate, sed in obiecto, et termino, ac fine supernaturali.

38 You OBJECT secondly. A weaker cannot expel a stronger with more force; but Charity is strong as death: Therefore.

> Obiicies secundo. Non potest validius ab infirmiori expelli; sed Charitas est fortis, ut mors: Ergo.

39 S. Thomas responds; that Charity is not expelled in combat by sin, but fails from the demerit of the sinner and God refusing influx.

> Respondet S. Doctor; non pelli Charitatem in pugna a peccato, sed deficere ex demerito peccantis, et Deo negante influxum.

40 You OBJECT thirdly; Because sin arises either from love or from perverse fear, from D. Bernard Lib. de diligendo Deo, cap. 8. but one having Charity admits neither a perverse fear that depresses, nor a love that wrongly inflames: Therefore.

> Obiicies tertio; Quia peccatum oritur, vel ex amore, vel ex timore pravo, ex D. Bernardo Lib. de diligendo Deo, cap. 8. sed habens Charitatem non admittit, aut timorem prave deprimentem, aut amorem male incendentem: Ergo.

41 S. Thomas responds, that these evil affections are not actually in the composite sense together with Charity prior in time to sin; yet they can be induced previously in origin and expel Charity; for free will, made straight by Charity, can be curved by cupidity.

> Respondet S. Doctor, hos malos affectus non esse actu in sensu composito cum Charitate prius tempore peccato; possunt tamen induci prius origine, et expellere Charitatem; nam liberum arbitrium, rectum a Charitate, potest cupiditate incurvari.

42 You OBJECT fourthly: The will follows the predominant affection; but this is Charity: Therefore.

> Obiicies quarto: Arbitrium sequitur affectionem praedominantem; sed haec est Charitas: Ergo.

43 It is answered, that the will follows the affection actually predominant, but not the habit; therefore, although Charity predominate by habit, nevertheless an act can arise that turns the will away, while man established in grace forgets God and thinks on the things of the world.

Respondetur, arbitrium sequi affectionem actu praedominantem, non autem habitu; ideo, licet praedominetur habitu Charitas, tamen potest actus insurgere avertens arbitrium, dum homo in gratia constitutus, Dei obliviscitur, et cogitat, quae sunt mundi.

44 You OBJECT fifthly. One having Charity has Christ for foundation, and the Holy Spirit for aid.

Obiicies quinto. Habens Charitatem, habet Christum pro fundamento, et Spiritum sanctum pro adiutorio.

45 It is answered, that Christ sustains only those willing, and the Holy Spirit aids those cooperating. But how mortal sin destroys Charity, physically or morally, was disputed prima secundae, Tract. de Peccato, disp. 1 quaest. 6. where I showed that grace and sin are opposed morally, not physically, with D. Bonaventure in the places there adduced, and in 3 dist. 31 a. 1, Scotus in 4 dist. 16 quaest. 2 against the Thomists.

Respondetur, Christum sustentare solum volentes, et Spiritum sanctum adiuvare cooperantes. Quomodo vero peccatum mortale destruat Charitatem, physice, an moraliter, disputatum est prima secundae, Tract. de Peccato, disp. 1. quaest. 6. ubi ostendi, gratiam, et peccatum opponi moraliter, non physice, cum D. Bonavent. locis ibi adductis, et in 3. dist. 31. a. 1. Scoto in 4. dist. 16. quaest. 2. contra Thomistas.

46 It is proved also by D. Bonaventure to the second. Man does not attain the effective production of Charity, because he cannot attain creation: Therefore neither annihilation. For every agent, as it acts from a subject, so it resolves its effect into a subject.

Probatur etiam a D. Bonavent. ad secundum. Homo non attingit effective productionem Charitatis, eo quod nequit attingere creationem: Ergo neque annihilationem. Omne enim agens, sicuti agit e subiecto, ita in subiecto resolvit.

47 Whence the response of Calpensis fell, taken from the corruption of natural forms, insofar as something which did not produce a form can destroy it by producing something contrary to it. This response, I say, is vain; because sin is not a formal entity able to expel Charity; but it is a privation: And if it were a form, it would not have annihilative virtue, just as it has not creative virtue.

Unde ruit responsio Calpensis, sumpta ex corruptione formarum naturalium, quatenus potest aliquid, quod non produxit formam, eam destruere, producendo aliquid ei contrarium. Hoc inquam responsum vanum est; quia peccatum non est entitas formalis, potens expellere Charitatem; sed est privatio: Et si esset forma, non haberet virtutem annihilativam, sicuti non habet creativam.

Question XVI: What is the proximate subject of charity

1 I assert with D. Bonaventure, passim, that it is the will. All subscribe to this assertion.

Quaenam sit subiectum Charitatis proximum.

Assero cum D. Bonavent. passim, esse voluntatem. Omnes subscribunt huic asserto.

2 It is proved by S. Thomas in 2 Sent. dist. 26 q. 5, and in 3 dist. 23 q. 2, and dist. 27 q. 1 and following. A habit is in some power as in a subject, in which is the act whose principle is the habit itself together with the power: but the act of love is in the will: Therefore also the habit of Charity, which is the principle of the act. The minor is proved: for the love of Charity is an appetite, which is borne toward the highest good, known by the intellect.

Probatur a S. Doctore in 2. dist. 26. quaest. 5. et in 3. dist. 23. quaest. 2. et dist. 27. quaest. 1. et sequentibus. Habitus est in aliqua potentia, tanquam in subiecto, in qua est actus, cuius principium est ipse habitus una cum potentia: sed actus dilectionis est in voluntate: Ergo et habitus Charitatis, qui est principium actus. Minor probatur: nam dilectio Charitatis est appetitus, qui fertur in summum bonum, intellectu cognitum.

3 But S. Thomas teaches that it is in the concupiscible part, as Hope is in the Irascible; and Faith in the rational, as has often been said disput. 1.

Docet vero S. Doctor, eam esse in parte concupiscibili, sicuti in Irascibili est Spes; et in rationali Fides, ut saepe dictum est disput. 1.

4 He does not will, however, that it be in the sensitive concupiscible, which alone D. Thomas seems to acknowledge: but in the concupiscible of the rational appetite, which certainly is not lacking the powers and faculties by which it excels the sensitive, as Aragon. q. 24 a. 1, Tannetus disp. 2 q. 2 dub. 3 note; of these I treated in prima secundae, Tract. 5, which is on Grace, disp. 2 q. 4.

Non vult autem, esse in Concupiscibili sensitiva, quam solam videtur agnoscere D. Thomas: sed in concupiscibili appetitus rationalis, qui profecto non caret viribus, et potentiis, quibus praecellit sensitivis, ut notant Aragon. quaest. 24. art. 1. Tannetus disp. 2. quaest. 2. dub. 3. De his egi prima secundae, Tract. 5. qui de Gratia, disp. 2. quaest. 4.

Question XVII: Whether God alone is to be loved out of charity, or the neighbor also

1 There are two precepts of Charity: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, etc. And thy neighbor as thyself, Deut. 6. Matth. 22. Therefore the love of neighbor is included in the object of Charity. Hence John 1, cap. 4: This commandment we have from God: that he who loves God should love also his brother.

An solus Deus ex Charitate diligendus sit; an etiam proximus.

Duo praecepta Charitatis sunt: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, etc. Et proximum, sicut te ipsum, Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. Itaque amor proximi includitur in obiecto Charitatis. Ideo Ioannes prima, cap. 4. Hoc mandatum habemus a Deo: ut qui diligit Deum, diligat et fratrem suum.

2 He distinguishes the ways in which the acts regard the neighbor together with God: either as distinct objects terminating, or as the one, namely God, being the object and the ultimate end; while the neighbor is the object as a means loved for the sake of the end.

Distinguit autem, quibus modis actus respiciant proximum simul cum Deo, vel ut obiecta distincta terminantia, vel ut alter, nempe Deus, sit obiectum, et finis ultimus; proximus vero sit obiectum, tanquam medium amatum in finem.

3 If God is loved as the object and the other as the ultimate end, then one and the same motion and act can tend to both, because by the same motion we will the end and the means as such ordered to it. And thus we love the neighbor by willing to God this good, namely the neighbor; and therefore what is given to the neighbor is said to be given to God, Matth. 25. Therefore, since we love the neighbor in order to God, that he may be in God; under one aspect we love God and the neighbor, and so with one act, as St. Thomas and St. Bonaventure say in the arguments in the first place.

Si est in unum, tanquam in obiectum, et in alterum, ut finem ultimum; sic potest uno, et eodem motu, et actu tendere in utrumque, quia eodem motu volumus finem, et media, ut talia ad eum. Sic autem diligimus proximum, volendo Deo hoc bonum, scilicet proximum, et ideo id etiam, quod datur proximo, dicitur datum Deo Matth. 25. Cum igitur diligamus proximum in ordine ad Deum, ut in Deo sit; sub una ratione diligimus Deum, et proximum, atque adeo uno actu, ut ait D. Thom. et D. Bonavent. in argumentis primo loco.

4 But if God and the neighbor are considered precisely as two objects terminating love, he distinguishes further: for to love is to will a good; but the good can be a twofold object of Charity: that which is willed, and the one to whom it is willed. If therefore God is compared with the neighbor uniformly, as the one to whom we will a good; then by one motion he is borne toward God, by another toward the neighbor, because they are loved as distinct termini, and one is more intense, the other more remiss; and thus two precepts require this. But if they are compared non-uniformly, so that the neighbor is the good that is desired, and God is the one to whom the good is desired, then with one act he loves the neighbor, and with that very act loves God.

> Quod si considerentur Deus, et proximus praecise, ut sunt duo obiecta, terminantia amorem, sic distinguit adhuc: Diligere enim, est velle bonum; potest autem bonum duplex esse obiectum Charitatis, et id, quod est volitum, et is, cui est volitum. Si igitur comparetur Deus cum proximo uniformiter, tanquam is, cui volumus bonum; sic alio motu fertur in Deum; alio in Proximum, quia amantur ut termini distincti, et unus est intensior, alter remissior; et ita duo praecepta exigunt; si autem comparentur difformiter, ut proximus sit bonum, quod optat, et Deus sit is, cui optatur bonum, sic uno actu amat Proximum; cumque amat Deo.

5 The Saintly Doctor asserts, therefore, first that God and the neighbor are loved by two acts, as material termini.

> Asserit igitur primo S. Doctor, duobus actibus amari Deum, et proximum, ut terminos materiales.

6 This is proved by the Saintly Doctor first: Motions are numbered by subject, time, and terminus or object; but the terminus or object of the love of God is one thing, and that of the love of the neighbor another: Therefore. The major is Aristotle's 5 Phys. text 38. The minor is clear from what has been said.

> Probatur a S. Doctore primo: Motus numerantur subiecto, tempore, et termino, sive obiecto; sed alius est terminus, sive obiectum dilectionis Dei; alius dilectionis Proximi: Ergo. Maior est Aristotelis 5. Phys. textu 38. Minor patet ex dictis.

7 It is proved second by the Saintly Doctor: What presupposes diverse considerations is also sought by diverse acts; but we cannot with one act foreknow God and the neighbor as precise termini: nor love them. The major is proved from 2 Top. cap. 4, in the declaration of locus 33.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doctore: Quod diversas considerationes praeexigit; diversis etiam actibus appetitur; sed non possumus uno actu praecognoscere Deum, et Proximum, ut terminos praecisos: neque amare. Maior probatur ex 2. Top. cap. 4. in declarat. loci 33.

8 It is PROVED third by the Saintly Doctor. The same motion cannot at once be more intense and more remiss; but the motion of love toward God is more intense than toward the neighbor: Therefore it is one and another.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore. Idem non potest esse motus simul intensior, et remissior; sed motus dilectionis in Deum est intensior, quam in proximum: Ergo est alius, et alius.

9 It is PROVED fourth by the Saintly Doctor: Peter and Paul are more conformed in the reason of a lovable object than Paul and God; but one motion of love cannot be toward Peter and Paul: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore, magis conformatur in ratione obiecti diligibilis Petrus, et Paulus, quam Paulus, et Deus; sed non potest unus motus dilectionis esse in Petrum, et Paulum: Ergo.

10 It is PROVED fifth by the Saintly Doctor. The precept regards the use and act of the virtue, but there are two precepts of Charity: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doctore. Praeceptum respicit usum, et actum virtutis, sed duo sunt praecepta Charitatis: Ergo.

11 He ASSERTS second, that there is one act toward God and the neighbor in the first way, as toward the means and the end, and as toward the good, Q. d. est Bonum, Cui.

> ASSERIT secundo, unum esse actum in Deum, et proximum primo modo, tanquam in medium, et finem, et tanquam in bonum, Q. d est Bonum, Cui.

12 It is PROVED by the Saintly Doctor first. The motion toward the end and toward the medium as such ordered to it is the same, because a motion is not numbered according to the difference of the medium but of the extremity; but the motion of Charity is toward God as toward the end, and toward the neighbor as the medium: Therefore.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore primo. Idem est motus in finem, et medium, ut tale est ad illum, quia motus non numeratur secundum differentiam medii, sed extremi; sed motus Charitatis est in Deum, tanquam in finem; et in proximum, ut medium: Ergo.

13 It is PROVED second by the Saintly Doct. Where there is one beloved, there is one act of love; for a motion is specified by its object, at least as regards us; but in the neighbor nothing is loved except God, by the act of Charity: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. Ubi est unum dilectum, ibi unus actus dilectionis; nam motus specificatur ab obiecto, saltem quo ad nos; sed in proximo non diligitur, nisi Deus, per actum Charitatis: Ergo.

14 BUT if you should say that to love the neighbor in himself on account of a rational nature like ours, or on account of his virtues, is not an act of Charity, as St. Bonaventure notes, this dist. 27. art. 2. quest. 2, and dist. 9. art. 2. quest. 4; St. Thomas 2. 2. quest. 109. art. 3. ad 2; Vasquez Lib. 1. de adorat. disp. 6. cap. 2, and Lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6; Caspensis de Charitate, disp. 3. sect. 1. The same hold Turrianus, Coninchius, and Arriaga, apud Mastrium disp. 6. quest. 22, of whom I shall treat in quest. 29.

> SI autem dicas, diligi proximum in seipso ob naturam rationalem nobis similem, vel ob eius virtutes, non est actus Charitatis, ut notat D. Bonavent. hac dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 2. et dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 109. art. 3. ad 2. Vasquez Lib. 1. de adorat. disp. 6. cap. 2. et Lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6. Caspensis de Charitate, disp. 3. sect. 1. Idem sentiunt Turrianus, Coninchius, et Arriaga apud Mastrium disp. 6. quaest. 22. de quo agam quaest. 29.

15 It is PROVED third: As the image of St. Peter is venerated in order to St. Peter with one act, as Damascene says Lib. 4. de Fide, cap. 17, because the honor of the image passes to the prototype; so too the love of the neighbor is referred to God; and hence there is one act by which God and the neighbor are loved, as referred to God the prototype.

> PROBATUR tertio; Sicut adoratur imago D. Petri in ordine ad D. Petrum uno actu, ut ait Damascenus Lib. 4. de Fide, cap. 17. quia honor imaginis transit ad prototypum; Sic etiam dilectio proximi refertur ad Deum; atque adeo unus est actus, quo diligitur Deus, et proximus, ut ad Deum prototypum.

16 In this, however, there is a disparity, because honor is not terminated in any way upon the image, but passes wholly to St. Peter; whereas the neighbor in some way terminates the act of love, and in this sense he is commanded to be loved by a distinct precept; even though in the said way, as end and medium, etc., they are loved by one act.

> In hoc tamen est disparitas, quia honor non terminatur ullo modo ad imaginem; sed totus transit ad D. Petrum; at proximus aliquo modo terminat actum amoris, et hoc sensu, diverso praecepto iubetur amare; esto modo dicto, ut finis, et medium, etc. uno actu amentur.

17 It is PROVED fourth: Where one thing is for the sake of another, there is only one; but the neighbor is loved for the sake of God: Therefore by one love. This, however, is true in such a way that they can also be the object of love as two termini.

> PROBATUR quarto: Ubi unum propter aliud, ibi est unum tantum; sed proximus diligitur propter Deum: Ergo una dilectione. Hoc tamen verum est, ita ut etiam tanquam duo termini, possint esse obiectum amoris.

18 It is PROVED fifth, because although there are several Divine persons, nevertheless they are loved by one love, because there is one objective reason of goodness: Similarly there is one reason of the highest goodness, on account of which God and the neighbor are loved.

> PROBATUR quinto, quia tametsi sint plures Divinae personae; tamen una amantur dilectione, quia una est ratio obiectiva bonitatis: Similiter una est ratio summae bonitatis, propter quam amatur Deus, et proximus.

19 He NOTES, however, that the reason in this case is diverse, because the terminating goodness of the neighbor and of God is not altogether the same, in the way in which the goodness of the three persons is, communicating in one essence; whence it stands in a different manner; and because from the diversity of comparisons arises the diversity of acts, while from the unity of the principal motivating reason arises the unity of the habit. Hence it is that the act by which God and the neighbor are loved is one, although the motions are one and another.

> ADVERTIT tamen, diversam esse in hoc rationem, quia non est eadem omnino terminativa bonitas proximi et Dei, eo modo, quo est bonitas trium personarum, communicantium in una essentia; unde differenti modo se habet; et quia ex diversitate comparationum consurgit diversitas actuum; ex unitate vero rationis principalis motivae exurgit unitas habitus; hinc est, ut actus, quo amatur Deus, et proximus, unus sit, licet motus alius, et alius.

Question XVIII: Whether charity is to be loved out of charity

1 I ASSERT that not only God, who is Charity, but also the habit and act of Charity are willed and loved by the very act of Charity itself.

> ASSERO, non solum Deum, qui idest Charitas, sed etiam habitum, et actum Charitatis esse volitum, et amatum ipso actu Charitatis.

2 It is PROVED by St. Bonavent. first, from St. Augustine 8. de Trinitate, chapter 7, on which St. Thomas also relies.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. primo, ex D. Augustino 8. de Trinitate, capite 7. quo nititur etiam D. Thom.

3 It is PROVED second by the same argument that St. Thomas uses. The object of the will is universal good. Therefore whatever falls under the aspect of good can be the object of the will and of its acts; and because the very willing of good is a certain good, the will, which is perfected when it reflects upon itself, can will this good; but that very willing of this good is supernatural, because it is willed in order to a supernatural friendship with God, while we wish this good of Charity to all; and similarly in ourselves, while we love love itself; indeed, we refer that love by Charity to the Divine friendship, and to God in himself, as Tannerus notes, disput. 2. quest. 3. dub. 1.

> PROBATUR secundo eodem argumento, quo utitur D. Thom. Voluntatis obiectum est bonum universale. Igitur quidquid sub ratione boni cadit, potest esse obiectum voluntatis, et actuum eius, et quia ipsum velle bonum, est quoddam bonum, potest voluntas, quae perficitur, dum supra se reflectitur, velle hoc bonum; at ipsam velle hoc bonum, est supernaturale, quia est volitum in ordine ad amicitiam supernaturalem cum Deo, dum omnibus optamus hoc bonum Charitatis; et similiter in nobis, dum ipsum amorem amamus; sane referimus illum Charitate ad Divinam amicitiam, atque ad Deum in se, ut notat Tannerus disput. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

4 It is PROVED third. We love our neighbor because we see him to have Charity: Therefore also Charity itself, on account of which we love that neighbor; because on account of which a thing is such, that thing is more so. But we love these by Charity because they are in order to God to be loved in himself.

> PROBATUR tertio. Amamus proximum, quia videmus, eum habere Charitatem: Ergo et ipsam Charitatem, propter quam amamus ipsum proximum; quia propter quod, unumquodque tale, et illud magis; diligimus autem haec Charitate, quia sunt in ordine ad Deum in se amandum.

5 You OBJECT first from St. Augustine Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 23: There are only four things lovable by Charity: God, ourselves, our neighbor, and the neighbor's body.

> OBIICIES primo ex D. Augustino Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 23. Quatuor tantum sunt amabilia Charitate, Deus, nos ipsi, proximus, et corpus proximi.

6 The Saintly Doctor answers that St. Augustine speaks of things to be loved with the love of friendship, that is, of those to whom good is wished; thus also St. Thomas.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, S. Augustinum loqui de amandis, amore amicitiae, quibus nempe optatur bonum; ita etiam D. Thomas.

7 You OBJECT second. Charity is loved either with the love of concupiscence or of friendship; not of friendship, for this is between likes; not of concupiscence, because this concerns things not possessed.

> OBIICIES secundo. Vel amatur Charitas amore concupiscentiae, vel amicitiae; Non amicitiae, nam haec est inter similes: Non concupiscentiae, quia haec est de rebus non habitis.

8 It is ANSWERED that there is complacency in the Charity possessed. Moreover, spiritual love of the good, and its possession, excites to desiring while it refreshes; and it refreshes while it excites, as St. Gregory says, homil. 36. in Evang. and St. Augustine Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 38.; and the Saintly Doctor runs on to those words Ioan. 4: He who drinks of the water that I will give him, etc.

> RESPONDETUR, Charitatis habitae esse complacentiam. Deinde spiritualis dilectio boni, eiusque possessio excitat ad desiderandum, dum reficit; et reficit, dum excitat, ut dicit S. Gregorius, homil. 36. in Evang. et D. Augustinus Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 38. et discurrit S. Doctor ad ea verba Ioan. 4. Qui biberit ex aqua, quam ego dabo ei, etc.

9 You OBJECT third. As Faith is related to believing, and hope to hoping, so Charity to loving; but no one having Faith believes Faith, because, as St. Augustine says, 13. de Trinitate, cap. 1: believing, he knows that he believes, and sees that he believes; but credence is of things not seen; similarly no one hopes hope itself, but has it: Therefore neither does he love Charity.

> OBIICIES tertio. Sicut se habet Fides ad credere; spes ad sperare; ita Charitas ad diligere, sed nullus habens Fidem, credit Fidem, quia ut dicit D. Augustinus 13. de Trinitate, cap. 1. credens, scit se credere, et videt se credere; credulitas autem est de non visis; similiter autem nullus sperat spem ipsam, sed eam habet: Ergo nec diligit Charitatem.

10 The Saintly Doctor answers that the act of Faith declares imperfection, and likewise the act of Hope; whence, if either habit were reflected upon itself, it would diminish from the reason of a habit: Wherefore he who believes credence does not have it; and hope likewise; but love is a perfect act, like knowledge. Hence as he knows perfectly who knows that he knows, so he loves perfectly who loves the love with which he loves.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, actum Fidei dicere imperfectionem, similiter et actum Spei; unde, si uterque habitus reflecteretur, diminueret de ratione habitus: Quare qui credit credulitatem, non habet eam; et spem similiter; Sed dilectio est actus perfectus, sicut scientia. Unde sicut perfecte scit, qui scit se scire, ita perfecte diligit, qui amat dilectionem, qua diligit.

11 You OBJECT fourth. If Charity loves Charity, either she loves it by another love or by herself. If by another: Therefore that one too by another, and so on to infinity; if by the same: dem. Contra: No special form reflects upon itself unless it is among the first intensions, such as unity, truth, goodness; hence it is not said: whiteness whitens: Therefore neither: beloved love is.

> OBIICIES quarto. Si diligit Charitas Charitatem, vel eam diligit alia dilectione, vel se ipsa. Si alia: Ergo et illa per aliam, et sic in infinitum; si eadem: dem: Contra: Nulla forma specialis super se ipsam reflectitur, nisi sit e primis intensionibus, sicut unitas, veritas, bonitas; unde non dicitur: albedo albat: Ergo nec: dilectio dilecta est.

12 St. Bonaventure answers: to love with the same habit, but by another act. To the point about reflection he answers that reflection sometimes comes from nature, and thus it is in universals; sometimes it comes from the reason of that in which it is; and thus it is in forms which are in potencies born to convert upon themselves, and insofar as they are converted upon themselves; and because the cognitive potency knows itself, and the will is an instrument moving itself; therefore by science one knows his science, and by Charity he loves himself, as loving that very love.

> Respondet S. Bonavent. diligere eodem habitu, sed per alium actum. Ad id de reflexione, respondet, reflexionem aliquando venire ex natura, et sic est in generalibus; aliquando venire ratione eius, in quo est; et sic est in formis, quae sunt in potentiis, natis supra se converti, et in quantum supra se convertuntur; et quia potentia cognitiva se ipsam cognoscit, et voluntas est instrumentum, seipsam movens; ideo per scientiam scit aliquis suam scientiam, et per Charitatem, se, ut ipsam, diligit.

Question XIX: Whether all gratuitous gifts are to be loved out of charity

1 The first opinion, found in St. Bonaventure, is that these gifts are not loved by an elicited act of Charity; for Charity does not love our own advantage, as a natural affection does, but is poured out toward another, as St. Gregory says homil. 17. in Evang.; and because our spiritual advantage is placed in these gifts, which order us to beatitude; therefore the love of such gifts is elicited by natural love, but commanded by Charity, whose office it is to command our acts, that they may be rightly moved toward their ends.

> An omnia dona gratuita sint C*HARITATE* diligenda.

> Prima opinio apud D. Bonavent. est, haec dona non esse amata actu Charitatis elicito; Charitas enim non amat proprium commodum, ut affectus naturalis, sed in alterum protenditur, ut ait D. Gregorius homil. 17. in Evang. et quia commodum nostrum spirituale reponitur in hisce donis, quae nos ordinant ad beatitudinem; ideo amor talium donorum est a dilectione naturali elicitive; sed a Charitate imperative, cuius est imperare actibus nostris, ut recte moveantur in suos fines.

2 The Saintly Doctor attacks this view; For Charity tends also to our own beatitude, that we may enjoy God. Then, because although it belongs to nature to seek the advantages of the body, yet to love spiritual gifts belongs to gratuitous love.

> Hunc modum impugnat S. Doctor; Nam Charitas tendit etiam in propriam beatitudinem, ut Deo fruatur. Deinde, quia licet naturae sit quaerere commoda corporis; tamen spiritualia dona amare est dilectionis gratuitae.

3 The second opinion is that, since good is the object of Charity, and the act receives its species from the object, the intensity of the act of loving varies according to the reason of good: But something is called good in a twofold way: in one way concretively, because it is ordered to beatitude as to an end. In another way abstractively, because it is that by which one is ordered to the end. Therefore the gratuitous gifts are not called good in the first way but in the second; because by them we are directed to beatitude. Hence they are more called goodnesses than goods, and more reasons for loving than lovable things; therefore these are not properly to be loved out of Charity, but rather the recipients of the gifts are loved out of Charity. And since an accident together with its subject constitutes one thing, therefore loves are not multiplied toward these gifts so as to be distinct from the loves by which men are loved.

> Secunda opinio est, quod cum bonum sit obiectum Charitatis, et actus recipiat speciem ab obiecto, intensio actus diligendi variatur secundum rationem boni: Bonum autem dicitur aliquid dupliciter: Uno modo concretive, quia est ordinatum ad beatitudinem, ut finem. Alio modo abstractive, quia est id, quo ordinatur ad finem. Dona igitur gratuita non dicuntur bona primo modo, sed secundo; quia illis dirigimur nos ad beatitudinem. Ideo magis dicuntur bonitates, quam bona, et magis rationes diligendi, quam diligibilia; ideo haec non sunt proprie ex Charitate diligenda, sed potius Charitate diliguntur susceptivi donorum. Quoniam vero accidens cum suo subiecto unum constituit, ideo non multiplicantur dilectiones ad haec dona, quae sint distinctae a dilectionibus, quibus amantur homines.

4 Against this the Saintly Doctor argues: For even God, who is the highest goodness, falls among the things to be loved out of Charity.

> Contra arguit S. Doctor: Nam etiam Deus, qui est bonitas summa, compatatur inter diligenda ex Charitate.

5 Then: On account of which a thing is such, that thing is more such; but spiritual gifts are goods on account of which men are loved: Therefore much more are they themselves to be loved, as St. Thomas also argues art. 2.

> Deinde: Propter quod, unumquodque tale, et illud magis tale; sed dona spiritualia sunt bona propter quae homines diliguntur: Ergo multo fortius ipsa diligenda sunt, ut arguit etiam D. Thom. art. 2.

6 He asserts, therefore, that spiritual gifts are loved by Charity; yet not with friendship, because for those gifts no good is wished; but with the love of concupiscence, insofar as they are goods for us toward union with God. For thus the Saints sigh out of Charity for the gifts of heaven.

> Asserit igitur, dona spiritualia diligi Charitate; non tamen amicitia, quia eis donis non desideratur bonum; sed amore concupiscentiae, quatenus nobis bona sunt ad unionem cum Deo. Sic enim Sancti ex Charitate dona coelestia suspirant.

7 It is proved first by St. Bonaventure from St. Augustine 8. de Trinitate, cap. 7, where he says: He who loves his neighbor, it follows that he loves also that very love.

> Probatur primo a D. Bonavent. ex D. Augustino 8. de Trinitate, cap. 7. ubi ait: Qui diligit proximum, consequens est, ut etiam ipsam dilectionem diligat.

8 Second it is proved by St. Bonaventure. That which orders to beatitude is to be loved out of Charity; such are these gifts: Therefore.

> Secundo probatur a S. Bonavent. Id, quod ordinat ad beatitudinem, est Charitate diligendum; talia sunt haec dona: Ergo.

9 Third it is proved. Such gifts are to be expected and asked of God; and he who loves them merits by loving: but the chief meritorious love is the love of Charity: Therefore.

> Tertio probatur. Talia dona sunt a Deo expectanda, et petenda; et qui illa diligit, diligendo meretur: sed praecipua dilectio meritoria, est dilectio Charitatis: Ergo.

10 Nevertheless he concludes that these means are loved by Charity secondarily, as the Saintly Doctor explains, quest. 6.

> Colligit tamen, secundario amari Charitate haec media, ut explicat S. Doctor, quaest. 6.

11 Fourth. As gratuitous love is related to the gifts of grace, so natural love to the gifts of nature. But these are loved with natural love: Therefore.

> Quarto. Sicut se habet dilectio gratuita ad dona gratiae; ita dilectio naturalis ad dona naturae. Sed haec amantur amore naturali: Ergo.

12 You object first. No creature lacking reason is to be loved out of Charity, because it does not communicate in life with us.

> Obiicies primo. Nulla creatura ratione carens, est amanda Charitate, quia non communicat in vita nobiscum.

13 It is answered that it is true that such creatures are not loved with the love of friendship, but of concupiscence.

> Respondetur, verum esse, tales creaturas non diligi amore amicitiae; sed concupiscentiae.

14 You object second: To love is to will good to someone; but we do not will good to these gifts.

> Obiicies secundo: Diligere est velle alicui bonum; his autem donis non volumus bonum.

15 It is answered that this is true of the love of friendship; but the love of concupiscence is rather to desire a good.

> Respondetur, verum esse de dilectione amicitiae; amor vero concupiscentiae est potius bonum desiderare.

16 You object third. Only the beatifiable are lovable by Charity, inasmuch as they can communicate with us in supernatural life.

> Obiicies tertio. Sola beatificabilia sunt Charitate amabilia, quippe quae possunt communicare nobiscum in vita supernaturali.

17 It is answered that this is conceded of the love of friendship, and St. Augustine enumerates only these Lib. primo de doctrina Christiana, capite 23.

> Respondetur, hoc concedi de dilectione amicitiae, et haec sola enumerat D. Augustinus Lib. primo de doctrina Christiana, capite 23.

Question XX: Whether irrational creatures are to be loved out of charity

1 In two ways, as St. Bonaventure says, something can be loved out of Charity: First, elicited by the proper act upon the proper object. Second, commanded, when it commands other virtues their acts. Therefore he teaches that irrational creatures can be loved by Charity commanding natural piety, but not by a proper elicited act. The reason, which St. Thomas also uses, is that Charity is a certain supernatural friendship; but friendship is borne toward a friend to whom we wish good, as toward an end; and we cannot properly will good to brutes, since they are incapable, as Aristotle teaches 2 Physic. tex. 59. Then, friendship implies a communication in goods; and if it is supernatural, in supernatural goods; but man does not communicate with irrational creatures in the good life, which is the communication of friends, from Aristotle 8 Eth. cap. 3. and 4. much less does he communicate in the goods of eternal life, by which communication supernatural friendship is sustained.

> An irrationalia ex C*HARITATE* sint diligenda.
> Duobus modis, ut ait S. Bonavent. potest aliquid ex Charitate diligi: Primo elicitive per actum proprium in proprium obiectum. Secundo imperative, dum imperat aliis virtutibus actus earum. Igitur docet, posse Charitate, imperante pietati naturali, diligi irrationalia: non autem actu elicito proprio. Ratio est, qua utitur etiam D. Thom. quia Charitas est amicitia quaedam supernaturalis; Amicitia autem fertur in amicum, cui volumus bonum, tanquam in finem; at brutis non possumus velle bonum proprie, cum sint incapacia, ut docet Aristoteles 2. Physic. tex. 59. Deinde amicitia dicit communicationem in bonis; et si est superna, in bonis supernis; at homo non communicat cum irrationalibus in bona vita, quae est amicorum communicatio, ex Aristotele 8. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. multo minus communicat in bonis vitae aeternae; qua communicatione nititur amicitia superna.

2 In another way also the Saintly Doctor opens and expounds his meaning. In a threefold way something can be loved out of Charity: First, as object and end; and in this way God is loved. Second, as a loved object, not as an end, and in this way the neighbor is loved; because we wish him the highest good. Third, something can be loved out of Charity, not as an end or beloved object, nor on its own account, but on account of another; and in this way irrational creatures are loved, inasmuch as God is loved in them, in the manner in which someone who loves a friend also loves his dog, as Tannerus notes, disp. 2. quest. 3. dub. 1. Therefore the love of Charity, which is friendship toward God, extends to the neighbor as the children of God; just as the friendship by which I love Peter extends also to his son; yet not to his flesh. But if you should ask what virtue elicits that love in creatures, the Saintly Doctor answers that it is a certain natural piety, by which, considering all Creatures as the works of God, it rises to praises and love of God, as St. P. Francis wonderfully exhibited; for the more one returns to natural uprightness, the more from the very creatures he is raised up to God the maker.

> Alio etiam modo sensum suum aperit, et exponit S. Doctor. Tripliciter potest aliquid diligi ex Charitate: Primo ut obiectum, et finis; et hoc pacto diligitur Deus. Secundo ut obiectum dilectum, non ut finis, et hoc modo diligitur proximus; quia ei volumus summum bonum. Tertio diligi potest aliquid ex charitate; non ut finis, vel obiectum amatum, neque intuitu ipsius, sed alterius; et hoc modo irrationalia diliguntur, quatenus in illis diligitur Deus ad modum, quo aliquis diligens amicum, etiam canem eius diligit, ut notat Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. Igitur amor Charitatis, qui est amicitia ad Deum, extenditur ad proximum, tanquam filios Dei; sicut amicitia, qua diligo Petrum, extenditur etiam ad eius filium; non tamen ad eius carnem. Si autem quaeras; quae virtus amorem istum eliciat in creaturas. Respondet S. Doctor esse pietatem quandam naturalem, qua Creaturas omnes considerans ut opera Dei, in Deum consurgit laudibus, et amore, ut mirifice praestitit S. P. Franciscus; quanto enim aliquis ad rectitudinem revertitur naturalem, tanto magis ex ipsis creaturis erigitur in Deum opificem.

3 I ASSERT therefore that irrational creatures are not loved by Charity.

ASSERO igitur, irrationalia non diligi Charitate.

4 It is PROVED by the Saintly Doctor, first from St. Augustine Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 33. where he teaches that only those things are loved out of Charity which, by a certain society, are referred with us to God, as man and angel, or our own body.

PROBATUR a S. Doctore, primo ex D. Augustino Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 33. ubi docet, ea sola ex Charitate diligi, quae nobiscum societate quadam referuntur in Deum, ut homo, et Angelus, vel corpus nostrum.

5 It is PROVED second. Only those can be loved out of Charity which communicate in the object of Charity, which is the uncreated good, namely God. For Charity is a Theological virtue: Therefore only those can be loved by Charity which are able to enjoy the beatific object: But irrational creatures are not such: Therefore.

PROBATUR secundo. Ea sola diligi possunt ex Charitate, quae communicant in obiecto Charitatis, quod est bonum increatum, seu Deus. Charitas enim est virtus Theologica: Igitur ea sola Charitate diligi possunt, quae frui valent obiecto beatifico: Talia autem non sunt irrationalia: Ergo.

6 It is PROVED third by the Saintly Doctor. Charity is the bond of perfection; but irrational creatures cannot be bound to us by the virtues: Therefore.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore. Charitas est vinculum perfectionis; sed irrationalia nequeunt nobiscum virtutibus necti: Ergo.

7 It is PROVED fourth by the Saintly Doctor. The love of Charity is a friendship of the superior order to natural friendship; but this cannot be between us and irrational creatures: Therefore. The minor is proved, because for the love of friendship it is required first that we wish good to a friend; but for good to be able to be willed to him, he must be able to use that good; but irrational creatures have no dominion over good; whence Aristotle says 2. Phys. textu 39. that for this reason we do not say of such things that anything happens to them well or ill, except by similitude. Second, because every friendship is founded upon some likeness of life; for nothing is so proper to friendship as a good life, as the Philosopher says Lib. 8. Eth. cap. 3. and 4.; but irrational creatures cannot communicate with us in life.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore Amor Charitatis est ordinis superioris amicitia naturali; sed haec non potest esse inter nos, et irrationalia: Ergo. Minor probatur, quia ad amorem amicitiae requiritur primo ut amico velimus bonum; ut autem possit ei esse volitum bonum, oportet ut possit uti illo bono; irrationalia vero non habent dominium in bonum; unde ait Aristoteles 2. Phys. textu 39. quod ideo huiusmodi rebus non dicimus, aliquid bene, vel male contingere, nisi secundum similitudinem. Secundo, quia omnis amicitia fundatur in aliqua similitudine vitae; nihil enim proprium est adeo amicitiae, sicut bona vita, ut ait Philosophus Lib. 8. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. creaturae autem irrationales nequeunt nobiscum in vita communicare.

8 It is PROVED fifth. Only those are to be loved by Charity which are included in the two precepts; but irrational creatures are not included in them, because they are neither neighbor nor God: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quinto. Ea sola diligenda sunt Charitate, quae includuntur duobus praeceptis; sed irrationalia non includuntur in eis, quia non sunt proximus, nec Deus: Ergo.

9 You OBJECT first. Charity makes us conformed to God; but God loves all the things that he made Sap. 11. Therefore.

> OBIICIES primo. Charitas facit nos Deo conformes; sed Deus diligit omnia; quae fecit Sap. 11. Ergo.

10 The Saintly Doctor answers that God loves creatures not by Charity, willing them eternal good, but they are only the object of his natural love; but Charity wills the highest good.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, Deum diligere creaturas, non Charitate, volendo eis bonum aeternum, sed solum esse ipsarum naturale; Charitas autem vult summum bonum.

11 Nor does Charity conform our wills to the divine will, because in God there is one most simple love, which is borne toward diverse things; but we cannot imitate him in simplicity; rather we are borne by several loves: indeed by Charity toward rational creatures, to whom the highest good can be willed; but by piety toward irrational ones, because Charity is only toward those who communicate with God, as St. Augustine says tract. 65. in Ioannem.

> Neque Charitas conformat voluntates nostras voluntati divinae, quia in Deo est unus amor simplicissimus, qui ad diversa fertur; non possumus autem imitari in simplicitate; sed pluribus amoribus ferimur; Charitate quidem in rationalia, quibus potest esse volitum summum bonum; pietate vero in irrationalia, quia Charitas est solum ad communicantia cum Deo, ut ait S. Augustinus tract. 65. in Ioannem.

12 You OBJECT second. As Faith is related to believing God the Creator of rational and irrational creatures, so also to loving: Therefore we can also love irrational creatures, as ordered to God, by Charity.

> OBIICIES secundo. Sicut se habet Fides ad credendum Deum Creatorem rationalium, et irrationalium, ita et ad amandum: Ergo possumus etiam irrationalia, ut ordinata in Deum, diligere Charitate.

13 The Saintly Doctor answers that the reason is not parallel, for Faith regards God not only as end but also as beginning; therefore it believes him the maker even of irrational creatures; but Charity regards God only as end and good; and because irrational creatures do not tend with rational ones by the same reason to the highest good, therefore they are not loved by Charity.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, non esse parem rationem, nam Fides respicit Deum, non modo, ut finem, sed etiam ut principium; ideo credit eum conditorem etiam irrationalium; Charitas vero respicit Deum solummodo, ut finem, et bonum; et quia creaturae irrationales cum rationalibus non tendunt eadem ratione in summum bonum, ideo non diliguntur Charitate.

14 You OBJECT third. Rational creatures are to be loved out of Charity because they are like God; But irrational creatures also are like God: Therefore.

> OBIICIES tertio. Creaturae rationales diligendae sunt ex Charitate, quia Deo sunt similes; At vero etiam irrationales sunt Deo similes: Ergo.

15 The Saintly Doctor answers that not any likeness whatsoever makes something an object lovable by Charity, but that which renders it capable, as St. August. says 14. de Trinit. cap. 3. For Charity wishes the highest good to the beloved; but we do not enjoy this except through knowledge and love, which are in those only that have the reason of the Divine image.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, non quamlibet assimilationem facere aliquid obiectum diligibile ex Charitate; sed eam, quae reddit capacem, ut ait D. August. 14. de Trinit. cap. 3. Charitas enim optat summum bonum amato; hoc autem non fruimur, nisi per cognitionem, et amorem, quae in iis tantum sunt, quae habent rationem Divinae imaginis.

16 You OBJECT fourth. Virtue and vice are about the same; but toward irrational creatures there can be a depraved love contrary to Charity: Therefore also Charity.

> OBIICIES quarto. Virtus, et vitium sunt circa idem; sed circa irrationalia potest esse amor pravus, contrarius Charitati: Ergo et Charitas.

17 The Saintly Doctor answers that although virtue and vice are about the same subject, they are not about the same object; for more is required for virtue than for vice. Then the argument fails, because although Charity is a special love, yet it is not necessary that Charity itself and every special opposite vice be about that same object. Therefore, although cupidity is about temporal goods, it does not follow that the virtue of Charity is about them; and therefore it is not necessary that these temporal things be loved by Charity, but that they be dispensed by the rules of liberality and retained with moderation.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, quod licet virtus, et vitium sint circa idem subiectum; non sunt tamen circa idem obiectum; plura enim exiguntur ad virtutem, quam ad vitium. Deinde deficit argumentum, quia licet Charitas sit amor specialis; tamen non est necesse, ut circa illud idem obiectum sit Charitas ipsa, et omne vitium speciale oppositum. Ideo, licet cupiditas sit circa bona temporalia, non oportet quod circa illa sit virtus Charitatis; et ideo non oportet, haec temporalia Charitate amari, sed ex liberalitatis regulis dispensari, et moderate retineri.

18 You OBJECT fifth. Meritorious love is out of Charity; but someone loves riches so that he may make alms from them: Therefore he loves them out of Charity.

> OBIICIES quinto. Amor meritorius est ex Charitate; sed aliquis amat divitias, ut faciat ex eis eleemosynas: Ergo eas amat ex Charitate.

19 The Saintly Doctor answers that that act is meritorious even if it is only from Charity commanding. Then, when one loves temporal things in order to serve God, he directs his love to God; nevertheless the affection of Charity is not extended to all, as has been said.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, actum illum esse meritorium, etiamsi sit a Charitate solum imperante. Deinde, cum quis diligit temporalia ad serviendum Deo, dirigit suum amorem in Deum; non tamen affectus Charitate extenditur ad omnes, ut dictum est.

Question XXI: Whether a man ought to love himself out of charity

1 I ASSERT that the love of oneself is also included in the precept of Charity.

> An homo debeat seipsum ex CHARITATE diligere.
> ASSERO, Charitatis praecepto includi etiam sui dilectionem.

2 It is PROVED by the Saintly Doctors; for in the precept of the love of neighbor it is said: thou shalt love him as thyself; but we love our neighbor out of Charity: therefore by the same Charity also ourselves, as St. Aug. observes serm. 3. post Pentecost. and the Saintly Doct. dist. 28. q. 6. ad 2.

> PROBATUR a SS. Doctoribus; nam in praecepto dilectionis proximi habetur: diliges eum, sicut te ipsum; sed proximum ex Charitate diligimus: ergo eadem Charitate etiam nos ipsos, ut observat etiam D. Aug. serm. 3. post Pentecost. et S. Doct. dist. 28. q. 6. ad 2.

3 It is PROVED second by the Saintly Doctor, because to love God with the whole heart, with the whole soul, and with the whole mind is to love oneself. Therefore it is said Lucae 10. after the precepts of Charity have been handed down: Do this, and thou shalt live.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore, quia diligere Deum ex toto corde, ex tota anima, et ex tota mente, est seipsum diligere. Ideo dicitur Lucae 10. post tradita praecepta Charitatis: Hoc fac, et vives.

4 That a special precept need not have been handed down, the Saintly Doctor admonishes, because from natural inclination we are sufficiently inclined toward ourselves: For no man ever hated his own flesh. Ephes. 5. Therefore a third commandment was not necessary, as St. Augustine says Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 24.

> Non oportuisse autem speciale praeceptum tradere admonet S. Doctor, quia ex naturali propensione satis ad nos inclinamur: Nemo enim unquam carnem suam odio habuit. Ephes. 5. Ideo non oportuit tertium mandatum, ut ait D. Augustinus Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 24.

5 Yet the Saintly Doctor NOTES, dist. 28. quest. 5. in the body, and quest. 6. there, that since Charity, properly speaking, is friendship, we can speak of Charity in a twofold way: in one way under the common aspect of friendship; and in this sense friendship toward oneself is not had, because friendship implies the union of several, as D. Dionysius says cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, part. 2.; but toward oneself for each one there is unity, which is more powerful than union with another. Therefore with a more sublime love than friendship we love ourselves; for as unity is the principle of union, so the love by which one loves himself is the form and root of friendship. For we have friendship toward others in this, that we bear ourselves toward them as toward ourselves; for it is said in 9. Eth. cap. 8. that the things of friendship which are toward another come from those which are toward oneself. In another way we can speak of Charity as it is the friendship of man with God principally,[1] and in consequence toward the things that are God's, among which is also man himself, who has Charity; and thus among the other things that he loves out of Charity, as pertaining to God, he loves also himself out of Charity. Thus Tannerus also discusses it disp. 2. quest. 3. dub. 1.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'de Charitate, pto vt est amicitia' — a defective letterform (apparently broken 'r' in 'pro'); rendered 'prout est' (insofar as it is).

> ADVERTIT vero S. Doctor, dist. 28. quaest. 5. in corpore, et quaest. 6. ibidem, quod cum Charitas, proprie dicta, sit amicitia; dupliciter possumus loqui de Charitate; uno modo sub ratione communi amicitiae; et hoc sensu non habetur amicitia ad seipsum, quia amicitia dicit unionem plurium, ut ait D. Dionysius cap. 4. de divin. nominibus, part. 2. unicuique autem ad seipsum est unitas, quae est potior unione cum alio. Igitur amore sublimiori, quam amicitia, diligimus nos ipsos; sicut enim unitas est principium unionis; ita amor, quo quis diligit se ipsum, est forma, et radix amicitiae. In hoc enim amicitiam habemus ad alios, quod ad eos nos habemus, sicut ad nos ipsos; dicitur enim in 9. Eth. cap. 8. quod amicabilia, quae sunt ad alterum, veniunt ex his, quae sunt ad seipsum. Alio modo possumus loqui de Charitate, prout est amicitia hominis cum Deo principaliter, et ex consequenti ad ea, quae sunt Dei, inter quae etiam est ipse homo, qui Charitatem habet; et sic inter caetera, quae ex Charitate diligit, quasi ad Deum pertinentia, etiam se ipsum ex Charitate diligit. Sic discutit etiam Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

6 From these understand what St. Gregory means homil. 27. in Evang. that Charity cannot be had as less than between two; whence he infers that Charity is not had toward oneself; clearly in the reason of friendship, as the Saintly Doctors expound it.

Ex quibus intellige, quid velit D. Gregorius homil. 27. in Evang. quod Charitas minus quam inter duos haberi non potest; unde infert, ad seipsum non haberi Charitatem; in ratione sane amicitiae, ut exponunt Sancti Doctores.

Question XXII: Whether a man ought to love his own body out of charity

1 I ASSERT that it is so. It is the common opinion of the Theologians.

An homo debeat corpus suum ex Charitate diligere.

ASSERO, ita esse. Est communis sententia Theologorum.

2 It is proved first by D. Bonaventure, from Ephes. 5: Husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies; but wives are to be loved out of Charity: Therefore also bodies.

Probatur a D. Bonavent. primo, ex 5. Ephes. Viri debent diligere uxores suas, sicut corpora sua, sed uxores sunt diligendae ex Charitate: Ergo et corpora.

3 It is proved secondly by the Holy Doctors from D. Augustine, Book 1. of de doctrina Christiana, chapter 23.

Probatur secundo a SS. DD. ex D. Augustino Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, capite 23.

4 It is proved thirdly by S. Bonaventure: everything beatifiable is lovable out of Charity: such are bodies: Therefore.

Probatur tertio a S. Bonav. omne beatificabile est Charitate diligibile: Talia sunt corpora: Ergo.

5 It is proved fourthly by S. Thomas. In the order of Charity kinsfolk are to be preferred to strangers, as Ambrose teaches in the Cam. Gloss on ch. 2; but kinship exists only on the part of bodies: Therefore, since our bodies are above all joined to us for this reason, they are to be loved out of Charity.

Probatur quarto a S. Doctore. In ordine Charitatis consanguinei sunt praeferendi extraneis, ut docet Ambrosius in Glossa Cam. 2. sed consanguinitas non est nisi ex parte corporum: Ergo cum maxime sint nobis hac ratione coniuncta corpora nostra, sunt Charitate diligenda.

6 It is explained by S. Thomas, in corpore. Charity is a weight inclining toward the highest good and perfect beatitude, and consequently makes us love everything lovable. Thus God must first be loved as blessed by essence: then the Spirits as beatifiable by participation: lastly bodies as beatifiable by the overflowing from the soul. So also Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

Explicatur a S. Doctore, in corpore. Charitas est pondus inclinans ad summum bonum, et perfectam beatitudinem, atque adeo facit, ut diligamus omne beabile. Sic igitur amandus Deus primo beatus per essentiam: Deinde Spiritus per participationem beabiles: ultimo corpora beabilia per redundantiam ex anima. Ita etiam Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

7 You will object first, Ioan. 12: He who loves his life shall lose it; but there it is understood as meaning animation unto life.

Obiicies primo Ioan. 12. Qui amat animam suam, perdet eam; sumitur autem ibi, prout dicit animationem ad vitam.

8 S. Bonaventure and D. Thomas answer that Christ urges us to hate the carnal life, not as meaning natural life, which is good, coming from God, and therefore to be loved: hence it is not lawful to kill oneself; but to hate the carnal life, as meaning the life fostered by the fire of concupiscence.

Respondet S. Bonavent. et D. Thom. Christum hortari ad odiendam vitam carnalem, non prout dicit naturalem vitam, quae est a Deo bona, atque ideo amanda: Unde non licet interficere seipsum; sed ad odiendam vitam carnalem, ut dicit vitam, concupiscentiae igne foventem.

9 You will object secondly. That which impedes beatitude is not to be loved out of Charity: such is the body, Galat. 5: The flesh concupisceth against the spirit. And Rom. 7: I see another law in my members, fighting against the law of my mind, etc. Whence he said: Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

Obiicies secundo. Id, quod impedit beatitudinem, non est Charitate diligendum: tale est corpus, Galat. 5. Caro concupiscit adversus spiritum. Et Rom. 7. Sentio aliam legem in membris meis, repugnantem legi mentis, etc. Unde dicebat: Quis me liberabit de corpore mortis huius.

10 The Holy Doctors answer that the Apostle does not reject bodily life as it is natural; for it is not an impediment to salvation for that reason, but on account of concupiscence arising from sin.

Respondent SS. DD. Apostolum non refugere vitam corporalem, ut est naturalis; neque enim ea est impedimentum ad salutem tali ratione, sed propter concupiscentiam ortam ex peccato.

11 You will object thirdly. Charity never falleth away, 1 Corinth. 13; therefore the things that are to be loved out of Charity do not fall away; but bodies fall: Therefore.

Obiicies tertio. Charitas nunquam excidit, prima Corinth. 13. ergo quae diligenda sunt ex Charitate, non excidunt; sed corpora cadunt: Ergo.

12 S. Thomas answers that bodies are destined for perpetual incorruption in beatitude: hence, although now they are sown in corruption, yet they shall rise in glory; and consequently they are to be loved out of Charity.

Respondet S. Doct. corpora ad perpetuam incorruptionem in beatitudine destinata esse: Unde, quamvis nunc seminentur in corruptione; tamen resurgent in gloria; atque adeo diligenda sunt Charitate.

13 You will object fourthly. That which makes lovable out of Charity is communication in the image of God: But bodies do not have the Divine image: Therefore.

Obiicies quarto. Id, quod facit diligibile ex Charitate, est communicatio in imagine Dei: Sed corpora non habent imaginem Divinam: Ergo.

14 S. Thomas answers that of themselves they are indeed lovable by reason of the image and the capacity for God; hence bodies, because they participate in the image and beatitude only by reason of union, are therefore to be loved secondarily.

Respondet S. Doct. per se quidem ea diligibilia esse ratione imaginis, et capacitatis Dei; unde corpora, quia solum participant, ratione unionis, imaginem, et beatitudinem, ideo secundario diligenda sunt.

Question XXIII: Whether sinners are to be loved out of charity

1 The holy Doctors distinguish in sinners the nature by which they were created to the image of God, capable of beatitude; and according to this they say they are to be loved out of Charity; on the other side they see in them faults, on account of which they lack the free likeness of God, and are turned away from God, hateful, as Tannerus also admonishes, disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

> An peccatores sint ex Charitate diligendi.
> Distinguunt Sancti Doctores in peccatoribus naturam, qua creati sunt ad Dei imaginem, capaces beatitudinis, et secundum hanc, Charitate amandos dicunt; ex altera parte vident in eis culpas, ob quas Dei similitudine gratuita carent, et sunt a Deo aversi, odibiles, ut admonet etiam Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

2 They assert, therefore, that sinners are to be loved out of Charity by reason of nature.

> Asservnt igitur, peccatores ratione naturae amandos Charitate.

3 It is proved by S. Thomas, first from Matth. 5, where Christ commands his holy disciples: Love your enemies; but the enemies of the just are the impious.

> Probatur a S. Doct. primo ex Matth. 5. ubi discipulis suis sanctis praecipit Christus: Diligite inimicos vestros; inimici autem iustorum sunt impii.

4 Secondly. All the predestined are to be loved out of Charity; but among these many, according to present justice, are wicked, as I showed quaest. 15. Therefore.

> Secvndo. Omnes praedestinati sunt Charitate amandi; sed ex his multi secundum praesentem iustitiam sunt pravi, ut ostendi quaest. 15. Ergo.

5 Thirdly. All are to be loved for whom we ought to pray; but prayer is commanded even for sinners, Matth. 5: Pray for them that calumniate you: Therefore they are to be loved. The major is clear, because Christ places one of the effects of Charitable love: Pray for them that persecute, etc.

> Tertio. Omnes sunt diligendi, pro quibus orandum; sed pro peccatoribus etiam orandum praecipit Matth. 5. Orate pro calumniantibus vos: Ergo sunt amandi. Maior patet, quia unum ex effectibus dilectionis Charitativae ponit Christus: Orate pro persequentibus, etc.

6 Fourthly. Our Charity ought to be conformed to the Charity of Christ; but Christ loved the impious, and prayed for those crucifying him, Lucae 23: Father, forgive them: for they know not what they do. Rom. 5: But God commendeth his Charity towards us: because when as yet we were sinners, Christ died for us.

> Qvarto. Nostra Charitas debet Charitati Christi conformari; sed impios dilexit Christus, oravitque pro crucifigentibus, Lucae 23. Pater, ignosce illis: non enim sciunt quid faciunt. Rom. 5. Commendat autem Charitatem suam Deus: quoniam cum adhuc peccatores essemus, Christus pro nobis mortuus est.

7 The arguments to the contrary prove only that sinners are to be hated, insofar as they are such.

> Argumenta in contrarium solum probant, odiendos peccatores, quatenus tales sunt.

8 Furthermore it is objected. Charity is the bond of unity: Therefore only those are to be loved who are of the unity of the mystical body; but some wicked are not of the unity of the mystical body of the Church, as infidels and heretics; the other impious are dead members.

Porro obiicitur. Charitas est vinculum unitatis: Ergo illi soli sunt diligendi, qui sunt de unitate corporis mystici; sed aliqui mali non sunt de unitate corporis mystici Ecclesiae, ut infideles, et haeretici; caeteri vero impii sunt membra mortua.

9 S. Thomas answers that Charity is the bond of perfection and of unity subjectively in the just man, but is terminated toward those who can be of the unity, as toward its object. And so it is not necessary that Charity put both extremes actually united; but it suffices that it put the subject, in which it is, in act, the other being in habit; as science puts the knower in act, but the knowable in habit.

Respondet S. Doctor, Charitatem esse vinculum perfectionis, et unitatis subiective in iusto; terminari vero ad eos, qui possunt esse de unitate, tanquam ad obiectum. Itaque non est necesse, ut Charitas ponat utraque extrema actu unita; sed sufficit, ut ponat in actu subiectum, in quo est alterum in habitu; sicut scientia ponit scientem in actu; scibile vero in habitu.

10 From these things it is also gathered, by the same reasoning, that insofar as sinners are men capable of beatitude, even if they are impious, they can love themselves out of Charity; but if they love iniquity, they hate their own soul, Psal. 10. See D. Thom. art. 7.

Ex his etiam colligitur, eadem ratione, quatenus peccatores sunt homines capaces beatitudinis, etiamsi impii sint, posse seipsos diligere ex Charitate; si autem diligunt iniquitatem, odio habent animam suam Psal. 10. Vide D. Thom. art. 7.

Question XXIV: Whether it is necessary to love enemies out of charity

1 By the name of enemy is understood one who hates iniquitously, as S. Thomas notes; for one who troubles us for a just cause is not to be reckoned an enemy, even if he is so reckoned according to the opinion of the vulgar, as the Apostle said, Galat. 4: Am I become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

Nomine inimici intelligitur odiens inique, ut advertit S. Doctor; nam qui iusta de causa nobis esset molestus, non esset censendus inimicus, etiamsi secundum opinionem vulgi talis censeatur, ut dicebat Apostolus, Galat. 4. Inimicus factus sum vobis, verum dicens.

2 The first opinion with the Master, which D. Bonaventure also reports, is that enemies are indeed necessarily to be loved when begging pardon, penitent, and prompt to make satisfaction; but that enemies formally reduplicatively are not to be loved, and that to love these is only of perfection.

Prima opinio apud Magistrum, quam refert etiam D. Bonavent. est, necessario quidem inimicos diligendos, petentes veniam, poenitentes, et ad satisfactiones promptos; non autem inimicos formaliter reduplicative, sed hos diligere esse tantum perfectionis.

3 Yet the true opinion is, and the common one, that enemies, as enemies, or the impious, are not to be loved; nevertheless in the state of enmity they are not to be excluded from the neighbor, loved by the elicited acts of Charity, by which we should will them the supernatural good of beatitude; not however that by imperated acts we should will them transient temporal goods, but it suffices not to rejoice in their evils, according to that, Proverb. 24: Rejoice not when thy enemy shall fall, and Eccles. 8: Be not glad over thy dead enemy. So the Holy Doctors with the Holy Fathers and Theologians commonly, as Valencia reports disp. 3. quaest. 3. p. 2. Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 2. Tannerus disp. 2 quaest. 3. dub. 1.

Vera tamen sententia est, et communis, inimicos, ut inimicos, seu impios, non esse diligendos; attamen in statu inimicitiae non esse excludendos a proximo, dilecto actibus elicitis Charitatis, quibus velimus eis bonum supernaturale beatitudinis; non tamen, ut actibus imperatis velimus eis bona temporalia transitoria, sed sufficit non gaudere de malis eorum, iuxta id Proverb. 24. Cum ceciderit inimicus tuus, ne gaudeas, et Eccles. 8. Noli de mortuo inimico tuo gaudere. Ita SS. D. D. cum SS. PP. et Theologis communiter, ut referunt Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 3. p. 2. Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 2. Tannerus disp. 2 quaest. 3. dub. 1.

4 I assert first, that it cannot be denied without prejudice to the Faith that the precept of loving enemies exists in the Evangelical Law.

Assero primo, non posse negari sine praeiudicio Fidei, in lege Evangelica praeceptum diligendi inimicos, extare.

5 IT IS PROVED by S. Thomas, first from those places where we are commanded to love the neighbor, Deuter. 6. Matth. 22; for so S. August. notes in Psal. 118. and on Christian discipline, and serm. 59. de Tempore, and 221.

PROBATUR a S. Doct. primo ex illis locis, ubi praecipimur diligere proximum, Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. sic enim advertit S. August. in Psal. 118. et de disciplina christiana, et serm. 59. de Tempore, et 221.

6 SECONDLY it is proved by S. Thomas, from the reason that Christ adduces for loving enemies: For if you love them that love you, what reward shall you have, where the Gloss: None from heaven. Then thus: Charity cannot be without reward in the heavens; but those loving friends, and not enemies, will not be rewarded in heaven: Therefore they do not have Charity. Where note that that proof has force not only as regards the love of friends and the exclusion of enemies, as if they were to be rewarded for other works, and for the state of grace, in the way that the just are to be rewarded with eternal life for saying an idle word, even if not for that word; but the force is that no reward is simply to be expected from that exclusion of enemies; for if you take only the love of friends without the exclusion of enemies, it is a meritorious act, as I shall show in the following quaest.

SECUNDO probatur a S. Doctore, ex ratione, quam affert Christus diligendi inimicos: Si enim dilexeritis eos, qui vos diligunt, quam mercedem habebitis, ubi Glossa: Nullam de caelo. Tunc sic: Charitas non potest esse sine praemio in caelis; sed diligentes amicos, et non inimicos, non praemiabuntur in caelo: Ergo Charitatem non habent. Ubi nota, vim habere probationem illam, non modo quantum quoad amorem amicorum, et exclusionem inimicorum, quasi praemiandi sint ob alia opera, et pro statu gratiae, quo pacto praemiandi sunt vita aeterna iusti dicentes verbum otiosum, etiamsi non ob illud verbum; sed vis est, nullum praemium simpliciter expectandum ex illa exclusione inimicorum; nam si solam dilectionem amicorum accipias sine exclusione inimicorum, est actus meritorius, ut ostendam quaest. sequenti.

7 THEREFORE it is proved thirdly by S. Thomas, from the precept of Christ, Matth. 5: But I say to you, love your enemies. Where the Interlinear Gloss: It does not suffice not to hate.

IGITUR probatur tertio a S. Doctore, ex praecepto Christi, Matth. 5. Ego autem dico vobis, diligite inimicos vestros. Ubi Glossa Interlin. Non sufficit non odisse.

8 It is PROVED fourthly by S. Thom. that what is necessary for the remission of sins is a precept; but to spare enemies, and not exclude them from the object of Charity, is so necessary: Therefore. The major is evident. The minor is proved by S. Thomas from Matth. 6: If you will forgive men their offences: your heavenly Father will also forgive you your offences. But if you will not forgive men: neither will your Father forgive you your offences. And in Matth. 18. he commands us to forgive injuries unto seventy times seven, that is, always, as D. Augustine observes; for the septenary number is the sign of universality, because in seven days the universe was created; the eleventh number is the sign of transgression, because it transgresses the tenth, in which the Decalogue, the law of Charity, is described; but seven times eleven makes seventy-seven, which is the number of universality, removing the imperfection of the former number. He infers here also a most powerful motive; for Lamech is marked out seventy-seven times of malediction in Genesi 4. Lamech signifies the humbled one; but the sin of Lamech is the sin of the whole human race; and after the fall there run out 77 generations unto the Advent of Christ, as is had in Lucae 3. Therefore he means to say that it is commanded us to remit all sins committed against us; just as Christ remitted all our sins committed against his majesty, nay more, expiated them with the blood of the Son. Whence he infers the word of the Apostle, 250: And be ye kind one to another; forgiving one another, as God hath forgiven you in Christ. D. Augustine observes this. Hence in the same cap. 18. Matth. is brought the parable of the servant, who, unwilling to forgive a small debt to his fellow-servant, when nevertheless a debt of ten thousand talents had been forgiven him — which sums to a hundred and twenty millions of gold, in the Persian reckoning — was condemned to perpetual prison.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. id, quod necessarium est ad remissionem peccatorum, est praeceptum; sed parcere inimicis, eosque non excludere ab obiecto Charitatis, est ita necessarium: Ergo. Maior est evidens. Minor probatur a S. Doct. ex Matth 6. Si dimiseritis hominibus peccata eorum: dimittet et vobis Pater vester caelestis delicta vestra. August. nam numerus septenarius est signum universitatis, quia septem diebus creatum est universum; numerus undecimus est signum transgressionis, quia transgreditur decimum, in quo Decalogus, lex Charitatis, describitur; septies autem undecim facit septuagies septies, qui est numerus universitatis, auferens imperfectionem prioris numeri. Unde infert id Apostoli.* 250 Donantes vobismetipsis, sicut Deus in Christo donavit vobis. Id observat D. Augustinus. Hinc eo cap. 18. Matth. affertur parabola servi, qui nolens dimittere exile debitum conservo, cum tamen sibi dimissum esset debitum decem millium talentorum, quae summant centum et viginti milliones auri, more Persico, damnatus est carcere perpetuo.

9 It is PROVED fifthly by S. Thomas. The flesh is more an enemy to man than any enemy whatsoever; but no man ever hated his own flesh. Ephes. 5. Therefore.

> PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. Plus inimica est caro homini, quam inimicus quicumque; sed nemo unquam carnem suam odio habuit. Ephes. 5. Ergo.

10 It is PROVED sixthly by S. Thomas. Where there is the reason of the object of Charity, there also the act of Charity is to be terminated; but the object of Charity is the neighbor, insofar as he is communicable of eternal life with us, and in this all our enemies also concur; and for that reason they are neighbors, as Valencia also teaches, loco cit. Therefore.

> PROBATUR sexto a S. Doct. Ubi est ratio obiecti Charitatis, ibi est etiam actus Charitatis terminandus; sed obiectum Charitatis est proximus, quatenus est communicabilis ei vita aeterna nobiscum, et in hac omnes etiam inimici nostri conveniunt; et ob id proximi sunt, ut docet etiam Valentia loco cit. Ergo.

11 From these many deduce that this is a precept of nature, which pressed also in the time of the old law. Therefore Exodi 23: If thou meet thy enemy's ox or his ass going astray, bring it back to him; if thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lie under a burden, thou shalt not pass by, but shalt lift him up with him; Levit. 19: Seek not revenge, nor be mindful of the injury of thy citizens.

> Ex quibus deducunt multi, hoc esse praeceptum naturae, quod urgebat etiam tempore legis veteris. Ideo Exodi 23. si occurreris bovi inimici tui, seu asino erranti, reduc ad eum, si videris asinum odientis te iacere sub onere, non pertransibis, sed sublevabis eum eo Levit. 19. Non quaeras ultionem; neque memor eris iniuriae concivium tuorum.

12 The RATIO is taken from what is said by D. Bonaventure; for we are bound by the law of nature to love the neighbor, as is had in Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. But the enemy is also a neighbor.

> RATIO sumitur ex dictis a D. Bonavent. nam tenemur iure naturae diligere proximum, ut habetur Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. Proximus autem est etiam inimicus.

13 However, this PRECEPT does not bind to having an act of Charity singularly toward enemies; but only generally toward all, and enemies are not to be excluded from it; so the Priest prays: memento, Domine, and of all those present; may he not exclude the enemy assisting. Similarly not from common benefits in necessity, spiritual or temporal. Moreover, to benefit enemies outside necessity is a work of counsel and of signal perfection, as D. Augustine teaches, in Enchir, cap. 73, as Caspensis notes, and I shall say in quaest. 25.

> PRAECEPTUM autem hoc non ligat ad habendum actum Charitatis singulatim in hostes; sed solum generalem ad omnes, et ab eis non excludendus hostes, verum Sacerdos orat; memento Domine, et omnium circumstantium; non excludat inimicum assistentem. Similiter neque a beneficiis communibus in necessitate spirituali, vel temporali. Caeterum benefacere hostibus extra necessitatem, est opus consilii, et egregiae perfectionis, ut docet D. Augustinus in Enchir, cap. 73. ut notat Caspensis, et dicam quaest. 25.

14 QUOAD the act, indeed, or the affect of love, it is a precept, as the same S. Augustine teaches, Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 22, and Tract. 8. in primam Ioan., and other Fathers with Valencia. Therefore Christ says: love your enemies, etc. that you may be the children of your Father who is in heaven; Therefore this is necessary for the filiation of adoption, without which no one enters into the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven. Whence Christ says, Matth. 5: Unless your justice abound more than that of the Scribes and Pharisees, you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. And among the doctrines and false traditions of the Pharisees was this: Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and shalt hate thy enemy. Therefore, that we may be able to enter into the kingdom of heaven, he says: Love your enemies, that you may be the children of your Father. From which it is deduced that this is necessary, and consequently a precept, as S. Thomas argues, on the second and 4th foundation. Therefore the Apostle says, Rom. 12: If thy enemy be hungry, give him to eat: if he thirst, give him to drink: for, doing this, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head — coals of Charity, surely, according to Ambrose, Augustine, Bede, and D. Thomas, not of eternal punishment, according to Chrysostom with Tannerus, disput. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

> QUOAD actum vero, seu affectum dilectionis, est praeceptum, ut docet idem S. Augustinus Lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 22. et Tract. 8. in primam Ioan. et alii Patres apud Valentiam. Ideo Christus ait: diligite inimicos vestros, etc. ut sitis filii patris vestri, qui in caelis est; Ergo hoc est necessarium ad filiationem adoptionis, sine qua nemo ingreditur haereditatem regni coelorum. Unde ait Christus, Matth. 5. Nisi abundaverit iustitia vestra plusquam Scribarum, et Pharisaeorum, non intrabitis in regnum caelorum. Inter doctrinas autem, et traditiones falsas Pharisaeorum, erat hoc: Diliges proximum tuum, et odio habebis inimicum tuum. Propterea, ut possimus ingredi regnum coelorum, ait: Diligite inimicos vestros, ut sitis filii Patris vestri. Ex quo deducitur, necessarium esse hoc, atque adeo praeceptum, ut arguit S. Doctor, fundamento secundo, et 4. Ideo ait Apostolus Rom. 12. Si inimicus tuus esurierit, ciba illum: si sitierit potum da illi: hoc enim faciens, carbones ignis congeres super caput eius*, Charitatis utique, carbones, iuxta Ambrosium, Augustinum, Bedam, et D. Thomam, non supplicii aeterni, iuxta Chrysostomum apud Tannerum* disput. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

15 You will OBJECT first, Matth. 5: You have heard that it was said to them of old: Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and shalt hate thy enemy: Therefore the ancient Law of God is kept whole, even if the enemy were hated. It is confirmed, because the moral Law is contained in the ten precepts, and in it there is no mention of loving the enemy. Therefore the Gloss on 3. Reg. 7: Hiram made a molten sea of ten cubits. The Gloss there: By the ten precepts in the law, the Lord expressed all things that we ought to do.

OBIICIES primo Matth. 5. Audistis, quia dictum est antiquis: Diliges proximum, et odio habebis inimicum tuum: Ergo Lex Dei integra antiqua servata est, etiamsi odio haberetur inimicus. Confirmatur, quia in decem praeceptis Lex moralis continetur, et in ea non fit mentio inimici diligendi. Ideo Glossa ad id 3. Reg. 7. Fecit Hiram mare fusile decem cubitorum. Glossa ibi: Decem praeceptis in lege, omnia, quae facere debemus, Dominus expressit.

16 S. Thomas answers first that the law did not command this, but that the Pharisees deduced it by way of opposition, because in Leuit. 19. it was said: Thou shalt love thy neighbour, or as our version has it: friend; for the Hebrew רֵעַ rea signifies companion or friend; but by friend they understood a companion from the stock of Abraham and Jacob, as if the other nations were to be hated and destroyed, because it is said, Deutet. 25: Thou shalt blot out his name under heaven. Beware thou forget not, as Maldonatus glosses: But they were deceived, because, although it said certain nations were to be destroyed, yet not all; nay rather, to be loved, since they were to be joined in one wall by the corner stone, as is said in Isaie 28. Ephes. 2. Prima Petri 2. Psalm. 117. See Molanus on that place, Cornelius a Lapide, and other expositors. And so the place is interpreted in this way by the Imperfect homil. 13. in Matth., ascribed to Chrysostom, and others, whom Tostatus follows, quaest. 344. S. Thom. 3. dist. 30. art. 1. Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 3. puncto 2, where he calls it the perverse tradition of the Pharisees; and Cornelius a Lapide, observing that in the ancient law it was only permitted to kill for justice, but not to hate. For thus also the Judge kills the guilty. Therefore Caspensis num. 11. calls it the wicked interpretation of the Pharisees. So also Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

RESPONDet S. Doctor primo*, hoc non praecepisse legem, sed id deduxisse Pharisaeos ex opposito, quia* Leuit. 19. dictum erat: Diliges proximum*, vel ut noster vertit:* amicum*, Hebraeus enim* רֵעַ rea significat socium, vel amicum; per amicum autem intelligebant socium ex genere Abrahae, et Iacob, quasi caeterae gentes essent odio habendae, et delendae, quia dicitur Deutet. 25. Delebis nomen eius sub caelo. Caue ne obliuiscaris*, ut glossat Maldonatus:* At decepti sunt, quia, licet quasdam gentes delendas diceret; tamen non omnes; imo diligendas,quippe essent in unum parietem lapide angulari sociandae, ut dicitur Isaie 28. Ephes. 2. Prima Petri 2. Psalm. 117. Vide Molanum ad eum locum, Cornelium a Lapide, aliosque expositores. Itaque hoc pacto interpretari sunt locum istum, Imperfectus homil. 13. in Matth. Chrysostomo adscriptus, et alii, quos sequuntur Tostatus quaest. 344. S. Thom. 3. dist. 30. art. 1. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 3. puncto 2. ubi eam vocat perversam traditionem Pharisaeorum, atque Cornelius a Lapide, observantes, in lege antiqua solum concessum ad iustitiam occidere, non autem odio habere. Sic enim et Iudex occidit reos. Ideo Caspensis num. 11. vocat eam pravam interpretationem Pharisaeorum. Sic etiam Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

17 THEN S. Thomas answers, and with him Tannerus, that hatred was conceded, or permitted, of old to the law as regards its effects, as has been said; but not the affect of hatred; and indeed as to effect he conceded it not toward private adversaries, but toward the idolatrous Chanaanites, the warring enemies of the Church. And so those who are said to be enemies above in Exodi 23. Leuit 19. were private enemies, but friends as regards the Republic. From which it follows that it was so conceded by the law; but that Christ corrected that law and issued the new precept of the Gospel, as Legislator, and that indeed a perfect one. So with an incredible consensus nearly the ancient Fathers: Irenaeus Lib. 4. cap. 22. Tertullianus Lib. de Patientia, Clemens Alex. lib. 6. strom. Hilarius can. in Matth. 4. Epiph. in Ptolemaitas, haeresi 31. Basil. homil. in Psalm. 14. Chrysostomus homil. 16. in Matth. Auctor imperf. homil. 11. Ambrosius serm. 5. in Psalm. 118. Hieronymus epist. ad Heroniam, de Monogamia, Theophylac. and Euthym. on this place, whom Maldonatus adduces and follows, in cap. 5. Matth. num. 21. But this exposition fits better for proving that Christ came in the Gospel not only as a good messenger, but also enacted Laws as Legislator, against the heretical Pelagians, of whom Hieronymus Lib. primo, and against the sectaries of our time. Therefore he corrects the law, and wills that the name of neighbor be extended to all, since they communicate in the capacity for God and Beatitude, as Hieronymus, Augustinus, Theophylac. and others expound, with Cornelius a Lapide.

> DEINDE respondet S. Doctor, et cum eo Tannerus, concessum, seu permissum antiquitus legi odium, quoad effectus, ut dictum est; non autem affectum odii; et sane quoad effectum concessit, non in adversarios privatos, sed in Idolatras Chananaeos, inimicos pugnaces Ecclesiae. Itaque illi, qui Exodi 23. Leuit 19. supra dicuntur inimici, erant inimici privati, sed amici quoad Rempublicam. Ex quibus sequitur, ita lege concessum fuisse; eam vero legem Christum correxisse, et novum Euangelii praeceptum edidisse, ut Legislatorem, et illud sane perfectum. Ita incredibili consensu fere antiqui Patres, Irenaeus Lib. 4. cap. 22. Tertullianus Lib. de Patientia, Clemens Alex. lib. 6. strom. Hilarius can. in Matth. 4. Epiph. in Ptolemaitas, haeresi 31. Basil. homil. in Psalm. 14. Chrysostomus homil. 16. in Matth. Auctor imperf. homil. 11. Ambrosius serm. 5. in Psalm. 118. Hieronymus epist. ad Heroniam, de Monogamia, Theophylac. et Euthym. ad hunc locum, quos allegat, et sequitur Maldonatus in cap. 5. Matth. num. 21. magis autem quadrat haec expositio ad probandum, Christum in Euangelio venisse, non ut bonum tantum nuncium, sed etiam Leges sanxisse, ut Legislatorem contra haereticos Pelagianos, de quibus Hieronymus Lib. primo, et sectarios nostri temporis. Igitur legem corrigit, et vult, nomen proximi extendi ad omnes, quippe communicantes in capacitate Dei, et Beatitudinis, ut exponunt Hieronymus, Augustinus, Theophylac. et alii apud Cornelium a Lapide.

18 And this is the first fundamental reason of D. Bonav., by which he shows that enemies are to be loved, because according to the Law and interpretation of Christ, enemies also are included in the neighbor.

> Et haec est prima ratio fundamentalis D. Bonav. qua ostendit, inimicos diligendos, quia iuxta Christi Legem, et interpretationem, in proximo includuntur etiam inimici.

19 You will OBJECT secondly from the Gloss on Lucae 6: Love your enemies, which says it belongs to the perfect.

> OBIICIES secundo ex Glossa ad id Lucae 6. Diligite inimicos vestros, quae dicit, esse perfectorum.

20 S. Thomas answers that to love with elicited affect is a precept; but with imperated works of affect, outside necessity, it belongs to perfection, and thus the Gloss speaks.

> RESPONDet S. Doctor, diligere affectu elicito esse praeceptum; affectu vero, imperante opera, extra necessitatem, perfectionis esse, et ita loqui Glossam.

21 You will OBJECT thirdly. To love enemies is a thing of wonder, as the Gloss says on Psalm. 118: Reuela oculos meos; et considerabo mirabilia de lege tua.

OBIICIES tertio. Diligere hostes est mirabile, ut ait Glossa ad id Psalm. 118. Reuela oculos meos; et considerabo mirabilia de lege tua.

22 S. Thomas answers that to love enemies belongs among the marvels which the world admires as most arduous to be commanded by Divine law; yet they can be done with the aid of grace and Charity, and with these marvels the Gloss includes loving enemies, but not with miracles, which are of grace freely given.

RESPONDet S. Doctor, diligere hostes esse ex mirabilibus, quae tanquam maxime ardua mundus admiratur praecipi lege Divina; possunt tamen fieri gratia adiuvante, et Charitate, et cum his mirabilibus includit Glossa diligere hostes, non autem cum miraculis, quae sunt gratia gratis data.

23 You will OBJECT fourthly from D. Ambrose with the Master dist. 29: it suffices not to hate the enemy.

OBIICIES quarto ex D. Ambrosio apud Magistrum dist. 29. sufficit non odisse hostem.

24 S. Thomas answers that that authority is truncated, for he says: it suffices, if we love simply, and do not hate.

RESPONDet S. Doctor, authoritatem illam esse truncatam, ait enim: sufficit, si simpliciter diligimus, et non odio habemus.

25 S. Thomas hands down remedies for hatred, de profectu religiosi, cap. 29, namely, to fear the vengeance of God, who does not remit the sins of him who hates, Matth. 18. To overcome evil by good, Rom. 12. See S. Thomas.

Remedia odii tradit S. Doctor, de profectu religiosi, cap. 29. nempe timere vindictam Dei, qui non remittit odienti peccata Matth. 18. Vincere in bono malum Rom. 12. Vide S. Doctorem.

Question XXV: Whether we are bound to show the effects of charity toward enemies, and which

1 IT IS TO BE ASSERTED that it is a precept to love the enemy not only in affect, but also in effects.

An teneamur CHARITATIS effectus in hostes ostendere, et quosnam.

ASSERENDUM, praeceptum esse, non solum affectu hostem diligere, sed etiam effectibus.

2 It is PROVED by D. Bonaventure, first from the old testament, Exodi 23: If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lie under a burden, thou shalt not pass by, but shalt lift him up with him. Prouerb. 25: If thy enemy be hungry, give him to eat: if he thirst, give him drink. But these commandments were given to all the Israelites.

PROBATUR a D. Bonauent. primo ex veteri testamento, Exodi 23. si videris, Asinum odientis te, iacere sub onere, non pertransibis, sed sublevabis cum eo. Prouerb. 25. si esurierit inimicus tuus, ciba illum: si sitit, potum da illi. Haec autem mandata omnibus data sunt Israelitis.

3 It is PROVED secondly by S. Thomas, and S. Thom. from 5. Matth., where by the same precept it is enjoined: Love your enemies, and do good to them that hate you; and pray for them that persecute and calumniate you, Where the Gloss: The Church does three things: she loves, benefits, and prays: Therefore he who does not benefit enemies, and does not pray for them, is not a living member of the Church.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore, et S. Thom. ex 5. Matth. ubi eodem praecepto iniungitur: Diligite inimicos vestros, et benefacite his, qui oderunt vos; et orate pro persequentibus et calumniantibus vos, Ubi Glossa: Ecclesia tria facit, diligit, benefacit, et orat: Ergo non est membrum viuum Ecclesiae is, qui non benefacit inimicis, et non orat pro eis.

4 It is PROVED thirdly by S. Thomas. Where there is true Charity, there are its effects, just as where there is fire, there is the heating of the matter applied to it; but the effects of Charity are works shown forth for good, as is said in Ioan. 15: You are my friends, if you do the things that I command you, where Gregory, homil. 30. in Euang.: The proof of love is the showing forth of the work: Therefore; otherwise the love will be feigned.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore. Ubi est vera Charitas, ibi effectus eius, sicuti ubi est ignis, ibi calefactio materiae applicitae, sed effectus Charitatis sunt opera exhibita ad bonum, ut dicitur Ioan. 15. Vos amici mei estis, si feceritis quae eo praecipio vobis, ubi Gregorius homil. 30. in Euang. Probatio dilectionis, exhibitio est operis: Ergo; alioqui erit dilectio ficta.

5 It is PROVED fourthly by S. Thomas: Our flesh is more an enemy to us than any enemy whatsoever; but we are bound to preserve it, as is said in Ephes. 5. Therefore.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore: Inimicior est caro nostra quouis inimico; sed hanc tenemur conservare, ut dicitur Ephes. 5. Ergo.

6 It is PROVED fifthly: To withhold the effects of Charity is an effect of hatred and of vengeance, which is contrary to Charity; but we are bound not to take vengeance, Leuit. 19. Rom. 12. Therefore we are bound not to withhold the effects of Charity.

PROBATUR quinto: Subtrahere effectus Charitatis, est effectus odii, et vindictae contrariae Charitati; sed tenemur non ulcisci Leuit. 19. Rom. 12. Ergo tenemur non subtrahere effectus Charitatis.

7 But S. Thomas OBSERVES in corpore that this precept presses in the necessity of the enemy, which he proves with that, prima Ioan. 3: He that shall see his brother in necessity, and shall shut up his bowels from him: how doth the Charity of God abide in him? And he closes: My little children, let us not love in word, nor in tongue, but in deed, and in truth.

OBSERVAT autem in corpore, S. Doctor, hoc praeceptum urgere in necessitate inimici, quod probat illo prima Ioan. 3. Si quis viderit fratrem suum necessitatem habere, et clauserit viscera sua ab eo: quomodo Charitas Dei manet in eo? Et claudit: Filioli mei, non diligamus verbo et lingua, sed opere, et veritate.

8 THEREFORE it is a precept in case of necessity to succor the enemy, especially in spiritual things, as I showed in the preceding quaest., from D. Augustine.

ITAQUE praeceptum est in casu necessitatis subvenire, maxime in spiritualibus, inimico, ut ostendi quaest. praecedenti, ex D. Augustino.

9 BECAUSE, however, here there is a twofold precept — one negative, not to hear, nor deny, the signs of love; the other affirmative, to show these signs — you must know that the negative, of not hating, etc., binds always. Therefore in Matth. 18. he is delivered to the tormentor who has not forgiven the injury. So Nauar. cap. 14. num. 25. Lorca 2.2. sect. 3. disp. 25. num. 33. Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 3. punct. 2. Suarez disp. 5. sect. 5 num. 9. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. Coninchez disp. 24. dub. 6. num. 82. Caspensis disp 3 sect. 2. Fagundez on the first precept of the Decalogue Lib. 1. cap 28. num. 9. with D. Bonaventure here, and in the preceding quaest. But insofar as it is affirmative, although it may seem not to bind to eliciting any internal act of love, nevertheless per accidens it often binds by reason of avoiding scandal. Whence you ought to bear yourself toward the enemy so as not to show signs of enmity, which is left to the judgment of the prudent to determine; yet some rules are handed down.

> QUIA vero hic est duplex praeceptum; alterum negativum, non audiendi, nec negandi, signa amoris: alterum affirmativum, haec signa ostendendi; scire debes, negativum, non odiendi, etc. ad semper obligare, Ideo Matth. 18. traditur tortori, qui non remiserit iniurias. Ita Nauar. cap. 14. num. 25. Lorca 2.2. sect. 3. disp. 25. num. 33. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 3. punct. 2. Suarez disp. 5. sect. 5 num. 9. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. Coninchez disp. 24. dub. 6. num. 82. Caspensis disp 3 sect. 2. Fagundez in primum praeceptum Decalogi Lib. 1. cap 28. num. 9. cum D. Bonavent. hic, et quaest. praecedenti. Quatenus vero affirmativum est, licet videatur non obligare ad aliquem actum amoris internum eliciendum; per accidens tamen saepe obligar ratione scandali vitandi. Unde cum inimico ita te gerere debes, ut non ostendas signa inimicitiae, quod prudentis iudicio relinquitur videndum; sed tamen aliquas regulas tradunt.

10 FIRST, when you pour out general prayers, do not exclude the enemy; for otherwise you do not bear yourself rightly in the Church, and you show yourself a dead member of the Church, which prays for all, as S. Thomas has it, fundamento secundo.

> PRIMO cum orationes fundis generales, non excludas hostem; aliter enim te in Ecclesia non recte geris, et ostendis, te membrum mortuum Ecclesiae, quae pro omnibus orat, ut habet S. Doctor fundamento secundo.

11 WHEN you bestow alms on a needy community, you ought not to exclude a needy enemy. So Syluester V. Charitas, num. 3. §. 5. Toletus Lib. 4. summa, cap. 10. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 25. Fagundez numero 10.

> CUM eleemosynas communitati indigenti largiris, non debes excludere inimicum egenum. Ita Syluester V. Charitas, num. 3. §. 5. Toletus Lib. 4. summa, cap. 10. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 25. Fagundez numero 10.

12 SIMILARLY, when you stand in the circle, you ought to address the enemy in common, and to salute him who greets you as he meets you. Hence S. Thomas, de profectu religiosi, cap. 28. says: let them examine how they would minister food to a hungry enemy, if they deny salutation, especially if he seeks it. Whence he gathers that such a one will not keep that: Rom. 12. and prouerb. 25: If thy enemy be hungry, give him to eat. So also D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 25. art. 9. and the expositors, and Suarez disp. 5. de Charitate, sect. 5. n. 7. Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 3. puncto 3 toward the end, vers. 3. Coninch. disp. 24. dub. 6. from num. 85. Fagundez loco cit. who gathers two things from this: The first is, that it is mortal to deny these signs of Charity. So also Suarez num. 7. The second, that it is then a sin of scandal when alms and the other things are altogether public; for then necessity presses. But you are not bound per se to be the first to salute; not to return a salutation, however, is per se only venial, as Caspensis says, num. 15., unless scandal be present. Bassaeus adds, V. Charitas, num. 14., and notable contempt, where he says the circumstances are to be observed, especially if the condition be gravely unequal, and he does not so quickly condemn it as mortal. So Diana part. 2. tract. 1. resol. 62.

> SIMILITER cum in circulo stas, alloqui communiter inimicum, et salutare eum obvium debes salutantem. Hinc S. Doctor de profectu religiosi, cap. 28. dicit: examinent hi, quomodo esurienti inimico cibum ministrarent, si salutationem negant, maxime si affectet eam. Unde colligit, hunc non servaturum illud: Rom. 12. et prouerb. 25. Si esurierit inimicus tuus, ciba illum. Ita etiam D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 25. art. 9. et expositores, et Suarez disp. 5. de Charitate, sect. 5. n. 7. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 3. puncto 3 ad finem vers. 3. Coninch. disp. 24. dub. 6. a num. 85. Fagundez loco cit. qui duo hinc colligit: Primum est, esse mortale haec signa Charitatis negare. Ita etiam Suarez num. 7. Secundum, tunc esse peccatum scandali, quando omnino eleemosyna, et alia sunt publica; tunc enim necessitas urget. Non teneris autem primus esse ad salutandum per se; non resalutare vero, per se est solum veniale, ut ait Caspensis num. 15. nisi scandalum adsit. Addit Bassaeus V. Charitas, num. 14. et notabilis contemptus, ubi circumstantias ait observandas, maxime si dispar sit graviter conditio, neque ita cito mortale damnat. Sic Diana part. 2. tract. 1. resol. 62.

13 But the SIGNS of special love on any occasion of opportunity are only of perfection. So Fagundez num. 11. Coletus Lib. 4. summa, cap. 10. Caspensis loco citato, with D. Bonaventure in corpore. Nay, Nauar. adds, loco cit., and Caietanus, art 9., that even one reconciled with an enemy is not bound to show him first the services shown in the time of friendship; nay, it can even be necessary to abstain sometimes, if the familiarity is harmful, as Tannerus says, disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. num 9.

SIGNA vero specialis amoris in quavis opportunitate sunt tantum perfectionis. Ita Fagundez num. 11. Coletus Lib. 4. summa, cap. 10. Caspensis loco citato, cum D. Bonavent. in corpore. Imo addit Nauar. loco cit. et Caietanus art 9. etiam reconciliatum cum inimico, non teneri ei prima obsequia, tempore amicitiae exhibita, exhibere; Imo potest esse necessarium, abstinere aliquando, si familiaritas sit nociua, ut ait Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. num 9.

14 We are bound also under mortal sin, to enemies begging pardon, to remit the injury, as regards hatred, and as regards the fault committed against us; but not as regards the satisfaction due, nor as regards the action we have against them in judgment. So the Doctors commonly with D. Thom. here; so Caietanus and Aragon. ibi, Toletus Lib. 4. summae, cap. 10. Syluester V. Charitas, num. 4. §. 6. Angelus verbo iniuria, num. 6. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 14. num. 25. Tannerus num. 8. So Lucae 17: If thy enemy return to thee, saying: It repenteth me: forgive him. Whence S. Thomas observes, in his commentary, from Bede in the Gloss, that it is not commanded to forgive the sinner indiscriminately, but the penitent. Therefore he adds: and if he sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day be converted unto thee, saying: It repenteth me; forgive him: But he shows this elegantly thus: We are commanded to love the enemy, and to spare him, that we may be merciful, as the heavenly Father is merciful, and so may be his sons regenerated. But he himself spares the penitent, not the obstinate, Ezech. 33: The wickedness of the wicked shall not hurt him, in what day soever he shall be converted. Whence the Gloss of Bede on this place of Luke: We are commanded to grant pardon otherwise to a brother asking, otherwise to an enemy persecuting: to the brother by granting remission we communicate, with the fellowship of Charity. To the persecutor wishing us evil, or, if he can, doing it, let us do with good will what we can, and this, by the example of Christ, Lucae 23: Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. By the example of David, Psalm. 7: If I have rendered to them that repaid me evils, etc. and Act. 7, the example of Stephen: Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. So S. Bonaventura.

TENEMUR etiam sub mortali, inimicis veniam petentibus iniuriam remittere, quantum ad odium, et quantum ad culpam in nos commissam; non vero quantum ad debitam satisfactionem, nec quantum ad actionem, quam erga illos habemus in iudicio. Ita communiter Doctores cum D. Thom. hic, sic Caietanus et Aragon. ibi, Toletus Lib. 4. summae, cap. 10. Syluester V. Charitas, num. 4. §. 6. Angelus verbo iniuria, num. 6. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 14. num. 25. Tannerus num. 8. Sic Lucae 17. Si inimicus tuus reversus fuerit ad te dicens: poenitet me: dimitte illi. Unde observat S. Doctor, in commentario, ex Beda in Glossa, Non iuberi passim peccanti, sed poenitenti dimittere. Ideo subdit: et si septies in die peccaverit in te, et septies in die conversus fuerit ad te, dicens: poenitet me; dimitte illi: Hoc autem eleganter ostendit sic: Praecipimur diligere inimicum, eique parcere, ut simus misericordes, sicut et Pater coelestis misericors est, et ita eius filii simus regenerati. Ipse autem poenitenti parcit non obstinato Ezech. 33. Impietas impii non nocebit ei, in quacumque die conversus fuerit. Unde Glossa Bedae in hunc locum Lucae: Aliter fratri petenti, aliter inimico persequenti veniam dare praecipimur, fratri concessa remissione, socia Charitate communicamus. Persecutori malum nobis volenti, vel si potest, nobis facienti, bona voluntate faciamus, quod possumus, et hoc, exemplo Christi, Lucae 23. Pater ignosce illis; non enim sciunt quid faciunt. Exemplo Dauidis Psalm. 7. Si reddidi retribuentibus mihi mala, etc. et Act. 7. exemplo Stephani: Domine ne statuas illis hoc peccatum. Haec S. Bonaventura.

15 Yet we are not bound to remit satisfaction; nay, Nauar. adds, in summa Latina, cap. 14. num. 25., that sometimes some cannot be remitted even if they wish, as is had in cap. Parochianos, de sent. excom. in verb. satisfaciant: such is a son of a family, a servant, etc. So also Tannerus num. 10. with others.

Non tenemur tamen satisfactionem remittere, imo addit Nauar. in summa Latina, cap. 14. num. 25. aliquando non posse aliquas remittere, etiamsi velint, ut habetur cap. Parochianos, de sent. excom. in verb. satisfaciant: talis est filiusfamilias, servus, etc. Ita etiam Tannerus num. 10. cum aliis.

16 But when the injury is equal in time, gravity, and the other circumstances, let a mutual compensation be made, as Lessius says, Tom. 1. Lib. 1. cap. 11. dub. 25. num. 133., against Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 18. num 47. and Caietanum, 2. 2. quaest. 26. art. 2., who do not admit compensation, but wrongly; for it is given also in money and in other temporal goods: Therefore also in reputation. It is certain, indeed, that the one who offended first is bound to ask pardon first. But if one began, and the other gravely transgressed, the latter is bound to ask first. So Syluester in Rosa aurea, cap. 56.; yet always attend to the quality of the persons, as Fagundez notes, num. 13.

QUANDO autem est aequalis tempore, gravitate, et caeteris circumstantiis iniuria, fiat recompensatio mutua, ut ait Lessius Tom. 1. Lib. 1. cap. 11. dub. 25. num. 133. contra Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 18. num 47. et Caietanum 2. 2. quaest. 26. art. 2. qui non admittunt compensationem, sed male; nam datur etiam in pecunia, et aliis bonis temporalibus: Ergo et in fama. Certum est vero, primum offendentem teneri primo veniam petere. Si vero unus incepit, et alter graviter excessit, tenetur iste primus petere. Ita Syluester in Rosa aurea, cap. 56. semper tamen attendas ad qualitatem personarum, ut notat Fagundez num. 13.

17 But the ARGUMENTS to the contrary are solved by D. Bonaventure with this distinction: to be bound in necessity, and with the conditions given above; but outside necessity, it is asserted to be of perfection by the Gloss on 5. Matth. and by D. Augustine, cap. 73. Enchir, who cap. 24. says: But whosoever does not forgive from the heart him that begs, and asks, or is penitent, let him by no means think that his sins are forgiven him by the Lord. So D. Bonavent. dist. 30.

ARGUMENTA vero in contrarium solvuntur a D. Bonavent. hac distinctione, teneri in necessitate, et datis conditionibus supra; extra vero necessitatem, perfectionis asseritur a Glossa ad 5. Matth. a D. Augustino cap. 73. Enchir, qui cap. 24. ait: Quisquis autem roganti, et petenti, seu poenitenti, non ex corde dimittit, nullo modo existimet a Domino sua peccata dimitti. Ita D. Bonavent. dist. 30.

18 He OBJECTS still. It is natural that the enemy not be loved, but assailed.

OBIICIT adhuc. Naturale est, ut inimicus non ametur, sed impugnetur.

19 He answers, that nature indeed proceeds in necessary agents, as the hot against the cold; but enmity against men is against our nature; nay, even against the sociable nature of beasts of the same species. I will add: Grant that I am not bound to remit satisfaction in judgment, as I said, save where there is grave loss to the injured party; yet remission is to be urged, especially if he is to be punished by death, mutilation, etc., whence nothing accrues to the injured party. I do not refuse that, if the infamy must be washed away, satisfaction is to be sought, etc. Sylvest. verb. Charitas, quaest. 6. Malder. 2. 2. quaest. 25. art. 9. Filliuc. tract. 28. num. 25. Question XXVI: Whether angels are to be loved out of charity

[1] I ASSERT that the Angels are to be loved out of Charity. It is PROVED by S. Thomas, ad 2., and D. Thom. in corpore. The friendship of charity is founded in the communication of eternal beatitude, in the participation of which we communicate with the Angels: for it is said, Matth. 22: that in the resurrection men shall be as the Angels, in heaven. Wherefore, although they differ in nature, by which natural friendship is constituted; they are nevertheless, according to supernatural things, toward the same end, and toward the same Good. And therefore they live together with us in eternal life, which is enough for supernatural friendship; just as natural fellowship is proper to friends according to nature, as Aristotle teaches, 8. Eth. cap. 5. The others use this same reasoning, as you will see in Tannerus, disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

> ASSERO, Angelos ex Charitate esse diligendos. PROBATUR a S. Doct. ad 2. et D. Thom. in corpore. Amicitia charitatis fundatur in communicatione beatitudinis aeternae, in cuius participatione communicamus cum Angelis: Dicitur enim Matth. 22. In resurrectione futuros Homines, sicut Angelos, in caelo. Quapropter, licet natura differant, qua constituitur amicitia secundum naturam; sunt tamen secundum supernaturalia ad eundem finem, et ad idem Bonum. Et ideo convivunt nobiscum in vita aeterna, quod satis est ad amicitiam supernaturalem; sicuti convictus naturalis est proprius amicorum secundum naturam, ut docet Aristoteles 8. Eth. cap. 5. Hac ratione utuntur caeteri, ut videbis apud Tannerum disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

Question XXVII: Whether demons, and the damned, are to be loved out of charity

[1] I ASSERT that demons are not to be loved with charity. It is proved first by D. Bonaventure. Only those who are ordered to the same end of supernatural life are to be loved with Charity; but demons are not orderable to eternal life with us: Therefore. The major is certain: for where we have Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, it is expressed that only those are to be loved with Charity who can, like us, communicate in the same good that we wish for ourselves, as D. Augustine indicates, cited by the Master dist. 28. Note, however, that this is not expressly found in St. Augustine.

> ASSERO, daemones non esse charitate diligendos. PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo. Illi tantum, qui sunt ordinati ad eundem finem vitae supernaturalem, sunt Charitate diligendi; sed daemones non sunt ordinabiles ad vitam aeternam nobiscum: Ergo. Maior est certa: nam ubi habetur: Diliges proximum sicut teipsum, exprimitur, eos solos diligendos Charitate, qui possunt, sicut et nos, in eodem bono communicare, quod nobis optamus, ut indicat D. August. apud Magistrum dist. 28. Adverte tamen, id expresse non haberi in D. Augustino.

[2] It is proved second by the Holy Doctor from that passage Luke 10 where Christ recites the Precepts: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart: and thy neighbor as thyself. But when Christ was asked,

And who is my neighbor? He concludes: He who showed mercy upon him, namely upon the wounded man. Where the Gloss says: The neighbor is he upon whom mercy is bestowed, or who bestows it: But demons are not such: Therefore.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doct. ex illo Lucae 10. ubi Christus profert Praecepta: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo: et proximum sicut te ipsum. Interrogatus autem Christus: Et quis est meus proximus? Concludit: Qui fecit misericordiam cum illo, vulnerato scilicet. Ubi Glossa: Proximus est is, cui impenditur, vel qui impendit misericordiam: Sed daemones non sunt tales: Ergo.

3 Maldonatus, moreover, OBSERVES on Matthew 5 that here neighbor is designated not according to the ancient law, which declared only Jews to be neighbor, and therefore excluded the gentiles; but in the Evangelic manner, where there is no distinction of Jew or Greek: Hence that foreign Samaritan is neighbor to the man who fell among robbers, whom he helped with deeds; for he was not only neighbor to him, but also presented himself with him as Neighbor.

> OBSERVAT autem Maldonatus ad 5. Matthaei*, hic designari proximum, non iuxta legem antiquam, quae solos Iudaeos proximum declarabat, et ideo gentes excludebat; sed modo Evangelico,* ubi non est distinctio Iudaei, neque Graeci: Ideo Samaritanus ille extraneus, est proximus illi, qui incidit in latrones, quem adiuvit operibus, hic enim non solum fuit illi proximus, sed etiam se cum illo ut Proximus exhibuit.

4 Neighbor, moreover, is called by MANY NAMES in Scripture. First, by kinship, Psalm 37. My friends and my neighbors drew near against me, and stood. Psalm 34. As though a neighbor, and as though our brother, so I pleased. Second, by Religion, Ecclesiasticus 15. He will exalt him among his neighbors, and in this sense the ancient law spoke, at least according to the understanding of the Jews, not including enemies, that is, Pagans. Third, by communication in nature and in the supreme end; and thus man is neighbor to man, and the good Angel is neighbor, as D. Augustine teaches, book 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 30. Last, neighbor is said by proof from effects, and thus even that foreign Samaritan, who showed mercy, is truly neighbor, as Christ says. This from St. Bonaventure on that text of Luke.

> MULTIPLICITER autem in Scriptura vocatur Proximus. Primo, cognatione, Psal. 37. Amici mei, et proximi mei adversum me appropinquaverunt, et steterunt. Psal. 34. Quasi proximum, et quasi fratrem nostrum sic complacebam. Secundo Religione, Eccles. 15. Exaltabit illum apud proximos suos*, et hoc sensu loquebatur Lex antiqua, saltem secundum Iudaeorum intelligentiam, non includens inimicos, idest, Paganos. Tertio communicatione in natura, et fine supremo; et sic hominis homo, et Angelus bonus est proximus, ut docet D. August.* lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 30. Ultimo dicitur proximus probatione ex effectibus, et sic etiam extraneus ille Samaritanus, qui fecit misericordiam, est vere proximus, ut Christus ait. Haec S. Bonav. ad eum Lucae textum.

5 It is proved third by the Holy Doctor, because Charity is borne toward those like us, either because they are just and communicate in spiritual life, or because they can be just and capable of glory, as D. Augustine says, 8. de Trinit. cap. 6. But demons are not such: Therefore.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. quia Charitas fertur in similes, vel quia iusti sunt, et communicant in vita spirituali, vel quia possunt esse iusti, et habiles ad gloriam, ut ait D. August. 8. de Trinit. cap. 6. Sed daemones non sunt tales: Ergo.

6 It is proved fourth by the Holy Doctor. The Church militant is a Sister conformed to the Church triumphant, and is therefore so called: Descending from heaven, Apocalypse 21. But the triumphant Court does not love demons: Therefore.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. Ecclesia militans est Soror conformis triumphanti, quae ideo dicitur: Descendens de caelo, Apoc. 21. Sed Curia triumphans daemones non diligit: Ergo.

7 It is proved fifth, because Charity does not comprehend those who are eternally separated from the Charity of Christ. Other authors use these arguments; see Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

> PROBATUR quinto, quia Charitas non comprehendit eos, qui in aeternum sunt a Charitate Christi separati. His mediis utuntur alii, Vide Tannerum disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

8 Almost all the ARGUMENTS to the contrary are solved by the Holy Doctor, granting that for natural friendship conformity in nature and in companionship suffices: But Charity means a supernatural friendship, for which demons are not fit.

> ARGUMENTA in contrarium fere omnia solvit S. Doct. concedens, ad amicitiam naturalem sufficere conformitatem in natura, et convictu: Sed Charitas dicit amicitiam supernaturalem, ad quam Daemones non sunt idonei.

9 You will say first: Demons benefit us toward merit and glory: Therefore they are to be loved with Charity.

> Dices primo: Daemones nobis prosunt ad meritum, et gloriam: Ergo Charitate sunt diligendi.

10 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: they benefit us against their own intention; therefore they contribute nothing to this.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. proficere nobis contra intentum; ideo nihil faciunt ad hoc.

11 You will say second: demons contribute to the honor of God and to justice being exalted: Therefore, since Charity loves God's honor, we ought also to love demons.

> Dices secundo; daemones conferunt ad Dei honorem, et iustitiam exaltandam: Ergo, cum Charitas Dei honorem diligat, debemus etiam daemones diligere.

12 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: this is true at most of that which contributes of itself by its own ordination. Therefore demons are indeed matter of the Divine justice worthy of praise, inasmuch as they are punished and forever deprived of beatitude; and hence we rise up to the praise of God; yet they are not objects of Charity, which requires an ordination in itself to beatitude, or at least as a means, such as the gifts of grace are.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. id verum esse ad summum de eo, quod per se confert ex sui ordinatione. Igitur daemones sunt quidem materia Divinae iustitiae laudandae, quatenus puniti, et in aeternum privati beatitudine; et hinc nos ad Dei laudem insurgimus; non tamen sunt obiectum Charitatis, quod exigit ordinationem in se ad beatitudinem, aut ad minus, ut medium, sicuti sunt dona gratiae.

Question XXVIII: Whether it is fitting that four things to be loved out of charity are enumerated

1 D. AUGUSTINE, lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, c. 23., enumerates four things to be loved with Charity. One above us, that is, God; one, which we ourselves are; a third next to us, that is, the Neighbor; a fourth below us, that is, our Body.

> D. AUGUSTINUS lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, c. 23. quatuor enumerat Charitate diligenda. Unum supra nos, idest Deum; Unum, quod nos sumus; tertium iuxta nos, idest, Proximum; Quartum infra nos, idest, Corpus nostrum.

2 The SUFFICIENCY is taken from the very nature of Charity; for since this is a supernatural friendship, consisting in the communication of beatific life, in that communication there intervenes first God, the cause of beatitude and the end to which we wish all good things. Second, others to whom we wish this good of beatitude, in which we may communicate: and these either communicate and participate directly, and they are Man and Angel; and this includes ourselves, and souls, and Angels, who are neighbors: or they participate indirectly by redundancy, and these are our bodies. So also D. Thomas loc. cit., where see Malderus, Sylvius, and Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. Laym. lib. 2. tract. 3. cap. 3. Filliucius, tract. 28. num. 8. with Richard 3. dist. 28. art. 1.

> SUFFICIENTIA autem sumitur ex ipsius Charitatis natura; cum enim haec sit amicitia supernaturalis, consistens in communicatione vitae beatae, in qua quidem communicatione intervenit primo Deus, causa beatitudinis, et finis, cui omnia volumus bona. Secundo alii, quibus volumus bonum hoc beatitudinis, in quo communicemus: Et hi vel communicant, et participant directe, et sunt Homo, et Angelus; et hoc includit nos ipsos, et animas, et Angelos, qui sunt proximi: Vel participant indirecte per redundantiam, et haec sunt corpora nostra. Sic etiam D. Thomas loc. cit. ubi Malder. Sylvius, et Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 1. Laym. lib. 2. tract. 3. cap. 3. Filliucius, tract. 28. num. 8. cum Richard. 3. dist. 28. art. 1.

3 The sufficiency of things to be loved is also taken from COMPARISON with the one loving; for the one loving either has respect to that which is above himself, namely God; or to himself; or to his companions next to him, or to that which is below him; and in this way not only are the lovable objects enumerated, but also the order of love.

> SUMITUR etiam sufficientia diligendorum ex comparatione ad diligentem; nam diligens, aut habet respectum ad id, quod est supra se, nempe Deum; Vel ad se; vel ad consocios iuxta se, vel ad id, quod infra se; et hoc pacto non solum obiecta diligibilia recensentur, sed etiam ordo dilectionis.

4 You will OBJECT first: Things of the same species make one; but we and our neighbor are such: Therefore.

> OBIICIES primo, Quae sunt eiusdem speciei, faciunt unum; sed nos, et proximus sumus tales: Ergo.

5 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: they are one by nature, yet Charity first moves us on account of ourselves toward beatitude; then it regards the neighbor in order to beatitude; for the neighbor is less pertaining to us.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. esse unum natura, tamen primo Charitatem movere nos propter nosmet ad beatitudinem: deinde respicere proximum in ordine ad beatitudinem; nam proximus est minus pertinens ad nos.

6 You will OBJECT second: Scripture enumerates sufficiently the things to be loved, God and neighbor.

> OBIICIES secundo. Scriptura satis enumerat diligibilia, Deum, et proximum.

7 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: in these precepts we ourselves are included as to soul and body, as I showed quaest. 21. and 22.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. in his praeceptis includi nos quoad animam, et corpus, ut ostendi quaest. 21. et 22.

8 You will OBJECT third: Nothing is blessed besides three: God by essence, the soul by influence, and the body by redundancy, which are only three.

> OBIICIES tertio. Nihil est beatum, praeter tria, Deus per essentiam, animus per influentiam, et corpus per redundantiam, quae sunt tantum tria.

9 St. Bonaventure REPLIES: Charity regards its objects in an ordered way. For it is most orderly: hence it regards first ourselves, then those placed next to us.

> RESPONDet S. Bonav. Charitatem sua obiecta respicere ordinate. Est enim ordinatissima: ideo respicit primo nos, deinde quae iuxta nos sunt posita.

10 You will OBJECT fourth: D. Ambrose, in the Gloss on that Canticle 2, He set charity in order within me, enumerates six things to be loved: God, ourselves, Parents, sons and Brothers, Domestics, and Enemies.

> OBIICIES quarto. D. Ambr. in Gloss. in id Cant. 2. Ordinavit in me charitatem, sex recenset diligibilia: Deum, Nos ipsos, Parentes, filios et Fratres, Domesticos, ac Inimicos.

11 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: Ambrose distinguishes the neighbor by an accidental distinction, according as he is joined to us; but D. Augustine distinguishes according to the order of Charity in itself; hence it is considered according to the principal differences of good. See the Holy Doctor also dist. 29. dub. 3. litt.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. Ambrosium distinctione accidentali distinguere proximum, prout nobis coniunctus est; at D. August. distinguit iuxta ordinem Charitatis secundum se; ideo attenditur secundum differentias principales boni. Vide S. Doct. etiam dist. 29. dub. 3. litt.

12 You will OBJECT fifth: As our own body is to be loved, so also the neighbor's: If therefore our soul and the soul of the neighbor distinguish two members: Therefore also the bodies.

> OBIICIES quinto. Sicut diligendum est corpus nostrum; ita et proximi: Si ergo animus noster, et animus proximi distinguunt duo membra: Ergo et corpora.

13 The Holy Doctor REPLIES: our bodies and those of our neighbors are below us in the same order; hence they constitute one; but our soul and the soul of the neighbor are related in a different manner, because one is intrinsic, the other extrinsic, in the account of charity.

> RESPONDet S. Doct. corpora nostra, et proximorum, esse infra nos in eodem ordine; unde unum constituunt; animum vero nostrum, et animum proximi diverso modo se habere, quia unus est intrinsecus, alter extrinsecus in ratione charitatis.

14 You will OBJECT sixth: That which is against us is also to be loved out of charity.

> OBIICIES sexto. Ex charitate diligendum est etiam id, quod est contra nos.

15 It is REPLIED: that it is contained in the neighbor, who nevertheless is not loved as against us by reason of fault, but as next to us by reason of communication in the beatific life.

> RESPONDetur, contineri id in proximo, qui tamen non diligitur, ut contra nos ratione culpae; sed ut iuxta nos ratione communicationis in vita beata.

Question XXIX: Whether God, and the neighbor, are loved with the same habit of charity

1 NOTE that neighbor is said of us by reason of the identity of nature, coordinated to the blessed life.

> NOTA, proximum dici nobis ratione identitatis naturae, coordinatae ad beatam vitam.

2 This question is also proposed by the Moderns under another title: Whether the motive of Charity toward God and toward neighbor is the same.

> HAEC quaestio alio etiam titulo a Modernis proponitur: An idem sit motivum Charitatis Dei, et proximi.

3 The FIRST opinion is that the motives of the charity of God and of neighbor are diverse, such that the motive for loving God is His uncreated goodness; but the motive for loving neighbor is his supernatural perfection of sanctity, virtue, etc.

> PRIMA opinio est, diversa esse motiva charitatis Dei, et proximi, ita, ut motivum diligendi Deum, sit increata eius bonitas; motivum vero diligendi proximum, sit eius supernaturalis perfectio sanctitatis, virtutis, etc.

4 In favor of this are cited by Mastrius Vasquez, Caspensis, and other more recent authors, adducing D. Bonaventure. That author, however, having proposed the title disp. 6. quaest. 22. of the third part: Whether the motive of Charity toward God and toward neighbor is the same, proceeds thus.

> Pro hac citantur a Mastrio Vasquez, Caspensis, et alii recentiores, adducentes D. Bonaventuram. Ille autem author, proposito titulo disp. 6. quaest. 22. tertiae partis*: An idem sit motivum Charitatis Dei, et proximi, sic prosequitur.*

5 The FIRST opinion denies, and teaches, that the motive of the charity of God is His very uncreated goodness; but the motive of Charity, by which the neighbor is loved with the love of friendship, is the very supernatural goodness of the neighbor. For in two ways (says this opinion) can the neighbor be honestly loved: First on account of God's goodness alone, that is, from the desire of the divine good, because the good conferred upon the neighbor is in a certain way God's good, from the words of Christ, Matth. 25. As long as you did it to one of these my least brethren, you did it to me; and this love manifestly pertains to the Theological virtue of Charity. In the other way the neighbor can be loved, either on account of the rational nature which he has like ours, or on account of the sanctity of morals; in which love, since the formal object differs far from the formal object of Charity, he asserts it is not an elicited act of the Theological virtue, but of another inferior one. So Vasquez, Turrianus, Caspensis, Coninck, Arriaga, and other Recentiores, citing in their favor D. Thomas, D. Bonaventure, Richard, Durandus, and other older authors.

> PRIMA sententia negat, docetque, motivum charitatis Dei esse ipsam increatam bonitatem: motivum vero Charitatis, quo proximus amore amicitiae diligitur, esse bonitatem ipsam supernaturalem proximi. Duobus enim modis (inquit haec sententia) potest proximus honeste diligi: Primo propter solam Dei bonitatem, idest ex desiderio divini boni, quia bonum, collatum in proximum, est quodammodo bonum Dei, ex verbis Christi, Matth. 25. Quamdiu fecistis uni ex fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis*, atque haec dilectio manifeste pertinet ad Theologicam virtutem Charitatis. Alio modo potest diligi proximus, vel propter naturam rationalem, quam habet nostrae similem, vel propter morum sanctitatem, in qua dilectione, quoniam formale obiectum longe differt a formali obiecto Charitatis, asserit, illam non esse actum elicitum Theologicae virtutis; sed alterius inferioris. Ita Vasquez, Turrianus, Caspensis, Coninchius, Arriaga, et alii Recentiores pro se citantes D. Thomam, D. Bonaventuram, Richardum, Durandum, et alios antiquiores.*

6 These Doctors indeed ADMIT two motives of love, namely of God and of neighbor, yet they say one is the motive of that love which is Charity, as is clear from D. Bonaventure, adduced by these Doctors; indeed by Mastrius himself num. 569. and by Caspensis disp. 3. de Charitate, sect. 1. num. 3., where the same is asserted as by Vasquez lib. 1. de ador. disp. 6. cap. 2. and lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6.; and certainly the words of D. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4., where he is adduced by these, are in favor of the second opinion, to be reported shortly: For the Holy Doctor does not acknowledge those two habits, nor does he say one word about either of them.

HI vero Doctores duo quidem dilectionis motiva fatentur, Dei, scilicet et proximi, unum tamen dicunt esse motivum eius dilectionis, quae est Charitas, ut constat ex D. Bonav. allegato a Doctoribus his; imo ab ipso Mastrio num. 569. et Caspensi disp. 3. de Charitate, sect. 1. num. 3. ubi idem asserit cum Vasquez lib. 1. de ador. disp. 6. cap. 2. et lib. 3. disp. 1. cap. 6. et sane verba D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4. ubi ab his adducitur, sunt pro secunda sententia mox referenda: Neque enim S. Doct. illos duos habitus agnoscit, nec unum de illis verbulum dicit.

7 Therefore Mastrius errs in reporting that these doctors deny there to be the same motive of the Charity of God and of neighbor, but posit two: Indeed he himself betrays his own error, while he says that these Doctors posit indeed two motives of the love of neighbor, one to be the goods of the neighbor; the other to be God, as the end; and that the former motive is not of Charity, but of an inferior virtue of love.

Fallitur igitur Mastrius referens, hos doctores negare, esse idem motivum Charitatis Dei, et proximi, sed ponere duos: Imo ipse suum errorem detegit, dum ait, hos Doctores ponere quidem duo motiva dilectionis proximi, alterum, esse bona proximi; alterum esse Deum, ut finem; et prius motivum non esse Charitatis, sed inferioris virtutis dilectionis.

8 The SECOND opinion, therefore, is that there is one motive by which God and neighbor are loved, namely uncreated goodness. So D. Bonaventure loc. cit. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 105. art. 3. ad 1. Vasquez, Caspensis, Turtianus, Durandus, Richardus, Valencia, Suarez, Maldetus, Sylvius, whom Amicus adduces and follows disp. 24. sect. 3. The same think Lorca, Tannerus, Mastrius, adducing others, and among the rest Scotus 3. dist. 18. quaest. unica, and all the Scotists. The same thinks D. Bonaventure dist. 27. art. 1. quaest. 2. and art. 2. quaest. 3. in corpore.

SECUNDA igitur sententia est, unum esse motivum, quo diligitur Deus, et proximus, scilicet bonitatem increatam. Ita D. Bonav. loc. cit. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 105. art. 3. ad 1. Vasquez, Caspensis, Turtianus, Durandus, Richardus, Valentia, Suarez, Maldetus, Sylvius, quos adducit, et sequitur Amicus disp. 24. sect. 3. Idem sentiunt Lorca, Tannerus, Mastrius, alios allegans, et inter caeteros Scotum 3. dist. 18. quaest. unica*, et omnes Scotistas. Idem sentit D. Bonav.* dist. 27. art. 1. quaest. 2. et art. 2. quaest. 3. in corpore.

9 ¶ I SUPPOSE, which I distinguished in quaest. 17., with D. Bonaventure, from which question some could have deduced that there are two motives of the Charity of God and of neighbor; but there he wills that there are two loves by reason of the material objects on account of which two precepts also are given: yet he asserts one motive, and one act of charity, and one habit, although there be given another habit of virtue, by which we love the neighbor on account of his likeness to us in nature, and on account of his sanctity: and in this is the true difference between the first and second opinion; for the first admits one motive of charity; nevertheless it posits another habit, by which the neighbor is loved by ordination to his perfections, as I said; which habit they do not call charity; but the Authors of the second opinion deny it altogether.

10 ¶ I ASSERT first, that there is one habit of Charity, and one formal act of it toward God and neighbor.

11 It is proved by D. Bonaventure first, dist. 27. quaest. 2., by the arguments related in quaest. 6: where I showed this ex professo.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo dist. 27. quaest. 2. argumentis, relatis quaest. 6: ubi id ex professo ostendi.

12 It is proved second from the Fathers, who define the same charity to be of God and of neighbor. So D. August. 8. de Trinit. cap. 8. and serm. de Dominica post Ascensionem. Bernardus serm. de coena Domini, Beda in 5. ad Romanos, cited by Mastrius num. 565.

> PROBATUR secundo ex PP. qui eandem charitatem esse definiunt Dei, et proximi. Ita D. August. 8. de Trinit. cap. 8. et serm. de Dominica post Ascensionem. Bernardus serm. de coena Domini, Beda in 5. ad Romanos, apud Mastrium num. 565.

13 I ADD D. Gregory homil. 38., cited by D. Bonaventure lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 25: If anyone loves anyone, but does not love him for God's sake, he has not Charity; but he simulates that he has it, or thinks so: But Charity is true, when the friend is loved both in God, and the enemy is loved for God. In these words he seems not only to assert one habit of Charity, but even to exclude every other habit of virtue by which we might love the neighbor on account of supernatural things.

> ADDO D. Gregorium homil. 38. apud D. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 25: Si quis quemlibet amat, sed propter Deum non amat, Charitatem non habet; sed habere se simulat, sive putat: Charitas autem vera est, cum et in Deo diligitur amicus, et propter Deum diligitur inimicus. His verbis non solum unum habitum Charitatis asserere videtur, sed etiam excludere omnem alium virtutis habitum, quo proximum ob supernaturalia diligamus.

14 For other Fathers see the same place. The authorities cited by Mastrius, however, seem to prove only the former point.

> Alios Patres vide ibidem. Authoritates vero apud Mastrium, illud primum tantum probare videntur.

15 It is proved third by the Holy Doctor, by the places alleged. Where there is the same formal object, there is one habit: but there is one formal object of charity: Therefore. The major is proved: for habits are specified by objects, certainly formal ones, as Aristotle teaches, alleged in quaestione 6. The minor is proved; for where there is the same motive, there is the same formal object; but in the Charity of God and of neighbor there is the same motive: Therefore. The minor is proved by D. Bonaventure, because in the neighbor nothing is loved but God, as D. Augustine says, adduced by the second argument, dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 2.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. allegatis locis. Ubi est idem obiectum formale, ibi unus habitus: sed unum est obiectum formale charitatis: Ergo. Maior probatur: nam habitus ab obiectis specificantur, sane formalibus, ut docet Aristoteles, allegatus quaestione 6. Minor probatur; nam ubi est idem motivum, ibi idem obiectum formale; sed in Charitate Dei, et proximi est idem motivum: Ergo. Minor probatur a D. Bonav. quia in proximo non diligitur, nisi Deus, ut ait D. August. adductus argumento secundo, dist. 26. art. 2. quaest. 2.

16 THEN the Minor is proved by D. Bonaventure. When one thing is on account of another, there is one motive, and therefore one movement: But charity loves the neighbor on account of God: Therefore. The minor is proved third. When one thing is loved principally, then there is one love; but in the love of the neighbor God is principally loved: Therefore. This is the argument of D. Bonaventure dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4. ad 3. and dist. 27. art. 1. quaest. 2. in corpore, which Mastrius attributes to Scotus num. 568. The assumption is proved; because what is principally intended principally moves.

> DEINDE probatur Minor a D. Bonaven. Quando unum est propter aliud, ibi unum motivum, atque unus ideo motus: Sed charitas diligit proximum propter Deum: Ergo. Probatur tertio minor. Quando unum est principaliter dilectum, tunc una est dilectio; sed in dilectione proximi principaliter dilectus est Deus: Ergo. Hoc est argumentum D. Bonav. dist. 9. art. 2. quaest. 4. ad 3. et dist. 27. art. 1. quaest. 2. in corpore*, quod Scoto attribuit Mastrius* num. 568. Probatur assumptum; quia, quod principaliter intenditur, principaliter movet.

17 From these I see that the Seraphic Doctor admits indeed several material objects of charity, namely the divine goodness and created sanctity; but nevertheless the completed act, when created perfection is reduced to its end, without which direction the act of love of neighbor, by which his perfection, even supernatural, is loved, is not an act of a perfect virtue. And therefore with D. Gregory, alleged above, he denies that without this direction it is an act of virtue. I think this is what the Apostle willed, when he says: He who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law, Rom. 13.; and John used to say: Little children, love one another, and preached nothing else. But when asked why he commended only this, he replied: Because, if this be done, it suffices. But certainly if a perfect love terminating in the perfections of man were granted, it certainly would not suffice for the observance of the Divine law, because God, who is principally commanded to be loved, would not be loved by it.

> Ex his video, Seraphicum admittere quidem plura obiecta materialia charitatis, nempe divinam bonitatem, et creatam sanctitatem; sed tamen completi actum, dum creata perfectio reducitur in suum finem, sine qua directione non est virtutis perfectae actus ille dilectionis proximi, qua diligitur eius perfectio, etiam supernaturalis. Et propterea a D. Gregorio, supra allatus, sine hac directione negat, esse actum virtutis. Id arbitror voluisse Apostolum, cum ait: Qui diligit proximum, legem implevit, Rom. 13. et Ioannes dicere solebat: Filioli diligite alterutrum*, et nihil aliud praedicabat. Interrogatus vero: Cur id solum commendaret, Respondit:* Quia, si hoc fiat, sufficit. At sane si daretur dilectio perfecta terminans in hominis perfectiones, ea certe non sufficeret ad legis Divinae observantiam, quia non diligeretur per eam Deus, qui principaliter diligendus praecipitur.

18 St. Bonaventure observes this acutely, 3. dist. 37. dub. 2. litt., and with him Mastrius num. 569. The Holy Doctor also indicates the same, dist. 23. quaest. 1. ad 1. Hence he argues from the foundation of 1. quaest., to be cited shortly: When one thing is on account of another, then there is one only; but the love of neighbor, in order to be perfect, is on account of God: Therefore it is one with the love of God. Mastrius ascribes this argument to Scotus num. 570.

> ID acute observat S. Bonav. 3. dist. 37. dub. 2. litt. et cum eo Mastrius num. 569. Idipsum etiam indicat S. Doct. dist. 23. quaest. 1. ad 1. Hinc arguit fundamento 1. quaest. mox citandae: Quando unum est propter aliud, tunc unum tantum; sed amor proximi, ut sit perfectus, est propter Deum: Ergo unus cum Dei amore. Hoc argumentum Scoto adscribit Mastrius num. 570.

19 It is proved fourth by D. Bonavent. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 3. in corpore. The same object specifies the direct and the collative, or reflex act, even if it concur to the direct act immediately and directly; but to the reflex act only mediately and indirectly; the Reason is, because the principal specificative is always that which is principally intended, whether it concur directly and immediately to the act, or indirectly and mediately: But that which is principally intended in the act of Charity is the goodness of God, in whatever way He is loved, whether directly or reflexly: Therefore the ultimate specification is always taken from it; for the principal act is specified by that on account of which it principally is, and is principally intended. The major is evident, because what is principally intended principally moves, and inflows into the very species of the act. The minor, in the act of love of the first mode, is clear enough; because what moves uniquely is the uncreated goodness: But of the act of love of the second mode it is proved, because then, although charity directly and immediately moves to loving the neighbor on account of his intrinsic goodness; yet it does not move on account of that absolutely, but respectively, inasmuch as it is a singular participation of the uncreated goodness: Therefore also in that second mode, although the uncreated goodness of God itself moves to that act mediately, and indirectly, or terminatively, and in an oblique manner, nevertheless it principally moves. Mastrius ascribes this argument of D. Bonaventure to Scotus num. 568., although in the following number he reports D. Bonaventure teaching the same in 3. dist. 9. quaest. ultima: But this argument in D. Bonav. is dist. 27. loc. cit., which Amicus also uses.

> PROBATUR quarto a D. Bonavent. dist. 27. art. 2. quaest. 3. in corpore. Idem obiectum specificat actum directum, et collativum, seu reflexum, etiamsi ad directum immediate, et directe concurrat; ad reflexum vero mediate solum, et indirecte; Ratio est, quia semper principale specificativum est id, quod principaliter intenditur, sive directe, et immediate; sive indirecte, et mediate ad actum concurrat: Sed quod actu Charitatis principaliter intenditur, est bonitas Dei, quocumque modo diligatur, sive directe, sive reflexe: Ergo semper ab illa sumitur ultima specificatio; ab illo enim actus principalis specificatur, propter quod principaliter est, et principaliter intenditur. Maior patet, quia, quod principaliter intenditur, principaliter movet, et influit in ipsam speciem actus. Minor in actu dilectionis proximi satis liquet primo modo; quia, quod unice movet, est bonitas increata: De actu vero dilectionis secundo modo probatur, quia tunc, licet charitas directe et immediate moveat ad diligendum proximum propter intrinsecam ipsius bonitatem; non tamen movet propter illam absolute, sed respective, ut nimirum singularis est participatio bonitatis increatae: Ergo etiam illo secundo modo, licet mediate, et indirecte, sive terminative, et in obliquo moveat ad illum actum bonitas ipsa increata Dei, adhuc tamen principaliter movet. Hoc argumentum D. Bonaventurae, Scoto adscribit Mastrius num. 568. licet numero sequenti referat D. Bonaventuram idem docentem in 3. dist. 9. quaest. ultima: Sed argumentum hoc in D. Bonav. est dist. 27. loc. cit. quo utitur etiam Amicus.

20 Amicus and Mastrius, however, ADMIT that the charity of neighbor is terminated in God de facto; yet God could have instituted another habit of charity, by which we would love the neighbor in himself, independently of God, just as the saints are venerated with Dulia on account of their perfections.

> ADVERTUNT autem Amicus, et Mastrius, charitatem proximi terminari ad Deum de facto; potuisse tamen Deum alium habitum charitatis condere, quo diligeremus proximum in se, independenter a Deo, quemadmodum, et sancti Dulia coluntur ob suas perfectiones.

21 Arriaga REPLIES that Scripture and the Fathers only will that the habit of the love of God be connected with the habit by which the neighbor is loved; whether the neighbor be a material or a formal object.

> RESPONDET Arriaga, Scripturam, et Patres solum velle, habitum dilectionis Dei esse connexum cum habitu, quo diligitur proximus; sive proximus sit obiectum materiale, sive formale.

22 ¶ AGAINST: for the holy Fathers exclude other loves, as is clear from D. Gregory; and the love of neighbor is called the complement of the law, which would not be true, if the love of neighbor were not one with the love of God.

> ¶ CONTRA: nam Sancti Patres excludunt alios amores, ut patet ex D. Gregorio; et amor proximi dicitur complementum legis, quod non esset verum, si amor proximi non esset unus cum Dei amore.

23 He REPLIES second that, even if Scripture says: He who loves his neighbor has fulfilled the law; yet it does not follow that even the love of God proceeds from one habit; otherwise it would have to be inferred that no other supernatural habit distinct from charity exists; for he who loves God is chaste, is just, is patient, as is said first Corinth. 13. This argument is taken from D. Bonav. 3. dist. 33. quaest. 1. and dist. 37., the first argument to the contrary.

> RESPONDET secundo, etiamsi dicat Scriptura: Qui diligit proximum, legem implevit; tamen non sequi, ab uno habitu procedere etiam amorem Dei; alioqui deberet inferri, nullum alium habitum supernaturalem esse a charitate distinctum; nam qui diligit Deum, castus est, iustus est, patiens est, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 13. Hoc argumentum sumptum est e D Bonav. 3. dist. 33. quaest. 1. et dist. 37. argumento primo ad oppositum.

24 But this evasion is precluded, as Mastrius saw num. 573. For first we do not deduce the unity of the habit of Charity from this text alone Rom. 13., but from first Corinth. 13., where Paul posits one charity, just as one faith, and hope; but these are each of one species: Therefore. An argument I used in quaest. 6. with D. Bonaventure dist. 27. quaest. 2., taken from the unity of the object; because just as there is one first truth by which faith is unified, so there is one first and ultimate goodness, which is the object of charity. That other habits besides charity are necessary, is so; because charity exacts other acts only which are not acts of Charity, as the Holy Doctor notes dist. 33. loc. cit. ad 1.; but the charity of God and of neighbor elicits both acts as its own.

> Sed haec evasio praecluditur, ut vidit Mastrius num. 573. Primo enim non educimus unitatem habitus Charitatis ex hoc solo Rom. 13. sed ex prima Corinth. 13. ubi Paulus unam charitatem ponit, sicuti unam fidem, et spem; sed hae sunt singulae speciei: Ergo. Quo argumento usus sum quaest. 6. cum D. Bonav. dist. 27. quaest. 2. sumpto ex unitate obiecti; quia sicut una est prima veritas, qua unificatur fides; ita una est bonitas prima, atque ultima, quae est obiectum charitatis. Quod vero necessarii sint alii habitus praeter charitatem, est; quia charitas alios actus solum impetat, qui non sunt actus Charitatis, ut notat S. Doct. dist. 33. loc. cit. ad 1. sed charitas Dei, et proximi elicit, tanquam proprios, utriusque actus.

25 You will OBJECT first. Either the created goodness of the neighbor is the formal object of charity, or only the material object. If the first, I have my intent; if the second: Therefore supernatural goodness is not an honest good, because it cannot terminate the appetite, but is only a useful goodness, which is loved on account of others.

> Obiicies primo. Vel bonitas creata proximi est obiectum formale charitatis, vel solum materiale. Si primum, habeo intentum; si secundum: Ergo bonitas supernaturalis non est bonum honestum, quia non potest terminare appetitum, sed est bonitas tantum utilis, quae amatur propter alios.

26 D. Bonaventure through the whole of the third question, art. 2. dist. 27. REPLIES that the goodness of the neighbor is an honest and terminative object of the act of Charity; yet it does not terminate the act ultimately, which, since it has for its principal object the Divine goodness, as its ultimate formal object, continues and advances toward it, even if created goodness be terminative of the act and affection of charity subordinately; but the specificative reason is taken from the ultimate to which the act tends and is terminated, and to which the object of created goodness is subordinated: From which it is clear that two virtues of charity are not necessary: one Theological; the other moral, because those two goodnesses are so related that one is ordered to the other; and where there is one on account of another, there is one only; even if that which is ordered to the other be terminative, it terminates less principally. With this doctrine they answer the argument of Amicus loc. cit. and Mastrius num. 576., who attribute it to Scotus 3. dist. 31. quaest. un. §. Sed adhuc, who drew it from D. Bonaventure loc. cit. I add, however, that Scotus in dist. 28. quaest. un. ad argumenta asserts that the goodness of the neighbor moves no more than a straw, which Arias benignly explains dist. 28. art. 1. as meaning: not to move as principal cause.

> Respondet D. Bonav. tota quaestione tertia, art. 2. dist. 27. bonitatem proximi esse obiectum honestum, et terminativum actus Charitatis; non tamen ultimo terminare actum, qui cum habeat pro obiecto principali Divinam bonitatem, tanquam obiectum formale ultimum, pergit, ac progreditur ad illam, etiamsi bonitas creata subalterne sit terminativa actus, et affectus charitatis; ratio autem specificativa sumitur ab ultimo, ad quod tendit, et terminatur actus, et ad quod obiectum bonitatis creatae subordinatur: Ex quo patet, non esse necessarias duas virtutes charitatis: alteram Theologicam; alteram moralem, quia duae illae bonitates ita se habent, ut una ad alteram ordinetur; et ubi est unum propter alterum, ibi unum tantum; etsi illud, quod ad alterum ordinatur, sit terminativum, minus tamen principaliter terminat. Hac doctrina respondent argumento Amicus loc. cit. et Mastrius num. 576. qui eam attribuunt Scoto 3. dist. 31. quaest. un. §. Sed adhuc*, qui eam hausit e D. Bonav.* loc. cit. Addo tamen, Scotum dist. 28. quaest. un. ad argumenta*, asserere, bonitatem proximi nihilo plus movere, quam festucam, quod benigne explicat Arriinus* dist. 28. art. 1. intelligi, non movere, ut causam principalem.

27 You will say. When I give alms, the act is terminated ultimately in that object out of piety toward the neighbor, and does not ascend to God, and in this way it is an act of virtue: Therefore there is a distinct habit: Therefore, etc.

> Dices. Quando do eleemosynam, actus ultimo terminatur ad obiectum illud ex pietate in proximum, et non ascendit in Deum, et tali pacto est actus virtutis: Idco est habitus distinctus: Ergo, etc.

28 It is ANSWERED, by denying the parity; for the habit of charity, being Theological, tends ultimately to God, nor is any other habit of charity known in Scripture and the Fathers.

> Respondetur*, negando paritatem; nam habitus charitatis, utpote Theologicus, tendit ultimo in Deum, nec est alius cognitus habitus charitatis apud Scripturam, et Patres.*

29 You will OBJECT second. If the motivating reason of the charity of the neighbor is the goodness of God, it follows that Charity is not a friendship properly so called of ours toward the neighbor: for according to Aristotle 8. Eth. friendship is for the sake of the friend; for he loves the friend out of complacency in the friend himself.

> Obiicies secundo. Si ratio motiva charitatis proximi est bonitas Dei, sequitur, Charitatem non esse amicitiam proprie dictam nostram ad proximum: nam secundum Aristotelem 8. Eth. amicitia est gratia amici; diligit enim amicum ex complacentia ipsius amici.

30 It is ANSWERED from D. Bonaventure that the argument alleged would hold, if I granted that created goodness does not terminate the affection; but we say it does terminate it; yet so that it be ordered to the ultimate end, which is not against the reason of friendship: nor does Aristotle exclude that friendship be ordered to the ultimate end.

Respondetur ex D. Bonav. quaest. cit. argumentum valiturum, si concederem, bonitatem creatam non terminare affectum; at dicimus, terminare; ita tamen, ut ad ultimum finem ordinetur, quod non est contra rationem amicitiae: neque Aristoteles excludit, amicitiam ordinari ad finem ultimum.

31 You will OBJECT third. Two created honesties and goodnesses differ less than created goodness and uncreated goodness: but created goodness is twofold, the object of diverse virtues: Therefore. The major is evident, because created things are all finite; but created differs from uncreated as finite from infinite. It is taken from D. Bonaventure fund. 4.

Obiicies tertio. Minus distant duae honestates, et bonitates creatae, quam bonitas creata, et increata: at bonitas creata duplex, est obiectum diversarum virtutum: Ergo. Maior patet, quia creatae sunt finitae omnes; at creata ab increata differt, ut finitum ab infinito. Sumitur ex D. Bonav. fund. 4.

32 It is ANSWERED from D. Bonaventure in corpore, by denying the consequence; because although in the account of material object they differ more; yet in the account of formal object they do not differ more; because one moves by reason of the other, which is principal and ultimate, namely the goodness of God. Hence also various habits of created goodnesses are given, because the other, for instance of justice, is not ordered to the goodness of temperance; but the created goodness of the neighbor is loved in order to God, who alone is ultimately intended, as the Good in the Theological virtue. Mastrius subscribes, num. 580.

Respondetur ex D. Bonav. in corpore*, negando consequentiam, quia licet in ratione materiali obiecti magis differant; tamen in ratione obiecti formalis non differunt magis; quia unum movet ratione alterius principalis ultimi, quod est bonitas Dei. Unde etiam dantur varii habitus bonitatum creatarum, quia altera, puta iustitiae, non ordinatur ad bonitatem temperantiae; at bonitas creata proximi amatur in ordine ad Deum, qui solus ultimo intenditur, ut Bonum in virtute Theologica. Subscribit Mastrius,* num. 580.

33 You will OBJECT fourth. Human friendship tends ultimately to the good of the friend: Therefore also supernatural friendship.

Obiicies quarto. Amicitia humana tendit ultimo ad bonum amici: Ergo et supernaturalis.

34 The Holy Doctor REPLIES, dist. 28. passim, by denying the consequence; because the charity which is now given is a participation of that Charity by which God loves us on account of Himself, and is ordered to beatitude, and to supernatural life in God.

Respondet S. Doct. dist. 28. passim*, negando consequentiam; quia charitas, quae nunc datur, est participatio illius Charitatis, qua Deus nos diligit propter se, et ordinatur ad beatitudinem, et vitam supernaturalem in Deo.*

35 You will OBJECT fifth. Divine excellence differs less from created excellence than Divine goodness from created goodness; but for venerating the divine excellence Latria is given, which is a cult distinct from Dulia, by which created excellence is venerated: Therefore. Arriaga extracted this argument from D. Bonaventure ad 3., where, denying the parity in the cult of images, he concedes (as it seems) that the parity holds in the cult of the Saints and of God, namely that as they terminate different cults, so also God and the neighbor terminate different loves, and that most of all because charity immediately regards the goodnesses, created and uncreated; but Religion immediately regards not the excellences but their cult, whence the minor seems the reason of distinguishing.

Obiicies quinto. Minus differt excellentia Divina ab excellentia creata, quam bonitas Divina a bonitate creata; sed ad colendam excellentiam divinam datur Latria, quae est cultus diversus a Dulia, quo colitur excellentia creata: Ergo. Hoc argumentum exiraxit Arriaga e D. Bonav. ad 3. ubi de cultu imaginum negans paritatem, concedit (ut videtur) de cultu Sanctorum, et Dei valere paritatem, quod sicuti terminant diversos cultus, ita et Deus, et proximus diversos amores, eo vel maxime, quod charitas immediate respicit bonitates, creatam, et increatam; Religio vero respicit immediate, non excellentias, sed earum cultum, unde minor videtur ratio distinguendi.

36 It is ANSWERED with Amicus and Mastrius, from the argument of D. Bonaventure, that it can be inferred that it is not repugnant for such a diverse habit to be given; nevertheless that the one which now exists is terminative indeed toward two goodnesses, yet so that the created be ordered to the uncreated. I add from D. Bonaventure, better: that charity indeed is terminated in two distinct objects, God and the neighbor; Yet, because charity has for its object the good, which is the end; therefore in charity this must be received, and so Charity does not rest in created goodness, which is not the ultimate end, but orders it to the ultimate Uncreated; but religion does not regard God and the Saints under the account of good, but according to the excellences, of which one is not subordinated in the account of object, but only in the account of good; and this is the solution of D. Bonaventure in corpore, where he embraces all the arguments.

Respondetur cum Amico, et Mastrio ex argumento D. Bonav. posse inferri, non repugnare dari talem habitum diversum; attamen illum, qui nunc est, esse terminativum sane ad duas bonitates, ita tamen, ut creata ad increatam ordinetur. Addo ego ex D. Bonav. melius, terminari sane charitatem ad duo obiecta distincta, Deum, et proximum; Attamen, quia charitas habet pro obiecto bonum, quod est finis; ideo hunc in charitate recipiendum, atque adeo Charitatem non sistere in bonitate creata, quae non est ultimus finis, sed eam ordinare ad ultimam Increatam; at religionem non respicere Deum, et Sanctos sub ratione boni, sed secundum excellentias, quarum altera in ratione obiecti non subordinatur, sed solum in ratione boni; et haec est solutio D. Bonav. in corpore, ubi omnia complectitur argumenta.

37 You will OBJECT sixth. Acts specifically diverse require diverse habits; but the acts of charity toward God and toward neighbor are diverse: Therefore. The minor is proved in the foundations of D. Bonaventure: because the acts of love toward God are on account of themselves; but those of love of the neighbor, on account of God. Similarly the acts of love toward God are of a diverse species in appetition.

Obiicies sexto. Actus specie diversi, diversos requirunt habitus; sed actus charitatis in Deum, et proximum, sunt diversi: Ergo. Minor probatur in fundamentis D. Bonav. quia actus amoris in Deum sunt propter se; at amoris proximi, propter Deum. Similiter actus amoris in Deum sunt speciei diversae in appetatione.

38 Mastrius REPLIES that the major is true in acquired habits, because they are generated from acts of the same account, but not of infused ones.

Respondet Mastrius, Maiorem in habitibus acquisitis esse veram, quia ex actibus eiusdem rationis gignuntur, non de infusis.

39 It is ANSWERED second from D. Bonaventure in corpore, that this is true of acts terminatively ending in diverse objects; but the act of the charity of God and of neighbor tends toward the one goodness of God.

Respondetur secundo ex D. Bonav. in corpore*, verum de actibus ultimo terminantibus ad diversa obiecta; actus vero charitatis Dei, et proximi ad unam Dei bonitatem tendit.*

Question XXX: Whether there is order in charity

1 I ASSERT that the objects to be loved are in a certain order from the will.

> Utrum in CHARITATE sit ordo.
> ASSERO, obiecta diligenda esse ordine quodam a voluntate.

2 IT IS PROVED first by the Holy Doctors from 2 Kings, Ordinavit in me charitatem [He ordered charity in me].

> PROBATUR a SS. Doctoribus primo ex 2. Cantic. Ordinavit in me charitatem.

3 Next it is proved by St. Bonaventure from St. Augustine, book I of de doctrina Christiana, cap. 23, where he says: God, who is above us, is to be loved first; yet he did not say this, speaking of being loved first in time; but in the order of excellence and estimation.

> Deinde probatur a S. Bonav. ex D. August. lib. I. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 23. ubi ait: Primo diligendus est Deus, qui est supra nos; non dixit autem hoc, loquens, prius tempore diligendum; sed ordine excellentiae, et aestimationis.

4 THIRDLY from St. Ambrose in the Gloss brought forward on the words of the Canticles: First God is to be loved, second we ourselves, third parents, then children, after them the household, who, if they are good, are to be preferred to wicked children.

> TERTIO ex D. Ambrosio in Glossa ad verba Canticorum adducta: Primo Deus diligendus est, secundo nos ipsi, tertio parentes, inde filii, post domestici, qui si boni sunt, malis filiis praeponendi sunt.

5 IT IS PROVED fourthly by the Holy Doctor. Prior and posterior is according to relation to some principle, from Aristotle 5 Metaph. t. 16. and to an end. Now order includes in itself some mode of prior and posterior; whence it is necessary that, where there is some principle and some end, there also be some order: but Charity tends to rectify the will toward God as toward a principle and supreme end, in the communication of which the friendship of Charity is founded; and therefore it is necessary that in those things which are loved by charity some order be attended to according to relation to the principle, which is God, who is also the supreme good, which is beatitude. St. Thomas also uses this argument. It is proved more fully by St. Bonaventure in 2 dist. 35 art. 2 quest. 1. On this the others rely, with Tanner disput. 2 quest. 3 dub. 2.

> PROBATUR quarto a S. Doct. Prius, et posterius est secundum relationem ad aliquid principium, ex Aristotele 5. Metaph. t. 16. et ad finem. Ordo autem includit in se aliquem modum prioris, et posterioris; unde oportet, ut, ubi est aliquod principium, et aliquis finis, sit etiam aliquis ordo: Charitas autem tendit ad rectificandam voluntatem in Deum, ut in principium, finemque supremum, in cuius communicatione amicitia Charitatis fundatur, et ideo oportet, in his, quae charitate diliguntur, attendi aliquem ordinem secundum relationem ad principium, quod est Deus, qui est etiam summum bonum, quod est beatitudo. Hoc argumento utitur etiam D. Thom. Maior probatur a D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 35. art. 2. quaest. 1. His nituntur alii, cum Tannero disput. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 2.

6 IT IS PROVED fifthly by the Holy Doctor. One habit tends to one principal object, and to other things by order toward it: but Charity is one habit, having for its principal object the divine goodness, from what was said in q. 19. Therefore the other things loved are regarded as ordered toward it; and thus the principal object is God, to be loved first; then the rest. He repeats the same in the body, and ad 2.

PROBATUR quinto a S. Doct. unus habitus tendit in unum obiectum principale, et in alia per ordinem ad illud: Sed Charitas est unus habitus, habens pro obiecto principali divinam bonitatem, ex dictis q. 19. Ergo caetera amata respiciunt, ut ordinata ad illud; atque adeo principalius obiectum est Deus, primo amandus; deinde caetera. Idem repetit in corpore, et ad 2.

7 IT IS PROVED sixthly by the Holy Doctor. Order is owed more to deliberative love than to natural love; but natural love is ordered with respect to the things lovable: Therefore.

PROBATUR sexto a S. Doctore magis debetur ordo amori deliberativo, quam naturali; sed naturalis est ordinatus respectu diligibilium: Ergo.

8 IT IS PROVED seventhly. A bond rightly connecting many things to an end ought to bind them in order to the same end: but Charity is the bond of perfection, from 3 ad Colossenses and from St. Dionysius cap. 4 of de Divinis nominibus, and it binds many things together, being a most liberal love, embracing many diverse things to be gathered in the end: Therefore it unites them in order.

PROBATUR septimo. Vinculum, multa recte connectens ad finem, debet ea ordinate colligare ad eundem finem: Sed Charitas est vinculum perfectionis ex 3. ad Coloss. et ex D. Dion. cap. 4. de Divin. nominibus, eaque multa colligans, cum sit amor maxime liberalis, complectens multa diversa in fine colliganda: Ergo ea unit ordinate.

9 IT IS PROVED eighthly by the Holy Doctor. What weight is in bodies, love is in spirits, from St. Augustine book 13 of Confessions cap. 9, and book 21 of de civitate Dei cap. 28, and 6 of de Trinitate cap. 10. But weight ought to be well balanced: Therefore also love.

PROBATUR octavo a S. Doct. Quod est pondus in corporibus, est amor in spiritibus, ex D. August. lib. 13. confess. cap. 9. et lib. 21. de civit. cap. 28. et 6. de Trinitate, cap. 10. Sed pondus debet esse bene libratum: Ergo et amor.

10 You will OBJECT first. Where there is order, there is distinction; but charity with respect to diverse things is one: Therefore it is not ordered.

OBIICIES primo. Ubi ordo, ibi distinctio; sed charitas respectu diversorum est una: Ergo non ordinata.

11 St. Doctor RESPONDS that order in a habit is attended to in relation to the object; and although charity is not multiple in itself, it nevertheless has many material objects and many acts, by reason of which there are many precepts.

RESPONDEt S. Doct. ordinem in habitu attendi in ordine ad obiectum; quamvis autem charitas non sit multiplex in se, habet tamen multa obiecta materialia, et multos actus, ratione quorum sunt multa praecepta.

12 You will OBJECT secondly. Where there is order, there is proportion; but among things lovable there is no proportion; for between the created and the uncreated there is none: Therefore.

OBIICIES secundo. Ubi est ordo, ibi proportio; sed inter diligibilia non est proportio; creati enim ad increatum nulla est proportio: Ergo.

13 St. Doctor RESPONDS that proportion is twofold. One is proportion properly so called, which is the commensuration of things of the same genus, and in this sense the major is false. Secondly, proportion is said broadly, and is any relation which is attended to according to the convenience of analogy; and in this way there is a proportion of created good to the uncreated, and also an order according to the ratio of primitiveness and causality; for the end is more worthy than those things which are toward the end, and in this respect order is attended to in Charity.

RESPONDEt S. Doctor, quod proportio est duplex. Alia proprie dicta, quae est commensuratio rerum eiusdem generis, et hoc sensu falsa est maior. Secundo, proportio dicitur large, et est quaecumque habitudo, quae attenditur secundum convenientiam analogiae; et hoc modo datur proportio boni creati ad increatum, et etiam ordo secundum rationem primitatis, et causalitatis; finis enim dignior est his, quae ad finem, et quantum ad hoc, attenditur ordo in Charitate.

14 You will OBJECT thirdly. Order pertains to cognition, because it belongs to the wise to order: Therefore if order is not placed in cognition with respect to things to be known, much less ought it to be placed in Charity with respect to things to be loved. If you say that order is in the sciences. Against this: for charity follows the cognition of faith; but in its objects there is no order: Therefore.

OBIICIES tertio. Ordo spectat ad cognitionem, quia sapientis est ordinare: Ergo si non ponitur ordo in cognitione respectu cognoscendorum, multo minus debet poni in Charitate respectu diligendorum. Si dicas, quod ordo est in scientiis. Contra: nam charitas sequitur cognitionem fidei; sed in huius obiectis non est ordo: Ergo.

15 St. Doctor RESPONDS that there are two kinds of order. The first is of parts in a whole, and of things in the universe: and indeed to order belongs to the intellect. The other is the order of things toward an end, and this is from the will, which tends toward the good, and thus toward the end; and such is the order of Charity.

RESPONDEt S. Doct. duplicem esse ordinem: Primus est partium in toto, et rerum in universo: Et quidem ordinare est intellectus. Alter est ordo rerum in finem, et hic est a voluntate, quae tendit in bonum, atque adeo in finem, et talis est ordo Charitatis.

16 He RESPONDS secondly that order in habits is attended to in relation to the objects; and because the Supreme Goodness by essence, with respect to the other things lovable, which are participative, is deservedly to be esteemed of more worth; and among those things lovable some participate more or less of goodness, as body less than spirit: hence it is that the love of charity ought to be ordered according to these. For thus also among things knowable there is order: first are the first principles, in which there is the greater evidence of truth; then the knowledge of conclusions follows; and so the assumption can be denied. Nor is it the same with faith; for all the articles are compared equally to the First Truth, from whose revelation all are believed uniformly.

RESPONDEt secundo, ordinem in habitibus attendi per ordinem ad obiecta, quia vero Summa Bonitas per essentiam respectu aliorum diligibilium, quae sunt participantia, pluris merito aestimanda est, et ex eis diligibilibus aliqua plus, vel minus participat de bonitate, ut corpus minus, quam spiritus: hinc est, ut charitatis amor secundum haec sit ordinandus. Sic enim etiam in cognoscibilibus est ordo, ut prius sint prima principia, in quibus est maior veritatis evidentia; deinde scientia conclusionum subsequatur; et ita potest negari assumptum. Nec est simile de fide; omnes enim articuli ad primam veritatem aeque comparantur, ex cuius revelatione omnes uniformiter creduntur.

17 You will OBJECT fourthly. Just as in faith there is one ratio of believing, namely the supreme truth; so in Charity there is one ratio of loving, which is the supreme goodness: but from the fact that the Truth, which is the ratio of believing, is one, Faith is one, assenting equally to all the articles: therefore from the fact that there is one ratio of loving, charity is one, having itself in the same way toward all things lovable.

OBIICIES quarto. Sicuti in fide est una ratio credendi, scilicet summa veritas; ita in Charitate una ratio diligendi, quae est summa bonitas: Sed ex eo, quod una est Veritas, quae est ratio credendi, una est Fides omnibus articulis aequaliter affentiens: ergo ex eo, quod est una ratio diligendi, una est charitas, eodem modo se habens ad omnia diligibilia.

18 St. Doctor RESPONDS that the ratio is dissimilar, for in Charity the objects terminating the affection are unequal, even if all are reduced to one.

> RESPONDEt S. Doct. disparem esse rationem, nam in Charitate inaequalia sunt obiecta terminantia affectum, esto omnia ad unum reducantur.

19 You will OBJECT fifthly. Charity is one habit, naturally inclining to the good: therefore equally; for the same thing, always remaining the same, does the same.

> OBIICIES quinto. Charitas est habitus unus, naturaliter inclinans ad bonum: ergo aequaliter; nam idem, semper manens idem, facit idem.

20 St. Doctor RESPONDS that one thing always does the same given an equal disposition in natural objects; otherwise it acts diversely. Thus the sun illumines crystal more than stone; but the will is a potency acting by election, which is ruled by charity, and is itself also moved; it does not, however, remain always the same. Moreover it regards objects lovable in a diverse manner and degree.

> RESPONDEt S. Doct. unum semper facere idem, data pari dispositione in obiectis naturalibus; alioqui diverse operatur. Sic Sol magis illuminat chrystallum, quam lapidem; at voluntas est potentia operans ex electione, quae regitur a charitate, quaeque et ipsa movetur; non autem manet eadem semper. Praeterea respicit obiecta, diverso modo, et gradu amabilia.

21 You will OBJECT sixthly. If order is attended to in Charity, it is attended to either with respect to the habit or with respect to the act; not with respect to the habit, which is altogether one: if with respect to the act: then it is not ordered in a baptized infant, or in one sleeping, who have no act. Therefore I ask, what is attended to in the order of charity? and why is order attended to in it more than in the other virtues, since every virtue is ordered love, as St. Augustine says in de moribus Ecclesiae? And again, since about every good there are mode, species, and order, why is charity rather said to be ordered than moderated?

> OBIICIES sexto. Si ordo attenditur in Charitate, aut attenditur penes habitum, aut penes actum; non quoad habitum, qui est omnino unus: Si quoad actum: Ergo non est ordinata in infante baptizato, vel in dormiente, qui non habent actum. Igitur quaero, quid attenditur in ordine charitatis? et cur attenditur magis in ipsa, quam in alia virtute ordo, cum omnis virtus sit amor ordinatus, ut ait D. August. de moribus Ecclesiae? Et rursus, cum circa omne bonum sit modus, species, et ordo, cur potius charitas dicitur ordinata, quam modificata?

22 St. Doctor RESPONDS that order is attended to in the habit, in relation to the objects. Charity is therefore chiefly said to be ordered, because it is the weight whose it is to balance, and the bond of perfection, whose it is to gather all things in order.

> Respondet S. Doct. attendi ordinem in habitu, in ordine ad obiecta. Praecipue igitur dicitur charitas ordinata, quia est pondus, cuius est librare; et vinculum perfectionis, cuius est omnia ordinate colligere.

Question XXXI: Whether God is to be loved more than the neighbor

1 I ASSERT first that the habit of Charity is borne principally and more toward God.

> Utrum DEUS sit magis diligendus, quam proximus.
> ASSERO primo, habitum Charitatis principalius, et magis ferri in Deum.

2 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure first, because thus God commands, Matth. 22. This is the first and greatest commandment. You have the same in Matth. 10. Lucae 14.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo, quia sic Deus praecipit, Matth. 22. Haec est primum, et maximum mandatum. Idem habes Matth. 10. Lucae 14.

3 SECONDLY. The cause is prior to its effect; but the love of God is the cause of the love of neighbor: for man loves his neighbor precisely because he loves God, whose image he is, and whom God commands to be loved.

> SECUNDO. Causa est prior suo effectu; sed dilectio Dei est causa dilectionis proximi: Ideo enim homo diligit proximum, quia diligit Deum, cuius est imago, et quem Deus iubet diligi.

4 THIRDLY, because friendship principally and first regards that which has the ratio of an end, in which is found that good upon whose communication it is founded, and which is the cause of that good: but God is such a good, toward which the neighbor also is ordered, and is that from which that communication is derived in the supernatural life of beatitude, in which the perfect friendship of charity consists: Therefore. St. Thomas uses the same reason, which St. Bonaventure rubs up again, more in the body. And Tannerus disp. 2 quest. 3 dub. 2 num. 21. and the rest.

> TERTIO, quia amicitia principalius, et prius respicit id, quod habet rationem finis, in quo invenitur illud bonum, super cuius communicatione fundatur, et est causa illius boni: Sed Deus est tale bonum, ad quod ordinatur et proximus, et est illud, a quo derivatur illa communicatio in vita supernaturali beatitudinis, in qua consistit amicitia charitatis perfecta: Ergo. Eadem ratione utitur etiam D. Thom. quam refricat S. Bonav. magis in corpore. Et Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 2. num. 21. et caeteri.

5 FINALLY: Love inclines first to that toward which it inclines more ardently, because the affection follows the greater inclination; but the love of Charity inclines more ardently to the loving of God than of one's neighbor: Therefore.

> TANDEM: Amor inclinat prius ad illud, ad quod inclinat ardentius, quia affectus sequitur maiorem inclinationem; sed Charitatis amor, ardentius inclinat ad amandum Deum, quam proximum: Ergo.

6 I ASSERT secondly. Charity as to exercise is first borne toward the neighbor, as the more imperfect act, so that through the active life it may rise to the perfect love of God, and to the contemplative; for he who wishes to be a perfect lover of God ought first to exercise himself in the love of neighbor; as he who wishes to be a good contemplative ought first to be a good active, as St. Gregory teaches. And in sign of this thing, the Holy Spirit was given twice. First on earth, Ioan. 20. Second from heaven, Act. 2. Because the love of charity must first be exercised in those things which we see, that we may be carried up through the love of visible things to the love of invisible ones; and according to this way proceed the reasons to be brought forward below: This is St. Bonaventure's.

> ASSERO secundo. Charitas quoad exercitium prius fertur in proximum, tanquam actus imperfectior, ut per activam exurgat ad perfectum Dei amorem, et in contemplativam; qui enim vult esse perfectus amator Dei, prius debet se exercere in amore proximi; sicut qui vult esse contemplativus bonus, prius debet esse bonus activus, ut docet D. Gregorius. Et in huius rei signum, bis datus est Spiritus Sanctus. Primo in terra, Ioan. 20. Secundo de caelo, Act. 2. Quia prius oportet amorem charitatis exerceri in his, quae videmus, ut per amorem visibilium in amorem invisibilium rapiamur, et secundum hanc viam procedunt rationes infra afferendae: Haec D. Bonaventura.

7 It is THEREFORE proved first. The destruction of one is destructive of the other, and its position is the position of the other: but the destruction of charity for one's neighbor is destructive of the charity of God, as Ioan. argues, prima, cap. 4. He who does not love his brother, whom he sees; how can he love God, whom he does not see? But that thing to which the position or destruction of the other consequently follows must be prior to it; and this is according to disposition, as St. Thomas also says ad primum.

> PROBATUR ergo primo. Destructio unius, est destructiva alterius, et positio eius, est positio alterius: Sed destructio Charitatis proximi, est destructiva charitatis Dei, ut arguit Ioan. prima, cap. 4. Qui non diligit fratrem suum, quem videt; Deum, quem non videt, quomodo potest diligere? Id autem, ad quod sequitur consequenter positio, vel destructio alterius, debet esse illo prius; hoc autem est secundum dispositionem, ut ait etiam D. Thom. ad primum.

8 SECONDLY. First that which is animal, then that which is spiritual follows, prima ad Corinthios 15. but the love of neighbor is more sensible: Therefore it precedes.

> SECUNDO. Prius, quod animale est, deinde quod spirituale sequitur, prima Cor. 15. sed dilectio proximi est sensibilior: Ergo praecedit.

9 THIRDLY. The process is from the imperfect to the perfect, from the way to the terminus; but the love of God is more perfect, and the terminus toward which the love of neighbor tends: therefore.

> TERTIO. Processus est ab imperfecto ad perfectum, a via ad terminum; sed dilectio Dei est perfectior, et terminus, ad quem dilectio proximi tendit: ergo.

10 FOURTHLY. Action is prior to contemplation; but the love of neighbor is occupied with the active life; the love of God with the contemplative: Therefore.

> QUARTO. Prior est actio contemplatione; sed dilectio proximi occupatur citea activam; Dilectio Dei circa contemplativam: Ergo.

Question XXXII: Whether a man ought out of charity to love God more than himself

1 I ASSERT that he is so to be loved.

> Utrum homo debeat ex CHARITATE plus Deum diligere, quam se ipsum.
> ASSERO, ita diligendum.

2 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure first from Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole mind. This is the greatest and first commandment. But the whole affection is commanded to be bestowed on no other: Therefore. The Holy Doctor proves the same on 14 Lucae, in these words: If anyone comes to me, and does not hate father and mother, etc. and moreover his own soul also, he cannot be my disciple.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonav. primo ex Deuter. 6. Matth. 22. Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, et in tota anima tua, et in tota mente tua. Haec est maximum, et primum mandatum. Nulli autem alii impendendus praecipitur totus affectus: Ergo. Idem probat S. Doct. ad 14. Lucae, illis verbis: Si quis venit ad me, et non odit patrem, et matrem, etc. adhuc autem et animam suam, non potest meus esse discipulus.

3 NEXT it is proved from Sts. Augustine and Ambrose, who admonish that God is to be loved before all things, as I said in question 28.

> DEINDE probatur ex SS. August. et Ambrosio, qui Deum prae omnibus diligendum monent, ut dixi quaestione 28.

4 THIRDLY it is proved by the Holy Doctor. On account of which each thing is such, that is the more such; but on account of God we love ourselves and our neighbor; and he is rightly so to be loved, because he is the supreme good: Therefore we are bound more to love God himself. The major is Aristotle: Primo post, cap. 3. et 2 Metaph. t. 4.

> TERTIO probatur a S. Doct. Propter quod unum quodque tale, et illud magis tale; sed propter Deum diligimus nos, et proximum; et iure ita diligendus est, quia summum bonum: Ergo magis tenemur diligere ipsum Deum. Maior est Aristoteles: Primo post, cap. 3. et 2. Metaph. t. 4.

5 IT IS PROVED fourthly. The end is to be loved more than those things which are toward the end; but God is the end of all: Therefore. The major is Aristotle's 2 Phys. text. 23.

> PROBATUR quarto. Finis est magis diligendus, quam ea, quae sunt ad finem; sed Deus est finis omnium: Ergo. Maior est Aristotelis 2. Phys. text. 23.

6 IT IS PROVED fifthly in the body. Right reason dictates that the supreme good is to be loved more than the other goods; but God is the supreme Good: Therefore. Scotus uses this argument, as I shall say in the following question.

> PROBATUR quinto in corpore. Ratio recta dictat, summum bonum esse magis diligendum, quam caetera bona; sed Deus est summum Bonum: Ergo. Hoc argumento utitur Scotus, ut dicam quaestione sequenti.

7 You will OBJECT first. Perfection does not invert the order of its perfectible; but grace is the perfection of nature, which without grace loves itself more than God: Therefore grace, added, perfects but does not invert this order.

> OBIICIES primo. Perfectio non invertit ordinem sui perfectibilis; sed gratia est perfectio naturae, quae sine gratia magis diligit seipsam, quam Deum: Ergo gratia addita perficit, non invertit hunc ordinem.

8 The Holy Doctor RESPONDS that nature has two things, a primitive Esse, and the defect of corruption: therefore that which is primitive and of perfection is perfected; but that which has defect is corrected and amended. Therefore disordered self-love is of corrupted nature, and so is corrected by grace.

> Respondet S. Doct. naturam duo habere, et Esse primitivum, et defectum corruptionis: Id igitur, quod est primitivum, et perfectionis, perficitur; id autem, quod habet defectus, corrigitur, et emendatur. Igitur amor proprius inordinatus, est naturae corruptae, ideo corrigitur a gratia.

9 You will OBJECT secondly. Just as if you add equals to equals, they remain equal; so if you add unequals, they remain unequal; but the love of ourselves before the advent of grace outweighs the love of God: Therefore also after its advent: Therefore according to the order of Charity we ought to love ourselves more.

> OBIICIES secundo. Sicut si aequalibus addas aequalia, manent aequalia; ita si addas inaequalia, manent inaequalia; sed amor nostri ante adventum gratiae praeponderat amori Dei: Ergo et post eius adventum: Ergo secundum ordinem Charitatis debemus diligere magis nos ipsos.

10 The Holy Doctor RESPONDS that the Major is true if what is added as equal respect both equally; but charity respects the love of God more than that which is for oneself; hence at the advent of Charity the love of self is diminished and the love of God increased.

RESPONDet S. Doct. Maiorem veram, si aequale additum, aequaliter respiciat utrumque; at vero charitas magis respicit amorem Dei, quam illum, qui est in seipsum; unde in adventu Charitatis minuitur amor sui, et augetur amor Dei.

11 You will OBJECT thirdly. The affection of love follows cognition; but we know ourselves more than God: Therefore we also love ourselves more.

OBIICIES tertio. Amoris affectus sequitur cognitionem; sed magis nos cognoscimus, quam Deum: Ergo magis etiam diligimus.

12 The Holy Doctor RESPONDS that love follows cognition not only as to Charity, but also as to the greater perfection of goodness. Therefore, although we know ourselves more clearly than God; nevertheless we acknowledge that the goodness of God is greater and to be esteemed of more worth.

Respondet S. Doct. amorem sequi ad cognitionem, non solum quoad Charitatem, sed etiam quoad bonitatis perfectionem maiorem. Igitur, licet clarius cognoscamus nos ipsos, quam Deum; tamen agnoscimus, maiorem esse bonitatem Dei, et pluris aestimandam.

13 You will object fourthly. As much as anyone loves God, so much does he desire to enjoy God; and as much as he desires to enjoy God, so much does he desire his own beatitude; and as much as he desires his own beatitude, so much does he love himself: Therefore he loves himself as much as he loves God.

Obiicies quarto. Quantum aliquis diligit Deum, tantum appetit frui Deo; et quantum appetit frui Deo, tantum appetit sui beatitudinem; et quantum appetit sui beatitudinem, tantum se diligit: Ergo tantum diligit seipsum, quantum diligit Deum.

14 He responds, St. Doctor, that as to the affection of concupiscence one loves God as much as he desires to enjoy God; but as to the love of friendship he loves God more, because he orders his own goodness ultimately to God, as toward an end more lovable, namely the good by essence, toward which as toward a principle the good by participation is ordered: For indeed the love of concupiscence does not make a plurality with the love of ourselves; and therefore it does not follow that by that love we love God and ourselves equally: for to love ourselves out of charity is nothing other than to wish the supreme good for ourselves.

Respondet S. Doct. affectu quidem concupiscentiae tantum aliquem diligere Deum, quantum cupit Deo frui; at amore amicitiae magis diligere Deum, quia et suam bonitatem ordinat ultimo in Deum, tanquam in finem magis amabilem, utpote bonum per essentiam, ad quod tanquam ad principium, ordinatur bonum per participationem: Enimvero amor concupiscentiae non facit pluralitatem cum amore nostri; et ideo non sequitur, quod eo amore aequaliter Deum, et nos diligimus: diligere enim nos ex charitate, non est aliud, quam summum bonum nobis optare.

15 Next he responds that the Major can be denied; because one can desire to enjoy God for the sake of God himself, and therefore love God more than his own beatitude, and this is the order of Charity.

Deinde respondet, negari posse Maiorem; quia potest quis optare frui Deo propter ipsum Deum, et ideo magis diligere Deum, quam suam beatitudinem, et hic est ordo Charitatis.

16 You will object fifthly. When two things are finite, one can be intensified and the other remitted, and reduced to equality; but charity toward God and ourselves is finite: Therefore it can come about that the charity of God is remitted while the love of ourselves is intensified by Charity: Therefore, etc.

> Obiicies quinto. Quando duo sunt finita, potest unum intendi, et alterum remitti, et ad aequalitatem redigi; sed charitas in Deum, et nos, est finita: Ergo potest fieri, ut charitas Dei remittatur, dum amor nostri intenditur a Charitate: Ergo, etc.

17 He responds, St. Doctor, that these loves are finite; nevertheless by reason of the object the love of God is infinite, and for this reason it cannot be equalled. Nor indeed is it new that the finite should infinitely exceed another finite: for thus a line infinitely exceeds a point, and so a point can never arrive at being equal to a line; indeed many, and infinite points will never make any length of a line. Thus, therefore, are created goods with respect to the supreme good for the rational soul; and so infinitely many created goods will never be so lovable, because the Divine good, even as participable by me, will always be loved as the end; and thus it will never be equalled by the love of self, or of any creature whatsoever.

> Respondet S. Doct. amores hos esse finitos; attamen ratione obiecti amorem Dei esse infinitum, et hac de causa non posse aequari. Neque vero est novum, quod finitum excedat infinite aliud finitum: Sic enim linea excedit punctum infinite, et ita nunquam punctum potest pervenire, ut sit lineae aequale, imo plurima, et infinita puncta nunquam facient aliquam lineae longitudinem. Ita igitur sunt bona creata respectu boni summi Animae rationalis; Itaque infinita bona creata nunquam ita amabilia erunt, quia semper bonum Divinum, etiam ut participabile mihi, semper diligetur, ut finis; atque adeo nunquam aequabitur illi amor sui, vel cuiuscumque creaturae.

18 You will object sixthly. Love is a unitive force; but one cannot be united to anyone more than to oneself.

> Obiicies sexto. Amor est vis unitiva; non potest autem quis uniri cuicumque, magis quam sibi ipsi.

19 He responds, St. Doctor, first, that nothing is more united to us than ourselves according to nature; but not according to affection. Therefore God can be more adhering to us in love; and in this second way love is a unitive force by affection, not by nature.

> Respondet S. Doct. primo, nihil magis esse unitum nobis, quam nos secundum naturam; at non secundum affectum. Itaque potest Deus esse nobis magis inhaerens amore; et hoc secundo modo amor est vis unitiva affectu, non natura.

20 He responds secondly, that God is more intimate to us, and we depend more on him than on intrinsic principles, because God indwells nature and makes it blessed.

> Respondet secundo, Deum nobis esse magis intimum, et ab eo nos magis pendere, quam a principiis intrinsecis, quia Deus naturae illabitur, eamque beat.

Question XXXIII: Whether nature inclines more to loving God than to loving ourselves

1 The first opinion denies that we are naturally inclined to love God more than ourselves. So Coninck, disp. 24, doubt 3, alleging in favor of it St. Bonaventure, Giles, of Auxerre, and other older authors.

> Prima sententia negat, nos naturaliter inclinari ad diligendum Deum, magis quam nos ipsos. Ita Coninchius disp. 24. dubio 3. pro hac allegans D. Bonaventuram, Gabrielem, Altisiodorensem, et alios antiquiores.

2 The second opinion is that we are naturally inclined to love God more than ourselves. This opinion is explicitly held by St. Bonav. here, as we saw in the preceding question, and it is clear in the body, the foundations, and the replies to the arguments, where nothing clearer could be read; for he asserts, and repeats, that nature, as nature is, inclines more toward God, even though by reason of depravity and corruption it be pressed more by self-love. St. Thomas follows him here, and with him all

Thomists, Cajetan, Bannes, Aragon; Scotus 3 dist. 27, single question, § Istis igitur rationibus, whom all Scotists follow, per Mastrius in 3 disp. 6 quaest. 25; Casati, treatise on Charity, disp. 3 sect. 5; Valencia here p. 2; Vasquez in I-II, disp. 194; Tannerus disp. 2 quaest. 3 dub. 3, wrongly citing St. Bonaventure 3 dist. 25 to the contrary.

> Secunda sententia est, naturaliter nos inclinari magis ad diligendum Deum, quam nos metipsos. Haec sententia est expressa D. Bonav. hic, ut vidimus quaest. praecedenti, et patet in corpore, fundamentis, et ad argumenta, ubi nihil clarius legi potest; Asserit enim, et replicat, naturam, ut natura est, magis inclinare in Deum, esto ratione depravationis, et corruptionis, amore proprio magis urgeatur. Eum sequitur D. Thom. hic, ubi omnes Thomistae, Caietanus, Bannes, Aragonius; Scotus 3. dist. 27. quaest. unica §. Istis igitur rationibus, quem omnes Scotistae sequuntur apud Mastrium in 3. disp. 6. quaest. 25. Caspensis tract. de Charitate, disp. 3. sect. 5. Valentia hic p. 2. Vasquez prima secundae, disp. 194. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 3. male in oppositum adducens D. Bonaventuram 3. dist. 25.

3 I assert, with this opinion, that we are naturally inclined to love God more than ourselves.

> Assero cum hac sententia, naturaliter nos inclinari ad amandum magis Deum, quam nosmetipsos.

4 Many reasons are brought forward by many. And many refute them, so as to exalt their own.

> Multas rationes multi adducunt. Multique eas refellunt, ut suas extollant.

5 The first reason is that of St. Thomas in the body, which St. Bonaventure intimates in 3 dist. 29 dub. 1 litt. and in the Diet, title 5 cap. 5, and serm. 2 on the One Holy Doctor. Every part naturally loves the common good and the good of the whole more than the good proper to the part; but the good of any created thing is compared to the Divine good as the good of a part to the good of the whole: Therefore. For God is the highest good, by whose participation other things are good, and without whom there is no good, and hence he is every good, and the good of the whole universe. The major is proved by the example of the serpent, which, so that it may save its head, in which is life, exposes its parts to blows; and the hand naturally exposes itself so that the head, and consequently the whole, may be saved; and water ascends lest there be admitted into the nature of the universe the absurdity of a vacuum.

> Prima ratio est D. Thomae in corpore, quam innuit S. Bonav. 3. dist. 29. dub. 1. litt. et in Dieta, titulo 5. cap. 5. et serm. 2. de uno Sancto Doctore. Omnis pars naturaliter amat magis bonum commune, et totius, quam proprium partis: sed bonum cuiuscumque rei creatae comparatur ad bonum Divinum, ut bonum partis ad bonum totius: Ergo. Deus enim est summum bonum, cuius participatione caetera sunt bona, et sine quo nullum est bonum, ac proinde est omne bonum, et totale universi. Maior probatur exemplo Serpentis, qui ut salvet caput, in quo est vita, partes exponit ictibus; et manus se naturaliter exponit, ut salvet caput, et totum consequenter; et aqua ascendit, ne admittat in natura universi inconveniens vacui.

6 Scotus attacks this reason in § Istae rationes: for the examples by which the assumption is supported only show that the whole loves itself, or its principal parts, more than the less principal ones; for water does not ascend by its own form naturally to fill the vacuum, but is violently snatched by nature, which cares for the order of the universe; nor does the hand expose itself, but man exposes it: similarly the serpent exposes its more principal parts so that the head may be saved. Hence therefore you have only that God loves the good of the Universe more than that of a part; or that the good of a principal part is loved more than that of a less principal one; but you do not conclude that any part of the Universe loves the good of the whole more than its own.

Hanc rationem impugnat Scotus §. Istae rationes: Nam exempla, quibus nititur assumptum, solum ostendunt, totum magis diligere seipsum, vel partes principales, quam minus principales; non enim aqua sua forma naturaliter ascendit ad replendum vacuum, sed violenter rapitur a natura, curante Universi ordinem; neque manus seipsam exponit; sed homo eam opponit: Similiter Serpens exponit partes principaliores, ut caput servet. Hinc igitur solum habes, quod Deus diligat bonum Universi, magis quam partis; vel bene, esse partis principalis, quam minus principalis; sed non colligis, quod aliqua pars Universi magis diligat bonum totius, quam sui.

7 Scotus adds, even were this granted in the examples; nevertheless the case is disproportionate; for those parts, by saving the whole, save themselves, which are parts of it; but a creature is not any part of God, although it be his effect. So also Mastrius.

Addit Scotus, esto in exemplis id concedatur; attamen dispar est ratio; nam partes illae salvando totum, servant se ipsas, quae illius sunt partes; at creatura non est aliqua pars Dei, licet sit effectus illius. Sic etiam Mastrius.

8 But these things are frivolous. First indeed, the nature of a part is ordered to the whole as to an end; and therefore it appetizes the good of the whole more. That it is violent for the form of water to ascend, if no necessity of the whole universe urges, amounts to nothing; but if a vacuum is at hand, it is moved by a natural motion, as being formally a part; for it is not moved miraculously by God, nor attracted by another: for does the vacuum have an active power? But suppose the nature of the universe naturally operates thus. Acting therefore is most innate to the part, and likewise to each of the parts,[4], and thus it is natural to be acted upon; for the particular nature follows the common nature, which is its rule. Hence Aristotle says in 1 Phys. text. 78: Each thing is apt to be acted upon and moved as it naturally acts and moves.

[4] Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'maximè innatum partiformiter etiam singulis partibus'; 'partiformiter' is not attested Latin and both witnesses agree on it, so it was rendered as 'and likewise to each of the parts' (likely for 'parti, formaliter').

Sed haec frivola sunt. Primo quidem natura partis est ordinata ad totum, tanquam finem; atque ideo plus appetit bonum totius. Quod enim formae aquae sit violentum ascendere, si nulla urgeat totius universi necessitas, nihil facit; at si instet vacuum, movetur motu naturali, ut est formaliter pars; non enim a Deo miraculose movetur, neque ab alio attrahitur: Numquid enim vacuum habet virtutem activam? At esto universi natura hoc naturaliter operetur. Sic igitur agere est maxime innatum partiformiter etiam singulis partibus, sicque naturale est agi; natura enim particularis sequitur naturam communem, quae est sui regula. Ideo ait Aristoteles 1. Phys. text. 78. Unumquodque aptum est agi, et moveri, sicut naturaliter agitur, et movetur.

9 Nor is it true that the cause for which a part in the world, or in a serpent, or in a man, exposes itself to danger is that, by preserving the whole, it preserves itself, which is a part of the whole, etc.; on the contrary it is the opposite: for it undergoes its own destruction and perishing, so that by its own destruction the whole may be saved. For what preservation of water is there in departing from its natural place against its inclination?[3]

Neque verum est, quod causa, ob quam pars in mundo, vel serpente, aut homine, se exponit discrimini, sit, quia conservando totum, conservat seipsam, quae est pars totius, etc. imo contrarium est: Nam sui destructionem, et interitum subit, ut sui destructione salvetur totum. Quae enim conservatio aquae decedere a loco naturali ad infensum?

10 To the disproportion last alleged by Scotus, St. Bonaventure replies at ad 6. For although a creature is not a component part of God, nevertheless it depends on him more than a part on the whole, and more than on itself, such that upon the destruction of God there follows, by way of intrinsic connection of Creatures, annihilation. Moreover God is an intimate pervader, penetrating, containing, and hence more intimate to us than we ourselves are to ourselves.

> Ad disparitatem ultimo allegatam a Scoto occurrit D. Bonav. ad 6. Nam licet creatura non sit pars componens Dei, tamen ab eo pendet magis quam pars a toto, et magis quam a se ipsa, ita ut ad destructionem Dei, sequatur per locum intrinsecum Creaturarum annihilatio. Est praeterea Deus intimus pervadens, illabens, continens, atque adeo magis intimus nobis, quam nosmetipsi nobis.

11 Mastrius repeats the same things, adding that water is drawn to fill the vacuum, from Aristotle 4 de Caelo, text 34: for it is drawn by nature on account of the common good.

> Mastrius eadem refricat, addens, aquam trahi ad replendum vacuum ex Aristotele 4. caeli, textu 34. Enim vero trahitur a natura ob bonum commune.

12 Durandus attacks the reason of the Holy Doctors, because it does not follow that he who exposes himself to danger for another loves that other more than himself; for a friend exposes himself to danger for a friend, or for money, and yet loves himself more than the friend, or money. Similarly a good citizen exposes his life for the Republic, and yet does not love the Republic more than himself, because in that act he wills for himself a greater good, namely the good of virtue, which he would not wish to lack for the whole Republic. Hence Aristotle in 9 Eth. cap. 8 says that the serious man in these and similar acts loves himself most.

> Durandus rationem SS. Doctorum oppugnat, quia non sequitur, eum, qui se exponit discrimini pro alio, magis diligere illum, quam se; nam et amicus pro amico, vel pecunia, se exponit discrimini, et tamen magis diligit se ipsum, quam amicum, vel pecuniam. Similiter bonus civis exponit vitam pro Republica, nec tamen magis amat Rempublicam; quam se, quia in eo actu vult sibi maius bonum, idest bonum virtutis, quo nollet carere pro universa Republica. Unde Aristoteles 9. Eth. cap. 8. ait, quod vir studiosus in his, et similibus actibus maxime diligit seipsum.

13 Yet Durandus labors over equivocations, as Casati saw in num. 32; for the Holy Doctors intend that when a part is naturally exposed on account of the common good, as the adequate cause, the whole is loved more; but he who exposes himself to danger for a friend, or the Republic, or money, does not expose himself naturally, nor on account of the good of the friend, or of the Republic; much less for money, as is clear from the things said by Durandus himself. Therefore it is beside the point. Then, willing the non-Being of self for a friend, etc., he loves more him whose Being he wills, with the destruction of his own Being, as Scotus also notes.

> Laborat tamen Durandus in aequivocis, ut vidit Caspensis num. 32. nam SS. DD. id intendunt, ut quando naturaliter exponitur pars ob bonum commune, tanquam causam adaequatam, ametur magis totum; at exponens se discrimini pro amico, vel Republica, aut pecunia, non se exponit naturaliter, nec ob bonum amici, aut Reipublicae; multo vero minus pecuniae, ut constat ex dictis ab ipso Durando. Idco non est ad rem. Deinde volens non Esse sui pro amico, etc. magis diligit eum, cuius vult Esse, cum destructione Esse proprii, ut advertit etiam Scotus.

14 Mastrius adds, with St. Bonaventure at the end, that with God destroyed, the creature itself is not destroyed[2], not only formally, because it depends on God; but also eminently according to the being it has in God; but if God remained, the creature itself would remain in the cause, from which it could be reproduced, as the Friend also notes, disp. 29 sect. 3.

[2] Editor's note: the print reads 'etiam ipse ho non destruitur'; 'ho' rendered as 'hoc' (the creature), the print's letterform being defective.

> Addit Mastrius cum D. Bonav. ad ultimum, quod destructo Deo, etiam ipse hoc non destruitur, non solum formaliter, quia pendet a Deo; sed etiam eminenter secundum esse, quod habet in Deo; at si maneret Deus, maneret et ipse in causa, a qua posset reproduci, ut notat etiam Amicus disp. 29. sect. 3.

[15] Hence therefore Scotus extracts another reason, which is St. Bonaventure's at the place cited. A valiant citizen ought, according to right reason, to expose himself to death on account of the good of the Republic, from Aristotle 9 Eth., because the public good ought to prevail over the private: Therefore much more ought man to love the Highest Good more than his own singular good; for it is incomparably greater than the common good of the Republic in respect of his own singular good.

> Hinc igitur eruit Scotus aliam rationem, quae est D. Bonav. loc. cit. Fortis Politicus debet secundum rectam rationem se morti exponere ob Reipublicae bonum, ex Aristotele 9. Eth. quia bonum publicum debet praevalere privato: Ergo multo magis homo debet plus diligere Summum Bonum, quam bonum suum singulare; nam incomparabiliter est maius, quam bonum commune Reipublicae, respectu sui boni singularis.

[16] But the objections of Durandus lie dissolved.

> Oppositiones vero Durandi solutae iacent.

[17] From these you have that also Scotus, who subtly divided the reason of St. Thomas, in which it was assumed that a part is exposed for the whole reasonably, at length fled to nearly the same middle term.

> Ex quibus habes, etiam Scotum, qui subtiliter rationem D. Thomae dividit, in qua assumebat, exponi rationabiliter partem pro toto; tandem ad eundem fere medium terminum confugere.

[18] ¶ It is proved thirdly by St. Bonaventure at ad 4. Rational nature loves beatitude supremely, from Aristotle and Augustine 13 de Trinitate cap. 5. But it does not love beatitude more than the beatifying object; rather it orders beatitude toward the Highest Good, God, by an ordered motion of friendship.

> ¶ Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. ad 4. Natura rationalis summe diligit beatitudinem ex Aristotele, et Augustino 13. de Trin. cap. 5. Sed non magis diligit beatitudinem, quam obiectum beatificans, imo beatitudinem ordinat ad Bonum summum Deum motu amicitiae ordinato.

[19] From this also the hackneyed reply of Scotus lies rebuffed, which the Holy Doctor saw; namely, that from this it would follow that he loves himself more, for whom God is concupiscenced for fruition; for the love of concupiscence, by which I concupiscence a good for myself, presupposes the love of friendship, by which I love myself, and love God for my fruition.

> Ex quo etiam detrita iacet responsio Scoti, quam S. Doct. vidit; nempe hinc sequi, maius dilectum se ipsum, cui concupiscitur Deus ad fruitionem; nam amor concupiscentiae, quo bonum mihi concupisco, supponit amorem amicitiae, quo me ipsum diligo, atque Deum ad mei fruitionem amo.

[20] The Holy Doctor indeed replies that this comes about by the love of concupiscence; he warns, however, that this love of concupiscence does not make one number with the love of friendship of self, and thus one cannot properly be said to be prior to the other — which the P. also notes in his Treatise on the Angels, disput. 7 quaest. 2, where Scotus urged that the Angel first loved himself with the love of friendship, and afterwards wished glory for himself; while the love of beatitude is ordered according to right reason toward the highest good and last end, God, and hence God is loved more than our fruition, if we follow reason. Add that with God taken away, beatitude is taken away from us.

> Respondet vero S. Doct. amore concupiscentiae id evenire; monet tamen, hunc amorem concupiscentiae non facere numerum cum amore amicitiae sui, et ita non posse dici proprie unum altero priorem, quod etiam advertit P. t. Tract. de Angelis, disput. 7. quaest. 2. ubi Scotus urgebat, prius Angelum amasse se amore amicitiae, et postea optasse sibi gloriam; Amorem vero beatitudinis ordinati secundum rectam rationem ad summum bonum, et ultimum finem Deum, atque adeo plus amati Deum, quam nostram fruitionem, si rationem sequamur. Adde ablato Deo, tolli beatitudinem nobis.

21 It is proved fourthly by St. Bonaventure in the foundations and the body, by his own proper reason, which the more recent authors commonly use, and which Mastrius declares proper to Scotus in num. 619. The reason of natural love follows the dictation of nature; but nature dictates that God is to be loved supremely above all things: Therefore. The major is certain; for the will depends on cognition, and natural volition on the natural light, as elicited volition on elicited cognition. The minor is proved: for ordered nature dictates ordered acts, but nature in itself is right and ordered: Therefore it dictates ordered acts of the will. It is confirmed by St. Bonaventure's minor to the third, because right reason dictates that what is truly the greater good is to be loved more, and that God is the highest good: Therefore he is to be loved above all things.

> Probatur quarto a D. Bonav. in fundamentis, et corpore, ratione sua propria, quam usurpant communiter Recentiores, quamque propriam Scoti acclamat Mastrius num. 619. Ratio amoris naturalis sequitur dictamen naturae; sed naturae dictatur, Deum esse summe diligendum prae omnibus: Ergo. Maior est certa; nam voluntas dependet a cognitione, et volitio naturalis a lumine naturali, sicut volitio elicita a cognitione elicita. Minor probatur: Natura enim ordinata dictat actus ordinatos, sed natura secundum se est recta, et ordinata: Ergo dictat actus voluntatis ordinatos. Confirmatur a D. Bonav. Minor ad tertium, quia recta ratio dictat id, quod vere est maius bonum, esse magis amandum; et Deum esse summum bonum: Ergo suprat omnia amandum.

22 It is confirmed secondly by St. Bonaventure at the first. Grace and charity do not disorder nature, but perfect it; but charity inclines to loving God above all things: Therefore nature too; otherwise, if nature inclined to loving self more, it would follow that charity does not perfect, but perverts nature.

> Confirmatur secundo a D. Bonav. ad primum. Gratia et charitas non deordinat naturam, sed perficit; sed charitas inclinat ad Deum super omnia diligendum: Ergo et natura; alioqui si natura inclinaret ad diligendum magis se ipsum; sequeretur, charitatem non perficere, sed pervertere naturam.

23 The whole reason is confirmed further, because nature is from God: Therefore it is good: Therefore its inclination too is from God. But it would be absurd for God to have instilled a disordered nature, since every effect tends to its cause: hence All the Lord has worked for his own sake.

> Confirmatur adhuc tota ratio, quia natura est a Deo: Ergo bona: Ergo et eius inclinatio est a Deo. Absonum esset autem, Deum indidisse naturam inordinatam, cum omnis effectus ad suam causam tendat: dat: Omnia autem propter semetipsum operatus est Dominus.

24 It is confirmed further: for things loved below another are for use, and what is loved above all things is to be enjoyed; such an object is God alone, who is the last end and highest good: Therefore. So argues the Holy Doctor in the body, and more broadly in the first dist. 1 art. 3 quaest. 1 and 2, from St. Augustine lib. 1 de doctrina Christiana cap. 4 and 33.

Confirmatur adhuc: Quae enim diliguntur infra aliud, sunt usui, et quod diligitur prae omnibus est fruibile; tale obiectum est solus Deus, qui est ultimus finis, et summum bonum: Ergo. Sic arguit S. D. in corpore, et latius in primo dist. 1. art. 3. quaest. 1. et 2. ex D. August. lib. 1. de doctrina Christiana, cap. 4. et 33.

25 It is confirmed further in the body. God created all things in number, weight, and measure. But charity is a weight, as I showed in quaest. 30, and a right weight, inasmuch as it is from God; and hence rightly balancing the affections according to the greater dignity of the objects.

Confirmatur adhuc in corpore. Deus creavit omnia in numero, pondere, et mensura. Charitas autem est pondus, ut ostendi quaest. 30. et pondus rectum, utpote a Deo; atque adeo recte librans affectus, iuxta maiorem obiectorum dignitatem.

26 Coninck replies that indeed an appreciative love of God above other things is dictated by nature, but not a more intense one; rather it is borne toward ourselves more strongly and vehemently, and in this sense he tries to reconcile the authors of both opinions.

Respondet Coninchius, aestimativum sane amorem Dei prae caeteris dictari a natura, non autem intensiorem, sed potius ferri in nos magis, ac vehementius, et hoc sensu conatur authores conciliare utriusque opinionis.

27 But our question concerns appreciative love, and the authors of the first opinion contend by their arguments that nature dictates an appreciative love of ourselves more than of God, as we shall see. From this you also have that the Seraphic Doctor was wrongly alleged for the first opinion, for this reason: because he asserts an appreciative love indeed of God, but not an intensive one, to be connatural, since sensible nature is borne more vehemently toward itself. If this love were the question, there would be no controversy.

At quaestio nostra est de amore aestimativo, et Authores prioris sententiae contendunt suis argumentis, naturam dictare amorem aestimativum nostri, magis, quam Dei, ut videbimus. Ex quo etiam habes, cum male allegasse Seraphicum pro priori sententia, ea de causa, quia amorem appretiativum quidem Dei, non autem intensivum, asserit connaturalem, eo quod natura sensibilis vehementius fertur in se. Quod si de hoc amore esset quaestio, nulla esset controversia.

28 You will object first. The whole reason for loving is congeniality; for the ratio of good and of the congenial are convertible; but nothing is more congenial to any thing than its own proper being: Therefore nothing is more loved according to the inclination of nature. It is confirmed, because whatever nature loves, it loves as united and conjoined to itself, as is gathered from Aristotle in the Elenchi cap. 2: The good lovable is proper to each thing: Therefore the more conjoined and one it is to itself, the more it is loved; but a creature is more united than God, since it is united to itself by identity, whereas God by the causality of efficiency. It is confirmed from Aristotle 9 Eth.: Friendly things toward another are taken from friendly things toward self: Therefore natural love toward God comes from natural love of ourselves: Therefore a creature naturally loves itself more than God.

Obiicies primo. Tota ratio diligendi est convenientia; ratio namque boni, et convenientis convertuntur; sed nihil est convenientius unicuique rei, quam suum proprium esse: Ergo nihil magis diligitur secundum inclinationem naturae. Confirmatur, quia quidquid natura amat, amat ut sibi unitum, et coniunctum, ut sumitur ex Aristotele, Elenchorum, cap. 2. Amabile bonum unicuique proprium: Ergo quo magis coniunctum, et unum est, sibi magis amatur; at creatura est magis unita, quam Deus; cum ipsa sit sibi unita per identitatem; Deus autem per causalitatem efficientiae. Confirmatur ex Aristotele 9. Eth. Amicabilia ad alterum, sumuntur ex amicabilibus ad se: Ergo amor naturalis in Deum venit ex naturali amore nostri: Ergo creatura naturaliter magis se amat, quam Deum.

29 Mastrius replies in num. 631, from St. Bonaventure at the end, that the reason of congenial lovability is found prior and more perfectly in God, as in the universal good and origin of all good, as the Holy Doctor explains in the body; whence there is no good lovable except as it participates in divine goodness. To the confirmation he replies that, even were it more united to itself by identity, nevertheless God is still more united to it by power; for since the creature depends more wholly on God its principle than on itself, and is more sustained and conserved by God intimately penetrating, therefore God is more united to the creature than it is to itself by power.

> Respondet Mastrius num. 631. ex D. Bonav. ad ultimum, rationem convenientiae amabilitatis prius, et perfectius reperiri in Deo, tanquam in bono universali, et totius boni origine, ut explicat S. Doct. in corpore; unde nullum est bonum amabile, nisi ut participat de divina bonitate. Ad confirmationem respondet, quod, esto sit sibi magis unita per identitatem; adhuc tamen Deus est ei magis unitus per virtutem; cum enim creatura magis a Deo suo principio tota pendeat, quam a seipsa, magisque sustentetur, et conservetur a Deo intime illabente; ideo magis est Deus homini unitus, quam ipse sibi virtute.

30 Scotus replies secondly in dist. 27 at the title in the solution of the principal arguments, and Mastrius in num. 632, from the last words of St. Bonaventure at the end, that unity indeed moves the affection of love; nevertheless goodness is properly that which is lovable: but God is infinitely better than all.

> Respondet secundo Scotus dist. 27. tit. in solut. principalium, et Mastrius num. 632. ex ultimis verbis D. Bonav. ad ultimum, unitatem quidem movere affectum amoris; attamen bonitatem esse proprie illam, quae est amabilis: Deus autem est omnibus melior infinite.

31 To the third confirmation Aristotle speaks of friendship among equals, in which ordered self-love is the measure of love toward another; for friendship toward another becomes known when I seek for another things similar to those I seek for myself; but if the friendship is of the lesser toward the greatest, it is denied that self-love is the measure; whence with respect to a superior, especially God, it is a super-friendship, because he is the fountain of goodness, which is rather the reason that other things are loved. Aristotle indeed speaks of particular foreign goods. So also Tannerus disp. 2 quaest. 5 dub. 3 num. 48.

> Ad tertiam confirmationem loquitur Aristot. de amicitia inter aequales, in qua amor sui ordinatus, est mensura amoris ad alterum; innotescit quippe amicitia ad alterum, quando appeto alteri similia his, quae mihi; sed si amicitia sit minoris ad maximum, negatur, quod amor sui sit mensura, unde respectu superioris, praesertim Dei, est superamicitia, eo quod est fons bonitatis, quae est potius ratio, ut alia amentur. Aristoteles vero loquitur de bonis alienis particulatibus. Ita et Tannetus disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 3. num. 48.

32 You will object secondly. It is established by experience that we incline more toward ourselves than toward God; whence when the necessity of dying for Christ occurs, nature flees, as appeared in many martyrs, and even in Christ the Lord.

> Obiicies secundo. Experimento constat, nos magis in nos ipsos inclinare, quam in Deum; unde quando evenit necessitas moriendi pro Christo, refugit natura, ut patuit in multis martyribus, et etiam in Christo Domino.

33 It is replied first that that repugnance comes from sense; for the spirit indeed is prompt, but the flesh is weak, Matth. 26. Nor is it absurd to follow what Casati introduces: that sense naturally loves nature more than God; for this is not absurd, because sense is not capable of enjoying God. Hence it has neither the light nor the cognition of preferring God to itself. So also Tannerus.

> Respondetur primo, repugnantiam illam venire ex sensu; nam Spiritus quidem promptus est, caro autem infirma, Matth. 26. Neque est absurdum id, quod inducit Caspensis sequi; quod sensus naturaliter amet magis naturam, quam Deum; hoc enim non est absurdum, quia sensus non est capax fruendi Deo. Unde nec lumen, nec cognitionem habet praeferendi Deum sibi. Ita etiam Tannerus.

34 Casati replies secondly, from St. Bonaventure at the first, that this happens from a more vehement apprehension of one's own good, which is sensible; and therefore it moves nature more, weakened and depraved as it is.

> Respondet secundo Caspensis ex D. Bonav. ad primum, id evenire ex apprehensione vehementiori boni proprii, quod est sensibile; et ideo magis movet naturam debilitatam, ac depravatam.

35 You will object thirdly. If natural inclination were more toward God than toward us, grace would not be necessary for loving God above all things, which is against the Councils and the Fathers. Nor does Mastrius satisfy by saying that the Councils and Fathers speak of the state of fallen nature. For the contrary is the case, because St. Augustine in the Enchir. cap. 106 and the Council of Orange can. 19 assert the same of the state of innocence.

> Obiicies tertio. Si inclinatio naturalis esset magis in Deum, quam in nos, non esset necessaria gratia ad diligendum Deum super omnia, quod est contra Concilia, et Patres. Nec satisfacit Mastrius dicens, Concilia, et Patres loqui de statu naturae lapsae. Contra enim est, quia D. August. in Enchir. cap. 106. et Concilium Arausican. can. 19. idem asserunt de statu innocentiae.

36 Mastrius replies that it is true of supernatural love; but not of natural love, and that imperfect one by which nature strives toward God as a natural object, namely the Creator — an affection which is weakened in corrupted nature.

> Respondet Mastrius, verum esse amore supernaturali; non autem naturali, et hoc imperfecto, quo eniteretur natura in Deum, ut naturale obiectum, puta Creator, quae affectio natura corrupta infirmatur.

37 You will object fourthly. If this were true, man would never have sinned in the state of innocence, since nature would incline more toward God.

> Obiicies quarto. Si id verum esset, nunquam homo in statu innocentiae peccasset, cum ad Deum natura magis propenderet.

38 It is replied by denying the sequel; for a created object could be offered more vehemently and attract, as the Friend notes.

> Respondetur, negando sequelam; quia potuit obiectum creatum vehementius offerri, et attrahere, ut notat Amicus.

Question XXXIV: Whether a man ought to love himself more than his neighbor

1 It must be asserted. This is proved by the Holy Doctor first from the Saints, Augustine and Ambrose, who immediately after the love of God place the love of self, as we saw in quaest. 28.

> Asserendum. Hoc probatur a S. Doct. primo e Sanctis, August. et Ambrosio, qui immediate post dilectionem Dei ponunt dilectionem sui, ut vidimus quaest. 28.

2 Secondly, from Ecclus. 14: He who is evil to himself, to whom will he be good? Therefore one cannot orderly love one's neighbor unless one first loves oneself: for this reason in Matth. 22 and Deuter. 6 it is said: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Therefore the love of self is the exemplar of the love of neighbor: but the exemplar is superior to the exemplated.

> Deinde ex 14. Eccl. Qui sibi nequam est, cui alii bonus erit? Ergo non potest aliquis ordinate diligere proximum, nisi prius diligat se: Ideo enim Matth. 22. Deuter. 6. dicitur: Diliges proximum tuum, sicut te ipsum. Ergo dilectio sui est exemplar dilectionis proximi: Exemplar autem est potius exemplato.

3 Thirdly, from St. Augustine in the Enchir. cap. 76. See also Valencia disp. 3 quaest. 4 p. 3, Tanner disp. 2 q. 5 dub. 3.

> Tertio ex D. August. in Enchir. cap. 76. Vide etiam Valentiam disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 3. Tannet. disp. 2. q. 5. dub. 3.

4 Fourthly. The order of charity is first toward the first principle and last end, which is the Highest Good; then toward the participants: Man therefore loves himself as a participant in that good; others indeed as Companions in the participation; and, the participants being equal, unity is preferable to union. St. Thomas uses the same middle.

> Quarto. Ordo charitatis est prius in principium primum, et finem ultimum, qui est Summum Bonum; deinde in participantes: Homo igitur diligit se, ut participem illius boni; alios vero, ut Socios in participatione; data autem paritate participatis, unitas est potior unione. Eodem medio utitur D. Thomas.

5 It is confirmed first by the Holy Doctor in the body, because a weight draws more the thing in which it is than that which is attached to it: but charity is a weight, as I showed in quaest. 30.

> Confirmatur primo a S. Doct. in corpore*, quia pondus magis trahit id, in quo est, quam id, quod ei adnectitur: Charitas autem est pondus, ut ostendi* quaest. 30.

6 It is confirmed secondly. Each thing appetizes perfection in itself more than in its like: Therefore we reasonably appetize that God be united to us more than to others like to us.

> Confirmatur secundo. Unumquodque plus appetit perfectionem in se, quam in suo simili: Ergo rationabiliter magis appetimus, Deum nobis uniri, quam aliis nobis similibus.

7 It is confirmed thirdly by the Holy Doctor and Valencia, because those are reproved and called fools who neglect their own salvation to procure that of another: Matth. 16: What doth it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and suffer the detrimment of his soul?

> Confirmatur tertio a S. Doct. et Valentia, quia illi reprehenduntur, ac stulti dicuntur, qui salutem propriam negligunt, ut procurent alienam, Matth. 16. Quid prodest homini, si universum mundum lucretur; animae vero suae detrimentum patiatur.

8 Finally, if he ought to love each individual neighbor as himself: Therefore also another neighbor conjoined simultaneously double more, and four, quadruple, and so on to infinity. From this affection it follows that one cannot give one's life for the life of a friend to be saved; so Durand. 4 dist. 17 quaest. 6, Richard dist. 15 art. 3 quaest. 5, Gabriel dist. 16 quaest. 3 art. 1, Paludanus dist. 15 q. 3 art. 2, Bellarm. on good works lib. 3 cap. 8 tom. 3. Hence St. Augustine in lib. de mendacio cap. 6 says: If anyone lose his bodily life for the bodily life of a friend, he does not love his neighbor as himself, but more than himself; which exceeds the rule of doctrine.

> Tandem, si singulos proximos deberet diligere, ut se ipsum: Ergo et alium proximum simul coniunctum duplo plus, et quatuor quadruplo, et sic in infinitum. Ex hac affectione sequitur, non posse aliquem dare vitam pro vita amici salvanda, ita Dutand. 4. dist. 17. quaest. 6. Richard. dist. 15. art. 3. quaest. 5. Gabriel dist. 16. quaest. 3. art. 1. Paludanus dist. 15. q. 3. art. 2. Bellarm. de bonis operibus, lib. 3. cap. 8. tom. 3. Unde D. August. lib. de mendacio, cap. 6. ait: Si quis vitam corporalem pro vita corporali amici perdat, non diligit proximum sicut seipsum, sed plus quam seipsum; quod doctrinae regulam excedit.

9 The reason is the one the Holy Doctor brings in the body and at ad 2, because love toward self is the measure of love toward neighbor; for it is said: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; but the measure is more perfect than the measured, as Scotus also says. Hence Hurtado defends this opinion tooth and nail in t. 2 disp. 114 sect. 4 § 42, where he lays down that it is a sin to die for the life of a neighbor.

Ratio est, quam affert S. Doct. in corpore, et ad 2. quia amor erga seipsum, est mensura amoris erga proximum; Dicitur enim: Diliges proximum, sicut teipsum: mensura autem est perfectior mensurato, ut ait etiam Scotus. Ideo hanc sententiam mordicus tuetur Hurtadus t. 2. disp. 114. sect. 4. §. 42. ubi statuit, peccatum esse, mori pro vita proximi.

10 Others however say that this is licit: Azorius tom. 2 lib. 2 cap. 3 quaestio 2, Soto on Justice lib. 5 quaest. 1 art. 6, Victoria relect. on homicide num. 25, Corduba lib. 1 quaest. 83 at ad 4, Tanner disp. 2 quaest. 5 dub. 4 num. 73, citing St. Thomas 3 dist. 29 quaest. 1 art. 5 at ad 3 and lib. 1 de regimine Principum, and here quaest. 26 art. 4 at ad 2, Bannes, Aragon, Valencia quaest. 4 p. 3. See below quaest. 35.

Alii tamen dicunt, id licere, Azorius tom. 2. lib. 2. cap. 3. quaestio 2. Sotus de Iustitia, lib. 5. quaest. 1. art. 6. Victoria relect. de homic. num. 25. Corduba lib. 1. quaest. 83. ad 4. Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 4. num. 73. *adducens D. 11 Diana p. 5 tract. 4 resol. 28, with Faber on Restitution in 4 disp. 52 num. 41, Valencia tom. 3 disp. 3 quaest. IV p. III, Lorca II II quaest. XXVI art. V sect. III disp. XXVIII member III num. 55, say that it is sometimes licit to do this on account of some added cause; for instance if the friend is more useful, or if he is unjustly oppressed; and thus justice also is saved; and in this way it is a heroic work, says Lorca.

Diana p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 28. cum Fabro de Restitutione, in 4. disp. 52. num. 41. Valentia tom. 3. disp. 3. quaest. IV. p. III. Lorca II. II. quaest. XXVI. art. V. sect. III. disp. XXVIII. membro III. num. 55. dicunt, licere aliquando ob additam aliquam causam id facere; puta si amicus sit utilior, vel si oppressus iniuste sit; et ita salvetur etiam iustitia; et hoc modo esse opus heroicum, ait Lorca.

12 The Holy Doctor asserts it entirely in III dist. XXIX dub. I litt. With equality indeed given, the Holy Doctor wills that alms be given first to oneself. But he calls perfect heroic charity in dub. V, from St. Augustine tract. V on John, when one is ready to die for love of the brethren — a death not undergone precisely for them, but in order to God. Wherefore the act will be heroic by Charity. Hence in John XV it is said: Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends. So also Bass. v. Charity, num. 19, where he brings forward many.

Omnino asserit S. Doct. in III. dist. XXIX. dub. I. litt. Data vero aequalitate, vult S. Doct. eleemosynam sibi prius faciendam. Enim vero perfectam charitatem heroicam vocat dub. V. ex D. August. tract. V. in Ioan. si quis paratus sit mori pro amore fratrum, quae mors non subitur praecise pro illis, sed in ordine ad Deum. Quare actus erit Charitate heroicus. Ideo dicitur Ioan. XV. Maiorem hac dilectionem nemo habet, ut animam suam ponat quis pro amicis suis. Sic, et Bass. v. Charitas, num. 19. ubi multos affert.

13 Against this assent you will object first: Charity seeketh not her own, I. Cor. XIII.

> Contra assensum Obiicies primo. Charitas non quaerit, quae sua sunt I. Cor. XIII.

14 It is replied that seeking one's own good is forbidden as excluding the common; for that is lust. But to seek one's own good as such is not evil; for he himself in Philip. the first desired to be dissolved and to be with Christ. So also St. Thomas replies from St. Augustine, the third rule.

> Respondetur*, prohiberi quaerere bonum proprium, ut excludit commune; sic enim est libido. Quaerere autem suum bonum, ut sic, non est malum; ita enim et ipse,* Philip. primo, cupiebat dissolvi, et esse cum Christo. Ita respondet etiam D. Thomas ex D. Augustino, regula tertia.

15 You will object secondly from Matth. XXII, where we have: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: Therefore equally.

> Obiicies secundo Matth. XXII. habetur: Diliges proximum, sicut teipsum: Ergo aequaliter.

16 The Holy Doctor replies particularly that as, is not a mark of perfect equality, but of expressed likeness, which is attended to in this, that man love his neighbor toward that good toward which he loves himself, and that after his own salvation he ought to wish nothing more than that of another.

> Respondet S. Doct. patriculam, sicut*, non esse notam aequalitatis perfectae, sed expressae similitudinis, quae in hoc attenditur, ut homo diligat proximum ad illud bonum, ad quod diligit seipsum, et post salutem propriam nihil debet magis optare, quam alienam.*

17 You will object thirdly from St. Gregory, homil. XVII on the Gospels: No one is said to have Charity toward himself, but toward another.

> Obiicies tertio ex D. Gregorio, homil. XVII. in Evang. Nemo ad seipsum Charitatem habere dicitur, sed ad alterum.

18 The Holy Doctor replies that the sense is not to terminate Charity in oneself, but that it ought to be extended toward one's neighbor, for he who does not love remains in death. It is also replied that Charity is toward another insofar as it is friendship.

> Respondet S. Doct. sensum esse, non terminare Charitatem in se, sed extendi debere ad proximum, qui enim non diligit, manet in morte. Respondetur etiam, Charitatem ad alterum esse, quatenus est amicitia.

19 You will object fourthly. Liberality is attended to toward another. But charity is a liberal love: Therefore.

> Obiicies quarto. Liberalitas attenditur ad alterum. Charitas autem est amor liberalis: Ergo.

20 He replies that liberality is extended toward another, but nevertheless begins from oneself.

> Respondet*, Liberalitatem extendi ad alterum, sed tamen incipere a se.*

21 You will object fifthly. Charity, coming upon nature, inverts the order; and he who before loved himself more than God begins to love God more: Therefore it inverts also the love in order to neighbor, so that the latter be loved more.

> Obiicies quinto. Charitas adveniens naturae, invertit ordinem; et qui prius amabat magis se, quam Deum, incipit amare magis Deum: Ergo invertit etiam amorem in ordine ad proximum, ut is magis ametur.

22 The Holy Doctor replies that there is no variation of nature, that I should love myself before my neighbor; therefore it is not to be taken away by Charity, as vitious self-love is taken away.

> Respondet S. Doct. non esse varietatem naturae, ut prius diligam me, quam proximum; ideo Charitate non est tollenda, sicut tollitur amor proprius vitiosus.

23 You will object sixthly. Our charity ought to be conformed to the Charity of God, who loves our neighbors more, if they are better, than us. The assumption is proved: for he wills his honor; but the salvation of a hundred souls is more toward God's honor than my salvation: Therefore. For thus the Apostle in Rom. IX desired to be an anathema for the brethren.

> Obiicies sexto. Charitas nostra debet Charitati Dei conformari, qui diligit magis proximos nostros, si sint meliores, quam nos. Probatur assumptum: Nam vult honorem suum: At salus centum animarum est magis ad Dei honorem, quam salus mea: Ergo. Sic enim Apostolus Rom. IX. Cupiebat esse anathema pro fratribus.

24 The Holy Doctor replies, with St. Thomas, that the order of Charity is not attended to only by the magnitude of the good wished; but also on the part of the lover; just as the quantity of an action depends on the subject itself. Therefore, although the neighbor be better, nevertheless he does not preponderate, because Charity was given to me first for acting in its own subject, and this is the honor of God and his will expressed in the Scriptures. But what the Apostle desired, to be an anathema, understand for a time, or under a condition, should it be desirable, as St. Bonav. says at the end; or he desired separation from the fellowship of the members of Christ, as Chrysostom explains; or he desired death for the salvation of his neighbor, as Valencia notes disp. III quaest. IV punct. 3. Say the same of that saying of Moses, Deuter. XXXII: Either forgive them, etc. or blot me out of thy book; which Fusesius explains in lib. III cap. 9 as a filial exaggeration.

> Respondet S. Doct. cum D. Thom. ordinem Charitatis non attendi penes magnitudinem boni optabilis tantum; sed ex parte etiam diligentis; sicut et quantitas actionis pendet ex ipso subiecto. Ideo, licet proximus sit melior; tamen non praeponderat, quia Charitas data est mihi prius ad operandum in subiecto suo, et hic est honor Dei, voluntasque eius in scripturis expressa. Quod vero Apostolus cupiebat, esse anathema*, intellige ad tempus, vel sub conditione, si optabile foret, ut ait S. Bonav.* ad ultimum. Vel optabat segregationem a membrorum Christi commercio, ut exponit Chrysostomus; vel optabat mortem pro salute proximi, ut notat Valentia disp. III. quaest. IV. punct. 3. Idem dic de illo Moysis effato, Deuter. XXXII. Aut dimitte eis*, etc.* aut dele me de libro tuo; quod per quandam exaggerationem filialem exponit Fusiensis lib. III. cap. 9.

Question XXXV: Whether the eternal salvation of the neighbor is to be loved more than our own life

1 I assert that the Salvation of our neighbor is to be preferred to our life, from what was said in quaest. XXX, with the Holy Doctors and St. Augustine lib. I de doctrina Christiana cap. 27.

> Assero, Salutem proximi esse praeferendam vitae nostrae, ex dictis quaest. XXX. cum SS. DD. ac D. August. lib. I. de doctr. Christi, cap. 27.

2 It is proved secondly by St. Bonaventure here. That thing is more lovable by charity which is more consociable in supernatural beatitude: Such is the soul of the neighbor, participating immediately, while the body shares only by redundancy. Fusesius urges this with St. Thomas. This, however, holds in an unavoidable necessity, for instance, if an infant would perish without baptism should I not hasten, nor could I without danger to life; not if he, in an unjust war, would expose himself to the combat; for that is avoidable. So St. Thomas at the place cited, where Sylvius, Malder. Arag. Nau. Mam. cap. 24 num. 10, Valent. disp. III quaest. IV p. III, Dian. p. V tract. XIII resol. 14, Tanner. disp. II q. III dub. n. 60, Filliuc. tract. XXVIII num. 35, and Bassaeus does not deny it v. Charity, num. 18.

> Probatur secundo a D. Bonav. hic. Illud est magis diligibile charitate, quod est magis consociabile in beatitate superna: Talis est anima proximi immediate participans, cum corpus comparticipet sola redundantia. Id urget Fusiens. cum D. Thom. Hoc tamen est in necessitate inevitabili, puta, si infans sine baptismo periret, si ego non accurrerem, nec possem sine discrimine vitae; non si is, iniquo in bello, certamini se exponeret; ea enim est evitabilis. Ita D. Thom. loc. cit. ubi Sylvius, Malder. Arag. Nau. Mam. cap. 24. num. 10. Valent. disp. III. quaest. IV. p. III. Dian. p. V. tract. XIII. resol. 14. Tanner. disp. II. q. III. dub. n. 60. Filliuc. tract. XXVIII. num. 35. nec renuit Bassaeus v. Charitas*, num. 18.*

3 Sancius nevertheless denies it, select. disp. X num. 9, who says with Sà num. 4 that we are held indeed not to inflict spiritual harm on our neighbor, nor to inflict it for the sake of preserving our body, but we are not held to prevent it; otherwise a pregnant mother would be held to allow herself to be cut open so that the infant could be baptized, which would otherwise perish without baptism; and he charges with indiscretion those Doctors who say, they would indeed, but would not do it.

> Renvit tamen Sancius select. disp. X. num. 9. qui ait cum Sà num. 4. teneri nos quidem non inferre damnum spirituale proximo, nec inferre ob nostrum corpus servandum, sed non teneri impedire; alioqui teneretur mater gravida sinere se secari, ut baptizari queat infans, alioqui sine baptismo periturus, ac indiscretionis arguit eos Doctores, qui dicunt, sed non facerent.

4 He excepts the case where one is bound by convention, for instance if one is a Pastor; or hired soldiers. He teaches this from St. Bonaventure on John X: The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep: for both receive a stipend. So also Bonac. tract. II disp. III quaest. IV punct. 4, Sylvius cit., Laym. lib. II tract. III cap. 3, Reginald. lib. IV cap. 25 num. 356, 348 and 357, Chapeauvilla cap. I quaest. IV, Malder. loc. cit., Tab. v. Bishop, quaest. V, Tannerus cit. disp. IV n. 64, Filliuc. cit. num. 56, Dian. loc. cit. and resol. 33, Bassaeus loc. cit.

> Excipit, si ex conventione teneat, puta si Parochus; si Navta conducti. Hoc docet ex D. Bonav. ad id Ioan. X. Bonus Pastor animam suam dat pro ovibus suis: Ideo enim uterque stipendia accipit. Sic et Bonac. tract. II. disp. III. quaest. IV. punct. 4. Sylvius cit. Laym. lib. II. tract. III. cap. 3. Reginald. lib. IV. cap. 25. num. 356. 348. et 357. Chapeauvilla cap. I. quaest. IV. Malder. loc. cit. Tab. v. Episc. quaest. V. Tannerus cit. disp. IV. n. 64. Filliuc. cit. num. 56. Dian. loc. cit. et resol. 33. Bassaeus loc. cit.

Question XXXVI: Whether one neighbor is to be loved more than another

1 I assert it. It is proved by St. Thomas, because the order of love is attended to according to the principle of goodness. Therefore he who is more conjoined to a more lovable goodness is more lovable; but some neighbors are nearer to God, and to us, than others. The Holy Doctor uses this reason also at the place cited, and Valent. disp. III q. IV p. IV, Fusiens. lib. III c. 9, and others.

> Assero. Probatur a D. Thom. quia ordo dilectionis attenditur iuxta principium bonitatis. Igitur qui magis bonitati amabiliori est coniunctus, est magis amabilis; aliqui autem proximi sunt aliis viciniores Deo, et nobis. Hac ratione utitur etiam S. D. loc. cit. et Valent. disp. III. q. IV. p. IV. Fusiens. lib. III. c. 9. et alii.

2 First indeed, by a greater love objectively the better one is to be loved more. So St. Thomas art. 7. For he who is better is more conjoined with the principal object of charity, which is God, and has more good in himself. We can nevertheless wish a greater good for another, for instance a kinsman, than that which another has.

> Primo quidem dilectione maiori obiective melior magis est diligendus. Ita D. Thom. art. 7. Nam qui est melior, est magis coniunctus cum obiecto praecipuo charitatis, quod est Deus, et plus boni in se habet. Possumus tamen alteri, puta consanguineo, optare maius bonum illo, quod alius habet.

3 Secondly. By a greater appreciative love, he is to be loved more who is more conjoined either to God, or to the one loving him, or to both: but if one be better, the other more conjoined to me, the latter is to be loved more as regards those goods by which he is conjoined to me; hence in I Tim. V: If any man have not care of his own, and especially of those of his house, he hath denied the faith: And it is the opinion of St. Augustine lib. I doct. Christ. c. 28.

> Secvndo. Maiori dilectione appretiativa ille magis diligendus, qui vel Deo, vel diligenti ipsi, vel utrique est coniunctior: At si alter sit melior, alter mihi coniunctior, is diligendus magis quoad ea bona, quibus est mihi coniunctus; unde prima Timot. V. Si quis suorum, maxime domesticorum, curam non habet, fidem negavit: Et est sententia D. August. lib. I. doct. Christ. c. 28.

4 It is proved also by the reason of St. Bonaventure brought forward in q. XXX. Every motion takes its intensity, and as it were its weight, by which it tends toward the term, from its own principle, especially from that from which it proceeds; therefore the motion of charity too is borne with a greater as-it-were weight toward that which is more conjoined to the principle from which that motion of love proceeds; namely to the one loving himself.

> Probatur etiam ratione D. Bonav. allata q. XXX. Omnis motus accipit intentionem suam, et quasi pondus, quo tendit in terminum ex ipso sui principio, praecipue, a quo scilicet procedit; ergo et charitatis motus maiori quasi pondere fertur in illud, quod est coniunctius principio illi, a quo procedit is dilectionis motus; scilicet ipsi diligenti.

5 Hence you have that those conjoined in all things are to be loved more than strangers, even if they be better, other things being equal; for as regards spiritual goods, those are to be loved more who are conjoined in grace, as spiritual sons, or spiritual parents.

> Hinc habes, coniunctos quoad omnia, magis diligendos, quam extraneos, etiam si sint meliores, caeteris paribus; nam quoad bona spiritualia magis diligendi sunt, qui sunt coniuncti in gratia, ut filii spirituales, vel parentes spirituales.

Question XXXVII: Whether a son is to be loved more than a father

1 I assert that parents are to be loved more by Charity, on the part of the lovable object, which is good. So St. Bonaventure here, and St. Thomas quaest. 26 art. 9 and quaest. 31 art. 3 ad 4, where Valencia, Bannes, Aragon, and Tanner. disp. 2 quaest. 3 dub. 5, Fuliens. lib. 3 cap. 10.

> Utrum magis debeat diligi Filius, quam Pater.
> Assero, Parentes magis diligendos ex Charitate, ex parte obiecti amabilis, quod est bonum. Ita D. Bonav. hic, et D. Thom. quaest. 26. art. 9. et quaest. 31. art. 3. ad 4. Ubi Valentia, Bannes, Aragon, et Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. Fuliens. lib. 3. cap. 10.

2 It is proved by St. Bonaventure first, because after the worship of God, the honor of parents is straightway commanded in Exodi 20. Therefore as regards the honor owed and the obligation of assisting, parents are to be preferred.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo, quia post cultum Dei, praecipitur statim honor parentum Exodi 20. Ergo quoad honorem debitum, et obligationem subveniendi, parentes sunt praeferendi.

3 Secondly it is proved by the Holy Doctors from St. Ambrose, cited in quaest. 13.

> Secundo probatur a SS. Doctoribus ex D. Ambrosio, allato quaest. 13.

4 Thirdly: Where there is a greater dependence, and whence a greater good, and the origin of arriving at the highest good, in the enjoyment of which the consummation of Charity consists, there is the greater inclination toward it; but man depends more on his parents, from whom he has being ordered to the highest good, which they imitate of the first Principle and last End: Therefore. Hence Aristot. 9 Eth. cap. 2 says: Man more honorably assists his parents than his sons, and even himself.

> Tertio: Ubi est maior dependentia, et unde maius bonum, atque origo perveniendi ad summum bonum, in cuius fruitione stat consummatio Charitatis, ibi est ad illud maior inclinatio; sed homo magis pendet a parentibus, a quibus habet esse ordinatum ad summum bonum, quaeque imitantur primum Principium, et ultimum Finem: Ergo: Hinc Aristot. 9. Eth. cap. 2. ait: Homo honestius subvenit parentibus, quam filiis, et sibi etiam ipsi.

5 Fourthly in the body, because we have more and more excellent goods from our parents: Therefore, on the part of the object of Charity, which is good, parents are to be loved more.

> Quarto in corpore, quia plura, et praestantiora bona habemus a parentibus: Ergo ex parte obiecti Charitatis, quod est bonum, amandi sunt magis parentes.

6 I assert secondly, on the part of the lover, that sons are to be loved more.

> Assero secundo, ex parte diligentis magis amandos filios.

7 It is proved by the Holy Doctors, because the son is a part of the father, and hence more intimate to the one loving from 8 Eth. cap. 12, and in him he is more conserved and expressed. And so the love holds itself, as the exceeding and the exceeded, under diverse rationes; yet so that grace inclines more toward parents; nature indeed, as regards the affection, toward sons — which is so clear that I wonder that Valencia disp. 3 quaest. 4 p. 5 said that Bonaventure was deceived, in which also Tannerus wrongly carps at the Holy Doctor.

> Probatur a SS. Doctoribus, quia filius est pars patris, atque adeo magis intimus diligenti ex 8. Eth. cap. 12. et in eo magis conservatur, et exprimitur. Itaque diversa ratione dilectio se habet ut excedens, et excessum; ita tamen, ut gratia magis inclinet ad parentes; natura vero quoad affectum ad filios, quod adeo clarum est, ut mirer, Valentiam disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 5. dixisse, Bonaventuram deceptum, in quo etiam Tannerus male carpit S. Doctorem.

Question XXXVIII: Whether a man ought out of charity to love his mother more than his father

1 I assert, that the Father is to be loved more per se, on the side of the object and of the principle.

> Utrum homo debeat ex CHARITATE magis diligere Matrem, quam Patrem.
> Assero*, magis Patrem amandum per se ex parte obiecti, et principii.*

2 It is proved by St. Thomas, because charity follows ordered nature; but ordered nature is borne more toward its chief principle, from which it has its being, and to which it is more closely joined:

Therefore also grace. But the chief principle of nature is the Father: Therefore. Per accidens, however, more is often owed to the Mother, who loves more, and sometimes endures more in rearing her son.

> Probatur a D. Thom. quia charitas sequitur naturam ordinatam; sed natura ordinata magis fertur in suum principium praecipuum, a quo habet esse, cuique magis est coniunctus: Ergo et gratia. Sed praecipuum principium naturae est Pater: Ergo. Per accidens vero plus saepe debetur Matri, quae magis amat, et aliquando plura patitur pro filio educando.

Question XXXIX: Whether a man ought to love his spouse more than his parents, and children

1 I assert. In matters belonging to the economic order, and outside extreme necessity, the spouse is to be loved more. Because as regards the things that pertain to this class, the conjugal bond is closer, as is said Matthew 19: And now they are no longer two, but one flesh; and therefore Genesis 2: Wherefore a man shall leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife. So Aragoneus art. 11. Indeed Sà on the word Charity, num. 3. simply prefers the wife to the mother. In extreme necessity, however, parents take precedence, because a greater debt is owed to them, and there is a greater conjunction as regards absolute being, as Valentia notes disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 5. and Bannes on this article, because the union with parents is one of substantial identity; with a spouse, however, from commixture. Valentia adds, with Cajetan on this article, that in extreme necessity the obligation of helping a son prevails. Tannerus adds disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 84. that even in a grave necessity, which is not extreme, parents are rather to be helped than children.

> Utrum homo debeat magis diligere coniugem, quam parentes, et Filios.
> Assero. In his, quae spectant ad Oeconomicam rationem, et extra necessitatem extremam, magis diligenda est coniux. Quia quoad ea, quae spectant ad hoc genus, arctior est coniunctio coniugalis, ut dicitur Matth. 19. Itaque iam non sunt duo, sed una caro; et ideo Genesi 2. Propter hoc relinquet homo patrem, et matrem, et adhaerebit uxori suae. Ita Aragoneus art. 11. Imo Sà verbo Charitas, num. 3. simpliciter uxorem Matri praefert. In extrema vero necessitate praevalent parentes, quia maius est debitum in eos, et maior coniunctio quoad esse absolute, ut notant Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 5. et Bannes ad hunc articulum*, quia unio cum parentibus est substantialis identitatis; cum coniuge vero ex commixtione. Addit Valentia cum Caietano* ad hunc articulum*, in extrema necessitate praevalere obligationem subveniendi filio. Addit Tannerus* disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 84. etiam in gravi, quae non sit extrema, magis subveniendum parentibus, quam filiis.

2 From what has been said the Holy Doctor deduces that it is a graver sin to strike a mother than a spouse, on account of the reverence owed, and the dependence as upon a principle; therefore it is far more cruel, which is observed even among beasts more toward parents than toward those joined by the conjugal bond alone, against whom rage is kindled more than against one's begetters.

> Ex dictis deducit S. Doct. maius esse peccatum percutere matrem, quam coniugem, ob reverentiam debitam, et dependentiam tanquam a principio; ideo crudelior est longe, quod etiam inter bestias magis servatur erga parentes, quam erga solum coniunctas copula, contra quas ita magis accenditur, quam contra genitores.

3 Although, however, a greater penalty seems to have been imposed upon uxoricide; yet this, the Holy Doctor says, was done to restrain the impulses that often break out into uxoricide. Perversion among these loves is judged venial by Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 83. Bonacina t. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 4. Filluc. tract. 28. c. 2. q. 9. because the distance is small and on either side the opinions are probable.

> Quamvis autem maior poena uxoricidio videatur imposita; tamen hoc factum esse, ait S. Doct. ad movendos impetus, qui saepe ad uxoricidium irrumpunt. Perversionem inter horum amores venialem censent Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 83. Bonacina t. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 4. Filluc. tract. 28. c. 2. q. 9. quia parva est distantia et utrinque sunt probabiles opiniones.

Question XL: Whether the order of charity is considered in the affection, and in the effect

1 I assert, that the order of charity is to be observed with respect to both.

> An ordo CHARITATIS attendatur penes affectum, et effectum.
> Assero, ordinem charitatis servandum quoad utrumque.

2 It is proved by St. Bonaventure, first from 1 John 3: Let us not love in word, nor in tongue, but in deed, and in truth.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo ex prima Ioan. 3. Non diligamus verbo, neque lingua, sed opere, et veritate.

3 Secondly from St. Gregory homil. 30. on the Gospels: The proof of love is the exhibition of work.

> Secundo ex D. Gregor. homil. 30. in Evang. Probatio dilectionis exhibitio est operis.

4 Thirdly. Let us work good toward all, especially toward the household of the faith, exhorts the Apostle Galatians 6. Therefore, other things being equal, goods are rather to be bestowed upon relatives, as Valent. also notes disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 5. So also a distinguished friend, from whom you have received outstanding benefits, is to be loved more than a kinsman not nearly so close. So Valentia at the place cited; yet not more than an intimate one, for instance a brother, etc.

> Tertio. Operemur bonum ad omnes, maxime ad domesticos fidei, hortatur Apostolus Galat. 6. Sic igitur, data paritate, bona magis propinquis sunt exhibenda, ut notat etiam Valent. disp. 3. quaest. 4. p. 5. Sic et magis diligendus insignis amicus, a quo beneficia eximia acceperis, quam consanguineus, non valde propinquus. Ita Valentia loco citato; non tamen quam intimus, puta frater, etc.

5 You will say. Proverbs 18 says: A man friendly in society shall be more a friend than a brother.

> Dices. Proverb. 18. dicitur: Vir amicabilis ad societatem magis erit amicus, quam frater.

6 He answers — the Holy Doctor gives the answer in the text;[1] for he speaks of the affection of society, insofar as someone can take more delight in the conversation of a friend than of a brother, and as regards companionship it is more pleasant to converse with friends than in prayer with God. Yet the Holy Doctor says ad secundum that this is not tolerable in the servant of God who is religious, whose it is to taste and see how sweet the Lord is: But parents especially are to be preferred to all, as Aristotle has, 8 Ethics, last chapter, where he says: To gods and parents there is not rendered an equal return. But that charity has more regard for order in its own elicited acts than in those commanded, the Holy Doctor observes ad 1. With this affection I ought first to will eternal life for myself; then for my father, and others in due order, as Valentia also notes.

[1] Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'Respondet Respondet S. Doct. in textu haberi responsum' — the verb duplicated; rendered with a single 'Respondet' introducing the answer.

> Respondet S. Doct. in textu haberi responsum; nam loquitur de affectu societatis, quatenus potest aliquis magis delectari conversatione amici, quam fratris, et quoad consuetudinem delectabilis est conversari cum amicis, quam in oratione cum Deo. Hoc tamen ait S. Doct. ad secundum non esse tolerabile in servo Dei religioso, cuius est gustare, et videre quam suavis est Dominus: Maxime vero genitores sunt omnibus praeferendi, ut habet Aristoteles 8. Eth. cap. ultimo*, ubi ait:* Diis, et parentibus non reddi aequalia. Charitatem vero magis respicere ordinem in actibus suis propriis elicitis, quam in imperatis, observat S. Doct. ad 1. Hoc affectu debeo mihi prius velle vitam aeternam; deinde Patri, et aliis ordinate, ut notat etiam Valentia.

7 But the imperative affection, by which we will and procure a temporal good, is not ordered so strictly.

Affectus vero imperatus, quo volumus bonum temporale, et procuramus, non est adeo severe ordinatus.

8 But if the benefit regards a particular person, then the aforesaid order is well observed, other things being equal.

Quod si beneficium respiciat personam singularem, tunc bene servatur ordo praedictus, caeteris paribus.

9 Yet if the benefit regards the common utility, this is rightly to be preferred to one's own utility. Therefore he gravely admonishes that dignities, ecclesiastical benefices, and the like are not to be given out of private affection to kinsmen, but to those who better serve the universal good of the Church or of the Republic; and these are reproached in Habakkuk 1: Woe to him that buildeth Sion in bloods, and Ezek. 44: Let it suffice you, O house of Israel, that you bring in the uncircumcised into the sanctuary of God. There are reproached those who confer ecclesiastical benefices rather on their own households than on others, as the Holy Doctor observes in the last argument. Hence in the answer he says that, as to these, the order of Charity is not to be observed by reason of union, but by reason of the object, which is an absolute good, or respectively a better one; and the common good is better than the private.

Verum si beneficium respiciat utilitatem communem, haec propriae utilitati merito est praeponenda. Ideo graviter monet, ut dignitates, beneficia Ecclesiastica, et caetera huiusmodi non dentur ex affectu privato consanguineis, sed iis, qui melius inserviant bono universali Ecclesiae, aut Reipublicae; et hi reprehenduntur Habacuc primo: Vae qui aedificat Sion in sanguinibus*, et Ezech. 44*. Sufficiat vobis domus Israel, qui introducitis incircumcisos in Sanctuarium Dei. Ibi reprehenduntur, qui beneficia Ecclesiastica conferunt magis domesticis, quam aliis, ut observat S. Doct. argumento ultimo. Unde in responsione dicit, quantum ad haec non esse servandum ordinem Charitatis ratione unionis, sed ratione obiecti, quod est absolute bonum, vel respective melius; est autem melius bonum publicum, quam privatum.

Question XLI: Whether the order of charity remains in heaven

1 The Seraphic Doctor reports twofold opinions on this matter. The first is, that the same order of Charity will remain entirely in the fatherland as is on the way.

Utrum ordo CHARITATIS maneat in patria.

Geminas hac de re opiniones refert Seraphicus. Prima est, eundem penitus ordinem Charitatis mansurum in patria, qui est in via.

2 The first reason is taken from the dictate of nature, which dictates that one ought first to love oneself, then one's neighbor, and among neighbors more those who are more closely joined. But glory will be the highest perfection of nature, not its destruction.

Ratio prima sumitur ex naturae dictamine, quae dictat, prius se diligendum, quam proximum, et inter proximos plus eos, qui sunt magis coniuncti. Gloria autem erit summa perfectio naturae, non illius destructio.

[3] The second reason is taken from the perfection of glory, which regards more him in whom it is, than other like and near persons; otherwise, if all things were common, there would be no reason why we should labor to attain a greater glory by our works.

> Secunda ratio sumitur ex perfectione gloriae, quae magis respicit eum, in quo est, quam alios similes, et propinquos; alioqui si omnia essent communia; non est cur laboremus ad hoc, ut operibus maiorem gloriam adipiscamur.

[4] The third reason is consequently taken from the order of divine justice, which orders that a man rejoice more in his own merits than in those of another, since one's own merits ought to be rewarded in the one who merits, not another's. This opinion, the Holy Doctor says, is that of very many.

> Tertia ratio sumitur consequenter ex ordine divinae iustitiae, quae ordinat, ut plus de suis meritis gaudeat homo, quam de alienis, eo quod propria merita debent esse remunerata merenti, non aliena. Hanc opinionem plurimorum esse, ait S. Doctor.

[5] The second opinion is, that charity can be considered either as regards the good, which is its object, and this is the order of Charity in itself and according to its intrinsic nature: then by reason of the subject, in which it is. As to the order of Charity in itself, it remains in the fatherland; for that is essential to Charity. Hence in the fatherland one will love above all the greatest good, and consequently in due order those things that are better.

> Secunda sententia est, charitatem considerari posse, vel quoad bonum, quod est obiectum eius, qui ordo est Charitatis secundum se, et secundum intrinseca: Deinde ratione subiecti, in quo est. Quo ad ordinem Charitatis secundum se, manet in patria; ille enim est essentialis Charitati. Unde in patria maxime diliget maximum bonum, et consequenter ordinate ea, quae sunt meliora.

[6] But that order which befits Charity by reason of the underlying nature will not remain in the fatherland, because it does not befit that state: For in the state of beatitude there will be perfect obedience of nature with respect to glory, perfect conformity of our will to the Divine will, and perfect also the overflow of common joy. Because there will be perfect obedience of nature with respect to glory, nature will then be perfectly conformed to glory itself, so that just as the body will become spiritual, inasmuch as it will obey the spirit in all things, although on the way the spirit is forced to condescend to the body; so nature will be conformed in all things to the order of glory and grace, which is considered according to the differences of good, although now grace condescends to the natural affection.

> Ille vero ordo, qui convenit Charitati ratione naturae substratae, non manebit in patria, quia non competit illi statui: In statu namque beatitudinis perfecta erit obedientia naturae respectu gloriae, perfecta conformitas voluntatis nostrae ad voluntatem Divinam, perfecta etiam redundantia laetitiae communis. Quia perfecta erit obedientia naturae respectu gloriae, conformabitur tunc perfecte natura ipsi gloriae, ut sicut corpus efficietur spirituale, quatenus spiritui per omnia obtemperabit, quamvis in via cogatur spiritus corpori condescendere; sic natura per omnia conformabitur ordini gloriae, et gratiae, quae attenditur secundum differentias boni, quamvis nunc gratia condescendat affectui naturali.

[7] Again, because there will be perfect conformity of our will to the divine will, we shall not love more that which is nearer to us; but that which is more pleasing and acceptable to God, and is better; for thus also God loves.

> Rursus, quia erit perfecta conformitas voluntatis nostrae voluntati divinae, non magis diligemus illud, quod magis erit nobis propinquum; sed illud, quod plus erit Deo placitum, et acceptum, et erit melius; sic enim et Deus diligit.

8 Moreover, because there will be a perfect overflow of common joy, he will rejoice as much in the good of his neighbor as in his own; yet not with prejudice to merit; for this will be an accidental joy from the overflow of perfect Charity.

> Praeterea, quia ibi erit perfecta redundantia communis laetitiae, tantum gaudebit de bono proximi, quantum de suo; neque tamen erit cum praeiudicio meriti; nam haec erit laetitia accidentalis ex redundantia perfectae Charitatis.

9 This is what St. Anselm says in Prosol. cap. 25. In that perfect Charity of innumerable Angels and blessed men, where no one loves another less than himself, each will rejoice for the others singly no otherwise than for himself. And this opinion is confirmed, because there the offices that look to [particular ties] will cease, the necessary provision will cease, and the succor owed to those more closely joined, especially those who are the principles of our being, and all things will be united in God, the Supreme Good of all.

> Hoc est, quod ait D. Anselmus in Prosol. cap. 25. In illa perfecta Charitate innumerabilium Angelorum, et hominum beatorum, ubi nullus minus alium, quam seipsum diligit, non aliter gaudebit quisque pro singulis aliis, quam pro seipso. Et haec opinio confirmatur, quia ibi cessabunt officia spectantia, cessabit provisio necessaria, et subventio debita magis coniunctis, maxime qui sunt principia nostri esse, et omnia unientur in Deo, Summo omnium bono.

10 This opinion, the Holy Doctor says, is also that of St. August. lib. de vera religione, and of Dionysius de Divinis nominibus, of St. Bernard de diligendo Deo, cap. 7. and it is evident from what has been said. St. Thomas follows it here, and his disciples, and Tanner. Tom. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 4. dub. 1. et tom. 3. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 87.

> Hanc opinionem ait S. Doct. esse etiam D. August. lib. de vera religione*, et Dionysii* de Divinis nominibus*, D. Bernardi* de diligendo Deo, cap. 7. et patet ex dictis. Eam sequitur D. Thomas hic, et discipuli, ac Tanner. Tom. 2. disp. 1. quaest. 4. dub. 1. et tom. 3. disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 5. num. 87.

11 You will object first. As grace is the perfection of nature, so also glory: Therefore as the natural order of love is preserved on the way with charity, so it will be in the fatherland.

> Obiicies primo. Sicut gratia est perfectio naturae, ita et gloria: Ergo sicut ordo naturalis dilectionis salvatur in via cum charitate; ita erit in patria.

12 The Holy Doctor answers: that the order of nature is preserved with the imperfections of the way removed, as I said, which, although they are compatible with the imperfect charity of the way, are not compatible with the consummated charity of the fatherland.

> Respondet S. Doct. salvari ordinem naturae ablatis imperfectionibus viae, ut dixi, quae licet compatiantur Charitatem imperfectam viae, non tamen charitatem consummatam patriae.

13 You will object secondly. Order is intrinsic to Charity, otherwise there will be no Charity: Therefore, the order of Charity being removed, charity will be taken away; just as, the mode of knowing in an enigma being removed, faith is evacuated.

> Obiicies secundo. Ordo est intrinsecus Charitati, alioqui non erit Charitas: Ergo ablato ordine Charitatis, tolletur charitas; sicut ablato modo cognoscendi in aenigmate, evacuatur fides.

14 The Holy Doctor answers: by denying the parity: For the mode by which faith knows befits it essentially; but this order of charity, as to many things, arises from the imperfection of the way and of the subject for this state.

> Respondet S. Doct. negando paritatem: Nam modus, quo cognoscit fides, convenit ei essentialiter; ordo vero iste charitatis quoad multa, evenit ratione imperfectionis viae, et subiecti pro hoc statu.

15 You will object thirdly. If joy is common, and the non-Martyr there rejoices as much in the glory of the Martyr as the Martyr himself, to what end is the Martyr crowned for his martyrdom.

> Obiicies tertio. Si gaudium est commune, et tantum gaudet ibi non Martyr de gloria Martyris, quantum ipse Martyr, quorsum Martyrio emeritus est Martyr.

16 The Holy Doctor answers: that the matter of glory is indeed communicated to all; nevertheless he who is crowned has a more intense Charity, and will rejoice more, and in the Martyr has from martyrdom an increase of Charity, whereby he rejoices more.

> Respondet S. Doct. materiam quidem gloriae omnibus communicari; attamen qui emeritus est, habet intensiorem Charitatem, et magis gaudebit, et in Martyre habet ex Martyrio augmentum Charitatis, qua magis gaudeat.

17 You will object fourthly. If joy is common: Therefore you will rejoice in the salvation of all, even of those not converted by us; to what end then the Laurel of the Doctor for those converted by us?

> Obiicies quarto. Si communis est laetitia: Ergo gaudebis de salute omnium, etiam non conversorum a nobis, ut quid ergo Laurea Doctoris pro conversis a nobis?

18 It is answered, that this joy will be singular, by reason of a certain comeliness, which is a special matter of joy, which will be in the Doctor, even if it overflow unto the rejoicing-with of others, yet without prejudice to the intensity and comeliness in him who labored.

> Respondetur, hoc gaudium fore singulare, ratione cuiusdam decoris, quod est specialis materia gaudii, quae erit in Doctore, etiamsi diffundatur, quo ad congaudium aliis, sine tamen praeiudicio intensionis, et decoris in eo, qui laboravit.

19 But if you wish to follow the former opinion, the Holy Doctor teaches you to answer that these things are to be understood, other things being equal.

> Si vero priorem sententiam sequi velis, respondere te docet S. Doctor, haec intelligenda, caeteris paribus.

20 To the first; that we ought to love greater goods, say that, on the side of the object, this is true; but by reason of the unity, which is regarded by Charity, and by reason of union, the manner is altered.

> Ad primum; quod debemus diligere maiora bona, dic, ex parte obiecti hoc verum; sed ratione unitatis, quae respicitur a Charitate, et ratione unionis, modum alterari.

21 To that about conformity with the will of God, say that God does not love with a greater affection, though with a greater effect, as providence befits.

> Ad illud de conformitate cum voluntate Dei, dic, Deum non diligere maiori affectu, licet maiori effectu, ut providentiam decet.

22 To the reason from the perfection of glory, say that it does not prejudice the merits of each, which ought to be rewarded in his mind.

> Ad rationem ex perfectione gloriae, dic, eam non praeiudicare meritis cuiusque, quae debent esse in mente remuneranda.

Question XLII: Whether it is more proper to charity to love than to be loved

1 THE questions about the habit of Charity and about its order to its objects having been completed; there must now be treated of its acts.

> Utrum Charitatis sit magis proprium amare, quam amari.
> PERACTIS quaestionibus de Charitatis habitu, et ordine eius ad obiecta; agendum de actibus illius.

2 I ASSERT, that it befits Charity more to love, than to be loved.

> ASSERO, magis convenire Charitati amare, quam amari.

3 IT IS PROVED by St. Thom., because to love is an act. But Charity, since it is a virtue, has its own act, which is to love, and accordingly the act of loving befits it; to be loved, however, befits it as the good toward which Charity itself is also moved.

> PROBATUR a D. Thom. quia amare est actus. Charitas autem, cum sit virtus, habet suum actum, qui est amare, atque adeo ei competit actus amandi; amari autem convenit ei, ut est bonum, ad quod ipsa etiam Charitas movetur.

Question XLIII: Whether love is the same as benevolence

1 ST. THOMAS ASSERTS that in dilection, as it is the act of Charity, benevolence is included; but dilection, or love, adds the union of affection.

> Utrum Amor sit idem, ac Benevolentia.
> ASSERIT S. Thomas, in dilectione, ut est actus Charitatis, includi benevolentiam; sed dilectio, sive amor, addit unionem affectus.

2 IT IS PROVED, because benevolence properly is an act of the will, by which we will good to another, even without a union of affection presupposed toward him; but the love of Charity is an act of the will, by which we will good to someone, and it imports the union of the affection of the lover to the beloved, insofar namely as the lover esteems the beloved as one with himself, or as belonging to himself.

> PROBATUR, quia benevolentia proprie est actus voluntatis, quo alteri bonum volumus, etiam non praesupposita unione affectus ad ipsum; amor vero Charitatis est actus voluntatis, quo alicui bonum volumus, importatque unionem affectus amantis ad amatum, in quantum scilicet amans aestimat amatum, ut unum sibi, vel ad se pertinens.

Question XLIV: Whether God ought, and can, be loved in this life with the whole heart, the whole soul, the whole mind, and all one's strength

1 ALL the HERETICS of our time clamor that the divine law is impossible to man, even to the just. From this they further deduce that all works are mortal sins. Thus Luther, Lib. de libertate Christiana, and in assert. art. 2. 31. 32. 36. Calvin Lib. 3. Instit. cap. 14. §. 9. et in Antidoto, sess. 6. cap. 11. et Lib. 2. Instit. cap. 7. §. 5. he urges this especially concerning this precept of loving God with the whole heart, etc. Kemnitius follows in Examine, Philippus de Locis et confessione Augustana.

> An debeat, possitque DEUS in via amari ex toto corde, ex tota anima, ex tota mente, et omnibus viribus.
> HAERETICI omnes nostri temporis, legem divinam esse impossibilem homini, etiam iusto, conclamant. Hinc vero aliud deducunt, opera omnia esse peccata mortalia. Sic Lutherus, Lib. de libertate Christiana, et in assert. art. 2. 31. 32. 36. Calvinus Lib. 3. Instit. cap. 14. §. 9. et in Antidoto, sess. 6. cap. 11. et Lib. 2. Instit. cap. 7. §. 5. id maxime urget de hoc praecepto diligendi Deum ex toto corde, etc. Sequuntur Kemnitius in Examine, Philippus de Locis et confessione Augustana.

2 THE CATHOLIC Faith teaches that the Divine precepts, and especially this one of the love of God with the whole heart, are not impossible to observe.

CATHOLICA Fides docet, praecepta Divina, maxime vero hoc dilectionis Dei ex toto corde, non esse impossibilia observatu.

3 SINCE, however, I showed at length elsewhere that the Law of God is possible prima secunda, Tract. de Legibus, disp. 1. quaest. 9. and that Liberty is defended with respect to it in Tract. de anima disput. 9. quaest. 3. I shall now treat of this precept; and because in this consists the observance of the Law, it will stand proved concerning all.

QUONIAM vero Legem Dei possibilem late ostendi prima secunda, Tract. de Legibus, disp. 1. quaest. 9. et Libertatem ad eam defendi Tract. de anima disput. 9. quaest. 3. nunc de hoc praecepto agam; et quia in hoc consistit Legis observantia, manebit probatum de omnibus.

4 THEREFORE IT IS PROVED first by St. Bonavent., because: This is the greatest, and first commandment, Matth. 22. given to us by God on the way, and he commands the very manner: With the whole heart, with the whole soul, etc. Therefore it can be observed. For God would cruelly command under penalty of damnation that which is impossible. Wherefore the Holy Fathers condemn with anathema that proposition, that God commanded impossibilities, as St. Bonavent. notes in fundamentis, and the Council of Trent sess. 6. cap. 11. And this is the argument of St. John Chrysost. Hom. 8. de Poenit. where he says: By no means accuse the Lord; he does not command impossibilities, and of St. Augustine Lib. de natura et gratia; cap. 69. where he says: By the very fact that it is most firmly believed that God, who is just and good, could not have commanded impossibilities; hence we are admonished what to do in easy things, and what to ask for in difficult ones. For all things become easy to Charity, to which alone Christ's burden is light. The same is found in Lib. de peccatorum meritis, cap. 3. et 6. et Lib. de gratia, et Lib. arbitrio, cap. 16. as in Bellarmine Lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 10. et Lib. de monachis, cap. 13. Indeed a tyrant would be worse and more cruel than all, if he commanded, under penalty of eternal damnation, even to his own friends, things that are impossible. Hence St. Augustine: he would not damn a lazy servant, if he commanded things that could in no way be done.

PROBATUR ergo primo a D. Bonavent. quia: Hoc est maximum, et primum mandatum, Matth. 22. a Deo datum nobis in via, et modum ipsum imperat: Ex toto corde, ex tota anima, etc. Ergo potest observari. Crudeliter enim Deus sub poena damnationis praeciperet id, quod est impossibile. Quare SS. Patres propositionem illam anathemate damnant, Deum praecepisse impossibilia, ut advertit S. Bonavent. in fundamentis, et Concilium Trident. sess. 6. cap. 11. Estque argumentum S. Ioannis Chrysost. Hom. 8. de Poenit. ubi ait: Nequaquam Dominum accuses; haud mandat impossibilia, et D. Augustini Lib. de natura et gratia; cap. 69. ubi ait: Eo ipso, quo firmissime creditur, Deum iustum, et bonum, impossibilia non potuisse praecipere; hinc admonemur, et in facilibus, quid agamus, et in difficilibus quid petamus. Omnia quippe facilia fiunt Charitati, cui uni Christi sarcina levis est. Idem habet Lib. de peccatorum meritis, cap. 3. et 6. et Lib. de gratia, et Lib. arbitrio, cap. 16. apud Bellarminum Lib. 5. de Iustificatione, cap. 10. et Lib. de monachis, cap. 13. Sane Tyrannis omnibus deterior, atque crudelior foret, si praeciperet sub poena aeternae damnationis, etiam suis amicis ea, quae impossibilia sunt. Hinc D. Augustinus: servum pigrum non damnaret, si ea quae nullo modo fieri poterant, imperaret.

5 BUT IT IS PROVED secondly, that this precept of the love of God and of neighbor is possible, Psalm. 118. I have run the way of thy commandments, when thou didst enlarge my heart. Philip. 4. I can do all things in him who comforteth me. Indeed we acknowledge that the precepts of God are observable not by the bare powers of free will, but by the grace of God, as I showed Tract. de gratia, disp. 1. quaest. 11. 12. 13. et 14.

> PROBATUR vero secundo, hoc praeceptum dilectionis Dei, et proximi esse possibile, Psalm. 118. Viam mandatorum tuorum cucurri, cum dilatasti cor meum. Philip. 4. Omnia possum in eo, qui me confortat. Sane praecepta Dei non nudis viribus arbitrii, sed Dei gratia agnoscimus observabilia, ut ostendi Tract. de gratia, disp. 1. quaestionibus 11. 12. 13. et 14.

6 THE Scriptures show this, witnesses, that the commandments are in fact observed by those who love, whom God calls friends. Ioan. 14. He that loveth me, will keep my word, as the Holy Doctor observes there. Rom. 13. He that loveth his neighbor, hath fulfilled the Law. Galat. 5. The whole Law is fulfilled in one word: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. But this is said, because the neighbor is loved in order to God; whence the precept of the love of God is also fulfilled, as I said quaest. 29. with the Seraphic Doctor; et prima secundae, Tract. de gratia, disp. 1. quaest. 12. Ioan. 13. By this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another. Nor could we become friends of God, if we could not love. For above John says 15. You are my friends, if you do the things that I command you. But what he commands, he explains there: This is my commandment, that you love one another. In Deuteronomy 30. you have a splendid testimony: The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed: that thou mayest love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

> ID ostendunt Scripturae, testes, mandata de facto observari ab his, qui diligunt, quos amicos vocat Deus. Ioan. 14. Qui diligit me, sermonem meum servabit, ut observat ibi S. Doctor. Rom. 13. Qui diligit proximum, Legem implevit. Galat. 5. Omnis Lex in uno sermone impletur: Diliges proximum tuum, sicut te ipsum. Hoc autem dicitur, quia amatur proximus in ordine ad Deum; unde et praeceptum dilectionis Dei impletur, ut dixi quaest. 29. cum Seraphico; et prima secundae, Tract. de gratia, disp. 1. quaest. 12. Ioan. 13. In hoc cognoscent omnes, quia discipuli mei estis, si dilectionem habueritis ad invicem. Nec possemus amici Dei fieri, si non possemus diligere. Supra enim ait Ioannes 15. Vos amici mei estis, si feceritis, quae ego praecipio vobis. Quid autem praecipiat, explicat ibi: Hoc est praeceptum meum, ut diligatis invicem. Deuteronomii 30. praeclarum habes testimonium: Circumcidet Dominus Deus tuus cor tuum, et cor seminis tui: ut diligas Dominum Deum tuum in toto corde tuo, et in tota anima tua.

7 DAVID also says Psalm. 118. With my whole heart have I sought thee, and 3 Kings 14. Thou wast not as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and followed me with all his heart, doing that which was pleasing in my sight, and Act. XIII. I have found a man according to my own heart, who shall do all my wills.

> DAVID etiam dicit Psalm. 118. In toto corde meo exquisivi te, et Lib. 3. Reg. 14. Non fuisti sicut servus meus David, qui custodiuit mandata mea, et secutus est me in toto corde suo, faciens quod placitum esset in conspectu meo, et Act. XIII. Inueni virum secundum cor meum, qui faciet omnes voluntates meas.

8 Of Josias, 4 Kings XXIII. There was no king like him before him, who returned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength.

> De Iosia Lib. IV. Regum XXIII. Similis illi non fuit ante eum Rex, qui reuerteretur ad Dominum in omni corde suo, et in tota anima sua, et in uniuersa virtute sua.

9 Of Asa, and the people, 2 Paral. XV. it is said: With their whole will they sought the Lord, and found him.

> De Asa, et populo, secundo Paral. XV. dicitur: In tota voluntate sua quaesierunt Dominum, et inuenerunt.

10 Of Josue it is said, cap. XI. As the Lord had commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Josue, and he fulfilled all things: he passed not by any of the commandments, nor even one word, that the Lord had commanded Moses. Nor is there doubt that the same may be said of Abraham, Moses, Samuel, and others.

> De Iosue dicitur, cap. XI. Sicut praeceperat Dominus Moysi seruo suo, ita praecepit Moyses Iosue, et ille uniuersa compleuit: Non praeteriit de uniuersis mandatis, nec unum quidem verbum, quod iusserat Dominus Moysi. Nec dubium, quin eadem dici queant de Abraham, Moyse, Samuele, et aliis.

11 In the new Testament, Luke I. it is said of Zachary, and Elizabeth: They were both just before God, walking in all the commandments and justifications of the Lord without blame.

> In testamento nouo, Lucae I. dicitur de Zacharia, et Elisabeth: Erant iusti ambo ante Deum, incedentes in omnibus mandatis, et iustificationibus Domini sine querela.

12 Of the Apostles Ioan. XVII. Thine they were, and thou gavest them to me: and they have kept thy word, and they are called friends in Luke XII.: But I say to you, my friends. Ioan. XV. You are my friends; and yet he had said there that only those are friends who keep the commandments.

> De Apostolis Ioan. XVII. Tui erant, et mihi eos dedisti: et sermonem tuum seruauerunt, et Lucae XII. vocantur amici: Dico autem vobis amicis meis. Ioan. XV. Vos amici mei estis; et tamen dixerat ibi, solos eos esse amicos, qui praecepta seruant.

13 But these the sectaries do not solve, answering that these things were said by non-imputation: yet the Scriptures plainly say that they observed the commandments of the Lord.

> Haec vero non soluunt sectarii, respondentes, dicta esse per non imputationem: Scripturae enim praeclare dicunt, illos obseruasse mandata Domini.

14 Therefore the Holy Doctor, upon those words 13. Ioan. By this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another, observes, that the execution of Charity is the testimony of the discipleship of Christ, as St. Gregory says Lib. XX. moral. cap. IX. Of Charity, I say, not imputed, but of which 1 John, cap. III. Let us not love in tongue, but in deed, and in truth. Let us love one another, as he hath given commandment unto us, and Rom. XI. Loving one another with the charity of brotherhood. And upon 15. Ioan., upon those words. These things I command you, that you love one another. Greater Charity than this no one hath, than that he lay down his soul for his friends. But he says that we do these things by that Charity which is poured forth in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, who is given to us, namely by an internal gift cooperating, not by an extrinsic imputation. Upon this testimony also the Council of Trent sess. VI. c. VII. gravely infers with St. Bonavent. that Justification is not made by imputation alone. And upon those words of Luke 1: They were both just before God, he observes, that they were such, and were asserted inwardly in the eyes of God. For the just are such within. Therefore Wisd. V. The just shall live for ever, and their thought is with the Most High: and therefore of this, Genes. VI. Noe was a just and perfect man in his generations, he walked with God. 1 Kings XVI. For the Lord looketh on the heart. So also Ezech. 4 Kings XX. he says: Remember how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart.

> Ideo S. Doctor ad ea verba XIII. Ioan. In hoc cognoscent omnes, quia discipuli mei estis, si dilectionem habueritis ad inuicem, obseruat, Charitatis executionem esse testimonium discipulatus Christi, ut ait D. Gregorius Lib. XX. moral. cap. IX. Charitatis inquam non imputatae, sed de qua Ioan. prima, cap. III. Non diligamus lingua, sed opere, et veritate. Diligamus alterutrum, sicut mandatum dedit nobis, et Rom. XI. Charitate fraternitatis inuicem diligentes. Et ad XV. Ioan. ad ea verba. Haec mando vobis, ut diligatis inuicem.

Maiorem Charitatem, nemo habet, quam ut animam suam ponat quis pro amicis suis. Ea autem Charitate ait, haec nos operari, Quae diffusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum Sanctum, qui datus est nobis*, nempe dono interno cooperante, non extrinseca imputatione. Hoc testimonio etiam Concilium Trident. sess. VI. c. VII. Iustificationem non mera imputatione fieri grauiter cum D. Bonauent. infert. Et ad ea verba Lucae primo:* Erant autem iusti ambo ante Deum*, obseruat, tales fuisse, et asseri interius in oculis Dei. Iusti enim tales sunt intus. Ideo Sap. V.* Iusti in perpetuum viuent, et cogitatio illorum apud Altissimum: et ideo de hoc, Genes. VI. Noë vir iustus, atque perfectus fuit in generationibus suis, cum Deo ambulauit. Primo Reg. XVI. Dominus enim intuetur cor. Sic et Ezech. IV. Reg. XX. dicit: Memento quomodo ambulauerim coram te in veritate, et in corde perfecto.

15 Therefore also David was a man according to the heart of God, as is said in the places alleged. But God looketh on the heart, 1 Kings XVI. as above; which reason the Seraphic Doctor observes at the place cited. For whoever truly does not observe one commandment, even if he keeps the others, is become guilty of all, as James says, chapter II.

Ideo et David vir erat secundum cor Dei, ut dicitur locis allegatis. Deus autem intuetur cor, primo Reg. XVI. ut supra; quam rationem obseruat loco cit. Seraphicus Doctor. Nam qui vere non obseruat unum praeceptum, etiamsi caetera seruet, factus est omnium reus*, ut ait Iacobus, capite II.*

16 David himself, Psalm. CXVIII. I was directed to all thy commandments; I have run the way of thy commandments, as the Holy Doctor observes upon that place of the Psalm. He also says Psalm. LVIII. without iniquity have I run, and directed my steps. And the Apostle Philip. II. I have not run in vain. Then indeed, when thou didst enlarge my heart, namely softened beforehand by thy grace.

David ipse, Psalm. CXVIII. Ad omnia mandata tua dirigebar; viam mandatorum suorum cucurri*, ut obseruat S. Doctor ad eum Psalmi locum. Ait et Psalm. LVIII.* sine iniquitate cucurri, et direxi. Et Apostolus Philip. II. Non in vacuum cucurri. Tunc sane, cum dilatasti cor meum, tua scilicet gratia prius emollitum.

17 For truly the heart is softened, as is said 2 Paral. XXXIV. Because thou hast heard the words of the volume, and thy heart is softened, and thou art humbled before God. Heb. XIII. It is best that the heart be established by grace. These things indeed intimate the internal motions. All of which, and the other things said above, the Holy Doctor observes, as if he had foreseen the insanities of the Sectaries.

Vere enim cor emollitur, ut dicitur II. Paral. XXXIU. Quoniam audisti verba voluminis, et emollitum est cor tuum, et humiliatus es in conspectu Dei. Heb. XIII. Optimum est gratia stabilire cor. Haec sane internas motiones innuunt. Quae omnia, aliaque supradicta obseruat S. Doctor, quasi Sectariorum insanias praeuidisset.

18 It is proved thirdly by St. Bonavent.: To love God with the whole heart, is to love him sweetly, wisely, and strongly, from St. Bernard, serm. XX. in Cant. and from St. Augustine. It is to love without error, without contradiction, and without forgetfulness. Lib. I. de doctrina Christiana, cap. XXII. but all this can be in the state of the way: Therefore it is also commanded. See other things in Bellarmine: To this also recur what I said tom. IV. de actibus hum. disp. XVII. quaest. X. ad proposit. I.

Probatur tertio a D. Bonauent. Diligere Deum ex toto corde, est diligere dulciter, sapienter, et fortiter*, ex D. Bernardo, serm. XX. in Cant. et ex D. Augustino.* Est diligere sine errore, sine contradictione, et sine obliuione. Lib. I. de doctrina Christiana, cap. XXII. sed hoc totum potest in statu viae: Ergo etiam tenetur. Alia vide in Bellarmino: Huc etiam recurrunt, quae dixi tom. IV. de actibus hum. disp. XVII. quaest. X. ad proposit. I.

19 The heretics object first. This precept cannot be fulfilled perfectly in this life, from St. Augustine Lib. contra Caelestinum, after XVI. resp. where he says: When there is any concupiscence within, God is not loved with the whole soul in every way. And Lib. de spiritu et litt. last chapter he says: To that life now immortal belongs: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc. But to this; Let not sin reign in your mortal body, etc. To that, Thou shalt not covet: To this, Go not after thy concupiscences. Similar things St. Bernard says in sermon L. in Cant. and St. Thom. II. II. quaest. XLIV. art. VI. et quaest. CLXXXIV. art. III.

> Obiiciunt primo haeretici. Praeceptum hoc non potest in vita impleri perfecte, ex D. Augustino Lib. contra Caelestinum, post XVI. resp. ubi ait: Cum inest aliquid concupiscentiae, non omnimode ex tota anima diligitur Deus. Et Lib. de spiritu et litt. cap. ultimo ait: Ad illam vitam iam immortalem pertinet: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo, etc. Ad hanc autem; Non regnet peccatum in vestro mortali corpore, etc. Ad illam, Non concupisces: Ad istam, Post concupiscentias tuas non eas. Similia dicit D. Bernardus sermone L. in Cant. et D. Thom. II. II. quaest. XLIV. art. VI. et quaest. CLXXXIU. art. III.

20 One must first see what is meant by those various expositions of the precept. First indeed Deuter. VI. it is had thus: Thou shalt love with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy strength. Matth. XXII. it is said: With all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind. Marc. cap. XII. With all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, with all thy virtue. Lucae X. with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength, and with all thy mind.

> Oportet primo videre, quid significetur illis variis expositionibus praecepti. Primo enim Deuter. VI. sic habetur: Diliges ex toto corde, ex tota anima, et ex tota fortitudine tua. Matth. XXII. dicitur: Ex toto corde, ex tota anima, ex tota mente. Marc. cap. XII. Ex toto corde, ex tota anima, ex tota mente, ex tota virtute. Lucae X. ex tota corde, ex tota anima, ex omnibus viribus, et ex tota mente.

21 Some of the Fathers judge these to be different, and therefore have tried to show their distinction, namely that Soul signifies the vegetative part, Heart the sensitive, Mind the intellectual, as Bellarmine reports cap. XI. or by Heart, the natural powers, that is the vegetative; by Soul, the animal ones, that is the senses; by Mind, the rational powers. So Theophylactus, and almost Gregory of Nyss. in Tostatus.

> Quidam ex Patribus existimant, ea esse diuersa, ideo conati sunt distinctionem eorum ostendere, ut, videlicet Anima significet partem vegetatiuam, Cor sensitiuam, Mens intellectiuam, ut refert Bellarminus cap. XI. vel per Cor, vires naturales, idest vegetatiuam; Per Animam, animales, idest sensus; per Mentem, vires rationales. Ita Theophylactus, et fere Gregorius Nyss. apud Tostatum.

22 It is better expounded to the mind of the Fathers by St. Bonavent. dist. XXVII. dub. III. thus: That although Charity immediately regards the act of the Concupiscible, around which it first consists; nevertheless it regards the acts of those powers as disposing (as Tostatus also says:) Hence all the powers of the soul are in a manner ordered to that dilection itself, as to that which has the character of what is complete with respect to all the powers; and because the higher powers of the soul are three, therefore three conditions are added. Further, because the ternary of the powers of the soul can be distinguished in a twofold way, such that one of those modes does not disagree with the other: These conditions, regarding the powers of the soul in the act of loving, are distinguished in a twofold manner. For in one way the powers of the soul are distinguished according as the image consists in them, and they are said to be three potencies in the mind, namely; Memory, Intelligence, and Will: And so according to those three powers, three conditions are added, of which one regards the intelligence, namely with the whole heart, as the Gloss says; another the will, namely with the whole soul, the third the memory, namely with the whole mind, and so these three conditions are assigned by Matthew, and are expounded by St. Augustine Lib. I. de doctrina Christ. cap. XXII. With the whole heart, that is with the whole intellect without error. With the whole soul, that is with the whole will without contradiction. With the whole mind, that is with the whole memory without forgetfulness. In another way the powers of the soul are distinguished into Rational, Concupiscible, and Irascible; and according to this three conditions are added, of which one regards the Rational, namely with the whole heart. Another the Concupiscible, namely with the whole soul. The third the Irascible, namely with the whole strength, and so they are assigned in Deuteronomy, and are expounded by Bernard, serm. 20. in Cant. With the whole heart, that is, wisely. With the whole soul, that is sweetly; With the whole strength, that is strongly, so that we be not seduced by fallacies, not led away by blandishments, not broken by injuries, and to these three can be reduced those three that are touched upon: Out of a pure heart, and a good conscience, and faith unfeigned. Nor is there any repugnance in these, because the Irascible and the Memory are strengthened in the act: and therefore one virtue is reformative of both, and one dower perfective of both, and it regards one principally, and the other consequently: Therefore, where it is said in Deuteronomy with all thy strength, in Matthew it is said: with all thy mind. And this is the reason why this condition with all thy mind, is placed last. See Gregory of Nyss. Lib. de creatione hominis, cap. 8. Theophylactus, and Anselm in commentariis, cap. 22. Matth. St. Augustine, St. Bernard loco cit. and Tostatus in 22. Matth. quaest. 171. where he explains thus, that with the whole heart, etc. signifies the internal powers; with the whole strength, the executive ones, which is the exposition of St. Bonavent. ad 10. Lucae. For to a perfect manner of loving God is required that we refer to him all thoughts, all affections, all operations. Therefore Deuter. 6. it is said: with all thy heart, thoughts; with all thy soul, affections: with all thy strength, he understands operations, and executive powers: And because intellections are both cogitative of the heart and memorial of the mind; Therefore Luke, and Matthew add with all thy mind, in which he unfolded the Law, and because, whoever refers what is within, namely the act of memory, intelligence, and will to God, consequently refers works; therefore in these three is closed the reference of all powers in Luke. See the Holy Doctor, referring almost all the expositions.

> Melius ad mentem Patrum explicatur a D. Bonauent. dist. XXVII. dub. III. sic: Quod quamuis Charitas immediate respiciat actum Concupiscibilis, circa quem primo consistit; tamen actus illarum virium respicit ut disponentes (ut ait etiam Tostatus:) Unde omnes vires animae quodammodo ordinantur ad ipsam dilectionem, sicut ad id, quod habet rationem completam respectu omnium virium; et quoniam vires superiores animae sunt tres, ideo tres apponuntur conditiones. Rursus, quia ternarius virium animae dupliciter habet distingui, ita ut unus illorum modorum non discordet ab alio: Haec conditiones circa actum diligendi respicientes vires animae duplici modo distinguuntur. Uno enim modo distinguuntur vires animae, secundum quod in eis consistit imago, et dicuntur in mente esse tres potentiae, nempe; Memoria, Intelligentia, et Voluntas: Et sic secundum istas tres vires, tres apponuntur conditiones, quarum una respicit intelligentiam, scilicet ex toto corde*, ut ait Glossa; altera voluntatem, scilicet,* ex tota anima*, tertia memoriam, scilicet* ex tota mente*, et sic assignantur istae tres conditiones a Matthaeo, et exponuntur a D. Augustino Lib. I. de doctrina Christ. cap. XXII.* Ex toto corde, idest ex toto intellectu sine errore. Ex tota anima, idest ex tota voluntate sine contradictione. Ex tota mente, idest ex tota memoria sine obliuione. Alio modo distinguuntur vires animae in Rationalem, Concupiscibilem, et Irascibilem; et secundum hoc tres apponuntur conditiones, quarum una respicit Rationalem, idest ex toto corde. Alia Concupiscibilem, nempe ex tota anima. Tertia Irascibilem scilicet ex tota fortitudine*, et sic assignantur in Deuteronomio, et explicantur a Bernardo,* serm. 20. in Cant. Ex toto corde*, idest, sapienter.* Ex tota anima*, idest dulciter;* Ex tota fortitudine*, idest fortiter, ut non seducamur fallaciis, non abducamur blanditiis, non frangamur iniuriis, et ad haec tria reduci possunt illa tria, quae tanguntur:* Ex corde puro, conscientia bona, et fide non ficta. Nec est in istis aliqua repugnantia, quia Irascibilis, et Memoria confortantur in actu: et ideo una virtus est utriusque reformativa, et una dos utriusque perfectiva, et unam respicit principaliter; alteramque ex consequenti: Itaque, ubi dicitur in Deuteronomio ex tota fortitudine*, In Matthaeo dicitur:* ex tota mente. Et haec est ratio, cur haec conditio ex tota mente*, ultimo loco ponitur. Vide Gregorium Nyss.* Lib. de creatione hominis, cap. 8. Theophylactum, et Anselmum in commentariis, cap. 22. Matth. D. Augustinum, D. Bernardum loco cit. et Tostatum in 22. Matth. quaest. 171. ubi sic explicat, ut ex toto corde*, etc. dicat vires internas;* ex tota fortitudine*, executivas, quae est expositio D. Bonavent.* ad 10. Lucae. Quia enim ad perfectum modum diligendi Deum requiritur, ut referamus in eum omnes cogitationes, omnes affectiones, omnes operationes. Ideo Deuter. 6. dicitur: ex toto corde*, cogitationes;* ex tota anima*, affectiones:* ex tota fortitudine*, operationes, et vires executivas intelligit: Et quia intellectiones sunt cogitativae cordis, et memorativae mentis; Ideo Lucas, et Matthaeus addunt* ex tota mente*, in quo Legem explicuit, et quia, qui refert quod interius est, scilicet actum memoriae, intelligentiae, et voluntatis in Deum, per consequens refert opera; ideo in his tribus clauditur relatio omnium virium apud Lucam. Vide S. Doctorem, omnes fere expositiones referentem.*

23 HE INTIMATES, however, that the clause with all thy powers is inclusive of all, and that all signify the same thing, so that we love God according to our powers, as Bellarmine also notes; but that many things are expressed as expressions of greater grace. So also think Hilary, Jerome, Chrysost. ad 22. Matth. Ambrose ad cap. 10. Lucae. That this sense is more conformable to Scripture, Bellarmine says here, and Maldonatus ad 22. Matth. where he says that St. Augustine wishes this Lib. 1. cap. 22. Tom. 3. de doctrina Christ. saying: But when he says, With the whole heart, whole soul, whole mind, he leaves no part of our life that ought to be empty, and as it were to give place, so that we might wish to enjoy it with another thing; but whatever comes into the mind to be loved, is carried thither, whither the impulse of the whole dilection runs. From which he infers the impiety of Calvin, who says that God thus commands impossibilities; since he commands only that we love him according to our powers, helped by grace, never failing.

INNVIT vero particulam, ex omnibus viribus esse inclusivam omnium, atque omnia idem significate, ut pro viribus amemus Deum, ut notat etiam Bellarminus; multa vero exprimi maioris gratiae expressionis. Sic etiam sentiunt Hilarius, Hieronymus, Chrysost. ad 22. Matth. Ambrosius ad cap. 10. Lucae. Hanc sensum esse magis Scripturae conformem ait Bellarminus hic*, et Maldonatus* ad 22. Matth. ubi ait, id velle D. Augustinum Lib. 1. cap. 22. Tom. 3. de doctrina Christ. dicentem: Cum autem ait, Toto corde, tota anima, tota mente, nullam vitae nostrae partem reliquit, quae vacare debeat, et quasi locum dare, ut alia re velit frui, sed quicquid in animum diligendum venerit, illuc rapiatur, quo totius dilectionis impetus currit. Ex quibus impietatem Calvini infert dicentis, Deum sic praecipere impossibilia; cum solum praecipiat, ut pro viribus amemus, adiutis gratia, nunquam deficiente.

24 BUT AS TO that clause repeated (with all) Bonaventure reports two expositions. The first is, that the totality of affections and powers is commanded; so that this precept of Charity, which is the end of the Law, and the complement of perfection, is gravely imposed as to the means, and the end is indicated, which is perfection; yet so, that if we do not attain the perfection of the end in this life, we do not sin; just as, if a King should command the army: Take the city; the soldiers would not be punished if they did not attain the end, but if they did not fight. But if they fought faithfully, it would suffice to fulfill the precept. Therefore SS. Augustine, Bernard, and Thomas say, that the means are here commanded, and the end indicated, which cannot be perfectly obtained in this life, and accordingly that this precept is fulfilled most perfectly only in the other life; yet so, that place is given to the counsels, which add other means besides the precepts. Tannerus praises this exposition disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 4. num. 76. where he concludes, that this precept is fulfilled in order to the end, even if the end cannot be attained here.

QUO vero ad illam particulam replicatam (ex toto) refert D. Bonavent. duas expositiones. Altera est, praecipi totalitatem affectuum, et virium; ita ut praeceptum hoc Charitatis, quae est finis Legis, et complementum perfectionis, imponatur graviter quo ad media, et indicetur finis, quae est perfectio; ita vero, ut si perfectionem finis non assequamur in hac vita, non peccemus; sicuti, si Rex praeciperet exercitui: Capite urbem*; non essent puniendi milites, si finem non assequerentur, sed si non pugnarent. Si autem pugnarent fideliter, satis esset ad implendum praeceptum. Igitur dicunt SS. Augustinus, Bernardus, et Thomas, praecipi hic media, et indicari finem, qui in hac vita non potest perfecte obtineri, atque adeo praeceptum hoc solum in altera vita perfectissime adimpleti; ita vero dari locum consiliis, quae alia media, praeter praecepta, apponunt. Hanc expositionem laudat Tannerus* disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 4. num. 76. ubi concludit, impleri hoc praeceptum in ordine ad finem, etiamsi finis nequeat hic attingi.

25 THE SECOND exposition, which is more consonant with Scripture, as Bellarmine also notes, and which St. Bonaventure receives, is; that by this precept: with the whole heart, there is not commanded every act of the heart, or every possible intensity, so that we do nothing with the heart but love God; but only, that we love God with such love, that in our soul we prefer nothing to him, or make anything equal to him, and accordingly that by this precept the end is not contained, but only the means, moderated in this sense as to appreciation; whence you have, that this precept is observed: provided the last end is placed in God, not in another thing, by turning away from God lethally.

SECUNDA expositio, quae est magis Scripturae consona, ut notat etiam Bellarminus, quamque recipit S. Bonaventura, est; hoc praecepto: ex toto corde*, non praecipi omnes actus cordis, vel omnem intensionem possibilem, ita ut nihil corde agamus, quam Deum diligere; sed solum, ut amemus Deum tali amore, ut in anima nostra nihil ei praeferamus, vel aequemus, atque adeo hoc praecepto non contineri finem, sed solum media, hoc sensu moderata quo ad appreciationem; ex quo habes, servari hoc praeceptum: dummodo in Deo ponatur ultimus finis, non in alia re, avertendo se a Deo lethaliter.*

26 THAT this manner of Charity, indeed, is intended, and nothing more; and that it is more consonant with the Scriptures, is proved; because this precept is asserted from the Scriptures to be easy, Deuter. 10. And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but that thou fear the Lord thy God, and love him, and serve him with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and cap. 13. The Lord your God tempteth you, that it may be made manifest whether you love him or not with all your heart, and with all your soul, and Lucae 10. to the lawyer asking, What doing shall I possess eternal life? The Lord answered: What is written in the Law, how readest thou? he said: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc. And the Lord: This do, and thou shalt live. Christ gives the rule: If you keep my commandments, you shall abide in my love, as Bassaeus notes num. 8.

HUNC sane modum Charitatis esse intentum, et nil amplius; esseque Scripturis magis consonum, probatur; quia hoc praeceptum ex Scripturis asseritur facile, Deuter. 10. Et nunc Israel, quid Dominus Deus tuus petit a te, nisi ut timeas Dominum Deum tuum, et diligas eum, ac servias ei in toto corde tuo, et in tota anima tua*, et* cap. 13. Tentat vos Dominus Deus vester, ut palam fiat, utrum diligatis eum an non in toto corde, et in tota anima vestra*, et* Lucae 10. quaerenti Iurisperito, Quid faciendo vitam aeternam possidebo? Dominus respondit: In Lege quid scriptum est, quomodo legis? ait ille: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde, etc. Et Dominus: Hoc fac, et vives. Christus dat regulam: Si praecepta mea servaveritis, manebitis in dilectione mea*, ut notat Bassaeus* num. 8.

27 THEN the Lord promised that he would bring it about, that in this life we should fulfill this precept Deuter. 30. alleged, and Hierem. 24. I will give them a heart, that they may know me, because I am the Lord: and they shall be to me a people, and I will be to them a God: because they shall return to me with their whole heart.

> DEINDE Dominus promisit, se facturum, ut in hac vita adimpleremus hoc praeceptum Deuter. 30. allegato, et Hierem. 24. Dabo eis cor, ut sciant me, quia ego sum Dominus: et erunt mihi in populum, et ego ero eis in Deum: quia revertentur ad me in toto corde suo.

28 THAT MANY also observed this precept, the many Scriptures above testify.

> MULTOS etiam observasse hoc praeceptum, testantur scripturae multae supra.

29 FINALLY the Fathers testify with the fullest consent that nothing impossible is commanded us. See Origen homil. 9. in Iosue. Basil on that: Attend to thyself. Hilary in Psalm. 118. upon those words: Thy commandment is exceedingly broad. Jerome Lib. 3. cont. Pelagianos, in St. Bonaventure here. Augustine Lib. de natura, et gratia, cap. 69. and in Psalm. 56. Bernard serm. 50. in Cant. where he inclines rather to this latter opinion, which is that of St. Bonavent., as Bellarmine notes. This they commonly follow in Aragonium q. 26. art. 2. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 3.

> TANDEM Patres summo consensu testantur, nil impossibile praecipi nobis. Vide Origenem homil. 9. in Iosue. Basilium in illud: Attende tibi. Hilarium in Psalm. 118. ad ea verba: Latum mandatum tuum nimis. Hieronymum Lib. 3. cont. Pelagianos*, apud D. Bonaventuram hic. Augustinum* Lib. de natura, et gratia, cap. 69. et in Psalm. 56. Bernardum serm. 50. in Cant. ubi in hanc posteriorem sententiam magis propendet, quae est D. Bonavent. ut notat Bellarminus. Hanc sequuntur communiter apud Aragonium q. 26. art. 2. Tannetum disp. 2. quaest. 3. dub. 3.

30 From this exposition Bellarmine gathers with St. Bonavent. ad argumenta, that venial sins do not contravene this precept, because they do not turn away from the last end.

> Ex hac expositione colligit Bellarminus cum S. Bonavent. ad argumenta*, huic praecepto non contraveniri peccatis venialibus, quia non avertunt ab ultimo fine.*

31 THEN, that inordinate involuntary movements of concupiscence are not contrary to the same precept, even in grave matters; because, since Charity stands in the will, the movements of the appetite that are not voluntary are not opposed to it. From which also tumble down the tumultuary opinions of the sectaries in Bellarmine Lib. 5. de amissione gratiae, cap. 10. where they clamor that concupiscence is indomitable, and all its acts mortal, even if involuntary; which they strive to prove from the confession of the Apostle to Rom. 6. 7. et 8. but I repelled the infamy of these in prima secunda, Tract. 4. De peccat. disp. 1.

> DEINDE non adversari eidem praecepto motus inordinatos involuntarios concupiscentiae, etiam circa materias graves; quia, cum Charitas stet in voluntate, non opponuntur ei motus appetitus, qui non sint voluntarii. Ex quo etiam ruunt opiniones tumultuariae sectariorum apud Bellarminum Lib. 5. de amissione gratiae, cap. 10. ubi concupiscentiam indomabilem conclamant, omnesque eius actus mortales, etiamsi involuntarii; quod errare nituntur ex confessione Apostoli ad Rom. 6. 7. et 8. sed horum infamiam repuli prima secunda, Tract. 4. De peccat. disp. 1.

32 INDEED, by Poll, it is indomitable in the sectaries, who with loosened reins break out into every crime, desperate more than impetuous.[1] It is indomitable in Luther, who violated the nun Catharina of Berna, ravished from the monastery, and led her into a pseudo-marriage. It is indomitable in Calvin, who, sunk in unspeakable and most filthy abominations, deserving to be burned with the fire of Pentapolis, was consumed with the putrefaction of worms, just as Luther, in the bosom of the woman of Bern, breathed forth his soul into hell. It is indomitable in Theodore Beza, that Antichrist of the Gauls, who, inflamed toward tender boys, was first nurtured in robes of saffron, and at last embraced filth; who so stirred, excited, kindled the Huguenot seditions in that most noble kingdom, that that warlike nation drowned the glories of its triumphs, once borne back distinguished over barbarians, in the slaughter and blood of its own citizens.

[1] Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'desperati magis quam quam concitati' — 'quam' duplicated; rendered with a single 'quam'.

> EA Edepol indomita est sectariis, qui laxis habenis ad omne facinus irrumpunt, desperati magis quam concitati. Indomita est Luthero, qui et Monialem Catharinam Bernensem, e monasterio raptam, violavit, et in pseudo-coniugium duxit. Indomita est Calvino, qui infandis, et spurcissimis abominationibus demersus, igne Pentapolis cremandus, putredine vermium consumptus est, sicuti et Lutherus in sinu Bernensis animam inferno efflavit. Indomita est Theodoro Bezae, illi Galliarum Antechristo, qui in teneros pueros incensus, ut prius nutriebatur in croceis, postremo amplexatus est stercora; qui seditiones Hugonoticas in regno illo nobilissimo adeo commovit, excitavit, incendit, ut Gens illa bellatrix praeclatos de barbaris olim revectos gloriose triumphos, in propriorum civium stragibus, et sanguine merserit.

Question XLV: Whether some measure is to be kept in divine love

[1] D. Bonaventure teaches that an act of virtue can have a measure in three ways. First, by limitation in itself; and in this sense every act of created virtue has a measure; for every created virtue is finite and limited. Second, an act is said to have a measure by the aggregation of circumstances; and in this sense all the moral virtues and meritorious acts have a measure; for no act is praiseworthy unless endowed with the requisite circumstances. Third, in this sense measure indicates a mean between extremes, which are the Exceeding and the Falling-short; and by this reckoning the Cardinal Virtues have a measure, or a mean, between excess and deficiency.

> An Divinae dilectionis sit aliquis modus habendus.
> Tribus modis posse actum virtutis habere modum docet D. Bonavent. Primo per limitationem in seipso; et hoc sensu omnis actus virtutis creatae habet modum; omnis enim virtus creata finita est, et limitata. Secundo dicitur actus habere modum per aggregationem circumstantiarum; et hoc sensu modum habent omnes virtutes morales, et actus meritorii; quia nullus actus est laudabilis, nisi praeditus debitis circumstantiis. Tertio sensu modus indicat medietatem inter extrema, quae sunt Excedens, et Deficiens; et hac ratione virtutes Cardinales habent modum, seu medium inter superfluum, et diminutum.

[2] ¶ Since, then, CHARITY is a created and gratuitous virtue, it has the measure of finiteness due to creatures, and the measure imposed by circumstances, so that we love God above all things, and for himself, and according to our strength: but Charity does not have that measure which consists in standing in the middle between vicious extremes, because, being a Theological virtue with an infinite object, it never tends too much toward God, who is infinite, true, good, etc.

> ¶ Quoniam ergo Charitas est virtus creata, et gratuita, habet modum finitatis, debitae creaturis, et modum impositum circumstantiarum, ut diligamus Deum super omnia, et propter se, et pro viribus: at modum illum, qui est standi in medio inter extrema vitiosa, non habet Charitas, quia cum sit virtus Theologica, habens obiectum infinitum, nunquam nimium in Deum tendit, qui est infinitus, verus, bonus, etc.

[3] I assert, therefore, that Charity has no measure from its tending toward the object.

> Assero igitur, Charitatem non habere modum ex tendentia in obiectum.

4 It is proved by D. Bonaventure, first, from D. Bernard On loving God, at the beginning, where he says: The cause of loving God is God; the measure is to love without measure.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. primo ex D. Bernardo de diligendo Deo, initio, ubi ait: Causa diligendi Deum, Deus est; modus est, sine modo diligere.

5 Second, because the reason for loving is infinite goodness, and the last end, which has no measure; for an end, especially the ultimate end, is not measured by other things as an end, but it is itself the measure of the means, which are measured in order to the end. D. Thomas also uses this argument, at the place cited. Valencia, disp. 3, question 5, point 2.

> Secundo*, quia ratio diligendi est bonitas infinita, et ultimus finis, non habens modum; nam finis, maxime ultimat; non enim finis, ut finis, mensuratur ab aliis, sed ipse est mensura mediorum, quae mensurantur in ordine ad finem. Hoc argumento utitur etiam D. Thom.* loco cit. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 5. puncto 2.

6 Third: The motion of Charity appraises according to the dignity of the object; but the object of Charity, which is God, is of infinite goodness, and appraisable without measure: Therefore.

> Tertio*: Motus Charitatis est appretiativus secundum dignitatem obiecti; sed obiectum Charitatis, quod est Deus, est infinitae bonitatis, atque sine modo appretiabilis: Ergo.*

7 Fourth: Whatever has a measure is vitiated by excess; but no one is blameworthy, however intensely he loves God: Therefore.

> Quarto*: Quidquid habet modum, vitiatur per excessum; sed nullus est vituperabilis, quantumuis Deum diligat intense: Ergo.*

8 I assert, second, that Charity has a measure according to the other measures brought forward above.

> Assero secundo, Charitatem habere modum, iuxta alios modos supra allatos.

9 It is proved by D. Bonaventure, first, because he ordered all things in number, weight, and measure, as is had in Wisd. 9.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. primo, quia Omnia disposuit in numero, pondere, et mensura, ut habetur Sap. 9

10 Second: Every finite act of Charity has a measure; every act of ours is finite: Therefore it has a measure.

> Secundo*: Omnis actus Charitatis finitus habet modum: omnis actus noster est finitus: Ergo habet modum.*

11 Third: Measure, Species, and Order are compared to one another as One, True, and Good; but Good presupposes True, and True presupposes One: Therefore by equal reason Order presupposes species, and species presupposes measure; but the motion of Charity toward God is ordered: Therefore it is measured.

> Tertio*: Modus, Species, et Ordo ad se comparantur, ut Unum, Verum, et Bonum; sed Bonum praesupponit Verum, et Verum praesupponit Unum: Ergo pari ratione Ordo praesupponit speciem, et species praesupponit modum; sed motus Charitatis in Deum est ordinatus: Ergo modificatus.*

12 Another argument he brings forward, which he does not approve. Wisdom is above Charity, as Bernard says in the Book on the love of God, chapter 2, where he says: Love advances into Charity, and Charity into wisdom:

but wisdom must have a measure, as the Apostle says, Rom. 12: Not to be wise beyond what it behooves to be wise, etc. Therefore Charity itself also ought to have a measure.

> Aliud argumentum affert, quod non approbat. Sapientia est supra Charitatem, ut ait Bernardus Lib. de amore Dei, cap. 2. ubi ait: Amor proficit in Charitatem, et Charitas in sapientiam: sed sapientiam oportet habere modum, ut ait Apostolus, Rom. 12. Non plus sapere, quam oportet sapere, etc. Ergo et ipsa Charitas debet modum habere.

13 The Seraphic Doctor answers that Wisdom, insofar as it means savory knowledge, or the savor of knowledge, is not vitiated by excess; and in this sense wisdom from savor is above Charity; but insofar as it is said from sapere, to be wise, it can have the excess of curiosity: But in this sense it is not above Charity.

> Respondet S. Doctor, Sapientiam, ut dicit sapidam scientiam, seu saporem scientiae, non vitiari per excessum; et sic sapientia a sapore, est super Charitatem; at vero ut dicitur a sapere*, potest habere excessum curiositatis: Sed hoc sensu, non est super Charitatem.*

Question XLVI: Whether charity ought to be enlarged in heaven

1 I assert first, that the acts of Charity will be more intense in the fatherland.

> An Charitas debeat in patria dilatari.
> Assero primo, Charitatis actus fore intensiores in patria.

2 It is proved by the Seraphic Doctor, first. When the habit is enlarged, the acts are intensified; but the habit will be widened and enlarged in the fatherland; for God will dwell in the heart in a more excellent way through consummate Charity, due to the fatherland: Therefore.

> Probatur a S. Doctore, primo. Ampliato habitu, intenduntur actus; sed habitus in patria dilatabitur, et ampliabitur; quia excellentiori modo habitabit Deus in corde per consummatam Charitatem, debitam patriae: Ergo.

3 Further: Affection follows cognition; but in the fatherland there will be more perfect cognition: Therefore also more intense affection.

> Deinde*: Affectio sequitur cognitionem; sed in patria erit perfectior cognitio: Ergo et intensior affectio.*

4 I assert second, that Charity is widened in the fatherland not by the multitude of those to be loved, because then we shall have no enemies to love; nor shall we love the reprobate; yet then we shall have more known predestined ones to love; for then our love will embrace as well those who are in the fatherland as those who are on the way, yet to arrive at the fatherland.

> Assero secundo, dilatari Charitatem in patria, non diligendorum multitudine, quia tunc non habebimus inimicos, quos diligamus; neque diligemus praescitos; attamen tunc plures habebimus cognitos praedestinatos, quos diligamus; tunc enim dilectio nostra complectetur tam eos, qui sunt in patria, quam eos, qui sunt in via, ad patriam tamen perventuri.

5 I assert third, that Charity is to be widened by friendly affection. See the Seraphic Doctor. For God will then be loved with a broader and more friendly affection, in himself and in his creatures: For Charity will most affectionately enkindle in itself God and all the blessed.

> Assero tertio, dilatandam Charitatem affectu amicabili. Vide Sanctum Doctorem. Nam ampliori et amicabiliori affectu Deus tunc diligetur, in se, et in suis creaturis: Charitas enim sibi Deum, et omnes beatos affectuosissime inviscerabit.

Question XLVII: Whether it is more meritorious to love an enemy than a friend

1 The Seraphic Doctor admonishes that these two loves can be taken in two ways. First as they proceed from different habits, of which one renders one capable only of loving friends; the other, however, is extended also to enemies. In this way this second habit is more perfect, as Augustine says in the Enchiridion, chapter 73. But if we compare these acts, as proceeding from the same Charity, thus in a certain way they are equal as to substantial merit; as to the vigor of the acts, however, and the accidental reward, the motion of love toward friends exceeds the other as to fervor and frequency. As to difficulty, however, the motion of love toward enemies is purer and more difficult.

> Utrum sit magis meritorium diligere inimicum, quam amicum.
> Dupliciter sumi posse hos duos amores, admonet S. Doctor. Primo pro ut sunt a diversis habitibus, quorum alter habiles reddat solum ad amicos diligendos; alter vero extendatur etiam ad inimicos. Sic perfectior est habitus hic secundus, ut ait Augustinus in Enchir. cap. 73. Si vero comparemus istos actus, pro ut ab eadem Charitate procedunt, sic quodammodo sunt aequales quoad meritum substantiale; quoad vigorem vero actuum, et praemium accidentale motus dilectionis erga amicos, excedit alium quo ad fervorem, et frequentationem. Quoad difficultatem vero, motus dilectionis in inimicos est purior, et difficilior.

2 SIMPLY speaking, however, the motion of love toward friends is probably better, by reason of the object, which is better and more closely joined to oneself and to God; whence it is a greater sin to hate a friend, as D. Thomas also teaches, article 7, and the Theologians commonly, as Valencia relates, disp. 3, question 5, point 3, against Durandus, disp. 30, question 2.

> SIMPLICITER tamen motus dilectionis in amicos probabiliter est melior, ratione obiecti, quod est melius, et magis coniunctum sibi, et Deo; unde maius est peccatum odisse amicum, ut docet etiam D. Thom. art. 7. et communiter Theologi, ut refert Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 5. punct. 3. contra Durandum disp. 30. quaest. 2.

3 I ASSERT first, probably, with this opinion, that the love of friends is more perfect.

> ASSERO primo probabiliter cum hac sententia, perfectiorem esse dilectionem amicorum.

4 IT IS PROVED by the Seraphic Doctor, first, from D. Ambrose, as related, question 30. He answers, however, that Ambrose is not speaking of degrees of perfection, but of obligation.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore, primo ex D. Ambrosio, relato quaest. 30. Respondet tamen, non servare Ambrosium gradus perfectionis; sed obligationis.

5 SECOND, because the love of friends is more like the love of God, who loves those who love him, as is had in Prov. 8. Nevertheless he answers that the Charity of God toward us is commended more [toward us] as enemies, Rom. 5.

> SECUNDO*, quia dilectio amicorum, est similior dilectioni Dei, qui diligit diligentes se, ut habetur.* Proverb. 8. Attamen respondet, commendari Charitatem Dei magis in nos inimicos, Rom. 5.

6 THIRD, because it is more fervent and more frequent. He answers, however, that it is true, given an equality of difficulty.

> TERTIO*, quia est ferventior, et frequentior. Respondet tamen, verum esse, data paritate difficultatis*

7 FOURTH, because it has more of equity. He answers, however, that it is more equitable by the exigency of merits, not on the part of the one loving.

QUARTO, quia plus habet de aequitate. Respondet tamen aequius esse ex meritorum exigentia, non ex parte diligentis.

8 FIFTH, because thus a man ought to exercise himself more in the love of an enemy, if this were more perfect. He answers, however, that this is true as to exercise, not by reason of duty.

QUINTO, quia sic deberet homo se in dilectione inimici magis exercere, si haec esset perfectior. Respondet tamen, id verum ad exercitium, non ratione debiti.

9 He asserts second, that it is probable that love of enemies is also more perfect.

Asserit secundo, probabile esse etiam amorem inimicorum esse perfectiorem.

10 IT IS PROVED by the Seraphic Doctor, first, from Matt.: If you love those who love you, what reward shall you have? He answers, however, that this is true with enemies excluded, who are commanded to be loved.

PROBATUR a S. Doctore, primo ex Matth. Si diligitis eos, qui vos diligunt, quam mercedem habebitis? Respondet tamen, id verum, exclusis inimicis, qui diligi praecipiuntur.

11 SECOND. To love enemies is a precept of the Gospel, Matt. 7: But I say to you: love your enemies: Therefore it is of greater perfection. He answers that this is true as to difficulty; by reason, however, of the good, it is better to love a friend.

SECUNDO. Diligere inimicos est praeceptum Evangelii, Matth. 7. Ego autem dico vobis: diligite inimicos vestros: Ergo maioris perfectionis. Respondet, id verum, quo ad difficultatem; ratione tamen, boni, melius esse diligere amicum.

12 THIRD, where there is greater victory, there is greater virtue, which is concerned with difficult things. He answers that this is true, other things being equal; but love of friends is better from the subject.

TERTIO ubi est maior victoria, ibi maior virtus, quae est circa difficilia. Respondet, id verum esse caeteris paribus; at amor amicorum est melior ex subiecto.

13 FOURTH: Where love is purer, separated from the flesh, there is greater perfection. The Seraphic Doctor answers in the same way, if other things are equal, which here they are not. From these things this opinion is left probable on either side.

QUARTO*: Ubi amor purior a carne seiunctus, ibi maior perfectio.* Respondet tamen S. Doctor eodem modo, si sint caetera paria, quae hic non sunt. Ex his probabilis utrinque relinquitur haec opinio.

Question XLVIII: Whether a man established in however small a charity is bound to undergo death for Christ

1 I ASSERT first, that in necessity, either of upholding justice or of dying, everyone is bound to undergo death for Christ.

An homo, in quantulacumque CHARITATE constitutus, teneatur mortem subire pro CHRISTO.

ASSERO primo, in necessitate, vel deferendi iustitiam; vel moriendi, unumquemque teneri mortem subire pro Christo.

2 IT IS PROVED first by St. Bonaventure, on Luke 9: Whoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him the Son of man shall be ashamed, when he shall come in his majesty.

> PROBATUR primo a S. Bonavent. Lucae 9. Qui me erubuerit, et meos sermones, hunc filius hominis erubescet, cum venerit in maiestate sua.

3 FURTHER it is proved by the Seraphic Doctor, from 1 John 3: Because he laid down his soul for us, and we ought to lay down our souls for the brethren.

> DEINDE probatur a S. Doctore, ex prima Ioan. 3. Quoniam ille pro nobis animam suam posuit, et nos debemus pro fratribus animas ponere.

4 THIRD: All are more bound to love God than all created things: Therefore if one must be lost, we ought to squander all created things.

> TERTIO*: Plus tenentur omnes Deum diligere, quam omnia creata: Ergo si alterum amittendum est, debemus totum creatum profundere.*

5 I assert second. Outside of necessity, it is a work of supererogation.

> Assero secundo. Extra necessitatem, esse opus supererogationis.

6 IT IS PROVED by the Seraphic Doctor, first. John 15: Greater love than this no one has, than that a man lay down his soul for his friends: Therefore to undergo death for Christ is of the highest perfection; but the imperfect are not bound to heroic works: Therefore.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore, primo. Ioan. 15. Maiorem Charitatem nemo habet, quam ut animam suam ponat quis pro amicis suis: Ergo mortem obire pro Christo, est perfectionis maximae; sed imperfecti non tenentur ad heroica opera: Ergo.

7 FURTHER he proves it from the Gloss on Rom. 6., asserting the same.

> DEINDE id probat ex Glossa ad Rom. 6. id asserente.

8 THIRD the Seraphic Doctor proves it, from D. Augustine, tractate 5 on the First Epistle of John. This is perfect Charity, that a man be ready to die for the brethren. But the Seraphic Doctor infers that Prelates are bound to a greater perfection than subjects are bound; for they are bound to lay down their souls for all. John 10: The Good Shepherd gives his soul for his Sheep. Which the Seraphic Doctor observes also on John, chapter 10.

> TERTIO id probat S. Doctor, ex D. Augustino tract. 5. in primam Ioannis. Perfecta Charitas haec est, ut quis paratus sit pro fratribus mori. Infert autem S. Doctor, Praelatos teneri ad maiorem perfectionem, quam teneantur subditi; nam tenentur pro omnibus animas ponere. Ioan. 10. Bonus Pastor animam suam dat pro Ovibus suis. Quae observat S. Doctor etiam ad Ioannis cap. 10.

9 THEREFORE in time of pestilence they are bound to expose themselves to danger of life, in administering the necessary Sacraments, as the Doctors commonly assert. But Diana admonishes, Treatise 4 on the Sacraments, resolution 167, that in time of pestilence a moribund person can be anointed with a long rod with Extreme Unction, and resolution 168, that one part can be anointed quickly, saying: By this holy unction, etc. may the Lord pardon you whatever you have sinned by sight, hearing, etc. So also Sylvester, part 3, question 32, article 2, and the Doctors of Louvain, in the years 1573 and 1588, as related by Octavius Tricornicensis, Apostolic Nuncio in Germany, and in the Directory of Ecclesiastical Discipline of Chappeau, chapter 5, question 30. Diana adds that he himself would anoint rather most rapidly, without a cross, one eye, one ear, etc.

ITAQUE tempore pestis tenentur periculo vitae se exponere, ministrando Sacramenta necessaria, ut communiter asserunt Doctores. Admonet vero Diana Tract. 4. de Sacramentis resol. 167. posse tempore pestis inungi virga oblonga moribundum Extrema unctione et resol. 168. posse unam partem inungi celeriter, dicendo: Per istam sanctam unctionem, etc. remittat tibi Dominus quidquid visu, auditu, etc. deliquisti. Ita etiam Sylvest. 3. part. quaest. 32. art. 2. et Doctores Lovanienses, anno 1573. et 1588. apud Octavium Tricornicensem, Nuntium Apostolicum in Germania, et in Directorio Ecclesiasticae disciplinae Chappeau, cap. 5. quaest. 30. Addit Diana, se potius velocissime uncturum, absque cruce, unum oculum, unam aurem, etc.

Question XLIX: Whether those having perfect charity are bound to fulfill the things that are of perfection

1 PERFECTION consists in Charity, which is the bond of perfection, as is said: Colossians 3.

An habentes CHARITATEM perfectam, teneantur ea, quae sunt perfectionis, implere.

PERFECTIO in Charitate consistit, quae est vinculum perfectionis*, ut dicitur:* Colossenses 3.

2 The Seraphic Doctor notes five kinds of perfections.

ADVERTIT S. Doctor quinque genera perfectionum.

3 THE FIRST is necessary, of which Matt. 5: Be you perfect, as also your heavenly Father is perfect, as Bellarmine also notes, on monks, chapter 9.

PRIMA est necessaria, de qua Matth. 5. Estote perfecti, sicut et Pater vester caelestis perfectus est*, ut advertit etiam Bellarminus* de monachis, cap. 9.

4 THE SECOND perfection is of counsel, which keeps the Evangelical Counsels, of which Matt. 19: If you will be perfect, go, sell all that you have, and give to the poor.

SECUNDA perfectio est consilii, quae consilia Evangelica servat, de qua Matth. 19. Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende universa, quae habes, et da pauperibus.

5 THE THIRD is the perfection of prelacy, or due from the office of Prelate. Of this Luke 6: Every one shall be perfect, if he be as his master.

TERTIA est perfectio praelationis, seu debita ex officio Praelati. De hac Lucae 6. Perfectus omnis erit, si sit sicut magister eius.

6 THE FOURTH is the perfection due from good example, enjoined upon us. Of this Genesis 6: Noë was a just and perfect man in his generations. To avoid scandal.

QUARTA est perfectio debita ex bono exemplo, nobis iniuncto. De hac Genes. 6. Noë vir iustus, atque perfectus in generationibus suis fuit. Ad vitandum scandalum.

7 THE FIFTH is the perfection of tranquillity, by which the best works are chosen. Such is that of which it is said, 1 John 4: Perfect Charity casts out fear, and by which Blessed Teresa vowed always to do those things which she understood to be more perfect.

QUINTA est perfectio tranquillitatis, qua eliguntur optima opera. Talis est, de qua dicitur prima Ioan. 4. Perfecta Charitas foras mittit timorem*, et qua Beata Theresia vovit, semper ea facere, quae magis perfecta intellexisset.*

8 Therefore a man perfect in the first perfection is bound to the precepts. Thus Matt. 19: If you will enter into life, keep the commandments. By which he shows that by the sole observance of the commandments one arrives at eternal life. But in this he is not bound to that perfection of guarding every single word, of which James 3: He who offends not in word: the same is a perfect man.

> Igitur homo perfectus prima perfectione tenetur ad praecepta. Sic Matth. 19. Si vis ad vitam ingredi, serva mandata. Quo ostendit, sola observatione mandatorum perveniri ad vitam aeternam. Hic vero non tenetur ad eam perfectionem, cavendi omne verbulum, de qua Iacobi 3. Qui non offendit in verbo: hic perfectus est vir.

9 But one perfect by reason of the obligation of a vow is bound to the promises.

> Perfectus autem ratione obligationis voti tenetur ad promissa.

10 Likewise a Prelate to the works of his office to be executed, etc. See St. Bonaventure.

> Praelatus item ad opera sui officii exequenda, etc. Vide S. Bonaventuram.

Question L: How, and when, the precept of the love of God binds

1 This precept is twofold: one negative, of hatred and aversion from God; and this always binds. The other affirmative, of the act of love.

> Quomodo, et quando obliget praeceptum dilectionis DEI.
> Duplex est hoc praeceptum: alterum negativum odii, et aversionis a Deo; et hoc semper ligat. Alterum affirmativum actus amoris.

2 Although from what has been said it is had by what bond this precept binds, nevertheless I shall add some things for greater clarity. I have already shown that God is to be loved above all things: The reason is, because the object of love is goodness; but since God is the highest goodness, he ought to be loved above all things appraisingly, even if we are pressed more by the efficacy of intention toward sensible things. See Valencia, disp. 3, question 19, point 1, and this includes the negative and the affirmative precept.

> Quamvis ex dictis habeatur, quo vinculo obliget hoc praeceptum, tamen aliqua apponam ad maiorem claritatem. Iam ostendi, diligendum Deum super omnia: Ratio est, quia obiectum amoris est bonitas; cum autem Deus sit summa bonitas, debet super omnia aestimative amari, esto efficacia intentionis magis premamur rebus sensibilibus. Vide Valentiam disp. 3. quaest. 19. puncto 1. et hoc includit negativum, et affirmativum praeceptum.

3 That God is also to be loved supernaturally I have shown: For the love by which we are carried toward God is said to be of Faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. 1. As to the TIME, therefore; First I suppose that in this life this precept is not observed most perfectly, as I said, question 44. That it can, however, be observed according to what is enjoined upon us in this life, was shown in the question cited.

> Debere etiam amari Deum supernaturaliter ostendi: Nam dilectio, qua ferimur in Deum, dicitur ex Fide non ficta 1. Timot. 1. Quoad Tempus igitur; Primo suppono, quomodo in hac vita non observetur perfectissime hoc praeceptum, ut dixi quaest. 44. Posse vero secundum id, quod nobis iniunctum est in hac vita observari, ostensum est quaest. citata.

4 There were some who said that this precept in no way binds anyone at any time of this life to elicit an act of charity; but the Apostolic censure of Alex. VII marked them, as we saw, tom. 4 on human acts, disp. 17, on conscience, question 10, section 1.

> Fuere nonnulli, qui dixere, hoc praeceptum nullo modo obligare aliquo vitae huius tempore ad actum charitatis eliciendum; verum illos censura Apostolica notavit Alex. VII. ut vidimus tom. 4. de actib. human. disp. 17. de conscient. quaest. 10. sect. 1.

5 The first time, then, is when a man arrives at the years of discretion and perceives his obligation to love God and to serve him. I do not urge, however, that in the first instant he is bound, according to the opinion of D. Thomas, prima secundae, question 89, article 6, as I defer to the following question.

Primum autem tempus est, cum homo pervenit ad annos discretionis, et animadvertit suam obligationem amandi Deum, eique serviendi. Non tamen urgeo, in primo instanti teneri secundum sententiam D. Thom. prima secundae, quaest. 89. art. 6. ut differam quaest. sequenti.

6 The second time is when an adult receives baptism, as Sotus rightly judged, Book 1 on nature and grace, chapter 22, Valencia, at the place cited, even if Bassaeus contradicts it, V. Charitas, num. 9.

Secundum tempus est, cum quis adultus suscipit baptismum, ut recte censuit Sotus Lib. 1. de natura, et gratia, cap. 22. Valentia loco cit. et si repugnet Bassaeus V. Charitas, num. 9.

7 The third is when one is bound to have contrition. So Nauarr. and Caietan, as related by Valencia, loc. cit.

Tertium est, cum quis tenetur habere contritionem. Ita Nauar. et Caietan. apud Valentiam loc. cit.

8 The fourth time is when someone receives a singular benefit from God, as Sotus probably judges, Book 2 on Justice and Law, question 3, article 10, and Valencia, loc. cit. For this the law of friendship seems to require.

Quartum tempus est, cum aliquis a Deo accipit singulare beneficium, ut probabiliter censet Sotus Lib. 2. de Iust. et Iure, quaest. 3. art. 10. et Valentia loco cit. Hoc enim lex amicitiae exigere videtur.

9 The fifth time is while the undergoing of Martyrdom impends, as Sotus and Valencia say.

Quintum tempus est, dum imminet subeundum Martyrium, ut aiunt Sotus, et Valentia.

10 The sixth time is while the precept presses of defending the violated honor of God. So Valencia and Nauarr., as related by him.

Sextum tempus est, dum praeceptum urget defendendi honorem Dei violatum. Ita Valentia et Nauar. apud eum.

11 The seventh is the time of death. So the authors alleged, and commonly with Bassaeus.

Septimum est tempus mortis. Ita allegati, et communiter apud Bassaeum.

12 But although ignorance may excuse, nevertheless Valencia admonishes that it is right to accuse oneself of this in confession.

Tametsi autem ignorantia possit excusare, tamen monet Valentia, rectum esse de hoc se accusare in confessione.

13 Bassaeus adds, num. 9, that it binds at other times by the judgment of the prudent, with Azor, tom. 1, book 9, chapter 4.

Addit Bassaeus num. 9. obligare aliis temporibus iudicio prudentis, cum Azor tomo 1. lib. 9. cap. 4.

Question LI: Whether a man is bound at the first instant of the use of reason to turn to God

[1] The state of the use of reason begins when discretion between good and evil works appears; which is reckoned to be the seventh year.

> An teneatur homo in primo instanti usus rationis ad DEUM converti.
> Status usus rationis incipit, cum apparet discretio inter bona, et mala opera; qui censetur septimo anno.

[2] The first opinion is that of D. Thomas, here assertive; almost all his disciples follow him; yet some depart from him, who call that opinion too severe and difficult to believe, as Alvar. notes, disput. 191. Moreover, his followers do not agree on the manner of conversion. Some wish him bound to elicit an act of the love of God above all things. Others judge it sufficient to turn to what is morally good. Some compel one to turn to God as a supernatural end. Others say it suffices to turn to God as a natural end, for instance the Creator, etc.

> Prima opinio est D. Thomae hic assertiva; eum sequuntur omnes fere discipuli; aliqui tamen ab eo recedunt, qui eam sententiam nimis severam, et creditu difficilem dicunt, ut notat Aluar. disput. 191. Porro et asseclae non conveniunt in modo conversionis. Aliqui volunt, teneri elicere actum amoris Dei super omnia. Alii censent, sufficere converti ad bonum honestum. Aliqui cogunt converti ad Deum, ut finem supernaturalem. Alii, sufficere converti ad Deum, ut finem naturalem, puta Creatorem, etc.

[3] The second opinion is that of D. Bonaventure, in 4. dist. 21. art. 1. quaest. 1. at the end, that no such precept exists. Scotus follows him, 2. dist. 21. quaest. 1., and all the disciples gathered by Master in 2. dist. 4. quaest. 3. Vulpecula, art. ult. de peccat. Poncius disp. 31. de praecept. charit. quaest. 1., and all the Nominalists: Gabriel, etc. Durandus, Richardus, Paludanus, and almost all the Moderns, as gathered by Arriaga, tomo 3. disput. 48. sect. 7.; also Suarez, Vasquez disp. 149. cap. 1., Valentia, Sanchez, Conchinus, Amicus, Auersa, Granadus, Corduba, Lorca. And it is common outside the School of D. Thomas. Bassaeus, num. 10. explicat, holds that one is bound when he has acknowledged the debt of serving God, or shortly after. Hence he exhorts parents, parish priests, and confessors to instruct them that they were created by the Lord to serve him, to love him, keep his commandments, and aspire to beatitude.

> Secunda sententia est D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 21. art. 1. quaest. 1. in fine*, non adesse tale praeceptum. Eum sequuntur Scotus* 2. dist. 21. quaest. 1. et omnes discipuli apud Mastrium in 2. dist. 4. quaest. 3. Vulp. art. ult. de peccat. Poncius disp. 31. de praecept. charit. quaest. 1. et omnes Nominales, Gabriel, etc. Dur. Richardus, Paludanus, et fere omnes Moderni apud Arriagam tomo 3. disput. 48. sect. 7. Suarez, Vasquez disp. 149. cap. 1. Valentia, Sanchez, Conchinhus, Amicus, Auersa, Granadus, Corduba, Lorca. Estque communis extra Scholam D. Thom. Bassaeus num. 10. explicat*, teneri aliquem cum agnovit debitum Deo serviendi, vel paulo post. Ideo hortatur, parentes parochos, et confessarios, ut erudiant, eos esse creatos a Domino, ut ei serviant, eum ament, praecepta servent, et ad beatitatem aspirent.*

[4] I assert, with this opinion, that no such precept is given.

> Assero cum hac sententia, non dari tale praeceptum.

[5] The principal foundation is this: I did not know sin except through the Law, as the Apostle says. But no such express precept for this time is to be found, nor any promise of God of necessary help for that instant; nor do they agree on what the conversion is that is commanded: for even the Thomists differ among themselves. For if it is not required at once of the sinner, why do they require it of one habitually converted by grace, such as the baptized?

> Praecipuum fundamentum est. Non cognovi peccatum nisi per Legem*, ut ait Apostolus: At non est invenire tale praeceptum expressum pro hoc tempore, aut Dei promissio de auxilio necessario pro eo instanti dando; neque invenient, quae conversio sit praecepta: nam et Thomistae inter se discrepant. Si enim non exigitur illico a peccante, cur exigent ab habitualiter converso per gratiam, qualis est baptizatus?*

6 Therefore, by keeping the commandments a man is saved, as is said, Matth. 19. But the first commandment is: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, etc. But this precept does not bind at every moment; for it is not there expressed. Why then in the first instant, in which he is baptized and endowed with Charity? Thus the Saintly Doctor indicates in 3. dist. 30. quaest. 3.

> Igitur servando mandata, salvatur homo, ut dicitur Matth. 19. Primum autem mandatum est: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde*, etc. At hoc praeceptum non ligat pro omni momento; non enim ibi exprimitur. Cur ergo in primo instanti, cum in eo sit baptizatus, Charitate praeditus? Ita indicat S. Doctor in* 3. dist. 30. quaest. 3.

7 The Thomists have no testimony to oppose, except the precept of conversion from sin, which is beside the point.

> Thomistae nullum habent testimonium, quod opponant, nisi praeceptum conversionis a peccato, quod non facit ad rem.

8 Hence it follows that one in the first use of reason can sin venially, and if he is not baptized, depart with original and actual venial sin; either because he can first have an imperfect use of reason and sin venially with full cognition, or advertence; or because, even if such a precept were given, it can happen that he omits it through venial ignorance and inadvertence.

> Hinc sequitur, posse aliquem in primo usu rationis peccare venialiter, et si non est baptizatus, decedere cum originali, et actuali veniali; sive quia potest primo habere usum rationis imperfectum, et venialiter peccare ex plena cognitione, seu advertentia; sive quia, etsi daretur tale praeceptum, potest esse, ut omittat ex veniali ignorantia, et inadvertentia.

9 You will object. The Council of Florence makes room only for the damned who die with original sin alone, or with actual mortal sin alone.

> Obiicies. Concilium Florentinum ponit locum pro solis damnatis decedentibus cum solo originali, vel cum solo actuali mortali.

10 I answer: the Council explains only the ordinary modes, to which the others are reduced: for it can happen that an infidel dies with original and mortal sin. It can also happen that one dies with actual venial sins alone, and mortal ones. Thus it does not enumerate all cases adequately, but the intention was to declare that a different place is assigned to the damned from sin merely contracted, and from sins committed.

> Respondeo*, Concilium explicare solum modos ordinarios, ad quos alii reducuntur : Nam potest esse, ut infidelis decedat cum originali, et mortali. Potest etiam esse, ut aliquis decedat cum solis actualibus venialibus, et mortalibus. Ita non omnes adaequate recenset, sed intentio fuit declarare, diversum locum damnati assignari e solo contracto peccato, et ex commissis.*

11 You will object secondly: Innocent III, cap. Maiores de Bapt., teaches that original sin cannot be remitted to adults who are asleep or insane, as it is to infants through Baptism without their own consent, because original sin cannot be remitted without mortal sin: therefore he supposes that an adult having original sin has mortal sin also.

> Obiicies secundo. Innocent. III. cap. Maiores de Bapt. docet, non posse adultis dormientibus, et amentibus dimitti originale; sicut parvulis per Baptismum sine proprio consensu, quia non potest dimitti originale sine mortali : Ergo supponit, adultum habentem originale, habere etiam mortale.

12 It is answered: the Pontiff commands this because it can easily happen that an adult, long delayed without baptism, has sinned lethally through the force of concupiscence, since no one living long without Baptism can rein in temptations; yet the Pontiff does not suppose this; nor is it shown that in the opinion of D. Thomas this is supposed, for it can happen that such a one in the first instant of the use of reason turned himself to God, even if he could not afterwards be baptized.

> Respondetur, Pontificem id praecipere, quia facile potest esse, ut adultus, diu moratus sine baptismo, ex vi concupiscentiae lethali deliquerit, quia nemo potest diu sine Baptismo vivens fraenare tentationes; attamen id non supponit Pontifex; et neque in sententia D. Thomae id supponere ostenditur, quia potest esse, ut is primo instanti usus rationis se converterit ad Deum, etsi non potuerit postea baptizari.

13 You will say: Innocent, in the preceding section, says that an infant, because he did not sin by his own consent, did not need that consent for justification through baptism; he teaches otherwise of the sleeping adult: therefore he supposes that one having original sin has also mortal sin, committed by his own act.

> Dices Innocentius §. praecedent. ait, parvulum, quia non peccavit proprio consensu, non egere illo ad iustificationem per baptismum; secus docet de adulto dormiente : Ergo supponit, habentem originale, habere etiam mortale, actu suo commissum.

14 It is answered: by denying the consequence: both because he speaks cautiously, only of the case in which he has mortal sin on this head; and because in another respect the adult ought to will Baptism. Therefore that argument is not adequate for every adult needing his own consent for Baptism. Wherefore Medina says ineptly that the opinion of D. Thomas is supposed by the Council of Florence and by Innocent.

> Respondetur, negando consequentiam : Tum quia loquitur caute, solum casu, quo habeat peccatum mortale ex hoc capite; et quia in alio debet adultus velle Baptismum. Itaque illa ratio non est adaequata pro quolibet adulto, egente proprio consensu ad Baptismum. Quare inepte Medina dicit, sententiam D. Thomae supponi a Concilio Florent. et Innocentio.

15 Suppose, however, they do suppose mortal sin together with original sin: whence do the Thomists prove that it came about through omission of that act?

> Esto autem supponant, mortale cum originali; undenam probant Thomistae, illud evenisse ex omissione illius actus?

Question LII: How, and when, the precept of the love of the neighbor binds

1 We explained above the manner: to love one's neighbour as oneself, not equally, but similarly. First on the side of the end, in order to God. Second on the side of the object and the rule of good love. Third on the side of the reason for loving, that he love him for the good of the neighbour, as the reason of friendship requires.

> Quomodo, et quando obliget praeceptum dilectionis proximi.

Modum supra explicuimus, esse diligere proximum, sicut seipsum, non aequaliter, sed similiter. Primo ex parte finis in ordine ad Deum. Secundo ex parte obiecti, et regulae bonae dilectionis. Tertio ex parte rationis diligendi, ut propter bonum proximi diligat, ut exigit ratio amicitiae.

2 The time, however, is how often we are bound to do good, and when it would be necessary for avoiding sins against the neighbour, especially hatred, etc. See Valentia, puncto 2.

Tempus vero est, quoties tenemur benefacere, et quando necesse esset ad vitanda peccata in proximum, maxime odii, etc. Vide Valentiam puncto 2.

3 I append here a charming doubt. The desires of death of those from whom inheritances are expected are usually insinuated. These, indeed, are mortal, says Navarr. man. c. 15. num. 10., and he cites all, because the life of the neighbour is a good higher than riches. But others say it is not necessary to repel them, but that they are licit: so Bassaeus, V. char. num. 23., citing Sa, V. Charitas, num. 8.; Azor p. p. lib. 3. cap. 12. quaestio 2.; Sancius select. disp. 2. num. 9.; Palaus part. 1. tract. 6. de char. disp. 4. part. 1. num. 11.: "so that you do not cooperate in death." Bassaeus proves it, because only a useful good is desired; but death, if God wills it: yet these things are frivolous, and therefore to be passed over.

Appono hic lepidum dubium. Solent desideria mortis eorum, a quibus expectantur haereditates, insinuari. Haec sane esse mortifera, ait Navar. man. c. 15. num. 10. et omnes allegat, quia vita proximi est bonum altius divitiis. Enim vero alii dicunt non esse necesse ea pellere, sed licita esse, ita Bassaeus V. char. num. 23. adducens Sa V. Charitas, num. 8. Azor p. p. lib. 3. cap. 12. quaestio 2. Sancium select. disp. 2. num. 9. Palaum part. 1. tract. 6. de char. disp. 4. part. 1. num. 11. modo non coopereris morti. Probat Bassaeus; quia solum cupitur bonum utile; mors vero, si Deus velit : Sed haec frivola sunt, ideo praetermittenda.

Disputation IX: On the Internal Effects of Charity: Joy, Peace, and Mercy

[1] Among the chief internal effects of Charity are enumerated Joy, Peace, and Mercy. And indeed, since a man is sometimes made sluggish in the pursuits of devotion and virtue because of weariness of Divine things, it is necessary that he be made eager and agile toward them by the affection of joy, whereby he may take delight in good works and loathe evil. Likewise, since man, being changeable amid many things, is troubled while he wavers on the sea of this world, Charity makes him tranquil and serene with Peace, subjecting the flesh pacified to the Spirit, and the spirit appeased to God. Similarly, from Charity is born Mercy, whereby a man reckons the miseries of others as his own, and either relieves them corporally or compassionates them spiritually; for since Charity is above all unitive, it transfers into itself all things of one's neighbours, whether good or evil, and strives to rejoice in them or to drive them away; wherefore mercy is twofold, as will be said below, in figure of which Solomon made a twofold little door of olive wood at the entrance of the Oracle, as the Seraphic Doctor has it, in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. But these things must be inquired into further.

> De effectibus internis Charitatis, GAUDIO, PACE, et MISERICORDIA.
> Inter praecipuos internos Charitatis effectus enumerantur Gaudium, Pax, et Misericordia. Et quidem cum homo pigritetur aliquando ad devotionis, et virtutis studia ob taedium Divinorum, necesse est, ut alacer, et agilis ad illa affectu gaudii reddatur, quo iucundetur in bonis operibus, et mala fastidiat. Item cum homo mobilis circa plurima turbetur, dum fluctuat in huius mundi pelago, Charitas ipsum tranquillum, et Pace serenum reddit, carnem pacatam Spiritui, spiritumque Deo placatum subiiciendo. Similiter e Charitate nascitur Misericordia; qua homo alienas miserias, suas reputat, eisque aut corporaliter subvenit, aut spiritualiter compatitur; Cum enim Charitas sit maxime unitiva, omnia proximorum, seu bona, seu mala in se transfert, eisque gaudere, aut ea propellere nititur; quare duplex est misericordia, ut infra dicetur, in cuius figuram Salomon duplex fecit ostiolum de olivis in ingressu Oraculi, ut habet Seraphicus in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. Verum de his ulterius inquirendum est.

Section I: On Joy

[1] First, the Soul, adorned with the stole of Charity, brightens into the affection of Joy; wherefore, before his other effects, joy must above all be treated; and since the kind of gladness is manifold, that Joy which is the true offspring of Charity must be distinguished from the others.

> De Gaudio.
> Primo Anima, decorata Charitatis stola, in Gaudii affectum exhilarascit; quare ante alios ipsius effectus imprimis de gaudio agendum est; et quoniam multiplex est laetitiae genus; ideo Gaudium illud, quod est vera Charitatis proles, ab aliis secernendum est.

Question I: Whether joy is an effect of charity, and of what kind

[1] JOY is not taken here for the passion of the sensitive appetite, which is called delight, of which D. Bonaventure treats in 3. dist. 26. quaest. 1. and art. 2. quaest. 1.

> GAUDIUM non sumitur hic pro passione appetitus sensitivi, quae dicitur delectatio, de qua D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 26. quaest. 1. et art. 2. quaest. 1.

2 JOY is taken rather as it is a diffusion of the mind in some good, and this is true only if it is of the true good, which is God, as the Saintly Doctor says, collat. 75. on John; and that it is an effect of life in the Lord, which is Charity, the Saintly Doctor proves from Philip. 3. Rejoice in the Lord always, and 17. of John, that your Joy may be full; for there, after Christ had prayed the Father that the disciples be one in God, he adds: That your Joy may be full, and that they may have my Joy fulfilled in themselves. He admonishes that this Joy is to be fulfilled, when it is said: Enter into the Joy of thy Lord, where we are not commanded to rejoice, or to receive Joy, but to enter into infinite joy, comprehending us. See the Saintly Doctor on 16. and 17. of John, and sermons 4. and 5. on the Nativity, distinguishing wonderfully concerning all the Joys, but especially concerning Joy as an effect of Charity, where he heaps up very many authorities on all of them from the Scriptures. Therefore this Joy is an act elicited by the virtue of Charity, which is therefore called its fruit, Galat. 5. The fruit of the Spirit is, Joy, etc., as the Saintly Doctor notes, 3. part. Centil. sect. 6., and Lib. 5. Compendii Theol. cap. 57.; and Gregory of Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 6. puncto 1., and Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 17.

> SUMITUR potius Gaudium, prout est diffusio animi in aliquo bono, et hoc ideo non est verum, nisi do vero bono Deo, ut ait S. Doctor collat. 75. in Ioannem, esse autem effectum vitae in Domino, quae est Charitas, probat S. Doctor ex illo Philip. 3. Gaudete in Domino semper, et 17. Ioan. ut Gaudium vestrum sit plenum; Ibi enim, postquam oravit Christus Patrem, ut discipuli sint unum in Deo, subdit: Ut Gaudium vestrum sit plenum, et ut ipsi habeant Gaudium meum impletum. Hoc Gaudium complendum monet, cum dicitur: Intra in Gaudium Domini tui, ubi nos non iubemur gaudere, vel Gaudium recipere, sed intrare in gaudium infinitum, comprehendens nos. Vide S. Doctorem ad 16. et 17. Ioannis, et sermonibus 4. et 5. de Nativitate, mirabiliter de Gaudiis omnibus differentem, maxime vero de Gaudio, Charitatis effectu, ubi plurimas de omnibus congerit authoritates e Scripturis. Igitur hoc Gaudium est actus, a virtute Charitatis elicitus, qui ideo dicitur fructus eius, Galat. 5. Fructus Spiritus sunt, Gaudium, etc. ut advertit S. Doctor 3. part. Centil. sect. 6. et Lib. 5. Compendii Theol. cap. 57. et Gregorius de Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 6. puncto 1. ac Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 17.

3 That this Joy is perfect in the fatherland, and cannot grow, just as Charity does not grow, S. Bonaventure admonishes in 2. dist. 11. art. 2. quaest. 2. argument 1. for the opposite, with a response.

> Hoc autem Gaudium perfectum esse in patria, nec crescere posse, sicuti nec crescit Charitas, admonet S. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 11. art. 2. quaest. 2. argumento 1. ad opposita, cum responso.

4 In this life, however: Joy is to do justice, as is said Proverb. 21., and therefore even the contrite penitent ought to rejoice, because he has found God; yet the Joy that he has lost that good is mixed with bitterness. So D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 16. part. 2. dub. 10.

> In hac vita vero: Gaudium est iusto facere iustitiam, ut dicitur Proverb. 21. et ideo, et poenitentem contritum Gaudere oportere, eo quod Deum invenerit, attamen mixtum est amaritudine Gaudium, quod amiserit illud bonum. Ita D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 16. part. 2. dub. 10.

5 It surely has not of itself weariness, because it is born of wisdom. Therefore it is said, Sap. 8. Her conversation has no bitterness, nor her company any weariness, but joy and Joy, according to Ecclesiasticus 1.: He will give pleasantness and Joy, and cap. 5.: He heaped up for him pleasantness and exultation. All of which the Saintly Doctor observes on those words of Sap. 8. He is saddened, therefore, insofar as something occurs repugnant to the participation of the divine good, whether in us or in our neighbours, whom we love as ourselves, as D. Thom. teaches, art. 2.; Tannerus num. 18.

Non habet sane per se taedium, quia ex sapientia nascitur. Ideo dicitur, Sap. 8. Non habet amaritudinem conversatio illius, nec taedium convictus illius, sed laetitiam, et Gaudium*, iuxta Ecclesiastici primo.* Iucunditatem, atque Gaudium dabit*, et cap. 5.* Iucunditatem, et exultationem thesaurizavit super eum. Quae omnia observat S. Doctor ad ea verba Sap. 8. Tristatur igitur, quatenus aliquid occurrit repugnans participationi divini boni, vel in nobis, vel in proximis, quos tanquam nosmetipsos amamus, ut docet D. Thom. art. 2. Tannerus num. 18.

6 THEREFORE this Joy cannot be fulfilled in this life, the Saintly Doctor concludes on those words of John 15., That my Joy may be in you, and your Joy may be filled, and in nearly that whole chapter. The reason is, because there cannot be perfect rest while there is motion; but in this life we are always in motion, as D. Thom. says, art. 3. Therefore John 16.: A woman, when she gives birth, has sadness; and you therefore now indeed have sadness, and Christ was sad unto death, Luke 22., as the Saintly Doctor observes on those passages.

ITAQUE hoc Gaudium in hac vita compleri non posse, concludit S. Doctor ad ea verba Ioan. 15. Ut Gaudium meum in vobis sit, et Gaudium vestrum impleatur*, et toto fere illo capite. Ratio est, quia non potest esse perfecta quies, quamdiu est motus; in hac autem vita semper in motu sumus, ut ait D. Thom. art. 3. Ideo Ioan. 16.* Mulier cum parit, tristitiam habet; et vos igitur nunc quidem tristitiam habetis*, et Christus tristis fuit ad mortem Lucae 22. ut observat S. Doctor ad ea loca.*

Question II: Whether joy is a virtue

1 That it is NOT a virtue, D. Thomas shows in the cited article, from the enumeration of the parts.

NON esse virtutem, ostendit D. Thomas art. cit. e partium enumeratione.

2 It is PROVED from S. Thom., because Joy is not an operative habit, but is an act toward which the habit inclines, which is called Charity. For the same habit inclines to loving, to desiring the beloved, and to rejoicing in him; and therefore the habit of Joy is not distinct from the habit of Charity, because every virtue rejoices in exercising its acts, as D. Bonaventure teaches, 3. dist. 26. quaest. 2. ad 4.; but it agrees especially with Charity, which has for its object the good, insofar as the good delights through the habit.

PROBATUR a S. Thom. quia Gaudium non est habitus operativus, sed est actus ad quem inclinat habitus, qui dicitur: Charitas. Idem enim habitus inclinat ad diligendum, ad desiderandum dilectum, et ad gaudendum de eo; et ideo ab habitu Charitatis non est distinctus habitus, quia omnis virtus Gaudet in suis actibus exercendis, ut docet D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 26. quaest. 2. ad 4. maxime vero convenit Charitati, quae habet pro obiecto bonum, ut bonum per habitum delectat.

Section II: On Peace

1 The state of the MOST PURIFIED mind is Peace; wherefore it is granted to the peaceable more than to others to be the sons of God, as the Seraphic Doctor notes in comp. Theol. lib. 5. cap. 54., because although mercy assimilates a man to God most of all as regards exterior things, yet as regards interior things, he is assimilated more by Peace.

PURGATISSIMI animi status est Pax; quare pacificis magis tribuitur esse filios Dei, quam aliis, ut notat Seraphicus in comp. Theol. lib. 5. cap. 54. quia licet misericordia hominem Deo maxime assimilet, quoad exteriora, quoad interiora tamen, magis assimilatur Pace.

Sole Question: What peace is

1 PEACE is described by the Saintly Doctor in the opusc. de septem Donis, on the Gift of fear, cap. 4., from D. Augustine, serm. 167. de tempore: Peace is the serenity of the mind, the tranquillity of the soul, the simplicity of the heart, the bond of love, the fellowship of Charity. By these he shows that peace consists in consent and simplicity, which is the perfect unity of the affections in the true and entire good, as D. Thom. also says, art. 1. But it differs from Concord; because this is the union of hearts and wills in one, as D. Bonav. says, 3. p. centil. sect. 44., and in the opusc. declaring the terms of Theology, near the end. But there can be an evil concord, as D. Bonav. notes in Pharetra, in the place cited.

> PACEM describit S. Doctor opusc. de septem Donis, de Dono timoris, cap. 4. ex D. Augustino, serm. 167. de tempore: Pax est serenitas mentis, tranquillitas animi, simplicitas cordis, vinculum amoris, consortium Charitatis. His ostendit pacem in consensione, et simplicitate, quae est unitas perfecta affectionum in vero bono omnimodo, consistere, ut ait etiam D. Thom. art. 1. Differt vero a Concordia; quia haec est unio cordium, et voluntatum in uno, ut ait D. Bonav. 3. p. centil. sect. 44. et opusc. declaratorio terminorum Theologiae circa finem. Potest vero esse mala concordia, ut notat D. Bonav. in Pharetra, loco citando.

2 From the justice of Kings arises the Peace of peoples, as Caesarius of Arles says, homil. 22., on that word of Luke 17., the Kingdom of God is within you, as gathered by D. Bonaventure in the place cited, de septem donis. The reason is, because they are two sisters: Justice and Peace have kissed, Psalm 44.

> Ex iustitia Regum oritur Pax populorum, ut ait Caesarius Arel. homil. 22. in illud Lucae 17. Regnum Dei intra vos est*, apud D. Bonavent. loco cit. de septem donis. Ratio est, quia duae sunt germanae:* Iustitia, et Pax osculatae sunt*, Psalm. 44.*

3 That THIS is an effect of Charity, the Saintly Doctor shows in Lib. 4. Pharetrae, and D. Greg. in the registry, lib. 7. indic. 11., and lib. 4. indic. 13. cap. 80., and Lib. 7. indic. 2. cap. 27.

> HANC esse effectum Charitatis ostendit S. Doctor Lib. 4. Pharetrae, et D. Gregor. in registro, lib. 7. indic. 11. et lib. 4. indic. 13. cap. 80. et Lib. 7. indic. 2. cap. 27.

4 He describes it there from D. Augustine, serm. 57. de verbis Domini: Peace is placid to all; it does not seek what is another's, it assigns its own; it teaches to love what it knows not how to hate. It knows not how to be exalted, it knows not how to be inflated. Therefore he who receives it, let him hold it; he who has lost it, let him seek it back; he who has missed it, let him look for it: since he who shall not be found in it is cast off by the Father, disinherited by the Son, and none the less is made a stranger by the Holy Spirit. He continues from D. Augustine, Lib. 1. de civit. cap. 13.: The testament of God, and the inheritance, is peace, that it may be possessed by concordant partners, not divided by litigants; from which he deduces that the opposite of peace is dissension, and therefore the Apostle says it withers away, first Corinth. 14.: God is not of dissension, but of peace.

> Hanc describit ibi ex D. Augustino serm. 57. de verbis Domini: Pax cunctis est placida, non quaerit alienum, deputat suum, docet amare, quae odisse non novit. Nescit extolli, nescit inflari. Hanc ergo qui accipit, teneat; qui perdidit, repetat, qui amisit, requirat: quoniam, qui in ea non fuerit inventus abdicatur a Patre, exhaeredatur a filio, nihilominus a Spiritu sancto efficitur alienus. Prosequitur ex D. Augustino Lib. 1. de civit. cap. 13. Testamentum Dei, et haereditas, pax est, ut a concordibus consortibus possideatur, non a litigantibus dividatur; ex quo deducit, oppositum pacis esse dissensionem, ideo ea amitesci Apostolus ait, prima Corinth. 14. Non est dissensionis Deus, sed pacis.

[5] The Saintly Doctor shows the same there from D. Augustine, lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 12.: Wars are waged with the intention of peace (he says), because those who wish wars wish nothing else than to conquer. But victory is the subjection of those who resist; and when that has been done, there will be peace.

> Idem ostendit S. Doctor ibi ex D. Augustino lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 12. Pacis intentione bella geri (ait) quia, qui bella volunt, nihil aliud, quam vincere volunt. Victoria autem est subiectio repugnantium; quod cum factum fuerit, pax erit.

[6] See the Saintly Doctor there, citing other Fathers saying wondrous things.

> Vide S. Doctorem ibi, alios Patres, mira dicentes, referentem.

[7] Hence he shows, on 2. Luke, that peace is not without Charity, from those words: And on earth peace to men of good will, that is, to the just. Because there is no peace for the wicked, as it is said: Isaiah 57. On the contrary, to the just it is said, Philip. 4.: And the Peace of God, which surpasses all sense, keep your hearts. Therefore upon the poor, contrite of heart, and trembling at my words, says the Lord, Isaiah 66.: I will cause to flow upon him a river of peace. See the Seraphic Doctor there, uttering most excellent things. The Saintly Doctor observes there, and on 24. Luke, that it is so precious that Christ was called the Apostle of peace: Coming, he evangelized peace to you, Ephes. 2.; He himself also is called our Peace, who made both one, Ephes. 1.; And pacifying through his blood, whether the things that are on earth, or the things that are in heaven, Coloss. 1. See the Saintly Doctor on 24. Luke on those words: Peace be to you.

> Hinc pacem non esse sine Charitate, ostendit ad 2. Lucae S. Doctor ex illis verbis: Et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis*, idest, iustis.* Quia non est pax impiis, ut dicitur: Isaia 57. E contra, iustis dicitur, Philip. 4. et Pax Dei, quae exuperat omnem sensum, custodiat corda vestra. Ideo super pauperculum, contritum corde, et trementem sermones meos, ait Dominus Isaia 66. Declinabo super eum fluvium pacis. Vide Seraphicum ibi, praeclara promentem. Hanc adeo pretiosam observat S. Doctor ibi, et ad 24. Lucae*, ut Christus dictus sit Apostolus pacis:* Veniens Evangelizavit pacem vobis*, Ephes. 2.* Ipse etiam dicitur Pax nostra, qui fecit utraque unum*, Ephes. 1.* Et Pacificans per sanguinem eius sive quae in terris, sive quae in caelis sunt*, Coloss. 1. Vide S. Doctorem ad 24.* Lucae ad ea verba: Pax vobis.

[8] But the Saintly Doctor shows in the passages alleged that for peace it is necessary that there be no dissension with others, and with oneself. S. Thom. is of the same mind here, and Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 20., and commonly.

> Ostendit autem S. Doctor allegatis locis, necesse esse ad pacem, ut non habeatur dissensio cum aliis, et secum ipso. Idem sentit S. Thom. hic, et Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 20. et communiter.

[9] And this S. Augustine seems to have indicated, Lib. 19. de civit. cap. 13., where, describing peace, he says it is the tranquillity of order, because all things are ordered. D. Dionysius indicates the same, cap. 11. de divin. nominibus, saying: Peace is the unitive of all things, and operative of consent. But if he consent with others, not with himself, he will have concord, not peace; since peace indeed includes concord, and adds the consent of the appetitions within the same man himself. Yet broadly peace is called ordered concord, by D. Augustine, Lib. 19. de civitate Dei, cap. 13.

> Et hoc videtur indicasse S. Augustinus Lib. 19. de civit. cap. 13. ubi describens pacem, ait, esse tranquillitatem ordinis, quia omnia sunt ordinata. Id ipsum indicat D. Dionysius cap. 11. de divin. nominibus*, dicens:* Pacem esse omnium unitivam, et consensus operativam. Quod si cum aliis consentiat, non secum, habebit concordiam, non pacem; siquidem pax concordiam quidem includit, et addit consensum appetitionum in ipsomet eodem homine. Late tamen pax dicitur ordinata concordia*, a D. Augustino* Lib. 19. de civitate Dei, cap. 13.

10 Further (says Valentia, punct. 2.) not every kind of entire consent and union of appetitions is the peace of which we speak; but it must be consent in the true good, as the Saintly Doctor shows in that Isa. 57.: there is no peace for the wicked, Jerem. 6.: Saying peace, peace, and there is no peace.

> Porro (ait Valentia, punct. 2.) non quaevis omnimoda consensio, et unio appetitionum, est pax, de qua loquimur; sed debet esse consensio in vero bono, ut ostendit S. Doctor illo Isa. 57. Non est pax impiis, Hierem. 6. Dicentes pax pax, et non est pax.

11 S. Bonaventure, de gradibus virtutum, cap. 13., enumerates three degrees of the one union, or unity, constituting peace: Another degree of Peace (he says) is when the flesh is subjected to the spirit, or to reason, rendering itself difficult toward all evils to be perpetrated, as it is said: Rom. 6. Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that you obey the concupiscences thereof; and cap. 7.: I myself serve with the mind the Law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin. A higher, when the flesh is subjected to the spirit, exhibiting itself prompt for the doing of all good: I chastise my body, etc., first Corinth. 9. The highest, when the spirit is subjected to God, observing every ordering in all the powers of the soul thoroughly. This last degree is kept in heaven.

> Tres autem gradus unius unionis, seu unitatis, constituentis pacem, recenset S. Bonavent. de gradibus virtutum, cap. 13. Pacis (ait) alius gradus est, cum caro subiicitur spiritui, sive rationi, difficilem se reddens ad omnia mala, perpetranda. ut dicitur: Rom. 6. Non regnet peccatum in vestro mortali corpore, ut obediatis concupiscentiis, et cap. 7. Ego ipse mente servio Legi Dei; carne autem Legi peccati. Altior, cum subiicitur caro spiritui, promptam se exhibens ad omnia bona facienda: Castigo corpus meum, etc. prima Corinth. 9. Altissimus, cum spiritus subiicitur Deo, omnem ordinationem in omnibus animae viribus penitus obsernando. Iste ultimus gradus servatur in caelo.

12 Likewise, a high degree is to spare inferiors if they have exceeded in something, and to console them kindly if they have fallen into any affliction. A higher is to converse kindly with equals, so as to do them the good which he would justly wish done to himself. The highest, to conform one's own will to the will of superiors in all things.

> Item altus gradus est inferioribus parcere, si in aliquo excesserunt, eosque benigne consolari, si in aliquam afflictionem inciderint. Altior est, cum paribus benigne conversari, ita ut faciat eis bonum, quod iuste sibi vellet fieri. Altissimus, voluntatem suam, voluntati superiorum in omnibus conformare.

13 Likewise a high degree is to trouble no one by deeds; a higher, to trouble no one by words, or in any other way, when absent. The highest, to give no one a just occasion of trouble.

> Item altus gradus est, nullum turbare factis: altior est, nullum turbare verbis, vel alio modo absentem. Altissimus, nullum dare occasionem iustam turbationis.

14 Likewise he ascends into the high degree of peace who does not publish the evils of his neighbours. Into a higher degree, he who does not diminish the goods of his neighbours, nor blacken them, nor twist them, but extols them. Into the highest ascends he who compassionates their defects, and congratulates them from the heart upon their progress.

> Item in altum gradum pacis ascendit, qui mala proximorum non publicat. In altiorem gradum, qui bona proximorum non minuit, nec denigrat, nec invertit, sed extollit. In altissimum ascendit, qui defectibus eorum compatitur, et profectibus eorum ex corde congratulatur.

15 See the same Saintly Doctor, de Donis Spiritus sancti, and de Dono Timoris, cap. 4., recounting the degrees of Peace.

Vide eundem S. Doctorem de Donis Spiritus sancti, et de Dono Timoris, cap. 4. referentem gradus Pacis.

16 But how peace is an effect of Charity: whether it is an act of it, or a relation following the act of Charity, is a question of a name, as Valentia says. For Cajetan says it is a relation following, which is the union of the appetitions, or tranquillity, as D. Augustine used to say, 19. de civit. cap. 13. But D. Thom., art. 4., seems altogether to will it to be an act, concerning which there is an external precept, Mark 9.: Have peace among you; but in either way Peace seems an effect of Charity, as Valentia says. For it signifies also the foundation of that relation, which is to will the same and not to will the same, which is an act of Charity, as Tannerus admonishes, disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 23.

Quomodo autem Charitatis effectus sit pax: an sit actus eius, vel relatio consequens Charitatis actum; est quaestio de nomine, ut ait Valentia. Nam Caietanus dicit, esse relationem consequentem, quae est unio appetitionum, sive tranquillitas, ut dicebat D. Augustinus 19. de civit. cap. 13. At D. Thom. art. 4. omnino videtur velle, eam esse actum, de quo exter praeceptum, Marci 9. Pacem habete inter vos, sed utroque modo Pax videtur effectus Charitatis, ut ait Valentia. Significat enim etiam fundamentum relationis illius, quod est idem velle, et nolle, qui est actus Charitatis, ut monet Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 1. num. 23.

17 Hence you will see what S. Dionysius wills, cap. 11. de Divinis nominibus, teaching that Peace is the unitive of all things, and operative of consent.

Hinc videbis, quid velit S. Dionysius cap. 11. de Divinis nominibus, docens, Pacem esse omnium unitivam, et consensus operativam.

18 But no other virtue is necessary for producing peace than Charity, because, Charity being had, the union of all the affections is easily had entire, since no other difficulty remains on account of which new virtues are necessary.

Non est autem necessaria alia virtus ad pacem producendam, quam Charitas, quia habita Charitate, facile habetur unitio affectionum omnimoda, propter non remanet alia difficultas, propter quam necessariae sunt novae virtutes.

19 From these you have that peace is reckoned under diverse reasons, both among the Beatitudes, Matth. 5., and among the fruits of the Spirit, Galat. 5. For it is a kind of beatitude, inasmuch as it is an act of a perfect virtue, for instance of Charity, or the state of that virtue itself, in which there is delight in God without contradiction from the flesh, the world, and the devil; or if there is any, it is ineffectual, as D. Bonaventure teaches, Lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 54. But it is a fruit, inasmuch as it is a certain ultimate good which has pleasantness, or delight, as S. Bonavent. says, loco cit. cap. 57., and D. Thom. art. 4. ad 1., and Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 6. puncto 2. near the end.

Ex his habes, pacem diversis rationibus numerari, tum inter Beatitudines, Matth. 5. tum inter fructus Spiritus, Galat. 5. Est enim quaedam beatitudo, quatenus est actus virtutis perfectae, puta Charitatis, seu status virtutis ipsius, in quo est delectatio in Deo, sine contradictione carnis, mundi, et diaboli; vel si est aliqua, inefficax est, ut docet D. Bonavent. Lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 54. Est vero fructus, quatenus est quoddam bonum ultimum, quod habet iucunditatem, sive delectationem, ut ait S. Bonavent. loco cit. cap. 57. et D. Thom. art. 4. ad 1. et Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 6. puncto 2. circa finem.

20 It follows also that there is nothing which does not in its own way seek peace, as D. Thom. teaches, art. 2., and D. Augustine shows, Lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 12., as gathered by D. Bonavent. loco cit. Phaeratrae. The reason is, because every thing, in the manner suitable to its nature, seeks the good, and wills to obtain the perfection congruent to itself without any repugnance; and thus with no appetite resisting. That itself is, to have peace. And D. Augustine hints at this reason, saying: As there is no one who does not will to rejoice, so there is no one who does not will to have peace; doubtless because one then rejoices when he possesses the good with quiet and tranquillity, and thus with peace. Therefore Christ, leaving us that precious treasure, and commending it, often repeats, Mark 9. Luke 24. John 14. and 20.

> Sequitur etiam, nullam rem esse, quae suo modo non expetat pacem, ut docet D. Thom. art. 2. et ostendit D. Augustinus Lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 12. apud D. Bonavent. loco cit. Phaeratre. Ratio est, quia omnis res, modo convenienti naturae suae, expetit bonum, et perfectionem sibi congruentem vult obtineri sine ulla repugnantia; atque adeo nullo etiam repugnante appetitu. Quod ipsum est, pacem habere. Atque hanc rationem innuit D. Augustinus dicens: Sicut nemo est, qui gaudere nolit, ita nemo est, qui nolit habere pacem, nimirum quia tunc aliquis gaudet, quando bonum possidet cum quiete, et tranquillitate, atque adeo cum pace. Ideo pretiosum thesaurum nobis Christus linquens, eamque commendans, saepe refricat Marci 9. Lucae 24. Ioan. 14. et 20.

21 Lastly, it follows that peace is not without cause so greatly commended in the Scriptures, for nothing is more desirable than to possess a good tranquilly. Wherefore the Angels, at the Nativity of Christ, wishing to announce the greatest good to men, announced: Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth peace to men, as D. Bonaventure elegantly pursues, ad 2. Lucae. For therefore, as I said, Christ himself was made the Apostle, announcer of peace, acquiring it with his blood, as the Apostle says in the places cited above. And our Gospel is the Gospel of peace, as it is said, Isaiah 52.

> Postremo sequitur, non sine causa in Scripturis tantopere commendari pacem, nihil enim expetibilius est, quam bonum tranquille possidere. Quamobrem Angeli in Christi Nativitate, cum vellent maximum bonum hominibus nunciare, annunciarunt: Gloria in Excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus, ut eleganter prosequitur D. Bonavent. ad 2. Lucae. Ideo enim, ut dixi, Christus ipse factus est Apostolus annunciator pacis, eam sanguine suo acquirens, ut ait Apostolus locis supra citatis. Et Evangelium nostrum est Evangelium pacis, ut dicitur Isaiae 52.

22 Hence he taught that form of saluting: Peace be to you, Luke 24. and John 20., as S. Bonaventure elegantly pursues on those passages. Where he also shows at what price he redeemed it: For the discipline of our peace was upon him, Isaiah 53.; thus with his life he acquired this infinite treasure, so that, giving peace, he might take away the greatest evil, which is that of dissension. For it is said, Ephes. 2.: God of peace, not of dissension, as I noted above also.

> Hinc formulam illam salutandi docuit: Pax vobis, Lucae 24. et Ioan. 20. ut eleganter prosequitur S. Bonavent. ad ea loca. Ubi etiam ostendit quanto pretio eam redemerit: Disciplina enim pacis nostrae super eum, Isaiae 53. sic vita sua acquisivit thesaurum hunc infinitum, ut dans pacem, auferret maximum malum, quod est dissensionis: Dicitur enim Ephes. 2. Deus pacis, non dissensionis, ut supra etiam notavi.

23 Further, the Apostle hands down the rule for obtaining peace, Galat. 6.: But far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ: through whom the world is crucified to me, and I to the world; and whosoever shall follow this rule, peace upon them.

> Porro regulam obtinendi pacem tradit Apostolus, Galat. 6. Mihi autem absit gloriari nisi in cruce Domini nostri Iesu Christi: per quem mihi mundus crucifixus est, et ego mundo, et quicumque hanc regulam secuti fuerint, pax super illos.

24 S. Bonaventure interprets this rule to be the rule of the Friars Minor, inasmuch as it commands the entire abnegation of self, as he pursues at length in the exposition, in whose Prologue he places the place of these words of the Apostle: But to me, etc., as above.

Hanc regulam interpretatur S. Bonavent. esse regulam Fratrum Minorum, quippe quae omnimodam abnegationem sui praecipit, ut late prosequitur in expositione, in cuius Prooemii locum ponit haec verba Apostoli: Mihi autem, etc. ut supra.

25 Further, see the excellent praises of Peace in D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 6., where he shows it to be the Idiom of heaven, which the Angels, and Christ, used.

Porro Pacis praeconia egregia vide in D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 6. ubi eam ostendit, coeli Idioma, quo Angeli, et Christus usi sunt.

Section III: On Mercy

Question I: What mercy is

1 Mercy is defined by D. Bonaventure, 3. part. Centil. sect. 44.: Mercy is the virtue by which the innermost heart is moved over the calamity of the afflicted. This virtue thinks nothing human foreign to itself; it reckons the losses, or the goods, of others as its own.

Quid sit MISERICORDIA.

Misericordia definitur a D. Bonavent. 3. part. Centil. sect. 44. Misericordia est virtus, per quam intimis super calamitate afflictorum moveris. Haec virtus nihil humanum a se alienum putat; aliorum damna, vel commoda, sua aestimat.

2 It is drawn out from D. Augustine, 19. de civit. cap. 5., where he defines, or describes, it thus: Mercy is compassion for another's misery in our heart, whereby, if we can bring help, we are compelled.

Eruitur ex D. Augustino 19. de civit. cap. 5. ubi sic eam definit, seu describit: Misericordia est alienae miseriae in nostro corde compassio, qua utique, si possumus subvenire, compellimur.

3 Valentia thus describes Mercy from D. Thom. art. 1., D. Augustine in the place cited, and Aristotle 2. Rhet. cap. 8.: Mercy is pain, or sorrow, over an involuntary evil of another, reckoned as one's own, and in some way against the dignity of the miserable person, whom the one merciful wills to relieve, as far as lies in him, and as he conveniently can.

Valentia sic ex D. Thom. art. 1. D. Augustino loco cit. et Aristotele 2. Reth. cap. 8. Misericordiam describit: Misericordia est dolor, sive tristitia de malo alieno involuntario, aestimato ut proprio, et aliquo modo contra personae miserabilis dignitatem, cui subvenire velit miserans, quantum in ipso est, et commode possit.

4 It is called a Virtue by D. Bonaventure; for it is a virtue distinct from Charity, as the Apostle teaches, Coloss. 3., where he first teaches: Put on the bowels of Mercy, benignity, humility, modesty, patience; but soon after says: Above all these things, have Charity.

Dicitur a D. Bonavent. Virtus; est enim distincta virtus a Charitate, ut docet Apostolus Coloss. 3. ubi primo docet: Induite viscera Misericordiae, benignitatem, humilitatem, modestiam, patientiam; mox vero ait: Super omnia autem haec, Charitatem habete.

5 It is proved, because it has a peculiar object, namely the evil of another, and the calamities of the afflicted, as able to be relieved by our works. But this is the reason of a peculiar object, and it begets a peculiar difficulty in the act of mercy in efficacious execution. For indeed, in efficaciously relieving another's misery, there remains a principal difficulty even in one having Charity.

> Probatur, quia habet peculiare obiectum, idest malum alienum, et calamitates afflictorum, ut sublevabiles opera nostra. Haec autem est ratio peculiaris obiecti, et in executione efficaci peculiarem difficultatem parit in actu misericordiae. Profecto enim in sublevanda efficaciter aliena miseria, manet difficultas praecipua, etiam habenti Charitatem.

6 Observe, however, that in the description of the last-mentioned mercy it is placed that it is sorrow over another's misery; for, as Damascenus teaches, 2. de fide, cap. 14., Mercy is a certain species of pain, or sorrow, over the evil of one's neighbour indeed, but reckoned as one's own.

> Observa vero, in descriptione ultimae misericordiae, poni, quod sit tristitia de aliena miseria; nam, ut docet Damascenus 2. de fide, cap. 14. Misericordia est quaedam species doloris, seu tristitia de malo proximi sane, sed aestimato ut proprio.

7 It is said to be over an involuntary evil; for misery consists in suffering involuntarily; just as Beatitude, to which misery is opposed, consists in this, that one have those goods which he wills, according to that word of Augustine, Lib. 13. de civit. cap. 4.: Blessed is he who has whatever he wills, and wills no evil. Yet that misery need not be altogether involuntary; for we can have mercy on a sinner, as D. Thomas teaches, art. 1. ad 1., from the opinion of D. Gregory, homil. 34. in Evangelia.

> Dicitur de malo involuntario; nam miseria stat in patiendo involuntarie; sicut Beatitudo, cui miseria opponitur, consistit in hoc, ut quis habeat ea bona, quae vult, iuxta illud Augustini, Lib. 13. de civit. cap. 4. Beatus est, qui habet, quidquid vult, et nihil mali vult. Neque tamen oportet, miseriam illam esse omnino involuntariam; possumus enim misereri peccatoris, ut docet D. Thomas art. 1. ad 1. ex D. Gregorii sententia, homil. 34. in Evangelia.

8 Then it is said to be over the evil of another reckoned as one's own. For sorrow and pain are over one's own evil: whence the motive of mercy must touch one in some way regarding oneself, as D. Thom. teaches, art. 2. Whence, when the Saintly Doctor, in the explanation of the terms of Theology, near the end, describes mercy: Mercy is compassion for the misery and need of one's neighbour; he does not intend to hand down a definition, but to explain the term; otherwise he would have added: for the miseries of one's neighbour, as one's own.

> Deinde dicitur de malo alieno aestimato proprio. Tristitia enim, et dolor sunt de malo proprio: Unde motivum misericordiae debet aliquo modo respicientem tangere, ut docet D. Thom. art. 2. Unde quando S. Doctor in explicatione terminorum Theologiae*, circa finem describit misericordiam:* Misericordia est compassio miseriae, et indigentiae proximi; non intendit tradere definitionem, sed terminum explicare; alioqui addidisset: Miseriae proximi, tanquam propriae.

Question II: What kind of virtue mercy is

1 The Saintly Doctor discourses most excellently on Mercy in the passages alleged. But he shows first that Mercy is a peculiar and distinguished Virtue, which is occupied with the miseries of one's neighbour to be relieved, with that affection as if they were one's own; as D. Thom. also says, art. 1. and 3.

> Quae, et qualis Virtus sit MISERICORDIA.

Praeclare S. Doctor de Misericordia disserit locis allegatis. Ostendit autem primo, Misericordiam esse Virtutem peculiarem insignem, quae circa miserias proximi sublevandas, eo affectu tanquam proprias versatur; ut ait etiam D. Thom. art. 1. et 3.

2 Then he prefers it to the other virtues, especially the more distinguished ones.

Deinde eam praefert caeteris virtutibus, praecipue insignioribus.

3 Indeed, first he prefers it to Penitence, because this immolates the body; but that, the soul. For bodily exercise, that is, penance, is profitable to little. But piety is profitable to all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, as is had, first Timothy 4.

Primo quidem eam praefert Poenitentiae, quia haec immolat corpus; illa vero animam. Corporalis enim exercitatio, idest, poenitentia, ad modicum utilis est. Pietas vero ad omnia, ut habetur, prima Timothei 4. promissionem habens vitae.

4 Secondly it surpasses Justice: therefore it frees the guilty, Matth. 5.: Blessed are the Merciful, for they shall obtain Mercy. From Matth. 6.: If you will forgive men their sins, and your heavenly Father will forgive you your sins. Luke 6.: Forgive, and you shall be forgiven. Proverb. 19.: He that is merciful to the poor lends to the Lord. He also brings this as an argument, because in God Mercy exalts itself above judgment, James 2., and Psalm. 144.: His tender mercies are over all His works. But he hints that this avails only in him who has no superior, as D. Thom. says, art. 4.

Secundo superat Iustitiam: Ideo reos liberat, Matth. 5. Beati Misericordes, quoniam ipsi Misericordiam consequentur. Ex Matth. 6. Si dimiseritis hominibus peccata eorum, et Pater vester coelestis dimittet peccata vestra. Lucae 6. Dimittite, et dimittemini. Proverb. 19. Foeneratur Domino, qui miseretur proximo. Id etiam affert in argumentum, quia in Deo, Misericordia superexaltat iudicium, Iacobi 2. et Psalm. 144. Miserationes eius super omnia opera Eius. Hoc vero innuit, valere solum in eo, qui non habet superiorem, ut ait D. Thom art. 4.

5 But he shows especially that for some reason it is more excellent than Charity. The reason is, which D. Thom. also uses. For Charity only loves, and thus, as it were finite, is contained in the other, tending toward the good through love: but Mercy, overflowing its banks, pours itself out, communicating itself to inferior agents, and therefore bears not only the goods of one's neighbours, but most willingly also their evils.

Praecipue vero ostendit, aliqua ratione esse Charitate praestantiorem. Ratio est, quia utitur etiam D. Thom. Nam Charitas solum diligit, et ita quasi finitus in altero continetur, tendens in bonum dilectione: Misericordia autem redundans super ripas effunditur, communicando se inferioribus agentibus, et ideo non solum bona proximorum, sed etiam mala libentissime portat.

6 Second Corinth. 11.: Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is scandalized, and I am not inflamed? Therefore mercy, considered in itself, surpasses Charity.

Secunda Corinth. 11. Quis infirmatur, et ego non infirmor? Quis scandalizatur, et ego non uror? Itaque misericordia, in se considerata, superat Charitatem.

7 But this doctrine can be accommodated to Charity, and Mercy in two ways. In one way, as they are certain good habits, that is, virtues, which are found adequately in man according to their rationes: but inadequately also in God, the formalities being prescinded, namely of habit, which they call imperfections; and in this sense Charity and mercy are compared in themselves, and according to the perfection which it exacts in itself, without respect to object or subject, and considering only the ratio of the act. In this sense Valentia says D. Thomas spoke; for he compares these virtues as they are habits, of which one is for loving, the other for relieving, as Tannerus notes, disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 2. num. 31.

> Duobus autem modis haec doctrina potest ad Charitatem, et Misericordiam accommodari. Uno modo, ut sunt quidam habitus boni, idest virtutes, quae secundum rationes suas adaequate inveniuntur in homine: inadaequate vero etiam in Deo, praecisis formalitatibus, scilicet habitus, quae dicunt imperfectiones, et hoc sensu comparari Charitatem, et misericordiam secundum se, et secundum perfectionem, quam exigit in seipsa, sine respectu ad obiectum, vel subiectum, et solum considerando rationem actus etiam. Hoc sensu ait Valentia, locutum D. Thomam; nam comparat has virtutes, ut habitus sunt, quorum alter est ad amandum; alter ad sublevandam, ut notat Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 2. num. 31.

8 Secondly they can be considered, not as they are habits, but in the most abstract reason, inasmuch as mercy is relieving of misery: but Charity is the faculty of loving God; and in this way, say Cajetan and Bannes, D. Thomas is to be understood, that Mercy indeed, in its most abstract perfection, is better than Charity: For that which consists in relieving the misery and defects of the needy ought to be pure act, not a certain potentiality, or lack; otherwise it will not be able to reduce need to act; and in this sense it resplends in God, who is pure infinite act, who can fill all defects and potentialities.

> Secundo possunt considerari, non ut habitus sunt, sed abstractissima ratione, quatenus misericordia est sublevativa miseriae: Charitas autem est facultas diligendi Deum; et hoc modo intelligi D. Thomam, aiunt Caietanus, et Bannes, Misericordiam quidem, sua abstractissima perfectione esse meliorem Charitate: Nam id, quod consistit in sublevando alienam egentium miseriam, et defectus, debet esse actus purus, non potentialitate quadam, seu carentia; alioqui non poterit ad actum reducere egentiam; et hoc sensu resplendet in Deo, qui est actus purus infinitus, qui potest omnes defectus, et potentialitates replere.

9 As to D. Bonav., I judge that he spoke in both senses. In the former indeed, because he compares the habit of Charity, and others, with the habit of mercy in general, as is evident from the examples alleged above. But in this latter sense; because he brings some examples of the mercy of God from the Scriptures indicating it, as we have seen. Therefore in both ways mercy, considered in itself, seems more perfect.

> Quoad D. Bonav. arbitror, eum locutum utroque sensu. In priori quidem, quia comparat habitum Charitatis, et alios, cum habitu misericordiae in genere, ut constat allatis supra exemplis. In hoc vero posteriori sensu; quia aliqua affert exempla misericordiae Dei e Scripturis, id indicantia, ut vidimus. Itaque utroque modo perfectior misericordia in se considerata videtur.

10 Truly, however, if both are considered in order to the subject, Charity is better in him who is not the highest, inasmuch as the highest perfection stands in union with the highest good; but if it is the highest good, then the greatest perfection is to diffuse goodness to all inferiors. See the Saintly Doctor, also giving the motives by which we are moved to mercy, loco cit. The first motive is to consider the miserable to be of our nature. Whence Matth. 23.: For all you are brethren, and Isa. 58.: When you shall see one naked, cover him, and despise not your own flesh. The second motive of mercy is one's own need and misery; for man, considering his own misery, compassionates that of another, whence Ecclesiasticus 31.: Learn from yourself what things are for your neighbour.

> Enim vero, si considerentur ambae in ordine ad subiectum; melior est Charitas in eo, qui non est supremus, quatenus summa perfectio stat in unione cum summo bono; quod si sit summum bonum; tunc maxima perfectio est diffundere bonitatem ad omnes inferiores. Vide S. Doctorem, ponentem etiam motiva, quibus commoveamur ad misericordiam loco cit. Dices. Primum motivum est considerare miseros esse nostrae naturae. Unde Matth. 23. Omnes enim vos fratres estis, et Isa. 58. Cum videris nudum, operi eum, et carnem tuam ne despexeris. Secundum motivum misericordiae est propria indigentia et miseria; homo enim considerans propriam miseriam, compatitur alienae, unde Ecclesiastici 31. Ex te ipso intellige, quae sunt proximi tui.

11 The third motive is the unity of Christ and his members, and the love in it, that he reckon as done to himself, or poured out for them, what is done, Matth. 25.: What you have done to one of the least of mine, etc. At the end he enumerates the fourteen works of mercy. See him there, uttering wondrous things.

> Tertium motivum est Christi, et membrorum eius unitas, et in ea amor, ut sibi reputet factum, quod pro eis fit, seu profunditur, Matth. 25. Quod uni ex minimis meis fecistis, etc. In calce vero recenset opera quatuordecim misericordiae. Ipsum vide mira promentem.

Disputation X: On the External Effects of Charity

1 After Charity shall have diminished within the concupiscence and cupidity, it pours itself forth outwardly by doing good; for since it seeks not its own, but by a noble exchange turns the miseries of others into its own happiness, it is wholly devoted to benefits, and is especially occupied with corporal relief through Almsgiving, or spiritual instruction through fraternal correction.

> Postquam interius concupiscentiam, et cupiditatem Charitas minuerit, foras benefaciendo se profundit; Cum enim sua non quaerat, sed nobili quaestu aliorum miserias, proprii foelicitatis commutatione, suas faciat; tota beneficentiis mancipatur, et corporali sublevatione per Eleemosynam, aut spirituali eruditione per fraternam correctionem praecipue occupatur.

Section I: On Beneficence

Sole Question: What beneficence is

1 Beneficence is a certain execution of the internal and elicited act of Charity toward another.

> Beneficentia est executio quaedam actus interni, et eliciti Charitatis erga alterum.

2 That this is the proper act of Charity the Theologians teach.

> Hanc esse proprium Charitatis actum docent Theologi.

3 It is proved by D. Thom. art. 1 and 4, and D. Bonavent. here; for the external act, by which the interior act of some virtue is made efficacious and brought to execution, pertains to the same virtue as the internal act, inasmuch as both acts regard the same reason of the object. It is confirmed by Valencia with D. Bonaventure from that passage of 1 John 3: let us not love in word, but in deed and in truth, where he sufficiently indicates that to do good itself is to love efficaciously, and consequently to be an act of Charity.

> Probatur a D. Thom. art. 1. et 4. et D. Bonavent. hic; Nam actus externus, per quem interior actus alicuius virtutis est efficax, et ad executionem perducitur, ad eandem virtutem pertinet, ad quam actus internus, quatenus uterque actus respicit eandem rationem obiecti. Confirmatur a Valentia cum D. Bonavent. ex illo prima Ioan. 3. Non diligamus lingua, sed opere, et veritate*, ubi satis indicat, ipsum benefacere, esse diligere efficaciter, ac proinde esse actum Charitatis.*

4 From this doctrine the Seraphic Doctor gathers that one must do good to all according to place and time, just as all are to be loved, as D. Thom. also teaches art. 2, and the Apostle in Galat. 6: Let us work good toward all, but especially toward the household of the faith.

> Ex hac doctrina colligit S. Doctor, ita esse omnibus benefaciendum pro loco, et tempore, sicut omnes diligendi, ut docet etiam D. Thom. art. 2. et Apostolus Galat. 6. Operemur bonum ad omnes, maxime autem ad domesticos fidei.

5 Hence he also deduces that one must do good to individuals in the same order in which individuals are to be loved by the order of Charity; and consequently we must first do good to those more closely joined to us, as I said disp. 8, quaest. 40.

Hinc etiam deducit, eodem ordine singulis benefaciendum, quo sunt singuli amandi ex ordine Charitatis; ac proinde coniunctioribus nobis prius benefaciendum, ut dixi disp. 8. quaest. 40.

6 Valencia moreover warns disp. 3, quaest. 8, puncto unico that prudence must be exercised in this matter.

Admonet autem Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 8. puncto unico*, prudentiam in hoc adhibendam.*

Section II: On Almsgiving

1 Most excellently does the Seraphic Doctor in the Diaeta, tit. 2, cap. 7 compare Almsgiving to a radiant light, which ought to be carried not behind, but before a man walking; for Almsgiving is not to be done after death, but before death, more fruitfully, as the wise man says Eccles. 14: before death do good to your friend. But he who does otherwise is like one carrying a light behind him; see there also other splendid similitudes.

De Eleemosyna.

Eximie S. Doctor in Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 7. Eleemosynam comparat radioso lumini, quod non post, sed ante hominem gradientem debeat portari; non enim post, sed ante mortem facienda est fructuosius Eleemosyna, dicente sapiente Eccles. 14. ante mortem benefac amico tuo. Qui autem secus facit, similis est a tergo lumen portanti, alias praeclaras similitudines ibidem vide.

Question I: Whether to give alms is an act of charity

1 I assert that it is an act of Charity.

An dare ELEEMOSYNAM sit actus Charitatis.

Assero, esse actum Charitatis.

2 IT IS PROVED by S. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 14, p. 2, dub. 5, litt. and Book 6 of the Compendium of Theology, cap. 31, and D. Thom. art. 1. External acts pertain to that virtue to which pertains what is the motive of such an act; but the motive for giving Alms is mercy, of which dist. 9, sect. 3 — for in Greek Eleemosyna is named from mercy; and mercy is an effect of Charity, as I showed in the place cited.

PROBATUR a S. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 14. p. 2. dub. 5. litt. et Lib. 6. Compendii Theologiae, cap. 31. et D. Thom. art. 1. Exteriores actus ad eam virtutem pertinent, ad quam pertinet id, quod est motivum huiusmodi actus; motivum autem ad dandum Eleemosynas est misericordia, de qua dist. 9. sect. 3. nam in Graeco Eleemosyna a misericordia denominatur; Misericordia autem est effectus Charitatis, ut ostendi loco citato.

3 Next it is proved by D. Bonavent. in the Diaeta, tit. 2, at the end, because this motive is for the love of God, who ascribes it as given to himself Matthew 25.

Deinde probatur a D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 2. in fine*, quia hoc motivum est pro amore Dei, qui eam sibi datam adscribit* Matthaei 25.

Question II: Whether the kinds of almsgiving are fittingly distinguished

1 Seven kinds of corporal alms are set forth in this verse:

Utrum convenienter ELEEMOSYNARUM genera distinguantur.

Ponuntur septem genera Eleemosynarum corporalium hoc versu:

2 I visit, I give drink, I feed, I redeem, I shelter, I clothe, I bury.

> Visito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.

3 That is, to feed the hungry, to give drink to the thirsty, to clothe the naked, to receive in the stranger (harbor the harborless), to visit the sick, to redeem the captive, and to bury the dead.

> Idest, pascere esurientem, potare sitientem, vestire nudum, recolligere hospitem, visitare infirmum, redimere captivum, et sepelire mortuum.

4 Seven other kinds are of spiritual alms, which are expressed in this verse:

> Septem alia sunt genera spiritualium, quae hoc versu exprimuntur:

5 Counsel, rebuke, console, forgive, bear, pray.

> Consule, castiga, solare, remitte, fer, ora.

6 To teach the ignorant, to counsel the doubting, to console the sorrowful, to correct the sinner, to forgive offenses, to bear the burdensome and the heavy, and to pray for all.

> Docere ignorantem, consulere dubitanti, consolari tristem, corrigere peccantem, remittere offensioni, supportare onerosos, et graves, et pro omnibus orare.

7 These are reported by S. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 15, part. 2, dub. 2, litt. and on the seven Gifts, on the Gift of Piety, cap. 1, and in the Diaeta, tit. 7, cap. 4, and Book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, cap. 52, and on Luke 11 in these words: That which remains over, give as alms. D. Thom. here, and the Theologians commonly.

> Haec refert S. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 15. part. 2. dub. 2. litt. et de septem Donis, de Dono Pietatis, cap. 1. et in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. et Lib. 5. Compendii Theologiae, cap. 52. et ad 11. Lucae in ea verba: Quod superest, date Eleemosynam. D. Thom. hic, et communiter Theologi.

8 IT IS PROVED by the holy Doctors from the defects of one's neighbors, by whom one can be helped; of which some are on the part of the body; some on the part of the soul, which needs are easily gathered, and among the holy Doctors are clear.

> PROBATUR a SS. Doctoribus ex defectibus proximorum, quibus potest subveniri; quorum aliqui sunt ex parte corporis; aliqui ex parte animae, quae quidem necessitates facile colliguntur, et apud Sanctos Doctores clarae sunt.

9 But spiritual alms are intrinsically the greater; nevertheless in some case corporal alms can be the greater; whence in extreme necessity the person failing is rather to be fed than another ignorant one taught, as the holy Doctors teach, Thom. art. 4, and Bonavent. dist. cit. dub 4.

> Sunt autem spirituales per se potiores, in aliquo tamen casu esse possunt corporales; unde in necessitate extrema potius pascendus est deficiens, quam alius ignotans docendus, ut docent SS. Doctores, Thom. art. 4. et Bonavent. dist. cit. dub 4.

Question III: Whether almsgiving is a matter of precept

1 I assert that Almsgiving is commanded by Natural and Divine law.

> Utrum ELEEMOSYNA sit in praecepto.
> Assero, praeceptam esse Eleemosynam iure Naturali, et Divino.

2 IT IS PROVED by D. Thom. here, and D. Bonavent. in the Diaeta, tit. 10, cap. 5. That concerning which there will be the last judgment, and on account of which Christ will distribute eternal rewards and eternal punishments, is commanded; but in the judgment those who have given alms will be called to the fatherland; and those who have omitted it will be cast into hell, as is described Matt. 25. Therefore.

> PROBATUR a D. Thom. hic, et D. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 10. cap. 5. Id, de quo erit iudicium ultimum, et propter quod Christus distribuet praemia aeterna, et poenas aeternas, est praeceptum; sed in iudicio, qui Eleemosynam egerint, vocabuntur ad patriam; et qui eam omisere, eiicientur in infernum, ut describitur Matth. 25. Ergo.

3 IT IS PROVED secondly by D. Thom. here, and D. Bonavent. on these words Luke 11: That which remains over, give as alms, and in 3. dist. 29, quaest. 6, because love of neighbor is commanded; therefore those things must fall under command without which love of neighbor is not preserved; but to love of neighbor it pertains that we not only wish good to our neighbor, but also work it, according to that, 1 John 3: let us not love in word, nor in tongue, but in deed and in truth. But for this, that we wish and work the good of someone, it is required that we come to the aid of his necessity, which is done through the bestowal of alms; and therefore their bestowal is commanded. But because commands are given concerning acts of virtues, it is necessary that in this way the gift of Almsgiving fall under command as it is of the necessity of virtue, as right reason requires; yet on the part of the giver, so as to give of his superfluities, according to that cited Luke 11 — his superfluity, I say, and that of others whose care rests upon him. On the part of the recipient also some necessity is required: hence Paul said 2 Cor. 8: For it is not that there may be relief for others, and tribulation for you, as the Seraphic Doctor notes on Luke 11, because if you, or yours, have necessity, you ought not bring tribulation upon yourselves so as to come to the aid of another, except in that person's extreme necessity, if yours be moderate. See D. Bonavent. in the places cited, and D. Thom. art. 6, Valencia p. 4. By the law of nature also the command stands in that Matt. 7: whatsoever you wish that men do to you, do you also to them.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Thom. hic, et D. Bonavent. ad ea verba Lucae 11. Quod superest, date Eleemosynam, et in 3. dist. 29. quaest. 6. quia dilectio proximi est in praecepto; ideo necesse est, ea cadere sub praecepto, sine quibus dilectio proximi non conservatur; ad dilectionem autem proximi pertinet, ut proximo non solum velimus bonum, sed etiam operemur, iuxta id, prima, Ioan. 3. Non diligamus verbo, neque lingua, sed opere, et veritate. Ad hoc autem quod velimus, et operemur bonum alicuius, requiritur, quod eius necessitati subveniamus, quod fit per Eleemosynarum largitionem; et ideo earum largitio est praecepta. Sed quia praecepta dantur de actibus virtutum, necesse est, quod hoc modo donum Eleemosynae cadat sub praecepto, ut est de necessitate virtutis, ut recta ratio tequirit; tamen ex parte dantis, ut det superflua, secundum id Lucae 11. citatum, superfluum inquam sibi, et aliis, quorum cura incumbit. Ex parte etiam recipientis requiritur aliqua necessitas: Hinc dixit Paulus 2. Cor. 8. Non enim ut aliis sit remissio; vobis autem tribulatio, ut notat S. Doctor ad 11. Lucae, quia si tu, vel tui habent necessitatem, non debetis vobis tribulationem inferre, ut alteri subveniatis, excepta illius extrema necessitate, si vestra sit mediocris. Vide D. Bonavent. locis adductis, et D. Thom. art. 6. Valentiam p. 4. Iure etiam naturae, praeceptum constat illo Matth. 7. Quaecumque vultis, ut faciant vobis homines, et vos facite illis.

4 See the Encomia of Almsgiving in D. Bonavent. there, and Book 2 of the Pharetra, cap. 39, which Valencia accepts disp. 3, quaest. 9, p. 1.

> Eleemosynae Encomia vide in D. Bonavent. ibi et Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 39. quae accipit Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 1.

5 The Seraphic Doctor observes moreover in the places alleged, quaest. 2, that the burial of the dead is not enumerated in Matt. 25; nevertheless it is a work of mercy enumerated Tobias 4 and 12. Whence D. Ambrose, Book on Tobias, cap. 1: If the law commands to cover the naked while living, how much more ought we to cover the bodies of the dead. Nothing is more excellent than this, to vindicate from birds and beasts the sharer of our nature.

> Observat autem S. Doctor locis allegatis, quaest. 2. sepulturam mortuorum non recenseri, Matth. 25. attamen esse opus misericordiae recensitum, Tobiae 4. et 12. Unde D. Ambrosius, Lib. de Tobia, cap. 1. Si viventes operire nudos lex praecipit, quanto magis debemus operire defunctorum corpora. Nihil hoc praestantius vindicare a volatilibus, et a bestiis consortem naturae.

6 IT IS PROVED also by S. Bonavent. in the places alleged, and S. Thom. art. 2, ad 1, because great is the honor to the dead of burial; burial; and great is the punishment, to lie unburied; and not less than to expose one's nakedness while living. Which reason was made known by D. August. lib. de cura pro mortuis, cap. 7. Valencia disp. 3, quaest. 9, p. 2. Bannes article 2.

> PROBATUR etiam a S. Bonavent. locis allegatis, et S. Thom. art. 2. ad 1. quia magnus est honor defuncto, sepultura; et magna poena, iacere insepultum ; et non minus, quam in vita nuditates ostendere. Quae ratio innotuit a D. August. lib. de cura pro mortuis, cap. 7. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 2. Bannes articulo 2.

7 It is proved finally concerning the other alms, Prov. 21: he that stops his ear against the cry of the poor, he shall cry himself and shall not be heard, and 1 John 3: he that hath the substance of this world, and shall see his brother in need, and shall shut up his bowels from him; how doth the charity of God abide in him? The same attest Cyprian serm. de eleemosyna, Ambrose lib. de Nabuthe, cap. 22. Basil on that saying of the rich man: I will destroy my barns. Nazianzen on the love of the poor. See Valencia puncto 4, where he observes that John says: and shall see; for if he is ignorant, he is excused, as the Doctors also commonly note.

> Probatur tandem de aliis eleemosynis, Prov. 21. Qui obturat aurem suam ad clamorem pauperis, et ipse clamabit, et non exaudietur, et prima Ioan. 3. Qui habuerit substantiam huius mundi, et viderit fratrem necessitatem habere, et clauserit viscera sua ab eo; quomodo charitas Dei manet in illo? Idem attestunt Cyprianus serm. de eleemosyna, Ambrosius lib. de Nabuthe, cap. 22. Basil. in id dictum divitis: Destruam horrea. Nazianzenus de pauperum amore. Vide Valentiam puncto 4. ubi observat, Ioannem dicere: et viderit; nam si ignorat, excusatur, ut advertunt etiam communiter Doctores.

8 Since however this command is affirmative, not obliging always, many questions arise as to the time in which it obliges.

> Quoniam vero hoc praeceptum est affirmativum, non obligans ad semper, multae oriuntur quaestiones, quoad tempus, in quo obligat.

9 I shall suppose, moreover, some certain ones. First, in extreme necessity this command of coming to the aid of the needy presses. But extreme necessity is understood not only of imminent death; but also of a grave imminent peril to life, as Valencia notes with Medina de eleemosyna, quaest. 3. Navar. in the Manual. cap. 24. In this indeed we must give alms even from things belonging to the decency of one's state, which do not stand in an indivisible, but admit breadth, as D. Thom. teaches art. 6, Sylvester under the word almsgiving, num. 2, and others with Tannero disp. 2, quaest. 5, dub. 2. That alms are to be given in extreme need to one in need of them for one's state, the Doctors teach: So D. Bonav. in the places cited, D. Thom. art. 5. Ioan. Medina tract. de eleemosyna, quaest. 3, where he says it is the common and certain opinion of the Doctors.

Supponam autem aliqua certa. Primo in extrema necessitate incumbere hoc praeceptum subveniendi inopi. Intelligitur autem necessitas extrema, non sola mortis imminentis; sed etiam grave vitae discrimen imminens, ut notat Valentia cum Medina de eleemosyna, quaest. 3. Navar. in Manual. cap. 24. In hac vero debemus eleemosynas facere, etiam de spectantibus ad decentiam status, quae non stant in indivisibili, sed latitudinem admittunt, ut docet D. Thom. art. 6. Sylvester verbo eleemosyna, num. 2. et alii cum Tannero disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. De necessitatis ad statum, dandam eleemosynam extreme indigenti docent: Ita D. Bonav. locis allegatis, D. Thom. art. 5. Ioan. Medina tract. de eleemosyna, quaest. 3. ubi ait, esse communem, et certam Doctorum sententiam.

10 It is proved, because by the order of charity you are held more to the life of your neighbor than to your own means: whence runs that saying: Feed him dying of hunger; if you have not fed him, you have killed him, which saying they ascribe to S. Ambrose de offic. Gratian disp. 86, can. Pasce. And D. Thom. art. 5. For the rest see Valencia. Now I shall adduce some disputed questions.

Probatur*, quia ordine charitatis teneris magis vitae proximi, quam tuis facultatibus: Unde currit illud:* Pasce fame morientem; si non pavisti, occidisti*, quam sententiam adscribunt S. Ambrosio* de offic. Gratianus disp. 86. can. Pasce. Et D. Thom. art. 5. Reliqua vide in Valentia. Nunc quaestiones aliquas controversas apponam.

Question IV: Whether there is a precept to give superfluities to the poor in common necessities

1 (D. Thom. quaest. 32. art. 5.

An praeceptum sit, in communibus necessitatibus largiri pauperibus superflua.

(D. Thom. quaest. 32. art. 5.

2 I explained extreme necessity above. Grave is that which deprives one of the necessaries for his state. Ordinary, however, is that which the poor have in common.

Extremam necessitatem supra explicui. Gravis est illa, quae privat necessariis ad suum statum. Ordinaria autem est, qui pauperibus est communis.

Octob*; and others, whom Tanner cites and follows disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12. It is also clearly the opinion of D. Bonaventure in the places to be alleged in the arguments.

Secunda sententia est, omnino teneri. Ita D. Thom. hic, art. 7. ubi Caietanus, et Bannes, ac caeteri Thomistae, Palud. 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. art. 2. Richard. quaest. 2. art. 2. Abul. in cap. 6. Octob. et alii, quos refert, et sequitur Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12. Est autem clare sententia D. Bonav. locis allegandis in argumentis.

5 Caspensis, walking in a certain middle way tract. 17. disp. 5. sect. 2, indeed denies such a precept universally. But he adds that one is at times held, in such a way that he who should have the purpose, even virtual, of not giving alms except in grave necessity, would sin mortally. He alleges Suarez disp. 7 sect. 3; Castro Palao: de Lorcam disp. 39. sect. 3. membr. 3; Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12; and others; but unwillingly he returns to our opinion; for he gives the reason why the rich are not universally held, because they prudently believe that the common necessities of the poor are to be driven off by others. A droll reason indeed. So therefore this good man is either never held in good faith, or always held; because they ought not believe this of other rich men; or if this is given universally as the rule, all will believe it of the others, and no one will be held to succor, nor will he succor.

Caspensis medio quodam modo incedens tract. 17. disp. 5. sect. 2. negat quidem universaliter tale praeceptum. Addit vero, teneri aliquoties, ita, ut, qui haberet propositum, etiam virtuale, non dandi eleemosynam, nisi in gravi necessitate, mortaliter peccaret. Allegat Suarez disp. 7 sect. 3. Castrum Palaum: de Lorcam disp. 39. sect. 3. membr. 3. Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12. et alios; sed nolens, in nostram redit sententiam; nam reddit rationem, cur non teneantur universaliter divites, quia prudenter credunt, pauperum necessitates communes depellendas ab aliis. Lepida ratio quidem. Sic igitur nunquam bona haec fide tenetur, vel semper tenetur; quia non debent hoc credere de aliis divitibus; vel si hoc universaliter datur pro regula; omnes credent de aliis, et nullus tenebitur succurrere, neque succurret.

6 I assert that the rich are held in common necessities to give alms from their superfluities.

Assero, teneri divites in communibus necessitatibus, e superfluis eleemosynas erogare.

7 It is proved first from D. Bonaventure ad 11. Lucae, at those words: Verumtamen, quod superest, date eleemosynam: et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis — Nevertheless, what remains, give alms: and behold, all things are clean to you. Now he explains this as being about alms owed to our own necessity, certainly necessary for penance, that we may be cleansed. Then about true alms from superfluities. And from the effects he shows its necessity. For the reasoning of Christ is: Et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis, that is, since you are full of iniquity, he teaches you to cleanse yourselves, as Valencia and Tanner also note.

> Probatur primo a D. Bonav. ad 11. Lucae, ad ea verba: Verumtamen, quod superest, date eleemosynam: et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis. Hoc autem de eleemosyna, debita nostrae necessitati, ad poenitentiam profecto necessarium explicat ut mundemur. Deinde de vera eleemosyna e superfluis. Ex effectibus autem ostendit suam necessitatem. Ratio enim Christi est: Et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis, idest, cum pleni sitis iniquitate, docet mundare vos, ut notant etiam Valentia, et Tannetus.

8 For first, by alms the soul is cleansed; for it is disposed to grace, prima Timot. 4: Pietas ad omnia utilis est, promissionem habens vitae, quae nunc est, et futurae — Piety is useful for all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that to come. Eccles. 3: Eleemosyna enim Patris non erit in oblivione: et sicut in sereno glacies, solventur peccata tua — For the alms of the Father shall not be forgotten: and as ice in clear weather, your sins shall melt away.

> Primo enim per eleemosynam mundatur anima; disponitur enim ad gratiam, prima Timot. 4. Pietas ad omnia utilis est, promissionem habens vitae, quae nunc est, et futurae. Eccles. 3. Eleemosyna enim Patris non erit in oblivione: et sicut in sereno glacies, solventur peccata tua.

9 Secondly, it frees from eternal punishment, Tobiae 4: Eleemosyna ab omni peccato, et a morte liberat, et non patietur, animam ire in tenebras — Alms frees from all sin, and from death, and shall not suffer the soul to go into darkness.

> Secundo liberat a poena aeterna, Tobiae 4. Eleemosyna ab omni peccato, et a morte liberat, et non patietur, animam ire in tenebras.

10 Thirdly, it defends from transitory punishment, Dan. 4: Peccata tua eleemosynis redime — Rede your sins with alms.

> Tertio defendit a poena transitoria, Dan. 4. Peccata tua eleemosynis redime.

11 Fourthly, it mitigates the tinder of concupiscence, Ecclesiast. 3: Ignem ardentem extinguit aqua, et eleemosyna resistit peccatis — Water extinguishes a burning fire, and alms resists sins.

> Quarto mitigat fomitis concupiscentiam, Ecclesiast. 3. Ignem ardentem extinguit aqua, et eleemosyna resistit peccatis.

12 Fifthly, it gives victory over the enemy, Ecclesiastici 29: Conclude eleemosynam in corde pauperis, et haec pro te exorabit ab omni malo. Super Scutum potentis, et super Lanceam, adversus inimicum tuum pugnabit — Shut up alms in the heart of the poor man, and it shall pray for you against all evil. It shall fight for you as a shield of the mighty, and as a lance, against your enemy.

> Quinto dat de hoste victoriam, Ecclesiastici 29. Conclude eleemosynam in corde pauperis, et haec pro te exorabit ab omni malo. Super Scutum potentis, et super Lanceam, adversus inimicum tuum pugnabit.

13 Sixthly, it preserves grace, Eccles. 17: Eleemosyna viri, quasi signaculum cum ipso, gratiam hominis quasi pupillam conservabit — The alms of a man, as a signet with him, shall preserve the grace of a man as the apple of the eye.

> Sexto conservat gratiam, Eccles. 17. Eleemosyna viri, quasi signaculum cum ipso, gratiam hominis quasi pupillam conservabit.

14 Seventhly, it gives confidence of arriving at glory, Tob. 4: Fiducia magna erit coram summo Deo eleemosyna facientibus eam — Great shall be the confidence before the most high God for those who give alms. And he adds, that these things are judged in the Judgment, Matth. 25: namely, that those who have given alms are called to life; and those who omitted them are cast into eternal fire.

> Septimo dat fiduciam perveniendi ad gloriam, Tob. 4. Fiducia magna erit coram summo Deo eleemosyna facientibus eam. Et subdit, de his disceptari in Iudicio, Matth. 25. nempe quia, qui eleemosynas fecerunt, vocantur ad vitam; et qui omiserunt, eiiciuntur in ignem aeternum.

15 That he speaks of common necessities is clear; for the inquiry is made universally about the works of mercy toward all the needy.

> Quod vero loquatur de communibus necessitatibus, patet; nam universaliter de operibus misericordiae in omnes egentes fit inquisitio.

16 Moreover, he gives the conditions of these: The first is simplicity of heart, Matth. 6: Te autem faciente eleemosynam, nesciat sinistra tua, quid faciat dextera tua — But when you make alms, let not your left hand know what your right hand does. The second, discretion, Eccles. 12: Si benefeceris, scito cui benefeceris — If you have done well, know to whom you have done it. The third, compassion, Isa. 58: Cum effuderis esurienti animam tuam — When you shall pour out your soul to the hungry. And Iob. 30: Flebam quondam super eo, qui afflictus erat, et compatiebatur anima mea pauperi — I once wept for him that was afflicted, and my soul had compassion on the poor. The fourth, sweetness in speech, Eccles. 18: Nonne ardorem refrigerabit ros? Sic et verbum melius quam datum — Does not the dew refresh the heat? So also a word better than a gift. The fifth, cheerfulness in face, Eccles. 35: In omni dato hilarem fac vultum tuum — In every gift make a cheerful face. The sixth, due quantity, Tob. 4: Quomodo poteris; ita esto misericors. Si multum tibi fuerit, etc. — As you are able, so be merciful. If you have much, etc. — and he speaks of common necessities. The seventh, speed, Proverb. 3: Ne dicas amico tuo: vade, et revertere — Say not to your friend: Go, and come again,

> De his porro dat conditiones: Prima est simplicitas cordis, Matth. 6. Te autem faciente eleemosynam, nesciat sinistra tua, quid faciat dextera tua. Secunda, discretio, Eccles. 12. Si benefeceris, scito cui benefeceris. Tertia, compassio, Isa. 58. Cum effuderis esurienti animam tuam. Et Iob. 30. Flebam quondam super eo, qui afflictus erat, et compatiebatur anima mea pauperi. Quarta, dulcedo in sermone, Eccles. 18. Nonne ardorem refrigerabit ros? Sic et verbum melius quam datum. Quinta, hilaritas in facie, Eccles. 35. In omni dato hilarem fac vultum tuum. Sexta, debita quantitas, Tob. 4. Quomodo poteris; ita esto misericors. Si multum tibi fuerit, etc. en loquitur de communibus necessitatibus. Septima, celeritas, Proverb. 3. Ne dicas amico tuo: vade, et revertere, 17 He infers therefore D. Bonaventure from that text the argument of Christ: Since you Pharisees are full of uncleanness and iniquity, I teach you the necessary mode of cleansing yourselves, namely true penance, and alms from superfluities. For so you will make fruits worthy of penance.

> Infert igitur D. Bonav. ex illo textu argumento Christi: Cum vos Pharisaei, pleni sitis immunditia, et iniquitate, doceo vos modum necessarium emundandi vos ipsos, nempe vera poenitentia, et eleemosyna de superfluis. Sic enim facietis fructus dignos poenitentiae.

18 Similar is the passage Lucae tertio, where John, questioned by the crowds about how they could make fruits worthy of penance — about which he had said: Omnis arbor, quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, et in ignem mittetur — Every tree that does not make good fruit shall be cut down and cast into the fire — answered: Qui habet duas tunicas, det non habenti, et qui escas habet, similiter faciat — He who has two coats, let him give to him who has none; and he who has food, let him do likewise. The force of whose sentence D. Jerome rightly interprets, epist. ad Hedibiam, quaest. 1, as being that it is necessary to spend superfluities on the needy, as S. Doctor notes on that place of Luke. Therefore (says S. Doctor), since they had heard that it was necessary to make fruits worthy of penance, they ask; and he also brings forward Lucae 11, alleged above. But he admonishes most beautifully, with Bede and Gregory, homil. 20. in Evangelia, that a precept is given about dividing two coats, because one is superfluous; not about dividing one, if he does not have another; for so neither would be clothed — although that would be an eminent work, such as that of the most glorious Martin at the gate of Amiens, when he divided his cloak. Behold, S. Bonaventure plainly notes, with the Holy Fathers, that it is a precept. Therefore it is the same precept, Lucae 3. et 11. Quod superest, date — What remains, give. Where the particle superest does not signify what we call "for the rest," but what supplies or super-exists, as is had in the Greek, and Valencia observes, with the same Bede and D. Bonaventure, who reads: De eo, quod superest, or "from what super-exists," from the Greek idiom, of which S. Doctor was most skilled, as they know who read his works through. Moreover, here and in the places to be alleged, they observe that the precept is taken from mere superfluity.

> Similis est locus Lucae tertio*, ubi interrogatus Ioannes a turbis, Quomodo possent facere fructus dignos poenitentiae, de quibus dixerat:* Omnis arbor, quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, et in ignem mittetur. Respondit: Qui habet duas tunicas, det non habenti, et qui escas habet, similiter faciat. Cuius sententiae vim recte D. Hieronymus epist. ad Hedibiam, quaest. 1. eam esse interpretatur, ut necessarium sit superflua indigentibus erogare, ut advertit S. Doct. ad eum Lucae locum. Igitur (ait S. Doct.) ex quo necesse esse audierant, facere fructus dignos poenitentiae, interrogant; et adducit etiam id Lucae 11. supra allatum. Monet autem perbelle cum Beda, et Gregorio homil. 20. in Evangelia, dari praeceptum de duabus tunicis dividendis, quia altera est superflua; non de dividendo unam, si aliam non habeat; Sic enim neuter vestiretur; tametsi opus egregium esset, quale fuit gloriosissimi Martini in porta Ambiani, cum Chlamydem divisit: En S. Bonav. aperte cum SS. Patribus advertit, esse praeceptum. Idem igitur est praeceptum, Lucae 3. et 11. Quod superest, date. Ubi particula, superest*, non significat id, quod dicimus: De caetero, sed quod suppetit, seu superexistit, ut habetur in Graeco, et observat Valentia cum eodem Beda, et D. Bonav. qui legit:* De eo, quod superest*, seu superexistente, ex Graeco idiomate, cuius fuit S. Doct. peritissimus, ut norunt, qui eius opera perlegunt. Observant autem hic, et locis allegandis, praeceptum e sola sumi superfluitate.*

19 It is proved thirdly from D. Bonaventure in Diaeta, tit. 2. ad finem, from that 1. Timot. cap. 6. Divitibus huius saeculi praecipe facile tribuere, communicare, thesaurizare sibi fundamentum bonum in futurum — Charge the rich of this world to give easily, to communicate, to lay up for themselves a good foundation for the future. But S. Doctor notes that this is a precept given to the rich, not with respect to poor men in grave need, but precisely insofar as those riches of the rich, since they are superfluous to them, are owed to the Lord as tribute, or as a debt out of justice. And as Princes take away even the capital from those who defraud them of tributes; so also the Lord, from those who deny alms and retain their superfluities, takes away not only grace, but also, and often, temporal goods. Which must be gravely admonished; and of this he interprets Matth. 25. Tollite ab eo talentum, et date ei, qui decem talenta habet — Take away the talent from him, and give it to him who has ten talents; for from the avaricious man temporal substance is to be taken and given to him who, pitying the poor, fulfills the commands of the Lord and trades those riches so that he may receive a hundredfold in this life, and then life eternal. Hence I shall infer the reason.

> Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 2. ad finem*, ex illo* 1. Timot. cap. 6. Divitibus huius saeculi praecipe facile tribuere, communicare, thesaurizare sibi fundamentum bonum in futurum. Advertit autem S. Doct. hoc esse praeceptum, datum divitibus, non in ordine ad pauperes graviter egentes, sed praecise, quatenus illae opes divitum, eis superfluae cum sint, debentur Domino in tributum, seu debitum ex iustitia. Et sicut Principes defraudantibus tributa auferunt etiam capitale; ita et Dominus, negantibus eleemosynas, et retinentibus superflua, non solum aufert gratiam, sed etiam, et saepe, bona temporalia. Quod graviter admonendum est; et de hoc interpretatur id Matth. 25. Tollite ab eo talentum, et date ei, qui decem talenta habet; avaro siquidem tollenda est substantia temporalis, et danda illi, qui miserendo pauperibus, implet mandata Domini, et negotiatur illas divitias, ut Centuplum recipiat in hac vita, et deinde vitam aeternam. Hinc rationem inferam.

20 Then S. Doctor considers the motives with which one ought to be led to give alms generously. The first motive is that Christ declares alms made to himself, Matth. 25. Therefore he imposes on all who wish for the eternal kingdom that they make alms. Hence it is no great thing that rich men who wish for the kingdom from God buy it with a morsel of bread; and they ought to fear hearing: Ite maledicti — Go, you cursed — according to Proverb 21. Qui obturat aures suas ad clamorem pauperis, clamabit ipse, et non audietur — He who stops his ears at the cry of the poor shall himself cry, and shall not be heard. Therefore the first motive is: Quis postulet? — Who asks? — namely, God in the poor man. The second motive is: Quid petatur? — What is asked? — because God in the poor asks what is his own: Wherefore (says S. Doctor) David said, Psal. 29. Tua sunt Domine omnia, et quae de manu tua recepimus, dedimus tibi — All things are yours, O Lord, and what we have received from your hand we have given to you.

Deinde S. Doct. considerat motiva, quibus duces elargiri debet eleemosynam. Primum motivum est, quia eleemosynam sibi factam Christus protestatur Matth. 25. Ideo omnibus, volentibus regnum aeternum, faciendas eleemosynas imponit. Unde non est magnum, quod divites volentes a Deo regnum, illud emant frustulo panis; et timere debent, ne audiant: Ite maledicti*, iuxta id* Proverb 21. Qui obturat aures suas ad clamorem pauperis, clamabit ipse, et non audietur. Igitur primum motivum est: Quis postulet? idest, Deus in paupere. Secundum motivum est: Quid petatur? quia Deus in pauperibus petit id, quod suum est: Proinde (ait S. Doct.) dicebat David, Psal. 29. Tua sunt Domine omnia, et quae de manu tua recepimus, dedimus tibi.

21 The third motive is: Ad quid petis Deus? — For what do you ask, God? — namely that he repay as at usury: Centuplum accipiet, et vitam aeternam possidebit — He shall receive a hundredfold, and shall possess life eternal. S. Doctor uses these arguments, mingled with so many ornaments of Scripture, most useful also for sermons.

Tertium motivum est: Ad quid petis Deus? nempe ut ad usuram reddat: Centuplum accipiet, et vitam aeternam possidebit. His argumentis utitur S. Doct. mixtis tot Scripturarum ornamentis, etiam ad conciones utilissimis.

22 It is proved thirdly from D. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 30. quaest. 5, from that Proverb. 25. Si esurierit inimicus tuus, ciba illum; et si sitierit, potum da illi — If your enemy hunger, feed him; and if he thirst, give him drink. And Exodi 23. Si occurreris bovi inimici tui, aut asino erranti, reduc ad eum. Si videris asinum odientis te iacere sub onere, non pertransibis, sed sublevabis cum eo — If you meet the ox of your enemy, or his ass going astray, bring it back to him. If you see the ass of him who hates you lying under its burden, you shall not pass by, but shall lift it up with him. This indeed is not a ceremonial law or judicial precept, but the Natural and Divine Law, on account of which, Matth. 25, all shall be examined in judgment.

Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 30. quaest. 5. illo Proverb. 25. Si esurierit inimicus tuus, ciba illum; et si sitierit, potum da illi. Et Exodi 23. Si occurreris bovi inimici tui, aut asino erranti, reduc ad eum. Si videris asinum odientis te iacere sub onere, non pertransibis, sed sublevabis cum eo. Haec sane non est lex caeremonialis, aut iudiciale praeceptum, sed Naturalis, et Divina Lex, ob quam Matth. 25. in iudicio examinabuntur omnes.

23 It is proved fourthly from D. Bonaventure ad 18. Lucae with those words: Facilius est, camelum per foramen acus transire, quam divitem intrare in regnum caelorum — It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. But Christ said this to him who wished to give his riches in some part to the poor — against whom it is said, Eccles. 7. Noli esse pusillanimis in animo tuo: exorare, et facere eleemosynam ne despicias — Be not fainthearted in your mind: to pray, and to make alms, do not despise — as S. Doctor observes with Theophylactus.

Probatur quarto a D. Bonav. ad 18. Lucae illis verbis: Facilius est, camelum per foramen acus transire, quam divitem intrare in regnum caelorum: Hoc autem dixit Christus illi, qui volebat suas divitias aliqua ex parte dare pauperibus, contra quem dicitur, Eccles. 7. Noli esse pusillanimis in animo tuo: exorare, et facere eleemosynam ne despicias*, ut observat S. Doctor cum Theophylacto.*

24 Therefore clinging men are not saved, he says, because, as it is said prima Timot. 6. Incidunt in laqueum Diaboli, et desideria, quae mergunt homines — They fall into the snare of the Devil, and into desires which drown men. Where note that this is not said of the rich who are unwilling to give up everything and vow poverty; for that is the counsel which Christ gave to that young man; but seeing him bitter, resisting any alms whatsoever from superfluities, he said: Quam difficile est, etc. Facilius est, etc. ut supra ad 18. Lucae — How difficult it is, etc. It is easier, etc., as above at 18. Luke.

Ideo homines tenaces non salvati, ait, quia, ut dicitur prima Timot. 6. Incidunt in laqueum Diaboli, et desideria, quae mergunt homines. Ubi adverte, haec non dici in divites, qui nolunt omnia dimittere, et paupertatem vovere; hoc enim est consilium, quod illi Iuveni dedit Christus; sed videns eum amarum, renitentem ad quamcumque eleemosynam e superfluis, dixit: Quam difficile est, etc. Facilius est, etc. ut supra ad 18. Lucae.

25 It is proved fifthly from S. Doctor ex illo Lucae 16, where that rich man Sepultus est in inferno — was buried in hell — doubtless because of his lack of mercy toward Lazarus.

Probatur quinto a S. Doct. ex illo Lucae 16. ubi dives ille: Sepultus est in inferno*, nimirum propter immisericordiam in Lazarum.*

26 It is proved sixthly from S. Doctor ex illo Lucae 12, where that rich man, whose field had yielded abundant fruits, said: Destruam horrea mea, et faciam maiora: et illuc congregabo omnia, quae nata sunt mihi, et bona mea — I will destroy my barns and make greater ones, and there I will gather all things that are born to me and my goods — but by night he heard: Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam repetent a te; quae autem parasti, cuius erunt? Sic est (inquit Christus) qui sibi thesaurizat, et non est in Deum dives — Fool, this night your soul shall be required of you; whose then shall those things be which you have provided? So is he (says Christ) who lays up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God — where he admonishes that which he had taught Matth. 6, where alms is enjoined, and the simple manner handed down: Cum facis eleemosynam noli tuba canere — When you make alms, do not sound a trumpet. He adds: Thesaurizate vobis thesauros in caelo, etc. Nolite thesaurizare vobis thesauros in terra — Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, etc. Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth. As if to say: Everyone who lays up treasure on earth, retaining his superfluities, loses the treasures of heaven, destitute of Divine grace. Tanner also uses these means.

Probatur sexto a S. Doct. ex illo Lucae 12. ubi dives ille, cui ager fructus uberes reddiderat, dicebat: Destruam horrea mea, et faciam maiora: et illuc congregabo omnia, quae nata sunt mihi, et bona mea*, sed nocte* audiit: Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam repetent a te; quae autem parasti, cuius erunt? Sic est (inquit Christus) qui sibi thesaurizat, et non est in Deum dives, ubi admonet id, quod docuerat Matth. 6. ubi eleemosyna iniuncta, et modo tradito simplici: Cum facis eleemosynam noli tuba canere. Subdit: Thesaurizate vobis thesauros in caelo, etc. Nolite thesaurizare vobis thesauros in terra. Quasi diceret: Omnis, qui thesaurizat in terris, retinens superflua, amittit caelestes thesauros, inops Divinae gratiae. His mediis utitur etiam Tannerus.

27 Hence Basil, on that passage: Destruam, etc. — I will destroy, etc. — says: Cur tu abundas; ille vero mendicat, nisi ut tu bona dispensationis merita consequaris; ille vero patientia braviis decoretur. Est panis famelici, quem tu tenes; tunica, quam in conclavi conservas; discalceati calceus, qui penes te marcescit; indigentis argentum, quod possides infossum. Quocirca tot iniuriaris, quot dare valens es — Why do you abound, while that man begs, unless that you may obtain the merits of dispensation of goods, and that he be adorned with the prizes of patience? The bread of the hungry is that which you hold; the coat, which you keep in your closet; the shoe of the barefoot, which withers in your keeping; the silver of the needy, which you possess buried. Wherefore you commit as many injuries as you are able to give.

Hinc Basilius in illum locum: Destruam, etc. ait: Cur tu abundas; ille vero mendicat, nisi ut tu bona dispensationis merita consequaris; ille vero patientia braviis decoretur. Est panis famelici, quem tu tenes; tunica, quam in conclavi conservas; discalceati calceus, qui penes te marcescit; indigentis argentum, quod possides infossum. Quocirca tot iniuriaris, quot dare valens es.

28 Crying out SIMILAR things is S. Gregory of Nyssa, and he concludes, in the oration on loving the poor: O pauperum inimici! an nescitis horum causa commemorari in Evangelio exempla horrenda, et terribilia? — O enemies of the poor! Do you not know that for their sake horrible and terrible examples are recounted in the Gospel? And he adds the two examples of the twin rich men alleged above Lucae 12. et 16.

SIMILIA exclamans habet S. Gregorius Nyss. et concludit, oratione de pauperibus amandis: O pauperum inimici! an nescitis horum causa commemorari in Evangelio exempla horrenda, et terribilia? Ac subdit duo exempla geminorum divitum supra allata Lucae 12. et 16.

29 And D. Ambrose lib. de Nabuthe, cap. 11 has the same, and serm. 81: Quis tam iniustus, tam avidus, quam, qui multorum alimenta suum non usum, sed abundantiam, et delicias facit? Neque enim maius est crimen habenti tollere, quam cum possides, et abundas, indigentibus denegare. Esurientium panis est, quem tu detines — Who is so unjust, so greedy, as he who makes the food of many his own abundance and delights, not his use? For no greater crime is it to take from one who has, than, when you possess and abound, to deny the needy. The bread of the hungry is that which you detain.

Et D. Ambrosius lib. de Nabuthe, cap. 11. Eadem habet, et serm. 81. Quis tam iniustus, tam avidus, quam, qui multorum alimenta suum non usum, sed abundantiam, et delicias facit? Neque enim maius est crimen habenti tollere, quam cum possides, et abundas, indigentibus denegare. Esurientium panis est, quem tu detines.

30 D. HIERONYMUS in regula, cap. 6, as cited by Gratian, says: Aliena rapere convincitur, qui ultra necessaria sibi retinere probatur — He is convicted of seizing what belongs to others who is proved to retain for himself beyond the necessaries.

D. HIERONYMUS in regula, cap. 6. et refertur a Gratiano, ait: Aliena rapere convincitur, qui ultra necessaria sibi retinere probatur.

31 D. AUGUST. in Psal. 147: Caetera, quae superflua iacent, aliorum sunt necessaria: superflua igitur necessaria sunt pauperum; res aliena possidetur, cum superflua retinentur — The rest, which lie superfluous, are the necessaries of others: therefore superfluities are the necessaries of the poor; another's property is possessed, when superfluities are retained. The same he asserts in serm. 119, where he concludes: Quidquid enim Deus nobis, plusquam opus est dederit, non nobis specialiter dedit, sed per nos aliis erogandum transmisit: quod si non dederimus, res alienas invasimus — For whatever God has given us more than is needed, he gave not specially to us, but transmitted through us to be spent on others: and if we do not give, we have invaded the goods of others. Beda has similar things in cap. 11. Lucae.

D. AUGUST. in Psal. 147. Caetera, quae superflua iacent, aliorum sunt necessaria: superflua igitur necessaria sunt pauperum; res aliena possidetur, cum superflua retinentur. Idem asserit serm. 119. ubi concludit: Quidquid enim Deus nobis, plusquam opus est dederit, non nobis specialiter dedit, sed per nos aliis erogandum transmisit: quod si non dederimus, res alienas invasimus. Similia habet Beda in cap. 11. Lucae.

32 It is CONFIRMED by D. Bonaventure lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 49, from that Lucae 16. Matth. 6: Facite vobis amicos de mamona iniquitatis — Make for yourselves friends of the mammon of iniquity — where D. Gregory: Si caelestis patrimonium eleemosynis emitur, pauperes non sunt audiendi, ut egeni; sed ut patroni exorandi — If the heavenly patrimony is bought with alms, the poor are not to be heard as needy, but to be entreated as patrons — thus homil. 40. in Evang. near the end. But S. Doctor notes in connection with that passage that Mammon is called the mammon of iniquity, not because the goods were acquired by rapine and iniquity; but because riches mostly lead to iniquity, as is said Eccles. 11: Si dives fueris, non eris immunis a peccato — If you shall be rich, you shall not be free from sin. But it is understood (says D. Bonaventure) that it ought to be given from riches which are possessed by a just title, and yet beget iniquity unless they are distributed, according to that Eccles. 10: Nihil est iniquius, quam amare pecuniam — Nothing is more iniquitous than to love money. For he who does so has even his soul for sale. Of these riches, I say, friends ought to be made to you through the bestowal of alms, which manifest the affection of piety; for it is said prima Ioan. 3: Qui habuerit substantiam huius mundi, et viderit fratrem suum necessitatem habere, et clauserit viscera sua ab eo: quomodo charitas Dei manet in eo — He who shall have the substance of this world, and shall see his brother have need, and shall shut up his bowels from him: how does the charity of God remain in him? And Eccles. 29: Perde pecuniam propter fidem, et amicum, et ne abscondas illam sub lapidem in perditionem — Lose your money for faith and a friend, and hide it not under a stone to perish. And Proverb. 11: Qui abscondit frumenta maledicetur in populis — He who hides up grain shall be cursed among the peoples. Thus far S. Doctor at 16. Lucae.

CONFIRMATUR a D. Bonavent. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 49. ex illo Lucae 16. Matth. 6. Facite vobis amicos de mamona iniquitatis*, ubi D. Gregorius:* Si caelestis patrimonium eleemosynis emitur, pauperes non sunt audiendi, ut egeni; sed ut patroni exorandi*, ita homil. 40. in Evang. circa finem. Advertit autem ad cum locum S. Doct. vocari Mammonam iniquitatis, non quia de rapina, et iniquitate acquisita sint bona; sed quia divitiae plerumque ad iniquitatem ducunt, ut dicitur Eccles. 11.* Si dives fueris, non eris immunis a peccato. Sed intelligitur (ait D. Bonav.) quod dari debeat de divitiis, quae iusto titulo possidentur, et tamen iniquitatem pariunt, nisi destribuantur secundum illud Eccles. 10. Nihil est iniquius, quam amare pecuniam. Hic enim et animam suam venalem habet. De his inquam divitiis debent tibi fieri amici per largitionem eleemosynarum, quae manifestant pietatis affectum; nam dicitur prima Ioan. 3. Qui habuerit substantiam huius mundi, et viderit fratrem suum necessitatem habere, et clauserit viscera sua ab eo: quomodo charitas Dei manet in eo. Et Eccles. 29. Perde pecuniam propter fidem, et amicum, et ne abscondas illam sub lapidem in perditionem. Et Proverb. 11. Qui abscondit frumenta maledicetur in populis. Hucusque S. Doctor ad 16. Lucae.

33 AGAIN in the Pharetra the same confirms it, from that Matth. 25, where he adds D. Gregory homil. 40: Ad tribuendum pigri cur estis, quando hoc, quod iacetis in terra porrigitis, sedenti in caelo datis? Dominus ait: Quidquid fecistis uni de his fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis — Why are you slothful in bestowing, when you give to him who sits in heaven what you extend lying on the earth? The Lord says: What you have done to one of these my least brethren, you have done to me.

RURSUS in Pharetra idem confirmat, illo Matth. 25. ubi apponit D. Gregorium homil. 40. Ad tribuendum pigri cur estis, quando hoc, quod iacetis in terra porrigitis, sedenti in caelo datis? Dominus ait: Quidquid fecistis uni de his fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis.

34 These authorities, indeed, speak not of grave necessities only, but of ordinary ones, as is evident to the reader. Nor is this precept only at certain times, but it is taken from the very nature of superfluous riches, and binds by the very fact that superfluous riches are present.

Hae sane authoritates, non de solis gravibus necessitatibus loquuntur, sed de ordinariis, ut constat legenti. Neque solum praeceptum hoc est nonnullis vicibus, sed ex natura ipsa divitiarum superfluarum sumitur, et obligat eo ipso, quod divitiae adsint superfluae.

35 It is PROVED also by the reason indicated in argument 2, from D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 2, which is taken from the Holy Fathers — Basil, Ambrose, August., Nyssenus, and others above — and which D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7, Valencia here, and others use. The division of things made by the law of nations was just, when before all things were common. But if it is just, it ought to have constituted a human mode of living from things before common by the law of nature: Yet what would be an equal distribution, if some washed their robes in wine, swam in butter, abounding in all riches, flowing with all commodities; while others had not even bread enough; and yet the most opulent were not held to furnish necessaries to these poor men? Surely this is the pedagogy reserved to God, that if the rich have redundancies, they give to the needy something at least for necessity. This indeed would be iniquitous, to leave the greater part of men in misery, when by the law of nature they were equally owners before.

PROBATUR etiam ratione indicata argumento 2. ex D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 2. quae sumpta est e SS. Patribus, Basilio, Ambrosio, August. Nysseno, et aliis supra, eaque utantur D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. Valentia hic, et alii. Divisio rerum facta iure gentium iusta fuit, cum essent antea omnia communia. Quod si iusta est, oportuit, ut constituerit modum humanum vivendi de rebus antea communibus iure naturae: At quae esset aequa distributio; si aliqui lavarent in vino stolas, in butyro natarent, opibus omnibus redundantes, commodis omnibus affluerent; alii vero nec panem satis haberent; neque his pauperibus tenerentur opulentissimi necessaria suppeditare? Sane hoc est Deo pedagium reservatum, ut si divites habent redundantia, dent inopibus aliqua saltem ad necessitatem. Hoc sane iniquum esset, relinquere maiorem hominum partem in miseria, cum iure naturae essent aeque antea domini.

36 THAT that distribution was just is proved; for in it all the peoples consented unanimously, by the dictate of natural reason; otherwise the Laws of the law of nations would have to be rescinded, which are nevertheless everywhere held in the highest esteem.

QUOD vero illa distributio fuerit iusta, probatur; nam in eam consenserunt omnes gentes unanimes, naturalis rationis dictamine; alioqui Leges iuris gentium essent rescindendae, quae tamen ubique plurimi aestimantur.

37 THEREFORE God, from nature, preserved this in that law of nature: that superfluities be distributed to the poor. Hence Ambrose, serm. 81: Numquid iniquus est Deus, ut nobis non aequaliter distribuat vitae subsidia? ut tu quidem esses affluens, et abundans, aliis vero deesset, et egerent? — Is God iniquitous, that he does not distribute the helps of life equally to us? so that you indeed should be affluent and abounding, while others lack and are needy? Behold the reason of D. Bonaventure assigned above.

> IGITUR iuris naturae hoc servavit in illo iure Deus ex natura, ut superflua in pauperes distribuantur. Ideo Ambrosius, serm. 81. Numquid iniquus est Deus, ut nobis non aequaliter distribuat vitae subsidia? ut tu quidem esses affluens, et abundans, aliis vero deesset, et egerent? En ratio D. Bonav. supra assignata.

38 You OBJECT first with Diana, and others collected by him: If all superfluities were to be given to the poor, it would be necessary to condemn all rich men who have superfluities, and all their Confessors. Vasquez presses it num. 14: Laity can retain from patrimonial goods for their own state, or that of their blood relations, to be increased; but then it will never be superfluous. Hence you will scarcely find superfluities among seculars and Kings. These things indeed are plausible to the Confessors of the rich.

> OBIICIES primo cum Diana, et aliis apud eum; Si omnia superflua essent danda pauperibus, oporteret damnare omnes divites, qui habent superflua, et omnes eorum Confessarios. Urget Vasquez num. 14. Laici possunt de bonis patrimonialibus servare ad statum suum, vel consanguineorum, augendum; at tunc illud non erit unquam superfluum. Unde vix in saecularibus, et Regibus superflua invenies. Haec sane Confessariis divitum plausibilis sunt.

39 Valencia ANSWERS, from the doctrine of D. Bonaventure above in the arguments, that the precept of spending alms on the needy arises not from grave, but from ordinary necessity, not from the force of necessity; but from the force of superfluity, which indeed is to be prudently estimated, so that he is not held to spend to every needy man, but to those whom he shall see, with a prudent proportion, to pertain to him, the things to be retained being retained, for his state and the preservation of that state; indeed, and with some cautious augmentation, as men of a scrupulous conscience are wont. Yet the avarice of that rich man, Lucae 12, who wished to enlarge his barns so as to change his state, is to be shunned, for this mode is reprobated by God. Hence that rich man is called a fool by God. Therefore the rich ought to distribute a part to the needy from their superfluities, with regard had to place, time, and other circumstances. And so in our opinion the rich, or their Confessors, are not condemned so headlong; but avarice and cupidity are condemned, which if any Confessors foster (Valencia says) they will be blind, giving leadership to the blind, and both will fall into the pit, as is said Matth. 15.

> RESPONDet Valentia ex doctrina D. Bonaventurae supra in argumentis, praeceptum erogandi eleemosynas egentibus, non gravi, sed ordinaria necessitate oriri, non ex vi necessitatis; sed ex vi superfluitatis, quae quidem prudenter aestimanda, ut non cuicumque teneatur erogare egenti, sed illis, quos proportione prudenti viderit ad se pertinere, servatis servandis, ad statum, et status ipsius conservationem; imo, et aliquo cauto augmento, ut solent homines timoratae conscientiae. Cavenda tamen est avaritia illius divitis, Lucae 12. qui horrea volebat ampliare, ut mutaret statum, hic enim modus est a Deo reprobatus. Ideo dives ille stultus vocatur a Deo. Debent igitur pars egentibus distribuere divites e superfluis, habita ratione loci, temporis, et aliarum circumstantiarum. Itaque in nostra sententia non damnantur adeo in praeceps divites, aut eorum Confessarii; sed damnantur avaritia, et cupiditas, quam siqui foveant Confessarii (ait Valentia) caeci erunt, caecis ducatum praebentes, et ambo in foveam cadent, ut dicitur Matth. 15.

40 You OBJECT secondly. If he is held to give his superfluities, and cannot retain them: Therefore neither can he acquire them.

> OBIICIES secundo. Si tenetur, dare superflua, nec ea potest retinere: Ergo neque potest ea acquirere.

41 Valencia ANSWERS, denying the sequel, because it is not a sin simply to have superfluities; but to retain them, not giving on occasions, even to the needy; indeed, to acquire some, so that he may provide prudently both for himself and be able to give generously to the needy: but it would be a sin if at once the possessions were ill-gotten. Those things indeed cannot be acquired which are detained against justice; nor if they are acquired with that mind, that you wish to retain them tenaciously, denying alms to the needy on occasions; But to acquire them simply is not evil; for these can be licitly retained, giving on occasions even to poor Churches for pious uses, etc. Hence nor are even certain things prohibited for their own state, as banquets, etc.

> RESPONDet Valentia, negando sequelam, quia non est peccatum, simpliciter habere superflua; sed ea retinere, non dando pro opportunitate, etiam egentibus; imo aliqua acquirere, ut et sibi prudenter provideat, et egentibus valeat largiri: esset autem peccatum, si statim habita essent malae possessionis. Nequeunt sane acquiri, quae contra iustitiam detinentur; neque si eo animo acquirantur, ut mordice velis ea retinere, negando in opportunitatibus eleemosynas egentibus; At ea acquirere simpliciter, non est malum; nam haec possunt licite retineri, dando pro opportunitatibus etiam pauperibus Ecclesiis ad pios usus, etc. Unde nec prohibentur etiam aliqua pro suo statu, ut convivia, etc.

1 The FIRST opinion is negative. So Cajetan in the treatise on alms and in the Summa, at the word Alms; Sanchez tom. 1. opusc. lib. 1. cap. 5. disp. 5. num. 44; Martin Ledesma in 2. p. q. quaest. 18. art. 3; D. Thomas in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 4. quaestiunc. 1; Salo quaest. 31. art. 1; Soto de Iustitia, lib. 5. quaest. 8. art. 1; Navarrus de restit. lib. 3. cap. 1. num. 122; Diana is to be cited; Fulgentius lib. 3. cap. 10.

> An teneatur quis aliquando facere eleemosynam de necessariis ad statum, extra necessitatem proximi extremam.
> PRIMA opinio est negativa. Ita Caietanus in tract. de eleemos. et in Summa, verbo Eleemosyna, Sanchez tom. 1. opusc. lib. 1. cap. 5. disp. 5. num. 44. Martin. Ledesma in 2. p. q. quaest. 18. art. 3. D. Thom. in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 4. quaestiunc. 1. Salon. quaest. 31. art. 1. Sotus de Iustitia, lib. 5. quaest. 8. art. 1. Navar. de restit. lib. 3. cap. 1. num. 122. Diana citandus. Fulgenc. lib. 3. cap. 10.

2 The SECOND opinion is that he is obliged, provided it can be done with less inconvenience than that which the needy neighbor undergoes; for instance, if the neighbor must fall from his state, or incur calamities. So Paludanus 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3; Adrian quodl. 12. art. 2. concl. 2; Bannes quaest. 31. art. 6. dub. 4, who says that certain theologians of our time have taught this opinion — Victoria, Soto,

Cano; and it seems to be the opinion of D. Thomas art. 5. ad 3. Valencia also defends it disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4; Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12. This seems to me the opinion of D. Bonaventure LL. CC. in the preceding quaest., which Hurtado disp. 159. sect. 4. §. 92 and Sylvester quaest. 32. art. 6 uphold among the moderns, and others collected in Diana 4. p. tract. 4. resol. 225. and p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 15.

> SECUNDA sententia est, teneri, si tamen potest fieri cum minori incommodo, quam sit illud, quod subit proximus egens, puta, si proximus excidere debeat e suo statu, vel calamitates incurrere. Ita Palud. 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Adrianus quodl. 12. art. 2. concl. 2. Bannes quaest. 31. art. 6. dub. 4. qui ait, hanc sententiam docuisse aliquos Theologos huius tempestatis, Victoriam, Sotum, Canum; et videtur sententia esse D. Thomae art. 5. ad 3. Eam etiam tuetur Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4. Tannetus disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 12. Haec mihi videtur sententia D. Bonau. LL. CC. quaest. praecedenti, quam et modernis tuentur Hurtadus disp. 159. sect. 4. §. 92. Sylvest. quaest. 32. art. 6. et alii apud Dianam 4. p. tract. 4. resol. 225. et p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 15.

3 It is proved first from D. Bonaventure 3. dist. 29. quaest. 6, where he shows that charity must go forth into effect; and he brings forward prima Ioan. 3, where after saying: If anyone have the substance of this world, and see his brother have need, and shut up his bowels from him: how does the Charity of God remain in him? he concludes: Let us not love in tongue, but in deed, and in truth. This, he infers, is done if one has not denied one's own substance in any way to one's neighbor, when he is in a necessity that is not extreme; but if he has denied it, it is inferred that he does not have Charity.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonau. 3. dist. 29. quaest. 6. ubi ostendit, charitatem debere in effectum exire, affert autem id, prima Ioan. 3. ubi postquam dixit: Si quis habuerit substantiam huius mundi, et viderit fratrem suum necessitatem habere, et clauserit viscera sua ab eo: quomodo Charitas Dei manet in illo. Concludit: Non diligamus lingua, sed opere, et veritate. Id autem fieri infert, si propriam substantiam non negaverit utcumque proximo suo, in necessitate non extrema constituto: quod si negaverit, infertur, eum Charitatem non habere.

4 It is proved secondly by that example Matth. 18 of the man who refused to forgive the debt to the one who owed him, and was delivered to the torturers; and yet he was such that he himself had not wherewith to pay his Lord. Hence he stood in need of those things which his fellow servant owed.

> PROBATUR secundo, exemplo illo Matth. 18. illius, qui noluit remittere debitum illi, qui debebat sibi; et traditus est tortoribus; et tamen iste erat talis, ut neque ipse haberet unde solveret Domino suo. Ideo egebat his, quae conservus debebat.

5 It is proved thirdly from the Fathers, who, while they say alms are to be given from superfluities, seem to understand by superfluities also the abundance suitable to one's state, which are to be given when the neighbor is in necessity, as Valencia observes after D. Bonaventure 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad ultimum.

> PROBATUR tertio ex Patribus, qui dum aiunt, e superfluis dandam eleemosynam, per superflua, etiam abundantia, statui convenientia, videntur intelligere, quae in necessitate proximis sunt danda, ut observat Valentia post D. Bonau. 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad ultimum.

6 You object. Since the necessities of the poor are very many, very many rich men, who do not give what is suitable to their own state, would be condemned — who certainly do not gladly listen to this tune, and wise men find no reason why they should be condemned.

> OBIICIES. Cum plurimae sint necessitates inopum, plurimi divites, non dantes ea, quae suo statui competunt, damnarentur, qui profecto hanc musicam libenter non audiunt, nec viri sapientes inveniunt, cur eos damnent.

7 It is answered that the necessities of which we speak are not so many, so as to be evident even to us, so that many are condemned; and certainly Christian charity seems to teach by its own light that other Christians, who have slipped into miseries, are to be relieved with some inconvenience of ours, even a notable one: nor is it true, as Diana says, that the rich have a right to live splendidly in their own state at so great damage and misery to the poor.

> RESPONDetVR, non esse adeo multas necessitates, de quibus loquimur, ita ut etiam nobis constent, ut multi damnentur; et certe charitas Christiana videtur suo lumine docere, sublevandos alios Christianos, in miserias elapsos, aliquo nostro incommodo, etiam notabili: Neque verum est, quod ait Diana, divites habere ius ad vivendum in suo statu opipare, tanto inopum damno, et miseria.

Question VI: Whether alms is owed in justice to one in extreme need

1 The FIRST opinion is that in such a case alms are given out of mercy alone. So Lorca 2. 2. sect. 3. disp. 39. membr. 4. num. 45; Sanchius in opusc. tomo 1. lib. 1. cap. 5. dub. 5. num. 61; Salo 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 7. controv. 2; Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 6; Maldonatus 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 6. dub. 3; Azor tom. 2. lib. 12. cap. 9. quaesito 3; Turrianus tom. 1. in 2. 2. disp. 82. dub. 3; Soto de Iustitia lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 4. et lib. 5. quaest. 3. art. 4; Bellarmine lib. de eleemos. cap. 6; Louis of Saint Juan in Summa, quaest. de eleemos. art. 3. dub. 3. diff. 3; Coninck disp. 27. dub. 7. num. 104; Reginaldus tom. 1. lib. 4. cap. 20. num. 264; Gordonus tom. 2. lib. 6. quaest. 14. cap. 3. §. 2; Molina Tom. 1. tract. 2. disp. 144; Vasquez opusc. de eleemos. cap. 1. num. 37; Suarez de Charitate, disp. 7. sect. 6; Villalobos in summa, tom. 1. tract. 22. diffic. 2. num. 9; Diana p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 2; Caspensis disp. 5. sect. 2.

2 The SECOND opinion is that in such a case it is a debt out of justice. So D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. dub. 5; D. Thomas quaest. 118. art. 4. ad 2; Cajetan ibi art. 3; Aragon 1. 2. quaest. 32. art. 5; Spino in spec. testament. gloss. 6. num. 8; Navarrus.

> SECUNDA sententia est, debitum esse ex iustitia in tali casu. Ita D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. dub. 5. D. Thom. quaest. 118. art. 4. ad 2. Caietan. ibi art. 3. Aragon. 1. 2. quaest. 32. art. 5. Spino in spec. testament. gloss. 6. num. 8. Navar.

3 The same is the opinion of the Holy Fathers, whom I recited in quaest. 4, and they are cited in Gratian dist. 42.

> EADEM est sententia Sanctorum Patrum, quos recensui quaest. 4. et referuntur in Gratiano dist. 42.

4 I ASSERT, with this opinion, that alms are owed to one in extreme indigence out of justice.

> ASSERO cum hac sententia, extreme indigenti deberi Eleemosynam ex iustitia.

5 It is proved, because all goods, common by the law of nature, were made private property with this condition, as I said in quaest. 4. Hence Hurtado reconciles the authors thus: one is held out of justice when the neighbor is in extreme need of money, clothing, and other goods, the division of which was made by the law of nations; not when the neighbor has need of our industry, for he never had a right to that.

> PROBATUR, quia bona omnia, iure naturae communia, facta sunt propria cum hac conditione, ut dixi quaest. 4. Quare Hurtadus sic authores conciliat, teneri ex iustitia, quando proximus extreme indiget pecunia, veste, et caeteris bonis, quorum divisio facta est iure gentium, non quando proximus eget nostra industria, quia ad eam nunquam ille ius habuit.

6 The adversaries answer that this is not to be taken so strictly that, in extreme necessity, the rich owner loses ownership because of another's necessity; but only that he is bound out of mercy.

> RESPONDENT adversarii, non esse adeo stricte capiendum, ut in extrema necessitate dominus rerum dives amittat dominium ob necessitatem alterius; sed solum quod ex misericordia obligetur.

7 Yet it is not necessary that ownership be lost; but it suffices that, for the time of the necessity, the needy man be able to use them.

> At non est necesse, ut amittatur dominium; sed sufficit, ut pro tempore necessitatis possit illis uti, egens.

8 From these, other quaestiones are solved.

> Ex his aliae quaestiones solvuntur.

9 FIRST, Villalobos Tom. 1. tract. 22. difficult. 2. num. 10 infers, with Cajetan, Sarmiento, and Aragon, that one in extreme indigence can have recourse to a judge against the rich.

> PRIMO enim deducit Villalobos Tom. 1. tract. 22. difficult. 2. num. 10. cum Caietano, Sarmiento, et Aragonio, posse extreme egentem ad iudicem recurrere contra divites.

10 SECONDLY you have, that if the neighbor has need not only of the use, but of the thing itself, it is not enough to lend. So Villalobos Tract. 2. difficult. 2; Ariaga quaest. 118. art. 5; Bannes dub. 3; Granado 22. controv. 3. tract. 11. disp. 7; Valencia Tom. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4; Turrianus v. 2. Tom. 1. disp. 82. dub. 6; Suarez de Charitate, disp. 7. sect. 5; Becanus 2. 2. tom. 1. cap. 21; Lorca 2. 2. disp. 39. num. 54; Soto de Iustitia, lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1; Coninck disp. 27. dub. 9. num. 153; Reginaldus tom 1. lib. 4. cap. 20. num. 260; Diana loc. cit. resol. 5, against Tanner num. 20 and others collected by him. So also Foliensis lib. 3. cap. 10.

> SECUNDO habes, quod si proximus eget non solo usu, sed re ipsa, non satisfieri mutuando. Ita Villalobos Tract. 2. difficult. 2. Ariag. quaest. 118. art. 5. Bannes dub. 3. Granado 22. controv. 3. tract. 11. disp. 7. Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4. Turrianus v. 2. 11 THIRDLY they gather that one is obliged, from goods necessary for one's state, to relieve one in extreme indigence. So Suarez de Charit. disp. 7. sect. 4; Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 82. dub. 4; Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4; Vasquez de eleemos. cap. 1. num. 10. et 25; Filliuccius tom. 2. tract. 28. cap. 3. num. 64;

Gordonus tom. 2. lib. 6. quaest. 14. cap. 4. n. 7; Villalobos Tom. 1. tract. 22. diffic. 20, citing Bannes, Cajetan, and Sylvester against Foliensis loc. citat.

> TERTIO colligunt, obligari, ex bonis necessariis ad statum, opitulari extremo indigenti. Ita Suarez de Charit. disp. 7. sect. 4. Turrian. 2. 2. disp. 82. dub. 4. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 4. Vasquez de eleemos. cap. 1. num. 10. et 25. Filliuc. tom. 2. tract. 28. cap. 3. num. 64. Gordonus tom. 2. lib. 6. quaest. 14. cap. 4. n. 7. Villalob. Tom. 1. tract. 22. diffic. 20. adducens Bannen, Caietanum, Sylvestrum contra Fuliensem loc. citat.

12 They DEDUCE, fourthly, Diana resol. 8; Peter Navarrus lib. 4. cap. 4. num. 24; Coninck disp. 27. dub. 10. num. 166; Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. p. 10; Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 3. §. 63, that he who stole before extreme necessity, and completed the theft in extreme necessity, is not held to restitution; and much less, if he stole in extreme necessity, is he afterwards held, even if he could restore — as Soto teaches de Iustitia, lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1; Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 31. art. 6; Sylvester; Angelus; Rosella; Tabiena — whom he cites and follows, and Azor does not dissent Tom. 2. lib. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 7, nor does Diana resol. 9.

> DEDUCUNT quarto Diana resol. 8. Petrus Navar. lib. 4. cap. 4. num. 24. Coninch. disp. 27. dub. 10. num. 166. Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. p. 10. Hurtadus 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 3. §. 63. eum, qui furatus est ante extremam necessitatem, et furtum in necessitate extrema consumpsit, non teneri ad restitutionem; multo minus, si in extrema necessitate furatus est, postea non tenetur, etiamsi possit restituere, ut docent Sotus de Iustitia, lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 31. art. 6. Sylvest. Angel. Rosella, Tabiena, quos citat, et sequitur Azor. Tom. 2. lib. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 7. nec dissentit Diana resol. 9.

13 From which I draw an argument ad hominem for our principal assertion: Therefore he is not held to restore, because the consumption of another's goods in extreme necessity is just — for indeed in that necessity it is licit to take goods from the rich, and this is done justly: Therefore alms are owed out of justice to one in extreme indigence.

> Ex quo deduco argumentum ad hominem pro nostra principali assertione; Ideo non tenetur is restituere, quia iusta est consumptio rei alienae in extrema necessitate, ideo enim in ea necessitate licet auferre res a divitibus, et hoc fit iuste: Ergo ex iustitia debetur eleemosyna extreme indigenti.

14 Indeed, they deduce that if a creditor is in extreme necessity, and the debtor has father and mother also in extreme necessity, he is bound first to help father and mother, and indeed also sons and brothers. So Diana resol. 12; Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 31. art. 3; Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 3. §. 69; Lessius lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 1. num. 14; Toletus lib. 5. cap. 24; Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. pag. 11.

> IMO deducunt, quod si creditor sit in extrema necessitate, et debitor habeat patrem et matrem in extrema etiam necessitate, tenetur prius subvenire patri, matri, imo et filiis, et fratribus. Ita Diana resol. 12. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 31. art. 3. Hurtad. 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 3. §. 69. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 1. num. 14. Tolet. lib. 5. cap. 24. Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. pag. 11.

15 Indeed, many say, in Diana resol. 23, that a poor man, even in a grave but not extreme necessity, may steal from the rich, when they themselves are bound to give alms. So Diana; Coninck disp. 27. dub. 10. num. 161; John Wiggers 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 6. num. 33; Vasquez opusc. de eleemos. cap. 1. dub. 7. num. 60; Hurtado disp. 159. sect. 4. §. 92. iuncto §. 19; Angelus v. furtum, num. 37; Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. p. 10; Andreas Duallius in 2. 2. D. Thom. tract. de charit. quaest. 8. art. 3. Nor do we say that owners of goods, in the extreme necessity of others, lose ownership of them — with which Caspensis num. 10 brandishes at us — but that in extreme necessity the needy man acquires the use, as far as the extreme necessity requires; and hence he does not acquire ownership simply, but only as regards that which the use carries with it in consumable goods.

> IMO dicunt multi apud Dianam resol. 23. posse inopem, etiam in necessitate gravi, non extrema, furari a divitibus, quando ipsi tenentur dare eleemosynam. Ita Diana, Coninch. disp. 27. dub. 10. num. 161. Ioan. Vuigers 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 6. num. 33. Vasquez opusc. de eleemos. cap. 1. dub. 7. num. 60. Hurtad. disp. 159. sect. 4. §. 92. iuncto §. 19. Angel. v. furtum, num. 37. Castro Palao tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 2. p. 10. Andreas Duallius in 2. 2. D. Thom. tract. de charit. quaest. 8. art. 3. Neque dicimus nos, dominos rerum in extrema aliorum necessitate amittere dominium earum, ut nobis inurit Caspensis num. 10. sed in necessitate extrema, egenum acquirere usum, quantum necessitas extrema exigit, atque adeo non acquirit simpliciter dominium, sed solum quo ad id, quod secum fert usus in rebus consumptibilibus.

16 CONCLUDE, finally, that Ecclesiastics are held more by this precept: both by reason of their state, and by reason of the goods of the Church, which are the patrimony of the poor. Hence, by the common opinion, they are held to expend in alms, or other pious works, whatever remains from the revenues of a benefice over and above their suitable sustentation. For so those goods were left by the testators; as Peter a Sancto Joseph Foliensis observes lib. 3. cap. 10. de Charit. I beseech that they engrave the holy decree of the Council of Trent sess. 25. cap. 1. de Reform. with golden characters in wax, to be infigged in the heart of cedar, and meditate on it assiduously and read it through with piety. There they will measure out a mediocrity; they will discern excesses, and moderate them. Read D. Bernard epistol. ad Fulc.

> COLLIGE tandem, Ecclesiasticos magis hoc praecepto teneri: tum ratione status: tum ratione bonorum Ecclesiae, quae sunt patrimonium pauperum. Ideo ex communi sententia tenentur in eleemosynas, aliave pia opera, expendere quidquid ex reditibus beneficii, congruae eorum sustentationi superest. Sic enim ea bona a testantibus legata sunt; ut observant Petrus a S. Ioseph Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 10. de Charit. Obsecro ut Sanctum Tridentini Concilii decretum sess. 25. cap. 1. de Reform. aureis characteribus cedro cordis infigibant, et assidua meditentur, ac perlegant pietate. Ibi mediocritatem dimetientur; excessus dignoscent, eos moderabuntur. Legito D. Bernard. epistol. ad Fulc.

Question VII: Whether alms ought to be given from justly possessed goods

1 OBSERVES S. Doct. that goods can be, or manifestly another's, or common, or one's own; and that these last can be acquired, either honestly, or disgracefully.

> An Eleemosyna fieri debeat ex rebus iuste possessis.
> OBSERVAT S. Doct. res posse esse, vel manifeste alienas, vel communes, vel proprias; has vero ultimas posse esse acquisitas, vel honeste, vel turpiter.

2 I ASSERT first, that alms cannot be made of another's goods.

> ASSERO primo, de rebus alienis non posse fieri eleemosynam.

3 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonav. first from all the laws, which enjoin that donations not be made of another's goods, because, he who does not have dominion of a thing, cannot transfer it.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. primo ex iuribus omnibus, quae praecipiunt, non fieri donationes de rebus alienis, quia, qui non habet dominium rei, non potest illud transferre.

4 SECONDLY from the Scriptures, Prov. 30. Honor God of thy substance. Ecclus. 34. The oblation of him who sacrificeth from unjust gain is spotted. He that offereth sacrifice of the substance of the poor, is as one that sacrificeth a son in the sight of his father. And below: The Most High approveth not the gifts of the wicked. S. Doct. adds to 11. Eccles. this: Cast thy bread, etc. thine, not another's (says S. Doctor.)

> SECUNDO ex Scripturis, Proverb. 30. Honora Deum de tua substantia. Eccles. 34. Immolantis ex iniquo, oblatio est maculata. Qui offert sacrificium de substantia pauperum, quasi qui victimat filium in conspectu Patris sui. Et infra: Dona iniquorum non probat Altissimus. Addit S. Doct. ad 11. Eccles. id: Mitte panem tuum, etc. tuum, non alienum (ait S. Doctor.)

5 THIRDLY from D. Gregory in the Register, lib. 7. epist. 110. signifying this.

> TERTIO ex D. Gregorio in Registro, lib. 7. epist. 110. id insinuante.

6 NEITHER let them say, that they wish to make satisfaction for the avaricious owner of those goods, who does not give alms: For it does not pertain to us to compel anyone to that to which he himself is bound, as D. August. says homil. 7. and 50. and it is reported in the Decretis 14. quaest. 5. can. Forte.

> NEQUE dicant, velle satisfacere pro domino, earum rerum avaro, qui non dat eleemosynas: Nam ad nos non pertinet adigere quemcumque ad id, ad quod ipse tenetur, ut ait D. August. homil. 7. et 50. et refertur in Decretis 14. quaest. 5. can. Forte.

7 But the ASSERTION is understood, when it is done without the consent, at least presumed, of the Owner: for thus a son can give of his Father's goods, a wife of her Husband's, a servant of his Master's, because they can presume the consent of all of them. Yet Valentia adds with D. Bonav. and D. Thom. that in the case of the extreme necessity of one's neighbor, one can give of another's, because then all things are common. So Tanner. disp. 2 quaest. 5. dub. 1. num. 21.

> ASSER:TO vero intelligitur, quando fit sine consensu, saltem praesumpto Domini: ideo enim potest filius de rebus Patris, uxor de rebus Mariti, servus de rebus Domini largiri, quia de hotum consensu possunt praesumere. Addit tamen Valentia cum D. Bonav. et D. Thom. in casu extremae necessitatis proximi, posse dari de alieno, quia tunc omnia communia. Ita Tanner. disp. 2 quaest. 5. dub. 1. num. 21.

8 Second assertion. As to common goods, the consent is necessary, either of the community, or of the Prelate, to whom it pertains, as is had in cap. Cum in cunctis, extra de iis, quae fiunt a maiori parte Capituli. And 12. quaest. 1. can. Certum est. As Medina well notes Tract. de eleemosyna, quaest. 4. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 5. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 28.

> Assero secundo. Quoad res communes, necessarius est consensus, vel communitatis, vel Praelati, ad quos pertinet, ut habetur cap. Cum in cunctis, extra de iis, quae fiunt a maiori parte Capituli. Et 12. quaest. 1. can. Certum est. Ut bene advertunt Medina Tract. de eleemosyna, quaest. 4. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 9. p. 5. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 5. dub. 2. num. 28.

9 Third assertion. If anyone does not have the administration of goods, he cannot give in alms, as the mentally incapacitated, and minors, as even those already cited note.

> Assero tertio. Si quis non habet rerum administrationem, non potest dare in eleemosynam, ut mente capti, et minores, ut notant etiam iam allegati.

10 Fourth assertion. Those things which are disgracefully acquired, through some unjust business, as usury, a deceitful game, theft, rapine, cannot be given in alms; but they ought to be restored.

> Assero quarto. Ea, quae turpiter acquisita sunt, per aliquod negotium iniustum, ut usuram, ludum deceptorium, furtum, rapinam, non possunt dari in eleemosynam; sed debent restitui.

11 It is proved by S. Bonav. to 4. because dominion of these is not had by him who possesses them. As to things gained at dice, if they are acquired from someone who does not have the administration, as from a son, a minor, etc. they ought to be restored. Similarly, if someone led others to an illicit game, such as dice, or another which depends more on fortune than on skill. But truly, if he himself was induced by another, and he won, he is not bound; nevertheless he is called a possessor in bad faith by the laws, as Valentia reports disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5. Nauarr. Manual. cap. 29. and it is had in an. Episcopus, dist. 35. and cap. Clerici 2. Extra de vita, et honest. clericorum, and L. solent, ff. de alea lusu. And Auth. Alearum usus, C. de Relig. et sumpt.

> Probatur a S. Bonav. ad 4. quia horum non habetur dominium ab eo, qui ea possidet. Quoad acquisita ludo alearum si acquisita sunt ab aliquo, qui non habet administrationem, ut filio, minore, etc. debent restitui. Similiter, si aliquis traxit alios ad ludum illicitum, ut alearum, vel alium, qui pendet ex fortuna magis, quam ex arte. At vero, si ipse inductus fuerit ab alio, et vicit, non tenetur; attamen dicitur Malae fidei possessor a iuribus, ut referunt Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5. Nauarr. Manual. cap. 29. et habetur, an. Episcopus, dist. 35. et cap. Clerici 2. Extra de vita, et honest. clericorum, et L. solent, ff. de alea lusu. Et Auth. Alearum usus, C. de Relig. et sumpt.

12 Tannerus adds, that of evilly acquired things, which are not to be restored in specie, alms can be made, the obligation of restitution remaining; but who is ignorant of this?

> Addit Tannerus, posse de male acquisitis, quae non sunt restituenda in individuo, fieri eleemosynam, salva obligatione restitutionis; sed haec quis ignorat?

13 Fifth assertion, that things acquired in a disgraceful way, which is not against justice, as by meretricious means, can be given in alms. So S. Doct. to 4. D. Thom. art. 7. whom others follow. For that thing belongs to the very acquirer. See Tannetum num. 12.

> Assero quinto*, acquisita turpi modo, qui non est contra iustitiam, ut meretricio, posse dari in eleemosynam. Ita S. Doct.* ad 4. D. Thom. art. 7. quos sequuntur alii. Nam res illa est ipsam acquirentis. Vide Tannetum num. 12.

14 I add first with D. Bonau. D. Thom. art. 7. and Valentia, that what is acquired through a game, to which he compelled another out of greed for gain, is illegitimately acquired. It is proved, because thus dominion was not transferred with full will.

> Addo primo cum D. Bonau. D. Thom. art. 7. et Valentia, id quod acquiritur per ludum, ad quem alium compulit ex cupiditate lucri, esse illegitime acquisitum. Probatur, quia sic non est translatum dominium plena voluntate.

15 I add second with D. Bonau. to 4. D. Thom. Valentia, Tanner, that on account of scandal, it is not to be offered to God from meretricious gain, nor accepted; whence it is said Deut. 23. Thou shalt not offer the hire of a harlot into the house of the Lord thy God; which was prohibited only on account of scandal, and irreverence.

> Addo secundo cum D. Bonau. ad 4. D. Thom. Valentia, Tanner, ob scandalum, non offerendum Domino de meretricio, nec acceptandum; unde dicitur Deuter. 23. Non offeres mercedem prostibuli in Domo Domini Dei tui; id, quod prohibebatur solum ob scandalum, et ob irreverentiam.

16 S. Doct. adds third, that alms are not commonly to be given from that which is simply necessary for human sustenance, unless we wish to follow the state of perfection, according to the counsel of the Gospel, Matth. 19. If thou wilt be perfect, go, sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor.

> Addit tertio S. Doct. non esse dandas eleemosynas communiter de eo, quod est necessarium simpliciter victui humano, nisi velimus sequi statum perfectionis, iuxta consilium Euangelii Matth. 19. Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende omnia quae habes, et da pauperibus.

17 He notes also, that penitents are not to be compelled to those alms.

Advertit etiam, ad eas eleemosynas non compellendos poenitentes.

18 From all these you have, with D. Bonau. at the end of the body of the quaest. that all, and only those, can make alms, who have legitimate dominion, and administration. Therefore a married woman cannot make alms from the goods of her husband, but only from her own, as S. August. says epist. 199. So of gained revenues, at least the twentieth part she can give. So Bannes art. 8. Malderus there, Cenedo, Ledefma, Vega, and others, whom Diana reports p. 1. tract. 1. Miscel. resol. 33. Caspensis disp. 6. sect. 3. Tanner. num. 24. But of her own Paraphernal goods she can give generously. Similarly also a son of the Castrense, or quasi-castrense goods; See Valentia p. 6. Diana p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 25. Azorium t. 2. lib. 12. cap. 10. quaestio 1. Hurtadum 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 6. §. 139. who adds, that a son can pilfer something for honest uses.

Ex his omnibus habes cum D. Bonau. in fine corporis quaest. illos omnes, et solos posse facere eleemosynam, qui habent dominium legitimum, et administrationem. Itaque mulier coniugata non potest facere eleemosynas e bonis mariti, sed solum e suis, ut ait S. August. epist. 199. Sic de lucratis proventibus, saltem vigesimam partem dare potest. Ita Bannes art. 8. Malderus ibidem, Cenedo, Ledefma, Vega, et alii, quos refert Diana p. 1. tract. 1. Miscel. resol. 33. Caspensis disp. 6. sect. 3. Tanner. num. 24. De suis autem bonis Paraphernalibus potest largiri. Similiter et filius de bonis Castrensibus, vel quasi castrensibus; Vide Valentiam p. 6. Dianam p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 25. Azorium t. 2. lib. 12. cap. 10. quaestio 1. Hurtadum 2. 2. disp. 159. sect. 6. §. 139. qui addit, posse filium ad usus honestos aliqua surripere.

19 Circa those receiving alms, feigning poverty, they are bound to restitution. So commonly the Doctors at Diana 5. p. tract. 8. resol. 21. Fabrum in 4. dist. 50. num. 120. who adds Scotus, Gabriel, Alensis, and others. To these add D. Bonau. Tract. de paupertate, and on the rule of the Minors. Diana adds as to those begging door to door, that they are excused, because in few things the reason is had not of poverty, but of mercy. The restitution of these, however, some say must be made to the giver; others, to the poor. See Diana loc. cit. resol. 22.

Circa accipientes eleemosynas, simulantes paupertatem, tenentur ad restitutionem. Ita communiter Doctores apud Dianam 5. p. tract. 8. resol. 21. Fabrum in 4. dist. 50. num. 120. qui adiicit Scotum, Gabrielem, Alensem, et alios. His adde D. Bonau. Tract. de paupertate, et in regulam Minorum. Addit Diana quoad ostiatim mendicantes, eos excusari, quia in paucis habetur ratio non paupertatis, sed misericordiae. Horum autem restitutionem aliqui dicunt faciendam donanti; alii faciendam pauperibus. Vide Dianam loc. cit. resol. 22.

20 Note further, as we said of charity, and its intrinsic order; so must we speak of the extrinsic, as to making alms; that it first be made to those more nearly related, and as S. Doct. taught there, that even sinners, as partners of nature, are to be loved, so I say that alms are also to be bestowed upon them, against Vuiclephus at Vualdensis Tom. 3. lib. 2. doctrinalis fidei antiquae, cap. 81. let it be not to the sinner, as the sinner is obstinate, and in this sense is understood Ecclus. 12. Give to the merciful, and uphold not the sinner, as S. Thom. also has it art. 9. ad 1.

Adverte adhuc, sicuti diximus de charitate, et ordine eius intrinseco; ita loquendum de extrinseco, quoad faciendam eleemosynam; ut prius fiat propinquioribus, et sicuti ibi docuit S. Doct. etiam peccatores, ut naturae socios, amandos, ita etiam ipsis eleemosynam erogandam dico contra Vuiclephum apud Vualdensem Tom. 3. lib. 2. doctrinalis fidei antiquae, cap. 81. esto non peccatori, ut peccator obstinatus est*, et hoc sensu intelligitur id Eccles. 12.* Da misericordi, et ne suscipias peccatorem*, ut habet etiam S. Thom.* art. 9. ad 1.

21 To all of whom alms must be made, S. Doct. teaches to 11. Eccles. Cast thy bread upon the passing waters. The waters are the nations. Apoc. 17. and tribulations Psal. 68. Therefore Luke 14. When thou makest a feast, call the poor, and the feeble, the blind, and the lame.

Quibus omnibus facienda sit eleemosyna, docet S. Doct. ad 11. Eccles. Mitte panem tuum super transeuntes aquas. Aquae sunt gentes. Apoc. 17. et tribulationes Psal. 68. Ideo Lucae 14. Cum facis convivium, voca pauperes, et debiles, caecos, et claudos.

22 You will object first, against the first assertion, Luke 16. Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of iniquity.

Obiicies primo, contra primum assertum, id Lucae 16. Facite vobis amicos de Mammona iniquitatis.

23 S. Doct. answers that this is to be understood of that which is gained unjustly by accident, not of the unjust against justice; for this ought to be restored.

Respondet S. Doct. id intelligi de eo, quod per accidens inique lucratum est, non de iniusto contra iustitiam; hoc enim debet restitui.

24 Or they are called iniquities, because they are the origins of iniquities, as S. Thom. here, and S. Bonau. at that place expound. See the SS. Doctores, alleging other expositions.

Vel dicuntur iniquitates, quia sunt origines iniquitatum, ut exponunt S. Thom. hic, et S. Bonau. ad eum locum. Vide SS. Doctores, alias expositiones afferentes.

25 You will object secondly. The Hebrews offered for the Sanctuary gold, and silver, stolen from the Egyptians.

Obiicies secundo. Hebraei obtulerunt pro Sanctuario aurum, et argentum, furata AEgyptiis.

26 S. Doct. answers that God transferred dominion to them; and by the right of wages, those things were owed to them, others note.

Respondet S. Doct. Deum transtulisse dominium in eos; et iure mercedis, ea fuisse eis debita, alii advertunt.

27 As to the quantity of alms of Ecclesiastics, Diana reports resol. 27. that he has devoured all the authors, and that the broadest opinion is, that they give the fourth part of revenues, as Bannes, and Tanner say, or the half of what remains after suitable sustentation.

Quoad quantitatem eleemosynae Ecclesiasticorum refert Diana resol. 27. se omnes authores devorasse, et latissimam opinionem esse, ut dent quartam partem reddituum, ut ait Bannes, et Tanner. vel medietatem residui congruae sustentationis.

28 And this also concerning the Pope many assert at Diana resol. 28. and many things concerning Pensionaries are had at the same resol. 29.

Et hoc etiam de Papa multi asserunt apud Dianam resol. 28. et de Pensionariis multa apud eundem resol. 29. habentur.

29 Many add, that they are bound to restitution, of whom ten are reported, almost all classic authors, by Diana resol. 31. Yet he himself holds the opposite with 16. Doctors, almost all moderns. The reason is, because they have dominion. He asserts also resol. 51. that Regulars, assumed to the Episcopate, have dominion, and he reports many DD. loc. cit. and 3. p. tract. 2. resol. 50. the opposite, however, he does not reject, which is that of very many.

> Addunt plurimi, eos teneri ad restitutionem, ex quibus referuntur decem, fere omnes classici, a Diana resol. 31. Attamen ipse oppositum tenet cum 16. Doctoribus, fere omnibus modernis. Ratio est, quia habent dominium. Asserit quoque resol. 51. etiam Regulares, ad Episcopatum assumptos, habere dominium, et refert multos DD. loc. cit. et 3. p. tract. 2. resol. 50. oppositam tamen non reiicit, quae est plurimorum.

30 FOUR genera of alms S. Doct. enumerates at Psal. 36. and in 4. dist. 15. punct. 2. in the literal dubia. Correction, remission of injuries, compassion for oneself, bestowal of one's own benefit. Of the first, and last it is said: Give to everyone that asketh thee, Luke 6. a thing, or the health of the soul by correction. Of the second it is said, Matth. 5. And if he strike thee on thy cheek, offer him the other also. Of the third it is said Ecclus. 30. Have pity on thy own soul, pleasing God. And surely spiritual alms are worthier, says S. Bonaventura dub. 3. litt. with D. August. Enchir. cap. 73.

> QUATVOR genera eleemosynarum recenset S. Doct. ad Psalm. 36. et in 4. dist. 15. punct. 2. dubiis litteralibus. Correctio, iniuriarum remissio, sui miseratio, Proprii beneficii collatio. De primo, et ultimo dicitur: Omni petenti te, tribue, Lucae 6. rem, vel salutem animae per correptionem. De secundo dicitur, Matth. 5. Qui percusserit te in maxillam tuam, praebe illi et alteram. De tertio dicitur Eccles. 30. Miserere animae tuae, placens Deo. Et sane spirituales eleemosynas digniores, ait S. Bonaventura dub. 3. litt. cum D. August. Enchir. cap. 73.

31 But that spiritual alms should be begun with oneself, S. Doct. warns, dub. 4. Then he praises austerity toward oneself more than toward others, in corporal things.

> A seipso autem spiritualem eleemosynam incipiendam, monet S. Doct. dub. 4. Deinde austeritatem in se magis, quam erga alios, in corporalibus laudat.

32 As to quantity, dub. 6. he commends generous alms according to each one's state; nevertheless he admonishes those making alms, to take note so much of the little old woman, who gives according to her state a little, as of the Queen giving treasures, as is said Luke 21.

> Circa quantitatem dub. 6. eleemosynas largas commendat pro cuiusque statu; attamen admonet e facientibus eleemosynas, tantum meteri vetulam, quae dat secundum suum statum modicum, sicut Regina dans thesauros, ut dicitur Lucae 21.

33 He APPENDS, dub. 7. certain conditions essential to alms; others accidental. Among the essential, the first, he says, is that it proceed from charity, that it be meritorious, as is said 1 Corinth. 13. The second on the part of the receiver, Luke 14. Call the poor, etc. The third on the part of the gift: Honor the Lord of thy substance. The fourth on the part of intention, that it not be made, as hypocrites are wont, for they have received their reward. Matth. 6.

> APPONIT dub. 7. aliquas conditiones eleemosynae substantiales; alias accidentales. Inter substantiales primam ait, ut procedat ex charitate, ut sit meritoria, ut dicitur prima Corinth. 13. Secundam ex parte suscipientis, Lucae 14. Voca pauperes, etc. Tertiam ex parte muneris: Honora Dominum de substantia tua. Quartam ex parte intentionis, ne fiat, ut hypocritae solent, nam hi receperunt mercedem. Matth. 6.

34 THE OTHERS are conditions for the well-being of alms, Ecclus. 3. Give to the just, and receive not the sinner, which he expounds as deferring to the sinner. Or concerning the heretic, to whom an alms is not to be given without extreme necessity. Secondly hilarity in giving is required, 2. Cor. 9. Thirdly abundance, as much as can be done, Tob. 4. Fourthly speed is required, Prov. 3. Say not: go, and return Eccles. 4. Prolong not the gift to one in anguish.

> ALIAE sunt conditiones eleemosynae ad bene esse, Eccles. 3. Da iusto, et ne receperis peccatorem, quod exponit de postponendo peccatore. Vel de haeretico, cui non est danda eleemosyna sine necessitate extrema. Secundo exigitur hilaritas in dando, 2. Cor. 9. Tertio abundantia, quanta fieri potest, Tob. 4. Quarto exigitur velocitas, Prov. 3. Ne dicas: vade, et revertere Eccles. 4. Ne protrahas datum angustianti.

35 MOST EMBLEMATIC symbols of alms see in S. Bonav. in the Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 7. where he compares it to the Light, which ought to be sent before death, that we may see the way to eternal life. To the River, which goes out from the sea and returns, Ecclus. 1. For it returns the same to us. Therefore he compares it to the Seed, which multiplies grains. Therefore Prov. 19. He that is merciful to his neighbor, lendeth to God. He observes, however, that precious seeds, such as of wheat, are not gathered in the same year, so also alms, best given, not in this life, but in the other; while others have in this life a reward after the manner in which vile seeds, such as millet, immediately render their produce. See other most excellent things in S. Doctor. Of accepted alms he has very many authorities from the SS. PP. in the Pharetra lib. 2. cap. 49. Of rejected alms others, cap. 50.

> PRAECLARA eleemosynae Symbola vide in S. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 7. ubi eam comparat Lumini, quod praemitti debet ante mortem, ut iter videamus ad vitam aeternam. Flumini, quod exit a mari et revertitur, Eccles. 1. Eadem enim revertitur ad nos. Ideo eam comparat Semini, quod grana multiplicat. Ideo Proverb. 19. Foeneratur Domino, qui miseretur proximo. observat autem semina pretiosa, ut tritici, non colligi eodem anno, ita etiam eleemosynas, optime latas, non in hac vita, sed in alia: alias vero habere in hac vita praemium ad modum, quo semina vilia, statim reddunt proventum, ut millium. Vide alia praeclara in S. Doctore. Eleemosynae acceptae habet plurimas e SS. PP. authoritates in Pharetra lib. 2. cap. 49. Inacceptae vero eleemosynae alias, cap. 50.

Section III: On Fraternal Correction

1 BETWEEN the two species of Mercy, poured out on either side into seven-flowing rivulets, as you have above, quaest. 2. sect. 2. on alms, Fraternal Correction is wont to be enumerated, by which many goods are bestowed on those under one's eye, when their advantage, not their will, is consulted, as D. August. has it in the Seraphic Doctor's lib. 4. Pharetra, cap. 38. And if perhaps the foreseeing that this advantage will not follow, D. Gregory also urges that one's neighbor be corrected for the public good, here at S. Bonav. Since, as he says, it is better that one be condemned for the salvation of many, than that many be endangered through the license of one. Here, however, we must treat of correction, as it is a certain species of spiritual alms, shown to the offender.

> De correctione Fraterna.
> INTER duplicem Misericordiae speciem, in septemfluos rivos utrinque derivatam, ut supra habes, quaest. 2. sect. 2. de eleemos. Solet annumerari Correctio Fraterna, per quam multa bona praestantur intuitis, quando eorum consulitur utilitati, non voluntati, ut habet D. August. apud Seraphicum lib. 4. Pharetra, cap. 38. et si forte utilitas haec non sequutura praevideatur, etiam pro bono publico corripiendum proximum suadet D. Gregorius hic apud S. Bonav. Cum melius sit, ut ait, pro multorum saluatione unus condemnetur, quam per unius licentiam multi periclitentur. Hic tamen de correctione, ut est species quaedam spiritualis eleemosynae, delinquenti exhibita, agendum est.

Question I: Whether fraternal correction is a matter of precept

[1] THE whole troop of the Sectarians, because they esteem themselves to be led by a blind impulse like beasts of burden, endowed with no free will unto acting, utterly exclude every fraternal correction; for they do not desire to be made better, who are ever rushing into worse.

> An CORRECTIO FRATERNA sit praecepta.
> TOTA Sectariorum turma, quia se existimant caeco impetu more iumentorum duci, nullo praeditos libero arbitrio ad operandum, omnem fraternam correctionem penitus excludunt, non enim meliorari desiderant, qui in deterius semper ruunt.

[2] YET that it is a matter of precept, all Theologians teach in 4. dist. 19. There D. Bonav. dub. 4. litt. says: Concerning fraternal correction, this must be noted, that a man is then bound to correct, when he sees his brother sin gravely, and believes with probability that it will profit, and not harm. Yet this must be guarded against, lest anyone form for himself a foolish conscience from a slight conjecture. And in the Speculum animae, cap. 3. he says: The correction of one's neighbor is a matter of precept for all, when it is known, or believed, that the correction will impede a sin that would otherwise be committed. And although it is a matter of precept for all; yet especially for those upon whom it rests by office, as are Masters, Princes, Prelates, and these can sin more gravely in this. That correction, however, is a matter of precept for all, is clear from August. de verbis Domini, serm. 16. If you neglect to correct, you have become worse than he who sinned. So also D. Thom. quaest. 33. art. 2. where the Expositors, and Canonists on cap. Novit, extra de Iudiciis, and on the Can. si peccaverit, 2. quaest. 1.

> EAM tamen esse in praecepto, docent omnes Theologi in 4. dist. 19. Ubi D. Bonau. dub. 4. litt. ait: De correctione vero fraterna hoc notandum, quod tunc tenetur homo corripere, quando videt fratrem graviter peccare, et credit probabiliter, quod debeat prodesse, et non obesse. Hoc tamen cavendum, ne quis formet sibi conscientiam stultam ex modica coniectura. Et in speculo animae, cap. 3. ait: Correctio proximi est omnibus in praecepto, cum tum scitur, vel creditur, quod correctio peccatum impediat, quod alias fieret. Et licet sit omnibus in praecepto; illis tamen praecipue, quibus incumbit ex officio, ut sunt Domini, Principes, Praelati, et magis in hoc peccare possunt. Quod autem correctio sit omnibus in praecepto, patet per August. de verbis Domini, serm. 16. Si negligis corripere, peior factus es eo, qui peccavit. Sic etiam D. Thom. quaest. 33. art. 2. ubi Expositores, et Canonistae super cap. Novit, extra de Iudiciis, et super Can. si peccaverit, 2. quaest. 1.

[3] IT IS PROVED by S. Doct. in the Biblia pauperum cap. 36. with very many examples of the Scriptures. The rule of this, he says, was given to Peter, Matth. 18. If thy brother sin against thee, etc. By which testimony the precept is evidently had.

> PROBATUR a S. Doct. in Bibliis pauperum cap. 36. plurimis Scripturarum exemplis. Huius regulam, ait, datam Petro, Matth. 18. Si peccaverit in te, etc. Quo testimonio evidenter habetur praeceptum.

[4] SO Innocent III. alleges it in cap. cum ex iniuncto, extra de haereticis. Anacletus, dist. 24. q. 3. the Can. tum Sacerdotis. Origen homil. 3. in Lev. Basil. in moral. summa 52. cap. 2. Chrysost. homil. 60. in Matth. Jerome on Psal. 140. August. serm. 16. de verbis Domini. Gregory lib. 22. Regist. epistle 31. whom Valentia reports disp. 3. quaest. 10. punct. 2. and others at D. Bonau. lib. 4. Pharetrae, cap. 38.

> ITA afferunt Innocentius III. in cap. cum ex iniuncto, extra de haereticis. Anacletus, dist. 24. q. 3. Can. tum Sacerdotis. Origenes homil. 3. in Leu. Basil. in moral. summa 52. cap. 2. Chrysost. homil. 60. in Matth. Hieronymus in Psal. 140.

August. serm. 16. de verbis Domini. Gregorius lib. 22. Regist. epistola 31. quos refert Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 10. punct. 2. et alii apud D. Bonau. lib. 4. Pharetrae, cap. 38.

5 THE SAME S. Doct. proves at 17. Luke from the precept imposed there. And 2. Timot. 4. Reprove, beseech, rebuke, etc. and Eccles. 19. Correct a friend, lest perhaps he have not understood. Eccles. 17. He commanded them to instruct every one his neighbor. 1 Timot. 5. Them that sin reprove.

IDEM probat S. Doct. ad 17. Lucae ex praecepto ibi imposito. Et 2. Timot. 4. Argue, obsecra, increpa, etc. et Eccles. 19. Corripe amicum, ne forte non intellexerit. Eccles. 17. Mandavit illis unicuique de proximo suo. Prima Timot. 5. Peccantes argue.

6 IT IS PROVED by reason there by D. Bonavent. taken from D. Gregory, because we are bound to love our neighbor as ourselves; therefore also especially as to salvation. Valentia adduces this reason, thence gathering that it is a precept of nature, acknowledged by Aristotle himself 9. Eth. cap. 3.

PROBATUR ratione ibi a D. Bonavent. sumpta ex D. Gregorio, quia tenemur diligere proximum, sicut nos ipsos; ergo etiam maxime quoad salutem. Hanc rationem adhibet Valentia, inde colligens, esse praeceptum naturae, agnitum ab Aristotele ipso 9. Eth. cap. 3.

7 SECONDLY it is proved by D. Bonau. dist. 19. of the fourth sent. in dubiis litt. For if the precept of corporal alms stands, much more of spiritual. So also Valentia.

SECUNDO probatur a D. Bonau. dist. 19. quarti sent. in dubiis litt. Nam si extat praeceptum eleemosynae corporalis, multo magis spiritualis. Ita etiam Valentia.

8 THEREFORE Christ thus commands gravely, Luke 17. Take heed to yourselves, as if to say: First make yourself fit, that you may be able to correct another, lest it be said to you: Thou who teachest not to steal, dost steal. And this Rom. 2. Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself. And this Matth. 7. Hypocrite, cast out first the beam from thine own eye; and then thou shalt see to cast out the mote from thy brother's eye. And this Luke 4. Physician, cure thyself, as S. Doctor notes there in his commentary. If thy brother (says Christ) sin against thee, rebuke him. Therefore: If he sin in te, which is wont to be expounded in two ways, as S. Doct. says. In te, that is, against thee. Which sense is clear from Peter's question: How often shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? So expound Jerome, and Chrysost. there. Ambrose at 17. Luke. Hilar. can. 18. in Matth. and August. serm. 16. de verbis Domini, where he also embraces the second exposition: If he sin in te, that is, before thee: Lyra there, S. Thom. quodl. 11. art. 12. and according to this exposition, which does not exclude the other, the precept of correcting one's neighbor is given, however he may sin, whether against us, or against God.

IGITUR sic praecipit graviter Christus, Lucae 17. Attendite vobis, quasi dicat: Prius te exhibe aptum, ut possis alium corripere, ne tibi dicatur id: Qui praecipis non furandum, furaris. Et id Rom. 2. Qui alium doces, teipsum non doces. Et id Matth. 7. Hypocrita, eiice primum trabem de oculo tuo; et tunc videbis eiicere festucam de oculo fratris tui. Et id Lucae 4. Medice cura teipsum, ut advertit ibi in commentario S. Doctor. Si peccaverit (ait Christus) in te frater tuus, increpa illum. Igitur: Si peccaverit in te, quod dupliciter exponi solet, ut ait S. Doct. In te, idest, contra te. Qui sensus patet ex interrogatione Petri: Quoties peccaverit in me frater meus, et dimittam ei? Sic exponunt Hieronymus, et Chrysost. ibi. Ambrosius ad 17. Lucae. Hilar. can. 18. in Matth. et August. serm. 16. de verbis Domini, ubi secundam etiam amplectitur expositionem: Si peccaverit in te, idest, coram te: Lyra ibi, S. Thom. quodl. 11. art. 12. et iuxta hanc expositionem, quae alteram non excludit, datur praeceptum corripiendi proximum, quomodocumque peccantem, sive contra nos, sive contra Deum.

9 What all Doctors suppose, especially D. August. loc. cit. concluding, not only when one sins against us, but when one sins, with others not knowing it, we ought in secret to correct him.

> Id, quod supponunt omnes Doctores, praesertim D. August. loc. cit. concludens, non solum quando in nos peccatur, sed quando peccatur ab aliquo, nescientibus aliis, in secreto debemus eum corripere.

10 This, however, is a precept, when the neighbor has sinned mortally. Therefore Christ says: If he hear thee, thou shalt have gained thy brother. Whence S. August. in the sermon cited infers: If thou hast gained thy brother, then thou hadst perished.

> Hoc autem praeceptum est, quando proximus peccavit mortaliter. Ideo Christus ait: Si te audierit, lucratus eris fratrem tuum. Unde S. August. in serm. citato infert: Si lucratus es fratrem tuum, ergo perieras.

Question II: Whether the order of fraternal correction, even in religious orders, is of precept, so that the correction first be made in secret

1 WE ASK here: Whether, given the conditions assigned above by D. Bonaventure — that the neighbor has gravely sinned and can probably be amended by fraternal correction — he ought first to be corrected before his sin is reported to the Prelate, even as to a Father, not as to a Judge. I speak, however, of secret sin, not one that threatens public ruin, such as heresy, rebellion, etc.

> An ordo correptionis fraternae, etiam in Religionibus, sit praeceptus, ut prius correptio fiat secreta.
> QUAERIMUS hic: An datis conditionibus, supra a D. Bonav. assignatis, ut proximus graviter deliquerit, deinde correptione fraterna probabiliter emendandus sit, corrigi debeat prius, quam eius peccatum deferatur Praelato, etiam tanquam Patri, non Iudici. Loquor autem de peccato secreto, non in publicam perniciem, ut sunt haeresis, rebellio, etc.

2 The FIRST opinion is: If there is hope that the Prelate will be more useful, one is not bound to secret correction; yet so that the Prelate be prudent, discreet; not violent, not hostile to the religious who sinned. They are cited by Caspensis, Tract. 17. disp. 6. sect. 1.: D. Thomas quodl. 11. art. ultimo, Sylvest. v. Correctio, Gabriel. lect. 74. in Can. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 9. cap. 6. Richard. 4. dist. 19. Iulius Calvus in Synaxi cura animarum, Angelus Clavasius in summa, v. Denuntiatio, num. 10. who asserts this to be the opinion of D. Augustine and all the Doctors of the Seraphic Order. Gerson 2. p. Alph. 24. litt. T. Tuttecremata in cap. si peccaverit 2. quaest. 1. Nicolaus Otbellius 4. dist. 19. quaest. 1. Iacob. Graffius lib. 2. cap. 69. who cites many others, and all the Theologians of the Society of Jesus.

> PRIMA opinio est; Si spes sit, Praelatum magis profuturum, non teneri ad correptionem secretam; ita tamen, ut Praelatus sit prudens, discretus; non violentus, non inimicus religioso, qui peccavit. Citantur a Caspensi Tract. 17. disp. 6. sect. 1. D. Thomas quodl. 11. art. ultimo, Sylvest. v. Correctio, Gabriel. lect. 74. in Can. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 9. cap. 6. Richard. 4. dist. 19. Iulius Calvus in Synaxi cura animarum, Angelus Clavasius in summa, v. 3 He ADDS D. Bonaventure on cap. 19. Lucae, and the General Chapter of Barcelona, and the Constitution of the Fathers the Preachers, cap. 18. lect. 6. Which constitution, he says, is most ancient; for Smaragdus the Abbot, in Regulam S. Benedicti, refers this Constitution at cap. 24. and adds others at cap. 32. He further proclaims it common among the Doctors, and altogether to be held; but we shall soon see the opposite.

ADDIT D. Bonaventuram in cap. 19. Lucae*, et Capitulum Generale Barcinonense, ac Constitutionem Patrum Praedicatorum,* cap. 18. lect. 6. Quam constitutionem antiquissimam ait; nam Smaragdus Abbas in Regulam S. Benedicti*, hanc Constitutionem refert* cap. 24. et alia addit cap. 32. Hanc porro communem inter Doctores clamat, et omnino tenendam; sed videbimus mox oppositum.

4 OTHER Doctors are reported in favor of this opinion by P. Antoninus Diana p. 2. Tract. 2. resol. 37.; they are Turrianus Tom. 1. in 22. dist. 89. dub. 4. where he cites D. Bonaventure, Angelus, Rosella, and Arauallus. Bictus, de denunt. casus quaest. 16. approves; he also reports D. Thomas and D. Bonaventure, as though truly cited.

ALIOS Doctores refert pro hac sententia P. Antoninus Diana p. 2. Tract. 2. resol. 37. hi sunt Turrianus Tom. 1. in 22. dist. 89. dub. 4. ubi citat D. Bonaventuram, Angelum, Rosellam, et Arraualum. Arridet Bictus de denunt. casus quaest. 16. refert etiam D. Thomam, et D. Bonaventuram, quasi vere citatos.

5 ALMOST all, however, warn that this opinion is true provided the superior be prudent, discreet, not violent, or hostile to the religious, as I noted above; otherwise they fly to the second opinion.

MONENT tamen fere omnes, hanc sententiam veram, dummodo superior sit prudens, discretus, non violentus, vel religioso infensus, ut supra monui, alioqui ad secundam sententiam evolant.

6 The OPPOSITE opinion seems to be that of D. Bonaventure ad 17. Lucae, which passage the adversaries use for these words: Si peccaverit in te frater tuus, increpa illum, where he says: And note that in this rebuke the order must be kept which is expressed there: If thy brother sin against thee, go, and rebuke him between thee and him alone. And afterwards he adds that witnesses must be called in; then, it must be told to the Church. This order, however, as regards witnesses, he says is a matter of congruity, not of necessity, and especially if it is perceived that the neighbor is incorrigible. There he gives the reason why it can first be told to the prelate; he adds the reason from Prov. 9: Rebuke not a scorner, lest he hate thee; and he adds from D. Jerome: To strive in vain, and by laboring to accomplish nothing else than to seek hatred, is the height of madness; otherwise indeed it is a commandment, he assents in the Speculum animae, cap. 3. see what was said in the previous volume de consentient. dist. 17. quaest. 10. to proposition 5.

OPPOSITA sententia videtur D. Bonav. ad 17. Lucae*, quo loco utuntur adversarii ad ea verba:* Si peccaverit in te frater tuus, increpa illum*, ubi ait:* Et nota, quod in hac increpatione servari debet ordo, qui exprimitur ibi: Si peccaverit in te frater tuus, vade, et corripe eum inter te, et ipsum solum. Et postea subdit, quod adhibendi sunt testes; deinde, dicendum est Ecclesiae. Hunc tamen ordinem quoad testes, ait esse congruitatis, non necessitatis, et maxime si percipiatur, quod proximus incorrigibilis sit. Ubi causam affert, ob quam prius possit dici praelato; addit rationem ex Proverb. 9. Noli arguere derisorem, ne oderit te, et addit ex D. Hieronymo: Frustra niti, et nihil aliud laborando, quam odium quaerere, extremae dementiae est; alioqui vero esse praeceptum assentit in speculo animae, cap 3. vide dicta tomo superiori de consentient. dist. 17. quaest. 10. ad propositionem 5.

7 From this supposition, indeed, he concludes that the fault of one's neighbor can be told to the Prelate without prior fraternal correction, understanding it when no fruit is hoped for from the correction. The same opinion he plainly indicates in other places cited above quaest. 2., and in the Speculum animae, cap. 1. he expressly asserts, with the majority whose view he subscribes to, the order of fraternal correction under pain of mortal sin. See after the middle of the chapter. The same he gravely asserts absolutely at those words Ecclus. 10. Si mordeat serpens, etc., where he asserts that this very order is a Divine commandment. The same he infers in the Speculum animae, cap. 3.

Ex hoc vero supposito colligit, posse dici Praelato culpam proximi absque praevia correptione fraterna, intelligens, quando fructus non speratur e correptione. Eandem sententiam aperte indicat aliis locis supra quaest. 2. allegatis, et in speculo animae, cap. 1. expresse ordinem correptionis fraternae sub mortali asserit ex plerisque, quibus subscribit. Vide post medium capitis. Idem graviter asserit absolute ad ea verba Ecclesi. 10. Si mordeat serpens, etc. ubi, ordinem ipsum asserit, esse praeceptum Divinum. Idem infert in speculo animae, cap. 3.

[8] Of entirely the same opinion is D. Thomas in his last testament 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7., where he expressly teaches that this order is under commandment, nor can the prelate invert it, even if he perceived it in virtue of obedience, nor is obedience to be rendered to him; nay, both the one commanding and the one obeying sin against the divine commandment. The same he teaches art. 8. ad 4. Rodriquez de ordine iudiciario, tit. 4. cap. 19. where he reports others: Thomas a Iesu lib. de inst. tract. 1. cap. 9. num. 1. et 6. Lorca 2. 2. sect. 3. disp. 47. Ioan. de Cruz in directorio conscientiae, p. 1. praec. 5. art. 2. dub. 5. conclusione 1. Miranda de ordine iudic. tom. 1. quaest. 11. art. 4. to whom Diana subscribes tom. 1. parte 2. tract. 2. resol. 37. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 8. dub. 2. Nauar. *in Manual. EIUSDEM sententiae omnino est D. Thom. in ultimo suo testamento 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7. *ubi expresse docet, hunc ordinem esse sub praecepto, nec praelatum posse illum invertere, etiam si perciperet in virtute obedientiae, non esseque ei obediendum, imo et praecipientem, et eum, qui obedit, peccare contra divinum praeceptum. 10 IT MUST BE ASSERTED, with this opinion, that in fraternal correction the order of the Gospel is to be observed by commandment.

ASSERENDUM cum hac sententia, in correctione fraterna servandum, ex praecepto, ordinem Evangelii.

11 IT IS PROVED by D. Bonaventure ad locum Lucae, because fraternal correction is commanded by Charity for the salutary remedy of the neighbor; but more sweetly than it can be, out of love: Now love works more with less harm than it can inflict on the neighbor: Therefore.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. ad locum Lucae, quia correctio fraterna praecepta est a Charitate ad medelam salutarem proximi; sed suavius, quam potest, ex amore: At amor magis operatur cum minori, quam potest, damno proximi: Ergo.

12 Whence Caspensis loc. cit. and P. Matthias Bellintanus do not rightly attempt to show that a religious better heals his brother's salvation by reporting to Superiors, so that they may provide a remedy with a strong hand. Surely medicine teaches that iron is not to be applied when lenitives can help, as Fagundez observes num. 7.

Unde non recte Caspensis loc. cit. et P. Matthias Bellintanus, conantur ostendere, religiosum melius mederi fratris saluti, deferendo ad Superiores, ut manu forti remedium praebeant. Sane medicina docet, non esse adhibendum ferrum, quando lenitiva iuvare valent, ut advertit Fagundez num. 7.

13 IT IS PROVED secondly, because Matth. 18. and Lucae 17. the Fathers cited above quaest. 1. confess to be a commandment issued by Christ, surely also as to the order. This is confirmed by the Gloss there, and D. Augustine in Catena aurea of D. Thomas, where he says: That the one not rebuking in the manner said is a betrayer. The same D. Chrysostom has there, bringing forward the example of the physician adduced above, and homil. 60. in Matth. he teaches the same. And D. Hilary on this passage says: The Lord imposed upon us that order of keeping Charity. So also D. Jerome on this passage: The brother must be rebuked apart, lest if once he lose shame and bashfulness, he remain in sin. But if he will not hear, let a brother be called in. Thus also D. Augustine homil. 2. on this passage: Finally, from these words attend, out of what love you ought to do this. Therefore do it for his sake, that you may gain him. And comparing that saying of the Apostle 1. ad Timot. 5. Them that sin rebuke before all, he says: I say, therefore, let us hear these commandments, brethren, and be prepared between both commandments: it is true in both cases, that sometimes a brother must be rebuked between thee and him alone: Hear, if he sin against thee, because it was secret when he sinned against thee, seek secrecy. Hence you have that D. Augustine is wrongly brought forward by Angelus for the first opinion.

> PROBATUR secundo quia Matth. 18. et Lucae 17. fatentur Patres allati quaest. 1. esse praeceptum, latum a Christo, profecto etiam quoad ordinem. Id confirmatur ex Glossa ibi, et D. August. in Catena aurea D. Thomae, ubi ait: Non corripientem modo dicto, esse proditorem. Idem habet D. Chrysost. ibi, afferens exemplum medici supra allatum, et homil. 60. in Matth. idem docet. Et D. Hilarius ad hunc locum ait: Eum ordinem continendae Charitatis nobis Dominus imposuit. Ita et D. Hieronymus ad hunc locum: Corripiendus est frater seorsim, ne si semel pudorem, ac verecundiam amiserit, remaneat in peccato. Sin autem audire noluerit, adhibeatur frater. Sic etiam D. August. homil. 2. ad hunc locum: Denique ex his verbis attende, cuius amore id facere debeas. Ergo propter illum fac, ut lucreris. Et conferens illud Apostoli 1. ad Timot. 5. Peccantes coram omnibus argue, ait: Dico ergo, ista praecepta fratres sic audiamus, et inter utraque praecepta parati constituamur, verum est utrumque, aliquando corripiendum esse fratrem inter te, et ipsum solum: Audi, si peccaverit in te, quia secretum fuit, quando in te peccavit, secretum quaere. Hinc habes, male ab Angelo adduci pro prima sententia D. Augustinum.

14 The same has Eusebius Emissenus and others in the Bibliot. homil. feria tertia post Dominicam tertiam Quadragesimae, and other Fathers, brought forward by Lorca disp. 47.

> IDEM habet Eusebius Emiss. et alii in Bibliot. homil. feria tertia post Dominicam tertiam Quadragesimae, et alii Patres, adducti a Lorca disp. 47.

15 IT IS PROVED thirdly. Religious are not only not exempt from the observance of the commandments of the Gospel — especially the Friars Minor, whose Rule begins: The Rule and life of the Friars Minor is this, to observe the Holy Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ — but are more bound to it. Now that this is a commandment S. Bonaventure asserts in the places cited, quaest. prima. Whence it is wrongly brought forward by Sanchez and Caspensis for the opposite opinion. It is confirmed; for our very Constitutions, which profess observance according to the rule, enjoin at chapter 3. that this ordinance of fraternal correction be kept, so that the brother be first rebuked, and if amendment does not follow, either one tell the sin of the other. I wonder that the Chapter of Barcelona is brought forward to the contrary, which decides this only when they are companions in crime, whence neither, if unamended, can rebuke the sins of the other, lest it be said to him: Said the Thief to the Thief. But concerning brethren outside who sin scandalously, it commands, and only condemns at the end, those who deny that a brother is ever bound to tell the sins of a brother to the Prelate. The same Julius II condemned. Whence that Chapter is not to our purpose.

> PROBATUR tertio. Religiosi non modo non eximuntur ab observantia praeceptorum Evangelii, maxime Fratres Minores, quorum Regula incipit: Vita, et Regula Fratrum Minorum, haec est, Sanctum Domini nostri Iesu Christi Evangelium observare; sed ei magis obligantur. Hoc autem esse praeceptum asserit S. Bonav. locis adductis, quaest. prima. Unde male a Sanchez, et Caspensi adducitur pro opposita sententia. Confirmatur; nam et Constitutiones nostrae, quae protestantur observantiam secundum regulam, iniungunt capite 3. hanc ordinationem correctionis fraternae servandam, ut primo corripiatur frater, et non secuta emendatione, dicat alteruter peccatum alterius. Miror, adduci Capitulum Barcinonense in contrarium, quod solum id decernit, quando sunt socii criminum, unde neuter inemendatus potest alterius peccata corripere, ne ei dicatur: Ait Latro ad latronem. De fratribus vero extra, scandalose delinquentibus, praecipit, et solum damnat in fine, negantes teneri unquam fratrem peccata fratris dicere Praelato. Idem damnavit Iulius II. Unde Capitulum illud non est ad propositum nostrum.

16 IT IS PROVED fourthly: for No one is the Lord of another's reputation. Therefore he cannot straightway report to the Prelate, whereby he foully stains his reputation and eliminates the shame first aroused in the subject; for while a Religious is reported before the Prelates, a worse loss is inflicted on him than if it were told to many others. Therefore P. Martinus Rex de Calvasessio, of Brescia, who for nearly 30 years exercised the office of definitor, Provincial Vicar, and Apostolic Visitator in the Missions of the Rhaetians, a man of supreme Integrity and holiness, shining with Zeal and Charity, was wont to say: I would rather that my grave sin (if God suffered me to fall) be known by all the brethren than in the Definitory, where the Fathers dispose of me and govern me at their pleasure. O would that all Prelates would acknowledge this golden sentiment of ours! For very many, once reported to superiors, so collapse in spirit that they rush into reprobation. And if we were lords of our reputation, nor would it be lost by secret report to the Prelate as to a Father: why would the Fathers of the Society of Jesus press it, so that Novices be instructed in that custom of theirs, and, if they wish to profess, renounce their right to reputation in this respect? Why would so many most learned Fathers of the Society labor so hard to defend that constitution of theirs? Surely Lorca 1. 2. quaest. 33. art. 8. sect. 3. disp. 47. num. 12. Ledesma in the summa Tom. 2. tract. 4. cap. 4. concl. 24. and Cosmas Philiareus de officio Sacerdotis, tom. 1. puncto 2. lib. 4. cap. 14., though Jesuits, cry out against such a statute, whose opinion, as the more probable, the Academy of Salamanca has lately followed, as Hieronymus Rodriquez testifies in Compend. regularium quaestionum, resol. 36. num. 13. That Academy, moreover, is that of the Fathers the Preachers.

> PROBATUR *quarto: nam Nullus est Dominus famae alterius. Ideo non potest illico ad Praelatum deferre, quo famam turpiter conspurcet, et verecundiam primo excitatam in subdito eliminet; dum enim Religiosus coram Praelatis defertur, peius ei damnum infertur, quam si aliis multis dicatur. Ideo P. 17 IT IS PROVED fifthly. The nature of things must be measured from what happens always or for the most part; but for the most part a report to the prelate stirs up hatreds, arouses shame, and afterward eliminates it; he has rushed on to worse things, as the Holy Fathers related above teach: see Diana. D. Bonaventure seems to incline somewhat to that Lucae 17., but because he wished all Prelates to be made like himself, who was famed for outstanding mildness, Charity, and benignity even toward apostates, much more toward the wounded within the secrets of walls, so that all might trust in him wondrously, as is had in his life in the Breviary, and in the first Volume of his works. No one is read to have gone away without consolation, no one without refreshment; all, even those once fallen, he embraced in his benign bosom. Such also was S. P. Francis, who was for him the exemplar of mildness and Charity, of whom it is read that he wished Prelates to be so gentle that if a sinner repented a hundred times, he would always be received, as at first, most benignly, with cheerful countenance. And if the subject would not have mercy; yet the holy Father, most humane even toward little animals — swallows, hares, etc. — wished Prelates to display supreme Charity toward the fallen, and was wont to say that the Prelate who wishes to raise up the fallen must bend himself to the earth, as Christ bent himself when he saw the adulteress drawn to him, whom he would not, according to the law, deliver to be stoned, but said: No one hath condemned thee: Neither will I condemn thee. Go, and now sin no more. He bent down, writing in the marble the sins of the Prelates of that Synagogue, who with loftiest brow gaped for the condemnation of the woman. Prelates, therefore, ought to remember, as S. P. Francis used to say, that we shall all have been far worse if God should desert us, nor is it not so because of our merits. Our Constitutions enjoin these things also in that chapter. Therefore that constitution of Barcelona, among the Constitutions of Farinerius cap. 7., either does not touch the matter, or is abrogated. But say, it is not to the point, because they only condemn those unwilling ever to have the sins of a complicit neighbor reported to the prelate, even public ones and pernicious to the body of the Religion; which same Julius II condemned in the Constitutions of the Franciscan family, as Fagundez reports num. 20, and as I noted above.

> PROBATUR quinto. Ab eo, quod aut semper, aut ut plurimum evenit, metienda est natura rerum; plerumque autem delatio ad praelatum concitat odia, verecundiam excitat, et illam postea eliminat; ad deteriora prosilivit, ut docent SS. PP. supra relati: Vide Dian. Videtur D. Bonav. ad illud Lucae 17. aliquantulum inclinare, sed quia volebat, Praelatos omnes sibi similandos, qui eximia ferebatur lenitate, Charitate, et benignitate etiam in Apostatas, nedum laesos intra parietum secreta, ut omnes mirifice in eum confiderent, ut habetur in eius vita in Breviario, et in primo Tomo operum. Nullus legitur abiisse absque consolatione, nullus absque refrigerio, Omnes, etiam olim lapsos, sinu benigno complectebatur. Talis fuit etiam S. P. Franciscus, qui illi erat in lenitatis et Charitatis exemplar, de quo legitur, voluisse Praelatos adeo esse mites, ut si centies peccator resipisceret, semper, ut primo, benignissime, facie hilari reciperetur. Et si misericordiam nollet subditus; volebat tamen S. Pater, humanissimus etiam erga animalcula, Hirundines, Lepores, etc. ut summam erga lapsos Charitatem praeferrent Praelati, dicereque solebat, eum Praelatum, qui vult lapsum elevare, debere se inclinare ad terram, sicut Christus inclinavit se, quando adulteram ad se pertractam vidit, quam noluit, iuxta legem, lapidandam tradere, sed ait: Nemo te condemnavit: Nec ego te condemnabo. Vade et iam amplius, noli peccare. Inclinavit se, scribens in marmore peccata Praelatorum illius Synagogae, qui supercilio elato condemnationi mulieris inhiabant. Debent itaque Praelati recordari, ut aiebat S. P. Franciscus multo peiores futuros fuisse nos omnes, si Deus desereret, neque meritis nostris id non fieri. Haec iniungant etiam nostrae Constitutiones in eo capite. Itaque constitutio illa Barcinonae, inter Constitutiones Farinerii cap. 7. vel non facit ad rem, vel abolita est. Sed dic, non esse ad rem, quia solum damnant nolentes unquam praelato deferri peccata proximi complicis, etiam publica, et perniciosa Religionis corpori; quod idem damnavit Iulius II. in Constitutionibus Franciscanae familiae, ut refert Fagundez num. 20. et ut supra monui.

18 Give us forever Prelates, holy Francises, Bonaventures, and others according to these exemplars of Charity. But on this well-worn path I cannot fix my steps, nor valiantly sustain the opposite opinion: Yet I do not refuse another point on which our Bouërius speaks learnedly, that some religious are reprobates, who abuse corrections, that they may sin in secret. These, I judge, are to be reported to the Prelate, not only as to a Father; but also as to a Judge. But these, who do not shrink from enormities, you will easily discern from others, who sin from some impulse of passion, or from frailty.

Date nobis perpetuo Praelatos SS. Franciscos, Bonaventuras, ac alios secundum haec Charitatis exemplaria. At in hoc itinere trito non possum gressus figere, nec sententiam oppositam valetsaliter sustinere: Non tamen renuo aliud in quo erudite loquitur Bouërius noster, aliquos esse religiosos reprobos, qui correctionibus abutuntur, ut secreto delinquent. Hos vero deferendos reor Praelato, non modo ut Patri; sed etiam ut Iudici. Verum hos enormia non horrentes, facile ab aliis discernes, qui ex aliquo passionis impetu, aut fragilitate delinquunt.

19 From these things the responses of Caspensis are worn away, who says that the good of the soul ought to outweigh the good of reputation. For we have already seen that the good of the soul is more easily promoted by a good reputation. And indeed I know that some have rushed headlong because of lost reputation. Then, reputation is of the natural law, and must necessarily be upheld, nor are evils to be done that goods may come, as the Apostle says.

Ex his attritae sunt responsiones Caspensis, dicentis, praeponderare debere bonum animae, bono famae. Iam enim vidimus, bonum animae fama bona facilius promoveri. Et quidem scio, aliquos in praeceps corruisse ob famam amissam. Deinde fama est iuris naturae, necessario sustinenda, nec sunt facienda mala, ut eveniant bona, sicuti ait Apostolus.

20 The other response also is worn away, that the infamy from the knowledge of the Prelate is slight.

Altera etiam responsio contrita est, modicam esse infamiam ex notitia Praelati.

21 Nay, I have shown it to be the greatest, which will forever stand in the way in governance, dispensations of offices, and the other goods of the Religion; nay, those most expert in religious life judge from this a greater loss of reputation than from the knowledge of other brothers. I have shown sufficiently also that the constitution of Farinerius helps him nothing, where he declares that doctrine, opposed by many, according to the mind of D. Bonaventure.

Imo maximam ostendi, quae perpetuo est obfutura in regimine, dispensationibus officiorum, et caeteris Religionis bonis; imo religionis peritissimi maiorem hinc famae iacturam aestimant, quam ex notitia aliorum fratrum. Satis etiam ostendi, constitutionem Farinerii nihil eum iuvare, ubi doctrinam illam, pluribus infensam, declarat ex mente D. Bonaventurae.

22 Surely D. Bonaventure professed the Gospel, and this commandment of the Lord the sacred Canons confess; And at least in that passage of Luke, he admits the admonition: Are then the precepts of Christ pestiferous? Hah, P. Caspensis, professor of the Gospel!

Sane D. Bonav. profiterur Evangelium, et hoc Domini praeceptum LL. CC. confessus est; Et ad minimum in illo loco Lucae, admittit admonitionem: Ergone pestifera Christi praecepta? Heus P. Caspensis, Evangelii professor!

23 But as to the Constitutions of the Fathers the Preachers loc. cit., I am not moved at all; for they speak of scandalous sin. Then the Theological Fathers of Salamanca, and other Preachers, are with us. Then the Rule of the friars minor is this, to observe the Gospel of the Lord, cap. 1.

Quod vero spectat ad Constitutiones Patrum Praedicatorum loc. cit. nihil movor; nam loquuntur de peccato scandaloso. Deinde Patres Theologi Salmaticenses, et alii Praedicatores nobiscum sunt. Deinde Regula fratrum minorum haec est, Sanctum Domini Evangelium observare, cap. 1.

24 As to the rule of S. Benedict, it plainly speaks of him who plots apostasy, and of the scandalous. Whence it is not to the point. I add that our Constitutions, cap. 3., impose the order of correction.

Quoad regulam S. Benedicti, aperte loquitur de eo, qui apostasiam molitur, et de scandalosis. Unde non est ad rem. Addo Constitutiones nostras, cap. 3. correctionis ordinem imponere.

25 He ADDUCES also Innocent III. cap. 39. Qualiter, et quando, 1. de accusat. But he speaks of a delict already so known to the Prelates that they can proceed. Where he only the more commends providing without the engines of trials, if it can be done, by removing from the office in which the brother sins. Nor does he speak of the Evangelical order. Nay, Innocent himself cap. cum ex iniuncto, says: It is one thing to rebuke secretly a brother sinning in himself, which each is bound to effect, according to the Evangelical rule.

> ADDUCIT etiam Innocentium III. cap. 39. Qualiter, et quando, 1. de accusat. Sed is loquitur de delicto, ita iam noto Praelatis, ut possint procedere. Ubi solummodo magis laudat sine processuum telis providere, si potest fieri, removendo ab officio, in quo frater peccat. Neque loquitur de ordine Euangelico. Imo Innocentius ipse cap. cum ex iniuncto, ait: Aliud est, fratrem in se peccantem occulte corripere, quod quisque tenetur efficere, iuxta regulam Euangelicam.

26 This, however, I warn with Cajetan: one must walk with open eyes, while we see a Religious sinning lethally; and it must be presumed that such a one is with difficulty brought back to penance. See him opusc. primo, resp. 5. ad ultimum dubium, and Durandus in 4. dist. 19. and D. Chrysostom homil. 40. in Matthaeum.

> Hoc tamen admoneo cum Caietano, oculate incedendum, dum Religiosum lethaliter peccantem videmus; et praesumendum difficile huiusmodi reduci ad poenitentiam. Vide ipsum opusc. primo, resp. 5. ad ultimum dubium, et Durandum in 4. dist. 19. et D. Chrystost. homil. 40. in Matthaeum.

27 Therefore it is needful that the monitor clothe himself with the bowels of Charity, and arm his heart with Zeal, and neither pander to the curiosity of Prelates, nor indulge the license of subjects; for fraternal correction is the daughter of mercy, the granddaughter of Charity, as all the Doctors, even of the first opinion, confess, in Sanchez num. 46. who adds n. 47. that it is not to be reported to the Prelate if it be doubtful whether the Prelate is more apt for the salvation of the sinner.

> Oportet igitur, ut monitor induat viscera Charitatis, et cor Zelo armet, et neque Praelatorum faucaet curiositati, nec subditorum licentiae indulgeat; nam fratetna correctio est filia misericordiae, nepos Charitatis, ut omnes Doctores, etiam primae sententiae, fatentur, apud Sanchez num. 46. qui addit n. 47. non esse Praelato deferendum, si dubium sit, an Praelatus aptior sit ad salutem peccatoris.

28 But CRIMES, ruinous to the community, especially heresy, are to be reported without correction, as is lately said in the Constitution of the Holy Inquisition of Alexander VII. Among sins publicly damaging, moreover, Caspensis reports fornication, and he reports sixteen Doctors. He adds, however, that those fallen through frailty are to be commiserated, and rather covered with the mantle of Charity.

> CRIMINA vero, ruinosa communitati, haeresis praecipue, absque correctione sunt deferenda, ut novissime dicitur in Constitutione Sanctae Inquisitionis Alexandri VII. Inter peccata vero publice damnosa refert Caspensis fornicationem, et refert sexdecim Doctores. Addit vero, lapsos ex fragilitate commiserandos, et pallio potius Charitatis tegendos.

29 From what has been said you have that it is mortal to transgress this commandment, or to invert it out of hatred. Whence it comes that it cannot be told to the Prelate before witnesses have been called in, or at least one. So Hugo de S. Vict., who was a second Augustine, as Trithemius says, and he reports the same Augustine. The same affirm Albert. Navar. Valentia, who proves it from D. Basil quaest. 46. and D. Augustine regula tertia.

Ex dictis habes, mortale esse hoc praeceptum transgredi, vel odium invertere. Quo fit, ut non possit dici Praelato, antequam adhibiti sint testes, vel saltem unus. Ita Hugo de S. Vict. qui fuit alter August. ut ait Trithem. et refert eundem August. Idem afferunt Albert. Navar. Valentia, qui id probat ex D. Basilio quaest. 46. et D. August. regula tertia.

30 IT IS PROVED also, because Christ prescribes the sweet manner of Charity in this order of correction: Now surely he supposes that the greater detriment to reputation is if it be reported to the Prelate than if only two subjects know it.

PROBATUR etiam, quia Christus suavem modum Charitatis, hoc correctionis ordine, praescribit: Certum autem supponit, maius detrimentum esse famae, si Praelato deferatur, quam si duo subditi tantum norint.

31 Finally I warn that Christ gave this commandment to the Apostles, religious men; Whence I wonder at those saying that the good of religion requires something else, as though Christ had not instituted the best norm of religion.

Tandem admoneo, Christum dedisse hoc praeceptum Apostolis religiosis; Unde miror, dicentes, bonum religionis aliud requirere, quasi non instituerit Christus optimam religionis normam.

32 MANY, in Diana resol. 38., add that it is a venial sin not to correct one sinning venially: but this displeases; nor does that of Azorius punct. 2. lib. 12. cap. 14. quaest. 4. Angelus, or Sylvestrus, and others there, please. Prelates are excepted, who ought to correct even venial sins. See him. Nay, Fuliensis adds that the Prelate is to be blamed mortally if he omits to correct venial sins gravely noxious, for instance silence; and similar things, which tend to no small detriment of religion.

ADDUNT multi apud Dianam resol. 38. peccatum esse veniale, venialiter peccantem non corrigere: sed hoc displicet; neque placet Azorio punct. 2. lib. 12. cap. 14. quaest. 4. Angelo, vel Sylvestro, et aliis ibi. Excipiuntur Praelati, qui debent etiam venialia corrigere. Ipsum vide. Imo addit Fuliens. Praelatum lethali culpatum iri, si omittat corrigere venialia, graviter noxia, puta silentium; et similia, quae in religionis detrimentum non modicum vergunt.

Disputation XI: On Hatred

1 HATRED, if it be counted among the passions, obtains their indifference, so that it is now called evil, now good, according to the disposition of the object; whence it is sometimes of virtue, sometimes of vice; Here, however, it is taken for a depraved affection of the soul, diametrically opposed to Charity, as it will be permitted to see below.

> De Odio.
> ODIUM, si inter passiones numeretur, harum indifferentiam obtinet, ita ut modo malum, modo bonum, iuxta obiecti dispositionem nominetur; unde aliquando est virtutis, aliquando vitii; Hic vero sumitur pro prava animi affectione, Charitati e diametro opposita, ut infra videre licet.

Question I: What the object of hatred is, and what it is 1 Hatred regards the whole, whatever has been apprehended as evil and troublesome. Hence it is plain that it can be held in hatred, not only one's neighbor; but even God, if he be apprehended as troublesome; for thus the damned hate him, and they hated him in this life. So Christ says at Ioan. 15. They have hated me, and my Father. But that the word may be fulfilled which is written in their law: Because they have hated me without cause. Psalm. 34. and 138. Where the S. Doct. observes shrewdly on 15. Ioan. from D. August. tract. 81. and the Gloss; that God is said to be hated without cause, because we have no cause for hating God, nor do we reap any advantage from it. It is divided into hatred of affection, and of effect. See D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 30. quaest. 4. and ad Psalm. 30. where he truly divides hatred. It is defined by D. Bonaventure in the opusc. declaratorio terminorum Theologiae: Hatred is the will, affecting evil for the neighbor, that he may lack the good which saddens the one hating him. Where he defines only hatred toward the neighbor. Nyssenus indeed, homil. 8. in Eccles., defines it thus: It is an alienation, and aversion of appetite, or of the will, from that which is unpleasing, or affects with molestation, or, as D. Thom. says, prima 2. quaest. 29. art. 1. from that which is esteemed as noxious and evil.

> Quodnam sit obiectum ODII, et quid ipsum sit.
> Odium respicit totum, quidquid apprehensum est, ut malum, et molestum. Hinc patet, posse odio haberi, non modo proximum; sed etiam Deum, si apprehendatur ut molestus; sic enim eum odio habent damnati, et oderunt in hac vita. Ita Ioan. 15. ait Christus. Oderunt me, et Patrem meum. Sed ut impleatur sermo, qui in lege eorum scriptus est: Quia odio habuerunt me gratis. Psalm. 34. et 138. Ubi observat argute S. Doct. ad 15. Ioan. ex D. August. tract. 81. et Glossa; Deum dici odio haberi gratis, quia nullam causam habemus odiendi Deum, nullumque inde commodum ferimus. Dividitur in odium affectus, et effectus. Vide D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 30. quaest. 4. et ad Psalm. 30. ubi vere dividit odium. Definitur a D. Bonavent. in opusc. declaratorio terminorum Theologiae: Odium est voluntas, affectans proximo malum, ut careat bono, quod ipsum odientem contristat. Ubi definit solum odium in proximum. Nyssenus vero homil. 8. in Eccles. sic definit: Est alienatio, et aversio appetitus, seu voluntatis ab eo, quod est iniucundum, aut molestia afficit, sive, ut ait D. Thom. prima 2. quaest. 29. art. 1. ab eo, quod aestimatur ut noxium, et malum.

2 From these definitions you have a twofold hatred, of Abomination, and of Enmity. That is, by which we abominate someone as unworthy of our friendship; this, however, is that by which we wish evil to the neighbor precisely that ill may befall him, as Tannerus notes, disput. 2. quaest. 6. dub. cit.

Ex his definitionibus habes duplex odium, Abominationis, et Inimicitiae. Illud est, quo aliquem, ut indignum nostra amicitia abominamur; hoc vero est, quo volumus proximo malum praecise, ut illi male sit, ut notat Tannerus disput. 2. quaest. 6. dub. cit.

Question II: What sin hatred is, and what kind

1 To no one is it doubtful that hatred is a sin against Charity, as the S. Doct. shows at length on 15. Ioannis. Therefore he rebukes there the haters of God: They have hated me, and my Father. And the haters of the neighbor: But because you are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Levit. 19. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. Prima Ioan. 3. He who hateth his brother, is a murderer. Therefore the haters of the neighbor are rebuked, Amos 5. Proverb. 9. as S. Bonaventure reports there on 15. Ioan. Whence D. August. tract. 5. in primam Ioan.: He has not moved his hand to kill a man, and already he is held a murderer by the Lord. That one shall live; and this one is already judged an assassin. I said, however, that hatred whose material object is God, or man, is a sin; for if hatred be borne toward the sinner, as such, it is not evil, as D. Bonaventure notes on 15. Ioan., which that Psalm 138 proves: With perfect hatred I hated them, where D. Gregory in the Pastorali, p. 3. cap. 1. admon. 23.: Perfect hatred, whereby vice is hated and nature loved.

Quod, et quale peccatum sit odium.

Nulli dubium est, odium esse peccatum contra Charitatem, ut late ostendit S. Doct. ad 15. Ioannis. Ideo odientes Deum, increpat ibi: Oderunt me, et Patrem meum. Odientes vero proximum: Quia vero de mundo non estis, propterea odit vos mundus. Levit. 19. Non oderis fratrem tuum in corde tuo. Prima Ioan. 3. Qui odit fratrem suum, homicida est. Ideo reprehenduntur odientes proximum, Amos 5. Proverb. 9. ut refert S. Bonavent. ibi ad 15. Ioan. Unde D. August. tract. 5. in primam Ioan. Non movit manum ad occidendum hominem, et iam homicida tenetur a Domino. Vivet ille; et iste iam interfector iudicatur. Dixi autem odium, cuius obiectum materiale sit Deus, vel homo, esse peccatum; nam si odium feratur in peccatorem, ut talem, non est malum, ut notat D. Bonavent. ad 15. Ioan. quod probat illo Psalm. 138. Perfecto odio oderam illos, ubi D. Gregorius in Pastorali, p. 3. cap. 1. admon. 23. Perfectum odium, quo oditur vitium, et diligitur natura.

2 Or, if even our dear ones stand in the way of the divine service, they are to be hated, Lucae 14. If anyone come to me, and hate not Father, and Mother, as S. Bonaventure observes on that passage. But hatred against God, who is Light, Truth, and the Highest Good, is most grave and monstrous, as the S. Doct. expounds at length on 15. Ioan., ruminating those words: If I had not done among them the works which no other hath done, they would not have sin. But now both they have seen, and have hated me, and my father.

Vel, si chari etiam nostri obstent divino obsequio, odiendi sunt, Lucae 14. Si quis venit ad me, et non odit Patrem, et Matrem, ut observat S. Bonavent. ad eum locum. Gravissimum autem, et monstruosum est odium in Deum, qui est Lux, Veritas, et Summum bonum, ut late edisserit S. Doct. ad 15. Ioan. ruminans ea verba: Si opera non fecissem in eis, quae nemo alius fecit, peccatum non haberent. Nunc autem, et viderunt, et oderunt me, et patrem meum.

3 I assert first, that hatred of God is the gravest sin.

Assero primo, odium Dei esse gravissimum peccatum.

4 It is proved by D. Bonav. loc. cit. first with the reasoning of D. August. tract. 92. in Ioan. and Chrysost. homil. 72. in Ioan., taken from that cited Ioan. 15.: They have hated me without cause. For where is the highest good, outside of which there is no good, and in which nothing evil is to be found, it would necessarily, as to specification, be to be loved; and it is most monstrous to hate it. It is confirmed from Aristotle 8. Eth. cap. 10.: That is worst which is contrary to the best. But hatred of God is contrary to Charity, which is the highest virtue, since it is borne toward the Highest Good insofar as it is the Highest Good: Therefore.

> Probatur a D. Bonav. loc. cit. primo ratione D. August. tract. 92. in Ioan. et Chrysost. homil. 72. in Ioan. sumpta ex illo Ioan. 15. citato: Odio habuerunt me gratis. Nam ubi est summum bonum, extra quod non est aliquod bonum, et in quo non est invenire aliquid mali, esset necessario quoad specificationem amandum; et monstruosissimum est odisse. Confirmatur ex Aristotele 8. Eth. cap. 10. Illud est pessimum, quod optimo est contrarium. Sed odium Dei est contrarium Charitati, quae est summa virtus, quippe quae fertur in Bonum summum, ut Summum bonum est: Ergo.

5 It is proved secondly by D. Bonav. in the Incendio amoris, and Stimulo amoris, because, as it is the greatest duty to love the Highest Goodness, from which there come to us Being, Life, and all good things; so it is the greatest abomination and iniquity, to be carried in hatred against that goodness, and to will its destruction.

> Probatur secundo a D. Bonav. in Incendio amoris, et Stimulo amoris, quia, sicuti est maximum debitum diligendi Summam bonitatem, a qua nobis, Esse, Vita, et omnia bona proveniunt; ita est maxima abominatio, et iniquitas, ferri odio in eam bonitatem, eiusque destructionem velle.

6 It is proved thirdly by D. Bonav. in the places cited, and elsewhere everywhere, with the reasoning which D. Thom. also uses, art. 2.: because as Charity is best, because the whole adheres wholly to God, as God is; so hatred of him is worst, because it turns the whole away from God, and in every way. With these and similar arguments all the works of the Seraphic Doctor are filled.

> Probatur tertio a D. Bonav. locis adductis, et alibi passim, ratione, qua utitur etiam D. Thom. art. 2. quia sicuti charitas optima est, quia tota toti adhaeret Deo, ut Deus est; ita odium eius pessimum, quia avertit a Deo totum, et omnibus modis. His, et similibus argumentis repleta sunt omnia Seraphici opera.

7 S. Bonaventure notes, however, that wayfaring men ordinarily do not hate God explicitly, but only implicitly, insofar as they are turned away from him, that they may be converted to a changeable good; and therefore all sins virtually contain hatred of God, as Valentia also notes, disp. 3. quaest. 11. puncto 2.

> Advertit tamen S. Bonav. homines viatores ordinarie non odisse Deum explicite, sed solum implicite, quatenus ab eo avertuntur, ut ad bonum commutabile convertantur; et ideo virtualiter omnia peccata odium Dei continent, ut notat etiam Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 11. puncto 2.

8 I assert secondly, that to hate the neighbor is a most grave sin.

> Assero secundo, Odisse proximum est gravissimum peccatum.

9 It is proved by the S. Doct. ad cap. 15. Ioan. and collat. 70. homi. de enim., where those are called haters of the neighbor, as I said. There he brings forward many Fathers asserting hatred to be detestable: Gregory homil. 27. in Evang. and D. August. saying: To hold hatred against a brother is to stop up the fountain of Charity.

> Probatur a S. Doct. ad cap. 15. Ioan. et collat. 70. homi. de enim vocantur odientes proximum, ut dixi. Ibi affert multos PP. odium detestandum asserentes: Gregorium homil. 27. in Evang. et D. August. dicentem: Odium tenere adversus fratrem, est fontem Charitatis obturare.

10 Hence the S. Doct. lib. 1. de profectu religiosi, cap. 29., among the remedies of hatred, puts first to consider seriously that God does not spare him who does not spare, as is said Matth. 18. Whence he who wishes to be saved must lay aside hatred, and it is better to do this with certainty; now it is always of its genus a mortal sin; but per accidens it can be venial, first from imperfection of deliberation. Secondly, when he wishes the neighbor the greatest evil. So Suarez de Charitate, tract. 3. disp. 6. sect. 1. Azorius Tom. 3. lib. 2. cap. 20. Sylvester v. odium. Fagundez in 10. praecept. Decalogi, lib. 10. cap. 2. num. 22.

> Hinc S. Doct. lib. 1. de profectu religiosi, cap. 29. inter remedia odii primum ponit serio considerare, Deum non parcere illi, qui non parcit, ut dicitur Matth. 18. Unde oportet odium deponere, qui vult salvari, et melius est id certo facere; est autem semper ex genere suo peccatum mortale; per accidens vero potest esse veniale, primo ex imperfectione deliberationis. Secundo, quando vult proximo maximum malum. Ita Suarez de Charitate, tract. 3. disp. 6. sect. 1. Azorius Tom. 3. lib. 2. cap. 20. Sylvester v. odium. Fagundez in 10. praecept. Decalogi, lib. 10. cap. 2. num. 22.

11 Nay, of its genus it is the greatest sin, among those things which are done against the neighbor. So D. Thom. quaest. 34. art. 4. and Suarez. For although the harms inflicted on the neighbor aggravate other sins above hatred; yet this is worse by the disordination of the will, because it turns one altogether from the Neighbor, the object of Charity, by the natural and Divine law of loving.

> Imo ex genere suo est maximum peccatum, ex his, quae in proximum fiunt. Ita D. Thom. quaest. 34. art. 4. et Suarez. Quamvis enim nocumenta, quae proximo inferuntur, alia peccata aggravent super odium; tamen hoc ex deordinatione voluntatis est peius, quia avertit omnino a Proximo, obiecto Charitatis, amando iure naturae, et Divino.

12 It is not placed, however, among the capital vices, because other sins do not proceed first from it, but it is rather the dregs of other sins — Envy, Anger, etc. — from which dregs others then crawl. So D. Thom. art. 5. Fagundez num. 24.

> Non ponitur tamen inter vitia capitalia, quia ex eo non procedunt primo alia peccata, sed est potius faex aliorum peccatorum, Invidiae, Irae, etc. ex qua postea faece alia sane serpunt. Ita D. Thom. art. 5. Fagundez num. 24.

13 From what has been said you have that hatreds against God and against the neighbor are diverse in species, because the objects are diverse; nor have they of themselves that one should be for the sake of the other, as we said in Charity with D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 27. quaest. 2.

> Ex dictis habes, diversa specie esse odia in Deum, et proximum, quia obiecta sunt diversa; neque habent per se, ut unum sit propter alterum, ut in Charitate dicebamus cum D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 27. quaest. 2.

14 Nay, each hatred seems to be doubled, insofar as they turn away from the natural and supernatural Divine good; likewise also that of the neighbor, as Bannes said, art. 6.; but Valentia puncto 2. assents to the opposite.

> Imo utrumque odium videtur duplicari, quatenus avertant a bono Divino naturali, et supernaturali; similiter et proximi, ut dixit Bannes art. 6. sed Valentia puncto 2. assentitur opposito.

Disputation XII: On Sloth

1 SINCE Charity, after the manner of fire, always acts, and is impatient of idleness, hence, the material of operating being furnished to it by the readiness of the one operating, it rejoices in great gladness; but when the will slackens from the good work, sadness is born; hence Acedia is opposed to the Joy of Charity, as D. Bonav. notes, prima parte Centiloq. sect. 21. Therefore it must be treated of here.

> CUM charitas, ad instar ignis, semper agat, sitque otii impatiens, hinc, subministrata ipsi operandi materia ab operantis promptitudine, in magnam hilarescit laetitiam; verum pigrescente a bono opere voluntate, tristitia enascitur, hinc Gaudio Charitatis opponitur Acedia, ut notat D. Bonav. prima parte Centiloq. sect. 21. Ideo de ea agendum est hic.

Sole Question: What sloth is, and what its object is 1 ACEDIA is a Greek word, ἀκηδία, which signifies carelessness, or negligence. Then also a certain sadness that aggravates and oppresses the soul, so that it brings forth that carelessness. Now that sadness can be either of sense, or of the will. Here it is taken for the sadness of the will, bringing forth carelessness in the good work.

> ACEDIA Graecum est vocabulum ἀκηδία, quod significat incuriam, seu negligentiam. Deinde etiam tristitiam quamdam aggravantem, et opprimentem animum, ut afferat incuriam illam. Potest autem tristitia illa esse, vel sensus, vel voluntatis. Hic accipitur pro tristitia voluntatis, afferente incuriam in bono opere.

2 Now this can be described, from D. Thom. art. 1. and D. Bonavent. p. 1. Centil. sect. 21. and in Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 7. and in the Declaratione terminorum Theologiae, where Latius also describes its daughters in the speculo animae, cap. 3.: Acedia is the sadness of the will concerning a good, in some measure divine and ours, esteemed as an evil of one's own, on account of the difficulty joined to obtaining it, bringing forth in consequence carelessness and torpor in salutary works.

> Haec autem sic potest describi ex D. Thom. art. 1. et D. Bonavent. p. 1. Centil. sect. 21. et in Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 7. et in Declaratione terminorum Theologiae, ubi etiam eius filias describit Latius in speculo animae, cap. 3. Acedia est tristitia voluntatis de bono aliqualiter divino, et nostro, existimato ut malo proprio, propter adiunctam difficultatem illud obtinendi, afferens proinde incuriam, et torporem in operibus salutaribus.

3 From these you have, first, that Acedia is a sin, since it is sadness about good. Hence you will find this tepidity rebuked in Scripture, Proverb 8. How long, sluggard, wilt thou sleep? Then: The sluggard wills, and wills not. Ecclesiast. 6. Subject thy shoulder, and bear it, that is, spiritual discipline, and be not grieved with its bands. Matth. 3. Every tree that doth not bring forth good fruit shall be cut down, etc. Therefore at Matth. 25. and Lucae 19. the servant is gravely punished, because he hid the talent dug in the earth, as the S. Doct. shows in the speculo animae, cap. 3., where he also observes that that lukewarm one is to be vomited forth, Apoc. 3.; and on 8. Lucae, him who puts the lamp under a bushel. See many Fathers in D. Bonavent. lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 10.

> Ex quibus habes primo, Acediam esse peccatum, cum sit tristitia de bono. Hinc reprehensam invenies in Scriptura hanc tepiditatem, Proverb 8. Usquequo piger dormies? Deinde: Vult, et non vult piger. Ecclesiast. 6. Subiice humerum tuum, et porta illam idest spiritualem disciplinam, et ne acedieris vinculis eius. Matth. 3. Omnis arbor, quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, etc. Ideo Matth. 25. et Lucae 19. punitur graviter servus, quia in terra fossum abscondit talentum, ut ostendit S. Doct. in speculo animae*, cap. 3. ubi etiam observat, evomendum, Apoc. 3. illum tepidum; et ad 8. Lucae; illum qui lucernam sub lecto ponit. Vide multos PP. apud D. Bonavent. lib. 2.* Pharetrae*, cap. 10.*

4 You HAVE secondly, that this sin is opposed to the virtue of Charity: for it is contrary to its joy, as S. Bonav. teaches, p. 1 Centiloq. loc. cit.

HABES secundo, peccatum hoc opponi virtuti Charitatis: est enim contraria gaudio eius, ut docet S. Bonav. p. 1 Centiloq. loc. cit.

5 You HAVE thirdly, that it is mortal of its genus, if it be about a good divinely commanded, etc., as D. Thom. notes, art. 3. ad secundum. And D. Bonav. in the Speculo animae, cap. 3. and lib. 3. Compendy Theol. cap. 25. But if it be about a good not commanded, it is venial.

HABES tertio, esse ex genere suo mortale, si sit de bono divino praecepto, etc. ut notat D. Thom. art. 3. ad secundum. Et D. Bonav. in Speculo animae*, cap. 3. et lib. 3.* Compendy Theol. cap. 25. at si sit de bono non praecepto, est veniale.

6 You HAVE fourthly, that this is a capital vice; for, as the Philosopher says, 8. Eth. cap. 6.: No one can long remain in sadness without delight: So much so that those who are vexed with sadness do something else, that they may seek pleasure. Thus it is named by D. Gregory, 21. Moral. cap. 17. in D. Bonav. in the speculo animae, cap. 3.

HABES quarto, hoc esse vitium capitale; nam, ut Philosophus 8. Eth. cap. 6. Nemo diu permanere potest in tristitia sine dilectatione: Adeo ut, qui tristitia vexantur, aliquid aliud faciunt, ut quaerant delectationem. Sic nominatur D. Gregorio 21. Moral. cap. 17. apud D. Bonav. in speculo animae*, cap. 3.*

7 The REMEDY of acedia Cassianus assigns, lib. 10. de Institut. Coenobiorum, cap. ultimo. And Climacus grad. 21. in D. Bonav. de pugna spirituali, cap. 7. Bernardus serm. 3. de Ascensione: resist gravely, and undertake and pursue the work strenuously. D. Bonav. loc. cit. Diaetae assigns a variety of occupations, never idling, but working variously, now praying, now reading, now singing. See D. Bonav. de pugna spirituali, loco citato.

REMEDIUM acediae assignant Cassianus lib. 10. de Institut. Coenobiorum*, cap. ultimo. Et Climacus grad. 21. apud D. Bonav.* de pugna spirituali*, cap. 7. Bernardus* serm. 3. de Ascensione; graviter resistite, et opus strenue aggredi, atque prosequi. D. Bonav. loc. cit. Diaetae assignat diversitatem occupationum, nunquam otiando, sed varie operari, nunc orando, nunc legendo, nunc cantando. Vide D. Bonav. de pugna spirituali, loco citato.

8 From these you will understand many definitions of acedia, related by D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 1. The first from D. August.: Acedia is weariness of the internal good. The second from Richard: It is tepor of the soul, neglecting to begin the good. The third from Damascene, lib. 1. de fide, cap. 14.: It is an aggravating sadness. The fourth from many Masters: Acedia is diffidence about one's own powers and the help of God for fulfilling arduous things, or commandments.

Ex his intelliges multas definitiones acediae, relatas a D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 1. Prima ex D. August. Acedia est taedium interni boni. Secunda ex Richardo: Est tepor animi, bonum inchoare negligens. Tertia ex Damasceno, lib. 1. de fide*, cap. 14.* Est tristitia aggravans. Quarta ex Magistris multis: Acedia est diffidentia de propriis viribus, et auxilio Dei, implendi ardua, sive mandata.

9 From these S. Bonaventure elicits that Acedia is essentially indeed opposed to the joy of charity; but not insofar as diffidence is opposed to Hope, inasmuch as it is weariness of the internal good, from which pusillanimity is generated: It is opposed to Fortitude: Inasmuch as it esteems all things difficult, even the easier; It is opposed to Charity, which makes all things easy.

> Ex quibus elicit S. Bonav. Acediam essentialiter quidem opponi gaudio charitatis; sed non quantum diffidentia opponitur Spei, in quantum est taedium interni boni, ex quo generatur pusillanimitas: Opponitur Fortitudini: Quatenus reputat difficilia omnia, etiam faciliora; Opponitur Charitati, quae omnia efficit facilia.

10 Now, since Acedia is a capital vice, it has many sons and daughters. The first is malice, which is the will, impatient of burden, scheming evil against him whom it esteems to be inflicting that burden on it. The second is rancor, which is the will, embittered by the impotence of repelling the burden, manifesting by an external sign the bitterness shut up within. The third is pusillanimity, which is the will immoderately fearing the burden in undertaking things to be done, or immoderately diffiding in its own powers. The fourth is despair, which is the will, oppressed by burden, diffiding in the help for acting, or in the divine remuneration on account of the sustaining of the burden, which is diffiding in the fulfilling of the commandments. The fifth is Torpor, which is the will succumbing to the burden, tepid or sluggish toward the completion of things undertaken: The sixth is the wandering of the mind about illicit things, which is the will, destitute of internal joy, seeking rest or consolation in illicit exterior things.

> CUM autem Acedia sit vitium capitale, habet multos filios, et filias. Prima est malitia, quae est voluntas, gravedinis impatiens, machinans malum illius, quem illud sibi aestimat inferentem. Secunda est rancor, qui est voluntas, ex impotentia repellendae gravedinis amaricata, amaritudinem intus clausam per signum exterius manifestans. Tertia est pusillanimitas, quae est voluntas immoderate metuens gravedinem in agressu agendorum, sive de propriis viribus immoderate diffidens. Quarta est desperatio, quae est voluntas, gravedine opprimens, de adiutorio ad agenda diffidens, sive de remuneratione divina propter sustinentiam gravedinis, quae est in implendis praeceptis diffidens. Quinta est Torpor, qui est voluntas gravedini succumbens, tepida, vel pigra ad impletionem agendorum inchoatorum: Sexta est vagatio mentis circa illicita, quae est voluntas, interno gaudio destituta; in rebus exterioribus illicitis quietem, vel consolationem quaerens.

11 ACCORDING to Isidorus, lib. in Deuter. cap. 16., some are daughters of sadness; others of acedia; for he himself calls sadness the will, inasmuch as it turns itself away from a grave duty.

> SECUNDUM Isidorum lib. in Deuter. cap. 16. aliae sunt filiae tristitiae; aliae acediae; ipse enim tristitiam vocat voluntatem, in quantum a gravi debito se avertit.

12 But he calls acedia the will, inasmuch as it converts itself to undue rest. He says first: From sadness go out rancor, pusillanimity, bitterness, despair; From acedia arise otiosity, somnolency, importunity, disquietude of mind, instability of body, curiosity. S. Bonav. has all these loc. cit. p. 1. Centiloquii.

> ACEDIAM vero vocat voluntatem, in quantum se ad quietem indebitam convertit. Dicit primo: De tristitia exeunt rancor, pusillanimitas, amaritudo, desperatio; De acedia oriuntur, otiositas, somnolentia, importunitas, inquietudo mentis, corporis instabilitas, curiositas. Haec omnia habet S. Bonav. loc. cit. p. 1. Centiloquii.

13 In the Diaeta tit. primo, cap. 7. he names fifteen daughters of acedia, and they are: Tepiditas, mollicies, somnolentia, otiositas, dilatio, tarditas, negligentia, imperfectio, remissio, dissolutio, ignavia, indolentia, tristitia, taedium vitae, desperatio. He says these vices were expressed by the fifteen cubits by which the water ascended above the mountains in the deluge, Genes. 7.; thus they submerge and suffocate the acedious within these vices.

> IN Diaeta tit. primo, cap. 7. Quindecim filias acediae nominat, et sunt, Tepiditas, mollicies, somnolentia, otiositas, dilatio, tarditas, negligentia, imperfectio, remissio, dissolutio, ignavia, indolentia, tristitia, taedium vitae, desperatio. Haec vitia expressa fuisse, ait per quindecim cubitos, quibus aqua super montes ascendit in diluvio, Genes. 7. sic intra haec vitia acediosum submergunt, ac suffocant.

14 ¶ There the S. Doctor has most illustrious things against Acedia for sermons, which it would be too prolix to transcribe here.

15 He heaps up very many Scriptures for it in the Bibliis pauperum, cap. 117.

> Plurimas ad id Scripturas congerit in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 117.

16 But the S. Doctor teaches in the confessional, cap. 2. particula 5., how the penitent is to be interrogated about Acedia: Whether through weariness he omitted that good, even though commanded: Whether in doing evil he began to take joy: Whether he deterred others from the good by mocking, etc. See the S. Doctor himself, discussing all the daughters of Acedia, distinguished by thoughts, words, and deeds.

> Docet autem S. Doctor in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 5. quomodo de Acedia interrogandus sit poenitens: An per taedium, bonum illud, etsi praeceptum, omiserit: An in faciendo malo laetitiam coeperit: An tetraxerit alios a bono, deridendo, etc. Ipsum S. Doctorem vide, discutientem omnes filias Acediae, cogitationibus, verbis, et factis distinctas.

Disputation XIII: On Envy

1 Envy is thus opposed to Charity, that as for the latter all things, even evils, cooperate unto good, so for the former all things, even goods, cooperate for evil; and as Charity covers the multitude of sins, so Envy covers all the goods of the neighbor, that they may not be seen; whence the envious one is said to be from non-seeing, as the Seraphic Doctor has, where below.

> Charitati ita adversatur Invidia, ut sicut illi omnia etiam mala cooperantur in bonum, ita huic omnia etiam bona cooperantur in malum; et sicut Charitas multitudinem peccatorum operit, ita Invidia omnia proximi bona, ne videantur, obtegit; unde Invidus dicitur a non videndo, ut habet Seraphicus, ubi infra.

Question I: What envy is, and what its object is 1 On Envy the Fathers have written many splendid things: Cyprian, serm. de Invid., Basil homil. 11. et 21., Chrysostom homil. 44. et 45., Cassian collat. 18., Prosper lib. 3. de vita contemplativa, cap. 9., and others as gathered by St. Bonaventure, Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 8., where, drawing on St. Gregory (Lib. 2. moral. cap. 20. Lib. 3. cap. 17.), he lists the daughters of Envy, which are Hatred, Whispering, Detraction, Anger; and others, from other Fathers, chiefly St. Augustine (de disciplina Christiana, cap. 1.) and Jerome (epist. 99.), where they call it a diabolical vice.

> De Invidia multa praeclare scripserunt PP. Cyprianus, serm. de Invid., Basil. homil. 11. et 21. Chrystostomus homil. 44. et 45. Cassianus collat. 18. Prosper lib. 3. de vita contemplativa, cap. 9. et alii apud D. Bonavent. Lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 8. ubi ex D. Gregorio Lib. 2. moral. cap. 20. Lib. 3. cap. 17. refert Invidiae filias; quae sunt Odium, Susurratio, Detractio, Ira; et aliae, ex aliis Patribus, praecipue D. Augustino de disciplina Christiana, cap. 1. Hieronymo epist. 99. ubi eam vocant diabolicam culpam.

2 Envy is defined by all as: Sadness over the neighbor's good, judged as an evil of one's own, insofar as by comparison it diminishes the excellence of one's own good. So the Socratic Doctor (opusc. explic. Terminorum Theologiae; et p. p. censil. sect. 19.). Hence Aristotle (Lib. 2. Rhet. cap. 9.) says the cause of Envy is equality, or similarity, and proximity. And the Saints have similar things: Augustine in Psalm. 104., as gathered by St. Bonaventure loc. adducto, Damascene Lib. 2. cap. 24. St. Augustine also, Lib. 11. de Genes. ad litt. cap. 14., describes Envy, saying: Since each loves his own excellence, he envies equals, that they be made equal to him; inferiors, lest they be made equal to him; superiors, because they are not made equal to him; etc. The same is taught by the Angelic Doctor (p. p. censil. sect. 19.). Hence also Lucan sang:

> Invidia ab omnibus definitur: Tristitia de bono alieno proximi, aestimato ut malo proprio, quatenus per comparationem imminuit proprii boni excellentiam. Ita S. Doctor opusc. explic. Terminorum Theologiae; et p. p. censil. sect. 19. Ideo Aristoteles Lib. 2. Rhet. cap. 9. ait, causam Invidiae esse aequalitatem, vel similitudinem, et propinquitatem. Et similia habent Sancti, Augustinus in Psalm. 104. apud D. Bonavent. loc. adducto*, Damascenus* Lib. 2. cap. 24. Etiam D. Augustinus Lib. 11. de Genes. ad litt. cap. 14. describit Invidiam dicens: Amando quisque excellentiam suam, vel paribus invidet, quod ei coaequentur, vel inferioribus, ne sibi coaequentur; vel superioribus, quod ei non coaequantur; etc. Idem docet S. Doctor p. p. censil. sect. 19. Unde etiam cecinit Lucanus,

3 — Emulous virtue gave the spur, and now each can no longer bear that Caesar be before him, or Pompey his equal. —

— Stimulos dedit aemula virtus, Nec quemquam iam ferre potest, Caesarve priorem; Pompeiusve parem. —

4 Therefore not only the surpassing good of one's neighbor begets Envy, but anything even equal, insofar as it is apprehended as diminishing our excellence or impeding our surpassing others. In this sense St. Gregory is to be understood, Lib. 5. moral. cap. 33. We cannot envy except those whom we think better than ourselves in some respect; for he does not call them better simply, but insofar as they diminish our excellence, as Tancretus noted (disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 1.), Valencia (disp. 3. quaest. 14. puncto 1.). Hence St. Augustine (Lib. 11. in Genes. cap. 15.), as cited by St. Bonaventure loco cit., says the differences of envy are three: namely, envying superiors, because one is not their equal; equals, because they prosper for the better; inferiors, lest they be made equal to oneself. But one must note that Envy agrees with the other three affections in the character of sadness, but differs by the other parts of the definition, as the Angelic Doctor indicates (p. p. Censil. sect. 19. et in speculo animae, cap. 1.).

Igitur non modo bonum praecellens proximi parit Invidiam, sed quodlibet etiam aequale, quatenus minuere nostram excellentiam apprehenditur, aut praecellentiam impedire. Quo sensu intelligendus D. Gregorius Lib. 5. moral. cap. 33. Invidere non possumus nisi eis, quos nobis in aliquo meliores putamus, non enim meliores vocat simpliciter, sed quatenus minuunt nostram excellentiam, ut adnotavit Tancretus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 1. Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 14. puncto 1. Hinc D. Augustinus Lib. 11. in Genes. cap. 15. apud D. Bonavent. loco cit. ait, differentias invidiae esse tres, nempe, Invidere superioribus, quia eis non aequantur: Paribus, quia in melius prosperantur: Inferioribus, ne ei aequentur. Oportet autem advertere, Invidiam in ratione Tristitiae convenire cum aliis tribus affectibus; sed differre per alias particulas definitionis, ut indicat S. Doctor p. p. Censil. sect. 19. et in speculo animae, cap. 1.

5 For first, there is a certain effect of fear, which is sadness over another's good insofar as it is feared to bring ruin upon us; and this is not a sin, as is clear from Aristotle loco cit. and St. Thomas (hic art. 1. et 2.) and St. Bonaventure in speculo animae. The envious man, however, is not saddened over another's good under this aspect, but as in fact judged to surpass him in his own excellence.

Primo enim datur quidam effectus timoris, qui est tristitia de bono alterius, quatenus timetur allaturus perniciem nobis; neque est peccatum, ut constat ex Aristotele loco cit. et D. Thom. hic art. 1. et 2. et D. Bonavent. in speculo animae. Invidus vero non sub hac ratione tristatur de bono alieno, sed ut de facto aestimati alium supereminente propriae excellentiae.

6 The second effect, similar to Envy, is when one is saddened not over another's good, so as to envy it, but over his own deficiency, insofar as he himself does not have that good; and this is not a sin, as St. Bonaventure says. This affection is called zeal and emulation, as the Philosopher teaches (Lib. 2. Rhet. cap. 11. and St. Thomas art. 1.). But Envy is saddened over another's good insofar as it diminishes one's own excellence. Hence 1 John cap. 3. says, For this reason Cain slew his brother, because his brother's works were just. Here the Angelic Doctor notes that Envy is sometimes called by the name of anger, Genes. 4. Why are you angry? where the Gloss reads: you are tormented by envy; sometimes by the name of hatred: His brothers hated him, Genes. 37.; sometimes by the name of emulation, 1 Kings 1. Her rival afflicted her. To this belongs what Nyssenus says, Lib. de vita Moysi: The envious man grieves at the happiness of others, and rejoices in their calamities. And Chrysostom, homil. 44. ad pop. Why do you grieve, O man, at your neighbor's goods? We ought to grieve at the evils we suffer, not at the goods by which we seem to be held in esteem by others. Therefore this sin is without any pardon. And Isidore, Lib. 3. sent. cap. 25. There is no virtue that has not for its contrary the evil of Envy; only misery is without envy.

Secundus effectus Invidiae similis est, cum quis tristatur, non de bono alterius, ut Invideat, sed de suo defectu, quatenus et ipse illud bonum non habet; et hoc non est peccatum, ut ait S. Bonavent. Hic affectus dicitur zelus et aemulatio, ut docet Philosophus Lib. 2. Rhet. cap. 11. et D. Thom. art. 1. Invidia vero tristatur de bono alterius, quatenus minuit propriam excellentiam. Unde prima Ioan. cap. 3. dicitur, Propterea Cain occidisse fratrem, quia fratris opera erant iusta. Ubi advertit S. Doctor aliquando Invidiam nomine irae vocari, Genes. 4. Quare irasceris? ubi Glossa: livore torqueris: Aliquando nomine odii: Oderant eum fratres, Genes. 37. Aliquando nomine aemulationis, primo Reg. 1. Affligebat eam aemula eius. Eo pertinet id, quod ait Nyssenus Lib. de vita Moysi: Invidus felicitate aliorum dolet, calamitatibus gaudet. Et Chrysostomus homil. 44. ad pop. Cur doles, o homo, proximi bonis? Dolere nos oportebat iis, quae patimur malis, non bonis, in quibus aliis probabiles haberi videmur. Propterea omni venia caret istud peccatum. Et Isidorus, Lib. 3. sent. cap. 25. Nulla est virtus, quae non habeat contrarium Invidiae malum: sola miseria caret invidia.

7 The third affection, similar to Envy, is sadness over another's good insofar as we judge him unworthy of that good; and this affection is called Nemesis, or Indignation. So Aristotle loco cit. cap. 9.; and St. Bonaventure asserts that this affection, with regard to temporal goods, which more often bring ruin, is not a sin (in speculo animae, supra citato.). See him also, Lib. primo de profectu Religiosi, cap. 13. Hence St. Gregory (in Pastorali, part. 3. cap. 1. admon. 23.) says: It often happens that, without losing Charity, we are gladdened by the ruin of an enemy, and again saddened by his glory without the guilt of envy: since we believe in our mind that some are thereby well raised up; and as he advances, we fear that very many are unjustly oppressed. So reports St. Bonaventure, Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 21.

Tertius affectus, similis Invidiae, est tristitia de bono alterius, quatenus illum aestimamus eo bono indignum, et hic affectus dicitur Nemesis*, sive Indignatio. Ita Aristoteles* loco cit. cap. 9. et hunc affectum quo ad bona temporalia, quae saepius ruinam afferunt, non esse peccatum, asserit S. Bonavent. in speculo animae, supra citato. Vide ipsum etiam Lib. primo de profectu Religiosi, cap. 13. Unde S. Gregorius in Pastorali, part. 3. cap. 1. admon. 23. ait: Evenire plerumque solet, ut non amissa Charitate, nos inimici ruina laetificet, et rursum eius gloria sine invidiae culpa nos contristet: dum et mente eo, quosdam bene erigi credimus; et proficiente eo, plerosque iniuste opprimi formidamus. Ita refert S. Bonavent. Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 21.

8 From what has been said it follows that Envy does not exist among those who are not equals or similar in some state, as Aristotle teaches (cap. 10.); for among these only the excellence of one obscures the excellence of the other. Hence he infers that neither the dead, nor those most remote at the pillars of Hercules, are envied; but envy, he says, exists among neighbors and rivals, and among those who desire and strive for the same things, whence the saying: The potter envies the potter, and the smith the smith.
