Ex dictis sequitur, Invidiam non esse inter eos, qui in aliquo statu non sint aequales, vel similes, ut docet Aristoteles cap. 10. nam inter hos tantum per unius praestantiam, Excellentia alterius obscuratur. Hinc deducit, nec mortuis, nec remotissimis ad columnas Herculis invideri: sed invidiam, ait, esse inter proximos, et rivales; et inter eos, qui eadem cupiunt, et intendunt, unde dictum est: Figulus figulo invidet; faberque fabro.

9 Hence you infer that those prone to envy are the faint-hearted, since to them all things seem great, as St. Gregory noted above; to this Job 5: Envy slays the small one. On the contrary, the magnanimous are free from envy, as Silius Italicus says. See Valencia.

Hinc deduces, eos invidiae obnoxios, qui pusillanimes sunt, quippe eis omnia videntur magna, ut adnotat D. Gregorius supra, ad id Iob. 5. Parvulum occidit Invidia. E contra, magnanimi invidia carent, ut ait Silius Italicus. Vide Valentiam.

10 From all these things the Angelic Doctor concludes in the place cited in the Summa that Envy is opposed to piety, which arises from Charity.

> Ex his omnibus colligit S. Doctor loco cit. Gentil. Invidiam opponi pietati, quae ex Charitate orta est.

1 { D Thom. art. 2.

> Quam prava sit INVIDIA.

2 I assert first that Envy, of its genus, is a mortal sin.

> Assero primo, Invidiam, ex suo genere, esse peccatum mortale.

3 It is proved first by St. Bonaventure in speculo animae, cap. 3. From Romans 1: The Lord delivered them up to a reprobate sense, that they may do things that are not convenient, filled with all iniquity, etc. full of envy, murder, etc., and Galatians 5: Among the works of the flesh are named enmities, concerning which he adds: Those who do such things shall not possess the kingdom of God.

> Probatur primo a D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 3. Ex primo Rom. Tradidit eos Dominus in reprobum sensum, ut faciant ea, quae non conveniunt, repletos omni iniquitate, etc. plenos invidia, homicidio, etc. et ad Galat. 5. Inter opera carnis nominantur invidiae, de quibus subdit: Qui talia agunt, regnum Dei non possidebunt.

4 It is proved by the Angelic Doctor Lib. 2., Pharetrae, cap. 8., and the Holy Fathers, who gravely exaggerate this sin, chiefly St. Gregory 2. moral. cap. 20. and Lib. 31. cap. 17. Lib. 3. Dial. cap. 15. and homil. 5. in Evang., Chrysostom homil. 54. in Ioan., Augustine de disciplina Christiana, cap. 1. de Virginitate, cap. 31., Jerome epist. 99., Isidore in Synop. cap. 9., Anselm de simil. cap. 45. The Angelic Doctor describes Envy admirably in sermons, in Diaeta, tit. 1. cap. 4. and in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 42.

> Probatur a S. Doctore Lib. 2., Pharetrae, cap. 8. et SS. PP. qui hoc peccatum graviter exaggerant, praecipue D. Gregorius 2. moral. cap. 20. et Lib. 31. cap. 17. Lib. 3. Dial. cap. 15. et homil. 5. in Evang. Chrysostomus homil. 54. in Ioan. Augustinus de disciplina Christiana, cap. 1. de Virginitate, cap. 31. Hieron. epist. 99. Isidorus in Synop. cap. 9. Anselmus de simil. cap. 45. Invidiam, ad conciones, describit egregie S. Doctor in Diaeta, tit. 1. cap. 4. et in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 42.

5 It is proved second by St. Bonaventure in compend. Theol. Lib. 3. cap. 16., because it is opposed to the divine goodness, which is communicative; so good indeed is God, says St. Augustine in the Enchiridion cap. 27. as is had in offic. Septuagesimae, that he makes good out of evils; but the envious man is so perverse that he sucks evil out of the very goods; and the goods cooperate toward evil for him. See the Angelic Doctor.

> Probatur secundo a D. Bonavent. in compend. Theol. Lib. 3. cap. 16. quia opponitur divinae bonitati, quae est communicativa; tam bonum autem Deum, ait D. Augustinus in Enchir. cap. 27. ut habetur in offic. Septuagesimae, ut de malis bonum faciat; sed invidus adeo pravus est, ut e bonis ipsis mala sugat; et bona in malum ei cooperantur. Vide S. Doctorem.

6 It is proved third by the Angelic Doctor cap. 28. De profectu religiosi, and Lib. 3. compend. Theol. cap. 23., because Envy is opposed to the virtue of Mercy and of Charity, and to its joy. Hence he also infers that it is a sin of envy not only to be saddened over another's good, but even not to rejoice in it, and not to grieve over the evil. He adds, however, that it can be venial by the surreption of the act. See him in the Compend.

> Probatur tertio a S. Doctore cap. 28. De profectu religiosi, et Lib. 3. compend. Theol. cap. 23. quia Invidia opponitur virtuti Misericordiae, et Charitatis, eiusque gaudio. Hinc etiam infert, esse peccatum invidiae, non solum tristari de bono alterius; sed etiam non gaudere de eo, et non dolere de malo. Addit vero, posse esse veniale ex subreptione actus. Vide ipsum in Compend.

7 I assert second that Envy is a capital sin. So St. Gregory 31. moral. cap. 31., St. Thomas art. 4., St. Bonaventure in the places cited here and in the preceding question; for from it many vices are born, per St. Gregory 31. moral. cap. 17.: namely, Hatred, which is to will evil to someone and to refuse a good. Second, exultation over the neighbor's adversities, affliction at his prosperities, whispering, detraction. See the Angelic Doctor de profectu Relig.

> Assero secundo, Invidiam esse peccatum capitale. Ita D. Gregorius 31. moral. cap. 31. D. Thom. art. 4. D. Bonavent. locis allegatis hic, et in praecedenti quaestione; nam de hac multa vitia nascuntur, ex D. Gregorio 31. moral. cap. 17. nempe, Odium, quod est velle malum alicui, et nolle bonum. Secundo exultatio in adversis proximi, afflictio in prosperis eius, susurratio, detractio. Vide S. Doctorem de profectu Relig.

8 Of Envy the Angelic Doctor also says (in speculo animae citato) that two branches issue. These are: exultation over the neighbor's adversities, and sadness at his prosperities. The same is had in the place already cited.

> De Invidia etiam ait S. Doctor in speculo animae citato, exire duos ramos. Hi sunt, exultatio in adversis proximi; et dolor in prosperis. Idem habet loco iam cit.

9 From the First are designated first Machination, which is the hidden procurement of evil. Second, scandal, which is a word or deed less right, affording others the occasion of ruin, as St. Jerome says (in c. 15. Matth.) and St. Augustine (locis allegandis disp. 18.). Third, Snares, which are the investigation of another's deeds, so that the neighbor may be accused from them. Fourth, Betrayal, when one feigns friendship with another in order to deceive him. Of this Boethius says, there is no pest worse than an enemy in one's own household. Fifth, Suspicion, when one is quick to suspect evil of another. Hence Tully: suspicion is an evil opinion arising from slight causes; and this proceeds from the evil affection of Envy, and then it has the character of mortal sin; otherwise it is not judged mortal, as the Angelic Doctor says, whom Suarez and others follow, as gathered from him. Sixth is perverse judgment, when one, ill-disposed toward another, not only suspects evil in him from slight causes, but even determines it in his heart or pronounces it judicially with his mouth; and this is always mortal sin of its genus; hence the Gloss on 1 Cor. 4. Do not judge before the time, condemns this.

> De Primo diramantur primo Machinatio, quae est mali occulta procuratio. Secundo scandalum, quod est dictum, vel factum minus rectum, praebens aliis occasionem ruinae, ut ait D. Hieronymus in c. 15. Matth. et D. Augustinus locis allegandis disp. 18. Tertio Insidiae, quae sunt investigatio factorum alterius, ut inde accusari possit proximus. Quarto Proditio, cum quis amicitiam simulat cum alio, ut eum decipiat. De hoc ait Boëtius, nullam esse pestem, familiari inimico deteriorem. Quinto Suspicio, cum quis facilis est, ut malum de alio suspicetur. Unde Tullius: suspicio est mala opinio ex levibus causis, et hoc ex mala affectione Invidiae procedit, et tunc habet rationem mortalis, alias autem non iudicatur mortalis, ut ait S. Doctor, quem sequuntur Suarez, et alii apud eum. Sexto est iudicium perversum, cum quis ad alium male affectus, non solum malum suspicatur in ipso ex causis levibus, verum etiam definit in corde, vel ore sententialiter, et hoc est semper peccatum mortale ex genere; unde Glossa ad id, prima Cor. 4. Nolite ante tempus iudicare, hoc damnat.

10 From this branch sprouts the sowing of discord, which is a mortal sin, Proverb. 6.; as also the revelation of secrets, when they are to someone's ruin.

11 From the other principal branch of Envy, which is Sadness at the neighbor's prosperities, proceeds Detraction, by which the neighbor's prosperity is impeded; and this is done either by removing the neighbor's good, or by keeping silent, or by denying, or by perverting it. Or by willing to reveal, aggravate, impose, confirm the evil, and to hear it gladly, as St. Bonaventure notes (in speculo cit.); and they are the ten horns of the beast seen by Daniel, cap. 7., as the Gloss expounds.

Ex altero ramo Invidiae praecipuo, qui est Dolor in prosperis proximi, procedunt Detractio, qua proximi prosperitas impeditur; haec autem fit, vel bonum proximi amovendo, vel tacendo, vel negando, vel pervertendo. Aut volendo, malum revelare, aggravare, imponere, confirmare, libenter audire, ut notat S. Bonavent. in speculo cit. et sunt decem cornua bestiae, visae a Daniele, cap. 7. ut exponit Glossa.

12 The Angelic Doctor observes, moreover, that a reputation is blackened by hidden words and nods, according to Ecclesiasticus 10: If a serpent bite in silence, he is no better that backbiteth secretly. But it has the character of mortal sin of its genus; since, according to the Wise Man, Proverb. 22. A good name is better than great riches, just as it is a mortal sin to steal, and the thief is bound to restitution, so too is he who detracts from a good name. He warns, however, that not every word is mortal.

Observat autem S. Doctor, denigrari famam per verba occulta, et nutus, iuxta id Ecclesiastae 10. Si mordeat serpens in sibilo, nihilominus habet, qui occulte detrahit. Habet autem ex genere rationem mortalis; cum enim secundum sapientem, Proverb. 22. Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae*, sicut peccatum mortale est furari, et fur ad restitutionem tenetur; ita etiam, qui famae detrahit: Monet tamen, non omne verbum esse mortale.*

13 TO detraction belongs keeping silent, when there is a need to defend a neighbor unjustly reviled; for as in temporal necessities we are bound to succor him, so also in spiritual ones. Thus also one sins by gravely diminishing or perverting a neighbor's good, as though obtained for an evil end: of this it is said Eccles. 11. He that turneth good into evil lurketh, and in the chosen he will lay a stain. Thus to deny another's known good is gravely to detract. Likewise gladly to hear evil of someone, or to give occasion for detraction, or to dissemble when one can correct, is mortal. Hence the Apostle, Rom. 1. Detractors are hateful to God, says: Not only those who do them, but also those who consent. The Angelic Doctor adds, however, that if someone does not correct a detraction out of bashfulness or human respect, it is not mortal, unless it be a person upon whom the duty of correcting falls. He also says that to confirm another's evil report, and to amplify it to infamy, is mortal. Yet it makes a great difference whether this proceeds from Envy or rather from an indiscreet zeal for justice; for sometimes the evils of others are spoken out of indignation or levity of speech, which it would be harsh to judge mortal, as the Angelic Doctor says.

AD detractionem autem spectat tacere, quando est necessitas iustificandi proximum, iniuste vituperatum; sicut enim in temporalibus necessitatibus tenemur succurrere illi; ita et in Spiritualibus. Sic etiam peccatur, bonum graviter proximi minuendo, vel pervertendo, quasi malo fine partatum: De hoc dicitur Eccles. 11. Bona in mala convertens insidiatur, et in electis imponet maculam. Sic negare bonum scitum alterius, graviter detrahere est. Item malum de > aliquo libenter audire, vel ansam detractionis dare, vel dissimulare, cum possit corrigere, est mortale. Unde Apostolus Rom. 1. Detractores Deo odibiles*, ait,* Non solum autem facientes, sed etiam consentientes. Addit tamen S. Doctor, quod si aliquis detractionem non corrigat ex verecundia, vel timore humano, non esse mortale, nisi sit persona, cui incumbat corrigere. Item ait, malum alicuius dictum confirmare, amplificare ad infamationem, esse mortale. Multum tamen interest, an hoc procedat ex Invidia, an vero ex zelo indiscreto iustitiae; Aliquando enim mala aliorum dicuntur ex indignatione, vel levitate dicendi, quae durum esset iudicare mortale, ut ait S. Doctor.

14 From Envy, St. Bonaventure says, Rancor also arises, which is a grave motion of the heart proceeding from an evil affection toward one's neighbor, and has the character of mortal sin if it proceeds from Envy; from rancor, moreover, Hatred is born — so the Angelic Doctor.

> Ex Invidia, ait D. Bonavent. oritur etiam rancor, qui est motus cordis gravis, ex mala affectione in proximum procedens, et habet rationem mortalis, si ex Invidia procedat; ex rancore autem nascitur odium, haec S. Doctor.

Disputation XIV: On Discord and Contention

1 THESE perversions of the soul agree only in this, that they tear asunder the seamless Tunic of the Lord, which the soldiers themselves did not rend — Charity, that is: the one indeed attacks the truth, which it cannot by arguments, with clamors; the other breaks cords of hearts formerly united by the bond of peace, whence it took the name of Discord.

> ISTAE animi pravitates eo solummodo conveniunt, ut inconsutilem Domini Tunicam, cui ipsi pepercere milites, Charitatem utique, dilacerent: Haec quidem veritatem, quam nequit rationibus, clamoribus impugnat; Illa corda, pacis vinculo prius unita, disrumpit, unde discordiae nomen accepit.

Question I: What discord is, and what kind of sin

1 DISCORD is a dissension of wills concerning the divine good, or the neighbor's good, which each is bound by Charity to will. The Angelic Doctor says the same, p. p. Centil. sect. 18., where he describes it thus: It is a will fleeing the judgment of wisdom, dissenting from what is said by others.

> DISCORDIA est dissensio voluntatum circa bonum divinum, vel proximi, quod quisque tenetur ex Charitate velle. Idem sentit D. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 18. ubi eam sic describit: Est voluntas fugiens rationem sapientiae, ab his, quae ab aliis dicuntur, dissentiens.

2 THEREFORE it is a mortal sin of its genus; for it is opposed to Christian peace, which is an act of Charity. Hence Galatians 5. names it among the works of the flesh, of which it is said: Those who do such things shall not possess the kingdom of God, and Proverbs 6: The seventh his soul detesteth, etc. He that soweth discords among brethren, as the Angelic Doctor shows in speculo animae, cap. 1.

> ITAQUE est peccatum ex genere mortale; Nam opponitur paci Christianae, quae est actus Charitatis. Ideo Galat. 5. nominatur inter opera carnis, de quibus dicitur: Qui talia agunt, regnum Dei non possidebunt, et Proverb. 6. Septimum detestatur anima eius, etc. Qui seminat discordias inter fratres, ut ostendit S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1.

3 MOREOVER it is the offspring of Pride, as St. Gregory teaches, 31. moral. cap. 31., and St. Thomas art. 2., St. Bonaventure loco cit.; often also of Envy, as St. Thomas says ad 2. It begets many evils, as is said, Matthew 12: Every kingdom divided against itself shall be made desolate. Where Jerome: As small things grow by concord, so the greatest crumble by discord, as St. Bonaventure reports, citing the place soon after.

> EST autem proles superbiae, ut docet D. Gregorius 31. moral. cap. 31. et D. Thom. art. 2. D. Bonavent. loco cit. saepe etiam Invidiae, ut ait D. Thom. ad 2. Plurima mala gignit, ut dicitur, Matth. 12. Omne regnum in se divisum desolabitur. Ubi Hieronymus: Quomodo concordia res parvae crescunt, sic discordia maximae dilabuntur, ut refert D. Bonavent. mox citando loco.

4 WHENCE the Holy Fathers, as gathered by St. Bonaventure in Pharetra, Lib. 3. cap. 22., gravely reprehend it, chiefly St. Gregory in the Register, lib. 6. indic. 15. cap. 166., and Lib. 1. indic. 9. cap. 78., and Lib. 10. indic. 10. cap. 37., and Lib. 1. moral. cap. 4., and Lib. 22. cap. 6., and in Pastor. part. 3. cap. 1. admonit. 23. and 24., and Lib. 2. Dialog. cap. 3., and homil. 38. in Evang.; St. Jerome epist. 14., and on cap. 12. Matth., and on Michaeam, Lib. 2. cap. septimo; St. Augustine serm. 56. de verbis Domini, epist. 13. ad Macedon, and Lib. 9. confess. cap. 8.; St. Ambrose de Virginitate, Lib. 2. at the end; St. Isidore in Synon. cap. 8., and de summo bono, Lib. 3. cap. 51.; St. Chrysostom homil. 16. in Matthaeum; St. Bernard epist. 78. and serm. 71. in Cantica; the Gloss on 1 John, 3.; Boethius de Consol. Lib. 5. prosa 5. at the end. Hence he describes it wondrously in sermons.

> UNDE SS. PP. apud D. Bonavent. in Pharetra, Lib. 3. cap. 22. graviter eam reprehendunt, praecipue D. Gregorius in registro, lib. 6. indic. 15. cap. 166. et Lib. 1. indic. 9. cap. 78. et Lib. 10. indic. 10. cap. 37. et Lib. 1. moral. cap. 4. et Lib. 22. cap. 6. et in Pastor. part. 3. cap. 1. admonit. 23. et 24. et Lib. 2. Dialog. cap. 3. et homil. 38. in Evang. D. Hieronymus epist. 14. et in cap. 12. Matth. et in Michaeam, Lib. 2. cap. septimo. D. Augustinus serm. 56. de verbis Domini, epist. 13. ad Macedon, et Lib. 9. confess. cap. 8. D. Ambrosius de Virginitate, Lib. 2. ad finem. S. Isidorus in Synon. cap. 8. et de summo bono, Lib. 3. cap. 51. D. Chrysostomus homil. 16. in Matthaeum, D. Bernardus epist. 78. et serm. 71. in Cantica. Glossa in primam Ioannis, 3. Boëtius de Consol. Lib. 5. prosa 5. in fine. Hinc ad conciones mira describit.

5 The Angelic Doctor also brings many things from the Scriptures in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50.

> Plurima etiam e Scripturis affert S. Doctor in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50.

Question II: What sin contention is, and how great

1 CONTENTION is a certain altercation of words against the truth, aimed at attacking it. Therefore it is a sin contrary to the peace of Charity, as St. Bonaventure teaches in explicatione terminorum Theologiae, and in primo sent. dub. 7. Prol., where, drawing on St. Ambrose in the Gloss on Rom. 1. Contention, etc., he says: Contention is an attack upon the truth with the confidence of clamor.

> CONTENTIO est altercatio quaedam verborum contra veritatem, ad eam impugnandam. Itaque est peccatum, paci Charitatis contrarium, ut docet D. Bonavent. in explicatione terminorum Theologiae, et in primo sent. dub. 7. Prol. ubi ex D. Ambrosio in Glossa ad id Rom. 1. Contentione, etc. ait: Contentio est impugnatio veritatis cum confidentia clamoris.

2 WHEREFORE it is mortal of its genus, as St. Thomas shows, art. 2., drawing on St. Gregory, 31. moral. cap. 31. Hence in Scripture it is numbered among the other mortal sins, Galatians 5., Romans 1., 1 Corinthians 1., as St. Bonaventure notes in speculo animae, cap. 1.

> QUAPROPTER est ex genere mortale, ut ostendit D. Thom. art. 2. ex D. Gregorio 31. moral. cap. 31. Unde in Scriptura aliis mortalibus adnumeratur Galat. 5. Rom. 1. prima Corinth. 1. ut advertit D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1.

3 FURTHERMORE, truth is assailed by Contention: First, by one who formally attacks a truth acknowledged, as Cajetan and Valencia note. Second, one who attacks the proposed matter in such a way that he does not care whether it is true or false. Third, one who can and ought to know that the proposed matter which he attacks is true; in this way heretics attack the truth of faith, as Valencia notes, question 14.

> PORRO per Contentionem oppugnatur veritas: Primo formaliter impugnando veritatem agnitam, ut notant Caietanus, et Valentia. Secundo, qui rem propositam, ita oppugnat, ut non curet sitne vera, an falsa. Tertio qui potest, et debet scire, veram esse rem propositam, quam oppugnat; quo modo veritatem fidei oppugnant haeretici, ut notat Valentia, quaestione 14.

4 Of this you have much from the Holy Fathers as gathered by St. Bonaventure, Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 3. §. 9. St. Gregory in 26. moral. cap. 2.: Those who begin contentions are usually more culpable than those who answer; and in Past. part. 3. admon. 24.: Whoever in sowing quarrels destroys the love of neighbors serves a familiar enemy; and Lib. 31. moral. cap. 8.: Hypocrisy, having assumed the habit of holy religion, abandons the care of her children, and seeks to defend temporal things even with quarrels.

> De hac multa habes ex SS. PP. apud D. Bonavent. Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 3. §. 9. D. Gregorius in 26. moral. cap. 2. Culpabiliores esse solem hi, qui contentiones inchoant, quam qui respondent, et in Past. part. 3. admon. 24. Quisquis in seminando iurgia dilectionem proximorum perimit, hosti familiaris servit, et Lib. 31. moral. cap. 8. Hypocrisis, assumpto sanctae religionis habitu, filiorum suorum custodiam deserit, et temporalia quaeque defendere etiam iurgiis quaerit.

5 ST. AUGUSTINE in regula 3. cap. 37.: But you should have no quarrels, or finish them as quickly as possible, lest anger grow into hatred, and make a beam out of a straw, and make the soul a murderer. For as you have read: He that hateth his brother is a murderer. And cap. 39.: Refrain from harsher words; and if they have issued from your mouth, do not be ashamed to bring forth from that same mouth the remedies from which the wounds were made.

> D. AUGUSTINUS in regula 3. cap. 37. Lites autem nullas habeatis, aut quam celerrime finiatis: ne ira crescat in odium, et trabem faciat de festuca, et animam faciat homicidam. Sicut enim legistis: Qui odit fratrem suum, homicida est. Et cap. 39. Vobis a verbis durioribus parcite: quae si emissae fuerint ex ore vestro, non pigeat ex ipso ore proferre medicamenta, unde facta sunt vulnera.

6 ISIDORE in Synon. cap. 9.: Contention kindles the torches of hatred; contention extinguishes the peace of the heart; contention breaks concord.

> ISIDORUS in Synon. cap. 9. Contentio faces odiorum accendit, pacem cordis contentio extinguit, concordiam contentio rumpit.

7 SENECA in the first letter: The first contention is among rivals.

> SENECA in epistola prima: Prima est inter competitores contentio.

8 The Angelic Doctor notes, however, in the place cited in speculo animae, that Contention is to be judged by its root; for if it arises from grave hatred, or grave anger, or a will to oppress or confound holy truth, it is mortal. And on Luke 22, at the words: And there was also a contention among them, which of them should seem to be the greater, the Angelic Doctor says: What was the occasion of this contention is not known. Yet contention is a sign of the love of one's own private good. Hence James 4: From whence are wars and contentions among you? Are they not from your concupiscences, which war in your members? But contention over primacy is a sign of the love of excellence and dominion: this was repressed by Christ; and it is dissuaded by the Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. 11.: If anyone among you seems to be contentious, we have no such custom, nor the Church of God. Because Proverbs 11: honor is the man's who separates himself from contentions. But this conflict has withdrawn from the court. Nay, just as at the approach of Christ's passion they contended over primacy, so at the approach of a prelate's death contention arises among the Canons over who ought to be placed first.

> ADVERTIT autem S. Doctor loco cit. in speculo animae; Contentionem iudicandam ex radice, nam si oriatur ex odio gravi, vel ira gravi, vel voluntate opprimendi veritatem sanctam, vel confudendi, est mortalis. Et in 22. Lucae ad ea verba: Facta est autem contentio inter eos, quis eorum videretur esse maior, ait S. Doctor. Quae fuerit huius contentionis occasio, nescitur. Contentio tamen est signum amoris privati boni, Hinc Iacobi 4. Unde bella, et lites in vobis? Nonne ex concupiscentiis vestris, quae militant in membris vestris? Contentio autem de primatu est signum amoris excellentiae, et dominii: Haec repressa fuit per Christum; et per Apostolum Paulum dissuadetur, prima Cor. 11. Si quis videtur inter vos contentiosus esse, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, neque Ecclesia Dei. Quia Proverb. 11. honor est hominis, qui separat se a contentionibus. Sed haec conflictio recessit ab aula. Imo, sicut imminente passione Christi contenderunt de primatu; sic imminente morte praelati, contentio fit inter Canonicos, quis debeat praeponi.

9 I append the splendid teaching of the Angelic Doctor, from speculo disciplinae ad novitios, cap. 20.: It is wholly unworthy of the servants of God to contend in the manner of little women; if words of resistance fall in, one must yield at once to the resister. Honor is the man's who separates himself from contentions. They never quarrel for the sake, as it is said, of learning, knowing that contentions of words henceforth in no way pertain to them. It cannot be that contention will not extort something that is given against conscience. It is perverse, above all if with damnable audacity the mouth of a religious man be opened to injurious or maledictive words, which according to the Apostle, 1 Corinthians 10., are excluded from the kingdom of God. So the Seraphic Doctor.

PRAECLARAM sententiam S. Doctoris appono, ex speculo disciplinae ad novitios, cap. 20. Indignum penitus servis Dei, muliercularum more contendere, si resistentiae incidant verba, cedendum est continuo resistenti. Honor est homini, qui separat se a contentionibus. Nunquam discendi, ut dicitur, gratia litigant, scientes, ad se verborum contentiones nullo modo deinceps pertinere. Non potest esse, quin contentio aliquid quod contra conscientiam datur, extorqueat. Perversum est, maxime si ausu damnabili ad iniuriosa, vel maledica verba, quae secundum Apostolum, prima Corinth. 10. a regno Dei excludantur, os viri religiosi laxetur. Haec Seraphicus.

Disputation XV: On Schism

1 BY Schism, worse still, one sins, in that he rejects with a discordant will the truth acknowledged in his mind, and, in place of the closer union in the dogma of faith, follows a long distance of wills; wherefore it is chiefly opposed to Charity, which dwells in the will and reduces the members of the Church into one body; hence we shall inquire what sort of sin, and how great, Schism is.

> EO detrius per Schisma delinquitur, quod agnitam in mente veritatem, discordi voluntate reprobet, et propriorem in Dogmate fidei unionem, sequatur longa voluntatum distantia, quam ob rem Charitati, quae voluntati insidet, et membra Ecclesiae in unum corpus reducit, maxime opponitur; hinc inquiremus, quale, et quantum peccatum sit Schisma.

Question I: What kind of sin schism is

1 The name of SCHISM is derived from the verb scindo (I rend), as St. Bonaventure notes in speculo animae, cap. 1. From this word begins to shine forth what sort of sin Schism is: For schism is a disjunction by which one separates himself from the unity of the Church, as it is a certain mystical body, consisting of the faithful of various conditions as members mutually connected, especially with the Head, the Supreme Pontiff, the Vicar of Christ. So reports St. Bonaventure in declaratione terminorum Theologiae. It is defined more briefly by the Angelic Doctor in the place cited here near the end: Schism is the illicit dissension of those among whom unity ought to exist.

> SCHISMATIS nomen, a verbo scindo deducitur, ut notat D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. ex hoc vocabulo incipit elucere, quodnam peccatum sit Schisma: Est enim schisma disiunctio, qua quis se separat ab unitate Ecclesiae, ut est quoddam corpus mysticum, constans ex diversarum conditionum fidelibus, tanquam membris inter se connexis, praecipue cum Capite summo Pontifice, Christi Vicario. Ita refert D. Bonavent. in declaratione terminorum Theologiae: Brevius definitur a S. Doctore loco hic cit. prope finem: Schisma est illicita dissensio eorum, inter quos debet esse unitas.

2 The Fathers insert this, when they say that by Schism a man is separated from the Church, as Jerome says in cap. 3. ad Titum; that the unity of the Church is rent, as Irenaeus says Lib. 4. cap. 43., and Cyprian in Lib. de unitate Ecclesiae.

> Hoc inserunt Patres, cum dicunt, per Schisma separari hominem ab Ecclesia, ut ait Hieron. in cap. 3. ad Titum. Scindi Ecclesiae unitatem, ut ait Irenaeus Lib. 4. cap. 43. et Cyprianus Lib. de unitate Ecclesiae.

3 HOW, however, one rends himself from that unity will be perceived once the reason of the unity of the body of the Church is recognized, which consists in an analogical proportion to offices, and to the unity of the human body, in which the members are various, deputed to various offices: some for working, as the hands; some for seeing, as the eyes; some for speaking, as the tongue, lips, palate, etc. For so in this mystical body some are destined for laboring in holy works; others for seeing and providing; others for speaking, teaching, instructing, etc. Hence the Apostle often expounds the state of the Church with this metaphor in his Epistles, as Rom. 12., 1 Cor. 13., Ephes. 4.

> QUOMODO autem quis se ab ea Scindat unitate, percipietur, agnita ratione unitatis corporis Ecclesiae, quae consistit in analogica proportione ad officia, et unitatem corporis humani, in quo diversa sunt membra, variis officiis deputata; aliqua ad operandum, ut manus; aliqua ad videndum, ut oculi; aliqua ad loquendum, ut Lingua, labia, palatus, etc. Sic enim, et in hoc mystico aliqui sunt ad laborandum destinati in operibus sanctis; alii ad videndum, et providendum; alii ad loquendum, docendum, erudiendum, etc. Ideo saepe Apostolus in Epistolis hac metaphora explicat Ecclesiae statum, ut Rom. 12. prima Cor. 13. Ephes. 4.

4 HENCE indeed the reason of Schism appears, which is: refusing to conduct oneself in the manner proposed by the Church, and suitable to oneself, among those working and subject to the Supreme Head, to whose governance the whole body is subject.

HINC vero apparet ratio Schismatis, quae est, nolle se gerere modo sibi ab Ecclesia proposito, ac sibi convenienti inter operandum, et subesse Capiti Supremo, cuius regimini totum corpus subiicitur.

5 I assert, therefore, first, that Schism is a mortal sin.

ASSERO igitur primo, Schisma esse peccatum mortale.

6 It is proved by 1 Cor. 1. where the Apostle gravely enjoins: Let there be no schisms among you; for to separate oneself from the unity necessary for salvation is a great sin.

PROBATUR illa prima Cor. 1. ubi graviter iniungit Apostolus: Non sint in vobis Schismata: Nam seiungere se ab unitate, necessaria ad salutem, grande peccatum est.

7 I assert that Schism is a special mortal sin.

ASSERO, Schisma esse peccatum speciale mortale.

8 It is proved, because by Schism the singular bond of Charity is broken, as the Apostle teaches, 1 Cor. 12., saying: Let there be no schism in the body, but the members should be mutually careful one for another, etc. And Ephes. 4.: Bearing with one another in Charity, careful to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. One body, and one Spirit; and below: The whole body, compacted and connected by every joint of administration, according to the operation in the measure of the increase of every member, makes the increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in Charity. See also St. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 13. dub. 4. litt.

PROBATUR, quia per Schisma rumpitur vinculum singulare Charitatis, ut docet Apostolus, prima Cor. 12. dicens: Non sit Schisma in corpore, sed idipsum pro invicem sollicita sint membra, etc. Et Ephes. 4. Supportantes invicem in Charitate, solliciti servare unitatem in vinculo pacis. Unum corpus, et unus Spiritus; et infra: Totum corpus compactum, et connexum per omnem iuncturam administrationis, secundum operationem in mensuram uniuscuiusque membri, augmentum corporis facit in aedificationem sui in Charitate. Vide etiam D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 13. dub. 4. litt.

9 THEN it is proved from the Fathers, who say that by Schism Charity and peace are violated; so St. Cyprian Lib. de unitate Ecclesiae, where he offers wondrous things on this matter; Augustine Lib. de fide, et Symbolo, cap. 10. et Lib. 2. de Baptismo contra Donatum, cap. 6.

DEINDE probatur ex Patribus, qui dicunt, Schismate violari Charitatem, et pacem; sic D. Cyprianus Lib. de unitate Ecclesiae*, ubi mira hac de re profert: Augustinus* Lib. de fide, et Symbolo, cap. 10. et Lib. 2. de Baptismo contra Donatum, cap. 6.

10 It is proved third, because each one is bound to will, for himself and his neighbor, that good of Charity, and of peace, and of communion in the same body of the Church.

PROBATUR tertio, quia quisque tenetur, sibi, et proximo velle bonum illud Charitatis, et pacis, ac communionis in eodem Ecclesiae corpore.

11 HENCE you can know that someone can be a Schismatic even if he is not a heretic, if, namely, he separates himself from obedience to the Pontiff whom he nonetheless believes to be the Vicar of Christ. For heresy, besides the scission, adds a perverse dogma, as St. Bonaventure notes in centil. in the place to be cited.

> HINC scire potes, Schismaticum esse posse aliquem, etiamsi non sit haereticus, si nempe se separet ab obedientia Pontificis, quem tamen credat Christi Vicarium. Haeresis enim, praeter scissionem, addit dogma pravum, ut notat S. Bonavent. in centil. loco citando.

12 The Fathers recognized this distinction: Chrysostom homil. 11. ad Eph., Augustine de fide, et Symbolo, cap. 10. et Lib. 2. contra Cresconium, cap. 7., Jerome in 3. ad Titum, as St. Bonaventure notes in speculo animae, cap. 1.

> Hanc distinctionem agnovere Patres, Chrysostomus homil. 11. ad Eph. Augustinus de fide, et Symbolo, cap. 10. et Lib. 2. contra Cresconium, cap. 7. Hieron. in 3. ad Titum, ut notat D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1.

13 MOREOVER this disobedience is not against some simple precept, say, of fasting, but is rebellious disobedience against the very Pastor; as Valencia notes (disp. 3. quaest. 15. puncto 1.), Cajetan (in summa, verbo Schisma.). The Angelic Doctor warns, however (p. p. centil. sect. 26.), that Schism usually leads into heresy, that is, into a heretical dogma; namely, that the Church is not to be obeyed.

> HAEC autem inobedientia non est, contra simplex aliquod praeceptum; puta ieiunii, sed rebellis inobedientia contra ipsum Pastorem; ut notant Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 15. puncto 1. Caietanus in summa, verbo Schisma. Admonet autem S. Doctor p. p. centil. sect. 26. Schisma plerumque inducere in haeresim, seu dogma haereticum; Non esse scilicet obediendum Ecclesiae.

14 There will also be Schism if one separates himself from the members of the Church by refusing to conform himself to the other members in the rites: from which it is clear that even the Pope, should that supposition occur, could become a Schismatic, as Turrecremata notes (lib. 4. summa de Ecclesia, part. 1. cap. 11.), Cajetan (hic, art. 1.), Bannes (ibi), Valencia (loco cit.). This would happen if he excommunicated the whole Church; if he refused to use the ecclesiastical rites, etc. See these Doctors.

> ERIT etiam Schisma, si a membris Ecclesiae se separet, nolendo se caeteris membris in ritibus conformare: Ex quo patet, etiam Papam, eveniente illa suppositione, posse fieri Schismaticum, ut notant Turrecremata lib. 4. summa de Ecclesia, part. 1. cap. 11. Caietanus hic, art. 1. Bannes ibi, Valentia loco cit. Quod fieret, si totam Ecclesiam excommunicaret; si nollet Ecclesiasticis ritibus uti, etc. Vide hos Doctores.

15 MOREOVER I say this would come to pass if the Pontiff were so to behave; for I hold that God will ever stand by with a special providence, lest the person of the Pontiff fall so, just as he has ever stood by, lest any Pontiff fall into heresy or Schism. See the authors cited.

> HOC autem dico eventurum, si ita Pontifex se gessisset; nam existimo, Deum perpetuo astiturum peculiari providentia, ne persona Pontificis ita cadat, sicuti semper praefuit, ne ullus Pontifex haeresi, vel Schismate caderet. Vide authores allegatos.

Question II: How great a sin schism is

1 I assert first that Schism is a most grave sin.

> Quantum peccatum sit SCHISMA.

Assero primo, Schisma esse peccatum gravissimum.

2 It is proved, because it wounds a great good of the Church, which is the most splendid unity of the mystical body of the Church; whence it seems the gravest among sins against one's neighbor, as Valencia says, puncto 1. Hence the holy Doctors gravely reprehend this scission. So Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 34., Chrysostom homil. 11. ad Eph., Augustine Lib. 2. de Baptismo cont. Donat. cap. 6.

Probatur, quia laedit magnum Ecclesiae bonum, quod est unitas praeclarissima corporis mystici Ecclesiae; unde videtur gravissimum inter peccata contra proximum, ut ait Valentia puncto 1. Ideo Sancti Doctores scissionem hanc graviter vituperant. Sic Irenaeus lib. 4. cap. 34. Chrysostomus homil. 11. ad Eph. Augustinus Lib. 2. de Baptismo cont. Donat. cap. 6.

3 I assert second that heresy is graver by its object, since it is against divine truth; yet by its harm Schism is often the worse, as is clear, and has been clear, from experiences, as they note with St. Thomas, Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 17.

Assero secundo, ex obiecto gravius esse peccatum haeresis, quod est contra veritatem divinam; attamen ex damno saepe est deterius Schisma, ut patet, et patuit experimentis, ut notant cum D. Thoma Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 17.

Question III: What punishments are owed to schismatics

1 I suppose first that Schismatics do not lose spiritual power: that which consists in the Character of Baptism, Confirmation, or Order; for this is indeleble, as St. Thomas teaches, art. 3., and others, and as is clear from Urban, can. Ordinationes, dist. 9 quaest. 1., who decrees that those ordained by Schismatic Bishops are truly ordained; and St. Augustine Lib. 6. de Baptismo, cap. 5., where he says: A man in separation can hand on the Sacrament, just as he can have it.

Quenam poenae SCHISMATICIS debeantur.

Suppono primo, Schismaticos non amittere spiritualem potestatem: consistentem in Charactere Baptismi, Confirmationis, vel Ordinis; nam haec est indelebilis, ut docet D. Thom. art. 3. et alii, et patet ex Urbano, can. Ordinationes, dist. 9 quaest. 1. qui, ordinatos ab Episcopis Schismaticis, decernit, esse vere ordinatos, et D. Augustinus Lib. 6. de Baptismo, cap. 5. ubi ait: Potest Sacramentum tradere separatus, sicut habere.

2 Second, it is certain that these Schismatics are deprived of the faculty of using rightly and lawfully this power of the Character; and indeed are deprived of this power as to its lawful use. So St. Thomas art. 3. It is had in cap. Novatianus, causa 7. quaest. 1.

Secundo certum est, privari hos Schismaticos facultate utendi recte, et legitime huiusmodi potestate Characteris; atque adeo privari hac potestate, quo ad usum legitimum. Ita D. Thom. art. 3. Habetur cap. Novatianus, causa 7. quaest. 1.

3 Understand the Fathers of the Lateran Council in this sense, cap. 1. extra, de Schismaticis, saying: We judge the ordinations made by Octavian and Guy, heresiarchs, to be null. This Urban also says in can. Ordinationes, 9. quaest. 1.; for it must be understood as to their lawful execution, as the Gloss expounds there, and St. Thomas loco cit., and Turrecremata Lib. 4. summae, part. 1. cap. 7.

Hoc sensu intellige Patres Concilii Later. cap. 1. extra, de Schismaticis, dicentes: Ordinationes ab Octaviano, et Guidone, haeresiarchis, factas, irritas esse censemus. Quod etiam ait Urbanus in can. Ordinationes, 9. quaest. 1. debet enim intelligi quo ad executionem earum legitimam, ut ibi exponit Glossa, et D. Thom. loco cit. ac Turrecremata Lib. 4. summae, part. 1. cap. 7.

4 Yet in necessity it is lawful to receive Baptism from a Schismatic, as St. Thomas notes, art. 4. ad 1.

5 Third, it is certain that these incur excommunication, laid down in can. Nulli, dist. 19., according to Sylvester, V. Schismatici, num. 5. after Archidiaconus, Hugo, Innocentius, and Ioan. Andreas, and in cap. Excommunicamus, de haeret., and in the Bulla coenae, as Valencia notes, quaest. 15 puncto 3., Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 2.

> Tertio certum est, hos incurrere excommunicationem, latam in can. Nulli, dist. 19. secundum Sylvestrum, V. Schismatici, num. 5. post Archidiaconum, Hugonem, Innocentium, et Ioan. Andream, et in cap. Excommunicamus, de haeret. et in Bulla coenae, ut notant Valentia quaest. 15 puncto 3. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 2.

6 Fourth, it is certain that through Schism those who can incur excommunication lose jurisdiction ipso facto, and they are all below the Pope; for the Excommunicated lose jurisdiction, from whose power we are freed, as Valencia notes loco cit., drawing on Cajetan de authoritate Papae, cap. 22., indeed on Gregory VII, can. Nos sanctorum, 15. quaest. 6.

> Quarto certum est, per Schisma amittere ipso facto iurisdictionem eos, qui possunt incurrere excommunicationem, qui sunt omnes infra Papam; nam Excommunicati amittunt iurisdictionem, a quorum potestate liberamur, ut notat Valentia loco cit. ex Caietano de authoritate Papae, cap. 22. imo ex Gregorio VII. can. Nos sanctorum, 15. quaest. 6.

7 But the Pontiff cannot by excommunication fall from his dignity.

> At vero Pontifex non potest per excommunicationem cadere a dignitate.

8 Fifth, it is certain that pertinacious Schismatics can be punished by deposition, as is clear in Can. In nomine Domini, 23., and Turrecremata and Valencia note it above. And if they still do not come to their senses, they can be punished with corporal punishments, with the help of the secular arm, as Pope Pelagius orders, de Liguribus, 23. q. 5., and St. Thomas teaches, art 4. ad 3., Tannerus num. 11.

> Quinto certum est, Schismaticos pertinaces, posse puniri depositione, ut patet in Can. In nomine Domini, 23. et notant Turrecrem. et Valentia supra. Et si adhuc non resipiscant, possunt puniri poenis corporalibus, auxilio brachii secularis, ut iubet Pelagius Papa de Liguribus, 23. q. 5. et docet D. Thom. art 4. ad 3. Tannerius num. 11.

9 The controversy, however, is whether by the force of Schism jurisdiction is lost, and indeed whether even the Pontiff, should he become a Schismatic, falls from the Papacy.

> Controversia est autem, an ex vi Schismatis amittatur iurisdictio, atque adeo etiam Pontifex, si fiat Schismaticus, excidat a Papatu.

10 The same question is about the sin of heresy: whether by its force jurisdiction, even papal, is lost.

> Eadem quaestio est de peccato haeresis: an ex vi illius amittatur iurisdictio, etiam Papalis.

11 The first opinion is that jurisdiction, especially papal, is never lost, neither through Heresy nor through Schism, which is the lesser. So Cajetan, de authoritate Papae, cap. 20. 21. and 22. Sotus seems to feel the same, 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 2.; Canus lib. 4. de locis, cap. 2. and cap. ult. ad arg. 22.; and others as gathered by Turrecremata, Lib. 4. summae, part. 2. cap. 19.

> Prima sententia est, neque per Haeresim, neque per Schisma, quod minus est, amitti unquam iurisdictionem praesertim Papalem. Ita Caietanus de authoritate Papae, cap. 20. 21. et 22. Idem videtur sentire Sotus 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 2. Canus lib. 4. de locis, cap. 2. et cap. ult. ad arg. 22. et alii apud Turrecremata Lib. 4. summae, part. 2. cap. 19.

12 The second opinion, extremely opposite, is that by Schism or heresy, even occult, the power of jurisdiction is lost, even papal. So St. Thomas hic, art. 3.; Turrecremata cap. 20.; Sylvester, verbo Schismatici, num. 3., where he says this is the unanimous sense of all the Doctors; and others as gathered by Valencia, disp. 3. quaest. 15. puncto 3.

> Secunda sententia, extreme opposita, est, per Schisma, vel haeresim, etiam occultam, amitti iurisdictionis potestatem, etiam Papalem. Ita D. Thom. hic, art. 3. Turrecrem. cap. 20. Sylvest. verbo Schismatici, num. 3. ubi ait esse omnium Doctorum unanimem sensum, et alii apud Valentiam disp. 3. quaest. 15. puncto 3.

13 The third opinion is the middle one: that the manifest Schismatic and heretic loses the power of jurisdiction ipso facto; but not the occult one, until he either becomes manifest or is declared by the sentence of the Church. All who judge that those do not altogether cease to be members of the Church who communicate with the other faithful, at least by external profession of faith and of the Sacraments, seem to hold this opinion. So Vuald. Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 9. et 11.; Driedo Lib. 4. de Ecclesiasticis dog. et Scripturis, cap. 2. part. 2. sent. 2. et 7.; Castro Lib. 4. de locis, cap. 6. ad arg. 12.; Bellarm. Lib. 3. de Ecclesia, cap. 12. and Lib. 2. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 30.; Valencia supra, who says this opinion more easily avoids the confusions and dangers which could otherwise follow in the Church if the actions of Schismatics and heretics were invalid ipso facto; so also Tannerus disp. 3. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 22.

> Tertia sententia media est, Schismaticum, et haereticum manifestum, ipso facto amittere potestatem iurisdictionis; non autem occultum, donec is, vel manifestus fiat, vel per sententiam Ecclesiae declaretur. Ita sentire videntur, quicumque arbitrantur non omnino desinere esse membra Ecclesiae, qui externa saltem professione fidei, et Sacramentorum communicant cum aliis fidelibus. Ita Vuald. Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 9. et 11. Driedo Lib. 4. de Ecclesiasticis dog. et Scripturis, cap. 2. part. 2. sent. 2. et 7. Castro Lib. 4. de locis, cap. 6. ad arg. 12. Bellarm. Lib. 3. de Ecclesia, cap. 12. et Lib. 2. de Romano Pontifice, cap. 30. Valentia supra, qui ait, hanc sententiam vitare facilius confusiones, et pericula, quae alioqui sequi possunt in Ecclesia, si actiones Schismaticorum, et haereticorum essent ipso facto invalidae; sic et Tannerus disp. 3. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 22.

14 Second, because this man, though he is not intrinsically a part of the Church, is nevertheless still a member of the Church by external union, through the profession and use of the Sacraments.

> Secundo, quia hic licet non sit intrinsece pars Ecclesiae, tamen externa unione adhuc est Ecclesiae membrum per professionem, et usum Sacramentorum.

15 It is confirmed by what Pope Coelestinus says, epist. ad clerum Constantinop., where he says that Nestorius and his followers, after they began to preach their heresies, could not excommunicate anyone or remove anyone from his place, because they no longer had the power to do so. He says the same in another letter to John of Antioch. The same is said of any Bishop in can. Audivimus, 24. quaest. 1.: that no one can condemn anyone from the moment he begins to preach a heresy of his own devising.

> Confirmatur ex eo, quod ait Coelestinus Papa, epist. ad clerum Constantinop. ubi ait, Nestorium, et asseclas, postquam suas haereses praedicare coeperunt, non potuisse ullum excommunicare, aut de suo loco movere, quia potestatem ad id amplius non habuerint. Eadem dicit in alia epistola ad Ioannem Antiochenum. Idem dicitur de quovis Episcopo in can. Audivimus, 24. quaest. 1. Neminem posse damnare, ex quo haeresim, a se confictam, coeperit praedicare.

16 Finally others, the Fathers, want it to hold absolutely, being brought forward by the Doctors of the second opinion, as Cyprian Lib. 1. epist. 6.; Ambrose Lib. 1. de poenit. cap. 2.; Augustine in Enchir,

> Tandem id omnino tantum volunt alii Patres, adducti a Doctoribus secundae sententiae, ut Cyprianus Lib. 1. epist. 6. Ambrosius Lib. 1. de poenit. cap. 2. Augustinus in Enchir, cap. 65. Optatus Lib. 1. cont. Parmen. et Beda in cap. 18. Matthaei.

17 You will object, with the second opinion: He who has jurisdiction over the body of the Church must be a member united to it; for he who is divided cannot influence or move; but the Schismatic and heretic, even occult, is severed: Therefore. The minor is proved of the heretic; for Faith is the foundation of the union. As to the Schismatic, it is clear from the definition of Schism.

> Obiicies cum secunda sententia. Qui habet iurisdictionem in corpus Ecclesiae, debet esse membrum illi unitum; nam, qui est divisus, non potest influere, aut movere; sed Schismaticus, et haereticus, etiam occultus, est seiunctus: Ergo. Minor probatur de haeretico; nam Fides est fundamentum unionis. Quo ad Schismaticum, patet ex definitione Schismatis.

Disputation XVI: On War

Question I: Whether any war can be just

1 strike no one, wound no one; but because he knew that when they did these things as soldiers they were not homicides, but ministers of the law, and not avengers of their own injuries, but defenders of the public safety: he answered them: shake no one down, etc.; but be content with your wages.

> neminem percutite, vulnerate neminem, sed quia sciebat, eos, cum haec militando facerent, non esse homicidas, sed ministros legis, et non ultores iniuriarum suarum, sed salutis publicae defensores: respondit eis: neminem concutiatis, etc. sed contenti estote stipendiis vestris.

2 John the Baptist was certainly speaking on behalf of men even of the New Testament; for he was the precursor of Christ.

3 IT IS PROVED secondly from the Heroes, praised in Scripture as saints, who waged wars: thus Abraham, Moses, Josue, Gedeon, Sampson, David, Josias, the Machabees, and others.

> PROBATUR secundo etiam ex Heroibus, in Scriptura laudatis ut sanctis, qui bella gessere, sic Abraham, Moyses, Iosue, Gedeon, Sampson, David, Iosias, Machabaei, et alii.

4 IT IS PROVED thirdly from holy Pontiffs, who praised wars waged by Christians, or urged that they be waged: Damasus, in Theodorus book 5, chapter 10; Gregory book 1, epistle 72; Chrysostom on Psalm 45; Nazianzen oration 3, on peace; Ambrose book 1 of Offices, chapters 40 and 41; Jerome on Micheas 4; see the Holy Doctor in the sermons of the Hexaemeron.

> PROBATUR tertio ex Pontificibus sanctis, qui bella gesta a Christianis laudarunt, vel gerenda suaserunt hi: Damasus apud Theodorum lib. 5. c. 10. Gregorius lib. 1. epist. 72. Chrysostomus in Psalm. 45. Nazianzenus oratione 3. de pace, Ambrosius Lib. 1. offic. cap. 40. et 41. Hieronymus in 4. Micheae, Vide S. Doctorem in sermonibus Hexaëmeronis.

5 IT IS PROVED by reason, D. Bonaventure at the place cited, drawing on Aristotle 7 Politics, chapter 14, and D. Augustine epistle 207: because peace is necessary to the human commonwealth, that we and ours may have the means of living; but this is often impeded by acts of violence, which cannot otherwise be repelled than by war; and it is a law of nature that we repel violence, whence the opposing arguments collapse.

> PROBATUR ratione D. Bonauent. loco allegando, sumpta ex Aristotele 7. Polit. cap. 14. et D. Augustino epist. 207. quia pax humanae Reipublicae est necessaria, ut nos, nostraque habere possimus ad vivendum; sed haec saepe violentiis impediuntur, quae nequeunt aliter quam bello propulsari; est autem ius naturae, ut violentias propulsemus, ex quo argumenta adversa corruunt.

6 The Holy Doctor confirms all this on Luke 6, in these words: and he who strikes you on the cheek, etc., from D. Augustine book 1 of the City of God, chapter 21, where he says, expounding that precept: Thou shalt not kill: Against this precept they did not act who, by God's authority, waged wars, or who, bearing the person of public power, and according to its laws — that is, by the most just command of reason — punished criminals with death.

> ID totum confirmat S. Doctor ad 6. Lucae, in ea verba: et qui te percutit in maxillam, etc. ex D. Augustino primo de civit. cap. 21. ubi ait, exponens illud praeceptum: Non occides: Contra hoc praeceptum non fecerunt, qui, Deo authore, bella gesserunt, aut personam gerentes publicae potestatis, secundum eius leges, hoc est, iustissimum rationis imperium, sceleratos morte punierunt.

7 It is confirmed from the chapter Fortitudo 23, question 3, which is by D. Ambrose book 1 of Offices, chapter 27: Fortitude, which either defends the fatherland from barbarians in war, or at home defends the weak, or one's companions from robbers, is full of justice.

> CONFIRMAT ex cap. Fortitudo 23. quaest. 3. qui est D. Ambrosii Lib. 1. de offic. cap. 27. Fortitudo, quae vel bello tuetur a barbaris patriam, vel domi defendit infirmos, vel a latronibus socios, plena iustitia est.

8 YOU WILL OBJECT first. It was said in Isaias 2 and Micheas 4 that wars are to be put away in the time of grace.

> OBIICIES primo. Praedictum est Isaiae 2. et Micheae 4. bella tempore gratiae abigenda.

9 IT IS ANSWERED with D. Ambrose on Psalm 45 and D. Jerome on chapter 4 of Micheas, that what was foretold was the peace to come in the whole world at the time of Christ's advent, so that it might be prepared to receive the Gospel.

> RESPONDETUR cum D. Ambrosio in Psalm. 45. et D. Hieronymo in cap. 4. Micheae, praedictum tempore adventus Christi futuram pacem in toto orbe, ut recipiendo Evangelio esset paratus.

10 YOU OBJECT secondly that in the Gospel it is commanded: Matth. 5. Whoever strikes you on one cheek, offer him the other also. Matth. 26. Whoever takes up the sword shall perish by the sword. Rom. 12. Rendering to no one evil for evil.

> OBIICIES secundo in Evangelio praecipitur, Matth. 5. Qui te percusserit in unam maxillam, praebe illi et alteram. Matth. 26. Qui acceperit gladium, gladio peribit. Rom. 12. Nulli malum pro malo reddentes.

11 IT IS ANSWERED from D. Augustine epistle 5 to Marcellinus, that this is forbidden lest it be done by private authority.

> RESPONDETUR ex D. Augustino epist. 5. ad Marcellinum, id prohiberi, ne fiat privata authoritate.

12 TAKE NOTE that in the Council of Nicaea, canon 11, those are condemned who, after first laying down the military belt lest they sacrifice to idols, returned again as a dog to its vomit, serving Pagan Emperors, Diocletian, Licinius, and others, who all dishonored the military belt of Christians unless they sacrificed to idols.

> ADVERTE in Concilio Nicaeno, can. 11. damnari eos, qui prius deposito cingulo militari, ne idolis immolarent, rursus ad vomitum redibant, servientes Imperatoribus Paganis, Diocletiano, Licinio, et aliis, qui omnes Christianos cingulo militari dehonestabant, nisi immolarent Idolis.

13 Some Fathers indeed condemn only unjust wars, or those which are occasions of sinning proximately, or dissuade men in religious orders, or urge them to enter religion, etc.

14 From these you have that wars even against the Turks are lawful; for if God uses the Turks for our exercise, he also uses pestilence and famine, and yet we are bound to defend ourselves, lest they overwhelm the Christian world with superstitious clouds. See Valentia at the place cited and Bellarmine, chapter 16. For the Turks are unjust possessors of Christian kingdoms.

> EX his habes, bella etiam contra Turcas esse licita; esto enim Deus utatur Turcis ad exercitium nostrum, utitur etiam peste, et fame, et tamen nos tenemur defendere, ne Christianum orbem superstitiosis nubibus obruant. Vide Valentiam loco cit. et Bellarminum, cap. 16. Sunt enim Turcae iniqui possessores Regnorum Christianorum.

Question II: What conditions are required for a just war

1 Most excellently, after D. Augustine book 22 against Faustus, chapter 74, and epistles 5 and 207, the following wrote on this matter: D. Thomas here; Alensis part 3, question 76, member 3; Gandavus quodlibet 15, question 16; Gabriel book 4, distinction 15, question 4; Victoria relectio on the Law of War; Castro book 2 on the just punishment of heretics, chapter 14; Covarruvias relectio on the chapter Peccatum, on the rules of law, part 2, §§ 9 and 10; Bellarmine book 3 on the Morals of the Church, chapter 14; Bannes, Cajetan, and other Thomists here; Valentia question 16, point 1; Tannerus disputation 2, question 6, dubium 3; Sylvester and other Summists, under the word Bellum. The Canonists question 23, qq. 1, 2 and 3; and D. Bonaventure in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, at the end, and in the Bible of the Poor, chapter 82, where from the Scriptures he gathers wondrous examples, outstandingly proving that the integrity and prayers of the Saints contribute more to victory than arms.

> PRAECLARE post D. Augustinum Lib. 22. contra Faustum, cap. 74. et epist. 5. et 207. hac de re scripsere D. Thom. hic Alens. 3. part. quaest. 76. memb. 3. Gandau. quodl. 15. quaest. 16. Gabr. 4. dist. 15. quaest 4. Victoria relect. de Iure belli, Castro Lib. 2. de iusta haeret. punit. cap. 14. Couar. relect. in cap. Peccatum de regulis iuris, part. 2. §. 9. et 10. Bellarm. Lib. 3. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 14. Bannes, Caietanus, et alii Thomistae hic, Valentia quaest. 16. puncto 1. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 3. Syluester, et alii Summistae, verbo Bellum. Canonistae 23. quaest. 1. 2 et 3. et D. Bonauent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. ad finem, et in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 82. ubi e Scripturis mira colligit exempla, egregie probantia integritatem, orationesque Sanctorum magis ad victoriam conducere, quam arma.

2 FIRST, then, the Holy Doctor requires three conditions for a just war in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, from D. Augustine. The first is legitimate authority. So D. Augustine at the place cited, against Faustus, chapter 74. The second is a just cause; so D. Augustine question 10 on Josue. The third is a right intention; so D. Augustine epistle 207.

> PRIMO autem tres conditiones ad iustum bellum requirit S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. ex D. Augustino. Prima est authoritas legitima. Ita S. Augustinus loco citato, contra Faust. cap. 74. Secunda est causa iusta; sic D. Augustinus quaest. 10. in Iosue. Tertia est intentio bona; ita S. Augustinus epistola 207.

3 AS TO the first condition, only the Prince, or the Republic, ruling absolutely, can declare offensive war. Hence Princes who are parts of some whole dominion cannot do so: so Molina disputation 100, Tannerus number 30, and the common view. For defensive war, however, all peoples and Magistrates are admitted, because anyone may repel force with force.

> QUOAD primam conditionem solus Princeps, vel Respublica, absolute dominantes, possunt offensivum bellum indicere. Hinc Principes, qui sunt partes alicuius totius dominii, id nequeunt: ita, Molina disp. 100. Tanner. num. 30. et > communiter. Ad defensivum autem omnes populi, et Magistratus admittuntur, quia cuique licet vim vi repellere.

4 AS TO the second, the cause must be against an enemy unjustly and gravely injuring, as D. Augustine admonishes at the place cited. I shall set out, moreover, the specific injuries for which war may be declared, which D. Bonaventure relates in the Bible of the Poor, chapter 82.

> QUOAD secundam causam oportet, esse contra hostem, iniuste, graviter laedentem, et ut monet D. Augustinus loco cit. Referam autem iniurias certas, ob quas possit bellum indici, quas refert D. Bonavent. in Bibliot. pauperum, cap. 82.

5 THE FIRST is if what is owed is denied: thus the sons of Israel made war on the Amorrhites, because they denied them an unmolested passage Num. 21, and D. Augustine notes this question 43 on the Book of Numbers.

> PRIMA est, si negetur id, quod debitum est: sic filii Israel debellarunt Amorrhaeos, quia eis transitum innoxium negarunt Num. 21. et advertit S. Augustinus quaest. 43. in Lib. Numerorum.

6 NOR indeed did Julius Caesar have a just cause, on the ground that the Romans denied access to the city, as Alphonsus a Castro thinks book 2 on the penal law, chapter 14, and Covarruvias at the place cited, § 9: for he was bound to lay down his arms at the Rubicon, since he was a subject of the Republic commanding it. Nor is just war made against the Indians on the ground that they deny free access to their provinces. So Molina disputation 105, Tannerus number 34 — provided, however, they do not resist the preaching of the faith.

> NEQUE vero iustam causam habuit Iulius Caesar, eo quod Romani aditum ad urbem negarent, ut putant Alphonsus a Castro lib. 2. de lege poen. cap. 14. et Coar. loco cit. §. 9. nam tenebatur ille ad Rubiconem arma deponere, cum esset subditus Reipublicae, id iubenti. Neque iustum bellum Indis infertur, eo quod negant liberum accessum ad suas prouincias. Ita Molina disp. 105. Tanner. num. 34. si tamen non resistant fidei praedicationi.

7 THE SECOND cause is for recovering one's own possessions. Thus David fought against Isboseth, 2 Reg. 2.

> SECUNDA causa est, pro rebus propriis recuperandis. Sic pugnavit David contra Isboset, 2. Reg. 2.

8 THE THIRD cause is to resist invaders of the Republic. Thus the Jews often fought against the Philistines, and the Machabees against Antiochus and Demetrius.

> TERTIA causa est ad resistendum invasoribus Reipublicae. Sic pugnarunt saepe Iudaei adversus Philisthaeos, et Machabaei contra Antiochum, et Demetrium.

9 THE FOURTH, if they render aid to unjust enemies; thus David fought against Syria of Damascus, because it brought aid to Adarezer, 2 Reg. 8.

> QUARTA, si hostibus iniquis suppetias exhibent; sic pugnavit David contra Siriam Damasci, eo quod ferebat opem Adarezer, 2. Reg. 8.

10 THE FIFTH, to avenge a public injury. Thus David fought against Hannon, who had dismissed the messengers with contempt, 2 Reg. 10.

> QUINTA, ad ulciscendam publicam iniuriam. Sic Dauid pugnavit adversus Hannon, qui nuncios vilipendio dimiserat 2. Reg. 10.

11 THE SIXTH, against rebellious subjects, thus David 2 Reg. 20. Hence D. Gregory infers that war against pertinacious heretics is just, book 1 of the Register, chapter 72.

> SEXTA adversus rebelles subditos, sic Dauid 2. Reg. 20. Unde iustum esse bellum contra pertinaces haereticos, infert D. Gregorius Lib. 1. Registri, cap. 72.

12 THE SEVENTH, if some defend public malefactors, as D. Augustine teaches, question 10 on Josue; thus in Judges 20 the Hebrews fought against the Benjamites, their own fellow-citizens.

> SEPTIMA, si aliqui publicos malefactores defendant, ut docet D. Augustinus quaest. 10. in Iosue, sic Iudicum 20. pugnarunt Hebraei contra Beniamitas, suos contribules.

13 THE EIGHTH, on account of a violated pact; you have an example in Jotham and Josaphat, 4 Reg. 3. Therefore the sole cause of a just war is injury — to be repelled by the right of defense, or compensated by the right of commutative justice, or avenged by the right of vindicative justice — and that, when due satisfaction is not otherwise rendered. So all agree with D. Augustine book 22 against Faustus, chapter 74.

> OCTAVA, ob violatum pactum; exemplum habes in Iotam, et Iosaphat 4. Reg. 3. Itaque causa iusti Belli est sola iniuria, aut iure defensionis repellenda, aut iure commutativae iustitiae compensanda, aut iure vindicativae ulciscenda, idque, cum aliunde debita satisfactio non praestatur. Ita cum D. Augustino Lib. 22. contra Faustum, cap. 74. fatentur omnes.

14 Making war, however, against infidels not baptized, Castro and others approve; but the common opinion is that it is not lawful; for no Prince has a right to this except as a member of the Church, which has no right over those not subject to it.

> CONTRA infideles autem, non Baptizatos, agere Bellum, laudant Castro, et alii; sed communis sententia est, id non licere; non enim ad hoc ius habet Princeps aliquis, nisi ut membrum Ecclesiae, quae non habet ius in non sibi subditos.

15 The Archbishop of Valencia relates in his History of America that not a few armies of Christian warfare went astray in this, who, making war upon the most wretched Indians for the sake of winning them to religion, utterly destroyed that people even to extermination: the Gospel surely does not command that nations be destroyed with such savagery, but that they be redeemed with supreme humanity and patience; it would rather be fitting to spend one's own blood on their behalf by labor and long-suffering preaching than to draw their blood off into streams; for the Apostles, Christ commands, are to be as sheep, handing them not a savage sword, but the sword of the tongue — namely, the word of God, which is more penetrating than every two-edged sword.

> In hoc vero nonnullos Christianae militiae exercitus aberrasse narrat Archiepiscopus Valentinus in historia Americae, qui bellum miserrimis Indis, religionis conciliandae gratia, inferentes, gentem illam ad internecionem usque deleverunt: Id sane Evangelium non praecipit, ut ea immanitate gentes perimantur, sed ut summa humanitate, et patientia redimantur, potiusque esset proprium pro illis sanguinem labore, et longanimi praedicatione impendere, quam ipsorum cruorem in rivos ita deducere; ut enim oves sint Apostoli, praecipit Christus, non immanus, sed linguae gladium, verbum scilicet Dei, omni gladio ancipiti penetrabilius, ipsis tradens.

16 One who makes a just war, however, CAN call others to his aid and partnership in the war; for so the Machabees demanded the alliance of the Romans, as Tannerus notes number 52; so also everywhere among the nations, while wars are waged, we have it as established that this is done. Yet

I do not refuse that where the scandal of the Christian name threatens, it is not lawful; so Molina disputation 112, Azor tomus 1, book 8, chapter 25, question 14, and Tannerus as above.

> POTEST autem, qui Iuste bellum infert, alios sibi in adiutorium, et belli societatem advocare; sic enim et Machabaei Romanorum foedus expostularunt, ut Notat Tannerus num. 52. sic etiam ubique gentium, dum bella geruntur, fieri exploratum habemus; Non renuo tamen, ubi Christiani nominis Scandalum in se imminet, id non licere; Ita Molina disp. 112. Azorius Tom. 1. lib. 8. cap. 25. quaestio 14. et Tannerus ut supra.

17 But since the necessity of the one calling them is so well known that he is recognized as compelled to do so for his own defense, not to the injury of the faith, no one will deny that scandal will arise from it for anyone. By this is clear the answer to what Valentia objects disputation 3, question 16, point 2.

> Verum cum tam nota sit advocantis necessitas, ut id agere compulsus in propriam defensionem, non in fidei iniuriam, cognoscatur; nemini inde Scandalum obventurum nemo inficiabitur. Per haec patet ad ea, quae obiicit Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 16. puncto 2.

18 One CAN also lay ambushes, and is not bound to announce the battle beforehand, as the Holy Doctor notes in the Bibliotheca, chapter 82, which he proves by the examples of Abraham Genesis 14; Josue 8 and 10; and of Gedeon, Judith 8. So Tannerus.

> POTEST etiam infidias struere, nec tenetur certamen praenunciare, ut notat S. Doctor in Bibliotheca, cap. 82. quod probat exemplis Abrahae Genesis. 14. Iosue 8. et 10. et Iudit. 8. ex Gedeone. Ita Tannerus.

19 In doubt, however, about the just cause, the condition of the possessor is the better one, as is commonly taught, according to Valentia. Nevertheless it is reasonable also to satisfy even the adverse party, as Victoria notes number 28, Molina disputation 103, Valentia question 16, point 2, Tannerus number 41.

> IN dubio autem iustae causae melior est conditio possidentis, ut docent communiter apud Valentiam. Attamen rationabile est etiam parti adversae satisfacere, ut notant Victoria num. 28. Molina disp. 103. Valentia quaest. 16. puncto 2. Tanner. num. 41.

20 TAKE NOTE, moreover, that a just cause once recognized does not mean war is at once to be declared, but satisfaction must first be sought, as is had in Deuteron. 20; otherwise the undertaking will be against justice, and consequently with guilt and the obligation of restitution. So Bannes dubium 8, Tannerus numbers 32 and 51, Valentia point 2, at the end.

> ADVERTE autem, non statim agnita iusta causa, esse bellum indicendum, sed prius petendam satisfactionem, ut habetur Deuter. 20. alioqui erit contra Iustitiam initum, et consequenter cum reitate, et restitutionis obligatione. Ita Bannes dub. 8. Tannerus num. 32. et 51. Valentia puncto 2. in calce.

21 If, however, neither party is in legitimate possession, the thing must be divided or done by the other according to the reasons, in proportion to compensation. See Tannerus number 43.

> SI autem neuter sit in possessione legitima, res pro rationibus dividenda, aut facienda est ab altero, pro rata compensatione. Vide Tannerum numero 43.

22 AS TO intention, it is so necessary that if the other conditions are present but this one is lacking, it does not give rise to the necessity of restitution. So, from the common view, Cajetan teaches, Bannes here, Valentia point 2, Molina tomus 1 on justice, disputation 123, Tannerus dubium 2, number 28.

QUOAD intentionem ita est necessaria, ut si adsint aliae conditiones, haec vero desit, non inducat necessitatem restitutionis. Ita ex communi docet Caietanus, Bannes hic, Valentia puncto 2. Molina Tom. 1. de iustitia, disp. 123. Tanner. dub. 2. num. 28.

23 War can indeed be just on both sides per accidens, if on one side there is invincible ignorance, in which way the wars of the Amorrhites with Israel seem to have been, as Tostatus teaches on Josue 10; and then, once the truth is recognized, they are bound to withdraw and restore those things that still survive, and by which they have been made richer; as Valentia notes. But Princes must first consult the learned; otherwise, in a matter of the gravest moment, they expose themselves to the danger of guilt. So Victoria on the law of war, number 20, Valentia question 16, point 2, Molina disputation 109, Tannerus disputation 2, question 6, dubium 4, number 37.

POTEST autem bellum utraque parte esse iustum per accidens, si ex una parte sit invincibilis ignorantia, quo pacto videntur fuisse bella Amorrhaeorum cum Israele, ut docet Tostatus ad 10. Iosue, et tunc agnita veritate, tenentur recedere, et restituere ea, quae adhuc salva sunt, et in quibus sunt facti ditiores; ut notat Valentia; sed ante debent Principes consulere eruditos; alioqui in re gravissima exponitur periculo culpae. Ita Victoria de iure belli, num. 20. Valentia quaest. 16. puncto 2. Molina disp. 109. Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 4. num. 37.

24 BEYOND the conditions stated, to the substance of a just war there follows the manner of conducting it. First, indeed, in the damages to be inflicted: necessary reaction is indeed allowed, both to repair the damages inflicted and to establish peace; yet not all excesses are allowed — for instance, to kill innocents, such as women and infants, as is decreed in Exodi 23, Deuteron. 20. But if God at some time commanded that even women and infants be killed — Josue 6, in Jericho; 1 Reg. 15, against Amalech — there was a special cause by the will of the supreme Lord. So Molina, Valentia, Victoria, according to Tannerus number 66.

PRAETER allatas conditiones, ad substantiam belli iusti sequitur modus in eo gerendo. Primo quidem in damnis inferendis licere quidem reactionem necessariam, tum ad damna illata resarcienda, tum ad pacem stabiliendam; non tamen excessus omnes licere, puta occidere innocentes, ut mulieres, infantes, ut decernitur Exodi 23. Deuter. 20. Quod si aliquando Deus praecepit, etiam mulieres, et infantes necari: Iosue 6. in Ierico, primo Reg. 15. in Amalech, fuit peculiaris causa ex voluntate supremi Domini. Ita Molina, Valentia, Victoria apud Tannerum num. 66.

25 BEYOND children and women, however, others must be presumed innocent, as is had in the chapter Innovamus, on truce and peace, from Alexander III: Innovamus, that Priests, monks, conversi, pilgrims, merchants, rustics, those going and returning, and the animals with which they plough and carry seed to the field, be let be with fitting service. To these are added Legates or Orators, in the chapter Paternarum 24, question 3. See there.

PRAETER pueros autem, et mulieres, praesumi debent innocentes alii, ut habetur in cap. Innovamus, de Treuga, et pace, ex Alexandro III. Innovamus, ut Presbyteri, monachi, Conversi, Peregrini, Mercatores, Rustici, euntes, et redeuntes, et animalia, quibus arant, et semina portans ad agrum, servitute congrua laetentur. Quibus adduntur et Legati, sive Oratores in cap. Paternarum 24. quaest. 3. Vide ibi.

26 It would nevertheless be lawful per accidens, if the citadel could not otherwise be stormed, and that storming would bring very great advantage. So Tannerus number 67, with Victoria.

27 It is nevertheless lawful, Valentia says, to despoil innocent enemies — namely, those who are parts of the Republic which inflicted the injury. For this can contribute both to repairing the public damage and to confirming the peace, so that the enemies, deprived of those things and weakened, may seek peace. Or if innocents of ours have been despoiled; therefore Repressalia are granted. So also Cajetan under the word bellum, Victoria on the law of war, number 41, Covarruvias on the rule Peccatum, part 2, question 4, Molina disputation 121, Tannerus number 71, Valentia at the place cited, and others.

> LICERE tamen expoliare innocentes hostes, ait Valentia, eos scilicet, quae sunt partes Reipublicae, quae intulit iniuriam. Hoc enim et ad damnum publicum resarciendum, et ad pacem confirmandam conferre potest, ne hostes illis rebus utantes, sed infirmati pacem quaerant. Vel si ex nostris innocentibus expoliati sint; ideo conceduntur Repressalia. Ita etiam Caietanus verbo bellum, Victoria de iure belli, num. 41. Corm. in regula Peccatum, part. 2. quaest. 4. Molina disp. 121. Tannet. num. 71. Valentia loco cit. et alii.

28 Clerics and Churches, however, are excepted on account of their immunity, unless the enemy cannot otherwise be defeated, as Valentia notes disputation 3, question 16, point 3, with Sylvester under the word bellum, question 3, 6, and the holy Bannes article 2, last dubium.

> EXCIPIUNTUR autem Clerici, et Ecclesiae propter immunitatem, nisi aliter hostes vinci queant, ut notat Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 16. puncto 3. cum Sylvest. verbo bellum, 3. quaest. 6. et S. Bannes art. 2. dub. ult.

29 FURTHERMORE, such a manner is to be kept that neither the Leaders nor the soldiers act against justice — the former by not paying the soldiers their stipends; the latter by pillaging; for in Luke 3 John laid it upon them: be content with your stipends.

> PRAETEREA modus talis servandus est, ut neque Duces, neque milites contra iustitiam agant, illi non soluendo stipendia militibus: isti rapiendo, nam Lucae 3. Ioannes eis imposuit: estote contenti stipendiis vestris.

30 Likewise, let them not act against fortitude by rashly exposing themselves to danger.

> Similiter ne contra fortitudinem agant, temere se discrimini exponendo.

31 The manner, too, constituted by the law of nations, must also be kept: that movable things acquired be the army's; immovable things, the Prince's. See Valentia and Bellarmine at the place cited, and Tannerus number 75, who assigns movables to those who take them; immovables are designated to the Prince, the law si captivum, ff. de captivis.

> DEBET etiam servari modus, iure gentium constitutus, ut res mobiles aequisitae, sint exercitus; res vero immobiles sint Principis. Vide Valentiam, et Bellarminum, loco citato, ac Tannerum num. 75. qui mobilia capientibus dat; Immobilia vero Principi designantur Leg. si captivum, ff. de captivis.

32 TAKE NOTE, with D. Bonaventure on the passage adduced from Luke, that soldiers sin knowingly who fight in an unjust war, or are ready to fight in every war. So, from the common view, Cajetan under the word Bellum, Bannes here, question 40, article 1, dubium 6, Valentia question 16, point 2, Molina disputation as above, 103, Tannerus number 47. The reason is that to do evil, or even to expose oneself to danger, is not lawful.

> ADVERTE cum D. Bonavent. ad locum adductum Lucae, peccare milites, scienter in bello iniusto militantes, sive paratos in omni bello militare. Ita ex communi, Caietanus verbo Bellum, Bannes hic, quaest. 40. art. 1. dub. 6. Valentia quaest. 16. puncto 2. Molina disp. ut. 103. Tanner. num. 47. Ratio est, quia malum agere, seu periculo etiam se exponere non licet.

33 Indeed, in a doubtful cause, subject soldiers, or perpetual stipendiaries, are not bound to know and examine the justice of the war, unless perhaps they have serious indications of injustice; but the rest are bound to inquire first, before they give their name to the militia. This is the common doctrine, according to Cajetan, Bannes, and others here, question 40, article 1, Victoria number 25, Molina disputations 114 and 118, Valentia point 2, Tannerus number 48. The Father, from the canon Qui culpantur, 23, question 1, after D. Augustine book 22 against Faustus, chapter 75. But Fuliensis book 3, chapter 11 adds that even foreigners can fight in the first case, if the Prince be of good repute and a Christian, of whom well is presumed.

> In dubia quidem causa milites subditi, vel stipendiarii perpetui, non tenentur iustitiam Belli scire, et examinare, nisi forte gravia indicia habeant de iniustitia : caeteri vero tenentur prius inquirere, antequam nomen dent militiae; Est doctrina communis apud Caietanum, Bannem, et alios hic, quaest. 40. art. 1. Victoriam num. 25. Molinam disput. 114. et 118. Valentia puncto 2. Tanner. num. 48. Pater ex can. Qui culpantur, 23. quaest. 1. post D. Augustinum Lib. 22. contra Faustum, cap. 75. At Fuliensis lib. 3. cap. 11. addit, etiam exteros posse in primo casu militare, si Princeps sit bonae famae, et Christianus, de quo bene praesumitur.

Question III: By whom war may be waged

1 First it is certain that Clerics constituted in sacred orders, and monks even if Laymen, are prohibited by ecclesiastical law. Concerning Monks it is had in the canon Eos qui, d. 20, question 3. Concerning Clerics, 23, question 8, especially the canon Clerici, and the canon Quicunque ex clero. So D. Thomas and others.

> Primo certum est, Clericos in sacris constitutos, et monachos etiam Laicos, iure Ecclesiastico prohiberi. De Monachis habetur Can. eos qui, d. 20. quaest. 3. De Clericis vero 23. quaest. 8. praesertim Can. clerici, et can. Quicunque ex clero. Ita D. Thom. et alii.

2 That these, however, can fight by the license of the Pontiff in a case of necessity, Covarruvias notes Relectio on the Clementine si furiosus, Bannes article 2, Cajetan in the same place, Valentia point 4.

> Posse tamen hos e licentia Pontificis pugnare in casu necessitatis, notant Couar. Relect. in Clement. si furiosus. Bannes art. 2. Caietanus ibidem, Valentia puncto 4.

3 The reason is; because then the ecclesiastical law yields to the natural obligation. Yet the cited Canons do not forbid clerics to be present, to exhort, to help with spiritual aids. See D. Thomas article 2, Valentia at the place cited, Molina disputation 108, Suarez tomus 5, disputation 47, section 6, Tannerus number 80.

> Ratio est; quia tunc obligatione naturali cedit ius Ecclesiasticum. Non prohibent tamen allegati Canones clericos, adesse, hortari, succurrere spiritualibus. Vide D. Thom. art. 2. Valentiam loco cit. Molinam disp. 108. Suarez Tom. 5. disp. 47. sect. 6. Tanner. num. 80.

4 Therefore if Clerics fight without due justice and license, they become irregular, as is gathered from the chapter De caetero, extra on homicide, provided that someone is there killed.

> Itaque si Clerici absque debita iustitia, et licentia pugnent, irregulares fiunt, ut colligitur, cap. de caetero, extra de homicidio, modo tamen aliquis ibi occidatur.

5 Indeed, even if they merely exhort in an unjust war, it is gathered from the chapter Quod in dubiis, extra on penalties, and the chapter Clericus, extra on homicide.

> Imo etiamsi in Bello iniusto tantum hortentur, ut colligitur ex cap. Quod in dubiis, extra de Poenis, et cap. Clericus, extra de homicidio.

6 Therefore if Clerics fight in a just war by the Pope's license, even if they kill, they do not become irregular.

> Itaque si Bello iusto pugnent clerici ex licentia pontificis, etiamsi occidant, non fiunt irregulares.

7 But if they fight in a just war, yet without license, they still do not incur irregularity, according to the common opinion — Sylvester under the word Bellum, question 3, 2, Covarruvias at the place cited, part 2, § 3, number 9, Castro book 2 on the penal law, chapter 14, Valentia at the place cited, point 4.

> Quod si bello iusto, sine tamen licentia pugnent, adhuc non incurrunt irregularitatem, iuxta communem sententiam, Sylvest. verbo Bellum, 3. quaest. 2. Couarru. loco cit. part. 2. §. 3. num. 9. Castro Lib. 2. de lege poen. cap. 14. Valentia loco citato, puncto 4.

8 The reason is, because odious laws are not to be extended. Laws burden with irregularity only illicit homicide and the killing of public ministers of justice.

> Ratio est, quia non sunt Iura odiosa amplianda. Iura vero solum homicidium illicitum, et ministrorum iustitiae publicorum, irregularitate onerant.

9 Nor is it credible that on account of an act to which one is bound by the law of nature one should incur an impediment to one's own office.

> Neque est credibile, quod propter actum, ad quem tenetur iure naturae, incurrat quis impedimentum ad suum officium.

10 You will ask, at what time war is lawful. This is asked on account of feast days; it is certain, indeed, that on these days defensive war is lawful, as is had in 1 Machab. 2. It is proved: for if it is lawful to draw the ox out of the pit, as is said in Luke 14, and to heal a man, as is said in John 7, why would it not be lawful to fight for the preservation of the Republic? So Nicholas also decrees, the canon si nulla, 23, question 8.

> Quaeres, quo tempore licitum sit Bellum. Hoc quaeritur ob dies festos, certum quidem est, hisce diebus bellum defensivum licere, ut habetur primo Machab. 2. Probatur; Nam si licet bovem extrahere e fovea, ut dicitur Lucae 14. et sanare hominem, ut dicitur Ioan 7. cur non licebit pro conservatione Reipublicae pugnare? sic decernit etiam Nicolaus can. si nulla, 23. quaest. 8.

11 It is also lawfully done when it is necessary to the end of the war, namely to victory. This the aforesaid Nicholas affirms, that with urgent necessity it is lawful.

> Licite etiam fit, quando est necessarium ad finem belli, nempe ad victoriam. Id e dictus Nicolaus, urgente necessitate, id licere affirmat.

12 It is nevertheless not a mortal sin, outside necessity, to fight on a feast day, provided Mass is heard, as Cajetan says, according to Valentia and Tannerus number 87, adducing Bannes here, and Molina disputation 111.

> Non est tamen peccatum mortale, extra necessitatem, die festo pugnare, dummodo audiatur Missa, ut ait Caietanus apud Valentiam, Tannerum numero 87. adducens Bannem hic, et Molinam disput. 111.

Disputation XVII: On Quarreling and Sedition

1 In CHARITY is contained eminently FRIENDSHIP (which, according to the Philosopher, is perfected only between two persons); likewise also political peace, which makes many fellow-citizens of one will and one tongue, for repelling the assaults of outsiders; against the former, Quarreling fights from the opposite side; against the latter, Sedition; against Charity, however, both; therefore both must be briefly considered here.

> In Charitate continetur eminenter Amicitia, (quae, iuxta Philosophum, perfecte inter duos tantum initur;) uti et pax politica, quae plures concives unius facit voluntatis, et labii, ad repellendos exteriorum insultus; contra priorem ex adverso pugnat Rixa; contra alteram Seditio; contra Charitatem vero utraque; quare de illis hic videndum breviter.

Question I: What quarreling is, and what kind of sin

1 Rixa is derived from Ringor, because it signifies a private fight, such as the fight of dogs, which quarrel (ringunt): Hence it is gathered to have originated from anger.

> Quid RIXA, et quale peccatum.
> Rixa a Ringor dicta, quod significet pugnam privatam, qualis est pugna canum, qui ringunt: Hinc ab ira ortum habere colligitur.

2 Riot is therefore, on the part of the aggressor, a mortal sin, as is had in Galat. 5.; but on the part of the one attacked, it can be mortal, if in gravely resisting he goes too far.

> Est igitur Rixa, ex parte invasoris, peccatum mortale, ut habetur Galat. 5. ex parte vero invasi, potest esse mortale, si graviter repugnando excedat.

3 It is described by D. Bonaventure in his explanation of Theological terms: Rixa est audax voluntas vindicandi, in iniuriam facti procedens.

> Describitur a D. Bonavent. in declarat. terminorum Theolog. Rixa est audax voluntas vindicandi, in iniuriam facti procedens.

4 Many examples of riots are related by S. Doctor in the Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50. Genes. 26. The shepherds of Gerara quarrelled with Isaac.

> Multa Rixarum exempla refert S. Doctor in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50. Genes. 26. Rixati sunt pastores Gerarae cum Isaac.

5 Exodus 2. two Hebrews quarrelled, upon whom Moses came, reproving them.

> Exodi 2. duo Hebraei Rixati sunt, quibus supervenit Moyses, reprehendens.

6 Two women were contending before Solomon 3. Kings, 3.

> Duae mulieres litigant ante Salomonem 3. Regum, 3.

7 The Jews contended about Christ John 7.

> Litigabant Iudaei de Christo Ioannis 7.

8 The Jews were disputing Acts 11. unwilling that the Gentiles be preached to.

Disceptabant Iudaei Act. 11. nolentes praedicari Gentilibus.

9 The multitude of Iconium was divided, some of whom stood for the Jews, others for the Apostles Acts 14. and another cap. 15. another cap. 19. another cap. 21. another cap. 23.

Divisa est multitudo Iconii, e quibus aliqui pro Iudaeis stabant, alii pro Apostolis Actorum 14. et alia cap. 15. alia cap. 19. alia cap. 21. alia cap. 23.

10 Here the duel is usually treated of, which is a riot of two by agreement.

Hic agi solet de duello, quod est Rixa duorum ex condicto.

11 On which Caietan writes excellently 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 39. Filliucius tract. 29. cap. 8. Suarez de cens. disp. 23. Bonacina tract. 3. disp. 11. Fagundez in the place to be cited, with Tanner.

De quo egregie Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 39. Fillinc. tract. 29. cap. 8. Suarez de cens. disp. 23. Bonac. tract. 3. disp. 11. Fagundez loco citando, cum Tannero.

12 It must be asserted, however, that the duel is illicit by the natural law, unless it be necessary to escape death.

Asserendum autem, duellum Iure naturae illicitum esse, nisi necessarium sit ad effugiendam mortem.

13 It is condemned moreover in the sacred Laws, as appears in cap. Monomachiam, 2. quaest. 5. and cap. Henricus, extra de clericis in duello, and the Council of Trent sess. 25. in the Decree on general reformation, cap. 19. and it is had from D. Augustine in 23. quaest. 1. They are condemned by the Leg. unic. Cod. de gladiatoribus, Lib. 11.

Damnatur autem in sacris Legibus, ut constat in cap. Monomachiam, 2. quaest. 5. et cap. Henricus, extra de clericis in duello, et Concilio Trident. sess. 25. in Decreto de reformatione generali, cap. 19. et ex D. Augustino habetur 23. quaest. 1. Damnantur ex Leg. unic. Cod. de gladiatoribus, Lib. 11.

14 And in our own time Louis XIII, justly acclaimed as the Just, King of France, sanctioned a most severe Law, by which he stamps the duel with the mark of infamy, condemns duelists to death and other penalties, so that he might avert so great an internecine slaughter of the most valiant Dukes and soldiers in his kingdoms.

Et Nostra tempestate Ludovicus XIII. Iustus merito acclamatus, Rex Galliae Legem severissimam sanxit, qua duellum infamiae nota obsignat, damnat duellantes morte, et aliis poenis, ut tantam in regnis suis strenuissimorum Ducum, ac militum internecionem averteret.

15 Most recently also, an offspring worthy of such a father, Louis XIV, with an immense zeal for Justice, adding to his unbent and intrepid spirit the grandeur whereby he is truly proclaimed Great, decreed this same thing by a royal Diploma, and established moreover, beyond the irremissible penalty of the head, the proscription of honors, to be stripped forever of the islands of nobility, those who among nobles have contended in that accursed fight; Nor indeed could a more efficacious remedy be applied to tempering the ebullition of the blood of gallant French brawlers, as the outcome daily proves, than that those who thus pursue glory be buried inglorious, both with the living and with the nobility of posterity. Wherefore that illustrious nation, unable to pour out blood in duelling, sheds it more gloriously in subduing the enemies of the Church far and near.

Novissime etiam tanto patre digna Soboles Ludovicus XIV. immenso Iustitiae zelo, infracti, et intrepidi animi adiciens magnitudinem, quo vere Magnus proclamatur, id ipsum regio Diplomate decrevit, statuitque insuper ultra capitis irremissibilem poenam, bonorunque proscriptionem, nobilitatis insulis in perpetuum exuendos, qui inter nobiles anathematisata ista pugna certaverint; Nec efficacius sane remedium generosae procerum gallorum sanguinis ebullitioni attemperandae potuit applicari, uti exitus quotidie comprobat, quam ut gloriam ita sectantes inglorius cum vixae etiam posteritatis nobilitate tumulentur. Quare quem sanguinem gens illa praeclara nequit effundere duellando, prope, longeque hostes Ecclesiae debellando gloriosius profundit.

16 Nor do duelists truly defend Honor; nay, they hunt ignominy for themselves; they do not rightly repay injuries, since this is not licit privately.

Nec Honorem sane defendunt duellantes; imo sibi aucupantur ignominiam; Non iniurias recte rependunt, cum private id non liceat.

17 That David in 1. Kings 18. engaged in combat, was for the defense of Divine honor, with the public authority of the King from a divine instinct, as the Gloss also has in cap. Cura suscepi, de pugnatione ordinaria.

Quod vero primo Reg. 18. David certamen inierit, fuit ad defensionem Divini honoris, publica authoritate Regis ex divino instinctu, ut habet et Glossa in cap. Cura suscepi, de pugnatione ordinaria.

18 They sin gravely, and even those cooperating in a duel are excommunicated. See the Council of Trent; nor are they excused by any custom, as D. Bonaventure notes in speculo animae, cap. 1. for in common all Doctors, Theologians and Jurists have cried out against it, as S. Doctor observes. Wherefore also the Council of Trent excommunicates ipso facto sess. 25. cap. 19. the Lords permitting it, or granting the place, the godfathers, the procurators from counsel, the spectators; and the Bull of Clement VIII. excommunicates those cooperating, even if the duel does not follow; if it did not stand through them, Gregory XIII. excommunicates, yet does not reserve. And so, besides infamy and the loss of Ecclesiastical burial, if they die in the duel, the duelists also incur excommunication reserved to the Pope; if it be done with solemnity, with godfathers and provocative challenges (chartulae), by the proper bull of Pius IV. Add, if the duel be merely private, according to the Bull of Gregory XIII. and Clem. VII. who extend the excommunication of the Council of Trent even to a private duel, as Suarez teaches with Navarre Tom. 5. disp. 23. sect. 3. Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 7. Fagundez in 5. praecept. lib. 5. cap. 8. num. 5 and it is of the latae sententiae.

Peccant graviter, et excommunicati sunt etiam cooperantes duello. Vide Concilium Tridentinum; neque ex aliqua consuetudine excusantur, ut notat D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. nam communiter omnes Doctores, Theologi et Iurisperiti reclamarunt, ut advertit S. Doctor. Ideo et Dominos id permittentes, vel locum concedentes patrinosque, procuratores a consilio, spectatores et excommunicat ipso facto Concilium Trident. sess. 25. cap. 19. et Bulla Clementis VIII. cooperantes, etsi duellum non sequatur; si per eos non stetit, excommunicat Gregorius XIII. non tamen reservat. Itaque praeter infamiam, et carentiam Ecclesiasticae sepulturae, si in duello moriantur, etiam excommunicationem incurrunt duellantes, Papae reservatam; si fiat cum solemnitate, patrinis, Chartulisque provocatoriis, ex propria bulla Pii IV. Adde si duellum sit tantum privatum, iuxta Bullam Gregorii XIII. et Clem. VII. qui excommunicationem Concilii Trident. ad privatum etiam duellum extendunt, ut cum Navarro docet Suarez Tom. 5. disp. 23. sect. 3. Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 7. Fagundez in 5. praecept. lib. 5. cap. 8. num. 5 et est latae sententiae.

19 The same penalties others cooperating incur. Now therefore the excommunication, even if not reserved by Gregory, is certainly reserved by Pius and Clement; Yet they can be absolved by Religious in Rome, and outside Italy. See Fagundez num. 5. on this more has been said in prima secundae, tract. de actib. human. disput. 17. quaest. 10. ad propos. 2. according to the Decree of Alexander VII.

> Easdem poenas incurrunt alii cooperantes. Iam igitur excommunicatio, esto a Gregorio non reservata, sane reservata est a Pio et Clemente; Absolvi tamen possunt a Religiosis Romae, et extra Italiam, Vide Fagundez num. 5. de hoc plura dicta sunt prima secundae, tract. de actib. human. disput. 17. quaest. 10. ad propos. 2. iuxta Decretum Alexandri VII.

Question II: What sedition is

1 Sedition is a dissension of citizens, as it were some going apart by themselves.

> Seditio est civium dissensio, quasi aliqui seorsum eant.

2 It is indeed, of its kind, a mortal sin, since it is repugnant to the peace of the Republic: And it is against Charity, nay even against justice. See D. Thom. art. 2. and Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 7. num. 94.

> Est autem profecto ex genere suo mortale peccatum, cum paci Reipub. repugnet: Et est contra Charitatem, imo et iustitiam. Vide D. Thom. art. 2. et Tannerum disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 7. num. 94.

3 Many Seditions, gravely punished by God, are related by S. Doctor in the Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50. especially against Moses. Exodus 15. 16. Num. 11. 21.

> Multas Seditiones, a Deo graviter punitas, refert S. Doctor in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 50. praecipue contra Moysen. Exodi 15. 16. Num. 11. 21.

4 He relates the sedition of the Ephraimites against Jephte Judg. 12. and of the Jews against Roboam 3. Kings 12.

> Narrat seditionem Ephraitarum contra Iephte Iud. 12. et Iudaeorum contra Roboam 3. Reg 12.

5 It is certain, however, that on the part of those who defend justice and truth, it is not a sin, as D. Thom. teaches art. 2. Caietan in summa, V. seditio, Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 17. puncto 2. Whence these are not properly to be called seditious.

> Certum est autem ex parte eorum, qui iustitiam, et veritatem defendunt, non esse peccatum, ut docet D. Thom. art. 2. Caietanus in summa, V. seditio, Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 17. puncto 2. Unde hi proprie non sunt vocandi seditiosi.

6 Sedition moreover is a special sin against Charity, to which it is repugnant in a special way, differing from Discord, Schism, War, and Riot, as D. Thom. shows art. 1.

> Est autem Seditio speciale peccatum contra Charitatem, cui speciali modo repugnat, differente a Discordia, Schismate, Bello, Rixa, ut ostendit D. Thom. art. 1.

7 Discord indeed is only in the souls; sedition, however, breaks forth also outside.

> Discordia quidem est tantum in animis; seditio vero etiam extra prodit.

[8] Schism is opposed to the unity of the Church; sedition, however, to the political unity of the Republic.

> Schisma adversatur unitati Ecclesiae; seditio autem unitati politicae Reipublicae.

[9] War is between entire Republics; sedition, however, between the members of the same Republic.

> Bellum est inter Respublicas integras; seditio vero inter membra eiusdem Reipublicae.

[10] Riot is between two, or a few; but Sedition is among very many. Wherefore the Apostle 2. Corinth. 2. enumerates seditions as sins distinct from others.

> Rixa est inter duos, aut paucos; sed Seditio est inter plurimos. Ideo Apostolus 2. Corinth. 2. seditiones recenset, ut peccata ab aliis distincta.

[11] Sedition is therefore against the peace of Charity, but materially; it is also against justice, insofar as it inflicts damage on the Republic and its citizens. See Valencia.

> Est igitur Seditio contra pacem Charitatis, sed materialiter; est etiam contra iustitiam, quatenus infert damnum Reipublicae, et eius civibus. Vide Valentiam.

Disputation XVIII: On Scandal

1 To the example of a good work, whereby the Church of God is built up, Scandal is opposed, whereby the hostile man labors that it fall into ruin: for he dissolves the cement of Charity, and places in its stead stones of offense, upon which, falling from the structure, they strike their feet who walk iniquitously, as I shall soon say.

> Boni operis exemplo, quo Dei Ecclesia aedificatur, opponitur Scandalum, quo satagit inimicus homo ut in ruinam procumbat: hoc enim Charitatis caementum dissolvit, ponitque eius loco lapides offensionis, in quos e structura decidentes, impingunt pedes inique ambulantium, ut mox dicam.

Question I: What scandal is, and of how many kinds

1 Scandal signifies the striking of the foot against some stumbling block, as D. Jerome says in cap. 15. Matth. and D. Bonaventure p. p. Compil. sect. 31.

> Scandalum significat impactionem pedis in aliquod offendiculum, ut ait D. Hieronymus in cap. 15. Matth. et D. Bonavent. p. p. Compil. sect. 31.

2 It is from the Greek Scandalon, which signifies an obstacle, a stumbling block; Σκάνδαλον, which among the Greeks signifies that little wooden trigger in the trap, which when the mouse touches it, to gnaw the bait, the fall of the little board follows.

> a Graeco Scandalon, quod significat obicem, offendiculum, Σκάνδαλον quod apud Graecos significat patulum illud lignum in muscipula, quod cum mus tetigerit, ut rodat escam, sequitur casus asserculi.

3 THEREFORE Scandal among Theologians is that which is the occasion of spiritual ruin given to one's neighbor. Hence they define it: Scandalum est dictum, vel factum minus rectum, praebens proximo occasionem spiritualis ruinae, Thus D. Thom. here, Alensis part. 2. quaest. 189. memb. 1. Richard 4. dist. 38. art. ult. quaest. 1. Durandus there, quaest. 3. Maior quaest. ult. art. 1. Adrian quodl. 1. art. 1. Sylvester and other Summists under the word Scandalum. Couar. R. l. CL. in cap. Peccatum, de reg. iuris, part. 1. num. 5. and D. Bonaventure in speculo animae, cap. 1. et parte prima Centiloquii, sect. 31.

> IGITUR Scandalum apud Theologos est id, quod est occasio spiritualis ruinae, proximo data. Hinc illud definiunt: Scandalum est dictum, vel factum minus rectum, praebens proximo occasionem spiritualis ruinae*, Ita D. Thom. hic, Alens.* part. 2. quaest. 189. memb. 1. Richardus 4. dist. 38. art. ult. quaest. 1. Durandus ibi, quaest. 3. Maior quaest. ult. art. 1. Adrianus quodl. 1. art. 1. Sylvest. et alii Summistae verbo Scandalum. Couar. R. l. CL. in cap. Peccatum, de reg. iuris, part. 1. num. 5. et D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. et parte prima Centiloquii, sect. 31.

4 It is said dictum, vel factum (a word or deed), because it must be something external. It is said minus rectum (less right), because it is not necessary that it be absolutely evil; but it suffices that it be less right, deficient in one circumstance of those integral ones whereby the good is constituted, according to D. Dionysius, cap. 4. de divin. nominibus. The omission of a duty is also included.

> DICITUR vero dictum, vel factum*, quia debet esse aliquid externum. Dicitur* minus rectum*, quia non est necesse, ut absolute sit malum; sed sufficit, ut minus rectum sit deficiens in una circumstantia ex illis integralibus, quibus bonum constituitur, secundum D. Dionysium,* cap. 4. de divin. nominibus. Includitur etiam omissio debiti.

[5] Scandal is DIVIDED first into Active and Passive. Active is that which we have just defined; Passive is the spiritual ruin itself of another. See S. Bonaventure in the place cited of the Centiloquium.

> DIVIDITUR Scandalum primo in Activum, et Passivum. Activum est illud, quod modo definivimus; Passivum est ipsa spiritualis ruina alterius. Vide S. Bonavent. loco cit. Centiloquii.

[6] SECOND, active Scandal is divided into Scandal per se, and Scandal per accidens. Scandal per se we call in this place, when from a certain and express intention the occasion of ruin is given, promoting it, soliciting it, persuading to it, exhorting to it. Per accidens is twofold: one with respect to the agent, not with respect to the work, as when one sins in the face of others with such a crime, as induces of itself to sin, even if he does not intend this; with such Scandal one sins in maintaining a concubine in the face of his sons, and it is called general. The other is per accidens, both with respect to the agent, who does not intend to induce others to sin; and on the part of the work, which is not of its own nature an incentive to sin, even if it abound with a defect (naevus).

> SECUNDO dividitur Scandalum activum in Scandalum per se, et Scandalum per accidens. Scandalum per se hoc loco dicimus, cum ex certa, et expressa intentione datur occasio ruinae, eam promovendo, sollicitando, suadendo, hortando. Per accidens est duplex: alterum respectu operantis, non respectu operis, ut cum quis peccat, in facie aliorum, tali crimine, quod ex se inducit ad peccatum, tametsi is non hoc intendat; tali Scandalo peccat alendo concubinam in facie filiorum, et dicitur generale. Aliud est per accidens, tum respectu operantis, qui non intendit alios ad peccandum inducere; tum ex parte operis, quod non est suapte natura incentivum ad peccatum, esto naevo scateat.

[7] They DIVIDE the Active per se further into that whereby the spiritual ruin of one's neighbor is formally intended; and into another, whereby only the pleasure or utility of the sinner is intended, but not formal ruin. And each of these is called special by many.

> DIVIDUNT adhuc Activum per se in illud, quo intenditur formaliter ruina spiritualis proximi; et in aliud, quo intenditur sola voluptas, vel utilitas a peccante, non autem formalis ruina. Et utrumque a multis dicitur speciale.

[8] Passive SCANDAL is subdivided into Given (Datum) and Taken (Acceptum). Scandal Given is that which arises from the Active Scandal of another; and it is called the Scandal of the little ones, which is to be guarded against, according to the saying of Christ, Matth. 18. Qui autem Scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis, expedit ei ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo eius, et demergatur in profundum maris; this also arises from the weakness of the beholders. Scandal Taken is that which arises not from the occasion given, but taken, from one's own malice, and it is also called Pharisaical. Of this Christ says Matth. 15. Sinite illos: caeci sunt. For of this one must not be concerned.

> SCANDALUM passivum subdividitur in Datum, et Acceptum. Scandalum Datum est id, quod oritur ex activo alterius Scandalo; et vocatur Scandalum pusillorum, quod est cavendum, iuxta dictum Christi, Matth. 18. Qui autem Scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis, expedit ei ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo eius, et demergatur in profundum maris; oritur hoc etiam ex infirmitate videntium. Scandalum Acceptum est, quod non ex occasione data, sed accepta, propria malitia oritur, et dicitur etiam Pharisaeicum. De hoc ait Christus Matth. 15. Sinite illos: caeci sunt. De hoc enim non est curandum.

Question II: Whether scandal is a special sin

[1] It is CERTAIN first, that every Scandal, even per accidens given, not by direct will, but from the work, is mortal of its own nature.

> An SCANDALUM sit speciale peccatum.

CERTUM est primo, Scandalum omne, etiam per accidens datum, non voluntate directa, sed ex opere, esse mortale ex natura sua.

2 It is PROVED first from D. Bonaventure p. p. Centil. sect. 31. et ad 17. Lucae from that passage Matth. 18. Vae homini illi, per quem Scandalum venit. Expedit ei ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo eius, et demergatur in profundum maris, which the B. Lucas likewise testifies, where from Bede in the Gloss he observes, that a most grave punishment is imposed to be rather endured than eternal; and that the former will be useful to him.

PROBATUR primo a D. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 31. et ad 17. Lucae ex illo Matth. 18. Vae homini illi, per quem Scandalum venit. Expedit ei ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo eius, et demergatur in profundum maris*, quod idem testicat B. Lucas, ubi ex Beda in Glossa, observat, imponi poenam gravissimam potius subeundam, quam aeternam; illam vero fore illi utilem.*

3 It is PROVED secondly from D. Bonaventure there. Because it fights against Charity, leading souls down to hell. It is also against justice, snatching from Christ souls created, and redeemed by his blood; of which it is said Sap. 11. Tua sunt omnia Domine, qui amas animas. Hence the Apostle gravely, prima Corinth. cap. 8. says: Peribit infirmus in tua scientia frater, propter quem Christus mortuus est? Sic autem peccantes in fratres, et in Christum peccatis. Wherefore Apoc. 2. he declares: Habes tenentes doctrinam Balaam, qui docebat Balac mittere Scandalum, etc. Poenitentiam age: si quo minus, etc.

PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonaventura ibi. Quia contra Charitatem pugnat, deducens ad infernum animas. Est etiam contra iustitiam, eripiens Christo animas, creatas, et suo sanguine redemptas; de quibus dicitur Sap. 11. Tua sunt omnia Domine, qui amas animas. Hinc graviter Apostolus, prima Corinth. cap. 8. ait: Peribit infirmus in tua scientia frater, propter quem Christus mortuus est? Sic autem peccantes in fratres, et in Christum peccatis. Ideo Apoc. 2. protestatur: Habes tenentes doctrinam Balaam, qui docebat Balac mittere Scandalum, etc. Poenitentiam age: si quo minus, etc.

4 It is PROVED thirdly from S. Doctor, because as for one who builds up by good example a great reward is prepared, so for one who destroys the work of God, a great punishment. Wherefore Rom. 14. Noli propter escam destruere opus Dei.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doctore, quia sicuti aedificanti bono exemplo grande paratur praemium, ita destruenti opus Dei, grandis poena. Ideo Rom. 14. Noli propter escam destruere opus Dei.

5 It is PROVED fourthly from S. Doctor, because it is a great cruelty to seduce the simple, as it is said Levit. 19. Nec coram caeco pones offendiculum.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore, quia magna crudelitas est seducere simplices, ut dicitur Levit. 19. Nec coram caeco pones offendiculum.

6 It is PROVED fifthly, because one who scandalizes is held to that penalty: Animam pro anima.

PROBATUR quinto, quia scandalizans tenetur illi poenae: Animam pro anima.

7 But this is a greater sin in public persons, as Prelates and religious, of whom Malach. 2. Legem requirent ex ore eius. Vos autem recessistis de via, et scandalizastis plurimos in lege: Propter quod et ego dedi vos contemptibiles.

Hoc autem est maius peccatum in personis publicis, ut Praelatis, ac religiosis, de quibus Malach. 2. Legem requirent ex ore eius. Vos autem recessistis de via, et scandalizastis plurimos in lege: Propter quod et ego dedi vos contemptibiles.

8 You will OBJECT that in Matth. 18. it is said: Necesse est ut veniant Scandala. But what is necessary is not a fault.

OBIICIES Matth. 18. dicitur: Necesse est ut veniant Scandala. Quod autem est necessarium, non est culpa.

9 S. Doctor ANSWERS, in the place cited that it speaks by supposition, that they are evil, and most truly of Passive Scandal by supposition of the active; nay, by supposition of malice, which is scandalized even at holy works, as the world was scandalized at Christ John 7. Matth. 13. Mark 11. prima Petri 2. and Paul says Christ was a Scandal to the Jews, and in Luke 2. it is said: Positus in ruinam multorum. Thus Valencia also answers puncto 2. and others.

RESPONDET S. Doctor, loco cit. loqui ex suppositione, quod mali sint, maxime vero de Scandalo passivo ex suppositione activi; imo ex suppositione malitiae, quae scandalizatur etiam de operibus sanctis, sicuti scandalizatus est mundus de Christo Ioan. 7. Matth. 13. Marci 11. prima Petri 2. et Paulus, Christum, ait, Iudaeis esse Scandalum, et Lucae 2. dicitur: Positus in ruinam multorum. Ita respondent etiam Valentia puncto 2. et alii.

10 It is CERTAIN also, that passive Scandal per se is a mortal or venial sin, according as the sin itself will be.

CERTUM est etiam, Scandalum passivum per se esse peccatum mortale, vel veniale, pro ut erit peccatum ipsum.

11 It is CERTAIN also, that Scandal from the intention of drawing into the ruin of souls, or into some crime, as such, is a special Scandal; for it is opposed to beneficent Charity.

CERTUM est etiam, Scandalum ex intentione trahendi in ruinam animae, seu ad aliquod crimen, ut sic, esse speciale Scandalum; nam opponitur beneficae Charitati.

12 The QUESTION is now: whether he who induced another by command, counsel, etc., even if he did not directly intend his ruin, is guilty of the special crime of Scandal. Moreover, whether also not only he who intends merely to draw others to that pleasure for himself, but also he who kindled by the sole wickedness of the work gives evil example, is guilty of a special Scandal against Charity.

QUAESTIO est iam: an ille, qui alium induxit iussu, concilio, etc. tametsi ruinam eius directe non intenderit, specialis criminis Scandali sit reus. Insuper, num etiam, non solum qui intendit solummodo ad illam voluptatem sibi attrahere, sed et qui e sola operis pravitate malo exemplo accenderit, sit Scandali specialis contra Charitatem reus.

13 The FIRST opinion is that it is a special sin. Thus Adrian in 4. dist. 38. quaest. ultim. Antoninus 2. part. titul. 7. §. 4. cap. 4. Navarre relect. in cap. Consideret, de Poenit. disp. 5. and in the Manual, cap. 6. number 19. Valencia disp. 3. quaest. 18. puncto 2. where he also cites Alensis part. 2. quaest. 189. memb. 2. The same think Peter Soto Lect. 9. de confess. Suarez de Charitate, disput. 10. sect. 2. Layman Lib. 2. tract. 3. cap. 13. Tannerus disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 8. citing also Victoria and the modern Thomists, Sylvius 2. 2. The SECOND opinion is, that this scandal is a mere aggravating circumstance. Thus D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 38. dub. 2. lit. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 43. art. 3. Caietan there, and in summa, V. scandalum, Couar. relect. in cap. Peccatum, part. 1. num. 5. Bannes quaest. 43. art. 4. Tract. 2. which is entirely on scandal, where resol. 2. he refuses to recount the opinions of the Doctors, because this disputation seems metaphysical; for as to practice it matters little, because according to the common opinion of D. Bonaventure, in whatever way you give the occasion of spiritual ruin, you are bound to confess it. In the same manner speak some of those cited above, especially Layman, and Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 8. §. 61. Fuliensis lib. 2. cap. 12. Bassaeus, and others.

Bonavent. sententiam, quocumque modo des occasionem spiritualis ruinae, teneris eam confiteri. Eodem modo loquuntur aliqui e supra allegatis, praecipue Layman, et Hurtadus 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 8. §. 61. Fuliensis lib. 2. cap. 12. Bassaeus, et alii.*

14 I ASSERT with this opinion, that scandal of this kind is only an aggravating circumstance.

> ASSERO cum hac sententia, huiusmodi scandalum solummodo esse circumstantiam aggravantem.

15 It is PROVED from D. Bonaventure and D. Thom., because sin is not named from the person against whom it is; whence if anyone offended several with one contumely, he would commit one sin; but it is taken from the act about which it is, and about that which is per se intended, not about that which is per accidens. Therefore that which is beyond the formal intention pertains to the species of the act only reductively, as Valencia also acknowledges.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. et D. Thom. quia peccatum non nominatur ratione eius, in quem est; unde si quis una contumelia plures offendetet, unum peccatum committeret; sed sumitur ratione actus, circa quem est, et circa id, quod per se est intentum, non circa id, quod per accidens. Ideo id, quod est praeter intentionem formalem, non nisi reductive pertinet ad actus speciem, ut fatetur etiam Valentia.

16 Valencia ANSWERS that the assumption is true of that which is beyond every intention and without all voluntariness; and that it does not look to the moral act, nor has anything whereby it is reckoned among moral acts. But it suffices for the Seraphic Doctor, if the act does not have moral being per se, but needs to be reduced to something else, that it not constitute a distinct species of moral act.

> RESPONDET Valentia, assumptum verum esse de eo, quod est praeter omnem intentionem, et absque omni voluntario; neque spectat ad moralem actum, neque habet aliquid quo inter actus morales computetur. Ast, sufficit Seraphico, si actus non habeat esse morale per se, sed egeat ad aliud reduci, ut non constituat distinctam speciem actus moralis.

17 Valencia OBJECTS. In every other matter in which sin is specified by the harm or injury inflicted, the tacit and indirect, or virtual intention, is equivalent to an express intention, at least for the commission of a sin of such a species: Therefore also in the matter of scandal. The antecedent is proved: For he truly commits the sin of detraction who rashly says something, from which follows damage to the reputation of his neighbor. Likewise he truly commits the sin of theft who takes another's property, not with the intention of harming his neighbor, but of benefiting himself; and he who commits fornication in a sacred place commits Sacrilege, although he does not expressly intend to inflict injury on the sacred place: Therefore. Caietan admits the knot of this argument, saying he does not know how to solve it, quaest. 53. art. 2. ad 3.

> OBIICIT Valentia. In omni alia materia, in qua peccatum specificatur a nocumento, vel iniuria illata, intentio, et voluntas tacita, et indirecta, sive virtualis aequivalet intentioni expressae, saltem ut committatur peccatum talis speciei: Ergo et in materia scandali. Antecedens probatur: Nam vere committit detractionis peccatum, qui temere dicit aliquid, ex quo sequitur detrimentum famae proximi. Item committit vere peccatum furti; qui aufert rem alienam, non intentione nocendi proximo; sed sibi commodandi; et qui committit fornicationem in loco sacro, committit Sacrilegium, licet expresse non intendat inferre iniuriam loco Sacro: Ergo. Huius argumenti nodum fatetur Caietanus, se nescire dissolvere quaest. 53. art. 2. ad 3.

18 Yet it is ANSWERED that the cases are different: for all have moral entity per se, nor do they need to lean on another; not so in our case. As to the first; many judge it probable that it is not a sin. As to the second case, there is a direct will, for he necessarily wills to snatch from another to benefit himself. The third case is of a different matter, about which the act per se takes place in the Church, if the fornicator wills certainly to fornicate in that place, even if he does not principally intend this.

> RESPONDETUR tamen, diversos esse casus: nam omnes habent entitatem moralem per se, neque egent iam alteri inniti, non sic in casu nostro. Quo ad primum; probabile censent multi, non esse peccatum. Quo ad secundum casum, ea est voluntas directa, nam necessario vult eripere alteri, ut sibi commodet. Tertius casus est diversae materiae, circa quam actus per se fit in Ecclesia, si fornicans vult profecto fornicari in eo loco, esto principaliter id non intendat.

19 You OBJECT secondly. He who scandalizes by a good act truly commits the sin of scandal, as Caietan and Paludanus concede; although he only indirectly wills the ruin of his neighbor: Therefore also he who scandalizes by an evil act. For the latter is not in a better condition than the former; nor does the fact that his act is otherwise evil stand in the way of its being, for another reason, at the same time in another species of sin, as appears from the doctrine of D. Thom. prima secundae, quaest. 18. art. 10. I do not think (says Valencia) this argument can be solved.

> OBIICIES secundo. Qui per actum bonum scandalizat, vere committit peccatum scandali, ut concedant Caietanus, et Paludanus; licet is indirecte solum velit proximi ruinam: Ergo etiam, qui scandalizat per actum malum. Neque enim is est melioris conditionis, quam ille; nec, quod actus eius sit alioqui malus, obstat, quo minus alia ratione possit esse in alia simul specie peccati, ut patet ex doctrina D. Thom. prima secundae, quaest. 18. art. 10. Non puto (ait Valentia) hoc argumentum solvi posse.

20 It is ANSWERED with D. Bonaventure by denying the Antecedent: For the former sins against prudence, and so that circumstance of the act is not a sin per se; and by this the third objection is answered.

> RESPONDETUR cum D. Bonavent. negando Antecedens: Nam ille peccat contra prudentiam, atque adeo circumstantia illa actus est, non peccatum per se, et per hoc patet ad tertium.

21 You OBJECT thirdly: If the formal intention is necessary for the special sin of scandal; rarely, or never, will one sin by the sin of scandal. For how rare is the man so imbued with diabolical poison as to will the special and spiritual ruin of others? and yet in Scripture this sin is described as frequent Matth. 18. prima Corinth. 8.

> OBIICIES tertio: Si formalis intentio necessaria est ad speciale scandali peccatum; raro, aut nunquam peccato scandali peccabitur. Quotus quis enim est diabolico ita veneno imbutus, ut velit specialem, ac spiritualem aliorum ruinam? et tamen in Scriptura hoc peccatum, ut frequens describitur Matth. 18. prima Corinth. 8.

22 It is ANSWERED easily, that a direct intention is not necessary, namely that you will to lead him directly into spiritual ruin, namely to hell; but it suffices that you will to lead him to sin in such a way, and persuade, solicit, threaten, etc. Alas, how frequent are these acts. In this sense some of the second opinion do not deny that it is a special sin. Thus D. Bonaventure in speculo animae, cap. 1. et lib. 3. Phar. cap. 39. where the SS. Fathers cited seem to think this, and ad 17. Lucae, and in 4. in the place cited he seems to speak the same.

> RESPONDETUR facile, ad intentionem directam non esse necesse, ut velis illum inducere in ruinam spiritualem, nempe ad infernum directe; sed satis est, ut velis illum inducere ad peccandum tali modo, suadeasque, sollicites, mineris, etc. Heu quam frequentes sunt actus isti. Hoc sensu aliqui secundae sententiae non negant, esse peccatum speciale. Sic D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. et lib. 3. Phar. cap. 39. ubi id sentire videntur SS. Patres allati, et ad 17. Lucae, et in 4. loco cit. idem visus est loqui.

23 From what has been said you will gather how one who has given scandal ought to behave in confession.

> Ex dictis colliges; quomodo se debeat gerere in confessione, qui scandalum dedit.

24 INDEED it seems that this circumstance need not be confessed, according to the doctrine of D. Bonav. de circumstantiis aggravantibus, and I shall say 3. part. Tract. de Paenit. disp. 2. sect. 3. quaest. 5. Thus many affirm on this matter.

> SANE videtur, non esse confitendam hanc circumstantiam necessario, iuxta doctrinam D. Bonav. de circumstantiis aggravantibus, et dicam 3. part. Tract. de Paenit. disp. 2. sect. 3. quaest. 5. Ita multi hac de re afferunt.

25 However, COMMONLY they teach that it is to be confessed. Thus Lorca, Villalobos, Becanus, Coninck, Fagundez, Ledesma, cited above, to whom Diana almost subscribes Part 3. Tract. 4. resol. 114. with D. Bonaventure. Nay, Sylvius, Filliucius, Sanchez, Layman above, Bonacina de sacrament. disp. 5. quaest. 5. sect. 2. puncto 2. §. 3. diff. 3. num. 21. and Diana point out that the number of persons and their condition must be expressed, to whom the scandal was given, even with a single sin, and in what way, whether in conversations about fornication? about unspeakable things? or about betrothed women (conjunctis)? Wherefore these two last cry out blind confessors who do not ask these things. Diana again subscribes Part 5. Tract. 7. resol. 3. adding Paludanus, Molsheim (Molfesium), Leo, and others.

> COMMUNITER vero docent, eam confitendam. Ita Lorca, Villalobos. Becanus, Coninchius, Fagundez, Ledesma, supra citati, quibus subscribit fere Diana Parte 3. Tract. 4. resol. 114. cum D. Bonavent. Imo advertunt Sylvius, Filliucius, Sanchez, Layman supra, Bonacina de sacrament. disp. 5. quaest. 5. sect. 2. puncto 2. §. 3. diff. 3. num. 21. et Diana, debere exprimi numerum personarum, et earum conditionem, quibus scandalum datum est, etiam unico peccato, et qua ratione, num colloquiis de fornicatione? num de infandis? vel de coningatis? Quare caecos conclamant hi duo postremi confessarios, qui haec non interrogant. Subscribit iterum Diana Parte 5. Tract. 7. resol. 3. addens Palaum, Molfesium, Leonem, et alios.

26 NOTE truly first, that soliciting a defiled (patatam), or a prepared (paratam) woman,[1] is a probably direct scandal, to be said in confession, according to Sanchez lib. 1. cap. 6. num. 14. Bonacina tract. 1. disp. 5. quaest. 5. puncto 2. §. 3. Vasquez quaest. 91. art. 1. disp. 4. Fill. tract. 28. num. 231. They make an exception, if by an explicit act it were sufficiently perceived, as was said, that you fornicated with a woman, one could gather that you sought this; for a woman, for the most part, is not accustomed to ask.

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'sollicitare patatum, vel paratam' (djvu layer: 'follicitare pararum, vel paratam'); the first word is a corrupted form; rendered 'patatam' (defiled, feminine, agreeing with foemina), as the English rendering already assumed.

NOTA vero primo, sollicitare patatam, vel paratam, esse scandalum probabiliter directum, in confessione dicendum, apud Sanchez lib. 1. cap. 6. num. 14. Bonacin. tract. 1. disp. 5. quaest. 5. puncto 2. §. 3. Vasquez quaest. 91. art. 1. disp. 4. Fill. tract. 28. num. 231. Excipiunt, si explicito actu satis perciperetur, ut dicto, te fornicatum cum foemina, colligere potest id to petiisse; non enim solet foemina, ut plurimum, petere.

27 Others, however, admit it is not to be confessed; for it does not induce, since he finds it prepared. Thus Fagundez praecept. 2. lib. 4. cap. 5. Suarez 3. part. tract. 4. disp. 22. sect. 4. num. 18. Henriquez lib. 2. de paen. cap. 6. num. 7. Diana part. 1. tract. 7. res. 34. Azor tract. 2. lib. 12. cap. 16. quaestio 5. Bassaeus §. 1.

ALII tamen non confitendum admittunt; non enim inducit, cum paratum inveniat. Sic Fagundez praecept. 2. lib. 4. cap. 5. Suarez 3. part. tract. 4. disp. 22. sect. 4. num. 18. Henriquez lib. 2. de paen. cap. 6. num. 7. Diana part. 1. tract. 7. res. 34. Azor tract. 2. lib. 12. cap. 16. quaestio 5. Bassaeus §. 1.

28 To SOLICIT one not yet prepared, however, is called by Diana indirect scandal; but I refuse it, for many do not excuse doing works in the face of the perfect which inflame; for even these fall, as David 2. Reg. 11. seeing Bethsabee in the bath. Solomon 3. Reg. 11. See D. Thom. art. 5. and 6. Perhaps you will excuse yourself, if you opine that the beholders are not to be moved, as many say with Diana, Tract. de scandalo, resol. 3. or if they have been so carried along that they are not moved on that account. See there.

SOLLICITARE vero non paratam, vocatur a Diana scandalum indirectum; sed renuo, Opera enim facere in facie perfectorum, quae incendunt, multi non excusant; nam et hi cadunt, ut David 2. Reg. 11. videns Bethsabeam in balneo. Salomon 3. Reg. 11. Vide D. Thom. art. 5. et 6. Excusaris forsan, si opineris, videntes non movendos, ut dicunt multi cum Diana, Tract. de scandalo, resol. 3. vel si ita pervecti sint, ut non moveantur ob id. Vide ibi.

Question III: What is to be done, and what omitted, to avoid scandal

1 WE do not treat here of scandal per se special, or inherent; but of the general kind arising from an action alone.

Quaenam sint facienda, et quae omittenda ad vitandum scandalum.

NON agimus de scandalo per se speciali, seu inherentio; sed de generali ex opere solum.

2 MANY rules are given on this matter by Gregory of Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 18. puncto 4. Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 9. after D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 31. whose full import Bassaeus delivers, 2.

Scandalum, from num. 8.

> MULTAE regulae dantur de hac re a Gregorio de Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 18. puncto 4. Tannero disp 2. quaest. 6. dub. 9. ex D. Bonau. p. 1. Centil. sect. 31. quorum late Bassaeus eas tradit 2. Scandalum, a num. 8.

3 THE FIRST is, that to avoid scandal it is not lawful to do a thing, or to omit one, which to do or to omit would be a sin mortal of itself intrinsically. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 43. art. 7. and D. Bonav. loc. cit. and others cited below. The first reason is, because sin is not ordainable to good.

> PRIMA est, non licere ad vitandum scandalum, facere aliquam rem, vel aliquam omittere, quam facere, vel omittere sit peccatum mortale per se intrinsece. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 43. art. 7. et D. Bonau. loc. cit. et alii infra cit. Ratio prima est, quia peccatum non est ordinabile in bonum.

4 It is PROVED secondly: For, as it is said Rom. 3. Evils are not to be done that goods may come of them. And it is confirmed from the order of charity, for each man must keep himself more immune from spiritual ruin than another.

> PROBATUR secundo: Nam, ut dicitur Rom. 3. Non sunt facienda mala, ut eveniant bona. Et confirmatur ex ordine charitatis, debet enim quisque se magis, quam alium, immunem a spirituali ruina servare.

5 THE SECOND rule is, that neither is it lawful to do anything intrinsically venial. So D. Thom. art. 1. ad 5. Valentia loc. cit. and D. Bonav. above, Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 9. Diana p. 5. tract. 7. resol. 21. and seq. Bass. num. 12. and others among these authors.

> SECUNDA regula est, neque licere aliquid intrinsece veniale. Ita D. Thom. art. 1. ad 5. Valentia loc. cit. et D. Bonau. supra Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 6. dub. 9. Diana p. 5. tract. 7. resol. 21. et seq. Bass. num. 12. et aliae apud istos.

6 THE THIRD rule is, that to avoid the scandal of the weak, all those things are to be avoided which can be avoided without sin, lest the weak and simple fall. So D. Gregory homil. 7. in Ezech. Beda on cap. 9. of Mark, and the Doctors commonly.

> TERTIA regula est, ad vitandum scandalum infirmorum, ea omnia vitanda, quae sine peccato vitari vallent, ne infirmi, et simplices cadant. Ita D. Gregorius homil. 7. in Ezech. Beda in cap. 9. Marci, et communiter Doctores.

7 It is PROVED from the nature of charity, which is bound to provide for the neighbor's salvation in necessity, if it can. So also D. Bonaventura after D. Bernard, and the Saintly Doctor gathers this from that passage of Matthew 17. But that we not scandalize them, go to the sea, etc. Truly Christ was not bound to the tribute, nor the Apostles. Bassaeus adds num. 12. that when their scandal cannot otherwise be avoided, they must be made capable of the thing.

> PROBATUR ex natura charitatis, quae tenetur proximi saluti in necessitate prospicere, si potest. Ita etiam D. Bonaventura ex D. Bernardo, et hoc colligit S. Doct. illo Matthaei 17. Ne autem scandalizemus eos, vade ad mare, etc. Sane tributo non tenebatur Christus, aut Apostoli. Addit Bassaeus num. 12. quando horum scandalum aliter vitari nequit, debent enim fieri capaces.

8 THE SAINTLY Doctor gathers this rule also from the Gloss, on that passage Matt. 15. Know that the Pharisees, having heard this word, were scandalized, where it says: Everything that can be set aside, with the threefold truth preserved, namely of life, of doctrine, and of justice, is to be omitted on account of scandal. The Truth of life comprehends all actions conformable to reason, and therefore true, practically containing the precepts, indeed even the counsels. The Truth of doctrine contains those things which the duty of truth imposes on masters. The Truth of justice looks to Prelates, as to punishing the wicked and rewarding and sustaining the just, and therefore in relation to another. So nearly also Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 18. punct. 4. with Adriano quaest. 1. art. 2.

> HANC regulam colligit S. Doct. etiam ex Glossa, ad illud Matth. 15. Scis quia Pharisaei audito verbo hoc, scandalizati sunt, ubi ait: Omittendum esse, propter scandalum, omne, quod potest praetermitti, salva triplici veritate, scilicet vitae, doctrinae, et iustitiae. Comprehendit Veritas vitae omnes actiones conformes rationi, atque adeo veras, practice continentes praecepta, imo et consilia. Veritas doctrinae continet ea, quae ad veritatem magistris incumbit. Veritas iustitiae spectat ad Praelatos, quoad puniendos malos, et iustos praemiandos, ac sustentandos, atque adeo in ordine ad alterum. Ita fere etiam Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 18. punct. 4. cum Adriano quaest. 1. art. 2.

9 These things truly, after D. Hieronymo, are not to be omitted for fear of scandal. But if scandal arise from the mere malice of the beholder, it is to be despised, as the Saintly Doctor admonishes there on 6. of John, citing that passage Matt. 15. Let them alone: they are blind. The Saintly Doctor has the same doctrine on 18. of Luke on those words: It is impossible that scandals should not come. The Apostle said he would abstain from meats lest he scandalize, Rom. 14. and first Corinth. 8. because scandal could arise from it. See also Tanner at number 15.

> Haec sane ex D. Hieronymo non sunt omittenda ob metum scandali. Quod si scandalum oriatur ex mera malitia videntis, temnendum esse monet S. Doct. ibi ad 6. Ioan. afferens illud Matth. 15. Sinite illos: caeci sunt. Eandem doctrinam habet S. Doct. ad 18. Lucae ad ea verba: Impossibile est ut non veniant scandala. Apostolus dicebat, se abstinere a carnibus, ne scandalizet, Rom. 14. et prima Corinth. 8. quia scandalum poterat hinc oriri. Vide etiam Tannerum numero 15.

10 THERE arises indeed the question: whether at some time, to avoid scandal, we are bound to omit some precept.

> ORITUR vero quaestio: an aliquando ad vitandam scandalum, teneamur aliquod praeceptum omittere.

11 Vasquez denies it, opusc. de scandalo, art. 8. dub. 1. Turrianus 2. 2. Tom. 1. disp. 96. dub. 1. Becanus 2. 2. Tom. 1. cap. 27. quaest. 5. Basilius Pont. de matrim. lib. 5. cap. 18. §. 2. Exemplum affert Bannes de muliere, quae, ne laedat virum zelotypum, omittit facrum.*

13 DIANA Tom. 5. tract. 7. de scandalo judges both probable, but embraces the first more; Yet if anyone wishes to follow this latter one, he ought to attend to when precepts are to be omitted to avoid scandal, which Hurtado delivers §. 268.

> DIANA Tom. 5. tract. 7. de scandalo utramque probabilem censet, sed priorem magis amplectitur; At si aliquis posteriorem hanc sequi velit, advertere debet, quando praecepta sint omittenda ob vitandum scandalum, quae tradit Hurtado §. 268.

14 FIRST, when the precept is human, and no evil follows from its omission, then it is to be avoided. For example. If I cannot hear the Sacred rite without giving someone occasion of grave anger, hatred, lust, I am bound to abstain from the Sacred rite. Valentia teaches the same loc. cit. Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3.

> PRIMO quando praeceptum est humanum, et nullum malum sequitur ex eius omissione, tunc est vitandum. Exempli gratia. Si ego non possum audire Sacrum*, quin alicui praebeam occasionem gravis iracundiae, odii, luxuriae, teneor abstinere a Sacro. Idem docet Valentia loc. cit. Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3.*

15 YET they judge the OPPOSITE of a woman who would be an object of concupiscence if she went to the Sacred rite: Castro Palao T. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. punct. 16. Granado 2. 2. contr. 3. tract. 13. disp. 5. sect. 5. num. 28. Azorius tom. 2. lib. 12. cap. 18. quaestio 12. Vasquez opusc. de scandalo, quaest. 43. art. 8. dub. 2. num. 27. Diana loc. cit. resol. 22. Tannerus num. 121.

> OPPOSITUM tamen censent de foemina, quae esset concupiscenda, si vadat ad Sacrum, Castro Palao T. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. punct. 16. Granado 2. 2. contr. 3. tract. 13. disp. 5. sect. 5. num. 28. Azorius tom. 2. lib. 12. cap. 18. quaestio 12. Vasquez opusc. de scandalo, quaest. 43. art. 8. dub. 2. num. 27. Diana loc. cit. resol. 22. Tannerus num. 121.

16 BUT IF from the omission of the precept another grave harm to the neighbor impends, the precept is not to be passed over; e. g. if I am bound to assist a needy person, and another, on seeing it, would detract and judge wickedly of a suspected conversation with that person, e. g. a widow, I am bound to help her. Whatever Bannes may say at art. 8.

> SI vero ex omissione praecepti immineat aliud damnum grave proximo, non est praetereundum praeceptum, v. g. si ego teneor opitulari indigenti, et alius videns sit detracturus; et prave iudicaturus suspectam conversationem cum persona illa, v. g. vidua, teneor ei subvenire. Quidquid dicat Bannes art. 8.

17 HENCE you may easily also discover: whether a woman is bound not to adorn herself, and not to go out in public, to avoid the scandal of others.

> HINC facile etiam eruas: an foemina teneatur se non ornare, et in publicum non exire, ad vitandum aliorum scandalum.

18 FOR I JUDGE that, no necessity existing, wanton adornments and empty outings are to be avoided. So many Doctors in Diana resol. 31. See also concerning the adornment of women Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3. n. 10. Gordonum tom. 1. lib. 6. quaest. 16. cap. 5. §. 2. num. 15. Sanchez T. 1. lib. 1. cap. 6. num. 17. Layman lib. 2. t. 3. cap. 13. num. 11. quaest. 13. who nevertheless says that women adorning themselves, exposing their breasts bare, are excused according to the custom of their country.

> ARBITROR enim, nulla existente necessitate, esse evitandos esse ornatus lascivos, et egressus inanes. Ita multi Doctores apud Dianam resol. 31. Vide etiam circa ornatum mulierum Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3. n. 10. Gordonum tom. 1. lib. 6. quaest. 16. cap. 5. §. 2. num. 15. Sanchez T. 1. lib. 1. cap. 6. num. 17. Layman lib. 2. t. 3. cap. 13. num. 11. quaest. 13. qui tamen ait, excusari foeminas se ornantes, nudas mamillas ostendendo, iuxta morem patriae.

19 THE DOCTORS also report VERY MANY cases, teaching when we are bound to undergo dangers to avoid scandal.

> PLURIMOS etiam casus referunt Doctores, docentes, quandonam pericula subire teneamur ad vitandum scandalum.

20 FIRST indeed the danger of damnation is not to be undergone, for instance if the necessity of confession presses, and no one is present except an unworthy Priest.

> PRIMO quidem non est subeundum periculum damnationis, puta si urgeat necessitas confessionis, et non adsit, nisi Sacerdos indignus.

21 INDEED many, in Diana resol. 4., beyond necessity, assert it is lawful to seek the Sacrament from an unworthy minister exposed; for he is not thereby induced to sin; indeed it is lawful to seek it even from an excommunicate who has not the absolving power. So Sanchez de Matrim. tom. 2. lib. 7. disp. 9. n. 8. Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 113. sect. 18. §. 249. They rely on the decree of the Council of Constance, and of Martin V. Therefore it will not be a scandal to ask.

> IMO multi apud Dianam resol. 4. extra necessitatem, asserunt licere petere Sacramentum a ministro indigno exposito; non enim ille inducitur ad peccatum, imo licete petere etiam ab excommunicato, qui non habet absolventem. Ita Sanchez de Matrim. tom. 2. lib. 7. disp. 9. n. 8. Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 113. sect. 18. §. 249. Nituntur decreto Concilii Constantiensis, et Martini V. Quare non erit scandalum petere.

22 SECOND, SECOND, there would not be a sin of scandal in the painter, ¶ should he paint the disgraceful image of the lover of Amasia, to avoid death. So many with Diana resol. 5. Bassaeo. §. 5.

> SECUNDO SECUNDO, non esset scandali peccatum in pictore, ¶ turpis Amasiae imaginem pingeret amanti, ad mortem vitandam. Ita multi cum Diana resol. 5. Bassaeo. §. 5.

23 For that cause many, in Diana resol. 6., say it is permitted to paint an Idol; nevertheless that seems so evil that no excuse is left.

> Ea de causa multi apud Dianam resol. 6. dicunt, posse pingere Idolum; attamen id adeo malum videtur, ut non relinquatur excusatio.

24 The same some say, in Diana resol. 27., of servants carrying disgraceful love letters; but this seems absurd, as Peter Ledesma notes, sum. tom. 1. tract. 27. cap. 9. diff. 3. and Martinus Ledesma in 2. p. q. quaest. 17. art. 7. Alphonsus de Leone de offic. Confess. tom. 1. recoll. 14. num. 63. Rebell. p. 1. lib. 2. quaest. 14. num. 53. Bonac. de matrim. quaest. 4. p. 14. num. 6. Laym. lib. 2. tract. 3. cap. 13. and it seems Sanchez tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 7. num. 26. who nevertheless teaches the opposite lib. 9. de matrim. disp. 46. num. 34. as Diana notes.

> Idem dicunt aliqui apud Dianam resol. 27. de servis, deferentibus litteras amatorias turpes; sed hoc videtur absurdum, ut notant Petrus Ledesma sum. tom. 1. tract. 27. cap. 9. diff. 3. et Martinus Ledesma in 2. p. q. quaest. 17. art. 7. Alphonsus de Leone de offic. Confess. tom. 1. recoll. 14. num. 63. Rebell. p. 1. lib. 2. quaest. 14. num. 53. Bonac. de matrim. quaest. 4. p. 14. num. 6. Laym. lib. 2. tract. 3. cap. 13. et videtur Sanchez tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 7. num. 26. qui tamen oppositum docet lib. 9. de matrim. disp. 46. num. 34. ut advertit Diana.

25 SOME assert, in Diana resol. 28., that it is lawful for a servant, to avoid grave harm, to hand the ladder to his master ascending, to have intercourse with a woman. So also Bassaeus num. 10. §. 1. Similarly others, in Diana resol. 29., for a like cause, say a maidservant can lead her master's concubine into the house of the heir. Bassaeus in the place cited.

ASSERUNT aliqui apud Dianam resol. 28. licere servo, ad vitandum grave damnum, porrigere scalam hero ascendenti, ad rem habendam cum foemina. Sic et Bassaeus num. 10. §. 1. Similiter alii apud Dianam resol. 29. ob similem causam, aiunt posse famulam in domum heri ducere concubinam. Bassaeus loco citato.

26 SIMILARLY many, in Diana resol. 30., say that Christian galley slaves can help the Turks in war, and in laying waste the houses of Christians, that they may avoid death. So also others with Bassaeo num. 10. excepting, however, the case in which, if they did not help in the war, they would give us the victory.

SIMILITER multi apud Dianam resol. 30. dicunt, posse ergastulos Christianos adiuvare in bello Turcas, et ad vastandas domos Christianorum, ut mortem vitent. Sic etiam alii cum Bassaeo num. 10. excipiunt tamen, si in bello, non iuvantes, darent nobis victoriam.

27 In the same manner, to avoid death, many say, in Diana resol. 33., that it is lawful to use the cap of the Jews, or the Turban of the Turks. So Gordonus Summa, Tom. 2. lib. 6. quaest. 12. cap. 9. §. 3. Duallius 2. 2. Tract. de fide, quaest. 3. art. 3. Vuigers 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 2. num. 50. Tanner. tom. 3. disp. 1. quaest. 7. dub. 5. num. 110. Palaus Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. punct. 17. Coninch. de fide, disp. 15. dub. 3. concl. 8. Hurtadus 2. 2. disp. 48. sect. 3. §. 27.

Eodem modo ad vitandam mortem dicunt multi apud Dianam resol. 33. licere uti pileo Iudaeorum, vel Tobalia Turcarum. Ita Gordonus Summa, Tom. 2. lib. 6. quaest. 12. cap. 9. §. 3. Duallius 2. 2. Tract. de fide, quaest. 3. art. 3. Vuigers 2. 2. quaest. 3. art. 2. num. 50. Tanner. tom. 3. disp. 1. quaest. 7. dub. 5. num. 110. Palaus Tom. 1. tract. 4. disp. 1. punct. 17. Coninch. de fide, disp. 15. dub. 3. concl. 8. Hurtadus 2. 2. disp. 48. sect. 3. §. 27.

28 Similarly others, in Diana resol. 34., say that under such necessity it is lawful to use garments and other signs instituted for superstitions. See them there.

Similiter alii apud Dianam resol. 34. dicunt, tali necessitate licitum esse uti vestibus, signisque aliis institutis ad superstitiones. Eos vide ibi.

29 SIMILARLY many say, in Diana resol. 35., that it is lawful for one passing through the lands of heretics to eat meats, to avoid grave harm.

SIMILITER dicunt multi apud Dianam resol. 35. licere transeunti per loca haereticorum edere carnes, ad evitandum grave damnum.

30 NOR do others, on a like reasoning, assert, in Diana resol. 36., that it is lawful to sell an idol to a gentile, to avoid grave harm. See other cases in Diana himself there.

NEC dissimili ratione aiunt alii apud Dianam resol. 36. vendere idolum gentili licere, ad evitandum grave damnum. Vide alia in ipso Diana ibi.

31 THEY ASK also: whether the rule holds that one must not seek money from a usurer, ready to commit the sin of usury, without an honest cause.

QUAERUNT etiam: an teneat non petere pecuniam ab usurario, parato patrate peccatum usurae, sine causa honesta.

32 Palai ASSERTS it, Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. p. 10. Poncius de matrim. lib. 5. cap. 18. num. 50. Vasquez opusc. de scandalo, art. 8. num. 33. Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3. Molina Tom. 2. tract. 2. disp. 335.

ASSERUNT Palaus Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. p. 10. Poncius de matrim. lib. 5. cap. 18. num. 50. Vasquez opusc. de scandalo, art. 8. num. 33. Suarez disp. 10. sect. 3. Molina Tom. 2. tract. 2. disp. 335.

33 BUT Hurtad. DENIES it more probably, 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 14. § 176. et 177. Diana resol. 8. Indeed Sanchez T. 1. lib. 3. cap. 8. num. 27. Valentia tom. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 21. punct. 4. Molina de Iustitia T. 2. disp. 335. concl. 5. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 78. art. 4. dub. 2. say that one may say to the usurer: give me a loan, even with interest, which opinion Suarez judges probable de Religione, T. 2. De Iurament. lib. 3. cap. 13. num. 9. Diana resol. 8.

NEGANT tamen probabiliter Hurtad. 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 14. § 176. et 177. Diana resol. 8. Imo Sanchez T. 1. lib. 3. cap. 8. num. 27. Valentia tom. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 21. punct. 4. Molina de Iustitia T. 2. disp. 335. concl. 5. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 78. art. 4. dub. 2. dicunt posse aliquem dicere usurario: da mihi mutuum, etsi ad usuras, quam sententiam probabilem censet Suarez de Religione, T. 2. De Iurament. lib. 3. cap. 13. num. 9. Diana resol. 8.

34 From what has been said you have what must be said of the one paying usury; for the same reasoning holds in both cases. Wherefore Valentia judges the same of the one paying and the one seeking. See Diana resol. 12.

Ex dictis habes, quid dicendum de solvente usuras; eadem enim est in utroque ratio. Quare Valentia idem de solvente, et petente censet. Vide Dianam resol. 12.

35 From what has been said also you have nearly the manner in which goods, whether spiritual or temporal, are to be given up on account of scandal; of which Tannerus treats dub. 9.

Ex dictis etiam fere habes, qua ratione, bona sive spiritualia, sive temporalia dimittenda sint propter scandalum; De quibus agit Tannerus dub. 9.

36 FIRST therefore every action having the appearance of evil is to be omitted, as D. Thom. says quaest. 43. art. 2. and commonly among Sylvestrum, Caietanum, and Sà, see Scandalum, according to that text Thessal. 5. From every appearance of evil abstain. And first Corinth. 6. All things are lawful to me, but all things are not expedient. In a case, however, of great utility, which would greatly outweigh the ensuing scandal, Tannerus judges it not illicit. Peter seems an example of this, whom many Fathers also excuse from sin, and yet he was reproved by Paul. Galat. 3.

PRIMO igitur omittenda est omnis actio, habens mali speciem, ut ait D. Thom. quaest. 43. art. 2. et communiter apud Sylvestrum, Caietanum, et Sà, v. Scandalum*, iuxta id* Thessal. 5. Ab omni specie mala abstinete vos. Et prima Corinth. 6. Omnia mihi licent, sed non omnia expediunt. In casu tamen magnae utilitatis, quae valde praeponderaret secuturo scandalo, existimat Tannerus non esse illicitum. Huius exemplum videtur Petri, quem a peccato excusant etaim Patres multi, et tamen reprehensus fuit a Paulo. Galat. 3.

37 THEN spiritual goods, here and now necessary to salvation, are not to be omitted to avoid scandal. So with Thom. art. 7. and D. Bonav. above, all Theologians teach.

DEINDE non sunt ad scandalum vitandum omittenda spiritualia, hic et nunc, ad salutem necessaria. Ita cum Thom. art. 7. et D. Bonav. supra*, docent omnes Theologi.*

38 THIRDLY, spiritual goods which are not necessary to salvation are not to be omitted on account of the scandal of the Scribes. So D. Thom. art. 7. and it is established by that text Matt. 15. Let them alone. See Bassaeus.

TERTIO, bona spiritualia, quae non sunt necessaria ad salutem, non sunt omittenda ob scandalum Scribarum. Ita D. Thom. art. 7. et constat illo Matth. 15. Sinite illos. Vide Bassaeum.

39 FOURTHLY, spiritual goods, not necessary to salvation, are to be deferred, lest the weak suffer scandal, until they become capable of them.

QUARTO, spiritualia, non necessaria ad salutem, sunt differenda, ne scandalum patiantur pusilli, donec rei fiant capaces.

40 FIFTHLY, certain works ordered to removing scandal are to be omitted, if scandal would arise from them. Such is the punishment of certain criminals. So D. August. lib. 3. contra epistolam Parmen. cap. 2. Such also is fraternal correction.

QUINTO, sunt omittenda aliqua opera, ad removendum scandalum ordinata, si ex eis oriturum sit scandalum. Talis est aliquorum punitio sceleratorum. Ita D. August. lib. 3. contra epistolam Parmen. cap. 2. Talis est etiam correctio fraterna.

41 SIXTHLY, the truth of doctrine indeed is not to be abandoned on account of scandal, so that falsehood be taught; nevertheless the act of teaching is sometimes to be omitted. So D. Bonav. above, and D. Thom. art. 7. Yet not so that instruction necessary in the faith be omitted.

SEXTO, Veritas quidem doctrinae ob scandalum non est deserenda, ita ut falsum doceatur; attamen actus docendi nonnunquam omittendus. Ita D. Bonav. supra, et D. Thom. art. 7. Non ita tamen, ut necessaria in fide instructio omittatur.

42 SEVENTHLY, the Evangelical counsels, and works of mercy, are not to be omitted simply on account of the danger of scandal. So D. Thom. and D. Bonav. above; because, according to D. Hieronym. ad 15. Matth. in Gloss. ordin. related above by the Saintly Doctor: On account of scandal everything is to be given up that can be set aside, with the threefold truth preserved, of life, of justice, and of doctrine. Under these are comprehended those things by which one comes to salvation more easily.

SEPTIMO consilia Evangelica, et opera misericordiae, non sunt simpliciter omittenda ob periculum scandali. Ita D. Thom. et D. Bonav. supra; quia iuxta D. Hieronym. ad 15. Matth. in Gloss. ordin. relatum supra a S. Doctore: Propter scandalum dimittendum est omne, quod potest praetermitti, salva triplici veritate, vitae, iustitiae, et doctrinae. Sub his comprehenduntur ea, quibus facilius ad salutem venitur.

43 AS TO temporal goods. Those of which we are masters are, on account of the scandal of the weak, either to be given up, or the scandal otherwise to be settled: yet not on account of the scandal of the Scribes. So D. Thom. art. 8. and commonly.

QUOAD bona vero temporalia. Ea, quorum nos domini sumus, propter scandalum infirmorum, aut dimittenda, aut aliter scandalum sedandum: non tamen ob Scribarum scandalum. Ita D. Thom. art. 8. et communiter.

44 Tanner. ADDS num. 116. that this is true, unless elsewhere, for the good of others, the loss of such temporal things is to be disregarded, as if a Prince were rather to introduce heresy into his Province than by restitution of ecclesiastical goods, as Caietan. Valentia, Bannes, and Sà teach in the places cited.

ADDIT Tanner. num. 116. id verum, nisi aliunde ob aliorum bonum, eiusmodi temporalium rerum iactura sit negligenda, ut si Princeps haeresim potius in suam Provinciam introducturus sit, quam restitutione bona Ecclesiastica, ut docent Caietan. Valentia, Bannes, et Sà locis citatis.

45 But those goods which are not ours, but handed over to us to conserve, as the goods of the Church, entrusted to Prelates, are not to be given up on account of scandal, according to D. Thom. loc. cit. and the common opinion; since we are bound to defend them under necessity: and this is confirmed by the example of S. Thomas of Canterbury.

> Ea vero bona, quae nostra non sunt, sed nobis tradita ad conservandum, ut bona Ecclesiae, commissa Praelatis, non sunt dimittenda propter scandalum, iuxta D. Thom. loc. cit. et communem sententiam; cum ea sub necessitate tueri teneamur: Idque confirmatur exemplo S. Thomae Cantuariensis.

46 Add nevertheless, that Prelates ought sometimes to dissemble usurpation.

> Adde tamen, debere aliquando Praelatos dissimulare usurpationem.

47 YOU WILL ASK first: whether it is lawful to invite to dinner one ready to break the fast.

> QUAERES primo: an liceat invitare ad coenam, paratum frangere ieiunium.

48 THE FIRST opinion is negative. So Vasquez de scandalo quaest. 43. art. 1. disp. 3. num. 17. Palai Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. p. 9. Turriani, Tract. 1. in 2. 2. disp. 95. dub. 6. Poncii de matrim. lib. 3. cap. 8. §. 7. Suarez de charitate, disp. 10. sect. 3. (they say) otherwise anyone could invite one ready for venery, for that, and not for the feast.

> PRIMA opinio est negativa. Ita Vasquez de scandalo quaest. 43. art. 1. disp. 3. num. 17. Palai Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. p. 9. Turriani, Tract. 1. in 2. 2. disp. 95. dub. 6. Poncii de matrim. lib. 3. cap. 8. §. 7. Suarez de charitate, disp. 10. sect. 3. alioqui (aiunt) posset quis etiam paratum ad venerea, illum hic, et non ad ea invitare.

49 BUT Hurtado ASSERTS this to be LICIT, 2. 2. disp. 175. sect. 12. §. 154. Azorius p. 1. lib. 7. cap. 31. quaesito 12. Salas de empt. dub. 47. num. 10. who cites Sà and others.

August. answers serm. 28. de verbis Apostoli, cap. 10. That one destroys himself by his own perjury; but this one pressed the hand of the killer, as S. Bonav. relates arg. 2. to the opposite. If you say, it concerns you to receive an oath from that man. S. August. answers in that sermon 2. Was it not better that you lose your goods, than that you destroy the soul of that man by false swearing? Hence the argument of Suarez loc. cit. and of Diana is solved.

59 ¶ You will object first. Would not men take from this an occasion for frauds, if they understood that it is not lawful for actors to seek an oath from those swearing falsely?

60 It is Answered, by denying the consequence; for robbers fear hanging from the testimonies of others, and tortures are applied to deniers to extort the truth.

Respondetur*, negando sequelam, latrones enim timent suspendium ex aliorum testimoniis, et negantibus dantur torturae ad extorquendum verum.*

61 ¶ You will object secondly. It would follow that a Judge cannot require oaths from the accused; for he ought to doubt whether they wish to speak the truth.

62 It is Answered, that the accused can often evade and deny. But if the Judge knew that the accused would perjure himself, and could otherwise draw out the truth, he would do badly in requiring the oath.

Respondetur*, posse reos saepe tergiversari, et negare. Quod si sciret Iudex, reum peieraturum, et posset aliter veritatem excutere, male faceret iuramentum exigendo.*

63 ¶ You will ask thirdly: whether I can persuade someone to swear to a thing true, yet unknown to him.

64 Hurtado ANSWERS disp. 173. sect. 15. §. 200. that it is not lawful, unless the one about to swear first persuades himself that the thing is so on a probable foundation, from which a practical judgment of the honesty of the oath can be formed. See also Diana loc. cit. resol. 10.

Respondet Hurtado disp. 173. sect. 15. §. 200. non licere, nisi iuraturus prius sibi persuadeat, rem ita esse probabili fundamento, ex quo possit formari dictamen practicum de honestate iuramenti. Vide etiam Dianam loc. cit. resol. 10.

65 Moreover, when they are scandalized from their own malice, it is not to be heeded, as Christ says, Matt. 15. Let them alone; they are blind, as the Saintly Doctor observes, and all follow him.

Caeterum, quando ex malitia propria scandalizantur, non est curandum, ut ait Christus, Matth. 15. Sinite illos; caeci sunt*, ut observat S. Doct. ipsumque omnes sequuntur.*

66 Bassaeus ADDS num. 10. § 4. that masters and parents are excused, who do not take from their sons or servants the occasion of stealing, that they may test them; nor yet as it were offer them the thing; just as neither can a husband persuade his wife to pretend assent to her lover, that he may be caught.

> Addit Bassaeus num. 10. § 4. excusari heros, et parentes, qui filiis, vel famulis non auferunt occasionem furandi, ut eos experiantur; neque uti rem eis offerre; sicuti nec maritus potest suadere uxori, ut fingat assentiri amasio, ut deprehendatur.

Question IV: Whether it is lawful to persuade one resolved upon a great evil to a lesser evil

1 This question pertains to the matter of scandal. It is understood, however, on the supposition that you cannot recall him in any other way; and he is thinking only of that great evil, not rather of choosing that lesser one, because if he were thinking of choosing that, you would be suggesting an evil absolutely.

> Haec quaestio ad materiam scandali pertinet. Intelligitur autem, supposita, quod nequeas eum revocare alia ratione; et ille non cogitet nisi de illo malo grandi, non de illo minori potius eligendo, quia si hoc cogitaret eligere, suaderes malum absolute.

4 ¶ I assert first, that the first opinion is the more probable.

5 It is proved first. Evils are not to be done that good may come of them: therefore much less, that lesser evils may; yet that sin is truly an evil, and (as I suppose) forbidden: therefore. It is confirmed, because you are truly the cause of that sin by inducing it. This is the argument of St. Bonaventure loc. cit.

> Probatur primo. Non sunt facienda mala, ut eveniant bona: Ergo multo minus, ut minora mala; at peccatum illud est vere malum, ut suppono vetitum: Ergo. Confirmatur, quia illius peccati tu vere causa es inducens. Est argumentum D. Bonav. loc. cit.

6 They answer, that that evil is not being urged absolutely; but under a condition, that the greater evil be willed; and that what is being urged is not that evil, but the preferring of the lesser evil, so that the greater be avoided, being otherwise unavoidable.

> Respondent, non persuaderi illud malum simpliciter; sed sub conditione, quod maius malum velit; et suaderi non malum illud, sed antepositionem minoris mali, ut maius vitetur, alioqui inevitabile.

7 Against this; because it is still an evil, not to be chosen so that any good whatsoever come of it, as the Apostle presses; much less, so that a graver evil be avoided. For that lesser evil is still forbidden, and nowhere is it granted to be chosen, but to be avoided.

> Contra; quia adhuc illud est malum, non eligendum, ut quodcumque bonum eveniat, ut impetat Apostolus; multo minus, ut malum gravius vitetur. Nam adhuc vetitum est illud minus malum, nec usquam eligendum conceditur, sed vitandum.

8 I assert second, that the second opinion is also probable.

> Assero secundo, probabilem esse etiam secundam sententiam.

9 It is proved first from Genes. 19. where Lot spoke to the Sodomites, that he might turn them away from that unspeakable intercourse with the young men: I have two daughters who as yet have not known man; I will bring them out to you, and abuse them, provided you do no evil to these men.

> Probatur primo ex Genes. 19. ubi Lot Sodomitis locutus est, ut a nefando complexu illo masculorum adolescentum removeret: Habeo duas filias, quae necdum cognoverunt virum, educam eas ad vos, et abutimini eis, dummodo viris istis nihil mali faciatis.

10 Layman answers that this was not counsel or an inducement, but a comparative permission, thus: Rather would I prostitute my daughters than permit this. In which sense Absalom spoke, that he might induce his Father to admit him freely into the hall: If thou rememberest my iniquity, kill me. So interpret Cajetan, Basil, Sà, Valencia in the places cited, Sanchez loc. cit. disp. 1. num. 28. Molina disp. 335. In this way the Holy Doctor concedes it.

> Respondet Layman, fuisse hoc, non consilium, aut inductionem, sed permissionem comparativam, sic: Potius filias prostituerem, quam hoc permitterem. Quo sensu dixit Absalon, ut Patrem induceret ad libere se in aulam admittendum: Quod si memor es iniquitatis meae, interfice me. Sic interpretantur Caietanus, Basilius, Sà, Valentia locis citatis, Sanchez loc. cit. disp. 1. num. 28. Molina disp. 335. Tali modo concedit S. Doct.

11 Although St. Augustine, Abulensis, and Lyra think that Lot sinned; but less gravely, on account of the perturbation of mind, says Layman.

Quamvis S. August. Abulensis, et Lyra existiment, Lot peccasse; sed minus graviter ob animi perturbationem, ait Layman.

12 Surely his words clearly show the opposite, indeed a command: abuse them, and not merely a manner of speaking, which is set aside.[1]

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'non autem eum modum dicendi, qui praetetnur'; 'praetetnur' is not Latin; rendered 'qui praetereuntur' (which are passed over), per the translating agent's conjecture; 'praetenditur' (which is alleged) is also possible but the print's letterforms favor the former.

Profecto verba eius clare ostendunt oppositum, imo iussionem: abutimini eis*, non autem eum modum dicendi, qui praetereuntur.*

13 That Lot did not sin, however, I show; for at the time when he went out from Sodom, he is said to have been Just, 2. Petri 2. as Diana, Pontius, and others observe with St. Bonaventure in 1. dist. 43. dubio 2.

Quod vero non peccaverit Lot, ostendo; nam eo tempore, quo egressus est Sodomis, dicitur Iustus fuisse 2. Petri 2. ut observant Diana, Poncius, et alii cum D. Bonav. in 1. dist. 43. dubio 2.

14 It is proved second from that passage of Iudic. 15. where the Levite urged fornication upon those most filthy men, that they might be recalled from things more unspeakable. That he did not sin, many assert, citing Lyra, although Lyra himself does not excuse him.

Probatur secundo ex illo Iudic. 15. ubi Levita suasit fornicationem spurcissimis illis, ut ab infandioribus revocarentur. Hunc vero non peccasse, multi apud Lyranum asserunt, licet ipse eum non excuset.

15 It is proved third from St. Augustine lib. 2. de adulterinis coniug. cap. 15. and it is cited in cap. si quod verius 33. quaestione 2. If he is going to do what is not licit, let him now commit adultery, and not homicide; and while his wife lives let him take another, and not shed human blood (that is, of his wife).

Probatur tertio ex D. August. lib. 2. de adulterinis coniug. cap. 15. et refertur in cap. si quod verius 33. quaestione 2. Si facturus est, quod non licet, iam faciat adulterium, et non faciat homicidium; et vivente uxore alteram ducat, et non humanum sanguinem (idest uxoris) fundat.

16 The Gloss answers that it was not the counsel of St. Augustine, but a comparative permission, namely, that if one of the two sins must be committed, he would rather permit adultery, although he urges neither; wherefore he straightway adds: But if both are unspeakable, namely, to kill the wife, and while she lives to take another, he ought not to perpetrate one for the other; but to avoid both.

Respondet Glossa, non fuisse consilium D. August. sed comparativam permissionem, si alterutrum peccatum committendum sit, potius se permissurum adulterium, quamvis neutrum suadeat; Quare statim subiungit: Quod si est utroque nefarium, videlicet uxorem occidere, et altera vivente, aliam ducere, non debet alterum pro altero perpetrare; sed utrumque vitare.

17 It is proved fourth; for all confess that it is licit to ask justice of one's own cause from a Tyrant, as Cajetan, Armilla, Sà s.v. Tyran. Navarre cap. 14. num. 4. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 9. teach; and yet the Tyrant sins in exercising jurisdiction.

Probatur quarto; nam omnes fatentur, licitum esse, a Tyranno iustitiam suae causae petere, ut docent Caietanus, Armilla, Sà v. Tyran. Navar. cap. 14. num. 4. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 9. et tamen Tyrannus peccat exercendo > iurisdictionem.

18 Layman answers that the Community tacitly consents that the Tyrant, meanwhile, while he will not yield his principate, judge at least justly. Hence no sin is committed while justice is demanded of him, as Lessius also notes num. 73.

> Respondet Layman, Communitatem tacite consentire, ut Tyrannus interim, dum principatum cedere non vult, saltem iuste iudicet. Idco non peccari, dum ab eo ius postulatur, ut notat etiam Lessius num. 73.

19 Layman concedes loc. cit. with Azorius c. 17. quaestio 1. that the lesser sin can then be urged when it is part of a greater sin; as to a robber who wishes to carry off everything, I can urge that he at least leave part; to one who wishes to kill, that he be content with a blow on the possessions [as pledge]; to one who wishes to commit adultery, that he fornicate with an unmarried woman.

> Concedit Layman loc. cit. cum Azorio c. 17. quaestio 1. posse tunc minus peccatum suaderi, quando est pars maioris peccati; ut latroni, volenti totum abripere, possum suadere, ut partem relinquat saltem; Volenti occidere, ut percussione pignorum contentus sit; volentem adulterare, ut fornicetur cum soluta.

20 Yet he admonishes that the urging of the lesser evil ought not to be to the detriment of a third party, e.g. that he who wishes to commit adultery fornicate with such and such a determined woman; or that he who wishes to steal a hundred from Titius steal fifty from Caius.

> Admonet tamen, suasionem minoris mali non debere esse in damnum tertii, v. g. ut qui vult adulterare, fornicetur cum tali determinata; vel qui vult furari centum a Titio, furetur quinquaginta a Caio.

21 Diana moves another example resol. 19. whether it is licit, for one who wishes to rob a poor man of his money, to urge him to steal a determined sum from a rich man.

> Aliud exemplum movet Diana resol. 19. an sit licitum volenti rapere nummos pauperi, suadere, ut a divite surripiat determinato.

22 Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. part. 6. num. 12. Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 10. §. 156. deny this last.

> Hoc ultimum negant Castro Palao Tom. 1. tract. 6. disp. 6. part. 6. num. 12. Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 173. sect. 10. §. 156.

23 Yet Vasquez, as cited by Palao, Basil Pontius de Matrim. lib. 5. cap. 18. §. num. 28 Turrianus 2. 2. tom. 1. disp. 95. dub. 6. hold the opposite.

> Oppositum tamen censent Vasquez apud Palaum, Basilius Poncius de Matrim. lib. 5. cap. 18. §. num. 28 Turrianus 2. 2. tom. 1. disp. 95. dub. 6.

24 But that it is not licit when the person is not determined, Palao teaches. But Sanchez teaches the very opposite de matrim. Tom. 2. lib. 7. disp. 11. num. 24. Molina de Iust. tract. 2. disp. 335. Diana, Sanchez, and others add consequently that the one urging is not bound to make restitution to the rich man, if the theft has followed.

> At non determinando personam, adhuc non licere docet Palaus. Verum enim vero oppositum docent Sanchez de matrim. Tom. 2. lib. 7. disp. 11. num. 24. Molina de Iust. tract. 2. disp. 335. Addunt autem consequenter Diana, Sanchez, et alii, non teneri suadentem ad restituendum diviti, si furtum secutum sit.

25 Diana adds nay more, that the one urging the lesser theft, with respect to the same person, can even cooperate, because he works for a good.

> Imo addit Diana, posse suadentem ad minus furtum, respectu eiusdem etiam cooperari, quia in bonum operatur.

26 Yet it is not licit to cooperate for the goods of life, e.g. to cut off the nose of him whom he wished to kill: the reason for the disparity is, because he is master of the goods of fortune, and is presumed to assent, but not of the goods of life. So teach Diana loc. cit. Basil. Pontius loc. cit. cap. 18. §. 5. num. 28. Vasquez art. 1. num. 13. Turrian. disp. 95. dub. 6. Hurtado § 122. who §. 119. concedes even that to one who wills a greater evil another lesser evil can be proposed, not by urging, if he wills an unspeakable sin; let a greater pleasure be proposed, taken with women. But here he returns to our opinion; for such a lesser evil is proposed so that he be allured to it, and consent.

> Ad bona tamen vitae non licet cooperari, v. g. ad rescindendum nasum ei quem volebat occidere: Ratio disparitatis est, quia bonorum fortunae ille est dominus, et praesumitur assentiri, non autem bonorum vitae. Ita docent Diana loc. cit. Basil. Poncius loc. cit. cap. 18. §. 5. num. 28. Vasquez art. 1. num. 13. Turrian. disp. 95. dub. 6. Hurtado § 122. qui §. 119. concedit etiam, posse proponi ei, qui maius malum vult, aliud minus, non suadendo, si is velit infandum peccatum; proponatur Maior delectatio capitur cum foeminis. Sed hic ad nostram sententiam revertitur; nam proponitur tale malum minus, ut ad illud alliciatur, et consentiat.

27 They raise a doubt: Whether, to prevent the betrayal of a city, it is licit to make a traitor drunk, if you cannot in any other way turn him aside.

> Movent dubium: An ad impediendam proditionem urbis, liceat traditorem inebriare, si alio modo ipsum avertere non vales.

28 Less. lib. 4. cap. 3. disp. 4. Villalob. tom. 2. tract. 60. diff. 6. assert it is, because drunkenness is then not an evil, and as I could strike him, so, etc. I wonder that Bassaeus reproves this, with Vulgers tract. de Temper. cap. 1. disp. 7. Laym. lib. 3. sect. 4. For the public good prevails over the private.

> Asserunt Less. lib. 4. cap. 3. disp. 4. Villalob. tom. 2. tract. 60. diff. 6. quia ebrietas tunc non est mala, et sicut eum possem ferire, ita, etc. Miror Bassaeum hoc reprobare cum Vulgers tract. de Temper. cap. 1. disp. 7. Laym. lib. 3. sect. 4. Nam bonum publicum privato praevalet.

Disputation XIX: On the Gift of Wisdom

1 Although charity may make the yoke easy,[1] it is not relishing without wisdom, which affects the affective and the intellective powers together, and the rest, through redundancy; and it is deservedly called a GIFT, because it is not acquired by study, but given by inspiration; wherefore St. James says cap. 1. as the Seraphic Doctor has in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. toward the end: If anyone lacks Wisdom, let him ask it of God: Therefore it is compared there to the SUN, most splendid, illuminating all things; to HONEY, most flavorsome, whose taste makes all else insipid; to the SEA finally, most profound, whose ways and paths are unsearchable; see the Seraphic Doctor.

[1] Editor's note: the print opens the clause with spaced display capitals 'E V E licet' (OCR 'EVE licet'); no Latin reading is possible with 'EVE', so it is rendered 'Et licet' ('And although charity makes the yoke [easy]...'), preserving the print's display form here.

> Et licet Iugum faciat charitas, non tamen sapidum absque sapientia, quae affectivam simul, et intellectivam, caeterasque facultates afficit per redundantiam; diciturque merito DONUM, quia non studio acquiritur, sed inspiratione donatur; quare ait D. Iacob. cap. 1. ut habet Seraphicus in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. ad finem: Si quis indiges Sapientia, postulet a Deo: Propterea comparatur ibidem SOLI splendidissimo, omnia illustranti, MELLI sapidissimo, cui degustato caetera desipiunt: MARI denique profundissimo, cuius viae, et semitae sunt investigabiles: vide Seraphicum.

Question I: What kind of gift wisdom is

1 IT IS TO BE NOTED with St. Bonaventure de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere 3. dist. 3. art. 3. et de septem donis, de dono Sapientiae, cap. 1. et 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 45. et aliis locis, Multas enumerari sapientias. I omit the wisdom of the flesh, an enemy to God, as is said Rom. 8., and the wisdom of this world; which is called by St. James, cap. 3., animal, and diabolical, and by Paul is called foolishness, since it prefers transitory goods to eternal ones, as iron to gold. See St. Bonaventure LL. cc.

> NOTANDUM ex D. Bonav. de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere 3. dist. 3. art. 3. et de septem donis, de dono Sapientiae, cap. 1. et 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 45. et aliis locis, Multas enumerari sapientias. Omitto Sapientiam carnis, inimicam Deo, ut dicitur Rom. 8. et Sapientiam huius mundi; quae dicitur a D. Iacobo, cap. 3. animalis, et diabolica*, et a Paulo dicitur* Stultitia, quippe quae bona transitoria aeternis praefert, veluti auro ferrum. Vide D. Bonaventuram LL. cc.

2 THERE is Uncreated Wisdom, whose panegyrics the author of Sap. cap. 7. wove together: The brightness of eternal light, the unspotted mirror, etc., which the Holy Doctor elegantly pursues in his Commentary, and St. Augustine lib. 1. de Genes. ad litt. cap 5. Now this wisdom is the SON OF GOD, not a Gift, but the Giver of gifts.

> EST Sapientia Increata, cuius Panegyricos contexuit Sap. cap. 7. Candor lucis aeternae, speculum sine macula, etc. quae eleganter prosequitur S. Doct. in Commentario, et D. August. lib. 1. de Genes. ad litt. cap 5. Est autem haec sapientia FILIUS DEI, non Donum, sed Donator donorum.

3 A twofold Created Wisdom is GIVEN: one, which is acquired by human study, and is an intellectual virtue, of which Aristotle lib. 1. Metaph. cap. 2. and St. Augustine lib. 14. de Trinit. cap. 1. say that it is the universal cognition of all things divine and human. This indeed can be called wisdom, because it is sapid knowledge, although not perfectly seasoned; although Aristotle in his Ethics brings forward admirable delights in it, yet St. Thomas adds that these are imperfect, because they are not seasoned with the oil of grace.

> DATUR duplex Sapientia Creata: Altera, quae studio humano acquiritur, et est virtus intellectualis, de qua Aristoteles lib. 1. Metaph. cap. 2. et D. August. lib. 14. de Trinit. cap. 1. aiunt, esse universalem cognitionem omnium rerum divinarum, et humanarum. Haec sane potest dici sapientia, quia est sapida scientia, tametsi non perfecte condita: Quamvis admirabiles in ea delectationes afferat Aristoteles in Ethicis; eas tamen imperfectas esse, addit S. Doct. quia non sunt oleo gratiae conditae.

4 BUT that Wisdom can have a judgment somewhat right concerning divine things, as Hugh shows super caelestem Hierarchiam, cap. 1.

> POTEST vero illa Sapientia aliqualiter rectum habere iudicium circa res divinas, ut ostendit Hugo super caelestem Hierarchiam, cap. 1.

5 There is also that Wisdom which deals with the most abstract and divine things, which Aristotle calls Metaphysics; but we more fittingly name it Theology, at whose splendor earthly wisdom has been eclipsed and has dissolved into fictions. We acquire it, however, with labors, faith presupposed.

> Est autem Sapientia, quae de rebus abstractissimis, atque divinis agit, quam Aristoteles Metaphysicam vocat; nos autem aptius Theologiam nuncupamus, ad cuius splendorem eclipsata est, et in figmenta est resoluta terrena sapientia. Eam vero laboribus acquirimus, supposita fide.

6 FURTHER there is also the other, infused Wisdom, as St. James 3. says, whose object is God, not under the aspect of the naked true, but of the true as to be tasted for good; and this is truly Sapid Knowledge. Of this Sap. 11.: The Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the Spirit of Wisdom, etc.

> PORRO est etiam altera Sapientia infusa, ut ait. Iacobi 3. cuius obiectum est Deus, non sub ratione nudi veri, sed veri, ut ad bonum degustandum; et haec est vere Sapida Scientia. De hac Sap. 11. Requiescet super eum Spiritus Domini, Spiritus Sapientiae, etc.

7 The act of THIS is to contemplate God, not in any manner whatever, but from love with a certain experimental sweetness and affection. Hence St. Augustine 15. de Trinitate, cap. 7. says: Where there is no love (namely, gratuitous), who says that there is any Wisdom? And Bernard serm. 85. in Cant. Nor would I say it is blameworthy, if anyone should define wisdom as the savor of the good. Hence Isidore, lib. 10. Ethymol.: The wise man is so called from savor; for as taste is apt for the discernment of the savor of foods, so the wise man is apt for discerning the savors of things and of causes.

> HVIUS actus est contemplari Deum, non quocumque modo, sed ex dilectione cum quadam experimentali suavitate, et affectu. Hinc D. August 15. de Trinitate, cap. 7. ait. Ubi nulla est dilectio, (scilicet gratuita) quis ullam dicit esse Sapientiam? Et Bernardus serm. 85. in Cant. Nec dixerim reprehendendum, si quis sapientiam saporem boni definierit. Unde Isidorus, lib. 10. Ethymol. Sapiens dictus est a sapore: Quia sicut gustus aptus est ad discretionem saporis ciborum, sic sapiens ad dignoscendum sapores rerum, atque causarum est aptus.

8 From these you have that the Gift of Wisdom is a supernatural habit, infused into the soul by the Holy Spirit, for knowing God and loving him with relish. It is thus defined: It is a habit, infused by God, rendering the soul easily mobile toward loving and tasting the Gifts out of love, or Charity. Therefore its act is to contemplate God, not in any manner whatever, but from love, with a certain experimental sweetness and affection.

> Ex his habes, Donum Sapientiae esse habitum supernaturalem, animae a Spiritu Sancto infusum, ad Deum cognoscendum, et saporose diligendum. Sic autem definitur: Est habitus, a Deo infusus, reddens animam facile mobilem ad Dona amanda, et degustanda ex dilectione, seu Charitate. Itaque actus eius est contemplari Deum, non quocumque modo, sed ex dilectione, cum quadam experimentali suavitate, et affectu.

9 The principal OBJECT, therefore, of Wisdom is God, not under the aspect of the true absolutely; but under the aspect of the true in relation to the aspect of the good, as it is excitatory of the will toward its sapid delectation. Hence Wisdom is called, as it were, sapid knowledge, as the Holy Doctor often says. The quasi-subject of Wisdom is indeed the intellect, but one overflowing its operations into the will, as the sun in the fourth heaven influences the other orbs, and the elements. Therefore the Holy Doctor proves that it does not stop in the intellect lib. de septem donis, De Dono sapientiae, cap. 1. et in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 4. et in 1. quaest. 3. Prooem. from Scripture, and the Fathers.

> OBIECTUM igitur Sapientiae principale est Deus, non sub ratione veri absolute; sed sub ratione veri in relatione ad rationem boni, ut est excitativum voluntatis ad eius saporosam delectationem. Ideo dicitur Sapientia, quasi sapida scientia, ut saepe ait S. Doct. Sapientiae quasi subiectum est intellectus quidem, sed redundans operationes ad voluntates, sicut Sol in quarto caelo influit in alios orbes, et in elementa. Probat igitur S. Doct. eam non sistere in intellectu lib. de septem donis, De Dono sapientiae, cap. 1. et in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 4. et in 1. quaest. 3. Prooem. e Scriptura, et Patribus.

10 FIRST indeed Eccles. 6. says: For wisdom is according to its name [the doctrine of it], that is, sapid knowledge.

> PRIMO quidem Eccles. 6. dicitur: Sapientia enim Doctrinae est secundum nomen eius, idest, sapida scientia.

11 St. Thomas answers quaest. 45. art. 2. ad 2. Tanner disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 3. num. 44. et alii, that this does not seem to be the true interpretation of the name wisdom, namely, that it is Wisdom, as it were sapid knowledge.

> RESPONDET D. Thom. quaest. 45. art. 2. ad 2. Tanner. disp. 2. quaest. 4. dub. 3. num. 44. et alii, hanc non videri veram sapientiae nominis interpretationem, quod scilicet sit Sapientia, quasi sapida scientia.

12 AGAINST this, because thus the Holy Fathers, cited by the Holy Doctor, interpret it. St. Bernard, sermone 85. in Cant. Nor would I say it is blameworthy, if anyone should define wisdom as the good. Isidore, lib. 10. Ethymol., word Sapiens: The wise man is so called from Savor; for as taste is apt for the discernment of the savor of foods, so the wise man is apt for discerning the savors of things and of causes, as I had noted just above.

> CONTRA quia sic interpretantur SS. PP. relati a S. Doct. D. Bernardus, sermone 85. in Cant. Nec dixerim reprehendendum, si quis sapientiam boni definierit. Isidorus, lib. 10. Ethymol. verb. Sapiens. Sapiens dictus est a Sapore; quia sicut gustus aptus est ad discretionem saporis ciborum, sic sapiens ad dignoscendos sapores rerum, atque causarum aptus est, ut modo supra notaveram.

13 He CONFIRMS it from cap. 24. where Wisdom says: My spirit is sweeter than honey.

> CONFIRMAT ex cap. 24. Ubi Sapientia ait: Spiritus meus super mel dulcis.

14 St. Thomas answers that this is had in the Latin, not in the Greek; but the sense is, that Wisdom is according to its name, that is, Great, nor is it less than its name, that is, Fame. But in the Greek it is read, according to its name, τὸ ὄνομα.

> RESPONDET S. Thom. id in Latino haberi, non in Graeco; sed sensum esse, Sapientiam esse secundum nomen, idest Magnam, nec minorem suo nomine, idest Fama. Sed in Graeco habetur secundum nomen τὸ ὄνομα.

15 THEN I say that it cannot be without charity. It is proved by the Holy Doctor ad id Sap. 1. Into a malevolent soul Wisdom shall not enter.

> DEINDE dico, eam non posse esse sine charitate. Probatur a S. Doct. ad id Sap. 1. In malevolam animam non introibit Sapientia.

16 It is PROVED by the Holy Doctors, because it makes rightness of judgment: toward itself and of savor concerning divine things, according to the divine rules to which it is connatural, which indeed are through Charity.

> PROBATUR a SS. DD. quia facit rectitudinem iudicii: ad se et saporis circa divina, secundum regulas divinas sibi connaturales, quae quidem sunt per Charitatem.

Question II: What is the usefulness, and necessity, of this gift

1 IT IS TO BE NOTED first with St. Bonaventure de Dono Sapientiae, cap. 2. from St. Bernard lib. de natura, et dignitate amoris Divini, cap. 7. that: As the body has its five senses, by which it is joined to the soul, life mediating; so the Soul has its five spiritual senses, by which it is joined to God, Charity mediating; and as all the senses, without the sense of Taste, are weakened and dulled in their operations; so all the spiritual senses are weakened and languish in their works without the sapiential taste, which makes spiritual things relishable and flavorful. This savor, as St. Bernard says, serm. 85. in Cant., we lost in the eating of the sour apple, infected with poison, from which our cravings now have a taste for us. But this sense is repaired through wisdom, so that divine things become sweet to us; whence the powers of the soul are revived, as St. Bernard says above, cap. 10. Therefore the sense of Hearing it excites to hearing the word of God; the sense of Smell to following the Beloved, so as to say: We shall run in the odor of your ointments; the sense of Touch to holding the Beloved firmly, so as to say: I held him, and I will not let him go. I will bring him into my father's house, and into the chamber of her that bore me. Cant. 3.

> NOTANDUM primo cum D. Bonav. de Dono Sapientiae, cap. 2. ex D. Bernardo lib. de natura, et dignitate amoris Divini, cap. 7. quod: Sicut corpus habet suos quinque sensus, quibus animae coniungitur, vita mediante; sic Anima habet suos quinque sensus spirituales, quibus Deo coniungitur, mediante Charitate; et sicut sensus omnes, sine sensu Gustus, infirmantur, et hebetantur in operationibus suis; sic omnes sensus spirituales infirmantur, et languescunt in operibus suis, sine gustu sapientiali, qui gustabilia spiritualia sapida facit. Hunc saporem, ut ait S. Bernardus, serm. 85. in Cant. perdidimus in esu pomi acidi, veneno infecti, ex quo sapiunt nobis concupita. Hic autem sensus per sapientiam reparatur, ut divina nobis suavia fiant; unde vegetantur vires animae, ut ait S. Bernardus supra, cap. 10. Sensum itaque Auditus excitat ad verbum Dei audiendum; Sensum Olfactus ad dilectum sectandum, ut dicat: In odorem curremus unguentorum tuorum; sensum Tactus ad dilectum firme tenendum, ut dicat: Tenui eum, nec dimittam. Introducam in domum patris mei, et in cubiculum genetricis meae. Cant. 3.

2 THEREFORE all the spiritual senses are excited by the taste of wisdom to the highest appetible thing, as St. Augustine lib. 10. Confess. cap. 6. teaches.

> ITAQUE omnes sensus spirituales, gustu sapientiae excitantur in summum appetibile, ut docet D. August. lib. 10. Confess. cap. 6.

3 Of this wisdom James says, cap. 3.: The wisdom that is from above, first indeed is chaste: because it avoids the corruptions of sin; indeed peaceable, and modest, keeping the mean in all things, etc.

> De hac sapientia dicit Iacobus, cap. 3. Sapientia, quae desursum est, primum quidem pudica est: quia vitat corruptelas peccati; pacifica quidem, et modesta est, in omnibus tenens medium, etc.

4 Therefore the gift of Wisdom not only teaches one to contemplate divine things with right judgment, but also teaches to regulate human acts in a more excellent manner than the wisdom that is an intellectual virtue teaches. St. Augustine 12. de Trin. cap. 14. brings the reason, saying: The higher part of reason is deputed to wisdom; the lower, however, to knowledge. But the higher reason is for meditations supernal, namely divine, to be beheld and consulted. To be beheld, indeed, insofar as divine things are contemplated in themselves. But to be consulted, insofar as through divine things it indicates concerning human ones, directing human acts by divine rules, so that man be assimilated to God not only according to the image, but also according to the operations, as far as he can. Hence St. Augustine, de serm. Domini in monte cap. 9. says: Wisdom is the contemplation of truth, pacifying the whole man, and taking on the likeness of God. Wisdom is more precious than all works, and all things that are desired are not worth comparison with it.

> Igitur donum Sapientiae, non solum docet secundum iudicium rectum contemplari divina, sed etiam docet regulari humanos actus excellentiori modo, quam doceat sapientia, quae est virtus intellectualis. Rationem affert D. August. 12. de Trin. cap. 14. dicens: Superior pars rationis sapientiae deputatur; inferior autem scientiae. Superior autem ratio meditationibus supernis scilicet divinis, et conspiciendis, et consulendis. Conspiciendis quidem, secundum quod divina in se ipsis contemplantur. Consulendis autem, secundum quod per divina indicat de humanis, per divinas regulas dirigens actus humanos, ut homo non solum assimiletur Deo secundum imaginem, sed etiam secundum operationes, prout potest. Unde S. August. de serm. Domini in monte cap. 9. ait: Sapientia est contemplatio veritatis, pacificans totum hominem, et suscipiens similitudinem Dei, Pretiosior est sapientia cunctis operibus, et omnia, quae desiderantur, non valent huic comparari.

5 From what has been said the Holy Doctor, with St. Thomas art. 3., deduces that Wisdom is practical. Hence the Apostle Coloss. 4. says: Walk in wisdom: hence it is elicited also, toward which operation it orders, namely, that the divine things sapidly tasted be judged by a palate cleansed, not infected, and that we famished ones aspire avidly to them, the infection of the evil humor having been removed, in the manner in which, after the gall has been purged by savoring sugar, necessary foods afterwards taste good to us. The same St. Augustine has, 12. de Trin. cap. 14.

> Ex dictis deducit S. Doct. cum D. Thom. art. 3. Sapientiam esse practicam. Unde Apostolus Coloss. 4. ait: In sapientia ambulate: inde elicitur etiam, ad quam operationem ordinet, nempe, ut saporose degustata divina, iudicentur palato emundato, non infecto, et ad ea avide famelici aspiremus, sublata infectione mali humoris, ad modum, quo Saccaro rosito expurgata bile, sapiunt nobis postea cibi necessarii. Idem habet S. August. 12. de Trin. cap. 14.

6 The reason is, because the higher any virtue is, the more things it extends to, as is had in lib. de causis, prop. 10. Therefore since wisdom, which is a gift, is more preeminent than wisdom intellectual acquired, which is directed to contemplation, it follows that it extends also to action, as Tannerus also argues num. 39.

> Ratio est, quia quanto aliqua virtus est altior, tanto ad plura extenditur, ut habetur lib. de causis, prop. 10. Cum igitur sapientia, quae est donum, sit praecellentior sapientia intellectuali acquisita, quae ad contemplationem dirigit; sequitur, ad actionem etiam extendi, ut arguit etiam Tannerus num. 39.

7 You will say that Sap. 8. has: No bitterness is in her conversation (namely, Wisdom's), nor tedium in her company, but joy and gladness. Yet in action tedium and bitterness are found, as St. Gregory lib. 6. Moral. cap. 28. says: In contemplation the principle, which is God, is sought; in operation, however, one labors under heavy necessity of the bundle.

> Dices Sap. 8. habetur: Non habet amaritudinem conversatio illius (scilicet Sapientiae,) nec taedium convictus illius, sed laetitiam et gaudium. Cum tamen in actione taedium, et amaritudo reperiatur, ut ait D. Gregorius lib. 6. Moral. cap. 28. dicens: In contemplatione principium, quod Deus est, quaeritur; in operatione autem sub gravi necessitate fascis laboratur.

8 It is answered that the bitterness which is in action does not come from Wisdom; but rather is turned by it into sweetness, as Tannerus observes number 40., from St. Bonaventure on that passage of Wisdom, and St. Thomas.

> Respondetur, amaritudinem, quae est in actione, non provenire a Sapientia; sed ab ea potius in dulcedinem verti, ut observat Tannerus numero 40. ex D. Bonaventura ad eum locum Sapientiae, et D. Thoma.

Question III: How the gift of wisdom is obtained from God

1 The Holy Doctor observes that Wisdom is found through cognition; but possessed through love; through cognition, indeed, to be seen; through love, however, to be embraced and tasted. To see pertains to the intellect; but to embrace and taste to the will, as Richard says lib. 4. de contempl. cap. 15.: As God is heard through memory, seen through the intellect: so he is embraced and tasted, or bound, through affection, and thus held: And this indeed is more perfect than merely to see, which St. Augustine shows lib. 9. de Trinitate, cap. 12., where he says that the act of embracing is the proper act of the will.

> Observat S. Doctor, Sapientiam inveniri per cognitionem; sed possideri per dilectionem; per cognitionem quidem videri; per dilectionem autem amplexari, et gustari. Videre pertinet ad intellectum; sed amplexari, et gustare ad voluntatem, ut ait Richard. lib. 4. de contempl. cap. 15. dicens: Sicut Deus per memoriam auditur, per intellectum videtur: ita per affectum amplexatur, et gustatur, vel astringitur, et sic tenetur: Et hoc utique est perfectius, quam solum videre, quod ostendit D. August. lib. 9. de Trinitate, cap. 12. ubi ait, actum amplexandi esse proprium voluntatis actum.

2 Therefore the wise man teaches to seek Wisdom, Prov. 2.: If you shall seek Wisdom as money, and shall dig for her as for treasures: then you shall understand the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom. Expounding which words Jerome says: He who digs for treasures casts aside the earth, digs a pit deep down, diligently persists, until he finds what he seeks. So he who desires to find the treasures of wisdom, let him cast off from himself every earthly weight, make in himself a pit of humility, and not rest, until he finds. These are his words: For wisdom itself is easily seen by those who seek her: and to think of her is a sense brought to perfection. Wisdom, therefore, is to be sought, for as she herself says, Prov. 8.: He who shall find me, shall find life, and shall draw salvation from the Lord.

Igitur docet sapiens Proverb. 2. quaerere Sapientiam: Si quaesieris Sapientiam quasi pecuniam, et sicut Thesauros effoderis illam: tunc intelliges timorem Domini, qui est initium sapientiae. Quae verba exponens Hieronymus ait: Qui thesauros effodit, terram reiicit, foveam in altum fodit, sedulus insistit, donec inveniat quod quaerit. Sic qui thesauros sapientiae invenire desiderat, omne pondus terrenum a se reiiciat, in se fossam humilitatis faciat, nec quiescat, donec inveniat. Haec ille: Ipsa enim sapientia facile videtur ab his, qui quaerunt eam: et cogitare de illa, sensus est consummatus. Est igitur quaerenda Sapientia, quia sicut ipsa dicit, Prov. 8. Qui me invenerit; inveniet vitam, et hauriet salutem a Domino.

3 But how you may recognize that wisdom has been found by you, St. Bernard teaches in his Sentences: You have plainly found wisdom, if you weep for the sins of your former life, if you esteem lightly the desirable things of this age, if you desire eternal beatitude with your whole desire. You have found wisdom, if each of these things tastes to you as they are, so that these indeed are bitter, and altogether to be fled; those also, as it were falling and transitory, to be despised; but these, as perfect goods, to be desired with the whole desire, which you judge and discern with a certain deepest savor of the soul.

Quomodo autem agnoscas, inventam a te sapientiam, docet S. Bernardus in sententiis: Invenisti plane sapientiam, si prioris vitae peccata defleas, si huius saeculi desiderabilia parvipendas, si aeternam beatitudinem toto desiderio concupiscas. Invenisti sapientiam, si tibi horum singula sapiunt, prout sunt, ut haec quidem amara, et omnino fugienda; illa quoque, velut caduca, et transitoria contemnenda; ista vero ut perfecta bona, toto desiderio appetenda, quae intimo quodam animi sapore diiudices, et discernas.

4 Therefore this gift, which is a supernatural habit, is to be earnestly asked of God, as James says, cap. 1.: If any of you want wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men abundantly, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering.

Igitur hoc donum, quod est habitus supernaturalis, est a Deo enixe postulandum, ut ait Iacobus, cap. 1. Si quis vestrum indiget sapientia, postulet a Deo, qui dat omnibus affluenter, et non improperat, et dabitur ei. Postulet autem in fide, nihil haesitans.

5 He adds, however, four conditions: First, indigence in the one asking: If anyone wants. Second, Petition, which is that of sons, as is said Psal. 2.: Ask of me, etc. As asking is of a servant. Hence you have that wisdom is not infused except to sons adopted by grace. Hence Sap. 7. says: God loves no one, except him who dwells with wisdom. Third, the liberality of the giver: Who giveth abundantly to all, whence 3. Reg. cap. 3. it is said to Solomon, who was asking for Wisdom: But even these things, which you did not ask, I have given you, riches and glory. Fourth, the confidence of the one asking: nothing wavering. These things the Holy Doctor says concerning Wisdom. See many Holy Fathers in St. Bonav. lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 32.

Quatuor autem conditiones apponit: Primam, indigentiam in postulante: Si quis indiget. Secundam, Postulationem, quae est filiorum, ut dicitur Psal. 2. Postula a me, etc. Sicut rogare est servi. Unde habes, sapientiam non infundi, nisi filiis gratia adoptatis. Idco Sap. 7. dicitur: Neminem diligit Deus, nisi eum, qui cum sapientia habitat. Tertiam, largitatem donatoris: Qui dat affluenter omnibus, unde 3. Reg. cap. 3. dicitur Salomoni, qui Sapientiam postulabat: Sed et haec, quae non postulasti, dedi tibi, divitias, et gloriam. Quartam, postulantis fiduciam: nihil haesitans. Haec S. Doct. de Sapientia. Vide multos SS. PP. in D. Bonav. lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 32.

Question IV: On the illumination that wisdom brings

1 Wisdom is as it were the Sun, bringing a day luminous with knowledge, and fervent with affection. Hence Alan of Lille: Wisdom is the Sun, through whom the light of the mind dawns in darkness, the eye of the heart, the fruit of inward love, the delightful paradise of the soul. It converts the earthly to the heavenly, the mortal to the immortal, man to God, with the authority of deifying transformation. This luminous wisdom he desired, who said, Sap. 7.: I invoked, and the Spirit of Wisdom came into me: and I preferred to have her for light: for her light is inextinguishable. And all good things came to me together with her, for she is the Mother of all these good things. See the Holy Doctor in Diaet; tit. 6. cap. 4., saying wondrous things.

> Sapientia est veluti Sol, diem afferens lucentem cognitione, et ferventem affectu. Idco Alanus de insulis: Sapientia est Sol, per quem lumen mentis diescit in tenebris, cordis oculus, fructus internae dilectionis, deliciosa animae paradisus. Haec in caelestem terrenum, in immortalem caducum, hominem in Deum deifica mutationis auctoritate convertit. Hanc luminosam sapientiam desideravit, qui dicebat, Sap. 7. Invocavi, et venit in me Spiritus Sapientiae: et praeposui pro luce habere illam: quoniam inextinguibile est lumen illius. Venerunt autem mihi omnia bona pariter cum illa, quoniam horum omnium bonorum Mater est. Vide S. Doctorem in Diaet; tit. 6. cap. 4. mira dicentem.

2 Tully first de legibus says: The mother of all good things is Wisdom, than which nothing is more fruitful, nothing more preeminent, for the good of life was given by it. For since it taught all other things, it also taught what is most difficult, that we know ourselves. See St. Bernard sermone 85. in Cant. and serm. 3. de circumcisione, where he shows that from wisdom there arise adornment in the soul, the clarity of conscience, than whose testimony nothing is clearer, since truth shines in the mind, and the mind sees itself in truth. This day, the most serene Sabbath of the mind, he says shines in contemplation, which day indeed, the seventh, namely the seventh gift, has no evening, but here has dawn, and in heaven eternal noon. For the Lord calls it the best part, Luke 10. Hence Anselm lib. de similitudinibus, cap. 131. says: The Gift of Wisdom pertains to the contemplative life, which is the best part, which Mary chose, which shall not be taken from her: But more it shall be perfected in the fatherland. Hence the Gloss there says: The contemplative life here begins, and is perfected in the heavenly fatherland; for love is a fire, which begins to burn, but when it shall see him whom it loves, it shall further glow in love. These things the Holy Doctor, whom see.

> Tullius primo de legibus ait: Mater omnium bonorum rerum est Sapientia, qua nihil uberius, nihil praestantius, quia bonum vitae datum est. Haec enim cum caeteras res omnes docuit; tum quod difficillimum est docuit, ut nos nosceremus. Vide D. Bernardum sermone 85. in Cant. et serm. 3. de circumcisione, ubi ostendit, ex sapientia oriri decorem in anima, conscientiae claritatem, cuius testimonio nihil clatius, Cum veritas in mente fulget, et mens in veritate se videt. Hunc diem, serenissimum Sabbathum mentis, in contemplatione ait fulgere, qui sane dies septimus, septimum scil. donum, non habet vesperam, sed hic auroram habet, et in caelo aeternum meridiem. Optimam enim partem vocat eum Dominus, Lucae 10. Unde Anselmus lib. de similitudinibus, cap. 131. ait: Donum Sapientiae pertinet ad vitam complativam, quae est optima pars, quam Maria elegit, quae non auferetur ab ea: Sed magis in patria perficietur. Unde Glossa ibidem dicit: Contemplativa vita hic incipit, et in caelesti patria perficitur; quia amor est ignis, qui ardere incipit, sed cum ipsum, quem amat, videbit, amplius in amore ignescet. Haec S. Doct. quem vide.

Question V: On the spiritual delights of wisdom

1 The Holy Doctor elegantly treats of these from chapter 5, on the Gift of Wisdom, where under the figure of a banquet he expounds the spiritual delights of the Gift of Wisdom.

> De Sapientiae spiritualibus deliciis.

EDisserit haec eleganter S. Doct. a cap. 5. de Dono Sapientiae, ubi sub specie conuiuii exponit spirituales delicias Doni Sapientiae.

2 This banquet is expounded from Canticle 5: Eat, O friends, and drink, and be inebriated, my dearest. Where he shows a threefold banquet prepared by Wisdom. The first is for just friends, that they may eat, chewing by labor, whence it is said: By the labors of your hands, for you shall eat. The second banquet is the sweet drinking of the soul after this life. The third is the inebriation of man after the body has been resumed in the resurrection; and these are called the dearest. See St. Bernard, book On Loving God, where he has: He feeds those laboring in this life, gives drink to those resting after this life, and inebriates those reigning in eternal life, etc.

Hoc conuiuium exponitur Cant. 5. Comedite amici, et bibite, et inebriamini charissimi. Ubi triplex conuiuium praeparatum ostendit a Sapientia. Primum amicis iustis, ut comedant, labore masticando, unde dicitur: Labores manuum tuarum, quia manducabis. Secundum conuiuium est potatio suauis animae post hanc vitam. Tertium est mebriatio hominis post reassumptum corpus in resurrectione; et hi vocantur charissimi. Vide D. Bernardum lib. de diligendo Deo, ubi sic habet: Cibat in hac vita laborantes, potat post hanc vitam quiescentes, et inebriat in aeterna vita regnantes, etc.

3 THE FIRST, therefore, banquet is that of friends, for whom the Holy Spirit prepares the banquet of Wisdom. In this the soul eats the bread of Wisdom, but in the sweat of the face. This food is the very work, to do the will of God; whence Christ said, John 4: My food is to do the will of my Father. Of this St. Gregory, book 1 of the Morals, chapter 16: Wisdom makes a banquet in its day: because it refreshes the mind with the hope and certainty of eternal things. Of this food they partake who by meditation eat the bread that came down from heaven, as is said in John 4. See St. Bonaventure setting forth marvelous things about these.

PRIMUM igitur conuiuium est amicorum, quibus Spiritus Sanctus praeparat conuiuium Sapientiae. In hoc anima edit Sapientiae panem, sed in sudore vultus. Hic cibus est ipsum opus, facere voluntatem Dei; unde Christus Ioan. 4. dicebat: Meus cibus est ut faciam voluntatem Patris mei. De hoc D. Gregorius lib. 1. moral. cap. 16. Sapientia in die suo conuiuium facit: quia mentem de aeternorum spe, et certitudine reficit. Hoc cibo vescuntur, qui mandunt meditatione panem, qui de caelo descendit, ut dicitur Ioan. 4. Vide D. Bonauent. mirabilia de his promentem.

4 He proceeds, chapter 6, to set forth the wine of wisdom, of which Proverbs 9: Drink the wine which I have mingled for you. This the worldly lack, John 2: They have no wine, as the Holy Doctor and St. Gaudentius, Bishop of Brescia, excellently expound. Whence the spouse rejoices, Canticle 2: He brought me into the cellar of wine: This is uncreated Wisdom, the eternal Word, containing all the treasures of the wisdom of God hidden away.

PERGIT cap. 6. apponere vinum sapientiae, de quo Prouerb. 9. Bibite vinum, quod miscui vobis. Hoc carent mundani, Ioan. 2. Vinum non habent, ut egregie exponit S. Doct. et S. Gaudentius Brixiae Episcopus. Unde laetatur sponsa Cant. 2. Introduxit me Rex in cellam vinariam: Haec est Sapientia increata, Verbum aeternum, continens omnes thesauros Sapientiae Dei absconditos.

5 This was the generous wine, of which Assuerus was warmed in figure, Esther 15. Of this Canticle 8: I will give you a cup of spiced wine. See the Holy Doctor.

Hoc erat vinum generosum, de quo umbratice Esther 15. incaluit Assuerus. De hoc Cant. 8. Dabo tibi poculum de vino condito. Vide S. Doctorem.

6 He explains, chapter 7, who are the friends and dearest ones invited to the banquet of Wisdom.

> Explicat vero cap. 7. qui sint amici, et charissimi ad conuiuium inuitati Sapientiae.

7 ORIGEN, on that verse of the Canticle I languish with love, distinguishes between simple love, ardor, and languor, saying: Beginners love, the proficient burn, but the perfect languish in love. Therefore, those who love with the greater love are loved by God: I love those who love me. Proverbs 8. The dearest of God are those who take their greatest delight in God, because they love the most. Whence Canticle 7 the Beloved says: How beautiful are you, and how comely, dearest, in delights. Hence the Vercellense: How beautiful are you in affections that burn with fervor and spirit, dearest, on account of your surpassing beauty and ardent love.

> ORIGENES ad illud Cant. Amore langueo*, distinguit inter simplicem amorem, ardorem, et languorem, dicens:* Amant incipientes, ardent proficientes, sed languent in amore perfecti. Igitur, qui maiori amore diligunt, diliguntur a Deo: Ego diligentes me diligo. Prouerb. 8. sunt charissimi Deo, qui maxime Deo delectantur, quia maxime diligunt. Unde Cant. 7. dicit Dilectus: Quam pulchra es, et quam decora charissima in deliciis. Hinc Vercellensis Quam pulchra es fervoribus affectualibus, et spiritualibus, charissima, propter praecipuam pulchritudinem, et feruidam dilectionem.

8 FURTHER, St. Dionysius in the letter to Titus, and the Vercellense, on those words of the Canticle 5, Be inebriated, my dearest, expound that inebriation as the abundance of heavenly theorias, that is, the frequency and experiential overflowing of revelations. Such, says Richard, book On Benjamin, chapter 37, was that of Paul, 1 Corinthians 11: Whether in the body, or out of the body, I know not, God knows. To this alludes Psalm 67: There is Benjamin, a stripling, in ecstasy of mind. But he had said before: God will voluntarily separate a rain for his inheritance, and it was weakened, etc. For inebriation effects an alienation of mind, as Richard says, book 4 on contemplation, chapter 16. Whence Psalm 35: They shall be inebriated with the plenty of your house, and you shall make them drink of the torrent of your pleasure.

> PORRO ebrietatem illam exponunt S. Dionysius epist. ad Titum, et Vercellensis ad ea verba Cant. 5. Inebriamini charissimi*, per abundantem caelestium theoriarum, idest reuelationum frequentiam, et experimentalem redundantiam. Talem, ait Richard. lib. de Beniam. cap. 37. fuisse illam Pauli, prima Corinth. 11.* Siue in corpore, siue extra corpus nescio, Deus scit. Cui alludit Psal. 67. Ibi Beniamin adolescentulus in mentis excessu. Dixerat autem antea: Pluuiam voluntariam segregabis Deus haereditati tuae, et infirmata est, etc. Ebrietas enim alienationem mentis efficit, ut ait Richard. lib. 4. de contempl. cap. 16. Unde Psal. 35. Inebriabuntur ab ubertate domus tuae, et torrente voluptatis tuae potabis eos.

9 IF, therefore, we wish to be drenched with this inebriation, let us strive to love the Lord intimately. For thus transformed into God we shall live outside ourselves, as Paul used to say. So great, indeed, is the force of love and of the beautiful, as the Vercellense says in the prologue on the Canticle, that it snatches not only men and Angels outside themselves into God, but even draws God himself outside himself toward creatures. This he learned from St. Dionysius, chapter 4 on the divine names, where he says: One must dare to say what is true, that God himself, by love of what is beautiful and good, goes forth out of the abundance of his amative goodness, as it were outside himself.

> SI igitur cupimus hac ebrietate madere, satagamus, Dominum intime diligere. Sic enim in Deum transformati, extra nos viuemus, ut aiebat Paulus. Tanta est enim vis amoris, et pulchri, ut ait Vercellensis in prologo super Cant. ut non solum homines, et Angelos extra se in Deum rapiat, sed et Deum ipsum extra se eliciat ad creaturas. Hoc didicit a D. Dionysio

cap. 4. de diuinis nominibus, ubi ait: Audendum est dicere pro vero, quia ipse Deus omnium, tam pulchro, et bono amore exit per abundantiam amativae bonitatis, quasi extra seipsum.

10 HENCE, therefore, the Holy Doctor, chapter 8, ascends to expound the second banquet in glory, where the soul, stripped of the flesh, drinks wine with milk that brings sleep. Canticle 5.

HINC igitur S. Doctor cap. 8. ascendit ad secundum conuiuium exponendum in gloria, ubi anima, carne exuta, bibit vinum cum lacte Soporiuuo. Cant. 5.

11 LIKEWISE, chapter 9, he expounds the third banquet of those reigning after the resurrection; of which Luke 22: I dispose to you a kingdom, as my Father has disposed to me, that you may eat and drink at my table, etc. See the Holy Doctor.

PERINDE cap. 9. tertium exponit conuiuium regnantium post resurrectionem; de quo Lucae 22. Ego dispono vobis regnum, sicut disposuit mihi Pater, ut edatis, et bibatis super mensam meam, etc. Vide S. Doctorem.

12 Then, chapter 10, he describes the series of those banqueting at that royal feast of wisdom, where he relates wondrous things woven together from the Holy Fathers.

Mox cap. 10. Conuiuantium in illo regali sapientiae epulo seriem describit, ubi mira e Sanctis Patribus contexta enarrat.

13 LASTLY, chapter 11, according to the number of the seven gifts, he expounds the beatitude of those banqueting. See him, divinely eloquent.

POSTREMO, cap. 11. iuxta numerum septem donorum, conuiuantium beatitatem exponit. Eum vide diuinitus eloquentem.

14 From what has been said above you can gather in what the gift of Wisdom differs from the other gifts. It differs from the gift of Understanding, because Wisdom is a knowledge of God absolutely; Understanding, however, comparatively, namely in relation to creatures. Second, because by Understanding God is known through illumination from what has been heard in Scripture; but Wisdom is known by experience. Thus through Understanding we know God; through Wisdom we taste his sweetness; whence Wisdom is said to be, as it were, science seasoned with the savor of virtues. And so, just as the gift of Understanding is for speculation, that the intellect may be easily moved toward divine things as they are such in themselves; the gift of Wisdom, however, is practical, rendering the intellect easily movable to perceive divine things as they are good and desirable, and to judge that they are to be adhered to, as St. Bonaventure teaches, book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, chapter 46, St. Thomas, articles 2 and 3, Cajetan there, and question 46, and Valentia, dispute 3, question 20, point 1.

Ex supra dictis colligere potes, differre donum Sapientiae ab aliis donis. A dono intellectus differt, quia Sapientia est cognitio Dei absolute; intellectus vero collatiue, scilicet in comparatione ad creaturas. Secundo, quia intellectu cognoscitur Deus per illuminationem de auditis in Scriptura; Sapientia autem cognoscitur experimento. Itaque per Intellectum Deum cognoscimus; per Sapientiam dulcedinem eius gustamus; unde Sapientia dicitur, quasi sapore virtutum condita scientia. Atque adeo, sicut donum Intellectus est ad speculationem, ut intellectus facile moueatur ad res diuinas, prout in se sunt tales. Donum autem Sapientiae est practicum, reddens intellectum facile mobilem ad percipiendas res diuinas, ut sunt bonae, et expetibiles, et ut iudicet illis inhaerendum, ut docet D. Bonau. lib. 5. Compendy Theologiae, cap. 46. D. Thom. art. 2. et 3. Caietanus ibi, et quaest. 46. et Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 20. punct. 1.

15 IT DIFFERS also from the gift of science, because this renders the intellect ready to judge what created things are to be adhered to, and in what manner; and it teaches this according to created reasons. The gift of Wisdom, however, shows how one is to adhere to divine things, and according to divine reasons. See St. Bonaventure on the seven gifts, on the Gift of science.

> DIFFERT etiam a dono scientiae, quia hoc reddit intellectum facilem ad iudicandum, quibus rebus creatis, et quomodo inhaerendum; atque hoc secundum rationes creatas docet. Donum vero Sapientiae monstrat, quomodo rebus diuinis, et secundum rationes diuinas sit haerendum. Vide D. Bonau. de septem donis, de Dono scientiae.

16 It differs also from the Gift of Counsel; for this teaches what is to be done here and now: Wisdom, however, is universal. See on the Gift of Counsel the Seraphic Doctor..

> Differt etiam a Dono Consilii; nam hoc edocet quid hic, et nunc agendum: Sapientia vero universalis est. Vide de Dono de Consilii Seraphicum..

Question VI: How folly is opposed to wisdom

1 FOOLISHNESS is opposed to Wisdom, which is called false Wisdom by St. Gregory, book 13 of the Morals, chapter 14, cited by St. Bonaventure, book 3 of the Pharetra, chapter 32; by Paul it is called: the wisdom of this world, 1 Corinthians 1; and by Gregory, book 31, chapter 20, it is called: Foolishness before God, before whom is the right judgment of things.

> Quo pacto stultitia opponatur Sapientiae.
> SAPIENTIAE opponitur stultitia, quae dicitur falsa Sapientia a D. Gregorio lib. 13. Moral. cap. 14. apud D. Bonav. lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 32. a Paulo dicitur: Sapientia huius mundi, prima Cor. 1. et a Gregorio lib. 31. cap. 20. vocatur: Stultitia apud Deum*, apud quem est rectum rerum iudicium.*

2 THIS, however, consists in a perverse judgment, which postpones divine things to fleeting ones, as St. Augustine says, book 2 on free choice, chapter 16, and On the quantity of the soul, chapter 19, and book 10 on the city of God, chapter 28; and this is called to be wise in a bad sense, and to be foolish, by St. Bernard, the book on the degrees of humility, degree 1; and on the verse: Behold us, etc., he calls it the accursed wisdom, which supplants, and earthly, animal, diabolical, as the Holy Doctor notes, loc. cit. Pharetra, whom see.

> HAEC autem consistit in pravo iudicio, quod divina postponit caducis, ut ait D. August. lib. 2. de lib. arb. cap. 16. et de quantitate animae, cap. 19. et lib. 10. de civit. cap. 28. et hoc vocatur male sapere*, et* desipere a D. Bernardo lib. de gradibus humil. gradu 1. et in illud: Ecce nos, etc. vocat eam maledictam sapientiam, quae supplantat, et terrenam, animalem, diabolicam, ut notat S. Doct. loc. cit. Pharetrae*, quem vide.*

3 IN THE SAME way it is called such by St. James, chapter 3, as the Holy Doctor excellently expounds, on the gift of Wisdom, chapter 1. It is indeed called diabolical, because it deceives so as to destroy. See St. Thomas, question 46, article 2.

> EODEM pacto vocatur a D. Iacobo cap. 3. ut egregie exponit S. Doct. de dono Sapientiae, cap. 1. Dicitur sane diabolica*, quia fallit ad perdendum. Vide D. Thom.* quaest. 46. art. 2.

4 JUST as Wisdom gives savor, sweetness, and taste in divine things; so foolishness in fleeting things. Of this, the second book of Wisdom, where those young men cried out: Come, let us enjoy good things, etc. Let us leave everywhere signs of our joy, as the Holy Doctor expounds, sermon 2 within the octave of the Nativity.

> SICUTI autem Sapientia dat saporem, suavitatem, et gustum in rebus Divinis; sic stultitia in rebus caducis. De hac secundo Sapientiae*, ubi iuvenes illi conclamabant:* Venite, fruamur bonis, etc. Ubique relinquamus signa laetitiae nostrae*, ut explicat S. Doct.* serm. 2. infra octavam Nativitatis.

5 From this it is deduced that foolishness is a sin of the same species as that object which is preferred before God. See also St. Thomas, articles 2 and 3.

> Ex quo deducitur, stultitiam esse peccatum eius generis, cuius est obiectum, quod Deo anteponitur. Vide etiam D. Thomam art. 2. et 3.

Question VII: Whether the seventh beatitude corresponds to the gift of wisdom

1 ST. AUGUSTINE, in the book On the Sermon on the Mount, distributing the gifts among the beatitudes, says: Wisdom befits the peacemakers, in whom there is no rebellious motion, but one obeying reason.

> An septima Beatitudo respondeat dono Sapientiae.
> D. AUGUST. lib. de serm. Domini in monte*, distribuens dona per beatitudines, ait:* Sapientia convenit pacificis, in quibus nullus motus est rebellis, sed rationi obtemperans.

2 THEREFORE Wisdom corresponds to this seventh beatitude: Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God: The reason, St. Bonaventure, part 5 of the Breviloquium, chapter 6, is; because Wisdom joins us to the supreme and true good, in which is the end and tranquillity of our whole rational appetite; once this peace is attained, there necessarily follows a superabundant spiritual delight, which is contained in the twelve fruits of the Spirit.

> IGITUR Sapientia respondet huic septimae beatitudini: Beati pacifici; quoniam filii Dei vocabuntur: Ratio D. Bonav. 5. p. Breviloq. cap. 6. est; quia Sapientia iungit nos summo, et vero bono, in quo est finis, et tranquillitas totius nostri rationalis appetitus; Qua pace adepta, necessario sequitur superabundans delectatio spiritualis, quae in duodenario fructuum Spiritus continetur.

3 WHY, however, Wisdom is ordered to peace, St. Thomas also explains, question 45, article 6; for peace is the tranquillity of order, as St. Augustine says, book 19 On the city of God; but to order belongs to Wisdom, as Aristotle teaches at the beginning of the Metaphysics, and therefore to be a peacemaker is attributed to Wisdom.

> CUR autem Sapientia ordinet ad pacem, explicat etiam S. Thom. quaest. 45. art. 6. nam pax est tranquillitas ordinis, ut ait D. August. 19. de civitate; ordinare autem pertinet ad Sapientiam, ut docet Aristoteles initio Metaph. et ideo esse pacificum attribuitur Sapientiae.

Disputation XX: On Prudence

1 AFTER the Theological virtues the theologians treat of the Cardinal virtues, the first of which is reckoned to be Prudence. For this is set over the whole OEconomy of the moral virtues, and directs them, either by discerning, as Counselor, or by defining, as Commander, to their acts: it reviews things past, disposes of things present, and provides for things to come; hence it has as its subjective parts the Memory of things past, the Intelligence of things present, and the providence of things to come; moreover it holds the reins of the passions, and if ever they rise up with a sudden impulse, it restrains them at once and reduces them to concord; sometimes it is worldly, in heaping up riches; human, in pursuing the comforts of the flesh; but Divine, it is enslaved to eternal observances, as the Holy Doctor notes in the places to be noted below; its nature and quality still remain to be investigated.

Question I: What prudence is

1 THE name of prudence is taken in various ways, as St. Bonaventure teaches, book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, chapter 34, in the Dieta, title 5, chapter 5, and in the opuscule On the four Cardinal virtues, and On the seven Journeys, Journey 7, distinction 5, and in the Pharetra, book 2, chapter 27.

> Quid sit PRUDENTIA.
> VARIIS modis accipitur nomen prudentiae, ut docet D. Bonav. lib. 5. Compendii Theol. cap. 34. in Dieta, tit. 5. cap. 5. et opusc. de quatuor virtutibus Cardinalibus. Et de septem Itineribus, Itinere 7. dist. 5. et in Pharetra, lib. 2. cap. 27.

2 First, indeed, it signifies any knowledge of truth acquired by human study; thus it is taken by St. Ambrose, book 1 on offices, chapter 24, by Tully, book 1 on offices and book 2 on Invention, cited by St. Bonaventure, in the Pharetra and part 3 of the Centiloquium, section 41, and sermon 6 of the Hexaëmeron.

> Primo enim significat quamcumque veri cognitionem, humano studio comparatam, sic accipitur a D. Ambrosio lib. 1. de offic. cap. 24. a Tullio lib. 1. de offic. et lib. 2. de Inventione apud D. Bonav. in Pharetra et 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 41. et serm. 6. Hexaëmeronis.

3 SECOND, it signifies only practical knowledge of things that ought to be sought or repudiated. Thus St. Augustine takes it, book 1 on free choice, chapter 13, and book 83 questions, question 31: that Prudence is the science of things to be sought and avoided: thus it is taken also by the Holy Doctor, in the Pharetra, and by St. Isidore, in the Etymologies, book 10, under the word Prudentia: The prudent man is so called, as it were one seeing far ahead; for he is perspicacious, and foresees the chances of uncertain things. Whence in Greek it is φρόνησις. And in this way it is taken by the Holy Doctor, in the Exposition of the Terms of Theology, and in the Centiloquium, loc. cit., and by St. Gregory. But neither is this proper Prudence, which ought both to know and to provide.

> SECUNDO significat cognitionem tantum practicam rerum, quae vel expeti, vel repudiari debent. Sic illud accipit D. August. lib. 1. de lib. arb. cap. 13. et lib. 83. qq. quaest. 31. Prudentiam esse rerum appetendarum, et vitandarum scientiam: ita accipitur et apud S. Doctorem in Pharetra*, et D. Isidorum* in Ethymol. lib. 10. verbo Prudentia: Prudens dicitur, quasi porro videns, perspicax est enim, et incertorum praevidet casus. Unde in Graeco habetur φρόνησις. Et hoc modo accipitur a S. Doct. in declaratorio Terminorum Theologiae, et in Centilog. loc. cit. a D. Gregorio. Sed neque haec est propria Prudentia, quae debet, et scire, et providere.

4 THIRD, Prudence is taken for all the faculties of the practical intellect that contribute, or are even necessary, to rightly instituting the actions of human life. Thus it is frequently taken by the Philosopher, book 6 of the Ethics, chapters 5, 10 and 11.

> TERTIO sumitur Prudentia pro omnibus facultatibus intellectus practici, quae ad recte instituendas humanae vitae actiones conducunt, aut etiam sunt necessariae. Sic accipitur frequenter a Philosopho lib. 6. Eth. cap. 5. 10. et 11.

5 FOURTH, Prudence, in the most proper sense, names a certain faculty of the practical intellect for rightly determining what is to be done in any particular act.

> QUARTO Prudentia, maxime propria, nominatur facultas quaedam intellectus practici ad recte statuendum, quid agendum sit in quovis actu particulari.

6 Furthermore, Aristotle defines this Prudence, book 6 of the Ethics, chapter 5: Prudence is a habit of the intellect, active with true reason, concerning those things which are good and bad for man.

> Porro hanc Prudentiam definit Aristoteles lib. 6. Eth. cap. 5. Prudentia est habitus intellectus, vera cum ratione activus circa ea, quae homini et bona, et mala sunt.

7 The same St. Doctor wills, in On the seven Journeys, Journey 7, distinction 5, defining: Prudence is to direct all things according to the norm of reason.

> Idem vult S. Doct. de septem Itineribus, Itinere 7. dist. 5. definiens: Prudentia est ad rationis normam universa dirigere.

8 And in the opuscule On the four Cardinal virtues: Prudence is the discernment of good things and bad, both with the flight of evil and the choice of good: from which proceed circumspection, docility, and caution. Circumspection is the wariness of contrary vices, by which we flee avarice and guard against prodigality, etc. Docility is the power of teaching, in this order, that you first instruct yourself, and afterward others. Caution is the prudence of discerning vices that bear the appearance of virtues.

> Et in opusculo de quatuor virtutibus Cardinalibus: Prudentia est bonarum rerum, et malarum discretio, utraque cum fuga mali, et electione boni: de qua procedit circumspectio, docilitas, et cautio. Circumspectio est cautela contrariorum vitiorum, qua fugimus avaritiam, et cavemus prodigalitatem, etc. Docilitas est potentia erudiendi, hoc ordine, ut prius te, et postea alios instruas. Cautio est prudentia discernendi vitia, virtutum speciem inferentia.

9 To this is referred also the definition of Macrobius, book 1 on the dream of Scipio: Prudence is to direct all things, which it considers, whatever it does, according to the norm of reason, and to will or do nothing besides what is right. Thus St. Bonaventure, book 6 of the Compendium of Theology, chapter 34.

Huc refertur etiam definitio Macrobii lib. 1. in somn. Scipionis: Prudentia est ad rationis normam, quae cogitat, quaecumque agit, universa dirigere, ac nihil praeter rectum velle, vel facere. Sic D. Bonav. lib. 6. Compend. Theologiae, cap. 34.

10 It is defined also by Tully, On the repose of the mind: Prudence is the science of good things and bad, with the love of one or the other and the detestation of the rest: cited by St. Bonaventure, part 3 of the Centiloquium, section 41.

DEFINITUR etiam a Tullio de requie mentis: Prudentia est rerum bonarum, et malarum, cum alterutrum dilectione, et reliquarum detestatione scientiarum: apud D. Bonav. 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 41.

11 SIMILAR is the definition of St. Augustine, On the morals of the Church, book 1, chapter 15, cited by St. Bonaventure, loc. cit. of the Centiloquium: Prudence is love, sagaciously discerning those things by which it is aided toward God from those by which it is hindered. And book 83 questions, 52, he defines: It is the knowledge of things to be sought and fled.

SIMILIS est definitio D. August. de moribus Ecclesiae, lib. 1. cap. 15. apud D. Bonavent. loc. cit. Centiloquii. Prudentia est amor, ea, quibus adiuvatur in Deum, ab his, quibus impeditur, sagaciter discernens. Et lib. 83. qq. 52. definit: Est cognitio rerum appetendarum, et fugiendarum.

12 He DESCRIBES, moreover, Prudence as it is a purgatorial virtue, from Macrobius, book 1 on the dream of Scipio: Prudence is to despise this world, and all things that are in the world, through the contemplation of divine things, and to direct all the knowledge of the soul to the divine alone. But Prudence, as it is the virtue of a purified mind, is defined: It is to know the divine alone, and to gaze upon it as if nothing else existed. Thus it is defined in book 5 of the Compendium of Theology, chapter 34, and in the opuscule On the four Cardinal virtues, and elsewhere.

DESCRIBIT autem Prudentiam, ut est virtus purgatoria, ex Macrob. lib. 1. in somn. Scip. Prudentia est mundum istum, et omnia, quae in mundo sunt, divinorum contemplatione despicere, et omnem animae cognitionem in sola divina dirigere. Prudentia autem, prout est virtus purgati animi, definitur: Est sola divina noscere, et tanquam nihil aliud existat, eam intueri. Sic definitur lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 34. et opusc. de quatuor virtutibus Cardinalibus, et alibi.

Question II: Whether prudence is a virtue

1 IT IS CERTAIN that Prudence is a Virtue.

CERTUM est, Prudentiam esse Virtutem.

2 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure, book 1 on chapter 8 of Wisdom, and in book 3, distinction 33, questions 1 and 4, from those words: He teaches Sobriety, and Prudence, and Justice, and Virtue, that is, Fortitude. The same is proved by that verse of Proverbs 8: Prudence is mine, fortitude is mine. By me kings reign, and lawmakers decree just things.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. 1. ad 8. Sap. et in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 1. et 4. ex illis verbis: Sobrietatem, et Prudentiam docet, et Iustitiam, et Virtutem, idest Fortitudinem. Idem probat illo Proverb. 8. Mea est prudentia, mea est fortitudo. Per me Reges regnant, et Legum conditores iusta decernunt.

3 IT IS PROVED secondly by St. Bonaventure in the Dieta, title 5, chapter 5, and by other places of Scripture, Proverbs 28: A leader lacking prudence shall oppress many, etc.

PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonavent. in Diaeta tit. 5. cap. 5. et aliis Scripturae locis, Proverb. 28. Dux indigens prudentia, multos opprimet, etc.

4 PROVERBS 6: O sluggard, go to the ant, and learn Prudence; which, though it has no guide, nor master, nor prince, prepares for itself food in the summer, and gathers in the harvest what it may eat.

PROVERB. 6. O piger, vade ad formicam, et disce Prudentiam; quae cum non habeat ducem, nec praeceptorem, nec principem, parat in aestate cibum sibi, et congregat in messe, quod comedat.

5 PROVERBS 30. The prudent man is compared to four little animals, praised in the same place. There are four little ones of the earth, and they are wiser than the wise: The ant, a people without strength, which prepares its food in the harvest: The rabbit, a weak folk, which makes its bed in the rock: The locust has no king, and goes forth all together by its bands: The stellio supports itself on hands, and dwells in the houses of kings. These four animals are set before us as Masters of prudence, as Lyranus notes there, together with St. Bonaventure, who there excellently expounds these animals for us in mystical parallels; that we may imitate the rabbit, making our bed in the rock, which is Christ, as is said 1 Corinthians 10. The stellio, or lizard, which, having no wings, supplies by its hands the lack of nature; so too let diligent prudence supply in acting the defect of nature: the locust, which mounts on high and at once descends to the earth; for so also the prudent man mounts high through holy desires, and at once descends to the knowledge of his own infirmity, and thence acknowledges the necessity of divine help; according to Psalm 110: He ascends even to the heavens, and descends even to the abysses. And according to St. Gregory below. Lastly, let us imitate the ant, that we may prudently lay up merits for ourselves, according to John 9: Work while it is day.

PROVERB. 30. Comparatur prudens quatuor animalculis, ibidem laudatis. Quatuor sunt minima terrae, et ipsa sunt sapientiora Sapientibus: Formica, populus infirmus, qui praeparat in messe cibum suum: Lepusculus, plebs invalida, quae collocat in petra cubile suum: Regem Locusta non habet, et egreditur universa per turmas suas: Stellio manibus nititur, et moratur in aedibus regis. Haec quatuor animalia proponuntur Magistri prudentiae, ut notat Lyranus ibi cum S. Bonav. ubi egregie haec animalia mysticis parallelis exponit nobis; ut imitemur Lepusculum, ponentes cubile in petra, quae est Christus, ut dicitur prima Cor. 10. Stellionem, vel Lacertum, qui alas non habens, supplet manibus indigentiam naturae, sic et prudens diligentia in operando suppleat defectum naturae: Locustam, quae alte ascendit, et statim ad terram descendit; sic enim et prudens alte per sancta desideria ascendit, et descendit statim ad propriae infirmitatis cognitionem, atque inde divini auxilii necessitatem recognoscit; Iuxta id Psal. 110. Ascendit usque ad caelos, et descendit usque ad abyssos. Et iuxta D Gregorium infra. Denique Formicam imitemur, ut prudenter paremus nobis merita, iuxta id Ioan. 9. Operamini dum dies est.

6 Matthew 10: Be therefore prudent as serpents, to which comparison the Holy Doctor best expounds in the place cited with five parallels.

7 FIRST, indeed, the serpent exposes its whole body to blows, that it may save its head; so the prudent Christian exposes all things, that he may preserve the honor of Christ the Head, as is said Philippians 3: Those things that were gains to me, I have counted as loss for Christ.

PRIMO enim serpens totum corpus exponit ictibus, ut caput servet, sic prudens Christianus exponit omnia, ut honorem Christi Capitis servet, ut dicitur Philip. 3. Quae mihi fuerunt lucra, haec arbitratus sum, propter Christum,

8 SECONDLY, the serpent, among narrow and smooth rocks, strips off its old skin; so too the Christian ought to put off the old man, as the Apostle admonishes, Ephesians 4.

SECUNDO, serpens inter angustas, ac radentia saxa pellem exspoliat veterem; sic et Christianus debet veterem hominem exuere, ut monet Apostolus Ephes. 4.

9 THIRDLY, the serpent beguiles the charmer, as is said Psalm 57. So too prudent Saints beguile the demon, stopping one ear with the tail, that is, the memory of last things; according to Ecclesiastes 7: Remember your last things, and you shall not sin forever; and they stop the other ear, in the manner of the serpent, in the earth, by the memory of their own fragility, because it is said Genesis 4: You are dust, and into dust you shall return.

TERTIO serpens deludit incantatorem, ut dicitur Psal. 57. Sic et prudentes Sancti daemonem deludunt, unam aurem obturant cauda, idest memoria novissimorum; iuxta id Eccles. 7. Memorare novissima tua, et in aeternum non peccabis; et alteram aurem, more serpentis obturant in terra, memoria propriae fragilitatis, quia dicitur Genes. 4. Pulvis es, et in pulverem reverteris.

10 FOURTHLY, the serpent lies in wait for the heel; so prudent men conquer the desires of the flesh, attending to what the end of pleasure is, namely infernal death, according to Romans 6: The end of them is death.

QUARTO, insidiatur serpens calcaneo; sic viri prudentes superant desideria carnis, attendentes, quis finis delectationis, scilicet mors infernalis, iuxta id Rom. 6. Finis illorum mors.

11 FIFTHLY, the serpent flees woman on account of the enmities, Genesis 3, declared against it; so the prudent man flees the occasions of fornication, according to the counsel of Paul, 1 Corinthians 10.

QUINTO, fugit mulierem ob inimicitias, Genes. 3. intimatas; sic prudens fugit occasiones fornicationis, iuxta consilium Pauli prima Corinth. 10.

12 ANOTHER prudence of the serpent the Holy Doctor expounds in the sermon on the Holy Apostles Philip and James, for when it feels itself weighed down by poison, it eats a certain herb, by whose virtue it vomits up the poison; then it hastens to a bath of water, and there washes itself, and remains fasting for many days; whence the skin is loosened from the flesh, and amid the smooth narrows of the rock it sheds its skin, that it may put on a new one. So too man, prudent, wishing to become a new man from the old, ought to wash himself with tears, eat the bitter herb of penance, and thus vomit up the poison of sins by confessing; then pass through the narrow gate of satisfaction, and thus, stripped of the spoils of faults, put on grace. See the holy Doctor there.

ALIAM prudentiam serpentis exponit S. Doct. serm. de SS. Philippo, et Iacob, nam cum se sentit veneno gravatum, herbam quandam edit, cuius virtute venenum evomit; mox ad balneum aquae properat, ibique se lavat, et multis diebus ieiunus permanet; ex quo cutis a carne relaxatur, inter radentes angustias petrae pellem exuit, ut novam induat. Sic et homo prudens, volens ex veteri fieri novus homo, debet se lacrymis lavare, amaram poenitentiae herbam edere, et sic venenum peccatorum confitendo evomere; mox per satisfactionis foramen arctum transire, et sic spoliis culparum exutus, induere gratiam. Vide ibi Sanctum Doctorem.

13 The SAME comparisons he has in sermon 2 on one Holy Doctor, which is sermon 31, and sermon 33, where he speaks according to Aristotle in the book on the history of animals, book 8, chapter 17:

> EASDEM comparationes habet sermone 2. de uno S. Doctore, qui est 31. et serm. 33. ubi loquitur iuxta Aristotelem libro de historia animalium, 8. capite 17:

14 IN THE sermon 2 on St. Anthony of Padua, from Job 38, he praises the prudence of the cock: Who gave the cock understanding. And in the sermon on St. Lucy he recounts many examples of prudence from sacred and profane histories. That it is a virtue, indeed, confess Aristotle, books 3 and 6 of the Ethics, chapters 5 and 13, Cicero, books 1 and 2 of the Tusculans, 99, Seneca, letter 68, Plutarch, in the book on the virtue of morals, Juvenal, Satire 10, Valerius Maximus, on prudence. See the Holy Doctor also in book 3, distinction 33, question 3, citing them.

> SERMONE vero 2. de S. Antonio de Padua ex Iob. 38. Galli prudentiam laudat: Quis dedit Gallo intelligentiam. Et serm. de S. Lucia, multa prudentiae exempla refert ex historiis Sacris, et prophanis. Eam enim esse virtutem fatentur Aristoteles 3. et 6. Eth. cap. 5. et 13. Cicero lib. 1. et 2. Tuscul. 99. Seneca epist. 68. Plutarchus in lib. de virtute morum, Iuvenalis Satyra 10. Valerius Maximus de prudentia. Vide S. Doct. etiam in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 3. illos referentem.

15 IT IS PROVED thirdly by the Holy Doctor, in the book cited, the Pharetra, chapter 27, from the Holy Fathers unanimously asserting it.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. lib. citato Pharetra, cap. 27. e SS. PP. id unanimiter asserentibus.

16 ST. AUGUSTINE, book 1 on the morals of the Church, chapter 15, divides the four Cardinal virtues, as St. Bonaventure also teaches in book 3, distinction 33, question 2, to the first argument; then in the Soliloquies, book 1, chapter 14, he teaches that the perfect work is made by prudence, saying: Great care must be taken, while we act in this body, lest the feathers of our wings be impeded by any viscous thing of the senses: these must be whole and perfect, that we may fly forth to that light from these darknesses.

> D. AUGUST. lib. 1. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 15. dividit quatuor virtutes Cardinales, ut docet etiam D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2. ad 1. argumentum; mox in soliloquiis lib. 1. cap. 14. docet, opus perfectum prudentia fieri, dicens: Cavendum est magnopere, dum hoc corpus agimus, ne quo sensibilium visco pennae nostrae impediantur: quibus integris, perfectisque, opus est, ut ad illam lucem ab his tenebris evolemus.

17 ST. AMBROSE, on offices, book 1, chapter 10: The wise man, that he may speak well, first considers many things, what he may say, and to whom, in what place and time, and chapter 27, says: The first fount of duty is prudence. St. Gregory, book 2 of the Morals, chapter 36, says: The solid edifice of our mind is sustained by these four virtues, of which the first is prudence, and book 7 of the Morals, chapter 15: When the uprightness of Saints raises men to liberty of voice, consideration of one's own infirmity guards them in humility.

> D. AMBROSIUS de offic. lib. 1. cap. 10. Sapiens, ut loquatur, multa prius considerat, quid dicat, et cui dicat, quo in loco, et tempore, et cap. 27. ait: Primus officii fons, prudentia est. D. Gregorius lib. 2. Moral. cap. 36. ait: Solidum mentis nostrae aedificium sustineri his quatuor virtutibus, e quibus prima est prudentia, et lib. 7. Moral. cap. 15. Cum rectitudo Sanctorum viros ad libertatem vocis erigit, consideratio infirmitatis propriae in humilitate custodit.

18 St. Bernard on the Canticle, sermon 49: Discretion is not so much a virtue as a certain moderator and charioteer of the virtues, and the orderer of affections and the directress of morals: Take this away, and virtue will be vice. In the same way speaks St. Isidore, the book On Synonyms, chapter 16: Whatever you do well with discretion is virtue; whatever you carry out without discretion is vice. For virtue without discretion is reputed as vice. And book 2 on the supreme good, chapter 25: It helps nothing, that we discern with a more prudent sense between good and evil, unless by our works we guard against ill-conceived thoughts, or carry forward good things begun.

> D. Bernardus super Cant. serm. 49. Discretio est non tam virtus, quam quaedam moderatrix, et auriga virtutum, ordinatrixque affectuum, et morum directrix: Tolle hanc, et virtus vitium erit. Eodem modo loquitur D. Isidorus, lib. de Synon. cap. 16. Quidquid bono cum discretione feceris, virtus est; quidquid sine discretione gesseris, vitium est. Virtus enim indiscreta, pro vitio reputatur. Et lib. 2. de summo bono, cap. 25. Nihil iuvat, quod inter bonum, et malum sensu prudentiore discernimus, nisi opere, aut male cogitata caveamus, aut bona inchoata faciamus.

19 And St. Jerome on Hosea, book 2, chapter 7: Prudence without goodness is malice.

> Et D. Hieronymus in Oseam, lib. 2. cap. 7. Prudentia absque bonitate, malitia est.

20 And Cassian, Conference 1, chapter 23, from the opinion of Abbot Moses, on Discretion, or Prudence, says: This holds among all the virtues the citadel and primacy.

> Et Cassianus, Coll. 1. cap. 23. ex sententia Abb. Moyfis de Discretione, seu Prudentia ait. Haec inter cunctas virtutes arcem, et primatum tenet.

21 And conference 2, chapter 2: For this is that which is named in the Gospel the eye and lamp of the body, according to that saying of the Savior: The lamp of your body is your eye; and Matthew 6, and Luke 11. Because (he says) it discerns all the thoughts and acts of man, it foresees and surveys all things that are to be done. The same the Holy Doctor has here, and on that place of Luke, though he expounds the lamp as intention. In which way also St. Gregory mingles prudence with intention, homily 22 on Ezechiel: It remains that at last we be wearied in the ministry of the word, or bestow on the needy, or tame the flesh by abstinence, or be moved by Zeal, or at times mildly bear with evil things through patience, that we ought above all to examine our intention, that whatever we do we may do not with our own, but with the Zeal of the Lord.

> Et coll. 2. cap. 2. Haec namque est, quae oculus, et lucerna corporis in Evangelio nuncupatur, secundum illam sententiam Salvatoris: Lucerna corporis tui est oculus tuus; et Matth. 6. Et Lucae 11. Eo quod (inquit) ipsas cogitationes hominis universas, actusque discernens, cuncta, quae agenda sunt, praevidet, atque perlustret. Eadem habet S. Doct. hic, et ad eum Lucae locum, tametsi per lucernam intentionem explicet. Quo pacto etiam D. Gregorius, prudentiam cum intentione permiscet, homil. 22. in Ezech. Restat ut fine in verbi ministerio fatigemur, seu indigentibus nostra largiamur, seu per abstinentiam carnem domemus, seu Zelo moveamur, seu per patientiam aliquando leniter prava toleremus, ut summopere debemus in intentione nostra discutere, quatenus omne, quod facimus, non nostro, sed Domini Zelo faciamus.

22 He recounts OTHER places of the Holy Fathers, the Holy Doctor, in book 3, distinction 33, as of St. Jerome on chapter 8 of Wisdom, St. Augustine, book 12 on the Trinity, chapter 14, and book 14, chapter 9, Bede, in the Gloss, on chapter 26 of Exodus; and the Gloss on Genesis 1: A fountain went forth from Paradise, which is divided into four heads. Juvenal, Satire 10, closes all the Encomia of this virtue:

> ALIA loca Sanctorum Patrum refert S Doct. in 3. dist. 33. ut D. Hieronymi ad 8. Sap. D. August. 12. de Trinitate, cap. 14. et lib. 14. cap. 9. Bedae in Glossa, ad 26. Exodi; et Gloss. in id 1. Genes. Fons egrediebatur de Paradiso, qui dividitur in quatuor capita. Omnia huius virtutis Encomia claudit Iuvenalis, Satyra 10.

23 No deity is absent, if prudence be present. — And this is what the Holy Fathers cited say, that prudence is the Leader and Charioteer of all the virtues.

> Nullum numen abest, si sit prudentia. — Et hoc est, quod dicunt SS. Patres allegati, prudentiam esse Ducem, et Aurigam Virtutum omnium.

24 IT IS PROVED fourthly by the reasoning which the Holy Doctor uses in nearly all the places cited, especially in book 3 of the Sentences, distinction 33, throughout. Every habit good and fitting to man is a virtue; But that habit of prudence is of this kind: Therefore. The major is evident; for virtue is that which makes its possessor good, leading him to his end, and renders its act good, as Aristotle teaches in the Ethics, book 3, chapters 1, 8 and 12, and book 6, and Tully, book 2 on Invention, cited by St. Bonaventure, book 3, distinction 33, question 3, and St. Augustine, book 83 questions, question 31, and book 1 of the Soliloquies, chapter 6, cited by St. Bonaventure, in the place cited. The minor is proved: for it is best and most fitting to the nature of man for reason to establish and set before itself for pursuit or flight those things which according to right reason are to be sought or fled, which is the office of Prudence. The Holy Doctor confirms this, questions 1 and 3, from the contrary. For evil is that which is against prudence, which is the same as against reason, which indeed St. Dionysius confesses to be perverse, chapter 4 on the divine names, part 4.

> PROBATUR quarto ratione, qua utitur S. D. omnibus fere allegatis locis, praecipue in tertio sententiarum, dist. 33. passim. Omnis habitus bonus, et conveniens homini, est virtus; Sed habitus ille prudentiae est huiusmodi: Ergo. Maior patet; nam virtus est, quae bonum facit habentem, ducens in eius finem, et actum eius reddit bonum, ut docent Aristot. in Ethicis, lib. 3. cap. 1. 8. et 12. et lib. 6. et Tullius lib. 2. de Invent. apud D. Bonau. 3. dist. 33. quaest. 3. et D. August. lib. 83. qq. quaest. 31. et lib. 1. soliloq. cap. 6. apud D. Bonavent. loco citato. Minor probatur: nam optimum, et convenientissimum est naturae hominis, ratione constituere, et sibi praefigere ad expetendum, vel fugiendum ea, quae secundum rectam rationem sunt expetenda, vel fugienda, quod est officium Prudentiae. Quod confirmat S. Doct. quaest. 1. et 3. a contrario. Malum est enim, quod contra prudentiam est, quod idem est ac contra rationem, quod sane pravum fatetur esse S Dionysius cap 4. de divinis nominibus, p. 4.

25 I ASSERT secondly, that Prudence is a rational, intellectual, and moral Virtue. It is indeed rational, because it is in reason, as the Holy Doctor observes in book 3, distinction 33, question 3, in the body, §. To make evident. For it directs in discerning, which is proper to reason, as the Holy Doctor notes from Aristotle, book 6 of the Ethics, chapter 3. The same St. Thomas teaches, part 1-2, question 57.

> ASSERO secundo, Prudentiam esse Virtutem rationalem, intellectualem, et moralem. Est sane rationalis, quia in ratione, ut observat S. Doct. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 3. in corpore, §. Ad evidentiam. Nam dirigit in discernendo, quod rationis proprium est, ut notat S. Doct. ex Aristotele 6. Eth. cap. 3. Idem docet S. Thomas 1. 2. quaest. 57.

26 THE office of reason, however, is twofold, to discern and to define. These, however, are the functions of prudence, as St. Bonaventure teaches, in the places cited above. Hence in the Dieta salutis, chapter 5, he compares it to the assessor of a judge, who by judging directs the judge, or king, yet not by commanding; so Prudence rules reason: Wherefore Valentia does not define it rightly, first point: It is a faculty of the practical intellect for rightly determining, by an act of imperium, what is to be done. For imperium is nowhere conceded to the intellect, against the Thomists, part 1-2, question 57, article 6, and Tanner, dispute 3, question 1, dubium 1, and others, refuted in part 1-2, treatise 1, Disputation on Imperium. It is truly a moral virtue extrinsically, inasmuch as the intellect is moved and stirred by the appetite rightly ordered through the inclinations of the moral virtues, that through Prudence it may follow the good to be done, consentaneous to the right appetite.

RATIONIS autem duplex est officium, discernere, et definire. Haec autem sunt munera prudentiae, ut docet S. Bonav. locis supra allegatis. Hinc in Diaeta sal. c. 5. Eam comparat Iudicis assessori, qui iudicando dirigit iudicem, vel regem, non tamen imperando; ita regit Prudentia rationem: Quare non recte Valentia eam definit puncto primo. Est facultas intellectus practici ad recte statuendum, per actum imperii, quid agendum sit. Nullum enim imperium intellectui usquam conceditur, contra Thomistas prima 2. quaest. 57. art. 6. Tannerum disp. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 1. et alios confutatos prima secunda, Tract. 1. Disput. de Imperio. Est vero virtus moralis extrinsece, quatenus ab appetitu recto per inclinationes moralium virtutum movetur, et excitatur intellectus, ut per Prudentiam sequatur agibile bonum, et appetitui recto consentaneum.

27 I ASSERT thirdly, that Prudence is a Virtue distinct from the others.

ASSERO tertio, Prudentiam esse Virtutem, a caeteris distinctam.

28 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure above with the authorities, which reckon it to be a special virtue.

PROBATUR a D. Bonav. supra authoritatibus, quae eam specialem esse virtutem recensent.

29 SECONDLY it is proved by him in book 3, distinction 33, questions 2 and 3, from the diverse reason of the object, which is the ratio agibilis according to reason, as conforming to the right appetite, and thus as the practical true, or good. Tanner uses this reason, number 12.

SECUNDO probatur ab eo in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2. et 3. ex ratione obiecti diversa, quae est ratio agibilis secundum rationem, ut conformis appetitui recto, atque adeo ut practice vero, seu bono. Hac ratione utitur Tannerus num. 12.

30 THIRDLY it is proved by the Holy Doctor from the acts of Prudence, which are to direct all the acts of virtue according to the right dictate of reason.

TERTIO probatur a S. Doct. ex actibus Prudentiae, qui sunt dirigere ad omnes actus virtutis, secundum rectum dictamen rationis.

31 IT IS PROVED fourthly from the powers in which the Cardinal virtues are subjected, and which each directs; for Prudence directs the Rational, Temperance the Concupiscible, Fortitude the Irascible.

PROBATUR quarto ex potentiis, in quibus subiectantur Virtutes Cardinales, quasque dirigunt, quia Prudentia dirigit Rationalem, Temperantia Concupiscibilem; Fortitudo Irascibilem.

32 IT IS PROVED fifthly by St. Bonaventure from the opposed vices; for one is opposed to one; for under one aspect there are opposed to Prudence Precipitancy, Inconsideration, Inconstancy, Negligence, Craft, Guile, Fraud, which are surely not opposed to the other virtues.

PROBATUR quinto a S. Bonav. ex vitiis oppositis; unum enim uni opponitur; nam Prudentiae sub una ratione opponuntur Praecipitatio, Inconsideratio, Inconstantia, Negligentia, Astus, Dolus, Fraus, quae sane aliis non opponuntur virtutibus.

33 IT IS PROVED sixthly by the Holy Doctor from the mean points; for Prudence is a mean between extremes, between which the other virtues mediate; for so Prudence is between Inconsiderateness, Precipitancy, Craftiness, Guile, etc.

PROBATUR sexto a S. Doct. ex medietatibus; nam Prudentia est media inter extrema, inter quae mediant aliae virtutes, sic enim Prudentia est inter Inconsiderantiam, Praecipitationem, Astutiam, Dolum, etc.

34 You will object, first. The ratio agibilis, as it is the practical truth by conformity with the right appetite, is so widely extended, and is more common, than the ratio agibilis as it is moral good, by conformity with right reason, or with the right appetite; but this ratio of good does not constitute any special virtue, but only the genus of moral virtue: Therefore neither will that ratio constitute the special virtue of Prudence.

> Obiicies primo. Ratio agibilis, ut est verum practice per conformitatem cum appetitu recto, tam late patet, et communior est, quam ratio agibilis, ut est bonum morale, per conformitatem cum ratione recta, seu cum appetitu recto; sed haec ratio boni non constituit specialem aliquam virtutem, sed solum genus moralis virtutis: Ergo neque illa ratio constituet specialem virtutem Prudentiae.

35 The Holy Doctor answers, distinction 33, question 2, to the fifth, that they are equal in a certain universality of predication; but not at all in order; for the Practical True has order only to reason, because it is difficult to rectify in one way, therefore one virtue is necessary: But the matters of the powers, in order to good, suffer various difficulties.

> Respondet S. Doct. dist. 33. quaest. 2. ad 5. universalitate quadam praedicationis esse pares; sed ordine nequaquam; nam Verum practicum habet ordinem solum ad rationem, quia uno modo rectificare difficile est, ideo una virtus est necessaria: At materiae potentiae, in ordine ab bonum, varias patiuntur difficultates.

36 You will object, secondly. It belongs to Prudence to inspect the mean, which also befits every virtue; for whatever sees the essential mean of its end: Therefore it is not a special virtue.

> Obiicies secundo. Prudentiae est inspicere medium, quod cuilibet virtuti etiam convenit; quaecumque enim videt medium essentiale sui finis: Ergo non est virtus specialis.

37 The Holy Doctor answers, that to see its own mean by the mode of a determinate inclination is appropriated to each virtue; but that it is nevertheless proper to prudence to see the mean by the mode of direction. Wherefore Prudence sees the mean for itself and for others by directing; for it perfects the rational power, whose it is to consider and discern, and in this mode it is proper to Prudence. Wherefore as the eye sees for itself and for the other members, so prudence directs, seeing itself and the other virtues. Although as regards inclination all tend toward their end, and move, as it were, like a weight, in the manner in which gravity is said to look toward the center of the world; for so every virtue is said to look toward the mean of right living.

> Respondet S. Doct. appropriari cuilibet virtuti videre suum medium per modum determinatae inclinationis; sed tamen proprium esse prudentiae videre medium per modum directionis. Quare Prudentia sibi, et aliis hoc modo videt medium dirigendo; perficit enim potentiam rationalem, cuius est considerare, et discernere, et hoc modo proprium est Prudentiae. Quare sicut oculus videt sibi, et aliis membris, sic prudentia dirigit, se videns, ac virtutes caeteras. Tametsi quoad inclinationem omnes tendant ad suum finem, atque quasi pondus moveant, ad modum quo gravitas dicitur aspicere ad centrum mundi; sic enim omnis virtus dicitur aspicere ad medium recte vivendi.

Question III: What the offices of prudence are

1 From the argument recently adduced we have, first, with D. Bonaventure, that the office of Prudence is not to propose to the moral virtues their intrinsic ends, insofar as they are formally ends, but only to propose to them the means by which they may attain such ends. The same is held by D. Thomas here, art. 6. and his disciples, and by Tannerus disput. 3. question 1. dub. 3. against Scotus in 3.

dist. 36. single question, art. 2., where he contends that the ends themselves are set before the moral virtues by Prudence.

> Quaenam sint PRUDENTIAE munera.
> Ex nuper allato argumento habemus primo cum D. Bonavent. Prudentiae munus non esse proponere virtutibus moralibus earum fines intrinsecos, quatenus sunt formaliter fines, sed solum proponere ipsis media, per quae attingant huiusmodi fines. Idem sentiunt D. Thom. hic, art. 6. et discipuli, ac Tannerus disput. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 3. contra Scotum in 3. dist. 36. quaest. unica, art. 2. ubi contendit, fines ipsos praefigi virtutibus moralibus a Prudentia.

2 It is proved by D. Bonaventure loc. cit. from the doctrine of Aristotle 6 Eth. cap. 12., where he affirms that the moral virtue intends the end at the impulse of reason, namely through Synderesis; while Prudence directs and makes right those things that are toward the end: The work (he says) is effected from Prudence and from moral Virtue: for Virtue proposes the goal; Prudence, however, makes right those things that tend toward it, and cap. 13. Virtue [assigns] the end; Prudence [makes right] those things that tend toward the end, so that we may act.

> Probatur a D. Bonavent. loc. cit. ex doctrina Aristotelis 6. Eth. cap. 12. ubi affirmat, ab ipsa virtute morali intendi finem ex impulsu rationis, nimirum per Synderesim; a Prudentia vero dirigi, et recta effici ea, quae sunt ad finem: Opus (ait) ex Prudentia, et ex morali Virtute efficitur: Virtus enim propositum scopum: Prudentia autem, quae ad ipsum tendunt, recta efficit, et cap. 13. Virtus finem; Prudentia, quae ad finem tendunt, ut agamus, facit.

3 Secondly it is proved by Valentia disp. 4. question 1. punct. 3. with a reason drawn from the difference between Synderesis and Prudence; for the office of Synderesis is to set before the virtue the good appointed to it as an end, as that Temperance should use pleasures moderately, as D. Bonaventure teaches in 2. dist. 39. art. 2. question 1., and this indeed moves the affection as a kind of weight, as S. Bonaventure teaches there, and in 3. dist. 33. question 2.. Prudence therefore directs toward the means, by ordering reason; otherwise, if both were directed to the same thing, it would be necessary to posit another directive habit of reason.

> Secundo probatur a Valentia disp. 4. quaest. 1. punct. 3. ratione ducta ex differentia Synderesis, et Prudentiae; nam munus Synderesis est praefigere virtuti bonum, ei praestitutum in finem, ut Temperantiae esse utendum delectationibus moderate, ut docet D. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 39. art. 2. quaest. 1. et haec sane movet, quasi pondus, affectum, ut docet S. Bonav. ibi, et in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2. Prudentia ergo dirigit ad media, ordinando rationem, alioqui si ambae essent ad idem, oporteret ponere alium habitum rationis directivum.

4 It is proved thirdly from the connection of Counsel and Prudence; for Prudence is concerned only with those things about which there is consultation, as the holy Fathers teach, as related from D. Bonaventure and from other cited places of the Seraphic Doctor, as is evident. But consultation is about means to an end, not about the formal ends of the virtues themselves: Therefore also Prudence. The major is clear from the Philosopher lib. 6. Eth. cap. 5. and 7., where he says: Prudence is concerned with human goods, and with those that fall under consultation. For we say that the chief task of the prudent man is to counsel well. The minor is proved; for consultation is only about doubtful things, and the ends of the virtues themselves are not such, as Aristotle teaches cap. 7., saying: About those things no one consults which cannot come about otherwise, nor about those whose end is not some [end].

> Probatur tertio ex connexione Consilii, et Prudentiae; nam Prudentia circa illa solum versatur, de quibus est consultatio, ut docent SS. PP. relati ex D. Bonavent. et ex aliis locis citatis Seraphici constat. Consultatio autem est de mediis ad finem, non de ipsis virtutum finibus formaliter: Ergo etiam Prudentia. Maior patet ex Philosopho lib 6. Eth. cap. 5. et 7. ubi ait: Prudentia circa humana bona versatur, atque ea, quae in consultationem cadunt. Prudentis enim id maxime opus esse dicimus, ut recte consuletur. Minor probatur; nam consultatio est tantum de rebus dubiis tales autem non sunt ipsi fines virtutum, ut docet Aristoteles cap. 7. dicens: De illis autem consulat nemo, quae evenire aliter nequeunt, neque de iis, quorum finis aliquis non est.

5 Note, however, with D. Bonaventure opusc. de septem donis, cap. 6., that Prudence and Counsel are toward the end: first, insofar as it sets forth means in order to it, and so intends it as that for whose sake, as Caietanus also teaches question 47. art. 6., and Valentia puncto 3..

Adverte tamen cum D. Bonav. opusc. de septem donis, cap. 6. Prudentiam, et Consilium esse ad finem, Primo quatenus media praefigit in ordine ad eum, atque adeo intendit eum, ut id, cuius gratia, ut docet etiam Caietanus quaest. 47. art. 6. et Valentia puncto 3.

6 Then, Prudence is said to tend toward the ends, insofar as it judges and determines, in the manner of Affection, in which mediocrities the reason of the end of the virtue lies, as the S. Doctor teaches in Diaeta, loc. cit., with Aristotle 2 Eth. cap. 6. and D. Thomas art. 7..

Deinde Prudentia dicitur tendere ad fines, quatenus iudicat, et decernit ad modum Affectionis in quibus medietatibus sit ratio finis virtutis, ut docet S. Doct. in Diaeta, loc. cit. cum Aristotele 2. Eth. cap. 6. et D. Thom. art. 7.

7 The S. Doctor assigns, moreover, in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 12., the difference of Prudence from Counsel; for Counsel, he says, [determines] whether something is to be done: Prudence, however, shows for what end and with what circumstances applied, of time, place, etc.; just as it belongs to one science to know whether it is expedient for someone to be saved, and to another to know how he is to be saved, etc.

Assignat autem S. Doct. in Diaeta, tit. 6. cap. 12. differentiam Prudentiae a Consilio, nam Consilium dicit: utrum sit aliquid agendum: Prudentia vero ostendit, quo fine, et quibus circumstantiis adhibitis, temporis, loci, etc. sicut alterius est scientiae cognoscere: An expediat aliquem salvari, alterius vero scire qualiter sit salvandus, etc.

8 You will object, first, with Scotus. Every moral virtue supposes the dictate of Prudence: Therefore [it is] toward the end.

9 It is answered, that it supposes this dictate only in order to the means; but toward the end it supposes the dictate of Synderesis, as I said.

Respondetur, Supponere hoc dictamen in ordine ad media tantum; circa finem autem supponere dictamen Synderesis, ut dixi.

10 You will object, secondly. Unless prudence sets the end before the virtue, there will not be able to be one prudence in the matter of each moral virtue.

Obiicies secundo. Nisi prudentia praefigat finem virtuti, non poterit esse una prudentia in materia cuiusque moralis virtutis.

11 It is answered, that there is one Prudence, common to all the virtues.

Respondetur, esse unam Prudentiam, communem omnibus virtutibus.

12 I assert, thirdly, that Prudence does not set the means before the virtues by the command of reason.

> Assero tertio, Prudentiam non praefigere media virtutibus per rationis imperium.

13 It is proved, because command belongs to the will, which is as it were the queen, as I showed in the Treatise on the Soul, disp. 9. cap. 5. question 8. and in other places.

> Probatur*, quia imperium est voluntatis, quae est veluti regina, ut ostendi* Tractatu de Anima, disp. 9. cap. 5. quaest. 8. et aliis locis.

14 Nor indeed does Aristotle 6 Eth. cap. 10. make it preceptive by the command of reason, as Valentia thinks.

> Neque vero Aristoteles 6. Eth. cap. 10. eam ex rationis imperio praeceptivam facit, ut putat Valentia.

15 I assert, fourthly, that the dictate of Prudence is with a certain solicitude. Therefore Aristotle lib. 6. Eth. cap. 9. says: The things you have counseled are to be done quickly; but one must counsel slowly and at length, especially in grave matters, as D. Gregory also teaches lib. 2. Regist. indic. 10. cap. 6., cited by D. Bonaventure lib. 2. Pharetra, cap. 27., where he says: In the highest matters, counsel ought not to be hasty.

> Assero quarto, dictamen Prudentiae esse cum quadam sollicitudine. Ideo Aristoteles lib. 6. Eth. cap. 9. ait: Cito agenda esse, quae consultaveris; tarde vero, ac diu consultandum, maxime in rebus gravibus*, ut docet etiam D. Gregorius* lib. 2. Regist. indic. 10. cap. 6. apud D. Bonav. lib. 2. Pharetra, cap. 27. ubi ait: Summis in rebus, citum non oportet esse consilium.

16 It is proved from the contrary. For negligence, sloth, and torpor are reproved, as you will see in D. Bonaventure p. 1. Centil. sect. 8. and lib. 3. Pharetra, cap. 8. and in Diaeta tit. 1. cap. 7.

> Probatur ex contratio. Negligentia enim, desidia, et torpor vituperantur, ut videbis apud D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 8. et lib. 3. Pharetra, cap. 8. et in Diaeta tit. 1. cap. 7.

17 Hence he observes there that the slothful man is greatly reproved. Proverb. 21. The desires of the slothful kill him. Proverb. 10. the slack hand has wrought poverty. So Matth. 12. an idle [house] is entered by seven demons. And Matth. 25. Take from him the talent. Eccles. 22. On a lump of mud the slothful shall be stoned. Prov. 18. Fear casts down the slothful. Prov. 24. I passed by the field of the slothful man: and behold it was all filled with nettles. And in the same place: How long, sluggard, do you sleep? And Proverb. 6. Go to the ant, O sluggard. See there the S. Doctor differing excellently.

> Hinc observat ibi, valde reprehendi pigrum. Proverb. 21. Desideria occidunt pigrum. Proverb. 10. egestatem operata est manus remissa. Sic Matth. 12. otiosum ingrediuntur septem daemones. Et Matth. 25. Tollite ab eo talentum. Eccles. 22. In lapide luteo lapidabitur piger. Prov. 18. Timor deiicit pigrum. Prov. 24. Per agrum hominis pigri transivi : et ecce totum repleverant urticae. Et ibidem : Usquequo piger dormis ? Et Proverb. 6. Vade ad formicam o piger. Vide ibi S. Doct. egregie differentem.

18 I ADD, that Prudence sets forth means for all ends, even those of the public good.

19 IT IS PROVED: For in 6. Eth. cap. 5. Aristotle says that Prudence is right reason of things to be done: Therefore also concerning the public good; especially since this is the more necessary, the more necessary the public good is, truly especially for the Christian; of whom it is said in 1 Cor. 13: Charity seeketh not her own. The Romans observed this, as related by Valerius Maximus lib. 6. cap. 4. For every man was hastening to increase the goods of his country, not his own. The reason is because, as Aristotle says 1. Eth. cap. 2., even if the good be the same for one man and for a city, yet the good of the city seems a greater and more divine thing both to acquire and to conserve. And indeed even each man can be content, if it be for one alone; yet it is more beautiful and more divine if the good be brought about for one people and for cities.

> PROBATUR : Nam 6. Eth. cap. 5. ait Aristoteles, Prudentiam esse rectam rationem agibilium : Ergo etiam circa bonum publicum : eo vel maxime, quia haec magis necessaria est, quo magis necessarium est bonum publicum, maxime vero Christiano; de quo prima Cor. 13. dicitur : Charitas non quaerit quae sua sunt. Hoc observabant Romani apud Valerium maximum lib. 6. cap. 4. Patriae enim rem unusquisque, non suam augere properabat. Ratio est, quia, ut ait Aristoteles 1. Eth. cap. 2. etiamsi et uni hominum, et civitati bonum idem sit; bonum tamen civitatis et acquirere, et conservare, maius quid, ac divinius videtur. Ac contentus quidem esse etiam unicuique potest, si uni soli; pulchrius tamen, ac divinius, si uni genti, ac civitatibus bonum efficiatur.

20 THEREFORE Prudence can be divided, so that one kind is Regal, or Legislative in the community of a Kingdom: another Political in a City: another Oeconomical in a household: another Military in an Army; as Aristotle seems to hold 6. Eth. cap. 8. See D. Thomas at greater length, question 50.

> IGITUR dividi potest Prudentia, ut alia sit Regalis, seu Legislativa in communitate Regni : Alia Politica in Civitate : Alia Oeconomica in domo : Alia militaris in Exercitu; ut videtur sentire Aristoteles 6. Eth. cap. 8. Vide latius D. Thomam quaest. 50.

Question IV: Who share in prudence

1 FIRST a question arises: Whether Prudence is in subjects; for Aristotle 3. Eth. capit. 3. seems to deny it; but he speaks of subjects, as subjects are. For truly, since Prudence is connected with the other moral virtues, with which even subjects can be endowed, there is no doubt that prudence is in them. Aristotle therefore speaks of subjects formally, as subjects are, as D. Thomas says in article 12.

> PRIMO oritur quaestio : An Prudentia sit in subditis; nam id videtur negare Aristoteles 3. Eth. capit. 3. sed loquitur de subditis, ut subditi sunt. Enim vero cum Prudentia connexa sit cum caeteris virtutibus moralibus, quibus praediti esse possunt etiam subditi, non est dubium, quin in eis sit prudentia. Loquitur ergo Aristoteles de subditis formaliter, ut subditi sunt, ut ait Divus Thomas articulo 12.

2 There is doubt also concerning sinners; for Aristotle 6. Ethic. cap. 12. says: It is manifest that no one can be prudent unless he be good. But on the contrary it stands strong, because in cap. 5. he says that even many wicked men are strong in counsel.

> De peccatoribus etiam dubitatur; nam Aristoteles 6. Ethic. cap. 12. ait : Manifestum esse, non posse quempiam prudentem esse, nisi bonus sit. In contrarium vero viget, quia cap. 5. multos etiam improbos consilio valere dicit.

3 I SAY, first, that in sinners prudence is false; I speak of those sinning mortally: Of this Rom. 8. The prudence of the flesh is death. And Luke 16. The children of this world are more prudent than the children of light in their generation, as S. Bonaventure notes on this passage, and in the places adduced at the beginning of quest. 1.

DICO primo, in peccatoribus falsam esse prudentiam; loquor de mortaliter peccantibus : De hac Rom. 8. Prudentia carnis mors est. Et Lucae 16. Filii huius saeculi prudentiores filiis lucis in generatione sua sunt, ut advertit S. Bonav. ad hunc locum, et locis adductis initio quaest. 1.

4 I SAY, secondly, that infused prudence is not in those sinning lethally.

DICO secundo, prudentiam infusam non esse in peccantibus lethaliter.

5 IT IS PROVED: For the moral virtues are infused, connected with Charity; as I showed in the first part of the second part, Treatise on the Virtues.

PROBATUR : Sunt enim virtutes infusae morales, connexae Charitati; ut ostendi prima secundae, Tract. de Virtutibus.

6 I ASSERT, thirdly, that acquired true Prudence is not in those who sin very frequently. For it is connected with the moral virtues, and is destroyed by frequently opposite acts.

ASSERO tertio, Prudentiam acquisitam veram non esse in iis, qui valde frequenter peccant. Est enim connexa cum virtutibus moralibus, et actibus frequenter oppositis destruitur.

7 I ASSERT, fourthly, that infused Prudence concerning one's own good is in the just.

ASSERO quarto, Prudentiam infusam circa bonum proprium esse in iustis.

8 IT IS PROVED, because it is connected with charity, as I showed in the place cited above.

PROBATUR, quia connexa est cum charitate, ut ostendi loco supra citato.

9 I ASSERT, fifthly, that in the young there is no acquired prudence.

ASSERO quinto, In iuvenibus non esse prudentiam acquisitam.

10 IT IS PROVED from Aristotle 6. Ethic. cap. 8. But the cause is, that prudence is of particular things, which become known to us by experience; but the young man is without experience; for experience is produced by length of time.

PROBATUR ex Aristotele 6. Ethic. cap. 8. Causa autem est, quia prudentia est singularium, quae experientia nobis innotescunt; Iuvenis autem expertus non est; experientiam enim temporis efficit longitudo.

Question V: How prudence is acquired, and lost

1 FIRST, therefore, it is acquired by experience of long time, as is said Job 12. And in much time Prudence. And Aristotle teaches 6. Eth. cap. 8. and 11.

Quomodo acquiratur, Prudentia et amittatur.

PRIMO igitur acquiritur longi temporis experientia, ut dicitur Iob. 12. Et in multo tempore Prudentia. Et docet Aristoteles 6. Eth. cap. 8. et 11.

2 SECONDLY, by the instruction of wise elders, as Aristotle teaches in that cap. 11. and D. Gregory Nazianzen oratione ad Nicolaum; and Cassianus coll. 2. cap. 10. Therefore we are warned in Proverb. 3.: Lean not on your own prudence; be not wise in your own sight. And Eccles. 6. If you have loved to hear, you will be wise. Stand in the multitude of prudent Elders, and join your heart to their Wisdom. See Cassianus above.

SECUNDO, eruditione seniorum sapientiorum, ut docet Aristoteles cap. illo 11. et D. Gregorius Nazianzenus, oratione ad Nicolaum*; et Cassianus* coll. 2. cap. 10. Ideo Proverb. 3. monemur : Ne innitaris prudentiae tuae; ne sis sapiens apud temetipsum. Et Eccles. 6. Si dilexeris audire, sapiens eris. In multitudine Presbyterorum prudentium sta, et Sapientiae illorum ex corde coniungere. Vide Cassianum supra.

3 It is indeed LOST, partly by forgetfulness, and by wicked affections. By forgetfulness indeed, insofar as it depends on experience, and this on memory, as the Philosopher teaches 1. Metaph. cap. 1. By wicked affections, however: for it depends on a right appetite. Therefore Exodi 23. Do not accept gifts, which even blind the prudent. Rom. 1. When they had known God, they did not glorify him as God, etc. for their foolish heart was darkened.

AMITTITUR vero, partim oblivione, et affectibus pravis. Per oblivionem quidem, quatenus pendet ab experientia, et haec ex memoria, ut docet Philosophus 1. Metaph. cap. 1. Per pravos autem affectus : nam pendet ex appetitu recto. Ideo Exodi 23. Ne accipias munera, quae etiam excaecant prudentes. Rom. 1. Cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt, etc. obscuratum est enim insipiens cor eorum.

Question VI: On the parts of the virtue of prudence

1 UNANIMOUSLY the Philosophers acknowledge that Prudence has certain parts; of which Aristotle 6. Ethic. cap. 8. and following. Cicero lib. 2. de Invent. August. lib. 83. qq. quaest. 61. Macrobius lib. 1. in somn. Scipionis, cap. 8. relates them; from these the S. Doctor everywhere lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 34. And 3. p. Centileg. sectione 41. and the opusc. de quatuor virtutibus Cardinalibus.

De partibus Virtutis PRUDENTIAE.

UNANIMES fatentur Philosophi, Prudentiae aliquas esse partes; de quibus Aristoteles 6. Ethic. cap. 8. et sequent. Cicero lib. 2. de Invent. August. lib. 83. qq. quaest. 61. Macrobius lib. 1. in somn. Scipionis, cap. 8. eas refert ex his S. Doct. passim lib. 5. Compend. Theol. cap. 34. Et 3. p. Centileg. sectione 41. et opusc. de quatuor virtutibus Cardinalibus.

2 The parts of Prudence are of THREE kinds. Some are integral, without which the perfect use of Prudence is not had: Others are subjective, in the manner in which species, subjected to a genus, are called subjective parts of the genus, as Man and Lion are parts of animal, because, namely, animal is predicated of them as of a subject. Others are potential parts of Prudence by similitude with the potential parts of the soul.

TRIPLICIS generis sunt partes Prudentiae. Aliae integrales, sine quibus non est perfectus usus Prudentiae : Aliae subiectivae ad modum, quo species, subiectae generi, dicuntur partes subiectivae generis, ut Homo, et Leo sunt partes animalis, quia, scilicet animal, de illis, tanquam de subiecto praedicatur. Aliae sunt Prudentiae partes potentiales per similitudinem partium potentialium animae.

3 The Integral Parts of Prudence, which integrate it as it were in the manner in which members integrate a body, are eight. Memory, which is cognition of past things; Understanding, which is cognition of present things; Docility, which is cognition through another's instruction; Solertia, which is cognition through one's own discovery; nem; Ratio of this, is because it is cognition by the inference of one thing from another; Providence, which is the ordination of means to an end; Circumspection, which is the consideration of the circumstances of the business; Caution, which is a certain contrivance against those things which can stand in the way and be an impediment.

PARTES Integrales Prudentiae, quae eam veluti integrant ad modum, quo membra integrant corpus, sunt octo. Memoria, quae est cognitio praeteritorum; Intelligentia quae est cognitio praesentium; Docilitas, quae est cognitio per alterius eruditionem; Solertia, quae est cognitio per propriam inventionem; Ratio huius, est quia est cognitio per illationem unius ex alio; Providentia, quae est ordinatio mediorum ad finem; Circumspectio, quae est animadversio circumstantiarum negotii; Cautio, quae est machinatio quaedam adversus ea, quae obstare, et impedimento esse possunt.

4 The perfect use of Prudence indeed depends on Memory, because it depends on experience; and this on many experiments, and experiments on many memories, as D. Thom. teaches quaest. 49. art. 1. ex Aristotle at the beginning of 1. Metaph.

A Memoria sane pendet usus perfectus Prudentiae, quia is pendet ab experientia; ea vero a multis experimentis, et experimenta a multis memoriis, ut docet D. Thom. quaest. 49. art. 1. ex Aristotele initio 1. Metaph.

5 It depends also on Understanding, which is the cognition of particulars with which Prudence is concerned, which cognition is from the intellect, partly through conversion to phantasms, partly also in the interior sense, or the cogitative power.

Ab Intelligentia etiam pendet, quae est cognitio particularium, circa quae versatur Prudentia, quae cognitio est ab intellectu, partim per conversionem ad phantasmata, partim etiam in sensu interiori, seu potentia cogitativa.

6 It DEPENDS on Docility, which Cicero praises Lib. 2. qq. Academ.; hence the S. Doctor defines it to be the power of instructing first oneself; then others.

PENDET etiam a Docilitate, quam laudat Cicero Lib. 2. qq. Academ. hinc definit S. Doctor, eam esse potentiam erudiendi prius se; deinde alios.

7 It DEPENDS on Solertia, which is swift conjecture, as Aristotle teaches 6. Eth. cap. 9. and D. Thom. quaest. 49. art. 4.

PENDET a Solertia, quae est celeris coniectatio, ut docet Aristoteles 6. Eth. cap. 9. et D. Thom. quaest. 49. art. 4.

8 It DEPENDS on reason, which is the cognition of one thing from another by inference; for Consultation, on which the decrees of Prudence depend, is altogether with ratiocination, as the Philosopher teaches 6. Eth. cap. 10. and D. Thomas art. 5.

PENDET a ratione, quae est cognitio unius ex alio per illationem; nam Consultatio, ex qua pendent decreta Prudentiae, omnino est cum ratiocinatione, ut docet Philosophus 6. Eth. cap. 10. et D. Thomas art. 5.

9 It DEPENDS on Prudence, which is the ordination of suitable means to an end; for Prudence is concerned with things to be done on account of an end, as the S. Doctor explains in the places alleged, and D. Thom. art. 6.

PENDET a Prudentia, quae est ordinatio mediorum idoneorum in finem; versatur enim Prudentia circa agibilia propter finem, ut explicat S. Doctor locis allegatis, et D. Thom. art. 6.

10 It DEPENDS on Circumspection; for prudence is concerned with particular things to be done, good on every side, consonant with reason; but the goodness of human actions depends on the circumstances, as I showed prima secundae, Treatise 1. disput. 9. question 5. and 10.

PENDET a Circumspectione; nam prudentia versatur circa particularia agibilia, undequaque bona, rationi consona; pendet autem bonitas actionum humanarum e circumstantiis, ut ostendi prima secundae, Tract. 1. disput. 9. quaest. 5. et 10.

11 It DEPENDS also on Caution, which is provision against contrary evils, which the S. Doctor calls the Prudence of discerning vices, bearing the appearance of virtues.

> PENDET etiam ex Cautione, quae est provisio adversus mala contraria, quam S. Doctor vocat Prudentiam discernendi vitia, virtutum speciem prae se ferentia.

12 As to the subjective parts of Prudence, D. Thom. treats quaest. 50. It is divided into governing Prudence and the particular prudence of the one acting. Again, Gubernativa is divided into Legislative, which is in the Prince, or Republic; into Political, which is in subjects concerning the same good of the Kingdom, or city; into Oeconomical, which is concerning the domestic good; and Military, concerning which the good of the army is concerned. Of the Gubernativa the S. Doctor treats excellently de Eccl. Hierarchia. But particular prudence is one most special species.

> Quo ad partes Prudentiae subiectivas, agit S. Thom. quaest. 50. Dividitur in Prudentiam gubernativam, et singularem operantis. Rursus Gubernativa dividitur in Legislativam, quae est in Principe, vel Republica; in Politicam, quae est in subditis circa idem bonum Regni, vel civitatis; in Oeconomicam, quae est circa bonum familiare; et Militarem, circa quae bonum exercitus versatur. De Gubernativa agit egregie S. Doctor de Eccl. Hierarchia. Prudentia vero particularis est una specie specialissima.

13 The potential Parts of Prudence are three intellectual virtues adjoined, serving prudence, namely, EUBULIA, which is rightly counseltative, as you have 6. Eth. cap. 9. SYNESIS is rightly judgmental by common rules; and GNOMES, which is rightly judgmental in natural reason beyond the common rules, when these fail because of the circumstances of a particular case. See D. Thomas quaest. 51., easily declaring these.

> PARTES Prudentiae potentiales sunt tres virtutes Intellectuales adnexae, deservientes prudentiae, scilicet, EUBULIA, quae est recte consiliativa, ut habes 6. Eth. cap. 9. SYNESIS est recte iudicativa per communes regulas; et GNOMES, quae est recte iudicativa in naturali ratione praeter communes regulas, quando hae deficiunt ob circumstantias casus particularis. Vide D. Thomam quaest. 51. facile haec declarantem.

14 Of these S. Bonaventure also treats in the places everywhere adduced here.

> DE his agit etiam S. Bonavent. locis passim hic adductis.

Question VII: How certain rules of prudence, applicable to the monastic and the political state, are drawn from the angelic hierarchy

1 SINCE the Church Militant is governed and ordered according to the order of the Church Triumphant, as it is said sap 9. Thou hast commanded me to build a temple, and an Altar according to the likeness of thy holy Tabernacle, which thou hast prepared from the beginning, the Seraphic Bonaventure, the wonderful sublimity of whose genius shines forth pre-eminently here, discourses on how the threefold state of those to be saved is conformed to the threefold Choir of Angels, both in public and private governance: And he says this threefold state is designated in that Ezechielis 14. If there be in the city these three men (namely Daniel, Noe, and Iob), shall they deliver their own souls. Daniel indeed, obtaining that supernatural Understanding by the merit of Abstinence, bears the Type of the Cloistered, who by abstaining even from things licit and illicit merit to be illumined from above. Noe, however, Governing the Ark, indicates prelates, to whom the Ark of the Church, to be saved from the Deluge of sin, has been entrusted by God. Truly Iob, a married man, intent on the works of piety and mercy, designates the assembly of the active and of married men.

Quomodo ex Angelica Hierarchia eruantur quaedam regulae prudentiae, statui Monastico et Politico Applicabiles.

CUM Iuxta ordinem Ecclesiae Triumphantis regatur, et disponatur Ecclesia Militans, ut dicitur sap 9. Dixisti me aedificare templum, et Altare secundum similitudinem sancti Tabernaculi, quod praeparasti ab initio, Seraphicus Bonaventura, cuius Ingenii stupenda sublimitas hic praeclare elucit dissertit, quomodo triplex salvandorum status, triplici Angelorum Choro, tam publico, quam privato regimine conformetur: Et hunc triplicem statum ait designari illo Ezechielis 14. Si fuerint in Civitate hi tres viri (scilicet Daniel, Noë, et Iob) Num liberabunt animas suas. Daniel quidem Abstinentiae merito obtinens istam supernaturalem Intelligentiam, Typum gerit Claustralium, qui et a licitis, illicitisque abstinendo merentur desuper illuminari. Noë autem Arcam Gubernans, praelatos indicat, quibus Ecclesiae Arca a peccati Diluvio salvanda, a Deo commissa est. Verum Iob coniugatus, pietatis, et misericordiae operibus intentus, Coetum activorum, et coniugatorum designat.

2 Of these, the first, entrusted to God by the vow of Religion, and emulating the supreme perfection and the better Charisms, are compared to the supreme choir of Angels; for these indeed pre-eminently surpass the others both in the fire of Love and in the privilege of Knowledge and in the balance of Justice.

Ex his primi, Religionis voto Deo saccati, et supremam perfectionem, ac meliora Charismata aemulantes, supremo Angelorum choro comparantur; hi etenim, et Amoris incendio, et Cognitionis privilegio, ac Iustitiae perpendiculo, caeteris praeeminent.

3 The SECOND, however, who exercise the office of Prelacy, are assimilated to the other Angelic choir; for Prelacy was instituted by God, either for the discipline and correction of morals, on account of which there is the sacerdotal dignity — to the Dominations they correspond: or for rescinding disputes and composing peace, which the judicial power serves, conformed to the Powers: or finally for coercing malice and Tyranny; and for this end the Regal, or Imperial Power was given, configured to the Potestates.

SECUNDI autem, qui Praelationis funguntur officio, alteri choro Angelico assimilantur; Praelatio enim a Deo est Instituta, vel ad morum Disciplinam, et correctionem, propter quam est dignitas sacerdotalis. Dominationibus respondent: vel ad lites rescindendas, pacemque componendam, cui inservit Iudiciaria potestas, Virtutibus conformis: vel denique ad malitiam, et Tirannidem coercendam; et hunc in finem data est Potestas Regalis, seu Imperialis, Potestatibus configurata.

4 The LAST are truly compared to the third choir; for if they are subjects and humble, they are like the principalities; if continent, like the Archangels; if finally devoted to the works of piety, they are configured to the ANGELS.

ULTIMI vero tertio choro comparantur; si enim subditi sunt et humiles, principatibus sunt similes; si continentes Archangelis; si denique operibus pietatis mancipati, ANGELIS configurantur.

5 Of the first state we must first treat briefly in certain sections.

DE primo statu prius breviter nobis quibusdam sectionibus agendum.

Section I: On the Prudence That Men Bound by Solemn Vows Claim from the First Choir of Angels

1 S. Doctor SUPPOSES here those three Hierarchical operations, to Purify, to Illuminate, and to Perfect; and by the names of Angels he proves at once private persons on account of certain excellences, and also rectors and Princes on account of their governance. Thus Matth. 11. John is called an Angel; and II. Reg. 14. and 19. David is compared to an Angel. So too in Apoc. the Rectors of the Churches are called Angels.

> SUPPONIT hic S. Doct. tres illas Hierarchicas operationes, Purgare, Illuminare, et Perficere; Angelorum autem nominibus tum privatas personas ob aliquas excellentias, tum etiam rectores, et Principes ob regimen comprobat. Sic Matth. 11. Ioannes dicitur Angelus; et II. Reg. 14. et 19. David Angelo comparatur. Ita etiam in Apoc. Rectores Ecclesiarum Angeli dicti sunt.

2 Therefore he first applies the supreme Hierarchy to the Religious, and to all perfect in vows.

3 He calls the Religious SERAPHIM, named from the divine fires of Charity, to whom he applies Heb. I. Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire, and Apoc. 10. I saw an Angel, whose face was as the sun, and his feet as a pillar of fire. And Isa. 6. One of the Seraphim flew to me, and in his hand a live coal, etc. Therefore thus the servants of God, kindled, ought to imitate the nature of fire: for fire is always raised upward, it consumes rust, and resolves earthly things into itself; it is moved most swiftly, it spreads itself to all things to be converted to itself.

> SERAPHIM, a divinis incendiis Charitatis denominatos, Religiosos nominat, quibus id Heb. I. applicat. Qui facit Angelos suos spiritus, et ministros suos flammam ignis*, et Apoc. 10.* Vidi Angelum, cuius facies ut Sol, et pedes eius, tanquam columna ignis. Et Isa. 6. Volavit ad me unus de Seraphim, et in manu eius calculus ignitus*, etc. Sic igitur servi Dei accensi debent ignis naturam imitari, semper enim sursum attollitur ignis, consumit rubiginem, et terrena in se resolvit, velocissime movetur, expanditur ad omnia in se convertenda.*

4 THUS the Religious, kindled with the fire of Charity, will be proved, if they ascend swiftly, despising earthly things; if they strive to resolve all things into the love of God; if they work swiftly and with speed, as it is said: Isa. 18. Go, ye swift angels, and Ezech. I. Whithersoever the Spirit went, the wheels were lifted up following him, for the spirit of life, etc.; that is, they ought to shine with the best example of Charity, for the life of the religious is the exemplar of others. Therefore Deuter. 17. They shall receive the exemplar of the law from the priests, and I Timot. IV. Be thou an example of the faithful.

> ITA Religiosi igne Charitatis accensi probabuntur, si velociter ascendunt, terrena spernentes; si omnia in amorem Dei resolvere satagant; si velociter operentur, et celeres, ut dicitur: Isa. 18. Ite Angeli veloces*, et Ezech. I.* Quocunque ibat Spiritus, rotae levebantur sequentes eum, spiritus enim vitae*, etc. idest Charitatis splendere debent optimo exemplo, nam religiosi vita est aliorum exemplar. Ideo Deuter. 17.* Accipient legis exemplar a sacerdotibus*, et prima Timot. IV.* Esto exemplum fidelium.

5 They ought moreover to PURIFY others, as it is said Malach. III. He shall sit like a refiner's fire, and shall purge the sons of Levi. Therefore the Seraphim say to Isaias: Thy iniquity shall be taken away, and thy sin shall be purged.

> DEBENT autem alios purgare, ut dicitur Malach. III. Erit quasi ignis conflans, et sedebit, et purgabit filios Levi. Ideo Seraphim Isaia dicunt: Auferetur iniquitas tua, et peccatum tuum purgabiur.

6 They ILLUMINATE also, Matth. V. You are the light of the world, Ephes. V. Walk as children of the light in love.

> ILLUMINANT etiam, Matth. V. Vos estis Lux mundi*, Ephes. V.* Ut filii lucis ambulate in dilectione.

7 FROM the Seraphim of Isa. VI. shining forth, he argues what kind of flame the religious ought to shine with, for the example of others.

> E SERAPHIM Isa. VI. lucentibus, arguit quali flamma lucere debeant religiosi, in aliorum exemplum.

8 FIRST they are said to have been two, whereby is expressed their dwelling together in Charity. Therefore also the Lord sent his disciples two by two. Lucae X. and Ecclesiasticus IV. It is better that there be two together than one: for they have the advantage of their society. And Genes. XIX. Two Angels were sent into Pentapolis. Whereby a grave precept of prudence is given, that life in the Coenobia is safer than in the solitude of the Anachoretic life.

> PRIMO enim dicuntur fuisse duo, quo exprimitur in Charitate cohabitatio. Ideo et Dominus binos misit discipulos. Lucae X. et Ecclesiastici IV. Melius est duos esse simul, quam unum: habent enim emolumentum societatis suae. Et Genes. XIX. Duo Angeli missi sunt in Pentapolim. Quo grave praeceptum prudentiae datur securiorem esse vitam in Coenobiis, quam in solitudine Anacoreticha.

9 SECONDLY, those Seraphim were not seated, but stood. Whence in Psalm. 121. Our feet were standing in thy courts, O Jerusalem.

> SECUNDO Seraphim illi non sedebant, sed stabant. Unde in Psalm. 121. Stantes erant pedes nostri in atriis tuis Hierusalem.

10 HIEREMIAE VI. Stand upon your ways, and see, and ask which is the good way? and Psalm. V. In the morning I will stand before thee, and will see, and Habac. II. I will stand upon my watch, and Apoc. VIII. An Angel stood near the altar of the temple. Therefore the unwearied raising of the intention to God is handed down in all things.

> HIEREMIAE VI. State super vias vestras, et videte, et interrogate, quae sit via bona? et Psalm. V. Mane astabo tibi, et videbo*, et Habac. II.* Super custodiam meam stabo*, et Apoc. VIII.* Angelus stetit iuxta aram templi. Igitur impigra elevatio intentionis in Deum in omnibus traditur.

11 Each had six wings singly, that is twelve, whereby the spiritual and corporal works of mercy are signified, and they were joined one to another, as is said Ezech. I. With these wings he ought swiftly to work for the salvation of all.

> HABEBANT singuli sex alas, idest duodecim, quibus opera misericordiae spiritualia, et corporalia signantur, et invicem iunctae sunt, ut dicitur Ezech. I. His alis debet velox operari ad salutem omnium.

12 With these wings they veiled their hands and their feet, by working, that they might not be seen, of which Matth. VI. Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth. Therefore he veils his head, hands, and feet, who desires neither in the beginning, nor in the end, nor in the middle to be praised for his works.

> HIs alis velabant manus, et pedes, operando, ut non videantur, de quibus Matth. VI. Nesciat sinistra tua, quid faciat dextera tua. Caput igitur, manus, et pedes velant, qui nec in principio, nec in fine, nec in medio laudari appetunt de operibus suis.

13 THESE flew, because the religious ought always to be borne higher into God. Whence Psalm. 54. Who will give me wings, etc. Therefore with the multiplied motion of spiritual wings, they ought assiduously by contemplation and action to ascend on high, never languishing, nor ever idling.

HI volabant, quia religiosi semper altius in Deum ferri debent. Unde Psalm. 54. Quis dabit mihi pennas*, etc. Igitur multiplicato alarum spiritualium motu, debent assidue contemplatione, et actione in altum ascendere, nunquam torpendo, nunquamve otiando.*

14 THESE cried: HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, one to the other, because in the Divine praises they are held to cry out perpetually. Thrice they pray, that they may be rightly instructed, promoted, and brought to salvation. Therefore Ioan. XVII. Sanctify them in truth, that they themselves may be sanctified, and consummated in one, etc.

HI clamabant: SANCTUS, SANCTUS, SANCTUS, alter ad alterum*, quia in Divinis laudibus tenentur perpetuo inclamare. Ter autem orant, ut recte instituantur, promoveantur, et perducantur ad salutem. Ideo Ioan. XVII.* Sanctifica eos in veritate, ut ipsi sanctificati sint, et consummati in unum*, etc.*

15 WHEN indeed the lips of Isaias, defiled, were purged with a burning coal, and it kindled him, that he might offer himself for the divine missions, it expresses that the religious, most pure in themselves, are held bound to purify others with holy fire, to illuminate, and to kindle them unto works of salvation; thus Moses Num. XI. purged Mary the leper by prayers in a figure, and S. Job his friends, Iob in the last chapter.

QUOD vero labia Isaiae polluta calculo purgatint ignito, atque ipsum accenderint, ut se ad divinas missiones exhiberet, exprimit, religiosos in se purissimos, teneri ad alios igne sancto purgandos, illuminandos, et accendendos ad opera salutis; sic Moyses Num. XI. Mariam leprosam orationibus umbratice purgavit et S. Iob amicos suos Iob. ultimo.

16 There FOLLOWS the order of the Cherubim from the wisdom, with which religious men are held to be endowed and to illuminate others. Now this wisdom is practical, or prudence, as the holy Doctor advertises, Lib. I. cap. 3., which is not worldly wisdom, of which Lucae XVI. The children of this world are more prudent than the children of the light, which is in the avaricious; nor ought it to be the prudence of the flesh, which is death, as is said Rom. VIII., and it is in the voluptuous, because this wisdom is not found in the land of them that live sweetly, Iob 28.; nor ought it to be diabolical, of which Isa. V. Woe to you that are wise in your own eyes, etc. Therefore recourse must be had to the wisdom that is from above, which is chaste, peaceable, etc.

SEQUITUR ordo Cherubim a sapientia, qua viri religiosi esse praediti tenentur et alios illustrare. Haec autem sapientia est practica, seu prudentia, ut advertit S. Doctor Lib. I. cap. 3. quae non est mundana, de qua Lucae XVI. Filii huius saeculi prudentiores filiis lucis sunt*, quae est in avaris; neque debet esse prudentia carnis, quae mors est, ut dicitur Rom. VIII. et est in voluptuosis, quia haec,* non invenitur in terra suaviter viventium*, Iob 28. neque debet esse diabolica, de qua Isa. V.* Vae qui sapientes estis in oculis vestris*, etc. Ideoad sapientiam, quae desursum est recurrendum, quae est pudica, pacifica, etc.*

17 Now TWO Cherubim of gold are indicated Exodi 25., because there must be in them a twofold wisdom, and prudence. One of the things to be done concerning themselves and their neighbor: the other of the things to be done concerning God; and both golden, that is of Charity. Therefore gold most pure is given for the Cherubim, primo Paral. 28., which signifies the purity of conscience, from which it follows that they see God, which is beatitude, given to the clean of heart. Then indeed it follows that, radiated with divine light, they see most clearly (as the holy Doctor says). Therefore the Cherubim Ezech. I. and Apoc. IV. were full of eyes before and behind, because men compared to the Angels, the Cherubim, by the grace of circumspection, and the gift of providence, which are parts of prudence, see gilded on every side, they provide, and each keeps watch over the perils of the other. Whence also the Cherubim looked upon one another above the Propitiatory.

> DVO autem Cherubim aurei indicuntur Exodi 25. quia debet eis inesse duplex sapientia, et prudentia. Altera agendorum circa se, et proximum: Altera agendorum circa Deum, et utraque aurea e Charitate. Ideo aurum purissimum datur ad Cherubim, primo Paral. 28. quod puritatem significat conscientiae, ex qua sequitur, eos videre Deum, quae est beatitudo, mundis corde data. Deinde vero sequitur, ut divina luce radiati videant clarissime (ut ait S. Doctor) Ideo Cherubim Ezech. I. et Apoc. IV. erant oculis pleni ante, et retro, quia viri Angelis Cherubim comparati circumspectionis gratia, et providentiae dono, quae sunt partes prudentiae, dorati undique vident, provident, et alter ad alterius pericula invigilat. Unde et Cherubim se mutuo respiciebant in Propitiatorio.

18 THESE are raised up into God with holy quiet. Therefore God dwells in them, who sitteth over the Cherubim; and these also draw others. Therefore Ezech. X. when the Cherubim were lifted up, the others also were lifted up; for upon the holiness of the religious hangs also the salvation of seculars. Therefore Iudith, cap. 8., says: and now, brethren, since you are the priests in the people of God, upon you depends their soul.

> HI sancta quiete in Deum elevantur Ideo in eis residet Deus, qui sedet super Cherubim*; et hi trahunt etiam alios. Ideo Ezech. X.* dum levarentur Cherubim, caetera etiam elevabantur*; ex sanctitate enim religiosorum, pendet et saecularium salus. Ideo Iudith, cap. 8. ait:* et nunc fratres, quoniam vos estis praesbyteri in populo Dei, et ex vobis pendet anima illorum.

19 THESE are the interpreters of God; therefore in a figure from the propitiatory, between the two Cherubim, the voice of God went forth, Num. VII. and Ezech. I.: The sound of the wings of the Cherubim was as the voice of God.

> HI sunt interpretes Dei, ideo umbratice e propitiatorio inter duos Cherubim egrediebatur vox Dei, Num. VII. et Ezech. I: Sonus alarum Cherubim erat sicut vox Dei.

20 THESE ought to keep the way of the tree of life, and to show it with the flaming sword, as is said Genes. III., and to cry out to all that word of Hierem. VI. This is the way, walk ye in it.

> HI debent viam ligni vitae custodire, et flammeo gladio ostendere, ut dicitur. Genes. III. omnibusque clamare illud Hierem. VI. Haec est via, ambulate in ea.

21 The THIRD order is that of the Thrones, in which Divine Justice dwells, Psalm. IX. Thou sittest upon the throne, who judgest justice.

> TERTIUS ordo est Thronorum, in quibus residet Iustitia Divina, Psalm. IX. Sedes super Thronum, qui iudicas iustitiam.

22 God dwells upon the humble, as Isa. 66. says, and Dan. VII. His throne is a flame of fire. These are the Religious, as Origenes expounds there: For as the Thrones are the seats of God, compacted and joined into one, as D. Hieronymus says, cap. 7. de coelesti Hierarchia; so the religious, compacted into one place of quiet, are the Thrones of the Most High: These are the ivory Thrones, shadowed forth in the Throne of Solomon, of which II. Paral. IX. III. Reg. X. and Cant. II., the symbol of chastity, in which God rests, who feeds among the lilies: Therefore he rested in the womb of the B. Virgin, which is called ivory, Cant. V.

> RESIDET Deus super humiles, ut ait Isa. 66. et Dan. VII. Thronus eius flamma Ignis. Hi sunt Religiosi, ut exponit ibi Origenes: Sicut enim Throni sunt sedes Dei, in unum compactae, atque coniunctae, ut ait D. Hieronymus cap. 7. de coelesti Hierarchia; Ita religiosi, in unum compacti quietis locum, sunt Throni Altissimi: Hi sunt Throni eburnei, adumbrati in Throno Salomonis, de quo II. Paral. IX. III. Reg. X. et Cant. II.

Simbolum pudicitiae, in quo Deus requiescit, qui pascitur inter lilia: Ideo in ventre B. Virginis requievit, qui dicitur eburneus Cant. V.

23 They ought to be Thrones of Sapphire, of which Ezech. I.

DEBENT esse Throni e Sapphito, de quo Ezech. I.

24 Ezech. I. The likeness of the Throne was as the appearance of a Sapphire. Now the Sapphire is a gem of heavenly color, starred, which signifies heavenly conversation. In the Sapphire the Law of Moses was written by God: so the religious are raised up from earthly things by poverty. To them it is said Isa. LVIII. I will lift thee up above the height of the earth, and I will feed thee with the inheritance of Jacob thy father, etc.

Ezech. I. Similitudo Throni quasi aspectus Sapphiri. Est autem Sapphirus gemma coloris coelestis stellata, quae significat coelestem conversationem. In Sapphiro, scripta fuit a Deo Lex Moysi: Ita religiosi a rebus terrenis per paupertatem elevantur. His dicitur Isa. LVIII. Sustollam te super altitudinem terrae, et cibabo te haereditate Iacob Patris tui, etc.

25 See the holy Doctor there, wonderfully eloquent, on how he becomes the best of religious who shall have drawn these lessons from things above.

Vide S. Doctorem ibi mira eloquentem, quomodo optimus ille evadat religiosus, qui haec documenta e supernis hauserit.

Section II: On the Government of the Prelates of the Church, Likened to the First Choir of the Second Hierarchy, the Dominations

1 The S. Doctor compares the Dominations to Pontiffs and other Prelates of the Church.

Dominationes Pontificibus, aliisque Ecclesiae Praelatis S. Doctor comparat.

2 Now they are called Dominations because, as S. Isidorus says, Lib. VII. Ethymol. cap. V., dominating over the inferior Angels, they instruct and inform them how in the office of prelacy they ought to recall their subjects to the Deiform likeness, and, without tyranny, liberally to order the deeds of their subjects. Whence S. Dionysius, de coelesti Hierarchia, cap. VIII.: The naming of the Dominations declares an absolute and free Anagogy, bearing itself liberally without any tyrannical servitude, and removed from all ignominious subjection. As if to say: As by Anagogy, that is, by universal excellence over the other Angels, they are raised up without subjection; so by no tyranny are they inclined to the depression of others. Of whose domination is both liberal and severe: liberal in benignity; severe in power; and this properly befits Prelates, who singly dominate in spiritual things; as Priests and Bishops, who are accounted worthier than others in the spiritual office. Such is the word of the S. Doctor.

Dicuntur autem Dominationes, quia, ut ait S. Isidorus Lib. VII. Ethymol. cap. V. inferioribus Angelis dominantes, eos instruunt, et informant qualiter in praelationis officio debeant subditos ad Deiformem similitudinem revocare, et sine tyrannide subditorum facta liberaliter ordinare. Unde S. Dionysius de coelesti Hierarchia, cap. VIII. Nominatio Dominationum absolutam, et liberam Anagogen absque ulla tyrannica servitute liberaliter ferentem, et ab omni subiectione ignominiosa remotam declarat. Quasi dicat: Sicut per Anagogen, idest, per excellentiam universalem super alios Angelos, sine subiectione elevantur; ita per nullam tyrannidem ad depressionem aliorum inclinantur. Quorum dominatio, et liberalis est, et severa: liberalis in benignitate; severa in potestate, et hoc proprie convenit Praelatis, qui in spiritualibus singulariter dominantur; sicut Sacerdotes, et Episcopi, qui in spirituali officio reputantur aliis digniores. Haec S. Doctor.

[3] Therefore they are called Dominations, who preside purely in spiritual things; because true dominion is obtained, when vices are overcome, and virtuous works dominate in the kingdom of the soul, or of the Church. But evils cannot be extirpated, so that goods may effectively dominate, except through the ministry of prelates, to whom authority has been conferred from heaven, that through their office and the Ministries of the Sacraments vices may be done away, and morals corrected in men, and thus the minds of subjects be reformed by the discipline of morals to the Deiform likeness. And therefore in Prelates of souls is the authority of such a Domination left by the Lord, that, with them cooperating, the servitude of sin may be banished, and the true liberty of the Spirit may dominate through their ministry. Whence it is said Sap. IX. In thy wisdom thou hast constituted man, that he may have dominion over thy creature, which was made by thee, that he may dispose the circle of the earth in equity, and direction of heart, and justice.

> Dicuntur igitur illi, qui praesunt pure in spiritualibus, Dominationes; quia verum dominium obtinetur, quando superantur vitia, ac virtuosa opera in regno animae, sive Ecclesiae dominantur. Non autem possunt extirpari mala, ut bona efficaciter dominentur, nisi per praelatorum ministerium, quibus coelitus collata est auctoritas, ut per ipsorum officium, et Sacramentorum Ministeria evacuentur vitia, et mores in hominibus corrigantur, et sic subditorum mentes per morum disciplinam ad Deiformem similitudinem reformentur. Et ideo apud Praelatos animarum istiusmodi Dominationis auctoritas est a Domino relicta, ut ipsis cooperantibus peccati servitus exulet, et vera libertas Spiritus per eorum ministerium dominetur. Unde dicitur Sap. IX. In sapientia tua constituisti hominem, ut dominaretur creaturae tuae, quae a te facta est, ut disponat orbem terrae in aequitate, et directione cordis, et iustitia.

[4] Let them recognize therefore (says the S. Doctor) the Pontiffs of Christ and the Priests, that from the Dominator of the whole earth they have received supreme Dominion, and from the days of the ages utterly unheard of not only by men but by Angelic spirits, because, as Bernardus says in his sermone de coena Domini, it is nowhere read as attributed to Kings or Princes, to make the glorious and most holy body of Christ, offering it to God. This gift has been granted to Prelates not for extorting base gain, nor for boasting, or oppressing subjects; but rather for reducing subjects to the state of true liberty through the ministry of Priests; and this Zachar. VI. says: He shall sit, and shall rule, and shall be a priest upon his throne, and there shall be a counsel of peace between them, and the crowns shall be memorials in the temple of the Lord.

> Recognoscant igitur (ait S. Doctor.) Pontifices Christi, ac Sacerdotes, quod a Dominatore universae terrae receperunt supremum Dominium, et a diebus saeculi non solum hominibus, sed et Angelicis spiritibus penitus inauditum, quia ut dicit Bernardus sermone de coena Domini, nec Regibus, nec Principibus legitur attributum, ut conficiant gloriosum, ac Sanctissimum Christi corpus, illud offerentes Deo. Istud donum concessum est Praelatis non ad turpem quaestum extorquendum, neque ad superbiendum, vel subditos opprimendos; sed potius ad verae libertatis statum per Sacerdotum ministerium reducendum, et hoc dicit Zachar. VI. Sedebit, et dominabitur, et erit Sacerdos in solio suo, et erit consilium pacis inter eos, et erunt coronae memoriales in templo Domini.

[5] Therefore the Priests of Christ are so called, not that they should bear themselves as dominating in their chapters unto pride, but that they should show themselves in heart and deed a pattern to the flock, prima Petri V., and unto the likeness of the Angels promote their subjects by word and example.

> Dicuntur igitur Christi Sacerdotes, non ut tanquam dominantes in cleris se gerant ad superbiam, sed ut formam gregi ex animo sese ostendant, prima Petri V. et ad Angelorum conformitatem verbo, et exempla promoveant subditos.

[6] Therefore the Prelates of the Church are compared to the Dominations. First, because, as these are subject to the dignity of no earthly domination, as S. Dionysius says, de coelesti Hierar. cap. VIII.: so Ecclesiastics have pre-eminence over Laymen, nor are they subjected to any of their laws pressing against Ecclesiastical immunity. Whence there is said to them the same Deuter. XV. Thou shalt have dominion over every nation, and none shall have dominion over thee.

> Igitur Praelati Ecclesiae Dominationibus comparantur. Primo quia, sicut illae nullius terrestris dominationis dignitati subditae sunt, ut ait S. Dionysius de coelesti Hierar. cap. VIII.: ita Ecclesiastici Laicis praeeminent, nec ullis eorum legibus, contra Ecclesiasticam immunitatem urgentibus, subduntur. Unde eis dicitur id Deuter. XV. Dominaberis omni nationi, et nullus tibi dominabitur.

7 Next, because, as the heavenly Dominations exercise no tyrannical or heavy power over the subject Angels, but simply condescend to them; so ought the life of clerics to be.

> Deinde quia, sicuti coelestes Dominationes nullam in subditos Angelos tyrannicam, vel gravem exercent potestatem, sed simpliciter eis condescendunt; ita debet talis esse clericorum vita.

8 Thirdly, because, as the Dominations are called by S. Dionysius in the place cited onward and higher, because converted in their own order they convert other inferiors, and perfect in themselves they perfect and illuminate others; so those who preside should allure by word and example; and he who hears, let him say: Come, Apoc. in the last chapter; and let it be as Ecclesiasticus X.: Such as is the Lord, or ruler of the city, such are they that dwell in it.

> Tertio quia, sicuti Dominationes vocantur a S. Dionysio loco citato sursum altius, quia conversi ex suo ordine alios inferiores convertunt, et perfecti in se, alios perficiunt, et illuminant; sic illi, qui praesunt verbo, et exemplo alliciant; et qui audit, dicat: Veni, Apoc. ultimo, et fiat id Ecclesiastici X. Qualis est Dominus, vel rector civitatis, tales sunt, qui habitant in ea.

9 Fourthly, because, as the Angelic Dominations are called Liberal with severity; so Ecclesiastical Prelates, liberal and benign toward the humble, severe toward the proud and rebellious, punishing them with censures. Thus the Apostle admonishes Bishops, Timotheum, and Titum, that they do so: Reprove, beseech, etc.

> Quarto quia, sicut Dominationes Angelicae dicuntur Liberales cum severitate; Ita Praelati Ecclesiastici liberales, et benigni circa humiles, severi circa superbos, et rebelles, censuris eos puniendo. Sic monet Apostolus Episcopos, Timotheum, et Titum, ut faciant: Increpa, obsecra, etc.

10 Fifthly, because, as the Angelic Dominations are set apart with a great dissimilitude of perfection, because nothing unseemly of divine likeness is found in them; so Ecclesiastics should have pre-eminence from sinners with a great disparity of life, lest there be said to them the word Rom. II. Thou that preachest that men should not steal, dost thou steal? Or that of Isaia VIII. Hear ye deceivers, who rule over my people.

> Quinto quia, sicuti Dominationes Angelicae sunt magna perfectionis dissimilitudine segregatae, quia nihil indecens divinam similitudinem in illis reperitur; Ita Ecclesiastici magna vitae disparitate a peccatoribus praeemineant, ne illis dicatur id Rom. II. Qui praedicas non furandum, furaris. Vel id Isaia VIII. Audite illusores, qui dominamini super populum meum.

11 Sixthly, because as the Dominations of the Angels are so called because they dominate most powerfully even over themselves, as S. Dionysius says loco cit., so those dominating in the Church ought to dominate their own passions, that even as Melchisedech, without father, without mother, without genealogy, they acknowledge not even their dear ones, where the duty of their office must be fulfilled.

> Sexto, quia sicuti Dominationes Angelorum dicuntur, quia hi dominantur potentissime etiam sibi ipsis, ut ait S. Dionysius loco cit. sic dominantes in Ecclesia debent suis dominari passionibus, ut veluti Melchisedech sine patre, sine matre, sine Genealogia, etiam charos non agnoscant, ubi ratio sui officii est adimplenda.

12 Seventhly, because as the Angels are called Dominations because they hold a good and stable immutability of affection in God, so that nothing appearing to them may dominate, but they be perpetually converted to the true immutable Being: so also Ecclesiastics should so stand in God as not to be converted to vanities and follies, as Tobias says cap. IV. Never suffer pride to rule in thy sense.

> Septimo quia, sicuti Angeli Dominationes dicuntur, quia bonam, et stabilem affectus immutabilitatem tenent in Deo, ita ut nihil eis apparens dominetur, sed ad verum Ens incommutabile sint perpetuo conversi: Sic et Ecclesiastici ita in Deo stent, ut ad vanitates, et insanias non convertantur, ut ait Tobias cap. IV. Nunquam in tuo sensu superbiam dominari permittas.

13 Therefore thus the Ecclesiastics purge, illuminate, and perfect all inferiors, that they may not be purged by them, etc. For as the Spirit has pre-eminence over the body and excels it, so the Spiritual power over the corporal. Whence it rightly receives the name of Domination. Whence the Regal power is subject to the spiritual Domination. Therefore Petrus, prima cap. II. You are a Regal Priesthood, a holy nation. For the temporal kingdom, as a certain thing adjoined, is subject to the Priesthood in the new testament; albeit in the old testament the Priesthood of temporal promises, being but a figure, seems to be adjoined to the regal power, Exodi 19. a regal Priesthood, as the S. Doctor says with D. Hieronym., lib. 1. cont. Pelag., and epist. ad Dardan., August., quaest. 33. in Num., and lib. 19. cont. Faust. cap. 31. Although it is adjoined there also as adding the dignity and virtue necessary to the superior Order; for without Religion kingdoms fall. Hence 27. Num. God commands even the Prince Josue to depend on the Pontiff, and Lev. 4. a higher Sacrifice is exacted for the Priest than for the King: as seems to be Philo lib. de victoria, Theodoretus quaest. 1. in Levit., Procop. in cap. 4. Levit. But if it be objected that Abiathar the Pontiff was deposed by Salomon; say with S. Bonav., according to the former Doctrine, that the case is unlike: or that it was done by the word of the Lord, as is said 3. Reg. 2. See on this matter at large the Seraphic Doctor, cap. 1. de ecclesiast. Hierarchia, part. 2., near the end.

> Sic igitur Ecclesiastici omnes inferiores, purgant, illuminant, et perficiunt, ut ab eis nec purgentur, etc. Sicut enim Spiritus praeest corpori, eique praecellit; sic Spiritualis potestas corporali. Unde bene sortitur nomen Dominationis. Unde Regalis potestas spirituali subest Dominationi. Ideo Petrus prima cap. II. Vos estis Regale Sacerdotium, gens sancta. Nam temporale regnum, velut quoddam adiectum subiacet Sacerdotio in novo testamento; tametsi in veteri testamento Sacerdotium temporalium promissionum umbraticum, regiae potestati adiectivum videatur apponi, Exodi 19. regnum Sacerdotale*, ut ait S. Doctor cum D. Hieronym. lib. 1.* cont. Pelag. et epist. ad Dardan. August. quaest. 33. in Num. et lib. 19. cont. Faust. cap. 31. Quamvis adiectivum apponatur ibi etiam, ut adiiciens dignitatem, et virtutem necessariam Ordinis superioris; nam sine Religione regna corruunt. Hinc 27. Num. iubet Deus, Principem etiam Iosue a Pontifice pendere, et Lev. 4. exigitur altius Sacrificium pro Sacerdote, quam pro Rege: ut videtur Philo lib. de victoria Theodoretus quaest. 1. in Levit. Procop. in cap. 4. Levit. Quod si Abiathar Pontifex a Salomone depositus opponatur; dic cum S. Bonav. iuxta priorem Doctrinam, disparem esse rationem: Vel, id factum, iuxta verbum Domini, ut dicitur 3. Reg. 2. Vide de hac re fuse Seraphicum cap. 1. de ecclesiast. Hierarchia, part. 2. prope finem.

14 Now truly, that Pontiffs may be able to be free for God, and at the same time raise and reform the vast multitude of the people to the Deiform likeness, they ought to take others into a share of the solicitude. Therefore also Iethro advised Moses, Exodi 18.: The business is above thy strength; thou alone canst not sustain it, etc. Be thou to the people in those things that pertain to God, to refer what is said to him: and show thou to the people the ceremonies and the rite of worshipping God, and the way by which they must walk, and the work they must do. Provide therefore able men, and fearing God, in whom there is truth, and who hate avarice, and appoint of them Tribunes, who may judge the people at all times, and it shall be lighter for thee, the burden being divided among others: And such are the Decani, Praepositi, Archidiaconi, and Iudices, whether ordinary or delegated, who soothe lawsuits and strive to recall men to concord. And such are compared to the heavenly Powers and Virtues, as I shall say at once sect. seqq.

> ENIM vero ut Pontifices etiam Deo valeant vacare, simulque populum ingentem ad Deiformem similitudinem elevare, atque reformare, debent alios in partem sollicitudinis assumere. Ideo et Iethro Moysi suasit, Exodi 18. Ultra vires tuas est negotium, solus illud sustinere non poteris, etc. Esto tu populo in his, quae ad Deum pertinent, ut referas, quae dicuntur ad eum: ostendasque populo ceremonias, et ritum colendi Deum, viamque, per quam ingredi debeant, et opus quod facere debeant. Provide ergo viros potentes, et timentes Deum, in quibus sit veritas, et qui oderint auaritiam, et constitue ex eis Tribunos, qui iudicent populum in omni tempore, leviusque sit tibi, partito in alios onere: Et tales sunt Decani, Praepositi, Archidiaconi, et Iudices, sive ordinarii, sive delegati, qui lites sopiunt, et ad concordiam satagunt revocare. Et tales Potestatibus, et Virtutibus caelestibus comparantur, ut statim dicam sect. seqq.

Section III: On the Prudence of Judges, Compared with the Virtues, from the Second Order of the Second Hierarchy

1 The ANGELS are called Virtues on account of their firm and immutable virility for the reception of divine illuminations, as S. Dionysius says cap. 8. de caelesti Hierarchia, in no wise infirm, but virilely reduced to the imitation of God, not forsaking the Deiform manner of life, but firmly bearing it toward the supersubstantial and potentific virtue proceeding deiformly.

> ANGELI Virtutes dicuntur propter firmam, et immutabilem virilitatem ad susceptionem divinarum illuminationum, ut ait S. Dionysius cap. 8. de caelesti Hierarchia*, nullatenus infirmam, sed viriliter in Dei imitationem reductam, Deiformem morum non derelinquentem, sed firmiter ferentem in supersubstantialem, et potentificam virtutem deiformiter provenientem.*

2 The VIRTUES are especially commended for the zealous defence of Justice, for the imitation of Divine wisdom, for the prompt determination of the cause of the poor, for the constant flight from Avarice and gifts, and lastly for the vigorous liberation of the oppressed.

3 LET these things be directed to those who exercise judicial power; for without these, Justice is easily perverted in giving judgments; for those who violate Justice, how can they administer it to others? Those who do not devote themselves to the pursuits of divine wisdom will in no wise be able to set forth the Judgments of God; nor can those who indulge the Rich bestow equity upon the poor, etc.

HAEC ad illos, qui Iudiciaria funguntur potestate, dirigantur; absque his enim in iudiciis ferendis Iustitia facile pervertitur; nam qui Iustitiam violant, quomodo aliis eam possunt administrare; Qui divinae sapientiae studiis non vacant, Dei nullatenus Iudicia poterunt proferre; nec, qui Divitibus indulgent, pauperibus aequitatem valent impendere, etc.

4 BUT since these things pertain not so much to the prudence of Judges as to the unblemished equity of Judgments, therefore I defer them to the next disputation, where I shall treat of Justice.

VERUM cum haec non tam ad Iudicum spectent prudentiam, quam ad intemeratam Iudiciorum aequitatem, ideo in proximam disputationem, ubi de Iustitia egero, ea remitto.

Section IV: On the Government of Princes, Likened to the Powers

1 HERE there would be question of the government of Princes, on which D. Thomas interweaves a prolix little work, which is the twentieth.

HIC agendum esset de regimine Principum, de quo prolixum opusculum, quod est vigesimum, intexit D. Thomas.

2 REPEAT moreover the subjective parts of prudence, numbered above.

REPETE autem partes subiectivas prudentiae, supra numeratas.

3 Aristotle indeed asserts, 3. Eth. cap. 3., that Prudence is the proper virtue of the Prince. The reason is, because to prudence belongs to govern and to command; and therefore where the special character of government and of command is found in human acts, there also the special character of prudence is found. Now it is manifest that in him who not only governs himself, but also a perfect community, or a kingdom, there is found the perfect character of government. For the more universal a government is, extending itself to more things and attaining a further end, the more perfect it is; and therefore to the King, to whom it belongs to govern a city or a kingdom, prudence belongs by a special character, and indeed the most perfect one.

Ponit vero Aristoteles 3. Eth. cap. 3. Prudentiam esse propriam virtutem Principis. Ratio est, quia ad prudentiam spectat regere, et praecipere; et ideo ubi invenitur specialis ratio regiminis, et praecepti in humanis actibus, ibi etiam invenitur specialis ratio prudentiae. Manifestum est autem in eo, qui non solum seipsum regit, sed etiam communitatem perfectam, vel regnum, inveniri perfectam rationem regiminis. Tanto enim regimen perfectius est, quanto universalius est, ad plura se extendens, et ulteriorem finem attingens; ideoque Regi, ad quem pertinet regere civitatem, vel regnum, prudentia competit speciali ratione, et quidem perfectissima.

4 To this there corresponds the Political prudence in subjects, that they be moved and governed; for since they are not governed and moved in the manner of irrational creatures — nay, they move themselves by free will — therefore there is required in them a certain rectitude of government, by which they direct themselves to obeying those who rule; and to this pertains that species of prudence which is called Political, as D. Thomas says in article 3.

Huic respondet Politica in subditis, ut moveantur, atque regantur; sed enim quia non reguntur, et moventur ad modum irrationalium, imo seipsos movent per liberum arbitrium; ideo requiritur in eis quaedam rectitudo regiminis, per quam seipsos dirigant ad obediendum principantibus, et ad hoc pertinet species prudentiae, quae Politica vocatur, ut ait D. Thomas articulo 3.

5 FROM these however differs another prudence, which is called Oeconomical, and is midway between the prudence of princes and of individual persons; for it is ordered to the government of the household, which is a part of the city.

> AB his autem differt alia prudentia, quae dicitur Oeconomica, et est media inter prudentiam principum, et singularum personarum; nam ordinatur ad regimen domus, quae est pars civitatis.

6 THAT however I may come nearer: the fourth subjective species of governing Prudence is the Military, as is intimated Proverb. 24. The reason is, because things done according to art and reason ought to be conformable to those that are according to nature, which were instituted by the divine reason. Now nature tends to two things. First indeed to governing each thing in itself; second truly to resisting external assailants and corruptive agents. Wherefore it gave to animals not only the concupiscible power, by which they are moved to those things that are accommodated to their salvation, but also the irascible power, by which the animal resists assaults. Wherefore also in those things that are according to reason there must be not only Political prudence, by which those things are ordered that pertain to the common good, but also Military prudence, by which the assaults of enemies are repelled.

> UT autem propius accedam, quarta species subiectiva Prudentiae gubernativae est Militaris, ut innuitur Proverb. 24. Ratio est, quia ea, quae secundum artem, et rationem aguntur, debent esse conformia his, quae sunt secundum naturam, quae a ratione divina sunt instituta: Natura autem ad duo tendit. Primo quidem ad regendam unamquamque rem in se ipsa: Secundo vero ad resistendum extrinsecis impugnantibus, et corruptivis. Propter quod non dedit animalibus solum vim concupiscibilem, per quam moveantur ad ea, quae sunt saluti eorum accomoda; sed etiam vim irascibilem, per quam animal resistit impugnationibus. Quare, et in his, quae sunt secundum rationem, non solum oportet esse prudentiam Politicam, per quam disponantur ea, quae pertinent ad bonum commune, sed etiam Militarem, per quam hostium insultus repellantur.

7 BOTH indeed shine forth in the celestial Potestates, as D. Bonavent. teaches; for they are ordered both to governing the inferiors subordinated to the Dominations, and especially to blunting the assaults of the infernal enemies, as St. Dionysius teaches de caelesti Hierarchia, cit. whence he defines the celestial Potestates thus, in the Seraphic Doctor.

> UTRAQUE vero in caelestibus Potestatibus elucet, ut docet D. Bonavent. nam et ad regendos inferiores subordinate Dominationibus ordinatae sunt, et praecipue ad insultus hostium infernorum retundendos, ut docet S. Dionysius de caelesti Hierarchia, cit. unde caelestes definit Potestates apud Seraphicum sic.

8 THE designation of the holy Potestates teaches a powerful, and well-adorned, and undistorted ordination with regard to divine receptions, not precipitating the inferior things tyrannically by sheer command, but mightily reducing them to the divine; and assimilating them, as far as is lawful, to the potent causal power; and converting the inferior things to God, who is the prince of all power, according to the hierarchical disposition, making the divine and luminous power resplendent in the inferior things. Whence the Angels of that order restrain and check all who impede the hierarchical ordination of prelation and subjection. Whence they do not permit the power of prelation to be contemned by subjects, and they do not allow subjects to be oppressed by violence by iniquitous lords; nay, they meet every injury of these and of those most powerfully, and resist it.

> SANCTARUM Potestatum cognominatio docet potentem, et bene ornatam, et inconfusam circa divinas susceptiones ordinationem, non tyrannice inferiora potestative praecipitantem, sed potenter in divina reducentem; et ad potentificam causalem potentiam, quantum fas est, assimilantem, et ad Deum, qui princeps est omnis potestatis, secundum hierarchicam dispositionem, inferiora convertentem, divinam, et lucentem potentiam in inferioribus resplendere facientem. Unde Angeli illius ordinis refraenant, et coercent omnes, hierarchicam praelationis, et subiectionis ordinationem impedientes. Unde praelationis potestatem a subditis contemni non permittunt, et subditos per violentiam ab iniquis dominis opprimi non sinunt, imo omni iniuriae istorum, et illorum obviant potentissime, et resistunt.

9 ¶ NOW Princes and Kings ought to contemplate the holy and celestial potestates, namely that they rule wisely, live in an orderly manner, and mightily repress and vindicate evil, spare the innocent, and not permit injury to be done to wretched persons; so that they also do not grow proud of the power they have received, but rather condescend to the humble.

10 ¶ THEREFORE secular Power will be well ordered, disposed in the similitude of the celestial potestates, if those placed in power be wise, that is, proceeding in each matter not according to the impulse of will, but according to the helm of reason, as is said Proverb. 1. The wise man, hearing, will be wiser, and the understanding man will possess governments. Hence Solomon at the beginning of his reign asked for wisdom, saying 3. Reg. 3. Thou, O God, hast made me to reign in place of my father, and I am a little child, ignorant of my going out and my coming in. Give therefore to thy servant an understanding heart, that he may be able to judge thy people, and discern between good and evil. For as in spiritual jurisdiction, so neither in temporal ought anything to be done without wisdom and discretion. Hence it is commanded Deuter. 17. When the King shall sit on the throne of his kingdom, he shall cause the Deuteronomy to be written out for himself, etc. Hence men of advanced age, and old men, were wont to be chosen as Princes and as kings, because wisdom is found not in children, but in the aged, who compose many experiences from the memory of things past, whence prudence is perfected, as I said. Hence Roboam lost the kingdom 3. Reg. 12. because, having left the counsel of the elders, he yielded to the counsel of the young. Wherefore it is said Eccles. 10. Woe to thee, O land, whose king is a child.

11 ¶ THEN they will be like the celestial potestates if, adorned in morals, they show to subjects a good and innocent life. For nothing profits to be clothed in purple, to be marked with the diadem, to shine with glittering gems, and to be sordid in disordered morals; hence the Potestates are said to have received from the Lord a well-ordered and undistorted power. For as the Poet says:

12 Virtue is not sought from without. He who abounds in morals within needs nothing outward; Nobility alone is that which adorns the soul with morals.

> Virtus non quaeritur extra. Non eget exterius, qui moribus intus abundat, Nobilitas sola est, animum, quae moribus ornat.

13 ¶ THEREFORE the Lord does not attend in potestates to the nobility of the world or of the flesh, or to the comeliness of body or of dress, but to the nobility of morals and the honesty of conscience; and this is what is said primo Reg. 16. Do not look on his countenance, nor on the height of his stature; because I have rejected him; nor do I judge according to the look of man.

14 ¶ ALSO they are like the celestial Potestates who, animated by love of justice, pursue all malice in the reprobate, and those disturbing the public peace, as is said of Iuda, 1. Machab. 3. He persecuted the wicked, searching out those who troubled the people, etc. For the power of Kings is among men ordained by the Lord, that by their fear the audacity of the wicked be restrained, which would so prevail that, did not the public power resist, even human society would be utterly dissipated. Hence Exodi 18. Choose for thyself men of power. And Psalm. 44. Upon thy thigh, O most mighty one.

15 ¶ ALSO they imitate the celestial Potestates who govern subjects, and guard the innocent, not with tyrannical cruelty, but rather with human, nay Angelic benignity. Hence it is said Esther. 12. When I commanded over many nations, and had subdued the whole world to my dominion, I would not abuse the greatness of my power, but to govern my subjects with clemency and lenity, that passing their life without terror they might enjoy the peace they desired.

16 ¶ LIKEWISE Princes and Kings are compared to the Potestates if they do not grow proud of power. Nay, the more they excel the rest, the more they should humble themselves before every one, as Eccles. 3 admonishes: The greater thou art, the more humble thyself, etc. As the Son of God, the supreme power, Virtue, and arm of the Father, emptying himself, was made subject to all, and redeemed the world by meekness; so they are warned Psalm. 146. He shall not have his will in the strength of the horse. Therefore he is most powerful who, trusting in God, distrusts himself. Whence observe that Kings and Leaders have always triumphed more by the aid of God than by arms; and that those who trusted most in the strength of their armies were scattered. Therefore a great act of prudence is to provide for oneself before God, and afterwards before men, and not to wish that the power over the whole earth be in the hand of God, as is said Eccl. 10.

17 ¶ SIMILARLY Princes are likened to the supernal potestates, procuring the peace of the whole earth, which indeed would not be preserved unless the Royal potestates endeavored it, as the Machabaei acknowledged, Lib. 2. cap. 4. Therefore the Princes ought to remember that they carry the sword, that they may crush the potestates that rise up against, and are rebellious to, the Church, which fear their power, as is said Rom. 13.

18 ¶ SIMILARLY, as the celestial potestates make the luminous power of God resplendent in the inferior things, as St. Dionysius says; so that the truth, goodness, and power which shines forth in them may, through the mediation of the superior angels, transfulge into the lower ones, who are thereby reduced to like participations of grace and glory: so Princes should, now by severity and justice, now by clemency and benignity, lead the simple people back to the knowledge of God, and the powerful to the inviolable observance of the laws of divine justice. Hence it is said Eccles. 44. Those ruling in their potestates, men endowed with great virtue and prudence. For thus they ought prudently to preside, that by the light of their virtues they may shine forth before all their subjects, more than they superintend by power. As God made the Sun into the power of the Day, and the Moon into the power of the Night. Psalm. 135. So, as the Sun presides over the Day with a resplendent and beneficent light, dissipating the darkness, drawing upward the depraved humors, that they may be resolved into rains and dews fertilizing the earth, aiding all inferior causes toward their effects, as a universal cause; so Princes, the darkness of vices having been put to flight, should scatter, illuminate, warm, kindle, and inflame virtues everywhere, terrifying the animals inimical to the light. Hence Proverb. 19. As the roaring of the lion, so also the anger of the king; and as the dew upon the herb, so his cheerfulness. Thus will they be worthy that every soul be subject to the higher potestates, as is said Rom. 13. Whence Peter also says, prima, cap. 2. obey your lords, etc., whether to the King as to the preeminent one, etc.

magis quam potestate supersint. Sicuti Deus fecit Solem in potestatem Diei, et Lunam in potestatem noctis. Psalm. 135. ut sicuti Sol praeclaro, et benefico lumine Diei praeest, tenebras dissipans, pravos humores sursum rapiens, ut in pluvias, et rores terrae foecundos resolvat, omnes causas inferiores adiuvat ad suos effectus, tanquam causa universalis; ita Principes, tenebris vitiorum fugatis, virtutes usquequaque spargant, illuminent, calefaciant, accendant, atque inflamment, terrendo animalia inimica lucis. Hinc Proverb. 19. Sicuti fremitus Leonis, ita et Regis ira; et sicut ros super herbam ita hilaritas eius. Sic erunt digni, ut omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit*, ut dicitur Rom. 13. Unde ait et Petrus prima, cap. 2.* obedite Dominis vestris, etc. sive Regi tanquam praecellenti, etc.

19 ¶ ANOTHER treatise the Saintly Doctor has on the government of prelates, which is graced with this title: De sex alis Seraphim. For since the Seraphim preeminate among the Angels, therefore they are likened to the prelates of the Church. But since these appeared adorned with six wings, Isa. VI. Apoc. IV. Now the senary number is perfect, consisting of its aliquot parts; therefore he labors to expound the virtues of the Antistes from this winged number, that by them they may fly to the mark.

20 THEREFORE the FIRST Wing of the Rector is the zeal of justice, whereby he cannot without murmuring tolerate any evil whatsoever. For anyone is to be esteemed so much the better, the more he detests evil and pursues good: not only by way of disposition, so as not to be willing to desert the sweetness of his own quiet, after the manner of the Fig tree of Iudit. IX. which was unwilling to forgo its sweetness so as to preside over the trees; but such men ought to be such that, forgetful even of their own quiet, they take no delight in the profits of their own salvation, unless they promote others to salvation, as Paulus. prima Cor. XIII. seeketh not the things that are his own, but those that are Jesus Christ's. With this zeal indeed they ought to burn above all who bear the person of Christ; for of Christ it is said Psalm. XLIV. Thou hast loved justice, and hated iniquity; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of joy. This justice is the observance of all those things that are necessary to salvation, as are the precepts of Charitas, of the Decalogue, and the rest, which flow from the eternal law; as the virtues, humility, chastity, mercy. Then also those which are constituted by human law in the law of the Church, as the rites of the Sacraments and of the rest, with the positives belonging to the law that are adjoined.[1]

1 Editor's note: the print reads 'adiunctis positivi legem pertinentium', ungrammatical as printed; rendered as 'adjunctis positivis legem pertinentibus' (with the positive things pertaining to the law that are adjoined).

PRIMA igitur Ala Rectoris est zelus iustitiae, quo nequit malum quodcumque sine murmure sustinere. Tanto enim bonus est aliquis aestimandus, quanto malum detestatur, et bonum prosequitur, non modo ordinatio, ut nolit deserere dulcedinem suae quietis ad modum Ficus Iudit. IX. quae noluit deferere dulcedinem suam, ut arboribus praeesset; sed tales esse debent, ut propriae etiam quietis obliti non delectentur salutis propriae profectibus, nisi alios ad salutem promoveant, veluti Paulus. prima Cor. XIII. Non quaerit quae sua sunt, sed quae Iesu Christi. Hoc sane zelo, maxime Christi vicem gerentes, debent aestuare; sic enim de Christo dicitur Psalm. XLIV. Dilexisti iustitiam, et odisti iniquitatem; propterea unxit te Deus, Deus tuus oleo laetitiae. Haec iustitia est observantia omnium, quae sunt ad salutem necessaria, ut sunt praecepta Charitatis, Decalogi, et caetera, quae a lege aeterna manant; ut virtutes, humilitas, castitas, misericordia. Deinde etiam, quae iure humano constituta sunt lege Ecclesiae, ut ritus Sacramentorum, et caeterorum, adiunctis positivi legem pertinentium.

21 THESE however let them take care to observe both in themselves and in others, but in due order, lest they be of those of whom Lucae XI. you pay tithe of mint, and rue, and leave the things that are weightier, as certain Praelati, who are more inflamed for one inclination in the choir than for grave transgressions; more for one rubric neglected than for a scandal.

> HAEC autem et in se, et in aliis observanda curent, sed ordine debito, ne sint ex his, de quibus Lucae XI. Decimatis mentam, et rutam, et relinquitis, quae graviora sunt, sicuti quidam Praelati, qui pro una inclinatione in choro, magis accenduntur, quam pro gravibus transgressionibus: magis pro una rubrica neglecta, quam pro scandalo.

22 THEY ought moreover diligently to offer remedies rather for public sins; especially that the study of prayer, which is necessary, be preserved.

23 EVERY Religion is arid (says D. Bonavent.) that is not fattened with this oil. Unstable is the structure of good works which is not compacted by the frequency of devout prayer, like a wall of stones without cement. In every religion, where the fervor of prayer has grown tepid, the fabric of the other virtues also begins to fail, and to approach ruin; and the lamps of the foolish virgins, without oil, are extinguished, as is said Matth. XXV.

> Arida est omnis Religio (ait D. Bonavent.) quae non oleo isto saginatur. Instabilis est bonorum operum structura, quae devotae orationis frequentia non compaginatur, sicut paries lapidum sine caemento. In omni religione, ubi fervor orationis tepuerit, etiam aliarum virtutum machina incipit deficere, et propinquare ruinae; Lampades quoque fatuarum virginum sine oleo extinguuntur, ut dicitur Matth. XXV.

24 THEN there is to be guarded against negligence of exterior discipline, lest anything be left uncorrected or unpunished, lest he be condemned with Heli primo Reg. IV. This mark, for discerning laudable religion from the relaxed one, the Saintly Doctor offers: not that no one sinning be found in the reformed religions, but that no one be allowed to sin with impunity, and the approaches to sinning be studiously precluded, and the incorrigible and the other infecters be eliminated, and the good be cherished and loved, that they may persevere. For since depravity has been found even in the convent of Angels and the college of Apostles, although they lived under the mastership of God; what order of good men in this life will arrogate to itself that no sin be found in it?

> DEINDE cavenda est negligentia exterioris disciplinae, ne aliquid incorrectum, aut impunitum relinquat, ne cum Heli damnetur primo Reg. IV. Hanc autem notam ad internoscendam laudabilem religionem a relaxata praebet S. Doctor, non quod, nullus peccans in reformatis religionibus reperiatur, sed quod nullus impune peccare sinatur, et peccandi aditus studiose praecludatur, et incorrigibiles, et alii inficientes eliminentur, et boni foveantur, et diligantur, ut perseverent. Nam cum in conventu Angelorum, et Collegio Apostolorum inventa sit pravitas, etiamsi sub magisterio Dei viverent; quis ordo bonorum in hac vita sibi arrogabit, nullum in eo peccatum reperiri.

25 THEREFORE the Saintly Doctor concludes, the Prelate will render a heavy account to God; First for his own non-observance and omission of office, Sap. VI. When you were ministers of his kingdom, you judged not rightly, you kept not the law of justice, nor walked according to the will of God. Horribly, and speedily shall things appear to you: for the judgment shall be most hard on those who preside. Second, for the sins of the subjects, which they could and ought to have corrected and forestalled, and did not correct or forestall. Hence it is said Ezech. XXXIII. If thou hadst not spoken, to keep the wicked from his way: the wicked himself shall die in his iniquity, but his blood I will require at thy hand. Which exposition the Saintly Doctor learned from the Seraphic P. Francisco. Third, they will render an account for the abuse of power for their own profit and honor. Hence Matth. XXV. Take away the talent from him, and cast the unprofitable servant out.

CONCLUDIT igitur S. Doctor, Praelatum graviter Deo rationem redditurum; Primo pro inobservantia sua, et omissione officii, Sap. VI. Cum essetis ministri regni eius, non recte iudicastis, custodistis legem iustitiae, neque secundum voluntatem Dei ambulastis. Horrende, et cito apparebit vobis: quoniam iudicium durissimum his, qui praesunt, fiet. Secundo peccata subditorum, quae poterant, et debuerant correxisse, et praecavisse, non correxerunt, aut praecaverunt. Ideo dicitur Ezech. XXXIII. Si non fueris locutus, ut se custodiat impius a sua via: ipse impius in iniquitate sua morietur, sanguinem autem eius de manu tua requiram. Quam expositionem e Seraphico P. Francisco didicit S. Doctor. Tertio reddent rationem pro abusione potestatis ad proprium commodum, et honorem. Ideo Matth. XXV. Tollite ab eo talentum, et inutilem servum eiicite.

26 THE SECOND Wing of the Antistites is Pietas, that as the Charitas of God inflames him to the zeal of justice, so fraternal love may form him to piety; for although to vices there is due the striking rod, yet to infirmity there is necessary the sustaining staff; of these Psalm. XXII. Thy rod, and thy staff, they have comforted me. The Praelati moreover ought to be prudent spiritual physicians, that they may discern the various infirmities, and have remedies apt for all. Nor let them be of those of whom Psal. LXVIII. For whom thou hast struck, they have persecuted. And so let them flourish in piety, lest he who is cast off utterly perish, as the prudent Tecuitis says II. Reg.; but as is said primo Reg. XXIII. let them be able to have the subjects say: Blessed be you of the Lord, for you have had compassion on my case.

SECUNDA Ala Antistitum est Pietas, ut sicut eum Charitas Dei ad zelum iustitiae inflammat; ita fraterna dilectio ad pietatem informet; nam, etsi vitiis deberetur virga percutiens; infirmitati tamen necessarius est baculus sustentans; de his Psalm. XXII. Virga tua, et baculus tuus, ipsa me consolata sunt. Debent autem Praelati esse prudentes medici spirituales, ut infirmitates internoscant varias, et remedia omnibus apta habeant. Neque de illis sint, de quibus Psal. LXVIII. Quoniam quem tu percussisti, persecuti sunt. Itaque pietate vigeant, ne penitus pereat, qui abiectus est, ut ait II. Reg. prudens Tecuïtis; sed ut dicitur primo Reg. XXIII. possint dicere subditi: Benedicti vos a Domino, quia doluistis vicem meam.

27 NEITHER say (says the Saintly Doctor.) Worthily is help given to those of whom there is hope of convalescence; but in those of whom it is not presumed that they will ever recover, the expenses are uselessly consumed; for mercy is exhibited on account of the merit of Charitas, and not on account of its own utility; therefore it behooves the Pontiff to experience infirmities, that he may be able to be compassionate, as is said Heb. IV.

NEQUE dicas (ait S. Doctor.) Illis digne subvenitur, de quibus est spes convalescentiae; in illis vero, de quibus non praesumitur, quod aliquando convalescant, inutiliter consumuntur expensae; nam misericordia propter meritum Charitatis exhibetur, et non propter utilitatem suam; oportet igitur Pontificem experiri infirmitates, ut possit compati, ut dicitur Heb. IV.

28 ADMONISHES moreover the Saintly Doctor that in his mind regarding the infirm there are three kinds. The first are those who from an affect of devotion, prone to scandals, easily fall, as the Apostle says, prima Cor. XI. Among you many are infirm. The second, who, although devout, yet are either easily moved to impatience by correction, or despair through diffidence. The third are all the imperfect, who, agitated by the passions, waver. Of these, he says, the occasions of scandal are to be removed, the opportunities of sinning, lest they see or hear what would weaken them; nor let them be allowed to wander outside the house. For Dina Genes. XXXIII. having gone out of the house, was corrupted.

These are to be removed by examples, and exhortations, nor let them be provoked to anger, as is said Coloss. III. Fathers, provoke not your children to indignation, that they become not pusillanimous. The Praelati ought to be compassionate with all these, as Iacob said XXXIII. Thou knowest that I have little children, tender, and the sheep and cows with young with me, which, if I make them labor more in walking, all the flocks will die in one day. Hence Paulus prima Thessal. II. We became little ones in the midst of you, as if a nurse cherish her sons, which doubtless means: thus humbly and piously was I gentle with you, condescending to your tenderness and imperfection.

> ADMONET autem S. Doctor, infirmorum mente tria esse genera. Primi sunt, qui ex devotionis affectu proni ad scandala facile cadunt, ut ait Apostolus, prima Cor. XI. Inter vos multi infirmi. Secundi, qui, licet devoti, tamen facile ex correptione, vel commoventur impatientia, vel diffidentia desperant. Tertii sunt imperfecti omnes, qui passionibus agitati vacillant. Hic amovendas ait occasiones scandali, opportunitates peccandi, ne videant, vel audiant, unde infirmentur, ne extra domum vagari sinantur. Dina enim Genes. XXXIU. egressa domum, corrupta est. Hi per exempla, et exhortationes amovendi, neque ad iracundiam provocentur, ut dicitur Coloss. III. Patres nolite ad indignationem provocare filios vestros, ut non pusillo animo fiant. Debent Praelati his omnibus compati, ut aiebat Iacob XXXIII. Nosti, quod parvulos habeam teneros, et oves, et boves faetas mecum, quas, si plus in ambulando fecero laborare, morientur una die cuncti greges. Ideo Paulus prima Thessal. II. Facti sumus parvuli in medio vestrum, tanquam si nutrix foveat filios suos, quod ita nimirum humiliter, et pie blanditus sum vobis, condescendens vestrae teneritudini, et imperfectioni.

29 ON THE CONTRARY the Lord complains of the hard pastors, Ezech. XXXIII. That which was infirm you have not strengthened, and that which was sick you have not healed, and that which was broken you have not bound up, and that which was lost you have not sought, etc. but you ruled them with harshness, and with power. Hence Bernardus, sermone XXIII. in Cant. Why do you weigh down your yoke, when you behold the disciples, whose yoke you ought rather to carry? Lay aside the burdens, bring forth the udders, milk the breasts, let them rest. And if at times severity be needed, let it be paternal, not tyrannical, according to that Num. XI. Bear them in thy bosom, as the woman bears her infant, and carry them into the land for which I swore, etc.

> E contra de duris pastoribus conqueritur Dominus, Ezech. XXXIU. Quod infirmum fuit non consolidastis, et quod aegrotum non sanastis, et quod confractum non colligastis, et quod perierat non quaesistis, etc. sed cum austeritate imperastis, et cum potentia. Ideo Bernardus, sermone XXIII. in Cant. Ut quid gravatis iugum vestrum, cum cernitis discipulorum, quorum vos potius iugum portare debetis? Ponite onera, producite ubera, pectora lactent, quiescant. Et si interdum severitate opus sit, paterna sit, non tyrannica, iuxta id Num. XI. Porta eos in sinu tuo, sicut portat mulier infantulum suum, et defer in terram, pro qua iuravi, etc.

30 THE THIRD Wing of the Antistites is patience, and constant longanimity; for as the covering of the tabernacle received the rains, the winds, and the dusts, that the interior things might remain clean; so the Prelate ought to receive the tempests, that he may preserve the interior things, and, like the Hen for her chicks, expose himself to the Kite. For three reasons however is patience necessary to them: First, on account of the various occupations pressing in. On account of this also Moses was most wretched Deuter. 1. I am not able alone to sustain your affairs, etc. Second, on account of the slow progress of those for whom he labors; wherefore Psalm. 118. My zeal hath made me to languish. Third, on account of the ingratitude of those for whom he labors, who, never contented, always complain.

> TERTIA Ala Antistitum est patientia, et constans longanimitas; sicut enim tabernaculi tectum pluvias excepit, ventos, et pulveres; ut interiora manerent munda; ita Praelatus debet suscipere tempestates, ut interiora servet, et veluti Gallina pro pullis, se Miluo obiicere. Propter tria autem est eis necessaria patientia: Primo propter varias ingruentes occupationes. Propter hoc et Moyses erat miserrimus Deuter. 1. Non valeo solus vestra negotia sustinere, etc. Secundo propter tardum eorum profectum, pro quibus laborat; Quapropter Psalm. 118. Tabescere me fecit zelus meus. Tertio ob ingratitudinem eorum, pro quibus laborat, qui nunquam contenti, semper conqueruntur.

31 WITH these, and other adversities, by which he is assailed, let the prudent man oppose himself with the triple shield of patience. First, that he answer maturely, and benignly, each thing, and repress the impulse of fervor, lest he show impatience by voice, or countenance. For then he more calms the impatient, as Iudic. 8. Gedeon checked the quarrelers; for, as the Wise man witnesses: A mild answer breaks wrath; a hard word stirs up fury. Second, let him strive to be peaceable in the house, that he neither avenge himself of the injuries inflicted, nor hate them in his heart, but imitate the supernal Father: Who is benign over the ungrateful, and the evil. Third, that he not on that account less promptly apply himself to his office, as is said 2. Paral. 15. Be you therefore comforted; and let not your hands be weakened.

HIs, et aliis adversis, quibus impetitur, triplici patientiae scuto vir prudens se opponat. Primo ut mature, et benigne ad singula respondeat, et impetum fervoris reprimat, ne voce, aut vultu impatientiam ostendat. Tunc enim magis sedat impatientes, sic Iudic. 8. Gedeon compescuit iurgantes, nam teste Sapiente: Responsio mollis frangit iram; sermo durus suscitat furorem. Secundo studeat in domo esse pacificus, ut nec vindicet se de illatis iniuriis, nec in corde oderit illos, sed imitetur Patrem supernum: Qui benignus est super ingratos, et malos. Tertio ut non ob id minus prompte incumbat officio suo, ut dicitur 2. Paral. 15. Vos ergo confortamini; et non dissolvantur manus vestrae.

32 THE FOURTH Wing is the exemplary life. For he himself ought to be the norm of living, that what he teaches in words he may show in the figures of his actions, as one who teaches Geometry describes the demonstrations of the figures on the tablets, that what he says may be better grasped. Thus of Christ it is said, Act. 1. Jesus began to do, and to teach, and Ioan. 13. I have given you an example, and Iudic. 7. Gedeon says What you shall see me do, that do.

Qvarta Ala est exemplaris vita. Ipse namque debet esse norma vivendi, ut quae docet verbis, ostendat actionum figuris, sicut qui Geometriam docet, describit in tabulis figurarum demonstrationes, ut quod dicit, melius capiatur. Sic de Christo dicitur, Act. 1. Coepit Iesus facere, et docere, et Ioan. 13. Exemplum dedi vobis, et Iudic. 7. ait Gedeon Quod me facere videritis, hoc facite.

33 ALTHOUGH however the rector ought to precede the subjects in all examples of the virtues; yet especially in these three: in the conformity, namely, of common observance; in the humility of meekness; and in the honesty of maturity. Whence ad Titum 2. In all things show thyself an example of good works, in doctrine, in integrity, in gravity, etc.

Quamvis autem in omnibus virtutum exemplis debeat rector praecedere subditos; specialiter tamen in his tribus: In communis scilicet observantiae conformitate: In mansuetudinis humilitate. Et in maturitatis honestate. Unde ad Titum 2. In omnibus te ipsum praebe exemplum bonorum operum, in doctrina, in integritate, in gravitate, etc.

34 LET him observe a common life with others in food, clothing, and labor, that he be not given to banquets and drinkings, nor be unlike in habit to those with whom is his common profession: he ought to become all things to all men, that he may make all men saved, as is said 2. Cor. 9. See the Saintly Doctor.

Commvnem vitam cum aliis observet in victu, vestitu, et labore, ut non vacet conviviis, et potationibus, nec sit eis dissimilis habitu, quibuscum est professio communis: Omnia omnibus debet fieri, ut omnes faciat salvos, ut dicitur 2.

Cor. 9. Vide S. Doctorem.

35 THE FIFTH Wing of the Praelati is Prudence, and circumspect discretion. This is the chief one, as the Council of Trent teaches, which the Saintly Doctor pursues at length cap. 7. Therefore also Solomon 3. Reg. 3. having from God the option of asking whatsoever he wished, asked for this: Give therefore, Lord, to thy servant an understanding heart, that he may be able to judge thy people, and discern between good, and evil. And Sap. 6. To you therefore, O Kings, are these my words, that you may learn wisdom, and not fall. And Psalm. 2. And now, O Kings, understand; be instructed, you that judge the earth. For the Rector is the eye of the people, and D. Bernardus, sermone 49. in Cant. Take away discretion, and virtue will be a vice. On this account, Levit. 2. in every thy oblation thou shalt offer salt. See the Saintly Doctor, treating these wondrously differently: From the Rational of the ancient Pontiff, and from the four orders of gems, the rector has four things necessary to observe. First, how he may govern the subjects in the due state, that they may profit by his good example. Second, how he may raise up the fallen, and correct the straying. Third, in what manner he may dispose the exterior affairs. Fourth, how he may guard and conduct himself in these.

Qvinta Ala Praelatorum est Prudentia, et circumspecta discretio. Haec est praecipua, ut docet Concilium Tridentinum, quam late prosequitur S. Doctor cap. 7. Propterea etiam Salomon 3. Reg. 3. habens a Deo optionem postulandi quidquid vellet, hanc petiit: Dabis ergo Domine servo tuo cor docile, ut iudicare possit populum tuum, et discernere inter bonum, et malum. Et Sap. 6. Ad vos ergo Reges sunt hi sermones mei, ut discatis sapientiam, et non excidatis. Et Psalm. 2. Et nunc Reges intelligite, erudimini, qui iudicatis terram. Rector enim est oculus populi, et D. Bernardus, sermone 49. in Cant. Tolle discretionem, et virtus vitium erit. Ob id, Levit. 2. in omni oblatione tua offeres sal. Vide S. Doctorem, de his mire differentem: Ex Rationali antiqui Pontificis, et ex quatuor ordinibus gemmarum, quatuor necessaria habet rector observanda. Primo, quomodo in statu debito subditos gubernet, ut boni exemplo suo proficiant. Secundo, quomodo lapsos elevet, et devios corrigat. Tertio, quo pacto exteriora negotia disponat. Quarto, quomodo in his se custodiat, et gerat.

36 IN each order of stones there were three, signifying three things pertaining to each of the aforesaid, that the burdens of whomever may be aptly, and gently disposed, as is said Num. 4. Aaron, and his sons shall go in; they also shall dispose the burdens of each one.

In singulis ordinibus lapidum erant tres, signando tria ad praedicta singula pertinentia, ut onera quorumcumque apte, et suaviter disponantur, ut dicitur Num. 4. Aaron, et filii eius intrabunt, ipsi quoque disponent onera singulorum.

37 NOW there is a threefold observance expressed in those triple gems.

Est autem triplex observantia in gemmis illis triplicibus expressa.

38 THE FIRST, concerning those things that are of the necessity of salvation, according to the profession of each one.

Prima circa ea, quae sunt de necessitate salutis iuxta cuiusque professionem.

39 THE SECOND, concerning those things that respect the exercise of a higher, singular perfection: namely the patience to be admitted, the stupendous humility, the arduous Charitas, the eminent sobriety, etc. to which the Rector ought to allure sweetly. Therefore let him hold this gem in his breast, that he may direct the subjects, animated to eminent virtue.

Secvnda circa ea, quae respiciunt exercitium altioris perfectionis singularis; patientiae scilicet admittendae, humilitatis stupendae, Charitatis arduae, sobrietatis eximiae, etc. ad quae Rector allicere suaviter debet. Igitur hanc gemmam in pectore teneat, ut ad eximiam virtutem subditos animatos dirigat.

40 THE THIRD are those which are instituted for the attainment of both, as silence, fasts, etc. In these let the Prelate conduct himself discretely, even by dispensing, if it be necessary.

Tertia sunt quae ad utriusque instituta sunt consecutionem, ut silentium, ieiunia, etc. In quibus discrete Praelatus se habeat, etiam dispensando, si oporteat.

41 FOR the correction of the fallen, Prudence is necessary, as is said Galat. 6. If a man be overtaken in any fault, you who are spiritual, instruct such a one in the spirit of lenity, supporting him, as Christ tolerated Iudam, and as Matth. 13. the zizania are left untouched until the harvest. But they are to be cut off, when they bring perdition, as is said Galat. 5. prima Cor 5. secunda Cor. 7. Lucae 13. and in Numer. 5. lepers are permitted apart; yet he warns with that Eccles. 32. Do all things with counsel, and after the deed you will not repent.

Circa lapsorum correctionem Prudentia est necessaria, ut dicitur Galat. 6. Si praeoccupatus fuerit homo in aliquo delicto, vos qui spirituales estis, huiusmodi instruite in spiritu lenitatis*, ipsum supportando, sicut Christus Iudam toleravit, et sicut Matth. 13. zizania usque ad messem intacta relinquuntur. Abscindantur vero, cum perniciem afferunt, ut dicitur Galat. 5. prima Cor 5. secunda Cor. 7. Lucae 13. et Numer. 5. permittuntur leprosi; monet tamen illud Eccles. 32.* Omnia cum consilio fac, et post factum non poenitebis.

42 IN the affairs, some it is expedient that the Prelate accomplish by himself, others through others; thus Christ committed the purses to Iudas, and was unwilling to divide the goods between two brothers; thus the Apostles said, Actorum 6. It is not equal that we leave the word of God, and serve tables, etc.

Circa negotia, alia expedit a Praelato per se perfici, alia per alios; sic Christus Iudae loculos commisit, et noluit inter duos fratres dividere bona; sic dixere Apostoli, Actorum 6. Non est aequum, nos relinquere verbum Dei, et ministrare mensis, etc.

43 THEREFORE he ought to preside as the head, and share out motion, and sense with the members, and so act, as about to render an account for the subjects, Heb. 15.

Igitur debet tanquam caput praesidere, et motum, et sensum membris compartiri, et ita agere, tamquam rationem pro subditis redditurus, Heb. 15.

44 SUPERFLUOUS affairs however it is expedient to cut off, as is said Ecclesiastici 11. Son, let not thy acts be many, etc.

Svperflva vero negotia expedit praecidere, ut dicitur Ecclesiastici 11. Fili ne in multis sint actus tui, etc.

45 ABOVE all the Rector ought to look around upon himself. For what does it profit a man, if he save others, and harm his own soul? Matth. 16.

Svper omnia debet Rector se ipsum circumspicere. Quid enim prodest homini, si alios salvet, et animae suae obsit? Matth. 16.

46 THEREFORE let him always keep his conscience clean, that he will nothing, act nothing, or permit nothing illicit, and indecent, contrary to his profession, in which sin, or scandal be detected, etc. See the Seraphicum cap. 7. setting forth wondrous things.

Igitur semper conscientiam mundam servet, ut nihil velit, agat, vel permittat illicitum, et indecens, professionique suae contrarium, in quo peccatum, scandalumve deprehendatur, etc. Vide Seraphicum cap. 7. mirabilia promentem.

47 ANOTHER circumspection is concerned with exterior morals; for since he desires to live as an example for many, he needs great discretion; lest he be of those of whom Ezech. 34. But you ruled them with harshness, and with power, and my sheep were scattered. And Eccles. 4. Be not as a lion in thy house, etc. Let him rather imitate the meekness of Christ.

Alia circumspectio versatur circa externos mores, qui enim pluribus ad exemplum cupit vivere, eget magna discretione; ne sit, de quibus Ezech. 34. Vos autem cum austeritate imperabatis eis, et cum potentia, et dispersae sunt oves meae. Et Eccles. 4. Noli esse quasi Leo in domo tua, etc. Imitetur potius mansuetudinem Christi.

48 FINALLY let the circumspection itself look around upon itself, lest it be as the eye that sees others, not itself, namely that it savor not more than it ought, nor be wise to itself. Whence Prou. 26. Have you seen a man wise in his own eyes? the fool shall have more hope than he. Therefore he ought to consult others; for thus Moses also, to whom God spoke face to face, consulted his father-in-law Exodi 18. and the Apostle, who had been rapt to the third heaven, consulted the other Apostles. But let him avoid the counsels of flatterers, as is said Isa. 3. and of detractors, as is said. Esth. 16.

Tandem ipsa circumspectio circumspiciat seipsam, ne sit ut oculus videns alios, non se, ut scilicet non plus sapiat, quam oportet, nec sibimetipsi sapiens sit. Unde Prou. 26. Vidisti hominem sapientem sibi videri, magis illo spem habebit stultus. Debet igitur alios consulere, sic enim et Moyses, cui Deus facie ad faciem loquebatur, consuluit Socerum Exodi 18. et Apostolus, qui fuerat ad tertium coelum raptus, consuluit alios Apostolos. Vitet autem consilia adulatorum, ut dicitur Isa. 3. et detractorum, ut dicitur. Esth. 16.

49 THE SIXTH Wing of the Praelati is devotion; for by this the zeal of justice is kindled, piety is fostered, patience is strengthened, the good example is founded, discretion is clarified. This is the unction of the Spirit, teaching all things 1. Ioan. 2. See the Saintly Doctor, in the cited chapter de sex alis Seraphim, ala 5.

Sexta Ala Praelatorum est devotio; per hanc enim zelus iustitiae accenditur, pietas confovetur, patientia roboratur, exemplum bonum conditur, discretio clarificatur. Haec est unctio spiritus, docens omnia 1. Ioan. 2. Vide S. Doctorem, capite citato de sex alis Seraphim, ala 5.

Section V: On the Prudence of Individuals, from the Lowest Hierarchy

1 THE choirs of the lowest Hierarchy are the Principalities, Archangels, and Angels, who exhibit to subjects the norm of Prudence.

De Prudentia singularium ex Hierarchia infima.

INFIMAE Hierarchiae chori sunt Principatus, Archangeli, et Angeli, qui normam subditis exhibent Prudentiae.

2 PRINCIPALITIES therefore, as St. Isidore says, are those Angels who above the rest possess the gift of reverence; hence their ministry is to teach men to show reverence to each one according to his degree.

PRINCIPATUS igitur, ut ait S. Isidorus, dicuntur Angeli, qui prae caeteris possident donum reverentiae; unde eorum ministerium est docere homines, exhibere unicuique reverentiam, secundum gradum suum.

3 Of these St. Dionysius, de coelest. Hier. cap. 6. The holy Principalities are Deiformly moved toward the principal principality, and restoratives of the inferior ones by holy and fitting ordination, and wholly convertive toward the super-principal Prince of every principality, and clearly manifestative of his ordination, etc. Therefore subjects are likened to Principalities; who, just as the Princes wish to preside over them without tyranny, so do they reverently obey them, and they also wonderfully reduce their inferiors, subject to them by Oeconomical subjection, to the laws of obedience, both toward God and toward Princes, whether Ecclesiastical or secular. Of these the Scriptures hand down many admonitions Rom. 13. Coloss. 3. prima Cor. 7. secunda Cor. 13. Lev. 19. Iob. 29. Most beautiful is the saying of Isa. 9. His principality was made upon his shoulder, etc.

> De his S. Dionysius de coelest. Hier. cap. 6. Sancti Principatus ad principalem principatum Deiformiter sunt motivi, et inferiorum ordinatione sancta, et convenienti reductivi, et ad superprincipalem omnis principatus principem totaliter conversivi, et ordinationis eius manifeste ostensivi, etc. Igitur Principatibus similantur subditi; qui sicuti Principes volunt sibi absque tyrannide praeesse; ita ipsi reverenter iis obediunt, et sibi etiam inferiores Oeconomica subiectione subditos ad obedientiae leges, tum in Deum, tum in Principes, sive Ecclesiasticos, sive saeculares, mirifice reducunt. De his multa tradunt monita Scripturae Rom. 13. Coloss. 3. prima Cor. 7. secunda, Cor. 13. Lev. 19. Iob. 29. Perpulchrum est dictum Isa. 9. Factus est principatus super humerum eius, etc.

4 HENCE he above all obtains true principality; for the obedient man shall speak of victories, and Iosue 10. The heavenly spheres, obedient, stood still at the voice of an obedient prince; nay, God obeyed the voice of a man, fighting for Israel. Therefore they themselves also ought to be reverent toward superiors; hence Exodi 22. Thou shalt not speak ill of the gods, and thou shalt not curse the prince of thy people. See the Saintly Doctor, cap. 1. de Eccl. Hierarchia.

> HINC verum principatum super omnia obtinet; nam vir obediens loquetur victorias, et Iosue 10. Coelestes Sphaerae obedientes steterunt ad vocem principis obedientis, Imo obediente Deo voci hominis, et pugnante pro Israël. Propterea, et ipsi debent esse superioribus reverentes; Ideo Exodi 22. Diis non detrahes, et Principi populi tui non maledices. Vide S. Doctorem, cap. 1. de Eccl. Hierarchia.

5 IN subjects moreover there ought to be both cleanness and innocence, assimilating them to the Archangels. The Scriptures commend this cleanness Matth. 5. Prov. 22. In the resurrection they shall be as the Angels of God.

> IN subditis autem debet esse et munditia, et innocentia, Archangelis assimilans. Hanc munditiam commendant Scripturae Matth. 5. Prov. 22. In resurrectione erunt sicut Angeli Dei.

6 Of the Archangels St. Dionysius says that this order communicates with the Principalities and the superior orders, as to the reception of illuminations and its reduction to the first principle; they communicate also with the inferior ones through their reduction to God. For, united to God through the other superior orders by love, they strive to unite the Angels of the inferior order, and men, to God, just as they themselves are united; hence they are said to have a single and simple virtue. Therefore the innocent and chaste, especially Virgins, are like them, who by a wondrous example draw others to purity, and so are enriched with graces.

> De Archangelis ait S. Dionysius, quod hic ordo communicat cum Principatibus, et superioribus ordinibus, quantum ad susceptionem illuminationum, et sui ad primum principium reductionem; communicant etiam cum inferioribus per eorum ad Deum reductionem. Nam uniti Deo mediantibus aliis ordinibus superioribus per amorem, Angelos inferioris ordinis, et homines nituntur unire Deo, quemadmodum et ipsi sunt uniti, ideo unicam, et simplicam dicuntur habere virtutem. His igitur similes sunt innocentes, et casti, maxime Virgines, qui miro alios rapiunt ad puritatem exemplo, et ita gratiis ditantur.

7 OBSERVES moreover the Saintly Doctor that the Archangels are always prelated over the more dignified offices, as he judges of Michael, Daniel. 10. Raphael, Tob. 6. Gabriel, Lucae 1.; on the contrary, impurity casts out and rejects men, as is evident in Samson Iud. 16. and in those senses Daniel. 13.; for he was blinded, weakened, and prostrated; those senses being overturned, they turned away their eyes, that they might not behold heaven. Therefore the Saintly Doctor warns, with D. Thom. and others, that Luxury especially harms Prudence, because it blinds the mind. See the Saintly Doctor treating this wondrously.

> OBSERVAT autem S. Doctor, Archangelos semper dignioribus officiis praelatos, ut putat de Michaele, Daniel. 10. Raphaele, Tob. 6. Gabriele Lucae 1. e contra immunditia abiicit, et proiicit homines, ut patet in Samsone Iud. 16. et Daniel. 13. in illis sensibus; ille enim excaecatus, infirmatus, et prostratus est; isti sensibus eversis, declinaverunt oculos, ne aspicerent coelum. Ideo monet S. Doctor cum D. Thom. et aliis, Luxuriam maxime Prudentiae obesse, quia mentem excaecat. Vide S. Doctorem mire differentem.

8 ANGELS finally are those who are immediately related to the Ecclesiastical hierarchy, so as to purify, perfect, and illuminate it, so that through them there be upward toward God action, conversion, communication, and union, as St. Dionysius says. Now Angel is the name of an office, not of a nature; hence they carry down to us the illuminations received from above. To these Angels good subjects are likened, on account of the works of mercy, which corresponds to the gift of Counsel annexed to Prudence. See the Saintly Doctor treating these exquisitely, where he enjoins solicitude in the works of piety, and swiftness and unwearying labor. Hence also the Angels are painted young and winged. From what has been said the other question can almost be defined.

> ANGELI tandem sunt, qui immediate se habent ad Ecclesiasticam hierarchiam, ut eam purgent, perficiant, et illuminent, ut illis mediantibus sit sursum in Deum actio, conversio, communicatio, et unitio, ut ait S. Dionysius. Est autem Angelus nomen officii, non naturae, unde illuminationes e superis acceptas ad nos deferunt. Istis Angelis similantur boni subditi, propter opera misericordiae, quae respondet dono Consilii adnexo Prudentiae. Vide S. Doctorem, haec eximie pertractantem, ubi sollicitudinem in operibus pietatis iniungit, et celeritatem, ac indefessum laborem, Unde, et Angeli iuvenes pinguntur alati. Ex dictis fere potest definiri alia quaestio.

1 WITH immense applause all Thomists admit one Prudence with D. Thomas quaest. 60. art. 1., where Caietanus, Medina, Conradus, Alvarez, Durandus 3. dist. 36., Buridanus 6. Eth. quaest. 13., Valentia prima secundae, disput. 85. cap. 2., Tanner. disput. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 2. num. 50. et alii. On the contrary, Scotus in 3. dist. 36. §. Quantum ergo ad istum, held that there are as many formal Prudences, specifically distinct, as there are acquired moral virtues about them, and consequently that to each moral virtue its own proper Prudence corresponds. The Nominalists follow, and all Scotists, in MASTRIUS disput. 7. quaest. 7. Arriaga disput. 34. sect. 3. Nominalists in Tannerus, Lessius Lib. I. cap. 2. disp. 2.

> An una sit PRUDENTIA pro omnibus Virtutibus moralibus.
> PLAUSU ingenti unam admittunt Prudentiam Thomistae omnes cum D. Thoma quaest. 60. art. 1. ubi Caietanus, Medina, Conradus, Alvarez, Durandus 3. dist. 36. Buridanus 6. Eth. quaest. 13. Valentia prima secundae, disput. 85. cap. 2. Tanner. disput. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 2. num. 50. et alii.

2 On the other hand, Scotus in 3. dist. 36. §. Quantum ergo ad istum, held that there are as many formal Prudences, and specifically distinct, as there are acquired moral virtues about them, and consequently that to each moral virtue its own proper Prudence responds. The Nominalists follow, and all the Scotists, in Mastrius disput. 7. quaest. 7. Arriaga disput. 34. sect. 3. the Nominalists in Tannerus, Lessius Lib. I. cap. 2. disp. 2.

> E regione, Scotus in 3. dist. 36. §. Quantum ergo ad istum, voluit, tot esse Prudentias formales, et specie distinctas, quot sunt virtutes morales acquisitae circa ipsas, atque adeo cuilibet virtuti morali suam propriam Prudentiam respondere. Sequuntur Nominales, et Scotistae omnes apud Mastrium disput. 7. quaest. 7. Arriaga disput. 34. sect. 3. Nominales apud Tannerum, Lessius Lib. I. cap. 2. disp. 2.

3 THIS seems to me to be the Sentiment of D. Bonaventure Lib. V. compend. Theol. c. 14., where he also indicates the reason by which Scotus strives; it is this: as Art regards things makeable, so also Prudence things doable, indeed it expands further; for Art alone has the objects of artificial order; but Prudence ought to govern the other moral virtues, not only as to Ethics, that is, its own moral governance: Oeconomics of the family: Politics of the Republic: But since man has several ends, that is, the natural, as to human nature, and as to the world outside; and the divine, as to supernatural beatitude, and in order to all these he must give rules to the governance of the body in the deliberations of the mouth in speaking, and in human dealings and works, in all moral actions, in which so many various honesties, not subserving one another, must be taken up as a rule; it does not seem how a single rule of Prudence suffices, but surely as with respect to different things makeable by art different arts are given, as is evident; so different species of Prudences must be assigned. We see indeed that he who has the rules of the Architectonic art does not have the art of Goldsmiths; and he who has the Tailor's art, consequently does not have the Medical art; and he who has the smith's, straightway does not have the wool-working and weaving. Much more therefore must many Prudences be assigned to so many orders of things, so many different honesties, etc. so that means be assigned to each; for he who knows the mean of Temperance does not straightway have the mean of Justice, or of Fortitude, etc.

4 The Thomists REPLY that the reason of arts and of Prudence in doable things is diverse, because in these there is one mode of judging in finding the mean for the virtue, and one mode of taking counsel. So Caietanus ad 1. But if these things are firm, it will be necessary to reduce all arts into one; for all arts agree in the mode of taking counsel about their matters, and all moral virtues will be reduced into one, because all operate in the same way in seeking their mean; whence as there is one directing prudence, so one direct virtue, which nevertheless is false; for the mean in the matter of fortitude toward terrible things, or in the matter of Temperance toward foods, seek considerations far different on the part of the intellect from the mean required in humiliation, prayer, contracts, etc. Arriaga further declares this diversity, num. 28. For, that a man judge prudently whether, danger of life being imminent, it be licit to omit the Sacred [rite]; and that with the same danger imminent he may kill the Aggressor, quite diverse principles are required. It is confirmed by Rubione from D. Bonaventure, for prudence about the governance of others is a virtue specifically distinct from that which governs oneself, which is called Monastic Prudence. And again the prudence governing others is multiple, and is divided into Regnative, Political, Oeconomic, and Military, as Vasquez, Tannerus, and others concede from the opponents: Therefore the same will have to be said of prudence with respect to the virtues.

> RESPONDENT Thomistae, diversam esse rationem artium, et Prudentiae in agibilibus, quia in his unus est modus iudicandi inveniendo mediocritatem virtuti, et unus modus consultandi. Ita Caietanus ad 1. At si haec firma sunt, oportebit omnes artes in unam redigere; nam omnes artes conveniunt in modo consulandi circa suas materias, et omnes virtutes morales in unam redigentur, quia omnes eodem modo operantur in quaerenda sua mediocritate; unde sicuti una est dirigens prudentia, ita una virtus directa, quod tamen est falsum; nam mediocritas in materia fortitudinis erga terribilia, vel in materia Temperantiae erga cibos, longe diversas petunt considerationes ex parte intellectus, a mediocritate requisita in humiliatione, oratione, contractibus, etc. Hanc diversitatem amplius declarat Arriaga num. 28. Nam, ut homo iudicet prudenter; utrum imminente periculo vitae liceat omittere Sacrum; et imminente eodem periculo possit Aggressorem interficere, diversa plane principia repetuntur. Confirmatur a Rubione ex D. Bonavent. nam prudentia circa aliorum regimen, est distincta specie virtus a sui regitiva, quae dicitur Prudentia Monastica. Et rursus prudentia aliorum regitiva, est multiplex, et dividitur in Regnativam, Politicam, Oeconomicam, et Militarem, ut concedunt Vasquez, Tannerus, et alii ex adversis: Ergo idem erit de prudentia dicendum, respectu virtutum.

5 IT IS CONFIRMED; for a habit respecting several objects according to diverse formal reasons is not one, but several in species, as is had from Aristotle 3. de anima; But Prudence is such: Therefore. The minor is proved; for the objects to be directed are constitutive of the diverse virtues, and consequently they need directions of the intellect diverse in species.

> CONFIRMATUR; nam habitus, respiciens plura obiecta secundum diversas rationes formales, non est unus, sed plures specie, ut habetur ex Aristotele 3. de anima; Sed Prudentia est talis: Ergo. Minor probatur; nam obiecta dirigenda, sunt constitutiva diversarum virtutum, atque adeo egent diversis specie directionibus intellectus.

6 I URGE, for Prudence regards no less the governance of the singular virtues under their diverse objects than the latter in it are borne toward and tend to the same rules. Nor indeed is it enough for Prudence to dictate the mean of the virtues in common, but it must show to each its proper means.

> URGEO, nam Prudentia respicit non minus regimen virtutum singularium sub diversis earum obiectis, quam ipsae in ea obiecta ferantur, et tendant, iuxta easdem regulas. Neque enim satis est, Prudentiam dictare mediocritatem virtutum in communi, sed debet singulis singula media ostendere.

7 Nor should the Thomists say that this is done by one reason of good, otherwise there would be no reason why Prudence labors so much about the precise, individual, and various goodnesses, about which, sweating, it acquires species about that mean, for instance of Fortitude; and yet meanwhile species about the mean of Temperance are not at the same time acquired, as experiment shows, and as Scotus acutely argues, and this argument a posteriori, as Mastrius says, is most evident. Then Bassolis argues thus. Those habits are essentially distinct, one of which being acquired the other is not acquired; but so the matter stands, as I showed: Therefore.

> NEQUE dicant Thomistae, id fieri una ratione boni, alioqui non erit cur adeo laboret Prudentia circa praecisas, individuas, variasque bonitates, circa quas insudans, acquirit species de illa mediocritate, puta Fortitudinis; neque tamen interea simul acquiruntur species circa medium Temperantiae, ut experimento constat, et acute arguit Scotus, et haec ratio a posteriori, ut ait Mastrius, est evidentissima. Tunc sic arguit Bassolis. Illi sunt distincti essentialiter habitus, quorum uno acquisito non acquiritur alius; sed sic res habet, ut ostendi: Ergo.

8 Vasquez REPLIES that the habit first acquired about one virtue is afterwards extended, by way of superaddition, to a new act of another virtue.

> RESPONDET Vasquez, eum habitum primo acquisitum circa unam virtutem, postea per modum superadditum extendi ad novum actum alterius virtutis.

9 AGAINST, because, as Arriaga argues, there is no reason for saying one of those abilities to be a habit, the other a mode, since each is disparate and independent, and hence diverse as to object.

> CONTRA, quia, ut arguit Arriaga, non est ratio dicendi, unam ex illis habilitatibus esse habitum; alteram esse modum, cum utraque sit disparata, et independens, adeoque obiecto diversa.

10 The Thomists REPLY that all these are parts of the habit, yet united among themselves and constituting one habit.

> RESPONDENT Thomistae, eas omnes esse partes habitus, tamen inter se uniri, unumque constituere habitum.

11 AGAINST, because if the habits of Prudence are united, the habits of the moral virtues also could come together into one. Then, if they are diverse parts: Therefore there is not one habit, but many parts of Prudence, one for one virtue, another for another.

> CONTRA, quia si habitus Prudentiae uniuntur, poterunt etiam habitus virtutum moralium in unum coire. Deinde, si sunt diversae partes: Ergo non unus est habitus, sed multae partes Prudentiae, una pro una virtute; alia pro alia.

12 There is therefore ONE generic Prudence, and many species; just as there is one virtue of Temperance, and under it several species are enclosed. They OBJECT first from Aristotle 6. Eth. c. 13., where he says: For since Prudence, which is one, is present, all will be present at the same time, (that is, the virtues.) The reason is, because all have one mode of seeking the mean for the virtues.

> UNA est igitur Prudentia generica, et multae species; sicuti una est virtus Temperantiae, et sub ea plures clauduntur species.

13 They OBJECT first from Aristotle 6. Eth. c. 13., where he says: For since Prudence, which is one, is present, all will be present at the same time, (that is, the virtues.) The reason is, because all have one mode of seeking the mean for the virtues.

> OBIICIUNT primo ex Aristotele 6. Eth. c. 13. ubi ait: Etenim cum Prudentia, quae est una, simul inerunt omnes, (idest virtutes.) Ratio est, quia omnes habent unum modum quaerendi mediocritatem virtutibus.

14 It is ANSWERED, that although Prudence labors about the mean, or about the moral good, nevertheless it does not act in the genus, seeking the end, or means, in generic goods, and of mediocrity; otherwise it would not direct sufficiently to the special objects, nor would the virtues be directed sufficiently; but as the singular virtues with diverse tendencies are borne toward their own peculiar objects, so many Prudences direct in those objects, nor have the Thomists known how to assign a diversity in this: Aristotle however speaks of Prudence in the genus, as it is extended to the directing of all the virtues.

> RESPONDETUR, quod licet laboret Prudentia circa mediocritatem, seu circa bonum morale, tamen non agit in genere, quaerendo finem, aut media in genere bona, et mediocritatis; alioqui non satis dirigeret ad obiecta specialia, neque virtutes satis dirigerentur; sicut autem virtutes singulae diversis tendentiis in peculiaria obiecta propria feruntur; ita Prudentiae multae in ea obiecta dirigunt, neque Thomistae in hoc assignare noverunt diversitatem: Aristoteles vero loquitur de Prudentia in genere, pro ut ad omnes virtutes dirigendas extenditur.

15 They OBJECT secondly: The object of Prudence is the true; but the reason of the true is the same in any matter of moral virtue, which Prudence judges: Therefore the virtue of Prudence is one.

> OBIICIUNT secundo: Obiectum Prudentiae est verum; sed eadem est ratio veri in quavis materia moralis virtutis, quam iudicat Prudentia: Ergo una est virtus Prudentiae.

16 It is CONFIRMED: As there is one Medicine against all sicknesses, so one Prudence against all practical errors.

> CONFIRMATUR: Sicut una est Medicina contra omnes aegritudines, ita una Prudentia contra omnes errores practicos.

17 Mastrius REPLIES num. 150. that if the argument were valid, it would also prove that there are not several speculative sciences, because there is one truth of all. Therefore neither Science nor Prudence takes its species from truth, but from things; for these are the object under such a reason. To the proof he denies the parity; for Medicine is toward one health, but Prudence toward several spiritual healths.

> RESPONDET Mastrius num. 150. si argumentum validum esset; probare etiam, non esse plures scientias speculativas, quia est una omnium veritas. Igitur neque Scientia, neque Prudentia speciem sumunt a veritate, sed a rebus; hae enim sunt obiectum sub tali ratione. Ad probationem negat paritatem; nam Medicina est ad unam sanitatem, At Prudentia ad plures valetudines spirituales.

18 BUT he does not advert to the force of the argument, nor does the arguer exercise himself well. The nerve of the argument therefore stands in this, that Prudence does not direct to practical truth as it is of temperance, or of justice, but as they ought to be fitted to the weight and measure of reason; as he who proves various balances by one weight, and thereby recognizes whether they are equal. So therefore Prudence weighs all moral acts of the virtues to its measure; even if it consider them materially; yet it weighs all the objects, even the formal ones of each virtue, to its rule.

> SED non advertit vim argumenti, neque arguens bene exercit. Stat igitur nervus rationis in hoc, quod Prudentia non dirigit ad practicam veritatem, ut est temperantiae, vel iustitiae, sed ut debent aptari ponderi, et mensurae rationis; sicuti, qui probat stateras varias per unum pondus, et agnoscit inde, an sint aequae. Sic igitur Prudentia omnes ad suam mensuram actus moralium virtutum ponderat, esto eos consideret materialiter; tamen omnia obiecta, etiam formalia singularum virtutum pensitat ad suam regulam.

19 It is ANSWERED therefore, that Prudence directs the singular acts of the virtues to the measure of reason, not precisely as to one common genus, but according to this or that special reason, seeking for each the individual means, clothed with so many circumstances, so that it does not stop at the being of reason, but equates the singular acts to the individual rules of that species of virtue; For it is the Directrix of human acts, which are singular, and it directs these to the special norm of the mean of this individual. For often those things which are right in species can be vitiated by some circumstance, and consequently be evil in the individual; and hence it needs special, singular, practical rules, since so various are the species of virtues, of which one is neither the species nor the circumstance of another, v. g. this act of attending to a sick man on a feast day, and on that account omitting the Sacred [rite], is not directed by prudence nakedly under this common reason, as it is rational, inasmuch as the act of Charity, performed in grave necessity, is deservedly to be preferred to positive human law; but as formally it is such an act, fortified with all the good circumstances of the individual; and hence as it is such an act perfectly, for such good causes; and consequently it is necessary that Prudence have all the rules, each and every one; and in this the example of Medicine is similar, which, although one in genus, nevertheless many in species are necessary, for instance purgative, preservative, and indeed toward several ends; whence there is not one health in genus, but several; for medicine does not consider health in the genus, but this and this health in number, which are various, and often opposed, by reason of the subject, because often what reduces one to temper would distemper another; for thus purgatives, which would too much weaken and enfeeble one, heal the robust man, burdened with many humors and full of superfluities; and what benefits one with burning fever will harm one with a Catarrh.

> RESPONDETUR igitur, Prudentiam dirigere actus singulatum virtutum ad rationis mensuram, non tanquam ad unum genus commune praecise, sed secundum hanc, vel illam rationem specialem, quaerens singulis mediocritates individuas, tot circumstantiis vestitas, ita ut non sistat in esse rationis, sed adaequet actus singulos regulis individuis illius speciei virtutis; Est enim Directrix humanorum actuum, qui sunt singulares, et hos dirigit ad specialem normam mediocritatis huius individui. Saepe enim, quae sunt recta in specie, possunt aliqua circumstantia vitiari, atque adeo in individuo esse mala; adeoque eget regulis specialibus singularibus practicis, cum tam variae sint virtutum species, quarum una, neque est species, neque est circumstantia alterius, v. g. hic actus attendendi infirmo in die festo, et ob id omittendi Sacrum, non dirigitur a prudentia nude sub hac ratione communi, ut est rationalis, quatenus actus Charitatis, praestitus in gravi necessitate, est merito praeferendus iuri positivo humano; sed ut formaliter est talis actus, omnibus bonis circumstantiis munitus individui; atque adeo ut est talis actus talibus de causis bonis perfecte; ac proinde oportet, ut Prudentia regulas omnes, et singulas habeat, et in hoc simile est exemplum Medicinae, quae, licet una genere sit, tamen plurimae sunt specie necessariae, puta purgativa, praeservativa, et sane ad plures fines; unde non est una sanitas genere, sed plures; neque enim medicina considerat sanitatem in genere, sed hanc, et hanc numero sanitatem, quae sunt variae, et saepe oppositae, ratione subiecti, quia saepe id, quod reducit unum ad temperiem, distemperaret aliam; sic enim purgantia, quae unum nimis debilitarent, atque infirmarent, sanant robustum, pluribus onustum humoribus, et superfluitatibus plenum; et quibus febri ardenti prodest; nocebit Catharro.

20 You will say. As Science stands in speculative matter: so Prudence in practical; but in speculative there is one science, considering principles and conclusions, although they are more distant among themselves than diverse practical principles: Therefore the diversity of doable things does not multiply prudences. Add that all are ordered to one end.

> Dices. Sicuti se habet Scientia in materia speculativa: ita Prudentia in practica; sed in speculativa una est scientia, principia considerans, et conclusiones, cum tamen magis distent inter se, quam diversa principia practica: Ergo diversitas agibilium non multiplicat prudentias. Adde, omnes esse ad unum finem ordinatas.

21 It is answered, that the habit of principles and of conclusions is not the same; for the habit of principles is called Intellect; the habit of conclusions is called Science, from the first Poster. and 6. Eth. To what he intimates about the end, I say, that the ends of Prudence are diverse, as the Saintly Doctor adverts in the cited place, and with him Scotus dist. 36. upon the letter I. for the end of Oeconomic Prudence is one, of Political another, etc. Another of Ethics; and as I said in the argument for the assertion, the ends are wholly diverse, and consequently there are several prudential habits, because it is not enough for prudence to direct to the end in the genus, but it must fit the thing in the individual, so that as it were the arrow may reach the Mark; and therefore several prudential habits are necessary, as Rada adverts controvers. 15. de Virtutibus, articulo 3.

> Respondetur, non esse eundem habitum principiorum, et conclusionum; nam habitus principiorum dicitur Intellectus; habitus conclusionum dicitur Scientia ex primo Poster. et 6. Eth. Ad illud quod innuit de fine, dico, Prudentiae diversos esse fines, ut advertit S. Doctor loco citato, et cum eo Scotus dist. 36. circa litteram I. nam alius est finis Prudentiae Oeconomicae, alius Politicae, etc. Alius Ethicae; et ut dixi in argumento pro assertione, diversi penitus sunt fines, atque adeo plures habitus prudentiales, quia non satis est prudentiae dirigere ad finem in genere, sed debet in individuo rem aptare, ut veluti sagitta Scopum attingat; et propterea plures habitus prudentiales sunt necessarii, ut advertit Rada controvers. 15. de Virtutibus, articulo 3.

22 You will object lastly. Prudence, to govern one virtue, must govern according to the norm of general rectitude, embracing all the rules of rectitude, otherwise from one defect that action will be perverse: Therefore there is one prudence, extended to all things.

> Obiicies ultimo. Prudentia, ut unam virtutem regat, debet regere ad normam rectitudinis generalis, complectentis omnes regulas rectitudinis, alioqui ex uno defectu illa actio erit prava: Ergo est una prudentia, extensa ad omnia.

23 It is answered, that intensive perfection in its own moral species is enough for each virtue, nor ought it to be extended to all the rules of rectitude of others, which indeed would be applied impertinently. For what does the rule of fasting subserve to the rule of buying? But although Prudence be a rule counseling, directing, and imperating (yet prescribing as it sounds forth by dictating; for the intellect does not command,) and to these many rules of rectitude are necessary; nevertheless not all and each are to be applied for the singular acts of the virtues.

> Respondetur, satis esse singulis virtutibus perfectionem intensivam in sua specie morali, neque extendendam ad omnes regulas rectitudinis aliarum, quae sane impertinenter adhiberentur. Quid enim infervit regula ieiunii ad regulam emptionis? Quamvis autem Prudentia sit regula consiliativa, directiva, et imperativa, (prout tamen praesinit dictans; non enim intellectus imperat,) et ad haec plurimae regulae rectitudinis sint necessariae; non tamen omnes, et singulae pro singulis virtutum actibus sunt applicandae.

24 From what has been said other objections of Tannerus and others collapse, which I shall indicate here.

> Ex dictis corruunt aliae obiectiones Tanneri, et aliorum, quas hic indicabo.

25 The first, because there is one mode of judging about all particular doable things, namely by consultation finding the mean in any matter of the virtues, and the conveniency of the means to the end of the same virtue.

> Prima, quia unus est iudicandi modus de omnibus agibilibus particulatibus, videlicet per consultationem inveniendo mediocritatem in qualibet virtutum materia, et convenientiam mediorum ad finem eiusdem virtutis.

26 The second, because the mean and honesty of one virtue cannot be prescribed except with respect to the others.

> Secunda, quia medium, et honestas unius virtutis praesciribi non potest, nisi cum respectu ad alias.

27 The third, because the diversity of doable things, in order to the habit of the intellect, is only material.

> Tertia*, quia diversitas agibilium, in ordine ad habitum intellectus, est solum materialis.*

28 It is answered indeed by denying the assumptions, and indeed that of the first proposition; for the mode which subserves one particular doable thing does nothing for the direction of another doable thing; but this one mode of judging about all is generic, and consequently insufficient, since the special is required. Similarly, although in each virtue there is a conveniency of the mean to its end; nevertheless this conveniency is one in the virtue of temperance, another in the military virtue, nor does the Plowman hold the goad with the same conformity of the mean by which the Sailor holds the rudder; say the same of the rest.

> Respondetur enim, negando assumpta et quidem primae propositionis; nam modus, qui infervit uni particulari agibili, nihil facit ad directionem alterius agibilis; iste autem modus unus iudicandi de omnibus est genericus, ac proinde insufficiens; cum specialis requiratur, Similiter licet in unaquaque virtute sit convenientia medii ad suum finem; tamen haec convenientia alia est in virtute temperantiae, alia in virtute militari, nec eadem medii conformitate tenet Arator stivam, qua Nauta temonem; Idem dic de caeteris.

29 To the second objection I say similarly, that one virtue has its whole honesty intensive, without the honesty of another; as proved above; even if extensively it cannot be occupied in the matter of other virtues unless aided by their auxiliary supplies; yet this, since it is per accidens, and sometimes superfluous, since it is not always necessary for some virtue to go forth beyond its limits, is beside the point.

> Ad secundam obiectionem Dico similiter, unam virtutem habere totam suam honestatem intensivam, absque honestate alterius; ut supra probatum est; esto extensive in materia aliarum virtutum non possit occupari; nisi illarum copiis auxiliaribus adiuta; id tamen, cum sit per accidens, et aliquando superfluum, cum non semper necesse sit, virtutem aliquam ultra suos limites exire, non est ad rem.

30 To the third it is plain, because although several or few doable things put on the reason of material object; yet since each doable thing falls under the direction of one particular virtue; in order to this, it is necessary that it obtain the reason of formal object; and since moreover such a virtue undertakes the burden of discerning, directing, and impelling in its matter, it needs a particular prudence, which can fulfill that office; which, since it is the object of this Prudence, and indeed distinct from the object of the Prudence of another, as clearly appears from what has been said; it follows that this and that Prudence are of diverse reason, and consequently differ among themselves.

> Ad tertiam patet, quia licet agibilia plura, vel pauca induant rationem obiecti materialis; cum tamen unumquodque agibile cadat sub directione unius virtutis particularis; per ordinem ad hanc, necesse est, obtineat rationem obiecti formalis; et cum insuper talis virtus subeat onus discernendi, dirigendi, et impetandi in sua materia, opus habet particulari prudentia, quae illud muneris valeat obire, quod cum sit obiectum huius Prudentiae, et quidem distinctum ab obiecto Prudentiae alterius, ut luculenter ex dictis patet; sequitur hanc, et illam Prudentiam diversae esse rationis, ac proinde inter se differre.

Disputation XXI: On the Gift of Counsel

Question I: What the gift of counsel is, and what its office is

1 THE Gift of Counsel is a supernatural Habit, by which the mind is rendered easily movable to the inquiry necessary for deliberation. Now this mode of moving the mind is connatural to it, because it proceeds by inquiry to its decrees. But God moves the minds of men in ways connatural, as D. Thom. art. 1. and D. Bonaventure note.

> Quid sit donum CONSILII; Et quod ipsius Munus.
> DONUM Consilii est Habitus supernus, quo mens redditur facile mobilis ad inquisitionem, deliberationi necessariam. Est autem hic modus movendi mentem ei connaturalis, quia procedit per inquisitionem ad sua decreta. Congrue autem modis connaturalibus Deus mentem hominum movet, ut notat D. Thom. art. 1. et D. Bonaventura.

2 You will object. The Gifts are given in aid of the virtues; but man is sufficiently perfected for counsel by prudence and Eubulia: Therefore.

> Obiicies. Dona dantur in adiutorium virtutum; at satis ad consilium homo perficitur per prudentiam, et Eubuliam: Ergo.

3 D. Thom. answers that Prudence and Eubulia direct to Counsel according to those things which reason can comprehend; but because human reason cannot comprehend the singular contingents that can occur, hence the thoughts of mortals are timid, and our providence uncertain, as is said Sap. 9., where the Saintly Doctor speaks out most excellently; Therefore man needs, in the inquiry of Counsel, to be directed by God, who comprehends all things, which is done through the gift of Counsel, by which man is directed as it were by Counsel taken from God; just as also in human affairs those who are not sufficient of themselves in the inquiry of Counsel seek counsel from the wiser.

> Respondet D. Thom. Prudentiam, et Eubuliam dirigere ad Consilium secundum ea, quae ratio comprehendere potest; sed quia humana ratio nequit comprehendere contingentia singularia, quae possunt occurrere; hinc cogitationes mortalium timidae sunt, et incerta providentiae nostrae, ut dicitur Sap. 9. ubi praeclare S. Doctor eloquitur; Ideo indiget homo in inquisitione Consilii dirigi a Deo, qui omnia comprehendit, quod fit per donum Consilii, per quod homo dirigitur, quasi Consilio a Deo accepto; sicut etiam in rebus humanis, qui sibi ipsis in inquisitione Consilii non sufficiunt, a sapientioribus consilium requirunt.

4 Hence the Saintly Doctor labors to explain for what the gift of Counsel is necessary; namely, for the inquiry of those things which reason does not attain of itself.

> Hinc S. Doctor explicare satagit, ad quid necessarium sit donum Consilii; scilicet ad inquisitionem eorum, quae ratio per se non assequitur.

5 Wherefore the Gift of Counsel stands as a superior Mover, because indeed Prudence moves as a mover in reason toward rectitude according to the rules of created reason. But Counsel moves according to eternal reasons, which are the first rules directing to the right; hence another difference shines forth, that Counsel makes known whether something is to be done, and warns against precipices, lest one repent after the fact; but prudence teaches at what time, by what means and circumstances, here and now, one ought to act; wherefore as prudence presides specially over the virtue of fortitude, lest it rush headlong into the work; so Counsel presides over the Gift of fortitude, by which the will imbued divinely with the Holy Spirit more quickly acquiesces to the one counseling whether, and what, is to be done; Hence D. Gregory in moral. says, cited by the Seraphic Doctor de 7. Donis, de Dono Consilii, cap. 1.: greatly is fortitude destroyed, unless it be supported by Counsel.

> Qvare Donum Consilii se habet ut Movens superius, quia nempe Prudentia movet, ut movens ratione ad rectitudinem secundum regulas rationis creatae. Consilium autem movet secundum rationes aeternas, quae sunt regulae primae dirigentes ad rectum; hinc elucet alia differentia, quod Consilium scire faciat; an aliquid sit faciendum, praecaveatque praecipitia, ne post factum poeniteat; prudentia vero docet quo tempore, quibus mediis, et circumstantiis, hic et nunc, agendum sit; quare sicut prudentia praeest specialiter virtuti fortitudinis, ne praeceps in opus ruat; sic Consilium praeest Dono fortitudinis, qua divinitus imbuta voluntas Spiritui sancto, an, et quid agendum consulenti, ocius acquiescit; Hinc D. Gregor. in moral. ait apud Seraphicum de 7. Donis, de Dono Consilii, cap. 1. valde fortitudo destruitur, nisi Consilio fulciatur.

6 Whence Prudence and Counsel seem as it were the lesser Light and the greater Light; for prudence is of lesser light, which it borrows from Counsel, that it may direct the more securely; but this [Counsel] presides over the shining and fervid rays of the spiritual day, which arises in the mind; whose Morning then begins, when the ray of eternal Counsel kindles the will toward the holy purpose, and scatters further the darkness in which the mind previously had so long lodged in the Dwelling of its own prudence; But now, upon the reception of divine inspiration, it rises up, to conform itself perfectly to that supreme Counselor, whose voice it perceives with the innermost ears whispering: Son, hear, take my counsel, and cast it not away. Hear (the Seraphic Doctor postillates,) as to the Intellect, take, as to the affection, cast not away as to the effect. He who walks in this day does not stumble; for he more easily regards the past, more safely beholds the present, and more securely looks out toward things to come; wherefore Counsel is called the Eye, and the Caution of things to come; of the Morning of this Day the Psalmist says: In the morning I will stand before you, and will see, as the Seraphic Doctor notes, de 7. Donis, ubi supra, cap. 4.

> Unde Prudentia, et Consilium videntur quasi Luminare minus, et Luminare maius; prudentia enim est minoris lucis, quam etiam, quo secutius dirigat, a Consilio mutuatur; hoc autem fulgidis, fervidisque radiis praeest spirituali diei, quae in mente exoritur; cuius Mane tunc incipit, quando aeterni Consilii radius voluntatem ad sanctum propositum accendit, tenebrasque longius dissipat, quibus diu prius mens in propriae prudentiae Domicilio pernoctabat; At modo susceptione divinae inspirationis exurgit, ad perfecte se conformandum supremo illi Consiliario, cuius vocem intimis auribus percipit insusurrantem: Fili audi, accipe consilium meum, et ne abiicias. Audi (postillat Seraphicus,) quo ad Intellectum, accipe, quo ad affectum, ne abiicias quoad effectum. In hac die qui ambulat, non offendit, praeterita enim facilius respicit, praesentia tutius intuetur, et futuris securius prospicit; quamobrem Consilium dicitur Oculus, et Cautio futurorum; de Mane huius Diei ait Psalmista: Mane astabo tibi, et videbo, ut notat Seraphicus Doctor, de 7. Donis, ubi supra, cap. 4.

7 The Saintly Doctor proceeds to pour out upon pious minds the meridian Illumination of this Gift; which stands in this, that with concordant flame and light it kindle and hasten upward, in a straight path of perpendicular rays, the afffection together with the Intellect; which is accomplished while the mind is wholly intent upon observing the Divine precepts and Counsels; for then the Sun of the Deity, shining forth more brightly from the supreme orb of heaven, visits the soul with a threefold splendor; for the Father comes and visits the Memory, exciting it to operate perfectly; the Son comes and visits the Intellect, illuminating it to contemplate clearly; the Holy Spirit also visits the Will, inflaming it to love sweetly, according to the Saying of the Lord, John 14.: We will come to him, and will make our abode with him; then the divine Sun (the Seraphic Doctor says) burns the earth at meridian, burning the mountains threefold, breathing forth fiery rays, etc. as is had in Ecclesiasticus, cap. 43.

> Procedit S. Doctor meridianam huius Doni Illuminationem piorum mentibus offundere; quae in eo stat, ut concordi flamma, et luce, affectum simul, et Intellectum perpendicularibus radiis sursum recto tramite accendat, et acceleret; quod praestatur, dum mens Diuinis praeceptis, ac Consiliis observandis tota intenditur; tunc enim Deitatis Sol, e supremo coeli orbe clarius refulgens, triplici splendore animam visitat; venit quippe Pater, et visitat Memoriam, excitando ad perfecte operandum, venit et visitat Filius, illuminando Intellectum ad clare contemplandum; visitat etiam Spiritus sanctus Voluntatem inflammando ad dulciter amandum, iuxta Dictum Domini Ioannis 14. Ad eum veniemus, et mansionem faciemus; tunc Sol diuinus (ait Seraphicus) In meridiano exurit terram, tripliciter exurens montes, radios igneos exufflans, etc. ut habetur ecclesiastici, cap. 43.

8 But the Vesper, Consummative of this spiritual Day, then declines, when what is commanded by the Lord is attended to not with wavering care, but with exuberant desire the mind devotes itself wholly to the study of perfection, and with certain counsel embraces whatever is counseled: To this Vesper S. Theresa came, when she vowed that whatever she judged more perfect, and more pleasing to God, she would straightway perform; as is read in her life; for Counsels, the more perfect they are, the more luminous also they are, leading to the perfect Day, and consummating it; as the Saintly Doctor notes cap. 4. near the end, ubi supra.

> Vervm Vespera, huius Diei spiritualis Consummativa, tunc declinat, quando, quod a Domino praecipitur, ancipiti cura non attenditur, sed exuberanti desiderio tota se mens perfectionis studio impendit, et certo consilio, quicquid consulitur, amplectitur: In hanc vesperam pervenit S. Theresia, dum voverit, quicquid perfectius, Deoque gratius, iudicaret, se extemplo actituram; ut legitur in ipsius vita; Consilia enim, quo sunt perfectiora, eo etiam luminosiora ad perfectum Diem conducunt, et consummant; ut notat S. Doctor cap. 4. prope finem, ubi supra.

Question II: How the gift of counsel orders the mind

1 WHEN the Gift of Counsel is set forth, as it were an economus, for the powers of the soul to be directed toward supernatural things, the Saintly Doctor here proceeds to show how he orders his family.

2 He observes therefore, that the Soul is a certain noble creature, from the book de spiritu, et anima, cap. 17. under D. August. tomo 3.; for it is that City of God of which glorious things are said, Psalm. 86. But in the city there are many peoples; namely, the Wise for counseling, Soldiers for fighting, and Artisans for working; So in the Soul there are the vigor of genius and of nature, as it were Natives, as the Saintly Doctor says, distinguished into three grades; the first grade the Intellectual faculties obtain, the middle the Rational possess, the lowest the Sensible, or Animal, retain.

> Observat itaque, Animam esse nobilem quamdam creaturam, ex libro de spiritu, et anima, cap. 17. apud D. August. tomo 3. est quippe Civitas illa Dei, de qua gloriosa dicta sunt, Psalm. 86. In civitate autem sunt populi multi; Sapientes scilicet ad consulendum, Milites ad pugnandum, et Artifices ad operandum; Itidem in Anima sunt ingenii et naturales vigores, quasi Indigenae, ut ait S. Doctor, in tres gradus distincti; primum gradum obtinent facultates Intellectuales, medium possident Rationales, infimum retinent Sensibiles, seu Animales.

3 Therefore the Gift of Counsel presides over the whole soul, assigning the Intellectual powers to penetrating and persuading supernatural goods; whence these senses are the best Counselors of the soul; For they counsel: Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is all man, that is, the whole man: To these, as Advocates, are joined Faith, Hope, and Charity, as called from on high to plead the cause of human salvation.

> Donvm igitur Consilii praeficit toti animae vires Intellectuales ad superna bona penetranda, et suadenda; unde hi sensus sunt optimi Consiliarii animae, Consulunt enim: Deum time, et mandata eius serua; hoc enim est omnis homo*, idest, totus: His pro Advocatis adiunguntur Fides, Spes, et Charitas, utpote e superis ad humanae salutis causam agendam vocatae.*

4 Likewise this Gift subordinates the rational powers to the Intellectual, for despising evil with the eye of discretion, and choosing the good manfully; whence they are as it were the Soldiers of the Soul, fighting the insolence of concupiscence according to their powers; to which, as Auxiliary troops, are added the acquired habits, namely Prudence, Temperance, Fortitude and Justice; for these virtues strongly repel the vices, and bravely defend their right.

> Item hoc Donum potentias rationales Intellectualibus subordinat, ad malum, discretionis oculo, aspernandum, et bonum viriliter eligendum; unde sunt quasi Milites Animae, Insolentiam concupiscentiae pro viribus impugnantes; quibus in Auxiliares copias adiiciuntur habitus acquisiti, Prudentia nimirum, Temperantia, Fortitudo et Iustitia; hae etenim virtutes vitia fortiter repellunt, suumque Ius animose tuentur.

5 Finally, in the lowest place, Counsel orders the animal senses, to supply the visible things needed by the body; whence they are as it were Rustics and Artisans, persisting in works of the hands, and working with a coarser wit, serving the other faculties of the soul. These, as it were instruments of the arts, take to themselves the exterior senses, which are also as it were Recruits pursuing coarser rudiments; Likewise to the animal senses are associated certain passions, as Love, Hatred, Sorrow, and Joy, with which, being furnished, they obey the higher faculties the more expeditiously; but all these the Gift of Counsel provides, mediately or immediately, ordering each sense in its order and to its function, as the Seraphic Doctor here concludes most excellently; but of these he speaks wondrously cap. 6. and 7. seqq.

> Infimo denique loco Consilium ordinat sensus animales, ad visibilia corporis necessitati subministranda; unde sunt veluti Rustici, et Artifices, manuum operibus insistentes, et crassiori minerva operantes, caeteris animae facultatibus subserviunt. Hi, ut in artium Instrumenta, assumunt sibi exteriores sensus, qui sunt etiam veluti Tyrones crassiora rudimenta sectantes; Item sensibus animalibus associantur quaedam passiones, ut Amor, Odium, Dolor, et Gaudium, quibus instructi expeditius superioribus facultatibus obsequuntur; haec autem omnia praestat mediate, vel imediate, Donum Consilii, suo ordine, et ad suum munus unumquemque sensum disponendo, ut concludit egregie hic Seraphicus; de his autem mira eloquitur cap. 6. et 7. seqq.

Question III: Whether the gift of counsel remains in heaven

1 IT MUST BE ASSERTED that the Gift of Counsel remains in the fatherland.

> An Donum CONCILII maneat in patria.
> ASSERENDUM, manere in patria Donum Consilii.

2 It is proved first from D. Thom. When the mover is the cause only of motion, the end having been had, it ceases to move; as when a house is being built, it is promoted; but when it has already been built, it is no longer built; but when the mover is the cause not only of the motion, but also of the form to which the motion is, then the action of the mover does not cease even after the attainment of the form, as the Sun illuminates the air even after it has been illuminated; and in this way God causes in us both the virtue and the cognition, not only when we first acquire them, but also as long as we persevere in them: but thus God causes cognition in the blessed, not as in the ignorant, but by continuing in them the whole cognition of the things to be done. About those things which they do not know, they consult God, not with anxious inquiry, as we do, but with simple conversion.

> Probatur primo a D. Thom. Quando movens est causa tantum motus, habito fine, cessat movere; ut quando domus aedificatur, promovetur; at quando iam aedificata est, non amplius aedificatur; at vero quando movens est causa, non solum motus, sed etiam formae, ad quam est motus; tunc non cessat actio moventis etiam post adeptionem formae, sicut Sol illuminat aërem, etiam postquam est illuminatus, et hoc modo Deus causat in nobis, et virtutem, et cognitionem, non solum quando primo acquirimus, sed etiam quamdiu in eis perseveramus: sic autem Deus in beatis causat cognitionem, non quasi in ignorantibus, sed continuando in eis cognitionem totam, quae agenda sunt. Circa ea vero, quae nesciunt, Deum consulunt, non inquisitione anxia, ut nos, sed simplici conversione.

3 It is proved secondly from D. Bonaventure here in the body. The state of glory is much more abundant and perfect than the state of Grace; but the state of grace admits all the gifts by which the soul is conducted to Deiform perfection; and among these is Counsel; Therefore. The consequence is plain, because where the Deiformity of the soul is greater, there the Gifts which effect it should rather be given; but in the fatherland the Deiformity is greater: Therefore. Nevertheless the Saintly Doctor adverts that the Gifts and habits are admitted there as to the nobler acts and uses; but not as to those things which hardly regard imperfection.

> Probatur secundo a D. Bonaventura hic in corpore. Multo abundatior, et perfectior est status gloriae, quam status Gratiae; sed status gratiae admittit omnia dona, quibus anima ad Deiformem perfectionem conducatur; inter haec autem est Consilium; Ergo. Consequentia patet, quia ubi maior est animae Deiformitas, ibi potius danda sunt Dona, quae id praestent; sed in patria maior est Deiformitas: Ergo. Advertit tamen S. Doctor, Dona, et habitus ibi admitti quo ad nobiliores actus, et usus; non vero quo ad ea, quae viz imperfectionem respiciunt.

4 It is proved secondly from the Seraphic Doctor, fundam. 2. We shall not be more blessed in the fatherland than Christ was on the way; but Christ had the Gift of Counsel, as Isaias has it; therefore from the perfection of the fatherland there does not follow the evacuation of Counsel.

> Probatur secundo a Seraphico fundam. 2. Non erimus nos beatiores in patria, quam fuerit Christus in via; sed Christus habuit Donum Consilii, ut habet Isaias*; ergo ex perfectione patriae non sequitur Consilii evacuatio.*

5 It is confirmed fundam. 4. The lowest of the Gifts, namely fear, will not be evacuated in the fatherland; for it is said in the Psalm: The fear of the Lord is holy, remaining unto age of age: Therefore much less Counsel.

> Confirmatur fundam. 4. Infimum Donorum, scilicet timor, in patria non evacuabitur; dicitur enim in Psalmo. Timor Domini sanctus, permanens in saeculum saeculi: Ergo multo minus Consilium.

6 You will object. Where there will be no defect of doubt, or of Composition and discussion, there will be no Counsel, which carries these two with it; but those will not be in the fatherland: Therefore.

> Obiicies. Ubi non erit defectus dubitationis, aut Compositio discussus, ibi non erit Consilium, quod haec duo secum portat; sed ista non erunt in patria: Ergo.

7 The Saintly Doctor answers ad 4. Counsel implies a weighed discussion of the parts, and a stable, firm, and certain election of the worthier part: the first is accidental, and of imperfection; wherefore it will be taken away: but the second is essential to Counsel, and of perfection, whence it will remain.

> Respondet S. Doctor ad 4. Consilium Importare ponderatam partium discussionem, et stabilem, firmam, certamque dignioris partis electionem: primum est accidentale, et imperfectionis; quare tolletur: secundum vero Consilio est essentiale, et perfectionis, unde remanebit.

8 But what the function of Counsel is in the fatherland is gathered from D. Bonaventure, discoursing at length on the seven Gifts, de Dono Consilii, cap. 5. 6. and 7., where he describes most excellently the whole family of the Soul banqueting on spiritual dishes and seasoned drinks, and prescribes the manner in which, even on the way, this Gift may be foretasted; see it yourself, whose words, something divine and savoring, read through in their proper place, suggest what for that reason it was not my wish to transfer here.

> Quodnam autem sit Consilii munus in patria, colligitur e D. Bonaventura*, late differente de septem Donis,* de Dono Consilii, cap. 5. 6. et 7. ubi totam Animae familiam spiritualibus ferculis, et conditis poculis convivantem eximie describit, modumque praescribit, quo, etiam in via, hoc Donum praegustetur; ipsum vide, cuius verba, divinum quid, et sapidum, proprio loco perlecta, suggerunt, quae ideo huc transferre non libuit.

Question IV: Whether the fifth beatitude corresponds to the gift of counsel

1 D. Augustine Lib. 1. de sermone Domini in monte, cap. 9. says: Counsel befits the merciful, because the unique remedy is to be rescued from such great evils, to forgive others, and to give.

> An quinta Beatitudo respondeat Dono Consilii.
> D. Augustinus Lib. 1. de sermone Domini in monte, cap. 9. ait: Consilium convenit misericordibus, quia unicum remedium est de tantis malis erui, dimittere aliis, et dare.

2 It is proved therefore from D. Thom., because Counsel is of those things which are useful to the end; as among all means piety is useful to all things, as is said: first Timot. 4. Therefore to the gift of counsel, as directing, Mercy corresponds, since the best Counsel is that you do to another what you would wish done to yourself.

> Probatur ergo a D. Thom. quia Consilium est de his, quae sunt utilia ad finem; ut inter omnia media, utilis ad omnia est pietas, ut dicitur: prima Timot. 4. Ideo dono consilii, tanquam dirigenti, respondet Misericordia, cum optimum Consilium sit, ut alteri facias, quod tibi fieri velles.

3 It is proved also from D. Bonaventure in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. that to that Gift this Beatitude corresponds, at whose Precept it operates; but at the precept of Counsel mercy operates; therefore. For Counsel shows how we can be made better by the evils of others, by compassionating them; just as to be enriched by poverty, to be healed by infirmity, and to be relieved by a burden, according to that Counsel of the Apostle: bear one another's burdens, which Mercy, obedient, strives to bear the burdens of all, and the more it is burdened, the more it gains, and the more quickly it runs to the prize of the supernatural fatherland.

> Probatur etiam e D. Bonaventura in Diaeta, tit. 7. cap. 4. illi Dono Beatitudo haec respondet, ad cuius Praescriptum operatur; sed ad praescriptum Consilii operatur misericordia; ergo. Consilium enim ostendit, quomodo de aliorum malis possimus meliorari, ipsis compatiendo; sicut et de paupertate ditari, de infirmitate sanari, et de onere alleviari, Iuxta illud Apostoli Consilium: alter alterius onera portate*, cui misericordia obsequens omnium onera portare satagit, et quanto plus oneratur, tanto plus lucratur, et velocius ad bravium supernae patriae currit.*

4 Moreover, as Human Counsel persuades to lend more willingly to the King, for the reason that he can the more securely repay the Capital, repair the losses, pay the profits and the usuries; So the merciful are counseled by this gift, that they take care to bestow their goods more abundantly on the poor; through whose hands the liberal King, God, receives them, who is accustomed to keep the Capital for his Merchants (says the Seraphic Doctor here), by preserving grace, repair the losses, by remitting sin; pay the usuries, namely by bestowing glory and eternal life.

Praeterea*, sicut Humanum Consilium suadet, Regi libentius mutuare, eo quod securius Capitale possit reddere, damna resarcire, lucra, usurasque solvere; Ita misericordibus hoc dono Consulitur, ut bona sua pauperibus uberius curent elargiri; per quorum manus Rex liberalis, Deus, ea recipit, qui Mercatoribus (inquit* hic Seraphicus*) suis solet Capitale custodire, conservando gratiam, damna resarcire, remittendo culpam; usuras solvere, largiendo scilicet gloriam, et vitam aeternam.*

5 To this counsel the virgins prudently obeyed, carrying oil, namely of Mercy and compassion, in their vessels, as the Saintly Doctor explains; wherefore, that they may traffic according to this counsel, Christ exhorts Matthew 25.: Go, and sell all, and give to the poor.

Huic consilio prudenter obtemperarunt virgines, portantes oleum, Misericordiae nimirum et compassionis, in vasis suis, ut explicat S. Doctor quare, ut iuxta hoc consilium negotientur, hortatur Christus Matthaei 25. Vade, et vende omnia, et da pauperibus.

Disputation XXII: On the Vices Contrary to Prudence

1 The higher seat in which a virtue is placed, and the more virtues it presides over, the more frequently is it assailed by the more common vices; wherefore Prudence, which is set over the other virtues for directing them to the mark in the citadel of the mind, is assailed by a very great troop of vices.

> De vitiis Contrariis Prudentiae.
> Quo altiori sede virtus locatur, pluribusque praesidet, eo etiam vulgatioribus vitiis frequentius impetitur; quare Prudentia, quae caeteris virtutibus ad scopum dirigendis in mentis Arce praeficitur, plurima vitiorum turma impugnatur.

2 But the vices opposed to the virtues standing in the mean are of two kinds: some from defect; others from excess. The vices from defect of prudence, opposed to it, are four: Precipitation, Inconsideration, Inconstancy, Negligence.

> Vitia vero opposita, virtutibus stantibus in medio, alia sunt ex defectu; alia ex excessu. Vitia ex defectu prudentiae, ei opposita, sunt quatuor, Praecipitatio, Inconsideratio, Inconstantia, Negligentia.

3 The sins by excess opposed to prudence, which indeed bear before themselves a false species of prudence, are six: the Prudence of the flesh, Astuteness, Guile, Fraud, Solicitude for temporal things, Solicitude for things to come: All these are under the genus Imprudence, contrary to right discretion, which belongs to Prudence; of all these we shall inquire briefly.

> Peccata per excessum opposita prudentiae, quae falsam quidem speciem prudentiae prae se ferunt, sunt sex, Prudentia carnis, Astutia, Dolus, Fraus, Sollicitudo temporalium, Sollicitudo futurorum: Haec omnia sunt sub genere Imprudentiae, contraria rectae discretioni, quae ad Prudentiam spectat; de his omnibus cursim inquiremus.

Question I: On precipitation

1 PRECIPITATION is taken metaphorically from the precipitation of bodies from the highest to the lowest with a certain impetus, either innate or impressed; not by order gradually, but ruinously. Thus therefore someone precipitates, when reason and will rush down, not descending to operations by the due means and memorable degrees of considering the past, understanding the present, providing for the future, etc. But it rushes with the impetus of passion without counsel. This, if it is done from mere impulse of the will, is called precipitation; but if contempt is added of those things which ought to have been counseled, it is called Temerity, as D. Thom. ad 2. and D. Bonav. infra, Tannerus disp. 3. quaest. 5. dub. 4. and Caietanus quaest. 53. art. 3. teach. Therefore the Saintly Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 3., saying negligence, which from contempt leads man precipitantly to works contrary to salvation, without due consideration, says it is mortiferous. That this is to be noted Caietanus art. cit. and Valentia disp. 4. quest. 5. punct. 1. admonish, that we may know when the penalty of some Law, or Canon, enacted against those doing something rashly, is incurred, namely when it is done from contempt. Gather this from D. Bonav. loc. cit. and cap. 1. of the same speculum; and in the Confessional.

> PRAECIPITATIO est metaphorice sumpta a praecipitatione corporum a summo ad imum impetu quodam, vel innato, vel impresso; non per ordinem gradatim, sed ruinose. Sic igitur praecipitatur aliquis, quando ratio, et voluntas corruunt non descendendo ad operationes per media debita, et gradus memorandi praeterita, intelligendi praesentia, providendi futura, etc. Sed ruit per impetum passionis absque consilio. Haec, si ex mero impetu voluntatis fiat, dicitur praecipitatio; at si adhibetur contemtus eorum, quae consiliari oportuit, dicitur Temeritas, ut docent D. Thom. ad 2. et D. Bonav. infra Tannerus disp. 3. quaest. 5. dub. 4. et Caietanus quaest. 53. art. 3. Ideo S. Doct. in speculo animae, cap. 3. negligentiam, quae ex contemptu ducit hominem praecipitanter ad opera, saluti contraria, absque debita consideratione, ait esse mortiferam. Id notandum monent Caietanus art. cit. et Valentia disp. 4. quest. 5. punct. 1. ut sciamus, quando incurratur poena alicuius Legis, sive Canonis, statuta in facientes aliquid temere, scilicet quando fit ex contemptu. Id colligere e D. Bonav. loc. cit. et cap. 1. eiusdem speculi; et in Confessionali.

2 Sylvester ADDS under the word Temeritas, that those also are held to act rashly, and to undergo the penalties enjoined for that rash transgression, who knowingly under some fraudulent pretext exercise an act prohibited by law, as is clear from C. Venerabilem extra, qui filii sint legitimi. So also Tannerus.

ADDIT Sylvester verbo Temeritas*, eos etiam censeri temere agere, et poenas illas temerariae iniunctas transgressioni, subire, qui scienter sub praetextu aliquo fraudulento exercent actum a iure prohibitum, ut patet ex* C. Venerabilem extra, qui filii sint legitimi. Ita etiam Tannerus.

3 ANY audacity about evil is also wont to be called Temerity, as is clear from l. Iubemus C. de Sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, as Sylvester notes above, and Tutte-rem. in Clem. 1. de Sacrosanct. Eccles. But this temerity is not opposed to Prudence, but to Fortitude. Now we are treating of precipitation, and temerity, opposed to Prudence, by reason of the Eubulia annexed to it, whose act is to counsel well, as D. Thom. quaest. 53. art. 2. and 3. teaches. Therefore it is also opposed to the gift of Counsel, as I said. From which you also have that such temerity is a sin.

Question II: On inconsideration

1 INCONSIDERATION is thoughtlessness, or a not sufficiently attentive cognition of those truths from which one would judge rightly, as D. Thomas says. And so this sin is opposed to Prudence by reason of Synesis, and Gnome, annexed to it, which are judge of right judgment. On that account Cautelam and Incircumspectio are enclosed under this sin, against Cautela and Circumspection, which are integral parts of Prudence: For those ordinations are made toward right judgment, from which those two opposites fall short, which for that reason constitute one vice, and at the same time, together with Inconsideration, as Valentia and Tannerus say numero 52.

INCONSIDERATIO est incogitantia, vel non satis attenta cognitio earum veritatum, ex quibus esset recte iudicandum, ut ait D. Thom. Itaque peccatum hoc opponitur Prudentiae ratione Synesis*, et* Gnomae*, ipsi adiunctarum, quae sunt recte iudicativae. Ob id sub hoc peccato clauditur Incautela, et Incircumspectio, contra Cautelam, et Circumspectionem, quae sunt partes integrales Prudentiae: Ordinationes enim istae fiunt ad rectum iudicium, a quo deficiunt illae duae oppositae, quae propterea unum vitium constituunt, et simul, et cum Inconsideratione, ut ait Valentia, et Tannerus* numero 52.

2 But it happens for the most part, when someone, otherwise having knowledge of the Law or of fact, sins inconsiderately against either; whence he is recalled to that ignorance which the prudent man ought to have avoided; hence he has culpability when it arises from that inconsideration which is called affectata, by which someone, letting himself be carried away by the impetus of his passion, ceases to consider what and how he ought to act; But often he does not have culpability, if from the sudden presence of some unexpected thing the mind is suddenly snatched into oblivion, and is otherwise prepared to act rightly; for often, from the surreption of some affair, the mind is dispersed into various things, and however attentively you had considered, they are scattered into alien thoughts; wherefore inconsideration taken in this sense is not adverse to prudence; since it passes into the inculpable nature of Ignorance.

> ACCIDIT autem plerumque, cum quis alioqui Iuris, aut facti habens scientiam, inconsiderate contra utrumvis delinquit; unde ad illam ignorantiam revocatur, quam prudens debuit vitare; hinc habet culpam, quando oritur ex illa inconsideratione, quae dicitur affectata, qua quis sinens se suae passionis impetu abduci, considerare desinit, quid et qualiter agere debeat; Culpam vero multoties non habet, si ex repentina insperatae alicuius rei praesentia mentem subito in oblivionem rapiat, et alioquin recte operari sit paratus; saepe enim ex alicuius negotii subreptione animus in varia dispergitur, et quamprius quantumvis attente consideraveris, in alienas cogitationes disperguntur; quare hoc sensu sumpta inconsiderantia, prudentiae non adversatur; cum in naturam Ignorantiae invincibilis transeat.

3 Nor does culpable Inconsideration intervene only in choosing evil simply; but also in rejecting the greater, or better good; which happens when a sensible good allure more vehemently, and reason does not weigh all with mature deliberation; whence it follows that this vice always precedes sin; although sometimes it is the effect of that sin of which it is not the cause; for the more the will succumbs to the appetite of sensible things, the less the Intellect can attend to the due pondering of things.

> NEC solum in malo simpliciter eligendo intervenit Inconsiderantia culpabilis; sed et etiam in maiori, aut meliori bono respuendo; quod accidit, quando bonum sensibile vehementius allicit, nec ratio omnia matura deliberatione ponderat; unde sequitur, hoc vitium semper antecedere peccatum; licet aliquando illius peccati, cuius non est causa, sit effectus; cum quo magis voluntas rerum sensibilium appetitui succumbat, eo minus Intellectus debitae rerum ponderationi vacare possit.

Question III: On inconstancy

1 INCONSTANCY is a cessation from that decree of Prudence which ought to have been continued; or the reprobation of it, as D. Thomas says. Therefore it is opposed to the essential act of Prudence, which is right practical judgment about persevering in the purpose.

> INCONSTANTIA est cessatio ab eo Prudentiae decreto, quod continuari oportebat; aut illius reprobatio, ut ait D. Thomas. Igitur opponitur actui essentiali Prudentiae, qui est rectum iudicium practicum de permanendo in proposito.

2 HENCE Inconstancy is defined: A light passage from one purpose to another, as is drawn from D. Bonavent. 3. p. Centiloquii, cap. 43.; wherefore aptly by similitude of the Leopard's defects, the inconstant man, with D. Bernard in serm. Gilleberti, serm. 29.: Man is like the Leopard, unlike himself, a man various and inconstant, straightway changing his counsels. For by the variety of colors, As it were the Leopard wills; and wills not, as is said in the same place.

> HINC definitur Inconstantia: Lenis transitus a proposito in propositum*, ut eruitur e D. Bonavent.* 3. p. Centiloquii, cap. 43. quare apta similitudine Pardi defectibus vir inconstans, apud D. Bernardum in serm. Gilleberti, serm. 29. Pardo similis est homo, dissimilis sibi, homo varius, et inconstans, subinde mutans Consilia. Colorum enim varietate, Quasi vult; et non vult Pardus*, ut ibidem dicitur.*

[3] INCONSTANCY differs from Impseverance in this; that this is a discontinuation from the due end, proposing another to itself; that from the purpose undertaken, choosing another thing; but both are adverse to prudence, dictating that one must persevere in the good and remain in the purpose, according to more and less.

> INCONSTANTIA ab Imperseverantia in eo differt; quod haec fit discontinuatio a debito fine, alium sibi proponendo; illa a suscepto proposito, aliud eligendo; verum haec et illa prudentiae, dictanti in bono perseverandum, et in proposito permanendum, secundum magis et minus adversantur.

[4] THIS, by opposition to Constancy, has three degrees, as is gathered from the Seraphic Doctor de Gradibus virtutum, cap. 14. The first is, when someone is stricken from what he has begun by the praise, or indeed the blame of good men: The second, when someone is easily seduced by the praise or adulation of Players, or of evil men: The third is when someone is moved from a good purpose by mockery, or by any other light cause; These inconstancies are noticed especially in heretics, who, lacking the Anchor of Hope, and consequently the helm of infused prudence, are easily carried about by every wind; far from these went Job cap. 27., who, as much caressed by the adulation of prosperity as buffeted by the storms of adversity, prudently answered his friends: The justification which I began to hold, I will not abandon, as the Seraphic Doctor notes, ubi supra: Of Inconstancy D. Greg. speaks most excellently, cited by D. Bonau. in Pharetra lib. 3. cap. 5.: While the heart in adversities hopes for prosperity; in prosperities it fears adversity, hither and thither it is rolled by certain waves, and is turned about by the mutability of the various modes of alternating things.

> HAEC, ex opposito Constantiae, habet tres gradus, ut colligitur e Seraphico de Gradibus virtutum, cap. 14. Primus est, cum quis a coepto percellitur laude, vel etiam vituperio bonorum hominum: Secundus, quando facile quis seducitur laude, vel adulatione Histrionum, aut malorum hominum: Tertius est quando a proposito bono quis movetur irrisione, aut quavis alia levi causa; Hae inconstantiae in haereticis praecipue animadvertuntur, qui Carentes Anchora Spei, ac proinde infusae prudentiae gubernaculo, omni vento facile circumferuntur; ab his longe abiit Iob cap. 27. qui tam prosperitatis adulatione blanditus, quam adversitatis procellis impetitus, prudenter amicis respondit: Iustificationem, quam tenere coepi, non deseram, ut notat Seraphicus Doctor, ubi supra: De Inconstantia praeclare ait D. Greg. apud D. Bonau. in Pharetra lib. 3. cap. 5. Dum cor in adversis sperat prospera; in prosperis formidat adversa, huc illucque quibusdam fluctibus volvitur, ac per modos varios rerum alternantium mutabilitate versatur.

Question IV: On negligence

[1] NEGLIGENCE in the purpose is a delay, or slowness, of reason and appetite in promoting what has already been well counseled and judged. And so it is opposed to Prudence by reason of due solicitude. Hence D. Bonau. p. 1. Centil. sect. 8. describes it: It is the dereliction of a due circumstance in a good work.

> NEGLIGENTIA in proposito, est rationis, et appetitus cunctatio, seu tarditas in promovendo id, quod est iam bene consultatum, et iudicatum. Itaque opponitur Prudentiae ratione sollicitudinis debitae. Hinc D. Bonau. p. 1. Centil. sect. 8. eam describit: Est debita circumstantiae derelictio in opere bono.

[2] But Gregory of Valentia OBSERVES that these sins are specifically distinct, and are to be specified in confession, when they have been directly willed, as they are against Prudence, but not when indirectly, in order to the work; for then it is enough to say the work of sin, for instance theft, etc. But if, from negligence of grave examination, you omit a mortal thing, it will have to be said, as D.

Bonau. says in spec. animae, cap. 3. at the end: So also if you neglect to learn by heart the things necessary for salvation.

> OBSERVAT autem Gregorius de Valentia, haec peccata esse specie distincta, et esse specificanda in confessione, quando directe sunt volita, ut sunt contra Prudentiam, non autem quando indirecte, in ordine ad opus; tunc enim satis est dicere opus peccati, puta furtum, etc. Si autem, e negligentia gravi examinis omittas mortale, erit dicendum, ut ait D. Bonau. in spec. animae, cap. 3. ad finem: Sicut et si negligas ediscere necessaria ad salutem.

3 He OBSERVES secondly that these sins, since they are of reason, arise especially from Lust, as D. Gregor. 31. Moral. cap. 31. teaches, although they arise also from other sins, especially Sloth, as the Saintly Doctor says.

> OBSERVAT secundo peccata haec, cum sint rationis, maxime a Luxuria oriri, ut docet D. Gregor. 31. Moral. cap. 31. quamvis ex aliis etiam peccatis oriantur, maxime Acedia, ut ait S. Doctor.

4 But they are MORTAL, either on the part of the object and matter, if they are about something necessary for salvation under a mortal [aspect]: or on the part of the cause, if they are committed from such carelessness, or neglect of salvation, that one makes nothing of the friendship of God; otherwise, if from negligence some things not necessary for salvation are omitted, it will be venial, as D. Thom. quaest. 54. art. 3. teaches, and universally concerning all the vices opposed to Prudence teach Sylvester under the word negligentia, Valentia quaest. 5. p. 1., Tannerus num. 54., with D. Bonau. in spec. animae, cap. 3.

> SUNT autem mortalia, vel ex parte obiecti, et materiae, si sint circa aliquid ad salutem necessarium sub mortali: vel ex parte causae, si committantur ex tali incuria, seu neglectu salutis, ut quis nihili faciat Dei amicitiam; alioqui, si ex negligentia omittantur aliqua non necessaria ad salutem, erit veniale, ut docet D. Thom. quaest. 54. art. 3. et universim de omnibus vitiis Prudentiae oppositis docent Sylvester verbo negligentia*, Valentia* quaest. 5. p. 1. Tannerus num. 54. cum D. Bonau. in spec. animae, cap. 3.

5 Nor indeed are they necessarily to be explained distinctly in confession, unless when they have been directly willed, otherwise they are only the conditions of sins. So D. Thom. Valentia, Caiet. Tannerus with D. Bonau. loc. cit. Centil. and more clearly in speculo animae, cap. 3.; and Prov. 19. brings it forward: He who neglects his own life shall be killed: He adds that negligence properly is the omission of a circumstance; but that sloth is a desistence from the work.

> NEQUE vero sunt necessario distincte explicanda in confessione, nisi quando directe sunt volita, alioqui sunt tantum conditiones peccatorum. Ita D. Thom. Valentia, Caiet. Tannerus cum D. Bonau. loc. cit. Centil. et clarius in speculo, animae, cap. 3. et affert id Proverb. 19. Qui negligit vitam suam, mortificabitur: Addit, negligentiam proprie esse omissionem circumstantiae; desidiam vero esse desitentiam ab opere.

Question V: On the prudence of the flesh

1 NOW we must treat of the vices opposed to Prudence by excess, which bear a false likeness of Prudence.

> IAM agendum de vitiis oppositis Prudentiae per excessum, quae speciem falsam Prudentiae habent.

2 PRUDENCE OF THE FLESH is the scheming of reason, clever, and adapted to attaining some perverse end, conformed to the depraved carnal appetite; and it is a mortal sin, if it sets itself up as the ultimate end.

PRUDENTIA carnis est machinatio rationis, solers, et accommodata ad consequendum pravum aliquem finem, conformem depravato appetitui carnali; estque peccatum mortale, si eum ultimum finem sibi praestituat.

3 Of this the Apostle speaks, Rom. 8. The prudence of the flesh is an enemy to God: for it is not subject to the law of God. See St. Thomas quaest. 55. art. 1. Valencia quaest. 5. punct. 2. Tanner num. 55. with St. Bonaventure cited at the beginning.

De hac intelligitur Apostolus Rom. 8. Prudentia Carnis inimica est Deo: Legi enim Dei non est subiecta. Vide D. Thom. quaest. 55. art. 1. Valentia quaest. 5. punct. 2. Tanner. num. 55. cum D. Bonavent. allegato initio.

4 This sin, however, is not distinct from that which is committed by a perverse work, unless this prudence is directly willed, as I said in quaestione 4.

Hoc vero peccatum non est distinctum ab eo, quod patratur pravo opere, nisi directe sit volita haec prudentia, ut dixi quaestione 4.

Question VI: On cunning

1 CRAFTINESS is the devising of means which, toward some end, whether good or evil, are such that they indeed appear good, but are in reality false and feigned. Thus it is gathered from the Philosopher lib. 1. Magn. Moral. cap. 33. and lib. 6. Eth. cap. 12. and St. Thomas art. 3. See Tanner disp. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 4. It is often called Prudence Proverb. 1. yet it is a vice[1], as is said 2. Corinth. 4. Not walking in craftiness. For the crafty and the dissemblers provoke the anger of God, whether for hidden iniquity or for open simulation; as St. Bernard says, de ordine vitae, finem versus. It usually attacks the weaker and the less discerning; thus the Devil, before the Master of Craftiness, in the serpent, the most cunning of Animals, deceived not the man but the woman, endowed indeed with less discretion, by feigned speech.

1 N. Editor's note: the print reads 'Proptie tamen est vitium' (OCR 'ptie'), likely a misprint for 'Proprie'; rendered as 'nevertheless it is a vice'. The print also has the clause 'sicuti Prudentia in malo sensu saepe accipitur', omitted in the first transcription and restored in the Latin.

ASTUTIA est excogitatio mediorum, quae ad finem aliquem, sive bonum, sive malum, ita sunt idonea, ut quidem videantur bona, sed revera sint falsa, et simulata. Ita colligitur ex Philosopho lib. 1. Magn. Moral. cap. 33. et lib. 6. Eth. cap. 12. et D. Thom. art. 3. Vide Tanner. disp. 3. quaest. 1. dub. 4. Ipsa saepe prudentia vocatur Astutia Proverb. 1. sicuti Prudentia in malo sensu saepe accipitur. Proptie tamen est vitium, ut dicitur 2. Corinth. 4. Non ambulantes in astutia. Astuti enim, et simulatores provocant iram Dei, sive pro occulta iniquitate, sive pro aperta simulatione; ut ait D. Bernard. de ordine vitae, finem versus. Haec imbecilliores et minus discretos solet aggredi; sic Diabolus, prius Astutiae Magister, in serpente, callidissimo Animale, non virum, sed mulierem, minori quippe discretione dotatam, simulata loquela decepit.

2 WHEREFORE St. Gregory says, lib. 9. moral. cap. 17. Two things are to be feared in good works, sloth, and deceit. Sloth is caused by lesser love of God; Craftiness is caused by greater love of self, the latter, proceeding from private love of self, issues outwardly in the circumvention of one's neighbor, simulating one thing in deeds while putting forward another in words, or the contrary.

QUARE ait D. Gregor. lib. 9. moral. cap. 17. Duo sunt in bonis operibus timenda, desidia, et fraus, Desidiam facit minor amor Dei; Astutiam facit maior amor sui*, haec ex privata sui dilectione prodit exterius in circumventione proximi, aliud simulans factis, aliud praeferens verbis, vel e contra.*

[3] MANY examples of Craftiness from the Sacred Letters the Saintly Doctor records in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 54. as when Laban was searching the household goods of Jacob, and came to the tent of Rachel, she, by feigning the custom of women, craftily deluded him Genes. 31.

> PLURIMA Astutiae exempla e Sacris litteris commemorat S. Doctor in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 54. ut cum scrutaretur Laban suppellectilem Iacob, et veniret ad Tentorium Rachel, illa, simulata foeminarum consuetudine, eum astute delusit Genes. 31.

[4] SO the Gabaonites, knowing what Joshua had done to Jericho and Hai, cunningly plotted how they might so act as not to be utterly destroyed Ios. 9.

> ITA Gabaonitae, scientes quid fecerit Iosuë Iericho, et Hai, callide cogitaverunt, quomodo ita facere possent, ut non penitus delerentur Ios. 9.

[5] SO Absalom, coveting the kingdom of his Father, maliciously began to flatter the people, cunningly boasting that he would judge with all equity 2. Reg. 15.

> SIC Absalon, Ambiens regnum sui Patris, malitiose coepit populo adulari, astute iactans se cum omni aequitate iudicaturum 2. Reg. 15.

[6] TO these add in the New Testament the Craftiness of Herod, wishing to learn the time of the star Matth. 2. so that coming he might rather kill than adore, though he cunningly simulated the latter; thus also the Pharisees, often seeking to catch the Lord in his speech, now sent disciples to him, simulators of Justice, now brought a woman taken in adultery; and many other things, which see in the place cited above.

> HIS adiice in novo testamento Astutiam Herodis, volentis addiscere tempus stellae Matth. 2. ut veniens potius occideret, quam adoraret, licet posterius callide simularet; Ita saepenumero Pharisaei cupientes capere Dominum in sermone, nunc miserunt ad eum discipulos, Iustitiae simulatores, modo foeminam in adulterio deprehensam adduxere; et alia plura, quae vide loco supra citato.

Question VII: On guile

[1] Deceit is, when one thing is done and another feigned, as St. Bonaventure says on that passage of John 1. In which there is no deceit. To be deceitful is said to be to have two hearts, as the Psalmist says: They spoke in heart, and heart.

> De DOLO.
> Dolus est, cum aliud agitur, aliud fingitur, ut ait S. Bonav. ad id Ioan. 1. In quo dolus non est. Dolosus dicitur, duo corda habere, ut ait Psalmista: In corde, et corde locuti sunt.

[2] Deceit is also a kind of execution of Craftiness, now by words, according to Psal. 5. With their tongues they dealt deceitfully; now by deeds, according to Psal. 105. That they might work deceit against his servants. For Craftiness meditates deceits, as is said Psal. 37. and Eccles. 19.

> Dolus est etiam executio quaedam Astutiae, tum per verba, iuxta id Psal. 5. Linguis suis dolose agebant; tum per facta, iuxta id Psal. 105. Ut dolum facerent in servis eius. Astutia enim dolos meditatur, ut dicitur Psal. 37. et Eccles. 19.

[3] It can be, either expressed outwardly in speech, as when one contracting betrothal calls himself Peter, though he is called John; or it can be hidden, as when one speaks in such a way as one who simply consents. Thus St. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 17. dub. 2. literal reading.

> Hic potest esse, vel expressus foris sermone, sicuti qui sponsalia contrahens, vocaret se Petrum, cum vocaretur Ioannes; vel potest esse occultus, ut cum quis ita loquitur, sicut qui simpliciter consentit. Ita D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 17. dub. 2. litterali.

Question VIII: On fraud

1 It is defined by St. Bonaventure in Comp. term. Theol. It is a will deceiving the expectation of one's neighbor for earthly gain.

> De FRAUDE.
> Definitur a D. Bonavent. in Comp. term. Theol. Est voluntas praestitum proximi decipiens ob terrenum emolumentum.

2 It is divided, 1. p. Coenil. sect. 8. according to the variety of objects; whence habits are known through acts.

> Dividitur, 1. p. Coenil. sect. 8. pro varietate obiectorum; unde per actus dignoscuntur habitus.

3 Fraud is the execution of Craftiness, but precisely through deeds, and also through words (says St. Bonaventure ad 1. Ioan. in the place cited). It is a mortal or venial sin according to the subject matter, as Cajetan notes under the word Fraus, Valencia quaest. 5. puncto 2.

> Fraus est executio Astutiae, sed praecise per facta patet, tum etiam verbis, (ait S. Bonav. ad 1. Ioan. loco adducto.) Est autem peccatum mortale, vel veniale pro subiecta materia, ut notat Caietanus verbo Fraus*, Valentia quaest. 5. puncto 2.*

4 It therefore differs from deceit in this, that deceit is either through words or through deeds; while this executes craftiness more through deeds, as Tanner notes with St. Bonaventure there.

> In hoc igitur differt a dolo, quod dolus sive per verba, sive per facta; haec vero per facta magis astutiam exequitur, ut notat Tannetus cum D. Bonav. ibi.

Question IX: On solicitude for temporal things

1 This is immoderate study about temporal goods, either because in them the ultimate end is placed, or because it has joined to it a superfluous fear of lacking them. This solicitude Christ forbids, Matth. 6. Be not solicitous. So St. Bonaventure, Opusc. Explicatio terminorum Theologiae, and in the first part of the Centiloquium, sectione 8. It is defined by Cicero here, sectione 22. It is immoderate Love of possessing.

> Haec est studium immoderatum circa bona temporalia, vel quia in eis constituatur ultimus finis, vel quia habet adiunctum timorem superfluum eis carendi. Hanc sollicitudinem prohibet Christus Matth. 6. Nolite solliciti esse. Ita S. Bonau. Opusc. Explicatio terminorum Theologiae, et parte prima Centiloquii, sectione 8. Ea definitur a Tullio, hic, sectione 22. Est Amor immoderatus habendi.

2 It has especially three species: The first is great anxiety for acquiring temporal things, whether the effect follows or not; and this is found both in those who possess much and those who possess little: The second is great tenacity in retaining, which allows nothing to be spent on pious causes or the relief of the poor: The third, finally, is a burning thirst for amassing worldly riches from every quarter, whether by fair means or foul. So St. Bonaventure, de profectu Relig. lib. 1. cap. 34. and most excellently in the Diaeta, tit. 1. cap. 6. he compares the man solicitous of temporal things to the Mole; for the wickedness of this solicitude is dark and its imprudence blind; as many possessions as it has, so many tombs it has, which it digs for itself, burying itself in continual solicitude. Then the Saintly Doctor reproves this care for riches with various other similitudes set forth there, which see.

> Tres habet praecipue species: Prima est magna acquirendi temporalia anxietas, sive effectus sequatur, sive non; et haec habetur tam in his qui multum, quam qui modicum possident: Secunda est, magna retinendi tenacitas, quae in pias causas, aut pauperum subsidium nihil sinit erogari: Tertia denique est ardens sitis undecunque mundanas divitias, sive per fas, sive per nefas, accumulandi. Ita D. Bonau. de profectu Relig. lib. 1. cap. 34. eximie vero in Diaeta, tit. 1. cap. 6. rerum temporalium sollicitum Talpae comparat; huius enim sollicitudinis atra est nequitia, et caeca imprudentia; quot habet possiones, tot habet tumulos, quos continua sollicitudine sibi sepeliendo effodit. Deinde variis aliis appositis similitudinibus reprobat S. Doctor hanc Divitiarum curam, quas ibi vide.

3 Toward the end of the Chapter he records several effects of this solicitude, the chief of which is servitude of Idols Ephes. 5. For to this Avatus refers all his works.

> Ad finem vero Capitis, plures effectus huius sollicitudinis recenset, quorum praecipuus est Idolorum servitus Ephes. 5. Ad hanc enim Avatus omnia sua opera refert.

4 The second is folly opposed to prudence; for as the fool does not guard against danger, however near,[1] so the man solicitous about the world, though near to death, does not guard against his peril, as is said, Lucae 12. Fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee, other effects see in the same place.

1 Editor's note: the print reads 'sicut stultas non praecavet periculum'; 'stultas' is not grammatical here and is rendered 'stultus' (the fool), the sense required by the parallel clause.

> Secundus, est stultitia prudentiae opposita; nam sicut stultas non praecavet periculum, quamvis propinquum sit; ita de mundo sollicitus, etiam morti propinquus, suum periculum non praecavet, ut dicitur, Lucae 12. Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam repetent, alios effectus ibidem vide.

Question X: On solicitude for the future

1 Immoderate solicitude for the future is reproved, Matth. 6. Be not solicitous for the morrow. Of this the Saintly Doctor treats in the exposition of cap. 2. of the rule, at those words: And let them not be solicitous.

> De sollicitudine Futurorum.
> Immoderata sollicitudo de futuris reprehenditur, Matth. 6. Nolite solliciti esse in Crastino. De ea agit S. Doct. in expositione cap. 2. regulae, ad ea verba: Et non sint solliciti.

2 In Religious, though small, this withdraws from perfection; in a Father of a family, when moderate, it is laudable; in anyone, however, when immoderate, it is culpable; and it destroys that prudence and confidence by which we ought to cast all our solicitude upon God; who feeds the fowls of the air, to die on the morrow; and clothes the lilies of the field, though soon to be cast into the oven.

> Haec in Religiosis, quamvis parva, a perfectione retrahit; in Patrefamilias moderata laudabilis; in quocumque vero immoderata, culpabilis est; et prudentiam, ac confidentiam illam destruit, qua omnem nostram sollicitudinem in Deum coniicere debemus; qui nutrit volatilia caeli, crastino die moritura; et vestit lilia agri, mox licet in clibano proiicienda.

3 Of this solicitude St. Bernard says excellently, de verb. Psalm. 23. There are other thoughts, more violent, which pertain to the necessities of nature; For often the Carnal thought about drink, about food, or about clothing so affects us, that it can scarcely be eradicated from our hearts. He gives the reason, because solicitude of this kind, viscous and muddy, will find muddy ground too, to which it may adhere; for man, formed not of other earth than muddy earth, conscious of his need, distrusts the providence of things to come, and directs every thought toward it, that he may follow upon it. But since our providence is uncertain, according to true prudence all our solicitude must be cast upon God; for to trust to oneself in those things whose outcome is uncertain is to distrust, as St. Bernard has it, serm. 5. de vigil. Nativit. Domini.

> De hac sollicitudine eximie D Bernard. de verb. Psalm. 23. Sunt et aliae cogitationes violentae magis, quae ad necessitates naturae pertinent; Saepe enim sic nos afficit cogitatio Carnalis de potu, de cibo, sive vestimento, ut vix eradicari queat de cordibus nostris. Rationem affert, eo quod sollicitudo huiusmodi viscosa, et limosa, limosam quoque terram, cui adhaerescat, invenerit, homo etenim non de alia terra, quam limosa plasmatus, suae indigentiae conscius; futurorum providentiae diffidit, omnemque cogitatum eo confert, ut de ea secutus sit. Verum cum incertae sint providentiae nostrae, iuxta veram prudentiam, in Deum omnis sollicitudo nostra coniicienda est; sibi enim de se confidere in his, quorum eventus incertus est, diffidere est, ut habet D. Bern. serm. 5. de vigil. Nativit. Domini.

Question XI: On the precepts of prudence

1 It is not doubtful that the Virtue of Prudence, which is the rule of all the virtues, is a matter of precept; for all the other affirmative precepts about the acts of the virtues presuppose the affirmative precepts of prudence, both in general and in species, by this very fact, that they must be done prudently from right election through prudence. Similarly all the negative precepts, forbidding the contrary acts of the vices, presuppose the negative precepts of prudence, inhibiting the acts of imprudence by which vicious acts would be badly directed.

> Non est dubium, Virtutem Prudentiae, quae est regula omnium virtutum, esse praeceptum; etenim omnia alia praecepta affirmativa de actibus virtutum supponunt praecepta affirmativa prudentiae; tum in genere, tum in specie, hoc ipso, quod ipsi prudenter fieri debent ex recta electione per prudentiam. Similiter omnia praecepta negativa, vetantia contrarios actus vitiorum, supponunt praecepta negativa prudentiae, inhibentia imprudentiae actus, a quibus actus vitiosi prave dirigerentur.

2 AND hence is had the reason why precepts of prudence had not to be given in the Decalogue: for these stand antecedently to all the precepts of the Decalogue.

> ATQUE hinc habetur ratio, cur non oportuerit in Decalogo dari praecepta prudentiae: habent enim haec se antecedenter ad omnia praecepta Decalogi.

3 BUT these precepts of Prudence are set forth in many places, Leuit. 19. Thou shalt not do Calumny to thy neighbor, namely through craftiness, deceit, or fraud. Deuter. 25. Thou shalt not have in thy sack divers weights, a greater and a less. Prouerb. 3. Lean not upon thy own prudence; that is, be not, assuredly, tenacious of thine own judgment.

> PONUNTUR autem in multis locis haec praecepta Prudentiae, Leuit. 19. Non facies Calumniam proximo tuo, per astutiam scilicet, dolum, vel fraudem. Deuter. 25. Non habebis in sacculo tuo diversa pondera, maius, et minus. Prouerb. 3. Ne innitaris prudentia tua; idest, ne nimirum sis tenax tui proprii iudicii.

4 Prouerb. 4. Acquire prudence, and seize it, and cap. 9. Walk by the ways of prudence. And Matth. 10. Be ye therefore prudent as serpents, and simple as doves, where St. Jerome says: That by prudence they may avoid snares; by simplicity not do evil. And the craftiness of the serpent is put as an example, because with its whole body it hides its head, that it may protect that in which life is. So let us guard with the peril of our whole body our head, who is CHRIST, that is, the faith whole and incorrupt. This is the interpretation also of Hilary, can. 10. in Matth. Epiph. haeresi 37. and St. Bonaventure everywhere, as I said disp. hac quaest. 2. where I also brought forward other properties of the serpent, of which some also bring forward Rabanus, Remigius, and many others.

> Prouerb. 4. Acquire prudentiam, et arripe illam, et cap. 9. Ambulate per vias prudentiae. Et Matth. 10. Estote ergo prudentes sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae, ubi D. Hieronymus ait: Ut per prudentiam deuitent insidias; per simplicitatem non faciant malum. Et serpentis astutia ponitur in exemplum, quia toto corpore occultat caput, ut illud, in quo vita est, protegat. Ita nos toto periculo corporis caput nostrum, qui CHRISTUS est, custodiamus, idest, fidem integram, et incorruptam. Haec est interpretatio etiam Hilarii can. 10. in Matth. Epiph. haeresi 37. ac D. Bonau. passim, ut dixi disp. hac quaest. 2. ubi alias etiam serpentis proprietates attuli, e quibus aliquas afferunt etiam Rabbanus, Remigius, et alii multi.

5 TO the precept of prudence also pertain those words Rom. 12. Be not prudent in your own selves according to Prouerb. 3. Lean not upon thy own prudence. Be not wise in thine own conceit. And cap. 4. Possess prudence. And below: Let thine eyes see things that are right, and let thy eyelids go before thy steps. Direct the path for thy feet, and thy actions shall be established. Tit. 2. Let them be sober, chaste, prudent, etc. first Peter 4. Be prudent therefore, and watch in prayers. Matth. 10. Be ye therefore prudent as serpents.

> PERTINENT etiam ad praeceptum prudentiae ea verba Rom. 12. Nolite esse prudentes apud vos metipsos iuxta id Prouerb. 3. Ne innitaris prudentia tua. Ne sis sapiens apud temetipsum. Et cap. 4. Posside prudentiam. Et infra: Oculi tui recta videant, et palpebrae tuae praecedant gressus tuos. Dirige semitam pedibus tuis, et actiones tuae tuae stabilientur. Tit. 2. Sobrii sint, pudici, prudentes, etc. prima Petri 4. Estote itaque prudentes, et vigilate in orationibus. Matth. 10. Estote ergo prudentes, sicut serpentes.

6 There are also negative precepts of abstaining from the things opposed to Prudence, related above.

> Sunt etiam praecepta negativaque abstinendi ab his, quae Prudentiae opponuntur, supra relatis.

Disputation XXIII: On Justice

1 JUSTICE is one thing, directing man in good, and this embraces the other virtues; wherefore it is called General: Another is that correcting and Coercing from evil, which is called Iudicial; Finally another is that which renders to each one his own proper and due good, of which we treat here, and which is called Cardinal: This is Illustrated with various similitudes by St. Bonaventure, which I shall indicate below quaest. 3.

> De Iustitia.
> IUSTITIA alia est dirigens hominem in bono, et haec caeteras virtutes complectitur; quare dicitur Generalis: Alia est corrigens, et Coërcens a malo, quae vocatur Iudicialis; Alia denique quae reddit unicuique proprium, et debitum bonum, de qua hic, vocaturque Cardinalis: Haec variis similitudinibus Illustratur a D. Bonauentura, quas infra quaest. 3. indicabo.

2 THIS also is at times confounded with the prior acceptation of Justice among the Fathers, by oratorical application; thus it is defined from St. Bernard by the Seraphic Doctor, lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 42. Justice is a virtue, rendering to each one what is his own; render therefore to the three, what is theirs; render to the superior, render to the inferior, render to the equal, to each what is his own, the same pursues there: We have before us, superiors; after us, juniors; at the right, friends; at the left, enemies; let us render therefore to each what is his own, to superiors obedience; to juniors Doctrine; to friends joy; to enemies patience. But how far this stands from legal Justice, of which we dispute here, I shall show in quaestione 3.

> HAEC etiam aliquando cum priori acceptione Iustitiae apud Patres, oratoria applicatione confunditur; ita e D. Bernard. definitur apud Seraphicum, lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 42. Iustitia virtus est, quod suum est, unicuique tribuens; tribue ergo tribus, quae sua sunt; redde superiori, redde inferiori, redde aequali, cuique quod suum est, idem ibi prosequitur: Habemus ante nos, priores; post nos, Iuniores; a Dextris amicos; a sinistris inimicos; reddamus ergo singulis quod suum est, prioribus obedientiam; Iunioribus Doctrinam; amicis laetitiam; inimicis patientiam. Verum quantum haec distet a Iustitia legali; de qua hic disputatur, dicta quaestione 3. aperiam.

Question I: Whether right is the object of justice

1 ALL Theologians, Jurists, and Philosophers hold that Ius is the object of the Virtue of Justice: but one must diligently see which Ius is established as the object of this virtue; and which Virtue Justice is understood to be by us; for each can be taken in many ways.

> An Ivs sit obiectum IUSTITIAE.
> OMNES Theologi, Iurisconsulti, atque Philosophi Ius statuunt obiectum Virtutis Iustitiae: sed oportet sedulo videre, quodnam Ius constituatur obiectum huius virtutis; et quae Virtus Iustitiae a nobis intelligatur; multis enim modis utrumque accipi potest.

2 FOR JUSTICE is taken chiefly in three ways. First, for the habit by which we are made suited to all things equitable, both in order to ourselves, and in order to God and others: thus it is taken by all Philosophers, but more by Theologians, who understand in this sense what is delivered universally in the Scriptures, when someone is named just, namely endowed with all the virtues, which is everywhere met with, where they name Just men heroes, as Genes. 6. Noë a just man Genes. 6. Iob. 1. Eccles. 40. et seq. as the Saintly Doctor observes everywhere. The Doctor interprets it at ad 3. Luca:[1]

Make straight your paths, according to 16. Isa. The path of the just is right. Prouerb. 4. I led thee by the paths of equity. So Prouerb. 8. I walk in the ways of justice. So Gregory of Nyssa, lib. de beat. oratione 4. understands it Matth. 5. Blessed who hunger and thirst after justice, in which sense it is taken also by St. Augustine at that place, cited by St. Bonaventure 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 44. and lib. 2. Pharet. cap. 42.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'Ided ad 3. Luca interpretatur id'; 'Ided' is unintelligible and is rendered 'Ideo' (therefore), as a new clause begins.

> IUSTITIA enim tribus modis praecipue accipitur. Primo pro habitu, quo reddimur idonei ad omnia aequa, cum in ordine ad se, quam in ordine ad Deum, aliosque: sic accipitur ab omnibus Philosophis, magis vero a Theologis, qui hoc sensu intelligunt id, quod universaliter in Scripturis traditur, cum aliquem iustum nominant, nempe omnibus praeditum virtutibus, quod passim obvium est, quae Iustos heroes nominant, ut Genes. 6. Noë vir iustus Genes. 6. Iob. 1. Eccles. 40. et seq. ut observat S. Doct. passim. Ided ad 3. Luca interpretatur id: Rectas facite semitas, iuxta 16. Isa. Semita iusti recta est. Prouerb. 4. Duxi te per semitas aequitatis. Sic Prouerb. 8. In viis iustitiae ambulo. Sic Gregorius Nyssenus lib. de beat. oratione 4. intelligit id Matth. 5. Beati qui esuriunt, et sitiunt iustitiam, quo sensu accipitur etiam a D. August. ad eum locum apud D. Bonau. 3. p. Centiloquii, sect. 44. et lib. 2. Pharet. cap. 42.

[3] IN like manner Justice is taken for the habit infused with sanctifying grace, by which one is constituted just, and holy, endowed with all the virtues. So Rom. 3. But the justice of God, by the faith of Jesus Christ, unto all who believe in him. Which is called the justice of God, not formally, but efficiently from God, or the gift of God, as St. Augustine teaches lib. de Spiritu, et litt. cap. 9. and the Holy Council of Trent often inculcates, and gravely defines, as I showed Tract. de Gratia, disp. 2.

> SIMILI modo accipitur Iustitia pro habitu infuso gratiae sanctificantis, quo quis constituitur iustus, et sanctus, omnibus virtutibus dotatus. Sic Rom. 3. Iustitia autem Dei per fidem Iesu Christi in omnes, qui credunt in eum. Quae dicitur iustitia Dei, non formaliter, sed efficienter a Deo, seu donum Dei, ut docet D. August. lib. de Spiritu, et litt. cap. 9. et saepe iniungit, atque graviter definit Sanctum Concilium Tridentinum, ut ostendi Tract. de Gratia, disp. 2.

[4] THEREFORE we do not take justice in so general a sense, but as it is a particular virtue among the four Cardinal ones, whose proper praise and office is to constitute the due equality between men, as the Saintly Doctor notes in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. et in quaestionibus passim, et in 4. dist. 15. passim et 3. p. Cencil. sect. 44. et 5. p. Breuil. cap. 4. et lib. 2. Phar. cap. 42. et in Diata, tit. 5. cap. 8.

> NON igitur tam generali ratione iustitiam accipimus, sed ut est quaedam peculiaris virtus e quatuor Cardinalibus, cuius propria laus, et munus sit constituere aequalitatem debitam inter homines, ut advertit S. Doct. in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. et in quaestionibus passim, et in 4. dist. 15. passim et 3. p. Cencil. sect. 44. et 5. p. Breuil. cap. 4. et lib. 2. Phar. cap. 42. et in Diata, tit. 5. cap. 8.

[5] WISDOM takes it thus, c. 8. where it is said, to teach Soberness, and Wisdom, Justice and Virtue; where it calls Soberness Temperance; for Wisdom it understands Prudence; for Virtue, Fortitude; but it takes Justice for the Virtue of Justice, which is the second Cardinal virtue among those, as Gregory of Valencia notes disp. 5. quaest. 1. puncto 1. after St. Bonaventure in the Commentary on that place.

> EAM sic accipit Sapientia c. 8. ubi dicitur, docere Sobrietatem, et Sapientiam, Iustitiam et Virtutem; ubi sobrietatem vocat Temperantiam; pro Sapientia intelligit Prudentiam; pro Virtute Fortitudinem; Iustitiam vero pro Iustitiae Virtute accipit, quae inter illas est secunda virtus Cardinalis, ut advertit Gregorius de Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 1. puncto 1. post D. Bonau. in Commentario eius loci.

6 THIRDLY, in another mode the Saintly Doctor takes it in 3. § dist. 33. dub. 1. litt. et in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. for the judicial, coercing with punishments; But this is a species of the Cardinal, as I shall say; nevertheless all commonly call it this, when it is said: Justice inquired into Peter, punishes; or: Peter is afflicted in Justice.

> TERTIO alio modo eam accipit S. Doct. in 3. § dist. 33. dub. 1. litt. et in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. pro iudiciali coërcente poenis; Sed haec est species Cardinalis, ut dicam; eam tamen communiter vocant omnes, cum dicitur: Iustitia inquisivit Petrum, punit; vel: Petrus in Iustitia vexatur.

7 ¶ Further, Ius also can be taken in many ways.

8 ¶ First, whatever in any mode is equitable, or good, as the Jurist Paulus says l. Ius, ff. de Iustitia, et Iure.

> ¶ Primo, quidquid quovis modo aequum est, seu bonum, ut ait Paulus Iurisconsult. l. Ius, ff. de Iustitia, et Iure.

9 ¶ Second, it signifies whatever is conformable to law, as the Philosopher says 5. Eth. cap. 1. In which way St. Isidore said lib. 5. Ethymol. cap. 3. that Law is a kind of species (that is, norm, or idea) of Ius, according to the doctrine of St. Thom. art. 1. ad 2.

> ¶ Secundo significat quidquid est legi conforme, ut ait Philosophus 5. Eth. cap. 1. Quo pacto S. Isidorus dixit lib. 5. Ethymol. cap. 3. Legem esse quandam speciem (idest normam, seu ideam) Iuris, iuxta doctrinam D. Thom. art. 1. ad 2.

10 ¶ Third, it signifies the lawful faculty, or power of doing, or acquiring, or possessing, or alienating something, as the Jurists distinguish between Ius ad rem, which is owed to someone; and Ius in re, which someone also possesses.

11 ¶ Fourth, it is taken for the Sentence of a judge, as the Jurist Paulus has it loco citato.

12 ¶ Fifth, it signifies the same as Lex, that is, the dictamen of prudence, whether natural, or in habit, or the authority for making laws, in which way Ius is divided into the Natural of nations, and Civil, by Ulpian in l. Iuri, et often by St. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 36. quaest. 1. et 3. p. Centil. cap. 44. et other places, cited in the tract. de Legibus.

13 ¶ In none of the said modes, or the others enumerated by Valencia, is Ius taken here, but it is taken for the same as Iustum, through equality with another. Hence Scotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, et Iure, quaest. 1. art. 1. says that Ius, by APOCOPE, is said as it were iustum: Whence also in Greek Ius and Iustum are expressed by the same word δίκαιον. The ethymology of which word Ius properly sounds, to be just through the equality of thing with thing. For, as the Philosopher says 5. Eth. cap. 4. on that account it is called ius δίκαιον, because it is δίχα, that is, divided in two, as if to say bipartite; and what is divided in two is divided into equal parts according to the ratio of discrete quantity, inasmuch as it is divided into one and one. Whence, and Iudex, as Aristotle says in the same place, because he determines the just through the equality of thing with thing, is called Bipartitor. And by this reason Justice is called Equity. Thus Proverb. 8. Mine is Equity, mine is Prudence, mine is Fortitude, as the Saintly Doctor observes ad cap. 8. Sapientiae.

¶ Nullo ex dictis modis, vel aliis enumeratis a Valentia, accipitur hic Ius, sed sumitur pro eodem, ac Iustum, per aequalitatem cum altero. Hinc Scotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, et Iure, quaest. 1. art. 1. Ius per APOCopen, quasi iustum, dici ait: Unde etiam in Graeco Ius, et Iustum eodem vocabulo δίκαιον exprimitur. Cuius vocabuli ethymologia Ius proprie sonat, esse iustum per aequalitatem rei cum re. Nam, ut ait Philosophus 5. Eth. cap. 4. propterea appellatur ius δίκαιον, quia δίχα, idest bifariam divisum est, quasi dixeris bipartitum, quod autem bifariam dividitur, in partes dividitur aequales secundum rationem discretae quantitatis, quandoquidem dividitur in unum, et unum. Unde, et Iudex, ut ibidem ait Aristoteles, quia iustum per aequalitatem rei cum re determinat, dicitur Bipartitor. Et hac ratione Iustitia dicitur AEquitas. Sic Proverb. 8. Mea est AEquitas, mea est Prudentia, mea est Fortitudo, ut observat S. Doct. ad cap. 8. Sapientiae.

14 ¶ Aristotle also used Ius in this sense cap. 4. when he said: Ius, which is in exchanges, is a certain constant equality according to Arithmetic proportion; but that ius, which is in distributions, he had said cap. 3. according to Geometric proportion.

¶ Hoc etiam sensu Ius usurpavit Aristoteles cap. 4. cum dixit: Ius, quod in commerciis est, esse aequum quoddam constans proportione Arithmetica; id autem ius est, quod est in distributionibus constare, dixerat cap. 3. proportione Geometrica.

15 ¶ Moderns labor in this ius, which is the object of Justice, in making it clear; and as I see, Mastrius observes the matter Tom. 2. disp. 7. num. 163. saying, that it is That which constitutes dominion, which is twofold, of Jurisdiction, and of Property. This dominion however is defined by the Jurists: The faculty of using a thing at pleasure, without injury to another. In which definition, says Hurtado disp. 12. de Incarn. sect. 3. a circle is committed; for also in defining injury, they say it is the use of a thing against the right and will of the Lord. Thus Ius is defined through Injury, and this through Ius, which is to run in a circle against Aristotle 5. Metaph. cap. 15. Hence Cardinal Lugo disp. 1. de Iustitia, et disp. 3. de Incarn. sect. 2. num. 42. teaches, that this ius, which is the object of Justice, is nothing else than a certain moral prelation, by which this man is morally preferred to others in the use of this thing, by reason of a peculiar connexion, which the thing has with him. Which explanation Bellutus also embraces disp. 7. de Incarn. quaest 6. art. 1. and Mastrius num. 164. He adds, however, that this prelation must be explained, from what head it arises, namely from the disposition of laws, or the nature of the thing. Thus it is explained a priori.

explicationem complectitur etiam Bellutus disp. 7. de Incarn. quaest 6. art. 1. et Mastrius num. 164. Addit tamen, hanc praelationem explicandam, ex quo capite oriatur, puta ex dispositione legum, vel natura rei. Sic a priori explicatur.

16 ¶ I indeed, weighing this new invention, find that all of these relapse into the same circle; for the Praelation in the use of a thing is an effect of ius. For each one is preferred in the use of a thing, namely a house, a garment, etc. because he has right to it before others, and so Ius is the fountain and cause of that prelation, and therefore ius is not expressed a priori. Again therefore if you seek the origin of that prelation, it must be taken a priori from ius; and so they walk in a circle.

17 ¶ Tanner therefore disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2. n. 8. says, that Ius in re, in the mode of dominion, can scarcely be explicated by any common concept, since it is an analogon of proportionality to its inferiors, such as the dominion of Jurisdiction, and of Property, of which I shall treat in the Disputationes de Furto, et Rapina.

18 ¶ These things pre-stated, it is now established that the object of the Justice of which we treat is Ius, that is, as he says, the Iustum through a certain equality.

19 ¶ It is proved first from the definition of Justice; which is defined through such Ius, as through its proper object. So Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 1. We see, that this kind of habit is wont to be called Justice; from which men are made suited to doing just things. And cap 5. Justice is that by which the just man is called the doer of the just from election. Where he takes iustum for the equal.

20 ¶ The Jurists also with the words of Ulpian l. Iustitia, ff. de Iustitia, et Iure, define Justice thus: Justice is a constant, and perpetual will of rendering to each his ius. Which definition St. Thom. also sets forth quaest. 58. art 1. and St. Bonaventure 3. p. Centil. sect. 44. where he asserts it to be of the Masters.

21 ¶ So also St. Ambrose lib. 1. de offic. cap. 24. says: Justice renders to each his own ius, does not claim another's, neglects his own utility, and keeps the common equity. And St. Augustine lib. 19. de civit. cap. 21.

There is not (he says) ius, where there is no justice: Justice moreover is that virtue which distributes to each his own,[2] So also St. Bonaventure reports loco citato.

[2] Editor's note: the print reads 'quae sua nique distribuit'; 'nique' is corrupt (apparently for 'unicuique'); rendered 'sua unicuique distribuit' (distributes to each his own).

¶ Sic etiam D. Ambrosius lib. 1. de offic. cap. 24. ait: Iustitia suum cuique ius tribuit, alienum non vendicat, utilitatem propriam negligit, et communem aequitatem custodiat. Et D. August. lib. 19. de civit. cap. 21. Non est (ait) ius, ubi nulla iustitia est: Iustitia porro ea virtus est, quae sua nique distribuit. Sic refert etiam D. Bonav. loco citato.

22 ¶ It is proved secondly by St. Bonaventure in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 8. That is the object of Justice, which constitutes the virtue, standing in the mean, not declining to the vicious extremes through excess, and defect: Such is ius, or iustum: Therefore. The Major is Aristotle's 2. Eth. cap. 6. The Minor is proved; For then is one sinning against justice, when more or less is given than is owed. But the mean is the equitable, as Aristotle shows 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. cited by St. Bonaventure loc. cit. He says. Thus cap. 4. he says: Whence when men contend, they flee to the judge, etc. and they seek a judge in the mean, and some call him mediator, as if, should they have attained the mean, they should also attain the ius itself. Ius therefore is a certain mean, if indeed the judge also is in the mean; But the judge reduces to equality; and as, if a line be divided into two unequal parts, that by which the greater part exceeds the half, he takes from it, and joins to the lesser.

¶ Probatur secundo a D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 8. Illud est obiectum Iustitiae, quod constituit virtutem, in medio constantem, non declinantem ad extrema vitiosa per excessum, et defectum: Tale est ius, seu iustum: Ergo. Maior est Aristotelis 2. Eth. cap. 6. Minor probatur; Nam tunc peccatur contra iustitiam, quando plus, minusve datur, quam debetur. Medium autem est aequum, ut ostendit Aristoteles 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. apud D. Bonav. loc. cit. Dicit. Sic cap. 4. ait: Unde cum altercantur homines, ad iudicem confugiunt, etc. et quaerunt iudicem medium, et vocant nonnulli mediatorem, quasi si medium fuerint consecuti, ius quoque ipsum sint consecuturi. Ius igitur medium quoddam est, si quidem et iudex medium est; Iudex autem ad aequalitatem redigit; et quemadmodum, si linea in duas inaequalis partes divisa sit, illud, quo maior pars dimidium excedit, ab ea aufert, et adiungit minori.

23 ¶ The Saintly Doctor expounds it with an elegant Astronomical example: For as he says the Polar star, near the pole, is borne with a small gyre in the diurnal motion around the Pole; yet so, that it does not recede from the middle, that is, from the pole of the world; so also created Justice gyrates closely around the immovable Justice of God: And as, not declining, it keeps the straightness of the diurnal motion; so that as the line of the Equator in the middle of its circulation describes the Highest circle, on that account it does not allow the gyrating stars to decline to the right, or to the left, that is, toward the South, nor toward the North; although it is borne through the immense space of 1017. Millions of miles; so also Justice, keeping the equatorial line of equity, does not allow the various things snatched by the first mobile to decline from East to West, either to the right of excess, or to the left of defect, giving more to one; and taking from the other.

aequatoriam aequitatis, res varias a primo mobili raptas, ab Oriente in Occasum non sinit declinari, aut ad dexteram excessus, aut ad sinistram defectus, dando plus uni; et alteri auferendo.

24 From these the Saintly Doctor draws, in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. and 5. p. Brevil. cap. 4. with St. Thomas as cited by Cajetan art. 1. and Valencia p. 1. at the end. And Soto lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 1. art. 1. the difference between justice and the other moral virtues; for Justice according to its proper reason makes right in order to another; but the others only in order to oneself. On this account St. Ambrose lib. 1. offic. cap. 28. says, that Justice is born rather for others than for itself. So also Cicero lib. 2. de Republica, and Seneca epist. 77. as the Saintly Doctor teaches in Pharetra, lib. 1. cap. 42.

Ex his deducit S. Doct. in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. et 5. p. Brevil. cap. 4. cum D. Thom. apud Caietanum art. 1. et Valentiam p. 1. in fine. Et Sotum lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 1. art. 1. differentiam inter iustitiam, et alias virtutes morales; nam Iustitia secundum propriam sui rationem facit rectum in ordine ad alterum; aliae vero tantum in ordine ad se. Propterea D. Ambrosius lib. 1. offic. cap. 28. ait, Iustitiam aliis potius natam esse, quam sibi. Sic et Cicero lib. 2. de Republica, et Seneca epist. 77. ut docet S. Doct. in Pharetra, lib. 1. cap. 42.

25 It is GATHERED also, that the mean of Justice is the mean of the thing, even without comparison to the very agent; but of the other virtues, which turn about their own passions, and not about another, in no way does it consist in a mean without comparison to the very agent. But that equality is that very ius, which is called equitable between too much and too little, as Aristotle says 5. Eth. cap. 4.

COLLIGITUR etiam, medium Iustitiae esse medium rei, etiam sine comparatione vel ad ipsum operantem; aliarum vero virtutum, quae circa passiones proprias versantur, et non circa alterum, nullo modo consistit in medio sine comparatione ad ipsum operantem. Est autem illa aequalitas illud ipsum ius, quod dicitur aequum inter nimium, et paucum, ut ait Aristoteles 5. Eth. cap. 4.

26 This shines still more in that example of the Seraphic Doctor: For as without any thinking there is the pole, upon which the heaven moves, and the polar star; which, its small diurnal circle having been described around the pole, they keep the motion of both Hemispheres by the line of the Equator, the substance of the heaven being kept on both sides for each Hemisphere Mathematically; so also Justice, before every thought, and before all its operation, has that object alone, and only to be kept, which is not found in the other moral virtues.

Hoc adhuc exemplo illo Seraphici elucet: Sicut enim nullo cogitante polus est, super quem movetur coelum, et stella polaris; quae suo circulo parvulo diurno descripto circa polum rectum servant motum utriusque Hemisphaerii per lineam AEquatoris, servata utrinque Mathematice utrique Hemisphaerio substantia caeli; ita et Iustitia ante omnem cogitationem, et ante omnem suam operationem habet obiectum illud tantum, et tantum servandum, quod in aliis virtutibus moralibus non reperitur.

27 HENCE also it is, that in the Disputation on Justice there is first treated of its object; then of the Virtue, because the object is presupposed before the virtue; not so in the other moral virtues. See Valencia at the end of the punctus.

HINC etiam est, ut in Disputatione de Iustitia prius agatur de obiecto eius; deinde de Virtute, quia obiectum supponitur ante virtutem; non sic in aliis virtutibus moralibus. Vide Valentiam in fine puncti.

28 IT MUST however be observed, that Ius, which is the object of Justice, includes two things; First, that it be owed: Second, that it be equal.

OPORTET autem observare, Ius, quod est obiectum Iustitiae, duo includere; Primum, ut sit debitum: Secundum, quod sit aequale.

29 INASMUCH as it is owed, it can be either owed Legally by the force of some Law, or singular, arising from some pact, or convention of certain persons, such as is between buyer and seller.

QUATENUS est debitum, potest esse vel debitum Legale ex vi alicuius Legis, vel singulare, ortum ex aliquo pacto, vel conventione aliquorum, quale est inter ementem, et vendentem.

30 SECONDLY Ius, inasmuch as it is owed, is divided into natural Ius and human Ius. The owed thing of the first kind arises from the law of nature, namely, that if you give a measure of wheat as a loan; that he render that measure to you. This however is distinguished threefold by St. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 33. quaest. 1. The first is called that which is contained in the Law, and the Gospel, and this is called natural Ius commonly. The second is proper, and is defined at the beginning of the Decretals: Natural ius is that which is common to all nations; and this ius is that which reason dictates. The third, most proper, which nature taught all animals.

SECUNDO dividitur Ius, ut est debitum, in Ius naturale, et Ius humanum. Debitum primi generis est ortum ex lege naturae, puta, ut si mutuum das modium tritici; et modium ille tibi reddat. Hoc vero triplex distinguitur a D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 33. quaest. 1. Primum dicitur, quod in lege, et Evangelio continetur, et hoc dicitur Ius naturale communiter. Secundum est proprium, et definitur initio Decretorum: Ius naturale est, quod est commune omnium nationum; et hoc ius est, quod dictat ratio. Tertium propriissimum, quod natura docuit omnia animalia.

31 The owed thing from human law is, what has been established by some human law, as that between certain things vendible, and that price which is fixed by human law, it be the only price.

Debitum ex lege humana est, quod statutum est aliqua lege humana, ut inter res aliquas venales, et pretium illud, quod humana lege, taxatur, sit solum pretium.

32 From the other head, however, inasmuch as it is something just, and equal; It is divided first by Aristotle lib. 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. into Ius, or the equal Geometric; and Arithmetic. The Geometric equal, which is according to proportion, is observed in the distribution of common goods among those who are members of the community, so that by as much as one surpasses another in merits, by the same proportion he may receive more of the goods of the community. But Aristotle says that Ius is exercised through Arithmetic equality, both in exchanges, which are done voluntarily between men, as in buying, selling, exchange, etc. and in compensating, or making amends for the dealings of men involuntary, and those without clandestine acts, as theft, adultery, poisoning, pandering, the seduction of servants, deceitful homicide, false witness, etc. or manifestly violent, as flogging, captivity, slaughter, rapine, mutilation, reviling, contumely, etc. which examples the Philosopher brings in that cap. 2. and through this are distinguished two species of Justice properly so called, namely Distributive, and Commutative, which I exposed at length p. 1. Tract. 1. disput. 19. quaest. 1. et 2.

Ex altero vero capite, quatenus est aliquid iustum, et aequale; Dividitur primo ab Aristotele lib. 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. in Ius, seu aequale Geometricum; et Arithmeticum. AEquale Geometricum, quod est secundum proportionem, servatur in distributione bonorum communium in eos, qui sint membra communitatis, ut ea proportione, qua unus alterum meritis superat, eadem plus de bonis communitatis recipiat. Ius autem per aequalitatem Arithmeticam exerceri ait Aristoteles, tum in commutationibus, quae voluntarie fiunt inter homines, ut in emptione, venditione, mutatione, etc. tum in compensandis, sive emendandis commerciis hominum involuntariis, iisque sine clandestinis, ut furto, adulterio, veneficio, lenocinio, servorum seductione, doloso homicidio, falso testimonio, etc. sive manifeste violentis, ut flagellatione, captivitate, caede, rapina, mutilatione, convitio, contumelia, etc. quae exempla affert Philosophus illo cap. 2. ac per hanc distingvuntur duae species Iustitiae proprie dictae, scilicet Distributiva, et Commutativa, quas late exposui p. 1. Tract. 1. disput. 19. quaest. 1. et 2.

33 SECONDLY Ius, inasmuch as it is equal, is divided into Ius, or the iustum simply, and Ius secundum quid. Ius simply is, what is altogether equal, or by which those are made equal between whom it is; and because equality is between distinct ones, therefore this equal is between those, of whom one is not a part of the other, as between two citizens, and it is called Political Ius. Ius secundum quid equal, is between those, of whom one is a part of the other, as between Father, and son, who is a part of the Father, since from his seed, as Aristotle teaches 8. Eth. cap. 12. So between Lord, and servant, who is something of the Lord, namely his instrument, and a part in goods, as Aristotle teaches 1. Polit. cap. 3. Such is also that between Husband, and Wife, as Aristotle says, because whichever spouse is of the other, as is gathered from the Philosopher 6. Eth. cap. 5. and more from Matth. 19. Ephes. 5. For they are one flesh, and on that account that ius is called by St. Thomas here, art. 4. Oeconomicum, and some dominion intervenes in bodies, and some other things, as St. Bonaventure teaches in 4. dist. 41. quaest. ult. Such improper ius seems to be also between citizen, and community, of which he is a part.

SECUNDO dividitur Ius, quatenus aequale, in Ius, seu iustum simpliciter, et Ius secundum quid. Ius simpliciter est, quod omnino est aequale, seu per quod exaequantur illi, inter quos est; et quia aequalitas est inter distinctos, ideo hoc aequale est inter illos, quorum alter non est pars alterius, ut inter duos cives, et dicitur Ius Politicum. Ius secundum quid aequale, est inter eos, quorum unus est pars alterius, ut inter Patrem, et filium, qui est pars Patris, quippe ex eius semine, ut docet Aristoteles 8. Eth. cap. 12. Sic inter Dominum, et servum, qui est aliquid Domini, puta instrumentum eius, et pars in bonis, ut docet Aristoteles 1. Polit. cap. 3. Tale est etiam inter Maritum, et Uxorem, ut ait Aristoteles, eo quod quicumque coniugum est alterius, ut colligitur ex Philosopho 6. Eth. cap. 5. et magis ex Matth. 19. Ephes. 5. Sunt enim una caro*, et propterea id ius vocatur a D. Thoma* hic, art. 4. Oeconomicum, et intercedit aliquod dominium in corpora, et aliqua alia, ut docet D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 41. quaest. ult. Tale ius improprium videtur etiam inter civem, et communitatem, cuius ille est pars.

34 THEY DISPUTE: Whether this improper ius is also on the part of the father toward the son, since the father is not a part of the son. They respond affirmatively, Cajetan art. 4. Valencia punct. 2. for whatever pertains to the whole, pertains also to the part. Hence it comes about, that what the son renders to the father, he renders also to himself.

ALTERCANTUR: An hoc ius improprium, sit etiam ex parte patris ad filium, cum pater non sit pars filii. Respondent assertive Caietanus art. 4. Valentia punct. 2. nam quidquid pertinet ad totum, pertinet etiam ad partem. Hinc fit, ut, quod filius tribuit patri, tribuat etiam sibi ipsi.

35 THEY ALSO DOUBT: Whether the son, even when emancipated, ought to be included under this improper ius. It is answered, that he is included by the reason made above, because to be a part of the Father came to him from generation, which always keeps sons, that they may be as it were other Fathers, as Aristotle says 8. Eth. cap. 11.

DUBITANT ETIAM: An filius, etiam emancipatus, debeat includi sub hoc iure improprio. Respondetur, includi ex ratione supra facta, quia esse partem Patris advenit ei ex generatione, quae semper conservat filios, ut sint quasi alteri Patres, ut loquitur Aristoteles 8. Eth. cap. 11.

Question II: What justice is [1] D. Bonav. brings forward VARIOUS definitions of Justice in various places in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. litt. et 3. p. Centil. sect. 44. In Dieta tit. 5. cap. 8. et ad 3. et 20. Lucae et lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 42.

> Quid sit IUSTITIA.
> VARIAS Iustitiae definitiones variis in locis affert D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 33. dub. 1. litt. et 3. p. Centil. sect. 44. In Dieta tit. 5. cap. 8. et ad 3. et 20. Lucae et lib. 2. Pharetrae, cap. 42.

[2] The FIRST is taken from Tully in the first book of the Rhetoric: Justice is a habit of mind, which, preserving the common utility, assigns to each his own dignity.

> PRIMA habetur ex Tullio in primo Rhet. Iustitia est habitus animi, communi utilitati servata, suam unicuique tribuens dignitatem.

[3] The SECOND is in Macrobius: Justice is to preserve for each what is his own.

> SECUNDA in Macrobio: Iustitia est unicuique servare quod suum est.

[4] The THIRD is from D. August. de lib. arb. What shall I say justice is, but the virtue by which each is given his own? And lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 21. Justice is the virtue which distributes to each his own. D. Bernardus has the same serm. 3. in adventu Domini, and the Gloss Matth. 5. I referred to other definitions above.

> TERTIA ex D. August. de lib. arb. Iustitiam quid dicam esse, nisi virtutem, qua sua cuique tribuuntur. Et lib. 19. de civitate, cap. 21. Iustitia, est virtus, quae sua cuique distribuit. Eandem habet D. Bernardus serm. 3. in adventu Domini*, et Glossa* Matth. 5. Alias definitiones retuli supra.

[5] But the definition more commonly received, which D. Bonav. says belongs to the Masters, is that of Ulpianus, l. Iustitia, ff. de Iustitia, et iure: Justice is the constant and perpetual will to render to each his right. D. Thom. approves this quaest. 58. art. 1. and the Doctors commonly.

> DEFINITIO autem magis recepta, quam esse Magistrorum, ait D. Bonav. est illa, quam habet Ulpianus, l. Iustitia, ff. de Iustitia, et iure: Iustitia est constans, et perpetua voluntas ius suum cuique tribuendi. Hanc approbat D. Thom. quaest. 58. art. 1. et communiter Doctores.

[6] It is called will, not formally, but causally, as if it said: Justice is a habit which produces a voluntary act, one of election; for it belongs to the nature of virtue that it be a voluntary act, as Aristotle teaches lib. 2. Eth. cap. 4. and it is proper to Justice to rectify the will in order to the right of another, as D. Bonav. teaches 3. p. Brevil. cap. 4.

> Dicitur Voluntas*, non formaliter, sed causaliter, quasi dicat: Iustitia est habitus, qui efficit actum voluntarium, et ex electione; est enim de ratione virtutis, ut sit actus voluntarius, ut docet Aristot.* lib. 2. Eth. cap. 4. et proprium est Iustitiae rectificare voluntatem in ordine ad ius alterius, ut docet D. Bonav. 3. p. Brevil. cap. 4.

[7] It is said to be constant and perpetual, because Justice has a firm and stable act, namely to operate constantly and immovably, as virtue operates, from Aristotle 2. Eth. cap. 4. D. Thom. ad 4. and D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. where on that account he compares Justice to the polar star. By right is understood the just, according to equality, as I explained quaest. 1. By the particle his own is signified that which is due to each according to the laws, as D. Bonav. explains in the places cited, D. Th. art. 11. By the last word rendering is understood not only the very act of rendering to each his right, according to the form of just distribution or commutation; but also the omission of injury; since it belongs to the same virtue to do good in its proper matter and to omit the contrary evil, as Ulpianus says immediately after this definition. Wherefore Buridanus does not rightly find fault with this definition, as though it did not posit the adequate object of Justice, which includes also not injuring.

> DICITUR constans, et perpetua*, quia Iustitia habet actum firmum, et stabilem, quod est operari constanter, et immobiliter, ut operatur virtus, ex Aristotele* 2. Eth. cap. 4. D. Thom. ad 4. et D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. ubi idco Iustitiam stellae polari comparat. Per Ius intelligitur iustum, secundum aequalitatem, ut explicui quaest. 1. Per particulam suum significatur id, quod cuique secundum leges est debitum, ut explicat D. Bonav. locis adductis*, D. Th.* art. 11. Per extremum verbum tribuendi intelligitur non solum actus ipse tribuendi ius suum cuique, secundum formam rectae distributionis, aut commutationis; sed etiam omissione iniuriae; siquidem eiusdem virtutis est facere bonum in materia propria, et omittere malum contrarium, ut ait Ulpianus statim post hanc definitionem. Quare non recte Buridanus hanc definitionem carpit, quasi non ponat adaequatum obiectum Iustitiae, quod includit etiam non laedere.

Question III: Whether justice is a special virtue

1 JUSTICE, according to the abstract notion, inasmuch as it perfects in order to another, is twofold. So Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 1. et 2. One is particular, which perfects man in order to another particular person, for instance a seller in order to a buyer. The other perfects man in order to another, not per se first, as the particular does, but in order to that other as he is a part of the community, and it is called Legal; for the Laws prescribe those things which pertain to the common good.

> IUSTITIA secundum rationem abstractam, ut in ordine ad alterum perficit, duplex est, Ita Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 1. et 2. Altera particularis, quae perficit hominem in ordine ad alterum particularem, puta venditorem in ordine ad emptorem. Altera perficit hominem in ordine ad alterum, non per se primo, ut particularis est, sed in ordine ad illum, ut est pars communitatis, et dicitur Legalis; nam Leges praecipiunt, quae ad bonum commune spectant.

2 JUSTICE indeed particular is, without controversy, a special virtue, as D. Thom. says art. 7. D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2.

> IUSTITIA quidem particularis, absque controversia, specialis est virtus, ut ait D. Thom. art. 7. D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2.

3 It is PROVED by D. Bonau. ad caput citatum Sapientiae, and in Diaeta salutis, tit. 5. cap. 8. from those words: For he teaches Sobriety, and Prudence, and Virtue, and Justice, as I explained quaest. 1. Then in that Commentary he brings forward Prov. 8. Mine is Equity, mine is Prudence, mine is Fortitude.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. ad caput citatum Sapientiae*, et* in Diaeta salutis, tit. 5. cap. 8. ex illis verbis: Sobrietatem enim, et prudentiam, docet et Virtutem, et Iustitiam*, ut explicui* quaest. 1. Deinde affert in illo Commentario id Prov. 8. Mea est AEquitas, mea est Prudentia, mea est Fortitudo.

4 THEN it is proved by S. Doct. in Pharetra, lib. 2. cap. 42. from the Fathers related above.

> DEINDE probatur a S. Doct. in Pharetra, lib. 2. cap. 42. ex Patribus supra relatis.

5 It is PROVED thirdly by the arguments of D. Bonav. in 3. distinct. 33. quaest. 2. et dub. 1. and other places cited above.

> PROBATUR tertio rationibus a D. Bonav. in 3. distinct. 33. quaest. 2. et dub. 1. et aliis locis supra adductis.

6 The FIRST argument is taken from the potency which it perfects; for Prudence directs the rational, Temperance the concupiscible, Fortitude the irascible; but Justice all of them, to render what is equal. And in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. he brings forward on this point an elegant similitude. For just as God, in the Megacosm of the world, ordered all things in number, weight, and measure, as is said Sap. 11., so Justice in this Microcosm orders all things in number, weight, and measure, in commutations and distributions. Whence with a graceful figure he adorns it with the name of a GODDESS, to whom David said Psalm. 4. Sacrifice the sacrifice of justice, that is, perform just acts, as Valentia also expounds punct. 1. et ad cap. 1. Sap. on those words: Love justice, you who judge the earth, he says from D. Anselmo: Love justice, that you may be conformed to God, because the Lord is just, and has loved justices. Love (says S. Bonav.) justice uncreated, which is the rectitude of the divine will; and created, which is the rectitude of the human will. Thus he expounds that: Blessed are they who hunger and thirst for justice, with D. Ambrosio lib. 5. in Lucam, where he numbers Justice with the other Cardinals. So also D. August. lib. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 15. apud D. Bonau. in Centiloq. in the place cited.

> PRIMA ratio sumitur ex potentia, quam perficit; nam Prudentia dirigit rationalem, Temperantia concupiscibilem, Fortitudo irascibilem; Iustitia vero omnes ad aequale tribuendum. Elegantem vero hac de re similitudinem affert in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 31. Sicuti enim Deus, in mundo Megacosmo: Omnia disposuit in numero, pondere, et mensura*, ut dicitur* Sap. 11. ita Iustitia in hoc Microcosmo omnia disponit in numero, pondere, et mensura, commutationibus, et distributionibus. Unde lepido schemate eam nomine DEAE decorat, cui dixit David Psalm. 4. Sacrificate Sacrificium iustitiae*, idest agite actus iustos, ut exponit etiam Valentia* punct. 1. et ad cap. 1. Sap. in ea verba: Diligite iustitiam, qui iudicatis terram*, ait ex D. Anselmo:* Diligite iustitiam, ut Deo conformemini, quia iustus Dominus, et iustitias dilexit. Diligite (ait S. Bonav.) iustitiam increatam, quae est rectitudo divinae voluntatis; et creatam, quae est rectitudo humanae. Sic exponit illud: Beati, qui esuriunt, et sitiunt iustitiam*, cum D. Ambrosio* lib. 5. in Lucam*, ubi Iustitiam cum aliis Cardinalibus adnumerat. Sic et D. August.* lib. de moribus Ecclesiae, cap. 15. apud D. Bonau. in Centiloq. loco citato.

7 The SECOND argument of S. Doct. is taken from the acts, by which different habits are recognized as different; for the act of Justice is, as I said quaest. 1., to render to each his right, or the equal and the due, in the ways expressed quaest. 2. But this does not belong to the other virtues.

8 The THIRD argument of S. Doct. is taken from the object; for acts are distinguished by it, as habits by acts. That is a special virtue which is concerned with an object peculiarly laudable and difficult, as is confessed among all: Such is particular Justice, since it is concerned with the equal due to another, about which the other virtues are not concerned: Therefore. Valentia also uses this argument puncto 2.

> TERTIA ratio S. Doct. sumitur ex obiecto; nam ab eo actus discernuntur, sicut habitus ex actibus. Ea est specialis virtus, quae versatur circa obiectum peculiariter laudabile, et difficile, ut est in confesso apud omnes: Talis est Iustitia particularis, cum versetur circa aequale debitum, ad alterum, circa quod non versantur aliae virtutes: Ergo. Hac ratione utitur etiam Valentia puncto 2.

9 The FOURTH argument of S. Doct. is taken from the contrary. For, if anyone behaves unjustly toward another particular person, e. g. by snatching something from him, etc., he commits a special vice, for which he deserves special blame, even if he commits it from no other vice: Therefore to behave rightly and equally toward another is a special virtue. This is the argument of Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 2. which Valentia loc. cit. follows.

> QUARTA ratio S. Doct. sumitur a contrario. Nam, si quis inique se gerat erga particularem alterum, v. g. eripiendo ei aliquid, etc. committit speciale vitium, ob quod est dignus speciali vituperio, etiamsi ex nullo alio vitio id committat: Ergo recte, et aeque se gerere erga alterum, est virtus specialis. Haec est ratio Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 2. quam Valentia loc. cit. sequitur.

10 The FIFTH argument of D. Bonav. is taken from the means of the virtues; for since these virtues consist in a mean, that virtue will be special which has a special mean: Such is Justice, which stands between too much, exceeding; and too little, detracting from the equal and the due. But the other moral virtues do not keep this mean, as all acknowledge.

> QUINTA ratio D. Bonav. sumitur ex medietatibus virtutum; nam cum hae virtutes in medio consistant, illa virtus erit specialis, quae habet medietatem specialem: Talis est Iustitia, quae stat inter nimium, excedens; et parum, detrahens de aequo, et debito. Hanc autem medietatem caeterae virtutes morales non servant, ut omnes agnoscunt.

11 As FOR legal Justice, it is certain that it is a general virtue, inasmuch as it is exercised in every matter of the moral virtues. For just as the Laws prescribe in every matter those things which conduce to the common good, as Aristotle teaches 5. Eth. cap. 1., so legal Justice perfects man, that he may behave rightly and justly toward the community in every matter of the moral virtues.

> QUOAD Iustitiam legalem certum est, eam esse virtutem generalem, quatenus versatur in omni materia virtutum moralium. Sicuti enim Leges in omni materia praescribunt ea, quae ad bonum commune conducunt, ut docet Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 1. ita Iustitia legalis perficit hominem, ut recte, et iuste se gerat erga communitatem in omni materia moralium virtutum.

12 It is, however, CONTROVERTED: Whether Legal Justice is general not only in matter, but also in its formal notion.

> CONTROVERSUM est autem: An Iustitia Legalis non modo ex materia sit generalis, sed etiam ex sua ratione formali.

13 BURIDANUS 5. Eth. quaest. 4. thinks that Legal Justice is any virtue whatever, as it operates for the common good; and thus Temperance, as it directs toward health on account of one's own advantage, is called temperance, but as it directs toward the common good of the Republic it is called Potency; inasmuch as it can serve the Republic by fighting, etc., it is Justice.

> BURIDANUS 5. Eth. quaest. 4. existimat, Iustitiam Legalem esse quamcumque virtutem, ut operatur propter bonum commune, et ita Temperantia, ut dirigit ad valetudinem ob proprium commodum, dicitur temperantia, ut autem dirigit in bonum commune Reipub. vocatur Potentia; Quatenus vero possit servire Reipub. militando, etc. est Iustitia.

14 Yet the contrary opinion is that of S. Bonau. above, D. Thom. art. 6. whom Valentia follows punct. 2. Soto lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 2. art. 5. and others commonly, apud Mastrium in 3. disp. 7. num. 189.

> Contraria tamen sententia est S. Bonau. supra, D. Thom. art. 6. quem sequuntur Valentia punct. 2. Soto lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 2. art. 5. et alii communiter apud Mastrium in 3. disp. 7. num. 189.

15 I ASSERT, with this opinion, that legal Justice is not a general virtue.

> ASSERO cum hac sententia, Iustitiam legalem non esse virtutem generalem.

16 It is PROVED first from Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 1. where he gives it special Encomia, by which a special virtue is confirmed; S. Doct. collected those elogia in Diaeta, titulo 5. cap. ultimo. Thus he proclaims it a perfect and most excellent virtue, and compares it to a star.

> PROBATUR primo ex Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 1. ubi specialia illi dat Encomia, quibus specialis virtus comprobatur, quae elogia collegit S. Doct. in Diaeta, titulo 5. cap. ultimo. Sic eam virtutem perfectam, atque praestantissimam acclamat, eamque stellae comparat.

17 So also S. Doct. compares it to a straight way, which inclines neither to the right nor to the left, and applies to it that Psalm. 106. He led them forth into the right way, namely, that they might attain to the eternal prize.

> Sic etiam S. Doct. comparat eam viae rectae, quae neque ad dextram declinet, neque ad sinistram, et huic applicat illud Psalm. 106. Deduxit eos in viam rectam*, nempe, ut ad bravium aeternum pervenirent.*

18 THEN he compares it to the straight Rule, which is the measure of things: For as we measure all things by a rule, and divide all things equally, so also Justice. And as the Astronomical rule measures by the line of Fiduciae the altitude of the pole above the place of habitation, the Climate, etc., so also Justice measures the entire state of the land, of the city, that the due may be rendered to all.

> DEINDE comparat eam rectae Regulae, quae est mensura rerum: Sicut enim Regula omnia mensuramus, et omnia aeque partimur, ita etiam Iustitia. Et sicut regula Astronomica per lineam Fiduciae mensurat altitudinem poli super locum habitationis, Clima, etc. ita etiam Iustitia terrae, civitatis integrum statum metitur, ut omnibus debitum tribuatur.

19 THIRDLY he compares it to a straight Line. For as the straight line is the most beautiful of lines, as the Philosopher says, cited quaest. 1.: so also the rectitude of Justice makes man most beautiful in intention and conversation. As also the stature of the human body is most beautiful, because erect toward heaven. So the stature of the heart is most lovely, when through Justice it is raised up to God. Whence Cant. 7. Thy stature is like to a palm tree.

> TERTIO comparat eam rectae Lineae. Sicut enim linea recta est pulcherrima linearum, ut ait Philosophus, adductus quaest. 1.: sic etiam Iustitiae rectitudo facit hominem pulcherrimum in intentione, et conversatione. Sicut etiam statura humani corporis est pulcherrima, quia recta ad caelum. Sic statura cordis est speciosissima, cum per Iustitiam est erecta ad Deum. Unde Cant. 7. Statura tua assimilata est Palmae.

20 THEN he compares it to a Gem, set in gold. The four Cardinal virtues, he says, are gems in the golden Diadem. In the anterior part, or on the forehead, is Prudence, whose it is to see not only present things but also future ones. On the right is Temperance, because this makes man just in the right hand of prosperity; Fortitude on the left of adversity. But Justice in the posterior part, as the Bishop in procession, as the King at the end of the battle line, as the Pilot at the stern of the ship, as the just Sentence is pronounced at the end of the cause, and as at the end of the contest the triumphal Crown is given to the victor. Whence the Crown is named from it as from its principal part. So the Apostle prima Timot. 4. There is laid up for me a crown of justice. The Goldsmith, in whose Forge this precious crown is wrought, is Wisdom, of which Sap. 8. Then he compares it to the polar Star, and to God, as I showed above. Behold S. Doctor speaking most excellently.

> DEINDE eam comparat Gemmae, insitae auro. Virtutes enim Cardinales quatuor gemmas ait in aureo Diademate. In anteriori parte, seu in fronte est Prudentia, cuius est videre non modo praesentia, sed etiam futura. In dextera est

Temperantia, quia haec facit hominem iustum in dextra prosperitatis; Fortitudo in sinistra adversitatis. Iustitia vero in posteriori parte, sicut Episcopus in processione, sicut Rex in fine aciei, sicut Gubernator in cauda navis, sicut Sententia iusta profertur in fine causae, et sicut in fine certaminis datur victori Corona triumphalis. Unde ab ista tanquam a principali denominatur Corona. Sic Apostolus prima Timot. 4. Reposita est mihi corona iustitiae. Aurifex, in cuius Fucina fabricatur haec pretiosa corona, est Sapientia, de qua Sap. 8. Comparat deinde eam Stellae polari, et Deo, ut supra ostendi. Vide S. Doctorem eximie eloquentem.

21 It is PROVED secondly by the argument of D. Bonau. in almost all the places cited, because in the act of Legal Justice there is special praise and difficulty. Therefore. The consequence is proved from Aristotle 2. Eth. cap. 6. and 7. The antecedent is Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 1. and 3. Politic. cap. 3.

PROBATUR secundo ratione D. Bonau. locis fere omnibus adductis, quia in actu Iustitiae Legalis est specialis laus, et difficultas. Ergo. Probatur consequentia ex Aristotele 2. Eth. cap. 6. et 7. Antecedens est Aristotelis 5. Eth. cap. 1. et 3. Politic. cap. 3.

22 Here the arguments first laid down can also be applied.

Hic possunt applicari etiam argumenta, primo posita.

23 YOU OBJECT with Buridanus. All the Virtues operate according to rectitude, and in order to the public good; otherwise the virtues could be not right.

OBIICIES cum Buridano. Omnes Virtutes operantur secundum rectitudinem, et in ordine ad bonum publicum; alioqui possent virtutes esse non rectae.

24 Valentia answers from D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2. ad 2. et 4. that all the virtues indeed have their own proper rectitude and mediocrity, declining from the extremes; nevertheless each has its own singular rectitude, from which Justice makes the right according to all circumstances, inasmuch as it is ordered to another, and this belongs to Justice, not to the other virtues.

RESPONDet Valentia ex D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 2. ad 2. et 4. omnes quidem virtutes habere suam propriam rectitudinem, et mediocritatem, declinantem ab extremis; attamen singulae habent suas singulares rectitudines, e quibus Iustitia facit rectum secundum omnes circumstantias, prout ordinatur ad alterum, et hoc competit Iustitiae, non aliis virtutibus.

Question IV: In what subject justice consists

1 It is CERTAIN first, that Justice is not in the intellect; for no one is considered just because he knows what is just, but because he chooses what is just, as D. Thom. and D. Bonau. warn here.

CERTUM est primo, Iustitiam non esse in intellectu; non enim quisquam iustus censetur, quia cognoscat, quod iustum est; sed quia iustum eligat, ut monent D. Thom. et D. Bonau. hic.

2 It is CERTAIN secondly, that Justice is in some appetite of man; for since a virtue is in that potency from which the act of virtue is elicited proximately, and Justice is not in the intellect, it remains that it be in another potency, which is the proximate principle of a good and just act, as distinguished from the act of the intellect, and it includes the election of the just object, or is itself the election of such an object. Now such a principle is some appetite, as the SS. Doctors affirm, and with them Caietanus art. 4. and Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 2. punct. 4.

CERTUM est secundo, Iustitiam esse in aliquo appetitu hominis; nam cum virtus sit in ea potentia, a qua proxime elicitur virtutis actus; et Iustitia non sit in intellectu; reliquum est, ut sit in alia potentia, quae sit principium proximum actus boni, et iusti, ut distinguitur ab actu intellectus, et includit electionem obiecti iusti, aut est ipsa electio talis obiecti. Tale autem principium est appetitus aliquis, ut afferunt SS. Doctores, et cum eis Caietanus art. 4. et Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 2. punct. 4.

3 It is CERTAIN thirdly, that Justice is in the rational appetite, that is, the will, as Aristotle teaches with common consent 5. Eth. cap. 1. et 5. and from Ulpian l. Iustitia, ff. de Iustitia, et iure, defining Justice: It is the constant will to render to each his right, as D. Bonau. teaches in the places alleged, quaest. 2.

CERTUM est tertio, Iustitiam esse in appetitu rationali, idest voluntate, ut docet e communi consensu Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 1. et 5. et ex Ulpiano l. Iustitia*, ff.* de Iustitia, et iure*, definiente Iustitiam:* Est voluntas constans ius suum cuique tribuendi*, ut docet D. Bonau.* locis allegatis, quaest. 2.

4 It is, however, CONTROVERTED: Whether a certain Justice concerning another's good is to be established in the sensitive appetite, which, although in reality distinct from the Justice which is in the will, yet agrees with it in name and in matter.

CONTROVERSUM est autem: An sit constituenda in appetitu sensitivo quaedam Iustitia circa bonum alienum, quae, licet re ipsa a Iustitia, quae est in voluntate, sit distincta; tamen in nomine, et in materia cum ea conveniat.

5 But the controversy about this is VERY SMALL; for commonly all place it in the rational appetite, namely in the Will, as D. Bonau. warns, while Buridanus alone places not only Fortitude and Temperance, but also Justice, in the sensitive appetite.

PARUULA autem est de hoc controversia; nam communiter omnes eam ponunt in appetitu rationali, nempe in Voluntate, ut monet D. Bonau. solus vero Buridanus non modo Fortitudinem, et Temperantiam, sed etiam Iustitiam in appetitu sensitivo ponit.

6 THEREFORE the common opinion is that of D: Bonau. here, D. Thom. art. 4. whom all the others follow, as Sotus says lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 2. art. 4. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 2. punct. 4. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 2. dub. 1. numero 7. who, however, protests entirely.

IGITUR communis sententia est D: Bonau. hic*, D. Thom.* art. 4. quos alii omnes sequuntur, ut ait Sotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 2. art. 4. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 2. punct. 4. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 2. dub. 1. numero 7. qui tamen omnino reclamat.

7 It is PROVED by D. Bonau. first from D. August. lib. 1. Solil. cap. 6. where he says: Virtue is right reason, leading to the end. Which predication is causal, or material.

PROBATUR a D. Bonau. primo ex D. August. lib. 1. Solil. cap. 6. ubi ait: Virtus est ratio recta, perducens in finem. Quae praedicatio est causalis, sive materialis.

8 SECONDLY: Virtue is the principle of meriting, and of a meritorious and laudable work: Therefore it has being in that potency about whose act praise and merit consist: But such is the rational appetite: Therefore.

SECUNDO*: Virtus est principium merendi, et operis meritorii, ac laudabilis: Ergo circa illam potentiam habet esse, circa cuius actum consistit laus, et meritum: Sed talis est appetitus rationalis: Ergo.*

9 THIRDLY. Virtue is in that subject in which the soul has the image of God, since the other virtues have their origin from grace, of which man is capable inasmuch as he is the image: But it is not the Image except through the rational potency: Therefore. The major is D. August. 14. de Trinitate, cap. 8. et 15.

> TERTIO. In eo subiecto est virtus, in quo anima habet imaginem Dei, cum virtutes caeterae habeant ortum a gratia, cuius homo est capax, quatenus est imago: Sed non est Imago, nisi per potentiam rationalem: Ergo. Maior est D. August. 14. de Trinitate, cap. 8. et 15.

10 The FOURTH argument proves it singularly of Justice: That habit which consists in the proper election of good and flight from evil is in the rational appetite. Such is Justice: Therefore. The major is proved, because election signifies the selection of something, or of some things, after a comparison made with others. Therefore it is said in Cant.: My beloved is white, etc. chosen out of thousands; but the comparison of many, and the election of one from among them, includes at least virtually a discourse. The minor is proved; for the object of Justice is equality with another, inasmuch as it shuns the extremes, that is, Too much, or exceeding; and Too little, deficient from the equal, which is to be kept in proportion with another, as another's gift is.

> QUARTA ratio singulariter probat de Iustitia: Ille habitus, qui consistit in propria electione boni, et fuga mali, est in appetitu rationali. Talis est Iustitia: Ergo. Maior probatur, quia electio dicit selectionem alicuius, vel aliquorum, post comparationem cum aliis factam. Ideo Cant. dicitur: Dilectus meus candidus, etc. electus ex millibus*, comparatio autem plurium, et electio alicuius ex illis, includit saltem virtute discursum. Minor probatur; nam Iustitiae obiectum est aequalitas cum altero, quatenus refugit extrema, idest,* Nimium*, seu excedens; et* Parum*, deficiens ab aequo, quod servanda est proportione cum altero, ut alienum donum est.*

11 But sense does not perceive this formal notion. For this reason D. Thom. and the Thomists also use it, as well as Valentia in the place cited.

> Hanc autem rationem formalem non percipit sensus. Hac ratione utuntur etiam D. Thom. et Thomistae, atque Valentia loco citato.

12 FIFTH argument. Virtue is in the genus of the honest good, as Tully says lib. 2. de Invent. and de off. not rarely. But the honest good is the object of the rational appetite alone; for sense regards only the useful good: Therefore.

> QUINTA ratio. Virtus est in genere boni honesti, ut ait Tullius lib. 2. de Invent. et de off. non raro. Bonum autem honestum est obiectum solius appetitus rationalis; nam sensus solum bonum commodum aspicit: Ergo.

13 The RESPONSES of those who oppose these arguments, inasmuch as they prove it of every virtue, I referred to, and rejected, in prima secundae Tract. 2. disput. 2. quaest. 9. ¶

> RESPONSIONES adversantium his argumentis, quatenus de omni virtute probant, retuli, et repuli prima secundae Tract. 2. disput. 2. quaest. 9. ¶

Question V: Whether justice is the most excellent of the moral virtues

1 S. Doct. seems in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 8. to hold it the most noble of all the others. Therefore he compares it to a rule, a line, a straight path; he likens it to the polar star; he proclaims it the most precious gem among the others. It is the view of Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 3. and of Scotus in 4. dist. 49. quaest. 4. post litt. L. Mastrii. disp. 7. quaest. 8.

> An IUSTITIA sit Virtutum moralium praestantissima.

VIDETUR S. Doct. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. 8. hanc prae caeteris nobilissimam ponere. Ideo eam regulae, lineae, semitae rectae comparat; Stellae polari assimilat; gemmam pretiosissimam inter caeteras acclamat. Est Aristotelis 5. Eth. cap. 3. et Scoti in 4. dist. 49. quaest. 4. post litt. L. Mastrii. disp. 7. quaest. 8.

2 First indeed legal Justice seems more perfect than all the moral virtues, because it has for its object the common good, and, as superior and more universal, it commands all the moral virtues, referring all their objects to the common good. Therefore Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 1. compares it to a most resplendent Star, and D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. ultimo to the straight Rule, Measure, Line, polar star, etc. as I said quaest. 3.

Primo quidem Iustitia legalis perfectior videtur omnibus moralibus, quia habet pro obiecto bonum commune, et tanquam superior, et universalior imperat omnibus moralibus virtutibus, referendo ad bonum commune omnia eorum obiecta. Ideo eam Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 1. Stellae praefulgidae comparat, et D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 5. cap. ultimo rectae Regulae, Mensurae, Lineae, Polari stellae, etc. ut dixi quaest. 3.

3 SECONDLY particular Justice is not simply more perfect than all the other virtues which are toward another; for Mercy seems more perfect. Likewise Piety, and much more Religion, which regards God infinite proximately, as the object to which worship is due and rendered, not as the object Quod of the Theological virtues. And indeed it is most noble among the virtues which are concerned with one's own good.

SECUNDO Iustitia particularis non est simpliciter perfectior caeteris omnibus virtutibus, quae sunt ad alterum; nam Misericordia videtur perfectior. Similiter Pietas, et multo magis Religio, quae respicit proxime Deum infinitum, tanquam obiectum, cui debitus est cultus exhibitus, non ut obiectum Quod virtutum Theologicarum. Et sane nobilissima est inter virtutes, quae circa bonum proprium versantur.

4 The REASON is, because, as D. Thom. teaches in the cited article, the good of another is contained in a certain diffusion, in which the notion of goodness resplends most, as Aristotle teaches in the first book of the Rhetoric, cap. 9.

RATIO est, quia, ut docet D. Thom. art. cit. bonum alterius continetur in quadam diffusione, in qua maxime resplendet ratio bonitatis, ut docet Aristoteles primo Rhet. cap. 9.

5 Then the object of Justice conduces most to the common good of human Society, as Cicero says lib. 1. offic. and Aristotle 5. Eth. cap. 5.

Deinde obiectum Iustitiae ad bonum commune maxime conducit Societatis humanae, ut ait Cicero lib. 1. offic. et Aristot. 5. Eth. cap. 5.

6 YOU OBJECT with Buridanus after Scotus in 3. dist. 27. quaest. 1. that the virtues which are concerned with one's own good are more according to the inclination of Nature and of Charity.

OBIICIES cum Buridano post Scotum in 3. dist. 27. quaest. 1. virtutes, quae versantur circa bonum proprium, sunt magis secundum inclinationem Naturae, et Charitatis.

7 It is ANSWERED that legal Justice is more according to the inclination, because it is toward the common good; but particular Justice has other excellences, which on that account preponderate, as I said in prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 2. quaest. 12. Then the Virtues which are concerned with one's own good for the moderating of the passions, such as Fortitude, Temperance, and others annexed to these, do not have so rational an object, but more a sensible one, as D. Thom. says and Valentia puncto 5.

> RESPONDETUR, Iustitiam legalem esse magis secundum inclinationem, quia est ad bonum commune; particularem vero alias praecellentias habere, quae hinc praepondent, ut dixi prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 2. quaest. 12. Deinde Virtutes, quae circa bonum proprium ad moderandas passiones versantur, sicuti Fortitudo, Temperantia, et aliae his adnexae, non habent obiectum adeo rationale, sed magis sensibile, ut ait D. Thom. et Valentia puncto 5.

8 I shall not repeat the excellences of Justice indicated quaest. 3. from D. Bonau. in Diaeta, which S. Doct. pursues again ad Psal. 18. on those words: Who shall direct my ways, etc.

> Non repetam Iustitiae praecellentias, indicatas quaest. 3. ex D. Bonau. in Diaeta, quas iterum prosequitur S. Doct. ad Psal. 18. in ea verba: Utinam dirigantur viae meae*, etc.*

Question VI: What kind of sin injustice is, and how it is committed

1 In as many ways as Justice is called so, as related quaest. 1., in so many ways is the opposite Injustice called, according to the rule of opposites, in Aristotle 5. Ethic. cap. 1.

> Quale peccatum sit INIUSTITIA, et quomodo committatur.
> QUOT modis dicitur Iustitia, relatis quaest. 1. tot modis dicitur Iniustitia opposita, iuxta regulam oppositorum, apud Aristotelem 5. Ethic. cap. 1.

2 Therefore injustice first signifies all iniquity, as it is taken in prima Ioan. 3. and Valentia notes quaest. 3. punct. 1. This therefore is opposed to general justice, which makes holy. Of this in Psalm. 91. All the sons of iniquity shall be scattered: Immediately he sets the antithesis The just shall flourish like the palm tree. This injustice embraces all sins, whether from suggestion, or from one's own will, or from habit, whatever they may be of heart, of mouth, and of deed; as S. Doct. observes ad eum Psal. and just as every declination from evil, and pursuit of good, is justice, as is said Psalm. 33. Decline from evil, and do good, etc. The eyes of the Lord are upon the Just, so every pursuit of evil, and flight from the good due, is injustice, as S. Doct. warns serm. 18. Hexaëmeronis.

> Ideo iniustitia primo significat omnem iniquitatem, ut accipitur prima Ioan. 3. et notat Valentia quaest. 3. punct. 1. Haec igitur opponitur iustitiae generali, quae facit sanctum. De hac in Psalm. 91. Dispergentur omnes filii iniquitatis: Mox ponit antithesim Iustus ut palma florebit. Haec iniustitia omnia peccata complectitur, siue ex suggestione, siue ex propria voluntate, siue ex consuetudine, quaecumque sint cordis, oris, et operis; ut observat S. Doct. ad eum Psal. et sicut omnis declinatio a malo, et prosecutio boni est iustitia, ut dicitur Psalm. 33. Declina a malo, et fac bonum*, etc.* Oculi Domini super Iustos*, ita omnis prosecutio mali, et fuga a bono debito, est iniustitia, ut monet S. Doct. serm. 18. Hexaëmeronis.*

3 S. Doct. brings forward there another injustice, which is an imperfection in the virtues. Such is that of those who often fall: A just man falls seven times a day. Proverb. 24. On the contrary, some just men are perfect, who fall more rarely, of whom Proverb. 12. Whatever befall the just man, it shall not grieve him. And cap. 28. The just man, bold as a lion, shall be without fear. The Church teaches this perfection of justice Eccles. 4. Fight for justice even unto death, and Matth. 5. Blessed are they who hunger and thirst for justice. Behold S. Doctor.

> Aliam iniustitiam ibi adducit S. Doct. quae est imperfectio in virtutibus. Talis est eorum, qui saepe cadunt: Septies in die cadit iustus. Proverb. 24. e contra, aliqui iusti perfecti sunt, qui rarius cadunt, de quibus Proverb. 12. Non contristabit iustum, quidquid ei acciderit. Et cap. 28. Iustus quasi Leo confidens, absque terrore erit. Hanc perfectionem iustitiae docet Eccles. 4. Pro iustitia agonizare usque ad mortem, et Matth. 5. Beati, qui esuriunt, et sitiunt iustitiam. Vide S. Doctorem.

4 Therefore he places justice in three things Psalm. 33. In the declination from evil; the election of good; and the progress in good, as S. Doct. notes in the place cited above, and ad Psal. 110.

Ideo iustitiam in tribus ponit Psalm. 33. In declinatione a malo; electione boni; et profectu in bono, ut notat S. Doct. loco supra citato, et ad Psal. 110.

5 But PRE-EMINENTLY general Injustice is any transgression of the Laws, just as he is just who observes the law: Such is said to be Simeon, Lucae 2. A just man. And Zacharias with Elisabeth: They were both just, walking in all the commandments and justifications of the Lord without blame. And Noë Genes. 6. Just in his generations; namely, in all the commandments of God, as is said Psal. 118. I was directed to all thy commandments; I have hated every unjust way. For whoever shall keep the whole Law, but offend in one, is become guilty of all, as is said Iacobi 2. and S. Doct. pursues it in cap. 1. Lucae.

PRAECIPUE vero Iniustitia generalis est quaelibet Legum transgressio, sicuti iustus est, qui legem observat: Talis dicitur Simeon, Lucae 2. Homo iustus. Et Zacharias cum Elisabeth: Erant iusti ambo, incedentes in omnibus mandatis, et iustificationibus Domini sine querela. Et Noë Genes. 6. Iustus in generationibus suis; ad omnia mandata Dei scilicet, ut dicitur Psal. 118. Ad omnia mandata tua dirigebar; omnem viam iniquam odio habui. Quicumque enim totam Legem servaverit; offendat autem in uno, factus est omnium reus, ut dicitur Iacobi 2. et prosequitur S. Doct. in cap. 1. Lucae.

6 But more PROPERLY Injustice is the vice and sin opposed to legal justice, which is the virtue directing to the common good: D. Thom. calls this art. 1. illegal, which is a special sin, if it is committed out of contempt for the common good, and out of a settled intention of acting against it, as D. Thom. teaches loc. cit. Sotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 3. art. 1. ad 1. Valentia quaest. 3. punct. 1. Otherwise it will not be a sin distinct from those which are committed against those virtues whose acts are to be exercised under the command of legal justice; but it will be the common condition of sins of this kind, and as it were a common sin, as Sotus and Valentia call it, and as I said in disputat. 22. quaest. 1.

PROPRIE vero magis Iniustitia est vitium, et peccatum, oppositum iustitiae legali, quae est virtus dirigens ad bonum commune: Hanc D. Thom. vocat art. 1. illegalem, quae est speciale peccatum, si ex contemptu boni communis, et ex certa intentione faciendi contra illud committatur, ut docet D. Thom. loc. cit. Sotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 3. art. 1. ad 1. Valentia quaest. 3. punct. 1. Alioqui non erit distinctum peccatum ab iis, quae committantur contra virtutes eas, quarum actus sunt exercendi ex imperio iustitiae legalis; sed erit communis conditio huiusmodi peccatorum, et quasi commune peccatum, ut appellant Sotus, et Valentia, et dixi disputat. 22. quaest. 1.

7 But MOST PROPERLY it signifies the particular vice and sin opposed to the equality due of one to another, which particular Justice safeguards. Now this injustice is mortal in its genus, as D. Thom. teaches art. 4. although it can be venial on account of the smallness of the matter, or on account of the imperfection of an act not sufficiently deliberate, or not sufficiently voluntary, as on account of lightly culpable ignorance, as D. Thom. teaches in the cited article and more fully D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2.

PROPRIISSIME vero significat vitium, et peccatum peculiare, oppositum aequalitati debitae unius ad alterum, quam Iustitia tuetur particularis. Haec autem iniustitia est mortalis ex genere, ut docet D. Thom. art. 4. etsi possit esse > veniale ob materiae parvitatem, vel ob imperfectionem actus non satis deliberati, vel non satis voluntarii, ut ob ignorantiam leviter culpabilem, ut docet D. Thom. arti. citat. et latius D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2.

8 But Injustice of this kind is DIVIDED into various subordinate species, namely first into Injustice against distributive Justice, and Injustice against Commutative. Then into various species of injustice against Commutative according to the very diverse ways in which one can offend against it, which S. Doct. enumerates and explains in the place cited, and which I enumerated with Aristotle quaest. 1. and shall explain in their proper places.

> DIVIDITUR autem Iniustitia huiusmodi in varias species subalternas, nempe primo in Iniustitiam, contra Iustitiam distributivam, et Iniustitiam, contra Commutativam. Deinde in varias species iniustitiae contra Commutativam pro diversis valde modis, quibus contra eam delinqui potest, quos recenset, atque explicat S. Doct. loco adducto, et cum Aristotele recensui quaest. 1. et propriis locis explicabo.

Question VII: Whether judgment is an act of justice

1 You have the various significations of IUDICII in Navarro supra Rubricam de Iudiciis, and in Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto primo.

> An Iudicium sit IUSTITIAE actus.
> IUDICII significatus varios habes in Navarro supra Rubricam de Iudiciis, et Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto primo.

2 The name of Judgment signifies MANY things. First it signifies the definition of that which is Just and equal among some, connoting at the same time a certain power of compelling the parties to the execution of the right defined. Such judgment is the sentence of a judge. Whence he is called Iudex whose it is to judge according to the laws, which in Greek is δίκαιος from δικάζω, as Valentia notes with D. Bonav. in 1. dist. 45. parte 1. dub. 1. litt. Therefore indico is ius dico.

> MULTA significat nomen Iudicii. Primo significat definitionem eius, quod est Iustum, et aequum inter aliquos, connotans simul quandam potestatem compellendi partes ad executionem iuris definiti. Tale iudicium est sententia iudicis. Unde ille dicitur Iudex, cuius est secundum iura iudicare, quod in Graeco est δίκαιος a δικάζω, ut notat Valentia cum D. Bonav. in 1. dist. 45. parte 1. dub. 1. litt. Ideo indico est ius dico.

3 SECONDLY by Metaphor it has been transferred to signify that which has been judged by a judge, as Ioan. 5. They who have done evil shall come forth into the resurrection of judgment. And prima Cor. 11. He eats and drinks judgment to himself. Therefore it chiefly expresses condemnation, as S. Doct. indicates in 4. dist. 18. p. 1. dubio secundo.

> SECUNDO per Metaphoram translatum est ad significandum id, quod a iudice est iudicatum, ut Ioan. 5. Procedent, qui fecerunt mala, in resurrectionem iudicii. Et prima Cor. 11. Iudicium sibi manducat, et bibit. Ideo praecipue condemnationem exprimit, ut indicat S. Doct. in 4. dist. 18. p. 1. dubio secundo.

4 THIRDLY in the same way it also signifies, in a certain way, things pertaining to judgment, as the tribunal. Thus Judgment is divided into Secular and Ecclesiastical cap. Quanto, extra de Iudiciis.

> TERTIO eodem modo significat etiam q-d-m spectantia ad iudicium, ut tribunal. Sic dividitur Iudicium in Saeculare, et Ecclesiasticum cap. Quanto, extra de Iudiciis.

5 FOURTHLY it signifies any definition of the intellect, in what manner it is said to pertain to Synesis, which is a part of potential Prudence, and it ought to be regulated to truth, as S. Doct. teaches dist. 25. citata, secundo sent. dub. 1. But this is twofold, Speculative and Practical, as D. Bonav. teaches in 2. dist. 23. quaest. 2. ad 2. et dist. 7. p. 2. quaest. 1. in corpore.

> QUARTO significat quamcumque intellectus definitionem, quo pacto ad Synesim, quae est pars Prudentiae potentialis, dicitur spectare, et debet esse regulatum ad veritatem, ut docet S. Doct. dist. 25. citata, secundo sent. dub. 1. Hoc autem duplex est, Speculativum, et Practicum, ut docet D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 23. quaest. 2. ad 2. et dist. 7. p. 2. quaest. 1. in corpore.

6 FIFTHLY it signifies that sentence of the intellect which is made concerning the probity of another, concerning which Matth. 7. Judge not, and you shall not be judged.

> QUINTO significat eam intellectus sententiam, quae de alterius probitate fit, de quo Matth. 7. Nolite iudicare, et non iudicabimini.

7 But this SENTENCE is from the will commanding, whose it is to judge. Therefore free choice also is defined as the judgment of reason, because in the free act, especially of judging concerning the probity of another, reason intervenes, and the judgment or decree of the will, as S. Doctor observes loc. cit. Secundi sent.

> HAEC autem Sententia est a voluntate imperante, cuius est iudicare. Ideo et liberum arbitrium definitur iudicium rationis, quia in actu libero, maxime iudicandi de alterius probitate intervenit ratio, et iudicium, seu decretum voluntatis, ut observat loc. cit. Secundi sent. S. Doctor.

8 But S. Doct. OBSERVES in 1. dist. 3. p. 1. quaest. 1. ad 4. that to judge concerning something is twofold. The first, by discerning whether it is, or is not; and in this way judgment belongs to every intellect knowing with respect to every object. The second, by approving or reproving; and thus it does not judge concerning truth, but according to it concerning other things, as D. August. says de vera Religione, cap. 31. that a judge does not judge concerning the law, but according to it judges concerning other things, and in this way one judging exercises the judging power, and the Right over the judged. Therefore this judgment is reserved to God, but not conceded to us, as Matth. loc. cit. says and Paulus Galatas 6. Therefore do not judge before the time, until the Lord come.

> OBSERVAT autem S. Doct. in 1. dist. 3. p. 1. quaest. 1. ad 4. iudicare de aliquo esse duplex. Primum discernendo, utrum sit, vel non sit; et hoc modo convenit iudicium omni intellectui cognoscenti respectu omnis obiecti. Secundum approbando, vel reprobando; et sic non iudicat de veritate, sed secundum ipsam de aliis, sicut ait D. August. de vera Religione, cap. 31. quod iudex non iudicat de lege, sed secundum ipsam iudicat de aliis, et hoc modo iudicans potentiam exercet, et Ius super iudicatum. Ideo hoc iudicium est reservatum Deo, non autem nobis concessum, ut ait Matth. loc. cit. et Paulus Galatas 6. Itaque nolite ante tempus iudicare, quoad usque veniat Dominus.

9 In almost this manner he says three things of JUDGMENT. First the collation of merit or demerit to reward or punishment properly. Secondly he adds the discussion of merits and the pronouncing of sentence. Thirdly it is called, appropriately, condemnation itself, as S. Doct. notes in 4. dist. 47. art. 1. quaest. 3. in resol. Therefore we are prohibited from judging, that is, from condemning anyone, even privately, after the merits and demerits have been discussed, because this pertains to the judgment of God, as S. Doct. teaches ibi, et in Diaeta, tit. 9. in finem, citing that prima Corinth. 4. Elucidating which passage S. Doct. in Appendice Diaetae Dom. 4. Advent. says: The Law of the Emperor says, the lesser power ceases. Therefore the Apostle, considering the advent of the eternal judge, restrains it, saying: Judge not, etc. and in speculo animae, cap. 1. after he has said: suspicion is an evil opinion from slight causes, and this proceeds from the evil affection of envy; and then it has the notion of mortal, but otherwise it is not judged mortal; he adds: Judgment is perverse when one, ill affected toward another, not only suspects evil in him from slight causes, but also defines in heart or mouth, in the manner of a sentence, that mortal sin is committed by someone, and this of its genus is mortal, from whatever root it proceeds. Whence the Gloss on that, prima Cor. 4. Do not judge before the time says: We cannot avoid suspicions, because we are men; but judgment, that is, definitive sentences, we ought to guard against. But this judgment is always a sin too grave. This S. Bonav. says, and p. 3. Stimuli, cap. 8. he adds the reason why these judgments are forbidden to us, from the Apostle Rom. 14. Who art thou, that judgest another man's servant, and he repeats again: Do not judge before the time, until the Lord come, namely, because our neighbors are not subject to us in the forum of conscience, but to the Lord, and in the Sacrament, to His Ministers.

> HOC fere pacto tria dicit Iudicium. Primo collationem meriti, vel demeriti ad praemium, aut poenam proprie. Secundo addit discussionem meritorum, et prolationem sententiae. Tertio appropriate dicitur ipsa condemnatio, ut advertit S. Doct. in 4. dist. 47. art. 1. quaest. 3. in resol. Ideo prohibemur iudicare, idest discussis meritis, et demeritis aliquem condemnare, etiam private, quia hoc ad iudicium Dei pertinet, ut docet S. Doct. ibi, et in Diaeta, tit. 9. in finem, adducens illud prima Corinth. 4. Quem locum elucidans S. Doct. in Appendice Diaetae Dom. 4. Advent. ait: Dicit Lex Imperatoris, cessat iunior potestas. Ideo Apostolus considerans adventum aeterni iudicis, reprimit dicens: Nolite, etc. et in speculo animae, cap. 1. postquam dixit: suspicio est mala opinio ex levibus causis, et hoc ex mala affectione invidiae procedit; et tunc habet rationem mortalis, alias autem non iudicatur mortalis; subdit: Iudicium perversum est, cum quis ad alium male affectus non solum malum suspicatur in ipso ex causis levibus, verum etiam definit in corde, vel ore sententialiter peccatum mortale committi ab aliquo, et hoc de suo genere est mortale, ex quacumque radice procedat. Unde Glossa super illud, prima Cor. 4. Nolite ante tempus iudicare ait: Suspiciones vitare non possumus, quia homines sumus; iudicium autem idest, sententias diffinitivas, cavere debemus. Hoc autem iudicium semper est nimis grave peccatum. Haec S. Bonav. et p. 3. Stimuli, cap. 8. apponit rationem, ob quam nobis vetita sint haec iudicia, ex Apostolo Rom. 14. Tu quis es, qui alienum servum iudicas, et iterum repetit: Nolite ante tempus iudicare, quoad usque veniat Dominus, nempe quia proximi non sunt nobis subiecti in foro conscientiae, sed Domino, et in Sacramento, Ipsius Ministris.

10 MOREOVER, if Judgment be right, it will be an act of Justice: But it will be right, if the due equality is established, both by a public Judge in the Tribunal of the Forum, and unto condemnation; and by anyone in the private judgment of conscience, namely, when in practice one judges according to that which is established to us, yet not unto condemnation, as S. Doct. warns opusc. de profectu Relig. cap. 1. Therefore what pertains to establishing the true pertains to prudence; but what pertains to establishing equality in order to the reputation of our neighbor, to which each one has the right of defending, will be an act of Justice, as Valentia declares loc. cit. But the Judgment which can be made privately by us concerning the inexcusable probity of our neighbor pertains to Prudence, not to Justice, because it does not pertain to us to speak the right concerning the crimes of all others. See also Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

> CAETERUM si Iudicium sit rectum, erit actus Iustitiae: Erit autem rectum, si statuatur aequalitas debita, tum a Iudice publico in Tribunali Fori, et ad damnationem; tum a quocumque in iudicio privato conscientiae, nempe cum practice iudicatur secundum id, quod nobis constat, non tamen ad condemnationem, ut monet S. Doct. opusc. de profectu Relig. cap. 1. Itaque, quod spectat ad statuendum verum, spectat ad prudentiam; quod vero ad stabiliendam aequalitatem in ordine ad famam proximi, ad quam unusquisque habet ius tuendi, erit actus Iustitiae, ut declarat

Valentia loc. cit. Iudicium vero, quod a nobis potest privatim fieri de inexcusabili improbitate proximi, ad Prudentiam spectat, non ad Iustitiam, quia ad nos non pertinet ius dicere de aliorum omnium criminibus. Vide etiam Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 3. dub. 1.

Question VIII: In what respect the public judgment of a judge is just

1 IN this matter it is certain, first, that among Christians there can be just Judgments, against the error of the Waldensians and the Anabaptists, as Tannerus warns, disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 1.

Qua ratione iustum sit Iudicis publicum Iudicium.

IN hac re primo certum est, inter Christianos posse esse Iudicia iusta, contra errorem Vualdensium, et Anabaptistarum, ut monet Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 1.

2 IT IS PROVED

PROBATUR

3 IT IS PROVED at length by the Saintly Doctor, p. 2. de Eccles. Hier. cap. 2., where the Saintly Doctor shows that Judges and Princes ought to be like the supernal Virtues, so that they may judge rightly. He brings forward several Scriptures on this point, 1. Reg. 14., where of King David it is said: But you, my lord the King, are as an Angel of God, who is moved neither by blessing nor by cursing. From this he deduces that the Judge must be strong, in order to judge rightly. Therefore Eccles. 7. Do not seek to be made a Judge, unless you have the strength to break through iniquities, lest perhaps you fear the face of the mighty. Sap. 6. Hear, O Kings and Judges, who judge the earth: to you is Power given by the Most High. The same is found in Psalm. 2. in the New Testament: Be instructed, you who judge the earth. Therefore in Exodus 32. rules for judging are given to the faithful: You shall not accept gifts, etc., and Deuter. 16. You shall not respect persons nor accept gifts, for they blind, etc. Second Paral. 19. See what you do: for you do not exercise the judgment of men, but of God. Isa. 1. Judge for the orphan, help the oppressed.

PROBATUR late a S. Doct. p. 2. de Eccles. Hier. cap. 2. ubi ostendit S. Doct. Iudices, et Principes esse debere similes Virtutibus supernis, ut recte possint iudicare. Plures affert hac de re Scripturas 1. Reg. 14. ubi de Rege Davide dicitur: Tu autem Domine mi Rex, es sicut Angelus Dei, qui nec benedictione, nec maledictione movetur. Ex quo deducit, Fortem esse debere Iudicem, ut recte iudicet. Ideo Eccles. 7. Noli quaerere fieri Iudex, nisi virtute valeas irrumpere iniquitates, ne forte expavescas faciem potentis. Sap. 6. Audite Reges, et Iudices, qui iudicatis terram, vobis data est Virtus ab Altissimo. Idem habetur Psalm. 2. in novo Testamento: Erudimini, qui iudicatis terram. Ideo Exodi 32. dantur regulae iudicandi fidelibus: Non accipies munera, etc. et Deuter. 16. Non accipies personam, neque munera, quia excaecant, etc. Secundo Paral. 19. Videte quid faciatis; non enim hominum exercetis iudicium, sed Dei. Isa. 1. Iudicate pupillo, subvenite oppresso.

4 THUS David judged, 1. Reg. 30.: David rescued all that the Amalekites had taken, nor was anything missing from the spoils: but all things whatsoever they had seized, he brought back and restored. And 2. Reg. 22. Whom he shall repay fourfold, where he is called by the holy prophet to judge. And Solomon, 3. Reg. 3., judged — while he was holy — over those two little harlots concerning the stolen child. Many other passages from the Scriptures the Saintly Doctor brings forward in the Biblia pauperum, cap. 50. also for the law of grace.

SIC David 1. Reg. 30. iudicavit: Eruit David omnia, quae tulerant Amalecitae, nec defuit quidquam de spoliis: Sed omnia quaecumque rapuerant, retulit, et reduxit: Et 2. Reg. 22. Quem reddet in quadruplum, ubi a propheta sancto vocatur ad iudicandum. Et Salomon 3. Reg. 3. iudicavit, cum esset Sanctus, de illis duabus meretriculis super raptum pueri. Plurima alia e Scripturis affert S. Doct. in Bibliis pauperum cap. 50. etiam pro lege gratiae.

5 THESE he also pursues at length ad cap. 6. Sap., in these words: Power has been given to you by the Lord, and strength by the Most High, who will question your works; for, though you were ministers of his kingdom, you did not judge rightly, nor keep the law of justice. Where he adduces that Rom. 13. There is no power but from God; Ioan. 19. You would have no power against me unless it had been given you from above. That Isa. 1. They do not judge for the orphan, and the cause of the widow does not come to them. The same he laments, Hierem. 5.

HAEC late prosequitur etiam ad cap. 6. Sap. in ea verba: Data est a Domino potestas vobis, et virtus ab Altissimo, qui interrogabit opera vestra, quoniam cum essetis ministri regni illius non recte iudicastis, nec custodistis legem iustitiae. Ubi affert illud Rom. 13. Non est potestas nisi a Deo, Ioan. 19. Non haberes potestatem adversum me ullam, nisi tibi datum esset desuper. Illud Isa. 1. Pupillo non iudicant, et causa viduae non ingreditur ad eos. Idem lamentatur Hierem. 5.

6 THE SAME authorities the Saintly Doctor pursues at length on that Ioan. 19. You would have no power, etc., where in the New Testament the power of judging is asserted by Christ, and by the Apostle, Rom. 13., and by St. Peter.

EASDEM authoritates late prosequitur S. Doct. ad id Ioan. 19. Non haberes potestatem etc. ubi in novo Testamento a Christo, et Apostolo Rom. 13. et a D. Petro, asseritur Iudiciaria potestas.

7 THE SAME he pursues in serm. 22. Hexaëmer., where he observes that it was promised in Isaiah, chapter 1: I will restore your judges as they were at the first: after this you shall be called the city of the just, the faithful city of Sion; she shall be redeemed in judgment, etc. Whence it follows that judgments erected in the Old Testament were not destroyed in the New, as regards power.

EADEM prosequitur serm. 22. Hexaëmer. ubi observat, promissum esse Isaiae primo: Restituam iudices tuos, ut fuerunt prius: Post haec vocaberis Civitas iusti, urbs fidelis Sion in iudicio redimetur, etc. Quo fit, ut iudicia erecta in testamento Veteri, non sint destructa in Novo, quoad potestatem.

8 THEREFORE Paul also appealed to Caesar, Act. 25. and 26., and therefore, together with Peter, he exhorted the faithful to submit to the judgment of Princes, Rom. 13. Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, etc. For he does not carry the sword without cause: for he is God's minister: an avenger into wrath upon him who does evil, as the Saintly Doctor shows in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1., and in the first Epistle of Peter, 2. Servants, be subject to your masters, not only to the good, but also to the froward, etc. Therefore in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, 6., Paul praises judgments.

IDEO et Paulus Caesarem appellavit, Act. 25. et 26. et ideo simul cum Petro hortabatur fideles, ut iudicio Principum starent, Rom. 13. Omnis anima potestatibus subdita sit sublimioribus, etc. Non enim sine causa gladium portat; Dei enim minister est: vindex in iram ei, qui male agit, ut ostendit S. Doctor in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. et prima Petri, 2. Servi subditi estote dominis, non tantum bonis, sed etiam dyscolis, etc. Ideo prima Corinth. 6. Paulus iudicia laudat.

9 IT IS PROVED more fully by the Saintly Doctor in Hexaëmer. serm. 16. from the constant usage of the Church from the times of the Apostles onward; for St. Peter condemned Ananias and Sapphira, Act. 5., and in the following centuries there were always ecclesiastical and secular judgments in the Church, as is shown in the Tract. de Legibus, and p. 1. Tract. 1. Disputationibus Prooemialibus. These are confirmed by the ancient monuments of Councils, histories, and Decretals. Only this was most constantly provided: that ecclesiastical judgments should be held among ecclesiastics, as appears in the Decretis; and secular judgments among the faithful, if they could be held, as the Apostle teaches, prima Corinth. 6.

> PROBATUR latius a S. Doct. in Hexaëmer. serm. 16. ex perpetuo usu Ecclesiae iam inde a temporibus Apostolorum; Nam D. Petrus condemnavit Ananiam, et Sapphiram Act. 5. et deinceps sequentibus saeculis fuere semper Ecclesiastica, et saecularia iudicia in Ecclesia, ut ostendit Tract. de Legibus, et p. 1. Tract. 1. Disputationibus Prooemialibus. Haec constant ex veteribus monumentis Conciliorum, historiarum, et Decretorum. Solum fuit constantissime cautum, ut Ecclesiastica iudicia apud Ecclesiasticos fierent, ut constat in Decretis; et saecularia iudicia apud fideles, si possent fieri, ut tradit Apostolus prima Corinth. 6.

10 IT IS PROVED thirdly by the Saintly Doctor, in 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad 1., by the most solid argument of St. Peter, prima cap. 2., where, having described the state of the holy liberty of the New Testament, he concludes: Be subject, therefore, to every human creature for God's sake: whether to the King, as excelling: or to governors, as sent by him to punish malefactors, but for the praise of the good: for so is the will of God. From this the reason is drawn out, which he magnifies against the fourth argument of the following quaestio, and which Valencia uses, disp. 5. quaest 4 punct 2.: What is useful and necessary by natural law for the good of the commonwealth is not abolished, but established by the decrees of the Christian Religion; for Religion does not destroy, but perfects, the law of nature. But judges and judgments are necessary for the Christian commonwealth: Therefore. The minor is proved by the example of all nations, and from God's ordinance, Deuter. 16. Judges and Magistrates you shall constitute, that they may judge the people. Then the minor is evident: for if there were no judges and judgments by which the disputes of men would be terminated, and punishments assigned to crimes, and rewards to rightly performed political works, the greatest disturbance and overthrow would appear. With this reasoning he argues at greater length in p. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hier. cap. 2., as I shall say below.

> PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. in 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 1. ad 1. argumento solidissimo D. Petri prima cap. 2. ubi descripto statu sanctae libertatis novi testamenti, concludit: Subiecti igitur estote omni humanae creaturae propter Deum: sive Regi, quasi praecellenti: sive Ducibus, tanquam ab eo missis ad vindictam malefactorum, laudem vero bonorum: quia sic est voluntas Dei. Hinc eruitur ratio, quam magnificat ad quartum argumentum quaest. sequentis, eaque utitur Valentia disp. 5. quaest 4 punct 2. Quod iure naturali est utile, et necessarium ad bonum Reip. non tollitur, sed stabilitur decretis Christianae Religionis; non enim Religio destruit, sed perficit ius naturae. At iudices, et iudicia sunt Christianae Reip. necessaria: Ergo. Minor probatur exemplo omnium nationum, et ex Dei ordinatione Deuter. 16. Iudices, et Magistratus constitues, ut iudicent populum. Deinde patet Minor: Nam si iudices, et iudicia non essent, quibus hominum lites terminarentur, et poenas delictis, et praemia recte exantlatis operibus politicis imponerent, maxima perturbatio, atque subversio videretur. Hac ratione latius utitur p. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hier. cap. 2. ut dicam infra.

11 NOR do the heretical adversaries lean on a firm foundation.

> NEC adversarii haeretici firmo nituntur fundamento.

12 THEY OPPOSE, indeed, Matth. 5.: If any one will contend with you in judgment and take away your tunic, give him also your cloak.

> OPPONENT enim id Matth. 5. Si quis voluerit tecum in iudicio contendere, et tunicam tollere, da ei et pallium.

13 THE SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS on this passage, Lucae 6., that judgments are not forbidden; but contentions and quarrels, and the lust of vengeance, as St. Augustine says, epist. 5. Therefore, in sum, it must be held (says the Saintly Doctor) that the correction of a neighbor, or the hindering of evil, or the punishment of a crime committed by one who can and ought to hinder it — such as the Minister of the law — is not forbidden; but here the lust of revenge is forbidden and restrained, both as to the hand, and as to the sign, and as to the mind. In the same way St. Augustine says it is to be understood of what he said there also: And whoever shall strike you on one cheek, offer him the other also, and yet he himself, Ioan. 19., corrected the striker and did not offer the other cheek: similarly Paul, Actorum 23., struck on the cheek, answered: God shall strike you, you whited wall, and yet both were most patient in spirit, as the Saintly Doctor observes, loc. cit. ad locum Ioan., from St. Augustine, tract. 113. and epist. 5. — see him. Thus answers Valencia, disp. 3. quaest. 16. punct. 1. col. 742. and disp. 5. quaest. 4. p. 2., and Tannerus in the cited place.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. ad hunc locum Lucae 6. non prohiberi iudicia; sed contentiones, et rixas, ac libidinem vindictae, ut ait S. August. epist. 5. Igitur in summa tenendum est (ait S. Doct.) quod non prohibetur correptio proximi, seu impeditio mali, vel punitio sceleris, perpetrati ab eo, qui potest, et debet praepedire, cuiusmodi est legis Minister; sed prohibetur, et cohibetur hic ulciscendi libido, et quantum ad manum, et quantum ad signum, et quantum ad animum. Eodem modo ait S. August. intelligendum id, quod ibidem dixit: Et qui te percusserit in una maxilla, praebe illi et alteram, et tamen ipse Ioan. 19. percutientem correxit, nec alteram praebuit maxillam: Similiter et Paulus Actorum 23. in maxilla ictus, respondit: Percutiet te Deus paries dealbate, et tamen animo patientissimus uterque fuit, ut observat S. Doct. loc. cit. ad locum Ioan. ex D. August. tract. 113. et epist. 5. quem vide. Sic respondet Valentia disp. 3. quaest. 16. punct. 1. col. 742. et disp. 5. quaest. 4. p. 2. et Tannerus loco citato.

14 THEY OPPOSE, secondly, Matth. 7.: Judge not, that you be not judged.

> OPPONUNT secundo id Matth. 7. Nolite iudicare, ut non iudicemini.

15 THE SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, p. 1. Concil. sect. 10., from St. Augustine, lib. 2. de serm. Domini in monte, cap. 28., that not every judgment is forbidden; but one rashly passed without firm reason. The same is the judgment of St. Hilar., Can. 5. in Matth.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. p. 1. Concil. sect. 10. ex D. August. lib. 2. de serm. Domini in monte, cap. 28. non prohiberi omne iudicium; sed temere assertum sine firma ratione. Idem censet D. Hilar. Can. 5. in Matth.

16 THE SAINTLY DOCTOR ANSWERS, de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere primo, dist. 4., from St. Jerome, that the order of correction is taught, so that first, judging ourselves, we amend ourselves, casting the beam out of our own eye, before we contemplate the mote in another's eye.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. de septem Itineribus aeternitatis, Itinere primo, dist. 4. ex D. Hieronymo, doceri ordinem correctionis, ut primo nos ipsos iudicantes emendemus, eiicientes trabem de oculo nostro, antequam festucam in alterius aranea meditemur.

17 THAT indeed he does not condemn every judgment is found in Ioan. 12.: Judge not according to the face, but judge just judgment, as St. Bonaventure there observes.

> QUOD vero non damnet omne iudicium, habetur Ioan. 12. Nolite iudicare secundum faciem, sed iustum iudicium iudicate, ut observat ibi D. Bonavent.

18 THEY OBJECT also from the first Epistle to the Corinthians, 6.: Brother contends with brother in judgment: and that before unbelievers? Indeed already altogether it is a fault in you, that you have judgments among yourselves.

> OBIICIUNT etiam id prima Cor. 6. Frater cum fratre iudicio contendit: et hoc apud infideles? Iam quidem omnino delictum est in vobis, quod iudicia habetis inter vos.

19 IT IS ANSWERED, not that judgment is condemned, as I said above — indeed it is instituted; but that an undue one is reproved. Four conditions, however, are laid down by the Doctors that a judgment be just: thus St. Thomas, 2.2. quaest. 60. art. 1. and 6.; St. Bonaventure, in 2. dist. 44., in the cited places, and lib. 1. Pharetra, cap. 45.

> RESPONDETUR, non damnari iudicium, ut dixi supra, imo institui; sed reprehendi indebitum. Quatuor autem conditiones ponunt Doctores, ut iudicium sit iustum, sic D. Thomas 2.2. quaest. 60. art. 1. et 6. D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 44. locis citatis, et lib. 1. Pharetra, cap. 45.

20 T H E F I R S T is legitimate authority, such as ordinary Judges have, or Delegates, or even Arbitrators, who have that power by the law of nations over those who freely commit themselves to them. And such also would be one who, by a special judgment of God, fulfilled that office, as Phinees, Numer. 25., slew the Madianite and the Hebrew man, as the Saintly Doctor notes in the Biblia pauperum, cap. 51.

> P R I M A est legitima authoritas, qualem habent Iudices ordinarii, aut Delegati, aut etiam Arbitri, qui iure gentium eam habent potestatem in eos, qui se illis ultro remittunt. Et talis esset etiam ille, qui speciali Dei iudicio, fungeretur eo munere, sicuti Phinees Numer. 25. occidit Madianitam, virumque Hebraeum, ut advertit S. Doct. in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 51.

21 Because of the lack of this condition a Judgment is said to be unjust by usurpation, as St. Thomas says, art. 6.; St. Bonaventure, 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 1.

> Ex defectu huius conditionis dicitur Iudicium iniquum per usurpationem, ut ait D. Thom. art. 6. D. Bonau. 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 1.

22 Y E T it can happen that the judgment of some Tyrant, who truly lacks legitimate power, be otherwise just and bind, namely if he be in peaceful possession. For otherwise the peaceful state of the commonwealth could not stand, unless what the ruler justly decreed is obeyed: Thus Valencia, punct. 2., who says that Victoria is held to have thought so, and it is the opinion of St. Bonaventure in the cited place, in the body and ad 2., where he teaches that the Tyrant, although he rules without legitimate power, and accordingly decides unjustly by reason of usurpation, must nevertheless be heard, if he decide justly, for the punishment of malefactors and the praise of the good, as is said in the first Epistle of Peter, 2.; and accordingly his decrees are just, and it is just to subject oneself to them.

> F I E R I tamen potest, ut iudicium, alioqui iustum alicuius Tyranni, qui revera careat legitima potestate, obliget, si nimirum in pacifica possessione sit. Nam alias consistere pacificus Reipublicae status non posset, nisi dominanti in iis, quae iuste statuit, pareatur: Ita Valentia punct. 2. qui ait, ita sensisse ferri Victoriam, eaque est sententia D. Bonau. loc. cit. in corpore, et ad 2. ubi docet, Tyrannum, tametsi absque legitima potestate dominetur; atque adeo inique decernat ratione usurpationis, tamen esse audiendum, si iuste decernat, in vindictam malefactorum; laudem vero bonorum, ut dicitur prima Petri 2. atque adeo eius decreta esse iusta, eisque se subiicere esse iustum.

23 T H E S E C O N D condition is, that the Judgment be conformed to the rule of Justice, namely, that what is decreed be just, even if the judge does not act from the virtue of Justice; but from the political rule, lest he be deprived — such was that Judge, Luc. 16., who finally sanctioned what was just for the Widow out of fear of punishment; as Valencia observes after St. Bonaventure on that passage. By the lack of this condition, the Judgment is said to be unjust, and it does not bind in conscience, as Innocent and Panormitanus teach, in cap. Plerique, extra de immunitate Ecclesiae; Sylvest., under the word Sententia, quaest. 11.; Sotus, lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2.

> S E C V N D A conditio est, ut Iudicium sit conforme regulae Iustitiae, nempe, ut id, quod decernitur, iustum sit, etiamsi iudex non operetur ex virtute Iustitiae; sed vel politicae regulae, ne privetur, qualis erat Iudex ille Luc. 16. qui iustum sancivit tandem pro Vidua ex timore supplicii; ut observat Valentia post D. Bonau. ad eum locum. Ex defectu huius conditionis, dicitur Iudicium iniquum, neque in conscientia cogit, ut tradunt Innocentius, et Panormitanus in cap. Plerique, extra de immunitate Ecclesiae, Sylvest. verbo Sententia, quaest. 11. Sotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2.

24 ¶ T H E T H I R D condition is the due judicial order: citation, hearing of the Accused, defenses, etc.

25 T H E F O U R T H condition, that he judge from the affection of Justice. So all the Interpreters of St. Thomas, quaest. 60. art. 2.; Suarez, 3. p. Tom. 5. disp. 4. sect. 7.; Tannerus, in the cited place.

> Q V A R T A conditio, ut iudicet ex affectu Iustitiae. Ita omnes Interpretes D. Thomae quaest. 60. art. 2. Suarez 3. p. Tom. 5. disp. 4. sect. 7. Tannerus loco citato.

26 Note, however, that this condition does not render the judgment invalid, as the cited authors warn. But an order failing in essentials renders it null. But of this there will be a sub-disputation.

> Adverte tamen, hanc conditionem non reddere iudicium invalidum, ut monent allegati. Ordo vero deficiens in essentialibus ipsum reddet nullum. Sed de hoc erit subdisputatio.

27 A F I F T H condition is added: its conformity with the rules of Prudence. Now for this it ought to have two conditions: one, that it decide with due consideration; the other, that it not be from a depraved affection of hatred, or some other affection, or of gifts, etc.

> Q V I N T A conditio additur conformitas eius cum regulis Prudentiae. Ad hoc autem duas habere debet conditiones: altera, ut debita consideratione decernat; altera, ut non sit ex affectu pravo odii, vel alio affectu, seu munerum, etc.

28 ¶ I T O U G H T also to be asserted that a Judge does not straightway lose his power because he lies in mortal sin, against Wicleph, whose error is condemned in the Council of Constant., sess. 8.

29 I T I S P R O V E D at length by the Saintly Doctor, in 2. dist. 44., where Peter, prima cap. 2., commands obedience to Masters, even to the froward. Iob 34. He makes the Hypocrite to reign. Osee 13. I will give them a King in my wrath. Ioan. 19. You would have no power unless it had been given you from above. The Saintly Doctor adduces examples of these in the Biblia, cap. 102. For thus of Nabuchodonosor it is said, Danielis 4.: Your power reaches to the ends of the whole earth. The same is asserted in cap. 5.; and to Ieroboam, 3. Reg., the Lord gave the kingdom of Israel, and to other wicked men, as the Saintly Doctor observes in the cited place. And Matth. 22.: Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's. Now Tiberius was impious, which the Saintly Doctor elegantly discourses upon in serm. 5. Dom. 22. post Pentecosten.

P R O B A T V R late a S. Doct. in 2. dist. 44. ubi Petrus prima cap. 2. praecipit, obedire Dominis, etiam discolis. Iob 34. Regnare facit Hypocritam. Osee 13. Dabo eis Regem in furore meo. Ioan. 19. Non haberes potestatem, nisi tibi datum esset desuper. Horum exempla refert S. Doct. in Bibliis, cap. 102. Sic enim de Nabuchodonosore dicitur Danielis 4. Potestas tua in terminos universae terrae. Idem asseritur cap. 5. et Ieroboam 3. Reg. dedit Dominus regnum Israël, aliisque pravis, ut observat S. Doct. loco citato. Et Matth. 22. Reddite, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari. Erat autem Tiberius impius, quod eleganter discurrit S. Doct. in serm. 5. Dom. 22. post Pentecosten.

30 T H E R E A S O N also is that of St. Bonaventure which Valencia uses: because the foundation of jurisdiction is not the grace of God, but his will in the order of political governance, and often also for the punishment of peoples, as he discourses in 2. dist. 44. art. 2.

R A T I O etiam est D. Bonavent. qua utitur Valentia, quia fundamentum iurisdictionis non est gratia Dei, sed voluntas eius in ordine ad gubernationem politicam, et saepe etiam ad poenam populorum, ut disserit in 2. dist. 44. art. 2.

31 N O W it is controverted: whether the judgment of a judge is rendered mortally evil because it is passed by a judge constituted in mortal sin — and indeed in the times of St. Bonaventure most Theologians held this, at least concerning Ecclesiastical Judges: Alens., 3. p. quaest. 40. membr. 3.; St. Thomas, 4. dist. 19. quaest. 2. art. 2. St. Bonaventure seems to suspect it in those words, Ioan. 8.: He who is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone, where he speaks of the danger for such judges, and more especially for those living in public sin, because they scandalize the peoples whom they ought to admonish and call away from evil.

E S T autem controversum: An iudicium iudicis reddatur mortaliter malum, eo quod feratur a iudice in peccato mortali constituto, et quidem temporibus S. Bonavent. plerique Theologi id tenebant, saltem de Iudicibus Ecclesiasticis, Alens. 3. p. quaest. 40. membr. 3. D. Thom. 4. dist. 19. quaest. 2. art. 2. Videtur suspicari D. Bonavent. in ea verba, Ioan. 8. Qui sine peccato est, mittat in eam lapidem*, ubi periculum ait talibus iudicibus, magis vero in peccato publico degentibus, quia scandalizant populos, quos arguere debent, et a malo avocare.*

32 F O L L O W I N G this were Paludanus, 4. dist. 19. quaestione 3. artic. 3.; Sylvester, under the word correctio fraterna, quaestione 16.

E A M secuti sunt Paludanus 4. dist. 19. quaestione 3. artic. 3. Sylvester verbo, correctio fraterna*, quaestione 16.*

33 T H E O P P O S I N G opinion, however, is the common one: Thus St. Thomas, hic, art. 2. ad 3., where he abandoned the former opinion. Thus Caietanus; Sotus, lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2.; Navar., in Comment. super Rubricam, de Iud. num. 42.; Valencia, disp. 5. quaest. 4. punct. 2.; and it is St. Bonaventure's, in the cited place.

O P P O S I T A tamen sententia est communis: Ita D. Thom. hic, art. 2. ad 3. ubi priorem sententiam deseruit. Ita Caietanus, Sotus lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2. Navar. in Comment. super Rubricam, de Iud. num. 42. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 4. punct. 2. et est D. Bonau. loco citato.

34 I A S S E R T with St. Bonaventure that there is some sin in that case, but I do not lay down that it is always mortal, but dangerous, lest it lead to mortal sin.

A S S E R O cum D. Bonavent. esse aliquod in eo casu peccatum, non tamen statuo illud semper esse mortale, sed periculosum, ne in mortale ducat.

35 I T I S P R O V E D first by St. Bonaventure, loc. cit., from that saying of Christ, He who is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone, which passage Anselm there expounds thus, and St. Augustine, tract. 33., who say that those unworthy to judge the woman were brought forward by Christ. Since, therefore, such judges are unworthy, it follows in some way that they sin, as Valencia confesses, freely responding.

> P R O B A T V R primo a S. Bonavent. loc. cit. ex illo Christi effato, Qui sine peccato est vestrum, mittat in eam lapidem*, quem locum sic explicat Anselmus ibi, S. August. tract. 33. qui aiunt, eos indignos iudicandi mulierem afferi a Christo. Cum igitur tales iudices indigni sint, sequitur aliquo modo eos peccare, ut fatetur, ultro respondens, Valentia.*

36 I T I S P R O V E D secondly by St. Bonaventure, lib. 1. Pharetrae, cap. 45., from many Fathers.

37 St. G R E G O R Y, homil. 26. in Evang.: It is hard, that one who knows not how to hold the measures of his own life should become judge of another's life. Lo, the peril to which a depraved man exposes himself, when he makes himself judge of another's life.

> D. G R E G O R I V S homil. 26. in Evang. Durum est, ut qui nescit tenere moderamina vitae suae, iudex fiat vitae alienae, En periculum, cui se exponit homo depravatus, dum se iudicem vitae alienae ponit.

38 St. I S I D O R E, de summo bono, cap. 55. sent. 1.: None of the foolish or the wicked ought to be a judge: for the fool by sloth, the wicked man by wickedness, corrupts the truth which he has learned.

> D. I S I D O R V S de summo bono, cap. 55. sent. 1. Neminem stultorum, vel improborum oportet iudicem esse: Nam stultus per ignaviam, improbus per improbitatem corrumpit, quam didicit, veritatem.

39 St. A U G U S T I N E, epistol. 174.: It is unjust that anyone should wish to judge another and be unwilling to be judged himself.

> D. A V G V S T. epistol. 174. Iniquum est, ut quisque iudicare de alio velit, et iudicari de seipso nolit.

40 St. A M B R O S E, in 2. Apol. David, cap. 2.: Let each one who is about to judge another first judge himself, and let him not condemn lesser errors in another, when he himself has committed graver ones.

> D. A M B R O S I V S in 2. Apol. David, cap. 2. Unusquisque de alio iudicaturus, de seipso prius iudicet, nec minora in alio errata condemnet, cum ipse graviora commiserit.

41 N O R does Valencia satisfy, saying that the Fathers only signify that it is illicit if it be done without humility. For indeed with relaxed sinews it cries out that it is in itself unjust and dangerous. Whether it be always mortal, the Saintly Doctor does not assert.

> N E Q V E satisfacit Valentia dicens, Patres solum significare, id esse illicitum, si fine humilitate fiat. Profecto enim laxis fibris id iniquum, et periculosum ex se clamant. An vero sit mortale semper, non asserit S. Doctor.

42 A S T O the foundation Valencia opposes — that there is a great difference between the use of the power of order and of jurisdiction, so that this is not so grave as to confect the Sacraments unworthily — I grant it; but he will not deny that even that is evil.

> Q V O D vero opponit fundamentum Valentia, magnum esse discrimen inter usum potestatis, ordinis, et iurisdictionis, ut hic non sit adeo gravis, sicut conficere Sacramenta indigne; fateor; sed non negabit, etiam illud esse malum.

43 N O W the Saintly Doctor elegantly discourses on the requirements of Judges in the second part, de Eccl. Hier. cap. 2., where, likening them to the Angelic Virtues, he teaches: For the Virtues are Angels of the second order, of the middle Hierarchy, who are so called because of the strong and unchangeable virility for the reception of divine illuminations, not in any way weak, but virilely reduced to the imitation of God (as St. Dionysius teaches, cap. 8. de coelesti Hier.), not abandoning the deiform movement, but bearing it firmly into the superessential and potentific virtue deiformly proceeding. All these things he teaches are to be referred to those who have obtained the power of judging.

> D I S C V R R I T autem S. Doct. eleganter de Iudicum requisitis parte secunda de Eccl. Hier. cap. 2. ubi eos Virtutibus Angelicis assimilando docet: Sunt enim Virtutes, Angeli, secundi ordinis. Mediae Hierarchiae, qui sic vocantur propter fortem, et immutabilem virilitatem ad susceptionem divinarum illuminationum, nullatenus infirmam, sed viriliter in Dei imitationem reductam (ut docet S. Dionysius cap. 8. de coelesti Hier.) Deiformem motum non derelinquentem, sed firmiter ferentem in superessentialem, et potentificam virtutem deiformiter provenientem. Haec omnia ad eos, qui potestatem iudicandi obtinuerunt, referenda docet.

44 F O R, that peace and concord may be had in the Church of Christ, justice has been ordained by the Lord. But Justice and Peace accompany one another; for the Psalmist says: The mountains shall receive peace for the people, and the hills justice; because there would not be peace in the mountains, that is, in proud men, unless there were justice in the hills, that is, in the good and humble Prelates and Judges, in whom virility, or angelic virtuousness, is required, so that neither by blessing nor by cursing they be turned aside from the rectitude of justice, as is said of David, 2. Reg. 14.: But you, my lord the King, are as an Angel of God, who is moved neither by cursing nor by blessing. The judge, therefore, ought to be strong and virile, lest by fear, hatred, or love he be turned from the vigor of justice. Therefore the counsel is given, Ecclesiastici 7.: Do not seek to be made a judge, unless you have the strength to break through iniquities, lest perhaps you fear the face of the mighty. And Sap. 6.: Hear, O Kings and Judges, who judge the earth: to you is strength given by the Most High, etc.

> NAM, ut pax, et concordia in Christi Ecclesia habeatur, iustitia a Domino est ordinata. Iustitia vero, et Pax se invicem concomitantur; nam dicit Psalmista: Suscipiant montes pacem populo, et colles iustitiam; quia non esset pax in montibus, idest, superbis hominibus, nisi esset iustitia in collibus, idest, in bonis, et humilibus Praelatis, et Iudicibus, in quibus virilitas, seu virtuositas angelica requiritur, ut nec benedictione, nec maledictione a rectitudine iustitiae dimoveantur, sicut de David 2. Reg. 14. Tu autem Domine mi Rex, es sicut Angelus Dei, qui nec maledictione, nec benedictione movetur. Fortis igitur, et virilis esse debet iudex, ne timore, odio, vel amore, a vigore iustitiae deflectatur. Ided datur consilium Ecclesiastici 7. Noli quaerere fieri iudex, nisi virtute valeas irrumpere iniquitates, ne forte expavescas faciem potentis. Et Sap. 6. Audite Reges, et Iudices, qui iudicatis terram, vobis data est virtus ab Altissimo, etc.

45 N E X T, the Judges ought to be like the Virtues in the virtuous defense of justice, as is said, Ecclesiastici 4.: Fight for Justice, and be certain even unto death for justice. For when subjects see Prelates pusillanimous and tepid, they are easily terrified, as is said, Zach. 13.: I will strike the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered. Therefore it is said, Ezech. 3.: I have made you like an adamant and like flint; fear them not; where Marinus Brixiensis [reads] magnesem, because the Judge ought to be strong as the adamant, and at the same time benign, attracting, as the Saintly Doctor says. Therefore let them act virilely, lest there be said to them that of Ezech. 13.: You have not gone up against [them].

> DEINDE Virtutibus similes esse debent Iudices in virtuosa iustitiae defensione, ut dicitur Ecclesiastici 4. Pro Iustitia agonizare, et usque ad mortem certa pro iustitia. Nam quando subditi vident Praelatos pusillanimes, et tepidos, facile perterrentur, ut dicitur Zach. 13. Percutiam pastorem, et dispergentur oves. Ideo dicitur Ezech. 3. Ut adamantem, et silicem posui te, ne timeas eos; ubi Marinus Brixiensis, ut magnesem, quia Iudex debet esse fortis, ut adamas, et simul benignus attrahens, ut ait S. Doctor. Igitur viriliter agant, ne eis dicatur id Ezech. 13. Non ascendistis ex adverso.

46 T H I R D L Y they are compared to the Virtues on account of the imitation of Divine wisdom, which the Judges ought to hold before their eyes in their sentences. For human wisdom is bound to imitate the virtue of divine justice. Therefore Sap. 6.: Love the light of wisdom, you who preside over the peoples, lest that of Hierem. 5. be said of them: Perhaps the poor and the foolish know not the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God. I will go forth, therefore, etc. Isa. 56.: They have not known satiety; the pastors themselves have not understood understanding. Therefore it is said of the Virtues that virilely, through the reception of illuminations, they are reduced to the imitation of God. For those who are illuminated by God execute justice without offense, and this is said, Psalm. 88.: Lord, they shall walk in the light of your countenance, and in your justice shall they be exalted.

TERTIO Virtutibus comparantur, ob Divinae sapientiae imitationem, quam debent Iudices in suis sententiis prae oculis tenere. Humana enim sapientia divinae iustitiae tenetur imitari virtutem. Ideo Sap. 6. Diligite lumen sapientiae, qui praeestis populis, ne dicant illud Hierem. 5. Forsan pauperes, et stulti ignorant viam Domini, et iudicium Dei sui. Ibo ergo, etc. Isa. 56. Nescierunt saturitatem, ipsi Pastores ignoraverunt intelligentiam. Ideo dicitur de Virtutibus, quod viriliter per susceptionem illuminationum reducuntur ad Dei imitationem. Nam, qui illuminantur a Deo, absque offendiculo iustitiam exequuntur, et hoc dicitur Psalm. 88. Domine in lumine vultus tui ambulabunt, et in iustitia exaltabuntur.

47 F O U R T H L Y they are like the Virtues in the swiftness of dispatching the causes of the poor; for true Justice, when it has become known to the judge, is not to be delayed in execution, but is to be decided and promulgated at once, and this especially in the causes of the poor, whose delay is harmful to them in many ways; and therefore the Virtues are said not to abandon the deiform movement, because virtuous Judges, the cause of the poor being known, do not defer judgment; as neither does God, of whom it is said, Ecclesiastici 35.: The Lord will not delay, but will judge the just, and will do judgment; and the Most Strong will not have patience with them.

QUARTO Virtutibus sunt similes in celeritate expediendi causas pauperum; Nam vera Iustitia, cum fuerit nota iudici, non est ab executione retardanda, imo statim definienda, et promulganda, et hoc praecipue in causis pauperum, quarum dilatio eis nociva multipliciter est; et ideo dicuntur Virtutes Deiformem motum non derelinquere, quia virtuosi Iudices, cognita causa pauperis, iudicare non differunt; sicut nec Deus, de quo dicitur Ecclesiastici 35. Dominus non elongabit, sed iudicabit iustos, et faciet iudicium, et fortissimus non habebit in illis patientiam.

48 F I F T H L Y they ought to be like the Virtues, not burdened with gifts, which are therefore forbidden, Exodi 23., Deuter. 16., because they blind and enervate the strength of Justice. Therefore they are likened to the Virtues, which arrive at the Potentific and superessential virtue, that is, in their movements and acts they regard only God, not their own advantage. For they are admonished, 2. Paralip. 19.: See what you do: for you do not exercise the judgment of men, but of God, as I also admonished above.

QUINTO debent esse Virtutibus similes, non onerati muneribus, quae ideo vetantur Exodi 23. Deuter. 16. quia excaecant, et enervant virtutem Iustitiae. Ideo Virtutibus similantur, quae ad Potentificam, et superessentialem virtutem perveniunt, idest, in suis motibus, et actibus, solum Deum, non proprium commodum intuentur. Admonentur enim 2. Paralip. 19. Videte quid faciatis. non enim hominum exercetis iudicium, sed Dei, ut etiam supra monui.

49 S I X T H L Y let them be likened to the heavenly Virtues, on account of the swift and virile liberation of the oppressed. For those Angels are held to restrain the demons, as Tob. 8.: Raphael seized the demon, and Dan. 6.: God sent his Angel and shut the mouths of the lions. For there are some powerful men, cruel as demons, oppressors of the innocent. Therefore it is said, Proverb. 24.: Snatch them who are led to death: and Iob 29.: Because I had delivered the poor man crying out, and the orphan who had no helper, I broke the jaws of the wicked, and from his teeth I snatched [the prey]. As in the first book of Reg. 17. David is said to have snatched the sheep and lambs from the jaws of the lion and the bear. So God commands, Isa. 1.: Judge for the orphan, help the oppressed, etc.

> SEXTO Virtutibus coelicis similentur, ob celerem, et virilem oppressorum liberationem. Hi enim Angeli sunt, qui tenentur daemones coercere, ut Tob. 8. Apprehendit Raphael daemonium, et Dan. 6. Misit Deus Angelum suum, et conclusit ora Leonum. Sunt enim aliqui potentes, crudeles, ut daemones, innocentium oppressores. Ideo dicitur Proverb. 24. Erue eos, qui ducuntur ad mortem: et Iob 29. Eo quod liberassem pauperem vociferantem, et pupillum, cui non erat adiutor, conterebam molas iniqui, et de faucibus eius eruebam. Veluti primo, Reg. 17. dicitur David eruisse oves, et agnos e faucibus Leonis, et Ursi. Sic praecipit Deus, Isa. 1. Iudicate pupillo, subvenite oppresso, etc.

50 F I N A L L Y they ought to be like the Angelic Virtues, which are destined for working miracles, restoring eyes torn out, feet cut off, etc. For so also the Judges ought manfully to take care to restore goods unjustly taken away, of fame, body, fortune, and to compel unjust robbers to satisfaction; and this is figured in the deed of David: All things which the Amalekites had taken, nor was anything missing from the spoils, but all things whatsoever they had seized he brought back and restored. And 2. Reg. 12. Whom (he decreed) he shall repay fourfold, and 3. Reg. 3. Solomon restored the stolen infant to his mother.

> TANDEM Virtutibus similes esse debent Angelicis, quae miraculis patrandis destinantur, restituendo oculos erutos, pedes detruncatos, etc. Sic enim et Iudices bona inique ablata, famae, corporis, fortunae, debent restituenda curare viriliter, et latrones iniquos ad satisfactionem compellere, et hoc figuratur facto David: Omnia quae tulerant Amalecitae, nec defuit quidquam de spoliis, sed omnia quaecumque rapuerant retulit, et reduxit. Et 2. Reg. 12. Quem (decrevit) reddet in quadruplum*, et 3. Reg. 3. Salomon raptum infantem matri reddidit.*

51 H E P R O C E E D S elegantly to liken Princes and Kings to the Powers. Now the Powers are Angels, by whose special power the adverse powers are restrained, lest they harm as much as they would wish. Now St. Dionysius says of the heavenly Powers, cap. 8. de coelesti Hier.: The appellation of the holy Powers teaches a power both well adorned and undivided in its order around divine receptions, not tyrannically precipitating the inferior powers into things potestative, but potently reducing them into divine things, and assimilating them, as far as is lawful, to the potentific causal power, and converting the inferior things toward God, who is the prince of all power, according to the hierarchical disposition, making the divine and shining power resplendent in inferior things, etc.

> PERGIT eleganter Potestatibus Principes, et Reges assimilare. Sunt autem Potestates Angeli, quorum speciali potentia adversae potestates coercentur, ne tantum laedant, quantum vellent. Ait autem S. Dionysius de caelestibus Potestatibus*, cap. 8. de coelesti Hier.* Sanctarum Potestatum cognominatio docet potestatem, et bene ornatam, et inconfusam circa divinas susceptiones ordinationem, non tyrannice inferiora virtutes potestativa praecipitantem, sed potenter in divina reducentem, et ad potentificam causalem potentiam, quantum fas est, assimilantem, et ad Deum, qui princeps est, omnis potestatis secundum hierarchicam dispositionem inferiora convertentem, divinam, et lucentem potentiam in inferioribus resplendere facientem, etc.

52 Whence the Angels of that order restrain and curb all who impede the hierarchical order of prelation and subjection. Hence they do not allow the power of prelation to be contemned by subjects, nor do they permit subjects to be violently oppressed. In all these things Princes ought to imitate the heavenly Powers, so that they rule wisely, live orderly, potently repress and avenge evil, spare the innocent, and not allow injury to be done to wretched persons.

> Unde Angeli illius ordinis refrenant, et coercent omnes, hierarchicam praelationis, et subiectionis ordinationem impedientes. Unde praelationis potestatem a subditis contemni non permittunt, et subditos violentet opprimi non sinunt. In his omnibus Principes debent caelestes Potestates imitari, ut sapienter regant, ordinate vivant, et potenter malum reprimant, et vindicent, innocentibus parcant, et iniuriam fieri personis miseris non permittant.

53 T H E R E F O R E they will be like the Powers, because animated by the love of Justice they avenge all wickedness upon the guilty and pursue the disturbers of peace, as is said, Machab. 3., of Judas. See the Seraphic Doctor discoursing throughout in the Angelic tongue.

> ITAQUE similes erunt Potestatibus, quia amore Iustitiae animati, omnem malitiam in reptobis ulciscuntur, et perturbatores pacis persequuntur, sicut dicitur Machab. 3. de Iuda. Vide Seraphicum lingua Angelica percurrentem caetera.

54 A G A I N, and again resuming this discourse, part. 4. de Ecclesiastica Hier. cap. 3., he likens the judges of the earth to the heavens. To the heavens therefore also the first judges of the Church, the Apostles, were likened, Psal. 18., and thus Psal. 21.: The heavens shall declare his justice. Certainly the impious cannot represent the justices of the Lord; for it is said, Psalm. 49.: But to the sinner God said: why do you declare my justices? But the heavens, that is, heavenly men, whose conversation is in the heavens. I shall set down, therefore, parallels between Judges and the heavens.

> ITERUM, atque iterum hunc discursum resumens part. 4. de Ecclesiastica Hier. cap. 3. Iudices terrae coelis assimilat. Coelis ideo etiam primi Ecclesiae iudices Apostoli assimilati fuere Psal. 18. et sic Psal. 21. Annuntiabunt caeli iustitiam eius. Sane nequeunt impii iustitias Domini repraesentare; dicitur enim Psalm. 49. Peccatori autem dixit Deus; quare tu enarras iustitias meas? Sed coeli, idest, viri caelestes, quorum conversatio in caelis est. Ponam igitur parallelos inter Iudices, et caelos.

55 A N D first indeed, the heavens are bodies so sincere that among the wise it is disputed whether they are composed of matter and form; incorruptible, inasmuch as where there is matter, there is potency for new forms, and accordingly for corruption. So the Judges ought to be so separated from every earthly admixture that it may be doubted whether they are concreted of flesh and blood, so that they do not feel the affections of parents or friends, and can be said, as it were: Melchisedech, King of Salem, without father, without mother, without genealogy — so incorruptible ought they to be with respect to gifts, to prayers, and to terrors.

> Et primo quidem, caeli sunt corpora adeo sincera, ut inter sapientes disputetur: an ex materia, et forma componantur; quippe incorruptibiles; ubi enim materia, ibi potentia ad novas formas, atque adeo ad corruptionem. Sic Iudices esse debent adeo ab omni terrena concretione segregati, ut de iis dubitetur; an carne, et sanguine concreti sint, ut affectiones parentum, vel amicorum non sentiant, ac dici queant, veluti: Rex Salem Melchisedech sine patre, sine matre, sine genealogia, sic enim incorruptibiles a muneribus, a precibus, et a terroribus esse debent.

56 N E X T, the Heavens are most subtle substances, diaphanous, transmitting the light with which they are suffused. So also the Judges ought to shine with integrity, purity, and innocence so preeminent, that they transfuse the heavenly light into the world by preeminent examples of life.

DEINDE, Coeli sunt substantiae subtilissimae, diaphanae, transmittentes lumen, quo perfunduntur. Ita et Iudices esse debent integritate, puritate, ac innocentia, adeo praecellenti, effulgentes, ut lumen coeleste transfundant mundo praeclatis vitae exemplis.

57 O F T E N U O U S substance, and fluid, are the heavens, according to the opinion of the Seraphic Doctor and of the more recent Astronomers, yet in their place standing in their orb Mathematically, as if riveted most firm in structure, or as Eugubinus read: and the species; so also the Judges, of a frail nature indeed, yet most firm, standing in the most perfect spherical figure, so that they halt about the mean of equity without deviation, and are, as it were, the mirror of Justice and of the other virtues.

TENVIS substantiae, ac fluidae,sunt coeli, iuxta Seraphici, ac Recentiorum Astronomorum sententiam, ita tamen in suo loco in orbem Mathematice consistentes, ac si are firmissimi solidati, vel ut legit Eugubinus: et speciem*, sic et Iudices fragilis quidem naturae, attamen firmissimi in Sphaerica perfectissima figura consistentes, ita ut circa medium aequitatis absque deviatione sistant, ac veluti speculum sint Iustitiae, aliarumque virtutum.*

58 T H E H E A V E N S are moved above the center of the world, along the line of the Equator, from east to west with a regular motion, in the space of 24 hours, and render day and night; and they carry with them all the stars, and indeed, the wandering and deviating ones, they vindicate by force from their errors toward the west, which meanwhile, repressed, shriek, as it were, mourning their sins. So also the Judges, above the Equator of commutative Justice, rendering rewards to the good and punishments to the impious, should most swiftly carry them along, correcting the wandering ones even unto the west.

MOVENTUR Coeli super centrum mundi per lineam AEquatoris ab oriente in occasum motu regulari, spatio 24. horarum, diemque, ac noctem reddunt; ac secum stellas omnes rapiunt, et sane errantes, ac devias, vi ab erroribus vindicant ad occidentem, quae interim repressae strident, quasi sua peccata gementes. Sic et Iudices super AEquatorem Iustitiae commutativae praemia bonis, et poenas impiis reddendo velocissime eos rapiant, corrigendo errantes, etiam usque ad occidentem.

59 W I T H an unequal eccentric motion above the points of Aries and Libra the heavens are seen to move from the West according to the succession of the signs, so that they distribute, as it were in Geometric proportion, lights and influxes to the various regions, and portion out the good with proportional distribution: but especially the Sun, for the preservation of all regions, bending between the Tropics, at due times toward the North through the boreal signs, and toward the South through the Antarctida, so that no region can complain that a portion of light and influx has been denied to it — which would happen if it were moved only above the Equator.

MOTU Eccentro inaequali super Arietis, et Librae puncta cernitur coeli ab Occidente secundum successionem signorum, ut distribuant, veluti Geometrica proportione, lumina, influxus variis regionibus, atque virtutem, bonaque distributione proportionali dispertiantur: Praecipue vero Sol ad omnium regionum conservationem inter Tropicos flectendo temporibus debitis ad Aquilonem per signa Borealia, et ad Austrum per Antarctida, ut nulla regio conqueri possit,portionem luminis, et influxuum sibi esse denegatam, quod fieret, si super AEquatorem tantum moveretur.

60 S O also the Judges ought not only to repay rewards and punishments by commutative Justice, but also by Distributive [Justice] above the Balance of Justice, where again an Equinox is made, the commutative nevertheless being also kept; and they are held, strong ones above Aries of gentle clemency, to apportion the goods of the commonwealth in Geometric proportion, the needs and merits of each member of the commonwealth having been computed; so that no one can justly complain that he is left naked in rigid winter, or scorched with want in torrid summer, but all are clothed with the flowers and fruits of the commonwealth, imitating the Sun of Justice, CHRIST.

> SIC et Iudices non modo commutativa Iustitia debent praemia, poenasque rependere, sed etiam Distributiva super Libram Iustitiae, ubi iterum fit AEquinoctium, servata tamen eiam commutativa, fortesque super Arietem mansuetae clementiae tenentur bona Reipublicae proportione Geometrica computatis singulorum Reipublicae membrorum necessitatibus, ac meritis partiri; ut nullus merito conqueri queat, se rigida in hyeme nudum desertum, vel torrida aestate, egestate adustum, sed omnes floribus, et fructibus Reipublicae viantur, Imitantes Solem Iustitiae CHRISTUM.

61 T H E F I R M A M E N T is moved trembling above the pivots of Aries and Libra. So the Judges ought to fear lest they incline too much; and therefore, immovable, let them stand above the poles of Justice and mercy. For thus it is enjoined upon them: and now, O Kings, understand; be instructed, you who judge the earth. Serve the Lord in fear, and exult unto him with trembling; lay hold on discipline, lest you perish from the just way. Psalm. 2.

> MOVETUR Firmamentum trepidando super Cardines Arietis, et Librae,Ita Iudices debent timere, ne nimium declinent; et ideo immobiles super polos Iustitiae, et misericordiae consistant. Sic enim eis indicitur: et nunc Reges intelligite, erudimini qui iudicatis terram. Servite Domino in timore, et exultate ei cum tremore; apprehendite disciplinam ne pereatis a via iusta. Psalm. 2.

62 V E R Y S L O W L Y the eccentric of the Sun is moved, traversing one degree in each century of years, completing the year according to the measure of the Crystalline [heaven], the great year. So the Judges ought to be most deliberate in irregular movements, nor take a step unless the truth by which we are burned has been clearly recognized.

> TARDISSIME movetur eccentrum Solis, unum singulis annorum centuriis gradum percurrens, ad normam Christallini, annum magnum peragens. Sic ad motus irregulares debent esse ponderatissimi Iudices, nec passum gradi, nisi agnita perspicue,a qua creamur,veritate.

63 T H E M O O N, nearer to the earth, appearing great undeservedly, deviates with its moonlike motions among the other Wanderers. So those nearer to earthly things, in governing, deviate more in judgments and governances, and accordingly are sprinkled with earthly dregs. Such appears to our eyes the Ottoman Empire, a huge chaos of barbarians, where they hold cruelty for severity, and dissolution in place of mercy; therefore also, spotted, subject to earthly eclipses, often walking in the shadows of the earth, it is darkened by abomination, luxury, robberies, oppressions. Harsh appears the Moon, and wrinkled, full of hollow mountains and valleys; so that sordid empire, deformed with spots and wrinkles, strewn with earthly dregs, appears to wise eyes great, but to the most expert intellects most worthy of being cast away.

> LUNA, terrae vicinior, magna immerito apparens, ucto motibus inter caeteros Errantes deviat. Sic rebus terrenis magis propinqui in regendo, magis in iudiciis, et gubernationibus aberrant, atque adeo terrenis faecibus consperguntur. Tale apparet oculis nostris Ottomanum Imperium,ingens barbarorum Chaos, ubi crudelitatem pro severitate, dissolutionem, loco misericordiae, obtinent; ideo etiam maculosum Eclipsibus terrenis obnoxium,saepe terrae umbrim ingrediens, obscuratur abominatione, luxuria, rapinis, oppressionibus. Aspera apparet Luna, atque rugosa, montibus, et vallibus plena cavernosis; sic imperium illud sordidum, maculis, et rugis deforme, terrenis faecibus consperlatum, sapientibus apparet oculis grande, sed intellectibus peritissimis abic. istissimum.

64 N O T far away is Mercury, Aser, intent upon treacherous trades and piratical navigations; who yet can say to the Ottoman predominant what that Pirate said to Alexander, or, according to some, to Pompey: You accuse me of robbing a single skiff, and do you not see yourself the despoiler of the world?

> NON longe abest Mercurius Aser, dolosis Mercaturis, et navigationibus pyraticis intentus; Qui tamen potest Ottomano praedominanti id dicere, quod Pyrata ille Alexandro, vel, secundum aliquos, Pompeio: Tu me indicas unius cymbae raptorem, nec te vides mundi ereptorem.

65 N E A R at hand is the effeminate kingdom of Venus in Assyria

> Prope adest effoeminatum Veneris regnum in Assyria

66 Soon the body of the Sun, adored among the Persians.

> Mox adoratum apud Persas Solis corpus.

67 H E R E the warlike Mars of the Thracians and the Greeks; the Jupiter of the Cretans; the Saturn of the Easterns, of the golden, as they fable, age. All these, wandering, are at last corrected by the Justice of God. These emblems are drawn from Bucellius at the end, and from Cassanaeus, p. p. Catalogi gloriae mundi.

> HIC bellicosus Thracium, et Graecorum Mars, Cretensium Iupiter; Saturnus Orientalium,aurei, ut fabulantur, saeculi. Hi omnes errantes, tandem Iustitia Dei corriguntur. Haec insignia deducta sunt ex Bucellio in fine, et ex Cassanaeo p. p. Catalogi gloriae mundi.

68 L E T U S R A I S E our eyes to the solid Firmament, and set forth the images and stemmata also of Kings and Princes, even of Christians, that from them they may learn Justice.

69 T H E R E A R E in the circle of life, the Zodiac: the Aquarius of Lorraine; the Fishes, the Kings of Sicily. The Aries of the Argonauts. The Taurus of the Egyptians, and most noble of Certhes; the Taurus of Mechebel, and the Bulls of Savoy the Gemini; the Cancer of the Gambari; the Venetian Leo; the shining Virgo of the most powerful golden King of the Gauls, and the Libra adorned with lilies. The Scorpius of the Indians; the Sagittarius of the Scythians and Persians. The Leo of England, the Lyra of Ireland.

Question IX: In what respect private judgment of the neighbor is unlawful

1 THE PRINCIPAL difficulty concerns Judgment, by which one judges evil of another; for to judge good of someone is rarely, and only per accidens, a fault.

> Quo pacto illicitum sit iudicium privatum de proximo.
> POTISSIMA difficultas est de Iudicio, quo quis iudicat de alio malum; nam iudicare bonum, raro, et non nisi per accidens, est culpa.

2 THEREFORE I suppose that to judge something for a just cause is not a sin. This is commonly supposed by S. Bonaventure and S. Thomas and others, and it is proved by the Holy Doctor on John 12 with that text: Judge not according to the appearance, but judge just judgment.

> IGITUR suppono, iudicare aliquid iusta de causa, non esse peccatum. Id supponunt S. Bonavent. et S. Thom. et alii communiter, et probatur a S. Doctore ad 12. Ioan. illo: Nolite iudicare secundum faciem, sed iustum iudicium iudicate.

3 BUT WHAT cause is required for judging rightly is left to the prudent judge, as Soto noted, Book 3 de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 3; Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto 3.

> QUAENAM autem causa ad recte iudicandum requiratur, iudicio prudenti remittitur, ut adnotavit Soto Lib. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 3. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto 3.

4 THEREFORE I ASSERT: to judge deliberately that someone is evil, gravely harming his reputation, without a just cause, is mortal sin.

> ASSERO igitur. Iudicare deliberate malum, graviter laedens famam alterius, absque iusta causa, est mortale.

5 IT IS PROVED from the Holy Doctors, first from Matthew 7: Judge not, that you may not be judged. They confirm it from Bede on that passage, and from St. Augustine tract. 90. in Ioannem.

> PROBATUR a SS. DD. primo ex illo Matth. 7. Nolite iudicare, ut non iudicemini. Quod confirmant ex Beda ad eum locum, et D. Augustino tract. 90. in Ioannem.

6 NEXT it is proved by 1 Corinthians 4: Do not judge before the time. So D. Thomas art. 3, and P. Bonaventure p. p. Centil. sect. 10, where he observes that rash judgment is measured according to the Savior's saying, Matthew 7: With what judgment you judge, you shall be judged. Where the Gloss says: If you judge anyone rashly with venial condemnation, you shall be condemned venially. If with mortal condemnation, you shall be condemned mortally. This, he says, is to be understood without prejudice to the opinion of others; for some say it is not mortal unless reputation is gravely harmed. Whence Valencia in the place cited, and Tanner disp. 4. quaest. 3. dub. 2. num. 18, with Aragon, just as they think it mortal to judge some light things of a Religious man, as that he is a liar; so they would not think it mortal to judge of a worldly young man that he has committed fornication, or of a soldier that he has killed someone unjustly, because the judgment is a grave evil insofar as reputation is gravely taken away or harmed. From similar things (they say) such men are not harmed. Valencia adds that it is also an undue and unjust judgment to judge rashly of the future, e.g. that man will perish, for that belongs to God, who perhaps will change that sinner's heart.

> DEINDE id probat illo 4. primae ad Corinth. Nolite ante tempus iudicare. Sic D. Thom. art. 3. et P. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 10. ubi observat, iudicium temerarium mensurari iuxta sententiam Salvatoris, Matth. 7. In quo Iudicio iudicaveritis, iudicabimini. Ubi Glossa: Si quem iudicaveris temerarie damnatione veniali, venialiter condemnaberis. Si damnatione mortali, mortaliter condemnaberis. Hoc intelligendum, ait, sine praeiudicio sententiae aliorum; nam aliqui dicunt, non esse mortale, nisi graviter laedat famam. Quare Valentia loco adducto, et Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 3. dub. 2. num. 18. cum Aragonio, sicuti mortale putant de viro Religioso aliqua levia iudicare, ut esse mendacem; Ita non putaret mortale de Iuvene mundano, quod moechatus sit; de Milite, quod iniuste occiderit, quia iudicium est malum grave, quatenus tollitur graviter, seu laeditur fama. E similibus (aiunt) isti non laeduntur. Addit Valentia, etiam esse iudicium indebitum, et iniquum, temerarium iudicare de futuro, v. g. iste periturus est*, quia ad Deum pertinet, qui forsan illum reum mutabit.*

7 IT IS PROVED secondly by the Holy Doctor opusc. de profectu religiosi, Lib. 1. cap. 1, from Romans 14: But thou, why judgest thou thy brother's servant? and Luke 6: Judge not, and you shall not be judged. He defines rash judgment as when I believe something was done with an evil intention, when it could have been done with another intention; or when someone is judged gravely fallen on light indications. For this is to usurp the scrutiny of hearts, which is proper to God, as is said in Jeremias 17.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore opusc. de profectu religiosi, Lib. 1. cap. 1. illo Rom. 14. Tu quis es, qui alienum servum iudicas*, et Lucae 6.* Nolite iudicare, et non iudicabimini. Iudicium autem temerarium definit, quando credo aliquid factum mala intentione, quod potuit et alia fieri intentione; vel cum iudicatur aliquis graviter lapsus ex levibus indiciis. Hoc enim est usurpare scrutationem cordium, quae Dei est propria, ut dicitur Hierem. 17.

8 THE SAME Holy Doctor cites on Luke 6 the words alleged, where he adds Proverbs 17: He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, both are abominable before God.

EADEM affert S. Doctor ad 6. Lucae in ea verba allegata, ubi addit id Proverb. 17. Et qui iustificat impium, et condemnat iustum, abominabilis est uterque apud Deum.

9 HE OBSERVES that to justify the wicked is abominable, not per se, but per accidens, when he is to be compared with another in order to something of justice, e.g. the distribution of honors, etc., and by that judgment an equality with another in good reputation is established or promoted, and the wicked man is preferred or made equal to the just, as the Holy Doctor noted in the places alleged, and Valencia puncto 1, and Navarre commentar. in Rubric. de Iudic. n. 47.

OBSERVAT, iustificare impium, esse abominabile, non per se, sed per aliud, quando conferendus est cum alio in ordine ad aliquid Iustitiae, puta distributionis honorum, etc. et stabilitur, aut promovetur per illud iudicium aequalitas cum alio in bono famae, et iusto impius praefertur, vel aequatur, ut adnotavit S. Doctor allegatis locis*, et Valentia* puncto 1. et Navar. commentar. in Rubric. de Iudic. n. 47.

10 I ASSERT secondly: to judge of someone, even gravely, from light indications, but with fear/doubt, is not mortal sin. So S. Bonaventure in the places cited, and D. Thomas art. 3; Sylvester under the word Iudicium, quaest. 4; Cajetan on the said art. 3; Navarre loc. cit. num. 49 and following. So also Tanner loc. cit. num. 20, who says light indications are those by which a prudent man would not be moved to that judgment. So also Soto, Valencia, Aragon, and others.

ASSERO secundo: Iudicare de aliquo, etiam grave, ex levibus indiciis, sed cum formidine, non est peccatum mortale. Ita S. Bonavent. locis adductis*, et D. Thomas* art. 3. Sylvest. verbo Iudicium, quaest. 4. Caietanus dicto Art. 3. Navar. loco cit. num. 49. et sequentibus. Ita etiam Tanner. loco cit. num. 20. qui levia indicia ea esse dicit, quibus vir prudens non moveatur ad id iudicium. Ita etiam Soto, Valentia, Aragonius, et alii.

11 IT IS PROVED by the Holy Doctor, because the neighbor is not gravely harmed.

PROBATUR a S. Doctore, quia non laeditur graviter proximus.

12 HE OBSERVES, however, in the place cited on the Judgment of suspicion that it is threefold. The first is of violent suspicion, when no or few signs of good appear, but all of evil; and this is not a sin. The second of temerity; when many signs of good, few of evil; and it is a grave venial sin. The third, when many of evil, but few are signs of good; and this is a lighter venial sin.

> OBSERVAT autem loco cit. Centil. Iudicium suspicionis esse triplex. Primum suspicionis violentae, quando nulla, vel pauca apparent signa boni, sed omnia mali, et hoc non est peccatum. Secundum temeritatis; quando multa boni; pauca mali; et est veniale grave. Tertium, quando multa mali, pauca vero sunt signa boni; et hoc est veniale levius.

13 HE NOTES also in the place cited, de profectu religiosi, that fear is sometimes confused with suspicion, although they differ: for fear is directed to caution, as when, without suspecting evil of anyone, I close the Monastery as a precaution.

> ADVERTIT etiam loco cit. de profectu religiosi*, aliquando confundi timorem cum suspicione, cum tamen differant: Timor enim est ad cautionem, ut cum non suspicans malum de aliquo, ad cautionem claudo Monasterium.*

14 VALENCIA ADDS that such a judgment with doubt can be mortal by reason of the person; as if you judge some gravest evil of a most honest man, even with doubt, as incest with his mother or sister.

> ADDIT Valentia, tale iudicium cum formidine posse esse, ratione personae, mortale; ut si gravissimum malum de honestissimo viro, etiam cum formidine, iudices, ut incestum cum matre, vel sorore.

15 HE NOTES also punct. 4. that one can doubt by standing in suspense; but such doubt can be a sin, even if only venial, when one is lightly grounded and hangs between the two, so as not to incline toward judging the good. He adds, however, with Soto loc. cit. that it can be mortal by reason of a most illustrious person, as if someone is in doubt about Blessed John the Baptist, whether he was a saint or sinned mortally, etc.

> ADVERTIT etiam punct. 4. posse aliquem dubitare, in ancipiti stando; tale autem dubium potest esse peccatum, etiamsi tantum veniale, quando leviter fundatus inter utrumque pendeo, ita, ut non inclinem ad bonum iudicandum. Addit vero cum Soto loco cit. posse esse mortale ratione personae praeclarissimae, ut si quis anceps sit de B. Ioanne Baptista, an esset sanctus, an peccaret mortaliter, etc.

16 THE HOLY DOCTOR ADDS, moreover, that thoughts of this kind belong more to a Prelate, who by reason of his governance can prudently be in suspense or doubt, and likewise to one who is enlightened from above, of whom the Apostle says: The spiritual man judgeth all things; but it is not true of those "spiritual" men who, like Catos, everywhere stick in their nose and judge with a quince-like zeal — say rather with a dog-in-the-manger zeal.

> ADDIT vero S. Doctor, huiusmodi cogitationes magis convenire Praelato, qui potest ratione gubernationis anceps esse, vel dubitare prudenter, similiter et eum, qui desuper illuminatur, de quo ait Apostolus: Spiritualis homo omnia iudicat; non autem esse verum de Spiritualionibus istis, qui quasi Catones ubique nasum figunt, et zelo cydonio iudicant, dic potius cotonico.

Question X: Whether distributive justice differs in species from commutative

1 THE DIFFERENCE between Distributive and Commutative Justice is taken from the object. I distinguished and explained both p. p. Tract. 1. disp. 19. quaest. 1. Distributive justice, therefore, establishes equality among private persons, by dividing the goods of the Community among them equally, according to Geometric proportion, the dignity of persons being considered, in such a way, namely, that with the same Geometric proportion (as double, e.g., or sesquialter, etc.) by which the dignity of one is greater than the dignity of the other, he also obtains more of the common goods. But Commutative justice establishes equality among private persons, by giving or receiving an equal according to Arithmetic proportion, such as, e.g., between five and five.

> DIFFERENTIA Iustitiae distributivae, et Commutativae ab obiecto accipitur. Utranque vero distinxi, et explicui p. p. Tract. 1. disp. 19. quaest. 1. Distributiva igitur constituit aequalitatem inter particulares, dividendo inter eos bona Communitatis aequaliter, secundum proportionem Geometricam, considerata personarum dignitate, ita nimirum, ut eadem proportione Geometrica (ut dupla, v. g. vel sesquialtera, etc.) qua dignitas unius est maior dignitate alterius; plus etiam obtineat de bonis communibus. Iustitia vero Commutativa constituit aequalitatem inter particulares, dando, vel accipiendo aequale secundum proportionem Arithmeticam, qualis est, v. g. inter quinque, et quinque.

2 THUS, then, Distributive justice has as its formal object the mean between excess and defect, according to Geometric proportion, just as, e.g., the quintuple is the mean between the sextuple and the quadruple; and therefore to him who exceeds another in dignity, e.g. by the quintuple, there ought to be distributed from the common goods quintuple more than to that other. But Commutative justice has as its formal object the mean between excess and defect, according to Arithmetic proportion; just as five is the mean between six and four; and therefore, of two men having five each, he who has taken one from the other must restore one to him, lest he himself have six and the other four, but each have five, which is the mean. Aristotle hands down this definition 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4, received by all. Nor is it necessary to dispute this doctrine with Geometric and Arithmetic speculations, for they would obscure the moral matter more, as Gregory of Valencia warns disp. 5. quaest. 5. puncto primo.

> Sic igitur Iustitia distributiva habet pro obiecto formali medium inter excessum, et defectum, secundum proportionem Geometricam, sicut quintuplum, v. g. est medium inter sextuplum, et quadruplum; et ideo ei, qui dignitate alterum excedit, v. g. quintuplo, distribui debet de bonis communibus quintuplo plus, quam illi alteri. Iustitia vero Commutativa habet pro obiecto formali medium inter excessum, et defectum, secundum proportionem Arithmeticam; sicut quinque sunt medium inter sex et quatuor; et ideo, qui ex duobus, habentibus quinque, accepit unum ab altero, debet illi restituere unum, ne ipse habeat sex, et alter quatuor, sed uterque quinque, quae sunt medium. Tradit hanc definitionem Aristoteles 5. Eth. cap. 3. et 4. ab omnibus receptus. Neque necesse est, hanc doctrinam speculationibus Geometricis et Arithmeticis disceptare, quia rem moralem magis obscurarent, ut monet Gregorius de Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 5. puncto primo.

3 HE NOTES, however, that by Distributive justice an equality is established according to the relation of the Community to its parts, and by that very fact an equality is established also among the parts of the Community themselves; and in this last respect, he says, the formal reason of Distributive justice consists; for among these there is a quintuple equality, e.g., to the quintuple, a quadruple to the quadruple, which is an equality simply and properly, such as ought to be in proper justice, and this Aristotle teaches 5. Eth. chapter 2. Whence it happens that this Justice is not only in the Dispenser of the community, but also in the members of the community, in those capable of receiving this equality; for they can will it.

> ADVERTIT autem, quod per Distributivam constituitur aequalitas, secundum habitudinem Communitatis ad suas partes, et eo ipso constituitur aequalitas etiam inter ipsas Communitatis partes, atque in hoc ultimo ait consistere rationem formalem Distributivae; nam inter has est aequalitas quintupla, v.g. ad quintuplum, quadrupla ad quadruplum, quae est aequalitas simpliciter, et proprie, qualis esse debet in Iustitia propria, et hoc docet Aristoteles 5. Eth. capite 2. Ex quo fit, ut haec Iustitia, non solum sit in Dispensatore communitatis, sed etiam in membris communitatis, recipere valentibus hanc aequalitatem; possunt enim eam velle.

4 I ASSERT that these two Justices are specifically distinct. So Aristotle in the place cited, and the common view.

ASSERO, has duas Iustitias esse specie distinctas. Ita Aristoteles loco cit. et communiter.

5 IT IS PROVED. Those virtues differ in species whose acts, from the formal reason of their object, have both a different praise and a different difficulty: such are the acts of Commutative and Distributive Justice: Therefore. The minor, as to praise, is evident; as to difficulty, however, it is proved, because by Commutative justice there is given to another what is truly his; but by Distributive justice there is given what is as it were his, inasmuch as what belongs to the whole community belongs also to the parts; but it is easier to give to another what is his absolutely, than what in another way is in some manner his.

PROBATUR. Illae virtutes differunt specie, quarum actus ex ratione formali sui obiecti habent diversam, tum laudem, tum difficultatem: Tales sunt actus Commutativae, et Distributivae Iustitiae: Ergo. Minor, quod ad laudem, patet; Quod ad difficultatem vero probatur, quia per Commutativam datur alteri id, quod est vere eius; per Distributivam vero datur id, quod est tanquam suum, quatenus id, quod est totius communitatis, est etiam partium; facilius est autem dare alteri id, quod suum est absolute, quam id, quod altero modo est quodammodo suum.

6 From these things the answer to Buridan's argument 5. Eth. quaest. 7 is clear, where he contends he can prove that they are not specifically distinct, because both preserve equality. For we have already seen that the equality of each is different. See the rest in Valencia loc. cit., and Mastrius disp. 7. num. 179.

Ex quibus patet ad argumentum Buridani 5. Eth. quaest. 7. ubi contendit probare, non esse distinctas specie, quia ambae servant aequalitatem. Iam enim vidimus, diversam esse utriusque aequalitatem. Reliqua vide in Valentia loco cit. et Mastrio disp. 7. num. 179.

7 FURTHERMORE, the matter of Distributive and Commutative justice are the very things that are commuted or distributed; but the proximate matter of Commutative justice are commutations, either voluntary, as Buying, Selling, Exchange, Betrothal, Usury, Deposit, Hiring, as Aristotle says 5. Eth. cap. 2; or according to D. Thom. art. 3: Buying or Selling, which is the permutation of a thing for money; Usufruct, when someone grants gratis the use of a fruit-bearing thing, with the obligation of returning the same thing; Loan for use (Accomodatum), when the use of a non-fruit-bearing thing is granted gratis, with the obligation of returning the same thing in number; Mutuum (consumable loan), when likewise the use of a non-fruit-bearing thing is granted gratis, with the obligation of returning the same in species, not in number; Leasing and Hiring, when the use of a thing is granted for a price, with the obligation of returning the same: Deposit, when a thing is granted that it be kept and afterwards returned; Pawning, when a thing is granted to secure the obligation of satisfaction, namely that if he does not satisfy, it can be retained: Suretyship (Fideiussio), when someone simply obliges himself to satisfy for another. Add Bills of Exchange, Partnership, and other things to be discussed below.

PORRO materia Distributivae, et Commutativae sunt res ipsae, quae commutantur, vel distribuuntur; materia vero proxima Commutativae sunt commutationes, sive voluntariae, ut Emptio, Venditio, Mutatio, Sponsio, Usura, Depositio, Conductio, ut ait Aristoteles 5. Eth. cap. 2. Vel secundum D. Thom. art. 3. Emptio, aut Venditio, quae est permutatio rei cum pecunia; Ususfructus, cum quis concedit gratis fructificantis rei usum, cum debito reddendi eandem rem: Accomodatum, cum gratis conceditur usus rei non fructificantis, cum debito reddendi eandem rem numero: Mutuum, cum conceditur item gratis usus rei non fructificantis, cum debito reddendi eandem specie, non numero: Locatio, et Conductio, cum conceditur pro pretio usus rei, cum debito eandem reddendi: Depositum, cum conceditur res, ut conservetur, et postea reddatur, Impignoratio, cum conceditur res ad firmandam obligationem satisfaciendi, ut scilicet, si non satisfaciat, retineri possit: Fideiussio, cum quis simpliciter se obligat ad satisfaciendum pro altero. Adde Cambium, Societatem, et alia infra edisserenda.

8 THERE ARE ALSO Involuntary Commutations, from which some are clandestine, as Theft, Adultery, Poisoning, Pimping, the seduction of servants, Homicide treacherously committed, and false testimony. Others are violent, as scourging, Chains, Death, Robbery, Mutilation, Reviling, the infliction of Contumely. See St. Thomas.

ALIAE sunt Commutationes Involuntariae, e quibus aliae sunt clandestinae, ut Furtum, Adulterium, Veneficium, Lenocinium, Servorum seductio, dolose perpetratum Homicidium, et falsa testificatio. Aliae violentae, ut flagellatio, Vincula, Mors, Rapina, Mutilatio, Convitiatio, Contumeliae illatio. Vide S. Thomam.

9 BUT THE proximate matter of Distributive justice are the distributions of all the goods of the Republic, revenues, honors, etc. Indeed also of burdens, which ought to be distributed according to the distribution of goods and honors as well. See the same D. Thomas.

MATERIA autem proxima Distributivae sunt distributiones bonorum omnium Reipublicae, proventuum, honorum, etc. Imo et onerum, quae debent distribui, iuxta distributionem, etiam bonorum, honorumque. Vide eundem D. Thomam.

10 FROM WHAT has been said it seems to follow that Commutative justice does not observe Geometric equity, otherwise the species would be confused, as Valquez and Turrianus say: Yet Suarez, Card. Lugo, Poncius (in Mastrius n. 181) assert this for the case when someone, because of contracts, owes many and has gone bankrupt; and therefore cannot satisfy all equally; then he must satisfy all according to proportion; as if one creditor is owed a hundred gold pieces, another two hundred, let 150 be given to the latter, but only fifty to the former. Thus he will pay by Commutative justice, and Geometric proportion will be preserved.

VIDETUR ex dictis sequi, Commutativam non observare aequitatem Geometricam, alioqui species confunderentur, ut aiunt Valquez, et Turrianus: Attamen Suarez, Card. Lugo, Poncius apud Mastrium n. 181. id asserunt tunc, quando aliquis, ob contractus, debet multis, et decoxit; ideoque nequit omnibus aeque satisfacere; tunc debet omnibus satisfacere, iuxta proportionem; ut si unus sit creditor centum aureorum; alter ducentum, huic dentur 150. illi vero tantum quinquaginta. Sic ex Commutativa solvet, et servabitur proportio Geometrica.

11 YET FOR all that those equities are not confused, says Mastrius, because in Commutative justice an equity of quantity, of equality, and moreover of proportion is required; in Distributive justice, however, of proportion alone.

NEQUE tamen ob id illas aequitates confundi, ait Mastrius, quia in Commutativa exigitur quantitatis, aequalitatis, et insuper proportionis aequitas; in Distributiva vero, sola proportionis.

12 AMICUS, however, disp. 11. sect. 14, for that reason denies that they are specifically distinguished.

AMICUS tamen disp. 11. sect. 14. ob id negat, eas specie distingui.

13 COLLECT MOREOVER that Commutative justice is a genus divided into subordinate species, as I related above; for in nearly each there is a different law, as Mastrius says num. 184; for the law concerning goods of reputation, life, fortune, etc. is different, as Amicus also says.

> COLLIGE etiam, Commutativam esse genus subalternum in species divisum, ut supra retuli; est enim in singulis fere diversum ius, ut ait Mastrius num. 184. diversum est enim ius ad bona famae, vitae, fortunae, etCC. ut ait etiam Amicus.

14 CARDINAL LUGO ALSO COLLECTS disput. 1. num. 43, on Distributive justice, that in every act it regards several persons compared, so that proportion may be preserved.

> COLLIGIT etiam Cardinalis Lugo disput. 1. num. 43. de Iustitia distributiva, quod in quolibet actu plures respiciat comparatos, ut proportio servetur.

15 THIS, HOWEVER, Suarez denies, disp. de Iustitia sect. 3, as do Poncius and Mastrius, because a Bishop can confer a benefice on someone without comparison with others.

> ID tamen negant Suarez disp. de Iustitia sect. 3. Poncius, et Mastrius, quia potest Episcopus conferre beneficium alicui absque collatione cum aliis.

16 BUT THIS reason is frivolous; for Distributive justice to be preserved, the more worthy must be chosen, according to the decree of the holy Council of Trent; and this supposes a comparison, at least confused, or some distinct one with several; otherwise, if he confers it thinking nothing of it, he will not act according to the norm of Distributive Justice.

> SED haec ratio frivola est; nam ut servetur Distributiva, oportet ut dignior eligatur, iuxta decretum Sancti Concilii Tridentini; haec autem supponit comparationem, saltem confusam, aut aliquam distinctam cum nonnullis; alioqui, si id praestat nil cogitando: non aget ad normam Distributivae Iustitiae.

Disputation XXIV: On Restitution

1 AMONG the species of Justice enumerated above, none is graver, or more pressing, than Restitution; which therefore suffers grave difficulties: for to steal another's goods, a greed conscious of its own need does not disdain; but to restore, for the most part, recoils rather from disdain than from want; since it is not so much the return of what was taken away, as a kind of public confession of the crime committed. Yet nevertheless there is an obligation of compensating the injury inflicted, or the thing taken away; so that D. Augustine could say with the greatest confidence, epist. 54 ad Macedonium, that even one who persuades a man not to restore, or even does not compel him (provided the task of compelling is in his own hands), is a partner in the crime and the fraud, and will be bound by an equal bond both of punishment and of fault; and however much he be absolved from the fault by touching penitence, nothing will ever exempt him from the penalty of paying, except an impossibility of paying. For as St. Augustine says a little further on in the same place: No one is to be interceded for, that what he took away by crime he may possess with impunity for the crime; but, the injury being forgiven, let him render what he took away unjustly, provided he has what he took away, or something else from which he may restore it. Concerning this restitution, therefore, we must here treat with the usual brevity.

> INTER species Iustitiae, supra enumeratas, nulla gravior est, aut urgentior, quam Restitutio; quae graves idcirco patitur difficultates: Aliena enim surripere, suae indigentiae conscia aviditas non fastidit; restituere vero potius ex fastu, quam ex inopia plerumque refugit; cum non tam sit ablati redditio, quam patrati criminis publica velut confessio: Verum tamen illatam iniuriam, sive ablatam rem ea est recompensandi obligatio; ut fidentissime dixerit D. Augustinus epist. 54. ad Macedonium*, etiam suadentem non restituere, sive etiam non compellentem (modo penes ipsum sit compellendi munus) socium esse criminis, et fraudis, ac pari et poenae, et culpae vinculo obstrictum iri; et quantumvis a culpa absolutum tacta poenitentia; nunquam tamen a poena solvendi, aliud, praeter solvendi impossibilitatem, eximet. Nam ut ait ibidem paulo infra S. Augustinus:* pro nullo interveniendum est, ut quod scelere abstulit, sceleris impunitate possideat; sed, ut remissa iniuria, quod iniuriose abstulit, reddat, si tamen habet quod abstulit, vel aliud unde illud restituat*; de hac igitur restitutione pro solita brevitate hic agendum est.*

Question I: What restitution is

1 RESTITUTION, as is gathered from D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultima, is an act of Commutative Justice, by which, according to the equality of thing to thing, what has been taken from another, whether willingly or unwillingly, is given back to him. So also D. Thomas here, and others in Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 1; Caspensis disp. 1. sectione 1. de Restit. More properly, however, it is when what has been unjustly taken away is given back, as Tanner notes disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 1, with Bannes quaest. 62. art. 1 and others.

> RESTITUTIO, ut colligitur ex D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultima. est actus Iustitiae Commutativae, quo secundum aequalitatem rei ad rem redditur alteri, quod ab eo, vel volente, vel invito, est acceptum. Ita etiam D. Thom. hic, et alii apud Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 1. Caspensem disp. 1. sectione 1. de Restit. Magis tamen proprie est quando redditur id, quod inique est ablatum, ut notat Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 1. cum Bannes quaest. 62. art. 1. et aliis.

2 CASPENSIS, however, OBSERVES, from D. Bonaventure loc. cit. and Lib. 6. Compend. Theol. cap. 29, that Restitution differs from Satisfaction, as the inferior from the superior, because every restitution is a satisfaction, yet not every satisfaction is a restitution; for he who satisfies for himself is not said to restore. And so Restitution is the giving back of what was received, and pertains to Commutative justice: but Satisfaction is the taking on of some burden because of an offense inflicted on another, and pertains to Vindictive justice.

> OBSERVAT vero Caspensis ex D. Bonavent. loco cit. et Lib. 6. Compend. Theol. cap. 29. Restitutionem differre a Satisfactione, tanquam inferius a superiori, quia omnis restitutio est satisfactio, non tamen omnis satisfactio est restitutio, qui enim satisfacit pro se, non dicitur restituere. Itaque Restitutio est redditio accepti, et spectat ad Commutativam: Satisfactio vero est assumptio alicuius molestiae ob illatam alteri offensam, et spectat ad Vindicativam.

3 MOREOVER, Satisfaction for sins, if it is made ex opere operantis, must be by a man existing in grace: but Restitution can be fulfilled by a man existing in mortal sin. Satisfaction, too, can be a part of the Sacrament of Penance: but Restitution by no means. Finally, Satisfaction is at the discretion of a good man: but Restitution of itself must be made according to equality. Moreover, all say that Restitution is an act of Commutative Justice.

> PRAETEREA Satisfactio pro peccatis, si fit ex opere operantis, debet esse ab homine, existente in gratia: Restitutio autem potest impleri ab homine, existente in peccato mortali. Satisfactio etiam potest esse pars Sacramenti Poenitentiae: Restitutio vero nequaquam. Tandem Satisfactio est ad arbitrium boni viri: Restitutio vero per se debet fieri ad aequalitatem. Porro Restitutionem esse actum Iustitiae Commutativae omnes aiunt.

Question II: Whether restitution is necessary for salvation

1 IT IS A COMMONPLACE, that saying of D. Augustine epist. 44: The sin is not forgiven unless what was taken away is restored. And cap. ult. de Iniustitiis: If damage has been given by your fault, you are bound in justice to make satisfaction. From which you have that to restore is a precept, as the Holy Doctor teaches in 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultima. But it is not necessary as a means, for we are often excused from restitution on account of incapacity, and yet we can still be saved, as I shall show from D. Augustine; but means, even when omitted without fault, impede salvation.

> An sit necessaria RESTITUTIO ad salutem.
> VULGATUM est illud D. Augustini epist. 44. Non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. Et cap. ult. de Iniustitiis: Si tua culpa damnum datum est, iure satisfacere teneris. Ex quo habes, esse praeceptum restituere, ut docet S. Doctor in 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultima. Non est autem necessaria ut medium, nam saepe excusamur a restitutione ob impotentiam, et tamen adhuc possumus salvari, ut ostendam ex D. Augustino; media autem, etiam sine culpa omissa, impediunt salutem.

2 THERE IS, however, a difficulty: Whether this precept is negative.

> Est autem difficultas: An hoc praeceptum sit negativum.

3 OBSERVE, for distinguishing, that to recognize whether a Precept is affirmative or negative, one must attend to the matter which is commanded, not to the manner in which it is enunciated; for if the matter, or object, is something forbidden, it will be negative; but if something commanded, it will be positive.

OBSERVA, ad dignoscendum; An Praeceptum sit affirmativum, vel negativum, oportere attendere materiam, quae praecipitur, non modum quo enunciatur; nam si materia, seu obiectum sit aliquid vetitum, erit negativum; si vero aliquid iussum, erit positivum.

4 I ASSERT it is negative in substance, although in the form of words it is affirmative: Restore what is not thine, that is, do not retain what is another's: So the Doctors who seem contrary are reconciled, in Tanner disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 8; Bassaeus num. 4.

ASSERO, esse negativum in substantia, licet in forma verborum sit affirmativum: Restitue non tuum, idest, non retineas alienum: Ita conciliantur Doctores, qui videntur contrarii apud Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 8. Bassaeus num. 4.

5 FOR IT IS PROVED that this grave precept is expressed positively by Matthew 22: Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's. And Romans 13: Render to all men their dues: tribute, to whom tribute; custom, to whom custom. Which the Holy Doctor pursues in Confessionali, cap. 4. partic. 2.

PROBATUR enim exprimi positive praeceptum hoc grave, illo Matth. 22. Reddite, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari. Et Rom. 13. Reddite omnibus debita: cui tributum, tributum, cui vectigal, vectigal. Quae prosequitur S. Doctor in Confessionali, cap. 4. partic. 2.

6 IT IS PROVED, secondly, by the Holy Doctor loc. cit. and in Speculo, cap. 2, toward the end, with a splendid testimony of St. Augustine, epist. 54. ad Macedonium, which is cited in Regula Peccatum, de regulis Iuris, in 6, and in cap. cum tua, extra de usuris, and in Decretis 14. quaest. 6. can. 1. For when Macedonius had written in the letter, the preceding 53rd, which is to Augustine, that some even desired the penalty of their crime to be relaxed for them, while they possessed that for which the crime had been committed. St. Augustine answering says: You mention that worst kind of men, upon whom every medicine of penance is of no profit. For if the thing of another, on account of which the sin was committed, is not restored when it can be restored, penance is not done, but feigned: but if it is done truthfully, the sin will not be forgiven unless what was taken away is restored — but, as I said, when it can be restored. For often he who takes away loses, either by suffering evil men, or by living badly himself; and he has nothing else from which he may restore. To such a one, certainly, we cannot say: Restore what you took away, except when we believe him to have it, and he denies it. From this testimony of St. Augustine, D. Thom. loc. cit. and the Disciple collect, especially Tanner disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 7, that restitution is not necessary by a necessity of means, because the condition is added: if he can.

PROBATUR deinde a S. Doctore loco cit. et in Speculo, cap. 2. ad finem, luculento S. Augustini testimonio epist. 54. ad macedonium, quod refertur in Regula Peccatum, de regulis Iuris, in 6. et in cap. cum tua, extra de usuris, et in Decretis 14. quaest. 6. can. 1. Cum enim Macedonius epistola, praecedenti 53. quae est ad Augustinum scripsisset, quosdam etiam sceleris poenam cupere sibi relaxari, et id, propter quod admissum est scelus, possidere. Respondens S. Augustinus, ait: Pessimum hominum genus commemoras, cui poenitendi medicina omnis non prodest. Si enim res aliena, propter quam peccatum est, cum reddi possit, non redditur, non agitur poenitentia, sed fingitur: Si autem veraciter agitur, non remittetur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum, sed ut dixi, cum restitui potest. Plerumque enim, qui aufert, amittit, siue alios patiendo malos, siue ipsi male viuendo; neque aliud habet, unde restituat. Huic certe non possumus dicere: Redde quod abstulisti, nisi cum habere credimus, et negare. Ex hoc testimonio S. Augustini colligunt D. Thom. loco cit. et Discipuli, praecipue Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 7. restitutionem non esse necessariam necessitate medii, quia apponitur conditio; si potest.

7 BUT THAT the Precept is negative is proved by Valencia with the argument of St. Bonaventure in the place cited, because it obliges forever not to retain the thing of another to the injury of its Owner, and the unjust detainer is always in unjust delay, sinning actually, as the Holy Doctor says in the place cited, and as I showed in the first part of the Summa.

> QUOD vero dicat Praeceptum negativum, probatur a Valentia argumento S. Bonavent. loco citato, quia obligat pro semper ad non retinendum rem alienam in iniuriam Domini, et iniustus detentor semper est in mora iniqua, peccans actu, ut ait S. Doctor loco cit. et ostendi prima secundae.

8 BASSAEUS ANSWERS that it does not oblige forever, e.g. in necessity. But then things are common; therefore he is not an unjust detainer, and so is not subject to restitution.

> RESPONDET Bassaeus, non obligare ad semper, v. g. in necessitate. At tunc res sunt communes; ideo non est iniquus detentor, atque adeo non est subiectum restitutionis.

9 YOU WILL OBJECT. If the debtor sins by not restoring, the creditor ought to give way, lest the debtor be damned; for the salvation of the soul is to be preferred to riches.

> OBIICIES. Si debitor peccat non restituendo, debet creditor cedere, ne debitor damnetur; est enim praeferenda salus animae divitiis.

10 ADRIANUS de restit., Sotus Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2, and Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 2, struggle with this. But I answer easily from D. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 29. quaest. ultima, that the Order of Charity between my goods and my neighbor's requires necessity in the neighbor — a necessity, surely, which is not found in him who can, and wills not, to restore. But I am not bound to give support to his evil will; for Charity does not act perversely.

> LABORANT Adrianus de restit. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2 et Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 2. Sed facile respondeo ex D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 29. quaest. ultima, Ordinem charitatis inter mea bona, et proximi, exigere in proximo necessitatem, quae sane non repetitur in eo, qui potest, et non vult restituere. Non teneor autem eius malae voluntati suffragari; non enim Charitas agit perperam.

Question III: Who is bound to restore

1 CERTAIN rules are handed down by the Doctors, that what is sought may be recognized. The obligation of restoring arises from a threefold source. First, by reason of the mere acceptance of another's thing, even if perhaps you no longer have that thing. Secondly, by reason of another's thing alone, which you have in your keeping, even if perhaps you have not received it from its Owner. Thirdly, by reason of both, namely the acceptance and the thing. By the name of thing is understood the thing, either in itself, or as it remains in some fruit, or in the price, or in effect, e.g. the gain by which you have been made richer.

> Quis RESTITUERE teneatur.
> QUAEDAM regulae traduntur a Doctoribus, ut agnoscatur id, quod quaeritur. Triplici ex capite oritur obligatio restituendi. Primo ratione solius acceptionis rei alienae, etiamsi eam rem forte amplius non habeas. Secundo ratione solius rei alienae, quam apud te habeas, licet eam forte ab eius Domino non acceperis. Tertio ratione utriusque, scilicet acceptionis, et rei. Nomine rei intelligitur res, vel in se ipsa, vel ut manet in aliquo fructu, vel in pretio, vel in effectu, puta emolumento, ex quo ditior factus sis.

[2] BY acceptance I understand, not that which is gratuitous, but that which has been made in commercial dealings, e.g. of sale, purchase, etc. related above in disp. priori quaest. 10.

> PER acceptionem intelligo, non illam quae est gratuita, sed quae facta est in commerciis, puta venditionis, emptionis, etc. supra relatis in disp. priori quaest. 10.

[3] IT IS PROVED. He is bound to restore who is the true cause that someone have less than he ought of his goods: Such a one is he: Therefore. So Caietanus under the word Restitutio, Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. Tannerus in the quaest. cited, Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 4, who distinguishes these roots of Restitution as arising from the thing, from the delict, and from the contract, and adds two others, which are reduced to these. The first is from a statute of law. The second from the will, e.g. from a testament. For if someone has bequeathed to me a thousand gold pieces, the heir is bound to render them to me. So also D. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 6. et 15, and cap. 3. part. 44, and cap. 4. particula 2, where with other Doctors he includes under the title of unjust acceptance injuries, as burnings, devastations, etc.; so also in speculo animae, cap. 2, and de decem praeceptis, 7, and in Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 6.

> PROBATUR. Is tenetur restituere, qui est vera causa, ut aliquis minus habeat, quam debet, de rebus suis: Talis est is: Ergo. Ita Caietanus verbo Restitutio, Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. Tannerus quaest. citata, Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 4. qui eas radices Restitutionis distinguit ex re, ex delicto, et ex contractu, et duas alias, quae ad has reducuntur, addit. Prima est ex legis statuto. Secunda ex voluntate, puta ex testamento. Si enim quis mihi legavit mille aureos, tenetur haeres eos mihi reddere. Ita etiam D. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 6. et 15. et cap. 3. part. 44. et cap. 4. particula 2. ubi cum aliis Doctoribus sub iniustae acceptionis titulo claudit laesiones, ut incendia, dirutiones, etc. sic et in speculo animae, cap. 2. et de decem praeceptis, 7. et in Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 6.

[4] BEYOND the executor, the causes of acceptance of another's thing are commonly reckoned as nine with D. Thom. here, and D. Bonav. in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 19, in these verses.

> CAUSAS acceptionis rei alienae ultra executorem recensent novem communiter cum D. Thom. hic, et D. Bonav. in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 19. his versibus.

[5] Command, Counsel, Consent, Flattery, Recourse, The Mute, The Participant, The Not-hindering, The Not-revealing.

> Iussio, Consilium, Consensus, Palpo, Recursus, Mutus, Participans, Non obstans, Non manifestans.

[6] Of these the first six are positive, direct causes; the last three indirect, as Tannerus disput. 6. quaest. 4. dub. 14. num. 392 says, with the Holy Doctors.

> Ex his primae sex sunt causae positivae directae; tres postremae indirectae, ut ait Tannerus disput. 6. quaest. 4. dub. 14. num. 392. cum SS. Doctoribus.

[7] THE ONE COMMANDING, or ordering, tacitly or expressly, is a true cause of the damage; if, however, he revoked the command before the damage, with the knowledge of the Mandatary, the latter is not bound to restore. So commonly in Bassaeus, V. Restitutio, 5. §. 1.

> IUBENS, seu mandans tacite vel expresse, est vera causa damni; si tamen mandatum revocavit ante damnum, sciente Mandatario, ille non tenetur restituere. Ita communiter apud Bassaeum, V. Restitutio, 5. §. 1.

[8] THE ONE GIVING counsel, or urging, asking, instructing. If he revoke his Counsel, etc., he does not seem to be bound to restitution any longer; although others say it is not enough merely to urge, but he must efficaciously withdraw it, as Bassaeus §. 2 relates.

> CONSILIUM dans, vel hortans, rogans, instruens. Is si revocet Consilium, etc. non videtur amplius restitutioni ligatus; etsi alii dicant, non satis esse suadere, sed exigi efficaciter amovere, ut refert Bassaeus §. 2.

9 HERE is reduced the one giving consent, if he is a cause of the damage, e.g. by giving a vote for an unjust war and other iniquities.

> Huc reducitur consensum dans, si est causa damni, puta suffragium praestando ad bellum iniustum, et alia iniqua.

10 THE PALPO is one praising the crime and moving to it, or mocking, as if the one to be judged were sluggish, whence he is moved to vengeance like a buffalo. See Lessius lib. II. c. 13. num. 15; Regin. lib. X. num. 85; Petr. Nau. lib. III. cap. 4. num. 37; Azor 3. part. lib. IV. cap. 13; Filliucius tract. 32. num. 64; Sylvius cap. de Palpone; Bassaeus §. 4.

> PALPO est laudans crimen, movensque, vel irridens, quasi inertem aestimandum, unde ad vindictam velut Bubalus movetur. Vide Lessium lib. II. c. 13. num. 15. Regin. lib. X. num. 85. Petr. Nau. lib. III. cap. 4. num. 37. Azor 3. part. lib. IV. cap. 13. Filliucium tract. 32. num. 64. Sylvium cap. de Palpone, Bassaeum §. 4.

11 RECURSUS signifies the Receiver of stolen goods, etc., by fostering, protecting unto the damage, or retention, of another's thing. Thus Innkeepers receiving money stolen by sons of families, or servants; yet if they do not receive it as from a thief, but as from a friend, etc., then the Innkeeper is not bound to restore. See Bonacinus de restit. disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 2; Filliucius cit. num. 66. et 67; Bassaeus §. 5. Here the Holy Doctor includes those who foster brothels in their places of business, harlots and gamers in houses to which unwary youths fly as to snares, robbing those whom they have made steal, and bringing thence moneys and many precious things. These bloodsuckers will drink up the better portion of the blood of the innocent.

> RECURSUS signat Receptorem furis, etc. fovendo, tuendo ad damnum, vel retentionem rei alienae. Sic Cauponarii recipientes pecunias, a filiis familias, vel servis surreptas; Si tamen non recipiant ut furem, sed ut amicum, etc. tunc Caupo non tenetur restituere. Vide Bonacin. de restit. disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 2. Filliucium cit. num. 66. et 67. Bassaeum §. 5. Includit hic S. Doctor eos, qui fovent ludos in negotiationibus, meretrices, et lusores, in domibus, ad quas muscipulas evolant adolescentes incauti, expilantes illos, quos furari fecerint, et eo pecunias, resque multas pretiosas afferentes. Hi sanguisugae ebibunt potiorem insontium sanguinis portionem.

12 THE PARTICIPANT forthwith judges those plundered, and all cooperating in inflicting the damage; if, however, he is constrained by fear of the rope, by giving keys, holding the ladder, he seems immune from the debt of restitution; so also the Ergastula slaves of the Turks seem immune, forced to inflict damages upon us; but I do not agree that they are excused as to killings. See Suarez tract. 5. disp. 21. sect. 2.

13 THOSE who are co-causes of the same damage, e.g. a fire, are bound in solidum, l. Ita vulneratus, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam.

> Hi, qui sunt concause ad idem damnum, puta incendium, tenentur in solidum, l. Ita vulneratus, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam.

Doubt I: Whether one is a true cause of loss without whom the loss would still have followed

1 MANY assert that only he who is the true Cause of the Damage is subject to restitution, without whom the damage would not have been. Innoc. cap. sicut dignum, extra de homic.; Hostiensis there; Altissiodorensis lib. IV. tract. de Poenit. cap. de Restit. quaest. 3; Rich. 4. dist. 15. art. 5. quaest. 4; Sylvest. V. Restit. 3. quaest. 6; Adrian. 4. quaest. 4. de Restit. §. De concurrentibus cum fure; Nau. man. cap. 7. num. 20; Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 9. §. 2; Bassaeus V. Restit. 3. num. 3. §. 2. Because otherwise the causes would be inefficacious.

> MULTI eum solum, ut veram Damni causam, restitutioni esse obnoxium asserunt, sine quo damnum non fuisset. Innoc. cap. sicut dignum, extra de homic. Hostiens. ibi, Altissiodor. lib. IV. tract. de Poenit. cap. de Restit. quaest. 3. Rich. 4. dist. 15. art. 5. quaest. 4. Sylvest. V. Restit. 3. quaest. 6. Adrian. 4. quaest. 4. de Restit. §. De concurrentibus cum fure, Nau. man. cap. 7. num. 20. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 9. §. 2. Bassaeus V. Restit. 3. num. 3. §. 2. Quia aliter sunt causae inefficaces.

2 THE OPPOSITE is held by Caietanus here, art. 7; Ioan. Medin. quaest. 7. de Restit.; Sotus lib. IV. de iustit. quaest. 7. art. 3; Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. The reason is, because they operate efficaciously. This was the view of D. Bonavent. in spec. animae, cap. 2, and Clatius cap. 1. §. Damnificatio. Therefore the Advocate who unjustly defends a Client is bound to Restitution — otherwise, one who would still unjustly covet the inheritance, which he would invade by others if he did not otherwise obtain it.

> OPPOSITUM censent Caietanus hic, art. 7. Ioan. Medin. quaest. 7. de Restit. Sotus lib. IV. de iustit. quaest. 7. art. 3. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. Ratio est, quia efficaciter operantur. Hoc sensit D. Bonavent. in spec. animae, cap. 2. et Clatius cap. 1. §. Damnificatio. Ideo Restitutioni obligat Advocatum, qui tuetur iniuste Clientem, alioqui adhuc volentem iniuste haereditatem, quam per alios invaderet, si eam aliter non obtineret.

3 IT IS PROVED from the Holy Doctor. That is a true cause, posited, the effect is posited, as the Holy Doctor and others say. For if many wished to kill Peter, would not one who alone killed him be guilty of injustice, even if he would have to be killed by the others? See Valencia, and Caietan.

> PROBATUR e S. Doctore. Ea est vera causa, qua posita, ponitur effectus, ut ait S. Doctor, et alii. Si enim multi vellent occidere Petrum, nonne si unus solus ipsum occideret, esset reus iniustitiae, etiam si ab aliis foret necandus? Vide Valentiam, et Caietanum.

Doubt II: On the indirect causes of loss

1 THERE FOLLOW three others, namely the Silent one. He is called silent who ought to have spoken in order to prevent the damage. He can be bound either by office, as a Prelate, or by contract. I shall treat of these in the doubts below.

> SEQUUNTUR alii tres, nempe Mutus. Dicitur autem is, qui debuit loqui ad impediendum damnum. Potest autem, ut teneatur vel ex officio, ut Praelatus, vel ex contractu. De quibus infra dubitationes ponam.

2 The SECOND is the Non-obstructor, when he ought to have obstructed, as Prince, Magistrate, and the like.

> SECUNDUS est, Non obstans, cum deberet, ut Princeps, Magistratus, et similes.

3 The THIRD is the Non-discloser of the one causing damage, when he was bound, as a witness in court, keepers of vineyards, woods, etc. Many doubts are raised about these.

4 TANNERUS disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 72. requires three conditions for these persons to be bound to restitution. The first is that he was bound to procure such a good, or ward off such an evil, by a debt of Commutative or Distributive Justice. The second is that he was bound to procure it for that very person who has been damaged, whose cause he ought to have pleaded. The third is that the procuring of such a good was deliberately omitted, or omitted with proportionate fault. From this doctrine innumerable cases are resolved. See also Vasquez prim. 2. disp. 175. Lessius Lib. II. cap. 12. disput. 10. et 18.

TANNERUS disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 72. tres exigit conditiones, ut hi teneantur restitutioni. Prima est, ut is teneretur procurare tale bonum, vel malum arcere ex debito Iustitiae Commutativae, aut Distributivae. Secunda est, ut teneretur procurare illi numero, qui damnificatus est, cuius causam agere debuerat. Tertia est, ut deliberate omissa sit talis boni procuratio, vel cum culpa proportionata. Ex hac doctrina innumeri casus resolvuntur. Vide etiam Vasquez prim. 2. disp. 175. Lessium Lib. II. cap. 12. disput. 10. et 18.

5 WHETHER, THEREFORE, he who is the indirect cause of damage by not obstructing it, when he can and ought, is bound to restitution; many assert universally. So Angelus, and Cajetan in the summa, under the word Restitutio, Richard in 4. dist. 15. art. 5. quaest. 4. Valencia also, at the place cited, judges it probable.

AN ERGO is, qui est causa indirecta damni non impediendo, cum possit, et debeat, teneatur ad restitutionem; multi asserunt universaliter. Ita Angelus, et Caietanus summa, verbo Restitutio, Richardus in 4. dist. 15. art. 5. quaest. 4. Valentia quoque loco cit. id probabile censet.

6 OTHERS, however, as reported by Valencia, say he is bound only when he could and ought to have obstructed it out of justice; for instance, because he was Praetor, etc. So it seems D. Bonaventure holds in the Speculum, cap. 1. under the word Damnificatio, Sylvester V. Restitutio 3. Adrian IV, quaest. de Restitut. Soto Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 3. Medina quaest. 9. de rebus restitutis. Alensis 4. part. quaest. 86. num 3. art. 4 §. 7. Altissiodor lib. 4. summae, tract. de poenitent. cap. de Restit. and almost Valencia; Bassaeus num. 15. citing Peter of Navarre lib. 3. cap. 4. numero 130. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. Bonacina disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 11. Azor 3. part. lib. 4. cap. 17. Fillucius tract. 32. num. 75. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 4. quaestio 4. and art. 7.

ALII tamen apud Valentiam dicunt, teneri solum, solum, quando potuit, et debuit impedire ex iustitia; puta, quia erat Praetor, etc. Ita videtur D. Bonaventura in speculo, cap. 1. verbo Damnificatio, Sylvester V. Restitutio 3. Adtianus quarto, quaest. de Restitut. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 3. Medina quaest. 9. de rebus restitutis. Alensis 4. part. quaest. 86. num 3. art. 4 §. 7. Altissiodor lib. 4. summae, tract. de poenitent. cap. de Restit. et fere Valentia; Bassaeus num. 15. citans Petrum Nauar. lib. 3. cap. 4. numero 130. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. Bonacina disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 11. Azor 3. part. lib. 4. cap. 17. Fillucius tract. 32. num. 75. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 4. quaestio 4. et art. 7.

7 As to the keeper of the gates of woods who connives at the carrying-off of timber, many, as reported by Diana part. 2. tract. 5. resol. 54, deny that they are bound to make good the losses inflicted.

[8] THERE ARISES another question: Whether a Confessor, and others on whom the office of prohibiting unjust detentions rests, are bound to Restitution if they omit to admonish, etc. As to the Confessor, they affirm it: Summa Rosella, V. Restitutio 2. §. 5. Summa Angel. V. Restitutio, ultim. §. 5. Navarre in the Manuale, cap. 17. num. 22. and others as reported by Valencia disput. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. and Bonacina de restitut. disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 11. The same view is followed by Nunges in addit. ad 3. part. Tom. 2. quaest. 8. art. 4. dub. 5. Zanchus in the directorium confess. part. 2. praecepto 7. cap. 26. dub. 3. Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 3. Sylvester V. usura, 7. quaestio 2. and other Neoterics as reported by Diana Tom. 1. Tract. 16. resol. 1. Bassaeus num. 8.

> OCCURRIT alia quaestio: An Confessarius, et alii, quibus ex officio incumbit prohibere iniquas detentiones, teneantur Restitutioni, si omittant admonere, etc. Quo ad Confessarium affirmant Summa Rosella, V. Restitutio 2. §. 5. Summa Angel. V. Restitutio, ultim. §. 5. Nauar. in manuali, cap. 17. num. 22. et alii apud Valentiam disput. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. et Bonacinam de restitut. disput. 1. quaest. 2. punct. 11. Eandem sequitur Nungus in addit. ad 3. part. Tom. 2. quaest. 8. art. 4. dub. 5. Zanardus in directoriov confess. part. 2. praecepto 7. cap. 26. dub. 3. Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 3. Sylvester V. usura, 7. quaestio 2. aliique Neoterici apud Dianam Tom. 1. Tract. 16. resol. 1. Bassaeus num. 8.

[9] The CONTRARY opinion is that of Bonacina and others as reported by him, Filliucius tom. 1. tract. 7. cap. 12. quaest. 7. num; 37. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 10. dub. 6. Malderus 2. 2. tract. 5. cap. 3. dub. 24. Bartholomew of Saint Faustus in spec. confess. disp. 4. quaest. 121. num. 7. Aegid. Coninch. de Sacram. disp. 8. dub. 17. num. 144. Rebellius de oblig. iust. part. 2. lib. 17. quaest. ult. num. 12. and part. 1. Lib. 2. quaest. 14. sect. 8. num. 63. Diana limits this, provided the Confessor does not persuade the penitent not to make restitution. But the obligation to join restitution with not dissuading is one and the same. This indeed is taught also by Suarez tom. 4. in 3. part. disput. 32. sect. 6. and Rebellius at the place cited, Caspensis disp. 5. sect. 9. §. 1. num. 86. Sanchez Lib. 7. Decalogi, cap. 6. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 75. referring to others, Bassaeus, V. Restit. 3. §. 7. num. 16. Crousers ad cap. 7. Reg. Min. lib. 31.

> CONTRARIA sententia est Bonacinae, et aliorum apud eum, Filliucii tom. 1. tract. 7. cap. 12. quaest. 7. num. 37. Lessii Lib. 2. cap. 10. dub. 6. Malderi 2. 2. tract. 5. cap. 3. dub. 24. Bartholomaei a S. Fausto in spec. confess. disp. 4. quaest. 121. num. 7. AEgid. Coninch. de Sacram. disp. 8. dub. 17. num. 144. Rebellii de oblig. iust. part. 2. lib. 17. quaest. ult. num. 12. et part. 1. Lib. 2. quaest. 14. sect. 8. num. 63. Haec limitat Diana, dummodo Confessarius non suadeat poenitenti, ut non restituat. At una est obligatio iungendi restitutionem, et non dissuadendi. Id vero ita docent etiam Suarez tom. 4. in 3. part. disput. 32. sect. 6. et Rebellius loco citato, Caspensis disp. 5. sect. 9. §. 1. num. 86. Sanchez Lib. 7. Decalogi, cap. 6. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 75. alios referens, Bassaeus, V. Restit. 3. §. 7. num. 16. Crousers ad cap. 7. Reg. Min. lib. 31.

[10] The opinion of D. Bonaventure, as I see, is this second one; for in the Confessionale, cap. 4, where he professes to teach confessors what they are bound to do, and what penalties they incur by omitting it, he says: Attendendum igitur, quod cum sint tria genera poenitentium, primis nulla potest iniungi poenitentia utilis ad salutem. Horum autem sunt sex genera. Primi raptores, Secundi usurarii, Tertii incendiarii, Quarti fures, Quinti Simoniaci, Sexti dolosi circumventores, ut sunt perversi Iudices, advocati iniqui, testes falsi, negotiatores fraudulenti, et alii huiusmodi, quibus omnibus non potest alia iniungi poenitentia, nisi illa Evangelica, Matth. 18. Redde quod debes, et illa Apostolica, Rom. 13. Reddite omnibus debita. Et illud Ecclesiastici 4. Redde debitum tuum. Quod si hanc acceptare noluerit confitens, nulla alia iniungi potest, quae valeat ad salutem; quia, ut dicit Augustinus epist. 54. ad Macedonium 14. quaest. 6. Si res aliena, propter quam peccatum est, possit reddi, et non redditur, poenitentia non agitur; non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. He then enumerates the rest shortly after in part. 7. He indeed condemns confessors who omit the debt; but he imposes nothing about Restitution upon them.

> SENTENTIA D. Bonavent. est, ut video, haec secunda; nam in Confessionali, cap. 4. ubi profitetur docere Confessarios ea, quae tenentur facere, et quas poenas incurrant omittendo, ait: Attendendum igitur, quod cum sint tria genera poenitentium, primis nulla potest iniungi poenitentia utilis ad salutem. Horum autem sunt sex genera. Primi raptores, Secundi usurarii, Tertii incendiarii, Quarti fures, Quinti Simoniaci, Sexti dolosi circumventores, ut sunt perversi Iudices, advocati iniqui, testes falsi, negotiatores fraudulenti, et alii huiusmodi, quibus omnibus non potest alia iniungi poenitentia, nisi illa Evangelica, Matth. 18. Redde quod debes, et illa Apostolica, Rom. 13. Reddite omnibus debita. Et illud Ecclesiastici 4. Redde debitum tuum. Quod si hanc acceptare noluerit confitens, nulla alia iniungi potest, quae valeat ad salutem; quia, ut dicit Augustinus epist. 54. ad Macedonium 14. quaest. 6. Si res aliena, propter quam peccatum est, possit reddi, et non redditur, poenitentia non agitur; non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. Reliquos vero postea recenset mox part. 7. Damnat quidem confessarios, debitum omittentes; Nil autem de Restitutione illis imponit.

11 IT IS PROVED, because the obligation of restitution arises from the virtue of Justice alone; but the Confessor is bound to admonish not from his own justice, but from religion.

> PROBATUR, quia Restitutionis obligatio oritur ex sola Iustitiae virtute; At Confessarius non ex iustitia propria, sed e religione, tenetur admonere.

12 From the conditions adduced above other decisions are had. The first is that a Defendant who unjustly denies the crime in court is not bound to pay the monetary penalty due to the judge before the sentence. So Tanner. num. 76. with Adrian quodlib. 6. Navarre in the manuali, cap. 18. num. 49. Couarv. in Epitome 124. part. 2. cap. 6. §. 8. num. 10. Azor. Lib. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5. Vasquez prim. 2. disput. 175. cap. 5. against Soto Lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 6. Molina Tract. primo, tract. 2. disp. 95. The same seems to hold of witnesses, if they testify falsely. So Tanner. with Sà V. Restitutio, and Azor. at the place cited. The reason is that they are not bound out of justice to procure the good of the Judge or of the Treasury; nor has the Treasury acquired any right, under Commutative Justice, to the money before the sentence.

> Ex allatis supra conditionibus habentur aliae decisiones. Prima est, non teneri pecuniariam mulctam, iudici debitam, solvere ante sententiam, Reum, iniuste crimen in iudicio negantem. Ita Tanner. num. 76. cum Adriano quodlib. 6. Nauar. manuali, cap. 18. num. 49. Couarv. in Epitome 124. part. 2. cap. 6. §. 8. num. 10. Azor. Lib. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5. Vasquez prim. 2. disput. 175. cap. 5. contra Sotum Lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 6. Molina Tract. primo, tract. 2. disp. 95. Idem videtur de testibus, si falsum testentur. Sic Tanner. cum Sà V. Restitutio, et Azor. loco citato. Ratio est, quia non tenentur ex iustitia procurare bonum Iudicis, seu Fisci; Neque Fiscus aliquod ius ex Iustitia commutativa acquisivit ad pecunias, ante sententiam.

13 IT IS GATHERED secondly that both the Defendant and the witnesses, unjustly denying the truth, are bound to restore to the damaged party the expenses and other losses inflicted by the denial of the truth. So from the common teaching Carbo quaest. 31. Sà at the place cited, Soto Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 3. Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 9. Tanner. num. 77. For they were bound out of justice not to damage the innocent party; yet they can be excused if grave losses to themselves threaten from the confession. So Tanner. with Lessius, and Sà. They judge it probable, indeed, that Molina holds they are never bound, disput. 83. Sylvester V. Testis, Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. Vasquez speaking of the Defendant in the chapter above cap. 2. Tanner. num. 79. Because it does not so plainly appear that these are bound to it out of justice.

> COLLIGITUR secundo, tam Reum, quam testes, iniuste veritatem negantes, teneri restituere parti damnificatae expensas, et alia damna, illata ob negatam veritatem. Sic ex communi docet Carbo quaest. 31. Sà loco citato, Sotus Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 3. Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 9. Tanner. num. 77. Tenebantur enim ex iustitia, non damnificare partem innocentem: excusari tamen possunt, si gravia sibi e confessione damna immineant. Ita Tanner. cum Lessio, et Sà. Probabile imo censent, Molina nunquam teneri, disput. 83. Sylvester V. Testis, Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. Vasquez loquens de Reo supra cap. 2. Tanner. num. 79. Quia non ita liquido constat, hos ex iustitia ad id teneri.

14 IT IS GATHERED thirdly that a Judge negligent in delivering sentence is bound to restore the losses to the Republic and to the parties, but also the penalty which he would have paid to the Treasury for the Defendant had he proceeded rightly. The same they assert likewise of the fiscal officer: Sylvester V. Poena, quaest. 28. Salon art. 7. controv. 5. Carbo quaest. 31. who says it is the common opinion, and Vasquez agrees as to the fiscal officer. The reason is that out of justice these are bound to it by their office.

> COLLIGITUR tertio, Iudicem, in proferenda sententia negligentem, teneri restituere damna Reipublicae, et partibus, sed etiam mulctam, quam Fisco soluisset Rei, si rite processisset. Quod pariter de Fisco asserunt Sylvester V. Poena, quaest. 28. Salon art. 7. controv. 5. Carbo quaest. 31. qui dicit, esse communem sententiam, et quo ad Fiscalem consentit Vasquez. Ratio est, quia e iustitia ad id ex officio isti tenentur.

15 The CONTRARY, however, as to the Judge, regarding the monetary penalty to be paid to the Treasury, is held by Azor. at the place cited, ad 4. Sà V. Restitutio; Vasquez at the place cited. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 3. dub. 10. as to the fiscal officer, whom others reported by Salonius follow.

> CONTRARIUM tamen, quod ad Iudicem de poena pecuniaria, Fisco soluenda, censent Azor. loco cit. ad 4. Sà V. Restitutio; Vasquez loco cit. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 3. dub. 10. quod ad Fiscalem, quos sequuntur alii apud Salonium.

16 IT IS GATHERED fourthly that toll-collectors are bound to restitution for the neglect of a just toll; but say otherwise of the monetary penalty which would come to the Treasury if they neglected to procure it. Say the same with Bassaeus of the keepers of things and fruits, from which something is given to the Prince.

17 IT IS GATHERED fifthly that Keepers of forests, rivers, etc. are not bound to pay the penalty which would have come to the Treasury had they reported the transgressors to the Magistrate. So Sylvester V. Restit. 3. quaest. 5. §. 7. Bassaeus num. 17. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. Tanner. num. 83. against Cato and Salonius. The reason is that their office out of justice regards not the good of the Treasury, but the security and defense of the public good. Except the tributes, as I said, excerpted from these.

> COLLIGITUR quinto, Custodes Sylvarum, Fluminum, etc. non teneri solvere mulctam, quae ad Fiscum pervenisset, si transgressores ad Magistratum detulissent. Ita Sylvester V. Restit. 3. quaest. 5. §. 7. Bassaeus num. 17. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. Tanner. num. 83. contra Cathonem, et Salonium. Ratio est, quia illorum officium ex iustitia non respicit bonum Fisci, sed securitatem, et defensionem boni publici. Excipe tributa, ut dixi, hinc excerpta.

Doubt III: Whether one who has promised three or four times to restore, and has not restored, is to be absolved before restitution

1 The answer is with D. Bonaventure at the place cited, whom Fagundez follows on the seventh precept of the Decalogue, cap. 14. num 17. if the debt be public, such as is seen in usurers and the ravishers of churches, he is never to be absolved, nor even the first time, before he pays and gives security; and this on account of the scandal of the people.

> An ille, qui ter, vel quater promisit restituere, et non restituit, sit absolvendus ante restitutionem.
> Respondetur cum D. Bonavent. loco cit. quem sequitur Fagundez in septimum praeceptum Decalogi, cap. 14. num 17. si debitum sit publicum, quale respicitur in usurariis, et raptoribus Ecclesiarum, nunquam esse absolvendum, neque prima vice, antequam solvant, et dent cautionem; idque propter scandalum populi.

2 The Sainted Doctor adduces cap. 3. particula 54. the Decree of Eugenius III. against the ravishers of churches, which is found in extra de raptoribus, where he decrees this, saying:

> Apponit vero S. Doctor cap. 3. particula 54. Decretum Eugenii III. contra raptores Ecclesiarum, et habetur extra de raptoribus, ubi id decernit, dicens:

> Statuimus, ut quicumque ex his, qui violenter surrexerint in rapinam, sive in Ecclesiarum violatione manifeste deprehensus fuerit, nisi prius ablata restituit si poterit; vel emendandi firmam, et plenam fecerit securitatem, poenitentiae beneficium ei penitus denegetur. Si vero usque ad obitum in contumacia sua duraverit, et in extremis positus, remedium poenitentiae humiliter postulaverit, si emendationem, vel emendandi securitatem praestiterit, ei poenitentia, et Ecclesiastica sepultura concedatur. Qui autem in sanitate obstinata mente non poenituerit; vel emendaverit; et in morte securitatem praestare nequiverit, solemnitas poenitentiae parum prodesse videtur, sicut credimus, sed de peccato contrito viaticum non denegetur, ita tamen, ut nullus clericorum sepulturae illius intersit, nec eius eleemosynam recipere praesumat. Quod si quis presbyterorum, vel clericorum contra haec in vita, vel in morte poenitentias dare, aut sepulturae interesse, vel eorum eleemosynas accipere attentaverint, seu huiusmodi rapinae participes inventi fuerint; ordinis sui damnum irrecuperabiliter patiantur, et Ecclesiastico beneficio careant. Haec Canon.

4 But the Sainted Doctor notes, from Raymond, that this decretal is local in scope; nor are public suffrages to be denied to the penitent; yet his heirs, to whom his goods have passed, are to be compelled to satisfaction, extra de sepulturis, §. Parum prodesse, as far as the temporal punishment is concerned.

Advertit autem S. Doctor ex Raymundo, hanc decretalem esse localem; nec poenitenti suffragia publica sunt neganda; eius tamen haeredes, ad quos bona eius pervenerint, sunt ad satisfactionem compellendi, extra de sepulturis, §. Parum prodesse, appa quantum ad poenam temporalem.

5 Then, if Excommunication has been imposed upon the non-payer, as it is said to be imposed in the Tridentine, sess. 25. cap. 22. upon those who do not pay Tithes, he is not to be absolved even the first time, unless he pays, or, if he cannot, gives a pledge of security.

Deinde, si Excommunicatio imposita sit non solventi, ut dicitur imponendo in Tridentino, sess. 25. cap. 22. non solventi Decimas, nec primo absolvendus est, nisi solvat, et si non potest, cautionem praebeat securitatis.

6 He adds thirdly that in the ordinary cases he who has three times failed to carry out the promise is considered to be trifling; yet there may be some circumstance of person, place, etc. such that it can seem to the Confessor, who needs prudence, that he should be absolved. So also Sayrus in clav. reg. lib. 10. tract. 5. cap. 5. num. 26. and others as reported by him.

Addit tertio, quod in casibus ordinarii ille, qui ter non exequutus est promissum, censetur ludere; possit tamen esse aliqua circumstantia personae, loci, etc. ut Confessario, cui necessaria est prudentia, videri possit absolvendus. Ita etiam Sayrus in clav. reg. lib. 10. tract. 5. cap. 5. num. 26. et alii apud eum.

7 From what has been said you have, also, that he who in life is unwilling to restore, but reserves the committing of it to his heirs at death, is not to be absolved. So the Sainted Doctor at the place cited, and D. Thom. quaest. 62. art. ultim. Toletanus in summa, lib. 5. cap. 24. Navarre Lib. 4. de restitut. cap. 12. num. 72. Soto lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 4. Sylvester V. restitut. 5. num. 7. and others to whom Fagundez subscribes at the place cited, num. 19.

Ex dictis habes, etiam eum, qui in vita non vult restituere, sed reservat ad mortem id committere haeredibus, non esse absolvendum. Ita S. Doctor loco citato, et D. Thom. quaest. 62. art. ultim. Toletanus in summa, lib. 5. cap. 24. Navarrus Lib. 4. de restitut. cap. 12. num. 72. Sotus lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 4. Sylvester V. restitut. 5. num. 7. et alii, quibus subscribit Fagundez loco citato, num. 19.

8 The reason. Fagundez follows D. Bonaventure in the speculum animae, cap. 2. §. 4 and in the Confessionale, cited by name, because he who unjustly retains is always in act a debtor bound to pay, and unjust, if he does not pay.

Ratio. Fagundez est D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2. §. 4 et in Confessionali, voce adductus, quia qui iniuste retinet, semper est in actu ad solvendum debitor, et iniquus, si non solvit.

9 But in no case is a Confessor who omits the admonition bound to restitution.

In nullo autem casu, si monere omittat Confessarius, tenetur ad restitutionem.

10 For you will say to Nunges: he is bound out of justice to admonish the penitent: Therefore, omitting it, he sins against justice.

Dices enim Nungo: tenetur ex iustitia admonere poenitentem: Ergo id omittens, peccat contra iustitiam.

11 Diana answers that he is bound out of Justice, a debt owed from religion by the Sacrament of penance, which regards the penitent in order to spiritual salvation; in this the confessarius who omits to admonish indeed falls short, but he does not fall short in any obligation of justice which regards the temporal good of the creditor; Valencia subscribes disput. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. Tannerus quaest.

cit. I confess that in other cases, where there is a proper obligation of justice, the debt of restitution is found, for instance in the Praetor, Governor, in the Keepers of the chains, etc.

> Respondet Diana, teneri ex Iustitia, Sacramento poenitentiae debita a religione, quae respicit poenitentem in ordine ad spiritualem salutem, in qua deficit quidem omittens confessarius monere, sed non deest in aliqua obligatione iustitiae, quae respicit temporale bonum creditoris; Subscribit Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. Tannerus quaest. cit. Fateor in reliquis, ubi est obligatio propria iustitiae, inveniri debitum restitutionis, puta in Praetore, Gubernatore, in Custodibus vinculum, etc.

12 From the second head, namely of another's property, arises the obligation of restitution.

> Ex secundo capite, nempe rei alienae, oritur restitutionis obligatio.

13 But Valencia at the place cited, and Cassensis disput. 1. sect. 4. note, that even goods possessed in good faith, when they are acknowledged to be another's, one is bound to restitution; for no one ought to be made richer by another's loss, according to rule 48 in 6. and the Law Nam hoc natura, ff. de conditione indeb.

> Advertunt autem Valentia loco citato, et Cassensis disput. 1. sect. 4. tem, sive etiam bona fide possessam, cum agnoscitur aliena, ad restitutionem teneri; nemo enim alterius iactura ditior fieri debet ex regula 48 in 6. Lege Nam hoc natura, ff. de conditione indeb.

14 But the Doctors establish this general rule: As long as the thing endures in its own species and substance, it ought to be restored as itself; but if it has been consumed, there ought to be restored that by which you have been made richer, or in which you have preserved your own property, for instance food, clothing, etc.

> Statuitur autem haec regula generalis a Doctoribus: Quam diu durat res in propria specie, et substantia, debet ea restitui; si vero consumpta sit, restitui debet id in quo locupletior es factus, vel rem tuam servasti, puta cibos, vestes, etc.

15 Yet they raise the doubt: Whether he who in good faith buys a stolen thing from a thief, and resells the same to another, is bound to give back the price to that buyer; and they answer in the negative: Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 5. Rebellius part. 1. lib. 2. quaest. 3. Cassensis at the place cited. num. 31. Cajetan V. Restitutio. Navarre in the manuali, cap. 17. num. 7.

> Dubitant vero: An qui bona fide a fure emit rem furatam, et eandem alii revendidit; huic emptori teneatur reddere pretium; Et negative respondent Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 5. Rebellius part. 1. lib. 2. quaest. 3. Cassensis loco cit. num. 31. Caietanus V. Restitutio. Navar. in manuali, cap. 17. num. 7.

16 The opposed opinion is that of Valencia puncto 3. Soto lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 2. that such a one is bound to restore the price to the third buyer, indeed in the case in which the buyer knows, or seems to have knowledge, that the thing is another's. For if he does not seem likely to know it, and no comparison is made, there is no need to restore anything to him, since otherwise no damage threatens him.

> Opposita sententia est Valentiae puncto 3. Soti lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 7. art. 2. talem teneri restituere tertio emptori pretium, in casu quidem, quo emptor sciat, aut cognitivus videatur, rem esse alienam. Nam si non videatur id sciturus, neque compareat, non est opus illi quidquam restituere, cum nullum ei immineat alioqui damnum.

17 To my mind, following D. Bonaventure in the speculum animae, cap. 2. the former opinion seems more likely; for it seems to compel only purchases and sales of bad faith to restitution; but the obligation remains with the thief.

> Mihi ad mentem D. Bonaventurae in speculo animae, cap. 2. videtur magis prior opinio; nam solas emptiones, et venditiones malae fidei videtur cogere ad restitutionem; sed manet apud furem obligatio.

18 The reason is that the price, which alone seems subject to Restitution, has not been exchanged formally with the thing, but with the price given by me to that first seller from whom I bought; and accordingly the obligation still remains with the first seller.

> Ratio est, quia pretium, quod solum videtur Restitutioni obnoxium, non est commutatum cum re formaliter, sed cum pretio, a me dato illi primo, a quo emi, atque adeo obligatio adhuc remanet apud primum venditorem.

19 I ADD indeed, with D. Bonaventure at the place cited, Caspensis, num. 61. and others, that the thing ought to be grave, for restitution to be owed. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 23. num. 160. Azor 3. part. lib. 4. cap. 8. Filliucius tract. 32. num. 31. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 7. num. 24. Sylvius quaest. 62. art. 4.

> ADDO vero cum D. Bonavent. loco citato, Caspensi, num. 61. et aliis, rem debere esse gravem, ut restitutionem exigat. Sanchez lib. 2. cap. 23. num. 160. Azor 3. part. lib. 4. cap. 8. Filliucius tract. 32. num. 31. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 7. num. 24. Sylvius quaest. 62. art. 4.

20 BUT the debt of restitution can arise ex re, by the just acceptance, by contract or acceptance, of a thing owed to another, and therefore in these it seems to arise more from the thing itself; likewise ex re by an unjust acceptance, as when the thing is still in the hands of the thief, in whom the obligation is greater; for in these cases of unjust acceptance, by which ownership is not transferred, as in theft, rapine, etc. the detainer is always in mora, and sins mortally by detaining, even though he repents having accepted it; provided, however, the possibility and opportunity of restoring be present. Whence Saint Augustine, epistola 54. Non dimittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. But in those cases in which ownership passes to the receiver, as in sale, loan, etc. no one is in mora except according to the conditions attached, as the Sainted Bonaventure disserus at the place cited of the speculum.

> POTEST vero oriri debitum restitutionis ex re, accepta contractu, seu acceptione iusta rei, quae debetur alteri, et ideo in his magis videtur oriri ex re ipsa; similiter ex re, et iniusta acceptione, veluti cum res adhuc est apud furem, in quo est maior obligatio; nam in his casibus acceptionis iniquae, ex quibus non transfertur dominium, sicuti in furto, rapina, etc. semper est detentor in mora, et peccat mortaliter detinendo, licet poeniteat accepisse; si tamen adsit restituendi possibilitas, atque opportunitas. Unde S. Augustinus epistola 54. Non dimittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. In his autem, in quibus dominium transit in accipientem, sicut in venditione, mutuo, etc. non est quis in mora, nisi secundum conditiones appositas, ut disserit S. Bonavent. loco cit. speculi.

21 THERE are indeed also contracts in which ownership is not transferred, as Commodatum, Precarium, Locatum, Depositum, and Pledge, as I said in the preceding disputation, question 10.

> SUNT quidem et contractus, in quibus non transfertur dominium, ut Commodatio, Precarium, Locatum, Depositum, et Pignus, ut dixi disputatione praeced. quaestione 10.

22 One must know that some contracts are referred to the utility of the receiver alone, as mutuum, donation, commendatum, and precarium. Others regard the utility of the giver alone, as depositum and mandatum. Others regard the utility of both contracting parties, as sale, letting, and likewise pledge, and also depositum, when some wage is given on account of the keeping.

> Oportet scire, e contractibus aliquos referri in utilitatem solius accipientis, ut mutuum, donatio, commendatum, et precarium. Alii respiciunt utilitatem solius dantis, ut depositum, et mandatum. Alii respiciunt utriusque contrahentis utilitatem, ut venditio, locatio, et pignus similiter, et depositum, quando aliqua merces datur ratione custodiae.

23 IT IS ASKED, then; when is anyone bound to restitution from a contract when the thing perishes; but the thing can perish by chance, by fraud, or by negligence.

QUAERITUR autem; quando tenetur aliquis ad restitutionem ex contractu pereunte re; potest autem perire res, vel casu, vel dolo, vel negligentia.

24 IT IS CERTAIN first that from no right does an obligation to restore arise from a contract when the thing perishes by mere chance (unless that is included in the contract:) for so in Canon Law cap. ultimo de commodato, and cap. 2. de deposito, and in Civil Law L. 27. ff. de reg. iuris; and Leg. 18. ff. commodati, and Leg. 22. Cod. de negotiis gestis. The reason is that, unless otherwise provided in the contract, the contracting parties are bound only to that which is in their power, which chance happenings are not. Yet these things can be included in contracts, as the Laws cited affirm. Likewise this obligation can arise from another head, when, for instance, someone was in mora of restitution, or made illicit use, for instance, if he carries the silver lent him onto a ship, to dine on the Lake, and for these causes it perishes.

CERTUM est primo, ex nullo iure oriri obligationem e contractu restituendi, quando res solo casu fortuito perit (nisi in contractu id includatur:) sic enim Iure Canonico cap. ultimo de commodato, et cap. 2. de deposito, et in Iure Ciuili L. 27. ff. de reg. iuris; et Leg. 18. ff. commodati, et Leg. 22. Cod. de negotiis gestis. Ratio est, quia, si aliter non explicetur in contractu, tenentur contrahentes solum ad id, quod est in eorum potestate, quales non sunt casus fortuiti. Posse tamen includi in contractibus afferunt Iura allegata. Similiter ex alio capite potest haec oriri obligatio, quando, v. g. aliquis fuit in mora restitutionis, vel usu illicito, puta, si argentum commodatum portet in navim, ad coenandum in Lacu, et ob eas causas pereat.

25 IT IS CERTAIN also that if the thing perishes through fraud, or through grave, or serious fault, he is bound to restitution: It is evident from the Canon and Civil Law cited.

CERTUM est etiam, si res pereat ex dolo, aut lata, seu gravi culpa, teneri ad restitutionem: Patet ex Iure Canonico, et Ciuili allatis.

26 SIMILARLY, when the contract can be freely revoked by him who freely hands over his own thing to another, then he who has another's thing is bound to restitution only in fraud and grave fault, which is serious. It is proved from the Law 23. ff. de reg. Iuris, where the Jurist says: Contractus quidam dolum tantum recipiunt, scilicet Depositum, et Precarium.

SIMILITER quando contractus libere revocari potest ab illo, qui libere suam rem alteri tradit, tunc qui rem alienam habet, tenetur ad restitutionem solum in dolo, et lata culpa, quae est gravis. Probatur ex Lege 23. ff. de reg. Iuris, ubi Iurisconsultus ait: Contractus quidam dolum tantum recipiunt, scilicet Depositum, et Precarium.

27 BUT when the contract cannot be revoked, if it regards the utility of both contracting parties, it obliges the receiver in respect of grave and light fault; but if it is for the utility of the receiver alone, it obliges him even in respect of the lightest fault. It is proved from cap. 1. de commodo, and the Civil Law Leg. 5. et 18. ff. commodati, and Leg. 1. ff. de obligationibus.

QUANDO vero contractus non potest revocari, si respicit utilitatem utriusque contrahentis, accipientem obligat de culpa gravi, et levi; si autem sit in utilitatem solius accipientis, obligat eum, etiam de culpa levissima. Probatur ex cap. 1. de commodo, et Iur. ciuil. Leg. 5. et 18. ff. commodati, et Leg. 1. ff. de obligationibus.

Question IV: To whom restitution is to be made

[1] ALL agree that restitution is owed by him from whom the thing was accepted: Four conditions, however, being laid down.

> CONVENIUNT omnes, illi restituendum, a quo res accepta est: Positis tamen quatuor conditionibus.

[2] The FIRST is that he from whom it was accepted have a right to the thing, either as Owner, or as steward, or keeper.

> PRIMA est, ut is, a quo accepta sit, habeat ad rem ius, vel ut Dominus, vel ut dispensator, aut custos.

[3] The SECOND, provided that no loss is going to accrue from it to him from whom it was accepted, nor to another, for instance, that he is going to squander the thing, or that others are going to use it for crime.

> SECUNDA, dummodo inde damnum ei, a quo accepta est, neque alii sit obventurum, puta, ut dissipaturus rem illam, vel ea usuros ad crimen.

[4] The THIRD, if the giving was not of itself unjust, as in the case of a simoniac; yet if it was joined from the origin with an external sin, for instance, because it is the price of fornication, it is no obstacle. Yet even to a simoniac restitution can be made, Caspensis says sect. 1. before a sentence is delivered against him by the judge. So also Navarre Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 2.

> TERTIA, si datio non fuit per se iniusta, ut in Simoniaco; si tamen coniuncta fuerit ex origine cum peccato extero, puta, quia est pretium fornicationis, nil obest. Tamen etiam Simoniaco posse restitui ait Caspensis sect. 1. antequam a iudice feratur sententia contra eum. Ita et Nauar. Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 2.

[5] The FOURTH, that the restitution be made to him from whom you received it, either by yourself, or through another. See Valencia puncto 4.

> QUARTA, ut fiat restitutio ei, a quo accepisti, vel per se, vel per alium. Vide Valentia puncto 4.

[6] HERE a question occurs: Whether another's thing, accepted from a thief, ought always to be restored to the true Owner: The reason of the doubt is that it may have been accepted from him in good faith: Therefore it is to be given back to him, and the price paid is to be recovered; and so think Alens. 4. part. quaest. 86. memb. 3. art. 5. Summa angl. V. Restitutio, Gabriel 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. dub. 5. Navarre Manuali, cap. 17. num. 9. Valencia at the place cited, provided it be given back to him to redeem his own price, not that the thief may retain it. This seems to me true, against some as reported by Valencia at the place cited and Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, Lib. 7. cap. 20. My reason is that I am bound to look first to my own innocence, rather than to another's; and to my own family property, rather than to another's; why, therefore, should I lose my own price without profit, so that another's thing may be restored?

> HIC occurrit quaestio: An res aliena, accepta a fure, debeat semper vero Domino restitui: Ratio dubii est, quia potest ab eo accepta fuisse bona fide: Ergo ei reddenda, et excutiendum pretium datum; et ita sentiunt Alens. 4. part. quaest. 86. memb. 3. art. 5. Summa angl. V. Restitutio, Gabriel 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. dub. 5. Nauar. Manuali, cap. 17. num. 9. Valentia loco cit. dummodo ei reddatur ad redimendum suum pretium, non ut fur eam retineat. Haec mihi vera videtur contra aliquos apud Valentiam loco cit. et Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, Lib. 7. cap. 20. Ratio mea est, quia teneor prius innocentiae meae prospicere, quam alienae; et meae rei familiari, quam alienae, cur ergo pretium meum amittam insons, ut res aliena reddatur.

7 Yet Peter Eligius Bassaeus says V. Restit. 4. §. 2. num. 7. if he does not find the thief, or the thief, when found, is unwilling to give back the price, the thing is to be restored to the Owner. So Peter of Navarre lib. 3. cap. 4. num. 191. Filliucius tract. 32. num. 85. Sayrus lib. 10. tract. 2. num. 17. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 14. dub 3.

> AIT tamen Petrus Eligius Bassaeus V. Restit. 4. §. 2. num. 7. Si furem non inveniat, vel inventus nolit reddere pretium, restituendam rem Domino. Sic Petrus Nauar. lib. 3. cap. 4. num. 191. Filliucius tract. 32. num. 85. Sayrus lib. 10. tract. 2. num. 17. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 14. dub 3.

8 But why should I without profit deprive myself of my own price, when the debt is in the thief? I know this can be done in the external forum. Let him act meanwhile; the thief can be found and compelled.

> At cur ego infons meo me pretio privabo, cum debitum sit in fure? Scio id posse in foro externo. Agat interim, potest reperiri fur, et cogi.

9 Meanwhile I am not bound to give it back in conscience, as Filliucius says tract. 32. num. 84. and others, although others disagree.

> Interim non teneor reddere in conscientia, ut ait Filliucius tract. 32. num. 84. et alii*, etsi alii repugnent.*

10 UNCERTAIN debts arising from a lawful contract, with the creditor unknown, or too remote, you may retain; for since by Canon Law alone uncertain debts, unjustly contracted and from a wicked acquisition, for instance from usury, devolve upon the poor, I do not see why these should be paid. See Peter of Navarre lib. 4. cap. 1. num. 46. Layman lib. 3. sect. 3. tract. 2. cap. 9. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 14. num. 58. Bassaeus num. 4.

> DEBITA incerta ex licito contractu, ignorato creditore, vel nimis remoto, potes retinere; nam cum solo iure Canonico devolvantur ad pauperes debita incerta, iniuste contracta e prava acquisitione, puta ex usuris; non video cur haec sint solvenda. Vide Petrum Nauar. lib. 4. cap. 1. num. 46. Layman lib. 3. sect. 3. tract. 2. cap. 9. Lessium lib. 2. cap. 14. num. 58. Bassaeum num. 4.

11 THE Sainted Doctor indicates these rules in the Confessionale, cap. 4. part. 2. concluding with that epiphonema of the Apostle 13. Reddite omnibus debita, etc.

> HAS regulas indicat S. Doctor in Confessionali, cap. 4. part. 2. concludens illo apostoli epiphonemate 13. Reddite omnibus debita, etc.

Question V: What ought to be restored

1 This question contains many things, and those various, to be discussed; for since the things subject to restitution are goods, and those goods are of many kinds, namely goods of fortune, as riches; of the body, as the integrity of honor and of fame, and goods of the soul; and among these goods some are of difficult restitution, as the health of the body, one must treat of all of them: Whether they are included under the debt of justice; or whether they are to be compensated by other goods.

> Quidnam debeat restitui.
> Multa, eaque varia haec quaestio continet discutienda; nam cum res, restitutioni obnoxiae, sint bona, eaque plurima sint, scilicet fortunae, ut opes; corporis, ut incolumitas honoris, et famae, atque bona animae; et inter haec bona sint

aliqua difficilis restitutionis, ut sanitas corporis, oportet de omnibus differere: An includantur sub debito iustitiae; an vero aliis bonis sint compensanda.

2 Again, secondly, the debt of restitution can arise from the mode in which the things themselves are held, and thus the equality to be made can fall upon the mode by which the thing was acquired, as through various contracts, through donation, etc. Likewise through hunting, fowling, fishing, digging, and through some shameful action. Therefore these also must be treated of. Thirdly, from goods impeded to someone. These I shall discuss one by one.

Rursus potest secundo oriri debitum restitutionis ex modo, quo res ipsae habentur, et ita aequalitas facienda, cadere potest supra modum, quo res acquisita est, ut per varios contractus, per donationem, etc. Itidem per venationem, aucupium, piscationem, effossionem, et per actionem aliquam turpem. Ideo de his etiam differendum. Tertio ex impeditis alicui bonis. Haec singula disseram.

Subquestion I: What is to be restored, considering the things that are our goods

1 The more excellent the goods taken away, the stricter the obligation of restitution that weighs upon one; provided those goods be of such a nature as to be capable of being restored. Among these goods, moreover, some are dearer to the possessor than others; for goods of fame usually outweigh goods of fortune in everyone's estimation, and indeed those are in themselves to be preferred. Goods of the Soul, too, as much as the soul itself surpasses the body, are deservedly considered better; from these goods, therefore, unjustly taken away, arises a varied obligation of restitution; for some there are which, when taken away, perish; others, however, remain, so that the same things can be restored. These I shall weigh one by one through the doubts.

Quid sit restituendum, spectatis rebus, quae sunt bona nostra.

Quo excellentiora bona auferuntur, eo strictior restituendi incumbit obligatio; modo ea bona talis sint naturae, ut restitui queant, Inter haec autem bona, alia aliis sunt chariora possidenti; Bona etenim famae plerumque apud omnes solent praeponderare bonis fortunae, et quidem in se illa praeferenda sunt. Bona etiam Animae, quantum et ipsa anima corpus superat, meliora merito putantur; ex his itaque bonis, inique ablatis, nascitur varia restituendi obligatio; quaedam enim sunt, quae dum auferuntur, intereunt: quaedam vero remanent, ita ut eadem possint restitui. Haec singillatim per dubitationes expendam.

Doubt I: Whether the goods of fortune are to be restored in the same way

1 It is certain, and beyond controversy, that goods of fortune, the same ones, if they exist, even if consumable by use, are to be restored as the same in number, unless perhaps thereby a hidden sin of the sinner would be made manifest, or some great inconvenience would follow, as Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5. §. 1. Navarre in the Manuali, cap. 17. num. 24. notes; or unless the creditor is content with another thing, as is found in Leg. eum a quo, and Leg. manifesti, Cod. de solut.

An bona fortunae sint eadem restituenda.

Certum est, et extra controversiam, bona fortunae eadem, si extent, esto usu consumptibilia, esse restituenda eadem numero, nisi forte inde peccator occultus manifestaretur, aut sequeretur magnum aliquod incommodum, ut notat Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5. §. 1. Nauar. in Manuali, cap. 17. num. 24. aut nisi creditor sit alia re contentus, ut habetur Leg. eum a quo, et Leg. manifesti, Cod. de solut.

2 But if the thing no longer exists, satisfaction ought to be made in equivalent. And if the thing is consumable by use, it ought to be restored as the same, if it exists; or another of the same species, and equally good; or in money. Nor is the thing only owed, but also the fruits of the thing, as the Sainted Bonaventure 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. says; and I have said enough about these also above.

> Si autem res non extet, debet fieri solutio in aequivalenti. Et si res est usu consumptibilis, debet restitui eadem, si extet; vel alia eiusdem speciei, et aeque bona; vel pecunia. Nec res solum, sed et fructus rei, ut ait S. Bonavent. 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. sunt debiti, et de his satis etiam supra dixi.

Doubt II: In what manner restitution is to be made for goods of the body

1 All agree that one who mutilates, kills, breaks limbs, or renders a man's body useless is held to make restitution of all the damages that follow from these deeds; and if the man cannot be restored by medical treatment, the wrongdoer is held to restore an equivalent in money. Thus the Saintly Doctor in the place cited and in Spec. animae cap. 1; D. Thom. art. 2. ad 1; Richardus in 4. dist. 15. art. 5. quaest. 2; Sylvest. V. restit. 3; Soto Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3; Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5. §. 1; Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 4; Carbo quaest. 15, and others commonly among these.

2 Wherefore if the man mutilated or killed was earning by his own industry, reparation must be made out of the goods of the assailant, even if the assailant is dead; and if the slain man was bound in justice to support certain persons, the assailant will be bound to provide for them, as Sotus loco cit. and Valentia loco cit. say against Scotus 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3 and Adrianus de Restit.

> Quare si mutilatus, vel occisus erat in lucrando ex industria, resarciendum est in bonis percussoris, etiam defuncti: Et si occisus aliquos ex iustitia alere tenebatur, tenebitur eis percussor providere, ut ait Sotus loco cit. Valentia loco cit. contra Scotum 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. et Adrianum de Restit.

3 Sotus adds that somewhat less must be rendered, at the judgment of a good man, to the heirs of the mutilated or killed man than he himself would have earned, in view of the fact that it is less to have something in hope than in reality; for the man who was killed might have died for another cause, and the man mutilated might have been disabled in some other way. Wherefore Valentia admonishes that diligent consideration be given to age, health, etc., as Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 6 and others also observe.

> Addit Sotus*, aliquanto minus reddendum, arbitrio boni viri, mutilati, vel occisi haeredibus, quam is esset lucraturus, attento, quod minus est habere quidpiam in spe, quam in re: siquidem poterat is, qui occisus est, aliam ob causam mori, et is, qui mutilatus est alio modo debilitari. Quare monet* Valentia*, ut diligens habeatur consideratio aetatis, valetudinis, etc. ut observant etiam* Caspensis disp. 3. sect. 6. et alii.

4 From all this it appears that what Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 19. dub. ult. and Valentia loco cit. say is true, namely that although one who kills a nobleman sins more than one who kills a hired laborer who would have earned nothing by his labor or industry, yet the killer of such a hired laborer is bound to more.

> Ex his autem apparet, verum esse id, quod aiunt Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 19. dub. ult. Valentia loco cit. nempe, quamvis plus peccet occidens nobilem, nihil suo labore, vel industria lucraturum, quam occidens hominem mercenarium, tamen ad plus obligari occidentem mercenarium talem.

5 The Saintly Doctor in Speculo animae, cap. 1. v. Damnificatio observes that not only the slayer, but also one who commands, helps, or counsels is held to restitution; yet not one who fails to prevent when he ought out of Charity; indeed he does not even sin mortally if for some reason he desists from removing the slayer — for instance, if he fears the slayer may break in against himself. But if he permits a man to be killed out of hatred, he is not held to restitution unless he himself is bound in justice to prevent it.

Observat vero S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. v. Damnificatio*, teneri restitutioni non solum interfectorem, sed praecipientem, iuvantem, consulentem; non tamen eum, qui non impedit, cum debeat ex Charitate; imo neque peccare mortaliter, si aliqua ratione desistat a removendo occisorem; puta, si timeat, ne contra se irrumpat; quod si ex odio etiam sinat occidi hominem, non teneri ad restitutionem, nisi ipse ex iustitia teneatur impedire.*

6 Next observe that damages can be exacted in conscience immediately to the point of equality, but not yet that penalty of restitution which is prescribed by law; for by means of that law he must await the judge's sentence, as we have in Leg. ex iudiciorum, ff. de accusationibus.

Deinde observa, damna in conscientia posse illico exigi ad aequalitatem, non tamen eam poenam restitutionis, quae a lege praescribitur; per haec enim expectare debet iudicis sententiam, ut habetur Leg. ex iudiciorum, ff. de accusationibus.

7 They dispute, however: whether compensation must also be made in money, or the like, for the injuries of killing, mutilation, etc.

Disputant vero: An etiam iniuriae illatae occisionis, mutilationis, etc. debeat fieri compensatio in pecuniis, vel simili.

8 The first opinion is negative. Nauarri in manuali, cap. 15. num. 21; Azorii, Ostiensis. Thus Caspensis loco cit. num. 51; Couar. lib. 2. var. cap. 10; Petrus Nauar. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 80; Gomez lib. 3. variarum, cap. 6; Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 141.

Prima opinio est negativa Nauarri in manuali, cap. 15. num. 21. Azorii, Ostiensis. Ita Caspensis loco cit. num. 51. Couar. lib. 2. var. cap. 10. Petrus Nauar. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 80. Gomez lib. 3. variarum, cap. 6. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 141.

9 The second opinion is affirmative. Thus D. Thom. art. 2. ad 1; Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3; Richardus ibi, art. 5. quaest. 2; Adrianus 4. de restit. quaest. ultim.; Maior in 4. eadem dist. quaest. 14; Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3; Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5. §. 1; Carbo quaest. 12; Lopez p. p. quaest. 47; Angles 4. de restit.; Salon quaest. 62. art. 2.

Secunda sententia est assertiva. Ita D. Thom. art. 2. ad 1. Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Richardus ibi, art. 5. quaest. 2. Adrianus 4. de restit. quaest. ultim. Maior in 4. eadem dist. quaest. 14. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5. §. 1. Carbo quaest. 12. Lopez p. p. quaest. 47. Angles 4. de restit. Salon quaest. 62. art. 2.

10 To me the negative opinion appears truer. It is proved by the doctrine of D. Bonaventure. Restitution is a part of satisfaction, or a species of it, as S. Bonavent. 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultim. shows, et in spec. animae. But satisfaction must hold a proportion to the offense, and no one Satisfies unless he Restitutes as much as he took away. From this it follows that Satisfaction and Restitution must be made from proportionate goods; but money cannot be made proportionate to the good of a life taken away: Therefore.

> Mihi negativa verior apparet. Probatur doctrina D. Bonavent. Restitutio est pars satisfactionis, seu species eius, ut ostendit S. Bonavent. 4. dist. 15. quaest. ultim. et in spec. animae. Satisfactio autem debet proportionem offensae, et nullus Satisfacit, nisi Restituat tantum, quantum abstulit. Ex quo, sequitur, Satisfactionem, et Restitutionem esse debere ex bonis proportionatis; sed pecunia non potest proportionari bono vitae ablatae: Ergo.

11 This is the doctrine of S. Bonaventure in 3. dist. 20. quaest. 6 et in 4. dist. 15. part. 2. quaest. cit. It rests, moreover, upon the Laws; for by the Lege finali, ff. de iis, qui deiecit. vel effud. and the L. Liber homo, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam, and the L. ex hac, ff. si quadrupes pauperiem fecisse dicatur, afficitur, it is laid down that a free man cannot be valued at any price; and that a free body receives no estimation, as is had in the L. citata, L. homo, et L. ex hac, where it is added that nothing can be demanded for a free man even if he is killed.

> Haec est doctrina S. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 20. quaest. 6. et in 4. dist. 15. part. 2. quaest. cit. Innititur vero Legibus; nam Lege finali, ff. de iis, qui deiecit. vel effud. et L. Liber homo, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam, et L. ex hac, ff. si quadrupes pauperiem fecisse dicatur, afficitur*, hominem liberum, nullo pretio aestimari posse; Et corpus liberum nullam recipere aestimationem, habetur* L. citata, L. homo, et L. ex hac*, ubi additur, nihil posse peti pro homine libero etiamsi occidatur.*

12 Valentia answers that the Laws conclude only that this is true from the nature of the thing; yet if the injured man for a reasonable cause is content, satisfaction can be made to his very life by money.

> Respondet Valentia, Leges solum concludere, id verum esse ex natura rei; si tamen laesus ex rationabili causa contentus sit, posse satisfieri, pecunia ipsi vitae.

13 But it is beside the point to call that a restitution which is made with things unfit for compensation — e.g. to restore reputation with money, as Sylvester noted V. Detractio, quaest. 4.

> At extra rem est, vocare illam restitutionem, quae fit rebus ineptis ad compensationem, v. g. pecunia restituere famam, ut notavit Sylvester V. Detractio, quaest. 4.

14 Valentia answers with D. Thomas ad 2. that when restitution cannot be made in the same genus, it can be made in another.

> Respondet Valentia cum D. Thom. ad 2. quod quando non potest fieri restitutio in eodem genere, potest fieri in alio.

15 But he does not answer the point, because although restitution could be made in diverse kinds — say, the restitution of a field through a price — still it cannot be made except according to a reasonable estimation of things, as Valentia himself says. But there are many things that cannot be estimated by other things: the soul by money, or reputation by gold; for it is of a higher order, incomparable, as it is said Proverb. 22: Melius est bonum nomen, quam divitiae multae — as I shall show in the dub. sequenti.

> Sed non respondet ad rem, quia, licet posset fieri te diversa, puta Restitutio agri per pretium, tamen non potest fieri, nisi secundum rationabilem rerum aestimationem; ut ipse ait Valentia; At multa sunt, quae aliis rebus nequeunt aestimari, ut anima pecuniis, famaque auro; nam est Ordinis altioris incomparabilis, ut dicitur Proverb. 22. Melius est bonum nomen, quam divitiae multae*, ut ostendam* dub. sequenti.

16 Valentia objects first, and Tannerus, from Exodi 21: If he who is struck rises again and walks abroad, he who struck him shall be quit, yet so that he make restitution of his charges and the physicians' fees. By this law it is enacted that if the man struck has not recovered, the assailant must make greater restitution — clearly even for death or deformity.

> Obiicit primo Valentia, et Tannerus id Exodi 21. Si percussus ab altero incolumis surrexerit, percutiens sit innocens, ita tamen, ut impensas eius, et operas in medicos restituat. Hac lege sancitur, ut qui percussus non convaluerit, plus restituere debeat percussor, nimirum etiam pro morte, vel deformatione.

17 It is answered that the same place sets forth what penalty is owed if the man struck dies: he shall die the death. This is confirmed, for further on, when it speaks of the death imposed on a goring ox, it declares: But if a price be laid upon him, he shall give for his soul whatever is demanded. But if the owner of the ox was aware beforehand of that vice, he himself shall be killed, since according to the precept he did not confine it.

> Respondetur, ibidem poni quae poena debeatur, si moriatur percussus: Morte moriatur. Confirmatur, nam infra, cum de morte, imposita Bovi cornupetae, loquitur, declarat: Quod si pretium fuerit ei impositum, dabit pro anima sua quidquid fuerit postulatum: At si Dominus bovis homicidae fuerit praescius eius vitii, ipse occidetur, cum iuxta praeceptum, illum non incluserit.

18 Scotus and Tannerus object second that one who kills another's Ox or Dog must make some restitution for that Ox or Dog killed. Therefore much more must one who deprives a Man of life or health make some restitution for this very thing. And not to notice this (say Scotus, Tannerus, and Adrianus) is foolish.

> Obiicit secundo Scotus, et Tannerus, qui occidit Bovem, vel Canem alterius, debet aliquid restituere pro Bove illo, vel Cane occiso. Ergo multo magis, qui Hominem privat vita, vel incolumitate, debet pro hoc ipso aliquid restituere. Et hoc non animadvertere (aiunt Scotus, Tannerus, et Adrianus) esse fatuum.

19 But the comparison is absurd to me; for an Ox and a Dog are purchasable at a price, nor will any owner of a Dog receive money for the injury of the Dog's death insofar as it was his owner's — but only for the estimation of the Dog and Ox for use. Moreover, satisfactions are exacted from the slayer because he did not fear the Lord of the animal, and the injuries of the world bring contempt upon that contemning slayer.

> Sed insulsa mihi est comparatio; nam Bos, et Canis sunt emibiles pretio, neque erit aliquis Dominus Canis, qui pro illata iniuria mortis Canis, quatenus erat Domini, accipiat pecuniam, sed solum pro aestimatione Canis, et Bovis ad usum. De reliquo Satisfactiones exigunt in occidente, eo, quod is Dominum animalis non est reveritus, et mundani iniurias afferunt pro contemptu, ipsi contemnenti occisori.

Doubt III: Whether, and how, restitution of fame, and honor, is to be made

1 That reputation is a good having marketable value, the taking away of which obliges in justice to restitution, is certain. For reputation is good estimation among others, of which Proverb. 22: Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae. From this S. Bonaventure p. p. Centil. sect. 13 deduces that the detractor is held under greater obligation to Restitution than the thief, which Valentia thereupon noted disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5.

> An, et quomodo RESTITUTIO Famae, et Honoris sit facienda.

Famae esse bonum appretiabile, quod ablatum cogit ex iustitia ad restitutionem, certum est. Est enim fama, bona aestimatio apud alios, de qua Proverb. 22. Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae. Ex quo deducit S. Bonavent. p. p. Centil. sect. 13. Maiori obligatione teneri detractorem Restitutioni, quam furem; quod adnotavit inde Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5.

2 Therefore the detractor is held to restore reputation, three conditions concurring. The first is that the reputation have been taken away — for sometimes reputation is not removed by a saying, either because it is not believed, or because that sin does not blacken a person of that rank, as if you say of a knight: He wounded another man. The second condition is that the reputation have been taken away unjustly. The third, that the defamed man have not redeemed his stolen reputation. Thus they report from the common teaching: Soto Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3, Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5, Turrianus disp. 53. dub. 3, Caspensis disp. 10. sect. 5.

Igitur detractor tenetur famam restituere, concurrentibus tribus conditionibus. Prima est, ut fama fuerit ablata, aliquando enim dicterio non aufertur fama; sive quia non creditur, sive quia peccatum illud ratione personae non denigret, ut si de milite dicas: Alium vulneravit. Secunda conditio est, ut fama iniuste sit erepta. Tertia, ut diffamatus famam raptam non redemerit. Ita ex communi referunt Soto Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 5. Turrianus disp. 53. dub. 3. Caspensis disp. 10. sect. 5.

3 I assert, therefore, first, that the unjust detractor is held to restore reputation, even with the loss of his own reputation, though not of his life, even by saying (if need be) that he lied. Thus D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2, Caietanus ibi, Sotus Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3, Petrus Navar. Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. disput. 5. num. 375, Michael Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. controu. 13, Navar. in manuali Latino, cap. 18. num. 45, Rodriquez 2. part. summae, cap. 45, Lopez prima parte, instruct. cap. 16, Sayrus Lib. 11. cap. 3. num. 21, Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 145, Malder. de Iust. tract. 7. cap. 2. dub. 9. fol. 554, et all the Doctors commonly, as in Valentia loco cit. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 15, Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 4, Bassaeum V. Detractio, 2. num. 4.

Assero igitur primo, Detractorem iniquum teneri restituere famam, etiam cum iactura propriae famae, non tamen vitae, etiam dicendo (si oportuerit,) se esse mentitum. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2. Caietanus ibi, Sotus Lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. Petrus Navar. Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. disput. 5. num. 375. Michael Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. controu. 13. Navar. in manuali Latino, cap. 18. num. 45. Rodriquez 2. part. summae, cap. 45. Lopez prima parte, instruct. cap. 16. Sayrus Lib. 11. cap. 3. num. 21. Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 145. Malder. de Iust. tract. 7. cap. 2. dub. 9. fol. 554. et communiter omnes DD. apud Valentiam loco cit. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 15. Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 4. Bassaeum V. Detractio, 2. num. 4.

4 Some add a little exception: unless there be great inequality — as if the defamed man be of low condition, but the defamer of great dignity, and he suffer greater detriment by saying he lied. Thus Sotus and Valentia, although Nauarrus doubts of this: for one is not held to make greater restitution than what he took away. Whence it comes about that he is not held to restore reputation with the loss of his own life; for although reputation is a kind of civil death, as Anselmo teaches Lib. de simil. cap. 147 as cited by D. Bonaventure in Pharetra Lib. 3. cap. 3. §. De Detractione, still it is not the proper taking away of life, but of a good inferior to life itself, namely reputation, which outweighs riches, according to Proverb. 22; and accordingly it binds more to restitution than the taking away of an eye, as the Saintly Doctor again enjoins in speculo animae, cap. 1. Most follow this doctrine, as in Fagundez cap. 15 et Dianam part. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 29 et 30.

Apponunt aliqui exceptionculam, nisi sit grandis inaequalitas; ut infamatus sit vilis, infamans vero sit grandis dignitatis, et plus patiatur detrimentum dicendo, se esse mentitum. Ita Sotus, et Valentia, licet Nauarrus de hoc dubitet: non enim tenetur maius restituere, quam abstulit. Quo fit, ut neque teneatur cum suae vitae iactura famam restituere, quamvis enim fama sit civilis quaedam occisio, ut docet ex Anselmo Lib. de simil. cap. 147. apud D. Bonavent. in Pharetra Lib. 3. cap. 3. §. De Detractione; non est tamen propria vitae ablatio, sed boni, inferioris vita ipsa, nempe famae, quae divitiis praevalet, iuxta id Proverb. 22. atque adeo magis ligat ad restitutionem, quam ablatio Cumenae, ut rursus iniungit S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. Hanc doctrinam sequuntur plurimi apud Fagundez cap. 15. et Dianam part. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 29. et 30.

5 There is, moreover, a question there in Diana: whether one who falsely defamed someone is held, if need be, to swear that he spoke falsely. They answer affirmatively: Caietanus and Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 62. artic. 2, where also Sylvius quaestione 22. tractat. 32. cap. 20. num. 245, Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 1, Salon de Iust. tom. 1. quaest. 62. art. 2. controv. 3, Carbo de restit. quaest. 18, Villalob. in summa, Tom. 2. tract. 11. diff. 37, Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 6. num. 141, Diana ibi, Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 15, Navar. cap. 18. num. 45, Pet. Navar. Lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 137, Sotos de Iust. Lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3, Faustus in speculo, disp. 21. quaest. 21, Bassaeus num. 9. Nay, they add — Molina tom. 5. disp. 41, Ioan. de la Cruz in Direct. pract. 1. punct. 7. art. 2. dub. 5, Soto, Aragon, and Salon — that he must, if need be, even bring witnesses.

Est autem quaestio ibi apud Dianam: Num, qui falso aliquem infamavit, teneatur, si oporteat iuramento confiteri, se falsum dixisse. Assertive respondent Caietanus, et Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 62. artic. 2. ubi etiam Sylvius quaestione 22. tractat. 32. cap. 20. num. 245. Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 1. Salon de Iust. tom. 1. quaest. 62. art. 2. controv. 3. Navar. Lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 137. Sotos de Iust. Lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. Faustus in speculo, disp. 21. quaest. 21. Bassaeus num. 9. Imo addunt Molina tom. 5. disp. 41. Ioan. de la Cruz in Direct. pract. 1. punct. 7. art. 2. dub. 5. Soto, Aragon, et Salon. debere, si oportuerit, etiam testes adhibere.

6 I WONDER, however, that the Doctors so crowd headlong into binding consciences; for, as Faventinus observes in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. disp. 53. cap. 1. num. 32, the ancient Theologians — such as S. Bonaventure in the places adduced and elsewhere, Alensis part. 2. quaest. 129. memb. 6, D. Thom. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2, Scotus loco cit. — require only a simple retraction. But the modern Zealots superadd a most heavy burden, which perhaps they themselves do not touch with a finger.

MIROR autem, Doctores adeo acervatim ruere ad conscientias ligandas; nam, ut observat Faventinus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. disp. 53. cap. 1. num. 32. Theologi antiqui, ut S. Bonavent. locis adductis, et aliis, Alensis part. 2. quaest. 129. memb. 6. D. Thom. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2. Scotus loco cit. non exigunt, nisi simplicem retractationem; At moderni Zelotes onus superaddunt gravissimum, quod nec ipsi forsan digito tangunt.

7 The Doctors bring forward a certain SMOOTH manner of restoring reputation. For since to say one lied is an arduous act, they teach that the reputation is to be restored by praising the defamed man before those who had heard the detraction. Thus Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2, Soto de Iustitia, lib. 4. quaest. 9. art. 3. ad 4, Villalob. in summa, Tom. 2. tract. 11. diff. 37. num. 4, Tannerus 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 4. num. 143, Valentia quaest. 4. puncto 5 and quaest. 17. puncto 2, Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, Lib. 8. cap. 15. num. 3, Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 11. dub. 10, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2, Faustus in speculo confess. disp. 21. quaest. 74. num. 6, Diana loco cit. Whatever they may bring to the contrary: Layman Lib. 3. sect. 5. tract. 3. part. 2. cap. 7, Navar. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 370, Faber n. 46, Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 22, Fillucius Tom. 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 246.

> *SUAVEM quemdam modum restituendae famae afferunt Doctores; Quia enim dicere se mentitum, arduus est actus, idco docent restituere famam laudando infamatum coram illis, qui detractionem audierant. Ita Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Soto de Iustitia, lib. 4. quaest. 9. art. 3. ad 4. Villalob. in summa, Tom. 2. tract. 11. diff. 37. num. 4. [10] OTHERS, however, as in Diana resol. 50 citata, propose with probability that it can be done. Thus Villalob. Tom. 2. tract. 11. diffic. 39, Sotos de Iust. Add Bassaeum num. 7, who says it can be done in equity if the defamer is poor.

Adde Bassaeum num. 7. qui ait ex aequitate fieri posse, si infamator sit pauper.*

11 The OPINION of the Seraphic Doctor, in my judgment, is that this compensation cannot be made. Thus the authorities cited, to whom add Caspensem disp. 10. sect. 5. num. 37, and Tanner judges it probable.

> SENTENTIA Seraphici meo iudicio est, non posse fieri hanc compensationem. Ita allegati, quibus adde Caspensem disp. 10. sect. 5. num. 37. eamque probabilem censet Tannerus.

12 The rationale of D. Bonaventure, in nearly all the places cited and ad cap. 10. Ecclesiast., is this: Restitution is an act of Justice, reducing to equality according to commutation through compensation of what was taken away; but money, or other goods of fortune, are not proportionate to compensating reputation: Therefore. The minor is proved by Proverb. 22, Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae, and Ecclesiasticus 41, Curam habe de bono nomine: hoc enim tibi magis permanebit, quam mille thesauri pretiosi. The authors of our opinion use this rationale, from which it also follows that, conversely, one is not held to restore with goods of a higher order of life. Thus it is laid down in cap. offi. II., de poenit. et remiss, and the Doctors commonly cite it as in Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum Lib. 8. cap. 13 and Diana part. 2. Tract. 3. resol. 30 — even if the defamed man is a noble defamed by a VILE man. The reason has already been given. IT WILL BE ASKED third: whether one who, without just cause, makes known the hidden crime of someone to one or two prudent men whom he knows will not spread it about, sins mortally.

> Ratio D. Bonavent. omnibus fere allegatis locis, et ad cap. 10. Ecclesiast. haec est: Restitutio est actus Iustitiae, redigens ad aequalitatem secundum commutationem per compensationem ablati; sed pecunia, vel alia bona fortunae non sunt proportionata ad compensandam famam: Ergo. Minor probatur, Proverb. 22. Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae*, et Ecclesiastici 41.* Curam habe de bono nomine: hoc enim tibi magis permanebit, quam mille thesauri pretiosi. Hac ratione utuntur nostrae sententiae authores, ex qua etiam sequitur, non teneri e contra ad restitutionem bonis ordinariis superioris vitae. Ita statuitur cap. offi. II., de poenit. et remiss. et communiter DD. afferunt apud Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum Lib. 8. cap. 13. et Dianam part. 2. Tract. 3. resol. 30. etiamsi infamatus sit nobilis a VILI. Ratio est iam dicta.

13 YOU WILL ASK third: whether one who, without just cause, makes known the hidden crime of someone to one or two prudent men whom he knows will not spread it about, sins mortally.

> QUAERES tertio; an qui occultum crimen alicuius sine iusta causa manifestat uni, vel duobus viris prudentibus, quos scit non vulgaturos, peccet mortaliter.

15 Caietanus teaches the CONTRARY opinion, 1. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2, Navar. de restit. Lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 234, Graffius lib. 2. cap 137, and others; and many of the adversaries hold this opinion probable, as Tanner. 2. 2. disput. 4. quaest. 8 dub. 7. num. 138, Ioan. de la Cruz, and others, with whom Diana subscribes, part. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 23.

CONTRARIAM sententiam docet Caietanus 1. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Navar. de restit. Lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 234. Graffius lib. 2. cap 137. et alii, et hanc sententiam probabilem credunt multi ex adversariis, ut Tanner. 2. 2. disput. 4. quaest. 8 dub. 7. num. 138. Ioan. de la Cruz, et alii, quibus subscribit Diana part. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 23.

16 The OPINION of D. Bonaventure is that this man sins mortally. His rationale, which the Moderns use as in Diana and Fagundez, is that reputation is blackened even before one or two. Wherefore Jesus Christ in Matth. 18 grants that one or two be called to correct someone when the obstinate man refuses solitary correction; otherwise he commands it to be done inter te, et ipsum solum. For one man could be harming, even if prudent, and of the sort Christ desires to help in reproving the fallen. For he wills that suitable men be chosen to raise up the fallen; and indeed reputation is often more harmed if it is said to one weighty person than if to many of the common people; but especially if the defamed man depended upon him. Thus the Saintly Doctor defines this question at those words of Ecclesiasticus 10, Si mordeat serpens in silentio, nihil eo minus habet, qui occulte detrahit, from which he elicits a new argument; for the striking is deadly even when secret before one whom he defames, for he compares this to the striking of a venomous serpent.

SENTENTIA D. Bonavent. est, hunc peccare mortaliter. Ratio eius est, qua utuntur Moderni apud Dianam, et Fagundez; quia fama denigratur etiam apud unum, vel duos. Quare Iesus Christus Matth. 18. concedit vocare unum, vel duos ad corrigendum aliquem, quando pervicax recusat solitariam correctionem; aliter vero praecipit fieri inter te, et ipsum solum. Nam unus posset esse laedens, etiamsi prudens, et qualis desideratur a Christo, ut adiuvet ad correptionem lapsi. Ideo enim vult eligi aptos ad sublevandum lapsum; et quidem saepe magis laeditur fama, si uni gravi personae dicatur, quam si plurimis e plebe; maxime vero si ab ea pendeat infamatus. Ita definit S. Doctor hanc quaestionem ad ea verba Ecclesiastici 10. Si mordeat serpens in silentio, nihil eo minus habet, qui occulte detrahit, ex quo novum elicit argumentum; est enim percussio mortifera etiam secreta coram uno infamando, hanc enim percussioni venenati serpentis assimilat.

17 They OBJECT that the prudent man would not reveal it. It is answered, as I said, that it makes no difference. Next, who made you the guarantor of this?

OBIICIUNT, prudentem non revelaturum. Respondetur, nil referre, ut dixi. Deinde quis te constituit de hoc fideiussorem?

18 ANOTHER doubt arises: whether the detractor is held to restitution of damages in the goods of the man's household, and in other things, lost on account of his ruined reputation.

ALIA dubitatio suboritur: an teneatur detractor ad restitutionem damnorum in bonis rei familiaris, et aliis, ob pravam famam deperditis.

19 A DISTINCTION must be made. For if he defamed him falsely, he is held to full restitution of all damages. Thus commonly with Lessio Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 12. de detract. dub. 19. numero 101.

OPORTET distinguere. Si enim falso infamavit, tenetur in integrum ad restitutionem omnium damnorum. Ita communiter cum Lessio Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 12. de detract. dub. 19. numero 101.

Sayro lib. 11. cap. 3. de restit. bon. exter. num. 17. Soto lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 4. Pet. Navar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. disp. 4. num. 375. Navar. summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 47. Salon 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. controv. 20. et patet cap. si culpa, de iniur. et damn. ut notat Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum, lib. 8. cap. 24. num. 5. qui advertit, sententiam hanc intelligi de bonis iam existentibus in possessione; at vero quoad bona in spe, puta si ex diffamatione impeditus est ab aliqua dignitate, ait, iudicandum a prudenti.

21 HE ADDS, moreover, that even one who defamed of a true crime is not held to restore goods in hope in full, but well those already acquired. Thus also Navar. summa, cap. 18. num. 45, Sayrus lib. 11. cap. 3. de restit. bon. exter. num. 20, Lessius Tomo 1. lib. 2. cap. 12. de detract. et contum. n. 19 et num. 109, Petrus Navar. de restit. cap. 4. dub. 6. num. 384, and Salon. supra.

ADDIT vero*, etiam illum, qui de vero crimine infamavit, non teneri in integrum ad restituenda bona in spe, sed bene iam acquisita. Ita etiam Navar.* summa, cap. 18. num. 45. Sayrus lib. 11. cap. 3. de restit. bon. exter. num. 20. Lessius Tomo 1. lib. 2. cap. 12. de detract. et contum. n. 19. et num. 109. Petrus Navar. de restit. cap. 4. dub. 6. num. 384. et Salon. supra.

22 The rationale of the latter is that the debt of restitution arises not from the quantity of the sin, but from the quantity of the damage inflicted; whence, although one who speaks the truth sins less, yet he inflicted the same damage unjustly. Nor say that he gave the occasion by his own sin. For it is answered that the crime would inflict no damage except through the mediation of knowledge, and the detractor has no right to set this cause in motion. But he who is the cause of an unjust damaging is immediately constituted guilty of restitution, as the Saintly Doctor argues in Speculo animae, cap. 1, and with him Bassaeus, v. Detractio 2. num. 2.

Ratio posterioris est, quia debitum restitutionis non oritur ex quantitate peccati, sed ex quantitate damni illati; unde, licet qui verum dicit, minus peccet, tamen idem damnum inique intulit. Neque dicas, eum suo peccato causam dedisse. Respondetur enim, crimen non illaturum damnum, nisi mediante cognitione, et detractorem non habere ius ad hanc causam apponendam. Is vero, qui est causa damnificationis iniquae, illico constituitur reus restitutionis, ut arguit S. Doct. in Speculo animae, cap. 1. et cum illo Bassaeus, v. Detractio 2. num. 2.

23 A doubt, however, OCCURS here at once: whether he is held to restore the reputation before all those to whose notice the sin came through those to whom he himself told it.

OCCURRIT autem hic illico dubitatio: an teneatur restituere famam coram omnibus, ad quorum notitiam pervenit peccatum per eos, quibus ipse narravit.

24 Faber answers NEGATIVELY, disp. 35. allegata, cap. 1. num. 35, adducing Alensem. See Dianam loc. cit. resol. 34, Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 6. num. 146, and others as in him and in Villalob. Tom. 2.

tract. 11. diffic. 37. num. 11.

> NEGATIVE respondet Faber disp. 35. allegata, cap. 1. num. 35. adducens Alensem. Vide Dianam loc. cit. resol. 34. Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 6. num. 146. et alios apud istum, et apud Villalob. Tom. 2. tract. 11. diffic. 37. num. 11.

25 I JUDGE with Villalobos loc. cit. and Caspensi Tract. 18. de Restit. disp. 10. sect. 5. num. 33, and Diana, that such a man is excused if he believed those to whom he told it would not defame him to others; but if he believed they would defame him, he is held; for what is the cause of a cause is also the cause of what is caused. But the cause of the damaging is guilty of restitution, as the Saintly Doctor says loco citato.

> EXISTIMO cum Villalobos loc. cit. et Caspensi Tract. 18. de Restit. disp. 10. sect. 5. num. 33. atque Diana, talem excusari, si credebat, eos, quibus narravit, non esse aliis diffamaturos; at si credebat, eos diffamaturos, tenetur; quia quod est causa causae, est etiam causa causati. Causa autem damnificationis est rea restitutionis, ut ait S. Doct. loco citato.

26 I SUBMIT ANOTHER doubt: whether, if someone tells another of an injury secretly inflicted upon himself by someone, in order to lessen his grief, he sins mortally. Diana answers negatively loc. cit. resol. 32, with Sylvio 2. 2. quaestion. 62. art. 2. quaerit. 15, Lessio lib. 2. cap. 11. dub. 12. num. 31, Navar. lib. 1. cap. 4. num. 345, Molina tract. 4. disp. 29. num. 5, Layman lib. 3. sect. 5. tract. 3. p. 2. cap. 3. num. 6, Tannero 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 145, and others commonly. But Ioan. de la Cruz in Direct. p. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3 adds more. If a person gravely injured in secret, unable to restrain himself from grief, breaks out into public complaints, he is not immediately condemned of mortal guilt if the injurer is defamed; for it seems hard to restrain so afflicted a mind from breaking into complaints, since this is most natural. He adduces for this opinion also Ludovicum Lopes.

> ALIUD dubium subdam: an, si aliquis narret alicui iniuriam, sibi ab aliquo secreto illatam, ad leniendum dolorem, peccet mortaliter. Negative respondet Diana loc. cit. resol. 32. cum Sylvio 2. 2. quaestion. 62. art. 2. quaerit. 15. Lessio lib. 2. cap. 11. dub. 12. num. 31. Navar. lib. 1. cap. 4. num. 345. Molina tract. 4. disp. 29. num. 5. Layman lib. 3. sect. 5. tract. 3. p. 2. cap. 3. num. 6. Tannero 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 145. et aliis communiter. Sed plus addit Ioan. de la Cruz in Direct. p. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3. Si persona secreto graviter iniuriata, non valens se a dolore cohibere, in querimonias prorumpit publicas, non illico de culpa mortali damnatur, si iniurians infametur; durum enim videtur, sic afflictum animum cohibere, ne in querimonias prorumpat, cum hoc naturalissimum sit. Adducit pro hac sententia etiam Ludovicum Lopes.

27 I judge S. Bonaventure assents to these, who at those words Eccles. 10. Si mordeat serpens in silentio reduces the causes of detracting someone's reputation to three heads.

> HIS arbitror assentiri S. Bonaventuram, qui ad ea verba Eccles. 10. Si mordeat serpens in silentio*, ad tria capita reducit causas detrahendi famae alicuius.*

28 The FIRST is from necessity, when he is compelled by some legitimate precept, human or divine. Human, when he who can commands him to speak; Divine, when conscience dictates to a man that he is bound to look after his neighbor, that he may be corrected, according to that precept of the Lord concerning fraternal correction.

> PRIMUM est ex necessitate, cum ex aliquo legitimo praecepto cogitur, vel humano, vel divino: Humano cum praecipit, qui potest, ut dicat: Divino, quando conscientia dictat homini, quod ipse tenetur accurare proximum, ut corrigatur secundum illud praeceptum Domini de correctione fraterna.

29 The SECOND head is from usefulness, when he tells the evil of someone to one who can help and not harm, as when he tells it to a man who loves and sympathizes and has the will to correct him.

> SECUNDUM caput ex utilitate, quando narrat malum alicui, qui potest prodesse, et non obesse, sicut cum narrat homini, qui diligit, et qui compatitur, et habet voluntatem corrigendi ipsum.

30 The THIRD is from the lust of detracting. When, therefore, neither necessity is considered nor usefulness, even if it be the truth, he is not excused from the lust of detracting; indeed he sins the sin of detraction. Thus the Saintly Doctor.

> TERTIUM ex detrahendi libidine: Quando igitur non consideratur necessitas, nec consideratur utilitas, etiamsi sit veritas, non excusatur a detrahendi libidine, imo peccato detractionis peccat. Haec S. Doctor.

31 THEREFORE he replies further, that if some usefulness intervenes, it is not a sin.

> IGITUR replicat adhuc, quod si utilitas aliqua interveniat, non est peccatum.

32 He adds in speculo animae, cap. 1. what Cruz says. Yet it matters greatly whether this vice proceeds from envy, or from an indiscreet Zeal of justice; for it sometimes happens that the evils of others, done out of a certain indignation or lightness of speech, are recited, or even aggravated, without the intention of defaming anyone as evil — which it would be hard to judge mortal. Thus the Saintly Doctor.

> Addit in speculo animae, cap. 1. id quod ait Cruz. Multum tamen interest, vitium hoc procedat ex invidia, vel indiscreto Zelo iustitiae; quandoque enim contingit, mala aliorum facta ex quadam indignatione, vel levitate loquendi, nec intentione diffamandi contra aliquem malum recitari, vel etiam aggravari, quod esset durum iudicare mortale. Haec S. Doctor.

33 FINALLY many admit compensation, if the other also took away the other's reputation and is unwilling to restore it. Thus Toletus lib. 5. cap. 7, Lessius disput. 25, Molina disp. 49, Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 10, Malder. 2. 2. tract. 7. cap. 2. n. 14, Diana p. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 30. ante controv. 13 et 24, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2, Petro de Navar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 6, Sayro lib. 11. cap. 8, and others, after D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 9. quaest. 4 et 5. Moreover honor is harmed by words, as by insults which impose faults to one's face; by insults which also oppose penal charges, such as being a bastard, etc.; by reproaches, casting up the miseries from which he has been relieved. So also by deeds one is harmed, by blows, scourges, etc., as the Doctors commonly teach with D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1; and accordingly they are held, as inflictors of damage, to restitution, as all concede. And indeed that it is a mortal sin, if they are grave.

> TANDEM compensationem multi admittunt; si alter etiam abstulit alteri famam, nec vult restituere. Ita Toletus lib. 5. cap. 7. Lessius disput. 25. Molina disp. 49. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 10. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 7. cap. 2. n. 14. Diana p. 2. Tract. 5. resol. 30. ante controv. 13. et 24. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 2. Petro de Navar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 6. Sayro lib. 11. cap. 8. et aliis, post D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 9. quaest. 4. et 5. Laeditur autem honor verbis, ut convitiis, quae culpas imponunt in faciem; convitiis, quae etiam poenalia opponunt, ut esse spurium, etc. exprobrationibus opponendo miserias, e quibus sublevatus est. Sic et factis laeditur, pugnis, flagris, etc. ut docent communiter Doctores cum D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. atque adeo tenentur, ut damnificatores, ad restitutionem, ut omnes concedunt. Et quidem, esse peccatum mortale, si graves sint.

34 IT IS PROVED by the Saintly Doctor loc. cit. from that of Matth. 5: Qui dixerit fratri suo, Racha: reus erit iudicio. Qui dixerit fratri suo, fatue: reus erit gehennae ignis. The Saintly Doctor expounds what Racha is in serm. 1. in Dominica 5. post Pentec.; and Racha is an interjection of one indignant, expressing a Hebrew word which signifies empty or vain; but it is worse to call one a fool, and he calls these the insulting and the revilers, and there calls strikers those who damage and are condemned. Hence the Saintly Doctor proves, in serm. 4. in Dominica 5. post Pentec., that these insulting revilers are held to satisfaction. For the Lord adds: Si ergo offers munus tuum ad altare, et ibi recordatus fueris, quia frater tuus habet aliquid adversum te, etc. vade prius reconciliari fratri tuo. On this testimony rest Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. lib. 8. cap. 18. num. 9 and others.

> PROBATUR a S. Doct. loc. cit. illo Matth. 5. Qui dixerit fratri suo, Racha: reus erit iudicio. Qui dixerit fratri suo, fatue: reus erit gehennae ignis. Explicat autem S. Doct. quid sit Racha serm. 1. in Dominica 5. post Pentec. est autem Racha interiectio indignantis, exprimens nomen hebraeum, quod significat canos, vel vanum; peius vero est dicere fatuum, et hos contumeliosos, et convitiatores, ac percussores vocat ibi damnificantes, atque damnatos. Hinc probat S. Doct. serm. 4. in Dominica 5. post Pentec. hos contumeliosos, et convitiatores teneri ad satisfactionem: Subdit enim Dominus: Si ergo offers munus tuum ad altare, et ibi recordatus fueris, quia frater tuus habet aliquid adversum te, etc. vade prius reconciliari fratri tuo. Hoc testimonio nituntur Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. lib. 8. cap. 18. num. 9. et alii.

35 IN MANY ways, however, this restitution of honor can be made. First, by honorable nomination; and Fagundez says this manner is enough for superiors, Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 11. de contum. dub. 27, Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 72, adducing D August. de regulis superior.

> MULTIS autem modis potest fieri haec restitutio honoris. Primo honorifica nominatione, et hunc modum satis esse superioribus ait Fagundez, Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 11. de contum. dub. 27. Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 72. allegantes D August. de regulis superior.

36 SECONDLY, by asking pardon. And they say that this inferiors owe to superiors: Fagundez num. 10, Lessius loc. cit. num. 145. Nay, if the injury is atrocious, Fagundez says, it can be juridically decreed that the suppliant ask pardon with a rope about his neck; and he says that when this was done, it was decreed in the most flourishing kingdom of the Gauls, in the time of Louis XIII, who governed that most flourishing Empire most justly and most prudently, as this Spaniard exclaims.

> SECUNDO petitione veniae. Et hoc debere inferiores superioribus aiunt Fagundez num. 10. Lessius loc. cit. num. 145. Imo si atrox sit iniuria, dicit Fagundez, posse iuridice damnari, ut reste ad collum alligato supplex petat veniam, quo pacto factum, ait, in floridissimo Galliarum regno decretum, tempore Ludovici XIII. qui florentissimum illud Imperium iustissime, et prudentissime gubernavit, ut acclamat Hispanus hic.

37 THIRDLY, by inviting to dinner and giving a place of honor. Thus Fagundez num. 13 and Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 63. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 11. de contum. dub. 27. Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9.

> TERTIO invitando ad caenam, et dando locum honorificum. Ita Fagundez num. 13. et Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 63. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 11. de contum. dub. 27. Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9.

38 COMMONLY, however, they assert that pardon must be asked if the injury is grave. Thus Sotus lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 5, Mastrius, Ledesma 2. 4. quaest. 18. art. 2. dub. 8, Sylvest. verb. Contumel. quaest. 4, after Nicolao de Lyra and Abul. in id Matth. 5. Si offers munus tuum, etc., Barthol. Medina lib. 1. Instruct. Confessar. cap. 14. §. 35, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 3, Salon. ibidem, controv. 24, Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 16. punct. 1, Clauis regia lib. 11. cap. 8.

> COMMUNITER vero asserunt, petendam veniam, si gravis est iniuria. Ita Sotus lib. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 5. Mastrius, Ledesma 2. 4. quaest. 18. art. 2. dub. 8. Sylvest. verb. Contumel. quaest. 4. ex Nicolao de Lyra et Abul. in id Matth. 5. Si offers munus tuum, etc. Barthol. Medina lib. 1. Instruct. Confessar. cap. 14. §. 35. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 3. Salon. ibidem, controv. 24. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 16. punct. 1. Clauis regia lib. 11. cap. 8.

39 OTHERS, however, assign a milder reason. Thus Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 3, Couar. lib. 2. variarum, cap. 10, Corduba de detract. quaest. 3. concl. 11, Angles in floribus 4. quaest. de restit. art. 1, Petr. Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. p. 1. dub. 6. This, I think, is the opinion of D. Bonaventure; for in the places cited he only says one is held to restitution, but he does not lay down the manner as a precept, on which account the rest rely. They subscribe with others: Turrianus disp. 53. dub. 11, Caspens. disp. 10. sect. 5, Tanner. num. 158, adducing others.

ALII tamen mitiorem rationem assignant. Ita Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 3. Couar. lib. 2. variarum, cap. 10. Corduba de detract. quaest. 3. concl. 11. Angles in floribus 4. quaest. de restit. art. 1. Petr. Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. p. 1. dub. 6. Hanc reor esse sententiam D. Bonau. nam locis allegatis solum ait, teneri restitutioni, sed modum non ponit in praecepto; qua ratione nituntur caeteri. Subscribunt cum aliis Turrianus disp. 53. dub. 11. Caspens. disp. 10. sect. 5. Tanner. num. 158. alios adducens.

40 But what turns my stomach is that some of the authorities cited compel subjects to ask pardon, but never superiors. I argue against it, thus: Restitution establishes equality and mediocrity, which consists in the thing, not in reason, as Aristot. 3. Eth. cap. 6 says — although it establishes it in reason also, as I taught in prima secundae Tract. de actibus humanis, disp. quaest. — yet it depends upon the thing; but this is not a restitution of honor, when you defamed the man by calling him by the name of Honor: Therefore. I do not see what restitution of honor this is. The natural law cannot be undermined, and so easily dispensed. Nor did D. Augustine speak in a grave matter, but in light ordinary ones. For when a superior, out of an indiscreet Zeal of justice or love, so exceeds that he thus acts inordinately, such that he would incur such contumelious defamation, then the Zeal of justice would by no means excuse him from sinning mortally. But who shall exempt such a one from restitution of the honor taken away? Truly it ought to be compensated to the Commutative according to an Arithmetic proportion: if you cried out against a man as a thief or infamous, you must bring forward that he is not infamous, and render the counterpass of the contumely received to the man offended — even if you were the Duke of Macqueda.

Illud vero mihi stomachum facit, quod aliqui allegati cogunt subditos ad veniam petendam; superiores vero nunquam: Arguo autem contra, sic: Restitutio ponit aequalitatem, et mediocritatem, quae consistit in re, non ratione, ut ait Aristot. 3. Eth. cap. 6. etsi ponat in ratione etiam, ut docui ego prima secundae Tract. de actibus humanis, disp. quaest. tamen dependet a re, sed non est restitutio honoris, quem infamem compellasti, vocando nomine Honoris: Ergo. Ego non video quae restitutio honoris sit haec. Ius naturale non potest pessundari, et adeo facile dispensari. Neque D. August. locutus est in materia gravi, sed in levibus ordinariis. Cum enim superior ex indiscreto Zelo iustitiae, aut amoris, adeo excedit, ut sic, inordinate, quod talis, per talem contumeliam diffamationem incurreret, tunc Zelus iustitiae nullatenus excusaret, quin peccaret mortaliter. Ecquis autem eximet talem a restitutione ablati honoris? Sane ad Commutativam debet proportione Arithmetica compensari, ut si inclamasti latronem, vel infamem, afferas, non infamem, et contrapassum acceptae contumeliae offenso reddas, etiamsi esses Dux de Macqueda.

41 From these things they conclude, with D. Bonaventure in Confessionali, cap. 1, that absolution must be denied to one who is unwilling to restore the honor he took away. Thus Caspensis disp. 10. sect. 5 admonishes at the end.

Ex his colligunt cum D. Bonau. in Confessionali, cap. 1. negandam absolutionem ei, qui raptum honorem non vult restituere. Ita Caspensis disp. 10. sect. 5. ultimo monet.

Doubt IV: On the restitution of goods of the soul

1 *I ASSERT first that one who has driven a man mad by a crime or by a wicked drug is held to make restitution of the damages. This is clear from Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. punct 3; Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 6. dubio 3.

ASSERO primo, eum, qui dementavit maleficio, aut medicamine pravo, teneri ad restitutionem damnorum. Patet apud Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 6. punct 3. Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 6. dubio 3.

2 I ASSERT second that one who, without guile, violence, or fraud, merely by persuasion induced another to sin is not held in justice to restore him, as far as in him lies, to his former state, but only out of Charity. Thus Soto lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3; Nauar. in Manual. cap. 14. num. 45; Bass. 21; Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5; Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 90; Caspens. disp. 9. sect. 1, against Scotum 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3, Richardum eadem dist. art. 5. quaest. 2, Paludanum ibi, et Adrianum de Restitutione.

ASSERO secundo, qui absque dolo, vi, fraudeve, suadens, tantum induxit ad peccatum, non tenetur restituere illum ex iustitia, quantum ex se est ad statum primum, sed solum ex Charitate. Ita Soto lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. Nauar. in Manual. cap. 14. num. 45. Bass. 21. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 90. Caspens. disp. 9. sect. 1. contra Scotum 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Richardum eadem dist. art. 5. quaest. 2. Paludanum ibi, et Adrianum de Restitutione.

3 The RATIONALE is that no wrong is done to the willing against Justice, and therefore, since he does not offend against Justice, he is not held to restitution, as Valentia notes. Nor let them say that the loss of the grace of God is a greater damage than that of one's whole estate; for since this damage is inflicted upon one who wills it, no wrong against Justice is inflicted.

RATIO est, quia volenti non fit iniuria contra Iustitiam, atque ideo, cum non delinquat contra Iustitiam, neque tenetur ad restitutionem, ut notat Valentia. Neque dicant, maius esse damnum iacturam gratiae Dei, quam totius facultatis; nam cum hoc damnum inferatur volenti, non infertur iniuria contra Iustitiam.

4 AND further, I think, this is what the Saintly Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1 means, where he reckons only the damaging of temporal goods under the heading of restitution, because spiritual goods are not lost except by the will of the one losing them. And of these the old saying is that no one is harmed except by himself. For no force can compel the will to sin; while deceit and guile, which place an obstacle of invincible ignorance, do not induce sin. He indeed who applies force, or brings guile or fraud, will be held to remove them out of justice, and to leave the man constituted in his liberty. Indeed he must exhort him to penance, because he is considered to take away against the man's will. But if the man, now knowingly in his own state, does not repent, he is considered to have condoned the force, as Bass. num. 21 says with Petr. Nauarro.

ET adhuc, ut reor, vult S. Doct. in speculo animae, cap. 1. ubi damnificationem solam temporalium in ordine ad restitutionem recenset, quia spiritualia non amittuntur, nisi voluntate amittentis. Et de his vetum est, quod nullus laeditur, nisi a seipso. Nulla enim vis potest ad peccatum voluntatem cogere; fraus vero, et dolus, ponentes obstaculum ignorantiae invincibilis, non inducunt peccatum. Tenebitur sane is, qui infert vim, dolos, vel fraudes affert, ea removere ex iustitia, et in libertate constitutum relinquere. Imo hortari ad poenitentiam, quia invito censetur auferre. At si is sciens nunc suum statum, nec resipiscit, censetur vim condonasse, ut ait Bass. num. 21. cum Petr. Nauarro.

5 A difficulty, however, ARISES concerning one who turns someone away from entering Religion by dissuading him. They commonly concede that it is a grave sin to do this without just cause, as may be seen in Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, lib. 7. cap. 31. But whether he is held to restitution.

> OCCURRIT vero difficultas circa eum, qui aliquem avertit, ne Religionem ingrediatur dissuadendo. Concedunt autem communiter, grave esse peccatum sine iusta causa id facere, ut videre est apud Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, lib. 7. cap. 31. An vero teneatur ad restitutionem.

6 It is MORE PROBABLE that he is not held to restitution, because he violated no right of religion, since the man is still free; and accordingly he owes nothing to Religion. And for the same reason he is not held to the man dissuaded, both because the man acts freely, and because he has no right to the goods of religion. See Sayrum lib. 11. cap. 1. num. 35; Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2; Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 22. num. 44 — and this even if it be done by violence or fraud.

> PROBABILIUS est, non teneri restitutioni, quia ius nullum religionis violavit, cum ille adhuc liber sit; atque adeo nihil tenetur Religioni. Et hac eadem de causa, nec tenetur ipsi dissuaso, tum quia libere agit, tum quia nullum ius habet ad religionis bona. Vide Sayrum lib. 11. cap. 1. num. 35. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 22. num. 44. et hoc, etiamsi fiat vi, vel fraude.

7 Yet the OPPOSITE is asserted by Vasquez de restit. cap. 8. dub. 2. num. 38; Less. lib. 2. cap. 8. dub. 3; Rebell. p. 1. lib. 4. quaest. 15; Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 15. dub. 2; Molina Tom. 4. de Iustitia, tract. 4. disp. 51; Fagundez loc. cit. num. 6; Bannes quaest. 62. art. 2. disp. 3; Aragon. diffic. cit. ad 4; Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 3, while Bass. num. 22 doubts if it is done by violence, fraud, etc.

> OPPOSITUM tamen asserunt Vasquez de restit. cap. 8. dub. 2. num. 38. Less. lib. 2. cap. 8. dub. 3. Rebell. p. 1. lib. 4. quaest. 15. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 15. dub. 2. Molina Tom. 4. de Iustitia, tract. 4. disp. 51. Fagundez loc. cit. num. 6. Bannes quaest. 62. art. 2. disp. 3. Aragon. diffic. cit. ad 4. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 3. dubitans Bass. num. 22. si fiat vi, fraude etc.

8 WHETHER, then, one who removes a Novice, yet not by force, fear, or fraud, is held to restitution. The Doctors commonly deny it, as in Fagundez num. 15, against Rebellium p. 1. lib. 4. quaest. 15. num. 5. To remove the unfit is not an evil. For thus Christ also in Matth. 8 rejected such a man, as S. Bonau. in cap. 2. Regula Fratrum minorum notes.

> AN vero Nouitium removens, non tamen per vim, metum, aut fraudem, teneatur ad restitutionem. Communiter negant Doctores apud Fagundez num. 15. contra Rebellium p. 1. lib. 4. quaest. 15. num. 5. Ineptos autem amovere non est malum. Sic enim et Christus Matth. 8. talem reiecit, ut notat S. Bonau. in cap. 2. Regula Fratrum minorum.

9 But IF he extracts a professed man without force, yet with fraud: first it is certain that he owes nothing to the religious man himself, because no wrong is done to the willing. The question is whether he is held to the religion; and they define that he is held: Molina Tom. 4. tract. 4. disp. 51; Vasquez de restit. cap. 8. dub. 2; Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 15. dub. 2; Azorius Tom. 3. lib. 5. cap. 2; Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. punct. 5. §. 1. cap. 2; Reginald. Tom. 1. lib. 10. tract. 4. cap. 21. num. 309; Tanner. num. 99, and others. But they deny it: Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3; Sayrus lib. 11. cap. 1; Bassaeus num. 22; Lessius lib. 2. cap. 8. dub. 5; Malder. tract. 8. dub. 3; Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 7. quaest. 8, and others among these. Fagundez says both are probable, but inclines to the former. See him.

SI vero extrahat professum sine vi, cum fraude tamen; primo certum est, non teneri aliquid ipsi religioso, quia volenti non fit iniuria. Quaestio est: an teneatur religioni; et teneri definiunt Molina Tom. 4. tract. 4. disp. 51. Vasquez de restit. cap. 8. dub. 2. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 15. dub. 2. Azorius Tom. 3. lib. 5. cap. 2. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. punct. 5. §. 1. cap. 2. Reginald. Tom. 1. lib. 10. tract. 4. cap. 21. num. 309. Tanner. num. 99. et alii. Sed negant Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. Sayrus lib. 11. cap. 1. Bassaeus num. 22. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 8. dub. 5. Malder. tract. 8. dub. 3. Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 7. quaest. 8. et alii apud hos. Utramque esse probabilem ait Fagundez, sed ad priorem inclinat. Ipsum vide.

Subquestion II: What things are to be restored by reason of the manner in which they were acquired

1 We have TREATED of goods to be restored insofar as they are considered in themselves; now we must consider those which are unjustly acquired, or possessed under an unjust title. For some are acquired by contracts, in which forms are prescribed which no one can transgress either licitly or validly; and to these contracts persons who are suitable, or capable, are supposed, while others are declared incapable by law. Others are possessed by donation, which likewise has its own rules if it is to be valid. Many things pass into another's ownership by title of prescription, but for this the laws require various conditions, as I shall weigh below. Certain things are given by title of payment for the function of an office, or for meretricious prostitution. Some also, by fowling, hunting, fishing, the use of common things, illicit games, and lastly by unexpected discovery, are taken into the possession and ownership of one person; of these the laws make various determinations. In the following Doubts we must inquire whether, how, and when these things ought to be restored to their proper Owners.

Quae res sint restituendae ratione modi, quo fuerunt acquisitae

ACTUM est de bonis restituendis, quatenus in se ipsis considerantur; nunc videndum est de iis, prout inique acquiruntur, seu iniusto titulo possidentur; alia enim contractibus acquiruntur, in quibus formae, quas nec licite, nec valide potest quis transgredi, praescribuntur; his etiam contractibus personae habiles, seu capaces supponuntur; aliae inhabiles a lege declarantur. Alia possidentur donatione; quae suas etiam habet regulas, ut valida sit: Multa titulo praescriptionis in alterius Dominium abeunt; sed ad hanc leges varias conditiones requirunt, ut infra expendam: Quaedam titulo mercedis ratione functionis officii, aut prostitutionis meretriciae intuitu dantur; nonnulla quoque Aucupio, Venatione, Piscatione, rerum communium usu, Ludis illicitis, ac denique insperata inventione in unius possessionem, et dominium adsciscuntur; de quibus leges varia statuunt; de his per sequentes Dubitationes inquirendum; an, quomodo, et quando debeant propriis Dominis restitui.

Doubt I: When a thing acquired by contract is to be restored

1 THREE cases are adduced in which things acquired by contract must be given back. The first, if the contract is unjust and null by the law of nature. But when this happens will be said in the Disput. de contractibus. The second case is if the contract is null by some human law, as a purchase from a minor; or if it impedes the translation of ownership, for what reason. Testators cannot be deprived of necessary heirs. The third is when the contract is rescinded by the sentence of a Judge, for a human law, founded upon the presumption of fraud. See Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 6. punct. 5, and Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 13, citing others. Thus it is gathered from D. Bonaventure in speculo animae, cap. 2.

Quando restituenda sit res acquisita per contractum.

TRES casus afferuntur, in quibus acquisita per contractum sunt reddenda. Primus, si contractus iure naturae sit iniquus, et nullus. Hoc autem quando eveniat; dicetur Disput. de contractibus. Secundus casus est, si contractus sit nullus ex aliqua lege humana, ut emptio a pupillo; vel si impediat translationem dominii, qua ratione. Testatores nequeunt haeredes necessarios privare Tertius est, quando per sententiam Iudicis rescinditur contractus veritus lege humana, fundata in praesumptione fraudis. Vide Valentiam disput. 5. quaest. 6. punct. 5. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 13. alios citantem. Sic colligitur ex D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2.

2 AND the rationale of this last case is that what is given through fraud is considered to have been accepted involuntarily; but for the validity of contracts a free and voluntary consent on both sides is required, which is destroyed when error intervenes, as is plausible among Theologians and Jurisconsults. Yet if the error is voluntary on the part of the giver, then it is taken for fraud, and the contract is rescinded, and the obligation of restitution follows. See the authorities cited.

ET Ratio huius posterioris est, quia quod per fraudem datur, censetur involuntarie acceptum; Ad validitatem autem contractuum consensus liber, et voluntarius utrinque requiritur, qui errore interveniente tollitur, ut apud Theologos et Iurisconsultos plausibile est: Verum si error est voluntarius ex parte dantis, tunc pro fraude habetur, et contractus rescinditur, ac restituendi debitum succedit. Vide allegatos.

Doubt II: When things acquired by donation ought to be restored

1 IT IS ANSWERED that this is so when the Donation is invalid, either by the law of nature, as when it is coerced, or if it was not absolute but conditional, and the condition is not present in fact; or it is void by human law, as that which is made by a Minor without the consent of his Tutor l. Pupillae, ff. de acquirendo rerum dominio, and that which is made between husband and wife l. si Sponsus, ff. de donat. inter virum, et uxorem, except in certain cases noted by Sylvester v. Donatio; and that which is made between a Father and a son not emancipated l. ult. C. de Impuber, except in the cases given by Sylvester loc. cit. See Tanner disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 11. num. 315.

Quando nam debeant restitui acquisita per donationem.

RESPONDETUR id esse, quando Donatio est invalidae, sive iure naturae, ut cum est coacta vel si non fuerit absoluta, sed conditionalis; et conditio non adsit in re, sive iure humano sit irrita, ut quae fit a Pupillo sine consensu Tutoris l. Pupillae, ff. de acquirendo rerum dominio, et quae fit inter virum, et uxorem l. si Sponsus, ff. de donat. inter virum, et uxorem, exceptis quibusdam casibus, notatis a Sylvestro v. Donatio, et quae fit inter Patrem, et filium non emancipatum l. ult. C. de Impuber, exceptis casibus apud Sylvestrum loc. cit. Vide Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 11. num. 315.

2 From which doctrine it follows that what Adrianus de Restit. says is true — Alensis 4. p. quaest. 86. membr. 3. art. 29, Altisiodor. lib. 4. sum. quaest. 7. de Restit, and D. Bonav. Apologia de paupertate Christi, cap. 2. §. Secundus modus mendicandi, et ad 8. — namely that the poverty of those who by simulated sanctity and poverty extort alms is against justice, and accordingly that such men are thieves, which he proves from D. Ambrose lib. 1. de offic. cap. 16 and D. Augustine de operibus Monachorum, cap. 26.

Ex qua doctrina sequitur, verum esse, id quod Adrianus de Restit. Alensis 4. p. quaest. 86. membr. 3. art. 29. Altisiodor. lib. 4. sum. quaest. 7. de Restit. et D. Bonav. Apologia de paupertate Christi, cap. 2. §. Secundus modus mendicandi, et ad 8. aiunt, illorum egestatem esse contra iustitiam, qui simulatione sanctitatis, et paupertatis extorquent eleemosynas, atque adeo hos esse fures, quod probat ex D. Ambrosio lib. 1. de offic. cap. 16. et D. August. de operibus Monachorum, cap. 26.

Doubt III: When things acquired by prescription are to be restored

1 IF Prescription is legitimate, acquired things may be retained; but not, however, if the necessary conditions are lacking, as St. Bonaventure teaches in the Apology for the Poor, chapter 1 of the fourth response.

Quando debeant restitui acquisita titulo praescriptionis.

SI Praescriptio sit legitima, possunt res acquisitae retineri; secus vero si desint conditiones necessariae, ut docet S. Bonav. in Apologia pauperum, cap. 1. quartae responsionis.

2 THE FIRST is, that the thing be prescriptible. For there are certain things which by law cannot be prescribed, as Sylvester teaches, verb. Praescriptio, 2. Covarruvias, relect. in regul. possess. p. 2. Juan Medina quaest. 16. de rerum restit. Valencia quaest. 6. punct. 5.; for a man cannot be prescribed, l. sola C. de longi temporis praescript. Nor the right of tithes, or other sacred things by Laymen, c. Cansam, extra de Praescript. Nor a fugitive slave, §. sed aliquando, Instit. de Usucapion. Nor exemption from obedience to one's superior, c. Cum non liceat, extra de praescript. Nor things held in common and assigned to public use, that is, of the Republic, such as public roads, l. 1. Usucapionem, ff. de Usucapion. Nor the boundaries of Bishoprics, provinces, and parishes, 16. quaest. 3. cap. Licet, et cap. Inter. et cap. Super eo, extra de Paroch. Nor a Pension, or Canon, which ought to be paid to the republic for lands, 16. quaest. 4. §. Potest. Nor possessions of fields held by colonists, l. Male agitur, C. de Praescript. triginta, vel quadraginta annorum. Nor tributes owed to the Prince, l. Comperit, C. eodem titulo. Nor things which are forbidden to be alienated by Law, or Canon, or by the deceased, or by pact, as Sylvester holds, verb. Praescriptio, 2. num. 13. and Valencia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Nor things which someone possesses Precariously, and not as true Lord, l. Certe, §. Is qui rogavit, ff. de Precar. Nor things bought from a Prodigal, or a luxurious man, or a gambler. Nor things which the Lord, through probable ignorance, does not know are possessed by another, as Sylvester explains, num. 17. Nor the goods of an excommunicate, so long as he does not stand in the way of being freed from excommunication, as Sylvester notes, num. 19. and Valencia: See them on all these matters, also Covarruvias, loco citato.

PRIMA est, ut res sit praescriptibilis. Sunt enim aliquae res, quae iure nequeunt praescribi, ut docet Sylvest. verb. Praescriptio, 2. Covar. relect. in regul. possess. p. 2. Ioan. Medina quaest. 16. de rerum restit. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. nam homo praescribi non potest, l. sola C. de longi temporis praescript. Neque ius decimarum, aut aliae res sacrae a Laicis, c. Cansam, extra de Praescript. Neque servus fugitivus, §. sed aliquando, Instit. de Usucapion. Neque exemptio ab obedientia sui superioris, c. Cum non liceat, extra de praescript. Neque res communes ad publicum, scilicet Reipublicae, usum deputatae, ut viae publicae, l. 1. Usucapionem, ff. de Usucapion. Neque limites Episcopatuum, provinciarum, et parochiarum 16. quaest. 3. cap. Licet, et cap. Inter. et cap. Super eo, extra de Paroch. Neque Pensio, aut Canon, qui debet solvi reipublicae pro agris 16. quaest. 4. §. Potest. Neque possessiones agrorum a colonis, l. Male agitur, C. de Praescript. triginta, vel quadraginta annorum. Naec tributa debita Principi l. Comperit, C. eodem titulo. Nec res, quae prohibentur alienari per Legem, aut Canonem, aut a defuncto, aut per pactum, ut habent Sylvest. verb. Praescriptio, 2. num. 13. et Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Neque res, quas Precario quis possidet, et non tanquam verus Dominus l. Certe, §. Is qui rogavit, ff. de Precar. Neque res empta a Prodigo, vel luxurioso, vel lusore. Nec res, quas probabili ignorantia Dominus ab alio possideri ignorat, ut explicat Sylvester num. 17. Nec res excommunicati, quam diu per eum non stat, quo minus liberetur ab excommunicatione, ut notant Sylvester num. 19. et Valentia: Eos de his omnibus vide, etiam Covarr. loco citato.

3 THE SECOND condition is, that the thing be actually possessed by the one who is going to prescribe it, for without possession there is no prescription, as the rule of Law has it, nor is it acquired by usucaption, as is clear from l. sine possessione, ff. de Usucapion.

SECUNDA conditio est, ut res actu possideatur ab eo, qui eam praescripturus sit, nam sine possessione non praescribitur, ut habet regula Iuris, neque usucapitur, ut patet l. sine possessione, ff. de Usucapion.

4 THE THIRD condition is, that the thing be possessed by a legitimate title, true, or probably presumed, such as a title of inheritance, purchase, donation, etc. cap. si diligenti, extra de praescript.

> TERTIA conditio est, ut res possideatur legitimo titulo vero, aut probabiliter praesumpto, ut titulo haereditatis, emptionis, donationis, etc. cap. si diligenti, extra de praescript.

5 THE FOURTH condition is, that the thing be possessed in good faith, in conscience believing it to be one's own, cap. Possessor, de regulis iuris, et cap. Vigilanti, et cap. si diligenti, extra de Praescript. By which canons certain civil laws are considered revoked, which permitted prescription with bad faith, as the Doctors commonly hold in cap. Finali.

> QUARTA conditio est, ut res possideatur bona fide, in conscientia credens esse suam, cap. Possessor, de regulis iuris, et cap. Vigilanti, et cap. si diligenti, extra de Praescript. Per quos canones censentur revocatae aliquae leges civiles, quae praescriptionem cum mala fide permittebant, ut sentiunt communiter Doctores in cap. Finali.

6 THE QUESTION, however, is: whether mere doubt that the thing belongs to another impedes this good faith.

> QUAESTIO vero est: an sola dubitatio, quod res sit aliena, impediat hanc bonam fidem.

7 SOME say that it is removed; others, however, not; see them in Valencia, who follows the negative opinion. The reason is, because, although one in doubt cannot begin to possess; yet, while he possesses, The condition of the possessor is the better one.

> ALIQUI dicunt, tolli; alii vero non; eos vide apud Valentiam, qui negativam sententiam sequitur. Ratio est, quia, licet dubitans non possit incipere possidere; tamen, dum possidet, Melior est conditio possidentis.

8 THE FIFTH condition is, that possession have lasted for as long a time as is necessary according to the prescription of the laws. For to prescribe movable things—which may rather be called Usucaption than Prescription—a possession of three years suffices between those present, and of four years between those absent, as is clear from l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucap. But to prescribe Ecclesiastical immovable things, a possession of the very longest time is required, namely of thirty years between those present, and forty between those absent, as is clear in l. Quas actiones, et 16. quaest. 3. Indeed, even to prescribe the goods of the Roman Church a possession of one hundred years is required, l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucap. et 16. quaest. 3. cap. ult.

> QUINTA conditio est, ut possessio tanto tempore duraverit, quantum ex legum praescripto necessarium est. Nam ad praescribendum res mobiles, quatum potius potest dici Usucapio, quam Praescriptio, sufficit possessio triennalis inter praesentes, et quadriennalis inter absentes, ut patet ex l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucap. Ad praescribendum autem res Ecclesiasticas immobiles, possessio exigitur longissimi temporis, nimirum triginta annorum inter praesentes; et quadraginta inter absentes, ut patet in l. Quas actiones, et 16. quaest. 3. Quin etiam ad praescribendum res Eclesiae Romanae requiritur possessio centum annorum, l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucap. et 16. quaest. 3. cap. ult.

9 LIKEWISE, to prescribe temporal immovable things: if indeed they were first acquired by theft, or by violence, there is necessary in the heirs of the thief a possession of good faith of thirty years; at least between those present, and forty between those absent, as Sylvester says, v. Praescript. with Valencia, Et l. et omnis, C. de Praescript. triginta annorum. But the other things acquired by a good title are prescribed by possession of long time, namely of ten years between those present, and twenty between those absent, l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucapion. Et l. mala fidei C. de Praescript. longi temporis.

ITEM ad praescribendas res immobiles temporales, si primo quidem fuerint furto, aut vi acquisitae, necessaria est in furis haeredibus possessio bonae fidei triginta annorum; saltem inter praesentes, et quadraginta inter absentes, ut aiunt Sylvest. v. Praescript. cum Valentia, Et l. et omnis, C. de Praescript. triginta annorum. Res autem caeterae bono titulo acquisitae praescribuntur possessione longi temporis, nempe decem annorum inter praesentes, et viginti inter absentes, l. Quas actiones, C. de Usucapion. Et l. mala fidei C. de Praescript. longi temporis.

10 THE SIXTH condition is, that good faith not be interrupted throughout that whole prescribed time, cap. Illud autem, et cap. Quoniam omne, de Praescript. Therefore, if any of these conditions is lacking, the prescription must be judged invalid, and restitution made. But if all these are present, the prescription will be legitimate; as the Doctors commonly teach, Ven. Bonaventure, especially St. Thomas, quodl. 12. art. 25. Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Paludanus eadem dist. quaest. 2. Durandus in 4. dist. 41. quaest. 4. art. 1. ad 1. and others in Valencia. And it is clear from the laws above, and C. Nos Sanctorum, and C. Quoniam omne, de Praescript. You have nearly all this also in Ven. Bonaventure, in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, and in the places cited 1. 2. disput. de Conscientia. And in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. artic. 2. quaest. 1.

SEXTA conditio est, ut bona fides toto illo tempore praefixo non interrumpatur, cap. Illud autem, et cap. Quoniam omne, de Praescript. Itaque si aliqua desit ex his conditionibus, iudicanda est praescriptio invalida, et restituendum. Si autem omnes hae adsint, legitima erit praescriptio; ut docent communiter D. Bonau. praesertim D. Thom. quodl. 12. art. 25. Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Palud. eadem dist. quaest. 2. Durand. in 4. dist. 41. quaest. 4. art. 1. ad 1. et alii apud Valentiam. Et patet ex legibus supra, et C. Nos Sanctorum, et C. Quoniam omne, de Praescript. Haec fere habes etiam apud D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. et locis allegatis 1. 2. disput. de Conscientia. Et in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. artic. 2. quaest. 1.

Doubt IV: When a thing acquired as wages for discharging an office is to be restored

1 FIRST, indeed, he is held to restore, when he has not earned it by negligent operating, or omitting, the things that are his duty. Thus Clerics, by omitting the office to which they are bound by some benefice, are held, in proportion to the omission, to restore, as was proved tom. 4. disp. 17. quaest. 10. ad prop. 10.

PRIMO quidem tenetur restituere, quando id non est emeritas, negligenter operando, aut omittendo, quae sui sunt muneris. Ita Clerici omittendo officium, ad quod tenentur ex aliquo beneficio; reneutur, pro rata omissionis, restituere, ut probatum est tom. 4. disp. 17. quaest. 10. ad prop. 10.

2 SECOND, if he had a fee from elsewhere, as a Judge who receives a new fee in order to render a just sentence. Thus commonly, with Adrian, §. restat inquirere, and Valencia.

SECUNDO, si aliunde habuit mercedem, ut Iudex, qui accipit novam mercedem, ut iustam ferat sententiam. Ita communiter cum Adriano §. restat inquirere, et Valentia.

3 THIRD, one who receives a fee for an office to which he is otherwise bound, as for bearing true testimony, cap. Non sane 14. quaest. 5. and the Doctors teach in Valencia.

TERTIO qui accipit mercedem pro officio, ad quod alioqui tenetur, ut pro ferendo vero testimonio, cap. Non sane 14. quaest. 5. et docent Doctores apud Valentiam.

4 MOREOVER, that which is received as a fee for a wicked action against Justice, and brings no other benefit to the other party besides that which is done against Justice, as for killing a man, for rendering an unjust sentence, etc.

PRAETEREA id, quod accipitur pro mercede actionis malae contra Iustitiam, et nullam aliam commoditatem afferat alteri, praeter eam, quae fit contra Iustitiam, ut pro occidendo homine, pro ferenda iniusta sententia, etc.

5 From this burden certain Judges indeed wished to vindicate themselves when rendering an unjust sentence; but not, if they judged justly; chiefly for this reason, that a judge owes a just sentence; but by no means an unjust one; whence if he sells Justice, owed of itself, through the intervention of gifts, he lies subject to restitution: But since he does not owe injustice, they hold that if the Judge received something for it, he can retain it for himself.

Ab hoc quidem onere voluere nonnulli, Iudices, inique sententiam proferentes, vindicare; secus, si iuste iudicarent; ea potissimum ratione, quod iustam sententiam debet iudex; iniustam vero nequaquam; unde si Iustitiam, ex se debitam, munerum interventu vendat, restitutioni iacet obnoxius: Cum vero non debeat iniustitiam, si quid pro ea acceperit Iudex, sibi id posse retineri, perhibent.

6 MOREOVER, they strive to fortify this by another reason, because, namely, against a Judge remunerated by one of the litigants for a just judgment, an action is granted; and he who had bestowed the gifts can bring suit, since by another title that right will have to be adjudged to him: but the action of him who carved out for himself, by suborning the judge, a judgment favorable to himself for an unjust sentence, perishes entirely, and is proscribed.

PRAETEREA alia id ratione munire satagunt, quia scilicet contra Iudicem, ob iustum iudicium ab uno litigantium remuneratum, datur actio; potestque, qui munera contulerat, litem intentare, cum alio titulo fuerit sibi ius illud adiudicandum: actio vero illius, qui iniustam sententiam, iudicem subornando, sibi propitiam emulsit, tota perit, et proscribitur.

7 I GRANT indeed that the former reason, as utterly inept, was deservedly turned into a mockery of its authors by a certain Theologian of Salzburg, who assails them with a pen sharp enough; For if therefore the price of a just judgment must be restored, because a right that is owed cannot be sold, therefore neither can a right not owed be sold: And, if therefore I cannot sell a righteous Judgment, because I already owe it to the one who would buy it, therefore I can also expose an iniquitous one for sale, because I do not owe it; since, however, what is at issue here is the moral, or legal can or cannot, it would be the same as if I said: therefore I do not owe the selling of a righteous judgment, because I owe it; and therefore I owe the illicit, or it is licit, because I do not owe it.

FATEOR equidem, priorem rationem, tanquam valde ineptam, haud immerito, ludibrio suis authoribus verti a quodam Salisburgensi Theologo, qui acri satis stilo in eos invehitur; Si enim ideo pretium iusti iudicii est restituendum, quia quippe ius debitum nequit vendi, ideo nec Ius indebitum potest vendi: Et, si ideo nequeo rectum Iudicium vendere, quia illud empturo iam debeo, ideo etiam iniquum possum, venditioni exponere, quia illud non debeo; cum autem hic agatur de posse, vel non posse morali, sive iuris; idem esset; ac si dicerem: ideo non debeo rectum iudicium vendere, quia illud debeo; et ideo illicitum debeo, vel licitum est, quia non debeo.

8 Another reason for this disparity I brought forward tom. praecedente disp. 17. de conscient. quaest. 10. ad proposit. 26. because, namely, the Judge's service is sufficiently compensated by a public stipend, wherefore he cannot demand payment twice for the same thing; nevertheless I did not exempt the one judging unjustly from the burden of restitution, nor yet did I judge that anything must be restored to the prior lord; since Justice has been violated equally by both, whence the one is unworthy to receive it, the other to retain it; but I brought forward that the whole must be spent on the poor, and other pious uses, with the entire class of Theologians and Jurists; whence the force of the second reason is enervated, which contends that the judge can retain whatever he received for an unjust sentence.

> Aliam huiusce disparitatis rationem attuli tom. praecedente disp. 17. de conscient. quaest. 10. ad proposit. 26. quia scilicet publico stipendio Iudicis opera sat compensatur, quare nequit bis in id ipsum solutionem exigere; non tamen inique iudicantem ab onere restitutionis exemi, nec tamen priori domino aliquid restituendum censui; cum aeque ab utroque Iustitia sit temerata, unde ille indignus est ut recipiat; iste vero ut retineat; sed pauperibus, aliisque piis usibus totum erogandum, cum universa Theologorum, et Iurisperitorum classe afferui; unde enervatur vis secundae rationis, quae posse iudicem, quicquid pro iniusta sententia receperit, retinere contendit.

9 INDEED, under the title of a donation, not of a fee, that which is given spontaneously for any base action whatsoever can by natural law be accepted, not as on a principal cause, but on a certain condition. So Navarrus, cap. 17. Valencia, loco citato. Except, however, the donations of a soldier, made to a prostitute, Leg. Affectionis, ff. de donat. Et Leg. Miles ita, §. Miles, ff. de test. Militari.

> POTEST quidem, titulo donationis, non mercedis, accipi iure naturae id, quod datur sponte ad qualemcumque turpem actionem, non ut ob causam principalem, sed ob quandam conditionem. Ita Navar. cap. 17. Valentia loco citato. Excipe tamen donationes militis, factae meretrici, Leg. Affectionis, ff. de donat. Et Leg. Miles ita, §. Miles, ff. de test. Militari.

Doubt V: Whether the wages of harlotry are to be restored

1 MANY, and not undistinguished, Doctors constantly cry out that a prostitute cannot accept a fee, and that, once accepted, it cannot be retained. So Angelus, Baldus, and Jason super §. Sed et quod meretrici, l. 4. Whence they infer that one who commits fornication is not held to give the fee. So also Durandus 3. dist. 39. quaest. 4. Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 20. Comitoli resp. moral. lib. 3. quaest. 5. Johannes Valerius in differ. utriusque fori, verbo Promissio, diff. 8. and Diana judges it probable p. 1. tract. 16. resol. 40.

> PLURIMI, nec ignobiles Doctores constanter clamant, non posse meretricem accipere mercedem, eamque acceptam non posse retinere. Ita Angelus, Baldus, et Iason super §. Sed et quod meretrici, l. 4. *Ex quo inferunt, non teneri moechantem dare mercedem. Ita etiam Durand. 3. dist. 39. quaest. 4. Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 20. Est communis fere omnium Theologorum, et Iuristarum, ut ait Tannerus.

3 IT IS PROVED ex l. 4. §. Sed et quod meretrici, ff. de condictis ob turpem causam, where Ulpian has it expressly.

PROBATUR ex l. 4. §. Sed et quod meretrici, ff. de condictis ob turpem causam, ubi Ulpianus id habet expresse.

4 IT IS PROVED secondly by the reason of Cajetan, Valencia, and others, which they proclaim subtle. First, for every act estimable by a price, a price can be accepted; but the act of a prostitute is such: Therefore. The major is proved, because it suffices to act upon the proper object of a virtue, and to bestow an action upon it, even if, by reason of a circumstance elsewhere, that act is opposed to some virtue distinct from Justice, as Eligius Bassaeus infers, verb. Restitutio, 4. num. 3.

PROBATUR secundo ratione a Caietano, Valentia, et aliis, quam subtilem conclamant. Primo pro omni actu pretio aestimabili potest accipi pretium; sed actus meretricius est talis: Ergo. Maior probatur, quia sufficit agere circa proprium virtutis obiectum, et super illud cadere actionem, etiamsi aliunde ratione circumstantiae actus ille opponatur alicui virtuti, distinctae a Iustitia, ut infert Eligius Bassaeus, verb. Restitutio, 4. num. 3.

5 It is, moreover, the proper object of Justice whatever thing is estimable by a price. The major is confirmed by an example; for a thing that is sold, in a forbidden time or place, is transferred by law: The minor is proved; for the act of a prostitute offers to a man the material of a certain natural delight: Therefore it is estimable by a price, no otherwise than the act of offering foods, etc., even for procuring drunkenness. That is the reason of Ven. Bonaventure, I may say.

Est autem obiectum proprium Iustitiae quaecumque res pretio est aestimabilis. Confirmatur Maior, exemplo; nam res, quae venditur, tempore, vel loco vetito, iure transfertur: Minor probatur; nam meretricium exhibet materiam cuidam homini naturalis delectationis: Ergo est pretio aestimabilis, non secus, ac actus exhibendi cibos, etc. etiam ad ebrietatem procurandam. Ea est ratio D. Bonauent. ut dicam.

6 YOU OBJECT first. If these things can rightly be accepted: Therefore they can also be offered to God. And yet Deuteronomy 23. we read: Thou shalt not offer the hire of a prostitute in the house of the Lord.

OBIICIES primo. Si haec recte possent accipi: Ergo et Deo offerri. Et tamen Deuter. 23. legitur: Non offeres mercedem prostibuli in domo Domini.

7 VALENCIA ANSWERS from Ven. Bonav. loc. cit. that the price of prostitution is not rejected because it be of another's, but on account of indecency, just as an offering from the price of a Dog was also rejected.

RESPONDET Valentia ex D. Bonau. loc. cit. non respui pretium meretricii, quia sit de alieno, sed ob indecentiam, sicuti etiam oblatio ex pretio Canis respuebatur.

OBIICIES secundo Iura, quae generatim astruunt, non posse pro re turpi accipi mercedem, neque valere pactum, aut condictum de illa l. Generaliter, l. si flagitii, ff. de verb. oblig. l. Mercatem, C. de Condictio ob turpem causam. Et l. Iulius genitum §. si ob maleficium, ff. de pactis.

9 VALENCIA ANSWERS from Ven. Bonav. loc. cit. that the Laws are understood of actions which are against Justice, and are possessed in bad faith, such as deceptive pacts, pernicious to life; as those who expose prices to tormentors for torturing others. Such are usurious pacts, and others of this kind, in which dominion is not transferred upon the rendering, namely, of some thing estimable by a price, such as the offering of the body to luxury. Although that action is not estimable formally, as it is evil; yet it is estimated, as naturally delectable; and from this gather that in the Seraphic Doctor are held all the things that pertain to the decision of this matter, while he says that a translation of dominion of money takes place in prostitution. But the most pure Virgin blushed to say what a prostitute gives, but only says that that action is sufficient to transfer dominion, in which manner Casas also speaks disp. 8. sect. 1.

RESPONDET Valentia ex D. Bonau. loc. cit. Iura intelligi de actionibus, quae sunt contra Iustitiam, et malae fide possidentur, ut sunt pactiones deceptoriae, perniciosae ad vitam; ut qui in tormentis pretia exponunt ferentibus alios. Talia sunt pacta usuraria, et alia huiusmodi, in quibus non transfertur dominium ex redditione, scilicet alicuius rei pretio aestimabilis, qualis est exhibitio corporis ad luxum. Quamuis autem illa actio non sit aestimabilis formaliter, ut mala est; tamen aestimatur, ut delectabilis naturaliter; et hinc collige, in Seraphico haberi omnia, quae ad huius rei decisionem spectant, dum ait, fieri translationem dominii pecuniae in meretricio. Erubuit autem purissimus Virgo dicere, quid det meretrix, sed solum ait, quod illa actio est sufficiens ad transferendum dominium, quo pacto loquitur etiam Caspensis disp. 8. sect. 1.

10 If, however, any arguments seem to prove that this fee is illicit; they prove it only as to baseness formally; or as to those not having dominion, such as wards.

Si quae autem argumenta probare videntur, mercedem hanc esse illicitam; probant solum quoad turpitudinem formaliter; vel quoad non habentes dominium, ut sunt pupilli.

11 But what I said about exposed prostitutes must be said also of private concubines, as to the internal forum, as Valencia notes, and Covarruvias loc. cit. Medina ad 5. Sotus lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. and others. The reason is that brought forward above.

QUOD vero dixi de meretricibus expositis, dicendum et de concubinis privatis, quoad forum internum, ut aduertit Valentia, et Couar. loc. cit. Medina ad 5. Sotus. lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. et alii. Ratio est supra allata.

12 IN the external forum, indeed, a fee cannot be accepted for those hidden acts which, if they were known, are punished; and consequently not in the internal forum either, after the judge's sentence has been laid down. For no one can enjoy the benefit of the law on account of an act which by law is to be punished. So Covarruvias above, Valencia loc. cit. and it is commonly gathered. ex l. Mercalem, C. de condictio ob turpitud. et l. Lucius Titius; ff. de Iure fisci. See Bassaeus loc. cit. Syluius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Fill. tract. 31. cap. 9. quaest. 9. et 10.

IN foro vero externo non posse mercedem accipi pro iis actibus occultis, qui, si sciantur, puniuntur; atque adeo neque in foro interno, post latam iudicis sententiam. Nullus enim potest gaudere iuris beneficio propter actum, qui iure est puniendus. Ita Couar. supra, Valentia loc. cit. et communiter et colligitur. ex l. Mercalem, C. de condictio ob turpitud. et l. Lucius Titius; ff. de Iure fisci. Vide Bassaeum loc. cit. Syluium 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Fill. tract. 31. cap. 9. quaest. 9. et 10.

13 MOREOVER, concerning the hidden acts of other prostitutes, estimable by a price, which by law are not usually punished; Valencia says that each part is probable. But the price given by a Religious to a prostitute must be restored to the monastery, as Casas teaches, loc. cit. Vasquez cap. 7. dub. 3. and commonly, in Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 5. num. 33.

> CAETERUM de actibus aliarum meretricum occultatum, pretio aestimabilibus, qui iure non soleant puniri; ait Valentia, utramque partem esse probabilem. Pretium vero, datum a Religioso meretrici, est restituendum monasterio, ut docet Caspens. loc. cit. Vasquez cap. 7. dub. 3. et communiter apud Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 5. num. 33.

14 But before the act, nothing can be accepted, because he is held to abstain from the wicked work; therefore the contract must be rescinded, as Bassaeus says with others.

> Ante vero factum nihil accipi potest, quia tenetur abstinere ab opere pravo, ideo rescindendus contractus, ut ait Bassaeus cum aliis.

Doubt VI: When things acquired by fowling, fishing, and hunting are to be restored

1 I SPEAK as to Wild Beasts, Fish, and Birds, which by the law of nations can be free, and then no restitution is to be made, if they are captured, because thus they become the first occupant's.

> LOQUOR quoad Feras, Pisces, et Aues, quae iure gentium liberae esse possunt, et tunc non est restitutio facienda, si capiantur, quia sic fiunt primo occupantis.

2 WHEN, however, they are fed by someone in enclosed places, so that he may take them at will, or they go and return home. These, however, if they inflict damage on others, compel to restitution. And this seems true also of Doves; yet Sylvester does not compel them, verb. restit. 2. quaest 4. nor Valencia quaest. 6. punct. 5. bringing forward a witty reason, because by fertilizing the fields with their droppings, they give back as much as they damage.

> QUANDO vero aluntur ab aliquo in locis septis, ut pro libito ea capiat, vel eant, et redeant domum. Hae tamen, si damnum aliis inferant, cogent ad restitutionem. Et hoc videtur etiam de Columbis; sed tamen non cogunt Sylvester verb. restit. 2. quaest 4. nec Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. afferens lepide rationem, quia stercorando campos, tantum reddunt quantum damnificant.

3 FURTHERMORE, that Dovecotes are licit is commonly asserted with Navarrus num 126. See Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 352. Casas disp. 6. sect. 1. But if they fly often to another's Dovecote, and rest and dwell there, dominion is transferred. Instit. de rerum divisione.

> PORRO Columbaria esse licita communiter astruunt cum Nauarro num 126. Vide Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 6. num. 352. Caspensem disp. 6. sect. 1. Quod si ad alterius Columbarium saepius euolent, et ibi quiescant, et habitent, transfertur dominium. Instit. de rerum divisione.

4 THE SAME is said of Wild Beasts fleeing away, so that you can no longer pursue them, and of Bees ex Instit. cit. §. ff. lib. 3. 4. et 5. See Tannerus num. 354.

> IDEM dicitur de Feris aufugientibus, ut non amplius eas prosequi queas, et de Apibus ex Instit. cit. §. ff. lib. 3. 4. et 5. Vide Tannerum num. 354.

5 SECOND, if Beasts, fish, or birds are captured in a place reserved by the Prince, they seem to be things to be restored. Valencia, however, presupposes quaest. 6. punct. 5. Medina quaest. 12. de rebus restit. Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 4. Nauar. cap. 17. num. 120. and 114. that the Prince can reserve to himself certain places for hunting for his recreation from the labors and occupations which he sustains for the public good: He proves this at length, Covarruvias relect. in Reg. peccatum, p. 2. § 8. and there follow Casas disp. 6. sect. 2. Diana p. 2. Tract. 6. resol. 18. Valerus v. peccatum, differ. 16. who also extends the same to certain magnates, with Villalob. Tom. 1. Tract. 10. diffic. 16. num. 7. Wherefore Diana says that a certain Magnate defended himself in this way. So also Tannerus num. 350.

> SECUNDO si Ferae, pisces, aut aues capiantur in loco reservato a Principe, videntur restituenda. Supponit autem Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Medina quaest. 12. de rebus restit. Sotos lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 4. Nauar. cap. 17. num. 120. et 114. posse Principem sibi aliqua loca ad venationem reservare pro recreatione a laboribus, et occupationibus, quas pro bono publico sustinet: Id probat late Couar. relect. in Reg. peccatum, p. 2. § 8. et sequuntur Caspensis disp. 6. sect. 2. Diana p. 2. Tract. 6. resol. 18. Valerus v. peccatum, differ. 16. qui etiam ad aliquos magnates idipsum extendit cum Villalob. Tom. 1. Tract. 10. diffic. 16. num. 7. Quare Diana ait, sic se defendisse quemdam Magnatem. Sic et Tannerus num. 350.

6 YET with this condition, that they inflict no damage on the peoples unwilling. But if they consent truly, and spontaneously, the Prince will not be held to restitution. So Cajetan opusc. 17. qq. cap. 11. Covarruvias num. 11. Navarrus num. 110. and Valencia. Ven. Bonaventure also asserts the same. Note that hunting is forbidden to clerics, clamosa cap. 1. de cler. ven. yet if it be exercised with a few dogs, Diana concedes it p. 2. Tract. 6. resol. 19. Indeed, hunting is rarely permitted, even though it be clamorous; with Valero v. Peccatum, diff. 20. and Rebellion lib. 1. quaest. 14. num. 10. and others.

> HAc tamen conditione, ut non inferant damnum populis invitis. Quod si consentiant vere, et sponte, non tenebitur Princeps restitutioni. Ita Caietanus opusc. 17. qq. cap. 11. Couar. num. 11. Nauarr. num. 110. et Valentia. Id ipsum asserit etiam D. Bonau. Adverte, clericis vetitam venationem, clamosam cap. 1. de cler. ven. si tamen quibusdam paucis canibus exerceatur, eam concedit Diana p. 2. Tract. 6. resol. 19. Imo, et rara permittitur, sit licet clamosa; cum Valero v. Peccatum, diff. 20. et Rebellio lib. 1. quaest. 14. num. 10. et aliis.

Doubt VII: When things acquired by the use of common things are to be restored

1 IT happens not infrequently that wood is cut from the Community's Forests, and animals graze in its meadows.

> Quando restituenda sint, quae sunt acquisita per usum rerum communium.
> SOlent nonnunquam e Sylvis Communitatis ligna caedi, et animalia in pratis ipsius pasci.

2 IT IS ANSWERED that he is held to restitution of what he takes immoderately beyond what is licit to anyone as a member of the community. So Valencia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Except, if he is as it were in extreme need; for then he can even take what is necessary from the Forests of anyone whatsoever, as Sotus teaches lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 4. Medina quaest. 12. de restit. Valencia loc. cit. Tannerus num. 348. Molina Tom. 1. tract. 2. disp. 58. Salon. quaest. 62. art. 3. controu. 2.

> RESPONDE TUR, teneri ad restitutionem eius, quod immoderate super id, quod alicui licet, ut membro communitatis. Ita Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. Excipe, si quasi extreme indigeat; tunc enim etiam de Sylvis quorumlibet potest necessarium accipere, ut docent Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 4. Medina quaest. 12. de restit. Valentia loc. cit. Tannerus num. 348. Molina Tom. 1. tract. 2. disp. 58. Salon. quaest. 62. art. 3. controu. 2.

Doubt VIII: Whether things acquired in illicit games are to be restored

1 I do not speak of gains made through games of lawful industry, which one may use moderately for refreshment; for this is the virtue of Eutrapelia, as Aristotle teaches in book 4 of the Ethics, chapter

8, and St. Thomas in question 168, article 2, and commonly others. What is acquired in this way is not to be restored.

> An acquisita ludis illicitis, sint restituenda.
> NOn loquor de acquisitis per ludos licitos industriae, quibus uti licet moderate ad levamen; estque virtus Eutrapeliae, ut tradit Aristoteles 4. Eth. cap. 8. et D. Thom. quaest. 168. art. 2. et communiter alii. His acquisitum, non est restituendum.

2 The question therefore concerns games that depend wholly, or for the greater part, on chance; and thus the game of dice is forbidden to all, both Clerics and Laics, C. Episcopus 35, distinction; and C. Clerici 2, extra, de vita et honestate clericorum, and l. solent ff. de aleae usu et aleatoribus. And Auth. alearum usus, C. de religiosis et sumptibus fund. Under this game, too, all similar games of chance are forbidden, as Navarra observes, chapter 20, number 6, Valencia question 6, point 5, with St. Bonaventure in the place cited.

> Est igitur quaestio de ludis, qui omnino, vel maiori ex parte pendent a fortuna, et ita prohibetur ludus Alearum omnibus, tum Clericis, tum Laïcis, C. Episcopus 35. distinct. Et C. Clerici 2. extra, de vita, et honest. clericorum, et l. solent ff. de aleae usu, et aleat. Et Auth. alearum usus, C. de religiosis, et sumptibus fund. Sub hoc autem ludo prohibentur omnes ludi similes fortunae, ut observat Nauar. cap. 20. num. 6. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. cum D. Bonau. loco citando.

3 The question is: whether dominion is acquired by such games.

> Quaeritur vero: An his ludis acquiratur dominium.

4 The FIRST opinion is that dominion is acquired, if there be no fraud or deceit, and the player may alienate what he wins, and no law exists forbidding the transfer of such dominion. So Alensis, book 4, question 86, member 3, article 6; Adrianus de Restit.; Ioan. Maior in 4, distinction 15, question 13; Gabriel, same distinction, question 13, articles 1 and 2; Couar. in Reg. Peccatum, part 2, § 4; Caiet. 2. 2, question 32, article 7, and in the Summa, v. Ludus; Ioan. Medina de rebus restituendis; Sotus, book 4, de Iustitia, question 5, article 2; Navar. in Manuale, chapters 20 and 29; Valencia, disp. 5, question 6, point 5; Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum, chapter 17, number 11; Molina, Tract. 1, de Iustitia, disp. 99; Syluest. v. Lex, question 18; Castro, question 41; Salon. question 5, de dominio, article 6; Lessius, book 2, chapter 16, dub. 3; Tannerus, dub. 8. And much more strongly do those hold this who say that he is not bound to restitution who, having lost much money at dice, compelled the player to persist in the game and redeemed all the losses and others besides, as Lessius, book 2, chapter 26, dub. 1; Gerfias de contractibus, part 2, chapter 19; Diana, part 1, Tract. 17, resol. 27; and those who compel payment of the money lost at dice: Azor. part 3, book 5, chapter 24, question 7; Bannes 2. 2, question 32, article 7; Rebell. part 2, book 12, question 8, number 6; Salon. 2. 2, question 62, article 6, question 5.

> *PRIMA opinio est, acquiri dominium, si absit fraus, et dolus, et colludens potuerit alienare, neque ulla Lex extet prohibens talis dominii translationem. 5 The SECOND opinion is that winnings from such games are subject to restitution. So Palud, book 4, distinction 15, question 3, article 5; Rich. article 5, question 8; Panorm. on cap. Clerici 2, de vita et honestate clericorum, and on cap. Quia plerique, de Immunitate Ecclesiae; and certain other Canonists whom Gabriel cites, book 4, distinction 15, question 13, article 1. St. Bonaventure in 4, distinction 15, part 2, article 2, question 1, is also alleged by Valencia and others.

Bonau. in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. a Valentia, et aliis

6 BUT let us hear the Saintly Doctor in his reply to the fourth objection. For when he had said that a possessor in bad faith cannot spend in alms the things he possesses in bad faith, such as stolen goods, he adds: If, however, the question concerns a gambler, it must be said generally that he is a possessor in bad faith and possesses under an unjust title; and therefore he must in no way keep for himself what he has won, since such a game is base and reprobate, against God and against all the laws. Whether, however, he is bound to restore, some distinguish: for either the one from whom he won is such a person as cannot govern his own affairs, as for instance a Minor, or a Pupillus, a Deaf man, a Mute, or one languishing with perpetual disease; and thus he is bound to restore. But if he is such a person as could lose; or whether he was dragged into it and induced by him, or not: if he was dragged in by him, he is not bound to restore to him, because to him no repetition belongs in vindication of sin, but he may make alms of it. But if he himself dragged him in, he cannot make alms of it, but is bound to restore, at least in the forum of conscience; because, although no one wishes to lose, nevertheless he who does not wish to lose, nor to play, but is induced, seems less culpable; and the other who induces, more so; and therefore the former ought not to be damaged, nor ought the author or the inducer to be in any way bettered: yet no one may on that account convert any of the acquired gain to his own uses. The same judgment must be made concerning Tournaments; and it must be said that in those pacts which they make among themselves, goods are not transferred between them, but are turned to the uses of the poor on account of the dishonesty of the game and the interdiction of the law. Thus St. Bonaventure.

SED audiamus S. Doctorem in resp. ad 4. Cum enim dixisset, malae fidei possessorem non posse de his, quae mala fide possidet, erogare in eleemosynam, qualia sunt furta; subdit: Si vero quaeritur de Aleatore, dicendum est generaliter, quod est malae fidei possessor, et iniusto possidet titulo: Et ideo nullo modo debet sibi tenere, quod lucratus est, cum talis ludus sit turpis, et reprobatus, et contra Deum, et contra omnia Iura. Utrum tamen teneatur restituere, distinguunt aliqui, quia aut ille, a quo lucratus est, talis sit persona, quae rebus suis praeesse non potest, ut puta Minor, siue Pupillus, Surdus, Mutus, aut perpetuo morbo languidus: et sic tenetur restituere: Si autem sit talis persona, quae potuit amittere; aut tractus est ab illo, et inductus; aut non; si tractus est ab illo, non tenetur illi restituere, quia illi non competit repetitio in vindictam peccati, sed potest inde facere eleemosynam. Si autem ipse traxit eum, non potest eleemosynam facere, sed tenetur restituere, saltem in foro conscientiae; quia, licet nullus velit amittere, tamen, qui non vult amittere, nec ludere, sed inducitur, minus culpabilis videtur; et alius, qui inducit, magis; et ideo iste non debet damnificari; nec auctor, nec inductor in aliquo meliorari: nulli tamen licet ex hoc aliquid lucri acquisiti in proprios usus convertere. Similiter iudicandum est de Torneamentis, et > dicendum, quod in illis pactionibus, quas habent inter se, bona non transferuntur inuicem, sed in usus pauperum convertuntur propter ludi inhonestatem, et iuris interdictionem. Haec S. Bonaventura.

7 Likewise in the Speculum animae, chapter 2, he says: The fifth fruit of rapine is the game of dice, or of dice-boards, which is forbidden both by Canonical and by Civil law. Hence some say of it that it is mortal sin, in that it is against Canonical and Civil law; and that what is gotten from play is possessed under no good title, nor can it be retained, but ought to be distributed to the poor. For he who gains in play gains unjustly, and he who loses loses justly; therefore he who gains is not bound to restore to him from whom he gained, unless perhaps he induced him to play. But since play seems to have from its root the character of mortal sin, because it evidently proceeds from avarice, and because many sins are communicated in play, namely fraud, lying, perjury, blasphemy, scandal, and frequently the loss of time, therefore this seems to be the cause of the prohibition of play. When one plays for the sake of recreation, with the aforesaid sins excluded, it does not seem to have the character of mortal sin. Thus the Saintly Doctor.

> SImiter in speculo animae, cap. 2. ait: Quintus fructus rapinae est ludus alearum, seu taxillorum, qui prohibitus est tam a iure Canonico, quam Ciuili. Unde de hoc dicunt quidam, quod sit peccatum mortale, eo quod sit contra Ius Canonicum, et Ciuile; et quod ex ludo habetur, nullo bono titulo possidetur, nec potest retineri, sed debet pauperibus erogari. Quia enim, qui in ludo lucratur, iniuste lucratur, et qui amittit, iuste amittit; ideo qui lucratur, eidem a quo lucratur, restituere non tenetur, nisi forte induxerit ad ludendum. Cum autem ludus satis videatur ex radice habere rationem mortalis peccati, quia scilicet ex avaritia videtur procedere, et quia ludo multa communicantur peccata, scilicet fraus, mendacium, periurium, blasphemia, scandalum, amissio temporis, et ita frequenter. Ideo haec causa prohibitionis ludi esse videtur. Cum ludit aliquis causa recreationis, peccatis supradictis exclusis, non videtur habere rationem mortalis. Haec S. Doctor.

8 From all this you have that St. Bonaventure spoke as reporting the opinion of others, and is not to be reprehended by Valencia and others in anything.

> Ex his omnibus habes, S. Bonav. locutum, referendo opinionem aliorum; nec reprehendendum a Valentia, et aliis in aliquo.

9 First, indeed, he says that the game of dice is forbidden by both Laws; and this I showed above, with the laws adduced.

> Primo enim dicit, ludum alearum esse ab utroque Iure vetitum; et hoc supra ostendi, relatis iuribus.

10 Next he teaches that playing at dice and dice-boards seems on this account to be mortal sin.

> Deinde docet, ideo videri peccatum mortale aleis, et taxillis ludere.

11 As for Clerics and Religious, they sin mortally by transgressing these laws, where the contrary has not been abrogated by custom, if they play for a notable sum, and especially from the fruits of benefices, as Navar. chapter 20, number 9 and Sotus, book 4, de Iustitia, question 5, article 2 assert, although Cajetan sometimes hesitates in doubt concerning Clerics who are prelates. The same he asserts in the Summa, verb. Ludus; concerning these Sotus asserts the same less doubtfully, and it is proved from C. Episcopus 35, distinction, and C. Inter dilectos, extra, de excessibus praelatorum, where a cleric is ordered to be deposed for the use of dice, a penalty that is not inflicted except for mortal fault, as is gathered from C. Non affirmamus, 24, question 1 — Valencia subscribes.

> De clericis quidem, et Religiosis, peccare eos mortaliter transgredientes has leges, ubi contraria consuetudine non sint abrogatae; si ludant pro notabili quantitate, et praesertim ex fructibus beneficiorum, asserunt Navar. cap. 20. num. 9.

Sotus l. 4. de Iust. quaest. 5. art. 2. licet aliquando dubius haesitet Caietanus de Clericis, qui sint praelati; Idem asserit in summa, verb. Ludus; de quibus id asserit Sotus minus dubitanter, et probatur ex C. Episcopus 35 distinct. et C. Inter dilectos extra, de excessibus praelat. ubi clericus ob aleae usum iubetur deponi, quae poena non infligitur, nisi ob culpam mortalem, ut colligitur ex C. Non affirmamus 24. quaest. 1. subscribit Valentia.

12 ¶ As for Laics, however, Navarra, Sotus, Cajetan, and Valencia himself judge that they do not sin mortally, the other few circumstances against the natural law being excluded, of which mention was made above. The reason is that either those laws do not bind Laics so severely, and are derogated by custom, at least as regards mortal sin. The Saintly Doctor speaks almost in the same way and to the same effect.

13 He adds, that these games are not forbidden by these laws and Decrees if they are instituted principally for recreation: and this the Doctors gather, and among them Valencia from l. Quod in convivio, ff. de Aleae usu; but if it is exercised principally for gain, as Navarra notes, number 6, and Valencia in the place cited from the cause.

Addit, his legibus, et Decretis, non prohiberi hos ludos, si instituantur principaliter ob recreationem: Et hoc colligunt Doctores, et inter eos Valentia ex l. Quod in convivio, ff. de Aleae usu; sed, si principaliter exerceatur ob lucrum, ut notat ex causa Navar. num. 6. et Valentia loco citato.

14 He teaches, therefore, that he who dragged another in, and efficaciously induced him to play, if he prevails, is bound to restitution; the same St. Thomas asserted, question 32, article 7, ad 2; and Valencia teaches this to be clear even before the sentence of the Judge; and he alleges the Doctors related above for his opinion; for this St. Thomas signified by the same words concerning him who dragged another to play; but Valencia says that traction is understood not as any kind of attraction whatever, for this does not suffice to impede the translation of dominion — in which Adrianus, deceived, expounds St. Thomas badly, as Valencia, Couar., and Medina, adduced above, noted — but it is understood of violence, with manifest force, or with most importunate prayers, which suffuse with shame, for instance if he object that he is a poor man, as the same Doctors above expound, and with them Valencia.

Docet proinde, eum, qui traxit alium, et efficaciter induxit ad ludum, si luctetur, teneri ad restitutionem, quod idem asseruit D. Thom. quaest. 32. art. 7. ad 2. et hoc clarum esse docet Valentia, etiam ante Iudicis sententiam; et allegat Doctores, supra relatos pro sua sententia; hoc enim significavit eisdem verbis S. Thomas de eo, qui traxit ad ludum; tractionem autem ait Valentia intelligi non quamlibet attractionem, nam haec non sufficit ad impediendam dominii translationem; in quo deceptus Adrianus exponit male D. Thomam, ut notarunt Valentia, Couar. et Medina allati; sed intelligitur violentia, vi manifesta, vel importunissimis precibus, quae rubore suffundant, puta si opponat, eum pauperem esse, ut iidem Doctores supra exponunt, et cum eis Valentia.

15 Furthermore, that he is bound to restitution — besides those alleged by Valencia — hold Clavis reg. l. 11. cap. 15; Malderus 2. 2, Tract. 1, chapter 12, dub. 3; Fernandez in suo examine Theologiae moralis, part 1, chapter 15, § 6; Molfesius Tom. 2, tract. 12, chapter 21, number 59. Add Toletus book 5, chapter 27; Megalam 2. 2, book 2, chapter 19, question 2, number 16, speaking of him who knows and compels his companion to persist in the game, and recovers what was lost, and besides gains other things besides: they say he is bound to restore at least these super-gains, as Diana relates, part 1, resol. 27, adding it for the opinion of St. Bonaventure; Alphonso de Vega in summa, part 2, chapter 13, case 12; Rebellius de obligatione iustitiae, part 2, book 12, question 3; Azorius part 3, chapter 29, book 5, question 1; Valencia loc. cit.; Comitolus in resolutionibus Moralibus, book 3, question 9; Salam Tract. de Ludo, disp. 6; Bannes, and Aragon. 2. 2, question 32, article 7, ad 7.

> Porro hunc teneri ad restitutionem, praeter allegatos a Valentia, tenent Clavis reg. l. 11. cap. 15. Malderus 2. 2. Tract. 1. cap. 12. dub. 3. Fernandez in suo exam. Theol. moral. p. 1. cap. 15. §. 6. Molfesius Tom. 2. tract. 12. cap. 21. num. 59. Adde Toletum l. 5. cap. 27. Megalam 2. 2. l. 2. cap. 19. quaest. 2. num. 16. loquentes de eo, qui sciat, et coëgit socium ad permanendum in ludo, et recuperavit amissa, et insuper alia lucrificet, aiunt teneri ad haec saltem superlucrata restituenda, ut refert Diana p. 1. resol. 27. addens pro sententia S. Bonav. Alphonso de Vega in summa p. 2. cap. 13. casu 12. Rebellium de oblig. iust. p. 2. lib. 12. quaest. 3. Azorium p. 3. cap. 29. lib. 5. quaesito 1. Valentiam loc. cit. Comitolum in resol. Moral. lib. 3. quaest. 9. Salam Tract. de Ludo disp. 6. Bannes, et Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 7. ad 7.

16 It is proved, because he who thus plays plays involuntarily. This is the reason of St. Bonaventure above, which opinion, because of the reasons by which it is supported, Reginald says is to be followed, Tom. 1, book 10, chapter 25, number 385; and Diana judges it not improbable, loc. cit., and Lessius book 2, chapter 26, dub. 2, number 9.

> Probatur*, quia, qui ita ludit, involuntarie ludit. Haec est ratio D. Bonau. supra, quam opinionem propter rationes, quibus nititur, sequendam ait Reginald.* Tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 25. num. 385. nec improbabilem credit Diana loc. cit. et Lessius l. 2. cap. 26. dub. 2. num. 9.

17 The Saintly Doctor adds that he who was dragged in and won is not bound to restore, which nearly all those alleged sustain. The reason of St. Bonaventure is that the privilege of repetition, granted by law, does not belong to the one who dragged him in, because by the dragging he renders himself unworthy of it.

> Addit S. Doct. eum, qui tractus est, et vicit, non teneri restituere, quod omnes fere allegati sustinent. Ratio D. Bonau. est, quia tractori non competit repetitionis privilegium, a iure concessum, quia tractione, se indignum reddit.

18 He asserts also that he who won money — truly in a notable sum — from those who cannot govern their own affairs, whom he enumerates with other similar cases, is bound to restore; which Valencia also holds, loc. cit., and others with him. Nay, Molina tom. 1, disp. 142; Sanchez book 6, disp. 38; Lessius book 2, chapter 17, dub. 8, after the Gloss, Navarra, Lopez, Corduba, and others with Sanchez, teach that boys within a decade and a half year of puberty, and girls within nine years and a half, remain naturally bound by onerous contracts, yet not concerning immovables and other things that must be preserved for themselves — unless, however, they contract even with Tutors. Which doctrine relieves Confessors of the burden.

> Asserit etiam eum, qui vicit pecunias, sane in notabili quantitate ab his, qui res suas regere nequeunt, quos recenset cum aliis similibus, teneri restituere, quod tenent etiam Valentia loc. cit. et alii apud eum. Imo Molina tom. 1. disp. 142. Sanchez l. 6. disp. 38. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 17. dub. 8. post Glossam Nauarrum, Lopez, Cordubam, et alios apud Sanchez docent, proximos pubertati pueros decennio, et dimidio anni, puellas novennio, et dimidio, manere obligatos naturaliter contractibus onerosis, non tamen circa immobilia, et alia, quae sibi sunt servanda nisi tamen etiam cum Tutoribus contrahant. Quae doctrina eximit a molestia Confessarios.

19 Whether, however, he who neither dragged another in, nor was dragged, but played as an equal partner, is bound to restitution, he defines nothing; he only says, If he acquired, he is a possessor in bad faith, inasmuch as he acquired against the laws, and he ought not convert those monies to his own uses, but ought to give them to the poor, because absolute dominion is not transferred peacefully, inasmuch as the laws resist and give rise to repetition, and because it is base gain, acquired against the laws. Yet he does not assert this in his own settled sense.

> An vero is, qui nec traxit alium, nec fuit tractus, sed consors lusit, teneatur restitutioni, nihil definit; solum ait, Si acquisivit, esse possessorem malae fidei, quippe contra iura acquisivit, et non debet illas pecunias in usus suos convertere, sed debet dare pauperibus, quia non transfertur absolutum dominium pacifice, eo quod iura resistant, et inducant repetitionem, et quia est lucrum turpe, contra leges adeptum. Hoc vero non astruit proprio sensu resoluto.

20 For therefore he who lost is not compelled to pay in court, and an action is given for recovering what was lost, if he has already paid — which the Saintly Doctor understands after the sentence of the judge, with Medina, Couar., Soto, and others who thus expound St. Thomas, with whom Valencia subscribed.

> Ideo enim non cogitur in iudicio solvere, qui perdidit, et datur actio ad repetenda amissa, si iam solvit, quod sane post sententiam iudicis intelligit S. Doct. cum Medina, Couar. Soto, et aliis, qui ita exponunt D. Thomam quibus subscripsit Valentia.

21 Finally, that he who lost is not bound in conscience, and played in hope and in good faith, teach Malderus 2. 2, tract. 3, chapter 12, dub. 3; Lessius book 2, chapter 26, dub. 4; Aragon. 1. 2, question 21, article 7, and question 62, article 1; Ledesma Tom. 2, tract. 31, chapter 2; Molina Tom. 2, tract. 2, disp. 515; Philiarc. T. 2, p. 2, book 5, chapter 2, number 11; Toletus book 5, chapter 27; Diana part 1, Tract. 17, resol. 8, and Tract. 5, resol. 44, and Tract. 4, resol. 169.

> Tandem*, non teneri in conscientia eum, qui perdidit, et in spe, ac in fide lusit, docent Malderus* 2. 2. tract. 3. cap. 12. dub. 3. Lessius l. 2. cap. 26. dub. 4. Aragon. 1. 2. quaest. 21. art. 7. et quaest. 62. art. 1. Ledesma Tom. 2. tract. 31. cap. 2. Molina Tom. 2. tract. 2. disp. 515. Philiarc. T. 2. p 2. l. 5. cap. 2. num. 11. Toletus l. 5. cap. 27. Diana p. 1. Tract. 17. resol. 8. et Tract. 5. resol. 44. qui Tract. 4. resol. 169.

22 The same he says of him who won from one playing with false cards. The reason is that to him to whom an action for recovering is given, an exception not to pay is conceded a fortiori, according to the rules of both Laws; but in a forbidden game, as I said, an action for recovering is given. Medina subscribes, book 1, chapter 14, § 29; Couar. reg. Peccatum, part 2, § 4, number 8; and eighteen Doctors with Salam Tract. 1, de contractibus, disp. 20.

> Idem ait de eo, qui vicit ludentem chartis falsis. Ratio est, quia cui datur actio ad repetendum, a fortiori conceditur exceptio ad non solvendum, iuxta regulas utriusque Iuris; sed in ludo prohibito, ut dixi, datur actio ad repetendum. Subscribunt Medina l. 1. cap. 14. §. 29. Couar. reg. Peccatum, p. 2. §. 4. num. 8. et decem et octo Doctores apud Salam Tract. 1. de contract. disp. 20.

23 ¶ Understand this standing in the common law; for if in some places repetition is not granted to the loser, nor is the exception conceded that he need not pay.

24 ¶ This is the opinion of St. Bonaventure loc. cit., where he concedes repetition to him who lost, and consequently the exception not to pay.

25 Many, however, with Diana teach that he is bound to pay; Azor. part 3, book 5, chapter 24, question 7; Bannes 2. 2, question 32, article 7; Rebell. part 2, book 12, question 8, number 6; Valencia loc. cit.; Salon. 1. 2, question 62, article 6, question 5; Garzias de contractibus, book 2, chapter 29; Tanner. disp. 4, question 6, dub. 11; and others. The reason is that a promise, unless it is void by the law itself, binds: but this one in play is not void, but only an action for recovering is given, l. Alearum, C. de Religiosis et sumptibus.

> Multi tamen apud Dianam docent, hunc teneri solvere; Azor. p. 3. l. 5. cap. 24. quaesito 7. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 7. Rebell. p. 2. lib. 12. quaest. 8. num. 6. Valentia loc. cit. Salon. 1. 2. quaest. 62. art. 6. quaest. 5. Garzias de contract. l. 2. cap. 29. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 11. et alii. Ratio est, quia promissio, nisi ipso iure irrita sit, obligat: Sed haec in ludo non est irrita, sed solum datur actio ad repetendum l. Alearum, C. de Relig. et sumpt.

Doubt IX: What is to be restored by reason of finding

1 The Holy Doctor OBSERVES, in the Speculum Animae, cap. 2, that certain things are found on the seashore, or in common waters; certain by digging, as treasures, concerning which Fagundez treats at length in the seventh Precept of the Decalogue, lib. 7. cap. 22; certain by finding, which were under someone's dominion, and their owner is not found.

> Quaenam sint restituenda ratione inventionis.
> OBSERVAT S. Doct. in speculo animae, cap. 2. quaedam inveniri in littore maris, vel aquae communis; quaedam effossione, ut thesauros de quibus late Fagundez in septimum Praeceptum decalogi, lib. 7. cap. 22. Quaedam inventione, quae sub alicuius dominio erant, nec invenitur eorum dominus.

2 AS TO those things which are found on the seashore, it is certain that things cast up in a storm, or submerged by shipwrecks, belong to their owners; and indeed in the Bull of the Coena, those goods which are the Christians' are struck with anathema for usurping them, as Caspens. notes, disp. 7. sect. 1.

> QUOAD ea, quae inveniuntur in littore maris, certum est proiecta in tempestate, vel submersa naufragiis, esse dominorum, atque adeo in Bulla coenae ea bona, quae sunt Christianorum, usurpantes anathemate feriuntur, ut notat Caspens. disp. 7. sect. 1.

3 The QUESTION concerns things cast up by the sea, which never had an owner, such as Fish, Whales, Pebbles, Gems, Pearls, Amber, etc.

> QUAESTIO est de proiectis a mari, quae nunquam habuere dominum, ut sunt Pisces, Balenae, Lapilli, Gemmae, Uniones, Ambarum, etc.

4 The FIRST opinion is, that such things belong to the first occupant, whoever finds them. So Firmus v. Inventum, Gutierrez l. 2. quaest. can. cap. 9. Rodriquez in summa, cap. 197. Tannet. disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 7. and it is established from C. Ius generale and C. Ius gentium, dist. 1. and C. dilectissimi 12. quaest. 1. and l. 1. ff. de acq. rer. dominio from § 1. and §. singulorum, and §. capilli, and §. fere, Instit. de rerum divisione. This is the opinion of D. Bonav. loc. cit., and Caspens. disp. 7.

sect. 3. seems to suppose it, as common; and so it is often reported to have been defined in the royal senate of Lusitania, as Cabedo relates, 1. p. decisione 48. num. 9. and Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 22. num. 4. and so it is found in the Ordinationes Lusitanae, lib. 2. tit. 16. And the same is noted by Barthol. ad l. 3. ff. de acquir. rer. dominio. And Ripa l. Rem, quae nobis, ff. de acquir. possess. numero 34.

PRIMA opinio est, talia esse primi occupantis, qui ea invenerit. Ita Firmus v. Inventum, Gutierrez l. 2. quaest. can. cap. 9. Rodriquez in summa, cap. 197. Tannet. disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 7. et constat ex C. Ius generale et C. Ius gentium, dist. 1. et C. dilectissimi 12. quaest. 1. et l. 1. ff. de acq rendorum dominio ex § 1. et §. singulorum, et §. capilli, et §. fere, Instit. de rerum divisione. Haec est sententia D. Bonau. loc. cit. et videtur eam, ut communem, supponere Caspens. disp. 7. sect. 3. et ita saepe definitum in senatu regio Lusitano refert Cabedo 1. p. decisione 48. num. 9. et Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 22. num. 4. et ita habetur in Ordinationibus Lusitanis lib. 2. tit. 16. Et idem notant Barthol. ad l. 3. ff. de acquir. rerum dominio. Et Ripa l. Rem, quae nobis, f. de acquir. possess. numero 34.

5 Cabedo ADDS at decis. 48. that amber indeed, found on the seashore, belongs to the first occupant and finder; but that whales belong to the King; from which it also follows that amber drawn from the whale's belly belongs to the king. Yet Cabedo says it was decided that amber, which is ambra, a kind of fragrance, does not belong to the King, nor is the fifth part of the royal treasury owed from it.

ADDITTAMEN Cabedo decis. 48. Ambarum quidem, in littore inventum, esse primi occupatoris, et inventoris; at Balenas ad Regem pertinere; ex quo etiam sequitur, Ambarum, quod e Balenae extrahitur ventre, ad regem pertinere. Sed tamen ait Cabedo, decisum esse, Ambarum, quod est ambra, odoramenti genus, ad Regem non pertinere, nec ex illo quintam partem Regiae Gazae deberi.

6 Yet the SECOND opinion was, that these findings belong to the Prince. So Angelus §. Item lapilli, Instit. de rerum divis. And as to amber it is proved, because the offspring follows the womb, as Barthol. says, l. si quis ex Pamphila, ff. de legatis. But whales belong to the King by custom: Therefore also amber: Yet this opinion is improbable; nor are the whales themselves, from which amber is obtained, the Kings' by common law.

SECUNDA tamen opinio fuit, haec inventa, esse Principis. Ita Angelus §. Item lapilli, Instit. de rerum divis. Et quoad Ambarum probatur, quia partus sequitur ventrem, ut ait Barthol. l. si quis ex Pamphila, ff. de legatis. Sed Balenae ex consuetudine ad Regem spectant: Ergo et Ambarum: Haec tamen opinio est improbabilis; neque ipsae Balenae, e quibus Ambarum habetur, ex iure communi sunt Regum.

7 AS TO animals wandering in alien lands, when even with diligence applied their owners could not be recognized, according to the Lusitanian Law in the new Ord. l. 2. tit. 26. they are the King's. The same Law is found in the Kingdom of Castile, lib. 6. tit. 13. Yet it is more probable that they are to be restored to the poor, as Peter Nauar. asserts, de restit. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 82. Fagundez loc. cit. num. 7. Armilla verbo Inventum. Paludanus in 4. dist. 15. and others.

QUOAD animalia errantia in terris alienis, cum nec adhibita etiam diligentia potuerunt agnosci eorum domini, iuxta Ius Lusitanum in novis ord. l. 2. tit. 26. sunt Regis. Eadem Lex habetur in Regno Castellae lib. 6. tit. 13. Attamen probabilius est, esse restituenda pauperibus, ut asserunt Petrus Nauar. de restit. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 82. Fagundez loc. cit. num. 7. Armilla verbo Inventum. Paludanus in 4. dist. 15. et alii.

8 AS TO inanimate goods which had some owner, such as money, clothes, gold, etc., whether they can be retained by the finders and by the rich, if after diligence their Owner is not found.

QUOAD bona inanimata, quorum dominus aliquis erat, ut pecuniae, vestes, aurum, etc. an possint retineri ab inventoribus, et divitibus, si post diligentiam non inveniatur earum Dominus.

9 The FIRST, affirmative opinion is that of Soto, de Iust. lib. 5. quaest. 3. art. 3. Aragonii 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 3. Petri Nauar. de restit. lib. 4. cap. 2. dub. 9. num. 75. Rodriquez summa p. 2. cap. 41. Sayri lib. 10. tract. 5. cap. 3. from num. 18. where he reports others, and Maldor. tract. 4. cap. 4. disp. 3. judges it probable. The reason is, because no law destines these things to the poor. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 14. with others holds this to be probable.

PRIMA opinio assertiva est Soti de Iust. lib. 5. quaest. 3. art. 3. Aragonii 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 3. Petri Nauar. de restit. lib. 4. cap. 2. dub. 9. num. 75. Rodriquez summa p. 2. cap. 41. Sayri lib. 10. tract. 5. cap. 3. a num. 18. ubi alios refert, et probabilem censet Maldor. tract. 4. cap. 4. disp. 3. Ratio est, quia nullo iure pauperibus haec sunt destinata. Id censet cum aliis Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 14. esse probabile.

10 The SECOND opinion is, that these are to be given to the poor. So Molina, Tract. de Iustitia, disp. 645. Rebell. p. 1. lib. quaest. 2. sect. 1. Lessius l. 2. cap. 14. dub. 7. Turtianus, 2. 2. disp. 42. dub. 2. Azorius tom. 3. l. 4. cap. 27. Count. ad reg. peccatum, p. 3. §. 1. Malder. tract. 4. cap. 4. disp. 3. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 5. ad 3. Gutrier. l. 2. qq. can. cap. 9. disp. 9. Syluester v. Restit. 3. quaest. 1. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 17. num. 91. et 171. Armilla, v. inventum, and v. restitutio, num. 20. and commonly all those whom Fagundez subscribes to in septimum praeceptum, lib. 7. cap. 22.

SECUNDA sententia est, haec danda pauperibus. Ita Molina Tract. de Iustitia, disp. 645. Rebell. p. 1. lib. quaest. 2. sect. 1. Lessius l. 2. cap. 14. dub. 7. Turtianus, 2. 2. disp. 42. dub. 2. Azorius tom. 3. l. 4. cap. 27. Count. ad reg. peccatum, p. 3. §. 1. Malder. tract. 4. cap. 4. disp. 3. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 5. ad 3. Gutrier. l. 2. qq. can. cap. 9. disp. 9. Syluester v. Restit. 3. quaest. 1. Nauar. summa Latina, cap. 17. num. 91. et 171. Armilla, v. inventum, et v. restitutio, num. 20. et communiter omnes, quibus subscribit Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, lib. 7. cap. 22.

11 The REASON is, because these must be judged as uncertain goods are. But those are the poor's: Therefore: The minor is proved from C. Cum in de usur. and C. cum sit nimis de Iudaeis, and 14. quaest. 5. canone Non sane. And l. omnes peregrini, Cod. de furtis eff., where it is defined that the goods of foreigners, who die in Hospitals, are to be applied to those Hospitals themselves.

RATIO est, quia ita de his iudicandum, ac de bonis incertis. Sed illae sunt pauperum: Ergo: Minor probatur ex C. Cum in de usur. et C. cum sit nimis de Iudaeis, et 14. quaest. 5. canone Non sane. Et l. omnes peregrini, Cod. de furtis eff. ubi definitur, bona peregrinorum, qui moriuntur in Hospitalibus, applicanda esse ipsis Hospitalibus.

12 But whether these are the poor's by positive law alone is in dispute with Fagundez cap. 21. and it seems more probable that they are owed by the law of nature.

An vero haec solo iure positivo sint pauperum; est in disputatione apud Fagundez cap. 21. et videtur probabilius iure naturae deberi.

13 Concerning these the Holy Doctor says; that they certainly cannot be retained, if it stands probable that they were under someone's dominion, and he brings forward that of D. August. serm. 21. de verb. Apostoli: If you have found anything, and have not returned it, you have stolen it. But if the owner cannot be found, the custom of the land is to be kept: The Holy Doctor indeed very well defines that, considering the variety of laws and customs in various regions, these matters are to be deliberated more maturely.

DE his S. Doct. ait; profecto non posse ea retineri, si probabiliter constat, fuisse sub alicuius dominio, et affert illud D. August. serm. 21. de verb. Apostoli: Si quid invenisti, et non reddidisti, rapuisti. Si autem possessor inveniri non potest, consuetudo terrae est servanda: Optime sane definit S. Doct. considerata varietate legum, et consuetudinum in variis regionibus, de his maturius deliberandum.

14 AS TO Treasures, a Treasure can thus be defined with D. Bonavent. loc. cit.: It is an old deposit of money, or of movable things, of whose dominion, or concealment, or of the depositor, no memory exists. So it is established from l. Unica, Cod. de Thesauris, and § Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione.

QUOAD Thesauros, Thesaurus sic definiri potest cum D. Bonavent. loc. cit. Est vetus depositio pecuniae, vel rerum mobilium, de quarum dominio, vel occultatione, depositaeque nulla extat memoria. Ita constat ex l. Unica, Cod. de Thesauris, et § Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione.

15 But a Treasure can be found in one's own field, or in another's land. Concerning that which is found in another's field, free from feud and emphyteusis, if treasures be dug up by chance, the Holy Doctor asserts that half belongs to the finder, the other half to the Lord of the field; it is plain from § Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione: And l. unica, Cod. de Thesauris; and this half part is owed to the Lord of the ground before any sentence, because this provision of law is not penal, but definitive of the ownership of things, and therefore binds before a sentence. Less. de Iust. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 15. num. 58. and 59. follow, Nauar. summa, cap. 17. num. 175. Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 2. Mercado de contract. cap. 15. num. 128. Sà verbo Thesaurus, Rebell. lib. 1. de oblig. iust. quaest. 15. sect. 2. Molina T. 1. de inst. disp. 56. and others agree. See Tannetum disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 5. who adds that by natural law precisely, the whole belongs to the finder.

POTEST autem inveniri Thesaurus in agro proprio, vel in terra aliena. De illo, qui reperitur in agro alieno, libero a feudo, et emphytheusi, si casu thesauri effodiantur, asserit S. Doct. esse dimidiam partem inventoris, alteram dimidiam Domini agri; patet ex § Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione: Et l. unica, Cod. de Thesauris, et haec dimidia pars debetur Domino fundi ante ullam sententiam, quia haec dispositio iuris non est poenalis, sed definitiva proprietatis rerum, et ideo ante sententiam obligat. Sequuntur Less. de Iust. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 15. num. 58. et 59. Nauar. summa, cap. 17. num. 175. Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 2. Mercado de contract. cap. 15. num. 128. Sà verbo Thesaurus, Rebell. lib. 1. de oblig. iust. quaest. 15. sect. 2. Molina T. 1. de inst. disp. 56. et conveniunt alii. Vide Tannetum disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 5. qui addit, iure naturali praecise, esse totum inventoris.

16 The Holy Doctor proves this from that passage of Matth. 13. where the man who finds the treasure is said: He went, and bought that field, so that the whole treasure might be his. For when it is found in his own field, the treasure is entirely the first occupant's, provided a real apprehension of it intervenes; for the bare, mere finding of it does not suffice; and this indeed by common law, as is plain from l. una, C. de Thesaur. and the said §. Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione; and Valasius teaches it, de Iure Emphytheutico, q. 15. n. 1. Fagund. num. 13. with Bartolo lib. 1. num. 17. and 18. ff. de acquir. possess. Cyno l. licet, num. 6. ff. on the same title, and others, in Valascus.

Id probat S. Doct. illo Matth. 13. ubi dicitur ille, qui invenit thesaurum: Abiit, et emit agrum illum, ut totus thesaurus esset suus. Cum enim invenitur in agro suo, thesaurus est totus primo occupantis, dummodo interveniat realis apprehensio eius; nec enim sufficit sola, et nuda inventio illius, et hoc quidem de iure communi, ut patet l. una, C. de Thesaur. et dicto §. Thesaurus, Instit. de rerum divisione, et docet Valasius de Iure Emphytheutico, q. 15. n. 1. Fagund. num. 13. cum Bartolo lib. 1. num. 17. et 18. ff. de acquir. possess. Cyno l. licet, num. 6. ff. eodem titulo et aliis apud Valascum.

17 ¶ But if it is found by the Emphyteuta in an emphyteutic field, or by the Feudatary in such a field.

18 The first opinion is, that by common law it is wholly the emphyteuta's. So commonly the Jurists; Accursius §. Thesauros, Instit. de rerum divis. Platea there num. 2. Faber num. 1. Portius, and Iason there, Andreas Isernia, and Alvarot. Tit. quae sint Regalia, and others in Valascus at the place cited, quaest. 15.

> Prima opinio est, esse de iure communi totum emphyteutae. Ita communiter Iurisperiti, Accursius §. Thesauros, Instit. de rerum divis. Platea ibi num. 2. Faber num. 1. Portius, et Iason ibi*, Andreas Isernia, et Alvarot.* Titulo, quae sint Regalia*, et alii apud Valascum* loco citato quaest. 15.

19 The second opinion will be that it is to be divided between the lord and the emphyteuta. So Valascus speculator de emphyt. num. 158. vers. 132. Nauar. summa, cap. 17. num. 173. Sà v. Thesaurum, and others in Valascus.

> Secunda opinio erit esse dividendum inter dominum, et emphyteutam. Ita Valascus speculator de emphyt. num. 158. vers. 132. Nauar. summa, cap. 17. num. 173. Sà v. Thesaurum*, et alii apud Valascum.*

20 The reason with D. Bonav. is, because half the Treasure, according to the laws, is the Lord's; but the Emphyteuta, and the Feudatary, are not lords of the field simply, but only by reason of the useful dominion, as is plain from l. 1. Cod. de Usufruct. l. 2. Cod. de Mancip.

> Ratio e D. Bonav. est, quia dimidium Thesauro, secundum iura, est Domini; at Emphyteuta, et Feudatarius, non sunt domini agri simpliciter, sed solum ratione dominii utilis, ut patet l. 1. Cod. de Usufruct. l. 2. Cod. de Mancip.

21 You will say: Therefore useful dominion profits nothing; for, even if he finds it in another's field, half will be his.

> Dices: Ergo dominium utile nihil prodest; nam, etiamsi in alieno agro invenerit, erit eius dimidium.

22 Fagundez ANSWERS that it does profit, because, whether he seeks the treasure by chance or by design, he will have the half; not so in another's field, whose use he does not have; for if in another's field he deliberately seeks it without the Lord's will, the whole is the Lord of the ground's; yet he is not bound, before the judge's sentence, to give the whole, but the half; but after the sentence he is bound to give the other half, which is a penal law on account of the injury done to the Lord of the field.

> Respondet Fagundez prodesse, quia, sive casu, sive data opera quaerat thesaurum, habebit medietatem, non sic in agro alieno, cuius non habet usum; si enim in agro alieno dedita opera quaerat absque Domini voluntate, totus est Domini fundi; non tenetur tamen ante iudicis sententiam dare totum, sed medietatem; post sententiam vero tenetur dare alteram medietatem, quae est lex poenalis ob iniuriam illatam Domino fundi.

23 ¶ But if a treasure is dug up in a public place, say on a road, it will be wholly the finder's. So Less. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 16. num. 63. Couar. ad reg. peccatum, p. 3. §. 2. citing Baldus, and Cynus. The reason is, because there is no one who is the special lord of these places. But if it is found in a public place, that is, one specially possessed by the Prince; the half will be the Prince's, as is found in §. Thesauros, loc. cit. Public roads, however, are the Prince's only by a general disposition.

> ¶ Quod si thesaurus in loco publico, puta in via effodiatur, erit totus inventoris. Ita Less. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 16. num. 63. Couar. ad reg. peccatum, p. 3. §. 2. citans Baldum, et Cynum. Ratio est, quia non est aliquis dominus

horum locorum specialis. Quod si in loco publico inveniatur, idest specialiter possessu a Principe; erit dimidium Principis, ut habetur §. Thesauros, loc. cit. Viae autem publicae sunt Principis tantum dispositione generali.

24 Therefore the gold mines and veins of silver, after the occupation of the Kings, remained by the law of nations to the inhabitants as finders. Hence it is inferred that the Basilians and the Peruvians could not licitly be deprived of gold mines and veins of silver, since they were the peaceful finders of these, and they had inflicted no injuries on the Christians, for which war might justly be waged against them. Therefore much less could they be deprived of them after their conversion to the faith, as Ioan. XXII. defines. See Rodriquez cap. 47.

Ideo aurifodinae, et venae argenti post Regum occupationem manserunt adhuc iure gentium incolis inventoribus. Ideo infertur, non potuisse licite privari Basilienses, et Peruanos aurifodinis, et venis argenti, cum essent horum pacifici inventores, nec iniurias Christianis intulissent, ob quas bellum iuste eis inferretur. Itaque multo minus post conversionem ad fidem potuere eis privari, ut definit Ioan. XXII. Vide Rodriquez cap. 47.

25 ¶ But if a treasure is found in a public sacred place, as a cemetery, it is more probable, and according to the mind of S. Bonav., that it is to be divided, according to what was said above. Thus hold Nauar. summa cap. 17. num. 175. Rebel. lib. 1. quaest. 15. sect. 2. Couar. ad Regulam Peccatum, p. 3. §. 2. Gomez ad §. 45. Taur. num. 52. Molina disp. 56. Sylvest. v. Inventum; and therefore the half is the finder's, and the half the Church's prelate's, because today the Church in this respect is held to be theirs, as Fagundez says num. 26. Tanner. num. 55. who understands it if it is found deliberately; but if it be found there by chance, the whole belongs to the finder, as Lessius and Retella teach, in Tanner.

26 To me it does not please that the Churches are the Prelate's, because he has here only the right to Tithes and other Parochial rights, not to the ground. Therefore I think the treasure is wholly the Church's, if it is found deliberately: but the half, if by chance. Nor is the Church to be reckoned with public roads; in which Tostatus also errs, quaest. 66. ad 13. Matth. For Churches have rights, etc. Much more Monasteries and Colleges; as Less. says t. 1. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 15. num. 50. and Fagund. num. 26.

Mihi non placet, Ecclesias esse Praelati, quia habet hic solum ius ad Decimas, et alia iura Parochialia non ad fundum. Itaque reor thesaurum totum esse Ecclesiae, si de industria sit inventus: at dimidium, si casu. Neque computanda Ecclesia cum viis publicis; in quo fallitur et Tostatus quaest. 66. ad 13. Matth. Habent enim Ecclesiae iura, etc. Multo magis Caenobia, et Collegia; ut ait Less. t. 1. lib. 2. cap. 5. dub. 15. num. 50. et Fagund. num. 26.

27 If a treasure is found in a dowry field, the half will be the wife's, who is the lady of the ground, although, while the marriage stands, the husband has the usufruct; for a treasure is not reckoned among the fruits; as Fagund. warns, num. 28. Whence it comes that, if found in a farm let or rented, the half is the lord of the farm's, the half the finder's, and nothing the usufructuary's, etc., according to the rule of Law brought forward above by D. Bonav.

Si in agro dotali thesaurus reperiatur, dimidius erit uxoris, quae est domina fundi, licet constante matrimonio maritus habeat usumfructum; non enim thesaurus inter fructus computatur; ut monet Fagund. num. 28. Quo fit, ut et inventus in praedio locato, aut conducto, dimidius sit domini praedii; dimidius inventoris, et nihil usufructuarii, etc. iuxta regulam Iuris a D. Bonav. allatam supra.

28 But if it be found by magical art, or by other means condemned by law, it devolves to the Fisco, leg. una, Cod. de Thensauris, lib. 10. Gloss. there, as Fagund. note, num. 32. Tanner. num. 56. with Molina T. 1. de Iust. disp. 56. Couar. ad reg. Pecc. 3. p. §. Lopez de contr. lib. 1. cap. 50. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. Nauar. Man. Lat. cap. 17. num. 175. Sà, v. Thes. Valasc. de iure Emphyt. p. 1. quaest. 15. and others commonly.

Quod si sit arte magica, vel aliis modis a iure damnatis repertus, devolvitur Fisco leg. una, Cod. de Thensauris, lib. 10. Gloss. ibi, ut notant Fagund. num. 32. Tanner. num. 56. cum Molina T. 1. de Iust. disp. 56. Couar. ad reg. Pecc. 3. p. §. Lopez de contr. lib. 1. cap. 50. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. Nauar. Man. Lat. cap. 17. num. 175. Sà, v. Thes. Valasc. de iure Emphyt. p. 1. quaest. 15. et alii communiter.

29 For a fuller knowledge of this matter it may be asked: Whether it is lawful to buy a field in which we know there is a Treasure, the treasure not being indicated to the Lord of the field, nor its price increased.

Ad amplam huius rei notitiam quaeri potest: An liceat emere agrum, in quo scimus, esse Thesaurum, non indicato thesauro Domino agri, nec aucto pretio illius.

30 The first opinion, which asserts it, is that of D. Bonaventura loc. cit. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. Soto lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 3. Nauar. cap. 17. num. 175. Molina de Iust. disp. 56. and disp. 333. Sylvestri v. inventum, Rebell. 2. p. l. 9. quaest. 5. num. 2. Sà *v. 31 But it is against Angelus, and Firmus v. Inventum, Tabiena v. Restitutio §. 26. and Valas. quaest. 15. who inclines to this opposite view.

Est autem contra Angelum, et Firmum v. Inventum, Tabienam v. Restitutio §. 26. et Valas. quaest. 15. qui inclinat ad hanc oppositam.

32 I assert with the first opinion that such a field, a repository of Treasure, can be bought, with consideration had of the field alone.

Assero cum prima sententia, talem agrum, Thesauro depositarium, posse emi, habita sola consideratione agri.

33 It is proved by the authors of that opinion, with D. Bonav., from that passage of Matth. 13. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a treasure hidden in a field: which when a man hath found, etc., he goeth, and buyeth that field; where he asserts that a prudent man can buy that field, and says nothing about the increase of the price.

Probatur ab authoribus illius cum D. Bonav. ex illo Matth. 13. Simile est regnum caelorum thesauro abscondito in agro: quem qui invenit homo, etc. vadit, et emit agrum illum; Ubi asserit, posse hominem prudentem emere agrum illum, et nihil de augmento pretii dicit.

34 They answer that nothing is gathered from that, since he says nothing of the price; but that it is left in its due estimation, since Christ does not favor frauds.

35 But on the contrary; for Christ in his most pure doctrine would have expressed what was necessary for a licit contract. Nay, I gather from this that Christ did not wish to require anything else; for his purpose was to speak of the purchase of the kingdom of heaven by merits, which are not of themselves adequate to so great a glory, as the holy Fathers Hilary, Peter Chrysol. Eusebius Emiss. and Haymo expound; or by the treasure Christ himself is understood, as D. Hieronymus, and Christianus Druthmarus, and the ordinary Gloss explain; or the WORD OF GOD, as SS. Chrysost. and Gregory explain in the Bibliotheca, Homil. But it is certain that a force is put in the Treasure in that it is hidden, and consequently the price of the field is unknown, by which Tostatus was deceived, quaest. 65. in cap. 13. Matth. for the word of preaching also has a hidden virtue, as he teaches in the other parable, because it is compared to a grain of mustard seed, as S. Hieron. explains; for it contains heavenly wisdom, unknown to the wise of this world: So likewise Christ is one in whom are all the treasures of the Wisdom of God hidden, and yet he is: To the Jews a stumbling block; to the gentiles foolishness. So also of the blessed kingdom, which is acquired on the way. Wherefore it would not be well applied, if the field were bought at a price adequate on our part. See the Fathers alleged, De restitutione debita ex impeditis alicui bonis.

> Sed contra; nam Christus in sua purissima doctrina expressisset id, quod erat necessarium ad contractum licitum. Imo colligo, hinc noluisse Christum aliud requirere; nam propositum erat ei agere de emptione regni caelorum per merita, quae non sunt ex se adaequata tantae gloriae, ut exponunt SS. PP. Hilarius, Petrus Chrysol. Eusebius Emiss. et Haymo: Vel per thesaurum intelligitur Christus, ut explicant D. Hieronymus, et Christianus Druthmarus, et Gloss. ordinaria; aut VERBUM DEI, ut explicant SS. Chrysost. et Gregorius in Bibliot. Homil. Certum autem est, fieri vim in Thesauro, quod absconditus sit, atque adeo ignoretur pretium agri, in quo deceptus est Tostatus quaest. 65. in cap. 13. Matth. nam, et verbum praedicationis habet virtutem absconditam, ut docet etiam in alia parabola, quia comparatur grano Sinapis, ut explicat S. Hieron. nam continet sapientiam caelestem, saeculorum sapientibus incognitam: Similiter et Christus est, in quo sunt omnes thesauri Sapientiae Dei absconditi, cum tamen sit: Iudaeis scandalum; gentibus stultitia. Sic et de regno beato, quod acquiritur in via. Quapropter non bene applicaretur, si esset emptus ager pretio ex parte nostra adaequato. Vide Patres allegatos, De restitutione debita ex impeditis alicui bonis.

Subquestion III: On the restitution owed for goods of which another has been hindered

1 JUSTICE is violated not only by taking away goods acquired, but also by impeding their being acquired; and this is the third head, from which the debt of restitution arises; concerning which the holy Doctor says something in the Speculum Animae, cap. 1. where he describes five ways of doing damage, and from the four first he places the obligation of restoring; for the goods of others, whether possessed or to be possessed, are impeded by doing, commanding, counseling, helping, and dissimulating; but of this last he says that a mortal sin is often not committed, unless hatred, or some other wicked disposition toward one's neighbor, arises; for commonly this dissimulation happens from fear and pusillanimity; while one fears that the wrath of wrongdoers be excited against him, and redound to his own loss; whence from this no one is held to restitution: Otherwise it would have to be said of him on whom the duty lay by his office to coerce such wrongdoers; since here he is bound by the bonds of Justice to guard the goods entrusted to him by office; but others are bound to it by charity, wherefore they can licitly even dissimulate, when they probabilistically believe that by reproving they will not profit; as D. Augustine has it, lib. 1. de civitate Dei, in the Seraphic Doctor, at the place cited: If anyone for this reason spares the wicked in rebuking and reproving them, lest they become worse, it does not seem to be an occasion of covetousness, but the counsel of Charity.

> IUSTITIA violatur non solum auferendo bona acquisita, sed etiam impedieudo ne acquirantur; et hoc tertium caput est, ex quo oritur debitum restitutionis; de quo aliqua dicit S. Doctor in speculo Animae, cap. 1. ubi quinque modos damnificandi describit, et ex quatuor primis ponit obligationem restituendi; bona enim aliorum, seu habita, sive habenda, impediuntur faciendo, praecipiendo, consulendo, iuvando, et dissimulando; hoc autem ultimo dicit non peccari saepe mortaliter, nisi ex odio, aut alia prava dispositione in proximum oriatur; nam plerumque ex timore, et pusillanimitate dissimulatio haec contingit; dum quis timet, ne malefactorum ira in se concitetur, et in proprium damnum redundet; unde hinc nullus restitutioni tenetur: Aliter tamen dicendum esset de illo, cui ex officio incumberet tales malefactores coërcere; cum hic Iustitiae vinculis obligetur ad tuenda bona ex officio sibi credita; verum alii ad id ex charitate tenentur, quare licite possunt etiam dissimulate, cum probabiliter credunt corripiendo, se non profuturos; ut habet D. Augustinus lib. 1. de civitate Dei apu Seraphicum, loco citato: Si propterea quisque obiurgandis, et corripiendis male agentibus parcit, ne deteriores efficiantur, non videtur esse cupiditatis occasio, sed Charitatis consilium.

2 Of the other ways, by which one who impedes his neighbor's good is held to restitution, I shall speak in the following doubts.

> De aliis autem modis, quibus reus, impediendo proximi bonum, ad restitutionem tenetur seqq. dubitationibus dicam.

Doubt I: On the restitution owed for goods impeded by violence, fraud, or evil intention

1 It is first SUPPOSED, by the common consent of all, that he who by prayers, blandishments, or other like means persuaded someone, who was going to give liberally to one person, to give rather to another, is not compelled to restitution; because as yet Justice is acquired against no one, against whom an offense could be committed; and this is intimated in the last law, C. si quis aliquem testari prohibuerit; wherefore if by prayers you persuade Caio, about to make a testament, to leave a legacy rather to Titio than to another, you are not held to restitution.

> De restitutione bonorum, Vi, Dolo, aut prava intentione impeditorum.
> SUPPONITUR primo e communi omnium consensu, non cogi eum ad restitutionem, qui precibus, blanditiis, vel aliis modis similibus suasit alicui, liberaliter donaturo uni, ut donet potius alteri; quia nulli adhuc Iustitia acquiritur, contra quam delinquatur; et hoc insinuatur lege ult. C. si quis aliquem testari prohibuerit; quare si Caio testaturo precibus suadeas, ut potius Titio quam alteri legatum relinquat, ad restitutionem non teneris.

2 It is SUPPOSED second, according to Caietanus, Paludanus, Sylvestrus, and others in Azorius p. 3. lib. 4. cap. 9. quaestito 4., that he who in any way impeded the worthy man from an office or benefice, so that it be possessed by the unworthy, is held to make good a double loss: namely, to the Church, or the Republic, to which the unworthy man is preferred; and to that worthy man who is rejected out of regard for him; since each has equally acted against Justice, depriving both, whether the benefice or the minister. So an undue loss is inflicted on both.

> SUPPONITUR secundo iuxta Caietanum, Paludanum, Sylvestrum, et alios apud Azorium p. 3. lib. 4. cap. 9. quaestito 4. eum, qui impediuit quocumque modo dignum ab officio, vel beneficio, ut ab indigno possideatur, teneri refarcire duplex damnum, Ecclesiae scilicet, aut Reipublicae, cui indignus praefertur; et illius digni, qui ipsius intuitu

reiicitur, cum aeque egerit contra Iustitiam, privando utrumque, seu beneficio, seu ministro; Ita et utrique indebitum damnum infertur.

3 It is SUPPOSED third, as certain, that he is held to restore who, even without force, fraud, or wicked intention, impeded another from acquiring a good to which he had some right of commutative Justice, whether that right was the perfect one, which they call Ius in re, (as Nauar. note, cap. 17. num. 89. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. col. 923.) obtained by dispensation among the living, or by testament, or by legitimate collation, or confirmation, or by another legitimate way.

SUPPONITUR tertio ut certum, teneri restituere illum, qui etiam absque vi, dolo, vel prava intentione impedivit alterum, ne acquireret bonum, ad quod habebat ius aliquod commutativae Iustitiae, sive id ius fuerit perfectum, quod vocant Ius in re, (ut notant Nauar. cap. 17. num. 89. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. col. 923.) obtentum dispensatione inter vivos, aut testamento, aut legitima collatione, aut confirmatione, aut alio modo legitimo.

4 Or whether it was the imperfect right, which they call Ius ad rem acquired (as Nauar. and Valentia say) by just promise, purchase, stipulation, election, presentation, apposition, concourse, expectancy, regress, access, auxiliary help, primogeniture, or by another title of this kind; from which one can legitimately petition the Judge that the free faculty be made and preserved for him of progressing to the acquisition of the perfect right, and consequently of the real possession of it itself. The holy Doctor expressed this twofold way in these words: Damage can be done in a twofold way, either by impeding a good possessed; behold the first: or one to be possessed; behold the other.

Sive fuerit ius imperfectum, quod vocant Ius ad rem acquisitum (ut Nauar. et Valentia aiunt) iusta promissione, emptione, stipulatione, electione, praesentatione, appositione, concursu, expectantia, regressu, accessu coadiutoria, primogenitura, aut alio huiusmodi titulo; ex quo possit aliquis legitime petere a Iudice, ut sibi libera facultas fiat, et conservetur progrediendi usque ad acquisitionem iuris perfecti, atque adeo realis possessionis ipsius. Hunc duplicem modum his verbis expressit S. Doct. Damnificatio potest fieri dupliciter, aut impediendo bonum habitum; Ecce primum: vel habendum; Ecce alterum.

5 The REASON is, because he violates Commutative Justice: Therefore he is held to restore; and indeed, if he has a perfect right, the impeder is held to restore the whole; but if the right was imperfect, he will be held to what is estimated pro rata for the certainty of the benefit, etc., with what must be computed being computed.

RATIO est, quia is violat Iustitiam Commutativam: Ergo tenetur restituere, et quidem si habeat ius perfectum, impediens tenetur restituere totum; si vero ius erat imperfectum, tenebitur ad id, quod aestimabitur pro rata certitudinis emolumenti, etc. computatis computandis.

6 Valentia then POSITS as certain that he is held to restore who by fraud, deceit, or force impeded another, even an unworthy one, from a good to which he had no right from distributive or commutative justice; But this is not proved to me, because if he has no right, the matter does not concern justice, which is owed to the unworthy; and although one sins against Charity by unjustly revealing someone's hidden crime; yet since the sin is only against charity, no obligation of restitution arises from it.

PONIT Valentia deinde ut certum, eum teneri restituere, qui dolo, fraude, aut vi impedivit alterum, etiam indignum bono, ad quod non habebat aliquod ius ex distributiva, vel commutativa; Sed hoc mihi non probatur, quia si nullum habet ius, non agitur contra iustitiam, indigno debitam; et licet peccetur contra Charitatem occultum alicuius crimen inique prodendo; cum tamen in charitatem solum delinquitur, nulla hinc restituendi obligatio enascitur.

7 But they ASK: Whether from this an obligation of restitution arises, because out of some evil affection of hatred, and with a wicked end, he impeded another from acquiring goods, whether he had a right to it or none at all.

> QUAERUNT autem: An inde nascatur obligatio restitutionis, quia ex aliquo malo affectu odii, et fine pravo impedivit alium a bonis acquirendis, sive ad id habuerit ius, sive nullum omnino.

8 Scotus AFFIRMS, 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 3. Palud. quaest. 2. art. 2. Richard. art. 5. quaest. 4. ad 7. and they ascribe the same to D. Thom. art. 2. ad 4.

> AFFIRMANT Scotus 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 3. Palud. quaest. 2. art. 2. Richard. art. 5. quaest. 4. ad 7. et idem adscribunt D. Thom. art. 2. ad 4.

9 The OPPOSITE opinion Adrianus teaches, de Restit. Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. num. 3. Couar. relect. in Reg. Peccatum p. 2. §. 7. Nauar. cap. 17. n. 70. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. col. mihi 924. Caietanus art. 2. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 10. num. 116. Couar. epist. 4. p. 2. cap. 6 §. 7. This, which the holy Doctor supposes in speculo animae, cap. 1. and 2., where he derives the obligation of restitution from the mere doing of damage, is without controversy true; and therefore things done out of hatred he indeed places as opposed to charity, but not to justice, and consequently not liable to restitution, as the authors alleged argue, and Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 64. citing Scotus loc. cit. and others.

> OPPOSITAM sententiam docet Adrianus de Restit. Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. num. 3. Couar. relect. in Reg. Peccatum p. 2. §. 7. Nauar. cap. 17. n. 70. Valentia quaest. 6. punct. 5. col. mihi 924. Caietanus art. 2. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 10. num. 116. Couar. epist. 4. p. 2. cap. 6 §. 7. Haec absque controversia est vera, quam S. Doct. supponit in speculo animae, cap. 1. et 2. ubi ex sola damnificatione eruit obligationem restitutionis; et ideo, quae fiunt ex odio, ponit quidem opposita charitati, sed non iustitiae, ac proinde restitutioni non obnoxia, ut arguunt allegati, ac Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 64. referens Scotum loc. cit. et alios.

10 S. Bonav. indeed CONCEDES, loc. cit. and to others to be referred in disputation 34., that material detraction, which is not out of hatred, or envy, or anger, is not mortal. Yet it does not exempt from the obligation of restitution one who does damage in that way; just as if someone playing, or without reflection, pushed another into a river, where he was submerged; the pusher would be held to pull him out, if he could; or if someone threw another's purse, not with a wicked mind but in play, into a hidden place; for even if he did not sin by throwing it, he would nevertheless be held to restore it.

> CONCEDIT sane S. Bonav. loc. cit. et aliis referendis in disputatione 34. detractionem materialem, quae non sit ex odio, aut invidia, vel ira, non esse mortalem. Enim vero non eximit a restitutionis obligatione ita damnificantem; sicuti si aliquis ludens, vel inconsulto impelleret alium in flumen, ubi submerfus; teneretur impulsor illum eruere, si posset; vel si aliquis crumenam alterius proiiceret, non animo pravo, sed ad ludum, in locum reconditum; esto enim non peccaret proiiciendo, teneretur tamen eam restituere.

Doubt II: Whether one is bound to restore customs duties he has defrauded

1 I SUPPOSE with D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 2. that subjects are held in conscience, from justice, to pay to the Prince the tributes and tolls justly imposed. The holy Doctor proves it from that passage of Matth. 22. where Christ defines: Render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's. This opinion is that of Jesus Christ. The Apostle Paul follows him, Rom. 13. Render to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute: toll to whom toll. The holy Doctor urges the same at the place cited.

An teneatur quis restituere fraudata vectigalia.

SUPPONO cum D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 44. art. 2. quaest. 2. teneri subditos in conscientia ex iustitia solvere Principi tributa, et vectigalia iuste imposita, Id probat S. Doct. illo Matth. 22. ubi Christus definit: Reddite ergo, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, et quae sunt Dei, Deo. Haec sententia est Iesu Christi. Eum sequitur Paulus Apostolus Rom. 13. Reddite omnibus debita: cui tributum, tributum: cui vectigal, vectigal. Idem urget S. Doct. loco citando.

2 But tribute is a payment imposed on subjects by the Prince, according to each one's means, especially landed means, etc., for the Prince's dignity and the public expenditures to be sustained in the kingdom. Toll, however, signifies a payment for things that are exported from the city, or imported into it, or for the transport of goods across bridges and through ports, as Lessius notes, cap. 33. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 12. n. 336. with D. Bonav. in vita Christi, cap. 60.

Est autem tributum pensio, quae a Principe imponitur subditis, iuxta cuiusque facultates, praesertim praediales, etc. ad Principis dignitatem, et impendia publica in regno sustinenda. Vectigal vero significat pensionem pro rebus, quae exportantur e civitate, vel in eam importantur, vel pro transvectione mercium per pontes, et per portus, ut notat Lessius cap. 33. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 12. n. 336. cum D. Bonav. in vita Christi, cap. 60.

3 But that the payment be just, four conditions are required, without which they are robberies, as the holy Doctor teaches in speculo animae, cap. 2. and I discussed more broadly t. 2. Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 11. The first is, that it be imposed by an absolved Prince; others, however, are excommunicated in the Bull of the Coena. The second, that the cause be just, that is, the public good, as for public debts, or expenditures, in peace and in war, or for the legitimate sustenance of the Prince. The third, that it be imposed only on things of commerce and the like. See Valentiam quaest. 6. punct. 6. The fourth, that it be done in a legitimate manner, or form, according to the proportion of goods, so that nothing is exacted from non-subjects either, or some subjects are exempted to the prejudice of others, as Tannerus notes. It is found in l. Omnium, as I shall say in doubt 3.

Ut autem iusta sit pensio, quatuor conditiones requiruntur, sine quibus sunt rapinae, ut docet S. D. in speculo animae, cap. 2. et latius disserui t. 2. Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 11. Prima est, ut a Principe absoluto imponatur; alii vero excommunicantur in Bulla Coenae. Secunda, ut causa sit iusta, idest bonum publicum, ut pro publicis debitis, vel impensis, pace, et bello, vel ob legitimam Principis sustentationem. Tertia, ut in rebus imponatur tantum mercationum, et similium. Vide Valentiam quaest. 6. punct. 6. Quarta, ut modo fiat legitimo, seu forma, secundum proportionem bonorum, ita ut etiam non exigatur aliquid a non subditis, aut aliqui subditi eximantur in praeiudicium aliorum, ut notat Tannerus. Habetur l. Omnium, ut dicam dub. 3.

4 But whether, on the part of the efficient cause, they can be imposed by enfeoffed Princes. It is answered affirmatively. Therefore the Pontiff, the General Council, the Emperor, Kings, Princes, and Feudataries can impose tributes, as Valentia notes, loc. cit. Caietanus v. Vectigal. Medina quaest. 13. de restit.

An vero ex parte efficientis imponi queant a Principibus feudatis. Respondetur assertive. Itaque Pontifex, Concilium Generale, Imperator, Reges, Principes, et Feudatarii possunt tributa imponere, ut notant Valentia loc. cit. Caietanus v. Vectigal. Medina quaest. 13. de restit.

5 On the part of the end you ask: Whether they can be imposed by the Prince to endow his daughter, to ransom his son, for decent recreations. And it is answered affirmatively. See Caspensem disp. 8. sect. 4. Covar. in reg. Peccatum, p. 2. §. 5. Valentiam at the place cited.

Ex parte finis quaeres: An possint a Principe imponi ob dotandam filiam suam, ob filium redimendum, ob recreationes decentes. Et respondetur assertive. Vide Caspensem disp. 8. sect. 4. Covar. in reg. Peccatum, p. 2. §. 5. Valentiam loco citato.

6 On the part of the form they must be imposed according to the proportion of means and strength; nor more than the causes require. Concerning which see Caietanum.

Ex parte formae debent esse imposita iuxta proportionem facultatum, et virium; neque plura, quam exigant causae. De quo vide Caietanum.

7 On the part of the matter, by civil law they ought to be constituted only in things which pertain to the commerce of buying and selling, and the like, l. Omnium, C. de vectigalibus. But not in those which one acquires for his own use and necessity, as Caietanus noted, and Angelus verb. Pedagium, §. 3. adding that a contrary custom does not avail in this; but that it can be introduced by custom, Valentia loc. cit. Navar. Manuali, cap. 17. num. 203. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 1. cap. 24. Sylvest. verbo Gabella, 3. num. 14. Valentia at the place cited admonish.

Ex parte materiae, e iure civili, solum constitui debent in rebus, quae ad negotiationem emptionum, et venditionum, ac similium pertinent l. Omnium, C. de vectigalibus. Non autem in iis, quae quis ad usum, et necessitatem suam acquirit, ut notavit Caietanus, et Angelus verb. Pedagium, §. 3. addens, non valere in hoc contrariam consuetudinem; sed consuetudine id posse introduci admonent Valentia loc. cit. Navar. Manuali, cap. 17. num. 203. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 1. cap. 24. Sylvest. verbo Gabella, 3. num. 14. Valentia loco citato.

8 It is asked, therefore: Whether by some particular law, or custom, tributes can be imposed on those things which are acquired for necessary sustenance, as bread, wine, oil, salt, and the like.

Quaeritur igitur: An aliqua lege particulari, vel consuetudine possint imponi tributa super his, quae ad necessarium victum acquiruntur, ut pane, vino, oleo, sale, et similibus.

9 The affirmative opinion Molina upholds, tom. 3. disp. 669. Suarez de Legibus lib. 5. cap. 15. Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 6. §. dub. 1. Azor. p. 3. lib. 5. cap. 21. quaestio 1. Malder. *2. 2. Second, when this gabel is established by the free consent of the people. Third, when, for the security of the aforesaid things diverted another way, provision cannot otherwise be made. When they have been imposed by immemorial custom.

The reason is, because the just form of the gabel is not observed; for in that form of tributes the Poor are burdened more than the Rich.

> Negativam sententiam defendunt Caietanus verb. Vectigal, Zanard. directorio p. 2. cap. 12. super septimum praeceptum, Medina p. 2. quaest. 96. art. 4. Sotus de Iustitia, lib. 3. quaestion. 6. artic. 7. Tolet. lib. 5. cap. 73. Angel. verb. Ratio est, quia non servatur iusta forma gabellae; nam in tali forma tributorum, magis gravantur Pauperes, quam Divites.*

11 But it can be doubted: Whether a creditor of the Prince or of the city, by defrauding the gabel, can compensate himself the debt owed him.

> Potest vero dubitari: An quis creditor Principis, vel civitatis, fraudando gabellam possit sibi debitum compensare.

12 Reginaldus denies it, Tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 24. num. 383. Graffius p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 125. num. 39. when the gabels are leased to publicans, who pay the Prince a determined payment wherever; for then the loss falls on the Publicans, not the Prince.

> Negant Reginaldus Tom. 1. lib. 10. cap. 24. num. 383. Graffius p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 125. num. 39. quando gabellae sunt locatae publicanis, qui determinatam Principi ubicumque solvunt pensionem; tunc enim fit damnum Publicanis, non Principi.

14 Yet this opinion is not proved to me, on account of the reason brought for the first opinion; nor does Diana answer sufficiently, p. 1. tract. 16. resol. 16., that the lessees of the Gabel do not receive a loss, because they lease the Gabels and Duties at a far smaller price; because they know the frauds of subjects.

> Haec tamen opinio mihi non probatur ob rationem allatam pro prima sententia; neque satis respondent Diana p. 1. tract. 16. resol. 16. conductores Gabellae non accipere damnum, quia conducunt Gabellas, et Datia, longe minori pretio; quia sciunt fraudes subditorum.

15 For it is against it, because they are shaken enough by the ordinary frauds of subjects, unless they also pay the Prince's dues, by which indeed they are annihilated, immense as they are.

16 But if the doubt be: Whether the toll is unjust; many assert that the subject is held to pay. So Suarez de Legibus, lib. 5. cap. 18. num. 20. Vasquez de restit. cap. 6. §. 3. disp. 5. num. 78. Turrianus 2. 2. Tom. 2. disp. 46. dub. 6. according to that saying: In doubts the condition of the possessor is better; and the possessor (they add) is the Superior, who has authority. But Carbo quaest. 33. Sylvest. v. Gabella 4. num. 7. and others say they bind, if they are old; otherwise if new.

> *Si vero dubium sit: An vectigal sit iniustum; multi asserunt, teneri subditum solvere. 18 SINCE, however, the chief difficulties in this matter are about the Formal and Final causes of tributes and tolls, namely that they be imposed for the public utility, and that they be imposed according to distributive justice; as the Doctors commonly say, Turrianus 2. 2. col. 1. disp. 44. dub. 1. and 2. 19 FIRST: Whether it is licit for a King to impose tributes in one Kingdom for the expenses made in his other Kingdoms, e.g. the King of Spain in the kingdom of Naples, for the expenses of Flanders. He answers affirmatively with Turriano 2. 2. T. 2. disp. 40. du. 1. Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 6. § 3. disp. 1 num. 7. and gives, by way of example, the reason in the King of Spain, who in guarding the religion stands alone against heretics and Turks, by whom he is little favored, and on whom the whole weight of the Christian Republic depends. He pursues this hyperbole at length.

PRIMO: An liceat Regi imponere tributa in uno Regno pro expensis, quae fiunt in aliis eius Regnis, v. g. Regi Hispaniae in regno Neapolis, pro expensis Flandriae. Respondet assertive cum Turriano 2. 2. T. 2. disp. 40. du. 1. Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 6. § 3. disp. 1 num. 7. et reddit exempli gratia, rationem in Rege Hispaniae, qui in religione tuenda solus contra haereticos, et Turcas stat, quibus est pauori, ab eoque totum Christianae Reipublicae pondus pendet. Quam hyperb. lem late prosequitur.

20 He ASKS second. Whether a King, who through immoderate expenses on games and unjust wars has fallen into poverty, can justly impose tributes.

QUAERIT secundo. An Rex, qui propter immoderatas expensas in ludis, bellisque iniustis in egestatem incidit, possit iuste tributa imponere.

21 He answers affirmatively with Maldero 2. 2. tract 5. cap. 6. dub. 4. L. st. l. 1. cap. 33. dub. 6. num. 48. Turrianus 2. 2. t. 2. disp. 44. dub. 2. Molina de iust. tract. 2. quaest. 667. and others. The reason is, because the King's need turns into the Kingdom's loss. But Lessius notes that the Prince is held to moderate all superfluous expenses.

Respondet assertive cum Maldero 2. 2. tract 5. cap. 6. dub. 4. L. st. l. 1. cap. 33. dub. 6. num. 48. Turrianus 2. 2. t. 2. disp. 44. dub. *2. 22 The GREATER difficulty is about the Formal cause.

MAIOR difficultas est circa causam Formalem.

Doubt III: What form is to be kept in a just tax

1 HOWEVER GREAT may be the formal cause, drawn from pressing needs, for imposing taxes; nevertheless distributive justice requires that the resources of the peoples and the proportions of individuals be weighed, so that from this proportionate taxes be imposed upon rich and poor alike; nor should peoples be burdened so much that they are not merely plundered but flayed, as Salonius discusses de Iustitia in 2. 2. tom. 1. quaest. 77. art. 3. controv. 6. [2] THEREFORE the holy Doctor, in Speculum Animae, cap. 2, says: To establish new tallages, or laws, or customs for extorting money without just cause has the character of robbery. Likewise exaction is when someone demands a debt inordinately. Hence those who exact tallages from subjects in this manner, and do not show compassion for their need, however poor they may be, are rightly called robbers.

> IGITUR S. Doct. in speculo, animae, cap. 2. ait: Novas Talias, vel leges, vel consuetudines constituere ad extorquendum pecuniam absque iusta causa, habet rationem rapinae. Item exactio est, cum quis debitum inordinate exigit. Unde qui a subditis Talias isto modo exigunt, nec necessitati eorum, quantumcumque sint pauperes, compatiuntur, recte raptores dicuntur.

[3] And in the book On the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, p. 2. cap. 3. on the Potestates, whom he likens to Princes and Kings, he says on our subject: The secular power therefore will be well ordered, and disposed according to the likeness of the celestial Potestates, if those placed in authority be wise, that is, proceeding in all things not by the impulse of the will but by the helm of reason. Therefore Solomon at the beginning of his reign asked for wisdom, 3 Reg. 3. For just as in spiritual jurisdiction, so also in temporal matters, one must not act without wisdom and discretion. Hence it is commanded in Deuter. cap. 17: When the King sits upon the throne of his kingdom he shall write out for himself the words of the Deuteronomy, and receive a copy from the Priests of the Levitical tribe, etc., and he shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left, that he and his sons may reign for a long time over Israel, etc. On this account Roboam lost his kingdom, 3 Regum 12, because, being young, he abandoned the counsel of the Elders and gave heed to the counsel of the Young Men, saying to Ieroboam and all the people: My father laid a heavy yoke upon you: but I will add to your yoke, etc. These and other most deserving things, which are read concerning Kings, he set down so that infallible doctrines may be drawn from them for preserving a kingdom flourishing most peacefully; hence he says: Those are true powers who rule their subjects not with tyrannical cruelty but rather with human, indeed angelic kindness, and guard the innocent. Hence it is said in Esther 13 by King Assuerus: Though I commanded many nations and subdued the whole world to my dominion, I did not wish to abuse the greatness of my power, but to govern my subjects with clemency and mildness, that passing their lives in quietness without terror they might enjoy the peace desired by all mortals.

> Et in lib. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, p. 2. cap. 3. de Potestatibus*, quas Principibus, et Regibus assimilat; ait ad rem nostram:* Ordinata igitur erit potestas saecularis, et secundum similitudinem caelestium Potestatum disposita, si in potestate constituti fuerint sapientes, scilicet non secundum voluntatis impetum, sed secundum rationis gubernaculum in singulis procedentes. Ideo Salomon initio regni sui petiit sapientiam 3. Reg. 3. Sicut enim nec in spirituali iurisdictione; sic nec in temporali, sine sapientia, et discretione est agendum. Ideo praecipitur in Deuter. cap. 17. Cum sederit Rex in folio regni sui scribet sibi deuteronomii verba, et accipiat exemplar a Sacerdotibus Leviticae tribus, etc. neque declinet in partem dexteram, vel sinistram, ut longo tempore regnet ipse, et filii eius super Israël, etc. Propter hoc Roboam perdidit regnum 3. Regum 12. quia iuvenis existens, derelicto consilio Seniorum, Iuvenum consilio acquievit, dicens ad Ieroboam, et omnem populum: Pater meus aggravavit iugum vestrum: ego autem addam iugo vestro, etc. Haec, et alia emeritissima, quae a Regibus perlegantur, exaravit, ut inde dogmata eruant infallibilia ad Regnum in pace florentissimum conservandum; Ideo ait: Verae sunt potestates, qui non tyrannica crudelitate, sed potius humana, imo Angelica benignitate subditos regunt, et custodiunt innocentes. Unde dicitur in Esther 13. ab Assuero Rege: Cum pluribus gentibus imperarem, et universum orbem meae ditioni subiugassem, nolui abuti potentiae magnitudine, sed cum clementia, et lenitate gubernare subiectos, ut absque terrore vitam silentio transigentes, optata cunctis mortalibus pace fruerentur.

4 ABOUT this we read how he moderated exactions, cap. 2: And he gave rest to all the provinces, and bestowed gifts according to the magnificence of his princely station.

> DE hoc legitur, quo pacto exactiones moderatus sit, cap. 2. Et dedit requiem universis provinciis, ac dona largitus est, iuxta magnificentiam principalem.

5 THE SAME holy Doctor, in 2 dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1, says that by divine dispensation among Christians there are Kings and Princes, Lords and servants; and according to a distinction of power they are subjected to him and held bound in greater and lesser degrees. And the Lord himself says this, Matth. 22: Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's. The Apostle also teaches this in 1 Timothy at the end, and condemns those preaching the contrary. And likewise Rom. 13: Render to all their debts: tribute to whom tribute: custom to whom custom. Therefore it must be conceded that Christians are bound to earthly Lords; yet not in all things, but only in those which are not against God; nor even in all of these, but in those which have been reasonably established according to right custom, such as taxes and customs dues.

> IDEM S. Doct. in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. secundum divinam dispensationem inter Christianos sunt Reges, et Principes, Domini, et servi; et secundum distinctionem potestatis ei subiiciuntur, et tenentur secundum plus, et minus. Et hoc ipse Dominus dicit Matth. 22. Reddite, quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, et quae sunt Dei, Deo. Hoc et Apostolus prima Timot. ult. docet, et contrarium praedicantes condemnat. Et hoc ipsum Rom. 13. Reddite omnibus debita: cui tributum tributum: cui vectigal, vectigal. Ideo concedendum quod Christiani sunt terrenis Dominis obligati; non tamen in omnibus, sed in his solum, quae non sunt contra Deum; neque in his omnibus, sed in his, quae secundum rectam consuetudinem statuta sunt rationabiliter, sicut tributa, et vectigalia.

6 HE ADMONISHES, moreover, in answer to the 1st of the Ecclesiastics, especially Religious, that they are not subject to the tribute payments of Kings, and he proves this by that passage of Matth. 22 cited above, where Christ addresses Peter: Do the kings of the earth receive toll from their own sons, or from strangers? And when Peter answered: from strangers, Christ took up again: Then are the sons free. Matth. 17.

> ADMONET vero in responsione ad 1. Ecclesiasticos, Religiosos praesertim, non subdi Regum vectigalibus, idque ostendit illo Matth. 22. allegato, ubi Petrum Christus interpellat : Reges terrae , a quibus accipiunt censum, a filiis suis, an ab alienis? Et cum respondisset Petrus : ab alienis , resumpsit Christus: Ergo liberi sunt filii. Matth. 17.

7 ABOUT these matters Diana treats in his Tract. de immunitate Ecclesiae.

> DE his agit Diana p. p. Tract. de immunitate Ecclesiae.

8 There he first defines, in resol. 35, together with many others, that Clerics of first tonsure are not held to the tributes of Princes. Next, that Clerics are not held to pay tributes to a Prince even if they do not wear the clerical habit and tonsure.

> Ibi primo definit resol. 35. cum multis, Clericos primae tonsurae non teneri Principum tributis. Deinde non teneri clericos, etiamsi non incedant habitu, et tonsura clericali, solvere Principi tributa.

9 Then, that a Prince cannot impose Gabellas upon the goods of Novices; and he says this is the view of all Theologians and learned Jurists.

> Mox Principem non posse Gabellas imponere super bona Novitiorum, et ait, esse omnium Theologorum, et Iuristarum peritiorum.

10 LIKEWISE, that a Prince cannot impose gabellas upon the goods of Ecclesiastics for the repair of bridges and walls; and he says this is common among Theologians.

> ITIDEM, non posse Principem ob reparationes pontium, murorum, gabellas imponere super bona Ecclesiasticorum; et ait esse communem Theologorum.

11 SIMILARLY, by the common sense of the Theologians, that he cannot do so even upon the patrimonial goods of Clerics.

> SIMILITER ex communi Theologorum sensu neque posse super patrimonialia bona clericorum.

12 IN LIKE MANNER, that Ecclesiastics cannot be brought by the Prince to contribute to public expenses along with the people in this way; nor even when they concern equally and principally, and concern also the Ecclesiastics; but that in this case he ought to come to an agreement with them. Similarly, that a lay Prince cannot compel Clerics to pay the Gabellas which they are bound to pay, but must have recourse to Ecclesiastical Judges.

> PARITER, non posse populum cum Principe deducere Ecclesiasticos ad contribuendum in publicis expensis, ut sic; neque, etiamsi concernant aeque principaliter, concernantue etiam Ecclesiasticos, sed debere cum eis convenire in hoc casu. Similiter, Principem laicum non posse compellere clericos ad solvendas Gabellas, quas tenentur solvere, sed debere Iudices Ecclesiasticos adire.

13 NOR is it lawful for a Prince to impose gabellas upon goods donated to or bought by Clerics. Indeed not even upon the goods of Clerics who assumed the habit without an intention of becoming clerics, but only in fraud of the Collects; and the Bulla Coenae excommunicates those imposing them. These and other matters Diana defines there, and in the following Tractate. But I shall treat of the Immunity of the Church in the third part of the Tract. de Sacramento Ordinis, where I shall disclose what the Seraphic Doctor thought on these matters.

> NEC non, illicitum esse Principi imponere gabellas super bona Clericis donata, aut empta. Imo neque super bona Clericorum, qui animo non clericandi, habitum assumpsere; sed solum in fraudem Collectarum; et imponentes, excommunicatos Bulla coenae clamat. Haec et alia ibi, definit Diana, et Tractatu sequenti. Sed de Immunitate Ecclesiae agam tertia part. Tract. de Sacramento Ordinis*, ubi quid de his senserit Seraphicus, aperiam.*

14 THIS MUCH I would note here: that it is lawful in sum to demand such tributes from Ecclesiastics with respect to those things which they carry for the sake of trade, as Sylvester notes V. Gabella, 3. num. 10. Medina quaest. 13. et 15. de Restit. Navar. cap. 17. num. 203. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5.

> ILLUD hic monuerim, licere in summa exigere ab Ecclesiasticis tributa huiusmodi, quo ad ea, quae deferunt causa negotiationis, ut notat Sylvester V. Gabella, 3. num. 10. Medina quaest. 13. et 15. de Restit. Navar. cap. 17. num. 203. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 5.

15 YET whether a trading Cleric is bound to pay the gabellas on these goods after a threefold warning is disputed.

> ATTAMEN Clericus negotiator, an teneatur ante trinam monitionem solvere gabellas pro his; est controversum.

16 IT IS COMMONLY ASSERTED that he is. So Malderus 1. 2. Tract. 5. cap. 6. dub. 9. Portel. in dub. regul. V. Tributum, num. 5. Ioan. de Neviam tract. de commerc. lib. 1. cap. 14. num. 10. Prosper de Augustino in addit. ad summam Quaranta, V. vectig. Turtianus Tom. 2. in 1. 2. disp. 44. dub. 4. num. 12. and others.

> ASSERUNT communiter. Ita Malderus 1. 2. Tract. 5. cap. 6. dub. 9. Portel. in dub. regul. V. Tributum, num. 5. Ioan. de Neviam tract. de commerc. lib. 1. cap. 14. num. 10. Prosper de Augustino in addit. ad summam Quaranta, V. vectig. Turtianus Tom. 2. in 1. 2. disp. 44. dub. 4. num. 12. et alii.

17 YET Doctors are not lacking who deny that they are bound to pay after the threefold warning until they desist from trade. So teach Lopez Instruct. part. 2. cap. 41. Sousa in Bulla Coenae, cap. 19. disput. 92. Rodriguez summa tom. 2. cap. 75. Petrus Ledesma Tom. 2. tract. 17. cap. 2. concl. 17. Molfesius Tom. 2. tract. 12. cap. 22. num. 173. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 33. dub. 3. num. 23. Ioan. de la Cruz in direct. consc. part. 1. praecepto septimo, quaest. 7. art. 3. dub. 1. Reginaldus Tom. 1. lib. 9. cap. 25. num. 379.

> NON desunt tamen Doctores negantes, eos teneri solvere ante trinam monitionem, ut desistant a negotiatione. Ita docent Lopez Instruct. part. 2. cap. 41. Sousa in Bulla Coenae, cap. 19. disput. 92. Rodriguez summa tom. 2. cap. 75. Petrus Ledesma Tom. 2. tract. 17. cap. 2. concl. 17. Molfesius Tom. 2. tract. 12. cap. 22. num. 173. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 33. dub. 3. num. 23. Ioan. de la Cruz in direct. consc. part. 1. praecepto septimo, quaest. 7. art. 3. dub. 1. Reginaldus Tom. 1. lib. 9. cap. 25. num. 379.

18 SOME, however, reconcile both opinions: the Cleric loses the privilege of exemption at once on account of trade, yet he is not deprived of this immunity except after a threefold warning. For with respect to the very goods which he carries on occasion of trade, he is thereby exempt without any warning whatsoever, and on account of them, if gabella and toll are demanded, no excommunication is incurred; and thus the first opinion proceeds. But with respect to all his other goods and his person, he does not lose the privilege of immunity simply, unless after a threefold warning, should he be unwilling to desist; and thus the second Opinion proceeds. So teach Alterius de cens. tract. 1. disp. 19. lib. 5. cap. 6. quaest. 3. Molina tract. 1. disp. 147. Durandus in Bulla Coenae, lib. 2. cap. 18. quaest. 8. See also on this matter Ceballos tract. de cognit. per viam violentiae, part. 2. quaest. 64. Gutierrez de Gabellis, > ALIQUI vero utramque sententiam conciliant; Clericum statim ex causa negotiationis amittere privilegium exemptionis, et hac immunitate non esse privatum, nisi post trinam monitionem. Nam quantum ad ipsas res, quas defert occasione negotiationis, eo ipso caret exemptione absque ulla monitione, pro quibus, si exigitur gabelia, et pedagium, nulla incurritur excommunicatio; et sic procedit prior opinio. Quantum vero ad alia omnia bona sua, et personam, non amittit simpliciter privilegium immunitatis, nisi post trinam monitionem, si desistere nolit; et ita procedit secunda Opinio. Sic docent Alterius de cens. tract. 1. disp. 19. lib. 5. cap. 6. quaest. 3. Molina tract. 1. disp. 147. Durandus in Bulla Coenae, lib. 2. cap. 18. quaest. 8. Vide de hac re etiam Ceballos tract. de cognit. per viam violentiae, part. 2. quaest. 64. Gutierrez de Gabellis, lib. 7. quaest. 94. Mariham de Iurisdict. part. 4. cent. 1. casu 3. Dianam p. p. 19 From these one may gather that sometimes the subject is bound to restore what was defrauded in gabellas; and conversely, sometimes Princes are bound to repay what was extorted.

> Ex his licet colligere, quandoque subditus teneatur restituere fraudatum e gabellis; et e contra, quandoque Principes teneantur refarcire extortum.

20 THIS one thing, dreadful for trading Clerics, I shall add from D. Hieronymo epist. 2. ad Nepotianum in D. Bonavent. 3. part. Pharetrae, cap. 22: Flee like a plague the trading cleric, and the one made rich out of poverty, glorious out of obscurity.

> HOC unum, Clericis negotiatoribus horrendum, addam ex D. Hieronymo epist. 2. ad Nepotianum apud D. Bonavent. 3. part. Pharetrae, cap. 22. Negotiatorem clericum, et ex inope divitem factum, ex ignobili gloriosum, quasi quandam pestem fuge.

Question VI: How much is to be restored

1 I ASSERT first, that restitution of Arithmetic equality is owed from Commutative Justice. So D. Thom. art. 3. and commonly. It is clear from the nature of Commutative Justice, as Tannerus notes disput. 4. quaest. 6. dubio 14.

> ASSERO primo, ex Iustitia commutativa restituendum aequale Arithmeticum. Ita D. Thom. art. 3. et communiter. Patet ex natura Iustitiae commutativae, ut notat Tannerus disput. 4. quaest. 6. dubio 14.

2 BUT this equality must be computed not only according to the present goods that have been taken away, but also according to those which existed in potentiality after the expenses were reckoned, such as the trampling of the seeds of a field; or the taking away of a merchant's horse, by which he earned his living at the Fairs. See Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 6. Caietanum V. Restitutio. Navar. manual. cap. 17. num. 27.

> AEQUALITAS autem haec computari debet, non solum secundum bona praesentia, quae erepta sunt, sed etiam secundum ea, quae erant in potentia computatis expensis, ut conculcatio seminum agri; ereptio equi mercatorii, quo lucrabatur in Nundinis. Vide Valentiam quaest. 6. puncto 6. Caietanum V. Restitutio. Navar. manual. cap. 17. num. 27.

3 BUT restitution can further be imposed from Vindictive Justice. So D. Thom. art. 3. and commonly all others with D. Bonavent. in the places to be cited.

POTEST vero ex Vindicativa amplius imponi restituendum. Ita D. Thom. art. 3. et communiter alii omnes cum D. Bonavent. locis citandis.

4 THUS in Exodi 22. it was enacted that he who had stolen an Ox or a Sheep, and killed or sold it, should restore five Oxen for one Ox and four Sheep for one sheep. To this David alluded, Reg. 2. cap. 12: He shall restore the sheep fourfold, and Zachaeus, Lucae 19: If I have defrauded anyone of anything, I restore fourfold, as the holy Doctor observes on this passage, noting that this was not necessary for Commutative Justice, as is clear; nor for Vindictive Justice, which is not to be fulfilled except after the sentence of the Judge, as the cited Doctors commonly teach, Tract. de Legibus, disput. 5. quaest. 7. et seq. Hence he concludes that it was rather an act of liberality.

SIC Exodi 22. statutum fuit, ut qui furatus esset Bovem, aut Ovem, et occideret, aut venderet, quinque Boves pro uno Bove restitueret, et quatuor Oves pro una ove. Ad quod allusit David Reg. 2. cap. 12. Ovem reddet in quadruplum*, et Zachaeus,* Lucae 19. Si quid aliquem defraudavi, reddo quadruplum*, ut observat S. Doctor ad hunc locum, advertens, hoc non fuisse necessarium ad Iustitiam commutativam, ut patet; neque ad vindicativam, quae non est adimplenda, nisi post sententiam Iudicis, ut docent communiter DD. allegati* Tract. de Legibus, disput. 5. quaest. 7. et seq. Ideo concludit, fuisse potius liberalitatem.

5 AND in Diaetastit. 2. cap. 4. he admonishes that restitution is like a Phlebotomy, that is, an evacuation of blood, which is necessary for certain infirmities, because: Sin is not remitted unless what was taken away is restored, from D. Augustino epist. 54. and the example of Zachaeus adduced there. This Phlebotomy Zachaeus was performing when he said: If I have defrauded anyone of anything, I restore fourfold; but would that Usurers would repay only the principal in like manner.

ET in Diaetastit. 2. cap. 4. admonet, restitutionem esse veluti Phlebotomiam, idest sanguinis evacuationem, quae nonnullis infirmitatibus est necessaria, quia: Non remittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum*, ex D. Augustino* epist. 54. et allato exemplo Zachaei. Hanc Phlebotomiam faciebat Zachaeus, qui dicebat: Si quid aliquem defraudavi, reddo quadruplum; sed utinam Usurarii modo redderent simplum.

6 MOREOVER Caspensis notes, disp. 1. sect. 11. that the quantity of the thing intended in restitution must be considered in the better state in which the owner would have used it; so that if you have wheat in the month of August and you withhold it until the month of May, at which time its owner would have sold it more dearly, you are bound to restore the greater price, because the thing always remained under the right of its owner, who would have used that wheat at a more profitable time. But if it is uncertain at what time he would have sold it (says Caspensis), the middle price must be restored. Likewise, if the thing unjustly suffers damage in the hands of the one retaining it, the loss will have to be restored, which was not receivable in the hands of the owner.

ADVERTIT autem Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 11. quantitatem rei intentae in restitutione considerandam in statu meliori, quo usus ea fuisset Dominus; ut si habes frumentum in mense Augusti, et illud retines usque ad mensem Maii, quo tempore charius illud vendidisset Dominus eius, teneris restituere illud pretium maius, quia res semper perseveravit sub iure Domini sui, qui illo tritico usus fuisset tempore magis lucratorio. Quod si incertum sit, quo tempore venditurus fuisset (ait Caspensis) restituendum pretium medium. Itidem si detrimentum res in manu retinentis inique recipiat, restituendum erit damnum, quod non erat receptiva in manu Domini.

Question VII: When restitution is to be made, and the causes excusing from it

1 IT IS the common and certain opinion of all that he who unjustly detains a thing against the owner's will is under a continual actual obligation of restitution. So D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 8. in calce D. Thom. art. 8. Caietanus ibid, Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. and the rest. But things acquired by contract do not oblige to restitution except at the appointed time, as the holy Doctor observes, whom all follow. See Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. disp. 14. num. 44.

> Quando sit restituendum, et de causis ab ea excusantibus.
> COMMUNIS omnium, et certa sententia est, eum, qui invito Domino iniuste rem detinet, esse in continua actuali obligatione restituendi. Ita D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 8. in calce D. Thom. art. 8. Caietanus ibi, Sotus lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. et caeteri. Res autem, ex contractibus habitae, non obligant ad restitutionem, nisi condicto tempore, ut observat S. Doctor, quem omnes sequuntur. Vide Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. disp. 14. num. 44.

2 ALTHOUGH matters stand thus, nevertheless D. Bonavent. above, D. Thom. and others acknowledge certain causes which excuse from restitution, either always, or at least for a time, as long as they last.

> QUAMVIS autem res ita sint, tamen D. Bonavent. supra, D. Thom. et alii agnoscunt nonnullas causas, quae excusant, vel semper, vel saltem ad tempus, quamdiu durant, a restitutione.

3 Now these causes either hold on the side of the debtor, or on the side of the creditor, or on the side of the thing itself, or by reason of public authority.

> Hae autem causae vel se tenent ex parte debitoris, vel ex parte creditoris, vel ex parte rei ipsius, vel ratione publicae potestatis.

4 On the side of the debtor, the first excusing cause is probable ignorance; yet not crass ignorance; whether it be of law or of fact, Caietanus verbo Restitutio, cap. 6. Nauar. in manuali, cap. 17. num. 82. Valentia loco cit. adduce it as excusing. But if it is crass or supine, it does not excuse. Such would be that of one buying a silver chalice from a soldier. See Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 25.

> Ex parte debitoris prima causa excusans est ignorantia probabilis; non tamen crassa; quam, sive iuris, sive facti sit, excusare afferunt Caietanus verbo Restitutio, cap. 6. Nauar. in manuali, cap. 17. num. 82. Valentia loco cit. At si est crassa, vel Supina, non excusat. Talis esset ementis calicem argenteum a milite. Vide Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 25.

5 THE second cause is doubt; for in doubt the condition of the possessor is the better, as the rule of Law has it.

> SECUNDA causa est dubium; nam in dubio melior est conditio possidentis, ut habet regula Iuris.

6 THE third cause is poverty. So D. Bonavent., whom all follow.

> TERTIA causa est inopia. Ita D. Bonavent. quem omnes sequuntur.

7 THE fourth cause is necessity, when he indeed has wherewithal to restore, but he himself needs it, whether he labors under extreme necessity, in which nearly all concur; or even if it be a grave necessity, so that he may preserve the decent condition of his state honestly, as D. Antonin. part. 2. tit. 2. cap. 8. Nauar. in man. cap. 17. num. 63. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Couar. relect. in regulam Peccatum, part. 1. art. 2. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. Aragon quaest. 62. art. 8. and commonly others hold, as appears in Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 27. and Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 15. num. 429. Bassaeum V. Restitutio 5. num. 4. Bonac. disp. 5. quaest. ult. punct. 1.

> QUARTA causa est necessitas, quando habet quidem, unde restituat, sed eo ipse indiget, sive extremam laboret necessitate; in quo omnes fere assentiuntur; sive etiam si sit necessitas gravis, ut conservet decentiam honeste sui status, ut sentiunt D. Antonin. part. 2. tit. 2. cap. 8. Nauar. in man. cap. 17. num. 63. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Couar. relect. in regulam Peccatum, part. 1. art. 2. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. Aragon quaest. 62. art. 8. et communiter alii apud Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 27. et Tannerum disput. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 15. num. 429. Bassaeum V. Restitutio 5. num. 4. Bonac. disp. 5. quaest. ult. punct. 1.

8 THERE indeed arises a doubt: whether, if the Creditor also is in extreme need, the Debitor is bound to the extreme necessity of the Creditor rather than to his own.

> OCCURRIT vero dubitatio: An, si Creditor etiam extreme indigeat, teneatur Debitor magis necessitati extremae Creditoris, quam suae.

9 SCOTUS 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. Sylvest. V. Restit. quaest. 2. Azor tract. 3. lib. 4. cap. 39. and the cited Bassaeus say that he is bound to restore.

> SCOTUS 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. Sylvest. V. Restit. quaest. 2. Azor tract. 3. lib. 4. cap. 39. Bassaeus citatus dicunt, eum teneri restituere.

10 THE second opinion denies that he is bound. So it seems to D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 5. ad 4. It is expressly defended by Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 1. Malder. tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 1., Sotus Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. Azor tract. 2. lib. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 6. Tolet. lib 5. cap. 24. Sayrus Lib. 10. tract. 5. cap 6. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 25. num. 14. Tanner. loco cit. adding: unless however the creditor has been reduced to extremity by his own withholding.

> SECUNDA sententia negat, eum teneri. Ita videtur D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 5. ad 4. Eam expresse tuentur Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 1. Malder. tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 1., Sotus Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. Azor tract. 2. lib. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 6. Tolet. lib 5. cap. 24. Sayrus Lib. 10. tract. 5. cap 6. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 25. num. 14. Tanner. loco cit. addens; nisi tamen creditor sit reductus ad extremum ob suam substractionem.

11 THE FOUNDATION is that in extreme necessity the Ius gentium ceases, by which the division of things was made, and the natural law is restored in its entirety, in which all things are common and come to be by way of the occupant's seizure, at least as to use, as the holy Doctor argues in Apol. paupert. cap. 1. quartae responsionis.

> FUNDAMENTUM est, quia in extrema necessitate cessat Ius gentium, quo facta est rerum divisio, et restituitur in integrum ius naturale, in quo sunt omnia communia, et fiunt per modum occupantis, saltem quoad usum, ut arguit S. Doctor in Apol. paupert. cap. 1. quartae responsionis.

12 ON this foundation Malderus, Lessius, Sayrus, Fagundez above consequently infer that the debtor's parents also are to be preferred, if they lie in extreme necessity.

> QUO fundamento consequenter inferunt Malderus, Lessius, Sayrus, Fagundez supra, praeferendos etiam parentes debitoris, si in extrema iaceant necessitate.

13 IT IS DOUBTED secondly: when creditor and debtor are both alike in grave necessity, is the latter bound to restore, falling from his station, so that, if he was a noble, he be compelled to become a craftsman?

> DUBITATUR secundo: An creditore, et debitore existentibus in gravi pariter necessitate, teneatur is restituere, cadendo a suo statu, ut, si erat nobilis, cogatur fieri artifex.

14 SOME excuse him, and say he is not bound. So many hold, as appears in Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 27. which opinion Malderus tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 1. Tanner. num. 430. judges probable, together with Carbone quaest. 77.

> ALIQUI excusant, et dicunt, eum non teneri. Ita multi apud Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 27. quam sententiam probabilem censet Malderus tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 1. Tanner. num. 430. cum Carbone quaest. 77.

15 YET commonly they say he is bound to restore: Azor tract. 3. Lib. 4. cap. 39. Petrus Nauar. Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. disp. 9. num. 53. Less. Tom. 1. de Iust. Lib. 2. cap. 26. dub. 1. Tolet. Lib. 5. cap. 24. Fagundez, Bassaeus loco cit.

> ATTAMEN communiter dicunt, eum teneri restituere, Azor tract. 3. Lib. 4. cap. 39. Petrus Nauar. Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. disp. 9. num. 53. Less. Tom. 1. de Iust. Lib. 2. cap. 26. dub. 1. Tolet. Lib. 5. cap. 24. Fagundez, Bassaeus loco cit.

16 THE REASON is that in grave necessity the Ius gentium remains in force.

> RATIO est, quia in gravi necessitate manet Ius gentium.

17 THE fifth cause is grave loss in one's own goods, which the debtor would incur through restitution; as Caietanus loco cit. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. causa 4. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Nauar. man. cap. 17. num. 56. Couar. loco cit. note; and the holy Doctor adduces this when he adds the condition: provided however the possibility of paying be present; for not only is he judged unable to pay who can in no way, but also he who cannot do so conveniently without, to be sure, grave loss, as appears ex Lege Nepos Proculo, ff. de verborum significatione, et cap. faciat, 22. quaest. 2. as Valentia notes loco cit. causa 5. Tanner. num 433.

> QUINTA causa est damnum grave in rebus propriis, quod ex restitutione debitor incurreret; ut notat Caietanus loco cit. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. causa 4. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Nauar. man. cap. 17. num. 56. Couar. loco cit. et hoc afferit S. Doctor, dum eam apponit conditionem; si tamen adsit reddendi possibilitas; neque enim solum is, qui nullo modo potest, censetur, non posse facere, sed etiam qui commode non potest absque nimirum gravi damno, ut constat ex Lege Nepos Proculo, ff. de verborum significatione, et cap. faciat, 22. quaest. 2. ut advertit Valentia loco cit. causa 5. Tanner. num 433.

18 HENCE one is not bound to restore at the peril of one's own good name. Wherefore they excuse the woman who does not reveal the bastard son she had from adultery. So admonish nearly all the Doctors, as appears in Valentia in the place lately cited. Which Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum decalogi, et in 7. Lib. 7. cap. 28. confirms with several arguments, especially from the declaration of Innocentius III. de poenitent. as Medina, Nauar. Couar. Valentia and others observe.

> HINC non tenetur periculo suae famae restituere. Quare excusant mulierem, quae non revelat filium spurium, quem habuit ex adulterio. Sic admonent omnes ferme Doctores apud Valentiam nuper citato loco. Quod Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum decalogi, et in 7. Lib. 7. cap. 28. pluribus confirmat, praecipue ex declaratione Innocentii III. de poenitent. ut observant Medina, Nauar. Couar. Valentia, et alii.

19 THE REASON is taken from D. Bonavent. locis allatis, quaest. 5. subquaest. 1. dub. 3. because the goods of a higher order are not to be restored for the goods of a lower order; but reputation is an order higher than riches: Therefore. The Major is certain; for restitution is arithmetic equality. The Minor is certain from Proverb. 22: A good name is better than great riches, and Ecclesiastici 41: Have care of a good name: for this will abide with you more than a thousand precious and great treasures, and Aristoteles 4. Eth. cap. 3. says: Honor is the greatest of external goods.

> RATIO sumitur ex D. Bonavent. locis allatis, quaest. 5. subquaest. 1. dub. 3. quia non sunt restituenda bona ordinis superioris, pro bonis ordinis inferioris, sed fama est ordine superior divitiis: Ergo. Maior est certa; nam restitutio est aequalitas Arithmeticae. Minor est certa ex Proverb. 22. Melius est nomen bonum quam divitiae multae, et Ecclesiastici 41. Curam habe de bono nomine: hoc enim magis permanebit tibi, quam mille Thesauri pretiosi, et magni, et Aristoteles 4. Eth. cap. 3. ait: Honorem esse maximum bonorum externorum.

20 GREGORIUS de Valentia however, with Soto Lib. 1. de Iust. art. 3. ad 4. and Molina Tom. 4. disp. 702. hold that if the restitution be most grave and the loss of reputation be small, either because the woman was previously suspected or the like, the woman is bound to disclose herself, lest she squander an enormous inheritance from the legitimate heirs; for although (they say) reputation is by genus nobler than the goods of riches, yet it can be so small as to be inferior to them, in the way in which gold indeed is more precious than silver; nevertheless a tiny crumb of gold can be surpassed by a great mass of silver; Tannerus subscribes numero 434.

> GREGORIUS de Valentia tamen cum Soto Lib. 1. de Iust. art. 3. ad 4. et Molina Tom. 4. disp. 702. volunt, quod si restitutio sit gravissima, et amissio famae sit parva, eo quod vel antea mulier suspecta sit, vel simile, teneri mulierem se manifestare, ne haereditatem ingentem legitimis disperdat, quamvis enim (aiunt) ex genere sit fama nobilior bonis divitiarum, tamen potest esse adeo parva, ut iis sit inferior, eo modo, quo aurum quidem est pretiosius argento; attamen potest parvulum frustum auri superari a massa grandi argenti; subscribit Tannerus numero 434.

21 BUT Fagundez strongly protests num. 9. cap. 28. cum Petro Nauarro Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 2. part. 2. dub. 9. Corduba Lib. 1. quaest. 31. Vasquez opusc. de testam. cap. 5. disput. 10. Less. Lib. 2. cap. 10. dub. 7. num. 50. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 4. dub. 10. Turriano 2. 2. disp. 17. dub. 1. num. 10. et aliis.

> SED graviter reclamat Fagundez num. 9. cap. 28. cum Petro Nauarro Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 2. part. 2. dub. 9. Corduba Lib. 1. quaest. 31. Vasquez opusc. de testam. cap. 5. disput. 10. Less. Lib. 2. cap. 10. dub. 7. num. 50. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 4. dub. 10. Turriano 2. 2. disp. 17. dub. 1. num. 10. et aliis.

22 NOR do the adversaries satisfy the argument of the Seraphic Doctor: For if they so diminish reputation as to reduce it to light matter, I do not refuse that one is bound to restore a great debt, even if it must be divulged, since one is not so prudent as to manage domestic affairs perfectly; But truly if we stand at the parity of grave reputation and money, the former is always of higher order, even if it be the reputation of a plebeian man; and in this case the similitude taken from the crumb of gold and the mass of silver is beside the point; For even in quantity, not to say in natural preciousness, gold is of greater worth; so too is grave reputation; as Fagundez num. 9. rightly noted with D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 1. where, citing that passage Proverb. 22. he admonishes that as light theft is venial, so is light detraction of reputation, which yields to the grave obligation of Restitution.

> NEQUE satisfaciunt adversarii argumento Seraphici: Nam si famam ita diminuant, ut ad materiam levem trahant, non renuo, teneri restituere grande debitum, etiamsi divulgandum sit, cum non esse adeo prudentem, ut res oeconomicas perfecte agat; At vero si stemus in paritate famae gravis, et pecuniae, semper illa est ordine superior, etsi sit hominis plebei; et in hoc casu non est ad rem similitudo, sumpta ex frustulo auri, et massa argenti; Nam etiam in quantitate, nedum in pretiositate naturali, aurum est maioris pretii; Sic et fama gravis; ut recte adnotavit Fagundez num. 9. cum D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 1. ubi allegato eo loco Proverb. 22. monet, quod sicuti leve furtum est veniale, sic levis detractio famae, quae rerum gravi Restitutionis obligationi cedit.

23 IT MUST ALSO BE EXPLAINED what sort of grave detriment in domestic fortune is sufficient to excuse from Restitution in the meantime; for the detriment considered as the expenditure of a large sum of money does not suffice, nor as the cessation of the profit due from that money; for this gain is not a detriment in one's own goods, but it is required that it be in the debtor's goods, either because he would fall from his station, or because he is compelled to sell his goods at a ruinous and pernicious price; for then the creditor is bound to wait, as Fagundez, Molina, Lessius, Valentia cited above note; and this is what D. Bonavent. cap. 2. speculi says, that one is bound to Restitution, provided however the possibility and opportunity be present. For such a time would be most gravely inopportune, and the creditor would exact unjustly at such a time.

EXPLICANDUM etiam, quodnam sit detrimentum grave in re familiari, sufficiens ad excusandum interim a Restitutione; non enim sufficit detrimentum consideratum, ut est erogatio grandis pecuniae, vel ut est cessatio lucri ex illa pecunia debita obveniens; hoc enim lucrum non est detrimentum in re propria, sed requiritur, ut sit in rebus debitoris, sive quia caderet a suo statu, sive quia cogitur praecipitanti, et pernicioso pretio res suas vendere; tunc enim creditor tenetur expectare, ut notat Fagundez, Molina, Lessius, Valentia allati; et hoc est, quod ait D. Bonavent. cap. 2. speculi, teneri Restitutioni, si tamen adsit possibilitas, et opportunitas. Tale enim tempus esset graviter importunum, et inique eo tempore exigeret creditor.

24 THE sixth cause excusing from Restitution is the customary occupation of human life; for it is not necessary that one rise from bed at midnight, or rise from table at dinner, in order to pay, as Caietanus, Sotus, Valentia, and others commonly noted with D. Bonavent. cited above; but restitution can be deferred to a suitable time.

SEXTA causa excusans a Restitutione est consueta humanae vitae occupatio; non enim necesse est ut surgat media nocte e lecto, vel e mensa in prandio, ut solvat, ut adnotarunt Caietanus, Sotus, Valentia, et alii communiter cum D. Bonavent. allegato; sed potest restitutio deferri in tempus opportunum.

25 THE seventh cause is compensation made to the creditor in other temporal goods, either by conferring on him a burdensome temporal office, as Nauar. et Valentia say (I said temporal; for to give a spiritual one would be Simony), or by remitting to the creditor another equivalent debt, as Medina quaest. 3. et Valentia above, Tanner. num. 439. note.

SEPTIMA causa est compensatio facta creditori in aliis bonis temporalibus, sive conferendo ei officium temporale luctuosum, ut aiunt Nauar. et Valentia (dixi temporale; nam spirituale dare, erit Simonia,) sive remittendo creditori aliud debitum aequivalens, ut notant Medina quaest. 3. et Valentia supra, Tanner. num. 439.

26 THE eighth is compensation made by paying some legitimate creditor of his. So Medina, Valentia, and others.

OCTAVA est compensatio facta, solvendo alicui legitimo creditori eius. Ita Medina, Valentia, et alii.

27 THE ninth cause is the legitimate prescription of the thing, that is, such as it ought to be according to the canons, as Nauar. num. 85. et Valentia noted in the place cited.

NONA causa est praescriptio rei legitima, hoc est talis, qualis esse debet secundum canones, ut notarunt Nauar. num. 85. et Valentia loco citato.

Subquestion IV: On two further causes excusing from restitution on the part of the debtor

[1] TWO further causes still remain to be examined; the Prior is entrance into Religion; the Other is Cession of goods; in the former one voluntarily loses Dominion over himself; in the latter Dominion over his goods; concerning which it is certain that one validly professing an approved Religion can neither acquire anything for himself nor renounce it; But it is doubtful whether one burdened with debt can bid the world farewell and licitly pronounce the Vows of Religion; Likewise, further, whether one who is beyond possibility, since he is not able to pay, can cede to the creditor the goods he possesses, and thereafter be released from Restitution of the further debt. These I shall weigh in as many doubts.

De aliis duabus Causis, excusantibus a restitutione, ex parte debitoris.

GEMINAE adhuc causae extant examinandae; Prior est ingressus Religionis; Altera est Cessio bonorum; in prima perdit quis voluntarie Dominium sui; in secunda Dominium suorum; de quibus certum est, valide Religionem probatam profitentem nihil sibi posse vel acquirere, vel abdicare; Sed dubium est, utrum obstrictus aeri alieno possit saeculo nuncium remittere, ac licite Vota Religionis emittere; Item, utrum ultra posse gravatus, cum non sit in solvendo, possit bona, quae possidet creditori cedere, ac deinceps a Restitutione ulterioris debiti liberari. Haec per totidem dubitationes expendam.

Doubt I: Whether entrance into religion excuses from restitution

[1] IT IS CERTAIN that one burdened with debt sins by not restoring before entrance into Religion, if he has no impediment, as Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 28. admonishes.

Utrum ingressus in Religionem excuset a Restitutione.

CERTUM est, gravatum aere alieno peccare non restituendo ante ingressum in Religionem, si nullum habeat impedimentum, ut monet Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 28.

[2] IT IS ALSO CERTAIN that, if the debts are uncertain, whose owners are unknown and cannot be known even after due diligence, and which would therefore have to be restored to the poor, such debtors can licitly enter Religion, even though, remaining in the world, they might be able to acquire wherewithal to pay. So Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 10. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 12. fol. 1044. Manuel Rodriguez quaest. Regul. tom. 3. quaest. 10. art. 9. not. 1. This however understand, as Sanchez, et Fagundez note, when the debtor himself has been constituted debtor in his own name of uncertain goods.

CERTUM etiam est, si debita sint incerta, quorum Domini ignorentur, nec facta diligentia sciri possint, et ideo pauperibus essent restituenda, posse huiusmodi debitores Religionem ingredi licite, etiam si in saeculo manentes acquirere possent, unde solverent. Ita Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 10. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 12. fol. 1044. Manuel Rodriguez quaest. Regul. tom. 3. quaest. 10. art. 9. not. 1. Hoc tamen intellige, ut notant Sanchez, et Fagundez, quando ipse debitor nomine proprio, debitor bonorum incertorum constitutus est.

[3] THE QUESTION therefore is: whether, if someone is burdened with a certain debt and has not wherewithal to pay, yet can hope to earn by his industry in the world wherewith he might pay, he can licitly enter Religion.

QUAESTIO est igitur: An, si aliquis certo aere alieno oneratus est, et non habet solvendum; potest tamen sperare in saeculo sua industria lucrari, unde solveret; possit licite Religionem ingredi.

4 GERSON denies it 2. part. Tractatu de hac re, Alphabeto 39. littera X. where he reports many Parisian Doctors, et suppl. Gabriel. in 4. dist. 38. art. 2. diffic. 12. Carbo de restit. quaest. 85. dub. 3. and others as appears in Dianam part. 2. Tract. 2. resol. 41.

> NEGANT Gerson 2. part. Tractatu de hac re, Alphabeto 39. littera X. ubi refert multos Doctores Parisienses, et suppl. Gabriel. in 4. dist. 38. art. 2. diffic. 12. Carbo de restit. quaest. 85. dub. 3. et alii apud Dianam part. 2. Tract. 2. resol. 41.

5 ON the other hand very many affirm that he can enter Religion, and therefore is not liable to restitution. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. ult. art. 6. ad 3. as Caiet. Palud. in 4. dist. 38. quaest 3. art. 2. D. Anton. 2. part tit. 11. cap. 2. §. 1. Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 19. num. 7. Rosella V. Religio 2. num. 5. et V. Restitutio 16. Angel. V. Religiosus. Sà V. Religio, and others as appears in Dianam.

> E regione plurimi affirmant, posse ingredi religionem, atque ideo restituendo non esse obnoxium. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. ult. art. 6. ad 3. ubi Caiet. Palud. in 4. dist. 38. quaest 3. art. 2. D. Anton. 2. part tit. 11. cap. 2. §. 1. Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 19. num. 7. Rosella V. Religio 2. num. 5. et V. Restitutio 16. Angel. V. Religiosus. Sà V. Religio, et alii apud Dianam.

6 THE third opinion is the middle one, inclining toward the second, with two conditions added. The first, when the debtor, remaining in the world, would hope that he can satisfy shortly. So Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 19. num. 8. Maior in 4. quaest. 8. dist. 17. Nauarrus, Commentar. primo, de regular. num. 8. Azor lib. 13. cap. 1. quaestio 5. Petrus Nauarr. lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. diffic. ult. num. 28. Sylvester verbo Religio 2. and many Canonists as appears in him, Tanner. 4. quaest. 6. disput. 15. num. 444. citing Carbonem loco citato, Valentiam quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessium Lib. 2. cap. 16. num. 22. Lopez p. p. cap. 129. But if these are asked how much time would have to be awaited, in which he might be able to earn in order to pay; Ioan. Maior answers, two years. Nauar. one year or another. Sanchez, et Fagundez stand with Maiore.

> TERTIA sententia media est, secundae arridens, duabus conditionibus appositis. Prima, quando debitor in saeculo manens speraret breui satisfacere, se posse. Ita Sanchez Lib. 4. Decal. cap. 19. num. 8. Maior in 4. quaest. 8. dist. 17. Nauarrus, Commentar. primo, de regular. num. 8. Azor lib. 13. cap. 1. quaestio 5. Petrus Nauarr. lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. diffic. ult. num. 28. Sylvester verbo Religio 2. et multi Canonistae apud eum, Tanner. 4. quaest. 6. disput. 15. num. 444. referens Carbonem loco citato, Valentiam quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessium Lib. 2. cap. 16. num. 22. Lopez p. p. cap. 129. Si autem interrogentur hi, quantum tempus esset expectandum, quo posset lucrari ad solvendum; Ioan. Maior respondet, biennium. Nauar. unum, vel alterum annum. Sanchez, et Fagundez cum Maiore stant.

7 THE other condition is, when the expectation of two years is a moral hope, so that he can pay without notable difficulty, as Nauar. Sanchez, et Fagundez say. But Sanctes in cap. 2. Regulae Minorum says another year must be awaited: It is the more common opinion.[1] What D. Bonavent. thought is not hard to find.

[1] N. Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'Est communior cum QUID senserit D. Bonavent. non est arduum invenire'; 'cum' appears to be a stray misprint, and the sentence is rendered as two statements: 'It is the more common opinion. What D. Bonavent. thought is not hard to find.'

ALTERA conditio est, quando expectatio biennii, moralis spes est, ut absque notabili difficultate possit solvere, ut aiunt Nauar. Sanchez, et Fagundez. Sanctes vero in cap. 2. Regulae Minorum, dicit alium annum expectandum: Est communior cum Diana suprà Baffaeo Verbo Restitut. 5. num. 16. Vech. disp. 2. dub. 1. Quid senserit D. Bonavent. non est arduum invenire.

8 FOR FIRST, expounding our rule cap. 2. in those words: The Ministers shall speak to them the words of the holy Gospel, that they go and sell all their things, and strive to distribute them to the poor. But if they cannot do this (he says) on account of involvement in lawsuits, let their good will suffice, whereby what is licitly ceded and all things are despised, according to that saying of Hieronymi: If you have goods of your own, sell them: if you have not, cast them away. No one about to renounce the world can well sell what he has despised so as to sell it.

PRIMO enim exponens regulam nostram cap. 2. in ea verba: Ministri dicant eis verba sancti Evangelii, quod vadant, et vendant omnia sua, et studeant ea pauperibus erogare. Quod si facere non potuerint, (ait) propter litium implicationem, sufficiat eis bona voluntas*, qua licite ceditur, et omnia contemnuntur, iuxta illud Hieronymi:* Si habes res tuas, vende: si non habes, proiice. Nemo renunciaturus saeculo potest bene vendere, quae contempsit, ut venderet.

9 THERE the holy Doctor seems to favor those who say that if some goods are entangled, in which others have rights in some way to lawsuits, or even most just claims, and he has not wherewithal to pay, nor hope of opportunity, he may cast all behind his back.

IBI videtur S. Doctor arridere dicentibus, quod si aliqua implicantia, et in quibus alii habent quomodocumque ius ad lites, seu etiam iustissimas praetentiones, si non habet unde solvat, neque opportunitatis spem, omnia possit tergum proiicere.

10 THE SAME he recalls in speculo disciplinae ad novitios, cap. 1. et in Tractatibus de paupertate, which I have read through, in which he only admonishes that they bid the world a perfect farewell and, free of any impediment of domestic goods, whether they lack them or abound in them, fly to Christ, leaving the disposition of their possessions to expert men.

EADEM refricat in speculo disciplinae ad novitios, cap. 1. et in Tractatibus de paupertate*, quos perlegi, in quibus solum admonet, mundo perfecte vale dicant, et nullo impedimento rerum familiarium, sive eis careant, sive abundent, ad Christum evolent, relinquendo de suis rebus dispositionem hominibus peritis.*

11 THE REASON by which D. Thom. and others support themselves is that the person of a free man is not bound to creditors; but only his goods: Therefore, by ceding them he satisfies them.

RATIO, qua nituntur D. Thom. et alii, est, quia persona hominis liberi non est creditoribus obligata; sed eius solum bona: Ergo eis cedendo satisfacit.

12 AGAINST this Fagundez argues, because it would follow that, these things perishing, the right of the creditor would perish; and thus, if new resources were acquired, they would not be subject to it, nor could the debtor be thrust into prison after the sentence of the Judge had been given.

CONTRA arguit Fagundez, quia sequeretur, pereuntibus his rebus, perire ius creditoris; et ita, si novae facultates acquirerentur, non essent subiectae, neque posset in carcere trudi debitor, post latam Iudicis sententiam.

13 THE REASON therefore devised by Fagundez is asserted to be this, that the person is not subjected as a slave, but only the goods are subjected. And so he is only bound to pay when he can morally; But in the said state he is accounted morally unable.

RATIO igitur ficta a Fagundez asseritur, quia persona non est subiecta, quasi serva, sed sola bona subiiciuntur. Itaque solum tenetur solvere, quando moraliter potest; At in statu dicto computatur moraliter impotens.

14 YET these reasons are not valid, and the former plainly wavers, as Fagundez says, yet it is not well overthrown by him; for if new resources arise, they are still bound by the same reason, because the debtor's goods are subjected to servitude. And so the person is not yet subjected to servitude. But if the person were imprisoned, this would be either as a punishment for past squandering, by which he precipitated himself into a state of inability to pay, dissipating goods not his own; or because fraud is presupposed, and it is still not established that he is unable to pay.

HAE tamen rationes non sunt validae, et prior sane nutat, ut ait Fagundez, non tamen bene ab eo infirmatur; nam si novae facultates resurgunt, adhuc obligantur eadem ratione, quia bona debitoris subiecta sunt servituti. Itaque non adhuc servituti subiicitur persona. Quod si persona carceretur, hoc est vel in poenam dilapidationis praeteritae, qua se praecipitavit in statum ineptitudinis ad solvendum, dissipando bona non sua; vel quia supponitur fraus, et adhuc non constat, hunc esse ineptum ad solvendum.

15 NOR does the reason of Fagundez add strength; for since the goods are subjected, and these are virtually in the person able to pay, they subject by their virtue the person, who by reason of the debt can be subjected in the natural law, as D. Bonavent. rightly argues in 2. dist. 44. quaest. penult. for Christian liberty does not exempt persons from all subjection; otherwise they would not be subject to Princes, nor to Prelates, which is most false, as I showed Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 1. et 2.

NEQUE ratio Fagundez robur adiungit; nam cum res sint subditae, et hae virtualiter sint in persona apta solvere, subiiciunt virtute personam, quae ratione debiti in iure naturae potest subiici, ut recte arguit D. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 44. quaest. penult. non enim libertas Christiana eximit personas ab omni subiectione, alioqui neque Principibus subderetur, neque Praelatis, quod est falsissimum, ut ostendi Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 1. et 2.

16 THE TRUE REASON therefore to be adduced is that the creditor, whose action is void because of his adversary's poverty, seems to have no action, as is said L. Nam in his, ff. de dolo malo.

RATIO igitur vera afferri est, quia creditor, cuius actio est inanis ob adversarii inopiam, nullam videtur actionem habere, ut dicitur L. Nam in his, ff. de dolo malo.

17 Since therefore morally he is not actually able to pay, as is presupposed, nor morally by virtue, because too long a delay of time would be required for payment; it follows that he is not bound; and thus the natural law does not press upon impossibilities, and so the objections are resolved.

Cum igitur moraliter non sit in solvendo actu, ut supponitur, neque virtute moraliter, quia nimia dilatio exigeretur temporis ad solutionem; sequitur, eum non teneri; et ita ius naturale non instat ad impossibilia, et sic obiecta solvuntur.

18 THEY STILL OBJECT that those wishing to enter Religion must be asked: Whether they are burdened with debt; which would be done in vain if they could licitly enter while so burdened; but this interrogation was introduced by the decree of Sixtus V. issued motu proprio in the year 1558, who declares such men as burdened with enormous debt and bound to accountings, or accounts to be rendered, incapable.

OBIICIUNT adhuc, interrogandos, volentes ingredi Religionem: An graventur aere alieno, quod frustra fieret, si licite possent ingredi gravati aere tali; haec vero interrogatio fit, decreto Sixti V. anno 1558. editi motu proprio, qui huiusmodi gravatos ingenti aere alieno, et ratiociniis, seu reddendis rationibus administrationum obligatos, declarat inhabiles.

19 THIS decree Clemens VIII. tempered, as to the invalidity of the profession of those burdened with debt; yet not as to the illicit act of profession and the punishments of those receiving it.

> HOC decretum temperavit Clemens VIII. quod ad invaliditatem professionis huiusmodi gravatorum aere alieno; non tamen quod ad illicitum actum professionis, et poenas recipientium.

20 YET those are not included in that Motu proprio of Sixtus V. who fell into inability to pay without their own fault, as Sanchez notes in Decal. Lib. 4. cap. 19. num. 24. Nor those to whom creditors renounce their claim. Nor those who are debtors from a merely liberal promise; but those who contracted resources for money, and after the contract squandered them, as Sanchez loco cit. et Fagundez num. 7. note.

> NON includuntur tamen in eo Motu proprio Sixti V. illi, qui sine sua culpa ad impotentiam solvendi devenere, ut advertunt Sanchez in Decal. Lib. 4. cap. 19. num. 24. Neque illi, quibus creditores abrenuncient. Nec illi, qui ex sola promissione liberali debitores sunt; sed hi, qui facultates ad pecuniam contraxerunt, et post contractionem decoxerunt, ut notant Sanchez loco cit. et Fagundez num. 7.

21 FINALLY Sanchez judges that those who squandered through their own fault, if they make a cession of goods and leave them to the creditors, and there is no probable hope that, if they remain in the world, they could satisfy, are not included in that Motu proprio, ex his satisfit obiectioni.

> TANDEM existimat Sanchez, eos, qui culpa sua decoxerunt, si cessionem faciant bonorum, et relinquant ea creditoribus, neque sit spes probabilis, quod si maneant in saeculo, satisfacere queant, non includi illo Motu proprio, ex his satisfit obiectioni.

Doubt II: Whether cession of goods excuses from restitution

1 The Laws permit Cession of goods, so that in the external forum the debtor may be safe L. Qui bonis, ff. de cessione bonorum, and Cod. de iis, qui bonis cesserunt; yet this cession in the forum of conscience does not free him, except insofar as it excuses his poverty, otherwise it would free him even without such cession, as Navar. notes, cap. 17. num. 86. Medina quaest. 3. cap. 3. Sotus lib. 4. d. Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Couar. Lib. 2. variarum, cap. 1. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. Tanner. num. 441. disp 4. quaest. 6. Bassaeus V. Restit. 5. num. 5.

> An Cessio bonorum excuset a restitutione.
> PERMITTITUR a Legibus Cessio bonorum*, ut in foro externo tutus fiat debitor* L. Qui bonis, ff. de cessione bonorum, et Cod. de iis, qui bonis cesserunt*, haec tamen cessio in foro conscientiae non liberat, nisi quantum excusat inopia, alioqui liberaret etiam sine tali cessione, ut notant Navar.* cap. 17. num. 86. Medina quaest. 3. cap. 3. Sotus lib. 4. d. Iust. quaest. 7. art. 4. Couar. Lib. 2. variarum, cap. 1. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. Tanner. num. 441. disp 4. quaest. 6. Bassaeus V. Restit. 5. num. 5.

2 He will still be bound to restore if he comes to better fortune, as the same Doctors teach, and as is had in Leg. 1. and Leg. cum et filii, and Leg. is, qui bonis. Cod. de his, qui bonis, locis citatis. Which Couar. also shows to be true, when that cession of goods is made with some ceremony of ignominy.

> ITA tenebitur ille restituere, si ad meliorem fortunam venerit, ut docent iidem Doctores, et habetur Leg. 1. et Leg. cum et filii, et Leg. is, qui bonis. Cod. de his, qui bonis, locis citatis. Quod etiam ostendit Couar. esse verum, quando cum aliqua caeremonia ignominiae, cessio illa bonorum fit.

[3] Yet Caspensis observes, disp. 1. sect. 13. with Toletus Lib. 1. cap. 16. that a debtor in cession of goods may retain and conceal what is necessary for his own sustenance, that of his wife, children, and others in the first degree; nor are those who know it bound to reveal it, even if a penalty is imposed on one who does not reveal; they may even swear that they do not know where such goods are, understanding within themselves, insofar as they are bound to reveal it; but Petrus Navar. Lib. 4. cap. 4. num. 50. says this is true of one who is compelled without fault to cede his goods; Tannerus subscribes, num. 441.

> OBSERVAT tamen Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 13. cum Toleto Lib. 1. cap. 16. posse debitorem in cessione bonorum retinere, et occultare necessaria suae sustentationi, uxoris, filiorum, et aliorum in primo gradu; neque teneri eos, qui sciunt, id revelare, etiamsi poena non revelanti imponatur; possunt etiam iurare, se nescire, ubi sint talia bona, intelligendo interius, ita ut teneantur revelare*, sed Petrus Navar.* Lib. 4. cap. 4. num. 50. verum esse ait de eo, qui absque culpa cogitur cedere bonis, subscribit Tannerus num. 441.

Doubt III: On the causes excusing from restitution on the part of the creditor

[1] The first among the causes is judged to be free remission, made by the Creditor, which must be made neither by force nor by fraud, as Caiet. distinguishes, here, art. 6. and in sum. v. Restitutio, cap. 6. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. cap. 2. Navar. in man. cap. 17. num. 73. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. pun. 6. puncto 7. Caspensis disp. 1. num. 163. Graffius Lib. 2. decis. cap. 131. Sylvest. V. Iudex, 1. quaest. 8. Turtecremata in cap. si res 14. quaest. 6. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 30. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 15. num. 438. who add that care must be taken lest the remission be impeded by law and invalidated; for it can be invalidated for the common good, rendering the debtor unfit for such a benefit of remission, and in fact Canon Law invalidated it, cap. statum, de rescripc. in 6. when an Ecclesiastical Judge receives something beyond victuals; for in that chapter he is bound to restitution, and there the remission of that obligation is invalidated; Likewise if a Bishop, or Archbishop, visiting the Churches, receive anything beyond what is necessary for food, according to cap. 5. and 6. de censibus, and extract. in 6. Si iudex delegatus let him receive anything from the parties against cap. statutum, de rescripc. in 6.

> De causis excusantibus a Restitutione ex parte creditoris.
> PRIMA inter causas censetur condonatio libera, facta a Creditore, quae fiat non vi, nec fraude, ut differunt Caiet. hic, art. 6. et in sum. v. Restitutio, cap. 6. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. cap. 2. Navar. in man. cap. 17. num. 73. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. pun. 6. puncto 7. Caspensis disp. 1. num. 163. Graffius Lib. 2. decis. cap. 131. Sylvest. V. Iudex, 1. quaest. 8. Turtecremata in cap. si res 14. quaest. 6. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 30. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 15. num. 438. qui addunt advertendum, ne remissio sit impedita a iure, et irritata; potest enim ob bonum commune irritari, reddendo debitorem inhabilem ad tale beneficium remissionis, et de facto eam irritavit Ius Canon. cap. statum, de rescripc. in 6. quando Iudex Ecclesiasticus aliquid accipit praeter esculenta; obligatur enim in eo cap. ad restitutionem, et ibi irritatur remissio huius obligationis; Similiter si Episcopus, vel Archiepiscopus visitantes Ecclesias, praeter necessaria ad victum, aliquid recipiant, iuxta quod habetur cap. 5. et 6. de censibus, et extract. in 6. Si iudex delegatus aliquid accipiat a partibus contra cap. statutum, de rescripc. in 6.

[2] The second cause is spiritual or bodily harm, which the creditor would incur if restitution were made at such a time, or in such a place, as D. Thom. teaches, art. 5. ad primum, and commonly. Hence a sword is not to be returned to a madman, lest he kill with it; nor money, which he might spend to the ruin of the Republic, or of others. Ambrose also taught this, Lib. de officiis, last chapter, and many others as gathered by Fagundez Lib. 7. capite 30. num. 32. Bassaeum V. Restitut. §. 1.

SECUNDA causa est damnum spirituale, aut corporale, quod creditor incurreret, si tali tempore, vel loco fieret restitutio, ut docet D. Thom. art. 5. ad primum, et communiter. Hinc enim furioso non est reddendus gladius, ne interimat; neque pecunia, quam in perniciem Reipublicae, aut aliorum expendat. Quod docuit etiam Ambrosius Lib. de officiis, capite ultimo, et multi apud Fagundez Lib. 7. capite 30. num. 32. Bassaeum V. Restitut. §. 1.

3 But they ask: Whether the debtor is excused from Restitution, if the creditor is an excommunicatus vitandus.

QUAERUNT vero: An excusetur debitor a Restitutione, si creditor est excommunicatus vitandus.

4 It is answered negatively, with the Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 4. Sylvestre V. Excommunicatio, 5. quaest. 12. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. cap. 9. Couar. in regula Peccatum, part. 1. num. 10. Valenria quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 9. Tolet. Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. disp. 15. num. 24. Suarez de censuris, disp. 15. sect. 8. Maldet. tract 4. cap. 7. dub. 6. Fagundez L. 7. cap. 30. num. 29. Tanner. 445. and others commonly, against Panormitanus cap. veritatis, de dolo.

RESPONDETUR negative cum Maiore 4. dist. 15. quaest. 4. Sylvestre V. Excommunicatio, 5. quaest. 12. Ioan. Medina quaest. 3. de rebus restit. cap. 9. Couar. in regula Peccatum, part. 1. num. 10. Valenria quaest. 6. puncto 7. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 16. dub. 9. Tolet. Lib. 4. de restit. cap. 4. disp. 15. num. 24. Suarez de censuris, disp. 15. sect. 8. Maldet. tract 4. cap. 7. dub. 6. Fagundez L. 7. cap. 30. num. 29. Tanner. 445. et aliis communiter contra Panormitanum cap. veritatis, de dolo.

5 It is proved, because in the sentence of excommunication he is not held to be deprived of his right concerning his own goods, nor is necessary communication prohibited, as all confess.

PROBATUR, quia in sententia excommunicationis non habetur, priuari eum iure suo circa res proprias, neque prohibetur necessaria communicatio, ut omnes fatentur.

6 You will say: cap. Nos sanctorum; and cap. Iuratos, 16. quaest. 5. and cap. ult. de Haeret. subjects are absolved from the oath of fidelity owed to a lord who afterwards fell into excommunication.

Dices cap. Nos sanctorum; et cap. Iuratos, 16. quaest. 5. et cap. ult. de Haeret. subditi absolvuntur a iuramento fidelitatis, debitae domino, qui postea incidit in excommunicationem.

7 It is answered: not on that account is he deprived of the right to his goods, nor are the odia to be extended, but restricted.

RESPONDETUR, non ob id priuari iure rerum suarum, neque odia sunt amplianda, sed restringenda.

Doubt IV: On the causes excusing from restitution on the part of the thing itself

1 One cause is judged, namely the destruction of the thing without the fault and delay of the debtor, because he had it in his keeping, and was bound to restore the same in specie. Then the thing perished for the Lord himself, as Medina notes, quaest. 3. causa 6. Navar. cap. 17. num. 80. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. And as if after a thing that was not determined for payment, although destined by you for payment, you will be bound to return it. See Valentia.

De causis excusantibus a restitutione ex parte rei.

UNA causa censetur, nempe interitus rei sine culpa, et mora eius, quia eam apud se habebat, et debebat eandem numero restituere. Tunc res Domino ipsi perit, ut notant Medina quaest. 3. causa 6. Navar. cap. 17. num. 80. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 7. Ac si post res, quae non erat determinata solutioni, quamvis a te solutioni sit destinata, reddere teneberis. Vide Valentiam.

Doubt V: On the causes excusing from restitution on the part of the public authority

1 THREE causes are enumerated from this chapter as excusing.

> De causis excusantibus a Restitutione ex parte publicae potestatis.
> TRES causae ex hoc capite enumerantur excusantes.

2 The FIRST is the authority of the public power, granting something to someone by law itself, as in prescriptions, e. g.; but not merely permitting the possession of a thing with impunity, as Medina noted most excellently, quaest. 1. causa 7. Tanner. n. 440. infra, Valentia quaest. 6 punct. 8. Whence it comes about that, although the laws in contracts permit deception that does not exceed half the just price (as appears in L. Item in pretio, §. sin. ff. locati,), nevertheless in the forum of conscience he must restore who has deceived another even within half the just price.

> PRIMA est authoritas publicae potestatis, ipso iure aliquid tribuentis alicui, ut in praescriptionibus, v. g. non autem solum impune permittentis possessionem rei, sicut optime adnotavit Medina quaest. 1. causa 7. Tanner. n. 440. infra, Valentia quaest. 6 punct. 8. Unde fit, ut, quamvis leges in contractibus permittant deceptionem, quae ultra dimidium iusti pretii non sit (ut patet L. Item in pretio, §. sin. ff. locati,) tamen debet in foro conscientiae restituere ei, qui alterum infra dimidium quoque iusti pretii deceperit.

3 The SECOND cause is the authority of the public power adjudicating a thing to someone by a judicial sentence. See Medina causa 7. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 4 puncto 2.

> SECUNDA causa est authoritas publicae potestatis per sententiam iudicialem, alicui rem inre adiudicans. Vide Medinam causa 7. Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 4 puncto 2.

4 The THIRD cause is the authority of the supreme Ecclesiastical power, when the Pontiff, for a just cause, by a Bull of composition remits to someone a certain part of uncertain goods to be restored, provided he contribute a certain part of them to pious uses of the Church, according to what Medina teaches on this matter, said q. 3. and q. 11. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 3. Navar. man. cap. 17. num. 91. Valentia loco cit. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. num. 444. Bassaeus, V. Restit. 5. num. 13.

> TERTIA causa est authoritas summa Ecclesiastica, cum Pontifex iusta de causa, per Bullam compositionis, remittit alicui partem aliquam bonorum incertorum restituendorum, modo in pios Ecclesiae usus contribuat certam aliquam eorum partem, iuxta ea, quae de hac re tradunt Medina dicta q. 3. et q. 11. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 3. Navar. man. cap. 17. num. 91. Valentia loco cit. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. num. 444. Bassaeus, V. Restit. 5. num. 13.

Question VIII: Where restitution is to be made

1 TWIN rules for this matter are assigned by the Doctors.

> Ubi sit Restituendum.
> GEMINAE regulae pro hac re a Doctoribus assignantur.

2 The FIRST is: Restitution must be made there where the creditor recovers his goods without loss to himself, provided also the debtor does not straightway suffer loss without his own fault. In this all the Doctors agree unanimously, D. Thom. art 5. ad 3. Caietanus here, and V. Restitutio, cap. 5. Sotus

Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 3. Medina quaest. 2. de restit. dub. 3. Navar. cap 17. man. num. 42. Couar. in regul. Peccatum, part. 1. num. 9. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 8.

> PRIMA est. Ibi debet restitui, ubi creditor rem suam recuperet absque suo damno, dummodo neque debitor damnum absque sua culpa mox patiatur. In hac unanimes consentiunt Doctores, D. Thom. art 5. ad 3. Caietanus hic, et V. Restitutio, cap. 5. Sotus Lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 3. Medina quaest. 2. de restit. dub. 3. Navar. cap 17. man. num. 42. Couar. in regul. Peccatum, part. 1. num. 9. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 8.

3 SECOND rule: when the debtor cannot restore in such a place without unjust loss to himself or to the creditor, he may admonish the creditor, and in the meantime suspend, or even, according to the doctrine of D. Thom. here, art. 5. ad 3., deposit the thing in question in a safe place, so that it may be returned opportunely.

> SECUNDA regula; quando debitor non potest absque iniusto suo, vel creditoris damno restituere in tali loco, potest admonere creditorem, et interim suspendere, vel etiam iuxta doctrinam D. Thom. hic, art. 5. ad 3. rem integram in tuto deponere, ut opportune reddatur.

4 And the first rule follows: first, that he who is bound to restore by reason of the thing alone, and not by reason of an unjust acceptance or retention, satisfies well if he returns it in the place where he justly and in good faith received it, or where he promised he would pay, or in that place to which he went with simple intention, and he is not bound to pay elsewhere with expense. Second, that he who by unjust acceptance, retention, or delay made himself liable to restitution, is bound to restore, even with expense, where it is equally convenient for the Lord; For he unjustly afflicted the Lord with a like inconvenience. See Valentia.

> Et prima regula sequitur primo, eum qui ratione solius rei, et non ratione iniustae acceptionis, aut retentionis tenetur restituere; bene satisfacere, si eam reddat in loco, ubi eam iuste, et bona fide accepit, aut ubi se soluturum spopondit, aut in eo loco, in quem simplici animo abiit, nec teneri alibi cum sumptu solvere. Secundo, cum qui iniusta acceptione, retentione, aut mora se reddidit obnoxium restitutioni, teneri restituere, etiam sumptu, ubi Domino aeque sit commodum; Nam incommodo simili Dominum inique affecit. Vide Valentiam.

5 I yet think this is not true, when by that mode of restoring the debtor would undergo a greater loss than the creditor has suffered. For a similar reason, if in transferring the thing you were compelled to spend far more than the thing is worth, you are not bound; but it can be given to the poor, says Ligis num. 9.

> ID tamen reor verum non esse, quando debitor eo modo restituendi maius subiret damnum, quam creditori sit perpessus. Simili ratione si in re transferenda cogeretis multo plus expendere, quam res valeat, te non teneri; sed posse dari pauperibus, ait Ligis num. 9.

Question IX: How restitution is to be made

1 The manner must be convenient, so that the thing returns to the Lord in a fitting way. Hence it does not matter whether the debtor restores by himself or through another, as is gathered from cap. Qui per alium, De reg. iur. in 6.

> Quomodo sit restituendum.
> Modus esse debet commodus, ut res modo apto redeat ad Dominum. Hinc non refert; an per se, vel per alium debitor restituat, ut colligitur ex cap. Qui per alium, De reg. iur. in 6.

[2] Hence it follows that he who, because of uncertainty about the creditors, must restore to the poor, can do so by himself, without the counsel of his confessor, or the intervention of the Bishop, as Nauar. gathers from the common opinion, man. cap. 17. num. 91. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 9. who adds with others, that the Bishop cannot forbid him to do so by himself without his counsel, except in four cases, in which the Bishop has power over it, as the cited authors teach. The first is, when he who was bound to restore to the poor dies without heir and executor. Second, when such a man is unwilling to restore, so that proceedings can be taken against him. Third, when such a man does not distribute rightly to the poor. Fourth, when such a man is found to be a usurer, and makes a will, or is already dead, as appears in cap. Quamquam de usuris, in 6. The Bishop can also, for certain reasons, forbid the confessor to absolve such a man without his counsel.

> Hinc sequitur, eum, qui ob incertitudinem creditorum debet restituere pauperibus, posse id facere per se, absque Consilio confessarii, vel opera Episcopi, ut ex communi sentiunt Nauar. man. cap. 17. num. 91. Valentia quaest. 6. puncto 9. qui addit cum aliis, non posse prohibere Episcopum, ne per se absque consilio suo faciat, exceptis quatuor casibus, in quibus Episcopus habet ad id potestatem, ut docent allegati. Primus est, quando, qui restituere debebat pauperibus, moritur absque haerede et exequutore. Secundus, quando talis non vult restituere, unde potest contra eum procedi. Tertius, quando talis non recte distribuit pauperibus. Quartus, quando talis est repertus usurarius, et condit testamentum, aut est iam mortuus, ut patet cap. Quamquam de usuris, in 6. Potest etiam certas ob causas Episcopus confessario prohibere, ne absque consilio suo talem absolvat.

[3] It follows next that he who holds a thing from an unjust reception can restore through another, lest he incur infamy or loss of liberty, as I said above, and as the Doctors teach, gathered by Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 28. and Bassaeum V. Restitut. 4. §. 5. Bonacinam de restit. disp. 1. quaest. 7. I counsel, however, that he take care to ascertain whether restitution has been made.

> Sequitur deinde, eum, qui ex iniqua receptione habet rem, posse per alium restituere, ne subeat infamiam, vel privationem libertatis, ut dixi supra, et docent Doctores apud Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 28. et Bassaeum V. Restitut. 4. §. 5. Bonacinam de restit. disp. 1. quaest. 7. Moneo tamen, ut curet certior fieri, an facta sit restitutio.

[4] I add, with the cited Doctors, that public debts arising from wickedness, as usuries and robberies, ought to be paid publicly, so that the scandal to others may be removed.

> Addo cum allatis DD. publica debita e pravitate, ut usuras, latrocinia, publice esse solvenda, ad offensam aliorum amovendam.

Question X: In what order restitution is to be made

[1] Human Laws are given prescribing order in restitution, and they bind in conscience, as Azor teaches, tract. 3. lib. 4. cap. 36. quaestio 7. Turrianus 2. 2. disput. 19. dub. 4. num. 5. cap. 10. Vasquez de restit. cap. 11. dub. 2. num. 50. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 35. num. 17. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 10. The reason is, because the law could give the creditor a right before another, whether it be a municipal Law, or the civil law for the public good. But they observe, if the debtor is able to pay all, no order is necessary.

> Quo ordine restituendum.
> Dantur Leges humanae praescribentes ordinem in restitutione, atque obligant in conscientia, ut docent Azor tract. 3. lib. 4. cap. 36. quaestio 7. Turrianus 2. 2. disput. 19. dub. 4. num. 5. cap. 10. Vasquez de restit. cap. 11. dub. 2. num. 50. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 35. num. 17. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 10. Ratio est, quia

potuit lex dare ius creditori ante alium, sive sit Lex municipalis, sive ius civile ob bonum publicum. Observant autem, si debitor sit in solvendo omnibus; non esse ordinem necessarium.

2 Therefore, first, by the law of nature certain debts are to be paid before uncertain ones, as they commonly admonish, gathered by Valentia loco citato, Sylvestrum V. Restitutio, Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 35. num. 19. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. num. 412. Bassaeum V. Restit. 4. § 6.

Primo igitur iure naturae solvenda sunt prius debita certa, quam incerta, ut monent communiter apud Valentiam loco citato*, Sylvestrum* V. Restitutio*, Fagundez* Lib. 7. cap. 35. num. 19. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 6. num. 412. Bassaeum V. Restit. 4. § 6.

3 Second, among certain debts, those are to be restored first by the law of nature, if they exist, whose dominion always remained with the creditor, and which therefore were to be restored the same in specie, as the cited Doctors admonish, as deposits, pledges, or things lent for use: And this is the common opinion in Tanner, num. 412. Leg. si curator, ff. de iure fisci.

Secundo, ex debitis certis illa iure naturae sunt prius restituenda, si extant, quorum dominium semper mansit apud creditorem, et quae ideo fuere restituenda eadem numero, ut allegati Doctores admonent, ut deposita, pignora, vel commodata: Et est communis sententia apud Tannerum num. 412. Leg. si curator, ff. de iure fisci.

4 Third, among certain debts of things which do not exist, and are not to be paid the same in specie, those at least by civil law are to be paid first which are specially called real debts, because the goods of the debtor are determined to their payment by an express hypothecation, or pledge, or because the price of the thing had not yet been paid by the debtor, and therefore the thing remained specially liable to payment, although it passed into the dominion of the debtor. So Medina quaest. 2. dub. 5. Caietanus, Nauar. Valentia, Tanner. num. 414. and others agreeably Lege 2. ff. Quibus causis, pignor. vel hypothec. tacite contrahuntur. For such debts are of a stricter obligation than mere personal debts, to whose payment no particular thing is assigned; and this order seems to be of the law of nature. Hypothecary creditors outrank personal creditors,[2] Leg. 2. 4. 5. Cod. qui potior in pignore.

2 Editor's note: the print reads 'Hypothecarios sue edunt creditores personales', ungrammatical as printed; rendered per sense required by Cod. 'qui potior in pignore' — hypothecary creditors are preferred to personal creditors (iure antecedunt).

Tertio e debitis certis rerum, quae non extant, nec sunt solvenda eadem numero, illa saltem iure civili sunt primo solvenda, quae peculiariter vocantur debita realia, eo quod eorum solutioni sunt determinata bona debitoris per expressam hypothecam, aut impignorationem, aut propterea, quod rei pretium non esset adhuc a debitore solutum, et ideo res manserit peculiariter obnoxia solutioni, licet in dominium debitoris transierit. Ita Medina quaest. 2. dub. 5. Caietanus, Nauar. Valentia, Tanner. num. 414. et alii convenienter Lege 2. ff. Quibus causis, pignor. vel hypothec. tacite contrahuntur. Talia enim debita strictioris sunt debiti, quam personalia mera, quorum solutioni nulla res peculiaris est deputata, et hic ordo videtur iuris naturae. Hypothecarios sue edunt creditores personales Leg. 2. 4. 5. Cod. qui potior in pignore.

5 Fourth, Therefore, among certain debts not real but personal, those seem by the law of nature to be paid first which were contracted from a just contract, rather than those from a delict, as Nauarrus, Caietanus, and Valentia think. Yet they limit it, lest it be understood also of one convicted, through whom he who owes from a delict (as a usurer) has been made poorer.[1]

1 Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'fieri[t] factus pauperior' — both the scan transcription and the OCR dump agree on this garbled wording; rendered as 'has been made poorer' as the most plausible sense.

Quarto Ideo ex debitis certis non realibus, sed personalibus, illa iure naturae videntur prius solvenda, quae fuere contracta ex iusto contractu, quam quae ex delicto, ut sentiunt Nauarrus, Caietanus, et Valentia. Limitant tamen, ut non intelligatur etiam de convictis, per quem, qui ex delicto debeat, (ut usurarius) fierit factus pauperior.

6 In truth, those things are to be paid first which are held from a delict; say Medina supra, Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 8. Emanuel Rodriguez part. 2. cap. 46. and others.

Enim vero prius sunt solvenda, quae ex delicto habentur; aiunt Medina supra, Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 8. Emanuel Rodriguez part. 2. cap. 46. et alii.

7 To me it is more probable that they are equal, as very many teach, gathered by Fagundez Lib. 7.; except the case in which someone sold a thing, and it remains the same in specie, and the seller has not received the price. I shall refer the Doctors casu 8. So also Tanner. num. 421. with Sylvestro, V. Restitutio, Aragon. quaest. 62. art. 5. Petrus Nauar. Lib. 4. cap. 4. Less. cap. 15. dubio 7. Bass. 4. num. 39. according to L. 6. Cod. de bonis authoritate Iudicis.

Mihi probabilius est, esse aequales, ut docent plurimi apud Fagundez Lib. 7. excipe casum, in quo aliquis vendidit rem, et manet eadem numero, nec pretium accepit venditor. Doctores referam casu 8. Sic et Tanner. num. 421. cum Sylvestro, V. Restitutio*, Aragon.* quaest. 62. art. 5. Petrus Nauar. Lib. 4. cap. 4. Less. cap. 15. dubio 7. Bass. 4. num. 39. iuxta L. 6. Cod. de bonis authoritate Iudicis.

8 Fifth, among personal debts, apart from delict, those are to be paid first by civil law which are called privileged, as the Dowry of a wife, and what is owed to the Fisc. So Sylvest. V. Restitutio, quaest. 5. Nauar. supra n. 50. Valentia loco citato, and others. For these are preferred to others not having express hypothecations Leg. assiduis, Cod. Qui potest in pignor. hab. et Lib. Quamvis de Privil fisc. See Sylvestrum.

Quinto ex debitis personalibus, citra delictum, ea prius iure civili solvenda, quae vocantur privilegiata, ut Dos uxoris, et quae Fisco debentur. Ita Sylvest. V. Restitutio, quaest. 5. Nauar. supra n. 50. Valentia loco citato*, et alii. Nam haec praeponuntur aliis, non habentibus expressas hypothecas* Leg. assiduis, Cod. Qui potest in pignor. hab. et Lib. Quamvis de Privil fisc. Vide Sylvestrum.

9 Sixth, among personal debts not privileged, those tacitly hypothecated are first to be paid; then, those contracted under the title of deposit (since the deposited thing no longer exists, or is not to be returned the same in specie), unless it were rather a Mutuum than a Depositum.

Sexto ex debitis personalibus non privilegiatis prius solvenda sunt tacite hypothecata, Deinde, quae sunt contracta titulo depositi, (cum iam res deposita non extat, aut non est reddenda eadem numero,) nisi potius fuerit Mutuum, quam Depositum.

10 Seventh, in each genus of all the aforesaid debts of the same reason, those are to be paid first which are older, as is had in the Law: Prior in time, stronger in right. For the longer the creditor has lacked his own; the more strictly is it owed to him. So Sylvester, Medina, Valentia, Salon. loco cit. which Malderus, tract. 4. cap. 6. says is the more probable opinion.

Septimo in unoquoque genere praedictorum omnium debitorum eiusdem rationis, prius sunt solvenda, quae sunt antiquiora, ut habetur in Iure: Prior tempore, potior est iure. Quo enim diutius creditor caruit suo; eo id illi strictius debetur. Ita Sylvester, Medina, Valentia, Salon. loco cit. quam Malderus, tract. 4. cap. 6. probabiliorem ait.

11 I judge, however, that in conscience they are to be divided pro rata, computing the greater loss of the older creditor. So Malder. supra, Bassaeus V. Restitutio, §. 4. num. 26. Bonacina de Restit. disp. 1.

quaest. 8. punct. 2. num. 19. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 15. dub. 6. D. Anton. 2. part. tit. 2. cap. 7. §. 3. Molina Tom. 2. disp. 536. Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 11. disp. 2. a num. 48. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 12. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 34. nor is a rule of law given except for real debts with a hypothecation, or the like, from Leg. 1. ff. de separationibus. EIGHTH, as to debts from delict, those are to be paid first which were contracted with greater guilt, Valentia and Medina hold.

> Ego existimo, in conscientia ea dividenda pro rata, computato maiori damno antiquioris. Ita Malder. supra, Bassaeus V. Restitutio, §. 4. num. 26. Bonacina de Restit. disp. 1. quaest. 8. punct. 2. num. 19. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 15. dub. 6. D. Anton. 2. part. tit. 2. cap. 7. §. 3. Molina Tom. 2. disp. 536. Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 11. disp. 2. a num. 48. Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 12. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 34. neque datur regula iuris, nisi pro realibus debitis cum hypotheca, vel simili ex Leg. 1. ff. de separationibus. OCTAVO quod ad debita ex delicto, ea prius solvenda, quae maiori culpa contracta sunt, tenent Valentia, et Medina.

12 Yet the OPPOSED opinion is more probable, that no order is given among these, for instance between stolen goods and goods seized by rapine, unless some offense has been added in these, which must first be made good. So Toletanus L. 4. de restit. cap. 6. dub. 8. num. 43. Azorius tract. 3. Lib. 4. cap. 36. quaestio 2. Sayrus L. 10. tract. 5. cap. 20. dub. 6. Lessius L. 2. cap. 15. dub. 3. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 19. dub. 2. Vasquez opusc. de restitut. cap. 11. dub. 2. Nauar. summa, cap. 17. a num. 88. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 33. num. 7. who admit neither an order between debt from contract and from delict; nor any order among debts from delict. Caspensis says nearly the same, disp. 1. sect. 12.

> OPPOSITA tamen sententia est probabilior, nullum dari ordinem inter haec, puta inter furata, et rapina abrepta, nisi in his aliqua offensio addita, sit refarcienda prius. Ita Toletanus L. 4. de restit. cap. 6. dub. 8. num. 43. Azorius tract. 3. Lib. 4. cap. 36. quaestio 2. Sayrus L. 10. tract. 5. cap. 20. dub. 6. Lessius L. 2. cap. 15. dub. 3. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 19. dub. 2. Vasquez opusc. de restitut. cap. 11. dub. 2. Nauar. summa, cap. 17. a num. 88. Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 33. num. 7. qui neque inter debitum ex contractu, et ex delicto; neque inter debita ex delicto aliquem ordinem admittunt. Idem fere ait Caspensis disp. 1. sect. 12.

13 The RATION is, because the injury, abstracted from the thing taken away, does not have its Commutative compensation in the thing itself, but in another order, as the cited authors note.

> RATIO est, quia iniuria, praecisa a re ablata, non habet suam compensationem Commutativam in ipsa re, sed in alio ordine, ut notant allegati.

14 Restitution for each of the individual debts of Commutative and Distributive Justice is to be treated in the following disputations.

> DE restitutione vero e singulis debitis Iustitiae Commutativae, et Distributivae agendum sequentibus disputationibus.

15 AMONG those cooperating in harm, the principal is he who commanded efficaciously, who had the authority of sending, as a Judge over a subject, a lord over a slave.

18 IF however the prior Creditor is wealthy, and the later one poor and needy, restitution is to be made to him first, says Azorius part. 3. lib. 4. quaestio 4. The Ratio of D. Thom. and Medina loco citato, is, because one must first depart from the greater injury; but a greater injury is done in retaining the goods of the poorer than of the richer: But this Ratio is not approved by Azorius; who assigns another, supposing the poor Creditor to labor in such indigence as to be an object of mercy; and then he says restitution is owed to him; because, with this twofold precept of Justice and of mercy concurring, obedience is to be rendered to both rather than to Justice alone; and the richer creditor is bound to consent.

> SI vero prior Creditor locuples sit, et posterior pauper, et egenus, huic prius Restituendum ait Azorius part. 3. lib. 4. quaestio 4. Ratio D. Thom. et Medinae loco citato*, est, quia a maiori iniuria prius est recedendum; maior autem iniuria fit retinendo rem pauperioris, quam ditioris: Verum Ratio haec non probatur Azorio; qui aliam assignat, supponens pauperem Creditorem ea indigentia laborare, ut misericordiae sit obiectum; et tunc ait ei restituendum; quia concurrente duplici hoc praecepto Iustitiae, et misericordiae, potius obsequendum est utrique, quam Iustitiae soli; et creditor ditior tenetur consentire.*

19 BUT the prior Ratio is indeed firm enough, nor would Azorius so easily have rejected it, if he had perceived that it coincided with his own; For therefore a greater injury is inflicted on the poor man, by subtracting his goods and not restoring them; because beyond Justice, since the burden of the blow falls above both creditors, the unjust appropriator was bound rather to relieve the poverty of the poor man, by giving to him of his own (if indeed he could), than to burden him further; wherefore the magnitude of the injury arises from the violation of mercy, which outweighs Justice in that case; and which the citizen is bound to restore; wherefore restitution to be made to the poor creditor does not then prevail from the concurrence of a twofold precept; but rather from mercy: For even if he were bound to restore by no debt of Justice; nevertheless by the law of Mercy he would owe to give to the needy, not to the rich creditor.

> AT Ratio sane prior satis firma est, nec eam tam facile Azorius reprobasset, si eam in suam coincidere perspexisset; Ideo enim maior iniuria infertur pauperi, ei rem suam subtrahendo, et non reddendo; quia ultra Iustitiam, pati pondere supra utrumque creditorem cadentem, tenebatur iniquus surreptor potius sublevare pauperis inopiam, ei de suo (si quidem potuit) tribuendo, quam ulterius ipsum gravare; quare magnitudo iniuriae oritur ex violatione misericordiae, quae Iustitiae in eo casu praeponderat; et quam tenetur civis restaurare; quare non ex duplicis praecepti concurrentia viget tunc restitutio, pauperi creditori facienda; sed ex misericordia potius: Nam etiamsi nullo Iustitiae debito ad restituendum teneretur; adhuc tamen lege Misericordiae deberet dare egeno, non diviti creditori.

20 BUT if two Creditors are equal in right, but unequal in the Debtor's friendship, Medina says the whole debt cannot licitly be paid to the friendly Creditor; since by right it would have to be divided between both; yet if it has been paid to one before the other, he says he can be bound; which does not please Azorius; and indeed deservedly; For if the debt was to be divided with equal lot, so that both be satisfied; the part owed to one, and paid to the other, ought to be paid to the former; wherefore he says that he to whom it is paid unduly cannot retain it; since no friendship ought to harm Justice; likewise, if of two creditors, the later in time is the prior in receiving the debt, by whose payment the debtor becomes unable to pay the prior; then Azorius says, ad finem quaestio 7. that the later Creditor is bound to satisfy and restore to the prior, since he unduly received the latter's debt.

QUOD si duo Creditores sint in iure pares, sed impares in Debitoris amicitia, dicit Medina totum debitum non posse licite solvi amico Creditori; cum ex iure esset inter utrumque dividendum; quod si tamen uni prae altero solutum sit, teneri posse ait; quod Azorio non placet; et quidem merito; Nam si debitum pari sorte dividendum erat, ut utrique satisfieret; pars uni debita, et alteri soluta, debet solvi priori; quare ait nequire illum, cui indebite soluitur, eam tenere; cum Iustitiae non debeat ulla amicitia obesse; similiter si e duobus creditoribus, posterior tempore, sit prior in recipiendo debito, cuius solutione debitor evadat impotens ad solvendum priori; tunc ait Azorius ad finem quaestio 7. teneri posteriorem Creditorem satisfacere, et restituere priori, cum ipsius debitum ipse indebite receperit.

Disputation XXV: On the Acceptance of Persons

[1] Commutative Justice regards things, Distributive persons; wherefore as the former is injured by exchanging things without due proportion; so the latter is offended while one person is unjustly preferred to another; which happens especially in benefices, elections, honors, and Judgments, as S. Bonaventura notes, in speculo animae, cap. 3. And he says the whole disordination of this Justice proceeds from inordinate love; For in conferring benefices flesh and blood choose the best part; but by reason of riches the Rich of this age are often honored before the Poor rather than the Saints, although honor, according to Aristotle lib. 1. Rhetor. cap. 5. is nothing other than a testimony of virtue; but in rendering Judgments, among other things, a Largess of gifts makes a corrupt judgment pronounce for one to the prejudice of another. Concerning this acceptance of persons it must be asked what and what sort of sin it is, with D. Thom. quaestione 63. art. 1.

> DISPVTATIO XXV. De Acceptione Personarum.
> RES respicit Iustitia Commutativa, personas vero Distributiva; quare sicut illa res rebus inique commutando laeditur; ita haec offenditur, dum iniuste persona una alteri praefertur; quod contingit praecipue in beneficiis, electionibus, honoribus, et Iudiciis, ut notat S. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 3. Et totam huius Iustitiae deordinationem ex inordinato amore procedere ait; In conferendis enim beneficiis caro, et sanguis optimam partem eligit; ratione autem divitiarum Divites huius saeculi prae sanctis saepe Pauperibus honorantur, cum tamen honor, iuxta Aristotelem lib. 1. Rhetor. cap. 5. aliud non sit, quam virtutis testimonium; in Iudiciis vero ferendis, inter alia, Largitio munerum pravum iudicium uni in alterius praeiudicium pronunciare facit; De hac personarum acceptione quaerendum est, quid, et quale peccatum sit, cum D. Thoma quaestione 63. art. 1.

Question I: What acceptance of persons is, and what kind of sin

[1] ACCEPTANCE of persons consists and is placed in this: that in the distribution of the goods of the community some person is preferred to others, without consideration of the proportion of merits. So teach D. Thom. here, and there the Thomists, and many Sententiarii in 4. dist. 15. et Summistae V. Acceptio personarum, et V. dignitas, with D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 3. And the Saintly Doctor defines it in Confessionali, cap. 1. particula 6. Acceptance of persons is an injustice, whereby person is preferred to person for an undue cause in distributions of what is owed. This definition the Saintly Doctor drew from many holy Fathers, whom he lists in Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 38. But he explains the acts of Distributive Justice opposed to acceptance of persons most excellently, part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2. et 3.

> ACCEPTIO personarum in eo posita est, et constituta, ut in distributione bonorum communitatis praeferatur aliqua persona aliis, non considerata proportione meritorum. Ita docent D. Thom. hic, et ibi Thomistae, ac multi sententiarii in 4. dist. 15. et Summistae V. Acceptio personarum, et V. dignitas, cum D. Bonavent. in speculo, cap. 3. Eam vero S. Doctor definit in Confessionali, cap. 1. particula 6. Acceptio personae est iniustitia, quae praefertur persona personae propter causam indebitam in distributionibus debitu. Hanc definitionem eruit S. Doctor ex multis sanctis Patribus, quos recenset Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 38. Eos vero actus Distributivae oppositos acceptationi explicat egregie part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2. et 3.

[2] Therefore, to distribute the goods of a community, not according to the proportion of merits, but to give them to someone from some undue condition, as Prefecture, or a Chair, because he is rich, not because he is learned and holy; is acceptance of persons, and that mortally.

Igitur distribuere bona communitatis, non iuxta proportionem meritorum, sed alicui dare illa ex aliqua conditione indebita, puta Praelationem, aut Cathedram, quia dives est, non quia doctus, et sanctus; est acceptio personarum, eaque mortifera.

3 It is proved by D. Bonavent. in the places cited, first from Scripture, Levit. 19. You shall not consider the person of the poor. Deuter. 1. There shall be no distinction of persons; you shall hear the small as well as the great: neither shall you accept the person of anyone, Ecclesiasticus 42. Do not accept a person, so as to offend. James 2. If you accept persons, you commit sin.

Probatur a D. Bonavent. locis adductis, primo Scriptura, Levit. 19. Non consideres personam pauperis. Deuter. 1. Nulla erit distantia personarum, ita parvum audietis, ut magnum: neque accipietis cuiusquamque personam, Ecclesiastici 42. Ne accipias personam, ut delinquas. Iacobi 2. Si personas accipitis, peccatum operamini.

4 It is proved next by the Saintly Doctor, and D. Thom. because it gravely injures Justice in the public good.

Probatur deinde a S. Doctore, et D. Thom. quia graviter laedit Iustitiam in bono publico.

5 But two conditions are required by the Theologians with D. Bonavent. in speculo, loco citato, for there to be an Acceptance of persons. The one, that there be a distribution of goods which are of a community; not of the dispenser's own; for then he could say what the Lord says: Is it not lawful for me to do what I will? Matth. 20. The other is that the dispenser be bound by justice to distribute those common goods in that proportion, in compensation of merits.

Duas autem conditiones requirunt Theologi cum D. Bonavent. in speculo, loco citato, ut sit Acceptio personarum. Altera, ut sit distributio bonorum, quae sint communitatis; non autem propria dispensantis; nam tunc dicere is posset, quod ait Dominus: Nonne quod volo possum facere? Matth. 20. Altera est ut dispensator ex iustitia teneatur distribuere ea proportione bona communia in compensationem meritorum.

Question II: Whether, and how, it is a sin of acceptance of persons to choose the unworthy, or less deserving, for benefices

1 Dignities and Offices, as the Holy Doctor observes in the Speculum, cap. 3, are of two kinds: some are Ecclesiastical, others Secular. Again, of the Ecclesiastical, some have annexed care of souls, such as Bishoprics and Prelacies (praepositurae); and others are simple benefices.

An, et quomodo sit peccatum acceptionis personarum eligere indignos, vel minus emeritos ad beneficia.

Dignitates, et Officia, ut observat S. Doctor in speculo, cap. 3. alia sunt Ecclesiastica, alia sunt Saecularia. Rursus Ecclesiastica, alia sunt, quae adnexam habent curam animarum, ut Episcopatus, Praepositura; et alia sunt beneficia simplicia.

2 Distributive justice intervenes in the distribution of Ecclesiastical benefices, and consequently the opposite vice in a bad distribution: so judge D. Bonaventure, loco citato, art. 2, Valencia, disput. 5, quaest. 7, puncto 2, and others; for these benefices are not proper debts owed to anyone by his merits, but are compared with all the men of the community, so that a worthy man may be taken from among them, and among the worthy the worthier may be chosen, if need be. Yet I would not deny that Commutative justice also intervenes, which gives stipends of tithes even to the ministering benefice-holder, etc., as is intimated in Num. 18, Luke 10, 1 Cor. 9, 1 Tim. 5. Add that in the cap. finalia, extra de rescriptis, it is laid down: a benefice is not given except on account of an office, and even before the distribution one looks at whether he has merits proportionate adequately; but here it does not stop, but proceeds to compare his merits with the merits of others; and thus, among many compared, one is chosen. Hence it is called Election, as it were the selection of one from among many, as the Holy Doctor proves in book 1, dist. 40, art. 2, quaest. 2, from that text of Cant. 5: My Beloved is chosen out of thousands.

> Intervenire autem in distributione beneficiorum Ecclesiasticorum iustitiam Distributivam, atque adeo in prava distributione vitium oppositum, censet D. Bonavent. loco cit. art. 2. Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 7. puncto 2. et alii: haec enim beneficia non sunt propria debita alicui ex meritis, sed comparantur ad omnes viros communitatis, ut assumatur ex eis dignus, et inter dignos eligatur dignior, si opus sit. Non negaverim tamen, intervenire etiam Commutativam, quae etiam beneficium ministranti dat stipendia decimarum, etc. ut innuitur Num. 18. Lucae 10. prima Cor. 9. prima Timot. 5. Adde in cap. finalia, extra de rescriptis, haberi: Beneficium non datur nisi propter officium, etiam ante distributionem aspicitur, an habeat merita proportionata adaequate; At non sistitur hic, sed ad comparanda eius merita cum aliorum meritis proceditur; et sic e pluribus comparatis, unus eligitur. Ideo dicitur Electio, quasi unius e pluribus selectio, ut probat S. Doctor in primo, dist. 40. art. 2. quaest. 2. Ex illo Cant. 5. Dilectus meus, electus e millibus.

3 It is certain, moreover, that in elections to benefices it is necessary that a worthy man be chosen. So testifies Innocent III with the General Lateran Council, in cap. Grave nimis, which the Holy Doctor often urges in his treatises on Poverty. Hence the Council of Trent, cap. 1 de Reformatione, declares that there is no election to benefices — those which in Cathedral Churches have annexed the office of reading Sacred Scripture — in an unworthy person, or one less suitable, and who cannot himself fulfill that office.

> Certum est autem in electione ad beneficia, necesse esse ut eligatur dignus. Ita testatur Innocentius III. cum Generali Concilio Later. in cap. Grave nimis*, quod saepe urget S. Doctor in suis tractatibus* de Paupertate. Ideo Concilium Trident. cap. 1. de Reformatione, declarat, nullam esse electionem ad beneficia, quae in Ecclesiis Cathedralibus adnexum habent officium legendi Sacram Scripturam, in persona indigna, seu minus idonea, et quae per se ipsum eo fungi officio nequeat.

4 The question is a grave one: whether they are bound to choose not only worthy men, but even the worthier.

> Quaestio gravis est: An teneantur eligere non solum dignos, sed etiam digniores.

5 The first opinion is that it is enough to choose a worthy man. So Hugo and the Apparatus seem to think, on cap. Licet ergo, § quaest. 1, and on cap. Monasterium 16, quaest. 7, and others, as cited by Covarruvias, Relectio on the rule Peccatum non dimittitur, nisi restituatur ablatum, part. 2, § 7 — who nevertheless says they spoke in the external forum.

> Prima opinio est, satis esse eligere dignum. Ita videtur sentire Hugo, et Apparatus super cap. Licet ergo*, §. quaest. 1. et super cap.* Monasterium 16. quaest. 7. et alii apud Covar. Relect. in regulam inris: Peccatum non dimittitur, nisi restituatur ablatum*, part. 2. §. 7. qui tamen ait eos locutos in foro exteriori.*

6 Very many have followed this view, if any of the following conditions is present. First, when the excess is not notable; second, when the worthier man is of another house, or of another Church, or a stranger; third, when the greater part wishes to elect the less worthy man, then the lesser part may give him their suffrage, even if they had sworn to elect the worthier; fourth, when another unworthy man is elected, if he does not give his suffrage to this less worthy one, and the worthier would have to be excluded on account of the fewness of votes; fifth, when the worthier man presides over another Church and would have to be postulated; sixth, when the worthier man is entangled in external affairs, or does not reside as much as the less worthy; seventh, if the less worthy is already experienced and eloquent in the Prelacy, and the worthier inexperienced; eighth, when it is not free for the collator or the institutor to confer upon another, or to institute another, than the one presented to him by the Patron; ninth, if a benefice, by an institution confirmed by the Church, is to be given to someone from a certain Family or township; tenth, if the founder of a parochial benefice presents a worthy man, and not the worthier; for this is permitted him. Eleventh, when someone resigns a benefice to a worthy man, passing over a worthier one. Finally, a lay patron may elect and present a less worthy man, leaving aside a worthier. You will find all this in Valetus, de differentia utriusque fori, v. electio, diffic. 1; Ioan. de Cruz, in direct., part. 1, punct. 7, quaest. 7, art. 2, dub. 9, concl. 2; Riccius, part. 3, decis. 214, num. 3; Sylvius, 2. 2, quaest. 63, art. 2, quaeritur 4, concl. 3; Tanner, 2. 2, diffic. 4, quaest. 8, dub. 2, num. 17; Lessius, lib. 2, cap. 34, disp. 13, num. 58; Villalobos, in summa, Tom. 2, tract. 8, diffic. 4, num. 6. > *Plurimi vero hanc secuti sunt, si aliqua ex his conditionibus intersit. Prima est, quando excessus non est notabilis; Secunda, quando magis dignus est de alia domo, aut alterius Ecclesiae, seu extraneus: Tertia, quando maior pars vult eligere minus dignum, tunc potest minor pars ei dare suffragium, etiamsi iurassent eligere digniorem. Quarta, quando eligitur indignus alius, si huic minus digno non det suffragium, et dignior est excludendus, ex paucitate votorum. Quinta, cum dignior praeesset alteri Ecclesiae, et esset postulandus. Decima, si beneficii parochialis fundator praesentet dignum, et non digniorem; nam hoc ei licet. Undecima, quando quis beneficium resignat digno, praetermittens digniorem. Tandem patronus Laicus potest eligere, et praesentare minus dignum, relicto digniori. [8] SENTENTIA, however — the view holding that one is bound in conscience to choose the worthier man for any Ecclesiastical benefice whatever — is expressed by D. Bonaventure in the Speculum animae, part. 3, where he says: Around the conferring of Ecclesiastical benefices I then understand acception of persons to have the character of mortal sin, when an Ecclesiastical benefice is conferred upon someone unworthy, knowingly with the worthy passed over, whether out of regard for kinship, or even for a temporal benefice, or for spiritual affection; Likewise, too, to elect a rich man to a dignity of the Church, contemptuously passing over a poorer but better-instructed man. Hence Augustine, on that text: "Do not in acception of persons," etc., James 2: Who (he says) would endure it, if someone should elect a rich man to a seat of honor in the Church, contemptuously passing over a poorer man, better instructed and holier? But if the benefices are temporal, in them acception of persons can be mortal sin in the article of necessity, when someone is bound to confer a benefice by precept, and the benefice is given to him who does not need it, by reason of a particular love; and he who is in straitened necessity is despised. Such is the word of St. Bonaventure.

SENTENTIA vero sustinens, teneri in conscientia eligere digniorem ad quodlibet beneficium Ecclesiasticum, est expressa D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, part. 3. ubi ait: Circa collationem beneficiorum Ecclesiasticorum tunc intelligo, acceptionem personarum habere rationem mortalis, cum beneficium Ecclesiasticum alicui indigno confertur, scienter dignis postpositis, sive sit intuitu consanguinitatis, vel etiam beneficii temporalis, vel affectionis spiritualis; Similiter autem, et divitem eligere ad dignitatem Ecclesiae, contempto paupere instructiore. Unde Augustinus super illud: Nolite in personarum acceptione, etc. Iacobi 2. Quis (inquit) ferat, si quis divitem eligat ad sedem honoris Ecclesiae, contempto paupere instructiore, et sanctiore. Si autem sint temporalia beneficia, sic in eis potest esse personarum acceptio mortale peccatum in necessitatis articulo, quando quis tenetur beneficium conferre ex praecepto, et cum datur beneficium illi, qui non indiget, ratione particularis amoris; et ille, qui est in arcta necessitate, contemnitur. Haec S. Bonaventura.

12 I ASSERT, with the sentiment of D. Bonaventure, that the worthier man is always owed election in conscience for any Ecclesiastical benefice whatever.

ASSERO cum D. Bonaventurae sententia, deberi in conscientia eligi semper digniorem, ad quodvis beneficium Ecclesiasticum.

13 It is PROVED by D. Bonaventure, first, on cap. 21 of John, where Christ the Lord, about to elect the Supreme Pontiff, examines Peter three times: Simon, son of John, lovest thou me more than these? The Holy Doctor discusses this passage, collat. 99 on 21 John, finding Anthony of the Prelates in those words. For the first part: Simon, is interpreted as Hearing, or Obedient; for he who wishes to preside over others and to command must first have learned to be subject and to obey. The other part is Ioannis, or Ione; for he is called in Matth. 16 Simon Bar-iona, that is, son of the Dove, on account of the simple innocence of his life. But this name was changed into Cephas, which signifies head, κεφαλή, as the Holy Doctor says, so that he might have the eminence of perfection and holiness such as is owed to a Head, in whose figure Saul was good, and better than he was not in all Israel, and from his shoulder and upward he overtopped with his whole head, as is said in 1 Reg. 10. Yet let him keep humility together with loftiness. Hence he calls him Simon, by which name he was called while as a poor man he toiled at fishing, so that he might always remember his former state; for so too it was said to Saul, 1 Reg. 15: When thou wast a little one in thine own eyes, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? Now in the head science flourishes; for thus he must be most learned. Hence God threatens him, Osee 4: Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will reject thee, that thou shalt not exercise the priesthood for me, etc. Straightway Christ says: Lovest thou me more than these? to show that he ought to be more eminent and outstanding than the rest in Charity, so as to fulfill the office of Pastor most perfectly, even to offer his throat and expose himself to the slaughter of six hundred beasts for the safety of the flock. Hence D. Augustine says, Tract. 123 on John: If thou lovest me: feed my sheep, not thine own; seek my glory, not thine own; my gains, not thine own.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. primo ad cap. 21. Ioan. ubi Christus Dominus, electurus summum Pontificem, ter examinat Petrum: Simon Ioannis diligis me plus his? Hunc locum discutit S. Doctor collat. 99. in 21. Ioann. Antoniam Praelatis in illis verbis inveniens. Prima enim particula: Simon. interpretatur Audiens*, vel* Obediens. Qui enim aliis praeesse, et imperare vult, debet didicisse subiici, et obedire: Alia particula est: Ioannis*, seu* Ione*; nam dicitur Matth. 16.* Simon Bar-iona*, idest filius Columbae ob simplicem vitae innocentiam. Hoc autem nomen mutatum est in* Cephas*, quod significat caput zefali κεφαλή, ut ait S. Doctor, ut eminentiam perfectionis, et sanctitatis, qualis Capiti debetur, haberet, in cuius figuram Saul erat bonus, et* melior, non erat eo in toto Israel, et ab humero, et sursum, toto capite praeminebat*, ut dicitur 1.* Reg. 10. Si tamen cum celsitudine servet humilitatem, Ideo vocat eum Simon*, quo nomine vocabatur, dum pauper piscationibus insudabat, ut recordaretur semper sui pristini status; sic enim et Sauli dictum est 1.* Reg. 15. Nonne cum parvulus esses in oculis tuis, caput in tribubus Israel factus es? in capite autem vigent scientiae; Sic enim debet esse eruditissimus. Hinc illi minatur Deus, Oseae 4. Quia tu scientiam repulisti, repellam ego te, ne sacerdotio fungaris mihi, etc. Mox ait Christus: Diligis me plus his? ut ostendat, eum Charitate caeteris eminentiorem, et praestantiorem esse debere, ut Pastoris munere perfectissime perfungatur, ut iugulum etiam praebeat, seque sexcentis ferarum lanienis exhibeat ob gregis incolumitatem. Unde ait D. Augustinus Tract. 123. in Ioan. Si diligis me: pasce oves meas, non tuas; gloriam meam quaere, non tuam; lucra mea, non tua.

14 Of this also Isidore, Etymologiae, lib. 7, cap. 9. Hence Augustine says that to love is: To love God gratuitously, and not to expect other goods besides him. But in what manner he ought to be loved, he had said above, cap. 14: If any man loves me, he will keep my word. For, as Dionysius says, de divinis nominibus, cap. 4: the divine love is ecstatic, not allowing its lovers to remain in themselves; and because to love God in this way is to feed the sheep of the Lord, which he redeemed with his own blood, therefore there follows here: Feed my lambs, or sheep; that is, if thou lovest me, feed them, as D. Augustine, cited above, says: Feed with the word, feed with example, feed also with the fruits of the holy prayers, as St. Bernard says, epist. 101. More particularly, in what way the sheep ought to be fed spiritually, the same Bernard says, serm. 76 in Cant.: The Pastor of sheep ought to be in the pastures of the Scriptures, as in the inheritance of the Lord. And this, so that precepts may be imposed upon hard and carnal souls; the burdens of dispensations upon the weak; sound counsels and strong exhortations upon the healthy. Such is his word. Such Pastores the Lord promised, Jer. 3: I will give you Pastors who shall feed you with knowledge and doctrine.

> DE his etiam Isidorus Ethymologia Lib. 7. cap. 9. Unde ait Augustinus, diligere esse: Amare Deum gratis, et alia, praeter ipsum, non expectare bona. Qualiter autem sit diligendus, supra dixerat, cap. 14. Si quis diligis me, sermonem meum servabit. Ut enim ait Dionysius, de divinis nominibus, cap. 4. Est enim extasim faciens divinus amor, non dimittens sui ipsius amatores*, et quia sic amantium Deum est pascere oves Domini, quas redemit sanguine suo, ideo sequitur hic:* Pasce agnos meos*, sive oves, id est, si diligis me, pasce illas, sicut ait D.*

Augustinus supra citatus. Pascas verbo, pascas exemplo, pascas et sanctarum fructibus orationum, ut ait S. Bernardus epist. 101. Specialius autem, quibus sint pascendae oves spiritualiter, idem ait Bernardus, serm. 76. in Cant. Pastor ovium debet esse in pascuis Scripturarum, tanquam in haereditate Domini. Et hoc, ut mandata duris, et carnalibus animis imponantur, dispensationum onera pupillis, consilia solida, et hortamenta fortia sanis. Haec ille. Tales Pastores promisit Dominus Ierem. 3. Dabo vobis Pastores, qui pascant vos scientia, et doctrina.

15 THEREFORE in figure the ancient Fathers fed sheep before they were called to Scepters, as Moses, Exod. 2; David, 1 Reg. 16; and others; wherefore Christ, Jo. 10: I am the good Shepherd. Hence he wished first to be revealed to shepherds, as D. Ambrose notes in the Homily on the Nativity of the Lord. Hence Peter himself, 1 cap. 5: Feed the flock which is among you. Hence the reproach: Woe to the Pastors of Israel, who fed themselves, Ezech. 34. And Thren. 1 he laments: Her Princes are become like rams that find no pasture; and Joel 1: The herds have groaned, because they have no pasture, etc. Such is the word of the Seraphic Doctor, collat. 50 on cap. 21 of John, cited above.

IDEO in figura antiqui Patres oves pascebant, antequam ad Sceptra vocarentur, ut Moyses Exodi 2. Dauid primo, Reg. 16. et alii; quare Christus Ioan. 10. Ego sum Pastor bonus. Ideo primo pastoribus voluit revelari, ut notat D. Ambrosius in Homilia Nativitatis Domini. Hinc ipse Petrus prima cap. 5. Pascite, qui in vobis est, gregem. Hinc exprobrat: Vae Pastoribus Israel, qui pascebant semetipsos, Ezechiel. 34. Thren. 1. plangit: Facti sunt Principes eius, velut arietes non invenientes pascua, et Ioel. 1. Mugierunt greges armenti, quia non sunt pascua eis, etc. Haec Seraphicus Doctor, collat. 50. in cap. 21. Ioannis, supra cit.

16 HENCE in a grave commentary he closes with an Epiphonema, and here there stands open what is necessary for the successors of Peter, namely a fervid and true love of God, so that they love God, not themselves, and the Divine honor, not their own, and Divine gains, not their own. And perhaps first he says: Feed my lambs, twice; and once: Feed my sheep. For by lambs are signified the simple, the weak, and the poor, who ought to be fed with a twofold pasture, namely bodily and spiritual. By sheep are signified the stronger and richer, who ought to be fed with spiritual pasture. Hence the Gloss: To feed sheep is to provide, if need be, earthly succor to subjects, to furnish examples of virtues: as the Pastor feeds his flock: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and shall take up the young in his bosom, Isa. 40. Therefore he who succeeds to Peter in the pastoral office, and does not love God, nor feed the sheep, is an Idol, not a Pastor — O Pastor, and idol, leaving the flock, Zach. 11. But I resume the name Cephas, Xefali, head, and send it back to that discourse on election, in which I have adapted the Anatomy of the human head in every way to a Rector, or to the Head of some Church.

HINC in commentario gravi Epiphonemate claudit, et patent hic, quae sunt successoribus Petri necessaria, scilicet Dei fervida, et vera dilectio, ut scilicet Deum diligant, non se, et Divinum honorem, non suum; et divina lucra, non sua, et forte prius ait: Pasce agnos meos, bis; et semel: Pasce oves meas. Per agnos enim simplices, et infirmos, et pauperes signantur, qui debent pasci duplici pastura, scilicet corporali, et spirituali. Per oves signantur firmiores, et ditiores, qui pasci debent pastura spirituali. Unde Glossa: Pascere oves, est terrena subsidia, si necesse est, subditis providere, exempla virtutum praebere: sicut Pastor gregem suum pascet: in brachio suo congregabit agnos, et in sinu suo levabit foetas, Isaix 40. Qui ergo Petro succedit in officio pastorali, et non diligit Deum, nec pascit oves, Idolum est, non Pastor, O Pastor, et idolum, derelinquens gregem, Zach. 11. Sed nomen Caephas, Xefali caput resumo, et remitto ad illam de electione concionem, in qua Anatomen capitis humani, Rectori, seu Capiti alicuius Ecclesiae per omnia adaptavi.

17 It is PROVED secondly by the Holy Doctor, from the Fathers, lib. 3 of the Pharetra, cap. 38, all with one mouth approving it.

18 D. GREGORY, lib. 25 Moral., cap. 11, writes thus: Because we close our eyes to things internal and invisible, and are fed by things visible, we often venerate a man not for what he himself is, but for what surrounds him; and since we do not look at what he is, but what he can be, in acception of persons we are led not by persons, but by things adhering to them. Read what he pursues there.

> D. GREGORIUS Lib. 25. Moral. 11. sic scribit: Quia ab internis, atque invisibilibus oculos claudimus, et visibilibus pascimur, plerumque hominem, non ex eo quod ipse est, sed ex his, quae circa ipsum sunt, veneramur; cumque non intuemur quid ipse sit, sed quid possit, in acceptione personarum, non ex personis, sed ex rebus adiacentibus ducimur. Lege, quae ibidem prosequitur.

19 D. JEROME, on cap. 2 of Malachi: Among all the sins of Priests, this is noted as if the greatest, that they consider not causes but persons, and despising the just poor man, honor the unjust rich. The authority of D. Jerome is also cited, 8, quaest. 1, cap. Licet ergo.

> D. HIERONYMUS in cap. 2. Malachiae: Inter omnia peccata Sacerdotum, quasi maximum notatur, quod non causas, sed personas considerant, et despecto iusto paupere, iniustos divites honorant. Refertur etiam authoritas D. Hieronymi 8. quaest. 1. cap. Licet ergo.

20 He also, lib. 2 on Isa., cap. 3, in the Gloss, on the words: "Why do ye crush," sharply rebukes thus: Our Princes, while they publicly accuse and confound poor delinquents, make not even a gesture at the rich sinning worse, in whose houses is the rapine of the poor, while they treasure up to themselves the goods of the Church and abuse for their pleasures what is given for the sustenance of the poor, and reserve to themselves, or distribute to their kinsmen, and make of others' want their own riches, or those of their own; and lib. 3, on cap. 6 of Amos: Whoever in judging is led by kinship, or friendship, or on the contrary by hostile hatred or enmities, perverts the judgment of Christ, which is justice.

> Is etiam Lib. 2. in Isa. cap. 3. in Glossa, ad illud: Quare atteritis, sic acriter arguit: Nostri Principes cum pauperes delinquentes publice arguant, et confundant; divitibus peiora peccantibus nec nutum faciunt, in quorum domibus rapina pauperum, dum Ecclesiae opes sibi thesaurizant, et eis in delicias abutuntur, quae ad sustentationem pauperum dantur et sibi reservant, vel propinquis distribuunt, et aliorum inopias, suas, vel suorum divitias faciunt, et Lib. 3. in cap. 6. Amos. Quicumque aut consanguinitate, aut amicitia, aut e contrario hostili odio, vel inimicitiis in iudicando ducitur, pervertit iudicium Christi, quod est iustitia.

21 D. AMBROSE, lib. 2 de officiis, cap. 24: Far be grace the cause; let merits be discerned: let there be nothing of opinion; nay, it weighs upon Faith, if in judging thou favorest the more powerful, accusest the cause of the inferior, or the innocent poor man, and excusest the rich man guilty of fault.

> D. AMBROSIUS Lib. 2. de offic. cap. 24. Gratia absit causa, merita discernantur: nihil sit opinionem, imo Fidem gravat, quam si in iudicando potentiori dones, causam inferioris, vel pauperem innocentem arguas, et divitem excuses, reum culpae.

22 ST. BERNARD, lib. 2 de consideratione: Think it no small guilt of sin, if thou takest the faces of sinners, and judgest not rather the causes of merits. Here he addresses the Supreme Pontiff Eugenius III.

S. BERNARDUS Lib. 2. de consider. Non parvite reum peccati aestimes, si facies peccatorum sumis, et non potius causas iudicas meritorum. Hic Pontificem summum Eugenium III. alloquitur.

23 The same St. Leo asserts, epist. 84, cited in cap. Metropolitano, dist. 63, where he commands that, the Metropolitan being deceased, the best man be substituted and ordained.

IDIPSUM asserit S. Leo epist. 84. relata in cap. Metropolitano, dist. 63. ubi iubet, ut defuncto Metropolitano, optimus subrogetur, et ordinetur.

24 AND Innocent III, cap. unica extra, prescribes that Ecclesiastical benefices ought not to be dispensed out of carnal affection, but by discreet judgment to the more suitable person. The same is clear from the letter of Pope Siricius to all the Orthodox, Tomo 1 of the Concil., and from the Council of Basel, where in the form of the oath exacted from electors it is prescribed (he says): I will elect the worthier.

ET Innocentius III. cap. unica extra, praecipit, Ecclesiastica beneficia non ex carnis affectu, sed ex discreto iudicio in personam magis idoneam debere dispensari. Idem patet ex epistola Siricii Papae, ad omnes Orthodoxos, primo Tomo Concil. et ex Concilio Basileae, ubi in forma iuramenti, quod exigitur ab electoribus, praescribitur (ait:) Eligam dignior.

25 FINALLY in the Council of Trent, sess. 24, in the Decree de Reform., cap. 1, it is asserted that the Electors of Bishops, communicating in the sins of others, sin mortally, unless they take care to prefer those whom they themselves judge worthier and more useful to the Church, etc., by reason of their demanding merits. Regarding this, Clem. VIII, decreto Reform. Regular., and Urban VIII, demand before elections the oath of electing the worthier.

TANDEM Concilium Tridentinum sess. 24. in Decreto de Reform. cap. 1. asseritur, Electores Episcoporum, alienis peccatis communicantes, mortaliter peccare, nisi quos digniores, et Ecclesiae magis utiles ipsi iudicaverint, etc. eorum exigentibus meritis, praefici curaverint. Id respiciens Clem. VIII. decreto Reform. Regular. confirmatio ab Urbano VIII. exigit ante electiones iuramentum eligendi digniorem.

26 It is PROVED by reason by both Holy Doctors. Whenever a less worthy man is preferred to a worthier one for a benefice, he must be preferred on account of irrelevant conditions, whether of friendship, of kinship, or of other similar things; but this is to accept persons: Therefore. This argument St. Bonaventure brings, in the Speculum, loco citato, and in the Pharetra, from the Fathers alleged above.

PROBATUR ratione ab utroque S. Doctore. Quandoqumque praefertur minus dignus digniori ad beneficium, oportet ut praeferatur ob conditiones impertinentes, sive amicitiae, sive consanguinitatis, sive aliarum similium; sed hoc est accipere personas: Ergo. Hoc argumentum affert S. Bonavent. in speculo, loco cit. et in Pharetra, ex Patribus allegatis.

27 It is PROVED fourthly by the Holy Doctor, on Luke 12, in those words: Who, thinkest thou, is the faithful and wise dispenser, where he says: He calls prelates dispensers: So let a man account us, as the ministers of Christ, and dispensers of the mysteries of God. Such faithful men it is difficult to find. Hence there: Now it is sought among the dispensers, that some faithful one be found; namely faithful and prudent in election. Hence Prov. 27: Be diligent to know the countenance of thy cattle, and consider thy flocks. Few are intent upon the utility of the flock; hence Ezech. 34: Woe to the Pastors of Israel.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Doctore ad 12. Lucae illis verbis: Quis putas est fidelis dispensator, et prudens, ubi ait: Dispensatores praelatos vocat: Sic nos existimet homo, ut ministros Christi, et dispensatores Mysteriorum Dei. Tales difficile est invenire fideles. Unde ibidem: Hic iam quaeritur inter dispensatores, ut fidelis quis inveniatur; scilicet fidelis, et prudens in electione. Unde Proverb. 27. Diligenter agnosce vultum pecoris tui, tuosque greges considera. Pauci sunt utilitati gregis intenti; unde Ezech. 34. Vae Pastoribus Israël.

28 Consider the Holy Doctor, who infers that these are dispensers, not lords; and consequently cannot dispense goods except to the intention of the Lord; and he brings the example of Joseph, who was the best Dispenser in the land of Egypt, Genes. 41. Hence he pronounces Woe upon them, who in elections do not conduct themselves faithfully and prudently, providing most excellently, as far as can be done, for the ministers of the Church.

Vide S. Doctorem, qui infert, hos esse dispensatores, non dominos; atque adeo non posse dispensare bona, nisi ad intentionem Domini; et affert exemplum Ioseph, qui fuit optimus Dispensator in terra AEgypti, Genes. 41. Unde Vae indicit eis, qui in electionibus non se habent fideliter, et prudenter, providendo optime, quantum fieri potest, de ministris Ecclesiae.

29 Fagundez uses this argument, num. 2, where he also observes, with Cotta de memorabilibus, V. Papa, pag. 655, and D. Ambrose de dignitate Sacerdotali, and D. Gregory, homil. 9 in Evangelia, that the Supreme Pontiff is not excluded from this obligation; nay, he is bound the more, the greater and more universal the administration with which he is endowed. This the Holy Doctor also shows in the place cited, and Pinellus, lib. de rescindendis vend. p. p., cap. 2, num. 30. Nay, D. Bernard de considerando uses this very medium.

Hoc argumento utitur Fagundez num. 2. ubi observat etiam cum Cotta de memorabilibus, V. Papa, pag. 655. et D. Ambrosio de dignitate Sacerdotali, et D. Gregorio homil. 9. in Evangelia*, non excludi summum Pontificem ab hac obligatione; imo eum ed magis teneri, quo maiori, et universalioti est praeditus administratione. Quod ostendit etiam S. Doctot loco citato, et Pinellus* lib. de rescindendis, vend. p. p. cap. 2. num. 30. Imo D. Bernardus de consider hoc utitur medio.

30 By these arguments it is shown that the same must be observed even in simple benefices; for these too are goods falling under dispensation, not under free jurisdiction. Wherefore the reason is not taken from the side of the benefice as it is relative to the spiritual good of the people, but as in itself it is a good for the recipient, and a good of the Republic, or of the Church, which the faithful dispenser is bound to confer to the mind of the Lord, without acception of persons; and thus St. Thomas, St. Bonaventure, and others spoke universally, as Diana saw, p. p., tract. 15, resol. 38, with Bannes, 2. 2, quaest. 63, art. 2, dub. 5.

HIS argumentis ostenditur, etiam in beneficiis simplicibus idem servandum; nam etiam haec sunt bona cadentia sub dispensatione, non sub iurisdictione libera. Quare non sumitur ratio ex parte beneficii, ut est relatiuum ad bonum populi spiritualem; sed ut in se bonum est accipienti, et est bonum Reipublicae, seu Ecclesiae, quod fidelis dispensator tenetur conferre ad mentem Domini, fine acceptione personarum, et ita universaliter locuti sunt S. Thom. S. Bonavent. et alii, ut vidit Diana p. p. Tract. 15. resol. 38. cum Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 63. art. 2. dub. 5.

31 NOR do they adequately extricate themselves, with others there cited by Diana, by inferring that all future Prelates will be in an evil state: For they often elect less worthy men.

NEQUE satis se eximit cum aliis ibi Diana, inferens, futuros omnes Praelatos in malo statu: Eligunt enim saepe minus dignos.

32 I SAY, indeed: Let them look to themselves; yet not all are of that kind.

> DICO enim. Ipsi viderint, non tamen omnes sunt huiusmodi.

33 He urges secondly: For the Council of Trent commands that only Pastoral benefices be conferred upon the worthier, and consequently does not seem to include Canonicates, which in sess. 24, cap. 12 it admonishes should be conferred, if it can be conveniently done, at least in part, upon Doctors or even Licentiates in Theology: Therefore it does not compel that they be conferred upon the worthier.

> INSTAT secundo; Nam Tridentinum Concilium, sola Pastoralia beneficia dignioribus deferenda iubet, atque adeo non videtur includere Canonicatus, quos in sess. 24. cap. 12. monet conferendos, si commode fieri potest, saltem ex parte, Doctoribus, vel etiam Licentiatis in Theologia: Ergo non cogit, ut conferantur dignioribus.

34 It is CONFIRMED from practice: For Pastoral benefices are conferred by concursus; not so the rest. Nor do the Laws speak of these so clearly.

35 But truly, as is gathered from what has been said, all simple benefices too are included in this prohibition, as is clear to the reader of the testimonies. Nor does the Council of Trent proceed by mere admonition in these benefices; but in sess. 22, cap. 2 it commands that: Whosoever hereafter shall be assumed to Cathedral Churches, he not only be fully endowed with birth, age, morals, and life, and other things required by the sacred Canons; but also constituted previously in Sacred Order, at least for a space of six months. The instruction regarding which matters, if their knowledge is nothing or recent, let it be taken from the Legates, or Nuncios of the provinces, of the Apostolic See, or from his Ordinary, and he failing, from the neighboring Ordinaries; and in knowledge, besides these, let him so excel that he can satisfy the necessity of the office imposed upon him. And therefore let him previously in a university of studies have been meritoriously promoted Master, or Doctor, or Licentiate in Sacred Theology, or in Canon law, etc. But if he be a regular, let him have a like attestation from the Superiors of his Religion. And all the aforesaid, from whom the instruction or attestation is to be taken, let them be bound to report these things faithfully and gratuitously: otherwise let them know that their consciences are gravely burdened, and they will have God and their Superiors as avengers: This the holy Council decrees under grave obligation of conscience.

> ENIM vero, ut ex dictis colligitur, omnia etiam beneficia simplicia hac prohibitione includuntur, ut constat legenti testimonia. Neque vero Concilium Tridentinum sola admonitione incedit in his beneficiis; sed sess. 22. cap. 2. praecipit, ut: Quicumque posthac ad Ecclesias Cathedrales erit assumendus, is non solum natalibus, aetate, moribus, et vita, ac aliis, quae a sacris Canonibus requiruntur, plene sit praeditus; verum etiam in Sacro ordine antea, saltem sex mensium spatio, constitutus. Quarum rerum instructio, si eius notitia nulla, aut recens in Curia fuerint, a sede Apostolica Legatis, seu Nunciis provinciarum, aut eius Ordinario, eoque deficiente, a vicinioribus Ordinariis sumatur; scientia vero, praeter haec, huiusmodi polleat, ut muneris sibi iniungendi necessitati possit satisfacere. Ideoque antea in universitate studiorum Magister, sive Doctor, aut Licentiatus in Sacra Theologia, vel iure Canonico, merito sit promotus, etc. Quod si regularis fuerit, a Superioribus suae Religionis similem fidem habeat. Praedicti autem omnes, unde instructio, seu testificatio erit sumenda, haec fideliter, et gratis referre teneantur: alioquin eorum conscientias graviter oneratas esse scient; ac Deum, et Superiores suos habebunt ultores: Haec Sanctum Concilium sub gravi conscientiae obligatione decernit.

36 ¶ Since these things are so, much more must this be asserted in Pastoral benefices, as nearly all assert, cited by Fernandez in Exam. Theol., part. 4, cap. 4, § 1; Castellinus, Tract. de elect. can., cap. 9; Molfesius, in summa, tom. 1, tract. 6, tit. de benefic., num. 6 and 61; Turrianus, 2. 2, tom. 2, disp. 22, dub. 2; and others whom Barbosa cites and follows, in collect. prael., 1, l. 1, tit. 6, cap. 19, num. 4; Vega, in summa, Tom. 1, cap. 109; Malderus, 2. 2, tract. 9, cap. 2, disp. 7; Vasquez, opusc. de benefic., cap. 2, § 3, dub. 1 and 8; Azorius, part. 2, l. 6, cap. 15, quaestio 1, 8 and 9 — all of whom pronounce the transgression of this precept mortal. Whatever the Gloss on cap. licet erg., 8, quaest. 1, and on cap. Monasterium, dist. 16, quaest. 7, and cap. 2 de offic. custodis, and cap. 3 de iure patron., with Rocchus, de iure patron. et honorificum, quaest. 15, toward the end, may assert to the contrary; Pedrazza, in summa prax., tr. 7, § 36; Filliuccius, tom. 3, tract. 41, cap. 4, n. 181; and Alexander of Ales, part. 2, quaest. 136, § 2 — who says that the passing over of the worthier is sin only in Bishoprics, but not in the other benefices, even those having care of souls. And Kings too are held to this, as Lessius notes, lib. 2, cap. 34, dub. 14, num. 64. Though regarding these, and regarding the Pope, they judge the opposite probable, besides those alleged; so also Diana, p. p., tract. 15, resol. 40, and others cited by Fagundez, cap. 22.

37 ¶ Nay, I deduce from what has been said that even those resigning benefices are held to this, as Navarrus teaches, in miscell. 38, n. 7; Soto, de Iustitia, l. 3, quaest. 6, art. 2; Vasquez, opusc. de beneficiis, cap. 2, § 4, disp. 7, num. 100. Whatever Diana may judge to the contrary, loco citato, resol. 41, with Reginaldus, Tom. 1, l. 30, tract. 3, cap. 74, n. 110; Lessius, l. 2, cap. 34, dub. 13, num. 61; Malderus, 2. 2, tract. 9, cap. 2, dub. 7, citing Cajetan, Sà, and Salon. For he is a distributor, even if he resigns a benefice to a Nephew fixed upon beforehand, without comparison; for he still excludes the worthier, and sins against Distribution, and also against Commutative Justice; because he is unworthy, though flesh and blood may present him as worthy: Hence Vasquez infers that such commit more crimes than they think.

38 ¶ But here a question arises: Whether not only he who elects an unworthy man, but also he who elects a less worthy man, omitting a worthier, sins against Commutative Justice, and is held to restitution.

39 The first opinion is that the matter is not against the Commutative, but only against the Distributive, from which no obligation of restitution arises. They judge it probable and safe in practice: Villalobos, in summa, Tomo 2, tract. 8, diff. 8, num. 15; Soto, de Iustitia, l. 4, quaest. 6, art. 3, ad 6; Navarrus, cap. 17, num. 74, and others, to whom Diana subscribes, parte 2, tract. 5, resol. 110, where he adds that the less worthy man, even conscious of his lesser dignity, may safely accept that benefice. Turrianus consents, 2. 2, Tract. 2, disp. 22, dub. 3, num. 8; Soto, de Iustitia, l. 3, quaest. 6, art. 2, after conclusion 9.

> Prima opinio est, non agi contra Commutativam, sed solum contra Distributivam, ex qua non oriatur obligatio restitutionis. Eam probabilem, et tutam in praxi censent Villalobos in summa, Tomo 2. tract. 8. diff. 8. num. 15. Soto de Iustitia, L. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 6. Navar. cap. 17. num 74. et alii, quibus subscribit Diana parte 2. tract. 5. resol. 110. ubi addit, et minus dignum, etiam conscium suae minoris dignitatis, posse tuto acceptare illud beneficium. Consentit Turrianus 2. 2. Tract. 2. disp. 22. dub. 3. num. 8. Sotus de Iustitia, L. 3. quaest. 6. art. 2. post 9. conclusionem.

40 Yet Turrianus adds that this is true after the election; for before it, if he knows, he is bound not to concur, lest he cause injustice. Ledesma subscribes to him, Tom. 2, tract. 7, concl. 7, diffi. 19; Sylvius, 2. 2, quaestio 63, art. 2, concl. 4. Moreover Lessius says the less worthy man may even offer himself, by concurring. So l. 2, cap. 34, dub. 41, num. 70, cited by Diana.

> Addit tamen Turrianus, hoc verum esse post electionem; nam antea sciens, tenetur non concurrere, ne causet iniustitiam. Huic subscribunt Ledefma Tom. 2. tract. 7. concl. 7. diffi 19. Siluius 2. 2. quaestio 63. art. 2. concl. 4. Caeterum Lessius dicit posse minus dignum etiam se offerre concurrendo. Sic L. 2. cap. 34. dub. 41. num. 70. apud Dianam.

41 ¶ But truly, that this is a sin against both justices is held commonly, cited by Fagundez, on the 8th Precept, l. 8, cap. 22, num. 4, and Cardinal Zapata, per the cited num. 11, fol. 55. And so they judge it to be against Commutation with respect to the Church, which is deprived of worthier ministers, and against Distribution on account of the worthier man rejected; and the better Doctors hold that restitution is owed, to be made to the Church. Of this sentiment D. Thomas seems to be, quaest. 63, art. 2, in corpore. They hold it: Gazia, de benefic., 7, cap. 16, num. 53; Bannes, 2. 2, quaest. 62, art. 2, ad 6; Salon, ibid; Ledesma, part. 2, tract. 7, cap. 2, concl. 7 — against Robellus, p. p., l. 3, quaest. 4, num. 14.

> ¶ Enim vero hoc esse peccatum contra utramque iustitiam, tenent communiter apud Fagundez in 8. Praeceptum, L. 8. cap. 22. num 4. et Cardinalem Zapatam, si pra allegatum num. 11. fol 55. Itaque censent, esse contra Commutationem respectu Ecclesiae, quae dignioribus ministris privatur, et contra Distributionem, propter digniorem reiectum; et meliores D et res obligant ad restitutionem, Ecclesiae faciendam. Huius sententiae videtur D. Thom. quaest. 63. art. 2. in corpore. Eam tenent Gaizia de benefic. 7. cap. 16. num. 53. Banucs 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. ad 6. Salonius ibi, Ledefma part. 2. tract. 7. cap. 2. concl. 7. contra Robell. p. p. L 3. quaest. 4. num 14.

42 Yet they do not hold that restitution is owed to the worthier man rejected, because they judge that from a violation of distributive justice no debt of restitution arises. So Lessius, l. 2, cap. 34, dub. 15;

Azor, tract. 2, l. 6, cap. 15, quaestio 12; Toletus, l. 5 of the summa, cap. 4, vers. 4, and cap. 78; Valencia, quaest. 7, puncto 7; Navarrus, summa, cap. 17, num. 72; Covarruvias, on the Rule Peccatum, 2. part., § 7, num. 6; Molina, de primo genit., l. 2, cap. 5, num. 57; Gutierrez, can. qq., l. 2, cap. 11, from num. 97; and others, whom Fagundez follows, loco cit. See also Caspensis, disp. 3, quaestione 2.

> Non obligant tamen ad restitutionem digniori reiecto, quia censent, ex violatione iustitiae distributivae non oriri debitum restitutionis. Ita Lessius L. 2. cap. 34. dub. 15. Azor tract. 2. L. 6. cap. 15 quaestio 12. Tolet. L. 5. summae, cap. 4. vers. 4. et cap. 78. Valentia quaest. 7. puncto 7. Navar. summa, cap. 17. num. 72. Couar. in Reg. Peccatum, 2. part. §. 7. num. 6. Molina de primo genit. L. 2. cap. 5. num 57. Guttierrez can. qq. L. 2. cap. 11. a num. 97. et alii, quos sequitur Fagundez loco cit. Vide etiam Caspensem disp. 3. quaestione 2.

43 Though Molina says the contrary, Theol. de Iust., Tract. 2, disp. 714; Rodriquez, Tom. 1, summa, c. 108, num. 6; Salon, 2. 2, quaest. 63, art. 4, controv. 3, concl. 4; Bannes, ibid, asserting that from a violation of Distributive Justice there results a debt of rigorous restitution, and that the elector is held accordingly to restore to the worthier man the loss thence resulting to him.

> Licet contrarium dicant Molina Theol. de Iust. Tract. 2. disp. 714. Rodriquez Tom. 1. summa, c. 108. num. 6. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 63. art. 4. controv. 3. concl. 4. Bannes ibi, asserentes, ex violatione Iustitiae distributivae resultare debitum rigorosae restitutionis, tenerique perinde eligentem restituere digniori damnum, inde illi resultans.

44 ¶ But the worthier man is not to be judged that one who excels in learning or in holiness; but he who is more apt for the government of the Church, by the judgment of prudent men. So teaches Soto, l. 3, quaest. 6, art. 2; Riccius, in praxi, resol. 498, fol. 394; Covarruvias, loco citato, § 7; Hoieda, de incompatibilitate benefic., part. 2, cap. 23, num. 130; Lupus, on cap. per vestras, not. 3, § 6, num. 12, de donat.; Fagundez, num. 5.

45 ¶ And so, just as dignity consists in legitimate age, in learning, in morals, in the orders required for a benefice, cap. cum in cunctis, § Inferior de electione, so that he be not under twenty-five years, as is had in cap. Cum in cunctis, for which a Bishop cannot dispense for honors, extra de elect.; that they have no other benefice of cura, extra de clericis, Dudum, etc. — which St. Bonaventure has in confessionali, cap. 5, particula 59; Selva, de benefic., part. 3, quaest. 5; Council of Trent, cap. 1 with the following, sess. 7, and cap. 2 and 4, sess. 22; Riccius above; and others — so indignity consists in this, that they lack the required qualities, according to Rebuffus, de pacifica possess., num. 7; D. Thomas, 2. 2, quaest. 63, art. 2; and D. Bonaventure in the places alleged, and to be alleged below. In this, however, the judgment of the superior elector avails very much. So Baldus, on cap. si pro debilitate, de off. deleg.; Menochius, de arbitr., quaest. centur. 1, casu 67, num. 13; Alexander, consil. 33, lib. 1, num. 7; Tiraquellus, de nobilit., cap. 10, num. 12; the Doctors on cap. sedes, de rescriptis. Nevertheless, by these things no infallible judgment of a Bishop, or of another Prelate inferior to the Pontiff, is established, and therefore an appeal is given from them; for in such arbitrary matters deceit can be committed. Baldus, l. si fugitivus, col. ult., and so it is clear from the Cod. de servis fugit.; Alexander, ad Bartolum, on l. si quae poena, 2, 44, at the end, ff. de verb. signific., after the Gloss there, v. poena, at the end; Tiraquellus, l. si unquam, v. omnia vel partem, num. 32, Cod. de revocand. Donat., to whom Fagundez subscribes, num. 6.

¶ Itaque sicut dignitas consistit in aetate legitima, in litteris, in moribus, in ordinibus ad beneficium requisitis, cap. cum in cunctis, §. Inferior de ele- ctione*, ut non sit inferior vigintiquinque annis, ut habetur,* cap. Cum in cunctis*, quocum non potest Episcopus dispensare ad honores,* extra de elect. Ut non habeant aliud beneficium curae, extra de cleri- cis, Dudum, etc. quae habet S. Bonaventura in con- fessionali, cap. 5. particula 59. Selva de benefic. part. 3. quaest. 5. Concilium Trident. cap. 1. cum sequenti, sess. 7. et cap. 2. et 4. sess. 22. Riccius supra, et alii: Là indignitas in eo sita est, ut qualitates non habeant requisitas, iuxta Rebuffum de pacifica possess. num. 7. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 63. art. 2. et D. Bonavent. locis allegatis, et infra allegandis. In hoc autem valet plurimum iudicium superioris eligentis. Ita Baldus in cap. si pro debilitate, de off. deleg. Menoch. de arbitr. quaest. centur. 1. casu 67. num. 13. Alexander consil. 33. Lib. 1. num. 7. Tiraquel. de nobilit. cap. 10. num. 12. Doctores in cap. sedes, de rescriptis. Attamen per haec non statuitur infallibile iudicium Episcopi, vel alterius Praelati inferioris Pontifici, et ideo ab eis datur appellatio; Nam in eiusmodi arbitrariis potest dolus committi. Baldus L. si fugitivus, col. ult. et sic patet Cod. de servis fugit. Alexander ad Bartolum in L. si quae poena 2. 44. in fine, ff. de verb. signific. post Glossam ibi v. poena, in fine, Tiraquell. L. si unquam, v. omnia, vel partem, num. 32. Cod. de revocand. Donat. quibus subscribit Fagandez num. 6.

46 The QUALITIES of those to be elected, Valencia says, are to be taken from the end, in view of the variety of Prebends. And so, if the benefice is for teaching, say a Theological one, or for receiving confessions, there will be need of Theological doctrine and of the sacred Canons, as the Holy Doctor at length treats in his Confessionale. If for the care of souls, he will need to be endowed also with a greater Charity, as the Holy Doctor taught above on the passage of John at the end, and the Council of Trent in the places related at the beginning.

QUALITATES eligendorum, ait Valentia, sumendas a fine, pro varietate Praebendarum iniento. Itaque si sit beneficium ad docendum, puta Theologalis, vel ad excipiendas confessiones, necessaria erit doctrina Theologica, et Sanctorum Canonum, ut late differit S. Doctor in Confessionali. Si ad curam animarum, oportebit Charitate etiam maiori esse praeditum, ut docuit S. Doctor supra ad locum Ioan. ult. et Concil. Trident. locis initio relatis.

47 IN these matters, moreover, many things are to be guarded against, and many observed, for the public good. Hence it was rightly provided, cap. Nullus and cap. oportebat, dist. 79, that the Pope be elected by the College of Cardinals alone, lest Schisms arise.

IN his autem multa sunt cavenda, multaque observanda, ad bonum publicum. Ideo recte ait cautum cap. Nullus, et cap. oportebat, dist. 79. de solo collegio Cardinalium eligendum Papam, ne Schismata orirentur.

48 THEN it was rightly provided, cap. Nullus, dist. 61, and cap. Metropolitano, dist. 63, that the Election of Bishops be not made except from the same Church where they previously served, if suitable men are there; for these are presumed to love the people more.

DEINDE recte cautum est, cap. Nullus, dist. 61. et cap. Metropolitano, dist. 63. ut Electio Episcoporum non fiat, nisi ex eadem Ecclesia, ubi prius servierint, si ibi idonei sint; hi enim supponuntur magis cum populum amare.

49 BESIDES, often also rightly in certain elections it is provided that some be promoted with respect had to nobility and the splendor of family; for these promote the good of the Church.

PRAETEREA saepe etiam recte in quibusdam electionibus cautum est aliquos promoveri, habito respectu ad nobilitatem, et ad familiae splendorem, hi enim promovent bonum Ecclesiae.

50 SIMILARLY, rightly excluded from elections are those who already have other Churches espoused to themselves; for Churches are not frequently to be changed by way of providence, so that after other sheep have been known, they be transferred, and unknown ones be taken up to be governed. Hence it was provided that this not be done, in the Councils: Nicaea, can. 15; Arelate 2, can. 13;

Sardica, can. 1; Carthage 4, can. 27 — although sometimes these changes are expedient, as is clear from the letter of Pope Evaristus, epist. 2 to the Bishops of Egypt; Calixtus I, epist. to Benedictus; Antherus, epist. to the Bishops of Boetica and of the Toletan province.

> SIMILITER recte excluduntur ab electionibus, qui alias Ecclesias iam sibi habent desponsatas; non enim provide mutantur Ecclesiae frequenter, ut postquam aliae oves sunt cognitae, deferantur, ut incognitae suscipiantur regendae. Ideo cautum est, ne hoc fiat, in Conciliis Nicaeno can. 15. Arelat. 2. can. 13. Sardic. can. 1. Carthag. 4. can. 27. etsi aliquando hae mutationes expediant, ut constat ex Evaristo Papa epist. 2. ad Episcopos AEgypti. Calixto I. epist. ad Benedictum, Anthero epist. ad Episcopos Boeticae, et Toletanae provinciae.

51 FINALLY, above all, the life must be attended to, so that the life of him who is to be preferred not be gravely depraved. For he who is evil to himself is good to no one. On which matter many, with D. Bonaventure, discoursed at length upon those words of Matth. 24: Who, thinkest thou, is the faithful and prudent servant, and of Luke 12: Dispenser, etc.

> TANDEM praecipue vitae ratio est attendenda, ut illius, qui praeficiendus sit, vita non sit graviter prava. Qui enim sibi malus, nulli bonus. Qua de re multi ad ea verba Matth. 24. Quis putas est fidelis servus, et prudens*, et Lucae 12.* Dispensator*, etc. cum D. Bonavent. late disserunt.*

52 ELEGANTLY the Holy Doctor says in the Apol. pauperum, art. 1, at the end, from D. Jerome, epist. 85: Let such a one be elected as future Pastor of the Church, in comparison with whom the subject people may deservedly be called a flock; and from D. Gregory, 1. part. de cura pastorum, cap. 1: So much ought the action of the people's prelate to precede the action of the people, as the life of the pastor is wont to differ from the flock.

> ELEGANTER S. Doctor in Apol. pauperum, art. 1. in fine*, ait, ex D. Hieronymo epist. 85.* Futurus pastor Ecclesiae talis eligatur, cuius comparatione subiectus populus merito grex dicatur*, et ex D. Gregorio 1. part. de cura pastorum, cap. 1.* Tantum debet actionem populi actio praecedere praesulis, quantum distare solet a grege vita pastoris.

53 Of the condition of Prelates the Seraphic Bonaventure discoursed most eloquently, and most wisely out of the practice of all, who for eighteen years governed the most ample Order of Minors; then made Bishop of Albano, Coadjutor of the Supreme Pontiff, Cardinal, a most strong Atlas of the Church, turning the axis upon his shoulder, he kept in view the whole orbit of the Ecclesiastical world.

> DE Praelatorum conditionibus eloquentiissime, et ex praxi omnium sapientissime Seraphicus Bonaventura disseruit, qui decem, et octo annos Ordinem amplissimum Minorum gubernavit; mox factus Episcopus Albanensis, summo Pontifici Coadiutor, Cardinalis, Ecclesiae validissimus Atlas, axem humero torquens, totum orbis Ecclesiastici gyrum observavit.

54 He discourses on the conditions of prelates in the Libello Apologetico, against those who oppose the Order of Friars Minor, quaest. 5, where he requires maturity of Age, a becoming demeanor of person, integrity of life, discreet learning, providence, industry, and prudence, zeal for justice and the discipline of order, mildness, fraternal piety, devotion, the pursuit of prayer, etc. See it itself.

> DE conditionibus praelatorum disserit in Libello Apologetico*, in eos, qui ordini Fratrum Minorum adversantur quaest. 5. ubi exigit AEtatis maturitatem, honestam personae habitudinem, vitae integritatem, scientiam discretam, providentiam, industriam, atque prudentiam, zelum iustitiae, et ordinis disciplinae, mansuetudinem, pietatem fraternam, devotionem, orationis studium, etc. Ipsum vide.*

55 He wove an excellent little work, whose title is De sex alis Seraphim, in which, taking up that apparition of God described in Isa. 6, where in the temple, with God seated, two Seraphim having six wings stood by, with two veiling the face, with two the feet, and with two flying, etc. — he notes that Prelates are adumbrated by these, endowed as it were with wings, with six virtues especially necessary for governance: that with zeal for justice together with piety they veil the face; that with patience and exemplary life, as it were with two other wings, they cover the body even to the feet. But with circumspect prudence and devotion they fly aloft; and they are Seraphim, adorned with wisdom and Charity. I send you back to the Holy Doctor, discoursing excellently on this matter. Would that all Prelates bore those words inscribed on plates of gold in their breast, like the Rationale, in which DOCTRINE and TRUTH shine forth; I send you back also to what we discoursed on this above, disp. 20, quaest. 7.

> OPUSCULUM egregium contexuit, cui titulus. De sex alis Seraphim*, in quo assumpta illa Dei apparitione 6. Isaiae descripta, ubi in templo, Deo sedenti, duo Seraphim habentes alas senas adstabant, duabus velantes faciem, duabus pedes, duabus quoque volantes, etc. His adumbrari Praelatos, sex virtutibus praecipue ad regimen necessariis praeditos veluti alis adnotat, ut zelo iustitiae simul cum pietate velent faciem; patientiae, et vitae exemplaris, veluti duabus aliis alis corpus usque ad pedes contegant. Circumspectione vero prudenti, et devotione evolent in altum; sunt autem Seraphim sapientia et Charitate ornati. Remitto ad S. Doctorem egregie hac de re differentem. Utinam aureis laminis omnes Praelati ea inscripta in pectore portarent, veluti Rationale, in quo resplendet DOCTRINA, et VERITAS remitto etiam ad ea, quae hac de re disseruimus supra disp. 20. quaest. 7.*

56 In the first part also of the Pharetra, cap. 11, he pours forth many sentiments of the Holy Fathers on the right governance of Prelates, and others in cap. 12 compressed against wicked Prelates.

> PRIMA parte etiam Pharetrae, cap. 11. multas Sanctorum Patrum sententias de Praelatorum recta gubernatione, et alias cap. 12. in malos Praelatos constipatas eiaculatur.

57 AGAIN, in the work on the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, he erects the hierarchy of all the Orders of Governors, and sets it in excellent parallels against the celestial Hierarchies.

> RURSUS in opere de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, Ordinum omnium Gubernatorum hierarchiam erigit, et caelestibus Hierarchiis, optime exquisitis parallelis componit.

58 Therefore the Prelates, the dispensers of benefices, are held to attend to these; nor is the Pope exempt from this law. For although he has the supreme power, independent of men; yet he is subject to the laws of nature and of Divine Justice; and by this doctrine the arguments of the opposite opinion are answered, taken from cap. 2 de praebendis, in 6, and from the first Clementine, in fide, which begins: Si duobus, where full and free disposition of the dignities of the Church is asserted.

> EAS igitur tenentur attendere Praelati, dispensatores beneficiorum; neque ab hac lege indemniz est Papa. Quamvis enim supremam habeat potestatem, ab hominibus independentem; tamen subiicitur legibus naturae, et divinae Iustitiae, et hac doctrina respondetur argumentis oppositae sententiae, sumptibus ex cap. 2. de praebendis, in 6. et ex Clementina prima, in fide, quae incipit: Si duobus*, ubi plena, et libera dignitatum Ecclesiae dispositio asseritur.*

59 FINALLY, the doctrine of D. Bonaventure must be noted with regard to secular benefices; of which he says in the Speculo animae, loco citato, in the words alleged above: But if the benefices be temporal, thus in them acception of persons can be mortal sin in the article of necessity, when someone is bound to confer a benefice by precept, and the benefice is given to him who does not need it, by reason of particular love; and he who is in straitened necessity is despised. But in those things in which one is not bound to give, acception of persons does not come in, according to that of Matthew 20: Is it not lawful for me to do what I will?

> POSTREMO adnotanda est doctrina D. Bonaventurae quo ad beneficia saecularia; de quibus ait in speculo animae, loco citato, verbo supra allegata; Si autem sint temporalia beneficia sic in eis potest esse personarum acceptio mortale peccatum in necessitatis articulo, quando quis tenetur beneficium conferre ex praecepto, et cum datur beneficium illi, qui non indiget, ratione particularis amoris; et ille, qui est in arcta necessitate, contemnitur. In his autem, in quibus non tenetur quis dare, non cadit acceptio personarum, secundum illud Matthaei 20. Aut non licet mihi quod volo facere?

60 The Holy Doctor wished, moreover, to abstain from defining whether Kings in their Kingdoms can dispense benefices — that is, revenues and stipends — in whatever villages they wish; for the goods of Kings seem to be their own free property, and consequently, by the common sentiment of very many whom you have noted above, they can dispense them freely, since they are not only dispensers but Lords. So also hold the Gloss on cap. finali, 9, q. 3, verbo ad nos; Decius, in cap. quae in Ecclesiarum, de constit., num. 26; Ripa, l. 2, respon., cap. 19, num. 5; Gomez, on the rule de non tollendo iure, quaest. 1, quod. 3; Baldus, on l. 61 But that the aforesaid Doctors assert the same even of offices is not proved. For there is a valid argumentation from benefices to offices; but the Pope cannot dispense and take away benefices at his pleasure: Therefore neither can Kings without cause, as Fagundez well argues from the above, cap. 23, at the line of D. Bonaventure, who wills that in those things which pertain to the public administration of government Distributive Justice be observed.

QUOD vero etiam de officiis praecitati Doctores idem asserant, non probatur. Est enim valida argumentatio a beneficiis ad officia; sed Papa nequit beneficia ad libitum dispensare, et auferre: Ergo nec Reges sine causa, ut bene arguit ex supradictis Fagundez cap. 23. ad lineam D. Bonau. qui in his, quae respiciunt publicam gubernationis administrationem, vult, ab his servari Iustitiam distributivam.

62 AND SO in useful goods, with which Kings erect stipends or revenues from their own treasuries, they can dispense freely; not, however, withdrawing what has already been granted, except for some cause, since it was freely assigned. To dispense with some of these, leaving others in straitened necessity, or grave necessity without succor, the Holy Doctor judges to be against Charity, and it seems also against the distributive, according to the various principles brought in disp. 1, where I showed probabiliter that it is against the law of nature, altered by the law of nations, as I said in disp. de eleemosyna, quaest. 7.

ITAQUE in bonis utilibus, quibus Reges ex propriis gazis erigunt stipendia, aut proventus, libere possunt dispensare, non tamen retrahendo iam concessa, nisi ex aliqua causa, cum libere fuerint consignata. De his dispensare quibusdam, relinquendo alios in necessitate arctata, seu gravi sine adiutorio, existimat S. Doctor esse contra Charitatem, et videtur etiam contra distributivam, iuxta varia principia allata disp. 1. ubi ostendi probabiliter, esse contra ius naturae, iure gentium alteratum, ut dixi disp. de eleemosyna, quaest. 7.

Question III: Whether acceptance of persons has place in the showing of honor, and reverence

1 St. Bonaventure holds as certain, in the Speculum, cap. 3, and D. Thomas here, that in the exhibition of such things acception of persons can intervene, insofar as they are goods of the Republic, and others have a greater right to them, for instance by reason of virtue, which is to be esteemed at more, than others by reason of power and riches.

An Acceptio personarum habeat locum in exhibitione honoris, et reverentiae.

PRO certo habent S. Bonav. in speculo, cap. 3. et D. Thom. hic, in talium exhibitione posse intervenire acceptionem personarum, prout sunt bona Reipublicae, et alii ad ea habent ius maius, puta ratione virtutis, quae pluris aestimanda, quam alii ratione potentiae, et divitiarum.

2 It is PROVED by both Holy Doctors from that text of James 2: Do not in acception of persons hold the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. For if there shall come in unto your assembly a man having a golden ring in fine apparel, and there shall come in also a poor man in vile attire; and you have respect to him that is clothed in fine apparel, and shall say unto him: Sit thou here well; but say to the poor: Stand thou there, or sit under my footstool: do not you judge within yourselves, and are become judges of unjust thoughts?

PROBATUR ab utroque S. Doctore ex illo Iacobi 2. Nolite in personarum acceptione habere fidem Domini nostri Iesu Christi. Etenim si introierit in conventum vestrum vir aureum annulum habens in veste candida; introierit autem et pauper in sordido habitu; et intendatis in eum, qui indutus est veste praeclara, et dixeritis ei: Tu sede hic bene: pauperi autem dicatis: Tu sta illic; aut sede sub scabello pedum meorum: nonne iudicastis apud vosmetipsos, et facti estis iudices cogitationum iniquarum?

3 By these things the Apostle shows that it is fraudulent acception of persons to honor some, even if they are wicked, on account of riches alone, more than poor men eminent in virtue. It is confirmed by the Holy Doctor from the Interlinear Gloss on this passage, expressly reproving this preference of persons.

HIs ostendit Apostolus, esse acceptionem fraeidam personarum, honorare aliquos, etiamsi improbos, ob solas divitias magis, quam pauperes, virtute praeclaros. Confirmatur a S. Doctore ex Glossa, ad hunc locum, Interlineari, diserte hanc personarum praeferentiam reprobante.

4 It is PROVED secondly by reason, by St. Bonaventure. For honor, according to Aristotle, 2 Rhet., cap. 5, is nothing other than the testimony of virtue, owed to each proportionately for the magnitude or smallness of the virtue itself; and it is an estimable good, and a good of the Republic insofar as it is a civil body; and consequently to deprive studious men of this observance is acception of persons, and consequently, if it verges toward contempt of the poor studious man, it will be mortal, especially when the rich man is honored for riches alone, as the Holy Doctor notes from the testimony of D. James, who calls such a one a judge of unjust thoughts, or an unjust judge. Valencia uses this argument, quaest. 7, puncto 3.

PROBATUR secundo ratione S. Bonav. Nam honor ex Aristotele 2. Rhet. cap. 5. non est aliud, quam testimonium virtutis, debitum cuique pro magnitudine, vel parvitate ipsius virtutis proportionaliter; estque bonum aestimabile, et bonum Reipub. quatenus est corpus ciuile, atque adeo privare viros studiosos hac observantia, est acceptio personarum, atque adeo, si vergat ad contemptum pauperis studiosi, erit mortale, maxime honorato divite ob solas divitias, ut advertit S. Doctor ex testimonio D. Iacobi, qui talem vocat Iudicem cogitationum iniquarum, seu iudicem iniquum. Hoc argumento utitur Valentia quaest. 7. puncto 3.

5 From this it appears that Cajetan here is deceived, and Lessius, tome 1 de Iustitia, l. 2, cap. 11, de detract. et contumel., dub. 27, num. 142; Filliuccius, tomo 2, tract. 32, cap. 9, num. 251; Fagundez, lib. 8, cap. 28, num. 8 — saying that the denial of due honor is not against justice, but only against observance, of which St. Thomas, quaest. 102; unless perhaps contumely be interpretatively attached, as if someone, while all honor a passing Pastor or Prince, should look upon him without any sign of honor. From this they deduce that the denial of reverence does not of itself obligate to restitution.

Ex quo apparet, deceptos Caietanum hic, Lessium tomo primo de Iustitia l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. et contumel. dub. 27. num. 142. Filliucium tomo 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 251. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 28. num. 8. dicentes, negationem honoris debiti non esse contra iustitiam, sed solum contra observantiam; de qua S. Thomas quaest. 102. nisi forte habeat contumeliam interpretative adiunctam, ut si transeuntem Pastorem, seu Principem omnibus honorantibus, aliquis sine honoris signo aspiciat. Ex quo deducunt, negationem reverentiae per se non cogere ad restitutionem.

6 But they are DECEIVED, because these acts must be considered not as immediately elicited by the virtue of observance, but as they are the matter, or the thing owed; and consequently he abuses the virtue of observance unjustly, which is opposed to the act of Distributive Justice; for it is not unusual for the act of one virtue to be the matter of another virtue; for thus also the act of divine liberality and mercy, by which he gives grace, is the matter of justice, insofar as that grace is owed by the merits of Christ. Therefore the exhibition of reverence is the matter of distributive justice in the manner in which Ecclesiastical benefices also are to be distributed, as Valencia notes, loc. cit.

FALLUNTUR autem, quia non sunt considerandi hi actus, ut immediate eliciti a virtute observantiae, sed ut sunt materia, seu res debita, atque adeo iniuste virtute observantiae abutitur, quod opponitur actui Iustitiae distributivae; neque enim insolitum est, actus unius virtutis esse materiam alterius virtutis, sic enim et actus divinae liberalitatis, et misericordiae, qua gratiam dat, est materia iustitiae, prout ea gratia est debita meritis Christi. Igitur exhibitio reverentiae est materia distributivae iustitiae ad modum, quo et beneficia Ecclesiastica distribuenda, ut advertit Valentia loc. cit.

7 From this also falls Cajetan's other argument: This exhibition of honor is gratuitous; but in gratuitous things acception of persons does not intervene.

8 It is ANSWERED that these acts are gratuitous as they are elicited immediately by the virtue of observance; but not as they are owed insofar as they are public goods of the Republic, as it is a civil body, to be distributed according to merits. Nor indeed does anyone infer well that these do not pertain to distributive justice, on the ground that even inferiors pertain to it, who exhibit these signs of reverence. For it is enough that it pertain to everyone having a right to those goods, which are to be distributed to each according to his own merit.

> RESPONDETUR, hos actus esse gratuitos, ut eliciuntur immediate a virtute observantiae; non autem, ut sunt debiti ex eo, quod sunt bona publica Reipublicae, ut est corpus ciuile, distribuenda secundum merita. Neque vero bene infert quispiam, haec non spectare ad iustitiam distributivam, eo quod etiam ad inferiores spectat, haec signa reverentiae exhibere. Satis enim est, id spectare ad omnem habentem Ius ad illa bona, cuique secundum suum meritum distribuenda.

9 TANNERUS indeed, disp. 4, quaest. 8, num. 20, says that honor is indeed immediately and elicitive from the virtue of observance; but imperative from Commutative Justice. Thus he reconciles the opinions.

> TANNERUS sane disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 20. dicit, immediate quidem, et elicitive honorem esse a virtute observantiae; imperative autem a Iustitia commutativa. Sic componit opiniones.

10 Most GLORIOUSLY, however, St. Doctor confirms the assertion laid down from the Holy Fathers, lib. 3 of the Pharetra, cap. 38, by which also he dissolves the objections. Most illustrious, too, are the testimonies on this matter of DD. Gregory and Jerome; see them in the preceding question.

> PRAECLARE vero e SS. PP. assertionem positam confirmat S. Doctor lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 38. quibus etiam oppositiones diluit, Praeclara sunt etiam hac de re testimonia DD. Gregorii, et Hieronymi, eos vide quaestione praecedenti.

11 He ADDS Seneca, epist. 76, after the middle: In this error we toil; thus is it imposed upon us, that we estimate no man for what he is, but we add to him also those things by which he is adorned: But when you wish to enter upon the true estimation of a man, and to know what sort he is; look upon him naked: let him cast away patrimony, let him cast away honors, and the other lies of fortune, let him strip off the body itself; consider the soul, what and how great it is, whether great by another's, or by its own.

> ADDIT Senecam epist. 76. post medium: Hoc laboramus errore, sic nobis imponitur, quod neminem aestimamus, eo quod est, sed etiam adiicimus illi et ea, quibus adornatus est: Atqui cum voles veram hominis aestimationem inire, et scire qualis sit; nudum inspice: ponat patrimonium, ponat honores, et alia fortunae mendacia, corpus ipsum exuat, animum intuere, qualis, quantusque sit, alieno, an suo magnus.

Question IV: Whether acceptance of persons finds a place in the sentences of judges

1 IT IS CERTAIN from faith that there can be acceptance of persons in judgment. The holy Doctor proves it with those words: Deuter. 16: You shall not accept person in judgment; and Proverbs 18: To accept person in judgment is not good.

An acceptio personarum inveniat locum in Iudicum sententiis.

CERTUM ex fide est, in iudicio esse posse acceptionem personarum. Id probat S. Doctor illo Deuter. 16. Non accipies personam in iudicio, et Proverb. 18. Accipere personam in iudicio non est bonum.

2 ST. BONAV. ADDS a valid reason, Part 1. on the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, cap. 4. at the end, citing there the passage of Proverbs; for it departs from the Geometric mean, which is owed to each one's merits.

ADDIT S. Bonav. rationem validam Parte 1. de Eccl. Hierarchia, cap. 4. in fine*, recitato hoc loco Proverbiorum; nam declinatur a mediocritate Geometrica, debita meritis cuiusque.*

3 This therefore is a grave sin, and a kind of monster, that he who is Judge of men should act unjustly, as the Blessed Andrew said to Aegeas, judge of Achaia.

Hoc itaque est grave peccatum, et veluti monstrum, ut qui Iudex est hominum, iniuste agat, ut dicebat Beatus Andreas AEgeae, iudici Achaiae.

4 IT IS PROVED thirdly by the holy Doctor, l. 3. of the Pharetra, cap. 38. from the holy Fathers.

PROBATUR tertio a S. Doct. l. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 38. ex SS. PP.

5 ST. ISIDORE, on the highest good, l. 3. cap. 57: Unjust judges err from the truth of the sentence, while they attend to the quality of the person; and they often wound the just, while they wickedly defend the unjust; and cap. 57: The rich man quickly corrupts the Judge with gifts; but the poor man, while he has nothing to offer, is not only despised and refused a hearing, but is also oppressed against the truth.

D. ISIDORUS de summo bono, l. 3. cap. 57. Iudices iniqui errant a veritate sententiae, dum intendunt in qualitate personae; et exulcerant saepe iustos, dum improbe defendunt iniquos, et cap. 57. Dives muneribus cito corrumpit Iudicem; pauper autem dum non habet, quod offerat, non solum audiri contemnitur, sed etiam contra veritatem opprimitur.

6 HENCE ST. GREGORY, lib. 9. Morals, cap. 17., cited by ST. Bonav. lib. 1. of the Pharetra, cap. 45: There are three acceptances of gifts, by which one hastens deceitfully to judgment. A gift from the heart is the favor sought by thought. A gift from the mouth is glory through favor. A gift from the hand is a reward through giving.

HINC D. Gregorius lib. 9. Moral. cap. 17. apud D. Bonav. lib. 1. Pharetrae, cap. 45. Tres sunt acceptiones munerum, ad quas ex fraude festinatur ad iudicium. Munus namque a corde, est captata gratia a cogitatione. Munus ab ore, est gloria per favorem. Munus a manu, est praemium per dationem.

7 He goes on there to cite St. Isidore, on the highest good, cap. 58. sent. 7: In four ways human judgment is perverted: by fear, by covetousness, by hatred, by love. By fear, when dreading the power of someone we are afraid to speak the truth. By covetousness, when we are corrupted by the reward of some gift. By hatred, when we strive against someone. By love, when we strive to obey a friend or relatives. For other Fathers testifying the same you have question 2 of the preceding question.

PERGIT ibidem afferre D. Isidorum de summo bono, cap. 58. sent. 7. Quatuor modis iudicium humanum pervertitur, timore, cupiditate, odio, amore. Timore, dum metu potestatis alicuius veritatem loqui pavescimus. Cupiditate, dum praemio muneris alicuius corrumpimur. Odio, dum contra quemlibet adversari molimur. Amore, dum amico vel propinquis obtemperare contendimus. Alios patres id ipsum testantes habes quaest. 2. praecedenti.

8 SO MUCH do the Fathers exaggerate this crime of Judges that St. Jerome calls it the greatest, because since the Judge is the soul of Justice, or animated justice, as Aristotle teaches in 5 Ethics, injustice in him is a monstrous thing.

> ADEO autem exaggerant Patres hoc Iudicum crimen, ut S. Hieron. maximum appellet, quia cum Iudex sit anima Iustitiae, seu iustitia animata, ut docet Aristoteles 5. Eth. monstruosa res est in eo iniustitia.

9 BUT there is a doubt: Whether a Judge, when he judges in a matter of commutative justice, punishing or rewarding this particular one, or that one against the just, while considering in him a condition not relevant to the cause, sins also against distributive justice.

> EST autem dubium: An Iudex, quando iudicat in materia Iustitiae commutativae, puniendo, vel praemiando hunc praecisum, vel illum contra iustum, considerando in eo conditionem, non facientem ad causam, peccet etiam contra Distributivam.

10 IT MUST BE ASSERTED that a Judge so judging offends against distributive justice.

> ASSERENDUM, Iudicem ita iudicantem, contra distributivam Iustitiam delinquere.

11 IT IS PROVED from Valencia, point 4. For judicial acts, as in the power [of the judge], are morally public goods to be distributed according to the Geometric proportion to those who deserve them: therefore the Judge, distributing these acts unjustly, sins against distributive justice, since that sentence was owed to another more worthy.

> PROBATUR a Valentia puncto 4. Nam actus Iudiciales, prout in potentia, sunt moraliter bona publica distribuenda secundum proportionem Geometricam emeritis: Ergo Iudex hos actus distribuendo inique; peccat contra distributivam, quia illa sententia alteri digniori debebatur.

12 YET this reason seems metaphysical, not moral; otherwise all the acts of a Prince or Judge bound by some precept would look to distributive justice. They must therefore be considered in their practical application, whence the reason of distributive or commutative justice is considered.

> HAEC tamen ratio videtur Metaphysica, non moralis; alioqui omnes actus Principis, vel Iudicis aliquo praecepto ligati, spectabunt ad distributivam. Debent igitur considerari in practica applicatione, unde ratio distributivae, vel commutativae consideratur.

13 THE TRUE and solid reason is that of St. Bonaventure, on the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy p. 1. cap. 4. at the end, and in the places of the Pharetra cited from the Fathers. Because, since the Judge holds in his hands the distribution of rewards and punishments and the other goods of the community, he is bound to observe the mean, remote from every extreme of vice; and accordingly, even if he now looks upon this defendant, this infant, and renders to them according to the commutative debt, he is bound to render it with that moderation which, the public good being reckoned along with the others to whom justice is ministered, is due according to the present state of affairs, so that with this one the utmost rigor is not applied; since, if it were applied with a just proportion to him, it ought not to be applied to the others, if he wishes to preserve the peace of the commonwealth. This exorbitance of disproportion arises either from ignorance of one's office, or from an affectation of attending to conditions irrelevant to the definition of causes, such as friendships, gifts, power, kinship, etc.; and this the holy Fathers openly intended, as cited by St. Bonaventure. Wherefore Valencia does not rightly say that others have not sufficiently explained this matter.

RATIO igitur vera, et solida est D. Bonav. de Eccl. Hier. p. 1. cap. 4. in fine, et in Pharetra locis adductis ex PP. Quia, cum Iudex habeat in manibus distributionem praemiorum, et poenarum, aliorumque bonorum communitatis, tenetur servare medietatem, ab omni extremitate vitiorum remotam; atque adeo, etiamsi nunc respiciat hunc reum, hunc infantem, reddatque illis secundum commutativam debitum, tenetur id praestare ea mediocritate, quae bono publico computatis etiam aliis, quibus iustitia ministratur, iuxta praesentem statum rerum debita est, ut non adhibeatur rigor summus cum hoc; cum iusta proportione non adhibeatur, neque adhiberi debeat cum caeteris, si pacem Reipub. tueri velit. Haec vero exorbitantia improportionis oritur, vel ex ignorantia sui officii, vel ex affectatione in respiciendo ad conditiones, impertinentes definitioni causarum, ut sunt amicitiae, munera, potentia, consanguinitas, etc. et hoc voluere aperte SS. PP. apud D. Bonaventuram. Quare non recte Valentia ait, non satis rem hanc alios explicasse.

14 From these things I deduce what must be said when it is left to the Judge's discretion to give something, for example, when the law determines that the Judge shall grant a time to litigants at his discretion.

Ex his deduco; quid dicendum, quando Iudicis arbitrio relinquitur dare aliquid, puta, cum Lex determinat, ut Iudex pro arbitrio det tempus litigantibus.

15 FOR I SAY that he cannot, on account of conditions irrelevant [to the cause], give more to one than to another; for the law leaves something to the discretion of the Judge because there are so many conditions subject to individuating circumstances that it would be difficult, and morally impossible, to define each one. Therefore it is left to the discretion of the Judge, all things being reckoned, to preserve what must be preserved; otherwise, if he distributes this out of favoritisms, he will not rightly consult the peace and public tranquillity; since all the members of the commonwealth have a right to those goods, for example to that convenience of time for appearing or paying, since all are equals in the causes, it must not be denied to one more than to another.

DICO enim, non posse ex conditionibus impertinentibus dare uni magis, quam alteri; relinquit enim lex aliqua arbitrio Iudicis, quia tot sunt conditionibus individuantibus obnoxia, ut de singulis definire sit arduum, ac moraliter impossibile. Ideo relinquitur arbitrio Iudicis computatis omnibus, servanda servare, alioqui si ex affectionibus haec distribuat, non recte paci, ac tranquillitati publicae consulet; cum enim membra omnia Reipublicae habeant ius ad ea bona. puta ad illam commoditatem temporis ad comparendum, vel ad solvendum, cum omnes sunt pares in causis, non est uni magis, quam alteri denegandum.

16 YET some things, which impose a proper inconvenience to be borne by the Judge himself, can be assigned rather to a friend, for example, to go to an inconvenient place, to the scene of the crime, or to plead a cause, as Valencia notes, loc. cit., Sotus l. 3. last quaest. art. 5. and others. But scandal must be avoided.

ALIQUA tamen, quae proprium incommodum Iudici suspiciendum imponunt, possunt amico magis appendi, puta ire ad locum incommodum, ad corpus delicti, vel ad causam dicendam, ut notat Valentia loc. cit. Sotus l. 3. quaest. ult. art. 5. et alii. Cavendum tamen scandalum.

Sole Doubt: Whether a judge can, without the stain of acceptance of persons, decide in favor of friends when the law is doubtful among the doctors

1 WHEN there is on either side a probable opinion, most hold that the Judge can judge for either side at his pleasure. So Sanchez 7. 1. Decal. lib. 1. cap. 9. num. 45. Medina t. 2. quaest. 19. art. 6. fol. 309. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 63. art. 4. controu. 2. Valencia 2. 2. disp. 5. quaest. 7. punct. 4. dub. 3. Rodriquez Tomo 1. of the summa, cap. 6. Sayrus lib. 1. cap. 11. Salas 2. 2. quaest. 21. tract. 8. dub. un. sect. 12. Petrus Ledesma

T. 2. of the summa, Tract. 8. cap. 22. after the 11th conclusion, diff. 1. fol. 745. Fagundez on the eighth Precept of the Decal. l. 8. cap. 26. num. 35., where he says that all these assert that the Judge cannot divide the thing disputed in the lawsuit among the litigants, or, if it be indivisible, such as a Majorat, cannot divide the fruits (as Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. disp. 1. and Malder. tract. 9. on justice, cap. 1. dub. 4. hold), but that the Judge is bound to determine himself and choose whichever opinion he prefers, and according to it adjudge the whole dispute to one party; but not all say the Judge is bound to do this, but that he can. Nor does it seem proved to me that he is bound; for since no greater reason compelling conscience is present on either side, but the probabilities are in equilibrium on both sides, I do not see why he should wish to compel. Indeed I think it probable that he is bound to divide, because each has an equal right to the thing, and therefore, by giving the whole to one, there will be a withered acceptance of persons, which judges not according to the reason of merit. On this I have also treated in prima secundae, Tract. on human acts, disp. 17. on probable conscience, quaest. 10. and on proposition 16. This many hold with Navarro, C. si quis, on penitence, dist. 7. num. 130.

> An possit IUDEX absque nota acceptationis personarum adhaerere amicorum Favori, quando ius est dubium inter Doctores.

Neque mihi id probatur, quod teneatur; nam cum nulla hinc inde maior ratio cogens conscientiam adsit, sed utrinque in aequilibrio sint probabilitates; non video cur velit cogere. Imo arbitror probabile, teneri dividere, quia uterque ius habet aeque ad rem, atque adeo totam dando uni, erit acceptio marcida personarum, quae iudicat, non secundum rationem meriti. De hoc egi etiam* prima secundae, Tract. de actibus humanis, disp. 17. de conscientia probabili, quaest. 10. et ad prop. 16. Hoc multi tenent cum Navarro C. si quis, de poenit. dist. 7. num. 130.

2 I WONDER, however, that Fagundez should put forward little arguments and boast that they are admirably proved, which are taken from the fact that the Judge is bound to determine himself for some party.

> MIROR autem, Fagundez apponere ratiunculas, atque gloriari, egregie probari eas, quae sumuntur, eo quod Iudex tenetur se determinare ad aliquam partem.

3 FOR I SAY he is bound to determine himself according to the laws of justice, not against them. But to give the whole thing to one, taking it away from another who has an equal right to it — let Fagundez consider whether that is to determine oneself according to the rules of justice. This seems to be the opinion of St. Bonaventure, at the place cited.

> DICO enim, teneri se determinare secundum leges iustitiae, non autem contra eas. Iam vero dare totam rem uni, eam auferendo ab alio, qui habet ad eam aequale ius, cogitet Fagundez, an sit determinare se secundum regulas iustitiae. Haec videtur sententia D. Bonan. loco citando.

4 I ADD that these freedoms of adjudicating usually bring scandals, when the people see that the same thing, numerically one, is judged one way and then the opposite way. It is confirmed. When the reasons and proofs on both sides are equal, the thing is to be divided: therefore that must also be done when the opinions on both sides rest on the same reasons.

> ADDO has libertates adiudicandi, plerumque scandala afferre, dum vident populi modo, uno modo, modo opposito iudicari eandem numero rem. Confirmatur. Quando rationes, et probationes utrinque sunt aequales, res est dividenda: Ergo et id agendum dum opiniones sunt utrinque iisdem rationibus nixae.

5 Fagundez answers by denying the parity; for the proofs hold on the side of the cause, but the probabilities of the opinions on the side of the Judge, who is bound to choose the opinion according to which he judges. Sanchez also assents to this, lib. 1. Decal. cap 9. num. 45.

> RESPONDET Fagundez, negando paritatem; nam probationes se tenent ex parte causae; probabilitates autem opinionum ex parte Iudicis, qui tenetur eligere opinionem, secundum quam iudicet. Cui annuit etiam Sanchez lib. 1. Decal. cap 9. num. 45.

6 BUT both are mistaken; for the reasons of the opinions stand on the side of the cause, just as the proofs do. For they are the props of the cause, without which it perishes; and this is the royal sign, because when the reasons of the opinions are changed, the case essentially changes its face.

> SED fallitur uterque; nam et rationes opinionum stant ex parte causae, sicuti etiam probationes. Sunt enim sustentacula causae, sine quibus perit, et hoc signum regium est, quia mutatis rationibus opinionum, mutat causa essentialiter faciem.

7 NEXT, he infers not very cleverly that, if the probabilities hold on the side of the judge, it lies in his power to judge against the reasons: for these generate probability in the judge.

> DEINDE non adeo lepide infert, quod si probabilitates se teneant ex parte iudicis, stet in eius potestate contra rationes iudicare: Haec enim gignunt in iudice probabilitatem.

8 Valencia ADDS that if the opinion is more probable for one side, the Judge is bound to judge for it; for then the law stands for the one whom the opinion favors more probably; otherwise he will be an acceptor of persons; and from this he deduces what the Confessor is bound to do in the forum of conscience, so as not to be an acceptor of persons.

> ADDIT Valentia, quod si opinio sit probabilior pro una parte, tenetur pro ea Iudex iudicare; tunc enim ius stat pro illo, cui opinio favet probabilius; alioqui erit acceptor personarum; et hinc deducit, quid Confessarius teneatur agere in foro conscientiae, ne sit acceptor personarum.

9 BETTER is St. Bonaventure in the Confessionale, cap. 1. part. 6., whose words I shall quote: Let the Confessor also strive to guard against acceptance of persons, so that the confessor in the judgment of penance accept not a person, which is thus described by the Masters. Acceptance of a person is an injustice by which a person is preferred to a person on account of an undue cause. Attend diligently, O penitential judge, to what is said to thee, Leviticus 19: You shall not do that which is unjust, nor shall you judge unjustly. Do not consider the person of the poor; nor honor the countenance of the mighty, lest namely thou decline from the way of justice on account of compassion for the poor, or on account of flattery of the mighty. Attend also to what is said to thee, Deuter. 16: You shall not accept person nor gifts, for gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the just. Nevertheless attend diligently, and consider that it was said universally to all confessors, Deuter. 1: Hear them, and judge what is just: whether he be a citizen or a stranger. There shall be no distinction of persons; you shall hear the small as the great; you shall not accept the person of anyone, for it is the judgment of God. Hear, I say, that is, attend diligently to the sins, examining the sins and their circumstances, and judge what is just, namely absolving the just, whether rich or poor, and condemning the impious, though they be also powerful and rich; nor shall you accept the person of anyone, unduly exasperating the poor, and flattering the rich and powerful. Do not, I say, accept a person, lest thou be struck by the prophetic malediction by which it is said, Isa. 5: Woe to you who justify the wicked for gifts, and take away the justice of the just from him. This is St. Bonaventure.

> MELIUS S. Bonav. in Confessionali, cap. 1. part. 6. cuius verba auferam: Studeat etiam Confessor cavere ab acceptione personarum, quod confessor in iudicio poenitentiae personam non accipiat, quae sic describitur a Magistris. Acceptio personae est iniustitia, qua praefertur persona personae, propter causam indebitam. Attende diligenter o iudex poenitentialis, quod tibi dicitur, Levitici 19. Non facies quod iniquum est, nec iniuste iudicabis. Non consideres personam pauperis; nec honores vultum potentis, ne videlicet declines a via iustitiae propter pauperis compassionem, vel propter potentis adulationem. Attende praeterea tibi dictum, Deuter. 16. Non accipies personam, nec munera, quia munera excaecant oculos sapientum, et mutant verba iustorum. Attende nihilominus diligenter, et considera universaliter omnibus confessoribus esse dictum, Deuter. 1. Audite illos, et quod iustum est iudicate: siue civis ille, siue peregrinus. Nulla erit distantia personarum, ita parvum audietis, ut magnum; non accipietis cuiusquam personam, quia Dei iudicium est. Audite inquam, idest, diligenter intendite peccata, et peccatorum circumstantias examinando, et quod iustum est iudicate, iustos videlicet, siue divites, siue pauperes absolvendo; et impios, quamvis etiam potentes, et divites, condemnando: nec accipietis personam cuiusquam, pauperes indebite exasperando, et divitibus, et potentibus adulando. Non inquam accipias personam, ne maledictione prophetica feriaris, qua dicitur Isa. 5. Vae qui iustificatis impium pro muneribus, et iustitiam iusti aufertis ab eo. Haec S. Bonaventura.

10 HENCE another question is born concerning Judges, whether, without the note of acceptance of persons, they can, through the intervention of gifts, judge for a side equally probable. We have examined this difficulty in tomo quarto, disp. 17. nu. 10., according to the decree of Alexander VII., who curbs the lust of opinions running riot too much, both in this and in other matters. It will not be tedious to treat of this question again in disp. on the Judge, quaest. 6.

> HINC enascitur alia quaestio de Iudicibus, an sine nota acceptionis personarum, possint munerum interventu iudicare pro parte aeque probabili: Hanc difficultatem excussimus tomo quarto, disp. 17. nu. 10. Iuxta decretum Alexandri VII. qui luxuriantium nimis opinionum libidinem tam in hac quam aliis in rebus coërcet. De hac iterum quaestione agere non pigebit disp. de Iudice, quaest. 6.

11 FOR there are not obscure authors, some of whom we have already cited, who so make the Judge the arbiter of their own will that, for whichever side he pleases, equally probable on both sides, he may judge, and, by the determination of his liberty rather in one part than in the other, can licitly accept gifts: and some defend this, as far as the law of nature goes; others too do not blush to proclaim that it is lawful by every law. But in the place already cited I shall say how greatly these outrage Justice, both on the side of the Judge, who is otherwise sufficiently compensated for the function of his office, and on the side of the litigants, each of whom, by an equal probability of law, demands rather an equal division of the dispute than that the whole be adjudged to one.

> SUNT enim non ignobiles authores, quorum quosdam iam retulimus, qui arbitrium suae voluntatis Iudicem ita faciunt, ut pro qua libest parte utrinque probabili iudicet, et pro suae libertatis determinatione potius in unam, quam in aliam partem, munera possit licite accipere: et hoc nonnulli tuentur, quantum est ex iure naturae; alii quoque omni iure id licere proclamare non erubescunt. Verum loco iam citato dicam quantum hi Iustitiam temerant, tam ex parte Iudicis, qui aliunde sat pro sui muneris functione recompensatur, quam ex parte litigantium, quorum uterque pari Iuris probabilitate aequam litis divisionem potius expostulat, quam ut uni tota adiudicetur.

Disputation XXVI: On Homicide

1 SINCE among the other goods life is most dear to each one, by its unjust removal one sins most gravely against one's neighbor; for it is like an annihilation of all the goods which one living possesses: wherefore by homicide all the rights by which we are bound to our neighbor are violated in every way; and this is done spiritually by hatred and detraction; corporally it is done by the tongue and by deed; the former precepts, counsels, or does not inhibit; the latter sometimes issues in homicide, by executing justice, by killing by accident, or by necessity of defense; and in this last way, the things to be observed being observed, homicide is free from fault: but if it be done by will, with the lust of vengeance alone ruling, one sins gravely, as will be seen presently.

> De Homicidio.
> CUM inter caetera bona, vita unicuique sit charissima, huius iniqua ablatione maxime in proximum delinquitur; est etenim veluti omnium bonorum, quibus vivens potitur, annihilatio: quare homicidio omnia iura, quibus Proximo, obstringimur, omnimode violantur; hoc autem fit spiritualiter odio, et detractione; corporaliter vero fit lingua et opere, prior praecipit, consulit, aut non inhibet; posterior autem in homicidium aliquando exit, Iustitiam exequendo, casu perimendo, vel necessitate defendendo; et hoc ultimo modo servatis servandis homicidium vacat culpa: verum si voluntate fiat; dominante tantum vindictae libidine, graviter peccatur uti mox videndum est.

Question I: What homicide is, and of how many kinds

1 HOMICIDE is thus defined by St. Bonaventure, p. 1. Centil. sect. 31: Homicide is the killing of a man, done by a man. This definition is followed by Ioannes de Anania in the rubric on homicide, num. 1. and others. It is called the killing of a man, to distinguish it from the slaying which is inflicted on brute animals. It is said to be done by a man, to distinguish that killing by which a man is killed by some brute animal. But this definition regards rather the force of the name (as Catterius saw, in the practice, tract. on homicide and assassination, at the beginning) than the essence of the sin, which Fagundez also notices on the fifth precept, chapter 1.

> Quid sit Homicidium, et quotuplex.
> HOMICIDIUM sic definitur a D. Bonaventura p. 1. Centil. sect. 31. Homicidium est hominis occisio, ab homine facta. Hanc definitionem sequuntur Ioannes de Anania in rubric. de homicidio, num. 1. et alii. Dicitur hominis occisio*, ad differentiam necis, quae infertur animalibus brutis. Dicitur* ab homine facta*, ad distinctionem illius occisionis, qua homo occiditur ab aliquo bruto animali. Respicit autem haec definitio magis vim nominis (ut vidit Catterius* in pract. tract. de homicidio, et assassinio, initio*) quam essentiam peccati, quod advertit etiam Fagundez* in quintum praeceptum, capite 1.

2 THEREFORE Catterius and the Jurists commonly, as cited by Prosper Farinacius, quaest. 119. Tom. 4., and the Theologians, as cited by Fagundez, loc. cit. from St. Bonaventure's sermon on the ten precepts, cap. 6., define it as prohibited in the 5th precept: It is the unjust killing of a man. Now homicide unjustly done is that which is done by private authority, without the moderation of blameless defense being observed; or by public authority, without due justice and the order of law being observed, as Fagundez observes from St. Bonav. loc. cit. and in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. lit. et in qq. Of both kinds we must treat.

IDEO Catterius, et Iurisperiti communiter apud Prosperum Farinacium quaest. 119. Tom. 4. et Theologi apud Fagundez loc. cit. ex D. Bonaventura sermone de decem praeceptis, cap. 6. definiunt, prout prohibetur in 5. praecepto: Est iniusta hominis occisio. Est autem homicidium iniuste factum illud, quod a privata authoritate fit, non servato moderamine inculpatae tutelae; vel a publica, non servata debita iustitia, et iuris ordine, ut observat Fagundez ex D. Bonau. loc. cit. et in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. lit. et in qq. De utraque autem agendum.

3 Homicide is divided in many ways. First into Spiritual and Corporal, by St. Bonav. in the places cited, and by other Doctors of both Laws; on which division Farinac. treats especially, at the place cited, from Jacobus Boulent. in the repertory of the capital law, §. Famos. num. 63. ff. de poenis.

MULTIS modis homicidium dividitur. Primo in Spirituale, et Corporale a D. Bonau. locis adductis, et ab aliis utriusque Iuris Doctoribus; de qua divisione agit praesertim Farinac. loco citato ex Iacobo Boulent. in repert. legis capital. §. Famos. num. 63. ff. de poenis.

4 SPIRITUAL homicide is called, first, that by which a detractor unjustly blackens reputation. For in law the detractor is called a homicide, cap. Homicidiorum, de poenit. dist. 2. Second, that by which one hates his neighbor, 1 John 3: He who hates his brother is a homicide. Third, that by which he persuades another to harm his neighbor, for in law both the persuader of evil and the one who holds another in hatred are called homicides, C. Noli putare, de poenit. dist. 1. C. Homicidium. Fourth, that by which each one strives to harm his neighbor in some way, C. Homicidium, de poenit. dist. 2. Fifth, that by which someone denies sustenance to his brother in extreme need, as we have in dist. 86. from Ambrose: Feed him dying of hunger; if you did not feed him, you killed him.

SPIRITUALE dicitur primo, quo detractor iniuste famam denigrat. Sic enim in Iure detractor dicitur homicida, cap. Homicidiorum, de poenit. dist. 2. Secundo illud, quo quis proximum suum odio habet, prima Ioan. 3. Qui odit fratrem suum, homicida est. Tertio illud, quo suadet alteri; ut proximo noceat, quia in iure etiam tam suasor mali, quam odio alterum habens homicidae appellantur, C. Noli putare de poenit. dist. 1. C. Homicidium. Quarto illud, quo quisque proximo suo aliquo modo nocere studet C. Homicidium, de poenit. dist. 2. Quinto illud, quo aliquis fratri suo extreme indigenti negat alimenta, ut habetur dist. 86. ex Ambrosio: Pasce fame morientem; si non pavisti, occidisti.

5 CORPORAL homicide, however, is that by which the body of a man is killed; but spiritual homicide is chiefly that by which one is led to the death of the soul through sin, as St. Bonav. notes in the Confessionale, cap. 2. particula 3.

HOMICIDIUM vero corporale est illud, quo corpus hominis occiditur; maxime vero homicidium spirituale est, quo quis inducitur ad mortem animae per peccatum, ut notat S. Bonau. in Confessionali, cap. 2. particula 3.

6 HOMICIDE, therefore, as it is defined by the Theologians, is a most grievous and atrocious sin, graver than theft and adultery. For the loss of homicide is irreparable, and by it we inflict on a man the greatest of all harms that we can inflict on him; as Socinus proves at large and learnedly, consil. 157. num. 8. lib. 2., with arguments from St. Bonaventure.

HOMICIDIUM igitur, ut a Theologis definitur, gravissimum, et atrox peccatum est, gravius, quam furtum, et adulterium. Est enim homicidii damnum irreparabile, et per illud inferimus homini maximum omnium nocumentum, quae illi inferre possumus; ut late, et docte probat Socinus consil. 157. num. 8. lib. 2. argumentis ex D. Bonaventura.

7 THE FIRST argument is: Graver are those sins by which harm is inflicted on the body than those by which harm is inflicted on a man's external goods and possessions; and thus for a single homicide the punishment of death is imposed; not so for a single theft, unless it be clothed with most grave circumstances, as the holy Doctor relates in the Confessionale.

> PRIMUM argumentum est. Graviora sunt peccata, quibus infertur nocumentum corpori, quam ea, quibus infertur nocumentum rebus hominis externis, et bonis illius, et ita pro unico homicidio imponitur poena mortis; non sic pro unico furto, nisi fuerit vestitum gravissimis circumstantiis, ut refert S. Doct. in Confessionali.

8 THE SECOND argument, because in the ten precepts of the Decalogue the precept forbidding homicide is placed before the precept prohibiting theft and adultery, as the holy Doctor argues in 3. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 2.

> SECUNDUM argumentum, quia in decem praeceptis Decalogi prius ponitur praeceptum vetans homicidium, quam praeceptum prohibens furtum, et adulterium, ut arguit S. Doct. in 3. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 2.

9 THE THIRD; because in the Decretals the Title of homicide is placed before the Title of adultery and theft.

> TERTIUM; quia in Decretalibus prius ponitur Titulus homicidii, quam Titulus adulterii, et furti.

10 THE FOURTH, because it is easier to dispense with a thief than with a voluntary homicide, as is clear from C. sicut dignum, on homicide, num. 2. fol. 315. Decian. in the tract on crimes l. 9. cap. 17. num. 18. Matfil. in l. 1. num. 3. ff. ad legem Cornel. de sicar. With Socinus, that homicide is graver than adultery, they prove from the text in C. si quid verius, dist. 30. quaest. 2. L. Quamvis and from the circumstances; as in adultery and notorious theft the contrary must be said, as Decius teaches, consil. 65. l. 1.

> QUARTUM, quia facilius dispensatur cum fure, quam cum homicida voluntario, ut patet ex C. sicut dignum, de homicidio, num. 2. fol. 315. Decian. in tract. crim l. 9. cap. 17. num. 18. Matfil. in l. 1. num. 3. ff. ad legem Cornel. de sicar. cum Socino, Grauius esse homicidium adulterio*, probant ex textu in* C. si quid verius, dist. 30. quaest. 2. L. Quamvis e circumstantiis, ut in adulterio, et furto famoso, contrarium dicendum sit, ut docet Decius consil. 65. l. 1.

11 BUT THE TRUE reason of the whole thesis is, because the harm inflicted by death is irreparable; but the harm from adultery and theft is per se repairable, since it concerns goods more extrinsic, as Fagundez says, cap. 1. num. 3., with St. Bonav.; and surely a man simply values life more than riches, fame, and honor, as the holy Doctor says in 3. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 1. in corpore; for it is against the very being of the individual, and against the more intrinsic good.

> VERA autem ratio totius assumpti est, quia damnum illatum per mortem est irreparabile; at damnum ex adulterio, et furto, est per se reparabile, cum sit circa bona magis extrinseca, ut ait Fagundez cap. 1. num. 3. cum S. Bonau. ac sane homo simpliciter pluria aestimat vitam, quam diuitias, famam, et honorem, ut ait S. Doctor in 3. dist. 37. art. 2. quaest. 1. in corpore; est enim contra ipsius esse individui, et contra bonum magis intrinsecum.

12 ALTHOUGH he adds there that fornication is against the due preservation of the species, still the harm inflicted on one's neighbor is less; nor is the damage to the species in one act of adultery so great as in homicide.

> QUAMVIS autem ibi addat, fornicationem esse contra debitam conservationem speciei, tamen damnum illatum proximo est minus; neque tanta est damnificatio speciei in una moechia, quantum est in homicidio.

13 HOMICIDE, says St. Bonav. above, with St. Augustine, epist. 54., is taken in a twofold way: for either it is from private authority or from public; and both, if done in an illicit manner, are prohibited,

Exodus 20. Deuter. 5. It will be illicit privately, if it be done without the necessity of blameless defense; but public, by a Judge or Prince, if someone is killed against justice. For although Princes are commanded to punish the wicked, even by death, as was said to Moses, Exodus 23: You shall not suffer the wizards to live; yet at the same time it is also commanded that they do not kill the innocent against justice, nor even the guilty in undue ways, as the holy Doctor teaches in 3. at the place cited.

> HOMICIDIUM, inquit D. Bonau. supra cum S. August. epist. 54. bipartite accipitur: Aut enim est ab authoritate privata, aut a publica; et utrumque, si illicito modo fiat, prohibetur Exodi 20. Deuter. 5. Erit autem illicitum privatim, si fiat absque necessitate inculpatae tutelae; publicum vero a Iudice, vel Principe, si contra iustitiam aliquis occidatur. Quamvis enim Principibus praecipiatur, ut scelestos puniant, etiam morte, sicut dictum est Moysi Exodi 23. Maleficos non patieris vivere; tamen simul etiam praecipitur ne contra iustitiam insontem, aut nec ipsum reum indebitis modis interficiant, ut docet S. Doct. in 3. loc. cit.

14 IT IS INDEED NECESSARY for the safety of the commonwealth that robbers, cutthroats, assassins, and traitors be punished; and this power, or this sword of justice, was given by God, as the Apostle says, Rom. 13: Let every soul, that is, every man, as St. Augustine expounds, tract. 105. on John, be subject to the higher powers. If you do evil, fear: for he bears not the sword without cause. For they bear it to repel the evils which run rampant through the world in the body of the commonwealth, as St. Thom. teaches, 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 1. For as a public member is cut off in the human body so that the safety of the whole body be consulted, so a noxious member of the commonwealth is deservedly removed from the midst, lest it corrupt the whole political body. But then a man is killed by a Judge not as a man, but as a criminal; and therefore out of hatred of malice and zeal for justice he is lawfully and deservedly put to death, as the holy Doctor sets forth in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. and in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. litt. and in the little work on the ten precepts, cap. 6., where he subdivides several other ways in which a man is killed privately, of which below.

> NECESSARIUM est sane saluti Reipublicae, ut latrones, sicarii, assassini, et proditores puniantur, et haec potestas, seu hic gladius iustitiae datus est a Deo, ut ait Apostolus Rom. 13. Omnis anima, hoc est, omnis homo, ut exponit S. August. tract. 105. in Ioan. potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit. Si malum feceris, time: non enim sine causa gladium portat. Portant enim ad referenda mala, quae grassantur per orbem in corpore Reipublicae, ut docet D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 1. Sicut enim membrum publicum praescinditur in corpore humano, ut saluti totius corporis consulatur; ita membrum Reipublicae noxium merito e medio tollitur, ne totum corpus politicum corrumpat. Tunc autem homo occiditur a Iudice, non ut homo, sed ut scelestus; et ideo odio malitiae, zeloque iustitiae, iure, ac merito perimitur, ut edisserit S. Doct. in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. et in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. litt. et opusculo de decem praeceptis, cap. 6. ubi plures alios modos subdiuidit, quibus homo privatim occiditur, de quibus infra.

15 From what has been said you have that not every killing of any living thing is forbidden, but only of men. Therefore it is lawful to cut plants and herbs, as is said Genesis 1: Behold I have given you every herb, and all trees, that they may be to you for food, and cap. 9: Every thing that moves and lives shall be food for you. And Aristotle acknowledged this too, lib. 1. Politics, cap. 5. and 6. Therefore St. Augustine, lib. 1. on the city of God, cap. 20: With most just ordination the Creator subjected both the life and the death of all living things to our uses. This is proved by the holy Doctor with very many passages of Scripture everywhere. Wherefore he deduces from the places alleged, with St. Thom. art. 1., whom others imitate, that the Manichaeans were senseless and foolish who cried out that by this precept it was forbidden to kill not only brutes but even plants. For all these things were made for the sake of man, for his use, as the Lord declares in the places alleged, and as our holy Doctors argue. Hence, after it was granted to men in Genesis 9. to kill animals, the prohibition of killing man is added, the reason of which the Lord gives: For man was made after the image of God. In what ways it is illicit, and in what ways lawful, to kill a man, I shall set forth below.

Ex dictis habes, non vetari omnem occisionem cuiuscumque viventis, sed solum hominum. Itaque licet secare plantas, et herbas, ut dicitur Genesi 1. Ecce dedi vobis omnem herbam, et universa ligna, ut sim vobis in escam, et cap. 9. Omne quod movetur, et vivit, erit vobis in cibum. Et hoc agnovit etiam Aristoteles lib. 1. Polit. cap. 5. et 6. Ideo S. August. lib. 1. de civit. cap. 20. Iustissima ordinatione Creatoris et vitam, et mortem omnium animantium nostris usibus subdidit. Id vero plurimis scripturis probatur a S. Doctore passim. Quare deducit allegatis locis cum D. Thom. art. 1. quos alii imitantur, insulsos, et stultos fuisse Manichaeos, qui hoc praecepto clamabant, prohiberi occidere ne dum bruta, sed etiam plantas. Sunt enim omnia haec facta propter hominem ad usum eius, ut protestatur Dominus allatis locis, et arguunt SS. Doctores nostri. Hinc concesso hominibus Genes. 9. occidere animalia, subditur prohibitio occidendi hominem, cuius rationem affert Dominus: Ad imaginem quippe Dei factus est homo. Quibus autem modis illicitum sit, et quibus licitum hominem occidere, infra edisseram.

Question II: On homicide of deliberate purpose, by ambush, and by treachery

1 A MAN is killed in a threefold way: by Accident, by Necessity, and by Will, as the holy Doctor notices, sermon 6. on the ten precepts: But in the first part of the Centil. sect. 31. he adds the Homicides of Justice; and since we treat of the sin of homicide, we must first treat of that which is more voluntary, such as those placed in the title, which are called qualified Homicides, each of which always has the punishment of death enjoined: l. 3. C. de Episcopali audientia, l. si servus, C. de his, qui ad Ecclesiam confugiunt, l. 3. §. of the Law Cornelia. And l. Qua caedem, ff. de sicariis, l. Poena, ff. on Parricide, §. Likewise the Law Cornelia, t. of the Instit. on public judgments.

De homicidio a proposito doloso, insidioso, et proditorio.

TRIPLICITER homo occiditur, Casu, Necessitate, et Voluntate, ut advertit S. Doct. serm. 6. de decem praeceptis: Sed prima parte Centil. sect. 31. Homicidia Iustitiae addit, et quia de peccato homicidii agimus, oportet prius de eo, quod est magis voluntarium disserere, qualia sunt posita in titulo, quae dicuntur Homicidia qualificata, quaeque semper habent poenam mortis iniunctam l. 3. C. de Episcopali audientia, l. si servus, C. de his, qui ad Ecclesiam confugiunt, l. 3. §. Legis Corneliae. Et l. Qua caedem, ff. de sicariis, l. Poena, ff. de Parricid. §. Item Lex Cornelia t. Instit. de publ. iud.

2 HOMICIDE from design (which we call, deliberated case) is that which is proved to have been premeditated for a long time. And although we cannot penetrate thoughts, yet we deduce it from the acts, for example, if he has elsewhere laid snares for him, if he has waited armed with assembled cutthroats in some place; if he has kept watch many days in some house,[1] etc.; if the slain man has been cruelly stabbed, cut down, mutilated in some members, for example the nose, ears, etc. It is said to be from design if, after 24 hours from the injury received, he kills, he being proved to have laid snares or plotted death, by calling together companions, sending out scouts, etc. All which things are entrusted to prudent judgment, as Julius Clarus warns, l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 8. Therefore one guilty of such must be punished with the ordinary punishment, which is death. So Salicet. l. 15. Qui cum telo, C. de sicariis. And l. 1. ff. extraord. Couar. on the Clementine, si furiosus, at the beginning of the second part; Ioan. Igneus l. 1. §. occisorum, num. 41. ff. ad Syll. Iul. Clar. §. Finali, 9. quaest. 1.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'attendetit multos dies in aliqua domo'; 'attendetit' is a corrupt verb form; rendered 'attendebat' (kept watch/lingered), the reading required by the insidiis context.

HOMICIDIUM a proposito (quod nos vocamus, caso pensato,) est quod longo ex tempore praemeditatum probatur. Quamvis autem cogitata non possimus penetrare, tamen ex actis eam deducimus, puta, si alias insidias extruxerit illi, si armatus cum adunatis sicariis expectaverit in aliquo loco; attendetit multos dies in aliqua domo, etc. si occisus fuerit crudeliter confossus, trucidatus membris aliquibus, puta naso, auribus, mutilatus, etc. Dicitur autem a proposito si post 24. horas ab accepta iniuria; quibus probatur insidias, vel necem molitus, advocando socios, mittendo exploratores, etc. interficiat. Quae omnia prudenti iudicio demandantur, ut monet Iulius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 8. Itaque huiusmodi poena ordinaria, quae est mortis, puniendus. Ita Salicet. l. 15. Qui cum telo, C. de sicariis. Et l. 1. ff. extraord. Couar. in Clementina, si furiosus, initio secunda partis Ioan. Igneus l. 1. §. occisorum, num. 41. ff. ad Syll. Iul. Clar. §. Finali, 9. quaest. 1.

3 TREACHEROUS homicide, which almost always carries with it guile and fraud, is when someone awaits a man in a hidden place and kills him as he comes, or treacherously, feignedly, and by simulation, having summoned him, kills him in the house in which he is. But it can be treacherous and yet not from design, if he be killed in the heat of anger within the day. He is punished with the punishment of death, as the alleged laws and the expositors of the law decree, with St. Bonav. in the Dieta, tit. 3. cap. 4.

HOMICIDIUM insidiosum, quod fere semper coniunctum habet dolum, et fraudem, est, cum aliquis occulto in loco aliquem expectat, illumque advenientem occidit, vel insidiose, ficte, et simulate in domum, in qua est, vocatum interficit. Potest autem esse insidiosum, et tamen non e proposito, si in calore irae occidatur intra diem. Is autem poena mortis punitur, ut statuunt allegatae leges, et Legis expositores cum D. Bonav. in Dieta, tit. 3. cap. 4.

4 TRAITOROUS homicide is that which is committed traitorously, no other injury intervening, no hatred, no quarrel preceding; as he who kills a companion of his journey, or, feigning himself a friend, kills. So St. Bonav. in the mirror of the soul, cap. 1. about the middle; Barthol. l. to be regarded, §. Delinquant, num. 1. ff. de poenis. Igneus on the Law, si certus, §. si unus ex dominis, ff. ad Syll. after number 44. Iul. Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 10. These are condemned to the punishment of death, as the Laws above alleged decree; and they are excluded from the immunity of the Church, just as those who killed treacherously were also excluded; and those who killed from design were excluded by the old law.

PRODITORIUM homicidium est illud, quod proditorie committitur, nulla alia intercedente iniuria, nullo odio, nulla rixa praecedente, ut qui socium itineris interficit, vel fingens se amicum, necat. Ita D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 1. circa medium Barthol. l. respiciendum, §. Delinquant, num. 1. ff. de poenis. Igneus in Lege, si certus, §. si unus ex dominis, ff. ad Syll. post numerum 44. Iul. Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 10. Hi poena mortis damnantur, ut decernunt Iura supra allegata; et ab immunitate Ecclesiae excluduntur, sicuti exclusi sunt etiam insidiatorie occidentes; et ex proposito interficientes excludebantur iure veteri.

5 The holy Doctor shows all this most beautifully in the Biblioth. loc. 19, cited from Scripture; for Joab the General, united to King David by blood and faithful, yet because he had killed Abner, 2 Reg. 3. from design and with guile, and Amasa, 2 Reg. c. 20. traitorously, kissing him, the dying holy King condemned him, and commanded Solomon his son: 3 Reg. 2: Thou also knowest what Joab the son of Saruiae did to me, what he did to the two generals of the army of Israel, Abner the son of Ner, and Amasa the son of Iether: whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace. Do thou therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his grey head go down to the grave in peace.

Id totum praeclare ostendit S. Doct. in Bibl. loc. 19 cit. ex Scriptura; nam Ioab Dux, Regi Dauidi sanguine coniunctus, atque fidelis, tamen quia occiderat Abner. 2. Reg. 3. ex proposito, et dolose; et Amasam 2. Reg. c. 20. proditorie, osculans eum, damnavit eum Sanctus Rex moriens, et praecepit Salomoni Filio: 3. Reg. 2. Tu quoque nosti, quae fecerit mihi Ioab filius Saruiae, quae fecit duobus principibus exercitus Israel, Abner filio Ner, et Amasae, filio Iether: quos occidit, et effudit sanguinem belli in pace. Facies ergo iuxta sapientiam tuam, et non deduces canitiem eius pacifice ad inferos.

6 STRAIGHTWAY Solomon the King, most wise and most just, commanded Banaiae to kill him. And because he fled to the Temple and laid hold of the horn of the Altar, and would not go out, Solomon commanded that he be killed in the Temple: whence he killed him.

STATIM vero Salomon Rex sapientissimus, et iustissimus, eum occidendum mandavit Banaiae. Et quia ille fugit ad Templum, et apprehendit cornu Altaris, et noluit exire; praecepit Salomon, ut occideretur in Templo: Unde interfecit eum.

7 From this it is deduced, with the holy Doctor, that such traitorous homicides are excluded from ecclesiastical immunity.

Ex quo deducitur cum S. Doctore, tales homicidas proditores exclusos esse ab Ecclesiastica immunitate.

8 And indeed Doctors taught commonly that homicides also from design are excluded: Suarez t. 1. l. 3. de relig. cap. 11. Nauar. summa cap. 25. Couar. l. 2. var. cap. 20. Julius Clar. l. 5. sent. §. finali, quaest. 30. Guido Papa decis. 121. Bouërius decis. 109. Alex. consil. 145. num. 46. Corrad. in pract. fol. 268. Blancus in pract. fol. 4. num. 26. Ordinatio Lusitana in nouis lib. 2. tit. 5. Gambacurt. l. 5. cap. 4. num. 19. Fagundez on the 5th Precept, l. 5. cap. 1.

Et quidem homicidas etiam a proposito exclusos docebant communiter Doctores, Suarez t. 1. l. 3. de de relig. cap. 11. Nauar. summa cap. 25. Couar. l. 2. var. cap. 20. Iulius Clar. l. 5. sent. §. finali, quaest. 30. Guido Papa decis. 121. Bouërius decis. 109. Alex. consil. 145. num. 46. Corrad. in pract. fol. 268. Blancus in pract. fol. 4. num. 26. Ordinatio Lusitana in nouis lib. 2. tit. 5. Gambacurt. l. 5. cap. 4. num. 19. Fagundez in 5. Praeceptum, l. 5. cap. 1.

9 Of homicides also from snares they assert that they are excluded: Julius Clarus, Suarez, Nauartus cited, Remigius on the immunity of the Church, fallentia 13. Fagundez loc. cit. num. 19.

De homicidiis etiam ex insidiis asserunt excludi Iulius Clarus, Suarez, Nauartus citati, Remigius de immunitate Ecclesiae, fallentia 13. Fagundez loc. cit. num. 19.

10 NOW, however, Gregory XIV. by his Constitution excludes from these only those who kill traitorously, correcting the common law, cap. 1. on Homicide. And thus Clement VIII. declared in a certain Brief to the Archbishop of Palermo, in the year 1597, on the 6th of February; which is found in Marcus Antonius Genuensis in praxi, cap. 76., as Diana relates, p. 1. Tract. on the immunity of the Church, resol. 1., where he shows that by that Bull Gregory revokes all the former privileges and all the customs, and he cites very many Doctors. See Riccius p. 5. collect. 1791. Peregrin. on Immunity, cap. 7. Bonacina Tract. on the Laws, disp. 3. quaest. 7. §. 6.

NUNC tamen Gregorius XIV. excludit sua Constitutione, ex his, solos proditorie occidentes, corrigens ius commune cap. 1. de Homicidio. Sic autem declaravit Clemens VIII. in quodam Breui, ad Archiepiscopum Panormit. anno 1597. die 6. Februarii; qui habetur apud Marcum Antonium Genuensem in praxi, cap. 76. ut refert Diana p. 1. Tract. de immunitate Ecclesiae, resol. 1. ubi ostendit Gregorium reuocare ea Bulla omnia priuilegia, et omnes consuetudines, et refert plurimos Doctores. Vide Riccium p. 5. collect. 1791. Peregrin. de Immunitate, cap. 7. Bonacinam Tract. de Legibus, disp. 3. quaest. 7. §. 6.

11 MOREOVER, that the one who kills traitorously is excluded was taught also by Iul. Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 10. Couar. l. 2. variarum, cap. 20. num. 7. Gomez cap. 10. on crimes; Remig. on the immunity of the Church fol. 225. Placa lib. 1. delict. cap. 21. Igneus on l. 1. si Dominus, num. 7. ff. ad Syll. Milleus in pract. crim. fol. 32. Fagundez num. 21.; and Covarruvias testifies that this is the custom of the whole world.

PORRO excludi proditorie occidentem, docuere etiam Iul. Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Homicidium, num. 10. Couar. l. 2. variarum, cap. 20. num. 7. Gomez cap. 10. de delictis Remig. de Immunitate Ecclesiae fol. 225. Placa lib. 1. delict. cap. 21. Igneus in l. 1. si Dominus, num. 7. ff. ad Syll. Milleus in pract. crim. fol. 32. Fagundez num. 21. et hanc esse consuetudinem totius orbis testatur Couar.

12 NOTE, however, that in St. Bonaventure Abner also was the traitor killed by Joab; for, although he had formerly been an enemy and had killed Asaëlem the brother of Joab, yet he had been reconciled, and he killed him under the appearance of friendship, or of reconciliation; which very many also think. Hence much more are kinsmen excluded.

ADVERTE tamen apud D. Bonaventuram proditorie esse occisum a Ioab etiam Abner; quia, licet fuisset olim inimicus, et occidisset Asaëlem fratrem Ioab; tamen reconciliatus est, et sub specie amicitiae, seu reconciliationis, eum occidit, quod idem sentiunt plurimi. Hinc multo magis assassini excluduntur.

13 NOTE also, with Diana resol. 5., that long after the Bull had been published, some, interpreting it otherwise, asserted the opposite of that sentence: but others wrote against it for this reason, as Fagundez and Portellus, because they dwell in Spain, where the Bull of Gregory was not received.

ADVERTE etiam cum Diana resol. 5. multo post Bullam editam, oppositum sententiae asseruisse ipsam aliter interpretantes: alios vero ideo scripsisse contra, ut Fagundez, et Portellum, quia in Hispania degere ubi Gregorii Bulla non est usa recepta.

14 AS FOR the intermediary of assassination, they teach that he enjoys ecclesiastical immunity: Antonius Novatius in summa Bullarum, tit. on the Immunity of the Church, num. 72., who cites the other Novarius Ronius and Gambacurtus, with whom Diana subscribes, p. 4. tract. on the immunity of the Church, resol. 109. and resol. 33., where he also relates that Antonius de Marinis in resol. quotidian. cap. 171., Gambacurtus on the immunity of the Church l. 5. cap. 34. num. 14., Masculus in his addition to Capyc. decis. 112. The reason is, because the Doctors, in C. pro humana, on homicide, in 6., state that the intermediary does not fall under the name of assassin; and that this was decided in the Sacred Consistory in the year 1615, Rovitus relates in pragm. 1. on assassination, num. 49. But in the Bull of Gregory XIV. only the assassins are excluded from immunity: therefore not the intermediaries.

QUOAD mediatorem assassinii, ipsum gaudere immunitate Ecclesiastica docent Antonius Novatius in summa Bullarum, tit. de Immunit. Ecclesiae, num. 72. qui citant alterum Novarium Ronium, et Gambacurtam, quibus subscribit Diana p. 4. tract. de Immun. Ecclesiae, resol. 109. et resol. 33. ubi refert etiam Antonium de Marinis in resol. quotidian. cap. 171. Gambacurtam de immunitate Ecclesiae l. 5. cap. 34. num. 14. Masculum in addit ad Capyc. decis. 112. Ratio est, quia Doctores in C. pro humana, de homicidio, in 6. afferunt, sub nomine assassinii non venire mediatorem, et sic fuisse decisum in Sacro Consist. anno 1615. refert Rovitus in pragm. 1. de assassinio, num. 49. in Bulla autem Gregorii XIV. excluduntur ab immunitate soli assassini: Ergo non mediatores.

15 WHETHER, however, one who kills an infidel traitorously enjoys immunity: Ambrosius on immunity, cap. 7. Bonacina on the decal. disp. 3. quaest. 7. p. 6. §. 3. num. 6. bring forward that he does, because the infidel does not seem to be our neighbor: But Gregory excludes only the one who kills his neighbor traitorously. Ambrosinus argues, moreover, because if an assassin [killing an infidel] enjoys it, much more the traitor, since assassination is graver than treachery.

> AN vero, quis, proditorie occidens infidelem, gaudeat immunitate, afferunt Ambrosius de immunitate, cap. 7. Bonacina in decal. disp. 3. quaest. 7. p. 6. §. 3. num. 6. quia non videtur noster proximus: At Gregorius excludit solum occidentem proditorie proximum. Arguit autem Ambrosin. quia si assassinus infidelem ea gaudet, multo magis proditor, cum maius sit assassinium proditione.

16 BUT assassins and those who command them are excluded from immunity, as Doctors commonly teach, cited by Fagundez on the 5th Precept of the decal. l. 5. cap. 1. n. 22. Now the assassins are a certain kind of men in Syria, subject to Christian lords, believing that they will be saved if they kill men at the command of their lords. So Suarez judges, T. 5. in 3. p. disp. 23. sect. 5. Couar. l. 2. var. cap. 20. num. 9. and others, cited by Fagundez num. 25.

> ASSASSINI autem, et mandantes excluduntur ab immunitate, ut communiter docent Doctores apud Fagundez in 5. Praeceptum decal. l. 5. cap. 1. n. 22. Sunt autem assassini quoddam genus hominum in Syria, subditi Christianis Dominis, credentes, se salvandos, si homines ex Dominorum suorum iussu occidant. Ita censent Suarez T. 5. in 3. p. disp. 23. sect. 5. Couar. l. 2. var. cap. 20. num. 9. et alii apud Fagundez num. 25.

17 BUT others say that the assassins are those who, lying in wait on the roads, kill men. But Julius Clarus, l. 5. sent. §. Assassini, and Bossius in the Counsel, on the command to homicide, num. 16., and others say less severely that these do not incur the punishments of assassins established in cap. 1. on homicide, in 6.

> ALII vero assassinos dicunt eos esse, qui, in viis insidiantes, homines interimunt. Minus vero severe Iulius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. Assassini, et Bossius in Consilio, de mandato ad homicidium, num. 16. et alii dicunt hos, assassinorum poenas, cap. 1. de homicid. in 6. statutas, non incurrere.

18 INDEED those who, lying in wait on the roads, kill men are truly assassins, and therefore are to be mulcted with their punishment, as St. Bonav. also seems to assert in the little work on the ten precepts, cap. 6., where he calls them robbers; for so they are called also in Italy. For these have their own Chiefs, whom they obey, after the manner of the Syrians. The authors of this opinion are Imola, and Geminianus on cap. 1. on homicide, in 6. Barthol. on l. Non solum, §. si mandatu, ff. de iniuriis. Salicetos on l. ea quidem, C. de accusat. and others, cited by Julius Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Assassini.

> PROFECTO illi, qui in viis insidiantes interimunt, sunt vere assassini, ideoque eorum poena mulctandi, ut videtur asserere etiam S. Bonav. in opusc. de decem praeceptis, cap. 6. ubi eos latrones appellat; sic enim etiam in Italia vocantur. Hi enim habent suos Duces, quibus obediunt, ad modum Syrorum. Authores huius sententiae sunt Imola, et Geminianus in cap. 1. de homicid. in 6. Barthol. in l. Non solum, §. si mandatu, ff. de iniuriis. Salicetos in l. ea quidem, C. de accusat. et alii apud Iulium Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Assassini.

19 YOU WILL SAY that in cap. 1. on homicide, in 6., the punishment of death is established only for those who command the assassins, because the assassins are infidels, outside the law of the Church.

> DICES in cap. 1. de homicid. in 6. statuitur poena mortis solis mandantibus assassinos, eo quod assassini sint infideles, extra ius Ecclesiae.

20 Fagundez ANSWERS, num. 25., that it was enough for the Pontiff to impose the punishment on those who command; for if these did not command, neither would the assassins go out to homicides.

RESPONDET Fagundez num. 25. satis fuisse Pontifici, poenam mandantibus imponere; nam si hi non mandarent, neque assassini irent ad homicidia.

21 I SAY therefore that excommunication is imposed only on those who command, inasmuch as they are Christians; not on the Syrian assassins, infidels; but the punishment of death is understood, from all the laws, to be common to these and to those.

DICO igitur, mandantibus solis, utpote Christianis, imponi excommunicationem; non assassinis Syris infidelibus; at poena capitis intelligitur, ex omnibus legibus, his et illis communis.

22 BUT that those who travel on the roads, whom we call assassins, are robbers, the holy Doctor shows on those words of Luke, 10: And he fell among robbers, which he proves also by Jeremiah 3: On the ways you sat, waiting for them, like a robber in the wilderness.

EOS vero, qui in viis pergunt, quos vocamus assassinos, esse latrones ostendit S. Doct. ad ea verba Lucae, 10. Et incidit in Latrones*, quod probat illo etiam Hier. 3.* In viis sedebas, expectans eos, quasi latro in solitudine.

23 Of these it is said, Proverbs 1: Their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood. He intimates the same on cap. 19 of Luke, on those words: You have made it a den of robbers.

DE his ait dici, Prouerb. 1. Pedes illorum ad malum currunt, et festinant, ut effundant sanguinem. Idem innuit ad cap. 19. Lucae ad ea verba: Fecistis eam speluncam latronum.

Question III: Whether one who commands a homicide is to be burdened with the same guilt and punishment as the one who carries it out

1 THE FIRST opinion is that the punishment is not the same for both, just as neither is the guilt. Thus many, cited by Julius Clarus, book 5 of his Sentences, §. final, question 89.

An Mandans, eadem culpa, et poena cum Mandatario gravandus sit.

PRIMA opinio est, non esse eandem utriusque poenam, sicuti nec culpam. Ita multi apud Iulium Clarum l. 5. sent. §. finali, quaest. 89.

2 THE SECOND opinion is assertive. Thus D. Bonaventure in the Bibliotheca pauperum, cap. 85, which he proves from the Scriptures, which impute to the one commanding that he killed, and that he is to be punished with the murderer's penalty. He is followed by Fatinacius t. 4. question 134. on consultations, cap. 2. number 93. Bartholomew on the book alone, ff. de iniuriis. And on the law Caetero, ff. de poenis, the Abbot on the chapter Nihil, number 9. on election. Jason on the authentic quaest. act. number 17. C. de Sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, Salzedo cap. 67. number 6. Curtius Junior consil. 237. Corra on the word, mandans homicid. Carretto in practice, fol. 331. after number 113. Julius Clarus §. final, question 89. Decius on l. 15. damnum, ff. de reg. iuris. The Abbot on C. Licet, number 3. on tithes. And C. Qui facit, de reg. iuris, l. 6.

SECUNDA sententia est assertiva. Ita D. Bonav. in Bibl. pauperum, cap. 85. quod probat e Scripturis, adscribentibus mandanti, quod occiderit, et sit poena occisoris puniendus. Eum sequuntur Fatinacius t. 4. quaest. 134. de consult. cap. 2. num. 93. Barthol. in l. solum, ff. de iniuriis. Et in l. Caetero, ff. de poenis, Abbas in cap. Nihil, num. 9. de elect. Iason in authent. quas act. num. 17. C. de Sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, Salzedo cap. 67. num. 6. Curtius Iunior consil. 237. Corra in verbo, mandans homicid. Carret. in pract. fol. 331. post numerum 113. Iulius Clar. §. finali, quaest. 89. Decius in l. 15. damnum, ff. de reg. iuris. Abbas in C. Licet, num. 3. de decimis. Et C. Qui facit, de reg. iuris, l. 6.

3 I ADMIT however, that as to punishments the tenor of the laws must be observed, which often decree them against the one commanded, and often even against the one commanding. Thus many distinguish, cited by Fagundez on the 5th precept, book 5. cap. 1., with whom he himself agrees, positing by this distinction a middle opinion.

> ADMITTO tamen, quod poenas observandum tenorem legum, quae saepe in mandatarium decernunt, saepe etiam in mandantem. Sic distinguunt multi apud Fagundez in 5. praeceptum, l. 5. cap. 1. quibus ipse subscribit, statuens hac distinctione mediam sententiam.

4 I ASSERT, with D. Bonaventure, that the one commanding a killing is to be mulcted with the same punishment as the one who killed.

> ASSERO cum D. Bonaventura, mandantem occidere, eadem cum occisore poena mulctandum.

5 IT IS PROVED by him from 1 Kings 22, where Saul commanded Doeg the Edomite to kill Abimelech, and the others to destroy unto extermination the inhabitants of Nobe. And Nobe, the city of the Priests, he smote with the edge of the sword, both men and women, children and sucklings: and he smote it by command. [1 Reg. 22:19]

> PROBATUR ab ipso ex 1. Reg. 22. ubi Saül praecepit Doëgo Idumaeo, ut interficeret Abimelech, et aliis, ut delerent ad internecionem habitatores Nobe. Nobe autem, civitatem Sacerdotum, percussit in ore gladii, viros, et mulieres, et parvulos, et lactentes: Et mandans percussit.

6 SO Judges 9: the men of Sichem killed the seventy sons of Prince Gedeon, as Joathan cried out, their surviving brother: Hear me, ye men of Sichem: You have risen up against my father's house, and have killed his sons, seventy men, upon one stone. And yet it is said in the same place: Abimelech came into his father's house, and killed there his brothers, seventy men upon a stone. Thus the one who commands alone is here named the homicide, as the Holy Doctor notes.

> SIC Iudicum 9. viri Sichem occiderunt septuaginta filios Principis Gedeonis, ut clamabat Ioathan, eorum germanus superstes: Audite me viri Sichem: Surrexistis contra domum patris mei, et interfecistis filios eius septuaginta viros super unum lapidem. Et tamen ibidem dicitur: Venit Abimelech in domum patris sui, et occidit ibi fratres suos, 70. viros super lapidem. Ita solus mandans nominatur homicida hic, ut notat S. Doctor.

7 THE SAME appears in 2 Kings 12, where David caused Urias to be killed, and yet he is said to have committed the murder. Thus says Nathan: Thou hast slain Urias the Hethite with the sword of the children of Ammon.

> IDEM apparet 2. Reg. 12. ubi David fecit, ut occideretur Urias, et tamen ille dicitur homicidium exequutus. Sic ait Nathan: Uriam Hethaeum occidisti gladio filiorum Ammon.

8 MANY other examples are adduced by the Holy Doctor in that place.

> PLURIMA alia exempla recenset S. Doctor eo loco.

9 The reason is intimated by the Holy Doctor in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 3. and 4., because sins which are placed against justice in inflicting harm have their malice, gravity, and demerit in this: that harm is brought in by the one commanding, who also introduces the executor; and he who does through another is held to do through himself, according to the rule of Law in 6.

Ratio innuitur a S. Doctore in speculo animae, cap. 3. et 4. quia peccata, quae contra iustitiam in damno inferendo posita sunt, in hoc habent suam malitiam, gravitatem, atque demeritum: At damnificatio infertur a praecipiente, qui inducit etiam executorem, et per alium faciens, per se ipsum facere censetur, iuxta regulam Iuris in 6.

10 THEN acting and consenting are punished with equal penalty, in cap. 1. where the Gloss, v. pari poena, de officio Iudicis delegati, and there commonly the Doctors. And in C. Notum, at the end, dist. 2. question 1. and C. Facientis, at the end, dist. 86. and cap. 1. de homicid. in 6.

DEINDE agentes, et consentientes pari sunt poena puniendi in cap. 1. ubi Glossa v. pari poena, de officio Iudicis delegati, et ibi communiter Doctores. Et in C. Notum, in fine, dist. 2. quaest. 1. et C. Facientis, in fine, dist. 86. et cap. 1. de homicid. in 6.

11 WHEREFORE such a one commanding merits the punishment of death according to the rule of law, which holds that they make one cause with the actors or executors. And the Holy Doctor takes up this argument cap. 3. of the mirror of the soul. And he confirms it from cap. 1. of Romans, where D. Paul enumerates nearly all crimes; he especially adds homicides, full (he says) of murder: Who, when they had known the justice of God, did not understand; because they who do such things are worthy of death; and not only they that do them, but they also that consent to them that do them. And he speaks of eternal punishments, as Fagundez also saw, number 27; thus the Jurisperiti hold commonly, cited by Fagundez numbers 21. and 30. l. ad Legem, si quis non dicam, C. de Episcopo.

QUARE talis mandans poenam mortis meretur iuxta reg. iuris, quae unam faciunt causam cum agentibus, seu exequentibus. Hoc autem argumentum assumit S. Doct. cap. 3. speculi animae. Idque confirmat ex cap. 1. ad Rom. ubi D. Paulus recenset crimina fere omnia ; praecipue apponit homicidas, plenos (ait) homicidio : Qui cum iustitiam Dei cognovissent, non intellexerunt ; quoniam, qui talia agunt, digni sunt morte, et non solum, qui ea faciunt, sed etiam qui consentiunt facientibus. Loquitur autem de poenis aeternis, ut vidit etiam Fagundez num. 27. sic tenent communiter Iurisperiti apud Fagundez num. 21. et 30. l. ad Legem, si quis non dicam, C. de Episcopo.

12 IT IS CERTAIN also that, the effect having followed, the one commanding is irregular, as the Holy Doctor shows in the Confessionale, cap. 5. part 40. who has given counsel, or command, or study, that a man be killed. Extra C. significasti enim, dist. 50. si quis viduam, de poenit. dist. 1. Periculose.

CERTUM est etiam, mandantem, effectu secuto, esse irregularem, ut ostendit S. Doct. in Confessionali, cap. 5. partic. 40. qui consilium, vel mandatum, vel studium dederit, ut homo occidatur. Extra C. significasti enim, dist. 50. si quis viduam, de poenit. dist. 1. Periculose.

13 INDEED, if the one commanded is killed by him against whom he came to kill, the one commanding is guilty and incurs irregularity, as the Doctors teach commonly, Sayrus de censuris, l. 7. cap. 2. num. 12. Reginaldus t. 1. l. 30. tract. 2. cap. 11. sect. 1. num. 326. Tabiena v. irregularitas, 2. §. 12. and others cited by Diana.

IMO si mandatus occidatur ab eo, ad quem occidendum venerat, reus est mandans, et irregularitatem subit, ut docent communiter Doctores, Sayrus de censur. l. 7. cap. 2. num. 12. Reginaldus t. 1. l. 30. tract. 2. cap. 11. sect. 1. num. 326. Tabiena v. irregularitas, 2. §. 12. et alii apud Dianam.

14 THE OPPOSITE, however, as to this point, they hold probable: Diana Tract. 1. Miscell. resol. 17. Bonacina de censuris, disp. 7. quaest. 4. p. 7. num. 17. Henriquez l. 14. cap. 16. Avila de censuris, p. 7. disp. 6.

sect. 2. dub. 5. Fagundez on the 5th Precept of the decalogue, book 5. cap. 5. num. 30., who nevertheless says the former is more probable.

> OPPOSITUM tamen quoad hoc probabile censent Diana Tract. 1. Miscell. resol. 17. Bonacina de censuris, disp. 7. quaest. 4. p. 7. num. 17. Henriquez l. 14. cap. 16. Avila de censuris, p. 7. disp. 6. sect. 2. dub. 5. Fagundez in 5. Praeceptum decal. lib. 5. cap. 5. num. 30. qui tamen priorem ait esse probabiliorem.

15 HE ADMONISHES, however, with Diana, that even a Bishop can dispense in this case, because it is from casual homicide, according to the Council of Trent session 14. de reformatione, cap. 7.

> ADMONET tamen cum Diana posse in hac dispensare etiam Episcopum, quia est ex homicidio casuali, iuxta Concilium Trident. sess. 14. de reformat. cap. 7.

Question IV: Whether an attempted homicide, and other attempted crimes, are to be punished with the same penalty as the crime committed

1 IT IS PRESUPPOSED by the Holy Doctor, cap. 5. of the Confessionale, part 38., that there are some sins whose attempt is not to be punished as if the effect had followed, and he derives it from l. 1. ubi Doctores, ff. de extraord. criminibus.

> An conatus homicidii, et aliorum, eadem poena cum delicto patrato, sit puniendus.
> SUPPONIT S. Doct. cap. 5. Confessionalis, particula 38. aliqua esse peccata, quorum conatus non est ita puniendus, ac si effectus secutus fuisset, et deducitur ex l. 1. ubi Doctores, ff. de extraord. criminibus.

2 AS TO the more atrocious crimes, it is the opinion of many that the attempt and the effect are to be punished with the same penalty: Thus the Jurisperiti commonly, l. si quis alicui, C. ad l. Iulia Maiest. Felinus on cap. 1. de off. deleg. Covarruvias Clem. si furiosus, fol. 276. Boërius de sedit. praesupp. 7. num. 42. Igneus l. 1. §. si occisor num. 41. ff. ad Syll. See Fagundez l. 5. cap. 1. num. 43.

> QUOAD atrociora, est opinio multorum, eadem poena puniendum conatum et effectum : Ita communiter Iurisperiti l. si quis alicui, C. ad l. Iulia Maiest. Felin. in cap. 1. de off. deleg. Couar. Clem. si furiosus, fol. 276. Boër. de sedit. praesupp. 7. num. 42. Igneus l. 1. §. si occisor num. 41. ff. ad Syll. Vide Fagundez l. 5. cap. 1. num. 43.

3 The second opinion is that this ought to be done by law; but that by the custom of the whole world one does not proceed so severely: Thus very many teach, cited by Fagundez: Afflictus 3. p. rubr. 24. the Speculator in tit. de accusat. §. 1. Alexander consil. 15. and 140. Corsetus in the repertory of the Abbot, word affectus, Jason on l. 1. §. final, ff. quod quisque iuris. Boërius decis. 316. Carretto in practice, fol. 186. Baldus consil. 361. Angelus l. 1. §. Final, ff. quod quisque iuris, and consil. 143. where he says this custom is received throughout the whole world. Maranta in the speculum, fol. 26. Fulgosius consil. 149. Julius Clarus §. Final, question 91. Bertrandus consil. 228.

> Secunda opinio est, de iure ita fieri debere ; de consuetudine autem totius orbis, non ita severe procedi : Ita docent plurimi apud Fagundez : Afflictus 3. p. rubr. 24. Speculator in tit. de accusat. §. 1. Alexander consil. 15. et 140. Corsetus in repertorio Abbatis, verbo affectus, Iaso in l. 1. §. finali, ff. quod quisque iuris. Boër. decis. 316. Carret. in pract. fol. 186. Baldus consil. 361. Angelus l. 1. §. Finali, ff. quod quisque iuris, et consil. 143. ubi ait, hanc consuetudinem esse toto orbe receptam. Maranta in speculo, fol. 26. Fulgosius consil. 149. Iulius Clarus §. Finali, quaest. 91. Bertrandus consil. 228.

4 THE SERAPHIC DOCTOR, cap. 5. of the Confessionale, part 38., says there are other cases in which one is bound by guilt of blood, even if he does not kill: namely one who has done something to a man or woman, or given them something to drink, so that they cannot generate, or conceive, or the offspring be born.

> SERAPHICUS cap. 5. Confessionalis, particula 38. ait, sunt alii casus, in quibus tenetur reatu sanguinis, licet non occidat, utpote qui viro, vel mulieri aliquid fecerit, vel ad potandum dederit, ut non possit generare, vel concipere, vel nasci soboles.

5 THOSE indeed giving poisons to kill one who drinks, or the offspring, are punished with the penalty of death, l. 1. and 3. at the beginning, ff. de sicariis si mors sequatur; but the effect not having followed, the Doctors commonly establish an extraordinary, discretionary penalty. Thus Carrerius in practice, fol. 281. Conradus practice, fol. 338. Julius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. Homicid. num. 13. Fagundez num. 45., who conclude that customs and the laws of one's country are to be kept in these cases.

> VENENA sane dantes ad occidendum bibentem, vel sobolem, puniuntur poena mortis l. 1. et 3. initio, ff. de sicar. si mors sequatur ; non secuto vero effectu, communiter Doctores poenam extraordinariam arbitrariam statuunt. Ita Carrer. in pract. fol. 281. Conrad. pract. fol. 338. Iulius Clar. l. 5. sent. §. Homicid. num. 13. Fagundez num. 45. qui concludunt servandas consuetudines, et leges patrias in his casibus.

Question V: What are the punishments of voluntary homicide

1 ATROCIOUS is the crime of parricide, which among the Romans, l. poenis ff. ad l. Pompeiam de parricid., was punished with such a penalty, as the Holy Doctor relates, cap. 3. of the Confessionale, part 17. Parricides, well scourged with bloody rods, were sewn into a fresh hide together with a dog, a viper, a cock, and a monkey, and thrown into the sea or into a river, if these were near; if far off, they were exposed to wild beasts. Parricide, however, is committed only against a father, mother, grandfather, or grandmother, nor does the Holy Doctor will anything else. Whence the title, which is De his qui filios occidunt, includes rather the killers of a father; for the killers of sons are also called parricides; yet not in the strict sense, but of Fillicide. Whence the Egyptians, having transfixed the parricide with sharp reeds and penetrated him with the tiniest wounds, rolled him over thorns, and finally, fire applied, burned him in the thickets, the people looking on; the filicide, bound to a stake, they forced for three days to gaze upon his son's corpse before him. These indeed most unspeakable crimes are so called by Azorius in summa, Menochius de arbitr. qq. l. 2. case 356.

> ATROX flagitium est parricidium, quod apud Romanos l. poenis ff. ad l. Pompeiam de parricid. tali poena puniebatur, ut refert S. Doct. cap. 3. Confessionalis, particula 17. Parricidas sanguineis virgis optime verberatos recenti corio insutos cum cane, vipera, gallo, et simia in mare, vel in flumine proiiciebant, si haec essent vicina ; si vero remota, bestiis subiiciebantur. Parricidium autem in solum patrem, matrem, avum, vel aviam fit, neque aliud vult S. Doctor. Unde titulus, qui est De his qui filios occidunt, includit magis occisores patris ; nam parricidiae dicuntur etiam occisores filiorum ; tamen in rigore non sunt ; sed Fillicidii. Unde AEgyptii, qui parricidam calamis acutis transfixum, et vulneribus minutissimis penetratum super spinas volutabant, ac tandem igne applicito in dumetis comburebant, populo spectante ; Filicidam, stipiti alligatum, cogebant tres dies praesens filii cadaver inspicere. Haec sane infandissima scelera vocat Azorius in summa, Menoch. de arbitr. qq. l. 2. casu 356.

2 At this time those horrible punishments have been changed into the ultimate penalty, with harsher discretionary punishments added at the judge's discretion. Thus the Doctors observe, cited by Fagundez.

Hoc tempore poenae ille horribiles, ultimo supplicio mutatae sunt, additis arbitariis severioribus, arbitrio Iudicis. Ita observant DD. apud Fagundez.

3 AS TO the execrable homicides indeed of the Person of the Supreme Pontiff, the Most Eminent Cardinals, and Bishops, I shall defer to 3. p. Tract. de Censuris.

QUOAD homicidia vero execranda Personarum Summi Pontificis, Eminentiss. Cardinalium, et Episcoporum, differam 3. p. Tract. de Censuris.

4 THE ORDINARY punishments of Homicide established by law are enumerated by D. Bonaventure in the Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 4. where he says: Threefold is the punishment of homicides, namely exile, the gibbet, and the impediment of irregularity. For homicides go into exile; but when they can be caught, they are hanged.

ORDINARII Homicidii poenas, iure statutas, recenset D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 4. ubi ait Triplex est homicidarum poena, scilicet exilium, patibulum, et irregularitatis impedimentum. Homicidae enim exulant ; quando autem possunt capi, suspenduntur.

5 THEREFORE in the civil law the punishment fixed in advance for a homicide is death. It is clear from l. 3. §. Patiatur, C. de Episcop. audientia. And l. Cornelia, de public. praedic. And l. poenis. §. Qui alias personas, ff. de parricid. But notorious brigands it kills by hanging, l. capita, §. Famosos, ff. de poenis.

ITAQUE in iure civili poena homicidae praefixa, est mors. Patet ex l. 3. §. Patiatur, C. de Episcop. audientia. Et l. Cornelia, de public. praedic. Et l. poenis. §. Qui alias personas, ff. de parricid. Famosos vero latrones suspendio enecat l. capita, §. Famosos, ff. de poenis.

6 THE SAME the Holy Doctor shows in the Bibliotheca pauperum, cap. 85. and on Luke 15, from the Divine law, Genesis 9: Whosoever shall shed man's blood, his blood shall be shed. And cap. 4. Cain is mulcted by God with punishments graver than death, even though written Laws against homicides did not yet exist.

IDIPSUM ostendit S. Doctor in Bibliot. pauperum, cap. 85. et ad 15. Lucae, ex iure Divino, Genes. 9. Quicumque effuderit humanum sanguinem, effundetur sanguis illius. Et cap. 4. Caïn poenis morte gravioribus mulctatur a Deo, etiamsi non adhuc Leges scriptae contra homicidas extarent.

7 AND Genesis 27. Rebecca pronounced the sentence of death against her son Esau, if he should kill Jacob, as already decreed by God: I shall be bereaved of both my sons, because a homicide (says the Holy Doctor) ought to be reckoned as one already slain; that he might show this punishment of death to be so just that not even the chief men are exempted from it, as Julius Clarus warns l. 5. sent. §. de homicidio, num. 28. Covarruvias l. 2. variar. cap. 9. Angelus on Law 3. §. Legis, ff. ad Legem Corneliam de sicaris. Afflictus p. 1. Constitution. regn. rubr. 13. Ludovicus of Lucca decis. 62. Therefore also Christ decrees Matthew 26.: All who take the sword shall perish with the sword, as the Holy Doctor observes sermon 6. on the ten commandments, and with him Fagundez l. 5. c. first, num. 6. And Apoc. 13. He that shall kill by the sword must be killed by the sword. Levit. 24. Whosoever shall strike and kill a man, shall die the death. And soon after: If anyone kill his neighbor by craft, thou shalt pluck him from my altar, that he may die. Therefore the Holy Doctor observes in the Bibliotheca, loc. cit. that Joab, the commander of the armies, otherwise faithful and joined to Solomon by blood, on account of homicide, by the decree of the holy King David, was punished with death by Solomon, as I said above, who commanded him to be killed even beside the altar, though unwilling to be dragged from it, that he might show that not even the chief men, illustrious in nobility, are to be spared. Therefore Christ threatens Princes with ruins and slaughters, Luke 11. That all the just blood may come upon you, as the Holy Doctor discourses on Luke 11.

> ET Genes. 27. Rebecca protulit sententiam mortis contra filium Esau, si occidisset Iacobum, quasi iam a Deo statutam : Utroque filio orbabor quia homicida (ait S. Doctor) debet reputari tanquam occisus ; ut ostenderet, hanc poenam mortis adeo iustam esse, ut neque primores ab ea eximantur, ut monent Iulius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. de homicidio, num. 28. Couar. l. 2. variar. cap. 9. Angelus in Lege 3. §. Legis, ff. ad Legem Corneliam de sicar. Afflictus p. 1. Constitution. regn. rubr. 13. Ludovicus Lucenensis decis. 62. Ideo etiam Christus Matth. 26. decernit : Omnis, qui gladio percusserit, gladio peribit, ut obseruat S. Doct. serm. 6. de decem praeceptis, et cum eo Fagundez l. 5. c. primo, num. 6. et Apoc. 13. Omnis qui gladio occiderit, oportet gladio occidi. Leuit. 24. Omnis, qui percusserit, et occiderit hominem, morte moriatur. Et mox: Si quis per industriam occiderit proximum suum, ab altari meo euellas eum, ut moriatur. Ideo obseruat S. Doct. in Bibliot. loc. cit. Ioab Ducem exercituum, alioqui fidelem, et sanguine iunctum Salomoni, fuisse ob homicidium, ex decreto sancti Regis Dauidis, morte punitum a Salomone, ut supra dixi, qui eum, etiam nolentem ab altari abstrahi, iuxta altare occidi iussit, ut ostenderet, neque primoribus, nobilitate praeclaris, parcendum. Ideo Principibus minatur Christus ruinas, et strages, Lucae 11. Ut veniat super vos omnis sanguis iustus, ut disserit S. Doctor ad Lucae 11.

[8] Nor do l. 1. ff. ad legem Corneliam de sicaris. and l. 3. §. Legis Cornel. stand in the way, in which nobles for homicide are condemned not to the punishment of death, but to deportation into exile and the proscription of goods. And thus assert Salicetus on l. Is qui cum telo, col. Final, Angelus consil. 14. Montaleone in his practice, fol. 210. num. 535.

> Nec obstat l. 1. ff. ad legem Corneliam de sicar. et l. 3. §. Legis Cornel. quibus nobiles ob homicidium, non poena mortis, sed deportationis in exilium, et bonorum proscriptionis poena damnantur. Ideoque ita asserunt Salicetus in l. Is qui cum telo, col. Finali, Angel. consil. 14. Montaleon in sua pract. fol. 210. num. 535.

[9] For I confess that by the ancient law of the Digest this is true: It is nevertheless not true according to the new Law of the younger Code. For the Law of the Digests has gone into disuse. Wherefore the punishment of death is owed to them also indispensably, as Afflictus warns loc. cit. Placa l. 1. delic. cap. 10. Fagundez num. 7. Indeed, the ancient Law has not been cast down, but rather, I would say, restored, which, as I showed from the divine law, had decreed death.

> Fateor enim iure antiquo Digesti id verum esse: Non est tamen verum, iuxta nouum Ius Codicis iunioris. Abiit enim Ius Digestorum in desuetudinem. Quare poena mortis iis etiam debetur indispensabiliter, ut admonent Afflict. loc. cit. Placa l. 1. delic. cap. 10. Fagundez num. 7. Imo non Ius antiquum deiectum est, sed potius dixero restitutum, quod, ut ostendi e diuina lege, mortem decreuerat.

[10] And so, from the common mouth of all the Doctors, the Punishment of death for a homicide is just, as Fagundez says, enumerating them num. 6.

> Itaque ex ore communi Doctorum omnium, Poena mortis in homicidam est iusta, ut ait Fagundez, illos recensens num. 6.

[11] As to the Ecclesiastical punishments established both for Clerics and for Laymen.

> Quoad poenas Ecclesiasticas tam in Clericos, quam in Laicos statutas.

[12] First indeed, as the Holy Doctor warns, in the Confessionale, cap. 3. num. 12., a Cleric who is a homicide is by canonical law deposed in perpetuity dist. 50. by the decree of John VIII. cap. miror, and is thrust into a monastery for seven years, or for five, not only if he commits it himself, but even if he commands it, counsels it, urges it, or assists it, C. sicut digni, § Clericos, extra de homicid. and there the Gloss, Bernardus Diaz in practice, cap 94. Placa in epist. delict. l. 1. cap. 11. Farinacius t. 4. quaest. 119. de homicid. tit. 14. num. 47. fol. 110. and others.

> Primo quidem, ut monet S. Doct. in Confessionali, cap. 3. num. 12. Clericus homicida iure canonico perpetuo deponitur dist. 50. ex decreto Ioan. VIII. cap. miror, et in monasterium ad septennium, vel ad quinquennium detruditur, non solum, si illud ipse committat, sed etiam si mandet, consiliet, suadeat, aut illi assistat C. sicut digni, § Clericos, extra de homicid. et ibi Glossa, Bernardus Diaz in pract. cap 94. Placa in epist. delict. l. 1. cap. 11. Farinac. t. 4. quaest. 119. de homicid. tit. 14. num. 47. fol. 110. et alii.

13 The reason of D. Bonaventure is found in the mirror of the soul, cap. 3. and in the other places related above in the questions; for homicide is committed not only by the hands, but also by deed, counsel, command, urging: Therefore all, since they are guilty of the same crime, as the Apostle says, Rom. 1., ought to be punished in the same manner.

> Ratio D. Bonau. habetur speculo animae, cap. 3. et aliis locis, relatis supra quaestionibus; non enim solum manibus committitur homicidium, sed etiam facto, consilio, mandato, suasu: Ergo omnes cum sint rei eiusdem delicti, ut ait Apostolus Rom. 1. debent eodem modo puniri.

14 Wherein note that, besides the perpetual deposition of the Cleric, he himself is thrust into prison, because in those cases in which the civil laws impose the punishment of death, the canonical laws, which do not inflict the punishment of blood, in place of death bring in the punishment of prison, or confinement in a monastery, for seven years, or five, or in perpetuity, according to the circumstances of the crime and the proof of it, as is the text in C. Nouimus, de verb. signif. and C. penult. toward the end, de haeret. and C. Quamvis, de poenit. in 6.

> Ubi aduerte, praeter depositionem Clerici perpetuam, ipsum trudi in carcerem, quia in iis casibus, in quibus iura ciuilia poenam mortis imponunt, iura canonica, quae poenam sanguinis non infligunt, loco mortis, poenam carceris, vel conclusionis in monasterio, inducunt ad septennium, vel quinquennium, vel in perpetuum, iuxta circumstantias delicti, et probationem illius, ut est textus in C. Nouimus, de verb. signif. et C. penult. ad finem, de haeret. et C. Quamuis, de poenit. in 6.

15 In Portugal Clerics are assigned to the galleys, or are carried off into exile to the parts of Brazil or Angola. Truly a fine counsel, that scandalous men of this kind be expelled the farther.

> In Lusitania Clerici triremibus destinantur, vel in exilium ad partes Brasiliae, vel Angolae, asportantur. Optimum sane consilium, ut huiusmodi scandalosi longius expellantur.

16 They ask, however: whether a Cleric holding a benefice, a voluntary homicide, is deprived of the benefice by that very fact, before the sentence of the judge.

> Quaerunt autem: an Clericus beneficiatus, voluntarius homicida, sit ipso facto priuatus beneficio, ante iudicis sententiam.

17 The more probable opinion is that he can indeed be deprived of the benefice by a judge, and condemned to restore the fruits from the day the crime was consummated; yet he is not bound by that very fact to give up the benefice, and to cease taking the fruits.

> Probabilior sententia est, posse quidem a iudice beneficio priuari, et damnari ad reddendos fructus a die criminis patrati; non tamen teneri ipso facto dimittere beneficium, et fructus non capere.

18 This is the opinion of D. Bonaventure in the Confessionale, cap. 5. part. 37.; the Doctors follow him commonly at this time, whom the long roster reports, Fagundez l. 5. cap. 2. num. 4. Thus Suarez Tom. 5. in 3. p. disp. 40. sect. 2. Covarruvias in 4. Decret. p. 2. cap. 6. §. 8. Navarrus summa Latin, cap. 27. num. 249. Farinacius t. 4. quaest. 119. de homicid. tit. 14. Julius Clarus §. Homic. and others.

> Haec est sententia D. Bonau. in confessionali, cap. 5. part. 37. eum sequuntur, hoc tempore, communiter Doctores, quos longa tessera refert Fagundez l. 5. cap. 2. num. 4. Ita Suarez Tom. 5. in 3. p. disp. 40. sect. 2. Couar. in 4. Decret. p. 2. cap. 6. §. 8. Nauar. summa Lat. cap. 27. num. 249. Farinac. t. 4. quaest. 119. de homicid. tit. 14. Iul. Clarus §. Homic. et alii.

19 The reason of D. Bonaventure, which all use, is: No crime brings deprivation by that very fact, unless it is at least declared in law: But in Canonical law it is found nowhere. Indeed, on the contrary, in dist. 50. it is found: If he shall have committed homicide spontaneously, without hope of dispensation and of recovery, let him be deposed, C. Clerici. And C. si quis viduam. This, however, is a sign that they are not already deposed and deprived, as Fagundez and others argue shrewdly.

> Ratio D. Bonauenturae, qua omnes utuntur, est: Nullum crimen inducit priuationem ipso facto, nisi saltem in iure declaretur: In iure autem Canonico nullibi habetur. Imo e contra dist. 50. habetur: Si sponte fecerit homicidium, sine spe dispensationis, et recuperationis, deponatur, C. Clerici. Et C. si quis viduam. Hoc autem est signum, non esse iam depositos, et priuatos, ut argute inferunt Fagundez, et alii.

20 Because, even if the law were to say: let him be deprived by that very fact, the sentence of the judge must still be awaited, as I showed in the Tract. de legibus, disput. 5. quaest. 7. and as Sylvester warns v. assass. num. 4. Fagundez num. 6. Suarez T. 5. de censuris. disp. 40. sect. 2. num. 22.

> Quia, etiamsi lex diceret: sit ipso facto priuatus, adhuc expectanda est iudicis sententia, ut ostendi Tract. de legibus, disput. 5. quaest. 7. et admonent Syluest. v. assass. num. 4. Fagundez num. 6. Suarez T. 5. de censuris. disp. 40. sect. 2. num. 22.

21 The opposite opinion indeed, which more follow, rests on no law, as Fagundez notes.

> Opposita vero sententia, quam plures sequuntur, nullo iure nititur, ut notat Fagundez.

22 From our opinion it follows that men of this kind can renounce the benefice before the sentence of the judge, as the Doctors assert commonly, cited by Fagundez number 16.

> Ex nostra sententia sequitur, posse huiusmodi ante iudicis sententiam beneficio renunciare, ut asserunt communiter Doctores apud Fagundez numero 16.

23 Many canons are related and declared by the Holy Doctor in the Confessionale, around the Ecclesiastical punishments of Homicides; which it is fitting to bring forward, although very many have fallen into disuse.

> Multos canones refert, atque declarat S. D. in Confessionali*, circa Homicidiorum poenas Ecclesiasticas; quas libet afferre, tametsi plurimae in dissuetudinem abierint.*

Sole Subquestion: What penalties the canons impose on homicides

1 Since it is a nefarious crime unjustly to take away the life of a man, at all times various punishments have been established by laws against homicides, many of which, commemorated in the Seraphic Doctor Bonaventure, I shall here set forth.

Quae sint poenae Canonum, Homicidis impositae.

Cum nefandum sit scelus hominis vitam iniuste adimere, ab omni tempore legibus variae in homicidas poenae sunt statutae, quarum plures in Seraphico Bonauentura commemoratos, hic recensebo.

2 From the Council of Elvira it is found cited by Martin of Braga cap. 78.: If anyone shall have committed homicide willingly, let him ever lie at the doors of the Catholic Church, and receive communion at the end of his life; but if he shall have committed homicide not willingly, but by some accident, the first canon ordered him to do penance seven years, the second canon enjoined five: Thus relates the Holy Doctor in the Confessionale, cap. 3. part 13.

Ex Eliberitano Consilio habetur apud Martinum Brach. cap. 78. Si quis voluntate homicidium commiserit, ad ianuas Catholicae Ecclesiae semper iaceat, et communionem in exitu vitae suae suscipiat, si autem non voluntate, sed casu aliquo homicidium fecerit, prior canon septem annis poenitentiam agere iussit, secundus canon quinque mandauit: Ita refert S. Doct. in Confessionali, cap. 3. particula 13.

3 He also found part fourteen, from dist. 4.: Who, heedless out of regard for discipline, kills by striking, let him be deposed, extra de homicid. presbyterorum. And it speaks of priests.

Repert etiam particula quartadecima ex dist. 4. Qui intuitu disciplinae incautus occidit percutiendo, deponatur, extra de homicid. presbyterorum. Loquitur autem de presbyteris.

4 From the Council of Lerida dist. 50. it is enjoined that Clerics, in a besieged city, where there was no necessity, killing an assailant, be deprived for two years both of office and of the communion of the Body of Christ, meanwhile assigned to fastings, prayers, vigils, and almsgiving, and finally be restored to communion; yet so that they be not promoted to the former offices. But if there were an unavoidable necessity of fighting, it would be imputed to them in nothing, dist. 50. Quia te, which, it says, is true as to sin, but as to caution it is a good thing to regret it, as extra de homicidio, cap. 2. in the Roman Penitential.

Ex Ilerdensi Concilio dist. 50. praecipitur, ut Clerici, in urbe obsessa, ubi non esset necessitas, occidentes oppugnatorem, duobus annis tam officio, quam communione corporis Christi priuentur, interim ieiuniis, orationibus, vigiliis, et eleemosynis destinati, et tandem communioni reddantur; ita tamen, ut ad priora officia non promoueantur. Sed si esset necessitas ineuitabilis pugnandi, in nullo imputaretur, dist. 50. Quia te, quod verum esse ait quoad peccatum, sed quoad cautelam poeniteat, bonum est, ut extra de homicidio, cap. 2. in poenitentiali Romano.

5 He who kills a brigand, where he could have seized him without killing, for forty days shall not enter the Church, and clothed in a hair garment, from the foods and drinks which are interdicted, and from bed, and sword, and riding, he shall abstain for those days aforesaid. But on the third and fifth feria, and on the Sabbath, let him use some kind of legumes, herbs, fruits, and little fish with moderate beer, temperately.

Occidens latronem, ubi comprehendi poterat absque occisione, quadraginta dies non intret in Ecclesiam, et lanea veste indutus, ab escibus, et potibus, qui interdicti sunt, et a thoro, et gladio, et equitatu illos supra dictos dies abstineat. In tertia autem, et quinta feria, et Sabbatho, aliquo genere leguminum oleribus, pomis, et parvis pisciculis cum mediocri cervisia utatur temperate.

6 If a Priest has done the same, let him not be deposed; nevertheless, as long as he lives, let him do penance.

Si Presbyter eadem fecerit, non deponatur, tamen quamdiu vivit, poenitentiam agat.

7 PART fifteen relates the penance of a matricide can. 33. quaest. 2. from Pope Nicholas. For one year, barred from entering the Church, he shall lie at its doors, praying. After a year he may enter the Church, but not communicate. Three years completed, let him be admitted to communion, but let him not offer the oblations until after the course of seven more years. In all these years let him abstain from meat, nor let him presume to drink wine, except on feast days and Sundays, and from Easter until Pentecost; and wherever he wishes to go, let him be conveyed by no vehicle. Let him fast until vespers three days in the week. If before the course of three years he draws near to death, let him be given the Viaticum. More mildly, however, it commands that things be done, if he show signs of great penitence.

> PARTICULA quintadecima, refert poenitentiam matricidae can. 33. quaest. 2. ex Nicolao Papa. Uno anno ab ingressu Ecclesiae prohibitus iaceat, fotis orans. Post annum ingredi possit Ecclesiam, sed non communicet. Completis tribus annis, admittatur ad communionem, oblationes non offerat, nisi post aliorum septem annorum cursus. In his omnibus annis carne abstineat, nec vinum bibere praesumat, exceptis diebus festis, atque Dominicis, et a Pascha usque ad Pentecosten, et quocumque ire voluerit, nullo vehiculo ducatur. Ieiunet usque ad vesperam tribus diebus per hebdomadam. Si ante trium annorum cursum morti appropinquat, Viatico donetur. Mitius tamen agi iubet, si ostendat magnae signa poenitentiae.

8 PART sixteen relates the tearful letter of Pope Stephen V to Astulphus the wife-slayer, upon whom he imposes entrance into a monastery under the rigid discipline of the monks. But if he wish to do his penance in the world, it imposes most severe penances: perpetual abstinence from flesh, and wine, and cider; fasting on bread and water; and let him live in vigils and prayers: See him, and in this manner let you wither away.[1]

[1] N. Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'Eum vide, et hoc etimen exhotresces'; 'etimen' and 'exhotresces' are corrupt (perhaps 'et hoc modo exhortare' or 'exaresces' — 'by this means you will win him over / harden him not'); rendered tentatively from context of encouraging penitential perseverance.

> PARTICULA sextadecima, refert epistolam lachrymosam Stephani Papae V. ad Astulphum Uxoricidam, cui imponit ingressum in monasterium sub rigida monachorum disciplina. Si autem poenitentiam degens in mundo, velit facere, severissimas poenitentias imponit, abstinentiam perpetuam a carnibus, et vino, et sicera, ieiunium in pane, aqua; et in vigiliis, orationibusque vivat: Eum vide, et hoc etimen exhotresces.

9 PART seventeen sets forth the penances due to a parricide and a filicide, whom Alexander III condemns to perpetual penance, most severe, within the precincts of the Monastery.

> PARTICULA decimaseptima, recenset poenitentias debitas parricidae, et Filicidae, quos perpetua poenitentia intra septa Monaste rii severissima, damnat Alexander III.

10 PART forty-one relates the penance enjoined on him who killed a priest, which is of 12 years, extra de poenit. et remiss. from the C. Moguntin, and moreover, once convicted, let him lack marriage and the belt of knighthood until death.

> PARTICULA quadragesima prima, refert poenitentiam ei iniunctam, qui presbyterum necavit, quae est 12. annorum extra de poenit. et remiss. ex C. Moguntin*, et praeterea convictus usque ad mortem coniugio, et cingulo militiae careat.*

11 But CAPITULUM five of the Confessionale part. 37. sets forth the irregularities and depositions due to Cleric homicides.

CAPITE vero quinto Confessionalis part. 37. recenset irregularitates, et depositiones, debitas Clericis homicidis.

12 He who shall have committed homicide without just cause, is not dispensed with in this. If the cause be of justice, he is not dispensed with in this either, so that he might be promoted; but if he has been promoted, in those orders themselves he can be dispensed with by the Pope, dist. 51. l. 1. Aliquantos. Otherwise, if he shall have committed homicide spontaneously, let him be deposed without hope of recovery and dispensation, dist. 50. Clerici. And C. si quis viduam. If by avoidable necessity, similarly he cannot ascend to the higher orders, but in the orders received he can be dispensed with, although it is not easily dispensed, even by the Pope; if by unavoidable necessity, the counsel is given that a homicide not minister, even in the orders received, dist. 50. De his clericis; yet he is not deposed, but is tolerated in his order by law without dispensation, according to the Letter and Raymundus, extra de homic. cap. 2. and according to Bernardus in the apparatus, upon that chapter extra, Cod. sicut dignum. If he has killed by accident with fault and negligence, he shall cease in perpetuity from the order received, dist. 50. Hi qui arborem, and extra eod. Presbyterum. Yet the Bishop can dispense in the minor orders, and in the subdiaconate already received, extra eod. continebatur. If he be a Deacon or Priest, it belongs to the Pope, that in those orders he either minister or be promoted to them, as in the said C. continetur, and C. Later praesentium. According to Raymundus, however, the Bishop cannot dispense, dist. 50. Miror, which some understand indiscriminately both of the voluntary and of the casual; others, of the voluntary homicide. This is Raymundus. If without fault and negligence, he will be able to minister in the order received, and be promoted to the greater orders, extra eod. Litteris significastis, cap. Dilectus, cap. ex litteris. And some say that he need not be dispensed by them, as appears in the said chapters. But it is safer and more secure that at least the Bishop dispense him by them, dist. 50. Clerico. This the Holy Bonaventure relates.

Qui homicidium fecerit sine causa iusta, cum hoc non dispensatur. Si causa iustitiae, cum hoc etiam non dispensatur, ut possit promoveri, sed si sit promotus, in ipsis ordinibus cum ipso potest per Papam dispensari dist. 51. l. 1. Aliquantos. Alias si sponte fecerit homicidium; sine spe recuperationis, et dispensationis deponatur dist. 50. Clerici. Et C. si quis viduam. Si necessitate evitabili, similiter ad superiores ordines non potest ascendere, sed in susceptis cum eo potest dispensari, licet non facile dispensetur etiam per Papam; si inevitabili; datur consilium, ut non ministret homicida, etiam in susceptis ordinibus dist. 50. De his clericis; non tamen deponitur, sed in suo ordine toleratur de iure absque dispensatione secundum L. et Raymundum extra de homic. cap. 2. et secundum Bernardum in apparatu, super illud cap. extra, Cod. sicut dignum. Si casu interfecerit cum culpa, et negligentia, ab ordine suscepto perpetuo cessabit dist. 50. Hi qui arborem, et extra eod. Presbyterum. Episcopus tamen potest in minoribus, et in subdiaconatu iam suscepto dispensare extra eod. continebatur. Si Diaconus, vel Sacerdos fuerit, ad Papam pertinet, ut in ipsis ordinibus, vel ministret, vel promoveatur ad ipsos, ut in dicto C. continetur, et C. Later praesentium. Secundum Raymundum tamen non potest dispensare Episcopus dist. 50. Miror, quod intelligant quidam indistincte tam de voluntario, quam de causali; alii de Homicida voluntario. Haec Raymundus. Si sine culpa, et negligentia, in ordine suscepto poterit ministrare, et ad maiores promoveri extra eod. Litteris significastis, cap. Dilectus, cap. ex litteris. Et dicunt quidam, quod non oportet eum eo dispensari, ut in dictis capitulis apparet. Sed securius, et tutius est, ut saltem Episcopus eum eo dispenset dist. 50. Clerico. Haec S. Bonau. refert.

13 From what has been said above, you have that it is false, in the time of D. Bonaventure and D. Thomas, that one who kills with the moderamen of blameless self-defense was irregular, as Valentia thinks, quaest. 8. punct. 4., which he thinks is gathered from D. Thomas, quaest. 64. art. 4. ad 3. Sylvester v. homicid. 1. quaest. 9. dict. 4. Matulius l. 1. de irregularitate, cap. 48. num. 9., who cite the chapter de his clericis, 1. dist. 50.*

Ex supra dictis, habes, falsum esse tempore D. Bonaventurae, et D. Thomae, occidentem cum moderamine inculpatae tutelae fuisse irregularem, ut putat Valentia quaest. 8. punct. 4. quod putat colligi ex D. Thom. quaest. 64. art. 4. ad 3. Syluest. v. homicid. 1. quaest. 9. dict. 4. Matolus l. 1. de irregularitate, cap. 48. num. 9. qui citant caput de his clericis, 1. dist. 50.

14 TRULY D. Bonaventure asserts the opposite above, and so held the Gloss on cap. si quis viduam, v. Defensionis, and on C. sicut dignum, same title.

SANE D. Bonau. oppositum supra asserit, et sensit Glossa in cap. si quis viduam, v. Defensionis, et in C. sicut dignum, eodem titulo.

15 But that chapter De his clericis gives only counsel, as the Holy Bonaventure notes; the law nevertheless neither deposes nor commands, as Raymundus expounds, and it is found extra de homicid. cap. 2. and according to Bernardus on C. Extra, same place, sicut dignum, and Fagundez also notes it, l. 5. cap. 3. num. 3.*

Caput vero illud De his clericis solum consilium dat, ut advertit S. Bonau. non tamen lex deponit; vel praecipit; ut exponit Raymundus et habetur extra de homicid. cap. 2. et secundum Bernardum super C. Extra eodem sicut dignum, et advertit etiam Fagundez l. 5. cap. 3. num. 3.

16 FINALLY the Council of Elvira can. 50. decrees: If any woman, set afire by fury and zeal, shall have beaten her maidservant with whips, so that within the third day she expire with torment, since it is uncertain whether she killed her willingly or by accident: if willingly, after 7 years; if by accident, after the times of years, lawful penance having been performed, it has pleased that she be admitted to communion. But if within the appointed times she shall have fallen ill, let her receive communion. Thus relates the Holy Bonaventure in the Confessionale cap. 3. part 13.

TANDEM Concilium Eliberitanum can. 50. decernit. Si qua faemina, furore, Zelo accensa flagellis verberavit ancillam suam; ita ut infra tertium diem cum cruciatu animam emittat eo quod incertum sit: an voluntate, an casu occiderit. Si voluntate, post 7. annos. Si casu, post annorum tempora, acta poenitentia legitima, ad communionem placuit admitti. Quod si infra tempora constituta fuerit infirmata, accipiat communionem. Sic refert S. Bonau. in confessionali cap. 3. particula 13.

Question VI: Whether it is lawful to kill a man within the limits of blameless defense, in defense of oneself or one's goods

1 AS a certain truth the Holy Doctor asserts that a man may kill another, necessity compelling the defense of his life, his soul, if it be done with the moderation of blameless defense. Hence it follows that this is lawful to any persons whatsoever, even those in a state of perfection, namely Religious, who are bound to perfection, or Bishops, who are bound to be in a state of perfection. So serm. 6. de decem praeceptis.

An liceat occidere hominem cum moderamine inculpatae tutelae, ad sui, vel suarum rerum defensionem.

TANQUAM rem certam asseverat S. Doctor posse hominem alium occidere, necessitate cogente defendendi suam vitam, suam animam, si fiat cum moderamine inculpatae tutelae. Itaque id licere sequitur quibuscumque personis, etiam perfectis, puta Religiosis, qui perfectioni tenentur, vel Episcopis, qui tenentur esse in statu perfecto. Ita serm. 6. de decem praeceptis.

2 BUT that we may know: what is that moderation of blameless defense by which homicide is made unpunishable in the external forum, and lawful in the forum of conscience, and immune from all irregularity, and from excommunication.

> UT autem sciamus; quodnam sit moderamen inculpatae tutelae, quo redditur homicidium impunibile in foro externo, et licitum in foro conscientiae, atque ab omni irregularitate immune, et ab excommunicatione.

3 FAGUNDEZ l. 5. cap. 5. says it consists in three things: namely, in time, in manner, and in cause.

> FAGUNDEZ l. 5. cap. 5. illud in tribus ait consistere, in tempore, scilicet, in modo, et in causa.

4 IN Time: that it be done incontinently, that is, in the very act of the assault of invasion, not after a long interval. For if it be done after a long interval, it will not be to repel force with force in act; but it will be to take vengeance, which is never lawful, as is said in Ezech. 9. Vengeance is mine, and I will repay. And Deuter. 32. Mine is revenge, and I will repay in due time. So teaches D. Bonav. serm. 6. Decal. where he laid down the first condition, that it be not done out of a lust for vengeance, which he finds in almost all the authors above alleged. There follow Sayrus l. 7. cap. 10. num. 28. et patet ex cap. significasti, 2. de homicid. Salomon. in repetit. Legis, ut vim, ff. de iustitia, et iure: Claudius num. 56. Bolognetus num 46. because he says it is done incontinently which is done while the brawl lasts, or while the assailant does not withdraw from it. Cynus l. 1. num. 4. C. Unde vi, Bartol. ibi, num. 9. Baldus num. 8. Hostiens. in cap. significasti, 2. extra de homicid. num. 17. Ananias ibi, num. 18. Butrius in C. olim causam, de restit. spoliat. num. 37. Bellamera ibi, num. 22. Angelus de malef. in verbo, et dictus Titius, se defendendo, num. 18.

> IN Tempore; ut fiat incontinenter, seu in flagranti delicto invasionis, non ex magno intervallo. Si enim fiat post intervallum magnum, non erit vim vi actu repellere; sed erit vindictam sumere, quae nunquam licet, ut dicitur Ezech. 9. Mihi vindictam, et ego retribuam. Et Deuter. 32. Mea est ultio, et ego retribuam in tempore. Ita docet D. Bonav. serm. 6. Decal. ubi primam conditionem posuit, ut non fiat ex libidine vindictae, quod reperit omnibus fere oris supra allegatis. Sequuntur Sayrus l. 7. cap. 10. num. 28. et patet ex cap. significasti, 2. de homicid. Salomon. in repetit. Legis, ut vim, ff. de iustitia, et iure: Claudius num. 56. Bolognetus num 46. quia ait, id fieri incontinenter, quod fit rixa durante, vel aggressore ab illa non discedente. Cynus l. 1. num. 4. C. Unde vi, Bartol. ibi, num. 9. Baldus num. 8. Hostiens. in cap. significasti, 2. extra de homicid. num. 17. Ananias ibi, num. 18. Butrius in C. olim causam, de restit. spoliat. num. 37. Bellamera ibi, num. 22. Angelus de malef. in verbo, et dictus Titius, se defendendo, num. 18.

5 Wherefore it is not done incontinently when the one insulted withdraws into his house, seeking weapons, and immediately returns to the assailant, as Cepolla thinks cons. 42. et fere Mascard. de probat. l. 3. concl. 1126. num. 51.

> Quare non fit incontinenter, quando insultatus recipit se in domum, arma quaerens, et statim ad aggressorem regreditur, ut putat Cepolla cons. 42. et fere Mascard. de probat. l. 3. concl. 1126. num. 51.

6 Secondly, the moderation of blameless defense consists in manner, which condition the Holy Doctor expresses as: that it be not done out of cruelty: by which word he shows that the manner is exceeded when the manner of defense is with too many wounds multiplied, with the body savagely pierced through, as with the head struck off, the belly laid open. That moderation of the act, indeed, in the recoil, equal to the blow of the assailant, as in an arm for an arm, but not in the head, is morally impossible, as Fagundez says num. 7. Likewise that one, in the equality of weapons, seems vain, for often the assailant has inferior weapons.

> Secundo consistit moderamen inculpatae tutelae in modo, quam conditionem exprimit S. Doctor, ut non fiat ex crudelitate: quo verbo ostendit, excedi quoad modum, quando modus defensionis sit, multiplicatis nimis vulneribus, confosso modis saevis corpore, ut trunco capite, aperto ventre. Illa vero moderatio facti, in repercussione, aequata percussioni aggressoris, ut in brachio pro brachio, non autem in capite, moraliter est impossibilis, ut ait Fagundez num. 7. Similiter illa, in aequalitate armorum, videtur inanis, saepe enim aggressor habet arma inferiora.

7 Thirdly an equality of Cause is required, and this S. Bonav. explains, saying there must be a necessity morally inevitable, so much so, that it cannot be done otherwise, nor does any other manner of preserving oneself from death, or danger, occur, and this is to repel force with force. So Iaso in l. Vim vi. Bolognetus num. 89. Bartol. l. 1. C. Unde vi. Ananias loc. cit. Caepol. Consil. 43. num. 7. et in hoc fere solo moderamen hoc posuit Molina Tom. 4. tract. 3. disp. 11. as cited by Diana p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 1. But there Vega reports T. 1. cap. 127. casu 12. another condition laid down: that no greater diligence be employed in the defense than is necessary.

> Tertio requiritur aequalitas Causae, et hoc explicat S. Bonav. dicens, esse necessitatem inevitabilem moraliter, sane adeo, ut aliter fieri non possit, neque occurrat alius modus seipsum conservandi a morte, vel periculo, et hoc est vim vi repellere. Ita Iaso in l. Vim vi. Bolognetus num. 89. Bartol. l. 1. C. Unde vi. Ananias loc. cit. Caepol. Consil. 43. num. 7. et in hoc fere solo moderamen hoc posuit Molina Tom. 4. tract. 3. disp. 11. apud Dianam p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 1. At ibi refert Vegam T. 1. cap. 127. casu 12. aliam conditionem ponentem, ut non ponatur maior diligentia in defensione, quam sit necessarium.

8 The Holy Doctor says there that he, or another Religious, lest perhaps he incur disgrace, cannot kill, but must take flight; otherwise he is not entirely excused, if he kill. Wherefore he seems to concede, with Molina loc. cit. et Hurtado 1. 2. disp. 170. §. 135. and Diana, alleging the common opinion of the Doctors, that it is lawful to kill the assailant, if it would be gravely disgraceful for the assailant to flee: But of this below.

11 It is proved secondly by the Holy Doctor at those words Luke 22. Et nunc qui non habet, vendat tunicam suam, et emat gladium, namely for defense.

> Probatur secundo a S. Doct. ad ea verba Lucae 22. Et nunc qui non habet, vendat tunicam suam, et emat gladium, nempe ad defensionem.

12 The Holy Doctor also observes, at those words: et percussit unus ex illis servum Pontificis sacerdotum, et amputavit auriculam eius dexteram, that Luke did not name him; and that John added the name for the sake of praising zeal, Simon ergo Petrus, etc. on which the Gloss: Simon Peter was zealous with the same ardor of mind, as Phinees, of whom it is said, that he therefore obtained from God an everlasting Priesthood, Numer. 25.

> Advertit *etiam S. 13 But it must be gravely observed that the Seraphic Doctor does not except state, or rank of person in this case, nor even a sacred place, from which you may draw many conclusions.

> Graviter autem advertendum est, Seraphicum non excipere statum, vel gradum personae in hoc casu, neque locum etiam sacrum, ex quo multa deduces.

14 First, for you have that even in a consecrated Church this is lawful, and it is not defiled thereby. 17 But this must by no means be admitted so absolutely; for the Law dictates that the common good be preferred to the private; yet from the death of a Prince innumerable evils not rarely arise, as Fagundez cries num. 8. Suarez de censur. disp. 46. sect. 1. et commonly the Doctors cited by Diana p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 2. Baffaeus *v. 19 Yet I would not reject the opinion of these Doctors in one case: that if assailed by a Prince, he should probably fear an imminent damnation of his soul. So Malder. 2. 2. tract. 3. cap. 1. dub. 7. et it seems the opinion of D. Bonav. loc. cit. serm. 6. where he concedes it universally, that he may impede him, lest he lose his life and his soul; and while this condition intervenes, it is extended even to Monks, nor is any person excepted. Whatever Diana says with others.

Horum tamen Doctorum sententiam non renuerem in uno casu, quo invasus a Principe, sibi probabiliter instantem animae damnationem metueret. Ita Malder. 2. 2. tract. 3. cap. 1. dub. 7. et videtur sententia D. Bonav. loc. cit. serm. 6. ubi universaliter id concedit, ut impediat ipsum, ne perdat suam vitam, et animam; et dum haec conditio intervenit extendi etiam ad Monachos, nec ullam personam eximi. Quidquid dicat Diana cum aliis.

20 There arises, moreover, from what has been said the question: Whether it be lawful to kill the invader on account of a grave injury, for instance one inflicted upon a wife, who is being assailed.

Oritur vero ex dictis quaestio: An liceat occidere invasorem ex iniuria gravi, puta illatam uxori, aggredientem.

15. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. assert that this can be done with impunity.

22 He brings forward many frivolous reasons. One reason from D. Bonaventure seems valid to me: If damnation presses upon the adulterer, then one will be able to kill such an assailant, as Bannes says, and Rodriquez Tom. 1. cap. 220. for then the natural law dictates to me that even a greater good may be preferred.

> Mvltas rationes frivolas affert. Una mihi ratio ex D. Bonaventura adest valida; Si adultero instet damnatio, tunc poterit talem aggressorem occidere, ut ait Bannes, et Rodriquez Tom. 1. cap. 220. tunc enim ius naturale mihi dictat, etiam maius bonum praeferendum licere.

23 Moreover, as to life, the adulterer is an unjust assailant even of the husband's life, whom he gravely provokes to the dangers of death. See Navar. cap. 15. num. 7. yet it would be an eminent act rather to die, as Bassaeus says loco citato.

> Caetervm, quoad vitam, adulter est iniquus aggressor etiam vitae mariti, quem provocat gravissime ad pericula mortis. Vide Navar. cap. 15. num. 7. esset vero actus eximius potius mori, ut ait Bassaeus loco citato.

24 From these you have that it is lawful even to anticipate the assailant, if it be necessary inevitably to escape death. So Diana resol. 5. et alii, as Couar. in Clem. si furiosus, p. 3. §. unico. Otherwise it is not lawful to anticipate, as Bass. num 11. et 16. says.

> Ex his habes, licere, etiam praevenire aggressorem, si necesse sit inevitabiliter ad mortem evadendam. Ita Diana resol. 5. et alii, ut Couar. in Clem. si furiosus, p. 3. §. unico. Aliter non licet praevenire, ut ait Bass. num 11. et 16.

Doubt I: Whether it is lawful to kill someone to preserve one's honor, rather than flee

1 The Seraphic Doctor, in serm. 6. de decem praeceptis, speaks thus. But if he be a homicide from necessity, this is twofold: either from inevitable, or from avoidable necessity: Avoidable necessity is, if I can escape, but I decline to do so on account of shame, or another cause, and in that case he is excused from so much, but not from all: because it would be better that he flee.

> Seraphicvs serm. 6. de decem praeceptis, ita loquitur. Si autem fuerit homicida, ex necessitate, hoc est dupliciter, vel ex necessitate inevitabili, vel evitabili: Necessitas evitabilis est, si possum effugere, sed dimitto propter verecundiam, vel aliam causam, et in isto casu excusatur a tanto, sed non a toto: quia melius esset quod fugeret.

2 Then he adds: But if there be inevitable necessity, that a man kill another man, not out of love of vengeance, but out of love of the conservation of life and soul, so that he do not kill him out of cruelty, but that he impede him, lest he lose his life and his soul, provided this be done with the moderation of blameless defense, this has been granted even to persons in a state of perfection, not only to those in an imperfect state. And this he says August. lib. 1. de libero arbitrio, and he is excused from so much, and from all. So S. Bonav. There S. August. cap. 5. being asked: Whether it were lawful to kill an invader of life, chastity, and goods. He answered, that it is lawful on account of life and chastity; the rest he omits.

> Deinde subdit: Si autem sit necessitas inevitabilis, ut homo occidat alium hominem, non amore vindictae, sed amore conservationis vitae, et animae, ut non interficiat ipsum ex crudelitate, sed ut impediat ipsum, ne perdat suam vitam, et animam, ut fiat hoc moderamine inculpatae tutelae, hoc concessum est personis etiam perfectis, non solum imperfectis. Et hoc dicit August. lib. 1. de libero arbitrio, et excusatur a tanto, et a toto. Haec S. Bonav. Ibi S. August. cap. 5. interrogatus: An liceret occidere invasorem vitae, pudicitiae, et opum. Respondit, licere ob vitam, et pudicitiam; alia vero omittit.

3 From these things, attentively read through, you have that, solely on account of saving life or soul, it is lawful, according to D. Bonavent., to kill another; and further, that no person whatsoever is to be excused, if he weigh flight so highly, or any other disgrace, that to flee these he kills.

Ex his attente perlectis habes, solum ob salvandam vitam, vel animam ex D. Bonavent. licere alium occidere, atque adeo neque excusari quamcumque personam, si fugam tanti pendat, vel aliud dedecus, ut, ad haec fugienda, occidat.

4 This opinion they defend: Sylvius 2. 2. q. 64. art. 7. quaeritur 9. Bisfeldius in com. de iniur. et damno, cap. 1. quaest. 5. concl. 8. Bolognetus in l. Ut vim, num. 42. ff. de Iustitia, et iure, Baldus l. 4. consil. 312. and others. You have very many reasons in Sylvius, of which the eminent one is that of D. Bonav. loc. cit. arguing from the Religious and Episcopal state, that it is not lawful for any Christian whatsoever to defend honor in this way. A Christian man, a Bishop, or Religious is bound to flee, if he can, and it is not lawful to kill the assailant, because the Religion of Christ requires this; but a Christian at last pledges the worship of Christ in Baptism, renouncing all the pomps of Satan. This argument terrifies those saying that it is lawful for a noble Christian; not for a plebeian, or Cleric, or Religious, as Bass. num. 22. holds, excluding plebeians, and num. 26. Clerics, etc., with Diana p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 49. Lessio lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 86. and others; who say that this is lawful to a Christian; Bassaeus indeed so holds num. 2. Less. dub. 12. num. 77. Diana p. 3. tract. 5. miscell. resol. 90. Add Petr. Navar. l. 2. cap. 36. num. 389. and others.

Hanc sententiam defendunt Sylvius 2. 2. q. 64. art. 7. quaeritur 9. Bisfeldius in com. de iniur. et damno, cap. 1. quaest. 5. concl. 8. Bolognetus in l. Ut vim, num. 42. ff. de Iustitia, et iure, Baldus l. 4. consil. 312. et alii. Rationes plurimas habes apud Sylvium, quarum eximia est D. Bonav. loc. cit. arguentis a statu Religioso, et Episcopali, non licere cuicumque Christiano id genus defendendi honorem. Homo Christianus, Episcopus, vel Religiosus tenetur fugere, si potest, et non licet aggressorem occidere, quia Religio Christi id exigit; at Christianus tandem Christi cultum in Baptismo spondet, abrenuncians omnibus pompis Sathanae. Hoc argumentum terret dicentes, id licere Christiano nobili; non plebeo, vel Clerico, aut Religioso, ut Bass. num. 22. ponentem excludi plebeos et num. 26. Clericos, etc. cum Diana p. 5. tract. 4. resol. 49. Lessio lib. 2. cap. 9. num. 86. et aliis; qui hoc Christiano licere aiunt; Bassaeus quidem ita habet num. 2. Less. dub. 12. num. 77. Diana p. 3. tract. 5. miscell. resol. 90. Adde Petr. Navar. l. 2. cap. 36. num. 389. et alios.

5 I press upon the man himself. That which is of the law of nature pertains to all indispensably: But to kill the one committing injustice does not pertain to plebeians, Clerics, or Religious according to you: Therefore deservedly Andreas Gail. observat. 100. num. 8. says, of those saying the opposite, that they teach politically rather than Christianly.

Urgeo ad hominem. Id, quod est iuris naturae, convenit omnibus indispensabiliter: Sed occidere Iniurium non convenit plebeis, Clericis, aut Religiosis per vos: Ergo merito Andreas Gail. observat. 100. num. 8. ait, oppositum dicentes, Politice magis quam Christiane docere.

8 Hence some of those alleged infer that it is lawful for a noble secular man to kill one who insults him, who wishes to strike him with a cudgel, or a blow of the hand, if he cannot otherwise avoid the ignominious blow; a bloody dogma indeed, and worthy that on its account several Pontiffs have hurled various excommunications.

> Hinc inferunt aliqui ex allegatis, licitum esse viro nobili saeculari occidere sibi insultantem, qui fuste, vel alapa ipsum vult percutere, si aliter percussionem ignominiosam vitare nequit; Cruentum sane dogma, et dignum, quod in ipsum varias excommunicationes plures Pontifices fulminaverint.

14 We must now fight for the true opinion of the Seraphic Doctor. Now the Law of Christ is that which we have professed in baptism, renouncing Satan and all his works and pomps. For the Law of Christ teaches, Matth. 5. Whoever shall strike you on one cheek, turn to him the other also. And therefore Christ, Ioan. 18. received the blow, and did not avenge it. And Ioan. 8. he heard: You have a devil. But he could justly have avenged it. Where Chrysostom, homil. 82. in Ioan.: You shudder at heaven; endure on earth the outrage of the mind. The Creator of the world, the eternal Son of God, received the blow, and a servant gave it, who was worthy of every punishment, namely either to be burned with heavenly fire, or swallowed by the opening earth, or seized by a demon and whirled about. And S. August. adds, tract. 113. And yet he who by his power could command, by whom the world was made, chose rather to teach patience. And asking why he did not offer the other cheek, according to the precept, Matth. 5., he says: By this he rather showed what was to be shown, namely that his great precepts of patience are to be performed not by ostentation of the body, but by preparation of the heart. And the same S. August. epist. 5. ad Marcellinum, says that those precepts about offering the cheek, etc. pertain more to the preparation of the heart than to the work. All this S. Bonaventura pursues on 18. Ioannis.

> Nobis iam pro vera Seraphici sententia est pugnandum. Est autem Lex Christi, quam professi sumus in baptismo, abrenunciantes Satanae, et omnibus operibus, et pompis eius. Lex enim Christi docet, Matth. 5. Qui te percusserit in maxillam unam, praebe illi et alteram. Et ideo Christus Ioan. 18. accepit alapam, nec ultus est. Et Ioan. 8. audivit: Daemonium habes. Poterat autem iuste ulcisci. Ubi Chrysostomus homil. 82. in Ioan. Horreas caelum, excessum mentis patiaris terra. Creator mundi, filius Dei aeternus accepit alapam, et servus eam dedit, qui omni poena dignus, scilicet aut caelesli igne incendi, aut terra debisciente sorberi, aut correptus Daemonio volutari. Et addit S. August. tract. 113. Et tamen qui per potentiam iubere posset, per quem factus est mundus, patientiam docere maluit. Et quaerens, cur alteram maxillam non praebuerit, iuxta praeceptum, Matth. 5. ait: Quod hinc potius demonstravit, quod demonstrandum fuit, sua scilicet magna praecepta patientiae, non ostentatione corporis, sed cordis praeparatione facienda. Et idem S. August. epist. 5. ad Marcellinum, ait, quod illa praecepta de praebendo maxillam, etc. magis ad praeparationem cordis pertinent, quam ad opus. Haec omnia prosequitur S. Bonaventura ad 18. Ioannis.

15 And on 6. Lucae at those words: Et qui te percusserit in maxillam unam, praebe illi et alteram the Holy Doctor observes that the cheek is put for the nobler part of the body, which, when struck, receives the gravest injury; and he notes that Christ commanded patience by precept, according to that Deuter. 31. Vengeance is mine, and I will repay, saith the Lord. And therefore the Apostle, Rom. 12. Not defending yourselves, most beloved, but give place unto wrath. Therefore Matth. 18. he commands: If thy brother shall sin against thee, go, and rebuke him between thee and him alone. Whence it follows that correction is to be made; therefore S. August. serm. 10. de verbis Domini: If you suffer an injury, and are silent, and do not rebuke your neighbor, you sin more by neglecting than he by afflicting.

> Et ad 6. Lucae in ea verba: Et qui te percusserit in maxillam unam, praebe illi et alteram advertit S. Doctor, poni maxillam pro parte nobiliori corporis, quae, cum percutitur, praecipua iniuria irrogatur; et notat, Christum patientiam praecepto imperasse, iuxta id Deuter. 31. Mihi vindictam, et ego retribuam, dicit Dominus. Et ideo Apostolus Rom. 12. Non vosmetipsos defendentes charissimi, sed date locum irae. Ideo Matth. 18. praecipit: Si peccaverit in te frater tuus, vade, et corripe eum inter te, et ipsum solum. Unde sequitur, correptionem faciendam; ideo S. August. serm. 10. de verbis Domini: Si iniuriam pateris, et taces, et proximum non corripis, plus peccas negligendo, quam ille affligendo.

16 The same the Holy Doctor proves on 6. Lucae at those words: Qua mensura mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis, namely by harming, according to that Apoc. 18. As much as she hath glorified herself, and lived in delights; so much torment and sorrow give ye to her. And Iohel. 3. Speedily and swiftly will I repay your recompense upon your own heads.

> Idem probat S. Doct. ad 6. Lucae in ea verba: Qua mensura mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis, scilicet nocendo, iuxta id Apoc. 18. Quantum glorificavit se, et in deliciis fuit; tantum date illi tormentum, et luctum. Et Iohel. 3. Cito velociter reddam vicissitudinem vobis super caput vestrum.

17 Therefore there he observes that protestation of Christ: Forgive, and you shall be forgiven. Otherwise the prayer is not wholesome: Forgive us our debts, etc. For if you will not forgive men, neither will your father forgive you your sins. And therefore Eccles. 28. Forgive your neighbor that hath hurt thee: and then thy sins shall be forgiven thee when thou prayest. This is the Law of honor, which we Christians profess.

> Ideo ibi observat S. Doct. illam protestationem Christi: Dimittite, et dimittemini. Alioqui non salubriter oratur: Dimitte nobis debita nostra, etc. Si enim non dimiseritis hominibus, nec pater vester dimittet vobis peccata vestra. Et ideo Eccles. 28. Relinque proximo tuo nocenti te: et tunc deprecanti tibi peccata solventur. Haec est Lex honoris, quam nos Christiani profitemur.

18 From which you have that this is true not of Clerics and Religious alone; concerning whom indeed the Doctors commonly assert that they are bound to take flight, as Fagundez reports lib. 5. cap. 7. num. 9. but this Law has been given to all Christians. Wherefore with a Christian diploma Alexander VII. decreed that no one, under pain of excommunication reserved to the Supreme Pontiff, teach that a man of knightly rank can accept a duel, lest he incur the note of timidity, certainly by fleeing, or refusing, as you have it proved, in the tome immediately preceding disp. 17. q. 10. sect. 1.

> Ex quo habes, non de solis Clericis, et Religiosis id esse verum; de quibus sane asserunt communiter DD. teneri fugam arripere, ut refert Fagundez lib. 5. cap. 7. num. 9. sed omnibus Christianis haec Lex data est. Quare christiano diplomate sancivit Alexander VII. ut nullus sub poena excommunicationis, summo Pontifici reservatae, doceret, virum equestrem posse duellum acceptare, ne notam timiditatis incurrat, utique fugiendo, aut respuendo, uti probatum habes, tomo proxime praecedenti disp. 17. q. 10. sect. 1.

19 But the little argument, which Diana brings from so many of the great[1], taken from the lesser: It is lawful to kill a thief in defense of one's goods: Therefore also of honor, which is greater, the invader; This is ground to powder by the rubbing of fingers, for the Antecedent is denied with very many, as I shall presently show it must be denied.

1 N. Editor's note: the print reads 'ex tot proceribus bus assert Diana', with a duplicated 'bus' (print error); rendered without it.

> Ratiuncula vero, quam ex tot proceribus assert Diana, sumpta a minori: Licet ad defensionem rei familiaris occidere furem: Ergo et honoris, qui maior est, invasorem; Haec attritu digitorum conteritur, negatur enim cum plurimis Antecedens, ut mox negandum ostendam.

20 Hence Bassaeus ill says, v. Homic. 1. num. 11. that it is lawful to kill even one who injures in honor.

> Hinc male Bassaeus v. Homic. 1. num. 11. ait licere occidere etiam laedentem in honore.

Doubt II: Whether one who is attacked is bound in some case to kill the aggressor

1 We have seen that in some case it is lawful: it must now be seen whether at some time it is commanded.

> An teneatur in aliquo casu invasus occidere aggressorem.
> Vidimus in aliquo casu id licere: videndum iam est: an aliquando sit praeceptum.

2 The Doctors commonly assert that ordinarily the one assailed is bound to defend his life, and if he cannot otherwise protect it, he is bound to kill the assailant. So Farinac. T. 4. quaest. 125. de homicid. tit. 14. Paulus de Castro in l. utim. ff. de Iust. et iure, Salon. ibi, num. 15. Iacobus Ayrerius tract. de homicidii necessitate, p. 1. num. 395. Fagundez in quintum praeceptum Decald. 5. cap. 3.

> Communiter asserunt DD. teneri ordinarie invasum suam vitam defendere, et nisi aliter eam tueri queat, teneri aggressorem occidere. Ita Farinac. T. 4. quaest. 125. de homicid. tit. 14. Paulus de Castro in l. utim. ff. de Iust. et iure, Salon. ibi, num. 15. Iacobus Ayrerius tract. de homicidii necessitate, p. 1. num. 395. Fagundez in quintum praeceptum Decald. 5. cap. 3.

3 It is proved by all from a reason taken from D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 29. quaest. 4. for the order of charity is, that we prefer our own life to the life of our neighbor: Therefore he gravely sins who allows his own life to perish by the sword, as he who, outside this comparison, would allow the life of his neighbor to perish.

Probatur ab omnibus ratione sumpta ex D. Bonav. in 3. dist. 29. quaest. 4. nam ordo charitatis est, ut vitam nostram vitae proximi praeferamus: Igitur graviter peccat, qui vitam suam perire gladio sinit, sicut qui perire sineret vitam proximi extra hanc comparationem.

4 Yet they allege some causes on account of which the one assailed could allow himself to be killed. First, if he is in his conscience without mortal sin; but the invader is in mortal sin. But this reason is almost always supposed in the assailant: for if he is an unjust invader, he is unjust, and in sin. Second, if the invader be a person necessary to the Republic.

Aliquas tamen causas allegant, ob quas posset invasus sinere se occidi. Prima, si is est in conscientia sua sine peccato mortali; at invasor in peccato mortali. Sed haec ratio semper fere in aggressore supponitur: Si enim est iniquus aggressor, est iniustus, et in peccato. Secunda, si invasor sit persona necessaria Reipublicae.

5 Diana, however, p. 5. Tract. 4. resol. 14. seems not to admit universally that the one assailed is bound by the law of the order of charity to kill the assailant, but only if the one assailed himself be a Prince, or necessary to the Republic, or to his family. The same is held by Soto de Iustitia, l. 5. quaest. 1. art. 8. Sylvius 1. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. and there likewise Aragon, and others with Bassaeo, v. Homicid. 1. num. 14.

Diana vero p. 5. Tract. 4. resol. 14. videtur non admittere universaliter, teneri ex lege ordinis charitatis invasum occidere aggressorem, sed solum, si invasus ipse sit Princeps, vel Reipublicae necessarius, aut familiae suae. Idem tenent Soto de Iustitia, l. 5. quaest. 1. art. 8. Sylvius 1. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. et ibidem Aragon, et alii cum Bassaeo, v. Homicid. 1. num. 14.

Doubt III: Whether it is lawful, in defense of one's own goods, to kill a thief

1 The first opinion seems to be that of D. Bonav. at the place cited, dub. 1, namely that it is not lawful. Accursius and others follow him, whom Navar. cites in Man. cap. 15. The same is held by Archid. and Panormit., whom Sylvester cites, v. homic. 1. quaest. 4. The same seems to be Tabiena's view, v. Homicid. quaest. 7, and v. Irregularitas, 2. num. 25. Gerson, tract. de Euch., August. de Ancona, de authoritate Ecclesiae, Abul. on cap. 15 Matthaei, as cited by Diana p. 5. Tractatu 5. resol. 17, deny it absolutely; the same is upheld by Farinac. t. 4. quaest. 225. de homicid. tit. 14. num. 221. fol. 220. It appears from cap. 2 in fine, extra de homic., in which perpetual penance is imposed upon a priest who kills a thief to recover a thing stolen from him, with the death of the thief; Zabatella there, ante numerum primum; Hostiensis num. 9 v. presbyter, and ex C. suscepimus, same title, there. Ioan. Audr. there n. 1. Butrio num. 4. Felinus 1. not. 1. These canonists say that consequently he incurs irregularity and even excommunication, if the thief be a cleric.

An liceat ob defensionem propriorum bonorum occidere furem.

Prima sententia videtur D. Bonav. loco citato, dub. 1. non licere. Eam sequuntur Accursius, et alii, quos citat Navar. in Man. cap. 15. Idem tenent Archid. et Panormit. quos citat Sylvester, v. homic. 1. quaest. 4. Idem videtur Tabiena,

v. Homicid. quaest. 7. et v. Irregularitas, 2. num. 25. Negant absolute Gerson tract. de Euch. August. de Ancona de authoritate Ecclesiae, Abul. in cap. 15. Matthaei apud Dianam p. 5. Tractatu 5. resol. 17. eandem tuentur Farinac. t. 4. quaest. 225. de homicid. tit. 14. num. 221. fol. 220. constat ex cap. 2. in fine, extra de homic. in quo perpetua poenitentia imponitur presbytero, occidenti furem pro liberatione rei sibi furatae cum morte furis, Zabatella ibi, ante numerum primum Hostiensis num. 9. v. presbyter et ex C. suscepimus, eodem titulo, ibi. Ioan. Audr. ibi n. 1. Butrio num. 4. Felinus 1. not. 1. Hi canonistae dicunt consequenconsequenter, incurrit irregularitatem et etiam excommunicationem, si fur sit clericus.

2 The second opinion is that it is indeed lawful for seculars, but not for Ecclesiastics: Panormit. cap. suscepimus, de homic.; Tolet. lib. 5. summae, cap. 6. n. 14.; Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7.; D. Anton. 3. part. tit. 4. cap. 3.

Secunda sententia est, licere quidem saecularibus, non autem Ecclesiasticis, Panormit. cap. suscepimus, de homic. Tolet. lib. 5. summae, cap. 6. n. 14. Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. D. Anton. 3. part. tit. 4. cap. 3.

3 The third opinion contends that it is lawful absolutely for all. So Bartol. Lib. 1. num. 2. Cod. unde vi.; Butrio cap. olim, 1. de restit. spoliat.; Angelus in Leg. Is qui aggressorem, num. 2. Cod. ad Leg. Cornel. de sicav.; Iaso in Leg. ut vim, num. 10. ff. de Iust. et iure; Paulus Paris. *in cap. But others of this opinion deny this: Suarez de censur. disp. 46. sect. 2.; Petr. Nauar. Lib. 3. de restit. cap. 3. num. 414.; Tolet. Lib. 5. summae, cap. 6.; Henricus Boicins in cap. 2. de homic. num. 13.; Annan. there, num. 9.; Felinus in dictum cap. num. 5.; Iacobus AEmilianus conf. 2. num. 54.; Couar. in Clem. si furiosus 3. part.; Fortunius in Leg. ut vim, ff. de Iustitia, et iure; but these two shrink from it; Castro Lib. 2. de lege poenal. cap. 14.; Sotus 5. de iust. quaest. 2. art. 8. Hence he would not even incur excommunication under cap. si quis suadente diabolo, which is incurred for a mortal sin alone, as is commonly taught, according to Suarez disp. 22. de cens. sect. 1. num. 25.; Molina Tomo 3. de iust. tract. 5. disput. 51. num. 6.; and this doctrine holds even if there be doubt whether the thief came with the sole intention of stealing, or also of killing; for when life is in doubt, even a cleric may defend himself, as Farinaq. teaches, quaest. 125. de homic. tit. 14. num. 224.; Polyd. tract. de tempore nost. cap. 24. rubr. de fure, num. 53.; Iacobus Aixer. de homic. necessit. par. 1. num. 139. These Fagundez alleges and follows, Lib. 5. cap. 3.

Tertia sententia, id absolute omnibus licere contendit. Ita Bartol. Lib. 1. num. 2. Cod. unde vi. Butrio cap. olim, 1. de restit. spoliat. Angelus in Leg. Is qui aggressorem, num. 2. Cod. ad Leg. 6 Diana adds that a fleeing thief may be killed if he flees with the stolen goods, because the invasion of the property lasts until he reaches a place of safety; and he brings forward the authorities alleged above.

Addit Diana, posse furem fugientem occidi, si cum re surata fugiat, quia inuasio rei durat, donec in tutum se recipiat, et adducit allegatos.

7 Strouersdorf adds, de Iustitia, quaest. 64. art. 7. in 2. 2., that it suffices for you to be able to kill if you cannot otherwise keep the goods, even if you could recover them afterwards; for no one seems bound to suffer that his property be snatched away, even if it can be recovered later.

Addit Strouersdorf de Iustitia, quaest. 64. art. 7. in 2. 2. sufficere, ut interficere possis, quod nequeas aliter rem custodire, etiamsi posses recuperare postea, quia nullus videtur teneri pati, ut res eripiatur, etiamsi postea valeat recuperari.

8 Yet I am not carried away by this torrent of Doctors, nor moved to the first opinion.

Hoc tamen Doctorum torrente non rapior, nec moueor a prima sententia.

9 Therefore I assert that it is not lawful to defend one's private property by killing the thief.

Assero igitur, non licere rem familiarem defendere, necando furem.

10 It is proved by D. Bonauent. on 6. Lucae, in those words: And from him who takes away your garment, do not forbid him to take your tunic also. There the Seraphic Doctor notes that Christ speaks of robbers who wrongfully seize things of weight, of which Iob. 24: They strip men naked, taking away their garments, etc., and of these it is said: do not forbid him the tunic also, that is, by wrangling or resisting, following the example of the Savior, of whom Psalm. 21: They divided my garments among them.

> Probatur a D. Bonauent. ad 6. Lucae, illis verbis: Et ab eo qui aufert tibi vestimentum, etiam tunicam noli prohibere. Ubi aduertit S. Doctor, loqui Christum de raptoribus per iniuriam rerum grauium, de quibus Iob. 24. Nudos dimittunt homines indumenta tollentes, etc. et his dici: Etiam tunicam noli prohibere, scilicet rixando, vel contradicendo, exemplo Saluatoris; de quo Psalm. 21: Diuiserunt sibi vestimenta mea.

11 He adds that this is a commandment forbidding contention and the lust of vindicating; he declares that unbridled lust, which blazes so fiercely against others for transitory things, is what is meant, as we read in cap. suscepimus, de 2. homicidio, where the Pontiff uses the argument of D. Bonauentura.

> Addit vero, hoc esse mandatum, prohibens contentionem, et libidinem vindicandi; Libidinem sane immoderatam clamans, quae pro rebus transitoriis tam acriter in alios exardescit, ut habetur cap. suscepimus, de 2. homicidio, ubi Pontifex argumento D. Bonauenturae utitur.

12 He proves it secondly from D. Augustinus, epist. 5. ad Marcellinum: Care must be taken lest, through the desire for revenge, patience itself be lost; which must be prized above every good that an enemy can take from an enemy. He concludes therefore that what is forbidden here is not the correction of one's neighbor, nor the hindering or prohibition of evil, or the punishment of crime by one who can and ought to prevent it — which belongs to the minister of justice — but the lust of revenge, both as to the hand, and as to the sign, and as to the mind.

> Probat secundo ex D. Augustino epist. 5. ad Marcellinum: Cavendum est ne vindicandi cupiditate amittatur ipsa patientia; quae pluris habenda est, quam omne bonum, quod potest inimicus inimico auferre. Igitur concludit, non prohiberi hic, correptionem proximi, nec impeditionem, vel prohibitionem mali, vel punitionem sceleris ab eo, qui potest, et debet praepedire, cuiusinodi est iustitiae minister; sed prohiberi hic ulciscendi libidinem, et quantum ad manum, et quantum ad signum, et quantum ad animum.

13 From this testimony of S. Augustinus is drawn the reason which the authors of the first opinion use: namely, that a greater good is not to be demanded for a lesser, because that is against justice; but the life of one's neighbor is a greater good than one's private property: Therefore.

> Ex hoc testimonio S. Augustini eruitur ratio, qua utuntur authores primae sententiae: Scilicet maius bonum non est pro minori exigendum, quia est contra iustitiam; sed vita proximi est maius bonum se familiari: Ergo.

14 Diana answers in the name of all: that although by its nature this order is observed, yet through the malice of the aggressor it can be overturned.

> Respondet Diana nomine omnium; etsi ex natura sua is ordo seruetur, tamen ex malitia inualoris peruerti potest.

15 On the contrary: since the equality of justice is primarily an equality of things, malice can neither add to nor subtract from it, so as to overturn the order of these same things, when the same circumstances remain unchanged.

> Contra; nam cum aequalitas iustitiae sit aequalitas rei principaliter, nequit malitia addere; vel minuere, ita ut peruertatur ordo earundem rerum, eisdem circumstantiis indutatum.

16 Fagundez num. 17., with Tanner, answers thus: Christian Charity does not oblige us to prefer the life of our robbers to things of great moment, except when he is in extreme necessity; but in the present case he is not in extreme necessity, but in wicked intent.

> Fagundez num. 17. cum Tannero ita respondet, Charitatem Christianam nos non obligare ad praeferendam vitam praedonis nostris rebus magni momenti, nisi quando fuerit in extrema necessitate; At in casu praesenti non est in extrema necessitate, sed in voluntate iniqua.

17 Moreover, no one intends to take away his life, but to recover his own goods; nor is that thief in full possession of his life. Valencia adds that it relates negatively to Charity toward one's neighbor.

> Deinde; nemo intendit, adimere ei vitam, sed res suas recuperare, neque illum furem esse in possessione plena suae vitae. Addit Valentia quod ad Charitatem proximi, negatiue se habere.

18 I do not understand these metaphysical little proofs. For Christ knew the laws perfectly well, and better than Fagundez, even though the latter was joined to the long company of the Jurists; and yet he denies that these orders are absurd. For it is one thing that I am not bound, in extreme necessity, to spend my private property; another thing to wish to defend stolen goods at the cost of another's death. Moreover, that necessity is extreme which is to be weighed above private property, even if a man has come to it through his own fault; for life is still of a lower order, nor does private property, being of a higher order, take away the right of the higher good, that is, of life. Finally, against Valencia we are bound positively by the order of Charity, when the goods to be loved concur simultaneously in act.

> Ego Metaphysicas istas probationculas non intelligo. Christus enim optime nouerat iura, et melius, quam Fagundez; tametsi longa tessera Iurisperitorum sociatus; et tamen negat hos ordines esse ineptos. Aliud enim est, me non teneri in extrema necessitate profundere rem familiarem; aliud est, raptam velle defendere morte alterius. Deinde extrema est necessitas, quae est aestimanda supra rem familiarem, etiamsi ipse ad eam venerit sua culpa; nam adhuc vita est ordinis inferioris, neque res familiaris, cum sit ordinis superioris aufert ius boni superioris, idest vitae: Tandem contra Valentiam tenemur positiue ordine Charitatis, quando res amandae, actu concurrunt simul.

19 It is proved thirdly from D. Bonauent., serm. 8. de decem praeceptis, from D. Augustinus Lib. 1. de Lib. arb. cap. 1. et 5., where he expressly seems to deny that it is lawful, as Valencia admits, disp. 5. quaest 8. puncto 4.; nor does he answer well by saying it is to be understood of cases in which the moderation of blameless self-defense is not observed.

> Probatur tertio a D. Bonauent. serm. 8. de decem praeceptis, ex D. Augustino Lib. 1. de Lib. arb. cap. 1. et 5. ubi expresse id videtur negare esse licitum, ut fatetur Valentia disp. 5. quaest 8. puncto 4. neque bene respondet, intelligi in casibus, in quibus non adhibeatur moderamen inculpatae tutelae.

20 For on the contrary: when goods are set forth for which one may kill, yet without the lust of vengeance — namely life and chastity — he entirely omits honor and private property, about which he had been asked. Therefore he does not grant that it is lawful even with moderation.

> Contra enim est; Nam propositis bonis, pro quibus occidi potest, absque tamen vindictae libidine, nempe vita, et pudicitia, omnino praetermittit honorem, et rem familiarem; de qua fuerat interrogatus. Igitur neque cum moderamine licere concedit.

21 PROBATUR fourthly from S. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 14, from cap. 2. extra de homicidio, where perpetual penance is imposed upon the Priest, even with moderation, as slayer of the Robber; but to the secular it is said: that if he is able, let him fast for the image of God slain, and give alms liberally.

PROBATUR quarto a S. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 14. ex cap. 2. extra de homicidio, ubi perpetua poenitentia imponitur Praesbytero, etiam cum moderamine, interfectori Latronis; saeculari vero dicitur: ut si potuerit, ieiunet ob imaginem Dei occisam, et eleemosynas faciat largiter.

22 RESPONDet Fagundez num. 17. that it speaks there on the supposition of an excess in the moderation of blameless self-defense, which response he gathers ex cap. suscepimus, where the excess is related.

RESPONDet Fagundez num. 17. ibi loqui supposito excessu in moderamine inculpatae tutelae, quod responsum colligit ex cap. suscepimus, ubi refertur excessus.

23 ENIM but the passage I now allege supposes no excess; nay, it adds: But if without the mediation of hatred you have slain such members of the devil, delivering yourself and yours, I say in indulgence, on account of the image of God, if you can fast somewhat, it is good for you, and give alms liberally; if a priest has done the same, let him not be deposed, but let him do penance as long as he lives.

ENIM vero locus a me nunc allegatus nullum supponit excessum, imo addit: Si autem sine odii mediatione, te, tuaque liberando huiusmodi diaboli membra interfecisti, secundum indulgentiam dico, propter imaginem Dei, si aliquid ieiunare potueris, bonum est tibi, et eleemosynam fac largiter; si presbyter eadem fecerit, non deponatur, tamen quamdiu vivit, poenitentiam agat.

24 EN in the bare act of homicide, with whatever moderation, it places fault and imposes penance, because hands were laid upon the Image of God.

EN in solo facto homicidii cum quocumque moderamine, ponit culpam, et poenitentiam imponit, eo quod manus iniectae sint in Imaginem Dei.

25 TEXTUS but that passage suscepimus, although it censures the excess of that Monk, yet even if it had been done without excess it condemns it, as a licentious excess, by the argument taken from Christ Lucae 6., on which S. Bonavent. relies. For he says: But since it was better, after the tunic, to leave the cloak and bear the loss of goods, than to blaze so fiercely against others for trifling and transitory things, let this man humbly abstain from the ministry of the Altar, and let each strive to expiate his sin at your discretion. Therefore, even if it had been necessary for the preservation of those goods, as being trifling things compared with the life of man, he decides that the man ought not to have been killed; and he execrates the homicide.

TEXTUS vero ille suscepimus, etsi reprehendat excessum illius Monachi; tamen etiamsi sine excessu id factum fuisset, damnat, tanquam libidinosum excessum, argumento e Christo assumpto Lucae 6. quo nititur S. Bonavent. ait enim: Verum quoniam expediebat potius post tunicam relinquere pallium et rerum sustinere iacturam, quam pro conservandis vilibus rebus, et transitoriis, tam acriter in alios exardescere abstineat iste humiliter ab Altaris ministerio, et uterque peccatum suum ad arbitrium tuum studeat expiare. Itaque etiamsi necessarium fuisset pro illis rebus conservandis, utpote vilibus, si vitae hominis comparentur, non fuisse hominem occidendum decernit; et homicidium execratur.

26 NEQUE do those Canonists of the second opinion satisfy me, who say that this decree concerns Religious only. I grant that it is there written to Religious; but the argument is taken from the Gospel, which binds all by its precept: for it is taken from the order of Charity, which is common to all by the law of nature, namely that for the preservation of worthless things the life of man, which is of a higher order, should not be killed.

NEQUE satisfaciunt Canonistae illi secundae sententiae, qui de solis Religiosis id decretum esse aiunt. Fateor, ibi scribi ad Religiosos; sed argumentum sumptum est ex Evangelio, quod omnes praecepto colligat: sumptum est enim ex ordine Charitatis, qui communis est omnibus iure naturae, ut ob vilia servanda non occidatur vita hominis, quae est altioris ordinis.

27 DEINDE observe that the text does not exclude from irregularity those who kill for the sake of preserving mere riches, unless it is also necessary, in order to save one's life from the robber, to kill him. Therefore the Pontiff says: delivering yourself and yours, etc., as above; and in the Clementina Si furiosus he excepts only the defense of one's own life, and there excuses him who cannot otherwise escape death.

DEINDE observa, textum non excludere ab irregularitate occidentes ad conservandas opes solas, nisi sit necesse etiam ad servandam vitam a Latrone, eum interficere. Ideo Pontifex ait: te, tuaque liberando, etc. ut supra, et in Clementina, Si furiosus solum excepit defensionem propriae vitae; ibique eum, qui mortem aliter vitare non valet, excusat.

28 NEQUE does Fagundez satisfy me, saying num. 15. that in the Clementine it is not said that the slayer, in defense of his goods, becomes irregular. I know it; but the exception confirms the rule, for there he alone is exempted for the defense of life.

NEQUE satisfacit Fagundez dicens num. 15. in Clement. non dici irregularem occidentem ob defensionem opum. Scio; sed exceptio firmat regulam, ibi enim solum pro vitae defensione eximitur.

29 Moreover in cap. 2. de homicidio, he saves only him who had killed while delivering himself and his own. Nor let Fagundez say with Suarez num. 8. that the particle que sounds as vel; for that is contrived gratuitously, above all in decrees which are to be sanctioned, so great is the temerity of changing words, so that they render as exclusive what is expressed as conjunctive.

Deinde in cap. 2. de homicidio, salvat solum eum, qui occiderat, se, suaque liberando. Neque dicat Fagundez cum Suarez num. 8. particulam, que, sonare, vel; hoc enim gratis excogitatur, in decretis maxime sanciendis, adeo verba immutare; ut quae dicunt coniunctivam, exprimant praecisivam.

30 COLLIGE that Bassaeus num. 20. falsely asserts that he may be killed who endeavors to overturn me with falsehoods in a court of judgment, unless you can otherwise prevent him. This is condemned by Alex. VII. on 24 Sept. 1665, as may be seen in the former tome, disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. sect. 18., where also in sect. 2. you have expounded what some ancient Canones, with D. Augustino, thought about killing a nocturnal thief, or even a diurnal one, attacking life with arms.

COLLIGE falso Bassaeum num. 20. asserere, posse occidi, qui falsitatibus in iudicio me conetur evertere, nisi aliter valeas impedire. Hoc damnatur ab Alex. VII. 24. Sept. 1665. uti videri potest tomo priori disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. sect. 18. ubi etiam sect. 2. habes explicatum, quid de fure nocturno occidendo, siue etiam diurno, vitam armis aggrediente senserint veteres aliqui Canones cum D. Augustino.

Doubt IV: Whether, in defense of chastity, it is lawful to kill the assailant

1 LICITUM — that a young man, or a woman, may kill an assaulter of her chastity, when she cannot otherwise defend herself, even if the assaulter be a cleric or a Religious — is affirmed by very many, as gathered by Fagundez in Quintum praeceptum, Lib. 5. cap. 3. num. 24. So Tolet. Lib. 5. summae cap. 6.; Lessius *tom. 1. Augustinus seems to grant it only on account of the danger of consent, because then the soul would perish; and S. Bonaventura holds the same with him, serm. 6. Decalogi.

[3] AT Toletus loco cit. and Sylvest. §. 8., with Fagundez, say that, the danger of consent being removed, one can refrain from killing and endure that injury, which will be doubled before God for a crown; but these two say it is safer to kill, if one can; yet more piously does the Seraphic Doctor admit it only, with D. Augustino, when the danger to the soul from the peril of consent is imminent; so also Bassaeus V. Homic. 1. num. 21.

> AT Toletus loco cit. et Sylvest. §. 8. cum Fagundez, dicunt, praeciso periculo consensus, posse non occidere, et pati illam iniuriam, quae apud Deum duplicabitur ad coronam; hi tamen duo dicunt securius esse occidere, si possit, sed magis pie S. Doctor solum admittit cum D. Augustino imminente periculo animae, per consensus periculum, sic et Bassaeus V. Homic. 1. num. 21.

Question VII: Whether, and how, the duel is unlawful

[1] MONOMACHIAM, or the Duel, S. Bonavent. says in speculo animae, cap. 1., toward the end, is prohibited by the Laws, and has the character of mortal sin, both in the appellants and in the lord by whose authority it is held, and in the procurators and in the combatants fighting for money; and this is clear since it has the character of tempting God, and the weak is overcome by the strong, not by right but by nature. Some say, however, that custom excuses this deed; the contrary of which is commonly held by Theologians and Jurists. Such is S. Bonaventura's account.

An, et quomodo MONOMACHIA sit illicita.

MONOMACHIAM, seu Duellum ait S. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. ad finem, secundum Iura esse prohibitum, et habere rationem mortalis, et in appellatione, et in dominio, cuius authoritate fit, et in procuratoribus, et in pugillis propter pecuniam, et hoc patet cum hoc habeat rationem tentationis divinae, et a forti debilis per naturam vincatur. Dicunt tamen quidam, quod consuetudo excusat in hoc facto, cuius contrarium tenetur communiter a Theologis, et Iurisperitis. Haec S. Bonaventura.

2 DVELLUM is a combat of two or more, by agreement, in a fixed and appointed place and time, to redeem the truth of some matter, or to purge a crime or an imputed infamy. So the Doctors commonly: Sanchez Lib. 2. Decal. cap. 39.; Azor Tom. 3. lib. 2. cap. 5.; Bonacina tract. 3. disp. 11. quaest. 3. puncto 42.

DVELLUM est pugna duorum, vel plurium ex condicto in certo, et conuento loco, et tempore, ad redimendam alicuius rei veritatem, vel ad purgandum crimen, vel infamiam obiectam. Ita communiter Doctores, Sanchez Lib. 2. Decal. cap. 39. Azor Tom. 3. lib. 2. cap. 5. Bonacina tract. 3. disp. 11. quaest. 3. puncto 42.

3 TALE a combat is prohibited by the Church in cap. Monomachiam 2. quaest. 5. et cap. 1. et 2. de purgat. vulgari, and cap. Porro; although the Bishop could dispense in this, provided no death or mutilation of a member followed, as D. Bonavent. relates in confessionali, cap. 5. particula 29.

TALE certamen est prohibitum ab Ecclesia cap. Monomachiam 2. quaest. 5. et cap. 1. et 2. de purgat. vulgari, et cap. Porro*, cum hoc dispensare poterat Episcopus, non secuta morte, vel mutilatione membri alicuius, ut refert D. Bonavent. in confessionali,* cap. 5. particula 29.

4 The Theologians condemn it also, with D. Bonavent. here, and D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. ad 3.

ILLUD damnant etiam Theologi cum D. Bonavent. hic*, et D. Thom.* 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. ad 3.

5 DAMNATUR — the duel is gravely condemned in the Council of Trent sess. 25. cap. 19.. He speaks there of the solemn and public duel, held by the authority of Princes in their States.

DAMNATUR duellum graviter in Concilio Trident. sess. 25. cap. 19. Loquitur autem de solemni duello, et publico, quod Principum authoritate sit in eorum Statu.

6 RURSUS Gregory XIII also condemned the private duel in the Brief ad tollendam detestabilem, in the year 1582. And finally the same was decreed by Clement VIII in the year 1592.

RURSUS Gregorius XIII. etiam privatum duellum damnavit Brevi, ad tollendam detestabilem*, anno 1582. Et tandem idem decrevit Clemens VIII. anno 1592.*

7 FULMINAT — the Council of Trent moreover fulminates excommunication in these words:

FULMINAT autem Concilium Tridentinum excommunicationem his verbis:

8 Detestabilis — The detestable custom of duels, introduced by the contrivance of the Devil, that it might reap the ruin of souls together with the bloody death of bodies, is to be wholly eradicated from the Christian world. Emperors, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Counts, and by whatever other name temporal Lords, who have granted a place for Monomachia in their territories among Christians, are by that very fact excommunicated, and are to be understood as deprived of the jurisdiction and dominion of the city, castle, or place in which or near which they permitted the duel to take place, which the Church claims for herself; and if they be feoffed,

> Detestabilis duellorum usus, fabricante Diabolo, introductus, ut cruenta corporum morte, animarum quoque perniciem lucretur, ex Christiano orbe penitus exterminetur. Imperator, Reges, Duces, Principes, Marchiones, Comites, et quocumque alio nomine, Domini temporales, qui locum ad Monomachiam in terris suis inter Christianos concesserint, eo ipso sint excommunicati, ac iurisdictione, et dominio civitatis, castri, aut loci, in quo, vel apud quem duellum fieri permiserint, quod ab Ecclesia abstinent, privati intelligantur: et si feudalia sint, [9] directis — the lands are at once acquired by the direct Lords. But those who have engaged in the combat, and those who are called their seconds, shall incur the penalty of excommunication and proscription of all their goods, and of perpetual infamy; and as homicides they ought to be punished according to the Sacred Canons. And if they have died in the conflict itself, let them be forever without Ecclesiastical Sepulture. Those also who have given counsel in the cause of a duel, both in law and in fact, or have by any other reason persuaded anyone to it, as well as the spectators, are bound by the chain of excommunication and perpetual Malediction: notwithstanding any privilege whatsoever, or wicked custom, even though immemorial.

> directis Dominis statim acquirantur. Qui vero pugnam commiserint, et qui eorum patrini vocantur, excommunicationis ac bonorum omnium proscriptionis, ac perpetuae infamiae poenam incurrant; et ut homicidae, iuxta Sacros Canones, puniri debeant. Et si in ipso conflictu decesserint, perpetuo careant Ecclesiastica Sepultura. Illi etiam, qui consilium in causa duelli, tam iure, quam facto dederint, aut alia quacumque ratione ad id quemquam suaserint, nec non spectatores, excommunicationis, et perpetuae Maledictionis vinculo teneantur: non obstante quocumque privilegio, seu prava consuetudine, etiam immemorabili.

[10] ADVERTUNT — Fagundez, however, in Quintum praeceptum, Lib. 5. cap. 8. et alii, observes that the excommunication laid by the very fact upon Princes is not reserved, and accordingly can be absolved by any approved Confessor; for whenever the supreme Pontiff imposes an excommunication, if he does not reserve it, it is considered reserved to no one, and any Priest exposed to it can absolve from it, as Delrius noted, lib 4. disq. mag. cap. 4. quest. 4. sect. 2.; Graffis p. p. decis. lib. 4. cap. 23.; Sà V. Excommunicatio, 14.; Sanchez Tom. 1. decal. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 27. et tom. 2. de matrim. disp. 13.; Fagundez loco cit. num. 4.

> ADVERTUNT autem Fagundez in Quintum praeceptum, Lib. 5. cap. 8. et alii*, excommunicationem ipso facto latam in Principes non reservatam esse; atque adeo ab omni Confessario approbato absolvi posse; nam quoties summus Pontifex excommunicationem imponit, si eam non reservat, nulli censetur reservata, et ab ea potest quivis Sacerdos expositus absolvere, ut notarunt Delrius* lib 4. disq. mag. cap. 4. quest. 4. sect. 2. Graffis p. p. decis. lib. 4. cap. 23. Sà V. Excommunicatio, 14. Sanchez Tom. 1. decal. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 27. et tom. 2. de matrim. disp. 13. Fagundez loco cit. num. 4.

[11] ENIM — but Pius IV, in the year of our Lord 1560, in his Constitution, and Clem. VIII in 1592, reserved this excommunication to themselves; and they extend this censure, and the other penalties of the Council, to private duels as well.

> ENIM vero Pius IV anno Domini 1560. in sua Constitutione. et Clem. VIII. 1592. hanc excommunicationem sibi reservarunt, et hanc censuram, caeterasque Concilii poenas ad duella etiam privata extendunt.

[12] POSSUNT — Religious, however, who hold the faculty of absolving from the papal cases, can absolve outside Italy and in Rome itself, as the Sacred Congregation declares, as gathered by Fagundez num. 5. and Diana part. 5. Tract. 14. resol. 102., who says they can be absolved in Sicily, Corsica, and Sardinia, which are probably outside Italy.

> POSSUNT tamen Religiosi, habentes absolutionem casuum Papalium, absolvere extra Italiam, et Romae, ut declarat Sacra Congregatio apud Fagundez num. 5. et Dianam part. 5. Tract. 14. resol. 102. qui ait, posse absolvi in Sicilia, Corsica, et Sardinia, quae probabiliter sunt extra Italiam.

[13] DEINDE — mark further that the excommunication of combatants, seconds, and spectators, in the Council, is not expressly stated to be by the very fact: therefore it is not a latae sententiae penalty — so teach Petrus Navar. Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 32. num. 293. and Rodriquez tomo 1. summae, in 2. edit. cap. 73.

> DEINDE advertas, excommunicationem pugnantium, et Patrinorum, atque spectantium in Concilio non esse expressam ipso facto: Ideo non esse latae sententiae, docent Petrus Navar. Lib. 2. de restit. cap. 32. num. 293. Rodriquez tomo 1. summae, in 2. edit. cap. 73.

[14] EAM — that it is nonetheless laid by law, Suarez holds, de censur. disp. 13. sect. ult. num. 11.; Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 39. num. 26.; Navar. summa Lat. cap. 27. n. 150.; Delrius lib. 4. disq. magic. quaest. 4. sect. 4.; Toletan. 5. summa cap. 6. num. 32.; Sà V. Excommunicatio; Graff. p. p. decis. tract. 4. cap. 23.; Fagundez num. 7. For he seems to suppose the same from what has been said.

> EAM tamen esse iure latam censent Suarez de censur. disp. 13. sect. ult. num. 11. Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 39. num. 26. Navar. summa Lat. cap. 27. n. 150. Delrius lib. 4. disq. magic. quaest. 4. sect. 4. Toletan. 5. summa cap. 6. num. 32. Sà V. Excommunicatio Graff. p. p. decis. tract. 4. cap. 23. Fagundez num. 7. Videtur enim idem ex dictis supponere.

[15] SED — but the dispute is already cut short, for Pius IV and Clem. VIII bind all of them by excommunication latae sententiae.

> SED truncata iam lis est, nam Pius IV. et Clem. VIII. omnes Excommunicatione latae sententiae nodant.

[16] POENAE — the remaining penalties, however, require the sentence of a Judge, even deprivation of sepulture, as many Doctors teach, as gathered by Fagundez. Pius IV adds many other penalties, of which the same holds. Gregory XIII, however, includes also those who command and do not hinder.

> POENAE tamen reliquae requirunt sententiam Iudicis, etiam privatio sepulturae, ut docent DD. multi apud Fagundez. Multas alias addit poenas Pius IV. de quibus idem dic. Gregorius autem XIII. includit etiam mandantes, et non impedientes.

[17] CLEMENS — Clement VIII, moreover, interdicts the places in which a duel is held with the permission of the Lords, whose relaxation he reserves to himself and his successors alone; and because it is a censure, it is incurred by the very fact, as the Doctors commonly teach, as gathered by Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 39. num. 32.

> CLEMENS vero VIII. loca, in quibus duellum fit, permittentibus Dominis interdicit, cuius relaxationem sibi tantum, et successoribus reservat, et quia est censura, incurritur ipso facto, ut docent communiter Doctores apud Sanchez Lib. 2. decal. cap. 39. num. 32.

[18] GRAVITER — I observe, however, gravely, first, with Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 170. sect. 21. §. 190., Fagundez num. 35. and others gathered by him num. 29., against Filliucius tract. 29. cap. 9. num. 176., that the penalties inflicted for dueling are not incurred unless the duel follows. Wherefore if those going to it are removed, it is not incurred. The instigators, however, the relators, and those who intermeddle to promote the duel do incur them, by Clement VIII and Gregory XIII, as gathered by Fagundez num. 29.

> GRAVITER autem adverto primo cum Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 170. sect. 21. §. 190. Fagundez num. 35. et aliis apud eum num. 29. contra Filliucium tract. 29. cap. 9. num. 176. non incurri poenas duello inflictas, nisi sequatur duellum. Quare si euntes removeantur, non incurritur. Incurrunt tamen suasores, relatores, et se ad promovendum duellum immiscientes, ex Clement. VIII. et Gregorio XIII. apud Fagundez num. 29.

19 ADVERTO — I observe secondly that some say it is lawful to hold a duel to protect life, so that force may repel force: but this is altogether false, as is commonly taught by Sanchez Tomo 1. decal. Lib. 2. cap. 39., Valencia, and others. Hurtado imagines a case indeed, which seems to me rather metaphysical than practical. See Diana part. 5. Tract. 14. resol. 99., who refutes him.

> ADVERTO secundo, aliquos dicere, ad tuendam vitam licere duellum, ut vim vi repellat: Sed falsum omnino est, ut docent communiter apud Sanchez Tomo 1. decal. Lib. 2. cap. 39. Valentiam, et alios. Casum vero imaginatur Hurtados, qui mihi potius Metaphysicus est, quam practicus. Vide Dianam part. 5. Tract. 14. resol. 99. qui eum refellit.

20 NEQUE — nor is a duel lawful to protect honor, the Doctors cry out commonly, as gathered by Sanchez cap. 39. num. 9.; Azor tract. 3. lib. 2. cap. 4. quaest. 6.; Fagundez num. 39. Alex. VII defined this in the decree of 1665, as I noted, set forth and proved in the place cited at the end of question 3.

> NEQUE ob tuendum honorem licere duellum, clamant communiter Doctores apud Sanchez cap. 39. num. 9. Azor tract. 3. lib. 2. cap. 4. quaest. 6. Fagundez num. 39. Id definivit Alex. VII. decreto 1665. uti notavi, edito et probavi loco ad finem quaestionis 3. citato.

21 PROPONIT — Diana, however, proposes the question part. 5. tract. 13. resol. 27.: whether, if the accuser offers a purgative duel, an innocent man may accept it in order to protect temporal goods, or his life, or a part of his body, which he would otherwise lose through the malice of the judge and of the accuser.

> PROPONIT autem Diana part. 5. tract. 13. resol. 27. An, si accusator offerat duellum purgativum, possit innocens illud acceptare ad tuenda bona temporalia, aut vitam, aut partem corporis, quam aliter amitteret ex malitia iudicis; et accusatoris.

22 Negative — Negative answers are given by Lessius lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 8. num. 47.; Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 29. num. 144.; Suarez de Charitate, disp. 13. sect. ult. num. 5.; Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 3. ad 3.; Abul. primo Reg cap. 17. quaest. ult.; Salon 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 3. controu. 3.

> Negative respondent Lessius lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 8. num. 47. Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 29. num. 144. Suarez de Charitate, disp. 13. sect. ult. num. 5. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 3. ad 3. Abul. primo Reg cap. 17. quaest. ult. Salon 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 3. controu. 3.

23 ASSERUNT — but Sanchez affirms it, in summa, tomo 1. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 7.; Bannes 1. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. dub. 4.; Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. ad 1. et in summa, V. Duellum.; Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 70. sect. 8. §. 170.; and others, as gathered by Fagundez num. 41. et 44.

> ASSERUNT vero Sanchez in summa, tomo 1. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 7. Bannes 1. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. dub. 4. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 95. art. 8. ad 1. et in summa, V. Duellum. Hurtado 2. 2. disp. 70. sect. 8. §. 170. et alii apud Fagundez num. 41. et 44.

[24] PROBANT — they prove it because this is not a duel but just defense; for since it is lawful to kill an unjust despoiler of one's goods, the acceptance of a duel of this kind will also be just.

> PROBANT, quia hoc non est duellum, sed iusta defensio; cum enim licet occidere iniustum direptorem bonorum; iusta etiam erit acceptatio huiuscemodi duelli.

[25] SED — but these men do not read the reasoning of D. Bonavent., who rebukes them: for this mode of defense is absurd and tempts God; for the innocent can easily be slain by the wicked, and it is not a just defense of the goods of a lower order to demand a life, and — what is more insane — to expose even one's own life to the peril of death.

> SED non legunt hi rationem D. Bonavent. qui eos redarguit: nam defensionis modus iste ineptus est, et tentat Deum; potest enim facile innocens iniquo occidi, et non est haec iusta defensio bonorum inferioris ordinis, exigere vitam, et quod magis insanum, vitam etiam propriam discrimini mortis exponere.

[26] Hinc — Hence Diana smiles wrongly, when he says that one may even accept a duel for the protection of honors and public offices.

> Hinc male Diana arridet, etiam acceptare posse duellum ad honores, et munera publica tuenda.

[27] Neque — Nor does the opinion of Hurtadi 2. 2. disp. 170. sect. 9. §. 82. prove to my mind, that an innocent man may offer single combat to his accuser when he cannot otherwise protect himself and his own; with him adhere Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. dub. 4. Sanchez tomo 1. sum. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 7. Petrus Nauar. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 3. num. 289. Valentia tomo 3. disp. 3. quaest. 17. puncto 1. Nutilius 2. 2. tract. de Charitate, quaest. 17. art. 1.

> Neque probatur mihi opinio Hurtadi 2. 2. disp. 170. sect. 9. §. 82. posse innocentem criminatori offerre singulare certamen, quando non potest alia ratione se, suaque tueri, cui adhaerent Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. dub. 4. Sanchez tomo 1. sum. Lib. 2. cap. 39. num. 7. Petrus Nauar. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 3. num. 289. Valentia tomo 3. disp. 3. quaest. 17. puncto 1. Nutilius 2. 2. tract. de Charitate, quaest. 17. art. 1.

[28] Errant — They are perfectly in error, for, as D. Bonavent. says, they do not have the conditions of necessity with the moderation of blameless self-defense, since other ways lie open for their defense; and this one is assumed whereby they lose the valid protection of Justice, if the innocent man casts himself into the peril of death, repelling the aggressor only in a foolish manner, tempting God, and desiring that his own life and innocence be preserved from wounds — all of which, in my judgment, sound foolish, as the S. Doctor argues, and with him very many, as gathered by Fagundez num. 47.

> Errant perfecte, nam, ut ait D. Bonavent. non habent conditiones, necessitas moderamini inculpatae tutelae, cum aliae viae pateant suae defensioni, et haec assumatur, qua validam Iustitiae protectionem perdat, si se discrimini mortis innocens abiiciat, aggressorem modo repellat stulto, tentando Deum, et volendo, ut sua vita, et innocentia a vulneribus praeservetur, quae omnia meo iudicio fatuum sonant, ut arguit S. Doctor, et cum eo plurimi apud Fagundez num. 47.

[29] Utinam — Would that the zealots for honor would attend to the fact that they are to be proclaimed infamous by the Church, accursed, and cast out for burial like an ass's. These would best satisfy the cartel by saying that they are Christians, to whom the Duel is forbidden because of infamy, as Bassaeus says, V. Homicidium 1. num. 15.

> Utinam honorum zelatores attenderent, se infames proclamatos ab Ecclesia, maledictos, et in sepulturam asini proiectos iri. Optime hi satisfacerent cartello, dicendo, se Christianos esse, quibus infamiae Duellum vetitur, ut ait Bassaeus, V.

Homicidium 1. num. 15.

30 Sane — Ludovicus XIII. Iustus, rightly acclaimed by the supreme Pontiff Urbano VIII., sanctioned in the most flourishing Empire of Gaul that law worthy of golden tablets: that those who engage in a duel, sealed with the mark of perpetual infamy, after death inflicted by the executioner, should carry with them to Orcus the eternal disgrace of their glory. Most prudently did that glorious Monarch restrain the generous spirits of the Gauls from the more frequent slaughter of their own people. As some Orator shrewdly expounds, it was a device truly not unlike that by which the African peoples drew back the Lions from slaughter, hanging very many from the branches of trees and exposing them strangled. For the Generous Progeny indeed attended that spectacle of infamy, nor did the offspring of the Lion, seeing their fathers hanging from the gallows, ever return again to waylay merchants and travelers on those roads. They too likewise rested, nor did they lead their lion cubs on to the slaughter.

> Sane Ludovicus XIII. Iustus merito a summo Pontifice Urbano VIII. acclamatus, legem illam, aureis laminis dignam, sancivit in florentissimo Galliae Imperio, ut qui duellum inierint, perpetuae notae infamiae obsignati, post mortem a carnifice inflictam, aeternum gloriae dedecus secum ferant ad orcum. Prudentissime gloriosus ille Monarcha generosos Gallorum animos coërcuit a frequentiore suorum clade. Industrie excogitatum, ut Orator quidam edisserit, illi profecto non absimile, quo Africanae gentes Leones a caedibus retraxere, plurimos ex arborum ramis suspensos, strangulatosque exponentes. Sane Generosa Progenies spectaculo illi infamiae attendit, nec unquam Leoninae proles videntes patres furcis pendulos, ad insidiandum in viis illis mercatoribus, et peregrinis rediere. Quievere pariter et illi, nec Leunculos suos deduxerunt ad stragem.

31 Audiant — Let them hear, therefore, the penalties inflicted upon duels by the new law of the Council of Trent, of Pius IV, Gregory XIII, and Clement VIII. Of these five are spiritual: first, Excommunication latae sententiae, reserved to the supreme Pontiff. Second, Deprivation of Ecclesiastical sepulture, if they die in the duel. Third, Interdict upon those places in which the duel was held, with the knowledge of their Lords. Fourth, Deprivation of ecclesiastical dignities and benefices, if they were Ecclesiastical persons. Fifth, Inability to obtain those and other things.

> Audiant ergo poenas, duellis inflictas Iure novo Concilii Trident. Pii IV. Gregorii XIII. et Clem. VIII. Quarum quinque sunt spirituales: Excommunicatio latae sententiae, summo Pontifici reservata. Secunda, Privatio Ecclesiasticae sepulturae, si in duello decesserint. Tertia, Interdictum pro his locis, in quibus, scientibus Dominis illorum, duellum commissum est. Quarta, Privatio dignitatum, et beneficiorum Ecclesiasticorum, si fuerint personae Ecclesiasticae. Quinta, Inhabilitas ad illa, et alia obtinenda.

32 Quinque — Five also are temporal. The first is deprivation of States and dominion for those Princes who are subject to the Roman Church; or deprivation of the jurisdiction and dominion of the place in which the duel is held, for other Princes not subject. Second, the crime of Lèse-majesté. Third, rebellion. Fourth, confiscation of all goods. Fifth, perpetual infamy.

> Quinque etiam temporales sunt. Prima est privatio statuum, et dominii pro iis principibus, qui sunt subiecti Romanae Ecclesiae; vel privatio iurisdictionis, et dominii eius loci in quo duellum committitur pro aliis principibus non subiectis. Secunda, crimen Laesae Maiestatis. Tertia, rebellio. Quarta, confiscatio omnium bonorum. Quinta, perpetua infamia.

33 Omnes — All the temporal penalties require the sentence of a Judge in order to be incurred, likewise also the spiritual, except Excommunication and Interdict, as Fagundez proves at length, num. 51., in accordance with what I proved in Tract. de Legibus, disputatione 5. quaestione 7.

Omnes poenae temporales egent sententia Iudicis, ut incurrantur, similiter et spirituales, exceptis Excommunicatione, et Interdicto, ut late probat Fagundez num. 51. iuxta probata a me Tract. de Legibus, disputatione 5. quaestione 7.

Question VIII: Whether it is lawful for a husband to kill a wife caught in adultery, and a father his daughter, and a brother his sister, together with the seducer

1 Although the decision of this Difficulty does not need further proof, since the Decree of Alexander VII has provided that it should not hereafter be asserted affirmatively by anyone, as has been seen tract. de actibus humanis disp. 17. quaest. 10. sect. 19., yet so that it may become known how excellently the Seraphic Doctor taught this truth, we shall discuss it here.

Licet huius Difficultatis decisio ulteriori probatione non egeat, cum Decreto Alexandri VII. cautum sit, ut ne imposterum a nullo assertive proponatur, ut visum est tract. de actibus humanis disp. 17. quaest. 10. sect. 19. ut tamen prope modum innotescat, quam optime Seraphicus hanc veritatem edocuerit, eam hic discutiemus.

2 And indeed first in this case, worthy of compassion, husbands are permitted by civil law to loosen with impunity the reins of anger even to bloodshed; and indeed the expounders of the laws everywhere say that this was permitted on account of the hardness of heart, or even sometimes out of commiseration.

Et quidem primo in hoc casu, miseratione digno, mariti iure civili permittuntur froena irae impune ad sanguinem laxare; et sane id ad cordis duritiam vel etiam aliquando ad commiserationem permissum esse legum expositores passim dictitant.

3 By Caesarian law, however, it was not permitted to kill in adultery an adulterer unless he were vile and infamous. Therefore a husband could kill a vile adulterer in his own house, not elsewhere, Lex, maritus, ff. de adulteriis, and he was bound to admonish the lover in writing, when caught by indications, as Couar. 4. Decret. 2. part. cap. 7. §. 7. teaches. If the husband was vile, and the lover noble, the one killing him was condemned to the mines. But if the husband was an honorable person, killing a noble adulterer, he was banished to an island, Lex, si adulterium cum incestu, §. Imperatores, ff. de adult., or was sent into exile for years, to be fixed at the judge's discretion, Lex Gracchus, Cod. de adulter. See Iulium Clarum §. sent. §. homicidium, num. 49.

Iure tamen Caesareo non permittebatur, nisi adulter esset vilis, et infamis, in adulterio cum uxore interficere. Ideo maritus poterat interficere adulterum vilem in domo sua, non alibi, Lex, maritus, ff. de adulteriis, et tenebatur in scriptis admonuisse proco, inditiis comprehensum, ut docet Couar. 4. Decret. 2. part. cap. 7. §. 7. Si maritus erat vilis, et procus nobilis, hunc occidens damnabatur ad metalla. Si vero maritus erat honesta persona, occidens adulterum nobilem, relegabatur in insulam, Lex, si adulterium cum incestu, §. Imperatores, ff. de adult. vel mittebatur in exilium per annos, arbitrio iudicis taxandos Lex Gracchus, Cod. de adulter. Vide Iulium Clarum §. sent. §. homicidium, num. 49.

4 By the law of Castile it is permitted absolutely to kill an adulterer and wife caught in adultery, Lib. 3. tit. 20. Lib. 8. novae Recopil.

Iure Castellae permittitur absolute adulterum, et uxorem, deprehensos in adulterio, perimere Lib. 3. tit. 20. Lib. 8. novae Recopil.

5 By Portuguese law the same is permitted, Lib. 5. nova ordin. tit. 38., except that the husband be vile; and the adulterer noble, for then he is banished for a time to Africa.

> Iure Lusitano idem permittitur Lib. 5. nova ordin. tit. 38. nisi tamen maritus sit vilis; et adulter nobilis, quia sic relegatur ad tempus in Africam.

6 Indeed by this law a certain husband can kill the adulterer outside the very act, loco cit., and by the same law he can call in helpers, provided they are not otherwise enemies of the adulteress or of the lovers.

> Imo iure hoc potest maritus certus, adulterum extra factum occidere loco cit. eodemque iure potest advocare adiutores, nisi tamen alioqui sint inimici adulterae, vel proci.

7 Nor can they be killed with impunity only in the act of intercourse with the adulterer, according to all the laws related above, but even if they are caught in the acts immediately disposing to it, for instance embraces, etc., as the Doctors commonly say, cited in Fagundez L. 5. cap. 10. num. 7.

> Neque solum in coitu adultero possunt impune occidi secundum omnia relata iura, sed etiamsi deprehendantur in actibus proxime disponentibus, puta amplexibus; etc. ut communiter Doctores aiunt apud Fagundez L. 5. cap. 10. num. 7.

8 The same is granted to a Father in the case of an adulterous daughter, Leg. Patri, ff. de adulter, provided she is in his power, and he kills her in his own house, and kills the son-in-law together with her, and at the same time the daughter along with the lover: but all others are excluded, whether uncles, or brothers, old women, etc.

> Idem conceditur Patri in filiam adulteram Leg. Patri, ff. de adulter, si tamen sit in potestate patris, et eam occidat in domo sua, et generi, et simul etiam filiam cum proco perimat: excluduntur porto alii, sive patrui, sive fratres, anus, etc.

9 Except the ravisher, for in a case of rape caught in flagrant crime all the blood relatives, guardians, patrons, and masters may kill the ravisher, L. 1. §. Ne igitur, Cod. de raptu Virginum.

> Excipe raptum, quia in raptus flagranti crimine possunt raptorem occidere omnes consanguinei, tutores, patroni, domini L. 1. §. Ne igitur, Cod. de raptu Virginum.

10 If, however, the husband is also an adulterer, many say the injury is compensated, and an equal one rendered in return, and consequently he cannot kill his adulterous wife. So Henriquez lib. 11. de matrim. cap. 17. num. 3. litt. F. Couar. 4. Decret. 2. part. §. 7. num. 7. Rodriquez Tom. 1. sum. cap. 206. et alii.

> Si tamen maritus etiam sit adulter, multi dicunt, iniuriam compensari, et par reddi, atque adeo non posse occidere uxorem adulteram. Ita Henriquez lib. 11. de matrim. cap. 17. num. 3. litt. F. Couar. 4. Decret. 2. part. §. 7. num. 7. Rodriquez Tom. 1. sum. cap. 206. et alii.

11 Yet the others still hold that he can, because the injury and the right are not equal, except with regard to divorce. Therefore it is granted to accuse the adulterous wife criminally, but not the husband to the wife, Leg. 1. Cod. ad Leg. Iul. de adult. Whence the Saintly Doctor does not argue from an equal but from a similar injury in tertio argumento.

> Enim vero caeteri adhuc sustinent, posse, quia non est par iniuria, et ius, nisi ad divortium. Ideo vero conceditur accusare criminaliter uxorem adulteram, non tamen uxori virum Leg. 1. Cod. ad Leg. Iul. de adult. Unde S. Doctor non arguit a pari, sed a simili iniuriae in tertio argumento.

12 But our QUESTION is: whether this is licit in conscience.

> QUAESTIO autem nostra est; an id liceat in conscientia.

13 The FIRST opinion affirms it, provided it be done not from the bitterness of vengeance but from zeal for justice: Gomez leg. 8. Tauri, num. 52., Menchaca Lib. 1. controv. cap. 6., Castello l. 82. Tauri, Ayeued. Lib. 8. recopil. tit. 20. lib. 1. et lib. 4. tit. 10. Lib. 1. num. 21., Sa V. Homicid. num. 15., Iul. Clarus L. S. sent. §. Homicid. num. 50.; and there can also be cited the chapter Admonere, 13. quaest. 2., where: Non manifesti eum, cum alio rem nefariam facientem. Therefore if he had found him, he would have killed him without fault. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 5. num. 16. judges it not improbable, and Basil. Poncius L. 9. de matrim. cap. 11. testifies that in his time many Salmantic theologians subscribed to it.

> PRIMA sententia affirmat, dummodo non livore vindictae, sed zelo iustitiae id praestetur, Gomez leg. 8. Tauri, num. 52. Menchaca Lib. 1. controv. cap. 6. Castello l. 82. 15 Therefore it must be asserted most absolutely with this opinion, that a Husband cannot so kill his wife.

> ASSERENDUM igitur absolutissime cum hac sententia, non posse Maritum ita uxorem occidere.

16 It is PROVED by D. Bonaventure from cap. Inter haec 33. quaest. 2., where Nicholas I says: Licere secundum leges mundanas, non tamen secundum Ecclesiasticas, uxorem adulteram impune interficere.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. ex cap. Inter haec 33. quaest. 2. ubi Nicolaus I. ait: Licere secundum leges mundanas, non tamen secundum Ecclesiasticas, uxorem adulteram impune interficere.

17 It is PROVED second by the Saintly Doctor, because the civil laws permit this only as commiserating, or on account of the hardness of heart; but laws permitting something to be done do not excuse from fault in the forum of heaven, namely of conscience, even if they excuse in the forum of the earth, because the forum of conscience, especially in causes touching sacred contracts, belongs wholly in what is internal to the Church, as I also proved from the Seraphic Doctor in the place cited at the beginning. Indeed in many other cases it is established that the civil laws permit things that are mortal sins in conscience; such as public prostitutes, and other things which Tiraquellus enumerates, lib 9. connubiali, num. 1. But they permit prostitutes in order to avoid greater crimes, adultery, sodomy, etc.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore, quia leges civiles, solum commiserantes, vel ad cordis duritiem id permittunt; At leges permittentes fieri aliquid non excusant a culpa in foro Poli, scilicet conscientiae, esto excusent in foro Soli, quia forum conscientiae, maxime in causis tangentibus sacros contractus, (spectat in toto interno ad Ecclesiam, ut etiam a Seraphico probavi loco initio citato. Imo in multis aliis constat, leges civiles permittere, quae in conscientia sunt mortalia; ut meretrices publicas, et alia, quae recenset Tiraquellus lib 9. connubiali, num. 1. Permittunt autem meretrices ad maiora crimina vitanda, adulterii, sodomiae, etc.

18 It is PROVED third, because it is most unjust to condemn to death with the party unheard, especially in the New Testament. Wherefore Christ refused to condemn the adulteress at the first accusation of the Pharisees, Ioan. 8., as the Saintly Doctor observes.

> PROBATUR tertio, quia iniquissimum est, parte inaudita, morte damnare, maxime in nouo testamento. Quare Christus ad primam Pharisaeorum accusationem noluit adulteram condemnare Ioan. 8. ut observat S. Doctor.

19 Wherefore a Judge would act most unjustly who, before a juridical sentence, would hand over the wife and the lovers to be killed by the husband.

> QUAPROPTER iniquissime ageret Iudex, qui, ante iuridicam sententiam, traderet marito uxorem, et procos perimendos.

20 You will OBJECT first, Exodi 22. Maleficos non patieris vivere.

> OBIICIES primo Exodi 22. Maleficos non patieris vivere.

21 The Saintly Doctor ANSWERS, that it was a Judicial law, whose force vanished in the Gospel. Moreover it addresses Moses, the legitimate Judge, that he might punish the guilty once the case was formally constituted.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, fuisse legem Iudicialem, cuius vigor in Euangelio evanuit. Deinde alloquitur Moysen, Iudicem legitimum, ut formata causa reos puniret.

22 You will OBJECT second. Civil laws are just, if granted by the Church. But this Law was granted by the Church, and therefore cap. Inter haec it is not condemned, but it is only said: Sancta Ecclesia mundanis non constringitur legibus, nec gladium habet, nisi spiritualem, as D. Bonaventure notes, fundamento 1.

> OBIICIES secundo. Leges civiles iustae sunt, si ab Ecclesia concessae. Haec autem Lex ab Ecclesia concessa est, et ideo cap. Inter haec*, non damnatur sed solum dicitur:* Sancta Ecclesia mundanis non constringitur legibus, nec gladium habet, nisi spiritualem*, ut notat D. Bonavent.* fundamento 1.

23 D. Bonaventure ANSWERS, and with him many, that many civil laws are permitted by the Church in order to remove greater evils, as I said. Therefore they uphold this one to ward off innumerable adulteries by terrors. He adds that this law seems to have been abrogated by the Church when it declared it to be unjust to kill a wife caught in adultery. But that it did not abrogate it expressly, that is, because it seemed enough to declare it unjust according to the laws of the earth, or of the world, not of heaven, and of God.

> RESPONDET D. Bonavent. et cum eo multi, multas leges civiles permitti ab Ecclesia ad maiora mala removenda, ut dixi. Hanc igitur sustinent ad innumera adulteria, terroribus arcenda. Addit, videri hanc legem ab Ecclesia abrogatam, dum declarat, esse iniquum, uxorem in adulterio comprehensem necare. Quod vero eam non abroget expresse, id est, quia satis visum est id declarare iniquum, et secundum Leges Soli, seu mundi, non Poli, et Dei.

24 You will OBJECT third: in can. 33. quaest. 2. it is said: Interfectores suarum coniugum, sine iudicio (when there is not added: adulterarum, or anything of the sort) quid aliud habendi sunt, quam homicidae: therefore, if adulterarum is added, they do not seem to be homicides.

> OBIICIES tertio can. 33. quaest. 2. dicitur: Interfectores suarum coniugum, sine iudicio (cum non additur: adulterarum, vel aliquid huiusmodi) quid aliud habendi sunt, quam homicidae: ergo, si additur: adulterarum, non videntur homicidae.

25 The Saintly Doctor ANSWERS, that he is speaking according to human laws; for such a man, since he kills without cause and outside of judgment, is considered a homicide; but if he does it through a judgment and for cause, he is not judged a homicide according to human laws: but according to canonical law, by which marriages must be governed as by their proper law, they are considered homicides, as Nicholas P. defines in cap. sequenti.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor, ibi loqui secundum leges humanas, talis enim ex quo sine causa, et extra iudicium occidit, censetur homicida; sed si per iudicium, et ex causa faciat, non iudicatur homicida secundum iura humana: Sed secundum ius canonicum, quo debent matrimonia regi, ut iure proprio, censentur homicidae, ut definit Nicolaus P. cap. sequenti.

26 From the doctrine of this argument gather that for adultery unto the punishment of blood only the secular judge is competent, as Nicholas declares above. But as to other punishments, it is of mixed forum; and therefore the place of prevention is given. In the cause of divorce, however, only the Ecclesiastical Judge is competent to pass judgment upon adultery. So Ioan. de Heuia in curia Philip. part. 5. §. num. 20. de spons. part. 2. cap. 7. §. 7. num. 12., Pereira in L. si curatorem, ver. laesis, num. 22., Suarez de Paz in praxi, tract. 2. prael. 2. num. 31., Miranda in ord. iud. tract. 1. quaest. 1. art. 5. concl. 6. et 7., Martha de iurisdict. part. 2. cap. 19., Vincentius de Franco decis. 312., Ceuallos de cognit. per viam violent. part. 2. quaest. 8., Riccius part. 5. collect. 2076., Farinac. num. 53. quaest. 2., Diana *part. 1. > Ex doctrina huius argumenti collige, de adulterio ad poenam sanguinis solum iudicem saecularem esse competentem, ut declarat Nicolaus supra. Quo ad alias vero poenas, est mixti fori; et ideo datur locus praeventionis. In causa vero divortii solus Iudex Ecclesiasticus est competens, ad cognoscendum de adulterio. Ita Ioan. de Heuia in curia Philip. part. 5. §. num. 20. de spons. part. 2. cap. 7. §. 7. num. 12. Pereira in L. si curatorem, ver. laesis, num. 22. Suarez de Paz in praxi, tract. 2. prael. 2. num. 31. Miranda in ord. iud. tract. 1. quaest. 1. art. 5. concl. 6. et 7. Martha de iurisdict. part. 2. cap. 19. Vincentius de Franco decis. 312. Ceuallos de cognit. per viam violent.

part. 2. quaest. 8. Riccius part. 5. collect. 2076. Farinac. num. 53. quaest. 2. Diana part. 1. Tract. de immunitate Ecclesiae, resol. 86. Germon. de sacrorum immun. lib. 3. cap. 12. num. 58. Sanchez de matrim. tract. 3. lib. 10. disput. 8. num. 15. Quare fallitur Decius consil. 212. credens, quod si simul agatur de divortio, et amissione dotis, sit mixti fori.

27 Indeed, even if only the separation of spouses for a time is at issue, as on account of leprosy, etc., it belongs to the sole Judge of the Church, against Rupellan. forens. instit. Galliae, lib. 1. cap. 25. And if at any time divorce is treated before an ecclesiastical judge, the question of alimony and of the dowry to be lost, as accessory, pertains to the same forum. See Barbosa de potest. Episcopi, part. 3. allegat. 84.

IMO, etiam si de sola separatione coniugum ad tempus agatur, ut ob lepram, etc. ad solum Iudicem Ecclesiae spectat, contra Rupellan. forens. instit. Galliae, lib. 1. cap. 25. Et si quando ageretur de divortio, coram iudice Ecclesiastico, quaestio alimentorum, et dotis amittendae, tanquam accessoria, pertinent ad forum eundem. Vide Barbosam de potest. Episcopi, part. 3. allegat. 84.

28 GATHER second, as the Saintly Doctor says in corpore, that it is against even the civil laws to kill a wife outside the flagrant crime of intercourse; but it has been added by the Doctors that those laws are not violated if she is killed amid kisses, for the Laws speak expressly of adultery alone, in which the Doctors judge that even acts nearest to the last are comprehended. So Barbosa L. 2. initio part. 1. num. 7. ff. soluto matrim., Molina de Iust. Tom. 4. tract. 3. disput. 91. num. 8., Suarez de censur. disp. 1. sect. 1. num. 37., Sylvester V. Excommunicatio, 6. num. 6. §. 10., Angel. ibi §. num. 19.

COLLIGE secundo, quod ait S. Doctor in corpore*, esse contra iura etiam civilia occidere uxorem extra flagrans crimen coitus; sed additum est a Doctoribus, non violari ea iura, si occidatur inter oscula, nam Iura de solo adulterio loquuntur expresse, in quo censent DD. comprehendi etiam actus ultimo proximos. Ita Barbosa* L. 2. initio part. 1. num. 7. ff. soluto matrim. Molina de Iust. Tom. 4. tract. 3. disput. 91. num. 8. Suarez de censur. disp. 1. sect. 1. num. 37. Sylvester V. Excommunicatio, 6. num. 6. §. 10. Angel. ibi §. num. 19.

29 If, however, it is a blood relative of the wife kissing or embracing her, he is not considered as toward evil, as Farinac. notes, tract. 4. quaest. 121., Fagundez num. 7.

Si tamen sit consanguineus uxoris eam osculans, vel amplexans, non censetur ad malum, ut notat Farinac. tract. 4. quaest. 121. Fagundez num. 7.

30 GATHER third, that husbands are not prohibited by ecclesiastical law from accusing their adulterous wives, as I said above; for secular power was instituted for this, which carries the sword not without cause, as the Saintly Doctor notes here, and especially sermone 6. in Decalogum, from the Apostle, Rom. 13: Non enim sine causa gladium portat, that is, jurisdiction, as Fagundez also says, num. 16.

COLLIGE tertio non prohiberi iure Ecclesiastico maritis accusare adulteras suas uxores, ut supra dixi; ad hoc enim instituta est secularis potestas, quae non sine causa gladium portat, ut advertit S. Doctor hic*, et praecipue* sermone 6. in Decalogum*, ex Apostolo Rom. 13.* Non enim sine causa gladium portat*, idest iurisdictionem, ut ait etiam Fagundez* num. 16.

31 GATHER fourth, that a Judge cannot, before a juridically rendered sentence, hand over to the husband the wife to be killed; but if he hands her over afterward: let the husband beware of the appetite of vengeance, which is nevertheless arduous; then it is unseemly to play the executioner.

COLLIGE quarto, non posse Iudicem, ante latam iuridice sententiam, tradere marito uxorem occidendam; sed si postea tradat: caveat maritus ab appetitu vindictae, quod tamen est arduum; deinde indecorum est, carnificem agere.

32 NOTE, however, that in the cases in which a man is permitted to kill his adulterous wife with the lover, and a father his married adulterous daughter, the canonical law spares the malediction, so that the killer is not marked with excommunication if the lover be a cleric, nor with irregularity, cap. si vero, de sent. excom., and thus, although they sin mortally, they do not incur the censures, so Suarez de censur. disp. 22. sect. 1., Sylvester V. excom. 6. num. 6. et alii.

ADVERTE autem, in casibus, quibus permittitur viro uxorem adulteram cum proco occidere, et patri filiam nuptam adulteram, parcere ius canonicum maledictioni, ita ut non innotet interfectorem excommunicatione, si procus sit clericus, neque irregularitate cap. si vero, de sent. excom. et ita, licet mortaliter peccent, non incurrunt censuras, ita Suarez de censur. disp. 22. sect. 1. Sylvester V. excom. 6. num. 6. et alii.

33 I add as a crowning point, that many speak most falsely, saying that a father can kill a daughter, or a husband a pregnant wife, according to the laws: for they do not permit the same against the innocent, as Baiardus notes, in addit ad Clarum, § homic. num. 167., Farinac. in praxi, tract. 4. quaest. 121. num. 5.

Addo pro coronide, falsissime loqui multos, dicentes, posse partem filiam, vel maritum uxorem praegnantem occidere secundum iura: non enim permittunt eaedem insontis, ut notant Baiardus in addit ad Clarum, § homic. num. 167. Farinac. in praxi, tract. 4. quaest. 121. num. 5.

34 But the reasoning of Fagundez num. 32. is ridiculous, because the offspring in the womb is considered one thing with the mother. For first the soul of the infant perishes eternally, which does not pertain to the mother.

RIDICULA est autem ratio Fagundez num. 32. quia partus in utero censetur una res cum matre. Primo enim perit anima infantis in aeternum, quae non spectat ad matrem.

35 Then the laws also distinguish very much the one who kills a pregnant woman, because although the fetus is materially one thing, nevertheless there are two things distinct in judgment; otherwise, if the mother died in grace, the infant also would be saved without baptism. Nor in this can human law be buried, so as to concede the death and damnation of an innocent little boy, not subject to its laws, outside the moral state. Alas, how many paths to impiety are opened from this!

DEINDE leges etiam valde distinguunt occidentem mulierem gravidam, quia licet foetus materialiter una res sit, tamen sunt duae res in iudicio diversae; alioqui moriente matre in gratia, salvaretur etiam infans sine baptismo. Neque in hoc ius humanum potest innehi, ut concedat mortem, et damnationem innocentis pueruli, non subditi suis legibus, extra moralem statum. Eheu quot hinc impietati viae apertae!

36 Finally, Fagundez himself, L. 5. cap. 12. num. 27. Therefore he denies that it is not licit for a pregnant mother to kill the fetus in order to save her own life.

TANDEM ipse Fagundez L. 5. cap. 12. num. 27. Ideo negat, non licere matri gravidae occidere foetum, ut propriam vitam salvet.

Question IX: Whether it is lawful to kill oneself

1 § D. Thom. quaest. 64. art 5.

An liceat seipsum interimere.

§ D. Thom. quaest. 64. art 5.

2 The killer of himself is proclaimed unjust by D. Bonaventura in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. litt. and D. Thom. here; all follow them, as Farinac. reports, Tom. 4. quaest. 128., Fagundez in quintum praeceptum decal. cap. 11.

INTERFECTOR sui ipsius iniquus proclamatur a D. Bonaventura in 3. dist. 37. dub. 5. litt. D. Thom. hic; quos omnes sequuntur, ut refert Farinac. Tom. 4. quaest. 128. Fagundez in quintum praeceptum decal. cap. 11.

3 It is PROVED by the Saintly Doctors from the fifth precept, Non occides, by which precept every unjust killing of a man is prohibited; but none is more unjust than against oneself; because, as D. Bonavent. says, in 3. dist. 29. quaest. 3., Fundamento I., Qui sibi nequam est, cui alii bonus erit? Ecclesiastici 14.

PROBATUR a SS. DD. ex quinto praecepto, Non occides, quo praecepto, omnis iniqua occisio hominis prohibetur; nulla autem magis iniqua, quam in seipsum; quia ut ait D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 29. quaest. 3. Fundamento I. Qui sibi nequam est, cui alii bonus erit? Ecclesiastici 14.

4 But the UNHAPPY man who kills himself, that he may obtain rest, is destined to eternal punishments without rest, as the Seraphic Doctor says, in 3. dist. 28. dub. 2.; indeed he is deprived of the rest of burial, as was defined in the Council of Braga, cap. 34., and it is related in cap. Placuit, dist. 23. quaest. 5.: Placuit, ut qui sibi ipsis, aut per ferrum, aut per venenum, aut per praecipitium, aut suspendium, aut quolibet modo, violentam inferunt mortem, nulla pro eis in oblatione commemoratio fiat; neque cum Psalmis ad sepulturam cadavera eorum deducantur.

INFOELIX autem, qui seipsum interimit, ut requiem consequatur, aeternis poenis destinatur sine requie, ut ait Seraphicus in 3. dist. 28. dub. 2. imo requie sepulturae privatur, ut definitum est in Concilio Bracharensi cap. 34. et refertur, cap. Placuit, dist. 23. quaest. 5. Placuit, ut qui sibi ipsis, aut per ferrum, aut per venenum, aut per praecipitium, aut suspendium, aut quolibet modo, violentam inferunt mortem, nulla pro eis in oblatione commemoratio fiat; neque cum Psalmis ad sepulturam cadavera eorum deducantur.

5 I ADD, however; for this punishment to be incurred it is required that he involve himself in full judgment; For if he does it in a frenzy, indeed pious Mother Church has compassion on him. But if there is doubt, he is not to be deprived of Ecclesiastical Sepulture, but is to be conducted with lesser ceremony; for instance with one or two Priests accompanying. So very many, whom Farinac. follows, loco cit. num. 16.

ADDO tamen; ad hanc poenam incurrendam requiri, ut se irretiat in pleno iudicio; Nam si in frenesi id faciat, sane pia mater Ecclesia eius miseretur. Quod si dubium sit, non est privandus Ecclesiastica Sepultura, sed minori apparatu deducendus; puta uno, vel altero Sacerdote sociante. Ita plurimi, quos sequitur Farinac. loco cit. num. 16.

6 By civil law, the one who kills himself, or attempts to kill himself, even if death does not follow, is infamous, Lex si aliquid, § finali, ff. de poenis, and Lex, omne delictum, §. si se vulnerauerit, ff. de re militari, where it speaks of honorary soldiers.

De iure civili occidens se ipsum, aut tentans occidere, etiamsi mors non sequatur, infamis est, Lex si aliquid, § finali, ff. de poenis, et Lex, omne delictum, §. si se vulnerauerit, ff. de re militari, ubi loquitur de militibus honorariis.

7 The Doctors commonly assert, with D. Bonaventure, that the one who kills himself sins mortally against Justice toward God, and toward the Republic, of which he is a member; and against Charity toward himself, as the Saintly Doctor teaches in the places to be cited and alleged, D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 5. ad 1., Sotus L. 4. de Iust. quaest. 2. art. 3., Couar. lib. 4. var. cap. 2., Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 17., Petrus Navar. lib. 2. de restitut. cap. 3. num. 54., Fagundez in quintum Praeceptum decalogi, L. 5. cap. 11. num. 5.

> COMMUNITER asserunt Doctores cum D. Bonavent. occidentem seipsum peccare mortaliter contra Iustitiam erga Deum, atque Rempublicam, cuius est; et contra Charitatem in se ipsum, ut docet S. Doctor locis citandis, et allegatis, D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 5. ad 1. Sotus L. 4. de Iust. quaest. 2. art. 3. Couar. lib. 4. var. cap. 2. Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 17. Petrus Navar. lib. 2. de restitut. cap. 3. num. 54. Fagundez in quintum Praeceptum decalogi, L. 5. cap. 11. num. 5.

8 It is not, however, properly against justice toward the Republic, because it is not perfectly mistress of his own life, as Fagundez notes, cont. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. Tract. de dominio vitae, concl. 1., but against God, the supreme Lord, as Plato argues in Phaedone.

> Non est tamen proprie contra iustitiam in Rempublicam, quia non est perfecte domina vitae ipsius, ut notat Fagundez cont. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. Tract. de dominio vitae, concl. 1. sed contra Deum, supremum dominum, ut arguit Plato in Phaedone.

9 There arises a new question, which Lessius first hinted at, Tom. 1. de Iust. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 6. num. 32., and Fagundez discusses, num. 6.: whether the Commander of a fleet of Miopari, when otherwise he cannot escape the hands of the Barbarians, can licitly send fire into the sulphurous powder and set the ship ablaze, not in order to kill himself and others, but lest that ship come into the hands of the enemy, lest they become more insolent and stronger because of it.

> OCCURRIT nova quaestio, quam primo Lessius Tom. 1. de Iust. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 6. num. 32. innuit, et agitat Fagundez num. 6. An Dux Mioparonum classis, quando aliter Barbarorum manus effugere nequit, possit licite ignem immittere in pulverem sulphureum, et navim incendere, non ut se, et alios interimat; sed ne illa navis veniat in manus hostium, ne inde insolentiores, et fortiores evadant.

10 The FIRST opinion is affirmative, which Lessius follows, and Fagundez applauds: others subscribe, who allege that the defenders of the fatherland, unable otherwise to sustain death, can undertake some deed, even if they are to be killed because of it. So Victoria relect. de homicid. ad ult., Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. tract. 1. de dominio vitae, concl. 1. quaest. 64. art. 1., Valentia Tom. 3. disput. 5. quaest. 8. puncto 2., Lopez p. p. Instruct. cap. 65.; and they cite the examples of Samson, Iudv 16., of Eleazar primo, Machab. 9., of Raziz 2. Machab. 14., and of other Heroes.

> PRIMA opinio est assertiva, quam sequitur Lessius, Fagundez plaudit: Subscribunt alii, qui afferunt, posse patriae defensores nequentes virate mortem, facinus aliquod aggredi, etiamsi inde sint interimendi. Ita Victoria relect. de homicid. ad ult. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. tract. 1. de dominio vitae, concl. 1. quaest. 64. art. 1. Valentia Tom. 3. disput. 5. quaest. 8. puncto 2. Lopez p. p. Instruct. cap. 65. et afferunt exempla Sampsonis, Iudv 16. Eleazari primo, Machab. 9. Raziz 2. Machab. 14. et aliorum Heroum.

11 The SECOND opinion is negative. So D. Thom. in the place cited, whom they commonly follow, who in the deed of Samson take refuge in a singular impulse of God. So D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 32. art. 2. quaest. 1.

> SECUNDA sententia est negativa. Ita D. Thom. loco cit. quem communiter sequuntur, qui in facto Sampsonis ad singularem Dei impulsum confugiunt. Ita D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 32. art. 2. quaest. 1.

12 It is PROVED by the Saintly Doctor in the chapter on the sixth precept of the Decalogue from the divine precept: Non occides. But what they say, that this does not intend one to kill oneself, is frivolous; For he efficiently brings about his own death, by sending in a cause naturally efficacious.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore in cap. 6. Decalogi ex divino praecepto: Non occides. Quod autem aiunt, non intendere hunc, se occidere, frivolum est; Nam agit efficaciter mortem suam, causam immittendo naturaliter efficacem.

13 To the example of Samson D. Bonaventure answers that he did it, moved by God, who is the lord of life; for Scripture says: Irruit super eum spiritus Domini, as Tostatus observes, in 16. Iudic. quaest. 54., citing D. Augustine primo, de civit. Dei, cap. 20., and he says the same in lib. contra secundam epistolam Gaudensii.

> AD exemplum Sampsonis respondet D. Bonavent. id fecisse, motum a Deo, qui est dominus vitae; ait enim Scriptura: Irruit super eum spiritus Domini, ut observant Tostatus in 16. Iudic. quaest. 54. allegans D. Augustinum primo, de civit. Dei, cap. 20. idemque dicit in lib. contra secundam epistolam Gaudensii.

14 But that he could have done it without the impulse of God, as Sayrus Lib. 7. cap. 9. num. 9., Lessius loco cit., Caietanus Iud. 16., Lopez cap. 65. Instruct. say, is not proved; otherwise God would have sent in His Spirit in vain.

> QUOD vero id sine impulsu Dei posset facere, ut dicunt Sayrus Lib. 7. cap. 9. num. 9. Lessius loco cit. Caietanus Iud. 16. Lopez cap. 65. Instruct. non probatur; alioqui frustra Deus irruenter immisisset Spiritum suum.

15 I say the SAME of Eleazar, whom D. Ambrose praises, Lib. primo, offic. cap. 40.

16 I assert entirely the SAME of Razia, who stabbed himself and threw himself headlong from a height, lest he fall into the power of the Barbarians. For so Scripture says: Eligens nobiliter potius mori, quam subditus fieri peccatoribus. But the Greek text is rendered thus: Generose volens mori potius, quam peccatoribus subditum fieri, et propria nobilitate indigne contumeliam pati.

> IDEM omnino assero de Razia, qui se confodit, et ab alto praeceps deiecit, ne in potestatem Barbarorum deveniret. Sic enim ait Scriptura: Eligens nobiliter potius mori, quam subditus fieri peccatoribus. Textus autem Graecus sic redditur: Generose volens mori potius, quam peccatoribus subditum fieri, et propria nobilitate indigne contumeliam pati.

17 Wherefore the Holy Spirit praises him for this. Nor do some rightly say that he is so related; but that, deceived by the opinion of his own nobility, he mortally sinned; among whom is also D. Thom. in the place cited, ad 5., and others in Fagundez num. 8., for Scripture acknowledges this act as generous. Therefore Lyra defends him on the text, and Victoria at the end.

> QUARE Spiritus Sanctus eum de hoc laudat. Neque recte dicunt aliqui, eum ita referri; sed ex opinione suae nobilitatis deceptum, mortaliter deliquisse; inter quos est etiam D. Thom. loco citato, ad 5. et alii apud Fagundez num. 8. nam actum hunc generosum fatetur Scriptura. Ideo eum defendit Lyra ad textum, et Victoria ad ultimum.

Doubt I: Whether it is lawful to shorten our life by mortifications

1 The FIRST opinion is, that it is mortal to use penances imprudently applied, which one has recognized will gravely harm, even if life be shortened on account of satisfying God. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 147. art. 5., Tolet. lib. 5. summae, cap. 6. concl. 4., Navar. summa Lat. cap. 15. num. 12., Petrus Navarrus lib. 2. restit. cap. 3. num. 88., Couar. lib. 1. variar. cap. 10., Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 64.

art. 5. ad 5., Lopez p. p. instruct. cap. 64., Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 9., Bassaeus V. Homic. 1. num. 8., Diana part. 5. tract. 4. Resol. 33., Pasqual. de ieiunio, disp. 27.

> An liceat mortificationibus vitam nobis decurtare.
> PRIMA opinio est, esse mortale uti poenitentiis imprudenter adhibitis, quas graviter nocituras quis agnoverit, etiamsi ob satisfaciendum Deo vita decurtetur. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 147. art. 5. Tolet. lib. 5. summae, cap. 6. concl. 4. Navar. summa Lat. cap. 15. num. 12. Petrus Navarrus lib. 2. restit. cap. 3. num. 88. Couar. lib. 1. variar. cap. 10. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 5. ad 5. Lopez p. p. instruct. cap. 64. Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 9. Bassaeus V. Homic. 1. num. 8. Diana part. 5. tract. 4. Resol. 33. Pasqual. de ieiunio, disp. 27.

2 Fagundez SUBSCRIBES, num. 18., that it is deadly to feed on raw herbs, or on other gravely harmful foods, and he cites Victoria num. 43., Aragonius, and Lopez above; yet these excuse one who does not advert to it.

> SUBSCRIBIT Fagundez num. 18. mortiferum esse pasci herbis crudis, vel aliis cibis graviter noxiis, et allegat Victoriam num. 43. Aragonium, et Lopez supra; excusant tamen haec non advertentem.

3 Indeed I am lifted up in wonder, and moved by unblemished examples, when I read through the life of the saints, who pleased God most of all, and among them the Seraphic Father Francis; of whom S. Bonaventura relates in the legend, especially cap. 5., that the most holy Patriarch so crucified, through the whole course of his penitential life, his flesh with its concupiscences, that he scarcely ever in sound health admitted cooked foods, and when he did admit them, he finished them with ashes, or spoilt them with water. And of water he never dared to drink as much as nature would suffice: the bare earth was his bed, wearing a hairshirt, his clothing torn, trembling in the utmost rigor of winter, and he continually devised other new kinds of penance. Now on a certain night, when he was passing the night at the hermitage of Sarthianus, he heard a voice calling him three times: FRANCIS, FRANCIS, FRANCIS. To which he: What? The voice answered: There is no sinner whom God does not spare; but whoever kills himself with harsh penance will not find mercy in eternity: Immediately the man of God perceived the voice of the enemy, and recognized the cunning of the veteran serpent, for he was so inflamed by the temptation of the flesh: But the Holy Father, suddenly stripping himself and scourging himself sharply, thus addresses his body: Come, brother ass. Thus it befits you to undergo the scourges. Soon indeed he rolled among the snows; then he composed seven great heaps of snow, and said: See, this household must be fed by you: this is the wife; these the sons; these the daughters to be clothed; but if this care oppresses you, return; and serve God.

> EGO quidem admirabundus tollor, et illotum moveor exemplis, qui viam salutis e caelo securam indigitant, dum perlego vitam sanctorum, qui maxime Deo placuere, et inter eos Seraphici Patris Francisci; de quo S. Bonaventura in legenda, maxime cap. 5. refert, sanctissimum Patriarcham adeo crucifixisse, toto vitae poenitentis cursu, carnem cum concupiscentiis, ut cocta cibaria vix unquam sanus admitteret, admissa vero, cinere confecisse, aut aqua infecisse. De aqua vero nunquam ausum bibere, quantum naturae sufficeret: Nuda humus lectus erat, cilicium gerens, vestitu lacero, obsoleto in summo rigore hiemis tremens, et alia nova poenitentiae genera continuo excogitabat. Iam vero nocte quadam cum apud eremum Sarthiani pernoctaret, audivit vocem se ter vocantem. FRANCISCE, FRANCISCE, FRANCISCE. Cui ille. Quid? Respondit vox: Nullus est peccator, cui Deus non indulgeat; sed quicumque semetipsum poenitentia dura necaverit, misericordiam non inveniet in aeternum: Statim vir Dei sensit vocem hostis, agnovitque veterani serpentis calliditatem, adeo enim carnis tentatione accensus est: At Sanctus Pater subito nudatum se acriter flagellans, sic suum alloquitur corpus: Eia frater asine. Sic te decet subire flagella. Mox vero inter nives volutatus est; deinde septem pallas grandes nivis composuit, aitque: Vide, haec tibi familia alenda: haec est uxor; hi filii; hae filiae vestiendae; si autem te haec sollicitudo premit, revertere; et Deo servi.

4 For thus he called his body brother ass, as if to be subjected to laborious burdens, to be beaten with frequent scourges, and to be refreshed with vile fodder. This is D. Bonaventure.

SIC enim corpus suum fratrem asinum appellabat, tanquam laboriosis supponendum oneribus, crebris flagellis caedendum, et vili pabulo reficiendum. Haec D. Bonaventura.

5 The same Saintly Doctor in the Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 6., commends gravely the fasting of Elias and of other saints, and says it was instituted by the true Hippocrates, God.

IDEM S. Doctor in Diaeta, tit. 2. cap. 6. ieiunium graviter commendat Eliae, et aliorum sanctorum. et ait a vero Hippocrate, Deo, esse institutum.

6 And in Lib. 4. of the Pharetra, cap. 45., he relates of D. Bernard, sermone 66. in Cantica: Abstinebo a vino, quia in vino luxuria est, aut si infirmus sum, medico utar, iuxta consilium Apostoli. Abstinebo a carnibus, ne dum mihi nimis carnem nutriunt, simul et carnis nutriant vitia, etc.

ET Lib. 4. Pharetrae, cap. 45. refert D. Bernardum, sermone 66. in Cantica: Abstinebo a vino, quia in vino luxuria est, aut si infirmus sum, medico utar, iuxta consilium Apostoli. Abstinebo a carnibus, ne dum mihi nimis carnem nutriunt, simul et carnis nutriant vitia, etc.

7 But in the sermon on S. John the Baptist, he observes the austerity of S. John, Matth. 3. erat in deserto ab aetate tenella, vestimentum e pilis camelorum, cibus locustae, ac mel Sylvestre, et Lucae primo insinuatur: Vinum, et siceram non bibet.

SERMONE vero de S. Ioanne Baptista, observat austeritatem S. Ioannis Matth. 3. erat in deserto ab aetate tenella, vestimentum e pilis camelorum, cibus locustae, ac mel Sylvestre, et Lucae primo insinuatur: Vinum, et siceram non bibet.

8 Praebuit hirtum tegumen camelus Artubus sacris, strophium bidentes Cui latex haustum sociata pastum Mella Locustis.

Praebuit hirtum tegumen camelus Artubus sacris, strophium bidentes Cui latex haustum sociata pastum Mella Locustis.

9 Likewise in cap. 7. it is said: Venit Ioannes, non manducans panem; neque bibens vinum, Et tamen aequaliter nunquam peccavit. Sane maior esse debet poenitentia peccatorum, and D. Gregorio homil. 20. in Euangelia, and he subjoins: si Ioannes, et Elias, et omnes SS. P. P. in desertis AEgypti, tantis se vigiliis, et ieiuniis macerarunt, tam aspera, et inculta vestimenta portaverunt, quidnos pleni peccatis omnibus facere debemus? These words of the Saintly Doctor: certainly those Anchorites and Monks fed on herbs and water, and were nourished by them.

Item cap. 7. dicitur: Venit Ioannes, non manducans panem; neque bibens vinum, Et tamen aequaliter nunquam peccavit. Sane maior esse debet poenitentia peccatorum, et D. Gregorio homil. 20. in Euangelia, et subdit: si Ioannes, et Elias, et omnes SS. P. P. in desertis AEgypti, tantis se vigiliis, et ieiuniis macerarunt, tam aspera, et inculta vestimenta portaverunt, quidnos pleni peccatis omnibus facere debemus? Haec S. Doctor sane Anachoretae, et Monachi illi herbis, et aqua vescebantur, et nutriebantur.

10 The Saintly Doctor confesses in the Apologia pauperum that now indeed more is required on account of weaker natures, but one must beware of self-love, which is accustomed to indulge itself too much.

> FATETUR S. Doctor in Apologia pauperum, nunc iam ob debiliores naturas plura requiri, sed cavendum ab amore proprio, qui sibi nimis indulgere solet.

Doubt II: Whether, to avoid a sin or another evil, it is lawful to kill oneself

1 Without doubt, D. Augustine teaches that this is not licit, primo de civitate, cap. 25. et 27., and D. Bonavent. ad 12. Ioan., where with the same D. Augustine, tract. 51. in Ioannem, he condemns the Donatists, who killed themselves in detestation of sin, and on this account gloried that they would soon be redeemed with the crown of Martyrdom.

> An liceat ad vitandum peccatum, vel aliud malum, se occidere.
> ABSQUE dubio, id non licere docet D. Augustinus primo de civitate, cap. 25. et 27. et D. Bonavent. ad 12. Ioan. ubi cum eodem D. Augustino tract. 51. in Ioannem*, damnat Donatistas, qui se perimebant in detestationem peccati, et hinc gloriabantur, se corona Martyrii mox redimitos iri.*

2 Nor is this licit in order to avoid rape. For so the most valiant Lucia said: Si me feceris violari, castitas duplicabitur ad coronam. Therefore S. Bonavent. describes her as most valiant in sermonibus. On the contrary, D. Augustine, 1. de civitate, cap. 19., reproves the Roman Lucretia as pusillanimous, because she killed herself lest she succumb to the adultery of the violating Tarquin. Yet Bassaeus says that she, and others, can be excused on account of invincible ignorance; and the deed of S. Apollonia is excused by many, and he brings forward many in Diana part. 6. tract. 7. Resol. 47. But that one is justified by the Church.

> NEQUE hoc licet ad vitandum stuprum. Sic enim Lucia fortissima dixit: Si me feceris violari, castitas duplicabitur ad coronam. Ideo eam fortissimam describit S. Bonavent. in sermonibus. E contra D. Augustinus 1. de civitate, cap. 19. reprehendit Lucretiam Romanam, ut pusillanimem, quod se interfecerit, ne adulterio succumberet violantis Tarquinii. Eam tamen, aliasque excusari posse ob ignorantiam invincibilem, ait Bassaeus; et a multis excusari factum S. Apolloniae, et adducit multos apud Dianam part. 6. tract. 7. Resol. 47. At ista iustificatur ab Ecclesia.

3 But he praises rather allowing oneself to be killed by one willing to violate, in order to decline the danger of consent; for we are held to allow life rather to be snatched away than to sin against God, as the Saintly Doctor argues in the place cited: Qui amat animam suam, perdet eam, et qui perdiderit animam suam propter me, inveniet eam, And it is the common opinion

> SINERE autem se potius occidi a volente violare laudat, ad periculum consensus declinandum; tenemur etenim sinere potius vitam eripi, quam in Deum peccare, ut arguit S. Doctor loco cit. Qui amat animam suam, perdet eam, et qui perdiderit animam suam propter me, inveniet eam*, Estque communis sententia*

Doubt III: Whether, for the life of the neighbor, it is lawful to give oneself over to death

1 The FIRST opinion is negative. So Durandus 4. dist. 17. quaest. 6., Paludanus dist. 15. q. 3. art. 2. contr. 3., Petrus Navat. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 3. disp. 3. num. 41., and it seems to be D. Augustine's in the Lib. de mendacio, cap. 6. It is alleged by Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 6., and by D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 19. quaest. 3., because he said that those are fools who neglect their own temporal life on account of the corporal life of another. But the Saintly Doctor speaks in another way, and in another sense; for he says: Those are considered fools who neglect their own salvation, so that they may procure another's; but he speaks according to the phrase of Christ: Quid prodest homini, si universum mundum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum patiatur? The Seraphic Doctor elegantly discusses this on this passage of Lucae 9.

> An liceat pro vita proximi, se morti tradere.
> PRIMA opinio est negativa. Ita Durandus 4. dist. 17. quaest. 6. Paludanus dist. 15. q. 3. art. 2. contr. 3. Petrus Navat. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 3. disp. 3. num. 41. et videtur D. Augustini Lib. de mendacio, cap. 6. Allegatur a Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 6. et D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 19. quaest. 3. quia dixerit, stultos esse illos, qui vitam temporalem propriam negligunt, propter vitam corporalem alienam. At S. Doctor alio modo, alioque sensu loquitur; ait enim: Illi stulti reputantur, qui salutem propriam negligunt, ut procurent alienam; loquitur autem iuxta phrasim Christi: Quid prodest homini, si universum mundum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum patiatur? Haec ad hunc locum Lucae 9. eleganter disserit Seraphicus Doctor.

2 Moreover, in dub. 1. litt. he says this is licit for a just cause, and in dub. 5. he says it belongs to perfect Charity. Wherefore he holds the affirmative opinion with D. Thom. 3. dist. 29. quaest. 15. art. 5. ad 3., and Lib. 1. de regimine Principum, cap. 10., and 2. 2. quaest. 26. art. 4 ad 3., and art. 5. ad 3. So Victoria relect. de homicidio, ad 5. num. 27., Sotus Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 6., Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 26. art 4. dub. 3., Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 5. ad 5., Aragon. ibi ad 4., Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 4. puncto 3., Corduba lib. 1. quaest. 38. ad 4., Tolet. lib. 5. sum. cap. 6., Sà V. homic., Sayrus lib. 7. cap 9. num. 23., Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 7.

> CAETERUM dub. 1. litt. id licere ait ex iusta causa, et dub. 5. dicit, esse perfectae Charitatis. Quare affirmativam sententiam tenet cum D. Thom. 3. dist. 29. quaest. 15. art. 5. ad 3. et Lib. 1. de regimine Principum, cap. 10. et 2. 2. quaest. 26. art. 4 ad 3. et art. 5. ad 3. Sic Victoria relect. de homicidio, ad 5. num. 27. Sotus Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 6. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 26. art 4. dub. 3. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 5. ad 5. Aragon. ibi ad 4. Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 3. quaest. 4. puncto 3. Corduba lib. 1. quaest. 38. ad 4. Tolet. lib. 5. sum. cap. 6. Sà V. homic. Sayrus lib. 7. cap 9. num. 23. Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 7.

3 The REASON of D. Bonaventure, which the others use, is, that in this case he does not love his neighbor more than himself; but on account of the honor of the virtue of friendship, and for God, on account of some preeminent cause of honesty (S. Bonaventure adds), he prefers the life of his friend.

> RATIO D. Bonaventurae, qua utuntur caeteri, est, quia in hoc casu non diligit magis proximum, quam seipsum; sed propter honestatem virtutis amicitiae et propter Deum, ob aliquam causam praecipuam honestatis (addit S. Bonav.) praefert vitam amici.

4 I have treated of this also in the Tract. de Charitate, disp. 8. quaest. 34., in which disputation I have also treated, in quaestione 30., when we are held to undergo death on account of the spiritual good of others.

> De hoc egi etiam in Tract. de Charitate, disp. 8. quaest. 34. in qua disputatione egi etiam, quando ob bonum spirituale aliorum teneamur mortem oppetere, quaestione 30.

Doubt IV: When we are bound to die for the salvation of souls

1 IT IS CERTAIN that in many cases we are bound to undergo death for the salvation of souls, according to John 3: And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

> Quando nam teneamur pro salute animarum mori.
> CERTUM est, in multis casibus nos teneri mortem pro salute animarum subire, iuxta id Ioan. 3. Et nos debemus pro fratribus animas ponere.

2 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure on John 15, from those words of Christ: This is my commandment, that you love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love than this no man hath, than that a man lay down his life for his friends. St. Augustine confirms this in tractate 84 on John. And he observes with St. Gregory, homily 27 on the Gospels, that under the name of friends, in the precept of charity, even enemies are included.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. ad 15. Ioannis, illis Christi verbis: Hoc est praeceptum meum, ut diligatis invicem, sicut dilexi vos. Maiorem hac dilectionem nemo habet, quam ut animam suam ponat quis pro amicis suis. Id confirmat ex D. Augustino tract. 84. in Ioannem. Observat autem cum D. Gregorio homil. 27. in Evangelia, nomine amicorum, in dilectionis praecepto, etiam inimicos includi.

3 That this is a precept, Christ himself asserts, when he adds: You are my friends, if you do the things that I command you. Secondly, for the defense of the honor of FAITH, we are bound to face death.

> Hoc autem esse praeceptum, asserit Christus, qui etiam addit: Vos amici mei estis, si feceritis quae ego praecipio vobis. Secundo ad fidei honorem tuendum, tenemur mortem obire.

4 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure on Luke 9: For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him the Son of man shall be ashamed, when he shall come in his majesty. He also cites 1 Kings 2: Whosoever shall glorify me, him will I glorify: but they that despise me, shall be ignoble, that is, on the day of judgment. For God spoke thus, threatening eternal destruction to Heli, who had not reproved the horrible sins of his sons. Ecclesiasticus 4 adds the same: For the sake of thy soul be not ashamed to speak the truth. Hence also in Romans 1 the Apostle says: I am not ashamed of the Gospel.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. ad illud Lucae 9. Qui me erubuerit, et meos sermones: hunc filius hominis erubescet, cum venerit in maiestate sua. Affert etiam id, primo Reg. 2. Quicumque glorificaverit me, glorificabo eum: qui autem contemnunt me, erunt ignobiles*, idest, in die iudicii. Haec enim locutus est Deus, exitium minitans aeternum Heli, qui peccata horribilia filiorum non reprehenderat. Addit etiam id Ecclesiastici 4.* Pro anima tua ne confundaris dicere verum. Ideo et Rom. 1. ait Apostolus: Non erubesco Evangelium.

5 From these passages the Saintly Doctor shows that a learned man is bound to speak if ignominy threatens Christ, as for instance if heretics were from this to boast that their sects are the true ones, and that the Christian Catholic Religion is false. So too Sayrus, Book 7, cap. 9, num. 17; Toletus, Book 5 of the Summa, cap. 16; Soto, Book 5 on Justice, question 1, article 7; Fagundez, Book 5, cap. 12, num. 10.

> His locis eruit S. Doctor teneri virum doctum loqui, si Christo immineat ignominia, veluti si haeretici hinc glorientur, suas sectas esse veras; et Christianam Catholicam esse falsam Religionem. Ita etiam Sayrus Lib. 7. cap. 9. num. 17. Tolet. Lib. 5. summa, cap. 16. Sotus Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 7. Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 10.

6 THE PRECEPT of confessing the faith, certainly, at that time most of all compels, as is said in Romans 10: For, with the heart, we believe unto justice: but, with the mouth, confession is made unto salvation, as he implies in the Dieta, title two, chapter three, and as I said in disputation 1, question 16.

> PRAECEPTUM sane confitendae fidei tunc maxime cogit, ut dicitur Rom. 10. Corde creditur ad iustitiam: ore autem confessio fit ad salutem*, ut innuit in Dieta, titulo secundo, cap. tertio, et dixi disput. 1. quaestione 16.*

Question X: Whether a pregnant mother may, to save her own life, procure the abortion of the fetus

1 TO PROCURE AN ABORTION is most cruel if the fetus is living; for it not only destroys the body, but also loses the soul. Thus St. Bonaventure solemnly warns in the Dieta, tit. 3, cap. 4, and in the Confessionale, cap. 2, part 13.

> An liceat Matri gravidae, ad salvandam vitam suam, procurare foetus abortum.
> ABORTUM procurare crudelissimum est, si foetus sit vivus; non enim solum corpus interimit; sed animam perdit. Ita graviter admonet S. Bonavent. in Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 4. et in confessionali, cap. 2. particula 13.

2 I ASSERT that it is not lawful to procure the abortion of a living fetus, even to save the mother's life.

> ASSERO, non licere abortum foetus viventis procurare, etiam ad vitam matris salvandam.

3 IT IS PROVED by Fagundez, because the offspring possesses life without injury to the mother: therefore a grave injury is done to it if it is destroyed in order to save the mother's life.

> PROBATUR a Fagundez, quia proles sine iniuria matris possidet vitam: Ergo fit ei iniuria gravis, si ad salvandam vitam matris interimitur.

4 FURTHERMORE, because we are bound to prefer spiritual life to bodily life: therefore, if the offspring is believed to be living and to be born, grave sin is committed when, deprived of Baptism, it is killed.

> DEINDE, quia tenemur vitam spiritualem corporali praeferre: Ergo, si creditur proles viva nascitura, graviter delinquitur, dum privata Baptismo necatur.

5 So with St. Bonaventure; Lessius, Tom. 1, L. 2, dub. 10, num. 67; St. Antoninus, part 3, tit. 7, cap. 2; Sayrus, lib. 7, cap. 12, num. 22; Petrus Navatus, Lib. 2 on restitution, cap. 3, num. 138 and 143; Aragon, 2. 2, question 64, art. 7; Fagundez, Lib. 5, cap. 12, num. 19; Bassaeus, V. Homicidium, 1, num. 58; Diana, tract. 5, miscel. Resol. 11, part 5.

> Ita cum D. Bonavent. Lessius Tom. 1. L. 2. dub. 10. num. 67. S. Antonin. 3. part. tit. 7. cap. 2. Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 12. num. 22. Petrus Navat. Lib. 2. de restitut. cap. 3. num. 138. et 143. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. Fagundez Lib. 5. cap. 12. num. 19. Bassaeus V. Homicidium, 1. num. 58. Diana tract. 5. miscel. Resol. 11. part. 5.

6 Fagundez, moreover, ADDS that in doubt whether the offspring is living, remedies may be applied, because the condition of the possessor is better; but the mother is in possession of her certain life: this holds a fortiori if the offspring is not animated. So too Covarruvias on the Clementine si furiosus, part 2, §. 3; Sylvester, V. medicus, question 4; St. Antoninus, part 3, tit. 7, cap. 2, §. 2; Lessius, and Petrus Navarrus, cited above.

> ADDIT vero Fagundez, in dubio, an proles sit viva, posse applicari remedia, quia melior est conditio possidentis; mater autem est in possessione certae suae vitae: hoc valet a fortiori, si proles non sit animata. Ita etiam Couar. in Clementina, si furiosus, 2. part. §. 3. Sylvester V. medicus, quaest. 4. D. Antonin. 3. part. tit. 7. cap. 2. §. 2. Lessius, et Petrus Nauarrus, allegati.

7 But the FETUS, if it is a male, is animated on the fortieth day; if a female, on the eightieth. So Navarrus, Sum. Lat., cap. 15, num. 14; Covarruvias, cited place; Lessius, num. 67; Sà, V. homicid. But in doubt whether it is a male or a female, it is to be believed a male, as Covarruvias and Sà say.

> FOETUS autem, si masculus est, diebus quadraginta animatur: Si foemina, octuaginta. Ita Navar sum. Lat. cap. 15. num. 14. Couar. loco citato. Lessius num. 67. Sà V. homicid. In dubio autem an masculus sit, vel foemina, credendus est masculus, ut aiunt Couar. et Sà.

[8] Certain ANATOMISTS give thirty days for the male and forty for the female. See the Hexaëmeron on Anatomy, disputation 4, question 22.

> ANATOMICi aliqui masculo dant 30. dies foeminae 40. Vide Hexaëmer de Anatome, disput. 4. quaest. 22.

[9] YOU WILL ASK: Whether it is lawful to cut open the belly of a pregnant mother, whose life is despaired of, so that the child may be drawn out alive.

> QUAERES: An liceat secate alvum matris praegnantis, de cuius vita disperatur, ut puer extrahatur vivus.

[10] IT IS ANSWERED: Negatively, with St. Thomas in 4. dist. 6. quaest. 1. art. 1. quaestiuncula 1. ad 4, and 3. part. quaest. 68. art. 11; Domitol. lib. 1. quaest. 14; Corduba quaest. 38. dub. 2; Lopez *p. p. [11] It is also illicit to give remedies for sterility. See Fagundez L. 5. cap. 13; Sanchez l. 9. disput. 20. Sixtus V forbids this de abortu, §. 5, and cap. si aliquis, and homicid. For it is against the end of generation. Nor should you say that abortion in the unanimated is closer against that end.

> Illicitum est etiam dare remedia ad sterilitatem. Vide Fagundez L. 5. cap. 13. Sanchez l. 9. disput. 20. Id vetat Sixtus V. de abortu, §. 5. et cap. si aliquis, et homicid. Est enim contra finem generationis. Neque dicas, abortum inanimis esse propius contra eum finem.

[12] For I say the fetus is an aggressor against the mother's life; but not fertility.

> Dico enim foetum esse aggressorem vitae matris; non sic foecunditatem.

[13] You will object: the emission of seed is never lawful. Therefore neither is that of the fetus, which is closer to generation.

> Obiicies nunquam licita est eiectio seminis. Ergo nec foetus, qui vicinior est generationi.

[14] I say neither is abortion directly intended. But if it be probable that the mother also would die together with her living child; whereas with the remedy given the mother can be saved; Bassaeus says a potion may be given to her.

Dico neque abortum directe intendi. Quod si probabile sit morituram etiam matrem cum filio vivo; at dato remedio salvari matrem; Bassaeus ait, posse ei dari potionem.

Question XI: On accidental homicide

1 Casual homicide is that which takes place beyond intention, as St. Bonaventure teaches serm. 6. in Decal.; St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 8.

Homicidium casuale est illud, quod praeter intentionem fit, ut docet D. Bonavent. serm. 6. in Decal. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 8.

2 For casual homicide, therefore, the Saintly Doctor gives this rule: if, while engaging in a licit undertaking, he applied sufficient diligence that homicide should not follow, and it should nevertheless follow, it will in no way be imputed to him, because that death was willed neither in itself nor in its cause; wherefore he will not be irregular. So with St. Bonaventure; Lessius Tom. 1. Lib. 2. dub. 15. num. 703; Suarez de censur. disp. 45. sect. 5. and 6; Farinac. Tom. 4. quaest. 126. n. 74; Ayrenius Tract. de homic. casuali, part. 3. num. 10; Tolet. Lib. 5. sum. cap. 7; Fagundez L. 5. cap. 14. num. 10; Bassaeus, V. Homic. 2. num. 1; with St. Thomas quaest. 64. art. 8, where see Sylvestrus and Cajetan ad 1.

Pro homicidio igitur casuali dat S. Doctor hanc regulam: si dans operam rei licitae adhibuit sufficientem diligentiam, ne homicidium sequeretur. Si sequatur, nulla ex parte illi imputabitur, quia illa mors neque in se, neque in causa fuit volita; Quare neque erit irregularis. Ita cum D. Bonaventura Lessius Tom. 1. Lib. 2. dub. 15. num. 703. Suarez de censur. disp. 45. sect. 5. et 6. Farinac. Tom. 4. quaest. 126. n. 74. Ayrenius Tract. de homic. casuali, part. 3. num. 10. Tolet. Lib. 5. sum. cap. 7. Fagundez L. 5. cap. 14. num. 10. Bassaeus, V. Homic. 2. num. 1. cum D. Thom. quaest. 64. art. 8. ubi Sylveus, et Caiet. ad 1.

3 They state the same even if he were engaging in an illicit undertaking; because, although in this there would be fault in order to the prohibition, say the exploding of a war engine, or hunting, yet there would not be fault in order to the homicide or mutilation; and this perhaps is what the Saintly Doctor means when he says that then the killer is excused from so much, not from all.

Idem afferunt, etiamsi daret operam rei illicitae; quia, licet in hoc esset culpa in ordine ad prohibitionem, puta explodendi bellicum tormentum, vel venandi; non esset tamen in ordine ad homicidium, vel mutilationem; et hoc forsan ait S. Doctor dicens, tunc taliter occidentem excusari a tanto, non a toto.

4 You will ask: whether one who kills another in a sudden and unexpected brawl can be dispensed from irregularity by the Bishop, who, according to the Council of Trent, sess. 14. cap. 7, can dispense from irregularities contracted through occult casual homicide.

Qvaeres: an occidens alium in subita, et repentina rixa, possit ab irregularitate dispensari per Episcopum, qui iuxta Concilium Trident. sess. 14. cap. 7. potest dispensare super irregularitates, contractas ex homicidio casuali occulto.

5 Molina denies it Tom. 4. de iustitia, tract. 3. disp. 70; so too Suarez in 3. part. tit. 5. de censur. disput. 94. sect. 1.

Negant Molina Tom. 4. de iustitia, tract. 3. disp. 70 Suarez in 3. part. tit. 5. de censur. disput. 94. sect. 1.

6 Diana maintains it p. p. Tract. 1. Miscell. resol. 19; so too Didacus Perez Lib. 8. ordin. tit. 13. in Rubr. fol. 256; Avila Tract. de censur. part. 7. disp. 6. sect. 2. dub. 1. and sect. 5. dub. 5; Coninchyus de sacr. disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 11; Rodriquez in summa, p. p. cap. 177; Henriquez, and Salzedo, as cited by Diana; Fagundez L. 5. cap. 12. num. 11.

Asservnt Diana p. p. Tract. 1. Miscell. resol. 19. Didacus Perez Lib. 8. ordin. tit. 13. in Rubr. fol. 256. Avila Tract. de censur. part. 7. disp. 6. sect. 2. dub. 1. et sect. 5. dub. 5. Coninchyus de sacr. disp. 18. dub. 14. num. 11. Rodriquez in summa, p. p. cap. 177. Henriquez, et Salzedo apud Dianam, Fagundez L. 5. cap. 12. num. 11.

7 In St. Bonaventure I find only in confessionali, cap. 5. particula 49. casu 1 that the dispensation of casual homicide is referred to the Bishop, not of voluntary homicide; but this is voluntary.

In D. Bonaventura solum invenio in confessionali, cap. 5. particula 49. casu 1. dispensationem casualis ad Episcopum deduci, non voluntarii homicidii; hoc autem est voluntarium.

Question XII: Whether a judge can condemn to death an innocent man who has been proved guilty at the trial

1 Thus far we have dealt with homicide committed by private authority; now we must deal with homicide by public power.

Hucusque egimus de homicidio, privata authoritate facto; nunc de homicidio ex publica potestate agendum.

2 First, I suppose that a judge is bound by CHARITY under pain of mortal sin to deliver an innocent man from death, if he can by any means, even if he is proven guilty, whether he does so by terrifying or obstructing the accusers, or by examining the witnesses most rigorously, etc.

Primo suppono, teneri iudicem ex Charitate sub mortali liberare innocentem a morte, si potest via aliqua, etiamsi probetur nocens, siue id faciat, accusatores terrendo, vel impediendo, siue testes severissime examinando, etc.

3 Secondly, many admit that a judge, when he cannot deliver the innocent man, is bound to make his innocence manifest in the courtroom.

Deinde fatentur multi, Iudicem teneri, quando insontem nequit liberare, illius innocentiam in auditorio manifestare.

4 Thirdly, they say that an inferior judge, bound by the allegations and proofs made to condemn the innocent man, is bound to send to the superior with the information, proofs, and indications of his innocence.

Tertio dicunt, teneri iudicem inferiorem adstrictum allegatis, et probatis ad insontem damnandum, mittere ad superiorem cum informationibus, probationibus, atque indiciis illius innocentiae.

5 The whole difficulty is: whether, when none of these things can be done, it is lawful to condemn the innocent man to death or to another punishment.

Tota difficultas est: an, quando non potest aliquid horum fieri, liceat insontem morte damnare, vel alia poena.

6 The first opinion is that the judge is indeed bound to condemn him. So St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2, and quaest. 64. art. 6. ad 3, and there all the Thomists; Soto L. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2; Petrus Navarrus L. 2. de restitut. cap. 3. num. 157, speaking only of civil matters; Covarruvias lib. 1. var. cap. 1. num. 6; Navarrus summa Latina, cap. 25. num. 13; Bartolus Lex, Illicitas, §. Veritas, ff. de offic. praesidis; Innocent cap. Venerabilis, de censibus; the Archdeacon in cap. 1. de offic. ordin; Cardinal and John Andrea in cap. Pastoralis, de offic. delegati, with the Gloss there, §. quia vero; Sylvester V. Iudex 2. num. 5. and 6; Toletus Lib. 5. summa, cap. 6. num. 11; Fagundez in 5. Praeceptum Decal. cap. 14; Cajetan, Bannes, Salon, Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2; Valentia Tom. 2. disp. 5. q. 11. punct. 2; Sayrus L. 12. cap. 8. n. 13; Siroued

tf. de Iustitia, 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2; Lezan V. Iud.; Tanner tract. 3. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 2. num. 51. Corduba is finally inclined to this, as cited in Diana, part. 5. tract. 4. Resol. 22.

> Prima opinio est, imo teneri iudicem eum damnare. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2. et quaest. 64. art. 6. ad 3. et ibi omnes Thomistae. Sotus L. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 4. art. 2. Petrus Navar. L. 2. de restitut. cap. 3. num. 157. loquens solum de civilibus, Covar. lib. 1. var. cap. 1. num. 6. Navar. summa Latina, cap. 25. num. 13. Bartol. Lex, Illicitas, §. Veritas, ff. de offic. praesidis, Innocent. cap. Venerabilis, de censibus, Archidiac. in cap. 1. de offic. ordin. Cardinal. et Ioan. Andrea in cap. Pastoralis, de offic. delegati, Glossa ibi, §. quia vero, Sylvest. V. Iudex 2. num. 5. et 6. Tolet. Lib. 5. summa, cap. 6. num. 11. Fagundez in 5. Praeceptum Decal. cap. 14. Caietan. Bannes, Salonius, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2. Valentia Tom. 2. disp. 5. q. 11. punct. 2. Sayrus L. 12. cap. 8. n. 13. Sirouerd. tf. de Iustitia, 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2 Lezan. V. Iud. Tanner. tract. 3. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 2. num. 51. Inclinat tandem Corduba citando loco, Diana part. 5. tract. 4. Resol. 22.

7 The second opinion denies altogether, both in civil and in criminal matters, that a judge can condemn an innocent man in the manner described; but that he is bound to resign his office, even if he knows nothing will come of it, when he can deliver him by no other way. Nay, this opinion adds that he is bound to deliver him, even if he were to lose his life. So teach Lessius Tom. 1. dub. 29. L. 2. num. 78. and 82; Lyranus in cap. 23. Exodi, expounding that: The innocent and the just, etc.; Adrian quodl. 6. art. 3; Angelus V. iudicare, num. 7; Petrus Navarrus L. cit. num. 161; Hostiensis, Calderinus, Panormitanus cap. Pastorali de offic. deleg.; Corduba lib. 1. quaest. 37, where he fights with 16 arguments (though defeated at the end); Raynaldus in gloss. cum Syl. V. Iud. 2. quaest. 5. Sà num. 13; Bonacina tract. 1. disp. 20. q. 2. punct. 2; Filliucius tract. 40. cap. 6. q. 5; Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2; Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 5; Biel, sent. quaest. 138.

> Secvnda sententia negat omnino, tam in civilibus, quam in criminalibus, posse iudicem damnare innocentem modo dicto; sed teneri officium dimittere, etiamsi sciat, nihil profuturum, quando nulla alia via eum liberare potest. Imo addit haec opinio, teneri eum liberare, etiamsi vitam esset amissurus. Ita docent Lessius Tom. 1. dub. 29. L. 2. num. 78. et 82. Lyranus in cap. 23. Exodi, explicans illud: Innocentem et iustum, etc. Adrianus quodl. 6. art. 3. Angelus V. iudicare, num. 7. Petrus Navarrus L. cit. num. 161. Host. Calder. Panorm. cap. Pastorali de offic. deleg. Cordub. lib. 1. quaest. 37. ubi 16. argumentis pugnat (etsi in calce devict) Raynur. in gloss. cum Syl. V. Iud. 2. quaest. 5. Sà num. 13. Bonac. tract. 1. disp. 20. q. 2. punct. 2. Filliuc. tract. 40. cap. 6. q. 5. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 2. Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 5. Biel sent. quaest. 138.

8 The third opinion is that indeed in civil causes, and grave ones, and in criminal causes of lesser moment, the Judge can proceed according to what is proven; but in causes of death he is bound to acquit the accused. So Lessius Tom. 1. L. 2. cap. 29. disp. 10. num. 84; Petrus Navarrus L. 2. de restit. cap. 3. num. 157; Aragon 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5. DIANA part. 5. Tract. 4. resol. 22 concludes: If a grave loss should befall the Judge from the deposition of his office, he is not bound to lay it down; but he can condemn: and he refers to Filliucius Tom. 1. tract. 48. cap. 6. num. 171, and others. Tostatus holds almost the same ad cap. 25. Exodi, quaest. 6.

> Tertia opinio est, in causis quidem civilibus, et gravibus, et in criminalibus minoris momenti, posse Iudicem procedere secundum probata: At in causis mortis, teneri reum absolvere. Ita Less. Tom. 1. L. 2. cap. 29. disp. 10. num. 84. Petrus Navar. L. 2. de restit. cap. 3. num. 157. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5. DIANA part. 5. Tract. 4. resol. 22. concludit; Si Iudici grave damnum obveniret ex depositione officii, non tenetur illud deponere; sed potest damnare: et remittit ad Filliucium Tom. 1. tract. 48. cap. 6. num. 171. et alios. Idem fere habet Tostatus ad cap. 25. Exodi, quaest. 6.

9 What St. Bonaventure thought I shall make clear. Therefore serm. 6. de decem praeceptis, he says, the Public Minister of the Law can kill, provided there be a just cause, a just order, and a just mind. A just cause must be present, because it is said in Deuteronomy 16: That which is just thou shalt execute justly. Hence there must also be a just order of proceeding. Likewise it must be done from love of Justice, not from lust for vengeance, and thus there will be a just mind. And in the speculo animae, cap. 2. post medium, he has almost the same.

> QUID senserit D. Bonaventura, aperiam. Igitur serm. 6. de decem praeceptis*, ait, Publicum Legis Ministrum posse occidere, dummodo adsit iusta causa, iustus ordo, et iustus animus. Iusta causa debet adesse, quia dicitur Deuter. 16.* Quod iustum est, iuste exequeris. Hinc debet esse etiam iustus ordo procedendi. Item debet esse ex amore Iustitiae, non libidine vindictae, et ita aderit iustus animus. et in speculo animae, cap. 2. post medium*, eadem fere habet.*

10 He brilliantly defends the second opinion, however, in part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2, and proves it. And again in part. 4. cap. 3 he subscribes.

> PRAECLARE vero secundam tuetur sententiam part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2. Eamque probat. Et rursus part. 4. cap. 3. subscribit.

11 This opinion is so deeply fixed in me that I greatly wonder that so many Princes of Theology depart from it.

> ADEO mihi alte defixa est haec sententia, ut summopere mirer, tot Proceres Theologos ab ea deviare.

12 I ASSERT, therefore, that a judge can by no means condemn an innocent man to any punishment, and especially to death, however much, according to the allegations and proofs, he may deserve death.

> ASSERO igitur, Iudicem nulla ratione posse damnare ulla poena, maxime autem mortis, innocentem, quantumvis secundum allegata, et probata dignus sit morte.

13 IT IS PROVED by St. Bonaventure, first, serm. 6. in Decal. on Deuter. 16: Judges and Masters shalt thou constitute in all thy gates, which the Lord thy God shall give thee, throughout thy tribes: that they may judge the people with just judgment, and not decline to either side. Thou shalt not accept person nor gifts: for gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and change the words of the just. Justly thou shalt pursue that which is just: that thou mayest live, etc. Where the Hebrew has: Justice, justice shalt thou pursue, that thou mayest live.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. primo, serm. 6. in Decal. in Deuter. 16. Iudices, et Magistros constitues in omnibus portis tuis, quas Dominus Deus tuus dederit tibi, per singulas tribus tuas: ut indicent populum iusto iudicio, nec in alteram partem declinent. Non accipies personam, nec munera: quia munera excaecant oculos sapientum, et mutant verba iustorum. Iuste quod iustum est persequeris: ut vivas, etc. Ubi Hebraeus habet: Iustitiam, Iustitiam sequeris, ut vivas.

14 He alludes, however, to Exodus 23, as the Marginal postils note, where it has: The innocent and just thou shalt not kill: because I abhor the wicked, where Pagninus has: for I will not justify the wicked.

> ALLUDIT autem ad 23. Exodi*, ut postillae Marginales advertunt, ubi habet:* Infontem, et iustum non occides: quia aversor impium*, ubi Pagninus:* quia non iustificabo impium.

15 But that we may understand this phrase, we must note with St. Bonaventure loco cit. and Tostatus quaest. 6. in 16. Deuter., that it is not enough to do a just thing, unless it be done justly, because the manner belongs in moral matters to the species of the act. For it does not suffice to do a just thing, but it must be done justly; yet it is not just to condemn an innocent man, even if it be just to judge according to the allegations and proofs; for to condemn an innocent man is a most grave crime against the natural law: but to judge according to allegations and proofs is only according to human laws extra de constitut. cap. Canonum statuta, and cap. Ne innitaris prudentia tua, and Cod. de legibus, and Cod. de iuris, et facti ignorantia in Lege, Constitutiones.

> UT autem phrasim hanc percipiamus, oportet adnotare cum D. Bonavent. loco cit. Tostato quaest. 6. in 16. Deuter. Non satis esse iustum agete, nisi iuste fiat, quia modus pertinet in moralibus ad speciem actus. Neque enim sufficit iustum agere, sed oportet, ut iuste agatur; sed non est iustum, innocentem damnare, etiamsi iustum sit iudicare secundum allegata, et probata; Nam innocentem damnare est gravissimum crimen contra ius naturae: at iudicare secundum allegata, et probata, est tantum secundum Leges humanas extra de constitut. cap. Canonum statuta, et cap. Ne innitaris prudentia tua, et Cod. de legibus, et Cod. de iuris, et facti ignorantia in Lege, Constitutiones.

16 Indeed Laws and Canons, according to the Politicians, fall under part of the natural law or part of the positive law, as is clear in 5. Eth.; nevertheless, if they per accidens depart from the natural law, they are not to be interpreted as if they commanded in every eventuality: they decree, however, that judgment be given according to allegations and proofs from the fact that right knowledge of the accused is required of the judge, that he may give sentence; but among things proven, those of lesser weight are those which are true, whencever they come.

> SUNT quidem Leges, et Canones, iuxta politica, cadentia in partem iuris naturalis, vel in partem iuris positivi, ut patet in 5. Eth. attamen si per accidens aberrent a iure naturali, non sunt ita interpretandae, ac si in omnem eventum praecipiant: decernunt autem iudicandum secundum allegata, et probata ex eo, quod requiritur recta noritia Rei, data iudici, ut ferat sententiam; inter probata autem minoris ponderis sunt, quae vera undecunque veniunt.

17 Therefore God, who is above the Laws, commands that two be not killed, namely the innocent, and that the just be not killed. Indeed it would be the same thing repeated, because in such a case the innocent and the just would be the same. Now he forbids the innocent to be condemned, that is, him who is proven guilty by false witnesses, but is in truth innocent; and thou, O Judge, knowest this, as a private person, thou shalt not kill this man. But the just thou shalt not kill, that is, him who has been thus proven in judgment; and in this way Tostatus himself expounds it.

> IGITUR Deus, qui est supra Leges, praecipit, ne duo occidantur, scilicet innocens, et ne occidatur iustus. Profecto esset idem repetere, quia in tali casu idem esset innocens, ac iustus. Iam vero Innocentem prohibet condemnari, idest eum, qui falsis testibus probatur nocens, sed revera est innocens; et tu o Iudex scis, ut privata persona, hunc non occides. Iustum vero ne occidas, idest, eum, qui ita probatus fuerit in iudicio; et hoc modo exponitur ab ipso Tostato.

18 Behold that double justice, Deuter. 16: Justice, justice thou shalt pursue, that is, delivering both the innocent, proven guilty in the forum, and him who has been proven just.

> EN duplex illa iustitia, Deuter. 16. Iustitiam, Iustitiam sequeris*, idest liberando tam innocentem, probatum in foro reum; quam eum, qui probatus est iustus.*

19 By this argument you dissolve all the opposing foundations, taken from the necessity of the Laws of judging according to allegations and proofs. For against them stands here the law Divine and of Nature in this case.

> HOC argumento dissolves omnia adversantia fundamenta, sumpta ex necessitate Legum, iudicandi secundum allegata, et probata. In contrarium enim stat hic, lex Divina, et Naturae in hoc casu.

20 IT IS PROVED, secondly, by St. Bonaventure loco cit. Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, from Proverbs 24: Deliver them that are led to death: and cease not to deliver those that are dragged to destruction. If thou say: Strength is not enough: he that is the inspector of the heart, he understandeth, and nothing deceiveth the keeper of thy soul, and he shall render to a man according to his works.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonavent. loco cit. Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, ex Proverb. 24. Erue eos, qui ducuntur ad mortem: et qui trahuntur ad interitum, liberare ne cesses. Si dixeris: Vires non suppetunt: qui inspector est cordis, ipse intelligit, et servatorem animae tuae nihil fallit, reddetque homini iuxta opera sua.

21 Behold: in order to the internal judgment of conscience he commands that the innocent, condemned to death by the laws, be diligently delivered, because, namely, it is Divine and Natural law, as our Doctors cry out.

> EN in ordine ad iudicium internum conscientiae iubet, infontes, a legibus damnatos morte, sedulo liberare, quia scilicet ius est Divinum, et Naturale, ut clamant Doctores nostri.

22 I LAUGH at the answer of the opponents, that judgment is rendered justly according to nature, when judgment is given according to allegations and proofs, because the public good is preferred, while innumerable scandals are warded off.

> RIDEO adversantium responsum, iuste iudicari secundum naturam, dum iuxta allegata, et probata iudicatur, quia bonum publicum anteponitur, dum innumera scandala arcentur.

23 THESE are flattering little words. For where is the scandal, while an innocent man is being weighed and the Judge publicly protests that he knows it, in attestation of his own honor?

> HAEC sunt verbula blanda. Ubi enim scandalum, dum innocens libetatur, et Iudex protestatur publice se id scire in sui fidem honoris?

24 NAY, these opinions are received with the applause of the whole world, just as the deliverance of Susanna was received, who by the sole slight diversity of the tree under which she was accused of having fallen was proven innocent.

> IMO totius orbis plausu hae sententiae excipiuntur, sicuri excepta fuit liberatio Susannae, quae sola diversitate modica arboris, sub qua accusabatur lapsa, comprobata est insons.

25 But that which they keep forever in their mouths, that the natural law commands that judgment be given according to allegations and proofs, and that although this order is of positive law, one is nevertheless bound by the natural law to keep it, as Fagundez answers; it is so ridiculous that it provokes even the scant smiles of the wise to loud laughter. For where does any merely positive law compel its observance by the law of nature? Surely the law of observance arises from the law of the law itself. And is the public good really that the innocent be condemned? Is it because again the laws condemn according to the allegations? Be it so; since nevertheless the laws are human, must they not at least be taken with their epieikeiai?

> QUOD vero in ore perpetuo versant, Ius naturale praecipere, ut iudicetur secundum allegata, et probata, et quamvis hic ordo sit Iuris positivi, tamen teneri illum servare Iure naturali, ut respondet Fagundez; adeo ridiculum est; ut et patcos sapientis risus ad Cachinnos provocet. Ubi enim aliquod ius merum positivum ad sui observantiam cogit iure naturae? Sane ius observantiae oritur ex iure legis. Ecquod vero bonum publicum est, ut damnentur infontes? Num, quia iterum leges damnant iuxta allegata? Esto ita sit; cum tamen leges sunt humanae, nonne cum suis epickeiis sunt saltem sumendae.

26 FURTHERMORE the end of the law is the heart of the law, and it commands judgment according to allegations and proofs, that judgment may be given justly according to the truth, which is ever the companion of justice. But if, as a public person, the judge is bound to smile upon the public clamor, as Fagundez and the others cry in their principal foundation; then let them believe the clamoring and tumultuous people crying against CHRIST: Crucify him, who nevertheless had been proven innocent by a private interrogation alone. Surely Pilate is not thereby excused.

PORRO finis legis, est cor legis, Iubetque iudicare secundum allegata, et probata, ut iuste iudicetur secundum veritatem, quae obvia semper est iustitiae. Quod si publicae conclamationi, ut personae publicae, tenetur iudex arridere, sicut clamant Fagundez, et alii in suo praecipuo fundamento; cant, et tumultuanti plebi credant, clamanti contra CHRISTUM: Crucifige, qui tamen sola privata interrogatione probatus fuerat innocens. Sane Pilatus inde non excusatur.

27 The public GOOD is that which is more profitable for the Republic. But nothing is more necessary than to foster and protect the innocent, as the Saintly Doctor expounds at length part. 2. Ecclesiast. Hier. cap. 2. These zealots fear scandals. What greater scandal than to pave the ways for calumnies and to lay snares of death for the innocent? Away with that scandal.

BONUM publicum est, quod Reipublicae magis proficuum est. Nihil autem magis necessarium, quam fovete, et tueri innocentes, ut late discurrit S. Doctor part. 2. Ecclesiast. Hier. cap. 2. Scandala timent isti zelotes. Quod maius scandalum, quam vias sternere ad calumnias, et mortem innocentibus struere? Appage istud scandalum.

28 They URGE that the judge is a public person, and therefore must not follow what he knows as a private person.

URGENT, Iudicem esse personam publicam, atque adeo non id, quod ut persona privata novit, sectandum.

29 COME NOW! I should like to know: does he not use the knowledge of the sciences and arts which, as a private person, he imbibed in the University amid his studies?

EIA! Scire vellem: an utatur notitia scientiarum, et artium, quas, ut privata persona, in Universitate inter studia hausit.

30 But let us hear St. Bonaventure in the cited place on Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, Part 2, cap. 2: The Virtues are called Angels on account of their strong and unchangeable manliness in imitation of God, a Deiform motion that does not sin. All these things, understood figuratively, are to be referred to those who receive the power of judging. For that peace and concord may be had in the Church of Christ, justice is ordained of the Lord; Psalm 71: Let the mountains receive peace for the people, and the hills justice. He shall judge the poor of the people, and shall save the children of the poor, and shall humble the calumniator. Because he shall deliver the poor from the mighty, and the poor that had no helper. Because there would be no peace in the mountains, that is, in proud men; unless there were justice in the hills, that is, in good and humble prelates and Judges, in whom Angelic manliness, or virtuousness, is required, so that by neither blessing nor cursing are they moved from the rectitude of justice, as of David, 2 Kings 14: But thou, my Lord the King, art as an Angel of God, who is moved by neither malediction nor benediction. Therefore the Judge must be strong and manly, lest through fear, hatred, or love he be deflected from justice. Hence counsel is given in Ecclesiasticus, cap. 7: Seek not to be made a judge, unless thou have strength in virtue to dash down iniquities, lest thou haply fear the face of the powerful, and lay a stumblingblock in thy equity; and Wisdom 6: Hear, O ye kings and judges, that judge the earth: to you is given power from the Most High, who shall question your works, and search out your thoughts, because, being ministers of his kingdom, you have not judged rightly, nor kept the law of justice, nor walked according to the will of God. Horribly and speedily shall he appear to you, for a most severe judgment shall be for them that bear rule. To you therefore, O kings, are these my words, that you may learn wisdom, and not fall away. For they that have kept just things justly shall be justified. And Ecclesiasticus 44: Men rich in virtue, etc. Making peace in their houses: they are therefore the Virtues as regards the manly execution of justice.

> Sed audiamus D. Bonaventuram loco allegato de Eccl. Hierarchia, Parte 2. cap. 2. Virtutes dicuntur Angeli, propter fortem, et immutabilem virilitatem in Dei imitationem, Deiformem motum non delinquentem. Haec omnia, figurative intellecta, sunt ad illos, qui iudicandi recipiunt potestatem, referenda. Nam ut pax, et concordia in Christi Ecclesia habeatur, iustitia e Domino est ordinata; Psalm. 71. Suscipiant montes pacem populo, et colles iustitiam. Iudicabit pauperes populi, et salvos faciet filios pauperum, et humiliabit calumniatorem. Quia liberabit pauperem a potente, et pauperem, cui non erat adiutor. Quia non esset pax in montibus, idest, in superbis hominibus; nisi esset iustitia in collibus, idest, in bonis, et humilibus praelatis, ac Iudicibus, in quibus virilitas, seu virtuositas Angelica requiritur, ut nec benedictione, nec maledictione, a rectitudine iustitiae moveantur, sicut de David, 2. Reg. 14. Tu autem Domine mi Rex, es sicut Angelus Dei, qui nec maledictione, nec benedictione movetur. Fortis igitur, et virilis debet esse Iudex, ne timore, odio, vel amore a iustitia deflectatur. Ideo datur consilium in Ecclesiastico, cap. 7. Noli quaerere fieri Iudex, nisi virtute valeas irrumpere iniquitates, ne forte expavescas faciem potentis, et ponas scandalum in aequitate tua, et Sap. 6. Audite reges, et Iudices, qui iudicatis terram, vobis data est virtus ab Altissimo, qui interrogabit opera vestra, et cogitationes scrutabitur, quoniam cum essetis ministri regni illius, non recte iudicastis, nec custodistis legem iustitiae, neque secundum voluntatem Dei ambulastis. Horrende et cito apparebit vobis, quoniam iudicium durissimum his, qui praesunt, fiet. Ad vos ergo reges sunt hi sermones mei, ut discatis sapientiam, et non excidatis. Qui enim custodierint iusta iuste, iustificabuntur. Et Ecclesiastici 44. Homines divites in virtute, etc. Pacificantes in domibus suis, sunt igitur Virtutes quo ad virilem iustitiae executionem.

31 Likewise, on account of the virtuous defense of justice: For it is said Ecclesiasticus 4: Fight for justice, and strive even unto death for Justice, etc.

> Item, propter virtuosam iustitiae defensionem: Nam dicitur Eccl. 4. Pro iustitia agonizare, et usque ad mortem certa pro Iustitia, etc.

32 Likewise, on account of the imitation of Divine Wisdom. For human justice ought to imitate the Divine, as far as is possible, and, that it may not err through ignorance, to be enlightened by the divine light; Hence it is said, Wisdom 6: Love the light of wisdom, all ye that are over the peoples.

> Item, propter Divinae Sapientiae imitationem. Humana enim iustitia Divinam debet, pro ut est possibile, imitari, et ne erret per ignorantiam, divino lumine illustrari; Ideo dicitur, Sapient. 6. Diligite lumen sapientiae, qui praeestis populis.

33 Likewise, on account of the swift and manly deliverance of the oppressed, the Judges are called Virtues: For the virtuous judge manfully snatches away the oppressed innocents, and sets himself with all his strength against him who does the injury. Whence in Proverbs 24: Deliver them that are led to death. But if thou say: Strength is not given to me: he that is the inspector of the heart, he himself understandeth, and nothing deceiveth the keeper of thy soul, and he shall render to everyone according to his works. Where the Hebrew: Deliver them that are carried captive unto death, and thou shalt forbid them that stagger unto slaughter; and Job 29: Because I had delivered the poor man that cried out, and the orphan that had no helper. The jaws of the wicked I broke, and out of their teeth I snatched away the prey: the blessing of him that was perishing came upon me. Where the Hebrew: The blessing of those perishing came upon me.

> Item, propter celerem, et virilem oppressorum liberationem Virtutes dicuntur Iudices: Nam iudex virtuosus innocenter oppressos viriliter eripit, et facienti iniuriam, totis viribus se opponit. Unde in Proverb. 24. Erue eos, qui ducuntur ad mortem. Quod si dixeris: Vires mihi non suppetunt: qui inspector est cordis ipse intelligit, et servatorem animae tuae nihil fallit, et reddet unicuique iuxta opera sua. Ubi Hebraeus: Erue captos ad mortem, et nutantes ad occisionem prohibebis, et Iob 29. Eo quod liberassem pauperem vociferantem, et pupillum, cui non erat adiutor. Conterebam molas iniqui, et de faucibus eorum eruebam, Benedictio perituri super me veniebat. Ubi Hebraeus: Benedictio peremtis super me veniebat.

[34] Isaiah first: Judge for the orphan, help the oppressed. Where the Hebrew: Direct your affection to the injured.

> Isaiz primo. Indicate pupillo, subvenite oppresso. Ubi Hebraeus: Dirigite affectum iniuria.

[35] Behold the duties of the public person expounded by St. Bonaventure from the storehouse of the Scriptures.

> En munera personae publicae a D. Bonavent. e Scripturarum penu exposita.

[36] And on Wisdom 6 he observes the apparatus of the Holy Spirit, to admonish judges: Better is wisdom than strength. Hear therefore, ye kings; learn, ye judges, etc. — the reason taken from the peril of their office. Hence also Proverbs 1: The wise man hearing will be wiser: and understanding, he shall possess governments; and on John, cap. 19, he observes that Pilate, who had known in secret the innocence of CHRIST, nevertheless condemned him unjustly on the testimony, and he brings forward Proverbs 17: He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, both are abominable before God. And he considers gravely that Christ discoursed so gravely with Pilate about the truth, because in it consisted the whole equity of the judgment, that the Governor might judge according to the truth, snatching the innocent from the hands of the calumniators. But because knowing the innocent he condemned him, most certainly, the Divine Justice so ordaining, he was condemned by the Emperor and rejected by God.

> Et ad 6. Sapient. Observat apparatum Spiritus Sancti, ut iudices admoneat: Melior est sapientia, quam vires. Audite ergo reges, discite iudices, etc. Ratione sumpta ex periculo officii eorum. Ideo et Proverb. 1. Audiens sapiens sapientior erit: et intelligens, gubernacula possidebit, et ad cap. 19. Ioan. observat, Pilatum, qui secreto cognoverat innocentiam CHRISTI, eum tamen inique ex testimoniis condemnasse, et affert illud Proverb. 17. Qui iustificas impium, et qui condemnat iustum, abominabilis est uterque apud Deum. Et graviter considerat, Christum de veritate adeo graviter disseruisse cum Pilato, quia in ea consistebat tota aequitas iudicii, ut secundum veritatem iudicaret Praeses, innocentem eripiendo e manibus calumniantium. Quia vero sciens insontem damnavit, certissime Divina ita ordinante Iustitia damnatus ab Imperatore, et a Deo est reprobatus.

[37] All of them, crowding in ranks, hurl the argument of St. Thomas, which indeed Bannes calls a moral demonstration. The judge in judging sustains the public person of the Republic: therefore he ought to use only public knowledge, which is rendered probable to the community itself. It is confirmed, because a man ought not to use that opinion which opens the way to frauds. They labor to prove the same by the authorities of the Fathers and the Canons, which Tannerus reports in number 52.

> Omnes, agmine constipato, iaciunt argumentum D. Thomae, quod quidem Bannes vocat moralem demonstrationem. Iudex in iudicando publicam sustinet Reipublicae personam: ergo debet uti scientia tantum publica, quae ipsi communitati probabilis reddatur. Confirmatur, quia homo non debet ea uti sententia, quae viam fraudibus aperit. Idipsum satagunt probare authoritatibus Patrum, et Canonum, quos refert Tannerus numero 52.

38 It is answered easily with St. Bonaventure in the cited places. The public person is bound to the defense of the innocent, and therefore so to bear himself that in the face of the Republic he be an asylum of innocence, as I showed above. Nor indeed does he open the way to frauds who uses certain private knowledge; nay, rather there is to be feared the false witnesses, with whom the whole world overflows.

Respondetur facile cum D. Bonavent. allegatis locis. Personam publicam teneri ad insontium defensionem, atque adeo ita se gerere, ut in facie Reipublicae sit innocentiae asylum, ut supra ostendi. Neque vero fraudibus viam aperit, qui certa utitur privata scientia, imo timendum a falsis testibus, quibus totus redundat orbis.

39 Furthermore, the Holy Fathers and the Canons enjoin a due public skillfulness in conducting causes.

Porro Sancti Patres, et Canones iniungunt debitam publice solertiam in causis agendis.

Question XIII: Whether princes can grant license to kill outlaws

1 On this I find only this in St. Bonaventure, serm. 6. on the Decalogue: that ministers of justice can kill the impious, provided it be done from zeal for justice, not from appetite for vengeance.

An possint Principes dare licentiam occidendi bannitos.

De hoc solum id invenio in S. Bonaventura, serm. 6. in Decalogum, ministros iustitiae posse impios necare, dummodo id fiat zelo iustitiae, non appetitu vindictae.

2 But they ask: Whether they can then be treacherously killed. Decius affirms, cap. Quae in Ecclesiarum, de constitut. num. 14; Bossius in pract. under the title of the banished.

Quaerunt autem: An possint tunc insidiose occidi. Affirmant Decius cap. Quae in Ecclesiarum, de constitut. num. 14. Bossius in pract. titulo bannitis.

3 Mantua denies it, consil. 100; so too Angelus, Lex, final, Cod. de delator; Alexander in the postilla on Bartolus on the same final Lex.

Negant vero Mantua consil. 100. Angel. Lex, finali Cod. de delator. Alexander in postilla ad Bartol. ad eandem Leg. finali.

4 Whatever may be the case concerning these, in whom this second opinion seems to be to be held for the soul's salvation of that wretched man; yet if anyone had given his faith to a banished man that he would not harm him, and then killed him, he would deserve the extreme punishment, as Julius Clarus asserts, L. 5. sentent. §. Homicidium, num. 61, and Fagundez, Book 5, cap. 16, num. 12.

Quidquid vero sit de his, in quibus videtur haec secunda opinio tenenda ob animae salutem miseri illius; si tamen aliquis dedisset fidem bannito eum non offendendi, atque eum occideret, dignus esset supplicio extremo, ut asserunt Iulius Clarius L. 5. sentent. §. Homicidium, num. 61. et Fagundez Libro 5. cap. 16. num. 12.

Question XIV: On the restitution owed on account of homicide, or mutilation

1 It is certain, first, that a homicide is held to restitution of the expenses incurred for the cures: the Lex, Quae actione in principio, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam, and the Lex, ex hac lege, ff. si quid paup. fecisse dicatur.

Certum est primo, homicidam teneri ad restitutionem expensarum, pro curatione factarum: Lex, Quae actione in principio, ff. ad Legem Aquiliam, et Lex, ex hac lege, ff. si quid paup. fecisse dicatur.

2 In canonical law also it is plain from cap. 1. de iniuriis, et damno dato.

De iure etiam canonico patet cap. 1. de iniuriis, et damno dato.

3 Second, he is bound to restore the profits which the slain, or mutilated, or wounded man would have accumulated: L. X. Quae ait, ff. ad L. Aquiliam, and the Lex ex hac Lege, and in the canon law, loco cit. Ubi Iuristae. Those profits, then, are to be restored, deducting what he himself would have spent, namely on food, clothing, etc., in the course of his life.

Secundo tenetur restituere lucra, quae erat cumulaturus occisus, vel mutilatus, aut vulneratus L. X. Quae ait, ff. ad L. Aquiliam, et Lex ex hac Lege, et in Iure can. loco cit. Ubi Iuristae. Ea igitur lucra sunt restituenda, detractis his, quae expendisset ipse, scilicet victu, vestitu, etc. in cursu vitae.

4 The course of life is computed in the Laws at 60 years: the Lex computationis, and the Lex Hereditatem, ff. ad Leg. falcidiam. Yet those laws spoke only of allowances assigned for life in the external forum.

Vitae autem cursus in Legibus ad 60. annos computatur, Lex computationis, et Lex. Hereditatem, ff. ad Leg. falcidiam. Hae tamen leges solum locutae sunt de alimentis deputatis ad vitam pro foro externo.

5 The computation will be better made, with all things prudently considered: health, age, trade, and other circumstances. So Lessius Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 20. num. 129. Menoch. de arb. qq. Lib. 2. casu 121. Fagundez L. 5. cap. 18. num 8. and others cited by him.

Melius computatio fiet, consideratis prudenter omnibus, sanitate, aetate, arte, et aliis. Ita Lessius Tom. 1. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 20. num. 129. Menoch. de arb. qq. Lib. 2. casu 121. Fagundez L. 5. cap. 18. num 8. et alii apud eum.

6 This restitution is obligatory even if the killer be beheaded. So Nauar. cap. 15. num. 22. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 21. Couar. lib. 1. var. cap. 10. and others, against Scotus 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Fagundez num. 19. and others.

Haec autem restitutio cogit etiamsi occisor decolletur. Ita Nauar. cap. 15. num. 22. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 21. Couar. lib. 1. var. cap. 10. et alii contra Scotum 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. Fagundez num. 19. et alios.

7 The heirs of the homicide are held to the restitution, provided he left free goods in which they succeed. Bassaeus num. 10. adds, probably, that they are not held to restore to the creditors of the slain man, nor to those whom the slain man was supporting gratuitously.

Haeredes homicidae tenentur restitutioni, modo reliquerit bona libera, in quibus succedunt. Addit Bassaeus num. 10. probabiliter non teneri restituere creditoribus occisi, neque iis, quos occisus liberaliter alebat.

8 Many indeed think that restitution is not owed to heirs who are not father, sons, wife, or such persons as the slain man was bound to support. So Lessius dub. 26. num. 155. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 3. and others.

Existimant vero multi, non esse haeredibus restituenda, qui non sunt pater, filii, uxor, aut tales, quos occisus tenebatur alere. Ita Lessius dub. 26. num. 155. Sotus Lib. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 3. et alii.

9 Yet the opposite is held by Farinac. Tom. 4. quaest. 119. de Homicidio, num. 127. Abbas on cap. 1. de iniuriis, et damno dato. Socinus there, num. 57. and 63. The reason is that every right of the deceased passes to the heirs, whoever they be. To this Bassaeus n. 21. assents, with both Nauarros.

> Oppositum tamen censent Farinac. Tom. 4. quaest. 119. de Homicidio, num. 127. Abbas in cap. 1. de iniuriis, et damno dato. Socinus ibidem, num. 57. et 63. Ratio est, quia omne ius defuncti transit ad haeredes, quicumque sint. Huic annuit Bassaeus n. 21. cum utroque Nauarro.

10 Whether, however, the homicide is bound to restore money also for the injury of the murder itself, I judge, according to the mind of D. Bonaventure, that he is not bound, because it is not of the same order. So the Doctors commonly, at Fagundez cap. 20. — although Bassaeus num. 5. with others opposes this, if the heirs are in need.

> An vero etiam pro iniuria homicidii teneatur homicida restituere pecuniam, arbitror ad mentem D. Bonaventurae, non teneri, quia non est eiusdem ordinis. Ita communiter DD. apud Fagundez cap. 20. etsi Bassaeus num. 5. cum aliis repugnet, si haeredes egeant.

11 They also ask: if Titius should kill Peter, and an innocent Caius be condemned for the murder, is Titius bound to make restitution to Caius?

> Quaerunt etiam: An si Titius occideret Petrum, et de homicidio damnetur innocens Caius, teneatur Titius restituere Caio.

12 The common answer is that he is not bound, provided Titius did not foresee the damages that could befall Caius. So Less. 2. cap. 9. dub. 16. num. 110. Sotus L. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. Nauar. summa Latinae, cap. 15. num. 17. Zech. de casib. reserv. casu 12. Lazarius Papensis de qq. Canon. quaest. 6. sect. 3. Fagundez cap. 17. num. 3.

> Communiter negant, eum teneri, si tamen non animadvertit Titius damna, quae sequi poterant Caio. Ita Less. 2. cap. 9. dub. 16. num. 110. Sotus L. 4. de Iust. quaest. 6. art. 3. Nauar. summa Latinae, cap. 15. num. 17. Zech. de casib. reserv. casu 12. Lazarius Papensis de qq. Canon. quaest. 6. sect. 3. Fagundez cap. 17. num. 3.

13 But if he foresaw it, and was unwilling to take precautions: some say he is bound to restitution. So Lazar. quaest. 11. Corradus p. p. quaest. 128.

> Si vero praevidit, et noluit cavere; aliqui dicunt, eum teneri ad restitutionem. Ita Lazar. quaest. 11. Corradus p. p. quaest. 128.

14 Yet the opposite is taught by Less. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 16. num. 111. and others at Fagundez loco citato, num. 6. Lessius says the same, even if he had killed Peter with this very intention. Fagundez holds the same opinion.

> Oppositum tamen docet Less. Lib. 2. cap. 9. dub. 16. num. 111. et alii apud Fagundez loco citato, num. 6. Idipsum ait Lessius, etiam si hac intentione occidisset Petrum. Idem sentit Fagundez.

Question XV: Whether the mutilation of a limb is ever lawful

1 That mutilation is illicit per se, all affirm with D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. and D. Thom. quaest. 65. art. 1. and others: Yet it is licit for the public Magistrate to mutilate someone, just as to kill for a just cause. The Saintly Doctor supposes this serm. 6. in Decal. The reason is that the part ought to be given for the good of the whole, as D. Thom. also says, and Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 9. puncto unico.

Mutilationem esse illicitam per se, afferunt omnes cum D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. et D. Thom. quaest. 65. art. 1. et alii: Licitum tamen est publico Magistratui mutilare aliquem, sicut occidere ob iustam causam. Hoc S. Doctor supponit serm. 6. in Decal. Ratio est, quia pars ob bonum totius debet dari, ut ait etiam D. Thom. et Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 9. puncto unico.

2 In the case also in which Surgeons judge mutilation to be necessary: he is not bound to it, if it must be done with great pain. So Sotus Lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 2. art. 1. Lessius Tom. 1. tract. 2. dub. 14. num. 96. Fagundez in 5. praeceptum, lib. 5. cap. 13. num. 6.

In casu etiam, quo Chirurgi existiment necessarium mutilare; non tenetur, si id faciendum erit magno dolore. Ita Sotus Lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 2. art. 1. Lessius Tom. 1. tract. 2. dub. 14. num. 96. Fagundez in 5. praeceptum, lib. 5. cap. 13. num. 6.

3 But except the case in which he is a Prince, or greatly necessary to the Republic; for then he is bound to endure mutilation even with great pains. So the authorities cited, Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 3. num. 102. Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 9. num. 39. Fagundez num. 8.

Excipe vero, si is sit Princeps, vel maxime necessarius Reipublicae; tunc enim etiam cum magnis doloribus tenetur pati mutilationem. Ita allegati, Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 3. num. 102. Sayrus lib. 7. cap. 9. num. 39. Fagundez num. 8.

4 Nor indeed is anyone bound, or able, to mutilate himself, even if he would be put to death by a Tyrant should he refuse. So D. Thom. art. cit. Sotus lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 2. art. 1. Salon l. 2. quaest. 65. art. 1. The reason is that it is against the law of nature. Yet Bassaeus num. 32. says it is possible even in the case where death would thus be escaped.

Neque vero tenetur, aut potest se aliquis mutilare, etiamsi a Tyranno esset occidendus, si nollet. Ita D. Thom. art. cit. Sotus lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 2. art. 1. Salon l. 2. quaest. 65. art. 1. Ratio est, quia est contra ius naturae posse tamen ait Bassaeus num. 32. etiam casu, quo sic esset effugiendum.

Question XVI: Whether it is lawful to imprison or beat another

1 That it is not licit to imprison someone by private authority, the Saintly Doctor teaches in speculo animae, cap. 5. The reason is that this is to inflict harm as regards the movement of the limbs, as S. Bonav. loco cit. hints, and D. Thom. Yet it would be licit for someone having charge to imprison, e.g. a son, or a slave, to avoid some grave damage; but more licit is it for the judge, for custody or punishment, as all teach.

Non licere privata authoritate aliquem carcerare, docet S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 5. Ratio est, quia hoc est inferre nocumentum quo ad motum membrorum, ut innuit S. Bonav. loco cit. et D. Thom. Liceret tamen alicui, habenti curam, carcerare, v. g. filium, vel servum, ad aliquod damnum grave evitandum; magis vero id licet iudici in custodiam, vel poenam, ut docent omnes.

2 As to blows: it is licit for a father to beat his son, and a master his slave.

Quo ad verbera, licet Patri filium verberare, et Domino servum.

3 Yet S. Bonavent. in speculo animae admonishes that it not be done with cruelty. For cruelty is harshness of soul in exacting punishments for sin, just as faecitas[1] when one rages against one's neighbor without his fault; in which, if the excess is grave, the Saintly Doctor says it is mortal.

[1] N. Editor's note: the print/OCR reads 'faecitas', not a Latin word (perhaps 'feritas', savagery); the raw OCR of the print is equally garbled here; rendered as 'savagery' from context.

> Admonet tamen S. Bonavent. in speculo animae*, ne fiat crudelitate. Est enim crudelitas, atrocitas animi in exigendis poenis pro peccato, sicuti feritas cum quis saevit in proximum, absque eius culpa, in quibus, si gravis sit excessus, ait S. Doctor esse mortale.*

Disputation XXVII: On Theft and Robbery

1 THEFT and Robbery, allied by a close bond, spring from Avarice; both lie in wait for the advantages of peace and of Justice: Theft indeed fraudulently and secretly; Robbery openly and violently. The former is committed either by taking unjustly, or by detaining unjustly, or lastly by circumventing with guile. In either case every law is violated, and indeed the law of nature is transgressed, whose clear voice is: Do not to another what you would not have done to yourself. Likewise the Written Law of Exodus 20. forbids the unjust handling of another's property: Thou shalt not steal: but the Law of grace forbids theft all the more strongly, since it commands each one to give his own to the poor. Yet if, under the pressure of necessity, whereby things return to the common use, or by the command of the supreme Lord of all things, at whose nod all things are licit, another's property is handled — as befell the sons of Israël when they made off with the golden vessels of the AEgyptians — there is no sin, but rather merit of obedience is heaped up; though this merit, however agreeable to each, few attain. These matters I shall discuss, after I have given some preliminary warnings about dominion.

> De Furto, et Rapina.
> FURTUM, et Rapina germano foedere ex Avaritia ortum ducunt, ambo pacis, et Iustitiae emolumentis insidiantur; Furtum quidem fraudulenter, et clam; Rapina vero palam, et violenter. Prius committitur vel inique accipiendo, vel iniuste detinendo, vel denique dolose circumveniendo. Utroque omnis lex temeratur, et quidem naturae ius violatur, cuius clara vox est: Alteri ne feceris, quod tibi fieri non vis. Item et Lex Scripta Exodi 20. iniustam rei alienae contrectationem inhibet: Furtum non facies: Lex autem gratiae a fortiori furtum prohibet, cum suum pauperibus dare cuique praecipiat. Verum si urgente necessitate, qua res redeant in commune, vel iubente supremo rerum Domino, ad cuius nutum omnia licent, res aliena contrectatur, uti filiis Israël aurea AEgyptiorum vasa surripientibus contigerat, non peccatur, sed meritum potius obedientiae cumulatur; hoc tamen meritum, liceat cuique gratissimum, attingunt pauci. Haec discutiam, postquam de dominio aliqua praemonuero.

Question I: What dominion is

1 DOMINIUM must first be understood, that we may recognize theft and rapine, which assault dominion.

> Quid sit Dominium.
> DOMINIUM oportet praeintelligere, ut furtum, et rapinam, dominio insultantes, agnoscamus.

2 Now DOMINION is defined in many ways. The best is this: Dominion is the faculty which anyone has of using a thing independently of the will of another, and for his own advantage, in any use permitted by law. It is defined in almost this way by Soto l. IV. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 1. Gregorio de Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 10. p. 1. and others. It is drawn from D. Bonaventure on cap. 6. of our Rule, there: Fratres nihil sibi approprient, where he says dominion signifies the same as ownership of a thing; as ownership is usually distinguished from the bare possession of things. All Theologians and Jurists adhere to this. He examines and expounds this definition in this manner in the Opusculo ad Magistrum innominatum.

> MULTIS autem modis definitur Dominium: Optima est illa: Dominium est facultas, quam quis habet usurpandi rem independenter ab alterius voluntate, in suumque commodum, qualibet usu lege permisso. Ita fere definitur a Soto l. IV. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 1. Gregorio de Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 10. p. 1. et aliis. Eruitur ex

D. Bonaventura in cap. 6. Regulae nostrae ibi. Fratres nihil sibi approprient*, ubi dominium ait significare idem, ac proprietatem rei; ut proprietas distingui solet a nuda rerum possessione. Ei adhaerent Theologi, ac Iurisperiti omnes. Hanc definitionem hoc pacto examinat, et declarat in* Opusculo ad Magistrum innominatum.

[3] He explains THE VERY SAME definition in fact, while handing it on in other places, in the Apologia pauperum, cap. 1. tertia responsionis. See also Soto l. IV. quaest. 1. art. 1. Couar. l. I. var. cap. 15. Valentia quaest. 10. puncto 1. Molina disp. 6. Vasquez p. 2. disp. 169. num. 32. Tanner disputatione 4. quaest. 1. dubio 2.

EANDEM prorsus definitionem explicat re, dum tradit eam aliis locis in Apologia pauperum, cap. 1. tertia responsionis. Vide etiam Sotum l. IV. quaest. 1. art. 1. Couar. l. I. var. cap. 15. Valentiam quaest. 10. puncto 1. Molinam disp. 6. Vasquez p. 2. disp. 169. num. 32. Tannerum disputatione 4. quaest. 1. dubio 2.

[4] It is called a Faculty, or proper power, as Soto says. It is said: which anyone has of using a thing for his own advantage, so that the rights of superiors toward inferiors may be excluded, which are not dominions, since they do not regard the advantage of those superiors themselves, but of the inferiors; for superiors do not do those things they establish toward subjects for their own sake, but for those subjects, and on account of the public good.

DICITUR Facultas*, seu potestas propria, ut ait Sotus. Dicitur,* quam quis habet usurpandi rem in suum commodum*, ut excludantur iura superiorum erga inferiores, quae non sunt dominia, cum non respiciant utilitatem superiorum ipsorum, sed inferiorum; non enim propter seipsos faciunt superiores ea, quae erga subditos constituunt, sed propter illos, et ob publicam utilitatem.*

[5] EXCEPT the dominion of God, which is proper, ordering all things to himself, as to the ultimate end, as the Saintly Doctor discusses in 1. dist. 30. art. unico, quaest. 1. in resol. It is said: in any use permitted by law, so that certain particular dominions may be excluded, which do not extend to all things, for instance to alienating, selling, etc. In almost the same way it is defined by Gerson tract. de potestate Ecclesiae, consider. 13. and tract. de vita spirituali, lect. 3. Conrad quaest. 1. de contract.

EXCIPE dominium Dei, quod proprium est, ordinans ad se, tanquam ad ultimum finem, ut disserit S. Doctor in 1. dist. 30. art. unico, quaest. 1. in resol. Dicitur: Quolibet usu lege permisso*, ut excludantur aliqua dominia peculiaria, quae non ad omnia extenduntur, puta ad alienandum, vendendum, etc. Eodem fere modo definitur a Gersone* tract. de potestate Ecclesiae, consider. 13. et tract. de vita spirituali, lect. 3. Conrado quaest. 1. de contract.

[6] HENCE you have also that the description of dominium given by D. Thom. quaest. 67. art. 1. signifies the same, where he says that Dominion consists in the power of using exterior things, as made for man.

HINC habes etiam, tantumdem significare descriptionem dominii, latam a D. Thom. quaest. 67. art. 1. dicente, Dominium consistere in potestate utendi rebus exterioribus, quasi propter hominem factis.

[7] From this definition the Saintly Doctor gathers in the aforesaid places that the Friars Minors have no dominion over things, even consumptibles in their use, such as bread, wine, money, etc., which are conferred on them in alms; but only the bare use, as Nicholas III defines in cap. exiit de verb. significatione, in 6. for they cannot use those things independently of their owners; even if they have the use unto consumption, and although those things would not be given to the Friars absolutely by the will of the giver, yet they receive them with a continual dependence on him, until the things be consumed. And in this sense the Friars understood it, and the Pontiff Nicholas declared it, and the Saintly Doctor expounds it, as Valentia notes loc. cit. Sotus de Iust. l. IV. quaest. 1. art. 1. Bannes de dominio, quaest. 1. Bellarminus Tom. 1. l. IV. de summo Pontifice, cap. 14. Azorius lib. XII. cap. ult. Sayrus l. IX. cap. 7. dub. 9. Sanctes on cap. 6. regulae, cum Politio ibi, Suarez Tom. 2. disp. 28. sect. 2. Lessius, l. II. cap. 3. disp. 8. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

> Ex hac definitione colligit S. Doctor praefatis locis, Fratres Minores non habere dominium rerum, etiam consumptibilium usu, ut panis, vini, pecuniae, etc. quae illis conferuntur in eleemosynam; sed tantummodo merum usum, ut definit Nicolaus III. in cap. exiit de verb. significatione, in 6. non enim possunt uti illis rebus independenter a dominis earum; etiamsi usum habeant ad consumptionem, quamvis non ex voluntate dantis illae res absolute darentur Fratribus, tamen illi eas accipiunt cum dependentia continua ab eo, usque dum res absumptae sint. Et hoc sensu intellexerunt Fratres, et Pontifex Nicolaus declaravit, ac S. Doctor edisserit, ut notat Valentia loc. cit. Sotus de Iust. l. IV. quaest. 1. art. 1. Bannes de dominio, quaest. 1. Bellarminus Tom. 1. l. IV. de summo Pontifice, cap. 14. Azorius lib. XII. cap. ult. Sayrus l. IX. cap. 7. dub. 9. Sanctes in cap. 6. regulae, cum Politio ibi, Suarez Tom. 2. disp. 28. sect. 2. Lessius, l. II. cap. 3. disp. 8. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

8 From which the dispute with others is easily settled — those who obstinately maintain that the dominion of these things is in the hands of the Friars, because in things consumed by use, use does not seem capable of being distinguished from dominion. For he who grants the faculty of using bread and wine — what dominion over them does he reserve to himself? So think D. Thom. quaest. 78. art. 1. D. Antonius 4. p. tit. 12. cap. 4. § 4. Caietanus ad loc. cit. D. Thom. Sylvester v. Dominium, quaest. 2. Turrecremata l. II. de potestate Ecclesiae, cap. 122. in fine, where the definition of John XXII is relied upon, in Extrauag. Ad Conditorem, and in Extrauag. Cum inter nonnullos, and in Extrauag. Quia quorundam, where he declares (short of a definition of faith, however) and proves this opinion. He, then, is to be understood thus: that on the part of the givers, the things are given to the Friars entirely; yet he does not on that account want the Friars to be compelled to receive and hold those things independently of their owners, and so he does not attack our state; as Sanctes malignly murmurs at the place cited; for John did not intend to prove in that sense that our opinion is false, as Valentia warns loc. cit. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2. Bellarm. l. IV. de Pontifice, cap. 14.

> Ex quo facile dirimitur lis cum aliis, qui mordice sustinent, dominium harum rerum esse penes Fratres, quia in his rebus, quae usu consumuntur, non videtur posse distingui usus a dominio. Qui enim facultatem concedit pane, et vino utendi, ecquod sibi dominium eorum reservat? Ita sentiunt D. Thom. quaest. 78. art. 1. D. Antonius 4. p. tit. 12. cap. 4. § 4. Caietanus ad loc. cit. D. Thom. Sylvester v. Dominium, quaest. 2. Turrecremata l. II. de potestate Ecclesiae, cap. 122. in fine*, ubi nititur definitio Ioan. XXII. in* Extrauag. Ad Conditorem*, et in* Extrauag. Cum inter nonnullos*, et in* Extrauag. Quia quorundam*, ubi declarat (citra tamen fidei definitionem) et probat hanc opinionem. Sic autem intelligendus est, ut ex parte quidem dantium, res omnino dentur Fratribus; attamen non propterea vult, Fratres cogi eas res recipere, et tenere independenter ab earum dominis, atque adeo non impugnat statum nostrum; ut male Sanctes mussitat* loco citato*; non enim hoc sensu voluit Ioannes probare, nostram sententiam esse falsam, ut monet Valentia* loc. cit. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2. Bellarm. l. IV. de Pontifice, cap. 14.

9 NEITHER indeed does use suffice for dominion, but independence is required, and the power of using at will in all things, so that things can be sold, alienated, etc. Just as if someone invite some persons to dinner: those things are exhibited under the dominion of the inviter, as long as they last, until they are consumed. So the Saintly Doctor answers to the Rule of the Minors, and I shall say more in question 2.

NEQUE vero sufficit ad dominium usus, sed requiritur independentia, et usurpatio ad omnia, ut possint res vendi, alienari, etc. Veluti si aliquis invitet ad prandium aliquos, res illae exhibitae sunt sub dominio invitantis, quamdiu sunt, donec consumptae. Ita respondet S. Doctor ad regulam Minorum, et dicam quaestione 2.

10 But if use in these things does not differ from dominion, since Monks, by the chapter ad Monasterium, de statu Monachorum, have no proper particular property, they could not have use of consumptible things, for thus they would be proprietaries; as the saintly man discusses at the place cited.

Quod si usus in his non differt a dominio, cum Monachi ex cap. ad Monasterium, de statu Monachorum, non habeant proprium particulare, non possent habere usum rerum consumptibilium, quia essent sic proprietarii; ut disserit sanctus loco cit.

11 They have, therefore, use of fact as regards these things, not use of right, as D. Bonav. teaches, and with him Salonius de Iustitia, quaest. 1. art. 2.

Habent igitur usum facti quoad has res, non usum Iuris, ut docet D. Bonav. et cum eo Salonius de Iustitia, quaest. 1. art. 2.

12 Yet although those giving alms intended to transfer dominion, nevertheless since for dominion the will of the receiver is also necessary, and the Friars Minors do not receive them as owners, it follows that they have no dominion; and in this sense neither does D. Thom. nor the rest protest; nor does John XXII declare the opposite. Moreover this is the apparent controversy of those Pontiffs, which is reduced to concord; whence one would wrongly infer that they declared the opposite; but indeed they agree in our sense, nor had they disputed a matter of faith in the whole Church, but declared a practice for one family only of the Friars.

Quamvis autem dantes eleemosynas intenderent transferre dominium, tamen cum ad dominium necessaria sit etiam voluntas acceptantis, et Fratres Minores, eas non acceptent, ut domini; sequitur, eos non habere dominium, et hoc sensu neque D. Thom. aut caeteri reclamant; neque Ioannes XXII. oppositum declarat. Porro haec est apparens controversia istorum Pontificum, quae ad concordiam redigitur; ex quo male aliquis deducet, eos opposita declarasse; sed quidem in sensu nostro conveniunt, neque rem fidei in tota Ecclesia disputarant, sed praxim pro una tantum Fratrum familia declararunt.

13 That dominion is further distinct from use in things consumed by use, S. Bonav. proves on cap. 6. of the Rule, because, as he says with the Lex, ff. de pecul. The garment which the slave uses belongs to the peculium of the Master. And elsewhere he says that what is acquired for the slave is acquired for the master.

Dominium porro ab usu esse distinctum in rebus usu consumptibilibus, probat S. Bonav. ad cap. 6. regulae, quia ut ait Lex, ff. de pecul. Vestis, qua utitur servus, est de peculio Domini. Et alibi dicit, quod id, quod acquiritur servo, acquiritur domino.

14 In the little work, however, against the Unnamed one, he notes that although those giving alms materially intend to give absolutely to the Friars, yet implicitly they intend to give in such a way that they may licitly receive; for they do not will their perdition, and accordingly, since they themselves can have no dominion independently; neither do the givers intend thus to dispense alms.

In opusculo vero contra Innominatum, advertit, quod quamvis materialiter dantes eleemosynas cogitent dare absolute Fratribus, tamen implicite intendunt dare modo, quo licite recipiant; non enim volunt eorum perditionem, atque adeo, cum ipsi nequeant habere dominium independenter; neque dantes intendunt sic erogate eleemosynas.

15 As to the use of certain things which are not consumed at first, such as Books, and the utensils of the Sacristy: thus the Saintly Doctor expounds in the little work cited. The Rule does not forbid us to have nothing; for those wishing to preach must have books; those wishing to celebrate, Missals, etc. But the ownership of these things is not ours, but the Pope's, and the Most Eminent Protector ought to have the care of them; the sign of which is that the Friars can neither sell, nor in any other way alienate all these things. But if you obstinately maintain that these things are not the Church's, at last S. Bonav. says: whosever the ownership of these things be, it is not mine, as I declare, and my protector's; But who would be so destitute of mind as to say that I can, against my will, retain possession of a thing, while others yearn with full will for the possessions?

Quoad usum quarumdam rerum, quae primo non consumuntur, quales sunt Libri, et utensilia Sacrarii; sic edisserit S. Doctor opusc. cit. Regulam non prohibere, ut nihil habeamus; oportet enim, volentes praedicare, habere libros; volentes celebrare, Missalia, etc. Proprietas vero harum rerum non est nostra, sed Papae, et harum curam habere debet Eminentissimus Protector, cuius signum est, quod nec vendere; nec alio modo valent Fratres haec omnia alienare. Quod si mordicus sustineas, neque esse haec Ecclesiae, tandem ait S. Bonav. cuiuscumque sit horum proprietas, non est mea, ut declaro, et protector; Ecquis autem adeo mentis erit impos, ut dicat, me invitum posse possessionem rei retinere, cum alii plenis voluntatibus ad possessiones inhient?

Question II: Whether it is lawful to have private dominion over things

1 Note, then, that Right in a thing, as I showed in disp. 23. quaest. 1. de Iustitia, is twofold: of Jurisdiction, and of Property. The dominion of jurisdiction is a certain power of superiority, or the force of governing subjects. The dominion of property is a certain right of disposing of some thing as one's own and for one's own advantage.

Nota, dominium, quod Ius in re dicitur, ut ostendi disp. 23. quaest. 1. de Iustitia, esse duplex, Iurisdictionis, et Proprietatis. Dominium iurisdictionis est potestas quaedam superioritatis, seu vis gubernandi subditos. Dominium proprietatis est ius quoddam disponendi de re aliqua, tanquam sua, et in suum commodum.

2 The Dominion of Jurisdiction is one thing Divine, or Uncreated; another human, or created. Created dominion is one thing Ecclesiastical proper, namely of the Prelates of the Church, for the spiritual good; another is Political, or temporal, for the public peace. Such is the power of Kings and of the Emperor.

Dominium Iurisdictionis aliud est Divinum, seu Increatum: Aliud humanum, seu creatum. Dominium creatum aliud est Ecclesiasticum proprium, scilicet Praelatorum Ecclesiae ad bonum spirituale; Aliud est Politicum, seu temporale ad publicam pacem. Talis est potestas Regum, et Imperatoris.

3 Temporal dominion is either pure or mixed. Pure is the power, or right of the sword, for punishing malefactors. Mixed imperium is a simple power of jurisdiction joined with a slight right of coercion, joined by law, as is seen in Bullonius, and in Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

Dominium temporale aut merum est, aut mixtum. Merum est potestas, seu ius gladii ad animadvertendum in facinorosos. Imperium mixtum, est simplex potestas iurisdictionis cum modico iure coërcendi, iure coniuncta, ut videre est apud Bullonium, et apud Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 2.

4 Nor is far from this division that partition of dominion into High and Low. The High is divided, according to the variety of regimes, into Democracy, Aristocracy, and Monarchy.

Nec ab hac divisione longe abest illa dominii partitio in Altum, et Bassum. Altum dividitur pro regiminum varietate in Democtatiam, Aristocratiam, et Monarchiam.

5 Dominion of property, on the side of the object, is one thing perfect, or full, which embraces the thing and all its advantages; another imperfect, which is content either with the mere ownership of the thing without its advantages, or with the mere use, or advantages, of the thing. This is called the Useful dominion; that one, indeed, the Direct dominion.

Dominium proprietatis ex parte obiecti, aliud est perfectum, seu plenum, quod complectitur rem, et omnia commoda eius: Aliud imperfectum, quod vel sola proprietate sui absque commodis, vel solo usu, seu commodis rei contentum est. Hoc dicitur dominium Utile; illud vero Directum.

6 Some have asserted the dominion of things to be so lawful that they would altogether condemn Religious Expropriation; yet these the Seraphic Doctor refutes most elegantly and most forcefully in the Apology for Poverty.

Adeo licitum nonnulli asseruere rerum dominium, ut expropriationem penitus damnarent Religiosam, quos tamen elegantissime simul, ac validissime refellit Seraphicus Doctor in Apologia pauperitatis.

7 The dominion granted to all men in more universal fashion appears from Gen. 1: Have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the air, and all living creatures. And Deut. 15: You shall be lord over many nations, and no one shall be lord over you, as the Holy Doctor shows in p. 1 of the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy through three chapters.

Dominium universalius omnibus concessum hominibus constat ex Genes. primo: Dominamini piscibus maris, et volatilibus caeli, et universis animantibus. Et Deuter. 15. Dominaberis nationibus plurimis, et nullus tibi dominabitur, ut ostendit S. Doctor p. 1. Ecclesiasticae Hierarchiae per tria capita.

8 Thus he subjects women to the dominion of men, Gen. 3: You shall be under the power of the husband, and he shall have dominion over you. Thus also he subjected the nations to Kings, etc. See D. Bonav. loc. cit., where he treats of the dominion and subjection of men, which is nevertheless not proper dominion, according to the definition handed down, because subjects cannot use, sell, kill, etc. everything at their pleasure.

Sic mulieres virorum dominiis subiicit, Genes. 3. Sub viri potestate eris, et ipse dominabitur tui. Sic et gentes Regibus subdidit, etc. Vide D. Bonav. loc. cit. ubi agit de dominio, et subiectione hominum, quae tamen non est proprium dominium, iuxta definitionem traditam, quia nequeunt subditis ad omnia uti, vendere, occidere, etc. ad libitum.

9 Now, whether it is lawful for men, especially those professing the law of Christ, to hold peculiar dominion over external things, I shall weigh.

Iam vero, an liceat hominibus, maxime legem Christi profitentibus, peculiare dominium rerum externarum obtinere, expendam.

10 There were indeed divisions of goods from the time they were made by the law of nations, approved by all up to Christ; only Plato and Socrates stood against them, wanting all things to be common, even wives, against whom Aristotle argues in 2 Polit. from ch. 2.

Fuere divisiones quidem rerum a tempore, quo iure gentium factae sunt, ab omnibus usque ad Christum approbatae; soli tamen Plato, et Socrates obstiterunt, volentes, omnia esse communia, etiam uxores, contra quos agit Aristoteles 2. Polit. a cap. 2.

11 But in the time of grace there were certain heretics saying that all things ought to be common, even wives, as S. August. reports of heresy 40, and Epiph. of heresy 32, attributing it to Carpocrates.

> Tempore vero gratiae fuere nonnulli haeretici dicentes, omnia esse debere communia, etiam uxores, ut refert S. August. haeresi 40. et Epiph. haeresi 32. tribuens eam Carpocrati.

12 Soon, however, some of the Pelagians condemned the abundance of goods among Christians. S. August. reports them in lib. 2 de gratia Christi, cap. 15, and epist. 160. Moreover this error was condemned in the Palestinian Council, at which S. Augustine was present.

> Mox vero aliqui e Pelagianis, copiam rerum in Christianis damnarunt. Eos refert S. August. lib. 2. de gratia Christi, cap. 15. et epist. 160. Fuit autem hic error damnatus in Concilio Palaestino, cui S. Augustinus interfuit.

13 Afterwards other heretics called Vadiani, and Anthropomorphitae, by the testimony of August. heresy 50, denied that it was lawful, at least for Ecclesiastics, to have anything of their own. The Wicleffites and Anabaptists followed these; which error was condemned in the Council of Constance, session 8.

> Postea alii haeretici dicti Vadiani, et Antropomorphitae, teste August. haeresi 50. negabant, licitum esse, saltem Ecclesiasticis, habere aliquid proprium. Hos secuti sunt Vuiclephistae, et Anabaptistae; qui error damnatus est in Concilio Constant. sess. 8.

14 I assert, therefore, that dominion and the division of things is lawful for all, even Ecclesiastics and Religious, according to the institute of each order.

> Assero igitur, licitum esse dominium, ac divisionem rerum, omnibus, etiam Ecclesiasticis, et Religiosis, iuxta cuiusque ordinis institutum.

15 This assertion is infallible to all Catholics, and the Holy Doctor rather supposes it than proves it in the Apologies for Poverty, and he strove only to prove that even the religious renunciation of things is licit, which presupposes their dominion.

> Assertum hoc omnibus Catholicis est infallibile, illudque potius supponit, quam probet S. Doctor in Apologiis paupertatis, solumque enixus est probare, licitam esse etiam rerum abrenuntiationem religiosam, quae praerequirit earum dominium.

16 The assertion is proved, therefore, by the Holy Doctor from Jos. 10, where the Priests and Levites of the old Law had possessions and lands by God's constitution. S. Bonav. pursues this at length in cap. 3 of the third response in the Apology for the Poor. There, however, he strenuously shows that some have drawn badly, together with the heretic Vigilantius, from the old testament even the summity of Evangelical perfection requiring possessions and dominions; and consequently that expropriated religious orders are superstitious, inasmuch as they were not figured in the old testament, for those Levites were most distant shadows; for they had even wives and children, although in the Gospel Castity and Poverty are urged by Christ in Matthew 19. The former while it is said: There are Eunuchs who have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven. He who can take it, let him take it. Poverty, however: If you wish to be perfect, go, sell all that you have, and give to the poor. Weighing which passage, D. Bonavent. in cap. 3 of the first response admonishes that there is a threefold state of perfection, which arises in charity.

Probatur ergo assertio a S. Doctore ex Iosue 10. ubi Sacerdotes, et Levitae veteris Legis habuere possessiones, et agros, ex Dei constitutione. Hoc late prosequitur S. Bonav. cap. 3. responsionis tertiae in Apologia pauperum. Ibi tamen enixe ostendit, male nonnullos cum Vigilantio haeretico deduxisse, etiam perfectionem summam Evangelicam requirere possessiones, et dominia; atque adeo religiones expropriatas, esse superstitiosas, quippe in veteri testamento non figuratas, nam Levitz illi fuere umbrae remotissimae; habuere enim etiam uxores et filios, cum tamen in Euangelio suadeatur a Christo Matthaei 19. Castitas, et Paupertas. Illa dum dicitur: Sunt Eunuchi, qui seipsos castraverunt propter regnum caelorum. Qui potest capere, capiat. Paupertas vero: Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende omnia, quae habes, et da pauperibus. Quem locum pensitans D. Bonavent. cap. 3. primae responsionis, admonet, triplicem esse statum perfectionis, quae in charitate exsurgit.

17 The FIRST is of necessity, and consists in the observance of the precepts. The second is of counsel, and stands in fulfilling the evangelical counsels. Therefore Christ, when he had first opened that state: If you wish to enter into life, keep the commandments. Soon he urges the higher perfection: If you wish to be perfect, go, sell all that you have; and give to the poor, so that the expropriation of things is not a precept, although it is a proposal. The third state of perfection, the Holy Doctor says, is in the fatherland, of which Prov. 4: The path of the just, as a shining light, goes forward and grows even to the perfect day. Of this D. August. in the first Soliloquy cap. 6: Truly perfect virtue is reason arriving at that end which blessed life attains; and then charity is consummated.

PRIMUS est necessitatis, et consistit in observantia praeceptorum. Secundus consilii, et stat in adimplendis consiliis euangelicis. Ideo Christus, cum primum statum aperuisset: Si vis ad vitam ingredi, serva mandata. Mox perfectionem hortatur altiorem: Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende omnia, quae habes; et da pauperibus, adeo ut expropriatio rerum non sit praecepta, licet proposita. Tertium statum perfectionis, ait S. Doctor, esse in patria, de qua Prouerb. 4. Iustorum semita, quasi lux splendens, procedit, et crescit usque ad perfectam diem. De hac D. August. primo soliloq. cap. 6. Vere perfecta virtus est ratio perveniens usque ad finem, quem beata vita consequitur; et tunc est charitas consummata.

18 It is PROVED secondly by the Holy Doctor in cap. 1 of the first response; for even the Apostolic college had purses, in order to show condescension toward the imperfect, as Hugh says in Psalm. 91. cap. 64. The same Holy Doctor explains this also at that place Ioan. 12., and on the poverty of Christ, against Guillelmus, art. 1., from the Gloss on that Ps. 103: He bringeth forth hay for the cattle; and from D. Jerome at that place, where he says they had purses for other poor men.

PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore cap. 1. primae responsionis; nam et collegium Apostolicum loculos habuit ob condescensionem imperfectis exhibendam, ut ait Hugo in Psalm. 91. cap. 64. sic etiam explicat idem Sanctus Doctor ad eum locum Ioan. 12. et de paupertate Christi, contra Guillelmum art. 1. ex Glossa in id Psal. 103. Producens faenum iumentis, et ex D. Hieronymo ad eum locum, ubi ait, habuisse loculos pro aliis pauperibus.

19 The same S. Bonav. proves in cap. 1 of the second response of the Apol. of the poor, from the immense riches given by God to Solomon, that he might enrich the Temple and the Priests.

IDEM probat S. Bonav. in cap. 1. respon. secundae, Apol. pauperum, ex ingentibus opibus, quae datae sunt a Deo Salomoni, ut Templum ditaret, et Sacerdotes.

20 The SAME he proves in cap. 3 of the third response, from Genes. 12., where the Lord indeed commanded Abraham to go out of his land, but obeying God: Abraham went out, as the Lord commanded him: He took Sara his wife, and Lot the son of his brother, and all the substance which they possessed in Haran.

Behold, the dominion of Abraham's goods is left to him by God, even in the state of the old perfection.

> IDEM probat cap. 3. tertiae respon. ex Genes. 12. ubi Dominus praecepit quidem Abrahae, ut exiret de terra sua, sed obediens Deo: Egressus est Abraham, sicut praecepit ei Dominus: Tulit Saram uxorem suam, et Lot filium fratris sui, universamque substantiam, quam possederant in Haran. En rerum dominium Abrahae relinquitur a Deo, etiam in statu veteris perfectionis.

21 The Holy Doctor proves THE SAME THING by examples of the friends of God, Jacob, Joseph, David, Job, who possessed the most ample riches. Whence he observes that the goods of Job were restored multiplied.

> IDIPSUM probat S. Doctor exemplis amicorum Dei, Iacob, Ioseph, David, Iob, qui possedere amplissimas opes. Unde observat, Iob restitutas esse opes multiplicatas.

22 He ADDS, however, with D. Bernard, in the sermon on that: Behold we have left all things, that those rich men of old were not at the summit of perfection while they were most wealthy.

> ADDIT tamen cum D. Bernardo, in sermone super id: Ecce nos reliquimus omnia, illos diuites antiquos non fuisse in apice perfectionis, dum erant ditissimi.

23 It is PROVED secondly in the same Apologies from the Holy Fathers, asserting that it is perfection, not precept, to relinquish the dominion of things.

> PROBATUR secundo in eisdem Apologiis ex SS. Patribus, asserentibus, esse perfectionem, non praeceptum, relinquere dominium rerum.

24 S. AUGUST. de bono coniug. cap. 8: They did good who ministered necessaries to Christ and his disciples from their substance; but better those who left all their substance, that they might follow the same Lord more unimpeded.

> S. AUGUST. de bono coniug. cap. 8. Benefaciebant, qui de sua substantia Christo, ac discipulis eius, necessaria ministrabant; sed melius, qui omnem substantiam dimiserunt, ut expeditiores eundem Dominum sequerentur.

25 GREGORY, homil. 26. in Ezech.: When one vows to God something of his own, and does not vow something, it is a sacrifice; but when he has vowed all to God, it is a holocaust.

> GREGORIUS, homil. 26. in Ezech. Cum quis suum aliquid Deo vovet, et aliquid non vovet, sacrificium est; cum vero omne Deo voverit, holocaustum est.

26 The same is held by Ioan. Chrysostom in the book Quod nemo laeditur, nisi a seipso. And D. Bernard. epist. 42.

> IDEM habent Ioan. Chrysostom. lib. Quod nemo laeditur, nisi a seipso. Et D. Bernard. epist. 42.

27 D. PROSPER de vita contemplativa lib. 2. cap. 9. praises Paulinus and Hilarian, because of their own accord they bestowed on the poor, although by reason of the Episcopal office they afterwards dispensed the goods of the Church, as is had in dist. 12. quaest. 1. Expedit: It is fitting that the faculties of the Church be possessed, and one's own goods be contemned for love of perfection. The Holy Doctor reports the same also ad cap. sextum Regulae.

D. PROSPER de vita contemplatiua lib. 2. cap. 9. laudat Paulinum, et Hilarium, quod sponte sua pauperibus erogarunt, licet ratione Episcopalis officii Ecclesiastica bona postea dispensarent, ut habetur dist. 12. quaest. 1. Expedit facultates Ecclesiae possideri, et proprias perfectionis amore contemni. Id refert S. Doctor etiam ad cap. sextum Regulae.

28 The GLOSS on that 1 Timot. 6: Habentes alimenta, etc. Although we have brought nothing into this world, nevertheless these temporal things are not to be cast away. It adds, however, that it would be better that they be cast away for Christ's sake.

GLOSSA in id prima Timot. 6. Habentes alimenta, etc. etsi nihil intulerimus in hunc mundum, non tamen abiicienda haec temporalia. Subdit tamen, melius fore, ut propter Christum abiicerentur.

29 Likewise the Gloss on those words, 2 Cor. 8: Let your abundance supply their want, reports many other authorities of the Saints, in the first response cap. 3, and of the third response cap. 1 and 2.

ITIDEM Glossa ad ea verba, 2. Cor. 8. Vestra abundantia illorum inopiam suppleat*, multas alias authoritates Sanctorum refert* respon. prima cap. 3. et responsionis tertiae cap. 1. et 2.

30 It is PROVED thirdly by D. Bonav. from arguments taken from 2 Polit. cap. 3., indeed from the Scriptures; for first violent poverty induces to sins; as is said Ecclus. 27: Through poverty many have sinned.

PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonav. rationibus, sumptis e 2. Polit. cap. 3. imo e Scripturis, primo enim paupertas violenta inducit ad peccata; ut dicitur Eccles. 27. Propter inopiam multi deliquerunt.

31 SALOMON indeed said Prouerb. 30: Give me neither riches nor poverty; but grant only the necessaries to my sustenance, lest compelled by need I be mad, and swear by the name of my God. These things, to be sure, were said in the time of the old law, as Chrysost. notes homil. 18. in epist. ad Hebraeos. Therefore it is said in Ecclus. 17: Wisdom is more useful with riches.

SALOMON vero Prouerb. 30. aiebat: Diuitias, et paupertatem ne dederis mihi; sed tantum tribue victui meo necessaria, ne egestate compulsus furer, et periurem nomen Dei mei. Haec sane dicta sunt, tempore legis veteris, ut aduertit Chrysost. homil. 18. in epist. ad Hebraeos. Ideo Eccles. 17. dicitur: Utilior est sapientia cum divitiis.

32 INDEED, if we look at the ordinary natural and civil life, we shall surely find that individuals need the particular helps of the family goods, that each one may not be anxious over many things, and may live peacefully.

PROFECTO, si vitam ordinariam naturalem, et ciuilem aspiciamus, illud profecto comperiemus, egere singulos singularibus rei familiaris praesidiis, ut sollicitus quisque de multis non sit, et pacifice vivat.

33 They OBJECT first from Luke 14: Unless one renounce all that he possesses, he cannot be my disciple. Now the disciple of Christ and the Christian are the same: Therefore a rich man cannot be a Christian.

OBIICIUNT primo, Lucae 14. Nisi quis renunciaverit omnibus, quae possidet, non potest meus esse discipulus. Idem autem est discipulus Christi, et Christianus: Ergo non potest esse Christianus dives.

34 The Holy Doctor answers in opusc. de paupertate Christi, cap. 1. from the Gloss, that Christ wished his disciples to renounce, that is, in affection, so that they should so use the worldly things they possess, that nevertheless in mind they tend toward God; and this befits all the disciples of Christ, that is, Christians; but to leave all things befits only the perfect, Matth. 19. Therefore to the Apostles, who had chosen the perfect state of the counsels, he urged: Matth. 10. Do not possess gold. And that they carry nothing, Matth. 6. Thus also Valentia puncto secundo.

> RESPONDET S. Doctor opusc. de paupertate Christi, cap. 1. ex Glossa, Christum velle suos discipulos renunciare, idest affectu, ut ita utantur mundanis, quae possident, ut tamen mente tendant in Deum, et hoc omnibus discipulis Christi, idest Christianis convenit; at relinquere omnia, solis perfectis conuenit Matth. 19. Ideo Apostolis, qui perfectum statum consiliorum elegerant, suasit, Matth. 10. Nolite possidere aurum. Et ne quid tollerent Matth. 6. Ita etiam Valentia puncto secundo.

35 They OBJECT also many holy Fathers who reprehend the ownership of things. Clemens I. epist. 5. and it is reported 12. quaest. 1. C. dilectissimis. Basilius serm. ad diuites avaros, around that passage of Luke 12: I will gather together all things that are born to me. Ambrosius serm. 81. and it is reported cap. sicut II, dist. 47. Hence Aristotle says 2. Polit. cap. 3: All things ought to be common among friends.

> OBIICIUNT etiam multos Sanctos Patres, qui proprietatem rerum reprehendunt. Clemens I. epist. 5. et refertur 12. quaest. 1. C. dilectissimis. Basilius serm. ad diuites avaros, circa id Lucae 12. Congregabo omnia, quae nata sunt mihi. Ambrosius serm. 81. et refertur cap. sicut II, dist. 47. Ideo ait Aristoteles 2. Polit. cap. 3. Amicorum omnia debent esse communia.

36 The Holy Doctor answers, loc. citat. de paupertate Christi, art. 1. from the Fathers Ambrosius l. 2. offic., Chrysostomo loc. cit. and others, that the sense is that riches afford no aid toward the blessed life, which Christ openly testifies saying, Matth. 5. Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven; for they are occasions of sins; on which account they are called: Mammona of iniquity, because, as is said Ecclus. 11: If you be rich, you will not be free from sin, as S. Bonav. pursues at length at that place Lucae 16.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. loc. citat. de paupertate Christi, art. 1. ex PP. Ambrosio l. 2. offic. Chrysostomo loc. cit. et aliis*, sensum esse, diuitias nihil adiumenti praestare ad vitam beatam, quod aperte Christus testatur dicens,* Matth. 5. Beati pauperes spiritu, quoniam ipsorum est regnum caelorum; sunt enim occasiones peccatorum; propterea dicuntur: Mammona iniquitatis*, quia, ut dicitur Eccles. 11.* Si diues fueris, non eris immunis a delicto*, ut late prosequitur S. Bonav. ad eum locum* Lucae 16.

37 TO the same point about friends, I say with Valentia that all things ought to be common in necessity, except those things which induce turpitude, as wives, which were never common, as Tertullianus proves in the Apologeticum contra gentes, cap. 39.

> A D id de amicis, dico cum Valentia, omnia debere esse communia in necessitate, exceptis his, quae turpitudinem inducunt, ut uxores, quae nunquam fuere communes, ut probat Tertullianus Apologetico contra gentes, cap. 39.

38 But WHEN this division of things was made, it is easily dispatched that it was made from the nations united by the law of nations. But if it had been made by the law of nature, the communion of things would be against nature, which plainly appears false from the usage of the primitive Church, and of the diverse Religious orders now, among whom ownership is renounced. But now the division of all things, or jurisdiction, if it is made anew, is made by the civil, or positive law, as D. Thom. says art. 2. ad 1., and it is plain in ff. de legibus, et Constit. Principum, l. 1. Whence rightly D. August. tract. 6. in Ioan., and it is reported in dist. 8. cap. Quo iure: Take away (he says) the laws of the Emperors, and no one will dare to say: this villa is mine.

QUANDO autem facta sit haec diuisio rerum, facile expeditur factam esse ex adunatis nationibus iure gentium. Quod si facta esset iure naturae, contra naturam esset rerum communio, quod patet esse falsum ex usu primitiuae Ecclesiae, et diuersarum nunc Religionum, apud quas proprietas abdicatur. Nunc vero omnium rerum divisio, seu iurisdictio, si de novo fiat, fit iure civili, seu positivo, ut ait D. Thom. art. 2. ad 1. et patet ff. de legibus, et Constit. Principum, l. 1. Unde recte D. August. tract. 6. in Ioan. et refertur dist. 8. cap. Quo iure : Tolle (ait) iura Imperatorum, et nullus audebit dicere : haec Villa est mea.

39 Now all jurisdictions are so appropriated and divided that no private person is not the subject of someone, dist. 99. C. Nullus, and 25. quaest. 2. C. de Ecclesiasticis.

Omnes autem iurisdictiones ita sunt appropriatae, et divisae, ut nemo privatus non sit subditus alicui dist. 99. C. Nullus, et 25. quaest. 2. C. de Ecclesiasticis.

40 Now here, concerning the dominion of jurisdictions, it is to be noted by the certain and common opinion of all that Princes, whether Ecclesiastical or secular, are by no means lords of things, nor even of persons, but only of a certain power over subjects, which is called jurisdiction, as Valentia notes disp. 5. quaest. 10. punct. 2. ad finem, and it is called the High dominion, which however he can use only for the pressing public good.

Est autem hic circa dominium iurisdictionum ex certa, et omnium communi sententia adnotandum, Principes sive Ecclesiasticos, sive saeculares minime esse dominos rerum, aut etiam personarum, sed solum cuiusdam in subditos potestatis, quae iurisdictio vocatur, ut notat Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 10. punct. 2. ad finem*, et dicitur dominium Altum, quod tamen ad bonum tantum publicum urgens, uti potest.*

41 Nor does that stand in the way which is said in 1 Reg. 8: This will be the right of the king: He will take your sons, and your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive yards, etc. For "right" signifies also the usurped one, by which Samuel wished to terrify the Jews.

Neque obstat id, quod dicitur, primo Reg. 8. Hoc erit ius regis : Filios vestros tollet, et agros, et vineas, et oliveta, etc. Nam ius significat etiam usurpatum, quo volebat Samuël terrere Iudaeos.

42 As for other things, not all are divided, as is plain in the Institutions on the division of things, where it is had that rivers, hunting, fishing, and things of this kind remained common.

Quoad alias res, non omnes sunt divisae, ut patet in Institutionibus de rerum divisione*, ubi habetur, flumina, venationem, piscationem, et huiusmodi mansisse communia.*

43 It is disputed here: in how many ways are dominions acquired.

Disputant hic : quot modis acquirantur dominia.

44 Now they are acquired in two ways. First by Invention and occupation, without the dominion being transferred from another. Second by the legitimate translation of dominion from one into another.

Duobus autem modis acquiruntur. Primo Inventione, et occupatione, absque eo quod dominium ex alio transferatur. Secundo per legitimam dominii translationem ex uno in alium.

45 As for the acquisition of dominion by invention, I have discussed sufficiently in disp. 24.

Quoad acquisitionem dominii per inventionem, satis disserui disp. 24.

46 As for the translation of dominion, it can be made either by the Divine will, expounded by the natural law, or by positive divine law. Thus God transferred the dominion of the treasures of the Egyptians to the Jews, Exodi 12., as S. Bonav. notes, 2. dist. 40. dub. 2.

> Quoad translationem dominii, potest fieri, vel a Divina voluntate, explicata iure naturali, vel iure divino positivo. Sic Deus transtulit dominium thesaurorum AEgyptiorum in Iudaeos, Exodi 12. ut advertit S. Bonav. 2. dist. 40. dub. 2.

47 Secondly it can be made by the will of the possessor, provided he does it spontaneously, not deceived, nor hindered by any law.

> Secundo potest fieri voluntate possidentis, dummodo id faciat sponte, non deceptus, neque a lege aliqua impeditus.

48 Thirdly it can be made by human positive laws.

> Tertio potest fieri legibus humanis positivis.

49 Fourthly by the sentence of the Governor intervening: Now the voluntary renunciation can be made for the common good; for sometimes some transfer dominion perversely, squandering their goods.

> Quarto sententia Gubernatoris interveniente : Potest autem voluntaria renunciatio fieri ob bonum commune ; aliquando enim aliqui perverse dominium transferunt, sua bona dilapidando.

50 In what manner dominion is transferred through play, I have said in the disp. de restit. In what manner also through contracts, I shall say in disputation 1 of the Treatise on Contracts.

> Quo pacto autem dominium transferatur per ludum, dixi disp. de restit. Quo pacto etiam per contractus, dicam disputatione 1. Tract. de contract.

51 From these you have also the division of dominion into the dominion proper to individual persons, and the dominion of some community, of which the Holy Doctor treats in the Apology of the Poor, of the third response cap. 1. Whence it comes about that the renunciation of dominion is also twofold, especially in Religion. See the Seraphic Doctor in the place cited.

> Ex his habes etiam, divisionem dominii in dominium singulatis personae proprium, et dominium alicuius communitatis, de quo S. Doctor in Apologia Pauperum, responsionis tertia cap. 1. Ex quo fit, ut duplex etiam sit renunciatio dominii, maxime in Religione. Vide Seraphicum Doctorem loco citato.

52 Moreover there are as many kinds of Dominions as there are orders of Laws granting it, as the Natural, the Divine, etc.

> Porro tot sunt genera Dominiorum, quot sunt ordines Iurium, concedentium illud, ut Naturale, Divinum, etc.

Question III: What theft is

1 Theft is wont to be defined by Theologians: Theft is the occult taking of another's thing. Thus D. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 3. Covar. approves this definition, from the Jurists, Relect. in Regulam Peccatum, p. 1. §. 1.; for by the very fact that "occult taking" is said, Fraudulent taking, against the will of the owner, is signified. Therefore it is defined more clearly by D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 31., where he says: Theft is the handling of another's thing, occult, and with the owner ignorant and unwilling. And in the speculo animae, chapter 2: Theft is the occult handling of another's thing, against the will of the owner. And serm. 6. decal: Theft is the touching of another's thing, against the will of the owner.

Furtum definiri solet a Theologis : Furtum est occulta acceptio rei alienae. Sic D. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 3. Hanc definitionem approbat, e Iuristis, Covar. Relect. in Regulam Peccatum, p. 1. §. 1. hoc enim ipso quod dicitur occulta acceptio, significatur Fraudulenta, invito domino. Ideo clarius definitur a D. Bonav. p. 1. Centil. sect. 31. ubi ait : Furtum est occulta, et ignorante domino, et invito, alienae rei contrectatio. Et in speculo animae, capite 2. Furtum est occulta rei alienae contrectatio, invito domino. Et serm. 6. decal. Furtum est attrectatio rei alienae, invito domino.

2 He notes, however, that theft ought to be furtive, and through occult fraud; otherwise, if it is done through open violence, it will be rapine; or if through occult means, it is called robbery; whence also he elicits, with D. Thom., that under theft are contained all fraudulent contracts by which a neighbor is defrauded of his thing against his reasonable will. Whence also the unjust detention of another's thing is theft, as D. Thom. also says ad 2., and Valentia disp. 5. quaestion. 10. p. 4., and D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 2. in fine, who also in 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. litterali uses the same definition.

Advertit autem, furtum debere esse furtivum, et per occultam fraudem ; alioqui si fit per apertam violentiam, erit rapina ; vel si per occultam, dicitur latrocinium; ex quo etiam elicit cum D. Thom. sub furto contineri omnes fraudulentos contractus, quibus proximus rationabiliter invitus fraudatur re sua. Unde etiam detentio iniusta rei alienae est furtum, ut ait etiam D. Thom. ad 2. et Valentia disp. 5. quaestion. 10. p. 4. et D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 2. in fine, qui etiam in 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. litterali eadem utitur definitione.

3 Therefore the Holy Doctor everywhere holds constantly that theft is defined through contrectation, which does not signify mere material contact, as Sayrus, Valentia, and Fagundez think, who carp at this term; but a formal contrectation, which is the taking, or usurpation, or abstraction. Thus by the term contrectation it is defined by the Jurists, ad Leg. 1. §. furtum, ff. de furtis, and Institut. de obligatione, quae ex debito etc. §. 1., which Iulius Clarus explains l. 5. sent. §. Furtum. And Navar. in summa, cap. 17., and Sylvest. v. Furtum. At least that contrectation is a condition without which theft cannot exist, as he admits lib. 1. §. 1., is granted by Sayrus lib. 9. cap. 13., who however does not rest in it.

Constanter igitur ubique S. Doctor per contrectationem definit furtum, quae non significat mere contactum materialem, ut putant Sayrus, Valentia, et Fagundez, carpentes hunc terminum ; sed contrectationem formalem, quae est acceptio, vel usurpatio, vel ablatio. Sic vocabulo contrectationis definitur a Iuristis ad Leg. 1. §. furtum, ff. de furtis, et Institut. de obligatione, quae ex debito etc. §. 1. quam explicant Iulius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. Furtum. Et Navar. in summa, cap. 17. et Sylvest. v. Furtum. Saltem contrectationem esse conditionem, sine qua furtum esse non potest, ut fatetur lib. 1. §. 1. concedit Sayrus lib. 9. cap. 13. qui tamen in ea non quiescit.

4 From what has been said you have that Theft differs in species from Rapine, as D. Bonav. above, D. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 4., Caietanus there, Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. dub. 1., and the Jurisconsults ad Leg. 1. §. 1. et seq. ff. de vi bonorum raptorum, Molina Tract. 4. disp. 683. et 684., Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 1. num. 14. teach. For rapine requires two things, knowledge, and violence inflicted on the owner: but theft requires neither of these; Therefore rapine is graver. Moreover theft is an enemy of the light, since it is wont to be done in secret, but not rapine, according to that verse.

Ex dictis habes, Furtum differre specie a Rapina, ut docent D. Bonav. supra, D. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 4. Caietanus ibi, Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. dub. 1. et Iurisconsulti ad Leg. 1. §. 1. et seq. ff. de vi bonorum raptorum, Molina Tract. 4. disp. 683. et 684. Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 1. num. 14. Rapina enim duo requirit, scientiam, et violentiam illatam domino : furtum autem neutrum horum requirit; Ideo rapina gravior est. Insuper furtum est inimicum luci, cum in occulto soleat fieri, non item rapina, iuxta illum versum.

[5] Fur non est latro, quia tempore iur rapit atro : Tempore non atro rapit omnes res tibi latro.

> Fur non est latro, quia tempore iur rapit atro : Tempore non atro rapit omnes res tibi latro.

Question IV: What quantity is required for mortal sin in theft

[1] Deservedly one may cite here the saying: As many heads, so many opinions, which Diana reports p. 1. Tract. 17. resolut. 57. and Tract. de paupertate religiosa, resol. 36.

> Merito hic dici potest illud : Quot capita, tot sententiae, quas refert Diana p. 1. Tract. 17. resolut. 57. et Tract. de paupertate religiosa, resol. 36.

[2] The first opinion is that of Navarro in Manuali, cap. 17.: one and a half regales is a notable quantity of money that constitutes mortal theft; or two, or at most two and a half. Thus also Tolet. l. 5. cap. 16. assigns two Iulii; for among the Italians the Iulius is the same as the Regalis among the Spaniards, as Fagundez says l. 7. cap. 1. num. 15.

> Prima opinio est Navarri in Manuali, cap. 17. unum, et dimidium regalem esse quantitatem notabilem bilem, quae furtum mortale constituat; aut duos, vel ad summum duos, et dimidium. Ita etiam Tolet. l. 5. cap. 16. duos Iulios assignat; est enim apud Italos idem Iulius, ac apud Hispanos Regalis, ut ait Fagundez l. 7. cap. 1. num. 15.

[3] The second opinion is that of Corduba in summa, quaest. 109. and Salonii 2. 2. tom. 1. quaest. 66. art. 6. controu. 1. who say absolutely that one silver coin is grave matter, that is, four or five regales stolen from the rich; but one or two from the poor.

> Secvnda opinio est Cordubae in summa, quaest. 109. et Salonii 2. 2. tom. 1. quaest. 66. art. 6. controu. 1. qui dicunt absolute, unum argenteum esse materiam gravem, seu quatuor vel quinque regales divitibus surreptos; inopibus autem unum, vel duos.

[4] Third, Bartholomaeus Medina prima secundae, quaest. 88. art. 8. with many others says that it is not mortal theft unless it rises to the sum of two silver coins.

> Tertio Bartholomaeus Medina prima secundae, quaest. 88. art. 8. cum multis aliis dicit, non esse furtum mortale, nisi ad summam duorum argenteorum ascendat.

[5] Fourth, Gregorius de Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 19. punct. 16. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 2. num. 22. assert that it is absolutely lethal to steal three silver coins.

> Qvarto Gregorius de Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 6. quaest. 19. punct. 16. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 2. num. 22. asserunt, absolute esse lethale furari tres argenteos.

[6] Fifth, Vega in summa tract. 1. cap. 129. casu 12. teaches that four or five regales constitute notable matter of theft.

> Qvinto Vega in summa tract. 1. cap. 129. casu 12. docet, quatuor, vel quinque regales constituere notabilem materiam furti.

[7] Sixth, Molina de Iust. t. 3. disp. 685. says that as much value as the money given in one day to a digger of earth is seen to be mortal in regard to those who are not very rich.

> Sexto Molina de Iust. t. 3. disp. 685. ait, tantum valoris, quantum pecuniae datur una die fossori terrae, videri mortale in ordine ad eos, qui non sunt valde divites.

[8] Seventh, Bartholomaeus a S. Fausto in speculo disp. 2. quaest. 18. num. 26. and Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. define the sum of three Iulii as grave even if taken from a most wealthy man; but two Iulii from one of moderate means; and finally, one silver coin or one Iulius taken from a poor man constitutes grave matter. Thus also Sanctes noster in cap. 6. Regulae, lays upon us poor wretches one single Iulius.

> Septimo Bartholomaeus a S. Fausto in speculo disp. 2. quaest. 18. num. 26. et Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. trium Iuliorum summam definiunt gravem, etiamsi a ditissimo auferatur; a mediocri autem duos Iulios; a paupere tandem unum argenteum, vel Iulium ablatos, constituere materiam gravem. Sic et Sanctes noster in cap. 6. Regulae, unum Iulium nobis pauperibus imponit miseris.

[9] Eighth, Bonacina de contract. disp. 2. quaest. 8. p. 1. num. 7. distinguishes, saying that theft is grave according to the variety of persons from whom the thing is taken. For if the person is illustrious, opulent, splendid, a gold coin will be grave matter; but if he is an ordinary rich man, living on his revenues, four regales; if the person supports himself by a craft, two regales; fourth, ¶ if he is poor, one regale.

> Octavo Bonacina de contract. disp. 2. quaest. 8. p. 1. num. 7. distinguit dicens, Furtum esse grave pro varietate personarum, quibus res aufertur. Si enim persona sit illustris, opulens, splendida, nummus aureus erit materia gravis; si vero sit dives ordinarius, vivens de suis redditibus, quatuor regales: Si sit persona se suo sustentans artificio, duo regales; quarto, ¶ pauper sit, unus regalis.

[10] This opinion, which Nauarrus de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 39. and Reginaldus in praxi, T. 2. l. 22. cap. 1. quaest. 4. num. 19. also hold, Diana says is more probable than the others, saying that a notable quantity, with respect to the rich, is about one gold coin, or sixty asses; but with respect to common persons, about 20 asses; and with respect to a poor man, about 7 asses.

> Hanc opinionem, quam tenet etiam Nauarrus de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 39. et Reginaldus in praxi, T. 2. l. 22. cap. 1. quaest. 4. num. 19. ait Diana esse probabiliorem caeteris, dicendo, quantitatem notabilem, respectu divitum, esse circiter unius nummi aurei, seu sexaginta assium; respectu vero personarum communium, circiter 20. assium; et respectu pauperis, circiter 7. assium.

[11] The ninth opinion is that of Rodriquez in summa t. 5. cap. 118. num. 27. and 29.: that is a notable quantity which exceeds two gold coins; and Angel. v. Furtum, num. 34. and Syluester on the same word, quaest. 2. hold this opinion with regard to the wealthy. But whether Sotus l. 5. de iust. quaest. 3. art. 3. ad 3. teaches this opinion, Vasquez opusc. de restit. cap. 5. §. 1. dub. 5. num. 30. denies; but *Turrianus, Bartholomaeus a S. 12 Stephanus Fagundez num. cit. says that this matter is better left to the judgment of the prudent, considering persons less or more wealthy, and places, etc. Thus also Couar. l. 1. variar. cap. 3. num. 11. Syluest. verb. Furtum, quaest. 2. Ioan. Medina de contract. quaest. 10. Caspensis tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 4. Indeed Sanchez 1. 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 5. asserts that generally in Spain, because the region is richer, four silver coins are the mortal quantity. The same is the judgment of Suarez Tom. 3. de Relig. l. 8. cap. 6. num. 10. To such a judgment Bassaeus v. Furtum 1. num. 4. subscribes.

Stephanvs Fagundez num. cit. ait, melius rem hanc iudicio prudentis relinqui, consideratis personis minus, aut magis ditibus, et locis, etc. Ita etiam Couar. l. 1. variar. cap. 3. num. 11. Syluest. verb. Furtum, quaest. 2. Ioan. Medina de contract. quaest. 10. Caspensis tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 4. Ided Sanchez 1. 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 5. asserit, generaliter in Hispania, eo quod regio sit ditior, quatuor argenteos esse quantitatem mortalem. Idem sentit Suarez Tom. 3. de Relig. l. 8. cap. 6. num. 10. Tali iudicio subscribit Bassaeus v. Furtum 1. num. 4.

13 Fagundez therefore asserts, first, with respect to Kings, Princes, and most wealthy Prelates, and most rich men, that the sum of two or three ducats is mortal from its object. He alleges, Rodriquez in summa, cap. 149. Sotum, Rebellium, Lessium, Couarruviam, Syluestrum supra, Petrum Nauarrum l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 35. Suarium vero loc. cit. et Maiorem 4. dist. 15. quaest. 25. who, he says, probably assign with respect to these persons the quantity of one gold coin.

Asserit igitur Fagundez primo respectu Regum, Principum, et Praelatorum locupletissimorum, et hominum ditissimorum, summam duorum, vel trium ducatorum esse mortalem ex obiecto suo. Allegat Rodriquez in summa, cap. 149. Sotum, Rebellium, Lessium, Couarruviam, Syluestrum supra, Petrum Nauarrum l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 35. Suarium vero loc. cit. et Maiorem 4. dist. 15. quaest. 25. probabiliter, ait, assignare respectu harum personarum quantitatem unius aurei.

14 He asserts, second, that with respect to men of moderate wealth four silver coins constitute the mortal quantity, or at most, with a half added. Thus also Sanchez 1. 2. Decal. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 5. Suarez loco citato.

Asserit secundo, respectu hominum mediocriter divitum, quatuor argenteos constituere quantitatem mortalem, aut ad summum, addito dimidio. Ita etiam Sanchez 1. 2. Decal. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 5. Suarez loco citato.

15 He asserts, third, that with respect to the poor the quantity of one hundred dipondii, or at most with 20 added, is deadly. He adduces Rodriquez, and Aragonium, ac Nauarrum.

Asserit tertio, respectu pauperum quantitatem centum dipondiorum, vel ad summum additis 20. esse mortiferam. Adducit Rodriquez, et Aragonium, ac Nauarrum.

16 Finally he says: If we attend to places and cities more or less wealthy in money, and where things are sold more cheaply or more dearly, it is probable that in Lisbon, Seville, Paris, Venice, London,

Lyons, Rome, and other places very rich in money and opulent, the quantity of four or five regales, or denarii, is mortal in theft, even with respect to men of moderate wealth. But in Brazil, or in the West Indies, where money abounds and things are sold at a high price, the quantity of 15 Iulii will be mortal, against Lopes p. 1. cap. 92. who says that the sum of two regales in India is deadly.

> Tandem ait: Si attendamus ad loca, et urbes magis, vel minus pecuniosas, et ubi res vilius, aut charius venduntur, probabile esse, Olisipone, Hispali, Parisiis, Venetiis, Londini, Lugduni, Romae, et aliis locis valde pecuniosis, et opulentis, quantitatem quatuor, aut quinque regalium, seu denariorum esse mortalem in furto, respectu etiam hominum mediocriter divitum. In Brasilia autem, aut in Indiis occidentalibus, ubi abundant pecuniae, et res magno venduntur, mortalis erit quantitas Iuliorum 15. contra Lopes p. 1. cap. 92. dicentem, duorum regalium summam in India esse mortiferam.

17 But if four or five quadrantes are deducted from the prescribed quantity, he concludes that it is still mortal, because things that differ but little seem not to differ at all. Moreover these quantities are not to be taken Mathematically, but morally, as Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. disp. 6. num. 32. well teaches.

> Qvod si e quantitate praescripta defint quatuor, vel quinque quadrantes, concludit adhuc, esse mortale, quia, quae parum distant, nihil distare videntur. Deinde hae quantitates non sunt Mathematice, sed moraliter accipiendae, ut bene docet Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. disp. 6. num. 32.

18 In D. Bonav. I do not find any quantity prefixed; only in speculo animae, cap. 2. he says: Yet it must be noted that a thing might be so small, or of so little value, that it would not have the character of mortal, unless perhaps there were a will to take more, if the opportunity were present, or in that small thing there were notable damage to another; for a poor man is at any time damaged more in a small thing than a rich man in a great one. Thus also other ancient Theologians remit the whole business to the judgment of the prudent, as Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. num. 9. notes, establishing nothing special.

> In D. Bonav. non invenio quantitatem aliquam praefixam; solum in speculo animae, cap. 2. ait: Hoc tamen advertendum, quod tam modica res posset esse, vel tam modici valoris, quod non haberet rationem mortalis, nisi forte adesset voluntas maius accipiendi, si facultas adeffet, vel in illo modico esset alterius notabilis damnificatio; plus enim quandocumque damnificatur pauper in paruo, quam diues in magno. Sic etiam alii antiqui Theologi iudicio prudentis totum negotium remittunt, ut notat Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. num. 9. nihil speciale statuentes.

19 They think, therefore, that grave matter must be judged according to the gravity of the damage. Hence it agrees with the last opinion, that according to the variety of persons, places, etc. the gravity of the thing taken must be computed. He warns, however, that a thing light in its genus can become grave from the damage. They bring the example: if you take from someone an instrument of his craft by which he earns notably, even if it be a needle, and he has no other like it. They agree with Suarez loc. cit. num. 16. Tolet. l. 5. cap. 6. Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 33. Lessius l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 12. num. 33. Nauar. Summa, cap. 17. num. 3. Sanchez T. 2. l. 7. cap. 20. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 2. num. 2. The reason is, because grave damage is against justice gravely, and obliges to restitution, C. si culpa tua, de iniuriis, et damno datis. Thus also Tannet. disp. 4. quaest 8. dub. 6. reporting Aragonium, Bannem quaest. 66. art. 2. Bartholomeum Medinam quaest. 86. art. 2. Valentiam quaest. 10. p. 5. Rebellium l. 3. de iust. quaest. 15. sect. 2. and 3. Azor. t. 3. l. 5. cap. 13. quaestio 1. Lessium lib. 2. cap. 12. dub. 6.

Existimant ergo, materiam gravem censendam, iuxta gravitatem damnificationis. Itaque stat cum ultima sententia, ut pro varietate personarum, locorum, etc. computanda sit gravitas rei creptae. Illud tamen monet, rem ex genere levem, posse ex damnificatione fieri gravem. Afferunt exemplum, si aliquod artis instrumentum ab aliquo auferas, quo notabiliter lucratur, etiamsi sit acus; nec habeat aliud simile. Consentiunt Suarez loc. cit. num. 16. Tolet. l. 5. cap. 6. Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 33. Lessius l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 12. num. 33. Nauar. Summa, cap. 17. num. 3. Sanchez T. 2. l. 7. cap. 20. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 2. num. 2. Ratio est, quia gravis dam-nificatio est contra iustitiam graviter, et cogit ad restitutionem C. si culpa tua, de iniuriis, et damno datis. Sic et Tannet. disp. 4. quaest 8. dub. 6. referens Aragonium, Bannem quaest. 66. art. 2. Bartholomeum Medinam quaest. 86. art. 2. Valentiam quaest. 10. p. 5. Rebellium l. 3. de iust. quaest. 15. sect. 2. et 3. Azor. t. 3. l. 5. cap. 13. quaestio 1. Lessium lib. 2. cap. 12. dub. 6.

20 MANY say that the same follows if someone steals a small thing on account of which you know the Lord in his anger will break out in grave blows against another. Fagundez reports them, num. 5.

MULTI dicunt, idem sequi, si aliquis furetur rem parvam, ob quam scias Dominum iratum irrupturum in percussiones graves alterius. Eos refert Fagundez num. 5.

21 HERE arises the doubt, whether to steal in a Church a thing that is not sacred is sacrilege, by reason of the circumstance of the Sacred place and the injury inflicted upon it.

ORITUR hic dubitatio, an furari in Ecclesia rem non sacram sit sacrilegium, ratione circumstantiae loci Sacri, et iniuriae illi illatae.

22 The SENTENCE formerly common was that, absolutely, theft by reason of the circumstance of the Sacred place becomes sacrilege, and most of the Recentiores also hold it, as Fagundez reports l. 7. cap. 2. and Diana p. 1. tract. de circumstantiis aggravantibus, resol. 27. Paulus Layman defends it l. 4. tract. 10. cap. 7. num. 18, Suarez de Relig. Tom. 1. l. 3. cap. 4. num. 7. where he says it is the common sentence.

SENTENTIA olim communis fuit, absolute furtum, ratione circumstantiae loci Sacri, fieri sacrilegum, eamque tenent etiam Recentiores plurimi, ut refert Fagundez l. 7. cap. 2. et Diana p. 1. tract. de circumstantiis aggravantibus, resol. 27. Tuentur eam Paulus Layman l. 4. tract. 10. cap. 7. num. 18 Suarez de Relig. Tom. 1. l. 3. cap. 4. num. 7. ubi ait, esse communem sententiam.

23 It is PROVED from the words of Pope John in cap. Quisquis, dist. 17. quaest. 4.: Sacrilege is committed by taking a sacred thing from a sacred place; or a non-sacred thing from a sacred place; or a sacred thing from a non-sacred place. Therefore, since the Law does not distinguish whether that non-sacred thing is in custody, or deposit, or the possession of the Church, it does not seem it should be distinguished, as many distinguish; for thus the rule of the Law is had, de pretio, ff. de publican. unless another law or reason compels. There follow Raphaël de la Torre t. 2. t. 2. quaest. 99. art. 1. disp. 7. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. num. 25. with Reginaldus T. 2. l. 23. cap. 1. num. 12. Menoch. de arbitrar. l. 2. cent. 4. casu 389. num. 14. and Petrus Ledesma Summ. Tract. de poenit. cap. 10. This is the sentence of D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. litterali.

PROBATUR ex verbis Ioannis Papae in cap. Quisquis, dist. 17. quaest. 4. Sacrilegium committitur auferendo Sacrum de sacro; vel non sacrum de Sacro; aut sacrum de non sacro. Igitur cum Lex non distinguat, an illa res non sacra sit in custodia, vel deposito, vel possessione Ecclesiae, non videtur distinguendum, ut distinguunt multi; sic enim habetur regula Lex, de pretio, ff. de publican. nisi alia lex cogat, vel ratio. Sequuutur Raphaël de la Torre t. 2. t. 2. quaest. 99. art. 1. disp. 7. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. num. 25. cum Reginaldo T. 2. l. 23. cap. 1. num. 12.

Menoch. de arbitrar. l. 2. cent. 4. casu 389. num. 14. et Petrus Ledesma Summ. Tract. de poenit. cap. 10. Haec est sententia D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 37. dub. 7. litterali.

24 COMMONLY, however, they distinguish, as was intimated above, and say: if that thing is in deposit, or in the church, or the like, it is sacrilege; but not otherwise, if it is the purse of the one who is in the Church. Thus Sotus in 4. dist. 18. quaest. 2. art. 4. Ioan. de Cruz p. 2. direct. de Sacramento Poenit. quaest. 3. disp. 6. Fagundez lib. 7. in septimum praeceptum decal. cap. 2. num. 10. Henriquez l. 2. cap. 6. num. 5. and Diana judges it probable, and Raphaël de la Torre, and Lessius lib. 2. cap. 45. dub. 3. num. 14. Zerola praxi de poenit. cap. 12. quaest. 17. The same is defended by Cano 5. p. relectionis, §. Multa hic, Caietanus tomo 1. opusc. 31. resp. 12. dub. 2. Lopez Instruct. p. 1. cap. 31. §. At vero.

COMMUNITER vero distinguunt, ut supra innui, et dicunt; si res illa sit in deposito, vel inte, vel simili, esse sacrilegium; non autem aliter, si sit crumena eius, qui est in Ecclesia. Ita Sotus in 4. dist. 18. quaest. 2. art. 4. Ioan. de Cruz p. 2. direct. de Sacramento Poenit. quaest. 3. disp. 6. Fagundez lib. 7. in septimum praeceptum decal. cap. 2. num. 10. Eandem tuentur Cano 5. p. relectionis, §. Multa hic*, Caietanus* tomo 1. opusc. 31. resp. 12. dub. 2. Lopez Instruct. p. 1. cap. 31. §. At vero.

25 I indeed follow the sentence of D. Bonaventura, who posits three species of sacrilege. The first is to steal a sacred thing, e.g. a consecrated Chalice from a sacred place. The second, a sacred thing from a non-sacred place, as a consecrated chalice from the house of a craftsman. The third, a non-sacred thing from a sacred place, e.g. a purse in the Church; thus, besides those alleged, Sà distinguishes, v. Sacrilegium, Sylvest. there, §. 2. Rosella in the same place, Nauar. Manual. Lat. cap. 6. num. 4. and cap. 17. num. 95.

EGO quidem, sequor sententiam D. Bonaventurae, qui ponit tres species sacrilegii. Prima est furari rem Sacram, v. g. Calicem sacratum de loco sacro. Secunda, rem sacram de loco non sacro, ut calicem sacratum de domo artificis. Tettia, rem non sacra de loco sacro, v. g. crumenam in Ecclesia; sic praeter allegatos distinguunt Sà, v. Sacrilegium*, Sylvest. ibi, §. 2. Rosella ibidem, Nauar.* Manual. Lat. cap. 6. num. 4. et cap. 17. num. 95.

26 FOR we have from Canon Law the declaration of Pope John, nor ought we to stand on the civil law, which, that an action of sacrilege be given against the thief, requires that the thing be made and taken away from the sacred place, as Iulius Clarus reports l. 5. sent. §. Sacrilegium.

ENIM vero nos habemus ex iure Canonico declarationem Ioannis Papae, nec stare debemus Iuri civili, quod ut detur actio sacrilegii in furem, requirit ut res sit facta, et ablata de loco sacro, ut refert Iulius Clarus l. 5. sent. §. Sacrilegium.

27 Nor does Fagundez, who cites that Canon, answer anything, except that the Canon intimates our sentence: but he plainly asserts it, as we saw, and Diana confesses it, who does not answer him a word in his own defense.

NEQUE Fagundez, qui Canonem illum refert, quicquam respondet, nisi Canonem innuere nostram sententiam: Sed eam aperte asserit, ut vidimus, et fatetur Diana, qui neque verbum ei respondet, ut se defendat.

28 They OBJECT that it is per accidens that the thing exists in the Church.

OBIICIUNT, per accidens esse, rem illam existere in Ecclesia.

29 D. Bonaventure ANSWERS that that place, even if physically it adds only an accident, morally nevertheless adds a species. For it is great irreverence of the place, and that thing is entrusted in faith to the Church; while those who are intent on religion ought therefore to have in safety what they have in it; and to steal is to wound the consecrated place; just as to commit other shameful things in the temple is to profane it itself.

> RESPONDET D. Bonau. locum illum, et si physice addat tantum accidens, moraliter tamen addere speciem. Est enim loci magna irreverentia, et res illa est fidei iussa Ecclesiae; dum, qui religioni intenti sunt, ideo in tuto debent habere id, quod in ea habent; et furari, est sacratum locum laedere; sicuti et alia foeda in templo committere, est ipsum profanare.

Sole Doubt: What quantity is grave in thefts by sons, wives, and religious

1 It must NOT be judged so severely of what a son takes away or steals from his father, or a wife from her husband, as of what he takes from a stranger, as Fagundez admonishes in 7. praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 3. from D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. But the S. Doctor treats of all these things in speculo animae, capite 2.

> Quae sit quantitas gravis furti Filiorum, uxoris, et Religiosorum.
> NON est adeo severe iudicandum id, quod eripit, vel furatur filius patri, vel uxor viro, sicuti quod ab extraneo aufert, ut admonet Fagundez in 7. praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 3. ex D. Bonau. in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. De his omnibus autem agit S. Doctor in speculo animae, capite 2.

2 One must, however, distinguish many kinds of goods in a household, of which a Son may take something.

> OPORTET autem distinguere multa genera bonorum in familia, e quibus potest esse ut Filius quaedam assumat.

3 FIRST, there are the castrensian goods, which the son-of-a-family, or one not yet emancipated, acquires in military service, and those which he acquires from such a peculium, L. g. castrense, ff. de peculio castrensi.

> PRIMO enim sunt bona Castrensia, quae Filius-familias, seu nondum emancipatus, in militia acquirit, et ea, quae ex tali peculio acquirit, L. g. castrense, ff. de peculio castrensi.

4 Not far removed are the goods, quasi castrensian, which a son acquires from some public office, or from one of the seven liberal arts, as if he be a Physician, Advocate, Master, etc.; and therefore those goods will not be quasi castrensian which he acquires from an art ordered to private gain; such as the art of a Shoemaker, or the like.

> NON longe abeunt bona, quasi Castrensia, quae filius acquirit publico aliquo officio, vel aliqua arte, ex septem liberalibus, ut si sit Medicus, Aduocatus, Magister, etc. itaque non erunt bona quasi castrensia, quae ex arte ordinata ad privatum emolumentum adipiscitur; ut arte Sutoris, vel simili.

5 Of these they can freely dispose, as the Doctors commonly teach, provided they are not below the age of puberty; for then they cannot make a will concerning them, Leg. ult. Cod. de testamento militis. And so they can neither give, sell, or alienate them in any way, even with the consent of the Father, Instit. de inutil. stipulat. § pupillus; but he can alienate them with the consent of his tutor, if he has one, as Molina notes disp. 130. §. licet. The reason for the difference is, because the tutor is liable to the pupil if he ill gives his authority, not so the father; as Fagundez notes with Molina in 7. praecept. l. 7. cap. 4.

DE his possunt libere disponere, ut docent communiter Doctores, dummodo non sint impuberes; tunc enim de his testari non possunt Leg. ult. Cod. de testamento militis. Et ita neque donare, vendere, aut quouis modo alienate, etiam de consensu Patris, Instit. de inutil. stipulat. § pupillus; potest tamen consentiente tutore, si eum habeat, alienare, ut notat Molina disp. 130. §. licet. Ratio diversitatis est, quia tutor tenetur pupillo, si male authoritatem praebeat, non sic pater; ut advertit cum Molina Fagundez in 7. praecept. l. 7. cap. 4.

6 THIRD are the profectitian goods, which come to the son by the cause and occasion of the Father, and which he obtained from the Father himself, or acquired with his money, or which were left to him in view of the Father. All these are the father's, both as to usufruct and as to dominion or ownership; and therefore it will be theft of a kind to take them against the parent's will, and he is held to restitution.

TERTIO sunt bona profectitia, quae filio adueniunt, causa, et occasione Patris, et quae ab ipso Patre obtinuit, vel eius pecunia acquisiuit, vel ei legata sunt intuitu Patris. Haec omnia sunt patris, et quoad usumfructum, et quoad dominium, seu proprietatem, ac proinde erit furtum, aliquod inuito parente accipere, et tenetur ad restitutionem.

7 HENCE the S. Doctor warns in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. and with him Fagundez num. 11. that those who trade or play with the sons of merchants should beware; for those sons are held to restore all these things in integrum, if they exist, or if they gained them in bad faith; but if in good faith, they are held to restore those things by which they have been made richer.

HINC monet S. Doctor in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. et cum eo Fagundez num. 11. ut caveant hi, qui cum filiis mercatorum negotiantur, aut ludunt; tenentur enim illi haec omnia in integrum restituere, si extent, aut mala fide lucrati sunt; si autem bona fide, tenentur restituere ea, in quibus ditiores sunt facti.

8 There are other goods which are called Adventitian, which come from the mother's side, or by industry, and in these the sons have dominion and ownership; the fathers, however, only the usufruct. Thus Molina T. I. disp. 9. and 232. Sylvester, and others, whom Fagundez follows, num. 21. Of these he cannot take against the father's will, otherwise it will be theft.

SUNT alia bona, quae Aduentitia dicuntur, quae ex parte matris, vel ex industria adueniunt, et in his habent filii dominium, et proprietatem; patres vero usumfructum tantum. Ita Molina T. I. disp. 9. et 232. Sylvester, et alii, quos sequitur Fagundez num. 21. De his non potest, invito patre, tollere, alioquin erit furtum.

9 But the quantity in sons, to reach grave matter, is constituted larger than in a stranger. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. says that even fifty gold coins stolen from a rich father is not grave matter. Fagundez cap. 3. num. 3. says it does not seem mortal if a son steals two regales and a half, if the father is a craftsman; but if he is of moderate wealth, it is not mortal to take seven silver coins. But if he is very rich, he will not sin even by stealing three gold coins. See also Lessius T. I. l. 2. cap. 12. de iniuriis fortunae, dub. 13. num. 36. and Petrum Navarr. de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 66. Caspens. Tract. 18. disp. 5. sectione 7. Bass. 2.

Quantitas vero in filiis, ut materiam attingat gravem, amplior constituitur, quam in extraneo. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. ait, neque quinquaginta aureos a patre divite furatos, esse materiam gravem. Fagundez cap. 3. num. 3. dicit non videri mortale, si filius furetur duo regalia supra dimidium, si pater est Moechanicus; si vero mediocriter dives, non esse mortale septem argenteos sumere. Quod si dives admodum sit, non peccabit, etiam furando tres aureos. Vide et Lessium T. I. l. 2. cap. 12. de iniuriis fortunae, dub. 13. num. 36. et Petrum Navarr. de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 66. Caspens. Tract. 18. disp. 5. sectione 7. Bass. 2.

10 Therefore if he steals a grave quantity, he will be held to restitution, either to the Father, or to the brothers in the division. That these are sins is proved from Prov. 28: He that takes away anything from his father, and from his mother, and says this is no sin, is partaker of a murderer.

> Itaque si gravem quantitatem furetur, tenebitur restitutioni, vel Patri, vel fratribus in divisione. Haec vero esse peccata probatur ex Prov. 28. Qui subtrahit a Patre suo aliquid, et a Matre, et dicit, hoc non esse peccatum, particeps homicidae est.

11 As to wives, it is certain that they sin mortally if they take a grave quantity from their unwilling husbands, to give to others. Thus the Doctors commonly, in Molina T. II. de Iust. disp. 274. Fagundez cap. 8. num. 1. with D. Bonan. in 4. dist. 15. loc. cit. The reason is, because the husband has the usufruct of all the goods.

> Quoad uxores, certum est, eas peccare lethaliter, si gravem quantitatem auferant a maritis invitis, ad donandum aliis. Ita communiter Doctores apud Molinam T. II. de Iust. disp. 274. Fagundez cap. 8. num. 1. cum D. Bonan. in 4. dist. 15. loc. cit. Ratio est, quia maritus habet usum fructum omnium bonorum.

12 Yet they warn, with D. Bonan., that in many cases the wife does not sin if she secretly takes something from her husband by stealth.

> Admonent tamen cum D. Bonan. in multis casibus, non peccare uxorem, si a marito aliquid clam furto accipiat.

13 First, if the quantity is not notable, considering the means. They concede to the wife double what they concede to the son, as Rebellius noted, prima parte, lib. 3. quaestion. 15 sectione 13. num. 16. Fagundez num. 2. with others.

> Primo, si quantitas non sit notabilis, spectatis facultatibus. Concedunt autem uxori duplo amplius, quam filio, ut notavit Rebellius prima parte, lib. 3. quaestion. 15 sectione 13. num. 16. Fagundez num. 2. cum aliis.

14 Second, if she gives according to the custom of other wives. For in these matters husbands are irrationally unwilling.

> Secundo, si donet secundum usum aliarum uxorum. In his enim mariti sunt irrationabiliter inviti.

15 Third, if she gives in the extreme necessity of someone.

> Tertio, si in extrema alicuius necessitate donet.

16 They ask, however, whether if she has an ample dowry she can give, without her husband's leave, fifty or sixty gold coins to some honest use, for instance to her nurse, or to her daughter for a dowry.

> Quaerunt autem, an si habeat amplam dotem, possit dare absque mariti licentia quinquaginta, vel sexaginta aureos ad aliquem usum honestum, puta nutrici suae, vel eius filiae ad dotem.

17 Navar. in Man. cap. 17. num. 155. Cabedo p. 1. decis. 107. deny it.

18 Molina T. II. disp. 34. §. ex dictis, Fagundez l. 7. cap. 8. num. 11. with D. Bonan. in 4. dist. 15. loc. cit. assert it, where, although he does not fix a prefixed quantity, he nevertheless indicates that she can distribute from her dowry, and from her paraphernalia, that is, from the goods which she reserved to her own uses when she married. Say the same of the goods which come to her during the marriage by inheritance or donation. For of these the woman has dominion and administration by the common law, and therefore she can dispose of them however much the husband resists. Thus also D. Thom. quaest. 32. art. 8. and others in Diana p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 34. as I said in the disputation de Eleemosyna. There are other cases in which the Theologians say the wife can take from the family goods, even the husband's, as if the administration of those goods has been left to her, because the husband is prodigal or insane. See Diana loc. cit. and Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 8.

> Asserunt Molina T. II. disp. 34. §. ex dictis Fagundez l. 7. cap. 8. num. 11. cum D. Bonan. in 4. dist. 15. loc. cit. ubi licet quantitatem praefixam non statuat; tamen indicat, posse de sua dote distribuere, et de suis paraphernalibus, hoc est, de bonis, quae cum nupsit, sibi reservavit ad proprios usus. Idem dic de bonis, quae constante matrimonio illi obveniunt per haereditatem, vel donationem. Horum enim mulier habet dominium, et administrationem iure communi, ideo potest, quantumvis vir repugnet, de his dispensare. Ita etiam D. Thom. quaest. 32. art. 8. et alii apud Dianam p. 5. tract. 8. resol. 34. ut dixi disput. de Eleemosyna. Sunt alii casus, in quibus dicunt Theologi, posse uxorem assumere de rebus familiaribus, etiam mariti, ut si eorum bonorum relicta est ei administratio, quia maritus est prodigus, vel amens. Vide Dianam loc. cit. et Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 8.

19 Similarly the husband, if he squanders the goods held in common with his wife, the marriage dissolved, he or his heirs is held to restitution to the wife. See Fagundez, cap. 9. Tannerum, to be cited below, who rightly warns that in all things the conditions of persons, the abundance of riches, the vehemence of love, etc. must prudently be considered.

> Similiter et vir, si dissipet bona sibi cum uxore communia; soluto matrimonio, tenetur uxori ad restitutionem ille, vel eius haeredes. Vide Fagundez, cap. 9. Tannerum infra citandum, qui recte monet, spectandas in omnibus prudenter personarum conditiones, divitiarum copiam, amoris vehementiam, etc.

20 As to Religious, the Doctors judge that the quantity is to be computed by the rule of the theft of sons. Thus Sanctius lib. 7. de Relig. cap. 21. num. 31. Rebell. lib. 3. de iustitia, p. 1. quaest. 15. sect. 3. n. 22. Caspensis tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 7. Graff. p. 1. decis. l. 3. cap. 5. num. 51. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 6. Fagundez cap. 5. who adds, however, that they are to be compared with the sons of the moderately rich; and therefore about five silver coins is grave theft, apart from those things which the convent owes him, which is held to supply him with the necessaries of food and clothing; as the S. Doct. says in Apol. pauperum, cap. 1. responsionis 3. But of these I shall treat in quaest. 7.

> Quoad Religiosos, censent Doctores, quantitatem computandam ad regulam furti filiorum. Ita Sanctius lib. 7. de Relig. cap. 21. num. 31. Rebell. lib. 3. de iustitia, p. 1. quaest. 15. sect. 3. n. 22. Caspensis tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 7. Graff. p. 1. decis. l. 3. cap. 5. num. 51. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 6. Fagundez cap. 5. qui addit tamen, comparandos cum filiis mediocriter divitum; et ideo quinque argenteos circiter esse grave furtum extra ea, quae debet ei conventus, qui tenetur ei ad victum, et vestitum necessaria suppeditare; ut ait S. Doct. in Apol. pauperum, cap. 1. responsionis 3. Sed de his quaest. 7. agam.

Question V: Whether theft is mortal when, after many tiny thefts, a further small one makes the whole grave

1 Because this can happen in many ways, it also raises many questions.

> Quia multis modis potest hoc evenire, multas etiam quaestiones advocat.

2 For it can be that all the petty thefts are done with the intention of aggregating a grave quantity; it can also be that they are done without this intention. Again, it can be that those petty thefts are done against the same person, or against several different ones; taking from one a single dipondium; from another another thing.

> Potest enim esse, ut furtiola omnia fiant ex intentione aggregandi rem gravem; potest esse etiam, ut sine hac intentione ea fiant. Rursus potest esse, ut furtiola illa fiant eidem personae, vel pluribus diversis; ab uno dipondium unum; ab altero alium auferendo.

3 As to the first. I assert first that he who from the beginning intends to take from one a grave quantity sins mortally by that intention; and afterwards, while he commits the individual petty thefts, he also sins mortally. Thus they teach commonly. Sanchez Tom. II. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. Less. tom. I. l. 2. cap. 12. Fort. dub. 7. num. 36. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 4. num. 30. Petrus Navar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 50. Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 5. ad 3. Medina de Restit. quaest. 10. Lopez p. 1. cap. 93. Fagundez in septimum praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 15. num. 3. Bassaeus v. Furtum 1. numer. 8. and the following:

> Quoad primum. Assero primo, eum, qui ab initio intendit ab uno auferre quantitatem gravem; peccare lethaliter ea intentione; et postea, dum furtiola committit singula, mortaliter etiam peccare. Ita docent communiter. Sanchez Tom. II. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. Less. tom. I. l. 2. cap. 12. Fort. dub. 7. num. 36. Rebellius p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 4. num. 30. Petrus Navar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 50. Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 5. ad 3. Medina de Restit. quaest. 10. Lopez p. 1. cap. 93. Fagundez in septimum praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 15. num. 3. Bassaeus v. Furtum 1. numer. 8. et sequens:

4 It is proved, because, as the S. Doctor argues in 7. praeceptum decal., to damage another gravely is mortal; but he intends thus to damage: Therefore.

> Probatur*, quia, ut arguit S. Doctor in 7. praeceptum decal. damnificare alium graviter, est mortale; at is intendit sic damnificare: Ergo.*

5 I assert second that the same must be said of him who intends to take a grave quantity from several. Thus the Doctors alleged.

> Assero secundo, idem dicendum de eo, qui intendit auferre a pluribus gravem quantitatem. Ita allegati Doctores.

6 It is proved, because that wicked intention is mortal: Therefore, since the individual petty thefts proceed from that will, they will be deadly. Otherwise they would not be gravely reproached by God with those who use false measures; Oseae 12. Chanaan in manu statera dolosa. Proverb. 11. Statera dolosa abominatio est ante Deum. For although each one is damaged but moderately, yet the Republic is gravely offended, because innumerable evils are poured in. And from this crime merchants very rarely escape, as the S. Doctor warned cap. 6. in Decalogum.

> Probatur*, quia illa prava intentio est mortalis: Ergo cum singula furtiola procedant ab illa voluntate, erunt lethifera. Alioquin non essent graviter eis, qui mensuris falsis utuntur, exprobrati a Deo;* Oseae 12. Chanaan in manu statera dolosa. Proverb. 11. Statera dolosa abominatio est ante Deum. Quamvis enim singuli modice damnificentur, tamen Respublica graviter offenditur, quia invehuntur innumera mala. Et ab hoc crimine rarissime evadunt mercatores, ut admonuit S. Doctor cap. 6. in Decalogum.

7 Yet Lessius notes, num. 49. com., that in the individual petty thefts a new mortal sin is not committed, but the one already begun is continued; for even if the same will continues, it can be that in each one it is not renewed, but he steals by the power of the first wicked will.

> Advertit tamen Lessius num. 49. com. in singulis furtiolis non committi novum peccatum mortale, sed continuari iam caeptum; esto enim continuetur eadem voluntas, tamen potest esse, ut in singulis non renovetur, sed furetur ille virtute primae pravae voluntatis.

8 Hence they also deduce that he is held to restitution, which, if it be too arduous to be made to each individual, must be made to the poor.

Hinc etiam deducunt, teneri hunc restitutioni, quae si ardua nimis sit, ut fiat singulis, facienda est pauperibus.

9 The greater question is: If in the individual petty thefts he has no further mind of stealing, nor from the beginning conceived the mind of arriving at a notable quantity, but commits the smallest petty thefts from the occasion offered; whether in the last one, by which grave matter is made, he sins mortally, if he remembers the others, although he does not intend to steal gravely.

Quaestio maior est, Si in singulis furtiolis non habeat animum amplius furandi, nec animum a principio concepit perveniendi ad notabilem quantitatem, sed ex occasione oblata committit minima furtula; an in ultimo, quo fit materia gravis, peccetur mortaliter, si aliorum recordetur, licet non intendat graviter furari.

10 And indeed, if he does not advert to it, he is only materially so situated, as Nauar. teaches Sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 130. Sanchez Tomo 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 20. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 9. Fagundez num. 11.

Et quidem, si non advertat, materialiter tantum se habet, ut docet Nauar. Sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 130. Sanchez Tomo 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 20. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 9. Fagundez num. 11.

11 The first opinion is that he does not sin in that last taking of the worthless thing; yet he sins in the retention, because, positing that last petty theft, the grave matter is completed, which he unjustly retains. Thus Nauar. Summa Latina, cap. 17. num. 139. Vega l. 14. in Concil. Tridentinum cap. 11. Graff. p. 1. decis. lib. 3. cap. 5. num. 51. et lib 2. cap. 95. num. 18. Carbo de restit. quaest. 2. Lessius l. 2. de Iust. cap. 12. dub. 8. num. 43. Iason leg. si idem cum eodem, ff. de iudic. omnium iud. and there, Decius num. 1. and 16. Claudius num. 1. and 2. Farinac. consil. 78. num. 3. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 243. Rodriquez Summa tomo 4. cap. 118. num. 29. Salas in p. 1. quaest. 58. tract. 13. disp. 16. sect. 17. num. 88. Tolcius l. 5. cap. 16. num. 4. and others. Diana judges it probable p. 1. Tract. de Paupertate Relig. resol. 34. who says that, in the sentence of Nauarrus and the others, when they existed, it is precisely then a sin not to restore, and the thief would have become richer from it. Thus teach Granado in primam 2. contr. 6. tract. 2. disp. 2. sect. 5. num. 49. Lorca p. 1. tom. 2.

Prima opinio est, non peccare in ultima illa acceptione rei vilis; peccare tamen in retentione, quia posito eo ultimo furtulo, completur materia gravis, quae iniuste retinetur. Ita Nauar. Summa Latina, cap. 17. num. 139. Vega l. 14. in Concil. Tridentinum cap. 11. Graff. p. 1. decis. lib. 3. cap. 5. num. 51. et lib 2. cap. 95. num. 18. Carbo de restit. quaest. 2. Lessius l. 2. de Iust. cap. 12. dub. 8. num. 43. Iason leg. si idem cum eodem, ff. de iudic. omnium iud. et ibi, Decius num. 1. et 16. Claudius num. 1. et 2. Farinac. consil. 78. num. 3. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 243. Rodriquez Summa tomo 4. cap. 118. num. 29. Salas in p. 1. quaest. 58. tract. 13. disp. 16. sect. 17. num. 88. Tolcius l. 5. cap. 16. num. 4. et alii. Quam probabilem censet Diana p. 1. Tract. de Paupertate Relig. resol. 34. qui ait, tunc praecise esse peccatum non restituendo, in sententia Nauarri, et aliorum, quando extaret; et fur ex ea factus esset ditior. Ita docent Granado in primam 2. contr. 6. tract. 2. disp. 2. sect. 5. num. 49. Lorca p. 1. tom. 2.

12 Indeed Emanuel Sà asserted that he neither sins mortally nor is held to restitution, v. Furtum, num. 8. Nauar. lib. 3. consil. 3. de statu Monachorum, num. 17. Berarducius in Summa Corona, p. 1. cap. 1. num. 18.

and Fernandez in Exam. p. 1. cap. 6. §. 2. num. 12. These speak of things stolen from one and the same, much less from several.

> Imo neque peccare mortaliter, neque ad restitutionem teneri, asseruit Emanuel Sà, v. Furtum, num. 8. Nauar. lib. 3. consil. 3. de statu Monachorum, num. 17. Berarducius in Summa Corona, p. 1. cap. 1. num. 18. et Fernandez in Exam. p. 1. cap. 6. §. 2. num. 12. Hi loquuntur de rebus furatis eidem, nedum pluribus.

13 But the COMMON sentence is that a mortal sin is probably committed in that last petty theft of a most trifling thing, with advertence to the past thefts, if in it the grave quantity is completed. Thus Sanchez Tom. 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 6. Rodriquez *Tomo 1. Diana says this must be embraced, adding some appendices with Baffaeus. A moral continuation is indeed required. They add that with respect to someone at least of the community there ought to be such a loss.

Hanc ait Diana amplexandam, addens aliquas appendices cum Baffaeo. Requiritur sane moralis continuatio. Addunt respectu alicuius saltem communitatis esse debere tale damnum.*

14 The reason is, because from that last petty theft, joined to the others, a notable injury is composed; for even if no damage is inflicted on one only, nevertheless it is inflicted on the Republic; otherwise someone could enrich himself by taking an obol from each individual workman.

> Ratio est quia ex ultimo illo furtulo, adiancto aliis, componitur notabilis iniuria; nam, etiam si uni tantum non inferatur damnum, infertur nihilo-minus Reipublicae; alioqui posset aliquis ditari, auferendo a singulis tegnicolis obolum.

15 Nor does the distinction of the first opinion please; for to retain and to usurp is the same sin: Therefore he who sins mortally by retaining sins also by usurping. See Sanchez Tomo 1. decal. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 10.

Neqve placet ea distinctio primae opinionis; nam retinere, et usurpare est idem peccatum: Ergo qui peccat mortifere retinendo, peccat etiam usurpando. Vide Sanchez Tomo 1. decal. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 10.

16 This seems to be the sentence of D. Bonauentura in Confessionali, cap. 5. part. 20. where he notes the penalties given for false measures and weights ex C. Mogunt. namely thirty days on bread and water, and he adds various penalties of exile; and as if concerning falsifying. And Lex Cornelia, and tit. de ordin. circa Amenam, circa finem. Hence a grave argument is drawn: If those petty thefts from various persons were allowed, without restitution or grave guilt, grave evils of false measures and weights could be poured into the Republic. But S. Bonaventure places these there in order with respect to the matter necessary for confession.

Haec videtur sententia D. Bonauenturae in Confessionali, cap. 5. part. 20. ubi observat poenas datas pro falsis mensuris, et ponderibus ex C. Mogunt. nempe triginta dies in pane, et aqua, et addit varias poenas exilii; et tanquam de falso. Et Lex Cornelia, et tit. de ordin. circa Amenam, circa finem. Hinc eruitur grave argumentum: Si licerent illa furtula a diversis, absque restitutione, vel culpa gravi; inuehi possent in Rempublicam gravia mala mensurarum, et ponderum falsorum. Ibi autem ponit S. Bonau. haec ex ordine ad materiam confessionis necessariam.

17 Moreover, that a very small quantity added to the others, and with them constituting grave matter, makes a mortal sin, not indeed a solitary one but with the others, the Doctors commonly judge, a long list of those reported by Fagundez in septimum Praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 5. num. 4. and they are almost in the manner alleged.

Porro quantitatem paruulam, additam caeteris, et cum eis constituentem materiam gravem, facere peccatum mortale, non quidem solitariam, sed cum caeteris, sentiunt communiter Doctores, longa tessera relati a Fagundez in septimum Praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 5. num. 4. et sunt fere modo allegati.

18 Truly, indeed, in the external forum there is no heaping up of several moderate thefts to one penalty of death, as Iason says in Leg. si idem cum eodem, num. 3. and 4. ff. de iudic. omnium iudicum, where Decius num. 1. and 16. and Claudius num. 1. and Farinacius consilio 78. num. 3.

Vere quidem in foro externo non fit coaceruatio plurium modicorum furtorum ad unam poenam mortis, ut ait Iason in Leg. si idem cum eodem, num. 3. et 4. ff. de iudic. omnium iudicum*, ubi Decius* num. 1. et 16. et Claudius num. 1. et Farinacius consilio 78. num. 3.

19 But Diana limits the second sentence: those trifling things are gathered into one, if the mass is made from the same kind of business, or from the mind of enriching oneself. Thus also Rebell. p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 3. num. 44. Tanner. t. 3. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 9. num. 247. Bonac. de contract. disput. 2. quaest. 8. puncto 2. But this reason does not please Sanchez Sum. t. 2. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 16. and deservedly; for what reason is there for the taking to be mortal, if the grave matter coalesces from different businesses?

Limitat vero Diana secundam sententiam, tunc illa minima in unum conglobari, si massa fiat ex eodem negotii genere, vel animo ditescendi. Ita etiam Rebell. p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 3. num. 44. Tanner. t. 3. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 9. num. 247. Bonac. de contract. disput. 2. quaest. 8. puncto 2. Sed haec ratio non placet Sanchez Sum. t. 2. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 16. et merito; quae enim ratio auferendi mortale, si i diuersis negotiis materia gravis coalescat?

20 Next he says, those petty thefts coalesce into one when between them there is not a great interpolation of time; and it will be notable, according to Sanchez and others, if it is of one year, or according to Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 244. and Diana, of one month, or half.

Deinde ait, illa furtiola in unum coalescere, quando inter illa non sit magna temporis interpolatio; erit autem notabilis secundum Sanchez, et alios, si sit unius anni, vel secundum Filliucium Tomo 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 244. et Dianam, si unius mensis, vel dimidii.

21 He adds, third, that a much greater quantity is required to constitute mortal matter, and the fault is the smaller the more numerous are the owners into whom the damage is divided. Thus also Sanchez num. 17. Rebell. num. 43. Megala 2. 2. l. 2. cap. 1. quaest. 5. num. 36. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. disp. 8. num. 46. and Diana concludes that a double quantity is required than in other thefts.

Addit tertio, multo maiorem quantitatem exigi ad constituendam materiam mortalem et eo minorem esse culpam, quo plures sunt domini, in quos diuiditur damnum. Ita etiam Sanchez num. 17. Rebell. num. 43. Megala 2. 2. l. 2. cap. 1. quaest. 5. num. 36. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. disp. 8. num. 46. et concludit Diana, duplam quantitatem exigi, quam in aliis furtis.

22 He says, fourth, that the said sentence has no place with respect to the trifling thefts of eatables, which are committed by servants and maidservants, that they may eat. Thus also Megala num. 43. Lessius num. 48. Nauar. cap. 17. n. 138. Reginald. Tom. 2. lib. 23. cap. 1. num. 22. Petrus Nauar. de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 5. dub. 6. num. 202. Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. num. 17. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. Caietanus, v. Furtum, and others in Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 11.

Dicit quarto, dictam sententiam non habere locum quoad exigua furta esculentorum, quae committuntur a servis, et ancillis, ut comedant. Ita etiam Megala num. 43. Lessius num. 48. Nauar. cap. 17. n. 138. Reginald. Tom. 2. lib. 23. cap. 1. num. 22. Petrus Nauar. de restit. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 5. dub. 6. num. 202. Sayrus l. 9. cap. 15. num. 17. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. Caietanus, v. Furtum*, et alii apud Fagundez* lib. 7. cap. 11.

23 Finally he notes, that those stealing thus are not held under mortal fault to restitution of the whole stolen quantity; but only to that part, upon the restitution of which the notable quantity ceases, sought for mortal theft. Thus Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. Rebell. p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 4. num. 29. Megala 2. 2. l. 2. cap. 1. quaest. 5. num. 25. Nauar. de restit. lib. 3. cap. 1. p. 10. dub. 8. num. 62. Filliuc. tom. 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 247. and others, to whom Caspensis subscribes Tract. 18. sect. 9. Baff. v. Furtum 1. num. 8.

Notat denique, sic furantes non teneri sub culpa mortifera ad restitutionem totius quantitatis furatae; sed tantum ad illam partem, qua restituta, cessat notabilis quantitas, ad furtum mortale petita. Sic Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. Rebell. p. 1. l. 3. quaest. 15. sect. 4. num. 29. Megala 2. 2. l. 2. cap. 1. quaest. 5. num. 25. Nauar. de restit. lib. 3. cap. 1. p. 10. dub. 8. num. 62. Filliuc. tom. 2. tract. 31. cap. 10. num. 247. et alii, quibus subscribit Caspensis Tract. 18. sect. 9. Baff. v. Furtum 1. num. 8.

24 This, however, does not please me; for restitution is compelled by justice gravely injured; but the injury is grave by reason of the whole, not of the particle alone, and although this raises it up to matter grave, it is not alone, nor the greater part.

Id tamen non placet; nam restitutio cogit ex iustitia laesa graviter; at laesio gravis est ratione totius, non autem solius particulae, etsi haec auget ad materiam usque grauem, non est sola, neque maior pars.

25 He adds also another question: Whether a Religious, gradually filching eatables for his own use together with another companion, sins mortally when they reach a grave quantity: He answers negatively, and alleges many Doctors.

Addit etiam aliam quaestionem: An Religiosus paulatim surripiens comestibilia ad proprium usum cum alio sodali, lethaliter peccet cum perveniunt ad quantitatem gravem: Respondet negative, et multos allegat Doctores.

26 From what has been said it also follows that, if many together, each stealing a little, steal from one, so that they make grave matter, all are held in solidum to restitution. Thus Sanchez Tomo 2. Decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 19. Petrus Navar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 41. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 9. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 14. Bassaeus num. 9. Understand this, if they agree on the petty thefts by communicated counsel.

Ex dictis etiam sequitur, quod si multi simul, paucula singuli, ab uno furentur, quae faciant materiam gravem, tenentur omnes in solidum restitutioni. Ita Sanchez Tomo 2. Decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 19. Petrus Navar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 41. Less. l. 2. cap. 12. dub. 9. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 14. Bassaeus num. 9. Intellige, si ad furtula communicato consilio conveniant.

27 But if not by communicated counsel, yet accomplices of one another's theft, advertent of the notable damage; whether they sin mortally is asked.

Quod si non communicato consilio, conscii tamen alter alterius furti, advertentes notabile damnum; an peccent mortaliter, quaeritur.

28 They commonly answer affirmatively. See the Doctors in Bassaeum, Fagundez num. 14. Yet others deny, in the same ibi, num. 6. and Sanchez T. 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 21. Caspensem tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 9. and Diana p. 1. Tract. 17. resol. 42. Vasquez p. 25. disp. 146. num. 6.

Communiter respondent assertive. Vide Doctores apud Bassaeum Fagundez num. 14. Alii tamen negant apud eosdem ibi, num. 6. et Sanchez T. 2. decal. l. 7. cap. 21. num. 21. Caspensem tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 9. et Dianam p. 1. Tract. 17. resol. 42. Vasquez p. 25. disp. 146. num. 6.

29 You will object. If by proceeding from an obol to a ducat there is a certain quantity which makes a mortal sin; and what is less is not a mortal sin: Therefore every theft will be by its nature either mortal or venial, because it is incredible that by the addition of one obol the matter of sin can be so changed, that what was venial becomes mortal.

Obiicies. Si ab obolo ad ducatum progrediendo est certa quaedam quantitas, quae faciat peccatum mortale; et quae minor, non est peccatum mortale: Ergo omne furtum erit natura sua aut mortale, aut veniale, quia incredibile est, unius oboli additione materiam peccati adeo posse mutari, ut quod erat veniale fiat mortale.

30 Tanner. ANSWERS num. 122. by denying the consequence, because prudent estimation and the providence of God require that one finally arrive at a notable quantity, which will easily be persuaded if we consider also in natural things that the last degrees of quality dispose to the induction of a substantial form; thus the last particle of water hollows out the stone, sinks the ship; the last blow kills.

Respondet Tanner. num. 122. negando consequentiam, quia prudens aestimatio, et Dei providentia exigit, ut tandem perveniatur ad notabilem quantitatem, quod facile suadebitur, si consideremus etiam in naturalibus graduum qualitatis ultimo disponere ad formam substantialem inducendam, sic ultima particula aquae cavat lapidem, mergit navem; ultimus ictus interficit.

Question VI: Whether in extreme, or urgent, necessity it is lawful to take what belongs to another

[1] All concede that in extreme necessity this is lawful. So teach the Doctors cited by Fagundez in 7. praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 26. Therefore in extreme necessity, dominion is thereby transferred — so many assert: Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. §. ad argumenta, Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. concl. 1. controv. 1., Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 5., Azorius Tomo 2. l. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 7. and cap. 9. quaestio 1., Sotus l. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 4., Sayrus l. 10. tract. 5. cap. 6. num. 12., Suarez de charitate disp. 7. sect. 5., Sylvest: v. Restit. 5. num. 4., Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 126., citing others.

> An in extrema, vel urgenti necessitate liceat aliena auferre.
> Omnes concedant, in extrema necessitate id licere. Ita docent Doctores apud Fagundez in 7. praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 26. Itaque in extrema necessitate Ita transferte dominium multi asserunt; Scotus in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 2. §. ad argumenta Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. concl. 1. controv. 1. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 5. Azorius Tomo 2. l. 12. cap. 8. quaestio 7. et cap. 9. quaestio 1. Sotus l. 4. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. ad 4. Sayrus l. 10. tract. 5. cap. 6. num. 12. Suarez de charitate disp. 7. sect. 5. Sylvest: v. Restit. 5. num. 4. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 126. alios adducens.

[2] Others, however, deny that dominion is transferred to the person in extreme need. So Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 3., Nauar. Sum. cap. 17. num. 61., Tolet. l. 5. cap. 24. num. 10., Lessius l. 2. cap. 16. disp. 1. num. 8., Bellarminus T. 3. l. 3. de bonis operibus, cap. 8., Vasquez opusc. de eleem. cap. 1. dub. 6., Malderus Tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 7. §. respondeo, Fagundez l. 7. cap. 26. num. 7., Couar. 2. p. var. §. 1.

> Alii tamen negant, transferti dominium in egentem extreme. Ita Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 3. Nauar. Sum. cap. 17. num. 61. Tolet. l. 5. cap. 24. num. 10. Lessius l. 2. cap. 16. disp. 1. num. 8. Bellarminus T. 3. l. 3. de bonis operibus, cap. 8. Vasquez opusc. de eleem. cap. 1. dub. 6. Malderus Tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 7. §. respondeo. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 26. num. 7. Couar. 2. p. var. §. 1.

[3] As regards D. Bonaventure, he certainly sides with the first opinion, in speculo animae, cap. 2., where he says: A man may take the property of another out of extreme or urgent bodily necessity, because in necessity all things are common, and then it ought not to be called theft, for what he takes in necessity is his own, or even out of the necessity of another. Hence Ambrosius, in Dom. 8. post Pentec. serm. 64: The bread of the hungry is what you keep back. Along with him, besides those already cited, are Sarmiento 1. p. ment. 4. n. 5. and Caspens. Tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 6.

> Quoad D. Bonav. ille profecto est cum priori sententia in speculo animae, cap. 2. ubi ait: Potest aliquis rem alterius pro extrema, vel urgenti necessitate corporis accipere, quia in necessitate omnia sunt communia, et tunc furtum dici non debet, quia suum est quod in necessitate accipit, vel etiam pro necessitate alterius: Unde Ambrosius in Dom. 8. post Pentec. serm. 64: Esurientium panis est, quem tu detines; Cum eo praeter allegatos sunt Sarmiento 1. p. ment. 4. n. 5. Caspens. Tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 6.

[4] From this it is deduced, with the first opinion, that one who has taken something in extreme necessity is not bound to restore its value if he should come to better fortune.

> Ex quo deducitur cum prima sententia, eum, qui in extrema necessitate abstulit aliquid, non teneri valorem restituere, si ad pinguiorem fortunam veniat.

[5] The foundation of D. Bonaventure is most solid, because property was introduced by the law of nations, after the usurpation of things which before were common; yet on this condition, that others should not perish from poverty. Wherefore in extreme necessity all things are common, not only as regards use, and they belong to the first who takes them, unless the same necessity presses upon the possessor; nor is it absurd that the same thing should be common to the use of several, even if we concede that dominion in consumables is not separated from use, once that independence is added to use which surely in our case must be added; then dominion is transferred to the person in extreme need for the time being, and it is no longer the possessor's. I said in consumables; for as regards other things only the use is transferred, as if someone were compelled to take a horse to avoid death, so as to make a swift flight; then that horse must be restored after use. By this doctrine whatever Fagundez opposes in num. 6. is washed away — that is, that this foundation is weak; for thus it is explicit, unshaken, strengthened by the common opinion of the Doctors, and is founded also on §. cum in eadem, ff. ad Legem Rhodiam, de iactu, where he declares that in extreme necessity things are held in common.

> Fundamentum D. Bonav. solidissimum est, quia proprietas invecta est iure gentium, post usurpationem rerum, quae ante erant communes; hac tamen conditione, ut caeteri ex paupertate non perirent. Quare in extrema necessitate omnia sunt communia, non solum quoad usum, et sunt primo occupantur, nisi eadem necessitas instet possidenti; Neque absurdum est, eandem rem esse communem usurpationi plurium, etsi etiam concedero, dominium in consumptibilibus ab usu non separari, addita usui independentia, quae sane in casu nostro addi debet; iam dominium transfertur ad extreme egentem pro tunc, et non est possessoris. Dixi in consumptibilibus; nam quoad alia transfertur solus usus, ut si aliquis ad vitandam mortem cogatur auferre equum, ut fugam celerem arripiat; iam ille equus post usum restituendus est. Qua doctrina eluitur quidquid opponit Fagundez num. 6. tatus, hoc esse fundamentum infirmum; sic enim explicitum, est inconcussum, et communi sententia Doctorum solidatum, et fundatur etiam, §. cum in eadem, ff. ad Legem Rhodiam, de iactu, ubi in necessitate extrema res communicari declarat.

6 Nor let Fagundez say that things become common as to use only, not as to dominion; for once independence is added to use, dominion is joined to it, as I showed in the first question.

> Neque dicat Fagundez, fieri communia quoad usum tantum, non quoad dominium; nam addita usui independentia, adiungitur dominium, ut ostendi quaestione prima.

7 The greater difficulty is: whether in necessity that is not extreme, yet nevertheless grave and urgent, it is lawful to seize the property of another by one's own authority.

> Maior difficultas est: An in necessitate etiam non extrema, sed tamen gravi urgenti liceat propria authoritate rapere aliena.

8 The first opinion is that in grave necessity of sickness, hunger, or nakedness, such taking is licit. So Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. dub. 5. num. 367., Angelus v. Furtum, §. 37., Sà v. Furtum., Nauar. Summae l. 1. c. f. 17. num. 118., Medina Cod. de eleem. quaest. 3. et de restit. quaest. 3. causa 1.; and Lessius indicates it is probable, T. 1. l. 2. cap. 22. dub. 12. num. 71. et cap. 16. dub. 1. num. 17. et 18., as do Vasquez de eleem. cap. 1. disp. 7. num. 60., Malderus tract. 4. cap. 7. dub. 1., Caspensis Tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 6., Bonacina de contract. disp. 11. quaest. ult. p. 1. num. 32., Diana p. 1. tract. 17. resol. 29.

> Prima opinio est, in gravi necessitate morbi, famis, nuditatis, eam acceptionem esse licitam. Sic Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. dub. 5. num. 367. Angelus v. Furtum, §. 37. Sà v. 9 The second opinion teaches that it is not licit in urgent necessity to take the goods of another: so Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 4., Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. controv. 1., Valentia tom. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 10. punct. 5. dub. 1., Sayrus l. 9. cap. 14. num. 17., Sylvest. v. restit. 5. num. 2., Lessius r. t. de Iust. l. 2. cap. 12., Fagundez in 7. praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 27. num. 5., Azor. p. 2. l. 12. cap. 8. quaest. 8., Turtianus 2. 2. disp. 88. dub. 8., Reginaldus T. 1. l. 4. cap. 20. num. 267., Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7., Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 126.; but Bassaeus, v. Furtum 1. num. 12., remains wavering, as is his custom.

Secunda sententia docet, non esse licitum in urgenti necessitate res alienas usurpare: Ita Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 4. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. controv. 1. Valentia tom. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 10. punct. 5. dub. 1. Sayrus l. 9. cap. 14. num. 17. Sylvest. v. restit. 5. num. 2. Lessius r. t. de Iust. l. 2. cap. 12. Fagundez in 7. praeceptum decal. l. 7. cap. 27. num. 5. Azor. p. 2. l. 12. cap. 8. quaest. 8. Turtianus 2. 2. disp. 88. dub. 8. Reginaldus T. 1. l. 4. cap. 20. num. 267. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 7. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 126. Bassaeus vero v. Furtum 1. num. 12. pendulus, ex more, existit.

10 The Seraphic Doctor plainly stands with the first opinion, as is clear from his words cited above.

Seraphicus aperte stat pro priori sententia; ut constat ex verbis eius, supra allegatis.

11 I assert therefore that in urgent necessity it is lawful to take what is necessary.

Assero igitur, licere in urgenti necessitate auferre necessarium.

12 It is proved first from D. Bonaventure, because the division of goods was ratified, yet so that others, from whom they had been wrested — naked, hungry, sick — should not lie cast off like aborted children; for this reason Christ, describing himself as King of Kings, Matth. 25., gravely threatens with his saying against those who in grave necessity had refused to clothe the naked, feed the hungry, visit and help the sick, and he protests that an injury was done to him as supreme Lord of goods, who had transferred dominion to those in grave need.

Probatur primo a D. Bonav. quia divisio rerum rata fuit, ne tamen alii, quibus ereptae erant nudi, famelici, aegroti, tanquam abortivi proiecti iacerent; ideo enim graviter Christus, ut Regem Regum se describit Matth. 25. lus dicentem contra eos, qui in gravi necessitate negauerint nudos vestire, fame iacentes pascere, aegrotos visitare, et adiuvare, et protestatur, iniuriam sibi factam, tanquam supremo Domino rerum, qui dominium transtulerat in graviter egentes.

13 So Ezech. 16. This was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom: pride, fullness of bread, and abundance: and they did not stretch forth their hand to the needy and the poor. Therefore since the rich man is bound to give that thing (if only out of charity, if not out of justice), he is treated unjustly if it is taken from him against his will.

Sic Ezech. 16. Haec fuit iniquitas Sororis tuae, superbia, saturitas panis, et abundantia: et manum egeno, et pauperi non porrigebant. Igitur cum teneatur (esto saltem ex charitate, si non ex iustitia,) dives, dare rem illam; inique invitus est, si ei aufertur.

14 RESPONDET Fagundez num. 5.: he is indeed bound to give, but not to this man or to THAT man. Therefore he is unjustly deprived of this liberty, when he is compelled to leave it to this man.

RESPONDET Fagundez num. 5. teneri quidem dare, sed non huic, vel ILLI. Igitur est inique privatus hac libertate, dum cogitur relinquere huic.

15 This foundation, however, collapses before Vasquez. And indeed he is bound to give to the needy who present themselves, as is said in Matth. 25., nor is he free so as to be able to pass over this one and seek another in Galicia, even if he has nothing wherewith to relieve all.

> Hoc tamen fundamentum apud Vasquez ruit. Et quidem tenetur occurrentibus egenis dare, ut dicitur Matth. 25. neque liber est, ut possit relinquere hunc, et quaerere in Gallaecia alium, etiamsi non habeat, unde omnibus succurrat.

16 OBIICIUNT. Cap. si quis de furtis, where a penalty is imposed upon one who steals in grave necessity; but a penalty presupposes guilt: therefore.

> OBIICIUNT. Cap. si quis de furtis, ubi imponitur poena furanti in gravi necessitate: Sed poena supponit culpam: Ergo.

17 RESPONDET S. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 7. ad 1.: the Decretal speaks of a necessity that is not urgent. Caspensis subscribes. This canon D. Bonaventure cites in the Confessionale, cap. 3. particula 55.

> RESPONDET S. Thom. quaest. 66. art. 7. ad 1. Decretalem loqui de necessitate non urgenti. Subscribit Caspensis. Hunc canonem refert D. Bonav. in Confessionali, cap. 3. particula 55.

18 DEINDE cap. 4. particula 2. he says that no penance is to be imposed upon thieves, because they are incapable, unless they restore. He supposes, therefore, that the Decretal does not condemn as theft the taking by one in grave, urgent necessity; but him who does not take in grave necessity so urgent that he could avoid taking the property of another; for in urgent necessity he asserts it is not theft, as I said above, citing the words of the S. Doctor.

> DEINDE cap. 4. particula 2. ait, furibus nullam poenitentiam imponendam; quia sunt incapaces, nisi restituant. Supponit igitur, Decretalem, non damnare furti auferentem in gravi necessitate urgenti; sed eum qui non aufert in gravi, adeo ut possit evitare ereptionem rei alienae; nam in urgenti necessitate asserit, non esse furtum, ut dixi supra, referens verba S. Doctoris.

Question VII: On the thefts of religious

1 BASSEUS, v. Furtum, 2. num. 6., says that a religious who takes things of the monastery that are not necessary, or without leave, is a thief to the same extent as laymen stealing their own goods.

> BASSEUS, v. Furtum, 2. num. 6. ait, capientem e rebus monasterii non necessariis, vel sine licentia, quantum saeculares de suis, esse furem.

2 Religious indeed do not undergo the lot of servants, but of sons, as D. Bonaventure teaches in Apolog. pauperum, respon. 3. cap. 1., and it is clear ex C. litteris, de sepultur. in 6. et Leg. qui in potestate, ff. de testamen. et Authent. Ingressi. Cod. de Sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, Nauar. cap. Non dicatis 12. quaest. 1. num. 61., Sanchez l. 7. de Relig. cap. 21. num. 31., Rebell. p. 1. lib. 3. quaest. 15. s. 8. 3. num. 22. Hence the jurists do wrong when they count them among their own, wishing that whatever they acquire should accrue to the monastery, in the manner of servants.

> RELIGIOSI sane non servorum sortem subeunt, sed filiorum, ut docet D. Bonavent. in Apolog. pauperum, respon. 3. cap. 1. et patet ex C. litteris, de sepultur. in 6. et Leg. qui in potestate, ff. de testamen. et Authent. Ingressi. Cod. de Sacrosanctis Ecclesiis, Nauar. cap. Non dicatis 12. quaest. 1. num. 61. Sanchez l. 7. de Relig. cap. 21. num. 31. Rebell. p. 1. lib. 3. quaest. 15. s. 8. 3. num. 22. Unde male Iurisperiti eos inter suos computant, volentes, eos acquirere Monasterio, more servorum, quidquid acquirunt.

3 From these texts the Doctors deduce, as is indicated quaest. 4. in fine, that thefts of religious are to be considered in the manner of thefts of sons of the family, not of the very rich, but of the middling, and consequently that five silver pieces, or thereabouts, are grave matter; although Caspensis, cited there, requires something more, and Fagundez l. 7. cap. 5. num. 15. two hundred denarii, that is, ten crowns.

> Ex his deducunt Doctores indicari quaest. 4. in fine*, furta Religiosorum consideranda ad modum furtorum filiorumfamilias, non ditissimorum, sed mediocrium, atque adeo quinque argenteos, vel circiter esse materiam gravem; etsi Caspensis, ibi adductus, aliquid amplius exquirat, et Fagundez* l. 7. cap. 5. num. 15. ducentorum dipendiorum, seu vingenatum decem.

4 ONE of the conditions excusing religious from theft and from proprietary guilt is that it be of edible things for one's own use; if this is licit for servants, as I showed quaest. 5., much more is it licit for sons to consume some edibles.

> UNA, e conditionibus excusantibus religiosos a furto, et proprietate, est, si sit de rebus comestibilibus ad proprium usum, quod si licet servis, ut ostendi quaest. 5. multo magis licet filiis aliqua comestibilia consumere.

5 But for giving away, they held that one ought not exceed the value of three giulii: so thought Bartholom. a S. Fausto Thesauro, l. 8. quaest. 218. and Paulinus Berti on the Bull of Clement VIII on the giving of gifts. See also Fabrum in 4. disput. 45. cap. 5. num. 122. and Diana p. 1. Tract. de paupertate Religiosa, resol. 14.

> AD largiendum vero, non debere excedere valorem trium Iuliorum, sensere Bartholom. a S. Fausto Thesauro, l. 8. quaest. 218. Paulinus Berti super Bullam Clement. VIII. de largitione munerum. Vide etiam Fabrum in 4. disput. 45. cap. 5. num. 122. Dianam p. 1. Tract. de paupertate Religiosa, resol. 14.

6 IN MY judgment the opinion of Suarez seems discerning, T. 3. de relig. l. 8. cap. 11. num. 41., where he thus asserts:

> MIHI sententia Suarez videtur discreta T. 3. de relig. l. 8. cap. 11. num. 41. ubi sic asserit.

7 Of the goods of the monastery, consumable in use, namely those pertaining to food and drink, if something is taken by religious for their own actual, so to speak, and transitory use, it does not regularly seem to be mortal sin, unless the damage to the Religion would be excessive, and in something extraordinary and more precious; outside a case of this kind, the things are considered of lighter condition. And although the prelates dislike this, they are not yet so unwilling that they regard it as grave matter in respect of poverty, but only in respect of decorum and religious perfection.

> De bonis Monasterii, usu consumptibilibus, pertinentibus scilicet ad cibum, et potum, si tantum ad proprium usum actualem, ut sic dicam, et transitorium, a Religiosis aliquid sumatur, regulariter non videtur peccatum mortale, nisi inde damnificatio Religionis esset nimia, et in re extraordinaria, et pretiosiori; extra huiusmodi vero casum, res reputantur levioris conditionis. Et quamvis praelatis hoc displiceat, non tamen ita sunt involuntarii, ut illam reputent materiam gravem in ordine ad paupertatem, sed solum in ordine ad decentiam, et perfectionem Religiosam.

8 IT IS ADDED that religious are treated as sons as regards the use of such things; but between parent and son a similar act is not considered grave; it would be otherwise, however, if such things were taken in great quantity, and retained secretly, and little by little consumed, for that could be grave sin, although great prudence is necessary to discern it in the particular case. So Suarez, with whom Diana is pleased, p. 1. Tract. 6. de paupertate, resol. 30. See also Sanchez T. 2. l. 7. cap. 19. num. 53.,

Tanner 2. 2. disp. 7. quaest. 1. dub. 4. num. 106., where he says: Not even all the severity of Prelates can render such takings, as regards the substance of the thing taken, unjust. See again Diana ibi, resol. 35.

> ACCEDIT, quod Religiosi quoad usum huiusmodi rerum tractantur ut filii; inter parentem autem, et filium non censetur similis actio gravis; secus vero esset, si huiusmodi res in magna quantitate acciperentur; et occulte retentae, paulatim consumerentur, nam illud posset esse grave peccatum, quamvis ad id discernendum in particulari magna prudentia necessaria sit. Ita Suarez, cui arridet Diana p. 1. Tract. 6. de paupertate, resol. 30. Vide etiam Sanchez T. 2. l. 7. cap. 19. num. 53. Tannerum 2. 2. disp. 7. quaest. 1. dub. 4. num. 106. ubi ait: Nulla etiam Praelati severitas eiusmodi acceptiones, quoad substantiam rei acceptae, iniquas reddere potest. Vide rursus Dianam ibi, resol. 35.

9 LEDESMA in addit. ad Summam, Tom. 2. cap. 4. and Cenedo tract. de paupertate Religiosa, dub. 20. num. 10. place eight or nine reales as matter deadly for religious; but they require a greater quantity in edibles.

> LEDESMA in addit. ad Summam, Tom. 2. cap. 4. et Cenedo tract. de paupertate Religiosa, dub. 20. num. 10. octo, vel novem Reales ponit materiam mortiferam in Religiosis; maiorem vero quantitatem in comestibilibus exigit.

10 RODRIQUEZ, however, Summa Tom. 4. cap. 118. num. 27. et 29., prescribes the sum of two gold coins for religious; the same Sotus taught, de Iust. l. 4. quaest. 3. ad 3., as did Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. conclus. 3.; but Diana is not pleased with it, resol. 36.

> RODRIQUEZ vero Summa Tom. 4. cap. 118. num. 27. et 29. summam duorum aureorum praescribit religiosis; eam docuit etiam Sotus de Iust. l. 4. quaest. 3. ad 3. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. conclus. 3. ea tamen non placet Dianae resol. 36.

11 BASSEUS, with Miranda, in Manuali prael. t. 1. quaest. 28. art. 17., thinks that a notable quantity in the thefts of religious is to be determined in the particular case, according to the difference of times, places, persons, Religions, and other circumstances, at the judgment of a good man. But Mendoza quaest. 8. posit. de paupertate, concl. 9. num. 12. teaches that two silver pieces are not a notable quantity. Ioan. de la Cruz de statu relig. l. 1. c. 3. dub. 5. and Sanchez Summa Tom. 1. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 3. et 6. think it to be four silver pieces. Diana subscribes. Bartholomaeus a S. Fausto l. 8. quaest. 193. num. 2. says that in the richest monasteries three silver pieces, in monasteries moderately endowed two silver pieces, but in poor ones one suffices for mortal proprietary guilt.

> BASSEUS cum Miranda in Manuali prael. t. 1. quaest. 28. art. 17. putat, quantitatem notabilem in furtis Religiosorum determinandam esse in particulari, pro temporum, locorum, personarum, Religionum, et aliarum circumstantiarum differentia, arbitrio boni viri. Mendoza vero quaest. 8. posit. de paupertate, concl. 9. num. 12. docet, duos argenteos non esse quantitatem notabilem. Ioan. de la Cruz de statu relig. l. 1. c. 3. dub. 5. et Sanchez Summa Tom. 1. l. 7. cap. 20. num. 3. et 6. putant, esse quatuor argenteorum. Subscribit Diana, Bartholomaeus a S. Fausto l. 8. quaest. 193. num. 2. t. ait, in Monasteriis ditissimis, tres argenteos; in Monasteriis vero mediocriter dotatis, duos argenteos; in pauperibus vero, unum sufficere ad proprietatem mortalem.

12 But our SANCTES, most poor, set one giulio, in cap. 6. Regulae; he did not remember that these thefts are committed against the most wealthy Pontiff. I confess, however, that they are committed from the pantry of the poor.

> NOSTER vero Sanctes pauperrimus unum Iulium in cap. 6. Regulae posuit; Non recordabatur haec furta fieri ditissimo Pontifici; Fateor tamen ea fieri de pauperum penu.

13 This is indeed a most poor opinion; for no one so religious is oppressed by it, nor does he himself rightly cite Navarrus. But this Doctor, in this as in many other decisions of the Rule, is severer than is altogether just.

> QUAE sane pauperrima opinio est; neque enim ullus adeo religiosus opprimit, neque ipse recte affert Nauarrum. Sed hic Doctor in hac, sicut et in multis aliis decisionibus Regulae, est severior aequo nimium.

14 Diana ADDS, resol. 41., ex Ioan. Cruz de statu relig. lib. 1. comp. 3. dub. 3. concl. 3., that a religious may take a meal or other edibles, from Lopez in Instruct. p. 1. cap. 6., who says: A religious may receive from laypersons some gifts of electuaries, or of heartening confections, two little vessels, or a pair of partridges, or hens, or something similar; but because in edibles of great value leave is not so easily presumed to be granted by the Superior, therefore one must proceed cautiously in such a case.

> ADDIT Diana resol. 41. ex Ioan. Cruz de statu relig. lib. 1. comp. 3. dub. 3. concl. 3. posse Religiosum accipere prandium, aut alia comestibilia ex Lopez in Instruct. p. 1. cap. 6. dicente: Potest Religiosus accipere a saecularibus aliqua munera electuariorum, vel confectionum cordialium, bina vascula, vel par perdicum, vel gallinarum, vel aliquid simile; sed quia in comestibilibus magni valoris non praesumitur ita facile concedenda licentia a Superiore; ideo caute in tali casu procedendum.

15 These things seem to me to be in the mind of D. Bonaventure, in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1., and in this way is to be understood canon. 12. quaest. 1., where it is said: It is certain that a monk ought to have, or give, or receive nothing without the leave of his superior, unless perhaps he who is in need is in extreme necessity; then he ought not obey the Abbot, for he would plainly act against God. There he also teaches that there is no proprietary guilt unless it is expressly against the will of the Prelate. And he adds, cap. 2. speculi animae, these words: Fourthly, concerning the theft of religious in the retention of their own property, it must be noted what Augustine says, serm. 1. ad Fratres in Eremo, about religious: If anyone conceal a thing entrusted to him, he shall be condemned by judgment of theft; but I understand this concealing, and having as one's own, when it is so concealed that, even if the Prelate should command in virtue of holy obedience that it be revealed, it would still be concealed. Nor do I otherwise understand it as mortal, unless when it is retained against the preceptive will of the Prelate. This must also be noted of religious, and stewards, and sons of the family, and wives, that they can commit theft if they notably damage the owners of goods in dispensing, against the will and intention of the owners; but when, out of an eye to piety, and even in procuring the common good, without evil intention, they give or dispense some things, it is not to be judged mortal. The same, from D. Augustine, he reports in speculo disciplinae ad Novitios, p. 1. cap. 4.

> Haec mihi videntur ad mentem D. Bonaventurae in 4. dist. 15. p. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. et hoc pacto intelligendus canon. 12. quaest. 1. ubi dicitur: Certum est, quod Monachus nihil habere, vel dare, vel accipere sine superioris licentia debet, nisi forte ille, qui indiget, sit in extrema necessitate, tunc non debet obedire Abbati, quia manifeste faceret contra Deum. Ibi etiam docet, non esse proprietatem, nisi sit expresse contra voluntatem Praelati. Et addit cap. 2. speculi animae haec verba: Quarto, circa furtum Religiosorum in retentione proprii, notandum est, quod dicit August. serm. 1. ad Fratres in Eremo de religiosis. Si quis rem sibi collatam celaverit, furti iudicio condemnetur; tunc autem intelligo, hoc celari, et habere proprii rationem, quando sic celatur, quod si etiam Praelatus in virtute sanctae obedientiae praeciperet, quod revelaretur; adhuc celaretur. Nec aliter intelligo mortale, nisi quando contra voluntatem Praelati praeceptoriam detinetur. Hoc etiam notandum de religiosis, et dispensatoribus, et filiisfamilias, et uxoribus, quod furtum possunt committere, si notabiliter Dominos rerum in dispensando damnificant contra voluntatem, et intentionem dominorum; cum autem intuitu pietatis etiam commune bonum procurando, nec mala intentione dant aliqua, vel dispensant, non est iudicandum mortale. Idem e D. August. refert in speculo disciplinae ad Novitios, p. 1. cap. 4.

16 Where you have, first, that religious are numbered together with sons and wives in this matter. Secondly, that not only is presumed leave not necessary to avoid theft and religious proprietary guilt, but that retention against the will of the Prelate is required, even if it were preceptive, for him to be a proprietor.

Ubi habes primo, Religiosos cum filiis, et uxoribus connumerari in hoc. Deinde non solum licentiam praesumptam non esse necessariam ad vitandum furtum, et proprietatem religiosam; sed requiri retentionem contra voluntatem Praelati, etiamfi foret praeceptoria, ut is proprietarius sit.

17 This is indeed a tacit leave, while the prelates do not forbid, and it suffices, because tacit and express leave have the same force, Leg. cum quod, ff. de rebus creditis, et cap. 2. de rescriptis, and so teach Sanchez l. 7. de Relig. cap. 9. num. 7. and Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 5. num. 12., who add that the use and received custom introduced in religion, of giving and receiving without leave for licit uses, excuses religious. The same must be said with respect to retention.

Haec sane est tacita licentia, dum praelati non prohibent, et haec sufficit, quia taciti, et expressi eadem est virtus, Leg. cum quod, ff. de rebus creditis, et cap. 2. de rescriptis*, et ita docent Sanchez* l. 7. de Relig. cap. 9. num. 7. Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 5. num. 12. qui addunt usum, et consuetudinem receptam in religione invectam, dandi, et accipiendi absque licentia in licitos usus, excusare Religiosos. Idem dicendum in ordine ad retinendum.

18 WHEREFORE the principal sign of proprietary guilt, which is to retain something without legitimate leave, as Navar. teaches, C. non dicatis, 12. quaest. 1., Suarez de Relig. T. 3. l. 8. cap. 12. num. 2., as is had in C. Monachi, de statu Monachorum, is removed, if he receives and retains with this intention, that if the Prelate should command, he would not wish to retain it.

Qvare praecipuum signum proprietatis, quod est retinere aliquid sine legitima licentia, ut docent Navar. C. non dicatis, 12. quaest. 1. Suarez de Relig. T. 3. l. 8. cap. 12. num. 2. et habetur, C. Monachi, de statu Monachorum, aufertur*, si accipiat, ac retineat ea intentione, quod si Praelatus praeciperet, ipse nollet retinere.*

19 For the S. Doctor considered that the grave penalties there enjoined are not to be imposed for any omission whatever of leave. For there it is ordered that they be removed from the altar unless they repent, and that in death they be deprived of suffrages and of Ecclesiastical burial if they die in that state, and in life be deprived for two years of active and passive voice, and formerly they were expelled from the monastery, as is had in cap. cum ad Monasterium. It is true that this penalty was corrected by cap. Finale de regularibus, as Sanchez notes, l. 7. de Relig. cap. 20. num. 77., and Abbas on the aforesaid C. Cum ad Monasterium, num. 13., and Fagundez cap. 5. num. 13.

Etenim S. Doctor consideravit, graves poenas, ibi iniunctas, non esse ob quamlibet omissionem licentiae iniungendas. Ibi enim praecipitur, ut removeantur ab altari, nisi resipiscant, et in morte priventur suffragiis, et sepultura Ecclesiastica, si in eo statu moriantur, et in vita priventur biennio voce activa, et passiva, et olim e Monasterio expellebantur, ut habetur cap. cum ad Monasterium. Verum est, hanc poenam esse correctam per cap. Finale de regularibus*, ut notant Sanchez* l. 7. de Relig. cap. 20. num. 77. et Abbas in C. praedicto. Cum ad Monasterium, num. 13. et Fagundez cap. 5. num. 13.

20 Sanchez notes very well, however, that the penalties of proprietary guilt are not incurred by those who give or receive without leave, but only by those who possess their own property; of these the C.

Monachi speaks.

> Notat autem optime Sanchez, poenas proprietarii non incurri a dantibus, vel recipientibus, sine licentia, sed tantum a possidentibus proprium, de his vero loquitur C. Monachi.

21 It must also be noted, in order to incur these penalties of proprietary guilt, that any private property whatever, or proprietary guilt, does not suffice, but it is required that a monk be found to have a great private store. But how great that store ought to be is not found treated among the Doctors, as Fagundez says, num. 4.; it is only found in Ioannes Andreas, C. cum ad Monasterium, de statu Monach. numer. 4., Hostiensis numero 7., Anchar. num. 10., and others, that a proprietary monk is to be buried outside the Church with some part of money and of his own store found, in these words: Let thy money be with thee unto perdition. And they add that this part ought to be thirty silver pieces, because Christ the Lord was sold at that price, that is, three ducats. From this you have that the quantity ought to be much greater for one to be a proprietor; and thus Fagundez thinks it could be thirty ducats.

> Notandvm etiam, ad incurrendas has poenas proprietatis, non sufficere qualecumque peculium proprium, aut proprietatem, sed opus esse, ut Monachus inveniatur habere magnum peculium. At quanta illius peculii quantitas esse debeat, non invenitur apud Doctores tractatum, ut ait Fagundez num. 4. solum reperitur apud Ioannem Andream, C. cum ad Monasterium, de statu Monach. numer. 4. et Hostiensem numero 7. Anchar. num. 10. et alios, debere Monachum proprietarium sepeliri extra Ecclesiam cum parte aliqua pecuniae, et peculii proprii inventi, his verbis: Pecunia tua tecum sit in perditionem. Et addunt, hanc partem debere esse tringinta argenteos, eo quod Christus Dominus eo pretio venundatus sit, hoc est, ducata tria. Ex quo habes maiorem ista quantitatem esse debere, ut sit proprietarius, et sic existimat Fagundez, esse posse triginta ducatorum.

22 Secondly, a religious is EXCUSED from proprietary guilt by the presumed will of the superior for that occasion, and a certain epieikeia is said to apply. For this, however, it is necessary that the matter be pressing, and that the Superior be absent, so that he cannot be approached. So teaches D. Bonavent. p. 1. Speculi disciplinae ad Novitios, cap. 4. in fine, D. Thom. 2. 2. quaestione 32. articul. 8. ad 1., Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 41. de statu religion. dub. 9., Lopes p. 1. cap. 156., Rodriquez Tomo 2. summae, cap. 31., whom Fagundez cites and follows, in septimum Praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 5. num. 20. Hence Suarez says, Tomo 3. de Relig. lib. 9. cap. 9. num. 28.: If a necessity of relieving a parent, gravely suffering and in need, should befall a Friar Minor of St. Francis, by accepting money offered by someone, and then he has no opportunity of going to his superior, and there is no hope of having another similar occasion, he may accept that money by epieikeia; he affirms the same moreover if the superior should unjustly deny him leave.

> Excvsat secundo Religiosum a proprietate, praesumpta voluntas superioris pro illa vice, et dicitur quaedam epickeia. Ad hanc autem necessarium est, ut res urgeat, et ut Superior sit absens, ut nequeat adiri. Ita docet D. Bonavent. p. 1. Speculi disciplinae ad Novitios, cap. 4. in fine D. Thom. 2. 2. quaestione 32. articul. 8. ad 1. Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 41. de statu religion. dub. 9. Lopes p. 1. cap. 156. Rodriquez Tomo 2. summae, cap. 31. quos allegat, et sequitur Fagundez in septimum Praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 5. num. 20. Unde ait Suarez Tomo 3. de Relig. lib. 9. cap. 9. num. 28. Si Fratri Minori S. Francisci occurrat necessitas subveniendi parenti, graviter laboranti, et indigenti, accipiendo oblatam ab aliquo pecuniam, et tunc non habet opportunitatem accedendi ad superiorem, et non sit spes, aliam similem occasionem habendi, potest per epikeiam accipere pecuniam illam; idem insuper affirmat, si superior iniuste eam licentiam negaret.

23 But they ASK: whether one who has applied epieikeia in this manner is bound afterwards to report to the superior. It is answered with D. Bonav.: if the thing still exists, and the superior can revoke or amend it, he is bound to report to the superior, that he may not be a proprietor. The same thought Sanchez de Relig. lib. 7. cap. 19. num. 8. and Fagundez num 22.

> Qvaervnt autem: An qui tali modo Epikeiam adhibuit, teneatur postea superiori referre. Respondetur cum D. Bonau. si res adhuc extat, et potest superior revocare, vel emendare, tenetur referre superiori, ne sit proprietarius. Idem sensere Sanchez de Relig. lib. 7. cap. 19. num. 8. Fagundez num 22.

24 But if he would probably not believe that the superior would revoke or amend it, he is not bound to approach him, even if the thing still exists. So Sanchez and Fagundez loc. cit., Nauar. in commentario, 2. num. 20. de regular. mendic. quaest. 8. quodlib. concl. 8., Graffius p. 1. l. 3. cap. 5. num. 54.

> Si vero probabiliter non crederet, superiorem revocaturum, vel emendaturum, non tenetur eum adire, etiamsi res adhuc exstet. Ita Sanchez, et Fagundez loc. cit. Nauar. in commentario, 2. num. 20. de regular. mendic. quaest. 8. quodlib. concl. 8. Graffius p. 1. l. 3. cap. 5. num. 54.

25 Further, to receive or to give with this intention, that afterwards we may wish to ask leave, the S. Doctor judges not altogether safe, loco adducto.

> Porro accipere, vel dare hac intentione, ut postea velimus licentiam petere, non admodum tutum existimat S. Doctor loco adducto.

Question VIII: Whether men can be reduced to slavery, and sold

1 I SUPPOSE first, that men can sell their slaves, as the Doctors commonly teach with D. Bonaventure, in 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litt., where he says that they can sell them even in foreign lands, yet not to the prejudice of the faith, for instance to infidels, as the S. Doctor notes, 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litterali.

> Svppono primo, posse homines vendere suos servos, ut docent communiter Doctores cum D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litt. ubi ait, posse eos vendere etiam in terris alienis, non tamen in praeiudicium fidei, puta infidelibus, ut notat S. Doctor 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litterali.

2 I SUPPOSE secondly, that parents can sell their children in grave necessity; indeed, even themselves.

> Svppono secundo, posse parentes vendere filios in gravi necessitate; imo et seipsos.

3 That fathers can sell their children is proved by D. Bonav. loc. cit. dub. 3. ex 2. Esdrae 5., where such a thing is narrated to have been licit in a time of famine. He notes, however, that the consent of the mother also is required.

> Et quod possint patres vendere filios, probatur a D. Bonav. loc. cit. dub. 3. ex 2. Esdrae 5. ubi tale quid narratur licuisse tempore famis. Notat tamen, requiri consensum etiam matris.

4 That anyone can sell himself is proved from law; on which see Molina Tomo 1. disp. 33., Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 12. num. 18.

> Quod vero possit se quisque vendere, probatur ex iure. De quo vide Molinam Tomo 1. disp. 33. Fagundez in septimum praeceptum, l. 7. cap. 12. num. 18.

5 Yet a married man ought not to sell himself to the prejudice of the debt he owes his wife, for he would commit an injustice, as the S. Doctor says, dub. 4.

> Neque tamen coniugatus debet se vendere in praeiudicium debiti, quo tenetur uxori, quia iniustitiam committeret, ut ait S. Doctor dub. 4.

6 I suppose also, from the same D. Bonaventure, in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1., that infidels captured in a just war can be sold. Thus the King of the Negroes was accustomed to do, and also other Christian Kings.

> Suppono etiam ex eodem D. Bonav. in 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. posse infideles, bello iusto captos, vendi. Sic Nigrorum Rex facere consuevit, et alii etiam Reges Christiani.

7 It is asked therefore: whether certain peoples, such as the Portuguese, may licitly travel through Angola and Guinea, and seize slaves by hunting, and carry them off into their kingdoms to be sold.

> Quaeritur ergo: An possint licite aliqui populi, ut Lusitani, peragrare in Angolam, et Guineam, et venatu arripere mancipia, eaque in sua regna deferre vendenda.

8 Many learned men indeed gravely condemn that hunting. So especially Mercado tract. 5. cap. 15., Caspensis Tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 1. num. 11., who at once does not dare to condemn this trade, because many men, and most learned and most pious Prelates in the kingdom, do not condemn it; nor does Fagundez decline it, l. 7. cap. 12. num. 15., if they are received in good faith.

> Multi sane viri docti venationem istam graviter reprehendunt. Ita praecipue Mercado tract. 5. cap. 15. Caspensis Tract. 18. disp. 5. sect. 1. num. 11. qui mox non audet negotiationem hanc damnare, quia multi viri, ac Praelati doctissimi, et piissimi in regno, eam non damnant, nec abnuit Fagundez l. 7. cap. 12. num. 15. si bona fide accipiantur.

9 To me, however, this hunting and trading must altogether be condemned, even if (as they relate) the Sobae have houses of slaves, in the manner of cattle, for trading; for since they are free, and no title is had over their lives, I do not see by what reason they can be sold. For the excuse of leading them to the faith is rotten, as I showed, Tract. de fide, disp. 2. quaest. 3. et seq. Moreover, similar subjections, which the S. Doctor calls captivity in speculo animae, cap. 1., he cries out, after the middle of the way, are mortal.

> Mihi tamen omnino damnanda est haec venatio, et negotiatio, etiamsi (ut ferunt) Sobae habeant casas mancipiorum, instar pecorum, ad negotiationem; nam cum sint liberi, nec habeatur titulus aliquis super vitam illorum, non video qua ratione vendi queant. Excusatio enim inducendi eos ad fidem mucida est, ut ostendi Tract. de fide, disp. 2. quaest. 3. et seq. Porro similes subiectiones, quas catcerationes vocat S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. post medium mortales clamat.

Question IX: Whether slaves can wrest themselves from their masters

1 I speak of captives taken in a just war; for of those bought it is clear that they cannot flee.

> An servi possint se Dominis eripere.
> Loquor de captivis iusto bello captis; nam de emptis patet, eos non posse fugere.

2 The first opinion is that slaves captured in a just war, such as Moors or Turks, can flee, provided they go to their own homeland, not that they wander through places where they are slaves. So teach

Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 200., Sà v. bellum, num. 7., Lessius l. 1. l. 2. cap. 15. dub. 15. num. 24., Azor. Tomo 2. l. 2. cap. 24. quaestio 3., Couar. l. 1. var. cap. 2. num. 10. et in Regulam Peccatum, §. 11. p. 2., Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 40. art. 1., Angles in flor. in 4. quaest. de dominio, art. 2. concl. 5., Sotus l. 4. de Iust. quaest. 2. art. 2. concl. 3., Gregorius Lopes l. 23. tit. 29. p. 3., Alens. 3. p. quaest. 48. membr. 2. art. 3., Fagundez l. 7. cap. 1. num. 21., after D. Bonaventure in the places to be cited.

> Prima opinio est, mancipia bello iusto capta, veluti Mauros, vel Turcas, posse fugere, dummodo eant in propriam patriam, non ut vagentur per loca, ubi sunt servi. Ita docent Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 200. Sà v. bellum, num. 7. Lessius l. 1. l. 2. cap. 15. dub. 15. num. 24. Azor. Tomo 2. l. 2. cap. 24. quaestio 3. Couar. l. 1. var. cap. 2. num. 10. et in Regulam Peccatum, §. 11. p. 2. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 40. art. 1. Angles in flor. in 4. quaest. de dominio, art. 2. concl. 5. Sotus l. 4. de Iust. quaest. 2. art. 2. concl. 3. Gregorius Lopes l. 23. tit. 29. p. 3. Alens. 3. p. quaest. 48. membr. 2. art. 3. Fagundez l. 7. cap. 1. num. 21. post D. Bonaventuram locis allegandis.

3 The negative opinion is upheld by Molina T. 1. disp. 37., Nauar. Man. cap. 7. num. 63., Glossa C. Ius gentium, dist. 1., Fortun. Leg. manumiss. col. 2., D. Anton. 5. p. tit. 3. cap. 6. §. 4., Turrecrem. in C. Ius gentium, disp. 1., Sylvest. v. servus, quaest. 3. dict. 2.

> Negativam sententiam sustinent Molina T. 1. disp. 37. Nauar. Man. cap. 7. num. 63. Glossa C. Ius gentium, dist. 1. Fortun. Leg. manumiss. col. 2. D. Anton. 5. p. tit. 3. cap. 6. §. 4. Turrecrem. in C. Ius gentium, disp. 1. Sylvest. v. servus, quaest. 3. dict. 2.

4 But it seems to be proved first from the S. Doctor, 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1., because captivity in war was introduced by the law of nations, and is just, sanctioned by laws. Therefore those fleeing steal themselves from their masters, Leg. 1. Cod. de servis fugitivis, et Leg. 2. C. eodem titulo; it is established there that a slave caught in flight is to be punished by mutilation of the foot; but so grave a penalty would not be imposed except for mortal sin. The laws of the Code, moreover, are more recent, and of Christian Emperors. Wherefore one must stand by those, not by others of the Digest.

> Videtur autem probari primo ex S. Doctore 2. dist. 44. art. 3. quaest. 1. quia captivitas in bello, iure gentium invecta est, ac iusta, legibus sancita. Ideo illi fugientes, se furantur Dominis, Leg. 1. Cod. de servis fugitivis, et Leg. 2. C. eodem titulo, statuitur, ut servus deprehensus in fuga puniatur mutilatione pedis; at tam gravis poena non imponeretur, nisi pro peccato mortali. Leges autem Codicis sunt moderniores, et Imperatorum Christianorum. Quare illis standum est, non aliis Digestorum.

5 It is confirmed from cap. 1. et 2. si quis servum, dist. 17. quaest. 9., where it is said that they sin mortally, and are bound to restitution, who aid and encourage slaves to flee.

> Confirmatur ex cap. 1. et 2. si quis servum, dist. 17. quaest. 9. ubi dicitur, eos peccare mortaliter, et teneri ad restitutionem iuvantes, et hortantes servos ad fugam.

6 But the response of Fagundez is frivolous: that the Codes speak of slaves wandering through the kingdoms where they are slaves, not of those returning to their own; in which they have a right; for they are slaves, yet in such a way that, if they can, they are able to flee.

> Frivola est autem responsio Fagundez; Codices loqui de servis vagantibus per regna, ubi sunt servi, non de remeantibus ad suos; in quo habent ius; sunt enim servi, ita tamen, ut si possunt, fugere valeant.

7 These things are indeed said gratuitously, because in the Codes this distinction is not found, nor does it accomplish anything; for the question asks whether they are absolutely subject to masters; and if it is so, whether they are seized so as to return to their own, or so as to wander, contributes nothing to diminishing the damage; just as the same damage would be done by one who stole my purse, whether he carried it off to Spain or squandered the coins here.

> Haec sane gratis dicta sunt, quia in Codicibus non habetur haec distinctio, neque ea aliquid facit; nam quaestio postulat, an absolute sint subiecti Dominis; quod si ita est, sive rapiantur, ut remeent ad suos, sive ut vagentur, nihil confert ad damnum minuendum; sicuti eadem damnificatio esset furantis mihi crumenam, sive eam deferret in Hispaniam, sive hic dilapidaret nummos.

[8] I add that in our case there is less damage or inconvenience if slaves wander through Christian regions, where they can easily be converted to the faith, than if they return to their own Mohammedans or Idolaters.

> Addo in casu nostro minus damnum seu inconveniens esse, si mancipia vagentur per Christianas regiones, ubi facile converti possunt ad fidem, quam si remeent ad suos Mahometanos, vel Idolatras.

[9] Indeed, the affirmative opinion is evidently proved by D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 36. quaest. 1. fundamento 3. et quaest. 2. ad 2. When two unequal rights concur, the right of the higher order precedes; but liberty is of the Law of Nature; the servitude of War is of the law of nations, which is inferior: therefore. This reason caused the statute in the Institutes de rerum divisione, §. item ea, to be made in these words: Free men are brought into our servitude, who, however, if they escape our power and have returned to their own, receive their pristine state. And the same is had in the Institutes: Quibus modis ius patriae potest. solvatur, §. si ab hostibus. And in Leg. Nihil interest, ff. de captivis, et postliminio reversis, there: It makes no difference when a captive has returned, whether he was let go, or escaped the power of the enemy by force or by stratagem.

> Enim vero assertiva sententia probatur evidenter a D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 36. quaest. 1. fundamento 3. et quaest. 2. ad 2. Concurrentibus duobus iuribus inaequalibus, praecedit ius ordinis superioris; sed libertas est Iuris naturae; servitus Belli est Iuris gentium, quod est inferius: Ergo. Haec ratio fecit, ut in Institutis de rerum divisione, §. item ea, hoc sit statutum his verbis: Liberi homines in servitutem nostram deducantur, qui tamen, si evaserint nostram potestatem, et ad suos reversi fuerint, pristinum statum recipient. Et idem habetur Institutis: Quibus modis ius patriae potest. solvatur, §. si ab hostibus. Et Leg. Nihil interest, ff. de captivis, et postliminio reversis ibi: Nihil interest, quando captivus reversus est, utrum dimissus sit, an vi, an fallacia potestatem hostium evaserit.

[10] This also was enacted in Leg. 25. tit. 14. part. 7. in the kingdom of Castile, there: If a Moorish slave flee into Mauritania, and there set foot in safety, we will that he remain free, even if he afterwards return to the Christians.

> Hoc etiam statutum est Leg. 25. tit. 14. part. 7. in regno Castellae, ibi: Si servus Maurus fugiat in Mauritaniam, et ibi salvus pedem ponat, manere liberum volumus, etiamsi postea ad Christianos redeat.

[11] It is confirmed, for one condemned to perpetual imprisonment, or to the galleys, even if justly, can nevertheless flee. Each opinion is probable, but this one is more strongly proved because of the reasons adduced.

> Confirmatur, nam damnatus carceri perpetuo, vel triremibus, etiamsi iuste, potest tamen fugere. Utraque opinio probabilis est, sed haec magis probatur ob rationes allatas.

12 To the objections it is answered that the law of nations has detracted something from the law of nature, and it is restored if the occasion offers itself in necessity, as I said even of the properties of things, but more truly of liberty, which is positively of the law of nature, as I said in the Tractatu de Legibus, disp. 4. quaestione 2.

> Ad obiecta respondetur, Ius gentium aliquid iuri naturae detraxisse, et redintegrari, si occasio sese offerat in necessitate, ut dixi etiam de proprietatibus rerum, magis vero in libertate, quae positive est iuris naturae, ut dixi Tractatu de Legibus, disp. 4. quaestione 2.

13 To the penalty of mutilation I would say first that it is comminatory, and never commanded to be executed. But many laws threaten, lest greater liberty be usurped by all than is fitting, for instance lest those take flight who have sold themselves, and renounced their natural right; and of these also the chapter si quis servum speaks, but not of those made slaves in war.

> Ad poenam mutilationis primo dicerem, esse comminatoriam, neque unquam executioni mandatam. Minantur autem multa leges, ne amplior libertas ab omnibus usurpetur, quam par sit, puta ne fugam accipiant, qui se vendiderunt, et ius suum naturale renunciarunt; et de his loquitur etiam cap. si quis servum, non autem de servis factis in bello.

14 As regards Christian slaves captured in war on the side that is just, they can flee. So Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 11. Indeed they are bound to flee from the gentiles when there is danger to the faith, as I deduce from D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litt. The reason of the Seraphic Doctor is evident, as Fagundez brings it forward, cap. 12. num. 27.: because we are bound to provide more for the salvation of the soul than for any other thing whatever.

> Quoad servos Christianos captos in bello ex parte eorum iusto, possunt fugere. Ita Petrus Nauar. l. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 11. Imo tenentur fugere a gentilibus, quando periculum est fidei, ut deduco e D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 36. dub. 2. litt. Ratio Seraphici evidens est, quam affert Fagundez cap. 12. num. 27. quia tenemur magis saluti animae, quam cuivis alteri rei prospicere.

15 Yet I ADD that war is always just for Christians against the Saracens and Turks, since they have tyrannically occupied the provinces of the Christians, as Couar. observed in Reg. Peccatum, 2. part. §. 11. num. 6. Fagundez, in the place cited, after D. Bonavent. expositione in Threnos, et serm. 16. Haexaëmeronis: a Christian captured by another Christian waging war justly can licitly flee, as D. Bonavent. teaches, in 4. dist. 36. quaest. 2. ad 2., Petrus Navar. Lib. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 211., Fagundez num. 28.; nor is he even a slave; for although by law he could be made a slave, yet by legitimate custom among Christians, that they not be legitimately subjected to servitude, it is not licit, as Molina also teaches, Tract. de iust. disput. 33. §. primus est.

> ADDO tamen, bellum semper esse iustum Christianis contra Saracenos, et Turcas, cum provincias Christianorum tyrannice occuparint, ut animadvertit Couar. in Reg. Peccatum, 2. part. §. 11. num. 6. Fagundez loco citato, post D. Bonavent. expositione in Threnos, et serm. 16. Haexaëmeronis, Christianus ab alio Christiano in bello iuste bellante captus, licite potest fugere, ut docet D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 36. quaest. 2. ad 2. Petrus Navar. Lib. 3. de restit. cap. 1. num. 211. Fagundez num. 28. nec etiam sit mancipium; Nam, licet de iure possit fieri mancipium, tamen de consuetudine legitima inter Christianos, ut servitute legitime non subiiciantur, non licet, ut docet etiam Molina Tract. de iust. disput. 33. §. primus est.

16 The S. Doctor proves this, 4. dist. 36. quaest. 1. fundamento 1.: In Christ Jesus there is no slave, Galat. 3. And by Canon Law, Christians cannot be reduced to the servitude of slaves.

ID probat S. Doctor 4. dist. 36. quaest. 1. fundamento 1. In Christo Iesu non est servus, Galat. 3. Et Iure Canonico, Christiani nequeunt in servitutem mancipiorum redigi.

Question X: Whether it is lawful, by private authority, to recover what is ours

1 That the seizure of spoils in a just war is not unlawful is proved by the Holy Doctor on chapter 10 of Wisdom, in these words: The just took the spoils of the wicked, because it is done by public authority.

NON esse illicitam ereptionem spoliorum in bello iusto probat ad 10. Sapientiae S. Doctor, illis verbis: Iusti tulerunt spolia impiorum, quia fit publica authoritate.

2 But to seize another's goods at God's express command is no sin. Thus the Hebrews took away the riches of the Egyptians, Exodus 12, as is commonly noted with St. Bonaventure, in sermon 6 on the ten commandments, and in 2 dist. 40 dub. 2, where, however, many note that the Hebrews had a right to those goods on account of the wages withheld for their labors spent in building the cities, as Clement of Alexandria teaches, book 1 of the Stromata, Epiphanius in the Anchoratus, St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. ad 1., where Salon, Aragon, Valentia, tract. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 10. puncto 5., Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. art. 1., Sotus l. 2. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 8. and lib. 5. quaest. 3. art. 3. ad 1., Melchior Cano lib. 2. de locis, cap. 4., Sayrus Lib. 9. cap. 14.

MAXIME vero iubente Deo aliena rapere, non est peccatum. Sic enim Hebraei divitias AEgyptiorum abstulere Exodi 12. ut advertunt communiter cum D. Bonavent. in serm. 6. de decem praeceptis. Et in 2. dist. 40. dub. 2. ubi tamen advertunt multi, Hebraeos habuisse ius ad eas facultates ob interceptas mercedes pro laboribus in aedificiis urbium insumptis, ut docent Clemens Alexand. lib. 1. strom. Epiph. in Anchorato, S. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. ad 1. ubi Salon, Aragon, Valentia tract. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 10. puncto 5. Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. art. 1. Sotus l. 2. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 8. et lib. 5. quaest. 3. art. 3. ad 1. Melchior Cano lib. 2. de locis, cap. 4. Sayrus Lib. 9. cap. 14.

3 From this a doubt can arise: Whether by private authority men can seize their own wages; And whether anyone else can take away a thing unjustly detained by another.

HINC potest oriri dubium: An possint privata authoritate suas mercedes rapere: Et: An quisquis alius possit rem ab alio inique detentam auferre.

5 I say, therefore, first, that it is not lawful to take away one's own property in this way, if it can be obtained by another, more honorable means; for although no injustice is committed with respect to the thing received, still it is committed with respect to the manner, for they make justice for themselves to the prejudice of the public judgment of right. Injury is also done to the one holding the thing, if he is a just possessor, as a depositary; for thus you expose him to the danger of having to pay twice for the thing, and to other inconveniences, as St. Thomas says, 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. ad 3.

DICO igitur primo, non licere sic auferre rem propriam, si alia via honestiori potest haberi; quamvis enim non committatur iniustitia quo ad rem acceptam, committitur tamen quo ad modum, nam sibi ipsis faciunt iustitiam in praeiudicium publici Iusdicentis. Fit etiam iniuria habenti rem, si sit iustus possessor, ut depositarius Sic enim eum exponis periculo, rem bis solvendi, aliisque incommodis, ut ait D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 5. ad 3.

6 I say secondly that, certain conditions being in place, this is lawful.

DICO secundo, positis nonnullis conditionibus, id licere.

7 The FIRST is that the thing be owed in justice. So Corduba with Navarrus and Sayrus.

PRIMA est, ut res sit debita ex iustitia. Ita Corduba cum Navarro, et Sayro.

8 The SECOND, that this debt be liquid.

SECUNDA, ut hoc debitum sit liquidum.

9 The THIRD, that he receive no more than is owed to him.

TERTIA, ut non plus accipiat, quam sibi debetur.

10 The FOURTH, that he cannot recover that good by order of law, or out of court, without grave loss.

QUARTA, ut non possit ordine iuris illud bonum recuperare, aut extra, sine gravi iactura.

11 The FIFTH, that it be likely to him that asking the debt from the debtor will profit him nothing.

QUINTA, quod verisimile illi sit, nihil sibi profuturum debitum petere a debitore.

12 The SIXTH, that no grave scandal follow.

SEXTA, ne aliquod grave scandalum sequatur.

13 The SEVENTH, that he take care to admonish the debtor, or the heirs, that the debt is now to be paid.

SEPTIMA, ut admonendum curet debitorem, vel haeredes, iam debitum esse solutum.

14 These conditions therefore being in place, since no injury is inflicted on anyone, and the thing is reduced to equality, it will be lawful to make such compensation for oneself, as Sayrus says, num. 8.

> HIS igitur positis conditionibus, cum nulla alicui inferatur iniuria, et res ad aequalitatem reducatur, licebit sic sibi facere compensationem, ut ait Sayrus num. 8.

15 The same thing, I said, many understand to be able to be done even by violent seizure, unless an immense disturbance in the Republic follow. Others, however, deny this, because a private person may not punish another, as is gathered from St. Thomas, 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 8. Therefore those who seize in this way are punished by Princes.

> IDEM, quod dixi, intelligunt multi etiam posse fieri rapiendo violenter, nisi sequatur ingens in Republica perturbatio: Alii tamen id negant, quia non licet privato alium punire, ut colligitur ex D. Thoma 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 8. Ideo a Principibus ita rapientes puniuntur.

Question XI: On the punishment of thieves

1 St. Bonaventure, in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 4, reduces to the genus of theft the secret taking of a thing, the detention of a thing found, sacrilege, the property of Religious, and bad dispensation.

> AD genus furti reducit D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 4. Occultam rei acceptionem, rei inventae detentionem, sacrilegium, proprietatem Religiosorum, et malam dispensationem.

2 To rapine likewise he reduces new tariffs, new customs of burdens, iniquitous exactions, extortions, the acceptance of gifts, and the game of dice.

> AD Rapinam item reducit novas Talias, consuetudines novas gravaminum, exactiones iniquas, extorsiones, munerum acceptiones, et ludum alearum.

3 NOW we must treat of theft and rapina in the proper sense.

> NUNC de proprio furto, et rapina agendum.

4 Scotus, 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. §. De secundo, teaches that daytime thieves cannot rightly be hanged. His reason is that God commanded: Thou shalt not kill, nor dispensed except for night thieves; but it is not permitted to dispense in the law of a superior.

> SCOTUS 4. dist. 15. quaest. 3. §. De secundo*, docet, Fures diurnos non posse iure suspendi. Ratio eius est, quia Deus praecepit:* Non occides*, neque dispensavit, nisi pro furibus nocturnis, non licet autem in lege superioris dispensare.*

5 Alensis, part. 3. quaest. 47. memb. 4. art. 3., teaches that there can indeed be power in the Republic to put thieves to death, yet they are not to be hanged as a rule, because life is preferred to stolen goods. Sotus also, lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 3. ad 3., takes it rather ill that simple thieves are hanged; hence he inveighs against Baldus, in the Law sed novo iure, Cod. de servis fugitivis, who held that thieves ought to be hanged for simple theft thrice repeated, or for one enormous theft equivalent to three.

> ALENSIS part. 3. quaest. 47. memb. 4. art. 3. docet, esse quidem potestatem in Republica ad fures necandos: non esse tamen regulariter suspendendos; quia vita praefertur bonis furatis. Sotus etiam lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 3. art. 3. ad 3. satis aegre fert, quod fures simplices suspendantur, unde invehitur in Baldum in Lege sed novo iure, Cod. de servis fugitivis*, qui voluit, fures suspendi debere pro simplici furto, ter repetito, aut pro uno ingenti, quod tribus aequipollet.*

6 The common opinion, however, is that a thief can be put to death for one notable theft alone, or for several repeated. So the jurists, the Law cited, where Baldus, and Paulus de Castro, and others, whom Covarruvias reports.

> COMMUNIS tamen sententia est, furem ipso uno insigni furto, aut pluribus repetitis, necari posse. Ita Iurisperiti, Leg. citata*, ubi Baldus, et Paulus de Castro, et alii, quos refert Couarruvias.*

7 Among Theologians, however, John Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 27. quaest. 27. art. 4. Gabriel 4. dist. 15. quaest. 15. art. 3. dub. 1. John Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 4. John Driedo Lib. 1. de libertate Eccles. cap. 10. Alph. Castro Lib. 1. de Lege poen. cap. 6. Victor relect. de homicid. num. 21. Covarruvias lib. 2. var. cap 9. num. 7. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. controv. 4. Aragon there, Bannes there, dub. 1. Petrus Navarrus lib. 2. de restit. cap. 3. disput. 1. Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 5 quaest. 8. puncto 1. Sayrus lib. 9. cap. 15. num. 33. The same is intimated by St. Bonaventure in Diaeta, salv. tit. 3. cap. 6, proving it from Ecclesiasticus 34, where the Holy Spirit makes the thief almost equal to the homicide, of whom the Holy Doctor said in cap. 4 that hanging is due to him.

> INTER Theologos autem Ioan. Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 27. quaest. 27. art. 4. Gabriel 4. dist. 15. quaest. 15. art. 3. dub. 1. Ioan. Medina Cod. de restit. quaest. 4. Ioan. Driedo Lib. 1. de libertate Eccles. cap. 10. Alph. Castro Lib. 1. de Lege poen. cap. 6. Victor relect. de homicid. num. 21. Covar. lib. 2. var. cap 9. num. 7. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 66. art. 6. controv. 4. Aragon ibidem, Bannes ibi, dub. 1. Petrus Navar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 3. disput. 1. Valentia Tom. 3. disp. 5 quaest. 8. puncto 1. Sayrus lib. 9. cap. 15. num. 33. Idem innuit S. Bonavent. in Diaeta, salv. tit. 3. cap. 6. id probans ex 34. Ecclesiastici, ubi Spiritus Sanctus facit furem aequalem fere homicidae, de quo dixit S. Doctor cap. 4. suspendium illi deberi.

8 This opinion is proved from the disturbance of the Republic induced by thieves.

> Probatur haec opinio ex perturbatione Reipublicae, a furibus inducta.

9 To the argument of Scotus Sayrus responds, num. 25., from St. Bonaventure cap. 6. in Decalogum, that the same God who commanded: Thou shalt not kill, also commanded in Exodus 22: Wizards thou shalt not suffer to live.

> Ad argumentum Scoti respondet Sayrus num. 25. ex D. Bonavent. cap. 6. in Decalogum, eundem Deum, qui iussit: Non occides*, praecepisse etiam Exodi 22.* Maleficos non patieris vivere.

10 Thus in many provinces thieves were hanged, as Aulus Gellius reports, book 11 of the Attic Nights, last chapter, on the Roman Emperors. And among the Egyptians a thief was put to death. Which some gather from Genesis 44, where Joseph's brothers said: With whomsoever that which you seek shall be found, let him die; he himself more mercifully said: He shall be my servant.

> Sic in multis provinciis fures suspendebantur, ut refert Aulus Gellius lib. 11. noctium Atticarum*, cap. ult. de Romanis Imperatoribus. Et apud AEgyptios, fur occidebatur. Quod aliqui colligunt ex 44.* Genesis*, ubi dixerunt fratres Ioseph:* Apud quemcumque fuerit inventum, quod quaeris, moriatur, ipse vero clementius ait: Erit servus meus.

11 In the Lombard Constitutions, however, approved by the Emperor, it is established that a thief be punished the first time with the cudgel, the second time mutilated, and the third time hanged.

> In Lombardicis autem Constitut. ab Imperatore approbatis, statuitur, furem prima vice fustibus puniri, secunda mutilari, et tertia suspendi.

12 The Holy Doctor brings forward, in the Confessionale, cap. 3. particula 54, the decree against the ravishers of churches, but notes that it is not universally in use. They can also sometimes be excommunicated, as St. Bonaventure notes in 4. dist. 18. part. 2. quaest. 3. fundamento 3.

> Affert S. Doctor in Confessionali*, cap. 3. particula 54. decretum contra Ecclesiarum raptores, sed adnotat, non esse universaliter in usu. Possunt etiam aliquando excommunicari, ut notat D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 18. part. 2. quaest. 3. fundamento 3.*

Question XII: On the restitution of thefts

1 I have said much above about Restitution, which is indeed necessary, not indeed by necessity of means, as I said there with St. Bonaventure — for without it one can be saved, if a thief has no means by which to make restitution — but by necessity of precept, as is commonly held with the Seraphic Doctor, who gathers this in the Confessionale, cap. 4. part. 2, and in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1, from St. Augustine epist 54. ad macedon. t 4. quaest. 6, where it is said: If the goods of another, on account of which the sin was committed, can be restored and are not restored, penance is not done but feigned. But if penance is done sincerely, the sin is not forgiven unless what was taken away is restored. The same is taught by Petrus Navarrus, Lib. 1. de restitut. cap. 1, Valentia disp. 5. puncto 2, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2, Sayrus L. 10. Tract. 1. cap. 4. For necessity of precept exists when it can be fulfilled; but necessity of means is absolute, without which salvation cannot be obtained.

> De Restitutione furtorum.
> Multa de Restitutione supra dixi, quae quidem necessaria est, non quidem necessitate medii, ut ibi dixi cum D. Bonavent. quippe sine ea potest salvari, si fur non habeat facultatem, qua restituat; sed necessitate praecepti, ut communiter tenent cum Seraphico, qui hoc colligit in Confessionali*, cap. 4. part. 2. et in* speculo animae*, cap. 1. ex D. Augustino epist 54. ad macedon. t 4. quaest. 6. ubi dicitur:* Si res aliena, propter quam peccatum est, possit reddi, et non redditur, poenitentia non agitur, sed simulatur. Si vero poenitentia veraciter agitur, non dimittitur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. Idem docet Petrus Navarrus, Lib. 1. de restitut. cap. 1. Valentia disp. 5. puncto 2. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. Sayrus L. 10. Tract. 1. cap. 4. Necessitas enim praecepti est, cum impleri potest; At necessitas medii absoluta est, sine qua non potest salus obtineri.

2 You will object that the particle Unless indicates a necessity of means, John 3: Unless a man be born again, etc. And: Unless you do penance, etc.

> Obiicies*, particulam* Nisi indicare necessitatem medii, Ioan. 3. nisi quis renatus fuerit, etc. Et: Nisi poenitentiam egeritis, etc.

3 The Holy Doctor answers, in 4. dist. 12. part. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1, that necessity of means is not always indicated, for in John 6 it is said: Unless you eat the flesh of the Son of man, you shall not have life in you, and yet Communion is not necessary as a means.

> Respondet S. Doctor in 4. dist. 12. part. 2. art. 2. quaest. 1. non semper indicari necessitatem medii, nam Ioan. 6. dicitur: Nisi manducaveritis carnem filii hominis, non habebitis vitam in vobis*, et tamen non est Communio necessaria, ut medium.*

4 I suppose, moreover, that restitution is brought in by the violation of justice alone, as all commonly teach. Doctors, however, labor in assigning the reason why justice alone demands restitution for its own equality.

Suppono autem, restitutionem ex violatione sola iustitiae induci, ut communiter docent omnes. Insudant autem Doctores in assignanda causa, cur sola Iustitia exigat ad suam aequalitatem restitutionem.

[5] Valentia, disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3, as in Sayrus Lib. 10. Tract. 2. cap. 1, gives a certain reason, not the one we seek, but why one man is bound to restitution and another is not; namely, because the one sinned against justice, the other against another virtue, say, of Charity.

Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 6. puncto 3. apud Sayrum Lib. 10. Tract. 2. cap. 1. reddit quamdam rationem, non quam quaerimus, sed cur unus teneatur ad restitutionem; alter non, nempe, quia ille peccavit contra Iustitiam; iste contra aliam virtutem, puta Charitatis.

[6] Navarrus, in man. cap. 17, says that other Doctors have not given the reason of this matter, but that he himself gives a new one, namely that other virtues are not violated by the taking away of some external thing. Which Petrus Navarrus says in other words, L. 2. cap. 1. num. 12. de restit., although he wished to carp at the reasoning of the other Navarrus.

Navarrus in man. cap. 17. ait, alios Doctores non reddidisse huius rei rationem, se autem novam reddere, quia scilicet aliae virtutes non violantur per ablationem alicuius rei externae. Quod aliis verbis dicit Petrus Navar. L. 2. cap. 1. num. 12. de restit. tametsi carpere voluerit rationem alterius Navarrae.

[7] Sylvester, V. restitutio, 3. quaest. 6. §. Tertium, says the reason is that no one is bound to restitution except the one who is the cause of the inequality of goods; but it belongs to justice alone to cause equality. Sayrus subscribes to this reason, Lib. 10. tract. 2. cap. 1. num. 3, namely because it turns on debit and credit.

Sylvester V. restitutio, 3. quaest. 6. §. Tertium; ait, rationem esse, quia ad restitutionem nullus tenetur, nisi qui causa est inaequalitatis rerum; iustitia vero solius est aequalitatem causare. Huic rationi subscribit Sayrus Lib. 10. tract. 2. cap. 1. num. 3. quia scilicet versatur inter datum, et acceptum.

[8] The Seraphic Doctor, best of all, in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 3, says the reason is that justice, among the others, is ordered to another, in rendering all things that are each one's own, and because it is one of the virtues that order to another according to the ratio of debt; Therefore this virtue, which is Justice, brings in restitution.

Seraphicus omnium optime in 3. dist. 33. quaest. 3. ait, eam esse rationem, quia Iustitia inter caeteras ordinatur ad alterum, in reddendis omnibus, quae uniuscuiusque sunt, et quia una est ratio, quae ordinat ad alterum secundum rationem debiti; Ideo virtus haec, quae est Iustitia, inducit restitutionem.

[9] He explained it, moreover, more fully in quaestione 1: that justice is not rectitude of the will as such, but such rectitude as orders to another, having as its object right, or the useful good, which is another's. So that restitution arises from damage inflicted in goods, whether of wealth, or of reputation, or of honor, or of life, as the Seraphic Doctor discusses in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1. We now treat of damage in temporal property.

Explicavit autem id amplius quaestione 1. quia Iustitia non est rectitudo voluntatis, ut sic, sed talis rectitudo, ordinans ad alterum, habens pro obiecto ius, seu utile bonum, quod est alterius. Ita que restitutione oritur ex damnificatione, illata in bonis, seu opum, seu famae, seu honoris, aut vitae, ut disserit Seraphicus in speculo animae, cap. 1. Nunc agimus de damnificatione in re familiari.

10 And indeed in theft a twofold root of the precept of restitution arises, both from iniquitous taking and from iniquitous detention or possession, as the Holy Doctor says there.

> Et quidem in furto oritur duplex radix praecepti restitutionis, tum ex iniqua acceptione; tum ex iniqua detentione, seu possessione, ut ait S. Doctor ibi.

11 And because it is clear that under the name of another's goods not only the thing but also the fruits, which the thing itself by its nature is accustomed to bear, is understood; Therefore here I shall discuss in what manner restitution is to be made on account of the fruits of the stolen thing. On this Fagundez treats at length, Lib. 7. cap. 15. and 16.

> Et quia liquidum est, nomine rei alienae intelligi non modo rem, sed etiam fructus, quos res ipsa natura sua solet parere; Ideo hic discutiam, quo pacto restituendum sit ratione fructuum rei furatae. De hoc late Fagundez Lib. 7. cap. 15. et 16.

12 Stolen things, then, are of a twofold difference; for either they are things which have increase and decrease from within, as a foal, a growing calf, trees, etc.; or they are things which have decrease or increase from without, from the time and place where they are sold, as wheat, wine, oil, cloth, and other similar wares.

> Res igitur furtivae sunt in duplici differentia, aut enim sunt res, quae habent accrementum, et decrementum ab intrinseco, ut pullus equinus, vitulus crescens, arbores, etc. aut sunt, quae habent decrementum, aut incrementum ab extrinseco, a tempore, loco, quo venduntur, ut triticum, vinum, oleum, pannus, et similes aliae merces.

13 In guarding and feeding these, etc., expenses occur: some necessary for feeding the foal, and others useful, which the owner would not have made for improving that thing — say, to feed the foal with grain, that it may grow stronger.

> In his autem tuendis, alendis, etc. occurrunt expensae, aliae necessariae ad alendum pullum, et aliae utiles, quas non erat facturus Dominus in ea re melioranda, puta pascere pullum segete, ut fortior adolescat.

14 Therefore, if the thing still exists, it must be restored to the owner, after deducting the necessary expenses and reasonable useful expenses in the forum of conscience. So Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. de iniur. Fortun. disp. 16. num. 10, Petrus Navarrus Lib. 4. disp. de restit. cap. 1. num. 30. and 32, Covarruvias ad regulam peccatum, part. 2. §. 6, Medina, Cod. de restit. quaest. 6, Sylvester V. expensa, quaest. 4, Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 15.

> Igitur, si res adhuc extet, reddenda est domino, distractis expensis necessariis, et utilibus rationabilibus in foro conscientiae. Ita Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. de iniur. Fortun. disp. 16. num. 10. Petrus Navar. Lib. 4. disp. de restit. cap. 1. num. 30. et 32. Covar. ad regulam peccatum, part. 2. §. 6. Medina, Cod. de restit. quaest. 6. Sylvester V. expensa, quaest. 4. Fagundez lib. 7. cap. 15.

15 In the external, or judicial forum, however, useful expenses are not compensated, nor the thief's industry in improving the thing; for in punishment of the theft, useful expenses are forfeited: Lex, si a Patre, §. fructus, ff. de petit. heredit. et Leg. plane, in fine eodem tit. et Institutio de rerum divisione, §. ex diverso, and the authors cited teach this.

> In foro autem externo, seu iudiciali non recompensantur expensae utiles, nec industria furis in re melioranda; in poenam enim furti privantur expensis utilibus, Lex, si a Patre, §. fructus, ff. de petit. heredit. et Leg. plane, in fine eodem tit. et Institutio de rerum divisione, §. ex diverso*, et docent authores allegati.*

16 But if the thing has already been alienated, with that intrinsic improvement, the thief is bound to restitution to the owner for the whole benefit, the expenses having been deducted, as above. So Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 4. num. 88, Covarruvias reg. Peccatum, §. 6. num. 1. part. 2, Navarrus summa Lux. cap. 17. num. 36, Gabriel dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 3. dub. 1, Angelus V. furtum, quaest. 44, Sylvester V. restit. 1. quaest. 7, Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. de iust. disput. 16. num. 105, Petrus Navarrus Lib. 4. cap. 1. num. 57, Fagundez num. 9, and cap. grauis de restitut. spoliat., and Leg. in restituta, §. de furtis, and L. si nauis, §. si generaliter, ff. de rei vendit. apply.

> Quod si res iam sit alienata, cum illo interno melioramento, tenetur fur domino totius emolumenti ad restitutionem, detractis, ut supra, expensis. Ita Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 32. cap. 4. num. 88. Covar. reg. Peccatum, §. 6. num. 1. part. 2. Nauar. summa Lux. cap. 17. num. 36. Gabriel dist. 15. quaest. 2. art. 3. dub. 1. Angel. V. furtum, quaest. 44. Sylvester V. restit. 1. quaest. 7. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 12. de iust. disput. 16. num. 105. Petrus Nauar. Lib. 4. cap. 1. num. 57. Fagundez num. 9. et facit cap. grauis de restitut. spoliat. et Leg. in restituta, §. de furtis, et L. si nauis, §. si generaliter, ff. de rei vendit.

17 The RATIO is drawn out by St. Bonaventure, in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1, at the end, because during that whole period the thief was under a continuing obligation of restitution: Therefore also for the time when it was in its best state and had a greater price. Yet Diana adds, p. p. Tract. 17. resol. 51, that this is true if the owner was going to sell the thing at the highest price, in its best state; and he says this is the opinion of all the Recent writers.

> RATIO elicitur a D. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 1. in fine, quia pro toto illo statu fur erat in continoa reddendi obligatione: Ergo etiam pro tempore, quo erat in optimo statu, et maius pretium habuit. Tamen addit Diana p. p. Tract. 17. resol. 51. hoc verum esse, si dominus erat venditurus rem in summo pretio, in optimo statu, et dicit esse omnium Recentiorum.

18 I say thirdly. If you have trampled down green crops, you are not bound to restore the whole of what they would have been worth at harvest, but according as they were appraised in hope, the dangers of hail, etc., being computed. So Lessius L. 2. cap. 12. cit. disp. 19. num. 135.

> Dico tertio. Si conculcasti segetes virides, non teneris restituere totum, quod erant valiturae in messe, sed pro ut aestimatae in spe, computatis periculis grandinum, etc. Sic Lessius L. 2. cap. 12. cit. disp. 19. num. 135.

19 I say fourthly. Wheat, wine, and other wares are to be restored at that price at which they were to be sold by the owner, in time and place lucrative. So the Doctors cited. See Fagundez loco cit. Yet if it is unknown when they were to be sold, it suffices to restore the mean price, nor is the highest necessary. So Diana p. p. Tract. 17. resol. 52, or by referring it to a prudent man.

> Dico quarto. Frumentum, vinum, et alias merces restituendas in eo pretio, in quo erant vendendae a Domino, tempore, et loco lucrativis. Ita Doctores allegati. Vide Fagundez loco cit. si tamen ignoratur, quando vendendae essent, sufficit restituere pretium medium, nec necesse est summa. Ita Diana p. p. Tract. 17. resol. 52. vel remittendo viro prudenti.

20 I say fifthly, as to the fruits of things that commonly yield profit, as fields, vineyards, etc.: the thief is bound to restore the lands with the fruits, the expenses deducted. So commonly the Doctors, in Fagundez, cap. 16. num. 6.

> Dico quinto, quoad ad fructus rerum, quae communiter lucrati solent, ut agri, vineae, etc. tenetur fur reddere fundos cum fructibus, detractis expensis. Ita communiter Doctores apud Fagundez, cap. 16. num. 6.

21 It is proved by St. Bonaventure, loco cit., because thieves and possessors in bad faith do not acquire dominion over those things which are not consumed by use.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonavent. loco cit. quia Fures, et malae fidei possessores non acquirunt dominium earum rerum, quae usu non consumuntur.

22 They assert this even if the owner, through his own negligence, would not have gathered those fruits; and then they say that he is bound also to restore the fruits which the owner would have drawn and which the thief, through negligence, did not take. So Lessius dub. 17. num. 115, Fagundez num. 14.

> Hoc asserunt, etiam si dominus sua negligentia eos fructus non esset capturus; et deinde aiunt, teneri etiam restituere fructus, quos Dominus erat hausturus, et quos Fur ex negligentia non accepit. Ita Lessius dub. 17. num. 115. Fagundez num. 14.

23 I say sixthly. If a thief trades with things consumable by use, and gains something, he is bound to restore the things, and the ceasing gain, and the loss accruing to the owner. So St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 78. art. 3, Sotus L. 6. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 4, Covarruvias Lib. 3. variar. resol. cap. 3. num. 6, Panormitanus cap. nauiganti de usuris, num. ultimo, Molina Tom. 2. de Iust. disp. 327, Angelus V. usura 1. num. 15, Sylvester V. usura 6. quaest. 2, Fagundez num. 17. It is clear ex Leg. 1. Cod. si quis alteri, vel sibi, and Leg. penult. eodem titulo.

> Dico sexto, Si Fur negotietur cum rebus, usu consumptibilibus, et aliquid lucretur, tenetur restituere res, et lucrum cessans, et damnum domino emergens. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 78. art. 3. Sotus L. 6. de Iust. quaest. 1. art. 4. Couar. Lib. 3. variar. resol. cap. 3. num. 6. Panorm. cap. nauiganti de usuris, num. ultimo, Molina Tom. 2. de Iust. disp. 327. Angel. V. usura 1. num. 15. Syluest. V. usura 6. quaest. 2. Fagundez num. 17. Patet ex Leg. 1. Cod. si quis alteri, vel sibi, et Leg. penult. eodem titulo.

24 I say seventhly. If a thing perish in the thief's keeping which was not going to perish with the owner, whatever the cause of its perishing, the thief is bound to make restitution. So St. Thomas 1. 2. quaest. 62. art. 6, Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 12. et dub. 15. num. 90.

> Dico septimo. Si res apud furem pereat, quae non erat apud dominum peritura, quacumque de causa pereat, tenetur fur restituere. Ita D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 62. art. 6. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 12. et dub. 15. num. 90.

25 The RATIO from St. Bonaventure is: because the thief was at fault for delay, detaining that thing. But if the thing was certainly going to perish even with the owner, he is not bound to restore it. So St. Thomas loco cit., and commonly others, in Fagundez, cap. 17.

> RATIO ex D. Bonav. est; quia fur fuit in culpa morae, detinendo rem illam. Quod si res erat certo peritura, etiam apud Dominum, non tenetur restituere. Ita D. Thom. loco cit. et communiter alii apud Fagundez, cap. 17.

Disputation XXVIII: On the Judge

1 This Disputation is entangled with various difficulties; for the ingenuity of men, resourceful in their own defense, has devised various ways by which justice, if it does not favor them, may at least not harm them. The chief interpreter and minister of this is the Judge; of whose judgments the justice and injustice the Angelic Doctor treats, in quaestione 67 and the following. There are also other persons intervening in judgments, as the Accuser, the Defendant, the Witness, and the Advocate, each of whom requires a separate disputation; briefly, however, I shall dispatch myself with these, since not long ago our Father Elizeus ab Oriano wrote most eruditively an entire treatise on this matter ex professo, to whom I refer students of criminal causes and forensic practice as most worthily to be read.

> De IUDICE.
> DISPUTATIO haec variis involuta est difficultatibus hominum etenim solertia, in propriam defensionem ingeniosa, varios excogitavit modos, quibus iustitia si non faveat, saltem non noceat. Huius praecipuus interpres, et minister est Iudex, de cuius Iudiciorum Iustitia, et iniustitia agit Doctor Angelicus quaestione 67. et sequentibus. Sunt et aliae personae ad iudicia intervenientes, ut Accusator, Reus, Testis, et Advocatus, quorum quisque singularem disputationem exigit; succincte tamen ab his me expediam, cum ex professo eruditissime integrum tractatum hac de re non ita pridem scripserit P. Elizaeus noster ab Oriano, quem rerum criminalium, et praxis forensis studiosis apprime legendum remitto.

Question I: Whether power is necessary in a judge

1 A JUDGE is one who declares the Law, and for his part many things are required, among which Authority holds the chief place.

> An sit necessaria in IUDICE potestas.
> IUDEX est, qui Ius dicit, e cuius parte plura requiruntur, inter quae principem locum tenet Authoritas.

2 It is MOST CERTAIN, by the consensus of all, that it is necessary for a Judge to have power to judge.

> CERTISSIMUM autem est omnium consensu, necessarium esse, Iudicem habere potestatem ad iudicandum.

3 THIS the S. Doctor proves in many ways everywhere; first, in the Confessionale, cap. 1. particula 5. et 6. and Deuter. 16., where the formula for instituting Judges is given, to whom power is also given. He has these things more clearly at Sap. 6. and part. 2. Ecclesiasticae Hierarchiae.

> ID probat multis modis passim S. Doctor, primo, in Confessionali, cap. 1. particula 5. et 6. et Deuter. 16. ubi datur formula instituendi Iudices, quibus etiam datur potestas. Clarius haec habet ad Sap. 6. et part. 2. Ecclesiasticae Hierarchiae.

4 The S. Doctor often shows the same thing by that passage Rom. 13. Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, that is, to those who are set over us on high, as he explains in 2. dist. 44. quaest. penult. and part. 2. de Eccles. Hierarchia, cap. 3.

> ID ipsum saepe ostendit S. Doctor, illo Rom. 13. Omnis anima potestatibus sublimioribus subdita sit*, id-est, illis, qui nobis in sublimi praefecti sunt, ut explicat* in 2. dist. 44. quaest. penult. et part. 2. de Eccles. Hierarchia, cap. 3.

5 MORE BROADLY the S. Doctor shows this on 6. Sapientiae, on those words: Hear therefore, ye kings, and understand: learn, ye that are judges of the ends of the earth: because power is given you by the Lord, and strength by the most High, who will examine your works: because, being ministers of his kingdom, you have not judged rightly. The same in the chapter At si Clerici, it is said: a sentence pronounced by one who is not its Judge does not bind. And in the chapter Ut animarum, de constit. in 6. it is said: Outside his territory, obedience is not owed to one declaring law with impunity, and S. Gregory, lib. 11 of the Register, as is reported in the chapter Scriptum est 6. quaest. 3.: It is written in the Law, Deuter. 23.: When passing through another's field, you shall not send in a sickle; for you cannot, nor ought you, to send the sickle of judgment into that harvest which is seen to be committed to another. By these means S. Bonaventure proves it in the Confessionale, cap. 4. part. 1. and in 4 dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1.

> LATIUS id ostendit S. Doctor ad 6. Sapientiae*, ad ea verba:* Audite ergo Reges, discite iudices finium terrae: quoniam data est vobis a Domino potestas, et virtus ab Altissimo, qui interrogabit opera vestra: quoniam, cum essetis ministri regni illius, non recte iudicastis. Idem in cap. At si Clerici, dicitur: sententia, a non suo Iudice lata non tenet. Et c. Ut animarum, de constit. in 6. dicitur: Extra territorium ius dicenti, non paretur impune, et S. Gregorius lib. 11. registri, ut refert cap. Scriptum est 6. quaest. 3. Scriptum est in Lege, Deuter. 23. Per alienam messem transiens, falcem mittere non debes, falcem enim iudicii mittere non potes, nec debes in eam segetem, quae alteri videtur commissa. Quibus mediis id probat S. Bonavent. in Confessionali, cap. 4. part. 1. et in 4 dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1.

6 The reason is taken from D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. quaest. 2. and in the Confessionale, loco cit., because to judge is to bind and to compel according to the laws unto sentence; but no one can bind anyone and compel him to the observance of the law unless he have coercive power. Therefore Callixtus the Pope says, 9. quaest. 2. cap. 1, as quoted by D. Bonaventure, loco cit.: Such judgment has no force, for the sentence of no other judge will bind but his own. Therefore the Pontiff is able to judge all (the S. Doctor says in 4. loco cit.), because there is given to him coercive power of binding and loosing, Matth. 16. By the same argument D. Thomas and the other Theologians after them make use; and most recently our Eliseus rests upon this single reason, tract. 4. quaest. 1. num. 4., where he infers that a Judge has only as much of coercive power as he decreed of Jurisdiction; which he understands of the ordinary Judge only.

> Ratio sumitur ex D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. quaest. 2. et in Confessionali, loco cit. quia Iudicare est ligare, et cogere secundum leges ad sententiam; nemo autem potest alligare aliquem, et cogere ad legis observantiam, nisi habeat vim coactivam. Ideo ait Callixtus Papa 9. quaest. 2. cap. 1. apud D. Bonavent. loco cit. Talis iudicatio nullas habet vires, quoniam nullius alterius iudicis, nisi sua sententia tenebit. Ideo Pontifex valet omnes iudicare, (ait S. Doctor in 4. loco cit.) quia data est ei potestas coactiva ligandi, et solvendi Matth. 16. Eodem argumento utitur D. Thom. et caeteri Theologi post eos; et nuperrime hac unica ratione nititur Elizaeus noster tract. 4. quaest. 1. num. 4. ubi infert, Iudicem tantum habere de potestate coactiva, quantum de Iurisdictione decrevit; quod intelligit de Iudice ordinario, tantum.

7 It is PROVED secondly by D. Bonaventure, 4. dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1., by many Arguments from can. 16. quaest. 1. and 9. quaest. 2. and from the General Canon, extra de poenitent. et remiss.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonavent. 4. dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1. multis Argumentis ex can. 16. quaest. 1. et 9. quaest. 2. et ex Can. Generali, extra de poenitent. et remiss.

8 Then, because the order of the Church is that one have one immediate or ordained superior. Therefore one cannot have two Bishops, two Patriarchs, etc.; for the Church is as an army well ordered.

> DEINDE, quia ordo Ecclesiae est, ut quis unum habeat superiorem immediatum, vel ordinatum. Itaque non potest habere duos Episcopos, duos Patriarchas, etc. est enim Ecclesia, ut acies bene ordinata.

9 THIRDLY, because it would follow that the true superior could have commanded this, and the false one command the contrary.

> TERTIO, quia sequeretur, quod posset verus superior praecepisse hoc, et falsus praecipere contrarium.

10 IT MUST BE OBSERVED, however, with D. Bonaventure in the places alleged, and D. Thomas here, whom follow Valencia disput. 5. quaest. 11. puncto 1. with Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 1. not. 1., Soto L. 5. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 1., Bassaeo V. Iudex, num. 2., Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 6., Tolet. lib. 5. cap. 56., Bonac. tract. 1. disput. 20. quaest. 2. punct. 1., Sayro lib. 12. cap. 7. num. 3., Tannero disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 1. num. 24. and others, that competent power is fourfold.

> OBSERVANDUM autem cum D. Bonavent. locis allegatis*, D. Thom.* hic*, quos imitantur Valentia* disput. 5. quaest. 11. puncto 1. cum Gabriele in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 1. not. 1. Soto L. 5. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 1. Bassaeo V. Iudex, num. 2. Lessio lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 6. Tolet. lib. 5. cap. 56. Bonac. tract. 1. disput. 20. quaest. 2. punct. 1. Sayro lib. 12. cap. 7. num. 3. Tannero disp. 4. quaest. 1. dub. 1. num. 24. et aliis, potestatem competentem esse quadruplicem.

11 THE FIRST is ordinary power, whether it be Ecclesiastical or secular, and it is that which belongs to someone by reason of dignity or office, and it sometimes happens by Birth, sometimes by Conferral, as P. Eliseus has it, loco cit. num. 7. Thus the Pope has ordinary spiritual power over all the faithful, and a Bishop over those subject to him.

> PRIMA est potestas ordinaria, sive sit Ecclesiastica, sive saecularis, et est illa, quae alicui ex dignitate vel officio convenit, et aliquando contingit ex Nativitate, aliquando ex Datione, ut habet P. Elizaeus loco cit. num. 7. Sic Papa habet ordinariam potestatem spiritualem super omnes fideles, et Episcopus in sibi subditos.

12 THE SECOND is delegated power, and it is that which belongs to someone by commission or delegation from some superior judge. Such is the power of a Praetor sent by the King.

> SECUNDA est potestas delegata, et est ea, quae competit alicui ex commissione seu delegatione alicuius iudicis superioris. Talis est potestas Praetoris, missi a Rege.

13 But he who obtains Jurisdiction by Delegation, if it be universally for many causes, can subdelegate for one cause or another, or even for several which are reckoned as one particular cause, unless it be otherwise expressed in the Delegatory letters, or unless the person was chosen for singular industry, with a clause, Commissi, denoting that very thing; but if he be sent for the decision of one cause, and because of the industry required in that matter, very many deny that he can subdelegate; for the whole cause, but not for some particular part of the cause, as for the examination of some witness. So Eliseus, ubi supra num. 20., where he adds that the delegation lasts until it be revoked, or at least expire with the death of the delegator, the cause remaining intact; otherwise if it have been juridically begun in one act or another. So also Dictus, quoted by him, quaest. 2.

> Qui autem ex Delegatione obtinet Iurisdictionem, si sit ad plures causas universaliter, potest subdelegare ad unam, vel alteram causam, vel etiam ad plures, quae pro una particulari reputantur, nisi aliter in patentibus Delegatoriis sit expressum, vel nisi persona sit ob singularem industriam electa, cum particula, Commissi*, id ipsum denotante; Si vero sit Missus ad unius causae decisionem, et ob industriam requisitam in ea re, negant plurimi eum posse subdelegare; ad* totam causam, secus ad aliquam causae particulam, ut ad testis alicuius examen. Ita Elizaeus ubi supra num. 20. ubi addit delegationem durare donec revocetur, vel delegantis saltem morte expiret, causa manente integra; secus si iuridice sit inchoata in uno, vel altero actu. Ita etiam Dictus apud ipsum quaest. 2.

14 THE THIRD is arbitrary power, which is had by the election and deputation of the litigating parties. Here, however, there is a twofold kind: one elected to settle a dispute amicably; and this one is not bound to judge observing the order of law, but by his own judgment, the equity of natural law being preserved. The other, who is elected, that he may judge according to law. And indeed these judges receive power from the parties; and they can pronounce a sentence firm by the law of nations and unappealable, from which, if either party protests, he sins mortally, and can be compelled by the Prince, as Soto notes, Lib. 3. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 6. et L. 5. quaest. 4. art. 1., Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 8. num. 4. and others commonly.

TERTIA est potestas arbitraria, quae habetur ex electione, et deputatione partium litigantium. Hic autem est duplex; alter electus ad litem amicabiliter dirimendam; et hic non tenetur iudicare, servato iuris ordine; sed pro arbitrio suo, servata aequitate iuris naturalis. Alter, qui eligitur, ut iudicet secundum ius. Et sane isti iudices accipiunt potestatem a partibus; et ferre possunt sententiam iure gentium firmatam inappellabilem, a qua si alter reclamet, mortaliter peccat, et potest a Principe cogi, ut advertunt Soto Lib. 3. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 6. et L. 5. quaest. 4. art. 1. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 8. num. 4. et alii communiter.

15 This kind of power is indicated in the chapter Placuit, quoted by D. Bonaventure loco cit., where it is said that he who has once elected another as his Pastor is bound to be subject to him; which Canon also includes the fourth kind of power, which is called by accessory right, such as that which a Judge or Prince has by reason of a crime, or by reason of a person then dwelling in his territory; for individual superiors have, and judges have, their own territories and boundaries within which they can pronounce judgment concerning all coming from such a place; but outside those places it is not permitted them to judge, which the S. Doctor proves in the Confessionale, in the place adduced, from the chapter Ut animarum, de constitut. in 6., where it is said: Outside the territory of those who declare law, obedience is not owed with impunity; and dist. 9. quaest. 2.: Let no one presume to judge the parishioner of another; and de poenit. dist. 6. cap. fin., where Urban II says: Whoever shall attempt to act against these statutes shall lie open to the peril of his rank. And the S. Doctor adds, that it avails nothing to say that the contrary is done all day long, because those who transgress these Canons sin most gravely.

Hoc genus potestatis indicatur in cap. Placuit, apud D. Bonavent. loco cit. ubi dicitur, teneri eum, qui semel elegit alium in suum Pastorem, ei subdi, qui Canon includit etiam quartum genus potestatis, quae dicitur iure Accessoria*, qualis est, quam habet Iudex, seu Princeps ratione delicti, vel ratione personae degentis pro tunc in suo territorio; Habent enim singuli superiores, habentque iudices propria territoria, et terminos, in quibus possunt iudicium de omnibus tali loco accedentibus ferre; extra illa vero loca non licet eis iudicare, quod probat S. Doctor* in Confessionali, loco adducto, ex cap. Ut animarum, de constitut. in 6. ubi dicitur: Extra territorium iusdicentium paretur impune, et dist. 9. quaest. 2. Nullus Parochianum alterius iudicare praesumat, et de poenit. dist. 6. cap. fin. dicit Urbanus II. Qui contra haec statuta facere tentaverit, gradus sui periculo subiacebit. Et addit S. Doctor, non valere dicere, tota die contrarium fieri, quia, qui hos Canones transgrediuntur, gravissime peccant.

16 He is held by this statute by reason of a committed debt in another's territory, cap. 1. de Raptoribus, et Leg. Alterius, ff. de Accusationibus.

Hoc statutum ex debito commisso in alterius territorio habetur, cap. 1. de Raptoribus, et Leg. Alterius, ff. de Accusationibus.

17 So also can one be summoned by reason of domicile in that place, cap. final. de foro compet., on which matter the Gloss treats in summa 3. quaest. 6.

Sic etiam conveniri quis potest ratione domicilii in eo loco, cap. final. de foro compet. de qua re agit Glossa in summa 3. quaest. 6.

18 SIMILAR is the case which is the fifth mode of jurisdiction, by reason of an injury inflicted upon the subject of another Prince. For if the superior of the injurer be unwilling to punish the guilty party, the injured Prince will be able to afflict him with penalties, as Lessius teaches, Lib. 2. cap. 29. de Iudice, dub. 6., Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 155., Fagundez L. 8. num. 12. on the eighth Precept, after D. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1. corpore.

SIMILIS est casus, qui est quintus modus iurisdictionis, ratione iniuriae illatae subdito alterius Principis. Si enim superior iniuriantis nolit punire reum, poterit Princeps iniuriati illum poenis afficere, ut docent Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 29. de Iudice, dub. 6. Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 155. Fagundez L. 8. num. 12. in octavum Praeceptum, post D. Bonav. in 4. dist. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1. corpore.

19 From these we have that secular Judges cannot judge Ecclesiastical persons or things, as is had in dist. 19. and in the Decretals, Tit. de immunitate Ecclesiae, and the chapter saeculares, de foro compet. in 6. and from the Council of Constantinople sess. 8. and the Council of Trent sess. 25. de reform. cap. 20., where the Sacred Canons and all the general Councils are renewed, and the Apostolic sanctions in favor of Ecclesiastical persons and the liberty of the Church. And in law, to which the Authentica belongs: That clerics be summoned before their own judges, collat. 6.

Ex his habemus, Iudices saeculares non posse iudicare personas, vel res Ecclesiasticas, ut habetur dist. 19. et in Decretal. Tit. de immunitate Ecclesiae, et cap. saeculares, de foro compet. in 6. et ex Concilio Constant. sess. 8. et Concilio Trident. sess. 25. de reform. cap. 20. ubi renovantur Sacri Canones, et Concilia omnia generalia. Et Apostolicae sanctiones in favorem personarum Ecclesiasticarum, et libertatis Ecclesiae. Et in iure, cui Authentica. Ut clerici proprios iudices conveniant, collat. 6.

20 All these things the S. Doctor touches in 2. dist. 25. part. 1. dub. 1., while he says that judgment implies an act of reason regulated according to the rules of truth, that is, of the supernal law. Whence he is called Judge whose it is to judge a cause according to the laws. But he is called Arbiter who has to terminate a cause at the mere nod of his own will.

Haec omnia tangit S. Doctor in 2. dyst. 25. part. 1. dub. 1. dum ait, Iudicium importare actum rationis regulatum secundum regulas veritatis, sive supernae legis. Unde ille dicitur Iudex, cuius est secundum leges iudicare causam. Ille vero dicitur Arbiter, qui ad proprium voluntatis nutum causam terminare habet.

21 The laws, however, do not permit a secular [judge] to judge Ecclesiastics. Of which Constantine the Great exhibited a famous example: since, as Ruffinus narrates, L. 10. hist. cap. 2., when he had received at the Council of Nicaea many libelli from some Bishops against other Bishops, that he might proceed against them, the most pious Emperor committed all those libelli, sealed, to the fire, saying: God has constituted you Priests, and has given you power of judging even over us, and therefore we are rightly judged by you, but you cannot be judged by men (namely by laymen).

Non concedunt autem leges saeculari, iudicare Ecclesiasticos. De quo praeclarum exhibuit exemplar Constantinus Magnus, qui, ut narrat Ruffinus L. 10. hist. cap. 2. cum in Nicaeno Concilio multos ab Episcopis nonnullis libellos accepisset, ut contra alios Episcopos procederet, piissimus Imperator omnes illos libellos clausos igni tradidit, dicens: Deus constituit vos Sacerdotes, et potestatem dedit de nobis quoque iudicandi, et ideo nos a vobis recte iudicamur, vos autem ab hominibus (scilicet laicis) iudicari non potestis.

22 Indeed, it is repugnant to divine law that Ecclesiastics, or even seculars in spiritual matters, be subjected to the princes of the world: for He constituted the Apostles alone, and their successors, but not Princes or Kings, as the governors of the Church, the masters of the faith, and the judges of spiritual causes, as S. Bonaventure loved to say in the places cited, and in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. art. 1. quaest. 1.

Imo vero iuri divino repugnat, Ecclesiasticos, aut etiam saeculares in rebus spiritualibus subiici principibus saeculi: Solos enim Apostolos, et eorum successores, non autem Principes, aut Reges constituit gubernatores Ecclesiae, magistros fidei, et causarum spiritualium iudices, ut dilesit S. Bonavent. locis citatis, et in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. art. 1. quaest. 1.

23 FOR since in the Church militant there are two swords, the chapter Dilecto, de sent. excom. in 6., which signify the twofold power, Ecclesiastical and secular, the chapter solitae de maior. et obed. and the chapter ad verum, dist. 99., these two powers are so distinct from each other that the one ought not usurp the jurisdiction of the other; that is, neither ought the Church to vindicate to itself secular authority in temporal matters which in no way pertain to the good government of the Church and the salvation of souls, nor on the other hand ought secular power to judge of spiritual matters, or of Ecclesiastical persons, except in the cases permitted to it.

CUM enim in Ecclesia militante duo sint gladii, cap. Dilecto, de sent. excom. in 6. qui duplicem potestatem Ecclesiasticam, et saecularem significant, cap. solitae de maior. et obed. et cap. ad verum, dist. 99. hae duae potestates ita inter se distinctae sunt, ut una alterius iurisdictionem usurpare non debeat; hoc est, neque Ecclesia authoritatem saecularem sibi debet vindicare in rebus temporalibus, quae aliquo modo non pertinent ad bonum regimen Ecclesiae, et salutem animarum, nec e contra, saecularis potestas de rebus spiritualibus, aut personas Ecclesiasticas, debet iudicare, nisi in casibus sibi permissis.

24 ALTHOUGH, however, as Bernard says in his book De consideratione, it [the Church] has also the temporal sword — which he proves by that passage of Luke 22: Behold, here are two swords, and the Lord says: it is enough — yet the spiritual sword is to be drawn by the hand of the Church, because it is directly in her hand; the temporal truly only indirectly, as S. Bonaventure teaches in 4. dist. 37. dub. 4. on the text, and as S. Thomas also has it, Lib. 1 de Regimine Principum cap. 14. and Lib. 3. cap. 13. and 15., Bellarmine Lib. 5 de potestate Pontificis, Panormitanus on the chapter Novit. num. 21. and seq. de Iudiciis. It [the Church] has also power over mixed cases, as in causes of usury, sacrilege, oath, and marriage, arg. the chapter cum sit, and the Gloss, ubi V. Malefactores, de foro compet. But the secular [power] has the temporal sword directly. Whence D. Bernard, Lib. 4 de consideratione, to Eugenius, quoted by D. Bonaventure, on those words, Luke 22: Behold, two swords, says: If the material sword in no way pertained to you, when the Apostles said, behold, here are two swords, the Lord would not have answered: it is enough; but: too much. Both therefore are the Church's, both the spiritual and the material. But this one indeed is for the Church, and that one is to be drawn by the Church; the one by the hand of the priest, the other by the hand of the soldier, yet truly at the nod of the priest and the command of the Emperor.

QUAMVIS autem, ut ait Bernardus de consideratione, habeat etiam gladium temporalem quod probat illo Lucae 22. Ecce duo gladii hic, et Dominus ait: satis est; tamen gladius spiritualis est extrahendus manu Ecclesiae, quia directe est in manu eius; temporalis vero solum indirecte, ut docet S. Bonav. in 4. dist. 37. dub. 4. litterae, et ut habet etiam S. Thom. Lib. primo de Regim. Princip. cap. 14. et Lib. 3. cap. 13. et 15. Bellarm. Lib. 5. de potestate Pontificis. Panormit. in cap. Novit. num. 21. et seq. de Iudiciis. Habet etiam potestatem in casus mixtos, ut in causis usurae, sacrilegii, iuramenti, et matrimonii arg. cap. cum sit, et Gloss. ubi V. Malefactores, de foro compet. Gladium vero temporalem directe habet saecularis. Unde D. Bernardus Lib. 4. de consider. ad Eugenium apud D. Bonavent. ad ea verba, Lucae 22. Ecce duo gladii, ait: Si nullo modo ad te pertineret gladius materialis, dicentibus Apostolis, ecce duo gladii hic, non respondisset Dominus: satis est; sed: nimis est. Uterque ergo est Ecclesiae, et spiritualis, et materialis. Sed hic quidem pro Ecclesia; ille vero ab Ecclesia est extrahendus; ille sacerdotis, is militis manu, sed sane ad nutum sacerdotis, et iussum Imperatoris.

25 Yet in three cases he admonishes that a secular Judge can judge a Cleric, Tanner, disp. 4. q. 4. n. 29.

In tribus tamen casibus, posse Iudicem saecularem iudicare Clericum admonet, Tanner. disp. 4. q. 4. n. 29.

26 THE FIRST is, if a degraded cleric be handed over to the secular arm. The second, by the consent of the Bishop in a merely civil cause. The third, probably, by the title of reconvention, so that if a cleric cited a layman before a secular judge, he himself in turn can be reconvened, yet not criminally, as Carbo teaches, quaest. 51. de restitut., Lessius cap. 19. dub. 6., Tanner loco cit. And if the opposite, with Panormitanus, I praise it the more.

PRIMA est, si clericus degradatus tradatur brachio saeculari. Secunda, ex Episcopi consensu in causa sola ciuili. Tertia probabiliter titulo reconuentionis, ita ut si clericus Laicum citauit coram iudice saeculari, possit ipse vicissim reconueniri, non tamen criminaliter, ut docent Carbo quaest. 51. de restit. Lessius cap. 19. dub. 6. Tanner. loco cit. Et si oppositum cum Panormit. magis laudo.

27 But conversely widows and wards can drag their guilty parties to the Ecclesiastical Judge, as Couarruvias teaches, in epit. 4. part. 2. §. 12, on the word Iudiciales; Tanner num. 31.; Salon quaest. 60. art. 4.; Clarus in his Praxis, quaest. 30., according to the chapter Inter alia, de Immun. eccles. and other Canons 17. quaest. 4.

POSSUNT vero e contra viduae, et pupilli, trahere suos reos ad Iudicem Ecclesiasticum, ut docent Couar. in epit. 4. part. 2. §. 12. Sh verb. Iudiciales. Tanner. num. 31. Salon. quaest. 60. art. 4. Clarus praxi quaest. 30. iuxta cap. Inter alia, de Immun. eccles. et alios Canones 17. quaest. 4.

28 From what has been said I bring forward that one who judges without any of the said powers sins mortally. So D. Bonaventure above; Azor, 3. part. lib. 23. cap. 15.; Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 6. num. 51.; Bonacina tract. 1. disp. 10. quaest. 2. punct. 1.; our Bassaeus V. Iudex 5.

Ex dictis affero peccare lethaliter Iudicantem sine aliqua e dictis potestatibus. Ita D. Bonavent. supra, Azor 3. part. lib. 23. cap. 15. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 6. num. 51. Bonacina tract. 1. disp. 10. quaest. 2. punct. 1. Bassaeus noster V. Iudex 5.

29 It is PROVED, because he inflicts injury both on the parties, by unjustly subjecting them to himself, and on the superior, by usurping his authority.

PROBATUR, quia infert iniuriam tum partibus, eas sibi iniuste subiiciendo: tum superiori, eius authoritatem usurpando.

30 HERE he is bound to restore whatever damage emerges from judgments [given] against justice.

HIC tenetur restituere quidquid damni emergat Iudicatis contra iustitiam.

31 NOTE, however, that if the Judge of the damaging party does not do justice, this one can be judged by the judge of the injured party proportionally: if a secular, by a secular; if an Ecclesiastic, by a similar one.

NOTA vero si Iudex rei damnificantis non faciat iustitiam, posse hunc iudicari a iudice damnificati proportionaliter; Si Saecularis a saeculare; si Ecclesiasticus a simili.

Question II: Whether a judge ought to follow the truth, and therefore be wise

1 In the Treatise on Justice disput. 20. quaest. 7. I showed that Judges ought to be jurists and learned men. I showed the same in several places in this treatise disput. 1.; wherefore P. Eliseus says that they sin from a threefold defect, tract. 1. quaest. 11. num. 17., namely from a defect of rectitude, of power, and of prudence.

An IUDEX sequi debeat veritatem, et ideo esse sapiens.

TRACTATU de Iustitia disput. 20. quaest. 7. ostendi, Iudices esse debere iuris consultos, et homines eruditos. Eadem pluribus ostendi in hoc tractatu disput. 1. quare ex triplici defectu eos peccare ait P. Elizaeus tract. 1. quaest. 11. num. 17. e defectu scilicet rectitudinis, potestatis, et prudentiae.

2 For they ought to conduct the causes of fortunes and of the lives of men prudently, not rashly, which the S. Doctor proves of judges even of conscience in the Confessionale, cap. 1. particula 5., by that passage Deuter. 17: If thou perceive that there be among you a hard and doubtful matter in judgment, etc., thou shalt come to the priests of the Levitical race, and to the judge who shall be in those days: and thou shalt ask of them, who shall judge for thee, the truth of the judgment. This authority Sayrus urges, lib. 12. cap. 8.

DEBENT enim causas facultatum, et vitarum hominum agere prudenter, non temere, quod de iudicibus etiam conscientiae probat S. Doctor in Confessionali, cap. 1. particula 5. illo Deuter. 17. Si difficile, et ambiguum apud te iudicium esse prospexeris, etc. Venies ad sacerdotes Leuitici generis, et ad Iudicem, qui fuerit illo tempore: quaeresque ab eis, qui iudicabunt tibi, iudicii veritatem. Quam authoritatem urget Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 8.

3 Now there is a twofold truth: one of the thing, another of conscience. And indeed Conscience is as it is thought to be; the truth of the thing is as it stands on the side of the thing itself. And that the truth may be obtained, and conscience be right, the Judge ought to be learned in Jurisprudence; for he ought to pronounce sentence according to the dispositions of the common law, arg. cap. 1. de sent. et re iudic. in 6. He ought to be learned in the municipal laws, which often detract from the common law.

EST autem duplex veritas. Alia rei: Alia conscientiae. Et quidem Conscientia est sicuti existimatur: Veritas rei est, ut se habet a parte rei. Et ut veritas obtineatur, et conscientia sit recta, debet esse Iudex eruditus in Iurisprudentia, debet enim secundum dispositiones iuris communis ferre sententias arg. cap. 1. de sent. et re iudic. in 6. Debet esse eruditus in Iuribus municipalibus, quae saepe iuri communi detrahunt.

4 But if the cause to be decided is not had expressly in the laws, he ought to weigh probable opinions and conduct himself as I said in prima 2. tract. 2. disput. 17. Thus acting he will be safe even from the Sindicatus, Felinus cap. 1. de constitut. num. 54., Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 9. Otherwise, if ignorant, he is in an evil state, nor can he be absolved unless he resign, Reginaldus lib. 25. num. 657., Nauar. lib. 2. cap. 25. num. 12. For rightly does D. August. lib. 9. de civit. cap. 6. say: The ignorance of the judge often becomes the calamity of the innocent. Therefore he is bound to restore the damages of the injured party, the expenses, etc.

> SI autem causa decernenda non habeatur expresse in iuribus, debet probabiles opiniones pensare, et se gerere ut dixi prima 2. tract. 2. disput. 17. Sic agens in tuto erit etiam a Sindicatu, Felinus cap. 1. de constitut. num. 54. Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 9. Alioqui si ignorans, est in malo statu, nec potest absolui, nisi renunciet, Reginaldus lib. 25. num. 657. Nauar. lib. 2. cap. 25. num. 12. Recte enim D. August. lib. 9. de ciuit. cap. 6. ait: Ignorantiam iudicis, saepe fieri calamitatem innocentis. Ideo tenetur restituere damna partis laesae, expensas, etc.

5 He requires not exquisite, but competent knowledge, arg. the chapter cum nobis olim, de elect. It is indeed conceded that he may take an Assessor because of a defect of knowledge, at the expense of both parties, the chapter statutum, §. Assessorem de rescript. in 6. If he has erred, he is bound to admonish the injured party, that he provide for himself, as the Doctors say in the chapter Praeterea, de test. cogendis. So Caietan. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4., Lugo de just. disp. 37. sect. 1., Bassaeus V. Iud. 11.

> NON exquisitam, sed competentem exegit scientiam arg. cap. cum nobis olim, de elect. Conceditur vero assumere ex defectu scientiae Assessorem cum utriusque partis expensis, cap. statutum, §. Assessorem de rescript. in 6. Si errauerit, tenetur admonere laesum, ut sibi prouideat, ut aiunt DD. in cap. Praeterea, de test. cogendis. Ita Caietan. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4. Lugo de iust. disp. 37. sect. 1. Bassaeus V. Iud. 11.

6 It is DISPUTED here: whether one who knows someone to be innocent can condemn him, if he be guilty on the evidence alleged. On this I treated in quaest. 12. of the preceding disp.

> DISPUTANT hic: an sciens aliquem esse innocentem possit damnare, si ex allegatis sit reus. De hoc egi quaest. 12. disp. praeced.

7 They have also discussed whether he is bound to judge according to the words of the law; or rather to use Epieikeia. And indeed, as regards the natural laws which are comprehended in the Decalogue, it is not permitted, because they are indispensable, as I showed in the Tract. de Legibus, disp. 3. quaest. 7. The reason is, because the just in these laws arises from the very nature of things.

> DISSERUNT etiam, an teneatur iudicare iuxta legis verba; num vero uti Epikeia. Et quidem quo ad leges naturales, quae clauduntur Decalogo, non licet, quia indispensables sunt, ut ostendi Tract. de Legibus, disp. 3. quaest. 7. Ratio est, quia iustum in his legibus ex ipsa rerum natura oritur.

8 AS regards other positive [laws], the Judge is bound to judge according to the laws of superiors, because the Judge does not judge the law, but the matter according to the law, as is commonly said by all with D. Bonaventure in 1, dist. 3. part. 1. art. 1. quaest. 1. ad 4, and D. Augustine de vera relig. cap. 31., whom follow D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5., Salon. and Aragon. there, Sotus de Iust. Lib. 3. quaest. 4. art. 5., Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto 2., Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 9. num. 3. The reason of D. Bonaventure, upon which all rest, is, because to judge something, so as to approve or reprove it, denotes a pre-authority over it: but a Judge of this kind is subject to those laws which superiors have enacted: whence against a Judge nullity can be opposed if he has omitted these laws, Canons, or statutes in judging. So P. Eliseus tract. 2. quaest. 4. num. 16.

> QUOAD alias positiuas, tenetur Iudex secundum leges superiorum iudicare, quia Iudex non iudicat legem, sed res secundum legem, ut dicitur communiter ab omnibus cum D. Bonavent. in primo, dist. 3. part. 1. art. 1. quaest. 1. ad 4 et D. Augustino de vera relig. cap. 31. quos sequuntur D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5. Salon. et Aragon. ibidem, Sotus de Iust. Lib. 3. quaest. 4. art. 5. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 4. puncto. 2. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 9. num. 3. Ratio D. Bonaventurae, qua omnes nituntur, est, quia iudicare aliquid ad approbandum, vel reprobandum, dicit praeauctoritatem super illud: At Iudex huiusmodi est subditus illis legibus, quas superiores condiderunt: unde contra Iudicem potest de nullitate opponi, si has leges, Canones, vel statuta inter Iudicandum omiserit. Ita P. Elizzus tract. 2. quaest. 4. num. 16.

9 AS regards laws enacted by himself, enough has been done in the Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 14., where I showed that the Legislator cannot dispense in his own laws without a cause; for although before he was free to enact those Laws, nevertheless after they have been published for the common good, he is bound to keep them unimpaired.

QUOAD leges vero a se conditas, satis actum est, Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 14. ubi ostendi, non posse Legislatorem sine causa in suis legibus dispensare; quamvis enim ante liber esset ad eas Leges ferendas, tamen postquam ob commune bonum publicatae sunt, tenetur eas conservare illibatas.

10 INDEED, if, the words of the law being preserved, there would follow by reason of place, person, etc. some injustice, then they ought to judge according to Epieikeia. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5. ad 2., Salon. and Aragon. there, Sotus L. 3. quaest. 4. art. 3., Sayrus num. 4., and others.

ENIM vero, si verbis legis servatis, sequeretur ratione loci, personae, etc. aliqua iniustitia, tunc secundum Epikeiam iudicare debent. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 5. ad 2. Salon. et Aragon. ibi, Sotus L. 3. quaest. 4. art. 3. Sayrus num. 4. et alii.

11 The REASON is, because Law is the rule and the explication of the just; but the judge is the guardian of Justice. It is confirmed, because a law, if it is unjust by reason of some circumstance, is no longer a law, nor a rule able to direct our actions, but a corruption, as D. Th. says most excellently in prima secundae, quaest. 96. art. 4., just as a clock, which does not agree with the motion of the Sun, is not a clock, but a disturbance of the hours.

RATIO est, quia Lex est regula, et explicatio iusti; iudex autem Iustitiae custos est. Confirmatur, quia lex, si ex aliqua circumstantia iniqua sit, non est amplius lex; neque regula, quae actiones nostras dirigere valeat, sed corruptela, ut optime ait D. Th. prima secundae, quaest. 96. art. 4. sicut Horologium, quod cum motu Solis non consentit, non est horologium, sed horarum perturbatio.

12 From the very name of Judge also it is evident that he ought to pronounce sentences according to the laws; for he is called Judge whose it is to terminate a cause according to the laws, as D. Bonaventure says in 2. dist. 25. part. 1. dub. 1. litt., or from declaring law (ius dicendo), as I admonished above from P. Eliseus ab Oriano, and as Becanus says, tract. 3. miscell. fol. 340., Fagundez num. 1. cap. 18.

E nomine etiam Iudicis constat, eum debere secundum leges sententias ferre; dicitur enim Iudex, cuius est secundum iura causam terminare, ut ait D. Bonavent. in 2. dist. 25. part. 1. dub. 1. litt. seu a ius dicendo, ut supra monui ex P. Elizzo ab Oriano, et ut ait Becanus tract. 3. miscell. fol. 340. Fagundez num. 1. cap. 18.

13 Fagundez truly notes, L. 8. cap. 18., that which he says Alensis noted, part. 3. quaest. 40. memb. 4., and Gabriel, 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. not. 3.: in sacred page, Deuter. 1., this judgment is called the Judgment of God; for the judge bears the place of God; whence he ought to be conformed to God in three things: in Power or jurisdiction; in Truth, and in Goodness. Power consists in authority and superiority; the Truth of the Judge in discretion; Goodness in rectitude of soul. Whence in Deuter. 16. it is said: Thou shalt appoint judges and masters in all thy gates: behold authority. That they may judge the people with just judgment: behold the judgment of truth. And they shall not decline to either side: behold rectitude of soul. These things, however, the S. Doctor resolves more broadly in the places adduced, in the Tract. de Prudentia, and in this Treatise, disp. 3., especially part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2., and on cap. 6. of Sapientiae.

> NOTAT vero Fagundez L. 8. cap. 18. id, quod ait adnotasse Alensem part. 3. quaest. 40. memb. 4. Gabrielem 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. not. 3. in sacra pagina, Deuter. 1. Iudicium hoc vocari Iudicium Dei; gerit enim iudex, vices Dei; unde in tribus conformari debet Deo; In Potestate seu iurisdictione; in Veritate, et Bonitate. Potestas consistit in authoritate, et superioritate; Veritas Iudicis in discretione; Bonitas in rectitudine animi. Unde Deuter. 16. dicitur: Iudices, et magistros constitues in omnibus portis tuis: Ecce authoritas. Ut iudicent iusto iudicio populum: Ecce iudicium veritatis. Nec in alteram partem declinent: Ecce rectitudo animi: Haec tamen latius resolvit S. Doctor, locis adductis, Tract. de Prudentia, et Tractatu isto, disp. 3. praecipue part. 2. de Ecclesiastica Hierarchia, cap. 2. et ad cap. 6. sapientiae.

14 From the defect of an incompressible power women are excluded; whence Deuter. 1. says: Give men from among you. And cap. 18: Provide men;[1] and because it was said to her in Genes.: Thou shalt be under the power of the husband. From which chapter servants also are excluded, whom Peter exhorts, prima, c. 1.: be ye subject.

1 Editor's note: the print reads 'cap. 18. Provide vires'; 'vires' (strengths) is apparently a print slip for 'viros' (men), as in the parallel Deuter. 1 'Date ex vobis viros'; rendered 'Provide viros' (provide men).

> Ex defectu incompossibili potestatis excluduntur mulieres; unde Deuter. 1. dicitur: Date ex vobis viros. Et cap. 18. Provide vires*, et quia dictum est ei Genes.* Sub potestate viri eris. Ex quo capite excluduntur etiam servi, quos hortatur Petrus prima, c. 1. subditi essote.

15 Because of a defect of judgment of discretion the deaf, the mute, the mentally deranged, the furious, and minors are rejected, as the Seraphic Doctor shows at length in the places adduced.

> PROPTER defectum iudicii discretionis repelluntur surdi, muti, amentes, furiosi, et minores, ut late ostendit Seraphicus Doctor locis adductis.

16 Because of a defect of probity heretics, the infamous, the excommunicate, and others probably suspect are rejected, as enemies or blood relations of the actor.

> PROPTER defectum probitatis repelluntur haeretici, infames, excommunicati, et alii probabiliter suspecti, ut inimici, vel consanguinei actoris.

Question III: Whether the acts of a judge who has not a true but only a putative title are valid, so that not even he sins

1 The FIRST opinion teaches that the acts and deeds done by such a Judge or Parish priest are invalid.

> An acta IUDICIS, non habentis titulum verum, sed putativum tantum, sint valida, ita ut neque ipse peccet.
> PRIMA opinio docet, acta, gestaque per huiusmodi Iudicem, vel Parochum, esse invalida.

2 The COMMON, however, and true opinion is that they are valid. So Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 8. num. 65., Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 162., Sanchez Lib. 3. de matrim. disp. 22. num. 5., Tanner disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 21., Fagundez on the eighth precept of the decal. Lib. 8. cap. 19. num. 5. and 8., where he cites others, and so it was decided in both laws.

> COMMUNIS tamen, et vera sententia est; ea esse valida. Ita Lessius Tom. 1. lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 8. num 65. Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 162. Sanchez Lib. 3. de matrim. disp. 22. num. 5. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 21.

Fagundez in octavum praeceptum decal. Lib. 8. cap. 19. num. 5. et 8. ubi alios citat et ita decisum est in utroque iure.

3 As regards D. Bonaventure, I think he stands for this opinion, for in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. dub. 4., assigning the cases in which confession must be repeated, he lays down four. The first is, when the case is reserved and must be remitted to the superior having jurisdiction; and he seems to intimate that this happens only when an inferior, knowing, absolves, since he is bound to remit to the superior.

QUOAD D. Bonavent. arbitror stare pro hac sententia, nam in 4. dist. 17. part. 3. dub. 4. assignans casus, quando debet confessio iterari, ponit quatuor. Primus est, quando casus est reservatus, et debet remitti ad superiorem, habentem iurisdictionem, et videtur innuere id solum evenire, quando inferior, sciens, absolvit, cum teneatur ad superiorem remittere.

4 From which it is deduced that one going in good faith, and confessing a reserved sin only to him who thinks he has jurisdiction, and therefore is not bound to remit to the superior, is validly absolved. That the Seraphic Doctor thus thought is evident from disp. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1., which he proves on foundation 2, and 9. quaest. 2., where the nullity of the deeds is declared only against that case.

Ex quo deducitur, Euntem bona fide, et reservatum tantum confitentem illi, qui putat se habere iurisdictionem, et ideo non tenetur ad superiorem remittere, valide absolvi. Hoc autem ita sentire Seraphicum patet ex disp. 19. art. 3. quaest. 1. quod probat fundamento 2. et 9. quaest. 2. ubi nullitas factorum declaratur solum contra eum casum.

5 It is PROVED first from the Leg. Barbarius, ff. de officio Praetoris, where the case occurred that this Barbarius, a slave elsewhere, was assumed to the Praetorship at Rome, although slaves were incapable of this by reason of their servitude; and nevertheless his acts were ratified by the Roman senate, lest confusions arise; and the same case is defined in general, because it can be removed by that Prince who laid down the incapacity.

PROBATUR primo ex Leg. Barbarius, ff. de officio Praetoris*, ubi casus incidit, ut iste Barbarius, alibi servus, fuerit Romae ad Praeturam assumptus, cum tamen servi ad hoc essent inhabiles ex servitute, et tamen acta eius fuere a senatu Romano ratificata, ne exurgerent confusiones; et idem casus in genere definitur, quia potest ab eo Principe, qui inhabilitatem posuit, removeri.*

6 The same is had in the Roman Synod, 3. quaest. 7. cap. 1., and it is reported in the chapter infamis, V. verumtamen 3. quaest. 7., there: If a slave, while he was thought free, gave sentence by delegation; although he was afterwards forced back into servitude, the sentence pronounced by him holds the firmness of a res judicata.

IDEM habetur in Synodo Romana 3. quaest. 7. cap. 1. et refertur, cap. infamis, V. verumtamen 3. quaest. 7. ibi: Si servus, dum reputaretur liber, sententiam daret ex delegatione; quamvis postea in servitutem depulsus sit, sententia ab eo dicta, rei iudicatae firmitatem tenet.

7 The REASON is, because otherwise innumerable confusions would arise in the Republic, if all decrees and all decisions etc. were to be rescinded.

RATIO est, quia alioqui innumerae confusiones in Republica orirentur, si essent rescindenda omnia decreta, omnes decisiones, etc.

8 Therefore it is certain from the common doctrine that one elected invalidly, but continuously tolerated, provided nothing required by divine law be lacking, and provided there be in those electing at least a colorable title, can validly exercise various acts of Jurisdiction. I said: provided nothing be lacking from divine law, etc., because if anyone be elected as Confessor who is not a Priest, his jurisdiction is null. So P. Eliseus tract. 10. quaest. 22. num. 15.

> Certum itaque est ex communi doctrina, nulliter electum, sed iugiter toleratum, modo nil desit e iure divino requisitum, et modo in eligentibus sit saltem titulus coloratus, posse valide varios Iurisdictionis actus exercere. Dixi: modo nil desit e iure divino, etc. quia si quis eligatur in Confessarium, qui non sit Sacerdos, eius iurisdictio nulla est. Ita P. Elizzus tract. 10. quaest. 22. num. 15.

9 The same thinks Lessius, when even the people doubt about the revocation of the power, because the condition of the possessor is better; likewise Diana with others, part. 2. tract. 16. resol. 45., and part. 5. tract. 4., affirm that the acts of a Judge having power only in the estimation of the people still hold; which the same Lessius and Suarez say, 3. part. tom. 4. disp. 26. sect. 6. num. 7., of a judge whose Jurisdiction attaches only to a probable opinion, although such an opinion be in itself false; for the contrary opinion, however, more fight.

> Idem sentit Lessius, quando etiam populus dubitat de revocatione potestatis; quia melior est conditio possidentis; Item Diana cum aliis part. 2. tract. 16. resol. 45. et part. 5. tract. 4. affirmant acta Iudicis, potestatem tantum habentis in sola aestimatione populi, adhuc valere; Quod idem aiunt Lessius et Suarez 3. part. tom. 4. disp. 26. sect. 6. num. 7. de iudice, cuius Iurisdictio tantum appenditur opinioni probabili, licet talis opinio in se sit falsa; Pro contraria tamen sententia plures militant.

10 From these another question is almost defined: What is to be said of a Judge delegated only to one cause or another, and deciding everything. That such acts indeed do not hold, Innocent teaches, the chapter cum dilecta, num. 10. de rescript.; Ioannes Andreas there, num. 14.; Abb. num. 10.; Guido Pap. decis. 322.; Alex. cons. 77. num. 7. lib. 2.

> Ex his fere definitur alia quaestio: Quid dicendum de Iudice, delegato solum ad unam, vel alteram causam, et decernente omnia. Ea sane acta non valere docent Innocentius, cap. cum dilecta, num. 10. de rescript. Ioannes Andreas ibi, num. 14. Abb. num. 10. Guido Pap. decis. 322. Alex. cons. 77. num. 7. lib. 2.

11 The opposite opinion, however, is that of Sanchez Tom. 1. Lib. 3. de matrim. disp. 22. num. 16., Anton. the chapter cum dilecta, de rescript. num. 15., Abb. there, number 10., Imola num. 11., Filliucius num. 3., saying that it is the opinion of all. Decius on the chapter sciscitatus, de rescript. num. 38., Bartol. on the Leg. Barbarius, ff. de offic. Praetor. in the second reading, num. 13. and 18., Paludanus 4. dist. 17. quaest. 6. art. 1., Henriquez lib. 5. de poenitent. cap. 14., Fagundez on the eighth Precept, Lib. 8. cap. 19., and others cited by Sanchez.

12 It is proved from the said chapter infamis, where there is openly talk of a delegated Judge, and yet his sentence is sustained on account of the common error and utility, when he was not the true Judge.

> Probatur ex dicto cap. infamis, ubi aperte est sermo de Iudice delegato, et tamen eius sententia sustinetur propter communem errorem, et utilitatem, cum verus Iudex non esset.

13 It is proved secondly from the Law 1. Cod. de sentent. et interlocut., there: If an arbiter given by the magistrates, after he pronounced sentence, was in servitude. Thus the Gloss also expounds it, V. si arbiter.

> Probatur secundo ex Lege 1. Cod. de sentent. et inte-loc. ibi: Si arbiter datus a magistratibus, cum sententiam dixit, in libertate morabatur. Sic exponit et Glossa V. si arbiter.

14 Thirdly, because if a slave, who cannot be a witness, be employed in a testament, it is valid, as is evident from the Law 1. Cod. de testamento.

> Tertio*, quia, si servus, qui testis esse nequit, adhibeatur in testamento, valet, ut patet Lege 1. Cod. de testamento.*

15 You will say. In an ordinary judge there concurs a common utility, not so in one delegated to one cause.

> Dices. In iudice ordinario concurrit communis utilitas, non sic in delegato ad unum.

16 It is answered, that here too a common utility intervenes by reason of the office; for when a judge delegates to this one one cause, he constitutes him in a public office, Leg. 3. ff. de iurisdictione omnium iudicum. But the same thing proportionally in the case of the ordinary and the delegated [judge] the S. Doctor judges, 4. dist. 17. part. 3. quaest. 2.

> Respondetur*, intervenire etiam hic utilitatem communem ratione officii; nam, dum iudex delegat huic unam causam, constituit eum in officio publico* Leg. 3. ff. de iurisdict. omnium iudicum. Idem autem proportionaliter in casu ordinarii, et delegati censet S. Doctor 4. dist. 17. part. 3. quaest. 2.

Question IV: Whether the Pope can subject himself to someone's judgment

1 It is certain that this has at times been done; for thus Leo IV, as recorded by D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 1. ad 2., as we read in dist. 2. quaest. 7. c. Nos incompetenter, submitted himself spontaneously to the judgment of Louis the second Emperor, and of Charlemagne his great-grandson, in a certain cause, saying: Si iniuste aliquid egimus, cuncta volumus vestro emendare iudicio.

> An possit PAPA se alicuius iudicio subiicere.
> Certum est aliquando id praestitum; Sic enim Leo IV. apud D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 1. ad 2. ut legitur dist. 2. quaest. 7. c. Nos incompetenter*; in causa quadam se sponte subiecit iudicio Ludovici secundi Imperatoris, et Caroli magni pronepotis, dicens:* Si iniuste aliquid egimus, cuncta volumus vestro emendare iudicio.

2 He adds, moreover, Valentia disp 5. quaest. 11. punct. 1., that in that case the Pontiff is bound to comply with him to whom he has spontaneously submitted himself, so that, if he does not obey, he sins.

> Addit autem Valentia disp 5. quaest. 11. punct. 1. in eo casu teneri Pontificem patere ei, cui se sponte subiecit, ita ut, si non pareat, peccet.

3 In which sense Sayrus L. 12. cap. 8. num. 4. admits that the sentence of an arbiter chosen has the force of compelling the Pontiff, though not so perfectly that the Pontiff can be compelled to obey by penalty. This the S. Doctor asserts more strongly; otherwise he could excommunicate himself, which is absurd.

> Quo sensu admittit Sayrus L. 12. cap. 8. num. 4. iudicis arbitrarii sententiam vim habere cogendi Pontificem, quanquam non adeo perfectam, ut possit Pontifex ad parendum cogi per poenam. Hoc fortius adstertit S. Doctor; alioqui posset excommunicare seipsum, quod est absurdum.

4 He superadds, Sayrus, following Valentia loco cit., Caietano 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 1., Soto Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 1., Aragon ad loco cit. D. Thom., Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 25., that the Pope can revoke the arbiter elected by himself for a cause, and although revoking him without cause he would sin, yet the revocation would stand, and his sentence would be null.

Superaddit Sayrus ex Valentia loco cit. Caietano 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 1. Soto Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 4. art. 1. Aragon ad loco cit. D. Thom. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 25. quod Papa potest eum arbitrum a se electum revocare ex causa, et licet repudians sine causa, peccaret, tamen esset revocatus, et eius sententia foret nulla.

5 Far more certain, however, is it that the Pope can submit himself to another in the judgment of sacramental confession.

Multo vero magis certum est, posse Papam se subiicere alteri in iudicio confessionis sacramentalis.

6 It is proved most powerfully by the S. Doctor, because the Pontiff is a man in via, a sharer in human infirmity, and can sin, and therefore is bound to take up the necessary means instituted by Christ, which is the Sacrament of Penance for actual mortal sins; and this the S. Doctor confirms from the Decretal of Gregory, de poenit. et remiss., where it is declared, and by this reason proved.

Probatur validissime a S. Doctore, quia Pontifex est homo viator, particeps infirmitatis humanae, et potest peccare, atque adeo tenetur assumere medium necessarium, a Christo institutum, quod est Sacramentum poenitentiae pro mortalibus actualibus, et hoc confirmat S. Doctor ex Decretali, quae est Gregorii, de poenit. et remiss. ubi id declaratur, et hac ratione probatur.

7 Against this assertion you will object first: The Pontiff cannot submit himself to another to be excommunicated or punished; as D. Bonavent. teach here, and D. Thom. 4. dist. 19. quaest. 1. art. 3., Richardus dist. 18. art. 5., Paludanus ibi, quaest. 2. Therefore neither can he submit himself to be judged.

Contra assertum obiicies primo. Pontifex non potest se alteri subiicere excommunicandum, aut puniendum; ut docent D. Bonavent. hic*, et D. Thom. 4. dist. 19. quaest. 1. art. 3. Richardus* dist. 18. art. 5. Paludanus ibi, quaest. 2. Ergo neque potest se subiicere iudicandum.

8 The S. Doctor answers ad 3. first, that Excommunication and other penalties are against oneself, and therefore against the will of God, even though they be patiently endured on account of merit; wherefore no one can juridically decree penalties against himself, because they would be willing and violent. But that sentence concerning oneself be passed with the will of the Party, where the cause is doubtful, does not seem contrary to the rationale of the judicial fabric. Valentia uses this answer, Quod ad iudicia extra confessionem.

Respondet S. Doctor ad 3. primo, Excommunicationem, et alias poenas esse contra se, atque adeo esse contra voluntatem Dei, esto patienter toleratae sint ad meritum, quapropter non potest aliquis iuridice contra se poenas decernere, quia essent libentes, et violentae; At vero quod ex voluntate Rei feratur sententia de se, ubi causa est anceps, non videtur contra rationem iudiciariae telae. Hoc responso utitur Valentia, Quod ad iudicia extra confessionem.

9 Yet with this answer the S. Doctor is not content, for in choosing an arbiter he assents voluntarily even to any just sentence against himself, if it be handed down; and therefore it would follow that no one can choose an arbiter who could define anything against himself.

Hac tamen responsione non quiescit S. Doctor, nam eligens arbitrum assentitur voluntarie etiam cuique sententiae iustae contra se, si deferatur; atque adeo sequetur, nullum posse eligere arbitrum, qui posset contra se definire.

10 He answers therefore secondly, that the reason is not the same in Excommunication and similar penalties as in an arbitrary judgment, whether of confession or of another kind necessary for salvation; For Excommunication and the other penalties, which are common among men, denote a common jurisdiction over a man, such as is in prelates; But the jurisdiction of confession denotes a mediation between God and man unto reconciliation. And because it is necessary for a man, however great, to submit to the Judgment of God; hence it is that the Pontiff can submit himself to another for Sacramental absolution; indeed even for other matters that touch conscience, such as restitutions and the like, and therefore he can in these submit himself to a man, not as Pope, but as one offending before God, or in doubt about it; But the penalties of excommunication and other human penalties presuppose Prelacy, which cannot be over the Pope, nor can he, remaining Pope, simply acknowledge anyone as prelate over himself, as I showed p. p. tract. 1. disp. 4. proaem. quaest. 8.

Respondet ergo secundo, non esse parem rationem in Excommunicatione, similibusque poenis, et in iudicio arbitrario, sive confessionis, sive alio ad salutem necessario; Nam Excommunicatio, et aliae poenae, quae sunt hominibus communes, dicunt iurisdictionem communem super hominem, qualis est in praelatis; At iurisdictio confessionis dicit meliationem inter Deum, et hominem ad reconciliationem. Et quia necesse est, hominem, quantumvis magnum, subiici Iudicio Dei; hinc est ut possit Pontifex se subiicere alteri ad absolutionem Sacramentalem; imo ad alia, quae tangunt conscientiam, puta restitutiones, et similia, atque adeo potest in his se subiicere homini, non ut Papa, sed ut delinquens coram Deo, vel dubius de hoc; At poenae excommunicationis, et aliae humanae supponunt Praelationem, quae non potest esse super Papam, nec potest is, manens Papa, aliquem sibi praelatum simpliciter agnoscere, ut ostendi p. p. tract. 1. disp. 4. proaem. quaest. 8.

11 From this is clear the answer to the other argument they oppose; namely, whether the arbiter elected by the Pope is either equal to or superior to the Pope. If equal, he cannot judge him, because par in parem non habet imperium. Not superior: First, because the Pope is supreme. Second, because one cannot give authority above that which one is; for no one gives what he does not have. Therefore the Pope cannot make another superior in the power of the Pope.

Ex quo patet ad aliud argumentum, quod opponunt; nempe, vel arbiter electus a Papa, est aequalis, vel Superior Papae. Si aequalis, non potest iudicare illum, quia par in parem non habet imperium. Non Superior: Primo, quia Papa est supremus. Secundo quia non potest supra id, quod est; nemo enim dat, quod non habet. Igitur Papa non potest facere alium superiorem potestate Papae.

12 Caietanus and Valentia answer that the Pope is inferior secundum quid, or in this respect.

Respondet Caietanus, et Valentia, Papam esse inferiorem secundum quid, seu quo ad hoc.

13 But the S. Doctor persists, that he is not subject as Pope, but as a man, who has need to preserve equity in the judgment of God.

At S. Doctor persistit, non subiici illum, ut est Papa, sed ut homo, qui eget in iudicio Dei servare aequitatem.

14 Now the Doctors concede this hereditary right, granted by Christ to Pontiffs, in accord with Matthew 17: Ergo liberi sunt filii: For Christ was not, even as man, subject to earthly power, although he subjected himself to it, as he protests to Pilate, Ioan. 19: Non haberes in me potestatem, nisi datum tibi esset desuper. This exemption was due to him by reason of the hypostatic union, as Valentia says disp 5.

quaest. 11. puncto 1. Wherefore I do not see why he should make it hereditary in Pontiffs, since they are not hypostatically united to the Word.

> Hoc autem ius haereditarium a Christo Pontificibus concedunt Doctores iuxta illud Matthaei 17. Ergo liberi sunt filii: Neque enim Christus fuit, etiam ut homo, subditus potestati terrenae, tametsi illi se subiecerit, ut protestatur Pilato, Ioan. 19. Non haberes in me potestatem, nisi datum tibi esset desuper. Haec autem exemptio erat illi debita ratione unionis hypostaticae, ut ait Valentia disp 5. quaest. 11. puncto 1. Quare non video, cur haereditariam eam faciat in Pontifices, cum ipsi non uniantur hypostatice verbo.

15 It comes to them, therefore, from another source, namely from Divine Law, by which Christ constituted Pontiffs Fathers and Judges of the whole Church. Wherefore I judge that at that time he imposed upon them this dignity, Matth. 16., when Peter confessed Christ to be the Son of God, and God. And Ioan. 22., when he protested him to be beloved above all, as God.

> Ex alio igitur capite illis obvenit, nempe ex Iure Divino, quo constituit Christus Pontifices Patres, et Iudices totius Ecclesiae. Ubi ideo arbitror, eo tempore imposuisse hanc dignitatem Matth. 16. quando Petrus confessus est, Christum esse filium Dei, atque Deum. Et Ioan. 22. cum eum super omnia dilectum, ut Deum, protestatus est.

16 Interim, however, they are accustomed here to ask also: Whether Christ, as man, would be Rex Regum, and therefore by this reason above the power of the Emperor, which Pilatus had delegated, and accordingly Christ submitted himself to him spontaneously, not only as exempt by reason of the hypostatic union, but also by reason of his monarchic dignity.

> SOLENT autem hic interim etiam quaerere: An Christus, ut homo, esset Rex Regum; atque adeo hac ratione supra Imperatoris potestatem, quam habuit Pilatus delegatam, ac proinde Christus se illi sponte subiecerit, non modo ut exemptus ratione unionis hypostaticae, sed etiam ratione dignitatis monarchicae.

17 SOTUS Lib. 4. quaest. 5. art. 1., Caietanus loco cit., and Valentia deny that Christ subjected himself to Pilatus in this way, because he himself confesses: Regnum meum non est de hoc mundo.

> SOTUS Lib. 4. quaest. 5. art. 1. Caietanus loco cit. et Valentia negant, Christum hoc pacto se Pilato subiecisse, quia ipse fatetur: Regnum meum non est de hoc mundo.

18 BUT D. Bonavent., on Ioan. 19, professes that Pilatus usurped to himself the exercise of power against Christ, and had from above only the power of a Judge, not over Christ, who testified more than once that he was King, in accord with Psalm. 2: Ego autem constitutus sum Rex ab eo, etc.; and if he said: Regnum meum non est hinc; it is no obstacle, because, as the S. Doctor acutely observes, Christ did not say: My kingdom is not here, or not in this world, but: it is not of this world: it is not hence, because he did not hold royal power by the law of nations, but by natural divine law. Christ, therefore, was King, as I shall show 3. part. Tractatu 1. disp. 24. quaestione ultima.

> SED D. Bonavent. ad 19. Ioannis profitetur, Pilatum usurpasse sibi exercitium potestatis, contra Christum, et desuper habuisse tantum potestatem Iudicis, non super Christum, qui saepius testicavit, se Regem esse, iuxta id Psalm. 2. Ego autem constitutus sum Rex ab eo, etc. et si dixit: Regnum meum non est hinc; non obest, quia, ut acute observat S. Doctor; non dixit Christus: Regnum meum non est hic, vel non est in hoc mundo, sed: non est de hoc mundo: non est hinc*, quia non iure gentium habebar regiam porestatem, sed iure divino naturali. Erat igitur Christus Rex, ut ostendam* 3. part. Tractatu 1. disp. 24. quaestione ultima.

Question V: Whether goodness is necessary in a judge

1 SOME of the SECTARIORS have dared to say that a Praelatum in mortal sin loses jurisdiction: which error I have often refuted, and it is condemned in the Council of Constance sess. 8. art. 15. et sess. 15. art. 3., and it is plain from Matth. 23: Reddite ergo quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, even to the impious.

> An bonitas sit IUDICI necessaria.
> SECTARIORUM nonnulli ausi sunt dicere, Praelatum peccato mortali amittere iurisdictionem: quem errorem explosi saepius, et damnatur in Concilio Constantiensi sess. 8. art. 15. et sess. 15. art. 3. et patet Matth. 23. Reddite ergo quae sunt Caesaris, Caesari, licet impio.

2 SOME say, however, that a Iudicem judging in mortal sin sins mortally; So Alens. 3. part. quaest. 40. memb. 3.

> DICUNT tamen aliqui, Iudicem in peccato mortali iudicantem, mortaliter delinquere; Ita Alens. 3. part. quaest. 40. memb. 3.

3 ON the other hand, as to Ecclesiastics, D. Thom. 4. dist. 19. quaest. 2. art. 2. quaest. 2., Paludanus ibi quaest. 3. art. 3., Sylvester V. correctio, quaest. 16. Hence that saying of Ioan. 8: Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in eam lapidem mittat, where the S. Doctor says: The law was written on stone on account of the hard of heart: now the Lord wrote on the ground, because he was seeking fruit. Let the law therefore be fulfilled, but should the adulteress be stoned by those who are to punish her? This is the voice of justice; let the sinner be punished, but not by sinners; and he alleges D. Augustinum tract. 33: Ad signandum ergo, quod legis praevaricatores non sunt digni ad iudicandum alios, ideo se sic inclinavit, et scripsit, as truly Anselmus says; Quantum est de ordine iustitiae non sunt digni punire, vel accusare, those who are in sin, especially when the sin is notorious, because then those judging and accusing give scandal.

> DE Ecclesiasticis vero D. Thom. 4. dist. 19. quaest. 2. art. 2. quaest. 2. Paludanus ibi quaest. 3. art. 3. Sylvester V. correctio, quaest. 16. Unde illud Ioan. 8. Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in eam lapidem mittat, ubi S. Doctor, Lex scripta est in lapide propter duros: nunc autem scripsit Dominus in terra, quia fructum quaerebat. Impleatur ergo lex, sed numquid a puniendis lapidanda est adultera? Haec vox est iustitiae; puniatur peccatrix, sed non a peccatoribus, et allegat D. Augustinum tract. 33. Ad signandum ergo, quod legis praevaricatores non sunt digni ad iudicandum alios, ideo se sic inclinavit, et scripsit, ut ait vere Anselmus; Quantum est de ordine iustitiae non sunt digni punire, vel accusare, qui sunt in peccato, maxime quando peccatum est notorium, quia tunc iudicantes, et accusantes scandalizant.

4 WHEN, however, the sin is hidden, then the one judging or accusing sins, because he knows himself to be in sin and yet does not purge himself. And therefore such judges act perilously, thus judging when they know themselves to be in sin.

> QUANDO vero peccatum est occultum tunc peccat iudicans, vel acusans, eo quod cognoscit, se esse in peccato, et tamen se non purgat. Et ideo periculose faciunt tales iudices, sic iudicantes, cum sciant, se esse in peccato.

5 The OPPOSITE opinion, however, is that no Iudicem sins by judging in mortal sin. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 5. et quaest. 60. art. 2., Caietanus, Salonius, Aragonius, and Bannes ibi, Sotus lib. 3. de Iust. quaest 4. part. 1., Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. part. 4. dub. 4. num. 455., Martin Nauar.

in Rubric. de Iud. num. 42. Sayrus vero Lib. 12. cap. 13. makes certain distinctions. They speak, however, of external Judgment.

> OPPOSITA vero sententia est, nullum Iudicem peccare, iudicando in peccato mortali. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 5. et quaest. 60. art. 2. Caietanus, Salonius, Aragonius, et Bannes ibi, Sotus lib. 3. de Iust. quaest 4. part. 1. Petrus Nauar. lib. 2. de restit. cap. 4. part. 4. dub. 4. num. 455. Martin Nauar. in Rubric. de Iud. num. 42. Sayrus vero Lib. 12. cap. 13. aliqua distinguit. Loquuntur autem de Iudicio externo.

6 The same hold Valentia quaest. 4. puncto 2.; Tannerus vero disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 16. distinguishes, alleging others, among whom also Alensem loco cit., as recorded by Sylvestrum, V. Iud. §. 12. So also Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 12., Lugo de Iust. disp. 37. sect. 2., Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 2. et alii.

> IDEM sentiunt Valentia quaest. 4. puncto 2. Tannerus vero disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 16. distinguit, alios allegans, inter quos etiam Alensem loco cit. apud Sylvestrum, V. Iud. §. 12. Sic et Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 12. Lugo de Iust. disp. 37. sect. 2. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 60. art. 2. et alii.

7 I ASSERT first, with D. Bonavent., that a Iudicem in mortal and scandalous sin, in handing down a sentence, even a just one, sins mortally. So D. Bonau., D. Thom. art. cit., Caietanus, and all the others cited, among whom some say it is per accidens by reason of justice, which is interpreted as contempt.

> ASSERO primo cum D. Bonavent. Iudicem in peccato mortali scandaloso, ferendo sententiam, etiam iustam, peccare mortaliter. Ita D. Bonau. D. Thom. art. cit. Caietanus, et alii omnes citati, e quibus aliqui dicunt, esse per accidens ratione iustitiae, quae exponitur contemptui.

8 The RATIO of D. Bonavent., used by the others, is that from it arises the scandal of others, and justice passes into contempt; but this happens especially when a Iudex is besmirched with the same crimes that he punishes in others.

> RATIO D. Bonavent. qui utuntur alii, est, quia inde oritur scandalum aliorum, et iustitia in vilipendium abit; maxime vero hoc evenit, quando Iudex eisdem criminibus obvolvitur, quae punit in aliis.

9 I ASSERT second, that a Iudex in hidden mortal sin sins in some way. So judge among the Doctors, even of the second opinion, Caietanus, Sotus, Valentia, Martinus Nauarrus, and Sayrus, saying that he sins venially, because he does not exercise the act of justice from the inclination of justice. It is proved by the S. Doctor from 6. Sap., with those words of Rom. 2: In quo alium iudicas, te ipsum condemnas.

> ASSERO secundo, Iudicem in peccato mortali occulto peccare aliquo modo. Ita censent e Doctoribus, etiam secundae sententiae, Caietanus, Sotus, Valentia, Martinus Nauarrus, et Sayrus, dicentes, peccare venialiter, eo quod actum iustitiae ex inclinatione iustitiae non exercet. Probatur a S. Doctore ad 6. Sap. illis verbis, Rom. 2. In quo alium iudicas, te ipsum condemnas.

10 S. Bonavent. ADDS something further on account of the danger, because an impious man is easily corrupted into judging unjustly, especially by affections, gifts, etc.

> ADDIT S. Bonavent. aliquid aliud ob periculum, quia homo impius facile corrumpitur ad inique iudicandum, maxime affectibus, muneribus, etc.

Question VI: On the external purity of the hands of the judge

[1] EXTERNAL purity, necessary for a Iudici, consists especially in the hands, arg. cap. statuum, §. Insuper de rescript. in 6.; and it is twofold: The first is to refrain from injuries, contumelies, etc. The second, from gifts.

> De exteriori puritate manuum Iudicis.
> EXTERIOR puritas, Iudici necessaria, consistit praecipue in manibus, arg. cap. statuum, §. Insuper de rescript. in 6. quae est duplex: Prima est continere se ab iniuriis, contumeliis, etc. Secunda a muneribus.

[2] AGAINST the first he sins by beating, Lex Nec magistratibus, ff. de iniuriis, and he is bound to compensation for the injury inflicted.

> CONTRA primum peccat verberando, Lex Nec magistratibus, ff. de iniuriis, et tenetur ad compensationem illatae iniuriae.

[3] AGAINST the second he sins by extortions, Titul. de concussione. Concussion, however, as is gathered ex cap. Iubemus, et seq., is when someone threatens another unless he give or do this or that; or when he puts his sentence up for sale, which otherwise he would not give, or the contrary. Therefore he who by extorsion of money, through the fear of extortion, receives something, steals, and is bound to restitution; or if on account of money received he omits to proceed further, he incurs the crime of concussion Leg. 1. et 2. de concuss., and beyond the precept Levit. 6., where nothing extorted is commanded to be taken. This the S. Doctor pursues in speculo animae, cap. 2. ante medium.

> CONTRA secundum peccat concussionibus, Titul. de concussione. Est autem concussio, ut colligitur ex cap. Iubemus, et seq. dum quis minatur alicui, nisi hoc, vel illud des, aut facias; vel quando venalem dat sententiam; alias non daturus, vel e contra. Qui igitur extorextorsione pecuniae ex incussione metus aliquid accipit, furatur, et ad restitutionem tenetur; vel si ratione pecuniae acceptae ulterius procedere omittit, concussionis crimen incurrit Leg. 1. et 2. de concuss. et extra praeceptum Levit. 6. ubi iubetur nihil extorquendum. Quae prosequitur S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 2. ante medium.

[4] The chiefest cleanliness of hands is from gifts, concerning which the S. Doctor, in the place just cited, says: §. quartus fructus rapinae est munerum acceptio.

> Praecipva mundities manuum est a muneribus, de quibus S. Doctor allegato loco statim, §. quartus fructus rapinae est munerum acceptio.

[5] I suppose, however, that Iudices and other Ministers of justice have just stipends from the Laws. Therefore if they receive anything further for exercising their office, they sin against justice, and are bound to restitution before the sentence of a judge, to be made to the party giving; after the sentence, however, to Superiors, or it is to be made to him to whom the sentence decrees. So S. Bonavent. loco citato, Molina tom. 1. de Iust. disp. 83., Covar. ad reg peccatum, part. 2. §. 3., Navar. summa lat. cap. 17. numero 23., Adrianus quodl. 10. art. 1. et in 4. quaest. 19., Gabriel in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. concl. 9., Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 9. num. 63., Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 32. art. 7. This sin pertains to concussion and calumny, from D. Augustino, as related in cap. militare, dist. 23. quaest. 1., by whom Ioannes Baptista Lucae 3. admonished the soldiers ut abstinerent: Neminem concutiatis; contenti estote stipendiis vestris, as S. Bonavent. explains in comment.

> Svppono autem, Iudices, et alios iustitiae Ministros habere a Legibus iusta stipendia. Itaque si aliquid amplius pro suo munere exercendo accipiunt, peccant contra iustitiam, et restitutioni tenentur ante sententiam iudicis, parti danti faciendae; post sententiam vero Superioribus, ei facienda est, cui sententia decreverit. Ita S. Bonavent. loco citato, Molina tom. 1. de Iust. disp. 83. Covar. ad reg peccatum, part. 2. §. 3. Bonavent.* in comment.

6 Both Laws condemn these acceptances of gifts.

Has munerum acceptiones damnant utraque Iura.

7 The Canonical law indeed, cap. statuimus, §. si quid, et §. insuper de rescript. lib. 6., where Iudices delegati are commanded to restore those things which beyond what is due to them and granted them by law they have received from the parties; and there it is said that the mere remission of him to whom this restitution is due does not suffice for the Iudex to be absolved from restitution. Panormitanus notes in cap. cum ab omni de rescript., and Molina disput. 84., Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 16. numero 2., that this applies a fortiori to ordinary judges.

Ivs quidem Canonicum cap. statuimus, §. si quid, et §. insuper de rescript. lib. 6. ubi praecipiuntur Iudices delegati restituere ea, quae ultra sibi debita, et iure concessa, a partibus acceperunt, et ibi dicitur, non sufficere solam remissionem eius, cui haec restitutio debetur, ut Iudex a restitutione absolvatur. Notat autem Panormitanus in cap. cum ab omni de rescript. et Molina disput. 84. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 16. numero 2. id a fortiori urgere de iudicibus ordinariis.

8 Of the common law also it is plain in Leg. Plebiscito, ff. de offic. Praesid. et Leg. solet, §. ult. ff. de off. Proconsulis; et Authentica: Ut Iudices sine quoquo suffragio fiant, §. Scriptura est exemplar, where, however, Xenia are not forbidden but granted, that is, little edible gifts, which are consumed within the space of two or three days; these the S. Doctor first calls Munera granted by law.

De Iure communi etiam patet in Leg. Plebiscito, ff. de offic. Praesid. et Leg. solet, §. ult. ff. de off. Proconsulis; et Authentica: Ut Iudices sine quoquo suffragio fiant, §. Scriptura est exemplar*, ubi tamen non prohibentur, sed conceduntur Xenia, idest munuscula esculenta, quae duorum, vel trium dierum spatio consumuntur; quae primo Munera vocat S. Doctor a iure concessa.*

9 Navar. admonishes, however, opusc. de datis, et promiss. num. 47., Molina disp. 83., Fagundez num. 12., that if anyone asks of a judge some diligence beyond that to which he is bound, for instance that he make a journey; or requests a Tabellionem to write more diligently on parchment, etc., he may give something moderate.

Admonet tamen Navar. opusc. de datis, et promiss. num. 47. Molina disp. 83. Fagundez num. 12. si quis a iudice petat aliquam diligentiam singularem, super eam ad quam tenetur puta, ut iter eo faciat; Sic Tabellionem postulet, ut scribat diligentius in membranis, etc. posse aliquid moderatum dare.

10 It is proved by reason, because the Public gives them just stipends, as I suppose, on account of which he has obligated himself to those offices, and by the just law other things are forbidden him.

Probatur ratione, quia Publicum eis dat stipendia iusta, ut suppono, ob quae se obligavit ad ea officia, et a lege iusta ei interdicuntur alia.

11 Many say, however, that a Iudex can receive something for handing down a sentence for one party, when, since there is probability on both sides, it is in his discretion to pass sentence for either. But I laugh at this; for it is not in the power of the judge, when the reasons on both sides remain equal, to give to one by taking away from the other, but this will be a flaccid acceptance of persons, as I taught in prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de conscientia probabili, ad prop. 26. et hic disput. 25. quaest. 4.

> Mvlti dicunt tamen, posse recipere aliquid Iudicem pro ferenda sententia pro altera parte, quando utrinque, cum sit probabilitas, habet in suo arbitrio ferre sententiam pro alterutro. Sed hoc rideo; non enim est in potestate iudicis, stantibus utrinque paribus rationibus, dare uni, auferendo alteri, sed haec erit fracida personarum acceptio, ut docui prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de conscientia probabili, ad prop. 26. et hic disput. 25. quaest. 4.

12 They raise the question also: Whether a Iudex or tabellio can, under the title of mere liberality and friendship, receive gifts from litigants, or from him for whom he passed sentence; and whether they are bound to restitution.

> Movent etiam quaestionem: An possit Iudex, vel tabellio, merae liberalitatis, et amicitiae titulo, munera recipere a litigantibus, vel ab eo, pro quo tulit sententiam, et : An teneantur restitutioni.

13 Some suppose, however, considering the mere law of nature, that these gifts are not illicit, since anyone may give what is his own to whom he pleases. So Molina disp. 88., Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 14. num. 72., Fagundez cap. 27. num. 3.

> Svpponvnt autem nonnulli, spectato solo iure naturae, non esse illicita haec munera, cum possit quisque suum cui libet donare. Ita Molina disp. 88. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 14. num. 72. Fagundez cap. 27. num. 3.

14 Nor does it stand in the way (they say) that of Exodus 23: Non accipies munera; quia excaecant prudentes, et subvertunt verba iustorum. Because here it is only held that they can rightly be forbidden.

> Nec obstat (aiunt) id Exodi 23. Non accipies munera; quia excaecant prudentes, et subvertunt verba iustorum. Quia hic, solum habetur, recte ea posse prohiberi.

15 But D. Bonavent. locis allegatis refers these to rapine, and the S. Doctor gives the reason; for gifts naturally corrupt justice, which ought to be done from the motive of honesty, as a judgment constituted by God, for which reason it is called the judgment of God, 2. Paral. 19.

> Sed D. Bonavent. locis allegatis, ad rapinam haec revocat, et rationem reddit S. Doctor; naturaliter enim munera corrumpunt iustitiam, quae debet fieri ex motivo honestatis, ut iudicium a Deo constitutum, quod ideo dicitur iudicium Dei, 2. Paral. 19.

16 Then also, since a Iudex is bound, as Fagundez concedes, to do these things from honest stipends, he infers violence, and they are almost never given from friendship; and even if they were given under that title, they would still perilously tend to corrupting justice.

> Deinde quia, cum teneatur Iudex, ut concedit Fagundez, haec agere ex honestis stipendiis, vim infert, et fere semper non ex amicitia dantur, et si hoc titulo darentur, adhuc tamen periculose ad corrumpendam iustitiam pellicerent.

17 That these things are prohibited by the law of nature, the S. Doctor proves from Deuter. 16: Non accipies personam, nec munera; quia munera excaecant oculos sapientum, et mutant verba iustorum. Iuste quod iustum est persequeris: Behold, to justice belongs not receiving gifts; Wherefore by its nature he is bound to restitution. Very many hold this, even though they concede that gifts are forbidden only by positive law. Fagundez relates them Lib. 8. cap. 27. num. 7., Ioan. Medina de restit. quaest. 20., Bartholomaeus Medina de modo administrandi sacram. Poenit. fol. 226., Sotus lib. 4. quaest. 7. art. 1. de Iustitia, Gabriel 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. concl. 4., Sylvester V. Iudex 1. num. 23. quaest. 8.; Lessius lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 9. num. 72. inclines to it, Baldaeus V. Iud. 12., with Ghisler. de iud. cap. 6., Boverius in direct. cap. 3.

> Qvod autem haec sint iure naturae prohibita, probat S. Doctor eo Deuter. 16. Non accipies personam, nec munera; quia munera excaecant oculos sapientum, et mutant verba iustorum. Iuste quod iustum est persequeris: En ad iustitiam spectat, non accipere munera; Quare ex natura sua tenetur ad restitutionem. Quod tenent etiam plurimi, quamvis concesserint solo iure positivo munera esse vetita. Eos refert Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 27. num. 7. Ioan. Medina de restit. quaest. 20. Bartholomaeus Medina de modo administrandi sacram. 18 The ratio of this is, because the laws render judges incapable of taking dominion over these things. Wherefore it matters little whether we hold this corruption of Iudicum to be forbidden by the law of nature or by positive law, concerning which see more Juxta Decretum Alexandri VII. tomo 4. disp. 17. quaest. 10. ad proposit. 26.

> Ratio horum est, quia iura reddunt iudices inhabiles ad dominium harum rerum capescendum. Quare parum refert, an etiam Iure naturae, sive iure positivo sustineamus prohiberi hanc Iudicum corruptelam, de qua plura vide Iuxta Decretum Alexandri VII. tomo 4. disp. 17. quaest. 10. ad proposit. 26.

Question VII: Whether excommunicated judges sin in judging, and judge invalidly

1 Any Iudex whatsoever, excommunicated after the Extravagant of Martin V. and the Council of Constance, from which it was extracted, if he be a hidden excommunicate, judges validly and licitly.

> Ivdex quicunque excommunicatus post Extravagantem Martini V. et Concilium Constantiense, ex quo illa extracta est, si sit excommunicatus occultus, valide iudicat, et licite.

2 Before these, however, some held that such a one sinned and acted invalidly. So the Glossa in §. verum tamen, in cap. infamis, 3. quaest. 7., Sylvester verbo excommunicatio 1. num. 6.

> Ante haec autem aliqui tenent, talem peccasse, et invalide egisse. Sic Glossa in §. verum tamen, in cap. infamis, 3. quaest. 7. Sylvester verbo excommunicatio 1. num. 6.

3 The opposite, however, they assert even before the Council of Constance: Suarez de censuris, disp. 14. sect. 1. num. 8., Sotus 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 1., Navar. summa, cap. 27. num. 21., Covar. in cap. Alma mater, part. 1. §. 11. num. 4., Richardus dist. 18. art. 7. quaest. 1., Paludanus quaest. 2. art. 3. et quaest. 4., Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. lib. 8. cap. 28. num. 3.

> Oppositvm tamen etiam ante Concilium Constantiae asserunt Suarez de censuris, disp. 14. sect. 1. num. 8. Sotus 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 1. Navar. summa, cap. 27. num. 21. Covar. in cap. Alma mater, part. 1. §. 11. num. 4. Richardus dist. 18. art. 7. quaest. 1. Paludanus quaest. 2. art. 3. et quaest. 4. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. lib. 8. cap. 28. num. 3.

4 But if he be a public excommunicate, formerly before the Council of Constance and the Extravagant of Martin V. Ad evitanda, all judges sinned by judging, were bound to restitution, and their acts were null. Today, however, after the Council of Constance and the Extravag., it is probable that a Iudex does not sin by force of the censure, and his acts are valid, unless he be to be avoided, namely, denounced by name, or a public striker of a cleric; so teach Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 7., who adds another condition, unless he thrust himself spontaneously into judgment; Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 6. num. 167., Navar. cap. 27. num. 7., Henriquez de excomm. cap. 7., Sotus in 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 1., Suarez de censuris, disp. 14. sect. 1. num. 13., Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 28. num. 5., Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 4.

> Si vero sit excommunicatus publicus, olim ante Concilium Constantiae, et Extravagantem Martini V. Ad evitanda, peccabant omnes iudices iudicando, et tenebantur ad restitutionem, et eorum acta erant nulla. Hodie vero post Concilium Constantiae, et Extravag. probabile est, non peccare Iudicem ex vi censurae, actaque eius esse valida, nisi sit vitandus, nempe, nominatim denunciatus, vel publicus clerici percussor, docent Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 7. qui aliam apponit conditionem, nisi se sponte iudicio ingerat; Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 6. num. 167. Navar. cap. 27. num. 7. Henriquez de excomm. cap. 7. Sotus in 4. dist. 22. quaest. 2. art. 1. Suarez de censuris, disp. 14. sect. 1. num. 13. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 28. num. 5. Bassaeus V. Iudex, num. 4.

5 THAT such an excommunicate to be avoided sins by judging, and that his acts are irritus, is proved, because he lacks jurisdiction, in accord with cap. ad probandum de sent. et re iudicat. cap. Audivimus, et cap. Miramur dist. 24. quaest. 1. et cap. Nos sanctorum, dist. 15. quaest. 6. And that this also holds of a secular judge they assert: Lessius lib. 2. cap. 19. num. 61., Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 20. iuxta cap. Exceptionem, de exceptionibus, et citato cap. Nos sanctorum.

> TALEM igitur excommunicatum vitandum peccare iudicando, eiusque actus irritos esse probatur, quia caret iurisdictione, iuxta cap. ad probandum de sent. et re iudicat. cap. Audivimus, et cap. Miramur dist. 24. quaest. 1. et cap. Nos sanctorum, dist. 15. quaest. 6. Idque etiam de saeculari iudice procedere adstruunt Lessius lib. 2. cap. 19. num. 61. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 20. iuxta cap. Exceptionem, de exceptionibus, et citato cap. Nos sanctorum.

6 They EXCEPT, however, if the judge migrates to another place, or is not held to be to be avoided in the place of his jurisdiction; Then his acts are said to be valid, although he sins by thrusting himself into judgment.

> EXCIPIUNT tamen, si iudex ad alium locum migret, aut in loco suae iurisdictionis non habeatur pro vitando; Tunc acta eius dicunt esse valida, licet peccet se ingetendo in iudicium.

Question VIII: On the order to be observed by a judge

1 The S. Doctor places the fruits of INJUSTICE in speculo animae, cap. 2., toward the end: Iniustam sententiam, quae multos fructus reddit, qui sunt Iustitiae perversio, seu delatio ordinis, iuris mutatio, falsum testimonium, iniusta advocatio, litteratum abusio, quae omnia habent rationem mortalis, secundum quod cedunt in proximi nocumentum. These are the words of S. Bonaventura, from which you have that a Iudex is gravely bound to observe the order of the Law.

> De ordine a IUDICE servando.
> INIUSTITIAE fructus ponit S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 2. circa finem, Iniustam sententiam, quae multos fructus reddit, qui sunt Iustitiae perversio, seu delatio ordinis, iuris mutatio, falsum testimonium, iniusta advocatio, litteratum abusio, quae omnia habent rationem mortalis, secundum quod cedunt in proximi nocumentum. Haec S. Bonaventura, ex quibus habes teneri graviter Iudicem servare ordinem Iuris.

2 FIVE things, however, are required from a Iudice for the form of judgment necessary. The first is the substance of the sentence. The second, the mode of proceeding. The third, the safeguard of the judgment. The fourth is the quality and quantity of the penalty. The fifth, finally, is the execution.

> QUINQUE autem requiruntur a Iudice ad formam iudicii necessariam. Primum est substantia sententiae. Secundum, modus procedendi. Tertium, tutela iudicii. Quartum est qualitas, et quantitas poenae. Quintum denique est executio.

3 As TO the first, he is bound to keep the laws, or, if these be obscure, to follow the opinions of the Doctors, in the ways indicated by me at the beginning of the disputation, quaest. 2. et prima secundae, tract. 2. disp. 17.

> QUOAD primum, tenetur servare leges, vel si hae obscurae sint, sequi Doctorum sententias, modis a me initio disputationis indicatis, quaest. 2. et prima secundae, tract. 2. disp. 17.

4 As TO the mode and order of proceeding, it is threefold. The first is by Denunciation, and it is when officials denounce. The second by Inquisition, when a Iudex proceeds to the inquisition of crimes, as is had in cap. Qualiter, et quando, dist. 2. de accusatore; et cap. licet Heli, de Simonia, where the authores commonly teach after D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 3. that a Iudex cannot inquire without an Accusator, or without someone who functions in the right of an accuser. The third is by Accusation.

> QUOAD modum, et ordinem procedendi, is triplex est. Primus est per Denunciationem, et est quando officiales denunciant. Secundus per Inquisitionem, quando Iudex procedit ad inquisitionem criminum, ut habetur in cap. Qualiter, et quando, dist. 2. de accusatore; et cap. licet Heli, de Simonia, ubi communiter tradunt authores post D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 3. non posse Iudicem inquirere sine Accusatore, aut sine aliquo, qui iure accusatoris fungitur. Tertius est per Accusationem.

Doubt I: On the mode of proceeding by denunciation

1 A criminal DENUNCIATION is the manifestation and revelation of a crime, without any action, or accusation, by which the Denunciator denounces the crime of his neighbor to the superior Judge, or Prelate, as to a Judge, so that he may do ex officio what seems right to him according to law.

> De modo procedendi per Denunciationem.
> DENUNCIATIO criminalis, est criminis manifestatio, et revelatio sine aliqua actione, vel accusatione, qua Denunciator crimen sui proximi superiori Iudici, seu Praelato, tanquam Iudici denunciat, ut ipse ex officio faciat, quod ei videtur secundum ius.

2 ACCUSATION, however, is the bringing of a charge with an action, in which it is asked of the Judge, and he is himself compelled to punish the guilty party. But denunciation differs from accusation in many ways.

> ACCUSATIO vero est delatio criminis cum actione, in qua a Iudice petitur, et ipse compellitur reum punire. Differt autem denunciatio ab accusatione in multis.

3 FIRST, because a judicial Denunciator does not intend chiefly public vengeance and the punishment of the offense, but only his own interest, in which he was injured by the wrong: whereas the Accuser intends, first and per se, the public punishment of the offense for the public good.

> PRIMO, quia Denunciator Iudicialis non intendit praecipue vindictam publicam, et punitionem delicti, sed solum interesse suum, in quo per iniuriam laesus fuit: Accusator vero, primo, et per se intendit punitionem publicam delicti ob bonum publicum.

4 It DIFFERS secondly, because the Denunciator is not bound to prove the crime by witnesses, whereas the Accuser is bound to prove it, according to Arret. §. fin. quaest. 7. et alios; but I think even the denunciant is bound to prove it by one witness, as others teach, excepting the cases of the Holy Inquisition.

> DIFFERT secundo, quia Denunciator non tenetur crimen probare testibus, Accusator vero tenetur probare, apud Arret. §. fin. quaest. 7. et alios; sed arbitror, etiam denunciantem uno teste probare teneri, ut docent alii, excipe casus Sancti Inquisitionis.

5 It DIFFERS thirdly, in that on account of a denunciation the whole penalty of the law is not to be inflicted: on account of an accusation, however, the whole penalty is to be inflicted, if the crime be proved. So the Doctors commonly teach, in Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 45. et Saytum lib. 12. cap. 10. and this last difference is gathered from the cap. Inquisitionis, de accusat. see on these tom. 4. disp. 27. de conscient. quaest. 10. sect. 5.

> DIFFERT tertio, quod ob denunciationem non est infligenda tota poena iuris: ob accusationem vero tota poena est infligenda, si crimen probetur. Ita docent communiter Doctores apud Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 45. et Saytum lib. 12. cap. 10. et haec ultima differentia colligitur ex cap. Inquisitionis, de accusat. vide de his tom. 4. disp. 27. de conscient. quaest. 10. sect. 5.

6 THEREFORE, once the denunciation is presented, the Judge proceeds ex officio against the denounced, and so it is commonly observed in practice, as Pract. Papien. Boss. testifies tit. de denunc. Clato §. fin. quaest. 7. Philip of Bictis of Camerino in Praxi crimin. tract. 2. All of which (says Clarus,) must be understood both of the denunciation made by necessity of office, and of that made by anyone else whatsoever who can lawfully denounce.

> IGITUR praesentata denunciatione, Iudex ex officio contra denunciatum procedit, et ita communiter in praxi servatur, teste Pract. Papien. Boss. tit. de denunc. Clato §. fin. quaest. 7. Philippo de Bictis Camerinensi in Praxi crimin. tract. 2. Quae omnia (ait Clarus,) intelligenda sunt, tam de denunciatione, quae fit ex necessitate officii, quam de ea, quae fit a quocumque alio, qui legitime denunciare potest.

7 But I PREMISE that some crimes are private, which tend to private harm: others public, which rush into public harm. Of the former kind are sins of gluttony, pride, private theft, and the like; of the latter kind are those that are against God, such as heresy, blasphemy, the overthrow of temples, or their burnings; or against the Church, such as violation of immunity, the injury of the majesty of a Prince, rebellions, treasons, public banditry, and the like.

> PRAEMITTO autem, delicta alia esse privata, quae in privatum vergunt damnum: Alia publica, quae in publicum damnum ruunt. Prioris generis sunt peccata gulae, superbiae, furti privati, et similia; posterioris generis sunt ea, quae contra Deum sunt, ut haeresis, blasphemia, eversio Templorum, vel eorum incendia; vel contra Ecclesiam, ut violatio immunitatis, maiestatis Principis laesio, rebelliones, proditiones, publica latrocinia, et similia.

8 Among Religious there are some things which can tend to scandal and contagion, such as notorious fornication, and the like. And these are counted among public crimes, which are also called "excepted", as Rodriguez numbers in ordine iudic. cap. 13. num. 6. Valerius de differ. utriusque fori, 2. inquisitio, diff. ultim. Miranda in ordin. iudic. quaest. 11. art. 2. Ximenez in declar. reg. cap. 10. quaest. 2. concl. 3. num. 17. Camerinensis num. 5. loco citato.

> IN Religiosis sunt aliqua, quae possunt vergere in scandalnm, et contagium, ut nota fornicatio, et similia. Et haec inter crimina publica, quae etiam excepta vocantur, numerant Rodriquez in ordine iudic. cap. 13. num. 6. Valerius de differ. utriusque fori, 2. inquisitio, diff. ultim. Miranda in ordin. iudic. quaest. 11. art. 2. Ximenez in declar. reg. cap. 10. quaest. 2. concl. 3. num. 17. Camerinensis num. 5. loco citato.

9 To these give their assent Suarez de Fide, Spe, et Charitate disp. 8. sect. 6. Sanchez Tom. 2. lib. 6. cap. 56. num. 50. Bonet. ibi, cap. 12.

> ARRIDENT Suarez de Fide, Spe, et Charitate disp. 8. sect. 6. Sanchez Tom. 2. lib. 6. cap. 56. num. 50. Bonet. ibi, cap. 12.

10 In general, however, all crimes which the law declares are held as public, according to Bictus, such as homicide, are homicide, adultery, the crime of falsity, as appears in Lib. I. ff. de publ. iud. It is the common opinion of many Doctors, especially the Gloss on Rubr. 6. quaest. 1. Farinac. quaest. 49. Sotus on concealing a secret, memb. 2. quaest. 4. Rodriguez tom. 2. quaest. 5. art. 2. Miranda in ord. iud. quaest. 1. art. 2. The holy Doctor recalls many crimes of this kind in confessionali, cap. 9. and brings forward Canons imposing public penalties, plainly when they have been proclaimed.

> In universum vero omnia delicta, quae a lege declarantur, ut publica habentur, apud Bictum, ut sunt homicidium, sunt homicidium, adulterium, crimen falsi, ut patet Lib. I. ff. de publ. iud. Est multorum Doctorum, praesertim Glossae in Rubr. 6. quaest. 1. Farinac. quaest. 49. Soti de tegendo secreto, memb. 2. quaest. 4. Rodriquez tomo 2. quaest. 5. art. 2. Mirandus in ord. iud. quaest. 1. art. 2. Plurima huiusmodi crimina recenset S. Doctor in confessionali, cap. 9. et Canones adducit iniungentes publicas poenas, sane cum proclamata sunt.

11 Some assert that crimes of this kind can be denounced without previous fraternal correction.

> Huiusmodi crimina posse absque praevia fraterna correptione denunciari asserunt aliqui.

12 D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7. is brought forward, and others whom Bouer. in Direct. part. 1. cap. 13. cites; Bisctus quaest. 15. The reason is, because the common good ought to be preferred to the particular good of the delinquent, and a public sin is not to be left without public punishment, as Rodriguez notes part. 2. quaest. 6. art. 4. after D. Bonavent. loco cit. Among these place Fornication, at least if it be not secret. See Diana part. 2. tract. 2. resol. 69.

> Adducitur D. Thom. 1. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7. et alii, quos referunt Bouer. in Direct. part. 1. cap. 13. Bisctus quaest. 15. Ratio est, quia bonum commune bono particulari delinquentis praeferri debet, et peccatum publicum sine publica punitione non est relinquendum, ut notat Rodriquez part. 2. quaest. 6. art. 4. post D. Bonavent. loco cit. Inter haec ponatur Fornicatio, saltem si secreta non sit. Vide Dianam part. 2. tract. 2. resol. 69.

13 And they say the same must be asserted of crimes which are to another's harm pending in the future, according to almost all the Doctors, in Bouerius ibidem, cap. 14.

> Et idem aiunt asserendum de criminibus, quae sunt in alterius damnum pendens in futurum, secundum omnes fere Doctores apud Bouerium ibidem, cap. 14.

14 Similarly they say the same of crimes public, or notorious, in another sense, in a city, college, etc. of which D. Bonavent. 4. dist. 13. quaest. 4. For secrets of this kind do not need correction. So teach Sotus de teg. secret. mem. 2. quaest. 5. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 8. dub. 6. Valentia 2. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 10. puncto 5. Miranda in ordine iud. quaest. 11. art 1. and others commonly, to whom Camerinus subscribes.

Similiter idem dicunt de criminibus, alio sensu publicis, seu notoriis, in civitate, collegio, etc. de quibus D. Bonavent. 4. dist. 13. quaest. 4. Huiusmodi enim secreta non egent correptione, Id docent Sotus de teg. secret. mem. 2. quaest. 5. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 8. dub. 6. Valentia 2. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 10. puncto 5. Miranda in ordine iud. quaest. 11. art 1. et alii communiter, quibus subscribit Camerinus.

15 He extends these even to private crimes, that although hidden they can be denounced judicially, without previous correction, and he cites Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 10. Navar. in manu. cap. 18. num. 30. Adrianus in 4. de correp. fraterna, col. 17. Tranc. Aretinus in praxi, part. 2. cap. 9. art. 2.

Extendit is etiam haec ad crimina privata, etiamsi occulta, quod possint iudicialiter denunciari, sine praevia correptione, et allegat Sayrum lib. 12. cap. 10. Navar. in manu. cap. 18. num. 30. Adrianum in 4. de correp. fraterna, col. 17. Tranc. Aretinum in praxi, part. 2. cap. 9. art. 2.

16 Their reason is, because in such a denunciation, as also in an accusation, the amendment of the delinquent alone is not intended, but that the penalty due be imposed upon him, or the satisfaction due be shown to the injured party, as Reginaldus also notes tract. 2. lib. 25. cap. 32. Bonacina Tract. de Legibus, disp. 10. quaest. 2. puncto 5. and he refers to Diana p. p. tract. 4. resol. 2. where he cites many: Sanctarellus Tract. de haeres. cap. 9. Sanatius in select. disp. 11. num. 56. Bonac. tract. variar. disp. 6. part. 3. num. 9. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7. concl. 2. Villalob. sum. part. 2. tract. 4. diffic. 11. Suarez tract. de fide, disp. 20. sect. 4. num. 11. Azor. part. 1. l. 6. cap. 19. quaesito 9. Turtrianus 2. 2. tract. 1. disp. 58. dub. 3. Henriquez lib. 2. cap. 24. num. 10. in Glossa littera C. Simanca in Cathol. instit. titulo 19. numero 11.

Ratio eorum est, quia in tali denunciatione, sicut etiam in accusatione non intenditur sola emendatio delinquentis, sed ut poena ei debita iniungatur, vel satisfactio debita parti exhibeatur, ut notant etiam Reginaldus tract. 2. lib. 25. cap. 32. Bonacina Tract. de Legibus, disp. 10. quaest. 2. puncto 5. et remittit ad Dianam p. p. tract. 4. resol. 2. ubi citat multos, Sanctarellum Tract. de haeres. cap. 9. Sanatium in select. disp. 11. num. 56. Bonac. tract. variar. disp. 6. part. 3. num. 9. Sylvium 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7. concl. 2. Villalob. sum. part. 2. tract. 4. diffic. 11. Suarez tract. de fide, disp. 20. sect. 4. num. 11. Azor. part. 1. l. 6. cap. 19. quaesito 9. Turtrianum 2. 2. tract. 1. disp. 58. dub. 3. Henriquez lib. 2. cap. 24. num. 10. in Glossa littera C. Simancam in Cathol. instit. titulo 19. numero 11.

17 Therefore they infer that no sin has fraternal correction to be premised to it, since they say all sins are public.

Itaque nulli peccato fraternam correctionem praemittendam inferunt, dum omnia esse publica dicunt.

18 Yet the opposite opinion is true, which the holy Doctor defends in the places I cited, in the disputation on Charity, sect. 3. on Fraternal Correction. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 35. art. 7. with all his disciples.

Opposita tamen sententia est vera, quam tuetur S. Doctor locis, a me adductis, disputatione de Charitate, sect. 3. de Correptione fraterna. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 35. art. 7. cum omnibus discipulis.

20 Indeed Portel. in dubiis regul. v. correclio fraterna, num. 1. extends it even to the crime of heresy. Likewise Reginaldus in prax. tract. 2. lib. 24. cap. 3. sect. 6. numero 51. provided, however, it be firmly judged that he ought to be amended.

> Imo Portel. in dubiis regul. v. correclio fraterna, num. 1. id extendit etiam ad crimen haeresis. Itidem Reginaldus in prax. tract. 2. lib. 24. cap. 3. sect. 6. numero 51. si tamen firmiter existimetur emendandus.

21 The Repertorium Inquisitorum adds, V. denunciator, Gundissalvus de haeret. quaest. 10. num. 10. Decianus tract. 1. lib. 5. cap. 30. And on the case of solicitation in confession Fagundez teaches it, de praec. Eccl. tract. 2. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 31. where he says: Before the denunciation is made by the woman solicited in confession, fraternal correction must be premised, if there be hope of amendment, because the precept of correction is of natural and divine law; but the precept of this denunciation is human; hence it cannot prevail against the precept of natural law. But for fraternal correction to be judged profitable, it is not enough that it be done once and not profit; but it must be applied again and again, so long as amendment is hoped for on the judgment of a prudent man. So Fagundez, and recently Peirinus in Privil. Minim. tract. 2. constit. 4. of Gregory XV. §. 9. num. 26. and the constitut. of Paul V. §. 2. num. 26. Fagundez requires the same in 6. praec. Lib. 6. cap. 12. from D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 3.

> Addere Repertorium Inquisitorum, V. denunciator, Gundissalvum de haeret. quaest. 10. num. 10. Decianum tract. 1. lib. 5. cap. 30. Et de casu sollicitationis in confess. id docet Fagundez de praec. Eccl. tract. 2. lib. 4. cap. 2. num. 31. ubi ait : Antequam fiat denunciatio a muliere sollicitata in confessione, praemittenda est fraterna correctio, si detur spes emendationis, quia praeceptum correctionis est de iure naturali, et divino; praeceptum vero huius denunciationis est humanum; unde non potest praevalere adversus praeceptum iuris naturalis. Ut autem correctio fraterna iudicetur profutura, non satis est, semel fieri, et non prodesse; sed oportet iterum, atque iterum adhiberi, quamdiu indicio prudentis speretur emendatio. Haec Fagundez, et nouiter Peirinus in Privil. Minim. tract. 2. constit. 4. Gregorii XV. §. 9. num. 26. et constitut. Pauli V. §. 2. num. 26. Idem expetit Fagundez in 6. praec. Lib. 6. cap. 12. ex D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 3.

22 I add others who grant indeed that in the crime of formal heresy correction need not be premised; but in others, in those savoring of heresy, it must be premised. So Fagundez Tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 4. num. 11. Mollesius in sum. tom. 1. tract. 7. cap. 24. num. 25. Ortiz. sum. cap. 21. num. 17. Homobon. de exam. Eccl. part. 1. tract. 7. cap. 6. quaest. 19. and from the Doctors cited in the second opinion.

> Addo alios, qui concedunt quidem, in crimine formalis haeresis non esse praemittendam correptionem; in aliis tamen, haeresim sapientibus, praemittendam. Ita Fagundez Tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 4. num. 11. Mollesius in sum. tom. 1. tract. 7.

cap. 24. num. 25. Ortiz. sum. cap. 21. num. 17. Homobon. de exam. Eccl. part. 1. tract. 7. cap. 6. quaest. 19. et ex Doctoribus citatis in secunda opinione.

23 On this matter, besides those cited, treat Aldreta de relig. discip. tuenda, lib. 1. cap. 5. §. 4. numero 28. Onuphrius opusc. de sigillo, serm. 2. quaest. 2. dubio 4. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 14.

De hac vero materia agunt, praeter citatos, Aldreta de relig. discip. tuenda, lib. 1. cap. 5. §. 4. numero 28. Onuphr. opusc. de sigillo, serm. 2. quaest. 2. dubio 4. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 14.

24 Finally some, in Delrio tract. 3. disq. lib. 5. sect. 4. num. 6. say correction must be premised even if it be doubtful whether it would profit; which opinion he judges very equitable, though he himself, and deservedly, thinks the contrary.

Tandem aliqui apud Delrium tract. 3. disq. lib. 5. sect. 4. num. 6. dicunt, praemittendam correptionem, etiamsi dubium sit : An sit profutura; quam sententiam valde aequam existimat, licet ipse, et merito, contrarium sentiat.

25 You have very many authors in me loco citato de corrept. and in Bouerius in direct. part. 1. cap. 14.

Plurimos habes apud me loco citato de corrept. et Bouerium in direct. part. 1. cap. 14.

26 Philip Biscetus num. 5. says these are to be understood thus: that the Gospel requires correction to be made prior to evangelical denunciation, but not to judicial.

Philippus Bisctus num. 5. dicit, hos ita intelligendos, ut requirat Evangelium, correptionem fieri praeviam denuntiationi Evangelicae, non autem iudiciali.

27 Or if anyone intends him to speak even of the judicial, it is not to be followed, he says; and he wants what was said to proceed, attention being given to Canon law, according to which all crimes are public, as the Gloss delivers in cap. infames, verse Fures, 6. quaest. 1. and so he says the Canonists teach, as Baldus testifies, and of the common opinion Hostiensis is witness, whom Ananias follows cap. statuimus, after number 19. de maledict. and Julius Clarus subscribes to all these lib. 5. §. 1. v. hac tamen. But since correction is not to be premised to public crimes, it follows that it is now to be premised to none.

Vel si quis eotam de iudiciali loqui intendat, sequendum non esse, ait; et hoc quod dictum est procedere vult, attento iure Canonico, secundum quod omnia crimina sunt publica, ut tradit Glossa in cap. infames, versu. Fures, 6. quaest. 1. et ita ait docere Canonistas, ut testatur Baldus, et de communi, testis est Hostiensis, quem sequitur Ananias cap. statuimus, post numerum 19. de maledict. et his omnibus subscribere Iulium Clarum lib. 5. §. 1. v. hac tamen. Cum autem publicis criminibus non sit praemittenda correptio; sequitur, nulli iam esse praemittendam.

28 But Camer. num. 6. adds that correction is not required by justice, but can be made, so that it be required by Charity, if the delinquent be hidden and of good fame, and amendment be hoped for, and he cites Aretinus after D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1.

Addit vero Camer. num. 6. correptionem ex iustitia non requiri, sed fieri posse, ut requiratur ex Charitate, si delinquens sit occultus, et bonae famae, et speretur emendatio, et adducit Aretinum post D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1.

29 He observes also that although he be amended by correction, yet he could lawfully be denounced, or accused according to Gregory of Valencia disput. 5. quaest. 12. puncto 1. verse dico tertio, and he says this to be the mind of D. Thomas. For, the good of the corrected man being had, the denunciator or accuser can still lawfully propose to himself the aim of punitive justice, that is, the common good, that others may abstain from crimes through fear of the penalty; and therefore denounce, or accuse, the man already amended. But these things are false even with regard to Religious, as they commonly teach with Diana part. 2. tract. 2. resol. 57.

> Animadvertit etiam, quod licet ex correptione emendaretur, licite tamen ille posset denunciari, vel accusari secundum Gregorium de Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 12. puncto 1. vers. dico tertio, et ait, esse mentem D. Thomae. Nam habito bono correcti, potest licite denunciator, vel accusator adhuc sibi proponere Scopum punitivae iustitiae, idest bonum commune, ut alii formidine poenae a delictis abstineant; Et propterea denunciare, vel accusare emendatum. Sed haec, etiam quo ad Regulares falsa sunt, ut docent communiter cum Diana part. 2. tract. 2. resol. 57.

30 AS TO solicitors indeed in confession, he teaches absolutely quaest. 122. quaest. 42. that correction is by no means to be premised, and he cites Henriquez, Paramus, Rodericus, Acugna, and Navar. in the places related, by Rodericus in compend. quaest. resol. resol. 13. and recalls very many others in Diana p. p. tract. 4. resol. 21. and part. 4. tract. 5. resol. 24.

> QUOAD sollicitantes vero in confessione, absolute docet quaest. 122. quaest. 42. nullo modo praemittendam correptionem, et adducit Henriquez Paramum Roderiquum, Acugnam, et Navar. locis relatis, a Roderico in compend. quaest. resol. resol. 13. et alios plurimos recenset apud Dianam p. p. tract. 4. resol. 21. et part. 4. tract. 5. resol. 24.

31 HE EXTENDS IT, even if he be amended, and refers to Suarez de Fide disp. 40. sect. 6. num. 13. Sancius in select. disp. 11. num. 52. and others in Diana tract. 4. resol. 3. Indeed, even if the Priest repent immediately after the solicitation, he is to be denounced. He asserts Bonacina tract. var. disp. 6. punct. 3. num. 4. Sanctarellus de haeresi, cap. 9. and 44. dubio unico.

> AMPLIAT, etiamsi emendatus sit, et refert Suarez de Fide disp. 40. sect. 6. num. 13. Sancium in select. disp. 11. num. 52. et alios apud Dianam tract. 4. resol. 3. Imo, etiamsi ille Sacerdos statim post sollicitationem poeniteat, denunciandum. Asserit Bonacinam tract. var. disp. 6. punct. 3. num. 4. Sanctarellum de haeresi, cap. 9. et 44. dubio unico.

32 I CONFESS that I mingle tears, while I put forward my opinion.

> FATEOR, me lachrymis commisceri, dum meam profero sententiam.

33 FIRST indeed I do not refuse that sins looking to public ruin be warded off as contagious, most of all heresy, which is the worst pest, like a creeping cancer. Therefore very recently the decree of the most holy Lord Alexander VII rightly came forth, gravely enjoining the denunciation of those suspected of heresy, with no previous correction. And this is to be observed; as we saw tom. 4. disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. sect. 5. ad propositionem 5.

> PRIMO quidem non renuo, peccata publicam perniciem spectantia, tanquam contagiosa arcenda, maxime vero haeresim, quae est pestis pessima, ut cancer serpens. Ideo merito prodiit novissime decretum sanctissimi D. Alexandri VII. graviter iniungens denunciationem suspectorum de haeresi, nulla praevia correctione. Et hoc servandum est; ut vidimus tom. 4. disp. 17. de conscientia, quaest. 10. sect. 5. ad propositionem 5.

34 AS TO the sin of solicitation, I see it to be dangerous, as showing a cauterized conscience, while it abuses the holy Sacrament of salvation, to the damnation of himself, and of others, even penitents; and therefore I do not dare to defend those saying that correction is to be premised absolutely, or that amendment is easily to be believed.

> QUOAD peccatum sollicitationis, video, esse periculosum, ut indicans conscientiam cauteriatam, dum Sacramento sancto salutis abutitur, ad sui, et aliorum, etiam poenitentium damnationem, et ideo non audeo tueri, dicentes, praemittendam absolute correptionem, aut facile credendam emendationem.

35 IF, however, the solicitor be truly amended, I do not condemn the opinion of those saying he is not to be denounced, which Sotus lib. 3. quaest. 5. art. 5. teaches, Molfesius in summa, tom. 1. tract. 7. cap. 24. num. 21. Genuensis in praxi, cap. 18. num. 6. Naldus in summa, verbo Accusator. Victorellus in notis ad manuale, Navar. cap. 25. num. 33. Filliucius de casib. reservat. casu 2. num. 8. Zanardus in Direct. confess. part. 3. cap. 31. Rodericus Acugna Tract. de confessoribus sollicitantibus, quaest. 3. num. 15. and there Freitas num. 34. Megala p. p. lib. 1. cap. 5. num. 26. Portell. in his additions to the dub. regular. sollicitare fam. num. 18. Peirinus in Privil. Minimorum, tract. 2. constitut. 4. of Gregory XV. § 6. num. 31. But the decree of the Holy Inquisition is to be set before the opinion of these men.

> SI tamen vere sollicitans sit emendatus, non reprobo opinionem dicentium, non esse denunciandum, quod docent Sotus lib. 3. quaest. 5. art. 5. Molfesius in summa, tomo 1. tract. 7. cap. 24. num. 21. Genuensis in praxi, cap. 18. num. 6. Naldus in summa, verbo Accusator. Victorellus in notis ad manuale, Navar. cap. 25. num. 33. Filliucius de casib. reservat. casu 2. num. 8. Zanardus in Direct. confess. part. 3. cap. 31. Rodericus Acugna Tract. de confessoribus sollicitantibus, quaest. 3. num. 15. et ibi Freitas num. 34. Megala p. p. lib. 1. cap. 5. num. 26. Portell. additionibus ad dub. regular. sollicitare fam. num. 18. Peirinus in Privil. Minimorum, tract. 2. constitut. 4. Gregorii XV. § 6. num. 31. At decretum Sanctae Inquisitionis praeponendum est horum opinioni.

36 There is certainly DIFFICULTY in knowing: Whether he be amended. Felinus in cap. testimonium de testibus asserts that sacramental Confession proves someone to be amended. Genuensis in praxi, cap. 18. num. 6. thinks amendment can be presumed, if such a one has obtained the Jubilee. Homobonus de exam. Eccl. part. 1. tract. 7. cap. 7. quaest. 33. Freitas in addit. ad tract. de confessor. sollicitantibus, quaest. 8. num. 32. Riccius part. 2. decis. 159. mem. 14. and others say that he who has lived well for three years is presumed amended.

> DIFFICULTAS sane est in cognoscendo: An sit emendatus. Felinus in cap. testimonium de testibus, Confessionem Sacramentalem asserit probate, aliquem esse emendatum. Genuensis in praxi, cap. 18. num. 6. putat, posse praesumi emendationem, si talis consecutus est Iubilaeum. Homobonus de exam. Eccl. part. 1. tract. 7. cap. 7. quaest. 33. Freitas in addit. ad tract. de confessor. sollicitantibus, quaest. 8. num. 32. Riccius part. 2. decis. 159. mem. 14. et alii aiunt, quod qui per triennium bene vixerit, emendatus praesumitur.

37 But SOME teach that this is left to the judgment of a good man, who, the quality of the persons having been considered, will judge the whole matter with prudence and maturity, because it is arduous to know the correction of such persons; and so speaking, Freitas noted it even of heretics quaest. 18. num. 139.

> ALIQUI vero docent, id permitti iudicio boni viri, qui considerata qualitate personarum, totam rem iudicabit cum prudentia, et maturitate, quia arduum est cognoscere correctionem huiusmodi personarum, et ita loquens, etiam de haereticis notavit Freitas quaest. 18. num. 139.

38 Yet Fagundez tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 4. num. 17. LIMITS this opinion, and others, with regard to the formal heretic, about whom we can always doubt whether he is truly amended. For heretics are very crafty, and like a contagion they spread their virus. Therefore suitably provision was made against these by Alexand. VII.

> LIMITANT tamen hanc sententiam Fagundez tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 4. num. 17. et alii quo ad haereticum formalem, de quo semper dubitare possumus, an re vera sit emendatus. Sunt enim haeretici valde subdoli, et more contagiosi virus diffundunt. Ideo apte ab Alexand. VII. contra hos est provisum.

39 FOR THE REST I could never perceive those little subtleties of Camerinus, and Caspensis, keenly devised with Cydonian zeal, while they decree all sins to be public and free them from correction.

> DE caetero nunquam percipere potui argutulas illas Camerini, et Caspensis, Zelo Cydonico acriter conditas, dum omnia peccata esse publica statuunt, et a correptione liberant.

40 ASSUREDLY the Gospel ought to be of greater weight to any Christian than the little reasonings of these men: If thy brother sin against thee, etc. which is the order from Christ the Lord, precepted by divine law, as D. Bonaventure notes, D. Thomas, and innumerable others in Diana part. 3. Tractat. 2. resolut. 37. But among them the Gospel of correction is wholly banished.

> PROFECTO Evangelium cuilibet Christiano debet esse maioris ponderis, quam horum ratiunculae: Si peccaverit in te frater tuus, etc. qui ordo est a Christo Domino, lege divina praeceptus, ut notat etiam D. Bonaventura, D. Thomas, et innumeri apud Dianam part. 3. Tractat. 2. resolut. 37. Apud eos vero exulat omnino Evangelium correptionis.

41 ADD also the natural law of preserving the good name of another. I do not refuse that the satisfactions due for the injury can be exacted from the insolent one, and restitution of goods from the thief; but that zeal of justice is not Christian, to exact vengeance.

> ADDE et ius naturale servandi alienam famam. Non renuo, satisfactiones debitas exigi posse iniuriae a contumelioso, et facultatum a fure; sed zelus ille iustitiae non est Christianae, exigere vindictam.

42 FURTHER, that distinction of Charity, and Justice is empty; for what is against Charity cannot be an act of justice, lest we should wish to stir up among the virtues an unjust offensive war; see what I related above de correptione fraterna.

> PORRO distinctio illa de Charitate, et Iustitia inanis est; quod enim contra Charitatem est, nequit esse actus iustitiae, ne velimus inter virtutes iniustum bellum offensivum suscitare, vide quae supra retuli de correptione fraterna.

43 But what Bictus says, that the authors of our opinion speak of evangelical denunciation, which correction precedes: Be it so. But if it is unjust to bring a charge, as to a Father, before correction; it is more unjust as to a Judge. Therefore Christ also speaks gradually: If he hear thee not, tell the Church, and if he hear not the Church, let him be to thee as a heathen, etc.

> QUOD vero ait Bictus, authores nostrae sententiae loqui de denuntiatione Evangelica, quam praecedit correctio; Esto. Sed si iniquum est deferre, tanquam Patri, ante correptionem; iniquius est tanquam Iudici. Ideo et Christus gradatim loquitur: Si te non audierit, dic Ecclesiae, et si Ecclesiam non audierit, sit tibi sicut Ethnicus, etc.

44 FURTHER we saw the authors speak of judicial denunciation, pertaining even to the Holy Office of the Inquisition, also in the gravest cases.

> PORRO vidimus, authores loqui de denunciatione iudiciali, et ad sanctum officium Inquisitionis, etiam in casibus gravissimis pertinente.

45 But what he miserably cites, that all sins are public, from cap. infamis, 6. quaest. 1. to compel all faults to the tribunals, is empty. For there the Gloss only says: There is also a certain canonical infamy, which is inflicted from any mortal sin, as here, and 32. quaest. 5. Indeed canonical Infamy is not to the point here; for even bigamists, and those defiled in body, are infamous according to the Canons. Therefore that is rather called a certain indecency which Bictus brings in beyond his purpose, to assert every sin to be public.

QUOD vero, ut omnes culpas ad tribunalia cogat, misere adducit, omnia peccata esse publica ex cap. infamis, 6. quaest. 1. inane est. Ibi enim Glossa solum ait: Est etiam quaedam infamia canonica, quae irrogatur ex quolibet peccato mortali, ut hic, et 32. quaest. 5. Infamia quidem Canonica hic non facit ad rem; nam etiam bigami, et corpore vitiati sunt infames, secundum Canones. Ea igitur dicitur potius indecentia quaedam, quam extra propositum affert Bictus, ad omne peccatum publicum asseverandum.

46 For truly 35. quaest. 5. cap. 21. where one leaving his wife, fornication excepted, is said to lose the testimony of generous dignity, or of fame, while he so remains separated, as the Gloss there says, or to bring in testimony among the other generous; is not to the point for inducing every sin to be public. For what did Christ wish to teach, saying: If he sin against thee?

ENIM vero 35. quaest. 5. cap. 21. ubi relinquens uxorem, excepta fornicatione, dicitur generosae dignitatis testimonium amittere, sive famae, dum sic manet separatus, ut ibi Glossa, seu, ut inter alios generosos inferat testimonium; non facit ad rem ad inducendum omne peccatum publicum esse. Quid enim voluit docere Christus, dicens: Si peccaverit in te?

47 HERE the author brings forward his own confrater Caspensis quaest. 16. and those related by Diana part. 7. tract. 3. resol. 44. Trullench. in Decal. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 5. dub. 16. and others saying it is not necessary to premise previous correction to paternal denunciation, and he alleges S. Bonaventure, and S. Thomas in Caspensis, but undeservedly, as I showed in the Disputation on Charity, sect. 3. on fraternal correction, question 1. and 2. And Diana concludes thus: I judge both opinions probable, although I held the necessity of previous correction p. 3. tract. 2. resol. 37. and now I hold it. Truly I have already shown sufficiently that S. Bonaventure (whom Turrianus also opposes 2. 1. disput. 89. dub. 4.) stands for us.

HIC author e nostris confratrem suum Caspensem adducit quaest. 16. et relatos a Diana part. 7. tract. 3. resol. 44. Trullench. in Decal. Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 5. dub. 16. et alios dicentes, non esse necessarium, praeviam correptionem denunciationi paternae praemittere, et allegat S. Bonaventuram, et S. Thomam apud Caspensem, sed immerito, ut ostendi Disputat. de Charitate, sect. 3. de fraterna correptione, quaestione 1. et 2. Et Diana sic concludit: Ego utramque sententiam probabilem existimo esse, licet licet pro necessitate praeviae correptionis tenuerim p. 3. tract. 2. resol. 37. et nunc teneam. Sane D. Bonaventuram (quem opponit etiam Turrianus 2. 1. disput. 89. dub. 4.) iam satis ostendi pro nobis stare.

48 ¶ To the argument they press from Valentia, I say, Christ knew very well that sin is against someone. Therefore he says: If he sin against thee, that he might express that secret correction is a precept, even in the greatest offenses that can be inflicted against us, and much more in the others which are committed by a neighbor before our eyes.

49 But I do not see how they wish to change the divine law itself, and violate the right which a neighbor has from birth, by bringing to the public tribunal a secret lapse, which otherwise does not tend to public ruin. For that others be deterred from sin by this is not enough, for the order of the Gospel to be changed, or the law of nature to be overthrown, by making known the secrets of each one; so that no place at all remain for the order instituted by Christ, or rather declared by natural law.

Non video autem, quo pacto divinam legem velint ipsi immutare, et ius quod habet proximus a nativitate violare, deferendo ad publicum tribunal secretum lapsum, qui alioqui non tendat in publicam perniciem. Quod enim alii per hoc detetteantur a peccato, non est satis, ut immutetur ordo Evangelii, aut ius naturae evertatur, manifestando occulta cuiusque, ut sic nullus omnino locus ordini a Christo instituto, seu potius a naturali iure declarato, reliquus sit.

50 Let Valentia teach that; let Suarez also teach it in his Religione, in which right is renounced. And if this can be done legitimately without difficulty, why do they press this so much, that they have their novices renounce their right of nature?

Doceat id Valentia; doceat quoque Suarez in sua Religione, in qua renunciatur iuri. Et si id absque difficultate potest fieri legitime, cur ipsi in hoc adeo premunt, ut renuncient novitii eorum suo iuri naturae?

51 Why have Pontifical diplomas emanated, that this order may be sustained? Why so many volumes, that this rite, the renunciation being in place, may be defended against many?

Cur Pontificia emanarunt diplomata, ut ordinem hunc sustineant? Cur tot volumina, ut ritum hunc, posita renunciatione, tueantur contra multos?

52 ¶ I add that if to bring a charge to the Prelate, as to a father, these things were instituted by Christ as necessary preludes; much more strictly before they be brought to public judgment — which bringing the adversaries did not see, saying that correction must be premised before evangelical denunciation; but not before judicial. Certainly greater harm is inflicted on fame, while the sin is brought to a tribunal. But if the bringing to the Prelate, as to a Father, were greater, one could use that denunciation, so that he might proceed to judgment, which the adversaries themselves shrink from, as Bictus confesses cap. 16. num. 6. citing Sotus, Suarez above, and Cardinal de Lugo de iust. tom. 2. disp. 37. sect. 7. num. 81. Dianam resol. 46. et 47. and others among these.

53 ¶ I know some have said, while the crime is not wholly hidden, but can be proved in judgment, then charity, by which the cause has been begun, commands justice, that it begin the judicial process, if in such a way there were hope that the delinquent would be corrected. So Filliuc. tom. 2. tract. 28. cap. 8. num. 164. Sanchez l. 2. l. 6. dub. 11. num. 11. Trullench in decal. l. 1. cap. 5. dub. 16. num. 8. whom Bictus arrayed at his side, that he might show the firmness of his opinion.

54 But these men speak, when the amendment of the sinner could not be had with less harm to the sinner; for if there be hope of amendment through secret correction, they understand according to the Gospel that one is not to run to the tribunals; for then charity cannot command justice the defamation of a penitent sinner, unless his private penitence would leave the wounds open to the ruin of the Republic; because then charity, being ordered, is bound to provide for the common good.

> At loquuntur isti, quando minori damno peccatoris non posset eius emendatio haberi; si enim sit spes emendationis per correptionem secretam; intelligunt iuxta Evangelium non esse ad tribunalia currendum, tunc enim charitas non potest imperare iustitiae diffamationem peccatoris poenitentis, nisi eius privata poenitentia relinqueret extra vulnera in Reipublicae perniciem, quia tunc ordinata charitas providere tenetur bono communi.

55 ¶ Therefore, if the sinner should spurn the correction, or you knew that from correction he would rather draw poison, you could omit fraternal correction, as D. Bonavent. also teaches ad 17. Lucae, where this is treated.

56 But if the crime were to the grave harm of the Republic, the Judge could use the knowledge which he has as a Father, and obligate one who knows, and paternally denounces, to denounce judicially, while no other way is at hand for warding off that public harm, or even the private harm of an innocent.

> Quod si crimen esset in grave Reipublicae damnum; posset Iudex uti notitia, quam habet, ut Pater, et obligare scientem, et paterne denunciantem ad iudicialiter denunciandum, dum non suppetit alia via ad illud damnum publicum, vel etiam privatum innocentis arcendum.

57 But if he will not denounce, the Judge will be able to create a fiscal, who will denounce, while he hopes that he will have proofs. So Bictus, citing Caspensis tom. 2. tract. 17. disp. 6. sect. 3. num. 35. Suarez de Relig. lib. 10. cap. 1. 2. et 12. Dianam resol. 46. et 47. who however adds that one cannot proceed to judgment in this case, except so far as is necessary for obtaining amendment.

> Quod si ille nolit denunciare, poterit Iudex fiscalem creare, qui denunciet, dum sperat, se habiturum probationes. Ita Bictus, adducens Caspensem tomo 2. tract. 17. disp. 6. sect. 3. num. 35. Suarez de Relig. lib. 10. cap. 1. 2. et 12. Dianam resol. 46. et 47. qui tamen subdit, non posse procedi ad iudicium in hoc casu, nisi quantum necesse est ad emendationem obtinendam.

58 But Sayrus admonishes l. 12. cap. 10. num. 7. that it rarely happens before a secular Judge that a transition is made from evangelical denunciation to judicial, for the reason that crimes are not brought before secular judges, except by accusation, or judicial denunciation. Likewise a secular Judge never receives crimes, except that he punish publicly, and in writing before a Notary; among Ecclesiastical Judges, however, this happens.

> Admonet vero Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 7. raro evenire apud Iudicem saecularem, fieri transitum a denunciatione Evangelica ad iudicialem, eo quod crimina apud iudices saeculares non deferuntur, nisi per accusationem, vel denunciationem iudicialem. Item Iudex saecularis nunquam excipit crimina, nisi, ut in publico puniat, et in scriptis coram Notario; Apud Iudices vero Ecclesiasticos id contingit.

59 But all can denounce, certain conditions being posited.

> Denunciare autem possunt omnes, positis nonnullis conditionibus.

60 The first is, that the denunciant not be infamous, as Baiard. ad Clarum §. fin. quaest. 7. num. 13. Iodocus in practic. crim. cap. 7. note.

> Prima est, ut denuncians non sit infamis, ut notant Baiard. ad Clarum §. fin. quaest. 7. num. 13. Iodocus in practic. crim. cap. 7.

61 Secondly, that he not be an enemy. So the Doctors cited. Therefore a judge sins lethally by not refusing the denunciation of an enemy. So Innocentius, and Hostiensis C. dudum, v. electionis de electione. Archid. in C. quaerendum, 2. quaest. 7. Felin. in cap. quae in Ecclesiarum num. 13. de constit. Menoch. de arbitr. iud. sem. 5. casu 481. where, from the Doctors cited here, he says the denunciant is to be recognized as bringing the charge from zeal of vengeance, from the quality of the person, fierceness of countenance, manner of denouncing, etc. Megala praxi crim. canonica, cap. 10. follows.

> Secundo ne sit inimicus. Ita Doctores citati. Quare peccat lethaliter iudex non recusando denunciationem inimici. Ita Innocentius, et Hostiensis C. dudum, v. electionis de electione. Archid. in C. quaerendum, 2. quaest. 7. Felin. in cap. quae in Ecclesiarum num. 13. de constit. Menoch. de arbitr. iud. sem. 5. casu 481. ubi e citatis hic Doctoribus ait, dignosci denunciatorem Zelo vindictae deferentem, ex qualitate personae, ferocitate vultus, modo denunciandi, etc. Sequitur Megala praxi crim. canonica, cap. 10.

62 Thirdly, conspirators, and vile persons are repelled. So Barratd. Iodoc. above, and Bictus quaest. 17. num. 5.

> Tertio repelluntur conspiratores, et personae viles. Ita Barratd. Iodoc. supra, et Bictus quaest. 17. num. 5.

63 Fourthly, one excommunicated by name is not admitted to denounce. So Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 2. Rodriquez tom. 2. qq. Regul. quaest. 6. art. 3.

> Quarto excommunicatus nominatim denunciatus. Ita Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 2. Rodriquez tom. 2. qq. Regul. quaest. 6. art. 3.

64 Fifthly, a Religious is excluded from denouncing in a case of blood, unless a protestation be added. So Couar. in Clem. si furiosus, p. 2. §. 5. Rodriquez above, and it is the common teaching. But in other cases he is admitted, since he is admitted to the greater, namely to accuse. Nor does Clem. exiit §. proinde stand in the way, where accusation concerning the ownership of things, which are forbidden to them by force of profession, is interdicted. So Elizeus tract. 1. quaest. 13. num. 8.

> Quinto excluditur Religiosus a denunciando in casu sanguinis, nisi adhibita protestatione. Ita Couar. in Clem. si furiosus, p. 2. §. 5. Rodriquez supra, et est communis. In aliis vero casibus admittitur, cum admittatur ad maius, scilicet ad accusandum. Nec obstat Clem. exivit §. proinde*, ubi interdicitur accusatio circa rerum dominia, quae ipsis ex vi professionis prohibentur. Ita Elizeus* tract. 1. quaest. 13. num. 8.

65 Sixthly, a Layman is not admitted to denounce an Ecclesiastic, unless he pursue his own injury. It is the common opinion, Gloss. in summa 1. quaest. 7. and all admit it, as Foller. in pract. Crim. can. fol. 48. num. 45. says. Clar. §. fin. quaest. 14. verse propter reverentiam subscribes. He gives the reason, because Laymen are wont to be ill-disposed toward Ecclesiastics, whence they are presumed to be moved rather by hatred than by Zeal. And it is a common saying: Laymen are almost always hostile to clerics. C. Laïcos 2. quaest. 7. Which aversion is often also that of Clerics against Religious, as the holy Doctor relates quaest. 27. Super Regulam.

> Sexto Laïcus non admittitur ad denunciandum Ecclesiasticum, nisi suam prosequatur iniuriam. Est communis opinio Gloss. in summa 1. quaest. 7. et omnes admittunt, ut ait Foller. in pract. Crim. can. fol. 48. num. 45. Subscribit Clar. §. fin. quaest. 14. versu, propter reverentiam. Reddit rationem, quia Laïci solent esse malevoli Ecclesiasticorum, unde potius odio, quam Zelo moveri praesumuntur. Et est vulgatum id: Laïci fere semper clericis infesti. C. Laïcos 2. quaest. 7. Quae aversio est saepe etiam Clericorum adversus Regulares, ut refert S. Doct. quaest. 27. Super Regulam.

66 It is limited to excepted crimes, in which a Layman is admitted to denounce an Ecclesiastic, as the Gloss proves in cap. cum P. Manconella, de accusat. provided, however, he be of good fame, as the Gloss says ibi.

> Limita in criminibus exceptis, in quibus admittitur Laïcus ad denunciandum Ecclesiasticum, ut probat Glossa in cap. cum P. Manconella, de accusat. si tamen sit bonae famae, ut ait Glossa ibi.

67 You will find more persons repelled from denouncing in the following doubt, where accusation is discussed.

> Plures a denunciando repelli invenies dub. sequent. ubi de accusatione disseretur.

68 But the Denunciation ought to contain the name of the denunciant, and of the Denounced, of the Judge, of the crime committed, of the place, and of the time. So Elizeus ubi supra num. 7. otherwise it would be invalid. So commonly in Clarus quaest. 10. verse Scias autem §. fin. And it ought to produce a witness, without which the Judge cannot examine in singular, unless in place of a witness indications, or infamy, or something similar occur, as Caiet. quaest. 69. art. 2. Valentia quaest. 13. punct. 2. Deltius l. 5. disq. sect. 1. Sà v. Iudiciales actus. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 73. say, with D. Bonau. 4. dist. 13. quaest. 4. ad arg.

> Debet autem Denunciatio continere nomen denunciantis, et Denunciati, Iudicis, Criminis commissi, loci, et temporis. Ita Elizeus ubi supra num. 7. alias esset invalida. Ita communiter apud Clarum quaest. 10. vers. Scias autem §. fin. Debet et testem producere, sine quo non potest Iudex examinare in singulari, nisi loco testis indicia, vel infamia, vel quid simile occurrat, ut aiunt Caiet. quaest. 69. art. 2. Valentia quaest. 13. punct. 2. Deltius l. 5. disq. sect. 1. Sà v. Iudiciales actus. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 73. cum D. Bonau. 4. dist. 13. quaest. 4. ad arg.

69 But the denunciation CAN either be presented in writing, as concerning accusation Bartol. and Card. and others hold, in Clarum quaest. 12. Or be merely verbal, and written by a Notary, as Salyc. holds in Leg. poen. Cod. de accusat. num. 2. according to the form of the Leg. Libellorum, ff. de accusat. and it can also be done by letters, as Abbas holds in C. Licet a beato, de accusat. Bettus in praxi tit. 7. cap. 5. Arretin. in praxi, cap. 9. num. 4.

> POTEST autem denunciatio vel porrigi in scriptis, ut de accusatione tenent Bartol. et Card. et alii apud Clarum quaest. 12. Vel esse tantum verbalis, et a Notario scribi, ut tenet Salyc. in Leg. poen. Cod. de accusat. num. 2. iuxta formam Leg. Libellorum, ff. de accusat. et potest etiam fieri per litteras, ut tenent Abbas in C. Licet a beato, de accusat. Bettus in praxi tit. 7. cap. 5. Arretin. in praxi, cap. 9. num. 4.

70 The day of the date OUGHT also to be added, without which the complaint, or denunciation, would be invalid. So commonly in Clarus quaest. 10. cited, who however thinks it not necessary by the Lex Libellorum, ff. de accusat. where it is said: Neither the day, nor the hour, shall he unwillingly comprehend.

> DEBET etiam adscribi dies datae, sine qua invalida esset querela, seu denunciatio. Ita communiter apud Clarum quaest. 10. cit. qui tamen id non putat necessarium Lex Libellorum, ff. de accusat. ubi dicitur: Nec diem autem, nec horam invitus comprehendet.

71 But the Judge OUGHT gravely weigh the denunciation, and inquire into the probity of the denunciant, as Innocentius admonishes de C. Nulli, de accusat. Oldrad. cons. 224. Clar. §. fin. quaest. 15.

> DEBET autem Iudex graviter perpendere denunciationem, et quaerere de probitate denunciantis, ut monet Innocentius de C. Nulli, de accusat. Oldrad. cons. 224. Clar. §. fin. quaest. 15.

72 Let him also WEIGH the person of the denounced, as Innocentius, Oldradus, and Clarus admonish; and if he be of most upright life, and of authority, let him not easily be admitted, lest the fame of a grave man perish, according to cap. si quis sunt, and C. quaerendum, 2. quaest. 7. and D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1. ad 2. Indeed against such men let the Judge receive not a denunciation, but only an accusation, which obliges the accuser to the penalty of talion, as is gathered from C. repellantur, de accusat. and as Speculat. de denunc. §. Hostiensis, titulo de iniquis, §. 2. Glossa in c. Cum contingat de rescript. teach.

> PERPENDAT etiam personam denunciati, ut monent Innocentius, Oldradus, et Clarus, et si vitae integerrimae, et authoritatis sit, non facile admittatur, ne fama gravis viri pereat, iuxta cap. si quis sunt, et C. quaerendum, 2. quaest. 7. et D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1. ad 2. Imo contra tales non denunciationem, sed accusationem tantum recipiat Iudex, quae ad poenam talionis accusatorem obliget, ut colligitur ex C. repellantur, de accusat. et docent Speculat. de denunc. §. Hostiensis, titulo de iniquis, §. 2. Glossa in c. Cum contingat de rescript.

73 As to the law, the Denunciator is bound to prove, as Clar. notes quaest. 7. by the text in Leg. Divus. And in Leg. ab accusatione, §. nunciatores, ff. ad Turpill. yet common practice does not admit this, as they say in Clarum, Mariam. Salic. and Cardin. Alex. but understand that fully. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 13. num. 25.

> DE iure Denunciator tenetur probare, ut notat Clar. quaest. 7. per textum in Leg. Divus. Et in Leg. ab accusatione, §. nunciatores, ff. ad Turpill. tamen communis praxis hoc non admittit, ut dicunt apud Clarum, Mariam. Salic. et Cardin. Alex. sed id intellige plene. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 13. num. 25.

74 Therefore WHEN the denunciation is apt, the Judge ought to admit the denunciation, and meanwhile the denounced is unfit for dignities, C. Omnipotens Deus, de accusat.

> QUANDO igitur denunciatio est apta, debet Iudex denunciationem admittere, et interim denunciatus ad dignitates est inhabilis, C. Omnipotens Deus, de accusat.

75 ONCE the denunciation is admitted, the Judge is bound to inquire, otherwise he sins by neglecting justice, as the Doctors commonly hold, especially the Gloss in C. Excommunicamus, verse neglexerit, de haeret. Panormitanas in C. cum dilectus de accusat. D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 54. art. fin. D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 2. toward the end, Bossius tit. de offic. corrup. Roder. t. 2. quaest. 39. art. 1. Let him take heed, however, lest he inquire before it be established concerning the body of the delict, as I shall say in doubt 3.

> ADMISSA denunciatione tenetur Iudex inquirere, alias peccat negligendo iustitiam, ut tenent communiter Doctores, praesertim Glossa in C. Excommunicamus, vers. neglexerit, de haeret. Panormitanas in C. cum dilectus de accusat. D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 54. art. fin. D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 2. circa finem, Bossius tit. de offic. corrup. Roder. t. 2. quaest. 39. art. 1. Caueat tamen ne inquirat, antequam constet de corpore delicti, ut dicam dubio 3.

Doubt II: On the mode of proceeding by accusation

1 AN ACCUSATION is the bringing of some crime to public vindication, with the lawful subscription intervening. Thus the Doctors commonly hold, as Clarus testifies, quaest. 12. Lessius T. 1. l. 2. cap. 30. Azor. l. 13. cap. 19. Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 40. cap. 7. num. 201. Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 5. Fagundez on the eighth precept of the Decalogue, cap. 47. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 12.

ACCUSATIO est delatio alicuius criminis ad vindictam publicam, legitima interveniente subscriptione. Ita communiter Doctores, teste Claro quaest. 12. Less. T. 1. l. 2. cap. 30. Azor. l. 13. cap. 19. Filliuc. Tom. 2. tract. 40. cap. 7. num. 201. Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 5. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 47. P. Eliz. tract. 1. quaest. 12.

2 VERY MANY are those who are barred from accusing by the common law, whom Clarus reports, quaest. 14. and St. Antoninus 3. p. tit. 9. cap. 8. §. 2. Bouër. in direct. p. 2. cap. 17. Farin. quaest. 12. among whom I have also noted some who are likewise forbidden to denounce. Excluded are criminals, apostates from the faith, heretics or those suspected of heresy, pagans and Jews, who cannot accuse Christians (cap. non potest and cap. pagani, 2. quaest. 7.), and calumniators (C. similiter 3. quaest. 5.).

PLURIMI sunt, qui iure communi ab accusando repelluntur, quos refert Clatus quaest. 14. et S. Antoninus 3. p. tit. 9. cap. 8. §. 2. Bouër. in direct. p. 2. cap. 17. Farin. quaest. 12. e quibus aliquos etiam recensui, qui itidem denunciare prohibentur. Excluduntur Criminosi, Apostatae a fide, Haeretici, vel de ea suspecti, Pagani, et Iudaei, qui non possunt Christianos accusare cap. non potest et cap. pagani, 2. quaest. 7. et Calumniatores C. similiter 3. quaest. 5.

3 LIKEWISE litigants are readily excluded, by the said C. similiter. Likewise enemies, and those recently reconciled, cap. accusatores 3. quaest. 5. Likewise the kinsmen of enemies, and their friends and household servants cap. accusatoribus 3. quaest. 5. Likewise an accomplice in the crime, minors, those under twenty years of age, a soldier, and a woman, and those who are barred from giving testimony. Likewise one who is in mortal sin by canon law. See Clarus quaest. 14. reporting others as well. And the Gloss on C. si legitimas, de accusat., where he enumerates them thus:

ITEM de facili litigantes, dicto C. similiter. Item inimici, et de recenti reconciliati, cap. accusatores 3. quaest. 5. Item consanguinei inimicorum, et familiares, ac domestici eorum cap. accusatoribus 3. quaest. 5. Item socius criminis, Impubes, Minorque viginti annorum, Miles, et mulier, et qui a testimonio ferendo repelluntur. Item constitutus in peccato mortali de iure canonico. Vide Clarum quaest. 14. alios etiam referentem. Et Glossam in C. si legitimas, de accusat. ubi sic eos enumerat:

4 A woman, a ward, one denounced, one caught in crime. One suspected of gain, a corrupt man, a soothsayer, One infamous, a slave, a poor man, with a soldier, a Prince, A freedman, a comrade against his comrade, nor the enemies' kin, No cleric may bring an accusation against the Church.

Foemina, pupillus, delatus, crimine tentus. Suspectus quaestu, corruptus, sortilegusque, Infamis, servus, pauper, cum milite, Princeps, Libertus, socius socium, nec non inimici, Clericus Ecclesiam nullus deferre valebit.

5 TRULY the accuser is a hated figure, and is presumed to act not from charity but from spite, according to the Gloss on cap. decreto, 2. quaest. 6. and the text in C. Si omnes, 6. quaest. 1.; and hence an accusation is called an offensive intention, C. si quis Episcopus, 2. quaest. 7., which can scarcely be exercised without fault, according to the same Gloss, and after it Foller. in praxi, crim. can. 4. num. 9.

PROFECTO accusator odiosus est, et non ex charitate, sed ex livore agere praesumitur, iuxta Glossam in cap. decreto, 2. quaest. 6. et ex text. in C. Si omnes, 6. quaest. 1. et hinc est, quod accusatio illandabilis intentio nuncupatur, C. si quis Episcopus, 2. quaest. 7. quae vix sine culpa exerceri potest, secundum eandem Glossam, et post eam Foller. in praxi, crim. can. 4. num. 9.

6 Hear St. Gregory l. 6. Moral. cap. 13. quoted by St. Bonaventure in Phar. l. 3. cap. 3.: While the envious cannot accuse the good they see, blinded by malice they seek out for accusation the evil they do not see. Yet he can also be an executor of justice, C. illud 23. quaest. 4.

> AUDI D. Gregorium l. 6. Moral. cap. 13. apud D. Bonau. in Phar. l. 3. cap. 3. Invidi dum bonum, quod vident, accusare nequeunt, excaecati malitia, malum quod non vident, ad accusationem quaerunt. Tamen potest esse etiam iustitiae executor C. illud 23. quaest. 4.

7 But the Judge ought to weigh deeply that saying of St. Isidore in the Synonyms, cap. 16.: First prove, and so judge. For not the one who is accused, but the one who is convicted, is guilty. St. Bonaventure sets this forth deeply in the place cited from the Pharetra.

> DEBET autem Iudex alte pensitare illud D. Isidori in Synonim, cap. 16. effatum. Ante proba, et sic iudica. Non enim qui accusatur, sed qui convincitur, reus est. Id alte proponit D. Bonaventura loc. cit. Pharetrae.

8 The Accusator is bound first to the things I said of the denunciator, and further he is bound to write everything and subscribe his name, under penalty of talion if he does not prove the crime, as Bartolus and Aretinus declare, and Clarus follows, quaest. 12. P. Eliz. num. 9.

> TENETUR primo Accusator ad ea, quae de denunciatore dixi, et amplius tenetur totum scribere, et se subscribere ad poenam talionis, nisi crimen probauerit, ut declarat Bartol. et Aretinus, et sequitur Clarus quaest. 12. P. Eliz. num. 9.

9 Although by civil law this penalty is not observed, as Clarus notes, yet he says it is observed by canon law. Cardinal Alexander agrees, in C. libellorum near the end, 2. quaest. 8. So in the chapter qualiter et quando, 2. de accusat.

> QUAMVIS autem de iure civili haec poena non servetur, ut notat Clarus, tamen de iure Canonico servari ait. Consentit Card. Alex. in C. libellorum circa finem 2. quaest. 8. Sic capite qualiter, et quando, 2. de accusat.

10 Once the accusation has been presented, he is bound not to conceal the true crimes, as St. Thomas notes, 2. 2. q. 68. art. 3. Sotus de teg. secreto, membr. 2. quaest. 5. col. 6. Navarr. in Manuali, cap. 25. num. 3.

> PRAESENTATA accusatione, tenetur vera crimina non abscondere, ut notant D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 68. art. 3. Sotus de teg. secreto, membr. 2. quaest. 5. col. 6. Navar. in Manuali, cap. 25. num. 3.

11 At the request of the party, the accuser is bound to take the oath of calumny. Farin. quaest. 16. num. 28. citing Doctors on Leg. 2. Cod. de fin. instrum.; and Bartolus testifies to the common observance of Italy in Lege 1. num. 6. Cod. de iuram. calum., and Clarus holds it, §. fin. quaest. 18., citing many.

> PARTE petente, tenetur accusator calumniae iuramentum praestare. Farin. quaest. 16. num. 28. citans Doctores in Leg. 2. Cod. de fin. instrum. et de communi Italiae observantia testatur Bartol. in Lege 1. num. 6. Cod. de iuram. calum. et tenet Clarus, §. fin. quaest. 18. allegans multos.

12 THREE things must be guarded against in an accusation: Calumnia, Praevaricatio, and Tergiversatio (calumny, prevarication, and tergiversation), as Fagundez notes, l. 8. cap. 47. num. 11.

> TRIA in accusatione cavenda sunt: Calumnia, Praevaricatio, et Tergiversatio, ut notat Fagundez l. 8. cap. 47. num. 11.

13 CALUMNY is a false imputation made knowingly, and it binds the calumniator to the duty of restitution. He also is said to calumniate who knowingly accuses of a true but hidden crime, which cannot be proved in court, and in the same way he is bound to restitution of the damage; thus St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 8., Sotus de teg. secr. in 2. quaest. 5. concl. 5., Sayrus cap. 15. on the eighth precept, num. 12., Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 6., Fagundez in the place cited.

CALUMNIA est falsa imputatio, facta scienter, et incutrit calumniator debitum restitutionis. Calumniari etiam ille dicitur, qui de vero crimine, sed occulto, quod in iudicio probari non potest, scienter accusat, eodemque modo tenetur ad restitutionem damni; ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 8. Sotus de teg. secr. in 2. quaest. 5. concl. 5. Sayrus cap. 15. in octavum praeceptum, num. 12. Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 6. Fagundez loco citato.

14 PRAEVARICATION occurs in a twofold case. First, when the accuser secretly favors the Accused. Second, when he is silent and conceals true and greater crimes, setting out lesser ones in the libel.

PRAEVARICATIO duplici casu occurrit. Primo dum accusator in occulto favet Reo. Secundo quando tacet, ac tegit vera crimina, et maiora; exponens in libello minora.

15 This kind of prevarication can occur also in a Judge, namely by accepting false exceptions, testimonies, and instruments so as to free the accused, as St. Bonaventure notes in the Speculum animae, cap. 2. near the end; and beyond the sin he commits, he is bound also to restitution, because he acted against Justice and his office, seeking unjustly to oppress the accuser and to shield the accused.

Hoc praevaricationis genus contingere potest etiam in Iudice, acceptando scilicet falsas exceptiones, testimonia, et instrumenta, ut reum liberet, ut notat D. Bonan. in speculo animae, cap. 2. ad finem, et ultra peccatum, quod committit, tenetur etiam restitutioni, quia contra Iustitiam, et officium suum egit, quaerens accusatorem inique opprimere, et reum subtrahere.

16 It occurs also in Advocates, by showing to the adverse party the foundations of their client's case, or by not defending faithfully, or by opening to the adversaries the way to win the cause unjustly; all of which are iniquitous, against justice, as the Saintly Doctor teaches above, Sotus loc. cit. concl. 5., and Navarr. cap. 25. num. 10., Rodriquez num. 5., St. Thomas quaest. cit. art. 3. ad 2., Sayrus num. 14., Fagundez num. 13., who agree that they are bound to restitution.

CONTINGIT etiam in Advocatis ostendendo parti adversae fundamenta sui clientis, vel non fideliter defendendo, vel aperiendo adversariis viam ad causam inique vincendam, quae omnia iniqua sunt contra iustitiam, ut docet S. Doctor supra, Sotus loc. cit. concl. 5. et Navar. cap. 25. num. 10. Rodriquez num. 5. D. Thom. quaest. cit. art. 3. ad 2. Sayrus num. 14. Fagundez num. 13. qui consentiunt, cum teneri ad restitutionem.

17 TERGIVERSATION is, when without just cause he desists from the accusation, when he is bound to its prosecution for the common good.

TERGIVERSATIO est, quando sine iusta causa desistit ab accusatione, cum ad prosecutionem eius ob bonum commune tenetur.

18 CASES are nevertheless given in which he may desist. First, in crimes that do not conduce to the good of the Republic. Second, when he begins the case in good faith and soon sees his error. Third, on account of grave fear. Fourth, if he is repelled by the command of the Prince. See Sayrus lib. 12. at the end, Lessius l. 2. cap. 30. dub. 3. num. 15., Sotus loc. cit.

DANTUR tamen casus, in quibus potest desistere. Primo in criminibus, quae ad bonum Reipublicae non conducunt. Secundo, quando bona fide incipit causam, et mox suum videt errorem. Tertio propter metum gravem. Quarto, si imperio Principis repellatur. Vide Sayrum lib. 12. in fine, Less. l. 2. cap. 30. dub. 3. num. 15. Sotum loc. cit.

19 FAGUNDEZ num. 14, who at num. 16 raises the question: whether correction must always precede an accusation. And he answers negatively, if the offense can be proved, whether one intends vindication of one's own injury or the good of the Republic; and he says this is the common view of the Doctors, citing Lessius l. 1. cap. 30., Filliuc. tome 2. tract. 40. cap. 7. num. 103., the Gloss on C. licet, de simonia, 2. quaest. 8., Sylvester v. accusatio, quaest. 3., Cajetan 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 7., Navarr. Summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 30., Driedo de libertate Christiana cap. 10., Roder. de ord. iudic. cap. 6., and others; and in this he distinguishes denunciation, which is directed to amendment, from accusation, which tends to the vindication of the crime for the public good. But Rodriquez loc. cit., citing Corduba, adds that one is bound to correction, if he hopes for amendment. Sotus adds, loc. cit. concl. 4., Durandus 4. dist. 19. The reason is, because the principal end ought to be the amendment of the Accused. But Fagundez himself persists: if the offense is public and can be proved, the Accused is in the case; because his own offense made it public. I certainly do not refuse this, when the offense is public, according to what I said in the first doubt.

> FAGUNDEZ num. 14. qui num. 16. instituit quaestionem: An ante accusationem semper sit praemittenda correptio. Et respondet negative, si possit delictum probari, sive intendat vindictam propriae iniuriae, sive bonum Reipublicae, et ait, esse communem Doctorum, et allegat Less. l. 1. cap. 30. Driedonem de libertate Christiana cap. 10. Roder. de ord. iudic. cap. 6. et alios, et in hoc distinguit denuntiationem, quae ad emendationem dirigitur, ab accusatione, quae tendit ad vindictam sceleris, ob publicum bonum. Sed Rodriquez loc. cit. adducto Corduba, addit, teneri quamvis ad correptionem, si emendationem sperat. Addit Sotus loc. cit. concl. 4. Durand. 4. dist. 19. Ratio est, quia finis principalis debet esse emendatio Rei. Sed ipse Fagundez persistit, si delictum est publicum, et possit probari, et in hoc esse Reum in causa; quia suum delictum fecit publicum. Non renuo sane, quando delictum est publicum, iuxta ea quae dixi dubitatione prima.

20 NOTE that civil and canon law command Judges not to proceed in criminal causes without an accuser, C. si legitimus, de accusat. and Leg. Illicitus, ff. de officio Praesidis; and St. Thomas teaches this, 2. 2. quaest. 7. art. 3. in the body, Cajetan there, and other Thomists, Roderiq. de ordine iudic. cap. 5., Fagundez cap. 48. num. 3., and St. Bonaventure passim.

> ADVERTE, ius Civile, et Canonicum Iudicibus praecipere, ne in causis criminalibus procedant absque accusatore C. si legitimus, de accusat. et Leg. Illicitus, ff. de officio Praesidis, et docent D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 7. art. 3. in corp. Caietanus ibi, et alii Thomistae Roderiq. de ordine iudic. cap. 5. Fagundez cap. 48. num. 3. et D. Bonaventura passim.

21 IT IS PROVED by the Saintly Doctor on John 8, where he observes that the judgment was truncated, because the accusers withdrew. Therefore Christ says: Where are they who accused you? No one has condemned you; nor will I condemn you. And he warns that the accusers withdrew because they were unfit to accuse, since they themselves were criminals.

> PROBATUR a S. Doctore ad 8. Ioannis, ubi observat, truncatum fuisse iudicium, quia illi accusatores recesserunt. Ideo ait Christus: Ubi sunt qui te accusabant? Nemo te condemnavit: Nec ego te condemnabo. Accusatores autem recessisse admonet, quia inepti erant ad accusandum, cum ipsi essent criminosi.

22 IT IS PROVED secondly by the Saintly Doctor on John 5, in the words As I hear, so I judge, where he discourses at length, bringing in St. Gregory in Moral. cap. 14. on Job 29: The cause which I knew not, I searched out most diligently, where he says: Note concerning judgment, that we ought not to hasten to render an iniquitous sentence, that we judge not rashly without examination, that no evil report whatsoever should move us, that we believe not reports everywhere without proof, etc.

> PROBATUR secundo a S. Doctore ad 5. Ioan. in ea verba: Sicut audio, sic iudico, ubi late disserit, afferens D. Gregorium in Moral. cap. 14. in id Iob. 29. Causam, quam nesciebam, diligentissime investigabam, ubi ait:

> Nota de Iudicio, ne ad proferendam sententiam iniquam praecipites esse debeamus, ne temerarie indiscussa iudicemus, ne qualibet mala audita nos moveant, ne passim dictis sine probatione credamus, etc.

23 GOD himself, to whom all things are naked and open, uses examinations in his judgments; as is plain in Joel 3: I will bring them into the valley of Josaphat, and I will plead with them. He repeats this in Matth. 25.

> IPSE Deus, cui omnia nuda sunt, et aperta, in suis iudiciis examina adhibet; ut patet Ioelis 3. Deducam eos in vallem Iosaphat, et disceptabo cum eis. Id repetit Matth. 25.

24 Whence it is read of the Lord in Genesis 18: I will go down and see whether the cry that comes to me has been fulfilled in deed. Then the Saintly Doctor continues the exposition of the same chapter thus: Second, it is figured that judgment ought to be just in its process. Whence he says: My judgment is just. And Deuteronomy 19: You shall appoint Judges and Masters, that they may judge with just judgment; for, as Tullius says in de off. l. 1., it belongs to a judge in causes to follow the truth, neither to defend the guilty nor to condemn the innocent: He who justifies the wicked, and he who condemns the just, both are alike abominable before God. Likewise it is here intimated that judgment ought to be orderly in sentencing. He has the same on chapter seven.

> Unde et de Domino legitur Genesi. 18. Descendam, et videbo utrum clamorem, qui venit ad me, opere compleverint. Deinde sic prosequitur explicationem eiusdem capitis S. Doctor: Secundo figuratur, quod iudicium debet esse in processu iustum. Unde ait. Iudicium meum iustum est. Et Deuter. 19. Iudices, et Magistros constitues, ut iudicent iusto iudicio*, ut enim ait Tullius de* off. l. 1. Iudicis est in causis verum sequi, nec nocentem defendere, nec condemnare innocentem: Qui iustificat impium, et qui condemnat iustum, abominabilis est uterque apud Deum. Item insinuatur hic quod iudicium debet esse in sententiando ordinatum. Idem habet ad cap. septimum.

25 From these you also have those cases in which judges may proceed without an accuser by the way of inquisition.

> Ex quibus habes etiam illos casus, in quibus possunt iudices sine accusatore procedere via inquisitionis.

26 THE FIRST is, if the Judge with others sees the crime being committed. The second, when there are public indications and clamorous fame. The third is, when a juridical denunciation precedes, to public vindication of the offenses, as is done in the tribunal of the Holy Inquisition; but it differs from an accusation, because he is not bound to prove. Here too it is intimated that in graver offenses, where there is no accuser, the Fiscal holds the place of the accuser; and he is bound to prove, and unless he can prove, the accuser sins, as Aragon says, 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 3. at the end, Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 5. num. 3.

> PRIMUS est, si Iudex cum aliis videat, crimen perpetrari. Secundus, quando sunt publica indicia, et fama clamorosa. Tertius est, cum praecedit denunciatio iuridica ad vindictam publicam delictorum, ut fit in tribunali Sanctae Inquisitionis: Differt autem ab accusatione, quia non tenetur probare. Ubi etiam indicatur, in delictis gravioribus, ubi non est accusator, Fiscalem habere locum accusatoris; et hic tenetur probare, et nisi possit probare, accusans peccat, ut aiunt Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 67. art. 3. in fine, Roder. de ord. iud. cap. 5. num. 3.

27 AS TO the obligation of accusing. First, he who sees some harm threatening the Republic, or even others who are innocent, and it cannot otherwise be prevented, is bound to accuse; he is bound from charity to denounce it to the Judge. Thus the Doctors commonly: St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1.,

Sotus loc. cit. quaest. 5., Sylvester v. Accusat. quaest. 2., Gomez Tom. 3. var. cap. 1. num. 9.; and it is proved by C. sicut dignum, §. illis etiam, de homicidio. Indeed in the external forum, one who knowingly conceals an offense about to be committed against the Prince or the Republic, and does not reveal it, is punished as an author of the offense, by Battol. in Leg. virum, ff. ad Leg. Pomp. de parric. and Leg. 1. §. occisorum, ff. ad Syllan., Salicetus in Leg. prima, Cod. ad legem Cornel. de sicar., Gomez loc. cit. num. 8.; and the French laws command this in the Kingdom of France.

> QUOAD obligationem accusandi. Primo tenetur accusare, qui vident damnum aliquod Reipublicae imminere, vel etiam aliis insontibus, et alia via nequit impediri; tenetur ex charitate Iudici denunciare. Ita communiter Doctores. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. art. 1. Sotus loc. cit. quaest. 5. Sylvester v. Accusat. quaest. 2. Gomez Tom. 3. var. cap. 1. num. 9. et probatur, C. sicut dignum, §. illis etiam, de homicidio. Imo in foro externo, sciens delictum committendum contra Principem, vel Rempublicam, et non revelans, punitur, ut auctor delicti, Batthol. in Leg. virum, ff. ad Leg. Pomp. de parric. et Leg. 1. §. occisorum, ff. ad Syllan. Salicetus in Leg. prima, Cod. ad legem Cornel. de sicar. Gomez loc. cit. num. 8. et Leges Gallicae in Regno Galliae id praecipiunt.

28 YET he is not bound to accuse who cannot prove; for no one is bound to ward off another's evil at his own grave loss, which he incurs by accusing and not proving. Thus St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 68. in the place cited, and others in Fagundez cap. 49. num. 4.

> NON tenetur tamen accusare is, qui probare non potest; nemo enim tenetur alterius malum arcere gravi suo damno, quod subit accusans, et non probans. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 68. loco citato, et alii apud Fagundez cap. 49. num. 4.

29 BUT he sins only against charity who does not accuse when bound, unless he be an official of justice; for such a one sins against Justice, as Fagundez notes, num. 8.

> PECCAT autem tantum contra charitatem, qui non accusat, cum tenetur, nisi sit officialis iustitiae; quia hic contra Iustitiam peccat, ut notat Fagundez num. 8.

30 THERE arises also a doubt, because kinsmen are admitted to demand just vindication of their own up to the fourth degree, as is more probable in Fagundez l. 8. cap. 48. num. 10., and it is gathered from Leg. petitionum, Cod. de advocat.: whether, when several kinsmen come together to accuse someone of some offense, all of them can be admitted by the Judge.

> ORITUR etiam dubium, quia consanguinei admittuntur ad iustam vindictam petendam suorum usque ad quartum gradum, ut probabilius est apud Fagundez l. 8. cap. 48. num. 10. et colligitur ex Leg. petitionum, Cod. de advocat. An, quando plures consanguinei concurrunt ad accusandum reum de aliquo delicto, omnes possint a Iudice admitti.

31 Motla asserts it in Emporio iuris, titulo de Legibus, quaest. 14. num. 9., and the Senate of Lisbon in the year 1616, as Melchior Phoebus reports, tit. 1. decis. decisione 9. num. 10.; and the reason is, because the right of vindicating the death of the deceased is in each of the heirs in the whole, not by part, Leg. portiones, ff. de his, quibus ut indign.

> ASSERUNT Motla in Emporio iuris, titulo de Legibus, quaest. 14. num. 9. et Senatus Ulyssiponae anno 1616. ut refert Melchior Phoebus tit. 1. decis. decisione 9. num. 10. et ratio est, quia ius vindicandi mortem defuncti, est penes quemcumque ex haeredibus in solidum, et non pro parte, Leg. portiones, ff. de his, quibus ut indign.

32 OTHERS deny it, but hold that the judge ought to choose one kinsman, nearer and more suitable, Leg. si plures, ff. de accusat. and Leg. si vero, §. haec autem, ff. de his qui occiderunt, vel effuderunt. And Gomez teaches, t. 3. variarum, tit. de delict. cap. 1. num. 35., Vincentius Franchus in 1. p. decis. 382., Fagundez l. 8. cap. 50.

NEGANT alii; sed debere iudicem eligere unum propinquiorem magis idoneum, Leg. si plures, ff. de accusat. et Leg. si vero, §. haec autem, ff. de his qui occiderunt, vel effuderunt. Et docent Gomez t. 3. variarum, tit. de delict. cap. 1. num. 35. Vincentius Franchus in 1. p. decis. 382. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 50.

Doubt III: On the mode of proceeding by inquisition

1 INQUISITION is the third mode of proceeding, distinct from accusation and denunciation, while the two former are often exercised separately; often also they are, as it were, the handmaids of the latter, since they follow it in order better to inquire into the crime: That this mode of proceeding is lawful no one skilled in canon law doubts, since various texts there plainly intimate it, as C. qualiter et quando 2. de accusat. C. inquisit. eodem, as P. Elizzus has it, tract. 2. de modo proced. quaest. 1. num. 3., where he also gathers the authors. The reason is public security, upon which the Judge has undertaken the burden of providing, which he cannot discharge unless he also inquire into offenses; and when an end is enjoined upon anyone, the means of attaining that end are commanded to him.

INQUISITIO est tertius procedendi modus, ab accusatione et denunciatione distinctus, cum duae priores saepe seorsim exerceantur; saepe etiam sunt velut posterioris Pedissequae, cum ipsam sequantur ad melius inquirendum de crimine: Hunc procedendi modum licitum esse nullus Iuris canonici gnarus ambigit, cum variis ibi textibus aperte insinuetur, ut C. qualiter et quando 2. de accusat. C. inquisit. eodem, ut habet P. Elizzus tract. 2. de modo proced. quaest. 1. num. 3. ubi authores etiam aggregat. Ratio est publica securitas, cui Iudex subiit onus prospiciendi, quod nequit praestare, nisi etiam de delictis inquirat, cum autem alicui iniungitur finis, mandantur ei media talem finem attingendi.

2 FURTHERMORE, it falls to the Judge by a stronger right to inquire than to the Plaintiff to act; for that concerns more the substance of the judgment; but the laws command the Plaintiff to put forward an action, as P. Elizzus has it, tract. 2. ubi supra; and he proves it in tract. 1. quaest. 10. num. 14.

PRAETEREA potiori iure incumbit Iudici inquirere, quam Actori agere; illud enim magis respicit iudicii substantiam; sed iura mandant Actori, ut actionem obtendat, ut habet P. Elizzus tract. 2. ubi supra; et probat tract. 1. quaest. 10. num. 14.

3 Whether however it is lawful also by civil law or by custom in the secular court is disputed before the same Elizzus num. 4.; see him.

An vero etiam Iure civili, vel consuetudine sit in Curia saeculari licitus, controvertitur apud eundem Elizzum num. 4. ipsum vide.

4 From these, Inquisition is defined as a certain lawful investigation, which the Judge carries out ex officio, inquiring into some crimes, or into some offender laboring under the infamy of a crime, intending primarily his amendment. Thus Iodoc in pract. crim. tit. de Inquis. cap. 8., Clar. §. fin. quaest. 3., Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 3., Rodriquez Tract. de Ordinario, cap. 2.; and it is plain from C. qualiter, et quando, 2. de accusat.

Ex his Inquisitio definitur legitima quaedam investigatio, quam Iudex ex officio efficit inquirens de aliquibus criminibus, aut de aliquo delinquente, infamia delicti laborante, emendationem illius primario intendens. Ita Iodoc in pract. crim. tit. de Inquis. cap. 8. Clar. §. fin. quaest. 3. Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 3. Rodriquez Tract. de Ordinario, cap. 2. et patet ex C. qualiter, et quando, 2. de accusat.

5 INQUISITION, moreover, is twofold. The first is general, in which, the offender being uncertain, it is generally inquired, who committed the offense? Particular is that which is done specially against some person.

> DUPLEX est autem Inquisitio. Prima est generalis, qua, incerto delinquente, generaliter inquiritur, quis delictum commiserit? Particularis est, quae fit specialiter contra aliquam personam.

6 A GENERAL, or most general, inquisition, of which in C. perniciosa, de off. Ord. and C. Trident. sess. 7. cap. 7. et sess. 24. cap. 3., can be made in Visitations without preceding infamy, according to cap. Romana, §. sane, de censibus in 6. and *C. 7 IN this inquisition, however, one cannot inquire about Peter or Titius; or whether he committed such or such an offense, but only, who offended in such a matter, or in such. 8 IT IS PROVED by these authorities in Fagundez num. 9., many from St. Bonaventure, from that Genesis 18., where the Lord awaited the cry of the Pentapolitans, and soon says: I will go down and see whether the cry that comes to me has been fulfilled in deed.

> PROBATUR ab istis apud Fagundez num. 9. multis authoritatibus ex D. Bonav. ex illo Genesis 18. ubi Dominus expectavit clamorem Pentapolitanorum, et mox ait: Descendam, et videbo, utrum clamorem, qui venit ad me, opere compleverint.

9 IT IS PROVED secondly by St. Bonaventure ad 16. Lucae, that parable of the steward who was defamed, because he had wasted the goods; for he is not called to singular examination before a clamorous defamation. For this reason, because he neglected his reputation, he merited to be called to question by severe inquisition.

PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonav. ad 16. Lucae, illa parabola Villici, qui diffamatus est, quia bona dissipasset; non enim vocatur ad singulare examen ante clamorosam diffamationem. Ideo enim famam negligens meruit inquisitione severa ad quaestionem vocari.

10 IT IS PROVED thirdly by St. Bonaventure in Diaeta, tit. 10. cap. 3.; for the Lord did not proceed to the inquisition of fratricide against Cain until he heard the voice of his brother's blood crying out and invoking the justice of God. The Pontiff relies on this testimony in the said cap. qualiter, et quando.

PROBATUR tertio a D. Bonav. in Diaeta, tit. 10. cap. 3. nam Dominus non processit ad inquisitionem fratricidii contra Caïn, quo usque non audivit vocem sanguinis fratris eius clamantem, et invocantem iustitiam Dei. Hoc testimonio nititur Pontifex in dicto cap. qualiter, et quando.

11 IT IS PROVED fourthly by St. Bonaventure ad 3. Ioan., from the act of Christ, who tolerated Judas as long as he could hope for his amendment; and because the crime was still secret, he corrected him so as if between himself alone; for none of the disciples understood. The Pontiff determines the same, C. si quis potestatem 23. quaest. 4., where it is said: It is not for a judge to condemn without an accuser, as neither did Christ cast off Judas.

PROBATUR quarto a D. Bonav. ad 3. Ioan. ex facto Christi, qui quousque valuit habere emendationis Iudae, eum toleravit, et quia crimen adhuc erat secretum, ita eum correxit, ac si inter ipsum solum; nemo enim discipulorum intellexerit; id ipsum determinat Pontifex, C. si quis potestatem 23. quaest. 4. ubi dicitur: Iudicis non est sine accusatore damnare, sicut nec Christus Iudam abiecit.

12 HENCE, although a Judge may know of an offense of his subject, of which there is no public judgment, nor clamorous intimation, or scattered rumor; but it is still altogether hidden; and he even knows that three or four witnesses know of it; he cannot inquire into it specially by the way of particular inquisition in order to punish him. Thus Innocent III declares expressly, C. Inquisitionis de accusat. §. Tertia dubitatio ibi: It does not suffice for inquiring specially against someone not defamed, even if two or three sworn witnesses, even greater by exception, assert that they saw the man commit that offense; and this is the practice of the whole world, as Farinac. testifies, quaest. 9., and others cited by him. For an accuser is necessarily required to punish anyone, or clamorous intimation, and such indications as take the place of an accuser and virtually accuse, as the Fiscal and the promoter of justice, who is bound ex officio to accuse, and who even in conscience cannot accuse unless what he can prove, and unless sufficient indications precede. This truth Cajetan hands down, 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1. et 2., Sotus relect. de teg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6., Navar. in C. inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. concl. 6. coroll. 48. num. 579., Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controv. 6., Aragon. quaest. 67. art. 3., Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 14. p. 1., Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 200., Rodriquez de ord. iud. cap. 3. num. 4., Fagundez l. 8. cap. 46. num. 10., Tanner. loc. cit.

HINC, quamvis Iudex delictum sui subditi agnoscat, de quo nullum est iudicium publicum, nec clamorosa insinuatio, vel sparsus rumor; sed adhuc est omnino occultum; et sciat etiam, tres, vel quatuor testes id scire; nequeat via inquisitionis particularis de illo specialiter inquirere, ut eum puniat. Sic expresse declarat Innocentius III. C. Inquisitionis de accusat. §. Tertia dubitatio ibi. Non sufficere ad inquirendum specialiter contra aliquem, non infamatum, etiamfi duo, vel tres testes iurati, etiam exceptione maiores, asserant, se vidisse hominem aliquem delictum illud commisisse: Et haec totius mundi praxis, ut testatur Farinac. quaest. 9. et alii apud illum. Nam accusator necessario requiritur ad puniendum aliquem, vel clamorosa insinuatio, et talia indicia, quae vicem accusatoris subeant et virtualiter accusent, ut Fiscalis, et iustitiae promotor, qui ex officio tenetur accusare, qui etiam in conscientia non potest accusare, nisi id, quod potest probare, et nisi praecedant indicia sufficientia. Hanc veritatem tradit Caietanus

[13] BUT if a general inquisition is made into crimes, a particular one cannot be made about Peter or Paul, unless they labor under infamy, as Cajetan teaches, 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1. et 2., Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 22., Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controv. 7., Sotus de seg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6., Palud. 4. dist. 19., Adrian. quodl. 11., Aragon. ibi disp. 2., Ioannes ibi disp. 10., Valentia, and Tanner. with Rodriguez above.

QUOD si inquisitio fit generalis de sceleribus; non potest fieri particularis de Petro, vel Paulo, nisi laborent infamia, ut docent Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1. et 2. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 22. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controv. 7. Sotus de seg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6. Palud. 4. dist. 19. Adrian. quodl. 11. Aragon. ibi disp. 2. Ioannes ibi disp. 10. Valentia, et Tanner. cum Rodriguez supra.

[14] It is proved, because one is presumed good while he does not labor under infamy; and therefore a grave injury is inflicted upon him by inquiring whether he is a wrongdoer.

Probatur*, quia praesumitur quis bonus, dum non laborat infamia; et ideo gravis ei iniuria infertur inquirendo, an sit facinorosus.*

[15] And the same follows, if some crime has been perpetrated, and Peter does not labor under infamy, one cannot inquire in particular whether he is the perpetrator. Thus the Doctors cited; suppose, for instance, that the corpse of the slain lies in the road. And this alone the Doctors cited wish, Cajet. and Adrian., as cited by Diana p. 1. tract. 13. resol. 63. Sotus alone refuses it. Yet one may inquire in genus: Who committed it? and hunt for indications; for example, who passed through there at that time? whether armed? whether in haste and fleeing? and from those indications proceed to the person who has begun to be defamed. Thus the Doctors commonly, Rodriq. num. 5., Sayrus num. 21., Sotus de teg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6., Nauarrus C. inter verba, concl. 6. correl. 46. num. 214., Corduba Summa, quaest. 64. p. 1., Petrus Nauar. l. 1. de restit. cap. 4. num. 154., Aragon. loc. cit., Fagundez num. 18., Malderus 2. 2. Tract. 6. cap. 1. disp. 119., Villalob. Tom. 2. tract. 14. diff. 7., Valentia, and Diana loc. cit., Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. disp 2., Sà under the word Iudiciales actus §. de modo procedendi, Salonius controv. 7., Tabiena, v. Inquisitio, §. 8.; and of this opinion was also St. Thomas, as Sylvester reports, v. corrept. quaest. 8. St. Bonaventure seems to think the same, serm. 3. in decem praecepta, where he teaches that this is to be observed as to substance, in the purgation which was made by oath by the nearer population, when a corpse was found whose killer was unknown, after inquiry had been made about the killer and he had not been found.

Quod idem sequitur, si crimen aliquod sit patratum, et non laboret Petrus infamia, non potest inquiri in particulari: an ille sit patrator. Ita Doctores citati; puta si cadavet occisi sit in via. Et hoc solum volunt Doctores citati, Caiet. et Adrianus, adducti a Diana p. 1. tract. 13. resol. 63. Solus Sotus renuit; potest tamen inquirere in genere: Quis commiserit? et venari indicia; verbi gratia*, quis eo tempore illuc transierit? an armatus? an praeceps, et fugiens? et ex illis inditiis ad personam, quae caepit infamari, procedere. Ita communiter Doctores, Rodriq.* num. 5. Sayrus num. 21. Sotus de teg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6. Nauarrus C. inter verba, concl. 6. correl. 46. num. 214. Corduba Summa, quaest. 64. p. 1. Petrus Nauar. l. 1. de restit. cap. 4. num. 154. Aragon. loc. cit. Fagundez num. 18. Malderus 2. 2. Tract. 6. cap. 1. disp. 119. Villalob. Tom. 2. tract. 14. diff. 7. Valentia, et Diana loc. cit. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. disp 2. Sà verbo Iudiciales actus §. de modo procedendi*, Salonius* controv. 7. Tabiena, v.

> Inquisitio, §. 8. et huius opinionis fuit etiam D. Thom. ut refert Sylvester, v. correpт. quaest. 8. Idipsum videtur sentire D. Bonavent. serm. 3. in decem praecepta*, ubi hoc observandum accinit, quoad substantiam, ad purgationem, quae iuramento fiebat a populo viciniori, invento cadavere, cuius interfector ignorabatur, postquam inquisitum esset de interfectore, et non fuisset inventus.*

16 BUT this has been introduced by custom, that in such a case one proceeds without an accuser; yet a custom, lawfully prescribed, can take away or limit positive law, C. ult. de consuetudine, et Leg. de quibus, ff. de Legibus; and Innocent says this is observed in the whole world in C. Bona memoriae, and the Canonists in C. Inquisitionis, and Diana p. 2. Tract. 15. resol. 63., where he cites many.

> Hoc autem consuetudine invectum est, ut sine accusatore in tali casu procedatur; potest autem consuetudo, legitime praescripta, tollere, vel limitare ius positivum C. ult. de consuetudine, et Leg. de quibus, ff. de Legibus*, et hoc in toto mundo servari ait Innocentius in* C. Bona memoriae et Canonistae in C. Inquisitionis*, et Diana* p. 2. Tract. 15. resol. 63. ubi multos adducit.

17 Yet neither will the accused be bound at once to betray himself; for, although the Judge has the right of interrogating witnesses, he does not yet have the right of interrogating the accused, whether he is the one, except after it has been sufficiently proved, as I shall say in the following question.

> Neque tamen illico tenebitur reus se prodere; quia, licet Iudex habeat ius interrogandi testes, non tamen habet ius interrogandi reum: an sit ipse, nisi postquam satis probatum sit, ut dicam quaestione sequenti.

18 But if only one knows the Offender, he is not bound to betray him, as Sayrus notes, l. 12. cap. 10. num. 26., Fagundez num. 20.; then, however, they say he is bound to confess, when there are several who know the crime.

> Quod si unus tantum sciat Reum, non tenetur eum prodere, ut notant Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 26. Fagundez num. 20. tunc autem aiunt teneri confiteri, quando sunt plures, qui crimen sciunt.

19 I add, that if someone is defamed of one crime and not of another, one may inquire only about that of which there is infamy.

> Addo, quod si aliquis de uno crimine sit infamatus, et de alio non; potest inquiri de illo tantum, de quo est infamia.

20 BUT here it is necessary to explain what it is to be defamed of some crime, or clamorously defamed. Infamy is the frequent voice of good and honest men, which renders a man suspect of such a crime. It is said, the voice of good men, to exclude rumor even among the wicked. It is said, of such a crime, so that it is implied that one cannot inquire about another. Thus Cajet. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1., Sotus l. de iust. quaest. 6. art. 2., Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 12. Whence Sotus rightly inveighs against magicians or soothsayers, who by diabolical art inquire into the crimes of others, and he sharply reproaches those judges who, from their utterances, inquire into something in particular against anyone. The same the Pontiffs gravely rebuke in St. Bonaventure, in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 37. et 38.; and against proceeding with such, he notes ex dist. 26. quaest. 5. Non oportet, si quis Episcopus.

> Oportet autem hic explicare, quid sit esse infamatum de aliquo crimine, vel clamosose infamatum. Infamia est frequens vox bonorum, et proborum hominum, quae hominem de tali crimine suspectum reddit. Dicitur: vox bonorum*, ut excludatur rumor etiam inter malos. Dicitur:* de tali crimine*, ut inferatur, non posse de alio inquiri. Ita Caiet.* 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1. Sotus l. de iust. quaest. 6. art. 2. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 12. Unde Sotus merito invehitur in Magos, sive Ariolos, qui arte diabolica inquirunt aliorum scelera, eosque iudices acriter reprehendit, qui, ex illorum dictis, aliqua in particulari contra aliquem inquirunt. Eosdem graviter Pontifices apud D. Bonau. in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 37. et 38. increpant, et contra huiusmodi procedendum notat ex dist. 26. quaest. 5. Non oportet, si quis Episcopus.

21 THIS infamy, however, Beia says, casu 32., with the experts of both laws, must be proved by at least two witnesses, who depose that they heard it so publicly, or that it is so said everywhere, as Lessius also says, cap. 29. dub. 16.

Hanc vero infamiam ait Beia casu 32. ex iuris utriusque peritis, esse probandam duobus saltem testimoniis, qui deponant, se ita publice audivisse, vel ita passim dici, ut ait etiam Less. cap. 29. dub. 16.

22 The other conditions required for proving fame Delrius recounts, l. 5. sect. 5., citing many jurists who say they never saw a process in which fame was proved by statute.

Alias conditiones, ad probandam famam requisitas, recenset Delrius l. 5. sect. 5. referens Iuristas multos, dicentes, nunquam, se vidisse processum, in quo fama esset statis probata.

23 The Doctors, however, labor in assigning a necessary number of men for proving infamy; the Canonists in C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. teach that the number of ten is necessary. See Tannerus, saying from the common view num. 76. that the greater part of the people or parish is required.

Laborant autem Doctores in assignando numero hominum ad convincendam infamiam necessario; Canonistae in C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. docent, denarium numerum esse necessarium. Tannerum vide, ex communi dicentem num. 76. requiri maiorem partem populi, vel parochiae.

Verum nihil de iure definitum est, ut advertunt Sotus l. 3. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 6. et relect. de teg. secr. membr. 2. quaest. 6. disp. 3. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 13. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controv. 1. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 46. num. 26. Ita relinquitur iudicio prudentis. Clamorosa insinuatio est vox populi, vel publicus rumor inter multos de tali crimine extra iudicium, ut ait Baffaeus, v. Indicium publ. num. 4.

25 As to the indications, or circumstances, they must gravely indicate the fact, as St. Thomas notes, quaest. 69. art. 2., Cajetan, and Salon. there, Sotus l. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2., Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 13. p. 2., Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 13.; such as, if one is found naked in bed with a naked woman, they gravely indicate the crime of fornication. If someone is caught with a drawn, bloodstained sword beside the slain, and the like, they indicate homicide.

Quoad indicia, vel circumstantias, debent graviter indicare factum, ut notant D. Thom. quaest. 69. art. 2. Caietanus, et Salon. ibi, Sotus l. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 13. p. 2. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 10. num. 13. qualia sunt, si in lecto nudus cum nuda inveniatur, crimen fornicationis graviter indicant. Si quis districto ense cruentato iuxta occisum deprehenditur, et similia; homicidium indicant.

26 Now if one begins to name someone as guilty of an offense, that naming will open the way to inquiring specially against the one named, that is, to taking against him other informations: Thus Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 49., Innocent. above, who says the whole world observes this by custom, Bart. in Leg. 2. §. si publico, num. 9. ff. de adult., Baldus in Leg. edita Cod. de eden. and others cited by Clatus, §.

fin. quaest. 5., Aretin. in C. cum oportet, num. 44. de accusat. and Nauar. rubric. de Iudice, post numerum 88., where he says the opinion of Innocent has been received in theory and practice: Thus also Tannet num. 79., Lessius cap. 89. disp. 15. numero 124.

> Iam vero si unus incipiat nominare aliquem, ut reum delicti, ista nominatio viam aperiet ad inquirendum specialiter contra nominatum, idest ad assumendum contra eum alias informationes: Ita Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 49. Innocent. supra, qui ait, hoc de consuetudine servare totum mundum, Bart. in Leg. 2. §. si publico, num. 9. ff. de adult. Baldus in Leg. edita Cod. de eden. et alii apud Clatum, §. fin. quaest. 5. Aretin. in C. cum oportet, num. 44. de accusat. et Nauar. rubric. de Iudice, post numerum 88. ubi ait, opinionem Innocentii in Theorica, et praxi receptam esse: Ita etiam Tannet num. 79. Lessius cap. 89. disp. 15. numero 124.

27 Yet Philippus de Bictis notes, quaest. 11. primum testem, that the one who names the offender is held as a denunciator, with Deciano resp. 93. num. 125.; therefore, since the denunciator does not prove, and against Judges acting to the contrary Dettas exclaims, conf. 251. n. 103., and Guez follows, defens. 29. cap. 2. num. 18.

> Notat vero Philippus de Bictis quaest. 11. primum testem*, qui nominat delinquentem, haberi pro denunciante, cum Deciano* resp. 93. num. 125. ideo, ut denunciator non probat, ac contra Iudices oppositum facientes exclamat Dettas conf. 251. n. 103. et sequitur Guez defens. 29. cap. 2. num. 18.

28 Bictis adds, that if someone, juridically interrogated, unduly reveals a hidden author, the judge may nevertheless proceed to a special inquisition against the one detected, according to Nauar. rubr. de ind. num. 87.; Franciscus Arretinus does not object, in pract. cap. 13., nor Less. de iustitia, et iure lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 15., where against Sotus he holds that the judge not only may, but is bound to proceed; Thomas a Iesu and Lezana concur, tract. 1. cap. 27. num. 4. The reason is, because the Judge uses his own right, since the crime is already public, even though impiously detected; provided, however, that the informer is not the cause of that impiety.

> Addit Bictus, quod si quis interrogatus iuridice detegat indebite occultum auctorem, poterit tamen iudex ad inquisitionem specialem contra detectum procedere, secundum Nauar. rubr. de ind. num. 87. non obstat Franciscus Arretinus in pract. cap. 13. et Less. de iustitia, et iure lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 15. ubi contra Sotum tenet, non modo posse, sed teneri procedere; subsistunt Thomas a Iesu, et Lezana tract. 1. cap. 27. num. 4. Ratio est, quia Iudex utitur iure suo; cum iam crimen sit publicum, esto impie detectum; si tamen index non est causa illius impietatis.

29 Yet this opinion is false, as Bouerius notes in Direct. p. 2. cap. 4. v. 3., who with Soto, Navarro, and Sayrus judges it better, in the proposed case, to abstain from proceeding.

> Attamen haec opinio est falsa, ut notat Bouerius in Direct. p. 2. cap. 4. v. 3. qui cum Soto, Nauarro, et Sayro existimat, melius esse in proposito casu abstinere a procedendo.

30 Hence I wish to examine the doctrine of Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 73. in the way of judicial denunciation; when no witness is produced, a general inquisition indeed can be instituted; but neither the Accused, nor others about the Accused, can be interrogated specifically, unless perhaps in place of an accusation there occur indications, or infamy, or something similar; but it is otherwise, he says, when one proceeds by the way of fraternal enunciation, for then, indeed, it suffices that the denouncer [act], and he brings in Valentia quaest. 13 p. 2., where he nevertheless says that regard must be had to the estimation owed to the brother.

Hinc libet examinare doctrinam Tanneri disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 73. in via Iudiciae denunciationis; quando nullus testis est productus, institui quidem posse generalem inquisitionem; sed neque Reum, vel alios de Reo speciatim interrogari posse, nisi forte loco accusationis fationis indicia, vel infamia, vel quid simile occurrat; at secus esse, ait, dum proceditur via enunciationis fraternae, tunc nempe sat esse denunciantem, et adducit Valentiam quaest. 13 p. 2. ubi tamen aestimationis fratri debitae rationem habendam ait.

31 This last doctrine is certainly to be moderated with this caution, because even in a paternal inquisition a stain can be brought upon the fame and good estimation of the one about whom the inquiry is made.

Haec ultima doctrina hac sane cautione est moderanda, quia etiam in paterna inquisitione potest macula inferri famae, et bonae existimationi eius, de quo inquiritur.

32 HE ADDS at num. 81. that the practice of judges is to be approved, who proceed from denunciation to seeking indications, so as thus to form the libel of inquisition; and he thinks Lessius holds that infamy precedes, which from the common teaching of the Theologians is necessary, and from the canons; but this with Navarro in rubr. de Indiciis, num. 66., I think is false. For what infamy precedes here? They fear perhaps lest crimes remain unpunished; but let them be punished by the proper means.

ADDIT etiam num. 81. approbandam praxim iudicum, qui ex denunciatione procedunt ad quaerenda indicia, ut sic forment libellum inquisitionis, et putat Lessius, sic praecedere infamiam, quae ex communi Theologorum est necessaria, et ex canonibus, sed hoc cum Nauarro in rubr. de Indiciis, num. 66. falsum esse reor. Quae enim infamia hic praecedit? Timent forsan ne scelera impunita maneant; sed puniantur debitis modis.

33 THIS indeed I affirm with Tannerus: that a Judge, on account of a denunciation made to him not as Judge but as a private person, cannot proceed to a special inquisition; otherwise the whole process is null by law, as Clarus quaest. 5. num. 4. and Less. dub. 15. n. 136. also teach; for it can tend only to a general inquisition, as Tannerus notes, num. 84., with Cajetan and Salonius.

Hoc sane etiam cum Tannero affirmo, Iudicem ob delationem sibi, non ut Iudici, sed ut privato factam, non posse ad specialem inquisitionem procedere; alioqui totus processus est iure nullus, ut docent etiam Clarus quaest. 5. num. 4. Less. dub. 15. n. 136. solum enim ad generalem inquisitionem tendere potest, ut notat Tannerus num. 84. cum Caetano, et Salonio.

34 THIS, as a crown, is to be gravely noted, and underlies every inquisition, namely the body of the crime, without whose notice the Judge cannot proceed. Thus all the Doctors exclaim, in Farinac. quaest. 2. num. 1. and Clarus §. fin. quaest. 4., who at quaest. 66. says: If the body of the crime is not established, the Accused cannot be condemned, even if he were convicted. Nay, neither can he be tortured, Leg. 1. §. Item illud, ff. ad Sillan. Nay, neither can the Accused be examined, as the Doctors say in Farinac. quaest. 2. Nor can he be seized, as Marsil. Bossius and others testify in the same Farinacius, among whom Bonacos attests it is of the common teaching of the Doctors; and if a Cleric is seized while the body of the crime is not established, the Judge is excommunicated, as Farinac. notes there after Ioan. Andr. and Cornerus, who attests it is common. Nor can one inquire specially against the Accused. Farinac. quaest. 7. per Leg. necessario, §. 1. ff. ad Sillan., and many other laws, citing Baldus, Angelus, Marsilius, Boss. and others, and he says it is common. Finally, unless the offense is established, the Judge ought neither to inquire generally nor proceed to any act. Thus Clar. quaest. 4., Bouër. p. 2. cap. 7. §. primo modo, who cites many Doctors.

Hoc pro coronide graviter notandum, quod omni inquisitioni supponitur, nempe corpus delicti, sine cuius notitia non potest Iudex procedere. Ita omnes Doctores exclamant apud Farinac. quaest. 2. num. 1. et Clarum §. fin. quaest. 4. qui quaest. 66. ait: Si non constat de corpore delicti, non posse condemnari Reum, etiamsi esset convictus. Imo neque potest torqueri Leg. 1. §. Item illud, ff. ad Sillan. Imo neque potest examinari Reus, ut dicunt Doctores apud Farinac. quaest. 2. Neque potest capi, ut testantur apud eundem Farinacium Marsil. Bossius et alii, inter quos Bonacos testatur de communi Doctorum; et si capiatur Clericus, dum non constat de corpore delicti, Iudex est excommunicatus, ut notat Farinac. ibi post Ioan. Andr. et Cornerum, qui testatur, esse communem. Neque potest contra Reum specialiter inquiri. Farinac. quaest. 7. per Leg. necessario, §. 1. ff. ad Sillan. et plura alia iura, citans Baldum, Angelum, Marsilium, Boss. et alios, et ait, esse communem. Tandem nisi constet de delicto, nec generaliter inquirere, nec ad aliquem actum procedere debet Iudex. Ita Clar. quaest. 4. Bouër. p. 2. cap. 7. §. primo modo, qui citat multos Doctores.

35 THE REASON of these things is, because where the Law disposes about some matter, that matter must first be established, Leg. Decime, ff. de testam. milit.; and he who wishes to prove a quality must first prove the substance in which that quality is founded, Gloss. in Leg. si arbiter, ff. de probat.

RATIO horum est, quia ubi Lex disponit de aliqua re, debet prius de ea re constare, Leg. Decime, ff. de testam. milit. et qui vult probare qualitatem, debet prius probare substantiam, in qua illa qualitas fundatur, Gloss. in Leg. si arbiter, ff. de probat.

36 NOR must only the body of the crime be established, say a homicide; but also its qualities; and therefore the universal practice is that the Judge go, or send a notary, to visit the corpse of the slain, and reduce to the acts how many blows or wounds it has, by stabbing or cutting, and in what part of the body it has them, and the like. See Clarus quaest. 4., Farinacius quaest. 2.

NEQUE solum debet constare de corpore delicti, puta homicidio; sed etiam de illius qualitatibus; et ideo praxis universalis est, ut Iudex vadat, vel mittat notarium ad visitandum cadaver occisi, et in actis redigat, quot habeat percussiones, seu vulnera punctim, seu caesim, et in qua parte corporis ea habeat, et similia. Vide Clarum quaest. 4. Farinacium quaest. 2.

37 THE corpse must also be recognized by witnesses, if possible. This, however, it does not compel, if the corpse is proved to have been burned or cast into the sea, as Baiard. says, quaest. 4. ad Clarum, citing very many. See Biotus quaest. 12.

DEBET etiam cadaver cognosci per testes, si potest. Hoc tamen non cogit, si cadaver probetur combustum, vel iactum in mare, ut ait Baiard. quaest. 4. ad Clarum, plurimos adducens. Vide Biotum quaest. 12.

38 AFTER the body of the crime has been established, the Judge is bound to pursue the cause diligently, and if he neglects it he can be punished, Clar. quaest. 4., Bursat. and Guaz. tract. ad defens. cap. 1. num. 22. defens. 4., Baiard. ad Clarum quaest. 66. num. 7.; and St. Bonaventure presses this gravely, in speculo animae, cap. 2. et in Apolog. Min. quaest. 2.

POSTQUAM vero constiterit de corpore delicti, tenetur Iudex causam diligenter prosequi, et si neglexerit, puniri potest, Clar. quaest. 4. Bursat. et Guaz. tract. ad defens. cap. 1. num. 22. defens. 4. Baiard. ad Clarum quaest. 66. num. 7. et graviter premit S. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 2. et in Apolog. Min. quaest. 2.

39 These things, however, are not understood in the general inquisition of Visitations, and in the syndicate of our Prelates.

Haec tamen non intelliguntur in generali Visitationum inquisitione, et sindicatu nostrorum Praelatorum.

40 LIKEWISE neither in offenses that leave no signs, as in fornication, nor in hidden offenses of difficult proof, as in theft, while it ends in breaking. Yet one cannot proceed to condemnation before the stolen thing has been found. Likewise neither in cases in which it is ambiguous whether an offense intervened, as in someone found suffocated in a well, killed by poison, etc.

> SIMILITER nec in delictis, quae signa non relinquunt, ut in fornicatione, neque in delictis occultis difficilis probationis, ut in furto, dum sit fine fractura. Non potest tamen procedi ad condemnationem, antequam reperta sit res furata. Similiter nec in casibus, in quibus ambiguum est: An intervenerit delictum, ut in aliquo reperto suffocato in puteo, occiso veneno, etc.

41 BUT in these cases he must first inquire into the truth of the fact, and so, the crime detected, proceed further; otherwise, let the process be silent. Clar. quaest. 4., Farinac. quaest. 2. num. 29., whom see also at num. 30. On this matter see Clarus §. fin. quaest. 4. 55. 64. and 66., Farinac. quaest. 2., Guaz tract. ad defensam, defens. 4.

> DEBET autem in his casibus prius inquirere de veritate facti, et sic scelere detecto, ultra procedere; Secus autem, sileat processus. Clar. quaest. 4. Farinac. quaest. 2. num. 29. quem vide etiam num. 30. De hac materia vide Clarum. §. fin. quaest. 4. 55. 64. et 66. Farinac. quaest. 2. Guaz tract. ad defensam, defens. 4.

42 NOTE further that, although against ordinary persons fame suffices for instituting a cause, yet against Prelates and eminent persons clamorous intimation is required, and that the same fame has often come to the ears of the Judge, according to Card. Alex., who says the Doctors commonly hold thus, C. accusatoris, and Clar. quaest. 6. and 7. and Farinac. quaest. 9., where he warns that the fame must be proved in the process through witnesses, who must at least depose that they heard it so publicly, or that it is so said everywhere among the honest, Bald. Leg. litteras, num. 2. de praesumpt.; and thus it is observed passim, as Clarus testifies, quaest. 6.

> ADVERTE adhuc, quamvis contra personas ordinarias sufficiat fama, ut instituatur causa; tamen contra Praelatos, et eximias personas requiritur clamorosa insinuatio, atque ut eadem fama saepe ad aures Iudicis devenerit, secundum Card. Alex. qui ait, ita tenere communiter Doctores C. accusatoris*, et Clar. quaest. 6. et 7. et Farinac. quaest. 9. ubi admonet, famam debere esse in processu probatam per contestes, qui saltem debent deponere, se ita publice audivisse, vel ita passim inter probos dici, Bald.* Leg. litteras, num. 2. de praesumpt. sicque passim servatur, teste Claro quaest. 6.

43 BUT the Judge, being cautious, if he sees anyone's fame unjustly darkened, ought not to accept denunciations, as Bouerius warns, p. 2. cap. 4., with Soto de teg. secr. quaest. 2., Navarro C. inter verba, 11. quaest. 3., Sayro l. 2. cap. 9. num. 18.

> DEBET autem Iudex cautus, si videat famam alicuius iniuste denigrari, delationes non recipere, ut monet Bouerius p. 2. cap. 4. cum Soto de teg. secr. quaest. 2. Nauarro C. inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. Sayro l. 2. cap. 9. num. 18.

44 IN more atrocious cases, however, one may proceed from grave indications without fame, as on heresy, he holds in C. Excommunicavimus, §. adiicimus, with all the Interpreters; and Farinac. notes it, quaest. 9. num 14., citing Bartolus, Bossius, Menochius, Felinus, who attests it is of the common view; and Clarus reports it, quaest. 6., and Decianus with others, concerning the crime of lèse-majesté and other enormous crimes. It is the common opinion of the Doctors in C. qualiter, et quando, de accusat., and Farinac. held it, above num. 15., with Gigante, Alciat., Cephalus, and Decianus.

> IN casibus tamen atrocioribus procedi potest ex inditiis gravibus sine fama, ut de haeresi tenet in C. Excommunicavimus*, §.* adiicimus*, ubi omnes Interpretes; et notat Farinac. quaest. 9. num 14. citans Bartolum,* Bossium, Menochiam, Felinum; qui testatur de communi, et refert Clarum quaest. 6. et Decianum cum aliis de crimine laesae maiestatis, et aliis enormibus. Est communis sententia D. D. in C. qualiter, et quando, de accusat. eamque tenuit Farinac. supra num. 15. cum Gigante, Alciat. Cephalo, et Deciano.

45 IN these cases indeed the inquisition must be made upon the indications; these failing, since neither does fame precede, the inquisition would be null. Farinac. quaest. 1., where he cites innumerable ones. See him, differing in much.

IN his vero casibus facienda est inquisitio de indictis, quibus deficientibus, cum neque praecedat fama, esset inquisitio nulla. Farinac. quaest. 1. ubi innumeros adducit. Eum vide multa differentem.

46 HERE they ask lastly: whether the Judge can relax the punishment, on which St. Thomas, art. 4.

HIC quaerunt ultimo: An Iudex possit poenam relaxare, de quo D. Thom. art. 4.

47 THE GENERAL RULE is, that it cannot be done to the prejudice of a party. See Valentia p. 4. and St. Bonav. ad 8. Ioan., in the sentence pronounced against the adulteress, where Christ the Judge absolves her.

REGULA generalis est, non posse in praeiudicium partis. Vide Valentiam p. 4. et D. Bonav. ad 8. Ioan. in sententia lata pro adultera, ubi Christus Iudex eam absolvit.

48 HE SINS also unto death by absolving the Accused to the prejudice of the public good, giving the wicked occasion to sin more freely: Thus Molina tomo 4. tract. 3. disp. 48., Clau. Reg. l. 12. cap. 12. and others cited by Bassaeus, v. Indicium publ. num. 12.

PECCAT etiam lethaliter absolvendo Reum in praeiudicium boni publici, dando ansam improbis peccandi libertius: Ita Molina tomo 4. tract. 3. disp. 48. Clau. Reg. l. 12. cap. 12. et alii apud Bassaeum, v. Indicium publ. num. 12.

Disputation XXIX: On the Accused

1 The accused is one who, charged with some matter, is lawfully brought before a Judge; wherefore the discussion concerning him, as the correlate of the Judge, is rightly undertaken next after the Judge. Whole volumes have been woven together on this subject by as many as have labored at forensic matters; therefore only those points in this matter that concern conscience will be briefly examined by us. Moreover, the first step by which the accused is led to the tribunal is the lawful citation, which is threefold. The first, to appear, is so necessary by the law of Nature that whatever is done by the Judge without it is approved by no law. The second is for making allegations. The third, for making a definition. Our Eliseus loudly proclaims that the two latter belong to positive law, following the common opinion of the Jurists, tract. 7. quaest. 1. num. 5. We shall begin with the first citation, from which the rest open out of themselves.

> De Reo.
> Reus est, qui, de re aliqua accusatus, coram Iudice iuridice sistitur, quare de ipso post Iudicem, tanquam de ipsius correlativo, recte disputatio instituitur. De hoc integra; volumina contexere quotquot rebus forensibus operam navarunt; ideo quae conscientiam tantum concernunt hac in re, breviter nobis discutienda sunt. Porro primus passus, quo Reus ad tribunal ducitur, est citatio legitima, quae triplex est: Prima ad comparendum, quae adeo de iure Naturae est necessaria, ut quicquid absque ea a Iudice geritur, nullo iure comprobetur. Secunda est ad allegandum. Tertia, ad definiendum: Duas postremas de iure esse positivo acclamat Elizaeus noster e communi Iuristarum sensu tract. 7. quaest. 1. num. 5. a prima citatione, unde reliquae ex se patent, exordiemur.

Question I: On the bringing of the accused to the tribunal

1 First there is need of a valid citation of the Accused, as we have already intimated; otherwise the case will be built upon sand. So the celebrated §. fin. quaest. 31. Gloss on Leg. si accusatoribus, Cod. de accusat.; and it is the common view, as Bossius reports, de citationibus, num. 13.

> De deductione Rei ad Tribunal.
> Necessaria est primo citatio Rei valida, uti iam insinuavimus, alioqui super arenam aedificabitur causa. Clar. §. fin. quaest. 31. Gloss. in Leg. si accusatoribus, Cod. de accusat. et est communis, ut refert Bossius de citationibus, num. 13.

2 But there must be against him sufficient proofs, as I shall say below, in order that he may be lawfully cited; otherwise the summoning of the Accused will be unjust, and a mortal sin, as D. Bonav. notes, in speculo animae, cap. 2., and he hints, in apolog. Fratr. Min. quaest. 2.

> Debet autem contra eum esse probationes sufficientes, ut infra dicam ad hoc, ut legitime citetur, alioqui erit iniusta Rei advocatio, et peccatum mortale, ut notat D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 2. et innuit in apolog. Fratr. Min. quaest. 2.

3 Now the Scacc. 8., Guaz as cited by Bictus, quaest. 95., and Menochius, de praesumpt. l. 1. quaest. 88. num. 21., say that one witness is a sufficient lawful indication, likewise the complaint of a wounded man in the article of death, the flight of the Accused together with certain other indications; such that such indications are greater than a simple presumption, and less than a semi-full proof. So P. Elizeus, where above num. 3.

Dicunt autem Scacc. 8. Guaz apud Bictum quaest. 95. et Menochius de praesumpt. l. 1. quaest. 88. num. 21. legitimum inditium sufficiens esse unum testem, querelam vulnerati, in articulo mortis constituti, fugam Rei cum aliquibus aliis indiciis; ita ut talia indicia maiora sint, quam simplex praesumptio, et minora, quam semiplena probatio. Ita P. Elizeus, ubi supra num. 3.

4 But if a Judge were to condemn someone not cited, the sentence would be invalid, as all say, because this is of natural law, as I said above; and hence it cannot be omitted even by the Prince. But if he condemned one not cited, he would sin mortally, as D. Bonav. teaches, in speculo animae, cap. 2., whom the Arretin. follow, in pract. crim. cap. 1. de Reis, Bouer. p. 2. cap. 34., Nauar. in Man. cap. 25. num. 13.

Quod si Iudex aliquem non citatum damnaret, invalida esset sententia, ut dicunt omnes, quia est iuris naturalis, ut supra dixi, atque adeo neque a Principe potest omitti. Quod si damnaret non citatum, peccaret mortaliter, ut docet D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 2. quem sequuntur Arretin. in pract. crim. cap. 1. de Reis, Bouer. p. 2. cap. 34. Nauar. in Man. cap. 25. num. 13.

5 Now, if flight is feared, the Accused is wont to be imprisoned. There are three kinds of prisons: the first for custody; the second for torture; the third for punishment, as P. Elizeus has it, tract. 7. quaest. 2. num. 1.

Solet autem, si timetur fuga, Reus carcerari, Tres autem sunt carceres; Primus ad custodiam; Secundus ad torturam; Tertius ad poenam, ut habet P. Elizeus tract. 7. quaest. 2. num. 1.

6 The prison for custody must be humane; for inhumane prisons are censured by Bossius, tit. de carcere.

Carcer ad custodiam debet esse humanus; nam carceres inhumani vituperantur a Bossio tit. de carcere.

7 When it is for custody, it must be set forth in the acts, so that he does not thereby incur the legal infamy that follows upon the prison of punishment, as Bouer. notes, cap. 34. Nor indeed should a Religious be imprisoned for every crime, or lightly, because his prejudice is irreparable, as Baldus notes, whom Felin. follows, in C. cum super, de re iudic.; otherwise the Judge will sin mortally, as D. Bonau. teaches, in speculo animae, cap. 2., and he will be bound to restitution, as Nauar. says, in rubr. de iud. num. 83.; whose doctrine, as noteworthy, our Fathers mark, in modo nostro procedendi, cap. 2. in secundo substantiali; although they might have better alleged this as the doctrine of D. Bonaventura.

Quando quidem est ad custodiam debet in actis explicari, ut sic non contrahat iuris infamiam, quae sequitur ad carcerem poenae, ut notat Bouer. cap. 34. Neque vero pro omni crimine, vel leviter debet carcerari Religiosus, quia eius praeiudicium est irreparabile, ut notat Baldus, quem sequitur Felin. in C. cum super, de re iudic. alioqui Iudex peccabit mortaliter, ut docet D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 2. et ad restitutionem tenebitur, sequitur Nauar. in rubr. de iud. num. 83. cuius doctrinam, ut insignem, notant Patres nostri in modo nostro procedendi, cap. 2. in secundo substantiali; cum melius allegare potuissent hanc, ut doctrinam D. Bonaventurae.

8 Therefore the Judge must first have certainty of the body of the crime, and grave indications must precede; otherwise, if the person be honest, it will be a mortal sin, and he will be compelled to restitution; if a Clerk, excommunication will follow, as the Doctors commonly teach, cited by Clarus, quaest. 28., Farinac. quaest. 27. num. 74., and Ioan. Andreas, in C. si clericus, de sent. excom. in 6.

Debet igitur primo constare Iudici de corpore delicti, et indicia gravia praecedere; alioqui si sit persona honesta, erit peccatum mortale, et ad restitutionem coget; si Clericus, subibit excommunicationem, ut communiter docent Doctores apud Clarum quaest. 28. Farinac. quaest. 27. num. 74. et Ioan. Andream in C. si clericus, de sent. excom. in 6.

9 This applies much more to Religious, for whom arrest carries a smell of infamy, as Bouer. notes, p. 2. cap. 34.

Hoc multo magis de religiosis procedit, quibus captura infamiam redolet, ut notat Bouer. p. 2. cap. 34.

10 That one imprisoned cannot justly escape, the following teach: Clarus, quaest. 21., and very many cited by Couar., l. 1. variarum resol. cap. 2., and Angelus, v. fugere; and thus Barthol., Felinus, and Bossius say that one who flees sins mortally.

Non posse autem carceratum iuste aufugere, docent Clarus quaest. 21. et plurimi apud Couar. l. 1. variarum resol. cap. 2. et Angelus v. fugere*, et sic fugientem peccare mortaliter dicunt Barthol. Felinus, et Bossius.*

11 But in truth that to flee from prison is not a sin, very many teach, cited by Azor., p. 3. l. 13. cap. 14., and Diana, p. 3. tract. Miscell. 5. resol. 102., saying that one condemned to death can break out of prison; and this is the common opinion, which I maintained in my Tract. de Legibus. And I say the same with Diana, Bonacina, Tanner, and others, even of one condemned to prison for a time: yet a Religious lawfully detained ought to take care lest in fleeing he fall into Apostasy, as Rodriquez admonishes, T. 2. qq. Regul. quaest. 23. art. 6., and Bictus, quaest. 79.

Enim vero e carcere fugere non esse peccatum docent plurimi apud Azor. p. 3. l. 13. cap. 14. Dianam p. 3. tract. Miscell. 5. resol. 102. dicentes, posse damnatum morte confringere carcerem; et est communis sententia, quam ego sustinui Tract. de Legibus. Et hoc idem dico cum Diana, et Bonacina, Tannero, et aliis, etiam de damnato ad tempus carcere: Cavere tamen debere Religiosum iuste detentum, ne fugiens in Apostasiam cadat, admonent Rodriquez T. 2. qq. Regul. quaest. 23. art. 6. Bictus quaest. 79.

12 From which indeed it follows that the breaker of a prison is not to be held as one confessing, as very many teach with Farinac., quaest. 30. a num. 20. ad 21.; and Bertaz says this opinion, there, is common. See Bictus, quaest. 79. de Reo.

Ex quibus vero sequitur, non esse habendum, ut confessum, carceris effractorem, ut docent plurimi cum Farinac. quaest. 30. a num. 20. ad 21. et hanc opinionem ait Bertaz ibi*, esse communem. Vide Bictum* quaest. 79. de Reo.

Question II: Whether the accused is bound to confess a crime half-proven

1 A semiplene proof is the testimony of one witness above every exception, as all confess. The Gloss on C. in omni, where it cites many laws.

An teneatur Reus confiteri delictum, semiplene probatum.

Semiplena probatio est unius testis omni exceptione maioris, ut omnes fatentur. Glossa C. in omni*, ubi citat multa Iura.*

2 Nor does a denunciator suffice, because no one is a competent witness in his own cause, L. Nullus ff. de testibus. But what Sotus observes from Matth. 18., where the one correcting is bidden to take with him one or two, and it is added: That in the mouth of two or three witnesses, etc., is not pressing; for there the mere salvation of the corrected one is intended: If he hear thee, thou shalt gain thy brother; and in these subtleties even Less. has been deceived, l. 2. cap. 30., and Fagundez, in octavum Praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 39. num. 14.

Neque sufficit denunciator, quia nullus in causa propria est idoneus testis, L. Nullus ff. de testibus. Quod vero Sotus observat ex Matth. 18. ubi iubetur corrigens assumere unum, vel duos, et subditur: Ut in ore duorum, vel trium testium, etc. Non est urgens, nam ibi intenditur mere salus correpti: Si te audierit, lucratus eris fratrem, et in has subtilitates decepti sunt etiam Less. l. 2. cap. 30. Fagundez in octavum Praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 39. num. 14.

3 The first opinion is that not only a semiplene proof suffices, but even something less, such as indications, or at least presuppositions, or even suspicions. So Bess. tit. de exam. reorum, num. 6. and Carthar. in praxi interrog. Reorum, l. 1. cap. 2. But Clarus, quaest. 20., says that grave indications suffice for examining a person reputed as an Accused. They will assert the same thing much more strongly, saying that indications which do not amount to a semiplene proof suffice not only for questioning but even for torturing the accused.

Prima opinio est, non modo sufficere semiplenam probationem, sed minorem etiam, ut indicia, vel saltem praesuppositiones, vel etiam suspiciones. Ita Bess. tit. de exam. reorum, num. 6. Carthar. in praxi interrog. Reorum, l. 1. cap. 2. Clarus vero quaest. 20. ait, gravia indicia sufficere ad examinandum reputatum, tanquam Reum. Idipsum multo magis asseverabunt dicentes, non modo ad interrogandum, sed etiam ad torquendum reum sufficere inditia, quae semiplenam probationem non inducant.

5 To this first opinion Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. seems to lend favor, and D. Thomas himself there, while they say that in a process by denunciation or accusation fame suffices for questioning the accused. And yet in criminal matters fame does not prove semiplenely, according to Decianus, Bertran., Saccum, Clarus quaest. 21., Baldus, Bero, Butrium, Abb., Felinus, Imola; and so Blancus, Bonacos., Crass., Duen. testify of the common view, whom Farinac. quaest. 47. num. 59. follows, where, citing several others, he brings forward a decision of the Roman Rota in corroboration, before Rebufferio decis. 82. p. 1. The same at last Nauar. murmurs, in Rubr. de iud. numero 25.

HVIC primae opinioni videtur favere Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. et ipse D. Thom. ibi, dum aiunt in processu per denuntiationem, vel accusationem sufficere famam ad reum interrogandum. Et tamen fama in criminalibus semiplene non probat secundum Decianum, Bertran. Saccum, Clarum quaest. 21. Baldum, Bero, Butrium, Abb. Felinum, Imolam, et ita de communi testantur Blancus, Bonacos. 6 THE SECOND opinion, acclaimed with great applause, is that a semiplene proof suffices for questioning the Accused, that is, one given by the deposition of a single ocular witness above every exception, or by indications of equal force. That the Jurists, the Theologians, and all the Summists concur in this, and triumph without controversy, Philippus de Bictis de Reo, quaest. 80. loudly proclaims; and Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 72. says it is common in criminal matters not excepted.

SECUNDA sententia, magno plausu acclamata, est, ad interrogandum Reum sufficere semiplenam probationem, quae est per depositionem unius testis oculati, omni exceptione maioris, vel per indicia aequipollentia. In hac concordare Iuristas, Theologos, et Summistis omnes, et sine controversia triumphare clamat Philippus de Bictis de Reo, quaest. 80. et Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 72. ait esse communem in criminibus non exceptis.

7 THIS is the opinion of D. Thom., 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1., and of all the Thomists. So Caietanus, Salonius, Bannes, Aragon. there; *Alphonsus de Vega in Summa T. 2. cap. 89. casu 1.; Ledes. in Summa, tomo 2. tract. 8. cap. 24. concl. 2.; Turrian. 2. 2 t. 2. disp. 50. dub. 2.; Pistigian. in pract. crimin. p. 1. cap. 7.; Sotus de iust. l. 5. quaest. 6. art. 2.; Corduba in qq. l. 1. quaest. 43. dub. 3.; Azor p. 3. l. 13. cap. 25. quaestio 5.; Sayrus in Clau. reg. l. 12. cap. 16.; Valentia T. 3. disp. 5. quaest. 13. punct. 1.; Sylvest. v. accusatio, quaest. 13. et v. confessio delicti, quaest. 1.; Navar. in Man. cap. 18. num. 57. et cap. 25. num. 36. et C. inter verba, dist. 21. quaest. 3. concl. 6. corol. 50.; Tolet. l. 5. 8 Yet this opinion does not swallow up everyone, as our Bictus boasts; for Ioannes Valerius in diff. utriusque fori, diff. 49., Villalob. in Summa, tomo 2. tract 16. diff. 1. num. 10., Ioseph a S. Maria in Tribun. Relig. tract. 4. cap. 14. num. 5., Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 40. num. 266. steadily maintain that a semiplene proof does not suffice for questioning the Accused; and, calling their own opinion the more probable, some on the opposing side imply this one to be probable: Less. de iust. l. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. num. 18.; Navar. de rest. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 142.; Rodr. t. 2. qq. 19. art. 4.; Salzed. tract. crim. Piaz. cap. 128.; Malder. 2. 2. t. 6. cap. 3. sect. 3. Finally it is taught by Sancius, Select. disp. 43.; Petri. de relig. subd. l. 1. quaest. 1. cap. 16.; Octavian Spatarius in praxi crim. t. 9. cap. 7. et seq., saying ardently that it is practiced throughout the whole world in all courts, that by this right the Accused be permitted to use it short of a full proof, where a most grave punishment is imminent. Bassaeus v. Reus, num. 4., together with Reginald. t. 2. l. 24. cap. 3. sect. 3. and others, mildly follows him, whom Diana p. 1. tract. 15. resol. 27. praises, proclaiming that opinion most probable and safe in practice.

NON omnes tamen haec opinio absorbet, ut gloriatur Bictus noster; nam Semiplenam probationem non sufficere ad interrogandum Reum constanter, et probabilissime tuetur Ioannes Valerius in diff. utriusque fori, diff. 49. 9 To all these I subscribe. Wherefore confessors ought not to force penitents to confess, if they have hope of escaping death, mutilation, the galleys, confiscation, or some grave disgrace, as Sà admonishes. But the more do I adhere to this opinion, since I see that it accords with the mind of the Seraphic Doctor, who even supplies an argument for this opinion.

HIs omnibus subscribo. Quapropter Confessarii, ne cogant poenitentes confiteri, si spem evadendi mortem, mutilationem, triremes, confiscationem, aut grave aliquod dedecus habeant, monet Sà. Eo autem magis huic sententiae adhaereo cum videam, eam ad mentem Seraphici Doctoris, qui etiam argumentum huic sententiae administrat.

10 He therefore says, in 4. dist. 17. p. 2. art. 1. quaest. 1. in corpore, that to confess one's sins to men is not dictated by nature, except in a general way, insofar as nature dictates that one must be reconciled to God by all the means instituted by the Divine majesty; and ad 4. he says that the accusation and disclosure of one's own sin for one's salvation is conformable to nature, if it be necessary by the institution of God, just as the disclosure of a wound, even in a shameful part, for the necessary remedy is conformable to nature; but that otherwise it is in accord with nature to blush and not disclose one's crime.

Is igitur in 4. dist. 17. p. 2. art. 1. quaest. 1. in corpore ait, confiteri peccata sua hominibus non dictari a natura, nisi in generali, quatenus dictat reconciliari oportere Deo, omnibus modis a Divina maiestate institutis: Et ad 4. dicit, accusationem, et propalationem sui peccati ad sui salutem, esse conformem naturae, si sit necessaria ex institutione Dei, sicuti est conformis naturae detectio vulneris, etiam in parte pudenda ad necessariam medelam; at vero aliter esse naturae consonum erubescere, et suum scelus non propalare.

11 AND if it were for condemnation, it would be against nature; but by divine necessity it profits, that glory be given to God, according to that Iosue 7. Da gloriam Deo, confitere quid feceris (Give glory to God, confess what thou hast done), which he had also said, the foundation being 4. and in confessionali, cap. 1. particula 5. Now the confession which Josuë demanded from Achan was when the theft was already made known before the people by lots, a divine miracle revealing it. Therefore S. Bonavent. everywhere infers that, by Divine decree, that confession from Achan was established, required, and extorted; otherwise he would not have been bound. Wherefore the Clavis Regia ineptly brings forward this passage, that it may conclude that it is lawful absolutely to extort a confession from an accused person.

ET si ad condemnationem, esset contra naturam; ex divina vero necessitate prodest, ut detur gloria Deo, iuxta id Iosue 7. Da gloriam Deo, confitere quid feceris, quod idem dixerat fundamento 4. et in confessionali, cap. 1. particula 5. Erat autem confessio, quam Iosuë ab Achan exigebat, iam propalato coram populo ex sortibus, divino miraculo revelantibus huius furtum. Infert igitur S. Bonavent. ubique, ex Divino decreto statutum, atque exigi, et extorqueri ab Achab confessionem illam, alioqui non fuisse obligatum. Quare insulse Clavis Regia hunc locum affert, ut concludat, licere confessionem extorquere a reo absolute.

12 From these things is drawn a most valid reason, which the authors of our opinion extol in Diana. That which is against nature is not to be done, unless God establish honesty in it and command it; but to deliver oneself to death, or to grave loss of life, or indeed even of honor and possessions, is against nature; nor is God found to have commanded that we disclose our hidden sin, from which our ruin would flow: Ergo. Let them then find for themselves the law of God compelling to this, as it had to be found for sacramental confession of hidden sins (as D. Bonaventure says), and the more is it required, the graver this confession is.

> Ex his eruitur validissima ratio, quam nostrae sententiae authores apud Dianam magnificant. Id, quod est contra naturam, non est faciendum, nisi Deus in eo honestatem constituat, et praeceptum; sed tradere se morti, vel gravi damno vitae, imo etiam honoris, et facultatum, est contra naturam, nec invenitur Deus praecepisse, ut peccatum nostrum propalemus occultum, ex quo nostra pernicies emanet: Ergo. Inveniant igitur isti legem Dei ad hoc me cogentem, sicuti invenienda fuit ad confessionem Sacramentalem occultorum (ut ait D. Bonavent.) et eo magis exigitur, quo gravior est haec confessio.

13 ALL the adversaries answer in droves that the Judge has from God the power of judging, as is said, Rom. 13. et Sap. 6. et Psalm. 2.; and therefore, since a matter not juridically presented cannot be judged, he can question, and the accused is bound to obey him as a superior; nor can it be that the Judge have the power of questioning and the Accused the power of keeping silent; otherwise there will be a war just on both sides. This is the Achilles of the adversaries. This venerable asylum.

> RESPONDENT catervatim omnes adversarii, Iudicem habere a Deo potestatem iudicandi, ut dicitur Rom. 13. et Sap. 6. et Psalm. 2. et ideo*, cum nequeat iudicari res non exposita iuridice, potest interrogare, et reus ei tenetur obedire tanquam superiori; neque vero potest esse, ut Iudex habeat potestatem interrogandi, et Reus habeat tacendi; alioqui erit bellum utrinque iustum. Hic est adversariorum Achilles. Hoc venerandum asylum.*

14 Yet it is an unwarlike defense. For first I say that, since the sin is in the knowledge of one witness, it is not yet public but hidden, as is gathered from C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. Therefore the Accused is questioned against the law of nature.

> IMBELLIS tamen defensio. Primo enim dico, quod cum peccatum sit, in unius testis scientia, non adhuc est publicum, sed occultum, ut colligitur ex C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. Ideo contra ius naturae interrogatur Reus.

15 FURTHER, it is not repugnant that there be a war just on both sides, just as it is lawful for the Judge to forbid a condemned man under the last punishments to flee, and the Accused can flee, as Pesantius notes, quaest. 77. quaest. unica, and the precept in such a case can be judged given for terrifying the Accused. So Sancius, Reginaldus, Lessius, and others in Diana. For no one is bound to furnish arms against himself for his own killing, or to deprive himself of his goods, or to throw himself into prison.

> DEINDE non repugnat, dari bellum ex utraque parte iustum, sicuti licitum est Iudici, damnato ultimis suppliciis; praecipere, ne fugiat; et Reus potest fugere, ut notat Pesantius quaest. 77. quaest. unica*, et praeceptum in tali casu potest censeri datum ad Reum terrendum. Ita Sancius, Reginaldus, Lessius, et alii apud Dianam. Nullus enim tenetur contra se arma ministrare ad sui occisionem, aut se suis bonis privare, aut se coniicere in carcerem.*

16 In the same way, however, they do who disclose their sin when it is not fully proved: and indeed, as long as there is hope of escaping, it is safest to keep this precept, which scarcely one in a thousand would wish to observe, because it is against the dictate of nature; but human precepts ought to be conformable to the law of nature, not above it or against its powers.

PERINDE autem faciunt revelantes suum peccatum, cum non est plene probatum: Et sane quamdiu est spes evadendi, tutissimum est hoc praeceptum, quod vix e mille unus vellet servare, quia est contra dictamen naturae; praecepta autem humana debent esse conformia iuri naturae, et non supra, aut contra vires eius.

17 MOREOVER no one in criminal matters is bound, or can be compelled, to testify against his kinsmen, as is clear from Leg. 4. ff. de Testibus, when the truth can be had otherwise, as Lazarius Papiensis teaches, lib. de quaest. canon. sect. 3. quaest. 11., and Rodriquez, T. 1. Summae cap. 69., except in a cause of faith, or on account of the good of the Republic, or of the Prince. But who is more akin to me than I am to myself? Nor say that the law speaks of hidden crimes. For it is against it, otherwise there would be no benefit of the law toward kinsmen; for indeed even strangers cannot be compelled to disclose hidden crimes.

PRAETEREA nemo in criminalibus tenetur, aut cogi potest ad testificandum contra consanguineos, ut patet Leg. 4. ff. de Testibus*, quando veritas aliter haberi potest, ut docet Lazarius Papiensis* lib. de quaest. canon. sect. 3. quaest. 11. Rodriquez T. 1. Summae cap. 69. nisi in causa fidei, aut propter bonum Reipublicae, aut Principis. At quis mihi magis consanguineus, quam ego mihi? Neque dicas, loqui legem de occultis criminibus. Contra enim est, alioqui nullum esset beneficium legis erga consanguineos; etenim neque extranei cogi valent ad dicenda crimina occulta.

18 FOR these reasons, according to others also, the Accused is not bound at least to answer for the avoiding of a grave temporal punishment; nevertheless, if the questioning be for a spiritual punishment, such as irregularity, excommunication, or interdict, which are easily removed and are rather medicines than punishments, it is otherwise. For this they bring forward Abbas, in cap. cum super, de confess.; Angelus, v. confessio delicti; Sylvest., v. delicti confessio quaest. 1.; Armilla, ibi, quaest. 8.; Alcozer., Summae cap. 16. §. et reo; Lessius, l. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. num. 16.; Filliuc., tract. 40. in octavum Praeceptum Decal. cap. 9. num. 266.; Sà, v. reus.; Petrus Navar., l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 136. Also Navar. is cited, C. Inter verba, coroll. 64. num. 733.; Vega, Summae cas. l. 5. casu 603.

OB has rationes secundum alios etiam, saltem pro gravi poena vitanda temporali, non tenetur Reus respondere, attamen si ad poenam spiritualem sit interrogatio, qualis est irregularitas, excommunicatio, vel interdictum, quae facile tolluntur, et sunt potius medicinae, quam poenae. Secus facien tum afferunt Abbas in cap. cum super, de confess. Angelus v. confessio delicti, Sylvest. v. delicti confessio quaest. 1. Armilla ibi, quaest. 8. Alcozer. Summae cap. 16. §. et reo Lessius l. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. num. 16. Filliuc. tract. 40. in octavum Praeceptum Decal. cap. 9. num. 266. Sà v. reus. Petrus Navar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 136. Citatur etiam Navar. C. Inter verba, coroll. 64. num. 733. Vega Summae cas. l. 5. casu 603.

19 FINALLY Fagundez also judges it most probable, in octavum praeceptum Decal. l. 8. cap. 31. a num. 11., and Bictus does not reject it, quaest. 81. num. 21.; who adds, num. 25., that even one convicted can deny the external fact, if it be not criminal, as when he killed a man thinking it to be a wild beast. So also others with Diana, 3. p. Tract. 5. resol. 66.

TANDEM eam probabilissimam censet etiam Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. l. 8. cap. 31. a num. 11. eamque non renuit Bictus quaest. 81. num. 21. qui addit num. 25. posse etiam convictum negare factum externum, si non sit criminosum, ut cum occidit hominem, putans esse feram. Ita etiam alii cum Diana 3. p. Tract. 5. resol. 66.

20 The opposing arguments collapse in four words, saying that, even given that the Judge use his right to question, and the Accused use his right to save his life, etc., and hence a war can be waged and carried on justly on both sides by reason of probability; nevertheless the right of nature to preserve life is stricter than that of obeying the Judge, because the former is merely natural; the latter, however, is mixed with human law, or with power and human law compelling to confession.

> ARGUMENTA adversa quatuor verbis corruunt, dicendo, dato etiam, Iudicem uti iure suo ad interrogandum; et Reum uti iure suo ad salvandam vitam, etc. atque adeo utrinque ratione probabilitatis posse agi, et geri iuste bellum; attamen arctius esse ius naturae ad conservandam vitam, quam ad obediendum Iudici, quia illud est mere naturale; hoc vero mixtum iure humano, seu potestate, et lege humana cogente ad confitendum.

21 But as to what they infer, that shortly the places will be filled with evildoers, as is gathered from C. cum dilecti, de accusat. et cap. 2. de confession. — I say that this follows per accidens, for the wicked are not to be extirpated for any reason whatsoever, but by the best right.

> QUOD vero inferunt, futurum brevi, ut loca malefactoribus repleantur, ut colligitur ex C. cum dilecti, de accusat. et cap. 2. de confession. Dico, per accidens id sequi, non enim extirpandis sunt pravi quacumque ratione, sed optimo iure.

22 Much less, however, is the Accused bound — indeed even a witness — to confess, if there be doubt whether the inquiry is juridical. So commonly in Baffaeo.

> MULTO vero minus tenetur Reus, imo et testis confiteri, si dubium sit, an iuridice inquiratur. Ita communiter in Baffaeo.

Question III: Whether an accused, defamed for one crime, can be questioned about others also

1 They AFFIRM: Tabiena, v. accusatio, num. 20. dub. ult.; D. Anton., 3. p. tit. 9. cap. 7. §. 3. v. Inquisitio, 1. quaestione 3.; Palud., 4. dist. 19. quaest. 4. in fine.

2 The SECOND denies that it is lawful, and indeed asserts that the Accused is not bound to answer such a questioning. So the Doctors commonly: D. [3] Yet make an exception: if one defamed of one crime has another connected with it, or indications toward it; thus a woman defamed of adultery, if her husband is presently found slain, can be questioned about this. The Holy Doctor seems to prove this, in Confessionali cap. 2. part. 1., by that text of Deuter 24. Cum repetes a proximo tuo rem aliquam; quam debet tibi, non ingredieris domum eius (When thou shalt demand from thy neighbor any thing that he oweth thee, thou shalt not go into his house).

> EXCIPE tamen, si infamatus de uno sit, quod habeat aliud connexum, vel indicia ad illud; sic infamata de adulterio, si mox invenitur maritus eius occisus, potest de hoc interrogari. Id probare videtur S. Doctor in Confessionali cap. 2. part. 1. illo Deuter 24. Cum repetes a proximo tuo rem aliquam; quam debet tibi, non ingredieris domum eius.

[4] The opinion of Bruno pleases me, de indiciis, secunda parte, quaest. 5. num. 66.: that this is true when he is of that kind of evil fame, as a robber, a highwayman. Bictus subscribes, quaest. 80. num. 27.

> MIHI placet sententia Bruni de indiciis, secunda parte, quaest. 5. num. 66. Id verum esse, quando in eo genere est malae famae, ut latro, viarum grassator. Subscribit Bictus quaest. 80. num. 27.

Question IV: Whether one convicted of a crime can be questioned about hidden accomplices of whom there is no ill repute

[1] They ASSERT: Bartol., in Leg. Repetita, ff. de quaest.; Iulius Clarus, l. 5. quaest. 21.; Palud., 4. dist. 19. art. 4. in fine,; Sylvester, verbo Inquisitio, quaest. 3.

> An convictus de crimine, possit interrogari de sociis occultis, de quibus nulla est infamia.
> ASSERUNT Bartol. in Leg. Repetita, ff. de quaest. Iulius Clarus l. 5. quaest. 21. Palud. 4. dist. 19. art. 4. in fine, Sylvester verbo Inquisitio, quaest. 3.

[2] The common and true opinion denies it (except heresy, lèse-majesté, treason against the fatherland, and the coining of false money.) So Caietanus, 1. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1.; Salon., ibi, controv. 8.; Aragon., ibi dub. 3.; Bannes, disp. 1.; Sotus, l. 5. de iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 5.; Navar., Summae Lat. cap. 18. num. 58. et in C. inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. concl. 6. corrolario 49. num. 584.; Baff., num. 7.; Tolet., l. 5. Summae cap. 58.; Sà, v. Iudicium, num. 15.; Angel., v. confessio delicti, §. 4.; Petrus Navar., l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. p. 2. disp. 5. num. 173.; and others, as is clear from in Leg. finali, Cod. de accusat. et Cod. repetita, ff. de quaest. And from Canon Law, C. Nemini 15. quaest. 3., there: Nemini (except for the crime of lèse-majesté) ought credit be given concerning another's crime on one's own confession: since confession of this, and of every matter, is perilous, and ought not to be admitted against anyone. And the same is had in Cod. Monasterium de confessis. But how it is perilous, the Emperor Severus teaches, Leg. 1. ff. de quaest. §. Divus Antoninus, because the accused can seize an occasion of avenging himself upon his enemies, or upon those whose help he sought and they refused, by making them partners of his crime.

> COMMUNIS, et vera sententia negat (excipe haeresim, Laesam maiestatem, Proditionem patriae, et falsae monetae excusionem.) Sic Caietanus 1. 2. quaest. 69. art. 1. Salon. ibi, controv. 8. Aragon. ibi dub. 3. Bannes disp. 1. Sotus l. 5. de iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 5. Navar. Summae Lat. cap. 18. num. 58. et in C. inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. concl. 6. corrolario 49. num. 584. Baff. num. 7. Tolet. l. 5. Summae cap. 58. Sà v. Iudicium, num. 15. Angel. v. confessio delicti, §. 4. Petrus Navar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. p. 2. disp. 5. num. 173. et alii, ut patet in Leg. finali, Cod. de accusat. et Cod. repetita, ff. de quaest. Et ex Iure Canonico C. Nemini 15. quaest. 3. ibi: Nemini (praeter quam de crimine laesae maiestatis) de se confesso super alienum crimen credi oportet: quoniam eius, atque omnis rei confessio periculosa est, et admitti adversus quemlibet non debet. Et idipsum habetur Cod. Monasterium de confessis. Quomodo autem periculosa sit, docet Imperator Severus Leg. 1. ff. de quaest. §. Divus Antoninus, quia reus ansam arripere potest se vindicandi de suis inimicis, vel de illis, quorum opem imploravit, et noluere, faciendo eos sui criminis socios.

3 This is indeed the opinion of D. Bonav.; for in 4. dist. 21. p. 2. art. 1. quaest. 3., where, though he speaks of sacramental confession, he nevertheless denies that the crimes of others can be uncovered, while we can reveal our own without those of others: and in dist. 19. dub. 5., speaking of the Judge, he implies that the same is to be said proportionally of him as of confession.

Haec est profecto D. Bonav. opinio; nam in 4. dist. 21. p. 2. art. 1. quaest. 3. ubi, licet de confessione Sacramentali loquatur, negat tamen, posse aliorum crimina detegi; dum possumus nostrum sine alienis revelare: Et dist. 19. dub. 5. loquens de Iudice innuit, proportionaliter idem de ipso, ac de confessione dicendum.

4 This opinion they maintain commonly, cited by Farinac., quaest. 43.; for according to the statutes of both laws one cannot be questioned about the associates of others, as D. Bonaventure also teaches, expounding that passage of Deuter. 24.

Hanc opinionem tuentur communiter apud Farinac. quaest. 43. nam secundum utriusque iuris statuta; super aliorum consociis interrogari non potest, ut docet etiam D. Bonavent. exponens locum illum Deuter. 24.

5 They except, however, the case where the crime is such that it cannot be done mortally without an associate, e. g. such a robbery.

Excipiunt tamen, si crimen tale sit, ut mortaliter sine socio fieri nequeat, v. g. talis rapina.

6 Similarly in the falsification of a Scripture not pertaining to oneself, or in the examination of a false witness at the instances of others; for inquiry must be made at whose instance he deposed falsely. Similarly in a homicide who had no cause; for inquiry can be made of the one who ordered it, Farinac., quaest. 43. num. 91., citing others.

Similiter in falsificatione Scripturae ad se non spectantis, vel in examine testis falsi ad aliorum instantias; debet enim inquiri ad cuius instantiam falsum deposuit. Similiter in homicida, qui nullam habuit causam; potest enim inquiri de mandante, Farinac. quaest. 43. num. 91. alios adducens.

7 Bictus nevertheless concludes, quaest. 80. num. 36., that by custom it is observed that one convicted be questioned about his accomplices and abettors and favorers, as very many have it, cited by Guze, defensione 30. cap. 9., Gandinus Iacobus de Belvis, and Blanch., tract. de Inditiis, num. 374., and Vulpel. and Mascar., de prob. concl. 1311. vol. 3., who says it is thus observed in the general custom of Italy. And Baiard., who refers this to Clar., quaest. 21., says he has seen the same observed in whatsoever crime; and Cason. asserts this most recently, tract. de torm. cap. 16. num. 6., and Giacharius ad Clarum, who nevertheless says that at Milan this custom is not observed, but the common law, except in certain excepted cases; and he adds that, where there is no such custom, it is laudable to stand by the common law.

Concludit tamen Bictus quaest. 80. num. 36. consuetudine servari, ut convictus interrogetur de sociis complicibus; mandatotibus, fautoribus, ut habent plurimi apud Guze defensione 30. cap. 9. Gandinus Iacobus de Belvis, et Blanch. tract. de Inditiis, num. 374. et Vulpel. et Mascar. de prob. concl. 1311. vol. 3. qui ait, ita servari in generali consuetudine Italiae. Et Baiard. qui hoc refert ad Clar. quaest. 21. ait, se vidisse idem observari in quocumque delicto, et hoc asserit novissime Cason. tract. de torm. cap. 16. num. 6. et Giacharius ad Clarum, qui tamen ait, Mediolani hanc non servari consuetudinem, sed ius commune, nisi in casibus aliquibus exceptis; et subdit, laudabile esse, ubi non est talis consuetudo, stare iuri communi.

8 Bictus indeed admonishes, num. 38., the Judges to beware, even where this custom exists, of suggestion, or of naming any person, as Chart. and Ambrosin. also admonish, de modo formandi processus in foro, l. 6. cap. 4. num. 10., unless sufficient indications against that person are at hand; otherwise it would be a suggestion, and the Judge would sin gravely, and the process would be null of itself. Clar., quaest. 21., and Barac. on him, num. 28., citing Castrensis, and Fuller., teach that such a questioning would be suggestive; Farinacius also refers to others, quaest. 43. num. 132., who at num. 33. admonishes that in this case the indications must be all too manifest.

Monet vero Bictus num. 38. Iudices, ut caveant, ubi etiam esset haec consuetudo, a suggestione, seu a nominanda aliqua persona, ut monent etiam Chart. et Ambrosin. de modo formandi processus in foro, l. 6. cap. 4. num. 10. nisi contra eam adsint indicia sufficientia; alias esset suggestio, et Iudex peccaret graviter, atque processus esset ipso iure nullus. Clar. quaest. 21. et ad eum Barac. num. 28. referens Castrensem, et Fuller. Talem interrogationem fore suggestivam, docent etiam alios referens Farinacium quaest. 43. num. 132. qui num. 33. monet, indicia in hoc casu esse debere nimis manifesta.

9 But in truth Sayrus proclaims this custom unjust, lib. 12. cap. 17. num. 9., because it is against the law of nature. So also Salon., 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controu. 8.; Caietanus there; Sotus, lib. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 5.; and others cited by Fagundez, in 8. praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 34. num. 13. They understand it, however, of private crimes, which do not require an accomplice, as simple homicide, theft, etc.; for in crimes that require an associate, as sodomy, adultery, highway robbery, one may question about the associates, and much more in the excepted cases against the Republic, as conspiracies, treasons, false coinings, etc., as I said.

Enim vero hanc consuetudinem proclamat iniquam Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 17. num. 9. quia est contra ius naturae. Sic etiam Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. controu. 8. Caietanus ibi, Sotus lib. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 5. et alii apud Fagundez in 8. praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 34. num. 13. Intelligunt autem de delictis privatis, quae non exigunt complicem, ut simplex homicidium, furtum, etc. nam in criminibus, quae socium requirunt, ut Sodomia, adulterium, viarum grassationes, licet de sociis interrogare, et multo magis in casibus exceptis contra Rempublicam, ut coniurationibus, proditionibus, falsis monetis, etc. ut dixi.

Question V: Whether an accused who unjustly denies a true crime, for which he was to be condemned to a fine, is bound to pay it, and is liable to restitution

1 The first opinion is affirmative: Molina, de iust. tomo 1. tract. 2. disp. 95.; Soto, l. 1. quaest. 6. art. 6.; Castridel., paen. l. 2. cap. 12.; Layman, l. 3. sect. 5. tract. 2. cap. 7. num. 4.

An Reus, negans iniuste verum crimen, propter quod erat damnandus poena pecuniaria, teneatur solvere, et sitne restitutioni obnoxius.

Prima opinio affirmativa est Molinae de iust. tomo 1. tract. 2. disp. 95. Soti l. 1. quaest. 6. art. 6. Castridel. paen. l. 2. cap. 12. Layman l. 3. sect. 5. tract. 2. cap. 7. num. 4.

2 But the opposite opinion is that of Tanner, 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 76.; Nauarr, cap. 18. ad num. 46.; Azor, t. 1. l. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5.; Vazquez, prima secundae, disp. 175. cap. 12.; Less., l. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10.; Sanchez, Summ. tom. 1. l. 2. cap. 22. num. 22., and lib. 10. de matrim. disput. 8. num. 14.; Medina, lib. 1. Sum. in secunda edit. cap. 186. num. 6.; Graff, p. 1. decis. l. 3. cap. 7. num. 25.; Azor, t. 1. l. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5., and l. 8. cap. 12. quaest. 5.; Vasquez, prima 2. disp. 175. cap. 12. num. 13.; Fagundez, in octavum praeceptum decal. l. 8. cap. 30.; Palac., l. 4. de contract. cap. 5. resol. 52., and p. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 65., where he reports that one condemned to a pecuniary punishment appeals unjustly; Diana, p. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 52., and p. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 65., where he reports that the opinion of Layman is that he is bound to the punishment by force of the crime, as imposed upon him by that very fact, not at the discretion of the Judge to be inflicted. Bassaeus makes an exception, num. 17., namely that he would not be bound before the sentence.

Opposita tamen sententia est Tanneri 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 6. dub. 2. num. 76. Nauarri cap. 18. ad num. 46. Azorii t. 1. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5. Vazquez prima secundae, disp. 175. cap. 12. Less. l. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. Sanchez Summ. tom. 1. l. 2. cap. 22. num. 22. et lib. 10. de matrim. disput. 8. num. 14. Medina lib. 1. Summae cap. 14. §. is, Angles in flor. 2. p. de restit. legis paen. art. un. diff. un. concl. 3. fol. 248. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 3. fol. 228. et ibi Salon controu. 2. Bannes art. 3. disp. 2. Lud. Lopez p. 1. Instruct. cap. 159. Rodriquez T. 1. Sum. in secunda edit. cap. 186. num. 6. Graffii p. 1. decis. l. 3. cap. 7. num. 25. Azorii t. 1. l. 5. cap. 8. quaestio 5. et l. 8. cap. 12. quaest. 5. Vasquez prima 2. disp. 175. cap. 12. num. 13. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum decal. l. 8. cap. 30. Palac. l. 4. de contract. cap. 5. resol. 52. et p. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 65. ubi refert damnatus poena pecuniae, inique appellat. Diana p. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 52. et p. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 65. ubi refert opinionem Layman esse, teneri ad poenam ex vi criminis, ut ipsi ipso facto imposita, non de inferenda arbitrio Iudicis. Excipit Bassaeus num. 17. modo non teneretur ante sententiam.

[3] Yet he is bound, they say, to the costs of the suit, says Diana, tract. 5. p. 3. resol. 52., with Sanchez, de matrimonio l. 10. d. 8. num. 14.

Teneri tamen, aiunt ad litis expensas ait Diana tract. 5. p. 3. resol. 52. cum Sanchez de matrimonio l. 3. l. 10. d. 8. num. 14.

[4] Hence also Tanner, num. 8., and others with Azor ad 4., pursue the point: Less., lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. num. 7.; Granado, prima 2. controu. 7. tract. 3. p. 1. disput. 14. sect. 2.; Vasquez, p. 2. disp. 168. num. 30.; Sala, de leg. disp. 13. sect. 8. num. 105.; Sà, verbo restit. num. 46., and v. poena, num. 14.; Diana, p. 1. Tract. 10. resol. 23., and p. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 52.: that a Fiscal who does not accuse, or a Judge who does not condemn — who are the cause of injustice, so that the Accused is not condemned to a pecuniary punishment — is not bound to restitution. Say the same of the keeper of the woods who does not accuse the one cutting the wood. The reason is that these do not sin against commutative or distributive justice, but against public vindicative justice, and the treasury has no right to the punishment directly, but only indirectly, and by means of the sentence of the Judge. Therefore a Judge without a sentence is not bound by justice to exact that punishment.

Hinc etiam prosequuntur Tannerus num. 8. et alii cum Azorio ad 4. Less. lib. 2. cap. 13. dub. 10. num. 7. Granado prima 2. controu. 7. tract. 3. p. 1. disput. 14. sect. 2. Vasquez p. 2. disp. 168. num. 30. Sala de leg. disp. 13. sect. 8. num. 105. Sà verbo restit. num. 46. et v. poena, num. 14. Diana p. 1. Tract. 10. resol. 23. et p. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 52. Fiscalem non accusantem, vel Iudicem non damnantem, qui sunt causa iniqua, ut Reus poena pecuniaria non damnetur, non teneri restitutioni. Idem dic de custode Sylvarum, non accusante caedentem ligna: Ratio est, quia non peccant hi contra commutativam, vel distributivam, sed contra vindicativam publicam, et fiscus non habet ius ad poenam directe, sed solum indirecte, et mediante Iudicis sententia. Itaque Iudex absque sententia non cogitur ex iusticia illam poenam exigere.

Question VI: Whether an accused who has unjustly denied the truth when he was to be condemned is bound to retract before the end of the trial

[1] They affirm: Sayrus, l. 12. cap. 17. num. 13.; Angles, in flor. 2. p. q. de correct. fraterna, art. 3. diffic. 7.; Malder., 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 3. dub. 1. assert. 4.; and others cited by Sanchez. But Sanchez, cited above, steadily denies, citing Philiarcus, Bonac., Tract. de Legibus disp. 10. quaest. 3. punct. 1. num. 8.; Azor., p. 3. l. 13. cap. 25. dub. 5., who nevertheless adds that the confessor is bound to admonish the accused to be ready for the truth if he is questioned again. Yet this displeases Diana, tract. 15. resol. 26. p. 1., and deservedly, because it exposes the Accused to peril; but it is enough to admonish him to amendment. The same think all who deny that he is bound to confess the truth in a capital case: Panorm., in C. cum super de confess.; Angelus, v. Confessio delicti; Sylvest., ibidem; Petrus Navar., l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. a num. 142.; and Sà judges it probable, v. Iudex; Less., dub. 3. cap. 31.; Tanner., disp. 4. quaest. 5. Their reason is that in every other matter extreme necessity excuses from payment of a debt. Therefore Sà admonishes confessors not to compel an accused acting on this opinion. Bassaeus also admonishes this, v. Reus, num. 5.

An Reus, negans veritatem indebite, quandamnaretur, teneatur retractare ante finem Iudicii.

Affirmant Sayrus l. 12. cap. 17. num. 13. Angles in flor. 2. p. q. de correct. fraterna, art. 3. diffic. 7. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 3. dub. 1. assert. 4. et alii apud Sanchez NEGANT vero constanter Sanchez citatus, citans Philiarcum, Bonac. Tract. de Legibus disp. 10. quaest. 3. punct. 1. num. 8. Azor. p. 3. l. 13. cap. 25. dub. 5. qui tamen addit, teneri confessarium monere reum, ut sit paratus ad veritatem, si iterum interrogetur. Hoc tamen displicet Dianae tract. 15. resol. 26. p. 1. et merito, quia est exponere Reum periculo; sed satis est eum monere ad emendationem. Idem sentiunt quotquot negant, teneri in causa mortis fateri veritatem: Panorm. in C. cum super de confess. Angelus v. Confessio delicti*, Sylvest. ibidem, Petrus Navar. l. 2.* de restit. cap. 4. a num. 142. et probabilem censet Sà v. Iudex*, Less. dub. 3. cap. 31. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 5. Eorum ratio est, quia in omni alia materia, extrema necessitas excusat a redditione debiti. Itaque Sà monet Confessarios, ne reum hac opinione operantem cogant. Id monet etiam Bassaeus* v. Reus*, num. 5.*

[2] THIS second opinion holds much more after the sentence has been given; for then the judgment is finished, and he has ceased in that cause to be Judge, as S. Antonin. weighs, 3. p. tit. 9. cap. 16. §. 8.; Sylvester, v. iudicium in fine; Diana with Sanchez above; and it is the text in Leg. Iudex, ff. de re iudiciaria; and consequently the accused is no longer bound to answer the judge, Navar., Man. cap. 25. numero 38.; Rodriquez, tomo 2. quaestione 18. art. 9.; Pingianus, in pract. crim. can. cap. 3. fol. 258.; Segura Davolos, in direct. iudicii, cap. 17. num. 36.; Villalobos, tomo 2. tract. 16. diff. 3. num. 4; Diana, p. 3. tract. 5. resol. 103.; Dictus, quaest. 81. num. 10., against Ledesma, tomo 2. tract. 8. cap. 24.; Salon, 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. concl. 3.; Vega, Tom. 2. cap. 89. casu 2. et 3.; Bannes, 1. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2.; Medina, in Summa, l. 1. cap. 14. §. 35.; Corduba, Sum. quaest. 64 p. 2.; and others who relied on this reason: because in such a case he who denied his true crime, and yet is condemned to death, exposes himself as one unjustly condemned by the judge, and therefore defames him and stirs up the people against him.

HAEC secunda sententia multo magis valet post latam sententiam; tunc enim iudicium est finitum, et desiit in illa causa esse Iudex, ut ponderant S. Antonin. 3. p. tit. 9. cap. 16. §. 8. Sylvester v. iudicium in fine, Diana cum Sanchez supra; et est textus in Leg. Iudex, ff. de re iudiciaria*, et consequenter reus non tenetur amplius iudici respondere, Navar.* Man. cap. 25. numero 38. Rodriquez tomo 2. quaestione 18. art. 9. Pingianus in pract. crim. can. cap. 3. fol. 258. Segura Davolos in direct. iudicii*, cap. 17. num. 36. Villalobos tomo 2. tract. 16. diff. 3. num. 4 Diana p. 3. tract. 5. resol. 103. Dictus quaest. 81. num. 10. contra Ledefmam tomo 2. tract. 8. cap. 24. Salonium 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2.*

concl. 3. Vegam Tom. 2. cap. 89. casu 2. et 3. Bannes 1. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. Medinam in Summa*, l. 1. cap. 14. §. 35. Corduba* Sum. quaest. 64 p. 2. et alios, qui hac ratione nitebantur, quia in tali casu, iis, qui negavit suum crimen verum, et tamen morte damnatur, exponit se, tanquam iniuste a iudice damnatum, atque ideo eum infamat, et suscitat contra eum gentem.

3 BUT it is answered that no infamy is thence brought upon the Judge, or even upon the witnesses. For the Accused are wont to deny, and the presumption stands in place of the judge's sentence. Therefore judges should beware lest they lead accused of this kind to a recantation.

SED respondetur, nullam inde infamiam Iudici, vel etiam testibus afferri. Sunt enim soliti Rei negare, et praesumptio stat pro iudicis sententia. Itaque caveant iudices, ne reos huiusmodi ad palinodiam inducant.

4 Sanchez ADDS, num. 12., that if the Accused has by force of torture imposed upon himself a false crime, for which he is condemned, he is not bound to retract, unless the infamy would redound to others.

ADDIT Sanchez num. 12. si Reus vi torturae sibi falsum crimen imposuit, propter quod damnatur, non teneri retractare, nisi infamia in alios redundaret.

Question VII: Whether, if the accused is interrogated again, he can give only a relative answer, saying: as I answered

1 They SUPPOSE that the Judge is given the right to compel the accused to answer clearly, so that he be tortured if he will not answer: Chart., in praxi interr. reorum, l. 3. cap. 2. num. 11. et 25.; Iason, in Leg. Praescriptione, Cod. si contra ius vel util. publ.; Baldus, leg. Barb.; and Boss., tit. de responsis reo faciendis, num. 4. And the aforesaid torture is given to the accused, not for eliciting the truth about the crime; for to that effect preceding indications sufficient for torture are required, as Clarus says with the common view, §. fin. quaest. 64., and Chart. above num. 4. But torture in this case is given for extorting a precise assertive or negative answer, Carrer. Paris. de Pat., Bald., Bossius, Brunus, Clarus, Cason, cited by Chart. above. Indeed Follerus and Millcius add with him that an Accused refusing to answer is to be punished as a criminal; but this is admitted in a civil matter, not in criminal causes, as Socinus, Bettandus, and Chart. note, where above num. 9.; for in criminal causes silence is an indication for torture.

An si Reus iterum interrogetur, possit solam responsionem relatiuam dare, dicendo, ut respondi.

SUPPONUNT, dari Iudici ius, ut cogat reum respondere clare, ita ut torqueatur, si nolit respondere, Chart. in praxi interr. reorum*, l. 3. cap. 2. num. 11. et 25. Iason in* Leg. Praescriptione, Cod. si contra ius vel util. publ. Baldus, leg. Barb. et Boss. tit. de responsis reo faciendis*, num. 4. et praedicta tortura datur reo, non ad eruendam veritatem de delicto; nam ad hunc effectum requiruntur indicia praecedentia, ad torturam sufficientia, ut cum communi ait Clarus, §. fin. quaest. 64. et Chart. supra num. 4. Sed tortura in hoc casu datur ad extorquendam praecisam responsionem assertivam, vel negativam, Carrer. Paris. de Pat. Bald. Bossius, Brunus, Clarus, Cason, apud Chart. supra. Imo addunt cum eo Follerus, et Millcius, Reum, recusantem respondere, puniendum, tanquam Reum; sed hoc in re civili admittitur, non in criminalibus, ut notant Socinus, Bettandus, et Chart ubi supra num. 9. in criminalibus enim silentium est inditium ad torturam.*

2 THEREFORE, for our matter: in the case where the Judge again wishes to examine, whether he may answer relatively so dryly: I say, as I answered before; whether the Judge is bound to accept such an answer.

AD rem igitur nostram, in casu, quo Iudex rursum velit examinare; an possit relative sic aride respondere: Dico, ut alias respondi; num tenetur Iudex acceptare talem responsionem.

3 MANY, whom Chart. follows, loc. cit. l. 3. cap. 2. num. 83. et 84., say the Judge can again require that he answer integrally.

MULTI, quos sequitur Chart. loc. cit. l. 3. cap. 2. num. 83. et 84. dicunt, posse Iudicem iterum exigere, ut integre respondeat.

4 I SUPPOSE that the accused can ask that his first answers be read out, Boss., tit. de respons. a reo facienda, num. 3., and others cited by Chart., num. 86.

SUPPONO, posse reum petere, ut suae primae responsiones perlegantur, Boss. tit. de respons. a reo facienda, num. 3. et alii apud Chart. num. 86.

5 He can also answer with a protestation, as he now recollects; but refer himself to the first answers, about which he recollected better.

POTEST etiam cum protestatione respondere, ut nunc recordatur; sed remittere se ad primas responsiones, de quibus melius recordabatur.

6 But beware that at times the judge, whether covetous of money or urged on by others, presses the accused too severely; and then indeed, if the accused proceeds candidly, he is not bound to answer, as Menochius and others cited by Chartar. note, num. 87.

Sed cauere te, aliquando iudicem, vel affectatum pecunia, vel ab aliis impulsum, nimis severe reum premere, et tunc sane, si reus candide incedit, non tenetur respondere, ut notant Menochius, et alii apud Chartar. num. 87.

7 AND if the Accused doubts whether the Judge interrogate him first and second, he is not bound to answer. So Bannes, Henriquez, Less., Salas, Sanchez, Sotus, and others cited by them. And Diana asserts this as more probable, p. 3. tract. 5. resol. 106., bringing forward Lessius, l. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3.; Sanchez, T. 2. l. 6. cap. 3. num. 24.; Salas, p. 2. quaest. 21. tract. 8. d. un. sect. 17. num. 155.; Henriquez, l. 14. cap. 3. num. 3. in Gloss. littera X.; Bannes, Soto, Medina, and others, against Sancius, Select. disp. 43. num. 28. The reason is that it is a greater evil that a man be killed on my confession, than that I not obey the Judge, uncertain in possession of the right of questioning him. Moreover, everyone is presumed good until he be proved bad; and the laws favor the accused as one in possession.

ET si Reus dubitat; an Iudex eum primo, et secundo interroget, non tenetur respondere. Ita Bannes, Henriquez, Less. Salas, Sanchez, Sotus, et alii ab his citati. Et hoc probabilius asserit Diana p. 3. tract. 5. resol. 106. adducens Lessium l. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. Sanchez T. 2. l. 6. cap. 3. num. 24. Salam p. 2. quaest. 21. tract. 8. d. un. sect. 17. num. 155. Henriquez l. 14. cap. 3. num. 3. in Gloss. littera X. Bannes, Sotum, Medinam, et alios, contra Sancium Select. disp. 43. num. 28. Ratio est, quia maius malum est, ex mea confessione occidi hominem, quam non obediti Iudici incerta in possessione illum interrogandi. Praeterea unusquisque praesumitur bonus, quoadusque probetur malus; et iura favent reo, ut possessori.

8 But the Accused thus presumptively in possession can require that the depositions of the witnesses be given to him; and as long as they are not given, he can reasonably doubt whether he is being questioned lawfully. So Aldiete. of the Society of Jesus, de Religiosa disciplina tuenda, l. 2. cap. 4. num. 7.; Caietanus, and Aragon., 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2.; Ioan. de Cruz, in direct. p. 1. tract. 8. art. 8. dub. 9.

> *POTEST autem Reus praesumptus requirere, ut dentur sibi depositiones testium; et quamdiu non dantur, potest rationabiliter dubitare, an legitime interrogetur. Ita Aldiete. Societ. 9 ADVERTISE, however, that the Doctors alleged assert the same even concerning regular Judges, as Diana notes. Wherefore Ioseph a S. Maria is deceived, in Tribun. Relig. tract. 4. cap. 17. §. 3., saying these rules do not obtain in the judgment of Regulars. To them add Navar., in Summa, cap. 25. num. 35.; Rodriquez, in ord. iud. cap. 10. n. 3.; Bonacina, in Decalogum disp. 10. q. 3. p. 2.; Dictus, q. 81. num. 37.

> ADVERTE autem, allegatos Doctores idem asserere, quoad Iudices regulares, ut notat Diana. Quare decipitur Ioseph a S. Maria in Tribun. Bonacinam in* Decalogum disp. 10. q. 3. p. 2. Dictum q. 81. num. 37.

10 NEITHER does it avail in this case to say that the Prelate is in possession of superiority, as Lorca objects, 2. 2. sect. 3. disp. 53. num. 8. et 9. For Dictus answers that this is true in simple extrajudicial obedience, of which the objection is verified; but otherwise in judicial obedience, in which a superior, even a Regular, is not in possession unless the order of law is observed.

> NEQUE valet in hoc casu dicere, Praelatum esse in possessione superioritatis, ut opponit Lorca 2. 2. sect. 3. disp. 53. num. 8. et 9. Respondet enim Dictus, hoc verum in simplici obedientia extraiudiciali, de qua verificatur obiectio; secus autem in obedientia iudiciali, in qua superior etiam Regularis non est in possessione, nisi iuris ordine servato.

11 Diana, 4. p. Tract. 8. resol. 130., treats of this question again, p. 4. tract. 8. resol. 130., treating of the judgment of the Holy Inquisition, where greater severity is required; and he says that in that forum it is not required that the witnesses and other indications be made manifest. Lodovicus Peguera notes the same, in praxi crim. cap. 12. §. 5. num. 13. For the rest he refers himself to those things which he had said, tract. 5. resol. 91., in 3. p.; and he brings forward also Suarez de Paz., in praxi, tom. 3. p. 5. cap. 3. num. 14., constantly confirming that it is certain the Judge is bound to notify the Accused of the depositions of all the witnesses; otherwise he is most wretchedly deceived.

> Diana 4. p. Tract. 8. resol. 130. de hac quaestione iterum agit p. 4. tract. 8. resol. 130. agens de Iudicio Sanctae Inquisitionis, ubi maior severitas requiritur, et dicit, in eo foro non requiri, ut manifestentur testes, et alia indicia. Idem advertit Lodovicus Peguera in praxi crim. cap. 12. §. 5. num. 13. De caetero se remittit ad ea, quae dixerat tract. 5.

resol. 91. in 3. p. et adducit etiam Suarez de Paz. in praxi, tom. 3. p. 5. cap. 3. num. 14. constanter confirmans, esse certum, teneri Iudicem notificare Reo testium omnium depositiones; alioqui miserrime falli.

12 Whence you have that it was badly said, quaest. 81. num. 39., that it would drive us to straits to say that Diana moderates that opinion which he had handed down in that resol. 91., and to think it enough if the Accused be told by the Judge that he is held, so that proceedings be taken against him; and he brings forward also Bouentius, in direct. p. 2. cap. 55., verbo Reus.

Ex quo habes, male dictum quaest. 81. num. 39. ut ad angustias cogeret, dicere, Dianam moderari illam sententiam, quam tradiderat ea resol. 91. et satis existimare, si Reo dicatur a Iudice, haberi, ut procedatur contra eum, et adducit etiam Bouentium in direct. p. 2. cap. 55. verbo Reus.

Question VIII: How the accused ought to conduct himself in his examination, when pressed by the judge's unjust questions

1 Judges are accustomed to tender to the Accused an oath concerning the truth to be told, according to the opinion of Bartolus on the Leg. Inter omnes, §. recte, ff. de furtis, and the common opinion at August. ad Ang. de malef. on the verse, Comperuerunt. And in the Leg. 1. Cod. de iuram. calumn. where Baldus also, who also say that this is observed throughout all Italy. So too D. Thom. 2. 2. question 69. art. 1. and 2. More on this Chartar. l. 3. cap. 3. num. 11 has.

Quomodo se gerere debet REUS in examine, a Iudicis pressus iniquis interrogationibus.

Solent Iudices Reo iuramentum deferre de veritate dicenda, iuxta sententiam Bartoli in Leg. Inter omnes, §. recte, ff. de furtis, et communem sententiam apud August. ad Ang. de malef. in versu, Comperuerunt. Et in Leg. 1. Cod. de iuram. calumn. ubi etiam Baldus, qui etiam dicunt, id servari in tota Italia. Sic etiam D. Thom. 2. 2. quaestione 69. art. 1. et 2. Plura de hac habet Chartar. l. 3. cap. 3. num. 11.

2 But whatever oath may have been taken, if he is interrogated iniquitously, he is not bound to confess the truth, as Henry admonishes quodl. 1. quaest. 14. Sylvester v. Confessio delicti, quaest. 1. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 136. it is gathered from C. Qualiter, et quando, and C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. Lessius l. 2. cap. 3. dub. 3. Tolet. Sum. l. 5. cap. 58. yet neither ought he to lie, as the Saintly Doctor says in spec. animae, cap. 1.

Sed quocumque dato iuramento, si inique interroget, non tenetur fateri veritatem, ut admonent Henricus quodl. 1. quaest. 14. Sylvester v. Confessio delicti, quaest. 1. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 136. colligitur ex C. Qualiter, et quando, et C. Inquisitionis, de accusat. Lessius l. 2. cap. 3. dub. 3. Tolet. Sum. l. 5. cap. 58. neque tamen debet mentiri, ut ait S. Doct. in spec. animae, cap. 1.

3 Then indeed the Judge does not legitimately interrogate, when he does not observe the order prescribed by the Law; but he interrogates suggestively those things which he cannot, and by seeking to extort, and by suggesting, and by deceptive cavils drawing one into snares, so that at times the Accused, reduced to straits, can neither deny, nor assert, nor keep silent, nor use any of the usual amphibologies.

Tunc vero Iudex legitime non interrogat, quando non servat ordinem a Lege praescriptum; sed suggestive interrogat ea, quae non potest, et quaerendo extorquere, et suggerendo, et cavillis deceptoriis trahendo ad laqueos, ita ut aliquando Reus in angustias deductus, neque negare queat, neque asserere, neque tacere, aut aliqua ex usitatis uti amphibologiis.

4 Sotus l. 5. quaest. 6. art. 1. thinks that the accused cannot employ words signifying an express negation of the truth, and is bound rather to meet death. Couar. l. 1. var. cap. 2. follows; the reason is, because this is openly to lie, which is never licit.

> Sotus l. 5. quaest. 6. art. 1. putat, non posse reum verbis significantibus expresse negationem veritatis adhibere, et teneri potius mortem oppetere. Sequitur Couar. l. 1. var. cap. 2. ratio est, quia hoc est aperte mentiri, quod nunquam licet.

5 On the contrary, they commonly grant that it is licit for him even to use those modes of speaking. Adrian. in 4. quaest. de sigillo, confess. Caietanus opusc. 17. respons. 5. Maior in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 18. Nauar. Man. cap. 12. num. 9. and cap. 18. num. 61. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 13. p. 1. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. Less. de iust. cap. 31. dub. 2. and others at these places. And this is the opinion of D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 38. quaest. 2. in resolut. where he teaches, the discord between understanding and speech remaining; that all fault can be removed, and there, and dub. 3. litt. ad mendacium he requires two things; the false signification of the voice, as the material, and the wicked intention of deceiving, as the formal, which dub. 2. he calls the desire to lie. And disp. 39. art. 3. quaest. 1. fundamento 1. he brings forward that saying of D. Gregory. Words serve the intention, and God judges such words as those from which they are uttered from the innermost heart; and therefore on the ultimate foundation he says, those words, confirmed by oath, are to be measured according to the intention of the one swearing. Therefore when he is interrogated iniquitously, he can employ whatever words he pleases from the intention of signifying whatever he wants; so that just as, if no one were interrogating, he could turn those words to any sense he pleased; so also now, where the Interrogator is illegitimate. Whence Valentia answers all the objections; for that is not formally a lie in which the intention is right, although the words sound the opposite outwardly: but this is forbidden, as the Doctors say at Valentia, that the speaker should not intend to deny that which is true, and which he is bound to say, but not to use extraordinary amphibologies. Wherefore, since words are pure matter, they can take on whatever form from the intention.

> E regione communiter concedunt, licere illi etiam illis modis loquendi uti. Adrian. in 4. quaest. de sigillo, confess. Caietanus opusc. 17. respons. 5. Maior in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 18. Nauar. Man. cap. 12. num. 9. et cap. 18. num. 61. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 13. p. 1. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. Less. de iust. cap. 31. dub. 2. et alii apud hos. Et haec est sententia D. Bonau. in 3. dist. 38. quaest. 2. in resolut. ubi docet, manente intellectus, et sermonis discordia; posse amoveri omnem culpam, et ibi, et dub. 3. litt. ad mendacium requirit duo; falsam vocis significationem, ut materiale, et intentionem pravam fallendi, ut formale, quam dub. 2. libidinem ad mentiendum vocat. Et disp. 39. art. 3. quaest. 1. fundamento 1. affert illud D. Gregorii. Verba deserviunt intentioni, et Deus talia verba iudicat, qualia ex intimis proferuntur; et ideo fundamento ultimo dicit, verba illa, iuramento firmata, mensuranda iuxta intentionem iurantis. Itaque cum inique interrogatur, potest adhibere quaecumque verba ad placitum ex intentione significandi quodcumque vult; ita ut sicuti, si nullus interrogaret, posset ea verba in sensum omnem ad placitum revolvere; ita et nunc, ubi illegitimus est Interrogator. Ex quo respondet Valentia ad omnes obiectiones; illud enim non est formaliter mendacium, in quo intentio est recta, licet verba extrinsecus sonent oppositum: hoc vero vetitum est, ut aiunt Doctores apud Valentiam, ut non intendat loquens negare id, quod est verum, et tenetur dicere, non autem uti amphibologiis extraordinariis. Quare verba cum sint pura materia, quamcumque formam ex intentione inducere poterunt.

Question IX: Whether it is lawful for the accused to appeal to another judge

1 To appeal is licit for one who has been aggrieved. For so the Apostle Act. 25. appealed to Caesar, and it is granted in dist. 2. quaest. 6. C. omnis, where Anacletus the Pope, epist. 1. says: Let every oppressed man freely, if he wishes, appeal to the judgment of Priests, and let him be prohibited by no one, but be supported and delivered by them.

> An liceat REO alium Iudicem appellare.
> Appellare licet gravato. Sic enim Apostolus Act. 25. Caesarem appellavit*, et conceditur dist. 2. quaest. 6. C. omnis, ubi Anacletus Papa epist. 1. ait:* Omnis oppressus libere Sacerdotum, si voluerit, appellet iudicium, et a nullo prohibeatur, sed ab iis fulciatur, et liberetur.

2 And this has also been granted to Regulars, as the Sacred Congregation over Bishops and Regulars declared in the year 1587, of which Sorbus in Compend. Privilig. Mendic. v. Appellare, and Lezana notes t. 1. cap. 9. num. 7. with D. Bonau. in spec. animae, cap. 1. §. Item ex tertio.

> Et hoc etiam regularibus concessum est, ut declaravit Sacra Congregatio super Episcopos, et Regulares, anno 1587. de quo Sorbus in Compend. Privilig. Mendic. v. Appellare, et notat Lezana t. 1. cap. 9. num. 7. cum D. Bonau. in spec. animae, cap. 1. §. Item ex tertio.

3 So that not only one condemned from indicia, but even one convicted can appeal, l. 2. §. 1. where the Glossa Bart. Cyn. and Castrens. Cod. whose appell. Vivian. opinione 50. Guaz defens. 36. cap. 11. Farinac. quaest. 101. num. 131. Scacc. de appell. quaest. 17. lim. 4. num. 7. asserting this to be the common opinion.

> Ut non modo ex inditiis condemnatus, sed etiam convictus appellare queat l. 2. §. 1. ubi Glossa Bart. Cyn. et Castrens. Cod. quorum appell. Vivian. opinione 50. Guaz defens. 36. cap. 11. Farinac. quaest. 101. num. 131. Scacc. de appell. quaest. 17. lim. 4. num. 7. asserens communem esse.

4 That one who is not aggrieved cannot appeal, all teach with Baldus on the Leg. un. Bartolo Castrensi, Salyceto, Cod. whose appell. Scac. quaest. 5. num. 94. See below on the Aduocato quaest. 6.

> Non gravatum vero appellare non posse, docent omnes cum Baldo in Leg. un. Bartolo Castrensi, Salyceto, Cod. quorum appell. Scac. quaest. 5. num. 94. Vide infra de Aduocato quaest. 6.

5 Therefore one who has confessed, and one convicted, for that reason they say cannot appeal, unless he brings forward some grave cause. See Farinacium quaest. 101. num. 143. Scac. quaest. 17. lim. 4. num. 15.

> Confessum igitur, et convictum, ideo dicunt appellare non posse, nisi aliquam gravem causam afferat. Vide Farinacium quaest. 101. num. 143. Scac. quaest. 17. lim. 4. num. 15.

6 Since therefore the Judge proceeds by the right order, and there is no cause for the Accused, because the sentence has been laid down according to the sense of the Doctors, it is not licit to appeal.

> Cum itaque recto ordine Iudex procedit, et nulla Reo est causa, eo quod sententia lata sit iuxta Doctorum sensum, non licet appellare.

7 Three conditions they require for a just appeal. The first is, that it be made within ten days. The second, that the Judge be ordinary, or delegate, not arbiter. The third, that one not be appealed more than three times from the same sentence. So Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. See other conditions in Sylvestro under the word appellatio.

Tres conditiones requirunt ad iustam appellationem. Prima est, ut fiat inter decem dies. Secunda, ut Iudex sit ordinarius, vel delegatus, non arbiter. Tertia, ut non plusquam ter appelletur ab eadem sententia. Ita Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. Vide alias conditiones in Sylvestro verbo appellatio.

8 But if the sentence is manifestly iniquitous, one can appeal even without those conditions. So Tanner. num. 100. with Valentia quaest. 11. p. 3.

Si vero manifeste iniqua est sententia, potest appellari etiam sine illis conditionibus. Ita Tanner. num. 100. cum Valentia quaest. 11. p. 3.

9 But here a grave question occurs: Whether when the Judge has judged according to the more probable opinion, the appeal is licit.

Occvrrit vero hic gravis quaestio: An quando Iudex iudicavit secundum probabiliorem sententiam, licita sit appellatio.

10 I SUPPOSE, however, that the Judge is bound in judging to follow the more probable opinion. So commonly at Sanchez Tom. 1. Lib. 1. cap. 9. num. 37. and Dianam part. 2. Tract. 13. resol. 3.

SUPPONO autem, Iudicem teneri in iudicando sequi probabiliorem sententiam. Ita communiter apud Sanchez Tom. 1. Lib. 1. cap. 9. num. 37. et Dianam part. 2. Tract. 13. resol. 3.

11 THAT, however, in absolving and condemning he might act on a probable opinion, leaving the more probable aside, many have taught, at Sanchez num. 46. Dianam part. 2. tract. 13. resol. 3. where he reports Alvarez, Bonacina, Lorcam, Ruam, Delrium. Others subscribe to these at Dianam part. 3. in addit. secundariis, resolutione 13.

QUOD tamen in absolvendo, et condemnando possit opinione probabili, relicta probabiliori, docuere multi apud Sanchez num. 46. Dianam part. 2. tract. 13. resol. 3. ubi refert Alvarez, Bonacinam, Lorcam, Ruam, Delrium. His subscribunt alii apud Dianam part. 3. in addit. secundariis, resolutione 13.

12 INDEED I in prima secunda, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de opinione probabili judged that in criminal matters the Judge ought to hold that opinion which favors the Accused, even if less probable. So with Diana part. 3. addit secund. resol. 13. from which it follows that if he judges, following the more probable opinion against the Accused, the latter can appeal. In this, however, there is a great controversy: Whether he can licitly appeal.

EGO quidem prima secunda, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de opinione probabili censui, in criminalibus debere Iudicem tenere opinionem illam, quae favet Reo, etiamsi minus probabilem. Ita cum Diana part. 3. addit secund. resol. 13. ex quo fit, ut si iudicet, probabiliorem sequendo contra Reum, possit is appellare. In hoc vero est grandis controversia: An licite appellare queat.

13 The FIRST opinion entirely denies it. So Petrus Ledesma tom. 2. tract. 8. cap. 24. concl. 8. diff. 2. adducing Bannes, and it is held by those who say the Judge is not obliged, for the favor of the Accused, to follow even a less probable opinion. Sancius in select. disp. 44. num. 52. Bonacina de Legibus, disp. 2. quaest. 4. puncto 9. num. 15. Philippus dictus noster quaest. 143. num. 6.

PRIMA opinio penitus negat. Ita Petrus Ledesma tom. 2. tract. 8. cap. 24. concl. 8. diff. 2. adducens Bannem, et eam tuentur illi, qui dicunt non obligari Iudicem ad favorem Rei sequi etiam minus probabilem. Sancius in select. disp. 44. num. 52. Bonacina de Legibus, disp. 2. quaest. 4. puncto 9. num. 15. Philippus dictus noster quaest. 143. num. 6.

14 BUT woe, woe to the Accused, the Advocates, and the Procurators (Diana cries out, part. 3. resol. 104.) if that opinion were true. Therefore he asserts that the Accused can in this case appeal on account of a cause of blood, with Ioan de la Cruz in direct. part. 1. pract. 8. art. 3. dub. 11. concl. 2. Salon 2. 2. q. 69. art. 3. concl. 2. Sylvius inclines in 2. 2. D. Thom. quaest. 64. art. 5. and Turrianus holds it absolutely 2. 2. Tom. 2. disp. 51. dub. 1.

> SED vae, vae Reis, Advocatis, et Procuratoribus (clamat Diana part. 3. resol. 104.) si ea opinio esset vera. Itaque asserit, posse Reum in hoc casu, ob causam sanguinis appellare, cum Ioan de la Cruz in direct. part. 1. pract. 8. art. 3. dub. 11. concl. 2. Salon 2. 2. q. 69. art. 3. concl. 2. Inclinat Sylvius in 2. 2. D. Thom. quaest. 64. art. 5. et absolute eam tenet Turrianus 2. 2. Tom. 2. disp. 51. dub. 1.

15 I ADD with Diana, against Salonium, Sylvius above, and Malderum 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 3. dub. 4. that this is true also in civil causes, even if the inferior Judge has rendered sentence according to the more probable opinion. Which opinion Cruz holds only in the case where the appellant is in possession; but Diana says it is always true generously, provided the contrary opinion, for which the appeal is made, be probable.

> ADDO cum Diana, contra Salonium, Sylvium supra, et Malderum 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 3. dub. 4. hoc verum etiam in causis civilibus, etiamsi Iudex inferior sententiam tulerit secundum sententiam probabiliorem. Quam sententiam Cruz tenet solum in casu, quo appellans sit in possessione; sed semper veram ait Diana generose, dummodo contraria opinio, pro qua appellatur, probabilis sit.

16 YOU WILL SAY. In a civil cause the superior Judge will be bound to judge according to the more probable opinion, as you said in prima secundae, at the place cited, and the inferior has already judged according to this.

> DICES. In causa civili tenebitur Iudex superior iudicare secundum probabiliorem, ut dixisti prima secundae, loco cit. et secundum hanc iudicavit iam inferior.

17 Diana answers that the Judge can judge according to a probable opinion, leaving the more probable aside, as the Doctors teach, whom he adduced in Tract. de Parlam. resol. 20. and Tract. de opinione probabili resol. 3.

> RESPONDET Diana, posse Iudicem iudicare secundum opinionem probabilem, relicta probabiliori, ut docent Doctores, quos adduxit Tract. de Parlam. resol. 20. et Tract. de opinione probabili resol. 3.

18 But the RATIONALE in the criminal case is more solid, because it is licit to defend one's life by an honest means. Therefore the appellant, resting on a probable opinion, acts reasonably and licitly; why then is he compelled to undergo death, if he is held on a probable basis to defend his life?

> RATIO vero pro criminali solidior est, quia tueri vitam via honesta licet. Itaque appellans, nixus opinione probabili, rationabiliter, et licite operatur; cur igitur is cogitur subire mortem, si probabiliter tenetur vitam tueri?

19 THIS follows more concerning reputation than concerning the goods of riches: For reputation is a good which for the most part I preserve for myself without the loss of any good in another nearby; But riches, if they are given to me, are taken away from another.

> HOC magis de fama, quam de bonis divitiarum sequitur: Nam fama est bonum, quod plerumque mihi conservo sine amissione alicuius boni in proximo; At opes, si mihi dantur, auferuntur ab alio.

Question X: Whether, and how, the accused can defend himself

1 The ACCUSED, if he confesses the crime, will leave only slight means of defense for his cause; for in one who has confessed there are no parts for the Judge, except condemning, as Clarus notes, §. fin. quaest. 65. Farinacius quaest. 81. and others at these places.

> An, et quomodo REUS se defendere possit.
> REUS, si confiteatur delictum, modicam relinquet suae causae defensionem; nam in confessum Iudicis partes non sunt, nisi condemnando, ut notat Clarus, §. fin. quaest. 65. Farinacius quaest. 81. et alii apud hos.

2 SIMILARLY while he is convicted by two witnesses, who are contestes, as Farinac. notes, quaest. 63. num. 133. For two witnesses suffice in every cause for perfect proof, cap. in omni negotio, de testibus. But who are contestes I shall say in disp. 30.

> SIMILITER dum est convictus per duos testes, qui sint contestes, ut notat Farinac. quaest. 63. num. 133. Duo enim testes sufficiunt in omni causa ad perfectam probationem, cap. in omni negotio, de testibus. Qui autem sint contestes dicam disp. 30.

3 THEREFORE the Accused can then be condemned just as if he had confessed, Leg. qui sententia, and there the Doctors Cod. de custodia reorum, cap. At si clerici. where all. See Farinac. quaest. 81.

> TUNC igitur ita potest condemnari Reus, ac si esset confessus, Leg. qui sententia*, et ibi Doctores* Cod. de custodia reorum, cap. At si clerici. ubi omnes. Vide Farinac. quaest. 81.

4 YET by Canon law, on one convicted a lesser penalty is to be imposed, as the Doctors teach with Farinac. loco cit.

> TAMEN de iure Canonico convicto, minor est poena imponenda, ut docent DD. cum Farinac. loco cit.

5 BUT the contestes ought to be sworn, and exempt from every exception, Leg. ubi numerus, ff. de testibus, cap. in omni negotio, on the same title.

> DEBENT autem contestes esse iurati, et omni exceptione maiores, Leg. ubi numerus, ff. de testibus, cap. in omni negotio, eodem tit.

6 The Accused is found convicted also by undoubted indicia Leg. 2. Cod. quorum appellatio. Likewise by an instrument made by mandate, or by the consent of the Accused. By these three modes he is convicted Leg. sciant cuncti, where Bal. and Sylvius in sum. Cod. de prob. and Farinacius quaest. 84.

> CONVICTUS reperitur Reus etiam indiciis indubitatis Leg. 2. Cod. quorum appellatio. Similiter instrumento de mandato, seu de consensu Rei facto. His tribus modis convincitur Leg. sciant cuncti*, ubi Bal. et Sylvius* in sum. Cod. de prob. et Farinacius quaest. 84.

7 BY the way of Notoriety also the Accused is convicted, as Boss. has, tit. de convictis, and tit. quomodo procedatur in crimine notorio. We speak, however, of a Notorious fact.

> PER viam etiam Notorii convincitur Reus, ut habet Boss. tit. de convictis, et tit. quomodo procedatur in crimine notorio. Loquimur autem de Notorio facti.

8 A fact is called notorious, moreover, when it has been committed before the whole people, or its greater part. So Cyn. whom Clar. follows in §. fin. quaest. 9. Farinac. quaest. 21. num 41. and others at his side.

DICITUR autem notorium factum, quando coram toto populo, vel eius maiori parte factum est. Ita Cyn. quem sequitur Clar. in §. fin. quaest. 9. Farinac. quaest. 21. num 41. et alii apud eum.

9 MOREOVER, the Accused can legitimately defend himself in many ways.

CAETERUM, se multis modis potest Reus legitime defendere.

10 The FIRST is by inducing the nullity of the process, whether by alleging a defect of jurisdiction, which is the foundation. Guaz. defens. 1. cap. 1. Bald. in Rubr. Cod. si a competente Iudice; For that is unjudged which is done by one not having the right of judging; Lib. 1. ff. haec autem, ff. quod quisque iuris.

PRIMUS est nullitatem processus inducendo, sive allegando defectum iurisdictionis, quae est fundamentum. Guaz. defens. 1. cap. 1. Bald. in Rubr. Cod. si a competente Iudice; Est enim iniudicatum, quod a non habente ius dicendi, fit; Lib. 1. ff. haec autem, ff. quod quisque iuris.

11 BUT it lacks jurisdiction for many reasons, as Guaz. reports, defens. 1. cap. 21. and on the Judge suspect Laurentius a Benevento published an entire volume.

MULTIS autem ex capitibus caret iurisdictione, ut refert Guaz. defens. 1. cap. 21. et de Iudice suspecto integrum volumen edidit Laurentius a Benevento.

12 The SECOND is, if there be no constancy regarding the body of the crime, Guaz. defens. 4. Bouer. decis. 259.

SECUNDUS est, si non constet de corpore delicti, Guaz. defens. 4. Bouer. decis. 259.

13 The THIRD, if the Accused has not been legitimately cited, Guaz. defens. 10. Farinac. consil. 14.

TERTIUS, si Reus non est legitime citatus, Guaz. defens. 10. Farinac. consil. 14.

14 The FOURTH, unless a copy of the process has been offered, Guaz. defens. 22. and 24. So Paul V. decreed in his Constitution for the Roman Curia.

QUARTUS, nisi oblata fuerit copia processus, Guaz. defens. 22. et 24. Ita decrevit sua Constit. Paulus V. in Romana Curia.

15 There are many other modes by which the process is made null, from illegitimate testimony, series, etc.

MULTI sunt alii modi, quibus processus fit nullus ex illegitima testificatione, serie, etc.

16 SIMILARLY from the denial of the Accused, grave defenses are brought forth.

SIMILITER ex negatione Rei, graves defensiones eruuntur.

17 Therefore, when the Plaintiff, or the fisc, does not prove, and the Accused denies, the Accused is to be absolved, Clar. quaest. 62. Guaz. defensione 29.

Itaque Actore, vel fisco non probante, et Reo negante, absolvendus est Reus, Clar. quaest. 62. Guaz. defensione 29.

18 Thus the best defense will be, if the Accused shows that what he did was done licitly, Clar. §. fin. quaest. 56. where Alexand. Iason, Decius, who says; the whole world follows this doctrine, and the fact is always to be interpreted in favor of the Accused, Guaz. defens. 29.

Sic optima erit defensio, si ostendat Reus, licite fieri id, quod fecit, Clar. §. fin. quaest. 56. ubi Alexand. Iason, Decius, qui ait; hanc doctrinam totus mundus sequitur, et semper in favorem Rei interpretandum factum, Guaz. defens. 29.

19 So also, if it is shown that the fact is not punishable, Guaz. defens. 2. even if it were otherwise punishable. But nearly all crimes are prescribed by a space of twenty years, Leg. Querela Cod. de falsis. Farinac. quaest. 10. Guaz. with others there, defens. 2.

> Sic etiam, si ostendatur factum non esse punibile, Guaz. defens. 2. et si alias fuerit punibile. Omnia autem delicta fere spatio viginti annorum praescribuntur Leg. Querela Cod. de falsis. Farinac. quaest. 10. Guaz. cum aliis ibi, defens. 2.

20 For there are some crimes which are not prescribed, as the supposition of a birth, Farinac. quaest. 10. n. 29. Guaz. defens. 2. num. 2. Likewise not parricide, Farinac. num. 29. Guaz. num. 78. The same of the nefarious vice, Guaz. num. 29. and others there.

> SUNT enim aliqua delicta, quae non praescribuntur, ut suppositio partus, Farinac. quaest. 10. n. 29. Guaz. defens. 2. num. 2. Similiter nec parricidium, Farinac. num. 29. Guaz. num. 78. Idem de vitio nefando, Guaz. num. 29. et alii ibi.

21 SIMILARLY neither the crime of lèse-majesté, heresy, assassination, false coinage, simony, abortion are ever prescribed, Guaz. num. 81. Farinac. num. 29. and 90.

> SIMILITER nec crimen laesae Maiestatis, haeresis, assassinii, falsae monetae, simoniae, abortus nunquam praescribuntur, Guaz. num. 81. Farinac. num. 29. et 90.

22 There is also a good defense, if he proves that there were not present indicia sufficient for the inquisition. Clar. quaest. 20. Farinac. quaest. 1. For then there is no inquisition. See other matters in the said Tract. 8.

> EST etiam bona defensio, si probet, non affuisse inditia ad inquisitionem sufficientia. Clar. quaest. 20. Farinac. quaest. 1. Tunc enim nulla est inquisitio. Vide alia in dicto Tract. 8.

23 AS TO violent defenses of flight, breaking of prison, and the like, I have spoken in the Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 10. and in the Dispm. de Iudice here: and I shall speak in the following quaest.

> QUOAD defensiones violentas fugae, fractionis carceris, et similes, dixi Tract. de Legibus, disp. 5. quaest. 10. et Dispm. de Iudice hic: et dicam quaest. sequenti.

24 For it is CERTAIN first, that one condemned from an iniquitous initiation of the cause, which the Judge had conducted without observing the order, can defend himself even with injury to the Judge; So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. Caietanus there, Sotus Lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 3. art. 4. Fagundez L. 8. cap. 32. num. 4.

> CERTUM est enim primo, damnatum ex iniqua institutione causae, quam fecerat Iudex non servato ordine, posse se defendere cum Iudicis etiam laesione; Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. Caietanus ibi, Sotus Lib. 5. de iust. quaest. 3. art. 4. Fagundez L. 8. cap. 32. num. 4.

25 But if he has been condemned through the error of the Judge, he cannot inflict violence on the Judge. So D. Thom. at the place cited. Sotus art. 5. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 31. de Reo, et Advoc. disp. 4. num. 24. Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 9. num. 268. Innocent. in cap. Quia plerique, de Immunitate Ecclesiae. Fagundez at the place cited, num. 2.

> Si vero ex errore Iudicis damnatus sit, non potest vim Iudici inferre. Ita D. Thom. loco cit. Sotus art. 5. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 31. de Reo, et Advoc. disp. 4. num. 24. Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 9. num. 268. Innocent. in cap. Quia plerique, de Immunitate Ecclesiae. Fagundez loco citato, num. 2.

Question XI: Whether the accused can flee, and how, and when

1 The COMMON opinion of all the Doctors is that the Accused, once taken into custody and inquired against with death or mutilation, can licitly flee before the sentence. So D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 69. art. 4. ad 2. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 5. num. 31. Filliucius tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum decal. cap. 9. num. 270. Couar. lib. 11. variarum, cap. 2. num. 7. Sotus lib. 5. de iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 4. Sà V. Reus, num. 9. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. Vasquez prima secunda, disp. 174. Sylvest. et Angel. V. Fugere, Nauar. sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 102. Driedo Lib. 2. de libertate Christiana, cap. 6. Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 22. Fagundez in 8. praeceptum, Lib. 8. cap. 33. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 6.

> An Reus possit fugere, et quomodo, ac quando.
> COMMUNIS omnium Doctorum sententia est, posse Reum custoditum, inquisitum ad mortem, vel mutilationem, ante sententiam licite fugere. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 69. art. 4. ad 2. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 5. num. 31. Filliucius tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum decal. cap. 9. num. 270. Couar. lib. 11. variarum, cap. 2. num. 7. Sotus lib. 5. de iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 4. Sà V. Reus, num. 9. Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. Vasquez prima secunda, disp. 174. Sylvest. et Angel. V. Fugere, Nauar. sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 102. Driedo Lib. 2. de libertate Christiana, cap. 6. Maior 4. dist. 15. quaest. 22. Fagundez in 8. praeceptum, Lib. 8. cap. 33. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 6.

2 He cannot, however, injure the ministers of justice, by whom he is not injured contrary to justice, as Diana notes, part. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 102.

> NON potest tamen laedere ministros iustitiae, a quibus non laeditur contra iustitiam, ut notat Diana part. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 102.

3 But when a sentence unjust has been laid down, he can flee even by injuring those resisting: for he uses his own right.

> LATA vero sententia iniusta, potest etiam laedendo resistentes, fugere: nam utitur iure suo.

4 But there can be a QUESTION: whether one justly condemned to death, or to the loss of some member, or to infamy, or to the Galleys, or to perpetual imprisonment, can flee, and break the prisons.

> QUAESTIO vero esse potest: an iuste damnatus capite, vel membro aliquo, vel infamia, aut ad Triremes, vel carcere perpetuo, possit fugere, et carceres frangere.

5 The FIRST opinion is that of Henrici de Gandavo quodlib. 9. quaest. 25. Sylvester V. Accusatio. Couar. Lib. 1. variar. cap. 2. at Dianam, denying that such a one can flee by breaking the prison.

> PRIMA sententia est Henrici de Gandavo quodlib. 9. quaest. 25. Sylvester V. Accusatio. Couar. Lib. 1. variar. cap. 2. apud Dianam, negans, posse talem fugere, frangendo carcerem.

6 Yet the COMMON opinion is affirmative, as to flight. So D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. with Caietanus there, Sotus at the place cited. Lessius num. 33. Filliucius at the place cited. Sà V. Reus. Sylvester V. Accusatio, num. 12. and at the place cited. Tabien. V. Carcer. Vasquez at the place cited. cap. 17. And commonly the Canonists on the Clementina Pastoralis de re iudicata; indeed Couar. Lib. 1. var. cap. 2. n. 11. adds that the Judge cannot punish this flight. The same Cruz teaches p. p. part. 8. art. 3. disput. 12. Villalob. tom. 2. tract. 16. diff. 11. num. 16. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. quaestione 2. who cites Bannes, and Salonium. Azorium part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 24. Turrianus 2. 2. disp.

51. dub. 3. with others commonly, to whom Diana above, and Fagundez subscribe. All indeed agree concerning the penalty of death and mutilation.

> COMMUNIS tamen sententia est assertiva, quo ad fugam. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. ubi Caietanus, Sotus loco cit. Lessius num. 33. Filliucius loco cit. Sà V. Reus. Sylvester V. Accusatio, num. 12. et loco cit. Tabien. V. Carcer. Vasquez loco cit. cap. 17. Et communiter Canonistae in Clementina Pastoralis de re iudicata; imo Couar. Lib. 1. var. cap. 2. n. 11. addit, non posse Iudicem hanc fugam punire. Idem docent Cruz p. p. part. 8. art. 3. disput. 12. Villalob. tom. 2. tract. 16. diff. 11. num. 16. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 4. quaestione 2. qui citat Bannem, et Salonium. Azorium part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 24. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 51. dub. 3. cum aliis communiter, quibus subscribunt Diana supra, et Fagundez. Omnes quidem de poena mortis, et mutilationis consentiunt.

7 It is PROVED from D. Thom. because no one can be compelled to something in which death follows close upon him, unless the reason of the public good demands it.

> PROBATUR a D. Thom. quia nemo potest cogi ad aliquid, in quo ei mors proxime succedat, nisi ratio boni publici id exigat.

8 Many of these agree even concerning those condemned to prison, or perpetual exile, and servitude, or confinement to places pestilential in the air. So Lessius cap. 31. Fagundez, Salon. and others.

> MULTI ex his consentiunt etiam de damnatis ad carcerem, vel exilio perpetuo, ac servitute, vel de confinio ad loca pestifera aëris. Ita Lessius cap. 31. Fagundez, Salon. et alii.

9 That he can even break the prison, Lessius, Filliucius, Nauar. Caietanus, Sotus, Salon, Sà, Vasquez above teach, and Driedo Lib. 2. de libertate Christ. cap. 6. Cruz, Villalobos, Sylvester above, and many say the same even if he has been condemned to prison for a time, Bonacina de Legibus, disp. 10. at Dianam, who subscribes with Tannerus 2. 2. disput. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. num. 103. and even if he has been condemned to the galleys.

> QUOD vero possit etiam carcerem frangere, docent Lessius, Filliucius, Nauar. Caietanus, Sotus, Salon, Sà, Vasquez supra, et Driedo Lib. 2. de libertate Christ. cap. 6. Cruz, Villalobos, Sylvester supra, et multi etiam id dicunt, si damnatus sit carceri ad tempus, Bonacina de Legibus, disp. 10. apud Dianam, qui subscribit cum Tannero 2. 2. disput. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 5. num. 103. et etiamsi damnatus sit ad triremes.

10 From which I deduce also, against Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 13. puncto 4. Sotum, Toletum, and Gtaffium at Malderum,[1] 2. 2. Tract. 6. cap. 3. disp. 7. that instruments can be supplied to him for breaking the prison. So Maldetus, and Diana at the place cited. Villalobos, Caietanus, Vasquez, Lessius, Cruz, Sylv. Bannes, Salon. Azorius, and Turrianus above; Religious, however, must be cautioned, because fleeing they give scandals.

[1] Editor's note: the print reads 'et Gtaffium apud Malderum'; the surname is OCR/print-corrupt and cannot be resolved with certainty (perhaps 'Graffium'); kept as printed in the Latin, rendered here as 'Gtaffium'.

> Ex quo deduco etiam contra Valentiam disp. 5. quaest. 13. puncto 4. Sotum, Toletum, et Gtaffium apud Malderum 2. 2. Tract. 6. cap. 3. disp. 7. posse ipsi subministrari instrumenta ad confringendum carcerem. Ita Maldetus, et Diana loco cit. Villalobos, Caietanus, Vasquez, Lessius, Cruz, Sylv. Bannes, Salon. Azorius, et Turrianus supra; Religiosis tamen cavendum, quia fugientes scandala dant.

11 Sylvius ADDS that it makes no difference, even if others also flee. So also Villalob. at the place cited, and Reginaldus tract. 2. Lib. 24. cap. 7. sect. 7. num. 152. and others.

ADDIT Sylvius, non referre, etiamsi alii etiam fugiant. Ita etiam Villalob. loco citato, ac Reginaldus tract. 2. Lib. 24. cap. 7. sect. 7. num. 152. et alii.

12 Nor will he be bound to make restitution of the damages that followed. So Diana, Cruz at the place cited. Tanacrus num. 104. Fagundez num. 15. in secundo responso, with Vasquez. The reason is, because one may assume the means necessary to a licit end.

NEQUE tenebitur restituere damna secuta. Ita Diana, Cruz loco cit. Tanacrus num. 104. Fagundez num. 15. in secundo responso, cum Vasquez. Ratio est, quia licet assumere media necessaria ad rem licitam.

13 Fagundez ADDS, with Filliucio, Angelo, Azorio, and Sayto, that it is licit to corrupt even the guards with money: But this does not please me, because the guards are bound by justice and a just oath to keep guard. Which argument Fagundez calls Achillean, who afterward too subtly says that it suffices to abstract by the intellect from inducing the guards.

ADDIT Fagundez cum Filliucio, Angelo, Azorio, et Sayto licere pecunia etiam corrumpere custodes: Sed mihi non placet, quia custodes ex iustitia, et iuramento iusto tenentur custodire. Quod argumentum Achilleum vocat Fagundez, qui nimis postea subtiliter ait, satis esse praescindere per intellectum ab inducendo custodes.

14 He answers second, that the Accused are bound only out of Charity to avoid the sin of injustice of the guards, which they are not bound to avoid at so great an inconvenience to themselves. Therefore if, from the sole intention of procuring their liberty, not of inducing the guards to evil, they induce it, they do not sin.

RESPONDET secundo, Reos solum ex Charitate teneri vitare peccatum iniustitiae custodum, quod vitare non tenentur tanto suo incomodo. Itaque si ex intentione sola procurandi suam libertatem, non inducendi custodes ad malum, inducant, non peccant.

15 Yet this answer is not good. For how can I directly induce the guards to open, and not intend to induce them to the act forbidden by oath?

HAEC tamen responsio non est bona. Quomodo enim directe possum inducere custodes ad aperiendum, et non intendere inducere eos ad actum vetitum iuramento?

16 Nor is it even licit to give them a sleeping potion to seize the keys, or to make them drunk, as Fagundez says num. 15. because this is mortal.

NEQUE etiam licet dare illis potionem somniferam ad claves arripiendas, vel inebriare, ut ait Fagundez num. 15. quia hoc est mortale.

17 It is doubted, however, whether others can help these by filing the chains, iron, etc. All constantly deny it, at Fagundez num. 19. for this is gravely to violate the public custody to the detriment of the good of the Republic.

Dubitatur vero an possint alii hos adiuvare radendo catenas, ferra, etc. Negant omnes constanter apud Fagundez num. 19. nam hoc est custodiam publicam in detrimentum boni Reipublicae gravis violare.

18 Nor is it the same concerning one who persuades, or supplies the iron; for he is a mere instrument, and has no other malice than that of the principal cause; But the breakers are the principal causes.

> Neque est simile de suadente, vel ferrum praebente; is enim est merum instrumentum, et non habet aliam malitiam a causa principali; Frangentes vero sunt causae principales.

Disputation XXX: On Witnesses

1 Since the whole truth of the Judgment hangs on the words of the Witnesses, the Judge ought before all else to be most well instructed in examining these with the greatest care, whose first duty in this office is to admonish the witnesses how grave and criminal a thing is the crime of falsehood; second, he is bound to commit to writing the things which they depose against or for the Accused; and if he believes them reasonably suspect, in the sifting of the truth he ought to employ every diligence, and even acuteness; yet not suggestion, or cavillation: Third, he is bound to search out all the circumstances of the fact, from which its gravity, or levity can be discerned; finally, omitting all the crimes of the witnesses themselves, except those which plead unfitness; he ought not, however, to examine Clerics, or Religious without the license of their superiors; yet once examined they are bound; These things seen, we must speak of the obligation of the witnesses themselves.

> Tota Iudicii veritas e Testium dictis cum pendeat, in his apprime examinandis debet ante omnia Iudex esse optime instructus, cuius primum in hoc munere officium est testes admonere, quam graue et facinorosum sit falsitatis crimen; secundo, scriptis tenetur mandare, ea quae contra vel pro Reo, deponunt, quos si rationabiliter suspectos credat, in veritatis excussione omnem debet solertiam, etiam et argutiam adhibere; non tamen suggestionem, aut cavillationem: Tertio perscrutari tenetur omnes facti circumstantias, ex quibus gravitas eius, vel levitas dignosci queat; denique omnia ipsorum testium crimina praetermittendo, praeter ea quae inhabilitatem obtendunt; non debet autem Clericos, aut Religiosos absque superiorum licentia examinare; examinati tamen tenent; His visis, de testium ipsorum obligatione dicendum est.

Question I: Whether anyone is sometimes bound to bear witness

1 When proceedings are conducted by way of denunciation or accusation, the witnesses are already presumed to be named. When, however, by special inquisition, they come forward of their own accord when requested, or are named by those requested. That witnesses are at times bound to answer the truth is certain, when the Judge exercises his power justly.

> Cum proceditur per viam denunciationis, vel accusationis, nominati iam supponuntur testes. Cum vero per inquisitionem specialem, seipsos produnt requisiti, vel a requisitis nominantur. Teneri autem aliquando Testes respondere veritatem, certum est, cum Iudex exerceat iuste suam potestatem.

2 Therefore, if a witness is juridically interrogated, he is bound to answer out of obedience and Charity: whether, however, he is also bound out of Justice.

> Igitur si iuridice testis interrogetur, tenetur ex obedientia, et Charitate respondere: An vero teneatur etiam ex Iustitia.

3 The negative opinion is upheld by Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 1. quaeritur 1. concl. 6. Ioan. de Cruz part. 1. pract. 8. art. 4. disp. 13. concl. 6. Pitig. prac. part. 2. cap. 6. fol. 191. It pleases Julius Clar. L. 5. sent. §. falsum, num. 19., who nevertheless speaks paradoxically; Valencia disp. 5. quaest. 14. puncto 1.

> Negativam sententiam astruunt Syluius 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 1. quaeritur 1. concl. 6. Ioan. de Cruz part. 1. pract. 8. art. 4. disp. 13. concl. 6. Pitig. prac. part. 2. cap. 6. fol. 191. arridet Iulius Clar. L. 5. sent. §.falsum, num. 19. qui tamen paradoxe loquitur, Valentia disp. 5. quaest 14. puncto 1.

4 The second opinion is that persons of this sort sin against Justice and are bound to restitution. So St. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4. in corpore. Navarr. sum. Lat. cap. 25. num. 40. and 41. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. num. 54. Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 4. cap. 8. n. 288. Salon 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. Sotus Lib. 2. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. Bannes loco cit. D. Thom. (though Valencia is falsely alleged.) Petrus Nauarrus, Fagundez on the tenth precept Lib. 8. cap. 42. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 2. disp. 9. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 52. num. 2. Azor. part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 27. dub. 4. Medina, Sotus, Orellana, and others in Diana part. 3. tract. 5. resol. 101, among them Octauianus Spartatius in pract. regul. tract. 7. cap. 11. num. 7. Molina Tom. 1. de iust. tract. 2. disp. 83. §. de teste, and tom. 4. disp. 700. num. 4. teaches that a witness who either speaks falsely in judgment or keeps silent about the truth sins against justice and is bound to restitution of damages; but that if by fraud, flight, or some fiction he has prudently declined the judgment, and by that declination has been the cause of damage, he is not bound to restitution; and that this is not improbable, says Lessius num. 59, where he says that on this point learned men of the University of Louvain were consulted by him, and so they answered him. Diana judges it more probable, and Villalobos tomo 2. tract. 12. diffi. 23. num. 12. Tanner indicates it disput. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 6. number 110. Bassaeus says this is most probable, V. Testis 11.

> Secunda sententia est, huiusmodi, contra Iustitiam peccare, et ad restitutionem teneri. Ita D. Thomas 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4. in corpore. Nauar. sum. Lat. cap. 25. num. 40. et 41. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. num. 54. Filliucius Tom. 2. tract. 4. cap. 8. n. 288. Salon 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. Sotus Lib. 2. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. Bannes loco cit. D. Thom. (Valentia vero falso allegatur.) Petrus Nauarrus, Fagundez in decimum praeceptum Lib. 8. cap. 42. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 2. disp. 9. Turrianus 2. 2. disp. 52. num. 2. Azor. part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 27. dub. 4. Medina, Sotus, Orellana, et alii apud Dianam part. 3. tract 5. resol. 101. inter quos Octauianus Spartatius in pract. regul. tract. 7. cap. 11. num. 7. Molina Tom. 1. de iust. tract. 2. disp. 83. §. de teste, et tom. 4. disp. 700. num. 4. docet, testem, qui vel falsum dicit in iudicio, vel verum tacet, contra iustitiam peccare, et ad restitutionem teneri damnorum; at vero si fraude, fuga, fictioneve aliqua, caute iudicium declinauerit, et ea declinatione fuerit in causa damni, non teneri ad restitutionem; et hoc non esse improbabile, ait Lessius num. 59. ubi de hoc a se consultos, ait, viros doctos Louaniensis Academiae, et ita sibi respondisse. Eam probabiliorem censet Diana, et Villalobos tomo 2. tract. 12. diffi. 23. num. 12. Indicat Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 6. numero 110. Hanc probabilissimam esse ait Bassaeus, V. Testis 11.

5 This seems to me the opinion of St. Bonaventure p. p. censil. sect. 13. and in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1, in which places he numbers among Detractors, liable to restitution, those who keep silent against a detractor when they know the slandered person to be innocent. Now the reason is the same, and the necessity and obligation; indeed greater in the case of one who, summoned juridically to judgment to defend the truth and innocence of someone, either evades the judgment or in judgment keeps silent about the truth.

> Haec mihi videtur sententia D. Bonaventurae p. p. censil. sect. 13. et in speculo animae, cap. 1. quibus locis inter Detractores, restitutioni obnoxios, numerat tacentes contra detrahentem, cum sciant, infamatum esse insontem. Est autem eadem ratio, necessitasque et obligatio; imo maior eius, qui vocatus ad iudicium iuridice, ut veritatem, et innocentiam alicuius tueatur, vel subrefugit iudicium, vel in iudicio veritatem tacet.

6 I assert, with this opinion, that such a person, so close to the one doing the damaging, sins against Justice.

> Assero cum hac sententia, talem, ita proximum Damnificantem, contra Iustitiam peccare.

7 It is proved, because he cooperates in the damaging of his neighbor, when he is bound not only to obey Justice, but also not to squander the goods of his neighbor to its damage — not only of the damaged party, but also of the whole Commonwealth, which will suffer grave detriment if a way is opened for hiding the truths of justice.

> Probatur, quia is cooperatur Damnificationi proximi, cum teneatur non modo Iustitiae obedire, sed etiam res proximi non dissipare in damnum, non solum damnificati, sed etiam totius Reipublicae, quae graue patietur detrimentum, si via aperiatur ad veritates iustitiae occultandas.

8 Therefore this obligation is enjoined by justice, lest Justice, by which Commonwealths are governed, perish; to which obligation all and singular those who are members of the Commonwealth are bound, whether they will or not: for the Commonwealth could impose an obligation of this kind for its own preservation: For without justice Kingdoms and Empires are not preserved, as Fagundez defers to the point at num. 14, and Lessius loco cit., after St. Bonaventure on Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, part. 2. cap. 2. and on cap. 6 of Wisdom.

> Itaque haec obligatio ex iustitia iniuncta est, ne Iustitia, qua Respublicae gubernantur, pereat, ad quam obligationem velint, nolint, ex Iustitia tenentur omnes, et singuli, qui membra sunt Reipublicae; potuit enim huiusmodi obligationem Respublica imponere ad sui conseruationem: Non enim sine iustitia Regna, et Imperia conseruantur, ut ad rem differit Fagundez num. 14. et Lessius loco cit. post D. Bonavent. de Ecclesiast. Hierarchia, part. 2. cap. 2. et in cap. 6. sapientiae.

9 From this the argument of Molina collapses, which was taken from the fact that, just as no one is bound to accept the office of tutor, so neither the parts of justice; and Diana's reason, that since before the judge's mandate he would not be bound by commutative justice, and after the mandate he is bound only by Legal justice, he is not bound by Commutative Justice.

> Ex quo ruit argumentum Molinae, quod sumebatur ex eo, quod, sicuti nemo tenetur munus tutoris acceptare; Ita neque partes iustitiae; Et ratio Dianae, quod cum ante iudicis mandatum non teneretur ex iustitia commutatiua, et post mandatum teneatur solum ex iusticia Legali, non tenetur ex Commutatiua Iustitia.

10 I add, however, that it is probable, as Diana subjoins with Malderus, that one who has imprudently damaged someone by his word, thinking himself legitimately interrogated about this, is not bound to restitution of the damage inflicted; he is bound, however, to retract it if he can.

> Addo tamen, probabile esse, quod subdit Diana cum Maldero, eum, qui incaute suo dicto damnificauit aliquem, putans se de hoc legitime interrogatum, non teneri restitutioni damni illati; teneri tamen retractare, si potest.

11 A question arises, however: whether a witness who doubts whether the Judge interrogates juridically is bound to answer.

> Suboritur vero quaestio; num testis dubitans: an Iudex iuridice interroget, teneatur respondere.

12 Pitigianus teaches affirmatively in pract. crim. can. de secundo substantiali iudicii, c. 3. fol. mihi 175., and it seems the opinion of St. Bonaventure, as I said, prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de Conscientia dubia. But the reason seems different here.

> Assertive docet Pitigianus in pract. crim. can. de secundo substantiali iudicii, c. 3. fol. mihi 175. et videtur sententia D. Bonavent. ut dixi prima secundae, Tract. 2. disp. 17. de Conscientia dubia. Sed ratio videtur hic diversa.

13 Yet they deny it: Lessius lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. num. 10. Sanchez tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 3. num. 24. Salas prima secundae, quaest. 21. tract. 8. disp. unic. sect. 13. n. 155. Henriquez Lib. 14. cap. 3. in Glossa, letter X. Bannes, Sotus, Medina, and others cited by them, with whom Diana subscribes, part. 3. tract. 5. resol. 106.

> NEGANT tamen Lessius lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 3. num. 10. Sanchez tract. 2. lib. 6. cap. 3. num. 24. Salas prima secundae, quaest. 21. tract. 8. disp. unic. sect. 13. n. 155. Henriquez Lib. 14. cap. 3. in Glossa, littera X. Bannes, Sotus, Medina, et alii penes ipsos, quibus subscribit Diana part. 3. tract. 5. resol. 106.

14 I ASSERT, therefore, that the first opinion is probable.

> ASSERO ergo, primam sententiam esse probabilem.

15 The reason of St. Bonaventure, which the others use, is, that in doubtful matters the condition of the possessor is better; but the superior is in possession of the power of commanding; the subject is certainly a subject; but only merely doubtful for this case; but St. Bonaventure speaks only in relation to ordinary religious obedience; but in relation to judging the life of one's neighbor, by no means; because there is another grave reason on the opposite side, because that neighbor is in possession of life, honor, and wealth, and it is a most grave matter, and higher than the obedience owed to a superior, which rests almost solely on human law; and therefore he is bound not to prejudice the life of another who exists in possession, provided I sustain as doubtful the jurisdiction of Man in this matter.

> RATIO D. Bonavent. qua caeteri utuntur, est, quia in dubiis melior est conditio possidentis; at superior est in possessione praecipiendi; subditus vero certo est subditus; at mere dubius solum pro hoc casu; sed D. Bonavent. loquitur solum in ordine ad obedientiam religiosam ordinariam; at vero in ordine ad iudicandam vitam proximi, nequaquam; quia est alia ratio gravis in oppositum, quia proximus ille est in possessione vitae, honoris, opum, atque est res gravissima, et altior, quam obedientia debita superiori, quae iure humano solo fere nititur; atque ideo tenetur, non praeiudicare vitae, alterius in possessione existentis, ut dubiam in hoc iurisdictionem Hominis sustineam.

16 Therefore the second opinion seems to me truer, and more according to the mind of the Seraphic Doctor.

> Ideo mihi videtur sententia secunda verior, et magis ad mentem Seraphici.

17 They raise another question: whether, if the deed is notorious, but the perpetrator is hidden — for instance, if a slain corpse lies in the road and is recognized by the Judge, who inquires about the killer — the neighbors who know are bound to reveal it.

> Aliam quaestionem instituunt: An si factum sit notorium; sed occultus patrator, puta si cadaver trucidatum iacet in via, et recognitum est a Iudice, qui inquirit de occisore, teneantur vicini scientes revelare.

18 I SUPPOSE, from what was said in disput. de Iudice, quaest. 8. dub. 3., that the Judge legitimately inquires in this manner about the Accused, nor do the Canons stand in the way: cap. cum oporteat, cap. Inquisitionis, cap. Qualiter, et quando, for there it is only prohibited that inquiry be made about someone in particular against whom no infamy has preceded, e. g. by suggesting: Say: Whether Paul killed; but in general.

> SUPPONO ex dictis disput. de Iudice, quaest. 8. dub. 3. Iudicem legitime inquirere hoc pacto de Reo, nec obstare Canones cap. cum oporteat, cap. Inquisitionis, cap. Qualiter, et quando, ibi enim solum prohibetur, ne inquiratur de aliquo particulari, de quo non praecessit infamia, v. g. suggerendo: Dic: An Paulus occiderit; sed in genere.

19 They ASSERT, therefore, that they are bound to answer and reveal: Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. disp. ult. Ioan. Valer. in diff. utriusque fori, v. Inquisitio, num. 9. Miranda de ord. iudic. tom. 1. quaest. 6. art. 6. concl. 3. and others alleged in the place cited, especially our Father Eliseus.

> ASSERUNT igitur, teneri respondere, et revelare, Aragon. 2. 2. quaest. 69. art. 2. disp. ult. Ioan. Valer. in diff. utriusque fori, v. Inquisitio, num. 9. Miranda de ord. iudic. tom. 1. quaest. 6. art. 6. concl. 3. et alii allegati loco citato, praecipue P. Eliseus noster.

20 Their REASON is that, since in the proposed case the judge has the right of proceeding for the sake of the common good to be preserved, and of interrogating witnesses manifestly, it follows that they themselves also are bound, for the sake of the same common good to be preserved, to speak the truth and reveal the accused; otherwise innumerable crimes would go unpunished, and a broad way would be opened to assassins for bloodshed.

> RATIO eorum est, quia, cum iudex in proposito casu ius habeat procedendi propter bonum commune conservandum, et testes interrogandi manifeste; sequitur quod teneantur et ipsi, propter idem bonum commune conservandum, veritatem dicere, et reum revelare; alioqui innumera scelera impunita abirent, et aperiretur via ampla sicariis ad sanguinem.

21 But that they are not yet bound, the Neoterics commonly teach, in Diana p. p. Tract. 15. Miscell. resol. 63. So Turrianus tract. 2. in 2. 2. disp. 50. dub. 5. Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 185. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 14. num. 118. Bonac. de Legibus disp. 10. quaest. 2. part. 5. num. 14. Navar. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 67. Salon. 2. 2. tract. 1. quaest. 63. art. 2. controu. 7. and others.

> ENIM vero adhuc non teneri, docent communiter Neoterici apud Dianam p. p. Tract. 15. Miscell. resol. 63. Sic Turrianus tract. 2. in 2. 2. disp. 50. dub. 5. Filliucius tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 6. num. 185. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 29. dub. 14. num. 118. Bonac. de Legibus disp. 10. quaest. 2. part. 5. num. 14. Navar. de restit. lib. 2. cap. 4. num. 67. Salon. 2. 2. tract. 1. quaest. 63. art. 2. controu. 7. et alii.

22 The REASON is that when it is doubtful whether the judge interrogates juridically, and the probable opinion is that he does not judge juridically, and consequently (which is the same thing) that he is not a judge, in that case the subject is not bound to obey, because he may embrace the probable opinion which asserts that the Judge in that case has no right. So Turrianus, who reproves Peter Navarrus, saying that in this case there is given a just war on both sides, so that the judge, according to a probable opinion, has the right; and the subject, according to the probable opposite, is not bound to manifest the truth — which response Filliucius defends. Whatever may be said of the reason, Diana concludes that those holding the opposite opinion tremble at the airs.

> RATIO est, quia quando dubium est; an iudex iuridice interroget, et probabilis sententia est, eum non iudicare iuridice; ac proinde (quod idem est) eum non esse iudicem; in eo casu subditus non tenetur obedire, quia potest amplecti probabilem opinionem, quae asserit, Iudicem in eo casu non habere ius. Ita Turrianus, qui reprobat Petrum Navarrum, dicentem, in hoc casu dari bellum iustum utrinque, ut et iudex, iuxta probabilem opinionem, habeat ius; et subditus, iuxta probabilem oppositam, non teneatur veritatem manifestare, quam responsionem tuetur Filliucius. Quidquid sit de ratione concludit Diana, oppositum sentientes, trepidare ad auras.

23 It will seem to someone that the Holy Doctor opposes this in prima secundae, Tract. 1. disp. 17., because the Judge seems to be the possessor of the right of inquiring. But this right is only probable: nor is the case similar to that of a Prelate, having a certain right of commanding subjects; and to this mere probability those are bound to acquiesce in the way of St. Bonaventure, with a genuinely higher motive, namely, that the Prelate is given by God as a leader to life; not so the judge.

VIDEBITUR alicui, S. Doctorem adversari ex prima secundae, Tract. 1. disp. 17. quia Iudex videtur possessor iuris inquirendi. At hoc ius est solum probabile: nec est simile de Praelato, habente ius certum praecipiendi subditis; et ad hoc solam probabilitatem, qui tenentur acquiescere in via D. Bonavent. sane altiori motivo, nempe, quia Praelatus a Deo datus est, ut ductor ad vitam; non sic iudex.

24 WHEREFORE with excessive hyperbole Clarus says, §. fin. quaest. 5. citing Innocent in cap. bonae memoriae, that in the whole world an affirmative opinion is sustained. They follow it: Megala in Praxi, cap. 11. Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 49. and the Doctors on cap. Inquisitionis, de Accus. especially Ananias num. 4. Felin. num. 6. and Ambrosin. de modo formandi processum, Lib. 1. cap. 1., saying that it is the universal custom, as Bictus quaest. 11. num. 8. relates.

QUARE nimia Hyperbole ait Clarus, §. fin. quaest. 5. citans Innocentium in cap. bonae memoriae, in universo mundo assertivam sustineri sententiam. Eam sequuntur Megala in Praxi, cap. 11. Farinac. quaest. 1. num. 49. et Doctores in cap. Inquisitionis, de Accus. praesertim Ananias num. 4. Felin. num. 6. et Ambrosin. de modo formandi processum, Lib. 1. cap. 1. dicens, esse universalem consuetudinem, ut refert Bictus quaest. 11. num. 8.

25 WHETHER, indeed, one who by his testimony could free someone from an unjust death or oppression, and who truly is not interrogated by the Judge, could nonetheless do so — whether he sins mortally and is bound to restitution.

AN vero is, qui suo testimonio potest aliquem ab iniusta morte, vel oppressione liberare, et vere non inquiritur a Iudice, possit tamen; peccet mortaliter, et ad restitutionem teneatur.

26 I SAY that this man sins mortally against Charity, not against justice, and accordingly is not bound to restitution. St. Bonaventure so holds in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1., where he condemns this dissimulation of damaging as a mortal fault; he does not, however, bind to restitution. They follow: Navar. sum. Lat. cap. 25. n. 47. and in cap. Inter verba, 12. quaest. 3. num. 638. 706. and 722. Gabriel. in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 7. St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. in corpore, Lessius lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. num. 58. Sotus Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 70. art 1. disp. 3. Fagundez on the eighth precept, Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 6.

DICO, hunc peccare mortaliter contra Charitatem, non contra iustitiam, atque adeo non teneri ad restitutionem. Id sentit D. Bonavent. in speculo, animae, cap. 1. ubi hanc dissimulationem damnificationis, lethali culpa damnat; non tamen obligat restitutioni. Sequuntur Navar. sum. Lat. cap. 25. n. 47. et in cap. Inter verba, 12. quaest. 3. num. 638. 706. et 722. Gabriel. in 4. dist. 15. quaest. 6. art. 2. concl. 7. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 1. in corpore, Lessius lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 8. num. 58. Sotus Lib. 5. de Iust. quaest. 7. art. 1. Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 70. art 1. disp. 3. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 6.

27 This seems commanded, Proverb. 24: Rescue those who are led to death; if you say: strength does not suffice me: He who inspects the heart, He himself understands. Thus it is proved by St. Bonaventure de Ecclesiast. Hierarch. part. 2. cap. 2., where he also hints that one is not bound to expose himself to his own grave damage to testify to the innocence of an innocent person; and if he is compelled by a judge, he may equivocate. So also Lessius num. 56. Navar. num. 50. Baldus in cap. cum nuncius de testibus, Sylvester V. denunciatio, q. 1. and V. correctio, §. 7. Filliucius tom. 2. tract. 40. num. 255. Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 20. num. 24. Sotus de teg. secreto, mem. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 7. Fagundez on the 8th precept of the decal. Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 7.

ID videtur praeceptum, Proverb. 24. Erue eos, qui deducuntur ad mortem: si dixeris: vires mihi non suppetunt: qui inspector est cordis, ipse intelligit. Sic probatur a D. Bonavent. de Ecclesiast. Hierarch.

> part. 2. cap. 2. ubi etiam innuit, non teneri suo gravi damno aliquem se exponere ad testificandam insontis innocentiam; et si cogatur a iudice, posse tergiversari. Ita etiam Lessius num. 56. Navar. num. 50. Baldus in cap. cum nuncius de testibus, Sylvester V. denunciatio, q. 1. et V. correctio, §. 7. Filliucius tom. 2. tract. 40. num. 255. Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 20. num. 24. Sotus de teg. secreto, mem. 2. disp. 3. quaest. 7. Fagundez in 8. praeceptum decal. Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 7.

Question II: Who can be witnesses in a trial

1 MANY are indeed excluded by law from being judicial witnesses, as St. Thomas says, and it is plain from Can. si testes.

> Qui possint esse T*ESTES* in iudicio.
> MULTI quidem a iudiciariis testibus repelluntur in iure, ut ait D. Thomas, et patet Can. si testes.

2 FIRST, in criminal causes slaves and women, and criminals, are excluded by Canon law, cap. serus de verb. signific. and cap. mulierem 33. quaest. 5.

> PRIMO in causis criminalibus repelluntur iure Canonico servi, ac foeminae, facinorosique, cap. serus de verb. signific. et cap. mulierem 33. quaest. 5.

3 By civil law, however, women are admitted in common, Leg. ex eo, ff. de Testibus. Except in a testament Leg. qui testamento, §. mulier, ff. de testamentis. So the Doctors commonly teach, as Lessius teaches Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 5. num. 36. Gomez cap. 2. num. 53.

> IURE tamen civili in communi admittuntur foeminae Leg. ex eo, ff. de Testibus. Praeterquam in testamento Leg. qui testamento, §. mulier, ff. de testamentis. Ita communiter Doctores, ut docet Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 5. num. 36. Gomez cap. 2. num. 53.

4 A harlot, however, cannot be a witness in a criminal cause, as Julius Clar. hands down quaest. 24. num. 14., and so the Doctors commonly, as Jason testifies in Leg. cunctos populos, Cod. de summa Trinitate, and Cartad. in praxis, fol. 80. num. 18. But who is to be called a harlot, Julius Clar. teaches Leg. 1. sem. §. meretrix.

> Meretrix tamen non potest esse testis in causa crim. ut tradit Iul. Clar. quaest. 24. num. 14. et ita communiter Doctores, ut testatur Iason in Leg. cunctos populos, Cod. de summa Trinitate, et Cartad. in praxi, fol. 80. num. 18. Quae autem dicatur meretrix docet Iulius Clar. Leg. 1. sem. §. meretrix.

5 SECOND, by common law in criminal causes one under twenty years is excluded, by the Law in testimonium, ff. de testibus; yet his statement makes an indication sufficient for capture, not for torture, as Gomez and Lessius teach, alleged above, and Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 40. num. 29.

> SECUNDO de iure communi in causis criminalibus repellitur minor viginti annis, Lege in testimonium, ff. de testibus, dictum tamen illius facit indicium sufficiens ad capturam, non ad torturam, ut docet Gomez, et Lessius allegati, atque Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 40. num. 29.

6 If, however, he be pubescent, that is, a male of fourteen years, or a female of twelve, he is admitted in civil causes.

> Si tamen sit puber, idest quatuordecim annorum masculus, et duodecim foemina, admittitur in civilibus.

7 THIRD, enemies are excluded in criminal and civil causes, except in those crimes and lawsuits in which other witnesses not otherwise suitable are admitted, as in proving simony, heresy, and the like, cap. per tuas, de simonia.

> TERTIO repelluntur inimici in criminalibus, et civilibus, exceptis iis criminibus, et litibus, in quibus alii testes non idonei admittuntur, ut in probanda simonia, haeresi, et similibus, cap. per tuas, de simonia.

8 FOURTH, the ascendants and descendants of the accuser; likewise collaterals; but these only up to the fourth degree. So Gomez cap. 12. num. 15. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 7. num. 37. The same holds of the kinsmen of the blood; yet the relatives of the Accused are at times received to confirm his innocence, as Clarus teaches quaest. 24. num. 12.; for so usage carries it, when his innocence cannot otherwise be proved; So Lessius num. 38. with St. Bonaventure in 4. dist. 41. dub. 2.

> QUARTO, ascendentes, et descendentes accusatoris; item collaterales; sed isti usque ad quartum gradum tantum. Ita Gomez cap. 12. num. 15. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 7. num. 37. Idem de affinibus consanguinei, tamen et affines Rei aliquando recipiuntur ad eius innocentiam comprobandam, ut docet Clarus quaest. 24. num. 12. sic enim usus fert, quando eius innocentia aliunde probari non potest; Ita Lessius num. 38. cum D. Bonavent. in 4. dist. 41. dub. 2.

9 FIFTH, the domestics of the accuser and his familiars are excluded, and those infamous with legal infamy, in criminal causes; and this is most certain without controversy, as Julius Clar. teaches quaest. 24. num. 23. Lessius num. 38. But one infamous in fact is at times admitted, when the truth cannot otherwise be had; but with torture. So Clarus quaest. 24. n. 23. Lessius loco cit. our Father Eliseus in his new Criminal Practice.

> QUINTO repelluntur domestici accusatoris, et familiares illius, et infames infamia Iuris, in criminalibus; et hoc est certissimum absque controversia, ut docet Iulius Clar. quaest. 24. num. 23. Lessius num. 38. Infamis vero infamia facti aliquando admittitur, quando aliter veritas haberi non potest; sed cum tortura. Ita Clarus quaest. 24. n. 23. Lessius loco cit. P. Eliseus noster in sua nova Practica criminali.

10 SIXTH, those who have committed perjury before, according to the common rule: Once wicked, he is always presumed wicked in the same kind, cap. si quis consentiens, and cap. parvuli 22. quaest. 5. as St. Bonaventure relates in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 33.

> SEXTO periuri alias, iuxta communem regulam: Semel malus, semper praesumitur in eodem genere malus, cap. si quis consentiens, et cap. parvuli 22. quaest. 5. ut refert D. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 33.

11 SEVENTH, partners in the crime are excluded, Leg. fin. Cod. de accusat. and cap. veniens, cap. de testibus. So Lessius num. 39. Fagundez num. 23. Yet some crimes are excepted, as heresy, sodomy, the crime of false coinage, Lèse-majesté, notorious theft, philiri, and sorceries.

> SEPTIMO repelluntur socii criminis Leg. fin. Cod. de accusat. et cap. veniens, cap. de testibus. Ita Lessius num. 39. Fagundez num. 23. Excipiuntur tamen aliqua crimina, ut haeresis, sodomia, crimen falsae monetae, Laesae maiestatis, furtum famosum, philiri, et sortilegia.

12 EIGHTH, vile and poor persons are excluded, because they are suspect of being corrupted by payment, Leg. 3. and § 4. ff. de testibus. Syluester V. testis, quaest. 1. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 5. num. 38. Farinacius decis. 138. A vile person, moreover, means a hireling and a dishonorable woman, Farinacius decis. 79. Felinus in cap. Quoties, de testibus. But a poor man is one who is compelled to seek his daily livelihood with his hands; Glossa in Leg. Paupertas, ff. de excusat. tutor. Farinac. decis. 109.

> OCTAVO excluduntur viles, et pauperes personae, quia suspicioni sunt, ne pretio corrumpantur Leg. 3. et § 4. ff. de testibus. Syluester V. testis, quaest. 1. Lessius lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 5. num. 38. Farinacius decis. 138. Vilis autem persona dicitur satelles, et mulier inhonesta, Farinacius decis. 79. Felinus in cap. Quoties, de testibus. Pauper autem dicitur, qui manibus victum cogitur quaerere quotidianum; Glossa in Leg. Paupertas, ff. de excusat. tutor. Farinac. decis. 109.

13 NINTH, corrupted witnesses, who are proved in judgment to have accepted something for giving judgment, cap. 1. Si testes, de testibus, and Molina teaches disput. 83. §. de teste.

> NONO testes corrupti, qui in iudicio probantur aliquid accepisse ad iudicium ferendum cap. 1. Si testes, de testibus, et docet Molina disput. 83. §. de teste.

14 THEN they must be sworn witnesses, cap. nuper, de testibus, and cap. tuis quaestionibus, on the same title; for the divine testimonial is a bridle for us, lest we wander beyond the truth. This reason is adduced by all, by Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 4. num. 32. Sayro lib. 12. cap. 20., where from many laws he proves that a statement against a third party has no force unless confirmed by oath. Thus especially from Leg. Iurisiurandi, Cod. de testibus. St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 3. ad 2. Couar. Lib. 2. var. cap. 13. num. 3. with St. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 39. dub. 5. and 5, letter, and art. 2. quaest. 1.

> DEINDE debent esse iurati cap. nuper, de testibus, et cap. tuis quaestionibus, eodem tit. nam divinum testimonium fraenum nobis est, ne ultra veritatem divagemur. Haec ratio ab omnibus affertur a Lessio Lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 4. num. 32. Sayro lib. 12. cap. 20. ubi ex multis iuribus probat, non valere dictum contra tertium, nisi iuramento firmatum. Sic praecipue ex Leg. Iurisiurandi, Cod. de testibus. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 3. ad 2. Couar. Lib. 2. var. cap. 13. num. 3. cum D. Bonavent. in 3. dist. 39. dub. 5. et 5. littera, et art. 2. quaest. 1.

15 UNDERSTAND this, however, unless the adverse party remits the oath, cap. tuis quaestionibus, de testibus, except in a matrimonial cause, Sanchez Lib. 3. disp. 41. num. 5. Mascardus de probationibus, concl. 1024. number 13.

> HAEC tamen intellige, nisi pars adversa iuramentum remittat, cap. tuis quaestionibus, de testibus, excepto in causa matrimonii, Sanchez Lib. 3. disp. 41. num. 5. Mascardus de probationibus, concl. 1024. numero 13.

16 MOREOVER, to make the proof there must be several concurrent witnesses, that is, of the same fact; for single witnesses do not prove, and this occurs when one testifies to one crime, e. g. theft of a horse; another to another, e. g. theft of a purse, etc., all of whom prove their own statement, not another's. So Lessius num. 23. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 2. Cajetanus, Salonius, Aragon. ibidem, Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. on the eighth precept, cap. 8. num. 236. and it is found in cap. licet universis, de testam. and cap. Licet causam, de probationibus.

> PRAETEREA oportet ad convincendum esse plures contestes, idest de eodem facto; nam singulares testes non probant, et sunt quando unus unum crimen, v. g. furtum equi testatur; alter alterum, v. g. furtum crumenae, etc. qui omnes suum dictum probant, non alterius. Ita Lessius num. 23. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 2. Caietanus, Salonius, Aragon. ibidem, Filliucius Tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 8. num. 236. et habetur cap. licet universis, de testam. et cap. Licet causam, de probationibus.

17 Concurrent witnesses are those who depose about the same number of the crime and the same circumstances. Hence, to be concurrent, they must agree in time, place, and the species and number of the crime.

> TESTES contestes sunt, qui deponunt de eodem numero delicto, iisdemque circumstantiis. Unde, ut contestes sint, debent convenire in tempore, loco, et delicti specie, et numero.

18 ANOTHER condition is that they perceived the fact by some sense, Leg. folium, de testibus, where the Gloss, and Lessius num. 34. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 40. num. 14. they must have seen the fact, or, if the crime lies in speech, heard it; in which case it is their cunning custom to hear through a wall the voice of a confessor, provided it is very well known, so as to lead him to confession in judgment. See Sayrum lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 22. and our Father Eliseus in prax. crim. de Testibus.

> ALIA conditio est, ut sensu aliquo factum perceperint Leg. folium, de testibus, ubi Glossa, et Lessius num. 34. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 40. num. 14. debent autem factum vidisse, vel si delictum in voce sit, audivisse; in quo casu vafre solent vocem e pariete audire confitentis, dummodo optime nota sit, ut inducant ad confessionem in iudicio. Vide Sayrum lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 22. et P. Eliseum nostrum in prax. crim. de Testibus.

19 The FOURTH condition is that the witnesses be exempt from every exception, so that nothing can be opposed to them in law, and they suffer no exceptions; Lessius lib. 2. c. 30. dub. 5. num. 25. Fagundez cap. 40. num. 16. This was said above, when we excluded the unsuitable.

> QUARTA conditio est, ut testes sint omni exceptione maiores, quibus nihil iure opponi queat, nullasque patiantur exceptiones, Lessius lib. 2. c. 30. dub. 5. num. 25. Fagundez cap. 40. num. 16. De hoc supra dictum est, dum inidoneos exclusimus.

20 Now TWO witnesses exempt from every exception suffice; both in a criminal cause, even for condemning to death, and in any other grave cause.

> SUFFICIENT autem duo testes omni exceptione maiores; tam in causa criminali, etiam ad morte damnandum; tum in qualibet alia gravi.

21 It is PROVED from Deuter. 17 and 19: By the mouth of two or three witnesses shall he perish who is to be slain, and 1 ad Timot. 5: Against a priest receive not an accusation, except under two or three witnesses. And And from cap. licet causam, de probat. and cap. cum esset, de testam. So the Doctors commonly teach; St. Thom. quaest. 70. art. 2. where Caiet. Aragon. Bannes, Salon. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 4. num. 24. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. Filliucius tract. 40. on the eighth precept of the decal. cap. 8. num. 243. Sanchez Lib. 2. de matrim. disp. 45. num. 30. Fagundez on the eighth precept. Lib. 8. cap. 39. num. 1. and it is supposed by St. Bonavent. 3. dist. 39. and on the eighth precept, at the beginning of the opusculum, and he indicates ad 9. Lucae.

> PROBATUR ex Deuter. 17. et 19. In ore duorum, vel trium testium peribit, qui interficietur, et prima ad Timot. 5. Adversus presbyterum accusationem noli recipere, nisi sub duobus, aut tribus testibus. Et ex cap. licet causam, de probat. et cap. cum esset, de testam. Sic docent communiter Doctores, D. Thom. quaest. 70. art. 2. ubi Caiet. Aragon. Bannes, Salon. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 4. num. 24. Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. Filliucius tract. 40. in octavum praecept. decal. cap. 8. num. 243. Sanchez Lib. 2. de matrim. disp. 45. num. 30. Fagundez in octavum praecept. Lib. 8. cap. 39. num. 1. et supponitur a D. Bonavent. 3. dist. 39. et in octavum praeceptum, initio opusculi, et indicat ad 9. Lucae.

22 By common civil law in closed testaments seven witnesses are required: males, free, or reckoned as free, pubescent, requested, who come together at the same time and are present, and hear, see, and understand the testator's will, whether written or established by voice alone. If the testament be made by voice alone without any writing, subscription or seal is not necessary, Leg. hac consultissima, §. per nuncupationem, Cod. de testamentis, and Institut. de testamentis, §. ult. and Leg. Haeres palam, ff. on the same title; nor is it enough that they be present and hear the testator's voice, but it is also required that they see him. In open testaments, five: In Codicils, five: In graver causes, except a cause of death, one witness of exceptional authority suffices, as a King, Pope, Cardinal, as Sayrus notes lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. Filliucius tom. 1. tract. 40. on the eighth precept, cap. 8. num. 236. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 39. num. 9.

> DE iure communi civili in testamentis clausis requiruntur septem testes masculi, liberi, aut pro liberis reputati, puberes, rogati, et qui simul conveniant, et praesentes sint, et audiant, videant, intelligant testatoris voluntatem, vel scriptam, vel voce tenus probatam. Si voce tenus testamentum absque ulla scriptura conditum fuerit, non est necessaria subscriptio, aut sigillum, Leg. hac consultissima, §. per nuncupationem, Cod. de testamentis, et Institut. de testamentis, §. ult. et Leg. Haeres palam, ff. eodem titulo, nec satis est, ut praesentes sint, et audiant vocem testatoris, sed opus est etiam, ut illum videant. In apertis quinque: In Codicillis quinque: In causis gravioribus, excepta causa mortis, sufficit unus testis eximiae authoritatis, ut Rex, Papa, Cardinalis, ut notant Sayrus lib. 12. cap. 21. num. 15. Filliucius tom. 1. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 8. num. 236. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 39. num. 9.

23 By Canon law, however, that testament is valid which the parishioners make before their Priest, or Pastor, and three, or two other suitable persons, cap. cum esses, de testamentis.

> DE iure vero Canonico validum est testamentum, quod parochiani conficiunt coram Presbytero, seu Parocho suo, et tribus, vel duobus aliis idoneis, cap. cum esses, de testamentis.

24 For marriage two witnesses are required, and the Parish Priest; otherwise it is null, as the Holy Council of Trent decrees, sess. 24. cap. 1. And Sanchez notes it, lib. 3. de matrim. cap. 41.

> AD matrimonium requiruntur duo testes, et Parochus, alioqui irritum est, ut decernit S. Concilium Trident. sess. 24. cap. 1. Et advertit Sanchez lib. 3. de matrim. cap. 41.

Question III: On the injustice of false witnesses

1 If a Witness, whether knowingly and observantly, or out of crass ignorance, has given false testimony by which he unjustly injured another, that he is bound to restitution of the damage in full — Lessius asserts it lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 7. num. 52. and they prove it from cap. si sua culpa, de iniuriando, and damn. dat. and from cap. Paroch. de sententia excom. Bartol. in Leg. Nunquam plura, ff. de privat. delict. Bald. in Leg. Quicumque, Cod. de serv. fuga, and in Leg. cum ancillam, Cod. de incest. nupt. Anan. in cap. 1. de crim. falsi. Farinac. part. 2. praxis quaest. 62. num. 5. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 1. and not only in the forum of conscience is he bound to make good all damages, but even in the external forum the damaged party can bring a civil action against this false witness, for the damage done to him and the interest. So Abbas in dict. cap. 1. de crim. falsi. Anchar. there, Butrieus in the same place, num. 4. and Socinus num. 109. Castrens. in Leg. Presbyteri, num. 3. Cod. de Episcopis, et Clericis, Iason in Leg. Praescriptione, num. 8. Cod. si contra ius, vel utilitatem publicam; Tindar. de testimoniis, part. 1. cap. 9. num. 6. Angelus de Perus. in addit. circa materiam testium, num. 15. Iulius Clarus, §. falsum, Suarez in sua collecta com. opin. Littera T. number 155. Simanch. de Cathol. instit. tit. 64. Rubr. de testam. num. 85. Moncada ad Crot. de testibus, part. 9. num. 379. Bossius tit. de test. falsis, num. 149. and others in Bassaeus.

> SI Testis vel sciens, et animadvertens, vel ex crassa ignorantia falsum testimonium dixit, ratione cuius, alterum iniuste laesit, teneri eum ad restitutionem damni in solidum, asserunt Lessius lib. 2. cap. 30. disp. 7. num. 52. et probant ex

cap. si sua culpa, de iniuriando, et damn. dat. et ex cap. Paroch. de sententia excom. Bartol. in Leg. Nunquam plura, ff. de privat. delict. Bald. in Leg. Quicumque, Cod. de serv. fuga, et in Leg. cum ancillam, Cod. de incest. nupt. Anan. in cap. 1. de crim. falsi. Farinac. part. 2. praxis quaest. 62. num. 5. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 1. et non solum in foro conscientiae tenetur ad interesse omnium damnorum, sed etiam in foro externo potest damnificatus actionem intentare civilem contra falsum hunc testem, de damno sibi dato, et interesse. Ita Abbas in dict. cap. 1. de crim. falsi. Anchar. ibi, Butrieus ibidem, num. 4. et Socinus num. 109. Castrens. in Leg. Presbyteri, num. 3. Cod. de Episcopis, et Clericis, Iason in Leg. Praescriptione, num. 8. Cod. si contra ius, vel utilitatem publicam; Tindar. de testimoniis, part. 1. cap. 9. num. 6. Angelus de Perus. in addit. circa materiam testium, num. 15. Iulius Clarus, §. falsum, Suarez in sua collecta com. opin. Littera T. numero 155. Simanch. de Cathol. instit. tit. 64. Rubr. de testam. num. 85. Moncada ad Crot. de testibus, part. 9. num. 379. Bossius tit. de test. falsis, num. 149. et alii apud Bassaeum.

2 But Fagundez wonders num. 2. at Farinacius num. 6. Julius Clarus, §. falsum, at the verse poena autem, after Vincentius and Corsetus and the others he alleges, for having said that they are bound only in the Contentious Forum, not in the forum of conscience.

MIRATUR autem Fagundez num. 2. Farinacium num. 6. Iulium Clarum, §. falsum, versu poena autem, post Vincentium, et Corsetum, et alios, quos allegat, dixisse, teneri solum in Foro contentioso, non in Foro conscientiae.

3 But if he has testified out of ignorance, or non-culpable inadvertence, or oblivion — at least not mortal — whereby someone is condemned, then he says, num. 5., with Diana P. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 105., that he is not bound to restitution: he alleges Cajetan 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4. Peter Navarrus lib. 2. cap. 2. num. 253., with whom, he says, Lessius does not entirely disagree lib. 2. cap. 7. dub. 6. He adds part. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 99. Becanus Quaesito 70. quaest. 5. concl. 2. against Strauesdorf. concl. 3. who asserts it. Add Bassaeus V. testis, num. 10.

SI vero ex ignorantia, vel inadvertentia non damnabili, vel oblivione, saltem non mortifera, testificatus est, unde aliquis damnatur, tunc ait num. 5. cum Diana P. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 105. non teneri restitutioni: Allegat Caietanum 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 4. Petrum Navarrum lib. 2. cap. 2. num. 253. quibus non omnino renuere ait Lessium lib. 2. cap. 7. dub. 6. Addit part. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 99. Becanum Quaesito 70. quaest. 5. concl. 2. contra Strauesdorf. concl. 3. qui asserit. Adde Bassaeum V. testis, num. 10.

4 If, however, he had been convicted as guilty by other witnesses; then, since the concurring testimony accomplishes nothing, they believe he is not bound to restitution. So Pitigian. in praxi. crim. can. de test. cap. 6. fol. 193. Diana loco cit. and others.

SI tamen ille erat per alios testes reus convictus; tunc, cum testimonium accedens nihil efficiat, credunt, non teneri restitutioni. Ita Pitigian. in praxi. crim. can. de test. cap. 6. fol. 193. Diana loco cit. et alii.

5 Diana adds part. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 79. and deservedly, that he is bound to retract the falsehood if he sees that it would be of profit, even though he should fear for himself the danger of a similar penalty. So also Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 7. num. 53. Peter Navar. lib. 2. cap. 3. num. 251. against Vulterus Strouesdorff, who teaches too rigidly that he is bound even if he doubts whether the retraction would be of profit.

ADDIT Diana part. 4. Tract. 4. resol. 79. et merito, teneri falsum retractare, si videat, id profuturum, quamvis periculum sibi poenae similis timeret. Ita etiam Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 30. dub. 7. num. 53. Petrus Navar. lib. 2. cap. 3. num. 251. contra Vulterum Strouesdorff. nimis rigide docentem, teneri, etiamsi dubitet, an retractatio sit profutura.

6 What St. Bonaventure thinks of all these, I shall say: In the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 2, past the middle §. This he also teaches from St. Jerome Lib. 1. on Jeremiah cap. 4, and it is related, dist. 22. quaest. 2. cap. animadvertendo, that an Ought ought to have three companions: Truth, Judgment, and Justice. An oath lacks Judgment, when made without discretion and deliberation. An unlawful Oath, which is to the detriment of eternal salvation, lacks Justice. But it lacks Truth, when what is false is sworn: next, §. Item, as has been said, he places false testimony under injustice, obliging to restitution; but a false Oath, he says, §. circa iuramentum, is an oath "ancisorium", when what is false, or believed false, is sworn, which of its genus is mortal; this, however, seems to be so understood, when one sins with deliberation and is aware that he is sinning.

> QUID sentiat de his omnibus D. Bonavent. dicam: In speculo animae, cap. 2. post medium §. Haec etiam docet ex D. Hieronymo Lib. 1. in Hierem. cap. 4. et refertur, dist. 22. quaest. 2. cap. animadvertendo, ait Iuramentum tres comites habere debere, Veritatem, Iudicium, et Iustitiam. Iudicio caret iuramentum, absque discretione, et deliberatione factum. Iustitia caret Iuramentum illicitum, quod est in detrimentum salutis aeternae. Veritate autem caret, cum falsum iuratur: mox, §. Item, ut dictum, falsum testimonium sub iniustitia collocat, obligante ad restitutionem; Iuramentum autem falsum ait, §. circa iuramentum, Iuramentum ancisorium esse, cum iuratur falsum, vel quod creditur falsum, quod ex suo genere est mortale; hoc autem sic intelligendum videtur, cum quis ex deliberatione peccat, et se peccare advertit.

7 WHEREFORE an oath made out of ignorance — at least inculpable — does not oblige to restitution.

> QUARE iuramentum ex ignorantia, saltem inculpata, non cogit ad restitutionem.

8 They doubt, however, besides: whether witnesses, or the Judge, or the notary may accept some remuneration for a just satisfaction, sentence, and writing.

> DUBITANT autem praeterea: An possint testes, aut Iudex, aut tabellio pro iusta satisfactione, vel sententia, et scriptura accipere aliquam remunerationem.

9 FIRST, indeed, that for a just deposition or sentence they cannot accept a certain fee; and if they accept anything, they are bound to restore everything before the sentence.

> PRIMO sane, pro iusta testificatione, vel sententia non posse munus accipere certum, et si quid accipiant, tenentur ante sententiam omnia restituere.

10 It is PROVED from what was said in disp. de Iudice, quaest. 6. For whatever is given for a just testimony or just sentence is reckoned involuntary, given out of fear of an unjust attestation or sentence, as Lessius teaches lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 8. num. 55. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 18.

> PROBATUR ex dictis disp. de Iudice, quaest. 6. Nam quidquid datur pro iusto testimonio, vel iusta sententia censetur involuntarium, datum timore iniustae attestationis, vel sententiae, ut docet Lessius lib. 2. cap. 14. dub. 8. num. 55. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 42. num. 18.

11 SECOND, because there is nothing there saleable for which they could accept a price, for each is bound to testify justly or to decree justly: Therefore they act against justice by accepting something. So Navarrus cap. 25. num. 45. and cap. 17. num. 33. in summa Latina, and cap. Inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. concl. 6. corol. 63. Molina tract. 1. de iust. disp. 83. Fagundez num. 18., where he says that all those are bound to assert it who assert that a Witness, juridically interrogated, is bound by justice to confess the truth; and that he does an injury to the party, the judge, and the Commonwealth by not testifying to the truth; among whom is also St. Bonavent. cited in quaest. 1. He has the same thing in Diaeta, title 3. cap. 7. and it is plain from cap. cum ab omni specie, de vita, et honestate clericorum, where it is said: Since neither may a just judgment be sold by a judge, and venal sentences are reproved even by the secular laws themselves, which the Holy Doctor has almost word for word in the Mirror of the Soul, c. 2. §. Quartus fructus rapinae, around the middle.

> SECUNDO quia nihil est ibi vendibile, pro quo pretium accipere possint, nam uterque tenetur ad iuste testandum, vel decernendum: Ergo contra iniustitiam faciunt aliquid accipiendo. Ita Navarrus cap. 25. num. 45. et cap. 17. num. 33. in summa Latina, et cap. Bonavent.* citatus quaest. 1. Idipsum habet in Diaeta, titulo 3. cap. 7. et patet ex cap. cum ab omni specie, de vita, et honestate clericorum, ubi dicitur: Cum nec iustum iudicium iudici vendere liceat, et venales sententiae ab ipsis etiam legibus saecularibus reprobentur, quae fere ad verbum habet S. Doctor in speculo animae, c. 2. §. Quartus fructus rapinae, circa medium.

12 The GREATER doubt is: whether the witness, Judge, and Notary are bound to restore what they accept for an unjust testimony, sentence, or instrument.

> MAIUS dubium est: An testis, Iudex, et Tabellio teneantur restituere id, quod pro testimonio, sententia, aut instrumento iniusto accipiunt.

13 But there is NO doubt that they are bound to restore the damage inflicted on the party, as Fagundez notes num. 19. with St. Bonaventure in the places adduced, and cap. 1. speculi, §. Item damnificatio. But the whole question is: whether, besides restitution of the damage, they are bound also to restore the whole sum accepted for that injustice.

> NON est autem dubium, quin teneantur restituere damnum illatum parti, ut notat Fagundez num. 19. cum D. Bonavent. locis adductis, et cap. 1. speculi, §. Item damnificatio. Sed tota quaestio est: An, praeter restitutionem damni, teneantur etiam restituere totum acceptum pro ea iniustitia.

14 The FIRST opinion denies it. So Lessius tract. 1. cap. 14. dub. 8. from num. 52. Molina Tom. 1. disp. 89. Navar. sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 30. and cap. 25. num. 45. Toletus Lib. 5. of the summa, cap. 21. and cap. 59. Peter Navar. lib. 4. de restit. cap. 2. after doubt 11. num. 132. Rodriquez summa, part. 2. cap. 40. concl. 2. St. Thom. 2. 2. q. 32. art. 1. and quaest. 67. art. 5. and others adduced in the disput. de Iudice.

> PRIMA opinio negat. Sic Lessius tract. 1. cap. 14. dub. 8. a num. 52. Molina Tom. 1. disp. 89. Navar. sum. Lat. cap. 17. num. 30. et cap. 25. num. 45. Toletus Lib. 5. summae, cap. 21. et cap. 59. Petrus Navar. lib. 4. de restit. cap. 2. post dubium 11. num. 132. Rodriquez summa, part. 2. cap. 40. concl. 2. D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 32. art. 1. et quaest. 67. art. 5. et alii adducti disput. de Iudice.

15 The SECOND opinion asserts that all these are bound to restitution: Sayrus Lib. 10. cap. 2. n. 12. Cajetanus 2. 2. quaest. 32. ¶ 4. Fagundez on the eighth precept, Lib. 4. cap. 42.

> SECUNDA sententia asserit, hos omnes restitutioni teneri: Sayrus Lib. 10. cap. 2. n. 12. Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 32. ¶ 4. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, Lib. 4. cap. 42.

16 Such is the opinion of St. Augustine, epist. 54. to Macedonius, where he says: More justly it is said to the Advocate: Restore what you have received, when you stood against the truth, you favored iniquity, you deceived the judge, you won by falsehood. What is another's must be restored, which is obtained in that very forum where sins are punished, while the laws forbid it; more wickedly is money accepted for an unjust sentence than for a just one, and for false testimony than for true.

> EST autem sententia D. Augustini epist. 54. ad Macedonium, ubi dicit: Iustius dicitur Advocato: redde quod accepisti, quando contra veritatem exstitisti, iniquitati affuisti, iudicem fefellisti, de falsitate vicisti. Restituendum est alienum, quod in ipso foro, ubi peccata puniuntur, legibus id prohibentibus, obtinetur; sceleratius accipitur pecunia pro sententia iniusta, quam pro iusta; et pro testimonio falso, quam pro vero.

17 From Sermon 19 on the words of the Lord, in St. Bonav. Lib. one of the Pharetra, cap. 26: So deeply has the evil of cupidity grown, that now by custom Judges are sold, laws are corrupted, and the very sentence is venal, and no cause can now be without a "cause".

> Ex serm. 19. de verbis Domini, apud D. Bonav. Lib. primo Pharetrae, cap. 26. Usque adeo cupiditatis inolevit malum, ut iam ex consuetudine vendantur Iudices, corrumpantur iura, ipsaque sententia venalis sit, et nulla iam causa possit esse sine causa.

18 With this second opinion St. Bonaventure thinks, cap. 1. of the Mirror of the Soul, §. Quartus fructus rapinae; where he cries out that gifts accepted for rendering an unjust sentence, or for violating justice in any way whatever, are mortal sin and robbery.

> CUM hac secunda sententia sentit D. Bonavent. cap. 1. speculi animae, §. Quartus fructus rapinae; ubi munera accepta pro iniusta sententia ferenda, vel quomodolibet violanda iustitia culpam mortalem, rapinamque conclamat.

19 It is PROVED by the reason drawn from St. Bonaventure in the place adduced, which Fagundez uses, num. 25.

> PROBATUR ratione elicita ex D. Bonavent. loco adducto, qua utitur Fagundez, num. 25.

20 To the same virtue of justice belongs commanding works of justice and forbidding works of injustice; but that unjust acceptance is a work of injustice: Therefore it is forbidden by the virtue of justice: Therefore the one who accepts is bound to restore what he accepted unjustly; since he accepted it against justice.

> Ad eandem virtutem iustitiae pertinet praecipere opera iustitiae, et prohibere opera iniustitiae; sed illa iniusta acceptio est opus iniustitiae: Ergo prohibetur per virtutem iustitiae: Ergo tenetur accipiens restituere id, quod iniuste accepit; siquidem contra iustitiam accepit.

21 To WHOM, however, it must be restored, the Holy Doctor admonishes in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 2, at the end: that these are things which have not passed into the dominion of the receiver, since it is robbery; therefore they stand as an invalid contract, which must be rescinded, and restored to the giver; and it proceeds pari passu also with what is given and accepted through simony, to be rendered back to him who gave, as many Doctors note in Fagundez num. 30.

> CVI autem restituendum sit, admonet S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 2. ad finem; haec de iis esse, quae non transiere ad dominium recipientis, cum sit rapina; ideo se habere ut contractus invalidus, qui debet rescindi, et restitui danti, et pari passu incedit etiam datum, et acceptum ex simonia reddendum ei, qui dedit, ut notant multi Doctores apud Fagundez num. 30.

22 The assertion is PROVED next by the reason of St. Bonaventure loco cit. §. Quartus fructus rapinae. That price which is accepted against justice is liable to restitution by the law of nature, and therefore before every sentence: Such are gifts for rendering an unjust sentence: Therefore. The minor is proved, for the Witness, Judge, and Notary are bound to bear true testimony, a just sentence, to write a truthful instrument, and accordingly not an unjust one. Therefore they accept against justice, so as to damage their neighbor and act unjustly; and it certainly seems clear that it is against the law of nature, from which results the obligation of restoring damages inflicted on another.

> PROBATUR deinde assertio ratione D. Bonaventurae loco cit. §. Quartus fructus rapinae. Illud pretium, quod accipitur contra iustitiam, est obnoxium restitutioni ex iure naturae, et ideo ante omnem sententiam: Talia sunt munera ad ferendam iniustam sententiam: Ergo. Minor probatur, nam Testis, Iudex, et Tabellio tenentur ferre testimonium verum, sententiam iustam, scripturam veridicam scribere, atque adeo non iniustam. Igitur contra iustitiam accipiunt, ut damnificent proximum, et iniuste agant; et sane certum videtur, esse contra ius naturae, ex quo resultat obligatio restituendi damna, alteri illata.

23 Fagundez nevertheless notes, num. 32., with Sayro num. 16., that absolution must not be denied to the penitent who, having followed the former opinion, is unwilling to restore.

> ADVERTIT tamen Fagundez num. 32. cum Sayro num. 16. non esse negandam absolutionem poenitenti, qui priorem secutus sententiam, nollet restituere.

Question IV: What penalties are established for false witnesses

1 A false witness offends God, the Judges, and the litigating party, and commits in one sin a threefold deformity, which must be expounded in confession: perjury against God, injustice against men, against whom he gives false testimony; and a lie against the Judge, by which he perverts the forensic judgment. On this account heavy penalties are established for them in the law, as Fagundez teaches, cap. 43, after D. Bonaventura in the places cited, especially in the Diaeta, tit. 3, cap. 7. The same is found in the Canon law, cap. 1, de crimine falsi, where he says so threefold a penalty is to be inflicted on the false witness.

> Quae poenae statutae sint falsis Testibus.
> TESTIS falsus Deum, Iudices, et partem litigantem offendit, triplicemque in uno peccato committit deformitatem, necessario in confessione explicandam; periurii in Deum, iniustitiae in homines, contra quos falsum dicit testimonium; et mendacium in Iudicem, quo iudicium forense pervertit, ob id graves poenae in iure eis statuuntur, ut docet Fagundez cap. 43. post D. Bonaventuram locis citatis, praecipue in Diaeta, tit. 3. cap. 7. Idipsum habetur in iure Canonico, cap. 1. de crimine falsi, ubi triplicem adeo poenam ait infligendam falso testi.

2 FIRST, because he offends God by his perjury, a fast on bread and water for forty days is imposed on him, and for seven years other penance besides, as appears from C. Quicumque, quaest. 1, and the Gloss there, and D. Bonaventura reports it in the confessionali, cap. 3, particula 18.

> PRIMO enim quia periurio suo Deum offendit, ieiunium ei in pane, et aqua quadraginta dierum, et per septennium alia etiam poenitentia indicitur, ut patet ex C. Quicumque, quaest. 1. et Glossa ibi, et refert D. Bonavent. in confessionali, cap. 3. particula 18.

3 SECOND, because he mocked the Judge and perverted the public order of law, he is marked with infamy, C. si quis convictus, 2, quaest. 5.

> SECUNDO, quia Iudicem delusit, et publicum iuris ordinem pervertit, notatur infamia, C. si quis convictus, 2. quaest. 5.

4 THIRD, because he injured his neighbor, he is punished according to the manner and measure of the injury, that is, by as much penalty as is established by law. So Farinacius, quaest. 67, part. 309, and others whom he cites. The same author, num. 9, notes that a false witness must be condemned far more heavily, both in a case of death and in a civil or criminal case, than the Defendant is to be condemned; which Ananias also teaches on cap. 1, de crim. falsi, and there Butrius num. 6; Iason on the Leg. Et si legibus, at the end of the Cod. si contra ius, vel utilitatem publicam; Gomez on the law Tauri, 87; Penna in direct. Inquisit., part. 3, quaest. 73, com. 122, fol. 675.

> TERTIO, quia proximum laesit, punitur iuxta modum, et mensuram laesionis, idest quantis poena, iure statuta. Ita Farinacius quaest. 67. part. 309. et alii, quos allegat. Idem num. 9. advertit multo gravius damnandum falsum testem, tam in causa mortis, quam in causa civili, vel criminali; quam damnandus sit Reus; quod idem docet etiam Ananias in cap. 1. de crim. falsi, et ibi Butrius num. 6. Iason in Leg. Et si legibus, ad finem Cod. si contra ius, vel utilitatem publicam, Gomez ad legem Tauri, 87. Penna in direct. Inquisit. part. 3. quaest. 73. com. 122. fol. 675.

5 MOREOVER, the penalty of a false witness is that he is no longer believed in the judicial forum, even in true matters. Hence, although credit is given to other criminals, it is never given to liars. The Saintly Doctor proves this from the place recently adduced, from C. Quicumque, which is a decree of Pope Fabian, who decrees that such a one should never be without penance and never be received in testimony. So also Bartolus on the Leg. transigere, de transact., and commonly the Canonists on the cap. fraternitatis, de crimine falsi, where Innocent, Ioan. Andreas, Zabarella, and Ananias attest this.

> PRAETEREA testis falsi poena est, quod ei non amplius in foro iudiciali, in veris etiam, non creditur. Unde, licet aliis criminosis fides habeatur, falsidicis tamen nunquam. Id probat S. Doctor loco nuper adducto, ex C. Quicumque, quod est decretum Fabiani Papae qui decernit, ut is nunquam sit sine poenitentia, et nunquam in testimonium recipiatur. Ita etiam Bartolus in Leg. transigere, de transact. et communiter Canonistae in cap. fraternitatis, de crimine falsi, ubi Innocentius, Ioan. Andreas, Zabarella, Ananias id testantur.

6 A FOURTH penalty is deposition, if he is a cleric; some derive it from the c. Cum non ab homine, de iudiciis. This, however, is not observed, as I gather from D. Bonaventura in the confessionali, where, though recounting the other penalties, he does not append this one; and so Ananias notes at the place cited, and Fagundez num. 9, who at num. 26, with Ananias, notes that one must be punished for the crime of falsity who conceals the truth when he has sworn to speak it. It is gathered from the cap. Cum dilecti, de accusat.

> QUARTA poena est depositio, si clericus sit; si eam deducunt aliqui ex c. Cum non ab homine, de iudiciis. Hoc tamen non servatur, ut colligo ex D. Bonavent. in confessionali, ubi hanc poenam non apponit, alias recensens; et ita advertit Ananias loco cit. et Fagundez num. 9. qui num. 26. cum Anania advertit, crimine falsi puniendum, qui veritatem tacet, cum iuraverit dicere. Colligitur ex cap. Cum dilecti, de accusat.

7 By the civil law, formerly, by Leg. 12 Tabularum, false witnesses were hurled headlong from the Tarpeian rock, as Aulus Gellius testifies, Lib. 20 of his Attic Nights, cap. 1; Simanca de Cathol. Instit., titulo 64, num. 83; Tiraquellus de poenis, caus. 31, num. 29.

> IURE civili olim Leg. 12. Tabularum, testes falsi e Saxo Tarpeio praecipites agebantur, teste Aulo Gellio, Lib. 20. suarum noctium Atticarum, cap. 1. Simanca de Cathol. Instit. titulo 64. num. 83. Tiraquell. de poenis, caus. 31. num. 29.

8 AFTERWARD this penalty seemed too harsh, and in its place succeeded the penalty of deportation with publication of all goods, if the man were free; but if a slave, he is afflicted with the ultimate punishment, by the common Imperial law, Leg. 1 in princip. ff. ad Legem Corneliam de falsis, joined with the §. finalis, and Leg. si divino, ff. de poenis; and Angelus Perusinus notes it in addit. circa materiam de restam. post numerum 15, Abbas in cap. 1. de crim. falsi, num. 6, Simanchus de Cathol. Instit. tit. 64 num. 89, Marianus Socinus in cap. 1. de crimine falsi, num. 109. But one who compels another to testify falsely is punished with the same penalty, as Ananias teaches loco cit., and Fagundez cap. 43. num. 3, D. Bonaventura speculo animae, cap. 2, ad finem.

> POSTEA haec poena nimis acerba visa est, et eius loco poena deportationis cum publicatione omnium bonorum, si homo esset liber, successit; si autem servus, ultimo supplicio afficitur, de Iure communi Imperiali Leg. 1. in princip. ff. ad Legem Corneliam de falsis, iuncto §. finali, et Leg. si divino, ff. de poenis*, et advertunt Angelus Perusinus* in addit. circa materiam de restam. post numerum 15. Abbas in cap. 1. de crim. falsi, num. 6. Simanch. de Cathol. Instit. tit. 64 num. 89. Marianus Socinus in cap. 1. de crimine falsi, num. 109. compellens vero ad testificandum falsum, eadem poena punitur, ut docent Ananias loco cit. et Fagundez cap. 43. num. 3. D. Bonavent. speculo animae, cap. 2. ad finem.

9 SIMILARLY also a wavering and contradictory witness is punished with the penalty of the false witness, Leg. qui falso, and there the Gloss, ff. de testibus, and Leg. eas, ff. de falsis. So hold Abbas, Aretinus, and Butrius in cap. Cum in tua, de rest.; Baldus, Bossius, Clarus, Foller, and Farinacius, who cites others, quaest. 66, num. 56; and Bictus, quaest. 47, numero 21.

> SIMILITER et testis varius, et contrarius punitur poena falsi testis, Leg. qui falso*, et ibi Glossa,* ff. de testibus*, et* Leg. eas, ff. de falsis. Ita tenent Abbas, Aretin. et Butrius in cap. Cum in tua, de rest. Baldus, Bossius, Clarus, Foller. et Farinacius, qui alios citat, quaest. 66. num. 56. et Bictus quaest. 47. numero 21.

10 NOTE, however, that a witness who contradicts himself must be reconciled as far as possible. See the ways of accomplishing this in Farinacius a num. 369.

> ADVERTE tamen, testem, ne sibi contrarius sit, esse pro viribus concordandum. Vide modos id praestandi in Farinacio a num. 369.

11 IN the Venetian state a paper cap, painted with little devils, is placed on false witnesses, and sitting in a high place of the Piazza they are mocked; soon the tip of the tongue is cut off by the executioner, and he is driven into exile.

> FALSIS testibus in statu Veneto imponitur pileus papyraceus, daemoniolis depictus, et in alto loco Plateae sedens illuditur, mox ei linguae apex praeciditur a carnifice, et in exilium pellitur.

12 Matters pertaining to the essence of the oath and of perjury, insofar as it is against God, are treated quite differently in the Tract. de religione, disput. de iuramento; for now we have dealt with it insofar as it is against justice.

> QUAE spectant ad essentiam iuramenti, et periurii, prout est contra Deum, satis dissentientur Tract. de religione, disput. de iuramento; nunc enim egimus de eo, prout est contra iustitiam.

Disputation XXXI: On the Advocate

1 AFTER the Judge has occupied the supreme place in the tribunal, and the Defendant has been brought before him, and the witnesses examined openly (which, however, is not always required, since sometimes it is more expedient that it be done in secret), a fourth place is left to certain persons who contend from their office, for or against, by the allegation of laws and the discussion of arguments, so that the proceedings toward the Defendant's condemnation or absolution may go forward more clearly and securely; for the laws of almost all these places are so entangled in perplexities that some learned jurists are needed, by whose help they may be untangled, of whom we shall treat here.

> De Advocato.
> POSTQUAM supremum in tribunali locum Iudex occuparit, fueritque Reus coram adductus, palamque fuerint testes examinati; (quod tamen semper non requiritur, cum aliquando clam id fieri magis expediat) quartus locus relinquitur quibusdam personis, quae ex officio, pro, vel contra, legum allegatione, et rationum disceptatione contendant, ut clarius et securius ad Rei condemnationem, vel absolutionem procedatur, tot enim omnium fere locorum Iura ambagibus implicantur; ut viros nonnullos Iurisperitos requirant, quorum ope extricari valeant, de quibus hic agendum.

Question I: Who can and ought to exercise this office

1 The practice of all Tribunals plainly demonstrates that this office is not to be permitted promiscuously to all, but to one or another, whom they are accustomed to name Advocate.

> Qui possint, et debeant hoc munere fungi.
> OMNIUM Tribunalium praxis liquido demonstrat, hoc officium non omnibus promiscue permittendum; sed uni, aut alteri, quem Advocatum nominare solent.

2 An ADVOCATE, moreover, is said to be he who, before him who presides over the jurisdiction, pleads his own or a friend's cause, or contradicts that of another. So the Doctors on Leg. Papin. ff. de postulat.

> ADVOCATUS autem dicitur ille, qui apud eum, qui iurisdictioni praeest, sui, vel amici causam dicit, vel alterius causae contradicit. Ita Doctores in Leg. Papin. ff. de postulat.

3 The office of Advocate is noble, and Cassaneus treats it more fully in the Catalogo gloriae mundi, part. 7. consider. 28; and it appears from Leg. Laudabile, Cod. de Advocat. diversorum iudicum, and Leg. 1, ff. de Iustitia, et Iure.

> EST autem munus Advocati nobile, et latius tractat Cassaneus in Catalogo gloriae mundi, part. 7. consider. 28. et constat ex Leg. Laudabile, Cod. de Advocat. diversorum iudicum et Leg. 1. ff. de Iustitia, et Iure.

4 Cassaneus shows first the honorableness of this office, consider. 29, with D. Bonaventura ad 10. Lucae, where Christ himself exercised this office, taking up Magdalene's cause to defend against Martha; just as in cap. 7 he defends her from the Pharisee, and in Matth. 16 from the disciples, as D. Bernardus observes in assumptione Beatae Virginis, serm. 3, where also S. Bonaventura notes there that the judicial sentence was subdivided for Mary. And so Christ became Mary's Advocate, who had been the Judge appealed to; moreover he became Judge, and in Ioan. 8 he became the advocate of the adulteress.

Similarly he was also the advocate of the disciples, Lucae 6, Matth. 12, and it is found in cap. discipulos, de consecr. dist. 5, and the Gloss on Leg. Neminem, Cod. de sacros. Ecclesia. Finally Christ himself ascended into heaven, that he might appear as our Advocate before God, Heb 9.

> HONESTATEM huius officii ostendit primo Cassaneus, consider. 29. cum D. Bonavent. ad 10. Lucae ubi Christus ipse hoc munere functus est, assumens Magdalenae causam defendendam contra Martham; sicuti et cap. 7. eam defendit a Pharisaeo, et Matth. 16. a discipulis, ut observat D. Bernardus in assumptione Beatae Virginis, serm. 3. Ubi etiam advertit S. Bonav. ibidem, sententiam iudicialem subdividisse pro Maria. Itaque Christus factus est Mariae Advocatus, qui fuerat Iudex interpellatus, insuper, et Iudex factus est, et Ioan. 8. factus est advocatus adulterae. Similiter etiam advocatus fuit discipulorum, Lucae 6. Matth. 12. et habetur cap. discipulos, de consecr. dist. 5. et Glossa in Leg. Neminem, Cod. de sacros. Ecclesia. Denique Christus ipse ascendit in coelos, ut appareat noster coram Deo Advocatus Heb 9.

5 FINALLY, in the first Iuan. 2, "We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ," and the Blessed Virgin, the Mother of God most high, is our Advocate, as the Church sings. The Saintly Doctor pursues this at length in the Diaeta, titulo 3, c. 2. Among the distinguished saints, D. Ambrose exercised the office of Advocate at Rome for ten years. B. Germanus, D. Lipardus, B. Luo, and others; see Cassaneus consider. 29.

> TANDEM prima Iuan. 2. Advocatum habemus apud Patrem Iesum Christum*, et Beata Virgo, Mater Dei Altissima, Advocata nostra est, ut canit Ecclesia. Haec late prosequitur S. Doctor in* Diaeta, titulo 3. c. 2. Inter sanctos insignes, D. Ambrosius decem annos Romae functus est officio Advocati. B. Germanus, D. Lipardus, B. Luo, et alii Vide Cassenensem consider. 29.

6 THEREFORE many are excluded from this office for unfitness, such as excommunicates, infamies, heretics, infidels, and those condemned of grave crimes. Some also for incapacity, such as the insane, children, the mute, the deaf, the blind. So D. Thom. here, Caietanus there, Sylvester, V. Advocatus, Nauarrus summa, cap. 25, num. 28, Panormitanus in rubr. de postulat., Bartolus in Leg. 1, ff. eodem, Leg. Nemo, 2, Cod. de Episcop. aud., Tannerus disput. 4, quaest. 4, dub 6, num. 123.

> IDEO multi ex indecentia repelluntur ab hoc officio, ut sunt excommunicati, infames, haeretici, infideles, et gravibus damnati criminibus. Aliqui etiam ob impotentiam, ut furiosi, pueri, muti, surdi, caeci. Ita D. Thom. hic*, Caietanus* ibi*, Sylvester,* V. Advocatus*, Nauar.* summa, cap. 25. num. 28. Panormit. in rubr. de postulat. Bartol. in Leg. 1. ff. eodem, Leg. Nemo, 2. Cod de Episcop. aud. Tanner. disput. 4. quaest. 4. dub 6. num. 123.

7 OTHERS are barred because they are consecrated to higher things, as clerics and Monks, cap. fin. de postulat. extra; ne clerici, vel monachi. Yet necessity removes the unfitness.

> ALII arcentur, quia altioribus sunt sacrati, ut clerici, et Monachi, cap. fin. de postulat. extra; ne clerici, vel monachi. Attamen pro necessitatibus tollitur indecentia.

Question II: On the sins of a wicked advocate

1 I ASSERT first, that an Advocate who through notable negligence or ignorance of his loses his client's just cause sins mortally against justice and is bound to restitution of the value of the cause, and to the expenses and other damages; and this, if he presents himself as a learned man, and his client did not know his ignorance; otherwise not, unless he acts with fraud or grave fault, and by cavillation takes the cause from him. So commonly the Doctors: Nauarrus sum. Lav. cap. 25, num. 29; Hostiensis in cap. calumniam, de poenis; Innocent in cap. sicut dignum, de homicid.; Sylvester V. Advocatus, num 16; Toletus lib. 5 summae, cap. 62; Filliucius tom 2, tract. 40, in octavum praeceptum, cap. 10, num. 295; Lessius Lib. 2, cap. 51, dub. 8, num. 47; Fagundez lib. 8, cap. 38; and it appears from Leg. Idem iuris, §. 1, ff. ad Leg. Aquil.

> De peccatis Advocati pravi.
> ASSERO primo, Advocatum, qui notabili sua negligentia, aut ignorantia iustam clientis sui causam perdit, peccare lethaliter contra iustitiam, et ad restitutionem teneri valoris causae, et ad expensas, et alia damna; et hoc, si pro viro docto se gerit, et cliens eius ignorantiam ignorabat; alias non nisi sit in dolo, aut lata culpa, et per cavillationem ei causam auferat. Ita communiter Doctores. Nauar. sum. Lav. cap. 25. num. 29. Hostiens. in cap. calumniam, de poenis. Innocentius in cap. sicut dignum, de homicid. Sylvester V. Advocatus, num 16. Tolet. lib. 5. summae, cap. 62. Filliucius tom 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 10. num. 295. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 51. dub. 8. num. 47. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 38. et patet ex Leg. Idem iuris, §. 1. ff. ad Leg. Aquil.

2 The REASON is that by justice he is bound to show diligence for his client, and the greater, the more difficult the client's cause. Thus he is bound also to be skilled.

> RATIO est, quia ex iustitia tenetur pro suo cliente diligentiam praestare, et eo maiorem, quo difficilior est causa clientis. Sic tenetur etiam esse peritus.

3 I ASSERT secondly, that an Advocate who defends a cause which he knows to be unjust sins mortally against justice and is bound to restore to the adverse party the damages that befall it, of expenses, etc. This is common among the Doctors. So D. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 2 et 4; D. Thom. art. 3, ad 4. But Syluester, Filliucius, and Lessius note that an Advocate, after he has admonished his client of the injustice of the cause, is bound to abandon it if the client wishes to pursue it, yet not to betray to the adverse party what he knows in secret. In a just suit he is bound also not to prolong it, not to allege laws sophistically, from D. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 2.

> ASSERO secundo, Advocatus, qui defendit causam, quam novit iniustam peccat, lethaliter contra iustitiam, et tenetur parti adversae restituere damna, quae illi obveniunt, expensarum, etc. Est communis inter Doctores. Ita D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2. et 4. D. Thom. art. 3. ad 4. ADVERTUNT autem Syluester, Filliucius, et Lessius, Aduocatum, postquam monuit clientem suum de iniustitia causae, teneri eum deserere, si ipse velit illam prosequi, non tamen ea, quae secreta scit, prodere adversae parti. Tenetur etiam in Lite iusta non prolongare, non sophistice allegare iura, ex D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2.

4 THEREFORE an Advocate who by superfluous delays, suborning of witnesses, offering of false instruments, or by false witnesses, or by other iniquitous and deceitful means alleging false laws, which he knows to be wholly false, causes the adversary of his client to lose a just cause, sins mortally against justice, and is bound to every damage emerging. So D. Bonaventura in speculo animae, cap. 2, ad finem, whom Nauarrus follows, summ. Lat. cap. 25, num. 29; Hostiensis in cap. calumniam de poenis; summa Confessorum, Lib. 2, tit. 5; Syluester V. Aduocatus, numero 4; Armilla, V. Aduocatus, num. 19; Filliucius tom. 2, tract. 40, in 8. praeceptum, cap. 10, num. 295; Tovecus Lib. 5, cap. 62; and others passim. It appears from cap. si quis autem, 3, quaest. 7, and from L. 3, Properandum, Cod. de Indice. The reason is that he does an injury to the adverse party, as S. Bonaventura argues, and with him Fagundez cap. 38, n. 18; but he who is the cause of injury to anyone with damage is bound to restore it, as appears ex cap. si sua culpa, de iniuriis, et damno dato.

> ITAQUE Aduocatus, qui per superfluas dilationes, subornationem testium, oblationem falsorum instrumentorum, aut falsis testibus, aut aliis iniquis, et dolosis modis falsa iura allegando, quae scit omnino esse falsa, facit, ut adversarius sui clientis iustam causam perdat, peccat mortifere contra iustitiam; et tenetur ad omne damnum emergens. Ita D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2. ad finem, quem sequuntur Nauar. summ. Lat. cap. 25. num. 29. Hostiensis in cap. calumniam de poenis, summa Confessorum, Lib. 2. tit. 5. Syluester V. Aduocatus, numero 4. Armilla, V. Aduocatus, num. 19. Filliucius tom. 2. tract. 40. in 8. praeceptum, cap. 10. num. 295. Tovecus Lib. 5. cap. 62. et alii passim. Patet ex cap. si quis autem, 3. quaest. 7. et ex L. 3. Properandum, Cod. de Indice. Ratio est quia is iniuriam facit parti adversae, ut arguit S. Bonavent. et cum eo Fagundez cap. 38. n. 18. qui autem alicui iniurie causa damni est, tenetur illud restituere, ut patet ex cap. si sua culpa, de iniuriis, et damno dato.

5 HE CAN, however, if he has a just cause, deceive the adversary by prudently concealing what might impede the right of the adverse party, provided he abstains from lies and does not use other falsehoods. So D. Thom. quaest. 71, art. 3, ad 3; Caiet. there; Nauarrus, Syluester loco cit.; the Gloss in cap. ne quis, 22, quaest. 2, and in cap. Dominus noster, 23, quaest. 2; Fumus V. Aduocatus.

POTEST tamen, si habeat iustam causam; decipere adversarium, occultando prudenter ea, quae ius adversae partis impedire possunt, dummodo a mendaciis abstineat; et aliis falsitatibus, non utatur. Ita D. Thom. quaest. 71. art. 3. ad 3. Caiet. ibi. Nauar. Syluest. loco cit. Glossa in cap. ne quis, 22. quaest. 2. et in cap. Dominus noster, 23. quaest. 2. Fumus V. Aduocatus.

6 I ASSERT thirdly, that an Advocate can plead in a less probable cause too, in a capital cause, and one involving loss of all goods.

ASSERO tertio, posse Aduocatum patrocinari in causa etiam minus probabili, in causa sanguinis, et amissionis omnium bonorum.

7 AND indeed, that an Advocate, abandoning the more probable, may follow the less probable, not only of law but also of fact, all teach, as Diana notes p. p. tract. 13, resol. 4; but they say he is bound to disclose to the party the lesser probability of his cause, otherwise he will restore to him the damages and expenses.

ET quidem, posse Aduocatum, relicta probabiliori, sequi minus probabilem, non solum iuris, sed etiam facti, docent omnes, ut notat Diana p. p. tract. 13. resol. 4. sed aiunt, teneri manifestare parti minorem probabilitatem suae causae, alias restituet ei damna, et expensas.

8 THE DIFFICULTY therefore stands: whether he may proceed even in a capital cause, and one involving loss of all goods, by defending the actor. For the negative side is maintained by Loui. de Cruz in direct. confess., part. 1, prac. 8, art. 5, dub. 1; Malderus prima secundae, quaest. 19, art. 5, disp. 86, assert. 8; Martinuz part. 21, tract. 1, quaest. 19, dub. 26, concl. cap. 3; and others with Soto lib. 5, quaest. 8, art. 3, because in doubt the condition of the possessor of the thing is better, and in doubt favor is to be shown the Defendant, as Bassaeus also says, V. Advocatus.

DIFFICULTAS igitur stat: an possit procedere etiam in causa sanguinis, et amissionis omnium bonorum protegendo actorem. Negatiuam enim partem tuentur Loui. de Cruz in direct. confess. part. 1. prac. 8. art. 5. dub. 1. Malder. prima secundae, quaest. 19. art. 5. disp. 86. assert. 8. Martinuz part. 21. tract. 1. quaest. 19. dub. 26. concl. cap. 3. et alii cum Soto lib. 5. quaest. 8. art. 3. quia in dubio melior est conditio possidentis Reï, et in dubio fauendum est Reo, ut ait etiam Bassaeus V. Advocatus.

9 BUT the contrary opinion is held by Sanchez in summa, tract. 2, quaest. 74, art. 3; Lorca prima secundae, tract. 1, disp. 30, memb. 2; Villalobos tom. 1, tract. 1, diffic. 14; Diana loco cit.; Fagundez infra; Bass. loco cit.; Tannerus, disp. 4, quaest. 4, dub. 6, num. 117, citing Syluester V. Advocatus, quaest. 10, §. 3; Nauarrus man. cap. 25; Valentia quaest. 11, puncto 4; Azorius Tom. 1, lib. 1, cap. 17, quaest. 4; and Lessius lib. 2, cap. 31, dub. 9.

> AT vero existimant sententiam contrariam Sanchez in summa tract. 2. quaest. 74. art. 3. Lorca prima secundae, tract. 1. disp. 30. memb. 2. Villalob. tom. 1. tract. 1. diffic. 14. Diana loco cit. Fagundez infra, Bass. loco cit. Tanner, disp. 4. quaest. 4. dub. 6. num. 117. referens Syluestrum V. Advocatus, quaest. 10. §. 3. Nauar. man. cap. 25. Valentiam quaest. 11. puncto 4. Azorium Tom. 1. lib. 1. cap. 17. quaest. 4. et Lessium lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 9.

10 The REASON is that, if the Client could litigate in this case, therefore the Advocate also could defend.

> RATIO est, quia, si Cliens posset in hoc casu litigare; Ergo, et Advocatus defendere.

11 For the ADVOCATE only upholds the side of one party, as far as reason goes, but does not declare the law or pronounce sentence.

> ADVOCATUS enim solum tuetur partem unius, quantum valet ratione, non autem ius dicit, aut sententiam profert.

12 Fagundez nevertheless ADDS, cap. 38, num. 15, that if little utility would accrue to the actor, he cannot be defended in such grave cases. So also Lessius lib. 2, cap. 31, dub. 9, num. 53; Filliucius tom. 2, tract. 40, cap. 10, num. 285. Therefore Tannerus, with others, adds: Unless Charity recall it.

> ADDIT tamen Fagundez cap. 38. num. 15. si parum utilitatis actori obveniret, non posse defendi in tam gravibus casibus actorem. Ita etiam Lessius lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 9. num. 53. Filliucius tom. 2. tract. 40. cap. 10. num. 285. Ideo Tanner. cum aliis addit; Nisi Charitas revocet.

13 THIS opinion seems to me, at least, to need limiting, because it is against Charity, at least, to intend another's death or ruin in this way.

> HAEC opinio mihi saltem videtur limitanda, quia contra Charitatem est saltem, mortem, vel ruinam alteri sic intentare.

14 WHETHER, however, in a doubtful cause the Advocate may protect.

> AN vero in causa dubia possit Aduocatus protegere.

15 The AFFIRMATIVE opinion is maintained by Malderus prima secundae, quaest. 19, art. 5, dub. 86, assert. 8; Lorca prima secundae, quaest. 39, memb. 2; Diana p. p. Tract. 13, resol. 6. The reason is that the Advocate does nothing but represent to the Judge the reasons of the party. The same maintains part. 4, Tract. 3, resol. 47, adducing Metellus Tom. 1, disp. 3, cap. 4, coroll. 6, num. 16, against Salas prima secundae, tract. 8, disp. unic., sess. 11, n. 108. Bassaeus subscribes loco cit.

> ASSERTIVAM sententiam tuentur Malder. prima secundae, quaest. 19. art. 5. dub. 86. assert. 8. Lorca prima secundae, quaest. 39. memb. 2. Diana p. p. Tract. 13. resol. 6. Ratio est, quia Aduocatus nil praestat, quam representare Iudici rationes partis. Idem tuetur part. 4. Tract. 3. resol. 47. adducens Metollam Tom. 1. disp. 3. cap. 4. coroll. 6. num. 16. contra Salam prima secundae, tract. 8. disp. unic. sess. 11. n. 108. Subscribit Bassaeus loco cit.

16 Fagundez nevertheless ADDS num. 13 that he is bound to admonish the client, otherwise he cannot. So also Nauarros summ. Lat. cap. 25, numero 28; Syluester V. Aduocatus, numero 5. On these things see prima secundae, Tract. 1, disp. 17, quaest. 10.

ADDIT tamen Fagundez num. 13. teneri clientem admonere, aliter non posse: Ita etiam Nauarros summ. Lat. cap. 25. numero 28. Syluester V. Aduocatus, numero 5. De his actum prima secundae, Tract. 1. disp. 17. quaest. 10.

17 I ASSERT fourthly, that an Advocate defending Defendants against the Fisc by frauds, and effecting by these that the Fisc not seize the client's goods, is not bound to restore that gain to the Fisc. So Lessius Lib. 2, cap. 31, dub. 8, num. 50; Filliucius num. 283; Sanchez Lib. 10, de matrim., disp. 8, num. 14; Fagundez Lib. 8, cap. 38, num. 10; and he derives it from Nauarrus, summ. Latinae cap. 18, num. 49.

ASSERO quarto, Aduocatum, tuentem Reos contra Fiscum fraudibus, et his efficientem, ne Fiscus clientis bona rapiat, non teneri restituere Fisco illud emolumentum; Ita Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 31. dub. 8. num. 50. Filliucius num. 283. Sanchez Lib. 10. de matrim. disp. 8. num. 14. Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 38. num. 10. et deducit e Nauarro, summ. Latinae cap. 18. num. 49.

18 The REASON is that a penalty is not owed except after the Judge's sentence has followed.

RATIO est, quia poena non debetur, nisi secuta Iudicis sententia.

19 I ASSERT fifthly, that if the Advocate of the fisc, by negligence alone, at least grave, be the cause that the fisc does not uncover the truth for the despoiling of goods, he is not bound to restore this damage to the fisc, but only a proportionate part of the salary and of the expenses he incurred: so Filliucius loco cit.; Lessius num. 51; Fagundez num. 11.

ASSERO quinto, quod si Aduocatus fisci sola negligentia, saltem gravi, sit causa, ut fiscus non detegat veritatem ad expoliationem bonorum, non teneri Fisco restituere damnum hoc, sed solum partem salarii pro rata, atque expensarum, quas fecit: sic Filliucius loco cit. Lessius num. 51. Fagundez num. 11.

20 I ASSERT sixthly; if an Advocate has so defended the Client that the accuser cannot prove the true matter and falls into the penalty of talion, he is not bound to restore damages to him, nor does he become irregular. So Lessius num. 52, against Nauarrus si furiosus, 2, part., §. 5; Salon 2, 2, q. 71, art. 3, controv. 1; Fagundez num. 22, against Nauarrus summa Lat. cap. 27, num. 209. The reason is that this evil is accidental, and he himself is not bound to uphold the Accuser's part.

ASSERO sexto; si Aduocatus ita Clientem defenderit, ut accusator non possit rem veram probare, et incidat in poenam talionis, non tenetur restituere illi damna, nec fit irregularis. Ita Lessius num. 52. contra Nauar. si furiosus, 2. part. §. 5. Salon 2. 2. q. 71. art. 3. controv. 1. Fagundez num. 22. contra Nauar. summa Lat. cap. 27. num. 209. Ratio est, quia hoc malum est per accidens, et ipse non tenetur Accusatoris partes tueri.

21 BUT a great difficulty concerns the following question.

MAGNA vero difficultas est de quaestione sequenti.

Question III: Whether an advocate is liable for light fault

1 The AFFIRMATIVE answer is given by Villalobos Tomo 2, Tract. 10, diff. 4; Iom. Valer. in differ. utriusque fori, V. damnum, differ. 1, num. 7; Ledesma summa, part. 2, Tract. 8, cap. 36; Salon. 2, 2, quaest. 71, art. 2, controv. unica, conclus. 2; Rebell. part. 2, lib. 1, quaest. 10, num. 7; Molina Tom. 3, tract. 2, disp. 730; Sayrus L. 10, tract. 2, cap. 8, num. 11; Reginaldus tract. 2, Lib. 10, cap. 9, sect. 3, num. 90; Navarrus in restit., lib. 3, cap. 3, num. 3; Bannes 2, 2, quaest. 71, art. 4, dub. 2; Cruz in direct., part. 1, prac. 8, art. 5, dub. 19.

An teneatur ADVOCATUS de culpa leui.

AFFIRMATIVE respondent. Villalobos Tomo 2. Tract. 10. diff. 4. Iom. Valer. in differ. utriusque fori, V. damnum, differ. 1. num. 7. Ledesma summa, part. 2. Tract. 8. cap. 36. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 2. controv. unica, conclus. 2. Rebell. part. 2. lib. 1. quaest. 10. num. 7. Molina Tom. 3. tract. 2. disp. 730. Sayrus L. 10. tract. 2. cap. 8. num. 11. Reginaldus tract. 2. Lib. 10. cap. 9. sect. 3. num. 90. Navar. in restit. lib. 3. cap. 3. num. 3. Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 4. dub. 2. Cruz in direct. part. 1. prac. 8. art. 5. dub. 19.

[2] BUT this opinion would be the ruin of Advocates. Therefore the opposite is maintained by Lessius lib. 2, cap. 7, num. 31; Azorius part. 3, lib. 13, cap. 29, dub. 5; Malderus 2, 2, tract. 6, cap. 3, disp. 10; Fernandez in exam., Lib. 4, q. 44; Graff., decis., part. 1, lib. 3, cap. 8; Navarrus, man., cap. 25, num. 28; Rodriquez, sum., tom. 1, cap. 6, num. 6; Ortiz, summa, cap. 8, numero 3; Turrianus, Tom. 2, 2, 2, disp. 11, dub. 4, num. 5, etc.; Diana, p. p., Tract. 15, resol. 59.

SED haec sententia perditio esset Aduocantium. Ideo oppositam tuentur Lessius lib. 2. cap. 7. num. 31. Azorius part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 29. dub. 5. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 6. cap. 3. disp. 10. Fernandez in exam. Lib. 4. q. 44. Graff. decis. part. 1. lib. 3. cap. 8. Navar. man. cap. 25. num. 28. Rodriquez sum. tom. 1. cap. 6. num. 6. Ortiz summa, cap. 8. numero 3. Turrian. Tom. 2. 2. 2. disp. 11. dub. 4. num. 5. etc. Diana p. p. Tract. 15. resol. 59.

[3] The same is D. Bonaventura's, in speculo animae, cap. 3, where he condemns only grave fault in the undertaking of the office. Therefore if he loses the cause, he is not bound to restitution, because he acted quite prudently, even if negligently in a light way. Bassaeus implies this, V. Advocat., num. 3.

Eadem est D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 3. ubi solam gravem culpam in promisso officio damnat. Itaque si amittat causam, non tenetur restitutioni, quia satis prudenter egit, etiamsi leviter negligens. Id innuit Bassaeus V. Advocat. num. 3.

Question IV: Whether an advocate engaged by the year is worthy of his fee in a year in which he did nothing

[1] The negative seems to be answered from Florus de mera var. qq., lib. 1, quaest. 8, num. 54; Azorius, part. 3, lib. 13, cap. 10, quaestio 10, where, from Bartolus on Leg. diem functo, ff. de offic. assessorum, he says the salary is owed only pro rata temporis.

An Advocatus, conductus ad annos, sit Honorario dignus eo anno, quo nil egit.

Negative videtur dicendum ex Flore de mera var. qq. lib. 1. quaest. 8. num. 54. Azorio part. 3. lib. 13. cap. 10. quaestio 10. ubi ex Bartolo Leg. diem functo, ff. de offic. assessorum, ait, salarium deberi solum pro rata temporis.

[2] The opposite is followed by Gattierez in praxi qq., Lib. 1, quaest. 52; Matthaeus de Afflictis, in consti. Regni Siciliae, rub. 81, de salario Advoc.; Azevedo, in Lib. 10, tit. 16, lib. 2, num. 4.

Oppositum sequitur Gattierez praxi. qq. Lib. 1. quaest. 52. Matthaeus de Afflictis in consti. Regni Siciliae, rub. 81. de salario Advoc. Azeved. in Lib. 10. tit. 16. lib. 2. num. 4.

[3] Diana walks the middle path, p. p., Tract. 15, resol. 41, saying that in the forum of conscience at least he is bound to pay, yet not the whole, but a part, in the judgment of a prudent man. So also Bobadilla in politic., tract. 2, lib. 3, cap. 14, num. 63. But if the Advocate were of a genius more for laboring than for idling, nothing of the salary should be diminished, he says, unless another cause were present. It seems to be in the mind of Rebellus, de oblig. iust., part. 1, lib. 14, num. 7.

Media via incedit Diana p. p. Tract. 15. resol. 41. dicens, in foro conscientiae saltem teneri solvere, non tamen totum, sed partem, iudicio viri prudentis. Sic etiam Bobadilla in politic. tract. 2. lib. 3. cap. 14. num. 63. Quod si Advocatus esset genii magis laborandi, quam otiandi, nil de salario minuendum ait, nisi alia causa adesset. Videtur ad mentem Rebell. de oblig. iust. part. 1. lib. 14. num. 7.

Question V: Whether an advocate is bound to defend a client gratis in grave necessity

1 I assert that in grave and extreme necessity of a poor Defendant, when he is about to be condemned unjustly to the galleys, to death, to the scourge, or to harsh imprisonment, or believed to be about to contract a grave illness by losing the suit, if he cannot otherwise be helped, the Advocate is bound under mortal fault to show him his advocacy gratis, provided there remains for him time beyond what is necessary for preserving his own state; but in extreme necessity he is bound to render the advocacy even of his time and industry, necessary to his state. So D. Thom. 2, 2, quaest. 71, art. 1; Caietanus there; Sylvester, V. Advocatus, num. 16; Lessius, Lib. 2, cap. 71, dub. 7, num. 46; Sotus, Lib. 5, de iustitia, quaest. 8, art. 1; Armilla, V. Advocatus, num. 10; Filliucius, Tom. 21, tract. 40, cap. 10, num. 187; Navarrus, summa Lat., cap. 25, num. 29; Fagundez, lib. 8, cap. 38, num. 20; Tannesius, disp. 4, quaest. 4, num. 125; and others with Bassaeus, V. Advoc., num. 5, who proves it from the first of Ioan. 3, Whoever hath substance, etc.

An teneatur Advocatus defendere Clientem gratis in gravi necessitate.

Assero, in gravi, et extrema necessitate Rei pauperis, quando iniuste ad triremes, ad mortem, ad flagella, seu ad durum carcerem potaretur damnandus, vel gravem morbum contracturus crederetur, amissa lite, si non possit ei aliter subveniri, tenetur Advocatus sub mortifera culpa ei suum patrocinium gratis exhibere, modo ei tempus supersit ex necessario ad suum statum conservandum: in extrema vero necessitate tenetur patrocinium praestare, etiam de tempore, et industria, necessariis ad suum statum. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 1. Caietanus ibi, Sylvester V. Advocatus, num. 16. Lessius Lib. 2. cap. 71. dub. 7. num. 46. Sotus Lib. 5. de iustitia, quaest. 8. art. 1. Armilla V. Advocatus, num. 10. Filliucius Tom. 21. tract. 40. cap. 10. num. 187. Navar. summa Lat. cap. 25. num. 29. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 38. num. 20. Tannes. disp. 4. quaest. 4. num. 125. et alii cum Bassaeo, V. Advoc. num. 5. qui probat prima Ioan. 3. Qui habueris substantiam, etc.

2 The reason is that whoever has superfluity is bound in grave necessity to spend of the things necessary to his own state. This doctrine accords with D. Bonaventura, as I said in the disput. de Eleemosyna.

Ratio est, quia qui superfluum habet, tenetur in gravi necessitate de necessariis ad suum statum erogare. Haec doctrina consonat cum D. Bonavent. ut dixi disput. de Eleemosyna.

3 Therefore the Judge is bound to give an Advocate to miserable persons who have not a man, Leg. nec quicquam, ff. de offic. praesul., §. finali; and if an Advocate refuse without cause, the Judge can remove him perpetually from the office of advocacy, Leg. Providendum, Cod. eodem tit.

Itaque tenetur Iudex personis miserabilibus, quae non habent hominem, dare Advocatum Leg. nec quicquam, ff. de offic. praesul. §. finali, Et si Advocatus sine causa renuat, potest Iudex eum ab officio advocationis perpetuo amovere Leg. Providendum, Cod. eodem tit.

Question VI: Whether an advocate can receive gifts

1 Where a certain Honorarium or stipend for the office of Advocacy has been established by the Prince, or by custom, Advocates cannot receive anything beyond it; and if they receive, it will be subject to restitution. It is common among the Doctors; so D. Bonaventura, in speculo animae, cap. 2, §. Quartus fructus rapina; Filliutius, Tom. 2, tract. 40, cap. 10, num. 190; Navarrus, sum. Lat., cap. 25, num. 30; and it appears from what was said in the preceding disput., quaest. 3, and the disp. de Iudice.

> An possit Advocatus recipere munera.
> Ubi certum Honorarium, vel stipendium pro munere Advocationis statutum est a Principe, aut consuetudine, non possunt Advocati aliquid ultra accipere; et si recipiant, erit restitutioni obnoxium. Est communis Doctorum, sic D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2. §. Quartus fructus rapina. Filliutius Tom. 2. tract. 40. cap. 10. num. 190. Navar. sum. Lat. cap. 25. num. 30. et patet ex dictis disput. praecedenti, quaest. 3. et disp. de Iudice.

2 The first part is proved by D. Thom., 2, 2, quaest. 71, art. 4, in corpore, and D. Bonaventura at the place cited, because when one is not bound to render something to another, he can justly receive something for its rendering; but on the contrary (and thus the other part is proved), when one is bound to exhibit something for a price, he exhibits nothing saleable. An Honorarium not fixed by law Bassaeus commends to each one's discretion, num. 7.

> Prior pars probatur a D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 71. art. 4. in corpore, et D. Bonavent. loco cit. quia quando quis non tenetur alteri aliquid praestare, iuste potest pro eius praestatione accipere aliquid; at e contra (et sic probatur altera pars,) quando tenetur aliquis ex pretio aliquid exhibere, nihil vendibile exhibet. Honorarium vero, lege non taxatum, discretioni cuiusque commendat Bassaeus num. 7.

3 You will ask: Whether a stipend is owed to an Advocate who, in his own cause, pleaded against an adversary in a suit and drew up the writings.

> Quaeres: An Advocato, qui in causa propria contra adversarium in lite advocavit, et scripturas contexuit, debeatur stipendium.

4 Some deny it, because of that rule drawn from Leg. properandum, §. si autem alterutra, Cod. de iudiciis, on which Menochius, q. 74, de arbitriis adjudicates that the expenses are to be made by the loser which he made, not those which he did not make. So Paulus Castrensis infers, ad leg. finali, Cod. de fructu, et litium expensis.

> Negant aliqui, eo quod regula illa deducta ex Leg. properandum, §. si autem alterutra, Cod. de iudiciis, de qua Menochius q. 74. de arbitriis adiudicat expensas a victo faciendas, quas fecit, non quas non fecit. Sic infert Paulus Castrens. ad leg. finali, Cod. de fructu, et litium expensis.

5 Yet Valafius asserts the opposite, tract. 1, concl. 26, num. 23.

> Asserunt tamen Valafius tract. 1. concl. 26. num. 23.

6 The reason is that the expenses made on the Advocate were for creating him an Advocate; nor should the Advocate's learning render him in a worse condition.

> Ratio est, quia expensae in Advocato factae sunt ad eum creandum Advocatum; neque debet scientia Advocati eum reddere deterioris conditionis.

7 Moreover, the condemnation of expenses is made on account of the contumacy of the bad litigant, as appears from the said Leg. Properandum, and from the Doctors there. Therefore Fagundez subscribes to this, lib. 8, cap. 38, num. 31.

> Praeterea condemnatio expensarum fit propter contumaciam male litigantis, ut patet dicta Leg. Properandum, et ex Doctoribus ibi. Ideo huic subscribit Fagundez, lib. 8. cap. 38. num. 31.

8 Fagundez notes at num. 39 that no one can plead against him from whom he has received some gratuitous benefit, or a liberal donation without defect, without the sin of an ungrateful mind — not if he pleads for himself, or for father or mother, or for his own cause, or for another miserable person; otherwise the donation can be revoked. The first appears from the final cap., de postulat.; the second from the Law Papinianus, ff. de inofficioso testam, and the final cap., de donationib.

> Advertit Fagundez num. 39. non posse aliquem advocare contra eum, a quo beneficium aliquod gratuitum, vel donationem accepit liberalem sine vitio ingrati animi, non si pro se agat, vel pro Patre, vel matre, aut pro causa propria, vel alia persona miserabili, alioqui potest donatio revocari. Primum patet ex cap. finali. de postulat. Secundum ex Lege Papinianus, ff. de inofficioso testam, et cap. finali, de donationib.

9 I shall produce certain instructions for Advocates from D. Bonaventura, Lib. 1, Pharetra, cap. 26, from St. Gregory, homil. 7, in Ezech.: A just advocate in no way accepts unjust causes, nor consents to give words for injustice.

> Produciam quaedam pro Advocatis erudimenta ex D. Bonavent. Lib. 1. Pharetra, cap. 26. ex Divo Gregorio, homil. 7. in Ezech. Iustus advocatus iniustas causas nullo modo accipit, nec verba dare pro iniustitia consentit.

10 From the same, lib. 20, moral., cap. 15, on these words of Job 30: But now the younger mock me. In poverty and famine sterile, whose fathers I did not deem worthy to set with the dogs of my flock, who ate grass, and the bark of trees, and the root of junipers was their bread. The Vulgate continues: Who, snatching these things from the valleys, as soon as they had found anything, ran with a cry to them. The Hebrew: They cried out against them as against a thief.

> Ex eodem lib. 20. moral. cap. 15. ad ea verba Iob 30. Nunc autem derident me iuniores. Egestate, et fame steriles, quorum non dignabar patres ponere cum canibus gregis mei, qui mandebant herbas, et arborum cortices, et radix iuniperorum panis eorum. Pergit vulgatus: Qui de convallibus ista rapientes cum singula reperissent; ad eorum clamore currebant. Hebraeus: Clamabant contra eos, sicut furem.

11 The Vulgate continues: They dwelt in the deserts of the torrents, and in the caverns of the earth, or upon the gravel. Who rejoiced in such things, and esteemed it a delight to be under the brambles. Where the Hebrew reads: Among the shrubs they crept beneath the nettle. Where D. Gregory says: With a cry they hasten to meet whatever is found in the valley — from the occasions of causes arising, even to litigate for a wicked stock.

> Pergit vulgatus: In desertis habitabant torrentium, et in cavernis terrae, vel super glaream. Qui in huiuscemodi laetabantur, et esse sub sentibus, delicias computabant. Ubi legit Hebraeus: Inter arbusta rudebant subter urticam. Ubi D. Gregorius: In valle repertis singulis cum clamore occurrere, ex subortis causarum occasionibus, etiam pro prava stirpe litigare.

12 Now the most Excellent One SEEMS to urge Advocates to devote their aid to the poor even for a small alms, and to defend them gratis and faithfully; just as the Molossians defend the flock, and would have Mallow, their medicine, applied to their abscesses, and the nettles — that is, unpolished words — removed from them.

VIDETUR autem Excellentissimus Advocatos hortari, ut suam opem pauperibus impendant etiam pro pauca stipe, et gratis, et fideliter defendere; sicuti Molossi defendunt gregem, et Malvam pharmacum eorum apostematibus velint imponere, et urticas ab eis, inorbana scilicet verba, tollere.

13 Then the Saintly Doctor cries out with D. Bernardus, Lib. 1, de consider.: Daily the Laws clamor in the palace, but the Laws of Justinian, not of the Lord. Wherefore he urges that they meditate in the law of the Lord: for the law of the Lord is unspotted, etc. But these are not so much laws as lawsuits, and the cavillations subverting judgment are of Advocates, who have taught their tongues to speak a lie: eloquent against justice: learned for falsehood: they are wise to do evil: eloquent to assail the truth. Such must not faithful Advocates be.

CLAMAT deinde S. Doctor cum D. Bernardo Lib. 1. de consider. Quotidie perstrepant in palatio Leges, sed Iustiniani, non Domini. Quare hortatur, ut in lege Domini meditentur: Lex enim Domini immaculata, etc. Haec autem non tam leges, quam lites sunt, et cavillationes, subvertentes iudicium sunt Advocati, qui docuerunt linguas suas loqui mendacium: diserti, adversus iustitiam: eruditi, pro falsitate: sapientes sunt, ut faciant malum: eloquentes, ut impugnent verum. Tales esse non debent Advocati fideles.

14 FINALLY he admonishes from the same D. Bernardus, Lib. 3, that they appeal not without cause: Unjust (he says) is every appeal to which the want of justice has not compelled. It is lawful to appeal, not that you may oppress, but lest you be oppressed. He who appeals when not oppressed, it is clear, either intends to oppress, or to redeem time.

TANDEM monet ex eodem D. Bernardo Lib. 3. ne sine causa appellent: Iniqua: (ait) est omnis appellatio, ad quam iustitiae inopia non coegit. Appellare, non ut graves, sed ne graveris licet. Qui non gravatus appellat, liquet, quod aut gravare intendit, aut tempus redimere.

15 From what has been said, gather the four conditions of a good Advocate: the first is sufficient knowledge; the second diligence; the third truth; the fourth justice, as Fagundez also relates, loco cit., num. 34; Bassaeus a num. 3, with others.

Ex dictis collige boni Advocati conditiones quatuor: Prima est scientia sufficiens: Secunda diligentia: Tertia veritas: Quarta iustitia, ut refert etiam Fagundez loco cit. num. 34. Bassaeus a num. 3. cum aliis.

16 It is NOT lawful for an Advocate to contract with a Client for a portion of the matter in suit, Leg. si quis, Cod. de postulando, et Leg. sumptus, ff. de pactis, lest a way be opened for frauds to defeat suits. Yet it does not seem a sin, fraud removed, as Victorellus teaches, in manu; Navarrus cap. 25; Diana part. 2, tract. 2, miscell., Resol. 49; Valerius in differ. utriusque contract., diff. 3; Bassaeus num. 8. But he may contract for such a price, whether the cause be obtained or not; and then the Advocate is bound to pursue the whole cause.

NON licet Advocato pacisci cum Cliente de aliquota parte litis, si vincat Leg. si quis, Cod. de postulando, et Leg. sumptus, ff. de pactis, ne via ad lites fraudibus evincendas aperiatur. Non videtur tamen peccatum, amota fraude, ut docent Victorell. in manu. Navar. cap. 25. Diana part. 2. tract. 2. miscell. Resol. 49. Valer. in differ. utriusque contract. diff. 3. Bassaeus num. 8. Potest tamen pacisci pro tanto pretio, sive causa obtineatur, sive non: Et tunc Advocatus tenetur totam prosequi causam.

17 But if by the client's fault the cause be cut off, he is bound to pay the whole price.

Quod si clientis culpa obtruncetur causa, tenetur totum pretium erogare.

Disputation XXXII: On the Notary and the Scrivener

1 SINCE from the process of judgments, both private and public advantages are wont to accrue, either to the actor or to the commonwealth; therefore in forensic matters one must act with that caution that provision be made for future suits by the exhibition of the deeds of predecessors; wherefore all things are wont to be committed to writing. But those who are deputed to this office are, for the most part, armed rather with a lust of gain than with zeal for Justice, like the scribes of old: of whom I shall speak distinctly.

> De Notario et Tabellione.
> CUM ex Iudiciorum processu tam Privata, quam Publica commoda soleant resultare, vel actori, vel reipublicae; ideo ea cautione in rebus forensibus agendum, ut provide futuris litibus praecedentium exhibitione prospiciatur; quare omnia solent scriptis mandari. Verum qui ad hoc munus deputantur, potius, ut plurimum, lucrandi libidine, quam Iustitiae zelo, instar veterum scribarum, armantur: De quibus districtim dicam.

Sole Question: On the justice or injustice of the notary and the scrivener

1 AMONG the other persons who come together at a trial and take part in it are the Notaries and Tabellions, concerning whose creation and obligations the Jurists and the Summists differ, whom Sayrus reviews Lib. 12. cap. 15. Their principal obligation is to write and transcribe faithfully writings, instruments, testaments, proceedings, and other documents, since they act by the public authority of the Emperor, King, Republic, or Prince who creates them; therefore they must be honest persons, and for that reason one who is infamous in law or in fact cannot be a public Tabellion, per Panormitanus cap. cum dilectus. Felin. in cap. fraternitatis de baret. Alex. consil. 80. Couar. Lib. pract. qq. cap. 19. For other conditions see in those places.

> De Notarii, et Tabellionis Iustitia, vel iniustitia.
> INTER alias personas ad iudicium convenientes, atque operantes, sunt Notarii, et Tabelliones, de quorum creatione, et obligationibus differunt Iuristae, atque Summistae, quos recenset Sayrus Lib. 12. cap. 15. Eorum obligatio est praecipua, scripturas, Instrumenta, Testamenta, processus, et alia fideliter scribere, et transcribere, quippe qui publica authoritate Imperatoris, Regis, Reipublicae, vel Principis agunt, qui eos creant; ideo debent esse personae honestae, et propterea infamatus iuris, vel facti non potest esse Tabellio publicus, ex Panormitano cap. cum dilectus. Felin. in cap. fraternitatis de baret. Alex. consil. 80. Couar. Lib. pract. qq. cap. 19. Alias conditiones vide in istis.

2 SINCE, however, their justice is exceedingly necessary to the Republic, and is not always intact; therefore the laws in grave criminal cases do not commit the examination of witnesses to them alone; indeed the Judges themselves must be present, as is arranged in Authen. Apud eloquentissimum, Cod. de fide instrumentorum, et Authen. de testibus, et Cod. in causis civilibus, the same must be done, according to the text in Leg. Divus, ff. de testibus, et the Gloss on Leg. Hac consultissima, §. vult. Cod. Qui testamenta facere possint; nevertheless, on account of the many affairs by which Judges are distracted in civil cases of lesser moment, the examination of witnesses is committed to the Tabellion, an oath having first been taken before the Judge concerning the fidelity to be observed, cap. si qui testium, de testibus, cap. 2. de iudic. in 6. Leg. Ad egregias de iureiurando. Couar. Lib. 2. variarum, cap. 13. num. 10.

QUIA vero eorum Iustitia est admodum Reipublicae necessaria, nec semper integra; ideo Iura in causis criminalibus gravibus non committunt illis solis examen testium; imo ipsi Iudices debent esse praesentes, ut disponitur in Authen. Apud eloquentissimum, Cod. de fide instrumentorum, et Authen. de testibus, et Cod. in causis civilibus, idem agendum sit, iuxta text. in Leg. Divus, ff. de testibus, et Glossam in Leg. Hac consultissima, §. vult. Cod. Qui testamenta facere possint; tamen ob plurima negotia, quibus distrahentur Iudices in causis civilibus minoris momenti, committitur Tabellioni examen testium, praestito prius iuramento apud Iudicem, de fidelitate servanda cap. si qui testium, de testibus, cap. 2. de iudic. in 6. Leg. Ad egregias de iureiurando. Couar. Lib. 2. variarum, cap. 13. num. 10.

3 EXCELLENT was the law of the Athenians reported by Postellus de magistratibus Athenis, cap. 26. which had appointed six men as assistants to the Notaries and Tabellions, so that they might watch whether these men added or omitted anything. At least they ought to appoint someone. For men of that kind are of great authority.

OPTIMA erat Lex Atheniensium apud Postellum de magistratibus Athenis, cap. 26. quae sex viros destinaverat assistentes Notariis, et Tabellionibus, ut adverterent, an aliquid isti adderent, vel omitterent. Saltem deberent aliquem apponere. Enim vero magnae sunt authoritatis.

4 IT IS DISPUTED here: what number of witnesses, at a minimum, can prevail against a Tabellion.

DISPUTANT hic; quot numero testes praevalere possint contra Tabellionem.

5 IT IS CERTAIN that he, as a public person, prevails over one witness, even one swearing an oath, that the writing is not true, Leg. si quis decurio, Cod. de falsis, cap. ad audientiam, de praescrip.

CERTUM est, eum, ut personam publicam, uni testi, etiam iuranti, non esse scriptum verum, praevalere, Leg. si quis decurio, Cod. de falsis, cap. ad audientiam, de praescrip.

6 MANY say that two witnesses, above every exception, prevail. Others say three are required. See Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 44. Couarruvias L. 2. var. cap. 13. who seems to distinguish well: two witnesses suffice, if they are of those who appear in the writing.

MULTI dicunt, duos testes, omni exceptione maiores, praevalere. Alii dicunt, requiri tres. Vide Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 44. Couarruviam L. 2. var. cap. 13. qui bene videtur distinguere; sufficere duos testes, si sint ex iis, qui in scriptura extant.

7 THEY INQUIRE here: whether they, making false writings, or falsifying, or erasing something, are bound to restitution, as for a mortal sin committed against Justice.

QUAERUNT hic: an teneantur, falsas scripturas conficientes, vel falsificantes, vel aliquid eradentes, restitutioni, tanquam peccati mortalis Rei contra Iustitiam.

8 ALL ASSERT so, with St. Bonaventure in speculo animae, cap. 2. per Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 44. numero 6. et other places, and Sayrus Lib. 21. cap. 15. numero 12. Nor does it suffice that he not make false instruments; he must also not do forbidden things; such as a usurious instrument, or one against Ecclesiastical immunity.

ASSERUNT omnes cum D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 2. apud Fagundez Lib. 8. cap. 44. numero 6. et aliis locis, et Sayrus Lib. 21. cap. 15. numero 12. Neque sufficit, ut non conficiat Instrumenta falsa, sed neque debet vetita facere; ut instrumentum usurarium, vel contra Ecclesiasticam immunitatem.

9 FURTHERMORE, one who draws up a nuncupative testament for someone not of sound mind sins, and is bound to restore to the legitimate heirs, if he does this knowingly. Navar. man. cap. 25. num. 54. Baldus on Leg. Cod. de Sacros. Eccles. num. 71. says likewise, even if, corrupted by a price, he induces the testator to institute as heir someone other than the one the testator himself wished, he is bound to restitution. D. Antonin. 3. part. tit. 6. cap. 3. §. ult. Toletus l. 5. cap. 61. Sayrus num. 15.

> PRAETEREA conficiens testamentum nuncupativum alicuius non sanae mentis, peccat, et tenetur restituere legitimis haeredibus, si hoc scienter faciat. Navar. man. cap. 25. num. 54. Baldus in Leg. Cod. de Sacros. Eccles. num. 71. sic, etiam si pretio corruptus inducat testatorem, instituere haeredem alium ab illo, quem ipse volebat, tenetur restitutioni. D. Antonin. 3. part. tit. 6. cap. 3. §. ult. Toletus l. 5. cap. 61. Sayrus num. 15.

10 He must also take care not to exact a price exceeding the norm. Then, not to exact a price for a thing for which no price is to be paid, such as for Ordinations, for Dimissories, or testimonials, if he has a salary; but if he has none, he cannot receive for individual dimissories or testimonials more than a tenth part of one gold piece, from the Council of Trent session 21. de reform. cap. 1.

> Cavere etiam debet, ne pretium excedens exigat. Deinde ne pretium exigat pro re, pro qua nullum pretium exhibendum, ut pro Ordinibus, pro Dimissoriis, aut testimonialibus, si habet salarium; sed si non habet, non potest recipere pro singulis dimissoriis, vel testimonialibus ultra decimam partem unius aurei, ex Concilio Tridentino sessione 21. de reform. cap. 1.

11 Likewise, not to receive gifts and prices beyond the salary, if he obtains it. Of these things something has already been said above.

> Similiter ne munera, et pretia recipiat super salarium, si illud obtinent. De his iam dictum est supra.

12 Moreover, the Notary must abstain from drawing up public instruments which demand a longer time on the more solemn days, on which the people are bound to be free for God; especially if they are contracts serving commerce. For this is gathered from cap. 1. de feriis; moreover this is provided in various places by Synodal decrees, as Bonalis notes in his Theologia morali, written in French, tom. 1. tract. 7. sect. 2. and he cites Suarez, Filliucius, and several others, in Bonacina disp. 5. quaest. unica, part. 2. num. 10. He excepts, however, the custom of the place, known and permitted to the Prelates, as also public necessity, to which you may add even private piety, as when it is done in favor of some poor person.

> Praeterea debet Notarius abstinere a conficiendis Instrumentis publicis, quae longius tempus expostulant, diebus sollemnioribus, quibus tenetur populus Deo vacare; praesertim si sint contractus commerciis inservientes, Hoc enim colligitur e cap. 1. de feriis; insuper id variis in locis cautum est Synodalibus decretis, ut notat Bonalis in sua Theologia morali, gallice contexta tom. 1. tract. 7. sect. 2. citatque Suarez, Filliucium, aliosque plures in Bonacina disp. 5. quaest. unica, part. 2. num. 10. Excipit tamen loci consuetudinem, Praelatis notam et permissam, sicut et publicam necessitatem, quibus potes adiicere privatam etiam pietatem, ut in favorem alicuius inopis fiat.

13 Finally the Notary must take care not to knowingly serve in writing usurious contracts; for by these he violates the oath he would take when called to his office; yet he is not bound to restore anything, since he received nothing by reason of usury. If, however, the debtor, compelled by force, binds himself to the Creditor by a usurious contract, and this becomes known to the Notary; he is bound, as Bonalis says ubi supra tract. 17. lect. 77., to restitution, since he cooperated in that wickedness, from which by reason of his office he ought to have abstained entirely.

Denique cavere debet Notarius, ne contractibus usurariis scribendis scienter inserviat; his enim violat Iuramentum, quod praestabat, cum ad suum officium vocaretur; ad nihil tamen restituendum obligatur, cum nil ratione usurae receperit. Si tamen vi compulsus debitor obligat se Creditori per contractum usurarium, idque Notario innotescat; tenetur eum ait Bonalis ubi supra tract. 17. lect. 77. ad restituendum, cum ad illud nefas sit cooperatus; a quo ratione sui officii debetet prorsus abstinere.

Disputation XXXIII: On Contumely

1 Hitherto I have discussed the various ways in which the neighbor is wounded in the goods of the body, and by which the injurer is bound to repair the damage inflicted; now I shall treat of some things which pertain to damage to the soul, reputation, or honor; among which contumely first presents itself, whose nature, after I have described it, I shall then explain how a Christian man ought rather to bear it than to return it.

> De Contumelia.
> Hactenus varios discussi modos, quibus proximus in bonis corporis laeditur, quibusque iniurians tenetur damnum illatum resarcire: iam aliqua disseram, quae ad damnum animae, famae, vel honoris spectant; inter quae primo occurrit contumelia, cuius naturam postquam descripsero; dicam quomodo homo Christianus debeat eam potius ferre, quam referre.

Question I: What contumely is, and whence it arises

1 Contumely is defined by St. Bonaventure in the little opuscule Declaratorio terminorum Theologiae, about the middle: Contumely is the will that avenges itself by the reproach of evils.

> Quid sit Contumelia, et unde oriatur.
> Definitur contumelia a D. Bonavent. opusculo Declaratorio terminorum Theologiae, circa medium. Contumelia est voluntas vindicans per exprobrationem malorum.

2 And in the speculum animae, cap. 1. at the end: Contumely is the casting up of a crime committed.

> Et in speculo animae, cap. 1. ad finem: Contumelia est obiectio criminis perpetrati.

3 The Seraphic Doctor, moreover, admonishes that Contumely proceeds from anger, whence it is called Contumelia, as it were contumens through the irascibility of the soul, as St. Isidore says l. 10. Ethymol. cap. 3.; or from contemning, as Ulpian says, Lege 1. ff. de Iniuriis.

> Admonet autem S. Doctor, Contumeliam ex ira procedere, unde dicitur Contumelia, quasi contumens per iracundiam animi, ut ait D. Isidorus l. 10. Ethymol. cap. 3. sive a contemnendo, ut ait Ulpianus Lege 1. ff. de Iniuriis.

4 It is also described by Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 16. puncto 1. by Sylvester, and other Summists, with the word Contumelia, by Soto Lib. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 9. art. 1. Navar. in manu. cap. 18. num. 10.: it is an angry expression of a thing, done against someone's honor.

> Describitur etiam a Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 16. puncto 1. Sylvestro, et aliis Summistis, verbo Contumelia, Soto Lib. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 9. art. 1. Navar. in manu. cap. 18. num. 10. est iracunda expressio rei, contra honorem facta alicui.

5 Or it is a saying, or doing, by which in the presence of someone we wound and violate his honor, as Fagundez says in the eighth precept, lib. 8. cap. 1. num. 3.

> Seu est dictum, vel factum, quo in praesentia alicuius honorem eius laedimus, et violamus, ut ait Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, lib. 8. cap. 1. num. 3.

6 It must be noted first, that honor is the exhibition of reverence in sign of some excellence, or virtue, as the Seraphic Doctor teaches in the Compendio Theologiae, lib. 5. cap. 63. and in the speculo disciplinae ad Novitios, part. 1. cap. 6. and Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 34. and on 12. Luke at those words, Honorificabis eum Pater meus, and in 3. dist. 9. art. 1. quaest. 4. in the body, where he establishes a twofold honor.

> Notandum primo, honorem esse exhibitionem reverentiae in signum alicuius excellentiae, seu virtutis, ut docet S. Doctor in Compendio Theologiae, lib. 5. cap. 63. et in speculo disciplinae ad Novitios, part. 1. cap. 6. et Lib. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 34. et in 12. Lucae ad ea verba, Honorificabis eum Pater meus*, et in 3. dist. 9. art. 1. quaest. 4. in corpore, ubi duplicem constituit honorem.*

7 For honor is shown to someone in a twofold manner; sometimes as an act of obedience of reverence; and that is the honor of veneration; sometimes in testimony of virtue, and a service of complaisance, and that is the honor of adoration. The same also St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 103. art. 1. ad 2. and the Thomists there define honor: It is a certain testification of another's good opinion and excellence, made by words or external signs; by words indeed, as when one honorably addresses someone by calling him prudent, wise, endowed with virtue: by signs, as by submission of body, inclination of the head, etc., as St. Bonaventure teaches in the places cited; and concerning this Aristotle says in the first book of the Ethics: Honor is the exhibition of reverence in testimony of virtue; yet by the name of virtue is understood some excellence of superiority with respect to others, which we recognize in another, such as nobility, etc.

> Duplici enim modo exhibetur alicui honor; aliquando in obsequium reverentiae; et iste est honor venerationis; aliquando in testimonium virtutis, et famulatum complacentiae, et iste est honor adorationis. Idem etiam D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 103. art. 1. ad 2. et Thomistae ibi definiunt honorem: Est testificatio quaedam bonae opinionis, et excellentiae alterius, verbis, vel signis externis facta; Verbis sane, ut cum aliquem honorifice compellat vocando eum prudentem, sapientem, virtute praeditum: Signis, ut corporis submissione, capitis inclinatione, etc. ut docet D. Bonavent. allatis locis; et de hoc ait Aristoteles primo Ethicae: Honor est exhibitio reverentiae in testimonium virtutis; nomine tamen virtutis intelligitur excellentia aliqua superioritatis respectu aliorum, quam in alio recognoscimus, ut nobilitatis, etc.

8 It must be noted second, that expression among men is made first by words; then by deeds, as St. Augustine teaches lib. 2. de doctrina Christiana; for words are the indications of those conceptions which we have in the mind, as Aristotle says in the first Periherm. cap. 1. and St. Bonavent. in primo, dist. 27. part. 2. quaest. 4.

> Notandum secundo, expressionem inter homines, primo fieri verbis; deinde factis, ut docent D. Augustinus lib. 2. de doctrina Christiana, sunt enim verba indicia eorum conceptuum, quos in animo habemus, ut ait Aristoteles primo Periherm. cap. 1. et D. Bonavent. in primo, dist. 27. part. 2. quaest. 4.

9 Now therefore contumely is made chiefly in words, as the Seraphic Doctor proves in the place cited, Pharetrae de convitiatione, cap. 3. from the Fathers.

> Iam igitur contumelia praecipue in verbis fit, ut probat S. Doctor loco cit. Pharetrae de convitiatione, cap. 3. ex Patribus.

10 St. Gregory Lib. 8. moral. cap. 23.: Often the wicked, while ignorant of the vice of their own fortitude, boldly lacerate the rectitude of others: and thence against the good they seize for themselves the authority of rebuke, or they bring forward those good things which they learned not by seeing, but by hearing, or they mendaciously ingratiate into others those evils which they themselves committed, and Lib. 5. cap. 8. moral.: Often those who are in power burst forth everywhere into contumelies against their subjects, and those who, vigilant in their governance, serve well, they lose through the wantonness of the tongue, weighing the words of a judge, puny of rectitude as it were; he who shall have called his brother fool without cause, casts himself into the fires of gehenna.

> D. Gregorius Lib. 8. moral. cap. 23. Saepe pravi, dum suae vitium fortitudinis ignorant, audenter aliorum rectitudinem lacerant: indeque contra bonos sibi authoritatem increpationis arripiunt, aut ea bona proferunt, quae non videndo, sed audiendo didicerunt, aut ea mala ab aliis mentientes ingerunt, quae ipsi commiserunt, et Lib. 5. cap. 8. moral. Saepe qui in potestate sunt, ad subditorum passim contumelias erumpunt, et hoc, quod invigilantes regimini serviunt, per linguae procacitatem perdunt, mangri scilicet rectitudine verba iudicis pensantes; qui sine causa fratrem fatuum dixerit, gehennae se ignibus adiicit.

11 St. JOHN Chrysost. lib. 1. de compunctione cordis before the middle: Whoever shall have called his brother fool, or vain, or a Robber, or shall have inflicted an injury, or a curse, upon him by any other name whatsoever; by each of these terms, under the title of a curse, he is condemned to the punishments of the fire of gehenna.

> D. IOANNES Chrysost. lib. 1. de compunctione cordis ante medium: Sine fatuum quis dixerit, sive vanum, sive Latronem, sive quolibet alio nomine iniuriam, vel maledictum fratri ingesserit; ex quolibet horum vocabulo sub maledicti titulo, gehennae ignis suppliciis condemnatur.

12 St. AUGUSTINE rule 3. cap. 38. Whoever shall have wounded anyone with a reproach, or a curse, or even a casting up of a crime, let him remember to cure as quickly as possible by satisfaction what he did: And he who was wounded, to let it go without disputation: But if they wounded each other, they will owe to relax the debts mutually owed to one another.

> D. AUGUSTINUS regula 3. cap. 38. Quicunque convitio, vel maledicto, vel etiam criminis obiectum aliquem laeserit, meminerit satisfactione quamcitius curare quod fecit: Et ille, qui laesus est, sine disceptatione dimittere: Si autem invicem se laeserunt, invicem sibi debita relaxare debebunt.

13 St. JEROME epistola 1. ad Heliodorum: Nor let anyone applaud himself on the chastity of his body, since for an idle word, whatever men have spoken, they shall render an account of it on the day of judgment; since a reproach against a brother is even a guilt of homicide.

> D. HIERONYMUS epistola 1. ad Heliodorum: Nec sibi quisquam de corporis castitate supplaudat, cum de verbo otioso, quodcumque locuti fuerint homines, reddituri sint pro eo rationem in die iudicii; cum etiam homicidii sit reatus convicium in fratrem.

14 THEREFORE from these I deduce that contumely, by genus, is a mortal sin; for it takes away immediately the honor owed, which is a grave injustice, taking away a thing esteemed at a great price.

> IGITUR ex his deduco, contumeliam ex genere esse peccatum mortale; aufert enim immediate honorem debitum, quae est gravis iniustitia, auferens rem magno pretio aestimabilem.

15 MOREOVER, because contumely wounds a man's honor in his face, or while present, or as it were present before others; while detraction wounds the good reputation of one absent; contumely is the graver, the more so because reputation is ordered to honor, as to an end. That it is lethal the Seraphic Doctor proves cap. 1. Speculi animae, not from Diana, or Bonacina, but from the mouth of Christ, Matth. 5. Whoever shall have said to his brother, fool: he shall be guilty of the fire of gehenna.

INSUPER, quia contumelia hominis honorem laedit in facie, vel praesentem, vel tanquam praesentem coram aliis; detractio vero bonam famam absentis; gravior est contumelia, eo magis, quia fama ordinatur ad honorem, tanquam finem. Esse vero lethale probat S. Doctor cap. 1. Speculi animae, non ex Diana, aut Bonacina, sed ex ore Christi, Matth. 5. Qui dixerit fratri suo, fatue: reus erit gehennae ignis.

16 The Seraphic Doctor, moreover, OBSERVES that, since words are signs of the intellects, per Aristotle in the first Perhierm. cap. 1., great consideration must be given to the mind with which the words are spoken.

OBSERVAT autem S. Doctor, quod cum verba sint signa intellectuum ex Aristotele primo Perhierm. cap. 1. multum considerandum est, quo animo verba dicantur.

17 IT HAPPENS, however (he says), that such words are spoken from indiscreet zeal, or from a certain surreption, and a sudden movement of anger, and then it would not be to be judged mortal, unless the excess were so great, and the words so disordered, that someone by such contumely would incur manifest defamation: For then the zeal of justice would in no way excuse him from sinning mortally; as if someone should kill another in play. But when one says to another a reproach, or contumely, or taunt, intending the confusion and dishonor of the neighbor, then he acts against the charity of the neighbor, and sins mortally, and thus is understood the word of the Lord, saying Matth. 5. Whoever shall have said to his brother, fool: he shall be guilty of the fire of gehenna.

CONTINGIT autem (ait) talia verba dici ex indiscreto Zelo, vel ex quadam subreptione, et subito motu irae, et tunc non esset iudicandum mortale, nisi tantus esset excessus, et verba inordinata quod aliquis per talem contumeliam incurreret in diffamationem manifeste: Tunc enim Zelus iustitiae nullatenus excusaret, quin peccaret mortaliter; sicut si aliquis aliquem ludendo interficeret. Cum autem quis alteri convitium, vel contumeliam, vel improperium dicit ad proximi confusionem, et dehonorationem intendens, tunc agitur contra charitatem proximi, et peccat mortaliter, et sic intelligitur verbum Domini, dicentis Matth. 5. Qui dixerit fratri suo, fatue: reus erit gehennae ignis.

18 HENCE also it comes about that, since reputation and honor are better goods than riches, and than the other external and temporal goods, which are subject to theft, according to that word proverbiorum 22. A good name is better than great riches, it is inferred that contumely and detraction are a greater sin than theft, as St. Thom. teaches 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 3. ad 2. and St. Bonav. in Speculo animae, cap. 3. argues.

HINC etiam fit, ut cum fama, et honor sint potiora bona, quam divitiae, et quam alia bona externa, et temporalia, quae furto obnoxia sunt, iuxta id proverbiorum 22. Melius est nomen bonum, quam divitiae multae, infertur, maius esse peccatum contumeliam, et detractionem, quam furtum, ut docet D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 3. ad 2. et D. Bonav. in Speculo animae, cap. 3. arguit.

19 YET it is a lesser sin than homicide; for life is a greater good than honor and reputation; since these are reparable goods, and that irreparable.

EST tamen minus peccatum, quam homicidium; est enim maius bonum vitae, quam honoris, et famae; cum haec sint bona reparabilia, et illud irreparabile.

20 It is a lesser sin also than adultery, because this is against the order of the human species in the order to human generation, through which entrance is given to eternal life.

EST minus peccatum etiam adulterio, quia hoc est contra ordinem speciei humanae in ordine ad generationem humanam, per quam datur introitus ad vitam aeternam.

21 THUS entirely do they hold, with St. Bonaventure, St. Thomas quaest. 23. art. 1. 2. et 3. Cajetan there, Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 9. art. 1. Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. et contum. dub. 3. num. 11. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 1. num. 12. and the rest.

> SIC omnino de his sentiunt cum D. Bonavent. D. Thomas quaest. 23. art. 1. 2. et 3. Caietanus ibi, Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 9. art. 1. Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. et contum. dub. 3. num. 11. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 1. num. 12. et reliqui.

22 ADVERT that not rarely contumelies, materially grave, are formally venial, if the gravity is not intended and adverted to, or because they are not credited, being ascribed to levity: Such occur among boys and little women.

> ADVERTE non raro contumelias, materialiter graves, esse formaliter veniales, si non intenditur, et advertitur gravitas, vel quia leuitati adscriptae, non sunt creditae: Tales occurrunt inter pueros, et mulierculas.

23 NOTE also, that contumelies in those who are proud in the spirit of correcting are not sins. So Valent. disput. 5. quaest. 16. p. 2. Molin. disp. 18. Clau. Reg. l. 12. cap. 4. Bonac. de rest. disp. 2. quaest. 5. q. 1. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 2. Yet Bast. num. 3. admonishes that Prelates proceed cautiously, modestly, compelled by necessity, for the profit, and because usually such reproaches are false, and do not help, but exasperate; he exhorts that they abstain from these, with Navar. Man. cap. 18. Rodriq. t. 2. qq. 41. art. 2.

> NOTA etiam, contumelias in superbientibus animo corripiendi non esse culpas. Ita Valent. disput. 5. quaest. 16. p. 2. Molin. disp. 18. Clau. Reg. l. 12. cap. 4. Bonac. de rest. disp. 2. quaest. 5. q. 1. Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 2. Monet tamen Bast. num. 3. ut Praelati caute incedant modeste ex necessitate coacti ad profectum, et quia plerumque sunt ira falsae, et non iuvant, sed exasperant, hortatur ut ab his abstineant, cum Navar. Man. cap. 18. Rodriq. t. 2. qq. 41. art. 2.

24 CONTUMELIES, however, are of the same species; for they agree in the formal reason of taking away honor unjustly, as Sà says v. Contum. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 1. Azor. 3. p. l. 13. cap. 5. Sotus de iust. l. 3. quaest. 9. art. 1. Molin. t. 4. disp. 21. Reginald. l. 24. num. 102. Fillic. tract. 40. quaest. 6. Bast. num. 4. with St. Bonav. locis cit. Yet it can be so exceeded that it is necessary to confess its gravity, as if you call someone a heretic, a traitor, or a Sodomite.

> CONTUMELIAE autem sunt eiusdem speciei; conveniunt enim in ratione formali auferendi honorem iniuste, ut aiunt Sà v. Contum. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 1. Azor. 3. p. l. 13. cap. 5. Sotus de iust. l. 3. quaest. 9. art. 1. Molin. t. 4. disp. 21. Reginald. l. 24. num. 102. Fillic. tract. 40. quaest. 6. Bast. num. 4. cum D. Bonau. locis cit. Potest vero ita excedi, ut sit necesse confiteri eius gravitatem, ut si aliquem haereticum, proditorem, vel Sodomitam voces.

25 IF the contumely is inflicted upon parents, it has a special malice to be expressed in confession. Diana p. 1. tract. 7. Resol. 29. He cites Soto, and Reginaldus for this opinion, but he himself dissents.

> SI contumelia inferatur parentibus, habet specialem malitiam in confessione exprimendam. Diana p. 1. tract. 7. Resol. 29. Sotum, et Reginaldum pro hac sententia recitat, sed ipse dissentit.

Question II: How a Christian ought to conduct himself when assailed by contumelies

1 IT IS CERTAIN that a Christian is bound to have his soul prepared for bearing insults.

> Quomodo Christianum oporteat se gerere contumeliis lacessitum.

CERTUM est, teneri Christianum animo praeparato esse ad ferendas contumelias.

[2] It is PROVED by D. Bonaventure, first sermon 3. on the Holy Apostles, from that axiom of D. Gregory, l. 1. of the Dialogues, chapter 5: Of what sort each one lies hidden within himself, the insult offered proves. Hence also those Politicians, in order to test whether Christ was just, used to say, Wis. 2: Let us examine him by insult: Hebraeus Lapide Lydio. For thus gold is proved by fire, and the just man by insults, as the Holy Doctor elegantly expounds in his 2. on Wisdom, on the passage cited.

PROBATUR a D. Bonau. primo serm. 3. de SS. Apostolis ex illo axiomate D. Gregorii l. 1. Dialogorum, cap. 5. Qualis unusquisque apud se lateat, illata contumelia probat. Unde et Politici illi, ut experirentur, an Christus esset iustus, dicebant, Sap. 2. Contumelia interrogemus eum: Hebraeus Lapide Lydio. Sic enim igne probatur aurum, et contumeliis iustus, ut eleganter edisserit S. Doctor 2. Sapientiae ad locum allatum.

[3] It is PROVED especially by D. Bonaventure on 22. Luke, on those words: And he that hath no sword, let him sell his cloak and buy one. And on 19. John, on those words: Why strikest thou me? For this preparation of soul is necessary, according to the exposition of D. Augustine, epistle 5. to Marcellinus, and tractate 113. on John, on those words of Matthew 5: If anyone strike thee on one cheek, turn to him also the other. And according to the exposition of D. Ambrose, l. 10. on Luke, on those words of Luke 22., where he says: O Lord, why dost thou command me to buy a sword, which thou forbiddest to be drawn? Put up thy sword into its sheath. If one strike thee on one cheek, offer him the other? so that defense may be ready, not vengeance necessary, and it may be seen that he could have avenged the injury, but would not.

PROBATUR praecipue a D. Bonau. ad 22. Lucae in ea verba: Et emat gladium. Et ad 19. Ioan. ad ea verba: Quid me caedis? Est enim praeparatio haec animi necessaria, iuxta expositionem D. August. epist. 5. ad Marcellum, et tract. 113. in Ioan. illorum verborum Matth. 5. Si quis te percusserit in una maxilla, praebe illi et alteram. Et iuxta expositionem D. Ambrosii l. 10. in Lucam ad ea verba Lucae 22. ubi ait: O Domine, cur iubes, me emere gladium, quem vetas promi? mitte gladium tuum in vaginam. Qui te percusserit in maxillam unam, praebe illi et alteram? ut sit parata defensio, non ultio necessaria, et videatur potuisse vindicare iniuriam, sed noluisse.

[4] This preparation of soul is commanded by Christ under an affirmative precept; but an affirmative precept does not bind for always: therefore one is not always bound in fact to endure, but when reason requires it; and hence we may at times lawfully repel insults for our just defense. The Holy Doctor proves this by the example of Christ, who did not offer the other cheek, but answered: If I have spoken ill, give testimony of the evil: but if well, why strikest thou me? He confirms it by the example of Paul, Acts 23., who, struck on the cheek, answered: God shall strike thee, thou whited wall.

HAEC autem praeparatio animi praecepto affirmativo imperatur a Christo; hoc quidem non obligat pro semper: Ergo non semper tenetur re ipsa sustinere, sed cum ratio postulauerit; atque adeo licite possumus aliquando contumelias propellere ad nostram iustam defensionem. Hoc probat S. Doctor exemplo Christi, qui alteram maxillam non praebuit, sed respondit: Si male locutus sum, testimonium perhibe de malo: si autem bene, quid me caedis? Confirmat exemplo Pauli Actorum 23. qui percussus in maxilla, respondit: Deus te percutiat paries dealbate.

[5] And with the Seraphic Doctor concur D. Thomas, question 72. article 4. Sotus, loc. cit. article 3. Sayrus, l. 4. chapter 4. number 11. Filliucius, tom. 2. tract. 40. on the eighth commandment, chapter 3. number 55. Fagundez, l. 8. chapter 2. on the eighth Commandment, Valencia, disp. 5. question 16. part 3. and others.

Et ita cum Seraphico sentiunt D. Thom. quaest. 72. art. 4. Sotus loc. cit. art. 3. Sayrus l. 4. cap. 4. num. 11. Filliuc. tom. 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 3. num. 55. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 2. in octavum Praeceptum, Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 16. puncto 3. et alii.

6 Here indeed many open ample ways for presumptuous defenses, against the Christian profession; against whom I have said something in my disputation on Homicide. And so the opinion of Diana, p. 1. tract. 15. resolution 15. Navarrus in his Manual, chapter 14. Peter Navarrus, de restitutione l. 2. chapter 5. number 83. Victoria, on the law of war, question 2. number 5. Henriquez, l. 14. chapter 10. number 3. in the Gloss, letter T., where he cites Corduba, Mantius, Pegna, and finally Fernandez in his Exam. p. 1. chapter 9. §. 1. number 16., that one may, gravely provoked in his feelings, pursue a fleeing man and kill him, if the killing is apt for reparation of the insult — is in no way proved to me. But more displeasing still is the opinion of the same Diana, who says there that the same may be done even before the insult is received, while it impends; against whom Megala, p. 2. l. 3. chapter 1. number 12. Lopez in his Instruct. p. 1. chapter 62., which opinion Azorius did not wholly reject, p. 3. l. 2. chapter 1. question 13.

Hic vero multi vias amplas praesumptis aperiunt defensionibus, contra Christianam professionem, contra quos aliqua dixi disputatione de Homicidio. Itaque nullo modo mihi probatur opinio Dianae p. 1. tract. 15. resol. 15. Nauar. in Manuali, cap. 14. Petri Nauar. de restit. l. 2. cap. 5. num. 83. Victoriae de iure belli quaest. 2. num. 5. Henriquez l. 14. cap. 10. num. 3. in Glossa littera T. ubi citat Cordubam, Mantium, Pegnam, tandem Fernandez in Exam. p. 1. cap. 9. §. 1. num. 16. posse aliquem, gravi affectum contumelia, insequi fugientem, et occidere, si ad reparationem contumeliae sit occisio apta. Magis vero displicet opinio eiusdem Dianae, ibi dicentis, idem posse fieri etiam ante acceptam contumeliam, ea imminente; cum Megala p. 2. l. 3. cap. 1. num. 12. Lopez in suo Instruct. p. 1. cap. 62. quam non reptobat omnino Azor. p. 3. l. 2. cap. 1. quaestio 13.

7 To me indeed that sentence is most certain which holds this not lawful, even though, with metaphysical abstractions of intention, they would lick into shape that bloody and Turkish defense of one intending defense, not vengeance.

Mihi sane ea sententia certissima est, id non licere, etiamsi Metaphysicis abstractionibus intentionis, volentis defensionem, non vindictam; sanguinolentam istam, ac Turciam defensionem clambicent.

8 Therefore I assert, with Juan de la Cruz in his direct. p. 1. precept 5. doubt 6. Tanner, disp. 4. question 8. number 73. Toledo, l. 2. chapter 6. number 16. Rodriguez, l. 1. chapter 135. number 11. Tutriano, 2. 2. T. 2. disp. 27. dub. 3. Bass., s.v. Contumelia, number 8. who cite Bannes, Atag[ue], Sotus, Sal[on]io, 2. 2. question 64. article 7. controversy 1. Malderus, 2. 2. tract. 5. chapter 1. dub. 14., that this is in no way lawful. Nor do I admit even a speculative probability, granted by Lessius, l. 2. chapter 9. disp. 12. number 8. Reginaldus, T. 2. l. 21. chapter 5. number 63. Filliucius, tome 2. tract. 29. chapter 3. number 51. Bonacina, de contractibus disp. 2. last question, sect. 1. p. 10. number 8.

Igitur assero cum Ioanne Cruz in direct. p. 1. praecept. 5. dub. 6. Tannero disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 73. Toleto l. 2. cap. 6. num. 16. Rodriquez l. 1. cap. 135. num. 11. Tutriano 2. 2. T. 2. disp. 27. dub. 3. Bass. verb. Contumelia, num. 8. qui citant Bannes, Atag. Sotum, Salonio 2. 2. quaest. 64. art. 7. controv. 1. Maldeto 2. 2. tract. 5. cap. 1. dub. 14. nullo modo id licere. Neque ullam speculativam etiam probabilitatem admitto, concessam a Lessio l. 2. cap. 9. disp. 12. num. 8. Reginald. T. 2. l. 21. cap. 5. num. 63. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 29. cap. 3. num. 51. Bonac. de contract. disp. 2. quaest. ult. sect. 1. p. 10. num. 8.

9 The reason is, because the command of the Lord, Matthew 5., obliges us at least to abstain from vengeance; but to pursue a fleeing man would not be defense, since he had already ceased from offense, but is evident vengeance.

Ratio est, quia praeceptum Domini Matth. 5. cogit saltem a vindicta abstinere; at insequi fugientem non esset defensio, cum iam cessasset ab offensione, sed est ultio evidens.

10 Next, private vengeance is not lawful; otherwise judges would be cast down from their tribunals; the tribunals would be overturned. But who will believe that you sought to restore your honor in a Christian manner by mere defense, if you kill a man while he flees? You say that honor still remains with you, which in the act he takes away; just as one may pursue and kill a thief, if he carries off my goods, so also this man.

Deinde ultio privata non licet, alioqui deturbentur e tribunalibus iudices; tribunalia evertantur. Ecquis autem credet, ut tibi honorem Christianum redintegrent, te id mera defensione patrasse? Hominem occidere fugientem? Dicis habere tecum honorem adhuc, quem in actu aufert; sicuti licet insequi furem, et occidere; si bona mea aufert, ita et hunc.

11 I should like to know how he takes away honor in act, while he withdraws from offense — nay, even if he does not flee, while he ceases from insults? That doctrine is indeed pernicious, not only for the Christian, but for the Political commonwealth also, as Megala deeply cries out. To this also recur the arguments adduced for this opinion in tom. 4. disp. 17. question 10. sect. 2., where whatever the adversaries bring forward for themselves is refuted by the decree of Alexander VII. in the year 1665.

Vellem scire, quomodo actu auferat honorem, dum recedit ab offensione, imo etsi non fugit, dum cessat a contumeliis? Illa sane doctrina perniciosa est, non modo Christianae, sed Politicae etiam Reipublicae, ut alte conclamat Megala: Huc etiam recurrunt Argumenta pro hac sententia allata tom. 4. disp. 17. quaest. 10. sect. 2. ubi quidquid adversarii pro se referunt, refellitur decreto Alex. VII. anno 1665.

12 And so neither is it lawful for a man of honor to kill an assailant who endeavors to thrust at him a stick, or a slap, that dishonor may be inflicted, if it cannot otherwise be avoided. So Tanner, number 74, against Lessius, chapter 9. number 12., who alleged others. He adds that neither is it lawful to kill one striking with a stick.

Itaque neque licet viro honorato occidere invasorem, qui fustem, vel alapam nititur impingere, ut ignominiam inferatur, si aliter vitari nequit. Ita Tanner. num. 74. cont. Less. cap. 9. num. 12. allegantem alios. Addit nec licere, baculo percutientem, occidere.

13 But I take up the reasoning of Diana: Defense is to check the aggressor and to prevent an imminent damage, or, if it has been inflicted, it remains in suspense. Now it remains as long as there is an incontinent return of the blow, but not after the enemy has withdrawn to his house. I should like to see the principles neatly established for the coming-to-be of this restoration of honor, lasting only through incontinence; for the privation of honor arises from the injury received, and always remains: therefore even after the offender has withdrawn into his house, it still remains, and consequently can be recovered.

Sed assumo rationem Dianae: Defensio est aggressorem compescere, et impedire damnum imminens, vel si allatum est, in suspenso manet. Sic autem manet, quamdiu fit incontinenter redditio vulneris, non autem postquam inimicus domum se recepit. Vellem scite principia in fieri huius reproductionis honoris, solo incontinenti durantis; nam privatio honoris est a recepta iniuria, et semper manet: Ergo etiam postquam se in domum recepit offensor, adhuc manet, et consequenter poterit recuperari.

14 I do not, however, hold with Fagundez, number 2., that one may repel an insult by due moderation, as if one who calls me a robber may call him a liar; yet he may not on that account cry out with "Ass" epithets[1], and to strike back one striking is not lawful; nor to strike one reviling, for this would already be to avenge an injury, not to repel it, as the learned Sotus also duly notes, l. 5. on Justice, question 9. article 3. §. Hoc tamen. By similar reasoning it is lawful to say to the insolent one: thou liest, as Aragon. asserts, 2. 2. question 70. article 3. Sà, s.v. infamare Clavis Reg. l. 12. chapter 4. Bassaeus, s.v. Contum. 8. For the insult must be rejected as false out of malice; therefore it does not suffice to say: thou deceivest, as Pasqualigo says, decis. 437. Diana, p. 6. tract. 6. Resol. 16. Pasqualigo adds, decis. 439. and Hurtado, t. 2. disp. 170 sect. 3., and Bannes, as cited by Bassaeus, that it may be so said, even though a true crime is objected.

[1] N. Editor's note: the print reads 'non licebit tamen eum alioqui Assaffinum reclamare'; 'Assaffinum' is a print/OCR corruption, rendered as 'cry out with "Ass" epithets' (probably 'Assassinum', 'call him an assassin'). 'licetbit' in the first transcription is 'licebit' in the print.

> Non tenuo tamen cum Fagundez num. 2. licere contumeliam moderamine debito propellere, ut si me latronem inclamat, eum dicam mendacem; non licebit tamen eum alioqui Assassinum reclamare; at percutientem repercutere non licet; vel convitiantem percutere, iam enim hoc erit iniuriam vindicare, non repellere, ut optime advertit etiam eruditus Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 9. art. 3. §. Hoc tamen. Simili ratione licitum contumelioso dicere: mentiris*, astruunt Aragon.* 2. 2. quaest. 70. art. 3. Sà, v. infamare Clavis Reg. l. 12. cap. 4. Bassaeus v. 16 Know finally that the insolent one is bound to restore honor, as all teach, in a proportionate manner, whether by retracting and begging pardon before the hearers, or by some other fitting way. And if he has objected something hidden and grave, he is bound to say that he lied; Pasqualigo adds, decif. 443. and Bass., number 6., that if it be necessary that he be believed, an oath must be added. Disputation XXXIV: On Detraction

1 TWO Sisters, harlots, and daughters of one Mother, are Detraction and Contumely: the one Oolla the greater, fervent and wanton; the other Ooliba the lesser, of whom Ezech. 23. Both alike in face, alike also in guilt, they run mad with the lust of calumniating, uncover the disgraces of their neighbors, and pour out upon them their malices. But detraction rages the more against the neighbor's fame, the more it lurks in secret under the lesser species of defaming, lest it betray itself by its own vice. Concerning this virulent sin, we must inquire what it is, and how manifold it is.

> DUAE Sorores prostitutae, et filiae Matris unius sunt Detractio, et Contumelia: Haec Oolla maior, feruens, ac contumens: altera Ooliba Minor, de quibus Ezech. 23. Ambae similes facie, similes quoque culpa, calumniandi libidine insaniunt, proximorum ignominias discooperiunt, funduntque super eos malitias suas: Verum eo magis in famam proximi desaevit detractio, quo minori infamandi specie in occulto latitat, ne se suo vitio prodat. De virulento hoc peccato, quaerendum est, quid, et quotuplex sit.

Question I: What detraction is, and of how many kinds

1 Detraction is the unjust injury and darkening of another's good fame by occult words. So D. Thomas here, where the Thomists, and D. Bonaventure in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1. toward the middle, and p. 1. Centil. sect. 13. at the end, and the little work Declaratio terminorum Theologiae.

> Quid sit Detractio, et quotuplex.
> Detractio est iniusta laesio, ac denigratio bonae famae alterius per occulta verba. Ita D. Thom. hic, ubi Thomistae, D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 1. ad medium, et p. 1. Centil. sect. 13. in fine, et opusculo Declaratio terminorum Theologiae.

2 I note, however, that occult utterance is not intrinsic to detraction, but pertains to the manner in which it is for the most part done; for if anyone imputes a secret, or false, crime to another in the presence of others, this man certainly sins also by detraction, and not by contumely alone. But it pertains to the manner of detraction that it be about an absent person, according to that, Ecclesiasticus 10: The serpent bites in silence; but he is nothing less than he that detracteth secretly, as Valencia notes, question 17. p. 1. after D. Bonaventure, cited in the first place, and this S. Thomas indicates in his reply ad 1.

> Adverto autem, occultam prolationem non esse intrinsecam detractioni, sed ad modum pertinere, quo fit, ut plurimum; nam si aliquis alteri crimen imponat secretum, vel falsum, praesentibus aliis, hic sane peccat etiam detractione, et non sola contumelia. Ad modum autem pertinet detractionis, ut sit de absente, iuxta id, Ecclesiast. 10. Si mordeat serpens in silentio, nihil eo minus habet, qui occulte detrahit, ut notat Valentia quaest. 17. p. 1. post D. Bonav. loco primo citato, et hoc indicat S. Thom. ad 1.

3 The differences, or divisions, of Detractions are taken from the various ways in which one can voluntarily darken someone's fame, as is seen in D. Bonaventure in the places alleged, Adrian quodl. 11. D. Thomas here ad 3. Alensis 2. p. question 146. member 1. Sotus l. 5. on Justice, question 10. article 1. Navarrus Manual. chapter 18. number 21. Valencia in the place cited.

> Differentias seu divisiones Detractionum sumuntur ex variis modis, quibus potest aliquis voluntarie famam alicuius denigrare, ut videre est apud D. Bonaventuram locis allegatis, Adrianum quodl. 11. D. Thom. hic ad 3. Alens. 2. p.

quaest. 146. membr. 1. Sotum l. 5. de Iustitia, quaest. 10. art. 1. Navar. Manual. cap. 18. num. 21. Valentiam loco citato.

4 Detraction is divided, on the part of the will, into direct and indirect.

Dividitur autem detractio in directam, et indirectam ex parte voluntatis.

5 It is direct when one detracts in order to darken fame; indirect, when one speaks imprudently, or ignorantly, something that harms fame. So D. Bonaventure, loc. cit. of the Mirror: the direct is called formal Detraction; the indirect, material.

Directa est, cum aliquis detrahit, ut denigret famam; Indirecta, cum aliquid dicit incaute, vel ignoranter, quod famam laedit. Ita D. Bonav. loc. cit. speculi; directa dicitur Detractio formalis; indirecta vero materialis.

6 Secondly it can be divided into Direct and Indirect on the part of the external act, or of the manner in which one defames another. And on this part detraction is direct, according to D. Thomas here ad 3. and D. Bonaventure in the places adduced, Centil. and of the Mirror, when one defames another by attributing to him something evil; which happens in four ways, namely, either by falsely imputing a crime to another, or by augmenting it in words; or by revealing a hidden crime, even if true; or by saying that it was done by him with an evil intention — and if this is said lightly, without proofs, it is also rash judgment, as all say with D. Bonaventure, chapter one of the Mirror of the Soul, toward the middle.

Secundo potest dividi in Directam, et Indirectam ex parte actus externi, seu modi, quo quis alterum infamat. Atque ex hac parte detractio directa est secundum D. Thomam hic ad tertium, et D. Bonav. locis adductis Centil. et speculi, cum quis alterum infamat, tribuendo ei aliquid mali; quod contingit quadrupliciter, scilicet, vel falso imponendo crimen alteri, vel illud verbis augendo; vel revelando crimen occultum, etiamsi verum; vel dicendo, fuisse ab eo factum mala intentione, et hoc si leviter sine indiciis dicitur, est etiam iudicium temerarium, ut dicunt omnes cum D. Bonav. cap. primo speculi animae, ad medium.

7 But indirect detraction, from the same chapter, is when one defames another by conducting himself in a manner undue toward the other's fame; and this in three ways, either by denying that person's good, or by maliciously keeping silence when it ought to be said, or also by diminishing it. The Gloss on Daniel 7. adds also indicating by nods, and feigning that one says it out of charity and piety — which modes are the worst; and the Gloss says these ten modes are those ten horns of the great Beast.

Indirecta autem detractio ex eodem capite, est, cum quis alterum infamat, habendo se modo indebito circa famam alterius; idque tripliciter, vel negando bonum illius, vel malitiose reticendo, quando debet dici, vel etiam minuendo. Addit Glossa ad 7. Danielis etiam nutibus indicando, et fingendo, se id dicere ex charitate, et pietate, qui modi sunt pessimi, et hos decem modos ait Glossa esse decem illa cornua magnae Bestiae.

Question II: Whether detraction is a mortal sin

1 It is most certain that direct detraction, with the intention of blackening reputation, is a mortal sin. So D. Bonaventure in the places cited, question 11; D. Thomas here, and the others commonly, as at Valencia question 17, p. 2; Fagundez book 8, chapter 1, number 8.

An detractio sit peccatum mortale.

Certissimum est, detractionem directam, et intentione denigrandi famam, esse peccatum mortale. Ita D. Bonavent. locis adductis, quaest. 11. D. Thom. hic, et alii communiter apud Valentiam quaest. 17. p. 2. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 1. num. 8.

2 The Holy Doctor shows this with many testimonies of Scripture in the Bible of the Poor, chapter 71, where he shows it to be the wickedness of the impious and of the worst of men, and he gathers the gravity of this crime from the punishments inflicted by God.

Multis scripturarum testimoniis id ostendit S. Doctor in Bibliis pauperum, cap. 71. ubi ostendit, impium esse, et pessimorum hominum scelus, gravitatemque huius criminis colligit ex poenis, a Deo inflictis.

3 Thus Numbers 14: the children of Israel detracted to their own harm from those who had brought back word of Josue and Caleb from the land of promise, proclaiming them liars and deceivers together with Moses. Numbers 16: Core, Dathan, and Abiron were swallowed alive into hell, and others were consumed by living fire.

Sic Numer. 14. Detraxerunt filii Israël in malum suum his, qui duxerant Iosuë, et Caleb de terra promissionis; proclamantes eos mendaces, et deceptores simul cum Moyse. Numer. 16. Core, Dathan, et Abiron absorpti sunt vivi in infernum, alii etiam igne viventes sunt cremati.

4 Those who detract from Saul, 1 Kings, are called children of Belial. Absalom, 2 Kings 15, detracted from his father's government, and he was hung by God on an oak and damned.

Qui detrahunt Sauli primo Reg. indicuntur filii Belial. Absalom. 2. Reg. 15. detrahebat regimini patris, et fuit suspensus a Deo in quercu, et damnatus.

5 Christ, Matthew 9, Luke 5 and 19, gravely reproached the Pharisees as they murmured, as being lost men.

Christus Matth. 9. Lucae 5. et 19. graviter reprehendit Pharisaeos murmurantes, tanquam perditos.

6 It is proved by D. Bonaventure, and from Luke 19, out of Wisdom 1: Keep yourselves from murmuring, which profiteth nothing, and from detraction refrain your tongue.

Probatur a D. Bonav. et ad 19. Lucae ex Sap. 1. Custodite vos a murmuratione, quae nihil prodest, et a detractione parcite linguae.

7 Then he recounts the murmurings of the people in the desert and their damnation, and adduces this from 1 Corinthians 10: Neither murmur ye, as some of them murmured, and perished by the destroyer.

Deinde repetit murmurationes populi in deserto, et eorum damnationem, affertque id prima Corinth. 10. Neque murmuraveritis, sicut quidam eorum murmuraverunt, et perierunt ab exterminatore.

8 The Holy Doctor proves the same in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, from that passage of Romans 1: Detractors are hateful to God, worthy of death; and not only they who do such things, but they also who consent to them.

Idipsum probat S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. illo Rom. 1. Detractores Deo odibiles, dignos morte; et non solum qui talia agunt, sed etiam qui consentiunt.

9 It is proved secondly by D. Bonaventure in the Pharetra, book 3, chapter 3, from D. Isidore, in the Synonyms, chapter 10: Detraction is a grave crime; detraction is a grave damnation.

Probatur secundo a D. Bonav. in Pharetra, l. 3. cap. 3. ex D. Isidoro, in Synon. cap. 10. Detractio grave crimen est, detractio gravis damnatio est.

10 D. Bernard, sermon 24 on the Canticle: There is one detractor who speaks, and utters but one word; yet that one word, in one moment, infects the ears of a multitude of hearers and kills their souls. And book 2 of the Considerations: To detract, or to hear a detractor — which of these is the more damnable, I should scarcely venture to say.

D. Bernardus serm. 24. in Cant. Unus est detractor, qui loquitur, et unum tantum verbum profert; et tamen illud unum verbum, uno in momento, multitudinis audientium aures inficit, animas interficit. Et lib. 2. de Consider. Detrahere, an detrahentem audire, quid horum damnabilius sit, non facile dixerim.

11 D. Anselm, On Similitudes, chapter 147: There are three kinds of homicide which are punished with equal penalty: the killing of men, the detraction of neighbors, and fraternal hatred. And chapter 149: It is detraction whenever anyone says anything of another with the intention that he may be the less loved or esteemed.

D. Anselmus de similitudine, cap. 147. Tria sunt genera homicidii, quae pari plectuntur poena, interfectio hominum, detractio proximorum, odium fraternum. Et cap. 149. Detractio est, quoties quis aliquid ea intentione de aliquo dicit, unde ipse minus amari, vel appretiari possit.

12 The reasoning of D. Bonaventure, which all follow, is in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1: to steal another's goods is a grave sin in its genus, against the seventh precept, as if you stole a neighbor's ox or money; but reputation is a more precious thing than outward riches, as is said in Proverbs 23. Therefore it is worse to detract from reputation than to steal money; whence the Holy Doctor further deduces that such a one is more bound to restitution than a thief, because he took away a greater good against justice.

Ratio D. Bonaventurae, qua omnes utuntur, est in speculo animae, cap. 1. Furari rem alienam est peccatum grave ex genere, contra septimum praeceptum, ut si fureris bovem proximi, vel nummos; sed res pretiosior est fama externis opibus, ut dicitur Prov. 23. Ergo peius est detrahere famae, quam nummos furari; ex quo etiam deducit S. Doct. eum magis teneri ad restitutionem, quam furem, quia maius bonum abstulit contra iustitiam.

Question III: Whether it is mortal to reveal a hidden crime to one, or two prudent men, who will keep silent about it

1 The FIRST opinion is assertive. So Salonius, and Bannes 2. 2. question 73, article 2 — the former in controversy, the latter indeed in doubt 1 — and others, as at Sayrus book 11, chapter 6, number 12; Bonacina On Controversies, disputation 4, question 4, part 3; Malderus 2. 2, tract 7, chapter 1, doubt 4; Vega, Summa, vol. 2, chapter 8, case 12; Azorius vol. 3, book 5, chapter 9, question 2. D. Bonaventure seems so, loc. cit., in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1. So Valentia on question 73, p. 2, doubt 1; Suarez, Tomus 4, disputation 34, section 1; Filliucius, Tomus 2, tract 10, chapter 3, number 90; Molina, Tomus 2, disputation 29; Fagundez book 8, chapter 2, number 24; Sayrus book 11, chapter 6, number 11; Bassaeus, s.v. Detractio, 1. number 11, who says this is the common opinion.

An sit mortale revelare crimen occultum uni, vel duobus viris prudentibus, qui id tacebunt.

PRIMA opinio est assertiva. Ita Salonius, et Bannes 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2. ille in controversia; hic vero dub. 1. et alii apud Sayrum l. 11. cap. 6. n. 12. Bonacina de controv. disp. 4. quaest. 4. p. 3. Malder. 2. 2. tract. 7. cap. 1. dub. 4. Vega Summa t. 2. cap. 8. casu 12. Azor. t. 3. l. 5. cap. 9. quaestio 2. Videtur D. Bonav. loc. cit. in speculo animae, cap. 1. Sequitur Valentia ad quaest. 73. p. 2. dub. 1. Suarez Tomo 4. disp. 34. sect. 1. Filliuc. Tomo 2. tract. 10. cap. 3.

num. 90. Molina Tomo 2. disp. 29. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 2. num. 24. Sayrus l. 11. cap. 6. num. 11. Bassaeus, v. Detractio 1. num. 11. qui ait esse communem sententiam.

2 The OPPOSITE opinion seemed probable to Diana, p. 1, tract 17, resolution 22, citing Lessius book 2, chapter 11, number 7; Cajetan 2. 2. question 73, article 2, dist. 1; Pererius, Nauarre, book 2, chapter 4, number 335. To these Reginaldus may be added, Tomus 2, book 2, chapter 4, number 75, and others, from whom Diana deduces, resolution 24, that the hearer is not bound to correct that detractor; and Corduba also may be added, question 2, conclusion 2.

OPPOSITA sententia probabilis visa est Dianae p. 1. Tract. 17. resol. 22. alleganti Lessium l. 2. cap. 11. num. 7. Caietanum 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2. dist. 1. Perrum Nauar. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 335. His addere potest Reginaldum Tom. 2. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 75. et alios, ex quo deducit Diana resol. 24. non teneri audientem corrigere detractorem illum, et adduci etiam Cordubam quaest. 2. conclus. 2.

3 I ASSERT with the former opinion, which holds that it is a mortal sin to lay open a hidden crime even to one or another prudent man.

ASSERO cum priori sententia, asserente, esse peccatum mortale crimen occultum patefacere etiam uni, vel alteri prudenti.

4 It is PROVED by S. Bonaventure, because the order of fraternal correction is commanded; and it commands that you do not bring before two, even prudent, superiors for amendment before secret correction. That this order is commanded I have shown in the Treatise on Charity, Disputation on fraternal correction.

PROBATUR a S. Bonav. quia ordo correctionis fraternae est praeceptus; is autem praecipit, ne duos, etiam prudentes suppositos, ad emendationem adducas ante correctionem secretam. Hunc autem ordinem esse praeceptum, ostendi Tract. de Charitate Disput. de correctione fraterna.

5 It is PROVED secondly, for rash judgment about anyone is mortal, even if one single person lose his good opinion of him; and that there is parity is proved from James 4: He that detracteth from his brother, or judgeth his brother, detracteth from the law, and judgeth the law.

PROBATUR secundo, nam iudicium temerarium de aliquo est mortale, etiamsi unus solus amittat bonam aestimationem de illo, et quod sit paritas probatur ex 4. Iacobi. Qui detrahit fratri, vel iudicat fratrem, detrahit legi, et iudicat legem.

6 Bonacina ANSWERS, denying the parity, because the judge ascribes a perhaps false sin, and so infers a grave injury.

RESPONDET Bonacina, negando paritatem, quia iudicans adscribit peccatum forte falsum, et ideo gravem infert iniuriam.

7 AGAINST: then to reveal a true crime is not mortal in its genus, if done indiscreetly? At last, because, as our Father Marinus used to say, greater loss is inflicted when it is told to a few prudent men than to many others who are not reckoned prudent; and Fagundez teaches so, number 24; Sayrus loc. cit. This also ceases in the disputation on Restitution.

CONTRA: ergo revelare crimen verum, non est ex genere mortale, si indebite fiat? Tandem, quia, ut dicebat P. Marinus noster maius damnum infertur, dum dicitur paucis prudentibus, quam aliis multis, qui prudentes non reputantur, et docet Fagundez num. 24. Sayrus loc. cit. Hoc desinit etiam disput. de Restitutione.

Question IV: Whether material detraction, which comes from talkativeness, is mortal

1 The FIRST opinion is that material detraction, which bursts forth from lightness in speaking, or from indiscreet zeal, is not mortal. So D. Bonaventure reports it, nor did he wholly reject it, saying that it would be a rash judgment to pronounce this mortal. So in the Book of the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, about the middle: but I shall explain it below.

> An Detractio materialis, quae fit ex loquacitate, sit mortifera.
> PRIMA opinio est, detractionem materialem, quae ex levitate loquendi, vel zelo erumpit indiscreto, non esse mortalem, Ita D. Bonav. refert, nec omnino renuit dicens, quod esset dutum, hoc iudicare mortale. Sic Lib. Speculi animae, cap. 1. circa medium: Sed ipsum infra explicabo.

2 The SECOND opinion is that, if the loss is grave and foreseen, or inflicted through grave blameable ignorance, it is mortal. So D. Bonaventure there, who says it is common to most; D. Thomas, question 73, article 2; Salonius; Cajetan; Aragon there; Soto book 5 on Justice, question 10, article 2; Valentia disputation 5, question 17, point 2; Nauarre in the Manual, chapter 18, number 23, and on the decretal Inter verba, 11. question 3, coml. 6. coroll. 33. number 119; Sayrus in the Clavis Regia, book 12, chapter 6, number 9; Toletus book 5 of the Summa, chapter 63; Sylvester, s.v. detractio; Lessius book 2, chapter 11, on detraction, doubt 3, number 11; Fagundez book 8, chapter 2, number three; Bassaeus, s.v. Detractio, 1. number 4; Diana p. 5, tract 5, resolution 69; Sylvius 2. 2. question 63, article 2.

> SECUNDA sententia est, si damnum sit grave, et praevisum, vel gravi culpa ignorantiae iniectum, esse mortale. Ita D. Bonav. ibi, qui dicit, esse plerisque communem; D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 2. Salonius, Caietanus, Aragonius ibi, Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 10. art. 2. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 17. punct. 2. Nauar. in Man. cap. 18. num. 23. et in C. Inter verba, 11. quaest. 3. coml. 6. coroll. 33. num. 119. Sayrus in Clavi Regia l. 12. cap. 6. num. 9. Toletus l. 5. Summa, cap. 63. Sylvest. v. detractio, Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. dub. 3. num. 11. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 2. numero tertio, Bassaeus, v. Detractio, 1. num. 4. Diana p. 5. tract. 5. Resol. 69. Sylvius. 2. 2. quaest. 63. art. 2.

3 But it WILL be venial, if he speaks from venial lightness in speaking, without advertence, or from a good and reasonable end of correcting his morals. This the second teaches, as Valentia, Salon. loc. cit., Nauarre number 30, and S. Antoninus p. 2, title 8, chapter 4; Astian. in 4. on fraternal correction; Sayrus number 9, even if something of zeal exceeds bounds.

> ERIT autem veniale, si ex levitate veniali loquendi, non advertens, loquitur, vel ex bono fine rationabili corrigendi eius mores. Hoc secundum docet Valentia, Salon. loc. cit. Nauar. num. 30. et S. Antonin. p. 2. tit. 8. cap. 4. Astian. in 4. de correctione fraterna. Sayrus num. 9. esto aliquid Zeli excedat.

4 I ASSERT first, that material detraction is venial, if it lightly blackens reputation. It is plain, because light loss is against Justice.

> ASSERO primo, detractionem materialem esse venialem, si leviter denigret famam. Patet, quia leve est damnum contra Iustitiam.

5 I ASSERT secondly, that it is mortal, if grave loss is inflicted.

> ASSERO secundo, esse mortalem, si grave damnum iniiciatur.

6 It is PROVED first by D. Bonaventure, from the precept of the order of fraternal correction.

> PROBATUR primo a D. Bonav. ex praecepto ordinis correctionis fraternae.

7 It is PROVED secondly, because if grave ignorance also follows, since you are bound not to inflict grave loss, by no means do you remove the voluntary act, whence sin results. Yet if there be some venial lightness as the cause in speaking, the effect also will already be light.

> PROBATUR secundo, quia si ex gravi etiam ignorantia sequatur, cum tenearis damnum grave non inferre, nequaquam aufers actum voluntarium, unde peccatum resultat. Si tamen levitas venialis aliqua sit in loquendo causa, iam erit etiam effectus levis.

8 It is EXPLAINED further: for it can arise from some impulse or inadvertence, and so be venial.

> DECLARATUR ulterius; potest enim esse ex impetu aliquo, vel subreptione, atque adeo venialis.

Question V: Whether it is mortal to keep silent about another's good name when it is blackened

1 MARK with D. Bonaventure, loc. cit., that indirect detraction can be material and formal. It will be formal, if one keeps silent, e.g. with the end of blackening reputation. It will be material, if one keeps silent from mere omission once recognized.

> An tacere bonum denigratum, sit mortale.
> ADVERTE cum D. Bonav. loc. cit. detractionem indirectam posse esse materialem, et formalem. Erit formalis, si taceatur, v. g. ex fine denigrandi famam: Erit autem materialis, si taceatur ex mera omissione agnita,

2 Yet if one keeps silent from shame or fear, the Holy Doctor does not dare define it to be mortal, unless it is a person whose office it is to correct. For such a one is bound to restitution of the good whose loss he was bound to prevent.

> Si tamen ex verecundia, vel timore taceatur, non audet S. Doct. definire, esse mortale, nisi esset persona, cui ex officio convenit corrigere. Talis enim tenetur restitutioni rei, cuius ablationem tenebatur impedire.

3 He PROVES therefore there that to omit, or keep silent about a good, when it ought to be said, is mortal; for as we are bound to come to the aid of the poor in grave need with sustenance, so also are we bound in goods of reputation and honor.

> PROBAT igitur ibi, omittere, seu tacere bonum, esse mortale, cum debet dici; nam sicuti tenemur pauperi in necessitate gravi subvenire in victu, ita tenemur etiam in bonis famae, et honoris.

4 The Doctors dispute much here on these words, about the causes excusing from not standing against murmuration; see Molina, Tomus 5, tract 4, disputation 34; Azorius p. 3, book 13, chapter 7; Aragon. 2. 2. question 63, article 4; Sayrus book 11, chapter 9, number 37; Lessius book 2, chapter 11, doubt 4, number 21; Reginaldus, Tomus 2, book 24, chapter 4, question 8, number 65; Peter Nauarre on restitution, book 2, chapter 4, number 337; Valentia disputation 5, question 17, p. 4; Salon. 2. 2. question 73, article 4; Soto book 5, question 10, article 4; Rebell. on the obligation of justice, p. 1, book 4, question 6; Malderus 2. 2, tract 7, chapter 1, doubt 15; Bonacina on contracts, disputation 2, question 4, p. 11, number 8; Bassaeus, s.v. Detractio.

5 Now they warn first, with those whom Diana follows, p. 1, tract 17, resolution 24, that in doubt whether that be detraction, we are not bound to oppose it, because it can be that he justly says it, and he is in possession of a good reputation, to which you do injury by treating him as a detractor.

ADMONENT autem primo hi, quos sequitur Diana p. 1. tract. 17. resol. 24. in dubio, an illa sit detractio, non teneri nos obsistere, quia potest esse, ut iuste dicat, et est in possessione bonae famae, cui iniuriam infers, eum tractando ut detractorem.

6 By this doctrine confessors drive away many scruples from fearful men; hence Diana, part 2, tract 5, resolution 35, concludes absolutely that he who hears a detractor does not sin mortally. So too Crux in the Directorium, precept 8, question 2, article 2, doubt 5, who with one voice with D. Bonaventure, loc. cit., say: Whoever does not resist detraction out of fear, shame, negligence, or levity of mind, sins venially. Tanner subscribes, 2. 2. disputation 4, question 8, doubt 7, number 151, who with almost the same words of the Seraphic Doctor so resolved, with Bassaeus.

Hac doctrina Confessariis multos a viris timoratis scrupulos abigent; itaque Diana part. 2. tract. 5. resol. 35. absolute concludit, eum, qui audit detrahentem, non peccare mortaliter. Sic et Crux in Direct. praec. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 5. qui una voce cum D. Bonav. loco cit. aiunt: Qui ob timorem, verecundiam, negligentiam, aut animi levitatem non resistit detractioni, peccat venialiter. Subscribit Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 151. qui eisdem fere verbis Seraphici ita resolvit cum Bassaeo.

7 It is a sin against justice, if anyone directly approves even unjust detraction, or, worse, leads into it. Or it will be against charity, if anyone holds himself merely negatively, not impeding, unless he is bound by office either to correct the detractor or to defend another's reputation, namely because he is the superior of this or that one.

Est peccatum contra iustitiam, si quis directe et iniustam etiam detractionem approbet, aut quod deterius est ad eam inducat; Vel erit contra charitatem, si quis mere negative se habeat non impediendo, nisi ex officio teneatur, aut detrahentem corrigere, aut famam alterius defendere, nempe quia huius, vel illius Superior est.

8 Commonly, however, not to repel detraction out of negligence, fear, or shame is held venial, unless the hearer is a superior, or perceives that grave loss will follow from the detraction, or the fear is so perverse that on its account one does not care to sin mortally. This alone seems contrary to the Seraphic Doctor, because knowingly and unwillingly, by saying that which justifies, he indirectly takes away its justification, against justice, and so is made subject to restitution together with detractors, as I said: although in the Mirror of the Soul, chapter 1, § the second branch of envy he seems to rank this sin with that of not coming to the aid of a neighbor in grave necessity, which seems against charity, though he says nothing of it here; indeed, as I said in the disputation on almsgiving, it seems to belong to justice.

Communiter tamen ex negligentia, timore, vel verecundia non repellere detractionem, censetur veniale, nisi vel audiens superior sit, vel grave damnum ex detractione secuturum animadvertat, vel timor adeo perversus sit, ut propter eum peccare aliquis mortaliter non curet. Id solum videtur esse contrarium Seraphico, quia sciens, et nolens, dicendo iustificare, indirecte eam aufert iustificationem, contra iustitia, et ideo restitutioni obnoxius ponitur cum detractoribus, ut dixi: tametsi in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus invidiae videtur componere hoc peccatum cum illo non subveniendo proximo in gravi necessitate, quod videtur esse contra charitatem, licet de hoc nil dicat hic; imo, ut dixi disp. de eleemosyna videtur ad iustitiam spectare.

9 Reginaldus follows the same opinion of Diana, Tomus 2, book 24, chapter 4, number 95, and Faber on restitution in 4, disputation 53, chapter 5, number 127.

Eandem sententiam Dianae sequuntur Reginaldus Tom. 2. lib. 24. cap. 4. num. 95. et Faber de restitutione in 4. disp. 53. cap. 5. num. 127.

Question VI: On the various cases in which detraction seems to be excused

1 The first is, if one tells a close friend of an injury secretly inflicted upon him by someone, in order to lessen the pain; for it is too hard, and contrary to human custom, that anyone should bear injuries alone and not be able to share them with a friend; this is lawful, not with the intention of detracting, but so that he may bear it more lightly. So Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 15. Bassaeus verb. Detractio 12. Less. lib. 2. cap. 11. dub. 12. num. 72. Navar. lib. 1. cap. 4. num. 345. Molina tract. 4. disp. 29. num. 5. Layman lib. 3. sec. 3. tract. 4. parte 2. cap. 3. Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 145. and other Doctors in common, with whom Diana subscribes Tom. 3. tract. 15. resol. 32. But Ioan. de Cruz adds more in his directory, p. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3. concl. 1.

Primus est, si quis probo amico iniuriam, sibi ab aliquo secreto illatam, narret ad leniendum dolorem; nimis enim durum est, et praeter humanam consuetudinem, ut quis iniurias solus ferat, nec possit eas amico communicare; hoc autem licet, non animo detrahendi, sed ut levius ferat. Ita Sylvius 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 15. Bassaeus verb. Detractio 12. Less. lib. 2. cap. 11. dub. 12. num. 72. Navar. lib. 1. cap. 4. num. 345. Molina tract. 4. disp. 29. num. 5. Layman lib. 3. sec. 3. tract. 4. parte 2. cap. 3. Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 145. et alii Doctores communiter, quibus subscribit Diana Tom. 3. tract. 15. resol. 32. Sed amplius addit Ioan. de Cruz. in directorio, p. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3. concl. 1.

2 Saying: If a person gravely injured in secret, unable to restrain himself from grief, bursts forth into public complaints, he is not for that reason condemned to mortal sin, if the injurer is defamed; for it seems hard to restrain an afflicted mind so that it does not burst into complaints, since this is most natural, so says the same author, also citing Ludovicus Lopez. This is the opinion of D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 1. circa medium, where he says: Yet it matters greatly whether it proceeds from envy; for sometimes it happens that the evil deeds of others are recounted, or even exaggerated, against someone out of a certain indignation, or levity of speech, without the intention of defaming him, which would be a hard judgment to call mortal.

Dicens: Si persona secreto graviter iniuriata, non valens se a dolore, cohibere, in querimonias prorumpit publicas, non idcirco de culpa mortali damnatur, si iniurians infametur; durum enim videtur, sic afflictum animum cohibere, ne in querimonias prorumpat, cum hoc naturalissimum sit, ita ille, citans etiam Ludovicum Lopez. Haec sententia est D. Bonav. in speculo animae, cap. 1. circa medium, ubi ait: Multum tamen interest, utrum procedat ex invidia, quandoque enim contingit, mala aliorum facta ex indignatione quadam, vel levitate loquendi, nec intentione diffamandi, male contra aliquem recitari, vel etiam aggravari, quod esset durum iudicare mortale.

3 The second case is, when someone narrates the sins of another which he has heard, and expressly asserts that he knows nothing for certain, but is only reporting what was related.

Secundus casus est, quando aliquis narrat peccata alterius audita, et expresse asserit, se nihil certo scire, sed solum relata referre.

4 That this person sins mortally is taught by Sotus de Iust. lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 4. and in 4. disp. 15. quaest. 4. Navar. cap. 18. num. 50. Villalob. sum. tom. 2. tract. 11. dub. 36. num. 6. Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 139. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 1. dub. 17. Sylvius quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 16. concl. 3. Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 10. num. 8. and others, with whom Diana subscribes Tom. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 28. The reason is, because he defames; Sylv. subscribes quaest. 4. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 4. in corpore. Caiet. there, Less. lib. 2. cap. 9. de iniuriis in corpore, dub. 16. num. 113.

Hunc peccare mortaliter docent Sotus de Iust. lib. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. ad 4. et in 4. disp. 15. quaest. 4. Navar. cap. 18. num. 50. Villalob. sum. tom. 2. tract. 11. dub. 36. num. 6. Tanner. 2. 2. disp. 4. quaest. 8. dub. 7. num. 139. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 1. dub. 17. Sylvius quaest. 62. art. 2. quaeritur 16. concl. 3. Turrianus disp. 52. dub. 10. num. 8. et alii, quibus subscribit Diana Tom. 3. Tract. 5. resol. 28. Ratio est, quia is infamat; subscribunt Sylvest. quaest. 4. D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 4. in corpore. Caiet. ibi, Less. lib. 2. cap. 9. de iniuriis in corpore, dub. 16. num. 113.

5 Many Recent authors say this is true in the case, if the one reporting is a man of authority, so that he is believed, or because of the levity of the hearers. So Azor. p. 4. l. 13. cap. 16. Sotus loco citato Less. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 5. Salon. apud Tannetum, Layman. l. 3. sect. 5. tract. 3. p. 2. cap. 3. num. 7. Ioan. de la Cruz in direct. art. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3. concl. 4. They say, however, Less. loc. cit. Nauar. Man. cap. 17. num. 71, that it is not against justice, but against charity, which Bassaeus n. 13 judges more probable with Fagundez num. 19, because here he does not defame directly, but per accidens.

Multi Recentes in casu id verum esse aiunt, si referens sit vir authoritatis, ut ei credatur, vel ex levitate audientium. Sic Azor. p. 4. l. 13. cap. 16. Sotus loco citato Less. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 5. Salon. apud Tannetum, Layman. l. 3. sect. 5. tract. 3. p. 2. cap. 3. num. 7. Ioan. de la Cruz in direct. art. 8. quaest. 2. art. 2. dub. 3. concl. 4. Dicunt tamen Less. loc. cit. Nauar. Man. cap. 17. num. 71. non esse contra iustitiam, sed contra charitatem, idque Bassaeus n. 13. probabilius censet cum Fagundez num. 19. quia hic non directe infamat, sed per accidens.

6 Yet there are not lacking those who deny that he sins mortally, and thus hold at least the opposite opinion as probable: Tannerus loc. cit. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 2. disp. 2. Sotus in 4. disp. 15. quaest. 4. art. 1. Sylvest. v. detractio, quaest. 4. except. 5. Armilla v. restitutio, num. 4. except. 7. Sà verbo informare, after Gabriel, Adrian, and others. And thus Faber teaches this opinion in 4. de restit. disp. 53. num. 29, and Diana judges it probable.

Non tamen desunt negantes, peccare mortaliter, et ita probabilem saltem opinionem oppositam tenentes, Tannerus loc. cit. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 33. art. 2. disp. 2. Sotus in 4. disp. 15. quaest. 4. art. 1. Sylvest. v. detractio, quaest. 4. except. 5. Armilla v. restitutio, num. 4. except. 7. Sà verbo informare, post Gabrielem, Adrianum, et alios. Et ita hanc sententiam docet Faber in 4. de restit. disp. 53. num. 29. et probabilem censet Diana.

7 Tannerus adds num. 140. with Lessio dub. 5: if anyone reports in such a way that he probably thinks no one will believe it, it is not mortal; but if he thinks some will believe it out of mere idle levity, it is not against Justice, but against charity.

Addit Tannerus num. 140. cum Lessio dub. 5. si quis ita referat, ut probabiliter putet, nullum crediturum, non esse mortale; at si aliquos putet credituros e levitate inera, non esse contra Iustitiam, sed charitatem.

8 The Seraphic Doctor, who in speculo animae, cap. 1. et 2. relates all the modes of excusing in Confession, also appends this one. Therefore I judge that he stands for the first opinion, because, as the holy Doctor himself argues, when reputation is gravely damaged, it is enough that there be no cause; yet if these things are reported out of mere talkativeness, the holy Doctor judges it probably not mortal. But if the detraction is from malice, it will be mortal against Justice; indeed this kind of detraction is pestilential, and more colored toward defaming. So Sotus especially.

> Seraphicus, qui in speculo animae, cap. 1. et 2. refert modos omnes in Confessione excusantes, hunc etiam apponit. Idco arbitror, ipsum stare pro prima sententia, quia, ut ipse S. Doctor arguit, cum damnificatur graviter fama, satis est, si nulla sit causa; si tamen haec ex mera loquacitate referantur, censet S. Doctor non esse mortale probabiliter. Quod si ex malitia sit detractio, erit mortalis contra Iustitiam, imo hoc genus detrahendi est pestilens, et magis coloratum ad infamandum. Ita Sotus praecipue.

9 The third case, which the holy Doctor notes in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus invidiae, etc., is levity of matter. So Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 3. num. 11, adding that the same must be said of one revealing natural defects, such as that someone is ignorant, of weak judgment, etc.; and Petrus Nauar. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 307. with others judges the same must be said of natural defects; as if you say that someone is the son of a cleric, born of adultery, and the like; provided, however, the person is not so distinguished that to speak even lightly of him would be grave, as to be a liar. Diana subscribes p. 1. tract. 5 resol. 69. Lessius num. 14. Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 6. art. 3. dub. 3. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 2. before the fourth number. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 156. To this he also reduces levity of mind, or talkativeness, with D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 3, understanding it by reason of indeliberateness, with Valentia quaest. 17. puncto secundo. Bassaeo, v. Detractio 1. from num. 6.

> Tertius casus, quem advertit S. Doct. in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus invidiae, etc. est levitas materiae. Sic Lessius l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 3. num. 11. addens, idem dicendum de revelante defectus naturales, ut aliquem esse ignarum, patui iudicii, etc. et Petrus Nauar. l. 2. cap. 4. num. 307. cum aliis idem censet dicendum in defectibus naturalium; ut si dicas, aliquem filium esse clerici, natum ex adulterio, et similia; nisi tamen sit persona tam qualificata, quae graviter deprimeretur, de qua etiam levia dicere, est grave, ut esse mendacem. Subscribit Diana p. 1. tract. 5 resol. 69. Lessius num. 14. Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 6. art. 3. dub. 3. Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 2. ante numerum quartum. Tannerus disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 156. Quo reducit etiam levitatem animi, seu loquacitatem cum D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 3. intelligens ratione indeliberationis cum Valentia quaest. 17. puncto secundo. Bassaeo, v. Detractio 1. a num. 6.

10 The general rule of S. Bonav. in speculo, cap. 1. et 2. attests: whenever from detraction a grave loss of reputation of itself follows, it is mortal. So Fagundez n. 4. Less. num. 15. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 347. Filliuc. tract. 32. de restit. cap. 9. num. 230. Nauar. Summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 22. 23. 25.

> Regula generalis S. Bonav. in speculo, cap. 1. et 2. testificatur; quoties ex detractione gravis amissio famae ex se provenit, esse mortale. Ita Fagundez n. 4. Less. num. 15. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 347. Filliuc. tract. 32. de restit. cap. 9. num. 230. Nauar. Summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 22. 23. 25.

11 THEREFORE OFTEN to speak venial things will be mortal: and conversely, to speak mortal things will not be mortal with respect to certain persons; as if you say of some young man that he has dishonorable loves; of a soldier, that he has killed, or fought a duel, or seduced a girl, or keeps a concubine. So Sotus l. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. §. sequetur in medio. et l. 5. quaest. 10. art. 2. concl. 4. Less. l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. dub. 3. num. 17. Lopez p. 1. Instruct. cap. 285. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 66.

Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 73. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 231. Corduba de detract. quaest. 1. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 2. num. 51.

> SAEPE igitur venialia dicere, erit mortale: Sicuti e contra, mortalia dicere, non erit mortale respectu aliquarum personarum; ut si de aliquo iuvene dicas, inhonestos habere amores; de milite, occidisse, vel duellum commisisse, aut decepisse puellam, vel habere concubinam. Ita Sotus l. 4. de Iustitia, quaest. 6. art. 3. §. sequetur in medio. et l. 5. quaest. 10. art. 2. concl. 4. Less. l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. dub. 3. num. 17. Lopez p. 1. Instruct. cap. 285. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 66. Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 73. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 231. Corduba de detract. quaest. 1. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 2. num. 51.

12 Say the SAME, if you detract by general terms, it will be only venial; as if you say someone is proud, avaricious, irascible. So Less. l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. dub. 3. num. 18. Sylvester v. detractio. Filliuc. t. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 232. D. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 8. cap. 4 Nauar. Summa, cap. 18. num. 24. Fagundez num. 6.

> IDEM dic, si nominibus generalibus detrahas, erit tantum veniale; ut si dicas, esse superbum, avarum, iracundum. Ita Less. l. 2. cap. 11. de detract. dub. 3. num. 18. Sylvester v. detractio. Filliuc. t. 2. tract. 32. cap. 9. num. 232. D. Antonin. 2. p. tit. 8. cap. 4 Nauar. Summa, cap. 18. num. 24. Fagundez num. 6.

13 The reason is, because these are mostly received as defects, not defamatory, or are taken for a natural inclination. Yet it can happen that they gravely wound. Therefore prudence must be used, to discern whether they gravely defame, considering the persons, both those defamed and the hearers; and therefore confessors must employ great prudence in these matters. So Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 64. Nauar. num. 25. Less. cited above, Caiet. loc. cit. Fagundez num. 7.

> Ratio est, quia haec plerumque recipiuntur pro defectu, non infamatorio, vel sumuntur pro naturali inclinatione. Potest tamen esse, ut graviter laedant. Ideo prudentia utendum, ut discernatur, an graviter infament, consideratis personis, tum infamatis; tum audientibus; et ideo debent in his confessarii magnam prudentiam adhibere. Ita Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 64. Nauar. num. 25. Less. allegatus, Caiet. loc. cit. Fagundez num. 7.

14 MOREOVER, if one idly relates the sins of others to those whom he knows will not believe them, he will not sin, whatever those sins may be: Less. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 5. num. 24. Sotus l. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. Nauar. cap. 18. num. 49. The reason is, because no damage follows from it. D. Bonau. senses the same above; yet if the crime were atrocious, such as Sodomy, heresy, treason, and although they would not believe it, they would nevertheless entertain some suspicion, it will be lethal, if the person is honorable. The reason is, because since he is in peaceable possession of the best reputation, it is reduced to doubt and to the grave peril of losing it. So D. Bonau. loc. cit. D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 2. in corpore, Caictanus there, Sotus l. 5. quaest. 10. art. 1. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 63. Sylvest. v. detractio, num. 2. Lessius cited above, and Fagundez num. 17.

> CAETERUM, si peccata aliorum referat otiose illis, quos scit, non esse credituros, non peccabit, quaecumque illa sint, Less. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 5. num. 24. Sotus l. 4. quaest. 6. art. 3. Nauar. cap. 18. num. 49. Ratio est, quia nulla inde sequitur damnificatio. Idem sentit D. Bonau. supra; si tamen crimen esset atrox, ut Sodomia, haeresis, proditio, et licet non essent credituri, tamen aliquam essent exhibituri suspicionem, erit lethale, si persona sit honesta. Ratio est, quia cum sit in possessione pacifica optimae famae, reducitur ad dubium, et discrimen grave eam perdendi. Ita D. Bonau. loc. cit. D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 2. in corpore, Caictanus ibi, Sotus l. 5. quaest. 10. art. 1. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 63. Sylvest. v. detractio, num. 2. Lessius allegatus, et Fagundez num. 17.

15 It is STILL ASKED concerning those who write Annals, and in them recount the hidden crimes of others.

> QUAERITUR adhuc de scribentibus Annales, et in his enarrantibus crimina aliorum occulta.

16 HE ANSWERS Fagundez n. 25. that they do not sin mortally, provided they do not write out of envy or hatred. This is also the mind of D. Bonau. in the place often adduced above, in speculo, cap. 1. Yet let them beware lest they brand any family, and the living, with some stain that grows squalid among posterity. So note Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 10. art. 2. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 1. Molina above. Arrian. quodl. 11. quaest. 1. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 143. Valentia quaest. 17. p. 2. for these things are not lawful.

> RESPONDET Fagundez n. 25. eos non peccare mortali, si tamen non ex invidia, vel odio scribant. Haec est mens etiam D. Bonau. loco saepe addusto in speculo, cap. 1. Caveant tamen, ne alicui familiae, et viventibus notam aliquam inurant, quae apud posteros sordescat. Ita advertunt Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 10. art. 2. Malder. tract. 7. cap. 1. Molina supra. Arrian. quodl. 11. quaest. 1. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 143. Valentia quaest. 17. p. 2. haec enim non licent.

17 FINALLY there are certain Astrologers who impose falsehoods upon some, and these gravely sin, as Fagundez notes num. 26.; for foolishly they assert, defaming men, things from the motion of the stars. Whence it happens that if an Astrologer, when questioned, names some thief, he is punished by municipal laws; yet one cannot bring an action of injury against him, as Leg. Item apud Labeonem, §. si quis Astrologus teaches. Therefore also by Leg. Nemo Cod. de maleficis it is provided that no one consult an Aruspex or a Mathematician, because they are impostors, and therefore to be cast out to the farthest lands, as Sotus teaches l. 5. de virtute quaest. 10. artic. 2., who nevertheless speaks of the Judiciarii, condemned by the Pontiffs, Sixtus V. and others.

> TANDEM sunt aliqui Astrologi, qui falsa nonnullis imponunt, et hi graviter peccant, ut notat Fagundez num. 26. stulte enim asserunt ex motu astrorum, homines infamando. Quo fit, ut si Astrologus quaesitus, furem aliquem dixerit, legibus municipialibus puniatur; non posse tamen cum illo de iniuria agi, docet Leg. Item apud Labeonem, §. si quis Astrologus. Propterea etiam Leg. Nemo Cod. de maleficio cautum est, ut nemo Aruspicem, aut Mathematicum consulat, eo quod impostores sunt, et ideo in ultimas terras eiiciendi, ut docet Sotus l. 5. de virtute quaest. 10. artic. 2. qui tamen loquitur de Iudiciariis, qui a Pontificibus, Sixto V. et aliis, sunt damnati.

18 The Sacred Canons condemn these detractions, extra de sortilegiis from the Penitential of Theodotus, and Alexander III. Granden. the Patriarch, apud D. Bonaventuram in Confessionali, cap. 3. periculis 37. et 38.

> HAS detractiones damnant Sacri Canones, extra de sortilegiis ex poenitentiali Theodoti, et Alexandri III. Granden. Patriarchae apud D. Bonaventuram in Confessionali, cap. 3. periculis 37. et 38.

Question VII: Whether it is ever lawful to defame another falsely, or to reveal his hidden crime

1 NOW the various modes divided in quaest. 1. must be examined.

> IAM varios modos, quaest. 1. divisos, oportet discutere.

2 It is MOST CERTAIN that it is never lawful to impose a false crime upon anyone; for this is most mortal in its kind. So D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. 2. et 4. et p. 1. Centilog. sectione 13. et in 3. dist.

28. quaest. 3. et sequenti, et ad cap. 10. Eccles., where he urges that testimony of Scripture: If a serpent bite in silence, he is no better that detracteth his neighbour in secret, Eccles. 10. Do not curse the deaf, according to the exposition of D. Gregory 2. p. Pastoralis, cap. 1. admonit. 36. For to curse the deaf is to defame one who is absent and not hearing. The reason, as rehearsed by the holy Doctor, is because he unjustly takes away a good better than riches, according to Prouerb. 22: A good name is better than great riches. By which reason they commonly argue. This is the worst detraction, as the Doctors cry out in common with D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 2., whom Sayrus reports l. 11. cap. 3. num. 7. et Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 3. Therefore not even to avoid tortures, or to avert any grave evil whatsoever, is it lawful, as all Theologians teach with D. Bonau. and D. Thom., and the Canonists ad C. super eo, de usuris, et C. mihi, 22. quaest. 11. See Fagundez l. 8. cap. 5.

> CERTISSIMUM est, nunquam licere crimen falsum alicui imponere; hoc enim est mortalissimum ex genere. Ita D. Bonau. in speculo animae, cap. 1. 2. et 4. et p. 1. Centilog. sectione 13. et in 3. dist. 28. quaest. 3. et sequenti, et ad cap. 10. Eccles. ubi urget illud Scripturae testimonia: Si mordeat serpens in silentio, nil eo minus habet, qui occulte detrahit, Eccles. 10. Non maledices surdo, iuxta expositionem D. Gregorii 2. p. Pastoralis, cap. 1. admonit. 36. Surdo quippe maledicere, est absenti, et non audienti derogare. Ratio refricata a S. Doctore est, quia is inique aufert bonum melius divitiis, iuxta id Prouerb. 22. Melius est nomen bonum, quam thesauri multi. Qua ratione utuntur communiter. Haec est detractio pessima, ut clamant communiter Doctores cum D. Thom. quaest. 73. art. 2. quos refert Sayrus l. 11. cap. 3. num. 7. et Fagundez in octavum praeceptum, l. 8. cap. 3. Itaque neque ad vitandas torturas, sive ad quodcumque grave malum declinandum, licet, ut docent omnes Theologi cum D. Bonau. et D. Thom. atque Canonistae ad C. super eo, de usuris, et C. mihi, 22. quaest. 11. Vide Fagundez l. 8. cap. 5.

3 But it is ASKED: Whether it is ever lawful to uncover a true crime of someone.

> QUAERITUR vero: An liceat aliquando verum crimen alicuius detegere.

4 THE HOLY DOCTOR ANSWERS in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus invidiae; that it is possible, when an unworthy man is praised beyond his merits, and from this some deception can arise, then it does not have the nature of sin. Therefore, if we hear some secretly depraved and pernicious man, who could deceive to the ruin, whether of faith or of life; such as an Apothecary or Physician; or of conscience, such as a Confessor; or of causes, such as an Advocate, being commended, then it is lawful to uncover his depravities; but not, if someone is a hypocrite and evil only toward himself, as if someone outwardly feigns piety and inwardly is full of private sins. The Doctors consent in common: Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 4. num. 107. Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 10. art. 2. Less. t. 1. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 10. num. 64. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 341. Corduba quaest. 2. de detract. concl. 4. ad 2. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 65. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 3. num. 3. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 17. punct. 2. dub. 3. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2. Sayrus l. 11. cap. 6. num. 18. et the rest apud Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 144., the same author adding that when due information is inquired by reason of office, marriage, etc., provided the damage be not so enormous that the other consideration ought rather to prevail. Bassaeus subscribes, v. Detract. from num. 10.

> RESPONDET S. Doct. in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus invidiae; posse, cum laudatur indignus, et ultra merita, et ex hoc potest oriri aliqua deceptio, tunc non habet rationem peccati. Igitur, si aliquem occulte pravum, perniciosum, qui posset decipere in perniciem, sive fidei, sive vitae; ut Pharmacopolam, vel Medicum; sive conscientiae, ut Confessarium; sive causarum, ut Advocatum, audiamus commendari, tunc licet pravitates detegere; non tamen, si aliquis sit hypocrita, et malus sibi soli, ut si aliquis exterius pietatem fingat, et intus plenus sit peccatis privatis.

Consentiunt Doctores communiter, Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 40. in octavum praeceptum, cap. 4. num. 107. Sotus l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 10. art. 2. Less. t. 1. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 10. num. 64. Petrus Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 341. Corduba quaest. 2. de detract. concl. 4. ad 2. Tolet. l. 5. Summa, cap. 65. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 3. num. 3. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 17. punct. 2. dub. 3. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2. Sayrus l. 11. cap. 6. num. 18. et caeteri apud Tannerum disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 144. addens idem, cum ob officium, matrimonium, etc. inquiritur informatio debita, dummod non ita enorme sit damnum, ut sit alterius potius ratio habenda. Subscribit Bassaeus, v. Detract. a num. 10.

5 From this it ALSO happens that one inquiring into the defects of another, in order to avoid deceptions, does not sin, for instance for marriage, for a Chair, etc. So Fagundez warns loco citato.

HINC etiam fit, inquirentem de defectibus alterius, ut deceptiones evitet, non peccare, puta si ad matrimonium, ad Cathedram, etc. Ita monet Fagundez loco citato.

6 You will ASK secondly: Whether uncovering the sins of someone who is already defamed in some crime is a sin.

QUAERES secundo: An detegere peccata alicuius, infamati in aliquo delicto, sit peccatum.

7 It is ANSWERED, that uncovering other sins bearing a different infamy is mortal; as, if someone is publicly a drunkard, and you report that he is a thief. So Adrian. quodl. 11. art. 1. Nauarr. Summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 42. and others apud Fagundez num. 9. and Tannetum num. 141., who add that this is true even if the crime disclosed is lesser, as if you wished to defame a homicide by theft. Yet this example indicates something greater as to belief. So also Bassaeus num. 9.

RESPONDETUR, detegere alia peccata afferentia diversam infamiam, esse mortale, ut, si aliquis sit publice ebriosus, et deferas, esse furem. Ita Adrian. quodl. 11. art. 1. Nauarr. Summa Lat. cap. 18. num. 42. et alii apud Fagundez num. 9. et Tannetum num. 141. qui addunt, id verum, etiamsi hoc delictum, quod proditur, sit minus, ut si de furto velles infamare homicidam. Hoc tamen exemplum indicat Maius quoad creditum. Sic et Bassaeus num. 9.

8 You will ASK thirdly: Whether detracting from the dead is a mortal sin.

QUAERES tertio: An de mortuo detrahere sit peccatum mortale.

9 It is ANSWERED, that it is an atrocious sin. So in common Petr. Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. a n. 351. Angelus in 4. quaest. de restit. honoris. Malderus de Iustitia t. 7. cap. 1. dub. 8. Molina disp. 28. Fagundez num. 11.

RESPONDETUR, esse peccatum atrox. Ita communiter Petr. Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. a n. 351. Angelus in 4. quaest. de restit. honoris. Malderus de Iustitia t. 7. cap. 1. dub. 8. Molina disp. 28. Fagundez num. 11.

10 You will ASK fourthly: Whether detracting from the Religious Orders is a special fault.

QUAERES quarto: An de Religionibus detrahere sit specialis culpa.

11 It is ANSWERED first, that in these times it is dangerous to the faith, because of the heretics eager to carp at the Religious Orders, especially in chastity, which they proclaim as contested among us, judging, or impiously proclaiming, the conjugal life to be better, indeed necessary; otherwise concubinage would be had with others, whence that foul saying of the most filthy Luther l. de vita coniugali: si non vult uxor, veniat ancilla. Yet both Christ and the Apostle proclaim the celibate and virginal life servable by the help of God. And in Apoc. 14. John beheld virgins of this kind innumerable, as Fagundez disserits cap. 3. num. 13. after D. Bonav. in Diaeta salutis, tit. 10. ad finem: See Bassaeus 7.

> RESPONDETUR primo, esse in fide periculosum his temporibus, propter haereticos inhiantes carpendis Religionibus, maxime in castitate, quam inter nos conflictam conclamant, existimantes, seu impie proclamantes, vitam coniugalem esse meliorem, imo necessariam; alioqui concubitum iri cum aliis, unde foedum illud dictum spurcissimi Lutheri l. de vita coniugali: si non vult uxor, veniat ancilla. Cum tamen, et Christus, et Apostolus vitam caelibem, ac virginalem, Dei auxilio servabilem conclament. Et Apoc. 14. innumeros huiusmodi virgines contemplatus fuerit Ioannes, ut disserit Fagundez cap. 3. num. 13. post D. Bonav. in Diaeta salutis, tit. 10. ad finem: Vide Bassaeum 7.

12 Against these our Seraphic Doctor, the most valiant Achilles of the Church, often fought, as is seen in Libris Apologeticis contra magistrum Gulielmum, contra Magistrum innominatum in Apologia pauperum, and in other places.

> CONTRA hos saepe strenuissimus Ecclesiae Achilles Seraphicus noster pugnavit, ut videre est in Libris Apologeticis contra magistrum Gulielmum, contra Magistrum innominatum in Apologia pauperum, et aliis locis.

13 These enemies and detractors of the Religious Orders, utterly hostile to the Gospel (since Christ issued the Evangelical Counsels of Chastity, Obedience, and Poverty, but these men revile them), the holy Doctor proclaims Adversaries of the Church. For the Church approved and venerates the Religious Orders; but these men reprove and spurn them.

> Hos Religionum hostes, et detractores, Evangelio perduelles (siquidem Christus Evangelica consilia Castitatis, obedientiae, et Paupertatis edidit, hi autem vituperant) Ecclesiae Adversarios conclamat. Etenim Ecclesia Religiones approbavit, et veneratur; isti autem eas reprobant, et aspernantur.

14 He shows them guilty of death with a weighty testimony Deuter. 17.; for there it is prescribed: If you perceive that among you there are hard and doubtful judgments in cause of blood, etc. Thou shalt go to the priests of the Levitical race, and shalt follow their sentence, and shalt not decline to the right hand or to the left. But he that will refuse to obey the commandment of the priest who ministereth at that time to the Lord thy God, by the decree of the judge, that man shall die. Whence the holy Doctor argues: If to resist gravely, or to cry out against a shadowy Pontiff defining or decreeing, the penalty of death was deservedly imposed, how much more worthily will it be imposed upon the most unworthy, who detract from the Sacred and Apostolic sanctions of the Supreme Pontiff, the Vicar of God on earth? The holy Doctor proclaims such detractors of the Religious Orders, which the holy Mother Church erected, confirmed, and made firm, to be rebels and subverters of the Church. For with what face do these enemies of God proclaim as impostors those poor in spirit by voluntary choice, whom Christ Matth. 5. acclaims as blessed? Do they bark that those who for the straight road to the kingdom of heaven cut themselves off spiritually, and live most continent, and abstain from all things, that they may win the unfading crown, have wandered from the way of salvation? Lovers of Virginity do not revile marriages (says S. Bonan.) but prefer virginity with the Apostle prima Corinth. See the holy Doctor treating this matter at length.

> Reos mortis, gravi testimonio Deuter. 17. eos ostendit; Ibi enim praecipitut: Si difficile, atque ambiguum apud te iudicium esse perspexeris inter sanguinem, et sanguinem, etc. Venies ad sacerdotes Leuitici generis, et sequeris sententiam eorum, nec declinabis ad dexteram, vel sinistram. Qui autem superbierit, nolens obedire sacerdotis imperio, qui eo tempore ministrat Domino Deo tuo, ex decreto Iudicis, morietur homo ille. Unde arguit S. Doctor: Si umbratico Pontifici graviter resistere, aut reclamare definienti, vel decernenti, poena capitis merito imponebatur, quanto dignius indignissimis, detrahentibus Sacris, et Apostolicis sanctionibus Summi Pontificis, Dei in terris Vicarii, imponetur? Rebelles Ecclesiae eversoresque proclamat S. Doctor huiusmodi detractores Religionum, quas Sancta Mater Ecclesia erexit, confirmavit, solidavit. Qua enim fronte isti Dei inimici, pauperes spiritu voluntarios, quos beatos Christus Matth. 5. acclamat, hi nebulones proclamant? Illos, qui propter regnum caelorum recta adeundum, seipsos spiritualiter praeciderunt, et continentissime vivunt, ac ab omnibus se abstinent, ut coronam immarcescibilem consequantur, a via salutis aberrantes latrant? Non vituperant coniugia, Virginitatis amatores (ait S. Bonan.) sed virginitatem praeferunt cum Apostolo prima Corinth. Vide Sanctum Doctorem late hac de re differentem.

15 Therefore MERITEDLY anathema was imposed upon these rotten members, detractors especially of the Orders of Sisters, of S. Dominic, and D. Francis, as Bartholomeo Medina witnesses cap. 14. fol. 184. Which excommunication is reserved to the Pope. But Petrus Nauar. notes l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 354. Sylvest. v. Excommunicatio, 7. excom. 48. Sayrus l. 4. cap. 4. num. 10. Graff. l. 2. decisionum, cap. 137. Nauar. cap. 27. num. 109. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 3. num. 14. that the excommunication does not strike those detracting privately from these Religious Orders, but those publishing libellos famosos, songs, and rhymes to the infamy of these Orders. And the same holds for all the other mendicant Orders by extension of the same privilege, as is clear from a certain privilege of Alexander IV. which begins Ex alto; and from another, which begins Non sine multa. Those, however, are bound to sing a palinode in writing.

MERITO igitur anathema fuit impositum his membris putridis, Religionum apprime Sororum, S. Dominici, ac D. Francisci, detractotibus, teste Bartholomeo Medina cap. 14. fol. 184. Quae excommunicatio Papae est reservata. Sed advertunt Petrus Nauar. l. 2. de restit. cap. 4. num. 354. Sylvest. v. Excommunicatio, 7. excom. 48. Sayrus l. 4. cap. 4. num. 10. Graff. l. 2. decisionum, cap. 137. Nauar. cap. 27. num. 109. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 3. num. 14. excommunicationem non ferire detrahentes privatim de Religionibus his, sed edentes libellos famosos, cantilenas, et rithmos in ordinum istorum infamiam. Et idem valet de aliis omnibus Religionibus mendicantibus per extensionem eiusdem privilegii, ut patet ex quodam privilegio Alexandri IV. quod incipit. Ex alto; et ex alio, quod incipit. Non sine multa. Illi autem tenentur palinodiam scripto decantare.

16 Those, moreover, who COMPOSE famosos libellos against other persons, first sin mortally, because they gravely offend reputation, and the more gravely as the libelli remain long.

CONTEXENTES autem contra alias personas famosos libellos, primo peccant mortaliter, quia graviter offendunt famam, et eo gravius, quo libelli diu permanent.

17 FURTHERMORE, excommunication ferendae sententiae is inflicted upon them by C. quidam malign. et C. si qui inuenti, quaest. 1. if the libelli are against Ecclesiastics; for if against laymen, by canon law they are only to be beaten with rods, C. qui in alterius, 5. quaest. 1. which penalties Pius V. renewed in Bull 147. and Gregory XIII. in Bull 7.

PRAETEREA indicitur eis excommunicatio ferendae C. quidam malign. et C. si qui inuenti, quaest. 1. si libelli sint contra Ecclesiasticos, nam si sint contra saeculares, iure canonico tantum virgis caedendi sunt, C. qui in alterius, 5. quaest. 1. quas poenas innovarunt Pius V. in Bulla 147. et Gregorius XIII. in Bulla 7.

18 THEREFORE Salonius errs 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 2. controv. 2. in saying they are excommunicated ipso facto. For they are only to be excommunicated, as Sayrus notes l. 4. cap. 4. num. 10. Nauar. cap. 18. num. 35. Sylvester, verbo libellus, num. 5. Filliuc. tract. 40. n. 81. Fagundez cap. 2. num. 17.

ITAQUE errat Salonius 2. 2. quaest. 72. art. 2. controv. 2. dicens, eos esse ipso facto excommunicatos. Sunt enim tantum excommunicandi, ut advertunt Sayrus l. 4. cap. 4. num. 10. Nauar. cap. 18. num. 35. Sylvester, verbo libellus, num. 5. Filliuc. tract. 40. n. 81. Fagundez cap. 2. num. 17.

19 Those, however, who find such defamatory libelli are bound to tear them up; otherwise, if they hand them to others, they fall into the same penalties, with the consenting parties.

ILLI vero, qui tales libellos inveniunt infamatorios, tenentur eos rescindere, alioqui, si dent aliis, cadent in easdem, cum consentientibus, poenas.

20 Yet it will NOT be said that one who reads through a libellus to only one person manifests it. So Burlatus consil. 99. l. 1. num. 17. Cephal. consil. 341. l. 3. num. 28., because that is called manifest which becomes known to many, according to Bartol. in Leg. haered. palam 21. ff. de testamentis, num. 2.

NON dicetur tamen libellum manifestare, qui uni tantum perlegit. Ita Burlatus consil. 99. l. 1. num. 17. Cephal. consil. 341. l. 3. num. 28. quia manifestum dicitur, quod pluribus innotescit, iuxta Bartol. in Leg. haered. palam 21. ff. de testamentis, num. 2.

Question VIII: Whether it is lawful to narrate a crime, notorious in one place, in another, where it is not known

1 We must suppose some cases, in which the difficulty about this matter is not so grave.

An liceat crimen, notorium in uno loco, narrare in alio, ubi non est notum.

OPORTET supponere aliquos casus, in quibus non est adeo gravis de hac re difficultas.

2 I SUPPOSE first, that manifesting the crime of anyone, even one already defamed, with the evil intention of gravely harming him, is mortal against charity. Thus the Doctors commonly, at Fagundez on the eighth precept of the Decalogue, cap. 4. n. 3., with St. Bonaventure, cap. 1. and 4. of the Speculum animae, where he often insists that the malice consists in the intention of harming.

SUPPONO primo, manifestare crimen alicuius etiam infamati, intentione mala graviter nocendi, esse mortale contra charitatem. Ita communiter Doctores apud Fagundez in octavum praeceptum Decal. cap. 4. n. 3. cum D. Bonav. cap. 1. et 4. Speculi animae, ubi saepe iniungit, malitiam consistere in intentione nocendi.

3 I SAY second. If someone formerly defamed has now recovered his reputation, it will be mortal to defame him again by renewing the memory of the crime. Thus the Doctors commonly, at Fagundez num. 4.; Tanner, disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 143., although Lessius, l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 13., says it is only against charity.

DICO secundo. Si aliquis infamatus olim, iam suam recuperavit famam, erit mortale eum iterum infamare renovando criminis memoriam. Ita communiter Doctores apud Fagundez num. 4. Tannetum disp. 4. quaest. 8. n. 143. etsi Less. l. 2. cap. 11. dub. 13. dicat, esse solum contra charitatem.

4 I SAY third. If someone is defamed in one place and has not repaired his reputation, it is not mortal to relate his crime in another place, where his reputation must soon be carried. Thus Tanner, disput. 4. quaestione 8. num. 142.; Fagundez, numer. 9., citing Malderus, de Iustitia tract. 7. cap. 1. dub. 6.; Toledo, l. 5. cap. 63; Peter de Navarra, lib. II. cap. IV. num. 295; Lessius, lib. II. cap. XI. de tract. dub. 18. num. 78; Aragon, Bauny, Valencia; and others, to be cited below, who hold that it is not mortal to relate it even in an alien place, where the reputation was not to be carried. The same say Tannerus, and many at his place:

if anyone publishes the sentence of a Judge in even the most remote place, it is not a sin. But about this there is a great question.

> DICO tertio. Si aliquis in uno loco est infamatus, nec famam resarcivit, non esse mortale narrare eius crimen in alio loco, quo fama est brevi perferenda. Ita Tanner. disput. 4. quaestione 8. num. 142. Fagundez numer. 9. adducentes Malderum de Iust. tract. 7. cap. 1. dub. 6. Toletum l. 5. cap. 63: Petrum Navarrum lib. II. cap. IV. num. 295. Lessium lib. II. cap. XI. de tract. dub. 18. num. 78. Aragonium, Baunem, Valentiam; et alios, infra afferendos, afferentes, non esse mortale referre etiam in loco alieno, quo fama non erat perferenda. Idem dicunt Tannerus, et multi apud eum; si quis sententiam Iudicis vulget in loco etiam remotissimo, non esse peccatum. Sed de hoc est grandis quaestio.

5 The FIRST opinion is, that it is a mortal sin, at least against CHARITY, to relate some crime in a place where reputation would never arrive. In this sentiment are the Doctors commonly, at Diana, part. III. tract. V. resol. 17.; Lessius, lib. II. cap. XI. dub. 13. num. 28.; Sayrus, lib. V. quaest. X. art. II.; Villalobos, tom 1. tract. XI. diffic. 6. num. 13.; Faber, in IV. disp. 53. n. 130.; Salon, 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. II. controv. 18.; Navarrus, lib. II. cap. IV num. 288.; Sayrus, lib. XI. cap. IX. n. 25.; Malderus, 2. 2. tract. VII. cap. I. dub 6.; Adrian, quodl. XI., and very many others at the places cited, with Toledo, lib. V. c. 65.; Tanner, disp. IV. quaest. VIII num. 142.; Bassaeus, V. Detractio, 1. num. 10.

> PRIMA opinio est, esse peccatum mortale, saltem contra Charitatem, narrare aliquod crimen in loco, quo nunquam esset fama perventura. In hac sententia sunt communiter Doctores apud Dianam part. III. tract. V. resol. 17. Lessius lib. II. cap. XI. dub. 13. num. 28. Sayrus lib. V. quaest. X. art. II. Villalobo tom 1. tract. XI. diffic. 6. num. 13. Faber in IV. disp. 53. n. 130. Salon 2. 2. quaest. 62. art. II. controv. 18. Navar. lib. II. cap. IV num. 288. Sayrus lib. XI. cap. IX. n. 25. Malder. 2. 2. tract. VII. cap. I. dub 6. Adrianus quodl. XI. et alii plurimi apud allegatos cum Tolero lib. V. c. 65. Tannero disp. IV. quaest. VIII num. 142. Bassaeo V. Detractio, 1. num. 10.

6 The SECOND opinion denies that it is mortal. Thus Fagundez, on the eighth precept of the decalogue, lib. VIII. cap. IV. from num. 11. (a passage Diana cites wrongly.) The same think Cajetan, tom. II. opusc. 31. respons. 9.; Navarrus, summa, cap. XVIII. num. 26.; Maior, in IV. dist. XXI. quaest. II.; Azor, part. III. lib. XIII. dub. 8.; Filliucius, tom. II. tract. 32. cap. IX. num. 255.; Diana, loc. cit.; and Nangus, 3. part. tract. I. quaest 80. art. VI. diffic. 3., judges it probable.

> SECUNDA sententia negat esse mortale. Ita Fagundez in octavum praeceptum decal. lib. VIII. cap. IV. a num. 11. (locum male allegat Diana.) Idem sentiunt Caietanus, tom. II. opusc. 31. respons. 9. Navar. summa, cap. XVIII. num. 26. Maior in IV. dist. XXI. quaest. II. Azor part. III. lib. XIII. dub. 8. Filliucius tom. II. tract. 32. cap. IX. num. 255. Diana loc. cit. et probabilem existimat Nangus 3. part. tract. I. quaest 80. art. VI. diffic. 3.

7 The REASON is, because when crimes are notorious, the authors of them have lost their right to reputation; and if they have lost it by the sentence of a judge, it is a punishment, as is supposed, just, inflicted by judges, who intend that it be known by all.

> RATIO est, quia quando crimina sunt notoria, authores illorum ius ad famam amisere; et si ex iudicis sententia famam amisere, est poena, ut supponitur, iusta, inflicta a iudicibus, qui id intendunt, ut ab omnibus sciatur.

8 For truly, if a crime has been committed in some house, it will not be lawful to sound the trumpet through the streets and squares, and that will be mortal against justice. Soto, lib. V. de Iustitia quaest. X. art. II.; Malderus, de iustitia tract. VII. cap. I.; Fagundez, num. 10.

> ENIM vero si delictum in aliqua domo fuerit patratum, non licebit tuba canere per vicos, et plateas, et id erit mortale contra iustitiam, Sotus lib. V. de Iust. quaest. X. art. II. Malder. de iust. tract. VII. cap. I. Fagundez num. 10.

9 The REASON is, because he is not deprived of right by law, even if some rumor had broken out; and indeed a broad way would be opened to detractions.

> RATIO est, quia is non est iure privatus, etiamsi rumor aliquis erupisset; et sane ampla aperiretur via detractionibus.

Question IX: Whether it is lawful to reveal someone's hidden crime to escape torture

1 I SUPPOSE, that what is revealed in confession can never be told, even with death otherwise imminent. But SECRET crimes revealed to me in secret outside confession for the public harm, I can tell to the Judge, without danger even of irregularity, on account of a death about to follow someone, provided I protest that I denounce them to guard against evils without shedding of blood. Thus many Doctors at Fagundez lib. VIII. cap. V. num. 5.

> SUPPONO, revelatum in confessione nunquam posse dici, etiam imminente aliter morte. SECRETA vero crimina in publicam perniciem mihi secreto revelata extra confessionem, possum dicere Iudici, absque periculo etiam irregularitatis, ob mortem alicuius secuturam, modo protester, me denunciare ad mala cavenda sine sanguinis effusione. Ita Doctores multi apud Fagundez lib. VIII. cap. V. num. 5.

2 But in the question proposed, they commonly affirm that a crime known in secret outside confession can be revealed, if grave loss impends over an innocent neighbor, provided a fraternal correction has gone before, if that is hoped to be of profit. Thus St. Thomas 2. 2. q. 70. art. I. ad 2., and many others at Fagundez cap. VI. num. 7.; Bassaeus, V. Reus, num. 8.

> IN quaestione autem proposita, communiter afferunt, posse revelari crimen, extra confessionem cognitum secreto, si grave damnum proximo innocenti immineat, praemissa tamen fraterna correptione, si illa profutura speratur. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. q. 70. art. I. ad 2. et alii multi apud Fagundez cap. VI. num. 7. Bassaeum, V. Reus, num. 8.

3 Then they say that it is lawful, in order to avoid tortures and other grave evils, to tell an occult sin that has been heard, even if the death of the perpetrator follows. Thus Lessius lib. II. cap. XI. de detract. dub. 8. from num. 54.; Fagundez num. 9.; and Tanner indicates it, num. 149., with others.

> DEINDE dicunt, licere ad vitanda tormenta, et alia gravia mala, dicere peccatum occultum auditum, etiamsi mors patratoris sequatur. Ita Lessius lib. II. cap. XI. de detract. dub. 8. a num. 54. Fagundez num. 9. et indicat Tanner. num. 149. cum aliis.

4 But he WARNS first, that care must be taken not to include the secrets of Princes, whose revelation brings grave evils: Thus he admonishes with many others.

> MONET vero primo, cavendum ne includantur secreta Principum, quorum revelatio gravia inducit mala: Ita cum multis advertit.

5 He ADDS second, that otherwise a private secret is not to be revealed, if it has been received by force and fraud. The same teach Sotus lib. V. quaest. X. art. II.; Sayrus lib. XI. c. 3.; Navarrus summa cap. 28. num. 54. Moreover, that to reveal a secret without cause is mortal, St. Thomas the Doctor teaches in the Speculum animae, cap. primo, §. Machinatio, at the end.

ADDIT secundo, alias secretum privatum non revelandum, si vi, et fraude acceptum sit. Idem docent Sotus lib. V. quaest. X. art. II. Sayrus lib. XI. c. 3. Navar. summa cap. 28. num. 54. Caeterum revelare secretum sine causa, esse mortale docet S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. primo, §. Machinatio, in fine.

6 They DISPUTE here about the opening of letters. They ANSWER that to open letters without grave cause — for instance, a probable opinion that snares are being laid for oneself in them — is mortal, if you recognize with probability that they contain a grave matter; but not if you open ordinary letters out of levity. See Fagundez cap. IX. at the end.

DISPUTANT hic de apertione litterarum. RESPONDENT, aperire litteras, absque gravi causa, puta probabilis opinionis, in eis strui sibi insidias, esse mortale, si probabiliter grave negotium eas continere agnoscas; non autem si litteras ordinarias ex levitate aperias. Vide Fagundez cap. IX. in fine.

7 I indeed judge the opening of letters to be a most grave matter, since the confidence of human intercourse between the absent is destroyed, the peace of the Republic is disturbed, enmities are aroused. And since it must always be presumed that letters are sent for weightier causes, they are not to be opened except rashly.

EGO equidem aestimo rem esse gravissimam litteratum apertionem, quippe destruitur confidentia humani commercii inter absentes, pax Reipublicae perturbatur, excitantur inimicitiae. Et cum semper praesumendum sit, litteras propter graviores causas mitti, non nisi temere aperiuntur.

Question X: Whether anyone can defame himself

1 The FIRST opinion is, that it is deadly to defame oneself without cause. Thus Cajetan 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. II., and in the summa, v. Detractio. St. Antoninus, 3. part. tit. 8. cap. IV. §. 1.; Angelus, V. detractio, §. ult.; Sylvester, num. 4., who excuse two cases, when it is done out of fear of death; but Valencia, disp. cit. quaest. 17. puncto 2., says it is against CHARITY, which Malderus too thinks probable, tract. VII. cap. I. dub. 10.; but Turrianus, 2. 2. Tom. II. disput. 54. num. 11., says it is mortal against magnanimity. Tannerus also, disp. IV. quaest. VIII. num. 148., and others at his place.

PRIMA opinio est, esse mortiferum seipsum sine causa infamare. Ita Caietanus 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. II. et in summa, v. Detractio. D. Antonin. 3. part. tit. 8. cap. IV. §. 1. Angel. V. detractio, §. ult. Sylvest. num. 4. qui duo excusant, quando fit metu mortis, Valentia vero disp. cit. quaest. 17. puncto 2. ait, esse contra Charitatem, quod putat probabile etiam Malderus tract. VII. cap. I. dub. 10. Turrianus vero 2. 2. Tom. II. disput. 54. num. 11. dicit, esse mortale contra magnanimitatem. Tannerus etiam disp. IV. quaest. VIII. num. 148. et alii apud eum.

2 The SECOND opinion is, that to defame precisely oneself is not mortal. Thus St. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 57. art. IV., and quaest. 58. art. II.; Couar. lib. I. var. cap. II.; Toletan. lib II. de restit. cap. IV. part. 2. lib. I. num. 123., and part. 3. disp. I. num. 366.; Molina tract. IV. disp. 37.; Lessius lib. II. cap. XI. disp. 6.; Maldet. tract. VII. cap. I. disp. 10.; Sayrus lib. XI. cap. III. num. 33.; Filliucius tom. II. tract. 40. cap. IV. n. 123.; Tolet. lib. V. cap. 66.; Sotus lib. V. quaest. X. art. II.; Navar. sum. cap. XVIII.; Adrian. in IV. de restit. famae, q. 35.; Fagundez in VIII. praeceptum, lib. VIII. cap. VIII.

SECUNDA sententia est, infamare praecise seipsum non esse mortale. Ita D. Thom. 2. 2. quaest. 57. art. IV. et quaest. 58. art. II. Couar. lib. I. var. cap. II. Toletan. lib II. de restit. cap. IV. part. 2. lib. I. num. 123. et part. 3. disp. I. num. 366. Molina tract. IV. disp. 37. Lessius lib. II. cap. XI. disp. 6. Maldet. tract. VII. cap. I. disp. 10. Sayrus lib. XI. cap. III. num. 33. Filliucius tom. II. tract. 40. cap. IV. n. 123. Tolet. lib. V.

cap. 66. Sotus lib. V. quaest. X. art. II. Navar. sum. cap. XVIII. Adrian. in IV. de restit. famae, q. 35. Fagundez in VIII. praeceptum, lib. VIII. cap. VIII.

[3] The SERAPHIC Doctor seems to me constant for the first opinion, lib. IV Pharetrae, cap. 47., where he shows the necessity of good fame from the Fathers.

SERAPHICUS Doctor videtur mihi constans pro prima sententia, lib. IV Pharetrae, cap. 47. ubi necessitatem bonae famae ex Patribus ostendit.

[4] St. GREGORY in the Register, lib. VII. Ind. II. cap. II., says: Whatever can weigh down either your opinion or your soul, refuse it altogether, and consent to commit yourself to it by no one's persuasion. The same, lib. XXVI. moral. cap. 23.: He tortures the just when his [honor] is wounded, exalts the wicked: but while he tortures the just, he purifies them.

D. GREGORIUS in Registro, lib. VII. Ind. II. cap. II. ait: Quidquid gravare potest, aut opinionem tuam, aut animam, omnino refugias, et te committere illud, nullius suasione, consentias. Idem lib. XXVI. moral. cap. 23. Laeso sua iustos cruciat, iniquos exaltat: sed iustos dum cruciat, purgat.

[5] St. AUGUSTINE, de moribus, et vita clerici serm 53.: With the help of the Lord our God we ought to guard both our life and our reputation, so that those who praise us do not blush before detractors. And de bono viduitatis, cap. XXII.: In all the spiritual delights which the unmarried enjoy, their holy conversation must also be cautious, lest perhaps, although their life is not evil through wantonness, their reputation be evil through negligence.

S. AUGUSTINUS de moribus, et vita clerici serm 53. Nos adiuvante Domino Deo nostro, et vitam nostram, et famam sic custodire debemus, ut non erubescat detractoribus laudatores. Et de bono viduitatis, cap. XXII. In omnibus spiritualibus deliciis, quibus fruuntur innuptae, sancta earum conversatio cauta etiam debet esse, ne forte cum mala vita non sit per lasciviam, mala sit fama per negligentiam.

[6] And a little later: Our life is necessary to us; our fame to others, and whatever we mercifully minister to others for salvation, redounds also to our own utility.

Et paulo post: Nobis est necessaria vita nostra; aliis fama nostra, et quaeque quod aliis ministramus misericorditer ad salutem, ad nostram quoque redundat utilitatem.

[7] See also what is related in C. Noli, 12. quaest. 1.: He who, trusting in his conscience, neglects his reputation, is cruel. And l. 1. de civit. cap. 10.: No less guilty is he who admits a false crime about himself than if about his neighbor.

Videatur etiam relatus in C. Noli, 12. quaest. 1. Qui confidens conscientia, negligit famam, crudelis est. Et l. 1. de civit. cap. 10. Non minus reus est, qui de seipso falsum crimen fatetur, quam si de proximo.

[8] St. Jerome, epist. 2. ad Nepotianum: Beware of all suspicions, and whatever can probably be feigned, avoid beforehand that it not be feigned. And epist. 11. ad Agetuch.: Flee persons in whom there can be suspicion of evil conversation: nor have ready that saying of the street-corner. My conscience suffices me: I care not what men say of me. And certainly the Apostle provided good things not only before God, but also before men, lest through him the name of God be blasphemed among the nations.

D. Hieronymus epist. 2. ad Nepotianum: Caveto omnes suspiciones, et quidquid probabiliter fingi potest, ne fingatur, ante devita. Et epist. 11. ad Agetuch. Fuge personas, in quibus potest malae conversationis esse suspicio: nec paratum habeas illud de trivio. Sufficit mihi conscientia mea: non curo, quid de me loquantur homines. Et certe Apostolus providebat bona, non solum coram Deo, sed etiam coram hominibus, ne per illum nomen Dei blasphemaretur in gentibus.

9 And epist. 9. ad Salvian.: The fame of chastity in women is a tender thing, like a most beautiful flower, which quickly withers in a light breeze and is corrupted by a light gust.

Et epist. 9. ad Salvian. Tenera res in foeminis fama pudicitiae, est quasi flos pulcherrimus, cito ad levem marcescit auram, levique flatu corrumpitur.

10 St. Bernard, serm. 46. in Cant.: They who are placed over others must be strong and constant, who, spreading everywhere the good odor of their faith and conversation, can say with the Apostle: We are the good odor of Christ to God in every place.

D. Bernardus serm. 46. in Cant. Validos, et constantes necesse est esse eos, qui super alios ordinantur, qui et bonum fidei suae, et conversationis ubique odorem spargentes, dicere cum Apostolo possint: Christi bonus odor sumus Deo in omni loco.

11 And in sermon 71.: Virtue indeed will be joined with the whiteness of conscience, where the odor of fame cannot follow it; nor will it suffice to excuse the blemish of a discolored conscience; yet a man of good virtue will always provide, as far as in him lies, not only before God, but also before men.

Et sermone 71. Erit quidem virtus comexta candore conscientiae, ubi sequi non poterit odor famae, nec excusare sufficiet vitium conscientiae decoloris, providebit tamen semper, quantum in se est, homo virtutis bona, non tantum coram Deo, sed coram hominibus.

12 And de considet. l. 3.: It concerns your perfection to avoid both evil things and equally evil appearances: in the one you consult your conscience; in the other, your fame. Be strong in faith, comely in glory, and you have proved yourself an imitator of God. Your strength is the faith of your conscience: and your comeliness is the splendor of good opinion. Such is St. Bernard.

Et de considet. l. 3. Interest tuae perfectionis, et malas res, et malas pariter species devitare: in altero conscientiae; in altero famae consulis. Esto fortis in fide, decorus in gloria, et probasti te imitatorem Dei. Fortitudo tua fides conscientiae est: Et decor tuus splendor bonae opinionis est. Haec D. Bernardus.

13 Nor indeed are these simple admonitions, as Fagundez thinks, num. 4., but precepts for guarding against grave evils. Indeed, from this an occasion of scandal is given, a way is opened to sins, when a man of good reputation is heard to fall most disgracefully; but the rules must be taken from what usually follows. Usually also fame is necessary, as in a Father of a family, a Lord, a Pastor, etc.; usually it redounds to others, as to a family. Therefore the adversaries are forced to give many exceptions.

Neque vero sunt hae simplices admonitiones, ut putat Fagundez num. 4. sed praecepta ad mala gravia cavenda. Sane hinc datur occasio scandali, aperitur via peccatis, dum vir bonae famae turpissime labi auditur; ab eo autem, quod plerumque sequitur sumendae sunt regulae. Plerumque etiam necessaria est fama, ut in Patrefamilias, Domino, Pastore, etc. plerumque redundat in alios, ut in familiam. Ideo multas coguntur adversarii dare exceptiones.

14 They object. Everyone is the Lord of his own reputation, as of his own goods.

Obiiciunt. Unusquisque est Dominus propriae famae, sicuti et suarum opum.

15 It is answered with St. Bonaventure in the Speculum animae, cap. 1., by denying the parity; for, as is said in Proverbs 28., reputation is of a higher order.

Respondetur cum D. Bonavent. in speculo animae, cap. 1. negando paritatem; nam, ut dicitur Proverb. 28. fama est ordinis superioris.

16 They object secondly that of Matth. 23., where we are commanded not to seek the first places.

Obiiciunt secundo id Matth. 23. ubi iubemur non appetere prima loca.

17 I answer; It is one thing not to seek the first places, and another to defame oneself, as the holy Doctor deduces from the authorities cited.

Respondeo; Diversum esse non appetere prima loca, et se infamare, ut ex authoritatibus allatis deducit S. Doctor.

18 They ask here: Whether, in order to avoid tortures, someone can confess a grave crime that is false and imposed upon us, which they wish to extort by torments.

Quaerunt hic: An ad vitandas torturas possit aliquis confiteri grave crimen falsum, nobis impositum, quod vellent tormentis extorquere.

19 Many say many things at Fagundez l. 8. cap. 9., and Tanner num. 149.

Multi multa dicunt apud Fagundez l. 8. cap. 9. et Tannernum num. 149.

20 First I say, that one cannot impose a false crime upon oneself. Cajet., 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2.; Armill. and Sylvester, v. detract. num. 4.; St. Antonin., 3. p. tit. 8. cap. 4. §. 1.; Valencia, disp. 5. quaest. 17. punct. 2. The same judge those who teach that he who has imposed a false crime upon himself is bound to retract it in the place of execution. Thus the Abbot, in cap. ex parte 2. num. 2. de sepulturis.; Felin., C. causam, num 7.; Archid., 2. p. tit. 11. cap. 21. §. 3.; Socin., in repetit. C. Ad audientiam; Sanches, Tom. 1. Decal. l. 3. cap. 7. num. 12.

Primo dico, non posse sibi crimen falsum imponere, Caiet. 2. 2. quaest. 73. art. 2. Armill. et Sylvest. v. detract. num. 4. D. Antonin. 3. p. tit. 8. cap. 4. §. 1. Valentia disp. 5. quaest. 17. punct. 2. Idem censent, qui docent, teneri eum, qui sibi crimen falsum imposuit, in loco supplicii retractare. Ita Abbas in cap. ex parte 2. num. 2. de sepulturis. Felin. C. causam, num 7. Archid. 2. p. tit. 11. cap. 21. §. 3. Socin. in repetit. C. Ad audientiam, Sanches Tom. 1. Decal. l. 3. cap. 7. num. 12.

21 It is proved, because no one is the Lord of his own life.

Probatur, quia nullus est Dominus suae vitae.

22 Wherefore the opinion of Fagundez does not seem proven to me, num 2., who cites other Doctors, num. 9.; nor that of Tanner, who cites Valencia, Soto, Navarrus, and Lessius for the opposite opinion, which he subscribes to, holding that one can impose upon oneself a false defaming crime.

Quare mihi non probatur opinio Fagundez num 2. qui alios num. 9. Doctores allegat; neque Tanneri, qui citat Valentiam, Sotum, Navarrum, et Lessium pro sententia opposita, cui subscribit tenens, posse sibi falsum infamans imponere.

23 He asks also in cap. 10.: Whether a man, in dispensations that are sought from the Supreme Pontiff, is bound to defame himself by manifesting an occult coupling with an affine or blood-relative.

Quaerit etiam cap. 10. Virum in dispensationibus, quae petuntur a Summo Pontifice, teneatur quis se infamare, manifestando copulam occultam cum affine, vel consanguinea.

[24] He answers that nowhere in the law is there a precept of explaining such a coupling and defaming oneself; but it is more probable that one is bound by the decree of the Congregation of the most Eminent Cardinals upon the Council of Trent, sess. 24. cap. 5., and this is the style of the Roman curia; for the style of the curia makes law, C. in causis, C. ex litteris de constitut., and C. quam gravi de crimine falsi. And for this he reports many Doctors. Mascard. vol. 3. de probat. consil. 1312. num. 21.

> Respondet, nullibi in iure haberi praeceptum explicandi talem copulam, seque infamandi; sed probabilius est, teneri decreto Congregationis Eminentiss. Cardin. super Concilium Tridentinum sess. 24. cap. 5. et iste est Romanae curiae stylus; stylus enim curiae facit legem, C. in causis, C. ex litteris de constitut. et C. quam gravi de crimine falsi. Et pro hoc plures refert Doctores Mascard. vol. 3. de probat. consil. 1312. num. 21.

Disputation XXXV: On Whispering, Mockery, and Cursing

1 To Contumely and Detraction, of which we have spoken, are akin Whispering, Mockery, and Cursing; all of these are most hostile to Charity; and they inflict no small loss upon our neighbor: while the first forces him to part from a friend; the second suffuses him with shame; the third, finally, imprecates evil upon him. These three I shall treat in as many questions.

> Contumeliae, et Detractioni, de quibus dictum est, affines sunt Susurratio, Irrisio, et Maledictio; Charitati hae omnes sunt infensissimae; et Proximo non mediocre damnum inferunt; dum vel prima eum ab amico cogit discedere; vel secunda pudore suffundit; vel tertia denique malum ei imprecatur. Has tres totidem quaestionibus absolvam.

Question I: On the malice of whispering

1 The Whisperer is also called two-tongued (bilinguis), since he subverts his neighbors on both sides by whisperings, as it were with two tongues: Of this Ecclesiasticus 28.: The whisperer and the two-tongued is cursed; for he will trouble many who were at peace.

> Susurro dicitur etiam bilinguis, quippe qui proximos utrinque susurrationibus, quasi duabus linguis subvertat: De hoc Eccles. 28. Susurro, et bilinguis maledictus; multos enim turbabit, pacem habentes.

2 Whispering (susurratio) is occult detraction against one's neighbor, by which discord could arise among friends. Thus it is taken from St. Thomas, art. 1.; Valencia, disput. 5. quaest. 18.; Soto, l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 11. art. 3.; Sayrus, l. 12. cap. 5.; Filliucius, Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 135.; Fagundez, l. 8. cap. 12.. Most excellently the holy Doctor in the Opusc. explicatio sermonum Theology penetrates the formal element of whispering-detraction, defining it thus: Whispering is the will of speaking, sowing discords among brothers.

> Susurratio est occulta obloquutio contra proximum, qua possit oriti discordia inter amicos. Ita sumitur ex D. Thom. art. 1. Valentia disput. 5. quaest. 18. Sotos l. 5. de Iust. quaest. 11. art. 3. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 5. Filliuc. Tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 135. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 12. Optime S. Doct. in Opusc. explicatio sermonum Theologia penetrat formale detractionis susurratoriae, sic eam definiens: Susurratio est voluntas loquendi, seminans discordias inter fratres.

3 That formal whispering is a mortal sin the holy Doctor proves in the Speculum animae, cap. 1. §. Machinatio, at the end, from that Proverb 6.: Six are the things which the Lord hates, and the seventh his soul detests. He who sows discords among brothers.

> Esse autem peccatum mortale formalem Susurrationem probat S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. Machinatio ad finem, ex illo Proverb. 6. Sex sunt, quae odit Dominus, et septimum detestatur anima eius. Qui seminat discordias inter fratres.

4 That it is worse than theft, detraction, and contumely is proved by Tanner, disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 152., from St. Bonaventure, serm. 10. de Apostolis, and St. Thomas, quaest. 74. art. 1., from that Ecclesiasticus 6.: There is no comparison with a faithful friend, nor a weighing of gold worthy [of him], nor of silver, that could resist the goodness of his fidelity. Hence this argument is drawn. A sin is the worse, the greater a good it takes away: but whispering takes away a greater good than theft, detraction, or contumely: Therefore. The minor is proved, for it takes away friendship, a most precious good above riches, reputation, and honor: Therefore also the vice destructive of friendship is the worst. The minor is proved secondly from St. Bonaventure, serm. 9. de Sanctis Apostolis: That is always better which is more like the better, from Aristotle 3. Top. cap. 2. loco 32., and l. 2. de caelo text. 66. But Christian friendship makes one like God in an exquisite manner; whence John 15.: In this shall they know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another.

Esse autem peiorem furto, detractione, et contumelia, probatur a Tannero disp. 4. quaest. 8. num. 152. ex D. Bonau. serm. 10. de Apostolis, et D. Thom. quaest. 74. art. 1. ex illo Eccles. 6. Amico fideli nulla est comparatio, nec auri digna ponderatio, nec argenti, qua possit resistere contra bonitatem fidei illius. Hinc eruitur argumentum. Tanto peius est peccatum, quanto maius aufert bonum: Sed susurratio tollit maius bonum, quam furtum, detractio, vel contumelia: Ergo. Minor probatur, nam tollit amicitiam pretiosissimum bonum super diuitias, famam, et honorem: Ergo et vitium amicitiae destructiuum, est pessimum. Probatur secundo Minor a D. Bonau. serm. 9. de Sanctis Apostolis Id semper est melius, quod meliori similius ex Aristotele 3. Top. cap. 2. loco 32. et l. 2. de caelo text. 66. Sed amicitia Christiana facit similem Deo, modo exquisito; unde Ioan. 15. In hoc cognoscent quia discipuli mei estis, si dilectionem habueritis ad inuicem.

5 The minor is PROVED thirdly from St. Bonaventure, ibid.: The end is nobler than the things that are toward the end; but CHARITY is the end of human life: Therefore it is nobler than fame, honor, and riches, which are only means. St. Thomas confirms it with the Scriptures gathered together, Rom. 13.: Owe nothing to anyone, except that you love one another; Therefore the fullness of the law is love. Psalm 81.: I have said: You are gods, and sons of the Most High. St. John always insisted: Little children, love one another, and if this be done, it suffices.; many excellent things he adds also in the sermon on Saints Philip and James. The same he repeats on Luke 11.: Which of you has a friend.

PROBATUR tertio Minor a D. Bonau. ibi. Finis est nobilior his, quae ad finem; sed Charitas est finis vitae humanae: Ergo nobilior fama, honore, et diuitiis, quae sunt media tantum. Id confirmat S. Doctor aggregatis Scripturis, Rom. 13. Nemini quidquam debeatis, nisi ut inuicem diligatis; Plenitudo ergo legis est dilectio. Psalm. 81. Ego dixi Dii estis, et filii excelsi. D. Ioannes semper instabat: Filioli diligite alterutrum, et si hoc fiat, sufficit. praeclara multa addit etiam serm. de Sanctis Philippo, et Iacobo. Eadem refricat ad id Lucae 11. Quis habet amicum.

6 In the first sermon on St. Bartholomew he adduces the saying of Tully in the Laelius de amicitia, and of Valerius Maximus, l. 4. cap. 7., who say that friendship is to be preferred to kinship, and Tully concludes: Friendship is to be preferred to all human things.

SERMONE primo de S. Bartholomaeo, affert dictum Tullii in Lelio de amicitia, et Valerii maximi l. 4. cap. 7. dicentium, amicitiam propinquitati praeferri, et concludit Tullius: Omnibus rebus humanis amicitia praeferenda.

7 See the holy Doctor also in collation 18. on cap. 3. of John.

Vide S. Doctorem etiam collatione 18. in cap. 3. Ioannis.

8 He shows THE SAME on Luke 16. in these words: I know what I shall do, where the steward preferred friends to riches, because a friend is the light of life, he is a treasure. Eccl. 6, on the contrary enmity is like darkness and death. 1 John 2.: He who hates his brother is in darkness. Therefore he who breaks friendship and introduces enmity is the worst. Therefore Ecclesiasticus 29.: Lose your money for a friend.

IDIPSUM ostendit ad 16. Lucae in ea verba: Scio quid faciam, ubi Villicus amicos diuitiis praeferebat, quia amicus est lux vitae, est thesaurus. Eccl. 6, e contra inimicitia similis est tenebris, et morti prima Ioan. 2. Qui odit fratrem suum, in tenebris est. Igitur, qui rumpit amicitiam, et inuehit inimicitiam, est pessimus. Ideo Eccles. 29. Perde pecuniam propter amicum.

9 This sin is against justice, at least if it is contracted by deceit, fraud, lies, or the revelation of secrets: The reason is, because everyone has a right to this good, which is to be preferred to others. Thus Fagundez, cap. 12.; Filliucius, tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 137.

> Hoc peccatum est contra iustitiam, saltem si dolo, fraude, mendaciis, vel reuelatione occultorum contrahatur: Ratio est, quia habet quisque ius ad hoc bonum, quod caeteris est praeferendum. Ita Fagundez cap. 12. Filliuc. tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 137.

10 You will ASK: Whether it is lawful to whisper to a Prince or Prelate, so that I may succeed him in friendship in place of another, of whom he speaks ill.

> QUAERES: An liceat insusurrare Principi, vel Praelato, ut succedam ei in amicitiam loco alterius, de quo detrahat.

11 It is ANSWERED that it cannot be done. Thus Soto, l. 5. quaest. 11. art. 1.; Salon., 2. 2. quaest. 74. art. 1.; Sayrus, l. 11. cap. 5. from num. 5.; Fagundez, l. 8. cap. 12. num. 6.

> RESPONDETUR, non posse fieri. Ita Sotus l. 5. quaest. 11. art. 1. Salon. 2. 2. quaest. 74. art. 1. Sayrus l. 11. cap. 5. a num. 5. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 12. num. 6.

12 The REASON is, because one's own good is not a sufficient reason to deprive another of his right; otherwise it would be lawful to steal. Next it is against the natural precept, that we do not do to another what we would not want done to ourselves.

> RATIO est, quia bonum proprium non est ratio sufficiens, ut priuem alium suo iure; alioqui liceret furari. Deinde est contra naturale praeceptum, ut non faciamus alteri quod nobis fieri noluimus.

13 You will ASK: whether he who dissuades one who wishes to resign a benefice, or to bequeath goods to someone, so that he assign those goods to himself, is a Whisperer.

> QUAERES: an qui volentem resignare beneficium, vel legare bona alicui, et dissuadet, ut sibi ea bona assignet, sit Susurro.

14 It is ANSWERED that if he does not proclaim him unworthy, and only exhorts, he does not sin according to Fagundez, because the other does not yet have a right to those goods.

> RESPONDETUR, si non proclamat indignum, et solum hortatur; non peccare secundum Fagundez, quia ille nondum habet ius ad ea bona.

Question II: On the malice of mockery

1 MOCKERY (irrisio) is a vice of the tongue, which tends to the neighbor's blushing, and consequently deprives the neighbor of peace and serenity of conscience. Thus St. Thomas, art. 1.; Cajetan, and commonly the Thomists, and other interpreters: St. Bonaventure, l. 3. Pharetrae cap. 3. §. de derisione, where he adduces the charming saying of St. Gregory, l. 25. Moral. cap. 8.: It must be feared, lest when we ourselves fall, he rise again whom we mocked while we stood, though he now knows not how to stand who knew how to mock one standing. Where he seems to indicate that to mock gravely is a mortal sin.

> IRRISIO est vitium linguae, quod tendit ad proximi erubescentiam, et per consequens proximum pace, ac serenitate conscientiae priuat. Ita D. Thom. art. 1. Caiet. et communiter Thomistae, aliique interpretes: D. Bonauentura l. 3. Pharetrae cap. 3. §. de derisione*, ubi lepidam D. Gregorii* l. 25. Moral. cap. 8. sententiam affert: Timendum est, ne etiam nobis cadentibus surgat, qui a nobis stantibus irridetur, quamuis stare iam non nouerit, qui non stantem nouerit irridere. Ubi videtur indicare, esse peccatum mortale grauiter deridere.

2 He PROVES it in the Bible of the Poor, cap. 70., from punishments. For thus Judges 8.: the men of Sochoth mocked Gedeon, and were condemned to a hard death. Michol, 2 Kings 6., because she mocked David, was made barren by God. The children who mocked Eliseus, 4 Kings 2., were by God's command torn by bears.

> ID probat in Bibliis pauperum cap. 70. ex punitionibus. Sic enim Iudic. 8. Viri Sochot deridebant Gedeonem, et dura morte damnati sunt. Michol 2. Reg. 6. quia derisit Dauidem sterilis a Deo facta est. Pueri, qui deriserunt Eliseum 4. Reg. 2. iussu Dei fuerunt Ursis lacerati.

3 But the holy Doctor ADMONSISHES in the Speculum animae, cap. 1. §. second branch of pride, and cap. 4. §. ex contemptu proximi that mockeries, ironies, and scoffings mostly arise from pride and contempt, and are mortal against charity; but with contempt excluded, it will not be mortal, because mockery is opposed to defects in the manner of light ones, so that it suffuses [the victim] with blushing. Thus also St. Thomas, art. 2., where Cajetan, Soto, l. 5. quaest. 11. art. 1.; Filliucius, Tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 143.; Valencia, quaest. 18. p. 2.; Sayrus, l. 12. cap. 5.; Fagundez, l. 8. cap. 12. num. 11.; Tanner, disp. 4. quaest. 8. num 159.

> ADMONET autem S. Doctor in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. secundus ramus superbiae, et cap. 4. §. ex contemptu proximi derisiones, ironias, et subsannationes plerumque oriri e superbia, et contemptu, esseque mortalia contra charitatem; secluso vero contemptu, non erit mortale, quia irrisio opponir defectus ad modum leuium, ut rubore suffundat. Ita etiam D. Thom. art. 2. ubi Caietanus, Sotus l. 5. quaest. 11. art. 1. Filliuc. Tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 143. Valentia quaest. 18. p. 2. Sayrus l. 12. cap. 5. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 12. num. 11. Tanner. disp. 4. quaest. 8. num 159.

4 IF, however, you judge that he will be most gravely moved, it will be mortal, thus Soto, loc. cit. art. 2. concl. 2.; Filliucius, loc. cit.; St. Thomas with Cajetan and the others above.

> SI tamen putes, grauissime commouendum, erit mortale, ita Sotus loc. cit. art. 2. concl. 2. Filliuc. loc. cit. D. Thom. cum Caietano, et alii supra.

5 LIKEWISE, if someone should mark out a fool by irony or mockery, then he would sin more gravely than if he hurled an insult. The reason is, because it adds contempt, as St. Thomas argues.

> ITIDEM, Si quis ironia, vel irrisione stultum notaret, tunc grauius peccaret, quam si contumeliam ferio iaceret. Ratio est, quia addit contemptum, ut arguit D. Thomas.

6 But St. Bonaventure WARNS, cap. 1. of the Speculum, loc. cit., that subsannatio is by gesture, but irrisio by voice. Thus also Tanner with St. Thomas, quaest. 75. art. 1.

> MONET autem D. Bonau. cap. 1. speculi, loc. cit. subsannationem esse gestu; irrisionem autem voce. Ita etiam Tannerus cum D. Thom. quaest. 75. art. 1.

7 But the mocking of Parents is a grave sin, whence Genesis 7.[9:25]: Chanaan was cursed, as St. Thomas, Cajetan, and Soto note. Therefore Proverbs 30.: The eye that mocks a father, and despises the bearing of his mother, let the ravens of the torrents pick it out, and the sons of the eagle eat it.

> GRAVE autem peccatum est Parentum irrisio, unde Genes. 7. maledictus est Chanaan, ut notant D. Thom. Caietanus, et Sotus. Ideo Prouerb. 30. Oculum qui subsannat Patrem, et despicit partum matris suae, effodiant Corui de torrentibus, et comedant eum filii Aquilae.

8 Tanner, in 4., and Valencia ADD that sometimes it is not a sin, if done for correction, or for suitable recreation, but they enjoin diligent caution.

> ADDUNT Tanner. in 4. et Valentia, aliquando non esse peccatum, si fiat ad correptionem, vel ob recreationem conuenientem, sed diligentem cautionem iniungunt.

Question III: On curses

1 MALEDICTION is defined by St. Bonaventure in the Declaratory Dictionary of Theological Terms: To curse is for anyone to wish that blows or punishments be impressed upon someone by word. So also St. Thomas.

> MALEDICTIO definitur a D. Bonauent. in Declaratorio Terminorum Theologiae: Maledicere est alicui plagas, vel poenas, verbo optatino impressari. Ita etiam D. Thom.

2 St. Thomas, art. 1. Filliuc, Tract. 40, cap. 5, num. 146. Fagundez, l. 8, cap. 12, num. 18, and others cited by him, define cursing as: An imprecation of evil, under the aspect of evil, and they add that a curse can be made either imperatively or optatively; but I do not see that they can exercise a proper command unless they order someone killed or struck, which is not to curse.

> D. Thom. art. 1. Filliuc. Tract. 40. cap. 5. num. 146. Fagundez l. 8. cap. 12. num. 18. et alii apud eum, qui definiunt maledictionem: Imprecationem mali, sub ratione mali, et addunt, posse fieri maledictionem, vel impetative, vel optative: Sed non video, quod imperium proprium exercere queant, nisi iubeant occidi, vel percuti, quod non est maledicere.

3 THEY SAY, further, that "an imprecation of evil, under the aspect of evil," is added to the definition because someone can imprecate evil under the aspect of good, as when someone is justly punished for a fault.

> DICUNT autem, addi in definitione esse imprecationem mali, sub ratione mali, quia potest aliquis imprecari malum, sub ratione boni; ut quod aliquis pro delicto iuste puniatur.

4 THEY ADD that to curse with the mouth only is only a material cursing, such as certain Fathers usually commit, and who therefore do not sin gravely. So in Bassaeus, v. maledictio.

> ADDUNT etiam, maledicere ore tantum, esse tantum materialem maledictionem, sicuti solent Patres, qui ideo graviter non peccant. Sic apud Bassaeum, v. maledictio.

5 I ASSUME here that if we imprecate evil out of justice, it is not a sin. Thus Noah in Genesis 9 cursed his grandson; Genesis 27, Isaac: Let him that curseth thee be cursed. Genesis 49, Jacob against Simeon and Levi: Cursed be their fury. In Deuteronomy 27 Moses heaps up many curses against sinners. Joshua imprecated a curse on those who would rebuild Jericho, cap. 6; 4 Kings 2, Eliseus cursed the mocking boys.

> SUPPONO hic, si ex iustitia imprecemur malum, non esse peccatum. Sic enim Noë Genes. 9. maledixit Nepoti, Genes. 27. Isaac. Qui maledixerit tibi, sit ille maledictus. Genes. 49. Iacob Simeoni, et Leui: Maledictus furor eorum. Deuter. 27. multas congerit Moyses maledictiones contra peccatores. Iosue maledictionem imprecatus est eis, qui Hierico reaedificarent cap. 6. 4. Reg. 2. Elisaeus maledixit pueris irrisoribus.

6 THIS IS PROVED from St. Bonaventure, loc. cit. of the Pharetra, from the Fathers, from St. Gregory, l. 4, Moral., cap. 6: A curse is uttered one way under the pretext of justice, another through the rancor of vengeance: when holy men pronounce a sentence of cursing, it bursts from them not from a desire of revenge, but from the justice of judgment. Therefore Gregory of Valencia, in the place cited, warns sons to fear the curses of their parents when they are just; but those who curse without cause sin most grievously.

> PROBATUR id a D. Bonav. loc. cit. Pharetrae, ex Patribus, D. Gregorii l. 4. Moral. cap. 6. Aliter maledictum profertur praetextu iustitiae: aliter livore vindictae: Cum sancti viri maledictionis sententiam proferunt, non ad hanc ex voto ultionis, sed ex iustitia examinis erumpunt. Ideo monet filios Gregorius de Valentia loco citando, ut timeant parentum maledictiones, cum iustae sunt; sine causa autem maledicentes, gravissime peccant.

7 MOREOVER, cursing is of itself a mortal sin.

> CAETERUM maledictio est peccatum ex genere suo mortale.

8 THIS IS PROVED first from St. Bonaventure, in the Mirror of the Soul, cap. 1, §. Item solium discordiae, and l. 3 of the Pharetra, cap. 3, §. 1, according to the exposition of Sts. Augustine, de conflictu vitiorum, cap. 9, and Gregory, l. 3, Dial. cap. 15, from that first verse to the Corinthians 6: Nor shall cursers possess the kingdom of God.

> PROBATUR a D. Bonau. primo in speculo animae, cap. 1. §. Item solium discordiae, et l. 3. Pharetrae, cap. 3. §. 1. iuxta expositionem SS. August. de conflictu vitiorum, cap. 9. et Gregorii l. 3. dialog. cap. 15. ex illa prima ad Corinth. 6. Neque maledici regnum Dei possidebunt.

9 IT IS PROVED secondly from St. Bonaventure in the Pharetra, from the Fathers, from St. Gregory, l. 22, Mor. cap. 6: They who assail an enemy with curses, what else do they wish God to do to him than what they themselves either cannot do, or blush to do? And in the Register, book 2, index 10, cap. 34, to a certain Archbishop: You show nothing of thinking on heavenly things, but you signify that you have an earthly thought: while for your own vengeance for an injury — which the sacred rules forbid — you have invaded with the curse of anathema. And lib. 3, Dial. cap. 15, on the Apostle's words: Nor shall cursers possess the kingdom of God. Consider how great is the guilt that separates from the kingdom of heavenly life.

> PROBATUR secundo a D. Bonau. in Pharetra ex Patribus, e D. Gregorio l. 22. Mor. cap. 6. Qui maledictionibus inimicum impetunt, quid aliud in illo Deum facere volunt, nisi, quod ipsi aut facere nequeunt, aut erubescunt? et in Registro lib. 2. indice 10. cap. 34. apud quemdam Archiepiscopum: Nil te ostendis de caelestibus cogitare, sed terrenam te cogitationem habere significas: dum pro vindicta propria iniuriae, quod Sacris regulis prohibetur, maledictum anathematis invexisti. Et lib. 3. Dial. cap. 15. ad ea verba Apostoli: Neque maledici regnum Dei possidebunt. Pensa quam grandis est culpa, quae separat a regno caelestis vitae.

10 ST. AUGUSTINE, lib. de conflictu vitiorum et virtutum, cap. 9: What is to be said of those who, in the fury of blindness, burst forth even into words of cursing, except what the Apostle says: Nor shall cursers possess the kingdom of God?

> D. AUGUST. lib. de conflictu vitiorum, et virtutum, cap. 9. Quid de illis dicendum est, qui furore caecitatis, usque ad verba prorumpunt maledictionis, nisi hoc quod Apostolus ait: Neque maledici regnum Dei possidebunt?

11 And in Proverbs 26: A curse uttered in vain against anyone shall come upon the one who utters it, where the Interlinear gloss has: Upon the one who utters it.

> Et in Prouerb. 26. Maledictum frustra prolatum in quempiam devolvetur, ubi habet Interlinearis: In proferentem.

12 NEVERTHELESS (as the Holy Doctor says above) the word of a curse can be venial, either because of the smallness of the evil desired, or because the words are spoken in jest, or by surprise, or out of zeal for justice, or without a wicked affection. And in this way St. Augustine, sermon 41 on the Saints, indicates it is venial.

> CONTINGIT tamen (ait S. Doct. supra) verbum maledictionis esse veniale, vel propter parvitatem mali optati, vel quia ludo, vel subreptione, vel Zelo iustitiae, vel non malo affectu verba dicuntur. Et hoc modo D. Augustinus sermone 41. de Sanctis indicat esse veniale.

13 SOME DOUBT: whether it is lawful to imprecate an evil upon someone for a right end, that is, sickness upon a sinner, so that he may repent.

> DUBITANT aliqui: An liceat imprecari alicui malum ad rectum finem, idest aegritudinem peccatori, ut resipiscat.

14 SOME DENY it, because what is not lawful to do is not lawful to desire.

> QUIDAM negant, quia quod non licet facere, non licet desiderare.

15 THE TRUER opinion is affirmative. So St. Thomas, quaest. 76, art. 7; Sotus, l. 5, quaest. 12, art. 1; Filliuc, tomo 2, tract. 40, cap. 5, numer. 149; Fagundez, lib. 8, cap. 22, num. 21. The reason is that the end is more important, and therefore a good is wished to him when some penalty, ordered to a good end, is wished. And what is lawful to desire is lawful to pray for, as Bass. 4 and Sanci. sel. disp. 2 and 6 say.

> VERIOR sententia est assertiva. Ita D. Thom. quaest. 76. art. 7. Sotus l. 5. quaest. 12. art. 1. Filliuc. tomo 2. tract. 40. cap. 5. numer. 149. Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 22. num. 21. Ratio est, quia finis est potior, et ideo optatur ei bonum, dum optatur aliqua poenalitas, ad finem bonum ordinata. Et quod licet desiderare, licet precari, ut ait Bass. 4. et Sanci. sel. disp. 2. et 6.

16 FINALLY THEY ASK: whether it is lawful to curse irrational creatures.

> QUAERUNT tandem: An liceat maledicere creaturis irrationalibus.

17 ST. BONAVENTURE ANSWERS, in his commentary on Psalm 39, universally that it is not lawful to curse these. He proves it from Romans 12: Bless, and curse not: and from that passage of 1 Corinthians 6 cited above.

> RESPONDET universaliter S. Bonau. ad Psal. 39. non licere his maledicere. Probat Rom. 12. Benedicite, et nolite maledicere: Et ex illo prima Corinth. 6. supra allato.

18 THEY OBJECT that David cursed the mountains of Gelboe, 2 Kings 1.

> OBIICIUNT, Davidem maledixisse montibus Gelboe 2. Reg. 1.

19 IT IS ANSWERED with St. Bonaventure, de gradibus virtutum, cap. 16, that David was lamenting the ruin of Israel, and rather cursed the misfortune of the men. So also St. Thomas, quaest. 76, article two.

> RESPONDETUR cum D. Bonau. de gradibus virtutum, cap. 16. Davidem plorasse ruinam Israël, et potius maledixisse infortunio virorum. Ita etiam D. Thomas quaest. 76. articulo secundo.

20 THEY OBJECT secondly that Job cursed the day of his birth and the night of his conception.

> OBIICIUNT secundo, Iobum maledixisse diei suae natiuitatis, et conceptionis nocti.

21 ST. BONAVENTURE ANSWERS, in the Mirror of the Blessed Virgin, lecture eleven, that Job cursed the night of his conception not as it was a day or night, but as it was stained in it by original sin. So Fagundez also answers, lib. 8, cap. 13, number 24.

> RESPONDET D. Bonauent. in speculo Beatae Virginis, lectione undecima, Iobum maledixisse, nocti suae conceptionis, non ut erat dies, vel nox, sed ut maculatus in ea est peccato originis. Sic respondet etiam Fagundez lib. 8. cap. 13. numero 24.

22 GREGORY OF VALENCIA ANSWERS, quaest. 19, p. 2, that the curses of things read in Scripture cannot be referred to things that are not capable of evil in order to the free attainment of the supernatural end, but only to the men themselves, as at Job 3 and 2 Kings 1 cited above; Matthew 21: Never shall fruit come forth from thee henceforward; Genesis 3: Cursed is the earth in thy work.

> RESPONDET Gregorius de Valentia quaest. 19. p. 2. maledictiones rerum, quae leguntur in Scriptura, non posse referri ad eas res, quae non sunt capaces mali in ordine ad liberam consecutionem finis superni, sed solum ad homines ipsos, ut id Iob. 3. et secundo Reg. primo citatis. Matth. 21. Nunquam ex te fructus nascatur, Genes. 3. Maledicta terra in opere tuo.

23 THEREFORE, says Tannetus, number 157, curses upon irrational creatures, as rustics do, are idle words; but to curse them as they are creatures of God is blasphemy, just as it is to curse the Saints insofar as God dwells in them. But to curse them as they are someone's goods is the same sin as cursing the Lords themselves: so also Bassaeus, num. 5.

> MALEDICTIONES ergo in creaturas irrationales, ut a rusticis fit, esse verba otiosa ait Tannetus numero 157. maledicere autem eis, ut sunt creaturae Dei, esse blasphemum; sicut etiam maledicere Sanctis, prout in eis Deus habitat. Maledicere vero illis, ut sunt res alicuius, est idem peccatum, ac maledicere ipsis Dominis: Sic et Bassaeus num. 5.

24 AGAIN, to curse creatures as they are related to human goods — for example, to curse the day on which one was born, because you wish he had never been born, as if he had been born unto evil — is a mortal sin; but to curse them as they are referred to evils, for example the day of one's birth because of the evils that followed from it, provided that this does not contradict the ordination of the absolute will of God, is not a sin, says Tanner, number 158; and thus Job cursed his day, cap. 3, and David the mountains of Gelboe, 2 Kings 1, as St. Thomas also teaches, quaestion 76, artic. 2, and Cajetan, on the word maledictum.

> RURSUS maledicere creaturis, ut sunt relatae ad bona humana, puta maledicere diei, quo quis natus est, quia optas, ne natus esset, veluti ad malum natus esset, est peccatum mortale; maledicere vero illis, ut referuntur ad mala, puta diei natiuitatis, ob mala hinc secuta, modo tamen absoluta voluntate Dei ordinationi non repugnetur, non esse peccatum ait Tanner. numero 158. et ita Iob diei suae capite 3. maledixisse, et Davidem montibus Gelboe 2. Regum 1. ut docet etiam D. Thom. quaestione 76. artic. 2. Caietanus, verbo maledictum.

25 FURTHER, a curse does not belong to one single genus of sin; for if anyone wishes an evil to be inflicted on another not by an unjust way but through God, or the elements, or other creatures, without injustice, it will belong to the order of charity and will be opposed to charity, as St. Thomas indicates, quaest. 76, art. 3. But if he wishes evils of this kind to be inflicted unjustly, for instance by homicide, etc., then it is opposed to justice. See Tanner, number 159.

> PORRO maledictum non ad unum peccati genus pertinet; nam si quis alteri malum via non iniusta, sed per Deum, vel elementa, seu alias creaturas citra iniustitiam inferendum optet, spectabit ad ordinem, et opponetur charitati, ut indicat

S. Thom. quaest. 76. art. 3. Si vero huiusmodi mala iniuste inferenda optet, puta homicidio, etc. tunc iustitiae adversabitur. Vide Tannerum numer. 159.

26 SOME TREAT here of Suspicion and Rash Judgment, of which we treated in disput. 23, quaest. 7; therefore nothing now occurs to be said of these, except what the Doctors assign as the rule for discerning one from the other, namely when you judge an evil of your neighbor with near certainty and the firmness of a judgment upon slight conjectures, so that if someone publicly questioned you about it, you would affirm the same.

AGUNT aliqui hic de Suspicione, et Iudicio temerario, de quibus egimus nos disput. 23. quaest. 7. quare nihil de his iam occurrit dicendum, praeterquam, quod in eo Doctores assignant regulam discernendi unum ab altero, dum ea certitudine ac Iudicii firmitate malum de proximo ob leves coniecturas iudicas, ut si publica interrogatione a te aliquis id sciscitaretur, idem affirmares.

27 OTHERS ADD that you would not fear to confirm it even by oath; and then indeed the sin is grave, against love of neighbor, who always stands in possession of his good character until he loses it by so open a prostitution that he cannot sustain it by any evasion. Understand this, however, of that neighbor who is of so entire a good reputation as to be commonly so regarded. For to judge of a soldier who is used to spending his time over cups that he is drunk, when he leaves the tavern with a flushed face, will not be a sin so grave, even if in fact he is not tipsy.

ALII addunt, quod etiam id iuramento confirmare non timeres: et tunc quidem grave est Peccatum contra proximi dilectionem, qui semper stat in possessione suae probitatis, donec eam tam aperta prostitutione perdat, ut nulla tergiversatione eam valeat sustinere: Hoc intellige tamen de eo proximo, qui adeo integrae est famae, ut communiter talis reputetur. Nam iudicare de milite, qui solet inter pocula versari, quod ebrius sit, dum e Caupona flagranti vultu egreditur; non erit peccatum adeo grave, etsi revera temulentus non sit.

28 IF, HOWEVER, the Judgment falls away from this firmness of asserting; then it will be only suspicion, which is for the most part venial, unless it happens concerning a very honorable person; as if you suspected theft or adultery of a man of noted sanctity because you saw him leaving the house where these were committed; for then upon a slight conjecture you inflict a grave injury on him. The Doctors are accustomed to interpose always: Upon slight conjectures; for if you formed a judgment of anyone with such evidence of reason that no defense to the contrary could be offered, then he is not judged rashly, nor consequently is there sin. Yet since judgments of this kind are accustomed to burst forth from some depraved affection or passion, one must strenuously guard lest anyone indulge himself too much while judging.

SI vero Iudicium ab hac asserendi firmitate desciscat; tunc erit suspicio tantum, quae ut plurimum venialis est, nisi contingat circa personam valde honorabilem; ut si de viro aliquo notae sanctitatis furtum, vel adulterium suspiceres, eo quod e domo, ubi haec patrata sunt, ipsum videris egredientem; tunc enim ob levem coniecturam; gravem ei infers iniuriam; solent Doctores semper interponere: Ob leves coniecturas*; nam si de quovis ea rationis evidentia iudicium ferres, ut nulla in contrarium defensio suppeteret; tunc non temere iudicatur, nec consequenter peccatur: Cum tamen a depravato aliquo affectu, vel passione istiusmodi iudicia soleant erumpere; cavendum est obnixe, ne quis sibi inter iudicandum nimis indulgeat.*
