cathedral church, unless both wish to be content with the disposition of the testator; which, on account of the favor accorded a last will, it is sufficiently fitting to observe where neither fraud nor deceit intervenes and no one is excessively defrauded of the portion owed. But it is otherwise if something is bequeathed to the bishop and some things to chapels, monasteries, or other pious places. For in this case what is bequeathed to the bishop is his preferentially together with the cathedral church, just as if it were bequeathed to any other person. And from those things that are bequeathed to others, he will nevertheless obtain the canonical portion, since there is not as great a communion between the bishop and chapels, monasteries, or other pious places as there is between the bishop and the cathedral church, to which he is joined in spiritual marriage. Hence those things that the bishop acquires he acquires not for them but for this church alone. But this is generally to be observed concerning one who can possess property of his own and does not have a prelacy or administration of a church: if something is specially left to him, not only by a relative but also by an outsider, it is understood to have been left not in consideration of the church but of the person, unless proof to the contrary should appear. And therefore neither the bishop nor the church can vindicate anything from it for itself during his life. And this is understood to be true when fraud is not at all procured; if it is detected, it ought not to afford patronage. [You signified, moreover, etc.; cf. c. 9, On Penance, V. 38.]

> Relictum episcopo contemplatione personae, non dividitur cum ecclesia cathedrali; secus, si contemplatione ecclesiae, sive nihil relinquatur ecclesiae sive aliquid, sive coniunctim sive separatim. Si autem soli ecclesiae est factum relictum, episcopus habebit portionem canonicam. Praesumitur autem relictum contemplatione ecclesiae factum, quando fit ab extraneo habente administrationem, secus, si fiat ab administrationem non habente. Cum ecclesiis vero inferioribus episcopus non dividit sibi relictum, quia non est sibi tanta communio cum ecclesiis inferioribus, sicut cum cathedrali.
>
> Idem.
>
> Requisisti de his, quae testator pro anima sua legat in ultima voluntate, qualiter sint inter episcopum et ecclesiam dividenda. Et quidem regulariter verum est, quod episcopus debet de his secundum diversas consuetudines tertiam vel quartam portionem habere; sed considerandum est diligenter, utrum testator leget hoc modo : " relinquo, inquit, istud episcopo, " an : " relinquo istud ecclesiae; " vel : " relinquo istud episcopo et ecclesiae; " an : " relinquo istud episco po et relinquo illud ecclesiae. " In primo casu distinguendum est, utrum relinquatur illud episcopo ab extraneo, an a propinquo. Si ab extraneo, generaliter verum est, quod praesumitur esse relictum intuitu ecclesiae, non personae. Unde cathedralis ecclesia de illo potest canonicam petere portionem, quemadmodum episcopo competit sua portio, si aliquid ipsi ecclesiae relinquatur. Et hoc utique verum est, nisi testator exprimat, quod velit illud tantum esse episcopi, non ecclesiae. In quo casu servanda est dispositio testatoris; secus autem, si exprimat, quod velit esse illud tantum ecclesiae, non episcopi, quia privata dispositio testatoris non potest generalem constitutionem canonis immutare. Nec est contrarium, quod in canone legitur, videlicet quod pontifices quibus ab extraneis aliquid aut cum ecclesia aut sequestratim dimittitur aut donatur, quia hoc ille, qui donat, pro redemptione animae suae, non pro commodo sacerdotis probatur offerre, non quasi suum proprium, sed quasi dimissum ecclesiae inter facultates ecclesiae computabunt, quoniam hoc est verum, quum testator ita sequestratim legat illud episcopo, quod non exprimit, utrum velit ad episcopum tantum, et non ad ecclesiam pertinere. Si vero relinquatur illud episcopo a propinquo, praesumitur esse relictum non intuitu ecclesiae, sed personae, nisi forte contrarium probaretur, et de isto nihil potest ecclesia petere in vita eius. Quod si relinquatur episcopo et ecclesiae, de illo canonica inter ipsos est divisio facienda. Si vero istud episcopo, et illud ecclesiae relinquatur, sive aequalia sive inaequalia sint relicta, reducenda sunt ad divisionem canonicam inter episcopum et ecclesiam cathedralem, nisi ambo velint esse testatoris dispositione contenti; quam propter ultimae voluntatis favorem satis decens est observare, ubi neque fraus intervenit, neque dolus, neque quisquam nimium defraudatur debita portione. Secus autem est, si aliquid legetur episcopo, et aliqua capellis vel monasteriis aut aliis piis locis. Nam in hoc casu quod legatur episcopo eius est praecipuum cum ecclesia cathedrali, quemadmodum si cuilibet alii legaretur. Et de illis quae aliis legantur, portionem canonicam nihilominus obtinebit, quoniam non est tanta communio inter episcopum et inter capellas et monasteria seu alia pia loca, quanta est inter episcopum et ecclesiam cathedralem, cui est spirituali coniugio copulatus. Unde quae acquirit episcopus non illis, sed isti tantum acquirit. Illud autem est generaliter observandum circa eum, qui potest proprium possidere, praelationem vel administrationem ecclesiae non habentem, quod si ei aliquid specialiter relinquatur, non solum a propinquo, verum etiam ab extraneo, intelligitur esse relictum non intuitu ecclesiae, sed personae, nisi probatio in contrarium appareret. Et idcirco de illo nec episcopus, nec ecclesia potest in vita eius sibi aliquid vendicare. Et hoc intelligitur esse verum, quum fraus minime procuratur, quae, si detecta fuerit, patrocinari non debet. [Significasti praeterea etc. cf. c. 9. de poenit. V. 38.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: In the goods of a father, mother, and grandmother, a person has what is owed by the law of nature, in which he cannot be burdened; and a son who is asked to restore an inheritance under a condition deducts what is owed by the law of nature and the Trebellianic fourth, in which the fruits received after joinder of issue are computed.

The same, to the Bishop of Tuscania.

Raynutius de Clera, having two daughters, namely Alterocha and Adiecta, as well as a mother, Clera, and a wife named Adelasia, made a testament when placed at the end of life, leaving to his adult daughter Alterocha, beyond the dowry he had given her, a house and a certain garden in the same testament. But to the minor Adiecta he left his remaining goods, adding that Alterocha and the offspring whom she was carrying in her womb, since she was pregnant at that time, should succeed the same minor if she died without children. The same testator further enjoined the tutors whom he had given to his minor daughter Adiecta to join her in marriage with all her goods. Therefore, after the testator died, the tutors of the minor, according to Lombard law, delivered her with all her goods left to her by her father to a certain man named Peter. And she, after she had cohabited with him for four years and had conceived a son by him, finally died without children; her husband, the same P., surviving for some time, possessed her goods in peace. He, contracting marriage with another woman and conceiving sons by her, closed his last day.

Afterward, however, when matter for a question concerning the aforesaid goods of the same Adiecta arose between Alterocha and Montanellus, her son, on one side, and the sons of the same P. and Raynerius, their tutor, on the other, they began to litigate with one another before G., judge of Tuscania. Before him Alterocha and M., her son, sought the goods of the late Raynutius, the father of the same Alterocha, as owed to them by reason of a fideicommissum or substitution, while Raynerius, tutor of the aforesaid sons of P., said in opposition that prescription of a year, usucaption on account of dowry, and prolonged silence for a long time obstructed them. He alleged further that, before all else, both a third of Clera, mother of the aforesaid R., the testator, and a third of Adelasia, his wife, as well as a fourth by the Trebellianic right in the name of Adiecta herself were to be deducted from those goods. But the said judge, after diligently examining the allegations and reasons of each party, condemned the aforesaid Raynerius, in the name of the tutorship of the wards, to restitution of the goods of the late Raynutius, after first deducting the third of Clera that she had donated to Adiecta and her husband, concerning which he did not appear in any way to have thought in the substitution that Raynutius made; and after also deducting the third of Adelasia that she had sold to the aforesaid P. The same judge also commanded that those thirds be deducted from those things from which they could be deducted according to the custom of the city of Tuscania. The same judge further enjoined that the fourth be deducted by the Trebellianic right, since even any outsider burdened with restitution could have deducted it; but each party appealed from that sentence. (And below:) When, however, there had been lengthy litigation before G., cardinal deacon appointed by us as auditor, he, after taking counsel with learned men, by our mandate pronounced unjust the sentence of the aforesaid judge Guezius, namely, in that he said that the third of Clera and the third of Adelasia were to be deducted in full, and the same cardinal pronounced that an appeal had lawfully been made from it, defining that those thirds were to be deducted in such a way that the legitimate portion owed by the law of nature to Alterocha should remain safe to her in each; to the restitution of this he then condemned the said Raynerius. But in that the same judge held that the fourth part was to be retained by the Trebellianic right, he confirmed that judge's sentence, namely in such a way that the fruits received from his goods, from the time of joinder of issue, by the aforesaid Peter and his sons after the death of Adiecta should be computed in it. If these suffice for the fourth and its fruits, let no other deduction be made under that name; otherwise, an account of computation is to be had according to the quantity of fruits received. Since, however, Adiecta's father could not burden her in her legitimate portion, he held that the legitimate portion itself, namely of the part that would have been owed to her on intestacy, was to be deducted and also retained, namely in such a way that the deduction be made only from those things from which it is accustomed to be made according to the custom of the city of Tuscania. But in that the aforementioned judge condemned Raynerius in the name of his wards to make restitution of the residue to Alterocha and her son, he confirmed his sentence. We therefore, holding valid the sentence of the same cardinal, promulgated as justice required, confirm it by apostolic authority.

> In bonis patris, matris et aviae habet quis debitum iure naturae, in qua gravari nequit; et filius, rogatus de restituenda hereditate sub conditione, detrahit debitum iure naturae et Trebellianicam, in qua computantur fructus post litis contestationem percepti.
>
> Idem Episcopo Tuscano.
>
> Raynutius de Clera, duas habens filias, Alterocham videlicet et Adiectam, matrem insuper Cleram, et uxorem nomine Adelasiam, in extremis positus condidit testamentum, Alterochae filiae puberi ultra dotem, quam ei dederat, domum et quendam hortum in eodem testamento relinquens. Adiectae vero impuberi reliquit cetera bona sua, adiiciens, ut Alterocha et soboles, quam gestabat in utero, quum eo tempore praegnans esset, eidem impuberi succederent, si absque liberis moreretur. Tutoribus insuper, quos Adiectae impuberi filiae dederat, idem testator iniunxit, ut eandem cum omnibus bonis suis matrimonio copularent. Mortuo itaque testatore tutores impuberis eam cum omnibus bonis suis, eidem relictis a patre, iure Lombardo cuidam Petro nomine tradiderunt. Quae, quum per quadriennium cohabitasset eidem, filium ex eo suscipiens, tandem sine liberis est defuncta cuius bona idem P. maritus eius, superstes aliquanto tempore, possedit in pace. Qui, cum alia muliere matrimonium contrahens, et filios suscipiens ex eadem, diem clausit extremum. Postmodum vero inter Alterocham et filium eius Montanellum ex una parte, ac filios eiusdem P. et Raynerium tutorem eorum ex altera super bonis praedictis eiusdem Adiectae suscitata materia quaestionis, coeperunt coram G. iudice Tuscanensi ad invicem litigare, coram quo Alterocha et M. filius eius bona quondam Raynutii, patris eiusdem Alterochae, tanquam ex causa fideicommissi vel substitutionis sibi debita petierunt, Rainerio tutore filiorum praedicti P. ex adverso dicente, quod obstabat illis annalis praescriptio, usucapio pro dote ac longi temporis silentium diuturnum. Insuper allegabat, quod de bonis illis tam tertia Clerae, praedicti R. matris testatoris, et tertia Adelasiae uxoris eiusdem, quam etiam quarta per Trebellianum nomine ipsius Adiectae erant ante omnia deducendae. Dictus vero iudex, utriusque partis allegationibus et rationibus diligenter inspectis, supra dictum Raynerium tutorio nomine pupillorum in restitutione bonorum quondam Raynutii condemnavit, tertia Clerae primo deducta, quam Adiectae ac viro suo donaverat, de qua in substitutione, quam fecit Raynutius, non videtur aliquatenus cogitasse; deducta quoque tertia Adelasiae, quam ipsa P. vendiderat supra dicto. Praecepit etiam idem iudex, de his rebus illas tertias deducendas, de quibus deduci poterant secundum Tuscanae consuetudinem civitatis. Deduci praeterea quartam per Trebellianum idem iudex iniunxit, quum etiam quilibet extraneus restitutione gravatus eam deducere potuisset; sed utraque pars ab illa sententia provocavit. (Et infra:) Quum autem coram G. diacono cardinali auditore a nobis concesso fuisset diutius litigatum, ipse habito consilio peritorum de mandato nostro sententiam supra dicti Guezii iudicis, videlicet in eo, quod dixit, tertiam Clerae, et tertiam Adelasiae integraliter deducendas, idem cardinalis pronunciavit iniustam, et ab ea legitime provocatum, diffiniens, sic illas tertias deducendas, ut legitima portio, iure naturae debita Alterochae, illi salva sit in utraque; ad cuius restitutionem dictum deinde Raynerium condemnavit. In eo vero, quod quartam partem per Trebellianum idem iudex censuit retinendam, sententiam confirmavit eiusdem, ita videlicet, quod fructus, de bonis ipsius a tempore litis contestatae percepti a praedicto Petro et filiis eius post mortem Adiectae, computentur in ea. Qui si suffecerint ad quartam et fructus eius, eo nomine alia deductio nulla fiat; alioquin iuxta quantitatem fructuum perceptorum computationis ratio habeatur. Quia vero pater Adiectae ipsam in legitima non potuit aggravare, legitimam ipsam, videlicet eius partis, quae sibi debebatur ab intestato, deducendam censuit, et etiam retinendam, ita videlicet, quod deductio fiat tantummodo de his rebus, de quibus secundum Tuscanae consuetudinem civitatis fieri consuevit. In eo autem, quod praenominatus iudex condemnavit Raynerium nomine pupillorum suorum ad residui restitutionem Alterochae ac eius filio faciendam, ipsius sententiam confirmavit. Nos igitur, eiusdem cardinalis sententiam exigente iustitia promulgatam ratam habentes, ipsam auctoritate apostolica confirmamus.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A bishop compels fideicommissaries or executors of a testament to execute the pious wills of the deceased, even if the testator had forbidden this.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Noyon.

Your fraternity intimated to us that some persons, religious as well as secular clerics and laymen, do not hesitate to apply to other uses money and other goods that ought through their hands to be expended for pious uses under the testaments of persons dying. Since, therefore, in all pious wills provision is to be made by the bishops of the places that all things proceed according to the will of the deceased, even though it should happen that this was forbidden by the testators, we command that, after admonition, you compel executors of testaments of this kind to expend those goods faithfully and fully for the aforesaid uses.

Episcopus compellit fideicommissarios seu executores testamenti ad exsequendas pias voluntates defunctorum, etiamsi testator hoc interdixisset.

Gregorius IX. Nomon. Episcopo.

> Tua nobis fraternitas intimavit, quod nonnulli, tam religiosi quam clerici saeculares et laici, pecuniam et alia bona, quae per manus eorum ex testamentis decedentium debent in usus pios expendi, non dubitant aliis usibus applicare. Quum igitur in omnibus piis voluntatibus sit per locorum episcopos providendum, ut secundum defuncti voluntatem universa procedant, licet etiam a testatoribus id contingeret interdici; mandamus, quatenus exsecutores testamentorum huiusmodi, ut bona ipsa fideliter et plenarie in usus praedictos expendant, monitione praemissa compellas.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: A son who is asked to restore an inheritance deducts a third by the law of nature and a Trebellianic fourth, in which he can leave legacies, institute heirs, and impose a penalty.

The same.

Raynaldus, son of Pepo, was instituted heir by him in this manner: that he should restore the inheritance to his paternal uncles if he died without male children. After Pepo died, Raynaldus submitted to three arbiters with them concerning certain goods of the same inheritance. After one of them died, the other two, proceeding as they could according to the form of the submission, arbitrated in this manner: neither party should have license to transfer the aforesaid things in any manner to another except to their male children lawfully descending from them, and whatever was done contrary to this should not be valid. Thereafter the said R., having no offspring, made a testament in which he bequeathed half of his share in the aforesaid things to certain maternal uncles of his, but the other half and the remaining paternal goods to one of his paternal uncles and his sons; adding that, if the said heirs of R. should act contrary to the legacy owed to his said maternal uncles, the goods in which they could succeed R. by testament or on intestacy should devolve upon those maternal uncles in determined portions.

Finally, when the same R. paid the debt of nature and one of the paternal uncles entered upon the aforesaid inheritance, the said maternal uncles moved a question against the same paternal uncle and his sons before the judge of the community of Orvieto, seeking the aforesaid legacy according to the share that fell to them, and seeking that, if those men acted contrary to it, whatever had come or could have come to them by occasion of the testament of the same R. be restored to the maternal uncles. The aforesaid judge, absolving those men from their impleading concerning the legacy, condemned them by sentence to restitution of the other goods. When both parties appealed from his sentence to our hearing, each party seeking that the sentence of the said judge be annulled insofar as it had been promulgated against itself and be committed to execution insofar as it operated for itself, our beloved son O., cardinal deacon of Saint Nicholas in the Tullian Prison, after issue had lawfully been joined before him, pronounced that—because the same R. had in the goods of the late Pepo, his father, a third part owed by the law of nature, in which he could not be burdened, and also a Trebellianic fourth, which any outsider burdened with restitution could have deducted, on account of which the aforesaid R. had those portions in the aforesaid things bequeathed to his maternal uncles and could bequeath them in his last will, and through this the legacy was valid up to the aforesaid third and fourth, although he had not expressed them in making the legacy—the aforesaid award notwithstanding, which could not prevent the legacy from being valid, the judge himself had judged wrongly in wholly absolving the said paternal uncle concerning this, who confessed that he possessed half of the aforesaid things. He condemned him to restitution of half of the third and fourth part of that legacy according to the share of it that fell to the said maternal uncles, and confirmed the sentence of the aforesaid judge as to the residue.

But as to the fact that the same judge had condemned the said paternal uncle and his sons entirely concerning the other things sought in the second article, he decreed that the judge had pronounced wrongly, because his sons were not found to have committed anything contrary to the will of the testator, since they were found to possess none of the things sought. But as to the portion that the paternal uncle had in those goods by reason of the aforesaid fourth and third that R. had in the same goods, in which his institution, legacy, and addition of a penalty were valid, for the share falling to the same maternal uncles, he confirmed the sentence of the aforesaid judge concerning the aforesaid legacy, absolving the same paternal uncle and his sons as to the residue; and saving nevertheless to him, by the law of institution, the benefit of the Falcidian law in the restitution of the aforesaid legacy if he obeyed the will of the testator within the lawful time, since he made an inventory and the Falcidian law is introduced against the will of a testator. We therefore, holding valid the sentence of the cardinal himself, confirm it by apostolic authority.

> Filius, rogatus restituere hereditatem, detrahit tertiam iure naturae, et quartam Trebellianicam, in quibus potest legata relinquere, heredes instituere, et poenam imponere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Raynaldus Peponis filius, heres ab ipso institutus hoc modo, ut patruis suis hereditatem restitueret, si absque filiis masculis moreretur, cum eis mortuo Pepone super quibusdam bonis hereditatis eiusdem in tres arbitros compromisit, quorum duo, mortuo reliquo, prout ex forma compromissi poterant, procedentes, taliter arbitrati fuerunt, quod neutra pars haberet licentiam transferendi quocunque modo in alium res praedictas, nisi in eorum filios masculos ex ipsis legitime descendentes, et quod contra hoc fieret non valeret. Porro dictus R., prolem non habens, condidit testamentum in quo medietatem partis suae de rebus praedictis quibusdam avunculis suis, aliam vero medietatem et reliqua bona paterna uni ex patruis suis et eius filiis legavit, adiiciens, ut bona, in quibus ex testamento vel ab intestato dicti heredes R. possent succedere, si venirent contra legatum dictis avunculis suis debitum, ad ipsos pro determinatis portionibus devenirent. Demum eodem R. naturae debitum persolvente, ac uno ex patruis hereditatem adeunte praedictam, quum dicti avunculi adversus eundem patruum ac filios eius coram iudice communitatis Urbenatensis moverunt quaestionem, petendo pro rata, quae ipsos contingit, legatum praedictum, et restitui eis, si contra ipsum illi venirent, quaecunque occasione testamenti eiusdem R. ad ipsos pervenerant vel poterant pervenisse, praefatus iudex, ab illorum impetitione super legato ipsos absolvens, ad restitutionem aliorum bonorum sententialiter condemnavit eosdem. A cuius sententia quum ambae partes ad nostram audientiam appellassent, petente utraque parte dicti iudicis sententiam infirmari, quatenus contra se fuerat promulgata, et quatenus pro se faciebat, exsecutioni mandari, dilectus filius noster O. sancti Nicolai in carcere Tulliano diaconus cardinalis lite coram se legitime contestata, quoniam idem R. habebat in bonis quondam Peponis patris sui tertiam partem debitam iure naturae, in qua gravari nequivit, nec non quartam Trebellianicam, quam quilibet extraneus restitutione gravatus deducere potuisset, propter quod in rebus praedictis avunculis legatis portiones easdem habuit R. praefatus, easque potuit in ultima voluntate legare, ac per hoc legatum tenuit usque ad tertiam et quartam praefatas, licet ipsas non expresserit in legando, pronunciavit, non obstante praemisso arbitrio, quod nec legatum teneret, non poterat impedire, iudicem ipsum in eo, quod super hoc dictum patruum in totum absolvit, qui confessus est, se pro medietate possidere praedicta, perperam iudicasse, condemnavitque ipsum ad restitutionem medietatis tertiae et quartae partis ipsius legati pro rata, quae dictos avunculos de ipso contingit, et in residuo praefati iudicis sententiam confirmavit. Ceterum in eo, quod idem iudex dictum patruum et eius filios totaliter in aliis, quae in secundo articulo petita fuerant, condemnarat, male ipsum pronunciasse decrevit, quia filii eius contra voluntatem testatoris non inveniuntur aliquid commisisse, quum nihil de petitis reperti fuerint possidere. Verum in portione, quam patruus habebat in bonis illis ratione quartae et tertiae praedictorum, quas R. habuit in bonis eisdem, in quibus eius institutio et legatio ac adiectio poenae tenebat, pro rata eosdem avunculos contingente, de praedicto legato confirmavit sententiam iudicis supra dicti, eodem patruo et eius filiis in residuo absolutis, et salvo nihilominus ei ex iure institutionis beneficio legis Falcidiae, in restitutione praefati legati, si infra tempus legitimum voluntati paruerit testatoris, quum inventarium fecerit, et contra voluntatem testatoris lex Falcidia inducatur. Nos itaque, ipsius cardinalis sententiam ratam habentes, eam auctoritate apostolica confirmamus.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: A testamentary executor who undertook that office is compelled to execute it.

The same.

John, a cleric, and P., a layman, executors of the last will of O., a cleric of Holy Cross, who in his last will bequeathed from his goods to venerable and pious places, further commanding that his creditors be satisfied through them, ought, after undertaking the mandate, to be compelled by the diocesan bishop to fulfill the testator's last will.

Exsecutor testamentarius, qui suscepit illud officium, exsequi compellitur.

Idem.

Ioannes clericus et P. laicus, exsecutores ultimae voluntatis O. clerici S. Crucis, qui venerabilibus et piis locis de bonis suis in ultima voluntate legavit, mandans insuper, satisfieri creditoribus per eosdem, post mandatum susceptum per dioecesanum cogi debent testatoris explere ultimam voluntatem.

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: It sets forth certain legacies from which the canonical portion is not paid unless it is done in fraud.

The same.

From those things that are bequeathed to churches or other pious places in ornaments or for them, or for the fabric, lights, an anniversary, the seventh, twentieth, or thirtieth day, or for other things pertaining to perpetual divine worship, the canonical portion ought not to be deducted, provided it is not done in fraud so that the bishop or parish church ought to be defrauded of it.

Ponit quaedam legata, in quibus non solvitur canonica portio, nisi fiat in fraudem.

Idem.

De his, quae in ornamentis vel pro eis, seu fabrica, luminaribus, anniversario, septimo, vigesimo, tricesimo die, sive aliis ad perpetuum cultum divinum legantur ecclesiis vel reliquis piis locis, canonica portio, dummodo in fraudem non fiat, ut ea episcopus seu parochialis ecclesia debeat defraudari, deduci non debet.

Title XXVII: On Intestate Successions

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric can give his own goods to whomever he wishes; but if he dies intestate and has no relatives, the church succeeds. This it says when joined with the gloss.

From a council held at Alten.

But [also] this was established there concerning bishops, priests, and clerics: if by inheritance or in another manner they have acquired something by reason of their person, it is lawful for them, while they live, to donate these things to whomever they wish, for the remedy of their soul, to whatever church they choose, or to their relatives or friends. But if they die before they have done this, let all things be perpetually consecrated to the altar that they serve and be delivered into its right. [That the same was established concerning priests who serve laymen, etc.]

> DE SUCCESSIONIBUS AB INTESTATO.
>
> Clericus bona propria dare potest cui vult; sed, si decedat intestatus, et non habet consanguineos, succedit ecclesiae. H. d. iuncta gl.
>
> Ex concilio apud Alten. habito.
>
> Sed [et] hoc ibidem inventum est de episcopis, presbyteris et clericis, ut, si per hereditatem vel alio modo intuitu personae aliquid acquisierint, donare eis liceat haec, cui voluerint, dum vivunt, pro remedio animae suae ad ecclesiam, quamcunque elegerint, vel consanguineis suis vel amicis. Si autem ante obierint, quam hoc fecerint altari, cui serviunt, omnia perpetuo sanctificentur, et in ius eius tradantur. [Similiter de presbyteris, qui laicis deserviunt, statutum esse etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If one formerly a slave, having been made a priest, dies intestate, his goods are divided according to the form contained here. This it says according to the singular understanding, which also holds today.

From the Council of Tribur.

It was brought before the holy council that certain laymen act wickedly against their priests, so that they vindicate shares for themselves from the substance of dying priests as from their own slaves. We therefore forbid by canonical authority that this be done hereafter; but, just as they were made free to receive the grade and perform the divine office, so let nothing be exacted from them apart from the divine office. Their peculium, however, is to be divided into four parts, of which one is to be assigned to the bishop, another to the church, a third to the poor, and a fourth to the relatives. And if there are no suitable relatives, let the bishop receive it and diligently distribute it for the use of the church. And if anyone presumes to act contrary to this, let him be anathematized.

> Si olim servus, presbyter factus, intestatus decedat, eius bona dividuntur secundum formam hic contentam. H. d. secundum intellectum singularem, qui hodie etiam tenet.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi.
>
> Sancto concilio allatum est, quod quidam laici improbe agunt contra presbyteros suos ita, ut de morientium presbyterorum substantia partes sibi vendicent sicut de propriis servis. Interdicimus itaque canonica auctoritate, ne hoc ulterius fiat; sed, sicut liberi facti sunt ad suspiciendum gradum et agendum officium divinum, ita nil ab eis praeter divinum officium exigatur; peculium vero ipsorum dividatur in quatuor partes, quarum una episcopo, altera ecclesiae, tertia pauperibus, quarta parentibus assignetur. Et, si non sint idonei parentes, episcopus eam recipiat, et in usum ecclesiae diligenter distribuat. Et si quis contra hoc facere praesumpserit, anathematizetur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Touching upon two notable and singular understandings of this chapter, it is summarized according to each understanding, and first thus: A testament made for pious causes by declarative words, even words uttered on account of another matter, is valid, although the succession or testament comes to the exclusion of another church. Or otherwise, according to the other understanding, thus: An offering is proved by one witness to the truth and also by a confession made incidentally, even with respect to the effect of obtaining the goods offered.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Maurienne.

When our beloved son the abbot of Brusia had [recently] come to our presence and had waited there for a long time on account of the cause he had against our venerable brother the Bishop of Autun, finally a messenger of the same bishop arrived. When they wished to litigate with one another, we appointed as auditor our venerable brother I., Bishop of Viterbo and cardinal of Saint Clement. Therefore, when they were constituted in his presence, the aforesaid abbot proposed that, when the archpriest of Alerio offered himself and his goods to the monastery of Brusia for participation in its prayers with a view to piety, certain of his goods being reserved for his simple use, he received from the hand of a certain brother of the same coenobium an enlargement of the crown as a sign of that offering; and that he had often declared in the common chapter that he had made this grant in this manner, and that he possessed not in his own name but [in the name] of the monastery, and acquired for the monastery whatever he acquired. The same archpriest also continued publicly in this for almost twenty years, with no one contradicting or protesting, in such a way that through public fame it had become known to all. For the abbot of Buxeria who was in office at the time, and the monks themselves, with the knowledge of the Bishop of Autun who was in office at the time and with him making no protest at all, publicly used his goods no otherwise than the other goods belonging to the monastery. Moreover, what the said archpriest, in possession of his mind, had done between the living, he confirmed in his last will, sound in mind although sick in body. And when the same abbot and monks wished to bring back to their monastery the things thus lawfully given and other things that they had granted to the archpriest himself for use, the aforesaid bishop, bringing violence upon them, occupied not only the things of the archpriest but also the things of the monastery itself. When they sought these back in good peace, he, so that fuller matter for raging over those things might be granted to him, appealed to the Apostolic See, fixing the octaves of blessed Martin most recently past as the term for his appeal.

On the contrary, the aforesaid messenger of the bishop alleged that, when that donation was made, the archpriest was out of his mind to such an extent that, when he had been asked by the monks, "Do you wish to receive the monastic habit?" and had answered, "I do," immediately, when asked by another, "Do you wish to be an ass?" he answered likewise, "I do." And thus the aforesaid monks carried him off to their monastery, which the same messenger offered to prove. [Indeed, when the aforesaid abbot immediately produced certain witnesses for the assertion of his party, we caused them to be received and diligently heard. When we had interlocutorily decreed that their attestations ought to be published, because the bishop's party did not wish to produce witnesses concerning those articles concerning which the same abbot had produced witnesses, and when those attestations had been publicly recited and diligent disputation had been held concerning them, many things were alleged against the statements of the witnesses. And when the parties had renounced further pleading, the said cardinal faithfully recited to us and our brothers whatever had been proposed on each side.] Having heard and learned these things, we sufficiently understood it to have been proved that the said archpriest, acting at the end of life as though expressing his last will, asserted that he had conferred himself and his goods upon the monastery of Buxeria. Hence, when he was asked to make a testament, he answered that he could not make a testament because he had conferred himself and his goods upon the aforesaid monastery. And although only one witness said that he had seen when the aforesaid archpriest offered himself and his goods to the monastery, nevertheless, because other witnesses said that they had heard the archpriest himself, in the presence of the abbot, confessing and attesting what has been aforesaid, they greatly assisted the assertion of the abbot, not as proving sufficiently but as giving it powerful support.

But because the bishop's party asserted that it wished to prove that the said archpriest, laboring at the end of life as though delirious, had been alienated from his mind, whence what he expressed was not valid, we, after diligent prior deliberation with our brothers concerning these and the other things proposed on each side, thought that cause should be committed to you under this form: unless the aforesaid bishop lawfully proves that the often-mentioned archpriest was not in possession of his mind when he expressed his last will, perpetual silence is to be imposed upon him concerning his impleading of the monastery, and he is to be compelled to restore to the monastery whatever he occupied from the goods of the archpriest himself or even of the monastery. But if he lawfully proves that the aforesaid archpriest said with an alienated mind the things premised concerning his last will, the monastery is to be condemned to make restitution to him, in the name of the parish church whose administration the archpriest had conducted while he lived, of the goods that had belonged to that archpriest, since the same archpriest died intestate; and silence is to be imposed upon the monastery concerning its impleading of the bishop. [No letters, etc. Given at Rome, on the fourth day before the Nones of June. 1198.]

> Attingendo duos notabiles et singulares intellectus, huius capituli, summatur secundum quemlibet intellectum, et primo sic: Valet testamentum ad pias causas conditum per verba enunciativa, etiam propter aliud prolata, quanquam successio seu testatio veniat ad exclusionem alterius ecclesiae. Vel aliter secundum alium intellectum et sic: Per unum testem de veritate et per confessionem etiam incidenter factam probatur oblatio, etiam quoad effectum consequendi bona oblata.
>
> Innocentius III. Murnensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum dilectus filius abbas de Brusia ad nostram [nuper] praesentiam accessisset, et pro causa, quam adversus venerabilem fratrem nostrum episcopum Eduensem habebat, ibidem diutius exspectasset, tandem nuncius eiusdem episcopi supervenit, quibus volentibus ad invicem litigare, venerabilem fratrem nostrum I. Viterbiensem episcopum sancti Clementis cardinalem concessimus auditorem. Ipsis igitur in eius praesentia constitutis, abbas proposuit ante dictus, quod, quum archipresbyter de Alerio ad participationem orationum monasterio de Brusia pietatis intuitu obtulit se et sua, +quibusdam rebus suis usui suo simplici reservatis, de manu cuiusdam fratris eiusdem coenobii augmentationem coronae in signum illis oblationis accepit, et quod hanc concessionem hoc modo fecisset, et non suo nomine sed [nomine] *monasterii possideret, et monasterio quicquid acquirebat acquireret, saepe fuit in communi capitulo protestatus, in hoc etiam publice per viginti annos fere idem archipresbyter nullo contradicente vel reclamante permansit ita, quod per publicam famam id omnibus notum fuerat. Nam abbas de Buxeria, qui pro tempore fuerat, et ipsi monachi, rebus ipsius non secus, quam aliis rebus propriis monasterii, sciente episcopo Eduensi, qui pro tempore erat, et in nullo penitus reclamante publice utebantur. Id autem, quod mente compoti dictus archipresbyter fecerat inter vivos, et in ultima voluntate mente sanus, licet aeger corpore, confirmavit. Quumque idem abbas et monachi res, sic legitime datas, et alias, quas archipresbytero ipsi concesserant ad utendum, ad suum monasterium reducere vellent, praedictus episcopus, eis violentiam inferens, non solum res archipresbyteri, sed etiam res ipsius monasterii occupavit. Quas quum in bona pace repeterent, ipse, ut rebus illis ei posset grassandi materia plenior indulgeri, sedem apostolicam appellavit, in octavis B. Martini proxime praeteriti suae terminum appellationi praefigens. Econtra praedictus nuncius episcopi allegavit, quod, quando illa donatio facta fuit, archipresbyter erat positus extra mentem ita, quod, quum interrogatus fuisset a monachis: "vis tu habitum suscipere monachalem? "et respondisset: "volo, "statim interrogatus ab alio: "vis tu esse asinus? "respondit similiter: "volo. "Sicque praedicti monachi eum ad suum monasterium deportarunt, quod idem nuncius se obtulit probaturum. * [Praefatus siquidem abbas, quum ad assertionem partis suae quosdam testes in continenti produceret, nos ipsos recipi fecimus et diligenter audiri, quorum attestationes quum interloquendo decrevissemus publicari debere, quoniam super illis capitulis pars episcopi nolebat testes producere, super quibus idem abbas testes produxerat, ipsaeque fuissent in publico recitatae, disputatione super attestationibus ipsis habita diligenti, multa fuere contra dicta testium allegata. Quumque renunciatum fuisset a partibus, dictus cardinalis quaecunque fuerunt hinc inde proposita nobis et fratribus nostris fideliter recitavit.] Quibus auditis et cognitis Sufficienter intelleximus esse probatum, quod dictus archipresbyter, agens in extremis, velut ultimam exprimens voluntatem, asseruit, se et sua monasterio de Buxeria contulisse. Unde, quum requisitus esset, ut conderet testamentum, respondit, se non posse testari, quia se et sua contulerat monasterio supra dicto. Et licet unus testis solus dixerit se vidisse quando praefatus archipresbyter se et sua obtulit monasterio, quia tamen alii testes dixerunt, se audivisse, ipsum archipresbyterum in abbatis praesentia quod praedictum est confitentem et attestantem, non tanquam sufficienter probantes, sed tanquam vehementer adminiculantes assertionem abbatis plurimum adiuvabant. Quia vero pars episcopi asserebat, se velle probare, quod dictus archipresbyter in extremis laborans tanquam phreneticus alienatus erat a mente, unde non valuit quod expressit, nos, super his et aliis, quae fuerunt hinc inde proposita, cum fratribus nostris diligenti deliberatione praehabita, causam illam tibi sub hac forma duximus committendam, quod, nisi praefatus episcopus legitime probaverit, saepe dictum archipresbyterum suae mentis compotem non fuisse, quum ultimam voluntatem expressit, super impetitione monasterii perpetuum ei silentium imponatur, et compellatur restituere monasterio quaecunque de bonis ipsius archipresbyteri vel etiam monasterii occupavit. Si vero legitime probaverit, praedictum archipresbyterum quae super ultima voluntate praemissa sunt alienata mente dixisse, ad faciendam ei nomine parochialis ecclesiae, cuius ipse administrationem gesserat, dum vixisset, restitutionem bonorum, quae ipsius archipresbyteri fuerant, monasterium condemnetur, quum idem archipresbyter ab intestato decesserit, ipsique monasterio super impetitione episcopi silentium imponatur. [*Nullis literis etc. Dat. Rom. IV. Non. Iun. * 1198.]

Title XXVIII: On Burials

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One dying intestate is buried in the tomb of his ancestors, or where burial is chosen; nevertheless, the parish church will have the canonical portion of what he left to the church of burial. This it says according to the truer understanding.

Leo III.

We, considering the institutes of the earlier fathers, and also confirming their decrees, establish, as is most holy, that everyone namely lie in the tombs of his ancestors, as the passing of the patriarchs teaches. Nevertheless, we deny no one the choice of his own burial place, and even one belonging to another. For the Lord and Master, who was without sin, chose one belonging to another as his own. But because the worker is worthy of his wage, we hold that by right he should give a third part of his disposition to that church in which he was accustomed to be refreshed with heavenly nourishment daily from the beginning of his origin, so that according to the Apostle [thus] they may be partners in consolations as they were also in sufferings; and then, finally, let him choose burial wherever he pleases. Lest it be done otherwise, by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, who spoke through the Prophet, saying, "Do not transgress the ancient boundaries that your fathers established," and of the Apostles Peter and Paul and all the saints, we denounce and forbid it under the bond of anathema, because it is neither ours, nor has it ever been lawful for any priest or faithful layman, for any reason, to inflict prejudice in such matters without manifest guilt of an offense.

> DE SEPULTURIS.
>
> Decedens intestatus sepelitur in sepulcro maiorum, vel ubi eligitur sepultura; parochialis tamen ecclesia habebit canonicam portionem eius, quod reliquerit ecclesiae sepulturae. H. d. secundum veriorem intellectum.
>
> Leo III.
>
> Nos instituta maiorum patrum considerantes, illorum quoque decreta firmando statuimus, quod sanctissimum est, unumquemque videlicet in maiorum suorum sepulcris iacere, ut patriarcharum exitus docet. Nulli tamen negamus propriam eligere sepulturam, et etiam alienam. Dominus enim et magister alienam elegit, ut propriam, qui sine peccato erat. Sed quia dignus est operarius mercede sua, tertiam partem sui iudicii illi ecclesiae iure dare censemus, in qua coelesti pabulo a principio sui exordii quotidie refici consuevit, ut iuxta Apostolum [sic] sint consolationum socii, ut fuerunt et passionum, et sic demum ubicunque libitum fuerit eligat sepulturam. Aliter ne fiat, auctoritate Domini nostri Iesu Christi, qui per Prophetam locutus est, dicens : " Ne transgrediaris terminos antiquos, quos posuerunt patres tui, " et Apostolorum P. et P. omniumque sanctorum sub anathematis vinculo detestamur et contradicimus, quia nec nostrum est, nec alicui unquam sacerdoti vel fideli laico unquam licuit, qualicunque ratione sine manifesta delicti culpa in talibus inferre praeiudicium.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who is converted to a monastery is bound to leave to the parish church half of the goods that he disposed of for his soul.

Pope Leo, to all the faithful constituted throughout Dardania.

It has been reported to our ears that there are certain persons acting perversely who strive to overturn and attempt to divide the unity of the church, namely abbots and monks who keep watch and teach not from the pursuit of charity but from the zeal of rapacity, and do not cease to seduce secular persons whom they can ensnare, so that they deliver their property and possessions, whether in death or in life, to their monasteries, and leave nothing from [their] goods to the churches to which they are seen to be subject and from which they received or receive baptism, penance, the eucharist, and also the nourishment of life with the milk of the flesh. Therefore, observing this tinder of discord, we wish to inhibit it in every way and utterly prohibit it from being done further, considering that it is not good if those who formerly were partners in suffering, according to the Apostle, are exempt from the partnership of consolations. And because the hireling is worthy of his wage, therefore we command and mandate that whoever from now on wishes to be converted in a monastery, whether in death or in life, leave half of all the property and possessions that he decreed to dispose of for the salvation of his soul to the church to which he is known to pertain, and thus have license to go and be converted in the monastery as he pleases. But whoever shall be an opponent, overthrower, and violator of this enactment shall lie under the sword of anathema. [Given at Rome, on the twentieth day of the month of April, in the fifth indiction.]

> Qui convertitur ad monasterium, medietatem bonorum, quae pro anima sua disposuit, tenetur relinquere ecclesiae parochiali.
>
> Leo Papa omnibus fidelibus per Dardaniam constitutis.
>
> Relatum est auribus nostris, +esse quosdam perverse agentes, qui subvertere nituntur atque dividere conantur ecclesiae unitatem, videlicet abbates et monachi, qui non studio caritatis, sed zelo rapacitatis invigilant et docent, atque seducere non cessant saeculares homines, quos illaqueare possunt, ut res suas atque possessiones sive in morte sive in vita monasteriis suis tradant, et ecclesiis, quibus subiecti esse videntur, et a quibus baptismum, poenitentiam, eucharistiam, nec non pabulum vitae cum lacte carnis acceperunt vel accipiunt, nihil de bonis [suis] relinquant. Hunc denique fomitem discordiae nos animadvertendo modis omnibus inhibere volumus, et, ne amplius fiat, omnino prohibemus, considerantes, non esse bonum, si illi, qui olim fuerunt socii passionis secundum Apostolum, sint immunes a societate consolationum. Et quia dignus est mercenarius mercede sua, ideo praecipimus atque Mandamus, ut quicunque amodo in monasterio converti voluerit, sive in morte sive in vita omnium rerum et possessionum, quas pro salute animae suae decreverit disponere, medietatem ecclesiae, ad quam dignoscitur pertinere, relinquat, et sic in monasterio, prout libitum fuerit, eundi convertendique habeat licentiam. Quicunque autem huius electi contradictor, convulsor ac temerator exstiterit, gladio anathematis subiaceat. [Dat. Rom. mens. April. die XX. Ind. V.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Where someone, leaving the tomb of his ancestors, chooses a tomb in a less religious place, induced by fraud, or from contempt, or without the canonical portion being left to his church expressly or tacitly, the choice does not hold. This it says, preserving this text so far as can be done.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Genoa.

We do not believe your fraternity to be ignorant that from antiquity the tombs and cemeteries of the dead have been disposed at those churches and monasteries in which convents of religious brothers are constituted, and prayers and solemnities of masses are more frequently celebrated for the living as well as the dead. Hence the devotion and last will of those who desire to be buried at churches of this kind are in no way to be contradicted. But those who, leaving the ancient churches and the tombs of their fathers and other relatives, transfer themselves to new and less religious places, contrary to the custom of the Fathers of the Old Testament, who are read to have been buried with their fathers, are seen to act unreasonably and contrary to the ancient institution. Hence, if perhaps P. de Castello commanded anything concerning the burial of his body contrary to so ancient and reasonable a custom, this does not prejudice reason but ought to lack force. Wherefore, by the present writing we command, and by commanding direct, that you cause the body of P. himself to be returned to our beloved sons, the monks of Saint Stephen, and to be buried with his fathers.

> Ubi quis sepulcro maiorum relicto eligit sepulcrum in loco minus religioso, dolo inductus, seu ex contemptu seu non dimissa ecclesiae suae canonica portione expresse vel tacite non tenet electio. H. d. salvando istum textum, quantum fieri potest.

Innocentius III. Genuensi Archiepiscopo.

Fraternitatem tuam non credimus ignorare, mortuorum sepulcra et coemeteria apud illas ecclesias et monasteria ex antiquo esse disposita, in quibus religiosorum fratrum conventus sunt constituti, et orationes atque missarum solennia tam pro vivis quam pro defunctis frequentius celebrantur. Unde ipsorum devotioni et extremae voluntati, qui apud huiusmodi ecclesias sepeliri desiderant, minime contradicendum est. Qui vero relictis antiquis ecclesiis et patrum aliorumque parentum suorum sepulcris contra consuetudinem Patrum veteris testamenti, qui cum patribus suis sepulti esse leguntur, ad nova et minus religiosa loca se transferunt, irrationabiliter et contra antiquam institutionem facere videntur. Unde, si forte P. de Castello contra tam antiquam et rationabilem consuetudinem aliquid de corpore suo sepeliendo mandavit, hoc non praeiudicat rationi, sed viribus debet carere, Quocirca per praesentia scripta mandamus, et mandando praecipimus, quatenus corpus ipsius P. dilectis filiis nostris monachis sancti Stephani reddi facias, et cum suis patribus sepeliri.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If someone in the sickness from which he dies offers himself and his goods to a monastery, the parish church has a canonical portion from them; otherwise if he does so in health.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Spalato.

Concerning those who transfer themselves with their goods to religious places in sickness or in health, leaving nothing to you or to the churches from which they received the nourishment of salvation, we wish this to be made known to your prudence: if they pass to religion in the sickness itself, provided that they die from that sickness, a canonical portion from their goods ought to be furnished to those churches by which they had been received. But if they have transferred themselves to religious places while in health, they cannot be compelled to impart to the aforesaid churches anything from the things that they confer upon those places, because they are then free to confer their goods not only upon religious places but also upon any private persons.

Si quis in aegritudine, de qua decedit, offert se et sua monasterio, ecclesia parochialis habet inde canonicam portionem; secus si in sanitate.

Alexander III. Episcopo Spalensi.

De his, qui in infirmitate vel sanitate cum bonis suis ad religiosa loca se transferunt, nihil tibi vel ecclesiis, a quibus receperunt salutis pabula, relinquentes, hoc tuae volumus prudentiae innotescere, quod, si in aegritudine ipsa ad religionem transeant, dummodo de aegritudine illa decedant, de bonis suis ipsis ecclesiis, a quibus assumpti fuerint, canonica debet portio exhiberi. Si vero ad religiosa loca se in sanitate transtulerint, de his, quae locis ipsis conferunt, cogi non possunt aliquid praescriptis ecclesiis impertiri, quia liberum est eis tunc bona sua, non solum religiosis locis, sed etiam quibuslibet privatis conferre personis.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Those who bury another's parishioner, whom they ought not to bury, are compelled to restore the body and the things they obtained by reason of him. This it says together with the following chapter.

The same.

It was intimated to us on the part of the canons of Obrigen that the prior of Insula buried a certain parishioner of theirs in his church after an appeal had been made to us. Wherefore, because this is known to be contrary to ecclesiastical discipline and wholly alien to the path of reason, that someone should put his sickle into another's harvest, by apostolic writings, directing your fraternity, we command that you admonish and strictly compel the aforesaid prior to restore to the aforesaid canons the body of their aforesaid parishioner and thereupon agree peacefully and amicably with them, or not defer presenting himself in our presence.

> Qui sepeliunt parochianum alienum, quem sepelire non debent, coguntur restituere corpus, et quae ratione ipsius obtinuerunt. Hoc dicit cum cap. sequenti.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex parte canonicorum Obrigensium nobis est intimatum, quod prior de Insula quendam parochianum suum post appellationem ad nos factam in sua ecclesia sepelivit. Unde, quoniam hoc ecclesiasticae disciplinae contrarium esse dignoscitur, et a rationis tramite penitus alienum, ut quis falcem mittat in messem alienam, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus praefatum priorem moneas et districte compellas, ut memoratis canonicis praedicti parochiani sui corpus restituat, et exinde pacifice et amicabiliter conveniat cum eisdem, aut in praesentia nostra se non differat exhibere.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above, in the chapter immediately preceding.

The same, to the Dean and Master R. of Ravenna.

Since it is free, by all the institutes of the holy Fathers, to choose burial for oneself in a last will at religious places, he who presumes in this respect to contradict the devotion of the last will of persons dying undoubtedly opposes canonical reason. It has come to our hearing from the complaint of the abbot and brothers of Saint Martin of Laon that, when a certain priest was carrying the body of a certain woman to the same church for burial, as she had disposed in her last will, the monks of Saint Vincent of Laon did not at all hesitate violently to seize her body and bury it in their own church. And they presumed to do the same concerning the son of Ralph Canis. Concerning this we are indeed moved with vehement wonder, since the same monks both act contrary to the institutes of the holy Fathers and strive to violate the privileges of our predecessors and our own, which the aforesaid brothers propose that they have concerning free burial. Hence it is that by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, after summoning each party before you, you inquire into the truth of the matter concerning this and, if you find it to be so, you compel the aforesaid monks to restore in their entirety to the aforesaid brothers the bones of the aforesaid woman and the benefactions that they are known to have received by occasion of her burial, and not to presume to do such things hereafter.

> Summatum est supr. cap. prox.
>
> Idem Decano et Magistro R. Ravennatensibus.
>
> Quum liberum sit +de universis institutionibus sanctorum Patrum, apud religiosa loca in ultima voluntate sibi eligere sepulturam, canonicae procul dubio obviat rationi, qui devotioni extremae voluntatis decedentium in hac parte contradicere praesumit. Ad audientiam nostram pervenit ex conquestione abbatis et fratrum sancti Martini Laudonensis, quod, quum presbyter quidam corpus cuiusdam mulieris, prout in ultima voluntate sua disposuit, ad eandem ecclesiam sepeliendum deferret, monachi S. Vincentii Laudonensis corpus ipsius violenter rapere et in ecclesia sua sepelire minime dubitarunt. +Et hoc idem de filio Radulfi Canis praesumpserunt. Super quo utique vehementi sumus admiratione commoti, quum iidem monachi et sanctorum Patrum institutionibus contrairent, et privilegia praedecessorum nostrorum et nostra, quae praedicti fratres de libera se habere sepultura proponunt, satagunt violare. Inde est, quod fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, utraque parte ante vos convocata rei veritatem super hoc inquiratis, et, si ita esse inveneritis, praefatos monachos compellatis, ut ossa praefatae mulieris, et beneficia, quae occasione sepulturae ipsius recepisse noscuntur, memoratis fratribus cum integritate restituant, et de cetero talia facere non praesumant.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A married woman can freely choose a burial place for herself.—(Whether, etc.:) A father can cause his minor children to be buried where he wishes, if the custom of the place so holds. This it says.

Lucius III.

But concerning a wife, whether she, just as also the husband, ought to have free choice of burial, it seems to us that no distinction is to be made in this respect between husband and woman, but we believe the faculty of each to be equal in this case, since that choice pertains rather to the state in which a woman is released from the law of her husband. But whether a father can bury his minor children where he prefers, we do not find defined by the holy Fathers, and therefore we decree that it is to be left to the custom of the land.

Mulier nupta libere potest sibi eligere sepulturam. — (Utrum etc.:) Pater filios inpuberes, ubi voluerit, potest sepeliri facere, si hoc habet consuetudo loci. H. d.

Lucius III.

De uxore vero, utrum, quemadmodum et vir, liberam debeat habere sepulturam, nobis videtur, quod nulla super hoc inter virum et mulierem sit facienda distinctio, sed utrique in casu isto aequalem esse credimus facultatem, quum electio ista ad eum potius statum pertineat, in quo mulier solvitur a lege viri. Utrum autem pater, quo magis voluerit, minores filios valeat sepelire, non invenimus a sanctis Patribus diffinitum, et propterea terrae consuetudini decernimus relinquendum.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If a parishioner of the cathedral church is buried elsewhere, a fourth of his funeral offerings or of the things left to the church of burial is owed to the chapter of the cathedral church.

The same, to the Provost and Chapter of Faenza.

Since concerning a certain chapter, which by favor of religion [is granted by the Apostolic See to certain churches—namely, that when some persons choose burial with them, canonical justice is reserved to the churches from which the bodies of the dead are taken—scandal sometimes arises among ecclesiastical men, who devise a diverse and varying interpretation of that justice, we have thought, from the clemency of the Apostolic See and with the counsel of our brothers, that provision should be made for you and your church, which, as we have learned, suffers grave injury in this matter through certain religious men exceeding what was granted to them by the Apostolic See in the aforesaid chapter.] Hence it is that, [inclining to your just petitions,] by the authority of the present writing we establish that, if it should happen that any of your parishioners chooses burial elsewhere, according to the statutes of blessed Gregory a fourth portion from his testament is to be left to you. [In addition, etc. Given at Verona, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of April. 1186–87.]

Si parochianus ecclesiae cathedralis alibi sepelitur, de ipsius funeralibus seu relictis ecclesiae sepulturae debetur quarta capitulo ecclesiae cathedralis.

Idem Praeposito et Capitulo Faventinis.

Quum super quodam capitulo, +quod religionis favore [a sede apostolica quibusdam ecclesiis indulgetur, ut videlicet, quum aliqui apud eas eligunt sepulturam, Ecclesiis, a quibus mortuorum corpora assumuntur, canonica iustitia reservetur, nonnunquam inter viros ecclesiasticos scandalum suscitetur, interpretationem ipsius iustitiae diversam et variam configentes; vobis et ecclesiae vestrae, quae in hoc gravem, sicut accepimus, patitur laesionem, quibusdam religiosis viris excedentibus, quod eis in praedicto capitulo a sede apostolica est indultum, de clementia sedis apostolicae et fratrum nostrorum consilio duximus providendum.] Inde siquidem est, quod [vestris iustis postulationibus inclinati] Praesentium auctoritate statuimus, ut, si aliquem parochianorum vestrorum alibi contigerit eligere sepulturam, secundum statuta B. Gregorii de testamento ipsius quarta vobis portio relinquatur. [Ad haec etc. Dat. Veronae XV. Kal. April. 1186- 7.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: As to the quantity of the canonical portion owed to the parish church, the custom of the place is followed.

Clement III.

You wished to be made certain by us how that clause that is customarily apposed in our privileges concerning the justice of those churches from which the bodies of the dead are taken ought to be understood and expounded. But since diverse institutes of our predecessors have issued concerning this article, Leo holding that justice to be sometimes a third part and sometimes half a part, and Urban III holding it to be a fourth, we furnish such a response amid this variation: as blessed Jerome says, let each province abound in its own understanding; according to the reasonable custom of the region, let that justice be observed at a half, a third, or a fourth part according to the diversities of places. [Given at the Lateran, in the second year.]

In quantitate canonicae, quae debetur ecclesiae parochiali, statur loci consuetudini.

Clemens III.

Certificari voluisti a nobis, quomodo illa clausula, quae in privilegiis nostris solet opponi de salva iustitia illarum ecclesiarum, a quibus mortuorum corpora assumuntur, intelligi debeat et exponi. Quum autem super hoc articulo diversa antecessorum nostrorum manaverint instituta, Leone iustitiam illam quandoque tertiam partem, quandoque vero mediam partem, et Urbano III. quartam fore censentibus, nos tale praebemus in hac varietate responsum, ut, sicut beatus Hieronymus inquit, unaquaeque provincia in suo sensu abundet, secundum rationabilem consuetudinem regionis illa iustitia circa medietatem, vel tertiam aut quartam partem pro locorum diversitatibus attendatur. [Dat. Laterani Ao. II.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Those privileged concerning the right of conducting funerals can bury those who choose burial with them, nevertheless paying the canonical portion to the parish church. But if they bury others, they are bound to restore whatever they received by occasion of the funeral.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Clermont and the Abbot of Mauriac.

When our beloved son, the prior of the church of Montferrand, and B., the proctor of the Hospitallers of the diocese of Clermont, were constituted in our presence, we appointed our venerable brother the Bishop of Sabina as auditor, before whom the same prior proposed that the aforesaid Hospitallers had received for ecclesiastical burial certain of his parishioners, two of whom were under the lawful years, on account of which the same church sustained damage of more than five thousand solidi. Wherefore the same prior humbly supplicated that we deign to forbid the Hospitallers themselves from attempting such things hereafter to his prejudice, and to compel them to repair the damages that he sustained therefrom. On the contrary, the aforesaid proctor proposed that, by privilege as well as by special indulgence, it is lawful for the Hospitallers to receive indiscriminately for ecclesiastical burial all persons except the excommunicated and interdicted who have chosen to be buried with them, and that they can lawfully accept fideicommissa left in a last will, only a fourth being paid to the parish church from whose parish the bodies of the dead are taken, except from horses and arms, which were granted to them in aid of the Holy Land, from which they are not bound to deduct a fourth. Therefore, when the same bishop had faithfully reported to you these and the other things proposed before him, all the attestations and allegations having been heard and understood, with the counsel of our brothers, we thought that such a sentence should be rendered concerning these matters: the aforesaid Hospitallers are hereafter not to receive parishioners of the aforesaid church for ecclesiastical burial unless they have chosen to be buried with them. And then the parish church is to receive a fourth part from the offerings, beds, and other things that the deceased left for his soul in his last disposition, except from horses and arms, and the Hospitallers are to have the residue, unless the deceased was induced by their deceit or fraud to make a disposition of this kind. We nevertheless enjoin upon the Hospitallers themselves that they satisfy the aforesaid prior concerning the fourth part of three thousand solidi, since it is established that they received those solidi from his parishioners and it is not sufficiently shown that they had been their oblates or converts. We further thought it should be enjoined upon them that, unless they prove that G., a parishioner of the prior who was killed in the fields, had chosen burial with them, they restore to the aforesaid prior all things that they received in consideration of him; otherwise, they are bound to restore only a fourth part. But for those who are established to have died under the lawful years, we enjoined upon them that they restore all the things they received for the sake of their burial. Wherefore, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, appeal being removed, you cause by ecclesiastical censure what was judicially determined by you to be firmly observed. [Given at Ferentino, on the second day before the Ides of June, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Privilegiati super iure funerandi sepelire possunt illos, qui apud eos eligunt sepulturam solvendo tamen canonicam portionem ecclesiae parochiali. Si vero alios sepeliunt, tenentur restituere quicquid occasione funeris receperunt.
>
> Innocentius III. Episcopo Claremontensi et Abbati Mauriensi.
>
> In nostra praesentia constitutis dilecto filio priore ecclesiae Montis Ferrandi, et B. procuratore hospitalariorum Claremontensis dioecesis, venerabilem fratrem nostrum Sabinensem episcopum concessimus auditorem, coram quo idem prior proposuit, quod praedicti hospitalarii quosdam parochianos suos, quorum duo erant infra annos legitimos, receperunt ad ecclesiasticam sepulturam, propter quod ecclesia eadem damnum sustinuit plus quam quinque millium solidorum. Quare idem prior humiliter supplicavit, ut ipsis hospitalariis interdicere, ne de cetero talia in eius praeiudicium attentarent, et ad resarcienda damna, quae exinde sustinuit, eos compellere dignaremur. Econtra praedictus proposuit procurator, quod tam ex privilegio quam ex indulgentia speciali licet hospitalariis omnes passim, praeter excommunicatos et interdictos, ad ecclesiasticam sepulturam recipere, qui apud illos elegerint sepeliri, fideique commissa in ultima voluntate relicta possunt licenter accipere, soluta tantummodo quarta parochiali ecclesiae, de cuius parochia mortuorum corpora assumuntur, praeterquam de equis et armis, quae indulta sunt ipsis in subsidium terrae sanctae, de quibus quartam deducere non tenentur. +Quum igitur haec et alia, quae coram episcopo fuerunt proposita, idem vobis fideliter retulisset, auditis et intellectis attestationibus et allegationibus universis, de fratrum nostrorum consilio, Talem super his duximus sententiam proferendam, quod praedicti hospitalarii de cetero non recipiant parochianos ecclesiae supra dictae ad ecclesiasticam sepulturam, nisi apud eos elegerint sepeliri. Et tunc parochialis ecclesia de oblationibus, lectis et aliis, quae defunctus pro anima sua in ultima dispositione reliquit, praeterquam de equis et armis, recipiat quartam partem, et hospitalarii residuum habeant, nisi dolo vel fraude eorum defunctus inductus fuerit ad dispositionem huiusmodi faciendam; nihilominus ipsis hospitalariis iniungentes, ut de quarta parte trium millium solidorum priori satisfaciant memorato, quum constet, eos a parochianis eius illos solidos recepisse, nec sit sufficienter ostensum, quod eorum oblati vel conversi fuissent. Eisdem praeterea duximus iniungendum, quod, nisi probaverint, quod G. parochianus prioris, qui fuit interfectus in campis, apud ipsos elegerit sepulturam, universa, quae ipsius intuitu receperunt, priori restituant memorato; alioquin quartam partem solummodo restituere teneantur. Pro illis vero, quos constat infra annos legitimos decessisse, eisdem iniunximus, ut quae sepulturae eorum gratia receperunt restituant universa. Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus quod a vobis est sententialiter diffinitum, vos appellatione remota per censuram ecclesiasticam faciatis firmiter observari. [Dat. Ferentini II. Id. Iun. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: One who died accidentally ought not to be deprived of ecclesiastical burial.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tours.

It was intimated to us on the part of the relatives of M., a young woman now deceased, that, when in the twilight of night the noble man N., lord I. of Île-Bouchard in the diocese of Tours, had laid an ambush for the young woman, wishing to violate her, whom he had often solicited for fornication, and she encountered upon a certain bridge the servants who were endeavoring to seize her, finally, she herself, fleeing their hands, fell from the bridge into the river and was accidentally drowned. But after she was drawn from the river, the chaplains of that place hesitated to deliver her body for burial, and you also, having been consulted, thought that an apostolic response should be sought concerning this. Wherefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, since that young woman did not voluntarily cast herself down from the bridge but, fleeing the hands of those who, as was expressed above, were endeavoring to seize her, fell by accident, you cause her body to be delivered to ecclesiastical burial, especially since she is known to have fled for an honorable cause, and communion is to be given to her now dead, to whom it was given while living. [Given at Saint Peter's, on the fourth day before the Nones of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate. 1206.]

Casualiter mortuus privari non debet ecclesiastica sepultura.

Idem Archiepiscopo Turonensi.

Ex parte parentum M. quondam iuvenculae nobis est intimatum, quod, quum in crepusculo noctis nobilis vir N. dominus I. de insula Butardi dioeceseos Turonensis eidem iuvenculae posuisset insidias, volens eam opprimere, quam sollicitaverat saepe de stupro, et ipsa gartionibus, qui eam rapere nitebantur, super quendam pontem occurreret, tandem ipsa fugiens manus illorum, in amnem de ponte cadens, fuit casu submersa. Ipsa vero extracta de amne, dubitaverunt capellani eiusdem loci corpus tradere sepulturae, et tu etiam requisitus duxisti super hoc responsum apostolicum requirendum. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, quum illa iuvencula non sponte praecipitaverit se de ponte, sed, fugiens manus illorum, qui eam, sicut superius est expressum, rapere nitebantur, casu ceciderit, corpus eius tradi facias > ecclesiasticae sepulturae, praesertim quum ex honesta causa fugisse noscatur, et cui communicabatur viventi communicandum sit iam defunctae. [Dat. ap. S. Petr. IV. Non. Mart. Pontif. nostr. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If the bones of excommunicated persons are buried in an ecclesiastical cemetery and can be distinguished, they ought to be exhumed and cast out; otherwise, it is otherwise.

The same, to the Archbishop of Nidaros.

It is established by the sacred canons, and approved by the custom of those observing them, that we not communicate with the dead with whom we did not communicate while living, and that those who were previously cut off from ecclesiastical unity and were not reconciled to the church at the moment of death are to lack ecclesiastical burial. Hence, if it sometimes happens that either the bodies of excommunicated persons through the violence of certain persons, or by some other event, are buried in an ecclesiastical cemetery, if they can be distinguished from the bodies of others, they ought to be exhumed and cast far from ecclesiastical burial. But if they cannot be distinguished, we do not believe it expedient that the bodies of the faithful be disinterred together with the bones of excommunicated persons, since, although no burial or a base one does not harm the just, a celebrated or splendid one does not benefit the impious. [We distinguish, etc.; cf. c. 5, Concerning Things Done by Force, I. 40.]

> Si ossa excommunicatorum sunt sepulta in ecclesiastico coemeterio, et discerni possunt, debent exhumari et proiici; alias secus.
>
> Idem Nidrosiensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Sacris est canonibus institutum, et utentium consuetudine approbatum, ut quibus non communicavimus vivis non communicemus defunctis, et ut careant ecclesiastica sepultura qui prius erant ab ecclesiastica unitate praecisi, nec in articulo mortis ecclesiae reconciliati fuerint. Unde, si contingat interdum, quod vel excommunicatorum corpora per violentiam aliquorum, vel alio casu in coemeterio ecclesiastico tumulentur, si ab aliorum corporibus discerni poterunt, exhumari debent et procul ab ecclesiastica sepultura iactari. Quodsi discerni non poterunt, expedire non credimus, ut cum excommunicatorum ossibus corpora extumulentur fidelium, quum, licet non obsit iustis sepultura nulla vel vilis, impiis tamen celebris vel speciosa non prosit. [Distinguimus etc. cf. c. 5. de his, quae vi I. 40.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Consecrated cemetery ground to be dug for burial ought not to be sold.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Maguelone.

The perversity of a custom to be abolished, indeed of an abominable corruption, has, as is said, grown established at Montpellier, so that, namely, when persons die, permission is not given to dig a grave until a certain price is paid to the church for the ground in which they are to be buried. Therefore, because this is far from the rule of piety and the honor of the church, by the authority of the present writing we command you that, since you are the diocesan bishop of the place, you forbid clerics to presume to exact anything at all for this cause, enjoining upon the laity that they observe the laudable custom introduced through the pious devotion of the faithful toward the church of God, and that they not appear to corrupt it with the leaven of heretical depravity under the pretext of ecclesiastical purity.

> Terra coemeteriata pro sepultura fodienda vendi non debet.

Innocentius III. Episcopo Magalonensi.

Abolendae consuetudinis, immo abominabilis corruptelae perversitas apud montem Pessulanum, ut dicitur, inolevit, ut videlicet decedentibus non prius permittatur effodi sepultura, quam pro terra, in qua sepeliendi sunt, certum pretium ecclesiae persolvatur. +Quia igitur id longe est a regula pietatis et ab ecclesiae honestate, praesentium tibi auctoritate Mandamus, quatenus, quum loci dioecesanus exsistas, inhibeas clericis, ne quicquam omnino praesumant exigere hac de causa, iniungens laicis, ut laudabilem consuetudinem, erga Dei ecclesiam pia devotione fidelium introductam, observent nec fermento haereticae pravitatis illam corrumpere videantur sub praetextu ecclesiasticae puritatis.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: An excommunicated person who was absolved at death by his priest ought to be buried in a cemetery, and the heirs are compelled to make satisfaction.

Gregory IX, to Bishop N.

A parishioner of yours who, excommunicated for manifest offenses—namely, homicide, arson, violent laying of hands upon ecclesiastical persons, violation of churches, or incest—was absolved by his priest according to the form of the church while he was at the end of life, ought not to be denied a cemetery and the other suffrages of the church; but his heirs and relatives, to whom his goods came, are to be compelled by ecclesiastical censure to make satisfaction for him.

Excommunicatus, qui per suum presbyterum fuit absolutus in morte, in coemeterio sepeliri debet, et ad satisfaciendum coguntur heredes.

Gregorius IX. Episcopo N.

Parochiano tuo, qui excommunicatus pro manifestis excessibus, videlicet homicidio, incendio, violenta manuum iniectione in personas ecclesiasticas, ecclesiarum violatione vel incestu fuit, dum ageret in extremis, per presbyterum suum iuxta formam ecclesiae absolutus, non debent coemeterium et alia ecclesiae suffragia denegari, sed eius heredes et propinqui, ad quos bona pervenerunt ipsius, ut pro eodem satisfaciant, censura sunt ecclesiastica compellendi.

Title XXIX: On Parish Priests and Another's Parishioners

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Between a bishop substituted for a heretical bishop and the heretical bishop himself who returned and was received by dispensation, the bishopric is divided in the manner expressed here.

From the African Council.

If a bishop from the Donatists is converted to Catholic unity, let them divide equally between themselves those places that shall be found thus, where both parties have existed; that is, so that some places pertain to one and others to the other, in such a way that he who has more time in the episcopate makes the division, and the junior chooses. But if perhaps there is one place, let it pertain to him to whom it is found to be nearer. But if it is equally near to both sees, let it pertain to him whom the people choose. But if perhaps the ancient Catholics wish their own [bishop,] and those converted from the Donatists wish theirs, let the will of the greater number be preferred to the fewer. But if the parties are equal, let it be assigned to the bishop of greater time. But if there are found to be so many places in which both parties have existed that they cannot be divided equally, as if they are an odd number, after those places that have an equal number have been distributed, as to whatever place remains, let what was said when one place was treated above be observed concerning it.

> DE PAROCHIS, ET ALIENIS PAROCHIANIS.
>
> Inter episcopum substitutum episcopo haeretico, et ipsum episcopum haereticum reversum et ex dispensatione receptum, dividitur episcopatus modo hic expresso.
>
> Ex concilio Africano.
>
> Si episcopus ex Donatistis ad catholicam unitatem est conversus, aequaliter inter se dividant eas, quae sic inventae fuerint, ubi ambae partes fuerint, id est, ut alia loca ad illum, alia ad alium pertineant, ita, ut ille dividat, qui amplius temporis in episcopatu habet, et minor eligat. Quodsi forte unus fuerit locus, ad eum pertineat, cui vicinior invenitur. Quod si ambabus cathedris aequaliter vicinus est, ad eum pertineat, quem plebs elegerit. Sed si forte antiqui catholici suum [episcopum] voluerint, et illi suum, qui ex Donatistis conversi sunt, plurimorum voluntas paucioribus praeferatur. Si autem partes aequales sunt, maioris temporis episcopo deputetur. Si autem ita plurima loca inveniuntur, in quibus ambae partes fuerint, ut non possint aequaliter dividi, velut si in impari numero fuerint, distributis eis locis, qui parem habent numerum, quicunque locus remanserit, hoc in eo servetur, quod dictum est, quum de uno loco superius tractaretur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: On Sundays and feast days parish priests ought not admit the parishioners of others to mass if they come to their church from contempt.

From the Council of Nantes.

That on Sundays or feast days priests, before they celebrate mass, question the people whether there is in the church a parishioner of another who, having despised his own priest, wishes to hear mass there; and if they find him, let them immediately cast him out of the church.

> Presbyteri parochiales dominicis diebus et festivis parochianos alienos ad missam admittere non debent, si ex contemptu ad eorum ecclesiam accedunt.
>
> Ex concilio Manetensi.
>
> Ut dominicis vel festivis diebus presbyteri, antequam missam celebrent, plebem interrogent, si alterius parochianus in ecclesia sit, qui proprio contempto presbytero ibi velit missam audire, quem si invenerint, statim ab ecclesia abiiciant.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A bishop cannot ordain another's parishioner without that bishop's license, nor otherwise judge him.

Pope Hadrian.

Let no bishop presume to judge another's parishioner, [retain him, or ordain him without the other's will, or judge him, because, just as his ordination will be invalid, so also will his adjudication, since we hold that no one is bound by the sentence of a judge other than his own.] For he who could not ordain him can in no way at all judge him.

> Episcopus parochianum alterius sine ipsius licentia ordinare non potest, nec eum aliter iudicare.

> Hadrianus Papa.
>
> Nullus episcopus alterius parochianum iudicare praesumat, +[retinere, aut ordinare absque eius voluntate vel iudicare, quia, sicut irrita erit eius ordinatio, ita et diiudicatio, quoniam censemus nullum alterius iudicis, nisi sui, sententia teneri.] Nam qui eum ordinare non potuit, nec iudicare ullatenus potest.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The boundaries of parishes that are established, or things adhering to the boundaries, cannot be acquired by prescription.

Urban III.

But concerning that as to which we have understood there to be doubt among you—whether what is known to have been established by the canons concerning boundaries and things adhering to boundaries not being subject to prescription is to be admitted in the limits of parishes as in those of provinces—we answer you that it seems well to be observed in each, if the boundaries of the provinces are established by lawful proof or otherwise by undoubted faith to have been fixed by ecclesiastical ordinance.

> Fines parochiarum, de quibus constat, vel finibus cohaerentia, praescribi non possunt.
>
> Urbanus III.
>
> Super eo vero, quod apud vos intelleximus dubitatum, an quod de finibus et his, quae finibus cohaerent, non praescribendis statutum per canones esse dignoscitur, sit in parochiarum limitibus, sicut in provincialibus, admittendum, illud vobis respondemus, quod bene videtur in utroque servandum, si provinciarum fines legitima probatione vel alias indubitata fide constiterit ecclesiastica ordinatione statutos.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If a parishioner or diocesan transfers his domicile, the former prelate does not vindicate episcopal or diocesan rights over him for himself; nevertheless, predial tithes are owed to him from that parish, unless they are owed to another by custom.

Celestine III.

Our venerable brother, the Bishop of Acre, signified to us that, since after the recovery of the city of Acre a great many persons transferred themselves to dwell in it who before the general occupation of the Holy Land had chosen a [permanent] dwelling in other cities of the Kingdom of Jerusalem, and had made some residence in it and still even reside in the same, the prelates of the aforesaid cities compel them to pay ecclesiastical rights to themselves. But because we ought not to transgress the boundaries established by the fathers or put the sickle into another's harvest, [by apostolic writings] we command your fraternity that, after [prior admonition,] you compel the prelates of the aforesaid places, with the severity that is fitting, to usurp no jurisdiction over the aforesaid inhabitants of Acre for themselves, nor to exact temporal things from those to whom they do not minister spiritual things; in such a way, nevertheless, that, if they receive fruits from fields constituted in the prelates' parish and in the regions overseas tithes are paid by reason of estates, they henceforth pay those tithes to them in their entirety, but are compelled to answer to the said Bishop of Acre concerning the other things as to their own diocesan bishop. [But if not all, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the tenth day before the Kalends of January. 1198.]

Si parochianus seu dioecesanus domicilium transfert, primus praelatus in eo iura episcopalia seu dioecesana sibi non vendicat; decimae tamen praediales illius parochiae sibi debentur, nisi alteri debeantur ex consuetudine.

Coelestinus III.

Significavit nobis venerabilis frater noster Aconensis episcopus, quod, quum post recuperationem Aconensis civitatis ad habitandum in ea se quam plurimi contulissent, qui ante generalem occupationem terrae sanctae in aliis civitatibus regni Hierosolymitani [perpetuam] elegerant mansionem, +et in ea residentiam fecerint aliquantam, et adhuc etiam resident in eadem, praelati praedictarum civitatum eos ad solvendum sibi iura ecclesiastica compellunt. Quia vero transgredi non debemus terminos a patribus constitutos, aut falcem in messem mittere alienam, Fraternitati tuae [per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus praedictorum locorum praelatos, ut sibi nullam in praedictos Aconenses habitatores iurisdictionem usurpent, nec ab eis temporalia exigant quibus spiritualia non ministrant, [monitione praemissa] districtione, qua convenit, compellatis ita tamen, quod, si de agris in eorum parochia constitutis fructus percipiunt, et in ultramarinis partibus ratione praediorum decimae persolvuntur, deinceps eis ipsas decimas cum integritate persolvant, dicto vero Aconensi tanquam dioecesano suo cogantur de ceteris respondere. [*Quod si non omnes etc. Dat. Lat. X. Kal. Ian. * 1198.]

Title XXX: On Tithes, First Fruits, and Offerings

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It expresses four kinds of tithes that were owed under the Old Law.

Jerome, on Ezekiel.

Under the law the people owed a tenth part of all produce to the Levitical tribe. Again, from those tithes the Levites—that is, the rank of inferior ministers—gave tithes to the priests. There were also other tithes that each person from the people of Israel separated in his storehouses, so that he might eat them when he went to the temple in the city of Jerusalem and invite the priests and Levites to a banquet in the vestibule of the temple. There were also other tithes that they stored up for the poor. But the first fruits that they offered from the produce were not defined by a specific designation but left to the choice of those making the offering. We have also received a tradition of the Hebrews, not commanded by law but grown established by the choice of the teachers, that those who gave the most gave a fortieth part to the priests, while those who gave the least gave a sixtieth; between the fortieth and the sixtieth it was lawful to offer whatever they wished. Therefore, what was left doubtful in the Pentateuch is specifically defined here on account of the avarice of the priests, lest they exact more from the people in the offering of first fruits, that is, that a sixtieth part be offered of the things produced from the earth. For if the cor, which in Hebrew is called gomor and by the Septuagint is termed gomor, contains thirty modii in dry kinds as well as liquid, while the cophi and the bath are a tenth part of a cor, it is also commanded that a sixth part of the cor, the cophi, and the bath be given to the priests in offering first fruits. It is clearly calculated that this makes half a modius from three modii, which sixtieth part of the first fruits the priests ought to receive. Meanwhile, concerning these things, according to the letter and the Hebrew truth, let it suffice both to have understood and to have heard.

DE DECIMIS, PRIMITIIS ET OBLATIONIBUS.

Exprimit quatuor genera decimarum, quae ex veteri lege debebantur.

Hieronymus super Ezechielem.

Decimam partem omnium frugum Leviticae tribui populus ex lege debebat. Rursus ex ipsis decimis Levitae, hoc est inferiorum ministrorum gradus, decimas dabant sacerdotibus. Erant quoque et aliae decimae, quas unusquisque de populo Israel in suis horreis separabat, ut comederet eas, quum iret in templum in urbe Hierusalem, et in vestibulo templi sacerdotes et Levitas ad convivium invitaret. Erant autem et aliae decimae, quas pauperibus recondebant. At vero primitiae, quas de frugibus offerebant, non erant speciali nomine diffinitae, sed offerentium arbitrio derelictae. Traditionem quoque accepimus Hebraeorum, non lege praeceptam, sed arbitrio magistrorum inolitam, quod qui plurimum, quadragesimam partem dabant sacerdotibus, qui minimum, sexagesimam; inter quadragesimam et sexagesimam licebat quodcunque voluissent offerre. Quod igitur in Pentateucho dubium derelictum est, hic specialiter diffinitur propter sacerdotum avaritiam, ne amplius a populo exigant in primitiis offerendis, id est, ut sexagesima pars offeratur eorum, quae gignuntur a terra. Si enim chorus qui Hebraice appellatur gomor et a Septuaginta dicitur gomor, XXX. habet modios tam in aridis speciebus quam in liquentibus, cophi quoque et batus decima pars est chori. Praecipitur quoque, quod ut sexta pars tam chori quam cophi, quam bati detur sacerdotibus in primitiis offerendis quae de tribus modiis dimidium facit modium, perspicue supputatur, quam sexagesimam partem primitiarum sacerdotes accipere deberent. Haec interim iuxta literam et Hebraicam veritatem et sensisse sufficiat et audisse.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It cannot fittingly be summarized on account of the variety of readings.

Paschal II.

It is a new kind of exaction that clerics exact tithes of produce or animals from clerics, since nowhere do we read this in the law of the Lord. For the Levites are not read to have received or extorted tithes from Levites. Assuredly, those clerics who receive from clerics the labors of spiritual ministries owe them tithes [of their labors.]

Non potest congrue summari propter varietatem lecturarum.

Paschalis II.

Novum genus exactionis est, ut clerici a clericis frugum decimas vel animalium exigant, quum nusquam in lege Domini hoc legamus. Non enim Levitae a Levitis decimas accepisse vel extorsisse leguntur. Illi profecto clerici, qui a clericis spiritualium ministeriorum labores accipiunt, [laborum suorum] decimas eis debent.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: An agreement concerning tithes is not taken away by a subsequent privilege if it makes no mention of that agreement.

Hadrian IV, to the Bishops of Worcester and Hereford.

We have learned from the manifold complaint of V., priest of Cretona, that, although he had peacefully possessed the church of Cretona for thirty years and more, within these four years the monks of Brueria entirely withdrew from him and the church all the tithes that the same church had always been accustomed to receive from the cultivated lands from its first foundation, although, more than twenty years and more having elapsed, such an agreement had intervened between the abbot of Brudeia, named W., with the consent of the whole convent, and the aforesaid priest, confirmed by an authentic writing of the monks: the monks would pay in full to the said priest and his church, for as long as he lived, the tithes of grain and all legumes, except the lesser tithes, which the same priest had declared quit for the advancement of the monks' church. And although the agreement had been observed during the times of three abbots of the aforesaid place, the same abbot, coming to our presence, obtained from us a privilege in which it was granted to his monastery that they should be bound to pay tithes to no one from the labors they cultivated by their own hands or expenses. Indeed, after he returned home, he found so much favor with Henry, the illustrious King of England, that the king conferred upon his monastery in perpetual alms the whole land of that village in which the church of the aforesaid priest is situated. This having been done, the aforesaid abbot, after expelling all the tenants of that village and cultivating at his own expense the whole land of the aforesaid parish, withdrew the revenues owed to the church. Hence, because it was not our intention through our [aforesaid] privilege to derogate from the aforesaid agreement, by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that, after summoning each party before you, you inquire more fully into the truth of the matter; and, if such an agreement was made between the predecessor of the aforesaid abbot and the aforementioned priest with the consent of the monks, and was observed for a year, you compel the same abbot and monks inviolably to hold and observe the same agreement or composition, notwithstanding the said privilege unless, which we do not believe, that transaction is contained in it, or peacefully to reach an agreement with him thereupon, and to pay him the revenues [in full] according to the form of the composition, occasion and appeal being set aside; you are by our authority to admonish and more strictly compel them. But if both of you, etc.

> Compositio super decimis non tollitur per privilegium sequens, si de illa mentionem non facit.
>
> Hadrianus IV. Vigorensi et Herfordensi Episcopis.
>
> Ex multiplici conquestione V. presbyteri de Cretona accepimus, quod, quum ecclesiam de Cretona triginta annis et eo amplius pacifice possedisset, monachi de Brueria decimas universas, quas de terris cultis eadem ecclesia a prima fundatione sui semper percipere consuevit, infra hoc quadriennium sibi et ecclesiae penitus subtraxerunt, quum inter abbatem de Brudeia. W. nomine, de consensu totius conventus, et praedictum presbyterum viginti annis et eo amplius elapsis talis intercesserit conventio scripto monachorum authentico roborata, quod monachi iam dicto presbytero et ecclesiae suae in integrum de blado et universis leguminibus, quamdiu viveret, decimas persolverent, exceptis minutis decimis, quas idem presbyter ob exaltationem ecclesiae monachorum quietas clamavit; quumque conventio temporibus trium abbatum praescripti loci servata fuisset, idem abbas, ad praesentiam nostram accedens, a nobis privilegium obtinuit, in quo monasterio suo indultum est, ut de laboribus, quos propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolunt, nulli decimas solvere tenerentur. +Qui quidem, reversus ad propria, tantum apud Henricum regem illustrem Angliae favorem invenit, quod rex totam terram istius villae, in qua ecclesia praefati presbyteri sita est, monasterio ipsius in perpetuam eleemosynam contulit, quo facto praedictus abbas, universis istius villae colonis expulsis, totam terram praedictae parochiae excolens propriis sumptibus, ecclesiae debitos reditus subtraxit. Unde quia non fuit nostrae intentionis per [praedictum] privilegium nostrum conventioni derogare praedictae, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus utraque parte ante vos convocata rei veritatem plenius inquiratis, et, si inter praedecessorem memorati abbatis et praenominatum presbyterum consensu monachorum talis conventio facta fuerit, et per annum servata, eundem abbatem et monachos, ut eandem conventionem vel compositionem, non obstante dicto privilegio, nisi, quod non credimus, de transactione ipsa contineatur in eo, inviolabiliter teneant et observent, vel exinde secum pacifice conveniant, et secundum formam compositionis reditus ipsi [integre] solvant, occasione et appellatione postposita, auctoritate nostra moneatis et districtius compellatis. Si autem uterque vestrum etc.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Monks are bound to pay predial tithes from newly cultivated estates from which tithes were paid previously.

The same, to Thomas, Archbishop of Canterbury.

The office of dispensation committed to us by God admonishes and exhorts us in many ways that we ought usefully to provide for all the churches of Christ and that we must preserve their rights whole and unimpaired. It has [indeed] come to us that the monks of Bosse do not pay tithes in full to the church of Saint Mary, in whose parish they dwell, and contradict rendering them [according to the canons.] Therefore, our brother, by apostolic writings we command and direct you to compel them, with all severity by our authority and without the obstacle of appeal, to pay to the aforesaid church those tithes also from cultivated lands on which houses had once been constructed, with the same integrity with which they were accustomed to be paid before they dwelt in the same parish. And just as tithes were also formerly paid from pastures, so now we will that tithes be paid without diminution from those same lands converted to the fertility of crops.

> Monachi tenentur solvere decimas praediales de praediis noviter cultis, de quibus decimae prius solvebantur.
>
> Idem Thomae Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Commissum nobis +a Deo dispensationis officium admonet et hortatur multipliciter, ut universis Christi ecclesiis debeamus utiliter providere, atque integra iura sua nos oportet atque illibata servare. Pervenit [quidem] ad nos, quod monachi de Bosse ecclesiae sanctae Mariae, in cuius parochia commorantur, decimas ex integro non persolvunt, et eas [secundum canones] reddere contradicunt. Ea propter frater noster, tibi per apostolica scripta mandamus, et praecipimus quatenus eos, ut ipsas decimas etiam de terris cultis, in quibus olim domus constructae fuerant, praefatae ecclesiae cum ea integritate persolvant, qua prius, quam in eadem parochia morarentur, solebant persolvi, sine appellationis obstaculo nostra auctoritate cum omni districtione compellas. Et sicut etiam de pascuis olim decimae persolvebantur, ita nunc de eisdem, ad frugum fertilitatem translatis, decimas volumus absque deminutione persolvi.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A person is compelled by excommunication to pay tithes from mills and the other things contained here and in the following chapter. This it says together with the following chapter.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans.

It has come to us that, although your parishioners were accustomed to pay in full to the churches to which they are owed the tithes of their goods, now, nevertheless, the laudable custom being omitted, certain of them do not fear to withhold from those churches tithes from wool and hay and from the revenues of mills and fisheries. Therefore, because those who do not pay tithes to those churches more manifestly oppose the divine institution, by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that you take care to admonish your parishioners and, if there is need, compel them under the severity of excommunication to pay in full to the churches to which they are owed the tithes from the revenues of mills and fisheries, from hay and wool, all contradiction [and appeal] ceasing.

Per excommunicationem compellitur quis ad solvendas decimas de molendinis et aliis hic contentis et cap. sequ. Hoc dicit cum sequ.

Alexander III. Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et eius Suffraganeis.

Pervenit ad nos, +quod, quum parochiani vestri decimas bonorum suorum consueverint, ecclesiis, quibus debentur, cum integritate persolvere, nunc tamen laudabili consuetudine praetermissa quidam ex ipsis de lana et foeno et de proventibus molendinorum et piscariarum ipsis ecclesiis, subtrahere non verentur. Quoniam igitur institutioni divinae manifestius obviant, qui decimas ipsis ecclesiis non persolverint, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus parochianos vestros monere curetis, et, si opus fuerit, sub excommunicationis districtione compellere, ut de proventibus molendinorum et piscariarum, de foeno et lana decimas ecclesiis, quibus debentur, omni contradictione [et appellatione] cessante, cum integritate persolvant.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It is summarized together with the preceding chapter, and explain it as was said in the preceding chapter.

The same, to the Bishop of Winchester.

We received the messengers and letters of your fraternity with the kindness that was fitting, and, so far as was lawful, we took care to hear your petitions, as those of a person whom we love in the Lord with pure and fervent charity and to whose advantages and advancement we wish diligently to attend. Since, therefore, those things in which you desire to be fortified by the authority of our command pertain to your office, you ought to have been heard the more easily in these matters insofar as they more specially regard the salvation of those concerning whom you will render an account at the final judgment. Hence it is that by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that you compel your parishioners by ecclesiastical severity to pay tithes from bees and from every fruit.

Summatum est cum praecedenti, et declara ut in praecedenti dictum est.

Idem Vintoniensi Episcopo.

Nuncios +et literas tuae fraternitatis ea, qua decuit, benignitate recepimus, et petitiones tuas, quoad licuit, curavimus exaudire, sicut illius personae, quam pura in Domino et ferventi caritate diligimus, et cuius commodis et profectibus intendere volumus diligenter. Quum igitur ad officium tuum spectent ea, in quibus praecepti nostri desideras auctoritate muniri, tanto in his debuisti facilius exaudiri, quanto ipsam eorum specialius salutem respiciunt, de quibus in extremo iudicio redditurus es rationem. Inde est, quod fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus parochianos tuos de apibus et de omni fructu decimas persolvere ecclesiastica districtione compellas.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A tithe of fruits ought to be paid immediately when they are gathered, expenses not being deducted.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Since the men of Horton, according to the general custom of the English church, are bound to pay without diminution to the church of Saint Michael, whose parishioners they are, a tithe from their crops in autumn, nine parts being retained for themselves, and before they do this they pay to their servants and hirelings from the untithed crops what is owed for their service during the whole year, only then paying a tithe from the residue, by apostolic writings directing your discretion, we command that you compel them under the severity of anathema to pay the tithe, both from crops and from the increase of their animals, without fraud or any diminution in autumn, as is customary, immediately after the fruits have been gathered, and at other times according as they are owed, and to take care to furnish worthy satisfaction concerning the things withheld and retained.

> Decima fructuum statim, quum collecti sunt, solvi debet non deductis expensis.
>
> Alexander III. Exoniensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum homines de Hortona secundum generalem Anglicanae ecclesiae consuetudinem de frugibus suis in auctumno, IX. partibus sibi retentis, decimam ecclesiae sancti Michaelis, cuius parochiani sunt, sine deminutione solvere teneantur, et, antequam id faciant, servientibus et mercenariis suis de frugibus non decimatis debita totius anni pro servitio suo impendant, tunc demum de residuo decimam persolventes, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus sub anathematis districtione eos cogatis ut decimam tam de frugibus quam de nutrimentis animalium suorum sine fraude et diminutione aliqua in auctumno, sicut moris est, statim fructibus collectis, et aliis temporibus, prout debentur, persolvant, atque de subtractis et retentis dignam satisfactionem exhibere procurent.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Those privileged concerning not paying tithes are bound to pay a tithe from those estates that they lease from others.

The same, to the Monks of Neuclen.

Our beloved sons the abbot and brothers of Holy Cross showed us by their complaint that you have leased from many laymen and received at farm estates from which they were accustomed to have tithes and a great part of their sustenance. Hence, because the same brothers are burdened immoderately and enormously by this, and it was not our intention or that of our predecessors that you should not pay tithes from possessions you leased, directing your whole body, we command that you pay in full to the same brothers the tithes from the estates you leased in their parishes, from which they were accustomed to receive tithes, or make such a peaceful and amicable composition with them that no matter of scandal ought to arise between you and you do not appear to extend your hands beyond what was granted to you.

> Privilegiati super decimis non solvendis, de iis praediis, quae ab aliis conducunt, decimam solvere tenentur.
>
> Idem Monachis de Neuclen.
>
> Dilecti filii abbas et fratres sanctae Crucis sua nobis conquestione monstrarunt, quod praedia, unde decimas et in magna parte sustentationem consueverunt habere, a plerisque laicis conduxistis et recepistis ad firmam. Unde, quoniam iidem fratres ex hoc gravantur immoderate et enormiter, nec fuit intentionis nostrae aut antecessorum nostrorum, ut de possessionibus, quas conduxistis, decimas non solvatis, universitati vestrae praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus eisdem fratribus de praediis, quae conduxistis in parochiis suis, de quibus consueverunt decimas percipere, plenarie solvatis eisdem, vel cum ipsis tam pacifice vel amicabiliter componatis, quod nulla inter vos debeat scandali materia suscitari, et videamini ultra, quod vobis indultum est, manus extendere.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A privilege is revoked if afterward it begins to be enormously harmful.

The same, to the Abbot and Brothers of Dol.

It was suggested to us on your part that the abbot and brothers of the monastery of Ursin endeavor to take tithes away from you and do not cease to inflict other damages and burdens upon you. But because it does not become monastic honor or religion to attend to lawsuits and contentions, by apostolic writings we command, counsel, and exhort your discretion to make a peaceful composition with the aforesaid abbot and brothers concerning those tithes and the other things concerning which there is controversy between you, lest the reputation of your religion be blackened because of contentions of this kind. For when the Roman church had given privileges concerning tithes to your order, the abbeys of your order were so rare [and very poor] that no scandal could rightly arise to anyone therefrom; but now, by the grace of God, they have been increased to such a degree and enriched with possessions that many ecclesiastical men frequently propose a complaint against you before us.

> Revocatur privilegium, si ex post facto incipit enormiter nocivum esse.
>
> Idem Abbati et Fratribus Dolon.
>
> Suggestum est nobis ex parte vestra, quod abbas et fratres monasterii de Ursin. decimas a vobis auferre conantur, +et alia damna et gravamina vobis irrogare non cessant. Quia vero non decet honestatem sive religionem monasticam litibus et contentionibus intendere, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, consulimus et hortamur, quatenus cum praedicto abbate et fratribus super ipsis decimis et aliis unde inter vos est controversia, pacifice componatis, ne pro huiusmodi contentionibus fama vestrae religionis valeat denigrari. Nam quando Romana ecclesia ordini vestro privilegia de decimis dederat, ita erant rarae [et pauperrimae] abbatiae vestri ordinis, quod exinde nulli poterat de iure scandalum suboriri; sed nunc per gratiam Dei in tantum augmentatae sunt ac possessionibus ditatae, quod multi viri ecclesiastici de vobis apud nos querelam saepe proponunt.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Cistercians, Templars, and Hospitallers are not bound to pay the tithe of their estates that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses; but other religious do not pay tithes from gardens and the increase of animals, nor from newly cultivated lands that they cultivate by their own hands and expenses.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tarragona.

You should know that it has come to us on your part that white monks and black monks, and certain other religious men, presume, by occasion of privileges that the Roman church granted them, to despoil churches of your jurisdiction of revenues from tithes. Indeed, we do not wish you to be unaware that our predecessors of holy memory had granted to almost all religious tithes from their labors. But our predecessor of good memory Hadrian granted only to the brothers of the Cistercian order, the Templars, and the Hospitallers tithes from their labors that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses; but to the others he granted that they not pay tithes from their newly cultivated lands that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses, from the increase of their animals, and from their gardens; and we have imitated him concerning these things. Wherefore those to whom this was granted neither ought nor can, by this occasion, withhold from their church tithes from other things or vindicate anything further for themselves.

> Cistercienses, templarii et hospitalarii decimam praediorum suorum, quae propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolunt, solvere non tenentur; alii vero religiosi non solvunt decimas de hortis et nutrimentis animalium, nec de novalibus, quae propriis manibus ac sumptibus excolunt.

Idem Terraconensi Archiepiscopo.

Ex parte tua ad nos noveris pervenisse, quod albi monachi et nigri, et quidam alii religiosi viri ecclesias tuae iurisdictionis reditibus decimarum, occasione privilegiorum, quae sibi Romana indulsit ecclesia, spoliare praesumunt. Sane nolumus te latere, quod sanctae memoriae praedecessores nostri fere omnibus religiosis decimas laborum suorum concesserant. Sed bonae memoriae praedecessor noster Hadrianus solis fratribus Cisterciensis ordinis, et templariis et hospitalariis decimas laborum suorum, quos propriis manibus vel sumptibus colunt, indulsit; ceteris vero, ut de novalibus suis, quae propriis manibus vel sumptibus excolunt, et de nutrimentis animalium suorum, et de hortis suis decimas non persolvant, concessit; quem sumus super his imitati. Quare hi quibus hoc indultum est, hac occasione decimas de aliis rebus ecclesiae suae non debent, nec possunt subtrahere, vel sibi aliquid ulterius vendicare.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A privilege concerning tithes from labors does not extend to lands that are delivered to others to be cultivated.

The same.

Although by the kindness of the Apostolic See it was granted to you that you be bound to pay tithes to no one from your labors that you cultivate by your own hands or expenses, nevertheless on account of this it is not lawful for you to withhold tithes from anyone from your lands that you deliver to others to be cultivated. Indeed, it has been reported to our ears that, although you give to your peasants to be cultivated certain lands that you have within the tithing district of our beloved son the treasurer of Sens, you do not pay him the tithes therefrom as you ought, nor cause them to be paid by the peasants themselves. Therefore, insofar as we more closely love you and your order, we wish the less to effect things contrary to honor or opposed to reason, or things through which you appear to transgress the tenor of our privileges, since he who abuses the power permitted to him is seen to lose his privilege. We command your fraternity that you in no way presume to usurp for yourselves the tithes from those lands within the tithing district of the aforesaid treasurer that you do not cultivate by your own hands but deliver to peasants to be cultivated, but cause them first of all to be paid in full to the same treasurer; knowing for certain that if you contemn our command, we have given mandate to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Sens that, appeal ceasing, he strictly compel the peasants to whom you shall have given lands within the tithing district of the aforesaid treasurer to be cultivated to pay [the] tithes therefrom to the same treasurer.

Privilegium super decimis laborum non extenditur ad terras, quae aliis traduntur excolendae.

Idem.

Licet de benignitate sedis apostolicae sit vobis indultum, ut de laboribus vestris, quos propriis manibus vel sumptibus colitis, nemini decimas solvere teneamini; propter hoc tamen non est licitum vobis, cuilibet decimas de terris vestris subtrahere, quas aliis traditis excolendas. Relatum est siquidem auribus nostris, quod, quum terras quasdam quas in decimatione dilecti filii nostri thesaurarii Senonensis habetis detis rusticis vestris excolendas et ei exinde decimas sicut debetis non solvitis, nec facitis a rusticis ipsis exsolvi. Quum igitur quanto arctius vos et ordinem vestrum diligimus, tanto minus volumus efficere quae sunt honestati contraria vel obvia rationi, aut ex quibus privilegiorum nostrorum tenorem transgredi videamini, quum privilegium videatur amittere qui permissa sibi abutitur potestate, fraternitati vestrae mandamus, quatenus de terris illis quas in decimatione praedicti thesaurarii propriis manibus non excolitis sed rusticis traditis excolendas decimas vobis usurpare nullatenus praesumatis, sed eas inprimis eidem thesaurario faciatis cum integritate persolvi sciturі pro certo, quodsi praeceptum nostrum contempseritis nos venerabili fratri nostro archiepiscopo Senonensi dedimus in mandatis, ut rusticos, quibus in decimatione praefati thesaurarii terras dederitis excolendas, ad solvendum [inde] decimas eidem thesaurario appellatione cessante districte compellat.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A privilege concerning tithes from labors comprehends even those things that are not newly cultivated lands.

The same.

You should know that it has come to our hearing that certain of you endeavor to exact and extort tithes from our beloved sons the abbot and brothers [of Pipennella, who are] of the Cistercian order, from the labors that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses, perverting by a malicious and depraved interpretation that chapter of the privilege of the Apostolic See by which it is granted to the Cistercians that no one exact tithes from them from the labors that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses. For they assert that newly cultivated lands ought to be understood by "labors." Hence, because we wish to foster the brothers of the aforesaid order by apostolic kindness, and to provide more attentively that no one have matter for acting malignantly against them or for molesting them in any manner contrary to justice, by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that you not permit this to be done. For if we meant only newly cultivated lands where we put "labors," we would put "newly cultivated lands," as we put it in the privileges of certain others.

Privilegium super decimis laborum etiam ea, quae non sunt novalia, comprehendit.

Idem.

Ad audientiam nostram +*noveritis pervenisse, quod quidam vestrum a dilectis filiis nostris abbate et fratribus * [de Pipennella, qui sunt] Cisterciensis ordinis, de laboribus, quos propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolunt, decimas exigere et extorquere conantur, Illud privilegii capitulum apostolicae sedis prava interpretatione ac malitiosa pervertentes, quo Cisterciensibus indulgetur, ne de laboribus, quos propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolunt, aliquis decimas ab eis exigat. Asserunt enim, quod pro laboribus novalia intelligi debent. +Unde quoniam fratres praescripti ordinis benignitate apostolica fovere volumus, et, ne ullus contra eos materiam habeat malignandi, vel ipsos contra iustitiam molestandi quamlibet, attentius providere: fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus non permittatis hoc fieri. Nam, si intelligeremus tantummodo de novalibus, ubi ponimus de laboribus, de novalibus poneremus, sicut in privilegiis quorundam aliorum ponimus.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Tithes of newly cultivated lands are owed to the church in whose parish they arise; but if they are not in a certain parish, they are owed to the diocesan bishop, who can retain them for himself or grant them to another church.

The same, to the Bishop of Brescia.

Since your solicitude asked of us what is to be established for you concerning the tithes of newly cultivated lands in your diocese, by intimation of the present writing to your fraternity we answer that, if those lands that are arable are within the definite parish of some church, you, retaining your portion, are to cause their tithes to be assigned to the same church; otherwise you can, according to the discretion given to you by God, assign them to another church or retain them for your own use, in such a way indeed that, if anyone presumes to act contrary to these things, you strike him with ecclesiastical censure until worthy satisfaction. But you are to decree invalid the sentences given by consuls concerning tithes, especially since they oppose the institutes of the holy Fathers, and revoke them, every contradiction and appeal being set aside. If any layman seeks tithes from priests or clerics from their labors in your diocese, you are to compel him wholly to cease from an exaction of this kind; and those laymen who receive from tenants a third or fourth part of their labors before payment of the tithes, you are to cause, without any diminution, to furnish to those to whom they are owed by right a tithe from their own portion, according as the tenant was accustomed to pay it from the part falling to him.

> Decimae novalium debentur ecclesiae, in cuius parochia surgunt; si vero non sunt in certa parochia, debentur dioecesano; qui potest sibi retinere, rei alteri ecclesiae concedere.
>
> Idem Brixiensi Episcopo.
>
> Quoniam a nobis sollicitudo tua requisivit, quid de decimis novalium tuae dioecesis tibi sit statuendum, tuae fraternitati significatione praesentium respondemus, ut, si terrae illae, quae arabiles sunt, infra certam alicuius ecclesiae parochiam fuerint, tu decimas earum, tua parte retenta, eidem ecclesiae facias assignari; alioquin ipsas secundum discretionem a Deo tibi datam alii ecclesiae deputare, vel ad opus tuum poteris retinere, ita quidem, quod, si quis in his contraire praesumpserit, tu eum ecclesiastica censura usque ad dignam satisfactionem percellas. Sententias vero super decimis a Consulibus datas praesertim quum sanctorum patrum institutionibus obvient, irritas esse decernas et eas omni contradictione et appellatione postposita revoces. Quod si laicus aliquis a sacerdotibus vel clericis decimas de laboribus suis in tua dioecesi requisiverit eum ab exactione huiusmodi prorsus cessare compellas et laicos illos, qui a colonis tertiam vel quartam partem laborum suorum ante solutionem decimarum recipiunt, decimam de portione sua secundum quod colonus de parte quae illum contingit exsolvere consueverit, absque diminutione aliqua iis, quibus iure debentur facias exhibere.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Tithes can be exacted.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rheims.

You ought, however, to compel your parishioners by ecclesiastical severity to pay tithes to the churches to which they owe them, because, since tithes were instituted not by man but by the Lord himself, they can be exacted as a debt.

> Decimae possunt exigi.
>
> Idem Remensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Parochianos +vero tuos ad solvendas decimas ecclesiis, quibus eas debent, ecclesiastica debes severitate compellere; quia, Quum decimae non ab homine, sed ab ipso Domino sint institutae, quasi debitum exigi possunt.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A tithe cannot be granted to a layman by hereditary right.

The same, to the Bishop of Amiens.

In addition, because the sanctuary of God ought not to be possessed by hereditary right, you are to revoke as utterly invalid and decree to lack force the donation of a tithe that the abbot of Saint S. de Monstral granted to a certain layman to be held by succession; and you are to bind the layman with the bond of excommunication unless he has freely and absolutely resigned that tithe to the church itself.

> Decima laico iure hereditario concedi non potest.
>
> Idem Ambianensi Episcopo.
>
> Ad haec donationem decimae, quam abbas sancti S. de Monstrali cuidam laico concessit per successionem tenendam, quoniam sanctuarium Dei iure hereditario possideri non debet, in irritum penitus revoces et viribus carere decernas, et laicum, nisi decimam ipsam ipsi ecclesiae libere et absolute resignaverit, vinculo excommunicationis adstringas.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: Jews are compelled to pay predial tithes or relinquish the estates.

The same, to the Bishop of Marseille.

But concerning the lands that Jews cultivate, we answer your prudence that you compel them with all severity to pay tithes or utterly to renounce the possessions, lest perhaps by that occasion the churches be defrauded of their right.

> Iudaei coguntur praediales decimas solvere, aut praedia dimittere.
>
> Idem Marsiliensi Episcopo.
>
> De terris vero, quas Iudaei colunt, tuae prudentiae respondemus, ut eos ad decimas persolvendas, vel ad possessiones penitus renunciandas cum omni districtione compellas, ne forte occasione illa ecclesiae valeant suo iure fraudari.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: Tithes or offerings of a church cannot be granted to laymen, and a prelate who acts contrary to this is to be punished.

The same.

Although it is held to be exceedingly grave and worthy of the retribution of divine judgment that certain laymen usurp in ecclesiastical matters what belongs to priests, nevertheless they incur greater fear and sorrow because they are said sometimes to find the tinder of their error in the clergy itself, when certain of our brothers and fellow bishops and other prelates grant them the disposal of the tithes and churches [themselves] of the church, and impel into the byways of death those who ought to have been recalled to the way of life by their preaching. Concerning them the Lord says through the Prophet: "They eat the sins of my people and provoke their souls to iniquity." Hence we establish that, if anyone grants to any layman remaining in the world a church, tithe, or offering, he is to be cut down from his station like a tree that uselessly occupies the earth, and, until he makes amends, is to lie prostrate in grief at his own ruin.

> Decimae vel oblationes ecclesiae laicis concedi non possunt, et praelatus contra faciens est puniendus.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quamvis sit grave nimis et divini dignum animadversione iudicii habeatur, quod laici quidam quod sacerdotum est in ecclesiasticis rebus usurpant : maiorem tamen incurrunt formidinem ac dolorem, quod fomitem sui erroris dicuntur in ipso clero aliquoties invenire, dum quidam fratrum et coepiscoporum nostrorum aliorumque praelatorum ecclesiae decimas et ecclesias [ipsas] disponere eis indulgent, et eos in devia mortis impellunt, qui praedicatione eorum ad viam vitae fuerant revocandi. +De quibus dicit Dominus per Prophetam: "Peccata populi mei comedunt, et ad iniquitatem provocant animas eorum. "Unde Statuimus, ut, si quis alicui laico in saeculo remanenti ecclesiam, decimam oblationemque concesserit, a statu suo, sicut arbor, quae inutiliter terram occupat, succidatur, et, donec emendet, dolore suae iaceat ruinae prostratus.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: Custom is followed as to whether a tenant pays a tithe to the church in whose parish the estates are situated, or to the church where he hears divine services and receives the ecclesiastical sacraments.

The same.

Since, as you assert, there are men in the parish of one church who cultivate lands in another parish, your discretion consulted us as to which church they ought to pay tithes from those lands: whether to that in whose parish they are constituted or to that in which they hear divine services and receive the other ecclesiastical sacraments. Indeed, since a question of this kind was moved rather often in the times of our predecessors and was terminated by none, some asserting that they ought to be paid by consideration of territory, others by consideration of persons, it is not easy for us to give a certain response concerning this, since the authorities of the holy Fathers are also diverse. And therefore in a doubt of this kind we have thought recourse should be had to custom; and it must also be considered whether those churches are constituted in one bishopric or in different bishoprics, because it seems exceedingly difficult that one church should receive tithes in the bishopric of another, since from this the boundaries of bishoprics would not unreasonably appear to be confused. [But that, etc.; cf. c. 8, On Prescription, II. 26.]

Statur consuetudini, an colonus solvat decimam ecclesiae, in cuius parochia sita sunt praedia, an ecclesiae ubi audit divina et percipit ecclesiastica sacramenta.

Idem.

Quum sint homines in parochia unius ecclesiae, sicut asseris, qui terras in alia parochia excolunt : tua discretio nos consuluit, cui ecclesiae de terris illis decimas solvere debeant, +an ei, in cuius parochia sint constituti, an illi, in qua divina audiunt et alia ecclesiastica percipiunt sacramenta. Sane, quum huiusmodi quaestio temporibus praedecessorum nostrorum saepius mota fuerit, nec ab aliquo terminata, aliis intuitu territorii, aliis personarum obtentu asserentibus debere persolvi, non est nobis facile super hoc certum dare responsum, quum auctoritates sanctorum Patrum etiam sint diversae. Et ideo in huiusmodi dubitatione ad consuetudinem duximus recurrendum, et attendendum etiam, si illae ecclesiae in uno sint vel in diversis episcopatibus constitutae; quia difficile nimis videtur, ut una ecclesia in episcopatu alterius recipiat decimas, quum ex hoc episcopatuum fines confundi non immerito viderentur. [Illud autem etc. cf. c. 8. de praescr. II. 26.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: A layman cannot transfer a tithe to another layman, even if he possesses it with title. This it says together with the gloss.

From the Lateran Council.

We further prohibit laymen who detain tithes at peril to their souls from transferring them in any manner to other laymen. But if anyone receives one and does not return it to the church, let him be deprived of Christian burial.

> Non potest laicus transferre decimam in alium laicum, etiamsi cum titulo illam possideat. H. d. cum gloss.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Prohibemus insuper, ne laici, decimas cum animarum suarum periculo detinentes, in alios laicos possint aliquo modo transferre. Si quis vero receperit, et ecclesiae non reddiderit, Christiana sepultura privetur.

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: A personal tithe is owed to the church where someone receives the sacraments, although profit occurs elsewhere; but as to a predial tithe, custom is followed if a tenant cultivated an estate in another parish.

Lucius III, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

Called to the governance of the Apostolic See by divine favor, although undeserving, we are debtors to all the sons of the church and are compelled, according to the measure of our knowledge, to answer the consultations of each. We have moreover understood from your letters that a certain custom has grown established in Hungary: a multitude of people is very often transferred from the parish of one bishop into the diocese of another. Although it remains in the latter for many periods of time, each of the bishops—both he whose parish they left and he whose parishioners they have become—nevertheless seeks the tithe, [and subjects them to interdict unless they pay according to his will,] whence envy and [very many] contentions arise. And therefore your fraternity led you to consult us as to whom the tithes should rather be rendered. You should therefore know that, if tithes are paid from a craft, trade, and agriculture that one exercises within the boundaries of the parish in which he dwells, or from other things of this kind, it is equitable that personal tithes be rendered by them to that church in which they receive the ecclesiastical sacraments. For the Apostle says: "If we have sown spiritual things for you, etc." But as to tithes from crops or the fruits of trees, if they have cultivated them in another parish than the one in which they dwell, since a different custom is maintained by different persons, in this case you are to choose what you know to have been observed there through long-established custom.

> Decima personalis debetur ecclesiae, ubi quis percipit sacramenta, licet alibi lucrum contigerit; in praediali vero statur consuetudini, si in aliena parochia colonus praedium coluit.
>
> Lucius III. Strigoniensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad apostolicae sedis regimen, +licet immeriti, dignatione divina vocati, omnibus sumus ecclesiae filiis debitores, et pro scientiae nostrae modo respondere cogimur consultationibus singulorum. Intelleximus autem ex literis tuis, quod quaedam consuetudo in Hungaria inolevit, ut multitudo populi plerumque de parochia unius episcopi in dioecesim alterius transferatur. In qua licet per multa tempora moram traxerit, uterque tamen episcoporum, tam is, cuius parochiam reliquerunt, quam is, cuius parochiani sunt facti, decimationem requirit, [et eos, nisi ad voluntatem ipsius solvant, interdicto supponit,] unde invidiae et [plurimae] contentiones oriuntur. Ideoque tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, cui potius decimae sint reddendae. Noveris igitur, quod, si de artificio, vel negotiatione et agricultura, quam infra terminos parochiae, in qua moratur, exercet, vel aliis huiusmodi decimae solvantur ; aequum est, ut illi ecclesiae decimae personales reddantur ab eis, in qua ecclesiastica percipiunt sacramenta. Apostolus enim dicit: "Si vobis seminavimus spiritualia etc. " Decimas vero messium vel fructuum arborum, si coluerint in alia parochia, quam in ea, in qua habitant, quoniam a diversis diversa consuetudo tenetur, tu eligas in hoc casu quod per consuetudinem diu obtentam ibidem noveris observatum.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: Tithes are to be paid from every fruit of an estate.

Clement III.

A complaint was proposed to us on the part of our beloved sons, the canons of your church, that certain farmers, when together or [at] diverse times of the year they have scattered diverse seeds in the same garden or field, pay a tithe to it only from the fruits of one of those seeds; certain persons also do not take care to pay tithes from the produce of fields unless certain expenses that they incur in carrying them to the barn or threshing floor have [first] been deducted. Therefore, because through this no small injury is inflicted upon the canons themselves and the church of God, since it is enjoined that tithes be paid to the Levites without expenses, we command that, after inquiring more diligently into the truth, if you know the matter to stand thus, you compel those farmers by ecclesiastical censure, all contradiction and appeal ceasing, to pay tithes from all the fruits of the estates, no expenses being subtracted, but rather whole tithes and without diminution; and by our authority strictly forbid them from attempting such things hereafter through any greed or presumption. [Given at the Lateran, in the third year.]

De omni fructu praedii solvendae sunt decimae.

Clemens III.

Ex parte dilectorum filiorum nostrorum canonicorum ecclesiae tuae nobis est querela proposita, quod quidam agricultores, quum simul vel [in] diversis temporibus anni in eodem horto vel agro diversa semina sparserint, non nisi de unius illorum seminum fructibus decimas illi persolvunt, +*quidam etiam decimas de agrorum proventibus non curant exsolvere, nisi quibusdam * [prius] deductis expensis, quas faciunt pro illis ad horreum vel ad aream deportandis. Quia igitur per hoc canonicis ipsis et ecclesiae Dei non modica irrogatur iniuria, quum Levitis absque expensis decimas sit iniunctum persolvi, Mandamus, quatenus, inquisita diligentius veritate, si noveris, rem taliter se habere, agricultores illos, ut de omnibus praediorum fructibus, nullis subtractis expensis, sed integras potius decimas et absque diminutione persolvant, ecclesiastica censura omni contradictione et appellatione cessante compellas, et auctoritate nostra districte inhibeas, ne talia de cetero aliqua cupiditate seu praesumptione attentent. [Dat. Laterani Ao. III.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Predial tithes are to be paid without expenses being deducted.

Celestine III.

It is not in the power of men, when they plant trees or commit any seeds to the earth, what the sowing or planting will return to them, since, according to the word of the Apostle, to be expounded according to the letter, neither does he who plants do anything well, nor he who waters, but God, who gives the increase. But we have heard that certain of you take care to furnish tithes to the churches from vineyards, olive groves, sugar canes, and crops only after the expenses of seed, labor, and cultivation have first been deducted. In truth, as the holy Fathers handed down in their writings, tithes are to be given to the ministers of the church from wine, grain, fruits of trees, flocks, gardens, and trade, even from military service itself, and from hunting, and from all goods; also in such a way that those who have neglected to pay them from these things ought to be struck with ecclesiastical severity. Moreover, if anyone does not give the Lord tithes, which are the tributes of needy souls and are required as a debt, he deserves, as Augustine teaches, to be reduced to a tenth part. We therefore will and strictly command that, before you deduct any expenses from all your aforesaid goods, saving the privileges of the Roman church, you pay in full the tithes owed to the churches to which they pertain.

> Decimae praediales solvendae sunt expensis non deductis.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Non est in potestate hominum, quum plantant arbores vel aliqua semina terrae mandant, +quid eis satio vel plantatio sit redditura, quum iuxta verbum Apostoli, ad literam exponendam, neque qui plantat bene aliquid faciat, neque qui rigat, sed Deus, qui tribuit incrementum. Audivimus autem, quod quidam vestrum de vineis, olivetis, cannamellis et frugibus non nisi primo deductis expensis seminum laboris et agriculturae decimas curant ecclesiis exhibere. Re vera, sicut sancti Patres in suis tradiderunt scripturis, de vino, grano, fructibus arborum, pecoribus, hortis, et negotiatione, de ipsa etiam militia, et de venatione, et de omnibus bonis decimae sunt ministris ecclesiae tribuendae; ita etiam, ut, qui de his eas solvere neglexerint, ecclesiastica districtione debeant percelli. +Praeterea si quis Domino decimas non dederit, quae sunt tributa egentium animarum, et ex debito requiruntur ad decimam partem, ut docet Augustinus, revocari meretur. Volumus ergo et districte praecipimus, quatenus, antequam ullas deducatis de cunctis vestris bonis praedictis expensas, salvis privilegiis Romanae ecclesiae decimas ecclesiis, ad quas pertinent, cum integritate debita persolvatis.

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: Tithes are to be paid from the revenues of a windmill.

Celestine III.

From the transmitted complaint of Bertrand, Archdeacon of Dol, rector of the church of N., we understood that, although M., a knight, constructed a certain windmill on certain land within the boundaries of his parish, from the produce of which land the aforesaid church was accustomed to receive tithes, he, contradicting payment to him of tithes from the proceeds of the mill itself, does not fear to retain them at peril to his salvation. Therefore, because a faithful man is bound to dispense tithes without diminution from all things that he can lawfully acquire, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, through ecclesiastical censure, the obstacle of appeal being removed, you compel the knight H. to pay tithes without any diminution from the things that proceed from the aforesaid windmill.

> De reditibus molendini ad ventum solvendae sunt decimae.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Ex transmissa querela Bertrandi Dolensis archidiaconi rectoris ecclesiae de N. intelleximus, +quod, quum M. miles molendinum quoddam ad ventum in terra quadam infra fines parochiae suae, de cuius terrae proventibus decimas solebat ecclesia percipere memorata, construxit, de ipsius molendini obventionibus decimas ei solvere contradicens, in salutis suae periculum detinere non veretur. Quia igitur fidelis homo de omnibus, quae licite potest acquirere, sine diminutione decimas erogare tenetur : discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus H. militem ad solutionem decimarum de his, quae de praedicto molendino ad ventum proveniunt, sine diminutione aliqua per censuram ecclesiasticam sublato appellationis obstaculo compellatis.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: The lessor or lessee of possessions is bound for tithes unless they show themselves exempt.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Pistoia.

Your fraternity asked of us whether you ought to exact tithes from those who give or receive possessions at rent, since each endeavors to excuse himself through the other so that they are not compelled to pay tithes. Since, therefore, everyone is bound to pay tithes unless he is specially exempt from furnishing them, we answer your fraternity in this manner: tithes are to be paid from the fruits they receive by those giving and receiving possessions at farm, unless something is shown by them as to why they are immune from such tithes. [With clerics, etc.; cf. c. 9, On the Cohabitation of Clerics, III. 2. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Nones of December. 1199.]

> Locator vel conductor possessionum tenentur ad decimas, nisi se immunes ostendant.
>
> Innocentius III. Pistoriensi Episcopo.
>
> A nobis tua fraternitas requisivit, +utrum ab illis decimas exigere debeas, qui possessiones dant vel recipiunt ad affictum, quum alii se conentur per alios excusare, quo minus cogantur ad decimas persolvendas. Quum igitur quilibet decimas solvere teneatur, nisi a praestatione ipsarum specialiter sit exemptus, fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod a dantibus et recipientibus possessiones ad firmam de fructibus, quos percipiunt, decimae sunt solvendae, nisi ab eis aliquid ostendatur, quare ab huiusmodi sint immunes. [Cum clericis etc. cf. c. 9. de cohab. cler. III. 2.] Dat. Lat. IV. Non. Dec. 1199.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: An imperial grant under whatever form cannot exempt from the payment of tithes.—(Nor by occasion, etc.:) Tithes of newly cultivated lands do not pertain to a layman who has tithes in fief. This it says.

The same, to the Bishop of Vercelli.

Your—(And below: [cf. the chapter immediately following.]) Moreover, since no faculty of granting or disposing of spiritual things has been attributed to laymen, an imperial grant, however generally it may be made, cannot exempt anyone from payment of tithes that are owed by divine constitution. Nor, by occasion of an ancient tithe, although tithes have been granted in fief, are tithes of newly cultivated lands to be usurped, since in such matters license is not to be extended but rather restricted. [Therefore, since, etc.; cf. the chapter immediately following.]

> Imperialis concessio sub quacunque forma a solutione decimarum eximere non potest. — (Nec occasione etc.:) Decimae novalium non pertinent ad laicum, qui decimas habet in feudum. H. d.
>
> Idem Vercellensi Episcopo.
>
> Tua (Et infra: [cf. c. prox. seq.]) Porro quum laicis nulla sit de spiritualibus concedendi vel disponendi attributa facultas, imperialis concessio, quantumcunque generaliter fiat, neminem potest a solutione decimarum eximere, quae divina constitutione debentur. Nec occasione decimationis antiquae, licet in feudum decimae sint concessae, sunt decimae novalium usurpandae, quum in talibus non sit extendenda licentia, sed potius restringenda. [Quoniam igitur etc. cf. c. prox. seq.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: Without deduction of seed and expenses, the lord and the tenant ought to pay a tithe, and not to whatever church or poor persons they wish, but to the church to which they are owed; nor are they excused from this because of the wickedness of the clerics.

The same, to the same.

Your fraternity intimated to us that certain laymen of your diocese, and many others of the neighboring bishoprics, endeavor by perverse machinations to withdraw tithes from your churches and clerics, and do not take care to amend by due satisfaction the audacity of the perversity they conceived. For some of them say that the seed and the expenses incurred in cultivation are first to be deducted, and assert that a tithe is to be furnished from the residue. But others, separating a part of the tithe from the portion of fruits that they receive from tenants, confer it upon their chapels, other clerics or churches, or even the poor, or convert it to other uses according to their will. Some also, detesting the life of the clerics as abominable, do not fear on this account to withhold tithes from them. Certain persons further, asserting that they acquired their possessions and all their rights with every burden and jurisdiction through an imperial grant, presume to detain tithes under a generality of this kind. Moreover, by occasion of an old tithe that they assert was granted to them, some do not fear to usurp for themselves the tithes of newly cultivated lands.

But if assertors of this kind had due regard for God, from whom all good things proceed, they would not contend to diminish ecclesiastical right, nor presume to detain tithes, which are the tributes of needy souls. For since God—to whom belong the earth and its fullness, the world and all who dwell in it—ought not to be of a worse condition than a temporal lord, whose established due from the lands that he furnishes to others to be cultivated is necessarily paid in full, without expenses indeed being deducted or seed separated, it assuredly seems exceedingly iniquitous if tithes, which God commands to be rendered to himself as a sign of universal dominion, affirming tithes and first fruits to be his own, can perhaps be diminished by the aforesaid occasion or rather by devised fraud, since payment of tithes is owed to God to such a degree that laymen, if after being admonished they perhaps refuse to render them, are to be compelled by ecclesiastical severity to furnish them to the clerics to whom he granted them for his worship. And since tithes are to be rendered from absolutely all proceeds, just as the tenant is bound to render without diminution a tithe from the part of the fruits that remains to him by reason of cultivation, so also is the lord bound to render it from the portion he receives by reason of the land. Under pretext of the wickedness of the clerics they cannot dispense them to others, except those to whom they are owed by divine mandate, according to their own judgment, since it is lawful for no one to grant another's property to anyone apart from the will of the lord, although through the solicitude of the pastoral office the clerics are to be restrained from their wickedness. (And below: [cf. the chapter immediately preceding.]) Therefore, since we do not wish, nor ought we, to permit the rights of churches and clerics to be diminished by any presumption, by the authority of the present writing we command your fraternity that, appeal being removed, you compel by apostolic authority through a sentence of excommunication or interdict all those who are bound by reason of persons or even estates to furnish tithes to the churches and clerics of your diocese to render them in full. Moreover, so that you may be able to compel the clerics of your diocese concerning whom a complaint has been proposed in your court to do full justice under your examination concerning the aforesaid tithes and fruits received, notwithstanding the objection of an appeal interposed to elude ecclesiastical discipline, we have thought that this should be granted to your devotion by the page of the present writing.

Sine deductione seminis et sumptuum debent dominus et colonus decimam solvere, et non cui voluerint ecclesiae vel pauperibus, sed ecclesiae, cui debentur, nec ab hoc excusantur propter malitiam clericorum.

Idem eidem.

Tua nobis fraternitas intimavit, quod quidam laici tuae dioecesis, et alii plures episcopatuum adiacentium, decimas ecclesiis et clericis tuis perversis machinationibus subtrahere moliuntur, et conceptae perversitatis audaciam non curant satisfactione debita emendare. Quidam enim ex eis semen et sumptus, qui fiunt in agricultura, dicunt primitus deducendos, et de residuo impendendam esse decimam asseverant. Alii vero de portione fructuum, quam a colonis accipiunt, partem decimae separantes, eam capellis suis, aut aliis clericis seu ecclesiis, aut etiam pauperibus conferunt, vel in usus alios pro sua voluntate convertunt. Nonnulli etiam vitam clericorum tanquam abominabilem detestantes, decimas eis ob hoc subtrahere non verentur. +Quidam insuper asserentes, se possessiones et omnia iura sua cum omni onere et districtu per imperialem concessionem adeptos, decimas sub huiusmodi generalitate detinere praesumunt. Occasione praeterea veteris decimationis, quam asserunt sibi concessam, aliqui decimas novalium sibi non metuunt usurpare. Verum, si ad Deum, a quo cuncta bona procedunt, assertores huiusmodi debitum respectum haberent, ius ecclesiasticum diminuere non contenderent, nec decimas, quae tributa sunt egentium animarum, praesumerent detinere. Quum enim Deus, cuius est terra, et plenitudo eius, orbis terrarum, et universi, qui habitant in eo, deterioris conditionis esse non debeat, quam dominus temporalis, cuius statutum debitum de terris, quas exhibet aliis excolendas, non quidem deductis sumptibus aut semine separato, necessario, cum integritate persolvitur : nimis profecto videtur iniquum, si decimae, quas Deus in signum universalis dominii sibi reddi praecipit, suas esse decimas et primitias asseverans, occasione praemissa vel excogitata magis fraude diminui forte valeant, quum Deo debita sit solutio decimarum in tantum, ut ad eas clericis exhibendas, quibus eas ipse pro suo cultu concessit, laici, si moniti reddere forte noluerint, ecclesiastica sunt districtione cogendi. Et quum de cunctis omnino proventibus decimae sint reddendae, sicut colonus de parte fructuum, quae sibi remanet ratione culturae, sic et dominus de portione, quam percipit ratione terrae, decimam reddere sine diminutione tenetur. Praetextu vero nequitiae clericorum nequeunt eas aliis, nisi quibus ex mandato divino debentur, pro suo arbitrio erogare, quum nulli sit licitum aliena cuiquam concedere praeter domini voluntatem, +quanquam per sollicitudinem officii pastoralis clerici sint a sua nequitia coercendi (Et infra: [cf. c. prox. anteced.]) Quoniam igitur pati nolumus, nec debemus, ut ecclesiarum et clericorum iura praesumptione qualibet minuantur, fraternitati tuae auctoritate praesentium mandamus, quatenus omnes, qui ratione personarum aut etiam praediorum decimas ecclesiis et clericis tuae dioecesis exhibere tenentur, ad eas cum integritate reddendas, appellatione remota, auctoritate apostolica per excommunicationis vel interdicti sententiam compellas. Praeterea, ut clericos tuae dioecesis de quibus fuerit in auditorio tuo querela proposita, de decimis ante dictis et fructibus perceptis et eis ad plenam sub tuo examine iustitiam faciendam compellere valeas, non obstante appellationis obiectu interpositae in elusionem ecclesiasticae disciplinae, devotioni tuae praesentis scripti pagina duximus indulgendum.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: A privilege concerning tithes not to be paid, granted to an ecclesiastical person, comprehends newly cultivated lands. This it says according to the understanding that pleases Panormitanus.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Columba of Sens.

On your part it was petitioned of us that, since, as you assert, it was granted to you to receive in full the tithes from the labors of your parishes, we mercifully grant you that from lands within your parishes that are newly reduced to cultivation you have, by our indulgence, the faculty of exacting tithes. Since, therefore, the greater thing was granted to you—namely, to receive in full tithes from the labors of the land of your parishes—you can sufficiently exact them from newly cultivated lands, because where the greater is granted to you, the lesser also in this case is seen to have been granted. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the sixth day before the Ides of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate. 1206.]

> Privilegium super decimis non solvendis, ecclesiasticae personae concessum, novalia comprehendit. H. d. secundum intellectum, qui placet Panorm.
>
> Idem Abbati sanctae Columbae Senonensis.
>
> Ex parte tua +fuit postulatum a nobis, quod, quum tibi de laboribus tuarum parochiarum, sicut asseris, sit indultum decimas cum integritate percipere, tibi vellemus misericorditer indulgere, ut de terris, quae infra parochias tuas rediguntur noviter ad culturam, de indulgentia nostra exigendi decimas facultatem haberes. Quum igitur tibi quod maius est sit concessum, ut videlicet decimas de laboribus terrae parochiarum tuarum cum integritate percipias, de novalibus eas exigere satis potes; quia, ubi maius tibi conceditur, minus etiam in hoc casu concessum esse videtur. [*Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VI. Id. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. IX. * 1206.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: A merchant pays a tithe from profit after deducting expenses that he incurs from tithed money; but expenses incurred for obtaining fruits are not deducted, and a tithe is paid from the fruits even without deducting expenses incurred for restoring the thing.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

Of the pastoral office—(And below: [cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.]) You asked further that it be explained whether someone can deduct necessary expenses from mills and fisheries before he pays tithes from them, as is granted in trade. To this, without prejudice to a better opinion, we answer that, although concerning things acquired or made from tithed money, when they are sold, we believe expenses are to be deducted and tithes paid from the residue as from profit—as if a house, field, vineyard, oven, mill, flock, or any merchandise is sold—nevertheless, we do not believe that expenses incurred for receiving fruits are to be deducted from those things from which the fruits proceed, even if they have been tithed, since, saving the tithe, the fruits become those of the persons who incur those expenses. But we do not believe the fruits themselves can be alienated except with the burden of tithes. Nor do we believe expenses are to be deducted from proceeds to be tithed for restoring damage to any things from which tithes are paid, because the restored things remain with the owner, as if some part of a herd dies, a vineyard deteriorates, a portion of merchandise perishes, or an entire oven is destroyed. [You asked, etc.—cf. c. 8, On the Faith of Instruments, II. 22.—Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January. 1204.]

> Negotiator de lucro decimam solvit, deductis expensis, quas facit de pecunia decimata; expensae vero, quae fiunt pro habendis fructibus, non deducuntur, et de fructibus solvitur decima, etiam non deductis expensis factis pro re restauranda.
>
> Idem Heliensi Episcopo.
>
> Pastoralis officii (Et infra: [cf. c. 28. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]) Explicari praeterea postulasti, utrum quis possit de molendinis et piscariis necessarias expensas deducere prius, quam solvat decimas ex eisdem, sicut est in negotiatione concessum. Ad quod sine praeiudicio melioris sententiae respondemus, quod, licet circa res acquisitas vel factas de pecunia decimata, quum ipsae venduntur, credamus deducendas expensas, et de residuo quasi de lucro decimas persolvendas, ut, si vendatur domus, ager, vinea, clibanus, molendinum, grex aut quaelibet merces, expensas tamen, quae fiunt pro fructibus percipiendis, ex illis, de quibus fructus proveniunt, non credimus deducendas, etiamsi fuerint decimatae, quoniam salva decima fructus efficiuntur eorum, qui faciunt ipsas expensas. Fructus autem ipsos alienari posse, non credimus, nisi cum onere decimarum. Nec pro restaurando detrimento quarumlibet rerum, ex quibus decimae persolvuntur, credimus deducendas expensas de proventibus decimandis, quia penes dominum res permanent restauratae, ut si pars aliqua moriatur armenti, deterioretur vinea, portio mercis depereat, vel totus clibanus destruatur. [Quaesivisti etc. — cf. c. 8. de fide instr. II. 22. — Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Ian. 1204.]

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: One who acquires by prescription a tithe in another's parish will not have their tithes if newly cultivated lands arise there.

The same.

When it sometimes happens in your diocese—(And below: [cf. c. 28, On Oaths, II. 24.]) Moreover, you asked whether, when any estates from which tithes were paid to churches or ecclesiastical persons devolve upon the Cistercian order by donation, purchase, or another title, the same brothers are bound to pay tithes from such estates to those churches or persons. Concerning this we give you such a response: since it was granted to the aforesaid brothers by the Apostolic See that they are bound to pay tithes to no one at all from their labors that they cultivate by their own hands or expenses, they are not bound to pay tithes from estates acquired in this manner to churches or ecclesiastical persons, provided they are cultivated by their own hands or expenses. But since from antiquity the receipt of tithes in certain parishes pertains to certain churches or ecclesiastical persons, and newly cultivated lands are made anew in the same parishes, you ask us to whom the tithe of such newly cultivated lands begins to pertain. Hence we answer your inquiry in this manner: since the receipt of tithes pertains by the common law to parish churches, the tithes also of newly cultivated lands that are made in their parishes are undoubtedly known to pertain to them, unless a reasonable cause is shown by those who otherwise receive the tithes, through which it appears that the tithes of the newly cultivated lands pertain to them. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of June, in the third year. 1210.]

Qui praescribit decimam in aliena parochia, si ibi insurgunt novalia, ipsorum decimas non habebit.

Idem.

Quum contingat interdum in tua dioecesi (Et infra: [cf. c. 28. de iurei. II. 24.]) Praeterea requisisti, quum aliqua praedia, de quibus ecclesiis aut personis ecclesiasticis decimae solvebantur, ad Cisterciensem ordinem donationis vel emptionis aut alio titulo devolvuntur, an iidem fratres de talibus praediis ipsis ecclesiis vel personis decimas solvere teneantur. Super quo tibi tale damus responsum, quod, quum praedictis fratribus a sede apostolica sit indultum, ut de laboribus suis, quos propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolunt, decimas nulli prorsus persolvere teneantur, de praediis taliter acquisitis, ecclesiis vel personis ecclesiasticis decimas solvere non tenentur; dummodo propriis manibus eorum seu sumptibus excolantur. Quum autem in quibusdam parochiis ad quasdam ecclesias vel personas ecclesiasticas ab antiquo pertineat perceptio decimarum, et de novo fiant novalia in eisdem : quaeris a nobis, ad quem huiusmodi novalium decima incipiat pertinere. Unde inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum perceptio decimarum ad parochiales ecclesias de iure communi pertineat, decimae quoque novalium, quae fiunt in parochiis earundem, ad ipsas procul dubio pertinere noscuntur, nisi ab his, qui alias percipiunt decimas, rationabilis causa ostendatur, per quam appareat, novalium ad eos decimas pertinere. [Dat. Later. XVI. Kal. Iun. A. III. 1210.]

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: The tithe of all fruits of an estate is owed to him who acquired the tithes there by prescription; but prescription is not extended to another estate.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

Since in your diocese certain monasteries and conventual churches receive greater and lesser tithes in many parishes, [and] tithes were not paid from certain fruits received annually [that are now, however, paid,] you asked to be taught by the Apostolic See whether the tithes of the aforesaid fruits ought to pertain to the parish churches, which receive neither greater nor lesser tithes, or to the monasteries and those conventual [churches] that receive other tithes from antiquity. To this we answer thus: if the aforesaid fruits proceed from that land from which the monasteries or conventual churches received some revenues by reason of tithes, the tithes of those fruits are undoubtedly owed to them, since that land was titheable to them from antiquity and one and the same church ought not to be assessed under diverse law; otherwise, let them be paid to the parish churches, to which the receipt of tithes pertains by the common law. [Indeed, because it happens, etc.—cf. c. 27, On Betrothals, IV. 1.—Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of November, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

Decima omnium fructuum praedii debetur ei, qui decimas ibi praescripsit: sed ad aliud praedium praescriptio non extenditur.

Idem Episcopo Belvacensi.

Quum in tua dioecesi quaedam monasteria et conventuales ecclesiae in multis parochiis maiores decimas percipiant et minutas, [et] de quibusdam fructibus, annuatim perceptis, non fuerunt decimae persolutae +[quae tamen modo persolvuntur,] *quaesivisti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, utrum decimae fructuum praedictorum ad parochiales ecclesias, quae nec maiores percipiunt nec minutas, an ad monasteria et illas * [ecclesias] conventuales, quae decimas alias percipiunt ab antiquo, debeant pertinere. Ad quod sic Respondemus, quod, si fructus praedicti de illa terra proveniunt, de qua monasteria vel conventuales ecclesiae aliquos percipiebant ratione decimarum proventus, eis proculdubio decimae fructuum debentur eorum, quum ipsis terra illa ab antiquo fuerit decimalis, et non debeat una eademque ecclesia diverso iure censeri; alioquin parochialibus ecclesiis exsolvantur, ad quas de iure communi spectat perceptio decimarum. [Sane quia contingit etc. — *cf. c. * 27. de spons. IV. 1. — Dat. Lat. IV. Kal. Nov. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: Laymen cannot donate churches or tithes, even if they are kings, nor is a basis for prescription furnished by their title.

The same, to the Bishop of Veszprém.

Some time ago, when in our presence you proposed a question against the brothers of the Jerusalem Hospital of Saint Stephen of Alba, because they did not permit the tithes owed to the church of Veszprém from the labors of their peasants to be paid to you, we cited them, fixing the general council as their term, at which they should present themselves before us with their instruments and reasons, prepared to answer you. Therefore, when you and they appeared before us at the appointed term, we appointed our beloved son G., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Martin, as auditor for you and them. Before him you sought the tithes of the lands that are cultivated by the peasants of the hospital in the diocese of Veszprém, and the churches of Ciroga and Novacularia that are detained by those Hospitallers, as pertaining to you, your intention being founded upon the common law. But the prior of the same hospital, alleging prescription as to the aforesaid tithes and churches, proposed that he was in no way bound to answer you concerning them. When this came to our hearing through the same auditor, we commanded that the same prior prove the title of prescription that he alleged. Finally, after prior deliberation, before our venerable brother the Bishop of Albano, who heard the cause after the departure of the aforesaid cardinal, he exhibited privileges of B., king of Hungary of illustrious memory, and of E., his mother, the queen, who granted by title of donation in perpetual alms to the hospital the church of Saint Stephen, to which the said churches with the same tithes pertained. He also exhibited a writing of confirmation of our predecessor Pope Clement of good memory, through which he wished to prove that the aforesaid grant had full force, and asserted nevertheless that it was afterward confirmed by our predecessor Pope Lucius of happy memory.

But on your part it was proposed in opposition that, as to the tithes and the churches donated by the king and queen, the opposing party could not plead prescription, which could neither take its beginning from their donation, nor had so much time elapsed from the aforesaid confirmation that prescription could be confirmed; and thus the alleged title of the donation of the king and queen was null, since according to the canonical sanctions he incurs the crime of sacrilege who receives churches or anything ecclesiastical from the hand of a layman. Hence, if it happens that a layman uses such words in the donation of a church, "I give you such a church," he is understood to grant nothing other than only the right of patronage that he has in it, as is expressly contained in a constitution issued by us. But against the confirmation it was answered in this manner: since the church of Saint Stephen itself is confirmed indiscriminately with all tithes, churches, and other things that pertain to it, episcopal right is not taken away, since it is not expressed there, but only the due portion of tithes conferred within the parish of Saint Stephen is reserved to the same Hospitallers according to the custom of the land; especially since the tithes sought by you do not lie in the parish of Saint Stephen, which the opposing party confessed openly. On the contrary, it was replied by the other party that, since you had remained silent for a space of thirty years, you were seen tacitly to have renounced your right. But your party appeared to repel this also by alleging that silence of thirty years is known to obtain not under the common law but under privileges; hence a bishop is deprived of the common-law right he has in the tithes or churches of his diocese only by silence of forty years.

We therefore, having understood more fully these and the other things proposed on each side, since the aforesaid donors could not confer upon others things that they could not themselves possess by law, and since from the confession of the opposing party it is clearly established to us that the tithes and churches sought are not contained within the parish of Saint Stephen, even if the aforesaid donation holds, and since through the aforesaid confirmation of Clement made to the hospital concerning the church of Saint Stephen with its tithes and other appurtenances, even if it appeared authentic, there is no derogation at all from episcopal right, with the counsel of our brothers, by apostolic authority, we prohibit by sentence the brothers of the hospital from presuming further to impede you from receiving the aforesaid tithes and peacefully possessing them in the future.

> Laici ecclesias vel decimas donare non possunt, etiamsi sunt reges, nec ex eorum titulo praestatur causa praescribendi.

Idem Vesprimensi Episcopo.

Dudum adversus fratres Hierosolymitani hospitalis sancti Stephani Albensis te proponente in nostra praesentia quaestionem, quod ipsi decimas, de laboribus rusticorum suorum Vesprimensis ecclesiae debitas, non permitterent tibi solvi, +eosdem citavimus, praefigentes eis terminum concilium generale, quo cum instrumentis et rationibus suis nostro se conspectui praesentarent, tibi respondere parati. Comparentibus igitur te ac ipsis statuto termino coram nobis, dilectum filium nostrum G. tit. S. Martini presbyterum cardinalem tibi et eis concessimus auditorem, coram quo decimas terrarum, quae per rusticos hospitalis Vesprimensis dioecesis excoluntur, et de Ciroga et de Novacularia ecclesias, quae per ipsos hospitalarios detinentur, easdem, tanquam ad te spectantes, intentione tua de iure communi fundata petisti. Prior autem hospitalis eiusdem in praedictis decimis et ecclesiis praescriptionem allegans, proposuit, se tibi non teneri super his aliquatenus respondere. Quod quum per auditorem eundem ad nostram audientiam pervenisset, mandavimus, quod idem prior praescriptionis titulum, quem allegavit, probaret, qui tandem post deliberationem praehabitam coram venerabili fratre nostro Albanensi episcopo, qui post recessum memorati cardinalis de causa cognovit, inclytae recordationis B. regis ac E. matris ipsius reginae Hungariae privilegia exhibuit, qui ecclesiam sancti Stephani, ad quam dictae ecclesiae cum eisdem decimis pertinebant, in perpetuam eleemosynam hospitali donationis titulo concesserunt, confirmationis bonae memoriae Clementis Papae praedecessoris nostri scriptum exhibens, per quod probare volebat, concessionem praedictam plenum habere vigorem, +et asserens nihilominus, ipsam a felicis recordationis Lucio Papa praedecessore nostro postmodum confirmatam. Ceterum ex parte tua fuit propositum ex adverso, quod in decimis et in ecclesiis a rege et regina donatis praescriptionem non poterat opponere pars adversa, quae nec a donatione ipsorum initium habere poterat, nec a confirmatione praefata tantum effluxit temporis, quod possit praescriptio confirmari, et sic donationis regis ac reginae allegatus titulus nullus erat; quum sacrilegii crimen incurrat secundum canonicas sanctiones, qui ecclesias vel ecclesiasticum aliquid de manu receperit laicali. +Unde si contingat, laicum in donatione ecclesiae talibus verbis uti: "do tibi ecclesiam talem: "nihil aliud concedere intelligitur, nisi ius patronatus tantum, quod habet in ipsa, prout in constitutione a nobis edicta continetur expresse. Contra confirmationem autem fuit hoc modo responsum, quod, quum confuse ipsa ecclesia S. Stephani cum omnibus decimis et ecclesiis et aliis quae ad eandem pertinent, confirmetur, ius episcopale non tollitur; quum de illo non exprimatur ibidem, sed tantum debita decimarum portio, intra parochiam S. Stephani collatarum, secundum terrae consuetudinem eisdem hospitalariis reservetur; praesertim quum petitae decimae a te in parochia S. Stephani non consistant, quod de plano confessa est pars adversa. Econtra vero fuit a parte altera replicatum, quod, quum spatio XXX. annorum tacueris, iuri tuo tacite renunciasse videris. Sed et hoc pars tua visa est repellere allegando, quod XXX. annorum taciturnitas non in iure communi, sed in privilegiis noscitur obtinere, unde iure communi, quod habet episcopus in decimis vel ecclesiis suae dioecesis, non nisi XL. annorum taciturnitate privatur. Nos igitur his et aliis, quae hinc inde fuerunt proposita, plenius intellectis, quum donatores praedicti conferre non potuerint aliis quae ipsi de iure non poterant possidere, et ex confessione partis adversae liquido nobis constat, petitas decimas et ecclesias intra parochiam sancti Stephani non concludi, etiamsi praefata donatio teneat, quum per confirmationem praedicti Clementis super ecclesia sancti Stephani hospitali cum decimis et aliis pertinentibus ad se factam, etiamsi authenticum appareret, iuri episcopali nullatenus derogetur, de fratrum nostrorum consilio auctoritate apostolica sententialiter prohibemus, ne fratres hospitalis praesumant ulterius impedire, quo minus decimas percipias memoratas, et pacifice possideas in futurum.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: Lords of estates can be compelled to give the estates for cultivation to such persons from whom the church can obtain tithes without contradiction. This it says as far as the section “Those.”—(Those, etc.:) This section is not summarized on account of its brevity.

The same, in the General Council.

In certain regions some peoples are intermingled who according to their rites do not customarily pay tithes, although they are designated by the Christian name. Certain lords of estates give them those estates to cultivate so that, by defrauding the churches of tithes, they may obtain greater revenues therefrom. Wishing, therefore, to provide in these matters for the indemnity of the churches, we establish that the lords themselves commit their estates to such persons and in such a manner to be cultivated that they pay tithes in full to the churches without contradiction, and, if necessary, that they be compelled to this through ecclesiastical censure. For those tithes must necessarily be paid that are owed under divine law or the approved custom of the place.

> Domini praediorum cogi possunt, ut praedia dent colenda talibus, a quibus sine contradictione ecclesia possit decimas consequi. H. d. usque ad §. Illae — (Illae etc.:) Iste §. propter sui brevitatem non summatur.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> In aliquibus regionibus quaedam permixtae sunt gentes, quae secundum suos ritus decimas de more non solvunt, quamvis censeantur nomine Christiano. His nonnulli domini praediorum ea tribuunt excolenda, ut decimis defraudantes ecclesias, maiores inde reditus assequantur. Volentes igitur super his ecclesiarum indemnitatibus providere, statuimus, ut ipsi domini, talibus personis et taliter sua praedia excolenda committant, quod absque contradictione ecclesiis decimas cum integritate persolvant, et ad id, si necesse fuerit, per censuram ecclesiasticam compellantur. Illae quippe decimae necessario solvendae sunt, quae debentur ex lege divina vel loci consuetudine approbata.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: Tithes are to be paid before rents or taxes, and if the latter are paid first, they ought afterward to be tithed.

The same, in the same council.

Since it is not in man what will answer the one sowing seed, because according to the word of the Apostle, "Neither he who plants is anything, nor he who waters, but God who gives the increase," certain persons strive too avariciously to defraud in tithes him who brings forth abundant fruit from deadened seed, first deducting from the crops rents and taxes, which sometimes pass away untithed. But since, as a sign of universal dominion, the Lord reserved tithes to himself as though by a certain special title, we, wishing to meet both the losses of churches and the perils of souls, establish that, by prerogative of general dominion, payment of tithes precede the exaction of taxes and rents; or at least that those to whom untithed rents or taxes have come—since a thing passes with its burden—be compelled by ecclesiastical censure to tithe them to the churches to which they are owed by law.

> Prius solvendae sunt decimae, quam census seu tributa, et, si prius illa solvuntur, postea decimari debent.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Quum non sit in homine, quid semen serenti respondeat, quoniam iuxta verbum Apostoli, " neque qui plantat, est aliquid, neque qui rigat, sed qui incrementum dat, Deus, " ipsum, qui de mortificato semine plurimum fructum affert, nimis avare quidam in decimis defraudare nituntur, census et tributa, quae interdum indecimata praetereunt de frugibus primitus deducentes. Quum autem in signum universalis dominii quasi quodam titulo speciali sibi Dominus decimas reservaverit, nos, et ecclesiarum dispendiis et animarum periculis obviare volentes, statuimus, ut in praerogativam dominii generalis exactionem tributorum et censuum praecedat solutio decimarum, vel saltem hi, ad quos census vel tributa indecimata pervenerint, quoniam res cum onere suo transit, ea per censuram ecclesiasticam decimare cogantur ecclesiis, quibus de iure debentur.

Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: Cistercians, Templars, and Hospitallers are bound to pay tithes from the fruits of possessions that they acquired after the general council mentioned here, if tithes were previously paid from those possessions.

The same, in the same council.

Recently the abbots of the Cistercian order, assembled at the general council, prudently established at our admonition that hereafter the brothers of that order not purchase possessions from which tithes are owed to churches, unless perhaps for monasteries newly to be founded; and that, if such possessions are conferred upon them by the pious devotion of the faithful, or purchased for monasteries to be founded anew, they be committed to others to be cultivated, by whom tithes are paid to the churches, lest the churches be further burdened by occasion of their privileges. We [therefore] decree that from the lands of others and those to be acquired from now on, even if they cultivate them by their own hands or expenses, they pay tithes to the churches to which they were previously paid by reason of the estates, unless they have thought that another composition should be made with those churches. And we will and command that this same thing be extended to other regulars who enjoy similar privileges, so that the prelates of the churches may exist more ready and effective in furnishing them the completion of justice concerning their malefactors, and may take care to observe their privileges more diligently and perfectly.

Cistercienses, templarii et hospitalarii de fructibus possessionum, quas acquisierunt post concilium generale, de quo hic, decimas solvere tenentur, si de illis possessionibus prius solvebantur decimae.

Idem in eodem.

Nuper abbates Cisterciensis ordinis in generali concilio congregati ad commonitionem nostram provide statuerunt, ne de cetero fratres ipsius ordinis emant possessiones, de quibus decimae debeantur ecclesiis, nisi forte pro monasteriis noviter fundandis, et si tales possessiones eis fuerint pia fidelium devotione collatae, aut emptae pro monasteriis de novo fundandis, committantur aliis excolendae, a quibus ecclesiis decimae persolvantur, ne occasione privilegiorum suorum ecclesiae ulterius praegraventur. Decernimus [ergo,] ut de alienis terris et amodo acquirendis, etiamsi eas propriis manibus aut sumptibus excolant, decimas persolvant ecclesiis, quibus ratione praediorum antea solvebantur nisi cum ipsis ecclesiis aliter duxerint componendum. Et hoc ipsum ad alios regulares, qui gaudent similibus privilegiis, extendi volumus et mandamus, ut ecclesiarum praelati promptiores et efficaciores exsistant ad exhibendum eis de suis malefactoribus iustitiae complementum, eorumque privilegia diligentius et perfectius studeant observare.

Chapter XXXV

Gregory IX.

We forbid all ecclesiastical persons from presuming to receive as a pledge from laymen tithes detained by those laymen that pertain to other churches.

Gregorius IX.

> Interdicimus universis personis ecclesiasticis, ut decimas, detentas a laicis, ad alienas ecclesias pertinentes, in pignus recipere ab eisdem laicis non praesumant.

Title XXXI: On Regulars and Those Passing to Religion

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A person cannot be admitted to religion unless willing and of suitable age.

From the Council of Mainz.

Let no one be tonsured unless of lawful age and spontaneous will.

> DE REGULARIBUS ET TRANSEUNTIBUS AD RELIGIONEM.
>
> Non potest quis ad religionem admitti, nisi volens et in aetate idoneus.
>
> Ex concilio Maguntino.
>
> Nullus tondeatur, nisi in legitima aetate et spontanea voluntate.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A prepubescent person who entered a monastery cannot be recalled by his parents after a year. This it says first. A pubescent person who entered by force cannot leave or be recalled by his parents after a year. This it says second. The Sicilian Abbot.

From the same.

If anyone was tonsured before the lawful years without the consent of his parents, [and] if his parents have not themselves protested within a year to the prince, his own bishop, or a missus dominicus, let him remain in that clerical state. But if after the lawful years he was made a cleric by force, and neither he nor his parents protested within a year to the aforesaid persons, let him remain thus in the clerical state, like him concerning whom it was said above. [But if the aforesaid persons, etc.]

> Impubes monasterium ingressus post annum a parentibus revocari non potest. H. d. primo. Pubes per vim ingressus post annum exire vel a parentibus revocari non potest. H. d. secundo. Abbas Siculus.
>
> Ex eodem.
>
> Si quis ante annos legitimos tonsuratus est sine consensu parentum suorum, [et] si parentes ipsius infra annum non se reclamaverint ad principem, aut ad proprium episcopum vel ad missum dominicum : in ipso clericatu permaneat. Si vero post legitimos annos per vim clericus factus est, et nec ipse, nec parentes eius infra annum ad memoratas personas reclamaverint, in clericatu ita permaneat, sicut is, de quo superius dictum est. [Si vero praefatae personae etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A secular cleric using the habit and name of a monk is compelled to become a monk or to desist from this.

From the Council of Toledo.

That clerics who pretend themselves to be monks in habit and name, and are not, be corrected in every way and amended, so that they are either true monks or true clerics.

> Clericus saecularis, utens habitu et nomine monachali, cogitur, ut fiat monachus, vel ab hoc desistat.

Ex concilio Toletano.

Ut clerici, qui se fingunt habitu et nomine monachos esse, et non sunt, omnimodis corrigantur atque emendentur, ut vel veri monachi sint, vel veri clerici.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A female novice who voluntarily introduces herself into the acts of professed women is thereby deemed professed. This it says, and it is a very notable case.

From the Council of Arles.

If a widow voluntarily placed upon herself the veil of conversion, although not a sacred one, and offered an offering to God in the church among the veiled women, willing or unwilling she ought thereafter to have the habit of sanctimony, although she wishes to affirm by oath that she placed the veil upon herself with this tenor and reason, that she could again lay it aside.

Novitia, quae sponte se ingerit actibus professarum, per hoc censetur professa. H. d. et est casus multum notabilis.

Ex concilio Arelatensi.

Vidua, si sponte velum conversionis, quamvis non sacrum, sibi imposuerit, et in ecclesia inter velatas oblationem Deo obtulerit, velit nolit, sanctimoniae habitum ulterius debet habere, licet sacramento firmare velit, eo tenore et ratione velamen sibi imposuisse, ut iterum deponere posset.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A monk cannot rashly pass to another monastery or have a peculium.

Gregory, to Anthemius the Subdeacon.

John, our brother and fellow bishop, [having sent] through Justus his cleric [a capitulary, is known to have intimated this to us among many other things: certain monks of the monasteries situated in the diocese of Sorrento migrate from monastery to monastery as they please and depart from the rule of their own abbot from desire for a secular thing; but also, what is known not to be lawful, each of them takes care for his own private property.] Therefore, by the present command we mandate [your experience] that you permit neither a monk rashly to migrate further from monastery to monastery, nor any of them to have anything as private property. But if [anyone] presumes this, let [him] be returned by fitting coercion in the monastery in which he was first converted and under the rule of his abbot, from which he had fled, [lest, if so great an iniquity, etc.]

Monachus temere ad aliud monasterium transire vel peculium habere non potest.

Gregorius Anthemio Subdiacono.

Ioannes frater +et coepiscopus noster [directo] per Iustum clericum [suum capitulari inter alia plura hoc nobis noscitur intimasse, aliquos monachos monasteriorum in Surrentina dioecesi positorum de monasterio in monasterium, prout eis libuerit, transmigrare, et a proprii abbatis regula desiderio rei saecularis abscedere, sed et, quod non licere notum est, peculiaritati eorum singulos studere.] *Propterea * [experientiae] tuae Praesenti iussione mandamus, ut neque monachum ulterius de monasterio in monasterium temere migrare liceat, nec eorum aliquem peculiare quicquam habere permittas. Sed si [quilibet] hoc praesumpserit, in monasterio, in quo ab initio conversatus est, et sub abbatis sui regula, de qua fugerat [eum] competenti coercitione reddatur, [ne si tantam iniquitatem etc.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Where a congregation or religion is harsh, full puberty—namely, the age of eighteen years—is required in one making profession. This it says, having regard to the mind of the letter, and it is a singular text.

From the Register of Gregory.

Because the congregation of monks on the islands is harsh, we prohibit the reception of boys into their monasteries before their eighteenth year also. Or if there are any there now, let your experience remove them and send them to the city of Rome. We will that you observe this in all respects on Palmaria and the other islands.

> Ubi est dura congregatio vel religio, requiritur in profitente plena pubertas, scilicet tempus XVIII. annorum. H. d. habito respectu ad mentem literae, et est textus singularis.
>
> Ex Registro Gregorii.
>
> Quia in insulis dura est congregatio monachorum, etiam pueros in eorum monasteriis ante XVIII. annum suscipi prohibemus. Vel si qui nunc sunt, tua eos experientia auferat, et in urbem Romanam transmittat. Hoc in Palmaria aliisque insulis te per omnia volumus custodire.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If a Cistercian passes to another monastery without the license of his abbot, he is compelled to return to his own monastery.

Alexander III, to the Archbishops and Other Prelates of Churches Constituted throughout Gaul.

It is not doubtful or uncertain to you how the religious brothers of the Cistercian order excel in such religion and virtue that, by the institution of the Fathers and our predecessors, those who make profession in their monasteries are prohibited from departing from the cloister without the license of their abbot, and those departing are prohibited from being received in other monasteries. Hence it is that we, wishing solicitously to preserve the same institution as not only friendly to religion but also consonant with reason, by apostolic writings directing your whole body, command that you in no way permit monks or converts of the Cistercian order, after profession made in the monasteries, to be received throughout your bishoprics without the license of their abbots. And if there are any among them who presume to leave without the license of their abbots the monastery in which they made profession, and after being admonished do not quickly return to their monasteries, you are to strike them so long with ecclesiastical censure, appeal being removed, until you compel them to return to the monasteries from which they departed.

> Si Cisterciensis sine licentia sui abbatis ad aliud monasterium transit, ad proprium monasterium regredi cogitur.
>
> Alexander III. Archiepiscopis et aliis ecclesiarum Praelatis per Galliam constitutis.
>
> Non est vobis dubium +aut incertum, quomodo fratres religiosi Cisterciensis ordinis ea praeemineant religione et virtute, quod ex institutione Patrum et praedecessorum nostrorum hi, qui in eorum monasteriis professionem faciunt, sine abbatis sui licentia prohibentur de claustro discedere, et discedentes in aliis monasteriis recipi. Inde est, quod nos eandem institutionem non solum amicam religioni, sed etiam rationi consonam sollicite conservare volentes, Universitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus monachos vel conversos Cisterciensis ordinis post factam in monasteriis professionem sine licentia abbatum suorum per episcopatus vestros recipi nullatenus permittatis. Et si qui ex eis fuerint, qui sine licentia abbatum suorum de monasterio, in quo professionem fecerint, exire praesumpserint, et commoniti ad sua monasteria celeriter non redierint, eos tam diu appellatione remota censura ecclesiastica percellatis, donec ad monasteria, unde exierint, regredi compellatis.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A profession made before the fourteenth year does not bind; but after the fourteenth year, if made through reception of the habit of the professed, it also does not bind unless perseverance for three days is given.

The same, to Master F., Canon of Città.

You should know that it has come to our hearing that the hermits of Montefoll. seduced certain boys under the fourteenth year to such an extent that certain of them, giving assent to their persuasions, immediately received the habit of religion in their monasteries. One of them, named T., immediately repented that he had put on the habit, intimated to his parents what he had done, and they, coming to that place without delay, drew him out from there. And although, as we have learned, he had remained there for only one night, the aforesaid hermits and certain others do not permit him to take as wife a certain girl whom he swore to take as wife and, as is said, betrothed. Wherefore, by apostolic writings directing your discretion, we command that, after the truth of the matter has been diligently inquired into and learned, if it is established to you that the aforesaid T. laid aside the habit he had received before completion of his fourteenth year, or if after his fourteenth year he received the habit without probation and laid it aside within three days, you declare him, occasion and appeal ceasing, to be wholly absolved from the impleading of the aforesaid hermits or others in this respect, and freely able to marry her whom, after he left, he swore to take as wife, if no other reasonable cause obstructs.

Professio, facta ante XIV. annum, non obligat; post XIV. vero, si fit per susceptionem habitus professorum, etiam non obligat, nisi detur perseverantia tridui.

Idem Magistro F. Civitatensi Canonico.

Ad nostram noveris audientiam pervenisse, quod eremitae de Montefoll. quosdam pueros infra XIV. annum seduxerunt in tantum, quod quidam illorum, suasionibus eorum assensum praebentes, statim religionis habitum in ipsorum monasteriis susceperunt, quorum unus T. nomine statim poenituit, quod habitum induisset, +id, quod fecerat, suis parentibus intimavit, qui ad locum ipsum mora postposita accedentes, eum exinde traxerunt. Et quum non stetisset ibi nisi per unam noctem, ut accepimus, praefati eremitae et quidam alii non permittunt eum quandam puellam ducere in uxorem, quam ipse iuravit in uxorem accipere, ac, sicut dicitur, desponsavit. Quocirca discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligenter inquisita ac cognita, si tibi constiterit, quod praefatus T. ante consummationem XIV. anni susceptum habitum deposuerit, aut si post XIV. annum habitum ipsum sine probatione susceperit, et infra triduum deposuerit, eum ab impetitione praedictorum eremitarum vel aliorum in hac parte, occasione et appellatione cessante denuncies penitus absolutum, et eam, quam, postquam exivit, iuravit accipere in uxorem, libere posse traducere, si alia causa rationabilis non obsistat.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: One who receives the habit of the professed, where the habits are distinct, is compelled to be a religious there or elsewhere; but if he receives the habit of novices, he can return to the world.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

Concerning what was asked of us on your part about clerics who received the habit of religion and returned to their former state before profession, we answer your fraternity in this manner: if they are unwilling to observe the austerity of the religion to which they are known to have migrated, they are to be compelled to pass to a lesser religion. Nor ought they any longer to be received in secular churches, lest they be proved to act contrary to their vow, which they made to the Lord, at peril to their souls. But if, while placed on probation, they wished to depart before receiving a habit of this kind, according to the Rule of blessed Benedict they do not appear to be prohibited from returning to their former state, which seems to command that they return in the same clothing in which they came. [Moreover, etc.; cf. c. 1, On the Conversion of Spouses, III. 32.]

> Qui recipit habitum professorum, ubi distincti sunt habitus, compellitur ibi vel alibi esse religiosus; sed, si recipit habitum novitiorum, potest ad saeculum redire.
>
> Idem Eliensi Episcopo.
>
> Super eo, quod quaesitum fuit a nobis ex parte tua de clericis, qui religionis habitum susceperunt, et ante professionem ad priorem statum sunt reversi, fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si austeritatem religionis, ad quam migrasse noscuntur, servare noluerint, ad minorem religionem sunt cogendi transire. Nec amplius in ecclesiis saecularibus debent assumi, ne contra votum suum, quod Domino fecerunt, in animarum suarum periculum venire probentur. Verum si ante susceptum huiusmodi habitum in probatione positi recedere voluerint, secundum regulam beati Benedicti non videtur prohiberi ad priorem statum redire, quae videtur praecipere, ut in eadem veste, in qua veniunt, revertantur. [Praeterea etc. cf. c. 1. de conv. coni. III. 32.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A regular canon can become a monk if the religion to which he passes is stricter than his own; otherwise, it is otherwise.

The same, to the Bishop of Amiens.

Indeed, concerning the canon who had made profession in the church of Aromat and had fled from it, and was received as a monk by a certain abbot, we signify this to your fraternity: if the place where he now remains is of a greater religion than the church of Aromat, permit him to remain in the same place with a pure conscience; otherwise, compel him to return to his former church. [Moreover, etc.; cf. c. 3, On Consecration, IV. 19.]

> Canonicus regularis potest effici monachus, si religio, ad quam transit, est strictior sua; alias secus.
>
> Index Ambianensi Episcopo.
>
> Sane de canonico, qui in ecclesia Aromatensi professionem fecerat, et fugerat ab eadem, in monachum a quodam abbate recepto id tuae fraternitati significamus, quod, si locus, ubi nunc permanet, maioris religionis, quam ecclesia Aromatensis exsistat, ipsum in eodem loco cum pura conscientia remanere permittas; alioquin eum ad priorem ecclesiam redire compellas. [Porro etc. cf. c. 3. de div. IV. 19.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A person younger than fourteen years is not bound to religion by making profession unless, having become older, he ratified it.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

It was signified to us and shown for certain that Guiboldus, not yet beginning to be fourteen years old, from fear of the master who was instructing him in letters, received the habit of religion at the church of Resone, and departed from there like a boy within a year, and now for six years and more wanders about through the vanities of the world. Hence, because the truth of this matter is not established to us, by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that you diligently inquire into the matter itself and, if you find that G. had not been offered by his parents, nor had begun to be fourteen years old when he entered religion, and, repenting within his fourteenth year of the vow made, departed from religion, if he wishes to remain in the world, you declare him absolved by pontifical authority from that vow of profession that he made, and take care to publish his absolution both to the church of Resone and to the people of your city. But if perhaps he was offered by his parents, or had completed his fourteenth year when he entered religion, or after his fourteenth year ratified the profession previously made by him, compel him with all severity to pass to the same or another religion.

> Minor XIV. annis profitendo non obligatur religioni, nisi factus maior ratum habuerit.
>
> Idem Belvacensi Episcopo.
>
> Significatum est nobis, +et pro certo monstratum, quod Guiboldus, nondum incipiens esse XIV. annorum, timore magistri, qui eum literis erudiebat, habitum religionis apud ecclesiam de Resone suscepit, et inde sicut puer infra annum exivit, et per saeculi vanitates iam sex annis et eo amplius vagabundus discurrit. Unde, quoniam huius rei veritas nobis non constat, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus rem ipsam diligenter inquiras, et, si inveneris, quod G. non fuisset a parentibus oblatus, +nec inceperit esse XIV. annorum, quando ad religionem accessit, et infra XIV. annum facti voti poenitens a religione recesserit, si in saeculo voluerit remanere, eum ab illo voto professionis, quod fecit, auctoritate pontificali denuncies absolutum, et absolutionem eius tam ecclesiae de Resone quam populo tuae civitatis studeas publicare. Si autem a parentibus forte fuerit oblatus, seu XIV. annum compleverit, quum religionem intravit, seu post decimum quartum annum professionem a se prius factam ratam habuerit, eum ad eandem vel ad aliam religionem cum omni districtione transire compellas.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If a daughter younger than twelve years, delivered by her parents to a monastery, after becoming older is voluntarily veiled, she cannot return to the world.

Clement III.

Since we know you to be a prudent and discreet man, if in matters in which you doubt you seek counsel from us with pastoral solicitude, and we respond to you concerning canon law as far as we can, and commend your prudence with worthy praises in the Lord. Indeed, you took care to propose to us by your intimation whether she who was delivered to a monastery by her parents below the years of discretion, and, putting on the habit of religion, received the blessing, and afterward, leaving, joined herself to a certain knight, by whom she also conceived offspring, is to be compelled to return to the monastery, since she asserts that after she had the age of consenting she dissented, and recalls that she received the gift of blessing unwillingly. Concerning this we answer your consultation in this manner: since, according to the censure of the Council of Toledo, either paternal devotion or one's own profession makes a monk, whichever of these is alleged will hold, with access to return to the world utterly interdicted. For she does not appear able to cast off from herself the yoke of monastic profession, since it is not clearly established that she contradicted it when she received the blessing, which indeed those who are veiled receive only at the age of discretion; especially if, ratification following, even if it were established that she once contradicted it, what had previously been done is strengthened. Nor does what is taken in a contrary sense from the constitution of our predecessor Pope Leo, a holy man, speak against this—that girls who received the habit of virginity when compelled by the command of their parents can abandon it without transgression—since it can rightly be understood of one who is known to have been constituted at marriageable age. For then, because she has free choice, she is not compelled to follow the will of her parents in the choice of her state.

> Si filia, minor XII. annis a parentibus monasterio tradita, maior facta sponte veletur, ad saeculum redire non potest.
>
> Clemens III.
>
> Quum virum +te prudentem fore noverimus et discretum, si in quibus dubitas consilium a nobis sollicitudine pastorali requiris, et tibi de iure canonico, quod possumus, respondemus, et prudentiam tuam dignis in Domino laudibus commendamus. Curasti siquidem tua nobis insinuatione proponere, Utrum ea, quae infra discretionis annos a parentibus monasterio tradita est, et habitum religionis induens, benedictionem accepit, et exiens postmodum se cuidam militi copulavit, ex quo etiam prolem suscepit, ad monasterium redire cogatur, quum illa se asserat, postquam consentiendi habuerit aetatem, dissensisse, et benedictionis munus invitam se suscepisse commemorat. Super hoc Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum iuxta concilii Toletani censuram monachum aut paterna devotio aut propria professio faciat, quicquid horum fuerit allegatum, tenebit, revertendi ad saeculum aditu penitus interdicto. Non enim videtur illa monasticae professionis a se posse iugum excutere, quum eam non constet evidenter contradixisse, quum benedictionem accepit, quam utique non nisi in aetate discretionis recipiunt quae velantur, praesertim si ratihabitione secuta, etsi eam quandoque contradixisse constiterit, quod ante gestum fuerat roboratur. Nec obloquitur quod de sancti viri praedecessoris nostri Leonis Papae constitutione per contrarium sensum sumitur, ut puellae, quae coactae parentum imperio virginitatis habitum susceperunt, ipsum possint sine praevaricatione deserere, quum de ea recte possit intelligi, quae in aetate nubili noscitur constituta. Tunc enim, quia liberum habet arbitrium, in electione propositi sequi parentum non cogitur voluntatem.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A profession made without reception of the religious habit is valid.

The same.

A petition presented to us on your part contained that I., a canon of Acerenza, burdened by sickness, asserts that he emitted a vow that he would become a monk; whence, fearing that he might die with the vow unfulfilled, with joined hands he surrendered himself to you as a monk and brother. Others also, in your absence, vowing themselves into the hands of priests to become monks, returned to their vomit when made healthy; and although they had formerly been familiars of your monastery, because they were not admitted to their ancient familiarity, they became adversaries in place of friends. Therefore, whether you can disregard the deeds of such persons lest they become worse, or whether they are to be compelled to fulfill what they promised, you seek to be taught by us. We therefore answer your inquiry in this manner: since it is not the habit but regular profession that makes a monk, from the time a vow is emitted by one converting and received by the abbot, such a person is indeed not undeservedly to be compelled to become a monk and render to the Lord what he promised. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Ides of January. 1199.]

Valet professio facta sine susceptione habitus religionis.

Idem.

Porrectum nobis ex parte tua petitorium continebat, quod I. canonicus Acherontinus, infirmitate gravatus, votum, ut fieret monachus, se asserit emisisse; unde metuens, ne voto decederet non completo, iunctis manibus tibi se reddidit in monachum et in fratrem. +Alii quoque in tua absentia sese in sacerdotum manibus monachos fieri devoventes, sani facti ad vomitum redierunt, et, quum familiares monasterii tui antea exstitissent, quia non fuerunt ad antiquam familiaritatem admissi, adversarii facti sunt pro amicis. Utrum ergo talium facta dissimulare valeas, ne fiant deteriores, an compellendi sint ad complenda promissa, per nos postulas edoceri. Nos ergo Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum monachum non faciat habitus, sed professio regularis, ex quo a convertendo votum emittitur, et recipitur ab abbate, talis, ut fiat monachus, et reddat Domino quae promisit, erit utique non immerito compellendus. [Dat. Lat. III. Id. Ian. 1199.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: If a father offered himself, with his goods and his prepubescent son, to a monastery, the son, having become older, can leave religion and seek his legitimate portion from the monastery.

Celestine III.

Since we are—(And below:) Indeed, it was recently reported to our ears that, when B., a knight, had by the Lord's permission been sprinkled with the disease of leprosy, he conferred himself, together with his son who had in no way reached the years of discretion, upon a certain monastery, together also with his goods that he had held from the monastery itself, and caused his said son to receive the monastic habit. And when monastic discipline displeased the boy himself on account of the harshness of the rule, within the space of ten weeks he withdrew from the monastery and the habit thus received and began insistently to seek his father's goods from that abbey. And when a question concerning this had been brought to the diocesan bishop and debated before him for some time, because many appeared to disagree concerning the rigor of the canons—if the relatives of the said boy could prove by witnesses that he was below the years of discretion when he was offered, he was in no way bound by such a vow—the said abbot appealed to the hearing of the See of Mainz, and certain relatives of the same boy transferred the appeal to the Roman church, as we learned from the letters of Bishop Aug. Therefore, we answer your discretion in this manner: if the said boy has reached the years of discretion and is unwilling to retain the monastic habit, if he cannot be induced to this, he is in no way to be compelled, because it will then be free for him to lay it aside and to seek the paternal goods that come to him by succession.

Si pater se cum bonis suis et filio impubere obtulit monasterio, filius factus maior exire potest religionem et legitimam a monasterio petere.

Coelestinus III.

Quum simus : (Et infra:) Sane nuper nostris auribus est relatum, quod, quum B. miles leprae morbo Domino permittente esset respersus, se cum filio suo discretionis annos nullatenus attingente ad quoddam monasterium, cum bonis suis etiam, quae a monasterio ipso tenuerat, contulisset, dictum filium suum fecit habitum suscipere monachalem. +*Quumque ipsi puero disciplina monastica propter asperitatem regulae displiceret, infra X. hebdomadarum spatium a monasterio et habitu taliter suscepto resiliens, bona patris ab abbatia illa coepit cum instantia postulare. Et quum super hoc ad dioecesanum episcopum quaestio delata fuisset, et coram eo aliquamdiu disceptatum, quia plerique dissentire de rigore canonum videbantur, si consanguinei dicti pueri possent testibus comprobare, illum, quando fuit oblatus, infra annos discretionis exsistere, ipsum tali voto nullatenus obligari: dictus abbas ad Maguntinae sedis audientiam appellavit, et quidam de consanguineis eiusdem pueri ad Romanam ecclesiam appellationem, sicut ex literis Aug. episcopi comperimus, transtulerunt. Ideoque *Discretioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si dictus puer ad annos discretionis pervenerit, et habitum retinere noluerit monachalem, si ad hoc ipsum induci nequiverit, non est ullatenus compellendus, quia tunc liberum sibi erit, eum dimittere, et bona paterna, quae ipsi ex successione proveniunt, postulare.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: An insane person is not bound by making profession unless, having become of sound mind, he ratified it.

Innocent III, to the Bishop and Chapter of Targile.

As the tenor of your letters disclosed to us, when the bearer of the present writing was constituted in the priestly office and labored under such want of temporal things that he could provide in no way for himself or his parents or brothers in their own necessities, he did not hesitate to expose himself to the labors of his own body and many perils of the sea, so that from his labor and honest acquisition he might relieve his own want and that of his family. But it happened after these things that, while he was staying far from your city, he began to labor under so grave a sickness that, placed outside himself, he despaired of the present life; and while he was constituted at such a point, he was clothed in the monastic habit by a certain simple monk and carried to a monastery. Then, after a few days had elapsed, when he was already at the beginning of his convalescence, he laid aside the habit and, with the license of the abbot of that place, left the monastery; and, wishing to aid the wants of his family, he humbly petitioned you that he might minister in the priestly office as before and dwell together with you. You humbly seek to be taught by the sacred oracle of the Apostolic See what is to be done by you concerning these things. We therefore answer your consultation in this manner: although these two things appear mutually repugnant—namely, that someone is placed outside himself and despairs of the present life—nevertheless, if at the time when P., the priest and bearer of the present writing, is asserted to have been placed outside his mind, he was clothed in the monastic habit, since one who is alienated does not perceive and through this cannot consent, declare him absolved from observance of the monastic order, unless, after he became possessed of his mind, he made monastic profession by spontaneous will. [Given at the Lateran. 1198.]

Furiosus profitendo non obligatur; nisi factus sanae mentis ratum habuerit.

Innocentius III. Episcopo et Capitulo Targilensibus.

Sicut tenor literarum +vestrarum nobis aperuit, quum lator praesentium in sacerdotali esset officio constitutus, et tanta rerum temporalium indigentia laboraret, quod nec sibi nec suis progenitoribus seu fratribus in necessitatibus propriis posset aliquatenus providere: proprii corporis laboribus et maris periculis multis se non dubitavit exponere, ut de suo labore et acquisitione honesta suam et suorum posset indigentiam relevare. Contigit autem post haec, quod ipse, longe a vestra civitate consistens, tam gravi coepit aegritudine laborare, quod extra se positus desperaret de vita praesenti, et dum in tali esset articulo constitutus, a quodam simplici monacho indutus fuit habitu monachali, et ad monasterium deportatus. Deinde, paucis diebus elapsis, quum iam esset in principio suae convalescentiae, deposuit habitum, et licentia eiusdem loci abbatis monasterium dereliquit, et cupiens progenitorum suorum indigentiis subvenire, a vobis suppliciter postulavit, ut posset, sicut prius, in sacerdotali officio ministrare et vobiscum pariter conversari. Quid autem super his vobis fuerit faciendum, sacro apostolicae sedis oraculo humiliter petitis edoceri. Nos igitur Consultationi vestrae taliter respondemus, quod, licet ista duo inter se repugnantia videantur ut quisquam scilicet sit extra se positus et de praesenti vita desperet, si tamen eo tempore, quo P. sacerdos lator praesentium positus extra mentem asseritur, indutus fuit habitu monachali, quum alienatus non sentiat, ac per hoc non valeat consentire, eum denuncietis ab observatione monastici ordinis absolutum, nisi postquam mentis suae factus est compos, spontanea voluntate professionem fecerit monachalem. [Dat. Laterani. 1198.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: Profession ought neither to be made nor received within the time of probation; but, if made and received, it holds. This it says, and it is a notable case and is alleged daily.

The same, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

To the Apostolic See, which by the Lord's disposition is the mother and teacher of all the faithful, doubtful questions concerning diverse articles are referred, so that what shall have been answered by it concerning their solution may be held without doubt by all. Indeed, on your part we recently received such questions: since the regular institute interdicts anyone from being made a monk before a probation of one year, monks and nuns constituted in your diocese receive clerics as well as laypersons of each sex, the healthy and the infirm alike, who wish to assume the habit of religion, even professing by some nod, sometimes without any profession, sometimes causing them to make profession immediately. Hence many evils are known rather often to arise, since the infirm, already transferred to a monastery and having emitted profession, cast off the religious habit after they recover from their infirmities and return to their own property. It also happens that such persons remain in their own houses, since the monks do not wish their monasteries to be burdened by them while they live. The healthy also, thus received without probation, looking back, contract marriages after casting off the regular habit. Concerning them you petitioned to be made certain by the Apostolic See whether persons who assume the religious habit before the probation of one year or a competent time ought, when profession has been made or abandoned by them, to be reputed monks, and whether a married person desiring to be converted is to be received as a monk unless his wife promises perpetual continence. We therefore answer in order your questions in this manner: although the time of probation was granted by the holy Fathers not only in favor of the person converting but also of the monastery, so that both he may test its harshness and it may test his character—which on each side is diligently to be observed, especially when certain knowledge of each has not otherwise been obtained—nevertheless, if before the regularly prescribed time of probation one who desires to be converted receives the habit and emits profession, the abbot personally or through another receiving the monastic profession and granting the monastic habit, each is seen to renounce what is known to have been introduced for himself. And therefore he is indeed obligated by the profession emitted and received to regular observance and is truly to be deemed a monk, because many things are prohibited from being done that, if done, obtain the firmness of force. But abbots are to be prohibited from indiscriminately receiving anyone to profession before the time of probation; and if, contrary to the aforesaid form, they have indiscreetly received any persons, they are to be corrected by due retribution, since the space of probation was regularly instituted in aid of human frailty. But when a husband, etc. (cf. c. 13, On the Conversion of Spouses, III. 32.) [Given at the Lateran, on the ninth day before the Kalends of December. 1198.]

Professio nec fieri, nec recipi debet infra tempus probationis; sed facta et recepta tenet. Hoc dicit, et est casus notabilis, et quotidie allegatur.

Idem Pisano Archiepiscopo.

Ad apostolicam sedem, +quae disponente Domino cunctorum fidelium mater est et magistra, super diversis articulis quaestiones dubiae referuntur, ut quod ab ea fuerit super earum solutione responsum indubitanter ab omnibus teneatur.

Ex parte siquidem tua tales nuper suscepimus quaestiones, quod, Quum monachum fieri ante unius anni probationem regularis institutio interdicat, +monachi et moniales in tua dioecesi constituti tam clericos quam laicos utriusque sexus, sanos pariter et infirmos, religionis habitum volentes assumere, nutu etiam aliquo profitentes, interdum absque omni professione recipiunt, quandoque professionem illico facientes. Unde multa mala noscuntur saepius provenire, quum infirmi ad monasterium iam translati, et, emissa professione, postquam de infirmitatibus convaluerint, habitum religionis abiiciant, et ad propria revertantur. Contingit etiam tales in propriis domibus remanere, quum monachi per eos, dum vivunt, nolunt sua monasteria praegravari. Sani etiam sic sine probatione recepti, retro adspicientes matrimonia contrahunt, reiecto habitu regulari; de quibus si habitum religionis assumunt ante unius anni probationem vel temporis competentis, utrum facta professione a talibus vel amissa monachi debeant reputari, et, si coniugatus converti desiderans recipiendus sit in monachum, nisi uxor perpetuam continentiam repromittat, certificari a sede apostolica postulasti. Nos igitur Quaestionibus tuis taliter ex ordine respondemus, quod licet tempus probationis a sanctis Patribus sit indultum non solum in favorem conversi, sed etiam monasterii, ut et ille asperitates istius, et istud mores illius valeat experiri, (quod utrumque diligenter est observandum, praesertim quum ab utroque de reliquo facta certa notitia non habetur), si tamen ante tempus probationis regulariter praefinitum is, qui converti desiderat, habitum recipit et professionem emittit, abbate per se vel per alium professionem recipiente monasticam, et monachalem habitum concedente : uterque renunciare videtur ei, quod pro se noscitur introductum. Ideoque obligatur quidem per professionem emissam pariter et acceptam ad observantiam regularem, et vere monachus est censendus, quia multa fieri prohibentur, quae, si facta fuerint, obtinent roboris firmitatem. Prohibendum est autem abbatibus, ne passim ante tempus probationis quoslibet ad professionem recipiant, et, si contra formam praescriptam quoslibet indiscrete receperint, animadversione sunt debita corrigendi, quum in subsidium fragilitatis humanae spatium probationis sit regulariter institutum. Quum autem vir etc. (cf. c. 13. de conv. coni. III. 32.) [Dat. Lat. IX. Kal. Dec. 1198.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: One who made profession, although he never remained in the cloister but remained in the world and used his own goods, is compelled to regular observance.

The same, to the Bishop of Acre.

As was proposed to us on your part, a certain cleric, when laboring under excessive sickness, as though certain of death and despairing of recovering health, sought and received the habit of regular canons, expressing and promising in the reception of the habit those things that are customarily promised in a matter of this kind. But he neither passed to the church, as one burdened by sickness, nor ceased to use his goods. But afterward, health having been received, after fifteen years and more, while our venerable brother the bishop and our beloved son the prior and canons of the church of Nazareth, from whom he had received the regular habit, saw and knew it, you, although at the time when he received the habit in the church of Nazareth you exercised the solicitude of the prior, unmindful of the things that had been done concerning him, received him as a canon of Acre. But because you petition through our letters to be taught what you ought to do concerning this, we answer your fraternity in this manner: if at his own request he received the regular habit and bound himself by his profession to observance of canonical religion, he is to be compelled by ecclesiastical severity to reassume the habit, since the fact that he remained outside the canonry for so long can deservedly be alleged not in his excuse but as an increase of greater transgression. [Given at the Lateran, on the tenth day before the Kalends of January. 1198.]

Qui professionem fecit, licet in claustro nunquam permanserit, sed in saeculo, et suis bonis usus fuerit, ad observantiam regularem compellitur.

Idem Aconensi Episcopo.

Sicut nobis ex parte tua fuit propositum, quidam clericus, quum aegritudine nimia laboraret, quasi de morte securus, et de recuperanda sanitate desperans, habitum canonicorum regularium petiit et accepit, ea in susceptione habitus exprimens et promittens, quae solent in huiusmodi re promitti. Sed nec ad ecclesiam transiit, utpote infirmitate gravatus, nec bonis suis uti cessavit. Postmodum vero sospitate suscepta post XV. annos et ultra, videntibus et scientibus venerabili fratri nostro episcopo et dilecto filio priore, et canonicis ecclesiae Nazarensis, a quibus habitum susceperat regularem, +tu, licet eo tempore, quo habitum susceperat in ecclesia Nazarensi, prioris sollicitudinem exerceres, immemor eorum, quae facta fuerant circa ipsum, in Acconensem eum canonicum suscepisti. Quia vero quid super hoc facere debeas per nostras postulas literas edoceri, Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si regularem habitum se postulante suscepit, et ad observationem religionis canonicae sua se professione ligavit, ad resumendum habitum ecclesiastica est districtione cogendus, quum, quod tanto tempore extra canoniam mansit, non in excusationem eius, sed in maioris transgressionis augmentum merito valeat allegari. [*Dat. Lat. X. Kal. Ian. * 1198.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: A religious can, from zeal for a holier life, pass to a stricter religion after first seeking the license of his prelate, although it was not obtained, even if the first monastery is privileged that one cannot pass from it to another, even a stricter one. This it says, and it is a notable case and is alleged daily.

The same, to the Prior and Convent of Dimol.

Although it was granted by the Apostolic See to certain monks and canons, and also to Hospitallers and Templars, that, after someone has been professed with them, he cannot, against their will, pass to another place even with a view to a stricter religion, so that each person according to the Apostle remains in the calling in which he is known to have been called; nevertheless, because where the Spirit of God is, there is liberty, and those who are led by the Spirit of God are not under law, because law is not laid down for the just, this appears to have been granted to them for this reason: that no one from rashness or levity should fly over to another order, to the loss or injury of his own order, under pretext of greater religion, as it is established to have been frequently presumed by many; not indeed so that license to pass should be denied to him who has thought it should be sought with humility and purity, so that he may be able to migrate not feignedly but truly to the fruit of a better life.

Such a person, therefore, after he has sought from his prelate license to pass, absolved by the private law that prejudices the public law, can freely fulfill the purpose of a holier life, notwithstanding the insolent contradiction of an undiscerning prelate, because he deserves to lose a privilege who abuses the power granted to him; since even the Roman Pontiff, who obtains supreme power in the church, grants without difficulty to archbishops and bishops seeking for just cause license to resign. Wherefore let all those to whom a privilege of this kind was granted know that they are bound by law to grant license to pass to those seeking in this manner, because, just as a subject ought with humility and purity to seek from the prelate license to pass, lest he appear to contemn the good of obedience, so assuredly the prelate ought without difficulty or any depravity to grant the subject license to pass, lest he appear to impede a divinely inspired purpose. But if it is probably doubted whether someone wishes from charity or from rashness to pass to a stricter or a more lax order, the judgment of the superior is to be sought, lest perhaps an angel of Satan transform himself into an angel of light; this rule always being inviolably observed: that no [bishop] presume on any occasion to abandon his prelacy without the license of the Roman Pontiff, because, just as a greater good is preferred to a lesser good, so common utility is preferred to particular utility. And in this case teaching is rightly preferred to silence, solicitude to contemplation, and labor to rest. Indeed, to signify this, the only-begotten Son of God, Jesus Christ, was born according to the flesh not of Rachel but of Leah; nor is Mary read to have received him into her house, but Martha. Hence, when a bishop can both preside and profit, he ought neither to seek nor even to obtain license to resign.

Therefore, since our beloved son R., your monk, migrated to the brothers of the Cistercian order not that he might derogate in any way from your order but that he might lead a stricter life with them, by apostolic writings directing your discretion, we command that you in no way molest him concerning what he is known to have done from a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith, because charity is a proper fountain in which an outsider does not share. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the third day before the Kalends of May, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Potest religiosus zelo sanctioris vitae ad religionem transire strictiorem, petita prius licentia praelati sui, licet non obtenta, etiam si primum monasterium sit privilegiatum, quod de illo ad aliud etiam arctius transire non possit. H. d., et est casus notabilis, et quotidie allegatur.
>
> Idem Priori et Conventui Dimoliensi.
>
> Licet quibusdam monachis et canonicis, nec non hospitalariis et templariis a sede apostolica sit indultum, ne, postquam aliquis professus fuerit apud eos, ad alium locum possit ipsis invitis arctioris etiam religionis obtentu transire, ut unusquisque secundum Apostolum in ea vocatione permaneat, in qua dignoscitur esse vocatus; quia tamen, ubi spiritus Dei est, ibi libertas, et qui Dei spiritu aguntur non sunt sub lege, quia lex non est posita iusto : ea ratione videtur hoc illis fuisse concessum, ne quis ex temeritate vel levitate in iacturam vel iniuriam sui ordinis sub praetextu maioris religionis ad alium ordinem transvolaret, sicut frequenter a multis constat esse praesumptum, non quidem ut ei transeundi licentia denegetur, qui eam cum humilitate ac puritate duxerit postulandam, ut non ficte, sed vere ad frugem melioris vitae valeat transmigrare. Talis ergo, postquam a praelato suo transeundi licentiam postulaverit, ex lege privata, quae publicae legi praeiudicat, absolutus, libere potest sanctioris vitae propositum adimplere, non obstante proterva indiscreti contradictione praelati, quia privilegium meretur amittere qui concessa sibi abutitur potestate; quum etiam Romanus Pontifex, qui supremam in ecclesia obtinet potestatem, archiepiscopis et episcopis cedendi licentiam ex iusta causa petentibus sine difficultate concedat. Quocirca noverint universi, quibus huiusmodi privilegium est concessum, se ad concedendam licentiam transeundi taliter postulantibus de iure teneri, quia, sicut subditus a praelato cum humilitate et puritate debet transeundi licentiam postulare, ne bonum obedientiae contemnere videatur, sic profecto praelatus subdito sine difficultate et pravitate qualibet debet transeundi licentiam indulgere, ne videatur propositum impedire divinitus inspiratum. Si vero probabiliter dubitetur, utrum quis velit ad ordinem arctiorem aut laxiorem ex caritate, an ex temeritate transire : superioris est iudicium requirendum, ne forte angelus satanae in lucis angelum se transformet : illa semper regula inviolabiliter observata, ut nullus [episcopus] absque licentia Romani Pontificis praesumat occasione quacunque deserere praesulatum, quoniam, sicut maius bonum minori bono praeponitur, ita communis utilitas speciali utilitati praefertur. Et in hoc casu recte praeponitur doctrina silentio, sollicitudo contemplationi, et labor quieti. Ad quod utique designandum unigenitus Dei filius Iesus Christus non de Rachele secundum carnem natus est, sed de Lia, nec legitur eum in domum suam Maria recepisse, sed Martha. Unde, quando potest episcopus praeesse pariter et prodesse, non debet cedendi licentiam postulare, aut etiam obtinere. Quum ergo dilectus filius R. monachus vester ad fratres Cisterciensis ordinis transmigraverit, non ut ordini vestro aliquatenus derogaret, sed ut apud eos vitam duceret arctiorem, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus super eo, quod de corde puro, et conscientia bona et fide non ficta fecisse dignoscitur, eum nullatenus molestetis, quia caritas est fons proprius, cui non communicat alienus. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. III. Kal. Mai. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: Spouses can withdraw from one another by professing religion; it is otherwise if they forswear one another and do not remain continent, for the oath is illicit.

The same, to the Provost, Dean, and Scholasticus of Demeren in the Diocese of Cologne.

Coming to the Apostolic See, the woman G., bearer of the present writing, showed us by a suppliant intimation that, when she had contracted marriage in the face of the church with E. de Hard., of the diocese of Cologne, and had cohabited with him for a long time, discord arose between them to such an extent that each furnished a corporal oath that thereafter neither would seek the other; the man himself assigning as the cause of this separation that he had known carnally a certain aunt of that woman before he took her as wife. Although very many asserted this, nevertheless faith concerning it was not made to the church. But when afterward each flew to second vows, and the second husband entered the way of all flesh while the former husband was still surviving, the said woman caused herself to be enclosed in a strict place to do penance. After six years had been passed there in devotion, hearing from certain discreet and religious persons that she could not be saved thus, she came to the Apostolic See, humbly and devoutly petitioning that we deign to impart salutary counsel to her. We therefore, considering that that oath was illicit, by apostolic writings command your discretion that, after prior admonition, you compel the aforesaid man, after excluding her whom he took in addition, to receive the aforesaid woman; afterward to hear if there is any question, and, appeal being removed, to decide it with a due conclusion. But if nothing [sufficient] is shown against the marriage and the man, after abandoning the world, prefers to migrate to the regular life, you are to grant him license concerning this, so that she may thus be able to remain in her own purpose, as she desires. [No letters, etc. Given on the second day before the Kalends of July. 1205.]

Coniuges religionem profitendo ab invicem devertere possunt; aliter si se abiurant et non continent, illicitum est iuramentum.

Idem Praeposito, et Decano, et Scholastico Demerensibus Coloniensis dioecesis.

Veniens ad apostolicam sedem G. mulier latrix praesentium supplici nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum matrimonium cum E. de Hard. Coloniensis dioeceseos in facie ecclesiae contraxisset, et diutius cohabitasset eidem, orta est dissensio inter ipsos in tantum, ut, quod deinceps alter non requireret alterum, uterque corporaliter praestitit iuramentum, hanc vir ipse divortii causam assignans, quod quandam ipsius mulieris amitam cognovisset, antequam eam duceret in uxorem. Quod licet assererent quamplurimi, non tamen fuit super hoc ecclesiae facta fides. Quum autem postmodum ad secunda vota convolasset uterque, secundo viro viam universae carnis ingresso, adhuc priore viro superstite, dicta mulier se fecit in arcto loco ad poenitentiam agendam includi, ubi, sex annis in devotione peractis, audiens a quibusdam discretis et religiosis personis, quod sic salvari non posset, ad apostolicam sedem accessit, humiliter postulans et devote, ut ei dignaremur impendere consilium salutare. Nos igitur attendentes, quod illud fuit illicitum iuramentum discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praefatum virum monitione praevia compellatis ut, ea, quam superduxit, exclusa, praefatam mulierem recipiat, audituri postmodum, si quid fuerit quaestionis, et illud appellatione remota debito fine decisuri. Si vero contra matrimonium nihil fuerit [sufficienter] ostensum, et vir saeculo derelicto maluerit ad regularem vitam migrare, vos ei super hoc licentiam tribuatis, ut et illa sic possit in suo, sicut desiderat, proposito permanere. [Nullis literis etc. Dat. II. Kal. Iul. 1205.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: One who is converted to a monastery by taking the habit of a novice can return to the world within the time of probation unless it appears that he wished absolutely to change his life.

The same, to the Abbot of Affligem and Masters R. and G., Canons of Utrecht.

We have frequently been consulted by many as to whether one who entered a monastery by taking the habit of a novice, if before emitting profession he wishes to leave within the time of probation, can lawfully return to the world without the mark or fault of apostasy, especially with due correction of morals. Although diverse persons have held diverse views concerning this, we nevertheless believe a distinction must be made as to whether the person converting proposed absolutely to change his life so that under a regular habit he might thereafter serve almighty God, or conditionally to test regular observance so that, if it pleased him within a year, he would then profess the discipline of the order, or, if perhaps it did not please him, return with reformed morals to his former state. In the first case, in order to live regularly he ought to pass at least to a more lax rule. In the second, he can return to the world, yet not so as to live secularly. Therefore, so that his intention may be more fully known, let him declare his purpose at the beginning. Therefore, after weighing this distinction with diligent meditation, inquire solicitously concerning our beloved son the Dean of Utrecht into what you see is to be inquired into, and canonically establish what you know is to be established, [causing, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of May. 1204.]

Qui ad monasterium convertitur sumendo habitum novitii, potest infra tempus probationis redire ad saeculum, nisi appareat, eum vitam voluisse mutare omnino.

Idem Abbati de Affligen. et Magistro R. et G. Canonicis Traiectensibus.

Consulti sumus frequenter a multis, utrum is, qui monasterium ingressus est habitum sumendo novitii, si ante professionem emissam infra tempus probationis exire voluerit, licite possit absque apostasiae nota vel noxa, praesertim cum debita morum correctione ad saeculum remeare. Licet autem super hoc senserint diversi diversa, nos tamen credimus distinguendum, utrum is, qui convertitur, proposuerit absolute vitam mutare, ut sub habitu regulari omnipotenti Deo de cetero famuletur, an conditionaliter experiri observantiam regularem, ut ita demum, si infra annum sibi placuerit, profiteatur ordinis disciplinam, aut, si forte non placuerit, moribus emendatus ad statum revertatur pristinum. In primo casu debet, ut regulariter vivat, ad laxiorem saltem regulam pertransire. In secundo potest ad saeculum, non tamen, ut vivat saeculariter, remeare. Ut ergo quae sit eius intentio plenius agnoscatur, propositum suum in principio protestetur. Hac ergo distinctione diligenti meditatione pensata, circa dilectum filium Traiectensem decanum inquiratis sollicite quae videritis inquirenda, et statuatis canonice quae statuenda noveritis, [facientes etc. Dat. Lat. Id. Mai. 1204.]

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: One who, within the year of probation and without making profession, returns to the world can lawfully be promoted to orders and benefices.

The same.

You petitioned—(And below: [cf. c. 14, On Jews, V. 6.]) Thirdly, you asked whether those who, constituted in their younger years, received the habit of novices and afterward returned to the world within a year without making profession, and were promoted to sacred orders by their bishops [who knew] this, ought to be sustained in ministering in those churches in which they were instituted by the same bishops. We therefore answer your fraternity in this manner: on account of this they are not to be removed from those churches, but can freely minister in them, unless perhaps prudence supplied age in them so that [at least] they ought to pass to a more lax rule, because by assuming the religious habit without a declaration they are presumed to have proposed to change their life. [Given at the Lateran, on the seventh day before the Ides of June, in the twentieth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

> Qui, infra annum probationis non facta professione, redit ad saeculum, licite potest ad ordines et beneficia promoveri.
>
> Idem.
>
> Postulasti (Et infra: [cf. c. 14. de Iud. V. 6.]) Tertio quaesivisti, utrum illi, qui in annis minoribus constituti novitiorum habitum susceperunt, et infra annum postmodum non facta professione ad saeculum sunt reversi, et [ab] episcopis suis hoc scientibus ad sacros ordines sunt promoti, sustineri debeant in illis ecclesiis ministrare, in quibus sunt ab eisdem episcopis instituti. Nos ergo fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod propter hoc non sunt ab ecclesiis ipsis amovendi, sed in eis possunt libere ministrare, nisi prudentia forte suppleverit in illis aetatem, ut [saltem] transire debeant ad regulam laxiorem, quia quum ipsi absque protestatione religionis habitum assumendo vitam praesumantur proposuisse mutare. [Dat. Lat. VII. Id. Iun. Pont. nost. Ao. XX. 1212.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: One who wears the monastic habit for more than a year in a monastery where the habits are not distinct is deemed professed.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Venice.

It was proposed before us on your part that there are certain persons in the diocese of Venice who, although they have worn the monastic habit for many years, have nevertheless not made monastic profession. Hence, when they are reproved by you or others because they have private property and otherwise live irregularly, they do not blush to say that they are not bound to the lack of private property, to continence, and to other regular observances, since the habit does not make a monk, but rather regular profession. Wherefore you petitioned that apostolic remedy be furnished concerning these matters, since the disordered life of transgressors of this kind brings not only peril to them but also scandal to the minds of others. And therefore we command your fraternity that, after prior admonition, you compel by ecclesiastical censure, appeal being removed, any persons subject to you by diocesan law who do not fear to enter the earth by two paths in the aforesaid manner, after they have worn the monastic habit for a year, also to profess and observe the rule according to the form of the order.

> Qui ultra annum portat habitum monachalem in monasterio, ubi sunt habitus indistincti, censetur professus.
>
> Honorius III. Venetensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex parte tua fuit propositum coram nobis, quod nonnulli sunt in dioecesi Venetensi, qui, licet pluribus annis gestaverint habitum monachalem, professionem tamen monasticam non fecerunt. Unde, quum super eo, quod habent proprium et alias irregulariter vivunt, a te vel ab aliis arguuntur, non erubescunt dicere, se ad carentiam proprii, et ad continentiam, ac alias regulares observantias non teneri, quum habitus non faciat monachum, sed professio potius regularis. +Quare super his apostolicum postulasti remedium exhiberi, quum inordinata vita praevaricatorum huiusmodi non solum eis periculum, sed etiam scandalum inferat mentibus aliorum. Ideoque fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus quoslibet tibi lege dioecesana subiectos, qui praedicto modo terram duabus viis ingredi non verentur, ut, postquam per annum gestaverint habitum monachalem, regulam quoque secundum formam ordinis profiteantur et servent, monitione praemissa, ecclesiastica censura appellatione remota compellas.

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: Within the year of probation a person freely returns to the world unless he made profession tacitly or expressly, or it appears that he wished to change his life. This first. Secondly, it says that, so that novices may be distinguished from the professed, the habit of the professed ought to be blessed in places where the habit is not distinct.

Gregory IX.

We establish that novices placed on probation can freely return to their former state within a year before receiving the religious habit that is customarily given to those professing, or before profession has been emitted, unless it clearly appears that such persons wished absolutely to change their life and serve the Lord perpetually in religion, since anyone can renounce what is known to have been introduced for himself. We nevertheless establish, for the utter removal of all ambiguity, that, since in certain places the religious habit of novices is not distinguished from the habit of the professed, at the time of profession the garments that are granted to those professing are to be blessed, so that the habit of novices may be distinguished from the habit of the professed.

Infra probationis annum libere quis redit ad saeculum, nisi professionem fecerit tacite vel expresse, vel appareat, eum vitam mutare voluisse. Hoc primo. Secundo dicit, quod ad hoc, ut dignoscantur novitii a professis, debet habitus professorum benedici in locis, ubi habitus non est distinctus.

Gregorius IX.

Statuimus, novitios in probatione positos ante susceptum religionis habitum, qui dari profitentibus consuevit, vel ante professionem emissam, ad priorem statum redire posse libere infra annum, nisi evidenter appareat, quod tales absolute voluerint vitam mutare et in religione perpetuo Domino deservire, quum quilibet renunciare valeat ei, quod pro se noscitur introductum. Nihilominus statuentes ad omnem ambiguitatem penitus amovendam, quod, quum in quibusdam locis religionis novitiorum habitus non distinguatur ab habitu professorum, professionis tempore benedicantur vestes, quae profitentibus conceduntur, ut novitiorum habitus a professorum habitu discernatur.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: Fugitive religious are to be sought annually and compelled to return to the monastery.

The same.

Lest religious, having occasion to wander, incur detriment to their own salvation and their blood be required from the hands of the prelates, we establish that those presiding over chapters to be celebrated according to the statute of the general council, or fathers, abbots, or priors, solicitously seek their fugitives and those expelled from their order annually. If they can be received in their monasteries according to regular order, their abbots or priors, after prior admonition, are to be compelled through ecclesiastical censure to receive them, saving the discipline of the order. But if regular order does not permit this, let them provide by our authority that the necessities of life be ministered to such persons for doing penance there, at the same monasteries in suitable places if it can be done without grave scandal, otherwise in other religious houses of the same order. But if they find fugitives or expelled persons of this kind disobedient, let them excommunicate them and cause them to be publicly announced as excommunicated by the prelates of the churches until they humbly return to their mandate.

> Religiosi fugitivi annuatim sunt requirendi, et cogendi, ut ad monasterium revertantur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ne religiosi, vagandi occasionem habentes, salutis propriae detrimentum incurrant, et sanguis eorum de praelatorum manibus requiratur : statuimus, ut praesidentes capitulis celebrandis secundum statutum concilii generalis, seu patres, abbates seu priores fugitivos suos et eiectos de ordine suo requirant sollicite annuatim. Qui si in monasteriis suis recipi possunt secundum ordinem regularem, abbates seu priores eorum monitione praevia per censuram ecclesiasticam compellantur ad receptionem ipsorum, salva ordinis disciplina. Quod si hoc regularis ordo non patitur, auctoritate nostra provideant, ut apud eadem monasteria in locis competentibus, si absque gravi scandalo fieri poterit, alioquin in aliis religiosis domibus eiusdem ordinis ad agendam ibi poenitentiam talibus vitae necessaria ministrentur. Si vero huiusmodi fugitivos vel eiectos inobedientes invenerint, eos excommunicent, et tamdiu faciant ab ecclesiarum praelatis excommunicatos publice nunciari, donec ad mandatum ipsorum humiliter revertantur.

Title XXXII: On the Conversion of Spouses

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If a husband makes profession with his wife's license, and the wife herself is suspect and neither vows continence nor enters religion, the bishop will restore the husband to the wife. This it says according to the letter.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Uber.

Moreover, as to whether a married layman who, in the presence of priests and monks but without the knowledge of the bishop, entered a monastery with the license and permission of his wife and perhaps made profession, while his wife remained in secular habit and neither passed to religion nor vowed perpetual continence, can be recalled by his bishop to his wife's bed, or she is to be compelled to observe continence, we say that, unless the wife has passed to religion or promised to preserve chastity perpetually, the man can and ought to be recalled [to her] by the bishop from the monastery, because, since they have been made one flesh, one part ought not to remain in the world and the other to pass to religion and chastity. Nevertheless, the wife is to be admonished and more earnestly exhorted to pass to religion and promise to preserve chastity.

> DE CONVERSIONE CONIUGATORUM.
>
> Si vir de uxoris licentia profitetur, et uxor ipsa suspecta nec continentiam vovet, nec religionem ingreditur, episcopus uxori virum restituet. H. d. iuxta literam.
>
> Alexander III. Ubergensi Episcopo.

Praeterea, utrum laicus uxoratus, qui, praesentibus sacerdotibus et monachis, ignorante episcopo, de licentia et permissione uxoris suae monasterium est ingressus, et forte professionem fecit, uxore in saeculari habitu remanente, nec transeunte ad religionem, aut perpetuam continentiam vovente, ab episcopo suo possit ad torum revocari uxoris, an illa compellenda sit continentiam observare, dicimus, quod, nisi uxor ad religionem transierit, aut perpetuo castitatem servare promiserit, vir [ad eam] potest et debet ab episcopo de monasterio revocari, quia, quum una caro sint effecti, non debet una pars in saeculo manere, et altera ad religionem et castitatem transire. Verumtamen uxor commonenda est, et propensius exhortanda, ut ad religionem transeat et castitatem servare promittat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Before a marriage is consummated, either spouse can enter religion even against the will of the other; but the one remaining in the world can pass to second vows.

The same, to the Archbishop of Salerno.

But after [that] lawful consent in words of the present, it is lawful for either, even with the other resisting, to choose a monastery, just as also certain saints were called from nuptials, provided carnal commingling did not intervene between them; and it is lawful for the other remaining, if after being admonished that person is unwilling to preserve continence, to pass to second vows, because, since they had not been made one flesh together, one can sufficiently pass to God and the other remain in the world.

Ante matrimonium consummatum potest alter coniugum, etiam altero invito, religionem ingredi; sed remanens in saeculo potest ad secunda vota transire.

Idem Salernitano Archiepiscopo.

Verum post [illum] consensum legitimum de praesenti licitum est alteri, altero etiam repugnante eligere monasterium, sicut etiam sancti quidam de nuptiis vocati fuerunt, dummodo carnalis commixtio non intervenerit inter eos, et alteri remanenti, si commonitus continentiam servare noluerit, licitum est ad secunda vota transire, quia, quum non fuissent una caro simul effecti, satis potest unus ad Deum transire, et alter in saeculo remanere.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who made profession against his wife's will and afterward is restored to her is not compelled, after the wife dies, to return to the monastery; nevertheless, he ought not contract marriage.

The same, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

A certain man entered a monastery against his wife's will and, when she sought him back, he was compelled to return to her. After she died, you ask whether he is compelled to return to the monastery or can take another as wife. We answer your consultation in this manner: the vow did not hold, whence he is not bound by reason of the vow to return to the monastery; but he will not be able to take a wife thereafter. For he promised not to exact the debt, which was in his power, and therefore as to this the vow held. But not to render it was not in his power but in the woman's. Hence the Apostle: “The husband does not have power over his own body, but the woman.”

Qui invita uxore professionem fecit, et ei postea restituitur, non compellitur mortua uxore ad monasterium redire; matrimonium tamen contrahere non debet.

Idem Pisano Archiepiscopo.

Quidam intravit monasterium invita uxore, qua ipsum repetente coactus est ad eam redire. Ea mortua quaeris, an ipse cogatur reverti ad monasterium, an aliam possit ducere in uxorem. Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod votum non tenuit, unde ratione voti ad monasterium non tenetur redire; ulterius vero non poterit uxorem accipere. Promisit enim se non exigere debitum, quod in eius potestate erat, et ideo quoad hoc votum tenuit. Non reddere autem non erat in eius, sed mulieris potestate. Unde Apostolus : " Vir non habet potestatem sui corporis, sed mulier. "

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A married man cannot enter religion unless his wife also enters, or unless she is not suspect and promises continence. This it says, and it is one of the principal chapters of the title.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Since you are endowed with knowledge of letters, you cannot nor ought to be ignorant that it is contrary to the constitution of the holy Fathers that a man, while his wife remains in the world, or a wife, while her husband does not assume the religious habit, ought to pass to religion, because, since husband and wife are one flesh, as the Apostle teaches, one cannot be converted to God and the other remain in the world. Hence it is that by apostolic authority we prohibit you from permitting a husband or wife in your bishopric to pass unless each has migrated to religion; but, if they wish to be converted to God, let each pass to the fruit of a better life. But if the wife is so old and sterile that she can be in the world without suspicion, you will be able to dissemble so that, while she remains in the world and promises chastity, her husband may pass to religion.

Uxoratus religionem intrare non potest, nisi etiam uxor ingrediatur, vel nisi suspecta non sit, et continentiam promittat. H. d. et est unum cap. de principalioribus tit.

Idem Exonensi Episcopo.

Quum sis praeditus scientia literarum, ignorare non potes, nec debes, sanctorum Patrum constitutioni esse contrarium, ut vir, uxore sua in saeculo remanente, aut uxor, viro eius non assumente religionis habitum, debeat ad religionem transire, +quia, quum vir et uxor una caro sint, sicut docet Apostolus, non potest unus ad Deum converti, et alter in saeculo remanere. Inde est, quod auctoritate apostolica tibi prohibemus, ne in episcopatu tuo virum vel uxorem, nisi uterque ad religionem migraverit, transire permittas, sed, si voluerint ad Deum converti, uterque ad frugem melioris vitae transeat. Verum si ita uxor senex est et sterilis, quod sine suspicione possit esse in saeculo, dissimulare poteris, ut, ea in saeculo remanente et castitatem promittente, ad religionem transeat vir eiusdem.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A married person is not to be ordained to sacred orders unless his wife promises continence.

The same, to the Archbishops of Esztergom and Cologne.

A married man desiring to be converted to a monastery is prohibited from being received unless his wife [likewise] is converted. For while one body of the two has been made by the union of marriage, it is unfitting for one part to be converted and the other to remain in the world; nor will the conversion of that man be received before God if the prostitution of the conjugal covenant follows from it. Since, therefore, the assembly of clerics far excels the assembly of monks, such that sometimes a good monk scarcely makes a good cleric, no married person is to be promoted to sacred orders unless he has been released by his wife professing continence, so that thereafter a spiritual marriage may be made from carnal union. [Indeed, etc.; cf. the chapter immediately following.]

> Coniugatus non est ordinandus ad sacros ordines, nisi uxor continentiam promittat.
>
> Idem Strigoniensi et Colonensi Archiepiscopis.
>
> Coniugatus +ad monasterium converti desiderans, prohibetur suscipi, nisi uxor eius [similiter] convertatur. Nam, dum unum utrorumque corpus coniugii copulatione sit factum, incongruum est, partem converti, et partem in saeculo remanere; nec recipietur apud Deum illius viri conversio, cuius sequitur coniugalis foederis prostitutio. Quum igitur coetus clericorum longe praeemineat coetui monachorum, ita, ut aliquando bonus monachus vix bonum clericum faciat, Nullus coniugatorum est ad sacros ordines promovendus, nisi ab uxore continentiam profitente fuerit absolutus, ut fiat deinceps de carnali copula spirituale coniugium. [Sane etc. cf. c. prox. seq.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A married man cannot be promoted as bishop unless his wife professes religion.

The same, to the same.

Indeed, if married men have consented to be ordained, the wife's will must first be sought also, so that, the chamber of their dwelling having been separated and religion promised, they may be ordained after they have been converted together. But if in any ecclesiastical grades it must be providently and knowingly attended to that nothing in the house of God be disordered and nothing out of proper order, much more must labor be expended that no error be made in the promotion of him who is placed over all grades. Hence it is that by apostolic authority we prohibit your fraternity from presuming to ordain a married man as bishop unless his wife, having first professed continence, places the sacred veil upon herself and assumes religious clothing. For we do not wish the promotion of the man to be able to become an occasion of perdition for the wife left in the world.

> Uxoratus in episcopum promoveri non potest, nisi uxor religionem profiteatur.
>
> Idem eisdem.
>
> Sane, si coniugati consenserint ordinari, uxoris etiam voluntas prius requirenda est, +ut sequestrato mansionis cubiculo religione promissa, postquam pariter conversi fuerint ordinentur. Quodsi in quibuslibet ecclesiasticis gradibus providenter scienterque curandum est, ut in domo Dei nil sit inordinatum, nihilque praeposterum, multo magis laborandum est, ut in eius promotione, qui super omnes gradus continetur, non erretur. Inde est, quod Fraternitati vestrae auctoritate apostolica prohibemus, ne uxoratum praesumatis in episcopum ordinare, nisi uxor prius professa continentiam sacrum sibi velamen imponat, et religiosam vestem assumat. Nolumus enim, ut viri promotio uxori relictae in saeculo fieri perditionis possit occasio.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A spouse by present consent, not carnally known, who says that she wishes to enter religion, is compelled within a certain time to profess or adhere to her husband.

The same, to the Bishop of Brescia.

From the public instrument that was presented to us, and from the tenor of your letters, it became known to us that, when the venerable brother [our O.], the Bishop of Verona, by our mandate undertook the matrimonial cause disputed between the man A. and the woman M. to be terminated by a canonical conclusion, after hearing the reasons and allegations of each party, he approved the marriage between them by judicial sentence and commanded the same woman to return to her husband and exhibit conjugal affection to him. When she refused, by our mandate, as we have learned, she was bound by the bond of excommunication. But because the aforesaid woman, although she was espoused by the aforesaid man, nevertheless still, as she asserts, has not been known by him, by apostolic writings directing your fraternity, we command that, if the aforesaid man has not carnally known the woman herself and the same woman, as is proposed to us on your part, wishes to pass to religion, after receiving from her sufficient security that within the space of two months she ought either to pass to religion or return to her husband, you absolve her from the sentence by which she is bound, contradiction and appeal ceasing, in such a way that, if she passes to religion, each restores to the other what each is known to have received from the other, and the man himself, when she assumes the religious habit, has license to pass to other vows. Indeed, what the Lord says in the Gospel—that it is not lawful for a man to dismiss his wife except on account of fornication—is to be understood, according to the interpretation of sacred scripture, of those whose marriage is consummated by carnal union, without which marriage cannot be consummated; and therefore, if the aforesaid woman was not known by her husband, it is lawful [for her] to pass to religion.

> Sponsa de praesenti, non cognita, quae dicit, se velle religionem ingredi, compellitur infra certum tempus profiteri, vel adhaerere marito.
>
> Idem Brixiensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex publico instrumento, quod nobis est praesentatum, et ex tuarum literarum tenore nobis innotuit, quod, quum venerabilis frater [noster O.] Veronensis episcopus de mandato nostro causam matrimonii, quae inter A. virum et M. mulierem vertebatur, suscepisset fine canonico terminandam, auditis utriusque partis rationibus et allegationibus, inter eos iudiciali sententia matrimonium approbavit, et eidem mulieri praecepit, ut ad virum suum rediens exhiberet eidem coniugalem affectum. Quod quum renueret, de mandato nostro, sicut accepimus, fuit vinculo excommunicationis adstricta. Ceterum, quia praefata mulier, licet a praefato viro desponsata fuerit, adhuc tamen, sicut asserit, ab ipso est incognita, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si praedictus vir mulierem ipsam carnaliter non cognoverit, et eadem mulier, sicut ex parte tua nobis proponitur, ad religionem transire voluerit, recepta ab ea sufficienti cautione, quod vel ad religionem transire, vel ad virum suum redire infra duorum mensium spatium debeat, ipsam contradictione et appellatione cessante a sententia, qua tenetur, absolvas ita, quod, si ad religionem transierit, uterque restituat alteri quod ab eo noscitur recepisse, +et vir ipse, ea religionis habitum assumente, ad alia vota licentiam habeat transeundi. Sane, quod Dominus in evangelio dicit, non licere viro, nisi ob causam fornicationis uxorem suam dimittere, intelligendum est secundum interpretationem sacri eloquii de his, quorum matrimonium carnali copula est consummatum, sine qua matrimonium consummari non potest, et ideo, si praedicta mulier non fuit a viro suo cognita, licitum est [sibi] ad religionem transire.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: The summary is as above in this title, chapter "Since you are."

The same, to G., Prior, and the Brothers of Saint John.

But let no married man be received among you in any way without the license of his own wife. If she is [of] such unimpaired reputation and standing that her husband has no suspicion that she wishes to migrate to second vows or that she is likely to live with less continence, if she is such, as aforesaid, after her husband has been received into your fellowship, she, having publicly professed continence in the sight of the church, can remain in her own house with her children and household. But if she is such a person as is not free from suspicion, after celebrating the vow of continence, let her withdraw herself from association with secular persons and dwell perpetually in a religious place where she may serve God. Let none of you dare to tonsure any woman or presume to take her to dwell with him.

> Summa ut supra eod. cap. Quum sis.
>
> Idem G. Priori et Fratibus sancti Ioannis.
>
> Uxoratus autem sine licentia propriae uxoris inter vos nullatenus recipiatur, quae [si] integrae famae et opinionis ita exsistat, quod nulla marito suspicio habeatur, eam ad secunda vota velle migrare, vel quod minus continenter debeat vivere; quae si, ut praedictum est, talis exstiterit, marito eius in consortio vestro recepto, ipsa publice in conspectu ecclesiae continentiam professa, in domo propria cum filiis suis et familia poterit permanere. Si autem talis fuerit, quae suspicione non careat, voto continentiae celebrato a saecularium hominum se conversatione removeat, et in loco religioso, ubi Deo serviat, perpetuo commoretur. Nullus vestrum mulierem aliquam audeat tonsurare vel eam ad habitandum secum praesumat assumere.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A married man who makes profession with his wife consenting, although he never entered the monastery, if after the spouse dies he contracts with another, the marriage is not valid and he is compelled to enter the monastery.

Urban III, to the Prior of Holy Cross.

It came to our hearing on the part of our beloved son, the abbot of Saint Peter of Romandine, that, when D. de Cel., placed in sickness, with his wife consenting, vowed a vow of chastity and received the monastic habit, afterward, freed from the trouble of his sickness, he both retained his aforesaid wife and, after she died, rashly joined another to himself. But because, although the aforesaid D. could not by law have proceeded to religion while his wife remained in the world, nevertheless, after she was removed from their midst, he could not violate the vow made without peril to his salvation, we command that, if what is asserted is true, you compel the aforesaid D. through excommunication to dismiss the woman and return to his monastery, thereafter to serve the Lord under a regular habit. Given at Verona.

> Coniugatus, faciens professionem uxore consentiente, licet nunquam intravit monasterium, si mortua coniuge cum alia contrahat, non valet matrimonium, et monasterium intrare compellitur.
>
> Urbanus III. Priori sanctae Crucis.
>
> Ex parte dilecti filii nostri abbatis sancti Petri de Romandine ad audientiam nostram pervenit, quod, quum D. de Cel., in infirmitate positus, consentiente uxore ipsius votum vovens castitatis, monachalem habitum suscepisset, postmodum ab infirmitatis ipsius liberatus molestia, et praedictam suam uxorem retinuit, et aliam ea defuncta sibi temere copulavit. Quia vero, licet praedictus D. uxore sua remanente in saeculo de iure ad religionem nequiverit proficisci, ea tamen sublata de medio votum quidem factum sine salutis suae periculo non potuit violare, mandamus, quatenus, si verum est quod asseritur, praedictum D. per excommunicationem compellas, ut muliere dimissa ad suum monasterium revertatur, sub regulari habitu de cetero Domino serviturus. Dat. Veronae.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One professed in religion with his wife knowing and dissembling cannot return to the world after she dies. This it says according to the truer and singular understanding in the matter.

Clement III.

G., priest of Saint Columba, consulted us as to whether a man, a merchant, renouncing trade and his wife for the sake of God, passing to religion and remaining in it for a year and more, his wife having been removed from the present life after he passed to the regular house, can resume the secular habit that he cast aside and take another as wife, or whether it is lawful for him to retain one taken. We answer a consultation of this kind in this manner: the aforesaid man can neither cast off the habit that he assumed nor join any woman to himself in marriage. But if he has contracted, we decree that marriage to be dissolved.

> Professus religionem uxore sciente et dissimulante, ea mortua ad saeculum redire non potest. H. d. secundum intellectum veriorem et singularem in materia.
>
> Clemens III.
>
> Consuluit nos G. sacerdos de sancta Columba, utrum vir mercator, negotiationi et uxori propter Deum renuncians, ad religionem transiens, et in ea per annum et amplius moram faciens, uxore sua, postquam ad domum transierat regularem, de praesenti vita sublata, saecularem habitum resumere valeat, quem dimisit, et aliam ducere in uxorem, vel si ductam ei liceat retinere. Consultationi huiusmodi taliter respondemus, quod praedictus vir nec habitum potest abiicere, quem assumpsit, nec aliquam sibi matrimonio copulare. Quodsi contraxerit, matrimonium ipsum decernimus dirimendum.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A spouse who vowed continence is bound to render the debt to the other spouse, although the latter consented to the vow for a time.

Celestine III.

Our dearest son in Christ, R., illustrious King of the Swabians, humbly announced to our apostolate by letter and messenger that, when he was an adolescent and his beloved wife a young woman, binding themselves by mutual faith with a vow of contracting lawful marriage, they strengthened their mutual consent, with the will of their parents acceding, by the gift of earnest money. But afterward, when N., his father of renowned memory, was killed by enemies, and he was pressed on all sides through the adversity of wars and, after an encounter with his enemies, had been defeated and put to flight, because he feared that the betrothed woman herself might be violently seized by his enemies, and that another like her whom he could join to himself in marriage could not be found in the kingdom, by the counsel of his own parents and those of the same betrothed woman it was done that she received the monastic habit in a convent of nuns without the purpose of retaining it perpetually, and remained there for some years, lest she suffer any injury from the enemies. After peace had been restored and triumph obtained over his enemies, he solemnly took her as wife with great exultation and had sons by her; one of them, by the common consent and election of the princes of Swabia, he instituted his successor in the kingdom. But as time went on, the aforesaid wife, struck by grave sickness, when she believed she was about to depart from this life, induced by fear of death, vowed continence; and when the king himself did not wish to sadden her, he consented for a time. But now he proposes that he cannot remain continent and wishes to return to his wife's bed, which he judges can lawfully be done. And to restrain the detractions and reproaches of his rivals, he petitioned us that mandate be given to him that by our authority he treat his wife with marital affection, notwithstanding the vow of continence incautiously emitted by her and approved for a time by the same king.

But because we could not elicit the truth fully concerning these matters, we have thought that knowledge of them and a canonical decision should be committed to your fraternity, commanding by apostolic writings that you inquire more diligently into the truth concerning these matters; and, if it is established to you that the aforesaid woman was first received among the nuns from fear of violence and seizure and declared that she had the purpose of marrying while she remained among them—especially since afterward she publicly married the king in the face of the church and, cohabiting up to these times, he had sons by her—you are to declare that she is not bound to the aforesaid monastery. For that deed cannot dissolve a marriage contracted, even if perhaps it could impede a marriage to be contracted. But concerning the other matter, we command your fraternity that, if you find that the wife of the King of the Swabians, weighed down by grave sickness, vowed continence and her husband furnished consent for a time, especially if the same husband did not equally vow perpetual continence, you cause her to cohabit with her husband and each to treat the other with marital affection.

> Coniux, quae continentiam vovit, tenetur reddere debitum coniugi, licet ad tempus voto consenserit.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Carissimus +in Christo filius noster, R. illustris rex Suevorum, apostolatui nostro literis et nuncio humiliter nunciavit, quod, quum esset adolescens, et dilecta uxor eius iuvencula mutua fide voto contrahendi legitimi matrimonii se adstringentes, invicem suum consensum, accedente voluntate parentum, arrarum donatione roboraverunt. Postmodum vero, clarae memoriae N. patre suo ab inimicis occiso, quum per bellorum adversitatem undique premeretur, et habito cum hostibus suis congressu victus fugatusque fuisset, quia timebat, ne ipsa sponsa ab inimicis suis per violentiam raperetur, et alia similis ei non inveniretur in regno, quam sibi posset matrimonialiter copulare, de suorum et eiusdem sponsae parentum consilio factum est, quod in conventu sanctimonialium habitum monasticum sine proposito perpetualiter suscepit retinendi, et ibidem per aliquot annos moram fecit, ne quid ab inimicis iniuriae pateretur, quam quum, pace reddita et obtento ab inimicis triumpho, solenniter duxisset cum grandi exsultatione uxorem, et ab ea filios suscepisset, unum eorum de communi consensu et electione principum Sueviae sibi in regnum instituit successorem. Procedente vero tempore praedicta uxor, gravi infirmitate correpta, quum se de hac vita crederet recessuram, timore mortis inducta continentiam vovit, quumque rex ipse nollet eam contristare, concessit ad tempus; nunc autem se continere non posse proponit, et, quod licite posse fieri arbitratur, ad torum uxoris suae redire cupit. Et ad reprimendas aemulorum suorum detractationes et obloquia petiit a nobis sibi dari in mandatis, ut uxorem suam auctoritate nostra maritali affectione pertractet, non obstante voto continentiae incaute ab ipsa emisso, et ab eodem rege ad tempus approbato. Verum, quia super his ad plenum nos non potuimus elicere veritatem, fraternitati vestrae cognitionem horum et decisionem canonicam duximus committendam, per apostolica scripta mandantes, ut super his inquiratis diligentius veritatem, et, si vobis constiterit, quod praedicta mulier primo fuit inter moniales recepta timore violentiae et rapinae, et propositum se habuisse nubendi profitebatur, quum inter eas moram faceret, praesertim quum postmodum in facie ecclesiae publice regi nupserit, et usque ad haec tempora cohabitando filios ex ea suscepit, eam denuncietis praefato monasterio non teneri. Non enim factum illud matrimonii potest contractum dirimere, etsi forte posset matrimonium contrahendum impedire. De alio vero Fraternitati vestrae mandamus, quatenus, si inveneritis, uxorem regis Sueviae gravi infirmitate depressam continentiam vovisse, et virum eius ad tempus praebuisse consensum, maxime si non idem vir peraeque continentiam vovit perpetuam, eandem viro cohabitare faciatis, et utrumque invicem maritali affectione tractare.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If one spouse, while the other is ignorant, professes religion and on account of this is led out of the monastery, after the other dies that spouse is not compelled to return to the monastery.

The same.

It pleases us, and we commend your prudence because in doubtful causes you seek the counsel of the Apostolic See. For although you are endowed with knowledge of letters, you devoutly have recourse to your mother, the Roman church, so that, after receiving a fitting response concerning that of which you doubt, you may clearly recognize what form you ought to observe in similar matters. Through our beloved [moreover] son G., Dean of Catalonia, your solicitude consulted our apostolate whether a woman who, believing her husband dead, assumed the religious habit and, when he returned, was led out of the monastery, is to be compelled after the death of the man to regular observance. Concerning this we answer your discretion thus: although her vow did not hold in every respect, nevertheless it was obligatory to the extent that she could obligate herself. For by entering the monastery she promised that she would not exact the carnal debt, which was in her power; but to return to the world was not in her power, but in the power of her husband. And therefore, as much as pertained to her, the vow held, which did not cease to hold after the death of her husband, since it is known to have reached the case from which it could have an efficacious beginning. Therefore we say it is more prudent and more fitting for her salvation, imitating the footsteps of our predecessor Pope Alexander of happy memory, that, after abandoning the vanities of the world, she return to the monastery where with good intention she made profession and received the religious habit. But if she cannot be induced to this, we believe she should not be compelled against her will.

> Si alter coniugum altero ignorante religionem profitetur, et propter hoc de monasterio educitur, illo mortuo ad monasterium redire non cogitur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Placet nobis, +et tuam prudentiam commendamus quod in causis dubiis sedis apostolicae consilium requiris. Licet enim praeditus sis scientia literarum, ad matrem tuam ecclesiam Romanam idcirco devote recurris, ut, habita super quo dubitas responsione condigna, quam in similibus formam servare debeas evidenter agnoscas. Per dilectum [autem] filium G. decanum Catalanensem apostolatum nostrum Solicitudo tua consuluit, utrum mulier, quae, credens mortuum maritum, habitum religionis assumpsit, et eo reverso de monasterio educta fuit, post obitum viri sit ad regularem observantiam compellenda. Super quo discretioni tuae sic respondemus, quod, licet votum eius usquequaque non tenuerit, eatenus tamen fuit obligatorium, quatenus se poterat obligare. Promisit enim intrando monasterium se non exacturam carnis debitum, quod erat in potestate ipsius, redire vero ad saeculum, in eius potestate non erat, sed in potestate mariti. Et ideo, quantum ad ipsam, tenuit votum, quod post viri obitum tenere non desiit, quum ad eum casum, a quo poterat efficax habere principium, pervenisse noscatur. Consultius itaque dicimus et ei congruentius ad salutem, praedecessoris nostri felicis memoriae Alexandri Papae vestigia imitantes, ut vanitatibus saeculi derelictis ad monasterium redeat, ubi bona ducta intentione professionem fecit et habitum religionis accepit. Si vero ad hoc induci non poterit, ipsam invitam credimus non cogendam.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: The summary is as above in this title, chapter IV, "Since you are."

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

To the Apostolic See—(And below: [cf. c. 16, On Regulars, III. 31.]) But since husband and wife have been made one flesh through conjugal union, and one part cannot be converted to the Lord while the other remains in the world, assuredly neither spouse is to be received into regular observance unless the remaining one promises perpetual continence. But that person also ought to change his or her manner of life, unless perhaps of such an age as to be able to remain in the world without suspicion of incontinence. [Given at the Lateran, on the ninth day before the Kalends of December. 1198.]

> Summa ut supra eod. cap. IV. Quum sis.
>
> Innocentius III. Pisano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad apostolicam sedem (Et infra: [cf. c. 16. de regul. III. 31.]) Quum autem vir et uxor una caro sint per copulam coniugalem effecti, nec una pars converti possit ad Dominum, et altera in saeculo remanere, profecto non est alter coniugum recipiendus ad observantiam regularem, nisi reliquus perpetuam continentiam repromittat. Sed et vitam debet mutare, nisi forte sit eius aetatis, ut sine suspicione incontinentiae valeat in saeculo remanere. [Dat. Lat. IX. Kal. Dec. 1198.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Betrothal by present consent is dissolved through religious profession, but not through a purpose of preserving chastity in the world.

The same, to the Archbishop of Lyon.

It was intimated to our ears on your part that, when a certain woman of your diocese had assumed the veil of widowhood before two abbots, with a solemn blessing accompanied by celebration of mass and a litany, as was proper, afterward a certain nobleman proposed that he had previously espoused the woman herself through intermediaries by words of the present, earnest money also having been interposed. Hearing that the woman herself had assumed the veil, he sent to her that carnal union should follow the espousal made. But you, after the matter was brought to your hearing, took care to prohibit them from commingling carnally before discussion of the business. Afterward, when the woman herself was constituted in your presence, you asked whether she had consented to him and why she sought to be separated from him. But she, confessing that she had consented to him, said that she had heard that he was struck by leprosy and on account of this had abominated his embrace. But when afterward fuller faith had been made to you through suitable witnesses that before reception of the veil mutual consent by words of the present had intervened between them, you thought the Apostolic See should be consulted as to whether reception of the veil impeded the marriage between them.

We answer your inquiry in this manner: although it can seem, not without consideration, that from the time a marriage between lawful persons is contracted by words of the present, while they live it can in no case be dissolved so that one may migrate to second vows while the other remains alive—even if one of the faithful between whom there is a ratified marriage became a heretic and was unwilling to remain with the other without insult to the Creator—unless perhaps it were done otherwise by divine revelation, which surpasses every law, as it is read to have been done by certain saints; nevertheless, we, unwilling in this article suddenly to depart from the footsteps of our predecessors, who, when consulted, answered that before a marriage has been consummated by carnal union it is lawful for either spouse, even without consulting the other, to pass to religion in such a way that the other can from then on lawfully be joined to another, counsel you to observe this same thing in the aforesaid article, although the cause by which the aforesaid woman was induced to receive the veil is false, since without any such cause she could have done this same thing with a view to religion. Moreover, although the aforesaid woman appears in receiving the veil to have assumed the religious habit, nevertheless, if she wishes to remain in her own house as though intending to preserve chastity in the world, the marriage already contracted is nonetheless to be consummated, unless she bound herself by vow to regular observance; in that case she can be compelled to leave the world and execute the religious purpose. [Given on the second day before the Ides of January. 1206.]

> Per religionis professionem, non per propositum castitatis servandae in saeculo, dissolvuntur sponsalia de praesenti.
>
> Idem Lugdunensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ex parte tua nostris est auribus intimatum, quod, quum quaedam mulier dioecesana tua velum viduitatis coram duobus abbatibus assumpsisset, benedictione solenni cum celebratione missae ac litania, sicut debuit, accedente, postmodum quidam nobilis proponebat, se prius mulierem ipsam mediantibus internunciis per verba de praesenti, arrha etiam interposita desponsasse. +Audito, quod mulier ipsa velum assumpserat, misit ad eam, ut desponsationem factam carnalis copula sequeretur. Tu vero, postquam fuit ad tuam audientiam res perlata, inhibere curasti, ne ante discussionem negotii se carnaliter commiscerent. Postmodum autem a muliere ipsa in tua praesentia constituta quaesivisti, utrum consensisset in illum, et quare ab illa quaereret separari. At illa, se in illum consensisse confessa, dixit, quod audierat, eum esse lepra percussum, et ob hoc eius fuerat abominata complexus. +Quum autem postmodum per testes idoneos tibi fuerat plenior facta fides, quod ante susceptionem veli mutuus intervenerat inter ipsos per verba de praesenti consensus, sedem duxisti apostolicam consulendam, utrum veli susceptio impediat matrimonium inter ipsos. Nos autem inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, etsi possit non inconsulte videri, quod, ex quo matrimonium inter legitimas personas per verba de praesenti contrahitur, illis viventibus in nullo casu possit dissolvi, ut vivente reliquo alter ad secunda vota transmigret, etiamsi unus fidelium, inter quos est ratum coniugium, fieret haereticus, et nollet permanere cum altero sine contumelia creatoris, nisi forte secus fieret ex revelatione divina, quae superat omnem legem, sicut a quibusdam sanctis legitur esse factum, nos tamen nolentes a praedecessorum nostrorum vestigiis in hoc articulo subito declinare, qui respondere consulti, antequam matrimonium sit per carnalem copulam consummatum, licere alteri coniugum reliquo etiam inconsulto ad religionem transire, ita, quod reliquus ex tunc legitime poterit alteri copulari, hoc ipsum tibi consulimus observandum in articulo praenotato, quamvis falsa sit causa, per quam ad susceptionem veli praedicta mulier est inducta, quum sine qualibet tali causa id ipsum religionis obtentu facere potuisset. Porro, licet praedicta mulier videatur in veli susceptione religionis habitum assumpsisse, si tamen velit in domo propria remanere, quasi propositum castitatis in saeculo servatura, nihilominus consummandum est matrimonium iam contractum, nisi se voto adstrinxerit ad observantiam regularem, in quo casu compelli potest, ut relicto saeculo religionis propositum exsequatur. [*Dat. II. Id. Ian. * 1206.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A husband who has become a monk cannot be recalled by an adulterous wife.

The same, to the Bishop of Rudina.

H. Vitalis, the bearer of the present letters, constituted in our presence, showed us by his own confession that, when he was constituted in the order of acolyte, he took a certain girl named R. as wife in the face of the church. When he had known her carnally, a discord having arisen between him and the girl's friends, after diligent discussion was held before you, she was joined to a certain other man named V., and you ordained the aforesaid H. up to the grade of the priesthood and granted him a church. But when his conscience reproached him, he assumed the habit of the Cistercian order; at length [N.] he revealed all the aforesaid things to his abbot, who diligently admonished him to provide in this matter for the salvation of his soul. Therefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if the matter stands thus, you do not omit to compel the aforesaid woman, through ecclesiastical censure, the obstacle of appeal having been removed, to withdraw from the said V., to whom she is joined through adultery, and not to assail the aforesaid monk so as to prevent him from being able to fulfill his regular vow.

> Maritus, factus monachus, a coniuge adulterata revocari non potest.
>
> Idem Rudinensi Episcopo.
>
> Constitutus in praesentia nostra H. Vitalis, lator praesentium, sua nobis confessione monstravit, quod, quum esset in acolythatus ordine constitutus, quandam puellam R. nomine in facie ecclesiae duxit uxorem. Quam quum carnaliter cognovisset, orta discordia inter eum et amicos puellae, coram te habito diligenti tractatu ipsa fuit cuidam alii V. nomine copulata, et tu memoratum H. usque ad gradum sacerdotii ordinasti, et eidem ecclesiam concessisti. Quum autem eum sua conscientia remorderet, habitum ordinis Cisterciensis assumpsit; +tandem [N.] abbati suo omnia praedicta revelavit, qui eum commonuit diligenter, ut super hoc saluti animae suae provideret. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, praedictam mulierem, ut a dicto V. recedat, cui per adulterium est coniuncta, nec praedictum monachum impetat, quo minus regulare votum valeat adimplere, per censuram ecclesiasticam sublato appellationis obstaculo cogere non omittas.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A wife cannot reclaim a husband who entered religion with her permission if, after his entry, she did not observe continence, although she was induced by fraud to consent or to give permission.

The same, to the Bishop of Poitiers and the Abbot of Boribarden in the diocese of Poitiers.

L., our beloved son and the bearer of the present letters, coming to our presence, humbly intimated to us that, when once he had conceived a purpose of entering a monastery, in the presence of several priests, knights, and other men, he pressed his wife with entreaties to impart her assent to him upon this matter, having first entreated the same priests not to explain to the aforesaid woman that she too would have to abandon the world if she gave her husband permission to fly to a monastery. And when the woman in turn entreated him not to depart from her, he asserted that, unless he could obtain permission from her upon this matter, he would render himself useless not only to her but also to the whole world. At length she, overcome by the entreaties and tears both of him and of the many standing by, placed his head beneath the altar with her own hand; and he, having been tonsured there in her presence, entered the monastery and, when the time of probation had ended, solemnly made monastic profession. She, however, remaining in the world, admitted dishonorable lovers; wherefore the same L., fearing lest her incontinence be imputed to his continence, sought counsel from us as to whether he ought to persevere in the monastery. Therefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if it is thus, you freely permit the aforesaid L. to persevere without disturbance from anyone in the monastery that he entered. For although he appears to have offended not a little in this, that he craftily asserted that, unless the same woman consented to him, he would render himself useless both to her and to the whole world, and in that he entreated the priests not to explain to the aforesaid woman that she would have to leave the world if perhaps she gave her husband permission, nevertheless, since the same woman voluntarily placed her husband's head beneath the altar and afterward, as is asserted, did not observe continence, she is not to be heard in any way concerning his recall; since her claim, if perhaps she were to reclaim him, can be defeated by the exception of fornication committed, especially since, before she had fornicated, she did not consider that he ought to be reclaimed. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Nones of April, in the twelfth year. 1209.]

> Uxor non potest repetere maritum, de cuius licentia religionem intravit, si post ingressum non continuit, licet ad consentiendum seu ad dandam licentiam dolo fuit inducta.
>
> Idem Pictaviensi Episcopo et Abbati de Boribarden Pictaviensis dioecesis.
>
> Veniens ad praesentiam nostram dilectus filius L. lator praesentium nobis humiliter intimavit, quod, quum olim intrandi monasterium propositum concepisset, pluribus sacerdotibus, militibus et aliis viris praesentibus, apud uxorem suam precibus institit, ut super hoc suum impertiretur assensum, +eisdem presbyteris primitus exoratis, ne praefatae mulieri exponerent, quod et ipsam oporteret derelinquere saeculum, si viro suo daret licentiam ad monasterium convolandi. Quumque ipsum mulier, ne ab ea discederet, vice mutua precaretur, ipse asserens, quod, nisi ab ea posset super hoc obtinere licentiam, non solum ei se inutilem redderet, sed etiam toti mundo, Ipsa demum tam ipsius quam multorum adstantium precibus fletibusque devicta, caput eius altari supposuit manu sua; qui, ea praesente tonsuratus, ibidem monasterium adiit et finito probationis tempore professionem fecit solenniter monachalem. Illa vero, in saeculo remanens, inhonestos amatores admisit, +unde idem L. metuens, ne suae continentiae illius incontinentia imputetur, an in monasterio perseverare debeat, a nobis consilium postulavit. Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si ita est, praedictum L. in monasterio, quod intravit, absque inquietatione cuiusquam perseverare libere permittatis. Licet enim in hoc videatur non modicum deliquisse, quod captiose asseruit, quia, nisi sibi eadem mulier consentiret, tam sibi quam toti mundo se inutilem redderet, et quum presbyteros exoravit, ne praedictae mulieri exponerent, quod eandem relinquere saeculum oporteret, si forte licentiam daret viro; ex quo tamen eadem mulier caput viri altari sponte supposuit, et postmodum, sicut asseritur, non continuit, super revocatione ipsius non est aliquatenus audienda; quum ipsius intentio, si eundem forte repeteret, exceptione possit commissae fornicationis elidi, maxime quum, antequam fuerit fornicata, ipsum non duxerit repetendum. [Dat. Lat. III. Non. Apr. Ao. XII. 1209.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A wife can reclaim a husband who has made profession, notwithstanding permission to make profession extorted from her by fear.

The same.

I., a woman coming to our presence, lamentably proposed before us that, when V., her husband of the diocese of Ely, had lawfully joined her to himself in marriage, and, cohabiting with her for the space of nearly twenty years, had received offspring from her, at length the same husband, wishing to assume the monastic habit, humbly sought from her that she favor his pious purpose. She, because of the many blows and other burdens of molestations that the said husband inflicted upon her, and because he asserted that he would dismiss her, assented to his wishes. And when the same husband had assumed the habit of religion in the house of Vaudey of the Cistercian order, the woman herself remained there in a house of nuns, having assumed no religious habit there or emitted any vow of conversion; and the same nuns ministered the necessities of life to her in return for the labor of her hands. But in the course of time, when the same husband, returning to the world, had cast aside the habit of religion, the same woman insistently sought to be taken back by him. He, utterly refusing to receive her, in addition to the blows with which he often afflicted her, inflicted upon her very many reproaches and grave injuries. Therefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if the matter stands thus, and the said woman is of such an age that doubt concerning a lapse of her flesh can deservedly be entertained, you compel the said husband, after prior admonition, through ecclesiastical censure, appeal having been removed, to receive her and to exhibit conjugal affection toward her. [No letters, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fifth day before the Ides of April. 1205.]

> Uxor maritum professum repetere potest, non obstante licentia profitendi ab ea metu extorta.
>
> Idem.
>
> Accedens ad praesentiam nostram I. mulier lacrimabiliter proposuit coram nobis, quod, quum V. vir eius Eliensis dioecesis eam sibi legitime matrimonio copulasset, et per viginti fere annorum spatium eidem cohabitans, prolem suscepisset ex ea, volens tandem idem vir habitum assumere monachalem, postulabat humiliter ab eadem, ut tam pio proposito faveret ipsius; quae propter multa verbera et alia molestationum gravamina, quae dictus vir inferebat eidem, se ipsam asserens dimissurum, annuit votis eius. Quumque idem vir in domo de Vader Cisterciensis ordinis religionis habitum assumpsisset, mulier ipsa in domo monialium, nullo ibi habitu religionis assumpto vel voto conversionis emisso, permansit ibidem, cui pro labore manuum suarum eaedem moniales vitae necessaria ministrabant. Processu vero temporis, quum idem vir ad saeculum rediens religionis habitum reliquisset, eadem mulier se instanter ab ipso petiit reassumi, +ipse illam recipere penitus contradicens, praeter verbera, quibus saepius affecit eandem, sibi plurima convitia et graves iniurias irrogavit. Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, et dicta mulier illius aetatis exsistit, ut de lapsu carnis illius merito valeat dubitari, dictum virum, ut eam recipiat, eique affectum exhibeat coniugalem, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota cogatis. [Nullis literis etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. V. Id. Apr. 1205.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: The wife of a professed religious, who gave her husband permission to make profession, is not compelled to enter religion if she is continent and not suspect.

Innocent III, to the Bishop, Dean, and Treasurer of Lincoln.

A. woman signified to us that, when she had granted her husband F., a knight, before the dean of Saint Quiriacus of Provins, acting in this matter in the place of P. of good memory, Archbishop of Sens, permission to enter religion, nevertheless with a vow of continence enjoined upon her, and when assurance had been received from her that she would remain perpetually continent, the same dean, after profession had been made by the aforesaid husband in the monastery in which he had assumed the monastic habit, asserted that she ought to enter religion, although he had not at first expressed this to her and, if this had been expressed, she would not have given him permission; and he caused her to be admonished concerning this several times through our venerable brother the Archbishop of Sens, on account of which she, with the consent of the said archbishop, implored our counsel upon this matter. Therefore we command that, if it is thus, and she is of such an age concerning which suspicion cannot be entertained, you do not permit her, while observing the vow of continence, to be compelled against her will to enter a monastery.

> Uxor professi, quae dedit viro licentiam profitendi, non compellitur ingredi religionem, si continens est, et non suspecta.

Innocentius III. Episcopo, Decano et Thesaurario Linconiensibus.

Significavit nobis A. mulier, quod, quum ipsa F. militi viro suo coram decano S. Quiriaci Pruvinensis, vices bonae memoriae P. archiepiscopi Senonensis in hac parte fungente, licentiam concesserit religionem intrandi, continentiae tamen voto eidem iniuncto, et recepta fide ab ipsa, quod perpetuo contineret, idem decanus post factam professionem a viro praedicto in monasterio, in quo habitum assumpserat monachalem, asseruit, ipsam debere religionem intrare, quanquam id primo non expressisset eidem, et hoc expresso ipsa illi licentiam non dedisset, +ac eam ad hoc per venerabilem fratrem nostrum archiepiscopum Senonensem fecit pluries commoneri, propter quod eadem de consensu dicti archiepiscopi nostrum super hoc consilium imploravit. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, et est talis aetatis, de qua suspicio haberi non possit, ipsam votum continentiae observantem intrare monasterium compelli non permittatis invitam.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: An adulteress whom her husband is unwilling to reconcile is placed in some cloister to do penance.

Gregory IX.

We rejoice in the Lord. (And below:) But women who, having left the marital bed, have fallen through a lapse of the flesh—if their husbands, diligently admonished by you, are unwilling for God's sake to receive them after they have turned to the fruit of a better life—you shall take care to place in cloisters with religious women, so that they may do perpetual penance there.

Adultera, quam maritus reconciliare non vult, ad agendum poenitentiam in aliquo claustro collocatur.

Gregorius. IX.

Gaudemus in Domino (Et infra:) Mulieres vero, quae relicto maritali toro lapsu carnis ceciderunt, si mariti earum, a te diligenter commoniti, eas ad frugem melioris vitae conversas noluerint recipere propter Deum, in claustris cum religiosis mulieribus studeas collocare, ut perpetuam poenitentiam ibi agant.

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: If spouses have released each other by promising continence, and both or one of them makes religious profession, one cannot reclaim the other.

The same, to I., a nun of the monastery of Plauda.

Some time ago, when the subject matter of a question was raised against you by C., a layman, who said that you were his wife, we appointed R., cardinal deacon of Saint Mary in Cosmedin, as auditor. Before him the said C., proposing by way of complaint that you unduly refused to adhere matrimonially to him, whose wife you were by consent in the present tense and the carnal union that followed, sought that you be restored to him. To this it was answered that he, for the remedy of his soul, by a pure and spontaneous will, in the presence of two religious priests and with five trustworthy witnesses adduced, had wholly renounced every right that he had in you, resigning it into the hands of one of the aforesaid priests, who took care to receive a resignation of this kind in the person of the church; and that the same C. promised that he would preserve chastity and devoted himself to the service of the hospital of the poor at Ponte, promising by solemn vow all and each of the aforesaid things and granting you permission to pass to a monastery, while you in turn similarly promised and granted him permission and resigned every right—as all these things were said to have been proved by a public instrument drawn up by the hand of B., a notary of Arezzo.

But the aforementioned C. proposed that, after the aforesaid instrument had been lost by accident, it was fashioned by him in the first person, though it had formerly been in the third person, with many things inserted in the one otherwise than they had been in the other. And since he had been angry with you, as words and blows indicated, while the heat of his anger had not yet subsided, certain persons deceitfully enticed him, proposing to him that in the aforesaid hospital he could use foods according to his pleasure and retain private property, while the aforesaid B. promised him nonetheless that he would extinguish in him not only the burning but also the appetite of lust. On account of this, he asserted that whatever he is known to have done in this matter was done by him while angry, deceived and enticed alike, and under hope of the promise, and under this condition or manner: if he could observe continence.

But to these things it was answered to the contrary that it seems to make no difference whether a notary draws up an instrument in the third person or in the first, provided that the substance of the truth is not changed. Moreover, although at some time a hope had been given to the aforesaid C. by which he proposed that he had been induced to this, nevertheless, at the time when such things were done, he is known to have proceeded purely, simply, and voluntarily, solely for the love of God and the remedy of his soul, to the vow and the other aforesaid things. On account of this he ought to withdraw from the fellowship of secular persons and change his life, since he proposes that he is of such an age that he cannot remain in the world without suspicion of incontinence. We therefore, after taking counsel with our brothers, have held that you are to be absolved by sentence from the action of the said C., imposing perpetual silence upon him concerning this matter.

> Si coniuges se ad invicem absolverunt continentiam promittendo, et uterque vel alter eorum religionem profitetur, alter alterum repetere non potest.
>
> Idem I. Moniali monasterii de Plauda.
>
> Dudum a C. laico mota contra te, quam uxorem suam dicebat, materia quaestionis, R. sanctae M. in Cosmidin diaconum cardinalem dedimus auditorem. Coram quo dictus C. conquerendo proponens, quod indebite recusabas eidem, cuius uxor eras per consensum de praesenti et carnis copulam subsecutam, matrimonialiter adhaerere, te sibi restitui postulavit. Ad quod fuit responsum, quod ipse pro animae suae remedio pura et spontanea voluntate, praesentibus duobus religiosis sacerdotibus, et adhibitis quinque testibus fide dignis, omni iuri, quod in te habuerat, renunciavit omnino, resignando illud in manibus alterius ex sacerdotibus supra dictis, qui in personam ecclesiae resignationem huiusmodi recipere procuravit, et quod idem C. se castitatem servaturum promisit, pauperumque hospitalis de Ponte obsequio se devovit, promittens voto solenni omnia et singula supra dicta, et tribuens tibi licentiam ad monasterium transeundi, te versa vice similiter promittente, ac tribuente illi licentiam, et ius quodlibet resignante : sicut haec omnia dicebantur per publicum instrumentum esse probata, manu B. notarii Aretinensis confectum. Verum praenominatus C. proposuit, quod, casu amisso instrumento praefato, illud in prima persona, quod prius erat in tertia, insertis pluribus in uno, aliter quam in alio fuit ab ipso formatum. Et quum tibi iratus fuisset, sicut verba et verbera indicabant, nondum calore iracundiae quiescente, quidam ipsum deceptorie allexerunt, proponentes eidem, quod in hospitali praedicto cibis ad libitum posset uti, ac proprium retinere, praefato B. sibi nihilominus promittente, quod non solum ardorem, sed etiam appetitum libidinis exstingueret in eodem : propter quod quicquid in hac parte fecisse dignoscitur, iratus, seductus pariter et illectus, et sub spe promissionis, ac sub ea conditione vel modo, si posset continentiam observare, asseruit a se factum. Sed ad ista respondebatur econtra, quod, an tabellio in tertia persona instrumentum conficiat, vel in prima, dummodo non mutetur substantia veritatis, nihil interesse videtur. Insuper, quamvis aliquando spes memorato C. data fuisset, per quam ad hoc se proposuit inductum, eo tamen tempore, quo talia facta fuerunt, pure, simpliciter ac voluntarie, pro amore Dei et remedio animae suae solummodo ad votum et ad alia supra dicta noscitur processisse. Propter quod a consortio saecularium hominum debet discedere, vitamque mutare, quum se illius aetatis esse proponat, ut sine suspicione incontinentiae non valeat in saeculo remanere. Nos itaque, habito fratrum nostrorum consilio, te ab impetitione dicti C. sententialiter duximus absolvendam, perpetuum illi super hoc silentium imponentes.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: It is brief, but in other words it can be summarized thus: After a sentence of separation from the marital bed, rendered on account of the husband's spiritual fornication, the wife can freely enter religion.

The same.

A woman who remained in the faith can, against the will of her husband who returns from the infidelity on account of which she had been separated from him by the judgment of the church, freely fly to religion.

Breve est, sed per alia verba sic potest summari: Post sententiam divortii quoad torum, latam ob fornicationem spiritualem mariti, potest uxor libere religionem intrare.

Idem.

Mulier, quae in fide remansit, potest, nolente viro, qui ab infidelitate revertitur, propter quam ab eo fuerat iudicio ecclesiae separata, ad religionem libere convolare.

Title XXXIII: On the Conversion of Infidels

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: No one can have as wife the woman whose husband he killed through the machination of the woman herself; it is otherwise if he acted without machination. And it is a beautiful and everyday case.

Celestine III.

A laudable—(And below:) But as for what you asked concerning Saracens who, while they were in captivity, killed the husbands of certain Christian women through the plots and machinations of those women—whether, because they were afterward converted through the women themselves to the Christian faith, they can by law take them as wives, or, if they have taken them, whether the marriage of the same persons holds—we are here content with the rule of the Council of Tribur, which asserts that, if the women maliciously machinated the death of their husbands, although by their zeal the Saracens approached the ecclesiastical faith, nevertheless they ought neither to adhere to them nor, if they have even adhered, are they to be tolerated. For a dispensation could not be admitted here without peril, since the church is unwilling to compensate such a loss by such a gain.

In addition to this, certain Saracens who are noted to have killed Christians in war, and Christians likewise Saracens, but afterward the Saracens, converted from the error of paganism to the catholic faith, joined to themselves in marriage the wives of those whom they killed in the contest of war; and Christians are known to have done the same with Saracen women converted to the faith. Nevertheless, those women, after they learned the truth concerning the death of their former husbands, insistently demand judicial separation. In these matters, therefore, we answer that, since such persons did not procure the destruction of the deceased husbands, marriage can lawfully be contracted between persons of this kind, and those joined in this manner, of whichever sex they may be, cannot seek judicial separation after the death of their spouses.

Indeed, the same law will apply in the following case that you took care to propose. When S., a Christian man, denied Christ because of hatred for his wife, joined a pagan woman to himself, and begot sons by her, the Christian woman, abandoned in reproach of Jesus Christ, flew to second nuptials with the assent of her archdeacon and received sons from them. For it does not appear to us that, if the first husband returns to ecclesiastical unity, she ought to withdraw from the second and be restored to the first, especially since she is seen to have departed from him by the judgment of the church, and, as Gregory bears witness, insult to the Creator dissolves the law of marriage with respect to the one who is abandoned from hatred of the Christian faith. Moreover, whether the woman can, against the will of the first husband who has returned to the faith, return to the monastic life; or whether he, having returned, can, after the death of the first wife, have as wife the woman whom he joined to himself by the pagan rite and who on account of him was converted to our faith with her children; and whether the children begotten before conversion are to be held legitimate by virtue of the nuptials that after conversion were celebrated by the ecclesiastical rite; and similarly whether the children of her who, with the license of her archdeacon, married a catholic man while her first husband was alive but had become an infidel, are to be held legitimate—the rule as well as the teaching of the Apostle, by which it is said, "If the unbeliever departs, let him depart; for a brother or sister is not subject to servitude of this kind," and likewise that decree of the aforesaid Gregory, "It is not a sin if one dismissed on account of God has joined herself to another; for the unbeliever, in departing, sins both against God and against marriage," and, moreover, the fact that our predecessor Alexander III of good memory spoke thus, "So great is the force of marriage that those who were begotten beforehand are held legitimate after marriage has been contracted," do not permit us to doubt in matters of this kind that in these cases free access lies open to the one wishing to migrate to religion; that he who returns to the faith can lawfully join to himself the woman who was converted, after the first wife has died; and that the children also are to be deemed legitimate in each of the two aforesaid cases. Moreover, etc. [cf. c. 27, On Witnesses, II. 20.]

DE CONVERSIONE INFIDELIUM.

Non potest quis illam habere in uxorem, cuius maritum occidit machinatione ipsius mulieris; secus, si sine machinatione. Et est pulcher et quotidianus casus.

Coelestinus III.

Laudabilem (Et infra:) Ceterum quod Interrogasti de Sarracenis, qui, dum in captivitate essent, quarundam Christianarum viros earum insidiis et machinationibus occiderunt, utrum, quia postea per ipsas ad fidem Christianam conversi sunt, eas de iure possint accipere in uxores, vel, si duxerint, ipsum coniugium teneat eorundem : hic Triburiensis concilii regula contenti sumus, asserentis, quod, si in mortem ipsorum virorum malitiose fuerint machinatae, licet earum studio ad ecclesiasticam fidem accesserint, tamen nec eis adhaerere debent, nec sunt, si adhaeserint etiam, tolerandi. Non enim hic dispensatio sine periculo posset admitti, quum tale damnum tali lucro ecclesia compensare non velit. Ad hoc Sarraceni quidam, qui in bello sunt Christianos interfecisse notati, et Christiani similiter Sarracenos, postea vero Sarraceni, ad catholicam fidem a gentilitatis errore conversi, uxores eorum quos in belli certamine occiderunt, sibi matrimonialiter copularunt, et id ipsum Christiani de Sarracenis mulieribus conversis ad fidem fecisse noscuntur : quae tamen, postquam de priorum virorum morte compererint veritatem, divortium instanter exposcunt. In his igitur respondemus, quod, quum tales non procuraverint virorum interitum defunctorum, matrimonium inter huiusmodi personas licite potest contrahi, et taliter copulati, cuiuscunque sexus exsistant, divortium post mortem coniugum nequeunt postulare. Idem si quidem iuris erit in sequenti casu, quem proponere studuisti, quum S. Christiano viro propter odium uxoris Christum negante et sibi copulante paganam et ex ea filios procreante Christiana in opprobrium Iesu Christi relicta, cum assensu archidiaconi sui ad secundas nuptias convolavit et filios suscepit ex ipsis; non enim videtur nobis, quod si prior maritus redeat ad unitatem ecclesiasticam, eadem a secundo debeat recedere et resignari priori, maxime quum ab eo visa fuerit ecclesiae iudicio discessisse et teste Gregorio contumelia creatoris solvat ius matrimonii circa eum qui relinquitur odio fidei Christianae. Quod autem mulier possit primo viro qui ad fidem reversus est nolente ad vitam monasticam remeare, vel utrum ille reversus ad eam, quam ritu gentili sibi coniunxit, et quae propter eum ad fidem nostram cum liberis suis est conversa, mortua prima possit habere uxorem, et an filii ante conversionem geniti obtentu nuptiarum, quae post conversionem ritu ecclesiastico celebratae fuerunt, et similiter si filii illius, quae cum licentia archidiaconi sui marito priore vivente sed facto infideli nupsit viro catholico, legitimi sint habendi, tam regula quam doctrina Apostoli, qua dicitur: "si infidelis discedit discedat; non enim frater aut soror subiectus est in huiusmodi servituti, "quam illud decretum memorati Gregorii: "non est peccatum dimisso propter Deum si alii se copulaverit; infidelis enim discedens et in Deum peccat et in matrimonium; "nihilominus, quod praedecessor noster bonae memoriae Alexander III. ita dixerit: "tanta est vis matrimonii, ut qui antea sunt geniti post contractum matrimonium legitimi habeantur: "Nos in huiusmodi dubitare non sinunt, quin in his et liber aditus pateat ad religionem migrare volenti, et ille qui ad fidem revertitur, eam, quae conversa est defuncta prima sibi licite possit copulare, filii etiam in supradicto utroque casu legitimi censeantur. Praeterea etc. [cf. c. 27. de test. II. 20.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If one of two unbelieving spouses comes to the faith while the other remains in the error of unbelief, their common child is assigned to the convert.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Strasbourg.

We learned from your letters [that a question of this kind had been brought to your synod]: a certain man, brought from the error of Jewish blindness to Christ, the true light [and the way of truth], having left his wife in Judaism, insistently petitioned in court that their four-year-old son be assigned to him, to be brought to the catholic faith that he himself had received. To this she answered that, since the boy is still an infant, on account of which he needs maternal solace more than paternal, and is known to have been burdensome to her before birth, painful in birth, [and] laborious after birth, and since from this the lawful union of male and female is called marriage, as if "motherage," rather than "fatherage," the said boy ought more fittingly to remain with her [than to pass to the father newly brought to the Christian faith, or at least to follow neither before he reaches lawful age. Many other things having been alleged on each side, you, meanwhile retaining the aforesaid boy in your power, wished to consult us as to what you should do in this case.]

But since a son is constituted in the power of his father, whose family he follows, and not that of his mother; and at such an age one ought not remain with persons concerning whom there can be suspicion that they would plot against his salvation or life; and boys after their third year ought to be nourished and remain with a father who is not suspect; and the boy's mother, if it should happen that he remained with her, could [easily] lead him to the error of unbelief—we answer [your fraternity], especially in favor of the Christian faith, that the same boy is to be assigned to the father. [Given at Perugia, on the seventeenth day before the Kalends of June, in the second year. 1229.]

Si alter infidelium coniugum venit ad fidem, altero remanente in infidelitatis errore, communis proles assignatur converso.

Gregorius IX. Argentinensi Episcopo.

Ex literis tuis accepimus, [perlatam fuisse ad synodum tuam huiusmodi quaestionem], quod quidam de Iudaicae caecitatis errore ad Christum verum lumen [et viam veritatis] adductus, uxore sua in Iudaismo relicta, in iudicio postulavit instanter, ut eorum filius quadriennis assignaretur eidem, ad fidem catholicam, quam ipse susceperat, perducendus. Ad quod illa respondit, quod, quum puer adhuc infans exsistat, propter quod magis materno indiget solatio quam paterno, sibique ante partum onerosus, dolorosus in partu, [ac] post partum laboriosus fuisse noscatur, ac ex hoc legitima coniunctio maris et feminae magis matrimonium quam patrimonium nuncupetur, dictus puer apud eam debet convenientius remanere, +[quam apud patrem ad fidem Christianam de novo perductum transire debebat, aut saltem neutrius sequi, priusquam ad legitimam aetatem perveniat. Hinc inde multis aliis allegatis: tu autem praedicto puero medio tempore in tua potestate retento, quid tibi faciendum sit in hoc casu nos consulere voluisti.] Quum autem filius in patris potestate consistat, cuius sequitur familiam, et non matris, et in aetate tali quis non debet apud eas remanere personas, de quibus possit esse suspicio, quod saluti vel vitae insidientur illius, et pueri post triennum apud patrem non suspectum ali debeant et morari, materque pueri, si eum remanere contingeret apud eam, [facile] posset illum adducere ad infidelitatis errorem : [fraternitati tuae] in favorem maxime fidei Christianae respondemus, patri eundem puerum assignandum. [Dat. Perusii XVII. Kal. Iun. A. II. 1229.]

Title XXXIV: On a Vow and the Redemption of a Vow

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Vows can be redeemed by alms or commuted into something else, with the authority of a superior intervening and a just cause for redeeming or changing them.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Concerning vows of pilgrimage also, whether they can be redeemed by alms or commuted into something else on account of necessity, we answer you that it depends upon the judgment of the one who presides, so that he may consider more diligently and attend to the quality of the person and the cause of the commutation—namely, whether this happens from infirmity or an abundance of riches, whether the pilgrimage rests upon another probable cause, or whether a recompense would be better and more acceptable to God—and according to this he ought to dispense concerning it.

DE VOTO ET VOTI REDEMPTIONE.

Vota possunt eleemosynis redimi, vel in aliud commutari, intercedente superioris auctoritate, et iusta causa redimendi vel mutandi.

Alexander III. Exonensi Episcopo.

De peregrinationis quoque votis, an eleemosynis redimi possint vel pro necessitate in aliud commutari, tibi respondemus, quod ab eius, qui praesidet, pendet arbitrio, ut consideret diligentius et attendat qualitatem personae, et causam commutationis, scilicet an id ex infirmitate, seu affluentia divitiarum contingat, an alia causa probabili peregrinatio, an recompensatio melior fuerit et Deo magis accepta; et secundum hoc debet exinde dispensare.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The Pope commutes a vow to go overseas, especially in the case of those who vowed at a boyish age.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

We learned from the account of R., the cleric coming to us, that, when he had been constituted at a boyish age, he resolved to proceed to Jerusalem. He also gave his pledge to a certain companion of his, who had likewise proposed to visit the Lord's sepulchre, and received that man's pledge from him, that they would stand by one another on the way as faithful companions and preserve good fellowship. He, indeed, turning the matter over with a solicitous mind, approached us so that we might disclose our counsel to him concerning it. But we, understanding that he labors under grave infirmity, as he asserts, and attending more diligently to the fact that his coming would confer little utility in the regions of the East, especially since it is not lawful for a cleric constituted within sacred orders to take up arms or devote himself to the shedding of blood, absolve him from the vow that at a tender age he promised from facility rather than from the judgment of discretion, and send him back absolved to his own place, yet in such a way that he redeem the same vow with alms and, according to our counsel, throughout the whole time of his life ought to provide for one of Christ's poor, both in food and in clothing, provided his means suffice for this.

Commutat Papa votum ultramarinum, in his maxime, qui in puerili aetate voverunt.

Idem Norvicensi Episcopo.

Venientis ad nos R. clerici narratione accepimus, quod, quum in puerili aetate constitutus fuisset Hierosolymam disposuit proficisci, cuidam quoque consocio suo, qui nihilominus sepulcrum dominicum proposuerat visitare, fidem dedit, et suam recepit ab eo, quod sibi invicem in via socii fideles exsisterent, +et bonam societatem servarent. Qui utique sollicita mente revolvens, ad nos accessit, ut sibi nostrum super hoc consilium aperiremus. Nos autem ipsum gravi infirmitate laborare, sicut asserit, intelligentes, et, quod in partibus orientis eius adventus parum utilitatis conferret, diligentius attendentes, praesertim quum non sit licitum, clericum infra sacros ordines constitutum arma sumere, vel sanguinis effusioni vacare, ipsum a voto, quod in aetate tenera, facilitate potius quam ex arbitrio discretionis promisit, absolvimus, et ad propria remittimus absolutum, ita tamen, quod idem votum eleemosynis redimat, et iuxta consilium nostrum toto vitae suae tempore uni pauperum Christi, tam in victu quam in vestitu, dummodo ad hoc suae facultates sufficiant, debeat providere.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: From the conception alone of a good to be carried out, no one is bound to execute the good conceived.

The same, to Master A. of Mandeforde.

We have long since known your learning and prudence through the report of fame, and we wish and ought to consult your salvation the more attentively, the more, in consideration of your honorable conduct and life, we embrace your person with the arms of more fervent charity. It was reported to our ears on your part that, when you had been terrified by excessive fear of death as a result of a certain bloodletting, you uttered these words to yourself: "I shall not remain here long," proposing in your mind that at some time you would assume the religious habit. But on account of frequent infirmities, which very greatly impede the strictness of religious life, and because you exhibit hospitality to travelers and furnish many salutary things, you have not yet fulfilled in deed what you once conceived in mind, and through this you doubt whether you ought to be called to account in the strict examination for the broken faith of a vow. Therefore, although we do not believe that what the canons establish in matters of this kind is hidden from your prudence, in response to your consultation we answer briefly what we think, commanding by the signification of the present letters that, if no further progress was made in the vow than we have said above, you cannot be judged a transgressor even if you do not fulfill what you said. We admonish your prudence more attentively, however, and exhort you to do that which you know will conduce more to your salvation and, remaining mindful of your condition, to hold firmly in memory that Lot, when he feared the ascent of the mountain, sought and received the little city of Zoar.

> Ex sola conceptione boni explicandi non obligatur quis ad bonum conceptum exsequendum.
>
> Idem Magistro A. de Mandeforde.
>
> Literaturam tuam +et prudentiam iam dudum referente fama cognovimus, et saluti tuae tanto attentius consulere volumus et debemus, quanto personam tuam consideratione tuae honestae conversationis et vitae ferventioris caritatis brachiis amplectimur. Relatum est auribus nostris ex parte tua, quod, Quum ex quadam minutione nimio fuisses mortis pavore perterritus, haec verba tecum protulisti : " non diu hic morabor, " proponens in animo, quod religionis habitum esses aliquando suscepturus. +Sed propter frequentes infirmitates, quae plurimum vitae religiosae districtionem impediunt, et quia transeuntibus hospitalitatem exhibes, et plura salutaria impendis, quod concepisti olim in animo opere nondum implevisti, ac per hoc dubitas, ne pro fracta fide voti in districto debeas examine conveniri. Tibi igitur, licet prudentiam tuam latere non credamus, quid canones in huiusmodi statuant, consulenti respondemus breviter quod sentimus, praesentium significatione mandantes, quod, si plus non est in voto processum, quam praediximus, transgressor iudicari non poteris, et si non impleas quod dixisti. Monemus autem prudentiam tuam attentius et hortamur quatenus id facias quod tuae saluti amplius cognoveris provenire et conditionis tuae memor exsistens memoriter teneas, quod Loth dum montis timeret ascensum, Segor civitatem parvulam petiit et accepit.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Every vow can be changed into a vow of religion.

The same.

It is declared by the testimony of sacred scripture that a spiritual man does not change his purpose when he meditates upon something more useful for the salvation of his soul. Hence it is that, inclining to your just petitions, we have granted you that, if anyone has proposed to visit the Lord's sepulchre or other shrines of the saints and, upon the occurrence of infirmity or another reasonable cause, wishes to assume the religious habit among you and serve God, you may be able freely to receive such persons. One who is known to change temporal service into perpetual observance of religion is in no way held guilty of a broken vow.

> Omne votum mutabile est in votum religionis.
>
> Idem.
>
> Scripturae +sacrae testimonio declaratur, quod spiritualis homo propositum non mutat, quum pro salute animae suae utilius aliquid meditatur. Inde est, quod, vestris iustis postulationibus inclinati, vobis indulsimus, quatenus, si quis sepulcrum dominicum vel alia sanctorum limina proposuerit visitare, et infirmitate vel alia rationabili causa occurrente apud vos habitum religionis assumere atque Deo servire voluerit, libere eos recipere valeatis. Reus fracti voti aliquatenus non habetur, qui temporale obsequium in perpetuam noscitur religionis observantiam commutare.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Execution of a vow to go overseas can for cause be deferred by authority of the Pope.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

One is not to be called a transgressor of a vow who, by authority of the Apostolic See, yet for a just cause, deferred fulfilling what he vowed. Indeed, our dearest son in Christ Henry, the illustrious King of Hungary, signified to us that, since he has perceived that your counsel and aid have until now profited him amid the disturbance of the kingdom, it would derogate not a little from his utility if you were to proceed to Jerusalem, as you are bound by vow, while the kingdom remains unpacified. Since, therefore, it is incumbent upon us to think solicitously about the honor of the king himself and the condition of the Kingdom of Hungary, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that you not begin the journey to Jerusalem before the kingdom itself has, by the Lord's agency, been restored to its former tranquility, or you have received a mandate concerning this from the Apostolic See. [Given at the Lateran. 1198.]

> Exsecutio voti ultramarini auctoritate Papae potest ex causa differri.
>
> Innocentius III. Strigonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Non est voti dicendus transgressor, qui quod vovit de auctoritate sedis apostolicae, iusta tamen ex causa, distulit adimplere. Sane, significavit nobis carissimus in Christo filius noster Henricus illustris rex Hungariae, quod, quum in regni perturbatione consilium et auxilium tuum sibi senserit hactenus profuisse, utilitati eius non modicum derogaret, si Hierosolymam, sicut ex voto teneris, regno pergeres impacato. +Quum igitur nobis immineat de honore ipsius regis et statu regni Hungariae sollicite cogitare, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus non prius iter arripias Hierosolymam adeundi, quam regnum ipsum fuerit tranquillitati pristinae faciente Domino restitutum, vel super hoc receperis ab apostolica sede mandatum. [Dat. Laterani. 1198.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: The church compels a lay heir, through excommunication and deprivation of goods, to execute a vow to go overseas to which he obligated himself on behalf of the deceased.

The same, to Duke Andrew.

Although all have free choice in vowing, and necessity has no place in vows, but will does, nevertheless fulfillment after a vow is necessary to such a degree that no one may withdraw from those things that he spontaneously and solemnly promised without loss to his own salvation. Indeed, we learned that, when B. of illustrious memory, formerly King of Hungary, your father, acting in his last moments, entrusted to your fidelity, under threat of a paternal curse, the execution of the vow that he had vowed to the Lord —to visit the province of Jerusalem with a mighty hand and outstretched arm, yet with a humble heart and humbled spirit—you, having understood the pious will of your parent, assumed the sign of the cross and promised that you would fulfill it without any delay. But, after your same father was removed from your midst, although you feigned that you were beginning the journey to Jerusalem, forgetful of the pilgrimage undertaken, you turned against your brother and the Kingdom of Hungary the battle line that you ought to have directed against the enemies of the cross, and, employing the counsel of evil men, committed many things against the royal serenity. But we, whom in these days the Lord, though undeserving, has called to the pontifical office, wishing to consult both the peace of the Kingdom of Hungary and your salvation, ask, admonish, and exhort your nobility in the Lord, and by apostolic writings directing you, we command that, laying aside other concerns, no later than the next approaching feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, discharging the debt of the cross you received, you begin the proposed journey and humbly pursue it, lest, if on any occasion you refuse the burden enjoined upon you by your father and spontaneously undertaken by you, you render yourself unworthy of the paternal succession and be deprived of the advantage of the inheritance whose burdens you refused to support; knowing that from then you will lie under the bond of anathema and are to be deprived of the right that, if the said king were to die without offspring, belonged to you in the Kingdom of Hungary by order of birth, and that the kingdom itself, appeal being set aside, is to devolve upon your younger brother. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of February. 1198.]

> Ecclesia compellit heredem laicum per excommunicationem et bonorum subtractionem ad exsecutionem voti ultramarini, ad quod se obligavit pro defuncto.
>
> Idem Andreae Duci.
>
> Licet universis liberum sit arbitrium in vovendo, nec necessitas in votis locum habeat, sed voluntas, usque adeo tamen solutio necessaria est post votum, ut sine proprio salutis dispendio alicui non liceat resilire ab his, quae sponte ac solenniter repromisit. Accepimus siquidem, quod, quum inclytae recordationis B. quondam rex Hungariae, pater tuus, agens in extremis, votum, quod voverat Domino, Hierosolymitanam provinciam in forti manu et brachio extenso, humili tamen corde et humiliato spiritu visitare, sub interminatione maledictionis paternae commiserit tuae fidei exsequendum, et tu, intellecta pia voluntate parentis, assumpto crucis signaculo, te id impleturum sine dilatione qualibet promisisti. +Verum, eodem patre tuo sublato de medio, quum Hierosolymitanum iter te arripere simulasses, assumptae peregrinationis oblitus, quam contra inimicos crucis dirigere debueras, in fratrem tuum et regnum Hungariae convertisti aciem bellatorum, et multa contra serenitatem regiam malignorum usus consilio commisisti. Nos autem, quos diebus istis ad pontificatus officium, licet immeritos, Dominus evocavit, tam paci regni Hungariae, quam tuae volentes saluti consulere, nobilitatem tuam rogamus, monemus et exhortamur in Domino, ac per apostolica tibi scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus, postpositis ceteris sollicitudinibus, neque ad festum exaltationis sanctae Crucis proximo venturum debitum acceptae crucis exsolvens, propositum iter arripias et humiliter prosequaris, ne, si onus tibi a patre iniunctum et a te sponte susceptum occasione qualibet detrectaveris, paterna te reddas successione indignum, et hereditatis emolumento priveris, cuius recusaveris onera supportare; sciturus, extunc anathematis te vinculo subiacere, et iure, quod tibi, si dictus rex sine prole decederet, in regno Hungariae competebat ordine geniturae, privandum, et regnum ipsum ad minorem fratrem tuum appellatione postposita devolvendum. [Dat. Lat. IV. Kal. Febr. 1198.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: The Pope commutes a vow to go overseas into vigils, prayers, and fasts, especially when the cause that induced the vowing has ceased; in such a way also that the expenses to be incurred in going, remaining, and returning are sent in full for the aid of the Holy Land.

The same, to the Bishop of Troyes.

We believe it to be [a judgment of great devotion and a proof of your sincere faith in Christ that, so that you might consecrate your last years to the Lord, neither the inconveniences of old age already approaching, nor the dangers of the way, nor the doubtful faith and constant inconstancy of the sea terrified you from resolving, for the salvation of your soul, the liberty of the church of Troyes, and devotion to the land of the Lord's nativity, to visit the province of Jerusalem.]

For when the church of Troyes, as we learned from your account, was burdened contrary to ecclesiastical liberty by undue straits and oppressions, and you believed that the same church could not easily be aided through anyone other than H., formerly Count of Champagne, then constituted in the regions overseas, trusting in the liberality of him who, if you approached him, you believed would humbly provide for you concerning the necessities of your church, contrary to the counsel of your dear ones you proposed to approach him, and as a sign of pilgrimage and devotion to the eastern land you assumed the Lord's cross. [Moreover, although, so that you might not appear empty in the sight of the Lord but carry with exultation some sheaves with you into the Lord's threshing floor, you delivered a sermon to the people so that some, having assumed the sign of the cross with you, would undergo the burden of the journey, scarcely one among all appeared who would receive and fulfill the word with you. But you, so that you might close your laudable purpose with a better end, began the way and, when you had reached Piacenza, received sad reports concerning the death of the same count. Nevertheless, concealing your fear on account of your household, you advanced into Tuscany and encountered certain familiars of yours who wished to recall you from the journey even against your will, asserting that your journey was expedient neither for you nor for the regions overseas, since, with all the French returning from there, that land had remained in the hands of the Germans to be defended.]

Although, upon hearing of the death of the same count, you conceived immeasurable sadness and perceived that your principal intention was now frustrated, you were nevertheless unwilling to return to your own place without the counsel of the Apostolic See, which by the Lord's disposition is the mother and teacher of all the faithful. But, afterward entering the City and constituted in our presence, you humbly explained to us the purpose of your intention and the condition of the church of Troyes, seeking with devotion our counsel and that of our brothers. Our venerable brother the Archbishop of Sens, your metropolitan, also intimated to us once and again through his letters the condition of the church of Troyes and the loss that it could incur from your absence. On account of this we resolved to deliberate with our brothers whether we should show mercy to the same church of Troyes by sending you back to exercise solicitude for it, or whether, as you were bound by vow, we should permit you to complete the journey begun, and which of these two would be more expedient both for your salvation and for the eastern land.

And indeed we thought that three things principally ought to be attended to in this business: what is lawful, what is fitting, and what is expedient—what is lawful according to equity, what is fitting according to honor, and what is expedient according to utility. Indeed, it did not appear lawful for you to have come contrary to the vow and so laudable a purpose, since the prophetic voice cries: "Vow and render to the Lord your God," so that the first is referred to counsel and the second to command; and in the Gospel: "Render to God the things that are God's." For it is not doubtful that this vow belongs to God, to whom you had obligated yourself by vowing. Nor did it appear fitting in any way, since it is written in the Gospel: "No one putting his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God"; and in Genesis the wife of Lot, who looked back, is read to have been turned into a statue of salt; and in the Acts of the Apostles Ananias and Sapphira, who went backward lying to the Holy Spirit, are written to have been successively carried dead from the sight of the prince of the Apostles.

Moreover, it did not appear in any way expedient, since from your absolution, if it were made, scandal could be generated in the minds of laypersons, saying, "Where is the God of the clerics?" and believing by this example that they were not bound to observance of a vow that they saw laid aside by the rulers of churches with the authority of the Apostolic See, through which it would happen that grave loss came to the eastern land. For what is done by prelates is easily drawn into an example by subjects, according to what the Lord says to Moses in Leviticus: "If the priest who is anointed sins, he will cause the people to transgress."

But the failing and gray hair of a life growing old, which can scarcely tolerate their own labors and pains even at rest, alleged the contrary, as did the sighs of the church of Troyes, to which you are bound by the bond of pastoral solicitude and without whose assent you perhaps ought not to have emitted the vow of pilgrimage; and the insistence of your said metropolitan, who solicitously invited us to have mercy upon the church of Troyes, induced us not a little toward the contrary part. The vow itself also, which in its form was holy and honorable, appeared less lawful from the person of the one vowing, because, although it has wings with which it strives to fly away, they are nevertheless so bound by the bonds of the one presiding that they do not have free flight without his permission. For since, according to canonical institutes, a cleric ought not make pilgrimage without the license of his bishop, and a bishop is no less—indeed, rather more—bound to the Apostolic See, it could deservedly appear that without its general or special license you ought not to have emitted a vow of pilgrimage by which you would be absent for so long.

The vow itself also appeared less expedient for the eastern land, which in the necessity of the pressing crisis requires the aid of fighters more than the ministry of clerics, whom both office and lack of practice render unwarlike. For although that land vehemently needs your prayers and those of others, nevertheless, since the word of God who says, "The hour comes, and now is, when neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem will you adore the Father," has now been fulfilled, and below, "God is spirit, and those who adore him must adore in spirit and truth," it could appear that by pious prayers before God you would profit no less in your church than in the eastern land in those things that you would justly and humbly petition for its liberation. And would that you could ascend the mountain with Moses, so that, while you prayed with hands extended, Joshua, fighting in the wilderness, might overcome the Amalekites by the edge of the sword. It was also believed that it would profit the eastern land more if what you would have spent on procurations for yourself and your clerics were transferred, according to the judgment of some religious man, to the aid of the fighters.

Since, therefore, in the old law, in which the precept of the Lord bound no less than a vow binds today in the church, of the firstborn that were commanded to be offered to the Lord some were rendered to the Lord, as the firstborn of the Levites; some were redeemed, as those of the other tribes; and some were commuted into another thing, as the firstborn of an ass, which was commuted for a sheep—attending from this to the fact that a vow can also be commuted into another work of piety, especially since our predecessor Pope Alexander of good memory, when asked, answered that a vow of pilgrimage can also be redeemed or commuted into another thing, not caring that the mouth of those speaking iniquities should speak, provided that we do not withdraw from the path of truth, since according to the Apostle our glory is the testimony of our conscience, and not caring for scandal, especially because we proceed not in darkness but in light, secure in the authority of him who, when he heard from the disciples, "Do you not know that the Pharisees, having heard this word, were scandalized?" answered, "Let them alone; they are blind and leaders of the blind"; and according to the Apostle, "If I pleased men, I would not be the servant of Christ"—we grant you, for yourself and six of your servants, by the common counsel of our brothers and of the archbishops, bishops, and other prudent men whom by the mercy of God we had many present with us, license to commute the vow of pilgrimage in such a way that you entrust to some religious man all the expenses that you would have incurred in going, remaining, and returning, to be transferred without any diminution to the necessary uses of that land. For thus you will profit the eastern province, which in the crisis of pressing necessity needs your goods more than you, by your assistance, and we provide more usefully for the church of Troyes by your presence and governance, and through this your soul will be consulted more salutarily.

You shall also recompense labor with labors, insisting more solicitously upon vigils, devoting yourself more devoutly to prayers, and exercising yourself more strongly in fasts, and watching over your flock with pastoral solicitude. Moreover, this specially induced us to make this indulgence for you from the benignity of the Apostolic See: that your journey now did not appear fruitful to the province overseas, from which almost all the French had returned; and, since you had principally emitted the vow of pilgrimage for the salvation of your soul and the liberty of the church of Troyes to be obtained through the said count, after he was removed from your midst, because the causes ceased, the effect could also cease more easily. [Therefore let no one, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of March. 1198.]

> Commutat Papa votum ultramarinum in vigilias, orationes et ieiunia, tunc maxime, quum cessat causa, quae induxit ad vovendum; ita etiam quod expensae fiendae in eundo, morando et redeundo, integraliter mittantur in terrae sanctae subsidium.
>
> Idem Trecensi Episcopo.
>
> Magnae devotionis +[iudicium et sincerae in Christo tuae fidei esse credimus argumentum, quod, ut novissima tua Domino consecrares, nec senectutis iam imminentis incommoda, nec discrimina viae, nec dubia fides et constans inconstantia pelagi terruerunt, quin pro salute animae tuae, ac libertate Trecensis ecclesiae et devotione terrae nativitatis Domini Hierosolymitanam provinciam disponeres visitare.] Quum enim Trecensis ecclesia, sicut ex tua relatione didicimus, contra libertatem ecclesiasticam indebitis gravaretur angustiis et pressuris, nec per alium, quam per H. quondam Campaniae comitem, tunc in ultramarinis partibus constitutum, eidem ecclesiae crederes posse de facili subveniri, confisus de liberalitate ipsius, quem, si ad eum accederes, tibi super necessitatibus ecclesiae tuae credebas humiliter provisurum, praeter consilium carorum tuorum ad ipsum proposuisti accedere, ac in signum peregrinationis et devotionis terrae orientalis crucem dominicam assumpsisti. +[Licet autem, ut non vacuus in conspectu Domini appareres, sed aliquos tecum manipulos in aream Domini cum exsultatione deferres, sermonem ad populum feceris, ut aliqui tecum assumpto crucis signaculo subirent itineris gravitatem, vix unus inter omnes apparuit, qui verbum tecum reciperet et impleret. Tu vero, ut laudabile propositum fine clauderes meliori, viam aggressus, quum Placentiam pervenisses, super morte ipsius comitis tristes recepisti rumores. Propter familiam tamen dissimulato timore progressus in Tusciam, quosdam familiares tuos obvios habuisti, qui te volebant invitum etiam ab itinere revocare, asserentes, iter tuum nec tibi nec ultramarinis partibus expedire, quum, Gallicanis omnibus exinde redeuntibus, terra illa defensanda in Teutonicorum manibus remansisset.] Quamvis autem audita morte ipsius comitis immensam tristitiam concepisses, et praecipuam intentionem tuam esse conspiceres iam frustratam, noluisti tamen sine consilio apostolicae sedis, quae disponente Domino cunctorum fidelium mater est et magistra, ad propria remeare. Sed ingressus postmodum Urbem, et in nostra praesentia constitutus, intentionis tuae propositum ac statum Trecensis ecclesiae nobis humiliter expressisti, +nostrum et fratrum nostrorum consilium cum devotione requirens. Venerabilis etiam frater noster Senonensis archiepiscopus metropolitanus tuus statum Trecensis ecclesiae, ac dispendium, quod ex absentia tua incurrere poterat, semel et iterum per suas nobis literas intimavit, propter quod disposuimus deliberare cum fratribus nostris, an cum eadem Trecensi ecclesia misericordiam faceremus, te ad agendam ipsius sollicitudinem remittentes, an, sicut tenebaris ex voto, te iter arreptum perficere pateremur, et utrum horum tam saluti tuae quam terrae orientali potius expediret. Et quidem tria praecipue duximus in hoc negotio attendenda, quid liceat, quid deceat, quid expediat: quid liceat secundum aequitatem, quid deceat secundum honestatem, et quid expediat secundum utilitatem. Sane, non videbatur contra votum et tam laudabile propositum licitum, ut venires, quum vox clamet prophetica : " Vovete et reddite Domino Deo vestro, " ut primum ad consilium, secundum vero ad imperium referatur, et in evangelio: "Reddite quae sunt Dei Deo. "Votum enim istud non est dubium esse Dei, cui te obligaveras in vovendo. Sed nec decens quomodolibet videbatur, quum sit scriptum in evangelio : " Nemo mittens manum suam ad aratrum, et respiciens retro, aptus est regno Dei, " et in Genesi uxor Loth, quae retro respexit, in salis statuam legatur fuisse conversa, et in actibus Apostolorum Anania et Saphira, qui abierunt retrorsum sancto Spiritui mentientes, a conspectu Apostolorum principis mortui scribantur successive delati. Praeterea non videbatur aliquatenus expedire, quum ex absolutione tua, si fieret, scandalum posset laicorum mentibus generari, dicentium : " ubi est Deus clericorum? " et hoc exemplo credentium, se ad voti observantiam non teneri, quod viderent per ecclesiarum rectores apostolicae sedis auctoritate deponi, per quod grave dispendium terrae orientali contingeret provenire. Quod enim agitur a praelatis, facile trahitur a subditis in exemplum, iuxta quod Dominus inquit ad Moysen in Levitico : " Si sacerdos, qui est unctus peccaverit, faciet delinquere populum. " Verum aetatis vitae senescentis defectus atque canities, quae vix labores et dolores suos tolerare possunt etiam in quiete, in contrarium allegabant, et ecclesiae Trecensis suspiria, cui vinculo pastoralis sollicitudinis es ligatus, sine cuius assensu votum peregrinationis emittere forsitan non debueras, +et dicti metropolitani tui, qui nos, ut Trecensis ecclesiae misereremur, sollicite invitabat, instantia nos in partem contrariam non modicum inducebant. Ipsum etiam votum, quod ex sui forma sanctum et honestum erat, ex persona voventis minus licitum videbatur, quod, licet pennas habeat, quibus satagat avolare, ita tamen adstrictae sunt nexibus praesidentis, ut liberum non habeant absque ipsius permissione volatum. Quum enim iuxta canonica instituta clericus absque sui episcopi licentia peregrinari non debeat, et episcopus non minus, immo potius sedi apostolicae sit adstrictus, videri merito poterat, quod absque eius generali vel speciali licentia votum peregrinationis, qua te tamdiu absentares, emittere non deberes. +Minus etiam votum ipsum terrae orientali videbatur expediens, quae plus pugnatorum subsidium, quam clericorum, quos et officium et dissuetudo reddit imbelles, ministerium in instantis articuli necessitate requirit. Quamvis enim orationibus tuis et aliorum terra illa vehementer indigeat, quia tamen iam impletum est verbum Dei dicentis: "Venit hora, et nunc est, quando nec in monte hoc, neque in Hierosolymis adorabitis Patrem, "et infra: "Spiritus est Deus, et eos, qui adorant eum, in spiritu et veritate oportet adorare: "videri poterat, quod non minus in ecclesia tua quam in orientali terra proficeres piis orationibus apud Deum in his, quae pro liberatione ipsius iuste ac humiliter postulares. Et utinam cum Moyse posses in montem ascendere, ut, te manibus extensis orante, Iosue pugnans in solitudine Amalechitas in ore gladii superaret. Credebatur etiam, quod terrae orientali magis accederet, si, quod in tuis et tuorum clericorum procurationibus fueras impensurus, secundum alicuius religiosi arbitrium transferretur in subsidium bellatorum. Quum igitur in lege veteri, in qua non minus praeceptum Domini obligabat, quam votum hodie obliget in ecclesia, primogenita, quae Domino mandabantur offerri, quaedam Domino redderentur, ut primogenita Levitarum; quaedam redimerentur, ut aliarum tribuum; quaedam commutarentur in aliud, sicut primogenitum asini, qui pro ove commutabatur : ex hoc attendentes, quod votum etiam commutari possit in opus aliud pietatis, praesertim quum bonae memoriae Alexander Papa praedecessor noster votum peregrinationis etiam redimi posse vel in aliud commutari responderit requisitus, non curantes, quod os loquentium iniqua loquatur, dum tamen non recedamus a tramite veritatis, quum secundum Apostolum gloria nostra sit testimonium conscientiae nostrae, et scandalum non curantes, praesertim, quia non in tenebris, sed in luce procedimus, de illius auctoritate securi, qui, quum audisset a discipulis; " Nonne scis, quia Pharisaei, audito hoc verbo, scandalizati sunt? " respondit : " Sinite illos, caeci sunt, et duces caecorum : " et iuxta Apostolum: "Si hominibus placerem, Christi servus non essem, " tibi pro te et sex famulis tuis de communi fratrum nostrorum et tam archiepiscoporum, quam episcoporum et aliorum prudentium consilio, quos per Dei misericordiam multos nobiscum praesentes habuimus, licentiam concedimus, votum peregrinationis taliter commutare, ut omnes expensas, quas fueras in eundo, morando et redeundo facturus, alicui religioso committas, in necessarios usus terrae illius sine diminutione qualibet transferendas. +Si enim et orientali provinciae, quae plus tuis quam te in articulo necessitatis instantis indiget, tua subventione proficies, et Trecensi ecclesiae tua praesentia et regimine utilius providemus, ac per hoc animae tuae salubrius consuletur. Laborem etiam laboribus recompenses, sollicitius instando vigiliis, devotius vacans orationibus, et in ieiuniis fortius te exercens, ac super grege tuo vigilans sollicitudine pastorali. Ad hanc autem indulgentiam tibi de benignitate sedis apostolicae faciendam id etiam specialiter nos induxit, quod iter tuum iam non videbatur ultramarinae provinciae fructuosum, a qua fere omnes Gallici remearant, et quum pro salute animae tuae ac libertate Trecensis ecclesiae per dictum comitem assequenda praecipue votum peregrinationis emiseris, eo sublato de medio, quia cessavere causae, facilius cessare potuit et effectus. [Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Lat. Id. Mart. 1198.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: To one temporarily impeded from executing a vow to go overseas a delay is granted; but upon one perpetually impeded a redemption is enjoined in that which is more expedient for the Holy Land.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Because you resolved to consult the Apostolic See concerning those matters whose execution pertains to the pastoral office, we commend your fraternity in the Lord, hoping that, instructed through our response, you will execute them more diligently. You asked indeed what is to be done by you concerning those who, having assumed the sign of the cross for the succor of the Holy Land, cannot usefully fulfill the vow of pilgrimage on account of infirmity, poverty, or another just cause, since through apostolic writings you received a mandate without distinction to compel, through ecclesiastical censure with appeal removed, those who cast aside the sign of the cross they had assumed to resume it and execute the vow, notwithstanding any indulgence, if perhaps one had been obtained by surreption from our predecessor.

We answer your inquiry in this manner: the weak and the poor approach that place more to its deficiency than to its advantage, since the former cannot fight and the latter are compelled to beg, unless perhaps they are nobles and magnates who bring fighters with them at their own expense, or craftsmen and farmers who can acquire necessities for themselves by their labors and minister aid to the land—although not many such persons are useful there on account of the smallness of the possessions and the fewness of the inhabitants. Hence we believe a distinction must be made between those who are believed to have a temporary cause of impediment and those who have a perpetual one: delay is to be granted to the former, but redemption is to be enjoined upon the latter; and, after the extent of their resources has been weighed, let them transmit for the aid of the Holy Land the expenses that they can make or would have made, the labor of the persons also having been compensated, executing through others what they cannot fulfill through themselves.

Again, between those who emit a vow of pilgrimage for the defense of the Holy Land and those upon whom a journey of pilgrimage is enjoined in satisfaction for their crimes, we believe a distinction must be made: concerning the former, the succor of the Holy Land, and concerning the latter, the labor of the journey, ought to be attended to more according to the intention of the one vowing or doing penance. Hence, if one vowing in this manner is useless for fighting, although fit for going, it is better to redeem the vow than to consume the expenses. This can properly be understood also of a penitent who on account of weakness cannot fulfill the journey of pilgrimage enjoined; but not of one who, although powerless to fight, is nevertheless able to go. Moreover, diligent discretion is to be applied concerning these matters, lest anything through entreaty or payment, love or hatred, or any occasion whatever be attempted in any way against the salvation of the soul or the utility of the land. Hence we wish that a dispensation of this kind be provided through religious and provident men.

Concerning women, moreover, we believe this is to be observed: that those who are unwilling to remain should follow their husbands as they go; but the others, unless perhaps they are rich women who can take fighters with them at their own expense, should redeem the vow that they vowed, the others having each been diligently induced according to their own means to aid the Holy Land.

> Impedito ad tempus exsequi votum ultramarinum conceditur dilatio; perpetuo vero impedito indicitur redemptio in eo, quod magis expediat terrae sanctae.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Quod super his +sedem apostolicam consulere decrevisti quorum exsecutio spectat ad officium pastorale, fraternitatem tuam in Domino commendamus, sperantes, quod per responsionem nostram instructus ea diligentius exsequaris. Quaesivisti sane de his, qui pro succursu terrae sanctae signo crucis assumpto, propter infirmitatem vel paupertatem, vel aliam iustam causam votum peregrinationis non possunt utiliter adimplere quid tibi sit faciendum; quum per apostolica scripta sine distinctione receperis in mandatis, ut eos, qui signum crucis assumptum abiecerunt ad resumptionem ipsius et exsecutionem voti per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compellas, non obstante aliqua indulgentia, si qua forte per surreptionem a praedecessore nostro fuerat impetrata. Nos autem inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod debiles et inopes magis illuc in defectum, quam ad profectum accedunt, quum isti pugnare non possint, et illi mendicare cogantur, nisi forte sint nobiles et magnates, qui suis secum expensis bellatores adducant, vel artifices et agricolae, qui de laboribus suis sibi possint acquirere necessaria et terrae subsidia ministrare; quamvis non multi talium propter brevitatem possessionum et paucitatem inhabitantium ibi sint opportuni. Unde credimus distinguendum inter illos, qui temporalem, et eos, qui perpetuam impedimenti causam creduntur habere, quod primis indulgenda est dilatio, secundis autem est redemptio iniungenda, ac rerum facultate pensata, quas possunt aut quas facturi essent expensas, personarum praeterea compensato labore, in subsidium terrae sanctae transmittant, exsequentes per alios quod per se nequeunt adimplere. Rursus inter illos, qui pro defensione terrae sanctae votum peregrinationis emittunt, et eos, quibus pro satisfactione suorum criminum iter peregrinationis iniungitur, credimus distinguendum, quod circa primos plus terrae sanctae succursus, et circa secundos plus labor itineris secundum intentionem voventis vel poenitentis debet attendi. Unde, si quis hoc modo voventium est inutilis ad pugnandum, quamvis habilis sit ad eundum, melius est redimere votum quam expensas consumere. Quod et de poenitente, qui propter debilitatem non potest iter iniunctae peregrinationis implere, sane valet intelligi; non autem de illo, qui, quamvis sit impotens ad bellandum, potens tamen est ad eundum. +Super his autem diligens est discretio adhibenda, ne quid prece vel pretio, amore vel odio sive occasione quacunque contra salutem animae vel utilitatem terrae quomodolibet attentetur. Unde per viros religiosos et providos dispensationem huiusmodi volumus provideri. De mulieribus autem hoc credimus observandum, ut quae remanere noluerint viros suos sequantur euntes ; ceterae vero, nisi forte sint divites, quae secum in suis expensis possint ducere bellatores, votum redimant, quod voverunt, aliis ad terrae sanctae subsidium singulis secundum proprias facultates diligenter inductis.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A vow to go overseas can in certain cases be redeemed and commuted, yet not by anyone other than the Pope or one acting with his special mandate. This it says as far as § "Secondly, you asked." — (Secondly, etc.:) Those fit for going but unfit for fighting, if they are vigorous in counsel or can take fighting knights with them, do not redeem a vow to go overseas. This it says, the Sicilian Abbot. — (But as for, etc.:) Wives can follow their husbands overseas if they wish, but they are not bound unless they themselves also vowed. This it says, the Abbot. — (In so great, etc.:) Husbands can emit a vow to go overseas without the consent of their wives. This it says, the Sicilian Abbot. — (Concerning clerics, etc.:) Clerics, as being unfit to fight, redeem a vow to go overseas except in certain cases. This it says, the Sicilian Abbot.

The same, to the same.

We believe that it proceeds from the great providence of your solicitude that, although we have answered what we think to your many and frequent consultations, you elicit new questions from our response. Indeed, from the consultation that we formerly issued in answer to your inquiry concerning the business of those signed with the cross, you found a way to other questions and solicitously asked whether what is said in it establishes a general law, so that it is lawful indiscriminately for any prelates to absolve according to the expressed form those who are committed to their jurisdiction. Therefore we answer your inquiry briefly that in our consultation a common law is issued, and, although it in no way explains to what sort of persons, and specifically to whom, its execution pertains, nevertheless execution of this law is incumbent only upon those who have received from the Apostolic See our special mandate concerning it.

Thus, therefore, answer is made to the inquiry by which your fraternity consequently asked of which religious this was to be understood, which was contained around the middle of our consultation in these words: "We wish a dispensation of this kind to be provided through religious and provident men"—namely, whether there only those who have assumed the religious habit are called religious, many of whom are unlearned and ignorant of law, although in your consultation it is said, "through religious and provident men", or bishops, who, just as they excel in dignity, so ought to excel others in religion. For execution of that law pertains to neither unless it is specially delegated to them by the Apostolic See.

Secondly, you asked whether what is said—"If any of those vowing is useless for fighting, although fit for going, it is better that he redeem the vow than consume the expenses"—ought to be taken generally, so as to include also nobles and magnates who are vigorous in counsel and can bring many fighters with them, or whether a general expression of this kind comprehends only lesser persons. But, if you extend the eye of your consideration for a little while to what precedes, you will find that question solved in the course of our consultation, where it is said that the weak and the poor approach more to the deficiency of the Holy Land than to its advantage, since the former cannot fight and the latter must beg, unless perhaps they are nobles and magnates who bring fighters with them at their own expense; and the other things that follow. For those who are called weak here are below called useless for fighting. Hence an equal exception ought to be understood in each place, although it can be answered otherwise that those who, even if they cannot fight through themselves, can nevertheless assist those fighting by maturity of counsel and relieve their personal deficiency through others, are not useless for fighting.

In the third place also your fraternity asked how what is subjoined concerning women ought to be understood: that those who are unwilling to remain should follow their husbands as they go; but the others, unless they are rich women who can take fighters with them at their own expense, should redeem the vow that they vowed. For what is said in the final place appears to have been said only of those vowing. But what is placed above—"women who are unwilling to remain, etc."—appears to be understood of those who bound themselves to the purpose of pilgrimage by no bond of a vow, which was not doubtful to be so. From the same expression you also say that it appears to certain persons that husbands are permitted in this article to be able to vow without the assent of their wives and to accomplish what they vowed. To this we say that, in so great a necessity of the Christian people, lest aid to the Holy Land be utterly impeded or deferred longer, husbands, without the assent of their wives, so that they may fight for the King of kings, can freely vow the purpose of this pilgrimage and freely fulfill what they vowed. But the wives are to be admonished more attentively to consent.

Concerning clerics, moreover, we thought that your inquiry should be answered in this manner: since the office of the clergy renders them unfit for fighting, unless they are either vigorous in counsel or instructed in the office of preaching, or deputed to the service of magnates, or rich and powerful to such a degree that they can take some fighters with them at their own expense, it is more expedient to receive redemption from them than to compel them to pursue the vow, if necessity requires or utility persuades. We say these things, however, of those vowing, not of those upon whom the labor of pilgrimage was enjoined as penance.

> Votum ultramarinum certis casibus redimi et commutari potest, non tamen per alium, quam per Papam, vel cum ipsius speciali mandato. H. d. usque ad §. Secundo quaesivisti. — (Secundo etc.:) Habiles ad eundum, sed inhabiles ad pugnandum, si sunt strenui consilio, vel milites bellatores possunt secum ducere, votum ultramarinum non redimunt. H. d. Abbas Siculus. — (Quod autem etc.:) Uxores possunt sequi viros ultra mare, si volunt; sed non tenentur, nisi et ipsae voverint. H. d. Abbas. — (In tanta etc.:) Viri sine consensu uxorum emittere possunt votum ultramarinum. H. d. Abbas Siculus. — (De clericis etc.:) Clerici, tanquam inhabiles ad pugnandum, redimunt votum ultramarinum, nisi in certis casibus. H. d. Abbas Siculus.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Ex multa tuae sollicitudinis providentia +credimus provenire, quod, quum ad consultationes tuas multiplices et frequentes responderimus quod sentimus, ex responsione nostra novas elicias quaestiones. Ex consultatione siquidem, quam ad inquisitionem tuam super negotio cruce signatorum olim edidimus, viam invenisti ad alias quaestiones, et utrum, quod in ea dicitur, ius constituat generale, ut passim praelatis quibuslibet illos secundum formam expressam absolvere liceat, qui eorum sunt iurisdictioni commissi, sollicite requisisti. Ad hoc igitur inquisitioni tuae breviter respondemus, quod in consultatione nostra ius commune editur, et, licet ad quales, et ad quos tamen specialiter spectet eius exsecutio, nullatenus explicatur : illis autem solummodo ius hoc exsequendum incumbit, qui super hoc mandatum nostrum receperint a sede apostolica speciale. Sic ergo illi est inquisitioni responsum, qua consequenter tua fraternitas requisivit, de quibus religiosis intelligendum hoc esset, quod continebatur circa consultationis nostrae medium, in haec verba: "per viros religiosos et providos dispensationem huiusmodi volumus provideri; " utrum scilicet ibi religiosi vocentur hi tantum, qui religionis habitum susceperunt, quorum plures idiotae sunt et iuris ignari, quum tamen in consultatione vestra dicatur: per religiosos et providos; an episcopi, qui, sicut dignitate praecellunt, sic et religione debent aliis praeeminere. Nam ad neutros illius exsecutio iuris spectat, nisi per apostolicam sedem eis specialiter delegetur. Secundo quaesivisti, utrum quod dicitur : " si quis voventium est inutilis ad pugnandum, quamvis sit habilis ad eundum, melius est, ut redimat votum, quam consumat expensas, " generaliter accipi debeat, ut nobiles etiam et magnates, qui sunt consilio strenui, et multos secum possunt trahere bellatores, an minores tantummodo verbum huiusmodi generale comprehendat. Verum, si ad superiora oculum tuae considerationis paulisper extendas, quaestionem istam invenies in serie consultationis nostrae solutam, ubi dicitur, quod debiles et inopes magis in defectum terrae sanctae, quam ad eius profectum accedunt, +quum hi pugnare nequeant, et illi necesse habeant mendicare, nisi forte sint nobiles et magnates, qui suis secum expensis bellatores adducunt. Et cetera, quae sequuntur. Qui enim debiles hic dicuntur, appellantur inferius inutiles ad pugnandum. Unde par exceptio debet intelligi utrobique, quamvis possit aliter responderi, quod non sunt inutiles ad pugnandum, qui, etsi per se pugnare non possunt, maturitate tamen consilii adesse valent pugnantibus, et personae defectum per alios relevare. +Tertio quoque loco tua fraternitas requisivit, qualiter intelligi debeat quod de mulieribus subinfertur, ut quae remanere noluerint viros suos sequantur euntes; ceterae vero, nisi sint divites, quae secum in suis expensis possint ducere bellatores, votum redimant, quod voverunt. Hoc enim, quod ultimo loco dicitur, videtur tantum de voventibus esse dictum. Quod autem superius ponitur : " mulieres, quae remanere noluerint etc., " de illis intelligendum esse videtur, quae se ad peregrinationis propositum nullius voti vinculo adstrinxerunt, +quod sic esse dubium non exstitit. Ex eodem quoque verbo dicis videri quibusdam, quod viris liceat in hoc articulo sine uxorum suarum assensu vovere posse, ac perficere quod voverunt. Ad hoc dicimus, quod In tanta quoque necessitate populi Christiani, ne terrae sanctae impediatur subsidium penitus vel diutius differatur, viri praeter uxorum assensum, ut militent regi regum, huius peregrinationis propositum vovere libere valent et quod voverint libere adimplere. Ut autem consentiant, sunt attentius commonendae. De clericis vero inquisitioni tuae taliter duximus respondendum, quod, quum clericatus officium eos reddat inhabiles ad pugnandum, nisi vel consilio strenui, vel officio praedicationis instructi, aut magnatum sint obsequio deputati, aut usque adeo divites fuerint et potentes, ut in expensis suis aliquos secum ducere valeant bellatores, magis ab eis expedit redemptionem accipere, quam ad votum illos cogere prosequendum, si necessitas exigit vel utilitas persuadet. Haec autem de voventibus dicimus, non de his, quibus labor peregrinationis in poenitentia est iniunctus.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One who vowed to enter religion, if, with the vow complete, he becomes a bishop, ought to resign and fulfill the vow. Thus it is commonly summarized.

The same.

Through your letters you intimated to us that you had solemnly emitted a vow of receiving the regular habit in the church of Grenoble, and afterward promised in the hands of the prelate of the same church that within two months after you had returned from the Apostolic See, to which you were then approaching, you would fulfill the vow that you had emitted. And when, after the term itself had passed, you took no care to fulfill what you had vowed, at length, existing as a transgressor of the vow, you were called to the governance of the church of Geneva, concerning which you petition us to provide for your salvation. We therefore, answering briefly, counsel your discretion that, if you desire wholly to heal your conscience, you resign the governance of the aforesaid church and render your vows to the Most High, showing you grace in this: that, if the chapter of the same church of Geneva should afterward think that you ought canonically to be elected, you will be able to receive the election thus made of you. [Given at Segni, on the sixth day before the Ides of August, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate. 1213.]

Qui vovit religionem ingredi, si voto completo fiat episcopus, renunciare debet, et votum implere, Sic communiter summatur.

Idem.

Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, te in Gratianopolitana ecclesia suscipiendi habitum regularem votum solenniter emisisse, et postea promississe in manibus praelati eiusdem ecclesiae, te infra duos menses, postquam ab apostolica sede rediisses, ad quam eo tempore accedebas, votum, quod emiseras, impleturum. Quumque termino ipso transacto non curasses quod voveras adimplere : tandem exsistens voti transgressor, vocatus fuisti ad regimen ecclesiae Gebennensis, +super quo a nobis tuae saluti postulas provideri. Nos igitur tuae discretioni breviter respondendo consulimus, ut, si tuam omnino sanare desideras conscientiam, regimen resignes ecclesiae memoratae, ac reddas Altissimo vota tua, in hoc tibi gratiam facientes, quod, si capitulum eiusdem Gebennensis ecclesiae te postmodum canonice duxerit eligendum, electionem recipere poteris taliter de te factam. [*Dat. Signiae VI. Id. Aug. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. * 1213.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A prelate, even one professed, can emit a vow to go overseas and convert the twentieth of the revenues of the church to his own uses.

Honorius III, to the Provosts of Haresben and Bengad.

You ask us whether it is lawful for you, professed in a regular order, one of whom is signed with the cross and the other desires to be marked with the character of the cross, to carry with you the twentieth of the revenues of your churches deputed to the succor of the Holy Land, so that through you it may advance the succor of that land, since you are prepared to expose your persons to the service of Jesus Christ; especially since many, provoked by an example of laudable emulation, are manfully girded to run after you, intending to fight the battle of the Lord against the nations. But because we aspire with all our strength to the liberation of that land, we answer your discretion in this manner: if your churches are not otherwise injured enormously through your absence, and you will be useful to the Holy Land alike by word and example—which we have thought ought to be left to your consciences—after suitable procurators have been left in your churches, you can and are bound to fulfill the vow of pilgrimage, and thus the twentieth of your churches deputed to the aid of the Holy Land can pass to your uses.

> Praelatus, etiam professus, potest votum ultramarinum emittere, et in suos usus vigesimam proventuum ecclesiae convertere.
>
> Honorius III. Haresben. et Bengad. Praepositis.
>
> Postulatis a nobis, an vobis, professis ordinem regularem, quorum alter cruce signatus est, et reliquus charactere crucis desiderat insigniri, liceat vigesimam proventuum ecclesiarum vestrarum deputatam succursui terrae sanctae deferre vobiscum, +ut per vos proficiat terrae illius succursui, qui parati estis personas vestras exponere servitio Iesu Christi; praesertim quum multi exemplo aemulationis laudabilis provocati ad currendum post vos viriliter accingantur, proeliaturi proelium Domini contra gentes. Quia vero liberationi terrae illius totis viribus adspiramus, Discretioni vestrae taliter respondemus, quod, si ecclesiae vestrae alias per absentiam vestram enormiter non laedantur, et vos utiles fueritis terrae sanctae verbo pariter et exemplo, quod conscientiae vestrae duximus relinquendum, dimissis procuratoribus idoneis in ecclesiis vestris, potestis et tenemini votum peregrinationis implere, et sic potest in usus vestros transire vicesima ecclesiarum vestrarum, terrae sanctae subsidio deputata.

Title XXXV: On the Status of Monks and Regular Canons

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A diocesan ought not molest monasteries except for the purpose of correction, nor claim for himself things offered to them.

Gregory, to the Archbishop of Naples.

Theodosius [abbot of the monastery of Saint Martin suggested to us by a petitionary intimation the matters contained below: that in the house once belonging to Martin, by his will, his predecessor Andrew, abbot of the monastery, constructed a monastery in which monks ought to dwell. And because he petitions that it be dedicated in honor of blessed Peter, prince of the Apostles, and Saint Michael the Archangel, we have thought your charity should be exhorted by the present writing that, when he petitions, you approach the aforesaid place without reluctance and furnish the venerable solemnities of dedication. And as often as it shall be necessary, let the venerable sacrifices of masses be celebrated by the priests of your church serving in the holy place, in such a way that] neither you nor your priests inflict any molestation upon any monastery beyond the diligence of discipline, or think that you may claim for yourselves anything that has come there [as an advantage] from the devotion of diverse persons, since whatever happens to be offered in this manner by the faithful ought to profit the monks serving there.

> DE STATU MONACHORUM ET CANONICORUM REGULARIUM.
>
> Dioecesanus non debet molestare monasteria, praeterquam pro causa correctionis nec eis oblata sibi vendicare.
>
> Gregorius Archiepiscopo Neapolis.
>
> Theodosius +[abbas monasterii S. Martini petitoria nobis insinuatione suggessit, quae habetur in subditis, in domo quondam Martini ex eius voluntate decessorem suum Andream abbatem monasterium, in quo monachi habitare debeant, construxisse. Et quia id in honorem B. Petri, Apostolorum principis, et S. Archangeli Michaelis postulat dedicari, dilectionem tuam praesentibus apicibus duximus adhortandum, quatenus ad praedictum locum, quum postulaverit, ingravanter accedas, venerandae solennia dedicationis impendens. Et quoties necesse fuerit, a presbyteris ecclesiae tuae, in loco sancto deservientibus, celebrentur sacrificia veneranda missarum, ita, ut] Alicui monasterio nec tu, nec presbyteri tui, praeter diligentiam disciplinae aliquid molestiae inferatis, aut, si quid illic pro diversorum devotione [commoditatis] accesserit, vobis vendicare aestimetis quum monachis ibi servientibus debeat proficere quicquid a fidelibus taliter offerri contingit.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Monks ought not be placed singly throughout parishes. This first. If anything is given for becoming a monk, the one received is prohibited from sacred orders, and the one receiving is suspended from office. This second. A monk having private property without the license of the abbot is removed from communion of the altar and, dying thus, is deprived of burial and the communion of the brothers. This third. If money is conferred for having some office in a monastery, the giver and receiver are deposed. This fourth. In conventual priories those instituted by election are not to be removed without reasonable cause, and it gives three examples of reasonable cause. This it says, comprehending the substance.

From the Lateran Council.

Let monks not be received in a monastery for a price, nor be permitted to have private property, nor be placed singly throughout villages and towns or throughout any parochial churches whatever; but let them remain in a larger convent or with some brothers, and not await alone among secular persons the conflict of spiritual enemies, Solomon saying: "Woe to one alone! For when he falls, there is no one to raise him." But if anyone, having been exacted from, gave something for his reception, let him not ascend to sacred orders; and let the one who received him be punished by suspension from his office. Moreover, one who has private property, unless it was permitted to him by the abbot for an administration enjoined upon him, is to be removed from communion of the altar; and one who at his last moments is found with private property and did not worthily repent, let no offering be made for him, nor let him receive burial among the brothers—which we command to be observed also concerning all religious. Moreover, let the abbot who does not diligently guard against these things know that he will incur the loss of his office.

Likewise, let priories or obediences be entrusted to no one by the gift of a price; otherwise [both] givers and receivers are to become strangers to ecclesiastical ministry. But priors, when they have been canonically instituted in conventual churches by election of their chapters, are not to be changed except for a manifest and reasonable cause: namely, if they have been dissipators, if they have lived incontinently, or if they have done something of such a kind on account of which they deservedly appear to be removed, or if also they are to be transferred for the necessity of a greater office by the counsel of the brothers.

> Monachi non debent poni singuli per parochias. Hoc primo. Si pro monachatu aliquid detur, receptus a sacris ordinibus prohibetur, et recipiens ab officio suspenditur. Hoc secundo. Monachus, habens peculium sine licentia abbatis, ab altaris communione removetur, et, sic decedens sepultura et fratrum communione privatur. Hoc tertio. Si pecunia confertur pro habendo aliquod officium in monasterio, dans et recipiens deponuntur. Hoc quarto. In prioratibus conventualibus per electionem instituti non sunt removendi sine causa rationabili, et de causa rationabili tria ponit exempla. H. d. comprehendendo substantiam.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Monachi non pretio recipiantur in monasterio, nec peculium permittantur habere, nec singuli per villas et oppida, sive per quascunque parochiales ponantur ecclesias, sed in maiori conventu, aut cum aliquibus fratribus maneant, nec soli inter saeculares homines spiritualium hostium conflictum exspectent, Salomone dicente : " Vae soli! quia, quum ceciderit, non est qui sublevet eum. " Si quis autem exactus pro sua receptione aliquid dederit, ad sacros ordines non ascendat, is vero, qui eum receperit, officii sui suspensione mulctetur. Qui vero peculium habuerit, nisi ab abbate fuerit ei pro iniuncta administratione permissum, a communione removeatur altaris, et qui in extremis cum peculio inventus fuerit, et digne non poenituerit, nec oblatio pro eo fiat, nec inter fratres accipiat sepulturam; quod etiam de universis religiosis praecipimus observari. Abbas autem, qui diligenter ista non caverit, officii sui iacturam se noverit incursurum. Prioratus quoque seu obedientiae pretii donatione nulli tradantur; alioquin [et] dantes et accipientes a ministerio fiant ecclesiastico alieni. Priores autem, quum in ecclesiis conventuatibus per electionem capitulorum suorum canonice fuerint instituti, nisi pro manifesta et rationabili causa non mutentur videlicet si fuerint dilapidatores, si incontinenter vixerint, aut tale aliquid egerint, pro quo amovendi merito videantur, aut si etiam pro necessitate maioris officii de consilio fratrum fuerint transferendi.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: He admonishes the Cistercians to observe the rule according to its original institution. This it says first. And a religious house aggregated to the Cistercians is bound to observe their customs. This it says second.

Alexander III, to the Abbots and Convents of the Cistercian Order.

Recalling how this holy plantation, this fruitful vine, and finally this vineyard of the Lord of Hosts budded under the first fathers of the order and, producing branches far and wide, brought forth flowers and poured out fragrances to drive away deadly poisons on every side, with most vigilant custody take care to adhere in all things to the footsteps of those through whom, with the Lord cooperating, a flower of honor of this kind was planted in the wilderness of this world. For these men, most content with monastic frugality, placing the best beginning in poverty, attained the complement of all sufficiency, dear to the church, acceptable to bishops and prelates, and glorious in reputation and merit in the sight of kings and princes. But now, what we say with sorrow is that, although not by all nor in all things, nevertheless by very many and in many things there is said to have been a departure from that holy institution to such a degree that some of you, utterly forgetful or ignorant of the first institution, contrary to the rule of your order possess villages, mills, churches, and altars; benignly receive fealties and homages; hold jurisdictions and tributaries; and apply every effort so that their boundaries may be enlarged on earth, although their conversation ought to be in heaven. Hence the order is utterly injured and corrupted, and it is not a change of the right hand of the Most High; indeed, rather, those pass from the right hand to the left who, after they decreed to serve God under the habit of poverty when they abandoned the world, are again entangled in secular affairs. From this, contentions and litigations are stirred up against you by those who are outside; and, while the abbots are occupied in forensic causes, torpor of the order and dissolution of charity arise exceedingly in the houses committed to them—especially because charity advances more in poverty and, disdainful of fellowship with cupidity, unless the latter is restrained, the former grows cold.

And therefore, with the entreaties and admonitions that we can, we exhort your holy and venerable college that those houses that were founded in that order from their first origin be content with boundaries established and ordained, and not wish inordinately to extend their hands toward those things that they will not be able to retain without many labors and dangers and thereafter without crimes and great confusion. For if, after abandoning the original institutes of the order, you wish to turn aside toward the common laws of other monasteries, you also will have to be judged by common law, because it is fitting that those who assume a life similar to others should experience a similar discipline under the laws.

But let those houses that have transferred themselves from other institutes to your order strive wholly to conform themselves to your usages; and, after abandoning or even exchanging possessions that your institute does not receive, let them so adapt themselves in all things to your religion that, just as they rejoice that they themselves have been assumed into fellowship of the order and identity of habit and regular observance, so also in the poverty of secular things they may rejoice that they have been conformed to your institutes, so that from this they ought to become both more lovable to the heavenly Creator and deservedly dearer to us and the universal church. Indeed, if the authority of the Apostolic See has dispensed concerning these possessions in the case of any one of your monasteries, no example is to be taken from this by any of you, because it is rash and unworthy for anyone to presume by his own authority for himself what, after attending to a certain reason, the Roman church wished to grant to some monastery by singular benefits.

> Monet Cistercienses, ut servent regulam secundum primaevam institutionem. H. d. primo. Et domus religiosa aggregata Cisterciensibus eorum mores servare tenetur. H. d. secundo.
>
> Alexander III. Abbatibus et Conventibus Cisterciensis ordinis.
>
> Recolentes, qualiter haec sancta plantatio, +haec vitis fructifera, haec denique vinea Domini Sabaoth sub primis ordinis patribus pullulavit, et, palmites longe lateque producens ad mortifera pellenda circumquaque venena flores protulit et odores effudit, pervigili custodia custodiatis eorum in omnibus inhaerere vestigiis, per quos cooperante Domino in deserto mundi huius flos huiuscemodi plantatus est honestatis. Hi enim monasticae frugalitatis contentissimi, optimum ponentes in paupertate principium, totius sufficientiae assecuti sunt complementum, ecclesiae cari, episcopis et praelatis accepti, atque in conspectu regum ac principum fama et merito gloriosi. Nunc autem, quod Dolentes dicimus, quod, etsi non ab omnibus neque in omnibus, a plerisque tamen et in pluribus ab illa sancta institutione dicitur declinatum in tantum, ut aliqui ex vobis, primae institutionis obliti penitus vel ignorantes, contra ordinis vestri regulam villas, molendina, ecclesias et altaria possident, fidelitates et hominia benigne suscipiunt, iustitiarias et tributarias tenent, +et omne studium adhibent, ut termini eorum dilatentur in terris, quorum conversatio in coelis debet esse. Laeditur hinc ordo penitus et vitiatur, nec est mutatio dexterae excelsi, quin immo potius de dextera transeunt in sinistram, qui, quum relicto saeculo sub paupertatis habitu Deo militare decreverunt, negotiis denuo saecularibus implicantur. Inde est, quod vobis ab iis, qui foris sunt, contentiones et litigia suscitantur, et, abbatibus in causis forensibus occupatis, plurimum in commissis domibus et tepor ordinis et dissolutio nascitur caritatis; maxime quia in paupertate caritas plus proficit, et cupiditatis dedignata consortium, nisi illa restringatur, haec tepescit. Ideoque sanctum ac venerabilem collegium vestrum precibus et monitis, quibus possumus, exhortamur, quatenus domus illae, quae a prima sui origine in ipso ordine sunt fundatae, constitutis et ordinatis terminis sint contentae; +nec velint inordinate ad ea manus extendere, quae sine laboribus et periculis multis, et deinde sine criminibus et magna confusione non poterunt retinere. Si enim relictis originalibus ordinis institutis ad communia volueritis aliorum monasteriorum iura divertere, oportebit et vos communi iure censeri, quia dignum est, ut, si qui similem cum aliis vitam suscipiunt, similem sentiant in legibus disciplinam. Ceterum domus illae, quae de aliis institutionibus ad vestrum ordinem se transtulerint, vestris omnino se satagant usibus conformare, et relictis possessionibus vel etiam commutatis, quas institutio vestra non recipit, sic se in omnibus religioni vestrae coaptent, ut, quemadmodum gaudent se in societatem ordinis, et habitus et observantiae regularis identitatem assumptas sic etiam in paupertate saecularium rerum se laetentur vestris institutionibus conformatas, quatenus inde et superno conditori magis amabiles, et nobis atque universae ecclesiae merito debeant fieri cariores. Sane si super possessionibus ipsis in aliquo de monasteriis vestris Apostolicae sedis auctoritas dispensarit a nullo vestrum sumendum est inde exemplum quia temerarium est et indignum aliquem sua sibi auctoritate praesumere quod Romana ecclesia alicui monasterio certa ratione inspecta, singularibus voluit indulgere beneficiis.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A regular canon who did not resign his private property at death ought not be buried in the cemetery; and if he was in fact buried, he ought to be exhumed from it if this can be done without scandal.

Clement III.

Concerning a certain regular canon who, acting at the point of death, although admonished by his prior, was unwilling to resign the private property that he had secretly held contrary to the rule, and thus closed his last day and was given burial among the other brothers, you thought it necessary that we be consulted. But because we do not believe that you are ignorant of what is held established concerning such persons in the Rule of blessed Augustine, and that it is manifestly established that this same thing was prohibited at the Lateran synod, we answer your inquiry in this manner: that canon was not only to be deprived of Christian burial, but even, if it could be done without the greatest scandal, is worthy to be cast out of the church itself and buried outside the church's cemetery, since, as is expressed in the same synod, neither is an offering to be made for him nor ought he to have burial among the brothers. Moreover, when perhaps this happens, it is to be done in similar cases.

Regularis canonicus, qui non resignavit proprium in morte, non debet in coemeterio sepeliri; et, si de facto sepultus fuit, inde debet exhumari, si sine scandalo fieri potest.

Clemens III.

Super quodam canonico regulari, qui, in articulo mortis agens, licet a priore suo commonitus, proprium, quod contra regulam latenter habuerat, noluit resignare, et sic diem clausit extremum, et fuit inter alios fratres traditus sepulturae, +nos duxisti necessario requirendos. Quia vero te ignorare non credimus, quid de talibus in regula beati Augustini habeatur statutum, et quod id ipsum in Lateranensi synodo constet inhibitum manifeste, Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod ille canonicus non tantum fuit Christiana sepultura privandus, verum etiam, si sine maximo scandalo potuit fieri, de ipsa proiici dignus est ecclesia, et extra coemeterium ecclesiae sepeliri, quum, sicut in ipsa synodo habetur expressum, nec oblatio pro eo facienda sit, nec inter fratres debeat sepulturam habere. Hoc autem, quum forte contigerit, in similibus est agendum.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A regular canon can be placed over a parochial church, even a secular one; but he ought to have with him a companion of his order, if it can conveniently be done.

Innocent III, to V., Pleban of Saint Gavinius.

That you hold the fear of God before your eyes is evidently gathered from your fruits, since the works that you do bear witness to the truth. Hence we commend your purpose in the Lord. Indeed, as it sounded in our ears long ago, once, desiring to pass to the fruit of a better life, after resigning the office of pleban, you made a promise concerning your conversion before the brothers of Saint Victor of Bologna, neither emitting solemn profession nor assuming the religious habit. But the nobleman Count Albert and the parishioners of the same parish, attending to the fact that you had presided laudably and that no small loss threatened the same place from your departure, have until now delayed your desire; and they obtained from our venerable brother the Bishop of Florence that you minister there. Our beloved son P., cardinal priest of the basilica of the Twelve Apostles, then legate of the Apostolic See, after weighing the utility of the parish, is also said to have assented to this, which the aforesaid count and parishioners humbly petitioned us to hold ratified, especially since you are known until now to have done it with the license of the prior of Saint Victor of Bologna.

Although it is provided concerning monks at the Lateran Council that they are not to be placed singly throughout villages and towns or throughout any parochial churches, but are to remain in a larger convent or with some brothers, lest they await alone among secular persons the conflict of spiritual enemies, Solomon saying: "Woe to one alone! For if he falls, there is no one to raise him"; nevertheless, because this is not specially provided concerning regular canons, who, although they are not thought separated from the fellowship of holy monks, nevertheless serve a more lax rule, and because according to the ancient canons even monks can be ordained priests for the governance of parochial churches, from which they ought to exercise the office of preaching, which is privileged, we have thought that assent should be given to the petitions in this manner: that, while exercising the office of pleban, if it can conveniently be done, you have one regular canon with you for security, so that in those things that belong to God and regular observance you may enjoy both his fellowship and his solace.

> Canonicus regularis potest praefici ecclesiae parochiali etiam saeculari; sed debet habere socium secum sui ordinis, si commode fieri potest.
>
> Innocentius III. V. Plebano sancti Gavinii.
>
> Quod Dei timorem prae oculis habeas, ex fructibus tuis colligitur evidenter, quum opera, quae facis, testimonium perhibeant veritati. Unde tuum in Domino propositum commendamus. Sane, sicut iam dudum auribus nostris insonuit, quondam desiderans ad frugem melioris vitae transire, officium plebani resignans, coram fratribus S. Victoris Bononiensis promissionem de tua conversione fecisti, neque professionem solennem emittens, neque habitum religionis assumens; sed nobilis vir, comes Albertus, et parochiani plebis eiusdem, attendentes, te laudabiliter praefuisse, ac de recessu tuo eidem loco iacturam non modicam imminere, desiderium tuum hactenus retardarunt, a venerabili fratre nostro Florentino episcopo impetraverunt, ut ministrares ibidem. Hoc etiam dilectus filius noster P. basilicae duodecim Apostolorum presbyter cardinalis, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, pensata utilitate plebis proponitur annuisse, quod iam dicti comes et parochiani a nobis ratum haberi suppliciter postularunt; praesertim quum de licentia prioris sancti Victoris Bononiensis noscaris hactenus id fecisse. Licet autem in Lateranensi concilio de monachis caveatur, ne singuli per villas et oppida, seu per quascunque parochiales ponantur ecclesias, +sed in maiori conventu, aut cum aliquibus fratribus maneant, ne soli inter saeculares homines spiritualium hostium conflictum expectent, Salomone dicente: "Vae soli! Quia, si ceciderit, non est qui sublevet eum; " quia tamen istud de canonicis regularibus specialiter non cavetur, qui, etsi a sanctorum monachorum consortio non putentur seiuncti, regulae tamen inserviunt laxiori, et per antiquos canones etiam monachi possunt ad ecclesiarum parochialium regimen in presbyteros ordinari, ex quo debent praedicationis officium, quod privilegiatum est, exercere : sic annuendum duximus postulatis, ut exercens plebani officium, si commode fieri poterit, unum canonicum regularem tecum habeas ad cautelam, cuius in his, quae Dei sunt et regularis observantiae, tam consortio quam solatio perfruaris.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: First it treats of the clothing of monks. Secondly, of the renunciation of property. Thirdly, of silence. Fourthly, of foods. Fifthly, of offices in general and in particular.

The same, to the Abbot and Convent of Subiaco.

When we had come to the monastery of Subiaco in person: (And below:) We firmly prohibited any of the monks from henceforth using linen shirts. Moreover, to supply the defect of hospitality, he granted the multure of one mill, intending for the time being to grant greater things, yet in such a way that alms be conferred from the cellarer's office to relieve the necessity of the poor. But we recalled to the use of the sick the aforesaid churches that had been assigned as benefices to secular clerics, decreeing void the grant of the hospital that had been made to the Bishop of Anagni, and establishing that they should not thereafter be granted to anyone as a benefice; but let the infirmarian dispose of those churches as he knows will be more expedient for the necessities of the sick.

We also strictly prohibit, by virtue of obedience under attestation of divine judgment, that any monk henceforth possess private property in any way; but, if anyone has any private property, let him resign it all immediately. But if after this he is detected to have any property, after prior regular admonition let him be expelled from the monastery and not received thereafter unless he repents according to monastic discipline. But if property is found with anyone at death, let it be buried beneath the ground with him outside the monastery in a dunghill as a sign of perdition, according to what blessed Gregory narrates in the Dialogues that he did. Nevertheless, let the abbot and prior inquire frequently and investigate diligently, lest any of the brothers be able to have private property. Hence, if anything has been specially destined for anyone, let him not presume to receive it, but let it be assigned to the abbot, prior, or cellarer.

Moreover, in the oratory, refectory, and dormitory let continual silence always be observed, and in the cloister also at certain hours and places, according to the ancient custom of the monastery laudably observed, but henceforth to be observed more laudably. In the refectory, moreover, let no one eat flesh at all. Nor on certain solemnities, as was once customary to be done, let the convent go out with the abbot, a few being left there, to eat flesh outside the refectory, since on those days especially regular discipline is to be observed more studiously. Nor let them believe that eating flesh is lawful for them outside the refectory, except only in the infirmary, although by indulgence the abbot can sometimes call some of the brothers—now these, now those, as necessity demands—and furnish them better and more fully with food with him in his chamber.

Furthermore, let the weak and sick who need bloodletting or some medicine receive competently, not separately in chambers but all in the infirmary, whatever is necessary for them, both in flesh and in other things. But if any of them is so weak or even delicate that he cannot be content with the common foods, let provision be made for him without scandal to the others in such a way that, if the abbot or prior wishes to show him special mercy in the refectory, he cause some suitable food to be brought not before that man but before himself, from which he himself may make him a pittance for the sustenance of nature.

Let those who will be faithful and discreet be deputed to perform the offices of the monastery. Nor let any obedience be committed to anyone to be possessed perpetually, as though it were leased to him for his life; but, when he ought to be removed, let him be recalled without any contradiction. Moreover, above the others after the abbot, let the prior be powerful in work and speech, so that by the example of his life and the word of doctrine he may both instruct his brothers in good and recall them from evil; having zeal for religion according to conscience, so that he may reprove and chastise offenders, but cherish and strengthen the obedient. Moreover, let the abbot, whom all are reverently to obey in all things, be with the brothers in convent as frequently as he can, bearing vigilant care and diligent solicitude concerning all things, so that he may be able to render to God a worthy account of the office committed to him. But if he is a transgressor or contemner of the order, or negligent or remiss, let him know for certain that he is not only to be deposed from office but also to be chastised in another manner according to the rule [gravely], since not only his own offense but also another's will be required from his hands. Nor let the abbot think that he can dispense with any monk concerning the possession of property, because renunciation of property, just like the guarding of chastity, is annexed to the monastic rule to such a degree that not even the Supreme Pontiff can grant license contrary to it.

> Primo tractat de vestibus monachorum. Secundo de abdicatione proprietatis. Tertio de silentio. Quarto de cibis. Quinto de officiis in genere et in specie.
>
> Idem Abbati et Conventui Sublacensibus.
>
> Quum ad monasterium Sublacense +personaliter venissemus: (Et infra:) Firmiter inhibuimus, ne quis de cetero monachorum lineis camisiis uteretur. +Ad defectum autem hospitalitatis supplendum mouturam unius molendini, concessit, ampliora pro tempore concessurus, ita tamen, quod ad necessitatem pauperum sublevandam eleemosyna de cellerario conferatur. Nos autem praefatas ecclesias, quae clericis saecularibus fuerant in beneficium assignatae, ad usum revocavimus infirmorum, concessionem hospitalis, quae facta fuerat episcopo Anagnino, irritam decernentes, et statuentes, ne cuiquam ulterius in beneficium concedantur; sed infirmarius disponat de illis ecclesiis, prout ad necessitates infirmorum magis noverit expedire. Prohibemus quoque districte in virtute obedientiae sub obtestatione divini iudicii, ne quis de cetero monachorum proprium aliquo modo possideat; sed, si quis aliquid habeat proprii, totum in continenti resignet. Si vero post hoc proprietatem aliquam fuerit deprehensus habere, regulari monitione praemissa de monasterio expellatur, nec recipiatur ulterius, nisi poeniteat secundum monasticam disciplinam. Quodsi proprietas apud quemquam inventa fuerit in morte, ipsa cum eo in signum perditionis extra monasterium in sterquilinio subterretur, secundum quod beatus Gregorius narrat in Dialogo se fecisse. Abbas tamen et prior frequenter inquirant et diligenter explorent, ne quis fratrum proprietatem possit habere. Unde, si quicquam alicui fuerit specialiter destinatum, non praesumat illud accipere, sed abbati, vel priori vel cellerario assignetur. In oratorio vero, refectorio et dormitorio continuum semper silentium observetur, in claustro quoque certis horis et locis, secundum antiquam consuetudinem monasterii laudabiliter observatam, sed amodo laudabilius observandam. In refectorio vero nullus omnino carne vescatur. Nec in quibusdam solennitatibus, sicut aliquando fieri consuevit, conventus exeat cum abbate, paucis ibi relictis, ut extra refectorium edant carnes; quum in illis diebus praecipue regularis disciplina sit studiosius observanda. Sed nec extra refectorium, nisi tantum in infirmitorio, esum carnium credant sibi licere, quamquam ex indulgentia possit abbas interdum aliquos fratrum, nunc hos, nunc illos, prout necessitas postulaverit, advocare, ipsosque secum in camera sua melius et plenius exhibere. Porro debiles et infirmi, qui minutione indigent vel aliquamedicina, non seorsum in cameris, sed omnes in infirmitorio quae necessaria fuerint sibi tam in carnibus quam in aliis recipiant competenter. Quodsi quis eorum debilis fuerit, aut etiam delicatus, ut non possit communibus cibis esse contentus, sic ei provideatur sine scandalo aliorum, ut, si abbas vel prior voluerit in refectorio misericordiam ei facere specialem, cibum aliquem competentem, non ante illum, sed ante se faciat apportari, de quo ipse illi faciat pitantiam pro sustentatione naturae. Tales autem ad agenda officia monasterii deputentur, qui fideles fuerint et discreti. Nec alicui committatur aliqua obedientia perpetuo possidenda, tanquam in sua sibi vita locetur; sed, quum oportuerit amoveri, sine contradictione qualibet revocetur. Prior autem prae ceteris post abbatem potens sit in opere et sermone, ut exemplo vitae verboque doctrinae fratres suos et instruere possit in bono, et a malo etiam revocare; zelum religionis habens secundum conscientiam, ut delinquentes corripiat et castiget, obedientes vero foveat et confortet. Abbas vero, cui omnes in omnibus reverenter obediant, quanto frequentius poterit, sit cum fratribus in conventu, vigilem curam et diligentem sollicitudinem gerens de omnibus, ut de officio sibi commisso dignam Deo possit reddere rationem. Quodsi praevaricator ordinis fuerit aut contemptor, seu negligens aut remissus, pro certo se noverit non solum ab officio deponendum, sed et alio modo secundum regulam [graviter] castigandum : quum offensa non solum propria, verum etiam aliena de suis manibus requiratur. Nec aestimet abbas, quod super habenda proprietate possit cum aliquo monacho dispensare; quia abdicatio proprietatis, sicut et custodia castitatis, adeo est annexa regulae monachali, ut contra eam nec summus Pontifex possit licentiam indulgere.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: First, it establishes that provincial councils of regulars are to be celebrated every three years. Secondly, it moderates the number of mounts and persons coming. Thirdly, it disposes concerning the instructors and those presiding over the chapter. Fourthly, concerning the time for which the chapter is to last and what will be done there. Fifthly, that what is done there be observed. Sixthly, concerning the following chapter. Seventhly, concerning leading a common life. Eighthly, concerning the visitors to be elected and their office. Ninthly, it extends this to regular canons. Tenthly, it provides concerning a disagreement among the visitors. Eleventhly, it exhorts diocesans to the reformation of monasteries. Twelfthly, it commands that the insolent and similar persons be restrained from offenses against monasteries. And this division suffices for a summary.

The same, in the General Council.

In each kingdom or province, saving the right of the diocesan pontiffs, let a common chapter of abbots and of priors who do not have their own abbots and who have not been accustomed to celebrate such a chapter be held every three years. Let all who do not have a canonical impediment come to it at one of the monasteries suitable for this, with this moderation applied: that none of them bring more than six mounts and eight persons. Moreover, [charitably] let them invite, at the beginnings of an innovation of this kind, two neighboring abbots of the Cistercian order to furnish them suitable counsel and aid, since they are more fully instructed by long custom in celebrating chapters of this kind. Without contradiction, let these associate with themselves two from among them whom they see to be expedient, and let these four preside over the whole chapter in such a way that none of them assume for himself from this the authority of prelacy, whence, when it is expedient, he can be changed by provident deliberation.

Let a chapter of this kind be celebrated continuously for some certain days according to the custom of the Cistercian order, in which diligent discussion is to be had concerning reformation of the order and regular observance. And let what has been established with the approval of those four be inviolably observed [by all], every excuse, [and] contradiction, and appeal having been removed, provision nonetheless having been made as to where the chapter ought to be celebrated at the following term. And let those who have come lead a common life and together make all common expenses proportionately, in such a way that, if all cannot stay in the same buildings, at least several may stay together in different houses.

Let religious and circumspect persons also be appointed in the same chapter who, according to the form prescribed for them, should take care in our place to visit the individual abbeys of the same kingdom or province, not only of monks but also of nuns, correcting and reforming those things that they see to need the office of correction and reformation. If they recognize that the ruler of a place is to be removed entirely from administration, let them announce it to his own bishop so that he may take care to remove him. But if he does not do this, let the visitors themselves report it to the examination of the Apostolic See. We will and command regular canons to observe this same thing according to their order.

But if in this innovation any difficulty emerges that cannot be resolved through the aforesaid persons, let it be referred without scandal to the judgment of the Apostolic See, the other things that have been provided by concordant deliberation being irrefragably observed. Furthermore, let diocesan bishops take care so to reform the monasteries subject to them that, when the aforesaid visitors approach them, they may find in them more that is worthy of commendation than of correction, most attentively taking care lest the said monasteries be burdened by them with undue burdens; because, just as we wish the rights of superiors to be observed, so we are unwilling for inferiors to sustain injuries.

In addition to this, we strictly command both diocesan bishops and the persons who will preside over the chapters to be celebrated that, through ecclesiastical censure, appeal having been removed, they restrain advocates, patrons, vicedomini, rectors and consuls, magnates and knights, or any others, lest they presume to offend monasteries in persons or things; and if perhaps they have offended, let them not omit to compel them to satisfaction, so that the monks may be able more freely and quietly to serve almighty God.

> Primo statuit de conciliis regularium provincialibus celebrandis singulis trienniis. Secundo moderatur numerum evectionum et personarum venientium. Tertio disponit de instructoribus et praesidentibus capitulo. Quarto de tempore, quo duret capitulum, et quid ibi fiet. Quinto quod observetur quod ibi fiet. Sexto de capitulo sequenti. Septimo de communi vita ducenda. Octavo de visitatoribus eligendis et ipsorum officio. Nono extendit ad canonicos regulares. Decimo providet super discordia visitatorum. Undecimo hortatur dioecesanos ad monasteriorum reformationem. Duodecimo praecipit protervos et similes compesci ab offensis monasteriorum. Et haec divisio sufficit pro summario.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> In singulis regnis sive provinciis fiat de triennio in triennium, salvo iure dioecesanorum pontificum, commune capitulum abbatum atque priorum, abbates proprios non habentium, qui non consueverunt tale capitulum celebrare; ad quod universi conveniant, praepeditionem canonicam non habentes, apud unum de monasteriis ad hoc aptum; hoc adhibito moderamine, ut nullus eorum plus quam sex evectiones et octo personas adducat. Advocent autem [caritative] in huiusmodi novitatis primordiis duos Cisterciensis ordinis vicinos abbates ad praestandum sibi consilium et auxilium opportunum, quum sint in huiusmodi capitulis celebrandis ex longa consuetudine plenius informati; qui absque contradictione duos sibi de ipsis associent, quos viderint expedire, ac ipsi quatuor praesint capitulo universo ita, quod ex hoc nullus eorum sibi auctoritatem praelationis assumat, unde, quum expedierit, provida possit deliberatione mutari. Huiusmodi vero capitulum aliquot certis diebus continue iuxta morem Cisterciensis ordinis celebretur, in quo diligens habeatur tractatus de reformatione ordinis et observantia regulari. Et quod statutum fuerit illis quatuor approbantibus, [ab omnibus] inviolabiliter observetur omni excusatione [et] contradictione et appellatione remotis, proviso nihilominus, ubi sequenti termino debeat capitulum celebrari. Et qui convenerint vitam ducant communem, et faciant proportionabiliter simul omnes communes expensas ita, quod, si non omnes poterunt in eisdem, saltem plures simul in diversis domibus commorentur. Ordinentur etiam in eodem capitulo religiosae ac circumspectae personae, quae singulas abbatias eiusdem regni seu provinciae non solum monachorum, sed etiam monialium, secundum formam sibi praefixam, vice nostra studeant visitare, corrigentes et reformantes quae correctionis et reformationis officio viderint indigere, ita, quod, si rectorem loci cognoverint ab administratione penitus amovendum, denuncient episcopo proprio, ut illum amovere procuret. Quod si non fecerit, ipsi visitatores hoc referant ad apostolicae sedis examen. Hoc ipsum regulares canonicos secundum ordinem suum volumus et praecipimus observare. Si vero in hac novitate quicquam difficultatis emerserit, quod per praedictas personas nequeat expediri, ad apostolicae sedis iudicium absque scandalo referatur, ceteris irrefragabiliter observatis, quae concordi fuerint deliberatione provisa. Porro dioecesani episcopi monasteria sibi subiecta ita studeant reformare, ut, quum ad ea praedicti visitatores accesserint, plus in illis inveniant, quod commendatione, quam quod correctione sit dignum, attentissime praecaventes, ne per eos dicta monasteria indebitis oneribus aggraventur, quia, sicut volumus superiorum iura observari, ita inferiores nolumus iniurias sustinere. Ad hoc districte praecipimus tam dioecesanis episcopis quam personis, quae praeerunt capitulis celebrandis, ut per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compescant advocatos, patronos, vicedominos, rectores et consules, magnates et milites, seu quoslibet alios, ne monasteria praesumant offendere in personis aut rebus, et, si forsitan offenderint, eos ad satisfactionem compellere non omittant, ut liberius et quietius omnipotenti Deo valeant famulari.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: First it treats of the correction of monks. Secondly, of the correction of abbots; thirdly, of visitors. Fourthly, of secular persons beneficed in monasteries. Fifthly, it extends the constitution to nuns. Let this suffice for a summary.

Honorius III, to the Abbots and Monks Constituted in Lombardy and the March of Treviso.

Those things that are providently ordained for the honor of religion and the salvation of religious are to be strengthened by apostolic protection, so that they may be received more devoutly and observed more diligently. Since, therefore, through our beloved son the Abbot of Montisbellus certain chapters were presented to us that, for chastising the manifold transgressions and excesses he had found in certain monasteries, appeared laudably to be established for your salvation and honor, we caused them to be examined and corrected, and we command you to observe inviolably those that, for security, we caused to be fortified with the seals of our venerable brothers H., Bishop of Ostia, and N., Bishop of Tusculum. In addition to these things, we will and command by the authority of the present letters that the visitors summon to the general chapter the abbots and the priors not having their own abbots, both exempt and non-exempt, of Lombardy and the March, who have not been accustomed to celebrate a chapter of this kind; providing that, every canonical impediment having been removed, in the general chapter itself they compel by ecclesiastical censure, the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal having been removed, those who have contemned or neglected to come, and not relax until fitting satisfaction the sentence that they have duly rendered against them; and by the same censure they are to cause what has been ordained in the same chapter by provident deliberation to be firmly observed. Both they themselves and the visitors and others, according to the ministry of each, will render an account at the final examination to the Lord, in whose sight all things are naked and open, if they neglect to apply all the solicitude and diligence that ought to be expended upon the correction and reformation of the order and the visitation of the monasteries.

Furthermore, when the visitors appointed by the general chapter of abbots according to the statute of the general council proceed to execute the office of visitation, let them inquire diligently concerning the condition of the monks and regular observances, and correct and reform in both spiritual and temporal matters what they see is to be corrected; yet in such a way that they cause offending monks to be corrected through the abbot of the place and salutary penance to be enjoined upon them according to the Rule of blessed Benedict and the apostolic institutes, not according to the norm of a depraved custom that has grown strong as though law in certain churches. Let the visitors themselves also strike, in our place, by regular censure and according to the measure of the fault, without preference of persons, those monks whom they find contumacious and rebellious, not sparing the rebellious because of their obstinacy or the power of their friends, but casting the diseased sheep out of the sheepfold, lest it infect the healthy sheep.

But if abbots are found negligent in correcting themselves or their monks according to the mandate of the visitors and the regular institutes, let them be denounced and reproved and so punished publicly in the general chapter that their punishment may be an example to others. But if any non-exempt abbot is found by the visitors to be excessively negligent and remiss, let them announce it without delay to the diocesan of the place, and through him let a faithful and provident coadjutor be given to the abbot until the general chapter. But if he is found to be a dissipator or otherwise deservedly to be removed, after this has been announced to him by the visitors, let him be removed by the diocesan from governance of the abbey without the clamor of judicial proceedings, and meanwhile let a suitable administrator be provided for the monastery to bear care of its temporal things until the monastery itself has been provided with an abbot. But if perhaps the bishop is unwilling or neglects to fulfill this, let the visitors or those presiding in the general chapter not defer intimating the bishop's default to the Apostolic See.

We command these same things to be done concerning exempt abbots through the visitors or those presiding in the general chapter, only their deposition being reserved to the Apostolic See, so that, when an abbot who appears ought to be removed has meanwhile been suspended from administration by the visitors or those presiding in the chapter, a suitable administrator may be deputed to the monastery. Moreover, let those presiding over the chapter announce to us through faithful and prudent messengers their excesses and the other matters that appear should be intimated; to these messengers let sufficient expenses be ministered from the common contribution of the abbots according to the means of each. Moreover, let the succeeding visitors diligently seek out the footsteps of the previous visitors and report their negligences and excesses to the following general chapter, so that according to the fault they may publicly bear the punishment due. We command this same thing also to be observed concerning the abbots presiding over the general chapter.

We also command that henceforth in no monastery are abbots and monks to receive secular clerics to prebends; nor let those who have already been received strive to claim for themselves a place or voice in the chapter, dormitory, refectory, or cloister, or presume importunately to mingle themselves with the assemblies of the monks; but, content with the benefices granted to them, let them conduct themselves honorably, faithfully furnishing appropriate services in the monasteries, and demand or usurp nothing further in spiritual or temporal matters in the monasteries themselves. But if any such persons are found criminal by the visitors, let them be deprived of the same benefices through the diocesan bishop in non-exempt monasteries, and through the visitors or those presiding over the general chapter in exempt monasteries. Moreover, we command all these things to be observed also in monasteries that do not have their own abbots but priors, and also in monasteries of nuns, as to the articles fitting abbesses and nuns.

> Primo tractat de correctione monachorum. Secundo de correctione abbatum, tertio visitatorum. Quarto de saecularibus in monasteriis beneficiatis. Quinto constitutionem extendit ad moniales. Hoc sufficiat pro summario.
>
> Honorius III. Abbatibus et Monachis in Lombardia et Marchia Tervisina constitutis.
>
> Ea, quae pro religionis honestate +ac religiosorum salute provide ordinantur, apostolico munimine sunt roboranda, ut suscipiantur devotius et diligentius observentur. Quum ergo per dilectum filium abbatem Montisbelli quaedam capitula nobis fuerint praesentata, quae ad castigandum transgressiones multiplices et excessus, quos in quibusdam coenobiis invenerat, videbantur pro salute et honestate vestra laudabiliter statuenda: nos ea examinari et corrigi fecimus, et praecipimus, ut inviolabiliter observetis, quae sigillis venerabilium fratrum nostrorum H. Ostiensis et N. Tusculanensis episcoporum muniri fecimus ad cautelam. Ad haec volumus et praesentium auctoritate praecipimus, ut visitatores ad generale capitulum convocent abbates et priores non habentes abbates proprios tam exemptos, quam non exemptos Lombardiae et Marchiae, qui non consueverunt huiusmodi capitulum celebrare, providentes, ut in ipso capitulo generali, canonico impedimento sublato, eos, qui contempserint vel neglexerint convenire, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo censura ecclesiastica compellant, et usque ad satisfactionem condignam sententiam, quam in eos rite tulerint, non relaxent, eadem censura facturi quae in eodem capitulo deliberatione provida fuerint ordinata firmiter observari, reddituri tam ipsi quam visitatores et alii iuxta cuiuslibet ministerium Domino, in cuius conspectu nuda sunt omnia et aperta, in extremo examine rationem, si omnem sollicitudinem et diligentiam, quae circa correctionem et reformationem ordinis ac visitationem coenobiorum impendendae fuerint, neglexerint adhibere. Porro, quum visitatores, secundum statutum generalis concilii ordinati a generali abbatum capitulo, processerint ad visitationis officium exsequendum, de statu monachorum et observantiis regularibus diligenter inquirant, et tam in spiritualibus quam in temporalibus corrigant et reforment quae viderint corrigenda, ita tamen, quod monachos delinquentes per abbatem loci corrigi faciant, eisque iniungi poenitentiam salutarem iuxta beati Benedicti regulam et apostolica instituta, non secundum normam pravae consuetudinis, quae quasi pro lege in quibusdam ecclesiis inolevit. Ipsi etiam visitatores monachos, quos contumaces invenerint et rebelles, iuxta modum culpae vice nostra regulari censura percellant absque personarum delectu, non parcendo rebellibus ob suam pertinaciam vel potentiam amicorum, quin ovem morbidam eiiciant ab ovili, ne inficiat sanas oves. Si vero abbates in corrigendis iuxta visitatorum mandatum et regularia instituta in se ipsis seu monachis inventi fuerint negligentes, proclamentur et corripiantur, et ita puniantur publice in capitulo generali, quod poena ipsorum sit aliis in exemplum. Quod si abbas aliquis non exemptus fuerit a visitatoribus nimis negligens et remissus inventus, id loci dioecesano denuncient sine mora, et per illum detur ei fidelis et providus coadiutor usque ad capitulum generale. Si autem dilapidator inventus fuerit vel alias merito amovendus, per dioecesanum, postquam hoc sibi a visitatoribus denunciatum fuerit, amoveatur absque iudiciorum strepitu a regimine abbatiae, ac monasterio provideatur interim administrator idoneus, qui temporalium curam gerat, donec ipsi monasterio fuerit de abbate provisum. Quodsi forsitan episcopus hoc adimplere noluerit vel neglexerit, visitatores vel praesidentes in capitulo generali defectum episcopi apostolicae sedi non differant intimare. Haec eadem circa exemptos abbates fieri praecipimus per visitatores vel praesidentes in capitulo generali, depositione tantum ipsorum sedi apostolicae reservata, ita, ut abbate, qui amovendus videbitur, interim per visitatores vel in capitulo praesidentes ab administratione suspenso administrator idoneus monasterio deputetur. Illorum autem excessus et alia, quae visa fuerint intimanda, capitulo praesidentes nobis denuncient per fideles nuncios et prudentes, quibus de communi contributione abbatum iuxta cuiuslibet facultatem sufficienter ministrentur expensae. Sequentes autem visitatores perquirant priorum visitatorum vestigia diligenter, et eorum negligentias et excessus referant sequenti capitulo generali, ut iuxta culpam publice debitam poenam portent. Idem etiam de abbatibus praesidentibus generali capitulo praecipimus observari. Praecipimus quoque, ut in nullo monasterio ad praebendas recipiant de cetero abbates et monachi clericos saeculares, nec hi, qui iam recepti sunt, locum vel vocem in capitulo, dormitorio vel refectorio seu claustro sibi vindicare contendant, seu monachorum coetibus importune se praesumant miscere, sed beneficiis sibi concessis contenti conversentur honeste, opportuna obsequia in monasteriis fideliter impendentes, nihilque ultra in spiritualibus aut temporalibus exigant in ipsis monasteriis vel usurpent. Si qui vero talium a visitatoribus inventi fuerint criminosi, per dioecesanum episcopum in non exemptis, et per visitatores vel praesidentes, generali capitulo in exemptis monasteriis beneficiis priventur eisdem. Haec autem omnia etiam in monasteriis, quae non habent abbates proprios, sed priores, nec non in monasteriis monialium, quoad articulos abbatissis et monialibus congruentes, praecipimus observari.

Title XXXVI: On Religious Houses, That They Be Subject to the Bishop

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If it is doubtful in whose diocese a basilica to be consecrated is situated, that bishop who previously exercised episcopal rights in that place will consecrate it.

Gregory, to Victor, Archbishop of Naples.

But now, concerning this basilica that is to be dedicated, this ought to be investigated: who—that is, the bishop of which city—before the basilica that has recently been constructed was founded, baptized the inhabitants, and to whose confirmation they resorted with annual devotion. For it is not fitting that these things be determined by boundaries or places, but that the diocese be made his who is described above, so that it may be established by whom the inhabitants were cleansed through the laver of regeneration. And therefore, dearest brothers, all ambiguities having been removed and every circumlocution set aside, it is fitting that you investigate these things by every means, so that he especially may be called to the consecration to whom it is established that permission ought to be granted by the method we have written.

DE RELIGIOSIS DOMIBUS, UT EPISCOPO SINT SUBIECTAE.

Si dubitatur, in cuius dioecesi sit basilica consecranda, ille episcopus consecrabit, qui prius in illo loco episcopalia exercebat.

Gregorius Victori Archiepiscopo Neapolis.

Nunc autem ad hanc basilicam, quae dedicanda est, illud debet disquiri, quis, id est cuius civitatis episcopus, antequam basilica, quae nuper fabricata est, fundaretur, baptizaverit incolas, et ad cuius consignationem sub annua devotione concurrerint. Non enim terminis haec aut locis convenit definiri, sed illius facere dioecesim, qui superius continetur, ut constet, commanentes a quo fuerint lavacri regeneratione purgati, et ideo, fratres carissimi, amotis ambagibus et omni circuitione semota haec vos modis omnibus convenit investigare, ut ille maxime ad consecrationem vocetur, cui per hunc modum, quem scripsimus, constat debere permitti.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: No right is lost by the bishop in whose diocese a church is situated when the Pope unites that church to a church of another diocese. And it is an everyday case.

The same, to Abbot Agapitus.

Because the monastery situated on the Marcian estate in the province of Campania is said, through the action of hostility, to have been [so] utterly desolated [of its community] [that not even one monk remained from it who ought to apply any solicitude or care there,] we have considered it useful that it be united to your monastery with all its things and the actions that belong to it, [so that you may have free and wholly unquestioned license to hold its things or vindicate them from those detaining them. Let it also belong to your diligence to depute monks there who, at a time when there is a respite from the enemy, ought both to celebrate the work of God there and to serve fittingly. Nor may you presume to neglect it under any pretext, since it is committed to your care for this reason, that you ought to apply solicitude there.] Nevertheless, know that we have committed that monastery to your ordering in such a way that jurisdiction there is to be held not by the Bishop of Sorrento, in whose city your monastery is situated, but by the Bishop of Nocera, whose diocese it is. For we dispose the ordering of this place in such a way that nevertheless we preserve inviolate for each bishop his own rights.

Nihil iuris deperit episcopo, in cuius dioecesi sita est ecclesia, quam Papa unit ecclesiae alterius diocesis. Et est casus quotidianus.

Idem Agapito Abbati.

Quia monasterium quod in fundo Marciano provinciae Campaniae situm est, [ita] hostilitate faciente [a congregatione] funditus dicitur desolatum, [ut ne unus exinde monachus, qui aliquam illic sollicitudinem vel curam debeat adhibere, remanserit,] illud tuo monasterio cum omnibus rebus suis, vel quae ei competunt actionibus, utile perspeximus uniendum, +[ut res eius tenendi vel a detinentibus vindicandi libera tibi sit et sine aliqua dubietate licentia. In quo etiam studii tui sit monachos deputare, qui illic tempore, quo intervallum de hoste fuerit, et opus Dei celebrare, et decenter debeant deservire. Nec aliqua illud praesumas excusatione negligere, quod ideo curae tuae, ut sollicitudinem illic debeas adhibere, committitur.] Ipsum autem monasterium sic tuae nos ordinationi commisisse cognoscas, ut tamen iurisdictionem illic non episcopus Surrentinus, in cuius civitate monasterium tuum est situm, sed Nucerinus, cuius est dioecesis, habeat. Nam sic huius loci ordinationem disponimus, ut tamen iura sua singulis episcopis inviolata servemus.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: All pious places are subject to the bishop, and through his solicitude they ought to be ordered for the use for which they were destined.

From the decrees of Pope Eugenius.

Concerning hospices and other similar places, through the solicitude of the bishops in whose dioceses they exist, let them be ordered toward those same useful purposes for which they were established.

Episcopo subsunt omnia loca pia, et ad eius sollicitudinem debent ordinari ad usum destinatum.

Ex decretis Eugenii Papae.

De xenodochiis et aliis similibus locis per sollicitudinem episcoporum, in quorum dioecesi exsistunt, ad easdem utilitates, quibus constituta sunt, ordinentur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A place deputed by authority of the bishop to the use of hospitality is religious and ought not return to worldly uses.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Rimini.

To these things, concerning what was asked of us—whether a hospital house can be changed to a secular condition —we respond to your inquiry in this way: if that place was destined by authority of the pontiff for the use of hospitality and the provision of the poor, as is customary, since it is religious it ought not be deputed to worldly uses, just as ancient custom unquestionably observes concerning vestments and wooden vessels and other utensils deputed by the pontiff to the cultivation of religion, and the sanctions of the venerable Fathers teach.

Locus, auctoritate episcopi ad usum hospitalitatis deputatus, est religiosus, et ad mundanos usus redire non debet.

Urbanus III. Ariminensi Episcopo.

Ad haec +super eo, quod quaesitum est a nobis, utrum hospitalis domus possit in saecularem habitum commutari, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si locus ille ad hospitalitatis usum et pauperum provisionem fuerit, sicut moris est, auctoritate pontificis destinatus, quum sit religiosus, non debet mundanis usibus deputari, sicut de vestibus et ligneis vasis, et aliis utensilibus ad cultum religionis per pontificem deputatis, antiqua consuetudo indubitanter observat, et venerabilium Patrum edocent sanctiones.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A religious place ought to be reformed with religious persons only, not with secular persons, unless religious persons are lacking.

Innocent III, to the Patriarch of Constantinople.

Among four (And below: [cf. c. 8, On Majority and Obedience, I. 33.]) Concerning also the monasteries of the Greeks to be converted into secular canonries, we respond to your fraternity in this way: As long as the monasteries can remain ordered through regular men, whether Greeks or Latins, they are not to be transferred to secular clerics. But if regulars are lacking, secular clerics will be able to be ordained in them because of their deficiency. [Furthermore, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the fourth day before the Nones of August, in the ninth year. 1206.]

Locus religiosus debet reformari de religiosis duntaxat, non de saecularibus, nisi in defectum religiosorum.

Innocentius III. Constantinopolitano Patriarchae.

Inter quatuor (Et infra: [cf. c. 8. de mai. et ob. I. 33.]) De monasteriis quoque Graecorum, in saeculares canonicos convertendis, fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, Quamdiu monasteria per regulares viros, sive Graecos sive Latinos, remanere potuerint ordinata, non sunt ad saeculares clericos transferenda. Sed si regulares defuerint, propter eorum defectum in eis saeculares clerici poterunt ordinari [Praeterea etc. Dat. Ferentini IV. Non. Aug. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A church situated in the diocese of a bishop is bound to answer to him in episcopal rights unless they appear to have been lawfully remitted; and the bishop, when remitting episcopal rights, can retain a payment for himself.

The same, to the Abbot and Brothers of Grottaferrata.

Constituted in our presence, our venerable brother the Bishop of Albano sought episcopal right from you on two grounds in the church of the castle called Paul's, in which he acknowledged the right of patronage to your monastery: first, because it was situated in the diocese of Albano and therefore by common law was bound to answer to him in episcopal rights; second, because in many privileges of the Roman Pontiffs distinguishing the boundaries of the diocese of Albano, among the other churches in which he exercises jurisdiction, this church is confirmed to the church of Albano by apostolic authority. But your administrator proposed to the contrary that, although the church was situated in the diocese of Albano, and its name had been inscribed in the privilege of that bishop not without the vice of surreption, it nevertheless was not bound to answer to him in anything, since Alberic, formerly its founder, with the assent of Pope B. of happy memory, our predecessor, had conferred the often-mentioned church upon the monastery of Grottaferrata. Furthermore, Dominic, Bishop of Labico, concerning whom there was no contention between the parties, who had been Bishop of Albano, granted in emphyteusis to your monastery, under an annual payment of eight current denarii—which the public instrument names "annatas in capite"—all the churches pertaining to your monastery that were situated in his diocese, and whatever right he had both in your Grottaferrata monastery and in those churches; namely, so that it would be lawful for the abbot and brothers of the same monastery to obtain from whatever bishop they wished both the ordination of clerics and the consecration of altars in the monastery itself and the aforesaid churches. In them he also granted you a third part of the mortuary dues; and Pope C., our predecessor, confirmed by his privilege what had been done by him, and from certain knowledge established that it was to be observed perpetually. But, even if that church had at some time been subject to the church of Albano, your monastery nevertheless could defend itself by lawful prescription, since it had possessed it peacefully for forty years, which the same administrator endeavored to prove through witnesses.

The administrator of the aforesaid bishop, however, responded to the objections that the grant of the founder did not harm the church of Albano, since the founder had granted only the right of patronage to the aforesaid monastery, and he himself was not moving a controversy against you concerning the right of patronage. But he said that the grant of the Bishop of Labico was not valid, as containing simoniacal depravity. For since he had granted the same monastery a third part of the mortuary dues and had granted it full liberty both in the ordinations of clerics and in the consecrations of altars—namely, so that it could obtain them from whatever bishop it wished without anyone's contradiction—there is no doubt that, since these things are spiritual, by the very fact that he received for them the recompense of a fixed payment he committed the vice of simony. Hence a contract of this kind, as simoniacal, obtains no firmness. Moreover, the confirmation of the Apostolic See had been obtained concerning this through surreption, since no mention of the payment was made in it.

(And below:) Since, however, it is neither unusual nor new that, when bishops have granted some churches in both spiritual and temporal matters to pious places, they reserve something for themselves in them under the name of a payment, we also, when we grant either the privilege of liberty or the protection of defense to some churches, gratuitously receive a payment gratuitously offered, and in our letters, for the memory of our successors, express the payment and also its amount. (And below:) We therefore, after hearing these and other things proposed on both sides, by definitive sentence condemn the administrator of your monastery to the administrator of that bishop, in the name of the church of Labico, for payment of the aforesaid pension according to the proportion that falls upon the aforesaid church and for restitution, according to the same proportion, of what was withheld for forty years; and we absolve the same administrator of yours from the prosecution of the administrator of that bishop concerning the other matters, imposing perpetual silence upon him. Although a fixed penalty that the party not observing the contract would pay to the party observing it was expressed in the instrument of grant of the aforesaid Bishop of Labico, nevertheless, since each party is proved by its own confession to have acted contrary to it—since your party withheld the payment from the bishop, and the bishop exacted a procuration from the same church, as the aforesaid administrator proposed—we absolve each party from it.

> Ecclesia, sita in diocesi episcopi, tenetur sibi in episcopalibus respondere, nisi appareant remissa legitime; et potest episcopus remittendo episcopalia censum sibi retinere.
>
> Idem Abbati et Fratribus Cryptae ferratae.
>
> Constitutus in praesentia nostra venerabilis frater noster episcopus Albanensis in ecclesia Castri, quod Pauli dicitur, in qua ius patronatus monasterio vestro recognoscebat, a vobis ius episcopale duplici ratione petebat; primo, quoniam sita erat in dioecesi Albanensi, et ideo de iure communi ei tenebatur in episcopalibus respondere; +secundo, quoniam in multis privilegiis Romanorum Pontificum, distinguentibus fines dioecesis Albanensis, inter alias ecclesias, in quibus iurisdictionem exercet, haec Albanensi ecclesiae auctoritate apostolica confirmatur. Verum oeconomus vester proposuit ex adverso, quod, etsi ecclesia sita esset in dioecesi Albanensi, et in privilegio ipsius episcopi non sine subreptionis vitio eius esset nomen inscriptum, ei tamen non tenebatur in aliquo respondere, quum Albericus, quondam fundator ipsius, de assensu felicis recordationis B. Papae praedecessoris nostri monasterio Cryptae ferratae saepe dictam ecclesiam contulisset. Praeterea bonae memoriae Dominicus Lavitanus episcopus, de quo non erat contentio inter partes, qui fuerat episcopus Albanensis, universas ecclesias, ad vestrum monasterium pertinentes, in dioecesi eius sitas, et quicquid iuris tam in monasterio vestro Cryptae ferratae, quam in eis habebat, in emphyteusim sub annua octo denariorum usualium pensione quos annatas in capite publicum nominat instrumentum monasterio vestro concessit, ita videlicet, ut liceret abbati et fratribus eiusdem monasterii a quocunque vellent episcopo tam ordinationem clericorum quam consecrationem altarium in monasterio ipso et praedictis ecclesiis obtinere, in quibus etiam vobis tertiam partem mortuariorum indulsit, et C. Papa praedecessor noster quod ab eo factum fuerat suo privilegio confirmavit, et ex certa scientia statuit in perpetuum observandum. Verum, etsi ecclesia ipsa fuisset aliquando ecclesiae Albanensi subiecta, monasterium tamen vestrum nihilominus legitima se poterat praescriptione tueri, quum per quadraginta annos ipsam pacifice possedisset, quod per testes idem nisus est oeconomus comprobare. Ceterum oeconomus episcopi memorati ad obiecta respondit, quod concessio fundatoris Albanensi ecclesiae non nocebat, quum fundator solum ius patronatus monasterio concesserit memorato, et ipse super iure patronatus vobis controversiam non moveret; concessionem autem episcopi Lavitani non tenere dicebat, utpote continentem simoniacam pravitatem. Quum enim tertiam partem mortuariorum monasterio concessisset eidem, et tam in ordinationibus clericorum quam altarium consecrationibus indulsisset ei plenariam libertatem, sic videlicet, ut ea possent a quocunque mallent episcopo sine contradictione cuiuslibet obtinere: non est dubium, quin quum spiritualia haec exsistant eo ipso, quod super his recompensationem certae pensionis accepit, commiserit vitium simoniae. Unde contractus huiusmodi, velut simoniacus, nullam obtinet firmitatem. Confirmatio autem apostolicae sedis fuerat super hoc per subreptionem obtenta, quum in ea de pensione nulla mentio habeatur. (Et infra:) Quum autem nec insolitum sit, nec novum, ut, quum episcopi ecclesias aliquas tam in spiritualibus quam in temporalibus concesserint piis locis, aliquid sibi reservent in eis nomine pensionis, nos quoque, quum vel libertatis privilegium, vel protectionis praesidium aliquibus ecclesiis indulgemus, gratis accipiamus censum gratis oblatum, et in literis nostris ad successorum nostrorum memoriam census exprimamus et etiam quantitatem : (Et infra:) Nos igitur, auditis his et aliis hinc inde propositis, oeconomum monasterii vestri oeconomo eiusdem episcopi ecclesiae Lavicanae nomine in solutionem pensionis praedictae, iuxta ratam, quae contingit ecclesiam praedictam, et restitutionem subtractae a quadraginta annis, secundum ratam eandem, per diffinitivam sententiam condemnamus, et eundem oeconomum vestrum ab impetitione oeconomi eiusdem episcopi super aliis reddimus absolutum, perpetuum illi silentium imponentes. Licet autem in instrumento concessionis praedicti episcopi Lavicani expressa fuerit certa poena quam pars contractum non servans solveret observanti, quum tamen utraque pars venisse contra illum ex confessione propria convincatur, quum et pars vestra episcopo subtraxerit pensionem et episcopus procurationem exegerit ab eadem ecclesia sicut oeconomus proposuit memoratus utramque partem ab ea reddimus absolutam.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A bishop seeking a church as to temporal and spiritual matters prevails in spiritual matters by the very fact that he proves it to be in his diocese, if it does not appear to be exempt; but in temporal matters he loses unless the other party establishes his right. And in this last point it is a notable case.

The same, to the Abbot and Convent of Farfa.

When our venerable brother I., Bishop of Sabina, before our beloved sons Roger, cardinal priest of the title of Saint Anastasia, and Pelagius, cardinal deacon of Saint Lucia at Septisolium, whom we granted as auditors to him and to Richard, your proctor, had sought the church of Sant'Angelo de Cauceia with its appurtenances and possessions, asserting that it pertained to him in both spiritual and temporal matters, [advancing first the possessory and afterward the petitory action,] he alleged before all else the common law: because, since it was constituted in the diocese of Sabina, as he said, it ought to stand under his power [according to the canonical sanctions. But when it was denied on your side that the same church was constituted in the aforesaid diocese, the same bishop, in order to prove this, exhibited before them a privilege of Pope Anastasius of good memory, our predecessor, in which Mount Tancia is set down as a boundary of the bishopric of Sabina, and the same church of Sant'Angelo is numbered among the other churches of the diocese of Sabina and is said to have been constructed on the aforesaid mountain. He showed this same thing through a public instrument that your proctor was using, in which it is said that the said church is situated in the territory of Sabina, since the diocese of Sabina extends much farther than the territory of Sabina.]

The same bishop also endeavored to show that the said church pertained to him in temporal matters through a public instrument in which it was expressly contained that I., Bishop of Sabina, had leased the said church with its appurtenances to H., Abbot of Farfa, and to two persons after him, for an annual payment of four Pavia solidi, to be paid on the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin. But your party proposed that no faith at all should be placed in the aforesaid instrument because of interlinear writing and an erasure made [in] a suspicious place, namely where the notation of the time is recited. It was furthermore proposed on the bishop's side that, since for a long time a fixed payment had been paid from the church of Sant'Angelo in the name of your monastery to the church of Sabina, it was manifestly clear that [the aforesaid church] belonged by proprietary right to that same church by which the lease had been made. [Furthermore, since Pope Lucius of good memory, our predecessor, had enjoined the people of Sabina to labor for the recovery of Tancia, which you held at that time, and through them both Tancia and the church of Sant'Angelo had been restored to Peter de Bono, then proctor of the bishopric of Sabina, and you afterward caused the same church to be occupied, restitution of it had to be made to the same bishop, as that bishop asserted that all these things had been proved by suitable witnesses.]

To these things the aforesaid proctor responded that, even though certain witnesses deposed that they had seen the church of Sant'Angelo pay a payment of four solidi to the Bishop of Sabina, nevertheless no prejudice could thereby be generated against your monastery, since it does not appear that the payment itself was made on behalf of the monastery; and although the witnesses also assert that they had seen the specified payment discharged many times, it is nevertheless not shown to have been furnished for so much time that it extends to lawful prescription. Likewise, just as a lease made is not sufficient for ownership of the thing, neither is payment nor receipt of a payment. [Although the same Pope Lucius, our predecessor, had also given the above-written mandate to the people of Sabina after having been misled, believing, as had been suggested to him, that the aforesaid place and church pertained to the bishopric of Sabina, and the monks of Farfa, repelling the injury inflicted by those people of Sabina, took care to retain the aforesaid church, restitution on this account was not to be made to the bishop, especially since he would immediately suffer an adverse judgment in the petitory action, and he who seeks what he is going to return is known to act fraudulently, as is contained in the civil laws. The same bishop also vindicated for himself in that church half the special offerings of certain days, which the proctor of your monastery plainly acknowledged to him.]

Therefore, after these and other things that each party took care to propose before the aforesaid cardinals had been understood, because it was established for us that the aforesaid church of Sant'Angelo was constituted in the diocese of Sabina, with the counsel of our brothers we adjudged episcopal right in all spiritual matters in it to the same bishop, only those things excepted that are known to have been withdrawn from him through authentic writings, [this being expressed for caution: that he is to receive annually in the same church half the offerings of the aforesaid days, which, as was said, the aforesaid proctor acknowledged to him.] But because we recognized the aforesaid instrument, through which the bishop intended to vindicate [for himself] the aforesaid church as to temporal matters, to be invalid for producing proof concerning this, as being suspect at law because of the aforesaid matters, we held that you were to be absolved by sentence from his prosecution as to the temporal matters of the same church, imposing silence upon him concerning this. [Let no one therefore, etc. Given at Viterbo, on the second day before the Nones of August, in the twelfth year. 1209.]

> Episcopus, petens ecclesiam quoad temporalia et spiritualia, obtinet in spiritualibus eo ipso, quod probat esse in sua dioecesi, si non appareat exempta; sed in temporalibus succumbit, nisi alter doceat de iure suo. Et in hoc ultimo est casus notabilis.
>
> Idem Abbati et Conventui Farbensibus.
>
> Quum venerabilis frater noster I. Sabinensis episcopus coram dilectis filiis nostris Rogerio tit. sanctae Anastasiae presbytero et Pelagio sanctae Luciae ad septa solis diacono cardinalibus, quos sibi et Ricardo procuratori vestro concessimus auditores, ecclesiam sancti Angeli de Cauceia cum suis pertinentiis et possessionibus petiisset, asserens, eam ad se tam in spiritualibus quam in temporalibus pertinere, [primo possessorium et postea petitorium intentando,] allegavit ante omnia ius commune : quia, quum constituta sit in dioecesi Sabinensi, ut dicebat, sub ipsius debebat consistere potestate [iuxta canonicas sanctiones. Verum, quum ex vestra fuisset parte negatum, eandem ecclesiam in praedicta dioecesi constitutam, idem episcopus ad hoc probandum privilegium bonae memoriae Anastasii Papae praedecessoris nostri coram ipsis exhibuit, in quo mons Tancia pro

Sabinensis episcopatus termino ponitur, et inter alias ecclesias Sabinensis dioecesis eadem ecclesia S. Angeli numeratur, ac in praedicto monte dicitur esse constructa, hoc idem per publicum instrumentum, quo procurator vester utebatur, ostendens, in quo dicitur, quod dicta ecclesia sita est in territorio, Sabinensi, quum Sabinensis dioecesis longe amplius quam Sabinense territorium extendatur.] In temporalibus quoque ad se dictam ecclesiam pertinere, idem episcopus nitebatur ostendere per publicum instrumentum, in quo continebatur expresse, I. Sabinensem episcopum H. Farbensi abbati et duabus personis post ipsum dictam ecclesiam cum suis pertinentiis locavisse pro annua quatuor solidorum Papiensium pensione, in assumptione beatae Virginis persolvenda. Sed pars vestra proposuit, instrumento praedicto nullam fidem penitus adhibendam propter superlinearem scripturam et rasuram [in] loco suspecto factam, ubi videlicet annotatio temporis recensetur. +Fuit insuper ex episcopi parte propositum, quod, quum ab ecclesia S. Angeli nomine monasterii vestri multo tempore fuerit certa pensio ecclesiae Sabinensi soluta, manifeste liquebat, ad eandem ecclesiam, a qua locatio facta fuerat, [supradictam ecclesiam] iure proprietario pertinere. [Praeterea quum bonae memoriae Lucius Papa praedecessor noster iniunxerit Sabinensibus, ut ad recuperationem Tanciae, quam eo tempore tenebatis, intenderent, et per eosdem Petro de Bono, tunc Sabinensis episcopatus procuratori, tam Tancia quam ecclesia S. Angeli fuerit restituta, et vos eandem ecclesiam postea duxeritis occupandam, eiusdem erat episcopo restitutio facienda, sicut idem episcopus ea omnia per idoneos testes esse asserebat esse probata.] Ad haec autem procurator respondebat praedictus, quod, etsi quidam testes se vidisse deponant, ecclesiam S. Angeli pensionem IV. solidorum Sabinensi episcopo persolvisse, nullum tamen ex hoc monasterio vestro poterat praeiudicium generari, quum non appareat, pensionem ipsam ex parte monasterii fuisse solutam, et quamquam etiam testes asserant, se vidisse multoties praetaxatam pensionem exsolvi, non tamen ostenditur tanto tempore praestita, quod usque ad praescriptionem legitimam porrigatur. Item, sicut ad rei proprietatem locatio facta non sufficit, ita nec solutio, nec perceptio pensionis. [Licet etiam idem Lucius praedecessor noster suprascriptum mandatum Sabinensibus dederit circumventus, credens, prout ei suggestum fuerat, ad Sabinensem episcopatum praedictum locum et ecclesiam pertinere, ac Farfenses monachi propulsantes iniuriam ab eisdem Sabinensibus irrogatam retinere curaverint ecclesiam memoratam, propter hoc non erat episcopo restitutio facienda, maxime quum a vicino contrariam esset sententiam super petitorio excepturus, et qui petit quod redditurus est, dolum facere dignoscatur, sicut in civilibus legibus continetur. Medietatem quoque oblationum specialium quorundam dierum idem episcopus in eadem sibi ecclesia vendicabat, quam eidem de plano procurator vestri monasterii recognovit.] Quia igitur his et aliis intellectis, quae coram cardinalibus supra dictis pars utraque proponere procuravit, nobis constitit, ecclesiam supra dictam sancti Angeli constitutam esse in dioecesi Sabinensi, de consilio fratrum nostrorum episcopale ius in omnibus spiritualibus eidem episcopo adiudicavimus in eadem, illis tantum exceptis, quae per authentica scripta ei dignoscuntur esse subtracta, +[hoc ad cautelam expresso, ut medietatem oblationum praedictarum dierum, quam sicut dictum est, ipsi procurator recognovit iam dictus, in eadem ecclesia percipiat annuatim.] Quia vero instrumentum praedictum, per quod episcopus supra dictam ecclesiam intendebat [sibi] quoad temporalia vindicare, ad faciendam super hoc fidem invalidum esse cognovimus, utpote propter praedicta de iure suspectum : vos ab impetitione ipsius quoad temporalia eiusdem ecclesiae duximus sententialiter absolvendos, eidem super hoc silentium imponentes. [*Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Viterbi II. Non. Aug. Ao. XII. * 1209.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A monastery is subject to the bishop in whose diocese it is situated unless it is proved exempt. This it says with regard to the title.

The same.

When our beloved son [F., Dean of Orense, messenger of our venerable brother the Bishop of Orense, and Master Robert, monk of Celanova and messenger of his abbot, had approached the Apostolic See, we granted them our beloved son P., cardinal deacon of Santa Maria in Via Lata, as auditor. Before him it was proposed on the bishop's side that, when the same bishop had summoned to the synod the abbot who was subject to him by diocesan law, the abbot not only did not come to him but even prohibited the priors of Saint Peter and Saint Columba and the archpriest of Cauci, constituted in the diocese of Orense, from attempting to come to that bishop's synod, although they too were summoned. And when the said bishop, so that he might at least humbly recall the abbot to the good of obedience and overcome evil with good, had commanded him to await him in the monastery at an appointed time, although the bishop came there as he had promised, he did not find the abbot, found the gates of the monastery closed, and was granted no access to the monks. On this account he suspended the abbot and placed the monastery under interdict. But when the abbot himself did not even on this account withdraw from his purpose of contumacy or observe the sentences rendered against him and the monastery, he promulgated a sentence of excommunication against him, which the said bishop's messenger petitioned us to confirm. But the messenger of the opposing party proposed that his petition was not to be admitted because, although the monastery itself was constructed within the boundaries of the diocese of Orense, it had nevertheless always been free and exempt from every jurisdiction and yoke of the church of Orense from the time of its foundation. Furthermore, if the bishop had any jurisdiction in it—which was not true—the same messenger asserted that the sentence subsequently rendered against him and the monastery obtained no firmness, because the abbot had previously appealed to the Apostolic See from every grievance. The same messenger also complained on behalf of the chapter of Celanova that the said bishop had so circumvented their abbot that, without their knowledge and contrary to the immunity of that church, he promised obedience to him anew.] We therefore, instructed concerning the aforesaid matters through the aforesaid cardinal, because that cause could not be terminated in our presence, inasmuch as the messenger of the monastery did not have letters concerning procuration or ratification, held that it should be committed to your examination, commanding your discretion through apostolic writings that, if it is established for you that the same abbot lawfully appealed concerning this to the Apostolic See before the bishop rendered sentences of suspension or excommunication against him and of interdict against the monastery, or that the monastery is exempt from the jurisdiction of the same bishop—notwithstanding that the abbot, circumvented by him, as is said, promised obedience to him anew without the assent of his brothers, since fraud and deceit ought not assist him—you are to judge, all appeal having been entirely removed, that those sentences are not valid; otherwise, through ecclesiastical censure, you are to cause them to be inviolably observed until suitable satisfaction.

But if perhaps the same abbot fails in proof of exemption and cannot defend himself by lawful prescription, although he proves that he appealed before the aforesaid sentences, you are nevertheless to judge that the same monastery is subject to the church of Orense, in whose diocese it was founded. Similarly, if he fails in proof of the appeal, but exemption or lawful prescription is established for you, you are to absolve both the abbot and the monastery entirely from the prosecution of the same bishop and of that church, [and cause what you decree, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the seventh day before the Kalends of April. 1198.]

> Monasterium subiectum est episcopo, in cuius dioecesi situm est, nisi probetur exceptum. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum dilectus filius +[F. Auriensis decanus nuncius venerabilis fratris nostri Auriensis episcopi, et magister Robertus monachus Cellae novae et abbatis sui nuncius, ad sedem apostolicam accessissent, nos eis dilectum filium P. sanctae Mariae in Via lata diaconum cardinalem concessimus auditorem, coram quo fuit ex episcopi parte propositum, quod, quum idem episcopus abbatem sibi lege dioecesana subiectum vocasset ad synodum, ipse non solum non accessit ad ipsum, immo etiam sancti Petri et sanctae Columbae prioribus et archipresbytero Cauci in Auriensi dioecesi constitutis prohibuit, ne ad ipsius episcopi synodum accedere attentarent, licet etiam vocarentur. Quumque dictus episcopus, ut saltem humiliter abbatem ad bonum obedientiae revocaret, et vinceret in bono malum, ipsi mandasset, ut eum ad statutum terminum in monasterio exspectaret, licet episcopus illuc, iuxta quod promiserat, accessisset, abbatem non reperit, et portas monasterii clausas invenit, nec ad monachos aditus ei est concessus. Propter quod abbatem suspendit, et monasterium interdixit. Verum quum nec propter hoc abbas ipse a suo contumaciae proposito resiliret, nec latas in se ac monasterium sententias observare, in eum excommunicationis sententiam promulgavit, quam dictus episcopi nuncius a nobis petiit confirmari. Ceterum nuncius partis adversae petitionem eius non esse admittendam proposuit, quia, licet monasterium ipsum infra metas Auriensis dioecesis sit constructum, liberum tamen semper exstitit, et ab omni iurisdictione ac iugo Auriensis ecclesiae a tempore suae fundationis exemptum. Praeterea si episcopus aliquam in eo, quod verum non erat, iurisdictionem haberet, quia tamen abbas ab omni gravamine prius ad sedem apostolicam appellarat, sententiam in eum et monasterium postmodum latam nullam idem nuncius obtinere asseruit firmitatem. Conquestus est etiam idem nuncius ex parte capituli Cellae novae, quod dictus episcopus abbatem eorum adeo circumvenit, quod contra immunitatem ipsius ecclesiae ipsis nescientibus ei obedientiam repromisit.] Nos igitur super praedictis per memoratum cardinalem instructi, Quia causa ipsa non poterat in nostra praesentia terminari, utpote quum nuncius monasterii super procuratione vel ratihabitione literas non haberet : eam vestro duximus examini committendam, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandantes, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, abbatem ipsum ad sedem apostolicam super hoc, antequam episcopus in eum suspensionis vel excommunicationis, et in monasterium interdicti sententias tulerit, legitime appellasse, vel monasterium a iurisdictione episcopi eiusdem esse exemptum, eo non obstante, quod abbas, ab eo, sicut dicitur, circumventus, praeter fratrum suorum assensum ei obedientiam repromisit, quum fraus et dolus ei patrocinari non debeant, iudicetis illas sententias appellatione remota penitus non tenere, alioquin faciatis eas per censuram ecclesiasticam inviolabiliter usque ad satisfactionem congruam observari. Quodsi forsan abbas, ipse in exemptionis probatione defecerit, nec legitima se poterit praescriptione tueri, licet probet, se ante praedictas sententias appellasse, nihilominus tamen monasterium ipsum iudicetis Auriensi ecclesiae subiacere, in cuius est dioecesi fundatum. Similiter, eo in probatione appellationis deficiente, si vobis constiterit de exemptione vel legitima praescriptione, tam abbatem, quam monasterium ab impetitione eiusdem episcopi et ecclesiae ipsius penitus absolvatis, [et faciatis quod decreveritis etc. Dat. Lat. VII. Kal. Apr. 1198.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It is not lawful to establish a new religious order without the authority of the Roman Pontiff, nor can anyone be an abbot or monk in different monasteries. Thus it is principally summarized, although it contains several statements.

The same, in the general council.

Lest excessive diversity of religious orders induce grave confusion in the church of God, we firmly prohibit anyone henceforth from devising a new religious order; rather, whoever wishes to be converted to religion is to assume one of the approved orders. Similarly, whoever wishes to found a new religious house is to receive a rule and institution from the [religious orders] approved. We also prohibit anyone from presuming to hold the place of a monk in different monasteries, or one abbot from presiding over several monasteries.

Novam religionem non licet constituere sine auctoritate Romani Pontificis nec in diversis monasteriis potest quis esse abbas vel monachus. Sic principaliter summatur, licet plura dicta habeat.

Idem in concilio generali.

> Ne nimia religionum diversitas gravem in ecclesiam Dei confusionem inducat, firmiter prohibemus, ne quis de cetero novam religionem inveniat, sed quicunque ad religionem converti voluerit, unam de approbatis assumat. Similiter qui voluerit religiosam domum de novo fundare, regulam et institutionem accipiat de [religionibus] approbatis. Illud etiam prohibemus, ne quis in diversis monasteriis locum monachi habere praesumat, nec unus abbas pluribus monasteriis praesidere.

Title XXXVII: On the Chapels of Monks and Other Religious

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Not monks but secular clerics are placed over a cure subject to a monastery, and they are subject to the bishops.

Urban III.

In churches where monks dwell, let the people not be governed through a monk; rather, let a chaplain who is to govern the people be instituted by the bishop with the counsel of the monks, yet in such a way that both his ordination and deposition and the entire conduct of his life depend upon the judgment of the bishop alone.

> DE CAPELLIS MONACHORUM ET ALIORUM RELIGIOSORUM.
>
> Ad curam monasterio subiectam non monachi, sed saeculares clerici praeficiuntur, et episcopis subsunt.
>
> Urbanus III.
>
> In ecclesiis, ubi monachi habitant, populus per monachum non regatur; sed capellanus, qui populum regat, ab episcopo per consilium monachorum instituatur, ita tamen, ut ex solius episcopi arbitrio tam ordinatio eius quam depositio, et totius vitae pendeat conversatio.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If a non-cathedral church vindicates a right for itself in another church, it will prevail only as to those things that it proves are owed to it by prescription or in another lawful manner. This it says according to the common and true understanding.

Innocent III, to the Archpriest and Clerics of Saint Cecilia.

Your beloved son M., syndic of your church, constituted in our presence, advancing both the possessory and the petitory action, sought from the administrator of San Lorenzo in Piscinula subjection in scrutinies, baptism, processions, chapters, and similar matters. For since the church of San Lorenzo is situated in your parish, by common law, as the same syndic proposed, it ought to be subject to your church in all the aforesaid matters, unless it could defend itself either by special privilege or by lawful prescription, because it has no privilege of exemption, nor could it allege prescription for itself, since that church of Saint Cecilia had prescribed against it, as he said was lawfully proved through witnesses. Furthermore, when formerly a question concerning the aforesaid matters was being litigated between your church and the aforesaid church before Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, M., priest of the same church, spontaneously confessed that he owed scrutiny and baptism to the church of Saint Cecilia, and thus acknowledged your right as to ownership. And when your party had produced witnesses sufficient and suitable who firmly asserted that they had summoned him to chapter at different times and that he had come, and they were prepared to swear, the aforesaid priest confessed that he had gone to chapter when summoned. Hence our aforesaid predecessor took care to reinvest your church with possession of chapter, of which it had complained that it was despoiled, saving the right of ownership of the church of San Lorenzo, as is contained in his letters. Through this, therefore, your syndic wished to prove both ownership as to scrutiny and baptism and possession as to chapter.

To these things, however, the administrator of San Lorenzo responded to the contrary, asserting that this church pertained immediately to the Roman Church. For since it had been a monastery of nuns, as is taught from many authentic writings, and since it is generally observed in the City that no monastery is subject to a titular church, it seemed incongruous that regulars should be subjected to seculars. Furthermore, even to this day we freely exercise institution and removal in it, since Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, also established in it without anyone's contradiction our beloved son M., our scribe, as archpriest. Thus the said administrator wished to prove that the church itself was free and existed in possession of liberty. Therefore, since he has common law in his favor in this—that, namely, all the monasteries of the City pertain immediately to the Roman Church—faith is not in any way to be placed in one affirming the contrary unless he introduces a special privilege concerning this. Moreover, the same administrator entirely denied what was said, that it was situated in your parish. But even if this were true, he could nevertheless defend himself sufficiently by the aforesaid reason. The confession of the priest M. concerning scrutiny and baptism could not prejudice the same church, since issue had not been joined concerning these things in the presence of that same predecessor of ours, as is apparent from the form of the petition and conclusion. Nor had your church used this sentence until now, but had caused it to be suppressed up to these times. (And below:) We therefore, after hearing the things proposed, the reasons and allegations, instruments and attestations having been more fully understood, and counsel having been deliberated with our brothers, condemn the administrator of the same church of San Lorenzo to your syndic as to baptism, scrutiny, and processions, yet in such a way that through this no prejudice is generated against the Roman Church if at some time it should decide to prosecute its own right. But in institution, removal, and chapter we absolve the same administrator entirely from the prosecution of your syndic, imposing perpetual silence upon your syndic concerning this.

> Si ecclesia non cathedralis vindicat sibi ius in alia ecclesia obtinebit solum quoad ea, quae probabit sibi deberi praescriptioni vel alio legitimo modo. H. d. secundum communem et verum intellectum.
>
> Innocentius III. Archipresbytero et Clericis sanctae Caeciliae.
>
> Dilectus filius M. syndicus ecclesiae vestrae, in nostra praesentia constitutus, ab oeconomo sancti Laurentii de Piscinula in scrutiniis, baptismate, processionibus, et capitulis et similibus subiectionem postulans, possessorium et petitorium intentabat. Quum enim ecclesia sancti Laurentii sit in parochia vestra sita, debet de iure communi, sicut idem syndicus proponebat, ecclesiae vestrae in praedictis omnibus subiacere, nisi se posset vel speciali privilegio, vel legitima praescriptione tueri, quia nec privilegium exemptionis habet, nec praescriptionem pro se poterat allegare, quum illa ecclesia sanctae Caeciliae praescripsisset, sicut per testes dicebat legitime comprobatum. Praeterea, quum olim coram bonae memoriae C. Papa praedecessore nostro super praedictis inter vestram et praedictam ecclesiam quaestio verteretur, M. presbyter eiusdem ecclesiae fuit sponte confessus, quod ecclesiae sanctae Caeciliae scrutinium et baptisma debebat, sicque ad proprietatem vestram iustitiam recognovit. Quumque pars vestra testes sufficientes et idoneos, qui se illum diversis temporibus ad capitulum vocasse, ipsumque venisse firmiter asserebant, in medium produxisset, eis iurare paratis, praedictus presbyter se vocatum ivisse ad capitulum est confessus. Unde praedictus praedecessor noster ecclesiam vestram capitulo, quo se conquesta fuerat spoliatam, salvo iure proprietatis ecclesiae sancti Laurentii revestire curavit, sicut in eius literis continetur. Per hoc ergo et proprietatem quoad scrutinium et baptisma, et possessionem quoad capitulum vester voluit syndicus comprobare. Ad haec autem sancti Laurentii oeconomus ex adverso respondit, quod ecclesia illa nullo medio ad Romanam ecclesiam pertinebat. Quum enim monasterium monialium fuerit, sicut ex multis scriptis authenticis edocetur, et generaliter servetur in Urbe, ut nullum monasterium titulo sit subiectum, incongruum videbatur, ut regulares saecularibus supponantur. Praeterea usque hodie nos in ea institutionem et destitutionem liberam exercemus, +quum et bonae memoriae C. Papa praedecessor noster dilectum filium M. scriptorem nostrum archipresbyterum in ea sine contradictione cuiuslibet statuisset. Sic ergo ecclesiam ipsam liberam et in possessione libertatis exsistere dictus voluit oeconomus comprobare. Quum ergo pro eo habeat ius commune, in eo videlicet, quod universa monasteria Urbis ad Romanam ecclesiam nullo pertinent mediante, affirmanti contrarium fides non est aliquatenus adhibenda, nisi super hoc privilegium induxerit speciale. Quod autem dicitur in parochia vestra sita, idem oeconomus penitus denegavit. Sed etsi hoc verum esset, sufficienter tamen se poterat praedicta ratione tueri. Confessio autem M. presbyteri super scrutinio et baptismo eidem ecclesiae praeiudicare non poterat, quum super his lis contestata in eiusdem praedecessoris nostri praesentia non fuisset, sicut ex forma petitionis et conclusionis apparet. Hac etiam sententia non fuerat hactenus ecclesia vestra usa, sed eam duxerat usque ad haec tempora supprimendam. (Et infra:) Nos igitur, auditis propositis, rationibus et allegationibus, instrumentis et attestationibus plenius intellectis, et cum fratribus nostris deliberato consilio, oeconomum eiusdem ecclesiae sancti Laurentii syndico vestro in baptismo, et scrutinio et processionibus condemnamus, ita tamen, ut per hoc ecclesiae Romanae nullum praeiudicium generetur, si quando forte ius suum duxerit prosequendum. In institutione autem et destitutione et capitulo oeconomum ipsum ab impetitione syndici vestri prorsus absolvimus, syndico vestro super hoc perpetuum silentium imponentes.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Individual monks cannot dwell alone in monastic priories, even if they have an apostolic rescript concerning this, unless mention of the Lateran Council is made in it.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Vannes.

It was proposed on your part before us that, when the abbot and convent of Rivensis in the diocese of Vannes formerly complained that you were endeavoring to compel them to establish several monks in certain of their priories in your diocese, in each of which individual monks had hitherto remained, since their means did not suffice for more, we commanded the Abbot of Saint-Aubin of Angers and his colleagues through our letters that, upon inquiring into the means of those places, they were to cause several monks to be established in each of them if their means sufficed for several; otherwise, by our present authority, they were to prohibit you from troubling the aforesaid abbot and convent concerning the establishment of several monks in them. Hence the same Abbot and Convent of Rivensis in the diocese of Vannes assert that, by occasion of the letters of the Apostolic See, it was granted to them that individual monks may dwell in each of the priories of their places if their means do not suffice for several. But since this is contrary to the Lateran Council, of which no mention is made in the aforesaid letters, you petitioned to be instructed by our response whether it had been our intention through such letters to dispense with the aforesaid abbot and convent contrary to that council. We therefore respond briefly to your fraternity that we do not believe letters of this tenor to have emanated from the Apostolic See. But if perhaps they did emanate through preoccupation, we do not will the aforesaid council to be derogated through this.

In prioratibus monachorum non possunt singuli monachi commorari; etiamsi super hoc habeant rescriptum apostolicum, nisi in illo fiat mentio de Lateranensi concilio.

Honorius III. Episcopo Venetensi.

Ex parte tua fuit propositum +coram nobis, quod, conquerentibus olim abbate ac conventu Rivensi Venetensis dioecesis, quod tu compellere moliebaris eosdem, ut instituerent plures monachos in quibusdam suis prioratibus tuae dioecesis, in quorum singulis singuli monachi hactenus steterant, quum pluribus facultates non suppetant eorundem, nos abbati S. Albini Andegavensis et collegis eius per literas nostras dedimus in mandatis, ut de ipsorum locorum facultatibus inquirentes, in eorum singulis facerent plures institui monachos, si pluribus illorum sufficiunt facultates; alioquin tibi auctoritate praesentium inhiberent, ne abbatem et conventum praedictos molestares super instituendis pluribus in eisdem. Unde idem Abbas et conventus Rivenses Venetensis dioecesis occasione literarum apostolicae sedis asserunt sibi esse concessum, ut in singulis locorum ipsorum prioratibus singuli monachi commorentur, si pluribus non suppetunt facultates eorundem. Quum autem id obviet Lateranensi concilio, de quo nulla mentio est in literis ante dictis, postulasti nostro edoceri responso, utrum nostrae intentionis fuerit per huiusmodi literas cum abbate et conventu praedictis contra ipsum concilium dispensare. Nos ergo Fraternitati tuae breviter respondemus, quod tenoris huiusmodi literas ab apostolica sede non credimus emanasse. Quodsi per occupationem forsitan emanaverint, nolumus per hoc derogari concilio supra dicto.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The ordinary compels an abbot either to recall monks from priories to the cloister or to join companions to them.

The same, to the Archbishop of Bordeaux.

It has reached our hearing, as you signified, that certain monks subject to you by diocesan law dwell alone in certain priories contrary to the statute of the general council. Therefore we command your fraternity that, warning having been premised, you are to compel through ecclesiastical censure, appeal having been removed, the abbots or priors of the same monks either to recall them to the cloister, causing service in those churches to be performed through secular clerics, or to associate other monks with them, with whom they may be able to lead the regular life, provided that you do not extend your hand against exempt persons by occasion of a mandate of this kind.

Ordinarius compellit abbatem, ut monachos a prioratibus revocet ad claustrum, vel eis socios adiungat.

Idem Burdegalensi Archiepiscopo.

Ad audientiam nostram te significante pervenit, quod nonnulli monachi, lege tibi dioecesana subiecti, in quibusdam prioratibus habitant solitarii contra statutum generalis concilii. Ideoque fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus ipsorum monachorum abbates seu priores, ut vel ipsos ad claustrum revocent, facientes in ipsis ecclesiis deserviri per clericos saeculares, vel alios monachos eisdem associent, cum quibus vitam possint ducere regularem, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compellas, proviso, quod ad exemptos manum occasione mandati huiusmodi non extendas.

Title XXXVIII: On the Right of Patronage

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If through the discord of the patrons a church lacks an administrator, divine services cease in the church, the relics are removed, and the doors are closed, if provision cannot otherwise be made for the church without scandal. This it says together with the following chapter.

From the Council of Milan.

It has been reported to us that churches established on private property are divided among the heirs, and so great a dissension arises through the same division that four parts are made of one altar and each part has its individual priests, which can in no way be conducted without discord and dissension. Hence it has seemed to us that a church ought not be divided among the heirs of the patron. And if they come into contention and dissensions arise among them on account of which a priest cannot canonically perform his office there, if provision cannot be made otherwise, let it be commanded by the bishop of the city that the solemnities of Mass are in no way to be celebrated there until they return to concord and by equal vote and counsel that church canonically has a priest who may be able freely to exercise his ministry.

> DE IURE PATRONATUS.
>
> Si propter discordiam patronorum ecclesia caret administratore, cessatur in ecclesia a divinis, tolluntur reliquiae, et ostia clauduntur, si aliter sine scandalo ecclesiae provideri non potest. H. d. cum cap. sequenti.
>
> Ex concilio Mediolanensi.
>
> Perlatum est +ad nos, quod inter heredes ecclesiae, in rebus propriis constitutae, dividantur, et tanta per eandem divisionem simultas oriatur, ut unius altaris quatuor partes fiant, et singulae partes singulos habeant presbyteros, quod sine discordia et simultate nullo modo geri potest. Unde Nobis visum est, quod ecclesia inter heredes patroni dividi non debeat. Et si in contentionem venerint, et simultates inter eos surrexerint, propter quas sacerdos suo ibi officio canonice fungi non possit, si aliter provideri non poterit, praecipiatur ab episcopo civitatis, ut nullo modo ibi missarum solennia celebrentur, donec illi ad concordiam redeant, et pari voto atque consilio ecclesia illa sacerdotem canonice habeat, qui libere suum ministerium valeat exercere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the preceding chapter.

From the Council of Tribur.

Whatever church is held by several coheirs is to be administered on every side with concordant unanimity, lest through any disputes the service of God be diminished and the care of the people be conducted irreligiously. But if it happens that patrons disagree concerning a church, so that they are unwilling for it to be administered under one priest, and on this account quarrels and contentions begin to become frequent both among themselves and among the clerics, because according to the Apostle it does not befit the servants of God to quarrel, the bishop, if he cannot otherwise provide for it, is to remove the relics from there, place them honorably with great care, and close the doors of the same church, sealing them under his seal, so that no one may celebrate the sacred mystery in it before with concordant unanimity they all elect one priest who is suitable to administer the sacred things and usefully to preside over the people of God.

> Summatum est in cap. proximo.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi.
>
> Quaecunque ecclesia +a compluribus coheredibus sit obsessa, concordi unanimitate undique procuretur, ne propter aliquas disceptationes servitium Dei minuatur, et cura populi irreligiose agatur. Si vero contingat pro ecclesia dissidere patronos, ut eam nolint sub uno presbytero procurari, et propterea iurgia et contentiones tam inter ipsos quam inter clericos incipiant frequentare, quia iuxta Apostolum servos Dei non oportet litigare, episcopus, si aliter non poterit ipsi consulere, tollat inde reliquias, et sub magna cura honorifice collocet eas, atque eiusdem ecclesiae claudat ostia, et sub sigillo consignet ea, ut sacrum mysterium nullus in ea celebret, antequam concordi unanimitate unum omnes eligant presbyterum, qui sacrosancta sit idoneus procurare, et populo Dei utiliter praeesse.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If the patrons disagree in presenting, the person presented by the greater part is preferred if he is suitable; and if this cannot be done without scandal, or the patrons do not present within the due time, the bishop will order the church.

From the Lateran Council.

Because in certain places the founders of churches or their heirs abuse the power in which the church has hitherto sustained them, and, although there ought to be one in the church of God who presides, they themselves endeavor to elect several without regard for subjection, and, although one church ought to belong to one rector, through their disagreement they present several: therefore we establish by the present decree that, if perhaps the votes of the founders have divided into several parties, he is to be placed over the church who is supported by greater merits and is elected and approved by the assent of more persons. But if this cannot be done without scandal, let the bishop order the church as he sees that it can best be ordered according to God. And let him also do this same thing if a question concerning the right of patronage has arisen among some persons and it has not been definitively decided within four months to whom it belongs.

Si patroni in praesentando discordant, praefertur praesentatus a maiori parte, si est idoneus, et, si hoc sine scandalo fieri non potest, vel patroni infra tempus debitum non praesentant, episcopus ordinabit ecclesiam.

Ex concilio Lateranensi.

Quoniam in quibusdam locis fundatores ecclesiarum aut heredes eorum potestate, in qua eos ecclesia hucusque sustinuit, abutuntur, et, quum in Dei ecclesia usus debeat esse qui praesit, ipsi plures sine respectu subiectionis moliuntur eligere, et, quum una ecclesia unius debeat esse rectoris, pro sua dissensione plurimos repraesentant : quocirca praesenti decreto statuimus, ut, si forte in plures partes fundatorum se vota diviserint, ille praeficiatur ecclesiae, qui maioribus iuvatur meritis et plurimorum eligitur et approbatur assensu. Si autem hoc sine scandalo esse nequiverit, ordinet antistes ecclesiam, sicut melius eam secundum Deum viderit ordinandam. Et id ipsum etiam faciat, si de iure patronatus quaestio emerserit inter aliquos, et, cui competat, infra quatuor menses non fuerit diffinitum.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Lay patrons who institute and remove clerics in churches, even patronal churches, or otherwise administer their goods, are excommunicated. And clerics who receive institution from laymen are deprived of communion.

From the same council.

Furthermore, because the audacity of certain laymen has advanced so far that, the authority of the bishops having been disregarded, they institute clerics in churches and remove them [even] when they wish, and generally distribute the possession and other ecclesiastical goods according to their will, and presume to burden both the churches themselves and their men with tallages and exactions, we decree that those who henceforth presume to do these things are to be struck with anathema. Moreover, a priest or cleric who receives a church through laymen without the authority of his own bishop is to be deprived of communion; and, if he persists, he is to be deposed from ecclesiastical ministry and order. [Indeed, because laymen, etc.]

> Excommunicantur patroni laici, qui clericos instituunt et destituunt in ecclesiis etiam patronatis, vel bona ipsarum aliter administrant. Et clerici, qui institutionem laicorum recipiunt, communione priventur.
>
> Ex eodem.
>
> Praeterea, quia in tantum quorundam laicorum processit audacia, ut, episcoporum auctoritate neglecta, clericos instituant in ecclesiis, et removeant [etiam,] quum voluerint, possessionem quoque atque alia ecclesiastica bona pro sua voluntate plerumque distribuant, et tam ecclesias ipsas quam homines earum talliis et exactionibus gravare praesumant, ipsos, qui amodo ista praesumpserint, anathemate decernimus feriendos. Presbyter autem sive Clericus, qui ecclesiam per laicos sine proprii episcopi auctoritate receperit, communione privetur, et, si perstiterit, a ministerio ecclesiastico et ordine deponatur. [Sane quia laici etc.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If a lay patron successively presents two persons and the second is instituted by the bishop, the institution is valid. This it says first. A patron cannot confer a patronal church upon a cleric or another church, or donate it to another.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of York.

Concerning what you consult us—if a suitable cleric presented to a vacant church was not admitted by the diocesan bishop, and afterward another suitable cleric was presented and, having been instituted by the bishop, held corporal possession, whether, when the first cleric seeks the church, the later one ought to be removed or the later one preferred to the first—there is no doubt that in this case the condition of the possessor is better, because, before the presentation is approved by the diocesan bishop, what had been begun by the patron is not ratified. For the rest, we respond to your prudence that, if laymen draw up instruments for clerics or colleges concerning grants or donations in these or similar words, "I have granted or given the church and confirmed it by the present charter," if the bishop's consent has not acceded, nothing appears to have been done, because that is held as not given which is given by one who by law cannot donate it.

> Si patronus laicus successive praesentat duos, et secundus instituitur ab episcopo, valet institutio. Hoc dicit primo. Patronus non potest clerico vel alteri ecclesiae conferre ecclesiam patronatam, vel alteri donare.
>
> Alexander III. Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Quod autem consulis, si clericus idoneus ad vacantem ecclesiam praesentatus non fuerit ab episcopo dioecesano admissus, et postmodum alius idoneus praesentatus, et institutus ab episcopo possessionem tenuerit corporalem, an, primo clerico ecclesiam petente, debeat posterior removeri, vel posterior priori praeferri, dubium non est, quin in casu isto melior sit conditio possidentis, quoniam, antequam praesentatio per dioecesanum episcopum approbetur, ratum non est quod a patrono fuerat inchoatum. De cetero tuae prudentiae respondemus, quod, si laici clericis vel collegiis de concessionibus vel donationibus instrumenta confecerint in haec verba vel similia " concessi vel dedi ecclesiam, et praesenti charta firmavi ", si consensus episcopi non accesserit, nihil agi videtur, quia pro non dato habetur, quod ab illo datur, qui non potest de iure donare.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who purchases or buys a right of patronage ought to be despoiled of it. Or thus: One who buys a right of patronage so that he may present a son or nephew, or whomever he wishes, ought to be deprived of it. This it says, and either reading can be sustained.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Because certain clerics of your jurisdiction, as we have learned, purchase advowsons of churches, or acquire them in whatever way they can, so that afterward their sons or nephews may be presented to the same churches, we, wishing entirely to eradicate so depraved a custom, nevertheless command and enjoin you by authority of the presents that you take care to prohibit this more strictly, despoiling them, appeal having been postponed, of advowsons acquired in this way.

> Comparans vel emens ius patronatus, eo spoliari debet. Vel sic: Qui emit ius patronatus, ut possit praesentare filium vel nepotem, seu quem vult, eo privari debet. H. d. et utraque lectio potest sustentari.
>
> Idem Exoniensi Episcopo.
>
> Quia clerici quidam vestrae iurisdictionis advocatias ecclesiarum, sicut accepimus, comparant, vel quocunque modo possunt acquirunt, ut postmodum eorum filii vel nepotes ad easdem ecclesias praesententur, nos, tam pravam consuetudinem penitus eradicare volentes, nihilominus praesentium vobis auctoritate mandamus atque praecipimus, ut id arctius inhibere procures, eosdem advocationibus taliter acquisitis appellatione postposita spoliando.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A right of patronage contained in some aggregate of temporal things passes with that aggregate, even if the aggregate passes only as to beneficial ownership, unless the right of patronage is specifically excepted. This it says, and it is a notable case and is alleged daily.

The same, to the Bishop of Hereford and the Abbot of Forde.

We learned from the letters of I., Bishop of Salisbury, that, when the parson of the church of Laton had died, G., a knight who held at farm from the monastery of Winton the vill in which the church is situated, presented the cleric G. to the aforesaid bishop for that vacant church. Afterward, the abbess of the aforesaid monastery, coming to the bishop, presented another to him for the above-written church. When he was unwilling to receive the person presented by her, she lodged a grave complaint against the bishop before the Archbishop of Canterbury. The archbishop, because it seemed to him that the knight's act concerning the aforesaid presentation was of no moment, enjoined the aforesaid bishop by virtue of obedience to receive and induct into possession that person whom the abbess had determined to present to him. (And below:) We command that, if it is established for you that the aforesaid vill was granted at farm to the aforesaid knight without the right of patronage having been excepted, or that, before a controversy concerning the right of patronage arose between the abbess and the knight, the aforesaid G. of Leicester had been instituted in the aforesaid church by the bishop upon the knight's presentation, you are to adjudge that church to him, provided he is otherwise suitable, in such a way that, if the abbess prevails against the knight, he ought to answer to her concerning the temporalities.

> Ius patronatus, consistens in aliqua universitate temporalium, transit cum ipsa universitate, etiamsi universitas transeat tantum quoad utile dominium; nisi ius patronatus specifice sit exceptum. H. d. et est notabilis casus, et quotidie allegatur.

Idem Herfordensi Episcopo et Abbati de Forde.

Ex literis I. Salabriensis episcopi accepimus, quod defuncta persona ecclesiae de Laton. G. miles, qui villam, in qua ecclesia sita est, a monasterio de Vinton. ad firmam tenebat, ad eandem vacantem G. clericum praedicto episcopo praesentavit. Postmodum abbatissa praedicti monasterii, ad episcopum veniens, alium praesentavit eidem ad ecclesiam supra scriptam, quo nolente praesentatum ab ea recipere, apud Cantuariensem archiepiscopum gravem de episcopo deposuit quaestionem. +Archiepiscopus, quia visum sibi erat, quod factum militis super praesentatione praefata nullius esset momenti, praedicto episcopo in virtute obedientiae iniunxit, quod personam illam reciperet et in possessionem induceret, quam abbatissa sibi decreverat praesentandam. (Et infra:) Mandamus, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, quod praefato militi praescripta villa fuerit non excepto iure patronatus ad firmam concessa, vel, antequam de iure patronatus inter abbatissam et militem controversia esset suborta, praefatus G. de Leicestria in praescripta ecclesia per episcopum ad praesentationem militis institutus fuisset, ei, dummodo alias sit idoneus, adiudicetis ipsam ecclesiam ita, quod, si abbatissa obtineat adversus militem, illi de temporalibus debeat respondere.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If a layman grants a church to a cleric or religious place without the bishop's consent, notwithstanding such a grant, which is invalid, he will be able to present to that same church when it becomes vacant and to grant it to another church with the bishop's consent. This it says together with the chapters When Laymen and It Was Suggested, below, in the same title.

The same, to the Bishop of Winchester.

We did not consider, [however], that this should be passed over, concerning which we understood you to be doubtful: if some layman, without consulting the bishop, grants a church that is not vacant to some religious house, and afterward, when it becomes vacant, some cleric is instituted there by the diocesan bishop upon the presentation of the same layman, the prior grant cannot and ought not in any way impede the second institution from being held ratified and firm, since that grant can by law be of no moment: both because it was made concerning a thing not vacant, and because a layman without the bishop's authority can give churches to no one, although he has free power to confer the right of patronage upon a religious place. But if, while the church is vacant, he confers the right of patronage upon a religious place, and afterward someone is instituted in that church without the presentation of the brothers of the same place, according to the rigor of law his institution is to be invalidated.

Si laicus clerico vel religioso loco concedit ecclesiam sine consensu episcopi, non obstante tali concessione, quae non valet, ad ipsam ecclesiam, quum vacaverit, poterit praesentare, et eam alteri ecclesiae de consensu episcopi concedere. H. d. cum cap. Quum laici, et cap. Suggestum, infra eod.

Idem Vintoniensi Episcopo.

Illud [vero] praetereundum non duximus, super quo te intelleximus dubitare, quod, si aliquis laicus episcopo inconsulto ecclesiam non vacantem concedit alicui religiosae domui, et postea, quum vacaverit, ad praesentationem eiusdem laici aliquis clericus ibi fuerit per dioecesanum episcopum institutus, prior concessio secundam institutionem, quo minus habeatur rata et firma, non potest nec debet aliquatenus impedire, quum illa concessio de iure nullius possit esse momenti, tum quia de re non vacante facta est, tum quia laicus sine auctoritate episcopi nemini potest ecclesias dare, licet religioso loco ius patronatus conferendi liberam habeat facultatem. Si vero ius patronatus vacante ecclesia religioso loco contulerit, et aliquis postea sine praesentatione fratrum eiusdem loci fuerit in ipsa ecclesia institutus, eius secundum rigorem iuris est institutio irritanda.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Those instituted in patronal churches cannot be changed by new patrons, nor may alternations of churches be made through them.

The same, to the same.

We have heard, through a complaint sent to us by letter from the prior and brothers of Lauth, that R., formerly Earl of Hereford, acknowledged before I., formerly Bishop of Worcester of good memory, the right that the same prior and brothers ought to have in the church of Wic. from the donation of H. de Lacy, founder of their church and father-in-law of R. himself. Hence the bishop afterward invested the aforesaid prior and brothers with it, no one objecting or contradicting, and they thereafter possessed it quietly and peacefully. Then, when a separation had been pronounced by ecclesiastical judgment between the aforesaid earl and C., his wife, in whose patrimony that church is contained, the same C. married W. of Poitiers, who entirely withdrew the fruits of the aforesaid church from the aforesaid prior and brothers and converted them, without episcopal authority, to the uses of R., priest of the same place. And when afterward, W. having been removed from their midst, the aforesaid C. was joined in marriage to a third husband, namely W. de Mediran, the same W., persisting in the same temerity as the other W., began to maintain and foster the aforesaid R. in the aforesaid church against the aforesaid prior, saying that what the above-named Bishop I. [did] concerning the church, which exists under the advowson of his wife, while she was in the power of that man from whom she is known afterward to have been separated, ought to have no firmness, especially since, as he asserts, his wife's patrimony would not have been restored to him in full unless he could fulfill his will concerning that church. Hence, because it seems altogether absurd, and to be entirely eliminated from the church of God, that at each change of patrons according to human circumstance the orderings of churches should be changed, and it was not lawful for any of the successors to revoke what had thus been done by the above-written H., we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, enjoining that you diligently and studiously inquire into the truth of the matter and, if you find it to be as narrated above, restore the aforesaid church to the often-mentioned prior and brothers, every pretext and appeal ceasing, and cause them to possess it in peace. And let [not] alternations of this kind in churches be presumed by advocates or others, but, delay having been removed, strike those who presume them with the bond of excommunication until worthy satisfaction.

Instituti in ecclesiis patronatis per novos patronos mutari non possunt, nec vicissitudines ecclesiarum per eos fieri.

Idem eidem.

Querimonia, +prioris et fratrum de Lauth nobis literis destinata audivimus, quod R. quondam Herfordensis comes ius, quod idem prior et fratres in ecclesia de Wic. ex donatione H. de Laci fundatoris ecclesiae suae, et ipsius R. soceri habere debebant, bonae memoriae I. quondam Wigorniensi episcopo recognovit. Unde episcopus postea iam dictos priorem et fratres nullo reclamante aut contradicente exinde investivit, quam illi deinde quiete et pacifice possederunt. Demum quum inter comitem praefatum et C. uxorem suam, in cuius patrimonio ecclesia illa consistit, divortium per ecclesiasticum iudicium celebratum fuisset, eadem C. W. Pictaviensi nupsit, qui ecclesiae praescriptae fructus memorato priori et fratribus subtraxit omnino, et eos in usus R. sacerdotis eiusdem loci sine episcopali auctoritate convertit. Quumque postmodum, W. de medio sublato, praefata C. tertio viro W. scilicet de Mediran, esset matrimonio copulata, idem W. in ea, qua et W., temeritate persistens, iam dictum R. in ecclesia praetaxata contra priorem supra dictum manutenere et fovere incepit, dicens, quod praenominatus episcopus I. [fecit] super ecclesia, quae de uxoris suae advocatione exsistit, dum erat in potestate illius viri, a quo postmodum separata fuisse dignoscitur, nullam debere firmitatem habere, praesertim quum patrimonium uxoris suae, sicut asserit, integre sibi restitutum non esset, nisi de ecclesia illa suam posset adimplere voluntatem. Unde, quoniam Absurdum videtur omnino, et ab ecclesia Dei penitus eliminandum, ut ad singulas patronorum secundum humanam conditionem mutationes ecclesiarum ordinationes mutentur, nec quod a suprascripto H. taliter factum fuit alicui successorum licuit revocare, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus rei veritatem diligenter et studiose inquiras, et si ita inveneris esse, prout superius est narratum saepe dictis priori et fratribus, ecclesiam praelibatam omni occasione et appellatione cessante restituas et in pace facias possidere. Et [ne] vicissitudines etiam huiusmodi ecclesiarum ab advocatis vel aliis praesumantur sed earum praesumptores usque ad dignam satisfactionem dilatione sublata, vinculo excommunicationis percellas.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A patron cannot confer a church upon a cleric, and, if he confers it, notwithstanding this he can present a rector to the church.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

When laymen, without the bishops' knowledge or consent, grant to clerics churches in which they have the right of patronage and, afterward, moved by repentance, present others to the same churches to the bishops, and those persons are instituted in the same churches by the bishops upon their presentation, the institution of those who are instituted by the bishop's authority ought to stand and be firmly observed, the prior grant, which is null, having been altogether annulled. For it is not lawful for laymen to ordain clerics in churches by their own presumption.

Patronus ecclesiam clerico conferre non potest, et, si contulerit, potest hoc non obstante ad ecclesiam praesentare rectorem.

Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.

Quum laici episcopis nescientibus aut non consentientibus ecclesias clericis concedunt, in quibus habent ius patronatus, et postea poenitentia ducti alios ad easdem ecclesias episcopis repraesentant, et illi ad eorum praesentationem in eisdem ecclesiis ab episcopis instituuntur, eorum debet institutio stare et firmiter observari, qui auctoritate sunt episcopi instituti, concessione priori, quae nulla est, omnino evacuata. Non enim licet laicis clericos in ecclesiis praesumptione propria ordinare.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Religious cannot vindicate or retain churches granted to them by laymen without the diocesan's consent, unless they have lawfully prescribed or the diocesan afterward consented.

The same, to the Abbots, Priors, and Clerics Constituted throughout the Archbishopric of York.

By pastoral care we are constrained by necessity and provoked by the authority of the office enjoined upon us to labor with vigilant diligence for the condition of churches, and to provide with more attentive solicitude that they not be conferred upon anyone contrary to the order of law. Hence, commanding through apostolic writings, we command your whole body that none of you presume to vindicate for himself any churches from the donation of laymen, or to retain those acquired in this way, unless the authority and consent of the diocesan bishop are present, unless he is fortified by lawful prescription or has perhaps afterward obtained the consent of the diocesan bishop. For since laymen cannot transfer to others anything except the right they possess, we decree that grants of this kind lack force and judge them to be entirely void.

> Religiosi vindicare vel retinere non possunt ecclesias sibi concessas a laicis sine dioecesani concessu, nisi legitime praescripserint, vel postea dioecesanus consenserit.
>
> Idem Abbatibus, Prioribus et Clericis per archiepiscopatum Eboracensem constitutis.
>
> Cura pastorali +necessitate constringimur, et auctoritate iniuncti nobis officii provocamur, pro statu ecclesiarum vigili studio satagere, et, ne contra iuris ordinem alicui conferri valeant, attentiori sollicitudine providere. Inde est, quod universitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus ex donatione laicorum, nisi auctoritas dioecesani episcopi et consensus adsit, nullus vestrum aliquas sibi ecclesias vindicare praesumat, vel retinere taliter acquisitas, nisi legitima fuerit praescriptione munitus, aut dioecesani episcopi forte habuerit postea consensum. Quum enim laici non possint in alios nisi ius, quod habent, transferre, nos huiusmodi concessiones viribus carere decernimus, et irritas penitus esse censemus.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If the patrons of a vacant church do not present within the time granted by law, the bishop will order the church.

The same, to the Bishop of Langres.

But if at any time the ordering of some church belongs to your institution and is maliciously prolonged by a controversy among laymen disputing with one another concerning the right of patronage, let it be lawful for you, by our authority, appeal having been removed, to institute a suitable person in that church, in such a way that the same person is to be presented by the one who prevails in the right of patronage.

> Si patroni ecclesiae vacantis infra tempus, a iure concessum, non praesentant, episcopus ordinabit ecclesias.
>
> Idem Lingonensi Episcopo.
>
> Si vero aliquando ordinatio alicuius ecclesiae ad tuam institutionem spectat et pro controversia laicorum de iure patronatus inter se disceptantium malitiose prorogatur : fas tibi sit de auctoritate nostra appellatione remota in eadem ecclesia personam idoneam instituere, ita, quod ipsa eadem repraesentetur ab eo, qui ius evicerit patronatus.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: If the right of patronage of a church comes to exempt persons, through this the episcopal right ought not be harmed in anything.

The same, to the Hospitallers.

Since you have left the world, so that you may be able to please our Creator in the citadel of contemplation, it befits you to abstain from those things that are contrary to reason, or that are subject to reproach or can blacken your reputation or fame. Hence, through apostolic writings, we more strictly prohibit your whole body, when by reason of fiefs bought or otherwise acquired, or even in some other manner, you acquire the right of patronage in parochial churches, from instituting priests in them except through the bishop, or presuming to diminish or in any way remove the bishop's parochial right. Nor are you to dare, contrary to the authentic writings of the Roman Church, to receive at divine offices in your chapels persons excommunicated by that bishop or by your archdeacons.

> Si ius patronatus ecclesiae devenit ad exemptos, per hoc in nullo debet laedi ius episcopale.
>
> Idem Hospitalariis.
>
> Quum saeculum reliqueritis, +ut Creatori nostro possitis in arce contemplationis placere, decet vos ab his, quae sunt obvia rationi, abstinere, vel quae reprehensioni subiaceant, aut vestram opinionem aut famam valeant denigrare. Inde est, quod universitati vestrae districtius per apostolica scripta Prohibemus, ne, quum ratione feudorum emptorum aliterve acquisitorum, vel etiam alio modo ius patronatus in ecclesiis parochialibus acquisieritis, in eis presbyteros nisi per episcopum instituatis, nec episcopo ius parochiale minuere aut auferre aliquatenus praesumatis. Excommunicatos quoque ipsius episcopi vel archidiaconorum tuorum contra authentica scripta Romanae ecclesiae ad divina officia in capellis vestris recipere non audeatis.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Without the patron's consent no one can occupy a church.

The same.

We learned from the intimation of our beloved son O., a cleric, that, when his brother had liberally conferred upon him the right of patronage that he held in certain churches constituted in the bishoprics of Lincoln and Salisbury, certain priests and others, by occasion of the aforesaid brother of O., occupied those churches by violence without his will and assent, and unjustly keep them occupied. Therefore, because it belongs to us to recall to the path of rectitude those things that are attempted less orderly by some subjects, commanding your fraternity through apostolic writings, we command that, after diligently investigating and learning the truth of the matter, if it is so as has been said, warning having been premised, you are to compel the aforesaid priests who detain those churches to restore them to the aforesaid cleric, to be ordered freely and peacefully through him. But if the aforesaid priests should perhaps be unwilling to acquiesce in your admonition, every pretext and appeal ceasing, you are to subject them to excommunication and their lands, if they have any, to interdict, and cause divine offices to cease in the aforesaid churches as long as they remain occupied by any persons under the authority of the aforesaid knights. But if the detainers of the same churches still do not recover their senses, appeal ceasing, strike them with ecclesiastical censure.

> Sine consensu patroni non potest quis ecclesiam occupare.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex insinuatione dilecti filii nostri O. clerici accepimus, quod, quum ei frater eius ius patronatus, quod in quibusdam ecclesiis, in Linconiensi et Salisberiensi episcopatibus constitutis, habebat, liberaliter contulisset, eas ecclesias quidam presbyteri et alii occasione fratris praedicti O. sine ipsius voluntate et assensu per violentiam occuparunt, et eas iniuste detinent occupatas. +Quia igitur nostra interest, ea, quae minus ordinate ab aliquibus subiectis attentantur, ad rectitudinis tramitem revocare, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligenter inquisita et cognita, si est ita, sicut dictum est, memoratos presbyteros ecclesiarum earum detentores, ut easdem praedicto clerico restituant, per eum libere et pacifice ordinandas, monitione praemissa compellas. Quodsi praedicti presbyteri commonitioni tuae acquiescere forte noluerint, tu ipsos excommunicatione, et terras si quas habeat, omni occasione et appellatione cessante interdicto subiicias, et in memoratis ecclesiis divina facias cessare officia, quamdiu ab aliquibus praedictorum auctoritate militum occupatae detinebuntur. Quodsi nec earundem ecclesiarum detentores resipuerint, ipsos, appellatione cessante, ecclesiastica censura percellas.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A patron cannot retain a church for himself or even grant it to another by his own authority.

The same, to the Bishop of Adonensis.

Your fraternity consulted us as to what you should do concerning clerics who vindicate for themselves by hereditary right churches constructed by their parents and are unwilling to answer to you concerning them, and concerning laymen who endeavor to give the aforesaid churches to their sons or nephews. But since the sanctuary of God cannot be held by hereditary right, and it is entirely unworthy and absurd for anyone to occupy a church by his own authority or to detain churches thus occupied, it is not fitting in any way to tolerate that in your bishopric clerics detain by their own authority churches founded by their parents, or that laymen grant those same churches to sons or any others.

> Non potest patronus ecclesiam sibi retinere, vel etiam alteri concedere propria auctoritate.
>
> Idem Adonensis Episcopo.
>
> Consuluit nos +tua fraternitas, quid tibi faciendum sit de clericis, qui ecclesias constructas hereditario iure sibi vindicant, nec tibi volunt exinde respondere, et de laicis, qui praescriptas ecclesias filiis vel nepotibus suis dare nituntur. Quum autem sanctuarium Dei iure hereditario teneri non possit, et indignum sit penitus et absurdum, ut quilibet auctoritate propria ecclesiam occupet, vel taliter occupatas detineat: non decet aliquatenus sustineri, ut in episcopatu tuo vel clerici ecclesias a parentibus suis fundatas propria auctoritate detineant, aut laici filiis vel aliquibus aliis ecclesias concedant easdem.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A right of patronage cannot be sold by itself.

The same.

But concerning the right of patronage in the aforesaid chapel, we command your discretion that, if R. Brito purchased it, since it is incongruous and entirely dishonorable for a right of patronage, which is annexed to a spiritual thing, to be sold, you are to decree that contract void, the remedy of appeal having been removed, and, supported by apostolic authority, you are not to defer revoking it.

> Ius patronatus per se vendi non potest.
>
> Idem.
>
> De iure vero patronatus in praescripta capella hoc tuae discretioni mandamus, quatenus, si R. Brito illud comparavit, quum inconveniens sit et penitus inhonestum vendi ius patronatus, quod est spirituali annexum, contractum illum sublato appellationis remedio irritum esse decernas, ipsumque apostolica auctoritate fretus non differas revocare.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A patron cannot confer upon even a religious place the tithes of a church or another spiritual thing without the consent of the bishop or Pope.

The same.

Let no layman confer tithes, a church, or anything of ecclesiastical right upon monasteries or canons without the grant of his pontiff. And if any bishop is unwilling to consent because of wickedness or avarice, let it be announced to the Roman Pontiff, and then let what is to be offered be offered with his license.

> Patronus non potest sine episcopi vel Papae consensu etiam loco religioso conferre ecclesiae decimas vel aliud spirituale.
>
> Idem.
>
> Nullus laicus decimas, aut ecclesiam, aut quicquid ecclesiastici iuris est, sine concessione sui pontificis monasteriis vel canonicis conferat. Et si quis episcopus improbitatis vel avaritiae causa consentire noluerit, Romano pontifici nuncietur, et quod offerendum est tunc eius licentia offeratur.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: If a bishop is patron in a church of another diocese, the person presented by him ought to be admitted if he is suitable.

The same.

You signified (And below:) Moreover, if bishops, after their promotion, have obtained from the patrons of churches the presentations of persons to those churches for churches committed to them, suitable persons whom they present to them when vacant are to be admitted.

> Si quis episcopus in ecclesia alterius dioecesis est patronus, praesentatus ab eo debet admitti, si est idoneus.
>
> Idem.
>
> Significasti (Et infra:) Ceterum Si episcopi post promotionem suam praesentationes personarum ad ecclesias a patronis earum pro ecclesiis sibi commissis adepti fuerint, personae idoneae, quas ad eas vacantes praesentaverint, sunt admittendae.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: One instituted upon the presentation of a person who then possessed the right of patronage of a church ought not be removed, although that right is afterward evicted from him; it is otherwise if he did not possess it but was only believed to be the patron.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Albert.

To the consultations (And below: [cf. c. 10, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.]) For the rest, if any cleric was instituted by the ordinary judge in some church upon the presentation of one who was believed to be patron of that church, and afterward another person evicts the right of patronage in a judgment, the cleric who was instituted ought not for this reason to be removed from that church if, at the time of his presentation, the one who presented him possessed the right of patronage of the church, since from this no prejudice is generated in the future against the one who ought to have it by right. But if at that time he did not possess the right of patronage, but was only believed to be the patron, when [nevertheless] he was not and did not have possession of the patronage, he will be able to be removed from the same church according to English custom. But donations, etc. (cf. c. 4, On Donations, III. 24.)

> Institutus ad praesentationem eius, qui tunc ius patronatus ecclesiae possidebat, removeri non debet, licet illud ius ab eo postmodum evincatur; secus, si non possidebat, sed tantum credebatur esse patronus.

Idem abbati S. Alberti.

Consultationibus (Et infra: [*cf. c. * 10. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]) De cetero Si aliquis clericus ab ordinario iudice in aliqua ecclesia fuerit institutus ad praesentationem illius, qui eiusdem ecclesiae credebatur esse patronus, et postea ius patronatus alius evicerit in iudicio, clericus, qui institutus est, non debet ab ipsa ecclesia propter hoc removeri, si tempore praesentationis suae ille, qui eum praesentavit, ius patronatus ecclesiae possidebat, quum ex hoc ei, qui de iure debet habere, nullum in posterum praeiudicium generetur. Si vero tunc non possidebat ius patronatus, sed tantum credebatur esse patronus, quum [tamen] non esset, nec possessionem patronatus haberet: secundum consuetudinem Anglicanam poterit ab eadem ecclesia removeri. Donationes vero etc. (cf. c. 4. de don. III. 24.)

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: A second grant of a church made to another church by the bishop and patron is valid notwithstanding a prior grant made by the patron alone.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

It was suggested to our ears that, when certain churches, with the assent of the lord of the soil and by authority of the Archbishop of York, had been granted and assigned as a prebend to the church of blessed P. of York, the canons of Newburgh endeavor to weaken and invalidate that grant by occasion of a donation that they assert was made to them previously. Hence, although the consent of the patrons is to be sought and awaited in donations of churches, nevertheless, because the churches themselves cannot be canonically granted unless pontifical authority intervenes, we signify to your whole body that the prior grant, if made with the patron's assent and by authority of the diocesan bishop, or if his assent afterward followed, is preferred to the later grant; otherwise, although it was made later, that grant ought to be preferred which is supported by the consent of the lord of the soil and the bishop's authority.

Valet secunda concessio ecclesiae, facta alteri ecclesiae per episcopum et patronum, non obstante priori, facta per patronum solum.

Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.

Suggestum est auribus nostris, quod, quum ecclesiae quaedam de assensu domini fundi et auctoritate Eboracensis archiepiscopi ecclesiae beati P. Eboracensis concessae et assignatae sint in praebendam, canonici de Novoburgo concessionem illam attenuare et irritare nituntur occasione donationis, quam sibi asserunt prius factam fuisse. Unde, licet in donationibus ecclesiarum requirendus sit et exspectandus patronorum consensus, quia tamen ecclesiae ipsae, nisi auctoritas intervenerit pontificalis, canonice concedi non possunt : universitati vestrae significamus, quod prior concessio, si cum assensu patroni et auctoritate dioecesani episcopi facta est, aut eius assensus fuerit postea subsecutus, posteriori concessioni praefertur; alioquin illa debet praeferri, quamvis posterius facta sit, quae consensu domini fundi et episcopi auctoritate fulcitur.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: One who, after being warned, does not relinquish a church granted to him without the bishop's consent is removed from office and benefice. This it says. — (To this, etc.:) Laymen despoiling a church are excommunicated. This it says.

The same, to the Archbishops and Bishops Constituted throughout England.

It has been reported to us that certain persons, drawn by excessive ambition, by occasion of lay recognition or secular power in the secular forum, without seeking the bishop's hearing, presume to vindicate for themselves in your parishes the patronage of churches and ecclesiastical benefices. Therefore, since persons of this kind do not enter through the door but climb up by another way, and for this reason are unworthy to rejoice in the name or prerogative of a pastor, commanding your fraternity through apostolic writings, we command that, if those who are established to have obtained the patronage of churches or ecclesiastical benefices in the aforesaid manner do not resign the aforesaid things after being admonished, unless they are fortified by prescription or an episcopal grant, you are to render them, the evasion of appeal having been removed, strangers to office and benefice; and, if they do not desist even thus, bind them with the bond of anathema and hold and cause them to be held bound until worthy satisfaction.

To this, because certain laymen despoil churches of lands and other possessions so that they may thus cause ecclesiastical men to litigate before a secular judge, we enjoin you by authority of the presents to take care to prohibit this publicly under threat of anathema. But if anyone is a contemner of your prohibition, if it is manifest, appeal ceasing, subject him to excommunication, and until worthy satisfaction cause him attentively to be avoided as an excommunicated person.

> Ab officio et beneficio removetur qui monitus non dimittit ecclesiam sine consensu episcopi sibi concessam. H. d. — (Ad hoc etc.:) Laici, spoliantes ecclesiam, excommunicantur. H. d.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopis et Episcopis per Angliam Constitutis.
>
> Relatum est nobis, quod nonnulli, ambitione nimia tracti, occasione laicae recognitionis vel potentiae saecularis in saeculari foro, non requisita episcopi audientia, patronatus ecclesiarum et beneficia ecclesiastica sibi praesumunt in vestris parochiis vindicare. Quoniam igitur huiusmodi personae non intrant per ostium, sed aliunde conscendunt, ac per hoc indigni sunt pastoris nomine vel praerogativa gaudere, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus quatenus eos, quos patronatus ecclesiarum vel ecclesiastica beneficia constiterit praedicto modo adeptos, si commoniti praedicta minime resignaverint, nisi praescriptione aut episcopali concessione muniti fuerint, sublato appellationis diffugio ab officio reddatis et beneficio alienos, +et si nec sic destiterint, vinculo anathematis innodetis, et usque ad dignam satisfactionem teneatis et teneri faciatis adstrictos. Ad hoc, quoniam quidam laici ecclesias terris et aliis possessionibus spoliant, ut sic viros ecclesiasticos faciant coram saeculari iudice litigare, vobis praesentium auctoritate iniungimus, ut id publice sub interminatione curetis anathematis prohibere. Si quis autem prohibitionis vestrae contemptor exstiterit, eum, si manifestum fuerit, appellatione cessante excommunicationi subdatis, et usque ad dignam satisfactionem sicut excommunicatum faciatis attentius evitari.

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: If a question of the right of patronage is not terminated within six months from the time of vacancy, the bishop can freely institute a rector there without presentation. This it says. But understand this of ecclesiastical patrons, for in the case of laymen four months suffice.

The same.

It befits you (And below: [cf. c. 4, On Age and Quality, I. 14.]) But as for those churches concerning whose patronage there is a controversy, if the controversy has not been terminated within six months after they become vacant, let it be lawful for you to order them with a suitable person, the obstacle of appeal having been removed. To these things, etc. (cf. c. 27, On Appeals, II. 28.)

Si quaestio iuris patronatus infra sex menses non terminatur a tempore vacationis, libere potest episcopus sine praesentatione ibidem instituere rectorem. H. d. Sed intellige de patronis ecclesiasticis; nam in laicis sufficiunt quatuor menses.

Idem.

Eam te decet (Et infra: [cf. c. 4. de aet. et qual. I. 14.]) Illas autem ecclesias, de quarum patronatu controversia fuerit, si infra sex menses, postquam vacaverint, non fuerit controversia terminata, licitum tibi sit de persona idonea sublato appellationis obstaculo ordinare. Ad haec etc. (cf. c. 27. de app. II. 28.)

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: A patron cannot alienate a right of patronage by his own authority, nor exact anything temporal from the church unless at the time of foundation it was reserved to him by the diocesan.

Lucius III.

Furthermore, because advocates of churches are known to have burst forth into such insolence that they institute and remove priests and other ecclesiastical men in those churches according to the judgment of their own will, and presume to transfer the right of advowson to others under title of donation or purchase and by other contracts even according to their own will, extorting fodrum, lodging dues, regal dues, and similar things from the same churches as though from their own peasants, and reducing to nothing according to their own judgment what the ministers of the churches do without consulting them, we establish by the present decree that they—whether they are called advocates, patrons, vice-lords, custodians, or those having guardianships, or are designated by whatever other name—are to cease from burdens upon churches and exact nothing in them beyond the ancient and moderate revenues instituted by the bishops of the places; otherwise, if they exact anything else, they are to be subjected to excommunication. We also annul by the present constitution contracts of this kind that they have made or will make in the future, and decree that they have no force. Moreover, lest the authority of the present decrees be eluded through the obstacle of appeal either in those things that have been said concerning heretics or in the coercion of advocates that we have described, we deny every remedy of appeal in the aforesaid chapters, intending to furnish no hearing at all to any persons appealing against these things.

Patronus ius patronatus propria auctoritate alienare non potest, nec ab ecclesia aliquid temporale exigere, nisi tempore fundationis a dioecesano illud fuerit sibi reservatum.

Lucius III.

Praeterea, quoniam advocati ecclesiarum in tantam noscuntur insolentiam prorupisse, ut sacerdotes et alios ecclesiasticos viros pro suae voluntatis arbitrio ecclesiis ipsis instituant atque destituant, et ius advocationis donationis vel emptionis titulo, aliisque pro sua voluntate contractibus etiam in alios transferre praesumunt, fodrum, albergarias, regium et similia, tanquam a propriis rusticis, ab ipsis ecclesiis extorquentes, et quod ministri ecclesiarum eis inconsultis faciunt iuxta proprium arbitrium in irritum deducentes, praesenti decreto statuimus, eos, sive advocati, sive patroni, vel vicedomini, sive custodes, vel guardias habentes, seu quocunque alio nomine censeantur, a gravaminibus ecclesiarum cessare, nihilque in ipsis praeter antiquos et moderatos reditus a locorum episcopis institutos exigere, aut, si aliud exegerint, excommunicationi subdantur. Contractus quoque huiusmodi, quos fecerunt vel facient in futurum, praesenti constitutione cassamus, et eos vim aliquam decernimus non habere. Ne autem per appellationis obstaculum aut in his quae de haereticis dicta sunt aut in advocatorum coercione quam diximus, praesentium deludatur > auctoritas decretorum, totius appellationis remedium in praescriptis capitulis denegamus, nullam penitus audientiam quibuslibet contra haec appellantibus praebituri.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: When several persons are successively presented by a lay patron, a choice is given to the bishop; but among those presented by an ecclesiastical person, the person presented first is preferred. This it says specifically, and it is one of the more principal chapters of the title.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

But when an advocate has presented one suitable cleric to the bishop and afterward, that person not having been rejected, has petitioned that another equally suitable cleric be admitted to the same church, which of them is to be preferred to the other we believe should be left to the bishop's judgment, if the one to whom the right of presenting belongs is a layman. But if a college or ecclesiastical person held the presentation, he who is earlier in time appears to be stronger in right.

> In pluribus successive praesentatis a patrono laico, episcopo datur gratificatio; sed in praesentatis a persona ecclesiastica potior est primo praesentatus. H. d. specialiter, et est unum de principalioribus cap. tituli.
>
> Idem Norvicensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum autem advocatus clericum unum idoneum episcopo praesentaverit, et postulaverit postmodum, eo non refutato, alium aeque idoneum in eadem ecclesia admitti : quis eorum alteri praeferatur, iudicio episcopi credimus relinquendum, si laicus fuerit, cui ius competit praesentandi. Verum si collegium vel ecclesiastica persona praesentationem haberet, qui prior est tempore, iure potior esse videtur.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: From the construction of a church made with the bishop's consent, a right of patronage is acquired. This first. A patron does not elect a prelate in a conventual church, but he does so in a chapel. This second. The honor of procession is owed to the patron, and he is supported by the church if he inclines toward poverty. This third. And this text is one of the more principal ones.

Clement III.

It was for us (And below: [cf. c. 27, On Simony, V. 3.]) Furthermore, you asked us whether someone becomes patron by the construction of a church alone, or whether he is to be admitted with the clerics to the election of a pleban, or altogether repelled from it, even if he has alleged that by long custom he ought to participate in the election. To your inquiry we give this response: if anyone has constructed a church with the assent of the diocesan bishop, he thereby acquires the right of patronage. But in a conventual church the patron's assent is more properly requested not for an election of a prelate to be made, but for one already made, unless the patron otherwise obtains from his jurisdiction that he ought to interpose his part in the election to be considered. It is otherwise, however, in a chapel, in which one priest to be instituted is sometimes elected by the patron and presented to the bishop of the place in order to obtain institution. For the foundation of a church, the honor of procession is also reserved to the founder; and if he inclines toward poverty, he is modestly aided by the church, as is established in the sacred canons. [As to the last, etc. (cf. c. 27, On Simony, V. 3.) Given at the Lateran, on the eighth day before the Ides of May.]

Ex constructione ecclesiae, facta de consensu episcopi, acquiritur ius patronatus. Hoc primo. Patronus non eligit praelatum in conventuali ecclesia, sed in capella sic. Hoc secundo. Patrono debetur processionis honor, et alimentatur ab ecclesia, si vergat ad inopiam. Hoc tertio. Et iste textus est de principalioribus.

Clemens III.

Nobis fuit (Et infra: [cf. c. 27. de simon. V. 3.]) Praeterea quaesivisti a nobis, si aliquis efficiatur sola ecclesiae constructione patronus, vel si ad electionem plebani sit cum clericis admittendus, seu ab ipsa repellendus omnino, tametsi de longa consuetudine allegaverit se electioni interesse debere. Inquisitioni tuae tale damus responsum, quod, si quis ecclesiam cum assensu dioecesani episcopi construxit, ex eo ius patronatus acquirit. Ceterum in conventuali ecclesia non electioni praelati faciendae, sed iam factae honestius patroni postulatur assensus, nisi patronus aliter de sua iurisdictione obtineat, ut partes suas interponere debeat electioni tractandae. Secus tamen est in capella, in qua unus presbyter instituendus a patrono quandoque eligitur, et pro institutione habenda loci episcopo praesentatur. Pro fundatione quoque ecclesiae honor processionis fundatori servatur, et, si ad inopiam vergat, ab ecclesia illi modeste succurritur, sicut in sacris est canonibus institutum. [Ad. ultimum etc. (cf. c. 27. de simon. V. 3.) Dat. Lat. VIII. Id. Maii.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: The patron of a vacant church, although he is a cleric, cannot present himself to it.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Rouen.

You petitioned to be instructed through our letters whether some cleric can present himself, if he is suitable, to a vacant church in which he holds the right of patronage. Therefore, since no one ought to intrude himself into offices of ecclesiastical prelacy, we respond to your inquiry in this way: no one can present himself to the parsonship of any church, however suitable he may be and by whatever learning and merits he may be aided. [Given at Rome, on the third day before the Ides of June, in the first year of our pontificate. 1198.]

Patronus ecclesiae vacantis, quanquam sit clericus, ad eam se praesentare non potest.

Innocentius III. Rothomagensi Archiepiscopo.

Per nostras postulasti literas edoceri, utrum clericus aliquis ad vacantem ecclesiam, in qua ius obtinet patronatus, se ipsum, si est idoneus, valeat praesentare. Quum igitur nullus se ingerere debeat ecclesiasticae praelationis officiis, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod nullus se potest ad personatum alicuius ecclesiae praesentare, quantumcunque idoneus sit, et quibuscunque studiis et meritis adiuvetur. [*Dat. Rom. III. Id. Iun. Pont. nostri Ao. I. * 1198.]

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: If a question concerning the right of patronage among patrons is not definitively decided within four months, the bishop will order the church without prejudice to them.

The same, to the Bishop of Coventry.

Since prejudice ought not be generated against churches through the disagreements of laymen, we consider it grave and unworthy that, as has been reported to our apostolate, by occasion of the disagreement that is litigated among them concerning the right of patronage, churches remain widowed of rectors longer than is due, which is known to redound to their grave detriment. But because, according to the Apostle, our daily burden is continual solicitude for all the churches, wishing by the debt of the pontifical office to confront those things we have premised, we command your fraternity through apostolic writings that, if a question concerning the right of patronage has arisen among some persons and it has not been definitively decided within four months by the one to whom it belongs, from then onward, appeal having been removed, you are not to defer ordering that church with a suitable person, in such a way that no prejudice ought thereby to be generated in the future against the one who prevails in the right of patronage. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Ides of January. 1199.]

> Si quaestio iuris patronatus inter patronos non diffinitur infra quatuor menses, episcopus ordinabit ecclesiam sine praeiudicio eorundem.
>
> Idem Conventrensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum propter discordias laicorum +non debeat ecclesiis praeiudicium generari, grave gerimus et indignum, quod, sicut nostro est apostolatui reseratum, occasione dissensionis, quae de iure patronatus vertitur inter eos, ecclesiae plus debito remanent rectoribus viduatae, quod in ipsarum grave dispendium noscitur redundare. Verum quia secundum Apostolum instantia nostra quotidiana est omnium ecclesiarum sollicitudo continua: volentes his, quae praemisimus, ex debito pontificalis officii obviare, Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si de iure patronatus quaestio emerserit inter aliquos, et ab eo, cui competit, infra quatuor menses non fuerit diffinitum, extunc ecclesiam ipsam appellatione remota de persona non differas idonea ordinare, ita, quod illi ex hoc non debeat in posterum praeiudicium generari, qui ius evicerit patronatus. [Dat. Lat. III. Id. Ian. 1199.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: A legate a latere can reserve to his own collation a church of which another church is patron, although it is not vacant, and confer it when it becomes vacant. This first. From two persons presented by a lay patron, the superior can institute the second. This second. And thus, as to its meaning, this text contains two different statements, although as to the letter both are intermingled.

The same, to the Archdeacon and Chancellor of Auxerre.

When our beloved son Master Walter de Picerei on his own behalf, and Master Hugh de Feverniaco on behalf of the Dean of Alveoli, were litigating with one another concerning the church of Beauville, we granted to both as auditor our beloved son G., cardinal deacon of Santa Maria in Portico. In his presence the same master, by proposing, showed that, when formerly our venerable brother the Bishop of Ostia, then legate of the Apostolic See in the regions of Gaul, had marked William de Montibus with the clerical character, he commanded our beloved son the Archdeacon of Chartres to reserve for his donation the first church that happened to become vacant in his archdeaconry, prohibiting him from conferring it upon anyone, since he had resolved to provide for the cleric G. from it; and when the church of Berovilla became vacant there, the same archdeacon, contrary to the mandate of that legate, presented the subdeacon G. to it. After his act was quashed by the same legate, the legate granted the church thus vacant to the aforesaid G., [as is contained in his authentic instrument. To this afterward both our venerable brother ...., the bishop, and the said Archdeacon of Chartres, who was patron of the church, furnished assent, as their letters testify; and thus the aforesaid William held the church itself for almost four years and more, and was in no way drawn into a suit by the dean, who equally knew and saw this.]

But when a certain prebend became vacant in the church of Saint Martin in the diocese of Chartres, the bishop took care to assign the said church to the cleric H. upon the archdeacon's presentation, and the prebend to the aforesaid G. Hence H. himself petitioned [humbly] that the same church be confirmed to him, as one which he said he had obtained canonically [without contradiction] and also upon the presentation of the archdeacon, the true patron, [and that perpetual silence concerning it be imposed upon his adversary. The proctor of the said dean, denying this, added that when, at the death of C., formerly Dean of Alveoli, the churches of Franconville and Beauville became vacant, ..., Archdeacon of Chartres, to whom their donation belonged, granted the church of Beauville to his brother G. and, by mandate of the diocesan bishop, corporally invested him with it, as is contained in the letters both of the bishop and also of the archdeacon. But after these things William de Montibus presented to the same archdeacon the letters of the aforesaid legate, in which it was contained that the same legate had retained for himself the donation of one church, whichever should first happen to become vacant in the archdeaconry of Chartres; and through this the same William petitioned that he either confer upon him the other of those churches or reserve it for the donation of the legate. He responded that he could fulfill neither, because he had already assigned both to others. But William himself, approaching the same legate a second time and falsely suggesting that the church of Beauville was vacant, obtained from him that he granted the said church to him in fact and commanded that he be instituted in it. Learning this, the same G., lest anyone disturb him in his possession, appealed to the Apostolic See and, coming personally to the Apostolic See, obtained that the cause itself be delegated to judges. When he afterward returned to his own region, the aforesaid William, distrusting his own justice, renounced in the hand of the said Bishop of Chartres whatever right, if any, he had obtained through the same legate in the aforesaid church. This having been done, the above-named archdeacon presented Master G. de Picerel to the same bishop and caused him, to the prejudice of the aforesaid absent G., to be invested with the aforesaid church. Learning this, the same G., in defense of his right, subjected both himself and that church to the protection of the Apostolic See and, not permitting himself to be cast from possession, appealed to our hearing, adding that all things were to remain in that condition in which they then were. And especially for this reason—namely, because the said archdeacon, by mandate of the Archbishop of Chartres, wished to induct the aforesaid master into corporal possession of the aforesaid church—he appealed to the hearing of the metropolitan; but the same archdeacon nevertheless, after an appeal of this kind, attempted to induct the master himself into possession of that church. Hence, when at the complaint of G. himself our venerable brother ...., Archbishop of Sens, ..., Subdean, and ...., Cantor of Chartres, had committed the same cause, the aforesaid master, cited by them and constituted in their presence, was unwilling to respond; but, immediately interposing an appeal to the Apostolic See, he withdrew from them contumaciously. Nevertheless, proceeding further, they received lawful witnesses against him, through whom it was shown clearly that, after the appeal interposed to the court of Sens, the same master was inducted into corporal possession of that church, as was read in the letters of the same judges. And thus the often-mentioned master, after his custodian had been driven from that church, was reasonably despoiled of it; the church was at length committed to the care of another who, not by authority of the said master but in the name of the aforesaid dean, celebrated in it and received its revenues. Hence, because the same G. said that he had obtained that church in this way, he petitioned that writings be sent to judges who would protect him from the undue molestation of the aforesaid master. But to the contrary the said master replied against him, saying that it was altogether false that the dean had been invested with that church upon the presentation of the true patron and by mandate of the bishop, especially since the bishop confessed in his letters that the same dean had been invested neither with the cure of that church nor with the church itself. Moreover, concerning what the opposing party said—that the aforesaid William, fearing the dean's return, had renounced his right in the hand of the Bishop of Chartres—the same master asserted that it was altogether a lie, since after his return he had possessed that church for three years and more without suit, while the dean himself saw and knew it. But the master himself was unwilling to deny this: namely, that his adversary had appealed to the court of Sens, while the master himself appealed to the Apostolic See and prohibited the dean from presuming to molest him concerning his right. Yet the dean, nevertheless approaching the aforesaid metropolitan, caused the master to be cited. Appearing before him on the appointed day, the master was unwilling to join issue but, renewing his appeal, withdrew. Yet the archbishop nevertheless, as the adversary also confessed, delegated the cause to judges after the appeal. Hence the same master said that, both through his own allegations and also through those things the opposing party had proposed, it was established that he himself had been despoiled after the appeal to the Apostolic See was interposed. Moreover, to what the adversary proposed—that after the dean's appeal to the Archbishop of Sens was interposed the same master had been inducted into possession of that church—the same master said that, if the dean had appealed lest the archdeacon fulfill the execution committed to him, an appeal of this kind was null, since appeal was not to be made from an executor where he was not attempting to exceed the limits of the mandate. He added furthermore that, since the same dean had no right in the church, it was not his concern to appeal; but if he had in any way been able to appeal, because the same master destroyed the appeal that he had interposed to the metropolitan by objecting that an appeal to the Apostolic See had been interposed, he ought not to have been despoiled in the meantime.]

To the contrary the dean's proctor responded that, although the said legate commanded that the first church to become vacant in the archdeaconry of Chartres be reserved for his own donation, nevertheless he could not by law do this concerning the aforesaid church, because such power did not belong to him, since presentation of a cleric to that church belonged to the same archdeacon not as a cleric but as though to a layman by reason of patronage, not by right of the archdeaconry. Hence, since the same archdeacon was in no way bound to observe his prohibition in this, he [indeed] could by law present another to the same church, and his presentation, because it was made concerning a suitable person, ought to be judged firm, [because, even if it were true—which is nevertheless altogether false—that the right of presenting a cleric to that church belonged to the aforesaid archdeacon by reason not of the archidiaconal office but of temporal lordship, and that the legate's prohibition had no force in this respect, since he could not prohibit it to a lay patron, nevertheless for another reason he asserted that the archdeacon's presentation made concerning the aforesaid dean was void and empty: because, when he presented him, the archdeacon had already long before been suspended by our beloved son P., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Marcellus, then cardinal deacon of Santa Maria in Via Lata and legate of the Apostolic See; and that suspension lasted until after the return of the aforesaid Bishop of Ostia, through whose intervention the same archdeacon, constituted in our presence, merited to be absolved from the bond of suspension, as is proved through the letters of the same bishop. But the dean's proctor rejoined to the contrary that, although the archdeacon was held by the bond of suspension, nevertheless, as to a layman, the donation of that church could belong to him by right of patronage, of which he could not be deprived by any reason either through the legate's prohibition or through his suspension, especially since only the archidiaconal office had been interdicted to him.]

We therefore, after those and other things that were proposed before the same auditor and faithfully reported to us through him had been more diligently understood, considering that, even if the aforesaid archdeacon had presented the aforesaid G. to that church as a layman, nevertheless, because the dean himself was not admitted by the diocesan bishop, but the said H., [afterward] presented by the same archdeacon, was instituted by the diocesan bishop, according to the statute of Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, not the first but the second obtained right in the aforesaid church; and even if the aforesaid archdeacon presented the aforesaid G. as a cleric, since in what he did as a cleric he was subject to the legate's jurisdiction, whence, after the same legate had decreed that the donation of that church be reserved for himself, he could not present anyone to it as a cleric, we decree that his presentation made less canonically was void. And, notwithstanding it entirely, we pronounced that the grant of the same church made to the above-named H. had been canonical, nevertheless quashing what was attempted through the delegates of the aforesaid Archbishop of Sens after an appeal was lawfully interposed to us, and adjudging to the same master the aforesaid church, together with the fruits received from it in the meantime, to be possessed fully and peacefully, imposing perpetual silence upon the aforesaid G. concerning this. [Wherefore, to your discretion, etc. Given at Rome, on the ninth day before the Kalends of April, in the ninth year. 1206.]

Legatus de latere ecclesiam, cuius alia ecclesia est patrona, collationi suae reservare potest, licet non vacet, et conferre quum vacat. Hoc primo. Ex duobus, praesentatis a patrono laico, potest superior instituere secundum. Hoc secundo. Et sic quoad intellectum iste textus habet duo dicta diversa, licet quoad literam ambo commisceantur.

Idem Archidiacono et Cancellario Altissiodorensibus.

Quum dilectus filius, magister Gualterus de Picerei pro se ipso, et magister Hugo de Feverniaco pro decano de Alveoli super ecclesia de Beavilla invicem litigarent, utrique dilectum filium G. sanctae Mariae in porticu diaconum cardinalem concessimus auditorem. In cuius praesentia idem magister proponendo monstravit, quod, Quum olim venerabilis frater noster Hostiensis episcopus, tunc sedis apostolicae legatus in partibus Gallicanis, et Guillelmum de Montibus insignisset charactere clericali, dilecto filio archidiacono Carnotensi mandaverit, ut ecclesiam, quam in archidiaconatu suo primo vacare contingeret, donationi suae servaret, inhibens, ne alicui conferret eandem, de qua G. clerico disposuerat providere, et ecclesia de Berovilla ibi vacasset, idem archidiaconus contra mandatum eiusdem legati ad ipsam G. subdiaconum praesentavit, cuius facto ab eodem legato cassato, ipse praefato G. concessit ecclesiam sic vacantem, +[sicut in ipsius authentico continetur. In quo postmodum tam venerabilis frater noster .... episcopus, quam dictus archidiaconus Carnotensis qui patronus erat ecclesiae praebuerunt assensum, quemadmodum literae testantur ipsorum, et sic memoratus Guillelmus ecclesiam ipsam per quatuor fere annos et ultra tenuit, et a decano qui hoc sciebat pariter et videbat nequaquam fuit fractus in causam.] Vacante vero quadam praebenda in ecclesia sancti Martini Carnotensis dioecesis, episcopus dictam ecclesiam ad praesentationem archidiaconi H. clerico, praebendam vero praefato G. assignare curavit. Unde ipse H. supplicabat [humiliter], eandem sibi ecclesiam confirmari, utpote quam canonice [sine contradictione] ac etiam ad praesentationem archidiaconi veri patroni se dicebat adeptum, [et adversario suo imponi perpetuum silentium super ea. Quod utique dicti decani procurator infitiatus adiecit quod, quum in obitu C. quondam decani de Alveoli, de Franconvilla et de Beavilla ecclesiae vacavissent .... Carnotensis archidiaconus, ad quem illarum donatio pertinebat, G. fratri suo ecclesiam de Beavilla concessit, ac eum de mandato dioecesani episcopi de ipsa corporaliter investivit, sicut in litteris tam episcopi, quam etiam archidiaconi continetur. Post haec autem Guillelmus de Montibus litteras supradicti legati eidem archidiacono praesentavit, in quibus continebatur, eundem legatum sibi retinuisse donationem unius ecclesiae, quam primo contingeret in archidiaconatu Carnotensi vacare; et per hoc idem Guillelmus petebat ut vel alteram illarum ecclesiarum sibi conferret vel donationi legati reservaret eandem; qui respondit quod neutrum implere poterat eo, quod utramque iam aliis assignarat. Ipse vero Guillelmus, iterato ad eundem legatum accedens et falso suggerens ecclesiam de Beavilla vacare, obtinuit apud ipsum quod dictam ecclesiam de facto sibi concessit et mandavit, ut institueretur in ea. Quod comperiens idem G. ne quis eum in possessione sua turbaret sedem apostolicam appellavit, et, personaliter ad sedem apostolicam veniens, causam ipsam obtinuit iudicibus delegari, quo postmodum ad propria revertente, praefatus Guillelmus, de iustitia sua diffidens iuri, si quod per eundem legatum in iam dicta ecclesia fuerat consecutus, in manu renuntiavit dicti episcopi Carnotensis, et hoc facto, praenominatus archidiaconus magistrum G. de Picerel eidem episcopo praesentavit, ipsumque, in praeiudicium praefati G. absentis, de praescripta fecit ecclesia investiri. Quod intelligens idem G. in sui iuris defensionem se pariter et ecclesiam ipsam apostolicae sedis protectioni supposuit, et, a possessione se deiici non permittens, ad nostram audientiam appellavit; adiiciens, ut in statu illo, in quo tunc erant, omnia permanerent, et specialiter hac de causa, quia videlicet dictus archidiaconus, de mandato archiepiscopi Carnotensis, iam dictum magistrum in corporalem possessionem ecclesiae memoratae volebat inducere, ad metropolitani audientiam appellavit; sed idem archidiaconus nihilominus, post appellationem huiusmodi magistrum ipsum in possessionem ipsius ecclesiae inducere, attentavit. Unde quum ad querelam ipsius G. venerabili fratri nostro .... Senonensi archiepiscopo .... subdecano et .... cantori Carnotensibus, causam commisisset eandem, praedictus magister citatus ab eis, et in eorum praesentia constitutus noluit respondere; sed, statim appellationem ad sedem apostolicam interponens, contumaciter recessit ab eis. Illi vero, nihilominus procedentes, testes contra ipsum legitimos receperunt per quos fuit evidenter ostensum quod, post appellationem ad Senonensem curiam interpositam, idem magister fuit in corporalem eiusdem ecclesiae possessionem inductus, sicut in eorundem iudicum litteris legebatur; et sic saepe fatus magister, custode suo ab ecclesia ipsa depulso, ea fuit rationabiliter spoliatus, quae tandem fuit alterius curae commissa, qui, non auctoritate dicti magistri, sed nomine memorati decani, celebrabat in ipsa, recipiebatque obventiones eiusdem. Unde, quoniam idem G. taliter se dicebat illam ecclesiam assecutum, petebat scribi iudicibus, qui eum a praedicti magistri molestatione indebita tuerentur. E contra vero dictus magister replicavit in illum, dicens penitus falsum esse quod decanus, ad praesentationem veri patroni, et de mandato episcopi, de ipsa fuerit ecclesia investitus, praesertim, quum episcopus in suis litteris fateretur eundem decanum nec de cura illius ecclesiae nec de ipsa fuisse penitus investitum. Quod autem praefatum Guillelmum, de reditu decani timentem, abrenuntiasse iuri suo in manu Carnotensis episcopi pars adversa dicebat, idem magister prorsus esse mendacium astruebat, quum, post reditum eius per tres annos et amplius, ipso vidente ac sciente, illam ecclesiam possederit absque lite. Illud vero magister ipse noluit diffiteri, qui videlicet adversarius, ad Senonensem curiam appellasset, ipso quidem magistro sedem apostolicam provocante, ac inhibente, ne decanus ipsum super iure suo praesumeret molestare. At ipse, nihilominus ad metropolitanum accedens memoratum fecit citari magistrum, qui coram eo statuta die comparens, litem noluit contestari, sed appellatione innovata, recessit. Archiepiscopus vero nihilominus causam, sicut etiam adversarius fatebatur, post appellationem iudicibus delegavit; unde dicebat idem magister, quod, tam per allegationes suas, quam etiam per ea, quae proposuerat pars adversa, constabat ipsum fuisse post appellationem ad sedem apostolicam interpositam spoliatum. Ad illud autem, quod adversarius proponebat, post appellationem decani ad Senonensem archiepiscopum interpositam, idem magister fuerat in eiusdem ecclesiae possessionem inductus; dicebat idem magister quod, si decanus appellaverat, ne archidiaconus commissam sibi exsecutionem impleret, huiusmodi appellatio nulla erat, quum ab exsecutore non fuerit appellandum, ubi mandati fines excedere non tentabat. Adiecit insuper quod, quum idem decanus nullum in ecclesia ius haberet, sui non intererat appellare, sed, si appellare aliquatenus potuisset, quia idem magister appellationem, quam ille ad metropolitanum interposuerat, appellationis ad sedem apostolicam interpositae peremit obiectu, medio tempore non debuit spoliari.] E contra procurator decani respondit, quod, etsi dictus legatus donationi suae reservari mandaverit primo in archidiaconatu Carnotensi ecclesiam vacaturam, circa praedictam tamen ecclesiam hoc facere de iure non potuit, quia talis potestas sibi minime competebat, quum praesentatio clerici ad illam ecclesiam non tanquam clerico, sed quasi laico ratione patronatus, non iure archidiaconatus eidem archidiacono pertineret. Unde quum inhibitionem ipsius in hoc idem archidiaconus custodire minime teneretur, alium [quidem] ad eandem ecclesiam de iure potuit praesentare, ac praesentatio eius debet, ex quo de persona idonea facta est, firma censeri, [quoniam, et si verum exsisteret, quod tamen est falsum omnino, ius videlicet praesentandi clericum ad ipsam ecclesiam, non archidiaconalis officii, sed temporalis dominii ratione, ad memoratum archidiaconum pertinere, nec in hac parte valuisse prohibitionem legati, tanquam, qui non poterat id laico prohibere patrono, ex alia tamen causa, praesentationem archidiaconi factam de praedicto decano asseruit esse irritam et inanem, quia, quando praesentavit eundem, iam erat longe ante suspensus per dilectum filium, P. tituli Sancti Marcelli presbyterum, tum Sanctae Mariae in via lata diaconum cardinalem, apostolicae sedis legatum, et duravit illa suspensio usque post reditum praefati episcopi Hostiensis, ad cuius interventum idem archidiaconus, in nostra praesentia constitutus, meruit a vinculo suspensionis absolvi sicut per eiusdem episcopi literas comprobatur. Procurator vero decani subiunxit econtra quod, etsi archidiaconus suspensionis vinculo teneretur, poterat tamen ei, tanquam laico, donatio ipsius ecclesiae iure competere patronatus, quo nec per prohibitionem, nec per suspensionem legati potuisset aliqua ratione privari, praesertim quum archidiaconale tantum officium sibi fuerit interdictum.] Nos igitur, his et aliis, quae coram eodem auditore fuere proposita nobisque relata fideliter per eundem, diligentius intellectis, attendentes, quod, etsi praefatus archidiaconus memoratum G. tanquam laicus ad illam ecclesiam praesentasset, quia tamen ipse decanus per dioecesanum episcopum admissus non fuit, sed dictus H. ab eodem archidiacono [postmodum] praesentatus, a dioecesano fuit episcopo institutus, iuxta statutum bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae praedecessoris nostri non primus, sed secundus ius est assecutus in ecclesia memorata, etsi memoratus archidiaconus praefatum G. tanquam clericus praesentavit, quoniam in eo, quod tanquam clericus faciebat, suberat iurisdictioni legati, unde, postquam idem legatus donationem illius ecclesiae sibi decreverat reservandam, ad eam tanquam clericus non potuit quempiam praesentare, praesentationem ipsius minus canonice factam fuisse decernimus irritam, et, ea penitus non obstante, concessionem eiusdem ecclesiae, factam praenominato H., pronunciavimus canonicam exstitisse, cassantes nihilominus quod per delegatos a supra dicto archiepiscopo Senonensi post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam exstitit attentatum, et adiudicantes eidem magistro praefatam ecclesiam cum fructibus, medio tempore perceptis ex ea, plene ac pacifice possidendam, praedicto G. super hoc perpetuum silentium imponendo. [*Quocirca discretioni etc. Dat. Romae IX. Kal. Apr. A. IX. * 1206.]

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: If a lay patron successively presents two persons, the institution of the second is valid notwithstanding an appeal first made by the first; nevertheless, a bishop who maliciously rejected the first is compelled to provide for him in a suitable benefice. And in the final point it is a singular case.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

Of the pastoral office (And below: [cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.]) But since it often happens that lay patrons of churches present now one person, now another, to vacant churches, solicitously you petitioned to be instructed through the Apostolic See whether a cleric presented by a lay patron to some church, if the diocesan bishop has not considered that he should be admitted, obtains any right in it from a presentation of this kind; and, if perhaps he has appealed to the Apostolic See, and after the appeal interposed by him the same patron takes care to present another, and the bishop institutes the second person presented, whether the same person ought deservedly to be removed from that church. We therefore, adhering to the footsteps of Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, out of reverence for him, who, distinguishing between persons presented by clerical and lay patrons, judged the condition of the possessor better among those presented by a layman, say that the institution of the person presented in the second place by a lay patron obtains the force of firmness. Nevertheless, we establish that a bishop who maliciously refused to admit a suitable person presented is to be compelled to provide for him in a suitable benefice, so that he may be punished in that respect in which there is no doubt that he offended against him. [You asked, etc. (cf. c. 19, On Privileges, V. 33.) Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January. 1204.]

Si laicus patronus duos successive praesentet, valet institutio de secundo non obstante appellatione prius facta per primum; episcopus tamen, qui malitiose primum repulit, eidem in competenti beneficio providere compellitur. Et in ultimo est casus singularis.

Idem Eliensi Episcopo.

Pastoralis officii (Et infra: [cf. c. 28. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]) Quum autem saepe contingat, patronos ecclesiarum laicos nunc unum, nunc alium ad vacantes ecclesias praesentare, sollicite Postulasti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, an clericus, ad aliquam ecclesiam a patrono laico praesentatus, si dioecesanus episcopus ipsum non duxerit admittendum, ex huiusmodi praesentatione aliquid iuris assequatur in illa; et, si forte idem ad sedem apostolicam appellaverit, et post appellationem ab ipso interpositam idem patronus alium curaverit praesentare, ac secundum instituit episcopus praesentatum, idem ab ipsa ecclesia merito debeat amoveri. Nos igitur bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae praedecessoris nostri pro sua reverentia vestigiis inhaerentes, qui inter praesentatos a clerico et laico patronis distinguens, inter praesentatos a laico conditionem possidentis censuit meliorem, dicimus, quod institutio praesentati secundo loco a laico patrono robur obtinet firmitatis. Verumtamen constituimus, ut episcopus, qui praesentatum idoneum malitiose recusavit admittere, ad providendum eidem in competenti beneficio compellatur, quatenus puniatur in eo, in quo ipsum non est dubium deliquisse. [Interrogasti etc. (*cf. c. * 19. de priv. V. 33.) Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Ian. 1204.]

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: If someone has been ordained at the presentation of the rector to the title of a church, the patron who did not consent will be able to present to that church when it becomes vacant.

The same, to the Bishop of Orense.

You petitioned to be instructed through the Apostolic See whether, when rectors of parochial churches sometimes present certain persons to be ordained to the titles of their churches, the election of such persons belongs to the rectors themselves or also to the patrons; and, if the patrons' assent is not to be sought in these matters, whether their right of electing remains safe, so that, when those churches happen to become vacant, persons titled in this manner are not to be preferred to others. To this we respond briefly to your fraternity that through intitulation of this kind no prejudice is generated against patrons that would prevent them from presenting others to those churches when they become vacant, unless it proceeded from the patrons' assent. [Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Ides of February, in the eleventh year of our pontificate. 1209.]

Si ad praesentationem rectoris ad titulum ecclesiae aliquis fuerit ordinatus, patronus, qui non consensit, ad ipsam, quum vacabit, poterit praesentare.

Idem Auriensi Episcopo.

Postulasti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, ut, quum rectores parochialium ecclesiarum quandoque quosdam praesentent ad suarum ecclesiarum titulos ordinandos, utrum electio talium ad ipsos rectores pertineat, vel etiam ad patronos; et, si in his patronorum non est requirendus assensus, utrum ius illis salvum maneat eligendi, ut, quum ipsas ecclesias vacare contigerit, intitulati huiusmodi non sint aliis praeferendi. Ad quod fraternitati tuae breviter respondemus, quod per intitulationem huiusmodi nullum patronis praeiudicium generatur, quin possint alios ad illas ecclesias, quum vacaverint, praesentare, nisi de patronorum processisset assensu. [Dat. Lat. II. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. XI. 1209.]

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: Even a patron who is a cleric cannot confer a vacant church, and, if he conferred it, he can nevertheless present to it.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of York.

Your letters transmitted to us contained that, when the chapter of York had granted the vacant church of Gameforde, in which they hold the right of patronage, to the cleric R., they afterward presented the cleric L. to you for the same church after an appeal interposed by that R. to the Apostolic See. (And below:) We respond to your consultation in this way: since by force of the right of patronage not collation but presentation belongs to the patron, you will be able to institute in that church the person presented, provided no canonical impediment stands against him, as being the stronger.

> Patronus etiam clericus vacantem conferre non potest, et, si contulit, potest nihilominus ad illam praesentare.
>
> Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo Eboracensi.
>
> Transmissae ad nos tuae literae continebant, quod, quum capitulum Eboracense ecclesiam de Gameforde vacantem, in qua ius obtinent patronatus, R. clerico concessissent, ipsi postmodum L. clericum tibi ad eandem ecclesiam praesentarunt post appellationem ab eodem R. ad sedem apostolicam interiectam. (Et infra:) Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum ex vi iuris patronatus non concessio, sed praesentatio pertineat ad patronum, praesentatum, si ei aliquid non obsistat canonicum, instituere in ipsa ecclesia poteris utpote potiorem.

Title XXXIX: On Censuses, Exactions, and Procurations

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: For the endowment of a church to be founded, one mansus, free from every temporal service, ought to be assigned; nevertheless it is bound to ecclesiastical service. But if anything beyond the mansus is conferred upon the church, the church is bound to pay the customary burdens from it. This it says by adhering to the letter.

From the Council at Worms.

It was sanctioned that one entire mansus without any service is to be assigned to each church. And the priests constituted in them are to render no service other than ecclesiastical service from the tithes, the offerings of the faithful, the houses, the yards or gardens situated next to the church, or the aforesaid mansus. And if they possess anything more, from it let them furnish the service owed to their lords.

> DE CENSIBUS, EXACTIONIBUS ET PROCURATIONIBUS.
>
> Ecclesiae fundandae debet pro dote tribui mansus, liber a quolibet servitio temporali; ad ecclesiasticum tamen tenetur. Sed si aliquid confertur ecclesiae ultra mansum, tenetur ecclesia ex eo solvere onera consueta. H. d. inhaerendo literae.
>
> Ex concilio apud Guarmaciam.
>
> Sancitum est, ut unicuique ecclesiae unus mansus integer absque ullo servitio tribuatur. Et presbyteri in eis constituti non de decimis, neque de oblationibus fidelium, non de domibus, neque de areis vel de hortis iuxta ecclesiam positis, neque de praedicto manso aliquod servitium faciant praeter ecclesiasticum. Et si aliquid amplius habuerint, inde senioribus suis debitum servitium impendant.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Payment of tribute demonstrates subjection.

Augustine, on the Epistle to the Romans.

"Let every soul be subject to higher powers." (And below:) And you ought to be subject. For you furnish tribute for this reason, because this is proof of subjection.

> Solutio tributi arguit subiectionem.
>
> Augustinus super epistola ad Romanos.
>
> " Omnis anima sublimioribus potestatibus subdita sit. " (Et infra:) Et vos subditi esse debetis. Ideo enim tributa praestatis, quia haec est probatio subiectionis.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A bishop cannot impose a new census upon a monastery.

Gregory, to Stephen the Cantor.

Knowing (And below:) The aforesaid abbot also asserted that the priest of the aforesaid Massa wished to impose new customs upon that monastery, which have not existed up to this time during the three-year period since the monastery was founded, [since, if anything has been offered there to God by faithful men by grace of munificence, he asserts that he ought to receive a portion.] We command that, if this did not exist from the beginning, you are not to permit anything new to be imposed even as time passes, [especially since it is of slight substance, etc.]

> Non potest episcopus novum censum imponere monasterio.
>
> Gregorius Stephano Cantori.
>
> Scientes (Et infra:) Asseruit autem praedictus abbas, presbyterum praedictae Massae novas monasterio illi consuetudines velle imponere, +quae ex tempore conditi monasterii per triennale tempus hactenus non fuerunt, [siquidem si quid Deo illic munificentiae gratia a fidelibus viris oblatum fuerit, portionem se asserat debere percipere.] Mandamus, quatenus, si ab initio hoc non fuerit, etiam labentibus temporibus aliquid noviter non permittas imponi, [maxime quum exiguae substantiae etc.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A blind and poor person is not bound to contribute to collections.

The same, to Bishop Constantine.

Although greatly (And below: [cf. c. 1, On the Restitution of the Despoiled, II. 13.]) The aforesaid blind man also said that he too is equally compelled to contribute to collections among the other inhabitants of the city of Genoa. [And we marvel that one who is more worthy of mercy is burdened in your presence.] You are not to permit this to be done, because it is exceedingly inhuman to afflict in a collection one whom his blindness burdens and upon whom, if there were [great] necessity, mercy ought to have been shown from the collections.

> Caecus et pauper ad collectas non tenentur.
>
> Idem Constantino Episcopo.
>
> Licet multum (Et infra: [cf. c. 1. de rest. spol. II. 13.]) Dixit quoque praedictus caecus, quod ad collectas inter alios civitatis Ianuensis habitatores et ipse pariter compellatur. [Et miramur, quod qui magis misericordia dignus est, vobis praesentibus praegravetur.] Quod fieri non permittas, quia eum, quem caecitas sua gravat, inhumanum est nimis in collectione affligere, cui debuerat ex collectis, si esset [magna] necessitas, misereri.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One seeking a census ought to state its basis.

Paschal II, to Countess Matilda.

It reached us that the Abbot of Fraxinorensis despoiled the church of Carpi by occasion, namely, of a certain census, for what purpose it ought to be paid being unknown. To your inquiry we respond in this way: a census of unknown purpose is found to be defined neither by divine nor by human laws; for it is necessary that it be known beforehand for what purpose and when every census ought to be paid. We therefore command your belovedness to cause the plunder itself to be restored to the church of Carpi, and henceforth not to permit the Abbot of Fraxinorensis or anyone else to trouble it.

> Petens censum debet rationem exprimere.
>
> Paschalis II. Comitissae Mathildae.
>
> Pervenit ad nos, +quod Fraxinorensis abbas Carpensem ecclesiam fuerit depraedatus, occasione videlicet cuiusdam census, qui, ad quid solvi debeat, ignoratur. Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod census ignorantiae nec divinis, nec humanis legibus invenitur diffinitus; oportet quippe, ut omnis census ad quid et quando persolvi debeat praesciatur. Mandamus ergo dilectioni tuae, ut praedam ipsam Carpensi ecclesiae restitui facias, nec deinceps Fraxinorensem abbatem aut quemlibet alium eam inquietare permittas.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: The council determines the number of mounts that visiting prelates can take with them, and prohibits them from then engaging in hunting and seeking costly banquets. This first, as far as the words "We also prohibit." — (We prohibit, etc.:) Prelates ought not burden subjects with tallages and exactions; nevertheless, for a just cause, they are permitted to seek moderate aid from them. This it says, as far as "Indeed." — (Indeed, etc.:) In effect it is said that the number of mounts established at the beginning of the chapter ought not be drawn upon to increase another number previously customary. The Abbot.

From the Lateran Council.

Since the Apostle determined that he and his companions were to be maintained by their own hands so that he might remove an opportunity for preaching from false apostles and not be burdensome to those to whom he preached, it is known to be exceedingly grave and worthy of correction that certain prelates are so burdensome to their subjects in procurations that, for a cause of this kind, the subjects are sometimes compelled to expose ecclesiastical ornaments, and a brief hour consumes the sustenance of a long time. Therefore we establish that archbishops visiting parishes are never to exceed, according to the diversity of the provinces and the means of the churches, the number of forty or fifty mounts; bishops, however, twenty or thirty; cardinals, however, twenty-five; archdeacons, five or seven; and deans constituted under bishops are to be content with two horses. Nor are they to travel with hunting dogs and birds, but are so to proceed that they appear to seek not the things that are their own but those of Jesus Christ. Nor are they to seek costly banquets, but with thanksgiving receive what has been ministered to them honorably and suitably.

We also prohibit bishops from presuming to burden their subjects with tallages and exactions. Yet for the many necessities that sometimes supervene, we tolerate that, if a manifest and reasonable cause exists, they may be able with charity to petition moderate aid from them. For since the Apostle says,

"Children ought not lay up treasure for parents, but parents for children," it appears very far from paternal piety if superiors are burdensome to their subjects, whom they ought to cherish after the manner of a shepherd in all necessities. But archdeacons or deans are to presume to exercise no exactions or tallages against priests or clerics.

Indeed, what has been said by way of toleration concerning the aforesaid number of mounts can be observed in those places in which revenues and ecclesiastical means are more ample. But in poorer places we will such a measure to be kept that lesser persons do not deservedly grieve that they are burdened by the arrival of greater persons. Nor, under such an indulgence, are those who have hitherto been accustomed to use fewer horses to believe that the power of using more has been granted to them.

> Determinat concilium numerum equorum, quos secum ducere possunt praelati visitantes, et prohibet eis tunc uti venationibus, et sumptuosas epulas quaerere. Hoc primo usque ad vers. Prohibemus. — (Prohibemus etc.:) - Praelati non debent gravare subditos talliis et exactionibus, permittitur tamen ex iusta causa petere ab eis moderatum auxilium. H. d. usque ad §. Sane. — (Sane etc.:) In effectu dicitur, quod numerus equorum statutus in princ. cap. non debet trahi ad augendum numerum, alias solitum. Abbas.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Quum Apostolus se ac suos propriis manibus decreverit exhibendos, ut locum praedicandi auferret pseudoapostolis, et illis, quibus praedicabat, non exsisteret onerosus : grave nimis et emendatione dignum esse dignoscitur, quod quidam praelatorum ita in procurationibus graves suis subditis exsistant, ut pro huiusmodi causa ipsa interdum ecclesiastica ornamenta subditi exponere compellantur, et longi temporis victum brevis hora consumat. Quocirca statuimus, quod archiepiscopi, parochias visitantes, pro diversitate provinciarum, et facultatibus ecclesiarum XL. vel L. evectionum numerum, episcopi autem XX. vel XXX., cardinales autem XXV. nunquam excedant, archidiaconi vero V. vel VII., decani constituti sub episcopis duobus equis contenti exsistant. Nec cum canibus venatoriis et avibus proficiscantur, sed ita procedant, ut non quae sua sunt, sed quae Iesu Christi quaerere videantur. Nec sumptuosas epulas quaerant, sed cum gratiarum actione recipiant quod honeste ac competenter illis fuerit ministratum. Prohibemus etiam, ne subditos suos talliis et exactionibus episcopi gravare praesumant. Sustinemus autem pro multis necessitatibus, quae aliquoties superveniunt, ut, si manifesta ac rationabilis causa exstiterit, cum caritate moderatum ab eis valeant auxilium postulare. Quum enim dicat Apostolus : " Non debent filii thesaurizare parentibus, sed parentes filiis : " multum longe a paterna pietate videtur, si praepositi subditis suis graves exsistant, quos in cunctis necessitatibus pastoris debent more fovere. Archidiaconi vero sive decani nullas exactiones sive tallias in presbyteros seu clericos exercere praesumant. Sane, quod de praedicto numero evectionis secundum tolerantiam dictum est, in illis locis poterit observari, in quibus ampliores sunt reditus et ecclesiasticae facultates. In pauperioribus autem locis tantam volumus teneri mensuram, ut ex accessu maiorum minores merito non doleant se gravari. Nec sub tali indulgentia illi, qui paucioribus equis uti solebant hactenus, plurium sibi credant potestatem indultam.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A new census cannot be imposed upon churches, nor can an old one be increased. This it says, and it is one of the more principal chapters of this title.

From the same council.

We prohibit furthermore that new censuses be imposed upon churches by abbots, bishops, or other prelates, that old ones be increased, or that they presume to appropriate a part of the revenues to their own uses; rather, let superiors preserve with good will for their inferiors also the liberty that they desire to preserve for themselves. But if anyone acts otherwise, let what he did be held void.

> Novus census ecclesiis imponi non potest, nec antiquus augeri. H. d. et est de principalioribus huius tituli.
>
> Ex eodem.
>
> Prohibemus insuper, ne ab abbatibus, vel episcopis vel aliis praelatis novi census imponantur ecclesiis, nec veteres augeantur, nec partem redituum suis usibus appropriare praesumant; sed libertatem, quam sibi maiores conservare desiderant, minoribus quoque suis bona voluntate conservent. Si quis vero aliter fecerit, irritum quod egerit habeatur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A prelate or rector of a church cannot, especially after death, make his church subject to a census by his own authority.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Worcester.

Furthermore, concerning those who, without the bishop's knowledge, by their own authority have paid or received an annual pension from churches by a certain subterfuge: after their deaths they are in no way to be heard in the receipt of the pension, unless they received from those who, through the bishop or his officials, have authority to institute persons having the right to receive the canon, especially if it is established that the authority and assent of the pontiff or of another who could do this by law did not intervene concerning it. For simple priests or clerics cannot by their own authority make the churches over which they preside subject to census, especially after their own death.

> Praelatus seu rector ecclesiae non potest, praesertim post mortem, ecclesiam suam propria auctoritate constituere censualem.
>
> Alexander III. Vigoriensi Episcopo.
>
> Praeterea illi, qui, episcopo ignorante, auctoritate sua pensionem annuam de ecclesiis quadam illusione solverint sive receperint, eis defunctis, nisi ab iis, qui per episcopum vel ministeriales eius auctoritatem instituendi personas habentes ius recipiendi canonem receperint, in receptione pensionis non sunt aliquatenus audiendi; praesertim si pontificis aut alterius, qui de iure id facere potuerit, auctoritatem et assensum super hoc non intervenisse constiterit. Non enim simplices sacerdotes vel clerici possunt ecclesias, quibus praesunt, auctoritate sua, praesertim post decessum suum, efficere censuales.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It is brief, or in other words is summarized thus: A bishop cannot on this account impose a census upon a church wrested by him from the hand of a layman.

The same, to the Bishop of Chartres.

But upon churches that bishops newly wrest from the hands of laymen, beyond the cathedraticum and all the rights that are imposed upon other churches, we prohibit an exaction from being imposed, since by our decree we generally prohibit churches henceforth from being burdened by new exactions. [To these things, etc.; cf. c. 8, On Testaments, III. 26.]

Breve est, vel per alia verba summatur sic: Episcopus ecclesiae, de manu laici per se ereptae, non potest ob hoc censum imponere.

Idem Carnotensi Episcopo.

Ecclesiis autem, quas de novo episcopi de manibus laicorum eripiunt, praeter cathedraticum et iura omnia, quae aliis ecclesiis imponuntur, exactionem prohibemus imponi, quin novis exactionibus decreto nostro prohibemus generaliter amodo ecclesias praegravari. [Ad haec etc. cf. c. 8. de testam. III. 26.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One who imposes new tolls without the prince's consent is deprived of communion.

The same.

We renew (And below: [cf. c. 2, On Truce, I. 34.]) Nor may anyone presume in any way to establish new exactions of tolls against another without the authority and consent of kings and princes, [or to retain those established, or to increase old ones.] But if anyone acts contrary to this and does not desist after being admonished, let him lack Christian communion until he makes satisfaction.

Nova pedagia sine consensu principis imponens, communione privatur.

Idem.

Innovamus (Et infra: [cf. c. 2. de treuga I. 34.] Nec quisquam alicui novas pedagiorum exactiones sine auctoritate et consensu regum et principum statuere, [aut statutas tenere aut veteres augmentare] aliquo modo praesumat. Si quis autem contra hoc fecerit, et commonitus non destiterit, donec satisfaciat communione careat Christiana.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: One who through collusion makes a church subject to census will be deprived of it.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and His Suffragans.

When clerics (And below: [cf. c. 6, On Agreements, I. 35.]) To this, because there are certain clerics who, after collusion has been made with religious men, without the authority of the diocesan bishop make the churches that they hold subject to a census in their favor, so that after their deaths the same churches may, through the presentation of the same religious men, be transferred to the sons or nephews of those clerics, we command you by authority of the presents that, if any of your clerics are found to do such things, appeal having been postponed, you are not to defer removing them by apostolic authority from the aforesaid churches, lest they appear to carry away fruit from their fraud or deceit.

Qui per collusionem constituit ecclesiam censualem, illa privabitur.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et eius Suffraganeis.

Quum clerici (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de pact. I. 35.]) Ad hoc, quia sunt clerici quidam, qui cum religiosis viris collusione facta, citra auctoritatem dioecesani episcopi ecclesias, quas tenent, eis constituunt censuales, ut post decessum eorum eaedem ecclesiae per repraesentationem eorundem religiosorum virorum ad filios vel nepotes clericorum ipsorum possint transferri : praesentium auctoritate vobis praecipimus, ut, si qui clericorum vestrorum inventi fuerint facere talia, eos a praescriptis ecclesiis auctoritate apostolica non differatis appellatione postposita removere, ne de sua fraude vel dolo videantur fructum reportare.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If collectors burden churches, they ought to be deprived of office.

The same.

Those things that from avarice (And below: [cf. c. 16, On Simony, V. 3.]) Nevertheless, we also enjoin [you] by authority of the presents that, when you visit the churches themselves, you exercise the office of visitation according to what the canons command and not burden the churches by your visitation, so that you may appear to visit them more with a view to instruction and correction than with a desire for feasting. But when you make a collection of denarii throughout your archdeaconries on account of the visitation of blessed Peter, do not burden the aforesaid churches or parishes in making the collection otherwise or more than your predecessors are known to have done in the time of the Roman Pontiffs Innocent and Eugenius of holy memory. But if you presume otherwise, that which you appear to possess will be taken from you.

> Si collectores gravant ecclesias, privari debent officio.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ea, quae de avaritiae (Et infra: [cf. c. 16. de sim. V. 3.]) Nihilominus etiam [vobis] praesentium auctoritate iniungimus, ut, quum ecclesias ipsas visitaveritis, secundum quod canones praecipiunt visitationis officium exerceatis, nec ecclesias visitatione vestra gravetis, ut eas magis intuitu informationis et correctionis, quam affectu comessationis videamini visitare. Quum autem propter B. Petri visitationem denariorum collectam per archidiaconatus vestros feceritis, in collectione facienda praedictas ecclesias vel parochias non gravetis aliter, sive magis, quam praedecessores vestri tempore sanctae recordationis Innocentii, Eugenii Romanorum Pontificum fecisse noscuntur. Quod si secus praesumpseritis, id, quod videmini habere, auferetur a vobis.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: One who receives an oath to pay a new census imposed upon a church is compelled to absolve the person swearing.

Lucius III.

T., rector of the church of Fulsig., signified to us that, when he had been elected to the governance of that church by our beloved sons, the [same] abbot and monks of Castig., he corporally furnished an oath to pay them an annual census of three marks, which his predecessor had paid. Afterward the diocesan bishop, our venerable brother R., Bishop of Worcester, prohibited him, at peril to his order and under threat of anathema, from paying that census to the monks unless it were first established that it had been imposed by episcopal authority. Hence the aforesaid rector fears on this side the guilt of perjury and on that side fears the imminent peril of disobedience. Therefore we command your fraternity through apostolic writings that, the parties having been summoned before you, if it is established that the aforesaid census was imposed by authority of the prelate and not newly, you are to command the bishop by our authority to relax his prohibition without delay. But if the census was newly imposed, whether this was done [by] authority of the bishop or not, appeal having been removed, compel the same monks by ecclesiastical constraint to absolve the cleric from the oath. For we [do not will] nor ought we permit churches to be vexed by the exaction of a new census.

> Qui recipit iuramentum de novo censu imposito ecclesiae persolvendo, compellitur iurantem absolvere.
>
> Lucius III.

Significavit nobis T. rector ecclesiae de Fulsig., quod quum a dilectis filiis [nostris] abbate et monachis de Castig. ad regimen ipsius ecclesiae fuisset electus, de solvendo eis annuo censu trium marcharum, quas praedecessor eius solverat, praestitit corporaliter sacramentum; postmodum venerabilis frater noster R. Wigorniensis episcopus dioecesanus, ne ipsum censum monachis solveret, nisi prius constaret, quod episcopali auctoritate fuisset impositus, in periculum ordinis sui et sub interminatione anathematis interdixit. +Unde praedictus rector hinc periurii reatum metuit, inde timet inobedientiae periculum imminere. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, partibus ante praesentiam vestram convocatis, si praefatum censum de auctoritate praesulis, et non de novo impositum fuisse constiterit, episcopo auctoritate nostra praecipias, ut prohibitionem suam sine dilatione relaxet. Si vero census sit de novo impositus, sive [de] auctoritate episcopi hoc factum fuerit sive non, eosdem monachos, ut clericum a iuramento absolvant, appellatione remota ecclesiastica districtione compellas. Pati enim [nolumus] nec debemus, ut ecclesiae census novi exactione vexentur.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: An archbishop visiting his province ought to be furnished a procuration even by the monasteries of the province.

The same, to the Archbishop of Ravenna.

Questions settled by the judgment of the Apostolic See are committed to writing for perpetual memory, lest through forgetfulness they be able to be raised over the course of time. Moreover, so that a sentence may have greater firmness, it is strengthened by the protection of an apostolic writing. Indeed, when a controversy was being litigated between you and the monasteries of Bologna, of both monks and nuns, concerning the procurations that you had exacted from them, we committed the cause to our venerable brother H., Bishop of Albano, to be heard. But afterward our beloved son the Abbot of Saint Proculus, proctor of all the others, as appeared from the letters that he carried, and as he himself affirmed by giving faith in the hand of the aforesaid bishop, litigated at length before us and our brothers on behalf of all the other monks, except those of Saint Damian and Saint Bartholomew, who were in no way referring the question concerning this. But he exhibited no privileges of the Roman Church or of Ravenna on his side, nor showed that he was fortified by long custom. But you, firmly asserting that those procurations were furnished to you without contradiction in the other monasteries of your province, proved through suitable witnesses that they were furnished to your predecessors in the monasteries of Bologna. Hence, indeed, after deliberation was held with our brothers, we saw that your intention was aided by common law and the custom of your predecessors. On this account, assenting to your just petitions, with the common consent of our brothers we condemned the aforesaid monasteries to furnish a procuration to you and your successors according to their means.

Archiepiscopus, visitans provinciam, etiam a monasteriis provinciae procurari debet.

Idem Ravennatensi Archiepiscopo.

Sopitae +iudicio sedis apostolicae quaestiones scripto ad memoriam perpetuam commendantur, ne per oblivionem processu temporis valeant suscitari. Ut autem sententia maiorem habeat firmitudinem, apostolici scripti munimine roboratur. Sane, quum inter te et monasteria Bononiae, tam monachorum quam monialium, super procurationibus, quas ab eis exege ras, controversia verteretur, +causam venerabili fratri nostro H. Albanensi episcopo commisimus audiendam. Postmodum vero dilectus filius noster abbas sancti Proculi, omnium aliorum procurator, sicut ex literis, quas portavit, apparuit, et ipse in manu episcopi iam dicti data fide firmavit, coram nobis et fratribus nostris pro omnibus aliis monachis, sancti Damiani et sancti Bartholomaei exceptis, qui super hoc quaestionem minime referebant, diutius litigavit. +Verum nulla pro parte sua privilegia Romanae ecclesiae vel

Ravennatis exhibuit, nec ostendit, longa consuetudine se munitum. Sed tu firmiter procurationes ipsas in aliis monasteriis tuae provinciae asserens tibi sine contradictione praestari, eas praedecessoribus tuis in monasteriis Bononiensibus exhibitas per testes idoneos probavisti. Inde utique fuit, quod, deliberatione cum fratribus habita, vidimus, intentionem tuam iure communi et praedecessorum tuorum consuetudine adiuvari. Ea propter, tuis iustis petitionibus annuentes, monasteria supra dicta de communi consensu fratrum condemnavimus ad procurationem secundum facultates eorum tibi tuisque successoribus exhibendam.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Patrons, even clerical patrons, cannot impose a new census upon a church or increase an old one; and if they exacted oaths or securities concerning this, they are compelled to absolve them.

Clement III.

A very grave complaint, and one most worthy of correction, was recently proposed in our hearing, which with a safe conscience we cannot pass over under dissimulation. When churches happen to become vacant, ecclesiastical persons are unwilling to call anyone to their governance otherwise than by imposing a new census upon those churches or increasing an old one contrary to the constitution of the Lateran Council, compelling the priest to be instituted to its payment by an occasional caution through oath or surety; they also strive to apply a certain part of the revenues to their own uses. Hence it often happens that, while the diocesan bishop is ignorant of excesses of this kind, or while he is in no way consulted, they introduce priests into those churches according to the judgment of their own will. Therefore, because we neither will nor ought to permit the constitutions of the aforesaid council to be violated by the injury of any persons, we command and enjoin your discretion through apostolic writings that, when you have been requested concerning this, the parties having been summoned into your presence, revoking as void, contradiction and appeal ceasing, whatever is established to have been attempted by any persons contrary to the aforesaid constitution concerning those churches or their census from the time of that constitution, you are entirely to absolve the churches from the increase of censuses and reduce them to their due condition, and cause the priests whom you know to have furnished unlawful oaths concerning these things to be absolved after suitable satisfaction has been imposed, also canonically punishing those who henceforth presume to act contrary to the form of the canons concerning these things, without preference for any person, the obstacle of appeal having been removed.

Patroni etiam clerici novum censum ecclesiae imponere non possunt, nec veterem augere, et, si super hoc iuramenta vel cautiones exegerunt, coguntur absolvere.

Clemens III.

Gravis admodum +et correctione dignissima nuper querela in audientia nostra est proposita, quod salva conscientia sub dissimulatione transire non possumus. Ecclesiasticae personae, quum ecclesias vacare contingit, non aliter quenquam ad ipsarum regimen volunt vocare, nisi aut novum censum ecclesiis illis imponant, aut veterem contra constitutionem concilii Lateranensis augmentent, ad ipsius solutionem instituendum presbyterum iuratoria quandoque vel fideiussoria cautione cogentes; +quandam etiam partem suis usibus redituum applicare contendunt. Unde saepe contingit, ut, dioecesano episcopo excessus huiusmodi ignorante, vel eo minime requisito, in ecclesiis illis inducant pro suae voluntatis arbitrio sacerdotes. Quoniam igitur constitutiones praedicti concilii pati nolumus neque debemus aliquorum iniuria violari, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus atque praecipimus, quatenus, quum super hoc fueritis requisiti, partibus ad vestram praesentiam convocatis, quaecunque constiterit contra constitutionem praedictam super ecclesiis illis vel earum censu ab aliquibus a tempore constitutionis huiusmodi attentata, contradictione et appellatione cessante in irritum revocantes, ab augmentatione censuum ecclesias penitus absolvatis et ad statum debitum reducatis, et presbyteros, quos super his iuramenta illicita praestitisse noveritis, congrua satisfactione imposita, faciatis absolvi, eos etiam qui de cetero contra formam canonum super his venire praesumpserint, sine cuiuscunque personae acceptione sublato appellationis obstaculo canonice punientes.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: One who is bound to furnish a procuration to the brothers of some house is obligated to furnish a procuration to all, although their number has now grown; but if he were thereby burdened excessively, provision will be made for him through the office of the judge. This it says according to the more common reading.

Innocent III, to the Abbot and Convent of Bellevaux.

The more devoutly you are bound under the religious habit to serve your Creator, the more solicitously it befits us to provide that the advancement of the monastic order cannot in any way be impeded in you through the weight of an immoderate burden. We learned, as you signified to us, that from the very beginning of the foundation of your house it proceeded from the founder's will that it should liberally furnish one procuration each year to the brothers of Saint Irenaeus, although you hold nothing from them on account of which a procuration of this kind ought to be furnished to them. But at that time, because of the small number of brothers and servants, such a procuration did not burden your house, since it did not exceed the limits of light expenses. But now their number has increased so greatly that scarcely four marks of silver would now suffice for furnishing the procuration, which used to be furnished sufficiently for one. We therefore grant, so that through the care of apostolic solicitude provision may be made in this matter for your burdens, by authority of the presents, that you are not henceforth to be obligated to the aforesaid brothers beyond the first measure in that procuration, but let them be content with those expenses that used to suffice, unless perhaps the means of the church have increased so much that, without burden, when the number of brothers has been increased, the amount of expenses can be extended to discharge the debt of procuration. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Nones of May, in the first year of our pontificate. 1198.]

Qui tenetur procurare fratres alicuius domus, obligatur ad procurandum omnes, licet illorum numerus nunc creverit, sed, si ex hoc gravaretur nimium, per iudicis officium sibi providebitur, H. d. secundum lecturam magis communem.

Innocentius III. Abbati et Conventui Bellae villae.

Quanto creatori +vestro sub religionis habitu adstricti estis devotius famulari, tanto sollicitius nos convenit providere, ne per immoderati oneris gravitatem aliquatenus possit in vobis monastici profectus ordinis impediri. Accepimus autem vobis significantibus quod ab ipso domus fundationis vestrae primordio de fundatoris voluntate processit, ut fratribus sancti Irenaei procurationem unam annis singulis liberaliter exhiberet, quum nihil teneatis ab eis, propter quod huiusmodi procuratio ipsis debeat exhiberi. Verum tunc temporis propter fratrum et servientium paucitatem domum vestram talis procuratio non gravabat, quum fines levium non excederet expensarum. Sed nunc in tantum excrevit numerus eorundem, quod ad faciendam procurationem vix modo quatuor marchae argenti sufficerent, quae pro una sufficienter fieri consuevit. Indulgemus igitur, ut per apostolicae sollicitudinis curam vestris possit in parte ista gravaminibus provideri, auctoritate vobis praesentium, ne ultra primam mensuram in procuratione ipsa sitis ulterius praedictis fratribus obligati, sed expensis illis, quae consueverunt sufficere, sint contenti nisi forte facultates ecclesiae in tantum excreverint, quod sine gravamine ampliato fratrum numero ad solvendum debitum procurationis extendi possit quantitas expensarum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Non. Mai. Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1198.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: All churches, except those exempt from this by an apostolic privilege, are bound to furnish procurations to legates of the Apostolic See or even its messengers, nor are they aided by prescription in this. This it says as far as "Indeed." — (Indeed, etc.) It treats of the manner of furnishing procurations to the legates and messengers themselves. The Abbot.

The same, to the Primicerius and Clergy of Milan.

Since our daily burden according to the debt of apostolic service is continual solicitude for all the churches, whenever we cannot personally attend to advancing their affairs, we are compelled to dispatch them through our brothers whom we send from our side, following in this matter the example of him who, after his disciples had been sent into the whole world, himself personally wrought salvation in the midst of the earth. Hence it is that, when we recently held that our beloved son B., cardinal of the title of Saint Peter in Chains and legate of the Apostolic See, should be sent to Lombardy for the affairs of the church, and he, entering your city, exacted procurations [from you] that were accustomed to be furnished to legates and messengers of the Apostolic See, you, not attending to what is said by the Apostle, "If we have sown spiritual things for you, it is no great thing if we reap your carnal things," appealed to the Apostolic See lest he bind you to the burden of procuration unless he first caused himself to be furnished a procuration by the canons of the greater church; and, as the same cardinal intimated to us through his letters, you were not a little injurious in other matters also. On this account our beloved sons the Provost of Saint Nazarius and A., canon of Saint Stephen, your syndics and proctors, coming to the Apostolic See with our beloved son the Abbot of Saint Vincent, petitioned suppliantly on your behalf that we establish an order and measure concerning these things. Although, because, contumaciously resisting the aforesaid cardinal—or rather us in him—you denied necessities according to the word of the Lord, "He who receives you receives me, and he who rejects you rejects me," you deserved to be heard not for yourselves but rather against yourselves, nevertheless, because we cannot, even when offended, put aside the paternal affection by which it is proper for us always to pity and spare through the clemency of the Roman See, with the counsel of our brothers we respond to your petition in matters of this kind in this way: since all churches are bound to furnish procurations to legates and messengers of the Apostolic See, we will that no church at all be excused from furnishing them unless perhaps it is exempt by special privilege of the Apostolic See, which we do not believe, even if for a very long time it has not furnished the service of procuration, since prescription cannot vindicate a place for itself in such things, because we never cease altogether from the provision of pastoral solicitude concerning all churches.

Indeed, in exacting these things we will such manner and order to be observed that no church or prelate may reasonably complain of being unduly burdened. But if you determine that the expenses of our legates and messengers are to be made from a common collection—which we have not considered should be prohibited to you—we will that from this no prejudice be generated against us or ours that would prevent them from petitioning from whomever they prefer the procurations owed to them, in such a way that, if the person from whom it is exacted has been burdened beyond his means, it is to be restored to him by the others. Nevertheless, whoever is requested is to obey our messengers in furnishing necessary expenses humbly and devoutly, yet in such a way that nothing at all is attempted fraudulently and they are not compelled, if they are unwilling, to receive the service of procuration through common ministers. But those who decide to resist them contumaciously are to be compelled by ecclesiastical constraint, every appeal having been entirely removed. [But concerning the injuries, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of March. 1199.]

> Omnes ecclesiae, nisi quae ab hoc per privilegium apostolicum sint exemptae, procurare tenentur legatos sedis apostolicae seu etiam eius nuncios, nec in hoc praescriptione iuvantur H. d. usque ad §. Sane. — (Sane etc.) Tractat de modo procurationis ipsorum et legatorum et nunciorum. Abbas.
>
> Idem Primicerio et Clero Mediolanensibus.
>
> Quum instantia nostra quotidiana +sit secundum debitum apostolicae servitutis omnium ecclesiarum sollicitudo continua, quoties ipsarum negotiis promovendis non possumus personaliter imminere, per fratres nostros ea expedire compellimur, quos a nostro latere destinamus, illius exemplum in hac parte secuti, qui, discipulis suis in mundum universum transmissis, ipse in medio terrae salutem fuit personaliter operatus. Hinc est, quod, quum nuper dilectum filium B. tit. S. Petri ad Vincula cardinalem apostolicae sedis legatum pro negotiis ecclesiae in Lombardiam duximus destinandum, et is, vestram civitatem ingressus, procurationes [a vobis] exigeret, quae consueverunt apostolicae sedis legatis et nunciis exhiberi, vos, non attendentes, quod dicitur ab Apostolo: "Si vobis spiritualia seminavimus, non est magnum, si carnalia vestra metamus, "ne vos ad onus procurationis arctaret, nisi a canonicis maioris ecclesiae se faceret antea procurari, sedem apostolicam appellastis, et, sicut idem cardinalis per suas nobis literas intimavit, in aliis etiam non modicum iniuriosi fuistis. Propter quod dilecti filii nostri praepositus S. Nazarii et A. canonicus S. Stephani, syndici et procuratores vestri, cum dilecto filio abbate S. Vincentii ad sedem apostolicam venientes, ut super his statueremus ordinem et mensuram, ex parte vestra suppliciter postulabant. Licet autem pro eo, quod praedicto cardinali vel potius nobis in ipso contumaciter resistentes, iuxta verbum dominicum: "Qui vos recipit me recipit, et qui vos spernit me spernit, "necessaria denegastis, non pro vobis, sed contra vos potius meruerint exaudiri: quia tamen paternam affectionem, qua nobis proprium est de Romanae sedis clementia misereri semper et parcere, offensi etiam deponere non valemus; de consilio fratrum nostrorum Postulationi vestrae taliter in huiusmodi respondemus, quod, quum omnes ecclesiae legatis et nunciis sedis apostolicae procurationes impendere teneantur, ab earum praestatione nullam prorsus habere volumus excusatam, nisi forte per speciale privilegium sedis apostolicae, quod non credimus, sit exempta, etiamsi longissimo tempore procurationis obsequium non impenderint quum in talibus praescriptio sibi locum nequeat vindicare, quia nos a provisione pastoralis sollicitudinis circa omnes ecclesias nunquam omnino cessamus. Sane in his exigendis eum modum et ordinem volumus observari, ut nulla ecclesia vel praelatus se indebite praegravari rationabiliter conqueratur. Si vero de communi collecta legatorum et nunciorum nostrorum expensas duxeritis faciendas, quod vobis non duximus inhibendum, ex hoc nobis et nostris nullum praeiudicium volumus generari, quo minus possint a quocunque maluerint procurationes sibi debitas postulare, ita, quod, si exactus ultra suam gravatus fuerit facultatem, sibi ab aliis restauretur. Nunciis tamen nostris in necessariis expensis exhibendis pareat quicunque fuerit requisitus humiliter et devote, ita tamen, quod in fraudem nihil penitus attentetur, nec per communes ministros procurationis obsequium, si noluerint, recipere compellantur. Qui vero contumaciter eis duxerint resistendum, omni prorsus appellatione remota districtione sunt ecclesiastica compellendi. [Super iniuriis autem etc. Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Mart. 1199.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: If what is owed from a vow is customarily paid according to a single measure, it will have to be paid according to that measure in the future; but if according to different measures, the person paying will be discharged even according to the smaller.

The same, to the Bishops of Zamora and Salamanca.

It was proposed before us on the part of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Compostela that, although those who continuously paid the vows of blessed James have hitherto paid and do pay them according to the common measure of their land, with which, namely, they buy and sell, certain persons, because in times long past they ceased from paying them, now, having been compelled through you by authority of the Apostolic See to pay them, exhibit a certain very small and unknown measure, not even deputed to common uses, and endeavor to pay the aforesaid vows according to it. Hence you petitioned us to deign to render you certain concerning this: whether those who exhibit the unknown measure are to be compelled to pay the aforesaid vows according to the common measure of their land, in accordance with what those who paid them continuously did. Therefore, since it is not established according to what measure their predecessors paid the aforesaid vows, we believe a distinction is to be made: whether the inhabitants of that region who paid them continuously paid vows of this kind according to one and the same measure, or according to varied and different ones. For in the first case those persons also are to be compelled to pay according to the same measure. In the second, those wishing to pay according to the smaller are certainly not to be compelled to pay according to the greater, because, since vows of this kind were gratuitous from the beginning, they are to be exacted more benignly by ecclesiastical men, lest they appear as exactors to gape excessively after temporal gains. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the tenth day before the Kalends of April, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Si ad unicam mensuram solvi solet quod debetur ex voto, ad illam in posterum solvi debebit; si vero ad diversas, liberabitur solvens etiam, ad minorem.
>
> Idem Zamorensi et Salamantino Episcopis.
>
> Ex parte venerabilis fratris nostri Compostellani archiepiscopi fuit propositum coram nobis, quod, quum hi, qui vota beati Iacobi continue persolverunt, ad communem terrae suae mensuram, cum qua videlicet emunt et vendunt, ipsa persolverint hactenus et persolvant, quidam, quia longis retro temporibus ab eorum solutione cessarunt, nunc, per vos apostolicae sedis auctoritate ad solutionem eorundem coacti, quandam mensuram exhibent parvissimam et ignotam, +nec etiam communibus usibus deputatam, et ad eandem vota praedicta persolvere moliuntur. Unde postulastis a nobis, ut super hoc vos certos reddere dignaremur, utrum hi qui mensuram ignotam exhibent, ad solvendum vota praescripta sint ad communem terrae suae mensuram, secundum quod illi, qui ea persolverunt continue, fecerunt, compellendi. Quum ergo non constet, ad quam mensuram antecessores eorum praedicta vota persolverint, credimus distinguendum, utrum habitatores regionis ipsius, qui ea continue persolverunt, ad unam et eandem mensuram huiusmodi vota persolverint, an ad varias et diversas. In primo enim casu ad eandem et illi solvere sunt cogendi. In secundo volentes solvere ad minorem, non sunt utique cogendi, ut ad maiorem persolvant; quoniam, quum huiusmodi vota gratuita fuerint ab initio, benignius sunt a viris ecclesiasticis exigenda, ne tanquam exactores nimium videantur lucris temporalibus inhiare. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. X. Kal. Apr. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: Churches are bound to answer to the bishop in whose diocese they are concerning procurations, the fourth of tithes, and other episcopal rights. This it says with regard to the title.

The same, to the Bishop of Zaragoza.

When formerly [*you had sent your complaint to our ears that our beloved son the Abbot of San Juan de la Peña was defrauding you in many ways of the fourths of the tithes that you ought to receive in the churches of Luna and Taust., we held that the cause itself should be committed to our beloved sons ...., Provost of Jaca, and P... of Montearagón, Archdeacon of Tarazona. In their presence your party petitioned that the abbot pay you without diminution a fourth of all tithes, which you were accustomed to receive in the aforesaid churches. Against this it was responded on behalf of the abbot that, since the aforesaid churches pertain to the monastery by full right, you could vindicate no right in them. But on your part it was proposed to the contrary that both the fourth of the tithe and other episcopal rights pertained to you in many ways in the aforesaid churches, since, indeed, because those churches are constituted in your diocese, by common law you can seek in them both the fourth of the tithe and other episcopal rights. You also proposed a composition entered into between your church and the monastery of Peña through the mediation of B., Archbishop of Tarragona of good memory, and R., Count of Barcelona, through which you affirmed that both a supper and the fourth of the tithe and other episcopal rights belonged to you in those churches. To prove this you presented an authentic instrument, asserting that the same composition was confirmed by authority of Pope Alexander III of good memory, our predecessor, as is perceived to be contained in his authentic instrument. You likewise firmly introduced another composition entered into through the mediation of G., Bishop of Pamplona of good memory, and our beloved sons F. de Otiien and D., monk of Saint John, through which you asserted that the fourth was owed to you, exhibiting a public instrument concerning it. Also, to strengthen your intention more forcefully, you alleged a prescription of forty years, asserting that, even if you had no other aids of defense, a right of receiving the fourth of the often-mentioned tithe had been acquired for you through a span of long time.

But on the abbot's part it was responded to these things that the aforesaid churches pertain by full right, according to common law, to the monastery of Peña; since King Sancho of Aragon of illustrious memory merited to obtain an indulgence from the Apostolic See that, if it happened that any places in his kingdom were newly populated or liberated from the hands of the Saracens, he might freely grant the churches to be constructed in them to whomever he wished. And when he had afterward brought inhabitants into the castle of Luna, he conferred upon the monastery of Peña the churches of Luna and Taust. constructed there; to prove these things, the abbot produced instruments drawn up concerning the aforesaid donations. Peter, Bishop of Pamplona of good memory, in whose diocese the aforesaid churches were said to be constituted, also granted them to the aforesaid monastery with tithes and other episcopal rights, as is contained in the authentic instrument of the same bishop; and to prove this the aforesaid abbot introduced witnesses that those churches are constituted in the diocese of Pamplona. The same abbot also proposed that García of good memory, your predecessor, granted those churches to his monastery with every episcopal right except the consecrations of basilicas and certain other things that are more fully contained in the authentic instrument drawn up thereupon, on account of which the abbot himself responded that by law you could seek nothing in the aforesaid churches.

Furthermore, the monastery's party proposed that both the first and the second composition proposed on your part were to be rejected for this reason: because each composition was violently extorted through coercion and fear of a secular prince, which it endeavored to show through the depositions of witnesses. It nevertheless alleged that the confirmation obtained concerning so unlawful a composition could not bring you the benefit of defense, since through confirmation a right is by no means acquired, but one already acquired is preserved more securely. Against the forty-year prescription that you took care to allege, the monastery's party responded that a prescription of this kind, even if it had been proved, was shown by this to have been interrupted many times: because, on account of the frequent controversies arising concerning those churches, it is proved that two compositions were interposed within periods of forty years. Furthermore, since according to the canonical sanctions the periods of one who unlawfully transacts or alienates ought to be deducted from prescription, it is established that the forty-year prescription was in no way completed if the periods during which the abbot who unlawfully transacted afterward lived are subtracted.

To these things it was firmly replied on your part that the aforesaid indulgence alleged to have been granted to King Sancho was never presented in the judgment; but even if it had been exhibited or most certain proof of it had been made, it could generate no prejudice against you, since the abbot himself had confessed at law before us that the same indulgence was granted to the aforesaid king saving episcopal right, and he asserted that he had confessed this same thing before the delegated judges. Moreover, your party proposed steadfastly that the donation of the Bishop of Pamplona could not prejudice you, since it was not sufficiently shown through witnesses that the aforesaid churches were constituted in his diocese. Against the donation of your predecessor it was responded on your part that, since the abbot, interrogated at law, responded that the same predecessor had not had power to confer those spiritual things, it is unworthy that he obtain an advantage by occasion of the instrument that he did not blush to impugn in the judgment; especially since it was in no way established that it was authentic, and most especially since, after that donation is proposed to have been made, it is certain that for those churches the monastery itself answered to your church for many periods of time in tithes and other episcopal rights. But also concerning the fear through which the above-named compositions are proposed to have been interposed, your party proposed that the abbot himself was in no way to be heard. For even if it were established that fear was applied at the time of the composition, nevertheless, because spontaneous and free payment of both the tithe and the other episcopal rights afterward followed, the same abbot could not reasonably excuse himself under pretext of coercion.*]

After these and other things that were proposed before the aforesaid judges and before us had been more fully understood, because full proof was made for us that the churches of Luna and Bes. are constituted in your diocese—not only through other things, but even through this very thing, which is contained expressly in the instruments of the compositions: that the Abbot of San Juan de la Peña ought to answer to you both concerning the fourth of the tithes, concerning which alone he asserted that violence had been done, and concerning the other episcopal rights, [concerning which he did not complain that any violence had been inflicted upon him]—with the counsel of our brothers, we condemn the abbot himself to full payment of the fourth of all tithes, no deductions having been made, and to the furnishing of procurations and of other episcopal rights in the aforesaid churches. For although according to the form of the second composition some deductions were to be made, nevertheless, because the same abbot in no way approved that composition but endeavored to impugn it in many ways, he ought not to obtain a benefit from that which he appeared tacitly to have renounced. It was furthermore discordant for him to deny that the church was constituted in your diocese concerning which he showed at law that the instruments of your predecessor had granted it to his monastery, through which he expressly sought episcopal right. [Given at Ferentino, on the second day before the Nones of August, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Ecclesiae tenentur episcopo, in cuius dioecesi sunt, respondere de procurationibus, quarta decimarum et aliis episcopalibus. H. d. quoad titulum.

Idem Caesaraugustensi Episcopo.

Quum olim + [ad aures nostras tuam querimoniam destinasses, quod te dilectus filius abbas S. Ioannis Pinnatensis quartis decimarum, quas in ecclesiis de Luna et de Taust. debes percipere, multipliciter defraudaret, dilectis filiis .... praeposito Iaccensi et P.. Montis Aragonum archidiacono Tirasonensi causam ipsam duximus committendam, in quorum tua pars praesentia postulavit, ut abbas tibi quartam omnium decimarum sine diminutione persolveret, quam consuevisti percipere in ecclesiis antedictis. Contra quod fuit pro abbate responsum, quod, quum ecclesiae supradictae ad monasterium pertineant pleno iure, nihil iuris in eis tibi poteras vendicare. Ex parte autem tua fuit propositum ex adverso, quod tam quarta decimae, quam alia iura episcopalia, pertinebant ad te multipliciter in ecclesiis memoratis, quum siquidem eaedem ecclesiae in tua sint dioecesi constitutae, de iure communi tam quartam decimae quam alia episcopalia vales petere in eisdem. Compositionem quoque, inter ecclesiam tuam et Pinnatense monasterium mediantibus bonae memoriae B. archiepiscopo Terraconensi et R. comite Barchinonensi initam proponebas, per quam tibi tam coenam quam quartam decimae ac alia episcopalia in ipsis ecclesiis competere fatebaris, ad quod probandum instrumentum authenticum praesentasti, asserens, quod auctoritate bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae tertii, praedecessoris nostri, eadem exstitit compositio confirmata, sicut in eiusdem authentico perspicitur contineri. Aliam similiter compositionem bonae memoriae G. Pampilonensi episcopo, et dilectis filiis F. de Otiien, et D. monacho sancti Iohannis mediantibus initam, per quam deberi tibi quartam asseruisti, firmiter inducebas, super ea publicum exhibens instrumentum. Ad tuam quoque intentionem fortius roborandam praescriptionem quadragenariam allegasti, asserens, quod, etsi alia defensionis adminicula non haberes, longi temporis spatio percipiendi quartam decimae saepedictae ius tibi fuerat acquisitum. Ex parte vero abbatis fuit ad ista responsum, quod ecclesiae supradictae de iure communi ad Pinnatense monasterium pertinent pleno iure; si quidem illustris memoriae Sancius Aragonum rex a sede apostolica indulgentiam meruit obtinere, ut, si qua loca in regno suo de novo populari contingeret, vel de Saracenorum manibus liberari, ecclesias construendas in ipsis libere concederet cui vellet. Quumque in castrum de Luna habitatores postmodum induxisset, ecclesias de Luna et de Taust. ibidem constructas monasterio contulit Pinnatensi, ad quae probandum instrumenta super dictis confecta donationibus producebat. Petrus quoque bonae memoriae Pampilonensis episcopus, in cuius dioecesi praedictae dicebantur ecclesiae constitutae, cum decimis et aliis iuribus episcopalibus concessit easdem monasterio memorato, sicut in eiusdem episcopi authentico continetur, et ad hoc probandum supradictus abbas testes induxit, quod in Pampilonensi dioecesi sunt eaedem ecclesiae constitutae. Proposuit etiam idem abbas, quod bonae memoriae Garsias praedecessor tuus suo monasterio ipsas ecclesias cum omni episcopali iure concessit, praeter consecrationes basilicarum et quaedam alia, quae in authentico exinde confecto plenius continentur, propter quae abbas ipse nihil in praedictis ecclesiis te posse de iure petere respondebat. Compositionem praeterea, tam primam quam secundam, ex tui parte propositam, ea ratione pars monasterii proposuit reprobandam, quia per impressionem et metum principis saecularis utraque compositio exstitit violenter extorta, quod per depositiones testium ostendere nitebatur; allegans nihilominus, quod confirmatio super tam illicita compositione obtenta non poterat tibi beneficium defensionis afferre; confirmatione siquidem ius nequaquam acquiritur, sed acquisitum securius conservatur. Contra praescriptionem quadragenariam, quam tu allegare curasti, pars monasterii respondebat, quoniam huiusmodi praescriptio, etiamsi probata fuisset, ex eo convincitur saepius interrupta, quia propter frequentes super illis ecclesiis controversias emergentes infra quadraginta annorum spatia duae compositiones interpositae comprobantur. Praeterea, quum secundum canonicas sanctiones illicite transigentis vel alienantis tempora debeant de praescriptione deduci, constat praescriptionem quadragenariam minime consummatam, si tempora, quibus postmodum vixit abbas illicite transigens, subducantur. Ad haec fuit ex parte tua firmiter replicatum, quoniam praedicta indulgentia, quae Sancio regi allegatur indulta, nunquam fuit in iudicio praesentata, sed, etsi fuisset exhibita, vel de ipsa certissima facta fides, nullum tibi poterat praeiudicium generare, quum abbas ipse coram nobis fuerit in iure confessus, quod eadem indulgentia, salvo iure episcopali, fuerit praedicto regi concessa, et hoc ipsum asseruit se coram delegatis iudicibus fuisse confessum. Porro, donationem Pampilonensis episcopi tibi praeiudicare non posse, tua pars proponebat constanter, quum non sit per testes sufficienter ostensum, quod ecclesiae supradictae in eius sint dioecesi constitutae. Contra donationem praedecessoris tui ex tua fuit parte responsum, quod, quum abbas interrogatus in iure responderit, quod idem praedecessor non habuerat potestatem illa spiritualia conferendi, indignum est, ut illius instrumenti occasione commodum consequatur, quod in iudicio non erubuit impugnare, praesertim, quum illud authenticum esse minime constitisset, et maxime, quum, postquam donatio illa proponitur esse facta, monasterium ipsum ecclesiae tuae in decimis et aliis episcopalibus iuribus pro illis ecclesiis certum sit per multa tempora respondisse. Sed et super metu, per quem praenominatae compositiones interpositae proponuntur, tua pars proponebat abbatem ipsum nullatenus audiendum. Nam, etsi compositionis tempore metum adhibitum fuisse constaret, quia tamen postmodum tam decimae quam aliorum iurium episcopalium spontanea fuit ac libera subsecuta solutio, coactionis obtentu nequeat se idem abbas rationabiliter excusare.] His et aliis, quae coram praedictis iudicibus et coram nobis fuere proposita, plenius intellectis, Quia nobis plena fides facta fuit, quod ecclesiae de Luna et de Bes. in tua sunt dioecesi constitutae, non solum per alia, verum etiam per hoc ipsum, quod in instrumentis compositionum continetur expresse, ut abbas sancti Ioannis Prilatensis tam de quarta decimarum, circa quas tantum asserebat violentiam esse factam, quam de ceteris episcopalibus rationibus, [circa quas nullam querebatur sibi violentiam irrogatam,] tibi debeat respondere : de consilio fratrum nostrorum abbatem ipsum ad integram solutionem quartae omnium decimarum, nullis factis deductionibus, et ad praestationem procurationum, et aliorum episcopalium iurium in praedictis ecclesiis condemnamus. Licet enim ex forma secundae compositionis deductiones essent aliquae faciendae, quia tamen compositionem illam idem abbas nullatenus approbavit, sed studuit multipliciter impugnare, ex ea non debuit beneficium consequi, cui renunciasse tacite videbatur. Absonum erat praeterea, ut negaret, illam ecclesiam in tua dioecesi constitutam, super qua instrumenta praedecessoris tui ostendebat in iure monasterio suo fuisse concessa, per quae episcopale ius petebat expresse. [*Dat. Ferentini II. Non. Aug. Ao. IX. * 1206.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: Censuses are to be paid in the old coinage in which they were instituted, unless payment in another coinage has been prescribed. This it says; it is a notable and very frequently allegeable case.

The same, to the Bishop of Spoleto.

Formerly we committed to our venerable brother the Bishop of Todi and his colleagues for determination the cause that you proposed against the clerics of the parish of Rupina concerning the synodaticum. Before them it was proposed on your part that, although the same clerics formerly paid your predecessors three Pavia denarii on the feast of the Nativity and three on the feast of the Lord's Resurrection for the synodaticum, they now paid only three Lucca denarii for each Pavia denarius, although one Pavia denarius is worth six Lucca denarii. Hence you petitioned that they be compelled to payment in Pavia denarii, by our authority, namely, for this, since, although you received those Lucca denarii in the first year, you nevertheless always thereafter protested your right. But the party of the clerics proposed to the contrary that, although Pavia denarii had at one time been paid to your predecessors for the synodaticum, for forty-five years and less they had paid Lucca denarii both to you and to others, and thus they endeavored to protect their party by prescription. (And below:) We therefore granted to James, your proctor, and John the priest, proctor of the opposing party, our beloved son P., cardinal priest of the Basilica of the Twelve Apostles, as auditor. When they were unwilling or unable to propose anything new before him, because renunciation had been made on both sides, and when he had reported all the proceedings in our presence and that of our brothers, we understood that it had been proved through your witnesses that in the time of Lothair of good memory, your predecessor, and also after his death, Pavia denarii had been paid for the synodaticum, and that thereafter three Lucca denarii, two of which were worth five of those now in use, had been furnished for some time. And because a period of thirty-three or thirty-four or thirty-five years has elapsed since the time of Lothair, we also inspected the statements of the opposing party's witnesses, through whom it wished to prove that for forty years and less three

Lucca denarii or three medaliae had been paid as synodaticum for each Pavia denarius, although Pavia denarii had been paid previously. The advocate of that party had also confessed at law—and his confession was reduced to writing and was neither corrected nor revoked by the aforesaid clerics—that the same clerics, in the times of Henry and Lothair, your predecessors, paid three Pavia denarii as synodaticum twice a year, and thereafter three Lucca denarii for each Pavia denarius. Since, therefore, it is established for us fully through the witnesses of both parties that Pavia denarii were formerly paid for the synodaticum—which also follows from the fact that Lucca denarii were afterward paid in their place—since from the statements of your witnesses and the confession of the other party's advocate, not afterward revoked, it appears clearly that in the time of L., your predecessor, Pavia coinage was paid for the synodaticum; since it is held from the attestations of both parties that no more than thirty-six years have elapsed since the time of the said L.; and since through your witnesses it has been lawfully proved that the three Lucca denarii that were paid for one Pavia denarius after the death of L. were worth five or six of those now in use: understanding from this that through debasement of the coinage it happened that Lucca denarii, as they were in use, were given for the synodaticum down to your time, with the counsel of our brothers, by definitive sentence we condemn the proctor of the opposing party, in the name of the clerics of the aforesaid parish, to pay you Pavia denarii or their value for the synodaticum.

> Solvendi sunt census ad antiquam monetam, in qua instituti fuerint, nisi sit in alterius monetae solutione praescriptum. H. d. est casus not. et multum allegabilis.
>
> Idem Spoletano Episcopo.
>
> Olim causam, quam adversus clericos plebis Rupinae super synodatico proponebas, venerabili fratri nostro Tudertino episcopo et collegis suis commisimus terminandam, coram quibus ex parte tua fuit propositum, quod, quum iidem clerici olim praedecessoribus tuis tres in festo Nativitatis, et tres in festo Resurrectionis dominicae pro synodatico solverint denarios Papienses, nunc tantum tres Lucenses pro singulis denariis Papiensibus persolvebant, quum tamen unus denarius Papiensis valeat sex Lucenses. Unde petebas, eos ad Papiensium solutionem nostra pro eo videlicet auctoritate compelli, quum, etsi tu Lucenses ipsos primo anno receperis, semper tamen ius tuum postmodum fueris protestatus. +Verum pars clericorum proposuit ex adverso, quod, etsi aliquando praedecessoribus tuis denarii Papienses pro synodatico fuerint persoluti, a XLV. annis et infra tam tibi quam aliis Lucenses exsolverant, sicque partem suam nitebantur praescriptione tueri (Et infra:) Nos igitur Iacobo tuo et Ioanni presbytero adversae partis procuratoribus dilectum filium nostrum P. Basilicae XII. Apostolorum presbyterum cardinalem concessimus auditorem. Quibus coram eo nil volentibus aut valentibus de novo proponere, quoniam fuerat renunciatum utrinque, quum ipse gesta omnia in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia retulisset, intelleximus per testes tuos fuisse probatum, quod tempore bonae memoriae Lotharii praedecessoris tui, et etiam post decessum ipsius denarii Papienses fuerant pro synodatico persoluti, et exinde tres Lucenses, quorum duo valebant V. de his, qui hoc tempore sunt in usu, aliquamdiu fuissent exhibiti. Et quia a tempore Lotharii XXXIII. vel XXXIV. aut XXXV. annorum spatium est elapsum, dicta etiam testium partis adversae inspeximus, per quos voluit comprobare, quod a XL. annis et infra tres Lucenses vel tres medaliae in synodaticum solutae fuerant pro singulis Papiensibus, quum Papienses fuissent antea persoluti. Confessus quoque fuerat advocatus ipsius partis in iure, ac eius confessio in scriptis redacta, nec correcta vel revocata per clericos supra dictos, quod iidem clerici Henrici et Lotharii praedecessorum tuorum temporibus tres Papienses pro synodatico solverent bis in anno, et exinde pro singulis Papiensibus tres Lucenses. Quum igitur constet nobis ad plenum per testes utriusque partis, quod Papienses olim pro synodatico solvebantur; quod ex eo etiam sequitur, quod Lucenses soluti sunt postmodum pro eisdem, quum ex dictis testium tuorum, et confessione advocati alterius partis non revocata postmodum appareat evidenter, quod tempore L. praedecessoris tui pro synodatico Papiensis fuit moneta soluta, quum ex utriusque partis attestationibus habeatur, quod a tempore dicti L. non nisi triginta sex annorum ad plus tempus effluxerit, et per testes tuos sit legitime comprobatum, quod tres Lucenses, qui pro uno Papiensi post mortem ipsius L. solvebantur, quinque vel sex valebant ex illis, qui hodie sunt in usu : intelligentes ex hoc, quod per monetae declinationem acciderit, ut usque ad tempus tuum Lucenses dati fuerint pro synodatico, sicut erant in usu, de consilio fratrum nostrorum procuratorem adversae partis nomine clericorum plebis praedictae tibi ad solutionem denariorum Papiensium vel aestimationem eorum pro synodatico per diffinitivam sententiam condemnamus.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A bishop who remits to a church the services that it owed him and establishes that another service is not to be imposed is not understood to have remitted a procuration.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Stephen.

When our venerable brother [M.], Bishop of Fano, and you were constituted in our presence and wished to litigate with one another concerning the question that was being litigated between you over the church of Saint Stephen of Fano, we granted you as auditors our beloved sons John, cardinal priest of the title of Saint Prisca, and John, cardinal deacon of Santa Maria in Cosmedin. Before them you took care to allege in opposition that, when the aforesaid church of Saint Stephen had been reduced almost to desolation through the malice of certain nuns who appeared to dwell in it under the religious habit, C., Bishop of Fano of good memory, by authority of Pope Eugenius of happy memory, our predecessor, removed them from the aforesaid church and instituted canons regular in it, establishing that the canonical order ought to be observed there in perpetuity; and he entirely absolved it from every exaction both of himself and of his successors and of the church of Fano, reserving to himself and his church one candle of three pounds to be paid by it each year. [And because the aforesaid bishop burdened you in many ways concerning the aforesaid liberty, which was confirmed both by Pope Celestine of happy memory, our predecessor, and also by us, you petitioned that apostolic protection assist you. But the aforesaid bishop proposed to the contrary that the privilege of his aforesaid predecessor inflicted no prejudice upon himself and his church, because at the time when he granted it to the aforesaid church he had renounced the episcopate and had received the regular habit in that church, and, repenting after three days, revoked that privilege. Furthermore, you and the canons of that church did not use that privilege, but, just as before the privilege was granted, so also afterward, you took care to furnish all services without any difficulty to all the successors of that bishop, and especially to himself, in hospitality down to the present time. He asserted that the confirmation of our aforesaid predecessor had been elicited by surreption and concealed until now; on account of which, if perhaps the church of Fano had been injured in any respect, he humbly petitioned that restitution be made to it. But you took care to respond to the proposals in this way: that the privilege itself was valid by law, because the bishop, when he granted it, had neither resigned the episcopate nor received the regular habit, and had granted it by the will of his canons, as would appear clearly from the same instrument, in which the names of the canons of the church of Fano are subscribed, and which was given in the palace of Fano, as is expressly contained in it.] But when the said cardinals had faithfully reported to us the things they had heard, and the said instrument had been diligently inspected, in truth we recognized that the aforesaid bishop remitted to the aforesaid church the spallae that both he and his predecessors had been accustomed to receive from that church, and established that he would not impose another service upon it, reserving to himself and his church annually, under the name of a pension, a candle of three pounds. Therefore, because a procuration is annexed to visitation, since no one ought to serve as a soldier at his own expense, nor ought the mouth of the ox that treads out grain to be muzzled, and because the bishop, by reason of the episcopal jurisdiction that he has in it, is bound to visit the aforesaid church for the sake of correction, and that which was imposed by common law from the foundation itself is not understood to be imposed as something new, with the counsel of our brothers we decree that the same bishop, when he approaches that church for the sake of correction, is to receive a moderate procuration from it twice a year; but the same bishop is to presume to exact or extort nothing else from that church beyond the aforesaid pension and procurations. [We therefore decree, etc. Given at Anagni, on the fifth day before the Kalends of March. 1204.]

> Episcopus, remittens ecclesiae servitia, quae sibi debebat, et statuens, quod aliud servitium non imponatur, procurationem non intelligitur remisisse.
>
> Idem Priori sancti Stephani.
>
> Quum venerabilis frater noster [M.] Favensis episcopus, +et tu in nostra essetis praesentia constituti, et de quaestione, quae inter vos super ecclesia S. Stephani Fanensis vertebatur, velletis ad invicem litigare, dilectum filium Ioannem tit. S. Priscae presbyterum et Ioannem S. Mariae in Cosmedino diaconum cardinales vobis concessimus auditores. Coram quibus allegando opponere curavistis, quod, quum praedicta ecclesia S. Stephani quarundam monialium, quae in ea videbantur sub religionis habitu conversari, malitia faciente, fuerit fere ad desolationem redacta, illas bonae memoriae C. Fanensis episcopus auctoritate felicis recordationis Eugenii Papae praedecessoris nostri ab ecclesia memorata removit, et canonicos in ipsa instituit regulares, statuens, ut ordo canonicus perpetuis in ea temporibus debeat observari, et eam ab omni exactione tam sua quam successorum suorum et Fanensis ecclesiae prorsus absolvit, retento sibi et ecclesiae suae uno cereo trium librarum, ab ea annis singulis exsolvendo. [Et quia praedictus episcopus te super libertate praedicta tam a felicis memoriae Coelestino Papa praedecessore nostro quam a nobis etiam confirmata multipliciter aggravabat, apostolicum tibi petivisti patrocinium suffragari. Praedictus vero episcopus proposuit ex adverso, quod privilegium praedicti praedecessoris sui et ecclesiae suae nullum praeiudicium inferebat, quia eo tempore, quo illud indulsit ecclesiae memoratae, episcopatui renunciaverat, et habitum in ipsa ecclesia receperat regularem, et post tres dies poenitens illud privilegium revocavit; praeterea tu et canonici illius ecclesiae non estis privilegio illo usi, sed omnia obsequia, sicut ante indultum privilegium, sic et post universis successoribus illius episcopi, et sibi praesertim, in hospitiis usque ad haec tempora curavistis sine difficultate qualibet exhibere, asserens confirmationem praedicti praedecessoris nostri fuisse per subreptionem elicitam, et hactenus occultatam; propter quod, si forsitan in aliquo laesa erat Fanensis ecclesia, restitutionem sibi fieri humiliter postulabat. Ceterum ad proposita sic respondere curavisti, quod ipsum privilegium de iure valebat, quia episcopus, dum illud concessit, nec episcopatui resignaverat, nec habitum receperat regularem, et ipsum de canonicorum suorum indulserat voluntate, sicut ex eodem instrumento evidenter appareret, in quo nomina canonicorum ecclesiae Fanensis sunt subscripta, et idem in palatio Fanensi datum fuerit, sicut in eo continetur expressum.] Nos autem, quum dicti cardinales ea, quae audierant, nobis fideliter retulissent, dicto instrumento diligenter inspecto, re vera Cognovimus, quod praefatus episcopus spallas, quas ab eadem ecclesia tam ipse quam praedecessores sui recipere consueverant, ecclesiae praefatae remisit, et statuit, quod aliud ei servitium non imponeret, sibi et ecclesiae suae annuatim trium librarum cereo pensionis nomine reservato. Quia ergo visitationi annexa est procuratio, quum nemo suis stipendiis debeat militare, nec os bovi alligandum sit trituranti, et episcopus ratione episcopalis iurisdictionis, quam habet in ea, teneatur causa correctionis ecclesiam visitare praefatam, nec intelligatur quasi novum imponi quod ab ipsa fundatione de communi fuerat iure impositum, de consilio fratrum nostrorum decernimus, quod idem episcopus, quum ad ipsam ecclesiam causa correctionis accesserit, moderatam ab ea procurationem recipiat bis in anno, sed nihil aliud praeter pensionem et procurationes praescriptas idem episcopus ab eadem ecclesia exigere vel extorquere praesumat. [Decernimus ergo etc. Dat. Anagniae V. Kal. Mart. 1204.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Churches newly converted will observe the custom of neighboring churches in procurations and other matters.

The same, to the Archbishop of Compostela.

Concerning that on which your fraternity wished to consult us—namely, because almost the whole province of Compostela has newly been converted to the jurisdiction of your church, in what manner it ought to obey and serve you when visiting the province or part of the province, and also to provide procurations, and that we deign to instruct you—we have considered that this response should be given to you in this way: it is bound to observe that which is observed in the neighboring provinces. [Given at Viterbo, on the tenth day before the Kalends of July, in the tenth year. 1207.]

> Ecclesiae de novo conversae in procurationibus et aliis servabunt consuetudinem vicinarum.
>
> Idem Compostellano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Super eo, quod fraternitas tua nos consulere voluit, ut, quia fere tota provincia Compostellana de novo est ad iurisdictionem ecclesiae tuae conversa, qualiter tibi provinciam vel partem provinciae visitanti obsequi debeat et servire, nec non et in procurationibus providere, te instruere dignaremur, tibi taliter duximus respondendum, quod illud observare tenetur, quod in vicinis provinciis observatur. [Dat. Viterbii X. Kal. Iul. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: Prelates are to be furnished procurations when they visit personally, and they ought then to observe the Lateran Council and devote themselves to preaching, correction, and reformation. Apostolic legates and messengers ought to be furnished procurations only for those days during which they make a stay, and what is exacted contrary to this constitution is restored twofold.

The same, in the general council.

Procurations that are owed by reason of visitation to bishops, archdeacons, or any others, including legates or messengers of the Apostolic See, are in no way to be exacted without manifest and necessary cause except when they personally perform the office of visitation. And then let them observe the moderation of mounts and persons defined in the Lateran Council, with this qualification applied concerning legates and messengers of the Apostolic See: when it is necessary for them to make a necessary stay at some place, lest that place be burdened excessively on their account, let them receive moderate procurations from other churches or persons that have not yet been burdened by their procurations, in such a way that the number of procurations does not exceed the number of days during which they make a stay of this kind; and when one has not sufficed by itself, let two or more be joined into one. Moreover, let those exercising the office of visitation seek not the things that are their own but those of Jesus Christ, devoting themselves to preaching and exhortation, correction and reformation, so that they may bear fruit that does not perish. But whoever attempts to act contrary to this is both to return what he received and to furnish as much again to the church that he burdened in this way.

> Praelati tunc sunt procurandi, quum personaliter visitant, et debent tunc servare concilium Lateranense et praedicationi, correctioni et reformationi vacare. Legati et nuncii apostolici pro his diebus tantum, pro quibus moram trahunt, procurari debent, et contra hanc constitutionem exactum restituitur duplicatum.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.

Procurationes, quae ratione visitationis debentur episcopis, vel archidiaconis vel quibuslibet aliis, etiam apostolicae sedis legatis aut nunciis, absque manifesta et necessaria causa nullatenus exigantur, nisi quando personaliter officium visitationis impendunt. Et tunc evectionum et personarum mediocritatem observent in Lateranensi concilio diffinitam, hoc adhibito moderamine circa legatos et nuncios apostolicae sedis, ut, quum oportuerit eos apud aliquem locum moram facere necessariam, ne locus ille propter illos nimium aggravetur, procurationes recipiant moderatas ab aliis ecclesiis vel personis, quae nondum fuerant de suis procurationibus aggravatae, ita, quod numerus procurationum numerum dierum, quibus huiusmodi moram fecerint, non excedat, et, quum aliqua non suffecerit per se ipsam, duae vel plures coniungantur in unam. Porro visitationis officium exercentes non quaerant quae sua sunt, sed quae Iesu Christi, praedicationi et cohortationi, correctioni et reformationi vacando, ut fructum referant, qui non perit. Qui autem contra hoc venire tentaverit et quod accepit reddat, et ecclesiae, quam taliter aggravavit, tantundem impendat.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: A church, even one situated in a city, is bound to furnish a procuration to a visiting bishop, although it has never furnished him one.

Honorius III, to the Abbots of Tiron and Josaphat.

We received the complaint of our venerable brother the Bishop of Le Mans that, although the cause known to be litigated between him on one side and the abbot and convent of La Couture in the diocese of Le Mans on the other, concerning the procurations that the same bishop seeks from them both in the head and in the members, was committed to you by the Apostolic See with the consent of the parties, the said abbot and convent endeavor to frustrate the intention of the same bishop on the ground that their monastery is known to be situated in the city of Le Mans and that they have not hitherto paid a procuration, although they show no privilege of exemption and common right belongs to the same bishop. Wishing, therefore, that an end be imposed upon the lawsuits, we command your discretion that, unless the said abbot and convent show something else reasonable and prove why they ought not to furnish the aforesaid things to the bishop himself, you are to compel them to furnish it as right shall dictate, according to the tenor of the former apostolic letters, reason having been considered.

Ecclesia, etiam civitatensis, tenetur procurare episcopum visitantem quanquam ipsum nunquam procuravit.

Honorius III. de Tiro et Iosaphat Abbatibus.

Venerabili fratre nostro Cenomanensi episcopo accepimus conquerente, quod, quum causa, quae inter ipsum ex parte una, et abbatem et conventum de Cultura Cenomanensis dioecesis ex altera super procurationibus, quas ab eis petit idem episcopus tam in capite quam in membris, noscitur agitari, de consensu partium vobis fuerit ab apostolica sede commissa, dicti abbas et conventus ex eo frustrari intentionem eiusdem episcopi moliuntur, quod eorum monasterium in Cenomanensi villa situm esse dignoscitur, et ipsi procurationem hactenus non solverunt, +quanquam exemptionis privilegium non ostendant, et eidem episcopo competat ius commune. Volentes igitur, ut finis litibus imponatur, Discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, nisi dicti abbas et conventus aliud rationabile ostenderint et probaverint, propter quod ipsi episcopo exhibere non debeant supra dicta, vos eos ad exhibendum eam, sicut ius dictaverit, iuxta priorum apostolicarum literarum tenorem ratione praevia compellatis.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: One who visits a province by metropolitan right or by right of legation can pronounce a sentence against provincials who deny him procurations.

Gregory IX.

When recently the Archbishop of Benevento was visiting the province of Benevento (And below:), we command that, when it happens that the same archbishop visits the province of Benevento either by his own authority or by ours, you furnish him the procurations owed by reason of visitation according to the means of your churches. Otherwise, we will hold ratified the sentence that he lawfully pronounces against the rebellious and, with the Lord as author, will cause it to be inviolably observed.

> Qui iure metropolitano vel legationis visitat provinciam, in provinciales, qui sibi procurationes denegant, potest ferre sententiam.
>
> Gregorius IX.
>
> Quum nuper archiepiscopus Beneventanus Beneventanam provinciam visitaret (Et infra:) Mandamus, quatenus, quum eundem archiepiscopum sive auctoritate propria sive nostra Beneventanam provinciam contigerit visitare, procurationes, ratione visitationis debitas, iuxta facultates ecclesiarum vestrarum exhibeatis eidem; alioquin sententiam, quam ipse rite tulerit in rebelles, ratam habebimus, et faciemus auctore Domino inviolabiliter observari.

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: Old pensions are to be paid in the old coinage or, if it is not in use, at its value.

The same.

Since for some years you have paid to the canons of the greater church a certain sum of money owed as a pension of your church, and the same persons exact that the entire sum be paid to them in better coinage, through our letters we command you to cause those canons to remain content with payment of the former money or, if it is not in use, with the value of the old pension.

> Ad antiquam monetam, vel, si non est in usu, ad eius aestimationem solvendae sunt pensiones antiquae.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum canonicis maioris ecclesiae quandam summam pecuniae pro pensione ecclesiae tuae debitam aliquot annis persolveris, et iidem summam illam ex integro de meliori moneta exigant sibi solvi, tibi damus nostris literis in mandatis, ut canonicos illos solutione prioris pecuniae vel, si non sit in usu, aestimatione pensionis antiquae facias manere contentos.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: A procuration by reason of visitation is not owed on account of a private oratory.

The same.

By authority of the presents we prohibit anyone from presuming to exact or extort from you the procurations that are owed by reason of visitation on the ground that some of you sometimes celebrate in the oratories that you have in your granges.

> Propter privatum oratorium procuratio ratione visitationis non debetur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Auctoritate praesentium inhibemus, ne quis pro eo, quod in oratoriis, quae in grangiis vestris habetis, interdum aliqui vestrum celebrant, procurationes, quae ratione visitationis debentur, a vobis exigere vel extorquere praesumat.

Title XL: On the Consecration of a Church or Altar

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: When the altar or the stone containing the seal has been removed, the altar, but not the church, will be reconsecrated.

Alexander III.

To these things, if the altar has been moved, or only that stone placed upon it that contains the seal has been broken or even diminished, it ought to be consecrated anew. But on account of this the church is by no means accustomed to repeat its consecration, although certain canons appear to intimate it. Nevertheless, it is not prohibited from doing so.

> DE CONSECRATIONE ECCLESIAE VEL ALTARIS.
>
> Amoto altari vel lapide, continente sigillum, reconsecrabitur altare, non autem ecclesia.
>
> Alexander III.
>
> Ad haec, si altare motum fuerit, aut lapis ille solummodo supra positus, qui sigillum continet, confractus, aut etiam diminutus exstiterit, debet denuo consecrari. Propter hoc vero nequaquam reiterare suam consecrationem ecclesia consuevit, licet id quidam canones innuere videantur. Non tamen id facere prohibetur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Churches can be consecrated even on non-feast days.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Tournai.

Your fraternity caused us to be asked whether it was lawful for you to celebrate dedications of churches on both Sundays and ordinary days; concerning which we respond to your inquiry in this way: in your diocese it is lawful for you to impart dedication to churches on both Sundays and ordinary days. [Given at Rome, on the seventh day before the Ides of February, in the seventh year. 1205.]

> Diebus etiam non festis possunt ecclesiae consecrari.
>
> Innocentius III. Tornacensi Episcopo.
>
> Tua fraternitas +requiri fecit a nobis, utrum tibi dedicationes ecclesiarum tam diebus dominicis quam privatis liceret celebrare; super quo Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod in dioecesi tua licet tibi ecclesiis dedicationem impendere tam diebus dominicis quam privatis. [Dat. Romae VII. Id. Febr. A. VII. 1205.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It contains two statements, and first it says the same as the preceding chapter in this title. The second statement says that unconsecrated oil can be mixed with consecrated oil, and the whole becomes consecrated.

The same, to the Bishop of Nidaros.

That in doubtful matters (And below: [cf. c. 30, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V. 39.]) But an altar on which the slab to which the blessing of consecration is applied by pontifical ministry has been moved or enormously broken ought not undeservedly to be consecrated. Nor do we deny that unconsecrated oil can be mixed with consecrated oil. [But the clerics, etc. Given near Civita Castellana, on the sixth day before the Ides of October. 1198.]

> Habet duo dicta, et primo idem dicit, quod cap. supr. eod. Secundum dictum dicit, quod oleum non consecratum potest commisceri oleo consecrato, et totum fit consecratum.
>
> Idem Nidrosiensi Episcopo.
>
> Quod in dubiis (Et infra: [cf. c. 30. de sent. exc. V. 39.]) Altare vero, in quo tabula, cui consecrationis benedictio pontificali ministerio adhibetur, si mota vel enormiter fracta fuerit, debet non immerito consecrari. Nec negamus, quin oleum non consecratum consecrato possit oleo commisceri. [*Clerici autem etc. Dat. ap. civitatem Castellanam VI. Id. Oct. * 1198.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A church polluted by homicides and wounds inflicted upon persons there is reconciled.

The same, to the Archbishop of Compostela.

You proposed, while constituted in our presence, that when pilgrims from diverse regions come to the church of Saint James, and some wish to vindicate against others through contentions and quarrels the keeping of the altar at night, homicides sometimes happen and wounds are sometimes inflicted; on account of which you humbly petitioned that we deign to provide for that church by another manner than through the benefit of reconsecration. We respond to your fraternity in this way: while the church and altar remain, it can be reconciled through water blessed with wine and ashes. [Given at Viterbo, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of July, in the tenth year. 1207.]

> Reconciliatur ecclesia, quae propter homicidia et vulnera hominum ibidem perpetrata polluta est.
>
> Idem Compostellano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Proposuisti nobis in nostra praesentia constitutus, quod, venientibus ad ecclesiam sancti Iacobi ex diversis regionibus peregrinis, et volentibus aliis ab aliis per contentiones et rixas altaris de nocte custodiam vindicare, homicidia contingunt fieri interdum, et aliquando vulnera inferuntur; +propter quod humiliter postulasti, ut alio modo, quam per reconsecrationis beneficium, dignaremur ipsi ecclesiae providere. Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, manente ecclesia et altari, ipsa reconciliari poterit per aquam cum vino et cinere benedictam. [Dat. Viterbii XII. Kal. Iul. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Several altars can be consecrated simultaneously in the same church; and the same applies to several bishops.

The same.

Since you are (And below: [cf. c. 6, On the Use and Authority of the Pallium, I. 8.]) You should therefore know that, where necessity demands, both several altars in one church and several bishops simultaneously you will be able to consecrate.

> Plura altaria simul in eadem ecclesia consecrari possunt; et idem in pluribus episcopis.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum sis (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de usu et auct. pall. I. 8.]) Noveris igitur, quod, ubi exposcit necessitas, et plura in ecclesia una altaria et plures episcopos simul poteris consecrare.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: When the roof has fallen while the walls remain unharmed, and the altar-table has not been enormously broken, neither the altar nor the church is consecrated anew.

The same.

After the wooden structures of your church were consumed by a certain fire that occurred, although the walls remained unharmed and the table of the principal altar suffered a small fracture at its extremity, you sought to be instructed through the Apostolic See whether on account of this the consecration of that altar, or even of the entire church, ought to be renewed. To this we have considered that this response should be given to your inquiry: since the walls remained in their integrity and the slab of the altar was not moved or enormously damaged, on account of the aforesaid cause neither the church nor the altar ought to be consecrated anew. [Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of October, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

> Corruente tecto parietibus illaesis, et mensa altaris non enormiter fracta, nec altare, nec ecclesia consecratur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ligneis aedificiis ecclesiae vestrae casu quodam igne consumptis, parietibus tamen illaesis, ac mensa principalis altaris in sua extremitate modicam passa fracturam, +quaesivisti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, si propter hoc ipsius altaris, vel etiam totius ecclesiae debeat consecratio innovari. Ad quod Inquisitioni tuae taliter duximus respondendum, quod, quum parietes in sua integritate permanserint, et tabula altaris mota vel enormiter laesa non fuerit, ob causam praedictam nec ecclesia, nec altare debet denuo consecrari. [Dat. Lat. Non. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A church or cemetery is polluted if an excommunicated person is buried in it.

The same, to the Bishop of Sens.

You consulted us (And below: [cf. c. 14, On the Competent Forum, II. 2.]) But cemeteries in which the bodies of excommunicated persons happen to be buried through the violence of their relatives will have to be reconciled by the sprinkling of solemnly blessed water, as is accustomed to be done in dedications of churches. [But the procurations, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Kalends of May, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate. 1213.]

Polluitur ecclesia vel coemeterium, si excommunicatus in ea sepelitur.

Idem Senonensi Episcopo.

Consuluisti (Et infra: [cf. c. 14. de foro comp. II. 2.]) Coemeteria vero, in quibus excommunicatorum corpora sepeliri contingit per suorum violentiam propinquorum, reconcilianda erunt aspersione aquae solenniter benedictae, sicut in dedicationibus ecclesiarum fieri consuevit. [*Procurationes autem etc. Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Mai. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. * 1213.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One who caused a church to be consecrated is bound to endow it. This it says, and keep this case in mind.

Honorius III, to the Queen of Hungary.

Since, as became known to us from the report of the beloved sons of the chapter of Oradea, kindled by the zeal of devotion you caused their church to be consecrated, we assuredly hope that the zeal which induced you to the consecration of that church ought also to animate you to confer an endowment upon it, and indeed, since a church is not to be consecrated unless provision has been made for it from an endowment, you ought the more liberally to open the hands of your munificence to endow the aforesaid church, inasmuch as you can do it more easily and are now more strongly bound to it as though by a debt.

Qui fecit ecclesiam consecrari, tenetur eam dotare. H. d. et tene mente hunc casum.

Honorius III. Reginae Hungariae.

Quum, sicut ex relatione dilectorum filiorum capituli Oradiensis nobis innotuit, devotionis zelo succensa eorum feceris ecclesiam consecrari, +profecto speramus, quod zelus, ille, qui te ad eiusdem ecclesiae consecrationem induxit, te quoque, ut et dotem ei conferas, debeat animare, et quidem, Quum non sit ecclesia, nisi de dote provisum ei fuerit, consecranda, eo liberalius ad dotandam praedictam ecclesiam aperire manus munificentiae tuae debes, quo et facilius potes id facere, et ad hoc fortius, tanquam ex debito, iam teneris.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A polluted church cannot be reconciled by a simple priest, even if the water was blessed by a bishop.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Astorga.

We do not deny that a church can be reconciled by another bishop with water blessed by a bishop, while prohibiting this from henceforth being done by simple priests, notwithstanding the custom of the province of Braga, which ought rather to be called a corruption; for although a bishop can commit those things that belong to jurisdiction, he cannot entrust to clerics of an inferior grade those things that belong to the episcopal order. But what has hitherto been done by the same persons concerning reconciliation at the command of bishops we mercifully tolerate. [Churches, etc. (cf. c. 9, On the Immunity of Churches, III. 49.) Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, in the seventh year of our pontificate. 1233.]

Ecclesia polluta per sacerdotem simplicem reconciliari non potest, etiamsi aqua fuerit per episcopum benedicta.

Gregorius IX. Astoricensi Episcopo.

> Aqua per episcopum benedicta ecclesiam reconciliari posse per alium episcopum, non negamus, per sacerdotes simplices hoc fieri de cetero prohibentes, non obstante consuetudine provinciae Bracharensis, quae dicenda est potius corruptela; quia, licet episcopus committere valeat quae iurisdictionis exsistunt, quae ordinis tamen episcopalis sunt non potest inferioris gradus clericis demandare. Quod autem mandantibus episcopis super reconciliatione factum est hactenus per eosdem, misericorditer toleramus. [Ecclesiae etc. (cf. c. 9. de imm. eccl. III. 49.) Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. VII. 1233.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A church, even one not consecrated, is to be reconciled if it is polluted.

The same, to the same.

If an unconsecrated church has been polluted by anyone's semen or by the shedding of blood, let it immediately be washed with exorcized water, lest the instruments of divine praise be suspended [in it]; nevertheless, it is to be consecrated as soon as it can be. [Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, in the seventh year of our pontificate. 1233.]

> Ecclesia, etiam non consecrata, si polluitur, reconcilianda est.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Si ecclesia non consecrata cuiuscunque semine fuerit aut sanguinis effusione polluta, aqua protinus exorcizata lavetur, ne divinae laudis [in ea] organa suspendantur; est tamen, quam citius fieri poterit consecranda. [*Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. VII. * 1233.]

Title XLI: On the Celebration of Masses, the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and the Divine Offices

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A priest is bound to say the canonical hours at the due hours; nevertheless, for a cause he is permitted to say them through Vespers inclusive. This it says according to one understanding.

From the Council of Agde.

After the morning office has been completed in the morning, let a priest discharge the due task of his service, namely, by chanting Prime, Terce, Sext, None, and Vespers, yet in such a way that they are completed publicly at the suitable and appointed hours, according to possibility, either by himself or by the scholars. Then, after the hours have been completed and the sick visited, if he wishes, let him go out fasting to rural work so that he may again be able to assist the necessities of pilgrims and guests, or of diverse travelers, also of the sick and the dead, until the appointed hour, according to the quality and opportunity of the time. From the sayings of Benedict: The Prophet says, "Seven times in the day I have spoken praise to you"; which sevenfold number is fulfilled by us in this way, if we discharge the offices of our service at the time of Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers, and Compline, because, as the Prophet says: seven times in the day, etc For concerning the night watches the same Prophet says: "At midnight I arose to confess to you, etc." Therefore, at these times let us render praises to our Creator for the judgments of his justice.

DE CELEBRATIONE MISSARUM, ET SACRAMENTO EUCHARISTIAE ET DIVINIS OFFICIIS.

Presbyter tenetur horis debitis dicere horas canonicas, permittitur tamen sibi ex causa dicere eas usque ad vesperas inclusive. H. d. secundum unum intellectum.

Ex concilio Agathensi.

Presbyter, mane matutinali officio expleto, pensum servitutis suae, canendo videlicet primam, tertiam, sextam, nonam vesperamque persolvat, ita tamen, ut horis competentibus et signatis iuxta possibilitatem aut a se, aut a scholaribus publice compleantur. Deinde peractis horis et infirmis visitatis, si voluerit, exeat ad opus rurale ieiunus, ut iterum necessitatibus peregrinorum et hospitum, sive diversorum commeantium, infirmorum quoque atque defunctorum succurrere possit usque ad statutam horam, pro temporis qualitate, et opportunitatis. Ex dictis Benedicti : Propheta dicente : " septies in die laudem dixi tibi; " qui septenarius numerus a nobis sic impletur, si matutini, primae, tertiae, sextae, nonae, vesperae et completorii tempore nostrae servitutis officia persolvamus, quia, sicut Propheta ait: septies in die etc. Nam de nocturnis vigiliis idem ipse Propheta ait : " Media nocte surgebam ad confitendum tibi, etc. " Ergo his temporibus laudes creatori nostro super iudicia suae iustitiae referamus.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: On account of a special Mass, the Mass of the feria is not to be omitted.

From the Council of Tribur.

Certain persons also among the laity, and especially matrons, have as a custom that on each day they hear the Gospel "In the beginning was the Word" and particular Masses, that is, of the Holy Trinity and of Saint Michael; and therefore it was sanctioned in the same council that this is not to be done further except at its own time, and unless one of the [faithful] should wish to hear it on account of reverence for the Holy Trinity, not from another devotion. But if they wish Masses to be chanted for them, let them hear Masses of that same day for the salvation of the living and also of the dead.

Propter missam specialem missa de feria dimittenda non est.

Ex concilio Triburiensi.

Quidam etiam laicorum et maxime matronae habent in consuetudine, ut per singulos dies audiant evangelium : " In principio erat verbum, " et missas peculiares, hoc est de sancta Trinitate et de sancto Michaele; et ideo sancitum est in eodem concilio, ut ulterius hoc non fiat, nisi suo tempore, et nisi aliquis [fidelium] velit propter reverentiam sanctae Trinitatis, non pro alia devotione audire. Sed si voluerint, ut sibi missae cantentur, de eodem die missas audiant pro salute vivorum et etiam defunctorum.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It suffices for a priest to celebrate once a day, and it excepts two cases, namely necessity and the feast of the Nativity.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Worcester.

You consulted us whether a priest can celebrate two Masses on the same day; concerning which we respond to you that, except on the day of the Lord's Nativity, unless a cause of necessity counsels it, it suffices for a priest to celebrate only one Mass once a day. [Given on the seventh day before the Kalends of February. 1206.]

> Sufficit sacerdoti semel in die celebrare, et excipit duos casus, scilicet necessitatem et festum Nativitatis.
>
> Innocentius III. Vigorensi Episcopo.
>
> Consuluisti +nos, utrum presbyter duas missas in eadem die valeat celebrare; super quo tibi Respondemus, quod, excepto die Nativitatis dominicae, nisi causa necessitatis suadeat, sufficit sacerdoti semel in die unam missam solummodo celebrare. [*Dat. VII. Kal. Febr. * 1206.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: In a Mass of commemoration, although the proper preface is said, neither the angelic hymn nor the creed is said.

The same, to the Archbishop of Braga.

Our counsel (And below: [cf. c. 2, On the Observance of Fasts, III. 46.)] Furthermore, you inquired whether on ordinary days, on which it happens that Mass is celebrated in honor of the Holy Spirit, the Blessed Virgin, and the holy cross, the angelic hymn, the creed, and the proper preface ought to be chanted, especially since in your regions Mass is solemnly celebrated in honor of the Blessed Virgin on Saturdays. To which indeed we respond to your inquiry in this way: among us on ordinary days, when the solemnities of Masses are celebrated in honor of the Blessed Virgin, neither the angelic hymn nor the creed is chanted, although the proper preface is chanted in the Mass, so that the difference between a commemoration and a solemnity may be shown. Hence "We praise you, God" is more regularly omitted than said at morning Lauds. [But since you asked, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the ninth day before the Kalends of March, in the eighth year of our pontificate. 1206.]

> In missa commemorationis, licet dicatur propria praefatio, non tamen dicitur hymnus angelicus, nec symbolum.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Bracharensi.
>
> Consilium nostrum (Et infra: [cf. c. 2. de obs. iei. III. 46.)] Insuper Requisisti, utrum in diebus profestis, in quibus ad honorem S. Spiritus, B. Virginis, et sanctae crucis missam celebrari contingit, hymnus angelicus, symbolum ac praefatio propria debeat decantari, +praesertim quum in partibus tuis in honorem B. Virginis in sabbatorum diebus missa solenniter celebratur. Ad quod utique Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod apud nos in diebus profestis, quum missarum solennia in honorem B. Virginis celebrantur, neque hymnus angelicus, neque symbolum decantatur, licet in missa propria praefatio decantetur, ut inter commemorationem et solennitatem differentia ostendatur. Unde " Te Deum laudamus " regularius dimittitur, quam dicatur in laudibus matutinis. [Quum autem quaesieris etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. IX. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. VIII. 1206.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A priest is to take an ablution after receiving the Eucharist, unless he is going to say another Mass.

The same, to the Clerics of Saint Peter of Maguelone.

On your part (And below: [cf. c. 1, On the Observance of Fasts, III. 46.]) Furthermore, you petitioned to be instructed through apostolic letters how a priest ought to take an ablution in the Mass. To which we respond to your petition in this way: a priest ought always to take an ablution with wine after he has received the whole sacrament of the Eucharist, unless he is to celebrate another Mass on the same day, lest, if perhaps he received the wine of ablution, he impede the other celebration. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Nones of November. 1204.]

> Sacerdos post sumptam eucharistiam perfundat, nisi aliam missam sit dicturus.
>
> Idem Clericis sancti P. Magalonensis.
>
> Ex parte vestra (Et infra: [cf. c. 1. de obs. iei. III. 46.]) Insuper postulastis, quomodo sacerdos in missa perfundere debeat, per literas apostolicas edoceri. Ad quod Postulationi vestrae taliter respondemus, quod semper sacerdos vino perfundere debet, postquam totum acceperit eucharistiae sacramentum, nisi quum eodem die aliam missam debuerit celebrare; ne, si forte vinum perfusionis acciperet, celebrationem aliam impediret. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Non. Nov. 1204.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If there are any words in the canon of the Mass that were not spoken by the Evangelists, we ought to believe that the Apostles received them from Christ, and their successors from the Apostles. And this it says as far as § "You asked." — (You asked, etc.:) In the sacrament of the altar water is transubstantiated with wine into blood. This it says as far as § "In the third place." The Sicilian Abbot. — (In the third place, etc.:) The prayer that is said in the secret on the feast of Saint Leo has been changed, because where it used to be said, "Grant us, Lord, that this offering may profit the soul of your servant Leo," today it is said, "that through the intercession of blessed Leo this offering may profit us"; and this change occurs because the saints do not need our prayers, but we need theirs. This it says as far as the end. The Abbot.

The same, to J., formerly Archbishop of Lyon.

Since, renouncing for the greater part in the care of pastoral governance the office of Martha, who was busy about many things, you have chosen to dwell in the house of the Lord as though an abject with those who chose the best part, sitting with Mary at the feet of the Lord so that they may meditate continually in his law, preferring the beauty of Rachel to the weak eyes of Leah, we believe such understanding of the scriptures flourishes in you that you can not only break bread for little ones, but also minister solid food to the advanced and untie the knots of difficult questions. But because, recognizing in the primacy of the prince of the Apostles the teaching authority of the Apostolic See, you believe that the greater causes of the Church are to be referred to it, we gladly respond, as the Lord inspires us, to your consultations, which we know you raised not for the advantage of earthly utility, since they contain no civil question, but for the advancement of souls, namely so that obscure scriptures may come forth into the light. For you asked indeed who added to the form of words that Christ himself expressed, when he transubstantiated bread and wine into his body and blood, that which no Evangelist is read to have expressed in the canon of the Mass used by the universal Church. For since it is thus read in the Gospel: "Taking the chalice, giving thanks, he blessed it and gave it to his disciples, saying: Drink from this, all of you; for this is my blood of the new testament, which shall be poured out for you and for many others unto the remission of sins," in the canon of the Mass this phrase, namely "the mystery of faith," is found interposed among those words. Hence, since no Evangelist testifies that Christ said this, you are moved not a little and marvel that anyone has attempted to assert that he said anything more than any of the Evangelists asserts.

But if you diligently inspect the form of the canon itself, beyond this concerning which your fraternity inquired, you will be able to find in the same canon two other things, namely "with his eyes raised to heaven" and "of the eternal testament," which are not read in the Gospel text. Indeed, we find many things, both words and deeds of the Lord, omitted by the Evangelists that the Apostles are read either to have supplied in word or expressed in deed. For Paul says thus in the Acts of the Apostles: "You ought to remember the word of the Lord Jesus, who said: It is more blessed to give than to receive." None of the four Evangelists wrote this. Nor did any of them express what Paul, writing to the Corinthians concerning Christ, says: "He was seen by more than five hundred brothers at once; then he was seen by James; but last of all, as though by one born out of due time, he was seen also by me." The Evangelists themselves are also read mutually to have supplied among themselves those things omitted by one or some of them. Hence, while three Evangelists placed "this is my body," Luke alone added "which shall be delivered for you"; and while Matthew and Mark say "for many," Luke says "for you." But Matthew added "unto the remission of sins." Furthermore, those things that are added in the canon of the Mass can be proved from other places in the Gospel. For John, describing the raising of Lazarus, asserts that Jesus lifted his eyes upward and said: "Father, I give thanks to you because you have heard me." Elsewhere the same also says: "Jesus spoke these things and, lifting his eyes to heaven, said: Father, glorify your Son." Therefore, if at that time he lifted his eyes to the Father in heaven when he recalled the soul of Lazarus to the lifeless body, it appears more probable that he lifted his eyes to the Father in heaven when he changed bread and wine into his own body and blood.

Furthermore, as was expressed above, while "of the new testament" is placed in the Gospel text, "and eternal" is interposed here. For the old testament, which was dedicated with the blood of goats and calves, promised temporal things; but the new, which was consecrated with the blood of Christ, promises eternal things. And therefore that testament was old and transitory, but this is new and eternal. Or, to use another reason, from the same ground on which it is described as new, that is, last, it is proved to be eternal, that is, perpetual. For the last testament of a man remains unalterable because it is confirmed by the death of the testator; according to which the Apostle asserts that a testament is confirmed in death, otherwise it is not valid while the one who makes the testament lives. Furthermore, not only a writing but also a promise is called a testament, according to which the Apostle himself writes: "Therefore he is the mediator of the new testament, so that those who are called may receive the promise of the eternal inheritance." Thus, therefore, what is found in the canon itself ought to be understood: "For this is my blood of the new and eternal testament," that is, the confirmer of the new and eternal promise, just as the Lord promises, saying: "He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life."

But from that word concerning which your fraternity raised a question, namely "the mystery of faith," certain persons thought to draw a defense of error, saying that in the sacrament of the altar there is not the truth of the body and blood of Christ, but only an image, appearance, and figure, because scripture sometimes commemorates that what is received at the altar is a sacrament, mystery, and example. But such persons fall into the snare of error from the fact that they neither understand the authorities of scripture fittingly nor receive the sacraments of God reverently, knowing alike neither the scriptures nor the power of God. For if for this reason, because the sacrament of the altar is a figure, it is denied to be truth, then neither the death nor the resurrection of Christ, since it is a figure, is to be believed as truth, since the Apostle manifests the death and resurrection of Christ to be a likeness and image: "Christ," he says, "died for our offenses and rose again for our justification." Peter, the prince of the Apostles, also writes thus in his epistle: "Christ suffered for us, leaving you an example, that you may follow his footsteps." Therefore, if both the death of Christ and his resurrection are an example, so that we also, dead to sin, may now live to justice, why, if it was not truth because it was an example, then Christ neither truly died nor truly rose from the dead. But may this error be far from the hearts of the faithful, since the Prophet testifies concerning him that he himself truly bore our infirmities and himself carried our sorrows. Nevertheless, it is called the mystery of faith because one thing is believed there other than what is seen, and one thing is seen other than what is believed. For the appearance of bread and wine is seen, and the truth of Christ's flesh and blood and the power of unity and charity are believed. But what is called the mystery of faith in this place is elsewhere, according to John, described as spirit and life. For spirit is mystery according to this: "The letter kills, but the spirit gives life"; and faith is life, according to what is read: "My just man lives by faith," on account of which the Lord himself says: "The words that I have spoken to you are spirit and life."

Nevertheless, a subtle distinction is to be made among the three things that are distinct in this sacrament, namely the visible form, the truth of the body, and the spiritual power. The form is of bread and wine, the truth is of flesh and blood, and the power is of unity and charity. The first is sacrament and not reality. The second is sacrament and reality. The third is reality and not sacrament. But the first is the sacrament of a twofold reality. The second however is the sacrament of one and exists as the reality of the other. The third indeed is the reality of a twofold sacrament. We therefore believe that the Apostles received from Christ, and their successors from them, the form of words as it is found in the canon. For, as was expressed above, the Apostles both supplied in words many things omitted by the Evangelists concerning the words and deeds of the Lord and expressed them in works.

§ 1. You also asked whether water with wine is converted into blood. Concerning this, opinions vary among the scholastics. For it appears to some that, since two principal sacraments flowed from the side of Christ—of redemption in the blood and of regeneration in the water—the two things, wine and water, which are mixed in the chalice, are changed by divine power into those two, so that in this sacrament there may fully be truth and figure. But others hold that the water with the wine is transubstantiated into blood, since, mixed with wine, it passes into wine, although natural philosophers assert the contrary, who say that water can be separated from wine by art. Furthermore, it can be said that the water does not pass into blood, but remains surrounded by the accidents of the prior wine in such a way that it assumes the taste of wine. This is proved from the fact that, if other wine is placed in the chalice after the consecration of the chalice, it indeed does not pass into blood or become mixed with the blood, but, mixed with the accidents of the prior wine, it is poured all around the body that lies hidden under them, without wetting that which is surrounded. Nevertheless, those accidents appear to affect the wine added, because, if pure water has been added, it assumes the taste of wine. It therefore happens that accidents change the subject, just as it happens that the subject changes the accidents; for nature yields to miracle, and power works beyond custom. Nor is it believed unfitting or absurd if water is believed to be in the body of Christ, since it is read to have issued from his side. But it is wicked to opine what certain persons presumed to say, namely that the water is converted into phlegm. For they also lie that not water but watery humor issued from the side of Christ, not attending that two sacraments flowed from the side of Christ and that persons are baptized not in phlegm but in water, according to what the Lord declares: "Unless anyone is born again of water and the Holy Spirit, he shall not enter the kingdom of God."

But among the aforesaid opinions that one is judged more probable which asserts that the water with the wine is changed into blood, so that the property of the sacrament may shine forth more expressly.

For since many waters are many peoples, according to what is read elsewhere, "Blessed are you who sow upon all waters," water is therefore united to wine so that the people may be united to Christ. For through this, that he both assumed from what is ours and we received from what is his, we are joined by so indissoluble a bond that he who is one with the Father through ineffable unity becomes one with us through admirable union, and through this, with him himself mediating in common, we are made one with the Father. "Holy Father," he says, "preserve in your name those whom you have given me, that they may be one, as we also are; but I ask not for these alone, but for those who will believe in me through their word, that they also may be one in us, and that the world may believe that you have sent me."

§ 2. In the third place indeed, your fraternity inquired who changed, or when, or why that which is contained in older codices in the secret of blessed Leo was changed, namely thus: "Grant us, Lord, that this offering may profit the soul of your servant Leo," when in modern sacramentaries it is held: "Grant us, we beseech you, Lord, that through the intercession of blessed Leo this offering may profit us." Concerning this we respond to you in this way: we do not know who changed it or when it was changed. We know, however, on what occasion it was changed, because, since the authority of sacred scripture says that one who prays for a martyr does injury to the martyr, the same is to be thought by similar reason concerning the other saints, because they do not need our prayers, on account of the fact that, since they are perfectly blessed, all things fall out for them according to their wishes. But we rather need their prayers, for, since we are wretched, our evils disturb us on every side. Hence, what is contained in very many prayers—"may such an offering," namely, "profit or benefit this or that saint unto glory and honor"—ought assuredly to be understood in this way: that it profits to this end, that he is glorified more and more by the faithful on earth, or even honored, although very many judge it not unfitting that the glory of the saints is increased until the judgment, and therefore that in the meantime the Church can soundly desire an increase of their glorification. But whether in this article that distinction has a place by which it is taught that some of the dead are very good, others very evil, others moderately good, and others moderately evil—whence the suffrages made by the faithful in the Church for the very good are acts of thanksgiving; for the very evil, consolations of the living; but for the moderately good, expiations; and for the moderately evil, propitiations—let your discretion investigate. Henceforth we petition to be aided before God by your prayers. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Kalends of December, in the fifth year. 1202.]

> Si qua verba sunt in canone missae, quae ab Evangelistis dicta non fuerunt, credere debemus, quod a Christo Apostoli, et ab Apostolis eorum successores acceperunt. Et hoc dicit usque ad §. Quaesivisti — (Quaesivisti etc.:) In sacramento altaris aqua cum vino transsubstantiatur in sanguinem, H. d. usque ad §. Tertio loco. Abbas Siculus. — (Tertio loco etc.:) Oratio, quae dicitur in secreta in festo sancti Leonis, immutata est, quia ubi dicebatur: " annue nobis Domine, ut, animae famuli tui Leonis haec prosit oblatio: " hodie dicitur: " ut intercessione B. Leonis haec nobis prosit oblatio: " et haec mutatio contingit, quia sancti nostris orationibus non indigent, sed nos suis. H. d. usque ad finem. Abbas.
>
> Idem I. quondam Archiepiscopo Lugdunensi.
>
> Quum Marthae +circa plurima satagentis officio in cura regiminis pastoralis pro maiori parte renuncians, in domo Domini quasi abiectus elegeris habitare cum illis, qui partem optimam elegerunt, sedentes ad pedes Domini cum Maria, ut in lege eius iugiter meditentur, lippitudini Liae Rachelis pulchritudinem praeferentes: eam in te vigere credimus intelligentiam scripturarum, ut non solum parvulis frangere possis panem, sed profectis etiam cibum solidum ministrare, ac nodos solvere difficilium quaestionum. Verum, quoniam in primatu Apostolorum principis apostolicae sedis magisterium recognoscens, ad eam credis maiores causas ecclesiae referendas: consultationibus tuis, quas non ob commodum utilitatis terrenae, quum civilem non contineant quaestionem, sed animarum profectum, ut videlicet in lucem prodeant obscurae scripturae, novimus te movisse libenter, quod nobis inspirat Dominus respondemus. Quaesivisti siquidem, quis formae verborum, quam ipse Christus expressit, quum in corpus et sanguinem suum panem transsubstantiavit et vinum, illud in canone missae, quo ecclesia utitur generalis, adiecerit, quod nullus Evangelistarum legitur expressisse. Quum enim in evangelio sic legatur : " Accipiens calicem, gratias agens benedixit, et dedit discipulis suis, dicens : bibite ex hoc omnes; hic est enim sanguis meus novi testamenti, qui pro vobis, et pro multis aliis effundetur in remissionem peccatorum : " in canone missae sermo iste, videlicet " mysterium fidei, " verbis ipsis interpositus invenitur. Unde quum non Evangelista Christum hoc dixisse testetur, moveris non modicum et miraris, quod aliquis asseverare tentaverit, eum aliquid plus dixisse, quam aliquis Evangelistarum asseveret. Verum, si formam ipsius canonis inspicias diligenter, praeter hoc, de quo tua fraternitas requisivit, alia duo, videlicet : " elevatis oculis in coelum " et " aeterni testamenti, " poteris in ipso canone reperire, quae in textu evangelico non leguntur. Sane multa tam de verbis quam de factis dominicis invenimus ab Evangelistis omissa, quae Apostoli vel supplevisse verbo, vel facto expressisse leguntur. Paulus enim in actibus Apostolorum sic ait : " Meminisse vos oportet verbi Domini Iesu, qui dixit : beatius est magis dare quam accipere. " Haec nullus quatuor Evangelistarum descripsit. Nullus etiam horum expressit, quod Paulus de Christo ad Corinthios scribens ait : " Visus est plus quam quingentis fratribus simul, deinde visus est Iacobo; novissime autem, tanquam abortivo, visus est et mihi. " Ipsi etiam Evangelistae mutuo inter se supplevisse leguntur quae ab eorum aliquo vel aliquibus sunt omissa. Unde quum tres Evangelistae posuerint : " hoc est corpus meum, " solus Lucas adiecit : " quod pro vobis tradetur, " et quum Matthaeus et Marcus dicant : " pro multis, Lucas dicit : pro vobis. " Matthaeus autem : " in remissionem peccatorum, " adiunxit. Ceterum ea, quae adduntur in canone missae, possunt ex aliis locis evangelii comprobari. Ioannes enim suscitationem Lazari describens, Iesum sursum oculos levasse asserit, et dixisse : " Pater, gratias ago tibi, quoniam audisti me. " +Alibi etiam idem dicit: "Haec locutus est Iesus, et sublevatis oculis in coelum dixit: Pater, clarifica filium tuum. " Si tunc igitur in coelum oculos levavit ad Patrem, quum ad corpus exanime animam Lazari revocavit, probabilius esse videtur, quod tunc oculos levaverit ad Patrem in coelum, quum panem et vinum in corpus et sanguinem proprium commutavit. Ceterum, sicut superius est expressum, quum in textu evangelico " novi testamenti " ponatur, hic interponitur : " et aeterni. " Nam vetus testamentum, quod hircorum et vitulorum fuit sanguine dedicatum, temporalia promittebat : novum autem, quod est Christi sanguine consecratum, promittit aeterna. Et ideo testamentum illud fuit vetus et transitorium; hoc autem novum est et aeternum. Vel, ut utamur alia ratione, unde novum, id est ultimum, esse describitur, inde aeternum, id est perpetuum, comprobatur. Novissimum etenim hominis testamentum immobile perseverat, quia testatoris obitu confirmatur; iuxta quod Apostolus testamentum in morte asserit confirmatum, alioquin non valet, dum vixerit qui testatur. Praeterea non solum scriptura, sed etiam promissio dicitur testamentum, iuxta quod Apostolus ipse scribit : " Ideo novi testamenti mediator est, ut repromissionem accipiant qui vocati sunt hereditatis aeternae. " Sic ergo intelligi debet quod in ipso canone reperitur : " Hic est enim sanguis meus novi et aeterni testamenti, " id est, novae ac aeternae promissionis, scilicet confirmator, sicut Dominus repromittit : " Qui manducat, " inquiens, " carnem meam, et sanguinem meum bibit, habet vitam aeternam. " Ex eo autem verbo, de quo movit tua fraternitas quaestionem, videlicet " mysterium fidei, " munimentum erroris quidam trahere putaverunt, dicentes, in sacramento altaris non esse corporis Christi et sanguinis veritatem, sed imaginem tantum, et speciem et figuram, pro eo, quod scriptura interdum commemorat, id, quod in altari suscipitur, esse sacramentum, et mysterium et exemplum. Sed tales ex eo laqueum erroris incurrunt, quod nec auctoritates scripturae convenienter intelligunt, nec sacramenta Dei suscipiunt reverenter, scripturas et virtutem Dei pariter nescientes. Si enim ideo, quia figura est sacramentum altaris, veritas esse negatur, ergo nec mors, nec resurrectio Christi, quum figura sit, veritas est credenda, siquidem mortem et resurrectionem Christi similitudinem et imaginem esse Apostolus manifestat : " Christus, " inquiens, " mortuus est pro delictis nostris, et resurrexit propter iustificationem nostram. " Apostolorum etiam princeps Petrus sic in epistola sua scribit : " Christus passus est pro nobis, relinquens vobis exemplum, ut sequamini vestigia eius. " Si ergo tam mors Christi quam eius resurrectio est exemplum, ut et nos, peccato mortui, iustitiae iam vivamus. Quare, si non fuit veritas, quia fuit exemplum : ergo nec vere mortuus fuit Christus, nec vere a mortuis resurrexit. Sed absit a fidelium cordibus error iste, quum Propheta de ipso testetur, quod vere languores nostros ipse tulit, et dolores nostros ipse portavit. Dicitur tamen mysterium fidei, quoniam et aliud ibi creditur quam cernatur, et aliud cernitur, quam credatur. Cernitur enim species panis et vini, et creditur veritas carnis et sanguinis Christi, ac virtus unitatis et caritatis. +Quod autem mysterium fidei dicitur in hoc loco, alibi secundum Ioannem spiritus et vita narratur. Nam spiritus est mysterium iuxta illud: "litera occidit, spiritus autem vivificat; "fides autem est vita, secundum quod legitur: "Iustus meus ex fide vivit, propter quod ipse Dominus dicit: Verba, quae locutus sum vobis, spiritus et vita sunt. " Distinguendum est tamen subtiliter inter tria, quae sunt in hoc sacramento discreta, videlicet formam visibilem, veritatem corporis, et virtutem spiritualem. Forma est panis et vini, veritas carnis et sanguinis, virtus unitatis et caritatis. Primum est sacramentum, et non res. Secundum est sacramentum et res. Tertium est res et non sacramentum. Sed primum est sacramentum geminae rei. Secundum autem est sacramentum unius, et alterius res exsistit. Tertium vero est res gemini sacramenti. Credimus igitur, quod formam verborum, sicut in canone reperitur, et a Christo Apostoli, et ab ipsis eorum acceperint successores. Nam, sicut superius est expressum, multa de verbis et factis dominicis ab Evangelistis omissa, et sermonibus suppleverunt Apostoli et operibus expresserunt. §. 1. Quaesivisti etiam, utrum aqua cum vino in sanguinem convertatur. Super hoc autem opiniones apud scholasticos variantur. Aliquibus enim videtur, quod, quum de latere Christi duo praecipua fluxerint sacramenta redemptionis in sanguine; ac regenerationis in aqua, in illa duo, vinum et aqua, quae commiscentur in calice, divina virtute mutantur, ut in hoc sacramento plene sit veritas et figura. Alii vero tenent, quod aqua cum vino transsubstantiatur in sanguinem, quum in vinum transeat mixta vino, licet physici contrarium asseverent, qui aquam a vino per artificium posse asserunt separari. Praeterea potest dici, quod aqua non transit in sanguinem, sed remanet prioris vini accidentibus circumfusa ita, quod vini saporem assumit. Quod inde convincitur, quia, si post calicis consecrationem aliud vinum mittatur in calicem, illud quidem non transit in sanguinem, nec sanguini commiscetur; sed accidentibus prioris vini commixtum corpori, quod sub eis latet, undique circumfunditur, non madidans circumfusum. Ipsa tamen accidentia vinum appositum videntur afficere, quia, si aqua pura fuerit apposita, vini saporem assumit. Contingit igitur accidentia mutare subiectum, sicut et subiectum contingit accidentia permutare; cedit quippe natura miraculo, et virtus supra consuetudinem operatur. Sed nec inconveniens creditur aut absurdum, si aqua in corpore Christi esse credatur, quum legatur de ipsius latere processisse. +Illud autem est nefarium opinari, quod quidam dicere praesumpserunt, aquam videlicet in phlegma converti. Nam et de latere Christi non aquam, sed humorem aquaticum mentiuntur exisse, non attendentes, quod de latere Christi duo fluxerunt sacramenta, et quod non baptizantur in phlegmate, sed in aqua, iuxta quod Dominus protestatur: "Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non intrabit in regnum Dei. " Verum inter opiniones praedictas illa probabilior iudicatur, quae asserit, aquam cum vino in sanguinem transmutari, ut expressius eluceat proprietas sacramenti. Nam quum aquae multae sint populi multi, iuxta quod alibi legitur : " Beati, qui seminatis super omnes aquas : " ideo vino aqua unitur, ut Christo populus adunetur. Per hoc enim, quod et suscepit ipse de nostro, et accepimus ipsi de suo, tam insolubili nexu coniungimur, ut, qui est unum cum Patre per ineffabilem unitatem, fiat unum nobiscum per admirabilem unionem, ac per hoc ipso communiter mediante cum Patre unum efficimur. " Pater, " inquit " sancte, serva eos, in nomine tuo quos dedisti mihi, ut sint unum, sicut et nos, non pro his autem roga tantum, sed pro eis, qui credituri sunt per verbum eorum in me, ut et ipsi in nobis unum sint, et mundus credat, quia tu me misisti. " §. 2. Tertio vero loco fraternitas tua requisivit, quis mutaverit, vel quando, aut quare fuerit mutatum, quod in secreta B. Leonis secundum antiquiores codices continetur, sic videlicet : " Annue nobis, Domine, ut animae famuli tui Leonis haec prosit oblatio : " quum in modernis sacramentariis habeatur : " Annue nobis, quaesumus, Domine, ut intercessione B. Leonis haec nobis prosit oblatio. " Super quo tibi taliter respondemus, quod, quis illud mutaverit, aut quando mutatum fuerit, ignoramus. Scimus tamen, qua fuerit occasione mutatum; quia, quum sacrae scripturae dicat auctoritas, quod iniuriam facit martyri qui orat pro martyre, idem est ratione consimili de aliis sanctis sentiendum, quia orationibus nostris non indigent pro eo, quod quum sint perfecte beati, omnia eis ad vota succedunt. Sed nos potius orationibus eorum indigemus, quos, quum miseri simus, undique mala nostra perturbant. Unde, quod in plerisque orationibus continetur : " prosit " videlicet " vel proficiat huic sancto vel illi talis oblatio ad gloriam et honorem, " ita sane debet intelligi, ut ad hoc prosit, quod magis ac magis a fidelibus glorificetur in terris, aut etiam honoretur, licet plerique reputent non indignum, sanctorum gloriam usque ad iudicium augmentari, et ideo ecclesiam interim sane posse augmentum glorificationis eorum optare. Verum, utrum in hoc articulo locum habeat illa distinctio, qua docetur, quod defunctorum alii sunt valde boni, alii sunt valde mali, alii mediocriter boni, alii mediocriter mali, unde suffragia, quae fiunt a fidelibus in ecclesia pro valde bonis, actiones sunt gratiarum, pro valde malis consolationes vivorum, expiationes vero pro mediocriter bonis, et propitiationes pro mediocriter malis, tua discretio investiget. De cetero tuis orationibus adiuvari petimus apud Deum. [Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Dec. Ao. V. 1202.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: One who simulates confecting and does not confect sins more gravely than one who confects while in mortal sin.

The same, to the Rectors of the Roman Fraternity.

Concerning a man (And below:) For you asked of us what is to be thought concerning an incautious priest who, when he knows that he is constituted in mortal sin, doubts on account of the consciousness of his offense whether to celebrate the solemnities of Masses, which he cannot omit on account of some necessity, and, being gravely constrained between two things, while he fears to carry out the divine ministry lest he offend the people awaiting it, and dreads to confect the body of Christ lest, receiving it unworthily, he eat and drink judgment to himself, after all the other circumstances have been performed, feigns that he celebrates Mass and, suppressing the words by which the body of Christ is confected, simply consumes only bread and wine, believing that through what he outwardly presents he satisfies the people, so that through what he intends he ought not provoke God. Therefore, since false remedies, which are more grave than true perils, are to be cast aside, although one who on account of consciousness of his crime considers himself unworthy ought reverently to abstain from a sacrament of this kind, and therefore sins gravely if he irreverently intrudes himself upon it, nevertheless he who has presumed fraudulently to simulate it in this way appears without doubt to offend more gravely: for the former, by avoiding a fault while he acts, falls into the hand of the merciful God alone; but the latter, by committing a fault while he avoids one, binds himself not only to God, whom he does not fear to mock, but also to the people, whom he deceives. [Given at Sora, on the tenth day before the Kalends of October, in the year of our pontificate. 1208.]

Gravius peccat qui simulat conficere, et non conficit, quam ille, qui conficit in mortali.

Idem Rectoribus Romanae fraternitatis.

De homine (Et infra:) Quaesivistis enim a nobis, quid de incauto presbytero videatur, qui, quum se sciat in mortali crimine constitutum, missarum solennia, quae non potest propter necessitatem quamlibet intermittere, propter sui facinoris conscientiam dubitat celebrare, arctatusque graviter e duobus, dum divinum exsequi ministerium metuit, ne populum illud exspectantem offendat, et corpus Christi perficere perhorrescit, ne sumens ipsum indigne iudicium sibi manducet et bibat, peractisque ceteris circumstantiis missam celebrare se fingit, et suppressis verbis, quibus conficitur corpus Christi, panem et vinum tantummodo pure sumit, ita credens, per id, quod praetendit, populo satisfacere, ut per hoc, quod intendit, Deum non debeat provocare. Quum ergo falsa sint abiicienda remedia, quae veris sunt periculis graviora, licet is, qui pro sui criminis conscientia reputat se indignum, ab huiusmodi sacramento reverenter debeat abstinere, ac ideo peccet graviter, si se ingerat irreverenter ad illud; gravius tamen procul dubio videtur offendere, qui sic fraudulenter illud praesumpserit simulare, quum ille culpam vitando, dum facit, in solius misericordis Dei manum incidat, iste vero culpam faciendo, dum vitat, non solum Deo, cui non veretur illudere, sed et populo, quem decipit, se adstringat. [Dat. Sorae X. Kal. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. 1208.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Here he disproves the opinion which holds that in the sacrament of the altar water is converted into phlegm, and proves that Christ was true God and true man, and that true water issued from his side.

The same, to the Bishop of Ferrara.

You assert that you read in a certain decretal epistle of ours that it is a wicked thing to opine what certain persons presumed to say, namely that in the sacrament of the Eucharist water is converted into phlegm. For they lie that also not water but watery humor issued from the side of Christ. Although you recount that great and authoritative men held this, whose opinion you have hitherto followed in speech and writings, nevertheless, since we hold the contrary, you are compelled to consent to our opinion. But you confess that the word of John the Apostle greatly moves you, saying: "There are three that give testimony on earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood, and these three are one"; although this last phrase is not found in many codices, which you say is thus expounded by all: that they are one, that is, testify concerning one and the same thing, namely concerning the humanity of Christ. Moreover, if that which flowed from the side of Christ was true water and not a humor of the human body, you do not see how it is proved through it that Christ is man. For the gloss upon that place has thus: "The spirit, that is, the human soul which he emitted in the Passion; the water and blood that flowed from the side of Christ," which could not happen if he did not have the true nature of flesh. Thus, therefore, you propose from both the text and the gloss that through that water it is proved that Christ is true man; and therefore, if it is said that it was not true water but the watery humor of the human body, the words of both the expositor and the Apostle appear intelligible to you. But if it is said that it was true water, as we believe and confess, you sufficiently understand neither the former nor the latter. Hence you humbly petitioned us that, for the general utility of readers and for removing the cloud from your heart, we deign to expound this sufficiently and clearly. Therefore, in response to the insistence of your supplication, we answer that certain persons said—but erred—that Christ was not true God but an adopted God, as the wretched Arians; others however said that Christ was not true man but a phantom, as the impious Manichaeans. But against heresies of this kind John the Apostle speaks in his epistle, saying: "There are three that give testimony in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one," intending through this to show that Christ is true God. "And there are three that give testimony on earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood," intending through this to show that Christ is true man. For two things are principally required for the being of a man, namely body and soul, from the conjunction of which a true man subsists. Moreover, through the fact that at the moment of death Christ, having inclined his head, delivered up the spirit, concerning which he had cried with a great voice, "Father, into your hands I commend my spirit," it is manifestly proved that he had a spirit, not only vital breath but also a rational soul, concerning which he had foretold: "My soul is sorrowful even unto death," and: "I have power to lay down my soul and again to take it up." Moreover, through the fact that one of the soldiers opened his side with a lance and immediately blood and water came out, it is openly proved that Christ had a true body. For neither blood nor water could have issued from a phantasmal body; hence "he who saw it indeed furnished testimony, and his testimony is true, because there are three that give testimony on earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood." Namely, that Christ is true man, subsisting from a rational soul and human flesh, is proved from the fact that he emitted the vital spirit; and it is proved concerning the true body because blood and water issued from it, for a rational soul could vivify only a human body, from which things true man consists. Furthermore, just as there was true spirit and true blood, so without doubt there was true water, since Christ is truth and every falsehood is altogether alien to truth. For if what issued from the side of the Savior had not been water but phlegm, he who saw and furnished testimony to the truth would assuredly have said not "water" but "phlegm." Nor would the true sacrament of regeneration have been shown in this, since through the sacrament of baptism we are regenerated not in phlegm but in water. Nor could it be proved by a true argument through this that in the sacrament of the Eucharist water is to be mixed with wine, if not water but phlegm had flowed with the blood from the side of Christ. Nor would the figure that preceded concerning this matter in the Old Testament have been true, when namely Moses struck the rock with a rod and from it indeed not phlegm but water flowed. It remains, therefore, that whatever the nature of that water—whether natural or miraculous, whether newly created by divine power or resolved in some part from the component things—it was without doubt true water, since both a composite can naturally be resolved into its components and an elemented thing into the elements, just as his sweat was true, like drops of blood running down upon the earth. Moreover, since four elements concur in the composition of the human body, namely earth and water, air and fire, and four humors similar to them concur in the vegetation of the same body, namely blood and yellow bile, phlegm, and black bile, in order to demonstrate more expressly the truth of the human body, John expressed one of the former and one of the latter, and from the former and the latter especially those that were more congruent with the mystery: from the elements, water, and from the humors, blood; in which two especially shine forth the two sacraments, namely of redemption and regeneration. [Given on the third day before the Nones of March, in the twelfth year. 1209.]

> Hic improbat opinionem, quae habet, quod in sacramento altaris aqua convertatur in phlegma, et probat, Christum fuisse verum Deum et verum hominem, et quod de ipsius latere exivit vera aqua.
>
> Idem Ferrariensi Episcopo.
>
> In quadam nostra decretali epistola asseris te legisse, illud esse nefarium opinari, quod quidam dicere praesumpserunt, in sacramento videlicet eucharistiae aquam in phlegma converti. Nam et de latere Christi non aquam, sed humorem aquaticum mentiuntur exisse. +Licet autem hoc magnos et authenticos viros sensisse recenseas, quorum opinionem dictis et scriptis hactenus es secutus, ex quo tamen in contrarium nos sentimus, nostrae compelleris sententiae consentire. Sed verbum Ioannis Apostoli te multum movere fateris, dicentis: "Tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in terra, spiritus, aqua et sanguis, et hi tres unum sunt; "quamvis hoc ultimum in plerisque codicibus minime habeatur, quod dicis ab omnibus sic exponi, illos videlicet esse unum, id est de una et eadem re, scilicet de humanitate Christi testari. Porro si vera fuit aqua, quae fluxit de latere Christi, et non humani corporis humor, qualiter per illam probetur, quod Christus sit homo, non vides. Glossa namque super illum locum sic habet: "Spiritus, id est humana anima, quam emisit in passione; aqua et sanguis, quae fluxerunt de latere Christi, "quod fieri non posset, si non haberet veram carnis naturam. Sic ergo tam ex textu quam ex glossa proponis, per illam aquam probari, quod Christus sit verus homo, et ideo, si dicatur, quod illa non exstitit vera aqua, sed aquaticus humani corporis humor, tam expositoris quam Apostoli verba intelligibilia tibi esse videntur. Sed dicto, quod fuerit vera aqua, sicut nos credimus et fatemur, nec ista, nec illa sufficienter intelligis. Unde nobis humiliter supplicasti, quatenus ad generalem utilitatem legentium, et nebulam de tuo corde tollendam, sufficienter et evidenter hoc exponere dignaremur. Nos igitur ad tuae supplicationis instantiam respondemus, quod quidam dixerunt, sed erraverunt, Christum non fuisse verum Deum, sed adoptivum, ut miseri Arriani; alii vero Christum non fuisse verum hominem, sed phantasticum, ut impii Manichaei. Sed adversus huiusmodi haereses Ioannes Apostolus in epistola sua loquitur, dicens : " Tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in coelo, Pater, verbum, et Spiritus sanctus, et hi tres unum sunt : " per hoc intendens ostendere, quod Christus sit verus Deus. " Et tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in terra, spiritus, aqua et sanguis; " per hoc intendens ostendere, quod Christus sit verus homo. Nam ad esse hominis duo principaliter exiguntur, videlicet corpus et anima, ex quorum coniunctione verus homo subsistit. Per hoc autem, quod in articulo mortis Christus inclinato capite tradidit spiritum, de quo voce magna clamaverat : " Pater, in manus tuas commendo spiritum meum ", manifeste probatur, quod ipse spiritum habebat, non solum flatum vitalem, sed animam quoque rationalem, de qua praedixerat : " Tristis est anima mea usque ad mortem, " et : " Potestatem habeo ponendi animam meam, et iterum sumendi eam. " Per hoc autem, quod unus militum lancea latus eius aperuit, et continuo sanguis exivit et aqua, probatur aperte, quod Christus verum corpus habebat. Nam de phantastico corpore, nec sanguis, nec aqua potuisset exire, unde " ille, qui vidit, testimonium quidem perhibuit, et testimonium eius est verum, quia tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in terra, spiritus, aqua et sanguis. " Quod videlicet Christus sit verus homo, ex anima rationali et humana carne subsistens, probatur ex eo, quod spiritum vitalem emisit; et de vero corpore probatur, quoniam ex eo sanguis exivit et aqua; rationalis quippe anima non posset vivificare, nisi corpus humanum, ex quibus verus homo consistit. Ceterum sicut fuit verus spiritus et verus sanguis, ita procul dubio vera aqua, quum Christus sit veritas, et a veritate omnis fallacia sit penitus aliena. Nam si non fuisset aqua, sed phlegma, quod de latere Salvatoris exivit, ille, qui vidit, et testimonium veritati perhibuit, profecto non " aquam, " sed " phlegma " dixisset. Nec in hoc verum regenerationis sacramentum fuisset ostensum, quum per sacramentum baptismi non regeneremur in phlegmate, sed in aqua. Neque per hoc posset vero argumento probari, quod in sacramento eucharistiae admiscenda sit aqua vino, si de latere Christi non aqua, sed phlegma cum sanguine profluxisset. Sed nec vera fuisset figura, quae super hac re praecessit in veteri testamento, quando videlicet Moyses virga percussit silicem, et ex ea quidem non phlegma, sed aqua manavit. Restat igitur, ut, qualiscunque fuerit illa aqua, sive naturalis sive miraculosa, sive de novo divina virtute creata, sive de componentibus ex parte aliqua resoluta, procul dubio vera fuit; quum naturaliter possit et compositum in componentia, et elementatum in elementa resolvi, quemadmodum verus exstitit sudor ipsius, sicut guttae sanguinis decurrentis in terram. Quum autem ad compositionem humani corporis quatuor elementa concurrant, videlicet terra et aqua, aer et ignis, et ad vegetationem eiusdem corporis quatuor humores illis consimiles conveniant, videlicet sanguis et cholera, phlegma et melancholia, ut veritatem humani corporis expressius demonstraret, unum ex illis et unum ex istis Ioannes expressit, illaque potius ex illis et ex istis, quae magis mysterio congruebant, ex elementis aquam, et ex humoribus sanguinem; in quibus duobus duo maxime sacramenta, redemptionis videlicet et regenerationis, elucent. [Dat. III. Non. Mart. Ao. XII. 1209.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It commands prelates and clerics, in virtue of obedience, to celebrate the nocturnal and diurnal office diligently and devoutly.

The same, in the general council.

We report with grief that not only certain lesser clerics but even some prelates of churches spend almost half the night on excessive banquets and unlawful tales, to be silent concerning other things, and, leaving the remainder to sleep, are scarcely awakened at the diurnal song of the birds, running through Matins everywhere with continual cutting-short. There are also others who scarcely celebrate the solemnities of Masses four times a year and, what is worse, disdain to be present. And if sometimes they are present while these are celebrated, fleeing the silence of the choir, they attend outside to conversations of laymen; and while they pour out their hearing upon improper discourses, they do not extend attentive ears to divine things. We therefore entirely prohibit these and similar things under penalty of suspension, strictly commanding in virtue of obedience that they diligently and devoutly celebrate alike the nocturnal and diurnal divine office, so far as God shall have granted them.

> Praecipit praelatis et clericis in virtute obedientiae, ut nocturnum officium et diurnum studiose celebrent et devote.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Dolentes referimus, quod non solum quidam minores clerici, verum etiam aliqui ecclesiarum praelati, circa commessationes superfluas et fabulationes illicitas, ut de aliis taceamus, fere medietatem noctis expendunt, et somno residuum relinquentes, vix ad diurnum concentum avium excitantur, transcurrendo undique continua syncopa matutinum. Sunt et alii, qui missarum solennia vix celebrant quater in anno, et, quod deterius est, interesse contemnunt. Et si quando, dum haec celebrantur, intersint, chori silentium fugientes intendunt exterius collocutionibus laicorum, dumque auditum ad indebitos sermones effundunt, aures intentas non porrigunt ad divina. Haec igitur et similia sub poena suspensionis penitus inhibemus, districte praecipientes in virtute obedientiae, ut divinum officium nocturnum pariter et diurnum, quantum eis Deus dederit, studiose celebrent pariter et devote.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: The Eucharist ought to be kept cleanly, and at its elevation and carrying the people ought to incline themselves; and when it is carried to a sick person, it ought to be carried in decent attire and with a light; but transgressors are to be gravely punished.

Honorius III.

Indeed, since formerly [a golden vessel full of manna, prefiguring the body of Christ's divinity, was placed in the ark of the covenant covered with gold within the holy of holies so that it might be kept cleanly in a venerable place, we grieve and are exceedingly saddened that in very many provinces priests, contemning the canonical sanctions, indeed the divine judgment, guard the sacred Eucharist carelessly and handle it uncleanly and indevoutly, as though they neither feared the Creator, loved the Re-creator, nor dreaded the Judge of all, although the Apostle threatens terribly that one who has trampled upon the Son of God, regarded the blood of the testament as polluted, or done insult to the Spirit of grace merits worse punishments than a transgressor of the Mosaic law, who was punished by a sentence of death.] Lest [therefore] henceforth divine indignation blaze more gravely against the indevout on account of the carelessness of priests, we command by strict precept that the Eucharist always be placed honorably by priests in a separate place, clean also and sealed, and be preserved devoutly and faithfully. Moreover, let every priest frequently teach his people that, when the saving host is elevated in the celebration of Masses, each person is reverently to incline himself, doing the same when the priest carries it to a sick person. Let him carry it in decent attire, with a clean veil placed over it, and carry it openly and honorably before his breast with every reverence and fear, with a light nevertheless always preceding, since it is the brightness of eternal light, so that from this faith and devotion may be increased among all. But let prelates not defer gravely to punish transgressors of a mandate of this kind if they themselves wish to escape divine and our vengeance. But you are to cause the aforesaid things to be observed in such a way that you do not become participants in the vengeance, but in the crown. [Given at Viterbo, on the tenth day before the Kalends of December, in the fourth year of our pontificate. 1219.]

> Eucharistia debet munde servari, et in eius elevatione et delatione populus debet se inclinare; et, quum defertur ad infirmum, debet deferri in decenti habitu et cum lumine; transgressores vero graviter sunt puniendi.
>
> Honorius III.
>
> Sane, quum olim +[vas aureum, manna plenum, Christi corpus deitatem praefigurans, in arca foederis auro tecta infra sancta sanctorum fuerit collocatum, ut munde in loco venerabili servaretur, dolemus plurimum et tristamur, quod in plerisque provinciis sacerdotes sanctiones canonicas, immo divinum iudicium contemnentes, sacram eucharistiam incaute custodiunt, et immunde ac indevote contrectant, quasi nec creatorem timeant, vel recreatorem diligant, aut iudicem omnium expavescant, quamquam Apostolus terribiler comminetur, deteriora illum mereri supplicia, qui filium Dei conculcaverit, vel sanguinem testamenti pollutum duxerit, aut spiritui gratiae contumeliam fecerit, quam transgressorem legis Mosaicae, qui mortis sententia plectebatur.] Ne [igitur] de cetero propter incuriam sacerdotum in indevotos divina indignatio gravius exardescat, districte praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus a sacerdotibus eucharistia in loco singulari, mundo etiam et signato semper honorifice collocata, devote ac fideliter conservetur. Sacerdos vero quilibet frequenter doceat plebem suam, ut, quum in celebratione missarum elevatur hostia salutaris, quilibet se reverenter inclinet, idem faciens, quum eam defert presbyter ad infirmum. Quam in decenti habitu superposito mundo velamine ferat, et referat manifeste ac honorifice ante pectus cum omni reverentia et timore, semper tamen lumine praecedente, quum sit candor lucis aeternae, ut ex hoc apud omnes fides et devotio augeatur. Praelati autem huiusmodi mandati graviter punire non differant transgressores, si et ipsi divinam et nostram volunt effugere ultionem. Vos autem sic observari faciatis praedicta, quod non efficiamini vindictae participes, sed coronae. [Dat. Viterbii X. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. IV. 1219.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: In collegiate churches two Masses ought to be celebrated collegially, one for the dead, the other according to the requirement of the day, as for a feast if a feast occurs, or for the feria if it is a feria.

The same, to All Prelates of Churches.

Since the creature does not have that which he may render to the Creator according to his merits (And below:), since, therefore, the Gallican Church, through the grace of God placed as a lamp upon a lampstand, shines upon others by example, who, seeing its good works, glorify the heavenly Father, lest, which may it not be, it be overshadowed by the darkness of so great a negligence and consequently overshadow others, we have considered that your universality should be requested and admonished, and through apostolic writings we command you that, all and each providently attending that to serve God is to reign, you permit no torpor of negligence to creep upon you, as hitherto, by which you might fail to celebrate conventually the solemnities of Masses both for anniversaries of the dead and for a feast or feria according to the congruence of the times, and cause them to be celebrated conventually, so that thus, as though praying without interruption, you may merit to be heard by him who is present to all who invoke his name in truth. [Given at Anagni, on the fourth day before the Nones of July. 1217.]

> In ecclesiis collegiatis debent celebrari duae missae collegialiter, una pro defunctis, alia secundum exigentiam diei, ut pro festo, si festum occurrit, vel pro feria, si feria.
>
> Idem universis ecclesiarum Praelatis.
>
> Quum creatura non habeat, quid pro meritis respondeat creatori (Et infra:) Quum igitur ecclesia Gallicana, per Dei gratiam tanquam lucerna super candelabrum posita, luceat aliis per exemplum, qui videntes opera eius bona glorificant patrem coelestem, ne, quod absit, tantae negligentiae tenebris obumbretur, et alias consequenter obumbret: universitatem vestram rogandam duximus et monendam, per apostolica scripta vobis Mandamus, quatenus universi et singuli provide attendentes, quod servire Deo regnare est, nullum in vos torporem negligentiae, sicut hactenus, obrepere permittatis, quo minus et pro anniversariis defunctorum, et pro festo vel feria secundum temporum congruentiam, missarum solennia conventualiter celebretis, et faciatis conventualiter celebrari, ut sic quodammodo sine intermissione orantis ab eo mereamini exaudiri, qui adest omnibus in veritate invocantibus nomen suum. [*Dat. Anagniae IV. Non. Iul. * 1217.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: On the day of the Lord's Supper a bishop ought to celebrate Mass and confect chrism only in his own church.

The same.

From your report we learned that on the day of the Lord's Supper you are held by ancient custom to confect chrism in the church of Siponto; but, when on the morning of that same day you approach the church of Monte Gargano so that there, as is customary, you may receive the pilgrims, the clergy and people of that place compel you to celebrate Mass in that church of Monte Gargano before you return to Siponto, concerning which you implored our counsel and that of the Apostolic See. But since chrism is confected on that day within the solemnities of Masses, and it suffices for any priest, whatever dignity in which he shines, to celebrate one Mass a day—for he is also very happy who worthily celebrates one—we command your fraternity that on the day of the Lord's Supper you endeavor to celebrate the solemnities of Masses only in the church of Siponto, in which you are bound to confect chrism.

> In die coenae Domini episcopus tantum in sua ecclesia debet missam celebrare et chrisma conficere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Te referente +didicimus, quod in die coenae Domini de antiqua teneris consuetudine chrisma conficere in ecclesia Sipontina, sed, quum mane diei eiusdem ad Garganicam ecclesiam accedas, ut ibi, prout moris est, recipias peregrinos, ipsius loci clerus et populus celebrare missam in eadem ecclesia Garganica, priusquam ad Sipontinam redeas, te compellunt, super quo nostrum et apostolicae sedis consilium implorasti. Quum autem chrisma eo die intra missarum conficiatur solennia, et cuilibet sacerdoti, quacunque dignitate praefulgeat, unam in die celebrare missam sufficiat, (nam et valde est felix, qui celebrat digne unam) : fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus die coenae Domini in ecclesia Sipontina duntaxat, in qua teneris chrisma conficere, missarum studeas solennia celebrare.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: In the sacrifice of the altar more wine than water is to be placed.

The same, to the Archbishop of Ablas.

A very pernicious abuse, as we have heard, has become established in your regions, namely, that a greater quantity of water than of wine is placed in the sacrifice, although according to the reasonable custom of the universal Church more wine than water is to be placed in it. Therefore we command your fraternity [through apostolic writings] that you do not do this henceforth or permit it to be done in your province. [Given on the Ides of December, in the fifth year. 1220.]

> In sacrificio altaris plus de vino quam de aqua ponendum est.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Ablasensi.
>
> Perniciosus valde, sicut audivimus, in tuis partibus inolevit abusus, videlicet, quod in maiori quantitate de aqua ponitur in sacrificio, quam de vino, quum secundum rationabilem consuetudinem ecclesiae generalis plus in ipso sit de vino quam de aqua ponendum. Ideoque fraternitati tuae [per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus id non de cetero facias, nec in tua provincia fieri patiaris. [Dat. Id. Decemb. Ao. V. 1220.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A priest who sacrifices without water and fire, or with leavened bread or in a wooden vessel, is deposed from office and benefice.

The same, to the Bishop of Brescia.

We received your letters, containing that, when you inquired concerning the excesses of Master Maurus, priest of the church of Saint Bridget of Brescia, according to the duty of the pastoral office, he confessed that, when on a certain day he had neither host nor chalice, he presumed to celebrate the solemnities of Masses in leavened bread and in a wooden cup while the people stood by. On this account you subjected him to perpetual interdict, counseling that he change his life for the better in some regular church. But afterward, when he petitioned before our venerable brother the Bishop of Ostia, then legate of the Apostolic See, that he act mercifully with him, the same bishop, restoring the aforesaid priest to the celebration of divine things, delegated the cause concerning the suspension of the benefice to the provosts of Saint Salvator and Saint Luke of Brescia, who restored him to the benefice. But afterward, having returned from the regions beyond the sea, and understanding again that the aforesaid church was being injured in many ways through the malice of the said priest, you, repeating the office of inquiry, discovered from his confessions that the same man sacrificed without fire and water, on account of which you petitioned to be instructed by our response what is to be done concerning him. Therefore, since he is proved to have sinned either from manifest malice or from excessive folly, we command your fraternity that, if truth supports the premises, you deprive him perpetually of office and benefice, the obstacle of appeal having been removed.

> Ab officio et beneficio deponitur presbyter, qui sine aqua et igne, vel in pane fermentato vel vase ligneo sacrificat.
>
> Idem Episcopo Brixiensi.
>
> Literas tuas recepimus, continentes, quod, quum super excessibus magistri Mauri presbyteri ecclesiae sanctae Brigidae Brixiensis iuxta debitum officii pastoralis inquireres, confessus est, quod, quum quadam die hostiam et calicem non haberet, in pane fermentato et in scypho ligneo adstante populo missarum solennia celebrare praesumpsit. +Quare ipsum supposuisti perpetuo interdicto, consulens, ut in aliqua ecclesia regulari mutaret in melius vitam suam. Postmodum autem, illo coram venerabili fratre nostro Hostiensi episcopo, tunc apostolicae sedis legato, ut secum misericorditer ageret, supplicante, idem, ad celebrationem divinorum presbyterum restituens memoratum, super suspensione beneficii causam S. Salvatoris et S. Lucae praepositis Brixiensibus delegavit, qui ad beneficium restituerunt eundem. Deinde vero reversus de partibus transmarinis, Intellecto iterum, quod praedicta ecclesia per malitiam dicti presbyteri multipliciter laedebatur, inquisitionis officium iterans, ex eius confessionibus invenisti, quod idem sine igne sacrificabat et aqua, +quare, quid de ipso agendum sit, nostro petiisti edoceri responso. Quum igitur vel ex aperta malitia, vel ex nimia desipientia peccasse probetur, fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus, si praemissis veritas suffragatur, officio et beneficio sublato appellationis obstaculo perpetuo ipsum prives.

Title XLII: On Baptism and Its Effect

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Although a boy has been immersed three times in water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, if it has not been said, "I baptize you in the name of the Father, etc.," he has not been baptized.

Alexander III.

If someone indeed has immersed a boy three times in water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, amen, and has not said: "I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, amen," the boy has not been baptized.

DE BAPTISMO ET EIUS EFFECTU.

Licet puer sit ter mersus in aqua in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, si non sit dictum: " Ego te baptizo in nomine Patris, etc., " non est baptizatus.

Alexander III.

Si quis sane puerum ter in aqua immerserit in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, amen, et non dixerit : " Ego baptizo te in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, amen : " non est puer baptizatus.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If it is probably doubted whether someone has been baptized, he can be baptized with the form expressed here.

The same.

Those concerning whom there is doubt whether they have been baptized are baptized after these words have been set forth: "If you are baptized, I do not baptize you; but, if you have not yet been baptized, I baptize you, etc."

Si probabiliter dubitatur, an quis fuerit baptizatus, potest baptizari forma hic expressa.

Idem.

De quibus dubium est, an baptizati fuerint, baptizantur his verbis praemissis : " Si baptizatus es, non te baptizo, sed, si nondum baptizatus es, ego te baptizo, etc. "

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: The sacrament of baptism is usefully conferred upon little children although they neither believe nor understand, and original sin is remitted to them. This is what it says as far as § "But." — (But etc.:) Original sin, which is contracted without consent, is remitted in baptism even to one not consenting, as to little children; it is otherwise concerning actual sin, because, just as it is not committed without consent, so it is not remitted. This is what it says as far as § "But it is still." Abbas. — (But it is still:) Although original sin is forgiven in baptism to little children, who nevertheless cannot consent, yet in adults who are insane or sleeping, who do not consent to baptism, actual sin is not forgiven, and likewise not even original sin. This is what it says. — (Likewise etc.:) Insane or sleeping persons who have been baptized, if before insanity or sleep they wished to be baptized, receive the character; otherwise it is otherwise; but those coerced receive it causatively. This is what it says as far as the end.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Arles.

He will understand that the greater causes of the Church, especially those touching articles of faith, are to be referred to the see of Peter who notes that, when the Lord asked him whom the disciples said that he was, he answered: "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God," and that the Lord prayed for him that his faith might not fail. You therefore ask us to respond to certain questions that heretics had raised against Catholics. For they assert that baptism is conferred uselessly upon little children, which they strive to prove both by reason and by authority, adducing first and principally that, since, according to the word of James the Apostle, saying in his epistle, "Charity covers a multitude of sins," and according to that testimony of the Truth in the Gospel concerning the sinful woman who had washed his feet, declaring, "Many sins are forgiven her, because she loved much," crimes are forgiven only through charity and in charity, sin is not forgiven in baptism to little children, who neither perceive nor consent and do not have charity, which is infused only into those who perceive and consent. And thus baptism does not profit them, because it is not to be conferred upon such persons. In the Gospel also it is read: "He who has believed and has been baptized will be saved; but he who has not believed will be condemned"; whence little children, whether or not they have been baptized, will be condemned, as being unbelievers.

To this, however, we respond in this manner: baptism succeeded circumcision. For far be it from us to fall into that condemned heresy which wrongly affirmed that the law together with the Gospel, and circumcision together with baptism, must be observed, because according to the Apostle, saying to the Galatians: "If you are circumcised, Christ profits you nothing." Since therefore circumcision was conferred by command of the Lord upon adults as well as little children, lest baptism, which succeeded in its place and nevertheless exists more generally, since both males and females are baptized, should seem to have a lesser effect, it must be conferred upon adults as well as little children. For just as formerly, without any distinction, the Mosaic law proclaimed: "The soul whose flesh of the foreskin has not been circumcised shall perish from his people," so now the evangelical voice thunders without distinction: "Unless one has been reborn from water and the Holy Spirit, he shall not enter the kingdom of God," excluding from this generality neither sex nor age. Whence, just as the soul of the circumcised did not perish from his people, so he who has been reborn from water and the Holy Spirit will obtain entrance into the kingdom of heaven.

Nevertheless, it must carefully be noted how much more baptism confers upon Christians today than circumcision once conferred upon the Jews. At the end of the aforesaid authority adduced from the Old Law it was said, "shall perish from his people"; but in the evangelical authority it was added, "shall not enter the kingdom of God"; because, although original guilt was remitted through the mystery of circumcision and the danger of damnation was avoided, nevertheless there was no arrival at the kingdom of heaven, which until the death of Christ was closed to all. But through the sacrament of baptism, made red with the blood of Christ, guilt is remitted, danger is avoided, and the kingdom of heaven is also reached, the gate of which the blood of Christ mercifully reopened to his faithful. For far be it that all little children should perish, so great a multitude of whom dies daily, without the merciful God, who wishes no one to perish, having provided some remedy for their salvation also.

Moreover, from the force of the letter it is sufficiently clear that the aforesaid authorities are to be understood only of adults, who have a multitude of sins, since they cannot be understood of little children, who are held only by original sin. Similarly that other authority is to be resolved: "He who has believed and has been baptized, etc.," since little children cannot believe, but adults can. And for this reason the whole authority is to be understood here only of adults, and the first clause is not to be referred to some and the second to others; although some concede that little children believe, not through the use but through the habit of faith that they receive in baptism, just as many other words according to common usage are referred not to act but to aptitude.

But what the objectors adduce—that faith or charity and the other virtues are not infused into little children, as persons not consenting—is not conceded absolutely by very many; since on this account a question is recounted among doctors of theology, some asserting that through the virtue of baptism guilt indeed is remitted to little children, but grace is not conferred, while others say that sin both is forgiven and the virtues are infused into those having them as to habit, not as to use, until they reach adult age.

But certain persons believe that from this solution they have found a way to other questions, arguing from the fact that we say original sin is forgiven to little children in baptism that, by a similar reason, sin is also forgiven to adults who are sleeping or insane if they are baptized. For since neither then perceives or consents, they say that the same judgment must be made in similar cases. Here, however, we say that a distinction must be made, because sin is twofold, namely original and actual: original, which is contracted without consent, and actual, which is committed with consent. Original sin, therefore, which is contracted without consent, is by the power of the sacrament remitted without consent; but actual sin, which is contracted with consent, is by no means remitted without consent.

But it is still asked why at least original sin is not forgiven in baptism to the insane and the sleeping, as it is to little children. To this it is to be answered in this manner: the Lord, who made the whole man sound on the Sabbath, does not know a work of imperfection, and for this reason forgives sins not in part but in whole. Furthermore, the punishment of original sin is deprivation of the vision of God; but the punishment of actual sin is the torment of perpetual Gehenna. Whence, if the first were forgiven to someone while the other was not forgiven, such a person would not be deprived of the vision of God on account of original sin forgiven, and would be tormented perpetually in Gehenna on account of the guilt of actual crime. But these things, as incompatible, by no means allow one another; indeed, they are mutually opposed.

Likewise, however, it is asked whether at least the character of the sacrament is impressed in baptism upon such sleeping and insane persons, so that, when awakened from sleep or freed from sickness, they are not to be baptized again. Now there are some who say that the sacraments which obtain their effect of themselves, such as baptism and order and other similar things, are conferred not only upon sleeping and insane persons but even upon the unwilling and contradicting, although not as to the reality, yet as to the character, since not only little children, who do not consent, but also the deceitful, who, although not in mouth, nevertheless dissent in heart, receive the sacrament.

But it is objected against such persons that those who had been immersed unwilling and resisting would at least by reason of the sacrament pertain to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, whence they would reasonably have to be compelled to observe the rule of the Christian faith. But it is contrary to the Christian religion that anyone always unwilling and wholly contradicting should be compelled to receive and observe Christianity. For this reason others distinguish, not absurdly, between one unwilling person and another unwilling person, one coerced person and another coerced person: that he who is violently drawn by terrors and punishments, and, lest he incur loss, receives the sacrament of baptism, such a one indeed, just like him who approaches baptism deceitfully, receives the impressed character of Christianity, and he, as one conditionally willing, although absolutely he does not will, is [nevertheless] to be compelled to the observance of the Christian faith.

In this case that decree of the Council of Toledo is to be understood, where it is said that those who long since were coerced to Christianity, as was done in the times of the most religious prince Sisebut, because it is now established that they have been associated with the divine sacraments, have received the grace of baptism, have been anointed with chrism, and have become participants in the body of the Lord, must also be compelled to hold the faith which they received by necessity, lest the name of the Lord be blasphemed and the faith which they received be held cheap and contemptible.

But he who never consents and wholly contradicts receives neither the reality nor the character of the sacrament, because expressly to contradict is more than not to consent at all; just as neither does he incur the mark of any guilt who, wholly contradicting and protesting, is violently compelled to burn incense to idols. But sleeping and insane persons, if, before they incurred insanity or fell asleep, they persisted in contradiction, because in them the purpose of contradiction is understood to endure, do not receive the character of the sacrament even if they have been immersed thus. But it is otherwise if they formerly existed as catechumens and had the purpose of being baptized; whence the Church has been accustomed to baptize such persons at the point of necessity. Therefore the sacramental operation then impresses the character when it does not find the obstacle of a contrary will standing against it.

> Sacramentum baptismi utiliter confertur parvulis licet non credant nec intelligant, et remittitur eis peccatum originale. H. d. usque ad §. Verum. — (Verum etc.:) Originale peccatum, quod sine consensu contrahitur, remittitur in baptismo etiam non consentienti, ut parvulis; secus de actuali, quia, sicut non committitur sine consensu, ita non relaxatur. Hoc dicit usque ad §. Sed adhuc. Abbas. — (Sed adhuc:) Licet in baptismo dimittatur originale peccatum parvulis, qui tamen consentire non possunt, in adultis tamen, amentibus vel dormientibus, qui non consentiunt baptismo, non dimittitur actuale, et item etiam nec originale. H. d. - (Item etc.:) Amentes vel dormientes baptizati, si ante dementiam vel dormitionem baptizari volebant, characterem suscipiunt, alias secus; coacti vero causative suscipiunt. H. d. usque ad finem.

Innocentius III. Arelatensi Archiepiscopo.

Maiores ecclesiae causas, praesertim articulos fidei contingentes, ad Petri sedem referendas intelliget qui eum quaerenti Domino, quem discipuli dicerent ipsum esse, respondisse notabit : " Tu es Christus filius Dei vivi, " et pro eo Dominum exorasse, ne deficiat fides eius. Quibusdam igitur quaestionibus, quas contra catholicos haeretici moverant, nos postulas respondere. Asserunt enim, parvulis inutiliter baptisma conferri, quod nituntur tam ratione quam auctoritate probare, illud primo et praecipue inducentes, quod, quum secundum verbum Iacobi Apostoli, dicentis in epistola sua : " Caritas operit multitudinem peccatorum, " et iuxta illud testimonium veritatis in evangelio de peccatrice, quae ipsius pedes laverat, perhibentis : " Dimissa sunt ei peccata multa, quoniam dilexit multum : " non nisi per caritatem et in caritate crimina dimittantur, parvulis, qui nec sentiunt, nec consentiunt, et caritatem non habent, quae sentientibus et consentientibus tantum infunditur, peccatum non dimittitur in baptismo. +Et sic eis baptisma non confert, quia non est talibus conferendum. In evangelio quoque legitur: "Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit, salvus erit, qui autem non crediderit, condemnabitur; unde parvuli, sive fuerint sive non fuerint baptizati, condemnabuntur, utpote non credentes. " Ad id autem taliter respondemus, quod baptisma circumcisioni successit. Absit enim, ut in illam damnatam haeresim incidamus, quae perperam affirmabat, legem cum evangelio, et circumcisionem cum baptismo servandam, quoniam secundum Apostolum, dicentem ad Galatas : " Si circumcidimini, Christus vobis nihil prodest. " Quum ergo circumcisio tam adultis quam parvulis ex praecepto Domini conferretur, ne baptismus, qui successit in loco ipsius, et generalior tamen exsistit, quum tam viri quam feminae baptizentur, minoris videatur effectus, tam adultis, quam parvulis est conferendus. Sicut enim olim sine distinctione qualibet Mosaica lex clamabat : " Anima, cuius praeputii caro circumcisa non fuerit, peribit de populo suo, " ita nunc indistincte vox intonat evangelica : " Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non intrabit in regnum Dei; " ab hac generalitate nec sexum, nec aetatem excludens. Unde, sicut anima circumcisi de populo suo non peribat, sic, qui ex aqua fuerit et Spiritu sancto renatus, regni coelorum introitum obtinebit. Caute tamen notandum est, quantum plus baptismus hodie conferat Christianis, quam quondam Iudaeis circumcisio contulisset, dictum est in fine praedictae auctoritatis inductae de veteri lege : " peribit de populo suo : " in evangelica vero auctoritate subiunctum est; " non intrabit in regnum Dei : " quoniam, etsi originalis culpa remittebatur per circumcisionis mysterium, et damnationis periculum vitabatur, non tamen perveniebatur ad regnum coelorum, quod usque ad mortem Christi fuit omnibus obseratum; sed per sacramentum baptismi Christi sanguine rubricati culpa remittitur, vitatur periculum, et ad regnum coelorum etiam pervenitur, cuius ianuam Christi sanguis fidelibus suis misericorditer reseravit. Absit enim, ut universi parvuli pereant, quorum quotidie tanta multitudo moritur, quin et ipsis misericors Deus, qui neminem vult perire, aliquod remedium procuraverit ad salutem. Ceterum ex vi literae satis patet, praedictas auctoritates intelligendas esse tantummodo de adultis, qui habent multitudinem peccatorum; quum de parvulis non possit intelligi, qui peccato tantum originali tenentur. Similiter et illa alia auctoritas est solvenda : " Qui crediderit, et baptizatus fuerit etc., " quum non possint credere parvuli, sed adulti. Et ob hoc tota auctoritas hic intelligenda est solummodo de adultis, nec ad alios prima, et ad alios secunda clausula referatur; quamvis nonnulli concedant, quod parvuli credunt non per usum, sed per habitum fidei, quem suscipiunt in baptismo, sicut et alia multa verba secundum communem usum loquendi non ad actum, sed ad aptitudinem referuntur. Illud vero, quod opponentes inducunt, fidem aut caritatem, aliasque virtutes parvulis, utpote non consentientibus, non infundi, a plerisque non conceditur absolute; quum propter hoc inter doctores theologos quaestio referatur, aliis asserentibus, per virtutem baptismi parvulis quidem culpam remitti, sed gratiam non conferri; nonnullis vero dicentibus, et dimitti peccatum, et virtutes infundi habentibus illas quoad habitum, non quoad usum, donec perveniant ad aetatem adultam. Verum quidam ex hac solutione invenisse se credunt viam ad alias quaestiones, argumentantes ex eo, quod dicimus, parvulis in baptismate peccatum originale dimitti, quod et adultis dormientibus vel amentibus peccatum, si baptizentur, ratione simili dimittatur. Quum enim neutri sentiant tunc vel consentiant, dicunt, idem in consimilibus iudicandum. Hic vero dicimus distinguendum, quod peccatum est duplex, originale scilicet et actuale; originale, quod absque consensu contrahitur, et actuale, quod committitur cum consensu. Originale igitur, quod sine consensu contrahitur, sine consensu per vim remittitur sacramenti; actuale vero, quod cum consensu contrahitur, sine consensu minime relaxatur. Sed adhuc quaeritur, quare non saltem originale peccatum amentibus, et dormientibus in baptismo sicut parvulis dimittatur. Ad hoc est taliter respondendum, quod Dominus, qui totum hominem salvum fecit in sabbato, opus imperfectionis non novit, et ob hoc peccata non ex parte, sed ex toto dimittit. Praeterea poena originalis peccati est carentia visionis Dei; actualis vero poena peccati est gehennae perpetuae cruciatus. Unde, si dimitteretur alicui primum, altero non dimisso, talis non careret visione Dei propter originale dimissum, et cruciaretur in gehenna perpetuo propter reatum criminis actualis; sed haec tanquam incompassibilia sese minime patiuntur, immo sibi mutuo adversantur. Item vero quaeritur, utrum huiusmodi dormientibus et amentibus sacramenti saltem character in baptismate imprimatur, ut excitati a somno vel ab aegritudine liberati non sint denuo baptizandi. Sunt autem nonnulli, qui dicunt, quod sacramenta, quae per se sortiuntur effectum, ut baptismus et ordo ceteraque similia, non solum dormientibus et amentibus, sed invitis etiam et contradicentibus, etsi non quantum ad rem, quantum tamen ad characterem conferuntur, quum non solum parvuli, qui non consentiunt, sed et ficti, qui quamvis non ore, corde tamen dissentiunt, recipiant sacramentum. Sed opponitur talibus, quod, qui fuissent inviti et reluctantes immersi, saltem ratione sacramenti ad iurisdictionem ecclesiasticam pertinerent, unde ad servandam regulam fidei Christianae forent rationabiliter compellendi. Verum id est religioni Christianae contrarium, ut semper invitus et penitus contradicens ad recipiendam et servandam Christianitatem aliquis compellatur. Propter quod inter invitum et invitum, coactum et coactum alii non absurde distinguunt, quod is, qui terroribus atque suppliciis violenter attrahitur, et, ne detrimentum incurrat, baptismi suscipit sacramentum, talis quidem, sicut et is, qui ficte ad baptismum accedit, characterem suscipit Christianitatis impressum, et ipse, tanquam conditionaliter volens, licet absolute non velit, cogendus est [tamen] ad observantiam fidei Christianae. In quo casu debet intelligi decretum illud concilii Toletani, ubi dicitur, quod, qui iam pridem ad Christianitatem coacti sunt, sicut factum est temporibus religiosissimi principis Sisibuti, quia iam constat eos sacramentis divinis associatos, et baptismi gratiam suscepisse, et chrismate unctos esse, et corporis Domini exstitisse participes, oportet etiam, ut fidem, quam necessitate susceperunt, tenere cogantur, ne nomen Domini blasphemetur, et fides, quam susceperunt, vilis ac contemptibilis habeatur. Ille vero, qui nunquam consentit, sed penitus contradicit, nec rem, nec characterem suscipit sacramenti, quia plus est expresse contradicere quam minime consentire : sicut nec ille notam alicuius reatus incurrit, qui contradicens penitus et reclamans thurificare idolis cogitur violenter. Dormientes autem et amentes, si, priusquam amentiam incurrerent aut dormirent, in contradictione persisterent, quia in eis intelligitur contradictionis propositum perdurare, etsi fuerint sic immersi, characterem non suscipiunt sacramenti. Secus autem, si prius catechumeni exstitissent, et habuissent propositum baptizandi; unde tales in necessitatis articulo consuevit ecclesia baptizare. Tunc ergo characterem sacramentalis imprimit operatio, quum obicem voluntatis contrariae non invenit obsistentem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: No one can baptize himself, even when the point of necessity is imminent.

The same, to the Bishop of Metz.

You discharge the obligation of the pastoral office when you ask to be instructed by a response of the Apostolic See concerning doubtful points of law. Indeed, by your letters to us you intimated that a certain Jew, placed at the point of death, since he was among Jews only, immersed himself in water, saying: "I baptize myself in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, amen." But now you ask whether the same Jew, persevering in devotion to the Christian faith, ought to be baptized. We, however, respond to your fraternity in this manner: Since there ought to be a distinction between the one baptizing and the one baptized, as is clearly gathered from the words of the Lord saying to the Apostles, "Go, baptize all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," the aforesaid Jew must be baptized anew by another, so that it may be shown that one is he who is baptized and another he who baptizes.

To signify this also, Christ himself willed to be baptized not by himself but by John; although, if such a man had died immediately, he would at once have flown to the heavenly homeland on account of faith in the sacrament, even if not on account of the sacrament of faith. For in baptism that spiritual generation is celebrated concerning which the Truth says: "You must be born anew, because, unless one has been reborn from water and the Holy Spirit, he shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." Therefore, just as in carnal generation, by which offspring is born from man and woman, one is he who carnally begets and another is he who is carnally begotten, so also in sacramental generation, by which offspring is reborn from water and the Holy Spirit, one ought to be he who spiritually generates and another he who is spiritually generated. Indeed, whether the exterior body or the interior heart is baptized, it is necessary that in each case paternity and filiation be capable of being found, by which the one baptizing and the one baptized are referred to each other. [But the second, etc. (cf. c. 5, On Bigamists I. 21.) Given at Ferentino, on the fifth day before the Kalends of September, in the ninth year 1206.]

> Nemo potest se ipsum baptizare, etiam instante necessitatis articulo.
>
> Idem Metensi Episcopo.
>
> Debitum +pastoralis officii exsolvis, quum super dubiis iuris articulis responso sedis apostolicae postulas edoceri. Sane per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod quidam Iudaeus, in mortis articulo constitutus, quum inter Iudaeos tantum exsisteret, in aquam se ipsum immersit, dicendo : " ego baptizo me in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti, amen. " Nunc autem quaeris, utrum idem Iudaeus, in devotione Christianae fidei perseverans, debeat baptizari. Nos autem fraternitati tuae taliter Respondemus, quod, quum inter baptizantem et baptizatum debeat esse discretio, sicut ex verbis Domini colligitur evidenter, dicentis Apostolis : " Ite, baptizate omnes gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, " memoratus Iudaeus est denuo ab alio baptizandus, ut ostendatur, quod alius est, qui baptizatur, et alius, qui baptizat. Ad quod etiam designandum ipse Christus non a se ipso, sed a Ioanne voluit baptizari, quamvis, si talis continuo decessisset, ad coelestem patriam protinus evolasset propter sacramenti fidem, etsi non propter fidei sacramentum. In baptismo quippe illa spiritualis generatio celebratur, de qua Veritas ait : " Oportet vos nasci denuo, quia, nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non intrabit in regnum coelorum. " Sicut ergo in carnali generatione, qua proles ex viro et femina nascitur, alius est, qui carnaliter gignit, et alius est, qui carnaliter gignitur, sic et in sacramentali generatione, qua soboles ex aqua et Spiritu sancto renascitur, alius debet esse, qui spiritualiter generet, et alius, qui spiritualiter generetur. Sane, quum corpus exterius, sive quum cor interius baptizatur, oportet, ut utrobique paternitas et filiatio valeat inveniri, quibus baptizans et baptizatus adinvicem referantur. [Secundus autem etc. (cf. c. 5. *de big. I. * 21.) Dat. Ferentini V. Kal. Sept. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Where the word or the element of water is lacking, there is no sacrament of baptism.

The same, to the Bishop of Moros.

Not that you might add knowledge to yourself, as we believe, but that through the oracle of our word you might better instruct the ignorance of your subjects, you asked that an apostolic response be made as to whether those little children are to be held as Christians whom, placed at the point of death, the simplicity of certain persons, on account of a scarcity of water and the absence of a priest, anointed upon the head and breast and between the shoulders by sprinkling saliva in place of baptism. We respond that, since in baptism two things, namely the word and the element, are always required of necessity, according as the Truth says concerning the word, "Going into the whole world, preach the Gospel to every creature, and baptize all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit," and the same says concerning the element, "Unless one has been reborn from water and the Holy Spirit, he shall not enter the kingdom of heaven," you ought not to doubt that those in whom not only both of the aforesaid things but one of them has been omitted do not have true baptism. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Kalends of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate. 1206.]

> Ubi deest verbum vel elementum aquae, non est baptismi sacramentum.
>
> Idem Morosiensi Episcopo.
>
> Non ut apponeres +tibi scientiam, sicut credimus, sed ut per oraculum verbi nostri tuorum ignorantiam subditorum melius erudires, apostolicum tibi responsum fieri Postulasti, utrum parvuli sint pro Christianis habendi, quos, in articulo mortis constitutos, propter aquae penuriam et absentiam sacerdotis aliquorum simplicitas in caput et pectus ac inter scapulas pro baptismo salivae conspersione linivit. Respondemus, quod, quum in baptismo duo semper, videlicet verbum et elementum, necessario requirantur, iuxta quod de verbo Veritas ait : " Euntes in mundum universum praedicate evangelium omni creaturae, et baptizate omnes gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, " eademque dicat de elemento : " Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non intrabit in regnum coelorum : " dubitare non debes, illos verum non habere baptismum, in quibus non solum utrumque praedictorum, sed eorum alterum est omissum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Greeks ought not to rebaptize those baptized by Latins.

The same, in the General Council.

Although we wish to cherish and honor Greeks returning [in] our days to the obedience of the Apostolic See, sustaining their customs and rites insofar as we can with the Lord, nevertheless we neither wish nor ought to defer to them in those things which generate danger to souls and derogate from ecclesiastical honor. For after the Greek Church, with certain accomplices and supporters of its own, withdrew itself from the obedience of the Apostolic See, the Greeks began to abominate the Latins to such an extent that, among other things which they impiously committed in derogation of them, if at any time Latin priests had celebrated upon their altars, they themselves did not sacrifice upon them before they had washed them, as though polluted by this. The Greeks themselves also presumed with rash daring to rebaptize those baptized by Latins, and even now, as we have received, certain persons do not fear to do this. Wishing therefore to remove so great a scandal from the Church of God, at the persuasion of the sacred council we strictly command that henceforth they not presume such things, conforming themselves as sons of obedience to the sacrosanct Roman Church, their mother, so that there may be one fold and one shepherd. But if anyone presumes anything such, struck by the sword of excommunication, let him be deposed from every ecclesiastical office and benefice.

> Baptizatos a Latinis Graeci rebaptizare non debent.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Licet Graecos [in] diebus nostris ad obedientiam sedis apostolicae revertentes fovere ac honorare velimus, mores ac ritus eorum, in quantum cum Domino possumus, sustinendo : in his tamen illis deferre non volumus, nec debemus, quae periculum generant animarum et ecclesiasticae derogant honestati. Postquam enim Graecorum ecclesia cum quibusdam complicibus et fautoribus suis ab obedientia sedis apostolicae se subtraxit, in tantum Graeci coeperunt abominari Latinos, quod inter alia, quae in derogationem eorum impie committebant, si quando sacerdotes Latini super eorum celebrassent altaria, non prius ipsi sacrificabant in ipsis, quam ea, tanquam per hoc inquinata, lavissent. Baptizatos etiam a Latinis ipsi Graeci rebaptizare ausu temerario praesumebant, et adhuc, sicut accepimus, quidam hoc agere non verentur. Volentes igitur tantum scandalum ab ecclesia Dei amovere, sacro suadente concilio districte praecipimus, ut talia de cetero non praesumant, conformantes se tanquam filii obedientiae sacrosanctae Romanae ecclesiae matri suae, ut sit unum ovile et unus pastor. Si quis autem tale quid praesumpserit, excommunicationis mucrone percussus ab omni officio et beneficio ecclesiastico deponatur.

Title XLIII: On an Unbaptized Priest

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If one not baptized is ordained, he does not receive the character of order.

From the Council at Compiègne.

If anyone ordained a priest discovers that he has not been baptized, let him be baptized and ordained again.

> DE PRESBYTERO NON BAPTIZATO.
>
> Si non baptizatus ordinatur, ordinis characterem non recipit.
>
> Ex concilio apud Compendium.
>
> Si quis presbyter ordinatus deprehenderit, se non esse baptizatum, baptizetur, et iterum ordinetur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Omission of baptism does not harm one who probably believes himself to have been baptized.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Cremona.

You resolved to consult the Apostolic See, our venerable brother, as you ought. (And below:) Whence we respond to your inquiry in this manner: we assert without hesitation, from the authority of the holy Fathers Augustine and Ambrose, that the priest whom you signified by your letters to have closed his last day without the water of baptism, because he persevered in the faith of holy Mother Church and in confession of the name of Christ, was freed from original sin and attained the joy of the heavenly homeland. Read, brother, in the eighth book of Augustine's City of God, where among other things it is read: "Baptism is ministered invisibly to him whom not contempt of religion but the limit of necessity excludes." Examine also the book of Blessed Ambrose on the death of Valentinian, asserting the same. Therefore, with the questions put to rest, hold the opinions of the learned Fathers, and command continual prayers and sacrifices to be offered to God in your church for the aforesaid priest.

> Omissio baptismi non nocet credenti probabiliter, se esse baptizatum.
>
> Innocentius III. Episcopo Cremonensi.
>
> Apostolicam sedem, venerabilis frater noster, ut debuisti, consulere decrevisti. (Et infra:) Unde inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, presbyterum, quem sine unda baptismatis extremum diem clausisse literis tuis significasti, quia in sanctae matris ecclesiae fide et Christi nominis confessione perseveravit, ab originali peccato solutum, et coelestis patriae gaudium esse adeptum, ex auctoritate sanctorum Patrum Augustini atque Ambrosii asserimus incunctanter. Lege, frater, super octavo libro Augustini de civitate Dei, ubi inter cetera legitur : " Baptismus invisibiliter ministratur, quem non contemptus religionis, sed terminus necessitatis excludit. " Librum etiam B. Ambrosii de obitu Valentiniani idem asserentis revolve. Sopitis igitur quaestionibus doctorum Patrum sententias teneas, et in ecclesia tua iuges preces hostiasque Deo offerri iubeas pro presbytero memorato.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One not baptized cannot be ordained, and, if in fact he is ordained, he does not receive the character of order, although he was believed to have been baptized.

The same, to the Bishop of Ferrara.

Coming to the Apostolic See, the beloved son I., bearer of the present letters, explained to us that, after he had ascended through each order as far as the grade of priesthood, he finally discovered for certain that he had not been baptized according to the form of the Gospel; whence we caused him to be duly baptized by our venerable brother N., Bishop of Tusculum. And when there had been a rather lengthy disputation before us concerning the orders, certain persons inclined to this opinion: that, since baptism is the foundation of all the sacraments, another sacrament is not received before the reception of baptism, because, where there is no foundation, nothing can be built upon it.

But on the contrary it could seem otherwise. For since someone is made beyond doubt a member of Christ not only through the sacrament of faith but also through faith in the sacrament, and he who has Christ through faith, even if he does not have baptism, certainly has the foundation other than which no other can be laid, which is Christ Jesus, he appears able to build upon it both saving works and any ecclesiastical sacraments. For it is not generally true, either of the new or of the old sacraments, that baptism is their foundation, because both the sacrament of marriage and also the sacrament of the Eucharist can be received by the unbaptized. Furthermore, the sacrament of order, not only pontifical but also priestly and Levitical, by its institution preceded baptism, from which it perhaps appears that before baptism orders of this kind could duly be conferred, especially upon those who are believed to be baptized.

For what if perhaps he who is believed to have been baptized, and has not been, has at least in fact been consecrated a bishop? Will all who were ordained by him have to be reordained? And since concerning many bishops it is not known whether they were reborn by the water of baptism, because neither they themselves remember this nor do others, is it therefore doubted whether such men were truly consecrated as bishops? Whence it is better to be silent than to say how many and how great things follow that are not only incongruous but absurd.

But because in the Council at Compiègne it is read to have been established that, if anyone ordained a priest discovers that he has not been baptized, he is to be baptized and ordained again, we, following in this doubtful case what is safer concerning the bearer of the present letters, command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you take care to promote him through each order as far as the priesthood, and permit him to minister in the priesthood, because that is not understood to be repeated which it is uncertain was done. Nor is there a bad judgment concerning the sacrament when not contempt of religion but the point of necessity excludes it. And certainly, concerning one who, born of Christian parents, has lived faithfully among Christians, it is so forcibly presumed that he was baptized that this presumption is to be held as certainty until perhaps the contrary is proved by the most evident arguments. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of April, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Non baptizatus ordinari non potest, et, si de facto ordinetur, non recipit ordinis characterem, licet credebatur baptizatus.
>
> Idem Ferrariensi Episcopo.
>
> Veniens ad apostolicam sedem dilectus filius I. lator praesentium nobis exposuit, quod, quum per singulos ordines usque ad gradum sacerdotii adscendisset, comperit tandem pro certo, quod non fuerit secundum formam evangelii baptizatus, unde nos eum per venerabilem fratrem nostrum N. Tusculanum episcopum rite fecimus baptizari. Quumque super ordinibus coram nobis fuisset diutius disputatum, quidam in eam declinaverunt sententiam, ut, quum baptismus sit fundamentum omnium sacramentorum, ante susceptionem baptismi non suscipiatur aliud sacramentum, quoniam, ubi fundamentum non est, superaedificari non potest. Porro econtra videri posset. Nam quum quis non solum per sacramentum fidei, sed per fidem etiam sacramenti efficiatur procul dubio membrum Christi, et qui Christum habet per fidem, etiamsi baptismum non habeat, habet utique fundamentum, praeter quod aliud poni non potest, quod est Christus Iesus : superaedificare posse videtur, sicut salutifera opera, sic et quaelibet ecclesiastica sacramenta, quum illud non sit generaliter verum, neque de novis, neque de veteribus sacramentis, quod baptismus sit fundamentum illorum, quoniam et sacramentum coniugii et sacramentum etiam eucharistiae a non baptizatis recipi potest. Praeterea sacramentum ordinis non solum pontificalis, sed sacerdotalis etiam et levitici ex institutione sua praecessit baptismum, per quod forsitan videtur, quod ante baptismum huiusmodi ordines possent rite conferri, maxime his, qui baptizati esse creduntur. Quid enim, si forsitan is, qui baptizatus esse creditur, et non est, in episcopum saltem de facto fuerit consecratus? Eruntne reordinandi omnes, qui ab eo fuerint ordinati? Et quum de pluribus episcopis nesciatur, an renati fuerint aqua baptismatis, quum hoc nec ipsi reminiscantur, nec alii: dubitatur igitur, an tales sint veraciter in episcopos consecrati? Unde quot et quanta sequantur non solum absona, sed absurda, silendum est potius quam dicendum. Quia vero in concilio apud Compendium legitur constitutum, quod, si quis in presbyterum ordinatus deprehenderit, se non esse baptizatum, baptizetur, et iterum ordinetur : nos circa latorem praesentium in hoc dubitabili casu quod tutius est sequentes, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus ipsum per singulos ordines usque ad sacerdotium promovere procures, et permittas, eum in sacerdotio ministrare, quia non intelligitur iteratum quod ambigitur esse factum. Nec male de sacramento sentitur, quum illud non religionis contemptus, sed articulus necessitatis excludit. Et certe de illo, qui natus de Christianis parentibus, et inter Christianos est fideliter conversatus, tam violenter praesumitur, quod fuerit baptizatus, ut haec praesumptio pro certitudine sit habenda, donec evidentissimis forsitan argumentis contrarium probaretur. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. April. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Title XLIV: On the Custody of the Eucharist, Chrism, and the Other Sacraments

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The Eucharist and chrism ought faithfully to be kept under keys, and those acting contrary are to be punished.

Innocent III, in the General Council.

We establish that in all churches chrism and the Eucharist are to be preserved under faithful custody with keys applied, lest a rash hand be capable of being extended to them for the perpetration of any horrible or nefarious things. But if he to whom the custody pertains should leave them incautiously, let him be suspended from office for three months; and, if through his carelessness any nefarious thing should happen from this, let him be subject to a graver punishment.

> DE CUSTODIA EUCHARISTIAE, CHRISMATIS ET ALIORUM SACRAMENTORUM.
>
> Eucharistia et chrisma debent fideliter sub clavibus custodiri, et contra fecientes sunt puniendi.
>
> Innocentius III. in concilio generali.
>
> Statuimus, ut in cunctis ecclesiis chrisma et eucharistia sub fideli custodia clavibus adhibitis conserventur, ne possit ad illa temeraria manus extendi ad aliqua horribilia vel nefaria exercenda. Si vero is, ad quem spectat custodia, ea incaute reliquerit, tribus mensibus ab officio suspendatur, et, si per eius incuriam aliquid nefandum inde contigerit, graviori subiaceat ultioni.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Household goods ought not to be placed in churches unless necessity presses. This it says first. Churches ought to keep their vessels and vestments clean. This second.

The same, in the same council.

We do not wish to leave uncorrected the fact that certain clerics so fill churches with their own household goods, and even those of others, that they appear to be lay houses rather than basilicas of God, not considering that the Lord did not permit a vessel to be carried through the temple. There are also others who leave not only the churches uncared for, but also the vessels of ministry, the vestments of the ministers, the altar cloths, and even the corporals themselves so unclean that at times they are a horror to some. But because zeal for the house of God consumes us, we firmly prohibit household goods of this kind from being admitted into churches, unless on account of hostile incursions, sudden fires, or other pressing necessities it is necessary to take refuge in them, yet in such a way that, when the necessity ceases, the things are carried back to their former places. We command also that the aforesaid oratories, vessels, corporals, and vestments be preserved clean and bright. For it appears excessively absurd to neglect in sacred things filth that would be unbecoming even in profane things.

> Supellectilia in ecclesiis poni non debent, nisi necessitas urgeat. Hoc dicit primo. Ecclesiae debent sua vasa et vestimenta munde tenere. Hoc secundo.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Relinqui nolumus incorrectum, quod quidam clerici ecclesias sic exponunt suppellectilibus propriis, et etiam alienis, ut potius domus laicae, quam Dei basilicae videantur, non considerantes, quod Dominus non sinebat, ut vas transferretur per templum. Sunt et alii, qui non solum ecclesias dimittunt incultas, verum etiam vasa ministerii, et vestimenta ministrorum, ac pallas altaris, nec non et ipsa corporalia tam immunda relinquunt, quod interdum aliquibus sunt horrori. Quia vero zelus nos comedit domus Dei, firmiter prohibemus, ne huiusmodi suppellectilia in ecclesiis admittantur, nisi propter hostiles incursus, aut incendia repentina, seu alias necessitates urgentes ad eas oporteat haberi refugium, sic tamen, ut necessitate cessante, res in loca pristina reportentur. Praecipimus quoque, ut oratoria, vasa, corporalia et vestimenta praedicta munda et nitida conserventur. Nimis enim videtur absurdum in sacris sordes negligere, quae dedecerent etiam in profanis.

Title XLV: On Relics and the Veneration of Saints

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Without the Pope's permission it is not lawful to venerate anyone as a saint.

Alexander III.

We have heard that there are certain persons among you who, deceived by diabolical fraud, venerate after the manner of unbelievers as though a saint a certain man killed in drinking and drunkenness, although the Church scarcely permits prayer for such persons killed in drunkenness. For the Apostle says that drunken men will not possess the kingdom of God. Therefore do not presume henceforth to honor that man, since, even if very many miracles were done through him, it would not be lawful for you publicly to venerate him as a saint without the authority of the Roman Church.

DE RELIQUIIS ET VENERATIONE SANCTORUM.

Sine Papae licentia non licet aliquem venerari pro sancto.

Alexander III.

Audivimus, quod quidam inter vos sint, qui diabolica fraude decepti, hominem quendam in potatione et ebrietate occisum quasi sanctum more infidelium venerantur, quum vix pro talibus in ebrietatibus peremptis ecclesia permittat orare. Dicit enim Apostolus : " quod ebriosi homines regnum Dei non possidebunt. " Illum ergo hominem non praesumatis de cetero colere, quum, etiamsi per eum miracula plurima fierent, non liceret vobis ipsum pro sancto absque auctoritate Romanae ecclesiae publice venerari.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Relics of saints cannot be sold, nor ought they to be displayed indiscriminately, lest the people be capable of being deceived concerning them.

Innocent III, in the General Council.

Since the Christian religion has often been disparaged by the fact that certain persons expose relics of saints for sale and display them indiscriminately, lest it be disparaged in the future, by the present decree we establish that from now on ancient relics are by no means to be displayed outside a reliquary or exposed for sale. But let no one presume publicly to venerate those newly discovered unless they have first been approved by authority of the Roman Pontiff. Moreover, let prelates henceforth not permit those who approach their churches for the sake of veneration to be deceived by various inventions or false documents, as [also] has been accustomed to occur in very many places on the occasion of gain. [Of alms, etc. (cf. c. 14, X. On Penance V. 38.)]

Sanctorum reliquiae vendi non possunt, vel passim ostendi non debent, ne circa illas populus decipi possit.

Innocentius III. in concilio generali.

Quum ex eo, quod quidam sanctorum reliquias exponunt venales, et eas passim ostendunt, Christianae religioni detractum sit saepius, ne in posterum detrahatur, praesenti decreto statuimus, ut antiquae reliquiae amodo extra capsam nullatenus ostendantur, nec exponantur venales. Inventas autem de novo nemo publice venerari praesumat, nisi prius auctoritate Romani Pontificis fuerint approbatae. Praelati vero de cetero non permittant eos, qui ad eorum ecclesias causa venerationis accedunt, variis figmentis aut falsis documentis decipi, sicut [et] in plerisque locis occasione quaestus fieri consuevit. [Eleemosynarum etc. (cf. c. 14. X. de poenit. V. 38.)]

Title XLVI: On the Observance of Fasts

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A vigil falling on Sunday ought to be fasted on Saturday, and the vigil of Blessed Matthias is to be fasted.

Innocent III, to the Clerics of Saint Peter of Maguelonne.

It was asked on your part of us whether, if the Nativity of the Lord, the Assumption of Blessed Mary, or the feast of one of the Apostles happens to fall on the second day of the week, the vigil ought to be fasted on the preceding Saturday, and whether a fast is to be enjoined on the vigil of Blessed Matthias the Apostle. To this we respond briefly that [both] on Saturday the vigils of the aforesaid feasts preceding the second day of the week and the vigil of Blessed Matthias the Apostle ought to be fasted. [Moreover, etc. (cf. c. 5, On the Celebration of Masses III. 41.) Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Nones of November. 1204.]

DE OBSERVATIONE IEIUNIORUM.

Vigilia, occurens in dominica, ieiunari debet in sabbato, et ieiunanda est vigilia B. Matthiae.

Innocentius III. Clericis S. Petri Magalonensis.

Ex parte vestra quaesitum fuit a nobis, utrum, si Nativitatem Domini, vel Assumptionem beatae Mariae, vel festivitatem alicuius Apostolorum in secunda feria contigerit evenire, die sabbati praecedentis vigilia debeat ieiunari, et utrum in vigilia B. Matthiae Apostoli sit ieiunium iniungendum. Ad quod breviter respondemus, quod [et] die sabbati festivitates praelibatas secundae feriae praecedentis et B. Matthiae Apostoli debet vigilia ieiunari. [Insuper etc. (cf. c. 5. de celebr. miss. III. 41.) *Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Non. Nov. * 1204.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It does not admit of a fitting summary, and the text is sufficiently clear in itself, and many things are stated which are clear through the §§.

The same, to the Archbishop of Braga.

You sought our counsel concerning certain articles: whether [namely] fasting is required on the vigils of all the Apostles, since many assert that fasting is not required on all, but only on six. Whether fasting is also required in Advent, since different persons think different things concerning this, some, but fewer, saying that fasting is required at that time, but more asserting that they are not held to this. Whether, moreover, if the feast of those whose vigils we fast happens to be celebrated on the second day of the week, the vigils are to be observed on the preceding Saturday. We, however, concerning this respond to your consultation in this manner: among us the vigils of all the Apostles are to be celebrated in the observance of fasting, except the vigils of the Apostles Philip and James and of Blessed John the Evangelist, because the solemnity of the former is celebrated within the Easter solemnity, but that of the latter within the Nativity of the Lord. A fast is also observed among us during the Advent of the Lord. The vigils of saints whose feasts must be celebrated on the second day of the week are also to be fasted on the preceding Saturday. But concerning the feast of Blessed Bartholomew the Apostle, concerning the celebration of which doubt arises among certain persons, we respond to you seeking counsel that in this you are to observe the custom of your region.

(And below: [cf. c. 4, On the Celebration of Masses III. 41.]) But since you asked what penance is to be enjoined upon those who during the days of Lent, at which time the privation of so great a famine pressed that a great part of the people perished on account of scarcity of grain, were compelled to eat meat, we respond to you briefly that we do not believe those persons are to be punished in such a case whom so pressing a necessity excused. Nevertheless, pour forth prayers to the Lord for them and with them, lest it be imputed to them in any way, because it belongs to good minds to fear guilt where guilt is not found at all.

Likewise, concerning those who, on account of the weakness which they feel in themselves, eat meat on Saturday according to the custom of other lands, which is by no means accustomed to be done in your parts, since this is borne with difficulty by others and from it arises for them an occasion of disparaging, we respond that concerning this you are to cause the custom of your region to be observed, yet in such a way that danger does not arise on this account for the weak and infirm.

Furthermore, you asked to have an apostolic response concerning those who become ill in Lent or on other solemn fasts and petition that the eating of meat be indulged to them, some of whom promise that on this account they will give alms, but others, on account of the necessity of pressing illness, require that this be conceded to them by you as though from a debt. Concerning this we respond to you that, since necessity is not subject to law, you can and ought to support the desire of the infirm when pressing necessity requires it, so that greater danger in them may be avoided. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the ninth day before the Kalends of March, in the eighth year of our pontificate. 1206.]

> Non capit congruam summationem, et textus in se satis clarus est, et multa sunt dicta, quae patent per §§.
>
> Idem Bracharensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Consilium nostrum +super quibusdam articulis requisisti, utrum [videlicet] sit in omnibus Apostolorum vigiliis ieiunandum, quum plures asserant, non esse ieiunandum in omnibus, sed sex tantum. Utrum etiam ieiunandum sit in Adventu, quum inde sentiant diversi diversa, quibusdam dicentibus, sed paucioribus, ieiunandum esse tunc temporis, pluribus vero se ad hoc asserentibus non teneri. Utrum insuper, si festum illorum, quorum vigilias ieiunamus, secunda feria celebrari contingat, in praecedenti sabbato sint vigiliae faciendae. Nos autem super hoc Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod apud nos omnium Apostolorum vigiliae sunt in observatione ieiunii celebrandae, praeter vigilias Apostolorum Philippi et Iacobi, et B. Ioannis Evangelistae, quoniam ipsorum solennitas infra solennitatem paschalem, istius autem infra natalem Domini celebratur. Ieiunium etiam apud nos in adventu Domini agitur. Sanctorum quoque vigiliae, quorum festivitates oportet secunda feria celebrari, in praecedenti sunt sabbato ieiunandae. De festivitate vero beati Bartholomaei Apostoli, de cuius celebratione dubietas oritur apud quosdam, tibi petenti consilium respondemus, quod in hoc consuetudinem tuae regionis observes. (Et infra: [cf. c. 4. de cel. miss. III. 41.]) Quum autem quaesieris, quae sit illis poenitentia iniungenda, qui diebus quadragesimalibus, quo tempore tantae famis inedia ingruebat, quod magna pars populi propter inopiam annonae periret, carnes comedere sunt coacti, tibi breviter respondemus, quod in tali articulo illos non credimus puniendos, quos tam urgens necessitas excusavit, preces tamen Domino pro illis et cum illis effundas, ne ipsis aliquatenus imputetur, quia bonarum mentium est, ibi timere culpam, ubi culpa minime reperitur. Item de illis, qui propter debilitatem, quam in se sentiunt, in sabbato iuxta terrarum consuetudinem aliarum carnes sumunt, quod in partibus tuis nullatenus fieri consuevit, quum hoc ab aliis moleste feratur, et oriatur inde illis occasio detrahendi, respondemus, quod super hoc consuetudinem tuae regionis facias observari, sic tamen, quod debilibus et infirmis propter hoc periculum non emergat. Praeterea postulasti apostolicum responsum habere de illis, qui in quadragesima vel in aliis ieiuniis solennibus infirmantur, et petunt sibi esum carnium indulgeri, quorum quidam promittunt propter hoc eleemosynam se facturos, quidam vero propter necessitatem infirmitatis urgentis hoc a te sibi, quasi ex debito, concedi requirunt. Super quo tibi respondemus, quod, quum non subiaceat legi necessitas, desiderium infirmorum, quum urgens necessitas exigit, supportare potes et debes, ut maius in eis periculum evitetur. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. IX. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. VIII. 1206.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If the feast of the Nativity falls on the sixth day of the week, it is lawful for all to eat meat, except those professed and those making a vow.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Prague.

You asked it to be explained through the Apostolic See whether it is lawful for those who are bound neither by vow nor by regular observance to eat meat when the day of the Lord's Nativity falls on the sixth day of the week. To this we respond that those who are bound neither by vow nor by regular observance, if the feast of the Lord's Nativity happens to come on that day, can eat meat on the sixth day of the week on account of the excellence of the feast, according to the custom of the universal Church. Nor nevertheless are those to be reproved who out of devotion wish to abstain. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of November, in the first year of our pontificate. 1216.]

Si festum Nativitatis occurrit sexta feria, licitum est omnibus carnes comedere, exceptis professis et voventibus.

Honorius III. Pragensi Episcopo.

Explicari per sedem apostolicam postulasti, +utrum sit licitum illis, qui nec voto, nec regulari observantia sunt adstricti, carnes comedere, quando in sexta feria dies dominicae Nativitatis occurrit. Ad hoc Respondemus, quod illi, qui nec voto, nec regulari observantia sunt adstricti, in sexta feria, si festum nativitatis dominicae die ipso venire contigerit, carnibus propter festi excellentiam vesci possunt secundum consuetudinem ecclesiae generalis. Nec tamen hi reprehendendi sunt, qui ob devotionem voluerint abstinere. [Dat. Lat. IV. Kal. Nov. Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1216.]

Title XLVII: On Purification after Childbirth

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: A woman after childbirth can enter a church immediately, and is not held to abstain for any days according to the Mosaic law.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Armagh.

Wishing to be instructed by an apostolic response, your fraternity humbly requested of us whether women ought to enter churches immediately after childbirth or to abstain from entering them for some days. Although indeed, according to the Mosaic law, certain days had been determined during which women after childbirth refrained from entering the temple, nevertheless, because the law was given through Moses, but grace and truth were made through Jesus Christ, we, adhering to the footsteps of the holy Fathers, respond to your inquiry in this manner: after the shadow of the law vanished and the truth of the Gospel shone forth, if women, after bringing forth offspring, wish to enter a church to give thanks, they are burdened by no weight of sin on that account, nor is access to churches to be denied to them in any way, lest punishment seem to be turned into guilt for them. If nevertheless out of reverence they wish to abstain for a time, we do not believe their devotion is to be disapproved. [Given at the Lateran. 1198.]

> DE PURIFICATIONE POST PARTUM.
>
> Mulier post partum statim potest ingredi ecclesiam, nec tenetur abstinere per aliquos dies secundum legem Mosaicam.
>
> Innocentius III. Armachano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Volens +fraternitas tua per responsum apostolicum edoceri, humiliter a nobis expetiit, utrum mulieres statim post partum debeant ecclesias ingredi, vel ab earum ingressu per dies aliquot abstinere. Licet autem secundum legem Mosaicam certi dies determinati fuissent, quibus mulieres post partum a templi cessarent ingressu : quia tamen lex per Moysen data est, gratia et veritas per Iesum Christum facta est, nos, sanctorum Patrum vestigiis inhaerentes, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, postquam umbra legis evanuit, et illuxit veritas evangelii, si mulieres, post prolem emissam acturae gratias ecclesiam intrare voluerint, nulla proinde peccati mole gravantur, nec est ecclesiarum eis aditus aliquatenus denegandus, ne poena illis converti videatur in culpam. Si tamen ex veneratione voluerint aliquamdiu abstinere, devotionem earum non credimus improbandam. [Dat. Laterani. 1198.]

Title XLVIII: On Churches to Be Built or Repaired

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Those having a benefice in a church are held to contribute to its repair.

From the Council of Mainz.

Whoever have an ecclesiastical benefice are altogether to give assistance toward restoring the roofs of the church or repairing the churches themselves, and are to render the ninth and the tenth.

> DE ECCLESIIS AEDIFICANDIS VEL REPARANDIS.
>
> Habentes beneficium in ecclesia tenentur contribuere ad ipsius reparationem.
>
> Ex concilio Maguntino.

> Quicunque ecclesiasticum beneficium habent, omnino adiuvent ad tecta ecclesiae restauranda, vel ipsas ecclesias emendandas, et nonam et decimam reddant.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Lepers ought to be permitted, without prejudice to ancient parishes, to have their own church and priest, and they are not held to pay tithes from gardens or the nourishment of animals.

From the Lateran Council.

Since the Apostle says that more abundant honor is to be shown to the lower members, certain persons, on the contrary, seeking the things that are their own, not those of Jesus Christ, do not permit lepers, who cannot dwell with the healthy or assemble at church with others, to have churches and cemeteries, nor to be assisted by the ministry of their own priest. Because this is known to be far from Christian piety, from the kindness of the Apostolic See we establish that, wherever so many lepers have been gathered together under a common life that they are able to build a church with a cemetery for themselves and rejoice in their own priest, they are to be permitted to have them without any contradiction. Nevertheless, let them take care that they by no means exist as injurious to old churches in parochial right. For we do not wish that what is conceded to them for the sake of piety redound to the injury of others. We establish also that they are not to be compelled to render tithes from the gardens and nourishment of their animals.

> Leprosi permitti debent, sine praeiudicio antiquarum parochiarum, habere ecclesiam propriam et presbyterum, nec tenentur solvere decimas de hortis vel nutrimentis animalium.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Quum dicat Apostolus, +abundantiorem honorem membris inferioribus deferendum, e contra quidam, quae sua sunt, non quae Iesu Christi, quaerentes, leprosis, qui cum sanis habitare, non possunt vel ad ecclesiam cum aliis convenire, ecclesias et coemeteria non permittunt habere, nec proprii iuvari ministerio sacerdotis. Quod quia procul a pietate Christiana esse dignoscitur, de benignitate sedis apostolicae Constituimus, ut ubicunque tot simul leprosi sub communi vita fuerint congregati, quod ecclesiam cum coemeterio sibi construere, et proprio gaudere valeant presbytero, sine contradictione aliqua permittantur habere. Caveant tamen, ut iniuriosi veteribus ecclesiis de iure parochiali nequaquam exsistant. Quod enim eis pro pietate conceditur, ad aliorum iniuriam nolumus redundare. Statuimus etiam, ut de hortis et nutrimentis animalium suorum decimas tribuere non cogantur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: On account of the excessive distance of a church, a new church can be built in its parish, and a certain portion from the old one assigned to it.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of York.

Know that it has come to our hearing that the village which is called H. is said to be so far distant from the parochial church that in wintertime, when the rains overflow, the parishioners cannot approach it without great difficulty, whence they are unable to attend ecclesiastical offices at a suitable time. Therefore, because the said church is said so to abound in revenues that its minister can suitably have support apart from the proceeds of that village, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if the matter is thus, you build a church there and, with the obstacle of appeal removed, institute in it a priest upon the presentation of the rector of the greater church with the canonical assent of the founder, who is to receive for his support the ecclesiastical revenues of the same village; nevertheless providing that suitable honor in it, according to the means of the place, be preserved for the mother church. This indeed appears capable of being done, since the lord of the same village wishes to confer twenty acres of fruitful land for the use of the priest. But if the person of the mother church should delay presenting a suitable man, or should wish to impede that work, you are nevertheless to cause the same work to be brought to completion, and not omit to institute a good man when the subterfuge of appeal has ceased.

> Propter nimiam distantiam ecclesiae potest nova ecclesia in ipsius parochia aedificari, et certa portio de antiqua sibi deputari.
>
> Alexander III. Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad audientiam nostram noveris pervenisse, quod villa, quae dicitur H., tantum perhibetur ab ecclesia parochiali distare, ut in tempore hiemali, quum pluviae inundant, non possint parochiani sine magna difficultate ipsam adire, unde non valent congruo tempore ecclesiasticis officiis interesse. Quia igitur dicta ecclesia ita dicitur in reditibus abundare, quod praeter illius villae proventus minister illius convenienter valeat sustentationem habere, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus si res ita se habet, ecclesiam ibi aedifices, et in ea sacerdotem, sublato appellationis obstaculo, ad praesentationem rectoris ecclesiae maioris cum canonico fundatoris assensu instituas, ad sustentationem suam eiusdem villae obventiones ecclesiasticas percepturum providens tamen, ut competens in ea honor pro facultate loci matrici ecclesiae servetur, quod quidem fieri posse videtur, quum eiusdem villae dominus viginti acras terrae frugiferae velit ad usus sacerdotis conferre. Si vero persona matricis ecclesiae virum idoneum praesentare distulerit, vel opus illud voluerit impedire, tu nihilominus facias idem opus ad perfectionem deduci, et virum bonum appellationis cessante diffugio instituere non omittas.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Rectors of churches can be compelled to be held to contribute, from the revenues which remain over, to the construction or repair of a church.

The same, to the Bishop of Lisieux.

Concerning those indeed who have parochial churches, we have considered that response should be made to your fraternity in this manner: when there is need, they ought to be compelled to contribute to the repair and construction of the churches from the goods which belong to the church itself, if any remain over for them, so that by their example the others may be invited.

> Rectores ecclesiarum possunt compelli, ut de reditibus, qui supersunt teneantur conferre ad constructionem seu reparationem ecclesiae.
>
> Idem Lexoviensi Episcopo.
>
> De his sane, qui parochiales ecclesias habent, fraternitati tuae taliter duximus respondendum, quod ad reparationem et institutionem ecclesiarum cogi debent, quum opus fuerit, de bonis, quae sunt ipsius ecclesiae, si eis supersint, conferre, ut eorum exemplo ceteri invitentur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A secular church can be restored to a regular state without prejudice to the clerics, and a privilege is not conferred upon a college that does not yet exist.

Urban III.

It came to our hearing some time ago that you desire to establish regular canons in the church of Cologia, from which you were called and elected to be bishop, and suitably to provide for their institution from the goods conferred upon you. Hence it is that, commending in the Lord with praises in many ways your desire and purpose, by apostolic authority we grant this to your devotion: that, according to your vow, you may establish regular canons in the aforesaid church, if the diocesan bishop consents to you in this matter, to the honor of God and of your church according to the rule of Blessed Augustine, and institute them there with no one's contradiction or appeal standing in the way. But if there are secular clerics in it who are known still to survive, we wish the necessities to be provided for them there or elsewhere, according to the customs, as long as they live. Although, moreover, you have petitioned us more insistently that we make a privilege of confirmation concerning the canons for the aforesaid church, we cannot by law defer to you, since no canons as yet exist there to whom a privilege may be conceded. Indeed, when they have been instituted, both in these and in other things in which with God we shall be able, we shall more willingly defer to them in consideration of your prayers.

> Saecularis ecclesia sine praeiudicio clericorum ad statum regularem potest reparari, et collegio, quod nondum est, privilegium non confertur.
>
> Urbanus III.
>
> Ad audientiam nostram iam pridem pervenit, quod tu in ecclesia de Cologia, de qua in episcopum vocatus et electus fuisti, regulares canonicos desideras ordinare, et eorum institutioni de bonis tibi collatis congrue providere. Inde siquidem est, quod tuum nos desiderium atque propositum multis modis in Domino laudibus commendantes, hoc devotioni tuae auctoritate apostolica indulgemus, ut iuxta votum tuum canonicos regulares in ecclesia praescripta, si tibi episcopus dioecesanus consenserit in hac parte, ad honorem Dei et ecclesiae tuae secundum beati Augustini regulam valeas ordinare, et eos ibidem nullius contradictione et eos appellatione obstante instituere. Verum si clerici saeculares in ea fuerint, qui adhuc superesse noscuntur, volumus eis, dum vixerint, ibi vel alibi necessaria secundum consuetudines provideri. Licet autem nobis instantius supplicaveris, ut ecclesiae praedictae confirmationis privilegium faceremus de canonicis, tibi non possumus de iure deferre, quum nulli canonici adhuc ibidem exsistant, quibus privilegium concedatur. Eis utique, quum fuerint instituti, tam in his quam in aliis precum tuarum obtentu in quibus cum Deo poterimus libentius deferemus.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Notwithstanding an oath not to alienate the things of the church, a bishop can build a new church on account of need.

Celestine III.

Your [letter] has led us—(And below:) Furthermore, because, on the occasion of the oath which you assert that you furnished concerning not alienating the things of the church, you fear to erect churches in places of your episcopate in which the peoples dwelling there appear to need oratories very greatly, lest under pretext of new churches the church committed to you appear to be deprived, we command your fraternity by notification of the present letters that, on the occasion of that oath, you by no means omit salubriously to take care to provide for the needy people concerning the establishment of basilicas.

Non obstante iuramento de rebus ecclesiae non alienandis, potest episcopus propter indigentiam novam ecclesiam aedificare.

Coelestinus III.

Tua nos duxit (Et infra:) Praeterea, quia occasione iuramenti, quod de rebus ecclesiae non alienandis te asseris praestitisse, in locis tui episcopatus, in quibus populi habitantes oratoriis plurimum egere videntur, ne praetextu novarum ecclesiarum commissa tibi ecclesia destitui videatur, ecclesias formidas erigere, fraternitati tuae praesentium significatione mandamus, quatenus illius iuramenti occasione nullatenus praetermittas, quin populo indigenti super basilicarum institutione studeas salubriter providere.

Title XLIX: On the Immunity of Churches, Cemeteries, and Things Pertaining to Them

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: In houses of churches a lay judge ought neither to judge nor seek lodging.

From the Synod of Pope John.

In houses of churches, let neither an envoy, nor a count, nor a public judge, nor a minister claim a court session or lodging as though by custom; but let them establish houses in public places, in which they may hold court and also be lodged according to ancient custom.

DE IMMUNITATE ECCLESIARUM, COEMITERII, ET RERUM, AD EAS PERTINENTIUM.

In domibus ecclesiarum non debet iudex laicus iudicare, nec hospitium quaerere.

Ex synodo Ioannis Papae.

Ut in domibus ecclesiarum neque missus, neque comes vel iudex publicus, vel minister quasi pro consuetudine placitum vel hospitium vindicent, sed in publicis locis domos constituant, in quibus placitum teneant, et etiam secundum antiquam consuetudinem hospitentur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: In a time of great necessity no one ought to be excused from the watch of the walls or of the city. This is what it says according to the understanding of Panormitanus.

Gregory, to the Archbishop of Tricensis.

It has come—(And below:) Let your fraternity permit no one to be excused from the watches of the walls either by our name or that of his church, or in any other way; but let all be compelled generally to this, so that, with all keeping watch, the custody of the city may better be provided for [with the Lord assisting].

Tempore magnae necessitatis non debet aliquis excusari a murorum seu civitatis custodia H. d. secundum intellectum Panorm.

Gregorius Archiepiscopo Tricensi.

Pervenit (Et infra:) Fraternitas tua nullum neque per nostrae vel ecclesiae suae nomen aut quolibet alio modo excusari a murorum vigiliis patiatur; sed omnes ad hoc generaliter compellantur, quatenus cunctis vigilantibus melius [auxiliante Domino] valeat civitatis custodia procurari.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A peasant bound to cultivation of the fields of a church cannot abandon it. This is what it says, summarizing generally.

The same, to Vitalis, Defender of Sardinia.

It has been reported—(And below:) It has also been told to us that the peasants of the [possession] of the same [church of Cagliari], abandoning its fields, furnish the cultivation of labor upon the possessions of private persons, from which circumstance [it is brought about that the possessions of the church, its own cultivator being occupied on the lands of others, waste away and do not exist as capable of paying their taxes;] which let your experience not permit to occur.

> Rusticus, adstrictus ad culturam agrorum ecclesiae, non potest illam deserere H. d. summando generaliter.
>
> Idem Vitali Defensori Sardiniae.
>
> Indicatum est (Et infra:) Dictum est nobis etiam, quod rustici [possessionis] eiusdem [Caralitanae] ecclesiae, rura eius deserentes, in privatorum possessionibus culturam laboris exhibeant, ex qua re [agitur, ut possessiones ecclesiae, proprio in aliis occupato cultore, depereant, atque ad tributa sua persolvenda idoneae non exsistant;] quod experientia tua fieri non permittat.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Lay persons imposing collections upon clerics or churches, or usurping their jurisdiction, if after being warned they do not desist, are excommunicated with their supporters; nevertheless a bishop with the clergy can furnish them subsidies in necessity.

From the Lateran Council.

No less on account of the sin of those who do it than on account of the loss of those who sustain it, it is known to be exceedingly grave that, in diverse parts of the world, consuls of cities and rectors, as well as others who appear to have power, frequently impose so many burdens upon churches, [and] so press them with grave and repeated exactions, that under them the priesthood appears to have been made of worse condition than it was under Pharaoh, who did not have knowledge of the divine law. He indeed, after all others had been subjected to servitude, left his priests and their possessions in their former freedom and administered sustenance to them from the public treasury. But these men impose nearly all their burdens upon churches and afflict them with so many forced services that that which Jeremiah laments appears to apply to them: "The princess of the provinces has been made tributary." Whether indeed they judge that ditches, expeditions, or any other things are to be carried out for them, they wish nearly all of them to be accomplished from the goods of churches and clerics assigned to the uses of the poor of Christ. They so nullify also the jurisdiction and authority of bishops and other prelates that no power appears to have remained to them over their own men. Concerning this there is cause for grief [both] for the churches, and there is nonetheless cause for grief also for those very persons who appear wholly to have cast aside the fear of God and reverence for ecclesiastical order.

Wherefore, under the rigor of anathema, we more severely prohibit things of this kind from being done henceforth, unless the bishop and clergy perceive so great a necessity or utility that, without any exaction, they judge that subsidies should be conferred through the churches toward relieving common utilities or necessities where the resources of lay persons do not suffice. But if the consuls or others should commit these things henceforth, and, after being admonished, should perhaps be unwilling to desist, let them know that both they and their supporters are subject to excommunication, and let them not be restored to the communion [of the faithful] until they have made suitable satisfaction.

> Laici, collectas imponentes clericis vel ecclesiis, seu iurisdictionem eorum usurpantes, si moniti non desistunt, sunt excommunicati cum suis fautoribus; potest tamen episcopus cum clero eis in necessitate praebere subsidia.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Non minus +pro peccato eorum, qui faciunt, quam pro illorum detrimento, qui sustinent, grave nimis esse dignoscitur, quod In diversis mundi partibus consules civitatum et rectores, nec non et alii, qui potestatem habere videntur, tot onera frequenter imponunt ecclesiis, [et] ita gravibus eas et crebris exactionibus premunt, ut deterioris conditionis factum sub eis sacerdotium videatur, quam sub Pharaone fuerit, qui legis divinae notitiam non habebat. Ille quidem omnibus aliis servituti subactis sacerdotes suos et possessiones eorum in pristina libertate dimisit, et eis alimoniam de publico administravit. Isti vero onera sua fere universa imponunt ecclesiis, et tot angariis eas affligunt, ut eis illud, quod Hieremias deplorat, competere videatur : " Princeps provinciarum facta est sub tributo; " sive quidem fossata, sive expeditiones, seu alia quaelibet sibi arbitrentur agenda, de bonis ecclesiarum et clericorum et pauperum Christi usibus deputatis volunt fere cuncta compleri. Iurisdictionem etiam et auctoritatem episcoporum et aliorum praelatorum ita evacuant, ut nihil potestatis eis in suis videatur hominibus remansisse. Super quo dolendum [est] pro ecclesiis, dolendum etiam est nihilominus pro ipsis, qui timorem Dei et ecclesiastici ordinis reverentiam videntur penitus abiecisse. Quocirca sub anathematis districtione fieri de cetero talia severius prohibemus, nisi episcopus et clerus tantam necessitatem vel utilitatem adspexerint, ut absque ulla exactione ad relevandas communes utilitates, vel necessitates, ubi laicorum non suppetunt facultates, subsidia per ecclesias existiment conferenda. Si autem consules aut alii de cetero ista commiserint, et commoniti desistere forte noluerint, tam ipsi quam fautores eorum excommunicationi se noverint subiacere, nec [fidelium] communioni reddantur, donec satisfactionem fecerint competentem.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Causes of blood ought not to be conducted in a church or cemeteries.

Lucius III.

Since, according to evangelical truth, the Church of God ought to be a house of prayer, not a den of robbers or a forum of blood, under threat of anathema we prohibit secular judges from conducting in churches or cemeteries causes in which the shedding of blood and corporal punishment are at issue. For it is absurd and cruel that a judgment of blood be exercised where the protection of refuge is established.

> Causae sanguinis in ecclesia vel coemiteriis agitari non debent.
>
> Lucius III.
>
> Quum ecclesia Dei secundum evangelicam veritatem domus orationis esse debeat, non spelunca latronum aut sanguinis forum : saeculares iudices causas, ubi de sanguinis effusione et corporali poena agitur, in ecclesiis vel coemiteriis agitare sub interminatione anathematis prohibemus. Absurdum enim est et crudele, ibi iudicium sanguinis exerceri, ubi est tutela refugii constituta.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One guilty of a crime who flees to a church is not to be drawn out of it violently, nor ought he any longer, under pretext of the crime committed, to be condemned to death or to another corporal punishment; nevertheless he is otherwise to be punished lawfully. It fails in the two cases expressed here. This is what it says first. A slave fleeing to a church out of fear of his master is to be restored to his master when the latter swears to his impunity. This is what it says second.

Innocent III, to the Illustrious King of Scotland.

Among other things which royal providence intimated to us by its letters, it solicitously asked what ought to be done concerning those who, perpetrating crimes, flee to a church so that, through reverence for the sacred place, they may be able to avoid the punishments due. We therefore, responding to your questions, according to the statutes of the sacred canons and the traditions of the civil laws, have considered that a distinction in a matter of this kind is to be made thus: one fleeing to a church exists either as a free man or a slave.

If free, however grave the crimes he has perpetrated, he is not to be drawn violently from the church, nor ought he thence to be condemned to death or to punishment; but the rectors of the churches ought to obtain his limbs and life for him. Nevertheless, concerning that which he did wickedly, he is otherwise to be punished lawfully. And this is true unless he was a public robber or a nocturnal devastator of fields, who, while he besets frequented ways or public roads with the snares of attack, on account of the magnitude of the crime, [since he both impedes common utility and strives altogether to do harm,] can be drawn from the church without impunity being furnished, according to the canonical sanctions.

But if it was a slave who fled to a church, after his master has furnished an oath to the clerics concerning his impunity, he is compelled to return to the service of his master even unwilling; otherwise he can be seized by the master. Therefore, dearest son, when anything of these things happens in your kingdom, take care to proceed according to the aforesaid distinction in such a way that the honor and immunity of churches is preserved unharmed and the opportunity for acting wickedly is taken away from men of perverse will. [Given at the Lateran. 1200.]

> Reus criminis, ad ecclesiam fugiens, non est violenter ab ea extrahendus, nec debet amplius praetextu criminis commissi damnari ad mortem vel ad aliam poenam corporalem: est tamen aliter legitime puniendus. Fallit in duobus casibus hic expressis. H. d. primo. Servus, fugiens ad ecclesiam timore domini sui, est domino, de eius impunitate iuranti, restituendus. H. d. secundo.
>
> Innocentius III. illustri Regi Scotiae.
>
> Inter alia, +quae nobis regalis providentia suis literis intimavit, quid de illis fieri debeat, qui maleficia perpetrantes confugiunt ad ecclesiam, ut pro reverentia sacri loci debitas poenas valeant evitare, sollicite requisivit. Nos ergo, Tuis quaestionibus respondentes, iuxta sacrorum statuta canonum et traditiones legum civilium ita duximus in huiusmodi distinguendum, quod fugiens ad ecclesiam aut liber, aut servus exsistit. Si liber, quantumcunque gravia maleficia perpetraverit, non est violenter ab ecclesia extrahendus, nec inde damnari debet ad mortem vel ad poenam; sed rectores ecclesiarum sibi obtinere debent membra et vitam. Super hoc tamen, quod inique fecit, est alias legitime puniendus; et hoc verum est, nisi publicus latro fuerit, vel nocturnus depopulator agrorum, qui, dum itinera frequentata vel publicas stratas obsidet aggressionis insidiis, pro facinoris magnitudine, [quum et communem utilitatem impediat, et nocere omnino moliatur,] ab ecclesia extrahi potest, impunitate non praestita, secundum canonicas sanctiones. Si vero servus fuerit, qui confugerit ad ecclesiam, postquam de impunitate sua dominus eius clericis iuramentum praestiterit, ad servitium domini sui redire compellitur etiam invitus; alioquin a domino poterit occupari. Tu ergo, fili carissime, quum in regno tuo aliquid horum contigerit, iuxta praemissam distinctionem sic procedere studeas quod honor ecclesiarum et immunitas servetur illaesa et malignandi facultas pravae voluntatis hominibus auferatur. [Dat. Laterani 1200.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Clerics ought not to give assistance to the necessities or utilities of cities or other places, even where the resources of lay persons do not suffice, unless the Roman Pontiff is first consulted. This first. Judgments and constitutions issued by lay persons collecting from a church are void by the law itself and acquire no validity at any time. This second. Rectors excommunicated on account of the aforesaid burdens remain excommunicated even after office has been laid down; nonetheless their successors are excommunicated unless they have made satisfaction within a month. This third. It says this for greater explanation and for novices.

The same, in the General Council.

Wishing to provide for ecclesiastical immunity against consuls and rectors of cities, or others, who strive to burden churches and ecclesiastical men with tallages or collections and other exactions, the Lateran Council prohibited presumption of this kind under the rigor of anathema, and commanded transgressors and their supporters to be subject to excommunication until they have furnished suitable satisfaction. But if at any time perhaps a bishop together with the clerics perceives so great a necessity or utility that, without any compulsion, he considers that subsidies should be conferred through the churches toward relieving common utilities or necessities where the resources of lay persons do not suffice, let the aforesaid lay persons receive them humbly and devoutly with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, on account of the imprudence of certain persons, let the Roman Pontiff first be consulted, whose concern it is to provide for common utilities.

But because not even thus has the malice of certain persons against the Church of God grown quiet, we add that constitutions and judgments which have been promulgated by such persons or at their command are to be held vain and void, never to have force at any time. Moreover, because fraud and deceit ought to patronize no one, let no one be deceived by the vain error that he may sustain anathema during the term of his government as though after it he were not to be compelled to the debt of satisfaction. For we decree that both he himself who has refused to make satisfaction and his successor, unless he has made satisfaction within a month, remain enclosed by ecclesiastical censure until he has made suitable satisfaction, since he who is substituted in honor succeeds to the burden.

Clerici non debent necessitatibus seu utilitatibus civitatum seu aliorum locorum, etiam ubi laicorum non suppetunt facultates, subvenire, nisi prius Romanus Pontifex consulatur. Hoc primo Sententiae et constitutiones, editae a laicis collectantibus ecclesiam, sunt ipso iure irritae, nec ullo tempore convalescunt. Hoc secundo. Rectores, excommunicati ob gravamina praemissa, remanent excommunicati, etiam post depositum officium; nihilominus excommunicati sunt successores, nisi satisfecerint infra mensem. Hoc tertio. Hoc dicit ad maiorem declarationem et pro novitiis.

Idem in concilio generali.

Adversus consules et rectores civitatum, vel alios, qui ecclesias et ecclesiasticos viros talliis seu collectis et exactionibus aliis aggravare nituntur, volens immunitati ecclesiasticae Lateranense concilium providere, praesumptionem huiusmodi sub anathematis districtione prohibuit, transgressores et fautores eorum excommunicationi subiacere praecepit, donec satisfactionem impenderint competentem. Verum, si quando forte episcopus simul cum clericis tantam necessitatem vel utilitatem perspexerit, ut absque ulla coactione ad relevandas utilitates vel necessitates communes, ubi laicorum non suppetunt facultates, subsidia duxerit per ecclesias conferenda, praedicti laici humiliter et devote recipiant cum gratiarum actione. Propter imprudentiam tamen quorundam Romanus Pontifex prius consulatur, cuius interest communibus utilitatibus providere. Quia vero nec sic quorundam malitia contra Dei ecclesiam conquievit, adiicimus, ut constitutiones et sententiae, quae a talibus vel de ipsorum mandato fuerint promulgatae, inanes et irritae habeantur, nullo unquam tempore valiturae. Ceterum, quia fraus et dolus alicui patrocinari non debent, nullus vano decipiatur errore, ut infra tempus regiminis sustineat anathema, quasi post illud non sit ad satisfactionis debitum compellendus. Nam et ipsum, qui satisfacere recusaverit, et successorem ipsius, nisi satisfecerit infra mensem, manere decernimus ecclesiastica censura conclusum, donec satisfecerit competenter, quum succedat in onere qui substituitur in honore.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Prelates extorting from subjects more than is due, under pretext of procuration or another service furnished to a legate or another, will restore it and bestow as much upon the poor.

The same, in the same council.

Because very many prelates, in order to furnish procuration or some service to a legate or another, extort more from their subjects than they pay, and, pursuing profits in their losses, seek booty rather than subsidy from subjects, we prohibit this from being done henceforth. But if anyone should perhaps presume to do it, let him both restore the things thus extorted and be compelled to bestow as much upon the poor. But the superior with whom a complaint [concerning this] has been lodged, if he has been negligent in the execution of this statute, is to be subject to canonical punishment.

Praelati, plus debito a subditis extorquentes, praetextu procurationis vel alterius servitii impensi legato vel alteri, illud restituent, et tantundem pauperibus erogabunt.

Idem in eodem.

Quia plerique praelati, ut procurationem aut servitium aliquod impendant legato vel alii, plus extorquent a subditis quam solvant, et in eorum damnis lucra sectantes quaerunt praedam potius quam subsidium in subiectis, id de cetero fieri prohibemus. Quod si quis forte praesumpserit, et sic extorta restituat, et tantundem cogatur pauperibus elargiri; superior autem, cui [super hoc] fuerit querela deposita, si negligens fuerit in huiusmodi exsecutione statuti, canonicae subiaceat ultioni.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: An unconsecrated church in which divine offices are celebrated enjoys immunity.

Gregory IX, to Astoricensis.

The privilege of immunity is taken away by no law from a church in which the divine mysteries are celebrated, although it has not yet been consecrated, because one dedicated to divine observances is to be profaned by no one's rash daring. [If a church, etc. (cf. c. 10, On the Consecration of a Church III. 40.) Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June. 1233.]

Ecclesia non consecrata, in qua divina officia celebrantur, gaudet immunitate.

Gregorius IX. Astoricensi.

Ecclesiae, in qua divina mysteria celebrantur, licet adhuc non exstiterit consecrata, nullo iure privilegium immunitatis adimitur : quia obsequiis divinis dedicata nullius est temerariis ausibus profananda. [Si ecclesia etc. (cf. c. 10. de cons. eccl. III. 40.) *Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Iun. * 1233.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Those who commit offenses in churches or cemeteries under hope of immunity do not enjoy immunity.

The same, to the Archbishops of Toledo and Compostela.

Ecclesiastical immunity—(And below:) Certain persons, hoping to obtain impunity for their excesses through the protection of a church, do not fear to commit homicides and mutilations of limbs in the churches themselves or their cemeteries; which they would by no means have committed unless they believed themselves to be defended by the church to which they flee. (And below:) Since someone ought to be punished in that in which he offends, and he who commits an offense against the law invokes the aid of the law in vain, we command that you announce publicly that such persons ought not to enjoy the privilege of immunity, of which they make themselves unworthy.

Qui sub spe immunitatis in ecclesiis vel coemeteriis delinquunt, immunitate non gaudent.

Idem Toletano et Compostellano Archiepiscopis.

Immunitatem ecclesiasticam (Et infra:) Nonnulli, impunitatem suorum excessuum per defensionem ecclesiae obtinere sperantes, homicidia et mutilationes membrorum in ipsis ecclesiis vel earum coemiteriis committere non verentur : qui, nisi per ecclesiam, ad quam confugiunt, crederent se defendi, nullatenus fuerant commissuri. (Et infra:) Quum in eo, in quo delinquit, puniri quis debeat, et frustra legis auxilium invocet qui committit in legem : mandamus, quatenus publice nuncietis, tales non debere gaudere immunitatis privilegio, quo faciunt se indignos.

Title L: Lest Clerics or Monks Involve Themselves in Secular Business

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The council enumerates many secular businesses from which it commands clerics and monks to abstain. And they are fourteen, if they are counted correctly.

From the Council of Mainz.

There are many secular businesses, of which let us touch briefly upon a few, to which all carnal concupiscence pertains. Whatever a man seeks beyond what is just is shameful gain. To receive or even give unjust gifts. To hire someone for payment for some secular gain. To love contentions, lawsuits, or quarrels. To argue in secular courts, except in defense of orphans or widows. To be lessees of secular things or procurators. To be a jester in shameful word or deed, or to love secular jest. To love games of chance. To seek adornment unfitting to one's profession. To wish to live in delights. To pursue gluttony and drunkenness. To have unjust weights or measures. To exercise unjust business.

Nevertheless, just business is not to be forbidden on account of diverse necessities, because we read that the holy Apostles engaged in business, and in the Rule of Blessed Benedict it is commanded that provision be made for those through whose hands the businesses of the monastery are administered. To follow dogs and birds for hunting, and to be engaged in any superfluous causes whatsoever. Behold, things such as these and similar things we altogether forbid to the ministers of the altar of the Lord, as well as to monks, concerning whom the Apostle says: "No one, serving as a soldier for God, involves himself in secular businesses."

> NE CLERICI VEL MONACHI SAECULARIBUS NEGOTIIS SE IMMISCEANT.
>
> Enumerat concilium multa saecularia negotia, a quibus iubet clericos et monachos abstinere. Et sunt XIV., si recte numerentur.
>
> Ex concilio Maguntino.
>
> Multa sunt negotia saecularia, de quibus pauca perstringamus, ad quae pertinet omnis carnalis concupiscentia. Quicquid plus iusto appetit homo, turpe lucrum est. Munera iniusta accipere vel etiam dare. Pro aliquo saeculari quaestu pretio aliquem conducere. Contentiones, vel lites, vel rixas amare. In placitis saecularibus disputare, excepta defensione orphanorum aut viduarum. Conductores saecularium rerum aut procuratores esse. Turpis verbi vel facti esse ioculatorem, vel iocum saecularem diligere. Aleas amare. Ornamentum inconveniens proposito suo quaerere. In deliciis vivere velle. Gulam et ebrietatem sequi. Pondera iniusta vel mensuras habere. Negotium iniustum exercere. Nec tamen iustum negotium est contradicendum propter necessitates diversas, quia legimus, sanctos Apostolos negotiatos fuisse, et in regula B. Benedicti praecipitur provideri, per quorum manus negotia monasterii procurentur. Canes et aves sequi ad venandum, et omnibus quibuslibet causis superfluis interesse. Ecce talia et his similia ministris altaris Domini, nec non et monachis omnino contradicimus, de quibus ait Apostolus : " Nemo, militans Deo, implicat se negotiis saecularibus. "

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Clerics ought not to be ministers or procurators of lay persons; but if they act contrary and are detected in fraud, they are not assisted by the Church.

Pope Eugenius, to the Bishop of Lucca.

Moreover, you are to announce publicly to your priests and clerics that they are not to become ministers of lay persons, nor to exist as procurators in their affairs. But if afterward they presume to do this and, on the occasion of that administration, are detected in fraud concerning a pecuniary cause, it is unworthy that they be assisted by the Church, through whom it is established that scandal is generated in the Church.

> Clerici non debent esse ministri vel procuratores laicorum; quod si contra fecerint, et deprehendantur in fraude, non subvenitur eis ab ecclesia.
>
> Eugenius Papa Lucanensi Episcopo.
>
> Sacerdotibus autem et clericis tuis denuncies publice, ne ministri laicorum fiant, nec in rebus eorum procuratores exsistant. Quod si postmodum facere praesumpserint, et occasione ipsius administrationis propter pecuniariam causam deprehendantur in fraude, indignum est eis ab ecclesia subveniri, per quos constat in ecclesia scandalum generari.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Professed religious who go out to hear laws or medicine, unless they return to the cloister within two months, are excommunicated, and can act as advocate in no cause, and in choir, chapter, and other things they will be last, and without dispensation of the Pope they are not promoted.

Alexander III, in the Council of Tours.

The envy of the ancient enemy does not greatly labor to cast down the weak members of the Church, but it puts its hand to her more desirable ones and strives also to supplant the elect, Scripture saying: "His foods are the elect." Indeed, it reckons that it accomplishes the fall of many where some more precious member of the Church has been brought down by its cunning. And hence surely it is that, transfiguring itself in its accustomed manner into an angel of light, under pretext of taking counsel for the bodies of ailing brothers and of treating ecclesiastical businesses more faithfully, it leads certain regulars out of their cloisters to read laws and weigh medical preparations.

Whence, lest under occasion of knowledge spiritual men again be involved in worldly actions, and fail in interior things from the very thing from which they think they provide for others in exterior things, with the assent of the present council we establish that no persons whatsoever, after a vow of religion and after profession made in some religious place, are to be permitted to go out to read medicine or worldly laws. But if they have gone out and have not returned to their cloister within the space of two months, let them be avoided by all as excommunicates, and let them be heard in no cause if they wish to furnish advocacy. But, having returned, in choir, chapter, refectory, and other things let them [always] exist as last among the brothers, and, unless perhaps from the mercy of the Apostolic See, let them lose hope of every promotion.

> Religiosi professi, exeuntes ad audiendas leges vel physicam, nisi infra duos menses ad claustrum redeant, excommunicati sunt, et in nulla causa patrocinari possunt, et in choro, et in capitulo et ceteris erunt ultimi, et sine dispensatione Papae non promoventur.
>
> Alexander III. in concilio Turonensi.
>
> Non magnopere antiqui hostis invidia +infirma membra ecclesiae praecipitare laborat, sed manum mittit ad desiderabiliora eius, et electos quoque nititur supplantare, dicente scriptura: "Escae eius electi. "Multorum siquidem casum operari se reputat, ubi pretiosius aliquod membrum ecclesiae sua fuerit calliditate detractum. Et Inde nimirum est, quod in angelum lucis se more solito transfigurans, sub obtentu languentium fratrum consulendi corporibus et ecclesiastica negotia fidelius pertractandi, regulares quosdam ad legendas leges et confectiones physicales ponderandas de claustris suis educit. Unde, ne sub occasione scientiae spirituales viri mundanis rursus actionibus involvantur, et in interioribus ex eo ipso deficiant, ex quo se aliis putant in exterioribus providere, per praesentis concilii assensum statuimus, ut nulli omnino post votum religionis, et post factam in aliquo loco religioso professionem ad physicam legesve mundanas legendas permittantur exire. Si vero exierint, et ad claustrum suum infra duorum mensium spatium non redierint, sicut excommunicati ab omnibus evitentur, et in nulla causa, si patrocinium praestare voluerint, audiantur. Reversi autem in choro, capitulo, mensa et ceteris ultimi fratrum [semper] exsistant, et, nisi forte ex misericordia sedis apostolicae, totius spem promotionis amittant.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A cleric who is the general procurator or justiciar of a secular prince is to be deposed, and, if he is a religious, he will be punished more gravely.

The same, in the Lateran Council.

But neither let any cleric presume to exercise the procurations of villages or even secular jurisdictions under any princes and secular men, so that he becomes their justiciar. But if anyone should attempt to act against these things, because, contrary to the teaching of the Apostle saying, "No one, serving as a soldier for God, is to involve himself in secular businesses," he acts secularly, let him be made alien from ecclesiastical ministry, because, neglecting clerical office, he immerses himself in the waves of the world so that he may please the powers [of the world]. We decree, however, that he is to be punished more rigorously if any one of the religious should dare to attempt any of the aforesaid things.

> Clericus, generalis procurator vel iustitiarius principis saecularis deponendus est, et, si religiosus est, gravius punietur.
>
> Idem in concilio Lateranensi.
>
> Sed nec procurationes villarum aut iurisdictiones etiam saeculares sub aliquibus principibus et saecularibus viris, ut iustitiarius eorum fiat, clericorum quisquam exercere praesumat. Si quis autem adversus haec venire tentaverit, quia contra doctrinam Apostoli, dicentis : " Nemo, militans Deo, implicet se saecularibus negotiis, " saeculariter agit ab ecclesiastico fiat ministerio alienus pro eo, quod, officio clericali neglecto fluctibus saeculi, ut potestatibus [saeculi] placeat, se immergit. Districtius autem decernimus puniendum, si religiosorum quisquam aliquid praedictorum ausus fuerit attentare.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A cleric exercising a judgment of blood is deposed from office and benefice, and one having the office of a secular provost is excommunicated if after being warned he does not desist.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

According to the Council of Toledo, it is not lawful for clerics constituted in sacred orders to conduct a judgment of blood. Whence we prohibit them either from carrying out mutilations of limbs themselves or from judging that they are to be inflicted. But if anyone should do any such thing, let him be deprived of honor and place. We command also, under threat of anathema, that no priest is to have the office of sheriff or secular provost. (And below: [cf. c. 7, On Life and Honorable Conduct III. 1.]) But if anyone should presume to act contrary to this and, having been admonished, should be unwilling to amend, let him be subject to excommunication.

> Clericus, iudicium sanguinis exercens, ab officio et beneficio deponitur et excommunicatus est habens officium praepositi saecularis, si monitus non desistat.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Clericis, in sacris ordinibus constitutis, ex concilio Toletano iudicium sanguinis agitare non licet. Unde prohibemus, ne aut per se truncationes membrorum faciant, aut iudicent inferendas. Quodsi quis tale quid fecerit, honore privetur et loco. Iubemus etiam sub interminatione anathematis, ne quis sacerdos officium habeat vicecomitis aut praepositi saecularis. (Et infra: [cf. c. 7. de vita et hon. III. 1.]) Si quis autem contra hoc venire praesumpserit, et commonitus emendare noluerit, excommunicationi subiaceat.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It is not lawful for clerics or monks to engage in business for the sake of profit. This first. Monks cannot have leased possessions in their own name. This second. A church ought not to be conceded to lay persons under title of lease. This third.

The same, to the Bishop of London.

According to the statutes of our predecessors, under threat of anathema we prohibit monks or clerics from engaging in business for the sake of profit, and monks from having farms in their own name either from clerics or from lay persons, and lay persons from holding churches at farm.

> Non licet clericis vel monachis lucri causa negotiari. Hoc primo Monachi nequeunt nomine proprio conductas possessiones habere. Hoc secundo. Laicis non debet ecclesia titulo conductionis concedi. Hoc tertio.
>
> Idem Londonensi Episcopo.
>
> Secundum instituta praedecessorum nostrorum sub interminatione anathematis prohibemus, ne monachi vel clerici causa lucri negotientur, et ne monachi vel a clericis vel a laicis suo nomine firmas habeant, neque laici ecclesias ad firmam teneant.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Incorrigible monks are expelled from a monastery, and the monastery will be reformed with brothers of another order if it cannot be reformed with monks of the same order.

The same, to the same.

It has been reported to our ears that the monks of H. live secularly and corrupt others by their example. And therefore we command that, with appeal removed, you compel them to observance of the monastic rule, or, if with rash daring they resist you, after they have been expelled, introduce into it brothers of another order if the aforesaid monastery cannot be reformed in its own order, so that the just may eat the labors of the impious and those men at last, covered with shame, may return to the observance of their order.

> Monachi incorrigibiles de monasterio expelluntur, et reformabitur monasterium de fratribus alterius ordinis, si de monachis eiusdem ordinis reformari non potest.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Relatum est auribus nostris, quod monachi de H. saeculariter vivunt, et alios exemplo suo corrumpunt. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus eos ad observantiam monasticae regulae appellatione remota compellas, vel, si tibi restiterint ausu temerario, eis eiectis, fratres alterius ordinis, si non potest praescriptum monasterium in suo ordine reformari, in illud inducas, ut labores impiorum iusti edant, et illi tandem rubore perfusi ad sui ordinis observantiam revertantur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Clerics in sacred orders are to be compelled, through subtraction of benefices, to desist from exercise of the office of notary.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Ascoli.

As we received from your report, when our venerable brother the Bishop of Ostia, formerly passing through your city, gave you a command that you bind with the bond of excommunication the priests, deacons [and subdeacons] whom he found there indiscriminately exercising the office of notary, and those who received public instruments from them, you, although you did this, afterward [nevertheless] dissembled concerning the subdeacons from the command of the said bishop, until you considered that the Apostolic See should be consulted as to how you ought to proceed against them and others constituted in sacred orders. Wherefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, with appeal set aside, through subtraction of [their] benefices you forbid clerics constituted in sacred orders the office of notary. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Kalends of December, in the fourteenth year of our pontificate. 1211.]

> Clerici in sacris compellendi sunt per beneficiorum subtractionem, ut desistant a tabellionatus exercitio.
>
> Innocentius III. Esculano Episcopo.
>
> Sicut te accepimus referente, +quum venerabilis frater noster Hostiensis episcopus olim per tuam transiens civitatem tibi dederit in mandatis, ut presbyteros, diaconos [et subdiaconos,] quos ibidem invenit passim tabellionatus officium exercentes, excommunicationis vinculo innodares, et eos, qui ab illis publica reciperent instrumenta, tu, licet id feceris, ex mandato [tamen] episcopi dicti dissimulasti postmodum de subdiaconis, donec qualiter contra ipsos et alios in sacris ordinibus constitutos deberes procedere, sedem duceres apostolicam consulendam. Quocirca Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus clericis in sacris ordinibus constitutis tabellionatus officium per beneficiorum [suorum] subtractionem appellatione postposita interdicas. [Dat. Lat. VI. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIV. 1211.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A cleric ought neither to dictate nor pronounce a sentence of blood, nor to exercise anything else through which there is a tendency toward vengeance of blood, nor ought he to furnish assistance in a vulgar purgation.

The same, in the General Council.

Let no cleric dictate or pronounce a sentence of blood; neither let him exercise vengeance of blood nor be present where it is exercised. But if anyone on the occasion of a statute of this kind should presume to inflict any loss upon churches or ecclesiastical persons, let him be restrained through ecclesiastical censure. Nor let any cleric dictate or write letters to be sent for vengeance of blood; whence in the courts of princes let this responsibility be committed not to clerics but to lay persons. Likewise, let no cleric be placed over routiers or crossbowmen, or men of blood of this kind; nor let a subdeacon, deacon, or priest exercise any art of surgery which brings burning or cutting. Nor let anyone bestow a rite of any blessing or consecration upon a purgation by boiling or cold water or glowing iron, the prohibitions concerning single combats or duels previously promulgated nevertheless remaining intact.

> Clericus nec dictare nec proferre sententiam sanguinis debet, nec quicquam aliud exercere, per quod ad vindictam sanguinis tendatur, vel purgatione vulgari opem praestare non debet.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Sententiam sanguinis nullus clericus dictet aut proferat, sed nec sanguinis vindictam exerceat, aut ubi exerceatur intersit. Si quis autem huiusmodi occasione statuti ecclesiis vel ecclesiasticis personis aliquod praesumpserit inferre dispendium, per censuram ecclesiasticam compescatur. Nec quisquam clericus literas dictet aut scribat pro vindicta sanguinis destinandas, unde in curiis principum haec sollicitudo non clericis, sed laicis committatur. Nullus quoque clericus ruptariis vel ballistariis, aut huiusmodi viris sanguinum praeponatur, nec ullam chirurgiae artem subdiaconus, diaconus vel sacerdos exerceat, quae adustionem vel incisionem inducit. Nec quisquam purgationi aquae ferventis vel frigidae seu ferri candentis ritum cuiuslibet benedictionis aut consecrationis impendat, salvis nihilominus prohibitionibus, de monomachiis sive duellis antea promulgatis.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: The constitution of the Council of Tours, punishing religious who hear laws or medicine, is a canon of a sentence incurred by the act itself, and those falling under it ought to be punished by the ordinaries. This first. Second, it extends the said constitution to those having dignities and personatus, and to priests.

Honorius III.

Upon the watchtower—(And below: [cf. c. 5, On Masters V. 5.]) Indeed, although the grace of the other sciences is deceitful and their beauty also vain, since the grain of the elect and the wine bringing forth virgins, according to the Prophet, is good above all things and is beautiful, nevertheless, because certain regulars, rejecting cloistral silence and the law of the Lord, converting souls and giving wisdom to little children, which they ought to have loved above gold and topaz, go away after the footprints of the flocks and turn themselves unlawfully to embrace the handmaids who desire the applause of peoples, against religious persons going out from cloisters to hear laws or medicine, our predecessor of happy memory Alexander formerly established in the Council of Tours that, unless they returned to the cloister within the space of two months, they were to be avoided by all as excommunicates and were to be heard in no cause if they wished to furnish advocacy. But, having returned, in choir, refectory, chapter, and other things let them exist as last among the brothers and, unless perhaps from the mercy of the Apostolic See, let them lose hope of every promotion.

But because some of such persons, on account of the diverse opinions of certain persons, assumed something of an excuse, we, wishing that such persons henceforth incur by the act itself a sentence of excommunication, by strictly commanding order that such persons, with the obstacle of appeal removed, be publicly announced as excommunicated and liable to the aforesaid punishments, both by the diocesans and their chapters and also by the other bishops in whose dioceses they study in this manner. [But because we desire the study of theology to be enlarged, so that, after the place of its tent has been enlarged, it may make its cords longer, so that the Catholic faith may be surrounded by an impregnable wall of warriors through whom it may be able to resist those ascending from the opposite side, we wish and command that this be extended to archdeacons, deans, plebani, provosts, cantors, and other clerics having personatus, as well as also to priests, unless they desist from these things within the aforesaid space, and that, with appeal set aside, it be firmly observed. For since there are many, etc. Given at Viterbo, on the tenth day before the Kalends of December, in the fourth year of our pontificate. 1219.]

Constitutio Turonensis concilii, puniens religiosos audientes leges vel physicam, est canon latae sententiae, et incidentes in illam debent per ordinarios puniri. Hoc primo. Secundo extendit dictam constitutionem ad habentes dignitates et personatus, et ad presbyteros.

Honorius III.

Super specula (Et infra: [cf. c. 5. de mag. V. 5.]) Sane, licet fallax sit gratia ceterarum scientiarum, et vana etiam pulchritudo, quum frumentum electorum et vinum germinans virgines iuxta prophetam sit bonum super omnia et sit pulchrum: quia tamen regulares quidam, claustrale silentium et legem Domini, animas convertentem et sapientiam dantem parvulis, quam super aurum et topazion amare debuerant, respuentes, abeunt post vestigia gregum, et illicite se convertunt ad pedissequas amplectendas, quae plausum desiderant populorum, Contra religiosas personas, de claustris exeuntes ad audiendum leges vel physicam, felicis memoriae Alexander praedecessor noster olim statuit in concilio Turonensi, ut, nisi infra duorum mensium spatium ad claustrum redierint, sicut excommunicati ab omnibus evitentur, et in nulla causa, si patrocinium praestare voluerint, audiantur. Reversi autem in choro, mensa, capitulo et ceteris ultimi fratrum exsistant, et, nisi forte ex misericordia sedis apostolicae, totius spem promotionis amittant. Verum, quia nonnulli ex talibus propter quorundam opiniones diversas excusationis aliquid assumebant, nos, volentes, ut tales de cetero ipso facto sententiam excommunicationis incurrant, districte praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus tam a dioecesanis et capitulis ipsorum, quam etiam a ceteris episcopis, in quorum dioecesibus in huiusmodi student, tales sublato appellationis obstaculo excommunicati et praedictis poenis obnoxii publice nuncientur. [Quia vero theologiae studium cupimus ampliari, ut dilatato sui tentorii loco et funiculos suos faciat longiores, ut sit fides catholica circumcincta muro inexpugnabili bellatorum, quibus resistere valeat adscendentibus ex adverso : ad archidiaconos, decanos, plebanos, praepositos, cantores et alios clericos personatus habentes, nec non et presbyteros, nisi ab his infra spatium praescriptum destiterint, hoc extendi volumus et mandamus, et appellatione postposita firmiter observari. *Nam quum sint multi etc. Dat. Viterbii X. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. IV. * 1219.]

Book IV

Compilation of the Decretals of Lord Pope Gregory IX

Book Four

> DECRETALIUM
>
> D. GREGORII PAPAE IX.
>
> COMPILATIO
>
> LIBER QUARTUS.

Title I: On Betrothals and Marriages

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Marriage is contracted by consent alone, nor is it invalidated if the custom of the homeland is not observed.

From the Council of Tribur.

A certain noble man from Francia took a noble woman from Saxony as wife according to the law of the Saxons, and kept her for many years and begot sons from her. But because the Saxons and the Frankish people do not use the same laws, he alleged that he had not betrothed her according to his own law, that is, the law of the Franks, or received her or endowed her, and, dismissing her, he brought in another. Concerning this the holy synod determined that the transgressor of the evangelical law is to be subjected to penance, separated from the second wife, and compelled to return to the first.

> DE SPONSALIBUS ET MATRIMONIIS.
>
> Matrimonium solo consensu contrahitur, nec invalidatur, si consuetudo patriae non servetur.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi.
>
> De Francia nobilis quidam homo nobilem mulierem de Saxonia lege Saxonum duxit in uxorem, tenuitque eam multis annis, et ex ea, filios procreavit. Verum quia non eisdem utuntur legibus Saxones et Francigenae, causatus est, quod eam non sua, id est Francorum lege desponsaverat, vel acceperat, vel dotaverat, dimissaque illa aliam superduxit. Diffinivit super hoc sancta synodus, ut ille transgressor evangelicae legis subiiciatur poenitentiae, et a secunda coniuge separetur, et ad priorem redire cogatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Betrothals for the future are dissolved if the betrothed dissolve them, even if they were sworn.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Furthermore, those who purely and without any condition gave their pledge [or] made an oath concerning contracting marriage are to be admonished and more diligently exhorted, and by every means induced to observe the pledge furnished or the oath made, and to join themselves as they promised. But if they are unwilling to admit one another, lest perhaps something worse happen from it—namely, that he take one whom he [always] hates—it appears that, after the manner of those who contract a partnership by oath or by the interposition of a pledge and afterward remit the same to one another, this can be tolerated with patience.

> Sponsalia de futuro dissolvuntur, si sponsi se dissolvunt, etiamsi fuerint iurata.
>
> Innocentius III. Exonensi Episcopo.
>
> Praeterea hi, qui de matrimonio contrahendo pure et sine omni conditione fidem dederunt [aut] iuramentum fecerunt, commonendi sunt et diligentius exhortandi, et modis omnibus inducendi, ut praestitam fidem vel iuramentum factum observent, et se, sicut promiserint coniungant. Si autem se adinvicem admittere noluerint; ne forte deterius inde contingat, ut talem scilicet ducat, quam [semper] odio habet: videtur, quod ad instar eorum, qui societatem iuramento vel interpositione fidei contrahunt, et postea eandem sibi remittunt, hoc possit in patientia tolerari.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If one older than seven years took as wife one younger than seven years and conducted her to his house, the justice of public honesty arises from such a contract. This is what it says by adhering to the letter. Panormitanus.

Pope Eugenius.

That young man who took a girl not yet seven years old, although age opposed it, nevertheless from human frailty perhaps attempted what he could not complete. Therefore, because in those things which are doubtful we ought to hold what we consider more certain, both on account of the honesty of the Church, since she is said to have been his wife, and on account of the aforesaid doubt, we command you to separate from him the cousin of the girl whom he afterward took.

> Si maior septennio duxit in uxorem minorem septennio, et eam traduxit ad domum, oritur ex tali contractu publicae honestatis iustitia. H. d. inhaerendo literae. Panorm.
>
> Eugenius Papa.
>
> Iuvenis ille, qui puellam nondum septennem duxit, quamvis aetas repugnaret, ex humana tamen fragilitate forsan tentavit quod complere non potuit. Quia igitur in his, quae dubia sunt, quod certius existimamus tenere debemus, tum propter honestatem ecclesiae, quia ipsa coniux ipsius fuisse dicitur, tum propter praedictam dubitationem, mandamus tibi, quatenus consobrinam ipsius puellae, quam postmodum duxit, dividas ab eodem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: From betrothals contracted with a blood relative arises the justice of public honesty.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Pavia.

It came to the hearing of our apostolate that, when H. Albericus, a citizen of Pavia, wished to give his daughter as wife to a certain one of the sons of L., he swore that, if he to whom she was betrothed could not have her because some eventuality intervened, he would join the same girl in marriage to another son whom L. had begotten of another wife. But after betrothals had been contracted by the first son, certain persons, approaching the church, affirmed with oaths interposed that consanguinity existed between them. And therefore the aforesaid H. strives to give the same woman to the other son, as he swore. But because it is written that a brother cannot have his brother's betrothed, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, instructing that you not permit him to fulfill his purpose, which opposes canonical reason, but, after admonition has been given, compel him by ecclesiastical rigor to do penance for the unlawful oath.

> Ex sponsalibus, contractis cum consanguinea, oritur publicae honestatis iustitia.
>
> Alexander III. Papiensi Episcopo.
>
> Ad audientiam nostri apostolatus pervenit, quod, quum H. Albericus, Papiensis civis, filiam suam cuidam filiorum L. dare vellet uxorem, iuravit, quod, si ille, cui desponsabatur, eam habere casu aliquo interveniente non posset, alteri filio, quem de alia uxore genuerat, eandem puellam matrimonio copularet. Contractis autem a filio priore sponsalibus, quidam, ad ecclesiam accedentes, consanguinitatem inter eos esse iuramentis interpositis firmaverunt. Ideoque praefatus H. eandem feminam dare alteri filio nititur, ut iuravit. Sed quoniam scriptum est, quod sponsam fratris frater habere non potest: discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus eum suum implere propositum, quod canonicae rationi obviat, non permittas, sed, ut poenitentiam agat de illicito iuramento, monitione praemissa, ecclesiastica districtione compellas.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If one betrothed for the future transfers himself to distant places before union, the betrothed woman freely contracts with another; nevertheless, if it stood through her that the marriage was not perfected, penance is imposed upon her.

The same, to the Archbishop of Palermo.

Concerning those who, after furnishing an oath, promise that they will take certain women and afterward, without the women's knowledge, leave the land, transferring themselves to other regions, we wish this to become known to you: that it will be free for the women themselves, if the deed has not proceeded further, to transfer themselves to other vows, yet after receiving penance for perjury if it stood through them that the marriage was not consummated. But if, etc. (cf. c. 3, On Conditions Appended IV. 3.)

> Si sponsus de futuro ante copulam ad remota se transfert, sponsa libere cum alio contrahit: si tamen per eam stetit, quo minus matrimonium perficeretur, sibi poenitentia imponitur.
>
> Idem Panormitano Archiepiscopo.
>
> De illis autem, qui praestito iuramento promittunt, se aliquas mulieres ducturos, et postea eis incognitis dimittunt terram, se ad partes alias transferentes, hoc tibi volumus innotescere, quod liberum erit mulieribus ipsis, si non est amplius in facto processum, ad alia se vota transferre, recepta tamen de periurio poenitentia, si per eas steterit, quo minus fuerit matrimonium consummatum. Si vero etc. (cf. c. 3. de cond. app. IV. 3.)

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Not every violence impedes the contract of marriage. This is what it says as to the title.

The same, to the Bishop of Padua.

Concerning a woman who was unwillingly delivered to and detained by a man, since there is a difference between one kind of force and another, and you thereafter expressed nothing certain to us as to whether consent afterward intervened, we can answer you nothing certain concerning it. But those, etc. (cf. c. 3, On a Marriage Contracted IV. 16.)

> Non omnis violentia impedit contractum matrimonii. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Idem Paduano Episcopo.
>
> De muliere quae est invita tradita viro et detenta, quum inter vim et vim sit differentia, et utrum postea consensus intercesserit, certum nobis nihil postea expressisti, nihil certum inde tibi possumus respondere. Illos autem etc. (cf. c. 3. de matr. contr. IV. 16.)

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If persons fit for marriage contract through obscure words, they are held to follow the common understanding of the words.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

From the letters which you transmitted concerning the matrimonial cause of a certain young man named R. and Mary, daughter of Gilbert of Saint-Léger, the solicitude which you observed in the examination of that business became known to us. But because, with the parties absent, we could not investigate the truth fully, nor remit the cause itself to you, from whom the woman's party is known to have appealed to our hearing, we considered that it should be committed to our venerable brothers the Bishops of Winchester, Hereford, and Bath. And therefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, instructing that, when the parties have been summoned by them, you compel the parties to approach their presence and, with contradiction and appeal ceasing, inviolably to observe what they shall judge.

But concerning that which you consulted near the end of the letters—what ought to be observed when betrothals are contracted between certain persons and one does not understand what the other proposes—we respond that the judge must examine whether those about to contract marriage are fit to do so in knowledge and age. Once this is known, if one did not understand what the other proposed, recourse is to be had to the common understanding of the word, and each is to be compelled to retain the words uttered in that sense which they are accustomed to produce in those understanding correctly. But as to what you asked—whether deference ought to be given to an appeal where, under its pretext, adultery or another crime is known to be about to be committed—we respond briefly to your consultation that, where it would be notorious that adultery or another crime would be committed if deference were given to an appeal interposed, we would not wish deference to be given. For we do not wish to furnish to anyone material for incest or adultery.

> Si aliqui, apti ad matrimonium, contrahunt per verba obscura, communem verborum intellectum sequi tenentur.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ex litteris, quas super causa matrimonii cuiusdam iuvenis R. nomine, et Mariae filiae Gileberti de sancto Leodegario transmisisti, sollicitudo nobis innotuit, quam in ipsius negotii examine servasti. Quia vero absentibus partibus veritatem nequivimus plenarie indagare, nec causam ipsam ad te remittere, a quo pars mulieris ad audientiam nostram noscitur appellasse: eam venerabilibus fratribus nostris Wintoniensi, Herfordensi et Bathorniensi episcopis duximus committendam. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus partes adire eorum praesentiam, quum ab eis fuerint evocatae, et quod ipsi iudicaverint inviolabiliter observare contradictione et appellatione cessante compellas. De hoc autem, quod circa finem literarum consuluisti, quid debeat observari, quando inter aliquos sponsalia contrahuntur, nec intelligit alter quod alter proponit, respondemus, quod inspiciendum est iudici, si matrimonium contracturi ad id faciendum sint idonei scientia et aetate. Quo cognito, si alter non intellexerit, quod alter proposuit, ad communem verbi intelligentiam recurratur, et cogatur uterque verba prolata in eo, sensu retinere, quem solent recte intelligentibus generare. Quod vero quaesivisti, an debeat appellationi deferri, ubi sub eius praetextu noscitur adulterium vel aliud crimen committendum consultationi tuae breviter respondemus, quod ubi notorium esset adulterium vel aliud crimen committendum, si appellationi interpositae deferretur, deferri nollemus. Nolumus enim incestus vel adulterii materiam aliquibus ministrare.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Between a betrothed woman and the blood relatives of the betrothed man arises an impediment of public honesty, impeding and dissolving a marriage to be contracted between them.

The same, to the Bishop of Vigevano.

No blood relative can in any way join to himself in marriage the betrothed woman of another, especially if she is near marriageable age.

Inter sponsam et consanguineos sponsi oritur impedimentum publicae honestatis, impediens et dirimens matrimonium inter eos contrahendum.

Idem Vigiliensi Episcopo.

Sponsam autem alterius, maxime si est nubili aetati proxima, nullus consanguineorum aliquo modo sibi potest matrimonio copulare.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: If a man and a woman promise one another that from that time they will hold themselves as spouses, a marriage of the present has been contracted. This is what it says, and it is a notable case.

The same, to the Abbots of Saint Edmund and Demer.

It was intimated to us on the part of the woman C. that Andrew before a certain priest and deacon, and very many others, clerics as well as lay persons, summoned for this purpose, furnished her an oath that from that time he would hold her as wife and preserve fidelity to her as to his wife. She likewise swore to the same Andrew that she would have him as husband and preserve fidelity to him as to her own man. This having been done, living together for a long time in the same house, they begot children for themselves. But as time proceeded, the aforesaid A., contrary to the oath furnished, left her and the children begotten of her and withdrew from living together with them.

Therefore, because it is lawful for no one to dismiss his wife without manifest cause of fornication, and even then he ought either to reconcile her to himself [or] to remain continent while she is living, nor ought we to sustain that the aforesaid Andrew violate the religious obligation of the oath furnished, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, instructing that, after the truth of the matter has been more diligently investigated, if you find it to be so as was said above, after the woman brought in, whom he has, has first been dismissed, you compel the same Andrew, that, taking counsel for his salvation, he return to his wife and treat her with marital affection, and take care to expiate his guilt by worthy penance, by ecclesiastical censure after admonition has been given. But if perhaps he should be unwilling to acquiesce in your admonition, with every occasion and appeal removed, bind him and the woman brought in with the bond of excommunication, and command that they be more carefully avoided by all as excommunicates until worthy satisfaction.

> Si vir et mulier invicem promittunt, quod ab eo tempore se pro coniugibus habebunt, contractum est matrimonium de praesenti. H. d. et est casus notabilis.
>
> Idem Abbatibus sancti Eadmundi et Demer.
>
> Ex parte C. mulieris nobis intimatum est, quod Andreas sibi coram sacerdote quodam et diacono, et aliis plerisque tam clericis quam laicis ad hoc convocatis, iuramentum praestitit, quod eam ab eo tempore pro coniuge teneret, et ei sicut uxori suae fidem servaret. Ipsa quoque eidem Andreae iuravit, se illum pro marito habituram, et fidem ei tanquam viro proprio servaturam. Quo facto in eadem domo diu cohabitantes sibi liberos procreaverunt. Procedente vero tempore praenominatus A. contra iuramentum praestitum reliquit eandem et filios ex ea procreatos, et ab eorum cohabitatione recessit. Quia igitur nemini licet uxorem suam sine manifesta causa fornicationis dimittere, et tunc eam sibi [vel] reconciliare debet, aut ipsa vivente continere, nec nos sustinere debemus, ut praedictus Andreas iuramenti praestiti religionem infringat, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligentius inquisita, si, prout superius dictum est, ita esse inveneritis, eundem Andream, ut suae saluti consulens, et superinducta, quam habet, prius dimissa, ad uxorem suam redeat, et eam maritali affectione pertractet, et reatum suum condigna satagat poenitentia expiare, monitione praemissa per ecclesiasticam censuram cogatis. Quodsi commonitioni vestrae acquiescere forte noluerit vos eum et superinductam omni occasione et appellatione remota excommunicationis vinculo innodetis, et usque ad dignam satisfactionem praecipiatis ab omnibus sicut excommunicatos cautius evitari.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: He who swore to contract with a certain woman, if no impediment exists, is compelled by ecclesiastical censure to contract.

The same, to the Bishop of Poitiers.

We received from the letters of our venerable brother, Silvanus the bishop, that, when two noble men of his episcopate, namely G. of Monstra and B. of Mauritania, had sons and daughters who were approaching puberty, and in hope of reconciling peace between them thus agreed with one another that they would join them to one another in mutual marriages. And both the fathers and the children promised under oath that they would do this; among them, indeed, G., with the father consenting, swore once and again that he would take the daughter of the other as wife. When he wished to pass to other vows, the bishop wished to compel him to fulfill what he had sworn. He appealed to our hearing, and, although the other party sent its messenger to us, he neither came nor transmitted any representative for himself.

Therefore, because it is dangerous for the aforesaid G. to act against his oath, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, instructing that, when you have been requested concerning this, you summon each party before your presence and, after the arguments on each side have been more fully heard and discussed, if this is established to you, admonish him and, if he does not acquiesce in the admonitions, compel him by ecclesiastical censure to receive her as wife and treat her with marital affection, unless a reasonable cause stands in the way. But if he should wish to advance a reasonable cause, hear it with every diligence and care, and decide it by a canonical conclusion with every appeal ceasing. Moreover, if, after being lawfully admonished, he should contemn obeying your judgment, bind him and his father, if the father should presume to support him in his malice, with the bond of excommunication, and prohibit all divine offices, except the baptism of little children and the penances of the dying, from being celebrated throughout all their land.

Qui iuravit cum aliqua contrahere, si non subest impedimentum, per censuram ecclesiasticam contrahere compellitur.

Idem Pictaviensi Episcopo.

Ex literis venerabilis fratri nostri Silvani episcopi accepimus, quod, quum duo nobiles viri sui episcopatus, G. scilicet de Monstra et B. de Mauritania filios et filias impubescentes haberent, et spe pacis inter eos conciliandae ita inter se convenerunt, quod eos mutuis adinvicem matrimoniis copularent. Et hoc tam patres, quam filii sub iuramento se promisere facturos, inter quos siquidem G. filiam alterius, consentiente patre, se semel et iterum iuravit ducere in uxorem. Quo volente ad alia vota migrare, eum episcopus compellere voluit, ut quod iuraverat adimpleret. Ipse ad audientiam nostram appellavit, et, altera parte nuncium suum ad nos destinante, ipse nec venit, nec responsalem aliquem pro se transmisit. Quia igitur praedicto G. periculosum est, contra suum iuramentum venire, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, quum exinde fueris requisitus, utramque partem ante tuam convoces praesentiam, et, rationibus hinc inde plenius auditis et agitatis si hoc tibi constiterit, eum moneas, et, si non acquieverit monitis, ecclesiastica censura compellas, ut ipsam, nisi rationabilis causa obstiterit, in uxorem recipiat, et maritali affectione pertractet. Si vero rationabilem causam praetendere voluerit, eam cum omni diligentia et studio audias, et fine canonico omni appellatione cessante decidas. Ceterum si legitime monitus iudicio tuo parere contemserit eum et patrem, si fovere ipsum in sua malitia praesumserit, excommunicationis vinculo astringas et in tota terra ipsorum omnia divina praeter baptisma parvulorum et poenitentias morientium prohibeas officia celebrari.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: By ecclesiastical censure a father is compelled to restore to his son the latter's wife, whom he unjustly detained or detains.

The same, to the Archbishops, Bishops, and Other Prelates Constituted throughout England.

It is not unknown to you, as we judge, how Henry, the illustrious King of the English, on account of the discord which, as sins demanded, has arisen between him and his sons, detains their wives [namely, the daughters of our dearest son in Christ Louis, the illustrious King of the Franks], for whose restoration to them [the same] King of the Franks [and the sons of the aforesaid King of the English] and his sons-in-law offered solicitous prayers to us. We therefore, [more earnestly] considering that it is just and honorable that husbands should seek their wives, and wishing with ready spirit to acquiesce in the prayers of the same [King of the Franks and his sons-in-law not only in those things which we are held to effect from the obligation of office, but also] in all things which do not disagree with justice, admonished the aforesaid King of England earnestly enough and attentively, and gave him a command that, at the admonition of [our venerable brothers] the Archbishop of Tarentaise and the Bishop of Clermont, and of [his beloved son] the Prior of the Carthusians, or in his place the Prior of Mont-Dieu if he cannot be present, or of two of these if three cannot be present, he not postpone restoring the wives to his sons within forty days after receipt of our letters. But if he does not restore them to their husbands within the aforesaid term, by apostolic authority we command that the whole province within which they are detained, and to which they are transferred, for as long as they are there and until they are restored to their husbands, cease from all divine offices except the baptism of little children and the penance of the dying. Hence it is that by apostolic writings, instructing, we command [and by commanding instruct] all of you that you solicitously admonish the same King of the English to restore them and induce him by exhortations, setting before him that it is no less expedient for him to restore them than for their husbands to receive them.

And if, according to the command and your admonition, he does not restore their wives to his sons within a certain term, from then on, in whichever of your provinces they are detained or [to which] they are transferred, for as long as they are there, celebrate no divine offices except the baptism of little children and the penances of the dying, nor permit them in any way to be celebrated, with every [contradiction concerning these things and] appeal ceasing; knowing for certain that, if any should attempt to act against our interdict, which we do not believe, by the Lord's authority they will carry away the punishment due for their rashness and transgression.

> Per censuram ecclesiasticam pater compellitur restituere filio eius uxorem, quam iniuste detinuit vel detinet.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopis, Episcopis et aliis Praelatis per Angliam constitutis.
>
> Non est vobis, sicut arbitramur, incognitum, qualiter Henricus illustris rex Anglorum pro discordia, quae inter ipsum et filios suos peccatis exigentibus est suborta, uxores eorum [filias videlicet carissimi in Christo filii nostri Ludovici illustris regis Francorum] detineat, pro quibus sibi restituendis [idem] rex Francorum [et filii praedicti regis Angliae] et generi sui preces sollicitas nobis porrexerunt. Nos itaque [studiosius] attendentes, iustum et honestum esse, ut viri suas petant uxores, et precibus eiusdem [regis Francorum et generorum suorum non solum in his quae ex officii debito tenemur efficere, sed etiam] in omnibus, quae a iustitia non discordant, volentes prompto animo acquiescere, praefatum regem Angliae studiose satis et attente monuimus, eique dedimus in mandatis, ut ad commonitionem [venerabilium fratrum nostrorum] archiepiscopi Tarentasiensis et episcopi Claremontensis, et [dilecti filii sui] Carthusiani prioris, vel loco eius prioris de Monte Dei si ipse adesse non poterit, vel duorum ex his, si tres non potuerint interesse, uxores filiis suis infra XL. dies post nostrarum literarum susceptionem restituere non postponat. Si vero eas infra praescriptum terminum viris suis non restituerit, apostolica auctoritate praecipimus, ut tota provincia, infra quam detinentur, et ad quam transferentur, quamdiu ibi fuerint, donec viris suis restituentur, ab omnibus divinis officiis praeter baptisma parvulorum et poenitentia morientium cesset. Inde est, quod universitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus [et mandando praecipimus], quatenus eundem regem Anglorum ad eas restituendas sollicite moneatis et exhortationibus inducatis, proponentes ei, quod non minus expedit sibi eas restituere, quam viris suis ipsas recipere. Et, si iuxta mandatum et commonitionem vestram filiis suis uxores suas infra certum terminum non restituerit, ex tunc, in quacunque provinciarum vestrarum detinentur vel [ad quas] transferuntur, donec ibi fuerint, nulla divina officia praeter baptismum parvulorum et poenitentias morientium celebretis vel permittatis aliquatenus celebrari omni [super his contradictione et] appellatione cessante, sciturі pro certo, quia si qui contra interdictum nostrum, quod non credimus, venire tentaverint, suae temeritatis et transgressionis poenam debitam auctore Domino reportabunt.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: The statement of one person asserting an impediment impedes an unsworn marriage from being contracted.

The same, to the Bishop of Saint Agatha.

Furthermore, concerning the woman who is sought by a man, whose blood relative proposes that he sinned with her but refuses publicly to confess this on account of the woman's fear and power, we respond to your providence in this manner: that, unless an oath had intervened, you are strictly to prohibit the marriage itself from being made, lest something worse occur from it.

> Dictum unius, asserentis impedimentum, impedit matrimonium contrahendum non iuratum.
>
> Idem Episcopo sanctae Agathae.

> Praeterea de muliere, quae a viro impetitur, cuius consanguineus cum ea se deliquisse proponit, sed, hoc publice confiteri recusat propter metum et potentiam mulieris, providentiae tuae taliter respondemus, ut matrimonium ipsum fieri, nisi iuramentum intervenisset, districte prohibeas, ne deterius inde contingat.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: If a woman unwillingly contracts with someone and does not afterward consent to him, the marriage holds if she afterward marries another. Thus it is commonly summarized. And according to this understanding this would be an open case that a marriage contracted through fear is void by the law itself. Nevertheless, this is not clearly gathered from the letter.

The same, to the Procurator and Canons of Sora.

Coming to the Apostolic See, Mariota, bearer of the present letters, showed to us by a suppliant to us intimation that, while she was constituted in adolescence, she loved a certain young man [named E.] to such an extent that each of them between themselves furnished an oath concerning contracting marriage under the testimony of three persons. Her parents, ignorant of this, delivered her, unwilling and protesting, as wife to a certain other man, whom she so abhorred that she by no means permitted herself to be known by him. And when she publicly confessed that she had been known by and sworn to the former man, the Bishop of Sora, who then existed, caused them to come before his presence, and, it being known and proved that so close a line of consanguinity existed between them that they could not and ought not by law to be joined together, separated them from one another.

Moreover, when the cause itself was being treated and she was unwilling to consent to the man to whom she had been delivered by her parents, he took another as wife, and she publicly married in the sight of the Church a certain man named T. At last, when she had begotten a son by him, the father of T., seeking an occasion for obtaining a judicial separation, objected to her that she could not have his son as husband because she had first been betrothed to the other man, who is now dead. But because we did not apply faith to his assertion, as neither ought we to have done, nor could we pass this over in silence, we considered that she should be remitted to you, and we command your discretion by apostolic writings, instructing that, after the truth of this matter has been more fully ascertained, if you find that the aforesaid woman was separated from the former man by judgment of the Church, was taken as wife by the same T. without contradiction of the Church, and that the man to whom she was joined by her parents unwilling and resisting has departed from the present life, after admonition has been given, compel the aforesaid T. to receive the aforesaid Mariota with the occasion set aside, and to take care to love her as his wife and treat her with marital affection. Otherwise, subject him, the woman brought in, and also his father, if they resist this, to excommunication, and cause the sentence itself to be inviolably observed until worthy satisfaction.

> Si mulier invita cum aliquo contrahat, nec in eum postea consentiat, tenet matrimonium, si alteri postea nubit. Ita communiter summatur. Et secundum hunc intellectum esset hic casus apertus, quod matrimonium metu contractum esset ipso iure nullum. Hoc tamen clare non colligitur ex litera.
>
> Idem Procuratori et Canonicis Soranis.
>
> Veniens ad apostolicam sedem Mariota latrix praesentium supplici nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, dum esset in adolescentia constituta, quendam adolescentem [E. nomine] adamavit in tantum, quod uterque inter se de matrimonio contrahendo sub trium personarum testimonio praestitit iuramentum. Quod parentes mulieris ipsius ignorantes, eam invitam et reclamantem in uxorem cuidam alii tradiderunt, quem ita exhorruit, quod se ab eo nullo modo cognosci permisit. Quumque publice fateretur, quod a priori viro cognita esset atque iurata, episcopus Soranus, qui tunc erat, eos ante praesentiam suam fecit venire, et, cognito atque probato, quod ita proxima inter eos esset linea consanguinitatis, quod insimul non possunt, nec debent de iure coniungi, ipsos ab invicem separavit. Ceterum quum causa ipsa tractaretur, et viro, cui tradita fuerat a parentibus, consentire nollet, ipse aliam in uxorem traduxit, et illa cuidam viro T. nomine publice in conspectu ecclesiae nupsit. Tandem quum de illo filium genuisset, pater ipsius T., quaerens occasionem divortium faciendi, ei opposuit, quod filium suum non potuit in virum habere eo, quod alii, qui nunc defunctus est, prius desponsata fuisset. +Quia vero assertioni eius fidem, sicut nec debuimus, non adhibuimus, nec hoc potuimus sub silentio praeterire, eam ad vos duximus remittendam, et discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus, huius rei veritate plenius comperta, si inveneritis, quod praedicta mulier a priori viro iudicio ecclesiae fuerit separata, et ab eodem T. sine contradictione ecclesiae in uxorem traducta, et ille, cui a parentibus invita et renitens fuit copulata, de praesenti vita decessit, praedictum T. monitione praemissa compellatis, ut praefatam Mariotam postposita occasione recipiat, et sicut uxorem suam diligere studeat et maritali affectione tractare. Alioquin eum et superinductam, et patrem etiam eius, si huic rei restiterint, excommunicationi subdatis, et usque ad dignam satisfactionem sententiam ipsam faciatis inviolabiliter observari.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: If it is feared that violence will be inflicted upon a girl concerning whose marriage there is litigation, the judge ought to provide for her a safe and honorable place until the cause is terminated. This is what it says, and it is a text very capable of being alleged.

The same, to the Bishop of Pavia.

Since consent has no place where fear or coercion intervenes, it is necessary that, where someone's assent is required, the material of coercion be repelled. But marriage is contracted by consent alone, and, where inquiry is made concerning it, the person whose intention is to be investigated ought to enjoy full security, lest through fear that person say that what is hated is pleasing, and there follow the outcome which is accustomed to proceed from unwilling nuptials. Wherefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, instructing that you cause the girl, concerning whose marriage between your citizens the Siderii and the Canes a question is debated, to be kept honorably in the house in which you placed her in such a way that she need fear nothing, until the aforesaid cause has been terminated by a canonical conclusion, and the sentence can be put into execution without anyone's contradiction.

Si timetur inferri violentia puellae, de cuius matrimonio agitur, debet iudex sibi providere locum tutum et honestum, donec causa terminetur. H. d. et est textus multum allegabilis.

Idem Papiensi Episcopo.

Quum locum non habeat consensus, ubi metus vel coactio intercedit, necesse est, ut, ubi assensus cuiusquam requiritur, coactionis materia repellatur. Matrimonium autem solo consensu contrahitur, et, ubi de ipso quaeritur, plena debet securitate ille gaudere, cuius est animus indagandus, ne per timorem dicat sibi placere quod odit, et sequatur exitus, qui de invitis solet nuptiis provenire. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus puellam, de cuius matrimonio inter Siderios et Canes cives tuos quaestio ventilatur, in domo, in qua eam posuisti ita, quod nihil eam timere oporteat, facias honeste teneri, donec praedicta causa fine canonico terminata fuerit, et sententia sine contradictione cuiusquam valeat exsecutioni mandari.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Betrothals for the future, if intercourse followed, are not dissolved by betrothals of the present; otherwise the betrothals of the present hold, unless they were contracted through fear which could have befallen a steadfast man.

The same.

Coming to us, G., bearer of the present letters, showed to us by his report that he received a certain woman in his house, by whom he had offspring, and to whom he furnished a pledge before many persons that he would take her as wife. Meanwhile, however, when he spent the night at the house of his neighbor, the latter's daughter lay with him that night; finding them together in one bed, the girl's father compelled him to betroth her through words of the present. Recently constituted in our presence, he consulted us as to which one he ought rather to adhere to. But because it by no means became known to us whether he knew the first woman after the pledge was furnished, we therefore command that you diligently inquire into the truth of the matter, and, if you find that he knew the first woman after furnishing the pledge, cause him to remain with her; otherwise, cause him to adhere as wife to the second, unless he betrothed her after being coerced by fear which could befall a steadfast man.

> Sponsalia de futuro, si secuta est copula, non solvuntur per sponsalia de praesenti; alias tenent sponsalia de praesenti, nisi per metum, qui potuisset cadere in constantem virum, contracta sint.
>
> Idem.
>
> Veniens ad nos G. lator praesentium sua nobis relatione monstravit, quod in domo sua mulierem quandam recepit, de qua prolem habuit, et cui fidem coram pluribus praestitit, quod eam duceret in uxorem. Interim autem, quum apud domum vicini sui pernoctaverit, eius filia nocte illa secum concubuit, quos pater puellae simul in uno lecto inveniens, ipsum eam per verba de praesenti desponsare coegit. Qui nuper in praesentia nostra constitutus nos consuluit, cui potius adhaerere deberet. Quia vero nequaquam innotuit nobis, utrum post fidem praestitam primam cognoverit, Ideoque mandamus, quatenus rei veritatem diligenter inquiras, et, si inveneris, quod primam post fidem praestitam cognoverit, ipsum cum ea facias remanere; alioquin secundae, nisi metu coactus, qui posset in virum constantem cadere, eam desponsaverit, adhaerere facias ut uxori.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: He who swore to contract with a certain woman, if he wishes to enter religion, ought first to contract so that the oath may be observed, and before carnal union he will be able to enter a monastery.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Committed—(And below:) Your fraternity signified to us that a certain learned and noble man, when the paternal inheritance devolved upon him, gave a noble woman a pledge concerning contracting marriage in the presence of certain persons, and affirmed by an oath furnished upon the sacrosanct Gospels that within two years he would contract with her through words of the present. But now, led by a private law, he sighs to pass to the fruit of a better life, and, consulting your prudence concerning this, suspects that before the marriage has been contracted he can lawfully pass to the habit of monastic religion, because, if he had contracted, he could, with her unwilling, pass within two months to the religion of a stricter life, according to the statutes of the ancient canons renewed by our constitution. Therefore, because your fraternity considered that we should be consulted concerning this, we respond to your fraternity in this manner: it is safer for him, with the religious obligation of the oath observed, first to contract and afterward, if he chooses, to migrate to religion, provided that carnal union is not known to have intervened after the first betrothal.

> Qui iuravit cum aliqua contrahere, si vult religionem ingredi, debet primo contrahere, ut iuramentum servetur, et ante copulam carnalem monasterium ingredi poterit.
>
> Idem Exonensi Episcopo.
>
> Commissum (Et infra:) Significavit nobis fraternitas tua, quod quidam literatus et nobilis, quum ad eum paterna hereditas devolveretur, cuidam mulieri nobili de contrahendo matrimonio fidem dedit quibusdam praesentibus, et se cum ea infra biennium per verba de praesenti contracturum, praestito iuramento super sacrosancta evangelia firmavit; nunc autem privata lege ductus ad frugem melioris vitae transire suspirat, tuamque super hoc consulens prudentiam, ante matrimonium contractum ad monasticae religionis habitum licite posse transire suspicatur, quia, si contraxisset, ea invita infra duos menses, iuxta veterum canonum statuta nostra constitutione innovata, ad arctioris vitae religionem posset transire. Quia igitur super hoc tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod tutius est ei, religione iuramenti servata, prius contrahere, et postea, si elegerit, ad religionem migrare; si tamen post primam desponsationem copula non dignoscitur intervenisse carnalis.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: One who swore to contract with a certain person ought rather to be admonished than compelled to contract. This is what it says by adhering to the letter.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Rapallo.

Your fraternity asked us by what censure a woman ought to be compelled who, neglecting the religious obligation of an oath, refuses to marry him whom she affirmed by an oath interposed that she would marry. You asked also whether she whose husband polluted the bed of her mother can, since she desires to become a mother, pass to other vows while her husband is living. To this we respond to you briefly that, since marriages ought by law to be free, the woman who swore that she would marry is to be admonished rather than compelled, especially since coercions [of this kind] are accustomed frequently to have difficult outcomes. Indeed, she whose husband committed adultery and incest with her mother ought neither to be joined carnally to her husband nor, while he is living, to enter marriage with another.

> Qui iuravit cum aliqua contrahere, moneri potius debet, quam compelli, ut contrahat. H. d. inhaerendo literae.
>
> Lucius III. Rapalensi Episcopo.
>
> Requisivit a nobis tua fraternitas, qua censura mulier compelli debeat, quae, iurisiurandi religione neglecta, nubere renuit cui se nupturam interposito iuramento firmavit. Quaesivisti etiam, utrum ea, cuius vir matris torum polluit, ad alia vota, quum mater fieri desideret, viro possit vivente transire. Ad quod tibi breviter respondemus, quod mulier, quae se nupturam iuravit, quum libera debeant esse de iure matrimonia, monenda est potius quam cogenda, maxime quum coactiones [huiusmodi] difficiles soleant exitus frequenter habere. Illa sane, cuius vir cum matre adulterium et incestum commisit, nec viro suo coniungi carnaliter, nec eo vivente cum alio matrimonium inire debebit.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: Pendency of litigation concerning a marriage does not impede a second marriage from being contracted if the first was void.

Urban III.

Since in the Apostolic See, over which, although undeserving, we preside, resides the mastery of all ecclesiastical discipline, it is worthy and consonant with reason that, as often as any doubt arises concerning a business of the Church, recourse be had to the judgment of its deliberation. We understood indeed that, when a matrimonial question between the bailiff of N. and his wife was being treated before you, after witnesses had been produced and their attestations discussed by diligent examination, before publication of the testimony the same bailiff, returning to his own region, publicly alleged that a sentence of separation between him and his wife had [been] promulgated by judgment of the Church; and thus, after falsehood had been suggested to all, he presumed to join to himself a certain other woman ignorant of the deed. But afterward, when letters from the Apostolic See had been obtained concerning the question of the prior marriage, the delegated judges pronounced a sentence of separation.

But because you assert that the bailiff and the woman whom he brought in consented to one another while the litigation concerning the former wife was pending, your fraternity considered that we should be consulted as to whether such persons are to be admitted to marriage. We therefore, by authority of the present letters, respond to your consultation in this manner: after suitable penance has been imposed upon the man and carnal intercourse forbidden during the time of that penance, afterward they can remain in marital union. [But concerning, etc.; cf. c. 5, On Conditions Appended IV. 5.]

> Litispendentia super matrimonio non impedit secundum matrimonium contrahi, si primum erat nullum.
>
> Urbanus III.
>
> Quum in apostolica sede, cui licet immeriti praesidemus, magisterium resideat totius ecclesiasticae disciplinae, dignum est et consonum rationi, ut, quoties circa negotium ecclesiae aliquid dubietatis emerserit, ad ipsius deliberationis arbitrium recurratur. Intelleximus siquidem, quod, quum inter villicum de N. et uxorem eius coram te matrimonii quaestio tractaretur, productis testibus et attestationibus eorum diligenti examine discussis, ante publicationem testium idem villicus reversus ad propria, publice inter se et uxorem suam proposuit sententiam divortii iudicio ecclesiae [esse] promulgatam, et sic, falsitate omnibus suggesta, quandam aliam mulierem facti nesciam sibi copulare praesumpsit. Postmodum vero super prioris matrimonii quaestione literis a sede apostolica impetratis, delegati iudices sententiam divortii protulerunt. Verum quia villicum et mulierem, quam superinduxit, pendente lite prioris uxoris invicem asseris consensisse, tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, utrum tales sint ad matrimonia admittendi. Nos igitur auctoritate praesentium Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, imposita viro poenitentia competenti, et infra ipsius poenitentiae tempus carnali commercio interdicto, postmodum in maritali copula poterunt remanere. [Super eo vero etc. cf. c. 5. de cond. app. IV. 5.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: A wife not made certain of the death of her husband cannot contract, although she does not know what has become of a husband who has been absent for a long time.

Clement III, to the Bishop of Zaragoza.

Placed in our presence, you asked of us what is to be done by you concerning certain women constituted in your diocese who, although they have now waited beyond seven years for their husbands absent on account of captivity or pilgrimage, cannot be made certain concerning their life or death, although they have applied diligent solicitude concerning this, and, on account of youthful age or the frailty of the flesh, cannot remain continent, and petition to be joined to others in marriage. But since the Apostle says, "A woman is bound to her husband for as long as her husband lives," we therefore respond to your consultation in this manner: however great a number of years they remain thus, while their husbands live they cannot canonically pass over to union with others, nor are you by authority of the Church to permit them to contract until they receive certain report of the death of their husbands. [Given at the Lateran.]

> Uxor, non certificata de morte viri, contrahere non potest, quamvis ignoret, quid sit de marito, qui longo tempore abfuit.
>
> Clemens III. Caesaraugustensi Episcopo.
>
> In praesentia nostra positus a nobis quaesivisti, quid agendum tibi sit de quibusdam mulieribus in tua dioecesi constitutis, quae, quum viros suos causa captivitatis vel peregrinationis absentes iam ultra septennium praestolatae fuerint, nec certificari possunt de vita vel de morte ipsorum, licet super hoc sollicitudinem adhibuerint diligentem, et pro iuvenili aetate seu fragilitate carnis nequeunt continere, petentes aliis matrimonio copulari. Quum autem dicat Apostolus: "Mulier tam diu alligata est viro, quam diu vir eius vivit," Consultationi ergo tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quantocunque annorum numero ita remaneant, viventibus viris suis non possunt ad aliorum consortium canonice convolare, nec tu eas auctoritate ecclesiae permittas contrahere, donec certum nuncium recipiant de morte virorum. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: The contract of marriage with a female sinner wishing to correct herself profits toward remission of sins.

The same.

Among the works of charity which are set before us by authority of sacred Scripture to be imitated, as evangelical authority testifies, it is not the least to call one who errs back from the path of her error*, and especially to invite women living voluptuously and admitting indiscriminately any persons whatsoever to intercourse of the flesh to the lawful fellowship of the bed, so that they may live chastely. Therefore, considering this, by apostolic authority* we establish that, for all who draw public women from the brothel and take them as wives, what they do shall profit toward remission of sins. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the third day before the Kalends of May, in the first year of our pontificate. 1198.]

> Contractus matrimonii cum peccatrice, volente se corrigere, proficit ad remissionem peccatorum.
>
> Idem.
>
> Inter opera caritatis, quae imitanda nobis auctoritate sacrae paginae proponuntur, sicut evangelica testatur auctoritas, non minimum est, errantem ab erroris sui semita revocare, +ac praesertim mulieres voluptuose viventes et admittentes indifferenter quoslibet ad commercium carnis, ut caste vivant, ad legitimum tori consortium invitare. Hoc igitur attendentes, auctoritate apostolica Statuimus, ut omnibus, qui publicas mulieres de lupanari extraxerint et duxerint in uxores, quod agunt in remissionem proficiat peccatorum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. III. Kal. Maii Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1198.]

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A marriage contracted by force acquires validity through voluntary cohabitation. This is what it says, and it is alleged daily.

The same.

To that which you intimated to us by your letters concerning a certain female parishioner of yours whom her stepfather joined matrimonially to a certain German, we respond in this manner: although, when she was still eleven years old, she had at the beginning been delivered to him unwilling and resisting, nevertheless, because afterward, by living with him for a year and a half, she appears to have consented, she is to be compelled to return to him. Nor henceforth are witnesses to be received if the aforesaid woman should name any to be produced in order to prove that she did not consent to him, since the delay of so much time excludes proof of this kind. We therefore command that on this account you not omit to compel by ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed, each to treat the other with marital affection, unless perhaps they wish together to pass to religion, with penance enjoined upon them because each passed to alien and unlawful sexual unions. [Given at the Lateran.]

> Matrimonium, per vim contractum, cohabitatione spontanea convalescit. H. d. et quotidie allegatur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ad id, quod per tuas literas nobis intimasti de quadam parochiana tua, quam suus vitricus cuidam Teutonico matrimonialiter copulavit, taliter respondemus, quod, quamvis undecim annos adhuc habens, ab initio invita fuisset ei tradita et renitens, tamen, quia postmodum per annum et dimidium sibi cohabitans consensisse videtur, ad ipsum est cogenda redire. Nec de cetero recipiendi sunt testes, si quos memorata mulier ad probandum, quod non consenserit in eundem, nominaverit producendos, quum mora tanti temporis huiusmodi probationem excludat. Mandamus igitur, ut propter hoc non omittas, quo minus appellatione remota per censuram ecclesiasticam utrumque compellas ad alterum maritali affectione tractandum, nisi forte vellent ad religionem pariter convolare, poenitentia eis iniuncta pro eo, quod ad alienos et illicitos concubitus uterque transivit. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Betrothals for the future, even if sworn, are dissolved by second betrothals of the present, but not by second betrothals for the future.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Ferentino.

As we received from the letters of your fraternity, when L., your parishioner, had affirmed by his own oath into the hands of the father of the woman P. that he would take P. as wife, her father swearing that he would deliver her to him as wife, and it did not stand through the man, but rather through the woman, that matrimonial solemnity did not follow between them, after four or five years had later elapsed, the same L. betrothed the woman E. through words of the present, as her blood relatives assert, on account of which the brother of the aforesaid P. lodged his question in your presence. But because you ask to be instructed by our response as to what is to be done concerning these things, we respond to your petition in this manner: if it is established to you that the same L. betrothed the woman P. through words of the future, but E. through words of the present, after suitable penance has been imposed upon him because he made the first pledge void—unless perhaps in his oath he fixed a certain term within which he would take the said P. as wife, and it was not owing to him that he did not consummate the marriage at the appointed term—judge the marriage contracted in the second place lawful and compel him by ecclesiastical rigor, if there is need, to observe it, unless perhaps something else should stand in the way which ought to impede him.

But if perhaps he contracted betrothals with each through words of the future, compel him to observe the first oath, just as it was lawfully made, being about to enjoin penance upon him for the second. But if these things are not fully established to you, continue to take cognizance of the cause until you are sufficiently instructed concerning them. For what is contained in the attestations which you sent to the Apostolic See concerning co-parenthood does not pertain to the cause, since neither of the contracting persons is that person through whose mediation co-parenthood was contracted between their parents. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifth day before the Kalends of March, in the first year of our pontificate. 1198.]

> Sponsalia de futuro, etiam iurata, solvuntur per secunda sponsalia de praesenti, non autem per secunda de futuro.
>
> Innocentius III. Fernatino Episcopo.
>
> Sicut ex literis tuae fraternitatis accepimus, quum L. parochianus tuus P. mulierem se ducturum in coniugem, in manus patris eiusdem P. iurantis, quod eam sibi traderet in uxorem, proprio firmaverit iuramento, nec per virum steterit, sed per mulierem potius, quo minus inter eos matrimonialis solennitas sit secuta, quatuor postmodum vel quinque annis elapsis, idem L. E. mulierem per verba de praesenti, ut eius consanguinei asserunt, desponsavit, propter quod frater praedictae P. suum deposuit in tua praesentia quaestionem. Quia vero, quid super his agendum sit, nostro postulas responso edoceri, Postulationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si tibi constiterit, quod idem L. P. mulierem per verba de futuro, E. vero desponsaverit per verba de praesenti, imposita ei poenitentia competenti, quia primam fidem irritam fecit, nisi forsan in iuramento suo certum terminum, infra quem dictam P. duceret in uxorem, praefixit, nec per eum stetit, quin ad statutum terminum matrimonium consummaverit, matrimonium secundo loco contractum legitimum iudices, et ad illud servandum, si opus fuerit, ecclesiastica districtione compellas eundem: nisi forsan aliud quid obstiterit, quod ipsum debeat impedire. Quodsi forte per verba de futuro sponsalia cum utraque contraxit, iuramentum primum, sicut licite factum est, ipsum servare compellas, de secundo ei poenitentiam iniuncturus. Quodsi de his tibi non constat ad plenum, tamdiu adhuc cognoscas de causa, donec super his sufficienter instruaris. Quod enim in attestationibus quas ad sedem apostolicam destinasti de compaternitate habetur non facit ad causam quum neutra contrahentium sit illa persona qua mediante inter parentes eorum compaternitas est contracta. [Dat. Lat. V. Kal. Martii Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1198.]

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: A mute and a deaf person, and all who are not prohibited, can contract marriage.

The same, to the Archbishop of Arles.

Since at the Apostolic See, over which, although undeserving, we preside, resides the magistracy of all ecclesiastical discipline, it is worthy and consonant with reason that, as often as any doubt arises concerning various and diverse businesses, recourse be had to the judgment of that see which, by the Lord's ordering, merited to obtain primacy among all churches. Indeed, you consulted us through your messengers and letters as to whether a mute and a deaf person can be joined matrimonially to another. To this we respond to your fraternity in this manner: since the edict concerning contracting marriage is prohibitory, so that whoever is not prohibited is consequently admitted, and the consent alone of those men and women concerning whose joining there is litigation suffices for marriage, it appears that, if such a person wishes to contract, it neither can nor ought to be denied to him, since what he cannot declare by words he can declare by signs. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of July. 1198.]

> Mutus et surdus, et omnes, qui non prohibentur, matrimonium contrahere possunt.

Idem Arelatensi Episcopo.

Quum apud sedem apostolicam, cui, licet immeriti, praesidemus, totius ecclesiasticae disciplinae resideat magistratus, dignum et consonum est rationi, ut, quoties circa negotia varia et diversa quicquam dubitationis emerserit, ad ipsius iudicium recurratur, quae disponente Domino inter omnes ecclesias obtinere meruit principatum. Sane, consuluisti nos per nuncios et literas tuas, utrum mutus et surdus alicui possint matrimonialiter copulari. Ad quod fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum prohibitorium sit edictum de matrimonio contrahendo, ut, quicunque non prohibetur, per consequentiam admittatur, et sufficiat ad matrimonium solus consensus illorum, de quorum quarumque coniunctionibus agitur, videtur, quod, si talis velit contrahere, sibi non possit vel debeat denegari, quum quod verbis non potest signis valeat declarare. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Iul. 1198.]

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: An insane person cannot contract marriage.

The same, to the Bishop of Vercelli.

The beloved son R., a knight of Alessandria, proposed before us that he joined his daughter Rufina matrimonially to a certain Opizo Lancavecla, ignorant that Opizo was insane. Whence he humbly petitioned us that we deign to take counsel for both him and his daughter. But since the same woman cannot remain with the man himself, who labors under continual madness, and lawful consent could not intervene on account of the derangement of madness, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, after the truth has been more fully investigated, if you know the matter to be so, you take care to separate the aforesaid persons from one another with the subterfuge of appeal removed. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fifth day before the Kalends of January. 1205.]

Furiosus matrimonium contrahere non potest.

Idem Vercellensi Episcopo.

Dilectus filius R. miles Alexandrinus proposuit coram nobis, quod Rufinam filiam suam cuidam Opizoni Lancaveclae matrimonialiter copulavit, ignorans, quod Opizo esset furiosus. Unde humiliter postulavit a nobis, ut tam eidem quam ipsius filiae consulere dignaremur. Quum autem eadem mulier cum ipso viro, qui continuo furore laborat, morari non possit, et propter alienationem furoris legitimus non potuerit intervenire consensus, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, inquisita plenius veritate, si rem noveris ita esse, praefatas personas cures sublato appellationis diffugio ab invicem separare. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. V. Kal. Ian. 1205.]

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: Marriage is contracted by lawful consent alone, but words are required as to proof; and understand: or other equivalent signs. This is what it says according to the understanding which Panormitanus holds.

The same, to the Bishop of Brescia.

To your fraternity—(And below: [cf. c. 10, On Him Who Knew IV. 13.]) You asked in addition to be instructed whether marriage is contracted from words alone and from which words, since it is doubted by some that a spiritual bond is contracted by words alone. We therefore respond to your inquiry in this manner: in truth marriage is contracted through the lawful consent of a man and a woman; but, as regards the Church, words expressing present consent are necessary. For the deaf and mute can contract marriage through mutual consent without words, and children before the lawful years do not contract by words alone, since they are understood not at all to consent. [Given at Rome, etc. 1206.]

> Solo consensu legitimo contrahitur matrimonium, sed verba requiruntur quoad probationem, et intellige: vel alia signa aequipollentia. H. d. secundum intellectum, quem tenet Panormitanus.
>
> Idem Brixiensi Episcopo.
>
> Tuae fraternitati (Et infra: [cf. c. 10. de eo, qui cogn. IV. 13.]) Postulasti insuper edoceri, utrum ex solis verbis, et ex quibus matrimonium contrahatur, quum ab aliquibus dubitetur spirituale contrahi solis verbis. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod matrimonium in veritate contrahitur per legitimum viri et mulieris consensum; sed necessaria sunt, quantum ad ecclesiam, verba consensum exprimentia de praesenti. Nam surdi et muti possunt contrahere matrimonium per consensum mutuum sine verbis, et pueri ante annos legitimos per verba sola non contrahunt, quum intelligantur minime consentire. [Dat. Romae etc. 1206.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: If one of the contracting persons uses doubtful words with the intention of deceiving the woman, and afterward knows her carnally, judgment is given for marriage in the judicial forum; it is otherwise in the penitential forum. This is what it says according to the true and common understanding.

The same.

Your fraternity considered that we should be consulted—(And below: [cf. c. 7, On Consanguinity and Affinity IV. 14.]) Consecutively, however, you asked [that], when a certain man could not otherwise induce a certain woman to mingle carnally with him unless he betrothed her, with no solemnity applied or anyone present, he said to her, "John betroths you," although he was not called John but pretended that he was called John, not believing there to be marriage because he was not called by this name and did not have the purpose of contracting but only of accomplishing carnal union: whether marriage was celebrated between the aforesaid persons, since the woman consented and consents to him, and he dissented and dissents, and did nothing else except [that which] was expressed above, apart from knowing her.

Concerning this we respond to you that, since the aforesaid man betrothed the aforesaid woman in his own person and under an alien name by which he then pretended that he was called, and carnal union followed between them, it perhaps appears that there is a presumption for marriage, unless you had written to us expressly that he neither purposed nor consents to take her as wife—which we do not see how was established to you. But we, rescribing what the law is, say [this]: that, if the matter is thus—namely, that he did not purpose to take her as wife and never consented to the aforesaid person—marriage ought not to be adjudged from that deed, since neither the substance of the conjugal contract nor [even] the form of contracting marriage can be found in it, because on the one side only fraud was present and consent was wholly absent, without which the other things cannot perfect a conjugal covenant. [Third, you asked, etc.; cf. c. 19, On Homicide V. 12. Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of February, in the fourteenth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

> Si alter contrahentium utitur verbis dubiis, animo decipiendi mulierem, et eam postmodum cognoscit carnaliter, iudicatur pro matrimonio in foro iudiciali; secus in poenitentiali. H. d. secundum verum et communem intellectum.

Idem.

Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos (Et infra: [cf. c. 7. de cons. et aff. IV. 14.]) Consequenter autem quaesivisti, [ut] quum quandam mulierem quidam aliter inducere nequivisset, ut sibi commisceretur carnaliter, nisi desponsasset eandem, nulla solennitate adhibita vel alicuius praesentia, dixit illi: "te Ioannes desponsat," quum ipse Ioannes non vocaretur, sed finxit se vocari Ioannem, non credens esse coniugium eo, quod ipse non vocaretur hoc nomine, nec haberet propositum contrahendi, sed copulam tantum exsequendi carnalem, utrum inter praedictos sit matrimonium celebratum, quum mulier consenserit et consentiat in eundem, et ille dissenserit et dissentiat, nec aliud quicquam egerit, quam [quod] superius est expressum, nisi quod cognoverit eandem. Super quod tibi respondemus, quod, quum praefatus vir praedictam desponsaverit mulierem in propria persona et sub nomine alieno, quo tunc vocari se finxit, et inter eos sit carnalis copula subsecuta, videtur forte pro coniugio praesumendum, nisi tu nobis expresse scripsisses, quod ille nec proposuit, nec consentit illam ducere in uxorem, quod qualiter tibi constiterit non videmus. Nos autem, quid iuris sit rescribentes, [hoc] dicimus, quod, si res ita se habuerit, videlicet, quod ille eam non proposuit ducere in uxorem, nec unquam consensit in praedictam personam, non debet ex illo facto coniugium iudicari, quum in eo nec substantia coniugalis contractus, nec [etiam] forma contrahendi coniugium valeat inveniri, quoniam ex altera parte dolus solummodo adfuit, et defuit omnino consensus, sine quo cetera nequeunt foedus perficere coniugale. [Tertio quaesivisti etc. cf. c. 19. de hom. V. 12. Dat. Lat. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIV. 1212.]

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: At the denunciation of one honorable man who reports consanguinity and gives information concerning reputation or scandal, a marriage is impeded from being contracted.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

When in your diocese—(And below: [cf. c. 36, On Tithes III. 30.]) Indeed, because it sometimes happens that, when certain persons wish to contract marriage, banns, to use your words, have been issued in the churches according to the custom of the Gallican Church, and no objector publicly appears, although report relates a private impediment of kinship, while oaths of the elders concerning their relationship are offered on the part of the contracting persons so that material for suspicion may be removed, you asked what is to be done by you in cases of this kind.

To this we respond in this manner: if a grave person to whom faith is to be applied denounces to you that those who are to be joined in marriage touch one another by kinship, and gives information concerning report or scandal, or if you can even be made certain immediately through yourself, not only ought you not to receive the oaths of the parents spontaneously offered, but you ought also to compel those who thus strive to contract, if they cannot be induced after being admonished, either [to] desist from such a contract or, according to the judgment of your discretion, to furnish oaths of their relatives against report of this kind. Otherwise, if the person denouncing does not exist as such as we have said, or cannot give information concerning report or scandal, you will be able to admonish those contracting to desist, but not compel them. [But if, etc.; cf. c. 6, Who May Accuse a Marriage IV. 18. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of November, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

Ad denunciationem unius honesti viri, qui defert consanguinitatem, et de fama vel scandalo docet, impeditur matrimonium contrahendum.

Idem Episcopo Belvacensi.

Quum in tua dioecesi (Et infra: [cf. c. 36. de decim. III. 30.]) Sane, quia contingit interdum, quod, aliquibus volentibus matrimonium contrahere, bannis, ut tuis verbis utamur, in ecclesiis editis secundum consuetudinem ecclesiae Gallicanae, ac nullo contradictore publice comparente, licet fama privatum impedimentum deferat parentelae, quum ex parte contrahentium iuramenta maiorum de sua propinquitate, ut suspicionis tollatur materia, offeruntur, quid tibi sit faciendum in casibus huiusmodi quaesivisti. Ad quod taliter respondemus, quod, si persona gravis, cui fides sit adhibenda, tibi denunciet, quod hi, qui sunt matrimonio copulandi, se propinquitate contingant, et de fama vel scandalo doceat, aut etiam per te ipsum possis certificari de plano, non solum debes iuramenta parentum sponte oblata non recipere, verum etiam eos, qui sic contrahere nituntur, si moniti induci nequiverint, compellere, ut [vel] a tali contractu desistant, vel contra famam huiusmodi secundum tuae discretionis arbitrium iuramenta exhibeant propinquorum. Alioquin, si persona denuncians non exstiterit talis, ut diximus, vel de fama vel de scandalo non poterit edocere, ad desistendum monere poteris, non compellere, contrahentes. [Si vero etc. cf. c. 6. Qui matrim. acc. IV. 18. Dat. Lat. IV. Kal. Nov. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: A woman who denies that she consented to marriage is not believed when the husband proves the contrary; it is otherwise if she proves that she consented through fear which can befall a steadfast man.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Bergen.

We respond briefly to your consultation that women who according to custom come with betrothed men to the doors of the church to be blessed, and there, protesting, affirm that they never consented to marriage with them, ought not to be heard when the betrothed men lawfully prove the contrary, since the simple assertion of the women ought not to prevail over lawful and suitable witnesses. Indeed, a hearing is not immediately to be denied to those who, after receiving the blessing, soon flee from the betrothed men before carnal union has followed, asserting that they never truly consented to them but, compelled by fear inflicted, uttered words of consent although they dissented in intention. Rather, inquiry is to be made with diligence concerning the fear inflicted; and, if such fear is found to have been inflicted as could befall a steadfast man, they will not undeservedly be heard.

Mulieri, quae negat, se in matrimonium consensisse, non creditur marito probante contrarium; secus, si probat, se consensisse per metum, qui potest cadere in constantem virum.

Honorius III. Episcopo Berguensi.

Consultationi tuae breviter respondemus, quod mulieres, quae de more veniunt ad valvas ecclesiae benedicendae cum sponsis, et ibi reclamantes affirmant, se nunquam in eorum matrimonium consensisse, audiri sponsis legitime probantibus contrarium non oportet, quum legitimis et idoneis testibus non debeat illarum simplex assertio praevalere. Sane illis, quae benedictione accepta mox a sponsis aufugiunt ante carnis copulam subsecutam, asserentes, se nunquam in illos veraciter consensisse, sed metu illato compulsas verba protulisse consensus, licet animo dissentirent, non statim est audientia deneganda; sed de illato metu est cum diligentia inquirendum; et, si talis metus inveniatur illatus, qui potuit cadere in constantem virum, erunt non immerito audiendae.

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: In marriages and betrothals there ought to be freedom; whence in them a promise of a penalty does not bind.

Gregory IX.

The woman Gemma explained to us that, when T., her daughter, contracted marriage with C., B. of Alferio, on the occasion that betrothals were contracted between his son P. and the aforesaid girl while they were constituted under seven years, strives to extort from her the penalty placed in the stipulation, to be paid by the party who should contravene. Therefore, since marriages ought to be free and for this reason such a stipulation is deservedly to be disapproved on account of the interposition of a penalty, we command that, if it is so, you compel the same B. by ecclesiastical censure to desist from extortion of the aforesaid penalty.

> In matrimoniis et sponsalibus debet esse libertas, unde in eis promissio poenae non obligat.
>
> Gregorius IX.
>
> Gemma mulier nobis exposuit, quod, quum T. filia eius cum C. contraxit matrimonium, B. de Alferio ea occasione, quod inter P. filium suum et praedictam puellam infra septennium constitutos sponsalia contracta fuerunt, poenam solvendam a parte, quae contraveniret, in stipulatione appositam, ab ipsa nititur extorquere. Quum itaque libera matrimonia esse debeant, et ideo talis stipulatio propter poenae interpositionem sit merito improbanda, mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, eundem B., ut ab extorsione praedictae poenae desistat, ecclesiastica censura compellas.

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: Betrothals for the future pass into marriage through carnal union following, but not through an attempt at carnal union alone. This is what it says with the final chapter below under the same title.

The same, to the Bishop of Le Mans.

He who gave a pledge to the woman M. concerning contracting marriage, with carnal union following, even if in the face of the Church he takes another and knows her, is held to return to the first; because, although the first marriage appears to be presumed, nevertheless proof against a presumption of this kind is not to be admitted. From this it follows that the marriage which afterward followed in fact is considered neither a true marriage nor any marriage.

> Sponsalia de futuro transeunt in matrimonium per carnalem copulam subsecutam, sed non per nisum carnalis copulae tantum. H. d. cum c. fin. infra eodem.
>
> Idem Episcopo Cenomanensi.
>
> Is, qui fidem dedit M. mulieri super matrimonio contrahendo, carnali copula subsecuta, etsi in facie ecclesiae ducat aliam et cognoscat, ad primam redire tenetur, quia, licet praesumptum primum matrimonium videatur, contra praesumptionem tamen huiusmodi non est probatio admittenda. Ex quo sequitur, quod nec verum, nec aliquod censetur matrimonium, quod de facto est postmodum subsecutum.

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: Betrothals of the present are not dissolved by a following marriage, even one consummated by carnal union; but betrothals for the future, even if sworn, are dissolved by following betrothals of the present.

The same.

If lawful consent of the present intervenes between a man and a woman so that one receives the other by mutual consent expressed in customary words, each saying, "I receive you as mine," and, "I receive you as mine," or other words expressing present consent, whether an oath has been interposed or not, it is not lawful for either to pass to other vows. But if either does so, the second marriage contracted in fact, even if carnal union followed, ought to be separated, and the first remain in its firmness.

But if only a promise of the future was made between them, each saying to the other, "I will receive you as mine," and, "I will receive you as mine," or similar words, if another should betroth that woman through words of the present, even if an oath concerning the future, as we have said, intervened between her and the first, the second marriage cannot be separated in view of a betrothal of this kind; but penance is to be enjoined upon them for violation of the pledge.

> Sponsalia de praesenti non solvuntur per sequens matrimonium, etiam carnali copula consummatum; sed sponsalia de futuro etiam iurata solvuntur per sequentia de praesenti.
>
> Idem.
>
> Si inter virum et mulierem legitimus consensus interveniat de praesenti ita, quod unus alterum mutuo consensu, verbis consuetis expresso, recipiat, utroque dicenti: "ego te in meam accipio," et: "ego te accipio in meum," vel alia verba consensum exprimentia de praesenti, sive sit iuramentum interpositum sive non: non licet alteri ad alia vota transire. Quod si fecerit, secundum matrimonium de facto contractum, etiamsi sit carnalis copula subsecuta, separari debet, et primum in sua firmitate manere. Verum si inter ipsos accessit tantummodo promissio de futuro, utroque dicente alteri: "ego te recipiam in meam," et: "ego te in meum," sive verba similia, si alius mulierem illam per verba de praesenti desponsaverit, etiamsi inter ipsam et primum iuramentum intervenerit, sicut diximus, de futuro: huiusmodi desponsationis intuitu secundum matrimonium non poterit separari, sed eis est de violatione fidei poenitentia iniungenda.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: An attempt at intercourse does not cause betrothals for the future to pass into marriage.

The same.

A young man who, although he often attempted it, did not know carnally the woman betrothed to him through words of the future, and afterward contracted with another through words of the present, ought to have as wife not the first, with whom there was neither a true marriage from the form of the contract nor a presumed marriage, since the attempt had no effect, but the second.

> Nisus ad copulam non facit sponsalia de futuro transire in matrimonium.
>
> Idem.

> Adolescens, qui desponsatam sibi per verba de futuro, licet saepe nisus fuerit, carnaliter non cognoscens, cum alia postmodum per verba de praesenti contraxit, non primam, cum qua nec fuit verum matrimonium ex forma contractus, nec praesumptum, quum conatus non habuisset effectum, sed secundam debet habere uxorem.

Title II: On the Betrothal of Minors

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A father contracts betrothals for an underage son, but not for one of age unless he consents.

Hormisdas, to Bishop Eusebius.

Your fraternity asked us concerning an adult son for whom the father wishes to contract a marriage, whether he can do it without the will of the adult son. To this we say that, if the son does not consent in any way, it cannot be done; but a father can deliver in marriage to whom he wishes a son not yet adult, whose will cannot be discerned. And after the son has reached perfect age, he ought altogether to fulfill this.

> DE DESPONSATIONE IMPUBERUM.
>
> Pater pro filio impubere sponsalia contrahit, pro pubere vero non, nisi consentiat.
>
> Hormisda Eusebio Episcopo.
>
> Tua nos requisivit fraternitas de filio adulto, quem pater matrimonium vult contrahere, si sine voluntate adulti filii facere potest. Ad quod dicimus, si aliquo modo non consentit filius, fieri non posse; potest autem filium nondum adultum, voluntas cuius discerni non potest, pater cui vult matrimonio tradere. Et postquam filius pervenerit ad perfectam aetatem, omnino debet hoc adimplere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Minors, whether both or one, ought not to be joined except for the good of peace.

Pope Nicholas.

Where there is no consent—(And below:) By authority of this decree, therefore, we more strictly prohibit any persons henceforth from being joined where either or both have not reached the age determined by laws or canons, unless perhaps, with some most urgent necessity intervening, such as for the good of peace, such a union is tolerated.

> Impuberes ambo vel alter, nisi pro bono pacis, coniungi non debent.
>
> Nicolaus Papa.
>
> Ubi non est consensus (Et infra:) Huius ergo decreti auctoritate Districtius inhibemus, ne de cetero aliqui, quorum uterque vel alter ad aetatem legibus vel canonibus determinatam non pervenerit, coniungantur, nisi forte aliqua urgentissima necessitate interveniente, utpote pro bono pacis, talis coniunctio toleretur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: With respect to marriage, those are pubescent who from the condition of the body can conceive and beget.

Isidore.

The pubescent are called from the pubes, that is, named from the modesty of the body, because these places then first put forth down. Certain persons, however, reckon puberty from years, that is, that he is pubescent who has completed fourteen years, although he matures most slowly. But it is certain that he is pubescent who both shows puberty from the condition of the body and can now beget. And child-bearing girls are those who give birth in childish years.

> Puberes sunt quoad matrimonium, qui ex habitu corporis concipere et generare possunt.
>
> Isidorus.
>
> Puberes a pube sunt vocati, id est a pudentia corporis nuncupati: quia haec loca tunc primo lanuginem ducunt. Quidam tamen ex annis pubertatem existimant, id est, eum esse puberem, qui XIV. annos implevit, quamvis tardissime pubescat. Certum autem est, eum puberem esse, qui et ex habitu corporis pubertatem ostendit, et generare iam potest. Et puerperae sunt, quae in annis puerilibus pariunt.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: From betrothals contracted with one younger than seven years, an impediment of public honesty does not arise; it is otherwise if they are contracted with one older, or with one younger who consents after seven years. And affinity following dissolves preceding betrothals for the future.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Hereford.

We received the letters of your fraternity, from the tenor of which we perceived that, when a certain parishioner of yours named A. was of perfect age, he betrothed a certain girl in the cradle; but, as time proceeded, the same A. knew the girl's mother and received her as wife. Whence, because you doubt whether a marriage of this kind ought to stand, you sought counsel from us concerning it. Concerning this we respond to your consultation in this manner: if the aforesaid man received the mother of the aforesaid girl as wife before the girl herself completed her seventh year, do not dissolve the marriage, but permit the same man freely to keep the aforesaid woman as wife, since betrothals of this kind which occur in the cradle are null. But if, after the aforesaid girl completed her seventh year, the aforesaid man received her mother as wife, since betrothals are from then accustomed to have force, do not defer pronouncing a sentence of separation between them, nor permit him to have either daughter or mother as wife.

> Ex sponsalibus, contractis cum minore septennio, non oritur impedimentum publicae honestatis; secus, si cum maiore vel minore, consentiente post septennium. Et affinitas sequens dissolvit sponsalia praecedentia de futuro.
>
> Alexander III. Herfordensi Episcopo.
>
> Literas tuae fraternitatis accepimus, ex quarum tenore perpendimus, quod, quum quidam parochianus tuus A. nomine esset perfectae aetatis, quandam puellam in cunabulis desponsavit; procedente vero tempore idem A. matrem puellae cognovit, et eam in uxorem accepit. Unde quia dubitas, an huiusmodi matrimonium stare debeat, a nobis exinde consilium postulasti. Super quo Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si praefatus vir matrem praefatae puellae, antequam puella ipsa septimum annum complesset, in uxorem accepit, matrimonium ipsum non dissolvas sed eundem virum praefatam mulierem, sicut uxorem, libere tenere permittas, quum desponsationes huiusmodi nullae sint, quae in cunabulis fiunt. Verum si, postquam praefata puella septimum annum complevit, praedictus vir matrem eius accepit in uxorem, quum sponsalia extunc placere consueverint, inter eos sententiam divortii non differas promulgare, nec ipsum filiam seu matrem in uxorem habere permittas.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Betrothals which are null from defect of consent do not create the justice of public honesty; but some betrothals do so, even though they have been dissolved in a lawful manner.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

The noble man W., son of G., approached our presence with your letters, from the tenor of which we perceived that, when he had betrothed the daughter of a certain noble man while she was of lesser age, and afterward, when she did not furnish assent in this matter, before she reached marriageable years a separation was celebrated between them. But as time proceeded, after the girl's father died, [the aforesaid] W. joined her mother to himself in marriage. Since you were unwilling to sustain this deed, you solicitously admonished him to dismiss her; and, because he was unwilling to acquiesce in your admonitions in this matter, you bound him with the bond of excommunication. At last, after receiving security from him that he would approach our presence and firmly observe our statute concerning this, you announced that the same man had been absolved at our command and sent him to our presence with your letters. But the aforesaid W., constituted in our presence, proposed to us by his assertion that he betrothed the girl herself while she was under her seventh year; afterward, [however], before she reached marriageable years, she was unwilling in any way to consent to receive the aforesaid W. as husband, and thus she approached your presence with her father, in whose power she had remained, and with the aforesaid W. And when you heard from the girl's mouth, and knew through her and through her father, that she did not wish the aforesaid W. as husband, you immediately announced publicly in full synod that he was absolved from a betrothal of this kind. But after many years had elapsed and the girl's father also had died, our dearest son in Christ H., King of the English, delivered the mother of the aforesaid girl to the aforesaid W. as wife. The same W., so that discord arisen between his blood relatives and the woman's blood relatives might be quieted, received and solemnly betrothed her, took her without contradiction of the Church, and begot children from her; and the girl was joined to another man. But although it is contained in your letters that the girl herself was of lesser age when a betrothal of this kind was made, nevertheless it matters whether, when she was of lesser age, [she was] near an age fit for marriage or under seven years. And therefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, instructing that, after the truth of the matter has been diligently investigated and known, if it is established to you that the aforesaid girl was not seven years old when she was betrothed to the aforementioned G., and that afterward she did not consent to him, and that the same G. was absolved by you from a betrothal of this kind, you command the marriage celebrated between the same G. and the girl's mother to be inviolably observed and announce their offspring to be legitimate; because, as your discretion is not ignorant, betrothals and marriages cannot occur before seven years, especially if consent does not afterward accede.

Indeed, if the aforesaid girl had completed her seventh year before [a betrothal of this kind], although the aforesaid man was absolved by law itself from betrothal to the girl because she was unwilling to consent to him, nevertheless it appears dishonorable that he should have the mother of her whose daughter was betrothed to him. But if it has appeared to you that he should remain with the girl's mother, lest discord formerly arisen between the blood relatives of each, but now quieted, be stirred anew, you will be able to dissemble this and tolerate it with equanimity. But the sons whom he received from her, if he took her as wife while the Church tolerated it, cannot be prohibited from succession to the paternal or maternal inheritance.

> Sponsalia, nulla ex defectu consensus, non creant publicae honestatis iustitiam: sponsalia vero aliqua sic, licet legitimo modo fuerint dissoluta.
>
> Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Accessit ad praesentiam nostram *nobilis vir W. filius G. cum literis tuis, ex quarum tenore perpendimus, quod, quum filiam cuiusdam nobilis viri, dum esset minoris aetatis, desponsasset, et postmodum ipsa assensum in hac parte non praebente, antequam ad nubiles annos pervenisset, celebratum est inter eos divortium. Procedente vero tempore, defuncto patre puellae, matrem eius * [praedictus] W. sibi matrimonio copulavit. Quod quidem factum quum sustinere nolles, eum sollicite monuisti, ut ipsam dimitteret, et quia monitis tuis in hac parte noluit acquiescere, ipsum excommunicationis vinculo innodasti. Tandem, accepta ab eo cautione, quod nostram adiret praesentiam, et super hoc statutum nostrum firmiter observaret, eundem mandato nostro absolutum denunciasti, et cum literis tuis ad praesentiam nostram misisti. Verum praefatus W. in nostra praesentia constitutus sua nobis assertione proposuit, quod puellam ipsam, dum esset infra septimum annum, desponsavit, postea [vero], antequam ad nubiles annos pervenisset, noluit aliquatenus consentire, ut praefatum W. in virum acciperet, et ita cum patre suo, in cuius potestate remanserat, et cum praefato W. ad praesentiam tuam accessit. Et quum ab ore puellae audisses, et per eam cognosceres et per patrem eius, quod memoratum W. in virum nolebat, statim illum in plena synodo ab huiusmodi desponsatione publice absolutum denunciasti. Elapsis vero pluribus annis post, mortuo etiam patre puellae, carissimus in Christo filius noster H. Anglorum rex matrem supradictae puellae memorato W. tradidit in uxorem, quam idem W., ut discordia orta inter consanguineos suos et consanguineos mulieris sopiretur, accepit et solenniter desponsavit, et sine contradictione ecclesiae duxit, et ex ea liberos procreavit, et puella fuit alteri viro copulata. Verum licet contineatur in literis tuis, quod puella ipsa erat minoris aetatis, quando huiusmodi desponsatio facta fuit, tamen refert, utrum, quum esset minoris aetatis, [fuerit] proxima aetati aptae matrimonio, aut infra septem annos. Ideoque Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate inquisita diligenter et cognita, si tibi constiterit, quod praefata puella non esset septennis, quando praememorato G. desponsata fuit, et postea in eum non consenserit, et quod idem G. ab huiusmodi desponsatione per te fuerit absolutus, matrimonium, inter eundem G. et matrem puellae celebratum, praecipias inviolabiliter observari, et eorum prolem denuncies esse legitimam, quia, sicut discretio tua non ignorat, desponsationes et matrimonia ante septem annos fieri non possunt, praesertim si consensus postea non accedit. Sane, si praefata puella ante [huiusmodi] desponsationem septimum annum compleverat, licet praedictus vir a desponsatione ipsius puellae ipso iure fuerit absolutus, quum ea in eum consentire noluerit, inhonestum tamen videtur, ut matrem eius habeat, cuius filia fuit sibi desponsata. Verum si tibi visum fuerit, ut cum matre puellae remaneat, ne discordia inter utriusque consanguineos olim exorta nunc autem sopita denuo suscitetur id dissimulare poteris et aequanimiter tolerare. Filii autem quos de ipsa suscepit, si eam tolerante ecclesia in uxorem duxit a successione paternae vel maternae, hereditatis prohiberi non possunt.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If an underage girl, betrothed and conducted home, seeks permission after becoming of age to marry another, she is not heard if the man swears that he knew her; nor is she heard if, not yet of age but near puberty, she is proved to have been known. And from betrothals contracted with a minor older than seven years, public honesty arises.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

It was contained in your letters that, when a certain girl under marriageable years had been delivered to a certain man as wife and conducted home by him, her parents asserting that she existed as of lawful age, on reaching marriageable years she sought permission to marry another, asserting that she had by no means consented to the same man. But the aforesaid man proposed to the contrary that, although the same girl perhaps had not yet reached her twelfth year when she was delivered to him as wife, nevertheless she was so close to the age that he knew her by carnal commingling. Hence it is that, since she says that she was not known by the same man, and you consulted us whether she can marry another, we respond to your consultation in this manner: since it is expressly contained in the decrees that, if a man says that he knew his wife and the woman denies it, one must stand by the man's truth, faith is to be applied to the aforesaid man who says that he knew the woman herself, if he affirms it by oath.

But if she was near the age, as in the eleventh or about the twelfth year, and with her assent and the will of her parents was betrothed and blessed, and known by the same man, she ought not to be separated, especially since her parents confessed that she had been of lawful age. But if a girl under marriageable years and near the age was betrothed to someone, blessed and conducted home, it is not lawful for anyone of the blood relationship of the man to whom she was betrothed to take her as wife, nor is it permitted for the same betrothed man to join to himself anyone of the blood relationship of the betrothed woman [in marriage].

> Si impubes, desponsata et traducta, petit licentiam pubes facta alteri nubendi, non auditur, si vir iurat, se eam cognovisse; nec auditur, si nondum pubes, sed proxima pubertati probetur cognita. Et ex sponsalibus, contractis cum impubere maiore septennio, oritur publica honestas.
>
> Idem Norvicensi Episcopo.
>
> Continebatur in literis tuis, quod, quum quaedam puella infra nubiles annos cuidam viro in uxorem tradita fuerit, et ab ipso traducta, suis parentibus asserentibus, eam legitimae aetatis exsistere, haec, ad nubiles annos perveniens, alii nubendi licentiam postulavit, asserens, se in eundem virum nullatenus consensisse. Praedictus vero vir econtra proponit, quod, licet eadem puella nondum forte annum XII. attigisset, quum ei tradita fuisset in uxorem, usque adeo tamen aetati fuit proxima, quod ipsam carnali commixtione cognovit. Inde est, quod, quum ipsa dicit ab eodem viro se incognitam, et tu nos consuluisti, utrum alii possit nubere, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum in decretis habeatur expressum, quod, si vir dixerit, quod uxorem suam cognoverit, et mulier negaverit, viri standum est veritati, unde praefato viro, qui dicit, se mulierem ipsam cognovisse, fides est adhibenda, si id firmaverit iuramento. Si autem fuerit aetati proxima, ut in undecimo vel circa XII. annum, et cum suo assensu et voluntate parentum desponsata et benedicta fuerit, et cognita ab eodem viro, separari non debet, praesertim quum parentes eius ipsam fuisse aetatis legitimae faterentur. Si vero puella infra nubiles annos et aetati proxima alicui desponsata fuerit, benedicta atque traducta, non licet alicui de consanguinitate ipsius, cui desponsata fuerit, eam ducere in uxorem, nec fas est eidem sponso de consanguinitate sponsae sibi aliquam [matrimonio] copulare.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If persons older than seven years contract betrothals, neither can withdraw before puberty. This first. And the one who first reaches puberty will wait for the other. This second. But if at the time of the contract one was of age and the other was not, not the former but the latter, upon becoming of age, can withdraw. This third.

The same, to the Bishop of Bath.

Concerning those who, [existing] under the years fit for contracting marriages, contract betrothals, whether both or one should protest before they reach years fit for contracting marriages and should petition to be separated, they are by no means to be heard. But if either of them reached the years of puberty while the other existed under the same years when those betrothals were contracted, if the one who is of lesser age protests when reaching those years and is unwilling to consent to the other, they can be separated from one another by judgment of the Church. But a woman who, after she reaches marriageable years, married one who had not yet reached years fit for contracting marriages, since she once consented to him, will no longer be able in any way to dissent or depart, unless perhaps he whom she married, after he reaches lawful age, altogether refuses to furnish his consent to her.

> Si maiores septennio contrahunt sponsalia, neuter antepubertatem resilire potest. Hoc primo. Et ille, qui primo it pubes, alterum exspectabit. Hoc secundo. Quod si tempore contractus aliter erat pubes, non ille, sed alter factus pubes resilire potest. Hoc tertio.
>
> Idem Bathoniensi Episcopo.
>
> De illis, qui infra annos aptos matrimoniis contrahendis [exsistentes] sponsalia contrahunt, sive uterque sive alter reclamet antequam ad annos matrimoniis contrahendis aptos pervenerint, et postulent separari, non sunt ullatenus audiendi. Si vero alteruter istorum ad annos pubertatis pervenerit, infra eosdem annos altero exsistente, quum eadem sponsalia contrahuntur; si is, qui minoris aetatis est, quum ad annos illos pervenerit, reclamaverit, nec in alterum voluerit consentire, iudicio ecclesiae poterunt ab invicem separari. Mulier autem, quae, postquam annos nubiles attingit, ei, qui nondum ad annos aptos matrimoniis contrahendis venerat, nupsit, quum in eum semel consenserit, amplius non poterit aliquatenus dissentire vel divertere, nisi forte ipse, cui nupsit, postquam ad legitimam aetatem pervenerit, in eam suum omnino negaverit praestare consensum.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Minors contracting betrothals ought not to be separated before puberty, but can be after puberty if they contradict the betrothals, unless carnal union intervened.

The same, to the same.

Your discretion asked us whether it is lawful for those who are joined in the name of marriage below marriageable years, or for one of them, to depart from such a marriage before they reach years fit for marriage. To this we respond to your inquiry in this manner: because before marriageable years they do not have conjugal consent by authority of the holy Fathers, they are held to wait until lawful age, and then either let the marriage be confirmed or, if they are unwilling to be together, let them be separated, unless perhaps carnal commingling intervened beforehand, since it is sometimes accustomed to anticipate the time of puberty. But if one of them reaches the years, etc., as above in the preceding chapter.

> Impuberes, sponsalia contrahentes, ante pubertatem separari non debent, sed post pubertatem possunt, si contradicunt sponsalibus, nisi copula carnalis intervenerit.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> A nobis tua discretio requisivit, utrum iis qui infra annos nubiles matrimonii nomine coniunguntur, vel eorum alteri, antequam ad annos aptos matrimonio perveniant, liceat a matrimonio tali discedere. Ad quod inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod pro eo, quod ante nubiles annos coniugalem consensum de sanctorum Patrum non habent auctoritate, usque ad legitimam aetatem exspectare tenentur, et tunc aut confirmetur matrimonium, aut, si simul esse noluerint, separentur; nisi forte carnalis commixtio ante intervenerit, quum interdum illa tempus anticipare soleat pubertatis. Si vero alter eorum ad annos etc. ut supra prox. c.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Minors fit for marriage are bound by the contract of marriage unless violence intervenes.

The same, to the Archbishop of Genoa.

Concerning those, however, who are betrothed at a lesser age, are delivered and joined, and in the course of time petition for judicial separation, alleging their lesser age or force done to them by their parents, by the present letters we respond to your inquiry that, if they were so near the age that they could be joined by carnal union, they ought not to be separated from one another in view of their lesser age if one appears to have consented to the other, since malice appears to have supplied age in them. But of whatever age they may be, they can excuse themselves by violence inflicted unless consent accedes after the violence. [That also, etc. (cf. c. On Presumptions II. 23.)]

Minores, apti ad matrimonium, ex contractu matrimonii obligantur, nisi violentia intercedat.

Idem Genuensi Archiepiscopo.

De illis autem, qui in minori aetate desponsantur, traduntur et coniunguntur, et processu temporis divortium postulant, minorem allegantes aetatem, aut vim sibi a parentibus factam, hoc inquisitioni tuae praesentibus literis Respondemus, quod, si ita fuerint aetati proximi, quod potuerint copula carnali coniungi, minoris aetatis intuitu ab invicem separari non debent, si unus in alium visus fuerit consensisse, quum in eis aetatem supplevisse malitia videatur. Sed cuiuscunque sint aetatis, se possunt per illatam violentiam excusare, nisi post violentiam consensus accedat. [Illud quoque etc. (cf. c. de praes. II. 23.)]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A contract before puberty, even with an attempt at carnal union, does not make a marriage.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Le Mans.

We received the attestations transmitted to us by your fraternity concerning the matrimonial cause which is debated between the young man H. and the woman G.; and, after they had been diligently inspected and more fully understood, it manifestly became known to us that the aforesaid young man had not yet reached his twelfth year when he received the aforesaid G. as wife. And although he had attempted, as each confessed, to deflower her, nevertheless the woman believes that she escaped as a virgin. But before he reached his fourteenth year, he departed from the aforesaid woman, who, since he is seventeen years old, contends to claim him for herself as husband. But since the man is seventeen years old, he refuses to receive her. Whence, because, until you consulted us concerning the cause itself, you did not consider that you should proceed to pronouncement of sentence, we respond to your consultation in this manner: if the woman is unable to prove by suitable witnesses that after his fourteenth year or around the end of his fourteenth year the aforesaid young man consented to her, after receiving from him an oath that, after he reached lawful age, he did not consent to have her as wife, you can and ought to absolve him from the woman's claim and give permission to each to pass to other vows.

Contractus ante pubertatem, etiam cum nisu carnalis copulae, non facit matrimonium.

Urbanus III. Cenomanensi Episcopo.

Attestationes super causa matrimonii, quae inter H. iuvenem et G. mulierem vertitur, a tua nobis fraternitate transmissas accepimus, et, ipsis diligenter inspectis et plenius intellectis, manifeste nobis innotuit, quod praedictus iuvenis nondum duodecimum annum attigerat, quum praefatam G. accepit uxorem. Et licet nisus fuisset, sicut uterque confessus est, ipsam corrumpere, mulier tamen credit, se virginem evasisse. Verum ipse, antequam ad annum XIV. pervenisset, a memorata muliere recessit, quem, quum XVII. annos habeat, eadem pro viro sibi vindicare contendit. Sed quum vir XVII. annos habeat, ipsam recipere contradicit. Unde, quia, donec nos super causam ipsam consuleres, non duxisti in prolatione sententiae procedendum, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si mulier per idoneos testes probare nequiverit, quod post XIV. annum aetatis suae vel circa finem XIV. anni praedictus iuvenis consensisset in eam, ab ipso iuramento recepto, quod, postquam ad legitimam aetatem pervenit, ipsam habere non consensit in uxorem, ab impetitione mulieris eum potes et debes absolvere, et ad alia vota utrique dare licentiam transeundi.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: If an older girl unwillingly contracted betrothals with a younger boy, she is not held to wait for him until he reaches adult age.

The same, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

We received from the letters of your fraternity that a certain girl in her twelfth year was sworn and betrothed to a certain boy of nine or ten years, and, as time proceeded, by the will of her parents rather than her own, as she asserts, was led to the house of the father of the aforesaid boy. There, unwilling and against her will, as you propose that you heard from her own mouth, and driven both by the persuasions and threats of her parents, she remained for a year and more; and at last, departing thence, she returned to her own house. But when admonished by her mother, and afterward by you, as you assert, she wholly refuses to return to him, asserting that she never wished and does not wish to have him as husband, but petitions for the faculty of marrying another.

But since the aforementioned boy, as your letters contained, has not yet reached his fourteenth year of age, nor ever had carnal access to the same girl, we respond to your discretion in this manner: if the aforesaid girl, after being earnestly admonished by you for this purpose that she wait until the same boy completes his fourteenth year of age, has not considered that she should wait at your admonition, according to those things which have been proposed, grant her the free faculty of receiving another man as husband by our authority. Given at Verona.

Si maior invita contraxit sponsalia cum minore, non tenetur ipsum exspectare, donec veniat ad aetatem adultam.

Idem Pisano Archiepiscopo.

Ex literis tuae fraternitatis accepimus, quod puella quaedam anno XII. iurata fuit et desponsata cuidam puero IX. vel X. annorum, et tempore procedente de voluntate parentum potius, quam de sua, sicut asserit, ad domum patris praedicti pueri adducta, ubi nolens et invita, sicut ab ore ipsius te audisse proponis, et tam persuasionibus quam minis parentum impulsa, moram fecit per annum et amplius, et tandem inde recedens, ad domum propriam est regressa. Commonita vero a matre sua, et a te postmodum, sicut asseris, ad eum redire penitus contradicit, asserens, quod nunquam eum voluit; nec vult in virum habere, sed nubendi alii postulat facultatem. Quum autem iam dictus puer, sicut tuae literae continebant, nondum ad XIV. annum aetatis suae pervenerit, nec unquam ad eandem puellam carnaliter accessum habuerit, discretioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si memorata puella per te ad hoc studiose commonita, ut, donec compleat idem puer annum XIV. suae aetatis, exspectet, ad commonitionem tuam non duxerit exspectandum, ei secundum ea, quae proposita sunt, accipiendi alium virum in maritum auctoritate nostra liberam tribuas facultatem. Dat. Veronae.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Betrothals contracted with one younger than seven years acquire validity through mutual cohabitation after seven years and induce the justice of public honesty; nevertheless, they are dissolved by a marriage of the present.

Clement III.

Two children, William and Guilielma, in your diocese, as we received, were joined matrimonially, the boy being in his sixth year but the girl in her seventh; they remained together for three years. Then, however, the girl's father, withdrawing her from her betrothed, joined her to another named M., with whom she remained peacefully for seven years. But he then left her because he believed that she had another husband, namely him to whom she had first been betrothed. But the first betrothed man, reaching years of discretion, obtained from P., your predecessor, permission to contract with another; he received as wife a certain woman named S., cousin of the first woman, and, remaining with her for some time, nevertheless, as he himself confesses, did not know her carnally, although she asserts that she was known by him.

But when the father of the aforesaid Guilielma saw her abandoned by the second man, he compelled by force the aforesaid William, to whom he had first betrothed her, altogether to dismiss his niece S. and return to his betrothed Guilielma; afterward he cohabited with her for two years, as it is reported. Therefore, because you ask to be instructed what is to be done by you in these things, we respond briefly that, because childish age impeded it, there was no marriage between G. and G. And although the same man, after she married another, could have taken another as wife, nevertheless, because he took the said S., the cousin of the same woman, whether he knew her or not, he ought not to remain with the same S. on account of the justice of public honesty, nor to have recourse to the first woman, because she was lawfully joined to another.

(And below:) But since the man is the head of the woman, and William says that he did not know the aforesaid S. before, he will be able, if he wishes, to take another as wife, and S. to be joined to a lawful husband; but after separation, penance is to be enjoined upon each for a time to avoid scandal of the people. But if it were lawfully established that S. herself had been known by him either afterward or before, permission to contract will be given to neither while the other is living. Guilielma therefore will remain with M., nevertheless with suitable penance for a time imposed upon M. himself, who, on his opinion alone, without seeking the judgment of the Church, perniciously dismissed Guilielma.

Sponsalia, contracta cum minore septennio, per cohabitationem mutuam post septennium convalescunt, et inducunt publicae honestatis iustitiam; solvuntur tamen per matrimonium de praesenti.

Clemens III.

Duo pueri Guilielmus et Guilielma in tua dioecesi, quemadmodum accepimus, matrimonialiter sunt coniuncti, puero VI., puella vero VII. annum agente; qui simul per tres annos manserunt. Tunc vero pater puellae, subtrahens eam sponso suo, ipsam alteri, M. nomine, copulavit, cum quo per VII. annos quiete permansit. Ipse vero tunc reliquit eandem, quia credebat, eam alium virum habere, illum scilicet, cui prius fuerat desponsata. Prior autem sponsus, ad annos discretionis perveniens, a P. praedecessore tuo contrahendi cum alia licentiam impetravit, qui quandam nomine S. consobrinam prioris in uxorem accepit, et cum ea per aliquod tempus exsistens, eam tamen, ut ipse fatetur, carnaliter non cognovit, licet illa se ab eo cognitam asseveret. Quum autem pater memoratae Guilielmae eam vidisset a secundo viro relictam, vi praenominatum Guilielmum, cui prius eam desponsaverat, compulit, ut S. neptem suam omnino dimitteret, et ad Guilielmam suam desponsatam rediret: qui postmodum per biennium cohabitavit eidem, ut fertur. Quia igitur in his quid tibi faciendum sit, postulas edoceri, breviter respondemus, quod impediente puerili aetate matrimonium inter G. et G. non fuit. Et licet idem, postquam illa nupsit alii, potuerit aliam ducere in uxorem, tamen, quia dictam S. duxit consobrinam mulieris eiusdem, sive eam cognoverit sive non, non debet tamen cum eadem S. propter publicae honestatis iustitiam remanere, nec ac primam habere regressum, quia alteri fuit legitime copulata. (Et infra:) Quum vero vir caput sit mulieris, et Guilielmus dicat, se non cognovisse prius S. supra dictam: aliam, si voluerit, poterit ducere in uxorem, et S. viro legitimo copulari; post separationem vero pro vitando populi scandalo utrique ad tempus est poenitentia iniungenda. Si vero legitime constaret, ipsam S. ab eo sive post sive antea cognitam exstitisse, neutri vivente altero dabitur licentia contrahendi. Remanebit ergo Guilielma cum M., imposita tamen ipsi M. ad tempus poenitentia competenti, qui pro sua opinione sola Guilielmam, iudicio ecclesiae non requisito, perniciose dimisit.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A marriage which does not exist cannot be accused, as if it was contracted with one younger than seven years; nevertheless, an impediment can be denounced lest it be contracted in the future.

Innocent III, to C. and P., Former Sons of Malebranca.

In order to dissolve what had been done between I., son of the noble man Leo [de Monumento], and S., daughter of the late Matthew [de Fortebrachio], concerning contracting marriage, it was proposed on your part in our presence and that of our brothers that, since the said girl had not yet reached seven years, neither marriage nor betrothals could be contracted with her. The assent of the blood relatives, who are principally to be required in such matters, was also lacking. Even if sufficient age had existed and the assent of the blood relatives had intervened, the persons nevertheless are not lawful for contracting marriage, because a line of consanguinity stands in the way.

But after an accusation concerning consanguinity had been proposed for the girl, and the degrees of consanguinity had been computed both on the part of the young man and on the part of the girl, when she wished to prove it by suitable witnesses, the aforesaid I. proposed many exceptions through which he strove in many ways to remove you from the accusation. And when disputation had continued for a long time on each side concerning his exceptions, after all things proposed on either side had been heard and understood, by the counsel of our brothers, by interlocutory judgment we pronounce that neither marriage nor betrothals were contracted between the said young man and girl, since it is established that the girl had not yet reached seven years. Wherefore an accusation had no place, since there was nothing which could lawfully be accused; nevertheless, consanguinity could be denounced so that the marriage to be contracted would be prohibited.

Therefore, for the denunciation to be lawfully proved, we assign as the term the feast of All Saints next to come, saving not only the exceptions proposed but also those to be proposed. But lest anything meanwhile be attempted against the girl, by apostolic authority we firmly prohibit further new proceedings in the same business until either the denunciation is abandoned or, after it has been proved, proceedings are conducted by judicial order. But if anything is attempted against our prohibition to her prejudice, we decree it to be void and altogether to lack force.

> Accusari non potest matrimonium, quod non est, ut si cum minori septennio sit contractum; denunciari tamen potest impedimentum, ne contrahatur in posterum.
>
> Innocentius III. C. et P. quondam filiis Malebrancae.
>
> Ad dissolvendum quod factum fuerat inter I. filium nobilis viri Leonis [de Monumento] et S. filiam quondam Matthaei [de Fortebrachio] super matrimonio contrahendo, in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia fuit ex parte vestra propositum, quod, quum dicta puella nondum ad septennium pervenisset, cum ipsa nec matrimonium contrahi nec sponsalia potuere. Defuit etiam consanguineorum assensus, qui praecipue sunt in talibus requirendi. Quodsi et aetas sufficiens exstitisset, et consanguineorum intervenisset assensus, personae tamen non sunt legitimae ad matrimonium contrahendum, linea consanguinitatis obstante. Accusatione vero, pro puella super consanguinitate proposita, et tam ex parte iuvenis quam ex parte puellae consanguinitatis gradibus computatis, quum eam vellet idoneis testibus comprobare, praefatus I. multas exceptiones proposuit, per quas nitebatur vos ab accusatione multipliciter removere. Quumque super exceptionibus ipsius fuisset utrinque diutius disputatum, auditis et intellectis, quaecunque fuerunt hinc inde proposita, de consilio fratrum nostrorum Interloquendo pronunciamus, inter dictos iuvenem et puellam nec matrimonium, nec sponsalia fuisse contracta, quum constet, puellam nondum ad septennium pervenisse. Quocirca nec accusatio locum habebat, quum non esset quod posset legitime accusari; denunciari tamen poterat consanguinitas, ut interdiceretur matrimonium contrahendum. Ad denunciationem ergo legitime probandam festum omnium Sanctorum, proxime venturum, terminum assignamus salvis exceptionibus, non solum propositis, sed etiam proponendis. Ne vero quicquam in puellam interim attentetur, auctoritate apostolica interdicimus firmiter, ne in ipso negotio de novo procedatur ulterius, donec vel a denunciatione cessetur, vel ea probata ordine iudiciario procedatur. Quodsi contra interdictum nostrum in praeiudicium ipsius aliquid fuerit attentatum, id irritum esse decernimus et viribus omnino carere.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: If someone contracts through words of the present with a minor in whom malice does not supply age, he is understood to have contracted not marriage but betrothals, even if earnest-money giving intervened.

The same, to the Bishop of Abbatis.

Your letters exhibited to us contained that a certain noble man betrothed his daughter, about twelve years old, to a certain noble man, who gave earnest money to her, with mutual consent acceding. But after the nuptials had been deferred for a little while, the girl's father entered the way of all flesh. When he had been taken from human affairs, the maternal uncle of the aforesaid girl joined her in marriage to another, and the man who had first betrothed her contracted with her mother. But your predecessor, considering that he could not remain with her whose daughter he had lawfully betrothed, promulgated a sentence of separation between them. Afterward, when the second man, who had taken the aforesaid girl as wife, had died, she joined herself to a third while he who had first betrothed her was living. Moreover, both she and the same man considered that you should be humbly consulted as to whether they could lawfully [together] remain; but you, after deliberation had been had, responded that, while the first betrothed man was living, she could not lawfully be joined to another. But because your church petitioned that you consult the Apostolic See concerning this, you deferred proceeding further, humbly supplicating us that we deign to rescribe to you concerning this.

But because, through those things expressed above, it could not for certain be established to us what age the girl was when she was betrothed to the same man, since it is said that she was about twelve years old, and whether prudence then supplied age in her, we respond to your fraternity in this manner: if the girl was then of marriageable age, and lawful consent of the present intervened between her and the first man, without doubt a lawful marriage was contracted between them, even if carnal commingling did not follow. But if the girl was not of marriageable age when the often-mentioned man betrothed her, and prudence did not supply age in her, beyond doubt not marriage but betrothals were contracted between them, although the same girl received earnest money from the man himself. Wherefore, if according to the first manner she contracted marriage with him, while he lives she could not duly contract a conjugal covenant with another; but if according to the second manner betrothals alone were contracted, the marriage which was celebrated between her and the other ought to be reputed lawful, provided another canonical impediment does not stand in the way. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the sixth day before the Ides of May, in the ninth year. 1206.]

> Si quis per verba de praesenti contrahit cum impubere, in qua aetatem malitia non supplet, intelligitur non matrimonium, sed sponsalia contraxisse, etiamsi subarrhatio intercesserit.
>
> Idem Episcopo Abbatensi.
>
> Tuae nobis exhibitae literae continebant, quod quidam vir nobilis filiam suam, circiter XII. annos habentem, cuidam viro nobili desponsavit, qui subarrhavit eandem consensu mutuo accedente. Sed nuptiis aliquantulum prorogatis, pater puellae viam est universae carnis ingressus. Eo autem rebus humanis exempto, puellae avunculus supra dictae ipsam alteri matrimonio copulavit, et ille, qui prius desponsaverat eandem, cum ipsius matre contraxit. Tuus autem praedecessor attendens, quod cum ea non poterat permanere, cuius filiam legitime desponsaverat, inter eos divortii sententiam promulgavit. Postmodum autem mortuo viro secundo, qui supra dictam puellam duxerat in uxorem, ipsa se tertio copulavit, illo vivente, qui eam primitus desponsarat. Ceterum tam ipsa, quam idem te duxerunt humiliter consulendum, utrum licite [simul] valeant commorari; tu vero, deliberatione habita, respondisti, quod, sponso primo vivente, alteri non potuit legitime copulari. Sed quia tua ecclesia postulavit, ut super hoc apostolicam sedem consuleres, procedere ulterius distulisti, nobis humiliter supplicans, ut super hoc tibi rescribere dignaremur. Quia vero per ea, quae superius sunt expressa, nobis pro certo constare non potuit, cuius aetatis esset puella, quum eidem viro exstitit desponsata, quum dicatur, quod circiter XII. annos habebat, utrumne prudentia tunc in illa suppleret aetatem: fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si puella tunc nubilis erat aetatis, et inter eam et primum virum legitimus intervenit de praesenti consensus, absque dubio inter eos erat legitimum matrimonium contractum, etsi carnalis commixtio non fuerit subsecuta. Si vero puella nubilis non erat aetatis, quum saepe fatus vir desponsavit eandem, et aetatem in ea prudentia non supplebat, procul dubio inter eos non coniugium, sed sponsalia contracta fuerunt, quamvis ab ipso viro eadem puella fuerit subarrhata. Quocirca, si iuxta primum modum matrimonium cum illo contraxit; eo vivente non potuit rite cum alio foedus contrahere coniugale; quod si iuxta modum secundum sponsalitia solummodo contracta fuerunt coniugium, quod inter illam et alium exstitit celebratum, debet legitimum reputari, dummodo aliud canonicum non obsistat. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VI. Id. Maii Ao. IX. 1206.]

Title III: On Clandestine Betrothal

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A clandestine marriage is not presumed; rather, the burden of proving it rests upon the one alleging it.

From the Council of Arles.

If anyone has secretly betrothed a woman and the woman or the man denies a betrothal of this kind, proof rests upon the man alone.

> DE CLANDESTINA DESPONSATIONE.
>
> Pro clandestino matrimonio non praesumitur, sed illud alleganti incumbit onus probandi.
>
> Ex concilio Arelatensi.
>
> Si quis clam desponsaverit aliquam, et mulier vel vir negat huiusmodi desponsationem, viro tantum incumbit probatio.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Those who contracted marriage clandestinely, if one or both deny it and lawful proof thereof does not appear, are not compelled by the Church to cohabit; and, if they make it public, it will be approved as though done in the sight of the Church, unless a reasonable cause exists which impedes it. This is what it says by adhering to the letter.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

As to what was signified to us on your part, that we ought to dispense concerning clandestine marriages, we do not see what dispensation is to be applied concerning them. For if marriages are contracted so secretly that lawful proof thereof does not appear, those who contract them are not in any way to be compelled by the Church. But if the persons contracting wish to make this public, unless a reasonable and lawful cause hinders it, they are to be received and approved by the Church as though contracted from the beginning in the sight of the Church. But if any, etc. (cf. c. 9, Which Sons IV. 17.)

> Qui matrimonium clandestine contraxerunt, altero negante vel utroque, non apparente legitima exinde probatione, simul cohabitare ab ecclesia non compelluntur; et, si illud publicaverint, tanquam in conspectu ecclesiae factum comprobabitur, nisi rationabilis causa subsit, quae impediat. H. d. literae inhaerendo.
>
> Alexander III. Belvacensi Episcopo.
>
> Quod nobis ex tua parte significatum est, ut de clandestinis matrimoniis dispensare deberemus, non videmus, quae dispensatio super his sit adhibenda. Si enim matrimonia ita occulte contrahuntur, quod exinde legitima probatio non appareat, ii, qui ea contrahunt, ab ecclesia non sunt aliquatenus compellendi. Verum si personae contrahentium hoc voluerint publicare, nisi rationabilis et legitima causa praepediat, ab ecclesia recipienda sunt et comprobanda, tanquam a principio in ecclesiae conspectu contracta. Si qui autem etc. (cf. c. 9. Qui filii IV. 17.)

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: When marriages are to be contracted, edicts ought to be proposed publicly in the church by priests, with a term assigned within which anyone who wishes to impede may oppose an impediment; and, if there is a probable conjecture of an impediment, the marriage is to be prohibited until cognizance is taken concerning this. This first, as far as § "But if anyone." — (But if anyone, etc.:) If a marriage has been contracted in a prohibited degree clandestinely or contrary to the prohibition mentioned above, even by those ignorant of the impediment, those born of that marriage are illegitimate. The same applies if both parents know the impediment to the marriage, although they contract in the sight of the Church. This is what it says as far as § "Indeed." Abbas. — (Indeed, etc.:) A priest who contemns prohibiting forbidden marriages, and any cleric, even a regular, who was present, are suspended from benefice for three years and, if the fault demands, are punished even more gravely; the contracting persons themselves acting contrary to this chapter are also otherwise lawfully to be punished, and the same applies to those denouncing calumniously. This is what it says as far as the end. Abbas.

Innocent III, in the General Council.

Since the prohibition of conjugal union has been revoked in the last three degrees, we wish it to be strictly observed in the others. Whence, adhering to the footsteps of our predecessors, we prohibit clandestine marriages altogether, prohibiting also that any priest presume to be present at such marriages. Therefore, extending generally to other places a special custom of certain places, we establish that, when marriages are to be contracted, they are to be publicly announced in the churches by priests, with a suitable term fixed in advance, so that within it whoever wishes and is able may oppose a lawful impediment; and the priests themselves are nonetheless to investigate whether any impediment stands in the way. But when a probable conjecture against the union to be contracted appears, the contract is to be expressly prohibited until it is established by manifest proofs what ought to be done concerning it.

§ 1. But if anyone presumes to enter clandestine or prohibited marriages of this kind in a prohibited degree, even ignorantly, let the offspring received from such a union be considered altogether illegitimate, to have no assistance from the ignorance of the parents, since by contracting thus they appear not to be devoid of knowledge, or at least to be affecters of ignorance. In like manner let the offspring be considered illegitimate if both parents, knowing a lawful impediment, presume to contract despite every prohibition, even in the sight of the Church.

§ 2. Indeed, if a parochial priest contemns prohibiting such unions, or any person, even a regular, presumes to be present at them, let him be suspended from office for three years, to be punished more gravely if the quality of the fault demands it. But suitable penance is also to be enjoined upon those who have presumed to be joined in such manner even in a permitted degree. But if anyone maliciously objects an impediment in order to impede a lawful union, he will not escape canonical punishment.

> Quum matrimonia sunt contrahenda, debent per presbyteros in ecclesia edicta proponi, assignato termino, infra quem qui voluerit impedire impedimentum opponat, et, si probabilis coniectura fuerit de impedimento, interdicatur testimonium, donec de hoc cognoscatur. Hoc primo usque ad §. Si quis. - (Si quis etc.:) Si in gradu prohibito matrimonium clandestine vel contra interdictum, de quo supra, contractum fuerit, etiam per ignorantes de impedimento, nati ex illo matrimonio sunt illegitimi. Idem est, si ambo parentes sciunt impedimentum matrimonii, licet in conspectu ecclesiae contrahant. H. d. usque ad §. Sane. Abbas. - (Sane etc.:) Sacerdos, qui contempserit prohibere matrimonia interdicta, et quilibet clericus etiam regularis, qui interfuit, per triennium a beneficio suspenduntur, et, si culpa exegerit, etiam gravius puniuntur; ipsi etiam contrahentes contra hoc cap. etiam alias licite puniendi sunt, et idem in calumniose denunciantibus. H. d. usque ad finem. Abbas.

Innocentius III. in concilio generali.

Quum inhibitio copulae coniugalis sit in ultimis tribus gradibus revocata, eam in aliis volumus districte servari. Unde praedecessorum nostrorum vestigiis inhaerendo, clandestina coniugia penitus inhibemus, prohibentes etiam, ne quis sacerdos talibus interesse praesumat. Quare specialem quorundam locorum consuetudinem ad alia generaliter prorogando statuimus, ut, quum matrimonia fuerint contrahenda, in ecclesiis per presbyteros publice proponantur, competenti termino praefinito, ut infra illum, qui voluerit et valuerit, legitimum impedimentum opponat, et ipsi presbyteri nihilominus investigent, utrum aliquod impedimentum obsistat. Quum autem apparuerit probabilis coniectura contra copulam contrahendam, contractus interdicatur expresse, donec, quid fieri debeat super eo, manifestis constiterit documentis. §. 1. Si quis vero huiusmodi clandestina vel interdicta coniugia inire praesumpserit in gradu prohibito, etiam ignoranter, soboles de tali coniunctione suscepta prorsus illegitima censeatur, de parentum ignorantia nullum habitura subsidium, quum illi taliter contrahendo non expertes scientiae, vel saltem affectatores ignorantiae videantur. Pari modo proles illegitima censeatur, si ambo parentes, impedimentum scientes legitimum, praeter omne interdictum, etiam in conspectu ecclesiae contrahere praesumpserunt. §. 2. Sane, si parochialis sacerdos tales coniunctiones prohibere contempserit, aut quilibet etiam regularis, qui eis praesumpserit interesse, per triennium ab officio suspendatur, gravius puniendus, si culpae qualitas postulaverit. Sed et his, qui taliter praesumpserint etiam in gradu concesso copulari, condigna poenitentia iniungatur. Si quis autem ad impediendam legitimam copulam malitiose impedimentum obiecerit, canonicam non effugiet ultionem.

Title IV: On the Betrothed Woman of Two Men

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One who contracts successively through words of the present with two women is held to adhere to the first. But if he first contracted through words of the future and second through words of the present, he will adhere to the second.

Augustine, On the Pledge of Pact and Consent.

The pledge of pact and of consent is spoken of in two ways. If someone has given a certain woman a pledge of pact, he ought not to take another. If he has taken another, he ought to do penance for the pledge falsified; nevertheless, let him remain with her whom he took. For so great a sacrament ought not to be broken. But if he has given a pledge of consent, it is not lawful for him to take another. But if he has taken another, he will dismiss her and adhere to the prior wife. Now there is a pledge of pact when someone promises a certain woman his pledge that he will take her if she permits him to have intercourse with her, or even in place of consent. But a pledge of consent exists when, even if he does not clasp her hand, he nevertheless consents in heart and mouth to take her, and they mutually grant themselves, one to the other, and mutually receive one another.

DE SPONSA DUORUM.

Contrahens successive per verba de praesenti cum duabus, tenetur adhaerere primae. Si autem primo contraxit per verba de futuro, secundo per verba de praesenti, adhaerebit secundae.

Augustinus de fide pactionis et consensus.

> Duobus modis dicitur fides pactionis et consensus. Si aliquis alicui mulieri fidem fecerit pactionis, non debet aliam ducere. Si aliam duxerit, poenitentiam debet agere de fide mentita; maneat tamen cum illa, quam duxit. Non enim rescindi debet tantum sacramentum. Si autem fecerit fidem consensus, non licet ei aliam ducere. Si autem duxerit, dimittet ipsam, et adhaerebit uxori priori. Est autem fides pactionis, quando aliquis promittit alicui fidem, quod eam ducet, si permiserit eum rem secum habere, vel etiam pro consensu. Fides autem consensus est, quando, etsi non stringit manum, corde tamen et ore consentit ducere, et mutuo se concedunt unus alii, et mutuo se suscipiunt.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It sets forth the penance of him who received as wife for himself the betrothed woman of another by words of the present; nor can he ever have her as wife. This is what it says according to the letter.

From Burchard, Book XXX.

You received as wife for yourself her whom another had held as betrothed to him. Dismiss her, because she can never become lawful for you, and do penance for forty days on bread and water, which they call a carina, with the seven following years.

> Ponit poenitentiam illius, qui alterius sponsam de praesenti sibi accepit in uxorem; nec unquam in uxorem eam habere potest. H. d. iuxta literam.
>
> Ex Brocardo libro XXX. Accepisti illam in uxorem tibi, quam alter sibi desponsatam habuerat. Dimitte illam, quia nunquam potest tibi fieri legitima, et XL. dies in pane et aqua, quod carinam vocant, cum septem sequentibus annis poeniteas.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Betrothals of the present are not dissolved by a following marriage, even one consummated by carnal union.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Salerno.

Although beyond the customary and more than customarily we are impeded by many and various businesses in such a way that it is not easy for us to respond to the consultations of some, nevertheless by that special favor which we have toward your person and by fraternal charity we are compelled to disclose to you by the present letters, however much we are intent upon other things, what we think concerning those things about which your prudence consulted us. You indeed consulted us whether, if lawful consent of the present intervened between a man and a woman, with an oath furnished or not furnished, but carnal union did not follow, it is lawful for the woman to marry another; or, if she married another and carnal union followed, whether she ought to be separated from him. But concerning this we respond to your consultation in this manner: if lawful consent of the present intervenes between a man and a woman under that solemnity which is accustomed to occur, namely, with a priest or even a notary present, as is also still observed in certain places, before suitable witnesses, in such a way indeed that one expressly receives the other by customary words in their mutual consent, each saying, "I receive you as mine," and, "I receive you as mine," whether an oath has been interposed or not, it is not lawful for the woman to marry another. And if she has married, even if carnal union followed, she ought to be separated from him and compelled by ecclesiastical rigor to return to the first, although others think otherwise, and otherwise also it has at times been judged by certain of our predecessors. But, etc. (cf. c. 2, On the Conversion of a Spouse III. 32.)

Sponsalia de praesenti non solvuntur per sequens matrimonium, etiam carnali copula consummatum.

Alexander III. Salernitano Archiepiscopo.

Licet praeter solitum +*et amplius solito multis simus et variis negotiis praepediti ita, quod non sit nobis facile aliquorum consultationibus respondere, illa tamen speciali gratia, quam ad personam tuam habemus, et caritate cogimur fraterna, quid sentiamus de his, super quibus consuluit nos prudentia tua, tibi, quantumcunque aliis simus intenti, praesentibus literis aperire. Consuluisti nos siquidem, utrum, si inter virum et mulierem, praestito vel non praestito sacramento, legitimus consensus intervenerit de praesenti, carnali copula non secuta, liceat mulieri alii nubere, vel, si nupserit alii, et carnalis fuerit copula subsecuta, an ab ipso debeat separari. Super hoc autem *Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si inter virum et mulierem legitimus consensus sub ea solennitate, quae fieri solet, praesente scilicet sacerdote aut etiam notario, sicut etiam in quibusdam locis adhuc observatur, coram idoneis testibus, interveniat de praesenti, ita quidem, quod unus alterum in suo mutuo consensu verbis consuetis expresse recipiat, utroque dicente: "ego te accipio in meam," et: "ego te accipio in meum," sive sit iuramentum interpositum sive non, non licet mulieri alii nubere. Et si nupserit, etiamsi carnalis copula sit secuta, ab eo separari debet, et, ut ad primum redeat, ecclesiastica districtione compelli, quamvis alii aliter sentiant, et aliter etiam a quibusdam praedecessoribus nostris sit aliquando iudicatum. Verum etc. (cf. c. 2. de conv. coni. III. 32.)

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: He who appeals in a matrimonial cause ought to be prohibited from contracting another marriage while the litigation is pending; and if he contracts, he ought to be separated.

The same, to the Archbishop of Genoa.

Your fraternity consulted us as to what you ought to do concerning those who betroth certain women and, in the course of time, before they take or know them, receive others as wives. Concerning this, indeed, we respond to your consultation in this manner: if a man and a woman receive one another by express mutual consent of the present, neither of them, while the other survives, will be able to pass to other vows, although either can migrate to a monastery. But if mutual consent of the present did not occur between them, but a promise of the future—namely, that each said to the other, "I will receive you as mine," and, "I will receive you as mine"—if another has betrothed and conducted home that woman, even if between the first persons there was an oath, as we have said, of the future, the second marriage cannot be separated in view of this betrothal, but penance is to be enjoined upon them for violation of the pledge.

But concerning those who before you raise a controversy over a betrothal made by mutual consent of the present and, while an appeal is pending which they interpose to the Apostolic See before sentence or cognizance of the cause, receive others as wives, we judge that this is to be done: if henceforth they consider that they should appeal in such a case, you are publicly to prohibit them more strictly in church from contracting another marriage before decision of the cause. And if they presume to act contrary to the prohibition of the Church thus publicly made, you will be able to annul the marriage so presumptuously contracted. [But concerning those, etc.; cf. c. 9, On the Betrothal of Minors IV. 2.]

Ei, qui appellat in causa matrimoniali, interdici debet, ne aliud matrimonium contrahat lite pendente, et si contraxerit, debet separari.

Idem Genuensi Archiepiscopo.

Tua fraternitas nos consuluit, *quid de his agere debeas, qui desponsant aliquas mulieres, et processu temporis, antequam eas ducant vel cognoscant, accipiunt alias in uxores. Super quo utique consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si vir et mulier sese recipiunt expresso consensu de praesenti mutuo, neuter eorum altero superstite poterit ad alia vota transire, etsi possit ad monasterium transmigrare. Verum si inter ipsos non accessit consensus mutuus de praesenti, sed promissio de futuro, videlicet quod uterque dixit alteri: "ego te recipiam in meam," et: "ego te in meum," si alius mulierem illam desponsaverit et traduxerit, etiamsi inter primos iuramentum fuerit, sicut diximus, de futuro, huius desponsationis intuitu secundum non poterit matrimonium separari, sed eis est de violatione fidei poenitentia iniungenda. *De his vero, qui coram te super desponsatione, facta per consensum mutuum de praesenti, controversiam movent, et appellatione pendente, quam ante sententiam vel cognitionem causae ad sedem apostolicam interponunt, accipiunt alias in uxores, hoc arbitramur agendum, ut, si amodo in tali casu duxerint appellandum, eis in ecclesia publice interdicas arctius, ne ante decisionem causae aliud contrahant matrimonium. Et si contra interdictum ecclesiae ita publice factum venire praesumpserint, matrimonium tam praesumptuose contractum poteris irritare. [De illis autem etc. cf. c. 9. de desp. imp. IV. 2.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: He who betroths two women through words of the present will have the first betrothed as wife, even if he knew the second first; nor does a contrary custom have force. And this last point is added to the chapter "Although" above under the same title.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Modena.

Your letters some time ago—(And below:) Concerning the custom which long obtained in the city of Modena, that, if someone swore he would take a certain woman and betrothed her short of carnal union, and if afterward he betrothed another and knew the other, the one first known, not the one first betrothed, would be adjudged to the man. (And below:) But lest a part be base which does not agree with its whole, and because the Church of Modena ought humbly to hold and observe what it sees the See of Blessed Peter and its metropolis follow and teach, in marriages to be contracted henceforth we wish you to observe this: after lawful consent of the present, which suffices in such matters according to the canonical sanctions, has intervened between lawful persons—and, if it alone is lacking, the other things, even when celebrated with intercourse itself, are frustrated—if persons lawfully joined afterward contract in fact with others, what was done first by law cannot be annulled.

Qui duas per verba de praesenti desponsat, primam desponsatam habebit in uxorem, etiamsi prius secundam cognoverit: nec valet contraria consuetudo. Et hoc ultimum additur ad cap. Licet supra eodem.

Innocentius III. Mutinensi Episcopo.

Tuas dudum (Et infra:) De consuetudine, quae diu in Mutinensi obtinuit civitate, ut, si quis iuraret se aliquam ducturum, et citra carnis copulam desponsasset, si consequenter desponsasset aliam et aliam cognovisset, primo cognita adiudicaretur viro, non quae prius exstitit desponsata. (Et infra:) Ne vero turpis sit pars, quae suo non congruit universo, et ecclesia Mutinensis tenere debeat humiliter et servare quod beati Petri sedem et suam metropolim sequi viderit et docere: in matrimoniis de cetero contrahendis illud te volumus observare, ut, postquam inter legitimas personas consensus legitimus intervenerit de praesenti, qui sufficit in talibus iuxta canonicas sanctiones, et, si solus defuerit, cetera, etiam cum ipso coitu celebrata, frustrantur, si personae iunctae legitime cum aliis postea de facto contrahant, quod prius de iure factum fuerat non poterit irritari.

Title V: On Conditions Appended in Betrothal or in Other Contracts

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The failure of a shameful condition appended in the contract of marriage does not vitiate the marriage, but the condition is vitiated.

From the African Council.

Whoever shall have betrothed a woman under the name of a condition, and shall afterward have wished to leave her, we say that the condition is to be broken and the betrothal is to be held irrefragably.

> DE CONDITIONIBUS APPOSITIS IN DESPONSATIONE VEL IN ALIIS CONTRACTIBUS.
>
> Defectus turpis conditionis, in contractu matrimonii appositae, non vitiat matrimonium, sed vitiatur.
>
> Ex concilio Africano.
>
> Quicunque sub conditionis nomine aliquam desponsaverit, et eam postea relinquere voluerit, dicimus quod frangatur conditio, et desponsatio irrefragabiliter teneatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A slave manumitted upon this condition, that he become a monk and serve a monastery, otherwise returning into servitude, is compelled, if, having accepted this, he became a monk, to observe the will of the manumitter.

Gregory, to the Bishop of Spoleto.

Since it is proper—(And below:) [But] if perchance someone complains that he was unjustly excommunicated, [let your fraternity] ascertain it by subtle investigation; and, once the truth is known, so dispose the case that [neither may injustice long prevail unto the affliction of an innocent person,] nor may the vigor of discipline [either] be broken, or [by an indiscreet presumption be able to be] dissolved. (And below:) The priest H. complained [to us] that a certain deacon had manumitted two bondservants [of his right] upon this condition, that they become monks and remain in the monastery in which he himself had been, adding that, if either acted contrary to it, he should again [in every respect] be subjected to servitude; and that one of them, having despised this condition, had deserted the monastery [with rash audacity] and joined himself among the clerics. You, therefore, if you find it to be so, conduct yourself in such a way that neither may he have the faculty of deserting the monastery, nor may the will of the manumitter, being nevertheless preserved, be able to be passed over.

> Servus manumissus ea conditione, ut fiat monachus et monasterio serviat, alias in servitutem redeat, si, hoc acceptato, monachus factus sit, manumittentis voluntatem cogitur observare.
>
> Gregorius Episcopo Spoletano.
>
> Quum sit proprium (Et infra:) [Sed] si forte iniuste se excommunicatum quis quaeritur, [fraternitas vestra] subtili indagatione cognoscat; et ita causam cognita veritate disponat, ut [nec iniustitia diu in insontis afflictionem praevaleat,] nec disciplinae vigor [aut] frangi, aut [indiscreta valeat praesumptione] dissolvi (Et infra:) H. presbyter [nobis] conquestus est, diaconum quendam manumisisse duo [iuris sui] mancipia sub hac conditione, ut monachi fierent, et in eo monasterio, ubi ipse fuerat, permanerent, adiiciens, ut, si quis contra faceret, servituti iterum [per omnia] subderetur; atque unum ex his hac conditione despecta monasterium [temerario ausu] deseruisse, et se inter clericos sociasse. Tu ergo, si ita esse repereris, sic te exhibe, ut nec illi monasterium deserendi sit facultas, et manumittentis voluntas nihilominus conservata non valeat praeteriri.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: He who swore to take a woman as wife if she gave him one hundred is not bound, if the one hundred are not given, to take her, unless afterward he consented purely or knew her.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Palermo.

Concerning those—(And below:) [Compare chapter 5, On Betrothals, IV. 1.] But if someone shall have furnished an oath to a woman under words of this kind: "I shall take you as wife if you give me so much," he will not be held guilty of perjury if he does not take as wife the woman who is unwilling to pay him what he asked to be given to him under oath, unless consent of the present or carnal commingling has afterward intervened between them.

Qui iuravit aliquam in uxorem accipere, si centum sibi donaverit, centum non datis, recipere non tenetur, nisi postea pure consenserit, vel eam cognoverit.

Alexander III. Panormitano Archiepiscopo.

De illis (Et infra:) [cf. c. 5. de spons. IV. 1.] Si vero aliquis sub huiusmodi verbis iuramentum alicui mulieri praestiterit: "Ego te in uxorem accipiam, si tantum mihi donaveris," reus periurii non habebitur, si eam, nolentem sibi solvere quod iuramento sibi dari petiit, non acceperit in uxorem, nisi consensus de praesenti aut carnalis sit inter eos commixtio subsecuta.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A thing donated to a church under a mode immediately belongs to the church, nor is it revoked when the mode is not observed, unless this is expressed in the contract. This the chapter says according to the truer understanding, and it is a very notable and highly citable text. Abbas.

The same.

But when any possession is donated to a church with a condition interposed, the gift cannot afterward be revoked by the donor, unless perhaps it was conferred upon such a condition that, when it ceases, the possession ought to be revoked.

Res, donata ecclesiae sub modo, statim est ecclesiae, nec revocatur modo non servato, nisi hoc in contractu sit expressum. H. d. secundum veriorem intellectum, et est textus multum notabilis, et valde allegabilis. Abbas.

Idem.

Verum quum alicui ecclesiae possessio quaelibet interposita conditione donatur, a donatore donum postea revocari non potest, nisi forte tali sit conditione collatum, quod, ea cessante, possessio debeat revocari.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One contracting marriage under a condition that is not disapproved is not compelled to consummate the marriage before the condition occurs.

Urban III.

But concerning that which you similarly asked of us, whether he who consented to a certain woman if her father namely furnished his assent is to be compelled to consummate the marriage, we nevertheless respond that, since consent which is reserved in another's judgment cannot be said to be free, and canonical institutions do not disapprove the condition itself, which is consonant with honorable conduct, unless the will of the father afterward intervenes, he is by no means to be compelled to contract the marriage. For although of happy memory Pope Alexander, our predecessor, in his consultations, responded that betrothals contracted with a condition interposed, if consent of the present intervenes or carnal union follows, ought not to be dissolved, even though the condition itself was not fulfilled, but ought firmly to be observed, this is by no means adverse to our determination, since consent of this kind is not to be held as consent of the present, although it is expressed more evidently through words of the present, because it consists in another's judgment, not already had but to be had.

> Contrahens matrimonium sub conditione non improbata non compellitur matrimonium consummare ante conditionis eventum.
>
> Urbanus III.
>
> Super eo vero, quod a nobis similiter postulasti, utrum ille, qui in quandam mulierem consensit, si pater eius videlicet suum praestaret assensum, sit ad consummandum matrimonium compellendus, nihilominus respondemus, quod, quum consensus liber dici non possit, qui in alieno arbitrio reservatur, ac conditionem ipsam canonica non improbent instituta, quae consonet honestati, nisi voluntas patris postmodum intercedat, nequaquam cogendus est ad matrimonium contrahendum. Nam licet felicis memoriae Alexander Papa antecessor noster in suis consultationibus responderit quod sponsalia, interposita conditione contracta, conditione ipsa non impleta, si consensus de praesenti intercedat, vel carnalis copula subsequatur, dissolvi non debent, sed firmiter observari: nequaquam est nostrae definitioni adversum, quum huiusmodi consensus non sit de praesenti habendus, licet per verba de praesenti evidentius exprimatur, qui in alieno arbitrio, non habito, sed habendo, consistit.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: He who contracts betrothals under an honorable condition and knows the betrothed woman before the condition occurs withdraws from the condition.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Masicano.

Through your letters you intimated to us that, when in your presence a certain woman named P. claimed as husband a certain man named N., asserting that mutual consent of the present had intervened between them and that carnal union had followed, the man himself, although he did not deny the contracted betrothals and the carnal union, nevertheless asserted that he was not bound to take her as wife, because the betrothals between them had been contracted under this condition, if namely his father and paternal uncle consented to the betrothals, but, as soon as they learned of them, they contradicted both the bridegroom and the bride, which the same man endeavored to prove by suitable witnesses. But the woman replied that, although faith had been pledged by each under the aforesaid condition, nevertheless no contradiction had ever been made to her by the man's father or paternal uncle, and she said that both before the time of the contradiction expressed by the witnesses and after it, carnal union had intervened between them. She added, moreover, that, although in the beginning they had contracted conditionally, nevertheless in the course of time they consented purely to marriage without the addition of a condition, and she asserted that she would prove this by witnesses. Therefore, after the witnesses of each party had been received, when you caused the attestations of the woman to be published before you in the presence of two examiners, the witnesses whose statements were being read immediately cried out that they had not said the things that were being read and that the things they had deposed were not written. But one of the examiners then strongly opposed them. And because of this the woman petitioned that the same witnesses or others be heard again upon the same articles. But you, moved by this novelty, fixed the following day for the parties; when they had been constituted in your presence, you ordered all the examiners to be summoned, adjuring them under threat of anathema to say whether those were the true attestations which the witnesses had opposed; and they immediately produced other attestations in their midst. When these had been objected to through the man's advocate, just as the former ones had been opposed by the witnesses, after manifold allegations the second attestations were admitted by the parties, and the attestations of the man were afterward published. Moreover, the woman insisted chiefly upon this article, that both before and after the renunciation of the betrothals the same man had known her carnally and had begotten a daughter from her; this she endeavored to demonstrate by her own oath. But because upon these matters you received not only various but contrary opinions, recurring to the teaching authority of the Apostolic See, you humbly asked to be instructed as to what is to be thought in such matters. But we, having inspected the attestations admitted by the parties, which you sent to us enclosed in your letters, respond to your consultation in this manner: since it is manifestly established through the confession of both the man and the woman that, after the betrothals were contracted, carnal union followed between them, there is indeed a strong presumption in favor of marriage, because he appears to have withdrawn from the appended condition. For even if each point is proved by witnesses, that, after the father and paternal uncle of the man contradicted the betrothals, the same man knew that woman by carnal union, nevertheless it is in no way proved that, before he himself knew her, his father and paternal uncle had taken care to contradict. [Given at Ferentino, on the second day before the Ides of July. 1203.]

> Qui sub honesta conditione sponsalia contrahit, et ante conditionis eventum desponsatam cognoscit, a conditione recedit.
>
> Innocentius III. Masicano Episcopo.
>
> Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod, quum in praesentia tua quaedam mulier, P. nomine, quendam nomine N. postularet in virum, asserens, inter se mutuum de praesenti consensum intervenisse, et carnalem copulam accessisse, vir ipse, quamvis contracta sponsalia et carnalem copulam non negaret, asserebat tamen, se illam in uxorem ducere non teneri, quia sponsalia inter ipsos sub hac fuerunt conditione contracta, si videlicet pater eius et patruus sponsalibus consentirent, sed ipsi, quam cito noverunt, et sponso contradixerunt et sponsae, quod idem vir idoneis nitebatur testibus comprobare. Verum mulier replicabat, quod, licet fides praestita fuerit ab utroque sub conditione praescripta, non tamen sibi fuerat a patre viri vel patruo aliquando contradictum, et ante tempus contradictionis, expressum a testibus, et post illud dicebat inter se carnalem copulam accessisse. Addebat praeterea, quod, licet a principio conditionaliter contraxissent, temporis tamen processu sine conditionis adiectione pure in matrimonium consenserunt, et hoc asserebat se testibus probaturam. Receptis itaque testibus utriusque, quum attestationes mulieris coram te praesentibus duobus examinatoribus faceres publicari, testes, quorum dicta legebantur, illico proclamaverunt, quod ipsi quae legebantur non dixerant, et quae deposuerant scripta non erant. Sed ab uno examinatorum tunc contra eos fuit fortiter obviatum. Et ob hoc mulier postulabat, ut iidem testes vel alii super iisdem capitulis iterum audirentur. Tu autem, hac novitate commotus, sequentem diem partibus praefixisti, quibus in tua praesentia constitutis, omnes examinatores convocari iussisti, sub interminatione anathematis illos obtestans, ut dicerent, si essent illae verae attestationes, quibus obviaverant testes; qui continuo alias attestationes in medium produxerunt. Quibus quum per advocatum viri fuisset obiectum, sicut prioribus fuerat a testibus obviatum, post allegationes multiplices secundae attestationes a partibus admissae fuerunt, et attestationes viri postea publicatae. Porro mulier illi praecipue articulo insistebat, quod ante renunciationem sponsalium et post idem vir carnaliter eam cognoverat, et ex ea filiam procreaverat; quod proprio nitebatur ostendere iuramento. Quia vero super his non solum opiniones varias, sed contrarias accepisti, ad magisterium sedis apostolicae recurrens, humiliter postulasti, quid sentiendum sit in talibus edoceri. Nos autem, inspectis attestationibus, admissis a partibus, quas nobis tuis misisti literis interclusas, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum liquido constet per confessionem tam viri quam mulieris, quod post contracta sponsalia carnalis est inter eos copula subsecuta, pro matrimonio est vehementer quidem praesumendum, quia videtur conditione apposita recessisse. Nam etsi probatum sit utrumque per testes, quod, postquam pater et patruus viri contradixere sponsalibus, idem vir mulierem illam carnali coniunctione cognoverit, non est tamen aliquo modo probatum, quod, antequam ipse cognovisset eandem, pater eius et patruus contradicere curavissent. [Dat. Ferentini II. Id. Iul. 1203.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If a shameful or impossible condition is appended in a contract of marriage, it is held as not added, unless it is contrary to the substance of marriage, because then it vitiates the contract. This the chapter says; it is notable and highly citable.

Gregory IX. If conditions contrary to the substance of marriage are inserted, as, for example, if one says to the other, "I contract with you if you avoid the generation of offspring," or, "until I find another more worthy in honor or resources," or, "if for gain you hand yourself over to be adulterously used," the matrimonial contract, however favorable it may be, lacks effect; although other conditions appended in marriage, if they are shameful or impossible, ought, because of the favor shown to it, to be held as not added.

Si in contractu matrimonii apponitur conditio turpis vel impossibilis, habetur pro non adiecta, nisi sit contra substantiam matrimonii, quia tunc vitiat contractum. H. d. hoc capitulum notabile et multum allegabile.

Gregorius IX. Si conditiones contra substantiam coniugii inserantur, puta, si alter dicat alteri: "contraho tecum, si generationem prolis evites," vel: "donec inveniam aliam honore vel facultatibus digniorem," aut: "si pro quaestu adulterandam te tradas," matrimonialis contractus, quantumcunque sit favorabilis, caret effectu; licet aliae conditiones appositae in matrimonio, si turpes aut impossibiles fuerint, debeant propter eius favorem pro non adiectis haberi.

Title VI: Which Clerics or Persons under Vows Can Contract Marriage

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A deacon or subdeacon cannot contract marriage and, if they have contracted, even if they have become irregular, they ought to be separated.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Reims.

Concerning the deacon indeed who on Holy Saturday wounded a certain other deacon and took a wife, we respond this to your prudence: if, with contrite and humbled heart, he wishes to return to the Church, after dismissing her whom he took as wife and obtaining absolution, and after penance has been enjoined upon him for each transgression, once he has performed it you will be able by dispensation to restore to him the office of the diaconate and, if he has been of perfect life and conduct, to ordain him as priest. But that a subdeacon, whether he has killed a man or not, cannot contract marriage, the censure of the sacred canons demonstrates. [The parishioners, etc. (Compare chapter 26, On Tithes, III. 30.)]

QUI CLERICI VEL VOVENTES MATRIMONIUM CONTRAHERE POSSUNT.

Diaconus vel subdiaconus matrimonium contrahere non possunt et, si contraxerint, etiamsi sint facti irregulares, debent separari.

Alexander III. Remensi Archiepiscopo.

De diacono vero, qui in sabbato sancto quendam alium diaconum vulneravit, et uxorem accepit, hoc tuae prudentiae respondemus, quod, si contrito et humiliato corde ad ecclesiam redire voluerit, dimissa illa, quam accepit in uxorem, et absolutione obtenta, iniuncta sibi poenitentia de utroque excessu, post eam peractam dispensative poteris ei diaconatus officium reddere, et, si perfectae vitae et conversationis fuerit, eum in presbyterum ordinare. Subdiaconum autem, sive hominem interfecerit sive non, matrimonium non posse contrahere, sacrorum canonum censura demonstrat. [Parochianos etc. (cf. c. 26. de dec. III. 30.)]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A subdeacon cannot contract marriage.

The same, to the Bishop of Le Mans.

From the tenor of your letters we received that F., bearer of the present letters, while constituted in the office of the subdiaconate, joined a certain woman to himself as spouse. Whence you, as a provident and discreet man, caused him to abjure the woman whom he had taken as wife. Concerning this deed we commend your prudence in the Lord, commanding you through the present writing that, if he wishes to pass to a canonical or monastic order, and if after his praiseworthy conduct it seems good to you, you permit him to be promoted to the higher orders. But if he is unwilling to transfer himself to religion, permit him neither to minister in the subdiaconate nor to be promoted to higher orders; nevertheless, he will be able to minister in the minor orders.

Subdiaconus matrimonium contrahere non potest.

Idem Cenomanensi Episcopo.

Ex literarum tuarum tenore accepimus quod F. lator praesentium, in subdiaconatus officio constitutus, quandam sibi in coniugem copulavit. Unde tu, sicut vir providus et discretus, quam in uxorem duxerat, eundem abiurare fecisti. Super quo facto prudentiam tuam in Domino commendamus, per praesentia tibi scripta mandantes, quatenus, si ad canonicam vel monasticum ordinem transire voluerit, et tibi post laudabilem conversationem ipsius visum fuerit, eum ad maiores ordines promoveri concedas. Quod si ad religionem se transferre noluerit, eum neque in subdiaconatu ministrare, neque ad altiores permittas ordines promoveri; in minoribus tamen ordinibus poterit ministrare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A solemn vow impedes and dissolves marriage after it has been contracted; a simple vow only impedes a marriage to be contracted but does not dissolve it after it has been contracted.

The same, to the Bishop of Worcester.

We remember that on your part we heard a question of this kind, namely whether those who before a bishop devoted themselves to passing to religion and receive the habit of religion, if afterward they take wives, are to be compelled to dismiss them and to return to the church to which they had conveyed themselves. Concerning this, therefore, We respond that, if anyone who devoted himself to religion and, having received the habit, made profession, afterward joined a woman to himself, he is to be compelled to withdraw from her, and ought to pass without contradiction to the church to which he conveyed himself. But if he neither received the habit nor made profession, but made only a vow and promised that he would pass to religion, although he afterward contracted marriage, he is not to be compelled to pass to religion and to break the matrimonial vow.

> Votum solenne impedit et dirimit matrimonium post contractum; votum simplex tantum impedit contrahendum, sed non dirimit post contractum.
>
> Idem Vigoriensi Episcopo.
>
> Meminimus, nos ex parte tua quaestionem huiusmodi audivisse, scilicet utrum illi, qui se ad religionem coram episcopo devoverunt transituros, et habitum religionis suscipiunt, si postmodum uxores duxerint, cogendi sint eas dimittere, et ad ecclesiam, cui se contulerint, redire. Super hoc utique Respondemus quod, si quisquam, qui se religioni devovit, et habitu suscepto professionem fecit, postmodum sibi aliquam copulaverit, est cogendus ab ea recedere, et ad ecclesiam, cui se contulit, debet sine contradictione transire. Verum, si nec habitum suscepit, nec professionem, sed votum solummodo fecit, et se ad religionem transiturum promisit, licet postea matrimonium contraxerit, non est cogendus ad religionem transire, et matrimoniale votum rescindere.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The reception outside a religious house of the habit of professed persons from one who does not have the power of incorporating into religion impedes, in a doubtful case, a marriage to be contracted, but does not dissolve one already contracted. This the chapter says according to the understanding which Panormitanus holds.

The same, to the Bishop of Lucca.

Your fraternity consulted us as to what is to be done concerning a noble woman who, after the death of her husband, having cast aside precious garments, changed her habit and received a veil from the hand of a priest, but did not renounce her own property, enter a cloister, make profession into the hand of any bishop, abbot, or abbess, or upon an altar, or promise obedience; but afterward, when a year had elapsed, because she could not bear the disturbances of many persons and feared a lapse of incontinence, having cast aside the religious habit, she married a certain nobleman solemnly by license of the Church. Concerning this, therefore, We respond to your consultation in this manner: just as a simple vow impedes a marriage to be contracted and does not dissolve one already contracted, so the habit, received without profession, impedes one from being contracted, but by no means dissolves one contracted. [Concerning the rest, etc. (Compare chapter 11, On Homicide, V. 12.)]

> Susceptio habitus professorum extra religionem a non habente potestatem incorporandi religioni, impedit in dubio matrimonium contrahendum, sed non dirimit contractum. H. d. secundum intellectum, quem tenet Panormitanus.
>
> Idem Lucensi Episcopo.

Consuluit nos tua fraternitas, quid faciendum sit de nobili muliere, quae post mortem mariti, vestibus pretiosis abiectis, mutavit habitum, et de manu presbyteri velamen assumpsit, sed non renunciavit propriis, nec intravit claustrum, nec in manu alicuius episcopi, abbatis vel abbatissae, aut super altare professa est, vel obedientiam promisit; postmodum vero, elapso anno, quum multorum inquietationes ferre non posset, et lapsum incontinentiae formidaret, abiecto religionis habitu, cuidam nobili solenniter per licentiam ecclesiae nupsit. Super hoc itaque Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod sicut simplex votum matrimonium impedit contrahendum, et non dirimit iam contractum, ita habitus, sine professione susceptus, ne contrahatur impedit, sed contractum nequaquam dissolvit. [De cetero etc. (cf. c. 11. De homic. V. 12.)]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A vow of chastity made in the present impedes a marriage to be contracted; nevertheless, for cause the Church sometimes permits marriage to be contracted. This the chapter says by adhering to the letter.

The same.

Coming to our presence, M. the hermit proposed by his assertion to us that the woman I., with faith pledged to a certain absent man, promised that she would marry him, but afterward, hearing many things about the severity and inhumanity of the man himself, she was unwilling to be joined to him. Therefore, since she feared that she might be compelled to marry him, in his hands she simply promised a vow of continence, but did not change her place or garment. Upon hearing this, the aforesaid man joined another woman to himself, and received offspring from her. We, therefore, considering that it is safer that the aforesaid woman, after the pledge of faith and the vow simply offered, contract marriage than incur the guilt of fornication, by commanding through apostolic writings order your fraternity that, if she proceeded no further, and neither changed her garment or place nor made profession, you enjoin upon her fitting satisfaction for the faith falsified and the vow violated, and do not postpone granting her license in the Lord to marry whom she wishes.

Votum castitatis de praesenti impedit matrimonium contrahendum; ecclesia tamen ex causa matrimonium contrahi quandoque permittit. H. d. inhaerendo literae.

Idem.

Veniens ad praesentiam nostram M. eremita sua nobis assertione proposuit, quod I. mulier cuidam viro absenti fide data se nupturam promisit, sed postmodum, audiens plura de severitate et inhumanitate ipsius viri, ei noluit copulari. Quum itaque timeret, ne illi nubere cogeretur, in manibus suis simpliciter continentiae votum promisit, non tamen locum aut vestem mutavit. Quo audito praedictus vir aliam sibi copulavit, et ex ea prolem suscepit. Nos itaque, attendentes, tutius esse, ut praefata mulier post fidem et votum simpliciter oblatum matrimonium contrahat, quam fornicationis reatum incurrat, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si plus non processit, nec vestem aut locum mutavit, nec professionem fecit, sibi de fide mentita et voto violato congruam satisfactionem indicas, et ei, cui vult, nubendi in Domino licentiam tribuere non postponas.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A simple vow impedes betrothals of the future but does not dissolve the marriage that follows; it is otherwise in a solemn vow.

Celestine III.

Again, a certain man, as you say, having emitted a vow of chastity, swore that he would afterward take a certain woman as wife. Whence, having been asked by your fraternity, after consulting prudent men, we judge that, since a simple vow binds no less before God than a solemn one, he should do penance for the fact that he swore rashly, and should endeavor to observe the vow that he made to God. But if, after he furnished an oath of this kind, he had hastened to nuptials already by his own motion, since a simple vow [although] it impedes a marriage to be contracted, nevertheless does not dissolve one already contracted, your question appears to contain no ambiguity. [Moreover, as to that which, etc. Compare chapter 1, On the Conversion of Infidels, III. 33.]

> Votum simplex impedit sponsalia de futuro, non autem dirimit matrimonium sequens; secus in voto solenni.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Rursus quidam, ut dicis, votum castitatis emittens, iuravit, se quandam ducturum postea in uxorem. Unde a fraternitate tua requisiti, consultis viris prudentibus, arbitramur, quod, quum simplex votum apud Deum non minus obliget quam solenne, pro eo, quod iuravit temere, poenitentiam agat, et votum, quod Deo fecit, studeat observare. Quodsi, postquam huiusmodi praestitit iuramentum, ad nuptias iam proprio motu convolasset, quum votum simplex [licet] matrimonium impediat contrahendum, non tamen dirimat iam contractum: nihil ambiguitatis quaestio tua continere videtur. [Ceterum quod etc. cf. c. 1. de convers. inf. III. 33.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A solemn vow impedes and dissolves marriage after it has been contracted.

Innocent III, to the Bishops of Lisbon and Coimbra.

It was represented to our apostolate by the intimation of the noble woman I. that, long ago, when she was a girl and constituted in tender years, she took M. Sancii as husband, who a short time afterward was killed by the enemies of the cross of Christ. After his death, supplication was made by certain courtiers to the King of León for union with her. When this came to the knowledge of her blood relatives, they urged her, under a royal adjuration, to take a husband. But she, protesting that she was then unwilling to marry, received counsel from them that she emit a vow of chastity, which she made into the hands of a certain one of the brothers of Saint Augustine, with this tenor added: that she would remain in her own house with all her substance. Indeed, she afterward remained for two years in the habit of the same order, although she asserts that she did this unwillingly and under compulsion, not so much from fear of the king as of her parents. After these things she indicated to the same king what she had done; approving it, he forbade anyone, against her will, to enter her house or to carry anything away from it. But meanwhile, after a little time had elapsed, the courtier P., carrying royal letters with him, and F. Ferdinandi entered the house of the said woman in order that the same P. might take her as wife at least by force, and they received from her the answer that, if the same P. took her, he would perish by her hands. But after these things, having abandoned her house and all the things that she had, she lay hidden for three weeks in the house of a certain Jew, and for six weeks in the church of Saint Mary of Veiga, in such a way that she did not dare even to go out from there on account of human necessities. At last, seeing herself compelled and destitute of all things, and considering nevertheless that she had emitted the vow unwillingly, having laid it aside, by the counsel of her parents she was publicly joined matrimonially to P. Michael, from whom in the course of time she bore four sons. But because she desires to prefer the salvation of her soul to all things, and fears that a union of this kind is not lawful,

she humbly petitioned to be instructed by our response as to what she ought to hold concerning these things. We, therefore, considering that in the emission of the vow which preceded, no compulsion, or only slight compulsion, had been present, which the patience and perseverance of the time that followed entirely put to flight, and that the subsequent union was rather wrongful and violently extorted, through apostolic writings order your fraternity that, after the truth has been investigated more diligently, if the truth supports the foregoing, you take care to admonish and induce the aforesaid woman to resume the religious habit wrongfully cast aside and to observe what she vowed, and, if there is need, to coerce her through ecclesiastical censure. [But if not both, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Kalends of December. 1199.]

> Votum solenne impedit et dirimit matrimonium post contractum.
>
> Innocentius III. Ulisbonensi et Colimbriensi Episcopis.
>
> Insinuante I. nobili muliere nostro est apostolatui reseratum, quod dudum puella et in annis teneris constituta, M. Sancii accepit in virum, qui ab inimicis crucis Christi fuit parvo post tempore interfectus. Post cuius obitum a quibusdam curialibus fuit regi Legionensi pro ipsius copula supplicatum. Quod quum ad consanguineorum eius notitiam pervenisset, ut maritum acciperet ei sub obtestatione regia suggesserunt. Ipsa vero, quod tunc nollet nubere protestans, consilium accepit ab eis, quod votum emitteret castitatis, quod in manibus cuiusdam de fratribus sancti Augustini fecit, eo adiecto tenore, ut in domo propria cum omni substantia sua remaneret. Sane in eiusdem ordinis habitu biennio post permansit, licet id se invitam fecisse asserat et coactam, non tam metu regio quam parentum. Post haec eidem regi quod fecerat indicavit; quod approbans vetuit, ne quis ea nolente domum intraret ipsius, vel exinde aliquid asportaret. Interim vero, tempore modico elabente, P. curialis, regias literas secum portans, et F. Ferdinandi dictae mulieris domum intrantes, ut ipse P. vi saltem eam duceret in uxorem, acceperunt ab ipsa, quod, si eam idem P. duceret, ipsius manibus interiret. Post haec vero, dimissis domo et omnibus, quae habebat, in domo cuiusdam Iudaei per tres, in ecclesia vero S. Mariae de Veiga per sex latuit septimanas, ita, quod exinde propter necessitates humanas etiam egredi non auderet. Tandem se coactam videns et omnibus destitutam, et attendens nihilominus, quod invita votum emiserit, eo dimisso, de parentum consilio P. Michaëli publice fuit matrimonialiter copulata, de quo quatuor sustulit filios tempore procedente. Verum, quia salutem animae desiderat omnibus anteferre, ac metuens, quod huiusmodi coniunctio licita non exsistat, quid super his tenere debeat, edoceri responso nostro suppliciter postulavit. Nos igitur, attendentes, quod in emissione voti, quod praecessit, nulla vel modica coactio adfuisset, quam patientia et perseverantia sequentis temporis penitus profugavit, et quod sequens coniunctio potius iniqua fuit et violenter extorta, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, inquisita diligentius veritate, si praemissis veritas suffragatur, praefatam mulierem ad male dimissum religionis habitum resumendum et servandum quod vovit monere et inducere procuretis, et, si opus fuerit, per censuram ecclesiasticam coërcere. [Quod si non ambo etc. Dat. Lat. Kal. Dec. 1199.]

Title VII: On One Who Took as Wife Her Whom He Polluted by Adultery

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If someone, while his wife is living, contracts with a second woman who is ignorant of this, after the first wife has died he will not, at his own petition, be separated from the second.

Alexander III, to the Abbot of Saint Albans.

It was proposed to us that a certain man O., while having a wife, joined to himself another woman who was ignorant of a matter of this kind, from whom he had several sons; but after the first wife died, he endeavors to withdraw from the second, asserting that while his wife was living it was not lawful for him to join her to himself. Although it is held in the canons that no one is to join in marriage her whom he had first polluted by adultery, and especially her to whom he had pledged faith while his wife was living, or who had plotted the death of the wife, nevertheless, because the aforesaid woman was ignorant that he had another wife living, and it is not worthy that the aforesaid man, who knowingly acted contrary to the canons, should carry away profit from his own fraud, we respond to your consultation in this manner: unless the aforesaid woman seeks judicial separation, they are not in any way to be separated at the petition of the man, since he would appear to carry away advantage from his own offense.

DE EO, QUI DUXIT IN MATRIMONIUM QUAM POLLUIT PER ADULTERIUM.

Si quis vivente uxore contrahit cum secunda hoc ignorante, prima mortua ad sui petitionem non separabitur a secunda.

Alexander III. Abbati sancti Albani.

Propositum est nobis, quod vir quidam O. uxorem habens sibi aliam, huiusmodi rei insciam, copulavit, de qua plures filios habuit; sed prima mortua nititur discedere a secunda, asserens, quod uxore sua vivente eam non licuit sibi copulare. Licet autem in canonibus habeatur, ut nullus copulet in matrimonio quam prius polluerat adulterio, et illam maxime, cui fidem dederat uxore sua vivente, vel quae machinata est in mortem uxoris: quia tamen praefata mulier erat inscia, quod ille aliam haberet uxorem viventem, nec dignum est, ut praedictus vir, qui scienter contra canones venerat, lucrum de suo dolo reportet: consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, nisi praedicta mulier divortium petat, ad petitionem viri non sunt aliquatenus separandi, quum ex suo delicto videretur commodum reportare.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If, while the first wife is living and has not been known carnally, someone knowingly contracts with a second and knows her, even after the first has died he cannot have the second; it is otherwise if the first was not a lawful wife.

The same, to the Abbot of Fountains.

O. of Anjou signified to us, through his brother W., that he, a parishioner of the church of York, was seized by W. de Romar., who has been taken from this light, and was held by him so long in iron chains and prison that he compelled him to swear that he would take the woman H. as wife. But when he had escaped the chains and prison, he took another as wife, from whom he begot sons. Afterward, the same O., having been drawn into a suit by the aforesaid H. before our venerable brother the Archbishop of York, legate of the Apostolic See, was compelled by him to affirm by oath that he would not approach her whom he had voluntarily taken as wife until the suit was terminated by ecclesiastical judgment. But because, before the case was lawfully heard, the aforementioned H. closed her last day, the aforesaid O. does not dare to return to her from whom he had sons. It is for this reason that, by commanding through apostolic writings, We order your discretion that, after the truth of the matter has been diligently investigated and ascertained, if it is established to you that so great a force was brought to bear upon the same O. that he swore to take the aforesaid H. as wife, and that he did not consent voluntarily to the first woman, nor after furnishing the oath did he know her carnally, on account of this you do not fail to grant him the free faculty, with appeal removed, of returning to the other whom he afterward took as wife. Otherwise, forbidding him under threat of anathema to return to the second, give him license to take another, if he wishes, as wife.

> Si, vivente prima uxore et non cognita, quis contraxit cum secunda scienter, et eam cognovit, etiam mortua prima secundam habere non potest; secus, si prima erat non legitima uxor.
>
> Idem Abbati de Fontibus.
>
> Significavit nobis O. Andegavensis, parochianus Eboracensis ecclesiae, per W. fratrem suum, quod W. de Romar., qui est ex hac luce subtractus, capiens eum tamdiu in vinculis ferreis et carcere tenuit, donec ipsum iurare coëgit, quod H. mulierem duceret in uxorem. Quum autem vincula et carcerem evasisset, aliam in uxorem accepit, de qua filios procreavit. Postea vero idem O. a praefata H. coram venerabili fratre nostro Eboracensi archiepiscopo apostolicae sedis legato tractus in causam, ab eo coactus est iuramento firmare, quod ad illam, quam sponte in uxorem acceperat, non accederet, donec lis esset iudicio ecclesiastico terminata. Ceterum quia, priusquam de causa cognosceretur legitime, praenominata H. diem clausit extremum, praedictus O. ad eam, de qua filios habuit, reverti non audet. Inde est quod discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligenter inquisita et cognita, si vobis constiterit, quod eidem O. tanta vis illata fuerit, ut praedictam H. iuraret in uxorem accipere, et, quod non sponte in primam consenserit, nec post praestitum iuramentum ipsam carnaliter cognoverit, propter hoc non dimittas, quin ad aliam, quam postea in uxorem accepit, revertendi liberam appellatione remota tribuas facultatem. Alioquin sibi, ne ad secundam revertatur, sub interminatione anathematis inhibens, des ei licentiam ducendi aliam, si voluerit, in uxorem.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A man cannot contract with her whom he knew while his wife was living if she plotted the death of the wife.

The same, to the Bishop of Baranum.

Concerning this indeed, which through your letters you asked concerning the bearer of the present letters, whether it is lawful for someone to contract marriage with her whom, while his other wife was living, he joined to himself in a de facto marriage, we respond to your solicitude in this manner: if the adulteress plotted anything toward the death of the wife, whether that man pledged faith or not that, after the latter had died, he would take the former as wife, according to the canons he is perpetually prohibited from her consortium, and this prohibition is to be perpetually observed.

> Non potest quis cum illa contrahere, quam uxore vivente cognovit, si machinata fuit in mortem uxoris.
>
> Idem Baranensi Episcopo.
>
> Super hoc vero, quod de latore praesentium tuis literis quaesivisti, an liceat alicui cum ea contrahere matrimonium, quam, alia uxore sua vivente, sibi de facto matrimonio copulavit, tuae sollicitudini taliter respondemus, quod, si adultera est in mortem uxoris aliquid machinata, sive iste fidem dederit sive non, quod ea defuncta hanc esset ducturus, secundum canones ab eius consortio perpetuo prohibetur, et haec prohibitio perpetuo est servanda.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: He who, while his wife was living, even though separated from him as to the marriage bed, took a second wife who was aware of the matter will, after the first has died, be separated from the second; but he will be able to contract with another.

Clement III.

From the intimation of your letters we received that T., bearer of the present letters, your parishioner, formerly cast off his wife, who had been caught in adultery, with the assent of your predecessor, and that she afterward received the monastic habit; but the said T., before she died, brought in another woman, and lived with her for twelve years, and received several sons from her. But because the above-mentioned woman died and you considered that the Apostolic See should be consulted as to what ought to be done concerning the second union, we therefore respond to your fraternity, by the counsel of our brothers, that you ought without delay to separate them from one another; but the same man, after penance for the adultery has been enjoined upon him, will be able to take another as wife.

> Qui, vivente uxore, etiam ab eo separata quoad torum, secundam consciam duxit uxorem, prima mortua separabitur a secunda; sed cum alia contrahere poterit.
>
> Clemens III.
>
> Ex literarum tuarum insinuatione accepimus, quod T. lator praesentium, parochianus tuus, olim uxorem suam, in adulterio deprehensam, de tui antecessoris assensu abiecit, quae postmodum accepit habitum monachalem; sed dictus T., antequam illa decederet, aliam superinduxit, et cum ea XII. annis vixit, et plures suscepit filios ex eadem. Ceterum quia supra dicta mulier decessit, et quid super secunda copula fieri debeat sedem duxisti apostolicam consulendam, Fraternitati tuae igitur de fratrum nostrorum consilio respondemus, quod illos debes sine delatione abinvicem separare; idem vero vir, indicta ei de adulterio poenitentia, aliam ducere poterit in uxorem.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: He who, while his lawful wife is living, contracts adulterously with a second woman will, even after the first has died, be separated from the second, even if he cohabited with her for a long time and received sons from her.

The same.

While I., bearer of the present letters, had a lawful wife named A., he committed adultery with M., which he disclosed to you in public confession, as your letters demonstrated to us. And when he had been called into court concerning this, he abjured the adulteress M. herself in court, and afterward, putting aside and contemning the oath, while the lawful wife was living, he presumed to contract a marriage of whatever kind with her and to cohabit for a long time with the adulteress. At last, after the aforesaid A. was taken from the present light, the aforementioned I. nevertheless remained for a decade with the aforesaid adulteress, from whom he also begot ten sons. Therefore, because you consult whether the aforesaid John and that woman can remain together or, if they ought to be separated, whether it is lawful for them to hasten to other nuptials, we consequently give this response to your consultation: let them be separated altogether, and, after fitting penance has been enjoined upon them, let perpetual continence be prescribed, especially since they have both advanced in their days and, having so long persisted publicly in adultery and perjury with certain knowledge, have disturbed the Church with grave scandal. For you know that Pope Leo established that no one is to take in marriage her whom he polluted by adultery, and that in this case matters proceeded further than if faith alone had been furnished to the adulteress that, when the lawful wife had died, he would take her as wife, since, even while that first wife was living, as if matrimonially, the adulterer presumed to adhere to the adulteress and rashly to violate his oath. Both Pope Gregory and the Synod of Tribur detest such a marriage, in which even no sacred bond of an oath intervened, and commanded each person joined in this manner to be subjected to public penance and to remain perpetually without any hope of marriage. Nor certainly does the fact that they cohabited with one another for a decade and received ten sons furnish any support to the same I. and M. so that they might remain together, since the multiplicity of offspring thus received aggravates their crime the more, and length of time does not diminish sin but increases it. It will nevertheless belong to your solicitude that each provide for his or her sons who have been begotten and, according to the resources that are available to them, supply the things necessary for their sustenance.

> Qui vivente uxore legitima cum secunda contrahit adultera, etiam prima mortua separabitur a secunda, etiamsi longo tempore ei cohabitavit, et filios ex ea suscepit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum haberet uxorem legitimam A. nomine I. lator praesentium, cum M. adulterium perpetravit, quod ipse tibi publica confessione detexit, sicut nobis tuae literae demonstrarunt. Quumque super hoc fuisset in ius vocatus, ipsam M. in iure abiuravit adulteram, et postmodum, iuramento posthabito et contempto, vivente legitima cum ea matrimonium qualecunque contrahere, et ipsi moechae diu cohabitare praesumpsit. Demum, praedicta A. de praesenti luce subtracta, nihilominus memoratus I. cum praefata adultera per decennium est moratus de qua etiam decem filios procreavit. Quia igitur consulis, an praedicti Ioannes et illa simul manere possint, vel, si debeant separari, utrum liceat eis ad alias nuptias convolare: Tale ergo damus consultationi tuae responsum, ut separentur omnino, et competenti eis iniuncta poenitentia, perpetua continentia indicatur, praesertim quum in dies suos ambo processerint, et, tamdiu publice in adulterio et periurio ex certa scientia perdurantes, ecclesiam in gravi scandalo perturbaverint. Nosti enim, quod Leo Papa statuit, ut nullus ducat in matrimonium quam adulterio polluit, et quod hic plus processum fuit, quam si fides praestita duntaxat fuisset adulterae, ut defuncta legitima eam duceret in uxorem, quum, eadem etiam prima vivente, quasi matrimonialiter moechae moechus adhaerere praesumpsit, et sacramentum suum temere violare. Quod utique connubium, ubi etiam nulla intercessit religio iuramenti, tam Gregorius Papa quam Triburiensis synodus detestatur, et utrumque hoc modo coniunctum praecepit publicae poenitentiae subiici, ac perpetuo sine ulla spe coniugii permanere. Nec certe aliquod eisdem I. et M. adminiculum adferunt, ut simul maneant, quod decennio cohabitaverunt adinvicem, ac decem filios susceperunt, quum multiplicitas prolis ita susceptae magis eorum crimen exaggeret, et diuturnitas temporis peccatum non minuat, sed augmentet. Sollicitudinis tamen tuae intererit, ut uterque liberis suis procreatis provideat, et secundum quod eis suppetunt facultates, sustentationi eorum necessaria subministret.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If someone, after his wife has died, contracts with her whom he knew while his wife was living without a pledge of faith, the marriage holds, provided neither plotted the death of the deceased wife.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Spoleto.

You signified to us that, when P., a citizen of Spoleto, had lawfully taken a certain woman as wife, having abandoned her he adhered to a certain prostitute, and, when he could not be recalled from her cohabitation to his lawful marriage bed, you promulgated a sentence of excommunication against him. But when in the meantime his wife had entered the way of all flesh, he betrothed the prostitute to whom he had adhered. We, therefore, respond to your inquiry according to canonical form in this manner: unless either of them plotted the death of the deceased wife, or while she was living pledged faith to the other concerning contracting marriage, you are to adjudge the above-mentioned marriage lawful, being about to impart to the excommunicated man the gift of absolution, if he seeks it, according to the form of the Church. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the eighth day before the Kalends of May. 1198.]

> Si quis mortua uxore contrahit cum ea, quam vivente uxore sine fidei datione cognoverat, tenet matrimonium, dummodo in mortem defunctae neuter fuerit machinatus.
>
> Innocentius III. Episcopo Spoletano.
>
> Significasti nobis, quod, quum P. civis Spoletanus quandam mulierem duxisset legitime in uxorem, ea relicta cuidam meretrici adhaesit, +et quum ab eius contubernio ad torum non posset legitimum revocari, vos in eum excommunicationis sententiam protulistis. Verum quum medio tempore uxor ipsius esset viam universae carnis ingressa, meretricem, cui adhaeserat, desponsavit. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae secundum formam canonicam taliter respondemus, quod, nisi alter eorum in mortem uxoris defunctae fuerit machinatus, vel ea vivente sibi fidem dederit de matrimonio contrahendo, legitimum iudices matrimonium supra dictum, excommunicato munus absolutionis, si petierit, iuxta formam ecclesiae impensurus. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VIII. Kal. Maii 1198.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If someone, while the first wife is living, takes a second wife who is ignorant of this matter, after the first has died he lawfully remains with the second when new consent intervenes.

The same, to the Chapter of Messina.

Coming to our presence, the layman G., bearer of the present letters, showed to us by humble intimation that, when formerly in the city of Limoges he had joined a certain woman matrimonially to himself, and had cohabited with her for two years, afterward withdrawing from her through levity of mind, he came to Messina, where he solemnly joined to himself the woman M., who was entirely ignorant that the same G. had another wife, from whom he is known to have received two sons. But when penance had been enjoined upon him that he return to his lawful wife, and on account of this he had returned to his homeland, finding that his wife had paid the debt of the flesh, he returned to the city of Messina and cohabited with the above-mentioned M. as with a lawful wife. But now, humbly and devoutly doing the penance imposed upon him for the former transgression, he petitioned from us license to cohabit with the same M. Although the aforesaid G., while his lawful wife was living, could not join the aforesaid M. to himself as wife, nevertheless, because, after his wife died, as one released from her law, he could anew consent matrimonially to the same M., provided he had not pledged faith to the adulteress or [had not] plotted the death of his wife, we [through apostolic writings] order your discretion that, if it is so, you grant the same G. license to adhere to the above-mentioned M. with conjugal affection, with the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal removed, not permitting him to be unduly troubled concerning this by anyone.

> Si quis, vivente prima, secundam huius rei insciam duxerit uxorem, mortua prima licite remanet cum secunda, novo consensu interveniente.
>
> Idem Messanensi Capitulo.
>
> Veniens ad praesentiam nostram G. laicus lator praesentium humili nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum olim in civitate Lemovicensi quandam sibi matrimonialiter copulasset, et per biennium cohabitasset eidem, ab ea demum animi levitate recedens Messanam advenit, ubi M. mulierem, insciam penitus, quod idem G. aliam haberet uxorem, sibi solenniter copulavit, ex qua duos filios dignoscitur suscepisse. Verum quum eidem poenitentia fuisset iniuncta, ut ad legitimam rediret uxorem, et ipse propter hoc in suam patriam rediisset, uxorem suam inveniens carnis debita persolvisse, ad Messanam rediit civitatem, et supra dictae M. tanquam legitimae cohabitavit uxori. Nunc autem impositam sibi pro priori excessu poenitentiam agens humiliter et devote, cohabitandi eidem M. a nobis licentiam postulavit. Licet autem praefatus G. vivente uxore legitima praedictam M. sibi copulare nequiverit in uxorem, quia tamen, uxore defuncta, utpote a lege ipsius solutus, in eandem M. de novo potuit matrimonialiter consentire, dummodo non praestiterit fidem adulterae, vel machinatus [non] fuerit in mortem uxoris: [discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, eidem G. ut supra dictae M. affectu adhaereat coniugali, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo licentiam concedatis, non permittentes, eundem super hoc ab aliquibus indebite molestari.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One contracting with a second woman while the first is living, whom, however, he knew neither before nor after the contract, can, after the first has died, contract with the second.

Gregory IX, to Brother R.

If someone, while his wife was living, with faith pledged promised that he would take another woman, or contracted in fact with her, if neither before nor afterward, while his lawful wife survived, he knew that woman, although penance is to be enjoined upon each of them for the fact that they gravely transgressed in this, nevertheless the marriage which he contracted with her is not to be dissolved after the death of the wife. But it ought not to be tolerated if, either before or afterward, while his wife lived, he had polluted the other woman by adultery.

Contrahens cum secunda, vivente prima, quam tamen non cognovit nec ante contractum, nec post, mortua prima potest contrahere cum secunda.

Gregorius IX. Fratri R.

Si quis uxore vivente fide data promisit, aliam se ducturum, vel cum ipsa de facto contraxit, si nec ante, nec post legitima eius superstite cognovit eandem, quamvis utrique ipsorum pro eo, quod in hoc graviter deliquerint, sit poenitentia iniungenda, non est tamen matrimonium, quod cum ea contraxit, post uxoris obitum dirimendum. Ceterum tolerari non debet, si prius vel postea, dum vixerit uxor ipsius, illam adulterio polluisset.

Title VIII: On the Marriage of Lepers

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Leprosy supervening does not dissolve marriage or the effect of marriage; therefore, those joined to one another by marital affection ought to care for one another, or to be induced to vow perpetual continence.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

It has come to us that, although those who incur the disease of leprosy are by general custom separated from the communion of men and transferred outside cities and villages to solitary places, neither wives follow husbands nor husbands their own wives when they are thus ill, but presume to remain without them. Therefore, since husband and wife are one flesh, one ought not to be without the other any longer; by commanding through apostolic writings we order your fraternity not to postpone inducing, by solicitous exhortations, wives to follow husbands and husbands their wives who incur the disease of leprosy, and to minister to them with conjugal affection. But if they cannot be induced to this, more strictly enjoin upon them that each observe continence while the other is living. But if they contemn observing your mandate, bind them with the bond of excommunication.

> DE CONIUGIO LEPROSORUM.
>
> Lepra superveniens non dissolvit matrimonium, nec matrimonii effectum, ideo adinvicem maritali affectione coniuncti se tractare debent, aut ad perpetuam continentiam vovendam induci.
>
> Alexander III. Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Pervenit ad nos, quod, quum hi, qui leprae morbum incurrunt, de consuetudine generali a communione hominum separentur, et extra civitates et villas ad loca solitaria transferantur, nec uxores viros, nec viri uxores suas taliter aegrotantes sequuntur, sed sine ipsis manere praesumunt. Quoniam igitur, quum vir et uxor una caro sint, non debet alter sine altero esse diutius, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, ut uxores viros, et viri uxores, qui leprae morbum incurrunt, sequantur, et eis coniugali affectione ministrent, sollicitis exhortationibus inducere non postponas. Si vero ad hoc induci non poterunt, eis arctius iniungas, ut uterque altero vivente continentiam servet. Quodsi mandatum tuum servare contempserint, vinculo excommunicationis adstringas.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Spouses are not to be separated from marriage because of leprosy, and lepers can contract marriage, and spouses are bound to render the debt to each other.

The same, to the Bishop of Bayonne.

Since from many authorities, and especially from evangelical truth, it is lawful for no one, except for the cause of fornication, to dismiss his own wife, it is established that, whether a woman has been struck by leprosy or detained by another grave infirmity, she is not for that reason to be separated from [her] husband or even dismissed. But concerning this, [which concerning the bearer, etc.] (And below: [Compare chapter 3, On One Who Took as Wife, IV. 7.]) But if lepers are unwilling to be continent and find someone willing to marry them, they are free to hasten to marriage. But if by divine judgment it happens that the husband or wife becomes leprous, and the infirm spouse demands the carnal debt from the healthy one, by the general precept of the Apostle that which is demanded is to be paid, and no exception to that precept is found in this case.

> Coniuges propter lepram separandi non sunt a coniugio, et contrahere possunt matrimonium, et invicem sibi reddere debitam tenentur.
>
> Idem Baionensi Episcopo.
>
> Quoniam ex multis auctoritatibus et praecipue ex evangelica veritate nemini licet, excepta causa fornicationis, uxorem suam dimittere: constat, quod, sive mulier lepra percussa fuerit, seu alia gravi infirmitate detenta, non est a viro [suo] propterea separanda, vel etiam dimittenda. Super hoc vero, [quod de latore etc.] (Et infra: [cf. c. 3. De eo, qui duxit IV. 7.]) Leprosi autem si continere nolunt, et aliquam, quae sibi nubere velit, invenerint, liberum est eis ad matrimonium convolare. Quodsi virum sive uxorem divino iudicio leprosum fieri contigerit, et infirmus a sano carnale debitum exigat, generali praecepto Apostoli quod exigitur est solvendum, cui praecepto nulla in hoc casu exceptio invenitur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Betrothals of the future do not absolutely compel one to contract marriage with a leper when leprosy supervenes after the betrothals.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Florence.

We received the letters of your fraternity with due kindness; through them, having been made more certain of the sincerity of your faith and devotion, we are more abundantly moved toward your honor and advantage. But because you asked [us] whether, if, after betrothals of the future were contracted between certain lawful persons, before the woman is conducted home by the man, one of them incurs the disease of leprosy, the other ought to be compelled to consummate the marital union, or can transfer himself or herself to second vows, we respond to your solicitude that he ought not to be compelled to receive her, since marriage has not yet been consummated between them. [But concerning her, etc. (Compare chapter 6, On the Separation of Spouses, IV. 19.)]

> Sponsalia de futuro praecise non compellunt ad contrahendum matrimonium cum leproso, lepra post sponsalia superveniente.
>
> Urbanus III. Episcopo Florentino.
>
> Literas fraternitatis tuae debita benignitate suscepimus, quibus certiores de sinceritate tuae fidei et devotionis effecti, ad honorem et commodum tuum abundantius provocamur. Verum Quia [a nobis] postulasti, utrum, si, post sponsalia de futuro inter aliquas legitimas personas contracta, antequam a viro mulier traducatur, alter eorum leprae morbum incurrat, alius ad consummandam copulam maritalem compelli debeat, vel se possit ad secunda vota transferre, tuae sollicitudini respondemus, quod ad eam accipiendam cogi non debet, quum nondum inter eos matrimonium fuerit consummatum. [De illa vero etc. (cf. c. 6. de divort. IV. 19.)]

Title IX: On the Marriage of Slaves

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A slave can contract marriage when his lord contradicts it; but on account of this he is not freed from the services owed to his lord.

Adrian, to the Archbishop of Sancteburg.

It is worthy and does not disagree with the path of reason that those matters which appear to contain within themselves a scruple of doubt be referred to the judgment of the Apostolic See, so that from that source the faithful of Christ may rejoice that they find certainty in doubtful matters from which they are known to have received the teaching authority of the faith. But your fraternity, if we remember well, asked our apostolate what ought to be done concerning marriages of slaves which are contracted when their lords are unwilling and contradict them; concerning this we considered that this response should be made to you. Indeed, according to the word of the Apostle, as your discretion recognizes, just as in Christ Jesus there is neither free person nor slave who is to be removed from the sacraments of the Church, so also marriages among slaves ought not in any way to be prohibited. And, if they were contracted when their lords contradicted and were unwilling, they are for this reason by no means to be dissolved by ecclesiastical judgment; nevertheless, the owed and customary services ought no less to be rendered to their own lords.

> DE CONIUGIO SERVORUM.

Servus, contradicente domino, matrimonium contrahere potest; sed propter hoc non liberatur a servitiis domino debitis.

Adrianus Sancteburgensi Archiepiscopo.

Dignum est et a rationis tramite non discordat, quod ea, quae dubietatis in se videntur scrupulum continere, et ad apostolicae sedis iudicium referantur, ut inde Christi fideles in dubiis certitudinem se gaudeant invenire, unde noscuntur magisterium fidei suscepisse. Tua vero fraternitas de servorum coniugiis, quae invitis et contradicentibus dominis contrahuntur, quid fieri debeat, ab apostolatu nostro, si bene meminimus, requisivit; super quo tibi duximus taliter respondendum. Sane, iuxta verbum Apostoli, prout tua discretio recognoscit, sicut in Christo Iesu neque liber, neque servus est, qui a sacramentis ecclesiae sit removendus, ita quoque nec inter servos matrimonia debent ullatenus prohiberi. Et, si contradicentibus dominis et invitis contracta fuerint, nulla ratione sunt propter hoc ecclesiastico iudicio dissolvenda; debita tamen et consueta servitia non minus debent propriis dominis exhiberi.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A marriage is separated when a free man unknowingly contracted with a female slave, unless afterward, knowing this, he knew her carnally.

Alexander III, to the Provost and Prior of Mortara.

The woman M., bearer of the present letters, proposed to us that, after her husband had remained with her for a rather long time, he cast against her the reproach of servile condition, asserting that she was a female slave whom he believed to be free when he took her as wife. But when a matter of this kind was being treated in the presence of our venerable brother the Bishop of Asti, the woman, because she feared that she would be burdened there, appealed to our hearing. Therefore, because after a little delay the aforesaid man withdrew with the suit unshaken, while both she and her husband were living, through apostolic writings We order your discretion that, when you have been required on account of this, you summon the parties before your presence and, after the truth concerning these matters has been investigated more diligently, if it is established to you that the same man knew the aforesaid woman carnally after he heard that she was a female slave, after prior admonition you compel him to receive her as wife and to treat her with marital affection. But if it was otherwise, and it happens that a sentence of separation is pronounced, cause the money that the woman granted to the aforesaid man as dowry to be restored to her, as shall be just.

Separatur matrimonium, quando liber ignoranter cum ancilla contraxerit, nisi postea hoc sciens illam cognovit.

Alexander III. Praeposito et Priori Mortariensi.

Proposuit nobis M. mulier latrix praesentium, quod quum vir eius cum ea diutius permansisset, notam ei servilis conditionis obiecit, asserens, eam esse ancillam, quam liberam esse credebat, quum eam duxit in uxorem. Quum autem in praesentia venerabilis fratris nostri Astensis episcopi huiusmodi negotium tractaretur, mulier, quia ibi gravari timebat, ad nostram audientiam appellavit. Quia igitur, tam ea quam viro suo vivente, post aliquantulam moram praefatus vir inconcusso lite recessit, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, quum propter hoc fueritis requisiti, partes ante vestram praesentiam convocetis, et, veritate super his diligentius inquisita, si vobis constiterit, quod idem vir praefatam mulierem, postquam illam audivit esse ancillam, carnaliter cognovit, ipsum monitione praemissa compellatis, ut eam sicut uxorem accipiat et maritali affectione pertractet. Si vero aliter fuerit, et sententiam divortii proferri contingat, mulieri pecuniam, quam praefato viro pro dote concessit, sicut iustum fuerit, restitui faciatis.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If the custom in the place is that offspring follow the condition of the father, one born from a free man and a female slave is free, and contracts marriage as a free person.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Rimini.

Although we judge you sufficient for those matters concerning which your fraternity wished to consult us, nevertheless, because with pastoral solicitude you seek our judgment for greater certainty, we respond to your inquiries by the duty of our office. Indeed, concerning the matter which was proposed on your part, whether a woman can seek judicial separation because the man with whom she contracted, in ignorance of his condition, is alleged to be a slave of a monastery, while on the contrary the same man steadfastly affirms that his father, whose condition he would follow according to the laws of the province, conducted himself as a free man at the time of his death, and that, with a decade now elapsed, he suffered no controversy of status either in the name of his father or in his own name, it appears to us that, by reason of time and in favor of liberty, judgment is more safely to be given for the man's side. [To these things, etc. (Compare chapter 4, On the Religious Houses, III. 36.)]

> Si consuetudo est in loco, quod partus conditionem patris sequatur, natus ex libero et ancilla liber est, et ut liber matrimonium contrahit.
>
> Urbanus III. Ariminensi Episcopo.
>
> Licet ad ea, super quibus nos fraternitas tua consulere voluit, te sufficere arbitremur, quia tamen ad maiorem certitudinem iudicium nostrum pastorali sollicitudine requiris: nos ad inquisitiones tuas officii nostri debito respondemus. Sane, super eo, quod ex parte tua fuit propositum, an mulier possit divortium postulare, pro eo, quod vir, cum quo suae conditionis ignara contraxit, servus monasterii proponatur, quum econtra idem vir, patrem suum, cuius conditionem secundum leges provinciae sequeretur, tempore mortis pro libero se gessisse, et iam elapso decennio nec patris, nec suo nomine se status controversiam passum, constanter affirmet, videtur nobis ratione temporis et favore libertatis pro parte viri securius iudicandum. [Ad haec etc. (cf. c. 4. de rel. dom. III. 36.)]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If a free man contracted with a female slave unknowingly and, from the time he knew, did not consent, the marriage is separated, and he will be able to contract with others.

Innocent III, to Bishop H.

You should know that it has come to our hearing that our beloved son G., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Mary in Trastevere, legate of the Apostolic See, separated our beloved son, the noble man R., a knight, from a certain woman on account of an error of condition. Therefore, through apostolic writings we order your fraternity that you investigate the truth concerning these things more diligently and, if it is established to you that the same knight unknowingly contracted with a female slave, in such a way that, after he understood her condition, he consented to her neither by deed nor by word, on account of which he was separated from her consortium by the same cardinal, by apostolic authority grant him the free faculty of contracting with another.

> Si liber contraxit cum ancilla ignoranter, et, ex quo scivit, non consensit, separatur matrimonium, et cum aliis contrahere poterit.
>
> Innocentius III. H. Episcopo.

Ad nostram noveris audientiam pervenisse, quod dilectus filius noster G. tituli sanctae Mariae trans Tiberim presbyter cardinalis apostolicae sedis legatus dilectum filium nobilem virum R. militem a muliere quadam propter conditionis separavit errorem. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus inquiras super his diligentius veritatem, et, si tibi constiterit, quod miles ipse ignoranter contraxit cum ancilla, ita, quod, postquam intellexit conditionem ipsius, nec facto nec verbo consenserit in eandem, propter quod per cardinalem eundem ab eius fuerit consortio separatus, contrahendi cum alia liberam ipsi concedas auctoritate apostolica facultatem.

Title X: On Those Born from a Free Womb

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: One born from a freeborn or freed woman is free.

Gregory.

We believe it to be indecent that sons begotten from a freed or freeborn woman should be drawn back into servitude. Therefore, we command you [by the present authority] that with these very documents, as we too have learned, [with your mind freed from cares,] you attend diligently, so that, if there are no documents on the part of the Church that ought to oppose documents of this kind, you restrain that woman from molesting him without any reconsideration. For it is harsh that, if others confer liberties for their reward, they should be revoked by the Church, by which they ought to be made free. [Again therefore, etc.]

DE NATIS EX LIBERO VENTRE.

Natus ex libera vel liberta liber est.

Gregorius.

Indecens esse credimus, ut progeniti ex liberta sive libera filii ad servitium retrahantur. Propterea tibi [praesenti auctoritate] praecipimus, ut his ipsis documentis, sicut et nos didicimus, [exuto a curis animo] diligenter intendas, quatenus, si documenta nulla sint ab ecclesiae parte, quae documentis huiusmodi debeant obviare, ab eius molestia sine aliqua retractatione compescas eandem. Durum est enim, ut, si alii pro mercede sua libertates tribuunt, ab ecclesia, a qua fieri debent, revocentur. [Iterum ergo etc.]

Title XI: On Spiritual Kinship

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The sons of two coparents, through neither of whom coparenthood was reached, lawfully contract, unless custom is opposed; but they are separated if coparenthood was contracted through either or both of them. This the chapter says together with the chapter "Concerning This," below under the same title.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Salerno.

But as to whether sons or daughters begotten before or after coparenthood can be joined to one another, canons contrary to one another are found according to the customs of different places. And although the first canon issued concerning this prohibits those born after coparenthood from being joined to one another, nevertheless another canon issued later appears to correct the first, by which it is established that, whether they were begotten before or after coparenthood, they can be joined together, with the sole exception of that person through whom coparenthood is reached. Whence it appears more tolerable to us that observance ought to be according to the later canon, unless the custom of the church, which would generate scandal, is known to be otherwise.

> DE COGNATIONE SPIRITUALI.
>
> Filii duorum compatrum, per quorum neutrum deventum est ad compaternitatem, licite contrahunt, nisi consuetudo repugnet; separantur autem, si per eorum alterum vel utrumque compaternitas est contracta. H. d. cum cap. Super eo, infra eod.
>
> Alexander III. Salernitano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Utrum autem filii aut filiae ante vel post compaternitatem geniti possint adinvicem copulari, canones secundum diversorum locorum consuetudines contrarii inveniuntur. Et licet primus canon exinde editus natos post compaternitatem adinvicem copulari prohibeat, alter tamen canon posterius editus primum videtur corrigere, per quem statuitur, ut, sive ante sive post compaternitatem geniti sunt, simul possint coniungi, excepta illa persona duntaxat, per quam ad compaternitatem venitur. Unde tolerabilius nobis videtur, ut secundum posteriorem canonem debeat observari: nisi consuetudo ecclesiae, quae scandalum generet, aliter se habere noscatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Coparenthood supervening between spouses, knowingly or unknowingly, does not dissolve the marriage.

The same, to the same.

Because you wished to consult us whether, if a man or woman knowingly or unknowingly received his or her child from the sacred font, they ought to be separated from each other on account of this and joined to others, we respond to your consultation in this manner: although it is generally established that they ought to be separated, nevertheless certain persons, thinking more humanely and rather, have established otherwise. Therefore, it appears to us that, whether they did this from ignorance or malice, they are not to be separated from each other, nor ought either to withhold the debt from the other, unless they can be induced to observe continence; because, if it was done from ignorance, ignorance appears to excuse them, but if from malice, their fraud or deceit ought not to patronize them.

> Compaternitas, scienter vel ignoranter superveniens inter coniuges, coniugium non dissolvit.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Si vir vel mulier scienter vel ignoranter filium suum de sacro fonte susceperint, an propter hoc ab invicem separari debeant et alii copulari, quia nos consulere voluisti, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quamvis generaliter sit institutum, ut debeant separari, quidam tamen, humanius et potius sentientes, aliter statuerunt. Ideoque nobis videtur, quod, sive ex ignorantia sive ex malitia id fecerint, non sunt ab invicem separandi, nec alter alteri debitum debet subtrahere, nisi ad continentiam servandam possint induci: quia, si ex ignorantia id factum est, eos ignorantia excusare videtur; si ex malitia, eis sua fraus non debet patrocinari vel dolus.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: The sons of two coparents, through neither of whom coparenthood was reached, lawfully contract marriage with one another; nevertheless, if a custom exists that impedes and dissolves such marriages, the custom of the place is to be observed. This the chapter says according to the more common understanding, by touching upon the intent of the chapter.

The same, to the Bishop of Vigilia.

Concerning that which your fraternity asked of us about the sons of two coparents, we respond that, if they are such sons through either or both of whom the parents came to coparenthood, you are by no means to permit them to be joined, and do not postpone separating them from one another by pontifical authority if they are joined. But if coparenthood was reached through neither of them, concerning these we wish you to inquire into and more diligently imitate the custom of your metropolitan church or of other surrounding churches, in such a way indeed that, if the custom of the same church is not to permit a marriage to be made between them, nor one made to have the strength of firmness, you likewise do not permit a marriage of this kind to be made in the church committed to you; and, if you find any thus joined, do not omit separating them from one another according to the custom of the same churches. But if custom has it that such marriages are permitted and sustained, you will be able to dissemble this in your church in such a way that you do not appear to furnish your assent, because, just as it is grave to contemn the ancient custom of surrounding churches concerning these matters, so too it appears graver if, on account of it, you grant your assent to marriages of this kind, since in this way it could be taken as an example.

> Filii duorum compatrum, per quorum neutrum deventum est ad compaternitatem, licite invicem contrahunt matrimonium; si tamen subest consuetudo, impediens et dirimens talia matrimonia, servanda est loci consuetudo. H. d. secundum intellectum magis communem, attingendo mentem capituli.
>
> Idem Vigiliensi Episcopo.
>
> Super eo, quod a nobis tua fraternitas requisivit de duorum compatrum filiis, respondemus, quod si tales filii fuerint, per quorum alterum vel utrumque parentes ad compaternitatem venerunt, eos coniungi nulla ratione sustineas, et coniunctos pontificali auctoritate ab invicem ipsos non differas separare. Ceterum si per neutrum eorum ad compaternitatem ventum fuerit, de his te volumus consuetudinem tuae metropolitanae ecclesiae vel aliarum circumpositarum inquirere et diligentius imitari, ita quidem, quod, si eiusdem ecclesiae consuetudo habeat inter eos non sustinere coniugium fieri, nec factum firmitatis robur habere, tu simili modo in ecclesia tibi commissa coniugium huiusmodi fieri non permittas, et, si quos taliter coniunctos inveneris, iuxta earundem ecclesiarum consuetudinem ipsos separare ab invicem non omittas. Verum si de consuetudine habeatur, ut talia coniugia sustineantur et permittantur, id in ecclesia tua dissimulare poteris ita, quod nec tuum videaris praestare assensum, quia, sicut grave est antiquam consuetudinem circumadiacentium ecclesiarum super his contemnere, sic quoque gravius videtur, si propter eam huiusmodi coniugiis tuum indulges assensum, quum posset sic in exemplum assumi.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Between the father of the baptized person and the wife of the person lifting the baptized person, previously known by him, coparenthood is contracted that is effective for dissolving marriage.

Clement III.

Martin took Bertha as wife; Lothair joined Teberga to himself, and he received the son of Bertha and Martin from the sacred font. But after L. and B. were taken from their midst, M. contracted with the aforesaid T.; your fraternity asks us whether such persons are to be separated from each other. But we have considered that this response should be made to your consultation: since according to the word of the Lord man and woman are made one flesh through marriage, it is clear that Teberga cannot be joined matrimonially to Martin, who had been her coparent, since Teberga herself is known to have been one flesh with him. [Concerning another matter, etc. (Compare chapter 5, On One Who Knew, IV. 13.) Given at the Lateran.]

> Inter patrem baptizati et uxorem levantis, prius ab eo cognitam, contrahitur compaternitas efficax ad matrimonium dirimendum.
>
> Clemens III.
>
> Martinus Bertham duxit in uxorem, Tebergam sibi copulavit Lotharius, qui Berthae et Martini filium de sacro fonte suscepit. L. vero et B. sublatis de medio, M. cum T. praefata contraxit; quaerit a nobis tua fraternitas, utrum tales sint ab invicem separandi. Nos autem consultationi tuae duximus respondendum, quod, quum secundum verbum Domini vir et mulier efficiantur per connubium una caro, liquidum est, Tebergam non posse matrimonialiter copulari Martino, qui compater eius fuerat, cum quo una caro ipsa Teberga noscitur exstitisse. [Super alio etc. (cf. c. 5. de eo, qui cogn. IV. 13.) Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Coparenthood contracted through catechism impedes a marriage to be contracted, but does not dissolve one contracted.

The same.

After marriage was contracted between P. de Rigale and A. his wife, as the complaint of the same P. disclosed to us, when they had lived together for two years and the aforementioned P. had received a son from the same wife, certain blood relatives of the same A., wishing her to be separated from her husband, objected against the marriage, asserting that the same A., at the first nourishment of consecrated salt, held a son of a former concubine of P. himself when he was first led into the church; and on account of this, coming to your presence, they said that she ought to be separated from her husband by your judgment. But your fraternity, as we received, without hearing the case, prohibited carnal commerce to them, forbidding P. himself to seek the debt from his wife. But if it were established to the Church that the things we have said were true, nevertheless the contracted marriage would not for that reason be dissolved, and this matter would indeed scarcely bring an impediment to contracting marriage. Therefore, through apostolic writings We order your discretion to firmly enjoin upon the aforesaid P. by our authority that he treat the aforementioned A. as his own wife with marital affection and lawfully demand and pay the carnal debt from and to her, whether, as was said above, it is established that A. herself did this before marriage was contracted with P. or afterward; provided, nevertheless, that, if she did this in fraud for the purpose of separating the marriage, she receive penance for her presumption, with the marriage remaining in its firmness.

> Compaternitas, per catechismum contracta, impedit matrimonium contrahendum, sed contractum non dirimit.
>
> Idem.

Contracto matrimonio inter P. de Rigale et A. uxorem suam, sicut eiusdem P. nobis conquestio patefecit, quum per biennium insimul habitassent, et filium ex ipsa uxore memoratus P. suscepisset, quidam consanguinei eiusdem A., volentes eam separari a viro, contra matrimonium obiecerunt, asserentes, quod eadem A. in primo sacrati salis pabulo filium quondam concubinae ipsius P. tenuit, quum fuit primum in ecclesia inductus; et propter hoc tuam praesentiam adeuntes dicebant, ipsam debere a viro per tuum iudicium separari. Tua vero fraternitas, sicut accepimus, causa non cognita, iis carnale commercium interdixit, prohibens ipsi P., ne debitum ab uxore requireret. Verum, si constaret ecclesiae, vera esse quae diximus, non ideo tamen contractum matrimonium solveretur, quae res utique vix contrahendo matrimonio impedimentum afferret. Ideoque discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus praefato P. auctoritate nostra firmiter iniungas, ut memoratam A. sicut uxorem propriam maritali affectione pertractet, et carnale debitum ab ea licenter exigat et persolvat, sive, quod supra dictum est, ipsam A. ante matrimonium contractum cum P., sive postea constiterit hoc egisse; dum tamen, si in fraudem hoc fecerit causa matrimonii separandi, poenitentiam pro praesumptione accipiat, matrimonio in sua firmitate durante.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Between the father of the baptized person and the person lifting or holding the baptized person, spiritual kinship is contracted that is valid for impeding and dissolving a marriage contracted afterward.

Innocent III, to the Bishop and Archdeacon of Lincoln.

Coming to the Apostolic See, C., an Englishman by nation, explained to us that, when formerly, constituted in adolescence, he had adhered to a certain woman whom a certain other man had known before, by the counsel of his mother it was done that the same woman lifted from the sacred font a certain boy whom he himself had received from another unmarried woman, in order to destroy the suspicion and infamy of each. But afterward, when he burned more vehemently with love for her, without the counsel of his friends he betrothed her secretly. And when he could not beget offspring from her and endured most grave rebukes from his father, turning over in his mind that he had transgressed in betrothing her, having dismissed her, he set out for Jerusalem for the sake of prayer. But when the same man, returning from the lands across the sea, found that she had received offspring from another, he was unwilling to adhere to her; but on account of the adultery which she appeared thus to have committed, having dismissed her altogether, he transferred himself to a distant region and, finally coming to the city of Gubbio, matrimonially joined to himself there a certain woman with suitable land and a fitting dowry, from whom he confessed that he had received offspring. On this account through apostolic writings We order your discretion that you investigate the truth concerning these matters more diligently and, if it is established that the woman H. lifted the son of the aforesaid man from the sacred font before he betrothed her as wife, you solemnize a separation between them, with appeal set aside, faithfully explaining to us the course of the matter through your letters so that, once the truth is known, we may be able to decree whether he can lawfully remain with the second woman. [Given near Civita Castellana, on the eighth day before the Ides of October. 1198.]

Inter patrem baptizati et levantem seu tenentem baptizatum contrahitur cognatio spiritualis valida ad impediendum, et dirimendum matrimonium postcontractum.

Innocentius III. Episcopo et Archidiacono Linconiensibus.

Veniens ad apostolicam sedem C. Anglicus natione nobis exposuit, quod, quum olim in adolescentia constitutus mulieri cuidam adhaesisset, quam quidam alius ante cognoverat, de consilio matris suae factum est, ut eadem mulier quendam puerum, quem de alia soluta ipse susceperat, de sacro fonte levaret ad suspicionem et infamiam utriusque delendam. Deinde vero, quum in eius amorem vehementius exarderet, absque consilio amicorum eam clanculo desponsavit. Quumque prolem ex ea procreare non posset, et increpationes a patre suo gravissimas sustineret, quod eam desponsando deliquerat revolvens in animo, ipsa dimissa, causa orationis Hierosolymam est profectus. Verum quum idem rediens de partibus transmarinis prolem eam suscepisse de alio invenisset, ei noluit adhaerere; sed propter adulterium, quod commisisse taliter videbatur, ea omnino dimissa, ad longinquam se transferens regionem, et ad Eugubinam tandem veniens civitatem, quandam ibidem cum terra competenti et dote decenti sibi matrimonialiter copulavit, de qua prolem se confessus est suscepisse. Ea propter discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus super his inquiratis diligentius veritatem, et, si constiterit, H. mulierem praedicti viri filium de sacro fonte levasse, antequam eam desponsasset uxorem, vos inter eos divortium, appellatione postposita, celebretis, rei processum nobis per literas vestras fideliter exponentes ut an cum secundo legitime commorari valeat veritate cognita decernere valeamus. [Dat. ap. civitatem Castellanam VIII. Id. Oct. 1198.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If the sons of two coparents, through one of whom coparenthood was reached, contract marriage, they are separated, and those who know the impediment at the time of the contract are bound to denounce it.

The same, to Master S., Canon of Hereford.

Your discretion led you to consult us whether one born before coparenthood can in the course of time matrimonially join to himself the daughter of his coparent, male or female, and, if he contracted with her and remained together with her for several years, whether they ought afterward to be separated, and whether those conscious of such a marriage are bound to accuse it in public. Concerning this we respond to your discretion in this manner: persons of this kind cannot contract marriage and, if they have contracted, by the rigor of law can be separated from one another; and those who knew of the contract ought to announce it to the Church. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of April. 1202.]

Si filii duorum compatrum, per quorum alterum deventum est ad compaternitatem, matrimonium contrahant, separantur, et tempore contractus scientes impedimentum illud denunciare tenentur.

Idem Magistro S. Canonico Herfordensi.

Tua nos duxit discretio consulendos, an natus ante compaternitatem filiam compatris sui vel commatris procedente tempore sibi possit matrimonialiter copulare, et, si cum ea contraxit, et pluribus annis simul permanserit, an postea debeant separari, et an conscii talis matrimonii teneantur illud in publico accusare. Super quo discretioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod huiusmodi personae non matrimonium contrahere, et, si contraxerint, de iuris rigore possunt ab invicem separari, et, qui contractum sciverint, debent ecclesiae illud nunciare. [Dat. Lat. XV. Kal. Apr. 1202.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Spiritual kinship arises between a baptized person and the son of the person baptizing, impeding and dissolving a marriage to be contracted between them. This the chapter says.

Gregory IX. From your letters we received that, when the woman M. sought Alan as husband before the official of Canterbury, and had proved through suitable witnesses that she was affianced by him and carnally known, when at last the depositions of the said witnesses had been published, the same A. proposed by way of exception that he could not have her as wife because the father of the same woman, who had been a priest, baptized him. But when the same official, not admitting an exception of this kind, rendered a definitive sentence against him, and he appealed to the Apostolic See, we order that, if it is so, you absolve the same A. in this matter from the prosecution of the woman herself, imposing perpetual silence upon the same woman.

> Inter baptizatum et filium baptizantis oritur cognatio spiritualis, impediens et dirimens matrimonium inter eos contrahendum. H. d.
>
> Gregorius IX. Ex literis vestris accepimus, quod, quum M. mulier coram officiali Cantiuariensi Alanum peteret in virum, et se affidatam ab eo ac carnaliter cognitam per testes idoneos probavisset, dictorum tandem testium depositionibus publicatis, idem A. excipiendo proposuit, quod eam habere non poterat in uxorem pro eo, quod ipsum pater mulieris eiusdem, qui sacerdos exstitit, baptizavit. Sed quum idem officialis, exceptione huiusmodi non admissa, diffinitivam tulerit sententiam contra ipsum, et idem ad sedem apostolicam appellaverit, mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, eundem A. super hoc ab impetitione mulieris absolvatis ipsius, eidem mulieri perpetuum silentium imponentes.

Title XII: On Legal Kinship

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: Between an adopted person and the daughter of the adopter, marriage cannot subsist while the adoption endures.

Nicholas, in the Responses to the Bulgarians.

If any woman has begun through adoption to be my sister, for as long as the adoption endures, nuptials certainly cannot subsist between me and her. [If therefore, etc.]

> DE COGNATIONE LEGALI.
>
> Inter adoptatum et filiam adoptantis non potest durante adoptione consistere matrimonium.
>
> Nicolaus ad consulta Bulgarorum.
>
> Si qua per adoptionem mihi soror esse coeperit, quam diu durat adoptio, sane inter me et ipsam nuptiae consistere non possunt. [Si ergo etc.]

Title XIII: On One Who Knew a Blood Relative of His Wife or Betrothed Woman

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Affinity supervening after marriage has been contracted does not dissolve the marriage, but impedes the exaction of the debt, and the crime of incest makes one incapable as regards contracting marriage.

From the Council at Metz.

If anyone knowingly fornicates with his stepdaughter, he can neither seek the debt from the mother nor ever have the daughter as wife; neither the stepdaughter nor he will ever at any time be able to join themselves to another in marriage. Nevertheless, his wife, if she so wishes and cannot contain herself, can marry another if, after she learned that her husband had been in adultery with her daughter, she did not have carnal commerce with him.

> DE EO, QUI COGNOVIT CONSANGUINEAM UXORIS SUAE VEL SPONSAE.

Affinitas, superveniens post matrimonium contractum, non solvit matrimonium, sed exactionem debiti impedit, et crimen incestus inhabilitat quoad matrimonium contrahendum.

Ex concilio apud Metiam.

Si quis cum filiastra sua scienter fornicatus fuerit, nec a matre debitum petere, nec filiam unquam habere potest uxorem; nec filiastra, nec ille ullo unquam tempore alii se poterunt matrimonio copulare. Attamen uxor eius, si ita voluerit et si se continere non potest, si postea quam cognoverit, quod cum filia vir eius fuit in adulterio, carnale commercium cum eo non habuerit, potest alii nubere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Affinity supervening through illicit intercourse dissolves betrothals of the future, but not marriage; and an incestuous person cannot contract.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Poitiers.

Coming to us, P., bearer of the present letters, presented to us the letters of your fraternity, from the tenor of which we perceived that he had taken a certain woman as wife, whom certain persons dissuaded him from knowing carnally for one month from the time he took her. But it happened, as he said, that the father ordered his wife, who was the mother of the bride, to lie in this man's bed, and at the devil's suggestion he knew her. But after the month had passed, both the father and other relatives compelled him to consummate marriage with his bride, which he was unwilling to do until he spoke with you concerning this. But you, having heard his confession, transmitted him with your letters to the Apostolic See, [consulting whether he ought to have as wife her whose mother he had known, and what penance was to be enjoined upon him.] We respond to your inquiry in this manner: if a sin of this kind were secret, he could not dissolve the marriage which he had contracted publicly. But if it is public that he knew the mother of his bride and never adhered carnally to the bride, penance a little greater than that for adultery is to be imposed upon him; after it, or part of it, has been performed, by dispensation he will be able to contract marriage with another, and she to marry another, and the bride's father, if he wishes, can dissemble the deed. But if he knew the bride before the mother or afterward, he can never take her or another as wife.

Affinitas, superveniens per illicitum coitum, dissolvit sponsalia de futuro, sed non matrimonium; et incestuosus contrahere non potest.

Alexander III. Pictaviensi Episcopo.

Veniens ad nos P. praesentium lator +nobis fraternitatis tuae literas praesentavit, ex quarum tenore perpendimus, quod quandam duxerat in uxorem, quam quidam dissuaserunt ei per mensem, ex quo eam duxerat, carnaliter cognoscere. Contigit autem, sicut dixit, quod pater iussit uxorem suam, quae sponsae mater erat, in huius lecto iacere, quam diabolo suggerente cognovit. Transacto vero mense tam pater quam alii propinqui coegerunt, ut matrimonium cum sponsa sua consummaret, quod facere noluit, donec tecum super hoc loqueretur. Tu vero audita eius confessione ipsum cum literis tuis ad sedem apostolicam transmisisti, [consulens, si illam habere debet pro uxore, cuius matrem cognoverat, et quae sibi esset poenitentia iniungenda.] Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si occultum esset huiusmodi peccatum, non posset matrimonium rescindere, quod publice contraxisset. Verum si publicum est, quod matrem sponsae suae cognovit, et sponsae nunquam carnaliter adhaesit, imponenda est ei poenitentia paulo maior quam pro adulterio, qua peracta, vel parte ipsius, poterit ex dispensatione cum alia matrimonium contrahere, et illa alii nubere, et pater sponsae, si vult, potest factum dissimulare. Ceterum si sponsam cognovit antequam matrem vel post, nunquam eam vel aliam potest accipere in uxorem.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A marriage is not separated upon the statement of one person asserting that affinity between the spouses preceded it.

The same.

But concerning him who proposed that he had known the wife of his own brother before she was joined to him in marriage, we respond this to your prudence: unless this was public and notorious or proved by suitable witnesses, do not permit him to attack the aforesaid marriage on that occasion. But concerning that which you assert, that a certain Saracen received sons from a Christian woman whom he had retained for fourteen years, we have considered that this response should be made to your discretion: both the Saracen and the woman are to be punished with grave chastisement for so great a transgression.

> Non separatur matrimonium ad dictum unius, asserentis, affinitatem inter coniuges praecessisse.
>
> Idem.
>
> De illo autem, qui uxorem fratris sui, antequam ei matrimonio iungeretur, se proposuit cognovisse, hoc tuae prudentiae respondemus, quod, nisi hoc publicum et notorium fuerit aut idoneis testibus comprobatum, praedictum matrimonium occasione illa ipsum impetere non permittas. Super eo vero, quod asseris, Sarracenum quendam de muliere Christiana, quam per quatuordecim annos retinuerat filios suscepisse discretioni tuae duximus respondendum, quod tam Sarracenus quam mulier pro tanto excessu gravi sunt animadversione plectendi.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: An incestuous man ought not to contract marriage; but, if he contracts, it holds. And then he is bound to render the debt, but cannot exact it; and he is no less bound to administer necessities to his wife.

Celestine III.

Your letters transmitted to us demonstrated that G., bearer of the present letters, after his wife died, knew by carnal union her daughter, namely his own stepdaughter; but afterward, taking another lawful woman as wife, he did not fear to commit an illicit thing no longer secretly with the aforesaid stepdaughter but publicly, returning like a dog to its vomit. But because you sought counsel concerning these matters, by the counsel of our brothers we respond on the present page that, while cohabiting with and supplying necessities to his own lawful wife, he is not to know her for as long as he lives unless he is required by her, and then he is to approach her not without grave sorrow of his own heart; and he is also to do penance for the incest and adultery according to the moderation of your judgment for as long as he remains with her; afterward, if he survives her, he will remain perpetually without hope of marriage.

> Incestuosus matrimonium contrahere non debet; sed, si contrahit, tenet. Et tunc tenetur reddere, sed non potest debitum exigere; et non minus tenetur uxori necessaria administrare.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Transmissae nobis tuae literae demonstrarunt, quod G. lator praesentium, uxore sua defuncta, filiam eius, privignam videlicet propriam, copula carnali cognovit; postmodum vero aliam legitimam accipiens in uxorem, non iam occulte cum privigna praedicta, sed publice, tanquam canis ad vomitum rediens, illicitam rem committere non expavit. Quia vero super his consilium requisisti, de consilio fratrum nostrorum praesenti pagina respondemus, quod suae legitimae uxori cohabitans, et necessaria subministrans, non cognoscat eam, quamdiu vixerit, nisi ab ea fuerit requisitus, et tunc ad ipsam non sine gravi cordis sui dolore accedat; qui etiam pro incestu et adulterio, donec cum ea permanserit, iuxta moderamen tui arbitrii poenitentiam agens, postmodum, si supervixerit ei, perpetuo sine spe coniugii permanebit.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A marriage is not separated upon the confession of spouses who say that affinity preceded it, even if the report of the neighborhood agrees. And this is a highly citable and notable case.

The same.

Concerning that indeed which you ask, whether a married man who before contracting marriage knew by carnal commingling a blood relative or relation of his wife, when each confesses it and some part of the neighborhood is said to cry this out, is to be separated from his wife by the judgment of the Church, we respond to your fraternity that, if the truth could not otherwise come to light by ordinary judgment, he ought not to be separated merely on account of their confession or the report of the neighborhood, since sometimes certain persons wish to collude with one another against a marriage and would easily leap to a confession of incest if they believed that recourse would be had to the judgment of the Church upon their own judgment. But the report of the neighborhood is not to be judged so valid that, unless reasonable and trustworthy proofs are added, a marriage well contracted can be annulled. [In the third place, etc. (Compare chapter 3, On Presumptions, II. 23.) Given at the Lateran.]

Non separatur matrimonium ad confessionem coniugum, qui dicunt affinitatem processisse, etiamsi rumor viciniae consentiat. Et est casus multum allegabilis et notabilis.

Idem.

Super eo vero, quod postulas, utrum coniugatus, qui ante contractum matrimonium uxoris suae consanguineam vel propinquam carnali commixtione cognovit, quum id fateatur uterque, et aliqua pars viciniae hoc acclamare dicatur, sit ab uxore sua iudicio ecclesiae separandus, tuae fraternitati respondemus, quod, si aliter veritas ordinario iudicio venire non potuerit in lucem, propter eorum confessionem tantum vel rumorem viciniae separari non debeat, quum et quandoque nonnulli inter se contra matrimonium velint colludere et ad confessionem incestus facile prosilirent, si suo iudicio crederent per iudicium ecclesiae concurrendum. Rumor autem viciniae non adeo est iudicandus validus, quod, nisi rationabiles et fide dignae probationes accedant, possit bene contractum matrimonium irritari. [Tertio loco etc. (cf. c. 3. de praesumpt. II. 23.) Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Supervening affinity does not dissolve betrothals of the present.

Innocent III, to the Provost of Magdeburg.

We commend your discretion in the Lord because in those matters which you reckon doubtful or obscure you consult the Apostolic See, so that henceforth you may proceed in them by its authority. Indeed, it was proposed on your part in our hearing that a certain [man] lawfully contracted through words of the present with a certain woman, whom he afterward, without having known her, handed over to a certain blood relative of his, while she resisted as much as she could. But the latter celebrated the solemnities of marriage with her, although she was unwilling; but, as soon as the woman was restored to liberty, she fled from him and with insistence petitioned that she be restored to the former man, or the former man to her. We therefore respond to your inquiry in this manner: both is grave penance to be enjoined upon the man for so shameful a crime, and is the woman herself to be solicitously admonished on account of public honesty that she neither seek again the first man, whose blood relative knew her, although unwilling, nor return to the second, with whom she cannot commingle on account of the guilt of adultery, but remain in continence until the first has entered the way of all flesh. But if perhaps she cannot be induced to this, the first man is to be compelled to return to her and treat her with marital affection, since he who handed her over to be adulterously used, especially while unwilling, cannot object adultery to her. For although according to evangelical truth neither husband can ever dismiss wife nor wife husband except for the cause of fornication, nevertheless husband or wife cannot always dismiss the other for that same cause, since this can be impeded by a lawful exception or replication. Nor ought the affinity wrongfully contracted between husband and wife after the marriage was lawfully contracted prejudice her who does not exist as a participant in wrong of this kind, since she ought not to be deprived of her right without her own fault; although it is said that a certain predecessor of ours distinguished in a similar case whether the incest or adultery was namely manifest or secret, while others assert that a distinction is rather to be made between a proximate and a remote degree.

> Affinitas superveniens non dissolvit sponsalia de praesenti.
>
> Innocentius III. Praeposito Magdeburgensi.
>
> Discretionem tuam in Domino commendamus, quod in his, quae dubia reputas vel obscura, sedem consulis apostolicam, ut in eis de cetero ipsius auctoritate procedas. Sane in audientia nostra ex parte tua fuit propositum, quod quidam [vir] cum muliere quadam legitime per verba de praesenti contraxit, quam postmodum a se incognitam cuidam consanguineo suo tradidit, in quantum potuit renitentem. Ille vero cum ipsa, licet invita, matrimonii solennia celebravit; sed mulier quam cito fuit reddita libertati, aufugit ab eo, et se priori viro vel priorem sibi restitui cum instantia postulavit. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod et viro pro tam turpi facinore gravis est poenitentia iniungenda, et mulier ipsa propter publicam honestatem est monenda sollicite, ut nec primum repetat, cuius consanguineus eam, licet invitam, cognovit, nec redeat ad secundum, cui non potest propter reatum adulterii commisceri; sed in continentia maneat, donec prior fuerit viam universae carnis ingressus. Quodsi forsitan ad id induci nequiverit, vir prior cogatur redire ad ipsam, et maritali eam affectione tractare, quum adulterium ei non possit obiicere, qui eam adulterandam tradidit, praesertim invitam. Nam etsi secundum evangelicam veritatem nunquam, nisi propter fornicationis causam, aut vir uxorem, aut uxor possit dimittere virum: non tamen semper propter causam eandem vel uxor virum, vel vir dimittere potest uxorem, quum possit exceptione vel replicatione legitima impediri. Sed nec affinitas, quae post contractum legitime matrimonium inter virum et uxorem inique contrahitur, ei debet officere, quae huiusmodi iniquitatis particeps non exsistit, quum suo iure non debeat sine sua culpa privari; quanquam a quodam praedecessore nostro dicatur in simili casu fuisse distinctum, utrum videlicet incestus vel adulterium manifestum fuerit, an occultum, aliis asserentibus, inter gradum proximum et remotum esse potius distinguendum.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Carnal union had with a girl of seven years dissolves a marriage afterward contracted with her blood relative. This the chapter says according to one understanding.

The same, to the Archbishop of Besançon.

To your fraternity consulting the Apostolic See concerning three articles, to whose counsel recourse is to be had by all the faithful in doubtful matters, we respond through the present writings. In the first, We approve the sentence of separation which you canonically promulgated against him who afterward presumed to join to himself her whose sister, still seven years old, after betrothals had been contracted, he is known previously to have polluted with extraordinary lust. [The priests, etc.; compare chapter 6, On Clerics Who Have Been Excommunicated, V. 27. Given at Ferentino, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, in the sixth year. 1203.]

> Copula carnalis, habita cum puella septem annorum, dirimit matrimonium postea contractum cum consanguinea. H. d. secundum unum intellectum.
>
> Idem Bisuntinensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Fraternitati tuae super tribus capitulis sedem consulenti apostolicam, ad cuius consilium est in rebus dubiis a cunctis fidelibus recurrendum, scriptis praesentibus respondemus. In primo Divortii sententiam approbamus, quam in eum canonice promulgasti, qui illam sibi postea copulare praesumpsit, cuius antea sororem adhuc septennem, contractis sponsalibus, extraordinaria libidine noscitur polluisse. [Presbyteros etc. cf. c. 6. de cler. exc. V. 27. Dat. Ferentini XII. Kal. Iun Ao. VI. 1203.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Affinity caused by illicit union breaks preceding betrothals and deprives one of the faculty of contracting marriage.

The same, to the Bishop of Girona.

From the letters of your fraternity we received that G., their bearer, often carnally knew the mother of the girl whom he had betrothed as wife below marriageable years, and afterward treated the adult girl with carnal commingling. Whence you humbly petitioned that provision be made for the soul of the man himself, and whether, while he lives, it is lawful for the woman to hasten to second nuptials, since this deed is held as public and notorious. But we caused penance for the sin to be enjoined upon the same man, responding to your consultation in this manner: if the matter so stands, after they have been altogether separated from each other, let the woman not marry another man if, after she learned of the offense of the man and her mother, she did not blush to commingle with him carnally. The man also and the mother of the same woman ought never to hasten to other nuptials, but are bound always to observe continence and to bewail the enormous offense which they contracted for so nefarious a lust, especially if a lapse of the flesh is by no means feared concerning persons of this kind. [Given at Ferentino, on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of July. 1203.]

> Affinitas, causata ex copula illicita, rumpit sponsalia praecedentia, et privat facultate contrahendi matrimonium.
>
> Idem Episcopo Gerundensi.
>
> Ex literis fraternitatis tuae accepimus, quod G. lator earum, matrem puellae, quam infra nubiles annos desponsaverat in uxorem, carnaliter saepe cognovit, et post carnali commixtione puellam tractavit adultam. Unde ipsius viri animae provideri humiliter postulasti, et utrum mulieri ad secundas nuptias ipso vivente liceat convolare, quum hoc factum publicum et notorium habeatur. Nos autem eidem viro poenitentiam iniungi fecimus pro peccato, consultationi tuae taliter respondentes, quod, si ita res se habet, eis ab invicem penitus separatis, mulier alteri viro non nubat, si postquam novit viri et matris delictum, se carnaliter ei non erubuit commisceri. Vir etiam et mater mulieris ipsius nunquam debent ad alias nuptias convolare, sed semper continentiam servare tenentur, et enorme deflere delictum, quod pro tam nefanda libidine contraxerunt, praesertim si circa personas huiusmodi de lapsu carnis minime timeatur. [Dat. Ferentini XIII. Kal. Iul. 1203.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It says the same with regard to the title as the decretal immediately above.

The same, to the Archbishop of Magdeburg.

Coming to the Apostolic See, the layman E., bearer of the present letters, by humble confession proposed to us that, when formerly in the time of his infancy, by the counsel of his friends, he had sworn that he would take a certain girl as wife as soon as he reached lawful age, the girl's father, after an alliance of this kind had been confirmed on both sides by the obligation of sureties, received him in his own house and reared him together with the girl. But afterward, from long association, having obtained the familiarity of the entire household, he joined himself carnally to the girl's sister, of whom he had sworn that he would be the husband, seduced by the instigation of the progenitor of human deception. At last, overcome by the insistence of his friends, he took as wife her whom he had sworn to take, and, after the nuptials had been celebrated, when opportunity presented itself to him, he knew both. But although he was accused concerning this in your presence, he could not be convicted and was unwilling to confess his offense; but now, returning to his heart and repenting of the things committed, he seeks that counsel for his salvation be imparted, lest he appear to wander to the peril of his soul like a horse and mule in which there is no understanding. Therefore, since the Apostle commands abstention not only from evil but also from every appearance of evil, through apostolic writings we order your fraternity that, after suitable penance has been enjoined upon the aforesaid E. for a transgression of such enormity, you counsel him, healthfully admonishing and inducing him, that henceforth he abstain from both. [Given at Anagni, on the seventh day before the Ides of October. 1203.]

Idem quoad titulum dicit, quod decretalis supr. proxima.

Idem Archiepiscopo Magdeburgensi.

Veniens ad apostolicam sedem E. laicus, lator praesentium humili nobis confessione proposuit, quod, quum olim tempore infantiae suae de consilio amicorum quandam puellam se ducturum iuraverit in uxorem, quam cito ad legitimam pervenisset aetatem, pater puellae, confoederatione huiusmodi fideiussorum obligatione hinc inde firmata, eum in propria domo recepit, et nutrivit insimul cum puella. Deinde vero ex conversatione diutina, totius domus familiaritatem adeptus sorori puellae, cui se iuraverat fore maritum, instinctu generis seductoris humani carnaliter se coniunxit. Tandem amicorum suorum devictus instantia, quam iuraverat in uxorem accepit, et nuptiis celebratis, quando se illi opportunitas ingerebat, cognoscebat utramque. Verum licet in praesentia tua super hoc fuerit accusatus, convinci tamen non potuit, nec suum voluit confiteri delictum; nunc autem reversus ad cor et poenitens de commissis, salutis suae consilium requirit impendi, ne tanquam equus et mulus, quibus nullus est intellectus, in animae suae periculum videatur errare. Quum igitur non tantum a malo, sed etiam ab omni specie mali praecipiat Apostolus abstinere, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, praedicto E. pro huiusmodi enormitatis excessu iniuncta poenitentia competenti, consulas ei, monens illum salubriter et inducens, ut de cetero abstineat ab utraque. [Dat. Anagniae VII. Id. Oct. 1203.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Supervening affinity does not dissolve marriage.

The same, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

The devotion of your fraternity petitioned to be instructed through the Apostolic See whether he who fornicates with the sister of his lawful spouse can afterward remain with his wife, exact the debt, and pay it when required, or whether on account of this the marriage ought to be separated. We therefore respond briefly to your inquiry that the wife is to be admonished more diligently to abstain from commingling with her husband on account of public honesty and to remain in continence until the husband enters the way of all flesh. But if perhaps, refusing to obey the admonition, she is such that a lapse on her part is feared, her husband will be able and bound, nevertheless with fear of God, to pay the conjugal debt to her, since affinity wrongfully contracted after the marriage ought not to harm her who does not exist as a participant in the wrong, whence she ought not to be deprived of her right without fault, [although it is said, etc. You consulted, etc.; compare chapter 3, That When the Litigation Has Not Been Contested, II. 6. Given at Rome, etc. 1206.]

> Affinitas superveniens non dissolvit matrimonium.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Strigoniensi.
>
> Tuae fraternitatis devotio postulavit per sedem apostolicam edoceri, utrum is, qui cum sorore legitimae coniugis fornicatur, cum uxore possit postmodum commorari, et exigere debitum ac solvere requisitus, vel propter hoc debeat matrimonium separari. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae breviter respondemus, quod uxor, ut a commixtione viri abstineat propter publicam honestatem, et in continentia maneat, donec vir viam universae carnis ingressus fuerit, diligentius est monenda. Quodsi forte commonitioni parere recusans talis fuerit, ut de lapsu timeatur ipsius, vir eius poterit et debebit, tamen cum Dei timore, debitum ei solvere coniugale, quum affinitas, post matrimonium inique contracta, illi nocere non debeat, quae iniquitatis particeps non exsistit, +unde iure suo non debet sine culpa privari, [quanquam dicatur etc. Consuluisti etc. cf. c. 3. Ut lite non cont. II. 6. Dat. Rom. etc. 1206.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above in the immediately preceding chapter.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Poitiers.

The petition of the woman Jordana contained that the layman I. contracted through words of the future with her while she had not yet completed the tenth year of her age, and, after she was carnally known within the space of the same year, he did not fear to join her mother matrimonially to himself and to proceed to the embraces of condemned commingling. (And below:) Wherefore the aforesaid I. supplicated that, since she cannot resist the goads of the flesh, we deign healthfully to provide for her, lest she be defrauded of her right without her own fault. On this account we order that, if the matter so stands, you attentively admonish and induce each of them to vow perpetual continence; and, if they cannot be induced to it, after suitable penance for the committed incest has first been enjoined upon the aforementioned I., compel him by ecclesiastical censure to cohabit with her and, when exacted, to render the conjugal debt.

> Summatum est supr. capitulo proximo.
>
> Gregorius IX. Episcopo Pictaviensi.
>
> Iordanae mulieris petitio continebat, quod I. laicus cum ipsa, quae nondum decimum aetatis suae annum compleverat, per verba de futuro contraxit, et, ea infra eiusdem anni spatium carnaliter cognita, matrem ipsius sibi matrimonialiter copulare, et ad damnatae commixtionis amplexus procedere non expavit. (Et infra:) Quare praefata I. supplicavit, ut, quum carnis stimulis resistere nequeat, sibi, ne iure suo sine sua propria culpa fraudetur, providere salubriter dignaremur. Ea propter mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, utrumque ipsorum ad vovendam perpetuam continentiam attente moneas et inducas, et, si ad eam induci nequiverint, memoratum I., iniuncta ei primitus pro commisso incestu poenitentia competenti, ut eidem cohabitet, et coniugale debitum reddat exactus, ecclesiastica censura compellas.

Title XIV: On Consanguinity and Affinity

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A marriage contracted between affines of the first kind and the fourth degree is separated.

Alexander III, to the Abbot of Cassino.

From your letters directed to us we received that, when a certain man had secretly given bridal earnest to a certain widow and known her carnally, had cohabited with her for a year, the mundualdrew the woman's man into a suit, proposing that he had known her, who had been placed in his power, as though a fornicator; then the man and woman affirmed by oath that for a year each had consented to marital union with the other, and henceforth they cohabited together as husband and wife. But when not even to the oath of the [said] woman did the proctor have faith, he exacted that bridal earnest be given to her publicly. At last, when the man was prepared to give bridal earnest to her in the sight of the Church, two persons arose, proposing that this man who wished to give her bridal earnest touched the former husband in the fourth degree of consanguinity. But one swore that he had heard it so; the other, however, was unwilling to affirm it by oath. And on account of this, although the man delayed giving bridal earnest to the aforesaid woman, he nevertheless by no means withdrew from cohabitation with her. But in the course of time, at the insistence of the mundualdthe aforesaid [man] publicly celebrated marriage and afterward remained with his wife for nearly a year. But now the first question revived, and two persons swore before the archpriest of Plumbarola, as you say, that the first man was joined to the surviving man in the fifth degree of consanguinity. Whence, because different persons think different things, through our letters you seek to be instructed as to what is to be done in this case. Therefore, by commanding through apostolic writings we order your discretion to summon each party before your presence and cause the witnesses to swear before you, [and] also inquire from whom and when they learned that to which they testify. But if they learned it after the question had been moved, the said marriage is not to be dissolved; likewise not if they learned it from the accusers of the marriage. But, after the truth has been more diligently investigated, if through circumspect witnesses and persons greater than every exception you find that the first husband touches the surviving man in the fourth degree of consanguinity, do not postpone promulgating a sentence of separation. For, as the canons say, one is equally to abstain from the blood relatives of one's wife as from one's own, up to the seventh degree. But we wish it not to escape your prudence that suitable persons are to be named, and the degrees on each side distinguished [and] computed; matrimonial cases are not to be treated by just anyone, but by discreet judges who have the power of judging and are not ignorant of the statutes of the canons concerning these matters.

DE CONSANGUINITATE ET AFFINITATE.

Separatur matrimonium, contractum inter affines primi generis et quarti gradus.

Alexander III. Cassiensi Abbati.

Ex literis tuis ad nos directis accepimus, quod, quum quidam secreto quandam viduam subarrhasset, et carnaliter cognovisset, cohabitasset cum ea per annum, mundualdus virum mulieris traxit in causam, proponens, quod illam, in potestate sua positam, quasi fornicariam cognovisset, tunc vir et mulier iuramento firmaverunt, quod ab anno alter in alterius copulam maritalem consenserat, et de cetero sicut vir et mulier insimul cohabitarunt. Quum autem nec iuramento [iam dictae] mulieris procurator fidem habuerit, exegit eam publice subarrhari. Tandem quum vir paratus esset eam in conspectu ecclesiae subarrhare, surrexerunt duo proponentes, quod iste, qui eam subarrhare volebat, priorem virum quarto gradu consanguinitatis attingit. Unus autem ita se audivisse iuravit; alius autem noluit id iuramento firmare. Et ob hoc, licet ille praefatam mulierem subarrhare distulerit, minime tamen ab eius cohabitatione discessit. Processu vero temporis ad instantiam mundualdi praefatus [vir] publice matrimonium celebravit, et postmodum cum uxore fere per annum permansit. Nunc autem quaestio prima revixit, et iuraverunt duo coram archipresbytero Plumbarolae, velut dicis, quod primus vir fuit superstiti quinto consanguinitatis gradu coniunctus. Unde, quia diversi diversa sentiunt, quid agendum sit in hoc casu, nostris literis quaeris edoceri. Quocirca discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus utramque partem ante tuam praesentiam convoces, et facias testes coram te iurare, [et] adhuc inquiras, a quibus et quando didicerint quod testantur. Si vero post motam quaestionem didicerint, non est iam dictum matrimonium dissolvendum; similiter nec si ab accusatoribus matrimonii didicerint. Inquisita vero diligentius veritate, si per testes circumspectos et omni exceptione maiores inveneris, quod primus vir superstitem quarto gradu consanguinitatis attingit, non differas divortii sententiam promulgare. Aeque enim, ut canones dicunt, abstinendum est a consanguineis uxoris, ut propriis, usque ad septimum gradum. Ceterum tuam prudentiam volumus non latere, quod personae idoneae nominandae sunt et gradus distinguendi ab utroque latere [et] computandi; non sunt causae matrimonii tractandae per quoslibet, sed per iudices discretos, qui potestatem habeant iudicandi, et statuta canonum super his non ignorent.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Supervening affinity, which is established at least by report, dissolves betrothals of the future.

Urban III, to the Archbishop of Bordeaux.

Concerning that which you assert, that a certain young man, with faith interposed, betrothed a certain girl not yet marriageable, who, having now become marriageable, seeks him, and he excepts, saying that he ought not to take her because, after he affianced the same girl, he carnally knew her relation, we respond to your inquiry in this manner: if it is manifest that the same young man knew the relation of the aforesaid girl, or, if it is not manifest, nevertheless the report of the place has it so, since she was a betrothed woman only of the future, the same young man [can and] ought to be absolved from her prosecution.

Affinitas superveniens, de qua saltem constat per famam, solvit sponsalia de futuro.

Urbanus III. Burdegalensi Archiepiscopo.

Super eo, quod iuvenem quendam asseris puellam quandam nondum nubilem fide interposita desponsasse, quae, iam facta nubilis, eum repetit, et ille excipit dicens, se non debere eam ducere pro eo, quod, postquam puellam affidavit eandem, carnaliter propinquam ipsius cognovit, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si manifestum est, eundem iuvenem cognovisse propinquam praedictae puellae, vel, si non est manifestum, fama tamen loci hoc habet, quum esset sponsa tantummodo de futuro, idem iuvenis ab eius impetitione [potest et] debet absolvi.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If someone is dispensed so that he can contract in a certain degree otherwise prohibited, it is required that each of those contracting be distant from the stock by the whole degree, especially if custom has this.

Celestine III.

That which your affection—(And below:) You asked us, however, whether he who is distant from the stock in the sixth or seventh degree through a descending line can be joined matrimonially to her who on the other side is distant from the same stock in the second or third degree through a descending line, on account of the indulgence of Pope Adrian of happy memory, then Bishop of Albano, legate of the Apostolic See in Norway, by which it was permitted to the people of that land to be joined in the sixth degree. This appears properly to you to be able to be done according to a rule approved by certain doctors, by which it is said: in whatever degree someone is distant from the stock, he is distant from anyone descending from the same stock through another line; nevertheless, by the custom of the land, if ever such a case arises, the inhabitants of the land separate those joined on account of the nearer degree and impede those wishing to be joined, as the series of your letters demonstrated. We therefore respond thus to your consultation: that indulgence is to be understood in such a way that each of those to be joined is distant from the stock in the sixth degree, with kinship computed according to the canons. But if one is distant from the stock in the sixth or seventh degree and the other in the second or third degree, they ought not to be joined. Whence in this part we considered it more prudent to defer to the multitude and the observed custom than, with a certain novelty introduced, to establish something else unto dissension and scandal of the people.

> Si dispensatur cum aliquo, ut possit contrahere in certo gradu alias prohibito, requiritur, quod uterque contrahentium toto gradu distet a stipite, praesertim si hoc habet consuetudo.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Quod dilectio tua (Et infra:) Quaesivisti, autem a nobis utrum is, qui a stipite per descendentem lineam sexto vel septimo gradu distat, possit ei, quae ex altera parte per lineam descendentem ab eodem stipite secundo vel tertio gradu distat, matrimonialiter copulari, propter indulgentiam felicis memoriae Adriani Papae, tunc Albanensis episcopi, in Norwegiam apostolicae sedis legati, qua permissum est hominibus terrae illius in sexto gradu coniungi. Quod tibi videtur convenienter posse fieri secundum regulam, a quibusdam doctoribus approbatam, qua dicitur: quoto gradu quis distat a stipite, et a quolibet, per aliam lineam descendentium ab eodem, quum tamen de consuetudine terrae, si quando talis casus emerserit incolae terrae propter proximiorem gradum coniunctos separent, et impediant copulari volentes, sicut literarum tuarum series demonstravit. Nos itaque sic consultationi tuae respondemus, quod indulgentia illa sic est intelligenda, quod uterque coniungendorum distet a stipite sexto gradu, cognatione secundum canones computata. Si vero alter sexto vel septimo gradu distat a stipite, alter autem secundo vel tertio gradu, coniungi non debent. Unde in hac parte consultius duximus multitudini et observatae consuetudini deferendum, quam aliud in dissensionem et scandalum populi statuendum, quadam adhibita novitate.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Unbelievers joined in a degree prohibited by canonical law are not separated after baptism.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop and Chapter of Tyre.

You wished to consult us concerning unbelievers converted to the faith, whether, if before their conversion they were joined according to the institutes of the Old Law or their own traditions concerning degrees of consanguinity denoted by the canon, they ought to be separated after baptism. Concerning this, therefore, We have considered that this response should be made to your consultation: a marriage thus contracted before conversion is not to be separated after the washing of baptism, since the Lord, when asked by the Jews whether it was lawful to dismiss a wife for any cause, responded to them: "What God has joined, let man not separate," intimating by this that marriage existed between them. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Kalends of January. 1198.]

> Infideles, coniuncti in gradu prohibito a lege canonica, post baptismum non separantur.
>
> Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo et capitulo Tirensibus.
>
> De infidelibus ad fidem conversis nos consulere voluistis, utrum, si ante conversionem suam secundum legis veteris instituta vel traditiones suas circa gradus consanguinitatis, a canone denotatos, coniuncti fuerint, separari debeant post baptismum. Super hoc igitur Consultationi tuae duximus respondendum, quod matrimonium, sic ante conversionem contractum, non est post baptismi lavacrum separandum, quum a Iudaeis Dominus requisitus, si liceret uxorem ex quacunque causa dimittere, ipsis respondit: "Quos Deus coniunxit homo non separet," per hoc innuens, esse matrimonium inter eos. [Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Ian. 1198.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: The husband's blood relatives lawfully contract with the wife's blood relatives. This is the first point. Marriages cannot be contracted in prohibited degrees even if custom has this. This is the second point.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rosano.

Because concerning these articles which induce some doubt in you, you consider that our counsel should be sought, and you take care to invoke the aid of the Apostolic See for executing those things which the pastoral office demands, we commend your solicitude in the Lord with worthy praises and respond to your petitions with a grateful spirit. Indeed, you signified to us that in your diocese father and son take mother and daughter, two kinsmen two kinswomen, maternal uncle and nephew two sisters as spouses, and husband and wife together baptize another's child. Moreover, certain persons of your diocese touching one another within the third and seventh degree of consanguinity contract marriage with each other, asserting that this is lawful for them by ancient custom. [(And below:)] Concerning the fact, therefore, that father and son contract marriages with mother and daughter, two kinsmen with two kinswomen, and maternal uncle and nephew with two sisters, we have considered that this response should be made to you: although all the blood relatives of the man are affines of the wife, and all the blood relatives of the wife are affines of the man, nevertheless, between the blood relatives of the wife and the blood relatives of the man, no affinity whatsoever has been contracted from the marriage of the same persons, namely the man and wife, on account of which marriage between them ought to be impeded. (And below:) But you ought publicly to prohibit marriage from being contracted within the prohibited degrees and punish presumptuous persons with ecclesiastical severity, notwithstanding a custom which is rather to be called a corruption. [But when, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Kalends of January. 1199.]

> Consanguinei mariti cum consanguineis uxoris licite contrahunt. Hoc primo. In gradibus prohibitis non possunt matrimonia contrahi, etiamsi hoc habeat consuetudo. Hoc secundo.

Idem Rosanensi Archiepiscopo.

Quod super his articulis, qui tibi aliquam dubitationem inducunt, nostrum ducis consilium requirendum, et ad ea exsequenda, quae officium postulant pastorale, apostolicae sedis procuras auxilium invocare, sollicitudinem tuam dignis in Domino laudibus commendamus, et postulationibus tuis grato animo respondemus. Significasti siquidem nobis, quod in dioecesi tua pater et filius matrem et filiam, duo cognati duas cognatas, avunculus et nepos duas sorores ducunt in coniuges, et maritus et uxor simul baptizant puerum alienum. Quidam praeterea tuae dioecesis infra tertium et septimum gradum consanguinitatis se contingentes, adinvicem matrimonium contrahunt, hoc sibi licere de antiqua consuetudine asserentes. [(Et infra:)] Super eo igitur, quod pater et filius cum matre et filia, et duo cognati cum duabus cognatis, avunculus et nepos cum duabus sororibus contrahunt matrimonia, taliter tibi duximus respondendum, quod, licet omnes consanguinei viri sint affines uxoris, et omnes consanguinei uxoris sint viri affines, inter consanguineos tamen uxoris et consanguineos viri ex eorundem, scilicet viri et uxoris, coniugio nulla prorsus affinitas est contracta, propter quam inter eos matrimonium debeat impediri. (Et infra:) Ne autem infra gradus prohibitos matrimonium contrahatur, debes publice inhibere, et praesumptores ecclesiastica districtione punire, non obstante consuetudine, quae dicenda est potius corruptela. [Quum autem etc. Dat. Lat. II. Kal. Ian. 1199.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A dispensation obtained from the Pope concerning a marriage contracted between blood relatives is not valid if a false cause is expressed there, unless the Pope afterward confirms it. This the chapter says according to the true and common understanding.

The same.

Because concerning—(And below: [Compare chapter 6, On Bigamists, I. 21.]) Moreover, concerning the noble man N., for whose dispensation—namely, the indulgence of remaining with her who touches him in the fifth degree of consanguinity—a false cause had been alleged to us in order to obtain it from the Apostolic See, namely offspring, although before the dispensation was obtained the only daughter he had had entered the way of all flesh, as your consultation contained, you will be able to dissemble so that he may remain in the union thus contracted, since, as you assert, you see grave scandal threatening from the separation. [Finally you, etc. Given at Segni, on the fifth day before the Nones of October, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate. 1213.]

Non valet dispensatio, obtenta a Papa super matrimonio inter consanguineos contracto, si ibi causa falsa sit expressa, nisi postea eam Papa confirmaret. H. d. secundum verum et communem intellectum.

Idem.

Quia circa (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de bigam. I. 21.]) Porro de nobili viro N., pro cuius dispensatione, indulgentia scilicet remanendi cum ea, quae ipsum quinto consanguinitatis gradu contingit, a sede apostolica obtinenda falsa nobis causa fuerat allegata, proles videlicet, quum tamen ante dispensationem obtentam unica filia, quam habeat, viam fuerit universae carnis ingressa, prout tua consultatio continebat, dissimulare poteris, ut remaneat in copula sic contracta, quum ex separatione, sicut asseris, grave videas scandalum imminere. [Tu denique etc. Dat. Signiae V. Non. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. 1213.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Witnesses who depose concerning consanguinity ought to begin the computation from the stock or germ.

The same.

Your fraternity led you to consult us whether the testimony of those persons is sufficient for dissolving a marriage who began to compute the degrees of consanguinity from a maternal uncle and nephew, namely the son of a brother or sister, when they knew or heard nothing concerning the brothers or their superiors. We therefore respond to your inquiry in this manner: since marriage obtains much favor, witnesses who, having been produced for obtaining a judicial separation, compute the degrees of consanguinity ought to begin from the stock, that is, from the parents or siblings, and thus distinguish the degrees in order, designating the persons by proper names or equivalent indications, especially since they very frequently furnish testimony from hearsay. Because this is less valid, the faculty is not to be relaxed excessively in an article of this kind, since, by the same [reason] by which they would begin the computation from the second, they would begin from more remote persons. [Consequently, etc. (Compare chapter 26, On Betrothals, IV. 1.) Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of February, in the fourteenth year of our pontificate. 1212.]

> Testes, qui de consanguinitate deponunt, computationem debent a stipite vel germine incipere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, utrum illorum sufficiat testimonium ad matrimonium dirimendum, qui consanguinitatis gradus ab avunculo et nepote, videlicet fratris filio vel sororis, quum de fratribus vel superioribus nihil noverint vel audiverint, inceperint computare. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum coniugium multum favoris obtineat, testes, qui, ad divortium celebrandum producti, consanguinitatis gradus computant, a stipite debent incipere, id est a parentibus vel germanis, et sic per ordinem distinguere gradus, nominibus propriis vel aequipollentibus indiciis designando personas, praesertim quum saepius testimonium perhibeant de auditu. Quod quia minus est validum, non est in articulo huiusmodi nimium laxanda facultas, quum, qua ratione computationem inciperent a secundo, eadem [ratione] ab ulterioribus inchoarent. [Consequenter etc. (cf. c. 26. de spons. IV. 1.) Dat. Lat. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIV. 1212.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: In the second and third kind of affinity, the prohibition which formerly existed in contracting marriage is removed. Likewise, the prohibition concerning offspring received from second nuptials, who formerly could not contract with the kindred of the former husband, is removed. And the prohibition of marriage does not extend beyond the fourth degree of consanguinity and affinity. This the chapter says; this text is cited daily and is singular in its subject matter.

The same, in the General Council.

It ought not to be judged reprehensible if human statutes are sometimes varied according to the variety of times, especially when urgent necessity or evident utility demands it, since God himself changed in the New Testament certain things which he had established in the Old. Therefore, since the prohibitions concerning marriage by no means to be contracted in the second and third kind of affinity, and concerning offspring received from second nuptials not to be joined to the kindred of the former husband, frequently induce difficulty and sometimes give birth to peril of souls, since when the prohibition ceases the effect ceases, revoking the constitutions issued concerning this with the approval of the sacred council, by the present constitution we decree that those contracting in this manner henceforth be freely joined. Also, henceforth let the prohibition of conjugal union not exceed the fourth degree of consanguinity and affinity, since in more remote degrees a prohibition of this kind can no longer be generally observed without grave detriment. But the number four agrees well with the prohibition of corporeal marriage, concerning which the Apostle says that the man does not have power over his body, but the woman, nor does the woman have power over her body, but the man, because there are four humors in the body, which are composed of four elements. Therefore, since the prohibition of conjugal union has now been restricted up to the fourth degree, we wish it to be perpetual in such a way, notwithstanding constitutions issued concerning this long ago either by others or by us, that, if anyone presumes to be joined contrary to a prohibition of this kind, he is defended by no length of years, since length of time does not diminish sin but increases it, and crimes are the graver the longer they hold the unhappy soul bound.

> In secundo et tertio affinitatis genere tollitur prohibitio, quae olim erat in matrimonio contrahendo. Similiter tollitur prohibitio de sobole suscepta ex secundis nuptiis, quae olim non poterat contrahere cum cognatione prioris viri. Et prohibitio coniugii ultra quartum consanguinitatis et affinitatis gradum non extenditur. H. d. iste textus, qui quotidie allegatur, et est singularis in materia sua.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Non debet reprehensible iudicari, si secundum varietatem temporum statuta quandoque varientur humana, praesertim quum urgens necessitas vel evidens utilitas id exposcit, quoniam ipse Deus ex his, quae in veteri testamento statuerat, nonnulla mutavit in novo. Quum ergo prohibitiones de coniugio in secundo et tertio affinitatis genere minime contrahendo, et de sobole, suscepta ex secundis nuptiis, cognationi viri non copulanda prioris, et difficultatem frequenter inducant, et aliquando periculum pariant animarum, quum cessante prohibitione cesset effectus: constitutiones super hoc editas sacri approbatione concilii revocantes, praesenti constitutione decernimus, ut sic contrahentes de cetero libere copulentur. Prohibitio quoque copulae coniugalis quartum consanguinitatis et affinitatis gradum de cetero non excedat, quoniam in ulterioribus gradibus iam non potest absque gravi dispendio huiusmodi prohibitio generaliter observari. Quaternarius vero numerus bene congruit prohibitioni coniugii corporalis, de quo dicit Apostolus, quod vir non habet potestatem sui corporis, sed mulier, neque mulier habet potestatem sui corporis, sed vir, quia quatuor sunt humores in corpore, qui constant ex quatuor elementis. Quum ergo iam usque ad quartum gradum prohibitio coniugalis copulae sit restricta, eam ita volumus esse perpetuam, non obstantibus constitutionibus super hoc dudum editis vel ab aliis vel a nobis, ut, si quis contra prohibitionem huiusmodi praesumpserit copulari, nulla longinquitate defendatur annorum, quum diuturnitas temporum non minuit peccatum, sed auget, tantoque sunt graviora crimina, quanto diutius infelicem animam detinent alligatam.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: One distant from the stock in the fourth or a nearer degree can contract with one distant in the fifth or a more remote degree. This the chapter says together with the gloss.

Gregory IX. A man who is distant from the stock in the fourth degree, and a woman who on the other side is distant in the fifth, can lawfully be joined matrimonially according to the approved rule by which it is said: in whatever degree the more remote person differs from the stock, he or she differs from anyone descending from the same stock through another line.

> Distans a stipite quarto gradu vel citeriori, cum distante quinto vel ulteriori contrahere potest. H. d. cum glossa.
>
> Gregorius IX. Vir, qui a stipite quarto gradu, et mulier, quae ex alio latere distat quinto, secundum regulam approbatam, qua dicitur: quoto gradu remotior differt a stipite, et a quolibet per aliam lineam descendentium ex eodem, licite possunt matrimonialiter copulari.

Title XV: On the Frigid and Those Rendered Impotent by Sorcery, and on Impotence for Intercourse

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If, when the husband seeks judicial separation and asserts himself to be impotent, the woman confesses the same thing, with canonical solemnity observed, the marriage is dissolved without distinction. But if the Church is deceived, the first marriage is restored. But if, when the woman acts, the man asserts himself to be potent, unless he is convicted by inspection of the body or another indubitable mode, the woman is not heard. But if the man confesses the same thing or is convicted, the marriage is separated, and license to contract is given to the woman. This the chapter says according to Hostiensis.

From the Brocardicum, Book XIX. You received a woman and had her for some time, for one month or for three, or lastly for a year, and now for the first time you have said that you are of a frigid nature, so that you could not have intercourse with her or with any other woman; and if she who ought to have been your wife affirms the same things which you say, and if it can be proved by a true judgment that it is as you say, you can be separated, yet on this condition: if afterward you take another woman, you are to be adjudged guilty of perjury and, after penance has been performed, you will again be bound to restore the former marriage. But as for her, if she first, after a year or half a year, shall herself have complained to the bishop or to his delegate, saying that you had not known her, and denies that there was any commingling between you, while you affirm the contrary, you are to be believed because you are the head of the woman; for, if she wished to complain, why was she silent so long? For the woman could know quickly and in a short time whether you could have intercourse with her. But if she shall have complained immediately in that new condition, after one month or at the latest after two [months], to the bishop or to his delegate, saying: "I wish to be a mother, I wish to beget sons, and therefore I received a husband, but the man whom I received is of a frigid nature and cannot do those things for which I received him," if it can be proved by a right judgment, you can be separated, and she, if she wishes, may marry in the Lord.

> DE FRIGIDIS ET MALEFICIATIS, ET IMPOTENTIA COEUNDI.
>
> Si, marito provocante ad divortium, et se impotentem asserente, mulier hoc idem fatetur, servata solennitate canonica matrimonium indistincte dirimitur. Sed si decipiatur ecclesia, primum matrimonium reparatur. Si vero muliere agente vir asserat se potentem, nisi per aspectum corporis vel alio indubitato modo convincatur; mulier non auditur. Sed si vir hoc idem confitetur vel convincitur, matrimonium separatur, et mulieri contrahendi licentia datur. H. d. secundum Hostiensem.
>
> Ex Brocardico libr. XIX. Accepisti mulierem et, per aliquod tempus habuisti, per mensem aut per tres, aut postremo per annum, et nunc primum dixisti, te esse frigidae naturae ita, ut non potuisses coire cum illa, nec cum aliqua alia; et si illa, quae uxor tua esse debuit, eadem affirmat, quae tu dicis, et si probari potest per verum iudicium, ita esse ut dicitis, separari potestis, ea tamen ratione, ut, si tu post aliam acceperis, reus periurii diiudiceris, et iterum post peractam poenitentiam priora connubia reparare debebis. Illa autem, si prior post annum aut dimidium ad episcopum aut ad eius missum se proclamaverit, dicens, quod non cognovisses eam, et negat, aliquam commixtionem inter vos esse, tu autem contrarium affirmas, tibi credendum est eo, quod caput es mulieris, quia, si se proclamare voluit, cur tamdiu tacuit? Cito enim et in parvo tempore scire mulier potuit, si secum coire potuisses. Si autem se statim in ipsa novitate, post mensem aut postremum post duos, ad episcopum aut ad eius missum proclamaverit, dicens: volo esse mater, volo filios procreare, et ideo maritum accepi, sed vir, quem accepi, frigidae naturae est, et non potest illa facere, propter quae illum accepi: si probari potest per rectum iudicium, separari potestis, et illa, si vult, nubat in Domino.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One impotent for union is impotent to contract marriage, whether the impediment is of age or of nature.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Amiens.

We hold it pleasing and acceptable that you consult the Apostolic See concerning those matters which exist as doubtful to you, and your fraternity appears deserving of no small commendation on this account. Indeed, on your part it was intimated to us that a certain woman of your episcopate married a certain man, ignorant that because of the rupture of each groin his genitals had been cut away, and was not known by him; and he, having now become leprous, rendered himself and his property to a house of the infirm. But the woman, having returned to her paternal home, as a young woman desires to marry another man and to be joined by a conjugal covenant. But although the Roman Church has not been accustomed to divide those lawfully joined because of natural frigidity or other spells, nevertheless, if the general custom of the Gallican Church has it that marriages of this kind are dissolved, we will patiently tolerate it if, according to that custom, you grant the same woman the faculty of marrying whom she wishes in the Lord. For just as a boy who cannot render the debt is not fit for marriage, so also those who are impotent are reckoned by no means fit to contract marriages. [Indeed, concerning the canon, etc.; compare chapter 10, On Regular Clerics, III. 31.]

> Impotens ad copulam est impotens ad contrahendum matrimonium, sive sit impedimentum aetatis sive naturae.
>
> Alexander III. Ambianensi Episcopo.
>
> Quod sedem apostolicam consulis super his, quae tibi dubia exsistunt, gratum gerimus et acceptum, et tua exinde fraternitas non parum commendanda videtur. Ex tua siquidem parte nobis est intimatum, quod quaedam mulier tui episcopatus cuidam viro nupsit, ignorans, quod propter utriusque inguinis rupturam genitalia eius essent abscissa, nec ab eo cognita fuisset, qui utique modo factus leprosus se pariter et sua domui reddidit infirmorum. Mulier vero, ad domum paternam reversa, sicut iuvenis alii viro nubere desiderat et coniugali faedere coniungi. Verum licet Romana ecclesia non consueverit propter naturalem frigiditatem aut propter alia maleficia legitime coniunctos dividere, si tamen consuetudo generalis Gallicanae ecclesiae habet, ut huiusmodi matrimonia dissolvantur, nos patienter tolerabimus, si secundum illam consuetudinem eidem mulieri cui voluerit nubendi in Domino concesseris facultatem. Sicut enim puer, qui non potest reddere debitum, non est aptus coniugio: sic quoque qui impotentes sunt minime apti ad contrahenda matrimonia reputantur. [Sane de canonico etc. cf. c. 10. de regul. III. 31.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A natural impediment to intercourse, irreparable by the art of physicians, impedes marriage.

The same.

From your letters we received that a certain man of sixteen years or more took as wife a certain girl of thirteen years; when he was bound to, and could not, render the debt, the woman contracted so grave an infirmity that she was made altogether useless to the man, and her sexual organ was obstructed in such a way that the man could not commingle with her. We therefore respond that, if the woman contracted that defect from nature and cannot be aided by the work of physicians, grant the man the free faculty of taking another. But if this proceeded from the fault of the man, although it is not safe for it to be granted to him that he take another, nevertheless you will be able to tolerate it under dissimulation, because it is safer to have one woman as wife than to sin with many.

> Naturale impedimentum ad coitum, irreparibile arte medicorum, matrimonium impedit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex literis tuis accepimus, quod quidam sedecim annorum vel eo amplius quandam annorum tredecim duxit in uxorem, qui quum debitum reddere deberet, et non posset, mulier tam gravem infirmitatem contraxit, ut omnino viro sit facta inutilis, et instrumentum eius sit impeditum ita, quod vir ei commisceri non potest. Respondemus igitur, quod, si vitium illud mulier a natura contraxit, nec ope medicorum poterit adiuvari viro aliam accipiendi liberam tribuas facultatem. Si vero ex culpa viri hoc provenit, licet non sit tutum indulgeri ei, ut aliam accipiat: tamen sub dissimulatione poteris sustinere, quia tutius est unam tamquam uxorem habere, quam cum multis peccare.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who knowingly contracts with a woman impotent for union is not separated from her.

Lucius III.

We respond to your consultation, by which you consulted us whether women whose genital passage is closed, and who are unable to commingle with males, can contract marriage and, if they have contracted, whether it ought to be rescinded, in this manner: although it appears incredible that anyone would contract marriage with such women, and although we do not have an express canon concerning this kind of matter, nevertheless the sacrosanct Roman Church has been accustomed to judge in similar cases that those whom they cannot have as wives they are to have as sisters. Nevertheless, such women have sometimes been accustomed to be aided by medical skill so that they can suitably render and receive the debt.

> Contrahens scienter cum impotenti ad copulam, ab ea non separatur.
>
> Lucius III.
>
> Consultationi tuae, qua nos consuluisti, utrum feminae clausae, impotentes commisceri maribus, matrimonium possint contrahere, et, si contraxerint, an debeat rescindi, taliter respondemus, quod, licet incredibile videatur, quod aliquis cum talibus contrahat matrimonium, et quamvis de huiusmodi expressum canonem non habeamus, sacrosancta Romana tamen ecclesia consuevit in consimilibus iudicare, ut quas tanquam uxores habere non possunt habeant ut sorores. Verumtamen talibus artificio aliquando consuevit succurri, ut valeant apte reddere debitum et accipere.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If impotence for intercourse is established, the marriage is immediately separated; otherwise, the spouses will cohabit for three years. And if with seven relatives as oath-helpers they swear that they gave their effort to carnal union and could not be joined, they are immediately separated. It is commonly summarized thus.

Celestine III.

The praiseworthy—(And below: [Compare chapter 2, While Litigation Is Pending, II. 16.]) Solicitously also at the last, You asked how much time is to be granted to those naturally frigid for an experiment of nuptial union, in which, if they fail, they are separated. But we, although different times are conceded concerning this in the ancient canons as well as the laws, nevertheless, think this in the present consultation: if one naturally frigid cannot use her whom he took as spouse, from the time the marriage was celebrated, if the frigidity cannot be proved beforehand, they are to cohabit for three years according to the legal Authenticum. When this has elapsed, if even then they are unwilling to cohabit, and according to the decree of Gregory the woman, if by a just judgment she can prove concerning the man that he cannot have intercourse with her, let her receive another; but if he takes another, let them be separated. But if both consent to be together, let the man have her, although not as wife, at least as sister. But if both confess that they never knew each other, with seven relatives as oath-helpers, or, if relatives are lacking, with seven reputable neighbors as oath-helpers, let each, touching the sacrosanct Gospels, say by oath that they were never made one flesh through carnal union; and then it appears that the woman can hasten to second nuptials. But if he takes another woman, then let those who had sworn be held guilty of perjury and, after penance has been performed, be compelled to return to the former marriage. [Finally, etc.; compare chapter 1, On Exceptions, II. 25.]

> Si de impotentia coeundi constet, statim matrimonium separatur; alias cohabitabunt coniuges per triennium. Et si cum septima manu propinquorum iurant, quod dederunt operam carnali copulae, et non potuerunt coniungi: statim separantur. Ita communiter summatur.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Laudabilem (Et infra: [cf. c. 2. Ut lite pend. II. 16.]) Sollicite quoque ad ultimum Requisisti, quantum tempus indulgendum sit naturaliter frigidis ad experientiam copulae nuptialis, in qua si defecerint, separantur. Nos vero, quamvis in antiquis tam canonibus quam legibus super hoc diversa tempora concedantur, id tamen in praesenti consultatione sentimus, ut, si naturaliter frigidus non potest illa, quam duxit, uti pro coniuge, a tempore celebrati coniugii, si frigiditas prius probari non possit, secundum authenticum legale cohabitent per triennium. Quo elapso, si nec tunc cohabitare voluerint, et iuxta decretum Gregorii mulier, si per iustum iudicium de viro probare potuerit, quod cum ea coire non possit, accipiat alium; si autem ille aliam acceperit, separentur. Quod si ambo consentiant simul esse, vir eam, etsi non ut uxorem, saltem habeat ut sororem. Si autem, quod nunquam se invicem cognoverint, ambo fatentur, cum septima manu propinquorum vel vicinorum bonae famae, si propinqui defuerint, tactis sacrosanctis evangeliis uterque iureiurando dicat, quod nunquam per carnis copulam una caro effecti fuissent, et tunc videtur, quod mulier valeat ad secundas nuptias convolare. Verum si ille aliam duxerit, tunc hi, qui iuraverant, rei periurii teneantur, et peracta poenitentia cogantur ad connubia priora redire. [Denique etc. cf. c. 1. de except.II. 25.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Because of a woman's constriction, if it appears that, apart from a divine miracle, she cannot be rendered capable without bodily danger, the marriage is separated; nevertheless, it is restored if it afterward appears that the Church was deceived.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Auxerre.

We received the letters of your fraternity containing that the woman O. married a certain man in lawful wedlock; she lived with him for many years, but could not be known carnally by him. But although you had been instructed concerning this through your archpriest, nevertheless, wishing to have fuller certainty concerning this, you summoned to your presence certain provident and honorable matrons of her parish, strictly enjoining upon them under peril of their souls that they prudently inspect the woman herself and diligently inquire whether she was suitable for virile embraces; and they at last steadfastly asserted to you upon their faith that the same woman could never be a mother or spouse, as one whose natural sexual organ was lacking. Whence you solemnized a separation between her and that man, inducing the same woman to transfer herself to some religious house, being about to observe perpetual continence, and granted the man license to take a wife in the name of the Lord, because he desired to become a father. But it happened afterward that the same woman found someone who removed that bodily obstruction and, casting away the continence which she promised, after she had had [intercourse with] another man, additionally married G., bearer of the present letters, on whose behalf you humbly supplicated that we deal mercifully with them. Therefore, although you expressed to us only incompletely how the said woman promised that she would observe continence—whether, namely, by a simple word or a solemn vow, whether she passed to religion, as she promised, or remained in her house contrary to her promise, and how she caused that obstruction to be removed, whether, namely, by the art of a physician, intercourse with a man, or any other mode—nevertheless, perceptively considering that the impediment was not perpetual which, apart from a divine miracle, could be removed by human work without bodily danger, we know that the sentence of separation was rendered through an error, although a probable one, since it is manifest from the subsequent fact that she was knowable by him whose like commingles with her, and therefore we say that marriage existed between the woman herself and the first man. Wherefore we adjudge that there is no marriage between her and the aforesaid G., and we command them to be separated from each other. And if the aforesaid woman passed to religion, as she asserts that she promised, let the first man, who did not know her, remain with her with whom he afterward contracted by authority of the Church; otherwise, let the same man, after dismissing her whom he afterward brought in, be bound to return to her with whom he first contracted, unless that woman bound herself by a vow to observe continence, so that by this she is understood to have fornicated with the aforesaid G., or unless she commingled with another man in a fornicatory manner, so that the first man, under pretext of the fornication which [she] committed, wishes to decline her consortium. For if she promised only by a simple word that she would observe continence and afterward married the aforementioned G. in the sight of the Church, for as long as this article was doubtful, it ought not to be presumed that she fornicated with him; but from now on she ought not in any way to remain with him. But through these things you should know that the following question is resolved: whether she who is so constricted that she can carnally commingle with no one unless through an incision or in some other way violence is brought upon her—not only slight violence but perhaps so grave that peril of death is feared from it—ought to be declared suitable for contracting marriage. Likewise, whether she who is so constricted for the man whom she married that she can never be deflowered by him, if she is separated from him by the judgment of the Church and marries another [man] for whom she is not constricted and through frequent use of the second man is rendered suitable even for the first, ought to return to him with whom she first entered the conjugal covenant. But concerning such matters judgment is not easily to be given, since the final judgment depends upon the future. You therefore, according to that which is distinguished above, are to cause what we have decreed to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure, with appeal set aside. [Given at Ferentino, on the fifth day before the Nones of July, in the ninth year. 1206.]

Propter arctationem mulieris, si apparet, quod praeter divinum miraculum absque periculo corporali habilis reddi non potest, separatur matrimonium, redintegratur tamen, si postea appareat, ecclesiam fuisse deceptam.

Innocentius III. Altissiodorensi Episcopo.

Fraternitatis tuae literas recepimus, continentes, quod O. mulier cuidam viro matrimonialiter nupsit, cum quo per multos annos morata, non potuit carnaliter ab ipso cognosci. Licet autem per archipresbyterum tuum super hoc fuisses edoctus, tu tamen, volens super hoc habere certitudinem pleniorem, quasdam matronas suae parochiae providas et honestas ad tuam praesentiam evocasti, districte illis iniungens sub periculo animarum, ut mulierem ipsam prudenter inspicerent, et perquirerent diligenter, utrum idonea esset ad viriles amplexus; quae tandem in fide sua tibi asseruere constanter, quod eadem mulier nunquam poterat esse mater aut coniux, tanquam cui naturale deerat instrumentum. Unde inter ipsam et virum illum divortium celebrasti, mulierem ipsam inducens, ut ad religionem aliquam se transferret perpetuam continentiam servatura, et viro licentiam tribuisti, ut uxorem duceret in nomine Domini, quia pater fieri cupiebat. Contigit autem postea, quod mulier eadem invenit qui seras huiusmodi reseravit, et abiiciens continentiam, quam promisit, et quae alium virum habuerat, G. latori praesentium supernupsit, pro quibus humiliter supplicasti, ut cum eis misericorditer ageremus. Quamvis igitur semiplene nobis expresseris, quomodo dicta mulier se promiserit continentiam servaturam, utrum videlicet simplici verbo, an voto solenni, utrumve ad religionem transierit, ut promisit, an contra promissionem suam in domo remanserit, et qualiter seras illas fecerit reserari, utrum videlicet artificio medici, an concubitu viri, seu alio quolibet modo: nos tamen, perspicaciter attendentes, quod impedimentum illud non erat perpetuum, quod praeter divinum miraculum per opus humanum absque corporali periculo potuit removeri, sententiam divortii per errorem, licet probabilem, novimus esse prolatam, quum pateat ex postfacto, quod ipsa cognoscibilis erat illi, cuius simili commiscetur, et ideo inter ipsam mulierem et primum virum dicimus matrimonium exstitisse. Quare inter eam et praefatum G. matrimonium non esse censemus, eosque praecipimus ab invicem separari. Et si praedicta mulier ad religionem transivit, sicut asserit promisisse, primus vir, qui non cognovit eandem, cum ea remaneat, cum qua postmodum ecclesiae auctoritate contraxit; alioquin idem vir, ea dimissa, quam postea superduxit, debet ad illam redire, cum qua primo contraxit nisi se voto mulier illa constrinxerit ad continentiam observandam, ut intelligatur per hoc cum praefato G. fornicata fuisse, vel nisi se fornicario modo alii viro miscuerit, ut primus vir praetextu fornicationis, quam [ipsa] commisit, eius velit consortium declinare. Nam si tantum simplici verbo se promisit continentiam servaturam, et postea in conspectu ecclesiae nupsit memorato G., quamdiu articulus iste dubitabilis erat, praesumi non debet, quod fornicaretur cum illo, sed amodo non debet cum illo aliquatenus remanere. Per haec autem quaestionem illam noveris esse solutam, qua quaeritur, utrum ea, quae adeo arcta est, ut nulli possit carnaliter commisceri, nisi per incisionem aut alio sibi modo violentia inferatur, non solummodo levis, sed forte tam gravis, ut ex ea mortis periculum timeatur, ad matrimonium contrahendum debeat idonea perhiberi. Similiter illa, quae viro, cui nupserat, adeo arcta est, ut nunquam ab eo valeat deflorari, si ab eo sit per iudicium ecclesiae separata, et nubat alteri [viro], cui arcta non sit, et per frequentem usum secundi reddatur etiam apta primo, utrum ad eum redire debeat, cum quo prius foedus inierat coniugale. De talibus autem non est facile iudicandum, quum finale iudicium pendeat ex futuro. Tu ergo, secundum quod superius est distinctum, facias quod decrevimus per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione postposita firmiter observari. [Dat. Ferentini V. Non. Iul. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If a wife says that the husband with whom she cohabited for three years does not have the potency for intercourse, when they swear this with seven relatives as oath-helpers, the marriage is separated. This the chapter says by adhering to the words of the letter.

Honorius III.

Your letters exhibited to us contained that, when the matrimonial case which is pending between the woman M. and A. her husband, of the diocese of Arras, had been committed to you by Pope Innocent, our predecessor of good memory, the said M. proposed before you that, although already eight years earlier she had been joined matrimonially to the said A. and had cohabited with him for a long time, nevertheless, although she was capable of intercourse with a man, she had never been known by him, but still remained intact because her aforesaid husband did not have the potency for intercourse; wherefore she sought that a separation be solemnized between them. But the aforesaid A. nevertheless confessed that he had never known her, although she had exhibited herself ready and prepared for his service, but nevertheless asserted that he had the potency to know other women. But you, lest perhaps they confess this in fraud, caused the said woman to be inspected by matrons of good reputation, trustworthy and experienced in the nuptial work, who furnished testimony that she still remained a virgin. Afterward, through the priest from whose parish the aforesaid man came, you caused it to be diligently inquired whether the man himself had known any woman, and through the inquiry itself it could not be established to you that any woman had been carnally known by him. But while the woman insistently sought judicial separation and said that she wished to be a mother and to beget sons, and while the man proposed that he was prepared to stand by the counsel and will of the Church, you enjoined upon them that they humbly receive and do penance for the things committed, and thus perhaps it would please God, who was the institutor and author of marriage, that they consummate the work of marriage. After several terms granted to them by you for cohabiting with one another, returning to your presence, with consonant voice they said that they could not commingle carnally. On account of this, with their consent you considered that a case of this kind should be left to apostolic judgment. Therefore, again through apostolic writings we order you that, if it is so and it is established to you that the aforesaid man and woman lived together for a continuous three years within the aforesaid years, and they affirm by oath with seven relatives as oath-helpers that they could not commingle carnally, you pronounce a sentence of separation between them.

> Si uxor dicit, virum, cui cohabitavit per triennium, non habere potentiam coeundi, eis hoc iurantibus cum septima manu propinquorum, matrimonium separatur. H. d. inhaerendo verbis literae.
>
> Honorius III.
>
> Literae vestrae nobis exhibitae continebant, quod, quum causa matrimonii, quae inter M. mulierem et A. eius virum Atrebatensis dioecesis vertitur, vobis fuisset a bonae memoriae Innocentio Papa praedecessore nostro commissa, dicta M. proposuit, coram vobis, quod, quum iam octo annis elapsis dicto A. fuisset matrimonialiter copulata, et diu cohabitasset eidem, nunquam tamen, licet esset viripotens, ab eo cognita fuerat, sed adhuc integra permanebat, eo, quod praedictus vir eius non habebat potentiam coeundi; quare petebat, inter eos divortium celebrari. Praedictus vero A. nihilominus fatebatur, quod illam nunquam cognoverat, licet ad eius obsequium se facilem exhibuerit et paratam, sed tamen se habere potentiam cognoscendi alias asserebat. Vos vero, ne id forte confiterentur in fraudem, a matronis bonae opinionis, fide dignis ac expertis in opere nuptiali, dictam fecistis inspici mulierem, quae perhibuerunt testimonium, ipsam adhuc virginem permanere. Postmodum per presbyterum, de cuius parochia vir praedictus exstitit, fecistis diligenter inquiri, utrum vir ipse aliquam cognovisset, nec per inquisitionem ipsam vobis constare potuit, aliquam esse carnaliter cognitam ab eodem. Muliere autem instanter requirente divortium, et dicente, quod mater esse volebat, et filios procreare, proponente vero viro, quod paratus erat stare consilio et voluntati ecclesiae, iniunxistis eisdem, ut humiliter reciperent et agerent poenitentiam de commissis, et sic forte placeret Deo, qui matrimonii fuit institutor et auctor, ut opus matrimonii consummarent; qui post plures terminos, ad commanendum sibi a vobis indultos, ad vestram reversi praesentiam, consona voce dixerunt, quod non poterant carnaliter commisceri. Propter quod de ipsorum consensu causam huiusmodi apostolico duxistis iudicio relinquendam. Quocirca vobis iterato per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si ita est, et constiterit vobis, praefatum virum et mulierem infra praedictos annos per continuum triennium insimul habitasse, ipsis cum septima propinquorum manu firmantibus iuramento, se commisceri carnaliter nequivisse, proferatis divortii sententiam inter eos.

Title XVI: On Marriage Contracted against an Interdict of the Church

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A marriage made or contracted against an interdict of the Church or a judge is not dissolved for this reason alone; nevertheless, penance is imposed upon those contracting thus, and they are separated until the cause of the interdict is heard. This in effect is what this entire title says.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Padua.

The letters which your fraternity sent to us expressly declare that, when a certain parishioner of yours, in the presence and with the consent of his sister, who was already marriageable, had affirmed by a furnished oath that he would give her to a certain man as wife, and she, not many days later, voluntarily receiving the gifts and presents of the man according to the custom of the land, had often embraced him as her own husband, at last, after her brother died, she permitted herself to be betrothed by her husband's own brother, and falsely avers that she had been known by him. And when you publicly prohibited her from joining herself to either of them or to anyone else, she, having spurned your admonitions, did not fear to marry another. Finally, when you had summoned both before you and had commanded the woman to return to her mother's house, she appealed to our hearing. But because it lies upon our solicitude to correct the transgressions and enormities of others and to recall them to the measure and form of rectitude, through apostolic writings we order your fraternity that, if it is so, as was narrated above, lest your mandate appear to be contemptible, you compel the aforesaid woman to return to her mother's house with every appeal and excuse ceasing; and, after worthy penance for so great a transgression has been imposed upon her, when she has remained in her mother's house for a month, permit her to return to the third man and to be lawfully joined to him.

DE MATRIMONIO CONTRACTO CONTRA INTERDICTUM ECCLESIAE.

Matrimonium, contra interdictum ecclesiae vel iudicis factum seu contractum, propter hoc solum non dirimitur, imponitur tamen poenitentia sic contrahentibus, et separantur, donec cognoscatur de causa interdicti. H. d. in effectu totus iste titulus.

Alexander III. Paduano Episcopo.

Literae, quas tua nobis fraternitas destinavit, expresse declarant, quod, quum quidam parochianus tuus sororem suam iam nubilem cuidam se daturum in uxorem, ea praesente et consentiente, praestito iuramento firmasset, et illa, non post multos dies dona et munera viri secundum morem terrae sponte suscipiens, ipsum tanquam proprium virum saepe amplexata fuisset, tandem mortuo fratre a proprio viri sui fratre se desponsari permisit, et, quod ab illo cognita fuisset, mendaciter asseverat. Quumque ei prohibuisses publice, ne cui illorum vel alicui se copularet: ipsa, spretis monitis tuis, alii nubere non expavit. Demum quum utrumque ante te convocasses, et mulieri praecepisses, ut ad domum matris rediret, ipsa ad nostram audientiam appellavit. Verum quoniam sollicitudini nostrae incumbit excessus et enormitates aliorum corrigere, et ad modum et ad formam rectitudinis revocare, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, ut superius est enarratum, praefatam mulierem, ne mandatum tuum contemptibile esse videatur, ad domum matris omni appellatione et excusatione cessante redire compellas, et, imposita sibi de tanto excessu poenitentia condigna, postquam ea in domo materna per mensem steterit, ad tertium reverti permittas, et legitime sibi coniungi.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Betrothals of the future, even when contracted with one woman against an interdict of the Church, do not have the power to dissolve a marriage afterward contracted with another.

The same, to the Bishops of Worcester and Baronia.

From the letters of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Canterbury, legate of the Apostolic See, it came to us that, when G. of Saint-Léger had betrothed his absent daughter M. to a certain young man named R., afterward, at the procuring of certain blood relatives of the woman herself, the aforementioned R. contracted marriage with her while she was present through words of the present tense, as is said; faith being corporally furnished on each side that henceforth the man would conduct himself toward the woman as toward a lawful wife, and she would reverently obey him without contradiction as her lawful husband; and nothing was lacking except the solemnity to be celebrated in the face of the Church, which on account of the season of Lent could not then be carried into effect. Afterward, when a suspicion arose that the aforesaid R. desired to pass to other vows, the case was brought to the examination of the aforementioned archbishop, who under threat of anathema prohibited him, as we received from his letters, from passing to second vows before the aforesaid matter was fully established. But he, having contemned the aforesaid prohibition, solemnly joined to himself in the face of the Church the daughter of V., named Matilda, as wife. But afterward, when the two women and the man had been constituted before the archbishop, the aforesaid R. publicly confessed that he had contracted marriage with Maria, as was said above, and afterward, seduced by the depraved suggestion of certain persons, had taken the other, namely Matilda. But Maria steadfastly asserted that her father had not moved the complaint from her will, adding that between her and the aforesaid R. no obligation had intervened except faith alone concerning contracting marriage; because he had not observed it, she was by no means bound to observe it, and therefore, because he was leaving her whom he had taken second. But when she petitioned that the aforesaid R. be restored to her as her own husband, and the archbishop wished to hear the first marriage, especially because the women were said to touch one another by consanguinity, and through this the vice of both adultery and incest was feared, the said M. emitted the voice of appeal to the Apostolic See and fixed the feast of the Circumcision just passed as the term for the appeal. Deferring to her appeal, the archbishop more strictly interdicted the same Maria, under peril of her soul and threat of excommunication, from marrying anyone until the case itself received its due end before us or before judges delegated by the Apostolic See. Nevertheless, trusting in the remedy of appeal, she married a certain other man named V. nevertheless. And, cited concerning this before the archbishop, she was unwilling to appear on account of the appeal which she had objected. Therefore, since it did not appear to us that the matter was to be concluded while the parties were absent, committing it to your experience, in which we fully confide, by authority of the present letters We order that, after the parties have been summoned before your presence, you investigate the truth more diligently and, if nothing is established which impedes except the consent of the future which is asserted to have preceded between the aforesaid R. and M., with the obstacle of appeal removed you adjudge that the second marriages are to be inviolably observed. For although they ought not to have passed to second vows against the interdict of the Church, nevertheless it is not fitting that on account of this alone the sacrament of marriage be dissolved. Nevertheless, other penance will have to be imposed upon them because they did this against the prohibition of the Church. [Given on the Nones of February.]

> Sponsalia de futuro, cum una etiam contra interdictum ecclesiae contracta, non habent dirimere matrimonium, postea contractum cum alia.
>
> Idem Vigoriensi et Baronensi Episcopis.
>
> Ex literis venerabilis fratris nostri Cantuariensis archiepiscopi apostolicae sedis legati ad nos pervenit, quod, quum G. de sancto Leodegario M. filiam suam absentem cuidam iuveni, R. nomine, desponsasset, postmodum, quibusdam ipsius mulieris consanguineis procurantibus, memoratus R. cum ea praesente per verba praesentis temporis contraxit, sicut dicitur, matrimonium; fide hinc inde corporaliter praestita, quod vir mulierem sicut uxorem legitimam de cetero exhiberet, et ipsa reverenter ei sine contradictione sicut viro legitimo obediret, nihilque defuit, nisi solennitas in facie ecclesiae celebranda, quae propter tempus quadragesimae tunc non potuit effectui mancipari. Postea orta suspicione, quod praefatus R. ad alia desideraret vota transire, ad examen fuit iam dicti archiepiscopi causa perlata, qui sub anathematis interminatione prohibuit, sicut ex literis ipsius accepimus, ne, antequam de praescripto negotio plene constaret, vir ad secunda vota transiret. Sed ipse, praescripta prohibitione contempta, filiam V. Matildam nomine in facie ecclesiae sibi solenniter copulavit uxorem. Postmodum vero duabus mulieribus et viro coram archiepiscopo constitutis, praefatus R. publice confessus est, se cum Maria, sicut superius dictum est, matrimonium contraxisse, et aliam, scilicet Matildam, prava quorundam suggestione seductum postmodum accepisse. Maria vero constanter asseruit, quod pater eius non moverat de voluntate eius querelam, adiiciens, quod inter ipsam et praefatum R., excepta sola fide de contrahendo matrimonio, nulla obligatio intercesserat, quam, quia ipse non servaverat, servare minime tenebatur, et ideo, quia eam, quam secundo acceperat, relinquebat. Quum autem praefatum R. illa tanquam proprium virum restitui postularet, et archiepiscopus vellet de matrimonio primo cognoscere, ob id maxime, quia mulieres dicebantur sese consanguinitate contingere, ac per hoc tam adulterii quam incestus vitium timebatur, dicta M. ad sedem apostolicam appellationis vocem emisit, et festum circumcisionis proxime praeteritum terminum appellationi praefixit. Cuius appellationi archiepiscopus deferens, eidem Mariae sub periculo animae et excommunicationis interminatione districtius interdixit, ne cui nuberet, donec causa ipsa coram nobis, vel coram delegatis ab apostolica sede iudicibus finem debitum sortiretur. Ipsa tamen, de remedio appellationis confisa, cuidam alii, V. nomine, nihilominus nupsit. Et super hoc citata coram archiepiscopo noluit propter appellationem, quam obiecerat, apparere. Quum igitur absentibus partibus non videretur nobis negotium finiendum, ipsum experientiae vestrae, de qua plene confidimus, committentes, praesentium auctoritate Mandamus, quatenus, partibus ante vestram praesentiam convocatis, inquiratis diligentius veritatem, et, si nihil constiterit, quod impediat, praeter consensum de futuro, qui inter praefatos R. et M. asseritur praecessisse, secunda matrimonia inviolabiliter observanda sublato appellationis obstaculo iudicetis. Licet enim contra interdictum ecclesiae ad secunda vota transire non debuerit, non est tamen conveniens, ut ob id solum sacramentum coniugii dissolvatur. Alia tamen poenitentia eis debebit imponi, quia contra prohibitionem ecclesiae hoc fecerunt. [Dat. Non. Febr.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If those who were said to be blood relatives contracted against the command of a judge, they ought to be separated until the case is heard.

The same, to the Bishop of Padua.

Concerning the woman—(And below: [Compare chapter 6, On Betrothals, IV. 1.]) But those who are prohibited from being joined on account of consanguinity and afterward receive one another contrary to the interdict of the Church you ought to subject to excommunication until they are separated for so long as it takes to be lawfully ascertained whether their marriage can and ought by law to stand.

> Si hi, qui dicebantur consanguinei, contraxerunt contra praeceptum iudicis, debent separari, donec de causa cognoscatur.
>
> Idem Paduano Episcopo.
>
> De muliere (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de spons. IV. 1.]) Illos autem, qui pro consanguinitate prohibentur coniungi, et post contra interdictum ecclesiae se receperint, excommunicationi debes subiicere, donec tamdiu separentur, quousque legitime cognoscatur, utrum eorum matrimonium possit et debeat de iure stare.

Title XVII: Which Children Are Legitimate

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A natural child, begotten of an unmarried man and an unmarried woman, is legitimated by the subsequent marriage of the parents, even as regards inheritance.

Alexander III.

H., bearer of the present letters, complained to us that, when he took as wife a certain woman, the niece of R., the aforesaid R., the woman's paternal uncle, endeavors to disinherit her because she was born before the betrothal of her mother, although afterward, as is said, the father of the aforesaid woman took her mother as wife. Therefore, by commanding through apostolic writings we order your fraternity that, if it is so, notwithstanding any contradiction or appeal, you adjudge her to be legitimate, prohibiting the aforesaid R. on our part and yours from bringing molestation or burden upon the often-mentioned woman and her heirs concerning the paternal inheritance on this occasion. But if he presumes to act contrary to this, strike him with ecclesiastical severity with the remedy of appeal removed.

> QUI FILII SINT LEGITIMI.
>
> Naturalis, ex soluto genitus et soluta, legitimatur per subsequens parentum coniugium, etiam quoad hereditatem.
>
> Alexander III.
>
> Conquestus est nobis H. lator praesentium, quod, quum quandam mulierem neptem R. in uxorem acceperit, praefatus R. patruus mulieris ipsam exheredare conatur eo, quod ante desponsationem matris suae nata fuerit, licet postea, prout dicitur, pater mulieris praefatae matrem ipsius acceperit in uxorem. Ideoque fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, nullius contradictione vel appellatione obstante, eam legitimam esse iudicetis, praedicto R. ex nostra et vestra parte inhibentes, ne saepe dictae mulieri et heredibus suis hac occasione super hereditate paterna molestiam inferat vel gravamen. Si autem contra hoc venire praesumpserit, eum sublato appellationis remedio severitate ecclesiastica percellatis.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: When a marriage contracted in the face of the Church is separated, children begotten or conceived before the sentence are legitimate.

The same.

Since a sentence of separation was canonically rendered between I. Vetus, your fellow citizen, and the woman T., their children, who were born before the sentence itself, and he who was then conceived, ought not to sustain loss from this, since their parents are known to have publicly contracted marriage with each other without contradiction of the Church. Therefore we decree that their children whom they had before the separation, and those who had been conceived before the sentence was rendered, are to be held no less legitimate, and that they succeed to the paternal goods by hereditary right and are nourished from the resources of their parents. Therefore, through apostolic writings we order your whole body that you not prohibit the aforesaid children of the aforementioned I. and the aforesaid woman from succeeding to the paternal goods and being nourished from them, nor permit molestation or burdens to be brought upon them by anyone on the occasion of the separation between their parents.

> Separato matrimonio in facie ecclesiae contracto, filii, geniti vel concepti ante sententiam, sunt legitimi.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum inter I. Veterem concivem vestrum et T. mulierem divortii sententia canonice sit prolata, filii eorum, qui ante sententiam ipsam nati fuerunt, et ille, qui tunc conceptus erat, non debent exinde sustinere iacturam, quum parentes eorum publice et sine contradictione ecclesiae matrimonium inter se contraxisse noscantur. Ideoque sancimus, ut filii eorum, quos ipsi ante divortium habuerunt, et qui concepti fuerant ante latam sententiam, non minus habeantur legitimi, et quod in bona paterna hereditario iure succedant, et de parentum facultatibus nutriantur. Quocirca universitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praefatos filios memorati I. et praedictae mulieris succedere in bona paterna, et exinde nutriri non prohibeatis, nec occasione divortii inter parentes eorum eis a quoquam molestiam vel gravamina sustineatis inferri.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One stands by the word of a man and woman who deny that someone is their son, unless the contrary is proved by indications and witnesses.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rouen.

Your letters transmitted to us contained that, when N., your citizen, had nourished a certain boy until youth, his wife M., then not betrothed to him, cohabiting with him, afterward, as is said, he lawfully betrothed her and received sons from her. When these sought the paternal inheritance, the aforesaid young man contradicted them, conducting himself as son and heir, although he was called a bastard by the neighborhood, which believed him to be their son. But the aforesaid N. and his wife Matilda denied that the aforesaid young man was their bastard or lawful son, but said that they had nourished him from a regard for piety. But when the question had been moved before you, and the aforesaid young man was bound with the bond of excommunication because he was unwilling to stand by the law, you wished to consult us as to what you ought to do concerning this. Concerning this, therefore, We respond thus to your consultation: in such a case one must stand by the word of the man and woman unless it is established to you by certain indications and witnesses that the aforementioned young man is their son.

> Statur verbo viri et mulieris, qui negant aliquem filium, nisi indiciis et testibus probetur contrarium.
>
> Idem Rothomagensi Archiepiscopo.

Transmissae nobis tuae literae continebant, quod, quum N. civis tuus usque ad iuventutem quendam puerum nutrivisset, uxore sua M. tunc non desponsata sibi cohabitante, postmodum ipsam, sicut dicitur, legitime desponsavit, et filios sustulit ex eadem. Quibus paternam hereditatem petentibus, praedictus iuvenis contradicit, gerens se filium et heredem, quamvis a vicinia, quae ipsum filium eorum esse credebat, spurius diceretur. Praedicti vero N. et uxor eius Matilda praefatum iuvenem spurium suum aut legitimum filium esse negabant, sed dicebant, quod eum pietatis intuitu nutrivissent. Quum autem quaestio coram te mota esset, et praedictus iuvenis pro eo, quod iuri stare nolebat, vinculo sit excommunicationis adstrictus, quid de hoc agere debeas, nos consulere voluisti. Super hoc itaque Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod in tali casu standum est verbo viri et mulieris, nisi certis indiciis et testibus tibi constiterit, esse filium iuvenem memoratum.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The offspring whom a wife conceived from adultery while her husband was living is illegitimate, whether she remains with the adulterer or with the husband.

The same, to the Bishops of Exeter and Winchester and the Abbot of Hereford.

The cause which—(And below: Compare chapter 17, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.) If, after the parties have been summoned before your presence, it is lawfully established to you that the often-mentioned Agatha was born of the woman Anelina during the time of Alan, her husband, while she was remaining with him as with her husband, or while R., the father of the said Agatha, publicly kept A. herself while she still had a husband, adjudge that she was not the lawful daughter of the same R., because she could not be a wife who, staining the bed of her husband, presumed [both] to be joined and to cohabit with another while he lived. Moreover, etc. (Compare chapter 3, On Fraud and Contumacy, II. 14.)

Illegitima proles est, quam viro vivente uxor ex adulterio concepit, sive cum adultero sive cum viro moretur.

Idem Exoniensi et Vintoniensi Episcopis, et Abbati Herfordensi.

Causam, quae (Et infra: cf. c. 17. de off. iud. del. I. 29.) Si, partibus ante praesentiam vestram convocatis, legitime vobis constiterit, quod saepe dicta Agatha de Anelina muliere, tempore Alani viri sui, ipsa cum eo tanquam cum viro suo morante, vel R. patre dictae Agathae, ipsam A. adhuc habente virum, publice tenente, nata fuit, eam non fuisse legitimam eiusdem R. filiam iudicetis, quia non potuit esse uxor, quae viri sui torum maculans, [et] alii, dum ille viveret, copulari et cohabitare praesumpsit. Ceterum etc. (cf. c. 3. de dol. et cont. II. 14.)

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A question of birth, opposed to one seeking an inheritance before a secular judge, is to be referred to an ecclesiastical judge. This is what it says, and the text is very noteworthy and capable of being cited.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter and the Abbot of Hereford.

R., the bearer of the present letters, coming to our presence not without great danger to his body, set forth to us in his complaint that, although his grandfather had had two wives, from one of whom his father proceeded, while from the other he begot Hugh, his paternal uncle, the same [Hugh] violently detains forty acres of land which fell to him and to the father of the same R., and is unwilling to furnish to the same R., who ought to succeed to the paternal goods, the portion due. But when the same R. had drawn H. into a lawsuit before a secular judge concerning the inheritance of the grandfather of the same R., the father of the said H., he presumed to object to him that his father had not been born of a lawful marriage, and that therefore he could claim nothing [for himself] from the inheritance of his late grandfather by right of succession. But finally, when the question of birth had for a long time been treated before our venerable brother the Bishop of Norwich, an appeal was made to our hearing. But, when he came, the other party disdained to present himself to us either in person or through another. Therefore, being unwilling for the case itself to be prolonged any further, committing it to your experience, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, after summoning both parties before your presence and more fully hearing and considering the arguments on each side, you terminate the case concerning the question of the birth of the father of the same R. within two months after the receipt of these letters, with the obstacle of appeal removed. But if within two months the aforesaid H. cannot lawfully prove what he objected to him concerning the paternal inheritance, then intimate to the secular lord, under whose judgment the case concerning the inheritance is being conducted, that on account of the question of birth he is not to omit to hear and decide the case concerning the inheritance.

> Quaestio nativitatis, opposita petenti hereditatem coram iudice saeculari, est ad ecclesiasticum iudicem transmittenda. H. d. et est textus multum notabilis et allegabilis.
>
> Idem Exoniensi Episcopo et Abbati Herfordensi.
>
> Lator praesentium R., non sine multo discrimine sui corporis ad nostram accedens praesentiam, sua nobis conquestione proposuit, quod, quum avus suus uxores duas habuerit, de quarum una eius pater processit, de altera Hug. patruum suum sustulit, idem [Hug.] XL. acras terrae, quae ipsum et patrem eiusdem R. contigerunt, per violentiam detinet, nec eidem R., qui succedere in bonis paternis debet, debitam partem vult exhibere. Quum autem idem R. H. coram saeculari iudice super hereditate avi eiusdem R. patris dicti H. traxisset in causam, ille sibi praesumpsit obiicere, quod pater eius non fuit de legitimo matrimonio natus, et ideo de hereditate quondam avi sui nihil posset [sibi] iure successorio vendicare. Tandem vero, quum super quaestione nativitatis coram venerabili fratre nostro Norvicensi episcopo diu tractatum fuisset, ad nostram exstitit audientiam appellatum. Sed, eo veniente, altera pars per se vel per alium suam nobis exhibere praesentiam contempsit. Ideoque, nolentes causam ipsam diutius protrahi, eam experientiae vestrae committentes, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus utramque partem ante vestram praesentiam convocetis, et, rationibus hinc inde plenius auditis et cognitis, ipsam causam super quaestione nativitatis patris eiusdem R. infra duos menses post harum susceptionem literarum sublato appellationis obstaculo terminetis. Si vero infra duos menses praefatus H. non poterit probare legitime quod ei de paterna hereditate obiecit, extunc saeculari domino, sub cuius iudicio de hereditate causa vertitur intimetis, ut pro quaestione nativitatis non dimittat, quin causam super hereditate audiat et decidat.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Natural children are legitimated through a subsequent marriage of their parents, but spurious children are not. This is what it says, by adhering to the words of the letter; and it is a famous chapter and is cited daily in both forums.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

So great is the force of marriage that those who were begotten beforehand are held legitimate after the marriage has been contracted. But if a man, while his wife is living, has known another woman and has received offspring from her, although after the death of his wife he marries the same woman, the son will nevertheless be spurious and is to be repelled from the inheritance, especially if either of them contrived anything toward the death of the prior wife, since they could not contract a lawful marriage with one another.

> Naturales legitimantur per subsequens parentum coniugium, spurii vero non. H. d. inhaerendo verbis literae, et est capitulum famosum, et quotidie allegatur in utroque foro.
>
> Idem Exoniensi Episcopo.
>
> Tanta est vis matrimonii, ut qui antea sunt geniti post contractum matrimonium legitimi habeantur. Si autem vir vivente uxore sua aliam cognoverit, et ex ea prolem susceperit, licet post mortem uxoris eandem duxerit, nihilominus spurius erit filius, et ab hereditate repellendus; praesertim si in mortem uxoris prioris alteruter eorum aliquid fuerit machinatus, quoniam matrimonium legitimum inter se contrahere non potuerunt.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: The Church does not take cognizance of a civil case between laymen; it does take cognizance, however, of whether someone was born of a lawful marriage.

The same, to the Bishops of London and Worcester.

We some time ago committed to you for termination the case which is known to be conducted between R. and F. concerning the fact that the mother of the already-mentioned R. is said not to have been born of a lawful marriage. But because in our letters we caused it to be inserted that, before entry into the principal case, you were to cause the often-mentioned R. to be restored, with appeal ceasing, to possession of [their] entirety, of which he was possessor when his grandfather took up the journey of setting out for Jerusalem, if he had been despoiled of that possession through violence: we, considering that it pertains to the king, not to the Church, to judge concerning such possessions, lest we seem to derogate from the right and dignity of our dearest son in Christ Henry, king [and prince] of the English, who, as we have received, was moved and disturbed because we wrote concerning the possessions, since he asserts that judgment over them pertains to himself, will and, by apostolic writings, command your fraternity that, leaving judgment over the possessions to the king, you take fuller cognizance of the principal case, namely whether the mother of the aforesaid R. was born of a lawful marriage, and terminate a case of this kind according to the tenor of our other letters, with appeal removed; although it seems incongruous that the marriage of the mother of the aforesaid R. should be attacked, which, as is said, was not attacked while she was living.

> De causa civili inter laicos non cognoscit ecclesia; cognoscit tamen, an quis sit de legitimo matrimonio natus.
>
> Idem Londonensi et Vigoriensi Episcopis.
>
> Causam, quae inter R. et F. super eo, quod mater iam dicti R. dicitur non fuisse de legitimo matrimonio nata, agitari dignoscitur, vobis iam pridem commisimus terminandam. Verum quia in literis nostris inseri fecimus, ut saepe fato R. possessionem [eorum] omnium, quorum possessor exstitit, quando avus suus proficiscendi Hierosolymam iter arripuit, ante principalis causae ingressum faceretis appellatione cessante restitui, si eadem possessione fuisset per violentiam spoliatus: nos attendentes, quod ad regem pertinet, non ad ecclesiam de talibus possessionibus iudicare, ne videamur iuri et dignitati carissimi in Christo filii nostri Henrici regis, Anglorum [principis], detrahere, qui, sicut accepimus, motus est et turbatus, quod de possessionibus scripsimus, quum ipsarum iudicium ad se asserit pertinere, volumus et fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus regi possessionum iudicium relinquentes, de causa principali, videlicet utrum mater praedicti R. de legitimo sit matrimonio nata, plenius cognoscatis, et causam huiusmodi secundum aliarum literarum nostrarum tenorem appellatione remota terminetis; licet incongruum videatur, ut matrimonium genetricis praefati R. impetatur, quod ea vivente non fuit, ut dicitur, impetitum.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If a woman, separated from the first man by a judgment of the Church, contracts with a second while the first is living, the offspring whom she received from the second will be legitimate.

The same, to the Bishop and Archdeacon of Vicenza.

It has been brought to our hearing that, when H., son of the late Lazarus, had crossed to the regions of Constantinople and, remaining there for ten years and more, did not return to I., his wife, she lodged a complaint against him before I., formerly Bishop of Vicenza, of good memory, and alleged likewise that she could not wait for him any longer. But the bishop, as a provident and discreet man, commanded the parents of the aforesaid man to send for him and recall him to his own country. And when, after a long space of time had elapsed, the aforesaid man did not return to his own country, the bishop, in the sight of the Church and after hearing the arguments of the woman, promulgated a sentence of separation between them and granted the woman full faculty to marry another man. Therefore, because the truth of this matter is not established to us, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you diligently investigate the matter itself, and, if it is established to you that the bishop pronounced a sentence of separation between them, you adjudge legitimate her sons whom she begot of the other man, to union with whom she passed by authority of the aforesaid bishop without question and contradiction by the Church, not permitting them to be excluded from the inheritance on this occasion. And if anyone wishes to strive against this, by apostolic authority you are to impose perpetual silence upon him.

Si mulier, per iudicium ecclesiae separata a primo, vivente illo contrahit cum secundo, legitima erit proles, quam ex illo suscepit.

Idem Episcopo et Archidiacono Vincentino.

Perlatum est ad audientiam nostram, quod, quum H. filius quondam Lazari, ad partes Constantinopolitanas transisset, et ibi moram per decennium et amplius faciens, ad I. uxorem suam non rediens, ipsa apud bonae memoriae I. quondam Vincentinum episcopum adversus eum querelam deposuit, et quod eum non posset diutius exspectare, nihilominus allegavit. Episcopus vero, sicut vir providus et discretus, parentibus praedicti viri mandavit, ut pro eo mitterent, et ipsum ad propria revocarent. Quumque, elapso longi temporis spatio, vir praedictus non remearet ad propria, episcopus in conspectu ecclesiae, auditis rationibus mulieris, inter eos sententiam divortii promulgavit, et mulieri, ut alium virum duceret, plenariam facultatem indulsit. Ideoque quia huius rei veritas nobis non constat, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus rem ipsam diligenter investigetis, et, si vobis constiterit, quod episcopus inter eos sententiam divortii tulerit, filios eius, quos sustulit de alio, ad cuius copulam auctoritate praedicti episcopi sine quaestione et contradictione ecclesiae migravit, legitimos iudicetis, eos hac occasione ab hereditate non patientes excludi. Et si quis contra hoc niti voluerit, ei auctoritate apostolica silentium penitus imponatis.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Children born of a clandestine marriage approved by the Church are legitimate. This is what it says, by adhering to the letter.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

What to us—(And below: [Compare chapter 2, On Clandestine Betrothals, IV. 3.]) But if any have been begotten of a clandestine marriage afterward approved and held ratified by the Church, adjudge them legitimate children and heirs.

> Filii, nati ex matrimonio clandestino per ecclesiam approbato, sunt legitimi. H. d. inhaerendo literae.
>
> Idem Belvacensi Episcopo.
>
> Quod nobis (Et infra: [cf. c. 2. de cland. desp. IV. 3.]) Si qui autem de clandestino matrimonio, postmodum ab ecclesia comprobato et rato habito, generati fuerint, eos legitimos iudices filios et heredes.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Those born of a marriage contracted contrary to the justice of public propriety are illegitimate and are to be excluded from the inheritance of their parents. And hold this case in mind, because it often happens through ignorance.

Celestine III, to the Archbishop of York.

When it was reported to us—(And below:) We respond in this manner to your fraternity: because the justice of public propriety prohibited it, marriage could not be contracted between them, and the marriage contracted ought to have been separated; and through this, since the children are excused neither by permission of the Church nor by paternal ignorance, they do not seem in any respect to be admitted to the succession of the paternal goods.

> Nati ex matrimonio, contracto contra publicae honestatis iustitiam, illegitimi sunt, et ab hereditate parentum excludendi. Et tene menti hunc casum, quia saepe per ignorantiam accidit.
>
> Coelestinus III. Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Referente nobis (Et infra:) Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, publicae honestatis iustitia prohibente, matrimonium inter eos contrahi non potuit, et contractum debuit separari, ac per hoc, quum filii nec per ecclesiae permissionem, nec per paternam ignorantiam excusentur, ad successionem bonorum paternorum non videntur aliquatenus admittendi.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: To prove offspring illegitimate, it does not suffice to prove an impediment to the marriage, if the marriage was contracted in the face of the Church.

The same.

It has indeed come to us from the representation of the widow L. that, although a marriage had been lawfully celebrated between G., her father, and A., her mother, and they remained peaceably for as long as they lived, after their death certain persons, asserting that she had been received from an unlawful marriage, attempt to remove her from the paternal inheritance as illegitimate. Therefore, by apostolic writings, we command your discretion that, if it is so, by our authority you declare the said widow legitimate.

Ad docendum prolem illegitimam non sufficit probare impedimentum matrimonii, si fuit in facie ecclesiae contractum.

Idem.

Pervenit sane ad nos ex insinuatione L. viduae, quod, quum inter G. patrem suum, et A. matrem illius matrimonium fuisset legitime celebratum, et, quamdiu vixerunt, quiete permanserunt, post illorum decessum quidam asserentes, eam de non legitimo matrimonio fuisse susceptam, a paterna hereditate tanquam illegitimam amovere conantur. Mandamus itaque discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta, quatenus, si est ita, dictam viduam auctoritate nostra legitimam nuncietis.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: One stands by the statement of witnesses who prove someone legitimate, although the report of the neighborhood and the treatment by the parents holds the contrary.

Innocent III.

Through your letters you intimated to us that R., having received offspring from a certain woman whom, according to the opinion of the greater part of the neighborhood, he kept as a concubine, afterward married one woman and, when she had died, another; and she from whom he had received offspring joined another man to herself. But in the course of time the same R., in the presence of many, affirmed by his own oath that he had first pledged as wife the woman whom he had seemed to keep as a concubine before he had begotten a son of her; and afterward, when he had lived for six years and more, while he was at the point of death, instituting in his testament as heir the one whom he had received from her, he called him his legitimate son. But when it had been committed to your inquiry and decision whether the son so received was a legitimate heir of R. himself and was to be admitted to his patrimony, you—besides the fact that from a certain decretal of Pope Alexander, our predecessor of good memory, you believed that the word of the man and woman was to be stood by concerning this—after receiving witnesses produced by the son of the same R., through whom he lawfully proved that the aforesaid R. had pledged his mother in the chapel of Saint Sergius, adjudged him to be the legitimate heir of R. himself. But we, considering that what is done in truth is of greater weight than what is conceived in pretense, although the already-mentioned R., when, having dismissed her whom he had kept as a concubine, he passed to other vows, seems by that very deed to have denied the marriage that had been celebrated between them, nevertheless, because the betrothal proved through lawful witnesses shows that they had been joined matrimonially, whether the betrothal itself was of the present, so that through lawful consent expressed by words of the present the bond of marriage was celebrated between them, or was through words of the future followed by carnal union, relying not so much on the decretal of our said predecessor, which speaks in a dissimilar case, as on the proofs introduced, we respond that you proceeded lawfully, confirming your sentence by apostolic authority, and we fortify it by the protection of the present writing, by apostolic authority enjoining upon you by the present letters that, a warning having been premised, through ecclesiastical censure you cause the sentence itself to be inviolably observed. [Given at Rieti, on the third day before the Nones of August, 1198.]

Statur dicto testium, qui probant aliquem legitimum, licet fama viciniae et tractatus parentum habeat contrarium.

Innocentius III.

Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod R. ex muliere quadam, quam secundum opinionem maioris partis viciniae in concubinam habebat, prole suscepta, quandam post, et aliam, ea defuncta, duxit in uxorem, et ea, de qua prolem susceperat, virum sibi alium copulavit. Processu vero temporis idem R. in praesentia multorum firmavit proprio iuramento, quod eam, quam habere visus fuerat concubinam, prius affidaverat in uxorem, quam ex ea filium genuisset, et postea, quum per sex annos et ultra vixisset, dum ageret in extremis, eum, quem ex ea susceperat, in testamento heredem instituens, legitimum filium appellavit. Quum autem tuae inquisitioni et decisioni fuisset commissum, an filius sic susceptus legitimus esset heres ipsius R. et ad eius patrimonium admittendus, tu praeter id, quod ex quadam decretali bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae praedecessoris nostri standum esse super hoc verbo viri et mulieris credebas, receptis testibus, a filio eiusdem R. productis, quibus legitime comprobavit, praedictum R. matrem suam in capella sancti Sergii affidasse, eum ipsius R. heredem esse legitimum iudicasti. Nos autem attendentes, quod plus est quod in veritate agitur, quam quod simulate concipitur, licet iam dictus R., quum, ea dimissa, quam ut concubinam habuerat, ad alia vota transiverit, videatur ex ipso facto matrimonium, quod inter eos celebratum fuerat, denegasse, quia tamen desponsatio, per testes legitimos comprobata, eos matrimonialiter fuisse coniunctos ostendit, sive desponsatio ipsa fuerit de praesenti, ut per consensum legitimum, per verba de praesenti expressum, copula matrimonii inter eos fuerit celebrata, sive per verba de futuro, carnali copula subsecuta, non tam decretali dicti praedecessoris nostri, quae in casu dissimili loquitur, quam inductis probationibus innitentes, te processisse legitime respondemus, sententiam tuam auctoritate apostolica confirmantes, et praesentis scripti patrocinio communimus auctoritate apostolica tibi praesentium iniungentes ut sententiam ipsam facias monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam inviolabiliter observari. [Dat. Reate III. Non. Aug. 1198.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: In the lands of the Church the Pope can freely legitimate illegitimate persons, but in the lands of others he cannot, unless for very arduous causes, or unless in spiritual matters; then, however, he is understood indirectly and by a certain consequence to legitimate them also with respect to temporal matters. Yet this last point is not without scruple. This is what it says according to the understanding that pleases Panormitanus, and it is a difficult and very famous chapter.

The same, to the nobleman G. of Montpellier.

Through our venerable brother the Archbishop of Arles, coming to the Apostolic See, your humility supplicated us that we should deign to adorn your sons with the title of legitimation, so that the objection of their birth would not harm them so as to prevent them from succeeding you. That the Apostolic See has full power concerning this, however, appears from the fact that, after consideration of various causes, it has dispensed with certain persons begotten less than legitimately—not only natural children, but also adulterine children—thus legitimating them for spiritual acts so that they can be promoted as bishops. From this it is believed more likely and reckoned more probable that it is able to legitimate them for secular acts, especially if besides the Roman Pontiffs they recognize among men no other superior who has the power of legitimating; because, since greater providence as well as authority and fitness is required in spiritual matters, what is granted in the greater seems to be lawful also in the lesser. This also seems capable of being proved through a similar case, since by the very fact that someone is raised to the summit of episcopal dignity, he is exempted from paternal power. Moreover, even if a mere bishop knowingly ordained another's slave as a priest, although the ordainer would be bound to make satisfaction to the master according to the canonical form, the ordained man would nevertheless escape the yoke of servitude. Indeed, it would seem monstrous that one who was made legitimate for spiritual actions should remain illegitimate with respect to secular acts. Hence, when a dispensation is made in spiritual matters, consequently a dispensation in temporal matters is understood. The Apostolic See, however, can freely effect this in the patrimony of blessed Peter, in which it both exercises the authority of the Supreme Pontiff and executes the power of the supreme prince. Therefore, since from these things the authority of legitimating seemed to reside with the Roman Church not only in spiritual matters but also in temporal matters, the same archbishop was humbly requesting on your behalf that we grant your sons grace concerning this, on account of your merits and those of your progenitors, who have always persisted in devotion to the Apostolic See. But he seemed to draw greater boldness for requesting from the fact that he was not compelled to seek an example far away, but was able to allege in favor of a petition of this kind what he said that we ourselves had done in a similar case. For since our dearest son in Christ Philip, the illustrious king of the French, dismissed our dearest daughter in Christ I., the illustrious queen of the French, and afterward received a boy and a girl from another woman brought in over her, and you similarly, after the lawful wife had been excluded, brought in another woman over her, from whom you received sons, it was believed that the benignity of the Apostolic See should dispense with yours just as with the sons of the same king, especially since greater necessity commended it, and you are more specially subject to us: for the king of the French received from the queen of the French, formerly of illustrious memory, a lawful heir, who is hoped and believed to be about to succeed him upon the throne of the kingdom; but you do not have from your lawful wife a male heir who may succeed you both in devotion to us and in your own inheritance. Moreover, since the king himself is subject to us in spiritual matters, you are subject to us both in spiritual and in temporal matters, since you possess part of your land from the Church of Maguelone, which it temporally recognizes through the Apostolic See; wherefore the same archbishop asserted that, with the Church of Maguelone mediating, you are temporally subject to us. But if the truth is diligently inspected, not a similar but a very dissimilar matter is found. For the king himself was separated from the aforesaid queen by sentence through the Archbishop of Reims, of good memory, legate of the Apostolic See; but you separated your wife from yourself, as is said, by your own rashness. He also brought in another woman before the prohibition against contracting with another had reached him, from whom he is known to have received twin offspring; but you attempted to bring in another woman in contempt of the Church, on account of which the Church itself exercised against you the sword of ecclesiastical vengeance. Moreover, the king himself objected against the marriage of the aforesaid queen an impediment of affinity and introduced witnesses before the aforesaid archbishop; because his sentence was quashed solely on account of the judicial order not having been observed, after the restoration of the [aforesaid] queen we considered that other judges should be deputed to him concerning this. But you objected to your wife nothing as is asserted that would induce a separation, since, even if fidelity of the bed is one of the three goods of marriage, nevertheless its violation would not have violated the conjugal bond. Therefore, as long as the question of the affinity objected is pending, it can not without reason be doubted whether the sons of the same king were legitimate or illegitimate. For if the affinity is proved, it will appear that the aforesaid queen is not the wife of the king, and by consequence the other woman will seem to have been lawfully joined to him and to have borne him legitimate sons. But concerning yours, neither do you yourself propose that they were born legitimate, nor is this presumed by any reason. Moreover, since the king himself recognizes no superior at all in temporal matters, without injury to another's right he was able to submit himself in this matter to our jurisdiction, and did submit himself. In this it perhaps would seem to some that he was able to dispense by himself, not as a father with sons, but as a prince with subjects. But you are known to be subject to others. Hence, perhaps without injury to them, unless they furnished assent to us, you could not submit yourself to us in this matter, nor are you of such authority that you have the faculty of dispensing concerning these things. Therefore, induced by these reasons, when requested we granted grace to the king, drawing a cause both from the Old and from the New Testament that, not only in the patrimony of the Church, over which we bear full power in temporal matters, but also in other regions, after consideration of certain causes, we incidentally exercise temporal jurisdiction—not because we wish to prejudice another's right, or to usurp power not due to us, since we are not ignorant that Christ answered in the Gospel: "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." For which reason, when asked to divide an inheritance between two, he said, "Who appointed me judge over you?"—but because, as is contained in Deuteronomy: "If you perceive that a judgment with you is difficult and ambiguous, between blood and blood, cause and cause, leprosy and non-leprosy, and you see words of judgment varying within your gates: arise and ascend to the place which the Lord your God shall choose; you shall come to the priests of the Levitical stock and to the judge who shall be at that time, and you shall inquire of them, who shall indicate to you the truth of the judgment; and you shall do whatsoever those who preside over the place which the Lord has chosen shall say, and you shall follow their sentence and shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. But he who acts proudly, being unwilling to obey the command of the priest who at that time ministers to the Lord your God, shall die by the decree of the judge, and you shall remove the evil from Israel." Indeed, since Deuteronomy is interpreted as the second law, by the force of the word it is proved [in this] that what is decreed there ought to be observed in the New Testament. For the place which the Lord chose is recognized to be the Apostolic See, in such a way that the Lord founded it upon himself [as] the cornerstone. For when Peter, fleeing the city, had gone out, the Lord, wishing to recall him to the place which he had chosen, when asked by him, "Lord, where are you going?" answered, "I come to Rome to be crucified again"; understanding that this had been said for him, he immediately returned to the place itself. The priests of the Levitical stock are our brothers, who by Levitical right exist as our coadjutors in the execution of the priestly office. But the priest or judge over them is he to whom the Lord says in Peter: "Whatsoever you shall bind upon earth shall be bound also in heaven, and whatsoever you shall loose upon earth shall be loosed also in heaven." He is the vicar of the one who is a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek, appointed by God judge of the living and the dead. Indeed, he distinguishes three judgments: the first between blood and blood, by which the criminal and the civil are understood; the last between leprosy and leprosy, by which the ecclesiastical and the criminal are denoted; the middle between cause and cause, which is referred to both, ecclesiastical as well as civil. In these, when something is difficult or ambiguous, recourse is to be had to the judgment of the Apostolic See; he who proudly disdains to observe its sentence is commanded to die, and the evil to be removed from Israel, that is, through a sentence of excommunication to be separated, as if dead, from the communion of the faithful. Paul also, that he might expound the plenitude of power, says in writing to the Corinthians: "Do you not know that you shall judge angels? How much more secular matters?" Moreover, the office of secular power is sometimes accustomed to execute its function in itself in some matters, but sometimes in others through other persons. Although, therefore, we considered that a dispensation should be made with the sons of the often-mentioned king of the French, concerning whom it is doubted whether they were legitimate from the beginning, nevertheless, because both the Mosaic and the canonical law detest offspring received from adultery—the Lord testifying that mamzers and spurious persons shall not enter the Church down to the tenth generation, while the canon forbids such persons to be promoted to sacred orders, and secular laws also not only repel them from the paternal succession but even deny them maintenance—we did not consider that assent should be given to your petition, until, if it can be done, both a lighter fault and a freer jurisdiction are shown, although we embrace your person with the arms of special affection and wish to exhibit special grace to you in those things in which we can do so with God and with honor.

> In terris ecclesiae Papa potest libere illegitimos legitimare, in terris vero alienis non, nisi ex causis multum arduis, vel nisi in spiritualibus; tunc tamen indirecte et per quandam consequentiam intelligitur legitimare etiam quoad temporalia. Hoc tamen ultimum non est sine scrupulo. H. d. secundum intellectum, qui placet Panorm. et est cap. difficile et multum famosum.
>
> Idem nobili viro G. Montis Pessulani.
>
> Per venerabilem fratrem nostrum, Arelatensem archiepiscopum, ad sedem apostolicam accedentem, tua nobis humilitas supplicavit, ut filios tuos legitimationis dignaremur titulo decorare, quatenus eis, quo minus tibi succederent, natalium obiectio non noceret. Quod autem super hoc apostolica sedes plenam habeat potestatem, ex illo videtur, quod, diversis causis inspectis, cum quibusdam minus legitime genitis, non naturalibus tantum, sed adulterinis etiam dispensavit sic ad actus spirituales illos legitimans ut possint in episcopos promoveri. Ex quo verisimilius creditur et probabilius reputatur, ut eos ad actus legitimare valeat saeculares, praesertim si praeter Romanos Pontifices inter homines superiorem alium non cognoscant, qui legitimandi habeat potestatem; quia, quum maior in spiritualibus tam providentia quam auctoritas et idoneitas requiratur, quod in maiori conceditur licitum esse videtur et in minori. Per simile quoque id videtur posse probari, quum eo ipso, quod aliquis ad apicem episcopalis dignitatis attollitur, eximitur a patria potestate. Praeterea etiamsi simplex episcopus scienter servum alterius in presbyterum ordinaret, licet ordinator satisfacere domino iuxta formam canonicam teneretur, ordinatus tamen iugum evaderet servitutis. Videretur siquidem monstruosum, ut, qui legitimus ad spirituales fieret actiones, circa saeculares actus illegitimus, remaneret. Unde, quum in spiritualibus dispensetur, consequenter intelligitur in temporalibus dispensatum. Id autem in patrimonio beati Petri libere potest apostolica sedes efficere, in quo et summi Pontificis auctoritatem exercet, et summi principis exsequitur potestatem. Quum ergo videatur ex his legitimandi auctoritas non tantum in spiritualibus sed in temporalibus etiam penes Romanam ecclesiam residere, ut super hoc filiis tuis gratiam faceremus ob tua et progenitorum tuorum merita, qui semper in devotione sedis apostolicae perstitistis, humiliter ex parte tua idem archiepiscopus requirebat. Videbatur autem ex eo trahere maiorem audaciam postulandi, quod non longe petere cogebatur exemplum, sed in favorem petitionis huiusmodi quod nos ipsos in causa simili fecisse dicebat poterat allegare. Quum enim carissimus in Christo filius noster Philippus rex Francorum illustris carissimam in Christo filiam nostram I. Francorum reginam illustrem dimiserit, et ex alia postmodum superducta puerum susceperit et puellam, et tu similiter exclusa legitima superduxeris aliam, ex qua filios suscepisti: sicut cum filiis regis eiusdem, sic cum tuis credebatur de benignitate apostolicae sedis dispensandum, praesertim quum maior id necessitas suaderet, et tu nobis specialius sis subiectus: siquidem rex Francorum ex inclitae recordationis regina Francorum olim legitimum suscepit heredem, qui ei optatur et creditur in regni solio successurus; tu vero, ex legitima coniuge masculinum non habes heredem, qui tibi et in devotione nostra et propria hereditate succedat. Insuper, quum rex ipse in spiritualibus nobis subiaceat, tu nobis et in spiritualibus et in temporalibus es subiectus, quum partem terrae tuae ab ecclesia Magalonensi possideas, quam ipsa per sedem apostolicam temporaliter recognoscit, quare Magalonensi ecclesia mediante nobis idem archiepiscopus asserebat temporaliter subiacere. Verum, si veritas diligenter inspicitur, non res similis, sed valde dissimilis invenitur. Nam rex ipse a praedicta regina per bonae memoriae Remensem archiepiscopum, apostolicae sedis legatum, fuit per sententiam separatus; tu vero uxorem tuam a te, sicut dicitur, temeritate propria separasti. Ipse quoque, priusquam ad eum prohibitio de non contrahendo cum altera pervenisset, aliam superduxit, ex qua prolem geminam noscitur suscepisse; sed tu in contemptum ecclesiae aliam superinducere attentasti, propter quod ipsa in te gladium exercuit ecclesiasticae ultionis. Praeterea rex ipse praedictae reginae contra matrimonium impedimentum affinitatis obiecit, et coram praefato archiepiscopo testes induxit, cuius sententia quia cassata fuit solummodo propter iudiciarium ordinem non servatum, nos ei post restitutionem [praefatae] reginae super hoc alios cognitores duximus deputandos. Tu vero uxori tuae nihil, quod divortium induceret, sicut asseritur, obiecisti, quum, etsi fides tori sit unum de tribus bonis coniugii, non tamen ipsius violatio coniugale vinculum violasset. De filiis ergo eiusdem regis, utrum legitimi vel illegitimi fuerint, quamdiu pendet quaestio affinitatis obiectae, potest non immerito dubitari. Nam si affinitas fuerit comprobata, praedictam reginam non esse regis coniugem apparebit, et per consequens alia videbitur sibi legitime copulata, et filios ei legitimos peperisse. De tuis vero, quod sint legitimi nati, nec tu ipse proponis, nec ulla praesumitur ratione. Insuper quum rex ipse superiorem in temporalibus minime recognoscat, sine iuris alterius laesione in eo se iurisdictioni nostrae subiicere potuit et subiecit. In quo forsitan videretur aliquibus, quod per se ipsum, non tanquam pater cum filiis, sed tanquam princeps cum subditis potuit dispensare. Tu autem nosceris aliis subiacere. +Unde sine ipsorum forsan iniuria, nisi praestarent assensum nobis, in hoc subdere te non posses, nec eius auctoritatis exsistis, ut dispensandi super his habeas facultatem. Rationibus igitur his inducti regi gratiam fecimus requisiti, causam tam ex veteri quam ex novo testamento trahentes, quod non solum in ecclesiae patrimonio, super quo plenam in temporalibus gerimus potestatem, verum etiam in aliis regionibus, certis causis inspectis, temporalem iurisdictionem casualiter exercemus, non quod alieno iuri praeiudicare velimus, vel potestatem nobis indebitam usurpare, quum non ignoremus, Christum in evangelio respondisse: "Reddite quae sunt Caesaris Caesari, et quae sunt Dei Deo. Propter quod postulatus, ut hereditatem divideret inter duos, quis," inquit, "constituit me iudicem super vos?" sed, quia, sicut in Deuteronomio continetur; "Si difficile et ambiguum apud te iudicium esse perspexeris, inter sanguinem et sanguinem, causam et causam, lepram et non lepram, et iudicium inter portas tuas verba videris variari:" surge et adscende ad locum, quem elegerit Dominus Deus tuus, venies ad sacerdotes Levitici generis, et ad iudicem, qui fuerit illo tempore, quaeresque ab eis, qui indicabunt tibi iudicii veritatem, et facies quaecunque dixerint, qui praesunt loco, quem elegerit Dominus, sequerisque eorum sententiam nec declinabis ad dexteram vel ad sinistram. Qui autem superbierit, nolens obedire sacerdotis imperio, qui eo tempore ministrat Domino Deo tuo, decreto iudicis morietur, et auferes malum de Israel." Sane, quum Deuteronomium lex secunda interpretetur, ex vi vocabuli comprobatur [in hoc], ut quod ibi decernitur in novo testamento debeat observari. Locus enim, quem elegit Dominus, apostolica sedes esse cognoscitur sic, quod eam Dominus in se ipso [e] lapide angulari fundavit. Quum enim Petrus urbem fugiens exivisset, volens eum Dominus ad locum, quem elegerat, revocare, interrogatus ab eo: "Domine, quo vadis?" respondit: "venio Romam iterum crucifigi," quod intelligens pro se dictum, ad locum ipsum protinus est reversus. Sunt autem sacerdotes Levitici generis fratres nostri, qui nobis iure Levitico in exsecutione sacerdotalis officii coadiutores exsistunt. Is vero super eos sacerdos sive iudex exsistit, cui Dominus inquit in Petro: "Quodcunque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum et in coelis, et quodcunque solveris super terram erit solutum et in coelis." Eius vicarius, qui est sacerdos in aeternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech, constitutus a Deo iudex vivorum et mortuorum. Tria quippe distinguit iudicia: primum inter sanguinem et sanguinem, per quod criminale intelligitur et civile; ultimum inter lepram et lepram, per quod ecclesiasticum et criminale notatur; medium inter causam et causam, quod ad utrumque refertur, tam ecclesiasticum quam civile, in quibus quum aliquid fuerit difficile, vel ambiguum, ad iudicium est sedis apostolicae recurrendum, cuius sententiam qui superbiens contempserit observare mori praecipitur et auferri malum de Israel, id est, per excommunicationis sententiam, velut mortuus, a communione fidelium separari. Paulus etiam, ut plenitudinem potestatis exponeret, ad Corinthios scribens ait: "nescitis, quoniam angelos iudicabitis, quanto magis saecularia?" Porro saecularis officium potestatis interdum et in quibusdam per se, nonnunquam autem et in nonnullis per alios exsequi consuevit. Licet igitur cum filiis saepe dicti regis Francorum, de quibus, an fuerint legitimi ab initio, dubitatur, duxerimus dispensandum: quia tamen tam lex Mosaica quam canonica sobolem susceptam ex adulterio detestatur, testante Domino, quod manzeres et spurii usque in decimam generationem in ecclesiam non intrabunt, canone vero vetante tales ad sacros ordines promoveri, saecularibus quoque legibus non solum repellentibus eos a successione paterna, sed negantibus ipsis etiam alimenta: petitioni tuae non duximus annuendum, donec, si fieri poterit, et culpa levior et iurisdictio liberior ostendatur, licet personam tuam specialis dilectionis brachiis amplectamur et in quibus cum Deo et honestate possumus specialem tibi velimus gratiam exhibere.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: If a married man, while the first wife is living, contracts with a second woman in the face of the Church while she is ignorant of this, their offspring will be legitimate.

The same, to H. and R., Canons of Benevento.

From the tenor of your letters it became known to us that, when the widow G. sought to have the inheritance of R., her late husband, restored to herself and her ward son by Landulf of Granno and his nephews, together with the fruits received from it, in your presence, you who by our delegation were taking cognizance of the same case, the adverse party was endeavoring to exclude her petition on the ground that it asserted that the same R., husband of the widow herself, had been begotten of adultery, proposing that the father of the said Robert, while his lawful wife was living, brought in over her a certain other woman named Marucia, from whom he begot the aforesaid Robert, husband of the widow herself. But on the contrary the widow's party responded that, since the aforesaid Marucia, not knowing that the father of the said Robert had another wife, had contracted with him in the face of the Church, the son whom he received from her ought to be held legitimate, since those who are not born of a knowing adulteress ought not to be reputed illegitimate. And when litigation concerning this had continued for a rather long time in your presence, and the opinions of certain prudent men whose counsel you sought disagreed with one another in this matter, you considered that the Apostolic See should be consulted. Therefore we, having understood these and the other things which you intimated to us through your letters, after diligent discussion with our brothers, understanding that the father of the aforesaid R. married his mother in the face of the Church while she was entirely ignorant that he had matrimonially joined another woman to himself, and that while she was considered his lawful wife he received the said R. from her, incline rather in favor of the offspring, reputing the aforementioned R. legitimate with respect to this. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that [also] you repute him legitimate, being about to proceed in other matters according to the tenor of our letters, with reason going before. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of October, 1205.]

Si coniugatus, vivente prima, in facie ecclesiae contrahit cum secunda hoc ignorante, legitima erit eorum proles.

Idem H. et R. Canonicis Beneventanis.

Ex tenore literarum vestrarum nobis innotuit, quod, quum G. vidua hereditatem R., quondam mariti sui a Landulfo de Granno et nepotibus suis cum fructibus inde perceptis, in praesentia vestra, qui ex delegatione nostra de causa cognoscebatis eadem, sibi et pupillo filio suo restitui postularet, pars adversa petitionem eius nitebatur excludere, pro eo, quod eundem R. maritum ipsius viduae de adulterio genitum asserebat, proponens, quod dicti Roberti pater, vivente uxore legitima, quandam aliam, Maruciam nomine, superduxit, ex qua praefatum Robertum maritum ipsius viduae generavit. E contra vero pars viduae respondebat, quod, quum praefata Marucia, nesciens, quod dicti Roberti pater aliam haberet uxorem, cum ipso in ecclesiae facie contraxisset, filius, quem suscepit ex ea, legitimus debebat haberi, quum non debeant illegitimi reputari qui de adultera conscia non nascuntur.

Quumque diutius super hoc in vestra fuisset praesentia litigatum, et nonnullorum prudentum sententia, quorum consilium requisistis, in hoc invicem discordaret, sedem duxistis apostolicam consulendam. Nos igitur, intellectis his et aliis, quae per vestras nobis literas intimastis, habito cum fratribus nostris diligenti tractatu, Intelligentes, quod pater praedicti R. matrem ipsius in facie ecclesiae, ignaram penitus, quod ipse aliam sibi matrimonialiter copulasset, duxerit in uxorem, et dum ipsa coniux ipsius legitima putaretur, dictum R. susceperit ex eadem, in favorem prolis potius declinamus, memoratum R. quoad hoc legitimum reputantes. Ideoque discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus [et] vos eum legitimum reputetis in ceteris iuxta tenorem literarum nostrarum ratione praevia processuri. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Oct. 1205.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: The offspring of infidels who are afterward converted is legitimate, even if the parents are in a degree prohibited by canon law.

The same, to the Bishop of Tiberias.

We rejoice—(And below: [Compare below 8, On the Separation of Spouses, IV. 19.]) Moreover, offspring born of the unions of infidels who contracted with marital affection in the second, third, or a further degree according to their opinion, after the reception of the faith we wish, at the urging of public utility, to be reputed legitimate. [But those who, etc. Compare chapter 8, On the Separation of Spouses, IV. 19.]

Proles infidelium, qui postea convertuntur, legitima est, etiamsi parentes sunt in gradu prohibito lege canonica.

Idem Episcopo Tib.

Gaudemus (Et infra: [cf. b. 8. de divort. IV. 19.]) Ceterum prolem, de infidelium coniunctionibus natam, qui secundo, tertio vel ulteriore gradu secundum opinionem illorum matrimoniali contraxerunt affectu, post fidem receptam, utilitate publica suadente, legitimam volumus reputari. [Qui autem etc. cf. c. 8. de divort. IV. 19.]

Title XVIII: Who Can Accuse a Marriage or Testify against It

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: When the bond of marriage is at issue, while the defendant is contumaciously absent, witnesses concerning an impediment to the marriage can be received, provided that they are lawful; and sentence is rendered according to their statements.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Paris.

It was reported to us on your behalf that, when the father of a certain girl had given her in marriage to a certain citizen of Paris, the husband, after some years during which he remained with his wife, departed from the city through fear of death on account of the homicide which he committed. But now it is said and seems capable of being lawfully proved that the father of the aforesaid girl held the young man for baptism and, what is more, raised him from the sacred font; but although sought by your letters, he has not yet been able to be found, even though five years have passed. Moreover, because concerning this your fraternity considered that we should be consulted, we respond to your consultation in this manner: if the young man and the girl were [together] for some years without question, those who now accuse the aforesaid marriage do not seem to be free from suspicion. Moreover, if what is asserted is manifest, or lawful accusers and witnesses appear superior to every exception, after the young man has been sought with every diligence, even if he cannot be found, you will be able to receive witnesses and terminate the judgment by a canonical end. Yet you are to proceed in such a way that you do not seem in any way to prefer any affection or temporal advantage to justice. Indeed, those with whose knowledge and silence the marriage was contracted are not thereafter to be heard against it.

QUI MATRIMONIUM ACCUSARE POSSUNT, VEL CONTRA ILLUD TESTARI.

Quum agitur de foedere matrimonii, reo absente contumaciter, possunt super impedimento matrimonii recipi testes, dummodo sint legitimi; et ad dicta eorum fertur sententia.

Alexander III. Parisiensi Episcopo.

Relatum est nobis ex parte tua, quod, quum pater cuiusdam puellae eam cuidam civi Parisiensi nuptui tradidisset, maritus post aliquot annos, quibus cum uxore permansit, propter homicidium, quod commisit, de civitate timore mortis exivit. Nunc autem dicitur et videtur legitime posse probari, quod pater praedictae puellae ad Christianitatem iuvenem tenuit, et, quod est amplius, eum de sacro fonte levavit; sed literis tuis quaesitus nondum potuit inveniri, licet quinquennium sit transactum. Ceterum quia super hoc tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si iuvenis et puella aliquot annis sine quaestione fuerunt [simul], qui praescriptum matrimonium nunc accusant non videntur suspicione carere. Ceterum si manifestum est quod asseritur, aut legitimi accusatores et testes appareant omni exceptione maiores, postquam iuvenis fuerit cum omni diligentia requisitus, etiamsi nequiverit inveniri, testes recipere poteris, et fine canonico iudicium terminare. Tu tamen ita procedas, quod amorem aliquem aut commodum temporale nequaquam praeponere iustitiae videaris. Sane illi quibus scientibus et tacentibus matrimonium est contractum non sunt contra ipsum ulterius audiendi.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Accusation and testimony in a matrimonial case ought to be made personally and not through letters.

Clement III.

It was asked of us on behalf of your church whether persons who utter nothing in their own voice concerning an accusation of marriage ought to be admitted through the writing of a small document alone. To this we respond that in such matters the writing is of no moment for rendering sentence, except as to presumption, unless other lawful supports concur. Moreover, because this also was added to the consultation, we respond accordingly that those who were present at the betrothals and, when questioned, kept silent are not afterward to be received if they wish to confess anything against the marriage, unless they wish to say something about those things which in truth they learned afterward, concerning which it is established that at the time of the interrogation made they knew nothing. In what manner an oath is to be received from those who accuse a marriage or make some protest, and after how many years certain persons are to be heard in an accusation of marriage, we did not consider should be annexed to the present letters, both because the form of this oath appears diligently expressed in nearly all the canons, and because, on account of the variety of cases and the diversities of persons, a fixed limit concerning a span of years cannot be prescribed for these matters. [Given at the Lateran.]

Accusatio et testimonium in causa matrimoniali personaliter, et non per literas, fieri debent.

Clemens III.

A nobis est ex parte ecclesiae vestrae quaesitum, utrum aliqui, super accusatione matrimonii nihil voce propria depromentes, debeant per solam chartulae conscriptionem admitti. Ad hoc respondemus, quod in talibus, nisi quantum ad praesumptionem, nullius momenti est conscriptio quoad sententiam proferendam, nisi alia legitima adminicula suffragentur. Praeterea, quia et hoc consultationi fuit additum, proinde respondemus, quod, qui sponsalibus interfuerunt et tacuere quaesiti, non sunt postea recipiendi, si velint contra matrimonium aliqua confiteri, nisi de his aliqua velint dicere quae in veritate postea didicerunt, de quibus quum constet, eos nihil factae interrogationis tempore cognovisse, qualiter ab his qui accusant matrimonium vel aliquid protestantur recipiendum sit sacramentum et post quot annos sint aliqui in accusatione matrimonii audiendo praesentibus literis non duximus annectendum. Quia forma huius sacramenti paene in omnibus patet canonibus diligenter expressa et quia per varietatem casuum et diversitates personarum certa de annorum spatio his non possit meta praefigi. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: In a matrimonial case, blood relatives and parents can testify concerning consanguinity and the contract.

Pope Clement III, to the Bishop of Florence.

It seems to us that the second woman whom he married contrary to the prohibition of the Church is not his wife, even if he had not betrothed the first. For the authority of both divine and human law proclaims that what has been done contrary to the interdict and order of the Church is not to be held ratified, as being disordered. Therefore, because the woman whom he irregularly brought in over the first is not his wife, since the prohibition resists, he is to be compelled to receive the woman to whom he swore and whom he betrothed, and from whom he begot offspring, so that the sanctity of the oath is not held in contempt, the faith mutually promised is preserved, the offspring is nurtured and educated in the worship of God, and others are not thereby able to take occasion for perjuring themselves and deceiving others. But that parents, brothers, and blood relatives of both sexes are admitted in testimony concerning their own people for joining or dissolving a marriage is approved by both ancient custom and the laws, and is likewise approved by both divine and human laws. For this reason especially parents are received, and, if the parents are lacking, the nearer relatives are admitted, because each person endeavors to know his genealogy both from witnesses and documents and also from the recital of his elders. Therefore, because they know better than others, they are especially admitted. They are likewise received in testimony for the purpose of joining a marriage. For who ought to be received more fittingly than those who know better, and whose interest it is, in such a way that, if they have not been present and have not furnished consent, according to the laws no marriage is made? But what is read—"a father is not to be received in the case of a son, nor a son in the case of a father"—is true in criminal cases and contracts; but for joining and disjoining marriage, by the prerogative of the marriage itself and because it is a favorable matter, they are fittingly admitted.

In causa matrimoniali super consanguinitate et contractu testificari possunt consanguinei et parentes.

Clemens III. Papa Florentino Episcopo.

Videtur nobis, quod secunda, quam contra prohibitionem ecclesiae duxit, non sit uxor, etsi primam non haberet desponsatam. Nam quod contra interdictum et ordinem ecclesiae factum est, ratum non haberi tanquam inordinatum, tam divinae quam humanae legis auctoritas proclamat. Quia igitur ea, quam inordinate superduxit, prohibitione renitente uxor non est, cogendus est eam recipere, quam iuravit et desponsavit, atque ex ea prolem genuit, ut iuramenti religio non vilipendatur, et fides promissa adinvicem conservetur, et proles in cultu Dei nutriatur et educetur, et alii exinde occasionem peierandi et alias decipiendi assumere non valeant. Quod autem parentes, fratres et cognati utriusque sexus in testificatione suorum ad matrimonium coniungendum vel dirimendum admittantur, tam antiqua consuetudine quam legibus approbatur, et tam divinis quam humanis legibus similiter adprobatur. Ideo enim maxime parentes recipiuntur, et, si defuerint parentes, proximiores admittuntur, quoniam unusquisque suam genealogiam cum testibus et chartis, tum etiam ex recitatione maiorum scire laborat. Quia igitur aliis melius sciunt, ideo maxime admittuntur. Similiter recipiuntur in testificatione matrimonii gratia coniungendi. Qui enim melius recipi debent, quam illi, qui melius sciunt, et quorum est interesse, ita, ut, si non interfuerint, et consensum non adhibuerint, secundum leges nullum fiat matrimonium? Quod vero legitur: "pater non recipiatur in causa filii, nec filius in causa patris," in criminalibus causis et contractibus verum est, in matrimonio vero coniungendo et disiungendo ex ipsius coniugii praerogativa, et quia favorabilis res est, congrue admittuntur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A woman betrothed unwillingly, but afterward known voluntarily, is not heard against the marriage.

The same.

Moreover, you added that someone contracted with a certain girl not yet marriageable, who, finally reaching the bounds of age and being known by him several times, after four or five years had elapsed from the aforesaid age, protested against the marriage, asserting that from the beginning she had always dissented from him, and she proves what she says through witnesses illustrious in reputation and conduct. Therefore, in this case we judge that she ought not to be heard against the marriage, since, reaching the lawful year before she was known, she did not protest when she could have done so. For just as before lawful consent, which is expected in the twelfth year according to canon law, she was able to dissent, so, after at a lawful time she consented even once to carnal union, it is not doubted that by ratification she imposed silence upon herself concerning this. [Again a certain man, etc. Compare chapter 6, Who Are Clerics or Vowed Persons, IV. 6.]

Invita desponsata, postea sponte cognita, contra matrimonium non auditur.

Idem.

Insuper adiecisti, quod aliquis, cum quadam innubili puella contraxit, quae, tandem aetatis metas attingens, et ab illo pluries cognita, post quatuor aut quinque annos, a praefata aetate decursos, contra matrimonium proclamavit, asserens, se semper ab initio dissensisse ab illo, et quod dicit per testes probat fama et conversatione praeclaros. In hoc itaque casu sentimus, quod adversus matrimonium audiri non debet, quae, ante cognitionem sui legitimum annum attingens, quum potuit, minime reclamavit. Sicut enim ante legitimum consensum, qui in duodecimo anno spectatur, secundum ius canonicum potuit dissentire: sic, postquam legitimo tempore accedente semel etiam copulae carnali consensit, ex ratihabitione sibi super hoc silentium non ambigitur indixisse. [Rursus quidam etc. cf. c. 6. Qui cler. vel vov. IV. 6.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who accuses a marriage for gain is repelled.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop, the Provost, and the Prior of Saint Mary of the Albanians at Genoa.

At the representation of M. of Canula, a citizen of Genoa, it was declared to our apostolate that, when he had lawfully married N., S., the mother of the woman herself, endeavored to accuse the marriage in order to extort money from him. And although wicked works cannot answer her understanding, nevertheless she wishes to have money so that she may desist [henceforth] from accusation of the same marriage. Therefore, since indulgence is not to be granted to the malice of men, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, if it is so, repelling the woman herself from accusation of the same marriage, you impose silence upon her concerning this. [You, brother, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the seventeenth day before the Kalends of July, 1204.]

> Repellitur accusans matrimonium propter quaestum.
>
> Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo, Praeposito et Priori sanctae Mariae de Albanen. Genuensibus.
>
> Significante M. de Canula cive Ianuensi nostro est apostolatui declaratum, quod, quum ipse N. duxisset legitime in uxorem, S. mater mulieris ipsius nisa est matrimonium accusare, ut ab eo pecuniam extorqueret. Et licet intellectui suo prava non possint opera respondere, nihilominus tamen vult habere pecuniam, ut a matrimonii eiusdem [de cetero] accusatione desistat. Quum igitur non sit malitiis hominum indulgendum, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, ipsam mulierem ab accusatione ipsius matrimonii repellentes, eidem super hoc silentium imponatis. [Tu frater etc. Dat. Lat. XVII. Kal. Iul. 1204.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who kept silent at the time of the proclamation is repelled from accusation of a marriage, unless he was reasonably ignorant of the proclamation, or swears that he learned the matter anew and that he does not object to it maliciously.

The same.

When in your diocese—(And below: [Compare chapter 30, On Tithes, III. 30.]) But if after a marriage has been contracted some accuser appears, although he did not come forth publicly when the banns were proclaimed in the churches according to custom, it can deservedly be asked whether the voice of his accusation ought to be admitted. Concerning this we considered that a distinction should be made as follows: if, at the time of the aforesaid proclamation, the one who attacks those now joined was outside the diocese, or otherwise the proclamation could not come to his knowledge—as, for example, if, laboring under the heat of excessive infirmity, he suffered exile from a sound mind, or was constituted in years so tender that his age was not able to suffice for comprehension of such things, or was impeded by another lawful cause—his accusation ought to be heard. Otherwise, since it is reasonably presumed that, while present in that diocese, he was by no means ignorant of the proclamation publicly made, he is without doubt to be repelled as suspect, unless he has affirmed by his own oath that he afterward learned the things which he objects and that he does not proceed to this from malice; because then, even if he learned from those who kept silent at the time of the proclamation, the approach to accusing ought not to be closed to him, since, even if the fault contracted from such silence excluded them from an attack of this kind, nevertheless this man could not be removed, since he is not culpable. [But whether, etc. Compare chapter 44, On Witnesses, II. 22. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of November, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

> Repellitur ab accusatione matrimonii qui denunciationis tempore tacuit, nisi denunciationem probabiliter ignoravit, vel iuret de novo didicisse, et quod non obiicit illam malitiose.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum in tua dioecesi (Et infra: [cf. c. 30. de dec. III. 30.]) Si vero post contractum matrimonium aliquis appareat accusator, quum non prodierit in publicum, quando banna secundum consuetudinem in ecclesiis edebantur, utrum vox suae debeat accusationis admitti, merito quaeri potest. Super quo sic duximus distinguendum, quod, si tempore denunciationis praemissae is, qui iam coniunctos impetit, extra dioecesim exsistebat, vel alias denunciatio non potuit ad eius notitiam pervenire, ut puta, si nimiae infirmitatis fervore laborans sanae mentis patiebatur exsilium, vel in annis erat tam teneris constitutus, quod ad comprehensionem talium eius aetas sufficere non valebat, seu alia causa legitima fuerit impeditus, eius accusatio debet audiri. Alioquin, quum rationabiliter praesumatur, quod denunciationem publice factam idem exsistens in ipsa dioecesi minime ignoravit, tanquam suspectus est procul dubio repellendus, nisi proprio firmaverit iuramento, quod postea didicerit ea, quae obiecerit, et ad hoc ex malitia non procedat, quia tunc, etiamsi didicisset ab illis, qui denunciationis tempore siluerunt, claudi non debet eidem aditus accusandi, quoniam, etsi ab impetitione huiusmodi culpa de silentio tali contracta illos excluderet, iste tamen amoveri nequiret, quum culpabilis non exsistat. [Utrum autem etc. cf. c. 44. de test. II. 22. Dat. Lat. IV. Kal. Nov. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Title XIX: On the Separation of Spouses

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Necessary homicide does not deprive one of the hope of marriage, but a plot against the death of a spouse does.

From the council at Worms.

If any woman has taken counsel with other [persons] for the death of her husband, and the man himself, in defending himself, kills one of them, and to prove this [you are able], the man himself can dismiss that wife and, after the death of the wife, if he wishes, marry another. But let the woman who laid the plot remain subject to penance without hope of marriage.

DE DIVORTIIS.

Homicidium necessarium non privat spe coniugii, sed machinatio in mortem coniugis sic.

Ex concilio apud Wormaciam.

Si qua mulier in mortem mariti sui cum aliis [hominibus] consiliata est, et ipse vir aliquem illorum se defendendo occiderit, et hoc probare [potes], potest ipse vir ipsam uxorem dimittere, et post mortem uxoris, si voluerit, aliam ducere. Ipsa autem insidiatrix poenitentiae absque spe coniugii stet subiecta.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Spouses are not separated on account of the crime of one of them, unless they fornicate spiritually; and even then the marriage endures, even when they have been separated.

Alexander III.

Your fraternity asked of us whether a woman ought to be separated from her husband for robbery or any other crime and marry another; and concerning the man you proposed a question in like manner, whether for any disgraceful act he can be divided from his spouse and lawfully join another to himself in marriage. Therefore we respond in this manner: a woman ought not to be separated from him for theft or another crime of her husband, unless he endeavors to draw her into his evil deeds and wishes to corrupt the religion of her faith, nor is she for any reason to be joined to another. But if he has drawn his spouse into the evil deed of unbelief, the woman will be able to depart from the husband and to be separated, in such a way, however, that it will not be lawful for her to marry another, because, although they are separated, they will nevertheless always be spouses. In the case of husbands also, let the form of the present sentence be observed.

Coniuges propter alterius crimen non separantur, nisi spiritualiter fornicentur, et tunc durat coniugium, eis etiam separatis.

Alexander III.

Quaesivit a nobis tua fraternitas, utrum mulier pro latrocinio aut quolibet alio crimine a viro suo debeat separari, et alii nubere, et de viro simili modo quaestionem proposuisti, utrum pro quolibet flagitio possit a coniuge dividi, et aliam sibi legitime matrimonio copulare. Nos itaque taliter respondemus, quod mulier pro furto vel alio crimine viri sui, nisi ipse eam ad maleficia sua trahere nitatur, et fidei suae religionem corrumpere velit, ab eo separari non debet, nec alii aliqua ratione copulari. Verum si coniugem suam ad infidelitatis maleficium traxerit, mulier a viro recedere poterit et separari, ita, quod ei nubere alii non licebit, quia, licet separentur, semper tamen coniuges erunt. In viris quoque praesentis sententiae forma servetur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A husband cannot dismiss his wife without a judgment of the Church, even on account of a notorious impediment of kinship. If report relates an impediment to a marriage, even when no one opposes it, the bishop can inquire into it by his office. But if the impediment is notorious, the bishop can separate the marriage by his office.

The same, to the Bishops of Amiens.

Moreover, concerning the Count of Ponthieu, who dismissed the daughter of B. of Saint-Valery, his wife, without a judgment of the Church for the reason that he proposes that she was a blood relative of his deceased wife, let your prudence know this: even if the kinship were public and notorious, he could not be separated from her without a judgment of the Church; wherefore you are strictly to compel him to receive her who seeks restoration of him. If he is unwilling to receive her, bind him and the woman brought in over her with the bond of excommunication. But if any persons appear who lawfully wish and are able to attack the marriage itself, hear the case and decide it by the due end. Moreover, concerning H., who married the daughter of Adelm, his blood relative, [as] wife, if this is public and manifest and no one appears who wishes to attack the marriage, we respond to you that, when accusers do not appear and the kinship is manifest or public—which is not credible unless they were first cousins in the first or second degree—it pertains to your office to dissolve, with gravity applied, those marriages which are known to have been unlawfully contracted. [To these things, etc. Compare chapter 15, On Tithes, III. 30.]

Vir non potest dimittere uxorem sine iudicio ecclesiae, etiam propter impedimentum parentelae notorium. Si fama refert impedimentum coniugii, etiam nemine opponente, episcopus ex officio suo potest de eo inquirere. Si vero impedimentum est notorium, potest episcopus ex officio suo matrimonium separare.

Idem Ambianensi Episcopis.

Porro de comite Pontini, qui filiam B. de sancto Valerico uxorem suam absque iudicio ecclesiae dimisit propterea, quia eam cognatam fuisse uxoris defunctae proponit, haec prudentia tua cognoscat, quod, si etiam parentela esset publica et notoria, absque iudicio ecclesiae ab ea separari non potuit, quare ipsum ad eam recipiendam, quae petit restitutionem ipsius, districte compellas. Quam si recipere noluerit, eum et superinductam vinculo excommunicationis adstringas. Si qui autem apparuerint, qui matrimonium ipsum legitime velint et possint impetere, causam audias, et eam fine debito decidas. Praeterea de H. qui filiam Adelmi, cognatam suam, duxit [in] uxorem, si hoc publicum est et manifestum, nec apparet aliquis, qui matrimonium velit impetere, id tibi respondemus, quod, non apparentibus accusatoribus, et parentela manifesta seu publica exsistente, quod credibile non est, nisi essent consobrini in primo gradu vel secundo, tui officii interest, matrimonia illa adhibita gravitate dissolvere, quae illicite contracta noscuntur. [Ad haec etc. cf. c. 15. de dec. III. 30.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A wife seeking restoration of her husband is repelled if she has notoriously fornicated and the husband has remained continent.

The same.

You signified to us that a certain knight in your province, having dismissed his wife without a judgment [and authority] of the Church because it had been suggested to him that she had committed incest with a certain blood relative of his, was on this account bound with the bond of excommunication. But the woman herself did not remain continent, but received offspring from another man; nevertheless she seeks to be restored to her husband, asserting that she [had been] unjustly dismissed by him and that the same man had given her material for committing adultery. Hence, because you consulted us whether the woman herself ought to be restored to [her] husband, and the husband compelled to receive her, we respond to your consultation in this manner: if it is notorious that the woman herself committed adultery, the aforesaid husband ought not to be compelled to receive her, unless it were established that he had committed adultery with another woman.

Repellitur uxor, petens restitutionem mariti, si notorie fornicata est, et maritus continuit.

Idem.

Significasti nobis, quod quidam miles in provincia tua, uxore sua sine iudicio ecclesiae [et auctoritate] dimissa pro eo, quod suggestum sibi fuerat, ipsam incestum cum quodam consanguineo suo commisisse, vinculo fuit propter hoc excommunicationis adstrictus. Verum mulier ipsa non continuit, sed sobolem de alio viro suscepit; nec minus postulat viro restitui, asserens, se ab ipso iniuste [fuisse] dimissam, et eundem virum sibi materiam adulterandi dedisse. Unde, quia nos consuluisti, utrum mulier ipsa debeat viro [suo] restitui, et vir ad eius receptionem compelli, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si notorium est, mulierem ipsam adulterium commisisse, ad eam recipiendam praefatus vir cogi non debet, nisi constaret, ipsum cum alia adulterium commisisse.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A marriage is separated on account of the adultery of the woman, and, if the man afterward fornicates, it is restored. And it is a good case and very capable of being cited.

The same.

We received from your letters that the bearer of the present letters, named V., formerly of your diocese, married a certain woman, namely Lucia, as wife; they, at the instigation of a malignant spirit, were in concord for only a short time. For the same V. proposed that he had married her through violence inflicted upon him, with fear also intervening. But you, together with your chapter, when you often endeavored to restore peace between them by both threats and admonitions, compelled them, after they had been rashly separated, likewise to be reconciled: finally the husband judicially accused his wife concerning the crime of fornication, and she, being led by what spirit is unknown, began publicly to confess that, because her husband refused to provide for her in things due and necessary, she was compelled to incur the aforesaid crime. And when she had been more diligently admonished by you not to propose so shameful a thing against herself at the suggestion of anyone or upon iniquitous counsel, she asserted it more manifestly. Indeed, when, after summoning your chapter and other discreet men, on their counsel you firmly enjoined upon each of them that continence was to be observed privately, in such a way that they should live chastely while separated from one another, and from the report of certain persons you perceived that the aforementioned V. intended to marry another woman, although you diligently admonished him not to attempt this in any manner, nevertheless outside the city he rashly celebrated betrothals and nuptials with another woman in secret. But when you labored to investigate the deed, so that you might proceed according to it, the above-mentioned V., explaining and expounding the course of the matter as it had been done, is said to have appealed to our hearing. Hence, by apostolic writings, we command your fraternity that, if the matter so proceeded, with appeal removed, through a sentence of excommunication you compel the aforesaid man to return to his lawful wife, and, after penance has been enjoined upon him for the adultery committed with the second woman, you cause the first to be treated by him with marital affection. [The chaplain, etc. Compare chapter 1, On Second Marriages, IV. 21. Given at the Lateran.]

> Matrimonium separatur propter adulterium mulieris, et, si vir postea fornicetur, redintegratur. Et est bonus casus et multum allegabilis.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex literis tuis accepimus, quod lator praesentium, V. nomine, olim de tua dioecesi quandam duxit, videlicet Luciam, in uxorem, qui, maligno spiritu instigante, paucis temporibus fuere concordes. Proponebat enim idem V., quod illam per violentiam sibi illatam, metu etiam mediante duxisset. Tu vero una cum capitulo tuo, quum tam minis quam admonitionibus inter eos saepe pacem reformare studeres, ei eos temere segregatos pariter reconciliari coegisses: Tandem vir uxorem suam super crimine fornicationis in iure convenit, quae, nescitur quo ducta spiritu, coepit publice confiteri, quod, quum vir negaret ei in debitis et necessariis providere, crimen compulsa est incurrere memoratum. Quumque diligentius a te fuisset admonita, ne ad suggestionem alicuius vel iniquum consilium illud tam turpe contra se proponeret, ipsa id manifestius asserebat. Sane, tu, convocato capitulo tuo et aliis viris discretis, quum ex eorundem consilio utrique privatim continentiam firmiter iniunxeris observandam, ita, quod caste viverent ab invicem segregati, et ex relatione quorundam perceperis, quod aliam memoratus V. intenderet ducere in uxorem, licet ipsum, ne hoc facere aliquatenus attentaret, monueris diligenter, ipse nihilominus extra civitatem furtim cum alia sponsalia et nuptias temere celebravit. Verum quum factum inquirere laborares, ut secundum illud procederes, supra dictus V. rei seriem, prout factum fuerat, explicans et exponens, ad audientiam nostram dicitur appellasse. Unde fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita processit, praetaxatum virum appellatione remota ad legitimam uxorem per excommunicationis sententiam redire compellas, et, iniuncta eidem poenitentia de commisso adulterio cum secunda, priorem maritali affectione ab ipso facias pertractari. [Capellanum etc. cf. c. 1. de sec. nupt. IV. 21. Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If a wife departs on her own authority from a husband who has lapsed into heresy, she is compelled to return to him when he returns; otherwise, if she had been separated from him by a judgment of the Church.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Florence.

Concerning the woman indeed who, when her husband lapsed into heresy, avoided his companionship without a judgment of the Church, whether, when he returns to Catholic unity, she is to be compelled to restore the marriage, it seems to us that the woman—especially if she departed with the intention that he who lapsed into heresy, affected alike by weariness and confusion, might convert himself from his error—is to be restored to him when he has returned, and, even if she is unwilling to return, is to be compelled. But if by a judgment of the Church she withdrew from him without hope of restoring the marriage, we say that she is in no way to be compelled to receive him. [But concerning the wife, etc. Compare chapter 7, On Burial, III. 28.]

> Si uxor a viro, lapso in haeresim, propria auctoritate divertit, ad eum reversum redire compellitur; secus, si per iudicium ecclesiae ab eo fuisset separata.
>
> Urbanus III. Florentino Episcopo.
>
> De illa vero, quae, viro suo labente in haeresim, ipsius consortium sine iudicio ecclesiae declinavit, utrum, revertente illo ad catholicam unitatem, ad redintegrandum matrimonium sit cogenda, videtur nobis, quod mulier, maxime si ea intentione decessit, ut lapsus in haeresim taedio pariter et confusione affectus se ab errore suo converteret, ei, quum reversus fuerit, est reddenda, quae, etiamsi reverti noluerit, compellatur. Si vero iudicio ecclesiae ab eo sine spe matrimonii redintegrandi recessit, ad recipiendum eum nullatenus eam dicimus compellendam. [De uxore vero etc. cf. c. 7. de sepult. III. 28.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: The conjugal bond is not dissolved when one of two faithful spouses lapses into heresy. But if one of two infidel spouses is converted to the faith and the other is unwilling to cohabit with that spouse, or not without blasphemy, or without mortal sin, the marriage is dissolved, and the convert will be able to contract.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Ferrara.

The more we know you to be skilled in canon law, the more we commend your fraternity in the Lord because in doubtful points of questions you have recourse to the Apostolic See, which by the Lord's disposition is the mother and teacher of all the faithful, so that the opinion which you once held in them while you taught others skill in canon law may either be corrected by the Apostolic See or approved. Indeed, your fraternity through its letters intimated to us that, when one of the spouses passes into heresy, the one who is left desires to fly to second vows and to procreate children; through your letters you considered that we should be consulted whether this can be done by law. Therefore, responding to your consultation on the common counsel of our brothers, we distinguish—although a certain predecessor of ours seems to have thought otherwise—whether one of two infidels is converted to the Catholic faith, or one of two faithful persons lapses into heresy or falls into the error of paganism. For if one of the infidel spouses is converted to the Catholic faith, while the other is either in no way willing to cohabit with that spouse, or is willing to do so at least not without blasphemy of the divine name, or in order to draw that spouse into mortal sin, the one who is left will pass to second vows if that person wishes. And in this case we understand what the Apostle says: "If the infidel departs, let that person depart. For a brother or sister is not subject to servitude in matters of this kind," and also the canon in which it is said that "an insult to the Creator dissolves the law of marriage with respect to the one who is left." But if one of two faithful spouses either lapses into heresy or passes into the error of paganism, we do not believe that in this case the one who is left can, while the other is living, fly to second nuptials, although in this case a greater insult to the Creator appears. For although a true marriage exists between infidels, it is nevertheless not ratified. But between the faithful it exists both true and ratified, because the sacrament of faith, which was once admitted, is never lost; but it makes the sacrament of marriage ratified, so that the sacrament itself endures between the spouses while it endures. Nor does it stand in the way that perhaps it is objected by certain persons that the faithful person who is left ought not without fault to be deprived of that person's right, since this happens in many cases, as if one of the spouses is castrated. By this response, however, the malice of certain persons is forestalled who, out of hatred for their spouses, or whenever they displeased one another, if they could dismiss them in such a case, would feign heresy so that, when their spouses married, they might recoil from the marriage itself. Through this same response is resolved that question by which it is asked whether the one who remained in the faith is compelled to return to the one who returns [either] from heresy or from infidelity. [Given at the Lateran, on the Kalends of May, 1199.]

> Vinculum coniugale non dissolvitur altero coniugum fidelium in haeresim lapso. Sed si unus infidelium coniugum convertatur ad fidem, et alter noluit sibi cohabitare, vel non sine blasphemia, vel sine peccato mortali, solvitur coniugium, et conversus contrahere poterit.
>
> Innocentius III. Ferrariensi Episcopo.
>
> Quanto te magis novimus in canonico iure peritum, tanto fraternitatem tuam amplius in Domino commendamus, quod in dubiis quaestionum articulis ad sedem apostolicam recurris, quae disponente Domino cunctorum fidelium mater est et magistra, ut opinio, quam in eis quondam habueras, dum alios canonici iuris peritiam edoceres, vel corrigatur per sedem apostolicam vel probetur. Sane tua nobis fraternitas suis literis intimavit, quod, altero coniugum ad haeresim transeunte, qui relinquitur ad secunda vota desiderat convolare et filios procreare, quod, utrum possit fieri de iure, per tuas nos duxisti literas consulendos. Nos igitur consultationi tuae de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio respondentes, distinguimus, licet quidam praedecessor noster sensisse aliter videatur, an ex duobus infidelibus alter ad fidem catholicam convertatur, vel ex duobus fidelibus alter labatur in haeresim, vel decidat in gentilitatis errorem. Si enim alter infidelium coniugum ad fidem catholicam convertatur, altero vel nullo modo, vel saltem non sine blasphemia divini nominis, vel ut eum pertrahat ad mortale peccatum, ei cohabitare volente: qui relinquitur, ad secunda, si voluerit, vota transibit. Et in hoc casu intelligimus quod ait Apostolus: "Si infidelis discedit, discedat. Frater enim vel soror non est servituti subiectus in huiusmodi," et canonem etiam, in quo dicitur, quod "contumelia creatoris solvit ius matrimonii circa eum, qui relinquitur." Si vero alter fidelium coniugum vel labatur in haeresim, vel transeat ad gentilitatis errorem, non credimus, quod in hoc casu is, qui relinquitur, vivente altero possit ad secundas nuptias convolare, licet in hoc casu maior appareat contumelia creatoris. Nam etsi matrimonium verum quidem inter infideles exsistat, non tamen est ratum. Inter fideles autem verum quidem et ratum exsistit, quia sacramentum fidei, quod semel est admissum, nunquam amittitur; sed ratum efficit coniugii sacramentum, ut ipsum in coniungibus illo durante perduret. Nec obstat, quod a quibusdam forsan obiicitur, quod fidelis relictus non debeat iure suo sine culpa privari, quum in multis casibus hoc contingat, ut si alter coniugum incidatur. Per hanc autem responsionem quorundam malitiae obviatur, qui in odium coniugum, vel quando sibi invicem displicerent, si eas possent in tali casu dimittere, simularent haeresim, ut ab ipsa nubentibus coniugibus resilirent. Per hanc ipsam responsionem illa solvitur quaestio, qua quaeritur, utrum ad eum, qui [vel] ab haeresi vel infidelitate revertitur, is, qui permansit in fide, redire cogatur. [Dat. Lat. Kal. Maii 1199.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Pagans joined in a degree prohibited only by canon law are not separated when converted to the faith. This first. If a pagan previously has several wives, after receiving the faith he will adhere to the first. This second. And if, after repudiating a wife, he contracted with a second, even after baptism he will dismiss the second and adhere to the repudiated first wife, even if the repudiated woman had contracted with another; otherwise if she had fornicated. This third.

The same, to the Bishops of Tiberias.

We rejoice in the Lord and in the power of his might, and we render abundant acts of thanksgiving to the Father of lights, from whom is every best thing given and every perfect gift, because, as you intimated to us by your letters, in these last days he who does not wish the death of a sinner but that he be converted and live has inspired the hearts of many pagans to come to the Christian faith. You sought to be instructed by an apostolic writing whether pagans who take as wives women joined to them in the second or third or a further degree, being so joined, ought after their conversion to remain together or to be separated from one another. Concerning this we respond to your fraternity in this manner: since the sacrament of marriage exists among both the faithful and infidels, as the Apostle shows, saying, "If any brother has an unbelieving wife, and she consents to dwell with him, let him not dismiss her," and in the aforesaid degrees marriage has been lawfully contracted by pagans with respect to themselves, who are not bound by canonical constitutions—"For what is it to us," according to the same Apostle, "to judge concerning those things which are outside?"—especially in favor of the Christian religion and faith, from the reception of which men can easily be recalled by wives who fear that they will be deserted, faithful persons of this kind who were matrimonially joined can freely and lawfully remain joined, since marriages are not dissolved through the sacrament of baptism, but crimes are remitted. But because pagans divide conjugal affection among several women at the same time, it is not without reason doubted whether after conversion they may retain all of them or which one of all. But because both the patriarchs and other just men before the law and likewise after the law are read to have had many wives at the same time, and no contrary precept appears in the Gospel or the law, nor are pagans subject to canonical institutes discovered afterward, as was premised, it seems that even now according to their rite they lawfully contract with different women, whose lawful unions the water of sacred baptism does not dissolve; and thus, after the example of the patriarchs, pagans converted to the faith of Christ will rejoice in a plurality of marriages. But this seems discordant and hostile to the Christian faith, since from the beginning one rib was transformed into one woman, and divine scripture testifies that for this reason a man shall leave father and mother and shall adhere to his wife, and the two shall be in one flesh; it did not say "three or more," but "two," nor did it say "he shall adhere to wives," but "to his wife." Hence Lamech, who is read to have had several wives at the same time, is reproved in the scriptures because he first introduced the reprobate form of bigamy. Although you did not ask concerning these things, nevertheless, wishing to render both you and others more certain concerning them as well, and that truth may prevail over falsehood, without any doubt we declare that it was never lawful for anyone to have several wives at the same time, unless it was granted to him by divine revelation, which is sometimes reckoned custom and at other times even divine right; through this, just as Jacob is excused from falsehood, the Israelites from theft, and Samson from homicide, so also the patriarchs and other just men who are read to have had several wives at once are excused from adultery. Indeed, this truthful sentence is proved also by the testimony of Truth, who testifies in the Gospel: "Whoever shall dismiss his wife, except on account of fornication, and shall marry another, commits adultery." If, therefore, after the wife has been dismissed, another cannot lawfully also be married, all the more while she is retained; through this it plainly appears that plurality concerning marriage is to be reproved in both sexes, since they are not judged by unequal standards. Moreover, etc. (Compare chapter 15, Which Children Are Legitimate, IV. 17.) But he who according to his rite repudiated his lawful wife, since Truth in the Gospel has reproved such repudiation, will never lawfully be able, while she lives, to have another, even after being converted to the faith of Christ, unless after his conversion she refuses to cohabit with him, or, even if she consents, nevertheless not without insult to the Creator, or in order to draw him into mortal sin. In this case, restitution would be denied to the one seeking restoration, although an unjust spoliation were established, because according to the Apostle a brother or sister is not subject to servitude in matters of this kind. But if she, converted also, follows him after he has been converted to the faith, before he marries a lawful wife on account of the aforesaid causes, he will be compelled to receive her. Moreover, although according to the truth of the Gospel he who marries a dismissed woman commits adultery, nevertheless the man who dismissed her will not be able to object to the dismissed woman the fornication arising from the fact that she married another after the repudiation, unless she otherwise fornicated.

> Pagani, iuncti in gradu prohibito lege canonica tantum, conversi ad fidem non separantur. Hoc primo. Si paganus prius plures uxores habeat, post fidem susceptam adhaerebit primae. Hoc secundo. Et, si repudiata uxore cum secunda contraxerit, etiam post baptismum dimittet secundam, et adhaerebit primae repudiatae, etiamsi repudiata cum alio contraxisset; secus si fornicata fuisset. Hoc tertio.
>
> Idem Tiberiadensi Episcopis.
>
> Gaudemus in Domino +et in potentia virtutis ipsius, et Patri luminum, a quo est omne datum optimum et omne donum perfectum, uberes gratiarum exsolvimus actiones, quod, sicut nobis tuis literis intimasti, diebus istis novissimis ille, qui non vult mortem peccatoris, sed ut convertatur et vivat, ut ad Christianam venirent fidem, multorum paganorum cordibus inspiravit. Utrum pagani uxores accipientes in secundo vel tertio, vel ulteriori gradu sibi coniunctas, sic coniuncti debeant post conversionem suam insimul remanere, vel ab invicem separari, edoceri per scriptum apostolicum postulasti. Super quo fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum sacramentum coniugii apud fideles et infideles exsistat, quemadmodum ostendit Apostolus, dicens: "Si quis frater infidelem habet uxorem, et haec consentit habitare cum eo, non illam dimittat," et in praemissis gradibus a paganis quoad eos matrimonium licite sit contractum, qui constitutionibus canonicis non arctantur, ("quid enim ad nos," secundum Apostolum eundem, "de his, quae foris sunt, iudicare?") in favorem praesertim Christianae religionis et fidei, a cuius perceptione per uxores, se deseri timentes, viri possunt facile revocari, fideles huiusmodi matrimonialiter copulati libere possunt et licite remanere coniuncti, quum per sacramentum baptismi non solvantur coniugia, sed crimina dimittantur. Quia vero pagani circa plures insimul feminas affectum dividunt coniugalem, utrum post conversionem omnes, vel quam ex omnibus retinere valeant, non immerito dubitatur. Quia vero tam patriarchae quam alii iusti viri ante legem pariter et post legem multas uxores insimul habuisse leguntur, nec contrarium apparet in evangelio vel lege praeceptum, neque pagani subiiciuntur canonicis institutis post inventis, quemadmodum est praemissum: videtur, quod nunc etiam iuxta ritum suum licite contrahant cum diversis, quorum coniunctiones legitimas unda sacri baptismatis non dissolvit, et ita patriarcharum exemplo ad fidem Christi conversi pagani coniugiorum pluralitate gaudebunt. Verum absonum hoc videtur et inimicum fidei Christianae, quum ab initio una costa in unam feminam sit conversa, et scriptura divina testetur, quod propter hoc relinquet homo patrem et matrem, et adhaerebit uxori suae, et erunt duo in carne una; non dixit: "tres vel plures," sed: "duo," nec dixit: "adhaerebit uxoribus," sed: "uxori." Unde Lamech, qui plures simul uxores legitur habuisse, reprehenditur in scripturis eo, quod ipse primus reprobandam bigamiae speciem introduxit. Licet autem de his non quaesieris, volentes tamen tam te quam alios super his etiam reddere certiores, et quod veritas praevaleat falsitati, sine dubitatione qualibet protestamur, quod Nec ulli unquam licuit insimul plures uxores habere, nisi cui fuit divina revelatione concessum, quae mos quandoque, interdum etiam fas censetur, per quam, sicut Iacob a mendacio, Israelitae a furto et Samson ab homicidio, sic et patriarchae et alii viri iusti, qui plures leguntur simul habuisse uxores, ab adulterio excusantur. Sane veridica haec sententia probatur etiam de testimonio veritatis, testantis in evangelio: "Quicunque dimiserit uxorem suam nisi ob fornicationem, et aliam duxerit, moechatur." Si ergo, uxore dimissa, duci et alia de iure non potest, fortius et ipsa retenta; per quod evidenter apparet, pluralitatem in utroque sexu, quum non ad imparia iudicentur, circa matrimonium reprobandam. Ceterum etc. (cf. c. 15. Qui fil. sint leg. IV. 17.) Qui autem secundum ritum suum legitimam repudiavit uxorem, quum tale repudium veritas in evangelio reprobaverit, nunquam ea vivente licite poterit aliam, etiam ad fidem Christi conversus, habere, nisi post conversionem ipsius illa renuat cohabitare cum ipso, aut etiamsi consentiat, non tamen absque contumelia creatoris, vel ut eum pertrahat ad mortale peccatum. In quo casu restitutionem petenti, quamvis de iniusta spoliatione constaret, restitutio negaretur, quia secundum Apostolum frater aut soror non est in huiusmodi subiectus servituti. Quodsi conversum ad fidem et illa conversa sequatur, antequam propter causas praedictas legitimam ille ducat uxorem, eam recipere compelletur. Quamvis quoque secundum evangelicam veritatem qui duxerit dimissam moechatur, non tamen dimissor poterit obiicere fornicationem dimissae pro eo, quod nupsit alii post repudium, nisi alias fuerit fornicata.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It is not lawful to take the widow of a brother as wife, and if married in fact she is to be separated, unless the Church dispenses otherwise.

The same, to the Bishop of Livonia and the brothers who are with him.

God, who his Church—(And below: [Compare chapter 11, On Life and Honesty, III. 1.]) But because in contracting marriages the rite among those of the Church of Livonia newly converted to the Catholic faith is different from ours, since they do not attend to the canonical distinction in consanguinity or affinity, and have been accustomed indiscriminately to join the widows of their brothers to themselves; lest on account of this they be drawn back from their good purpose—since certain of them were unwilling to believe unless you permitted them to retain their brothers' widows, nor were you willing to receive them for baptism unless they dismissed such women —on account of the newness and weakness of that people, we concede that they may enjoy marriages contracted with their brothers' widows, if nevertheless, when the brothers died without offspring, they contracted with such women so that they might raise up the seed of the deceased according to the Mosaic law; prohibiting them from joining such women to themselves henceforth, after they have come to the faith. [To these things,] adhering to the footsteps of blessed Pope Gregory, our predecessor of holy memory, lest the people of Livonia, through fear of more austere requirements, withdraw from the good which it began, by apostolic authority we dispense with them so that they may contract marriage in the fourth and further generation until they are more fully made firm in the faith; conceding this to them not with the intention that, after they have been made firm in the faith with a stable root, they may be joined to such persons; for according to the word of the Apostle, saying, "I gave you milk as drink, not meat," we conceded that these things are to be held for the present only, not for future times, lest, which may it not be, the good which has been planted with a still-weak root be burned up, but rather that it may be strengthened and faithfully preserved unto perfection. But since the sacrament of marriage exists among the faithful and infidels, as the Apostle declares: "If any brother," he says, "has an unbelieving wife, and she consents to dwell with him, let him not dismiss her"; and since by pagans, who are not bound by canonical constitutions—(for what is it to us, according to the same Apostle, to judge concerning those who are outside?)—marriage in the second and third degree is lawfully contracted with respect to themselves: in favor of the Christian religion and faith, from the reception of which men can easily be recalled by wives who fear that they will be deserted, faithful persons who, in this degree while in infidelity, were matrimonially joined to one another can freely and easily remain joined, since marriages are not dissolved through the sacrament of baptism but crimes are remitted. Moreover, etc. [Compare chapter 7, On Penance, V. 38. Given on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of May, in the fourth year, 1201.]

Non licet relictam fratris in uxorem accipere, et de facto ducta separanda est, nisi aliter ecclesia dispenset.

Idem Livoniensi Episcopo, et eis, qui cum ipso sunt fratribus.

Deus, qui ecclesiam suam (Et infra: [cf. c. 11. de vita et hon. III. 1.]) Quia vero in matrimoniis contrahendis dispar est ritus in Livoniensium ecclesia de novo ad fidem catholicam conversorum a nostro, quum in consanguinitate vel affinitate distinctionem canonicam non attendant, et relictas fratrum indistincte sibi consueverint copulare: ne propter hoc a bono proposito retrahantur, quum nec quidam eorum voluerint credere, nisi relictas fratrum eos pateremini retinere, nec vos eos, nisi tales dimitterent, recipere volueritis ad baptisma, propter novitatem et infirmitatem gentis eiusdem concedimus, ut matrimoniis contractis cum relictis fratrum utantur; si tamen, fratribus decedentibus sine prole, ut semen defuncti iuxta legem Mosaicam suscitarent, cum talibus contraxerunt; ne tales sibi de cetero, postquam ad fidem venerint, copulent, prohibentes. [Ad haec] sanctae memoriae beati Gregorii papae, praedecessoris nostri, vestigiis adhaerentes, ne populus Livoniensis a bono, quod coepit, austeriora metuendo recedat, ut in quarta et ulterius generatione matrimonium contrahant, donec in fide plenius solidentur, cum eis auctoritate apostolica dispensamus; non ea intentione concedentes hoc ipsis, ut, postquam firma radice in fide fuerint solidati, talibus coniungantur; nam secundum apostoli verbum, dicentis: "lac dedi vobis potum, non escam," illis modo, non posteris temporibus tenenda concessimus, ne, quod absit, exuratur bonum, quod adhuc infirma est radice plantatum, sed firmetur potius et usque ad perfectionem fideliter conservetur. Quum autem sacramentum coniugii apud fideles et infideles exsistat, quemadmodum apostolus protestatur: "Si quis, inquiens, frater infidelem habuit uxorem et haec consentit habitare cum eo, non eam dimittat;" et a paganis, qui constitutionibus canonicis non arctantur (quid enim ad nos secundum eundem apostolum de iis, qui foris sunt, iudicare), in secundo et tertio gradu quoad eos licite contrahatur: in favorem Christianae religionis et fidei a cuius receptione per uxores se deseri timentes, viri possunt facile revocari, fideles, in hoc gradu in infidelitate sibi matrimonialiter copulati, libere possunt et facile remanere coniuncti, quum per sacramentum baptismatis non dissolvantur coniugia sed crimina dimittantur. Ceterum etc. [cf. c. 7. de poenit. V. 38. Dat. XIII. Kal. Mai. Ao. IV. 1201.]

Title XX: On Donations between Husband and Wife, and on Dowry to Be Restored after Separation

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: When a marriage has been lawfully separated, the dowry is to be restored.

From the council held at Worms.

But when women have been separated from their own husbands for some lawful cause, we command that their entire dowry be returned to them, which they received on the wedding day; and after the completion of a year let them marry another husband, if they wish; and likewise let a husband marry another wife.

DE DONATIONIBUS INTER VIRUM ET UXOREM, ET DE DOTE POST DIVORTIUM RESTITUENDA.

Separato licite matrimonio dos restituenda est.

Ex concilio habito apud Wormaciam.

Mulieres vero, quum pro aliqua licita causa a propriis viris fuerint separatae, totam dotem praecipimus sibi reddi, quam in die nuptiali receperunt et post expletum annum accipiant alium virum, si voluerint; similiter et vir uxorem.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: When the marriage has been dissolved, the husband is compelled to restore the dowry and to divide the goods which came to them in common.

Urban III, to the Dean, Cantor, and Chapter of Lisieux.

The woman P. signified to us that H., whom she held in the place of a husband, after a separation had solemnly been pronounced between them, unlawfully detains her dowry and refuses to return it; he also endeavors to claim for himself, with her wholly excluded, the possessions which came to them in common by the title of any contract while they lived together. Therefore, by apostolic writings, we command your discretion that, if it is so and there is nothing else that stands in the way, by ecclesiastical compulsion you compel him to restitution of the dowry and to division of those things which they formerly had in common.

> Soluto matrimonio cogitur vir dotem restituere, et bona dividere, quae communiter eis obvenerunt.
>
> Urbanus III. Decano, Cantori et Capitulo Lexonensibus.
>
> Significavit nobis P. mulier, quod H. quem loco viri tenebat, divortio inter eos solenniter celebrato, dotem suam illicite detinet et reddere contradicit, possessiones etiam, quae ipsis, dum simul viverent, cuiuscunque contractus titulo communiter obvenerunt, ea prorsus exclusa sibi nititur vindicare. Ideoque discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si ita est, et non est aliud quod obsistat, ipsum ad restitutionem dotis, et ad divisionem eorum, quae olim communiter habuerunt, districtione ecclesiastica compellatis.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A delegate to a matrimonial case, if he renders a sentence of separation, ought to pronounce that the dowry is to be restored. And it is a case very capable of being cited.

Clement III.

We wonder greatly at your prudence, because, when we had committed to you for canonical termination the matrimonial case which was being conducted between H., a citizen of Pisa, and the woman M., and you, finding consanguinity between them in the sixth or seventh degree, had rendered a sentence of separation, you deferred making any determination concerning the dowry which the woman was seeking back from the man. Therefore, because according to the laws you, who took principal cognizance of the marriage, were also able to take accessory cognizance of and judicially determine the dowry, which is an incidental cause, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, after a warning has been premised, you compel the aforesaid H. not to delay restoring to the aforesaid M. her entire dowry, as shall be canonical.

> Delegatus ad causam matrimonii, si ferat sententiam divortii, pronunciare debet dotem restitui. Et est casus multum allegabilis.
>
> Clemens III.
>
> De prudentia vestra valde miramur, quod, quum vobis causam matrimonii, quae vertebatur inter H. Pisanum civem et M. mulierem commisissemus canonice terminandum, et vos, consanguinitatem inter eos in sexto vel septimo gradu invenientes, sententiam divortii tulissetis, de dote, quam a viro mulier repetebat, quicquam statuere distulistis. Quia igitur secundum iura vos, qui de matrimonio principaliter cognovistis, et de dote, quae est causa incidens, accessorie cognoscere valuistis et sententialiter diffinire, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praedictum H. monitione praemissa cogatis, ut praedictae M. totam dotem suam, sicut canonicum fuerit, restituere non moretur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A woman separated from her husband on account of adultery loses her dowry.

Clement III.

It very often happens, as you propose, that in your parish women withdraw from their husbands on account of fornication and are known to remain so until the death of the husbands themselves; but when those men are dead and the women seek back their dowry together with their dower from the blood relatives to whom the inheritances of those men come, they deny them a hearing and are unwilling to restore what they demand, for this reason: because they are thought to have made themselves unworthy by the very fact that they considered that they should withdraw from their husbands on account of fornication. [Moreover, etc. Compare chapter 2, On Delays, II. 8.] Therefore, because you desire to be instructed by an apostolic response about what is to be done in each case,] we therefore respond in this matter that, if a woman, on account of her own fornication, withdraws from her husband by a judgment of the Church or by her own will, and afterward is not reconciled to him, when he is dead she will not be able to seek back her dowry or her dower. [In the second case, etc. (Compare chapter 2, On Delays, II. 8.) Given at the Lateran, in the third year, 1190.]

Mulier, propter adulterium a viro separata, perdit dotem.

Clemens III.

Plerumque accidit, ut proponis, quod in parochia tua mulieres a viris suis causa fornicationis recedunt, et sic usque ad mortem ipsorum permanere noscuntur; ipsis vero defunctis, quum a consanguineis, ad quos hereditates eorum perveniunt, dotem suam cum dotalitio suo repetunt, eis audientiam denegant, et nolunt restituere quod reposcunt, ob hanc causam, quia eo ipso se indignas fecisse putantur, quod a viris suis causa fornicationis duxerint recedendum. [Praeterea etc. cf. c. 2. de dilat. II. 8.] Quia igitur quid agendum sit in utroque casu apostolico responso desideras edoceri,] in hoc itaque respondemus, quod, Si mulier ob causam suae fornicationis iudicio ecclesiae aut propria voluntate a viro suo recesserit, nec reconciliata postea sit eidem, eo defuncto dotem vel dotalitium suum repetere non valebit. [In secundo etc. (cf. c. 2. de dilat. II. 8.) Dat. Lat. Ao. III. 1190.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A woman is compelled by the office of the judge to relinquish things given to her by a man on account of nuptials for the preservation of an unlawful marriage, if such a donation presents an impediment to the dissolution of such a marriage. This is what it says according to the understanding which pleases Panormitanus more.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Compostela and all the Bishops constituted in the Kingdom of León.

Although it is necessary [that scandals come, nevertheless woe to that man through whom scandal comes. For how many disturbances and scandals have come upon the entire world in our days we experience today more in fact than we find written in a book. But it is necessary that scandals come, not only, namely, as something unavoidable, but also as something useful, since where the evil man fails, the good man makes progress, and gold is proved in the furnace. But among the other things by which the Christian people is scandalized today, foremost is the persecution of the pagans, which, with sins demanding it, has grown strong beyond measure both in the east and in the west;

against this, in both places, they thought to find a remedy similar in a certain manner, but because they did not set God before their sight, what was found as a remedy was turned into danger. Indeed, in the east one woman was incestuously joined to two men, but in the west one man presumed to join two women to himself through incest. And in the incest committed in the east, not only the consent but also the authority of the clerics dwelling there intervened. But in the detestable union contracted in the west, although perhaps it was attempted not without the assent of certain ecclesiastical men, ecclesiastical authority nevertheless in no way intervened. But God, wishing to avenge the greater sin more quickly and to deter others from similar things, destroyed Conrad, the late marquis, who ... had previously adhered through incest to the Queen of Jerusalem, by the sword, and Henry, the late Count of Champagne, who succeeded him in a certain manner both in fault and in punishment, by a fall, but each by an unforeseen death. Yet he has not exercised his vengeance against the authors of this iniquity in the west. But the more long-sufferingly he bears them, perhaps the more severely he will avenge. Although the Apostolic See seemed to have dissembled what had been committed concerning this in the east on account of the malice of the time and the pressing persecution, nevertheless it employed the rigor of canonical compulsion to avenge what had been attempted in the west. For when it had come to the hearing of Pope Celestine, our predecessor of good memory, that the King of León had presumed incestuously to join to himself the daughter of our dearest son in Christ, the illustrious King of Portugal, he bound both the King of Portugal himself and those incestuously joined with a sentence of excommunication, and subjected the kingdoms of León and Portugal to a sentence of interdict, whence what had been unlawfully done was wholly revoked. But the said King of León, extending his hand to worse things, like the one of whom scripture says, "Woe to that man who draws sin after himself like a long garment, and the impious man, when he has come into the depth of vices, despises," shamelessly presumed, contrary to the interdict of the Church, to join to himself the daughter of our dearest son in Christ, the illustrious King of Castile—namely, his own niece. When this came to our knowledge, we considered that our beloved son Brother Rainerius, a man equally worthy of reverence for knowledge and religion, acceptable to God and men by reason of his knowledge and honesty, should be sent into Spain, so that according to the prophetic word he might dissolve the bonds of impiety and loose the bundles that oppress. By the grace of God he shook his hands free from every gift, so that what is read might truly be referred to him: "There was no one who enriched Abraham." Therefore, when he arrived in Spain, he diligently admonished the said King of León once and a second time on our behalf that he should recoil from so detestable and unspeakable a union, all the bonds which had been contracted for consummating that union having been dissolved. But when he had made no progress at all with him by his admonitions, he assigned him a fixed day and place; and when he had waited for him even beyond the term, he promulgated against him, who contumaciously absented himself, a sentence of excommunication according to the form of our mandate, and enclosed the Kingdom of León under a general interdict. But he proceeded in nothing against the aforementioned King of Castile or his land, since the same king submitted himself to his mandates and assertively proposed that he would receive his daughter if she were returned to him. Whether he did this from his heart is known more fully by him who is the searcher of hearts and knower of secrets. Recently, however, our venerable brothers the Archbishop of Toledo and the Bishop of Palencia on behalf of the King of Castile himself, and our venerable brother the Bishop of Zamora on behalf of the King of León, coming to the Apostolic See, requested that we ought to dispense with the same King of León and the daughter of the said King of Castile concerning so incestuous a union. On account of this, unless that special grace which we have toward the devotion of the said King of Castile had tempered the movement of our mind, we would have taken care to exercise ecclesiastical severity against them in such a way that thereafter, in our times, no persons would bring to us petitions so often repudiated and condemned; since they themselves also knew that this had been requested more often from the same predecessor of ours, and had been prohibited by him, not granted. But finally the aforementioned archbishop and bishops, understanding that not only could they not obtain indulgence from us concerning this, but could scarcely obtain a hearing from us, at last requested from us that the interdict pronounced upon the land of the King of León be remitted, asserting that from it a threefold danger threatened the whole kingdom from heretics, Saracens, and even Christians. From heretics: because, since through the interdict itself the mouths of the shepherds were closed in those regions, the faithful could not be instructed by them against the heretics and be informed in any manner to resist them; whence, both from this and because the King of León, asserting himself to be aggrieved by the Church, scarcely resisted them, the heretics grew strong against the faithful and various heresies sprouted in the kingdom itself. From the Saracens: because, since through the exhortations and remissions of the Church the people of the Spains had been accustomed to be induced to the conquest of the pagans, when the office of preachers ceased, the devotion of the people also grew cold; because, since the people saw themselves with their prince subjected to the same penalty with respect to the interdict, perhaps they did not believe themselves immune from the fault to which they had consented even by remaining silent, on account of which they burned less ardently for the defeat of the Saracens, lest they die in sin. From the Catholics: because, since clerics could not minister spiritual things to laymen, the laymen withdrew temporal things from the clerics, withholding offerings, first fruits, and tithes; whence, since the clerics in those regions had been accustomed for the greater part to be sustained from these things, when they were withdrawn, they were compelled not only to beg but to dig and to serve Jews, to the reproach of the Church and of the whole of Christianity. But it seemed difficult to assent to their petition and canonically to relax without fitting satisfaction a sentence rendered from intention, order, and cause. From intention indeed: because, as God bears witness to our conscience, we proceeded to this for no reason except the consideration of justice and honesty, since, on the contrary, a presumption could rather have arisen against us if we had considered that so detestable a deed should be tolerated with patience. From order: because the said Brother R., after lawful admonitions and delays, finally struck the contumacious man with ecclesiastical compulsion. From cause: by example, namely divine and human. Divine: because, when David sinned in numbering the people, the Lord poured out upon the people the vessels of his wrath; whence the same David is read to have said, confessing the sin to the Lord: "I am he who sinned; I am he who acted iniquitously. These, who are sheep, what had they done? Remove, I beseech you, your face, O Lord, from your people." Human: since our already-mentioned predecessor (so that examples may not be sought far away) took care to promulgate the aforesaid sentences against the aforesaid kings of Portugal and León and their kingdoms. Moreover, it would be a matter of evil example, because if perhaps it happened that we promulgated a similar sentence against other kingdoms, a similar grace would be sought from us; if perhaps we denied it, there would seem to be acceptance of persons with us. From this also a suspicion concerning us could arise among certain persons, some perhaps presuming that we were moved to this by a hidden cause. Although, therefore, for the aforesaid causes the said petition did not seem admissible, nevertheless, because where there is a multitude in a case something is to be taken away from severity so that sincere charity may come to the aid of greater evils to be healed, in that matter, at the petition of the aforesaid archbishop and bishops, on the common counsel of our brothers, we considered that grace should be granted concerning the matter from which the impediments expressed above seemed to proceed. Therefore we relaxed the interdict not wholly, but only in one part, and not perpetually, but for a time—namely for as long as it shall please us and we shall see it to be expedient—so that meanwhile we may prove the spirits, whether they are of God, and whether (as the same archbishop and bishops assert) the utility hoped for from it would follow; namely, in such a way that divine offices are celebrated in the kingdom itself, but the bodies of the dead are not delivered to ecclesiastical burial. In this, however, we grant special grace to the clerics, namely that they be buried in an ecclesiastical cemetery with the accustomed solemnity ceasing. Although this could perhaps seem discordant to certain persons, that when the office has been restored ecclesiastical burial should be denied, because according to the canonical sanctions we ought to communicate when dead with the one with whom we communicated when living, nevertheless to those who understand rightly nothing incongruous occurs from this, since, according to the institutes of the Lateran Council, those who die from tournaments, even if through penance they are reconciled to the Church, are nevertheless deprived of Christian burial. But so that we may seem not to remit the penalty but rather to commute it, we took care to bind the said King of León, the aforementioned daughter of the King of Castile, and all their principal counselors and supporters with a sentence of excommunication, commanding that, to whatever city, town, or village they come, no one presume to celebrate divine offices there while they are present. But we shall command the said King of Castile and our dearest daughter in Christ, the queen his wife, to furnish sworn security that they will stand by our mandates, and either to express in the oath that they will devote effective labor to dissolving so unlawful a union, or we shall cause this to be commanded to them after the oath has been furnished; nor do we believe that concerning this they will show themselves contumacious in any manner, since in the hands of the aforesaid Brother R. (as appears from the letters of the same king) they had firmly promised that they would stand by the mandates of the Church, and had furnished sufficient cause for consummating a union of this kind. But if perchance (which we do not believe) they are unwilling to obey our mandates, we shall command them and their principal counselors and supporters to be excommunicated, and wherever they come we shall prohibit divine offices from being celebrated, so that in this way at least they may return to the mandate of the Church, according to what is read in the Psalmist: "Fill their faces with ignominy, and they shall seek your name, O Lord."] But because certain castles which the same King of León is said to have delivered as dowry to the said daughter of the King of Castile, in such a way that if he left her on any occasion they would fall into her right, seem to present an impediment to dissolving a union of this kind, since the castles themselves were given not so much for a base cause as rather for no cause, seeing that no marriage exists between them and therefore neither a dowry nor a donation on account of nuptials, lest that fall to her advantage which ought rather to be turned to her punishment, we will that the castles themselves be restored and that the girl herself be constrained to this through a sentence of excommunication, decreeing by apostolic authority that, if any offspring has been or shall be received from so incestuous and condemned a union, it is to be held wholly spurious and illegitimate, and according to lawful statutes is to succeed to the paternal goods on no occasion whatsoever. But if not even [thus] do the aforesaid King of León and daughter of the King of Castile hasten to depart from one another according to the apostolic mandate, we shall take care to exercise against them the gravest compulsion, which as a precaution we did not consider should be explained in the present letters. [Therefore to the fraternity, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the eighth day before the Kalends of June, 1199.]

> Cogitur mulier ex officio iudicis, donata sibi a viro propter nuptias pro conservatione illiciti matrimonii relaxare, si talis donatio praestet impedimentum dissolutioni talis matrimonii. H. d. secundum intellectum, qui plus placet Panormitano.
>
> Innocentius III. Compostellano Archiepiscopo et universis Episcopis in regno Legionensi constitutis.
>
> Etsi necesse sit [ut scandala veniant, vae tamen est homini illi, per quem scandalum venit. Quot enim turbationes et scandala diebus nostris orbi supervenerint universo, hodie plus experimur in facto, quam scriptum reperiamus in libro. Necesse est autem ut veniant scandala, non solum scilicet inevitabile, sed et utile: quoniam in quo deficit malus proficit bonus, et aurum in fornace probatur. Inter cetera vero, in quibus scandalizatur hodie populus Christianus, praecipuum est persecutio paganorum, quae tam in oriente quam in occidente peccatis exigentibus invaluit ultra modum; contra quam utrobique simile quodammodo putaverunt remedium invenire; sed quia Deum ante suum non proposuere conspectum, quod inventum est in remedium in periculum est conversum. Sane in oriente una duobus fuit incestuose coniuncta, in occidente vero unus sibi duas praesumpsit iungere per incestum. Et incestui quidem in oriente commisso non solum consensus, sed et auctoritas clericorum ibi consistentium intercessit. Sed in detestabili copula in occidente contracta, licet non absque quorundam ecclesiasticorum virorum assensu fuerit forsitan attentata, auctoritas tamen ecclesiastica nullatenus intervenit. Volens autem Deus maius peccatum vindicare celerius, et a similibus alios deterrere, tam Conradum quondam marchionem, qui ... reginae Hierosolymitanae prius adhaeserat per incestum, gladio, quam

Henricum quondam Campaniae comitem, qui ei et in culpa quodammodo et in poena successit, praecipitio, utrumque vero morte impraevisa peremit. Nondum autem in huius iniquitatis auctores in occidente suam exercuit ultionem. Sed quanto longanimius sustinet, tanto forsitan severius vindicabit. Licet autem apostolica sedes quod super hoc fuerat in oriente commissum propter malitiam temporis et persecutionem urgentem dissimulare sit visa, ad vindicandum tamen quod in occidente fuerat attentatum rigore canonicae districtionis est usa. Nam quum ad bonae memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri audientiam pervenisset, quod rex Legionensis filiam carissimi in Christo filii nostri Portugalliae regis illustris incestuose sibi praesumpserat copulare, tam regem ipsum Portugalliae quam incestuose coniunctos excommunicationis sententia innodavit, et Legionense ac Portugalliae regna sententiae supposuit interdicti, unde quod illegitime factum fuerat est penitus revocatum. Verum dictus rex Legionensis ad deteriora manum extendens, sicut is, de quo dicit scriptura: "Vae homini illi, qui post se trahit peccatum quasi longam vestem, et impius, quum venerit in profundum vitiorum, contemnit," filiam carissimi in Christo filii nostri regis illustris Castellae, neptem videlicet propriam, impudenter sibi contra interdictum ecclesiae copulare praesumpsit. Quod quum ad nostram notitiam pervenisset, dilectum filium fratrem Rainerium, virum scientia et religione pariter reverendum, Deo et hominibus obtentu scientiae et honestatis acceptum, in Hispaniam duximus destinandum, ut iuxta verbum propheticum dissolveret colligationes impietatis; solveret fasciculos deprimentes; qui per Dei gratiam ab omni munere manus excussit ita, ut quod legitur de ipso possit vere referri: "Non fuit qui ditaverit Abraham." Ipse igitur quum in Hispaniam pervenisset, dictum regem Legionensem semel et iterum ex parte nostra commonuit diligenter, ut a tam detestabili et nefanda copula resiliret, universis colligationibus dissolutis, quae fuerant pro ipsa copula consummanda contractae. Sed quum apud eum nihil prorsus monitis profecisset, certum ei diem assignavit et locum, et quum ipsum etiam ultra terminum exspectasset, in eum se contumaciter absentantem iuxta formam mandati nostri excommunicationis sententiam promulgavit, et regnum Legionense interdicto generali conclusit. In memoratum vero regem Castellae vel terram suam in nullo processit, quum idem rex se mandatis eius exponeret, et quod reciperet filiam suam, si sibi redderetur, proponeret assertive. Quod utrum ex animo fecerit, ille plenius novit, qui scrutator est cordium et cognitor secretorum. Nuper autem venerabiles fratres nostri Toletanus archiepiscopus et episcopus Palentinus ex parte ipsius regis Castellae, et ex parte Legionensis venerabilis frater Zamorensis episcopus, ad sedem apostolicam accedentes, postulabant, ut cum eodem rege Legionensi et filia dicti regis Castellae deberemus super tam incestuosa copula dispensare; propter quod, nisi specialis illa gratia, quam ad devotionem dicti regis Castellae habemus, motum nostri animi temperasset, in ipsos ita curassemus severitatem ecclesiasticam exercere, quod nulli de cetero temporibus nostris ad nos repudiatas toties et damnatas petitiones afferrent; quum ipsi etiam noverint, quod id ab eodem praedecessore nostro saepius postulatum fuerit, et ab eo inhibitum, non indultum. Tandem vero intelligentes archiepiscopus et episcopi memorati, quod non solum indulgentiam super hoc a nobis, sed vix etiam possent a nobis audientiam impetrare, interdictum in terram regis Legionensis prolatum tandem a nobis postulavere remitti, asserentes, quod ex eo triplex toti regno periculum ab haereticis, Sarracenis et Christianis etiam imminebat. Ab haereticis: quia, quum per interdictum ipsum clausa essent in partibus illis ora pastorum, non poterant fideles per eos contra haereticos instrui, et ad resistendum eis aliquatenus informari; unde, cum ex hoc, tum quia rex Legionensis ab ecclesia se asserens aggravatum, eis minime resistebat, invalescebant contra fideles haeretici, et in regno ipso haereses variae pullullabant. A Sarracenis: quoniam, quum per exhortationes et remissiones ecclesiae Hispaniarum populus consuevisset ad expugnationem paganorum induci, cessante praedicatorum officio populi etiam devotio tepescebat, quia, quum se cum principe suo quoad interdictum eidem videret poenae subiectum, a culpa, cui vel tacendo consenserat, forte se non credebat immunem, propter quod minus circa debellationem Sarracenorum fervebat, ne decederet in peccato. A catholicis: quia, quum clerici laicis spiritualia ministrare non possent, laici clericis temporalia subtrahebant, oblationes, primitias et decimas detinentes, unde, quum clerici ex his pro maiori parte in partibus illis consueverint sustentari, eis subtractis non solum mendicare, sed fodere, et servire Iudaeis in ecclesia et totius Christianitatis opprobrium cogebantur. Videbatur autem difficile petitioni eorum annuere, et sententiam ex animo, ordine et causa latam canonice sine satisfactione congrua relaxare. Ex animo siquidem: quia, sicut Deus perhibet testimonium conscientiae nostrae, ad hoc non nisi iustitiae et honestatis obtentu processimus, quum ex contrario potius contra nos oriri praesumptio potuisset, si tam detestabile facinus duxissemus in patientia tolerandum. Ex ordine: quia dictus frater R. post commonitiones et dilationes legitimas, tandem districtione percussit ecclesiastica contumacem. Ex causa: exemplo, divino videlicet et humano. Divino: quia, quum David in populi numeratione peccasset, Dominus in populum vasa sui furoris effudit, unde idem David dixisse legitur, peccatum Domino confitendo: "Ego sum qui peccavi, ego qui inique egi. Isti, qui oves sunt, quid fecerant? Auferatur, obsecro, facies tua, Domine, ex populo tuo." Humano: quum iam dictus praedecessor noster (ut non longe petantur exempla) in praedictos Portugalliae et Legionensem reges et regna ipsorum praedictas sententias curaverit promulgare. Esset insuper res mali exempli, quia, si forsan in alia regna similem nos contingeret promulgare sententiam, similis a nobis gratia peteretur, quam si forsitan negaremus, apud nos esse videretur acceptio personarum. Ex hoc etiam de nobis posset apud aliquos oriri suspicio, praesumentibus forte quibusdam, quod ad id moveremur ex causa latenti. Licet igitur ex causis praemissis non videretur dicta petitio admittenda, quia tamen ubi est multitudo in causa, detrahendum est aliquid severitati, ut maioribus malis sanandis caritas sincera subveniat, in eo ad petitionem praedictorum archiepiscopi et episcoporum gratiam de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio duximus faciendam, ex quo videbantur impedimenta expressa superius provenire. Relaxavimus ergo non in totum, sed in una parte solummodo interdictum, nec perpetuo, sed ad tempus, quamdiu scilicet nobis placuerit et viderimus expedire, ut probemus interim spiritus, si ex Deo sint, et an (sicut iidem archiepiscopus et episcopi asseverant) sperata inde utilitas sequeretur; sic videlicet, ut in regno ipso divina celebrentur officia, sed decedentium corpora sepulturae ecclesiasticae non tradantur. In quo tamen clericis gratiam facimus specialem, in eo videlicet, ut in coemeterio ecclesiastico cessante solennitate solita tumulentur. Quod licet aliquibus posset absonum forte videri, ut officio restituto sepultura ecclesiastica denegetur, quia, iuxta canonicas sanctiones, cui communicavimus vivo communicare deberemus et mortuo: recte tamen intelligentibus nihil ex hoc incongruitatis occurrit, quum iuxta Lateranensis instituta concilii decedentes ex torneamentis, etsi per poenitentiam reconcilientur ecclesiae, Christiana tamen sepultura priventur. Ut autem non remittere poenam, sed commutare potius videamur, dictum regem Legionensem et memoratam filiam regis Castellae ac omnes principales eorum consiliarios et fautores excommunicationis curavimus sententia innodare, mandantes, ut ad quamcunque civitatem, oppidum vel villam devenerint, nullus ibidem eis praesentibus divina praesumat officia celebrare. Dicto autem rege Castellae et carissimae in Christo filiae nostrae reginae uxori eius dabimus in mandatis, ut, quod stent mandatis nostris, iuratoriam exhibeant cautionem, et vel exprimant in iuramento, quod ad dissolvendam tam illegitimam copulam dent operam efficacem, vel id nos eis faciemus praestito iuramento mandari; nec credimus, quod super hoc se aliquatenus exhibeant contumaces, quum, quod starent mandatis ecclesiae, in manibus praedicti fratris R. (sicut ex literis eiusdem regis apparet) firmiter promisissent, et impendissent causam sufficientem ad copulam huiusmodi consummandam. Quod si forsan (quod non credimus) mandatis nostris noluerint obedire, ipsos et principales eorum consiliarios et fautores excommunicari mandabimus, et quocunque devenerint, divina prohibebimus officia celebrari, ut sic saltem ad mandatum ecclesiae revertantur, iuxta quod legitur in Psalmista: "Imple facies eorum ignominia, et quaerent nomen tuum, Domine."] Quia vero castra quaedam, quae idem rex Legionensis dictae filiae regis Castellae in dotem tradidisse proponitur ita, ut, si eam aliqua occasione relinqueret, ipsa cederent in ius eius, impedimentum praestare videntur huiusmodi copulae dissolvendae, quum castra ipsa non tam ob turpem, quam ob nullam potius causam sint data, utpote, quum inter eos matrimonium non exsistat, et ideo nec dos, nec donatio propter nuptias: ne ad commodum ei cedat quod debet in poenam eius potius retorqueri, castra ipsa restitui volumus, et ad id puellam ipsam per excommunicationis sententiam coarctari, auctoritate apostolica decernentes, ut, si ex tam incestuosa et damnata copula proles est vel fuerit quaecunque suscepta, spuria et illegitima penitus habeatur, quae secundum statuta legitima in bonis paternis nulla prorsus occasione succedat. Quod si nec [sic] praedictis rex Legionensis et filia regis Castellae a se invicem iuxta mandatum apostolicum discedere maturaverint in eos districtionem curabimus gravissimam exercere quam ad cautelam praesentibus non duximus literis explicandam. [Ideoque fraternitati etc. Dat. Lat. VIII. Kal. Iun. 1199.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A usufructuary who, without the consent of the owner, gives the thing itself to his wife on account of nuptials does not transfer to her more right than he himself had; the same concerning one who has a thing as an inheritance or a fief under a condition that takes it away.

The same, to the Archdeacon of Saint Andrews in Scotland.

Recently your discretion asked of us: if some land had been given to someone not as an inheritance or fief, but only to him to be possessed for as long as he lived, and he afterward granted a third part to his wife as dowry, whether, when he was dead, the wife ought to have and hold the aforesaid dowry for as long as she lived, since the Church is bound to protect the dowries of widows. You asked in addition to be instructed by our letters: if some land had been given to someone and to the heir whom he would beget from a lawful wife as an inheritance or fief, and afterward, after a certain part of it had been granted to his wife as dowry, he died without offspring, whether the woman herself could have the same dowry by law, and whether the Church ought to stand for her in this case, or, when the man was dead, that land ought to return without burden into the goods of the grantor. But we respond to your consultation in this manner: since as a rule no one can transfer to another more right than it is established that he has, a man to whom land is granted in the aforesaid manner cannot leave to his wife what it was not lawful for him to possess except for as long as he lived. Nor is it lawful for his wife to hold a part of that land as a donation on account of nuptials by the grant of the man, unless perhaps the one to whom the ownership of that land pertains wishes to consent to that donation. But what we say concerning the first consultation, we respond also concerning the second. For although the Church ought to show herself favorable in the cases of widows, ecclesiastical favor is nevertheless not to be granted to them contrary to justice. But we do not wish you to be ignorant of this: that according to the lawful sanctions the wife is said to give a dowry to the husband, but the husband to make to the wife a donation on account of nuptials.

> Usufructuarius, donans sine consensu domini rem ipsam uxori propter nuptias, non transfert in eam plus iuris quam ipse habebat; idem de eo, qui sub conditione adimente habet rem in hereditatem vel in feudum.
>
> Idem Archidiacono S. Andrea de Scotia.
>
> Nuper a nobis tua discretio requisivit, si aliqua terra data fuerit alicui non in hereditatem vel feudum, sed tantum sibi, quoad vixerit, possidenda, et ipse postmodum tertiam partem uxori suae in dotem concesserit, utrum eo defuncto praefatam dotem uxor, dum vixerit, habere debeat et tenere, quum ecclesia dotes protegere teneatur viduarum. Postulasti praeterea nostris literis edoceri, si qua terra data fuerit alicui et heredi, quem de uxore legitima procrearet, in hereditatem vel feudum, et ipse, uxori suae quadam parte ipsius in dotem concessa, decesserit postmodum sine prole, an ipsa mulier dotem eandem de iure posset habere, et utrum ecclesia pro ipsa stare debeat in hoc casu, an viro defuncto terra illa sine onere in bona redire debeat concedentis. Nos autem consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum regulariter nullus plus iuris in alium transferre possit, quam eum constet habere, vir, cui terra praedicto modo conceditur, non potest uxori relinquere quod ei non licuit, nisi quoad vixerit, possidere. Nec licet uxori suae partem illius terrae in donationem propter nuptias ex viri concessione tenere, nisi forte donationi illius ille, ad quem spectat dominium illius terrae, voluerit consentire. Quod autem de prima consultatione dicimus, hoc respondemus etiam de secunda. Nam licet ecclesia in causis viduarum se favorabilem debeat exhibere, contra iustitiam tamen non est eis favor ecclesiasticus concedendus. Illud vero te nolumus ignorare, quod uxor dare dicitur viro dotem, vir autem uxori donationem facere propter nuptias secundum legitimas sanctiones.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A husband proceeding for a dowry is not wholly excluded by the fact that he is tending toward poverty, nor is he absolutely compelled to give security beyond his own means; but the dowry is assigned to him under such security as he can furnish. And if through that security sufficient provision would not be made against consumption of the dowry, the dowry will be deposited with a merchant, so that from an honest profit the husband may sustain the burdens of marriage. This is what it says according to the understanding which Panormitanus holds by adhering to the words of the letter, and it is a noteworthy and everyday case.

The same, to the Archbishop and Archdeacon of Genoa.

Through your letters you intimated to us that, when by our authority you took care to sue Master R. concerning a certain sum of money in Genoese currency on behalf of the poor man H., bearer of the present letters, which the same H. was demanding from him as the dowry of his wife, the said R. opposed against him the exception that namely he had repelled his wife from himself and that, with the truth concerning this suppressed, he had obtained our letters; because, when a question concerning the same dowry had already on another occasion been moved before the consuls of your city, they pronounced, according to the custom of the land, that, since the same H. seemed to be tending toward poverty, that dowry should not be assigned to him unless he furnished suitable security that it would not perish. Whence you, after sharing the counsel of prudent men, commanded him to give security for preserving the dowry and to receive his wife, and that, until he could do this, the dowry itself should, if he wished, be deposited in the treasury of the Church of Genoa. Since he could not fulfill this, at his instance you took care to write these things back to us. Therefore, since a small portion of the dowry can sufficiently be entrusted to him to whom the body of the wife was entrusted, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you cause the dowry to be assigned to him under such security as he can furnish, or at least to be committed to some merchant, so that from a part of the honest profit the said man may be able to sustain the burdens of marriage, lest on the occasion of the detained dowry the wife dismissed by the husband, or the husband who dismissed the wife, incur the guilt of adultery. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the eighth day before the Ides of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

> Vir, agens pro dote, non omnino excluditur ex eo, quod vergat ad inopiam, nec praecise cogitur satisdare ultra facultatem propriam; sed dos sibi assignatur sub cautione, quam praestare potest. Et si per illam cautionem non esset sufficienter provisum consumptioni dotis, deponetur dos apud mercatorem, ut de honesto lucro vir sustineat onera matrimonii. H. d. secundum intellectum, quem tenet Panorm. inhaerendo verbis literae, et est casus notabilis et quotidianus.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo et Archidiacono Genuensibus.
>
> Per vestras nobis literas intimastis, quod, quum magistrum R. super quadam summa pecuniae Ianuensis monetae pro H. paupere, latore praesentium, auctoritate nostra curaveritis convenire, quam idem H. pro dote uxoris suae requirebat ab eo, dictus R. exceptionem opposuit contra ipsum, quod videlicet uxorem suam a se repulerat, et quod tacita veritate super hoc nostras literas impetraverat; quia, quum super eadem dote iam alia vice coram vestrae civitatis consulibus quaestio mota esset, ipsi iuxta consuetudinem terrae pronunciaverunt, ut, quoniam idem H. ad inopiam vergere videbatur, dos illa non assignaretur eidem, nisi cautionem idoneam de ipsa non peritura praestaret; unde vos, communicato prudentum virorum consilio, ei, ut de salvanda dote caveret et uxorem suam reciperet, praecepistis, et, donec id posset facere, dos ipsa deponeretur, si vellet, in secretario ecclesiae Ianuensis. Quod quum implere non posset, ad instantiam eius nobis haec rescribere curavistis. Quum ergo satis possit ei modicum credi dotis, cui creditum est corpus uxoris, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus dotem assignari faciatis eidem sub ea quam potest cautione praestare, vel saltem alicui mercatori committi, ut de parte honesti lucri dictus vir onera possit matrimonii sustentare, ne occasione dotis detentae uxor a viro dimissa, seu vir, qui dimisit uxorem, adulterii reatum incurrat. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VIII. Id. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: This decretal sufficiently summarizes itself.

Gregory IX.

A donation which is said to have been made between spouses while the marriage endures, from which one becomes richer and the other poorer, has no firmness unless it is confirmed by the death of the donor; yet it wholly vanishes if it is revoked by him tacitly or expressly, or if the one who received what was donated first pays the debt of nature. Indeed, when the marriage has been dissolved, just as the dowry returns to the woman, so also the donation on account of nuptials returns to the man, unless otherwise obtains by custom or by an agreement concerning acquiring the dowry or the donation on account of nuptials, which agreement is equal when the contrary is introduced from each side.

Haec decretalis satis se ipsam summat.

Gregorius IX. Donatio, quae constante matrimonio inter coniuges dicitur esse facta, ex qua alter locupletior, et pauperior alter efficitur, firmitatem non habet, nisi donatoris obitu confirmetur; quae tamen penitus evanescit, si revocetur ab eo tacite vel expresse, vel qui donatum accepit prius debitum naturae persolvat. Sane soluto matrimonio, sicut dos ad mulierem, sic et donatio propter nuptias redit ad virum, nisi de consuetudine secus obtineat, vel ex pacto de lucranda dote vel donatione propter nuptias, quod aequale sit, quum hinc inde contrarium inducatur.

Title XXI: On Second Marriages

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Second nuptials are not blessed, and the one blessing them is to be punished.

Alexander III.

Moreover, do not in any way postpone sending to the Apostolic See, with the testimony of your letters and with appeal ceasing, the chaplain whom it shall be established to you to have celebrated a blessing with the second woman, suspended from office and benefice. [Given at the Lateran.]

DE SECUNDIS NUPTIIS.

Secundae nuptiae non benedicuntur, et benedicens puniendus est.

Alexander III. Capellanum nihilominus, quem benedictionem cum secunda tibi constiterit celebrasse, ab officio beneficioque suspensum cum literarum tuarum testimonio appellatione cessante ad sedem apostolicam nullatenus destinare postponas. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who doubts the death of a spouse ought not to contract unless first made certain; and, if that person has contracted, let that person render but not exact the debt. And if afterward that person knows that the first spouse is living, let that person dismiss the second. The Sicilian Abbot.

Lucius III, to all Christians placed in captivity among the Saracens.

Our Lord and Redeemer—(And below:) Indeed, concerning the marriages which certain among you contracted when certainty of the death of the deceased spouse had not yet been obtained, by apostolic authority we respond this to you: that no one among you henceforth presume to pass to second nuptials until it is established to that person with firm certainty that his or her spouse has departed from this life. But if any man or woman has not observed this hitherto and still thinks that he or she ought to doubt the death of the prior spouse, let that person not deny the debt to the one who married that person when it is sought, yet let that person know that it is in no way to be exacted by him or her. But if after this it is established that the prior spouse is alive, having left the adulterous and unlawful embraces, let that person return without doubt to the prior spouse.

> Dubitans de morte coniugis, nisi prius certificetur, contrahere non debet, et, si contraxit, reddat, sed non exigat debitum. Et si postmodum sciat primam vivere, dimittat secundam. Abbas Siculus.
>
> Lucius III. universis Christianis in captivitate Sarracenorum positis.
>
> Dominus ac redemptor noster (Et infra:) Sane, super matrimoniis, quae quidam ex vobis nondum habita obeuntis coniugis certitudine contraxerunt, id vobis auctoritate apostolica respondemus, ut nullus ex vobis amodo ad secundas nuptias migrare praesumat, donec ei firma certitudine constet, quod ab hac vita migraverit coniux eius. Si vero aliquis vel aliqua id hactenus non servavit, et de morte prioris coniugis adhuc sibi existimat dubitandum: ei, quae sibi nupsit, debitum non deneget postulanti, quod a se tamen noverit nullatenus exigendum. Quodsi post hoc de prioris coniugis vita constiterit, relictis adulterinis illicitisque complexibus ad priorem sine dubio coniugem revertatur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If one of the spouses was blessed on another occasion, the spouses ought not to be blessed anew.

Urban III, to the Bishop of Vigevano.

But a man or woman passing to bigamy ought not to be blessed by a priest, because, since they were blessed on another occasion, their blessing ought not to be repeated.

> Si unus ex coniugibus fuit alias benedictus, non debent coniuges de novo benedici.
>
> Urbanus III. Vigiliensi Episcopo.
>
> Vir autem vel mulier, ad bigamiam transiens, non debet a presbytero benedici, quia, quum alia vice benedicti sint, eorum benedictio iterari non debet.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A woman marrying within the year of mourning does not incur infamy. This is what it says together with the following chapter. The Sicilian Abbot.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

But concerning that question by which it was asked whether namely a woman can marry without infamy within the time of mourning defined according to the laws, we respond to your solicitude that, since the Apostle says, "A woman, when her husband is dead, is released from the law of her husband," and "let her marry in the Lord whom she wishes," through the permission and authority of the Apostle her infamy is abolished.

> Mulier, nubens infra annum lugubrem, infamiam non incurrit. H. d. cum sequenti Abbas Siculus.
>
> Idem Exonensi Episcopo.
>
> Super illa vero quaestione, qua quaesitum est, an scilicet mulier possit sine infamia nubere infra tempus luctus secundum leges diffinitum, sollicitudini tuae respondemus, quod, quum Apostolus dicat: "mulier, viro suo mortuo, soluta est a lege viri sui" et "in Domino nubat cui voluerit" per licentiam et auctoritatem Apostoli eius infamia aboletur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: It is summarized as the preceding chapter.

Innocent III, to the noblewoman P.

Since according to the Apostle a woman, when her husband is dead, is released from his law and has free faculty to marry whom she wishes, only in the Lord, she ought not to sustain the loss of legal infamy when, although after the death of her husband she marries within the time of mourning, namely the space of one year, she nevertheless uses the power granted to her by the Apostle, especially since in these matters secular laws do not disdain to imitate the sacred canons. Therefore, since you dispose to pass to second vows, knowing that it is better to marry than to burn, we commend your purpose in the Lord, and by authority of the present letters we more expressly prohibit this from being imputed by anyone as loss or infamy to you or to him who shall marry you, since you have the free faculty granted to you by the Apostle to marry only in the Lord.

END OF THE FOURTH BOOK.

> Summatur ut praecedens.
>
> Innocentius III. P. nobili mulieri.
>
> Quum secundum Apostolum mulier, mortuo viro suo, ab eius sit lege soluta, et nubendi cui vult, tantum in Domino, liberam habeat facultatem: non debet legalis infamiae sustinere iacturam, quae, licet post viri obitum infra tempus luctus, scilicet unius anni spatium, nubat, concessa sibi tamen ab Apostolo utitur potestate, quum in his praesertim saeculares leges non dedignentur sacros canones imitari. Quum igitur ad secunda disponas vota transire, sciens, quod nubere melius est quam uri, tuum in Domino propositum commendamus, et ne id tibi vel ei qui te duxerit in iacturam vel infamiam ab aliquo imputetur auctoritate praesentium expressius inhibemus, quum concessam tibi ab apostolo nubendi tantum in Domino liberam habeas facultatem.
>
> FINIS LIBRI QUARTI.

Book V

The Compilation of the Decretals of Lord Pope Gregory IX

Book V

> DECRETALIUM D. GREGORII PAPAE IX. COMPILATIO
> LIBER QUINTUS.

Title I: On Accusations, Inquisitions, and Denunciations

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: In judicial proceedings inquiry must first be made concerning the person of the accuser.

Pope Felix.

If the accuser shall not have been lawful, let the accused not be wearied, [because priests ought to be free for sacrificing, etc.]

> DE ACCUSATIONIBUS, INQUISITIONIBUS ET DENUNCIATIONIBUS.
>
> De persona accusatoris prius quaerendum est in iudicio.
>
> Felix Papa.
>
> Si legitimus non fuerit accusator, non fatigetur accusatus, [quia sacerdotes ad sacrificandum vacare debent etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: He who did not first give warning is repelled from denunciation.

The same, to the Bishops established throughout Gaul.

If any bishop shall have been accused by those accusers who are to be received, after he himself shall have been charitably admonished by them to amend that very cause, and shall have been unwilling to correct it, not formerly, but now, let his causes be canonically referred to the highest primates, [who in a suitable place within that province, etc.]

> A denunciatione repellitur is, qui non praemonuit.
>
> Idem Episcopis per Galliam constitutis.
>
> Si quis episcopus ab illis accusatoribus, qui recipiendi sunt, accusatus fuerit, postquam ipse ab eis caritative conventus fuerit, ut ipsam causam emendet, et eam corrigere noluerit: non olim, sed nunc ad summos primates causae eius canonice deferantur, [qui in congruo loco intra ipsam provinciam etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: An accusation against a prelate ought to be handled before those whose interest is involved.

Gregory, to the Duke of Campania.

That conduct of prelates (And below:) But if there is anyone from the monastery of the aforesaid abbot who can say anything that pertains to his fault and guilt, we [wish this not to be neglected, but rather, indeed, together] with those whose interest is involved, we wish the cause to be [altogether] strictly [and solicitously] investigated, so that he may either be condemned or absolved. [But if no one can be found, etc.]

> Criminatio praelati debet tractari coram illis, quorum interest.
>
> Gregorius Duci Campaniae.
>
> Illa praepositorum (Et infra:) Si vero aliquis est de monasterio praedicti abbatis, qui possit aliquid dicere, quod ad culpam reatumque eius pertineat: nos [hoc non negligi, sed magis una quidem] cum eis, quorum interest, causam [omnino] districte [et sollicite] volumus perscrutari, ut vel condemnetur, vel absolvatur. [Si autem nullus inveniri potuerit etc.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who is accused or denounced concerning some crime cannot meanwhile be promoted.

The same, to the Empress Constantia.

Almighty God: (And below:) [But his other perverse deeds, namely bodily evils, which I have learned—either that he was elected by means of money, or that, while excommunicated, he presumed to celebrate mass—I cannot, for God's sake, pass over without inquiry. But I desire and beseech the Lord that nothing may be found in him concerning those things that have been said, and that his cause may be concluded without peril to my soul. Nevertheless, before these things are ascertained, the most serene lord commanded by a directive sent forth that I receive him when he comes with honor. And] It is very grievous that a man concerning whom so many and such things are reported should be honored, when they ought first to be investigated and examined. [And if the causes of bishops, etc.]

> Qui de aliquo crimine accusatur vel denunciatur, interim promoveri non potest.
>
> Idem Constantiae Augustae.
>
> Omnipotens Deus: (Et infra:) [Alia vero perversa illius, scilicet mala corporalia, quae cognovi, vel quia cum pecuniis est electus, vel quia excommunicatus missam facere praesumpsit, propter Deum irriquisita praeterire non possum. Sed opto et Dominum deprecor, quatenus nihil in eo pro his, quae dicta sunt, valeat inveniri, et sine periculo animae meae causa ipsius terminetur. Prius tamen, quam haec cognoscantur, serenissimus dominus discurrente iussione praecepit, ut eum venientem cum honore suscipiam. Et] Valde grave est, ut vir, de quo tanta et talia nunciantur, quum ante requiri et discuti debeant, honoretur. [Et si episcoporum causae etc.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A bishop cannot repel from accusing him, by an exception of crime, one whom he previously neglected to separate from his familiar company.

Pope Paschal.

Let it be lawful for none of the bishops to repel from accusing him those whom, before he knew that he was to be assailed by them, he neglected to separate from his common familiar company.

> Episcopus per exceptionem criminis illum ab accusatione sua repellere non potest, quem ante a sua familiaritate neglexerit separare.

> Paschalis Papa.
>
> Nulli episcoporum ab accusatione sua repellere liceat, quos, antequam se ab eis impetendum cognosceret, a sua communi familiaritate neglexerit separare.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One acquitted of a certain crime cannot be accused again of the same crime.

From the Council of Mainz.

Concerning those crimes of which the accused has been acquitted, the accusation cannot be repeated.

> Absolutus de certo crimine, de eodem iterum accusari non potest.
>
> Ex concilio Maguntino.
>
> De his criminibus, de quibus absolutus est accusatus, non potest accusatio replicari.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Those dwelling with the enemies of the accused are repelled from accusation.

Pope Stephen.

Let those dwelling with enemies [also] be repelled from accusation, [and all laymen,] because the affection of friendship is accustomed to incite the vexations of calumny. [Nor are those persons to be received in your accusation, etc.]

> Cohabitantes inimicis accusati ab accusatione repelluntur.
>
> Stephanus Papa.
>
> Repellantur [etiam] ab accusatione cohabitantes inimicis, [et omnes laici,] quia infestationes blasphemiae affectio solet amicitiae incitare. [Nec illi in vestra suscipiendi sunt accusatione etc.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: It prescribes the penance of a calumnious accuser when death or disablement of a limb follows therefrom.

From the Brocardic Book XLIV.

You accused someone, and through your accusation he was killed: unless you did this for the sake of peace, you are to do penance for forty days on bread and water, which is called a carina, together with the seven following years. But if through your delation he was disabled, you ought to do penance through three Lents [on the lawful ferial days].

> Ponit poenitentiam accusatoris calumniosi, quum sequitur inde mors vel membri debilitatio.
>
> Ex Brocardico libro XLIV. Accusasti aliquem, et per tuam accusationem occisus est: nisi pro pace hoc feceris, XL. dies in pane et aqua, quod carina vocatur, cum septem sequentibus annis poeniteas. Si autem per tuam delaturam debilitatus est: per tres debes quadragesimas [per legitimas ferias] poenitere.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A judge proceeds upon a notorious matter when no one is accusing.

Augustine, on Genesis, concerning the death of Abel.

The evidentness of a perpetrated crime does not require the outcry of an accuser.

> Super notorio procedit iudex nemine accusante.
>
> Augustinus super Genesi de morte Abel.
>
> Evidentia patrati sceleris non indiget clamore accusatoris.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Laymen or enemies cannot accuse clerics.

Alexander III, to the Bishop-elect of Gaeta.

When P. Manconella, priest, on the one side, and Bonus, priest, and I. Bonus Cocti, his lay brother, on the other, were constituted in our presence, we did not consider that the same I., because he was a layman, ought to be admitted to the accusation of the aforesaid P. And when the aforesaid B. more steadfastly accused the same P. concerning the crime of simony, we repelled him from the accusation, both because he had been brought forward as a witness in that cause, and because the aforesaid I., his brother, had previously accused P. himself before you, especially since P.'s brother had earlier accused the aforesaid B. concerning a similar cause. Therefore, because one after the other was accusing the aforesaid P. with insistent alternation, we admitted neither to his accusation, but considered that purgation concerning the crimes charged ought to be imposed upon both priests. And therefore by apostolic writings, commanding your discretion, we command that each of them cause himself to be purged with three priests. The compurgators, etc. (cf. c. 7, On Canonical Purgation V. 34.)

> Laici vel inimici clericos accusare non possunt.
>
> Alexander III. Gaitano Electo.
>
> Quum P. Manconella presbyter ex una parte, et Bonus presbyter et I. Bonus Cocti laicus frater eius ex altera, in nostra essent praesentia constituti, eundem I., quia laicus erat, in iam dicti P. accusationem non duximus admittendum. Quumque praefatus B. eundem P. super crimine simoniae constantius accusaret, nos eum, quia in testimonium illius causae adductus fuerat, et quia praedictus I. frater eius ipsum P. coram te prius accusaverat, ab accusatione repulimus, praesertim quum frater P. memoratum B. antea de causa consimili accusasset. Unde quoniam unus post alterum praedictum P. instanti vicissitudine accusabant, neutrum ad eius accusationem admisimus, sed utrique presbytero de obiectis criminibus purgationem duximus indicendam. Ideoque discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus uterque illorum cum tribus sacerdotibus faciat se purgare. Purgatores etc. (cf. c. 7. de purg. can. V. 34.)

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A monk can accuse an abbot, and he will have the necessary expenses of the suit from the goods of the monastery.

The same, to the Bishop of Worcester.

On your part a question of this sort was proposed to us: whether monks ought in any way to be admitted to an accusation of their abbots. Concerning this, indeed, we respond to your prudence thus: monks, unless another manifest and reasonable cause impedes, are by no means to be repelled from accusing him on the ground that they are known to be under the obedience and subjection of the abbot, although they cannot accuse others. And since they have nothing of their own, the necessary expenses ought to be supplied to them from the goods of the monastery until the cause receives its due end. [Concerning confirmations, etc. (cf. c. 2, On Confirmation II. 30.)]

> Monachus accusare potest abbatem, et de bonis monasteriis expensas litis necessarias habebit.
>
> Idem Vigoriensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex parte tua huiusmodi quaestio nobis fuit proposita, utrum monachi in accusatione abbatum suorum aliquatenus sint admittendi. Super quo utique Prudentiae tuae taliter respondemus, quod monachi, nisi alia manifesta et rationabilis causa impediat, eo, quod de obedientia et subiectione abbatis esse noscuntur, ab eius accusatione sunt nullatenus repellendi: licet alios accusare non possint. Quibus siquidem, quum proprium non habeant, de rebus monasterii expensae debent necessariae, donec causa debitum finem accipiat, ministrari. [De confirmationibus etc. (cf. c. 2. de confirm. II. 30.)]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A drunken priest who celebrates mass without digestion having first taken place ought to be deprived of his church. This is what it says, in a manner suitable for all who are going to read it.

The same.

If it shall be established that the often-mentioned D. was not granted the aforesaid church perpetually, but was committed to him for a time, and concerning his drunkenness, and that he passed the night in a tavern in such a way that on the next day, no sleep having first taken place, he sang mass: (And below:) But also if he shall have been reasonably convicted of this in judgment before his bishop or archbishop, or, whether accused or called to account, shall have confessed without coercion before several persons, you shall, notwithstanding any appeal, impose perpetual silence upon him concerning the same church, compelling him to desist from assailing B. But if the same church was canonically granted and delivered to the same D., and afterward he was not convicted of any crime for which by law he ought to be despoiled, or if, after an appeal, as he once alleged, he was despoiled of that church, you shall cause it to be restored to him and permit him to remain in peace.

> Presbyter ebriosus, missam celebrans non praemissa digestione, ecclesia privari debet. H. d. ut conveniat omnibus lecturis.
>
> Idem.
>
> Si constiterit, quod saepe dicto D. praescripta ecclesia non perpetuo concessa, sed ad tempus fuerit commendata, et de vinolentia, et quod in taberna pernoctaverit, ita, quod altera die, nulla praemissa dormitione, missam cantasset: (Et infra:) Sed etiam Si de hoc rationabiliter convictus fuerit in iudicio ante episcopum vel archiepiscopum suum, sive accusatus, vel ad rationem positus sine coactione coram pluribus fuerit confessus, ei nullius appellatione obstante super eadem ecclesia perpetuum silentium imponatis, ipsum ab impetitione B. desistere compellentes. Ceterum si eidem D. fuit ecclesia ipsa canonice concessa et tradita, et postea de crimine aliquo non fuit convictus, propter quod de iure debeat spoliari, vel post appellationem, sicut aliquando allegavit, ecclesia illa fuerit spoliatus: ipsam ei faciatis restitui et in pace dimitti.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: An enemy is repelled even from a voluntary exception.

The same.

We remember that already some time ago we commanded you, by way of command, to take care to impart the gift of blessing to our beloved daughter C., abbess of the monastery of Saint Zacharias, whose election we confirmed. But because H. on behalf of the other party approached our presence and appealed from you thereupon to our hearing, proposing that he was accusing her of simony, you therefore deferred carrying our mandate into effect. But because it is not fitting for you in this matter to defer to the appeal of the same H., since it is not lawful for laymen to bear testimony against clerics or monks, and since the same H. was her manifest enemy and bore testimony against her: we, if we remember well, commanded that the same abbess be blessed, and still, appeal having been removed, by apostolic writings we command that, when you have been requested thereupon, you do not delay imparting the gift of blessing to the aforesaid abbess, opposition and appeal ceasing.

> Inimicus etiam a voluntaria exceptione repellitur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Meminimus iam pridem tibi praecipiendo mandasse, ut dilectae filiae nostrae C. abbatissae monasterii S. Zachariae, cuius electionem confirmavimus, munus benedictionis impendere procurares. Sed quia H. pro altera parte ad nostram praesentiam accessit, a te exinde ad nostram audientiam appellavit, proponens, quod de simonia accusaret eandem, et ideo mandatum nostrum distulisti effectui mancipare. Quia vero te non decet in hac parte appellationi eiusdem H. deferre, quum non liceat laicis contra clericos aut monachos testimonium ferre, et quum idem H. illius manifestus fuerit inimicus, et contra eam testimonium tulerit: nos, si bene meminimus, eandem abbatissam benedici mandavimus, et adhuc appellatione remota per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, quum inde fueris requisitus, praefatae abbatissae contradictione et appellatione cessante munus benedictionis non differas impartiri.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: One saying before a judge that he will accuse someone can, before inscription, desist without penalty and not accuse; but perpetual silence is imposed upon him when he desists. And according to this summary this text is noteworthy. Abbas.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Besançon.

Although in blessed Peter, prince of the Apostles, the faculty of binding and loosing has been attributed to us by the Lord, which we ought freely to exercise over subjects according to the demand of their merits, nevertheless, following the example of him who saves all and wills no one to perish, we apply ourselves more willingly to loosing than to binding, although there are some faults in which it is a fault to relax vengeance. Indeed, when formerly it had reached the hearing of the Apostolic See from the letters of B., dean of Saint Stephen, and T., I., and M., canons of the church of Besançon, that you had committed various crimes, and you had been denounced by them through the same letters concerning perjury, the crime of simony, and incest, Pope Clement, of happy memory, our predecessor, preserving judicial gravity, assigned to you a definite term at which you should present yourself before the apostolic countenance to respond to the charges. But when you, according to the tenor of the citation made to you, had approached the Apostolic See, with you and the beloved sons I. and O., archdeacons, being constituted before the Apostolic See, we waited for some time to see whether perhaps any persons would proceed against you and, by making inscription, would propound what they had intimated concerning you in their letters. But when no one appeared who would thus assail you concerning the aforesaid matters, lest we should seem to omit anything among the contingencies, we diligently asked I. and O., archdeacons, constituted in our and our brothers' presence, whether they wished to propound anything against you concerning the aforesaid matters for themselves or for others, and whether they would lawfully demonstrate what they had written. They answered that they had written these things not with the purpose of accusing; but because you seemed incorrigible in certain things, they had considered that certain matters concerning you ought to be intimated to the Apostolic See; but the messenger who had approached to obtain the letters had exceeded the form of his mandate. We therefore, desiring to consult your reputation, considered that silence concerning the aforesaid matters ought to be imposed upon the said canons against you, so that henceforth it may not be lawful for them to accuse you concerning these things or even to defame you, following the example of him who, when he had said to the woman, "Woman, has no one condemned you?" and she said, "No one, Lord," said, "Neither shall I condemn you; go, now sin no more." But because the aforesaid canons wished to desist short of the bond of inscription, we did not consider that, by permission of law, this ought to be imputed to them. But lest we seem to proceed less canonically in your absolution, although we delight more in the fragrance of the good reputation of our fellow bishops than in their infamy, we considered that the inquiry into your reputation ought to be committed to our venerable brother the Bishop of Chalon and to our beloved son the Abbot of La Ferté. [Given at Rome, etc., on the fourth day before the Ides of June, 1198.]

Dicens, se aliquem accusaturum coram iudice, ante inscriptionem potest sine poena desistere, et non accusare; sed ei desistenti silentium imponitur in perpetuum. Et secundum hoc summarium iste textus est notabilis. Abbas.

Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo Bisuntino.

Licet in beato Petro Apostolorum principe ligandi atque solvendi nobis a Domino sit attributa facultas, quam in subditos iuxta suorum exigentiam meritorum exercere libere debeamus: exemplo tamen illius, qui omnes salvat, et neminem vult perire, libentius ad solvendum intendimus quam ligandum, etsi nonnullae sint culpae, in quibus est culpa relaxare vindictam. Sane, quum olim ex literis B. decani sancti Stephani, et T. I. et M. canonicorum ecclesiae Bisuntinae ad apostolicae sedis audientiam pervenisset, te varia crimina commisisse, ac ab eis fuisses per easdem literas super periurio, crimine simoniae et incestus delatus: felicis recordationis Clemens Papa praedecessor noster, servata iudiciaria gravitate, tibi certum terminum assignavit, quo responsurus obiectis apostolico te conspectui praesentares. Quum autem tu iuxta tenorem factae tibi citationis ad sedem apostolicam accessisses, te et dilectis filiis I. et O. archidiaconis apud sedem apostolicam constitutis, exspectavimus aliquamdiu, si qui forsan contra te procederent, et quae de te literis intimaverant proponerent inscribendo. Ceterum quum nec ullus appareret, qui te ita impeteret de praedictis, ne aliquid de contingentibus omittere videremur, ab I. et O. archidiaconis in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia constitutis quaesivimus diligenter, si quid super praemissis adversus te pro se vel pro aliis proponere vellent, et quod scripserant legitime demonstrarent. Ipsi autem, quod non proposito accusandi haec scripserant, responderunt; sed quia tu super quibusdam incorrigibilis videbaris, quaedam de te apostolicae sedi duxerant intimanda; sed nuncius, qui pro literis accesserat impetrandis, mandati formam excessit. Nos igitur, famae tuae consulere cupientes, dictis canonicis contra te super praedictis silentium duximus imponendum, ne te de cetero eis super his accusare liceat vel etiam infamare, illius sequentes exemplum, qui quum mulieri dixisset: "nemo te condemnavit, mulier?" et illa: "nemo, Domine," "nec ego," inquit, "te condemnabo; vade iam amplius noli peccare." Quia vero praedicti canonici citra vinculum inscriptionis desistere voluerunt, eis de iuris permissione id non duximus imputandum. Ne autem in absolutione tua minus canonice procedere videamur, quamvis potius in odore bonae opinionis coepiscoporum nostrorum, quam eorum infamia delectemur: venerabili fratri nostro Cabilonensi episcopo et dilecto filio abbati de Firmitate inquisitionem famae tuae duximus committendam. [Dat. Romae etc. IV. Id. Iun. 1198.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A proctor is not admitted to prosecute a criminal accusation, although he could allege a cause of absence or other exceptions not touching the crime proposed; and one who swore to stand by someone's mandate is not admitted to accuse him if, by force of the oath, it was enjoined upon him that he not accuse. This is what it says, and it is customarily alleged for this proposition, and in this it is very widely known.

The same, to the Archbishop of Salzburg.

The beloved son A., canon of Prague, coming [formerly] to the Apostolic See, proposed before us against our venerable brother the Bishop of Prague, among other things, that, although he was the son of a priest, he had been intruded into the church of Prague, and, contrary to the privilege of the same church, granted to it by imperial liberality and confirmed by the Apostolic See, had rendered homage to the beloved son and nobleman, the Duke of Bohemia, and had received the regalia from him, thereby subjecting the church of Prague to servitude. [He also proposed that he manifestly had a wife, by whom he begot sons; that he fabricated a forged seal; that he was a drunkard, fornicator, and public entertainer, so that on one occasion, together with two jesters, in a contest undertaken against three other entertainers, he was grievously wounded in the nose and almost mutilated in it, as is apparent today, and it is believed that one of the other three jesters against whom he was contending, who died there, was killed by him. To this the same A. added that, after the treasure of the church of Prague, to the amount of a thousand marks, had been badly dissipated by him, he did not fear to confer upon the counsellors of that duke as many as fifty villages and more, to the grave detriment of the church of Prague, and he gave to the duke himself a certain notable castle which had been bestowed upon the same church out of regard for piety by O., formerly Duke of Bohemia.] Wherefore we remember that we cited the aforesaid bishop peremptorily for the feast of the Lord's Resurrection then most recently past. But the same bishop, for his excuse, alleged by messengers and letters the hazards of the roads, the imminent consecration of chrism, and the fact that the son of the nobleman, the prince of Bohemia, was at that time to be baptized by him. Although, judging excuses of this sort frivolous, as they were, we reputed him contumacious, and we could not receive his proctors in a criminal cause, nevertheless we granted to them our beloved sons G., cardinal deacon of Saint Angelo, and H., cardinal deacon of Saint Eustace, as auditors, so that, if they could, they might excuse him in some measure. And when the aforesaid A. repeated the charges before them, to him it was answered on the opposite side that, when letters had formerly been obtained concerning this matter for our venerable brother the Archbishop of Magdeburg, the same A., who alone was proceeding against the bishop, seeing himself fail in the proof of the charges, having put off his clothes and with bare feet, humbly prostrated himself at his feet, sought pardon, and confessed that he had proceeded calumniously against him. But since he had sworn concerning this matter to stand by the mandate of the same archbishop, the latter commanded him under the obligation of the oath taken that he should not thereafter dare to propound such things against the same bishop. Therefore, since it was established to us from A.'s own confession that he had taken an oath of this sort and had received such a mandate, we considered that silence ought to be imposed upon him concerning his assault upon the said bishop, nevertheless imposing upon the same bishop, on account of his contumacy, a citation and, on account of the infamy, purgation.

Ad prosequendam accusationem criminalem non admittitur procurator, licet posset allegare causam absentiae, seu alias exceptiones, non tangentes crimen propositum: et qui iuravit stare mandato alicuius, non admittitur ad accusandum illum, si virtute iuramenti sibi fuit iniunctum, ut non accusaret. H. d. et ad hoc solet allegari, et in hoc est valde vulgatum.

Idem Saltzburgensi Archiepiscopo.

Veniens [olim] ad sedem apostolicam dilectus filius A. Pragensis canonicus contra venerabilem fratrem nostrum Pragensem episcopum inter alia proposuit coram nobis, quod, quum esset filius sacerdotis, in ecclesiam fuerat Pragensem intrusus, et contra eiusdem ecclesiae privilegium, imperiale ei liberalitate concessum et per sedem apostolicam confirmatum, homagium dilecto filio nobili viro duci Bohemiae praestitisset, et regalia recepisset ab eo, sic subiiciens Pragensem ecclesiam servituti. [Proposuit etiam, quod uxorem evidenter haberet, de qua filios generavit; quod sigillum adulterinum confinxit; quod sit ebriosus, fornicator, publicus histrio, ita quod quadam vice cum duobus ioculatoribus contra tres alios histriones certamine inito, enormiter fuit laesus in naso, et eo fere, sicut apparet hodie, mutilatus, et unus reliquorum trium ioculatorum, contra quos decertabat, qui ibidem interiit, ab eo creditur interfectus. Ad hoc subiunxit idem A., quod thesauro ecclesiae Pragensi usque ad mille marcas per eum male distracto, consulariis ipsius ducis usque ad quinquaginta villas et amplius conferre non timuit in grave Pragensis ecclesiae detrimentum, et ipsi duci notabile quoddam castrum dedit, quod eidem ecclesiae pietatis intuitu fuerat ab O. quondam Bohemiae duce collatum.] Unde praedictum episcopum ad festum Resurrectionis dominicae proximo praeteritum peremptorie nos meminimus citavisse. Idem vero episcopus ad suam excusationem viarum discrimina, consecrationem chrismatis imminentem, et quod filius nobilis viri Bohemiae principis esset per ipsum baptizandus tunc temporis, per nuncios et literas allegavit. Licet autem excusationes huiusmodi, sicut erant, frivolas aestimantes ipsum reputavimus contumacem, nec procuratores eius in causa possemus recipere criminali: eis tamen dilectos filios nostros G. sancti Angeli et H. sancti Eustachii diaconos cardinales concessimus auditores, ut, si possent, illum aliquatenus excusarent. Quumque praedictus A. coram eis repetiisset obiecta, ei fuit ex adverso responsum, quod, quum olim super hoc ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Magdeburgensem archiepiscopum literae fuerint impetratae, idem A., qui contra episcopum solus agebat, in obiectorum se videns probatione deficere, depositis vestibus et pedibus nudis ad pedes eius se humiliter prosternens, veniam postulavit, et, quod adversus eum calumniose processerat, est confessus. Ceterum quum super hoc mandato stare eiusdem archiepiscopi iuravisset, ipse praecepit eidem sub debito praestiti iuramenti, ut contra eundem episcopum de cetero proponere talia non auderet. Quum igitur nobis ex ipsius A. confessione constaret, ipsum iuramentum huiusmodi praestitisse, ac tale recepisse mandatum: super impetitione dicti episcopi silentium ei duximus imponendum, propter contumaciam tamen eidem episcopo citationem et purgationem propter infamiam indicentes.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A denouncer of a crime does not make inscription, because he tends toward correction; but an accuser makes inscription, because he tends toward punishment; one excepting, however, makes inscription for an extraordinary penalty if through the exception someone is cast down from what he has obtained, but otherwise it is otherwise. This first. Secondly, it says that, while a crime is examined by way of exception, a proctor can intervene.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Fridianus and Master B., Canon of Pisa.

Concerning those matters about which you wished to consult us, we respond briefly to your inquiry that a crime can be opposed in three ways: by denouncing, excepting, and accusing. When a crime is opposed by way of denunciation, inscription is not necessary; but when it is objected by way of accusation, it is necessary to make inscription, since accusation is instituted for deposition, but denunciation is to be made for correction. But when a crime has been objected by way of exception, a distinction must be made as to why and when it is opposed. If it is objected so that someone may be repelled from accusation or testimony, it is not necessary to make inscription. But when it is opposed so that someone may be excluded from promotion to an office or benefice, if it is objected before confirmation, no one is compelled to make inscription, because a crime proved in this manner impedes the person to be promoted, but does not cast down one already promoted. But after confirmation, namely when someone is to be ordained or even consecrated, because it both repels from obtaining and casts down from what has been obtained, the exceptor, if he fails in proving, is to be bound to an extraordinary indeed penalty according to the judgment of a discreet judge, yet short of the bond of inscription, because, when the crime has thus been proved, he loses what had been acquired for him through election and confirmation; but on this account he does not lose what he had previously. For although the matter concerns a crime, nevertheless a question of this kind is not criminal; whence it can rightly be handled through a proctor. For this, etc. (cf. c. 8, On Penalties V. 37.) [Given at the Lateran on the third day before the Ides of February, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1203.]

> Denunciator criminis non se inscribit, quia ad correctionem tendit; accusator autem inscribit, quia tendit ad poenam; excipiens vero inscribit ad poenam extraordinariam, si per exceptionem deiicitur ab obtento, alias secus. Hoc primo. Secundo dicitur, quod, dum discutitur de crimine per modum exceptionis, potest intervenire procurator.
>
> Idem Priori sancti Fridiani et Magistro B. Canonico Pisano.
>
> Super his, de quibus nos consulere voluistis, inquisitioni vestrae breviter respondemus, quod tribus modis valet crimen opponi, denunciando, excipiendo et accusando. Quando crimen in modum denunciationis opponitur, non est inscriptio necessaria; sed, quum in modum accusationis obiicitur, oportet inscribi, quoniam ad depositionem instituitur accusatio, sed ad correctionem est denunciatio facienda. Quum autem excipiendo fuerit crimen obiectum, distinguendum est, quare opponatur, et quando. Si autem obiicitur, ut ab accusatione vel testificatione aliquis repellatur, non est inscribi necesse. Sed quum opponitur, ut quis a promotione officii vel beneficii excludatur, si ante confirmationem obiicitur, non cogitur quisquam inscribere, quia crimen, hoc modo probatum, impedit promovendum, sed non deiicit iam promotum. Post confirmationem vero, quum scilicet ordinandus fuerit aliquis aut etiam consecrandus, quia etiam ab obtinendo repellit, et deiicit ab obtento, ad extraordinariam quidem poenam secundum arbitrium iudicis discreti, citra vinculum tamen inscriptionis, est excipiens adstringendus, si defecerit in probando, pro eo, quod, crimine sic probato, perdit quod per electionem et confirmationem ei fuerat acquisitum; sed ob hoc prius habita non amittit. Licet enim agatur de crimine, non est tamen huiusmodi quaestio criminalis, unde per procuratorem potest rite tractari. Ad hoc etc. (cf. c. 8. de poenis V. 37.) [Dat. Lat. III. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. V. 1203.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: General inquisitors, if they have not observed the due order of inquisition, ought prudently and cautiously to correct themselves. This first. Secondly, it sets out the form of oath that inquisitors exact from those under inquiry.

The same, to the Bishop of Vercelli and the Abbot of Tileto.

How and when a prelate ought to proceed to inquire into and punish the excesses of subjects is gathered clearly from the authorities of the New and Old Testaments, from which the canonical sanctions afterward proceeded on this matter. For it is read in the Gospel that the steward who had been defamed before his lord as though he had dissipated his goods heard from him: "What is this that I hear of you? Render an account of your stewardship, for now you will no longer be able to be steward." And in Genesis the Lord says: "I will descend and see whether they have fulfilled in deed the outcry that has come to me." From these authorities it is manifestly proved that not only when a subject, but also when a prelate, transgresses, if his excess reaches the ears of the superior through outcry and reputation—not indeed from the malevolent and slanderous, but from provident and honorable persons, nor only once, but often, which the outcry indicates and the defamation manifests—the truth ought to be investigated more diligently before the elders of the church, so that, if the quality of the matter demands it, canonical severity may strike the fault of the delinquent; nevertheless, the same person is not to be both actor and judge, but, as though reputation were making delation or outcry were denouncing, he is to discharge the duty of his office. Although this must be diligently observed with subjects, it must nevertheless be observed more diligently with prelates, who are set up as though a mark for the arrow. And because they cannot please everyone, since by reason of their office they are bound not only to reprove but also to rebuke, and even sometimes to suspend, and at times indeed to bind, they frequently incur the hatred of many and suffer snares. And therefore the holy Fathers providently established that an accusation of prelates not be readily admitted, lest, when the columns have been shaken, the building fall, unless diligent caution be applied, through which the door is closed not only to false but also to malicious incrimination. Yet they wished so to provide for prelates lest they be accused unjustly, that they nevertheless took care lest they offend insolently, finding a suitable medicine against each disease, namely that a criminal accusation, which tends toward diminution of status, that is, toward degradation, is by no means to be admitted unless a lawful inquiry precedes. But when anyone shall have been defamed concerning his excesses to such an extent that the outcry has now risen so high that it cannot longer be dissembled without scandal nor tolerated without danger, one should proceed without a scruple of doubt to inquire into and punish his excesses, not from the tinder of hatred but from the affection of charity, so that, if the excess has been grave, even if he is not degraded from order, he is nevertheless removed altogether from administration; which, according to evangelical truth, is for the steward who cannot render a worthy account of his stewardship to be removed from the stewardship. If you have observed the due order of inquisition concerning our venerable brother the Bishop of Novara, we commend your intention and discretion in the Lord. But if on any occasion you omitted it, lest through a slight shortcut one come to grave loss, we still wish that the order itself be observed at an opportune time, lest injuries arise whence laws arise. And therefore we command that, recurring to the judgment of your conscience, if perhaps as men you transgressed against the prescribed order, let it not shame you to correct your error, you who have been appointed to correct the errors of others, because before the strict Judge, in the measure with which you have measured, it will be measured back to you; in such a way, namely, that you find some suitable occasion through which, lest your authority become cheap, you may desist for the present as cautiously and prudently as you can, because one cannot proceed in orderly fashion from things done in disorder. But if you observed the prescribed order, we will and command that, all favor and fear having been put aside, having God alone before your eyes, walking by the royal road, without acceptance of persons, you proceed in this affair according to the form that we considered should be expressed to you in other letters, and that you fear no man against God, but rather fear God above every man. We wish the form of oath that you received from the clergy of Novara concerning the inquiry to be made in this affair to be observed in similar cases, namely that the clerics swear that concerning those things which they know or believe ought to be reformed in their church, both in head and members, excepting occult crimes, they will tell the inquisitors the pure and full truth. (And below:) But the constitutions which we learned that you not so much made as renewed for the correction of excesses and reformation of morals, we approve, wishing that you cause them to be laudably observed by the clerics, commanding the prelates on our behalf, etc. (cf. c. 17, On Judgments II. 1.) [Given on the fourth day before the Kalends of February, 1206.]

Generales inquisitores, si non servaverunt debitum inquisitionis ordinem, prudenter et caute se corrigere debent. Hoc primo. Secundo ponit formam iuramenti, quam inquisitores exigunt ab inquisitis.

Idem Versellensi Episcopo et Abbati de Tileto.

Qualiter et quando debeat praelatus procedere ad inquirendum et puniendum subditorum excessus, ex auctoritatibus novi et veteris testamenti colligitur evidenter, ex quibus super hoc postea processerunt canonicae sanctiones. Legitur enim in evangelio, quod villicus ille, qui diffamatus erat apud dominum suum, quasi dissipasset bona ipsius, audivit ab illo: "quid haec audio de te? redde rationem villicationis tuae: iam enim non poteris villicare." Et in Genesi Dominus ait: "descendam et videbo, utrum clamorem qui venit ad me, opere compleverint." Ex quibus auctoritatibus manifeste probatur, quod non solum, quum subditus, verum etiam, quum praelatus excedit, si per clamorem et famam excessus eius ad aures superioris pervenerit, non quidem a malevolis et maledicis, sed a providis et honestis, nec semel tantum, sed saepe, quod clamor innuit et diffamatio manifestat, debet coram ecclesiae senioribus veritatem diligentius perscrutari, ut si rei poposcerit qualitas, canonica districtio culpam ferat delinquentis, non tamen sit idem actor et iudex, sed, quasi deferente fama vel denunciante clamore, officii sui debitum exsequatur. Licet autem hoc sit diligenter observandum in subditis, diligentius tamen est observandum in praelatis, qui quasi signum sunt positi ad sagittam. Et quia non possunt omnibus complacere, quum ex officio teneantur non solum arguere, sed etiam increpare, quin etiam interdum suspendere, nonnunquam vero ligare: frequenter odium multorum incurrunt et insidias patiuntur. Et ideo sancti Patres provide statuerunt, ut accusatio praelatorum non facile admittatur, ne concussis columnis corruat aedificium, nisi diligens adhibeatur cautela, per quam non solum falsae, sed etiam malignae criminationis ianua praecludatur. Verum ita voluerunt providere praelatis, ne criminarentur iniuste, ut tamen caverent, ne delinquerent insolenter, contra utrumque morbum invenientes congruam medicinam, ut videlicet accusatio criminalis, quae ad diminutionem capitis, id est ad degradationem, intenditur, nisi legitima praecedat inquisitio, nullatenus admittatur. Sed quum super excessibus suis quisquam fuerit infamatus, ut in tantum iam clamor adscenderit, quod diutius sine scandalo dissimulari non possit, nec sine periculo tolerari: absque dubitationis scrupulo ad inquirendum et puniendum eius excessus non ex odii fomite, sed ex caritatis procedatur affectu, quatenus, si gravis fuerit excessus, et si non degradetur ab ordine, ab administratione tamen amoveatur omnino, quod est secundum evangelicam veritatem a villicatione villicum amoveri, qui non potest villicationis suae dignam reddere rationem. Si circa venerabilem fratrem nostrum Novariensem episcopum debitum inquisitionis ordinem observastis, intentionem et discretionem vestram in Domino commendamus. Si vero qualibet occasione praetermisistis eundem, ne levi compendio ad grave dispendium veniatur, adhuc ipsum ordinem tempore opportuno volumus observari, ne inde nascantur iniuriae, unde iura nascuntur. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus ad conscientiae vestrae iudicium recurrentes, si forte contra praescriptum ordinem tanquam homines excessistis, non pudeat vos errorem vestrum corrigere, qui positi estis, ut aliorum corrigatis errores, quoniam apud iudicem districtum, in qua mensura mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis, ita videlicet, ut inveniatis occasionem aliquam congruentem, per quam, ne vestra vilescat auctoritas, quanto cautius et prudentius poteritis, supersedeatis ad praesens, quoniam ex his, quae inordinate sunt acta, non potest ordinabiliter agi. Si vero praescriptum ordinem custodistis, volumus et mandamus, quatenus, omni gratia et timore postpositis, Deum solum habentes prae oculis, via regia incedentes, sine personarum acceptione in hoc negotio procedatis iuxta formam, quam vobis in aliis literis duximus exprimendam, nec timeatis aliquem hominem contra Deum, sed Deum potius supra omnem hominem metuatis. Formam vero iuramenti, quam a clericis Novariensibus super inquisitione facienda in hoc negotio recepistis, in similibus volumus observari, ut videlicet iurent clerici, quod super his, quae sciunt vel credunt esse in sua ecclesia reformanda tam in capite quam in membris, exceptis occultis criminibus, meram et plenam dicant inquisitoribus veritatem. (Et infra:) Constitutiones vero, quas ad correctionem excessuum, et reformationem morum vos non tam fecisse, quam innovasse cognovimus, adprobamus, volentes, ut eas faciatis a clericis laudabiliter exerceri, praecipientes ex parte nostra praelatis, etc. (cf. c. 17. de iudic. II. 1.) [Dat. IV. Kal. Febr. 1206.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: If the person against whom inquiry is made swore only to answer what was asked, after confession he is heard when wishing to prove excuses that do not destroy the confession but explain it; it is otherwise if he swore to tell the full and pure truth.

The same, to the Archbishop of Arles and the Abbot of Valmagne.

When the beloved sons the Abbot of Cîteaux and P. and R., monks of Fontfroide, legates of the Apostolic See, had approached the church of Agde in order to exercise the office of legation in it, because many adverse things concerning our venerable brother the Bishop of Agde had been intimated to them through frequent outcry, they wished to descend and see whether he had fulfilled the outcry in deed; and therefore they bound both the bishop and the canons by the bond of an oath, that they should tell them the truth concerning the state of the church. [When the same bishop appealed, they reduced their depositions to writing and sent them to our presence, fixing for the bishop a suitable term at which he should present himself before our countenance to receive the apostolic mandate. But the same bishop, approaching our presence, after he heard his own confessions and the depositions of others, strove to excuse himself in many ways, assigning to us his excuses in writing. We therefore, after diligent counsel had been held with our brothers, considered that the aforesaid bishop ought to be suspended from the administration of the church of Agde because we found him culpable in certain matters, and his confessions made a prima facie case against him, rendering him suspect to us by law, since he had not yet proved his excuses, which nevertheless he steadfastly promised that he would prove.] But because it was not established to us under what form the bishop with the canons of Agde took the oath before the said legates—whether, namely, he so swore that he would tell the full and pure truth concerning the state of the church, or so that he would answer truthfully what was asked—we command [by way of command] your discretion by apostolic writings that you command the same legates on our behalf, strictly in virtue of obedience, that they endeavor faithfully to intimate to you under what form he took the oath. And if, according to their response, he swore under the second form, or he himself before you sufficiently proves that he swore under that form, either through the depositions of the witnesses whom he produced while constituted before the Apostolic See, which we send to you enclosed under our seal, or even of others—since those depositions were not published, nor did he himself take care to renounce the production of witnesses—because according to that form he would not be bound by the obligation of the oath except only to answer the matters asked, you shall take care diligently to hear his excuses, which we send to you enclosed under our seal. And if he shall have proved them evidently, since excuses of this sort do not destroy his confessions but explain them, which are such that they can be turned both toward good and toward evil and therefore ought to be judged from the cause, you shall, the obstacle of appeal having been removed, absolve him completely, since, even if he was found culpable in certain matters, nevertheless, having been punished by the labor and shame that he incurred because of this cause, a slight fault of this sort can lightly be pardoned him. But if he shall have been unable sufficiently to prove those excuses concerning dilapidation, shipwreck, and simony, or if he swore under the first form, since according to that form he ought neither to have concealed truth nor mixed in falsehood, you shall, notwithstanding those excuses which he newly proposed before us, since in his confessions he made no mention at all of them—although he steadfastly asserted that he had expounded several of them to the aforesaid legates, which they did not take care to write down, since he could not prove this by himself, as one who alone was examined by them—take care to remove him, the obstacle of any opposition and appeal having been removed, from the administration of the church of Agde, [causing provision to be made for that church, with the counsel of the same legates, concerning a suitable person through canonical election, etc. Given on the eighth day before the Kalends of June, in the eighth year, 1205.]

> Si is, contra quem inquiritur, iuravit respondere tantum ad interrogata, post confessionem auditur volens probare excusationes, quae confessionem non perimunt, sed exponunt; secus si iuraverit, plenam et meram veritatem dicere.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Arelatensi et Vallis magnae Abbati. Quum dilecti filii Cisterciensis abbas et P. et R. monachi Fontis frigidi, apostolicae sedis legati, ad ecclesiam Agathensem accessissent, ut in ea legationis officium exercerent, quia de venerabili fratre nostro Agathensi episcopo per frequentem clamorem multa sibi fuerant insinuata sinistra, voluerunt descendere ac videre, si clamorem opere complevisset; ideoque tam episcopum quam canonicos iuramenti vinculo adstrinxerunt, ut super statu ecclesiae sibi dicerent veritatem. [Qui depositiones eorum redactas in scriptis, quum idem episcopus appellasset, ad nostram praesentiam destinaverunt, praefigentes eidem episcopo terminum competentem, quo nostro se conspectui praesentaret, mandatum apostolicum recepturus. Idem autem episcopus ad praesentiam nostram accedens, postquam confessiones suas et aliorum depositiones audivit, nisus est se multipliciter excusare, suas nobis excusationes in scriptis assignans. Nos igitur, habito cum fratribus nostris consilio diligenti, praefatum episcopum ab administratione Agathensis ecclesiae duximus suspendendum pro eo, quod in quibusdam eum culpabilem deprehendimus, et confessiones ipsius contra eum prima facie faciebant, reddentes nobis eum de iure suspectum, quum nondum suas excusationes probaverit, quas tamen se probaturum firmiter promittebat.] Quia vero nobis non constitit, sub qua forma episcopus cum canonicis Agathensibus coram dictis legatis praestiterit iuramentum, utrum videlicet ita iuraverit, ut super statu ecclesiae plenam et meram diceret veritatem, an ita, ut ad inquisita veraciter responderet: discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta [praecipiendo] mandamus, quatenus eisdem legatis ex parte nostra in virtute obedientiae districte mandetis, ut, sub qua forma iuramentum praestiterit vobis studeant fideliter intimare. Et si secundum responsionem eorum sub secunda forma iuraverit, aut ipse coram vobis sufficienter probaverit, se sub illa forma iurasse, aut per depositiones testium, quos produxit apud sedem apostolicam constitutus, quas vobis sub bulla nostra mittimus interclusas, aut etiam aliorum: quum depositiones illae non fuerint publicatae, nec ipse productioni testium renunciare curaverit, quoniam secundum eandem non teneretur ex debito iuramenti nisi ad quaesita solummodo respondere, vos excusationes suas, quas vobis sub bulla nostra mittimus interclusas, diligenter audire curetis. Et si eas probaverit evidenter, quum excusationes huiusmodi confessiones eius non perimant, sed exponant, quae tales sunt, ut et ad bonum et malum valeant retorqueri, et ideo iudicari debent ex causa: eum sublato appellationis obstaculo penitus absolvatis, quum, etsi repertus sit culpabilis in quibusdam, ex labore tamen et pudore punitus, quos propter hanc causam incurrit, huiusmodi levis culpa leviter ei valeat indulgeri. Quodsi excusationes illas super dilapidatione, naufragio et simonia sufficienter probare nequiverit, aut sub prima forma iuraverit, quum secundum eandem nec veritatem tacere, nec admiscere debuerit falsitatem: vos, non obstantibus excusationibus illis, quas de novo proposuit coram nobis, quum in confessionibus suis nullam omnino de illis fecerit mentionem, quamvis firmiter asseruerit, quod plures ex illis legatis praedictis exposuit, quas ipsi scribere non curaverunt, quum hoc per se probare non posset, tanquam qui solus examinabatur ab illis, eum sublato cuiuscunque contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo ab administratione Agathensis ecclesiae removere curetis, [facientes eidem ecclesiae cum consilio legatorum ipsorum de persona idonea per electionem canonicam provideri etc. Dat. VIII. Kal. Iun. Ao. VIII. 1205.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: Inquiry is not made into the truth of crimes unless the infamy is first established; and then not enemies or perjurers, but suitable men, are admitted to prosecute the inquisition and to testimony; and, when the crime has not been proved, purgation is imposed upon those defamed.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tarragona, the Abbot of Saint Mary of Poblet, and the Archdeacon of Barcelona.

Since a bishop ought [according to the Apostle to have good testimony both from those who are within and from those who are without, and according to divine law his garment ought to be woven of scarlet twice dyed and twisted linen, if at any time an adverse rumor against some bishop rises to apostolic ears, from the solicitude of the pastoral office we are bound to descend and see whether he has fulfilled the outcry in deed.] Indeed, when the beloved sons G. Grossi and H., canons of Vic, came to the Apostolic See and proposed before us many grave and enormous things against our venerable brother the Bishop of Vic, because we ought not to pass over them under dissimulation, we considered that the inquiry into them ought to be committed to you, brother archbishop and son archdeacon, imitating the footsteps of him who, when he had a steward and that steward had been defamed before him because he had dissipated his goods, settled an account with him. But the said bishop, approaching our presence before your citation reached him, proposed before us that those who had suggested to us those enormous things concerning him, led by the swelling of malice rather than by zeal for justice, had intimated things of this sort to us, since they were his manifest enemies and associated with his foes, and intended to produce their own blood relatives and accomplices to testify against him, who ought not for any reason to be admitted to denounce or testify, as being transgressors of an oath taken and entangled in other crimes. But lest through a slight shortcut one come to grave loss, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, unless you know that his reputation has been injured concerning the aforesaid matters, you do not proceed suddenly to inquire into them. But if it is necessary to proceed to inquiry, you shall admit neither the aforesaid persons nor others who shall be established to be his enemies either to prosecute the inquiry or to bear testimony against the bishop himself; but through suitable men you shall inquire more diligently into the truth concerning the things that were done, and, if nothing grave shall have been proved against him, you shall impose canonical purgation upon him. [But if anyone, etc. Given at Ferentino on the Kalends of September, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> De veritate criminum non inquiritur, nisi prius constet de infamia, et tunc non inimici vel periuri, sed idonei viri ad prosequendam inquisitionem et ad testimonium admittuntur, et, non probato crimine, indicitur infamatis purgatio.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Terraconensi et Abbati sanctae Mariae de Populeto et Archidiacono Barchinonensi. Quum oporteat episcopum [secundum Apostolum habere bonum testimonium et ab iis, qui sunt intus, et ab iis, qui sunt foris, et secundum legem divinam indumentum ipsius de cocco bis tincto et bysso retorta debeat esse contextum, si aliquando rumor sinister contra episcopum aliquem ad apostolicas aures ascendit, ex sollicitudine officii pastoralis tenemur descendere, ac videre, utrum idem clamorem opere consummaverit.] Sane, venientibus ad apostolicam sedem dilectis filiis G. Grossi et H. canonicis Vicensibus et multa gravia et enormia contra venerabilem fratrem nostrum Vicensem episcopum proponentibus coram nobis, quia illa non debebamus sub dissimulatione transire, vobis, frater archiepiscope et fili archidiacone, inquisitionem illorum duximus committendam, illius imitantes vestigia, qui, quum haberet villicum, et ille diffamatus fuisset apud eundem, quia dissipasset bona ipsius, cum eo posuit rationem. Verum dictus episcopus, antequam ad ipsum vestra citatio pervenisset, ad praesentiam nostram accedens proposuit coram nobis, quod illi, qui enormia illa de ipso nobis suggesserant, typo malitiae potius quam iustitiae zelo ducti, nobis huiusmodi intimarunt, quum ipsi eius sint inimici manifesti, et cum eius hostibus conversentur, consanguineosque suos ac complices intendant ad testificandum producere contra ipsum, qui ad denunciandum seu testificandum admitti non debent aliqua ratione, utpote iuramenti praestiti transgressores, et aliis criminibus irretiti. Ne vero per leve compendium ad grave dispendium veniatur, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quod, nisi super praedictis famam ipsius laesam esse noveritis, vos ad inquisitionem illorum non subito procedatis. Quodsi ad inquisitionem fuerit procedendum, praedictos vel alios, quos ipsius esse constiterit inimicos, nec ad prosequendam inquisitionem, nec ad perhibendum testimonium contra ipsum episcopum admittatis; sed per viros idoneos super his, quae gesta sunt, inquiratis diligentius veritatem, et, si nihil grave probatum fuerit contra ipsum, vos purgationem canonicam indicatis eidem. [Quod si aliquis etc. Dat. Ferentini Kal. Sept. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: A public concubinary, an excommunicate, a conspirator, and one who did not first give warning are repelled from denunciation.

The same.

When the beloved son (And below:) You shall inquire more diligently into the truth concerning the aforesaid matters, and if it shall be established to you that those in whose name excesses of this sort were reported concerning the bishop were at that time public concubinaries, on account of which a sentence of excommunication was promulgated against them, or that the aforesaid bishop had not been first admonished by them concerning the aforesaid excesses, or that they had conspired against him, you shall repel them entirely from that denunciation. Otherwise, you shall hear the things proposed on each side, nevertheless prohibiting the same bishop by our authority from presuming unduly to burden the aforesaid clerics concerning those matters on which an appeal has lawfully been made to our hearing, until the aforesaid cause has been concluded according to the form of our mandate.

A denunciatione repellitur publicus concubinarius, excommunicatus et conspirator, et is, qui non praemonuit.

Idem.

Quum dilectus filius (Et infra:) Inquiratis super praemissis diligentius veritatem, et Si vobis constiterit, praedictos, quorum nomine sunt excessus huiusmodi de episcopo nunciati, publice concubinarios tunc fuisse, propter quod in eos fuit excommunicationis sententia promulgata, vel praefatum episcopum de iam dictis excessibus non fuisse praemonitum ab eisdem, vel ipsos conspirasse in eum, a denunciatione ipsa penitus repellatis eosdem. Alioquin audiatis quae fuerunt hinc inde proposita, eidem episcopo auctoritate nostra nihilominus prohibentes, ne super his, super quibus ad audientiam nostram fuerit legitime appellatum, praefatos clericos indebite gravare praesumat, donec causa supra dicta iuxta formam mandati nostri fuerit terminata.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A crime proved by way of inquisition is not regularly punished by the ordinary penalty; but if it impedes the exercise of order, deposition is made, as in accusation. And if it impedes only retention of a benefice, deprivation of the benefice is made, nor will the judge be able to moderate this penalty. This is what it says as far as § "The third," according to the true understanding, not well explained by the writers. — (§ 1.) Inquiry ought not to be made concerning the truth of crimes against one who is not defamed, even if an infamous libel has been offered secretly against him; nor concerning the principal matter is credence given to a witness who, having sworn, says that he is an enemy of the person against whom inquiry is made. The same applies if he says this before the oath, unless it is presumed that he said it fraudulently. This is what it says as far as § "You asked." — (§ 2.) One is not punished for a crime concerning which there is no proof except through reputation and the belief of witnesses, and through the statements of a few one ought not to be reputed defamed before the judge. This is what it says to the end.

The same, to the Bishop of Geneva and N. of Valence.

Desiring to execute without scruple of conscience the business of the inquisition which we committed to you to conclude concerning our venerable brother the bishop and the canons of Valence, you asked to be taught by an apostolic oracle whether the statements and names of those whom it happens are questioned are to be published, as is customary to be done concerning witnesses in public causes; or whether it is sufficient that only their statements be published, their names being withheld, since the same bishop and canons manifestly know who were questioned; and whether exceptions or replications ought to be admitted against the same statements, since they are admitted against the persons making the statements. To this we respond briefly that not only the statements but also the names themselves, so that it may appear what was said by whom, are to be published, and lawful exceptions or replications are to be admitted, lest through suppression of names boldness be afforded for defaming falsely, and through exclusion of exceptions, for deposing falsely. Secondly, you asked what is to be established [by] you if such a crime shall have been proved against anyone through inquisition as would depose one criminally accused and convicted. In this, indeed, we considered it necessary to distinguish whether it is such a crime, namely, as would impede the exercise of an order received or retention of a benefice even after penance had been performed—for example, if he had committed homicide or obtained an order or benefice through the vice of simony. In that case one will have to proceed as in a judgment of accusation; otherwise the discretion of the judge will be able to moderate the penalty according to the merits of the person and the quality of the excess. § 1. The article of the third doubt contained this: whether, when two or more persons under oath affirm that someone committed some crime while they were looking on, concerning which nevertheless he labors under no infamy, you ought to inflict some penalty upon him; and whether at the petition of certain persons secretly delivering to you certain documents containing defamation of the bishop, one should proceed to an inquisition concerning the things contained in the documents themselves; and whether credence ought to be given to the statements of those who, after the oath, having been asked secretly whether they are enemies of those concerning whom inquiry is made, respond that they do not love them, or directly assert themselves to be their enemies, or even publicly confess this before the oath, nevertheless showing no probable causes of enmity. To these matters likewise we respond that no one is to be punished for a crime concerning which he labors under no infamy or no clamorous intimation has preceded, because of statements of this sort; indeed, depositions concerning it ought not to be received against him, since inquisition ought to be made only concerning those things about which some outcries have preceded. Nor, at the petition of those who secretly present a libel of defamation, is one to proceed to make an inquisition concerning the crimes contained therein, nor is credence to be given, against those concerning whom inquiry is made, to the statements of persons who, after the oath or before it, tacitly or expressly, assert that they are their enemies, unless perhaps before the oath they are presumed to do this fraudulently. § 2. You also asked what ought to be established if it should happen that nothing is found through certain knowledge, but only through reputation and the sworn belief of those who were questioned; and whether anyone ought to be reputed defamed concerning a crime as to which two or three or even more persons have said that he was defamed, although nothing adverse concerning him is heard in public. To this our response is that one will not have to proceed to a sentence of deposition solely on account of reputation and the belief of the deponents; but canonical purgation can be imposed upon the person defamed according to the judgment of the one judging, who ought not to repute him defamed because of the statements of a few, when his reputation among good and grave persons has not been injured. [But you finally, etc. Given at the Lateran on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of January, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

Crimen, probatum per modum inquisitionis, regulariter poena ordinaria non punitur; sed, si impedit ordinis exsecutionem, fit depositio, sicut in accusatione. Et si impedit tantum beneficii retentionem, fit privatio a beneficio, nec poterit iudex hanc poenam moderari. H. d. usque ad § Tertiae, secundum verum intellectum, non bene declaratum per scribentes. - (§ 1.) Contra non infamatum super veritate criminum inquiri non debet, etiamsi libellus famosus contra eum oblatus fuerit in secreto; nec super principali creditur testi, qui iuratus dicit se illius, contra quem inquiritur, inimicum. Idem, si hoc dicit ante iuramentum, nisi praesumatur hoc dixisse in fraudem. H. d. usque ad § Quaesivisti. - (§ 2.) Non punitur quis de crimine, de quo non constat, nisi per famam et testium credulitatem, et per dicta paucorum non debet quis apud iudicem infamatus reputari. H. d. usque ad finem.

Idem Episcopo Gebennensi et N. Valentinensi. Inquisitionis negotium, quam de venerabili fratre nostro episcopo et canonicis Valentinensibus vobis commisimus terminandam, sine conscientiae scrupulo exsequi cupientes, apostolico petiistis oraculo edoceri, utrum eorum publicanda sint dicta et nomina, quos interrogari contingit, prout de testibus in publicis causis fieri consuevit; an sola dicta eorundem publicari sufficiat, nominibus tacitis, quum idem episcopus et canonici manifeste sciant, qui fuerint inquisiti; et utrum contra dicta eadem debeant exceptiones seu replicationes admitti, quum contra personas dicentium admittantur. Ad quod breviter respondemus, non solum dicta, sed etiam ipsa nomina, ut quid a quo sit dictum apparent, publicanda, et exceptiones seu replicationes legitimas admittendas, ne per suppressionem nominum infamandi, per exceptionum vero exclusionem deponendi falsum audacia praebeatur. Secundo quaesivistis, quid [a] vobis sit statuendum, si contra quempiam per inquisitionem probatum fuerit tale crimen, quod deponeret accusatum criminaliter et convictum. In quo quidem duximus distinguendum, utrum sit tale videlicet crimen, quod ordinis exsecutionem suscepti aut retentionem beneficii etiam post peractam poenitentiam impediret, puta si homicidium commisisset, vel adeptus esset ordinem aut beneficium vitio simoniae. Quo casu erit, sicut in accusationis iudicio, procedendum; alioquin secundum personae merita et qualitatem excessus poenam poterit iudicantis discretio moderari. § 1. Tertiae dubitationis articulus continebat, utrum, quum duo vel plures iurati affirmant, aliquem crimen aliquod eisdem videntibus commisisse, de quo tamen aliqua infamia non laborat, aliquam illi poenam infligere debeatis, et utrum ad petitionem quorundam, quasdam cedulas vobis occulte tradentium infamationem episcopi continentes, sit ad inquisitionem eorum, quae in ipsis continentur cedulis, procedendum; et an fides eorum dictis debeat adhiberi, qui, post iuramentum interrogati secreto, utrum sint eorum, de quibus inquiritur, inimici, respondent, quod non diligunt illos, vel directe inimicos se asserunt eorundem, aut etiam ante iuramentum id publice confitentur, nullas tamen inimicitiarum causas probabiles ostendentes. Ad haec autem pariter respondemus, nullum esse pro crimine, super quo aliqua non laborat infamia, seu clamosa insinuatio non processerit, propter dicta huiusmodi puniendum, quin immo super hoc depositiones contra eum recipi non debere, quum inquisitio fieri debeat solummodo super illis, de quibus clamores aliqui praecesserunt. Nec ad petitionem eorum, qui libellum infamationis porrigunt in occulto, procedendum est ad inquisitionem super contentis ibidem criminibus faciendam, aut etiam adversus eos, contra quos fit inquisitio, fides adhibenda est dictis eorum, qui post iuramentum vel ante, tacite vel expresse, inimicos se asserunt eorundem, nisi forsan ante iuramentum in fraudem id facere praesumantur. § 2. Quaesivisti etiam, quid statui debeat, si nihil per certam scientiam, sed tantum per famam, et eorum, qui fuerint inquisiti, credulitatem iuratam contigerit inveniri; et utrum aliquis super eo crimine reputari debeat infamatus, de quo ipsum duo vel tres vel etiam plures dixerint infamatum, licet de ipso nihil sinistri in publico audiatur. Ad quod est nostra responsio, quod propter famam et deponentium credulitatem duntaxat non erit ad depositionis sententiam procedendum; sed infamato canonica poterit indici purgatio secundum arbitrium iudicantis, qui propter dicta paucorum eum infamatum reputare non debet, cuius apud bonos et graves laesa opinio non exsistit. [Tu denique etc. Dat. Lat. XIII. Kal. Ian. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: If one whose crime is established in judgment seeks restitution because judicial order was not observed, he is not to be heard; rather, the superior ought to deprive him anew as a notorious criminal. This is what it says, and the case is very noteworthy according to this understanding.

The same, to the Bishop and Dean of Senlis.

At the petition of Walter, formerly Abbot of Corbie, correction of that place having some time ago been committed by us to the beloved sons the scholasticus and Masters R. of Courson and P., canons of Noyon, of the same place, they, approaching the same monastery twice, corrected certain things there and established some matters that had to be established, while the malice of certain persons impeded the prosecution of the inquiry by delaying it; and, to repress their contumacy, they intended to invoke the secular arm. But our beloved son G., cardinal deacon of Saint Mary in Portico and at that time legate of the Apostolic See, *coming meanwhile to that monastery, in the presence of the above-*mentioned G. and without his protesting, began diligently to inquire into the state of the aforesaid monastery. And when, after the inquiry had been completed, he summoned him to Paris to propound against that inquiry whatever he reasonably considered ought to be propounded, the same W., approaching his presence, alleged that he was unable to proceed in the correction of the monastery, which had previously been committed to the aforesaid judges by our authority, and, asserting that he held the cardinal himself suspect for just causes, made an appeal to us; the cardinal, after inspecting those things that had been proved against him, removed him, on the counsel of experts, from the government of the abbey, giving the brothers of the same place free faculty to elect another, who concordantly elected as abbot the beloved son John, Abbot of Corbie and then Prior of Argenteuil, a provident and honorable man. [But when the said W. afterward approached the Apostolic See, asserting that he had been removed from the abbey without reasonable cause by the cardinal himself, who had been circumvented by the false suggestions of certain persons, we, wishing with paternal solicitude to provide for the tranquility of the same monastery, commanded our venerable brothers the Archbishop of Reims and the Bishop of Arras that they devote effective zeal and labor toward a settlement between the same W. and the person substituted for him; otherwise, that they inquire more diligently into the truth both through the aforesaid legate and through others, and faithfully intimate it to us by the feast of Saint Remigius next to come, so that, made more certain through their report, we might proceed in the same affair as we should see that it ought more usefully to be done. Since they were unable to make progress concerning the reformation of peace, as we received from their letters, they proceeded to inquire into the truth concerning all the aforesaid matters, receiving witnesses from each party, and transmitted to us under their own seals what they had found both through themselves and through the inquiry of the cardinal. But recently, when the aforesaid W. and I. were constituted in our presence on this account, the same W. sought to have revoked what had been done by the legate after an appeal to us had been interposed, alleging that, since correction of the monastery had been enjoined upon the aforesaid judges and they, after certain things had been corrected and some matters established there, considered that correction of the others ought reasonably to be deferred, the cardinal could not meanwhile by law proceed to the same matter, since a general mandate does not derogate from a special one. To this it was answered on the opposite side that, since the cardinal proceeded to the inquiry in the presence of W. and without his protesting, the same W. seems in this tacitly to have consented that, after the inquiry had been made, the cardinal should correct what he saw ought to be corrected. Against this the same W. proposed in this manner: that, although he did not consider that he ought to protest immediately when the cardinal began to inquire, believing that he did not wish to proceed against him but usefully to ordain something in the church without burden to himself, nevertheless, after, having been summoned by him, he learned that he intended to proceed against him, he declined his examination by appealing to our hearing. The adverse party proposed in addition that, since the aforesaid judges had omitted to proceed in the correction of the monastery and delay drew danger with it, the cardinal himself, to whom its care pertained by reason of the office of legation enjoined upon him, was able to interpose his own efforts for the reformation of that place. For since, according to the authority of the civil law, even in those cases in which solemn judicial order is observed, the prosecution of a criminal cause is not to be extended beyond two years from the joinder of issue; and since we also are known, when consulted as to how long a delegate from us who had rendered a sentence can interpose his jurisdiction so that the sentence be obeyed, to have responded that he can exercise the jurisdiction committed to him for executing the sentence for as much as one complete year; with the said judges delaying to proceed in the correction, since seventeen months had already elapsed from when they are known to have received the apostolic mandate, the cardinal was not undeservedly able to insist upon the aforesaid correction concerning crimes, although the matter was not being pursued criminally. But to this the other party responded that this would have the color of an excuse if the aforesaid judges, having been admonished by the legate, had neglected to proceed to correction. In that case their defect could perhaps have been supplied by the diligence of the legate, just as it is read in the canons concerning a metropolitan that only then can he do those things that pertain to suffragans when the suffragans neglect to fulfill them.] These things, therefore, and the others that each party took care to propose having been heard, [after both inquiries—namely that of the cardinal and that of the aforesaid archbishop and bishop—had been diligently inspected, we understood from the depositions of sworn persons that, although at the time of W.'s promotion the monastery was burdened by a debt of eight thousand pounds, and not much later the same debt had been reduced to two thousand pounds, it had now nevertheless increased to the sum of six thousand pounds; although, as had happened earlier, the debt ought rather to have been diminished than increased from the revenues of the monastery, unless the negligence of the rector had stood in the way. And although the same W. proposed for his excuse that the debt had been increased on account of expenses made in the cause that he had against the monastery of Cluny, in which he recovered a certain priory, it was nevertheless answered to him on the opposite side that the debt ought not meanwhile to have been increased on account of those expenses, since on this account he had obligated certain possessions of the same priory, especially since scarcely a thousand pounds had been expended in the prosecution of the same affair. The said W. also added that the aforesaid debt increased by occasion of a certain house that he had newly constructed in the town of Corbie. To this the adverse party responded that he could have made expenses of this sort from the revenues of the monastery without the burden of debts, especially since on this account no small assistance had been furnished to him by the burgesses. Moreover, since it was established from his own confession that in chapter he had taken an oath not to contract new debt, and afterward he contracted debt, acting contrary to his own oath, as the witnesses depose, he seemed to be accused of perjury. To this the same W. responded in this way: that, although he first took an oath of this sort, nevertheless afterward a certain statute was made in chapter through which the oath itself was relaxed. But against this the other party replied that, since it was not established that the oath had been revoked through such a statute, and it appeared that the same W. not only took an oath not to contract debt but afterward acted against it, it was manifestly clear that he had incurred the guilt of perjury. Moreover, his insufficiency and dissolute negligence seemed manifestly to be proved. And although some of the witnesses said that, so far as lay in them, he was good, none nevertheless expressly deposed that his provision was useful to the often-mentioned monastery.] Therefore, since sufficient proof in such an affair was made to us concerning such matters on account of which the aforesaid G. deservedly had to be removed, even if he ought to be restored because judicial order had not been observed, nevertheless, on account of the aforesaid causes, we provided that he remain deprived of the government of the abbey, removing by sentence the aforesaid prior, whom, because the aforesaid G. had been removed in a certain manner irregularly on account of legal order not having been observed, we understood for the same cause to have been, by consequence, less lawfully substituted. Because we removed him not on account of a vice of the person or a defect of knowledge, but on account of the solemnity of law that had been omitted, as was said before, we afterward restored him as abbot, [and to the aforesaid W., etc. Given at the Lateran on the seventh day before the Kalends of March, in the thirteenth year of our pontificate, 1210.]

> Si is, de cuius crimine in iudicio constat, petit restitutionem propter iudiciarium ordinem non servatum, non est audiendus, sed eum, tanquam notorium criminosum, debet superior de novo privare. H. d. et est casus valde notabilis secundum hunc intellectum.
>
> Idem Episcopo et Decano Sylvanectensibus.
>
> Ad petitionem Galterii quondam Corbiensis abbatis dilectis filiis magistro scholarum et Magistris R. de Corzon et P. canonicis Noviomensibus eiusdem loci a nobis dudum correctione commissa, ipsi bis ad idem monasterium accedentes, quibusdam correctis ibidem nonnulla, quae statuenda fuerant, statuerunt, inquisitionis instantiam quorundam impediente malitia retardando, ad quorum contumaciam reprimendam saeculare intendebant brachium invocare. Verum dilectus filius noster G. sanctae Mariae in porticu diaconus cardinalis, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, interim ad idem veniens monasterium, supra dicto G., praesente, nec reclamante, super statu monasterii memorati coepit inquirere diligenter. Et quum inquisitione finita eum Parisius evocasset, propositurum contra inquisitionem eandem si quid rationabiliter duceret proponendum: idem W. praesentiam eius adiens allegavit, quod in monasterii correctione procedere non valebat, quae praedictis iudicibus prius fuerat auctoritate nostra commissa, et cardinalem ipsum ex iustis causis se asserens habere suspectum, vocem ad nos appellationis emisit; quem cardinalis, inspectis his, quae probata fuerant contra eum, de consilio peritorum amovit a regimine abbatiae, dando fratribus eiusdem loci liberam facultatem alium eligendi, qui dilectum filium Ioannem abbatem Corbeiensem, tunc priorem de Argentolio, virum providum et honestum, elegerunt concorditer in abbatem. [Quum autem dictus W. postmodum ad sedem apostolicam accessisset, asserens se per cardinalem ipsum quorundam falsis suggestionibus circumventum ab abbatia sine rationabili causa remotum, nos eiusdem coenobii tranquillitati paterna sollicitudine providere volentes, venerabilibus fratribus nostris archiepiscopo Remensi et Atrebatensi episcopo dedimus in mandatis, ut ad compositionem inter eundem W. et substitutum ei darent studium et operam efficacem, alioquin tam per iam dictum legatum quam per alios inquirerent diligentius veritatem, et eam nobis usque ad festum sancti Remigii proximo nunc venturum fideliter intimarent, ut per eorum relationem certiores effecti procederemus in eodem negotio, prout procedendum utilius videremus. Qui quum super reformatione pacis proficere nequivissent, sicut ex literis eorum accepimus, processerunt ad inquirendum super praemissis omnibus veritatem, testibus ab utraque parte receptis, et ea, quae tam per se quam per cardinalis inquisitionem invenerant, nobis sub sigillis propriis transmiserunt. Nuper autem praefatis W. atque I. in nostra propter hoc praesentia constitutis, idem W. quod a legato post appellationem ad nos interpositam factum fuerat petiit revocari, allegans, quod, quum correctio monasterii fuerit iudicibus memoratis iniuncta, et ipsi, quibusdam correctis et nonnullis statutis ibidem, aliorum correctionem ex causa duxerint rationabili differendam, cardinalis interim de iure non potuit procedere ad eandem, quum generale mandatum non deroget speciali. Ad quod fuit ex adverso responsum, quod quum W. praesente nec reclamante ad inquisitionem processerit cardinalis, idem W. videtur in hoc tacite consensisse, ut inquisitione facta corrigeret cardinalis quae corrigenda videret. Contra quod idem W. taliter proponebat, quod, licet statim, ut coepit inquirere cardinalis, non duxerit reclamandum, credens eum nolle procedere contra ipsum, sed absque sui gravamine aliquid in ecclesia utiliter ordinare, postquam tamen evocatus ab ipso cognovit, quod adversus eum procedere intendebat, eius declinavit examen ad nostram audientiam appellando. Proposuit insuper pars adversa, quod, quum praedicti iudices omisissent in monasterii correctione procedere, ac periculum traheret ad se mora, cardinalis ipse, ad quem spectabat ex iniuncto sibi legationis officio cura eius, ad reformationem ipsius loci interponere potuit partes suas. Quum enim secundum iuris civilis auctoritatem in illis etiam casibus, in quibus solennis ordo iudiciarius observatur, in criminali causa ultra biennium a contestatione litis non sit eius instantia protrahenda, et nos quoque, consulti, quamdiu delegatus a nobis, qui sententiam tulerat, iurisdictionem suam interponere valeat, ut sententiae pareatur, respondisse noscamur, quod usque ad annum integrum iurisdictionem sibi commissam ad exsequendum sententiam valeat exercere, dictis iudicibus differentibus in correctione procedere, quum iam decem et septem essent menses elapsi, ex quo noscuntur mandatum apostolicum recepisse, ac de criminibus, licet non criminaliter ageretur, correctioni non immerito cardinalis insistere potuit memoratae. Sed ad hoc altera pars respondit, quod hoc colorem excusationis haberet, si praedicti iudices a legato commoniti ad correctionem procedere neglexissent. In quo casu eorum forte defectus per diligentiam potuisset legati suppleri, sicut de metropolitano in canonibus legitur, quod tunc demum potest ea facere, quae ad suffraganeos pertinent, quum illa suffraganei negligunt adimplere.] *His igitur et aliis, quae utraque pars proponere curavit, auditis, *[inquisitione utraque, cardinalis videlicet et archiepiscopi et episcopi praedictorum, diligenter inspecta, intelleximus ex depositionibus iuratorum, quod, quum tempore promotionis ipsius W. octo millium librarum debito monasterium gravaretur, et non multo tempore post idem debitum usque ad duo millia librarum fuerit diminutum, nunc tamen usque ad sex millium librarum summam excrevit; quum, sicut prius contigerat, de proventibus monasterii debitum potius diminui debuerit quam augeri, nisi rectoris incuria obstitisset. Et quamvis ad excusationem suam proposuerit idem W., quod propter expensas factas in causa, quam contra Cluniacense monasterium habuit, in qua quendam prioratum evicit, idem fuerat debitum augmentatum, fuit tamen ei ex adverso responsum, quod propter expensas illas debitum interim augmentari non debuit, quum propter hoc possessiones quasdam eiusdem obligaverit prioratus, maxime quum in eiusdem prosecutione negotii vix expensae fuerint mille librae. Adiecit etiam dictus W., quod occasione cuiusdam domus, quam in villa Corbeiae de novo construxerat, debitum supradictum excrevit. Ad quod pars adversa respondit, quod ex proventibus monasterii expensas huiusmodi facere potuit absque onere debitorum, praesertim quum propter hoc non modicum auxilium a burgensibus fuerit eidem impensum. Praeterea quum ex confessione ipsius constiterit, quod in capitulo praestiterat iuramentum, ne debitum de novo contraheret, ac postea contraxerit debitum contra iuramentum proprium veniendo, sicut testes deponunt, argui de periurio videbatur. Ad quod idem W. hoc modo respondit, quod, etsi primo huiusmodi praestiterit iuramentum, postea tamen quoddam factum fuit in capitulo constitutum, per quod iuramentum ipsum exstitit relaxatum. Sed contra hoc pars altera replicavit, quia, quum non constiterit, quod per tale statutum revocatum fuerit iuramentum, et appareret eundem W. non solummodo iuramentum de debito non contrahendo praestasse, sed venisse postea contra illud, manifeste liquebat, ipsum reatum periurii incurrisse. Sed et ipsius insufficientia et negligentia dissoluta videbantur manifeste probari. Et quanquam aliqui testium eum, quantum in se, dixerint esse bonum, nulli tamen deposuerunt expresse, quod utilis esset eius provisio monasterio saepedicto.] Quum igitur nobis de talibus fuerit sufficiens in tali negotio facta fides, propter quae praefatus G. erat merito amovendus, etsi restituendus foret propter iudiciarium ordinem non servatum, ob causas tamen praedictas ipsum providimus manere privatum regimine abbatiae, supra dictum priorem, quem pro eo, quod, praefato G. propter iuris ordinem non servatum quodammodo inordinate remoto, intelleximus ob eandem causam per consequentiam minus legitime substitutum, per sententiam amoventes. Quem quia non propter personae vitium vel scientiae defectum, sed propter iuris solennitatem, sicut praemissum est, praetermissam amovimus, ipsum postmodum restituimus in abbatem, [et memorato W. etc. Dat. Lat. VII. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIII. 1210.]

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: An exception of crime does not obstruct one proceeding by a possessory action to acquire a benefice, unless he is defamed concerning it; and upon one defamed, when the accuser does not prove or does not appear, purgation is imposed, in which, if he fails, he is punished as one convicted.

The same.

G., nephew of the late H., our subdeacon, approaching our presence, showed us by his complaint that, when the same H. had entered upon the way of all flesh at the Apostolic See, we considered that the prebend which he had held while living in the church of Cremona ought to be conferred upon him, enjoining upon our venerable brother H., the bishop, and the beloved sons, the chapter of Cremona, that they receive him as a brother and assign to him without any difficulty both a stall in choir and a place in chapter, and the same prebend; to you also, son archdeacon, and to the beloved sons, the provost of Saint Agatha, we commanded that, if the bishop and canons did not fulfill the apostolic mandate, you should take care to execute it, the obstacle of appeal having been removed, restraining opponents by ecclesiastical censure, appeal having been removed. And when you and the same provost, as we received from your letters, had admonished the bishop and canons of Cremona to execute the apostolic mandate, they asserted that our letters had been obtained through suppression of the truth, since, while the aforesaid subdeacon was still alive, they had received the son of a certain noble citizen of Cremona as a canon and had promised him the next vacancy. They also added that before receiving our letters they had sent their messenger to the Apostolic See, and therefore, lest you proceed further, they appealed to our hearing. The young man also, to whom the same prebend had been granted by the bishop and canons, considered that complaint ought to be made to our hearing. Hence you did not proceed further, but intimated to us by your letters the things that had been done. The aforesaid G. therefore sought that, because the canons had acted contrary to the Lateran Council, we not allow the effect of our grant to be impeded, but cause him peacefully to possess the prebend itself. Even if it had been granted to the aforesaid young man, nevertheless our grant, which had preceded it, ought to prevail. But the [beloved] son Bonus Ioannes, messenger of the aforesaid canons and bishop, proposed that, before the apostolic mandate had issued to them, they had granted the prebend itself to the aforesaid young man, and added that the said G. labored under public infamy concerning homicide and perjury. Hence he was not only not to be admitted to the church of Cremona, but rather was to be cast out even if he had been admitted. The bishop also intimated to us by his letters that, when he had received apostolic letters for the same G., he counselled him that, if he could do so with his conscience safe, he should purge himself at least of perjury and homicide, unless a lawful accuser appeared against him; but he himself was unwilling either to perform or to offer purgation. We therefore, attending that the son of the aforesaid nobleman, as the letters of the bishop and canons of Cremona and of our executors attested, was admitted contrary to the Lateran Council to the next vacancy, so that afterward they received as not vacant a prebend which, before a certain messenger could reach Cremona concerning the death of the subdeacon, [to] the aforesaid G. we had granted, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you declare void and empty what was done concerning the aforesaid young man, and, unless the aforesaid G. was publicly defamed concerning the crimes objected against him by way of exception, namely perjury and homicide, you put into execution the grant made to him by us. Thereafter, if a lawful accuser shall appear, you shall hear the things proposed on each side; and, if the aforesaid crimes or any one of them shall have been lawfully proved against him, you shall, appeal having been put aside, impose upon him perpetual silence concerning the same prebend. But if they shall have been unable to prove them, you shall confirm it to him by apostolic authority. If, however, no lawful accuser shall appear against him, and he is known to be bespattered with infamy concerning the aforesaid crimes, you shall impose canonical purgation upon him; in which, if he perhaps fails, you shall impose perpetual silence upon him. But if he shall have performed the purgation, restraining the opponents from molesting him, you shall condemn those who endeavored to impede him in his lawful expenses.

Agenti possessorio adipiscendae in beneficialibus non obstat exceptio criminis, nisi de eo sit infamatus; et infamato, accusatore non probante vel non apparente, indicitur purgatio, in qua si defecerit, punitur ut convictus.

Idem.

Accedens ad praesentiam nostram G. nepos quondam H. subdiaconi nostri, sua nobis conquestione monstravit, quod, quum idem H. apud sedem apostolicam viam universae carnis ingressus fuisset, praebendam, quam decedens habuerat in ecclesia Cremonensi, ei duximus conferendam, venerabili fratri nostro H. episcopo et dilectis filiis capitulo Cremonensi iniungentes, ut eum in fratrem reciperent, et tam stallum in choro quam locum in capitulo, et praebendam eandem ipsi sine difficultate aliqua assignarent; tibi etiam, fili archidiacone, et dilectis filiis praeposito S. Agathae dedimus in mandatis, ut, si episcopus et canonici mandatum apostolicum non implerent, vos illud sublato appellationis obstaculo exsequi curaretis, contradictores per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compescentes. Quumque tu et idem praepositus, sicut ex literis vestris accepimus, monuissetis episcopum et canonicos Cremonenses ad mandatum apostolicum exsequendum, ipsi asseruerunt, nostras literas per veri suppressionem obtentas, quum, vivente adhuc subdiacono praedicto, filium cuiusdam nobilis civis Cremonensis in canonicum recepissent, et promisissent proximam vacaturam. Adiecerunt etiam, quod ante receptionem literarum nostrarum nuncium suum ad sedem apostolicam destinarunt, et ideo, ne procederetis ulterius, ad audientiam nostram appellarunt. Iuvenis etiam, cui per episcopum et canonicos eadem fuerat praebenda concessa, duxit ad audientiam nostram proclamandum. Unde vos non processistis ulterius, sed quae acta fuerant per vestras nobis literas intimastis. Petebat igitur memoratus G., ut ex eo, quod canonici contra Lateranense concilium fecerant, impedire non pateremur nostrae concessionis effectum, sed praebendam ipsam faceremus eum pacifice possidere. Quae si fuisset etiam iuveni memorato concessa, debebat tamen nostra concessio, quae praecesserat praevalere. Verum [dilectus] filius Bonus Ioannes praedictorum canonicorum et episcopi nuncius proposuit, quod, priusquam ad eos mandatum apostolicum emanasset, praebendum ipsam iuveni concesserant memorato, et subiunxit, quod dictus G. super homicidio et periurio infamia publica laborabat. Unde non solum admittendus non erat ad Cremonensem ecclesiam, sed eiiciendus potius etiam, si fuisset admissus. Episcopus quoque per suas nobis literas intimavit, quod, quum pro eodem G. literas apostolicas recepisset, ei consuluit, ut, si conscientia salva posset, saltem de periurio et homicidio se purgaret, nisi contra eum appareat legitimus accusator; sed ipse purgationem praestare noluit, nec offerre. Nos igitur, attendentes, quod filius nobilis memorati, sicut episcopi et canonicorum Cremonensium, et exsecutorum nostrorum literae attestabentur, fuit contra Lateranense concilium ad proximam vacaturam admissus, ut postmodum acceperunt, non vacantem, quum, priusquam de morte subdiaconi [ad] Cremonam certus nuncius pervenire potuisset, praedictam praebendam concesserimus memorato G., discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus quod de praemisso iuvene factum est denuncietis irritum et inane, ac, nisi praefatus G. super obiectis eidem in modum exceptionis criminibus, videlicet periurio et homicidio, publice fuerit infamatus, concessionem nostram sibi factam exsecutioni mandetis. Deinde, si legitimus accusator apparuerit, audiatis quae fuerint hinc inde proposita, et, si praedicta crimina vel eorum aliquod legitime probatum fuerit contra eum, ipsi super eadem praebenda perpetuum silentium appellatione postposita, imponatis. Quod si probare nequiverint, eam sibi auctoritate apostolica confirmetis. Si vero contra eum legitimus non apparuerit accusator, et ipse super praedictis criminibus dignoscitur respersus infamia, purgationem ei canonicam indicatis; in qua si forte defecerit, perpetuum imponatis ei silentium. Si autem purgationem praestiterit, contradictores ab eius molestia compescentes, eos, qui eum nisi sunt impedire, in expensis ipsi legitimis condemnetis.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: A superior will inquire against a subject, especially a prelate, only concerning those matters on which infamy preceded; and then he will summon him and deliver the articles and names to him, and will publish the statements of the witnesses, and will admit his lawful exceptions, and, when a grave crime has been proved, will remove him from administration. But with regular prelates this order is not to be observed to the letter. And although in this summary a small difference may seem to be drawn between prelates and subjects against whom inquiry is made, nevertheless it is to be drawn, as is apparent in the text.

The same, in the General Council.

How and when a prelate ought to proceed to inquire into and punish the excesses of subjects is clearly gathered from the authorities of the Old and New Testaments, from which the canonical sanctions afterward proceeded, as we formerly distinguished openly and now confirm by the approval of the sacred council. For it is read in the Gospel that the steward who had been defamed before his lord as though he had dissipated his goods heard from him: "What is this that I hear of you? Render an account of your stewardship, for now you will no longer be able to be steward." And in Genesis the Lord says: "I will descend and see whether they have fulfilled in deed the outcry that has come to me." From these authorities it is manifestly proved that not only when a subject, but also when a prelate, transgresses, if it reaches the ears of the superior through outcry and reputation—not indeed from the malevolent and slanderous, but from provident and honorable persons, nor only once, but often, which the outcry indicates and the defamation manifests—the truth ought to be investigated more diligently before the elders of the church, so that, if the quality of the matter demands it, canonical severity may strike the fault of the delinquent, not as though the same person were accuser and judge, but so that, as reputation denounces or outcry makes delation, he may discharge the duty of his office. Although this must be observed with subjects, it must nevertheless be observed more diligently with prelates, who are set up as though a mark for the arrow. And because they cannot please everyone, since by reason of their office they are bound not only to reprove but also to rebuke, and even sometimes to suspend, and at times indeed to bind, they frequently incur the hatred of many and suffer snares. And therefore the holy Fathers providently established that an accusation of prelates not be readily admitted, lest, when the columns have been shaken, the building fall, unless diligent caution be applied, through which the door is closed not only to false but also to malicious incrimination. Yet they wished so to provide for prelates lest they be accused unjustly, that they nevertheless took care lest they offend insolently, finding a suitable medicine against each disease, namely that a criminal accusation, which tends toward diminution of status, that is, toward degradation, is by no means to be admitted unless lawful inscription precedes. But when anyone shall have been defamed concerning his excesses in such a way that the outcry has now risen which cannot longer be dissembled without scandal or tolerated without danger, one should proceed without a scruple of doubt to inquire into and punish his excesses, not from the tinder of hatred but from the affection of charity, so that, if the excess has been grave, even if he is not degraded from order, he is nevertheless removed altogether from administration; which, according to the evangelical sentence, is for the steward who cannot render a worthy account of his stewardship to be removed from the stewardship. Therefore, the person against whom an inquiry is to be made ought to be present, unless he absent himself through contumacy, and those articles concerning which inquiry is to be made are to be expounded to him, so that he may have the faculty of defending himself. And not only the statements but also the names themselves of the witnesses are to be published to him, so that it may appear what was said and by whom; lawful exceptions and replications are also to be admitted, lest through suppression of names boldness be afforded for defaming falsely, and through exclusion of exceptions, for deposing falsely. A prelate ought therefore to arise for the correction of the excesses of subjects the more diligently, the more damnably he would leave their offenses uncorrected. Against them—so that nothing be said of notorious excesses—although one can proceed in three ways, namely through accusation, denunciation, and inquisition, nevertheless diligent caution is to be applied in all, lest perhaps through a slight shortcut one come to grave loss: just as lawful inscription ought to precede accusation, so charitable admonition is to precede denunciation, and clamorous intimation is to precede inquisition, with this moderation always applied, that the form of the sentence too be dictated according to the form of the judgment. We do not, however, believe that this order is to be observed altogether with regular persons, who, when the cause requires it, can more easily and freely be removed from their administrations.

> Superior contra subditum, maxima praelatum, de his tantum inquiret super quibus praecessit infamia, et tunc vocabit eum, et tradet sibi capitula et nomina, et testium dicta publicabit, et ipsius legitimas exceptiones admittet, et, probato gravi crimine, eum ab administratione removebit. In regularibus vero praelatis ad unguem servandus non est hic ordo. Et quanquam in hac summatione modica videatur agi differentia inter praelatos et subditos, contra quos inquiritur, tamen facienda est, ut patet in litera.
>
> Idem in concilio generali. Qualiter et quando debeat praelatus procedere ad inquirendum et puniendum subditorum excessus, ex auctoritatibus veteris et novi testamenti colligitur evidenter, ex quibus postea processerunt canonicae sanctiones, sicut olim aperte distinximus, et nunc sacri approbatione concilii confirmamus. Legitur enim in evangelio, quod villicus ille, qui diffamatus erat apud dominum suum, quasi dissipasset bona ipsius, audivit ab illo: "Quid hoc audio de te? redde rationem villicationis tuae, iam enim non poteris amplius villicare." Et in Genesi Dominus ait: "Descendam et videbo, utrum clamorem, qui venit ad me, opere compleverint." Ex quibus auctoritatibus manifeste probatur, quod non solum quum subditus, verum etiam quum praelatus excedit, si per clamorem et famam ad aures superioris pervenerit, non quidem a malevolis et maledicis, sed a providis et honestis, nec semel tantum, sed saepe, quod clamor innuit et diffamatio manifestat, debet coram ecclesiae senioribus veritatem diligentius perscrutari, ut, si rei poposcerit qualitas, canonica districtio culpam feriat delinquentis, non tanquam idem sit accusator et iudex, sed quasi denunciante fama vel deferente clamore officii sui debitum exsequatur. Licet autem hoc sit observandum in subditis, diligentius tamen est observandum in praelatis, qui quasi signum sunt positi ad sagittam. Et quia non possunt omnibus complacere, quum ex officio suo teneantur non solum arguere, sed etiam increpare, quin etiam interdum suspendere, nonnunquam vero ligare: frequenter odium multorum incurrunt et insidias patiuntur. Et ideo sancti Patres provide statuerunt, ut accusatio praelatorum non facile admittatur, ne concussis columnis corruat aedificium, nisi diligens adhibeatur cautela, per quam non solum falsae, sed etiam malignae criminationi ianua praecludatur. Verum ita voluerunt providere praelatis, ne criminarentur iniuste, ut tamen caverent, ne delinquerent insolenter, contra morbum utrumque invenientes medicinam congruam, videlicet ut criminalis accusatio, quae ad diminutionem capitis, id est degradationem, intenditur, nisi legitima praecedat inscriptio, nullatenus admittatur. Sed quum super excessibus suis quisquam fuerit infamatus, ita ut iam clamor ascendat, qui diutius sine scandalo dissimulari non possit vel sine periculo tolerari: absque dubitationis scrupulo ad inquirendum et > puniendum eius excessus, non ex odii fomite, sed caritatis procedatur affectu, quatenus, si fuerit gravis excessus, etsi non degradetur ab ordine, ab administratione tamen amoveatur omnino, quod est secundum sententiam evangelicam a villicatione villicum amoveri, qui non potest villicationis suae dignam reddere rationem. Debet igitur esse praesens is, contra quem facienda est inquisitio, nisi se per contumaciam absentaverit, et exponenda sunt ei illa capitula, de quibus fuerit inquirendum, ut facultatem habeat defendendi se ipsum. Et non solum dicta, sed etiam nomina ipsa testium sunt ei, ut quid et a quo sit dictum appareat, publicanda, nec non exceptiones et replicationes legitimae admittendae, ne per suppressionem nominum infamandi, per exceptionum vero exclusionem deponendi falsum audacia praebeatur. Ad corrigendos itaque subditorum excessus tanto diligentius debet praelatus assurgere, quanto damnabilius eorum offensas desereret incorrectas. Contra quos, ut de notoriis excessibus taceatur, etsi tribus modis possit procedi, per accusationem videlicet, denunciationem et inquisitionem ipsorum: ut tamen in omnibus diligens adhibeatur cautela, ne forte per leve compendium ad grave dispendium veniatur, sicut accusationem legitima debet praecedere inscriptio, sic et denunciationem caritativa monitio, et inquisitionem clamosa insinuatio praevenire, illo semper adhibito moderamine, ut iuxta formam iudicii sententiae quoque forma dictetur. Hunc tamen ordinem circa regulares personas non credimus usquequaque servandum, quae, quum causa requirit, facilius et liberius a suis possunt administrationibus amoveri.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: Metropolitans ought each year to hold a provincial council for the correction of excesses and reformation of morals, in which they ought to appoint suitable persons through the individual dioceses, who are solicitously to investigate and report matters requiring correction at the following council. And bishops ought each year to hold episcopal synods and publish what was transacted in the provincial council; those neglecting these things are suspended from the exercise of office. This is what it says.

The same, in the same council.

As is known to have been instituted formerly by the holy Fathers, let metropolitans not omit to celebrate provincial councils each year with their suffragans, in which they are to have, with the fear of God, diligent deliberation concerning correcting excesses and reforming morals, especially in the clergy, rereading the canonical rules, and especially those established in this General Council, so that they cause them to be observed, inflicting the due penalty upon transgressors. But so that this may be fulfilled more effectively, let them appoint through the individual dioceses suitable persons, namely provident and honorable persons, who throughout the entire year are solicitously to investigate simply and summarily, without any jurisdiction, those things that are worthy of correction or reformation, and faithfully report them to the metropolitan and suffragans and to the others at the following council, so that concerning these and other matters, as shall accord with utility and honor, they may proceed with provident deliberation and cause the things they establish to be observed, intending to publish them in episcopal synods to be celebrated annually through the individual dioceses. But whoever shall neglect to fulfill this salutary statute is to be suspended from the exercise of his office [until he is released by the judgment of his superior.]

> Metropolitani ad correctionem excessuum et reformationem morum singulis annis facere debent provinciale concilium, in quo statuere debent personas idoneas per singulas dioeceses, quae sollicite investigent, et in sequenti concilio referant corrigenda. Et episcopi debent facere synodos episcopales singulis annis, et publicare agitata in provinciali concilio, et haec negligentes ab exsecutione officii suspenduntur. H. d.

Idem in eodem.

Sicut olim a sanctis Patribus noscitur institutum, metropolitani singulis annis cum suis suffraganeis provincialia non omittant concilia celebrare, in quibus de corrigendis excessibus et moribus reformandis, praesertim in clero, diligentem habeant cum Dei timore tractatum, canonicas regulas, et maxime, quae statutae sunt in hoc generali concilio, relegentes, ut eas faciant observari, debitam poenam transgressoribus infligendo. Ut autem id valeat efficacius adimpleri, per singulas dioeceses statuant personas idoneas, providas videlicet et honestas, quae per totum annum simpliciter et de plano absque ulla iurisdictione sollicite investigent quae correctione vel reformatione sunt digna, et ea fideliter perferant ad metropolitarum et suffraganeos et alios in concilio subsequenti, ut super his et aliis, prout utilitati et honestati congruerit, provida deliberatione procedant, et quae statuerint faciant observari, publicaturi ea in episcopalibus synodis annuatim per singulas dioeceses celebrandis. Quisquis autem hoc salutare statutum neglexerit adimplere, a sui exsecutione officii suspendatur, [donec per superioris arbitrium eius relaxetur.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: Sentences of excommunication, suspension, or interdict rendered after denunciation by the denounced abbot, or by another on his behalf, against the denouncing monks or those adhering to them are relaxed. Those despoiled are restored, and oaths concerning concealing the truth are relaxed; the statements of witnesses are delivered to the denounced person, and expenses are supplied from the goods of the monastery to the denouncing monks; and on this account they are not exempted from obedience to the abbot, yet without prejudice to the suit.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop and the Prior of Saint Mary of Rouen.

Formerly I., V., and P. of the Order of Tiron (And below:) Therefore, lest the reformation of the monastery be delayed, we command that, after sentences of excommunication or suspension, if any, which the same abbot rendered or caused to be promulgated through any judges after the affair had been begun against them and those adhering to them, have been relaxed, and after those whom the same abbot unjustly despoiled while the affair was pending have been restored, proceeding in the affair simply and summarily and without the din of judgments—since it is especially not fitting in this case for servants of God to be entangled in such things—you inquire into those things that you see ought to be investigated concerning persons and regular observances, correcting and reforming both in head and in members those things that you know to require the office of correction and reformation, with oaths, if any, that the abbot had extorted concerning concealing the truth having been relaxed; provided that, while the affair itself is pending, the aforesaid monks obey and attend to the same abbot, yet in such a way that through this the prosecution of the affair cannot be impeded. But if witnesses shall have been produced against the same abbot, you shall provide him a copy of their statements. Moreover, you shall cause the expenses made on this account to be supplied to the aforesaid monks, and to three or four from among them, or to others whom you consider ought to be assumed as suitable to prosecute the said affair, from the goods of the same monastery; and the expenses to be made that are necessary for the prosecution of the affair itself, after accounting for any things that they received on this account, are to be supplied from the goods of the monastery, since they have nothing of their own. Opponents, etc.

Sententiae excommunicationum, suspensionum vel interdicti, latae post denunciationem per abbatem denunciatum vel alium pro ipso in monachos denunciantes vel adhaerentes eisdem, relaxantur. Spoliati restituuntur, et iuramenta de tacenda veritate relaxantur, dicta testium denunciato traduntur, et expensae de bonis monasterii monachis denunciantibus ministrantur; et propter hoc ab obedientia abbatis non eximuntur, sine tamen litis praeiudicio.

Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo et Priori sanctae Mariae Rothomagensis.

Olim I. V. et P. ordinis Tyronensis (Et infra:) Ne igitur reformatio monasterii valeat retardari, mandamus, quatenus, relaxatis excommunicationum seu suspensionum sententiis, si quas idem abbas protulerit vel per quoscunque iudices promulgari fecit post inceptum negotium in eos et adhaerentes eisdem, ac eis restitutis, quos idem abbas negotio ipso pendente contra iustitiam spoliavit, in negotio de plano et absque iudiciorum strepitu procedentes, quum talibus maxime in hoc casu non deceat Dei servos involvi, inquiratis quae circa personas et observantias regulares videritis inquirenda, corrigentes et reformantes tam in capite quam in membris quae correctionis et reformationis officio noveritis indigere, iuramentis, si qua de tacenda veritate abbas extorserat, relaxatis, proviso, ut negotio ipso pendente praefati monachi eidem abbati obediant et intendant, ita tamen, quod per hoc prosecutio negotii non valeat impediri. Si vero testes contra eundem abbatem producti fuerint, dictorum ipsorum ei copiam faciatis. Praedictis autem monachis expensas, factas propter hoc, et tribus vel quatuor ex istis, vel aliis, quos idoneos ad dictum negotium prosequendum duxeritis assumendos, faciatis de bonis eiusdem monasterii, et faciendas expensas ad prosecutionem ipsius negotii necessarias, computatis, si qua propter hoc receperunt, de bonis monasterii, quum proprium non habeant, ministrari. Contradictores etc.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: Against a prelate denounced concerning dilapidation a commission is made to inquire into the truth, and while the affair is pending the power of alienating ought to be interdicted to him.

The same, to the Bishop of Cister. and the Abbots of Alde. and Salen.

The excesses of prelates [are to be corrected the more severely, the more persons are corrupted by their example if they remain uncorrected.] Indeed, the beloved sons C. [C., E., H.] and four other canons of Freising showed by denunciation [to Pope H. of good memory, our predecessor,] that [our venerable brother] the Bishop of Freising so gravely dilapidates and consumes the goods of his episcopate—which, as they say, he obtained less than canonically—that, unless a remedy is applied quickly, the same episcopate will through him be brought to the irreparable disgrace of dissolution; and, prodigal not only of property but also of his reputation and salvation, he leads an enormously dissolute life, [so that there is no place for denying his incontinence, since it is proved by the manifest evidence of cohabitation; moreover, having cast aside the modest gravity of a pontiff, in words and deeds he exhibits himself so frivolous and irreprehensible that his life is a snare and scandal to those for whom he ought to be an example of honor. Therefore, because we neither will nor ought to pass over these things under dissimulation, following the form of the letters that the said predecessor provided should be sent concerning this matter,] we command your discretion [by apostolic writings] that, personally approaching the place, you solicitously inquire into the truth and, faithfully committing it to writing, transmit it to us enclosed under your seals, assigning to the same bishop a term at which he is to present himself [personally] before our countenance to receive according to his deserts; meanwhile the power of selling, giving, infeudating, or in any way alienating the goods of the same church being entirely interdicted to the [bishop]. [But if, etc. Given at the Lateran on the fifth day before the Kalends of May, in the first year, 1227.]

> Contra praelatum, denunciatum de dilapidatione, fit commissio super veritate inquirenda, et pendente negotio debet sibi interdici potestas alienandi. Idem Episcopo Cister., de Alde. et de Salen. Abbatibus.
>
> Praelatorum excessus [tanto sunt severius corrigendi, quanto plures eorum corrumpuntur exemplo, si remanerent incorrecti] Sane dilecti filii C. [C. E. H.] et quatuor alii canonici Frisigienses [bonae memoriae H. papae praedecessori nostro] denunciando monstrarunt, quod [venerabilis frater noster] Frisigiensis episcopus bona sui episcopatus, quem, ut dicunt, fuit minus canonice assecutus, adeo graviter dilapidat et consumit, quod, nisi celeriter adhibeatur remedium, episcopatus idem per eum ad irreparabile dissolutionis opprobrium deducetur, nec solummodo rerum, verum etiam famae suae prodigus et salutis, vitam ducit enormiter dissolutam, [adeo ut inficiationi eius continentiae non sit locus, quum manifeste cohabitationis indicio comprobetur, alias quod modesta pontificalis gravitatis abiecta se dictis et factis sic levem ac irreprehensibilem exhibet, ut eius vita eis sit in laqueum et in scandalum, quibus esse deberet honestatis exemplum. Quia igitur haec sub dissimulatione transire nec volumus nec debemus, sequentes formam literarum, quas dictus praedecessor noster super hoc providerat destinandas,] Discretioni vestrae [per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus personaliter accedentes ad locum inquiratis sollicite veritatem, et eam fideliter conscribentes sub sigillis vestris nobis transmittatis inclusam, eidem episcopo terminum assignantes, quo nostro se conspectui [personaliter] repraesentet pro meritis recepturus, potestate vendendi, dandi, infeudandi seu quomodolibet alienandi bona ipsius ecclesiae interim eidem [episcopo] penitus interdicta. [Quod si etc. Dat. Later. V. Kal. Mai. Ao. I. 1227.]

Title II: On Calumniators

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A subdeacon who calumniously accuses a deacon is deprived of the subdiaconate, publicly chastised with lashes, and sent into exile.

Gregory, to Anthemius the Subdeacon.

Since crimes that are brought against innocent persons, and especially against consecrated men, are to be punished more severely, consider how culpable you all are who sat in the cause of John the deacon, since no suitable penalty from your decision chastised Hilary, his accuser. [Nor should you believe this to be suitable for your excuse: that our brother and fellow bishop Paschasius alone is said to have deferred it when you, as though wishing to judge, were present. For if zeal for rectitude had flourished in you, one person could more easily have been reasonably persuaded by many than many could without cause have been delayed by one.] Therefore, because the evil of such great wickedness ought not to pass without worthy vengeance, we command that the same H. first be deprived of the office of the subdiaconate, which he unworthily exercises, and, having been publicly chastised with lashes, be deported into exile, so that the punishment of one may be the correction of many, etc.

> DE CALUMNIATORIBUS.
>
> Subdiaconus, calumniose accusans diaconum, subdiaconatu privatur, et publice verberibus castigatur, et in exsilium mittitur.
>
> Gregorius Anthemio Subdiacono.

Quum fortius punienda sint crimina, quae insontibus et maxime sacratis hominibus inferuntur, quam sitis culpabiles omnes, qui in causa Ioannis diaconi resedistis, attendite, ut Hilarium, criminatorem ipsius, nulla ex diffinitione vestra poena conveniens castigaret. [Nec illud ad excusationem vestram, credatis esse idoneum, quod vobis, quasi iudicare volentibus, solus frater et coepiscopus noster Paschasius dicitur distulisse. Nam si zelus in vobis rectitudinis viguisset, facilius uni a multis rationabiliter suaderi, quam multi ab uno poterant sine causa differri.] Quia ergo tantae nequitiae malum sine digna non debet ultione transire, iubemus eundem H. prius subdiaconatus, quo indignus fungitur, privari officio, et verberibus publice castigatum in exsilium deportari, ut unius poena multorum possit esse correctio etc.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A denouncer who fails in proving the crimes is suspended from office and benefice until he purges his innocence.

Innocent III, to the Bishops of Zamora, Segovia, and Ávila.

When the beloved son, the scholasticus of Palencia, had approached the Apostolic See and had reported to us various excesses concerning his bishop, we committed examination of the excesses charged to our venerable brother, formerly Bishop of León and now Archbishop of Compostela, and to the beloved sons, the Abbots of Valbuena and Mataplana in the diocese of Palencia. [After the truth had been more fully investigated through witnesses concerning twofold simony, dilapidation, absolution of those falling under the canon of a sentence promulgated, the fact that he disdained to defer to appeals interposed to us, and also the fact that he held a dignity vacant in his own hands beyond the time established in the Lateran Council, and that he furtively took away a certain instrument in which episcopal rights are distinguished from the rights of canons, and concerning certain other matters, they faithfully transmitted the inquiry itself to us with the depositions of the witnesses.] But when we diligently examined the course of the affair and the statements of the witnesses, and were unable to understand that anything among the aforesaid matters had been sufficiently proved, we decree, on the counsel of our brothers, that the same bishop is to be absolved from the charges, commanding you by apostolic writings that you suspend the aforesaid scholasticus from office and benefice until he has canonically purged his innocence, namely that he did not proceed to propound crimes of this sort with the intention of calumniating, so that others, terrified by a similar penalty, may not readily leap to the defamation of their prelates. [But if not all, etc. Given at the Lateran on the fifth day before the Ides of May, in the tenth year, 1207.]

Denunciator, in probatione criminum deficiens, ab officio et beneficio suspenditur, donec innocentiam suam purget.

Innocentius III. Zamorensi, Segobiensi et Abulensi Episcopis.

Quum dilectus filius, magister scholarium Palentinus, ad sedem apostolicam accessisset, et nobis de suo episcopo excessus varios nunciasset, venerabili fratri nostro quondam episcopo Legionensi, nunc archiepiscopo Compostellano, et dilectis filiis de Valle bona, et de Mataplana abbatibus dioecesis Palentinae examinationem commisimus excessuum obiectorum. [Qui super simonia duplici, dilapidatione, absolutione incidentium in canonem sententiae promulgatae, quodque appellationibus ad nos interpositis deferre contemneret, nec non quod in manibus suis ultra tempus in concilio Lateranensi constitutum vacantem tenuerit dignitatem, et quod furtim quoddam subtraxerit instrumentum, in quo a iure canonicorum iura episcopalia distinguuntur, et quibusdam aliis, inquisita per testes plenius veritate, inquisitionem ipsam cum depositionibus testium nobis fideliter transmiserunt.] Quum autem processum negotii et dicta testium examinaverimus diligenter, nec intelligere potuerimus, probatum esse sufficienter aliquid de praedictis, eundem episcopum de consilio fratrum nostrorum absolvendum decernimus ab obiectis, vobis per apostolica scripta mandantes, quatenus memoratum magistrum scholarum, donec canonice suam purgaverit innocentiam, scilicet quod non calumniandi animo ad huiusmodi crimina proponenda processit, ab officio et beneficio suspendatis, ut ceteri, simili poena perterriti, ad infamiam suorum facile non prosiliant praelatorum. [Quod si non omnes etc. Dat. Later. V. Id. Maii Ao. X. 1207.]

Title III: On Simony, and That Nothing Is to Be Demanded or Promised for Spiritual Things

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A bishop, or his ministers or notaries, ought to demand nothing temporal for an order conferred by him.

Gregory, presiding over a general synod.

In ordaining a bishop, the pontiff imposes his hand; the minister reads the Gospel lesson; and the notary writes the letter of his confirmation. But just as the bishop ought not to sell the hand that he imposes, so neither ought the minister or notary to sell his own voice or pen in his ordination. We therefore altogether prohibit the person ordained from giving anything for ordination or use of the pallium, or for charters and small loaves. [Concerning the aforesaid things, etc.]

DE SIMONIA, ET NE ALIQUID PRO SPIRITUALIBUS EXIGATUR VEL PROMITTATUR.

Episcopus pro ordine ab eo conferendo, vel ministri vel notarii nihil temporale exigere debent.

Gregorius generali synodo praesidens.

In ordinando episcopo pontifex manum imponit; evangelicam vero lectionem minister legit: confirmationis autem eius epistolam notarius scribit. Sicut autem non debet episcopus manum, quam imponit, ita nec minister vel notarius in ordinatione eius vocem suam vel calamum vendere. Pro ordinatione igitur vel usu pallii, seu chartis atque pastellis, eum, qui ordinatur, omnino aliquid dare prohibemus. [Ex quibus praedictis rebus etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who through money cast someone out of his church and afterward intruded himself is to be deposed.

From the Council of Mainz.

One who through money shall have expelled another priest lawfully ordained in a church, and shall have claimed it for himself in such a manner, is altogether to be deposed.

Deponendus est qui per pecuniam aliquem eiecit de ecclesia sua, se postea intrudendo.

Ex concilio Maguntinensi. Qui alium presbyterum in ecclesia legitime ordinatum per pecuniam expulerit, eamque sibi taliter vindicaverit, omnimodo deponatur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Any Catholic is admitted to accuse concerning the crime of simony.

Pope Deodatus.

If the Lord and master of all, who was without sin, gave one person licence to accuse, how much more is one who is known to be polluted by the stain of Simon to be convicted by the assertion of one person? Therefore, in such a matter no Catholic is to be rejected, but he is to be entreated with great prayers to assert the truth for exposing the rage of simony.

> Quilibet catholicus admittitur ad accusandum de crimine simoniae.
>
> Deodatus Papa.
>
> Si Dominus et magister omnium, qui sine peccato fuit, accusandi licentiam uni dedit, quanto magis unius assertione convincendus est, qui Simonis labe dignoscitur esse pollutus? Non igitur in tali quilibet catholicus est respuendus, sed, ut veritatem asserat ad propalandam simoniacam rabiem, magnis est precibus exorandus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A simoniac under accusation is prohibited from the administration of divine things.

The same.

We deemed it necessary to prohibit the accused simoniac most earnestly through our writings from celebrating the solemnities of masses until what he was should be more truly established.

> Simoniacus pendente accusatione ab administratione divinorum prohibetur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Accusatum simoniacum necesse habuimus summopere per scripta nostra prohibere, ne missarum solennia celebraret, donec quid esset, verius constitisset.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: It says the same as the preceding chapter, except that the former chapter speaks in accusation and this one in inquisition; as the former speaks of a simoniac in general, this one declares it concerning order.

The same.

Whenever something is said to have been done contrary to ecclesiastical discipline, lest fault from dissimulation reprove us before God, we do not dare to leave it uninquired into. It has therefore reached us that you were ordained through the simoniacal heresy. But many other things were also said here concerning you, among which one was especially important. Therefore we deemed it necessary to prohibit you through our writings from celebrating the solemnities of masses until we should learn more truly what the case is.

> Idem dicit, quod praecedens, nisi quod illud cap. loquitur in accusatione, istud in inquisitione, ut illud loquitur de simoniaco in genere, istud declarat de ordine.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quotiens contra ecclesiasticam quid gestum dicitur disciplinam, ne nos ante Deum culpa ex dissimulatione redarguat, irrequisitum hoc relinquere non audemus. Pervenit itaque ad nos, quod per simoniacam haeresim fueris ordinatus. Sed et alia de te multa hic dicta sunt, de quibus unum quam maxime fuit, Propterea necesse habuimus, te per scripta nostra prohibere, ne missarum solennia celebrare debuisses, donec quid sit verius discerneremus.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A simoniac is to be deposed.

Pope Lucius.

For just as the simoniacal pestilence surpasses other diseases by its magnitude, so, without delay, as soon as its signs have become manifest through any person, he ought to be eliminated and repelled from the Church of God. For Peter, the first pastor of the Church, recognizing the inward parts of Simon not by the attestation of any man but by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, punished him without any hearing with a terrible and sudden death.

> Simoniacus est deponendus.
>
> Lucius Papa.
>
> Sicut enim simoniaca pestis sui magnitudine alios morbos vincit, ita sine dilatione mox, ut eius signa per aliquam personam claruerint, de ecclesia Dei debet eliminari atque repelli. Petrus enim primus pastor ecclesiae non alicuius hominis attestatione sed sancti spiritus inspiratione Simonis interiora recognoscens sine aliqua audientia terribili eum et repentina morte mulctavit.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A slave, a prostitute, and criminals can accuse a simoniac.

Deodatus.

So great is the stain of this crime that even slaves are admitted to accusation against masters, and any criminals whatever. Likewise, every sinner can sing mass except a simoniac, whom even anyone can accuse so that he may be removed from an order badly received, even a prostitute.

> Simoniacum accusare potest servus, meretrix et criminosi. Deodatus.
>
> Tanta est labes huius criminis, quod etiam servi adversus dominos, et quilibet criminosi admittuntur ad accusationem. Item omnis peccator missam cantare potest, praeter simoniacum, quem etiam quilibet, ut ab ordine male accepto removeatur, accusare potest, vel etiam meretrix.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: It is simoniacal to receive a price for entry into religion, for granting priories or chapels, for instituting prelates, for granting burial, for chrism, for holy oil, for the blessings of those marrying, or for other sacraments; nor does a contrary custom avail. This is what it says together with the following chapter.

Alexander III, in the Council of Tours.

Avarice is not sufficiently usefully reproved by the people if it is not guarded against in every way by those who appear to be constituted in the clergy, and especially those who [having despised the world] profess the name of religious persons [and] the rule. We therefore prohibit that any money be demanded from those who wish to pass into religion. Nor are any priories or chaplaincies of monks or clerics to be sold by annual alienation. Nor is any price to be demanded from the person to whom their government is committed for the commission of them. The authority of the holy Fathers manifestly declares this to be simoniacal. Hence whoever shall presume to attempt anything against this decree, both the person who gave and the person who received or consented, is not to doubt that he will have a portion with Simon. Likewise, let no exaction of any price be attempted for burial or for receiving chrism and oil, nor let anyone defend his guilt under the pretext of any custom, because length of time does not diminish sins but increases them.

> Simoniacum est pretium recipere pro ingressu religionis, pro prioratibus vel capellis concedendis, et pro praelatis instituendis, pro concedenda sepultura, pro chrismate, pro oleo sancto, pro benedictionibus nubentium, vel aliis sacramentis; nec valet consuetudo in contrarium. H. d. cum sequenti. Alexander III. in concilio Turonensi. Non satis utiliter a populo avaritia redarguitur, si ab his, qui in clero constituti videntur, et praecipue qui [contempto saeculo] nomen religiosorum profitentur [et] regulam, modis omnibus non cavetur. Prohibemus igitur, ne ab iis, qui ad religionem transire volunt, aliqua pecunia requiratur. Nec prioratus vel capellaniae quaelibet monachorum aut clericorum annua distractione vendantur. Nec ab eo, cui regimen ipsarum committitur, pro earum commissione ullum pretium exigatur. Hoc autem simoniacum esse sanctorum Patrum auctoritas manifeste declarat. Unde quisquis contra hoc decretum attentare praesumpserit, tam ille, qui dederit, quam ille, qui receperit vel consenserit, partem se cum Simone non dubitet habiturum. Pro sepultura quoque, et chrismatis et olei receptione, nulla cuiusquam pretii exactio attentetur, nec sub obtentu cuiusquam consuetudinis reatum suum quis tueatur, quia diuturnitas temporis non diminuit peccata, sed auget.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above in the preceding chapter.

From the Lateran Council.

Since in the body of the Church all things ought to be handled from charity, and what has been freely received ought freely to be bestowed, it is exceedingly horrible that venality is reported to have a place in certain churches, so that something is demanded for seating bishops or abbots or any ecclesiastical persons in their seat, or for introducing priests into a church, and also for burials and funeral rites of the dead, and the blessings of those marrying, or other sacraments, and the person who needs them cannot receive them unless he takes care to fill the hand of the giver. But many think this to be lawful for them because they believe the law of death has gained force through long custom, not sufficiently attending, because they are blinded by cupidity, that crimes are the graver the longer they have held an unhappy soul bound. Therefore, lest these things be done hereafter, we more strictly prohibit that anything be demanded either for bringing ecclesiastical persons to their seat, instituting priests, burying the dead, blessing those marrying, or conferring or having conferred other sacraments. But if anyone shall presume to act against this, let him know that he will have a portion with Gehazi, whose deed he imitates by the exaction of a base gift. [We prohibit, etc.; cf. c. 7, On Procurations III. 39.]

> Summatum est supra in cap. praecedenti. Ex concilio Lateranensi. Quum in ecclesiae corpore omnia debeant ex caritate tractari, et quod gratis receptum est gratis impendi: horribile; nimis est, quod in quibusdam ecclesiis locum venalitas perhibetur habere ita, ut pro episcopis vel abbatibus seu quibuscunque personis ecclesiasticis ponendis in sedem, sive introducendis presbyteris in ecclesiam, nec non et pro sepulturis et exsequiis mortuorum, et benedictionibus nubentium, seu aliis sacramentis aliquid requiratur et non possit ille, qui indiget, ista percipere, nisi manum implere curaverit largitoris. Putant autem plures, ex hoc sibi licere, quia legem mortis de longa invaluisse consuetudine arbitrantur, non satis, quia cupiditate caecati sunt, attendentes, quod tanto graviora sunt crimina, quanto diutius infelicem animam tenuerunt alligatam. Ne igitur haec de cetero fiant, vel pro personis ecclesiasticis deducendis in sedem, vel sacerdotibus instituendis, aut sepeliendis mortuis, seu benedicendis nubentibus, seu aliis sacramentis conferendis seu collatis aliquid exigatur, districtius prohibemus. Si quis autem contra hoc venire praesumpserit, portionem cum Giezi se noverit habiturum, cuius factum exactione turpis muneris imitatur. [Prohibemus etc. cf. c. 7. de cens. III. 39.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Nothing besides procuration is to be demanded for the consecration of churches.

The same, to the Bishop of Vigilia.

Since the Roman Church, over which, although unworthy, we preside, is the mother and mistress of all churches, we are compelled by the duty of the government received to respond, as the Lord shall grant us, to the consultations of individual persons, so that doubtful questions may be entirely untied by the providence of the Apostolic See. But you asked, brother bishop, that it be written back to your fraternity whether you ought to have anything besides procuration for the consecration of churches. And we respond thus to your consultation: you can and ought to demand nothing besides procuration for the consecration of churches. But you can demand a moderate procuration from the same church, since the Apostle says: "No one is compelled to serve as a soldier at his own expense."

Pro ecclesiarum consecratione nihil est praeter procurationem exigendum.

Idem Vigiliensi Episcopo.

Quum sit Romana ecclesia, cui licet immeriti praesidemus, mater ecclesiarum omnium et magistra, cogimur ex debito suscepti regiminis, prout nobis Dominus dederit, respondere consultationibus singulorum, ut dubiae quaestiones apostolicae sedis providentia penitus enodentur. Quaesivisti autem, frater episcope, tuae fraternitati rescribi, utrum pro ecclesiarum consecratione quicquam praeter procurationem habere debeas. Et nos Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod nihil pro ecclesiarum consecratione potes vel debes praeter procurationem exigere, Sed procurationem moderatam, quum Apostolus dicat: "nemo cogitur suis stipendiis militare," ab eadem ecclesia exigere potes.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: One convicted of simony is to be deposed; the same applies to a defamed person who cannot purge himself.

The same, to the Archbishop of Toledo.

Concerning this, moreover, that the king and his princes are said to have received money from Bernard, formerly Bishop of Osma, so that they would furnish assent to his election, and that the same Bishop of Osma is said to have promised benefices of a fixed revenue to the archdeacon, and a priory to a certain cleric before his election, so that each of them, namely the archdeacon and the cleric, would consent to him, we respond this to your prudence: if it is manifest that the same archdeacon and cleric received what was promised for a cause so iniquitous and detestable, or if they confessed it in court or were lawfully convicted, they are to be perpetually deposed from the ministry of the altar. But if it is manifest, yet they were neither convicted nor confessed concerning it, but labor only under public infamy, canonical purgation ought to be imposed upon them. If they fail in it, they are to be punished as authors of so great a crime. But you ought solicitously to admonish the king and his princes and diligently induce them that, if they received anything from the aforesaid bishop so that they would furnish assent to his election, they restore it without diminution to the church of Osma, since they cannot retain it without grave peril to their salvation.

Convictus de simonia deponendus est; idem in infamato, qui se purgare non potest.

Idem Toletano Archiepiscopo.

De hoc autem, quod rex et principes sui a Bernardo quondam Oxomensi episcopo pecuniam recepisse dicuntur, ut eius electioni praestarent assensum, et quod idem episcopus Oxomensis archidiacono beneficia certi reditus, et cuidam clerico ante electionem suam prioratum dicitur promisisse, ut uterque illorum, archidiaconus videlicet et clericus consentiret eidem, hoc tuae prudentiae respondemus, quod si manifestum est, eundem archidiaconum et clericum ob causam illam tam iniquam et detestabilem promissa recepisse, aut si exinde confessi fuerunt in iure, vel legitime convicti, ab altaris ministerio sunt perpetuo deponendi. Si vero id manifestum est, nec tamen inde convicti vel confessi fuerint, sed tantum publica laborant infamia, eis canonica purgatio debet indici. In qua si defecerint, tanquam auctores tanti sunt sceleris puniendi. Regem autem et principes eius sollicite monere debes et diligenter inducere, ut, si qua receperint a praefato episcopo, ut eius electioni praestarent assensum, ecclesiae Oxomensi sine diminutione restituant, quum ea sine gravi suae salutis periculo retinere non possint.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: It is simoniacal to promise an ecclesiastical benefice for temporal service.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

When R., a cleric of Pontefract, and the nobleman V. [W., son of Godric, because of the controversy that was being conducted between them concerning a certain church which the same R. asserted had been given to him by the aforesaid knight,] were constituted in our presence, because the same V. could not delay longer, at his departure he constituted our beloved son Master Milo, your messenger, a sufficient respondent for himself in that cause. And when we understood from the mouth of the aforesaid R. that the aforesaid knight had promised to give him the aforesaid church if he could advance a certain affair of the same knight in our presence, and that through this the promise itself contained simoniacal depravity, we considered that silence concerning the same church ought to be imposed upon R. himself. And therefore by apostolic writings, commanding your fraternity, we command that you in no way permit the aforesaid knight to be burdened by the aforementioned R. or others concerning the aforesaid church by occasion of the aforesaid controversy.

Simoniacum est pro temporali obsequio beneficium ecclesiasticum promittere.

Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.

Quum essent in nostra praesentia constituti R. clericus de Ponte fracto, et nobilis vir V. [W. filius Godrici pro controversia, quae vertebatur inter eos super quadam ecclesia, quam idem R. asserebat a praefato milite sibi datam fuisse,] quia idem V. moram diutius facere non poterat, in recessu suo dilectum filium nostrum magistrum Milonem nuncium tuum pro se in causa illa sufficientem constituit responsalem. Quumque ab ore praefati R. intellexerimus, quod memoratus miles promiserat ei dare ecclesiam praescriptam, si quoddam negotium eiusdem militis in nostra posset praesentia promovere, ac per hoc promissionem ipsam continere simoniacam pravitatem, eidem R. super eadem ecclesia silentium duximus imponendum. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus memoratum militem occasione praedictae controversiae a praenominato R. vel aliis super praedicta ecclesia gravari nulla ratione permittas.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A notorious simoniac is deposed from his benefice; the same applies to a defamed person who cannot purge himself.

The same, to the Bishop of Cister.

It has been intimated to our ears that, while the episcopate committed to you was vacant, very many clerics were instituted in churches of your episcopate who are said to have entry through simony and to be bespattered with infamy therefrom. Hence, because it is unworthy that they remain in such a crime or such a base suspicion, by apostolic writings, commanding your fraternity, we command that, if there are any concerning whom it is public and notorious that they entered the aforesaid churches simoniacally, you remove them, appeal ceasing, from the churches acquired in such a manner. But upon those whose crime is not public and notorious, if they labor under public infamy, you shall impose purgation with five or six members of their own order as oath-helpers, within forty days after receipt of these letters; if they fail in it, you shall perpetually deprive them of benefices of churches of this kind, taking more attentive care to receive such persons for their purgation concerning whom it is probable that they ought not to perjure themselves under anyone's influence.

> Notorius simoniacus in beneficio ab illo deponitur; idem in infamato, qui se purgare non potest.
>
> Idem Cistrensi Episcopo.
>
> Insinuatum est auribus nostris, quod, dum episcopatus tibi commissus vacaret, in ecclesiis tui episcopatus plurimi sint clerici instituti, qui per simoniam habere dicuntur ingressum, et infamia inde respergi. Unde, quoniam indignum est, ut in tali crimine vel tam turpi suspicione remaneant, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si qui fuerint, quos in praedictis ecclesiis publicum et notorium est simoniace intrasse, eos appellatione cessante amoveas ab ecclesiis taliter acquisitis. Illis autem, quorum crimen non est publicum et notorium, si publica laborant infamia, cum quinta vel sexta manu sui ordinis, infra XL. dies post harum susceptionem literarum, purgationem indicas, in qua si defecerint, beneficiis huiusmodi ecclesiarum perpetuo prives eosdem, provisurus attentius, ut tales personas ad eorum purgationem recipias, de quibus verisimile sit, quod non debeant alicuius obtentu deierare.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: It is simoniacal to conceal a sinner for a price or favor, to reconcile one who is not penitent, or to remove from reconciliation one who is worthily penitent.

The same.

Let no priest receive a gift or any temporal advantage—indeed, a spiritual detriment—from anyone publicly sinning or incestuous, in order to conceal his sin from the bishop or his ministers; nor, out of regard for any person, or kinship, or familiarity, sharing in the sins of others, let him refuse to make this known to the bishop. Nor let him bring anyone who is penitent, or less worthily penitent, to reconciliation by grace or favor and bear testimony of reconciliation for him; nor through any malice remove [any other person] worthily penitent from reconciliation, because each is simoniacal.

> Simoniacum est pretio vel favore celare peccatorem, vel reconciliare non poenitentam, vel digne poenitentem a reconciliatione removere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Nemo presbyterorum xenium vel emolumentum quodlibet temporale, immo spirituale detrimentum, a quocunque publice peccante vel incestuoso accipiat, ut episcopo vel ministris eius peccatum illius celet, nec pro respecta cuiusque personae aut consanguinitatis aut familiaritatis, alienis communicans peccatis, hoc episcopo innotescere detrectet. Nec quemquam poenitentem vel minus digne poenitentem, gratia vel favore ad reconciliationem adducat, et testimonium reconciliationis ferat eidem, vel quocunque livore [alium quemlibet] digne poenitentem a reconciliatione removeat, quia simoniacum est utrumque.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A church cannot be bought or bought back. This is what it says according to the letter.

The same, to the Bishop of Worcester and the Prior of Acre.

We received the complaint of the monks of Acre transmitted to us, that, when they had obtained a certain manor which is called Vella, with its appurtenances, and the church of Genen. from the monks of Cardon under an annual payment of fifteen pounds, and had received a charter concerning it from those monks, a certain prior of theirs, without consulting the chapter, resigned the aforesaid manor and church and charter to the monks of Cardon after receiving money. Hence, because the aforesaid monks of Acre complain that they have been unjustly burdened, and it falls to us to correct anything attempted less than reasonably, we commit the cause itself to your experience, and by authority of the presents we command that, the parties having been summoned before your presence, you hear more diligently the things proposed on each side and conclude the aforesaid cause, the remedy of appeal having been removed, by concord or judgment, knowing that, just as the aforesaid church could not be bought, so neither could it be bought back. But if the monks of Cardon, lawfully cited, disdain to approach your presence and stand in your judgment, you shall introduce the same monks of Acre into possession of those things concerning which the controversy is conducted, opposition and appeal ceasing, and shall not permit them thereafter to be molested without judicial order. But if each of you cannot be present to execute these things, let the other nevertheless execute them.

Ecclesia emi vel redimi non potest. H. d. quoad literam.

Idem Vigoriensi Episcopo et Priori de Acra.

Querelam monachorum de Acra nobis transmissam recepimus, quod, quum ipsi quoddam manerium, quod dicitur Vella, cum pertinentiis suis, et ecclesiam de Genen. a monachis de Cardonio sub annuo censu quindecim librarum fuissent adepti, et inde chartam ab ipsis monachis habuissent, quidam prior eorum, capitulo inconsulto, praescriptum manerium et ecclesiam et chartam monachis de Cardonio accepta pecunia resignavit. Unde quia praefati monachi de Acra se conqueruntur iniuste gravatos, et nobis imminet corrigendum, si quid minus rationabiliter attentatur, causam ipsam experientiae vestrae committimus, praesentium vobis auctoritate mandamus, quatenus, partibus ante vestram praesentiam convocatis, quae hinc inde proposita fuerint diligentius audiatis, et praescriptam causam sublato appellationis remedio concordia vel iudicio terminetis, scituri, quod, sicut emi non potuit, ita nec redimi ecclesia memorata. Si vero monachi de Cardonio legitime citati ad vestram praesentiam accedere et iudicio vestro stare contempserint, vos ipsos monachos de Acra in possessionem eorum, de quibus controversia vertitur, contradictione et appellatione cessante inducatis, nec permittatis eos exinde absque ordine iudiciario molestari. Si vero uterque vestrum his exsequendis interesse non poterit, alter nihilominus exsequatur.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: Money ought not to be demanded from churches for chrism, even if custom has this.

The same.

Those things that proceed from the root of avarice and cupidity and burst forth into the appearance of simoniacal depravity are to be completely uprooted, and those things that proceed from thorns and thistles are to be cut away with the sickle of apostolic moderation. But we have heard that you extort coins for chrism from churches with rash audacity, which under different names you now call cathedraticum, sometimes a paschal payment, and at times indeed an episcopal custom. But because this is known to be simoniacal and generates peril to souls, by apostolic writings we command you, and by commanding we enjoin, that from churches, under the pretext of any custom or prelacy, you by no means demand the aforesaid coins hereafter, knowing for certain that, if you presume this with rash audacity, you will not undeservedly be able to fear peril to your order and dignity. Nevertheless also, etc. (cf. c. 12, On Procurations III. 39.)

> Pro chrismate ab ecclesiis pecunia exigi non debet, etiamsi hoc habeat consuetudo.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ea, quae de avaritiae et cupiditatis radice procedunt, et in speciem simoniacae pravitatis erumpunt, penitus sunt exstirpanda, et quae de spinis et tribulis procedunt, falce apostolici moderaminis sunt resecanda. Audivimus autem, quod nummos pro chrismate ab ecclesiis ausu temerario extorquetis, quos diversis nominibus nunc cathedraticum, aliquando paschalem praestationem, interdum vero episcopalem consuetudinem appellatis. Quia vero hoc simoniacum esse cognoscitur, et periculum generat animarum, per apostolica scripta vobis mandamus et mandando praecipimus, quatenus ab ecclesiis. sub praetextu alicuius consuetudinis vel praelationis praescriptos denarios ulterius nullatenus exigatis, pro certo scituri, quod, si hoc ausu temerario praesumpseritis, periculum ordinis et dignitatis vestrae poteritis non immerito formidare. Nihilominus etiam etc. (cf. c. 12. de. cens. III. 39.)

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: To perform homage for obtaining spiritual things is simoniacal.

The same.

From your diligent report it became known to us that H., Archdeacon of Canterbury, enticed you by many promises, and through the admonition and solicitation of certain great men induced you to perform homage to him and furnish fidelity, in such a way indeed that he would provide you with an ecclesiastical benefice each year. Hence, because an obligation of this sort is sufficiently unlawful and exists contrary to the advancement of your salvation and also his, as your discretion by no means ignores, concerning this you more insistently and supplicantly asked to be absolved by us, adding that henceforth you would receive nothing at all from him from the established benefice. Wherefore we, attending that your petition in this matter is honorable and favorable, absolve you from homage and fidelity to the aforesaid archdeacon, especially since things furnished in this manner are known to be contrary to divine and human laws, by the authority of blessed Peter and also our own, in such a way that you receive worthy penance therefrom from some discreet bishop or priest and endeavor to be reconciled to God according to his counsel. But lest you can be bespattered by any mark or infamy on this account, we have considered that letters of our absolution ought to be granted to you, by which you may exist safe and fortified against the bites of those who bark and which you can display as testimony of our indulgence.

> Pro habendis spiritualibus homagium facere simoniacum est.
>
> Idem.

Ex diligenti tua relatione nobis innotuit, quod H. Cantuariensis archidiaconus te multis promissionibus allexit, et quorundam magnorum virorum commonitione ac sollicitudine induxit, ut ei homagium faceres et fidelitatem praestares, ita quidem, quod ipse tibi beneficium ecclesiasticum annis singulis exhiberet. Unde, quoniam huiusmodi obligatio illicita satis, et contra tuae salutis, nec non et suae profectum exsistit, sicut tua discretio nequaquam ignorat: super hoc absolvi a nobis instantius et suppliciter postulasti, adiiciens, quod ab eo deinceps nihil omnino de beneficio acciperes constituto. Quocirca nos, tuam in hac parte petitionem honestam et favorabilem attendentes, te a praefati archidiaconi homagio et fidelitate, praesertim quum haec taliter praestita divinis et humanis legibus contraire noscantur, ex beati Petri et nostra etiam auctoritate absolvimus ita, quod ab aliquo episcopo vel sacerdote discreto poenitentiam inde condignam recipias, et Deo secundum eius consilium studeas reconciliari. Verum ne aliqua propter hoc nota vel infamia possis respergi, absolutionis nostrae literas tibi duximus indulgendas, quibus contra latrantium morsus tutus et praemunitus exsistas, et quas in testimonium indulgentiae nostrae valeas demonstrare.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: An ordination or consecration is not judged simoniacal although something was given to the ordainer without an agreement.

The same, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

Although we by no means fail to recognize that your questions arise from the fervor of religion and are brought to us from the affection of inward devotion that you have toward us and the Church, nevertheless you must not doubt in these things beyond what is fitting, since human laws say that certain persons, content with slender religious scruple, disdain to furnish even necessary and lawful sacraments, calling that religious scruple slender which hesitates in such things where one ought not to hesitate in any measure. Hence the Psalmist says: "They trembled [with fear] where there was no fear." Therefore, in this matter—namely that the beloved [son of ours] P., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Lawrence in Damaso, but then cardinal deacon of Saint Eustace and legate of the Apostolic See, approached those parts concerning your election and in order to deliver the pallium to you, and that our beloved son Albanus, your brother, foreknowing his necessity, sent him one horse, with you entirely ignorant, because in coming by sea he brought no mounts or few with him—you ought in no way to fear, since in receiving or giving gifts three things are especially to be attended: namely, the quality of the person giving and the person receiving, the quantity of the gift, and the time of the donation. Let us solicitously consider the quality of the persons, from whom and to whom it was given, namely whether by a poor man to a rich man or conversely, or by a rich man to a wealthy man. Let us more diligently inspect the valuation of the gift and the time of the donation, whether the thing given is of greater or lesser price, and whether it is conferred when necessity is pressing or at another time. When these things have been examined more studiously, we find nothing worthy of reproach in your aforesaid question, as will appear more manifestly to your solicitude in what follows. Therefore, if by right consideration we weigh the person and quality of the aforesaid cardinal and your brother, it was no great thing for one horse to be sent to the cardinal by the same brother of yours, which so great and abundant a man would perhaps give even to a jester who did not ask. But if we consider the necessity of the time, it is established that this was done with no intention other than that the cardinal be aided in the aforesaid circumstance. Wherefore no scruple of doubt ought ever to arise in your conscience concerning this, since the thing given was of small price with respect to the person giving and the person receiving, and neither of them had anything in mind that could or ought to inflict any injury upon you, even in the least; although the horse was sent and bestowed, with necessity pressing, before the examination of the election and reception of the pallium, since it was done against your will and with you entirely ignorant; nor is the thing reputed of such value that it ought greatly to move the mind of the recipient or turn it from a purpose of honor toward something else. But what is written, "Blessed is he who shakes his hands free from every gift," is said of those gifts that are accustomed to entice or pervert the mind of the recipient, since, even if the person elected himself should offer his ordainer or consecrator an electuary, medicines, or some of the best wine, or other things of this sort that are of small price and ought not to incline or move the will of the recipient, nevertheless the Roman Church is not accustomed to interpret the recipient or giver as offending in these things, [unless these things intervened by agreement, etc.]

> Ordinatio vel consecratio non censetur simoniaca, licet ordinatori aliquid donatum fuerit non ex pacto.
>
> Idem Strigonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Etsi quaestiones tuas de fervore religionis exsurgere, et ex intimae devotionis affectu, quem circa nos et ecclesiam habes, ad nos perferri nullatenus ignoremus, non tamen tibi est in his ultra, quam oporteat, dubitandum, quum leges humanae dicant, quod quidam tenui religione contenti sacramenta etiam necessaria et legitima exhibere contemnunt, tenuem religionem vocantes, quae in talibus haesitat, ubi non est aliquatenus haesitandum. Unde Psalmista dicit: "Trepidaverunt [timore] ubi non erat timor." In hoc itaque, quod, dilectus [filius noster] P. tituli S. Laurentii in Damaso presbyter cardinalis, tunc vero S. Eustachii diaconus et apostolicae sedis legatus, pro electione tua, et, ut pallium tibi traderet, ad partes illas accessit, et dilectus filius noster Albanus frater tuus, eius praesciens necessitatem, ei equum unum, te penitus ignorante, transmisit, quoniam per mare veniens nullas aut paucas secum equitaturas adduxit, te nullo modo timere oportet, quum in accipiendis vel dandis muneribus tria sunt maxime attendenda, personae scilicet dantis et accipientis qualitas, quantitas muneris, et donationis tempus. Qualitas personarum, ut a quo et cui, videlicet, an a paupere diviti, vel e converso, sive a divite locupleti datum fuerit, sollicite consideremus. Aestimatio muneris et donationis tempus, si magni vel minoris pretii res data exsistat, et an instante necessitate seu alio tempore conferatur, diligentius inspiciamus. Quibus siquidem studiosius inquisitis, in praescripta quaestione tua nil reprehensione dignum invenimus, quod sollicitudini tuae in sequentibus manifestius apparebit. Si ergo praedictorum cardinalis et fratris tui personam et qualitatem recta consideratione pensamus, non fuit magnum, ab eodem fratre tuo cardinali equum unum transmitti, quem etiam ioculatori non petenti vir tantus et tam abundans forte donaret. Verum si temporis necessitatem perpendimus, non alia intentione hoc constat factum fuisse, quam ut cardinali subveniretur in articulo praenotato. Quare super hoc in conscientia tua nullus unquam debet scrupulus dubitationis emergere, quum res data modici pretii quantum ad personam dantis et accipientis exstiterit, nec alteruter eorum aliquid in mente habuerit, quod tibi possit vel debeat quamlibet vel in modico laesionem inferre, etsi ante electionis examinationem et pallii receptionem, quum te nolente et penitus ignorante sit factum, equus necessitate instante transmissus fuerit et collatus, nec etiam res tanti pretii reputetur, quae accipientis animum multum movere debeat, aut ab honestatis proposito ad aliud declinare. Quod autem scriptum est: "Beatus, qui excutit manus suas ab omni munere," de illis donis dictum est, quae accipientis animum allicere vel pervertere solent, quoniam, si ipsa etiam persona electi offerat ordinatori vel consecratori suo electuarium, medicinas aut de optimo vino sive de aliis huiusmodi, quae modici pretii fuerint, et quae voluntatem recipientis inclinare vel movere non debeant, non tamen ecclesia Romana interpretari consuevit, accipientem in his delinquere vel donantem, [nisi ista intervenirent ex pacto etc.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: If an abbot and the senior members of a convent received money by agreement for receiving a monk, they are suspended from office and benefice; money so received is restored, and the person so received is transferred to another monastery.

The same.

F., a priest, coming to us, proposed in a simple report to us that the abbot and brothers of Saint R. were unwilling to receive him as a monk until he agreed to give them thirty solidi for the monastic state. But after the agreement was made, immediately on the following day they clothed him in the monastic habit, and the same monks demanded thirty solidi, the abbot ten, and the household twelve for a meal, asserting this to be from the custom of the monastery. Therefore, because the truth of the matter is not established to us and a deed of this sort seems pernicious, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you diligently inquire into the truth of the matter and, if you find it to be so, you insistently admonish the abbot and monks to restore to the aforesaid F. the money so unworthily received, and compel them with all severity; and, suspending the abbot and the senior persons of the monastery from the exercise of office for the excess of so great a depravity, you shall command the said F. to endeavor to serve the Lord in the monastic habit in another monastery.

> Abbas et maiores de conventu, si pro receptione monachi receperunt pecuniam ex pacto, ab officio et beneficio suspenduntur, et taliter recepta pecunia restituitur, et in aliud monasterium ita receptus transfertur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Veniens ad nos F. presbyter simplici nobis relatione proposuit, quod abbas et fratres sancti R. noluerunt eum in monachum recipere, quousque illis pro monachatu triginta solidos dare convenit; conventione autem facta statim sequenti die eum monasticum habitum induerunt, et iidem monachi triginta solidos, abbas vero decem, et familia duodecim pro pastu, asserentes, hoc esse de consuetudine monasterii, postularunt. Quoniam ergo rei veritas nobis non constat, et factum huiusmodi perniciosum videtur, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus rei veritatem diligenter inquiras, et, si ita esse inveneris, abbatem et monachos ad restituendam pecuniam praefato F. tam indigne acceptam, instanter admoneas, et cum omni districtione compellas, et, abbatem et maiores personas monasterii pro tantae pravitatis excessu ab officii exsecutione suspendens, praecipias dicto F., ut in alio monasterio in habitu monastico Domino studeat deservire.

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: If a person to be ordained gave something by agreement to the person presenting him, it is simoniacal; nevertheless, he is not deposed if it is occult.

The same.

From the letters of your fraternity and from the confession of the priest who bears the presents, we received that, when his archdeacon was unwilling otherwise to present him for the order of priesthood [to be assumed], he paid six solidi to the same archdeacon, and thus, afterward, having been presented by him, he received the order itself. Hence, concerning that on which you sought our counsel, we considered that this response should be made to you: if this is not public but secret, you are secretly to approach the same priest, admonishing him, yet without any coercion, and earnestly inducing him to assume the order of some religious institute and perpetually abstain from the office that he [thus] illicitly acquired. But if perhaps you cannot induce him to assume the order of a religious institute, you are to endeavor to establish some ecclesiastical benefice for his support, on the condition that he ought perpetually to abstain from the priesthood. Otherwise, since his excess is secret, it will not be safe to coerce him unwillingly from the same office. Nevertheless, you shall not postpone imposing secret penance upon him according to what shall seem good to you.

> Si ordinandus praesentatori suo aliquid dedit ex pacto, simoniacum est; non tamen deponitur, si est occultum.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex tuae fraternitatis literis, et ex confessione sacerdotis praesentium latoris accepimus, quod, quum ad sacerdotii ordinem [assumendum] non aliter voluisset eum eius archidiaconus praesentare, sex solidos solvit eidem archidiacono, et sic postmodum ordinem ipsum per eum praesentatus accepit. Unde super eo, de quo nostrum consilium postulasti, tibi sic duximus respondendum, ut, si hoc non est publicum, sed secretum, eundem sacerdotem secreto convenias, monens, eum sine ulla tamen coactione, propensius et inducens, ut ordinem alicuius religionis assumat, et perpetuo ab officio abstineat, quod [ita] illicite acquisivit. Si vero ad religionis ordinem assumendum inducere eum forte non poteris, studeas ei ad sustentationem suam aliquod beneficium ecclesiasticum constituere, ad hoc, ut a sacerdotio debeat in perpetuum abstinere. Alioquin non erit tutum, quum sit secretus eius excessus, ipsum invitum ab eodem officio coercere. Cui tamen secretam poenitentiam, secundum quod tibi visum fuerit, iniungere non postponas.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: It is brief and cannot be summarized more briefly.

The same.

Know that it has reached our hearing—wherefore, if it is true, we greatly marvel and are rightly moved against you—that in the churches constituted in your jurisdiction you by no means permit vicars to minister unless money has been extorted from them, and that you presume each year to burden the persons of churches as though they were servants and tributaries with undue exactions, extorting from them money and procurations, calling them by various names, sometimes the bishop's aid, at times the same bishop's and your customs. If perhaps they oppose rendering these to you, you suspend the same persons and the vicars of the churches from office, and prohibit divine offices from being celebrated in their churches; and, among other things, you presume to extort from them coins for chrism according to your will, to the peril of your salvation, sometimes calling an exaction of this sort, so that you may seem to exact it more freely, an episcopal custom, sometimes synodals, and sometimes paschal coins. (And below:) But because it is not fitting for you to treat clerics so cheaply and dishonorably, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that you by no means demand money from them for exercising ecclesiastical ministry, assigning vicars, or chrism, and that you not presume hereafter to burden them with undue exactions or procurations, or to subject their persons or churches to interdict without manifest reason and a reasonable cause; otherwise, if a repeated complaint concerning this should at any time reach us, we will punish you gravely.

> Breve est, nec potest brevius summari. Idem.
>
> Ad nostram noveris audientiam pervenisse, unde, si verum est, plurimum admiramur et adversus vos iure movemur, quod in ecclesiis, in vestra iurisdictione constitutis, vicarios, nisi ab eis extorta pecunia, nulla ratione ministrare permittitis, et personas ecclesiarum quasi servos et censuarios singulis annis indebitis exactionibus gravare praesumitis, extorquendo ab eis pecuniam et procurationes, eas diversis nominibus aliquando auxilium episcopi, interdum eiusdem episcopi et vestras consuetudines nuncupantes. Quas si vobis forte reddere contradicunt, vos easdem personas et ecclesiarum vicarios ab officio suspenditis, et in eorum ecclesiis divina prohibetis officia celebrari, et inter cetera denarios chrismatis pro voluntate vestra ab eis in vestrae salutis periculum extorquere praesumitis, huiusmodi exactionem, ut eam liberius videamini exigere, quandoque consuetudinem episcopalem, quandoque synodalia, quandoque paschales denarios appellantes. (Et infra:) Quia vero non decet vos ita viliter clericos et inhoneste tractare, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus ab eis pro ministerio ecclesiastico exercendo, sive pro vicariis assignandis, seu pro chrismate nullatenus pecuniam exigatis, et eos indebitis exactionibus aut procurationibus de cetero gravare, vel personas eorum, aut ecclesias sine manifesta ratione et rationabili causa nullatenus interdicto supponere praesumatis, alioquin si quando ad nos exinde iterata querela pervenerit, vos graviter puniemus.

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Dispensation can be granted to one simoniacally ordained who is not himself a simoniac.

Lucius III.

Concerning persons indeed simoniacally ordained, we cannot give you a certain response according to your petition unless we know more fully how they were ordained, since some persons, although they are ordained simoniacally according to a certain appearance of simony—as, for example, when those ordained are ignorant of it—can nevertheless remain in their orders because they are not simoniacs.

Cum simoniace ordinato, qui simoniacus non est, dispensari potest.

Lucius III. De simoniace vero ordinatis iuxta postulationem tuam certum tibi non possumus dare responsum, nisi plenius cognoscamus, qualiter fuerint ordinati, quum quidam, licet secundum quandam speciem simoniae, utpote ipsis ignorantibus ordinatis, simoniace ordinentur, possunt tamen, quia simoniaci non sunt, in suis ordinibus remanere.

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: If one opposing the person elected ceases from opposition for money delivered with the will of the person elected, the person elected and afterward confirmed is a simoniac and is bound to renounce the benefice.

The same.

Cardinal Matthew showed us by a secret intimation that, when you had been elected to the government of your church by the will of the greater part of the brothers, because, with a few opposing you, you were unable to enjoy due peace, a certain friend of yours, with your knowledge and will, yet disturbed, paid a gift of a certain quantity to the person who seemed to be the master of the discord, and thus the opposition which he had previously maintained became quiet. But now you doubt that you are entirely immune from the stain of simony for as long as you wish to remain in the administration. Therefore, because through the aforesaid cardinal you sought the counsel of the Apostolic See as to what is to be done by you, we respond that you consult your own good greatly if you quickly and spontaneously resign the aforesaid administration, remaining mindful of that evangelical word: "It profits a man nothing if he gains the whole world but suffers detriment to his own soul."

Si contradicens electo pro pecunia, de voluntate electi tradita, a contradictione cessat, electus postea confirmatus est simoniacus, et beneficio renunciare tenetur.

Idem.

Matthaeus cardinalis secreta nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum fuisses ad ecclesiae tuae regimen de voluntate maioris partis fratrum electus, quia, paucis tibi contradicentibus, non valebas debita pace gaudere, quidam amicus tuus de conscientia tua et voluntate, turbata tamen, ei, qui magister discordiae videbatur, certae quantitatis munus exsolvit, et sic, quam prius sustinebat, contradictio conquievit. Nunc autem dubitas, quod non sis a labe simoniae prorsus immunis, donec in administratione volueris remanere. Quia igitur per iam dictum cardinalem apostolicae sedis consilium requisisti, quid tibi sit faciendum: respondemus, quod multum tibi consulis, si administrationem praedictam celeriter ac sponte dimittas, illius verbi evangelici memor exsistens: "Nihil prodest homini, si universum mundum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum patiatur."

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: No price ought to be demanded for absolving an excommunicated person.

The same.

Know that it has reached our ears that, when C. of Seneville had been bound by the bond of excommunication because of money that he owed, he satisfied the creditors, but, with the excommunicators seeking ten pounds for absolution, he was unable to obtain the benefit of absolution. Therefore, because it is unworthy and contrary to ecclesiastical reason that the benefit of absolution be bought back, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if the aforesaid C. paid the debt for which he had been named in the sentence, you cause him to be absolved freely by apostolic authority, notwithstanding any appeal, if the excommunicators, after being requested, shall not have done it.

Pro absolvendo excommunicatum pretium aliquod exigi non debet.

Idem.

Ad aures nostras pervenisse noveris, quod, quum C. de Senevilla propter pecuniam, quam debebat, vinculo fuisset excommunicationis adstrictus, creditoribus satisfecit, sed, excommunicatoribus decem libras pro absolutione quaerentibus, non valuit absolutionis beneficium obtinere. Quoniam igitur indignum est et ecclesiasticae rationi contrarium, ut absolutionis beneficium redimatur, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si praefatus C. debitum solvit, pro quo fuerat per sententiam nominatus, ipsum, nullius appellatione obstante gratis faciatis auctoritate apostolica absolvi, si excommunicatores id non fecerint requisiti.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: Monks received through simony, if they are simoniacs, are transferred to stricter monasteries; otherwise, after renunciation, they can be placed in the same monasteries or in other monasteries of the same order.

Clement III.

You wished to consult us concerning regular canons or monks who obtained entry through simony with their own knowledge and contrivance. Hence, since many express authorities are found concerning this, we respond nothing other than what has been established: that they altogether leave the place which they obtained in such a manner and go to solitary places or other stricter monasteries, in which they are to bewail so execrable an excess without interruption. But if the money was given without their knowledge, you shall compel them to renounce the same place, and afterward you can lead them back into it if they can remain there without scandal, or place them in another that is of the same order to serve God.

Monachi, per simoniam recepti, si sunt simoniaci, ad arctiora monasteria transferuntur: alias post renunciationem in eisdem vel in aliis monasteriis eiusdem ordinis poterunt collocari. Clemens III. De regularibus canonicis seu monachis nos consulere voluisti qui per simoniam ingressum ipsis scientibus et machinantibus, habuerunt. Unde, quum super hoc auctoritates multae reperiantur expressae, non aliud, quam statutum est, respondemus, ut locum, quem taliter adepti sunt, omnino dimittant, et solitudines seu alia monasteria districtiora adeant, in quibus tam exsecrabilem excessum sine intermissione deplorent. Si autem ignorantibus ipsis pecunia data fuerit, cogas eos ad renunciandum loco eidem, et postmodum in ipsum reducere, si ibi absque scandalo potuerint remanere, vel in alio, qui sit de ordine ipso, ad serviendum Deo poteris collocare.

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: If someone, renouncing a canonry to which he had been admitted simoniacally but in ignorance, is afterward admitted anew to it, he cannot claim anything for himself from the first reception.

The same.

From your intimation it became known to us that your father formerly acquired for you the benefice of a prebend through the intervention of money, and that when afterward, arriving at years of discretion, you received the sign of the Lord's cross, having been led to penance concerning the excess, you freely resigned the said prebend into the hands of the provost and brothers. But the same provost and brothers, taking pity upon you, elected you anew as their canon, in such a way, namely, that through this election you should obtain the last place in choir and in the other places. But because you humbly asked of us whether you could recover your place according to the earlier reception, to you we respond that, remaining content with the indulgence that your brothers are known mercifully to have shown you, you are to dare to claim nothing in that church by reason of the first reception.

Si quis, canonicatui renuncians, ad quem per simoniam ignoranter assumptus fuerat, postea de novo assumatur ad illum: non potest ex prima receptione sibi aliquid vendicare.

Idem.

Ex insinuatione tua nobis innotuit, quod pater tuus interveniente pecunia olim tibi praebendae beneficium acquisivit, quumque ad annos discretionis postmodum perveniens, accepisses dominicae crucis signum, super excessu poenitentia ductus dictam praebendam in manu praepositi et fratrum libere resignasti. Sed iidem praepositus et fratres, tibi compatientes, de nova te in suum canonicum elegerunt, ita videlicet, quod per electionem istam postremum locum in choro et in aliis locis obtineres. Ceterum, quia a nobis humiliter requisisti, utrum iuxta priorem receptionem tuum locum recuperare valeas: tibi Respondemus, ut indulgentia, quam fratres tui misericorditer tibi fecisse noscuntur, contentus exsistens, ratione primae receptionis nihil audeas in ipsa ecclesia vendicare.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: An election is to be quashed as simoniacal if money was promised to the electors on this account, although the person elected is ignorant, unless this was done in fraud of the person elected. This is what it says first. A bishop does not dispense with a person elected and rejected because of the vice of simony. This is what it says secondly. Abbas.

Celestine III.

It was intimated to us on your part with great diligence that, when four persons had been appointed by the chapter who ought to elect someone as plebanus, the friends of the person concerning whose election there was hope promised one or all of the electors that they would pay money, yet with the person who was afterward elected upon the intervention of a promise of this sort being ignorant of it. (And below:) Therefore, because you wished to consult us concerning this, we respond briefly to your consultation that, unless it perhaps were established that those who made such a promise maliciously did it fraudulently to the detriment of the person who was to be elected, although he himself was not aware of the promise, his election, as presumed through simoniacal depravity, is nevertheless entirely to be rejected. (And below: [cf. c. 25, On the Right of Patronage III. 38.]) Finally, concerning this which we found at the end of your consultation, we considered that this response should be made: someone elected as a plebanus, or priest, or prelate of any church and rejected, as was said, through simoniacal depravity cannot by law obtain any dispensation from his bishop. [Given at the Lateran on the eighth day before the Ides of May.]

> Electio simoniaca est cassanda, si propter hoc electoribus promissa fuit pecunia, quamvis electus ignoret; nisi hoc factum fuerit in fraudem electi. H. d. primo. Cum electo, reprobato per vitium simoniae, non dispensat episcopus. H. d. secundo. Abbas.
>
> Coelestinus III. Nobis fuit ex parte tua cum magna diligentia intimatum, quod, quum quatuor essent a capitulo constituti, qui debebant quendam eligere in plebanum, amici eius, de cuius electione spes habebatur, uni vel omnibus eligentium promiserunt, se pecuniam soluturos, eo tamen ignorante, qui, huiusmodi promissione interveniente postmodum est electus. (Et infra:) Quia igitur super hoc consulere nos voluisti, consultationi tuae breviter respondemus, quod, nisi forte constaret, illos, qui promissum tale fecerunt, per fraudem in dispendium ipsius, qui eligendus erat, id malitiose fecisse, quamvis ipse promissionis conscius non fuerit, eius tamen electio, tanquam simoniaca pravitate praesumpta, est penitus reprobanda. (Et infra: [cf. c. 25. de iure patr. III. 38.]) Ad ultimum super hoc, quod in fine consultationis tuae invenimus, hoc duximus respondendum, quod aliquis in plebanum, seu presbyterum, seu ecclesiae cuiuslibet praelatum electus, et, ut dictum est, per pravitatem simoniacam reprobatus, ab episcopo suo dispensationem aliquam obtinere de iure non potest. [Dat. Lat. VIII. Id. Maii.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: One who gives money to a prelate so that the latter will not molest him in fact in his right recovers it if the prelate does not observe what was promised. This is what it says by adhering to the letter.

The same, to the Bishop of Lincoln and the Prior of Pontefract.

Our beloved son R., the provost, explained to us that, when the Archdeacon of York did not cease to afflict him with many burdens and various injuries, he promised to give him a certain quantity of money so that he would desist from injuring him; but after receiving the money, the said archdeacon did not leave him in peace, as he promised, and did not cease from molesting him concerning his dignities and benefices. And therefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if the matter stands thus, you compel the archdeacon, by our authority, appeal having been removed, to restore what he received if it shall be established that he acted contrary to his promise, and that you also more strictly prohibit the archdeacon on our behalf from presuming to molest the provost himself or his people while the suit is pending, and, if perhaps he does so, let it be corrected through your solicitude.

> Qui dat praelato pecuniam, ne ipsum in iure suo de facto molestet, illam repetit, si praelatus promissa non servet. H. d. inhaerendo literae.
>
> Idem Linconiensi Episcopo et Priori de Ponte fracto.

Dilectus filius noster R. praepositus nobis exposuit, quod, quum Eboracensis archidiaconus eum multis gravaminibus et variis iniuriis afficere non cessaret, promisit ei certam quantitatem pecuniae se daturum, ut ab ipsius desisteret laesione; verum dictus archidiaconus post receptionem pecuniae eum, sicut promisit, in pace non dimisit, et super dignitatibus et beneficiis eius, ab eius molestia non quievit. Ideoque discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, archidiaconum restituere quod accepit, si eum contra promissionem suam venisse constiterit, auctoritate nostra appellatione remota compellatis, et prohibeatis etiam ipsum archidiaconum ex parte nostra districtius, ne pendente lite praepositum ipsum vel suos molestare praesumat, et, si forte fecerit, per vestram sollicitudinem corrigatur.

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: Nothing ought to be demanded for the blessings of those marrying and the funeral rites of the dead.

Innocent III, to the Abbot of Joug-Dieu and the Prior of Silla.

The parishioners of Villefranche, beloved sons, sent their complaint to us that Damasius, their chaplain, less lawfully demands and extorts money from them for the funeral rites of the dead and the blessings of those marrying. And if perhaps his cupidity has not been satisfied, he fraudulently opposes fictitious impediments to them, lest the bodies of the dead be able to be buried or the blessing of those marrying be celebrated. Therefore, because exactions of this sort oppose the institutions of the sacred canons, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that you admonish the said chaplain to desist from so great a presumption and also make suitable satisfaction for the excess, and more attentively and effectively induce him, inflicting upon him the canonical penalty, appeal having been removed, if he is unwilling to obey your admonitions. [Given, etc., on the second day before the Kalends of June, 1198.]

Pro benedictionibus nubentium et exsequis mortuorum nihil exigi debet.

Innocentius III. Abbati de Iugo Dei et Priori de Silla.

Suam nobis dilecti filii parochiani de Villa franca querimoniam destinarunt, quod Damasius capellanus eorum pro exsequiis mortuorum et benedictionibus nubentium minus licite pecuniam ab eis exigit et extorquet. Quodsi forte cupiditati eius non fuerit satisfactum, ne possint mortuorum corpora sepeliri, vel benedictio nubentium celebrari, fictitia eis impedimenta fraudulenter opponit. Quia igitur exactiones huiusmodi sacrorum canonum obviant institutis, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus dictum capellanum, ut a tanta praesumptione desistat, et etiam pro excessu satisfaciat competenter, moneatis attentius et efficaciter inducatis, sibi, si vestris monitionibus obedire noluerit, poenam canonicam appellatione remota infligentes. [Dat. etc. II. Kal. Iun. 1198.]

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: If through accusation it is established that a monk was received simoniacally, the person received and the person receiving are deposed. But if through inquisition, the person received is thrust into a stricter monastery; a worthy penalty is imposed upon the person receiving and the senior persons, and meanwhile they are suspended from the exercise of sacred orders.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The beloved son Master A., your messenger, proposed on your behalf that, when, visiting the diocese of Canterbury according to the custom of your predecessors, so that you might correct the things to be corrected and establish the things you should see ought to be established according to God, you found simoniacal depravity to have sprouted in monasteries and regular canonries and religious places, in such a way that many in them were received for a price who ought rather to have been received freely—indeed, even invited to the observance of religion. You therefore doubt whether, because a multitude is found in the cause, something is to be taken away from severity, or whether you ought to exercise the rigor of canonical discipline against such persons. We therefore respond thus to your inquiry: if an accusation shall have been canonically instituted before you against those who have been stained by a taint of this sort, after the crime has been proved by judicial order, you shall exercise the vengeance of canonical severity both against those giving and those receiving. But if it shall have been established to you concerning this through inquisition alone, you shall remove from such places those who were received in them through simoniacal depravity and direct them to stricter monasteries to perform penance. But upon abbots and abbesses, priors, prelates of every kind, and their officials, you shall impose suitable penance, and, until they have performed it, suspend them from the exercise of sacred orders, enjoining upon your bishops that they endeavor to observe this form throughout their dioceses. Nevertheless, that which shall have been freely offered without assessment can be gratefully received.

> Si per accusationem constat, monachum simoniace fuisse receptum, receptus et recipiens deponuntur. Si vero per inquisitionem, receptus in arctius monasterium detruditur; recipienti vero et maioribus poena condigna imponitur, et interim ab exsecutione ordinum sacrorum suspenduntur.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Dilectus filius magister A. nuncius tuus pro parte tua proposuit, quod, quum Cantuariensem dioecesim secundum praedecessorum tuorum consuetudinem visitans, ut quae corrigenda sunt corrigas, et statuas quae secundum Deum videris statuenda, in monasteriis et canonicis regularibus, et religiosis locis pullulasse repereris simoniacam pravitatem, ita, quod in eis multi pretio sunt recepti, qui potius gratis recipi debuissent, immo etiam ad religionis observantiam invitari. Dubitas igitur, an, quia multitudo reperitur in causa, severitati sit aliquid detrahendum, an in tales exercere debeas rigorem canonicae disciplinae. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si adversus eos, qui labe fuerint huiusmodi maculati, accusatio coram te fuerit canonice instituta, postquam crimen ordine fuerit iudiciario comprobatum, tam in dantes quam in recipientes canonicae severitatis exerceas ultionem. Quodsi de hoc tibi per solam inquisitionem constiterit, eos, qui per simoniacam pravitatem in locis talibus sunt recepti, ab illis amotos ad agendam poenitentiam ad monasteria dirigas arctiora. Abbatibus autem et abbatissis, prioribus, praelatis quibuslibet et officialibus eorundem iniungas poenitentiam competentem, et, donec illam peregerint, eos a sacrorum ordinum exsecutione suspendas, iniungens episcopis tuis, ut hanc formam per suas dioeceses studeant observare. Illud tamen gratanter recipi poterit, quod fuerit sine taxatione gratis oblatum.

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: An abbot can except against witnesses who deposed against him concerning simony in a judgment of inquisition on the ground that they are enemies and conspirators; but he cannot oppose other exceptions of crimes.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Victor and Masters I. of Bologna and L. of Modena, Canons.

Although Eli the high priest was good in himself, nevertheless, because he did not effectively rebuke the excesses of his sons, he received the vengeance of divine punishment both in himself and in them when, his sons having been killed in battle, he himself fell from his seat and died with his neck broken. Therefore, a prelate ought to arise for the correction of the excesses of subjects the more diligently, the more damnably he would leave their offenses uncorrected. Against them—so that nothing be said of notorious excesses—although one can proceed in three ways, namely through accusation, denunciation, and inquisition, nevertheless diligent caution is to be applied in all, so that, just as lawful inscription ought to precede accusation, so charitable correction ought to precede denunciation, and clamorous intimation ought to precede inquisition. "I will descend," says the Lord, "and see whether they have fulfilled in deed the outcry that has come to me." For the outcry then reaches the prelate when the excesses of subjects are reported to him through public reputation or frequent intimation; and then he ought to descend and see, that is, send and inquire whether truth accompanies the outcry that has come. For according to the canonical sanctions, if anything concerning any cleric whatever shall reach the ears of the prelate that can justly offend him, he ought not readily to believe it, nor ought the unknown matter inflame him to vengeance; rather, the truth is diligently to be investigated before the elders of the church, so that, if the quality of the matter demands it, canonical severity may strike the fault of the delinquent—not as though the same person himself were accuser and judge, but so that, as reputation makes delation or outcry denounces, he may discharge the duty of his office, with this moderation always applied, that the form of the sentence too be dictated according to the form of the judgment. Therefore, when those things which were greatly dissonant from regular honor had frequently been intimated to us concerning the Abbot of Pomposa, and when the monks approached our presence, some among them denounced him to us concerning simony, perjury, dilapidation, and insufficiency. When the same abbot excepted against them that fraternal correction according to the evangelical rule had not preceded a denunciation of this sort, and the same monks steadfastly asserted that they had first employed correction of this sort, although the oaths of two monks had been offered to prove this, nevertheless, because they still did not cease to contend concerning it, we, stirred, as we said before, by frequent outcries, wished by virtue of our office to inquire into the aforesaid matters, binding absolutely all the monks who had approached either with him or against the abbot himself by the bond of an oath, so that they would set forth the full truth that they knew concerning the matters proposed. When their depositions, reduced to writing, had been published, they began to dispute concerning them in many ways. But because we learned both from the assertion of the monks and from the confession of the abbot himself that the same abbot had expended entirely no small sum of money left by his predecessor and had obligated the monastery for another, greater sum, we considered that he, as suspect concerning dilapidation according to canonical and lawful sanctions on account of these and other presumptions, ought to be suspended from the administration of the abbey. And because simony seemed to have been proved in many ways against the abbot himself through witnesses, he opposed many exceptions against the witnesses, concerning which there was much dispute on each side: some asserting that in the crime of simony, as [also] in the crime of lèse-majesté, all persons indiscriminately, both infamous and criminal, were to be admitted not only to accuse but also to testify, since an accusation of simony proceeds after the likeness of a public crime and lèse-majesté, with many laws and canons alleged concerning this; others responding to the contrary that, although these two crimes are judged as though equal with respect to accusation, nevertheless they differ in many things, since both one penalty is inflicted for the one and another for the other, and a distinction is assuredly to be made between the persons of accusers and witnesses, since crimes are proved not through accusers but through witnesses, with many reasons and arguments nevertheless brought forward concerning this. But lest either the purity of innocence succumb confounded or simoniacal depravity escape unpunished, we, equity having been weighed, considered that neither all the exceptions opposed against the witnesses were to be admitted, nor were all to be repelled, but we admitted for proof only those opposed exceptions which, perhaps having been proved, would make it appear that the witnesses proceeded not from zeal for justice but from the tinder of malice, namely conspiracies and capital enmities; but the other objections opposed, such as theft and adultery, we considered ought to be repelled because of the enormity of the simoniacal heresy, in comparison with which all crimes are reputed as virtually nothing, because even if they weakened the credibility of the witnesses in some respect, they nevertheless would not destroy it entirely, especially since it happened that other supporting proofs assisted. [Given at the Lateran on the fourth day before the Nones of December, 1199.]

> Abbas contra testes, qui deposuerunt contra eum de simonia in iudicio inquisitionis, excipere potest, quod sunt inimici et conspiratores; alias vero exceptiones criminum opponere non potest.
>
> Idem Priori sancti Victoris, magistris I. Bononiensi et L. Modicensi Canonicis.
>
> Licet Heli summus sacerdos in se ipso bonus exsisteret, quia tamen filiorum excessus efficaciter non corripuit, et in se pariter, et in ipsis animadversionis divinae vindictam excepit, dum, filiis eius in bello peremptis, ipse de sella corruens fractis cervicibus exspiravit. Ad corrigendos igitur subditorum excessus tanto diligentius debet praelatus assurgere, quanto damnabilius eorum offensas desereret incorrectas. Contra quos, ut de notoriis excessibus taceatur, etsi tribus modis procedi possit, per accusationem videlicet, denunciationem et inquisitionem ipsorum: ut tamen in omnibus diligens adhibeatur cautela, sicut accusationem legitima praecedere debet inscriptio, sic et denunciationem caritativa correctio, et inquisitionem clamosa debet insinuatio praevenire. "Descendam," inquit Dominus, "et videbo, utrum clamorem, qui venit ad me, opere compleverint." Tunc enim clamor pervenit ad praelatum, quum per publicam famam aut insinuationem frequentem subditorum sibi referuntur excessus, et tunc debet descendere et videre, id est, mittere et inquirere, utrum clamorem, qui venit, veritas comitetur. Nam iuxta canonicas sanctiones, si quid de quocunque clerico ad aures praelati pervenerit, quod eum iuste possit offendere, non facile credere debet, nec ad vindictam eum res accendere debet incognita, sed coram ecclesiae senioribus diligenter est veritas perscrutanda, ut, si rei poposcerit qualitas, canonica districtio culpam feriat delinquentis; non tanquam sit idem ipse accusator et iudex, sed, quasi fama deferente vel denunciante clamore, sui officii debitum exsequatur, eo semper adhibito moderamine, ut iuxta iudicii formam sententiae quoque forma dictetur. Quum igitur de abbate Pomposiano ea nobis frequenter insinuata fuissent, quae ab honestate regulari nimium dissonabant, monachis ad praesentiam nostram accedentibus, quidam ex ipsis nobis ipsum de simonia, periurio, dilapidatione ac insufficientia detulerunt. Contra quos quum idem abbas exciperet, quod denunciationem huiusmodi fraterna correctio secundum regulam evangelicam non praecesserat, et iidem constanter assererent, quod correctionem huiusmodi praemisissent: licet ad probandum hoc duorum monachorum iuramenta fuissent exhibita, quia tamen super hoc ipsi nondum contendere desistebant: nos, ut praediximus, frequentibus clamoribus excitati, ex officio nostro voluimus inquirere de praemissis, omnes omnino monachos, qui vel cum ipso, vel contra ipsum abbatem accesserant, iuramenti vinculo adstringentes, ut de propositis plenam, quam scirent, exponerent veritatem. Quorum depositiones in scripturis redactae quum publicatae fuissent, super illis coeperunt multipliciter disputare. Quia vero tum ex assertione monachorum, tum ex ipsius abbatis confessione cognovimus, quod idem abbas non modicam summam pecuniae, relictam a praedecessore suo, totam expenderat, et in alia summa maiori monasterium obligarat, nos eum iuxta canonicas et legitimas sanctiones propter has et alias praesumptiones quasi de dilapidatione suspectum, ab administratione abbatiae duximus suspendendum. Et quia per testes simonia multis modis contra ipsum abbatem videbatur esse probata, ipse contra testes multas exceptiones opposuit, super quibus utrinque fuit multipliciter disputatum, aliis asserentibus in crimine simoniae, sicut [et] in crimine laesae maiestatis, omnes indifferenter, tam infames quam criminosos, non solum ad accusandum, sed etiam ad testificandum admittendos, quum ad instar publici criminis et laesae maiestatis procedat accusatio simoniae, multis super hoc et legibus et canonibus allegatis; aliis e contrario respondentibus, quod, licet haec duo crimina quantum ad accusationem quasi paria iudicentur, differunt tamen in multis; quum et alia poena pro uno, et alia pro altero inferatur, et inter personas accusatorum et testium sit utique distinguendum, quum non per accusatores, sed per testes crimina comprobentur, multis nihilominus super hoc et rationibus et argumentis inductis. Ne vero vel innocentiae puritas confusa succumberet, vel simoniae pravitas effugeret impunita, nos, aequitate pensata, nec omnes exceptiones contra testes oppositas duximus admittendas, nec repellendas duximus universas, sed illas duntaxat exceptiones oppositas probandas admisimus, quae forte probatae non de zelo iustitiae, sed de malignitatis fomite procedere viderentur, conspirationes scilicet et inimicitias capitales, ceteras autem obiectiones oppositas ut furti et adulterii propter immanitatem haeresis simoniacae, ad cuius comparationem omnia crimina quasi pro nihilo reputantur, duximus repellendas, quoniam et si fidem testium debilitarent in aliquo, non tamen evacuarent ex toto, praesertim quum alia contigerit adminicula suffragari. [Dat. Lat. IV. Non. Dec. 1199.]

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: This chapter is a gloss upon the preceding chapter. For it tends toward declaring whether and when criminal witnesses are admitted in the crime of simony, and in effect it says the same as the preceding chapter.

The same.

Through your letters you intimated to us that you doubt greatly concerning a certain decretal epistle which you assert was published by us concerning witnesses to be admitted against simoniacal depravity. Know therefore without hesitation that we by no means published that epistle which begins thus, "Although for abolishing," but we confess that we published another which begins thus, "Although Eli." For its understanding we believe a distinction must be made whether the person against whom proceedings concerning simoniacal depravity are brought is simply denounced or criminally accused, and whether proceedings are brought according to the rigor of law or according to the moderation of equity. Likewise, whether he is a regular who has already renounced the world or a secular who still exists in the world, and whether he is of an inferior grade or of a more excellent dignity. In addition, whether he was previously of clear reputation and good fame or gravely defamed and very suspect, and whether he can readily be punished or cannot be condemned without scandal. Moreover, whether the witnesses are honorable or criminal, and whether they have already been corrected for the crime or still persevere in the crime. Again, whether the crimes are the same or lesser, equal or greater, and whether the witnesses are believed to have deposed from zeal for justice or from the tinder of malice. Finally, whether the statements of the witnesses alone are brought forward to uncover simoniacal depravity or other supporting proofs also assist. All these things are to be distinguished for understanding that epistle, as the diligent investigator can perceive from the course of the epistle itself. That Abbot of Pomposa, who had long before renounced the world, was gravely defamed concerning simony, perjury, dilapidation, and insufficiency. And when simony seemed to have been proved in many ways [against the abbot himself] through monks who had sworn to bear testimony to the truth, he opposed many exceptions against the witnesses—namely conspiracies and capital enmities, theft, and adultery—in order to remove them from testimony. But we, lest the purity of innocence succumb confounded or simoniacal depravity escape unpunished, admitted for proof only those exceptions through which, perhaps having been proved, it would be established that the witnesses proceeded not [from] zeal for justice but from the tinder of malice, such as conspiracies and capital enmities. But the other exceptions [opposed], such as theft and adultery, we considered ought to be repelled because of the enormity of the simoniacal heresy, in comparison with which the other crimes are reputed as virtually nothing, since, even if proved, they would weaken the credibility of the witnesses in some respect but would not entirely destroy it, with other supporting proofs assisting; especially since the witnesses had [already] been corrected for the crime. Therefore we considered that such persons ought in such a manner to be admitted against such a person, not according to the rigor of law but according to the moderation of equity, since the proceedings were not criminal, so that he would be deposed from order, but civil, so that he would be removed from administration as undeserving and harmful. And assuredly such prelates can be removed from administrations for lighter causes, especially by the Supreme Pontiff, who has the power not only of judging but also of disposing, as the approved custom of certain religious requires. Hence the aforesaid abbot, without awaiting a sentence, yielded for himself as though conscious of guilt.

> Hoc capitulum est glossa praecedentis capituli. Nam tendit ad declaratio nem illius, an et quando testes criminosi admittantur in crimine simoniae, et in effectu idem dicit quod praecedens. Idem.
>
> Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, te plurimum dubitare super quadam epistola decretali, quam nos asseris edidisse de testibus admittendis contra simoniacam pravitatem. Noveris igitur incunctanter, quod nos illam epistolam, quae sic incipit: "Quamvis ad abolendam," nequaquam edidimus, sed aliam, quae sic incipit: "Licet Heli," nos edidisse fatemur. Ad cuius intelligentiam credimus distinguendum, utrum is, contra quem agitur de simoniaca pravitate, denuncietur simpliciter, aut criminaliter accusetur, et utrum agatur secundum iuris rigorem, aut secundum temperantiam aequitatis. Item utrum ipse sit regularis, qui iam renunciaverit mundo, an saecularis, qui adhuc in mundo exsistit, et an inferioris gradus, an excellentioris sit dignitatis. Ad haec, utrum ante fuisset clarae opinionis et bonae famae, an graviter infamatus et valde suspectus, et utrum de facili possit puniri, an sine scandalo nequeat condemnari. Praeterea utrum testes sint honesti, an criminosi, et an iam sint emendati de crimine, an adhuc in crimine perseverent. Rursus si crimina sint eadem vel minora, an paria vel maiora; utrumve testes ex zelo iustitiae, an ex malignitatis fomite deposuisse credantur. Denique utrum ad pravitatem simoniacam detegendam sola dicta testium inducantur, an alia etiam adminicula suffragentur. Haec omnia sunt ad intelligentiam illius epistolae distinguenda, sicut ex serie ipsius potest perpendere diligens indagator. Ille quidem Pomposianus abbas, qui iam pridem renunciavit mundo, erat de simonia, periurio, dilapidatione ac insufficientia graviter infamatus. Quumque per monachos, qui iuraverant perhibere testimonium veritati, simonia multis modis [contra ipsum abbatem] videretur esse probata, ipse contra testes multas exceptiones opposuit, conspirationes videlicet et inimicitias capitales, furtum et adulterium, ut eos a testimonio removeret. Nos vero, ne innocentiae puritas confusa succumberet, vel simoniae pravitas effugeret impunita. illas duntaxat exceptiones probandas admisimus, quibus forte probatis testes non [de] zelo iustitiae, sed de malignitatis fomite processisse constaret, ut conspirationes et inimicitias capitales. Ceteras autem exceptiones [oppositas,] ut furti et adulterii, propter immanitatem haeresis simoniacae, ad cuius comparationem cetera crimina quasi pro nihilo reputantur, duximus repellendas, quoniam, etsi probatae fidem testium debilitarent in aliquo, non tamen evacuarent ex toto, aliis adminiculis suffragantibus; praesertim quum testes de crimine [iam] fuerint emendati. Tales igitur contra talem taliter duximus admittendos, non secundum rigorem iuris, sed secundum temperantiam aequitatis, quum ageretur non criminaliter, ut deponeretur ab ordine, sed civiliter, ut ab administratione amoveretur, tanquam immeritus et damnosus. Et utique tales praelati ex levioribus causis possunt ab administrationibus amoveri, maxime per summum Pontificem, qui potestatem habet non solummodo iudicandi, sed etiam disponendi , sicut quorundam religiosorum approbata consuetudo deposcit. Unde praedictus abbas, non exspectata sententia, quasi male conscius sibi cessit.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: It is not imputed to a confirmed person elected if, while he prohibited it, money was given for his confirmation.

The same, to the Abbot of Gembloux.

As you intimated to us by your letters, when you had been nurtured from tender age in the church of Gembloux and, having become a monk there, in mature age you were at length promoted to the government of the church of Floreffe; but afterward, the Abbot of Gembloux having been removed from their midst, that church which had previously had you as a son called you, unaware and absent, as its father and pastor through canonical election. And because the cathedral church of Liège lacked a pastor, after you had delayed for some days in the church of Gembloux, proceeding to the church of Cologne, which is your metropolis, you meanwhile ministered in the church of Gembloux by its authority. But after a bishop was instituted in the church of Liège, he, having been requested by you, was unwilling to confirm the election made concerning you, alleging nothing other than that you had been translated from a lesser place to a greater. But when you learned that these things were being done to you for the purpose of extorting money, under threat of anathema you prohibited any money from being offered for a deed of this sort. Yet some of the brothers, without consulting you and with you ignorant, acting contrary to the sentence of excommunication made by you, promised money and even paid it, as was afterward reported to you; and thus, having been invited by the bishop, you freely received institution from him, as you sought. Concerning these matters, therefore, your discretion led you to consult us whether, on account of an unknown and prohibited promise, as was said before, the stain of sin is inflicted upon you; or whether, concerning the promise now known to you, you ought to do penance with the brothers who made it, since you were unwilling to adhere to simoniacal depravity, prepared to undergo labor for the flock of the Lord; or whether, although your conscience does not accuse you, you ought to abstain from the government received if we should decree it. Although, according to the institutions of the sacred canons, even little children who obtained churches through money by the cupidity of their parents are bound to resign them, nevertheless, because not to furnish consent and expressly to prohibit something are widely different, we considered that this response should be made: because, contrary to your prohibition and will—from which you afterward by no means departed—someone, with you entirely ignorant, promised and paid money, especially since he is joined to you by no consanguinity, we believe that nothing ought to be imputed to you as penalty or fault, unless perhaps afterward you consented to the promised money being paid or even to the money paid being returned; otherwise it would happen that the deed of someone preparing snares for an enemy would exist to the detriment of the person to whom it was entirely displeasing, and thus someone would report an advantage from his fraud. But it is established that those who gave the money or even received it are culpable to such an extent that, if their excess were manifest to the Church, which does not judge concerning occult things, they would be struck with canonical punishment. [Given at the Lateran on the second day before the Ides of August, 1199.]

Non imputatur electo confirmato, si eo prohibente pro ipsius confirmatione pecunia data fuit.

Idem Abbati Iemblacensi. Sicut nobis tuis literis intimasti, quum in Iemblacensi ecclesia fueris a tenera nutritus aetate, monachus factus ibidem, in aetate matura fuisti tandem promotus ad regimen ecclesiae Florensis; verum, abbate Iemblacensi post sublato de medio, ipsa, quae te prius tanquam filium habuerat, inscium et absentem in patrem et pastorem per electionem canonicam te vocavit. Et quia pastore carebat Leodiensis ecclesia cathedralis, postquam per dies aliquot moram feceras in ecclesia Gemblacensi, ad Coloniensem ecclesiam, quae tua est metropolis, proficiscens, ipsius auctoritate in Iemblacensi ecclesia interim ministrasti. Ceterum postquam in Leodiensi ecclesia fuit episcopus institutus, is, a te requisitus, electionem de te factam noluit confirmare, aliud non praetendens, nisi quod de minori loco translatus fueras ad maiorem. Verum quum haec tibi fieri pro extorquenda pecunia comperisses, sub interminatione anathematis vetuisti, ne pro facto huiusmodi aliqua pecunia offerretur. Sed quidam de fratribus, te inconsulto et ignorante contra excommunicationis a te factae sententiam venientes, promiserunt pecuniam, et etiam exsolverunt, sicut tibi postmodum est relatum, et sic ab episcopo invitatus, institutionem ab eo accepisti libere, quemadmodum postulabas. Super his ergo nos duxit tua discretio consulendos, si propter promissionem incognitam et prohibitam, quemadmodum est praemissum, tibi peccati macula infligatur, vel, si de promissione, nunc tibi cognita, tu cum fratribus, qui fecerunt eam, debeas poenitere, quum inhaerere nolueris simoniacae pravitati, paratus pro grege Domini subire laborem, vel, quamvis te conscientia non accuset, a suscepto regimine, si decreverimus, abstinere. Quamvis autem secundum sacrorum canonum instituta etiam parvuli, qui cupiditate parentum ecclesias per pecuniam sunt adepti, eas dimittere teneantur, quia tamen longe diversum est non praebere consensum, et expresse aliquid prohibere: taliter duximus respondendum, quoniam ex eo, quod contra prohibitionem et voluntatem tuam, a qua postmodum minime recessisti, aliquis te penitus ignorante promisit pecuniam et exsolvit, praesertim quum is nulla sit tibi consanguinitate coniunctus, nihil debet tibi ad poenam vel culpam, sicut credimus, imputari, nisi forte postea consenseris pecuniam solvendo promissam, aut etiam reddendo solutam; alioquin contingeret, quod alicuius factum, insidias inimico parantis, ei damnosum exsisteret, cui penitus displiceret, et sic aliquis de fraude sua commodum reportaret. Illos autem, qui dederunt pecuniam vel etiam receperunt, in tantum constat esse culpabiles, quod, si excessus eorum esset ecclesiae manifestus, quae non iudicat de occultis, poena essent canonica feriendi. [Dat. Lat. II. Id. Aug. 1199.]

Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: If a cleric confers his goods upon a church under an agreement that he be received in it as a canon and retain them for himself as a prebend, simony is committed; it is otherwise if this is done without an agreement.

The same, to the Dean of Beauvais.

Your discretion led you to consult us whether, if anyone offers certain things from his goods to some church, seeking that during his life it be lawful for him to hold those same goods in that church as a prebend, the goods ought to be received when offered in this manner, and whether the same cleric can be assumed as a canon of the same church without the vice of simony. We therefore respond thus to your devotion: if any cleric gives or offers his goods with a condition or agreement so that he afterward retains them as a prebend and so that he is admitted as a canon, an offering or reception of this kind cannot occur without the vice of simony, since in such matters every compact or agreement ought to cease according to the canonical sanctions. But if purely and without any agreement or condition he offers some of his goods, humbly asking that he be admitted as a canon and that it be lawful for him to retain his goods as a prebend, and the clerics of the same church consent purely, a reception of this kind without doubt can take place without a scruple of simoniacal depravity. Although we considered that this response should be made because it is given to us to judge concerning manifest things alone, nevertheless, if the person who makes such a donation is led by the intention that through the temporal goods which he offers he may be able to obtain spiritual things, and if the clerics who admit him as a brother would not have admitted him unless they received temporal advantages, without doubt both he and they are judged culpable before the strict Judge, who is the searcher of hearts and knower of secrets. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's on the third day before the Nones of December, in the tenth year, 1207.]

> Si clericus cum pacto confert ecclesiae bona sua, ut in ipsa recipiatur in canonicum, ut illa sibi retineat pro praebenda, simonia committitur; secus, si hoc fiat sine pacto.
>
> Idem Decano Belvacensi.
>
> Tua nos duxit discretio consulendos, si quis alicui ecclesiae de bonis suis quaedam obtulerit, petens, ut in vita sua sibi liceat eadem bona in ipsa ecclesia pro praebenda tenere, an bona recipi debeant sic oblata, et idem clericus assumi valeat in canonicum eiusdem ecclesiae absque vitio simoniae. Nos igitur Devotioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si quis clericus cum conditione vel pacto largiatur aut offerat bona sua, ut illa postmodum pro praebenda retineat, et ut in canonicum admittatur, huiusmodi oblatio vel receptio fieri non poterit sine vitio simoniae, quum in talibus omnis pactio aut conventio cessare debeat iuxta canonicas sanctiones. Si vero pure ac sine pacto vel conditione qualibet offerat aliqua bona sua, rogans humiliter, ut in canonicum admittatur, et ut bona sua retinere sibi liceat pro praebenda, et clerici eiusdem ecclesiae pure consentiant: huiusmodi receptio procul dubio fieri poterit absque scrupulo simoniacae pravitatis. Licet autem taliter duximus respondendum, quia nobis datum est de manifestis tantummodo iudicare: si tamen is, qui talem donationem facit, ea intentione ducatur, ut per temporalia bona, quae offert, spiritualia valeat adipisci, et clerici, qui eum in fratrem admittunt, non essent eum, nisi commoda temporalia perciperent, admissuri: sine dubio tam ille quam isti apud districtum iudicem, qui scrutator est cordium et cognitor secretorum, culpabiles iudicantur. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. III. Non. Dec. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter XXXV

Latin source headnote: No one ought to receive an order from one whom he believes to be simoniacal; but he can minister in those orders which he previously received from him.

The same, to the Prior of Canterbury.

Through your letters you intimated to us that, when B. had taken the monastic habit in a certain house of the Carthusian order, the term of his probation having been completed, he was ordained subdeacon by the diocesan bishop; but afterward he learned from the report of certain persons that, although the same bishop was otherwise an honorable man, he nevertheless had many times committed the vice of simony. Because of this the same monk, troubled by vehement grief, fears to minister in the order received, being unwilling to be promoted by the same bishop to the higher orders. Wherefore, since it is not lawful for him to leave the hermitage, and the aforesaid bishop does not permit him or anyone else of his diocese to be ordained by another bishop, you asked to be instructed by the Apostolic See what is to be done with the aforesaid monk regarding the order already received and the higher orders to be received. We therefore respond that the same monk may safely minister in the order thus received; but let him not ascend against his conscience to the higher orders, lest perhaps he build unto Gehenna. Although, because he has had an excessively scrupulous conscience, he has fallen into a difficulty of this kind, he will certainly not escape it unless he lays aside his error.

> - Non debet quis ordinem recipere ab eo, quem credit simoniacum; sed ministrare potest in illis, quos prius ab isto recepit. -

Idem Priori Cantuariensi.

Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod, quum B. in quadam domo Cartusiensis ordinis suscepisset habitum monachalem, termino suae probationis completo, a dioecesano episcopo fuit in subdiaconum ordinatus; sed postmodum didicit ex relatione quorundam, quod, licet idem episcopus alias vir esset honestus , multoties tamen commiserat vitium simoniae, propter quod idem monachus, - vehementi dolore turbatus, in suscepto formidat ordine ministrare, nolens ab eodem episcopo ad superiores ordines promoveri. *Unde, quum eidem eremum exire non liceat, nec praefatus episcopus * ipsum vel quemquam alium suae dioecesis ab alio episcopo permittat ordinari, postulasti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, quid cum praefato monacho in ordine iam suscepto et suscipiendis superioribus sit agendum - . Nos igitur respondemus, ut idem monachus in ordine sic suscepto secure ministret; sed contra conscientiam ad superiores ordines non adscendat, ne forte aedificet ad gehennam; licet ex eo, quod conscientiam nimis habuerit scrupulosam, in difficultatem huiusmodi sit collapsus, quam utique non evadet, nisi deponat errorem.

Chapter XXXVI

Latin source headnote: Nothing ought to be demanded for chrism or the investiture of churches, nor does custom or a variation of the name excuse it.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

To such an extent, at the demand of sins, has simoniacal depravity corrupted the hearts of certain persons, that, to the destruction of canonical sanction and [in], as it were, mockery of divine judgment, panting after shameful gains and saying in their heart, "There is no God," they cloak simony beneath an honorable name, as though, when the name is changed, the guilt and punishment are transferred. But neither is God mocked, according to the Apostle, nor will such followers of Simon, even if perhaps they elude temporal punishment at present, escape everlasting punishment in the future, since neither will the respectability of the name cloak the malice of the crime, nor will a word be able to abolish the guilt. Indeed, it has reached our hearing that, although formerly certain of your suffragans were accustomed, contrary to the canonical sanctions, to receive a fixed sum of money for chrism, not fearing the canonical penalty and desiring to elude your correction, they anticipate the time for making payment, receiving in the middle of Lent what they were accustomed to receive after Easter; and, so that they may disguise the reason for receiving it, they vary the name of the pennies, now calling the pennies which they first called chrismal and secondly paschal "the custom of mid-Lent." Certain others, however, vary neither the time of payment nor the name of the things to be paid in any respect, imitating the old custom in all things. But since he who receives the price before he confers the precious thing more expressly exhibits the appearance of a sale than does he who has deferred the time for receiving the recompense by dissembling, and has dissembled by deferring it, although each is dangerous in such matters, and since grace is to be conferred freely, lest it happen that both the reality and the name of grace are forfeited, we command and strictly enjoin your fraternity by apostolic writings that, relying on our authority and your own, you so correct the aforesaid excesses—restraining your suffragans and their officials, after prior instruction, by ecclesiastical censure, with the obstacle of appeal removed, from so unlawful an exaction—that a complaint about this cannot henceforth be brought to us, and the fault of others is not imputed to you as punishment for your negligence. Supported by the same authority, also take care to abolish from your province that depraved custom by which archdeacons demand that a mark of silver be given to them for the investiture of churches, while lesser deans demand a white cow or the payment of a fixed sum of money. [Given at the Lateran on the sixth day before the Kalends of July, 1199.]

- Pro chrismate vel investitura ecclesiarum nihil exigi debet, nec excusat consuetudo vel nominis variatio.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo. In tantum peccatis exigentibus corda quorundam simoniaca pravitas depravavit, ut in exterminium canonicae san *ctionis et * [in] elusionem quodammodo divini iudicii, lucris turpibus i *nhiantes, ac dicentes in corde suo: non est Deus, simoniam sub honesto nomine pallient, quasi mutato nomine culpa transferatur et poena. Verum nec Deus secundum Apostolum irridetur, nec tales Simonis sectatores, etsi temporalem in praesenti forsan eludant, in futuro poenam effugient sempiternam, quum nec honestas nominis criminis malitiam palliabit, nec vox poterit * abolere reatum. Sane pervenit ad audientiam nostram, quod, quum olim quidam suffraganei tui pro chrismate contra canonicas sanctiones certam consueverint accipere pecuniae quantitatem, non metuentes poenam canonicam, et correctionem tuam eludere cupientes, tempus faciendae solutionis anticipant, recipientes in media quadragesima quod recipere consuevere post Pascha, et, ut causam recipiendi dissimulent, nomen denariorum variant, denarios, quos prius chrismales, secundo paschales dicebant, consuetudinem mediae quadragesimae nuncupantes. *Quidam vero * - nec tempus solutionis, nec solvendorum nomen in aliquo varia runt, veterem per omnia consuetudinem imitantes . Quum vero expressius exprimat venditionis speciem, qui prius recipit pretium, quam rem conferat pretiosam, *quam qui tempus recipiendae mercedis dissimulando distulerit, et dissimulaverit * differendo, licet utrumque in talibus periculosum exsistat, et gratis sit gratia conferenda, ne ipsam contingat et rem et nomen gratiae demereri: fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus et districte praecipimus, quatenus auctoritate nostra fretus et tua, taliter excessus corrigas supra dictos, suffraganeos tuos et officiales eorum *institutione praemissa * per censuram ecclesiasticam sublato appellationis obstaculo a tam illicita exactione compescens, quod - *ad nos de cetero super * hoc querimonia deferri non possit , aliorum culpa tibi ob tuam negligentiam non imputetur ad poenam. Eadem quoque auctoritate suffultus Pravam etiam illam consuetudinem de tua provincia studeas abolere, per quam pro ecclesiarum investitura archidiaconi marcham argenti, minores vero decani vaccam albam sibi dari postulant, vel certam solvi pecuniae quantitatem. [Dat. Lat. VI. Kal. Iul. 1199.]

Chapter XXXVII

Latin source headnote: One ordained subdeacon, who first promised his presenter that he would seek nothing from him, cannot minister in the order received or ascend to higher orders without a dispensation, even if he did not believe that he was sinning.

The same.

Through your letters you intimated to us that, when D., the bearer of the present letters, wished to be ordained subdeacon and did not have a certain title, he entreated a certain priest to present him to the title of his church. When the latter refused to do this, he firmly promised him in return that, if he presented him, he would never seek any portion in his church; and thus he was ordained upon his presentation, nor, as he asserts, did he understand that in this he had done anything unlawful. Wherefore, when he afterward wished to be promoted to the diaconate, and the bishop admonished that no one who had been ordained through the intervention of some promise should come forward, the same man, remembering this promise, refrained from receiving the order of the diaconate, humbly confessing this to you and asking through you to be instructed whether he was guilty by reason of a promise of this kind and whether it was lawful for him to minister in the order of subdeacon received and to ascend to further orders; your fraternity considered that an oracle of the Apostolic See should be sought. We therefore respond thus to your inquiry: unless dispensation is mercifully granted to him, he ought neither to ascend to higher orders nor, according to the rigor of the canons, to minister in the order received.

> - Ordinatus in subdiaconum, qui prius praesentatori suo promisit, quod nil ab eo peteret, in suscepto ministrare, vel ad superiores ordines adscendere sine dispensatione non potest, etiamsi peccare non crediderit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod, quum D. lator praesentium vellet in subdiaconum ordinari, et certum titulum non haberet, quendam presbyterum exoravit, ut ipsum ad ecclesiae suae titulum praesentaret. Quod quum ille facere recusaret, ipse illi firmiter repromisit, quod nunquam, si praesentaret eundem, in ecclesia sua aliquam peteret portionem, et sic ad praesentationem eius exstitit ordinatus, nec, ut asserit, se in hoc illicitum egisse aliquid intellexit. *Unde, quum postmodum vellet in diaconum promoveri, episcopo commonente, ne quis, interveniente promissione aliqua, ordinatus * accederet: idem recordatus promissionis istius a susceptione* ordinis diaconatus cessavit, hoc tibi humiliter confitens, et per te postulans edoceri, utrum ex promissione huiusmodi reus esset, et an liceret eidem in suscepto diaconatus ordine ministrare, et ad ordines adscendere ulteriores, fraternitas tua duxit apostolicae * sedis oraculum requirendum. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, nisi cum eo fuerit misericorditer dispensatum, nec ad ordines superiores adscendere, nec in suscepto debet ordine secundum rigorem canonicum ministrare.

Chapter XXXVIII

Latin source headnote: It is simony to give money for obtaining a vicariate or another administration of spiritual or ecclesiastical things, and those giving and receiving are to be cast out from that church. This chapter says this in other words, although it is brief.

The same.

To consult. (And below:) Whoever shall have wished to obtain a vicariate or another administration of ecclesiastical things through money, buyers as well as sellers, are struck down with Simon Magus, and are justly excluded from that church in contempt of which they wished to give and receive money.

> Simonia est dare pecuniam pro vicariatu, vel pro alia administratione 5 rerum spiritualium seu ecclesiasticarum habenda, et dantes et recipientes ab illa ecclesia sunt eiiciendi. H. d. hoc c. per alia verba, licet sit breve.
>
> Idem.
>
> Consulere (Et infra:) Quicunque vicedominatum vel aliam ecclesiasticarum rerum administrationem per pecuniam obtinere voluerint, tam ementes quam vendentes cum Simone mago percelluntur, et ab illa ecclesia, in cuius contumeliam dare pecuniam et accipere voluerunt, iuste excluduntur.

Chapter XXXIX

Latin source headnote: It is simoniacal to demand anything for the consecrations of bishops, blessings of abbots, and ordinations of clerics, nor does custom excuse it.

The same, in the general council.

As we have learned for certain, in very many places [and] by very many persons, as though by those selling doves in the temple, shameful and depraved exactions and extortions are made for the consecrations of bishops, blessings of abbots, and orders of clerics, and it has been assessed how much is to be paid to this or that person, and how much to another or yet another; and, to the accumulation of greater damnation, certain persons strive to defend cupidity and depravity of this kind through a custom observed for a long time. Therefore, desiring to abolish so great an abuse, we utterly reject a custom of this kind, which is rather to be called a corruption, firmly decreeing that for these things, whether to be conferred or already conferred, no one shall presume to demand or extort anything under any pretext whatsoever; otherwise, both he who receives and he who gives a price of this kind, which is wholly condemned, shall be condemned with Gehazi and Simon.

> Simoniacum est aliquid exigere pro consecratione episcoporum et benedictionibus abbatum et ordinationibus clericorum, nec excusat consuetudo.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Sicut pro certo didicimus, in plerisque locis [et] a plerisque personis, quasi columbas in templo vendentibus, fiunt exactiones et extorsiones turpes et pravae pro consecrationibus episcoporum, benedictionibus abbatum et ordinibus clericorum, estque taxatum, quantum sit isti vel illi, quantumve alteri vel alii persolvendum, et ad cumulum damnationis maioris quidam cupiditatem et pravitatem huiusmodi nituntur defendere per consuetudinem longo tempore observatam. Tantum igitur abolere volentes abusum, consuetudinem huiusmodi, quae magis dicenda est corruptela, penitus reprobamus, firmiter statuentes, ut pro his sive conferendis sive collatis nemo aliquid quocunque praetextu exigere aut extorquere praesumat; alioquin et qui receperit, et qui dederit huiusmodi pretium omnino damnatum, cum Giezi et Simone condemnetur.

Chapter XL

Latin source headnote: Religious received for a price are expelled from the monastery together with those receiving them, and are confined in stricter monasteries to do penance. But those received before this council were placed in other houses of the same order, unless their multitude prevents it, yet so that they renounce the first reception and are received anew.

The same, in the same council.

Since the simoniacal stain has so infected very many nuns that they scarcely receive any women as sisters without a price, wishing to cloak a vice of this kind under the pretext of poverty, we wholly prohibit this from being done henceforth, decreeing that whoever shall henceforth have committed such depravity, both the one receiving and the one received, whether she is a subject or a prelate, shall be expelled from her monastery without hope of restoration and confined in a place of stricter rule to do perpetual penance. Concerning those, however, who were received in this manner before this synodal statute, we considered that provision should be made thus: removed from the monasteries which they wrongly entered, they are to be placed in other houses of the same order. But if perhaps, because of their excessive multitude, they cannot conveniently be placed elsewhere, lest [perhaps] they wander damnably in the world, let them by dispensation be received anew in the same monasteries, their former places being changed and lower ones assigned. We decree that this is also to be observed with respect to monks or other regulars. But, lest they be able to excuse themselves through simplicity or ignorance, we command that the diocesan bishops cause this to be published each year throughout their dioceses.

Religiosi pretio recepti una cum recipientibus de monasterio expelluntur, et in arctioribus monasteriis ad agendam poenitentiam detruduntur. Sed recepti ante istud concilium ponebantur sic recepti in aliis locis eiusdem ordinis, nisi multitudo sit in causa, ita tamen, quod renuncient primae receptioni, et de novo recipiuntur.

Idem in eodem.

Quoniam simoniaca labes adeo plerasque moniales infecit, ut vix aliquas sine pretio recipiant in sorores, paupertatis praetextu volentes huiusmodi vitium palliare: ne id de cetero fiat, penitus prohibemus, statuentes, ut quaecunque de cetero talem commiserint pravitatem, tam recipientes quam recepta, sive sit subdita sive praelata, sine spe restitutionis de suo monasterio expellatur, in locum arctioris regulae ad agendam perpetuam poenitentiam retrudenda. De his autem, quae ante hoc synodale statutum taliter sunt receptae, ita duximus providendum, ut remotae de monasteriis, quae perperam sunt ingressae, in aliis locis eiusdem ordinis collocentur. Quodsi forte propter nimiam multitudinem alibi nequiverint commode collocari, ne damnabiliter [forte] in saeculo evagentur, recipiantur in eisdem monasteriis dispensative de novo, mutatis prioribus locis, et inferioribus assignatis. Hoc etiam circa monachos vel alios regulares decernimus observandum. Verum, ne per simplicitatem vel ignorantiam se valeant excusare, praecipimus, ut dioecesani episcopi singulis annis hoc faciant per suas dioeceses publicari.

Chapter XLI

Latin source headnote: Bishops ought to demand nothing in order to permit clerics to be instituted in churches subject to them, monks to make profession, or the dead to be buried; otherwise, what was exacted will be restored twofold.

The same, in the same council.

We have heard concerning certain bishops that, when the rectors of churches die, they subject the churches to interdict and do not permit others to be instituted in them until a fixed sum of money is paid to them. Moreover, when a knight or cleric enters a religious house or chooses burial among religious, even if he has left nothing to the religious house, they introduce difficulties and malicious obstructions until some gift touches their hands. Since, therefore, according to the Apostle, one must abstain not only from evil but also from every appearance of evil, we wholly prohibit exactions of this kind. But if anyone shall have been a transgressor, let him restore twofold what was exacted, faithfully to be converted to the use of the houses to whose detriment it was paid.

Episcopi nihil exigere debent, ut permittant in ecclesiis sibi subiectis clericos institui, monachos profiteri, vel mortuos sepeliri; alioquin exacta restituentur duplicata.

Idem in eodem.

Audivimus de quibusdam episcopis, decedentibus ecclesiarum rectoribus, ipsas interdicto subiiciunt, nec patiuntur alios in eisdem institui, donec ipsis certa summa pecuniae persolvatur. Praeterea quum miles aut clericus domum religionis ingreditur, vel apud religiosos eligit sepulturam, etiamsi nihil loco religioso reliquerit, difficultates ingerunt et malitias, donec aliquid muneris manus contingat eorum. Quum igitur non solum a malo, sed etiam ab omni specie mali sit secundum Apostolum abstinendum, exactiones huiusmodi penitus inhibemus. Quod si quis transgressor exstiterit, exacta duplicata restituat, in utilitatem locorum, in quorum fuerint soluta dispendium, fideliter convertenda.

Chapter XLII

Latin source headnote: The sacraments are to be conferred freely; nevertheless, the ordinary compels laypersons to observe praiseworthy customs.

The same, in the same council.

It has reached the apostolic hearing by frequent report that certain clerics demand and extort money for the obsequies of the dead, the blessings of those marrying, and similar things, and, if perhaps their cupidity is not satisfied, they fraudulently oppose fictitious impediments. Conversely, certain laypersons, from the leaven of heretical depravity, strive under the pretext of canonical piety to break a praiseworthy custom toward holy church introduced by the pious devotion of the faithful. Therefore, concerning these things, we prohibit depraved exactions from being made and command pious customs to be observed, decreeing that ecclesiastical sacraments are to be conferred freely; but, the truth having been learned, those who maliciously strive to alter a praiseworthy custom are to be restrained by the bishop of the place.

> Sacramenta sunt libere conferenda; cogit tamen ordinarius laicos obser vare laudabiles consuetudines.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Ad apostolicam audientiam frequenti relatione pervenit, quod quidam clerici pro exsequiis mortuorum, et benedictionibus nubentium et similibus pecuniam exigunt et extorquent, et, si forte eorum cupiditati non fuerit satisfactum, impedimenta fictitia fraudulenter opponunt. Econtra vero quidam laici laudabilem consuetudinem erga sanctam ecclesiam, pia devotione fidelium introductam, ex fermento haereticae pravitatis nituntur infringere sub praetextu canonicae pietatis. Qua propter super his pravas exactiones fieri prohibemus, et pias consuetudines praecipimus observari, statuentes, ut libere conferantur ecclesiastica sacramenta; sed per episcopum loci veritate cognita compescantur, qui malitiose nituntur laudabilem consuetudinem immutare.

Chapter XLIII

Latin source headnote: He prohibits Cistercian abbots from being solemnly installed, and sets out the form of obedience which they render to their bishops.

Honorius III, to all the Abbots and Brothers of the Cistercian order.

Lest foulness stain the church of God, which Jesus Christ washed with his own blood, lest the wrinkle of duplicity deform it, the filth of cupidity, which is the root of all evils, and the deformity of venality, as a wrinkle contracted under the pretext of custom, are to be utterly eliminated from it, so that the dispensation of the mysteries of God and the mysteries themselves, freely received, may be conferred with gratuitous charity, Gehazi-like depravity having been entirely abolished. How detestable and how dangerous it is to buy or sell these things can clearly be discerned from the fact that the Lord cast those selling and buying sheep and oxen out of the temple and overturned the seats of those selling and buying doves. In the expulsion of the sellers and buyers, indeed, detestation of the crime defiling both is expressed; and in the overturning of the seats it is shown to what punishment those who preside, selling the gifts of God and the ecclesiastical sacraments, are subject. Therefore, lest a crime of this kind, [which] makes equal those whom it defiles, be able in any way to infect prelates and subjects, we most strictly prohibit by apostolic authority that any archbishop or bishop, archdeacon or official of theirs, presume to demand or extort from anyone elected as abbot, for a blessing or installation or for receiving their profession, under the pretext of custom, any palfrey or anything else, by whatever name it may be designated. We also forbid you to furnish in this manner things exacted under a pretext of this kind, since one must abstain not only from evil but from every appearance of evil. Prohibiting also the solemnities of installation from being performed for abbots-elect of your order, we add that archbishops and bishops are to be content with that form of profession which is known to have been instituted from the origin of your order, which is as follows: "I, brother, an abbot of the Cistercian order, promise that I shall perpetually render to you, lord bishop, and to your successors canonically substituted, and to the Holy Apostolic See, with my order preserved, the subjection, reverence, and obedience established by the holy Fathers according to the Rule of Saint Benedict."

> Prohibet abbates Cistercienses solenniter installari, et ponit formam obedientiae, quam praestant suis episcopis.
>
> Honorius III. universis Abbatibus et Fratribus Cisterciensis ordinis.
>
> Ne Dei ecclesiam, *quam lavit proprio sanguine Iesus * *Christus, macula foeditatis coinquinet, ruga duplicitatis deformet, * *cupiditatis spurcitia, omnium malorum radix, et venalitatis deformitas, quasi ruga sub praetextu consuetudinis contracta, eliminandae sunt penitus ab eadem, ut dispensatio mysteriorum Dei, et ipsa mysteria gratis accepta, Giezica pravitate prorsus abolita, caritate gratuita conferantur; quae emere vel vendere quam detestabile quamve periculosum exsistat, liquido potest perpendi ex eo, quod Dominus vendentes et ementes oves et boves eiecit de templo, et cathedras vendentium et ementium columbas evertit. In eiectione denique vendentium et ementium, facinoris inquinantis utrosque exprimitur detestatio, et in cathedrarum eversione monstratur, cui poenae subiaceant hi, qui praesunt, * *vendentes Dei dona et ecclesiastica sacramenta. Ut huiusmodi * *igitur facinus, *[quod] quos coinquinat aequat, praelatos et subditos non possit inficere quoquo modo, auctoritate apostolica districtius inhibemus, ne quis archiepiscopus vel episcopus, archi diaconus vel officialis ipsorum a quoquam, in abbatem electo, pro benedictione, seu installatione vel recipienda professione ab eis, * sub consuetudinis praetextu cuiusquam palafredum seu aliud quicquam, quocunque nomine censeatur, exigere vel extorquere praesumat. Vobis etiam sub praetextu huiusmodi exacta taliter inter dicimus ne praestetis, quum non solum a malo, sed omni specie mali sit abstinendum. Installationis quoque solennitates in electis abbatibus ordinis vestri fieri prohibentes, adiicimus, ut archiepiscopi et episcopi ea sint forma professionis contenti, quae ab origine vestri ordinis noscitur instituta, quae talis est: "Ego frater abbas Cisterciensis ordinis subiectionem et reverentiam et obedientiam a sanctis Patribus constitutam secundum regulam sancti Benedicti, tibi, domine episcope, tuisque successoribus canonice substituendis, et sanctae sedi apostolicae salvo ordine meo perpetuo me exhibiturum promitto."

Chapter XLIV

Latin source headnote: A prebend and revenues are owed to one received as a canon, notwithstanding the custom that he did not observe the depraved custom of giving some temporal thing to the canons themselves.

Gregory IX, to the Prior of Saint Thomas of Ascoli.

James, a canon of Ascoli, has set forth that, although he was received as a canon and brother in the church of Teramo, the canons of the same church refuse to assign him a share of the revenues and a prebend, alleging a certain custom that they ought to have a dinner from a newly received canon. Wherefore, we command that, if it is so, you compel the said canons, with appeal removed, to provide for him in the revenues and prebend as for one of the others, notwithstanding such a custom.

Recepto in canonicum debetur praebenda et reditus, consuetudine non obstante, quod non servaverit pravam consuetudinem de aliquo temporali dando ipsis canonicis.

Gregorius IX. Priori S. Thomae Esculani.

Iacobus canonicus Esculanus exposuit, quod, quum ipse in ecclesia Aprutinensi sit receptus in canonicum et in fratrem, canonici eiusdem ecclesiae partem proventuum ac praebendam sibi assignare recusant, quandam consuetudinem praetendentes, quod prandium habere debeant a canonico recepto de novo. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, dictos canonicos, ut tali consuetudine non obstante sibi, sicut uni ex aliis, in proventibus et praebenda provideant, appellatione remota compellas.

Chapter XLV

Latin source headnote: If someone ordained another under a promise that provision would not be sought from him, the ordainer is suspended for three years from conferring orders, and the presenter likewise for three years from the exercise of orders; but the ordained person is perpetually suspended from the order, and dispensation with them is granted only through the Apostolic See.

The same.

If anyone shall have ordained or presented to an order another from whom he received a promise or oath that the latter would not trouble him concerning his provision, let them know that the ordainer is suspended from the conferral of orders, the presenter from the exercise of orders for three years, and the ordained person from the order thus received until they shall have merited to obtain dispensation concerning this through the Apostolic See.

Qui ordinavit aliquem sub promissione de non petendo ab ipso provisionem, ordinator per triennium a collatione, praesentator vero ab exsecutione ordinum etiam per triennium suspensi sunt; ordinatus vero ab ordine perpetuo sit suspensus, et solum per sedem apostolicam cum eis dispensatur.

Idem.

Si quis ordinaverit seu ad ordinem praesentaverit aliquem, promissionem vel iuramentum ab illo recipiens, quod super provisione sua non inquietet eundem, ordinator a collatione, praesentator vero ab exsecutione ordinum per triennium, et ordinatus ab ordine sic suscepto, donec dispensationem super hoc per sedem apostolicam obtinere meruerint, noverint se suspensos.

Chapter XLVI

Latin source headnote: It contains two rulings, the second at "and to resignations." And because of the brevity and variety of the readings, it is not otherwise summarized.

The same.

Our mandate having been received that you dispense according to the constitution of the general council with monks who obtained a place in monasteries through simony by something being given (And below:) Briefly responding to your consultation, we say that the apostolic mandate extends also to abbots, and to resignations of spiritual and temporal things which are acquired in such a manner by no compact, but with an intention of mind anteceding on both sides; in which case it suffices for those at fault to make satisfaction to their Creator through penance alone, for they are not bound by reason of simony of this kind.

Habet duo dicta: secundum ibi, "et ad resignationes." Et propter brevitatem et varietatem lecturarum aliter non summatur.

Idem.

Mandato nostro recepto, ut cum monachis, qui per simoniam dato aliquo locum in monasteriis sunt adepti, secundum constitutionem generalis concilii dispensares (Et infra:) Consultationi tuae breviter respondentes, dicimus, mandatum apostolicum etiam ad abbates extendi, et ad resignationes spiritualium et temporalium, quae nullo pacto, sed affectu animi praecedente utrinque taliter acquiruntur, in quo casu delinquentibus sufficit per solam poenitentiam suo satisfacere Creatori, eos pro simonia huiusmodi non teneri.

Title IV: That Prelates Are Not to Grant Their Deputed Powers or Churches Under an Annual Rent

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: He who gives money in order to exercise episcopal or spiritual jurisdiction is deprived of his office, and the one who thus confers it will no longer be able to confer it and will be canonically punished. This it says together with the following chapters.

Alexander III, in the Lateran Council.

Furthermore, since in certain regions some persons who are called deans are appointed for a price and exercise episcopal jurisdiction for a fixed sum of money, by the present decree we establish that anyone who shall henceforth have presumed to do this is to be deprived of his office, and the bishop is to lose the power of conferring this office.

NE PRAELATI VICES SUAS VEL ECCLESIAS SUB ANNUO CENSU CONCEDANT.

Qui dat pecuniam, ut episcopalem vel spiritualem iurisdictionem exerceat, officio suo privatur, et sic conferens illud amplius conferre non poterit, et canonice punietur. Hoc dicit cum sequentibus.

Alexander III. in concilio Lateranensi. Praeterea, quoniam quidam in quibusdam partibus sub pretio statuuntur, qui decani vocantur, et pro certa pecuniae quantitate episcopalem iurisdictionem exercent, praesenti decreto statuimus, ut, qui de cetero hoc praesumpserit, officio suo privetur, et episcopus conferendi hoc officium potestatem amittat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above in the immediately preceding chapter.

The same, in the Council of Tours.

Since in certain regions some deans or archpriests are appointed for an annual price to exercise the functions of bishops or archdeacons and to determine ecclesiastical causes, which beyond doubt redounds to the burden of priests and the subversion of judgments, we [most strictly] prohibit this from being done any further. But if anyone shall henceforth have done it, let him be removed from the clergy by our authority. The bishop, moreover, who in his diocese shall have tolerated this and through his dissimulation permits ecclesiastical jurisdiction to be perverted, is to be struck by canonical severity.

Summatum est supra cap. proximo.

Idem in concilio Turonensi. Quoniam in quibusdam partibus decani quidam vel archipresbyteri ad agendas vices episcoporum seu archidiaconorum, et terminandas causas ecclesiasticas sub annuo pretio statuuntur, quod ad sacerdotum gravamen et subversionem iudiciorum non est dubium redundare: id ulterius fieri [districtius] prohibemus. Quodsi quis de cetero fecerit, nostra auctoritate removeatur a clero. Episcopus autem, qui in sua dioecesi hoc sustinuerit, et ecclesiasticam iurisdictionem sua patitur dissimulatione perverti, districtione canonica percellatur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: The governance of a church ought not to be committed under an annual rent.

The same, in the same council.

Since a certain enormous custom has gained force in some places contrary to the institutions of the holy Fathers, namely, that priests are appointed to the governance of churches for an annual price, we prohibit by every means that this be done, because, while the priesthood is made venal for a recompense of this kind, no consideration is had for the reward of eternal recompense.

Regimen ecclesiae sub annuo censu committi non debet.

Idem in eodem.

Quoniam enormis quaedam consuetudo in quibusdam locis contra sanctorum Patrum institutiones invaluit, ut sub annuo pretio sacerdotes ad ecclesiarum regimen statuantur, ne id fiat, modis omnibus prohibemus, quia, dum sacerdotium sub huiusmodi mercede venale disponitur, ad aeternae retributionis praemium consideratio non habetur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The fruits of churches can be granted under an annual rent.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

We received the complaint of Master G. that, although he had received the church of Chephalai from G., the parson of the same church, to be held for seven years at an annual rent, the latter presumed to take it away from him before he had held it for the space of one year, although the same G. had confirmed by pledged faith [to him] that until the appointed term he would inflict no molestation or burden upon him on this account. Therefore, commanding by apostolic writings, we command your fraternity that, if you find it to be so, with appeal removed, you strictly compel him to restore the aforesaid church to the said G. and, until the term established between them, permit him peacefully to possess it according to what they agreed between themselves.

Fructus ecclesiarum sub annuo censu concedi possunt.

Idem Exoniensi Episcopo.

Querelam magistri G. recepimus, quod, quum ecclesiam de Chephalai a G. persona eiusdem ecclesiae ad annuum censum tenendam per septennium suscepisset, ipse sibi, antequam eam per unius anni spatium tenuisset, auferre praesumpsit, quanquam idem G. praestita [sibi] fide firmaverit, quod usque ad statutum terminum nullam ei exinde molestiam vel gravamen inferret. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si tibi constiterit ita esse, appellatione remota eum districte compellas, ut praefatam ecclesiam dicto G. restituat, et usque ad terminum inter eos constitutum, secundum quod inter se convenerint, ipsum eandem permittat pacifice possidere.

Title V: On Masters, and That Nothing Is to Be Demanded for a License to Teach

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cathedral church ought to provide a benefice for a master who is to teach the clerics of the same church and other poor scholars freely; and one selling a license to teach, or forbidding a suitable person to teach, is deprived of his benefice.

From the Lateran Council.

Since the church of God, like a pious mother, is bound to provide for the needy both in those things which look to the support of the body and in those which conduce to the advancement of souls, lest the opportunity for reading and advancing be withdrawn from the poor who cannot be aided by the resources of their parents, through every cathedral church some suitable benefice is to be furnished to a master who is to teach the clerics of the same church and poor scholars freely, whereby the necessity of the teacher may be relieved and a way to learning may lie open to the learners. It is also to be restored in other churches or monasteries if, in times past, anything in them was deputed to this purpose. But for a license to teach no one shall at all demand a price, or under the cover of any custom seek anything from those who teach, nor, when a license has been sought, shall he forbid anyone suitable to teach. But anyone who shall have presumed to act contrary to this is to be made alien from an ecclesiastical benefice. For it seems fitting that he who, through cupidity of mind, strives to impede ecclesiastical advancement while selling a license to teach should not have the fruit of his labor in the church of God.

> DE MAGISTRIS, ET NE ALIQUID EXIGATUR PRO LICENTIA DOCENDI.
>
> - Ecclesia cathedralis providere debet magistro de beneficio, qui clericos - eiusdem ecclesiae et alios pauperes gratis doceat, et vendens licentiam - docendi, aut interdicens idoneum ad docendum, beneficio privatur.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi. Quoniam ecclesia Dei et in his, quae spectant ad subsidium corporis, et in iis, quae ad profectum proveniunt animarum, indigentibus, sicut pia mater, providere tenetur; ne pauperibus, qui parentum opibus iuvari non possunt, legendi et proficiendi oportunitas subtrahatur, per unamquamque cathedralem ecclesiam magistro, qui clericos eiusdem ecclesiae et scholares pauperes gratis doceat, competens aliquod beneficium praebeatur, quo docentis necessitas sublevetur, et discentibus via pateat ad doctrinam. In aliis quoque restituatur ecclesiis seu monasteriis, si retroactis temporibus aliquid in eis ad hoc fuerit deputatum. Pro licentia vero docendi nullus omnino pretium exigat, vel sub obtentu alicuius consuetudinis ab eis, qui docent, aliquid quaerat, nec docere quemquam, qui sit idoneus, petita licentia interdicat. Qui autem contra hoc venire praesumpserit, ab ecclesiastico fiat beneficio alienus. Dignum quippe esse videtur, ut in ecclesia Dei fructum sui laboris non habeat, qui cupiditate animi, dum vendit docendi licentiam, ecclesiasticum profectum nititur impedire.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Nothing ought to be demanded or promised for a license to teach, and what was exacted ought to be restored and what was promised remitted; and, when an inferior prelate neglects to establish a master, the superior will supply this.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Winchester.

You are henceforth carefully to prohibit that anything be demanded from anyone or even promised in your parish for a license to teach. But if anything shall afterward have been paid or promised, with appeal ceasing, cause what was promised to be remitted and what was paid to be restored, knowing that it is written: "Freely you have received; freely give." Indeed, if anyone, by occasion of this prohibition, shall have deferred establishing masters in suitable places, it is lawful for you, by our grant, with every contradiction and appeal set aside, to place prudent, honorable, and discreet men there over the instruction of others.

> Pro licentia docendi nihil exigi debet vel promitti, et exactum restitui et promissum remitti debet; et, negligente inferiore praelato ad magistrum constituendum, supplebit hoc superior.
>
> Alexander III. Vintoniensi Episcopo.
>
> Prohibeas attentius de cetero, ne in parochia tua pro licentia docendi aliquos exigatur aliquid aut etiam promittatur. Si quid vero postea solutum fuerit vel promissum, remitti promissum facias et restitui appellatione cessante solutum, sciens, quod scriptum est: "Gratis accepistis, gratis date." Sane, si quis occasione huius prohibitionis distulerit magistros in locis congruis instituere, tibi liceat de concessione nostra, omni contradictione et appellatione postposita, ibi aliorum instructioni praeficere viros providos, honestos et discretos.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Money ought not to be demanded for a license to teach, even if custom allows this.

The same.

The more the Gallican church shines forth in the knowledge and honorableness of greater personages, and more cautiously strives to avoid those things which appear to confound ecclesiastical honorableness, the more we judge those worthy of severe censure who assume the name and dignity of master of schools in your churches and do not impart to ecclesiastical men a license to teach others without a fixed price. But since this depraved and enormous custom has proceeded from the root of cupidity and greatly confounds the comeliness of ecclesiastical honorableness, you must provide and strive with the greatest care that this custom be [entirely] rooted out of your churches, since it is especially and particularly ascribed to you if anything worthy of praise or deserving of reproof is found in those churches. [We also, who, though unworthy, exercise the supreme power by the dispensation of the Creator's clemency, being unwilling to leave uncorrected the vice of such cupidity and rapacity, command your fraternity by apostolic writings] that, this custom having been rooted out of your churches, you take care to prohibit this under threat of anathema, strictly commanding that, whenever suitable and learned men wish to direct studies of letters, they be permitted to direct schools without any molestation or exaction, [lest knowledge, which ought to be imparted to each person freely, henceforth appear to be exposed for a price.] But if any shall have been transgressors of a prohibition or precept of this kind, despoil them by our authority and yours of their offices and dignities. Moreover, if [this] you neglect to correct according to our mandate, we shall regard your negligence as grave and troublesome and shall be compelled to extend our hand to correct these things, so that, if they wish to persist in the purpose of this rapacity, they will not be able to do so. [Given at Tusculum on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of November.]

> Pro licentia docendi pecunia exigi non debet, etiamsi hoc habeat consuetudo.
>
> Idem.

Quanto Gallicana ecclesia maiorum personarum scientia et honestate praefulget, et cautius nititur evitare quae confundere videantur ecclesiasticam honestatem, tanto vehementiori Dignos eos esse animadversione censemus, qui nomen magistri scholarum et dignitatem assumunt *in ecclesiis * vestris , et sine certo pretio ecclesiasticis viris docendi alios licentiam non impendunt. Quum autem haec prava et enormis consuetudo a cupiditatis radice processerit, et decorem admodum ecclesiasticae honestatis confundat, providendum vobis est summopere satagendum, ut consuetudo ipsa de ecclesiis vestris [penitus] *exstirpetur, quum vobis praecipue et specialiter adscribatur, si quid in ecclesiis eisdem laude dignum inveniatur vel reprehensione notandum. *[Nos quoque, qui, licet immeriti, dispensante clementia conditoris suprema fungimur potestate, tantae cupiditatis et rapacitatis vilium nolentes inemendatum relinqui, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus, consuetudine ipsa de vestris ecclesiis exstirpata, sub anathematis interminatione hoc inhibere curetis, districte praecipientes, ut, cuicunque viri idonei et literati voluerint regere studia literarum, sine molestia et exactione qualibet scholas regere permittantur, [ne scientia de cetero pretio videatur exponi, quae singulis gratis debet impendi.] Si qui vero huiusmodi prohibitionis vel praecepti exstiterint transgressores, eos auctoritate nostra et vestra officiis et dignitatibus spolietis. - Porro, si - [- hoc -] - *iuxta mandatum nostrum corrigere neglexeritis, negligentiam vestram gravem habebimus et molestam et ad ea * *corrigenda manum extendere compellemur, ita quod si voluerint in huius rapacitatis proposito persistere non valebunt. *[Dat. Tusculi XIII. Kal. Nov.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: In every cathedral church, or another church sufficient in resources, one master ought to be chosen by the prelate with the chapter, to whom the revenues of one prebend ought to be assigned; but in a metropolitan church a theologian also ought to be chosen. And if it is not sufficient for a grammarian and a theologian, let it provide for the theologian himself from the revenues of its church and cause provision to be made for the grammarian in some church of its city or diocese.

Innocent III, in the general council.

Since, because of poverty, both the pursuit of reading and the opportunity of advancing are withdrawn from some, provision was made by a pious constitution in the Lateran Council that, through every cathedral church, some suitable benefice be furnished to a master who would instruct the clerics of the same church and other poor scholars freely, whereby both the necessity of the teacher would be relieved and a way to learning would lie open to the learners. But since in many churches this is by no means observed, we, strengthening the aforesaid statute, add that a suitable master is to be appointed not only in every cathedral church but also in others whose resources can suffice, to be chosen by the prelate with the chapter, or by the greater and sounder part of the chapter, who is to instruct freely, according to his ability, the clerics of those churches [and of others] in the faculty of grammar and other subjects. Indeed, a metropolitan church is nevertheless to have a theologian who is to teach priests and others in sacred scripture, and particularly to inform them in those things which are known to pertain to the care of souls. The revenues of one prebend are to be assigned by the chapter to each of the masters, and as much by the metropolitan to the theologian—not that he is made a canon on this account, but that he may receive those revenues for as long as he shall have persisted in teaching. But if perhaps the metropolitan church is burdened by the two, let it provide for the theologian according to the aforesaid manner, but cause provision to be made for the grammarian in another church of its city or diocese which is able to suffice.

In qualibet cathedrali ecclesia, vel alia, in facultatibus sufficienti, debet a praelato vel capitulo unus magister eligi, cui reditus unius praebendae - debent assignari; in metropolitana vero ecclesia etiam eligi debet theologus. - Et si ad grammaticum et theologum non sufficit, provideat ipsi theologo ex - reditibus suae ecclesiae, et grammatico faciat provideri in aliqua ecclesiarum suae civitatis vel dioecesis.

Innocentius III. in concilio generali. Quia nonnullis propter inopiam et legendi studium et opportunitas proficiendi subtrahitur, in Lateranensi concilio pia fuit constitutione provisum, ut per unamquamque cathedralem ecclesiam magistro, qui eiusdem ecclesiae clericos aliosque scholares pauperes gratis instrueret, aliquod competens beneficium praeberetur, quo et docentis relevaretur necessitas, et via pateret discentibus ad doctrinam. Verum, quoniam in multis ecclesiis id minime observatur, nos, praedictum roborantes statutum, adiicimus, ut non solum in qualibet cathedrali ecclesia, sed etiam in aliis, quarum sufficere poterunt facultates, constituatur magister idoneus, a praelato cum capitulo, seu maiori et saniori parte capituli eligendus, qui clericos ecclesiarum ipsarum [et aliarum] gratis in grammatica facultate ac aliis instruat iuxta posse. Sane metropolis ecclesia theologum nihilominus habeat, qui sacerdotes et alios in sacra pagina doceat, et in his praesertim informet, quae ad curam animarum spectare noscuntur. Assignetur autem cuilibet magistrorum a capitulo unius praebendae proventus, et pro theologo a metropolitano tantundem; non quod propter hoc efficiatur canonicus, sed tam diu reditus ipsos percipiat, quamdiu perstiterit in docendo. Quodsi forte de duobus ecclesia metropolis gravetur, theologo iuxta modum praedictum ipsa provideat, grammatico vero in alia ecclesia suae civitatis sive dioecesis, quae sufficere valeat, faciat provideri.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Prelates and chapters are bound to send teachable scholars to the study of theology, who in their absence will receive in full for five years the revenues of their prebends and benefices. And if their own revenues do not suffice for the support of study, the prelate with the chapter ought to provide for them; but masters, for as long as they teach, receive in full the fruits of their benefices.

Honorius III.

Upon the watchtower [of the Lord, although unworthy, having been constituted, while we contemplate with diligent and manifold attention the state of the universal church, we grieve and are deeply saddened that, although the regions are white unto a most abundant harvest and the laborers are very few, very many watchmen who are bound to guard the vineyard of the Lord sleep their sleep, and do not gather the excessively growing tares into bundles to be burned, although the enemy continually sows them over it. And since the suckling and the little child fail in the streets, there is scarcely anyone to break bread for the little ones or give the thirsty the water of saving wisdom to drink, because the knowledge of the Lord is scant upon the earth; for very many, like wanton sons, having received no small portion of the substance of Jesus Christ, procure for themselves from it empty and resounding husks which do not satisfy, and draw water with the bucket of the Samaritans from the well or torrent of the waters of the unbelievers, which do not relieve but provoke the thirst of a dropsical man. Such men indeed, abandoning the enclosed garden with which no stranger communicates, where there is a fountain, and the well of living waters, and digging for themselves cisterns which cannot hold water, as though finding no pastures, disdaining the manna while sighing after the vegetables and melons of Egypt, run to gainful sciences, setting their eyes to look down upon the earth. Therefore, in order that through forceful rebukes, as through a father's blows, erring sons, recalled to their mother's breasts, may be able like young eagles to fly to them more swiftly, and may wish and be able, without stumbling and more willingly, to run in the odor of the fragrant grace of Jesus Christ to draw living waters in joy from the fountains of the Savior, we desire to remove certain obstacles opposing this journey and to annex certain necessary things to those which were long ago issued by our predecessors for the propagation of the offspring of true life.] Since, therefore, from the individual provinces beautiful maidens and virgins ought to be sought by maidservants for King Ahasuerus, who is called blessedness, and brought to the citadel and walls of the city, and to receive through the hand of Hegai the adornment of women, namely the supports of necessary things, we will and command that the statute [issued] in the general council concerning masters of theology to be appointed throughout the individual metropolitan sees be inviolably observed. Moreover, establishing by the counsel of our brothers and commanding with strict precept, because some could perhaps excuse themselves concerning this on account of the rarity of masters, we command that certain teachable persons be sent by the prelates and chapters of churches to the study of the profession of theology, who, when they shall have been taught, may shine like the splendor of the firmament in the church of God, from whom an abundance of learned men may afterward be had, who, like stars destined to remain for perpetual eternities, may be able to instruct very many unto justice. If their own ecclesiastical revenues do not suffice for them, let the aforesaid persons supply them with necessities. But those teaching in the theological faculty, while they teach in the schools, and those studying in it, for five years, are, by license of the Apostolic See, to receive in full the revenues of their prebends and benefices, notwithstanding any other custom or statute, since those laboring in the vineyard of the Lord ought not to be defrauded of their denarius. We will this to be observed unshaken, firmly decreeing that transgressors be struck with due punishment. [Indeed, although etc. (cf. c. 10, That Clerics or Monks, III. 50.) Given at Viterbo on the seventh day before the Kalends of December, in the fourth year of our pontificate, 1219.]

> Praelati et capitula ad studia theologiae scholares dociles transmittere tenentur, qui in absentia reditus praebendarum suarum et beneficiorum per quinquennium integraliter percipient. Et si proprii reditus ad sustentationem studii eis non sufficiunt, debet praelatus cum capitulo eis providere: magistri vero, donec docuerint, integre percipiunt fructus beneficiorum - suorum. -
>
> Honorius III. Super specula [*Domini licet immeriti constituti, dum diligenter multo intuitu contemplamur statum ecclesiae generalis, d olemus plurimum et tristamur, quod, quum albae sint regiones * ad messem plurimam et operarii sint perpauci, plerique vigiles, q ui tenentur custodire Domini vineam, dormiunt somnium suum, neque zizania nimium excrescentia in manipulos ad comburendum c olligunt, quamvis ea iugiter superseminet inimicus. Quumque lactens et parvulus deficiat in plateis, vix est qui frangat panem parvulis, aut propinet sitientibus aquam sapientiae salutaris, eo, q uod modica est in terra scientia Domini, quia plurimi velut* * *luxores filii accepta non modica portione substantiae Iesu Christi comparant sibi de ipsa siliquas vacuas et sonoras, quae non satiant, et aquam hauriunt cum situla Samaritanorum de puteo vel torrente aquarum infidelium, qui sitim hydropici non relevant, sed irritant. Tales equidem hortum conclusum, cui non communicat alienus, ubi fons est, et puteum aquarum viventium * *deserentes, ac fodientes sibi cisternas, quae aquam non praevalent continere, quasi non invenientes pascua fastidito manna, * *dum suspirant ad Aegypti olera et pepones, currunt ad scientias lucratives, statuentes in terram suos oculos declinare. Ut igitur per increpationes validas tanquam per patris verbera filii aberrantes ad matris ubera revocati veluti pulli aquilarum queant expeditius advolare, ac inoffense atque libentius velint et valeant currere in odorem flagrantis gratiae Iesu Christi ad * hauriendum aquas vivas in gaudio de fontibus Salvatoris, quosdam obices amovere cupimus huic itineri obsistentes, et necessaria quaedam annectere his, quae ab antecessoribus nostris edita sunt ab olim ad propagationem propaginis vitae verae.] *Quum itaque de singulis provinciis puellae speciosae, ac virgines pro rege * *Assuero, qui beatitudo dicitur, per ancillas quaeri debeant, et adduci ad arcem et moenia civitatis, et per manum Aggei mundum * muliebrem accipere, necessariorum videlicet fulcimenta, Volumus et mandamus, ut statutum, [editum] in concilio generali de magistris theologis per singulas metropoles statuendis, inviolabiliter observetur, statuentes insuper de consilio fratrum nostrorum, ac districte praecipiendo mandantes, ut, quia super hoc propter raritatem magistrorum se possent forsitan aliqui excusare, ab ecclesiarum praelatis et capitulis ad theologicae professionis studium aliqui docibiles destinentur, qui, quum docti fuerint, in Dei ecclesia velut splendor fulgeant firmamenti, ex quibus postmodum copia possit haberi doctorum, qui, velut stellae, in perpetuas aeternitates mansuri ad iustitiam valeant plurimos erudire, quibus, si proprii proventus ecclesiastici non sufficiunt, praedicti necessaria subministrent. Docentes vero in theologica facultate, dum in scholis docuerint, et studentes in ipsa integre per annos quinque, percipiant de licentia sedis apostolicae proventus praebendarum et beneficiorum suorum, non obstante aliqua alia consuetudine vel statuto, quum denario fraudari non debeant in vinea Domini operantes. *Hoc autem inconcusse volumus observari, firmiter * disponentes, quod feriantur poena debita transgressores. [Sane licet etc. (cf. c. 10. Ne cler. vel mon. III. *50.) *Dat. Viterbii * VII. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostri Ao. IV. 1219.]

Title VI: On Jews, Saracens, and Their Servants

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If a slave bought by a Jew for the purpose of commerce has become or desires to become a Christian, he is redeemed for twelve solidi.

From the Council of Mâcon.

With God as author, we decree in the present council that henceforth no Christian slave is to serve a Jew; but, twelve solidi having been given for any good slave, let any Christian have permission to redeem that slave, whether to freedom or to servitude. And if he desires to become a Christian and is not permitted, let the same be done, because it is impious to detain in the bonds of servitude to a blasphemer of Christ one whom Christ the Lord redeemed.

DE IUDAEIS, SARRACENIS, ET EORUM SERVIS.

Si servus, a Iudaeo emptus, causa mercimonii factus est vel fieri desiderat Christianus, pro XII. solidis redimitur.

Ex concilio Matensi.

Praesenti concilio Deo auctore sancimus, ut nullum Christianum mancipium Iudaeo deinceps serviat, sed datis XII. solidis pro quolibet bono mancipio, ipsum mancipium quicunque Christianorum, seu ad ingenuitatem seu ad servitium, licentiam habeat redimendi. Et si Christianus fieri desiderat, et non permittitur, idem fiat, quia nefas est quem Christus Dominus redemit blasphemum Christi in servitutis vinculis detinere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A Jew cannot have a Christian as a slave, but he can have him as an adscriptitious tenant.

Gregory, to the Bishop of Luni.

It has [reached us by the report of many that Christian slaves are detained in servitude by Jews dwelling in the city of Luni. This matter appeared to us the more severe, the more active was the forbearance on the part of your fraternity. For it was fitting for you, in consideration of your office and with regard for the Christian religion, to leave no occasion whereby simple souls would serve Jewish superstition, not so much through persuasions as, in a certain manner, by right of power. Wherefore we exhort your fraternity, according to the course of most pious laws,] that no Jew be permitted to retain a Christian slave in his dominion; but, if any are found among them, let liberty be preserved for them [by the aid of protection under the sanction of the laws]. Those, however, who are on their estates, although [even] they are free by the severity of the laws, nevertheless, because they have long adhered to the cultivation of their lands, owing by the condition of the place, are to remain to cultivate the fields, furnishing the customary payments to the aforesaid men. Let them also perform all the things which the laws command concerning coloni or persons bound by origin, and no [further] burden beyond this is to be imposed upon them. But if any of the Jews shall wish to transfer any one of these either to another place or retain him for another service, let him impute it to himself, who by his own rashness has condemned for himself the right over the tenant, and by the severity of the law the right of dominion. [Therefore, in all these things we will that you apply yourself diligently, etc.]

> - Iudaeus Christianum in servum habere non potest, in adscriptitium vero potest.
>
> Gregorius Episcopo Lucensi.
>
> Multorum ad nos [*relatione pervenit, a Iudaeis, in Lunensi civitate degentibus, in servitium Christiana detineri mancipia. Quae res nobis tanto visa est asperior, quanto a fraternitate tua patientia operosior. Oportebat quippe te respectu loci tui, atque Christianae religionis intuitu, nullam relinquere occasionem, ut superstitioni Iudaicae simplices animae non tam * *suasionibus, quam potestatis iure quodammodo deservirent. * Quamobrem hortamur fraternitatem tuam, ut secundum piissima rum legum tramitem,] Nulli Iudaeo liceat Christianum mancipium in suo dominio retinere: sed, si qui apud eos inveniuntur, libertas eis [tuitionis auxilio ex legum sanctione] servetur. Hi vero, qui in possessionibus eorum sunt, licet [et] ipsi legum districtione sint liberi, tamen, quia colendis terris eorum diutius adhaeserunt, utpote conditione loci debentes, ad colenda rura remaneant, consuetas pensiones praedictis viris praebentes. Cuncta etiam, quae de colonis vel originariis iura praecipiunt, peragant, et nihil eis extra hoc oneris [amplius] indicatur. Quodsi quisquam Iudaeorum aliquem de his vel ad alium transferre locum, vel ad aliud obsequium retinere voluerit: ipse sibi imputet, qui ius colonarium temeritate sua, et ius dominii sibi iuris severitate damnavit. [*In his * ergo omnibus ita te volumus sollerter impendi etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Jews can retain old synagogues; they cannot erect new ones.

The same, to the Bishop of Genoa.

Jews from the city [coming here to you complained to us that Peter, who by the will of God was led from their superstition to the worship of the Christian faith, having joined to himself certain undisciplined men, on the day following his baptism—that is, on the Lord's Day in the very festivity of Easter—had occupied their synagogue situated at Cagliari without your consent and with grave scandal, and had placed there an image of the Mother of God and of our Lord, the venerable cross, and the white cloak with which he had been clothed when rising from the font. Concerning this matter there also came to us writings attesting these same things from our sons Eupaterius, glorious master of the soldiers, the magnificent and pious governor in the Lord, and other nobles of your city. They also added that this had been foreseen by you and that the aforesaid Peter had been forbidden to dare it. Learning this, we wholly praised you, because, as truly befitted a good priest, you willed that nothing be done from which there would be just reproof. But because] by the fact that you in no way involved yourselves [in] those things which were wickedly done, you demonstrated that what was done displeased you, [considering in this matter the intention and, more especially, the judgment of your will, we exhort you with these addresses that, the image and cross having been removed from there with the veneration which is fitting, you ought to restore what was violently taken away, because] just as a legal definition does not permit Jews to erect new synagogues, so [also] it permits them to have old ones without disturbance. [Therefore, lest the aforesaid Peter or others, etc.]

> Iudaei antiquas synagogas retinere possunt, novas exigere non possunt. -
>
> Idem Genuensi Episcopo.
>
> Iudaei de civitate [- *vestra huc venientes questi nobis sunt, quod synagogam eorum, quae Caralis sita est, Petrus, qui ex * - *eorum superstitione ad Christianae fidei cultum Deo volente perductus est, adhibitis sibi quibusdam indisciplinatis, sequenti die baptismatis sui, hoc est dominico in ipsa festivitate paschali, cum gravi scandalo sine vestra occupaverit voluntate; atque imaginem illic genitricis Dei Dominique nostri, et venerandam crucem, et birrum album, quo de fonte resurgens indutus fuerat, posuisset. De qua re et filiorum nostrorum Eupaterii gloriosi magistri militum, atque magnifici pii in Domino praesidis, aliorumque nobilium civitatis vestrae ad nos haec eadem scripta attestantia * *incurrerunt. Qui etiam adiecerunt, a vobis hoc praesensum, et * *praedictum Petrum, ne hoc auderet, fuisse prohibitum. Quod * - *cognoscentes omnino laudavimus, quia, sicut revera bonum decuit sacerdotem, nil fieri, unde iusta esset reprehensio, voluistis. Sed * quia] *per hoc, quod minime vos * [in] *his, quae prave acta sunt, miscuistis, displicere vobis quod factum est demonstrastis, *[*considerantes hac de re vestrae voluntatis intentum, ac magis * *iudicium, his hortamur, affatibus, ut sublata exinde cum ea, qua dignum est, veneratione imagine atque cruce, debeatis quod * - violenter ablatum est reformare, quia] Sicut legalis diffinitio Iudaeos novas non patitur erigere synagogas: ita [quoque] eos sine inquietudine veteres habere permittit. [*Ne ergo * supradictus Petrus vel alii etc.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: On Good Friday Jews are not permitted to keep doors or windows open.

Alexander III.

Since concerning those matters about which you wrote to us in your letters regarding the Jews we have no certain canon, by notification of the present letters we intimate to your fraternity that, your clergy having been convoked together, you are generally to forbid, by both our authority and your own, that Jews have their doors or windows open on the day of the Parasceve, but are to keep them closed the whole day. You are also to permit no Christian slaves to live with them, but generally proclaim to all that no Christian dare remain in their service, lest perhaps through association with them they be converted to the unbelief of Judaism. [But concerning the lands, etc. (cf. c. 16, On Tithes, III. 30.)]

> In die Veneris sancto non licet Iudaeis tenere ostia vel fenestras apertas.
>
> Alexander III. Quia super his, unde nos in literis tuis de Iudaeis scripsisti, certum canonem non habemus, fraternitati tuae significatione praesentium intimamus, quod clero tuo in unum pariter convocato, Generaliter tam nostra quam tua auctoritate - interdicas, ut Iudaei ostia vel fenestras in die Parasceues aperta non habeant, sed clausa teneant tota die. Manci *pia quoque Christiana nulla cum eis habitare permittas, sed * - *generaliter cunctis edicas, ne aliquis Christianorum in eorum * servitio audeat commorari, ne forte ex ipsorum conversatione ad Iudaismi perfidiam convertantur. - [De terris vero etc. - (- cf. c. 16. de decim. III. 30.)]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Christians who serve in the house of Jews, Saracens, or pagans ought to be excommunicated. And secular princes who presume to despoil baptized Jews of their goods ought to be excommunicated.

The same, from the Lateran Council.

Neither under the pretext of nursing their children, nor for service, nor for any other cause, are Jews or Saracens to be permitted to have Christian slaves in their houses. Those who shall have presumed to dwell with them are to be excommunicated. (And below: cf. c. 21, On Witnesses, II. 20.) If, moreover, any, by the inspiration of God, shall have been converted to the Christian faith, they are in no way to be excluded from their possessions, since those converted to the faith ought to be of a better condition than they were held before they received the faith. But if it shall have been done otherwise, we enjoin upon the princes or authorities of those places, under penalty of excommunication, that they cause the portion of their inheritance and of their goods to be exhibited to them in full.

> Excommunicari debent Christiani, qui in domo serviunt Iudaeis, vel - Sarracenis sive paganis. Et principes saeculares excommunicari debent, qui Iudaeos baptizatos suis bonis spoliare praesumunt.
>
> Idem ex concilio Lateranensi. Iudaei sive Sarraceni neque sub alendorum puerorum suorum obtentu, nec pro servitio vel alia qualibet causa Christiana mancipia in domibus suis permittantur habere. Excommunicentur autem qui cum eis praesumpserint habitare. (Et infra: cf. c. 21. de testib. II. 20.) Si qui praeterea Deo inspirante ad fidem se converterint Christianam, a possessionibus suis nullatenus excludantur, quum melioris conditionis ad fidem conversos esse oporteat, quam, antequam fidem susceperint, habebantur. Si autem secus fuerit factum, principibus seu potestatibus eorundem locorum iniungimus sub poena excommunicationis, ut portionem hereditatis suae et bonorum suorum ex integro eis faciant exhiberi.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Christians carrying prohibited merchandise to the Saracens, or sailing in their ships, are to be excommunicated and deprived of their goods, and are made slaves of those who capture them.

The same, in the same council.

Savage cupidity has so occupied the minds of certain persons that those who glory in the Christian name carry to the Saracens arms, iron, and lashings for galleys, and become equal or even superior to them in malice when they furnish them arms and necessities for attacking Christians. There are also those who, for their cupidity, exercise command and the care of navigation in the galleys and piratical ships of the Saracens. We therefore decree that such persons, cut off from ecclesiastical communion and subjected for their iniquity to excommunication, are also to be punished by deprivation of their goods through Catholic princes [of the world] and consuls of cities, and are to become slaves of those who capture them if they are captured. We also command that frequent and solemn excommunication be pronounced against them throughout the churches of maritime cities. The excommunication also, etc. (cf. c. 3, On Ravishers, V. 17.)

> Christiani, deferentes Sarracenis merces prohibitas, vel in ipsorum navibus navigantes, excommunicandi sunt, et rebus eorum privandi, et efficiuntur capientium servi.

Idem in eodem.

Ita quorundam animos occupavit saeva cupiditas, ut, qui gloriantur nomine Christiano Sarracenis arma, ferrum et ligamina deferant galearum, et pares aut etiam superiores in malitia fiant illis, dum ad impugnandos Christianos arma eis et necessaria subministrant. Sunt etiam, qui pro cupiditate sua in galeis et piraticis Sarracenorum navibus regimen et curam gubernationis exerceant. Tales igitur, ab ecclesiastica communione praecisos, et excommunicationi pro sua iniquitate subiectos, et rerum suarum per principes [saeculi] catholicos et consules civitatum privatione mulctari, et capientium fieri servos, si capti fuerint, censemus. Praecipimus etiam, ut per ecclesias maritimarum urbium crebra et solennis in eos excommunicatio proferatur. Excommunicationis quoque etc. (cf. c. 3. de rapt. V. 17.)

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Jews can restore old synagogues to their former state; they cannot erect them anew.

The same.

He consulted. (And below: [cf. c. 29, On Appeals, II. 28.]) You ought not to permit Jews also to construct new synagogues where they did not have them. But if old ones have fallen down or threaten ruin, it can be tolerated with equanimity that they rebuild them, but not that they raise them higher or make them larger or more costly than they are known to have been before; for they certainly ought to regard this as a great thing, that they are tolerated in their old synagogues and their observances.

- Iudaei veteres synagogas in priorem statum reformare possunt; de novo exigere non possunt.

Idem.

Consuluit (Et infra: [cf. c. 29. de app. II. 28.]) Iudaeos etiam de novo construere synagogas, ubi eas non habuerunt, pati non debes. Verum, si antiquae corruerint, vel ruinam minantur, ut eas reaedificent, potest aequanimiter tolerari, non autem, ut eas exaltent, aut ampliores aut pretiosiores faciant, quam antea fuisse noscuntur; qui utique hoc pro magno debent habere, quod in veteribus synagogis et suis observantiis tolerantur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Christians ought not to be in the domestic service of Jews.

The same.

Moreover, by the authority of the present letters we command and enjoin that you wholly forbid all Christians who are in your jurisdiction and, if necessary, compel them by ecclesiastical severity, not to expose themselves continually for any recompense to the service of Jews. Take care also to prohibit this to their midwives and nurses, lest they presume to nurse the infants of Jews in the houses of those same persons, because the customs of the Jews and ours agree in nothing, and they would easily incline the minds of the simple to their superstition and unbelief through continual association and constant familiarity, at the instigation of the enemy of the human race. [Moreover, etc.; cf. c. 7, On Usury, V. 19.]

In familiari servitio Iudaeorum Christiani esse non debent.

Idem.

Ad haec praesentium auctoritate mandamus atque praecipimus, quatenus omnibus Christianis, qui sunt in iurisdictione vestra, penitus interdicatis, et, si necesse fuerit, districtione ecclesiastica compellatis eosdem, ne ipsi Iudaeorum servitio se assidue pro aliqua mercede exponant; quod etiam obstetricibus et nutricibus eorum prohibere curetis, ne infantes Iudaeorum in eorundem domibus nutrire praesumant, quoniam Iudaeorum mores et nostri in nullo concordant, et ipsi de facili ob continuam conversationem et assiduam familiaritatem, instigante humani generis inimico, ad suam superstitionem et perfidiam simplicium animos inclinarent. [Praeterea etc. cf. c. 7. de usur. V. 19.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Jews are not to be baptized unwillingly, nor compelled to this, nor punished without judgment, nor despoiled of their goods, nor molested during their festivals; neither are their cemeteries to be violated or their bodies exhumed.

Clement III.

Just as Jews ought not without permission to presume in their synagogues beyond what is permitted in the law, so they ought to sustain no prejudice in those things which have been granted to them. We therefore, although they prefer to remain in their hardness rather than know the words of the Prophets and the mysteries of their scriptures, and to have knowledge of the Christian faith and salvation, nevertheless, because they seek our defense and aid, following from the gentleness of Christian piety the footsteps of our predecessors of happy memory, the Roman Pontiffs Calixtus, Eugenius, [and Alexander,] admit their petitions and grant them the shield of our protection. We therefore establish that no Christian compel unwilling or refusing Jews to come to baptism [through violence]. But if anyone shall have fled to Christians for the sake of the faith, after his will has been disclosed, let him be made a Christian without calumny; for he is not believed to have the faith of Christ who is compelled to come to Christian baptism not voluntarily but unwillingly. Also, no Christian shall presume, without a judgment of the earthly authority, either to kill or wound any one of them, or to take away from them their monies, or to change the good customs which until now they have had [in the region in which they live]. Especially, during the celebration of their festivals, let no one in any way disturb them with cudgels or stones. Nor is anyone to demand coerced services from them, except those which they themselves were accustomed to perform in past time. In addition, opposing the depravity and avarice of evil men, we decree that no one dare mutilate or invade a cemetery of the Jews or dig up buried bodies under the pretext of money. But if anyone, the tenor of this decree having been learned, shall [rashly], which God forbid, have presumed to act contrary to it, let him suffer the peril of his honor and office or be struck with a sentence of excommunication, unless he shall have corrected his presumption by worthy satisfaction.

Iudaei inviti non sunt baptizandi, nec ad hoc cogendi, nec sine iudicio puniendi, aut rebus suis spoliandi, vel in suis festivitatibus molestandi, nec ipsorum coemeteria violanda, aut eorum corpora exhumanda.

Clemens III. Sicut Iudaei *non debent sine licentia in synagogis * *ultra, quem in lege permissum est, praesumere ita in his, quae eis concessa sunt, nullum debent praeiudicium sustinere. Nos * ergo, quum, in sua magis velint duritia permanere, quam Prophetarum verba et suarum scripturarum arcana cognoscere, atque Christianae fidei et salutis notitiam habere, tamen, quia defensionem nostram et auxilium postulant, ex Christianae pietatis mansuetudine et praedecessorum nostrorum felicis memoriae Calixti, Eugenii [et Alexandri] Romanorum Pontificum vestigiis inhaerentes ipsorum petitiones admittimus, eisque protectionis nostrae clypeum indulgemus. Statuimus enim, ut nullus Christianus invitos vel nolentes Iudaeos ad baptismum [per violentiam] venire compellat. Si quis autem ad Christianos causa fidei confugerit, postquam voluntas eius fuerit patefacta, Christianus absque calumnia efficiatur; quippe Christi fidem habere non creditur, qui ad Christianorum baptismum non spontaneus, sed invitus cogitur pervenire. Nullus etiam Christianus eorum quemlibet sine iudicio terrenae potestatis vel occidere, vel vulnerare, vel suas illis pecunias auferre praesumat, aut bonas, quas hac tenus [in ea, in qua habitant, regione] habuerunt, consuetudines immutare, praesertim in festivitatum suarum celebratione quisquam fustibus vel lapidibus eos nullatenus perturbet. Neque aliquis ab eis coacta servitia exigat, nisi ea, quae ipsi tempore praeterito facere consueverunt. Ad hoc malorum hominum pravitati et avaritiae obviantes, decernimus, ut nemo coemeterium Iudaeorum mutilare aut invadere audeat, sive obtentu pecuniae corpora humata effodere. Si quis autem huiusmodi decreti tenore cognito [temere,] quod absit, contraire prae sumpserit, honoris et officii sui periculum patiatur, aut excommunicationis sententia plectatur, nisi praesumptionem suam digna satisfactione correxerit.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: It sets forth two concessions for those who preach to pagans.

The same.

How praiseworthy it is. (And below:) Assenting to your petitions, brother bishop, we grant by apostolic authority to you and your companions, when you go out to preach the faith of Christ to pagans, that it is lawful for you, with moderation and thanksgiving, the character of the seasons being observed according to the canonical sanctions, to use those foods which are set before you by the unbelievers themselves. Moreover, we grant that whatever religious or clerics, suitable for announcing evangelical truth to the nations, having sought and obtained the license of their prelates, shall have wished to adhere to you, may by apostolic authority have the free faculty of carrying this out without any contradiction.

- Ponit duas indulgentias illorum, qui paganis praedicant. -

Idem.

Quam sit laudabile (Et infra:) Tuis, frater episcope, petitionibus annuentes, tibi tuisque sociis, quum ad praedicandam Christi fidem paganis exibitis, apostolica auctoritate concedimus, ut vobis his cibis cum modestia et gratiarum actione, servata temporum qualitate iuxta canonicas sanctiones, uti liceat, qui vobis ab ipsis infidelibus apponuntur. Insuper indulgemus, ut quicunque religiosi seu clerici, idonei ad annunciandum gentibus evangelicam veritatem, requisita et habita praelatorum suorum licentia, tibi voluerint adhaerere, id absque contradictione qualibet liberam exsequendi habeant auctoritate apostolica facultatem.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: It is lawful to go to Alexandria to redeem captives when the travelers swear that they will carry no aid or assistance beyond the matter of redemption. One carrying or sending prohibited merchandise even after a truce is excommunicated, and truces do not come under the designation of peace.

The same.

Your fraternity signified to us in what manner some of your citizens may be able to proceed to Alexandria to recover their fellow citizens who are held captive there. We judge that this can lawfully be done, provided that they carry nothing there with them in their merchandise or in another manner from which, excepting the matter of redemption, any advantage or assistance can come to the Saracens; and this they will first confirm before you by oath. Those also who, after a truce was made in the lands beyond the sea, went with commerce to Alexandria do not escape the bond of excommunication if they carried prohibited merchandise for the sake of gain, just as neither do those who, not going in their own persons, dispatched merchandise to them through messengers. Finally, as for those who swore that they would not go again into the land of the Saracens with merchandise unless there were peace between the Christians and them, and who came there after a truce was made, that condition concerning the existence of peace or a truce does not absolve them from the bond of excommunication.

> Pro redimendis captivis licet ire Alexandriam iurantibus, quod nihil deferent auxilii seu subsidii extra redemptionis articulum. Portans vel mittens etiam post treugas merces prohibitas, excommunicatus est, et pacis appellatione non veniunt treugae.
>
> Idem.
>
> Significavit nobis tua fraternitas, quomodo aliqui civium tuorum in Alexandriam valeant proficisci pro recuperandis concivibus suis, qui illic in captivitate tenentur. Hoc arbitramur licite posse fieri, dummodo nihil in mercibus suis vel alio modo secum illuc deferant, unde possit Sarracenis, excepto redemptionis articulo, aliquod commodum aut subsidium provenire, quod etiam coram te prius iuramento firmabunt. Illi quoque qui post treugam in transmarinis partibus factam cum commercio Alexandriam adiverint, si tulerint merces prohibitas causa lucrandi, excommunicationis vinculum non evadunt, sicut nec illi, qui, in personis propriis non euntes, merces eis per nuncios destinarunt. Ad ultimum illos, qui iuraverunt, se amplius in terram Sarracenorum cum mercibus non ituros, nisi pax esset inter Christianos et ipsos, et post treugam factam venerunt illuc, conditio illa de pace aut treuga habenda ab excommunicationis vinculo non absolvit.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Those who have any commerce with Saracens during time of war, or furnish them assistance, are excommunicated.

The same.

What was formerly commanded. (And below:) Indeed, although this was strictly prohibited in the Lateran Council, nevertheless, by the counsel of our brothers, we subject to excommunication all those who henceforth shall have commerce with the Saracens or, by themselves or through others, by ships or by any other device whatsoever, shall have considered that any assistance in things or counsel is to be furnished to them for as long as war between us and them shall have endured. We therefore command and strictly enjoin your discretion that neither through yourselves, nor through your ships, nor in any other manner or by any device whatsoever are you to transmit to them merchandise, counsels, or other assistance, lest, if perhaps any, hardened in their malice, shall have presumed to act otherwise, they not only fall by the law itself into that excommunication, but they also incur the wrath of the living God.

> Excommunicati sunt, qui cum Sarracenis tempore guerrae aliquod habent commercium, vel eis praestant subsidium.
>
> Idem.

> Quod olim praeceptum fuit (Et infra:) Sane, licet hoc fuerit in concilio Lateranensi districte inhibitum, nos tamen de consilio fratrum nostrorum omnes illos excommunicationi supponimus, qui iam amplius cum Sarracenis mercimonium habuerint, vel per se vel per alios navibus, seu quocunque alio ingenio, eis aliqua rerum subsidia seu consilia, quamdiu inter nos et illos guerra duraverit, duxerint impendenda. Vestrae igitur discretioni mandamus atque districte praecipimus, quatenus nec per vos, nec per vestras naves, nec alio quocunque modo aut ingenio, eis mercimonia, consilia vel alia subsidia transmittatis, ne, si forte aliqui in sua malitia indurati secus agere praesumpserint, non solum ipso iure incidant in excommunicationem illam, verum etiam illi iram Dei viventis incurrant.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Jews ought not to have Christian nurses or servants; commerce with Christians is forbidden to those acting contrary to this.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Sens and the Bishop of Paris.

Although Christian piety receives Jews, whom their own fault subjected to perpetual servitude when they crucified the Lord whom their prophets foretold would come in the flesh for the redemption of Israel, and sustains their cohabitation—whom even the Saracens, because of their unbelief, although they persecute the Catholic faith and do not believe in the one crucified by them, are unable to sustain, but rather expelled from their territories, vehemently crying out against us because they are sustained by us who truly confess our Redeemer condemned by them to the gibbet of the cross—nevertheless they ought not to be ungrateful to us so as to render insult to Christians for grace and contempt in return for familiarity; for, though mercifully admitted, as it were, into our familiarity, they render us that recompense which, according to a common proverb, a mouse in a purse, a snake in the bosom, and fire in the lap are accustomed to furnish to their hosts. We have learned, moreover, that Jews make Christian women nurses of their sons and—what it is not only shameful to say but even impious to think—when it happens on the day of the Lord's Resurrection that those women receive the body and blood of Jesus Christ, for three days before they nurse them the Jews cause their milk to be poured into the privy. They commit, in addition, other detestable and unheard-of things against the Catholic faith, on account of which it is to be feared by the faithful that they incur divine indignation when they permit them unworthily to perpetrate things which bring confusion upon our faith. We therefore asked our dearest son in Christ, Philip, illustrious King of the French, and also commanded the noble man M., Duke of Burgundy, and the Countess of Troyes, that they so restrain the excesses of the Jews that they do not presume to raise the neck, subjected to the yoke of perpetual servitude, against reverence for the Christian faith. We therefore strictly prohibit that henceforth they have Christian nurses or servants, lest the sons of the free woman serve the sons of the bondwoman; but, as servants rejected by the Lord, in whose death they wickedly conspired, let them at least through the effect of their deed recognize themselves as servants of those whom the death of Christ made free, while it made them servants. Since they have now begun to gnaw in the manner of a mouse and to sting like a snake, it is to be feared that the fire harbored in the lap may consume what it has corroded. Wherefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that you take care so diligently to admonish and effectively induce the aforesaid king and others to this on our behalf that the unbelieving Jews henceforth in no way grow insolent, but under servile fear always display the shame of their fault and revere the honor of the Christian faith. But if the Jews shall not dismiss their Christian nurses and servants, supported by our authority, strictly forbid all Christians under penalty of excommunication to dare to exercise any commerce with them. [Given on the Ides of July, 1205.]

Iudaei nutrices vel servientes Christianos habere non debent; contra facientibus interdicitur Christianorum commercium.

Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo Senonensi et Episcopo Parisiensi. Etsi Iudaeos, quos propria culpa submisit perpetuae servituti, quum Dominum crucifixerint, quem sui prophetae praedixerunt ad redemptionem Israel in carne venturum, pietas Christiana receptet, et sustineat cohabitationem illorum, quos etiam propter eorum perfidiam Sarraceni, qui fidem catholicam persequuntur, nec credunt in crucifixum ab illis, sustinere non possunt, sed potius a suis finibus expulerunt, in nos vehementius exclamantes, eo, quod sustineantur a nobis, qui ab ipso crucis patibulo condemnatum Redemptorem nostrum veraciter confitemur, ingrati tamen nobis esse non debent, ut reddant Christianis pro gratia contumeliam et de familiaritate contemptum, qui, tanquam misericorditer in nostram familiaritatem admissi, nobis illam retributionem impendunt, quam, iuxta vulgare proverbium, mus in pera, serpens in gremio, et ignis in sinu suis consueverunt hospitibus exhibere. Accepimus autem, quod Iudaei faciunt Christianas filiorum suorum nutrices, et, quod non tantum dicere, sed etiam nefandum est cogitare, quum in die Resurrectionis dominicae illas recipere corpus et sanguinem Iesu Christi contingit, per triduum, antequam eos lactent, lac effundere faciunt in latrinam. Alia insuper contra fidem catholicam detestabilia et inaudita committunt, propter quae fidelibus est verendum, ne divinam indignationem incurrant, quum eos perpetrare patiuntur indigne quae fidei nostrae confusionem inducunt. Rogavimus igitur carissimum in Christo filium nostrum Philippum regem Francorum illustrem, mandavimus etiam nobili viro M. duci Burgundiae, et comitissae Trecensi, ut taliter reprimant Iudaeorum excessus, ne cervicem, perpetuae servitutis iugo submissam, praesumant erigere contra reverentiam fidei Christianae. Inhibemus ergo districte, ne de cetero nutrices vel servientes habeant Christianos, ne filii liberae filiis famulentur ancillae, sed tanquam servi a Domino reprobati, in cuius mortem nequiter coniurarunt, se saltem per effectum operis recognoscant servos illorum, quos Christi mors liberos, et illos servos effecit. Qui quum iam coeperint rodere more muris, et pungere sicut serpens, verendum est, ne ignis, receptatus in sinu, corrosa consumat. Quocirca fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praedictum regem et alios ad hoc ex parte nostra ita diligenter monere ac efficaciter inducere procuretis, quod Iudaei perfidi de cetero nullatenus insolescant, sed sub timore servili praetendant semper verecundiam culpae suae, ac revereantur honorem fidei Christianae. Si vero Iudaei nutrices et servientes non dimiserint Christianos, vos, auctoritate nostra suffulti, sub excommunicationis poena inhibeatis districte omnibus Christianis, ne cum eis commercium aliquod audeant exercere. [Dat. Id. Iul. 1205.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A Jew who strikes a cleric is punished temporally; and, if he cannot in fact be punished, commerce with Christians is forbidden to him until he has made satisfaction to the person who suffered the injury.

The same.

You asked to be instructed by the Apostolic See how you ought to proceed against a Jew who laid violent hands upon a certain cleric. To this we briefly respond to your fraternity that, if the said Jew is subject to your jurisdiction, you are to punish him by a monetary or other temporal penalty, according to what is fitting, causing suitable satisfaction to be rendered to the injured person; otherwise, admonish and induce his lord to cause competent satisfaction to be made by him to the person suffering injury and to the church. But if his lord neglects to fulfill this, by ecclesiastical censure forbid all Christians to presume to exercise commerce with the Jew himself before he makes satisfaction. What follows, etc. Thirdly, you asked, etc. [cf. c. 21, On Regulars, III. 31. Given at the Lateran on the seventh day before the Ides of June, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

Iudaeus, qui percusserit clericum, temporaliter punitur, et, si de facto puniri non potest, interdicitur sibi Christianorum commercium, donec satisfecerit iniuriam passo.

Idem.

Postulasti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, qualiter contra Iudaeum procedere debeas, qui manus iniecit in quendam clericum violentas. Ad quod fraternitati tuae breviter respondemus, quod, si dictus Iudaeus tuae iurisdictionis exsistit, ipsum poena pecuniaria punias, vel alia, secundum quod convenit, temporali, faciens laeso satisfactionem congruam exhiberi; alioquin eius dominum moneas et inducas, ut passo iniuriam et ecclesiae ab eo satisfieri faciat competenter. Quod si dominus eius id neglexerit adimplere, tu Christianis omnibus per censuram ecclesiasticam interdicas, ne cum ipso Iudaeo, antequam satisfaciat, praesumant commercia exercere. Consequenter etc. Tertio quaesivisti etc. [cf. c. 21. de regul. III. 31. Dat. Lat. VII. Id. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Jews and Saracens of both sexes ought in the lands of Christians to use dress by which they are distinguished from Christians, and on the day of the Lord's Passion they ought not to go forth in public or break out in insult to the Creator.

The same, in the general council.

In certain provinces diversity of dress distinguishes Jews or Saracens from Christians; but in some such confusion has grown up that they are distinguished by no difference. Whence it happens at times that, through error, Christians mingle with the women of Jews or Saracens, and Jews or Saracens with the women of Christians. Therefore, lest the excess of so damned a mingling be able to have a refuge of further excuse through the veil of an error of this kind, we establish that such persons of both sexes are to be publicly distinguished from other peoples by the character of their dress in every province of Christians and at every time, [since this very thing is also read to have been enjoined upon them through Moses.] But on the days of lamentation and of the Lord's Passion they are by no means to go forth in public, because, as we have learned, certain of them are not ashamed to go about more ornately on such days and do not fear to mock Christians who, exhibiting the memory of the most sacred Passion, display signs of lamentation. We most strictly forbid this: that they presume in any way to break out in insult to the Creator. And since we ought not to dissemble the reproach of him who blotted out our reproaches, we command that presumers of this kind be restrained by secular princes with the application of condign censure, lest they presume in any way to blaspheme the one crucified for us.

Iudaei et Sarraceni utriusque sexus debent in terris Christianorum uti habitu, per quem a Christianis discernantur, et in die Passionis Domini non debent in publicum progredi, nec in contumeliam Creatoris prosilire.

Idem in concilio generali. In nonnullis provinciis a Christianis Iudaeos seu Sarracenos habitus distinguit diversitas; sed in quibusdam sic quaedam inolevit confusio, ut nulla differentia discernantur. Unde contingit interdum, quod per errorem Christiani Iudaeorum seu Sarracenorum, et Iudaei seu Sarraceni Christianorum mulieribus commiscentur. Ne igitur tam damnatae commixtionis excessus per velamen erroris huiusmodi ulterioris excusationis possint habere diffugium: statuimus, ut tales utriusque sexus in omni Christianorum provincia et omni tempore qualitate habitus publice ab aliis populis distinguantur, [quum etiam per Moysen hoc ipsum legatur eis iniunctum.] In diebus autem lamentationis et dominicae Passionis in publicum minime prodeant, eo, quod nonnulli ex ipsis talibus diebus, sicut accepimus, et ornatius non erubescunt incedere, ac Christianis, qui sacratissimae passionis memoriam exhibentes lamentationis signa praetendunt, illudere non formidant. Illud autem districtissime inhibemus, ne in contumeliam Creatoris prosilire aliquatenus praesumant. Et quoniam illius dissimulare non debemus opprobrium, qui probra nostra delevit: praecipimus praesumptores huiusmodi per principes saeculares condignae animadversionis adiectione compesci, ne crucifixum pro nobis aliquatenus blasphemare praesumant.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: One placing a Jew or pagan over public offices is corrected through a provincial council; and commerce with Christians is denied to the person placed over the office until he has relinquished the office and, according to the bishop's provision, restores to the use of poor Christians the things acquired from it.

The same, in the same council.

Since it is exceedingly absurd that a blasphemer of Christ exercise the force of power over Christians, we renew in this general council what the Council of Toledo providently established concerning this, on account of the audacity of transgressors, prohibiting Jews from being preferred to public offices, because under such a pretext they are exceedingly hostile to Christians. But if anyone shall have committed such an office to them, after prior admonition let him be restrained with fitting severity through the provincial council, which we command to be celebrated each year. To an official of this kind, however, association with Christians in commerce and other matters is to be denied until, according to the provision of the diocesan bishop, whatever he acquired from Christians by occasion of the office thus received is converted to the use of poor Christians, and he relinquishes with shame the office which he irreverently assumed. We extend this same provision to pagans.

Praeponens Iudaeum vel paganum publicis officiis, per concilium provinciale corripitur, et praeposito denegatur Christianorum commercium, donec deposuerit officium, et in usus Christianorum pauperum restituet inde quaesita secundum episcopi providentiam.

Idem in eodem.

Quum sit nimis absurdum, ut blasphemus Christi in Christianos vim potestatis exerceat, quod super hoc Toletanum concilium provide statuit, nos propter transgressorum audaciam in hoc generali concilio innovamus, prohibentes, ne Iudaei publicis officiis praeferantur, quoniam sub tali praetextu Christianis plurimum sunt infesti. Si quis autem eis officium tale commiserit, per provinciale concilium, quod singulis annis praecipimus celebrari, monitione praemissa districtione, qua convenit, compescatur. Officiali vero huiusmodi tamdiu Christianorum communio in commerciis et aliis denegetur, donec in usus pauperum Christianorum secundum providentiam dioecesani episcopi convertatur quicquid fuerit a Christianis adeptus occasione officii sic suscepti, et officium cum pudore dimittat, quod irreverenter assumpsit. Hoc idem extendimus ad paganos.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: The general council repeats the Lateran Council above, in the same title, at Ita, and adds the penalty of satisfaction to be rendered at the time of absolution.

The same, in the same council.

For the liberation of the Holy Land. (And below:) Moreover, we excommunicate and anathematize those false and impious Christians who carry arms, iron, and lashings for galleys to the Saracens against Christ himself and the Christian people; also those who sell them galleys or ships, and those who exercise the care of navigation in the piratical ships of the Saracens or furnish them any counsel or aid in engines or any other things to the detriment of the Holy Land. We decree that they are to be punished by deprivation of their goods and to be slaves of those who capture them, commanding that a sentence of this kind be publicly renewed throughout all maritime cities on Sundays and feast days. And the bosom of the church is not to be opened to such persons unless they shall have transmitted in aid of the Holy Land all that they received from so damned a commerce and as much again from their own goods, so that by an equal judgment they may be punished in that wherein they offended. But if perhaps they shall not be able to pay, let the guilt of such persons be otherwise so chastised that through their punishment others are forbidden the audacity of presuming similar things.

> Concilium generale repetit concilium Lateranense supra eod. Ita, et addit poenam satisfactionis, tempore absolutionis impendendam.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Ad liberandam terram sanctam (Et infra:) Excommunicamus praeterea et anathematizamus illos falsos et impios Christianos, qui contra ipsum Christum et populum Christianum Sarracenis arma, ferrum et ligamina deferunt galearum; eos etiam, qui galeas eis vendunt vel naves, quique in piraticis Sarracenorum navibus curam gubernationis exercent, vel in machinis aut quibuslibet aliis aliquod eis impendunt consilium vel auxilium in dispendium terrae sanctae; ipsosque rerum suarum privatione mulctari, et capientium servos fore censemus, praecipientes, ut per omnes urbes maritimas diebus dominicis et festivis huiusmodi sententia publice innovetur. Et talibus gremium non aperiatur ecclesiae, nisi totum, quod ex commercio tam damnato perceperint, et tantundem de suo in subsidium terrae sanctae transmiserint, ut aequo iudicio in quo deliquerint puniantur. Quodsi forte solvendo non fuerint, sic alias reatus talium castigetur, quod in poena ipsorum aliis interdicatur audacia similia praesumendi.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: Jews or pagans are not to be placed over public offices; and, if royal rights are sold to them, a Christian not suspected of wrongdoing is to be placed over their collection.

Gregory IX, to the Bishops of Astorga and Lugo.

From the special affection of charity which we bear toward the illustrious King of Portugal. (And below:) We command that you carefully induce the king himself not to place Jews over Christians in public offices, as is contained in the general council; and, if perhaps he shall have sold his revenues to Jews or pagans, let him then appoint a Christian not suspected of inflicting burdens upon clerics and churches, through whom the Jews or Saracens may collect the royal rights without injury to Christians.

> Iudaei vel pagani publicis officiis praeficiendi non sunt, et, si eis regalia iura vendantur, ad ea colligenda praeficiendus est Christianus non suspectus.
>
> Gregorius IX. Astoricensi et Lucensi Episcopis.
>
> Ex speciali, quem erga illustrem regem Portugalliae gerimus, caritatis affectu (Et infra:) Mandamus, quatenus regem ipsum sollicite inducatis, ne in officiis publicis Iudaeos Christianis praeficiat, sicut in generali concilio continetur, et, si forte reditus suos Iudaeis vendiderit vel paganis, Christianum tunc deputet de gravaminibus inferendis clericis et ecclesiis non suspectum, per quem Iudaei sive Sarraceni sine Christianorum iniuria iura regalia consequantur.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: It summarizes itself.

The same.

No Jew is permitted to buy a baptized person or one wishing to be baptized, or to retain him in his service. But if he shall have bought for the purpose of commerce one not yet converted to the faith, and the latter afterward becomes or desires to become a Christian, twelve solidi having been given for him, let him immediately be withdrawn from that Jew's service. But if within three months he shall not have exposed him for sale, or shall have bought him to serve himself, neither may he himself sell him nor may another dare to buy him; rather, no price having been given, let him be led to the rewards of liberty.

Se ipsum summat.

Idem.

Nulli Iudaeo baptizatum vel baptizari volentem emere liceat vel in suo servitio retinere. Quodsi quem, nondum ad fidem conversum, causa mercimonii emerit, et postmodum factus sit vel fieri desideret Christianus, datis pro eo XII. solidis ab illius servitio protinus subtrahatur. Si autem infra tres menses ipsum venalem non exposuerit, vel ad sibi serviendum emerit eundem, nec ipse vendere, nec alius audeat comparare, sed nullo dato pretio perducatur ad praemia libertatis.

Title VII: On Heretics

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: He is an unbeliever who does not have certainty of faith, and an unbeliever is not to be believed to the prejudice of another.

Pope Stephen, to all Bishops.

One doubtful in faith is an unbeliever, nor are those who are ignorant of the faith of truth to be believed at all, [and who do not lead a life of upright conduct, etc.]

DE HAERETICIS.

Infidelis est, qui non habet certitudinem fidei, et infideli non est credendum in praeiudicium alterius.

Stephanus Papa omnibus Episcopis.

Dubius in fide infidelis est, nec eis omnino credendum est, qui fidem veritatis ignorant, [nec rectae conversationis vitam ducunt etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: He is convicted of erring in faith who, when he can, does not recall others who err from their error.

Pope Leo.

He who, when he can, does not recall others from error demonstrates that he himself errs. [Given on the twelfth day before the Kalends of August, Calepius and Ardabur being consuls, men of clarissimus rank, 447.]

> Errare in fide convincitur, qui alios errantes, quum potest, ab errore non revocat.
>
> Leo Papa.
>
> Qui alios, quum potest, ab errore non revocat, se ipsum errare demonstrat. [Dat. XII. Kal. Aug. Calepio et Ardabure VV. CC. Coss. 447.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A persevering heretic is eternally damned; neither baptism, almsgiving, martyrdom, nor any other good whatsoever profits him so far as attaining eternal life is concerned.

Augustine, On the Catholic Faith.

Hold most firmly and doubt in no way that every heretic or schismatic, although he gives many alms or even sheds blood for Christ, will share with the devil and his angels in the burning of eternal fire unless, before the end of this life, he shall have been incorporated into and reintegrated with the Catholic Church. (And a little afterward:) For indeed, to every man who does not hold the unity of the Catholic Church, neither baptism, nor almsgiving, however abundant, nor death undertaken for the name of Christ will be able to profit unto salvation.

> Haereticus perseverans aeternaliter damnatur; cui nec prodest baptismus, nec eleemosyna, vel martyrium, vel aliud quodcunque bonum, quoad hoc, ut consequatur vitam aeternam.
>
> Augustinus de fide catholica.
>
> Firmissime tene et nullatenus dubites, omnem haereticum vel schismaticum, quamvis multas eleemosynas faciat, vel etiam pro Christo sanguinem fundat, cum diabolo et angelis eius aeterni ignis incendio participandum, nisi ante finem huius vitae catholicae fuerit incorporatus et redintegratus ecclesiae. (Et post pauca:) Omni enim homini, qui ecclesiae catholicae non tenet unitatem, neque baptismus, neque eleemosyna quantumlibet copiosa, neque mors pro nomine Christi suscepta proficere poterit ad salutem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: When an author is condemned, his writings, books, and works are condemned.

Gregory, to Anastasius of Antioch.

Of your fraternity. (And below:) [Moreover, when your fraternity spoke concerning the preservation of the holy councils, it professed that it preserves the holy First Synod of Ephesus. But because, from the annotation of a heretical codex which was transmitted to me from the imperial city, I learned—through the fact that certain Catholic chapters had been censured together with heretical ones—that certain persons consider as the First Synod of Ephesus that which is related to have been composed formerly by heretics in the same city, it is altogether necessary that your charity seek the same synod at the holy churches of Alexandria and Antioch and discover how it is truly held; or, if it pleases you, we shall send from here what we have preserved from antiquity in the archives.] For that synod which was produced under the appearance of the First Synod of Ephesus asserts that certain chapters presented in it were approved, which are the teachings of Coelestius and Pelagius. And since Coelestius and Pelagius were condemned in the Synod of Ephesus, how will those chapters whose authors are condemned be able to be received?

> Damnato auctore damnantur eius scripturae et libri et opera.
>
> Gregorius Anastasio Antiocheno.
>
> Fraternitatis tuae (Et infra:) [Praeterea, dum de sanctorum conciliorum custodia tua fraternitas loqueretur, sanctam Ephesinam synodum primam se custodire professa est. Sed quia ex annotatione haeretici codicis, qui ad me ex regia urbe transmissus est, agnovi per hoc, quod quaedam capitula catholica cum haereticis fuerant reprehensa, quia quidam illam Ephesinam primam synodum in eadem urbe existimant, quae quondam ab haereticis traditur esse composita, omnino necesse est, ut caritas vestra eandem synodum apud S. Alexandrinam atque Antiochenam ecclesiam requirat, et qualiter in veritate habeatur inveniat; vel, si placet, hinc dirigimus, quae ab antiquitate servata in scriniis habemus.] Illa enim synodus, quae sub imagine primae Ephesinae facta est, quaedam in se oblata capitula asserit approbata, quae sunt Coelestii atque Pelagii praedicamenta. Et Quum Coelestinus atque Pelagius in Ephesina synodo sint damnati, quomodo poterunt illa capitula recipi, quorum damnantur auctores.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A bishop who institutes as heir a heretical relative, a stranger, or a pagan is proclaimed excommunicated even after death. This it says according to the common and truer understanding; and, so that it pertains to the title, it can be understood that from this he is presumed to be a heretic.

From the African Council.

If any bishop shall institute as heirs persons outside his kinship, or shall prefer heretics, even relatives, or pagans, let anathema be pronounced against him at least after death, and let his name in no way be recited among the priests of God. [Nor can he be excused if he died intestate, etc.]

> Episcopus, instituens heredem haereticum consanguinem, vel extraneum, vel paganum, etiam post mortem excommunicatus nunciatur. H. d. secundum communem et veriorem intellectum, et, ut faciat ad tit., potest intelligi, quod ex hoc praesumatur haereticus.
>
> Ex concilio Africano.
>
> Si quis episcopus heredes instituerit extraneos a consanguinitate sua, vel haereticos, etiam consanguineos, aut paganos pertulerit, saltem post mortem ei anathema dicatur, atque eius nomen inter Dei sacerdotes nullo modo recitetur. [Nec excusari possit, si intestatus decesserit etc.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It speaks concerning the same matter as the preceding chapter, and what was said there concerning a bishop is extended to priests and other clerics.

From the same council.

To those who are not Catholic Christians, even if they are relatives, bishops or priests are to confer nothing through donations of their property. Finally, what has been said concerning bishops and priests ought to be understood concerning the remaining clerics also.

> Loquitur de eadem materia cum praecedenti, et extenditur, quod ibi dictum fuit de episcopo, ad presbyteros et alios clericos.
>
> Ex eodem.

In eos, qui catholici Christiani non sunt, etiamsi consanguinei fuerint, per donationes rerum suarum episcopi vel presbyteri nihil conferant. Denique hoc, quod de episcopis et presbyteris dictum est, debet de reliquis quoque clericis exaudiri.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Christ was true God and true man; one holding the opposite is a heretic and excommunicated.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Reims.

Since Christ is perfect God and perfect man, it is astonishing with what rashness anyone dares to say that Christ is not something insofar as he is man. But lest so great an abuse be able to arise in the church of God or an error be introduced, we command [your fraternity] by apostolic writings that, the masters of Paris and Reims and of the other surrounding cities having been convoked, by our authority you forbid under anathema that anyone henceforth dare to say that Christ is not something insofar as he is man, because, just as Christ is true God, so he is true man, subsisting of a rational soul and human flesh. [Given at Vesta on the twelfth day before the Kalends of May, 1177.]

Christus fuit verus Deus et verus homo, sentiens oppositum haereticus est et excommunicatus.

Alexander III. Remensi Archiepiscopo.

Quum Christus perfectus Deus et perfectus sit homo, mirum est, qua temeritate quisquam audet dicere, quod Christus non sit aliquid secundum quod homo. Ne autem tanta possit in ecclesia Dei suboriri abusio vel error induci, [fraternitati vestrae] per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus convocatis magistris Parisiensium et Remensium et aliarum circumpositarum civitatum, auctoritate nostra sub anathemate interdicas, ne quis de cetero audeat dicere, Christum non esse aliquid secundum quod homo, quia, sicut Christus verus est Deus, ita verus est homo, ex anima rationali et humana carne subsistens. [Dat. Vestae XII. Kal. Maii. 1177.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Heretics, their receivers, and their supporters are excommunicated; and those dying in this sin ought not to be buried in the church cemetery, nor ought prayer to be made for them.

From the Lateran Council.

As blessed Leo says, although ecclesiastical discipline, content with priestly judgment, avoids bloody punishments, nevertheless it is aided by the constitutions of Catholic princes, so that men often seek a saving remedy when they have feared that corporal punishment will come upon them. For this reason, because in Gascony, Albi, and the regions of Toulouse and other places, the damnable perversity of the heretics whom some call Cathars, others Publicans, others Patarenes, and others by other names, has so gained strength that they now exercise their wickedness not in secret, as elsewhere, but publicly manifest their error and draw the simple and infirm to their assent, we decree that [and] they and their defenders and receivers are subject to anathema; and under anathema we prohibit anyone from presuming to keep or support them in his house or land, or to exercise commerce with them. But if anyone dies in this sin, neither under the cover of our privileges granted to whomsoever, nor under any other occasion, is [any] offering to be made for him, nor is he to receive burial among Christians. [Concerning the Brabanters, etc.]

Haeretici, receptatores et fautores eorum excommunicati sunt, et decedentes in hoc peccato, in coemeterio ecclesiae sepeliri non debent, nec pro eis orari. Ex concilio Lateranensi. Sicut ait beatus Leo, licet ecclesiastica disciplina, sacerdotali contenta iudicio, cruentas effugiat ultiones: catholicorum tamen principum constitutionibus adiuvatur, ut saepe quaerant homines salutare remedium, dum corporale metuerint super se supplicium evenire. Ea propter, Quia in Vasconia, Albigesio et partibus Tolosanis, et aliis locis ita haereticorum, quos alii Catharos, alii Publicanos, alii Patarenos, et alii aliis nominibus vocant, invaluit damnanda perversitas, ut iam non in occulto, sicut alibi, nequitiam suam exerceant, sed errorem suum publice manifestent, et ad consensum suum simplices attrahant et infirmos, [et] eos, et defensores et receptatores eorum anathemati decernimus subiacere, et sub anathemate prohibemus, ne quis eos in domo vel in terra sua tenere vel fovere, aut negotiationem cum eis exercere praesumat. Si autem in hoc peccato decesserit, neque sub privilegiorum nostrorum quibuscunque indultorum obtentu, neque sub alia quacunque occasione [aut] oblatio pro eo fiat, aut inter Christianos accipiat sepulturam. [De Brabantionibus etc.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A heretic who believes or teaches wrongly concerning the sacraments of the Church is excommunicated; and, upon conviction, unless he corrects himself and abjures the error, if he is a cleric he is to be degraded and handed over to the secular court, by which a layperson also will be punished. The same penalty also applies to those suspected of heresy if they have not cleared themselves, and a hearing is entirely denied to those who relapse. Secular princes who are unwilling to swear to defend the Church against heretics are excommunicated, and their lands are placed under interdict; but their cities which resist are deprived of commerce with other cities and of episcopal dignity; and exempt persons are subject to the ordinaries in those things which are established against heretics.

Lucius III.

For abolishing the depravity of diverse heresies which in modern times has begun to spring forth in very many parts of the world, ecclesiastical vigor ought to be aroused, so that, with the power of imperial fortitude supporting it, both the insolence of heretics may be crushed in the very attempts of its falsehood and the simplicity of Catholic truth, shining in holy Church, may demonstrate it everywhere as cleansed from every abomination of false dogmas. Therefore we, supported alike by the presence and vigor of our dearest son Frederick, illustrious Emperor of the Romans and ever Augustus, by the common counsel of our brothers, and also of other patriarchs, archbishops, and many princes who assembled from diverse parts of the empire, rise against those heretics, upon whom the profession of diverse falsehoods has imposed diverse names, by the general sanction of the present decree, and by apostolic authority condemn every heresy, by whatever name it may be designated, through the series of this constitution. First, therefore, we decree that the Cathars and Patarenes, and those who falsely claim for themselves the name Humiliati or Poor Men of Lyons, the Passagines, Josephines, and Arnoldists, are perpetually subject to anathema. And since certain persons, denying the power of piety under its appearance, as the Apostle says, claim for themselves the authority of preaching—although the same Apostle says, "How shall they preach unless they are sent?"—all who, either prohibited or not sent, without authority received from the Apostolic See or from the bishop of the place, shall have presumed to preach publicly or privately, and all who do not fear to believe or teach otherwise concerning the sacrament of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, or concerning baptism, confession of sins, marriage, or the remaining ecclesiastical sacraments, than the sacrosanct Roman Church preaches and observes, and generally whomsoever the same Roman Church or the individual bishops throughout their dioceses, with the counsel of the clerics—or the clerics themselves while the see is vacant, with the counsel, if necessary, of neighboring bishops—shall have judged to be heretics, we bind with the same bond of perpetual anathema. We decree that their receivers and defenders, and all alike who shall have afforded any patronage or favor to the aforesaid heretics in order to foster in them the depravity of heresy, whether they are called Consoled, Believers, Perfects, or by any superstitious names whatsoever, are subject to the like sentence. But because, at the demand of sins, it sometimes happens that the severity of ecclesiastical discipline is contemned by those who do not understand its power, we nevertheless decree by the present ordinance that whoever shall manifestly have been detected in heresy, if he is a cleric or is disguised by the shadow of any religious state, is to be stripped of the prerogative of the entire ecclesiastical order and, thus despoiled alike of every ecclesiastical office and benefice, is to be left to the judgment of the secular authority to be punished by due censure, unless, immediately after detection of the error, he shall have spontaneously hastened back to the unity of the Catholic faith and consented publicly to abjure his error at the judgment of the bishop of the region and to render suitable satisfaction. But a layperson whom the notorious or private guilt of any of the aforesaid plagues shall have tainted, unless, as has been said, after abjuring the heresy and rendering satisfaction, he shall immediately have fled to the orthodox faith, is to be left to the judgment of the secular judge to receive due punishment according to the character of the crime. (And below:) But those who shall have been found notable by suspicion of the Church alone, unless at the judgment of the bishop, according to consideration of the suspicion and the character of the person, they shall have demonstrated their own innocence by suitable purgation, will be subject to the like sentence. We also decree that those who, after abjuration of the error, or after, as we have said, purging themselves by the examination of their own bishop, shall have been detected as having fallen back into the abjured heresy, are to be left to secular judgment without any hearing at all, the goods of condemned clerics being applied, according to the lawful sanctions, to the churches which they served. Indeed, we decree that the aforesaid sentence of excommunication, to which we command all heretics to be subject, is to be renewed by all patriarchs, archbishops, and bishops on the principal feast days and whenever they shall have solemnities or any occasion, for the glory of God and the censure of heretical depravity; establishing by apostolic authority that, if anyone of the order of bishops shall have been found negligent or indolent in these matters, he is to be held suspended from episcopal dignity and administration for the space of three years. In addition, by episcopal counsel and the suggestion of the imperial summit and its princes, we have added that every archbishop or bishop, by himself, by his archdeacon, or by other honorable and suitable persons, is to go around, twice or once in the year, his own parish in which it shall be reported that heretics dwell; and there he is to compel three or more men of good testimony—or even, if it shall appear expedient, the entire neighborhood—to swear that, if anyone there knows heretics or persons celebrating secret conventicles, or persons differing from the common association of the faithful in life and morals, he will take care to indicate them to the bishop or archdeacon. The bishop or archdeacon is then to summon the accused to his presence; unless they shall have purged themselves from the charge brought against them at their judgment according to the custom of the country, or if, after purgation has been rendered, they shall have fallen back into their former unbelief, they are to be punished by the judgment of the bishops. But if any of them, rejecting an oath because of a damnable superstition, should perhaps be unwilling to swear, by that very fact they are to be judged heretics and struck with the penalties which have been named above. We further establish that counts, barons, rectors, and consuls of cities and other places, according to the admonition of archbishops and bishops, are to promise by an oath physically rendered that, in all the aforesaid matters, when they have been requested concerning them, they will faithfully and effectively aid the Church against heretics and their accomplices and will strive in good faith, according to their office and power, to commit to execution both the ecclesiastical and imperial statutes concerning those things which we have stated. But if they are unwilling to observe this, let them be despoiled of the honor which they hold and in no way be assumed to others, while they are nevertheless to be bound by excommunication and their lands placed under interdict of the Church. But a city which shall have considered that these decretal enactments are to be resisted, or which, contrary to the admonition of the bishop, shall have neglected to punish those resisting, is to be deprived of commerce with other cities and is to know that it is to be deprived of episcopal dignity. We also decree that all supporters of heretics, as persons condemned to perpetual infamy, are to be repelled from advocacy, testimony, and other public offices. But if there are any who, exempt from the law of diocesan jurisdiction, are subject to the authority of the Apostolic See alone, nevertheless in those things which have been established above against heretics, let them undergo the judgment of archbishops or bishops and obey them in this matter as delegates of the Apostolic See, notwithstanding the privileges of their liberty. [Moreover, etc. (cf. c. 23, On the Right of Patronage, III. 38.)]

> Haereticus, male sentiens vel male docens de sacramentis ecclesiae, excommunicatus est, et convictus, nisi se correxerit et errorem abiuraverit, si clericus est, degradetur, et curiae saeculari tradatur, per quam etiam laicus punietur. Eadem etiam est poena suspectis de haeresi, si se non correxerunt, et relapsis omnino audientia denegatur. Saeculares principes, qui iurare nolunt de ecclesia contra haereticos defendenda, excommunicantur, et terrae eorum supponantur interdicto; civitates vero ipsorum resistentes aliarum commercio et episcopali dignitate privantur; exempti vero subsunt ordinariis super his, quae contra haereticos instituuntur.
>
> Lucius III. Ab abolendam diversarum haeresium pravitatem, quae in plerisque mundi partibus modernis coepit temporibus pullulare, vigor debet ecclesiasticus excitari cui nimirum imperialis fortitudinis suffragante potentia, et haereticorum protervitas in ipsis falsitatis suae conatibus elidatur, et catholicae simplicitas veritatis in ecclesia sancta resplendens, eam ubique demonstret ab omni exsecratione falsorum dogmatum expiatam. Ideoque nos carissimi filii nostri Friderici, illustris Romanorum imperatoris semper Augusti praesentia pariter et vigore suffulti, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio, nec non aliorum patriarcharum, archiepiscoporum multorumque principum, qui de diversis partibus imperii convenerunt, contra ipsos haereticos, quibus diversa capitula diversarum indidit professio falsitatum, praesentis decreti generali sanctione consurgimus, et omnem haeresim, quocunque nomine censeatur, per huius constitutionis seriem auctoritate apostolica condemnamus. Imprimis ergo Catharos et Patarinos et eos, qui se Humiliatos vel Pauperes de Lugduno falso nomine mentiuntur, Passaginos, Iosephinos, Arnaldistas perpetuo decernimus anathemati subiacere. Et quoniam nonnulli, sub specie pietatis virtutum eius, iuxta quod ait Apostolus, denegantes, auctoritatem sibi vendicant praedicandi: quum idem Apostolus dicat: "quomodo praedicabunt, nisi mittantur?" omnes, qui vel prohibiti, vel non missi, praeter auctoritatem, ab apostolica sede vel ab episcopo loci susceptam, publice vel privatim praedicare praesumpserint, et Universos, qui de sacramento corporis et sanguinis Domini nostri Iesu Christi, vel de baptismate, seu de peccatorum confessione, matrimonio vel reliquis ecclesiasticis sacramentis aliter sentire aut docere non metuunt, quam sacrosancta Romana ecclesia praedicat et observat, et generaliter, quoscunque eadem Romana ecclesia vel singuli episcopi per dioeceses suas cum consilio clericorum, vel clerici ipsi sede vacante cum consilio, si oportuerit, vicinorum episcoporum haereticos iudicaverint, pari vinculo perpetui anathematis innodamus. Receptores et defensores eorum, cunctosque pariter, qui praedictis haereticis ad fovendam in eis haeresis pravitatem patrocinium praestiterint aliquod vel favorem, sive consolati, sive credentes, sive perfecti, seu quibuscunque superstitiosis nominibus nuncupentur, simili decernimus sententiae subiacere. Quia vero peccatis exigentibus quandoque contingit, ut severitas ecclesiasticae disciplinae ab his, qui virtutem eius non intelligunt, contemnatur, Praesenti nihilominus ordinatione sancimus, ut, quicunque manifeste fuerint in haeresi deprehensi, si clericus est vel cuiuslibet religionis obumbratione fucatus, totius ecclesiastici ordinis praerogativa nudetur, et sic omni pariter officio et beneficio spoliatus ecclesiastico, saecularis relinquatur arbitrio potestatis, animadversione debita puniendus, nisi continuo post deprehensionem erroris ad fidei catholicae unitatem sponte recurrere, et errorem suum ad arbitrium episcopi regionis publice consenserit abiurare, et satisfactionem congruam exhibere. Laicus autem, quem aliqua praedictarum pestium notoria vel privata culpa resperserit, nisi, prout dictum est, abiurata haeresi et satisfactione exhibita confestim ad fidem confugerit orthodoxam, saecularis iudicis arbitrio relinquatur, debitam recepturus pro qualitate facinoris ultionem. (Et infra:) Qui vero inventi fuerint sola ecclesiae suspicione notabiles, nisi ad arbitrium episcopi iuxta considerationem suspicionis qualitatemque personae propriam innocentiam congrua purgatione monstraverint, simili sententiae subiacebunt. Illos quoque, qui post abiurationem erroris, vel, postquam se, ut diximus, proprii antistitis examinatione purgaverint, deprehensi fuerint in abiuratam haeresim recidisse, saeculari iudicio sine ulla penitus audientia decernimus relinquendos, bonis damnatorum clericorum ecclesiis, quibus deserviebant, secundum sanctiones legitimas applicandis. Sane praedictam excommunicationis sententiam, cui omnes haereticos praecipimus subiacere, ab omnibus patriarchis, archiepiscopis et episcopis in praecipuis festivitatibus, et quoties solennitates habuerint vel quamlibet occasionem, ad gloriam Dei et reprehensionem haereticae pravitatis decernimus innovari, auctoritate apostolica statuentes, ut, si quis de ordine episcoporum in his negligens fuerit vel desidiosus inventus, per triennale spatium ab episcopali habeatur dignitate et administratione suspensus. Ad haec de episcopali consilio et suggestione culminis imperialis et principum eius adiecimus, ut quilibet archiepiscopus vel episcopus per se, vel archidiaconum suum, aut per alias honestas idoneasque personas, bis vel semel in anno propriam parochiam, in qua fama fuerit haereticos habitare, circumeat, et ibi tres vel plures boni testimonii viros, vel etiam, si expedire videbitur, totam viciniam iurare compellat, quod, si quis ibidem haereticos scierit vel aliquos occulta conventicula celebrantes, seu a communi conversatione fidelium vita et moribus dissidentes, eos episcopo vel archidiacono studeat indicare. Episcopus autem vel archidiaconus ad praesentiam suam convocet accusatos, qui, nisi se ad eorum arbitrium iuxta patriae consuetudinem ab obiecto reatu purgaverint, vel, si post purgationem exhibitam in pristinam relapsi fuerint perfidiam, episcoporum iudicio puniantur. Si qui vero ex eis, iurationem superstitione damnabili respuentes, iurare forte noluerint, ex hoc ipso haeretici iudicentur, et poenis, quae praenominatae sunt, percellantur. Statuimus insuper, ut comites, barones, rectores et consules civitatum et aliorum locorum, iuxta commonitionem archiepiscoporum et episcoporum, praestito corporaliter iuramento promittant, quod in omnibus praedictis fideliter et efficaciter, quum ab eis exinde fuerint requisiti, ecclesiam contra haereticos et eorum complices adiuvabunt et studebunt bona fide iuxta officium et posse suum ecclesiastica simul et imperiali statuta circa ea, quae diximus, exsecutioni mandare. Si vero id observare noluerint, honore, quem obtinent, spolientur et ad alios nullatenus assumantur, eis nihilominus excommunicatione ligandis, et terris ipsorum interdicto ecclesiae supponendis. Civitas autem, quae his decretalibus institutis duxerit resistendum, vel contra commonitionem episcopi punire neglexerit resistentes, aliarum careat commercio civitatum, et episcopali se noverit dignitate privandam. Omnes etiam fautores haereticorum tanquam perpetua infamia condemnatos, ab advocatione et testimonio et aliis publicis officiis decernimus repellendos. Si qui vero fuerint, qui a lege dioecesanae iurisdictionis exempti, soli subiaceant sedis apostolicae potestati, nihilominus in his, quae superius sunt contra haereticos instituta, archiepiscoporum vel episcoporum subeant iudicium, et eis in hac parte, tanquam a sede apostolica delegatis, non obstantibus libertatis suae privilegiis, obsequantur. [Praeterea etc. (cf. c. 23. *de iure patr. III. *38.)]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: The goods of heretics are confiscated and, in the lands of the Church, are applied to the treasury of the Church, and in the lands of the empire to the treasury of the secular judge; and this applies even if they have Catholic sons.

Innocent III.

The corruption of the world declining into old age is savored not only by the corrupted elements, but is also attested by the most worthy of creatures, created in the image and likeness of the Creator and preferred by the privilege of dignity to the birds of heaven and beasts of the whole earth; and not only does it now decline as the world itself, as it were, fails, but it both infects and is infected with the rough rust of old age. For at the end most wretched man sins; he who could not persevere in paradise at the creation of himself and the world degenerates near the dissolution of himself and the globe; and, forgetful near the end of the ages of the price of his redemption, while he inserts himself into the diverse and vain knots of questions, he entangles himself in the snares of his own fraud and falls into the pit which he prepared. For behold, while the enemy man sows wicked seed over the Lord's harvest, the crops spring forth as tares, or rather are polluted; the wheat withers and vanishes into chaff; the moth in the flower and the foxes in the fruit strive to demolish the vineyard of the Lord. Indeed, under the New Testament a new offspring of Achan steals from the spoils of Jericho the golden tongue and the mantle, [and] the detestable offspring of Abiram, Dathan, and Korah wish with new censers to burn leavened incense upon new altars, while night declares knowledge to night, while the blind offers leadership to the blind, while heresies spring forth, and the heretic establishes as heir of his own heresy and damnation one whom he renders excluded from the divine inheritance. These are the tavern keepers who mix water with wine and offer the venom of the dragon in the golden cup of Babylon, having, according to the Apostle, an appearance of piety but utterly denying its power. Although diverse enactments have issued in the times of our predecessors against little foxes of this kind, indeed having diverse appearances but tails tied to one another because they agree in the same vanity, nevertheless the death-bearing plague could not yet be deadened to such a degree that, like a cancer, it did not creep further in secret and now pour forth openly the venom of its wickedness, while, cloaked by an appearance of religion, it both deceives many simple persons and seduces certain astute ones; he who was not a disciple of truth having become a master of error. Therefore, lest we, who, although around the eleventh hour, have been deputed by the evangelical householder among the laborers—indeed, more truly, over the laborers—of the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts, and to whom the sheep of Christ are committed by pastoral office, appear neither to capture the foxes demolishing the vineyard of the Lord nor to ward off the wolves from the sheep, and on this account may deservedly be called mute dogs unable to bark, and perish with the wicked husbandmen and be compared to the hireling, we considered that something more severe should be established against the defenders, receivers, supporters, and believers of heretics, so that those who cannot by themselves be recalled to the way of rectitude may nevertheless be confounded in their defenders, receivers, supporters, and even believers, and, when they see themselves avoided by all, may desire to be reconciled to the unity of all. Therefore, by the common counsel of our brothers and with the assent of the archbishops and bishops present at the Apostolic See, we most strictly prohibit anyone from presuming in any manner to receive or defend heretics, or in any way to favor or believe them, firmly establishing by the present decree that, if anyone shall have presumed to do any of these things, unless, admonished a first or second time, he takes care to cease from his presumption concerning this, he is made infamous by the law itself and is to be admitted neither to public offices or councils of cities, nor to electing others to such offices, nor to testimony. Let him also be incapable of making a will and not come to the succession of an inheritance. Moreover, no one is to be compelled to answer him concerning any business whatsoever. But if perhaps he is a judge, let his sentence obtain no force, nor are any causes to be brought to his hearing. If he is an advocate, let his patronage in no way be admitted. If a notary, let the instruments prepared by him be of no effect at all, but be condemned with their condemned author. We command the same to be observed in similar matters. But if he is a cleric, let him be deposed from every office and benefice, so that, where the guilt is greater, the vengeance exercised may be graver. But if anyone shall have contemned to avoid such persons after they have been denounced by the Church, let him know that he has incurred a sentence of anathema. But in lands subject to our temporal jurisdiction we establish that the goods of heretics are to be made public property, and in other lands we command the same to be done by secular authorities and princes, whom, if perhaps they shall have been negligent, we will and command to be compelled to execute this by ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed. Nor are their goods thereafter to revert to them unless, when they return to their heart and renounce association with heretics, someone shall have wished to show mercy to them, so that at least temporal punishment may correct one whom spiritual discipline does not correct. For since, according to lawful sanctions, when those guilty of injured majesty are punished capitally their goods are confiscated, with life alone preserved to their sons from mercy, how much more ought those who, erring in the faith of the Lord, offend Jesus Christ the Son of God to be cut off by ecclesiastical severity from our head, which is Christ, and despoiled of temporal goods, since it is far more grave to injure eternal than temporal majesty? Nor ought even the disinheritance of the orthodox sons in any way to impede the censure of severity of this kind under the pretext, as it were, of a certain compassion, since in many cases, even according to divine judgment, sons are punished temporally for their fathers, and according to the canonical sanctions vengeance is sometimes borne not only against the authors of crimes but also against the progeny of the condemned. [We therefore decree, etc. Given at the Lateran on the eighth day before the Kalends of April, in the second year of our pontificate, 1199.]

> Bona haereticorum confiscantur, et in terris ecclesiae applicantur fisco ecclesiae, in terris imperii iudicis saecularis fisco, et procedit, etiamsi catholicos habent filios.
>
> Innocentius III. Vergentis in senium saeculi corruptelam *non solum sapiunt elementa corrupta, sed etiam dignissima creaturarum ad imaginem et similitudinem condita Creatoris, praelata privilegio dignitatis volucribus coeli et bestiis universae terrae testatur, nec tantum eo quasi deficiente iam deficit, sed et inficit et inficitur scabra rubigine vetustatis. Peccat enim ad extremum homo miserrimus, et, qui non potuit in sui et mundi creatione in paradiso persistere, circa sui et orbis dissolutionem degenerat, et pretii suae redemptionis circa fines saeculorum oblitus, dum variis ac vanis quaestionum se nexibus ingerit, se ipsum laqueis suae fraudis innectit, et incidit in foveam, quam paravit. Ecce etenim, inimico homine messi dominicae superseminante semen iniquum, segetes in zizania pullulant, vel potius polluuntur, triticum arescit, et evanescit in paleas, in flore tinea et vulpes in fructu demoliri vineam Domini moliuntur. Nova siquidem sub novo testamento Achor progenies de spoliis Iericho lingulam auream palliolumque furatur, *[et] Abyron, Dathan et Chore soboles detestanda novis thuribulis fermentatum thymiama novis volunt altaribus adolere, dum nox nocti scientiam indicat, dum caecus praebet caeco ducatum, dum haereses pullulant, et quem divinae reddit hereditatis expertem, suae constituit haereticus haeresis et damnationis heredem. Hi sunt caupones, qui aquam vino commiscent, et virus draconis in aureo calice Babylonis propinant, habentes, secundum Apostolum, speciem pietatis, virtutem autem eius penitus abnegantes. Licet autem contra vulpes huiusmodi parvulas, species quidem habentes diversas, sed caudas ad invicem colligatas, quia de vanitate conveniunt in id ipsum, diversa praedecessorum nostrorum temporibus emanaverint instituta: nondum tamen usque adeo pestis potuit mortificari mortifera, quin, sicut cancer, amplius serperet in occulto, et iam in aperto suae virus iniquitatis effundat, dum palliata specie religionis et multos decipit simplices, et quosdam seducit astutos, factus magister erroris, qui non fuerat discipulus veritatis. Ne autem nos, qui, licet circa horam undecimam inter operarios, immo verius super operarios vineae Domini Sabaoth sumus a patrefamilias evangelico deputati, et quibus ex officio pastorali sunt oves Christi commissae, nec capere vulpes demolientes vineam Domini, nec arcere lupos ab ovibus videamur, et ob hoc merito vocari possimus canes muti non valentes latrare, ac perdamur cum malis agricolis et mercenario comparemur: contra defensores, receptatores, fautores et credentes haereticorum aliquid severius duximus statuendum, ut, qui per se ad viam rectitudinis revocari non possunt, in suis tamen defensoribus, receptatoribus et fautoribus, ac etiam credentibus confundantur, et, quum se viderint ab omnibus evitari, reconciliari desiderent omnium unitati. De communi ergo fratrum nostrorum consilio, assensu quoque archiepiscoporum et episcoporum apud sedem apostolicam exsistentium, districtius inhibemus, ne quis haereticos receptare quomodolibet vel defensare, aut ipsis favere vel credere quoquo modo praesumat, praesenti decreto firmiter statuentes, ut, si quis aliquid horum facere praesumpserit, nisi primo secundove commonitus a sua super hoc curaverit praesumptione cessare, ipso iure sit factus infamis, nec ad publica officia vel consilia civitatum, nec ad eligendos aliquos ad huiusmodi, nec ad testimonium admittatur. Sit etiam intestabilis, nec ad hereditatis successionem accedat. Nullus praeterea ipsi cogatur super quocunque negotio respondere. Quodsi forte iudex exstiterit, eius sententia nullam obtineat firmitatem, nec causae aliquae ad eius audientiam perferantur. Si fuerit advocatus, eius patrocinium nullatenus admittatur. Si tabellio, instrumenta confecta per ipsum nullius sint penitus momenti, sed cum auctore damnato damnentur. In similibus etiam idem praecipimus observari. Si vero clericus fuerit, ab omni officio et beneficio deponatur, ut, in quo maior est culpa, gravior exerceatur vindicta. Si quis autem tales, postquam ab ecclesia fuerint denotati, contempserit evitare, anathematis se noverit sententiam incurrisse. In terris vero, temporali nostrae iurisdictioni subiectis, bona haereticorum statuimus publicari, et in aliis idem praecipimus fieri per potestates et principes saeculares, quos ad id exsequendum, si forte negligentes exstiterint, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compelli volumus et mandamus. Nec ad eos bona eorum ulterius revertantur, nisi eis, ad cor revertentibus et abnegantibus haereticorum consortium, misereri aliquis voluerit, ut temporalis saltem poena corripiat quem spiritualis non corrigit disciplina. Quum enim secundum legitimas sanctiones, reis laesae maiestatis punitis capite, bona confiscentur eorum, filiis suis vita solummodo ex misericordia conservata: quanto magis, qui aberrantes in fide Domini Dei filium Iesum Christum offendunt, a capite nostro, quod est Christus, ecclesiastica debeat districtione praecidi, et bonis temporalibus spoliari, quum longe sit gravius aeternam quam temporalem laedere maiestatem? Nec huiusmodi severitatis censuram orthodoxorum etiam exheredatio filiorum quasi cuiusdam miserationis praetextu debet ullatenus impedire, quum in multis casibus etiam secundum divinum iudicium filii pro patribus temporaliter puniantur, et iuxta canonicas sanctiones quandoque feratur ultio non solum in auctores scelerum, sed etiam in progeniem damnatorum. [Decernimus ergo etc. Dat. Lat. VIII. Kal. Apr. Pont. nostr. Ao. II. 1199.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Advocates or notaries who favor heretics or their defenders, or give patronage to those litigating under them and write instruments for them, are infamous and suspended from that office.

The same.

If the earth were to rise against us [and the stars of heaven were to reveal your iniquities and manifest your crimes to the whole world, so that not only men but even the elements themselves conspired for your destruction and ruin and blotted you from the face of the earth, sparing neither sex nor age, so that you were an everlasting reproach to all nations, no sufficient or worthy vengeance could be taken upon you. For you neither fear God nor dread man, nor distinguish between profane and holy, but set light as darkness and darkness as light, and call evil good and good evil. You contemn the acquisition of a good reputation, which fattens the bones, and a good name, which is preferred to many riches, and care nothing for infamy, since you are of a worn forehead and have assumed the shameless forehead of a harlot. For you have rotted in sins like beasts in their dung, so that the smoke and dung of your corruption has now infected nearly all the surrounding regions and, as we believe, provoked the Lord himself to nausea. Indeed, in sins you surpass all, having become more unbelieving than Jews and more cruel than pagans. For the Jews once fastened the Lord to the gibbet of the cross; but you, continually crucifying the same one in his members, lacerate him with reproaches and insults. And although they believe, albeit under the blindness of sin, that God the Father founded all visible and invisible things, very many of you believe that visible things were founded and created by Lucifer. Pagans raged in destroying and slaughtering the bodies of Christians, but you intend to kill the whole man, secretly stealing the souls of the faithful from Christ and destroying both men alike. But neither these nor those knew the Lord's Christ, on account of which they appear to have some excuse in their sins; but you, like the sons of Ephraim drawing the bow, were signed with the character of Christ and still wish to be reckoned publicly by Christian profession, yet, departing backward in heart and receding from the faith, you have been turned into a crooked bow, entangled in the snares of heretics and deformed by their depraved dogmas. Whence the prophetic word has truly been fulfilled in you: "The lamias have bared their breasts; they have suckled their young." For you have been made drunk not with the wine of compunction but with the gall of the dragon offered to you by heretics in the golden cup of Babylon. For now the waters have overflowed, and sins, submerged in the abyss of vices, have covered your heads. Now the deep has swallowed you, and the mouth of the infernal pit presses upon you. Indeed, you have fallen into the lake of desperation, since you contemn to rise from the deep. Whence we deservedly fear lest the wrath of God come upon the sons of distrust, and he now sharpen his sword like lightning and cause the judgment of his hand to act concerning you, and on the day of fury not be mindful of his mercy. But we, having compassion upon your miseries, wish to meet your impending ruin and, if we can, to close the open way of your destruction, knocking upon God with prayers and imitating the footsteps of Abraham, who, when the Lord wished to overthrow Sodom and Gomorrah, obtained by multiplied intercessions that he would not destroy all for the sake of ten just men. Indeed, we wish to discover whether some faithful persons remain among you who have not taken care to bend their knees before Baal and who, prostrated in sackcloth and ashes after the example of the Ninevites, may soften the wrath and fury of the Lord, so that many may be spared for the sake of a few and all may not perish together. Therefore, if anyone is of God, let him join himself to us, for we wish to bear the sword of Phinehas, to imitate the censure of Moses, and with Mattathias to punish those sacrificing to demons, so that, with the Lord's aid, the unbelieving and unworthy may be eliminated from the temple and the leaven of heretical depravity be savingly purged from the mass of the Lord's dough. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command and strictly enjoin you that, since certain of your fellow citizens, sons of Belial, in hatred of Christ and contempt of the Apostolic See and of us, after the prohibition made by us, attempted to elect as consuls certain believers of the Patarenes, and did not fear to appoint as chamberlain even the heresiarch himself, namely I. Tiniosus, a son of perdition, who, at the demand of his iniquities, already long ago was bound by the bond of excommunication at our command and still persists in his contumacy, you rise manfully against the electors themselves and those elected, and likewise their accomplices, resisting them magnanimously and powerfully, sharply assailing them, and laboring to frustrate and blunt their first attempts so that they cannot be rooted with a firm root. But so that the trunk may wither and dry up completely when the roots have been torn out, under threat of anathema we most strictly prohibit anyone from presuming to swear to them as consuls or rectors or in any other manner. But those who are bound to them by any oath, or who presumed to swear to them after an election of this kind, since there ought to be no participation of Christ with Belial or of light with darkness, and a faithful man is in no way bound to keep faith with an apostate who rashly violated the faith of the Creator, since this is laid down in the canons, we have considered that they are to be absolved from such an oath.] Although many things have been issued and established by us and our predecessors against heretics, and you have no excuse in your sins as though you had forgotten ancient mandates, because what is specifically enjoined is customarily feared more than what is generally commanded, we firmly prohibit you advocates and scriniaries from furnishing the aforesaid heretics, while they remain in their contumacy and error—Patarenes or believers, their supporters or defenders, at any time with aid, counsel, or favor in anything; nor are you to furnish your patronage to them in causes or acts, or to any litigating under their examination, and in no way are you to attempt to prepare public instruments or make any writings for them. But if perhaps you shall have presumed to act contrary to this, we decree that, suspended from your office, you are subject to perpetual infamy. Moreover, lest the judges and scriniaries who consented to be associated with the aforesaid electors in a rash presumption of this kind glory in their wickedness, since he who abuses the power permitted to him deserves to lose his privilege, we judge them to be suspended from their office, decreeing as invalid and void whatever shall have been done or established by them and by the aforesaid electors. [But the sentences, etc. Given, etc., 1205.]

Advocati vel notarii, haereticis vel eorum defensoribus faventes, aut sub eis litigantibus, patrocinantes, et pro eis instrumenta scribentes, infames sunt, et ab illo officio suspensi. Idem.

Si adversus nos terra consurgeret [et iniquitates vestras coeli sidera revelarent, et manifestarent vestra scelera toti mundo, ut non solum homines, sed ipsa etiam elementa coniurarent in vestrum excidium et ruinam, et a terrae facie vos delerent, non parcentes sexui vel aetati, ut essetis cunctis gentibus in opprobrium sempiternum, ultio de vobis sumi non posset sufficiens sive digna. Vos enim nec Deum timetis, nec hominem formidatis, nec discernitis inter prophanum et sanctum, sed ponitis lucem tenebras, et tenebras lucem, et dicitis malum bonum, et bonum malum; vos famam bonam, quae impinguat ossa, et nomen bonum, quod multis divitiis antefertur, procurare contemnitis, et de infamia non curatis, quum sitis attritae frontis et impudibundam frontem assumpseritis meretricis. Computruistis namque in peccatis, sicut iumenta in stercore suo, ut fumus ac fimus putrefactionis vestrae iam fere circumiacentes regiones infecerit, ac ipsum Dominum, ut credimus, ad nauseam provocaverit. In peccatis quidem excellitis universos, facti perfidiores Iudaeis et crudeliores paganis. Iudaeis siquidem semel Dominum crucis patibulo affixerunt, sed vos, in membris suis iugiter crucifigentes eundem, opprobriis ipsum et contumeliis laceratis, et, quum illi credant, licet sub caecitate peccati, Deum Patrem omnia visibilia et invisibilia condidisse, plerique vestrum a Lucifero visibilia credunt esse condita et creata. Pagani furebant in perimendis Christianorum corporibus et mactandis, sed vos necare intenditis totum hominem, animas fidelium latenter Christo subripientes et utrumque hominem pariter perimentes. Verum, nec isti, nec illi Christum Domini cognoverunt, propter quod habere videntur excusationem aliquam in peccatis, sed vos, tanquam filii Effrem intendentes arcum, Christi fuistis charactere insigniti, et adhuc in publico Christiana vultis professione censeri, corde tamen abeuntes retrorsum ac recedentes a fide, conversi estis in arcum perversum, haereticorum laqueis irretiti, ac eorum pravis dogmatibus deformati. Unde, vere in vobis verbum propheticum est impletum: "Lamiae nudaverunt mammas, lactaverunt catulos suos." Potati enim estis non vino compunctionis, sed felle draconis, vobis ab haereticis propinato in aureo calice Babylonis. Iam enim inundaverunt aquae, operueruntque capita vestra peccata demersa in barathrum vitiorum. Iam absorbuit vos profundum, et urget super vos os suum puteus infernalis. In lacum desperationis siquidem incidistis, quum contemnatis resurgere a profundo. Unde, merito formidamus, ne in filios diffidentiae veniat ira Dei, et iam exacuat sicut fulgur gladium suum, et agat de vobis iudicium manus sua, nec in die furoris exsistat misericordiae suae memor. Nos autem, vestris miseriis compatientes, imminenti ruinae vestrae occurrere volumus et viam patulam exterminii vestri praecludere, si valemus, pulsantes Deum precibus, et Abrahae vestigia imitantes, qui a Domino, volente subvertere Sodomam et Gomorrham, multiplicatis intercessionibus impetravit, quod pro decem iustis non perderet universos. Experiri siquidem volumus, utrum inter vos aliqui fideles remanserint, qui ante Baal sua genua non curaverint, et, Ninivitarum exemplo sacco et cinere prosternati, iram Domini mitigent et furorem, ut parcatur multis pro paucis, nec simul pereant universi. Si quis igitur Dei est, adiungat se nobis, nam gestare volumus gladium Phinees, et animadversionem Mosaicam imitari, ac cum Mathathia punire daemonibus immolantes, ut auxiliante Domino eliminentur de templo perfidi et indigni, et fermentum haereticae pravitatis de massa conspersionis dominicae salubriter expurgetur. Ideoque per apostolica vobis scripta mandamus et districte praecipimus, quatenus, quum quidam vestri concives filii Belial in odium Christi et contemptum apostolicae sedis et nostrum, post inhibitionem a nobis factam, quosdam credentes Patarenarum in consules eligere attentaverint, ipsum etiam haeresiarcham, videlicet I. Tiniosi perditionis filium, qui exigentibus iniquitatibus suis de mandato nostro iam dudum vinculo exsistit excommunicationis adstrictus, et adhuc in contumacia sua perdurat, camerarium instituere non timentes, in electos ipsos et electores pariter ac eorum complices viriliter insurgatis, resistentes eis magnanimiter et potenter, ac eosdem acriter expugnantes, et, ne valeant radicari firma radice, primos ipsorum conatus frustrare ac contundere laboretis. Ut autem evulsis radicibus stipes arescat penitus et siccetur, sub interminatione anathematis districtius inhibemus, ne aliquis eis iurare tanquam consulibus vel rectoribus vel alio modo praesumat. Illos vero, qui eis aliquo iuramento tenentur adstricti, vel qui eis iurare post electionem huiusmodi praesumpserunt, quum nulla esse debeat participatio Christi ad Belial, vel lucis ad tenebras, et fidelis apostatae, qui fidem violavit temere creatoris, tenere fidem nullo modo teneatur, quum hoc cautum in canonibus habeatur, eos a tali iuramento duximus absolvendos.] Licet autem a nobis et praedecessoribus nostris contra haereticos multa sint edita et statuta, nec habeatis aliquam excusationem in peccatis, quasi antiquorum fueritis obliti mandatorum, et Quia plus timeri solet quod specialiter iniungitur, quam quod generaliter imperatur: vobis advocatis et scriniariis firmiter inhibemus, ne praefatis haereticis, dum fuerint in sua contumacia et errore, Paterinis vel credentibus, fautoribus vel defensoribus eorundem, ullo tempore in aliquo praestetis auxilium, consilium vel favorem, nec eis in causis vel in factis, vel aliquibus litigantibus sub eorum examine vestrum patrocinium praebeatis, et pro ipsis publica instrumenta condere vel aliqua scripta facere nullatenus attentetis. Quodsi forte contra facere praesumpseritis, ab officio vestro suspensos perpetuae vos decernimus infamiae subiacere. Ceterum ne iudices et scriniarii qui consenserunt praefatis electis in huiusmodi praesumtione temeraria sociari de sua nequitia glorientur, quum privilegium mereatur amittere, qui permissa sibi abutitur potestate, eos ab officio suo iudicamus esse suspensos, decernentes irritum et inane quicquid per ipsos et electos praedictos factum fuerit vel statutum. [Sententias autem etc. Datum etc. 1205.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Laypersons are not to preach, hold secret conventicles, or censure priests.

The same, to all the faithful of Christ established both in the city of Metz and in its diocese.

Since from the office of the apostolate enjoined upon us we have been made, according to the Apostle, debtors to the wise and the unwise, it is fitting for us to be solicitous for the salvation of all, so that we may both draw the wicked back from vices and foster the good in virtues. But there is need for greater discretion when vices secretly enter under the appearance of virtues and the angel of Satan feigns and transforms himself into an angel of light. Indeed, our venerable brother, the Bishop of Metz, signified to us through his letters that, both in the diocese and in the city of Metz, a multitude of laymen and women, drawn in a certain manner by no slight desire for the scriptures, caused the Gospels, the epistles of Paul, the Psalter, the Moralia, Job, and several other books to be translated for themselves into the Gallic tongue, applying themselves to a translation of this kind so willingly—would that also prudently—that in secret discussions laymen and women presume to belch forth such things among themselves and to preach to one another. They also spurn the company of those who do not involve themselves in like things and consider as strangers to themselves those who do not apply their ears and minds to such things. When certain of the parish priests wished to correct them concerning these things, they [resisted them] to their face, attempting to introduce arguments from the scriptures that they ought not in any way to be prohibited from these things. Certain of them also disdain the simplicity of their priests and, when the word of salvation is proposed to them by those priests, murmur secretly that they have it better in their booklets and can express it more prudently themselves. Although the desire to understand the divine scriptures, and the pursuit of exhorting according to them, is not to be censured but rather commended, nevertheless certain laypersons appear deservedly to be reproved in that they celebrate such secret conventicles of their own, usurp for themselves the office of preaching Christ, mock the simplicity of priests, and spurn the company of those who do not adhere to such things.

For God, the true light which illuminates every man coming into this world, so hates the works of darkness that, when he was about to send his Apostles into the whole world to preach the gospel to every creature, he commanded them, saying openly: "What I say to you in darkness, say in the light; and what you hear in the ear, preach upon the housetops," manifestly announcing through this that evangelical preaching is not to be proposed in secret conventicles, as heretics do, but publicly in churches according to Catholic custom. For, according to the testimony of Truth, everyone who does evil hates the light and does not come to the light, lest his works be reproved. But he who does the truth comes to the light, so that his works may be manifested, because they were done in God. On account of this, when the high priest had questioned Jesus concerning his disciples and his doctrine, he responded: "I have spoken openly to the world; I have always taught in the synagogue and in the temple, in which all the Jews come together; and in secret I have spoken nothing." Moreover, if anyone objects that, according to the Lord's precept, what is holy is not to be given to dogs, nor are pearls to be cast before swine, since Christ himself said, not to all but to the Apostles alone, "To you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but to the rest in parables," let him understand that the dogs and swine are not those who gratefully receive what is holy and willingly accept pearls, but those who tear apart what is holy and contemn pearls —such as those who do not venerate evangelical words and ecclesiastical sacraments as Catholics, but rather abominate them as heretics, always barking against them and blaspheming, whom Paul the Apostle teaches are to be avoided after a first and second admonition. But the secret mysteries of the faith are not to be expounded indiscriminately to all, since they cannot be understood indiscriminately by all, but only to those who can grasp them with a faithful understanding. On account of this the Apostle says to the more simple: "As to little ones in Christ, I gave you milk to drink, not meat"; for solid food belongs to the mature, as he himself said to others: "We speak wisdom among the perfect, but among you I judged myself to know nothing except Jesus Christ, and him crucified." For the profundity of divine scripture is so great that not only simple and unlettered persons but even the prudent and learned are not fully sufficient to investigate its understanding. On account of this scripture says, "Because many have failed while searching the scrutiny." Whence it was rightly established long ago in the divine law that the beast which touched the mountain was to be stoned, namely lest any simple and unlearned person presume to reach the sublimity of sacred scripture or even to preach to others. For it is written: "You shall not seek things higher than yourself." On account of this the Apostle says: "Not to be more wise than it is fitting to be wise, but to be wise unto sobriety." For just as there are many members of the body but all members do not have the same function, so there are many orders in the Church, but not all have the same office, because, according to the Apostle, "the Lord gave some as apostles, others as prophets, and others as teachers, etc." Therefore, since the order of teachers is, as it were, principal in the Church, no one ought indiscriminately to usurp for himself the office of preaching. For according to the Apostle, "How shall they preach unless they are sent?" and Truth itself commanded the Apostles: "Ask the Lord of the harvest that he send laborers into his harvest." But if perhaps someone astutely responds that such persons are invisibly sent by God, even if they are not visibly sent by man, since an invisible mission is much more worthy than a visible one and a divine mission far better than a human one—whence John the Baptist is not read to have been sent by man but by God, as the Evangelist testifies: "There was a man sent by God whose name was John"—it can and certainly ought reasonably to be answered that, since that interior mission is hidden, it does not suffice for anyone merely to assert that he himself is sent by God, since every heretic makes this assertion; rather, he must establish that invisible mission through the working of a miracle or through a special testimony of scripture. Whence, when the Lord wished to send Moses into Egypt to the children of Israel so that they would believe that he was sent by him, he gave him a sign: that he would turn his rod into a serpent and again reform the serpent into a rod. John the Baptist also brought forth from scripture a special testimony of his mission, saying to the priests and Levites who had been sent to ask who he was and why he had assumed the office of baptizing: "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness: make straight the way of the Lord, as Isaiah the Prophet said." Therefore, one who says that he is sent by God, when he has not been sent by man, is not to be believed unless he brings forth concerning himself a special testimony from the scriptures or works an evident miracle. For concerning those who are read to have been sent by God, the Evangelist also testifies that they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord cooperating and confirming the word by the signs which followed.

Although knowledge is very necessary to priests for teaching, because, according to the prophetic word, "the lips of the priest guard knowledge, and they seek the law from his mouth," nevertheless even simple priests are not to be disparaged by learned men, since the priestly office ought to be honored in them; on account of which the Lord commanded in the law: "You shall not disparage the gods," understanding by this the priests, who on account of the excellence of their order and the dignity of their office are designated by the name of gods. According to which he says elsewhere concerning a servant wishing to remain with his master that the master is to offer him to the gods. For since, according to the word of the Apostle, a servant stands or falls to his own master, certainly a priest ought to be chastised in the spirit of meekness by the bishop to whose correction he is subject, but not to be reproved in the spirit of pride by the people over whose correction he is placed, since, according to the Lord's precept, father and mother ought not to be cursed but rather honored. This ought to be understood much more strongly concerning a spiritual father than a carnal one. Nor should anyone defend the audacity of his presumption by that example in which an ass is read to have reproved the Prophet, or because the Lord says: "Which of you shall reprove me of sin? And if I have spoken badly, bear witness concerning the evil"; since it is one thing secretly to correct a brother sinning against oneself, which certainly everyone is bound to do according to the evangelical rule—in which case, indeed, it can be understood that Balaam was corrected by the ass—and it is another thing openly to reprove one's father even when he is at fault, and especially to call him a fool for being simple, which is certainly permitted to no one according to evangelical Truth: "For he who even says to his brother, 'Fool,' shall be guilty of the fire of Gehenna." Again, it is one thing for a prelate, confident of his own innocence, voluntarily to submit himself to the accusation of his subjects, in which case the aforesaid word of the Lord ought to be understood; and it is another for a subject to rise rashly against a prelate, not so much with the intention of reproving as of disparaging him, when the necessity of obeying rather lies upon him. But if perhaps necessity should demand that a priest, as useless and unworthy, ought to be removed from the care of the flock, action is to be taken in an orderly manner before the bishop, to whose office both the institution and destitution of priests are known to pertain. But that is to be spurned by all as proceeding from the arrogance of the Pharisees: that, as though they alone were just, they spurn the rest, since until now, from the beginning of the nascent Church, there have been many holy men who are read neither to have been such nor to have adhered to such persons, while persons of this kind are read to have newly arisen. Unless they are content to be taught rather than to teach, they will perhaps pertain to those to whom the Lord says: "Do not become many masters." Therefore, children, because we love you with paternal affection, lest under the pretext of truth you fall into the pit of error and under the appearance of virtues into the snare of vices, we earnestly ask, admonish, and exhort your whole body in the Lord, enjoining upon you for the remission of your sins that you recall your tongue and mind from those things which we have marked above as reprehensible, observing the Catholic faith and ecclesiastical rule, lest it happen that you are circumvented by fallacious words or even circumvent others. For unless you humbly and devoutly receive our correction and paternal admonition, after the oil we shall pour in the wine, applying ecclesiastical severity, so that those unwilling to obey voluntarily may learn to acquiesce even unwillingly. [Given at the Lateran, 1199.]

> Laici non praedicent, nec occulta conventicula faciant, nec sacerdotes reprehendant.
>
> Idem universis Christi fidelibus, tam in urbe Metensi quam in eius dioecesi constitutis.
>
> Quum ex iniuncto nobis apostolatus officio facti simus, secundum Apostolum, sapientibus et insipientibus debitores, pro universorum salute nos oportet esse sollicitos, ut et malos retrahamus a vitiis, et bonos in virtutibus foveamus. Tunc autem opus est discretione maiori, quum vitia sub specie virtutum occulte subintrant, et angelus Satanae se in angelum lucis simulat et transformat. Sane, significavit nobis venerabilis frater noster episcopus Metensis per literas suas, quod tam in dioecesi quam urbe Metensi laicorum et mulierum multitudo, non modico tracta quodammodo desiderio scripturarum, evangelia, epistolas Pauli, Psalterium, Moralia, Iob et plures alios libros sibi fecit in gallico sermone transferri, translationi huiusmodi adeo libenter, utinam autem et prudenter, intendens, ut secretis quaestionibus talia inter se laici et mulieres eructare praesumant et sibi invicem praedicare; qui etiam eorum aspernantur consortium, qui se similibus non immiscent, et a se reputant alienos qui aures et animos talibus non apponunt. Quos quum aliqui parochialium sacerdotum super his corripere voluissent, ipsi [eis] in faciem restiterunt, conantes rationes inducere de scripturis, quod non ab his deberent aliquatenus prohiberi. Quidam etiam ex eis simplicitatem sacerdotum suorum fastidiunt, et, quum ipsis per eos verbum salutis proponitur, se melius habere in libellis suis, et prudentius se posse id eloqui, submurmurant in occulto. Licet autem desiderium intelligendi divinas scripturas, et secundum eas studium adhortandi, reprehendendum non sit, sed potius commendandum: in eo tamen apparent quidam laici merito arguendi, quod tales occulta conventicula sua celebrant, officium praedicationis Christi sibi usurpant, sacerdotum simplicitatem eludunt, et eorum consortium aspernantur, qui talibus non inhaerent. Deus enim lux vera, quae omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum illuminat, in tantum odit opera tenebrarum, ut Apostolos suos in mundum universum praedicaturos evangelium omni creaturae missurus, eis praeceperit, aperte dicens: "Quod dico vobis in tenebris, dicite in lumine, et, quod in aure auditis, praedicate super tecta," *per hoc manifeste denuncians, quod evangelica praedicatio non in occultis conventiculis, sicut haeretici faciunt, sed in ecclesiis iuxta morem catholicum est publice proponenda. Nam iuxta testimonium veritatis omnis, qui male agit, odit lucem, et ad lucem non venit, ne eius opera arguantur. Qui autem facit veritatem, venit ad lucem, ut manifestentur opera eius, quia in Deo sunt facta. Propter quod, quum pontifex interrogasset Iesum de discipulis suis, et de doctrina eius, respondit: "Ego palam locutus sum mundo, ego semper docui in synagoga et in templo, in quo omnes Iudaei conveniunt, et in occulto locutus sum nihil." Porro, si quis obiiciat, quod iuxta praeceptum dominicum non est sanctum dandum canibus, neque margaritae mittendae sunt ante porcos, quum et ipse Christus non omnibus quidem, sed solis Apostolis dixerit: "Vobis datum est nosse mysterium regni Dei, ceteris autem in parabolis:" intelligat, canes et porcos non eos esse, qui sanctum gratanter accipiunt et margaritas libenter acceptant, sed illos, qui sanctum dilacerant et margaritas contemnunt, quales sunt, qui evangelica verba et ecclesiastica sacramenta non ut catholici venerantur, sed abominantur potius ut haeretici, oblatrantes semper et blasphemantes, quos Paulus Apostolus post primam et secundam commonitionem docet esse vitandos. Arcana vero fidei sacramenta non sunt passim omnibus exponenda, quum non passim ab omnibus possint intelligi, sed eis tantum, qui ea fideli possunt concipere intellectu; propter quod simplicioribus inquit Apostolus: "Quasi parvulis in Christo lac potum dedi vobis, non escam;" maiorum est enim solidus cibus, sicut aliis ipse dicebat: "Sapientiam loquimur inter perfectos, inter vos autem nihil iudicavi me scire, nisi Iesum Christum, et hunc crucifixum." Tanta est enim divinae scripturae profunditas, ut non solum simplices et illiterati, sed etiam prudentes et docti non plene sufficiant ad ipsius intelligentiam indagandam. Propter quod dicit scriptura: "Quia multi defecerunt scrutantes scrutinio." Unde recte fuit olim in lege divina statutum, ut bestia, quae montem tetigerit, lapidetur, ne videlicet simplex aliquis et indoctus praesumat ad sublimitatem scripturae sacrae pertingere, vel etiam aliis praedicare. Scriptum est enim: "Altiora te ne quaesieris." Propter quod dicit Apostolus: "Non plus sapere quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem." Sicut enim multa sunt membra corporis, omnia vero membra non eundem actum habent, ita multi sunt ordines in ecclesia, sed non omnes idem habent officium, quia secundum Apostolum "alios quidem Dominus dedit apostolos, alios prophetas, alios autem doctores, etc." Quum igitur doctorum ordo sit quasi praecipuus in ecclesia, non debet sibi quisquam indifferenter praedicationis officium usurpare. Nam secundum Apostolum: "quomodo praedicabunt, nisi mittantur?" et veritas ipsa praecepit Apostolis: "Rogate Dominum messis, ut mittat operarios in messem suam." Quodsi forte quis argute respondeat, quia tales invisibiliter mittuntur a Deo, etsi non visibiliter mittantur ab homine, quum invisibilis missio multo sit dignior quam visibilis, et divina longe melior quam humana, unde Ioannes Baptista non legitur missus ab homine, sed a Deo, sicut Evangelista, testatur: "Quia fuit homo missus a Deo, cui nomen erat Ioannes," potest et debet utique rationabiliter responderi, quod, quum interior illa missio sit occulta, non sufficit cuiquam nude tantum asserere, quod ipse sit missus a Deo, quum hoc quilibet haereticus asseveret: sed oportet, quod adstruat illam invisibilem missionem per operationem miraculi, vel per scripturae testimonium speciale. Unde, quum Dominus vellet mittere Moysen in Aegyptum ad filios

Israel, ut crederent ei, quod mitteretur ab ipso, dedit ei signum, ut converteret virgam in colubrum, et colubrum in virgam iterum reformaret. Ioannes quoque Baptista speciale suae missionis testimonium protulit de scriptura, dicens sacerdotibus et Levitis, qui missi fuerant ad interrogandum, quis esset, et quare baptizandi officium assumpsisset: "Ego vox clamantis in deserto, dirigite viam Domino, sicut ait Esaias Propheta." Non est ergo credendum ei, qui dicit se missum a Deo, quum non sit missus ab homine, nisi de se speciale proferat testimonium de scripturis, vel evidens miraculum operetur. Nam et de his, qui missi leguntur a Deo, Evangelista testatur, quod ipsi profecti praedicabant ubique, Domino cooperante et sermonem confirmante sequentibus signis. Licet autem scientia sit valde necessaria sacerdotibus ad doctrinam, quia iuxta verbum propheticum "labia sacerdotis custodiunt scientiam, et legem exquirunt ex ore eius:" non est tamen simplicibus sacerdotibus etiam a scholasticis detrahendum, quum in eis sacerdotale officium debeat honorari, propter quod Dominus in lege praecepit: "Diis non detrahes," sacerdotes intelligens, qui propter excellentiam ordinis et officii dignitatem deorum nomine nuncupantur. Iuxta quod alibi dicit de servo, volente apud dominum remanere, ut dominus offerat eum diis. Quum enim iuxta verbum Apostoli servus suo domino stet aut cadat, profecto sacerdos ab episcopo, cuius correctioni est subiectus, debet in mansuetudinis spiritu castigari, non autem a populo, cuius est correctioni praepositus, in spiritu superbiae reprehendi, quum iuxta praeceptum dominicum pater et mater non debeant maledici, sed potius honorari. Quod de spirituali patre multo fortius debet intelligi quam carnali. Nec quisquam suae praesumptionis audaciam illo defendat exemplo, quod asina legitur reprehendisse Prophetam, vel quod Dominus ait: "Quis ex vobis arguet me de peccato? Et, si male locutus sum, testimonium perhibe de malo;" quum aliud sit fratrem in se peccantem occulte corripere, quod utique quisque tenetur efficere secundum regulam evangelicam (in quo casu sane potest intelligi, quod Balaam fuit correptus ab asina), et aliud est patrem suum etiam delinquentem reprehendere manifeste, ac praecipue fatuum pro simplici appellare, quod utique nulli licet secundum evangelicam veritatem: "nam qui etiam dicit fratri, fatue, reus erit gehennae ignis". Rursus aliud est, quod praelatus sponte, de sua confisus innocentia, subditorum se accusationi supponit, in quo casu praemissum Domini verbum debet intelligi; et aliud est, quod subditus non tam animo reprehendendi, quam detrahendi exsurgit temerarius in praelatum, quum ei potius incumbat necessitas *obsequendi. Quodsi forte necessitas postularet, ut sacerdos tanquam inutilis et indignus a cura gregis debeat removeri: agendum est ordinate apud episcopum, ad cuius officium tam institutio quam destitutio sacerdotum noscitur pertinere. *Illud autem, tanquam de supercilio Pharisaeorum procedens, debet ab omnibus aspernari, quod tanquam ipsi soli sint iusti, ceteros aspernantur quum et hactenus ab initio nascentis ecclesiae multi fuerint viri sancti, qui nec tales fuisse leguntur nec talibus adhaesisse, quum de novo tales surrexisse legantur: qui nisi contenti sint doceri potius quam docere, ad illos forsitan pertinebunt quibus Dominus ait: "Nolite fieri plures magistri." Nos ergo, filii, quia paterno vos affectu diligimus, ne sub praetextu veritatis in foveam decidatis erroris et sub specie virtutum in laqueum vitiorum universitatem vestram rogamus attentius, monemus et exhortamur in Domino in remissionem vobis peccatorum iniungentes, quatenus ab iis quae superius reprehensibilia denotavimus, linguam et animum revocetis, fidem catholicam et regulam ecclesiasticam observantes, ne vos verbis fallacibus circumveniri vel etiam circumvenire contingat: quia nisi correctionem nostram et admonitionem paternam receperitis humiliter et devote, nos post oleum infundemus et vinum, severitatem ecclesiasticam apponentes; ut qui noluerint obedire spontanei, discant acquiescere vel inviti. *[Datum Laterani 1199.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: All heretics, by whatever names they are named, are excommunicated. This it says as far as § But those condemned. — § 1. Those condemned for heresy are punished by the secular judge, and the goods of lay heretics are confiscated, while the goods of clerics are applied to the churches in which they were beneficed. This it says as far as § But those who. The Sicilian Abbot. — § 2. If one suspected of heresy does not purge himself, he is excommunicated at the judgment of the superior, and, remaining in excommunication for a year, is condemned as a heretic. This it says as far as § But let them be admonished. The Sicilian Abbot. — § 3. Secular authorities, perpetual or temporary, are bound to swear that to the extent of their powers they will exterminate all heretics condemned by the Church; and a temporal lord who does not purge his land of heretics is excommunicated. And if he persists in excommunication for a year, this is announced to the Pope, who will absolve his faithful from their oath and expose his land to the faithful, preserving the right of the principal lord unless he too is at fault. This it says as far as § But Catholics. The Sicilian Abbot. — § 4. Those signed with the cross for the extermination of heretics enjoy the privilege granted to those signed with the cross for the aid of the Holy Land. This it says as far as § Believers. The Abbot. — § 5. There the penalty for believers in, receivers of, and defenders of heretics is set down, first for laypersons and secondly for clerics, as far as § Because. The Abbot. — § 6. No one ought to assume for himself the office of preaching unless a license concerning this is granted to him by law, the Apostolic See, or the diocesan bishop; otherwise he is excommunicated, and, unless he comes to his senses, another penalty is imposed. This it says as far as § We add. The Abbot. — § 7. Archbishops and bishops who regard the provinces and dioceses of their inferiors as suspected of heresy are to visit them, at least once a year, by themselves or through other suitable persons. They also ought, if this appears expedient, to exact an oath from those of the neighborhood to reveal heretics and those celebrating secret conventicles; once revealed, relapsed persons are to be punished canonically, and those resisting the oath are to be condemned as heretics. This it says as far as § We will. The Abbot. — § 8. A bishop negligent in pursuing heresy is to be removed from episcopal dignity and another suitable person substituted. This it says as far as the end. The Sicilian Abbot.

The same, in the general council.

We therefore excommunicate and anathematize every heresy raising itself against this holy, orthodox, and Catholic faith which we have expounded above, condemning all heretics, by whatever names they may be designated, indeed having diverse faces but tails tied to one another, because they agree in the same vanity.

§ 1. But those condemned are to be left to the secular authorities present or to their bailiffs, to be punished by due censure, clerics first having been degraded from their orders, so that the goods of those thus condemned, if they are laypersons, are confiscated; but if they are clerics, they are to be applied to the churches from which they received their stipends.

§ 2. But those who shall have been found notable by suspicion alone, unless, according to consideration of the suspicion and the character of the person, they shall have demonstrated their own innocence by suitable purgation, are to be struck with the sword of anathema and avoided by all until condign satisfaction, so that, if they shall have persisted in excommunication for a year, from then on they are to be condemned as heretics.

§ 3. But secular authorities, whatever offices they exercise, are to be admonished and induced—and, if necessary, compelled by ecclesiastical censure—so that, just as they desire to be reputed and held faithful, they publicly furnish an oath for the defense of the faith that from lands subject to their jurisdiction they will in good faith strive, to the extent of their powers, to exterminate all heretics denounced by the Church, so that henceforth, whenever anyone shall have been assumed into an authority, whether perpetual or temporary, he is bound to confirm this chapter by oath. But if a temporal lord, requested and admonished by the Church, shall have neglected to purge his land from [this] heretical foulness, let him be bound by the bond of excommunication by the metropolitan and the other bishops of the province; and, if he shall have contemned to make satisfaction, let this be signified within a year to the Supreme Pontiff, so that from then on he may declare the lord's vassals absolved from their fidelity to him and expose the land to occupation by Catholics, who, the heretics having been exterminated, may possess it without any contradiction and preserve it in purity of faith, saving the right of the principal lord, provided that he himself furnishes no obstacle concerning this and opposes no impediment, the same law nevertheless being observed concerning those who do not have principal lords.

§ 4. But Catholics who, having assumed the sign of the cross, shall have girded themselves for the extermination of heretics are to enjoy that indulgence and be fortified by that holy privilege which are granted to those proceeding to the aid of the Holy Land.

§ 5. Moreover, we decree that believers in, receivers of, defenders of, and supporters of heretics are subject to excommunication, firmly establishing that, after anyone of this kind shall have been marked by excommunication, if he shall have contemned to make satisfaction within a year, from then on he is made infamous by the law itself and is to be admitted neither to public offices or councils, nor to electing others to such offices, nor to testimony. Let him also be incapable of making a will, so that he neither has the free faculty of making a testament nor comes to the succession of an inheritance. Moreover, no one is to be compelled to answer him concerning any business whatsoever, but he is to be compelled to answer others. But if perhaps he is a judge, let his sentence obtain no force, nor are any causes to be brought to his hearing. If he is an advocate, let his patronage in no way be admitted. If a notary, let the instruments prepared by him be of no effect, but be condemned with their condemned author. And we command the same to be observed in similar matters. But if he is a cleric, let him be deposed from every office and benefice, so that, where the guilt is greater, the vengeance exercised may be graver. But if any shall have contemned to avoid such persons after they have been denounced by the Church, let them be struck by a sentence of excommunication until suitable satisfaction. Indeed, clerics are not to exhibit ecclesiastical sacraments to pestilent persons of this kind, nor presume to deliver them to Christian burial, nor receive their alms or offerings; otherwise, let them be deprived of their office, to which they are never to be restored without a special indult of the Apostolic See. Similarly, any regulars whatsoever, upon whom this also is to be inflicted: that their privileges are not to be observed in that diocese in which they presumed to perpetrate such excesses.

§ 6. But because certain persons, denying the power of piety under its appearance, as the Apostle says, claim for themselves the authority of preaching, although the same Apostle says, "How shall they preach unless they are sent?", all who, either prohibited or not sent, without authority received from the Apostolic See or the Catholic bishop of the place, shall have presumed publicly or privately to usurp the office of preaching, are to be bound by the bond of excommunication and, unless they come to their senses as quickly as possible, struck with another suitable penalty.

§ 7. We add moreover that every archbishop or bishop, by himself, by his archdeacon, or by other honorable and suitable persons, is to go around, twice or at least once in the year, his own parish in which it shall be reported that heretics dwell; and there he is to compel three or more men of good testimony—or even, if it shall appear expedient, the entire neighborhood—to swear that, if anyone there knows any heretics, or persons celebrating secret conventicles, or persons differing from the common association of the faithful in life and morals, he will take care to indicate them to the bishop. But the bishop himself is to summon the accused to his presence; unless they shall have purged themselves from the charge brought against them, or if, after purgation has been rendered, they shall have fallen back into their former unbelief, they are to be punished canonically. But if any of them, rejecting the religious obligation of an oath with damnable obstinacy, should perhaps be unwilling to swear, by that very fact let them be reputed heretics.

§ 8. We therefore will and command, and strictly enjoin in virtue of obedience, that bishops diligently keep watch throughout their dioceses for the effective execution of these things if they wish to escape canonical punishment. For if any bishop shall have been negligent or remiss in purging from his diocese the leaven of heretical depravity, when this shall appear from certain indications, let him be deposed from the episcopal office and another suitable person, who wills and is able to confound heretical depravity, be substituted in his place.

> Excommunicati sunt omnes haeretici, quibuscunque nominibus nominentur. H. d. usque ad § Damnati. - § 1. Damnati de haeresi per saecularem iudicem puniuntur, et bona laicorum haereticorum confiscantur, et clericorum bona applicantur ecclesiis, ubi beneficiati erant. H. d. usque ad § Qui autem. Abbas Siculus. - § 2. Si suspectus de haeresi se non purgat, ad arbitrium superioris excommunicatur, et exsistens per annum in excommunicatione, ut haereticus, damnatur. H. d. usque ad § Moneantur. Abbas Siculus. - § 3. Potestates saeculares perpetuae vel temporales iurare tenentur universos haereticos ab ecclesia damnatos pro viribus exterminare, et temporalis dominus, non purgans terram suam haereticis, excommunicatur. Et si perstiterit in excommunicatione per annum, nunciatur Papae, qui fideles eius a iuramento absolvet, et eius terram fidelibus exponet, salvo iure principalis domini; nisi et ipse sit in culpa. H. d. usque ad § Catholici. Abbas Siculus. - § 4. Cruce signati ad exterminationem haereticorum, gaudent privilegio concesso cruce signatis in subsidium terrae sanctae. H. d. usque ad § Credentes. Abbas. - § 5. Ibi ponitur poena credentium, receptatorum et defendentium haereticos, primo laicorum, secundo clericorum, usque ad § Quia. Abbas. - § 6. Nullus debet sibi officium praedicandi assumere, nisi super hoc sibi a iure vel a sede apostolica vel a dioecesano episcopo licentia concedatur; alias excommunicatur, et, nisi resipuerit, alia poena imponitur. H. d. usque ad § Adiicimus. Abbas. - § 7. Archiepiscopi et episcopi, inferiorum suarum provincias et dioeceses suspectas habentes de haeresi, saltem semel in anno per se vel per alios idoneos visitent; qui etiam debent, si hoc expedire videbitur, exigere iuramentum ab illis de vicinia ad revelandos haereticos et occulta conventicula celebrantes, quos revelatos relapsos canonice punient, et renitentes iurare, ut haeretici condemnentur. H. d. usque ad § Volumus. Abbas. - § 8. Episcopus negligens in haeresi persequenda, a dignitate episcopali est removendus, et alius idoneus est surrogandus. H. d. usque ad finem Abbas Siculus.
>
> Idem in concilio generali. Excommunicamus itaque et anathematizamus omnem haeresim, extollentem se adversus hanc sanctam, orthodoxam et catholicam fidem, quam superius exposuimus, condemnantes haereticos universos, quibuscunque nominibus censeantur, facies quidem diversas habentes, sed caudas ad invicem colligatas, quia de vanitate conveniunt in id ipsum. § 1. Damnati vero praesentibus saecularibus potestatibus aut eorum ballivis relinquantur animadversione debita puniendi, clericis prius a suis ordinibus degradatis, ita, quod bona huiusmodi damnatorum, si laici fuerint, confiscentur: si vero clerici, applicentur ecclesiis, a quibus stipendia receperunt. § 2. Qui autem inventi fuerint sola suspicione notabiles, nisi iuxta considerationem suspicionis qualitatemque personae propriam innocentiam congrua purgatione monstraverint, anathematis gladio feriantur, et usque ad satisfactionem condignam ab omnibus evitentur, ita, quod, si per annum in excommunicatione perstiterint, ex tunc velut haeretici condemnentur. § 3. Moneantur autem et inducantur, et, si necesse fuerit, per censuram ecclesiasticam compellantur saeculares potestates, quibuscunque fungantur officiis, ut, sicut reputari cupiunt et haberi fideles, ita pro defensione fidei praestent publice iuramentum, quod de terris suae iurisdictioni subiectis universos haereticos, ab ecclesia denotatos, bona fide pro viribus exterminare studebunt, ita, quod amodo, quandocunque quis fuerit in potestatem sive perpetuam sive temporalem assumptus, hoc teneatur capitulum iuramento firmare. Si vero dominus temporalis, requisitus et monitus ab ecclesia, suam terram purgare neglexerit ab [hac] haeretica foeditate, per metropolitanum et ceteros comprovinciales episcopos excommunicationis vinculo innodetur, et, si satisfacere contempserit, infra annum significetur hoc summo Pontifici, ut ex tunc ipse vasallos ab eius fidelitate denunciet absolutos, et terram exponat catholicis occupandam, qui eam, exterminatis haereticis, absque ulla contradictione possideant, et in fidei puritate conservent, salvo iure domini principalis, dummodo super hoc ipse nullum praestet obstaculum, nec aliquod impedimentum opponat, eadem nihilominus lege servata circa eos, qui non habent dominos principales. § 4. Catholici vero, qui, crucis assumpto charactere, ad haereticorum exterminium se accinxerint, illa gaudeant indulgentia, illoque sancto privilegio sint muniti, quae accedentibus in terrae sanctae subsidium conceduntur. § 5. Credentes praeterea, receptatores, defensores et fautores haereticorum excommunicationi decernimus subiacere, firmiter statuentes, ut, postquam quis talium fuerit excommunicatione notatus, si satisfacere contempserit infra annum, ex tunc ipso iure sit factus infamis, nec ad publica officia seu consilia, nec ad eligendos aliquos ad huiusmodi, nec ad testimonium admittatur. Sit etiam intestabilis, ut nec testandi liberam habeat facultatem nec ad hereditatis successionem accedat. Nullus praeterea ipsi super quocunque negotio, sed ipse aliis respondere cogatur. Quodsi forte iudex exstiterit, eius sententia nullam obtineat firmitatem, nec causae aliquae ad eius audientiam perferantur. Si fuerit advocatus, eius patrocinium nullatenus admittatur; si tabellio, instrumenta confecta per ipsum nullius sint momenti, sed cum auctore damnato damnentur. Et in similibus idem praecipimus observari. Si vero clericus fuerit, ab omni officio et beneficio deponatur, ut, in quo maior est culpa, gravior exerceatur vindicta. Si qui autem tales, postquam ab ecclesia fuerint denotati, evitare contempserint, excommunicationis sententia usque ad satisfactionem idoneam percellantur. Sane, clerici non exhibeant huiusmodi pestilentibus ecclesiastica sacramenta, nec eos Christianae praesumant tradere sepulturae, nec eleemosynas aut oblationes eorum percipiant, alioquin suo priventur officio, ad quod nunquam restituantur absque indulto sedis apostolicae speciali. Similiter quilibet regulares, quibus etiam hoc infligatur, ut eorum privilegia in illa dioecesi non serventur, in qua tales excessus praesumpserint perpetrare. § 6. Quia vero nonnulli sub specie pietatis virtutem eius, iuxta quod Apostolus ait, abnegantes, auctoritatem sibi vendicant praedicandi, quum idem Apostolus dicat: "Quomodo praedicabunt, nisi mittantur?" omnes, qui prohibiti, vel non missi, praeter auctoritatem ab apostolica sede vel catholico episcopo loci susceptam, publice vel privatim praedicationis officium usurpare praesumpserint, excommunicationis vinculo innodentur, et nisi quam citius resipuerint, alia competenti poena plectentur. § 7. Adiicimus insuper, ut quilibet archiepiscopus vel episcopus per se aut per archidiaconum suum, aut alias honestas idoneasque personas, bis aut saltem semel in anno propriam parochiam, in qua fama fuerit haereticos habitare, circumeat, et ibi tres vel plures boni testimonii viros, vel etiam, si expedire videbitur, totam viciniam iurare compellat, quod, si quos ibidem haereticos sciverit, vel aliquos occulta conventicula celebrantes, seu a communi conversatione fidelium vita et moribus, dissidentes, eos episcopo studeat indicare. Ipse autem episcopus ad praesentiam suam convocet accusatos, qui, nisi se ab obiecto reatu purgaverint, vel, si post purgationem exhibitam in pristinam fuerint relapsi perfidiam, canonice puniantur. Si qui vero ex eis, iuramenti religionem obstinatione damnabili respuentes, iurare forte noluerint, ex hoc ipso tanquam haeretici reputentur. § 8. Volumus igitur et mandamus, et in virtute obedientiae districte praecipimus, ut ad haec efficaciter exsequenda episcopi per dioeceses suas diligenter invigilent, si canonicam velint effugere ultionem. Si quis enim episcopus super expurgando de sua dioecesi haereticae pravitatis fermento negligens fuerit vel remissus, quum id certis indiciis apparuerit, ab episcopali officio deponatur, et in locum ipsius alter substituatur idoneus, qui velit et possit haereticam confundere pravitatem.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Laypersons, of whatever profession they may be, ought not to preach.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of Milan.

Just as in one body. (And below:) Therefore, since certain laypersons presume to preach and it is greatly to be feared lest vices secretly enter under the appearance of virtues, we, considering that the order of teachers is, as it were, principal in the church of God, command that, since the Lord gave some as apostles, others as prophets, and still others as teachers, you forbid all laypersons, of whatever order they may be designated, to usurp the office of preaching.

> Laici, cuiuscunque professionis sint, praedicare non debent.
>
> Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo Mediolanensi. Sicut in uno corpore (Et infra:) Quum igitur nonnulli laici praedicare praesumant, et verendum nimis exsistat; ne vitia sub specie virtutum occulte subintrent, nos, attendentes, quod doctorum ordo est in ecclesia Dei quasi praecipuus, mandamus, quatenus, quum alios Dominus apostolos dederit, alios prophetas, alios vero doctores, interdicas laicis universis, cuiuscunque ordinis censeantur, usurpare officium praedicandi.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: This chapter, as far as § But if any, is contained in chapter We excommunicate, above in the same title, at the beginning; whence summarize and explain it as was stated there. — § 1. If those detected in heresy are unwilling to return to the faith, they are to be confined in perpetual prison to perform penance; and those believing the errors of heretics are heretics. This it says.

The same.

We excommunicate and anathematize all heretics—the Cathars, Patarenes, Poor Men of Lyons, Passagines, Josephines, Arnoldists, Speronists, and others, by whatever names they may be designated—indeed having diverse faces but tails tied to one another, because they agree in the same vanity. But those condemned by the Church are to be left to secular judgment to be punished by due censure, clerics first having been degraded from their orders.

§ 1. But if any of the aforesaid, after they shall have been detected, are unwilling to return to perform condign penance, let them be confined in perpetual prison; and we likewise judge those believing their errors to be heretics.

> Hoc cap. usque ad § Si qui autem. habetur in c. Excommunicamus. supr. eod. tit. in princ., unde summa et declara, prout ibi fuit dictum. - § 1. Si in haeresi deprehensi nolunt redire ad fidem, detrudendi sunt in perpetuo carcere ad poenitentiam peragendam, et credentes erroribus haereticorum haeretici sunt. H. d.
>
> Idem.
>
> Excommunicamus et anathematizamus universos haereticos, Catharos, Patarenos, Pauperes de Lugduno, Passaginos, Iosepinos, Arnaldistas, Speronistas, et alios, quibuscunque nominibus censeantur, facies quidem habentes diversas, sed caudas adinvicem colligatas, quia de vanitate conveniunt in id ipsum. Damnati vero per ecclesiam saeculari iudicio relinquantur, animadversione debita puniendi, clericis prius a suis ordinibus degradatis. § 1. Si qui autem de praedictis, postquam fuerint deprehensi, redire noluerint ad agendam condignam poenitentiam, in perpetuo carcere detrudantur, credentes autem eorum erroribus haereticos similiter iudicamus.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: Those who were bound to heretics are freed from every obligation.

The same.

Let all who were bound by any compact, fortified by any firmness whatsoever, to persons manifestly fallen into heresy know themselves absolved from the debt of fidelity, homage, and every service.

> Liberantur ab omni obligatione qui haereticis tenebantur adstricti. Idem.
>
> Absolutos se noverint a debito fidelitatis hominii et totius obsequii, quicunque lapsis manifeste in haeresim aliquo pacto, quacunque firmitate vallato, tenebantur adstricti.

Title VIII: On Schismatics and Those Ordained by Them

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Ordinations, collations of benefices, and alienations of ecclesiastical things made by schismatics are invalid; and those who swear to maintain a schism are suspended from dignity and order.

From the Lateran Council.

Renewing what was done by our predecessor Pope Innocent of happy memory, we decree that ordinations made by the heresiarchs Octavian and Guido, and also by John of Struma, who followed them, and by those ordained by them, are invalid. We add also that those [if any] who received ecclesiastical dignities or benefices through the said schismatics are to lack the things obtained. Alienations also, or invasions, which were made concerning ecclesiastical things through the same schismatics, or which were made through laypersons, are to lack all force and revert to the churches without any burden. But if anyone shall have presumed to act contrary to this, let him know that he is subject to excommunication. We decree that those who voluntarily furnished an oath to maintain the schism remain suspended from sacred orders and dignities.

> DE SCHISMATICIS ET ORDINATIS AB EIS.
>
> Irritae sunt ordinationes, beneficiorum collationes, et ecclesiasticarum rerum alienationes per schismaticos factae, et a dignitate et ordine suspenduntur qui schisma tenere iurant.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi. Quod a praedecessore nostro felicis memoriae Papa Innocentio factum est innovantes, ordinationes ab Octaviano et Guidone haeresiarchis, nec non et Ioanne Strumensi, qui eos secutus est, factas, et ab ordinatis ab eis, irritas esse censemus, adiicientes etiam, ut, [si] qui dignitates ecclesiasticas seu beneficia per dictos schismaticos acceperunt, careant impetratis. Alienationes quoque sive invasiones, quae per eosdem schismaticos, seu quae per laicos factae sunt de rebus ecclesiasticis, omni careant firmitate, et ad ecclesias sine omni onere revertantur. Si quis autem contraire praesumpserit, excommunicationi se noverit subiacere. Illos vero, qui sponte iuramentum de tenendo schismate praestiterint, a sacris ordinibus et dignitatibus decernimus manere suspensos.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One ordained by a schismatic is to be repelled from office unless he proves that dispensation was granted to him by one having the power.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Besançon.

To your fraternity. (And below: [cf. c. 7, On One Who Had Knowledge, IV. 13.]) You will also be able without hesitation to repel from office the prior whom you assert was ordained by a schismatic, unless he shall lawfully have proved that merciful dispensation was granted to him by that person who had the power of dispensing concerning this. [Given at Ferentino on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, 1203.]

> Ordinatus a schismatico ab officio est repellendus, nisi probet secum dispensatum per habentem potestatem.
>
> Innocentius III. Bisuntino Archiepiscopo.
>
> Fraternitati tuae (Et infra: [cf. c. 7. de eo, qui cogn. IV. 13.]) Priorem quoque, quem a schismatico asseris ordinatum, ab officio poteris repellere incunctanter, nisi legitime probaverit secum fuisse misericorditer dispensatum et ab ea persona, quae super hoc potestatem habuerit dispensandi. [Dat. Ferentini XII. Kal. Iun. 1203.]

Title IX: On Apostates and Those Repeating Baptism

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric who, having cast aside his habit and tonsure, involves himself in enormities loses the privilege of the canon If anyone, at the devil's persuasion; whence those who apprehend him do not fall under the canon, namely, the excommunication.

Alexander III.

Moreover, we do not command that clerics who, having abandoned the clerical order and their habit, live in apostasy as laypersons, if they are apprehended while involved in crimes, are to be freed by ecclesiastical censure. For the statutes of the holy Fathers declare that such persons are to be numbered among apostates. [Concerning priests, etc.; cf. c. 2, That Clerics or Monks, III. 50.]

> DE APOSTATIS ET REITERANTIBUS BAPTISMA.
>
> Clericus, qui dimisso habitu et tonsura immiscet se enormitatibus, perdit privilegium canonis: Si quis suadente, unde eum deprehendentes non incidunt in canonem. scil. excommunicationem.
>
> Alexander III. Praeterea clerici, qui, relicto ordine clericali et habitu suo, in apostasia tanquam laici conversantur, si in criminibus comprehensi teneantur, per censuram ecclesiasticam non praecipimus liberari. *Tales enim inter apostatas numerandos sanctorum Patrum statuta declarant. *[Sacerdotibus etc. cf. c. 2. Ne cler. vel mon. III. 50.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If the crime of an acolyte who furnished ministry to one rebaptizing is hidden, he can be promoted; if public, he cannot, unless, when he enters religion, dispensation is granted to him.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Geneviève.

From the tenor of your letters we have perceived that a certain man, exhausted by a long illness, believing the insane counsel of women who practiced sorcery, in order that he might be healed did injury to the sacrament of baptism through repetition. But a certain youth of good character, as it appears—an acolyte and the natural brother of him in whom baptism is asserted to have been repeated—stood by at this sacrilege, furnished ministry in responding to the priest who baptized, and became a cooperator in the impious deed. Therefore, because your prudence led you to consult us as to how the acolyte ought to be punished or purged, whom also his younger age and the intention of his brother's bodily salvation appear to excuse somewhat, by the present letters we respond to your discretion that, although he does not appear to deserve to be struck with a severe penalty, nevertheless, if what is proposed is public, he will not be able to be promoted to higher orders unless he shall have wished to pass to religion, so that by favor of the religious state dispensation may be granted to him. But if it is hidden, he can be promoted and expiate his excess with worthy fruits of penance.

> Si crimen acolythi, qui rebaptizanti praebuit ministerium, est occultum, promoveri potest; si publicum, non, nisi cum eo religionem intrante dispensetur.
>
> Idem Abbati S. Genovefae.
>
> Ex literarum tuarum tenore perpendimus, quod quidam, aegritudine longa confectus, insano sortilegarum mulierum credens consilio, ut sanaretur, per iterationem fecit iniuriam baptismatis sacramento. Adstitit autem huic sacrilegio adolescens quidam bonae, ut videtur, indolis, acolythus, frater carnalis illius, in quo baptismus asseritur iteratus, et ministerium in respondendo exhibuit presbytero baptizanti, et cooperator exstitit rei nefandae. Quia ergo tua nos duxit prudentia consulendos, qualiter puniri debeat vel purgari acolythus, quem etiam minor aetas et intentio fraternae salutis corporeae excusare videtur aliquantulum, discretioni tuae praesentibus literis respondemus, quod, quamvis multum non videatur poena plectendus, ad superiores tamen ordines promoveri, si publicum est quod proponitur, non valebit, nisi ad religionem transire voluerit, ut favore religionis ipsius circa eum valeat dispensari. Si vero occultum est, promoveri poterit, et excessum suum dignis poenitentiae fructibus expiare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One defamed concerning apostasy is compelled to purge himself.

Innocent III.

To your fraternity. (And below: [(cf. c. 3, On Pilgrim Clerics, I. 22.) Others also, whom public report asserts to be monks or canons regular, proceeding in secular dress, falsely represent themselves as secular men though they are monks. Concerning them, since it cannot be proved that they professed the religious life, you sought an apostolic response whether they ought to be sent back to the regions on this side of the sea and, by letters of the bishops and abbots of those monasteries in which they are said to have assumed the regular habit, demonstrate that they are not monks or canons regular, or rather ought to be tolerated in secular dress. But we, etc. (cf. c. 3, On Pilgrim Clerics, I. 22.)] Concerning the second article however, we have considered that response should be made to your inquiry that clerics who are defamed of the crime of apostasy—namely, those who cast aside the clerical habit—are not to be tolerated in secular dress, but are to be constrained by ecclesiastical severity until, when proof is lacking, they take care to furnish canonical purgation to abolish the infamy. [You asked, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's on the second day before the Kalends of February, in the ninth year, 1207.]

> Infamatus de apostasia compellitur se purgare.
>
> Innocentius III. Tuae fraternitati (Et infra: [(cf. c. 3. de cler. per. I. 22.) *Alii quoque, quos fama publica monachos asserit vel canonicos regulares, in saeculari habitu incedentes se saeculares monachos mentiuntur, de quibus, quum probari non possit, quod vitam religiosam sint professi, responsum apostolicum expetisti, utrum ad partes remitti debeant cismarinas, et episcoporum illorum et abbatum monasteriorum illorum, in quibus dicuntur regularem habitum assumpsisse, literis doceant, se non esse monachos vel canonicos regulares, vel debeant potius in saeculari habitu tolerari. Nos autem etc. *(cf. c. 3. de cler. peregr. I. 22.)] Super secundo vero articulo inquisitioni tuae duximus respondendum, quod clerici, qui sunt de apostasiae crimine infamati, qui videlicet abiecerunt habitum clericalem, non sunt in saeculari habitu tolerandi, sed per districtionem ecclesiasticam coercendi, donec deficiente probatione, ad infamiam abolendam purgationem canonicam curaverint exhibere. [*Quaesivisti etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. II. Kal. Febr. Ao. IX. *1207.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Baptized persons are compelled to abandon the rites of another sect or faith.

The same, in the general council.

Certain persons, as we have learned, who voluntarily approached the water of sacred baptism do not wholly put off the old man so that they may be more perfectly clothed with the new, since, retaining remnants of their former rite, they confound the comeliness of the Christian religion by such a mingling. But since cursed is the man who enters the land by two ways, and one ought not to be clothed in a garment woven of linen and wool, we establish that an observance of the old rite of this kind is to be restrained in every way by the prelates of churches, so that those whom the choice of free will offered to the Christian religion may be preserved in its observance by the necessity of saving compulsion, since it is a lesser evil not to know the way of the Lord than, after knowing it, to turn back.

Baptizati alterius sectae vel fidei ritus dimittere compelluntur.

Idem in concilio generali. Quidam, sicut accepimus, qui ad sacri undam baptismatis voluntarii accesserunt, veterem hominem omnino non exuunt, ut novo perfectius induantur, quum, prioris ritus reliquias retinentes, Christianae religionis decorem tali commixtione confundant. Quum autem maledictus sit homo, qui terram duabus viis ingreditur, et indui veste non debeat lino lanaque contexta: statuimus, ut per praelatos ecclesiarum talis observantia veteris ritus omnimode compescatur, ut, quos Christianae religioni liberae voluntatis arbitrium obtulit, salutiferae coactionis necessitas in eius observatione conservet; quum minus malum exsistat viam Domini non agnoscere, quam post agnitam retroire.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Apostates can be imprisoned and afflicted so that they reassume the habit.

Honorius III, to the Archbishop of Tours.

Your fraternity sought to be instructed by us what is to be done concerning apostates when those who can in no way be induced by threats or blandishments to reassume the cast-off monastic habit are detained in custody. To this we respond briefly to you that, if you wish, you will be able to imprison such persons under severe custody, so that a miserable life alone is preserved for them, until they come to their senses from the wickedness of their presumption. [Given at Rome on the second day before the Nones of May, 1218.]

Apostatae incarcerari et affligi possunt, ut habitum reassumant.

Honorius III. Archiepiscopo Turonensi. A nobis expetiit tua fraternitas edoceri, quid de apostatis sit agendum, quum in custodia detinentur, qui minis vel blanditiis nullatenus possunt induci, ut abiectum monachalem habitum reassumant. Ad quod tibi breviter respondemus, quod tales, si volueris, poteris sub gravi custodia carcerare, ita, quod solummodo vita sibi misera reservetur, donec a suae praesumptionis nequitia resipiscant. [Dat. Romae II. Non. Mai. 1218.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A monk ordained while in apostasy cannot minister in the order received without a dispensation of the Pope.

The same, to the Archbishop of Lyon.

We respond briefly to your consultation that a monk receiving any sacred order while in apostasy, however much he shall have been reconciled to his abbot and received penance, nevertheless cannot minister in the order thus received without a dispensation of the Roman Pontiff. To the inquiry, etc. (cf. c. 7, On the Use and Authority of the Pallium, I. 8.) [Given at Rieti on the fourth (third) day before the Ides of August, 1225.]

Monachus, in apostasia ordinatus, non potest sine dispensatione Papae in suscepto ordine ministrare.

Idem Archiepiscopo Lugdunensi. Consultationi tuae breviter respondemus, quod monachus, aliquem sacrum ordinem in apostasia recipiens, quantumlibet suo fuerit reconciliatus abbati, et receperit poenitentiam, absque tamen dispensatione Romani Pontificis ministrare non poterit in ordine, sic suscepto. Inquisitioni etc. (cf. c. 7. de usu et auct. pall. I. 8.) [*Dat. Reate IV. *(III.) Id. Aug. 1225.]

Title X: On Those Who Killed Their Children

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A woman who deliberately kills her son must do penance perpetually in a monastery; if, however, concern is felt about her incontinence, permission to marry is granted to her, or at least is not denied.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Tournai.

M., the woman bearing the present letters, coming to us, showed us with a tearful confession that, when she had begotten a son by a certain man, and he had often reproached her with a swollen countenance that the son was not his, she, led by the heat of anger and fury of mind, killed that same son. When this was discovered, the Count of Flanders compelled her to abjure the whole land for as long as seven years, unless she should remain by our permission. And when she had presented herself before us and had stated to us by her assertion that she had taken the cross, intending to set out for Jerusalem, we, recalling her from the journey to Jerusalem because in those parts her presence could not be useful but harmful, decided that she should be sent back to your fraternity, and by the authority of the present letters We command that you laboriously induce that woman to pass into some monastery of your episcopate, in which she may lament her sins in perpetual penance. But if, because the weakness of the flesh resists, she is unwilling to be induced to this, you are to grant her permission to marry in the Lord, because it appears safer to us that she marry in the Lord and admit one man alone than dishonorably admit many.

DE HIS, QUI FILIOS OCCIDERUNT.

Mulier, occidens sponte filium, debet perpetuo in monasterio poenitere; si tamen timetur de incontinentia, datur vel saltem non denegatur sibi licentia nubendi. Alexander III. Tornacensi Episcopo.

Veniens ad nos M. mulier latrix praesentium lacrimabili nobis confessione monstravit, quod, quum de quodam filium genuisset, et ille sibi saepe turgido vultu improperasset, quod filius eius non esset, ipsa, iracundiae calore et furore animi ducta, eundum filium interfecit. Quo comperto comes Flandrensis eam totam terram usque ad septennium abiurare coegit, nisi de nostra licentia remaneret. Quumque se nostro adspectui praesentasset, et, quod crucem suscepisset Hierosolymam profectura, nobis assertione sua proposuisset: nos eam, quia in partibus illis praesentia sua non posset esse utilis, sed damnosa, ab Hierosolymitano itinere revocantes, ipsam fraternitati tuae duximus remittendam, praesentium tibi auctoritate Mandamus, quatenus eam mulierem laboriosius inducere, ut ad aliquod monasterium tui episcopatus transeat, in quo peccata sua perpetua poenitentia deploret. Si autem repugnante carnis fragilitate ad hoc induci noluerit, ei licentiam in Domino nubendi tribuas, quia tutius nobis videtur, ut in Domino nubat et uni soli, quam inhoneste multos admittat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A woman who kills her child must not on this account be separated from her husband; but another penance is to be imposed upon her.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Paris.

We have understood from your letters that, when M., the woman bearing the present letters, had a little daughter, being inflamed by diabolical fury, at length, at the suggestion of him who rejoices in the destruction of the faithful, she slaughtered her with a lethal wound, on account of which the lord of the land compelled her husband and her to abjure the land. But because you have informed us that she has other children, wherefore dispensation should be made concerning her exile, we, having complete confidence in your discretion, have decided that she should be committed to your prudence, and by apostolic writings command that you make such provision in this matter that she may pay the penalty for her crime, that through your providence counsel may be taken in the Lord for her salvation and that of her children, and that, notwithstanding the alleged oath which the said lord is alleged to have extorted from her husband, you restore her, as you shall see to be expedient, to the same husband [of hers] and to her possessions, so that she may govern her children freely and peacefully.

Mulier, occidens filium, propter hoc a viro separari non debet; sed alia poenitentia sibi imponitur.

Lucius III. Parisiensi Episcopo.

Intelleximus ex literis tuis, quod, quum M. mulier latrix praesentium filiam parvam haberet, furore accensa diabolico tandem ipsam, suggerente eo, qui de fidelium perditione laetatur, letali vulnere iugulavit, propter quod dominus terrae maritum eius et ipsam compulit abiurare. Quia vero illam alios habere filios intimasti, unde circa ipsius exsilium debeat dispensari: nos, de discretione tua plenam fiduciam obtinentes, eam tuae duximus prudentiae remittendam, per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus ita super hoc provideas, quod sui sceleris poenam luat, et saluti eius ac filiorum ipsius per tuam providentiam in Domino consulatur, et, non obstante proposito iuramento, quod a viro dictus dominus proponitur extorsisse, eam, sicut expedire videris, eidem viro [suo] et rebus suis restituas ita, quod filios suos libere possit et pacifice gubernare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It is summarized by itself, laying down the penance of parents beside whom children are found crushed.

The same.

Concerning infants who are found dead with their father and mother, and it is not apparent whether the infant was crushed by the father or by the mother, or suffocated, or died by his own death, the parents ought not to be secure on that account, nor indeed without punishment; nevertheless, consideration ought to be given to age, where not will but the event was the cause of death. But if it is not hidden from them that they themselves are the killers, they ought to know that they have gravely transgressed, as is proved by the Council of Ancyra. Certain persons, moreover, judge that a penance of three years ought to be imposed, one of which they are to complete on bread and water.

> Se summat, ponens poenitentiam parentum, circa quos pueri reperiuntur oppressi. Idem.
>
> De infantibus autem, qui mortui reperiuntur cum patre et matre, et non apparet, utrum a patre, vel a matre oppressus sit ipse, vel suffocatus, vel propria morte defunctus, non debent inde securi esse parentes, nec etiam sine poena; sed tamen consideratio debet esse aetatis, ubi non voluntas, sed eventus mortis causa fuerit. Si autem eos non latet, ipsos interfectores esse, scire debent, se graviter deliquisse, quod Ancyritano concilio probatur. Quidam autem poenitentiam trium annorum iudicant esse debere, quorum unum peragant in pane et aqua.

Title XI: On Exposed Infants and the Sick

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: An infant exposed by his father, or by another with the father consenting or ratifying it, is by that very fact freed from paternal power. The same applies to a slave and a freedman, who for the aforesaid cause are freed from their master's power. And the same rule of law applies to the aforesaid sick persons of whatever age who are thus exposed, or if sustenance is denied to them; nevertheless, those who furnish the aforesaid persons with sustenance acquire no right in them.

Gregory IX.

If an infant has been exposed by his father, or by another while the father knew of it or ratified it, the duty of affection having been cast aside, he is by that very fact freed from paternal power. For also in this case a freedman is rescued into freeborn status, and a slave into freedom; and the same is to be said concerning the aforesaid sick persons of whatever age, if they have been exposed, or if it should happen that sustenance is impiously denied to any one of them. Certainly, those who take them in cannot on this account claim any right in their persons.

> DE INFANTIBUS ET LANGUIDIS EXPOSITIS.
>
> Infans, expositus a patre vel alio, eo consentiente vel ratum habente, hoc ipso a patris potestate liberatur. Idem in servo et liberto, qui ob praedictam causam liberantur a dominica potestate. Et idem iuris est in praedictis languidis cuiuscunque aetatis sic expositis, vel si eis alimenta denegantur; hi tamen, quae praedictis alimenta praestiterint, nullum ius in eis acquirunt.
>
> Gregorius IX. Si a patre, sive ab alio, sciente ipso aut ratum habente, relegato pietatis officio infans expositus exstitit: hoc ipso a potestate fuit patria liberatus. Nam et hoc casu in ingenuitatem libertus, et servus in libertatem eripitur, quod et de praedictis cuiuscunque aetatis languidis, si expositi fuerint, vel si alicui eorum alimenta impie denegari contigerit, est dicendum. Sane, qui hos suscipiunt, non possunt propter hoc in eorum personis ius aliquod vendicare.

Title XII: On Voluntary or Accidental Homicide

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: An incorrigible killer must be deposed and delivered to the secular court, so that he may die.

In Exodus.

If anyone shall deliberately kill his neighbor and by ambush, you shall tear him away from my altar, so that he may die.

> DE HOMICIDIO VOLUNTARIO VEL CASUALI.
>
> Homicida incorrigibilis debet deponi, et tradi curiae saeculari, ut moriatur.
>
> In Exodo.
>
> Si quis per industriam occiderit proximum suum et per insidias, ab altari meo evelles eum, ut moriatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It lays down a penance for one who kills a robber when he could have freed himself otherwise; but if he could not free himself otherwise, he is not bound to do penance, except by way of precaution.

From the Roman Penitential.

You killed a thief or robber when he could have been apprehended without killing, and nevertheless you killed him. Because he was created in the image of God, and was baptized in his name and redeemed by his blood, for forty days you shall not enter the church, and, clothed in a woolen garment, you shall abstain for the aforesaid days from foods and drinks that are forbidden, and from the marriage-bed, the sword, and from riding. On the third and fifth weekdays and on the Sabbath, use some kind of pulses or vegetables, and fruit, and little fish with moderate beer, and do so temperately. But if without contemplation of hatred, in freeing yourself and your possessions, you killed members of the devil of this kind, I speak according to indulgence: on account of the image of God, if you wish to fast to some extent, it is good for you, and give alms abundantly. If a priest has done the same things, he is not to be deposed; nevertheless, for as long as he lives, he is to do penance.

> Ponit poenitentiam occidentis latronem, quum se poterat aliter liberare; si vero aliter liberare se non poterat, non tenetur agere poenitentiam, nisi ad cautelam.
>
> Ex poenitentiali Romano.
>
> Interfecisti furem aut latronem, ubi comprehendi poterat absque occisione, et tamen interfecisti; quia ad imaginem Dei creatus est, et in nomine eius baptizatus et sanguine eius redemptus est, per XL. dies non intres in ecclesiam, et, lanea veste indutus, ab escis et potibus, qui interdicti sunt, et a toro, a gladio et ab equitatu, illos supra dictos dies te abstineas. In tertia autem et quinta feria et in sabbato aliquo genere leguminum, vel oleribus, et pomis, et parvis pisciculis cum mediocri cerevisia utere et temperate. Si autem sine odii meditatione te tuaque liberando huiusmodi diaboli membra interfecisti: secundum indulgentiam dico, propter imaginem Dei, si aliquid ieiunare volueris, bonum est tibi, et eleemosynam fac largiter. Si presbyter eadem fecerit, non deponatur; tamen, quamdiu vivit, poenitentiam agat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A thief by day is not killed without fault, but a thief by night is.

Augustine, on Exodus.

"If [however] a thief shall be found breaking in, and shall have been struck and died, homicide is not to be imputed to the one who struck him. But if the sun should rise upon him, he shall be guilty [and shall die by death]." Therefore it is understood [then] that homicide does not pertain to him if a nocturnal thief is killed; but if he was a thief by day, that it does pertain to homicide. For this is what he says: "if the sun should rise upon him, etc.," because he could discern that the man had come to steal, not to kill, and therefore he ought not to be killed. This is also found in the ancient secular laws, than which this law is nevertheless more ancient: namely, that a nocturnal thief may be killed with impunity in any manner, but a thief by day only if he has defended himself [with] a weapon. For then he is more than a thief.

> Non occiditur fur diurnus sine culpa, sed nocturnus sic.
>
> Augustinus super Exodo.
>
> "Si [autem] perfodiens inventus fuerit fur, et percussus mortuus fuerit, non est illi homicidium imputandum. Si autem oriatur sol super eum: reus erit, [et morte morietur.]" Intelligitur ergo, [tum] non pertinere ad eum homicidium, si fur nocturnus occidatur; si autem diurnus fuerit, ad homicidium pertinere. Hoc est enim, quod ait: "si oriatur sol super eum, etc," quia poterat discernere, quod ad furandum, non ad occidendum venisset, et ideo non debet occidi. Hoc etiam in antiquis legibus saecularibus, quibus ista tamen est antiquior, invenitur, impune scilicet occidi nocturnum furem quoquo modo, diurnum autem, si se [cum] telo defenderit. Iam enim plus est quam fur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: What is unlawful does not fall under a general promise or permission, even one made under oath.

Jerome.

With an oath Herod promised to give the dancing girl whatever she should ask from him. If he should say that he had acted on account of his oath, would he have done it or not if she had asked for the destruction of his father or mother? What, therefore, he would have repudiated in his own kin he ought to have scorned [also] in the case of a prophet.

> Sub generali pollicitatione seu permissione, etiam iurata, non venit illicitum.
>
> Hieronymus.
>
> Cum iuramento pollicitus est Herodes saltatrici dare quodcunque postulasset ab eo; si ob iusiurandum fecisse se dicat, si patris matrisve interitum postulasset, facturus esset, an non? Quod ergo in suis repudiaturus fuit, contemnere debuit [et] in propheta.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who makes or gives sorceries or poisons causing sterility is a killer.

From the Council of Worms.

If anyone, for the sake of satisfying lust or in contemplation of hatred, shall make something for a man or woman, or give something to drink, so that the person cannot beget or conceive, or so that offspring cannot be born, let him be held as a killer.

> Homicida est, qui facit vel dat sortilegia, vel venena sterilitatis.
>
> Ex concilio Guarmaciensi. Si aliquis causa explendae libidinis vel odii meditatione homini aut mulieri aliquid fecerit, vel ad potandum dederit, ut non possit generare, aut concipere, vel nasci soboles, ut homicida teneatur.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: In imposing penance, a judge must attend to the circumstances by which the offense is increased or diminished. It says this as far as § But Those. — § 1. One who accompanies a killer with the intention of killing, although he does not lay hands upon the victim, is held to almost the same punishment as the killer if death nevertheless followed from his action. It says this as far as § Those Also. Abbas Siculus. — § 2. One who accompanies a killer only with the intention of preventing him from being hindered is held to a somewhat lesser punishment. It says this as far as § But Those Who. — § 3. One who incites another to homicide is punished more mildly than the killer; it is otherwise, however, if he incited him to a specific homicide. For, when that homicide follows, he is held as a killer. It says this as far as § These Too. — § 4. Those who guard the baggage of the killers, knowing that they are assassins, are not immune from the punishment for homicide. It says this as far as § Those, Moreover. Abbas. — § 5. One who seizes the goods of the person killed is not on this account held for homicide; and it is not sufficient for the one who seized them that he distribute them to the poor when he can restore them to those whose property they are established to have been. It says this as far as § To Those, Furthermore. Abbas. — § 6. Those who participate with the killers in excommunication are punished differently according to the manner of participation. It says this as far as § The Clerics. Abbas. — § 7. In this §, as far as the end, the penance of clerics who furnished assistance, counsel, or favor to the aforesaid death is laid down. It says this. Abbas Siculus.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Exeter.

Just as it is fitting and consonant with every principle of reason that grave and difficult questions be referred to the examination of the Apostolic See, so also it falls upon us by the ministry of the solicitude we have undertaken to resolve those same questions, as the Lord shall grant us, and to respond to each person seeking counsel from us, so that through the providence of the Roman Church, which by the Lord's ordering holds primacy everywhere on earth, questions may be resolved and ambiguity in these matters removed from the hearts of each. Although, moreover, we do not doubt that concerning the questions which your discretion directed to us to be resolved you are provident and circumspect, we are nevertheless constrained by the ministry of servitude to respond to you concerning them according to our discretion and providence. Indeed, since you are a man learned and wise and discreet and very much practiced in these matters, you know more fully that, in the offenses of individuals, not only the quantity and quality of the offense, but also the age, knowledge, and sex and condition of the offender must be attended to, and that penance must be imposed upon each person not only according to the aforesaid matters but also according to the place and time in which the offense is committed, since, as you yourself are not ignorant, the same offense is to be punished more in one person than in another.

§ 1. But those who confess that, with the intention of killing, striking, or capturing that holy and venerable man, formerly Archbishop of Canterbury, they came without laying hands upon him, if his death had followed from that capture, would have to be punished by an equal or nearly equal penance.

§ 2. And those also who came not in order to strike but to render assistance to the assailants if perhaps they should be hindered by the violence of others ought to be chastised with a somewhat lesser punishment, because, since it is written, "He who could have freed a man from death and did not free him killed him," it is established that [they] are not immune from the guilt of homicide who came to render assistance to the killers against others; nor is he free from the scruple of a secret association who, [although he can,] ceases to oppose a manifest crime.

§ 3. But those who assert that they inflamed the king's mind to hatred, from which perhaps the homicide followed, are to be punished [sufficiently] harshly and severely, but not so severely, unless perhaps by their suggestions they provoked the king himself to that homicide.

§ 4. These too are not free from fault, nor ought they to be immune from punishment, who, although they were ignorant of that wicked plot, nevertheless furnished service to those whom they knew to be assassins, or in guarding their baggage.

§ 5. Those, moreover, who are said to have seized the spoils of that holy man and his companions after his death, if they committed nothing else in so great a crime, we judge to be immune from the punishment for his death; but they are bound to restore in full the things they seized to those to whom they belonged, if they have the means from which they can return them. And a moderate penance is nevertheless to be imposed upon them for this, because, although they admit that they distributed to the poor certain of the things that they seized, they nevertheless ought not to have distributed to the poor the property of others when they could have restored it to those to whom it belonged.

§ 6. Furthermore, upon those who know themselves to be guilty solely by participation with excommunicated persons, a penance is to be imposed according to this: after consideration of the length of time for which they persisted in that wickedness, and after inquiry also whether they knowingly or unknowingly communicated with them through fear or affection.

§ 7. But we judge that the clerics who are established to have been present under arms at so great a crime, and also those clerics who gave the counsel that [that same] holy man should be captured, are to be deposed perpetually not only from the ministry of the altar, but also in such a manner that at no time whatsoever are [they] to read lessons in churches or sing responsories separately in the choir; rather, in psalms before God they are to strive to obtain pardon for what was committed. Furthermore, those clerics themselves are to be confined in the strict cloister of monks or canons regular, if this can be done, and indeed in such a manner that for as long as seven or five years they ought to be barred from entry into churches. [Concerning that matter, however, etc.]

> In poenitentia imponenda iudex debet attendere circumstantias, ex quibus augetur vel minuitur delictum. Hoc dicit usque ad § Illi autem. - § 1. Socians homicidam animo occidendi, licet non apponat manum, si tamen ex sua causa mors secuta est, tenetur fere pari poena cum homicida. Hoc dicit usque ad § Illi etiam. Abbas Sic. - § 2. Qui sociat homicidam tantum animo prohibendi ne impediatur, tenetur paulo minori poena. H. d. usque ad § Qui vero. - § 3. Incitans alium ad homicidium, mitius punitur quam homicida, secus autem, si incitavit ad certum homicidium. Nam, eo secuto, tenetur ut homicida. H. d. usque ad § Hi quoque. - § 4. Custodientes sarcinas occidentium, scientes, eos esse sicarios, non sunt immunes a poena homicidii. H. d. usque ad § Eos insuper. Abbas - § 5. Occupans bona occisi, non per hoc tenetur de homicidio, et non sufficit occupanti, quod eroget illa pauperibus, quum poterit restituere eis, quorum constat fuisse. H. d. usque ad § Illis praeterea. Abbas - § 6. Participantes interfectoribus in excommunicatione, diversimode puniuntur iuxta modum participationis. H. d. usque ad § Clericos. Abbas. - § 7. In isto § usque ad fin. ponitur poenitentia clericorum, praestantium praedictae morti auxilium, consilium vel favorem. Hoc dicit. Abbas Siculus.

Alexander III. Exoniensi Episcopo.

Sicut dignum est et omni rationi consentaneum, graves et difficiles quaestiones ad examen apostolicae sedis deferri, ita etiam nobis ex ministerio susceptae sollicitudinis imminet, easdem quaestiones, prout nobis Dominus dederit, solvere, et singulis a nobis consilium postulantibus respondere, ut providentia Romanae ecclesiae, quae ubique terrarum obtinet Domino disponente principatum, quaestiones solvantur, et removeatur in his ambiguitas de cordibus singulorum. Licet autem super quaestionibus, quas nobis tua discretio solvendas direxit, te non dubitemus providum et circumspectum exsistere: cogimur tamen ex servitutis ministerio iuxta discretionem et providentiam nostram tibi exinde respondere. Sane, quum vir literatus et sapiens et discretus et in his plurimum exercitatus exsistas, plenius nosti, quod in excessibus singulorum non solum quantitas et qualitas delicti, sed aetas, scientia, et sexus atque conditio delinquentis sunt attendenda, et non solum secundum praedicta, sed secundum locum et tempus, quo delictum committitur, unicuique poenitentia debet indici, quum, sicut tu ipse non ignoras, idem excessus magis sit in uno quam in alio puniendus. § 1. Illi autem, qui animo occidendi, feriendi aut capiendi illum sanctum et reverendum virum quondam Cantuariensem archiepiscopum citra manuum iniectionem se fatentur venisse, si de illa captione mors eius secuta fuisset, pari poenitentia, vel fere pari exsisterent puniendi. § 2. Et Illi etiam, qui non, ut ferirent, sed, ut percussoribus opem ferrent, si forte per aliorum violentiam impedirentur, paulo minori debent poena mulctari, quia, quum scriptum sit: "qui potuit hominem liberare a morte, et non liberavit, eum occidit," constat [ipsos] ab homicidii reatu immunes non esse, qui occisoribus opem contra alios praestare venerunt, nec caret scrupulo societatis occultae, qui, [quum possit,] manifesto facinori desinit obviare. § 3. Qui vero se asserunt animum regis inflammasse ad odium, unde forte homicidium fuit secutum, [satis] dure et aspere, sed non ita severe sunt puniendi, nisi forte regem ipsum ad illud homicidium suis suggestionibus provocassent. § 4. Hi quoque non sunt a culpa liberi, nec a poena debent esse immunes, qui, licet fuerint illius iniquae machinationis ignari, tamen eis, quos sicarios esse sciebant, vel in sarcinis custodiendis ministerium praebuerunt. § 5. Eos insuper, qui dicuntur illius sancti viri et suorum post mortem eius spolia occupasse, si nihil aliud in tanto facinore commiserunt, a poena mortis eius arbitramur esse immunes; sed, quae occuparunt, eis, quorum fuerunt, tenentur in integrum restituere, si habent in facultatibus, unde possint ea reddere. Et ipsis ex hoc tamen moderata est poenitentia iniungenda, quia, licet quaedam ex his, quae occupaverunt, fateantur se pauperibus erogasse, non tamen aliena, quum ipsa potuissent eis, quorum fuerint, restituere, debuerunt pauperibus erogare. § 6. Illis praeterea, qui sola excommunicatorum participatione se reos esse cognoscunt, considerata temporis mora, quo in eadem nequitia perdurarunt, et inquisito etiam, si eis timore vel affectione communicaverint scienter vel ignoranter, secundum hoc est poenitentia indicenda. § 7. Clericos autem, quos constat armatos interfuisse tanto facinori, et illos etiam clericos, qui consilium illud dederunt, ut [idem] sanctus vir caperetur, perpetuo non solum ab altaris ministerio deponendos esse censemus, sed ita etiam, quod in ecclesiis nullo unquam tempore [ipsi] lectiones legant, vel responsoria in choro separatim cantent; sed in psalmis apud Deum de commisso satagant veniam impetrare. Insuper autem clerici ipsi in districto claustro monachorum vel canonicorum regularium, si fieri potest, sunt recludendi, ita quidem, quod usque ad septennium vel quinquennium debeant ab ecclesiarum introitu coerceri. [Super eo vero etc.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is imputed to one who was engaged in a lawful act if he did not exercise the diligence that he ought to have exercised.

The same.

But a priest [another priest] who struck a certain boy on the head and wounded him for the purpose of discipline, when the boy died after a few days, as you assert, you ought both to remove perpetually from every ministry of the altar and to depose from the priestly office, if the boy died from that very blow, or contracted another illness from it by which he is known to have died.

> Homicidium casuale imputatur ei, qui dabat operam rei licitae, si non adhibuit diligentiam, quam debuit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Presbyterum autem [alium,] qui quendam puerum intuitu disciplinae percussit in capite et vulneravit, quum post paucos dies, sicut asseris, exspirasset, tam ab omni altaris ministerio debes perpetuo removere, quam ab officio sacerdotali deponere, si ex ipsa percussione interiit, vel aliam infirmitatem incurrerit, de qua noscitur exspirasse.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is imputed to one who was engaged in an unlawful act, or even in a lawful act, according to another interpretation, if he did not exercise all the diligence that he ought to have exercised.

The same, to the Archbishop of Cosenza.

It was contained in your letters that, when the deacon bearing the present letters and certain other clerics were returning from the church's vineyards after the work was finished, for the sake of lightening their labor they imitated a certain game of travelers, throwing their staffs a long distance. For they endeavored to throw straight ahead and to strike one another's staff. The condition of this game, as they assert, is customarily that the one who struck another's staff, as if the victor, would use the other man, whose staff was struck, as a horse; but the aforesaid clerics, not using the license to ride, were content with the throwing alone, so that, while they ran more briskly to their staffs, they would not feel the labor of the journey. But a certain layman, as the aforesaid deacon asserts, after he had struck that deacon's staff, incautiously leapt upon him to ride him, and thus received from the sickle with which that deacon was girded a mortal wound, from which he died after eight days. We therefore command that you not permit that deacon, without the permission of the Roman Pontiff, to ascend to a higher grade or ever to minister in the office of the diaconate, but that you allow him by dispensation to minister in the office of the subdiaconate.

> Homicidium casuale imputatur ei, qui dabat operam rei illicitae vel etiam licitae, secundum alium intellectum, si non adhibuit omnem diligentiam, quam debuit.
>
> Idem Cusentinensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Continebatur in literis tuis, quod, quum diaconus, praesentium lator, et quidam alii clerici a vineis ecclesiae opere consummato redirent, leviandi laboris gratia quendam ludum imitati sunt viatorum, proiicientes baculos suos in longum; studebant enim iacere in directum, et alter alterius fustem ferire. Cuius ludi, sicut asserunt, solet esse conditio, ut, qui alterius baculum percuteret, quasi victor, pro equo alio, cuius baculus percussus est, uteretur; sed praefati clerici, equitandi licentia non utentes, sola erant iactione contenti, ut, dum alacrius ad baculos suos concurrerent, laborem itineris non sentirent. Quidam autem laicus, sicut praedictus diaconus asserit, dum baculum eiusdem diaconi percussisset, incautus in eum equitaturus insiliit, et sic a falce illius diaconi, qua erat accinctus, mortale vulnus accepit, de quo post dies octo exspiravit. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus eundem diaconum sine licentia Romani Pontificis ad superiorem gradum non adscendere, vel in diaconatus officio nullo unquam tempore ministrare permittas, sed eum dispensative ministrare in subdiaconatus officio patiaris.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is not imputed to one who was not at fault.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

P., the cleric bearing the present letters, proposed to us by word of mouth that, when one day he happened to be playing with a certain cleric, it occurred that the latter threw him to the ground, and his knife, which he had at his side, entered the other man, who died wounded by the accidental event. We therefore command that, when the truth of the matter has been ascertained, if the matter so occurred and no other just cause impedes, you freely permit the aforesaid P. to be promoted to sacred orders.

Homicidium casuale non imputatur ei, qui non fuit in culpa.

Idem Exoniensi Episcopo.

Lator praesentium P. clericus nobis viva voce proposuit, quod, quum quadam die casu cum quodam clerico luderet, contigit, quod ille proiecit istum ad terram, cuius cultellus, quem ad latus suum habebat, in alterum incidit, et fortuito casu occubuit vulneratus. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate comperta, si ita res se habuit, et alia iusta causa non impedit, praedictum P. libere permittas ad sacros ordines promoveri.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One from whose unlawful conduct homicide follows is rendered irregular.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Benedict of Vebia.

We received your letters, through which we learned that, while the bearer of the present letters remained with another brother in the custody of a certain house, certain robbers entering upon them at night presumed shamefully to afflict their persons and strip them of their own garments. Rising up against them after recovering their strength, these brothers bound them and wished to detain them until notice could be brought to the chapter. But when this man, intending to carry the matter to your hearing, had left them bound in the custody of his brother, and the thieves were striving to free themselves, the brother killed them lest he himself be killed by them. But because it was more expedient to leave even the cloak after the tunic and to sustain the loss of possessions than to become so violently inflamed against others for the preservation of cheap and transitory things, let this man humbly abstain from the ministry of the altar, and let each strive to expiate his sin, by such means as he can, according to your judgment. For it is established that the men were killed through the action of both brothers, contrary to regular gentleness and ecclesiastical discipline.

Is, ex cuius opera illicita sequitur homicidium, irregularis efficitur.

Idem abbati S. Benedicti de Vebia.

Suscepimus literas tuas, per quas cognovimus, quod, quum lator praesentium in custodia cuiusdam domus cum altero fratre maneret, ingredientes de nocte quidam latrones ad eos, turpiter ipsos in personis affligere, et denudare vestimentis propriis praesumpserunt. In quos isti resumptis viribus insurgentes, ligaverunt illos, et detinere usque ad notitiam capituli voluerunt. Quum autem iste, rem ad tuam audientiam perlaturus, ligatos eos in fratris sui custodia dimisisset, et fures se solvere niterentur, frater illos, ne ipse ab eis interimeretur, occidit. Verum quoniam expediebat potius post tunicam etiam relinquere pallium, et rerum sustinere iacturam, quam pro conservandis vilibus rebus et transitoriis tam acriter in alios exardescere: abstineat iste humiliter ab altaris ministerio, et uterque peccatum suum, quibus modis ad arbitrium tuum potuerit, studeat expiare. Constat enim, eos contra regularem mansuetudinem et ecclesiasticam disciplinam ex utriusque ope interemptos.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: One who gives cause for a homicide is irregular.

The same, to the Bishop of Lucca.

For the rest, you should know that the deacon whom you assert to be learned and endowed with uprightness, who appears to have given cause for a homicide, as we perceive from the tenor of your letters, does not appear fit to be promoted to the priesthood.

Dans causam homicidio irregularis est.

Idem Lucensi Episcopo.

De cetero noveris, quod diaconus, quem literatum et honestate praeditum asseris, qui homicidio causam dedisse videtur, sicut ex tenore literarum tuarum perpendimus, non videtur ad sacerdotium promovendus.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is imputed to one who was engaged in a lawful act if he did not exercise the diligence that he ought to have exercised.

Clement III.

It came to the hearing of our apostolate [from your part] that, when a certain priest, wishing to correct a member of his household, attempted to beat him with the belt with which he was accustomed to be girded, it occurred that the knife, slipping from the sheath that adhered to the belt, wounded him slightly in the back. But afterward, when the wounded man had lived for some time and had already recovered from the wound, he was struck, as is said, by another, more serious illness, and with a sound mind and due devotion entered upon the way of all flesh. But because it is held doubtful whether he died by reason of the wound, and that priest having been suspended from every office and benefice, you consulted the Apostolic See as to what was to be done by you concerning this matter. Now, therefore, we have decided to respond to your discretion that, since in doubtful matters we ought to choose the safer path, it is fitting for you to enjoin upon the aforesaid priest that henceforth he not minister in sacred orders. Nevertheless, after a suitable penance has been imposed [upon him], you will be able to grant him permission to be content to minister in minor orders. But if it shall lawfully be established to you that the man died of another illness, with your permission he will be able to minister in divine offices as he was accustomed. [Given at the Lateran.]

Homicidium casuale imputatur ei, qui dedit operam rei licitae, si non adhibuit diligentiam, quam debuit.

Clemens III. Ad audientiam apostolatus nostri [ex parte vestra] pervenit, quod, quum quidam presbyter, volens corrigere quendam de familia sua, eo cingulo, quo cingi solebat, ipsum verberare tentaret, contigit, quod cultellus de vagina, quae cingulo adhaerebat, elapsus, eum in dorso aliquantulum vulneravit; postmodum vero, quum ille vulneratus aliquamdiu vixisset, et iam convaluisset a vulnere, alia graviori, ut dicitur, infirmitate percussus, cum sana mente ac devotione debita viam est universae carnis ingressus. Quia vero, utrum occasione vulneris decessisset, dubium habetur: eodem presbytero ab omni officio beneficioque suspenso, quid super hoc vobis esset agendum, apostolicam sedem consuluistis. Nunc itaque vestrae discretioni duximus respondendum, quod, quum in dubiis semitam debeamus eligere tutiorem, vos convenit iniungere presbytero memorato, ut de cetero in sacris ordinibus non ministret; iniuncta tamen [ei] poenitentia congruenti, sibi poteritis concedere, ut in minoribus ordinibus ministrare sit contentus. Si vero vobis legitime constiterit, quod ille ex alia infirmitate obierit, de vestra licentia poterit, sicut erat solitus, divina officia ministrare. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is not imputed to one who was engaged in a lawful act and was not at fault.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Langres.

The beloved son A., a chaplain, appearing in our presence, proposed to us in his confession that, when he was burdened by a certain bodily illness to such an extent that the desire both for food and for sleep appeared to have been taken from him, in order that he might arouse his appetite for eating to some degree, he mounted a horse that he was keeping. Since it did not obey the reins well, but frolicked with its leaps contrary to the rider's will, he, in order to restrain its impetuosity, both pulled forcefully on the bridle and spurred the horse. And when the bridle broke, the horse, left as if to its own will, ran rapidly, and a certain woman, approaching him from the side and carrying a little child, met him. The horse rushed upon her, its rider being thrown far away, and crushed the aforesaid child; and the chaplain himself scarcely escaped the danger of death from the sudden accident, but, at last recovering, did not thereafter presume to celebrate divine offices. Therefore, because the aforesaid matters have not been established to us, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity to inquire more diligently into the truth concerning them, and, if it is so, since the same chaplain perpetrated no homicide either by will or by act, nor was he engaged in an unlawful matter, you are not to prevent him from being able to celebrate divine offices. [Given at the Lateran on the eighth day before the Ides of November, 1200.]

Homicidium casuale non imputatur ei, qui dedit operam rei licitae, nec fuit in culpa.

Innocentius III. Episcopo Lingonensi. Dilectus filius A. capellanus, in nostra praesentia constitutus, sua nobis confessione proposuit, quod, quum quadam corporis molestia gravaretur ita, quod et cibi et somni desiderium raptum videretur ab eo, ut comedendi appetitum aliquantulum excitaret, equum, quem nutriebat, adscendit. Qui quum bene non pareret habenis, sed praeter sessoris arbitrium suis saltibus lasciviret, ipse, ut eius refrenaret impetum, et freno vim intulit, equumque calcaribus stimulavit. Quumque fracto freno equus, quasi proprio arbitrio relictus, curreret festinanter, ei quaedam mulier, veniens ex obliquo et infantulum baiulans, obviavit, in quam equus irruens, procul abiecto sessore, puerum praedictum oppressit, et capellanus ipse ex repentino casu vix mortis periculum evitavit, sed ad ultimum convalescens postmodum divina celebrare non praesumpsit. Ideoque, quia nobis non constitit de praemissis, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus super his inquiras diligentius veritatem, et si est ita, quum idem capellanus nec voluntate nec actu homicidium perpetravit, nec dedit operam illicitae rei, non impedias, quo minus divina possit officia celebrare. [*Dat. Lat. VI. Id. Nov. *1200.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: It is summarized as in the preceding chapter.

The same, to the Bishop of Metz.

We learned from the letters of your fraternity that, when H., the priest bearing the present letters, wished to unload hay from a cart, he threw to the ground a pole resting upon it, when he saw no one around the cart, and, while he was engaged in unloading the hay, a certain man, approaching near him, found a certain boy half alive beside the cart, in whom nothing of an injury could be found except a little bruising on the forehead. We, moreover, asked the same priest whether, before he threw the pole, he had carefully looked around to see whether anyone was near the cart. He asserted that he had looked around diligently, but denied that he had seen anyone. Therefore, sending him back to you, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if the matter so occurred, unless a grave scandal has arisen against that priest, or he labors under so great an ill repute that in the absence of an accuser it is necessary to impose canonical purgation upon him, you freely permit him to exercise the priestly office. [Given at the Lateran on the eighth day before the Kalends of December, in the third year, 1200.]

Summatur ut supr. cap. prox. Idem Metensi Episcopo.

Ex literis tuae fraternitatis accepimus, quod, quum lator praesentium H. presbyter foenum vellet de curru deponere, perticam superius allegatam, quum neminem circa currum videret, proiecit in terram, et, quum foeno insisteret deponendo, quidam, prope ipsum accedens, puerum quendam iuxta currum reperit semivivum, in quo praeter modicum livoris in fronte nihil inveniri potuit laesionis. Nos autem ab eodem quaesivimus sacerdote, si, priusquam iaceret perticam, circumspexisset sollicite, an esset aliquis circa currum; qui, quod diligenter circumspexit, asseruit, sed, quod vidisset aliquem, denegavit. Ad te igitur remittentes eundem, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, nisi contra eundem presbyterum grave scandalum sit exortum, vel tanta laboret infamia, quod deficiente accusatore oporteat eidem canonicam purgationem indici, ipsum libere permittas exsequi officium sacerdotis. [*Dat. Lat. VIII. Kal. Dec. Ao. III. *1200.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: It is likewise summarized as in the chapter Beloved Son above in this same title.

The same, to the Archbishop of Besançon.

We learned from the letters of your fraternity that a certain monk, a boy of your diocese, while assisting in taking down a bell from a bell tower, because a certain piece of timber by accident fell when he moved it, crushed and killed a certain boy in the church beneath the bell tower. Wherefore you humbly asked us what should be done by you concerning this, petitioning that a merciful dispensation be granted to him. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if the monk himself was doing a necessary and useful thing, and in a place through which he did not believe that anyone would pass, or be present there, or even customarily come there, when he is known to have moved the timber, he can suitably, especially in a monastery, be promoted to higher orders. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's on the Nones of April, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> Summatur etiam, ut supr. eod. cap. Dilectus.
>
> Idem Bisuntino Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ex literis tuae fraternitatis accepimus, quod quidam monachus puer tuae dioecesis ad deponendam de campanili campanam subserviens, quia quoddam lignum casu corruit, ipso movente in ecclesia sub campanili quendam puerum oppressit et occidit. Unde a nobis humiliter postulabas, quid tibi esset super hoc faciendum, petens, ut cum ipso misericorditer dispensetur. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si monachus ipse rem necessariam agebat et utilem, et in loco, per quem aliquem transire non crederet, vel ibidem exsistere, vel etiam illuc de consuetudine venire, quando lignum movisse dignoscitur, satis poterit, praesertim in monasterio, ad altiores ordines promoveri. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Non. Apr. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: It is summarized as in the chapter Beloved Son above in this same title.

The same, to the Bishop of Padua.

You informed us through your letters that, when the cleric F. was riding with the archpriest of Saint Fidantius, the horse on which he sat threw both itself and him into the water. Thereupon the cleric struck it heavily with his spurs. But the horse, to use the words of your letters, since it was hard in the mouth, broke into a run contrary to its rider's will, and, poorly obeying the reins, unexpectedly trampled to death a certain woman whom it met. And when we had caused inquiry to be made of the same cleric whether he had previously known the horse's vice, he asserted that he had not known it. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that you inquire more diligently into the truth concerning these matters and, if it is so, by way of greater precaution you impose a suitable penance upon that cleric, upon completion of which you are not to prevent him both from ministering in the orders he has received and from being able to be promoted to higher ones.

> Summatur, ut supr. eod. cap. Dilectus.
>
> Idem episcopo Paduano.
>
> Significasti nobis per literas tuas, quod, quum F. clericus cum archipresbytero sancti Fidantii equitaret, equus, cui insidebat, tam se quam ipsum proiecit in aquam. Unde clericus ipsum graviter calcaribus stimulavit; equus vero, ut literarum tuarum verbis utamur, quum exsistaret bucca durus, praeter voluntatem sessoris ruptus in cursum, et male parens habenis, quandam mulierem, quam obviam habuit, ex improviso pedibus interfecit. Quumque nos ab eodem clerico fecissemus inquiri, utrum equi vitium prius scivisset: illud asseruit se ignorasse. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus inquiras super his diligentius veritatem, et, si ita est, ad maiorem cautelam iniungas eidem clerico poenitentiam competentem, qua peracta non impedias, quo minus et in susceptis ministret ordinibus, et ad maiores valeat promoveri.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A person is not deemed a killer when, despite his prohibition and without his giving cause, a homicide is committed by his blood relatives.

The same.

Peter, a deacon and monk of Saint John of Puna, showed us by his statement that, when he was formerly established in the secular habit and held a certain benefice in the church of Rigelo, the abbot of that church deprived him of the same benefice. His relatives and friends repeatedly entreated the abbot to restore the aforesaid benefice to him; and when the abbot was unwilling to acquiesce in their entreaties, being very angry and agitated, they assembled one night in the deacon's house, and after supper they said that they wished to take vengeance upon the abbot. Although they were expressly forbidden by that deacon to kill the abbot or do anything to him whereby he might incur danger to his order and loss to his soul, nevertheless they rushed upon him, and, after inflicting blows, departed, leaving him half alive; he died after several days. But from that time until today the aforesaid deacon, having become sorrowful on account of what had occurred, ceased from administration, and, before two years had elapsed, put on the monastic habit. Wherefore he petitioned us humbly to be instructed whether he could minister in the office of deacon and, if this were permitted to him, whether he could be promoted to a higher order. Although, if the truth supports the foregoing, the aforesaid deacon does not appear culpable for the abbot's death, nevertheless, because it belongs to good minds to acknowledge fault where there is no fault, we ascribe it not to him as a sin, but reckon it as merit, that by his own will he suspended himself from the administration of his office or put on the regular habit. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if you know the foregoing to be supported by the truth, by apostolic authority you grant the often-mentioned deacon free faculty not only to minister in the office of the diaconate but also to ascend to the order of priesthood, if no other canonical impediment stands in the way, especially if he has not been stained by ill repute concerning this; since there ought not to be imputed to him what, contrary to his express prohibition and without his giving cause or occasion, was sacrilegiously attempted by his blood relatives, [divine scripture testifying that the soul that shall sin shall itself die, etc. Given at Rieti on the fourth day before the Nones of August, in the first year of our pontificate, 1198.]

Non censetur homicida is, quo prohibente et causam non dante a consanguineis homicidium committitur.

Idem.

Petrus, diaconus et monachus sancti Ioannis de Puna, sua nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum ipsum quondam in saeculari habitu constitutum, in ecclesia de Rigelo beneficium quoddam obtinentem, abbas illius ecclesiae eodem beneficio spoliasset, cognati et amici eius abbati saepius supplicarunt, ut beneficium restitueret sibi memoratum; quo nolente ipsorum precibus acquiescere, irati plurimum et commoti, nocte quadam in domo diaconi convenerunt, et coena facta dicebant, quod vindictam volebant sumere de abbate. Inhibiti autem expresse ab eodem diacono, ne abbatem occiderent, aut aliquid sibi facerent, unde ordinis sui discrimen incurreret et animae detrimentum, nihilominus irruerunt in eum, et plagis impositis abierunt, semivivo relicto, qui post dies aliquot exspiravit. Ab illo autem tempore usque hodie praedictus diaconus, de eo, quod contigerat, tristis effectus, ab administratione cessavit, et, nondum expleto biennio, habitum induit monachalem. Unde a nobis suppliciter petiit edoceri, utrum posset in officio diaconi ministrare, et, si hoc ei liceret, an posset ad maiorem ordinem promoveri. Licet autem, si praemissis veritas suffragatur, praefatus diaconus super abbatis interitu non videatur esse culpabilis; quia tamen bonarum mentium est, ibi culpam agnoscere, ubi culpa non est, quod ab administratione officii se propria voluntate suspendit, vel habitum induit regularem, sibi non ad peccatum adscribimus, sed ad meritum reputamus. Quocirca fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si praemissa noveris veritate subnixa, saepe dicto diacono non solum in diaconatus officio ministrare, sed etiam ad ordinem presbyteratus adscendere, si aliud canonicum non obstiterit, liberam concedas auctoritate apostolica facultatem, praesertim si super hoc non fuerit respersus infamia; quum ei non debeat imputari, quod contra prohibitionem eius expressam, eo causam vel occasionem non dante, ausu sacrilego fuit ab ipsius consanguineis attentatum, [divina scriptura testante, quod anima, quae peccaverit, ipsa morietur etc. Dat. Reate II. Non Aug. Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1198.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: One who struck another lethally is deemed irregular, although the man was killed by others; the same applies if it is not apparent whether he struck lethally, if the man also died after being struck by others and it is not apparent from whose wound he died. It is the same if he struck nonlethally but had the intention of killing, and the man died from the wounds of others. It says this notably. Abbas.

The same, to the Abbot of the Holy Trinity of Meldemberg.

You informed us through your letters that, when a certain evildoer, having entered the church of Bleiseium, with the fear of God set aside, carried the eucharist together with altar ornaments and ecclesiastical books outside [that] church, the beloved son L., the priest bearing the present letters, a canon regular of [your] church, whom you had instituted chaplain in the aforesaid church of Bleiseium, took up a mattock and struck the aforesaid son of wickedness. But both you and he are wholly ignorant whether a blow of this kind was unto death. When the parishioners of the church saw the man carrying away the ornaments of the church, they took up swords and clubs and immediately killed him in that same place. But the aforesaid Laurence, taking forethought for his salvation, after a year had passed revealed to you the sequence of the matter under the title of confession, on whose behalf you humbly petitioned us that we deign to act mercifully with him. Although it is contained in the canon that, if four or five men or more shall have fought against one man, and he, having been wounded by them, shall have died, whoever among them inflicted even a wound is judged a killer according to the statutes of the canons; nevertheless, in another canon it is said concerning a priest who struck a deacon riding on horseback, and the latter, falling from the horse with a broken neck, died: that if he was not struck unto death, penance is to be imposed upon the priest who acted incautiously, in such a manner that, having been suspended for some time from the solemnities of masses, he may afterward return to the priestly office; but if the deacon truly died from any blow of the priest, the latter is by no reason to be permitted to minister here in the manner of a priest, even if he had no intention of killing.

We believe that in the aforesaid case a distinction must be made whether it can be established that the aforesaid priest did not inflict a lethal blow from which, that is, if the wounds of the others had not followed, the man struck would by no means have died, and whether the striker had no intention of killing, and the others did not proceed against the man through his exertion, counsel, or command. And indeed, if the matter so occurred—which perhaps could be shown from this, if a certain blow inflicted by him should appear to have been so slight and so light, in a part of the body in which one is not customarily killed by being lightly struck, that in the judgment of skilled physicians such a blow would be asserted not to have been lethal—since concerning the remaining matters the priest himself is to be believed, who is accused or denounced by no one, but of his own accord, being solicitous for his salvation, seeks saving counsel, after a penance imposed by way of precaution he will be able to minister in the priestly office, especially with the favor of religious life being added, since he is a canon regular and can celebrate the priestly office without any scandal. But if it cannot be discerned from whose blow the man struck died, in this doubt the priest must be treated as a killer, although perhaps he is not a killer, and he ought to abstain from the priestly office, since in this case it is safer to cease than rashly to celebrate, for the reason that in the one course no danger, but in the other great danger, is feared. Whether, moreover, a similar judgment is to be made concerning those of whom one, but it is entirely unknown which, perpetrated a homicide, if perhaps they should be presented to receive sacred orders—whether all are equally to be repelled, since it cannot be discerned who ought to be judged culpable—the diligent investigator should consider, although this case is very different from that one.

But if, as is reported, this priest, having first been struck by that sacrilegious man, immediately struck him back on the head with a mattock, although all laws and every legal system permit force to be repelled by force, nevertheless, because this ought to be done with the moderation of blameless defense, not for taking vengeance but for repelling injury, the same priest does not appear to be wholly excused from the penalty for homicide: both by reason of the instrument with which he struck, which, since it is heavy, is not accustomed to inflict a light wound, and by reason of the part in which that man was struck, in which one is customarily mortally injured by a slight blow; especially since it is asserted according to the common proverb that he who strikes first strikes by touching, while he who strikes second strikes in pain. Wherefore, after everything has been weighed, it is believed expedient for him humbly to abstain from exercising the priestly office. [Given at Viterbo on the Kalends of July, in the twelfth year of our pontificate, 1209.]

> Irregularis censetur, qui alium letaliter percussit, licet ab aliis fuerit extinctus; idem, si non apparet, an letaliter, si etiam percussus ab aliis obiit, et non apparet, ex cuius vulnere decesserit. Idem est, si percusserit non letaliter, si animum occidendi habuit, et ex aliorum vulneribus percussus exspiravit. H. d. notabiliter. Abbas.
>
> Idem Abbati S. Trinitatis de Meldemberg.
>
> Significasti nobis per literas tuas, quod, quum quidam maleficus, ingressus ecclesiam de Bleiseio, Dei timore posthabito eucharistiam cum altarium ornamentis et libris ecclesiasticis extra [ipsam] ecclesiam asportasset, dilectus filius L. presbyter lator praesentium ecclesiae [tuae] canonicus regularis, quem in praefata ecclesia de Bleiseio institueras capellanum, praefatum iniquitatis filium fossorio arrepto percussit. Sed, si ad mortem fuit ictus huiusmodi, tu et ipse penitus ignoratis; quem parochiani ecclesiae videntes ornamenta ecclesiae asportantem, arreptis gladiis et fustibus in eodem loco protinus occiderunt. Praefatus vero Laurentius de sua salute praecogitans, evoluto anno sub titulo confessionis tibi rei ordinem revelavit, pro quo nobis humiliter supplicasti, ut cum eo misericorditer agere dignaremur. Licet autem contineatur in canone, quod, si quatuor homines aut quinque vel plures contra unum hominem rixati fuerint, et ab eis mortuus fuerit vulneratus, quicunque illorum et plagam imposuerit, homicida secundum statuta canonum iudicetur; quia tamen in alio canone dicitur de presbytero, qui diaconum equitantem percussit, et ipse, cadens ex equo, cervice fracta interiit: quodsi non ad mortem percussus est, incaute agenti presbytero est poenitentia indicenda, ita, quod aliquanto tempore a missarum suspensus solenniis, denuo ad sacerdotale officium revertatur, quodsi veraciter qualicunque percussione presbyteri mortuus est diaconus, nulla hic ratione more sacerdotis permittendus est ministrare, etiamsi voluntatem non habuit occidendi. Nos in praemisso casu credimus distinguendum, utrum constare possit, quod praefatus sacerdos non inflixit percussionem letalem, de qua videlicet, si aliorum non fuissent vulnera subsecuta, percussus minime interiisset, et si percussor voluntatem non habuerit occidendi, neque ipsius studio, consilio vel mandato processerint alii contra illum. Et quidem, si hoc ita se habet, quod forsan ex eo posset ostendi, si certa apparuisset percussio ab eodem inflicta tam modica et tam levis, in ea parte corporis, in qua quis de levi percuti non solet ad mortem, ut peritorum iudicio medicorum talis percussio assereretur non fuisse letalis, quum de ceteris credendum sit ipsi sacerdoti, qui non accusatur vel denunciatur ab aliquo, sed per se ipsum, de sua salute sollicitus, consilium appetit salutare, post poenitentiam ad cautelam iniunctam in sacerdotali poterit officio ministrare, maxime religionis accedente favore, quum sit canonicus regularis, et sine omni scandalo possit sacerdotale officium celebrare. Quodsi discerni non possit, ex cuius ictu percussus interiit: in hoc dubio tanquam homicida debet haberi sacerdos, etsi forte homicida non sit, a sacerdotali officio abstinere debet, quum in hoc casu cessare sit tutius quam temere celebrare, pro eo, quod in altero nullum, in reliquo vero magnum periculum timeatur. Utrum autem de illis sit simile sentiendum, quorum unus, sed quis omnino nescitur, homicidium perpetravit, si forsan ad recipiendos sacros ordines praesententur, utrum omnes sint pariter repellendi, quum discerni non possit, qui debeant culpabiles iudicari, diligens investigator advertat, quamvis hic casus sit ab illo valde diversus. Si vero, quemadmodum perhibetur, sacerdos iste prius ab illo percussus sacrilego, mox eum cum ligone in capite repercussit, quamvis vim vi repellere omnes leges et omnia iura permittant; quia tamen id debet fieri cum moderamine inculpatae tutelae, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad iniuriam propulsandam: non videtur idem sacerdos a poena homicidii penitus excusari, tum ratione instrumenti, cum quo ipse percussit, quod, quum grave sit, non solet levem plagam inferre, tum ratione partis, in qua fuit ille percussus, in qua de modico ictu quis letaliter solet laedi, maxime quum secundum vulgare proverbium asseratur, quod, qui ferit primo, ferit tangendo, qui ferit secundo, ferit dolendo. Unde, pensatis omnibus, ei creditur expedire, ut cum humilitate abstineat a sacerdotali officio exsequendo. [Dat. Viterbii Kal. Iul. Pont. nostr. Ao. XII. 1209.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: A religious who practices surgery, if death follows from it, is irregular, even if he is skilled and diligent and did this from a motive of piety; but after satisfaction a merciful dispensation can be granted to him. It says this as far as § Lastly. — § 1. One who gave to a secular judge identifying objects belonging to a thief by whom he had been wounded is not irregular, although the thief is afterward killed. Abbas Siculus.

The same.

Your fraternity led us to be consulted. (And below: [cf. c. 7, On Consanguinity and Affinity, IV. 14.]) Third, you asked that it be explained through the Apostolic See what ought to be judged concerning a certain monk who, believing that he was curing a certain woman of a swelling of the throat, as a surgeon opened that swelling with a knife. When that swelling had subsided somewhat, the monk himself instructed the woman that she should in no way expose herself to the wind, lest perhaps the wind, entering the opening of the throat, should cause her death. But the woman, having scorned his command, while gathering crops incautiously exposed herself to the wind, and thus much blood flowed out through the opening of the throat, and the woman in this way ended her last day; she nevertheless confessed that, because she exposed herself to the wind, [she herself] had given herself the cause of death. The question, namely, is whether, since the aforesaid monk is a priest, it is lawful for him to exercise the priestly office. We therefore respond thus to your fraternity: although the monk himself transgressed greatly by usurping another's office, which was by no means fitting for him, nevertheless, if he acted from a motive of piety and not of greed, was skilled in the practice of surgery, and took care to exercise all the diligence that he ought, he is not to be so condemned because of what happened through the woman's fault contrary to his advice that, after fitting satisfaction, he cannot be dealt with mercifully so that he may be able to celebrate divine offices; otherwise, according to rigor, the exercise of the priestly order is to be forbidden to him.

§ 1. Lastly, it was proposed from your part [before us] that a certain scholar, fearing that robbers might be in his lodging, arose from his bed, having taken up a small sword in order to seek a light, and, when he came unwittingly to the door, found a thief there who, beginning to wrestle with the scholar, not only threw the scholar himself to the ground but also wounded him almost unto death. But the scholar, having been provoked by him and immediately repelling force with force, wrested the sword from the robber and struck him back while observing the moderation of law; the robber, terrified, hastened his flight as quickly as he could. Therefore, when morning dawned, the scholars sought that robber, and, finding him wounded, delivered him to the podestà of Vicenza, before whom he steadfastly denied that he had committed the foregoing acts at all. Thereupon the aforesaid podestà sent his messengers to that scholar so that he might disclose whether he knew anything concerning the aforesaid thief, or might deliver identifying objects. The scholar delivered to the aforesaid messengers the knife that he had taken from the robber himself, and the shoes left by the latter in his house, which the robber had taken off for himself so that the noise of his feet would not be heard, involving himself no further in that matter. The podestà, therefore, after receiving such identifying objects, delivered the robber himself to his officers to be punished; they amputated his genitals and put out his eyes. The robber, moreover, went to a certain monastery, and there for three days, moved by anger and pain, took neither drink nor food, and thus was taken from their midst. Wherefore you seek to be instructed by our pronouncement whether the aforesaid scholar may be promoted to sacred orders. We therefore respond thus to your inquiry: if the aforesaid scholar is supported by worthy merits, he is in no way to be barred from receiving sacred orders on account of the foregoing event. [Given at the Lateran on the Ides of February, in the fourteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

> Religiosus, chirurgiam exercens, si ex ea mors sequitur, irregularis est; etiamsi sit peritus et diligens, et hoc fecerit causa pietatis; sed cum eo post satisfactionem misericorditer dispensari potest. H. d. usque ad § Ad ultimum. - § 1. Qui iudici saeculari dedit intersignia furis, a quo fuit vulneratus, irregularis non est, licet ille postmodum occidatur. Abbas Siculus.
>
> Idem.
>
> Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos (Et infra: [cf. c. 7. de cons. et aff. IV. 14.]) Tertio Quaesivisti per sedem apostolicam explicari, quod sit de quodam monacho sentiendum, qui, credens, se quandam mulierem a gutturis tumore curare, ut chirurgicus cum ferro tumorem illum aperuit, et, quum tumor ille aliquantulum resedisset, monachus ipse mulieri praecepit, ne se vento exponeret ullo modo, ne forte ventus, subintrans gutturis apertionem, sibi causam mortis inferret; sed mulier, eius mandato contempto, dum messes colligeret, vento se exposuit incaute, et sic per apertionem gutturis sanguis multus effluxit, et mulier diem ultimum sic finivit, quae tamen confessa est, quod, quia vento exposuit semetipsam, [ipsa] sibi dederat causam mortis; utrum videlicet, quum praedictus monachus sit sacerdos, liceat ei sacerdotale officium exercere. Nos igitur fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, licet ipse monachus multum deliquerit alienum officium usurpando, quod sibi minime congruebat, si tamen causa pietatis, et non cupiditatis id egerit, et peritus erat in exercitio chirurgiae, omnemque studuit, quam debuit, diligentiam adhibere, non est ex eo, quod per culpam mulieris contra consilium eius accidit, adeo reprobandus, quod non post satisfactionem condignam cum eo misericorditer agi possit, ut divina valeat celebrare; alioquin interdicenda est ei sacerdotalis ordinis exsecutio de rigore. § 1. Ad ultimum fuit ex parte tua propositum [coram nobis,] quod quidam scholaris, metuens, ne latrones in hospitio suo essent, parvo assumpto gladio, ut ignem quaereret, de strato consurgens, quum venisset ad ostium, ignarus reperit ibi furem, qui, cum scholari incipiens colluctari, non solum ipsum scholarem prostravit ad terram, sed etiam paene ad mortem vulneravit eundem. Scholaris vero, provocatus ab illo, vim vi in continenti repellens, extorto latroni gladio, eundem servato iuris moderamine repercussit, qui perterritus fugam, quam cito potuit, maturavit. Mane itaque lucescente, scholares latronem quaesiverunt eundem, quem, vulneratum inventum, potestati Vincentiae tradiderunt, coram quo constanter negavit, quod praemissa minime perpetravit. Unde praefatus potestas ad eundem scholarem suos nuncios destinavit, ut exponeret, si qua sciret de fure praedicto, vel traderet intersignia; qui cultrum, quem ipsi latroni abstulerat, et sotulares ab eodem in ipsius domo dimissos, quos abstraxerat sibi, ne pedum strepitus audiretur, nunciis tradidit memoratis, super eodem facto se nihil amplius intromittens. Potestas igitur, receptis talibus intersigniis, latronem ipsum apparitoribus suis tradidit puniendum, qui sibi amputaverunt virilia, et oculos eruerunt; latro vero se ad quoddam coenobium transtulit, et ibi per triduum ira et dolore commotus nec potum sumpsit, nec cibum, et sic de medio est sublatus. Unde per nostrum oraculum postulas edoceri, utrum praefatus scholaris ad sacros valeat ordines promoveri. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si praefatus scholaris dignis meritis adiuvatur, propter praescriptum eventum a susceptione sacrorum ordinum nullatenus est arcendus. [Dat. Lat. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIV. 1212.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: One who gives cause for an abortion is a killer if what had been conceived was a living rational creature; otherwise it is otherwise.

The same, to the Prior and Brothers of the Carthusians.

As we learned from the tenor of your letters, when a certain priest of your order, who had formerly been a black monk, seized by the belt, as if in play, a certain pregnant woman with whom he had contracted a dishonorable association, and who asserted that she had conceived by him, the woman afterward asserted that through this she had been so injured that on this account she miscarried. On account of this the same priest, having made use of the counsel of upright men, decided that he should separate himself from the ministry of the altar. Wherefore you humbly petitioned us that we deign to act mercifully with him. We, however, respond to your devotion by this present communication that, if what was conceived had not yet been given life, he will be able to minister; otherwise, he ought to abstain from the office of the altar. [Given at the Lateran on the fourth day before the Nones of October, in the fourteenth year of our pontificate, 1211.]

Qui dat causam abortioni, homicida est, si conceptum erat vivificatum animal rationale; alias secus.

Idem Priori et Fratribus Carthusiensibus.

Sicut ex literarum vestrarum tenore accepimus quum quidam presbyter vestri ordinis, qui prius fuerat niger monachus, quandam mulierem praegnantem, cum qua contraxerat consuetudinem inhonestam, et quae asserebat, se concepisse ex eo, per zonam arripuerit, quasi ludens, ipsa mulier postmodum per hoc sic se asseruit esse laesam, quod occasione huiusmodi abortivit; propter quod idem presbyter, proborum virorum usus consilio, se ipsum duxit ab altaris ministerio sequestrandum. Quare nobis humiliter supplicastis, ut cum eo agere misericorditer dignaremur. Nos vero devotioni vestrae insinuatione praesentium respondemus, quod, si nondum erat vivificatus conceptus, ministrare poterit; alioquin debet ab altaris officio abstinere. [Dat. Lat. IV. Non. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. XIV. 1211.]

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: It is not imputed to a cleric seeking justice civilly against a layman if the judge exacts vengeance of blood upon the layman.

The same, to Bishop S.

You petitioned. (And below: [cf. c. 14, On a Competent Forum, II. 2.]) You asked further whether it is lawful for you to implore the royal power against certain persons who, in contempt of a sentence of excommunication, withhold the tithes due to churches, since they can scarcely be constrained to pay them without the shedding of blood. To this we respond briefly that, if, when you simply lodge a complaint of this kind, the king—to whom the sword has been committed for the praise of the good, but the punishment of the evil—exercises upon those same rebels the power delivered to him, it will be imputed to their hardness or malice. [Concerning cemeteries, etc.; cf. c. 7, On the Consecration of a Church, III. 40. Given at the Lateran on the third day before the Kalends of May, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1213.]

> Non imputatur clerico, civiliter iustitiam petenti de laico, si iudex in laicum exercet vindictam sanguinis.
>
> Idem S. Episcopo.
>
> Postulasti: (Et infra: [cf. c. 14. de for. comp. II. 2.]) Quaesivisti praeterea, utrum contra quosdam, contempta excommunicationis sententia debitas ecclesiis decimas subtrahentes, tibi regiam implorare liceat potestatem, quum ad solutionem ipsarum vix absque sanguinis effusione valeant coarctari. Ad quod breviter respondemus, quod, si, te huiusmodi querimoniam simpliciter deponente, rex, cui ad bonorum laudem, vindictam vero malorum, gladius est commissus, in eosdem rebelles traditam sibi exercuerit potestatem, eorum erit duritiae aut malitiae imputandum. [Coemeteria etc. cf. c. 7. de cons. eccl. III. 40. Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Mai. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. 1213.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is not imputed to one who did not kill and was not at fault, even if by way of precaution he sought pardon.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of York.

The humble confession presented to us by the cleric I. disclosed that, when he was of boyish age, playing with certain companions of his own age and pursuing one of them, he threw a stone after him, not indeed with the intention of injuring him, but of striking fear into him. Although the boy was neither struck nor touched by the thrown stone, nevertheless, falling upon another stone and injuring his head, he died after the space of forty days, partly through the inexperience of the physician and partly through the neglect of his father, who exposed him in summertime to work and sweat in the fields. But because the said cleric, so that the grief of the dead boy's father might be mitigated, being an ignorant boy induced by friends, sought pardon from him concerning this, you repel him on this occasion from receiving sacred orders, although the same father of the deceased, laboring at the point of death, confessed to you and your archdeacon, and also to the priest to whom he disclosed his conscience, and confirmed by an oath, that the cleric had committed nothing in the death of his son, as had become fully established to him. Wherefore the same cleric petitioned us as suppliantly as humbly that, since he did not have an injured conscience concerning that death, we deign to act mercifully with him. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, after diligent inquiry has been made into the truth concerning these matters, if it shall be established that it is so, you do not on this account repel him from receiving sacred orders.

> Homicidium casuale non imputatur ei, qui non occidit, nec fuit in culpa, etiamsi ad cautelam veniam postulaverit.
>
> Honorius III. Episcopo Eboracensi. Exhibita nobis humilis I. clerici confessio patefecit, quod, quum in puerili esset constitutus aetate, cum quibusdam coaetaneis suis ludens, et insequens unum ex illis, lapidem post eum non animo quidem laedendi, sed timorem incutiendi proiecit; qui, licet ex proiecto lapide percussus non fuerit, neque tactus, ad alium tamen lapidem corruens, et caput offendens, tum propter imperitiam medicantis, tum propter patris incuriam, qui aestivo tempore campestribus laboribus et sudoribus ipsum exposuit, post XL. dierum spatium exspiravit. Quia vero dictus clericus, ut mitigaretur dolor patris defuncti, tanquam puer inscius ab amicis inductus, veniam super hoc postulavit ab ipso, tu eum hac occasione a sacrorum ordinum susceptione repellis, quanquam idem defuncti pater, in extremis laborans, tibi et archidiacono tuo, nec non presbytero, cui suam aperuit conscientiam, confessus fuerit, et praestito firmaverit iuramento, nihil ipsum in morte filii sui, prout sibi plene constiterat, commisisse. Quare idem clericus tam suppliciter quam humiliter postulavit a nobis, ut, quum de illius obitu laesam non habeat conscientiam, dignaremur agere misericorditer cum eodem. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, inquisita super his sollicite veritate, si constiterit ita esse, ipsum propter hoc a receptione sacrorum ordinum non repellas.

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: Accidental homicide is not imputed to one who was engaged in a lawful act and was not at fault.

The same, to the Bishop and Chapter of Vannes.

The priest John showed us by his humble communication that, when on a certain day he rang the bells so that, when the signal had been given, the faithful people might assemble for divine offices, a falling bell struck a certain boy standing before it. Although, having been wounded in the head, he received the care of physicians for a month, after a month nevertheless he died, since the wound was mortal. Wherefore he humbly petitioned us that, acting mercifully with him, we permit him freely to exercise the priestly office. We, therefore, considering that nothing could be imputed to the said priest, who was engaged in a lawful act, if he did not foresee every accidental event, command your discretion that, if it shall be established to you that the matter is so, you permit the said priest, if no other canonical impediment stands in the way, to exercise the priestly office with the obstacle of any appeal removed.

Homicidium casuale non imputatur ei, qui dedit operam rei licitae, nec fuit in culpa.

Idem Episcopo et Capitulo Venetensibus.

Ioannes sacerdos humili nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum die quadam pulsaret campanas, ut signo dato conveniret populus fidelium ad divina, cadens tintinnabulum percussit quendam manentem puerum coram eo, qui, licet vulneratus in capite per mensem curam receperit medicorum, post mensem tamen, quum vulnus esset mortale, decessit. Unde nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut misericorditer agentes cum ipso, permitteremus sibi exsequi libere officium sacerdotis. Nos igitur attendentes, quod dicto sacerdoti, qui dabat operam rei licitae, nihil potuit imputari, si casus omnes fortuitos non praevidit, discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, rem ita esse, dictum sacerdotem, si aliud canonicum non obsistit, sacerdotale officium sublato cuiuslibet appellationis obstaculo exsequi permittatis.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: A cleric who fights even against enemies of the Catholic faith, if he struck anyone and his conscience reproaches him concerning a killing, ought to abstain from the ministry of the altar.

The same, to Pelagius the Priest.

Your petition presented to us contained that, when the enemies of the Lord's cross and blasphemers of the Christian name gravely attacked a certain fortress in which you dwelt, and its inhabitants, clerics as well as laymen, went out against them and fought one another, very many were killed on both sides. Wherefore, because you struck some men, you fear that you incurred irregularity, and you humbly petitioned us that we deign to write to you what you ought to do. Therefore, we command your discretion that, if concerning the killing of anyone in that conflict your conscience reproaches you, you reverently abstain from the ministry of the altar, since it is more prudent in a doubt of this kind to abstain than rashly to celebrate.

> Clericus pugnando etiam contra inimicos fidei catholicae, si quemquam percussit, et de interfectione ipsum remordet conscientia, a ministerio altaris abstinere debet.
>
> Idem Pelagio Presbytero.
>
> Petitio tua nobis exhibita continebat, quod, quum inimici dominicae crucis ac blasphemi nominis Christiani castrum quoddam, in quo morabaris, graviter invasissent, exeuntibus inde habitatoribus tam clericis quam laicis contra eos, ac invicem confligentibus, hinc inde occisi quam plurimi exstiterunt. Unde, quum pro eo, quod aliquos percuissisti, irregularitatem metuas incurrisse, nobis humiliter supplicasti, ut, quid agere debeas, tibi scribere dignaremur. Quocirca discretioni tuae mandamus, quatenus, si de interfectione cuiusquam in illo conflictu tua conscientia te remordet, a ministerio altaris abstineas reverenter, quum sit consultius in huiusmodi dubio abstinere, quam temere celebrare.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: It says the same as the chapter John above in this same title, and places a difference only in the facts.

Gregory IX.

A certain man, as you assert, having been summoned by a priest to assist in the construction of a church, fell together with a ceiling panel that the same priest was attempting to loosen, and on this occasion was taken from human affairs. (And below:) Considering, therefore, that the priest himself was engaged in a lawful act, and also took care to exercise the diligence that he ought, those standing around to whom danger threatened having been warned so timely and in so loud a voice that they could both understand and flee, we respond thus to your inquiry: on account of this cause, or because he perhaps did not foresee all accidental events that cannot be foreseen, he ought not to be impeded with respect to office or benefice.

> Idem dicit, quod cap. Ioannes supr. eod., et tantum ponit diversitatem in facto.
>
> Gregorius IX. Quidam, ut asseris, ad aedificationem ecclesiae, in adiutorium a presbytero evocatus, ruens cum laqueari, quod idem presbyter solvere nitebatur, hac occasione rebus est humanis exemptus. (Et infra:) Attendentes igitur, quod sacerdos ipse dabat operam licitae rei, studuit etiam, quam debuit, diligentiam adhibere, circumstantibus quibus periculum imminebat, ita tempestive et alta voce praemonitis, quod et intelligere et fugere potuerunt, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod ob hanc causam, vel quia omnes casus fortuitos, qui praevideri non possunt, forsitan non praevidit, non debet quoad officium vel beneficium impediri.

Title XIII: On Tournaments

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Tournaments ought not to be held, and penance is granted to one wounded in them; but if he dies, ecclesiastical burial is denied to him if he entered with the intention of fighting; it is otherwise if he entered for another cause, as, for example, to exact debts owed to him. It says this together with the following chapter.

From the Lateran Council.

Adhering to the footsteps of our predecessors of happy memory, Pope Innocent and Pope Eugenius, we prohibit the holding of those detestable markets or fairs, which are commonly called tournaments, in which knights are accustomed to assemble by agreement and rashly engage one another for the display of their strength and boldness, whence the deaths of men and dangers to souls often result. But if any of them shall have died there, although penance is not to be denied to him when he asks for it, nevertheless he is to lack ecclesiastical burial.

> DE TORNEAMENTIS.
>
> Torneamenta fieri non debent, et vulnerato in eis conceditur poenitentia; sed, si moritur, denegatur ei sepultura ecclesiastica, si accessit animo pugnandi; secus, si accessit alia causa, ut puta ut debita sibi exigeret. Hoc dicit cum cap. sequ.
>
> Ex concilio Lateranensi. Felicis memoriae Papae Innocentii et Eugenii praedecessorum nostrorum vestigiis inhaerentes, detestabiles illas nundinas vel ferias, quas vulgo torneamenta vocant, in quibus milites ex condicto convenire solent, et ad ostentationem virium suarum et audaciae temere congredi, unde mortes hominum et animarum pericula saepe proveniunt, fieri prohibemus. Quodsi quis eorum ibi mortuus fuerit, quamvis ei poscenti poenitentia non negetur, ecclesiastica tamen careat sepultura.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It says the same as in the preceding chapter.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Anagni.

You should know that it has come to our hearing that, when a certain man had gone to a place appointed for tournaments for the sake of seeking his debts from certain knights whom he thought would come there, it happened that he was crushed and died when the horse on which he was sitting fell violently and heedlessly upon him; but beforehand he received the Lord's body and was anointed with the anointing of holy oil. Wherefore, because he received death at a tournament, he is barred from the burial of the faithful. But we, considering that ecclesiastical burial ought to be forbidden only to those as we believe who, entering tournaments solely with the intention of doing so, die there, command your fraternity that, if it shall be established to you that the aforesaid I. came to the aforesaid tournament not with the intention of taking part in the sport but of receiving what was owed to him, although he died there by an accidental event, you cause his body by ecclesiastical dispensation to be delivered for burial, especially if he received the Lord's body and was anointed with the anointing of holy oil.

> Idem dicit, quod in superiori cap.
>
> Alexander III. Anatensi Episcopo.

Ad audientiam nostram noveris pervenisse, quod, quum quidam ad locum, deputatum torneamentis, causa requirendi sua debita a quibusdam militibus, quos eo venturos putabat, accessisset, accidit, ut violenter et inconsiderate ab equo, in quo sedebat, super eum cadente compressus et mortuus est, sed prius dominicum corpus suscepit, et sacri olei unctione perunctus est. Unde pro eo, quod in torneamento mortem accepit, a sepultura fidelium prohibetur. Nos vero attendentes, quod his tantum, sicut credimus, ecclesiastica sepultura debeat interdici, qui, ad torneamenta animo id faciendi tantum accedentes, decedunt ibidem, fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus, si tibi constiterit, quod praefatus I. ad praedictum torneamentum non animo ludendi, sed percipiendi credita, pervenisset, licet ibi fortuito casu obierit, corpus eius dispensatione ecclesiasticae tradi facias sepulturae, maxime si dominicum corpus susceperit, et sacri olei fuerit unctione perunctus.

Title XIV: On Clerics Fighting in a Duel

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric who enters a duel, whether he offered it or accepted it, is to be deposed; nevertheless, the bishop will be able to dispense with him if death or mutilation of a member did not follow from it.

Alexander III.

Furthermore, if a cleric voluntarily offered a duel to someone, or, if it was offered, accepted and undertook it, whether he was victor or vanquished, by the rigor of law he is deservedly to be deposed. But however grave and enormous his offense in this may be, he can escape the sentence of deposition if his bishop shall decide that a merciful dispensation should be granted to him, provided that homicide or the diminution of members did not follow from that duel.

DE CLERICIS PUGNANTIBUS IN DUELLO.

Clericus, iniens duellum, sive obtulerit sive susceperit, deponendus est; poterit tamen episcopus cum eo dispensare, si mors vel mutilatio membri non sit inde secuta.

Alexander III. Porro, si clericus alicui sponte duellum obtulerit, vel, si oblatum susceperit et subierit, sive victor sive victus fuerit, de rigore iuris est merito deponendus. Sed, quantumque eius in hoc gravis sit et enormis excessus, evadere potest depositionis sententiam, si cum ipso suus episcopus duxerit misericorditer dispensandum; dummodo ex ipso duello homicidium vel membrorum diminutio non fuerit subsecuta.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A cleric is irregular not only if he himself kills directly, but also if a champion furnished by him kills the adversary; nor does custom excuse him. Nevertheless, a dispensation can be granted to him concerning the holding of a benefice.

Celestine III.

Henry, the priest bearing the present letters, humbly informed us that, when he had proceeded against a certain layman concerning theft in a secular court, he, because his witnesses failed, introduced a champion according to the evil custom of the land, who wounded the accused with blows of the sword to such an extent that he was compelled to die the following night. Therefore, because you wished to consult us concerning this, we remove your uncertainty by this response: such champions are true killers, and the aforesaid priest, although not he himself but another fought for him in the duel, ought not to minister in sacred orders, as the institutions of the sacred canons also teach. There is no doubt, moreover, that homicide is perpetrated by deed as well as by command, or by counsel or defense; nevertheless, a merciful dispensation can be granted to him concerning the holding of a benefice.

> Irregularis est clericus, non solum si ipse interficit per se, sed etiam si pugil, ab eo datus, adversarium occidat; nec excusat consuetudo. Poterit tamen cum eo circa beneficium habendum dispensari. Coelestinus III. Henricus presbyter lator praesentium nobis humiliter intimavit, quod, quum laicum quendam super furto in saeculari placito convenisset, ipse, quia testes sui defecerunt, pugilem secundum pravam terrae consuetudinem introduxit, qui reum usque adeo ictibus gladii vulneravit, quod coactus est nocte proxima exspirare. Quia igitur super hoc nos consulere voluisti, ambiguitatem tuam responsione huiusmodi removemus, quod tales pugiles homicidae veri exsistunt, nec praedictus sacerdos, licet non ipse, sed alius pro eo in duello pugnaverit, debet in sacris ordinibus ministrare, sicut etiam tradunt sacrorum canonum instituta. Homicidium autem tam facto quam praecepto, sive consilio aut defensione non est dubium perpetrari; poterit tamen cum eo circa habendum beneficium misericorditer dispensari.

Title XV: On Archers

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: An archer and crossbowman acting against Christians is to be excommunicated. It says this.

Innocent III.

Under anathema we prohibit henceforth the exercise against Christian and Catholic persons of that death-dealing art, hateful to [God], of crossbowmen and archers.

> DE SAGITTARIIS.
>
> Excommunicandus est sagittarius et ballistarius contra Christianos. Hoc dicit.
>
> Innocentius III. Artem autem illam mortiferam et [Deo] odibilem ballistariorum et sagittariorum adversus Christianos et catholicos exerceri de cetero sub anathemate prohibemus.

Title XVI: On Adulteries and Defilement

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One who defiles a virgin is bound to endow her and take her as wife; and, if he does not wish to contract with her, he will be chastised corporally in addition to furnishing the dowry. It says this together with the following chapter.

In Exodus.

If anyone shall seduce a virgin not yet betrothed and shall lie with her, he shall endow her and shall have [her] as wife. But if the virgin's father shall be unwilling to give her, he shall pay money according to the measure of the dowry that virgins are accustomed to receive.

> DE ADULTERIIS ET STUPRO.

> Stuprans virginem tenetur eam dotare et ducere in uxorem, et, si non vult cum ea contrahere, ultra dotem corporaliter castigabitur. H. d. cum cap. sequenti. In Exodo.
>
> Si seduxerit quis virginem nondum desponsatam, dormieritque cum ea, dotabit eam, et habebit [eam] uxorem. Si vero pater virginis dare noluerit, reddet pecuniam iuxta modum dotis, quam virgines accipere consueverunt.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the immediately preceding chapter.

Gregory, to the Bishop of Siponto.

It has come to us that Felix, your nephew, defiled a certain virgin, a thing wicked even to say. If this is true, although he would have to be chastised by a [grave] penalty according to the law, we nevertheless, softening the law's severity to some extent, ordain in this manner: either let him have as wife the woman whom he defiled, or certainly, if he thinks that this should be refused, let him be chastised more strictly in body and excommunicated, and let him be thrust into a monastery in which he is to do penance, from which there is to be no permission for him to depart without [our] command. [Therefore, let your fraternity take care that these things are fulfilled, etc.]

> Summatum est supra capitulo proximo.
>
> Gregorius Sipontino Episcopo.
>
> Pervenit ad nos, quod Felix nepos tuus quandam virginem, quod nefas est dici, stupro decepit. Quod si verum est, quamvis [grave] esset de lege poena plectendus, nos tamen, aliquatenus legis duritiem mollientes, hoc modo disponimus, ut aut quam stupravit uxorem habeat, aut certe, si renuendum putaverit, districtius ac corporaliter castigatus excommunicatusque, in monasterio, in quo agat poenitentiam, retrudatur, de quo ei nulla sit egrediendi sine [nostra] praeceptione licentia. [Ita igitur fraternitas tua ut haec compleantur studeat etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A husband retaining an adulterous wife before she has completed penance is a participant in the offense; it is otherwise if she has done penance. Nevertheless, he ought not to receive her repeatedly.

From the Council of Arles.

If a man, knowing that his wife has transgressed, lives with her when she has not done penance but remains in her fornication, the man will be guilty and a participant in her sin. But if the woman after being dismissed shall have done penance and shall wish to return to her husband, he ought to receive the sinner, who has done penance, but not repeatedly.

> Maritus, retinens adulteram coniugem non peracta poenitentia, particeps est delicti; secus, si egit poenitentiam; non tamen debet eam saepe recipere.
>
> Ex concilio Arelatensi. Si vir sciens, uxorem suam deliquisse, quae non egerit poenitentiam, sed permanet in fornicatione sua, vixerit cum illa: vir reus erit et eius peccati particeps. Quodsi mulier dimissa egerit poenitentiam, et voluerit ad virum suum reverti, debet, sed non saepe, recipere peccatricem, quae poenitentiam egit.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A husband can accuse his wife of adultery on account of suspicion, and in accusing her he is preferred to others.

From the Council of Paris.

It has indeed been permitted to husbands to accuse their wives even upon suspicion, and they themselves more than others can both accuse concerning adultery and defend.

> Maritus propter suspicionem potest accusare uxorem de adulterio, et in accusando praefertur ceteris.
>
> Ex concilio Parisiensi. Maritis sane etiam ex suspicione uxores accusare permissum est, et ipsi plus ceteris de adulterio et accusare possunt et defendere.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: On the confession of a woman alone, asserting that she committed adultery with a priest, the priest ought not to be punished; but if he is in ill repute, purgation can be imposed upon him. If he furnishes it, he is absolved, but if he fails, he is suspended from office.

Alexander III.

You informed us that a certain priest, at the instigation of the devil, slept frequently, as you assert, within a church with another man's wife. She publicly disclosed to you indeed that she and he had confessed an offense of this kind to a certain priest, and that same priest said this very thing in your presence while concealing the name of the adulterer. You sought counsel from the Apostolic See concerning what ought to be done in this matter when, although the adulterer denies it, the woman persists in her confession. We therefore command that, imposing a fitting penance upon the aforesaid adulteress, you take care to reconcile the aforesaid church by the sprinkling of holy water. But upon the aforesaid priest, lest, contrary to the Apostle, the hearts of the weak be struck by his ill repute, and lest our ministry be disparaged, and lest priests, becoming more secure, fall more freely into sin, you are to impose, according to your judgment, purgation with five neighboring priests whom you shall know to be unwilling to perjure themselves. If he shall be able to purge himself, you are to permit him to minister in his office; otherwise, you are not to postpone suspending him from his office.

> Ad solam mulieris confessionem, asserentis, se commisisse adulterium cum sacerdote, non debet sacerdos puniri, sed sibi infamato potest indici purgatio; quam si praestiterit, absolvitur, deficiens vero suspenditur ab officio.
>
> Alexander III. Significasti nobis, quendam presbyterum cum alterius coniuge instinctu diabolico infra ecclesiam frequenter, sicut asseris, dormivisse, quae utique se et illum cuidam sacerdoti huiusmodi delictum confessos fuisse, publice tibi detexit, et hoc ipsum idem sacerdos, nomen adulteri celans, in praesentia tua dixit. Super quo quid fieri debeat, quum, negante adultero, mulier in confessione persistat, ab apostolica sede consilium requisisti. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus condignam poenitentiam praefatae imponens adulterae, ecclesiam praelibatam per aspersionem aquae benedictae reconciliare procures. Praedicto autem sacerdoti, ne contra Apostolum infirmorum corda mala fama ipsius percutiantur, et ne vituperetur ministerium nostrum, neque securiores presbyteri exsistentes in peccatum licentius prolabantur, cum vicinis quinque presbyteris, quos se nolle peierare cognoveris, iuxta arbitrium tuum purgationem indicas. Quem, si purgare se poterit, in officio suo ministrare permittas; alioquin ab officio suo ipsum suspendere non postponas.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A spouse cannot proceed against a spouse for adultery if the former is also proved to have committed adultery.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Tours.

We have understood, both through the letters of our venerable brother the Bishop of Poitiers and through those matters which were proposed on behalf of the parties before our beloved son Andrew, our subdeacon and chaplain, who was appointed auditor in this matter, that, when the layman S. had driven H., his wife, from marital consortium without a reasonable cause, the same bishop, their diocesan, hearing that the same woman was fornicating with a certain adulterer, bound her and him by the bond of excommunication. At length, after abjuring the adulterer and receiving absolution before the aforesaid bishop, she petitioned that the aforesaid man be restored to her. But he, objecting against her to this adultery, of which he said that she had begotten offspring, and alleging that she had not been expelled by him but had departed of her own accord, proposed that restoration of himself to her was by no means to be made. The aforesaid woman, wholly denying this, replied against him that he had fornicated and had begotten offspring from the fornication, on account of which he could not use such an exception against her. But when the faculty of proving these matters had been granted to each party, the aforesaid woman proved the same man's adultery through certain witnesses, whom the man himself said ought to be rejected as less suitable, and at length an appeal was made by him to our presence. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, unless it shall be established to you either through the manifestness of the matter or through a lawful confession of the woman that she had committed adultery voluntarily, if proof of the adultery that the man is said to have committed fails, you compel him to receive her. But if the woman's fornication is established in the aforesaid manner, unless the witnesses through whom the man's adultery was proved shall have been rejected, since the right of marriage remains injured in each party and equal offenses are removed by mutual compensation, you are nevertheless to compel him to receive her and treat her with marital affection; otherwise, you are not to postpone imposing silence upon the aforesaid woman. [Given at the Lateran on the sixth day before the Kalends of May, in the eleventh year, 1208.]

> Coniux coniugem de adulterio impetere non potest, si et ipse adulterium commisisse convincatur.
>
> Innocentius III. Turonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Intelleximus tam per literas venerabilis fratris nostri Pictaviensis episcopi, quam per ea, quae coram dilecto filio Andrea subdiacono et capellano nostro, super hoc auditore concesso, proposita pro partibus exstiterunt, quod, quum S. laicus H. uxorem suam a maritali consortio sine causa rationabili depulisset, idem episcopus dioecesanus eorum, audiens, mulierem eandem cum quodam adultero fornicari, eam et illum vinculo excommunicationis adstrinxit, quae, tandem adulterum abiurans, absolutione recepta coram episcopo memorato praedictum virum sibi restitui postulavit. At ille, huiusmodi obiiciens ei adulterium, de quo prolem genuisse dicebat eandem, et quod ab ipso non expulsa, sed spontanea recessisset, restitutionem sui proposuit ei esse minime faciendam; quod mulier memorata prorsus inficians, replicavit in ipsum, quod fuerat fornicatus, et de fornicatione sobolem procrearat, propter quod tali exceptione uti non poterat contra ipsam. Quum autem, utrique parti probandi haec facultate concessa, praefata mulier per quosdam testes eiusdem viri adulterium probavisset, quas vir ipse dicebat tanquam minus idoneos reprobandos, tandem ab eo fuit ad nostram praesentiam appellatum. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, nisi tibi constiterit, vel per evidentiam rei, vel per confessionem legitimam mulieris, quod adulterata sponte fuisset adulterii etiam, quod vir dicitur commisisse, probatione cessante, ipsum recipere compellas eandem. Quodsi praedicto modo de mulieris fornicatione constiterit, nisi testes, per quos viri adulterium est probatum, fuerint reprobati, quum matrimonii ius in utroque laesum consistat, et paria delicta mutua compensatione tollantur: nihilominus eum cogas, ut eam recipiat, et maritali affectione pertractet; alioquin mulieri praedictae silentium imponere non postponas. [Dat. Lat. VI. Kal. Maii Ao. XI. 1208.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A marriage ought not to be separated with respect to the marriage-bed on account of adultery when both spouses have committed adultery.

The same, to the Bishop of Amiens.

Your fraternity asked us whether, when someone denies the conjugal debt to his wife who has been detected in adultery, if he himself afterward manifestly perpetrates adultery with another woman, the wife having done penance for what was committed and humbly sought pardon, the husband ought to be compelled to treat her with marital affection. Concerning this we respond thus to you: since equal crimes are removed by mutual compensation, a husband of this kind cannot decline the consortium of his wife on the pretext of her fornication. [Given at Anagni on the Ides of June, in the eleventh year, 1208.]

Non debet separari matrimonium quoad torum propter adulterium, quando ambo coniuges fuerunt adulterati. Idem Episcopo Ambianensi. Tua fraternitas requisivit a nobis, utrum, aliquo denegante uxori suae in adulterio deprehensae debitum coniugale, si postmodum ipse cum alia perpetret adulterium manifeste, an uxore agente poenitentiam de commisso et veniam humiliter postulante, vir cogi debeat, ut eandem maritali affectione pertractet. Super quo tibi taliter respondemus, quod, quum paria crimina compensatione mutua deleantur, vir huiusmodi fornicationis obtentu suae uxoris nequit consortium declinare. [Dat. Anagniae Id. Iun. Ao. XI. 1208.]

Title XVII: On Robbers, Incendiaries, and Violators of Churches

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: By reason of robbery, someone is allotted the forum of one who is not his judge, and he can be punished by that judge with his own judge supporting him.

From the Council of Meaux.

Concerning those who have a benefice or inheritance within a parish, are parishioners of another bishop, and travel from place to place and there commit robberies and depredations, it was determined that they be excommunicated by the prelate of that place, and not depart from that parish before they worthily make amends for what they perpetrated. Their excommunication is to be made known to their superior and their own bishop, lest he receive them before they return to the place where they committed the robbery and make full amends for everything.

DE RAPTORIBUS, INCENDIARIIS ET VIOLATORIBUS ECCLESIARUM.

Ratione rapinae sortitur quis forum non sui iudicis, et ab eo poterit puniri proprio iudice suffragante.

Ex concilio Meldensi. De illis autem, qui intra parochiam beneficium aut hereditatem habent et alterius episcopi parochiani sunt, et de loco ad locum iter faciunt, et ibi rapinas et depraedationes peragunt, placuit, ut ab illius loci praelato excommunicentur, nec ante ex parochia illa exeant, quam digne quae perpetrarunt emendent; quorum excommunicatio seniori eorum et proprio episcopo significanda est, ne eos recipiat, antequam illuc redeant, ubi rapinam fecerint, et omnia plene emendent.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A manifest robber or violator of a church, if he restores or gives security for restoration, is admitted during life and at death to penance and burial. But if he was unwilling to give security when he could, and at death cannot do so, clerics ought not to be present at his burial; and clerics who are present or impose penance contrary to this disposition are deposed from office and benefice.

Eugenius III.

Concerning that, moreover, which by common deliberation with our brothers we decreed in council regarding robbers and violators of churches, and priests who should attempt to impose penance upon them or to receive their offerings contrary to our statute, we decree in that same constitution, following the footsteps of the holy Fathers, and likewise confirm by the authority of God and of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, We decree that, if anyone among those robbers who, at the devil's suggestion, have violently risen up to robbery in the City, or anyone who has been manifestly apprehended in the violation of churches, does not first restore what was taken, if he can, or furnish firm and full security for making amends, the benefit of penance is to be denied to him entirely. But if, which may it not happen, he shall have persisted in his contumacy until death and, placed at the point of death, shall humbly have sought the remedy of penance, if he shall furnish amends or security for making amends and shall give suitable sureties who ought to restore what was taken, penance and ecclesiastical burial are to be granted to him. But one who, while in health, did not repent or make amends, through an obstinate mind, and at death was unable to furnish security and sureties, as we have said, the solemnity of penance indeed appears, as we believe, to profit him little; nevertheless, if he is contrite for his sin, viaticum is not to be denied to him, yet in such a manner that no cleric is present at his burial or presumes to receive his alms. But if any priests or clerics should attempt, contrary to this, to give penance during life or at death, to be present at their burial, or to receive their alms, or should be found participants in robbery of this kind, let them suffer irrecoverable loss of their order and lack ecclesiastical benefice.

Manifestus raptor vel ecclesiae violator, si restituit vel de restituendo cavet, in vita et in morte ad poenitentiam et ad sepulturam admittitur. Si vero noluit cavere, quum posset, et in morte non potest, clerici eius sepulturae interesse non debent, et clerici, interessentes vel iniungentes poenitentiam contra hanc dispositionem, deponuntur ab officio et beneficio.

Eugenius III. Super eo vero, quod de raptoribus et ecclesiarum violatoribus, atque presbyteris, qui poenitentiam eis iniungere vel eorum oblationes contra statutum nostrum suscipere attentaverint, a nobis communi deliberatione statutum in concilio cum fratribus nostris statuimus in constitutione ipsa, sanctorum Patrum vestigia subsequentes, auctoritate Dei et beatorum Apostolorum Petri et Pauli pariter confirmamus, Statuimus ut quicunque ex his raptoribus, qui in Urbe suggerente diabolo violenter surrexerint in rapinam, sive in ecclesiarum violatione manifeste fuerit deprehensus, nisi prius ablata restituat, si poterit, vel emendandi firmam et plenam securitatem fecerit, poenitentiae beneficium ei penitus denegetur. Si vero usque ad obitum, quod absit, in contumacia sua duraverit, et in extremis positus remedium poenitentiae humiliter postulaverit, si emendationem vel emendandi securitatem praestiterit, ac fideiussores, qui ablata restituere debeant, idoneos dederit: ei poenitentia et sepultura ecclesiastica concedantur. Qui autem in sanitate obstinata mente non poenituerit vel emendaverit, et in morte securitatem ac fideiussores, sicut diximus, praestare nequiverit, solennitas poenitentiae quidem parum prodesse videtur, sicut credimus; sed de peccato contrito viaticum non negetur, ita tamen, ut nullus clericorum sepulturae illius intersit, nec eius eleemosynam praesumat accipere. Quodsi qui presbyterorum vel clericorum contra hoc in vita vel in morte poenitentias dare, aut sepulturae illorum interesse, vel eorum eleemosynas accipere attentaverint, seu huiusmodi rapinae participes inventi fuerint: ordinis sui damnum irrecuperabiliter patiantur, et ecclesiastico beneficio careant.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Those who capture or despoil faithful persons traveling by ship for a just cause ought to be excommunicated. It says this first. Those who despoil persons suffering shipwreck are excommunicated unless they restore what was taken. This is the second point.

From the Lateran Council.

Let those also be subjected to excommunication who presume either to capture Romans or other Christians carried by ship for trade or other honorable causes, or to despoil them of their possessions. Those also who, with condemned cupidity, despoil of their possessions Christians suffering shipwreck, to whom according to the rule of faith they are bound to render assistance, are to know that they are subject to excommunication unless they return what was taken.

Excommunicari debent qui capiunt vel spoliant fideles, ex iusta causa navigantes. H. d. primo. Excommunicati sunt spoliantes naufragium patientes, nisi ablata restituant. Hoc secundo.

Ex concilio Lateranensi. Excommunicationi quoque subdantur, qui Romanos aut alios Christianos, pro negotiatione vel aliis honestis causis navigio vectos, aut capere aut rebus suis spoliare praesumunt. Illi etiam, qui Christianos naufragium patientes, quibus secundum regulam fidei auxilio esse tenentur, damnata cupiditate spoliant rebus suis, nisi ablata reddiderint, excommunicationi se noverint subiacere.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: By delegation of the prince, prelates can judge concerning robbery and other crimes; nevertheless, they cannot inflict a penalty of blood.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Palermo.

It is said to happen sometimes in your archbishopric that Saracens seize Christian women and boys and presume to abuse them, and at times do not fear even to kill some, [a thing terrible to hear]. Since, moreover, our dearest son in Christ, the illustrious William, King of Sicily, has committed offenses of this kind to you and other bishops to be punished, your prudence led you to consult us as to what is to be done with Saracens who have been caught in so nefarious a crime. Concerning this, certainly, We respond thus to your consultation: you will be able to chastise such persons existing within your jurisdiction with a monetary penalty, and even to afflict them with scourges, yet with [such] moderation employed that the scourges by no means appear to pass into vengeance of blood. But if the offense of the Saracens concerning this matter shall have been so grave that they ought to suffer death or the cutting off of members, you are to reserve the exercise of that vengeance to the royal power.

Ex principis delegatione possunt praelati de raptu et aliis criminibus iudicare; poenam tamen sanguinis infligere non possunt.

Alexander III. Panormitano Archiepiscopo.

In archiepiscopatu tuo dicitur contingere quandoque, quod Sarraceni mulieres Christianas et pueros rapiunt, et eis abuti praesumunt, et quosdam etiam, [quod auditu est terribile,] interdum occidere non verentur. Quum autem excessus huiusmodi carissimus in Christo filius noster, illustris rex Siciliae Willelmus tibi et aliis episcopis commiserit puniendos, quid de Sarracenis agendum sit, qui fuerint in tam nefario scelere intercepti, tua nos duxit prudentia consulendos. Super quo utique Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod tales, in iurisdictione tua exsistentes, pecuniaria poteris poena mulctare, et etiam flagellis afficere ea [tamen] moderatione adhibita, quod flagella in vindictam sanguinis transire minime videantur. Si vero ita fuerit super hoc gravis Sarracenorum excessus, quod mortem vel detruncationem membrorum debeant sustinere, vindictam ipsam exercendam reserves regiae potestati.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: An incendiary of a church, repenting and absolved at death, is buried in a cemetery, and his heirs are compelled to make satisfaction according to the means of the deceased. It says this.

The same, to the Bishop of Clermont.

It was contained in your letters, which I., the bearer of the present letters, presented, that H., who had been entangled in many crimes and had committed the burning of churches at the devil's instigation, at length, when placed in his last illness, confessed himself a sinner, and, after accepting penance for what had been committed, was absolved from the sentence of anathema by the hand of his chaplain; but at death he could not have ecclesiastical burial. Therefore, if the matter so occurred, by apostolic writings and by way of precept we command your fraternity that, with appeal ceasing, you cause the body of the same father of the aforesaid I. to be buried in the cemetery, and admonish and compel his heirs worthily to make satisfaction, according to his means, to those upon whom he had inflicted losses contrary to justice through burning or in another manner, so that he may thus be freed from sin.

Incendiarius ecclesiae, in morte poenitens et absolutus, in coemeterio sepelitur, et heredes compelluntur ad satisfaciendum iuxta facultatem defuncti. Hoc dicit.

Idem Claremontensi Episcopo.

In literis tuis, quas I. lator praesentium exhibuit, continebatur, quod, quum H. multis fuisset criminibus irretitus, qui ecclesiarum incendium diabolo instigante commiserat, tandem in ultima aegritudine constitutus, se confessus est peccatorem, et, accepta poenitentia de commissis, per manum capellani sui fuit a sententia anathematis absolutus, sed moriens ecclesiasticam sepulturam habere nequivit. Quapropter, si ita res se habet, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, ut corpus eiusdem patris I. supra dicti appellatione cessante facias in coemeterio sepeliri, et heredes eius moneas et compellas, ut his, quibus ille per incendium vel alio modo damna contra iustitiam irrogaverat, iuxta facultates suas condigne satisfaciant, ut sic a peccato valeat liberari.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: There is not said to be abduction where a willing woman is carried away for marriage; nevertheless, the abductor can contract marriage with the woman abducted, and after consummation of the marriage one cannot enter religious life without the consent of the other. It says this together with the following chapter.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Burgos.

When we had committed to your experience for termination the case that is pending between the knight E., the bearer of the present letters, and his wife, the knight E., seeking her return and asserting that the woman had lawfully married him, steadfastly declared that he would prove this through canonical proofs. The woman, however, proposed that, having been given to another man at the suggestion of her lords and parents, she turned away from the love of that knight, who had previously carried her away from her parents, yet with her willing, as is said, and afterward, before he knew her carnally, betrothed her; thereafter she was enclosed in a monastery of nuns, where she is also detained. Wherefore, because concerning these matters your prudence decided that the Apostolic See should be consulted, by this present communication to you We respond that, since abduction is said to be committed where nothing concerning marriage is treated beforehand, this man ought not to be called an abductor, since he had the woman's assent and betrothed her before he knew her carnally, although her parents perhaps protested, from whom he is said to have carried her away. Furthermore, since after marriage has been perfected by carnal union, the Apostle bearing witness, the wife does not have power over her own body, but the husband does, and conversely, if it shall have become clear, either from the man's canonical proofs or from the woman's confession, that the marriage preceded, she could not afterward enter a monastery or otherwise profess continence without the man's assent. Therefore, because after the consummated marriage the abducted woman was placed by force in the monastery, she will not be able to decline the consortium of the husband, especially if it cannot be proved that the husband assented that the woman should profess continence.

> Raptus non dicitur, ubi volens pro matrimonio abducitur; raptor tamen cum rapta matrimonium contrahere potest, et post consummationem matrimonii alter sine consensu alterius religionem ingredi non potest. H. d. cum cap. sequenti. Lucius III. Burgensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum causam, quae inter E. militem latorem praesentium et uxorem eius vertitur, tuae commisissemus experientiae terminandam, E. miles repetens, mulierem legitime sibi nupsisse, per probationes canonicas constanter se asseruit probaturum. Femina vero proposuit, quod dominorum et parentum suorum suggestione alteri viro tradita, ab illius militis amore divertit, qui a parentibus eam prius rapuerat, illa tamen volente, ut dicitur, et postmodum, priusquam eam cognosceret, desponsavit, deinde inclusa est in monasterium monialium, ubi etiam detinetur. Unde, quoniam super his prudentia tua duxit sedem apostolicam consulendam, significatione praesentium tibi Respondemus, quod, quum ibi raptus dicatur admitti, ubi nil ante de nuptiis agitur, iste raptor dici non debet, quum habuerit mulieris assensum, et prius eam desponsaverit, quam cognoverit; licet parentes forsitan reclamarent, a quibus eam dicitur, rapuisse. Praeterea quum post matrimonium, carnis commixtione perfectum, teste Apostolo uxor sui corporis potestatem non habeat, sed maritus, et e converso: si praecessisse matrimonium vel ex probationibus viri canonicis, vel ex mulieris confessione claruerit postmodum sine assensu viri non potuit ipsa monasterium ingredi, aut aliter continentiam profiteri. Non ergo pro eo, quod post matrimonium consummatum rapta per vim in monasterio fuerit, viri poterit consortium declinare; maxime si probari nequeat, virum, ut mulier profiteretur, continentiam assensisse.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A woman who has been abducted can contract marriage with her abductor when free faculty in contracting is given to her.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Saron.

Coming to the Apostolic See. (And below: [cf. c. 24, On Prebends, III. 5.]) A girl who has been abducted will contract lawfully with her abductor if her prior dissent afterward passes into consent, and what displeased her before at length begins to please her, provided that the persons are legally qualified to contract.

> Rapta potest matrimonium contrahere cum raptore, ubi dabitur libera facultas in contrahendo.
>
> Innocentius III. Episcopo Saronensi. Accedens ad apostolicam sedem (Et infra: [cf. c. 24. de praeb. III. 5.]) Rapta puella legitime contrahet cum raptore, si prior dissensio transeat postmodum in consensum, et quod ante displicuit tandem incipiat complacere, dummodo ad contrahendum legitimae sint personae.

Title XVIII: On Thefts

Chapter I

In Exodus.

He who steals a man and shall sell him, having been convicted of the offense, shall die by death.

> DE FURTIS.
>
> In Exodo.
>
> Qui furatur hominem, et vendiderit eum, convictus noxae morte moriatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The ecclesiastical sacraments are to be denied to thieves and robbers dying in sin; it is otherwise if they repented at death.

From the Council of Tribur.

If thieves and robbers are killed while stealing or plundering, it was determined that prayer is not to be made for them. But if, having been captured or wounded, they shall have confessed to a priest or deacon, we do not deny them communion.

> Furibus et latronibus in peccato obeuntibus sacramenta ecclesiastica deneganda sunt; secus, si in morte eos poenituit.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi. Fures et latrones si in furando vel depraedando occiduntur, visum est, pro eis non esse orandum. Sed si comprehensi aut vulnerati presbytero vel diacono confessi fuerint, communionem eis non negamus.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who commits theft from a necessity that is not very urgent sins, but not gravely; wherefore a light penance is to be imposed upon him. It says this according to the common understanding.

From the Penitential of Theodore.

If anyone shall have stolen foodstuffs, clothing, or livestock on account of the necessity of hunger or nakedness, let him do penance for three weeks; and, if he shall have returned it, let him not be compelled to fast.

> Committens furtum ex necessitate non multum urgente, peccat, sed non graviter; unde imponenda est ei levis poenitentia. H. d. secundum communem intellectum.

> Ex poenitentiali Theodori. Si quis propter necessitatem famis aut nuditatis furatus fuerit cibaria,vestem vel pecus, poeniteat hebdomadas tres, et, si reddiderit, non cogatur ieiunare.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who does not disclose a thief on account of the gain that he obtains from him is guilty of sin.

Jerome, on Proverbs.

"He who shares with a thief kills his own soul." Not only the thief is held guilty, but also the one who, aware of the theft, does not disclose it when the possessor makes inquiry.

> Non indicans furem propter lucrum, quod ab eo consequitur, reus peccati est.
>
> Hieronymus super Parabolas.
>
> "Qui cum fure partitur, occidit animam suam." Non fur solum, sed ille reus tenetur, qui, furti conscius, quaerente possessore non indicat.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A secret thief can, after restitution and penance, be promoted to sacred orders.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Cremona.

From your letters, if we remember rightly, it became known to our ears, and the diligent report of the beloved son I., our subdeacon, disclosed, that B., the bearer of the present letters, seizing a certain chalice incautiously left in a church, presumed to retain it for a long time. Afterward, nevertheless, being led by repentance, he humbly and reverently disclosed his offense to a priest in confession, and, according to the counsel of the same priest, made satisfaction concerning it to the church, as was fitting. Wherefore, because on account of this very matter the discretion of your fraternity hesitates to ordain him, by apostolic writings and by way of precept We command your prudence that, if the aforesaid B. voluntarily confessed the offense of presumption of this kind, made satisfaction concerning it to the church whose chalice it had been, and has not been stained concerning this with a manifest mark or ill repute, after the penance or a suitable part of the penance has been completed, provided that you know him to be otherwise suitable, you do not hesitate to promote him to sacred orders.

> Fur occultus potest post restitutionem et poenitentiam ad sacros ordines promoveri. Alexander III. Cremonensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex literis tuis, si bene meminimus, auribus nostris innotuit, et dilecti filii I. subdiaconi nostri diligens relatio patefecit, quod B. lator praesentium calicem quendam in ecclesia minus caute dimissum rapiens, longo tempore detinere praesumpsit. Postea tamen poenitentia ductus presbytero in confessione excessum suum humiliter et reverenter aperuit, et ecclesiae iuxta eiusdem presbyteri consilium, prout dignum fuit, exinde satisfecit. Unde quoniam propter hoc ipsum tuae fraternitatis discretio dubitat ordinare, prudentiae tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus, si praedictus B. sponte confessus fuerit huiusmodi praesumptionis excessum, et exinde ecclesiae, cuius calix fuerat, satisfecerit, nec est super hoc nota vel infamia manifesta respersus, post peractam poenitentiam aut congruam partem poenitentiae, dummodo, alias idoneum ipsum esse cognoscas, ad sacros ordines non dubites promovere.

Title XIX: On Usuries

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Usury is to make profit from the fruits of a thing given in pledge; this fails in the case excepted here.

Alexander III, in the Council of Tours.

Many clerics, and, what we say with sorrow, even those who by verbal profession and habit have left the present world, while they abhor ordinary usuries as if more manifestly condemned, lend money to persons in need, receive their possessions in pledge, and take the fruits arising from them beyond the principal. Therefore, The authority of the general council has decreed that no one henceforth established in the clergy presume to practice either this or another kind of usury. And if anyone [up to this time] has received another's possession in pledge under this appearance or condition in return for money given, if, after expenses have been deducted, he has already received his principal from the fruits, let him restore the possession absolutely to the debtor. But if he has something less, after that has been received, let the possession return freely to its owner. But if after a constitution of this kind anyone established in the clergy shall have persisted in the detestable profits of usuries, let him suffer peril to ecclesiastical office, unless perhaps it was a benefice of a church that appeared fit to be redeemed for it in this manner from the hand of a layman.

> DE USURIS.
>
> Usura est lucrifacere fructus rei pignoratae; fallit in casu hic excepto.
>
> Alexander III. in concilio Turonensi. Plures clericorum, et, quod moerentes dicimus, eorum quoque, qui praesens saeculum professione vocis et habitu reliquerunt dum communes usuras, quasi manifestius damnatas, exhorrent, commodata pecunia indigentibus, possessiones eorum in pignus accipiunt, et provenientes fructus percipiunt ultra sortem. Idcirco Generalis concilii decrevit auctoritas, ut nullus amodo constitutus in clero vel hoc vel aliud genus usurae exercere praesumat. Et si quis [hactenus] alicuius possessionem data pecunia sub hac specie vel conditione in pignus acceperit, si sortem suam deductis expensis de fructibus iam perceperit, absolute possessionem restituat debitori. Si autem aliquid minus habet, eo recepto, possessio libere ad dominum revertatur. Quodsi post huiusmodi constitutum in clero quisquam exstiterit, qui detestandis usurarum lucris insistat, ecclesiastici officii periculum patiatur, nisi forte ecclesiae beneficium fuerit, quod redimendum ei hoc modo de manu laici videatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: In effect, it says the same as the preceding chapter, but adds tacitly that the same applies to laymen. For in the preceding chapter mention was made only of clerics.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans.

Because it is dangerous not only for ecclesiastical men but also for any others to devote themselves to the profits of usuries, by the authority of the present letters we have decided to enjoin upon you that, through ecclesiastical coercion and without the exaction of usuries, you compel those who, after expenses have been deducted, have already received their principal from the possessions or trees that they are known to hold in pledge, to restore those pledges.

> Idem in effectu dicit cum praecedenti cap., sed addit tacite idem esse in laicis. Nam in praecedenti capite tantum fuit facta mentio de clericis.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et eius Suffraganeis.

Quoniam non solum viris ecclesiasticis, sed etiam quibuslibet aliis periculosum est usurarum lucris intendere, auctoritate tibi praesentium duximus iniungendum, ut eos, qui de possessionibus vel arboribus, quas tenere in pignore noscuntur, sortem suam deductis expensis inde iam receperunt, ad eadem pignora restituenda sine usurarum exactione ecclesiastica districtione compellas.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Manifest usurers cannot be admitted to the communion of the altar, ecclesiastical burial, or the offering of an oblation; and clerics acting contrary to this are to be punished as is stated here.

The same, in the Lateran Council.

Because in almost every place the crime of usuries has become so strong that many, setting aside other businesses, practice usuries as if lawfully, and pay no attention to how they are condemned by the page of each testament, we therefore decree that manifest usurers are neither to be admitted to the communion of the altar nor, if they die in this sin, to receive Christian burial, and that no one is to receive their offerings. But whoever shall have received them or delivered them for Christian burial is both to be compelled to return what he received and to remain suspended from the exercise of his office until he makes satisfaction according to the judgment of his bishop.

Manifesti usurarii ad communionem altaris et ecclesiasticam sepulturam et oblationem offerendam admitti non possunt, et clerici, contra hoc facientes, puniantur, ut hic dicitur.

Idem in concilio Lateranensi. Quia in omnibus fere locis ita crimen usurarum invaluit, ut multi, aliis negotiis praetermissis, quasi licite usuras exerceant, et qualiter utriusque testamenti pagina condemnentur, nequaquam attendant: ideo constituimus, quod usurarii manifesti nec ad communionem admittantur altaris, nec Christianam, si in hoc peccato decesserint, accipiant sepulturam, sed nec oblationes eorum quisquam accipiat. Qui autem acceperit, vel Christianae tradiderit sepulturae, et ea, quae acceperit, reddere compellatur, et, donec ad arbitrium episcopi sui satisfaciat, ab officii sui maneat exsecutione suspensus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: It can be understood in two ways: first concerning the lender, and second concerning the recipient of usuries; and according to the first understanding it says this: it is not lawful to receive usuries even for a pious work when through the receipt cause is given for usury to be committed. It says this. Or thus, and more clearly: it is not lawful to induce anyone to practice usuries, even for a pious work. And this reading is gathered from the decision.

The same, to the Archbishop of Palermo.

Concerning that, moreover, which your affection asked of us—whether a dispensation can be made for receiving money at usury so that the poor who are held in captivity by the Saracens can be freed through that same money—by these present letters to you We respond that, since the page of each testament detests the crime of usuries, we do not see that any dispensation can be made concerning this, because, since sacred scripture forbids a person even to lie for the life of another, much more must one be forbidden to become involved in the crime of usuries even for redeeming the life of a captive.

Potest intelligi dupliciter, primo in mutuante, secundo recipiente usuras, et secundum primum intellectum hoc dicit: Etiam pro opere pio non licet usuras recipere, quando per receptionem datur causa usurae committendae. H. d. Vel sic et clarius: Non licet inducere quem ad exercendum usuras etiam pro pio opere. Et ista lectura colligitur ex decisa.

Idem Panormitano Archiepiscopo.

Super eo vero, quod a nobis tua dilectio postulavit, utrum possit in recipienda pecunia ad usuram dispensatio fieri, ut pauperes, qui in Sarracenorum captivitate tenentur, per eandem possint pecuniam liberari, praesentibus tibi literis Respondemus, quod, quum usurarum crimen utriusque testamenti pagina detestetur, super hoc dispensationem aliquam posse fieri non videmus, quia, quum scriptura sacra prohibeat, vel pro alterius vita mentiri, multo magis prohibendus est quis, ne etiam pro redimenda vita captivi usurarum crimine involvatur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Usurers who are solvent are compelled by the penalties of the Lateran Council to restore usuries, even those that they received before the council; and when means do not exist, possessions bought from money lent at interest ought to be sold, and satisfaction ought to be made to those entitled to receive it.

The same, to the Archbishop of Salerno.

When you, as you assert, commanded that manifest usurers, namely those who died in that sin, according to our decree that was recently promulgated in council, be deprived of the communion of the altar and ecclesiastical burial until they return what they had received so wickedly, certain of them say that their own resources are insufficient to pay the usuries received. Others, however, promise that [they] will return the portions of the usuries that they have at hand; but they confess that they cannot return other usuries that they had extorted, since possessions were purchased from them and delivered to their children or parents. Others, however, shamelessly, in order to excuse excuses in sins, affirm that only those usuries are to be restored which were received after our prohibition, and that no persons ought to be compelled to pay usuries that they had received before our prohibition. Concerning these matters we thus respond to your fraternity: whether before or after our prohibition they extorted usuries, they are to be compelled by the penalty that we established in council to restore them to those from whom they extorted them, or to their heirs, or, if these do not survive, to distribute them to the poor, provided that they have in their resources that from which they can restore them, since, according to the word of blessed Augustine, sin is not remitted unless what was taken is restored. But those who do not have in their resources that from which they can restore the usuries ought not to be chastised by any penalty, since the mark of poverty manifestly excuses them. The possessions, however, that were purchased from usuries ought to be sold, and their prices restored to those from whom the usuries were extorted, so that thus they may be freed not only from that penalty but also from the sin that they had incurred through the extortion of usuries.

Usurarii, qui sunt solvendo, coguntur per poenas Lateranensis concilii usuras restituere, etiam quas ante concilium receperunt; et facultatibus non exstantibus debent possessiones, emptae ex pecunia foenebri, vendi, et debentibus recipere satisfieri. Idem Salernitano Archiepiscopo.

Quum tu, sicut asseris, manifestos usurarios, scilicet qui in illo peccato decesserint, iuxta decretum nostrum, quod nuper in concilio promulgatum est, communione altaris et ecclesiastica praeceperis sepultura privandos, donec reddant quod tam prave receperant: quidam eorum dicunt, ad solvendas perceptas usuras proprias non sufficere facultates. Alii vero promittunt, [se] partes usurarum, quas habent prae manibus, reddituros; sed usuras alias, quas extorserant, quum de his possessiones comparatae sunt, et eorum filiis vel parentibus traditae, se non posse reddere confitentur. Alii vero ad excusandas excusationes in peccatis impudenter affirmant, illas duntaxat usuras restituendas, quae sunt post interdictum nostrum receptae, nec aliquos ad solvendas usuras, quas ante interdictum nostrum receperant, debere compelli. Super his fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, sive ante sive post interdictum nostrum usuras extorserint, cogendi sunt per poenam, quam statuimus in concilio, eas his, a quibus extorserunt, vel eorum heredibus restituere, vel, his non superstitibus, pauperibus erogare; dummodo in facultatibus habeant, unde ipsis possint eas restituere, quum iuxta verbum B. Augustini non remittatur peccatum, nisi restituatur ablatum. Illi autem, qui non habent in facultatibus, unde usuras valeant restituere, non debent ulla poena mulctari, quum eos nota paupertatis evidenter excuset. Possessiones vero, quae de usuris comparatae sunt, debent vendi, et ipsarum pretia his, a quibus usurae sunt extortae, restitui, ut sic non solum a poena illa, sed etiam a peccato possint, quod per usurarum extorsionem incurrerant, liberari.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who sells a thing for more than it is worth because he defers payment sins, unless it is doubtful whether at the time of payment the value of the thing will have changed, and the seller would not have been going to sell at the time when he sold. It says this according to the common understanding.

The same, to the Archbishop of Genoa.

You say that in your city it often happens that certain persons buy pepper, cinnamon, or other merchandise, which at that time is not worth more than five pounds, and promise through a public instrument that they will pay six pounds at the established term to those from whom they receive that merchandise. Although a contract of this kind cannot from such a form be deemed to bear the name of usuries, nevertheless the sellers incur sin unless it is doubtful whether that merchandise will be worth more or less at the time of payment. And therefore your citizens would consult well for their salvation if they ceased from such a contract, since the thoughts of men cannot be hidden from almighty God.

Vendens rem plus, quam valeat, quia solutionem differt, peccat, nisi dubium sit, an tempore solutionis erit valor rei variatus, et venditor non erat venditurus tempore, quo vendidit. H. d. secundum communem intellectum.

Idem Genuensi Archiepiscopo.

In civitate tua dicis saepe contingere, quod, quum quidam piper, seu cinamomum, seu alias merces comparant, quae tunc ultra quinque libras non valent, et promittunt per publicum instrumentum, se illis, a quibus illas merces accipiunt, sex libras statuto termino soluturos. Licet autem contractus huiusmodi ex tali forma non possit censeri nomine usurarum, nihilominus tamen venditores peccatum incurrunt, nisi dubium sit, merces illas plus minusve solutionis tempore valituras. Et ideo cives tui saluti suae bene consulerent, si a tali contractu cessarent, quum cogitationes hominum omnipotenti Deo nequeant occultari.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A usurer who, after admonition, does not desist, if he is a cleric, is suspended from office and benefice; if a layman, he is excommunicated.

The same.

Furthermore, you are to forbid your parishioners to receive usuries in every way, because the page of each testament detests the crime of usuries. If they should scorn to obey your admonitions, if they are clerics, you are to suspend them from office and benefice; if [however] they are laymen, you are to bind them with the bond of excommunication until worthy satisfaction.

> Usurarius monitus, non desistens, si clericus est, ab officio et beneficio suspenditur; si laicus, excommunicatur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Praeterea parochianis tuis usuras recipere omnibus modis interdicas, quia usurarum crimen utriusque testamenti pagina detestatur. Qui si monitis vestris parere contempserint, si clerici sint, eos ab officio beneficioque suspendas; si [vero] laici fuerint, usque ad dignam satisfactionem ipsos vinculo excommunicationis adstringas.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: The fruits of a thing given in pledge ought to be computed toward the principal, and it excepts one case.

The same, to the Abbot and Brothers of Saint Laurence.

The cleric C., the bearer of the present letters, complained to us that, although from a certain piece of land that his father obligated to you, after expenses were deducted, you received your principal, you nevertheless still detain that land, not without derogation from your salvation, uprightness, and reputation. Wherefore, by apostolic writings and by way of precept we command your discretion that, if you detain that land by title of pledge and have received your principal from its fruits, you return the aforesaid land to the aforesaid cleric with delay and appeal ceasing, and leave him in peace and quiet, unless perhaps that land is of the fief of your monastery.

> Fructus rei pignoratae computari debent in sortem, et excipit unum casum.
>
> Idem Abbati et Fratribus S. Laurentii. Conquestus est nobis C. clericus praesentium lator, quod, licet de quadam terra, quam pater suus vobis obligavit, sortem vestram deductis expensis receperitis, terram tamen ipsam non sine derogatione vestrae salutis, honestatis et famae nihilominus detinetis. Inde est, quod Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si terram ipsam titulo pignoris detinetis, et de fructibus eius sortem vestram recepistis, praedictam terram clerico memorato dilatione et appellatione cessante reddatis, et in pace et quiete dimittatis, nisi forte terra ipsa de feudo sit monasterii vestri.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: An heir, whether the usurer's son or an outsider, is compelled to restore usuries extorted by the deceased.

The same, to the Bishop of Piacenza.

Your fraternity led us to be consulted as to what is to be observed concerning the sons of usurers who succeed them when they have died in the crime of usuries, or concerning outsiders to whom you assert that the goods of the usurers have devolved. We therefore respond to your question by the present letters that sons are to be compelled to restore the usuries by the same coercion by which their parents, if they were living, would be compelled. We believe that this same thing is also to be exercised against outside heirs.

> Heres, usurarii filius vel extraneus, usuras, extortas per defunctum, restituere compellitur.
>
> Idem Episcopo Placentino.
>
> Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, quid sit de usurariorum filiis observandum, qui eis, in crimine usurarum defunctis, succedunt, aut de extraneis, ad quos bona usurariorum asseris devoluta. Tuae igitur quaestioni literis praesentibus respondemus, quod filii ad restituendas usuras ea sunt districtione cogendi, qua parentes sui, si viverent, cogerentur. Id ipsum etiam contra heredes extraneos credimus exercendum.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One who lends with the intention that he receive something beyond the principal is bound in the forum of the soul to restore it if he obtained anything from this. The same applies to one who does not give permission for an oath unless he receives something from it. And the same applies to one who sells a thing for more than it is worth because he defers payment.

Urban III.

Your devotion consulted us, in which we commend the solicitude of the priestly office, whether in the judgment of souls he ought to be judged as a usurer who, not otherwise intending to make the loan, lends money with the intention that, although every agreement is absent, he nevertheless receive more than the principal; and whether he is involved in the guilt of the same crime who, as is commonly said, does not otherwise grant permission for an oath until, although without exaction, he receives some emolument from it; and whether a merchant ought to be condemned by a similar penalty who sells his merchandise for a far greater price if a longer delay is extended for making payment than if the price is paid to him immediately. But because what is to be held in these cases is manifestly known from the Gospel of Luke, in which it is said, "Make a loan, hoping for nothing from it," persons of this kind, on account of the intention of gain that they have, since every usury and surplus is prohibited in the law, are to be judged to act wickedly and, in the judgment of souls, effectively induced to restore the things that were received in such a manner.

> Mutuans ea mente, ut ultra sortem aliquid recipiat, tenetur in foro animae ad illud restituendum, si ex hoc aliquid consecutus est. Idem in non dante parabolam iuramenti, nisi aliquid inde recipiat. Et idem in vendente rem plus, quam valeat, quia differt solutionem.
>
> Urbanus III. Consuluit nos tua devotio, in quo sacerdotalis officii sollicitudinem commendamus, an ille in iudicio animarum quasi usurarius debeat iudicari, qui non alias mutuo traditurus, eo proposito mutuam pecuniam credit, ut, licet omni conventione cessante, plus tamen sorte recipiat; et utrum eodem reatu criminis involvatur, qui, ut vulgo dicitur, non aliter parabolam iuramenti concedit, donec, quamvis sine exactione, emolumentum aliquod inde percipiat; et an negotiator poena consimili debeat condemnari, qui merces suas longe maiori pretio distrahit, si ad solutionem faciendam prolixioris temporis dilatio prorogetur, quam si ei in continenti pretium persolvatur. Verum quia, quid in his casibus tenendum sit, ex evangelio Lucae manifeste cognoscitur, in quo dicitur: "Date mutuum, nihil inde sperantes:" huiusmodi homines pro intentione lucri, quam habent, quum omnis usura et superabundantia prohibeatur in lege, iudicandi sunt male agere, et ad ea, quae taliter sunt accepta, restituenda, in animarum iudicio efficaciter inducendi.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A manifest usurer who appeals in order to evade restitution is not to be heard.

Innocent III, to the Prelates Established in the Kingdom of France.

How pernicious the vice of usuries is, we do not believe your discretion to be ignorant, since, besides the canonical constitutions that have issued forth in hatred of them, through the Prophet it is given to be understood that those who give their money at usury are to be repelled from the tabernacle of the Lord; and usuries are prohibited in both the new and the old testament, since Truth itself commands, "Make a loan, hoping for nothing from it," and through the Prophet it is said, "You shall not receive usury or any surplus." Wherefore, by apostolic writings We command you all that you not permit manifest usurers, especially those who are established to have publicly renounced usuries, to protect themselves by the evasion of any appeal when someone proceeds against them concerning usuries. [Given at the Lateran on the fifth day before the Kalends of November, 1198.]

> Manifestus usurarius, appellans ad subterfugiendum restitutionem, audiendus non est.
>
> Innocentius III. Praelatis in regno Franciae constitutis.
>
> Quam perniciosum sit vitium usurarum, discretionem vestram non credimus ignorare, quum praeter constitutiones canonicas, quae in earum odium emanarunt, per Prophetam detur intelligi, eos, qui suam dant pecuniam ad usuram, a tabernaculo Domini repellendos, et tam in novo quam in veteri testamento prohibitae sint usurae, quum ipsa veritas praecipiat: "Mutuum date, nihil inde sperantes," et per Prophetam dicatur: "Usuram et omnem superabundantiam non accipias." Inde est, quod universitati vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus manifestos usurarios, eos maxime, quos usuris publice renunciasse constiterit, quum aliquis eos convenerit de usuris, nullius permittatis appellationis subterfugio se tueri. [Dat. Lat. V. Kal. Nov. 1198.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Through the withdrawal of communion with Christians and through secular princes, Jews are to be compelled to restore usuries.

The same, to the Archbishop of Narbonne.

After the pitiable. (And below:) [But if any of those setting out for that place are bound by oath to furnish usuries, you, brother archbishops and bishops, throughout your dioceses, with the obstacle of appeal removed, are to compel their creditors by the same coercion, so that, completely absolving them from the oath, they desist from further exaction of usuries. But if any of the creditors shall compel them to pay usuries, with the obstacle of appeal removed you are to compel him to restore them by similar coercion.] We command [however] that Jews be compelled to remit usuries to Christians by you, sons, the secular princes and powers. And until they shall have remitted them, by a sentence of excommunication we command that all communion with them be altogether denied by all Christ's faithful, both in trade and in other matters. [Therefore, let no one altogether withdraw himself from this work, etc. Given at Rieti on the eighteenth day before the Kalends of September, 1198.]

> Per subtractionem communionis Christianorum et per principes saeculares cogendi sunt Iudaei ad usuras restituendas.
>
> Idem Narbonensi Archiepiscopo.

Post miserabilem (Et infra:) [Si qui vero proficiscentium illuc ad praestandas usuras iuramento tenetur adstricti, vos, fratres archiepiscopi et episcopi, per vestras dioeceses creditores eorum sublato appellationis obstaculo eadem districtione cogatis, ut eos a sacramento penitus absolventes, ab usurarum ulterius exactione desistant. Quod si quisquam creditorum eos ad solutionem coegerit usurarum, eum ad restitutionem earum sublato appellationis obstaculo districtione simili compellatis.] Iudaeos [vero] ad remittendas Christianis usuras per vos, filii principes et potestates compelli praecipimus saeculares. Et, donec eis remiserint, ab universis Christi fidelibus tam in mercimoniis quam in aliis per excommunicationis sententiam eis iubemus communionem omnimodam denegari. [*Ab hoc igitur opere nullus omnino se subtrahat etc. Dat. Reate XVIII. Kal. Sept. *1198.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Notwithstanding an oath furnished by a debtor not to seek the return of usuries, a judge can by virtue of his office compel the usurer to restore the usuries.

The same, to the Bishop of Modena.

We received your questions some time ago, because certain usurers of your diocese cause those to whom they give money at usury to furnish an oath that they will not seek the return of the usuries and will raise no question concerning those that they have paid. We therefore respond thus to your inquiry: after prior admonition, through ecclesiastical censure and with appeal removed, you are to compel the usurers themselves, before the payment of the usuries, to desist from exacting them, or to restore them after they have been paid, lest it happen that they obtain an advantage from their deceit and fraud, who cause the oath to be furnished for this purpose, that they may not be troubled concerning the usuries.

Non obstante iuramento de non repetendis usuris, per debitorem praestito, potest iudex ex officio suo usurarium ad restituendas usuras compellere.

Idem Mutinensi Episcopo.

Tuas dudum recepimus quaestiones, quod quidam usurarii tuae dioecesis eos, quibus dant pecuniam ad usuram, praestare faciunt iuramentum, quod usuras non repetant, et super his, quas solverint, nullam moveant quaestionem. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, ut usurarios ipsos monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compellas, ante usurarum solutionem ab earum exactione desistere, vel restituere ipsas, postquam fuerint persolutae, ne de dolo et fraude suo contingat eos commodum reportare, qui ad hoc praestari faciunt iuramentum, quod super usuris non valeant molestari.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A usurer seeking the return of usuries is not heard unless he first restores those he extorted.

The same.

Because [therefore] he who acts against the law invokes the law's assistance in vain, we decree that, if any usurer shall obtain letters from us concerning the restoration of usuries or the computation of fruits toward the principal, unless he himself first restores the usuries that he is known to have received from others, he is in no way to be heard by authority of those letters. [Given at Rome on the fifth day before the Kalends of January, 1205.]

Non auditur usurarius repetens usuras, nisi prius restituat extortas.

Idem.

Quia [igitur] frustra legis auxilium invocat qui committit in legem: statuimus, ut, si quis usurarius a nobis literas impetraverit super restituendis usuris, vel fructibus computandis in sortem, nisi prius ipse restituerit usuras, quas ab aliis noscitur recepisse, auctoritate literarum ipsarum nullatenus audiatur. [Dat. Romae V. Kal. Ian. 1205.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: One convicted of usurious depravity through public report and other arguments can be declared a usurer and restrained as a manifest usurer according to the disposition of the Lateran Council.

The same, to the Bishop of Auxerre.

Although there are very many usurers in your diocese concerning whom it is not in the least doubted that they are manifest usurers, no accuser appears against them on account of fear of princes and powerful persons who protect them, nor have those same persons been condemned by sentence. You therefore decided to seek from the oracle of the Apostolic See how you can proceed against them. But we respond thus to your fraternity: although no accuser appears against them, nevertheless, if by other arguments it shall have been established that they are manifest usurers, you will be able freely to exercise against them the penalty issued against usurers in the Lateran Council. [Given at the Lateran on the seventeenth day before the Kalends of June, in the tenth year, 1207.]

Convictus de usuraria pravitate per formam et alia argumenta, potest manifestari usurarius, et tanquam manifestus usurarius compesci secundum dispositionem Lateranensis concilii. Idem Altissiodorensi Episcopo.

Quum in dioecesi tua sint quam plurimi usurarii, de quibus minime dubitatur, quin sint usurarii manifesti, contra quos propter timorem principum et potentum, qui tuentur eosdem, nullus accusator apparet, nec iidem sunt per sententiam condemnati, qualiter procedere valeas contra ipsos, oraculum duxisti sedis apostolicae requirendum. Nos autem Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, licet contra eos non appareat accusator, si tamen aliis argumentis illos constiterit esse usurarios manifestos, in eos poenam in Lateranensi concilio contra usurarios editam libere poteris exercere. [Dat. Lat. XVII. Kal. Iun. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A husband receiving a pledge for a promised dowry is not bound to compute the fruits toward the principal. It says this; it is a singular case and is not proved elsewhere.

The same.

Salutarily. (And below:) Indeed, we do not believe that a son-in-law is to be compelled to compute toward the principal the fruits of the possessions that were obligated to him in pledge by his father-in-law for a dowry treated as paid, since frequently the fruits of the dowry are not sufficient to support the burdens of marriage.

Maritus, recipiens pignus pro dote promissa, non tenetur fructus in sortem computare. H. d. est casus singularis, et alibi non probatur.

Idem.

Salubriter (Et infra:) Sane generum ad fructus possessionem, quae sibi a socero sunt pro numerata dote pignori obligatae, computandos in sortem non credimus compellendum, quum frequenter dotis fructus non sufficiant ad onera matrimonii supportanda.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: One seeking the return of usuries is not heard unless he restores those extorted by himself or another from whomsoever he derives his cause.

The same, to the Bishop of Bologna.

The layman Michael sent his complaint to us that M. and certain other citizens of Bologna extorted many things from him and from his father, whose heir he became, in the name of usuries. (And below:) You are to take very attentive care that you do not proceed in that business by our authority unless the said complainant has restored, or still restores, any usuries that he himself or his father at any time extorted.

Repetens usuras non auditur, nisi restituat extortas per se, vel per alium, a quocunque causam habeat.

Idem Episcopo Bononiensi. Michael laicus suam nobis querimoniam destinavit, quod M. et quidam alii Bononienses cives multa extorserunt ab eo, et a patre suo, cuius heres exstitit, nomine usurarum. (Et infra:) Attentius provisurus, ne auctoritate nostra in negotio procedas eodem, nisi dictus conquerens restituerit vel adhuc restituat, si quas aliquando ipse vel pater eius extorsit usuras.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: Jews also are to be compelled to restore usuries extorted from Christians and to pay tithes or offerings from their possessions.

The same, in the General Council.

The more the Christian religion is restrained from the exaction of usuries, the more gravely the perfidy of the Jews grows strong in these matters, so that within a short time they exhaust the resources of Christians. Wishing, therefore, to provide in this respect for Christians, lest they be inhumanly burdened by Jews, we establish by synodal decree that, if henceforth under any pretext Jews shall have extorted grave or immoderate usuries from Christians, participation with Christians is to be withdrawn from them until they have made suitable satisfaction for the immoderate burden. Wherefore Christians, if there is need, are to be compelled through ecclesiastical censure and with appeal set aside to abstain from trade with them. We moreover enjoin upon princes that they are not on this account to be hostile to Christians, but rather are to take care to restrain the Jews from so great a burden. By this same penalty we decree that Jews are to be compelled to make satisfaction to churches for tithes and offerings due, which the churches were accustomed to receive from Christians from houses and other possessions before they came to the Jews by any title, so that the churches may thus be preserved without loss.

Etiam Iudaei compellendi sunt ad restituendas usuras extortas a Christianis, et ad solvendas decimas vel oblationes de eorum possessionibus.

Idem in concilio generali. Quanto amplius Christiana religio ab exactione compescitur usurarum, tanto gravius super his Iudaeorum perfidia inolescit, ita, quod brevi tempore Christianorum exhauriunt facultates. Volentes igitur in hac parte prospicere Christianis, ne a Iudaeis immaniter aggraventur, synodali decreto statuimus, ut, si de cetero quocunque praetextu Iudaei a Christianis graves immoderatasve usuras extorserint, Christianorum eis participium subtrahatur, donec de immoderato gravamine satisfecerint competenter. Unde Christiani, si opus fuerit, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione postposita compellantur ab eorum commerciis abstinere. Principibus autem iniungimus, ut propter hoc non sint Christianis infesti, sed potius a tanto gravamine studeant cohibere Iudaeos. Hac eadem poena Iudaeos decernimus compellendos ad satisfaciendum ecclesiis, pro decimis et oblationibus debitis, quas a Christianis de domibus et possessionibus aliis percipere consueverant, antequam ad Iudaeos quocunque titulo devenissent, ut sic ecclesiae conserventur indemnes.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: He is a usurer who receives from a debtor something beyond the principal, even if he assumes the risk upon himself. It says this first. A purchaser of a thing below the just price is not a usurer if at that time it is probably doubted whether at the time of payment the thing will be worth more or less. It says this second. By reason of doubt, one is excused who, because he defers payment of the price, sells a thing for more than it is worth, if he was not otherwise going to sell it. It says this third.

Gregory IX, to Brother R.

One who lends a fixed quantity of money to a person sailing or going to a fair, intending, because he assumes the risk upon himself, to receive something beyond the principal, is to be deemed a usurer. Likewise, one who gives ten solidi so that at another time the same number of measures of grain, wine, or oil are returned to him—which, although they are then worth more, it is probably doubted whether at the time of payment they will be worth more or less—ought not on this account to be considered a usurer. By reason of this doubt, he too is excused who sells cloth, grain, wine, oil, or other merchandise so that at a fixed term he may receive for it more than it is worth at that time, provided, nevertheless, that at the time of the contract he had not been going to sell it.

Usurarius est, qui a debitore recipit aliquid ultra sortem, etiamsi suscipiat in se periculum. H. d. primo. Non est usurarius emptor rei minus iusto pretio, si tunc verisimiliter dubitetur, an tempore solutionis plus vel minus sit res valitura. H. d. secundo. Propter dubium excusatur is, qui ex eo, quod differt solutionem pretii, vendit rem plus, quam valeat, si non erat eam alias venditurus. Hoc dicit tertio.

Gregorius IX. Fratri R.

Naviganti vel eunti ad nundinas certam mutuans pecuniae quantitatem, pro eo, quod suscipit in se periculum, recepturus aliquid ultra sortem, usurarius est censendus. Ille quoque, qui dat X. solidos, ut alio tempore totidem sibi grani, vini vel olei mensurae reddantur, quae licet tunc plus valeant, utrum plus vel minus solutionis tempore fuerint valiturae, verisimiliter dubitatur, non debet ex hoc usurarius reputari. Ratione huius dubii etiam excusatur, qui pannos, granum, vinum, oleum vel alias merces vendit, ut amplius, quam tunc valeant, in certo termino recipiat pro eisdem; si tamen ea tempore contractus non fuerat venditurus.

Title XX: On the Crime of Forgery

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A false witness injures three: God, the judge, and the party; and not only one who tells a lie is false, but also one who conceals the truth.

Augustine.

A false witness is liable to three persons: first to God, whose presence he contemns; then to the judge, whom he deceives by lying; lastly to the innocent person, whom he injures by false testimony. Each is guilty, both he who conceals the truth and he who tells a lie, because the former does not wish to benefit and the latter desires to harm.

> DE CRIMINE FALSI.
>
> Testis falsidicus tres laedit, Deum, iudicem et partem, et falsus est non solum, qui mendacium dicit, sed etiam, qui veritatem occultat.
>
> Augustinus.
>
> Falsidicus testis tribus personis est obnoxius, primum Deo, cuius praesentiam contemnit; deinde iudici, quem mentiendo fallit; postremo innocenti, quam falso testimonio laedit. Uterque reus est, et qui veritatem occultat, et qui mendacium dicit, quia et ille prodesse non vult, et iste nocere desiderat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A sentence rendered through false letters ought not to be committed to execution.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Worcester.

Concerning the fact that you were unwilling to commit to execution a sentence rendered by authority of false letters, we commend your prudence very greatly, commanding that, whenever any writings sent under our name appear to you liable to be refuted as false, you place no faith in them and do not observe what shall have been commanded through them, but cause the one who presented them to be carefully detained.

> Sententia, lata per falsas literas, non debet exsecutioni mandari. Lucius III. Vigoriensi Episcopo.
>
> Super eo vero, quod sententiam auctoritate literarum falsarum latam noluisti exsecutioni mandare, tuam plurimum prudentiam commendamus, mandantes, ut quoties aliqua scripta sub nomine nostro destinata redarguenda videris falsitatis, nullam eis adhibeas fidem, et quod per ipsas mandatum fuerit non observes, sed eum, qui praesentaverit, retineri facias diligenter.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A cleric who forges a prince's seal is deposed. Likewise, a mark is impressed upon him, and he is sent into exile.

Urban III.

It came to our hearing, through your report, that, when you had committed to imprisonment certain perverse clerics who had forged the seal of our dearest son in Christ, Philip, the illustrious King of the French, you decided to seek counsel from the Apostolic See as to what ought to be done by you concerning them.

Wherefore we, on the counsel of our brothers, respond thus to your fraternity: you are not to cause a member to be removed from them or a corporal penalty to be inflicted upon them through which they might incur danger of death; but, after they have first been degraded from their own orders, you are to cause some mark to be impressed upon them as a sign of the crime, by which they may be known among others, and, compelling them to abjure that province, permit them to depart.

> Clericus, falsans sigillum principis, deponitur. Item ei character imprimitur, et in exsilium mittitur.
>
> Urbanus III. Ad audientiam nostram te significante pervenit, quod, quum quosdam perversos clericos, qui falsaverant sigillum carissimi in Christo filii nostri Philippi regis illustris Francorum, carcerali custodiat mancipaveris, quid faciendum sit tibi de ipsis, a sede apostolica duxisti consilium inquirendum. Unde nos Fraternitati tuae de fratrum nostrorum consilio taliter respondemus, ut eis nec membrum auferri, nec poenam infligi facias corporalem, per quam periculum mortis possint incurrere; sed eis prius a suis propriis ordinibus degradatis, in signum maleficii characterem aliquem imprimi facias, quo inter alios cognoscantur, et provinciam ipsam eos abiurare compellens, abire permittas.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One present at the Curia is not to receive apostolic letters except from the hands of the Pope or of officials deputed by him; nevertheless, persons of distinction will be able to receive them through messengers, but from the hands of the aforesaid persons. One acting contrary to this, if a layman, is subject to excommunication; if a cleric, he is deposed from office and benefice. It says this as far as § Adding. — § 1. By the penalty of excommunication it provides against those who do not surrender or destroy false letters within twenty days; and absolution is reserved to the Pope, and one made contrary to this is not valid. It says this. Abbas.

Innocent III.

Harsh commands [and sometimes unjust appointments are asserted and wondered at by many to issue from the Apostolic See, and they place blame upon it in this, in which its sincerity, wholly ignorant of blame, is excused by innocence. For we, more frequently occupied with greater affairs and bearing by virtue of our office the care of all, through which we are debtors to all, since we cannot satisfy immediately all those pressing upon us, certain persons, because they cannot be heard—straying from the path of justice or extending the license of their petition beyond what uprightness permits—burst forth into the impulse of their own will; and, recurring with the studied malice of their mind to their devices of falsehood and arts of perdition, they endeavor through the cunning of a false appearance to blacken and deform the brightness of apostolic purity. How many and how great evils arise from the device of this falsehood, since through it both innocent persons are sometimes condemned and guilty persons are absolved from the crimes charged, and also the authority of the Apostolic See is injured, the evident malice of the matter itself declares. Although falsehood of this kind can for some time be hidden with the works of darkness, nevertheless, because through it an injury is especially inflicted upon the blessed Apostles, he from whom, in their person, the Roman Church received authority over all churches—whence also our bull, through which the business of the whole Christian body is conducted, is marked beforehand with the image of their heads—does not permit the destruction caused by so great a crime to be concealed any longer to their so great prejudice.] For it recently happened in the City that certain persons, practicing the cunning of falsehood more perniciously, were detected in their iniquities, so that we found among them both bulls under our name and under that of Pope Celestine, our predecessor of good memory, which they had falsely fashioned, and very many letters marked with bulls, [and, having captured them, we still detain them in prison.] But we, always wishing with paternal solicitude to provide for the honor of the Roman Church and the utility of all, on the common counsel of our brothers, Decree, and under penalty of excommunication and suspension from order and benefice more strictly prohibit, that henceforth no one at the Apostolic See receive our letters except from us or from the hands of those who by our mandate are deputed to that office. But if a person shall have been of such authority that it is fitting for him to receive our letters through a messenger, let him send a suitable messenger himself to our chancery or to us ourselves, through whom he is to receive apostolic letters according to the prescribed form. But if anyone shall have been a transgressor of our mandate in this respect, if he is a layman, let him be subject to excommunication; if a cleric, let him be condemned to suspension from his office and benefice. [But because, as we learned from the forgers themselves, the falsehood of their wickedness has been spread in many ways, through letters transmitted by them both to your regions and to other regions, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity and strictly enjoin upon you that you summon a provincial council, in which you are solemnly and generally to establish that it be publicly declared throughout the individual parishes that, if anyone shall have obtained letters from the Apostolic See whose tenor could be suspect and wishes to use them, in order that he may escape the established penalty, first a comparison of the false bull with a true one is to be made; and, if he shall find it to be marked by falsehood, he is not to delay presenting those same letters to the diocesan bishop, abbot, or archdeacon of the place, who, after the truth has been ascertained, is to subject the person who brought back such letters, if a layman, to excommunication; but if a cleric, is to suspend him from office and benefice.]

§ 1. To these things Adding, we decree that you promulgate a general sentence of excommunication, which you are to cause to be renewed frequently throughout the individual parishes: that, if anyone knows himself to possess false letters, within twenty days he is either to destroy those letters or surrender them, if he wishes to escape the penalty of excommunication; and we do not wish that penalty to be relaxed by anyone without our special mandate, except perhaps at the point of death. Nor, even if absolution shall have been presumed contrary to this, is it to have any validity, lest perhaps, after our time, falsehood meanwhile concealed may be able to generate prejudice for anyone. [But concerning the rest, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of June, in the first year of our pontificate, 1198.]

> Exsistens in curia literas apostolicas non recipiat, nisi de manibus Papae, vel officialium ab ipso deputatorum; personae tamen solennes per nuncios recipere poterunt, de manibus tamen praedictorum. Contra faciens, si laicus est, excommunicationi subiacet; si clericus, ab officio et beneficio deponitur. Hoc dicit usque ad § Adiicientes. - § 1. Per excommunicationis poenam providet contra non resignantes, nec destruentes literas falsas infra XX. dies; et absolutio Papae reservatur, et contra factum non tenet. H. d. Abbas.
>
> Innocentius III. Dura saepe mandata [et institutiones interdum iniquas a sede apostolica emanare multi arguunt et mirantur, et in hoc ei culpam imponunt, in quo sinceritas eius culpae prorsus ignara per innocentiam excusatur. Nos etenim circa maiora negotia frequentius occupati, et curam universorum ex officio nostro gerentes, per quod sumus omnibus debitores, quum omnibus apud nos instantibus in continenti satisfacere non possimus, quidam eo, quod a iustitiae semita aberrantes aut ultra, quam permittit honestas, suae petitionis licentiam extendentes, exaudiri non possunt, in motum propriae voluntatis irrumpunt, et ad sua ingenia falsitatis et artes perditionis cum animi exquisita malitia recurrentes, per falsae astutiam speciei candorem puritatis apostolicae denigrare ac depravare nituntur. Ex cuius falsitatis ingenio quot et quanta mala proveniant, quum per eam et innocentes quandoque damnentur, et rei ab obiectis criminibus absolvantur, nec non et apostolicae sedis laedatur auctoritas, ipsa rei evidens malitia protestatur. Licet autem huiusmodi falsitas aliquamdiu possit cum operibus tenebrarum abscondi, tamen, quia per eam beatis Apostolis speciatim infertur iniuria, ille, a quo in persona eorum Romana ecclesia auctoritatem super ecclesiis universis accepit, unde et bulla nostra, per quam totius negotia Christianitatis aguntur, capitum ipsorum charactere praesignatur, perniciem tanti sceleris non patitur in tantum praeiudicium eorum diutius occultari.] Accidit enim nuper in Urbe, quod quidam, falsitatis astutiam perniciosius exercentes, in suis fuere iniquitatibus deprehensi, ita, quod bullas tam sub nomine nostro, quam bonae memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri, quas falso confinxerant, et quam plures literas bullis signatas invenerimus apud eos, [ipsosque captos adhuc in carcere detinemus.] Nos autem, semper honori Romanae ecclesiae et utilitati omnium paterna volentes sollicitudine providere, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio Statuimus, et sub excommunicationis poena et suspensionis ordinis et beneficii districtius inhibemus, ne quis apud sedem apostolicam de cetero literas nostras nisi a nobis, vel de manibus illorum recipiat, qui de mandato nostro ad illud sunt officium deputati. Si vero persona tantae auctoritatis exstiterit, ut ipsam deceat per nuncium literas nostras recipere, nuncium ipsum ad cancellariam nostram vel ad nos ipsos mittat idoneum, per quem literas apostolicas iuxta formam praescriptam recipiat. Si quis autem in hac parte mandati nostri transgressor exstiterit, si laicus fuerit, excommunicationi subiaceat; si clericus, officii et beneficii sui suspensione damnetur. [Verum quia, sicut a falsariis ipsis accepimus tam ad partes vestras, quam ad ceteras regiones per literas transmissas ab eis suae iniquitatis falsitas multipliciter est diffusa, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus et districte praecipimus, quatenus provinciale concilium evocetis, in quo solenniter et generaliter statuatis, ut per singulas parochias publice proponatur, quod, si quis a sede apostolica literas impetraverit, quarum tenor possit esse suspectus, et eis uti voluerit, ut statutam poenam evadat, primo fiat collatio de falsa bulla cum vera, et si eam invenerit falsitate notandam, episcopo dioecesano, abbati vel archidiacono loci easdem literas non differat praesentare, qui veritate comperta illum, qui tales literas reportavit, si laicus fuerit, excommunicationi subiiciat; si clericus, eum ab officio beneficioque suspendat.] § 1. Ad haec Adiicientes statuimus, ut generalem excommunicationis sententiam promulgetis, quam per singulas parochias faciatis frequentius innovari, quod, si quis falsas literas se habere cognoscit, infra viginti dies literas illas aut destruat, aut resignet, si poenam excommunicationis voluerit evadere; quam, nisi forsan in mortis articulo, sine speciali mandato nostro a quoquam nolumus relaxari. Nec, etiamsi praesumpta fuerit contra hoc absolutio, quicquam habeat firmitatis, ne forte post tempora nostra falsitas interim occultata cuiquam valeat praeiudicium generare. [*Ceterum etc. Dat. Romae ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. I. *1198.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: It lays down nine methods of falsifying papal letters.

The same, to the Archbishop and Canons of Milan.

Although we consider ourselves insufficient in life and knowledge for the governance of the Apostolic See, which by the Lord's gift is the mother and teacher of all churches, nevertheless, insofar as the Lord shall have granted us in his mercy, we have proposed to abstain from those things through which derogation could deservedly be made against us; although, because of the defect of human weakness, we cannot always and in all things imitate the form of perfection in such a way that something does not at some time creep into our works that can be imputed to less circumspect providence—something that nevertheless happens not deliberately or with certain knowledge, but sometimes from ignorance or excessive occupation. [You indeed informed us through your letters that, when certain letters had been presented to you through which we appeared strictly to command you to receive I. of Cimilian., a cleric of your church, as canon and brother, and not to call anyone else as canon until he had fully obtained the benefit of a prebend, after the tenor of those letters had been diligently inspected, you scarcely believed that they had proceeded with our knowledge, or, if they had proceeded, that they had been obtained through excessive importunity.]

But when, as provident and discreet men, you sent those same letters back to our presence so that from their inspection we might know more fully whether they had proceeded with our knowledge, we found more in them than your discretion had suspected. For although we began to doubt somewhat concerning the style of composition and the form of the writing, nevertheless we found the bull to be genuine, which at first led us into vehement wonder, since we knew that the letters themselves had by no means issued with our knowledge. Therefore, examining the bull more diligently on each side, we found it somewhat swollen in the upper part, which adheres to the cord. And when we caused the cord to be drawn a little, without any violence, from the swollen side, the bull remaining on the other cord, the cord on that side was torn away from it without any difficulty; at its end an indication of cutting was still apparent. Through this we plainly detected that the bull itself had been extracted from other letters and inserted into these through the vice of falsehood, as you will recognize more fully from the letters themselves, which for greater certainty we have decided to send back to you.

[Since, therefore, so great an offense ought not to be left in any way unpunished, by apostolic writings we command your discretion and strictly enjoin upon you that, unless within twenty days after receipt of these letters, having been admonished by you, the said I. shall come to our presence to make satisfaction with the testimony of your letters, from that time you suspend him from every ecclesiastical benefice and clerical office, with the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal removed, or, if he lacks a benefice, bind him with a sentence of anathema; since he is not easily to be believed immune from this fault, because neither through his brothers nor his blood relatives could he induce us, although frequently entreated, to send you our letters concerning this. From this he could have recognized sufficiently the fraud of the author, even if he himself was not the principal forger, especially since he is said to have been present at the time when, on the common counsel of our brothers, we publicly established against forgers, among other things firmly prohibiting under penalty of excommunication that anyone receive apostolic letters except from our hand or from that of our bullator, with the sole exception of those to whom, on account of the eminence of their dignity, we granted that they could accomplish the same thing through faithful and known messengers.]

But in order that you yourselves may henceforth be able to detect the varieties of falsehood of this kind concerning our letters, which we have detected thus far, we have decided to express them to you in the present letters.

The first kind of falsehood is this: that a false bull is attached to false letters.

The second: that the cord is drawn entirely out of a genuine bull and, after another cord is inserted, is attached to false letters.

The third: that the cord, cut from the side on which the parchment is folded, is inserted with the genuine bull into false letters, and is restored beneath the same fold with a cord of similar hemp.

The fourth: when from the upper part of the bull one part of the cord is cut beneath the lead and, after being attached to false letters through the same cord, is carried back beneath the lead.

The fifth: when, after sealed letters have been delivered, something in them is altered by a fine erasure.

The sixth: when the writing of letters to which a genuine bull had been attached is wholly effaced or erased with water or wine, and the same parchment, whitened anew with lime and other things according to the customary craft, is rewritten.

The seventh: when, to a parchment to which a genuine bull had been attached and which has been wholly effaced or scraped, another exceedingly thin written parchment of the same size is joined with very strong glue.

We also do not consider immune from the crime of falsehood those who, contrary to our constitution, knowingly receive our letters not from our hand or that of our bullator.

Likewise, those who, approaching the bull, carefully cast in false letters so that they may be sealed with a genuine bull along with the others.

But these two kinds of falsehood cannot easily be detected unless the falsehood is recognized either in the manner of composition, the form of the writing, or the quality of the parchment. In the other cases, however, a diligent investigator will be able to observe the falsehood more diligently either in the joining of the cords, the comparison of the bull, or its movement or bluntness, especially if the bull is not level, but is more swollen in one place and more depressed in another. [But if, etc. Given at Spoleto on the fourth day before the Nones of September, 1198.]

> Ponit novem modos falsandi literas papales.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo et Canonicis Mediolanensibus.
>
> Licet ad regimen apostolicae sedis, quae dante Domino universarum ecclesiarum mater est et magistra, insufficientes nos vita et scientia reputemus, quantum tamen nobis Dominus in sua miseratione concesserit, ab his proposuimus abstinere, per quae nobis possit merito derogari; quanquam ex infirmitatis humanae defectu non sic formam perfectionis semper et in omnibus imitari possimus, quin, aliquid aliquando in nostris subrepat operibus, quod minus circumspectae providentiae valeat imputari; quod tamen non ex industria vel scientia certa, sed interdum ex ignorantia vel nimia occupatione contingit. [Significastis siquidem nobis per literas vestras, quod, quum quaedam vobis fuissent literae praesentatae, per quas vobis districte praecipere videbamur, ut I. de Cimilian. clericum ecclesiae vestrae in canonicum reciperetis et fratrem, nec aliquem alium in canonicum vocaretis, donec ipse praebendae beneficium plenarie fuisset adeptus, earum tenore diligenter inspecto vix eas credidistis de nostra conscientia processisse, vel, si etiam processerunt, per nimiam fuisse importunitatem obtentas.] Ceterum quum easdem literas, sicut viri providi et discreti ad nostram remisissetis praesentiam, ut ex earum inspectione plenius nosceremus, utrum ex nostra conscientia processissent, plus in eis invenimus, quam vestra fuisset discretio suspicata. Nam licet in stilo dictaminis et forma scripturae aliquantulum coeperimus dubitare, bullam tamen veram invenimus, quod primum nos in vehementem admirationem induxit, quum literas ipsas sciremus de nostra conscientia nullatenus emanasse. Bullam igitur hinc inde diligentius intuentes, in superiori parte, quae filo adhaeret, eam aliquantulum tumentem reperimus. Et quum filum ex parte tumenti sine violentia qualibet aliquantulum attrahi fecissemus, bulla in filo altero remanente, filum ex parte illa fuit ab ipsa sine qualibet difficultate avulsum, in cuius summitate adhuc etiam incisionis indicium apparebat. Per quod liquido deprehendimus, bullam ipsam ex aliis literis extractam fuisse, ac illis per vitium falsitatis insertam, sicut ex literis ipsis plenius agnoscetis, quas ad maiorem certitudinem vobis duximus remittendas. [Quum igitur tantus excessus relinqui non debeat aliquatenus impunitus, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus et districte praecipimus, quatenus dictum I., nisi infra XX. dies post harum susceptionem a vobis commonitus ad praesentiam nostram cum testimonio literarum vestrarum satisfacturus accesserit, extunc ab omni ecclesiastico beneficio et clericali officio, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo, suspendatis, vel, si beneficio caret, anathematis eum sententia innodetis, quum ab hac culpa non de facili sit credendus immunis, quum nec per fratres, nec per consanguineos nostras nos, licet saepius rogatos, potuisset inducere, ut super hoc nostras vobis literas mitteremus. Ex quo fraudem auctoris, etsi principalis falsarius ipse non fuerit, sufficienter agnoscere potuisset, praesertim quum eo tempore praesens fuisse dicatur, quo contra falsarios de communi fratrum consilio publice constituimus inter cetera, sub poena excommunicationis firmiter inhibentes, ne quis literas apostolicas nisi de manu nostra vel bullatoris nostri reciperet, illis duntaxat exceptis, quibus propter dignitatis excellentiam indulsimus, ut per nuncios fideles et notos id ipsum possent efficere.] Ut autem varietates* huiusmodi* falsitatis circa nostras literas, quas hactenus deprehendimus, vos ipsi de cetero deprehendere valeatis, eas* vobis praesentibus literis duximus exprimendas. Prima species falsitatis haec est, ut falsa bulla falsis literis apponatur. Secunda, ut filum de vera bulla extrahatur ex toto, et per aliud filum immissum falsis literis inseratur. Tertia, ut filum ab ea parte, in qua charta plicatur, incisum, cum vera bulla falsis literis immittatur, sub eadem plicatura cum filo similis canapis restauratum. Quarta, quum a superiori parte bullae altera pars fili sub plumbo rescinditur, et per idem filum literis falsis inserta reducitur infra plumbum. Quinta, quum literis bullatis et redditis, in eis aliquid per rasuram tenuem immutatur. Sexta, quum scriptura literarum, quibus fuerat apposita vera bulla, cum aqua vel vino universaliter abolita seu deleta, eadem charta cum calce et aliis iuxta consuetum artificium dealbata de novo rescribitur. Septima, quum chartae, cui fuerat apposita vera bulla, totaliter abolitae vel abrasae, alia subtilissima charta eiusdem quantitatis scripta cum tenacissimo glutino coniungitur. Eos etiam a crimine falsitatis non reputamus immunes, qui contra constitutionem nostram scienter literas nostras non de nostra vel bullatoris nostri manu recipiunt. Illos quoque, qui, accedentes ad bullam, falsas literas caute proiiciunt, ut de vera bulla cum aliis sigillentur. Sed hae duae species falsitatis non possunt facile comprehendi, nisi vel in modo dictaminis, vel in forma scripturae, vel qualitate chartae falsitas cognoscatur. In ceteris autem diligens indagator falsitatem poterit diligentius* intueri, vel in adiunctione filorum, vel in collatione* bullae, vel motione vel obtusione, praesertim si bulla non sit aequalis, sed alicubi magis sit tumida, et alibi magis *depressa. [Si vero etc. Dat. Spoleti II. Non. Sept. 1198.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Papal letters are false in which a bishop is called a son, or an inferior a brother, or one person is addressed in the plural.

The same, to the Bishop of Antivari.

To how grave a penalty [those are subject who do not fear to falsify apostolic letters, and who, concealing genuine letters obtained from us, do not fear to use false letters, we believe is not hidden from your fraternity.] You should know that it came to our hearing from the letters of our dearest son in Christ, Vulcan, illustrious King of Dioclea, and also from the tenor of your letters that you sent to our beloved son John, our chaplain, at Dyrrachium, that, when Dominicus, formerly Bishop of Suacium, who before the same chaplain and our beloved son S., our subdeacon, then exercising the office of legation in those parts, had been accused of homicide and in the council at Antivari had resigned the pontifical dignity, had formerly come to our presence, returning from us he presented certain letters to you, [which we saw to be contained word for word in the letters already sent on your behalf to our aforesaid chaplain,] through which he asserted that the pontifical office had been restored to him by us. But you, placing faith in those letters, removed from that same church our venerable brother whom you are said canonically to have consecrated as bishop-elect of Suacium, and restored the aforesaid Dominicus in that church on the occasion of the false letters. But the aforesaid king, as he informed us by his letters, not believing that those letters had issued with our knowledge, commanded both Dominicus himself and the aforesaid bishop to be presented before us, humbly petitioning to be instructed by an apostolic rescript as to whatever we should decide was to be established concerning that business.

But we, examining more diligently the letters that were presented to you under our name, manifestly detected falsehood in them both in their contents and in their composition. And in this we were not a little amazed that you had believed such letters to have issued from us, since especially you ought to know that the Apostolic See observes this custom in its letters: that we call all patriarchs, archbishops, and bishops "brothers" in our letters, but all others, whether they are kings or princes or other men of whatever order, "sons." And when our letters are directed to one person alone, we never speak to him in the plural so as to place "you" or "your" in the plural, and things similar to these, in the letters themselves. But in the false letters presented to you, in the salutation you were called "beloved son in Christ," although in all the letters that we ever sent to you, you could have seen yourself called by us "venerable brother." On account of this, we wish you to be so circumspect in similar matters that through false letters you cannot again be circumvented or deceived; rather, you are to take care to examine apostolic letters more diligently, both in the bull, cord, and parchment and in the style, so that in no way do you admit genuine letters as false or false letters as genuine. [For you are to know, etc. Given at the Lateran on the Nones of December, in the third year of our pontificate, 1200.]

> Falsae sunt literae papales, in quibus episcopus vocatur filius, vel inferior frater, vel uni scribitur in plurali. Idem Attinacensi Episcopo.
>
> Quam gravi poenae subiaceant, [qui literas apostolicas falsare non timent, et veras a nobis impetratas literas occultantes, falsis uti literis non verentur, fraternitatem tuam credimus non latere.] *Ad audientiam siquidem nostram ex literis carissimi in Christo filii nostri Wulcani Diocliae regis illustris, nec non et tenore literarum tuarum, quas dilecto filio Ioanni capellano nostro, apud Durachium direxisti, noveris pervenisse, quod quum Dominicus, quondam Suacensis episcopus, qui coram eodem capellano et dilecto filio S. subdiacono nostro, tunc in partibus illis gerentibus legationis officium, fuerat de homicidio accusatus, et in concilio apud Antivarum pontificalem resignaverat dignitatem, ad nostram olim praesentiam accessisset, a nobis rediens quasdam tibi literas praesentavit, *[quas de verbo ad verbum in literis iam dicto capellano nostro ex parte tua directis perspeximus contineri,] quibus asserebat sibi a nobis pontificale officium restitutum. Tu vero, literis illis fidem adhibens, venerabilem fratrem nostrum, quem in Suacensem episcopum electum diceris canonice consecrasse, ab eadem ecclesia removisti, praefato Dominico occasione literarum falsarum in ipsa ecclesia restituto. Praefatus autem rex, sicut suis nobis literis intimavit, non credens, literas illas ex nostra conscientia emanasse, tam ipsum Dominicum quam praefatum episcopum nostro praecepit conspectui praesentari, humiliter petens rescripto apostolico edoceri, quicquid de ipso duceremus negotio statuendum. Nos vero literas, quae tibi sub nostro nomine praesentatae fuerunt, diligentius intuentes, in eis tam in continentia quam in dictamine manifeste deprehendimus falsitatem. Ac in hoc fuimus non modicum admirati, quia tu tales literas a nobis credideras emanasse, quum praesertim scire debeas, apostolicam sedem consuetudinem in suis literis hanc tenere, ut universos patriarchas, archiepiscopos et episcopos "fratres," ceteros autem, sive reges sint sive principes vel alios homines cuiuscunque ordinis, "filios" in nostris literis appellemus. Et quum uni tantum personae nostrae literae diriguntur, nunquam ei loquimur in plurali, ut "vos" sive "vester" et his similia in ipsis literis apponamus. In falsis autem literis, tibi praesentatis, in salutatione, "dilectus in Christo filius" vocabaris, quum in omnibus literis, quas aliquando tibi transmisimus, te videre potueris a nobis "fratrem venerabilem" appellatum. Propter quod sic te esse volumus in consimilibus circumspectum, ut per falsas literas denuo nequeas circumveniri vel falli, sed sic literas apostolicas studeas diligentius intueri tam in bulla, filo et charta, quam in stilo, quod veras pro falsis, vel falsas pro veris literis modo aliquo non admittas. [Scire namque etc. Dat. Lat. Non. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. III. 1200.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Those who by themselves or through others falsify letters of the Pope are excommunicated together with their supporters, and clerics are deprived of offices and benefices and are to be degraded and delivered to the secular court, by which a layman is lawfully punished. But one who uses false letters, if a cleric, is deprived of office and benefice; if a layman, he is excommunicated. It says this.

The same.

For confounding the malice of forgers, we recall that on another occasion we sent apostolic letters in which we remember that we distinguished more fully the methods of falsehood, lest anyone be able to excuse himself through ignorance. But because it sometimes happens that those presenting false letters, after they have been refuted concerning them, say in their excuse that they obtained letters of this kind through others, On the common counsel of our brothers we have decided to decree that those who wish to use our letters first examine them diligently, because, if they say that they used false letters in ignorance, their late repentance will not be able to avoid the penalties noted below. For we decree that all forgers of our letters who by themselves or through others practice the vice of falsehood are bound by the bond of anathema together with their supporters and defenders, establishing that clerics who shall have been detected as forgers are perpetually deprived of all ecclesiastical offices and benefices, in such a manner that those who practiced the vice of falsehood by themselves, after they have been degraded by an ecclesiastical judge, are to be delivered to the secular power to be punished according to lawful constitutions, by which also laymen who shall have been convicted of falsehood are to be lawfully punished. But those who use false letters under our name, if they are clerics, are to be despoiled of ecclesiastical offices and benefices; if laymen, they are to remain subject to excommunication until they make suitable satisfaction, yet in such a manner that in the former and in the latter malice is punished more gravely than negligence; and we decree that this is also to be observed concerning those who obtain false letters.

> Qui per se, vel per alios literas Papae falsant, excommunicati sunt cum suis fautoribus, et clerici officiis et beneficiis privati sunt, et degradandi et tradendi curiae saeculari, per quam laicus legitime punitur. Qui vero falsis literis utitur, si clericus est, officio et beneficio privatur; si laicus, excommunicatus est. H. d.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ad falsariorum confundendam malitiam iam alia vice recolimus apostolicas literas destinasse, in quibus falsitatis modos, ne quis se possit per ignorantiam excusare, meminimus plenius distinxisse. Quia vero nonnunquam evenit, ut falsas literas exhibentes, postquam super his fuerint redarguti, ad excusationem suam dicant, se huiusmodi literas per alios impetrasse, De communi fratrum nostrorum consilio duximus statuendum, ut, qui literis nostris uti voluerint, eas primo diligenter examinent, quoniam, si falsis literis se usos dixerint ignoranter eorum sera poenitentia evitare nequibit poenas inferius annotatas. Nos enim omnes falsarios literarum nostrarum, qui per se vel per alios vitium falsitatis exercent, cum fautoribus et defensoribus suis anathematis vinculo decernimus innodatos, statuentes, ut clerici, qui falsarii fuerint deprehensi, omnibus officiis et beneficiis ecclesiasticis perpetuo sint privati, ita, quod, qui per se falsitatis vitium exercuerint, postquam per ecclesiasticum iudicem fuerint degradati, saeculari potestati tradantur secundum constitutiones legitimas puniendi, per quam et laici, qui fuerint de falsitate convicti, legitime puniantur. Qui vero sub nomine nostro literis falsis utuntur, si clerici fuerint, officiis et beneficiis ecclesiasticis spolientur; si laici, tamdiu maneant excommunicationi subiecti, donec satisfaciant competenter, ita tamen, ut in istis et in illis malitia gravius quam negligentia puniatur, quod et de his, qui falsas literas impetrant, statuimus observandum.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A person is not presumed to falsify letters concerning simple justice, nor is he punished if, upon discovering this, he desisted from using them.

The same.

Coming [to our presence, P., the priest bearing the present letters, showed us by his statement that, when formerly he had been sent by the archpriest and clerics of Casale Nuovo concerning certain cases in which they confessed that they were unduly burdened by you, and had come to our presence, he could not obtain his letters because at that time we were burdened by illness; and after he had remained at the Apostolic See for a few days, it happened that he too became ill. But while he was confined to a bed of sickness, a certain cleric of Casale Nuovo named Azo, who at that time was staying in the City, came to him and, under the hope of affection and favor, promised him that he would obtain from us the letters that he sought. He believed the man's word and furnished the expenses that the aforesaid cleric proposed that he would spend for the letters themselves. At length he brought to him certain letters of commission addressed to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Trani and the beloved son the Abbot of Coronata. The aforesaid priest, believing them to be genuine and to have issued with our knowledge, brought them to the delegated judges. And when in the presence of those judges you impugned the letters as false, and the priest himself and the other clerics of Casale Nuovo proposed that they were genuine, you sent those letters under the seal of the aforesaid judges to our presence; we manifestly detected that they were false. On account of this we commanded you by our writings that you send to our presence for punishment the one who obtained the aforesaid letters, suspended from office and benefice. But because his conscience rendered the aforesaid priest innocent, after you suspended him from office and benefice he hastened to our presence to excuse his innocence. But when he remained with us for a longer time and sought mercy from us, alleging complete ignorance of the aforesaid falsehood, we nevertheless decided that he should be sent back to you with our letters so that he might find the mercy for which he prays. Wherefore,] by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if the apostolic letters in which falsehood was detected contain a form of simple justice, since it ought not to be presumed that anyone committed the fraud of falsehood for such letters, which can easily be obtained by anyone, [after canonical purgation has been received from the priest himself that he was not aware of the falsehood,] and he did not use [those] letters after he knew them to be false, you, restoring to him [in consideration of divine piety] his office and benefice, are not to trouble him further concerning this, [because just as it is just, etc.]

> Non praesumitur quis falsare literas de simplici iustitia, nec punitur, si, hoc comperto, destiterit illis uti. Idem.
>
> Accedens [ad praesentiam nostram P. presbyter lator praesentium sua nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum olim missus ab archipresbytero et clericis de Casali novo pro quibusdam causis, super quibus a te se fatebantur indebite praegravari, ad nostram praesentiam accessisset, nec posset pro eo, quod tunc temporis nos eramus infirmitate gravati, suas literas obtinere, moram apud sedem apostolicam faciendo post paucos dies contigit ipsum etiam infirmari. Dum autem esset in lecto aegritudinis constitutus, accessit ad eum quidam clericus de Casali novo, Azo nomine, qui tunc temporis morabatur in Urbe, et sub spe dilectionis et gratiae promisit ei se quas a nobis postulabat literas obtenturum; qui credidit verbo eius, et expensas tribuit, quas pro literis ipsis se expensurum praefatus clericus proponebat. Tandem ad eum quasdam commissionis literas ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Tranensem archiepiscopum et dilectum filium abbatem de Coronata portavit, quas praedictus presbyter credens veras esse et de nostra conscientia emanasse, ad iudices detulit delegatos. Quumque in praesentia ipsorum iudicum tu literas argueres falsitatis, et sacerdos ipse et alii clerici de Casali novo eas veras esse proponerent, tu easdem literas sub sigillo praedictorum iudicum ad nostram praesentiam direxisti, quas utique falsas esse deprehendimus manifeste, pro quo tibi per scripta nostra mandavimus, ut illum, qui praefatas literas impetravit, officio beneficioque suspensum ad nostram praesentiam dirigeres puniendum. Verum quum sacerdotem praedictum sua redderet conscientia innocentem, postquam tu eum officio et beneficio suspendisti, ad nostram festinanter accessit praesentiam ad suam innocentiam excusandam. Sed quum apud nos moram faceret longiorem, et a nobis misericordiam postularet, praefatae falsitatis omnimodam ignorantiam proponendo, ipsum tamen cum literis nostris ad te duximus remittendum, ut misericordiam inveniat, quam precatur. Inde est, quod] Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si literae apostolicae, in quibus falsitas fuerit deprehensa, de simplici iustitia formam habeant, quum praesumi non debeat, quod pro talibus literis, quae possunt facile a quibuslibet obtineri, fraudem quis commiserit falsitatis, [ab ipso presbytero canonica purgatione recepta, quod conscius non fuerit falsitatis,] nec literis [illis] usus est, postquam eas falsas esse cognovit, tu, ei [divinae pietatis intuitu] officium beneficiumque restituens, ipsum super hoc ulterius non molestes, [quia sicut iustum est etc.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: On account of the erasure of a few letters in an unsuspected place, a rescript is not proved false.

The same.

From the contents [of the letters of the beloved sons, the Abbot of Holy Cross of Waltham and Master Simon of Svelle, it became known to us that, when formerly the question pending between the beloved sons M. Phil. of Ludeleve on the one side and the clerics Robert and Vincent on the other concerning the church of Streton had been committed to them and to the late Abbot of Stratford by Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, and that same abbot and the aforesaid Vincent had alike been taken from this light, the two aforementioned judges, proceeding according to the tenor of the apostolic rescript, heard more diligently the attestations and allegations of each party. At length, when each party had renounced further proof before them and a definitive sentence was to be promulgated according to the allegations against Master P., the opposing party impugned the apostolic letters as false and steadfastly asserted that it would prove them false at the peril of the case, imposing the law upon itself that it would fall from the case unless it proved the falsehood more evidently; and, lest the judges proceed further in the case, it appealed to the Apostolic See. But when the often-mentioned Phil. produced the man through whom he had obtained the letters and firmly promised that he would prove them genuine, the aforesaid R., having been required by the same judges to express some mark of falsehood on account of which he alleged that the letters were false, wished to specify nothing else except that he called them false and asserted that they had by no means issued from our chancery. But the aforesaid judges, after receiving from R. himself sworn security that he would prosecute the accusation of falsehood as was expressed above, fixed for each party, as the term for prosecuting before us the appeal interposed, the day following the recently past Sunday on which "Rejoice, Jerusalem" is sung. But the aforesaid Robert, coming to our presence at the appointed term, after suppressing the truth concerning the falsehood of the letters and the course of the business (as is said), obtained letters from us addressed to the aforesaid judges and, proposing absolutely nothing concerning the accusation of falsehood, furtively withdrew from the Apostolic See.]

But we, examining more diligently the letters themselves that had been impugned as false, found in them no sign of falsehood or of suspicion except the erasures of a few letters, which ought by no means to have turned the mind of a wise man to doubt. Wherefore [by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you inquire more diligently into the truth concerning these matters, and,] if it shall be established to you [that the already-mentioned letters were obtained from us with the truth suppressed, and] that the aforesaid R. bound himself at the peril of the case to prove that those letters were false, since [a personal question is litigated between him and his adversary and] anyone has free faculty to renounce his right, you are to impose silence upon that R. concerning the said church. [Otherwise, after the parties have been summoned, etc. Given at the Lateran on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of November, 1198.]

> Propter paucarum literarum rasuram in loco non suspecto rescriptum non probatur falsum.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ex continentia [literarum dilectorum filiorum abbatis sanctae crucis de Waltham et magistri Simonis de Svelle nobis innotuit, quod, quum olim quaestio, quae vertebatur inter dilectos filios M. Phil. de Ludeleve ex una parte, Robertum et Vincentium clericos ex altera super ecclesia de Streton, ipsis et quondam abbati de Straford. a bonae memoriae C. Papa praedecessore nostro commissa fuisset, eodem abbate pariter et praedicto Vincentio de hac luce subtractis, praenominati duo iudices iuxta tenorem rescripti apostolici procedentes, attestationes et allegationes utriusque partis diligentius audierunt; et tandem, quum renunciatum eis ab utraque parte fuisset, et secundum allegata diffinitiva esset sententia promulganda contra magistrum P., adversa pars literas apostolicas arguit falsitatis, et eas esse falsas sub periculo causae se firmiter asseruit probaturam, sibi legem imponens, ut a causa caderet, nisi probaret evidentius falsitatem, et, ne ulterius iudices in causa procederent, sedem apostolicam appellavit. Saepedicto autem Phil. exhibente illum, per quem literas impetravit, et firmiter promittente, quod eas veras esse probaret, memoratus R. ab eisdem iudicibus requisitus, ut aliquam notam exprimeret falsitatis, propter quam falsas esse literas proponebat, nihil aliud specificare voluit, nisi quod eas falsas dixit, et asseruit a cancellaria nostra nullatenus emanasse. Supradicti vero iudices, ab ipso R. iuratoria cautione recepta, quod accusationem falsitatis prosequeretur, sicut superius est expressum, sequentem diem post dominicam, qua cantatur "Laetare Hierusalem," proximo praeteritam, ad prosequendum coram nobis appellationem interpositam utrique parti terminum praefixerunt. Ceterum praefatus Robertus in termino praetaxato ad praesentiam nostram accedens, super falsitate literarum ac processu negotii veritate suppressa (ut dicitur) a nobis ad praedictos iudices literas impetravit, et nihil prorsus de falsitatis accusatione proponens, a sede apostolica furtive recessit.] Verum nos literas ipsas, quae redargutae fuerant falsitatis, diligentius intuentes, nullum in eis falsitatis signum vel suspicionis invenimus, nisi paucarum literarum rasuras, quae nequaquam sapientis animum in dubitationem vertere debuerunt. Unde [discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus inquiratis super his diligentius veritatem, et,] si vobis constiterit, [iam dictas literas a nobis fuisse veritate tacita impetratas, et] praedictum R. obligasse se sub periculo causae, quod literas illas falsas esse probaret, quum [inter ipsum et adversarium suum quaestio personalis agatur, et] quilibet ad renunciandum iuri suo liberam habeat facultatem, ipsi R. super dicta ecclesia silentium imponatis. [*Alioquin partibus convocatis etc. Dat. Lat. XIII. Kal. Nov. *1198.]

Title XXI: On Sorceries

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Sortileges for discovering future things or making divinations are prohibited, and a penalty is imposed upon those acting contrary to this.

From the Penitential of Theodore.

Thefts are not to be sought by lot in tablets, books, or other things, nor is anyone to cast lots in a psalter, the Gospel, or other things, nor is anyone to presume to observe any divinations in any things. But one who shall have acted contrary to this is to do penance for forty days.

DE SORTILEGIIS.

Sortilegia pro futuris inveniendis vel divinationibus faciendis prohibentur, et contra facientibus poena imponitur.

Ex poenitentiali Theodori. In tabulis vel codicibus aut aliis sorte furta non sunt requirenda, aut nullus in psalterio vel in evangelio vel in aliis rebus sortiri, nec divinationes aliquas in aliquibus rebus quis observare praesumat. Qui autem contra fecerit, quadraginta dies poeniteat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A priest who seeks thefts through inspection of an astrolabe is suspended from the ministry of the altar for a time. It is commonly summarized thus; but in truth this summary is not unqualifiedly true, because he can be punished more severely.

Alexander III, to the Patriarch of Grado.

We learned from the tenor of your letters that the priest V., the bearer of the present letters, making use of youthful levity, went with a certain infamous man to a private place, intending to invoke an unclean spirit. Wherefore you suspended him from ecclesiastical office and benefice, because on this account he labored under ill repute and the crime was public and notorious. But he proposed to us by word of mouth that he had gone not with the intention of summoning a demon, but so that by inspection of an astrolabe the theft from a certain church could be recovered. But although he alleges that he did this from good zeal and from simplicity, it was nevertheless exceedingly grave, and from it he contracted no small stain of sin. But because it is safer to incline toward the right than [toward] the left, and toward mercy than toward severity, we have decided that he should be sent back to your fraternity. We command that within eight days after receipt of these letters you restore to him the church with everything taken away, and impose upon him for expiation of that offense such a penance that for one year and longer, if it shall seem good to you, yet in such a manner that it does not exceed two years, you command him to abstain from the ministry of the altar, and that thereafter he be free to exercise the priestly office.

> Presbyter, qui per inspectionem astrolabii furta requirit, ad tempus suspenditur ab altaris ministerio. Ita communiter summatur; sed in veritate haec summatio non est indistincte vera, quia acrius potest puniri. Alexander III. Grandensi Patriarchae.
>
> Ex tuarum tenore literarum accepimus, quod V. presbyter, lator praesentium, iuvenili levitate usus, cum quodam infami ad privatum locum immundum spiritum invocaturus accessit. Unde tu eum, quia propter hoc infamia laborabat, et facinus publicum et notorium erat, ab officio et beneficio ecclesiastico suspendisti. Ipse autem coram nobis viva voce proposuit, quod non ea intentione, ut vocaret daemonium, ierat, sed ut inspectione astrolabii furtum cuiusdam ecclesiae posset recuperari. Verum, licet hoc ex bono zelo et ex simplicitate se fecisse proponat: id tamen gravissimum fuit, et non modicam inde maculam peccati contraxit. Sed quoniam tutius est in dexteram quam [in] sinistram, et in misericordiam quam in severitatem declinare, ipsum fraternitati tuae duximus remittendum. Mandamus, quatenus sibi infra octo dies post harum susceptionem literarum ecclesiam cum universis ablatis restituas, et talem ei pro expiatione illius delicti poenitentiam imponas, quod per annum et amplius, si tibi visum fuerit, ita tamen, quod biennium non excedat, eum ab altaris ministerio praecipias abstinere, et extunc liberum sit ei exercere officium sacerdotis.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Not only ought an election not to be made by lots, but neither ought electors by compromise to be selected by lots.

Honorius III, to the Chapter of Lucca.

Your church having recently been deprived of a bishop, as we have learned, you, assembling as one in order to treat concerning the election of a future pontiff, having begun to hold diverse discussions concerning the manner of election, at length elected by lot one of yourselves, who by your authority elected three through whom, in place of all, a pastor should be provided for the church of Lucca. Two of these elected the third, namely Master R., which was expressly lawful for them according to the power delivered by you all. Therefore, when your proctors appeared before us concerning these matters, we, after examining such a process, although it does not lack a blemish—indeed, it is worthy of much reprehension that a lot intervened in such matters—nevertheless, on account of the prerogative of morals and learning of Master R., your canon, upon whom the votes of your church concurred for his appointment as bishop, and the affection that we have for that same church, admit the election celebrated concerning him to the favor of confirmation, condemning the use of lots in elections by a perpetual prohibition.

> Non solum electio per sortes fieri non debet, sed etiam electiones compromissariorum per sortes assumi non debent.

Honorius III. Capitulo Lucanensi. Ecclesia vestra nuper episcopo destituta, sicut comperimus, vos, convenientes in unum, ut de futuri tractaretis electione pontificis, circa modum electionis diversas incipientes habere tractatus, unum tandem elegistis ex vobis per sortem, qui tres auctoritate vestra elegit, per quos vice omnium Lucanensi provideretur ecclesiae de pastore; quorum duo tertium, magistrum R. scilicet, elegerunt, quod expresse licebat eisdem secundum traditam a vobis omnibus potestatem. Procuratoribus igitur vestris super his in nostra praesentia constitutis, nos, tali examinato processu, licet nota non careat, quin immo multa reprehensione sit dignum, quod sors in talibus intervenit, propter praerogativam tamen morum et literaturam magistri R. canonici vestri, in quem vota ecclesiae vestrae praeficiendum episcopum concurrerunt, et affectionem, quam ad eandem habemus ecclesiam, electionem celebratam de ipso ad gratiam confirmationis admittimus, sortis usum in electionibus perpetua prohibitione damnantes.

Title XXII: On Detecting Collusion

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: When an accuser desists from an accusation, a judge can by virtue of his office inquire into the crime charged.

Gregory, to All the Bishops of Corinth.

Reading over the writings of your fraternity, we learned that those who had said certain things against Bishop Hadrian had now come into friendship with the same bishop, and at present great joy has been produced for us by their unity. But because we do not permit the things that were said to remain unexamined, we direct a deacon of our see to investigate them. But because the character of the reported crime vehemently impels us so that we ought by no means to dissemble the things that we heard, especially since you indicated that the accusers and the accused made peace with one another, it is necessary for us to investigate this more subtly, lest perhaps their concord was purchased not from charity but from a reward.

DE COLLUSIONE DETEGENDA.

Accusatore desistente ab accusatione, potest iudex ex officio suo inquirere super crimine illato.

Gregorius universis Episcopis de Corintho.

Scripta fraternitatis vestrae relegentes agnovimus, quod hi, qui contra Hadrianum episcopum aliqua dixerant, modo cum eodem episcopo in amicitiam convenissent, et magna nobis ad praesens facta est de eorum unitate laetitia. Sed, quoniam ea, quae dicta sunt, indiscussa manere non patimur, sedis nostrae diaconum ad ea investiganda dirigimus. Quia vero nunciati facinoris qualitas nos vehementer impellit, ut ea, quae audivimus, dissimulare nullatenus debeamus, praesertim quum accusatores et accusatum inter se fecisse gratiam indicaveritis, hoc nobis necesse est subtilius perscrutari, ne forte non ex caritate, sed ex praemio eorum sit concordia comparata.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: When the accuser and the accused desist, the judge prosecutes.

The same.

Gregory in no way passed over crimes once heard without examination, even if the accused had returned to favor with the accuser.

Desistente accusatore et accusato iudex prosequitur.

Idem.

Crimina semel audita Gregorius indiscussa nullo modo praeteribat, etiamsi accusatus cum accusatore in gratiam rediisset.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who colludes in a benefice case ought to be deprived of the benefice.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Norwich.

We have heard that, in your episcopate and in other episcopates of England, the malice of clerics has increased to such an extent that sometimes, after collusion has been made among themselves concerning benefices that they possess, they cause themselves to be troubled by others, and afterward, so that the question may be yielded and those same clerics may possess the benefices in quiet, they pay others an annual pension from those benefices as if in the name of a settlement, so that after their deaths they may be able to claim a right in those benefices concerning which collusion was made among those same clerics. Wherefore, [because] you wished to consult us as to what is to be done by you concerning this, by apostolic writings and by way of precept we command your fraternity that, if it shall have been lawfully established to you that any clerics of your jurisdiction have committed fraud through collusion of this kind, you do not delay, with appeal removed, perpetually to despoil them of the benefices concerning which collusion was made, because it would be sufficiently unworthy and absurd if the fraud and deceit that they endeavor to commit to the prejudice of your right and that of others did not rebound to their disadvantage and loss.

Colludens in causa beneficiali privari debet beneficio.

Alexander III. Norvicensi Episcopo.

Audivimus, in episcopatu tuo et in aliis episcopatibus Angliae usque adeo clericorum malitiam excrevisse, ut interdum, inter se collusione facta super beneficiis, quae possident, se sustineant ab aliis molestari, et postea, ut quaestioni cedatur, et iidem clerici beneficia quiete possideant, quasi nomine transactionis solvunt aliis de ipsis beneficiis annuam pensionem, ut post mortem eorum in beneficiis illis, super quibus est inter eosdem clericos collusio facta, ius sibi valeant vindicare. Unde, [quia] quid sit tibi exinde faciendum, nos consulere voluisti, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si quos clericos tuae iurisdictionis per collusionem huiusmodi fraudem legitime tibi constiterit commisisse, eos beneficiis, super quibus collusum fuerit, non differas appellatione remota perpetuo spoliare, quia satis esset indignum et absonum, si fraus et dolus, quae in praeiudicium tui iuris et aliorum nituntur committere, in eorum non redundarent incommodum et iacturam.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: An absolution from charges of crimes, made through collusion, does not impede the faculty of accusing again and inquiring concerning those crimes.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of Bari and Brother Joseph, a Florentine Monk.

The outcry that rises against the Archbishop of Acerenza grows to such a degree that we can no longer dissemble it without scandal or tolerate it without danger. (And below:) Although the Apostolic See, aroused by frequent outcries, decided that an inquiry into certain of his offenses should be committed, nevertheless, on account of his evasions, as is said, the same man colluding with the investigators and examiners, and also the witnesses and the aforesaid investigators and examiners having been corrupted, not only have the aforesaid offenses thus far remained uncorrected, but he did not fear to commit worse things than the former. (And below:) We command your discretion that, if collusion and corruption of this kind shall be established, you inquire anew concerning the aforesaid and other matters, but otherwise concerning new matters only, which you shall see ought to be investigated.

> Absolutio de criminibus illatis, per collusionem facta, non impedit facultatem iterum accusandi et inquirendi de illis criminibus.
>
> Gregorius IX. Barensi Archiepiscopo et Fratri Ioseph Monacho Florentino.
>
> In tantam clamor, qui adscendit contra Acherontinum archiepiscopum, invalescit, quod dissimulare ipsum ulterius sine scandalo non valemus, nec sine periculo tolerare. (Et infra:) Licet autem sedes apostolica frequentibus clamoribus excitata inquisitionem quorundam excessuum suorum duxerit committendam, propter tergiversationes tamen ipsius, ut dicitur, eodem cum inquisitoribus et examinatoribus colludente, nec non corruptis testibus et inquisitoribus ac examinatoribus supra dictis, non solum praedicti excessus remanserunt hactenus incorrecti, verum etiam peiora prioribus committere non expavit. (Et infra:) Discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, si de huiusmodi collusione ac corruptione constiterit, ex integro super praemissis et aliis, alioquin super novis duntaxat inquiratis, quae videritis inquirenda.

Title XXIII: On the Offenses of Children

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Minors below puberty can commit offenses apart from the vice of the flesh; nevertheless, they are punished more mildly than adults.

Gregory.

Certain persons are unwilling to attribute sin to older children before the age of fourteen, when they begin to reach puberty. We would deservedly believe this if there were no sins except those that are committed with the genital members. But who would dare to affirm that thefts, lies, and perjuries are not sins? Yet childhood is full of these, although in children they appear not to be punishable in the same manner as in adults.

> DE DELICTIS PUERORUM.
>
> Impuberes praeter vitium carnis delinquere possunt; puniuntur tamen mitius quam adulti. Gregorius.
>
> Pueris grandiusculis peccatum nolunt attribuere quidam, nisi ab annis XIV., quum pubescere coeperint. Quod merito crederemus, si nulla essent peccata, nisi quae membris genitalibus admittuntur. Quis vero audeat affirmare, furta, mendacia et periuria non esse peccata? At his plena est puerilis aetas; quamvis in eis non ita, ut in maioribus, punienda videantur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A boy ought not to be punished as severely as an adult, nor is a father held for the offense of his son below puberty.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Hermon.

From the report of H., the bearer of the present letters, we understood that, when his son, who was ten years old, was shooting arrows with other boys, a certain nephew of the same H., struck by an arrow, died. The same son is said to have done this by an accidental event while he was playing among the others, although this is held uncertain. On account of this our beloved son, the Abbot of Saint Remigius, was urgently demanding one hundred solidi from the aforesaid H. according to the custom of that land. (And below:) Wherefore, because in boys that is customarily left unpunished which human laws say is to be corrected more severely in others of more advanced age, by apostolic writings and by way of precept we command your fraternity that you inquire more diligently into the matter itself, and, if it shall be established to you that the son of the aforesaid H. committed that offense before the fourteenth year of his age, you admonish the aforesaid abbot and, with appeal removed, by our authority compel him not to exact the aforesaid one hundred solidi from that H. on account of that custom, nor to seek them from him as a temporal penalty. But if the aforesaid abbot shall decide, after your admonition, to proceed against him concerning this, relying upon our authority you are to absolve Haide and his son from his proceeding, with the remedy of appeal removed.

> Puer non debet ita severe puniri, sicut maior, nec pater ex delicto filii impuberis tenetur.
>
> Alexander III. Hermonensi Episcopo.
>
> Referente nobis H. latore praesentium intelleximus, quod, quum filius eius, qui decennis erat, cum aliis pueris sagittaret, quidam nepos eiusdem H. sagitta percussus interiit, quod idem filius eius, quum inter alios luderet, fortuito casu dicitur peregisse, licet id habeatur incertum. Propter quod dilectus filius noster abbas sancti Remigii a praefato H. secundum consuetudinem illius terrae centum solidos instantius requirebat. (Et infra:) Unde, quoniam in pueris relinqui solet inultum quod in aliis provectioris aetatis humanae leges dicunt severius corrigendum, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus rem ipsam diligentius inquiras, et, si tibi constiterit, filium praedicti H. infra XIV. aetatis suae annum eundem excessum commisisse, memoratum abbatem moneas et auctoritate nostra appellatione remota compellas, ut ab eodem H. praedictos centum solidos propter illam consuetudinem non exigat, nec ab ipso pro temporali poena requirat. Quodsi praenominatus abbas eum super hoc post commonitionem tuam duxerit impetendum, tu Haide et filium suum ab eius impetitvione sublato appellationis remedio auctoritate nostra fretus absolvas.

Title XXIV: On a Cleric Who Hunts

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Hunting is prohibited to a cleric, and a penalty is imposed upon one acting contrary to this. It says this together with the following chapter.

From the Council of Orléans.

It is not lawful for a bishop, priest, or deacon to possess dogs, hawks, or things of this kind for hunting. But if anyone among such persons shall have been detained more frequently in this pleasure, if he is a bishop, let him be suspended from communion for three months; if a priest, for two; if a deacon, let him be suspended from every office.

> DE CLERICO VENATORE.
>
> Clerico prohibetur venatio, et contra facienti poena imponitur. Hoc dicit cum sequenti. Ex concilio Aurelianensi. Episcopum, presbyterum aut diaconum canes aut accipitres aut huiusmodi res ad venandum habere non licet. Quodsi quis talium personarum in hac voluptate saepius detentus fuerit, si episcopus est, tribus mensibus a communione suspendatur: si presbyter, duobus; si diaconus, ab omni officio suspendatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the immediately preceding chapter.

From the same council.

We forbid all servants of God hunts and woodland wanderings with dogs, and hawks or falcons.

Summatum est supra capitulo proximo.

Ex eodem.

Omnibus servis Dei venationes et silvaticas vagationes cum canibus, et accipitres aut falcones interdicimus.

Title XXV: On a Cleric Who Strikes

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric who repeatedly strikes another and does not desist after admonition is to be deposed.

From the Council of Agde.

If anyone in any sacred grade shall have been a striker, let him be corrected from the crime; and if he shall not have amended himself, let him be deposed.

DE CLERICO PERCUSSORE.

Clericus, saepe alium percutiens, et monitus non desistens, deponendus est.

Ex concilio Agathensi. Si quis in aliquos gradu sacro percussor exstiterit, corripiatur a crimine, et, si non emendaverit, deponatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A bishop who causes someone to be cruelly beaten is suspended from the administration of masses for two months.

Gregory, to the Bishop of Taranto.

Furthermore, because, contrary to the order of the priesthood, you appointed that a woman of the matriculae be cruelly beaten with clubs on account of her offense—although, since she died after eight months, we by no means judge that she died from it—nevertheless, because you were unwilling to have regard for your order, therefore we establish that you are to abstain from the administration of masses for two months, [during which, suspended from your office, it is fitting for you to lament what you did, etc.]

Duobus mensibus a missarum administratione suspenditur episcopus, qui crudeliter aliquem fustigari facit.

Gregorius Tarentino Episcopo.

> Praeterea, quoniam mulierem de matriculis propter delictum suum contra ordinem sacerdotii caedi crudeliter fustibus deputasti, quam licet exinde, quum post octo menses decesserit, minime arbitramur fuisse defunctam, tamen, quia ad ordinem tuum noluisti habere respectum, propterea duobus te mensibus ab administratione missarum statuimus abstinere, [in quibus ab officio tuo suspensum flere te convenit quod fecisti etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A cleric is not punished as a killer if he was himself in a conflict on the side of those repelling violence, although some persons died there and he himself threw stones, by which he himself struck no one.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Lucca.

The bearer of the present letters asserts that he was in a certain conflict, yet on the side of those who were repelling violence; in it he himself threw stones, but struck no one. Because some are said to have been killed there by others, we command him to abstain from the celebration of masses for two years. We therefore command that, if the matter shall so have occurred and other matters do not impede, when the period of time of this kind has elapsed, you admit him to the exercise of his office.

> Non punitur clericus ut homicida, si fuit ipse in conflictu pro parte violentiam repellentium, licet ibi aliqui mortui sint, et ipse lapides proiecit, ex quo nullum ipse percussit.
>
> Alexander III. Lucensi Episcopo.
>
> Praesentium lator in quodam conflictu asserit se fuisse, pro parte tamen illorum, qui violentiam repellebant; in quo lapides ipse proiecit, sed aliquem non percussit. Quem nos, quia per alios illic aliqui dicuntur occisi, a celebratione missarum per biennium praecipimus abstinere. Mandamus itaque, ut, si res ita se habuerit, et alia non impedierint, decurso huiusmodi temporis spatio, ad sui eum officii exsecutionem admittas.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A cleric who was in a conflict in which certain persons were killed without his deed or counsel can be promoted by the common law. It says this according to the second understanding, which pleases Panormitanus more.

Celestine III.

After the contents of your letters had been inspected, by which you informed us that, When P., an acolyte bearing the present letters, had taken up arms with certain men to resist robbers, in that conflict three were wounded unto death by others, yet in such a manner that those homicides were perpetrated neither by his deed nor by his counsel. We respond thus to your consultation: since you say that the aforesaid acolyte has passed to the fruit of a better life and has lived laudably in monastic religious life for almost eight years up to this time, provided his merits do not otherwise oppose, he can be promoted to the order of subdiacon and deservedly exercise the ministry of the altar.

> Clericus, qui fuit in conflictu, ubi aliqui fuerunt occisi sine eius facto vel consilio, de iure communi promoveri potest. H. d. secundum intellectum, qui plus placet Panorm.
>
> Coelestinus III. Continentia literarum vestrarum inspecta, qua significastis nobis, quod, Quum P. acolythus praesentium lator cum quibusdam hominibus ad resistendum praedonibus arma sumpsisset, in conflictu illo tres fuerunt ab aliis vulnerati ad mortem, ita tamen, quod illa homicidia neque facto eius neque consilio perpetrata fuerunt. Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum praedictum acolythum ad frugem melioris vitae transivisse dicatis, et in monachali religione fere per annos octo laudabiliter huc usque vixisse, meritis eius alias non repugnantibus, poterit ipse ad subdiaconatus ordinem promoveri, et merito altaris ministerium exercere.

Title XXVI: On Those Who Utter Curses

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One who curses the Pope is to be punished so that others may henceforth be deterred and he himself restrained.

Clement III.

It became known to us. (And below:) Lastly, we command and enjoin upon your fraternity that, Because you reported to us through your letters that the cleric I. of the Holy Trinity, in the presence of many bystanders, uttered certain words to the disparagement of our office and benefice, you restrain him from his rashness through suspension from office and benefice, with the obstacle of appeal removed, so that his punishment may strike terror into others, lest henceforth they burst forth into such words against the Roman Church.

DE MALEDICIS.

Maledicens Papae puniendus est, ut alii deinceps deterreantur, et ipse arceatur.

Clemens III. Innotuit nobis (Et infra:) Ad ultimum fraternitati tuae mandamus atque praecipimus, quatenus, Quia nobis per literas tuas retulisti, quod I. clericus sanctae Trinitatis, multis coram adstantibus, verba quaedam in depressionem officii et beneficii nostri protulit, ipsum a temeritate sua per suspensionem officii et beneficii sublato appellationis, obstaculo compescas, ut poena illius aliis terrorem incutiat, ne de cetero contra Romanam ecclesiam in talia verba prorumpant.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Here is laid down the penalty of one blaspheming God or any saint, and especially the most glorious Virgin.

Gregory IX.

We decree that, if anyone shall have presumed publicly to loose his tongue in blasphemy against God, or any of his saints, and especially the blessed Virgin, he is to be subjected by his bishop to the penalty noted below: namely, for seven Sundays the blasphemer is to stand openly before the doors of the church while the solemnities of masses are conducted; on the last of those Sundays he is to have neither cloak nor shoes and is to be bound with a strap around his neck; and on the seven preceding Fridays he is to fast on bread and water, in no way entering the church. On each of the aforesaid days he is also to feed three poor persons, if he can, otherwise two or one. And if his means do not suffice even for this, it is to be commuted into another penance. If he shall refuse to receive and complete the aforesaid penance, entrance to the church is also to be forbidden to him, and at death he is to lack ecclesiastical burial. Furthermore, through the temporal power, with coercion by the diocesan bishop employed against him if necessary, the blasphemer, if rich, is to be chastised by a penalty of forty solidi of current money, otherwise thirty or twenty, and, if he does not suffice for this, five solidi, having no mercy in this; and this is also to be placed among the other statutes of communities.

Hic ponitur poena blasphemantis Deum, vel aliquem sanctum, et maxime Virginem gloriosissimam.

Gregorius IX. Statuimus, ut, si quis contra Deum, vel aliquem sanctorum suorum, et maxime beatam Virginem, linguam in blasphemiam publice relaxare praesumpserit, per episcopum suum poenae subdatur inferius annotatae, videlicet, ut septem diebus dominicis prae foribus ecclesiae in manifesto, dum aguntur missarum solennia, blasphemus exsistens, ultimo illorum die dominico pallium et calceamenta non habeat, ligatus corrigia circa collum, septemque praecedentibus sextis feriis in pane ieiunet et aqua, ecclesiam nullatenus ingressurus. Quolibet quoque praedictorum dierum tres, si poterit, alioquin duos reficiat pauperes sive unum. Et, si nec ad hoc eius suppetant facultates, id in poenam aliam commutetur; cui etiam, si renuerit recipere ac peragere poenitentiam supra dictam, ecclesiae interdicatur ingressus, et in obitu ecclesiastica careat sepultura. Per temporalem praeterea potestatem, coactione, si necesse fuerit, episcopi dioecesani adhita contra eum, blasphemus, si dives fuerit, quadraginta solidorum, alioquin triginta sive viginti, et, si ad id non sufficiat, quinque solidorum usualis monetae poena mulctetur, nullam in hoc misericordiam habiturus; quod etiam inter alia communitatum statuta ponatur.

Title XXVII: On an Excommunicated, Deposed, or Interdicted Cleric Who Ministers

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A deposed cleric who celebrates is excommunicated.

From the Canon of the Apostles.

If any bishop, priest, or deacon, justly deposed for certain crimes, shall have dared to handle again the ministry formerly committed to him, let him be cut off entirely from the Church.

DE CLERICO EXCOMMUNICATO, DEPOSITO VEL INTERDICTO MINISTRANTE.

Clericus, depositus celebrans, excommunicatur.

Ex canone Apostolorum.

Si quis episcopus, presbyter vel diaconus, depositus iuste pro certis criminibus, ausus fuerit attractare ministerium sibi dudum commissum: hic ab ecclesia penitus abscindatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A degraded or suspended cleric who celebrates and does not desist after admonition is excommunicated; and if he does not desist even thus, at the Church's request he is condemned to exile through the secular power.

From the Council of Antioch.

If any priest or other cleric shall have been degraded by his bishop or suspended from office for certain crimes, and through contempt and pride he presumes to perform anything from the ministry forbidden to him, and afterward, having been corrected by his bishop, persists in the presumption begun, let him be excommunicated in every way and expelled from the church. And whoever shall communicate with him is likewise to know himself excommunicated. The same is to be observed concerning excommunicated clerics, laymen, or women. But if anyone shall have contemned all these things and the bishop shall have been unable to amend him, at the Church's request let him be condemned to exile by the king's judgment.

> Degradatus vel suspensus celebrans, et monitus non desistens, excommunicatur; et, si nec sic desistat, per saecularem potestatem ad requisitionem ecclesiae exsilio damnatur.
>
> Ex concilio Antiocheno.
>
> Si quis presbyter aut alius clericus ab episcopo suo fuerit degradatus, aut ab officio pro certis criminibus suspensus, et ipse per contemptum et superbiam aliquid de ministerio sibi interdicto agere praesumpserit, et postea ab episcopo suo correptus in incepta praesumptione perduraverit: hic modis omnibus excommunicetur et ab ecclesia expellatur. Et quicunque cum eo communicaverit, similiter se sciat esse excommunicatum. Similiter de clericis, laicis vel feminis excommunicatis observandum est. Quodsi aliquis ista omnia contempserit, et episcopus minime emendare potuerit, regis iudicio ad requisitionem ecclesiae exsilio damnetur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: An interdicted and excommunicated cleric who celebrates and does not desist after admonition is deposed.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of London.

But if any clerics shall have been interdicted or excommunicated by their own bishops, or even at the command of the Roman Pontiff by other bishops, [and] shall have celebrated divine offices before absolution, unless after admonition they return without delay, let them incur the sentence of perpetual deposition for the venture of so great a rashness.

> Interdictus et excommunicatus celebrans, monitus non desistens, deponitur.
>
> Alexander III. Londonensi Episcopo.
>
> Clerici autem, si qui a suis, aut etiam de mandato Romani Pontificis ab alienis episcopis interdicti vel excommunicati [fuerint, et] ante absolutionem divina officia celebraverint, nisi moniti sine dilatione redierint, perpetuae depositionis sententiam pro ausu tantae temeritatis incurrant.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Excommunicated or interdicted clerics who celebrate ought to be deposed, unless the penalty is mitigated on account of their multitude.

The same, to the Archbishop of Toledo.

The bearers of the present letters, coming with your letters to our presence, informed us more fully of their offense, namely, that both they and many others, after they were interdicted or excommunicated, presumed to celebrate divine offices. But because they said that a great multitude sinned with them in this, and it could not become known to us which of them transgressed more or less, we decided that the business itself should be committed to the judgment of your discretion. By apostolic writings and by way of precept we command your fraternity that, after more diligent inquiry into the truth of the matter, if it shall be established that only forty or fewer transgressed in these matters, you depose all of them perpetually from the priestly office. But if you shall know that a great multitude sinned in this, you are to condemn by perpetual deposition those who shall have been established to be more the cause of the offense, suspend for a time from office the others who did not transgress so greatly, and impose penance upon all according to the discretion given to you by God.

> Excommunicati vel interdicti celebrantes deponi debent, nisi propter multitudinem mitigetur poena.

Idem Toletano Archiepiscopo.

Latores praesentium, cum tuis literis ad nostram accedentes praesentiam, suum nobis excessum plenius intimarunt, scilicet, quod tam ipsi quam multi alii, postquam interdicti vel excommunicati fuerunt, divina praesumpserunt officia celebrare. Quoniam vero cum eis magnam multitudinem in hoc peccasse dicebant, nec nobis, quis eorum magis vel minus deliquerit, innotescere potuit, negotium ipsum tuae discretionis arbitrio duximus remittendum. Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligentius inquisita, si XL. solummodo vel pauciores in his deliquisse constiterit, omnes in perpetuum ab officio sacerdotali deponas. Si vero multitudinem magnam in hoc peccasse cognoveris, eos, quos magis causam delicti esse constiterit, perpetua depositione condemnes, et alios, qui non tantum deliquerunt, ab officio ad tempus suspendas, et omnibus poenitentiam secundum discretionem tibi a Deo datam iniungas.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If one who has knowledge of an excommunication through report alone celebrates, by rigor he ought to be deposed, although a merciful dispensation can be granted to him. It says this, and it is a notable case.

Innocent III, to the Chapter of Würzburg.

The Lord granted to blessed Peter [in whose dignity of the apostolate we, although insufficient, have succeeded, the privilege of a singular prerogative for the Roman Church: that it exist as the head and mother of all the faithful, so that a member which has not persisted in its unity is foreign to that body concerning which the Apostle says, "we are all one body in Christ"; nor does one who has not had it as mother and teacher belong to that fold concerning which it is read in the Gospel, "there shall be one fold and one shepherd." We also, who by God's ordering have been called to its governance, although in life we are unequal and in merits unlike our first predecessors, who laid down their lives for the Church, nevertheless by the same privilege exercise equal power with him, since we read that it was said by the Lord: "Whatever you shall bind upon earth shall be bound also in heaven, and whatever you shall loose upon earth shall be loosed also in heaven." Although, moreover, the Apostolic See, considering human imperfection and the gravity of the burden enjoined upon it, has summoned many to a share of the solicitude committed to it, it nevertheless retained for itself the fullness of power, reserving many things to its power alone which, apart from its special authority, by law neither ought nor can be dispensed by any persons with impunity, such as the resignations and translations of bishops and certain other matters which, since they are known, there is no need for us to explain in letters.]

Our venerable brother [Conrad], formerly Bishop of Hildesheim, chancellor of the imperial court, not considering that there are many things which, apart from the special authority of the Apostolic See, by law neither could nor ought to be attempted by any persons with impunity, such as the resignations and translations of bishops and other matters known to you, having not only failed to obtain permission but not even sought it, left the church of Hildesheim and occupied the church of Würzburg, [and thus in the letters that he sent us he presumed to call himself Bishop of Würzburg]. Wherefore we, wishing to punish his presumption with due correction, gave commands to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Magdeburg and certain others established in Germany that, since the fact itself could not fail to be notorious in those parts, unless the said bishop ceased from the administration of the church of Würzburg within twenty days after receipt of the letters that we directed to him concerning this, they were publicly to announce him as excommunicated and cause his excommunication to be renewed with bells rung and candles lit on feast days and Sundays. The same Archbishop of Magdeburg took care to fulfill this.

[Although in manifest matters the judicial order did not need to be required, and he appeared to have confessed concerning himself, since in letters directed to us he presumed to call himself Bishop of Würzburg, nevertheless, in order to overcome every malice, we again commanded him, without first giving a salutation, that, with every pretext ceasing, if he wished to find favor with us, he was to fulfill the apostolic mandate. When he nevertheless persisted in his contumacy and, after another had been elected and confirmed in the church of Hildesheim by our mandate, presumed to call himself Bishop of Hildesheim, lest the Apostolic See appear to dissemble, we announced him excommunicated amid the solemnities of masses and commanded that he be avoided by all. But at length, recognizing his own rashness, first before the aforesaid archbishop and many princes of Germany, and second before our venerable brother C., Archbishop of Mainz and Bishop of Sabina, and many princes, he affirmed by oath that he would obey apostolic commands. Thereafter, neither avoiding the dangers of the roads nor intolerant of the inconveniences of the season, he came to the Apostolic See and, voluntarily confessing his offense in great contrition of heart and great humility of body, sought the benefit of absolution. But we, following the example of him who does not wish the death of the sinner but rather that he be converted and live, because he swore by every compact and tenor that he would in good faith receive and observe all our commands, whatever we should tell him by way of imposing things upon him concerning those matters for which he had been excommunicated by us, through our messenger, or through letters, afterward caused the benefit of absolution to be furnished to him.]

But the bishop himself, afterward appearing in our presence, although he acknowledged and confessed his offense and sought not judgment but mercy, [*introduced certain things in his own excuse, yet in such a manner that he neither departed from the form of humility nor relied upon the reasons introduced to such an extent that he did not always condemn what he had done, and, while excusing himself, voluntarily accused himself. He appeared, moreover, to have transgressed more particularly in three things.

First, namely, in that, apart from our special authority, he presumed to pass from the church of Hildesheim to the church of Würzburg, something he could not do by law, and after another had been elected and confirmed in the church of Hildesheim by our mandate, he named himself Bishop of Hildesheim.

Second, namely, in that, after the said Archbishop of Magdeburg had promulgated against him by our mandate a sentence of excommunication, he presumed to celebrate divine offices in a solemn court; and after he knew himself excommunicated by us, he repeatedly caused celebration to be held for himself and frequently thrust himself into communion.

Third, that, although he pretended to cease from the administration of the church of Würzburg, he nevertheless never withdrew fully from it, since, when questioned by us, he confessed that he still detained the temporalities.

But the same bishop wished to excuse himself concerning the first point in this manner: that he had passed to the church of Würzburg by special apostolic authority, since Celestine, Pope of good memory, our predecessor, had decided to grant him permission to pass to another church. But, considering more diligently the words of that indulgence and their force, he had from it no cause for passing before the postulatio had been examined by the one by whom it was to be made, lest perhaps anything be done through pressure, anything be transacted through simoniacal depravity, or anything contrary to canonical sanctions be capable of being attempted. This is sufficiently clear from the tenor of the indulgence, in which it is added near the end: "provided that it does not oppose canonical statutes." Furthermore, although it appeared to have been granted to him that, when invited, he might assume a greater dignity, it was nevertheless not granted to him that he should transfer himself to a church of equal dignity, since it is a greater indulgence for a bishop that he pass to an equal church; much more, we have never found this dispensed. But it is established that the churches of Hildesheim and Würzburg, insofar as dignity pertains, are equal, since each is a suffragan of the church of Mainz; for although Würzburg is richer in temporalities, Hildesheim is nevertheless reported to be nobler in spiritualities.*]

Nevertheless, among other things in his excuse, he proposed that, since the said Archbishop of Magdeburg was not his ordinary judge, he had not believed that, without prior admonition, he could proceed against him by delegated authority or promulgate any sentence against him. Wherefore, since neither before the fact had he received letters of admonition nor after the fact any letters from him, he did not believe that he sinned if he celebrated divine offices however solemnly, especially since the sentence pronounced against him was known to him only through report. But he asserts that, after he knew himself excommunicated by us, he caused divine offices to be celebrated for him and frequently thrust himself into the communion of the faithful not in contempt of the Apostolic See or even of so great a sacrament, but in hope of pardon, namely lest he become more hardened or his mind behave more stubbornly if he were never present at divine offices; although on solemn days he never thrust himself into the celebration of divine offices, but with a few persons, secretly in a corner of some church on non-festal days, he sometimes caused divine offices to be celebrated for him.

Although in this he does not appear to have been entirely culpable, nevertheless, because in doubts the safer way is to be chosen, even if he doubted the sentence rendered against him, he ought rather to have abstained than to handle ecclesiastical sacraments. But that, in hope of pardon, after he knew himself excommunicated by us, he caused divine offices to be celebrated for him and thrust himself into the communion of the faithful, we believe to work against him rather than for him, since he ought not to have transgressed in reliance upon penance; and for an excommunicated person not to avoid others is much more dangerous than not to be avoided. Indeed, since not avoiding lies within his own power, an excommunicated person cannot fail to sin; but since not being avoided depends upon others, he can be not avoided without sin of his own.

[He asserted that he had held the fortifications and towns of the church of Würzburg for its utility, lest, if perhaps they came into foreign hands, there would afterward be no one to free them. But since spiritual things are worthier than temporal things, obedience better than victims, and listening better than offering the fat of rams, the same bishop ought not, for the temporal advantage of the church of Würzburg, to have incurred the mark of disobedience and resisted apostolic commands. Considering, therefore, that the Lord does not wish the death of the sinner, lest we appear unmindful of the benignity of the Apostolic See, we decided that mercy should be shown to the same bishop in certain things. But because the same merciful Lord—if the one is held without the other—and because there are also certain faults in which, according to canonical sanctions, it is culpable to relax punishment, we therefore tempered mercy through discipline and discipline through mercy, so that we might punish the offenses committed by the same bishop in such a way that we would not compel him to despair of pardon. Therefore, when he had been placed publicly in the consistory in our presence and that of our brothers, following the canonical sanctions in which it is provided that those who transfer themselves to a greater people ought both to be driven from the other's chair and to lack their own, so that they preside neither over those whom they despise through pride nor over those whom they covet through avarice, we caused him by sentence to be despoiled both of the episcopate of Würzburg and that of Hildesheim.]

Showing mercy to him, we decided not to inflict upon him the penalty that the canon inflicts upon those who, after excommunication, presumed to celebrate divine offices, or who thrust themselves into the celebration of divine offices. [We therefore commanded, etc. Given at the Lateran on the fifth day before the Ides of April, in the second year, 1200.]

> Si habens notitiam excommunicationis per solam famam celebrat, debet de rigore deponi, licet cum eo possit misericorditer dispensari. H. d. et est casus notabilis.
>
> Innocentius III. Herbipolensi Capitulo.
>
> Illud Dominus in beato Petro, [cui licet insufficientes in apostolatus successimus dignitate, singularis praerogativae privilegium ecclesiae Romanae concessit, ut universorum fidelium caput et mater exsistat ita ut alienum sit a corpore illo de quo ait apostolus: "omnes unum corpus sumus in Christo" membrum quod in eius non perstitit unitate, nec ad illud ovile pertineat, de quo in evangelio legitur: "fiet unum ovile et unus pastor," qui matrem eam non habuerit et magistram, nos quoque, qui ad eius regimen Deo disponente sumus vocati, etsi vita sumus impares et meritis inaequales primis praedecessoribus nostris, qui pro ecclesia suas animas posuerunt, ex eodem tamen privilegio pari cum eodem fungimur potestate, quum legimus dictum a domino: "quodcumque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum in coelo et quodcumque solveris super terram erit solutum et in coelo" licet autem apostolica sedes imperfectionem humanam et iniunctam sibi oneris gravitatem attendens, multos in sortem creditae sibi sollicutidinis evocaverit, sibi tamen retinuit plenitudinem potestatis, multa suae solius potestati reservans quae praeter specialem auctoritatem ipsius, nec de iure debent nec possunt impune ab aliquibus dispensari, utpote cessiones et translationes episcoporum et alia quaedam, quae quum. nota sint, nobis non opus est literis explicare.] Venerabilis frater noster [Conradus] quondam Hildesemensis episcopus, imperialis aulae cancellarius, non attendens, quod multa sunt, quae praeter specialem auctoritatem apostolicae sedis de iure non possent nec deberent impune ab aliquibus attentari, utpote cessiones et translationes episcoporum, et alia, quae nota sunt vobis, licentia non solum non obtenta, sed nec etiam postulata, ecclesia Hildesemensi relicta Herbipolensem ecclesiam occupavit, [et sic in literis quas nobis destinavit + Herbipolensem se praesumpsit appellare], Unde nos, praesumptionem ipsius debita volentes animadversione punire, venerabili fratri nostro Magdeburgensi episcopo et aliis quibusdam in Teutonia constitutis dedimus in mandatis, ut, quum factum ipsum non posset in partibus illis non esse notorium, nisi dictus episcopus infra XX. dies post susceptionem literarum, quas super hoc ipsi direximus, ab Herbipolensis ecclesiae administratione cessaret, eum excommunicatum publice nunciaret, et excommunicationem eius facerent pulsatis campanis et candelis accensis festivis diebus et dominicis innovari, quod idem Magdeburgensis studuit adimplere. [Licet autem in manifestis non esset ordo iudiciarius requirendus et ipse confessus de + videretur, quum literis ad nos directis se praesumpserit Herbipolensem episcopum apellare, ad vincendam omnem malitiam, eidem denuo non praemissa salutatione, mandavimus ut omni occasione cessante, si apud nos vellet gratiam invenire, mandatum apostolicum adimpleret: quum ipse nihilominus in sua contumacia perduraret et posteaquam alius in Hildesheimensi ecclesia de mandato nostro electus et confirmatus fuerat, se praesumeret Hildesheimensem episcopum appellare, ne apostolica sedes dissimulare videretur, ipsum excommunicatum inter missarum solemnia nuntiavimus et mandavimus ab omnibus evitari: ceterum, ipse tandem temeritatem propriam recognoscens, primo coram iam dicto archiepiscopo et multis principibus Alamanniae, secundo coram venerabili fratre nostro C. Moguntino archiepiscopo, episcopo Sabinensi, et multis principibus iuramento firmavit, quod mandatis apostolicis obediret, et exinde nec viarum vitans discrimina, nec incommoda, temporis impatiens, ad Apostolicam sedem accessit et sponte suum confessus excessum, in multa contritione cordis et magna humilitate corporis, absolutionis beneficium postulavit. Nos autem, eius sequentes exemplum, qui non vult mortem peccatoris, sed ut magis convertatur et vivat, quod ipse pacto quolibet et tenore iuravit, quod universa mandata nostra bona fide reciperet et servaret quaecumque diceremus ipsi, super his, pro quibus fuerat excommunicatus per nos aut per nuntium nostrum seu per litteras iniungendo: postmodum autem fecimus ei absolutionis beneficium exhiberi.] Ipse vero episcopus, in nostra postmodum praesentia constitutus, etsi suum recognosceret et confiteretur excessum, et non iudicium, sed misericordiam postularet +. [aliqua in sui excusationem induxit; sic tamen, ut nec formam humilitatis excederet, neque usque adeo rationibus inniteretur inductis, quin semper damnaret quod fecerat, et se ipsum excusans spontanee accusaret; videbatur autem tribus specialius deliquisse. Primo videlicet in eo quod praeter specialem auctoritatem nostram ab ecclesia Hildesheimensi ad Herbipolensem de octo, quod iure non potuit, transire praesumpsit, ac postquam alius in Hildesheimensi ecclesia electus et confirmatus demandato nostro fuerat, se ipsum Hildesheimensem episcopum nominavit. Secundo in eo videlicet, quod postquam dictus archiepiscopus Magdeburgensis in eum de mandato nostro sententiam excommunicationis promulgavit, divina praesumpsit officia in sollemni curia celebrare, et postquam se novit excommunicatum a nobis, sibi fecit saepius celebrari et communioni frequenter se ingessit. Tertio, quod si ab Herbipolensis ecclesiae se simulavit administratione cessare, nunquam tamen plene recessit ab ea utpote quum interrogatus a nobis confessus fuerit se adhuc temporalia detinere: verum idem episcopus super primo capitulo se voluit taliter excusare, quod ad Herbipolensem ecclesiam ex speciali apostolica auctoritate transivisset, quum bonae memoriae Celestinus papa praedecessor noster, ei duxerit indulgendum licentiam ad aliam ecclesiam transeundi, sed verba ipsius indulgentiae ac vim eorum diligentius attendentes ex ea causam non habuit transeundi, priusquam per eum postulatio examinata fuisset cuius fuerat facienda, ne quid forte per impressionem fieret, ne quid ageretur per symoniacam pravitatem, ne quid attentare contra canonicas sanctiones posset, quod ex tenore indulgentiae satis patet, in qua subiungitur circa finem: dummodo canonicis non obviet statutis: praeterea etsi videretur ei indultum ut invitatus maiorem sumeret dignitatem, concessum tamen ipsi non fuit, ut ad paris dignitatis ecclesiam se transferret, quum indulgentiae maioris exsistat episcopo ut ad parem ecclesiam transeat + magis + nunquam invenimus dispensatum, constat autem Hildesheimensem et Herbipolensem ecclesias quantum ad dignitatem pertinet, esse pares, quum utraque suffraganea sit ecclesiae Moguntinae; nam licet Herbipolensis sit in temporalibus abundantior, Hildesheimensis tamen in spiritualibus nobilior perhibetur.] Hoc tamen inter alia in sua excusatione proposuit, quod, quum dictus Magdeburgensis non esset ordinarius iudex eius, non crediderat, quod monitione non praemissa auctoritate delegata posset procedere contra ipsum, aut sententiam in eum aliquam promulgare. Unde, quum nec ante factum monitorias, nec post factum literas ab eo aliquas accepisset, peccare non credidit, si divina officia quantumcunque solenniter celebravit, praesertim quum ei non nisi per famam de sententia contra eum prolata constaret. Quod autem, postquam se novit excommunicatum a nobis, divina sibi fecerit officia celebrari, et fidelium communioni se ingesserat frequenter, id non in contemptum sedis apostolicae vel tanti etiam sacramenti, sed spe veniae asserit se fecisse, ne videlicet indureseeret amplius, vel durius eius animus proterviret, si nunquam divinis officiis interesset; licet in diebus solennibus se nunquam celebrationi divinorum ingesserit, sed cum paucis in angulo alicuius ecclesiae occulte non festivis diebus divina sibi fecerit interdum officia celebrari. Licet autem in hoc non videatur omnino culpabilis exstitisse, quia tamen in dubiis via est tutior eligenda, etsi de lata in eum sententia dubitaret, debuerat tamen potius se abstinere, quam sacramenta ecclesiastica pertractare. Illud autem, quod sub spe veniae divina sibi fecit, postquam se a nobis excommunicatum noverat, celebrari, et communioni fidelium se ingessit, potius contra eum facere credimus, quam pro eo, quum sub fiducia poenitentiae non debuerit deliquisse, et excommunicato non vitare multo magis, quam non vitari periculosum exsistat; non vitare siquidem, quum in eo sit, excommunicatus sine delicto non potest, sed, quum ex aliis pendeat, sine suo delicto poterit non vitari. [Munitiones autem et oppida Herbipolensis ecclesiae in utilitatem ipsius se asseruit tenuisse ne si ad alienas manus forsitan devenissent, non esset quia ea postmodum liberaret; sed quum spiritualia sunt temporalibus digniora et obedientia melior quam victimae et auscultare melius quam adipem arietum offerre, non debuerat idem episcopus pro temporali commodo Herbipolensis ecclesiae, inobedientiae notam incurrere et apostolicis iussionibus contraire. Attendentes igitur, quod non vult dominus mortem peccatoris, ne videremur apostolicae sedis benignitatis immemores cum eodem episcopo misericordiam in quibusdam duximus faciendam; sed quoniam idem dominus misericors + si una sine altera teneatur, quum et quaedam sint culpae, in quibus secundum canonicas sanctiones culpa est relaxare vindictam, temperavimus ergo et per disciplinam misericordiam et per misericordiam disciplinam, ut sic commissos ab eodem episcopo puniremus excessus, ne ipsum cogeremus de venia desperare; ipsum igitur sub nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia in publico consistorio constitutum, sequentes canonicas sanctiones, quibus est cautum, ut qui ad maiorem plebem se transtulerint, et a cathedra pelli debeant aliena et carere propria, ut nec illis praesideant quos per superbiam spernunt, nec illis quos per avaritiam concupiunt, tam

Herbipolensi quam Hildesheimensi episcopatu per sententiam curavimus spoliare,] Cum eo misericordiam facientes, poenam, quam canon infligit his, qui post excommunicationem divina praesumpserint officia celebrare, vel qui se celebrationi ingesserint divinorum, ei non duximus infligendam. [*Mandavimus ergo etc. Dat. Later. V. Id. Apr. Ao. II. *1200.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: An excommunicated cleric who celebrates is deposed from his benefice.

The same, to the Archbishop of Besançon.

To your fraternity. (And below: [cf. c. 7, On One Who Has Known His Wife, IV. 13.]) But priests and other clerics of your diocese who, having been canonically bound by you with the bonds of anathema for their offenses, presumed or presume to celebrate divine offices, you will reasonably be able to despoil of all ecclesiastical benefices. [The prior, etc. Given at Ferentino on the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, in the sixth year, 1203.]

Excommunicatus celebrans a beneficio deponitur.

Idem Bisuntino Archiepiscopo.

Fraternitati tuae (Et infra: [*cf. c. *7. de eo, qui cogn. IV. 13.]) Presbyteros autem et alios clericos dioecesis tuae, qui pro suis excessibus a te nexibus anathematis canonice innodati praesumpserunt vel praesumunt officia celebrare divina, rationabiliter poteris omnibus beneficiis ecclesiasticis spoliare. [*Priorem etc. Dat. Ferentini XII. Kal. Iun. Ao. VI. *1203.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A collation of a benefice made to an excommunicated person is not valid, and one knowingly conferring upon such persons is suspended from the collation of benefices. — (You Asked, etc.:) One who celebrates in an interdicted place, if a secular cleric, is deprived of benefices; if a monk, he is thrust into a stricter monastery. It says this.

The same, to the Dean and Prior of Cologne.

You asked to be instructed through the Apostolic See. (And below:) Consequently, you also asked whether clerics who, while they were bound by the bond of excommunication, obtained ecclesiastical benefices can lawfully retain them after they have obtained the benefit of absolution, petitioning nevertheless [that it be explained through the Apostolic See] by what penalty abbots and abbesses and other prelates of churches who knowingly conferred ecclesiastical benefices upon clerics subject to excommunication ought to be corrected. To these matters We respond to your consultation that, since communication ought not to be held with excommunicated persons, ecclesiastical benefices cannot be conferred upon clerics bound by the bond of excommunication, nor can they lawfully retain them unless perhaps a merciful dispensation shall have been granted to them, since they did not obtain them canonically. But those who knowingly conferred those benefices upon such persons ought to be suspended from the collation of benefices until they deserve to obtain pardon concerning this, so that they may be punished in that in which they presumed to transgress. You asked further how clerics and monks or nuns of conventual churches ought to be punished who, after a sentence of interdict had been rendered, presumed thus far, and even now do not fear, to celebrate divine offices in places subjected to interdict, although on account of this they are bound by the bond of excommunication. To this we respond briefly that clerics who presumed such things are to be despoiled of ecclesiastical benefices, but monks or nuns are to be thrust into stricter monasteries to complete penance. [Furthermore, etc. Given at the Lateran on the Ides of May, in the tenth year, 1207.]

> Collatio beneficii excommunicato facta non tenet, et scienter talibus conferens a beneficiorum collatione suspenditur. - (Quaesivistis etc.:) Celebrans in loco interdicto, si est clericus saecularis, beneficiis privatur; si monachus, in arctius monasterium detruditur. H. d.
>
> Idem Decano et Priori Coloniensibus.
>
> Postulastis per sedem apostolicam edoceri (Et infra:) Consequenter etiam quaesivistis, utrum clerici, qui, dum essent excommunicationis vinculo innodati, ecclesiastica beneficia sunt adepti, eadem, postquam absolutionis beneficium obtinuerunt, licite valeant retinere, postulantes nihilominus [per sedem apostolicam explicari,] qua poena corrigi debeant abbates et abbatissae, et alii ecclesiarum praelati, qui scienter clericis excommunicationi subiectis ecclesiastica beneficia contulerunt. Ad quae Consultationi vestrae respondemus, quod, quum excommunicatis communicari non debeat, clericis excommunicationis vinculo innodatis ecclesiastica beneficia conferri non possunt, nec illi valent ea retinere licite, nisi forsitan cum eis fuerit misericorditer dispensatum, quum ea non fuerint canonice consecuti. Illi vero, qui scienter illa beneficia talibus contulerunt, tamdiu debent a beneficiorum collatione suspendi, donec super hoc veniam consequi mereantur, ut puniantur in hoc, in quo delinquere praesumpserunt. Quaesivistis praeterea, qualiter puniri debeant clerici ac monachi vel moniales ecclesiarum conventualium, qui post latam interdicti sententiam in locis suppositis interdicto praesumpserunt hactenus, et adhuc etiam non verentur divina officia celebrare, quamvis propter hoc sint excommunicationis vinculo innodati. Ad hoc breviter respondemus, quod clerici, qui talia praesumpserunt, sunt ecclesiasticis beneficiis spoliandi; monachi vero vel moniales in arctioribus monasteriis ad peragendam poenitentiam detrudendi. [Insuper etc. Dat. Lat. Id. Maii Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A collation of a benefice made to one who was previously excommunicated is valid if he was absolved at the time of the collation.

The same, to the Dean and Subdeacon of Poitiers and Master P., a Canon of Périgueux.

The beloved son Master P. [Boiol], a cleric of our venerable brother the Bishop of Tusculum, formerly proposed before us that, when the beloved son G., cardinal deacon of Saint Mary in Portico, was exercising in those parts the office of legation of the Apostolic See, certain persons among the canons of Limoges humbly entreated him to set in order their church, which was defrauded of the due service of clerics, presenting special entreaties on behalf of themselves and that same master, our scribe. But he, entering the city of Limoges, admonished the canons with entreaties interposed to receive them as associates and brothers, especially since five or four prebends had been vacant since the last ordering of that church. When they did not take care to respond after delays for deliberation had been sought and granted, the aforesaid cardinal invested those same clerics with a prebend of Limoges. (And below:) But if he should prove that the man was excommunicated at that time, they were not to postpone revoking what had been done concerning him. They, executing the apostolic command, after receiving witnesses from each party and understanding the confessions and allegations, sent that case, sufficiently instructed, to our examination. But when the said master and the penitentiary of Limoges appeared in our presence and we caused the acts of the trial to be inspected diligently, through the penitentiary's witnesses we understood proof to have been made that the Bishop of Limoges, several years before the same master was invested, had bound with the bond of excommunication both the clerics and townspeople of the castle of Limoges and the same P. by name, whom they said was their counselor and supporter. But through the witnesses of Master P. it was proved that, although the said bishop had pronounced a sentence of excommunication against the townspeople and their supporters, clerical as well as lay, of Limoges, he nevertheless absolved them three years before the said master was invested, certain priests having been retained in excommunication until a fixed time because they had presumed to celebrate contrary to a sentence of interdict, and that afterward the same bishop communicated with the said master in church and at table. But because, according to the tenor of our mandate, the said penitentiary did not prove, as he had offered, that the often-mentioned Master P. was excommunicated by the aforesaid bishop at the time of his investiture, while, on the contrary, proof was made of absolution and communication by the said bishop, we decided, on the counsel of our brothers, that what was done by the said legate concerning the aforesaid Master P. should be approved by definitive sentence. [Therefore, etc. Given at the Lateran on the sixth day before the Kalends of February, in the thirteenth year, 1210.]

> Valet collatio beneficii ei facta, qui prius fuit excommunicatus, sed absolutus tempore collationis.
>
> Idem Decano et Subdiacono Pictaviensibus et Magistro P. Canonica Petragoricensi. Proposuit olim coram nobis dilectus filius magister P. [Boiol] clericus venerabilis fratris nostri episcopi Tusculanensis, quod dilecto filio G. sanctae Mariae in porticu diacono cardinali in partibus illis apostolicae sedis legationis fungente officio, quidam de Lemovicensibus canonicis ei humiliter supplicarunt, ut eorum ecclesiam, quae debito fraudabatur clericorum servitio, ordinaret, pro se ac magistro eodem scriptore nostro preces specialiter porrigentes. Ipse vero, Lemovicensem civitatem ingressus, canonicos interpositis precibus monuit, ut illos reciperent in socios et in fratres, maxime quum praebendae V. vel IV. ab ultima ipsius ecclesiae ordinatione vacassent, quibus post petitas et concessas deliberationis inducias non curantibus respondere, de praebenda Lemovicensi cardinalis praedictus eosdem clericos investivit. (Et infra:) Si vero probaret, ipsum excommunicatum tunc temporis exstitisse, non postponerent quod de ipso factum fuerat revocare, qui, mandatum apostolicum exsequentes, utriusque partis receptis testibus, et confessionibus et allegationibus intellectis, eandem causam sufficienter instructam ad nostrum remiserunt examen. Quum autem dictus magister et Lemovicensis poenitentiarius in nostra fuissent praesentia constituti, et acta iudicii inspici fecerimus diligenter, per poenitentiarii testes intelleximus factam fidem, quod Lemovicensis episcopus pluribus annis, antequam idem magister investitus fuerit, et clericos et burgenses castri Lemovicensis et eundem P. nominatim, quem eorum dicebant consiliarium et fautorem, vinculo excommunicationis adstrinxit. Per testes vero magistri P. probabatur, quod, etsi dictus episcopus in burgenses et eorum fautores tam clericos quam laicos Lemovicenses excommunicationis sententiam protulisset, eos tamen per tres annos absolvit, antequam dictus magister fuerit investitus, quibusdam presbyteris usque ad certum tempus in excommunicatione retentis, qui contra sententiam interdicti praesumpserant celebrare, et quod idem episcopus dicto magistro communicavit postea in ecclesia et in mensa. Quia vero iuxta mandati nostri tenorem saepe dictum magistrum P. investiturae suae tempore a praefato episcopo exstitisse excommunicatum, dictus poenitentiarius, sicut obtulerat, non probavit, quum ex adverso de absolutione et communione dicti episcopi fuerit facta fides: quod per dictum legatum de memorato magistro P. factum est, de fratrum nostrorum consilio per diffinitivam sententiam duximus approbandum. [*Quocirca etc. Dat. Lat. VI. Kal. Febr. Ao. XIII. *1210.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A suspended or excommunicated person who celebrates in ignorance needs no dispensation with respect to irregularity; otherwise it is otherwise.

Gregory IX, to I. and I., Canons of Prague.

Of the Apostolic See. (And below:) But because in ignorance you celebrated divine offices during the suspension, probable ignorance renders you excused. But if perhaps the ignorance was gross and supine or erroneous, on account of which you need the favor of dispensation, we grant it to you from apostolic benignity. [Given on the tenth day before the Kalends of May, 1227.]

> Suspensus vel excommunicatus ignoranter celebrando nulla indiget dispensatione respectu irregularitatis; alias secus.
>
> Gregorius IX. I. et I. Canonicis Pragensibus.
>
> Apostolicae sedis (Et infra:) Verum, quia tempore suspensionis ignari celebrastis divina, vos reddit ignorantia probabilis excusatos. Ceterum, si forte ignorantia crassa et supina aut erronea fuerit, propter quod dispensationis gratia egeatis, eam vobis de benignitate apostolica indulgemus. [Dat. X. Kal. Mai. 1227.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: One who celebrates while under minor excommunication is not irregular, but sins, and can elect and exercise those things that belong to jurisdiction, although he cannot be elected; and if he confers sacraments, although he sins, nevertheless the conferral is valid and has its effect.

The same.

If one celebrates while bound by minor excommunication, although he sins gravely, he nevertheless incurs no mark of irregularity, nor is he prohibited from electing or from exercising those things that belong to him by reason of jurisdiction. Nevertheless, if such a person shall knowingly have been elected, his election is to be annulled for the reason that he is elected to receive those things from whose reception he was deprived by the holy Fathers. He sins, moreover, by conferring ecclesiastical sacraments; but those conferred by him do not lack the effect of their power, since he does not appear removed from the conferral but from participation in the sacraments, which consists in reception alone, provided that he has not, in contempt of ecclesiastical discipline, namely contrary to the prohibition of his superior, pertinaciously thrust himself into communion with excommunicated persons, in which case he is to be struck with anathema.

> Excommunicatus minori celebrans non est irregularis, sed peccat, et potest eligere, et ea, quae sunt iurisdictionis, exercere, licet non eligi; et, si confert sacramenta, licet peccet, tamen collatio tenet et suum habet effectum.
>
> Idem.
>
> Si celebrat minori excommunicatione ligatus, licet graviter peccet, nullius tamen notam irregularitatis incurrit, nec eligere prohibetur, vel ea, quae ratione iurisdictionis sibi competunt, exercere. Si tamen scienter talis electus fuerit, eius electio est irritanda pro eo, quod ad susceptionem eorum eligitur, a quorum perceptione a sanctis Patribus est privatus. Peccat autem conferendo ecclesiastica sacramenta; sed ab eo collata virtutis non carent effectu, quum non videatur a collatione, sed participatione sacramentorum, quae in sola consistit perceptione, remotus; dummodo non in contemptum ecclesiasticae disciplinae, videlicet contra prohibitionem superioris, communioni excommunicatorum pertinaciter se ingesserit, in quo casu est anathemate feriendus.

Title XXVIII: On a Cleric Who Ministers Without Being Ordained

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric ministering in matters belonging to an order that he does not have is to be deposed and is not afterward to be ordained.

Pope Hormisdas.

If anyone who has not been ordained shall baptize or exercise any divine office, on account of his rashness let him be cast out of the church and never be ordained.

> DE CLERICO NON ORDINATO MINISTRANTE.
>
> Clericus, ministrans in pertinentibus ad ordinem, quem non habet, deponendus est, et amplius non ordinandus.
>
> Hormisda Papa.
>
> Si quis baptizaverit aut aliquod divinum officium exercuerit non ordinatus, propter temeritatem abiiciatur de ecclesia, et nunquam ordinetur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A deacon who celebrates mass is not promoted to the priesthood and is suspended from the diaconate for a time; but concerning his benefice a dispensation can be granted for a time.

Urban III, to the Bishop of León.

It became known to us from the letters of your fraternity that the deacon I., the bearer of the present letters, wishing to be ordained priest before the proper time, asserted that he had obtained the sacerdotal grade through your ordination, and, although you had not imposed your hand upon him, presumed to usurp the celebration of masses. Afterward, however, at the Lord's inspiration, he returned to himself and, recognizing his own offense, humbly petitioned that counsel be given to him in so great a danger. Therefore, because concerning this your fraternity led us to be consulted, by the present letters We respond to your consultation that he cannot be promoted to the priestly office; and according to your provision, let him remain suspended from the diaconate for two or three years. But let him be treated mercifully concerning his benefice, lest, deprived of sustenance, he return to the business of the world. But so that you can show him this mercy more securely, do not cease to exhibit diligent care concerning him for completing the imposed penance. Without doubt, however, he will provide more healthfully for himself if he shall decide to transfer himself to the regular life.

> Diaconus, missam celebrans, ad sacerdotium non promovetur, et a diaconatu suspenditur ad tempus; sed in beneficio poterit ad tempus dispensari. Urbanus III. Legionensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex literis tuae fraternitatis innotuit nobis, quod I. diaconus praesentium lator, volens ante tempus in presbyterum ordinari, asseruit, se propter ordinationem tuam gradum sacerdotalem adeptum, et, quum non imposuisses ei manum, missarum celebrationem usurpare praesumpsit, postmodum vero Domino inspirante rediit ad se ipsum, et proprium recognoscens excessum, in tanto sibi periculo consuli humiliter postulavit. Quia igitur super hoc tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, literis praesentibus Consultationi tuae respondemus, quod ad sacerdotis officium non poterit promoveri; a diaconatu quoque biennio vel triennio pro tua maneat provisione suspensus. De beneficio autem misericorditer agatur cum eo, ne sustentatione privatus ad saeculi negotia revertatur. Ut autem securius ei possis hanc misericordiam facere, de agenda imposita poenitentia diligentem circa eum curam non desinas exhibere. Salubrius autem sibi absque dubio providebit, si ad regularem vitam se duxerit transferendum.

Title XXIX: On a Cleric Promoted by a Leap

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: One who in ignorance is made a priest by a leap from subdeacon, after penance is ordained deacon, and afterward a dispensation can be granted to him in the priesthood.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Bologna.

Your letters presented to us contained that, as you had learned from the report of certain good men, the priest P., the bearer of the present letters, having omitted the order of the diaconate, caused himself to be promoted to the order of the priesthood; and when you had inquired more diligently from him concerning the truth of this, he also secretly and humbly confessed to you that he did not know for certain whether the matter so occurred, but, since good men among whom he had lived asserted this, he believed their assertion, because he himself, at the time when he received the lower orders, was below the years of discretion. You therefore, sending him to the Apostolic See, humbly petitioned us that we deign to act mercifully with him. We, therefore, grieving with his misery, by apostolic writings Command your fraternity that you impose upon him a fitting penance for negligence of this kind. When it has been completed, because that which is not known to have been done is not understood to be repeated, you are to take care to ordain him deacon, and thus by mercy permit him to minister in the order of priest. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's on the twelfth day before the Kalends of February, 1205.]

DE CLERICO PER SALTUM PROMOTO.

Qui ignoranter per saltum de subdiacono fit presbyter, post poenitentiam in diaconum ordinatur, et postea potest secum in sacerdotio dispensari. Innocentius III. Bononiensi Episcopo.

Tuae nobis praesentatae literae continebant, quod, sicut ex relatione quorundam bonorum virorum receperas, P. presbyter lator praesentium, diaconatus ordine praetermisso, se fecit ad sacerdotii ordinem promoveri, quumque super hoc ab ipso quaesisses diligentius veritatem, ipse tibi quoque secreto humiliter confessus est, se pro certo nescire, si res taliter se haberet, sed, ex quo boni viri hoc asserebant, inter quos fuerat conversatus, credebat assertioni eorum, eo, quod ipse tempore, quo ordines inferiores susceperat, infra annos discretionis fuerat constitutus. Tu igitur, ipsum ad apostolicam sedem transmittens, a nobis humiliter supplicasti, ut cum eo misericorditer agere dignaremur. Nos igitur, eius miseriae condolentes, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus condignam poenitentiam pro huiusmodi negligentia iniungas eidem; qua peracta, quia non intelligitur iteratum quod factum esse nescitur, ipsum in diaconum ordinare procures, et sic de misericordia eundem ministrare permittas in ordine sacerdotis. [*Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XII. Kal. Febr. *1205.]

Title XXX: On One Who Secretly Received an Order

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One who secretly receives an order, if an excommunication had been rendered against persons doing this, cannot minister in the order thus received or ascend to a higher one without a dispensation of the Pope; but if an excommunication had not been rendered, the bishop and abbot will be able to dispense. It says this together with the following two chapters.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Langres.

P., the bearer of the present letters, coming to us, explained to us that, having been circumvented by the cunning of the ancient enemy, he secretly received the order of the diaconate. Wherefore we respond to your fraternity that, if perhaps he was not prohibited by you, or by any of your archdeacons or prelates, under threat of anathema, you yourself, after fitting satisfaction has been imposed, may at your judgment dispense for his promotion to the priestly office, unless other matters impede. But if a threat of anathema was made concerning this, you are to admonish him, as we too have done, to receive the regular habit in some monastery or house of canons. According to the admonition, after he has lived laudably in that habit for some time, you will be able to provide for him mercifully; otherwise, by no reason do we grant that he be promoted to the priestly order.

> DE EO, QUI FURTIVE ORDINEM SUSCEPIT.
>
> Qui furtive recipit ordinem, si contra hoc facientes lata erat excommunicatio, sine dispensatione Papae in sic suscepto ministrare vel ad superiorem adscendere non potest; sed, si excommunicatio lata non erat, episcopus et abbas poterunt dispensare. H. d. cum duobus sequentibus.
>
> Alexander III. Lingoniensi Episcopo.
>
> Veniens ad nos P. lator praesentium nobis exposuit, se antiqui hostis versutia circumventum furtive diaconatus ordinem suscepisse. Unde fraternitati tuae respondemus, quod, si forte non fuit a te, vel ab aliquo archidiaconorum vel praelatorum tuorum sub anathematis interminatione prohibitus, tu ipse in promotione ipsius ad sacerdotale officium condigna satisfactione imposita, nisi alia impediant, pro arbitrio tuo dispenses. Si vero interminatio anathematis super hoc facta est, moneas eum, sicut et nos fecimus, ut in aliquo monasterio seu canonia habitum suscipiat regularem; cui iuxta admonitionem, ex quo in habitu illo aliquanto tempore fuerit laudabiliter conversatus, poteris misericorditer providere; alioquin nulla ratione concedimus, eum ad sacerdotalem ordinem promoveri.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the immediately preceding chapter.

Celestine III.

When H., the bearer of the present letters, as he showed us by his inquiry, came to your presence for the purpose of ordination, you conferred upon him the four minor orders according to the custom of the country. Not content with these, with a rash venture he also received the subdiaconate [on that same day, hiding among others without your knowledge, and the diaconate]. But because the same cleric transgressed greatly in this deed, we command that you permit him to celebrate only in minor orders. But if he shall enter a religious house and his life and morals shall require it, his abbot, if he wishes, will be able [also] to dispense with him in the other orders.

> Summatum est supra capitulo proximo.
>
> Coelestinus III. Quum H. lator praesentium, sicut nobis sua quaestione monstravit, ad tuam ordinationis causa praesentiam accessisset, iuxta consuetudinem patriae sibi quatuor minores ordines contulisti; quibus non contentus, subdiaconatum etiam [eodem die, inter alios latens te inscio, et diaconatum] temerario ausu recepit. Quia vero idem clericus in hoc facto multum excessit, mandamus, quatenus eum in minoribus duntaxat ordinibus celebrare permittas. Si vero domum religionis intraverit, et vita et mores eius exegerint: abbas suus, si voluerit, [etiam] in aliis cum eo poterit ordinibus dispensare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the first chapter above.

The same.

It became known to us from the tenor of your letters that the cleric G., the bearer of the present letters, and two others from your diocese went to G., formerly Bishop of Sigüenza, to receive orders from him. And although it had been prohibited by that bishop under sentence of excommunication that anyone thrust himself forward to receive two orders, the aforesaid clerics nevertheless secretly received the orders of subdiaconate and diaconate. Therefore, because concerning what is to be done by you for them your fraternity led us to be consulted, We respond thus to your consultation: those thus ordained ought not by rigor of law to minister in the orders received. Nevertheless, if they wished to transfer themselves to any religious life, and, after completing a penance imposed upon them at your judgment, shall have lived laudably there, in the course of time you will be able by our permission to dispense with them so that afterward they may rejoice in exercising the orders received. Furthermore, on behalf of the aforesaid G., because he labored in his own person, we more attentively entreat and admonish your fraternity that you cause him to be received as a brother into the house of canons regular of Saint P. of Semina or another religious place, where he may lament his offense, so that, if you shall see his merits supporting him while he lives regularly there, you may grant him the faculty of ministering, as we have said.

Summatum est supra capitulo primo.

Idem.

Innotuit nobis ex tenore tuarum literarum, quod G. clericus lator praesentium et alii duo de dioecesi tua ad G. quondam Seguntinum episcopum, ut ordines ab eo reciperent, accesserunt; quumque ab eodem episcopo sub excommunicationis sententia fuisset inhibitum, ne quis se ad duos ordines suscipiendos ingereret, praedicti clerici nihilominus subdiaconatus et diaconatus ordinem clandestine susceperunt. Quia igitur, quid tibi faciendum sit, pro his tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod taliter ordinati in susceptis ordinibus de iuris rigore ministrare non debent. Verum tamen, si ad religionem aliquam voluerunt se transferre, et, peracta poenitentia pro arbitrio tuo eis iniuncta, ibidem laudabiliter fuerint conversati, processu temporis cum eis poteris de nostra licentia dispensare, ut postmodum susceptorum ordinum exsecutione laetentur. Praeterea pro praedicto G., quum in persona propria laboravit, fraternitatem tuam rogamus attentius et monemus, ut eum facias in canonicam regularem St. P. de Semina vel alium religiosum locum, ubi deploret excessum, tanquam fratrem assumi, ut si ei ibidem viventi regulariter sua merita videris suffragari ministrandi prout diximus ei tribuas facultatem.

Title XXXI: On the Offenses of Prelates and Subjects

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It admonishes prelates to abstain from burdens upon subjects, enumerates some of them, and imposes a doubled penalty upon those acting contrary to this.

Alexander III.

It has come to our hearing, wherefore, if it is true, we wonder greatly and are moved against you by law, that each year you impose a tallage upon the priests established in your jurisdiction as if upon servants and hirelings; unless they pay money according to your will, you interdict them from divine office, and you treat them cheaply and dishonorably to such a degree that you have rendered them contemptible to laymen. But since you ought to cherish priests as sons and brothers with benign and fraternal charity, we command that you in no way presume to exercise tallages of this kind and undue exactions against them, nor henceforth burden them unreasonably or treat them dishonorably, or attempt without the judgment of their chapter to suspend them or subject their churches to interdict; nor are you to permit them to hold two mother churches, of which you shall see that one suffices [for them]; nor are you to presume to excommunicate anyone without judicial order. You are to know for certain that, if reports of this kind concerning you should again come to our ears, with the Lord as author we shall punish you for so great offenses in such a manner that, from fear of your punishment, others will abstain from like things.

DE EXCESSIBUS PRAELATORUM ET SUBDITORUM.

Monet praelatos abstinere a gravaminibus subditorum, et aliqua enumerat, et geminatam poenam imponit contra facientibus.

Alexander III. Pervenit ad audientiam nostram, unde, si verum est, miramur plurimum, et adversus vos de iure novemur, quod in presbyteros, qui sunt in vestra iurisdictione constituti, singulis annis, quasi in servos et mercenarios, talliam facitis, quibus, nisi ad voluntatem vestram pecuniam solverint, divinum officium interdicitis, et eos viliter et inhoneste tractatis in tantum, quod ipsos laicis despicabiles reddidistis. Quum autem presbyteros quasi filios et fratres benigna ac fraterna debeatis caritate fovere, mandamus, quatenus in eos huiusmodi tallias et exactiones indebitas exercere nullatenus praesumatis, nec de cetero irrationabiliter gravetis vel inhoneste tractetis eosdem, aut sine iudicio capituli sui suspendere, vel eorum ecclesias interdicto subiicere attentetis, neque duas matrices ecclesias, quarum unam [sibi] sufficere videbitis, permittatis illos tenere, nec aliquem excommunicare sine ordine iudiciario praesumatis, scituri pro certo, quod, si huiusmodi rumores de vobis iterum ad aures nostras pervenerint, pro tantis excessibus vos auctore Domino taliter puniemus, quod timore poenae vestrae ceteri a similibus abstinebunt.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A bishop cannot without cause free a church subject to another from that person's subjection and service.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

In addition, because the aforesaid bishop, as we have learned, has established several churches, and especially the church of Nortun., as free and immune from the custom and service of the archdeacons, through which he diminished and reduced their revenues, nevertheless, by this present communication we command you that, if the matter so occurred, you correct and amend the bishop's action concerning this with appeal removed, and so provide that the customs that the priests in the churches of their archdeaconries owe to the aforesaid archdeacons be fully preserved, and that they exhibit to them the due reverence and honor.

Non potest episcopus sine causa ecclesiam alteri subiectam ab illius subiectione et obsequio liberare.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.

Ad haec, quoniam praedictus episcopus, sicut accepimus, plures ecclesias, et praecipue ecclesiam de Nortun., a consuetudine et obsequio archidiaconorum liberas constituit et immunes, per quod reditus diminuit eorundem et attenuavit: nihilominus tibi praesentium significatione mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, factum episcopi super hoc appellatione remota corrigas et emendes, et ita provideas, quod praefatis archidiaconis consuetudines, quas presbyteri in ecclesiis suorum archidiaconatuum debent, plenarie conserventur, et illis debitam reverentiam exhibeant et honorem.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who has subjection or the collation of a benefice cannot retain it for his own use or confer it upon himself.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter.

It has come to our ears that certain archdeacons do not fear by their own authority to intrude themselves into churches in their archdeaconries that are vacant, and thus are not ashamed to detain those churches. Therefore, considering the offense of so great a presumption to be absurd and contrary to every principle of reason, and being unwilling to leave it uncorrected, by apostolic writings and by way of precept We command your fraternity that you compel through ecclesiastical censure those, if there are any archdeacons in your episcopate, who occupy churches in this manner or detain them after occupation, to relinquish them with every pretext and appeal ceasing; and, ordaining the same churches with suitable and upright persons, take care to punish the aforesaid archdeacons with due correction for so great a presumption.

Habens subiectionem seu collationem beneficii, illud pro suo usu retinere non potest, seu sibi conferre.

Idem Exoniensi Episcopo.

Ad aures nostras pervenit, quod quidam archidiaconi, tui se in ecclesias, quae in suis archidiaconatibus vacant auctoritate propria intrudere non verentur, et sic ipsas ecclesias detinere non erubescunt. Attendentes itaque absonum et omni rationi contrarium tantae praesumptionis excessum, nec volentes incorrectum relinquere, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo Mandamus, quatenus eos, si qui archidiaconi sunt in episcopatu tuo, qui tali modo ecclesias occupant vel occupatas detinent, ad eas dimittendas omni occasione et appellatione cessante censura ecclesiastica compellas, et easdem ecclesias de personis idoneis et honestis ordinans, praefatos archidiaconos pro tanta praesumptione debita cures animadversione punire.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Persons incontinent against nature, if clerics, are deposed and thrust into a monastery; if laymen, they are excommunicated.

The same, in the Lateran Council.

Clerics established in sacred orders who maintain women in their houses under the mark of incontinence are either to cast them off and live continently, or to be made strangers to ecclesiastical office and benefice. But whoever shall have been detected laboring under that incontinence which is against nature, on account of which the wrath of God comes upon the sons of unbelief and consumed five cities with fire, if they are clerics, let them be cast down from the clergy or thrust into monasteries to do penance; if laymen, let them be subjected to excommunication and made wholly strangers to the assembly of the faithful.

Contra naturam incontinentes, si sunt clerici, deponuntur, et in monasterio detruduntur; si laici, excommunicantur.

Idem in concilio Lateranensi. Clerici in sacris ordinibus constituti, qui mulierculas in domibus suis sub incontinentiae nota tenuerint, aut abiiciant eas et continenter vivant, aut ab officio et beneficio ecclesiastico fiant alieni. Quicunque autem illa incontinentia, quae contra naturam est, propter quam ira Dei venit in filios diffidentiae et quinque civitates igne consumpsit, deprehensi fuerint laborare, si clerici fuerint, deiiciantur a clero, vel ad agendam poenitentiam in monasteriis detrudantur; si laici, excommunicationi subdantur, et a coetu fidelium fiant penitus alieni.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A subject is not bound to obey a superior who demands or commands something contrary to the tenor of his privilege.

The same.

Indeed, if bishops demand anything from abbots beyond due obedience, contrary to the freedom of the order granted by our predecessors and by us, let the same abbots be free by apostolic authority to deny what is sought, lest on this occasion this order, which thus far existed free, be bound by the snare of perpetual servitude.

Subditus non tenetur parere superiori, aliquid exigenti vel praecipienti contra tenorem sui privilegii. Idem.

Sane, si episcopi aliquid ab abbatibus praeter debitam obedientiam contra libertatem ordinis a praedecessoribus nostris et a nobis indultam exigunt, liberum sit eisdem abbatibus auctoritate apostolica quod petitur denegare, ne occasione ista ordo iste qui hactenus liber exstitit, perpetuae servitutis laqueo vinciatur.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A vicar of a church who usurps for himself the parsonship of that church contrary to an oath furnished ought not to be admitted to the exercise of his office.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

We have also decided to establish concerning vicars who are obligated to the parsons by faith and oath that, if, the religion of faith and oath having been contemned, by falsely assuming the parsonship for themselves they rise up against the parsons, and concerning this shall have been confessed or convicted in court, henceforth they are in no way to be admitted in that episcopate to the exercise of their office.

Vicarius ecclesiae, usurpans sibi ipsius ecclesiae personatum contra praestitum iuramentum, ad officii sui exsecutionem admitti non debet.

Idem Norvicensi Episcopo.

Illud etiam de vicariis, qui personis fide et sacramento obligati sunt, duximus statuendum, quod, si fidei et sacramenti religione contempta personatum sibi falso assumentes, contra personas se erexerint, et super hoc in iure confessi fuerint vel convicti, de cetero in eodem episcopatu ad officii sui exsecutionem nullatenus admittantur.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: An excommunication rendered against a subject because he does not obey contrary to a privilege granted to him by the superior is not valid.

Clement III.

When, in order to restrain the malice of certain persons, it was established with much deliberation in the Lateran Council that archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, archpriests, and also deans not exceed a fixed number of mounts and persons in visitations of churches, because, as we have heard, certain persons among the aforesaid do not observe this at all in your churches, we have decided attentively to provide healthfully for your advantage concerning this. Therefore, by apostolic authority we grant to your discretion that, if prelates of churches should perhaps presume, when visiting churches, to exceed the number of mounts and persons established in the Lateran Council and demand procuration for them, you are to be free by apostolic authority to deny it; and, if on account of this they shall have promulgated any sentence against your churches or your clerics, by apostolic authority we decree it to be invalid. [Let no one therefore, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's.]

> Excommunicatio, lata contra subditum, quia non paret contra privilegium sibi a superiori concessum, non tenet.
>
> Clemens III. Quum ad quorundam malitiam coercendam in concilio fuerit Lateranensi multa deliberatione statutum, ut archiepiscopi, episcopi, archidiaconi, archipresbyteri etiam et decani certum evectionis numerum et personarum in ecclesiarum visitationibus non excedant: quia, sicut audivimus, quidam ex praedictis personis id in ecclesiis vestris nequaquam observant, super hoc commoditati vestrae attentius duximus salubriter providendum. Ideoque discretioni vestrae apostolica auctoritate concedimus, ut, si ecclesiarum praelati numerum evectionis et personarum in Lateranensi concilio constitutum, quum ecclesias visitant, excedere forte praesumpserint, et pro illis procurationem exegerint, liberum sit vobis auctoritate apostolica denegare, et, si propter hoc in ecclesias vestras vel clericos vestros aliquam sententiam promulgaverint, ipsam auctoritate apostolica decernimus non tenere. [Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petrum.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: An inferior prelate below a bishop cannot unite his own church or one subject to him to another without the bishop's consent, even with the metropolitan's authority intervening. It says this, and it is a highly citable case.

Celestine III, to Bishop Faustinus.

Just as it is known to pertain to the Supreme Pontiff to unite episcopates and subject them to another's power, so the union of churches of his diocese and their subjection belongs to the bishop. Therefore, since, as became known to us, the prior of Granda subjected or united his monastery, which is in your diocese and ought to be ordered with your consent, to the monastery of Accato without seeking your assent at all, by apostolic writings we command and grant to your fraternity that what he did concerning this without consulting you, you may by our authority invalidate as shall be just, notwithstanding the assent or confirmation that the metropolitan is alleged to have interposed, since in the diocese of his suffragan, without the latter's assent, he ought not to attempt anything of this kind contrary to canonical constitutions. We also decree that it is to be annulled, as has been said, establishing, etc.

> Praelatus inferior citra episcopum non potest suam ecclesiam vel sibi subiectam alteri unire sine episcopi consensu, etiam metropolitani auctoritate interveniente. H. d. et est casus multum allegabilis.
>
> Coelestinus III. Faustino Episcopo.
>
> Sicut unire episcopatus atque potestati subiicere alienae, ad summum Pontificem pertinere dignoscitur: ita episcopi est ecclesiarum suae dioecesis unio et subiectio earundem. Quum itaque, sicut nobis innotuit, prior Grandensis monasterium suum, quod est in tua dioecesi, et de tuo debet ordinari consensu, monasterio de Accato, tuo assensu minime requisito, subiecerit sive unierit, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus atque indulgemus, ut, quod fecit super hoc te inconsulto, tibi liceat auctoritate nostra, sicut iustum fuerit, infirmare, non obstante assensu vel confirmatione, quam metropolitanus interposuisse proponitur, quum in dioecesi sui suffraganei absque ipsius assensu non debeat aliquid huiusmodi contra constitutiones canonicas attentare, nos quoque id decernimus, prout dictum est, irritandum, statuentes etc.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A cleric who publicly glories in his crime ought to be suspended.

Innocent III, to the Archpriest of Saint Andrew of Pall.

No one of sound mind is ignorant how grave a crime it is for clerics, when they have done evil, to glory and exult in the worst things. Indeed, we have learned, which we report not without grief, that, when R. Deserien. gave P., his daughter, as wife to a certain man named I., the deacon P., of the church of Saint Peter and son of the priest A., was not ashamed publicly to confess that he had carnally known the aforesaid woman. From this it happened that the aforesaid husband sent her back to her own people, to whom she had been joined matrimonially. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command you that, if the aforesaid matters shall have been established to you, with every contradiction and appeal ceasing, you do not postpone suspending the aforesaid cleric from office and benefice, compelling the husband to receive his wife and exhibit to her the marital duty, as is just. [Given on the fourth day before the Ides of May, in the first year of our pontificate, 1198.]

Suspendi debet clericus, qui de suo crimine publice gloriatur.

Innocentius III. Archipresbytero sancti Andreae de Pall.

Quam sit grave crimen in clericis, quum malefecerint, gloriari et in rebus pessimis exsultare, nullus sanae mentis ignorat. Accepimus sane, quod non sine dolore referimus, quod, quum R. Deserien. P. filiam suam cuidam I. nomine tradiderit in uxorem, P diaconus ecclesiae S. Petri, filius A. sacerdotis, non erubuit publice confiteri, se mulierem praedictam carnaliter cognovisse; unde factum est, quod praedictus vir ad propria eam remitteret, cui fuerat matrimonialiter copulata. Ideoque tibi per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si tibi constiterit de praemissis, omni contradictione et appellatione cessante praefatum clericum ab officio et beneficio suspendere non postponas, compellens virum, ut uxorem suam recipiat, eique, sicut iustum est, officium exhibeat maritale. [Dat. IV. Id. Maii Pont. nostr. Ao. I. 1198.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A cleric who directly or indirectly furnishes authority or counsel for homicide is rendered irregular.

The same, to the Bishop of Hippo and the Abbot of Tileto, Visitors of Lombardy.

We have learned from your letters that, when you had gone to the church of Albenga together with our venerable brother the Archbishop of Pisa, then Bishop of Vercelli, to discharge the office of visitation, the Bishop of Albenga, among the other things that had been alleged against him, confessed this to you with his own mouth: that, when a certain man in a certain town belonging to his jurisdiction was accused of theft, and that man denied it altogether, offering to purge himself by the judgment of glowing iron and to be punished by hanging if he failed in it, the said bishop asked the judge what seemed good to him concerning this. And when the judge had answered that it should be done as the thief himself had said, the glowing iron was brought into the presence of the bishop himself. When that thief had taken it, he was burned; whence the judge, terrified, consulted the aforesaid bishop as to what seemed good to him concerning this. He answered that, if that thief escaped thus, it would be an evil; although by letters that the same bishop has now directed to us he affirms that he used these words: "You hear how great the outcry of the people is; they all say [that] it is an evil if he thus escapes unpunished." And so the bishop and the judge entered the town itself with a multitude, in whose presence the aforesaid thief was hanged by the authority of the bishop himself; on account of which you sent him to the Apostolic See with your letters. But the same man, when established in our presence, never alleged anything at all concerning these matters before us, nor did we see your letters, although he asserts that he presented them to us. Indeed, immediately when the said archbishop, who fully disclosed to us the course of this affair, came to the Apostolic See, the same bishop withdrew from our presence and, though sought, could not be found. But we deliberated diligently with our brothers concerning these matters, and, because the same bishop is known to have offended gravely not only in the judgment of the glowing iron but also in the hanging of the thief, since he furnished to these not only authority but also his bodily presence, we judge him unworthy of the ministry of the altar. Therefore, since the pontifical office cannot be fulfilled without the ministry of the altar, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you admonish him to resign the episcopate; otherwise, removing him by apostolic authority from the church of Albenga, the obstacle of appeal being removed, cause provision to be made for it by a canonical election of a suitable person, [restraining gainsayers, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of December, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

> Clericus, auctoritatem vel consilium directe vel indirecte homicidio praestans, irregularis efficitur.
>
> Idem Episcopo Hiponensi et Abbati de Tileto, Visitatoribus Lombardiae.
>
> Ex literis vestris accepimus, quod, quum ad Albiganensem ecclesiam una cum venerabili fratre nostro Pisano archiepiscopo, tunc episcopo Vercellensi, accessissetis visitationis officium impleturi, Albiganensis episcopus inter cetera, quae proposita fuerant contra ipsum, hoc vobis ore proprio est confessus, quod, quum quidam in villa quadam, ad eius iurisdictionem spectante, infamaretur de furto, et idem illud inficiaretur omnino, offerens, quod candentis ferri iudicio se purgaret, et ut suspendio puniretur, si deficeret in eodem, dictus episcopus requisivit a iudice, quid super hoc videretur eidem. Et quum iudex respondisset, ut fieret, sicut fur ipse dixerat, ferrum candens in ipsius praesentia episcopi est allatum. Quo quum accepisset fur ille, combustus est; unde iudex pavefactus, quid sibi super hoc videretur, consuluit episcopum memoratum. Qui respondit, quod, si fur idem sic evaderet, malum esset; quanquam per literas, quas idem episcopus nobis modo direxit, affirmet, se verbis talibus usum fuisse: "Auditis, quantus est clamor populi, omnes dicunt, [quod] malum est, si sic evaserit impunitus." Et sic episcopus et iudex villam ipsam cum multitudine sunt ingressi, in quorum praesentia praedictus fur est auctoritate ipsius episcopi suspensus; propter quod ipsum cum literis vestris ad sedem apostolicam destinastis. Sed idem in praesentia nostra constitutus nihil unquam super his proposuit coram nobis, nec literas vestras vidimus, licet idem se nobis illas asserat praesentasse. Quin immo statim, quum dictus archiepiscopus ad sedem apostolicam accessit, qui nobis huiusmodi rei seriem plenarie indicavit, idem episcopus a nostra discessit praesentia, et perquisitus non potuit inveniri. Nos autem super his cum fratribus nostris deliberavimus diligenter, et, quia idem episcopus non solum in iudicio candentis ferri, verum etiam in furis suspendio graviter noscitur deliquisse, quum his non tantum auctoritatem praestiterit, verum etiam praesentiam exhibuerit corporalem, ipsum indignum altaris ministerio reputamus. Quum igitur pontificale officium sine altaris ministerio non valeat adimpleri, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, ut episcopatui cedat, moneatis eundem; alioquin ipsum auctoritate apostolica ab

Albiganensi ecclesia sublato appellationis obstaculo amoventes, faciatis eidem per electionem canonicam de persona idonea provideri, [contradictores etc. Dat. Lat. Id. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. XI. 1208.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A conferral of a benefice secretly made to an unworthy person ought to be quashed, and one who makes a second conferral before the first conferral is quashed ought for that occasion to be deprived of the power of conferring.

The same, to the Archbishop and the Abbots of the Greater Monastery and of Saint Julian at Tours.

When a dispute arose between the beloved sons B. and P., canons of Poitiers, concerning the subcantorship of the church of Poitiers, each of them firmly asserting that he had canonically obtained the subcantorship itself through the cantor of Poitiers, to whom its donation belonged, [the aforesaid Bocard, coming on account of this to the Apostolic See, affirmed before our beloved son Guala, Cardinal Deacon of Saint Mary in Porticu, whom we assigned as auditor to him and the proctor of the aforesaid Peter, that the subcantorship itself had been canonically conferred upon him. He added that, even if the cantor had otherwise conferred it canonically upon the aforesaid Peter, the donation itself nevertheless ought not to have taken effect because of the unworthiness of the person, since that Peter was a public gambler and manifest usurer. But although, after many altercations, the aforesaid Bocard introduced certain witnesses to prove not only this but also his principal claim, nevertheless, because both he and the opposing party intended to produce several witnesses concerning the principal matter and the incidental matters, we committed the case itself to our beloved sons, the dean and cantor of Saint Radegund at Poitiers and the dean of Thouars, to be concluded by a canonical termination, transmitting to them the aforesaid attestations enclosed under our seal. When the parties were afterward established before them and the said Bocard sought the admission of his witnesses, it was answered on the other side that he was not to be heard at all, since through our delegated judges, the beloved sons the archpriest, the master of the schools, and Master P. Parvus, canon of Bourges, he had been bound by a sentence of excommunication because he refused at their command to admit the cleric Hugh as a canon of Faye. And when afterward that Bocard presented letters of the same judges concerning his absolution, the opposing party began to accuse them of falsity, because their final clause differed from the remainder of the writing both in the color of the ink and in the form of the letters, alleging that the same B., as one accused of the crime of falsity, was to be repelled altogether from his claim. Then, after manifold and diverse contentions, the judges themselves, with the will of the parties, received witnesses concerning both the principal and the incidental matters. But when the same B. afterward appealed to our hearing, the judges themselves remitted the parties to our presence with the attestations and the acts of the trial authenticated by their own seals. The parties, therefore, recently established on this account at the Apostolic See, litigated for some time before our beloved son Cynthius, Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Lawrence in Lucina, whom we assigned to them as auditor.] We, therefore, having diligently inspected the attestations of both parties, found it evidently proved that the same P. was a public gambler and manifest usurer, since he had publicly lent eleven denarii for twelve at gaming. Whence, although the same Peter, to cloak the excess of so great a presumption, alleged that he had done this according to the custom of the clerics of Gaul, by which almost all clerics so frequently lend and gamble, we nevertheless, who by the debt of our office propose to root out pests of this sort and altogether condemn pleasure-giving games, by occasion of which one arrives at material for dissolution under a certain appearance of courtliness, regard the aforesaid excuse as frivolous, since it is cloaked by a depraved custom, which ought rather to be called corruption. For the offense is more punishable in those by whom authority to offend is usurped for framing excuses in sins. Therefore, because what is known to have been done concerning the aforesaid subcantorship for the same P. was done contrary to legitimate sanctions, according to which the gates of dignity ought not to lie open to base and unworthy persons, we have determined that it must be invalidated on account of his unworthiness and baseness. Furthermore, it was manifestly proved by witnesses against the aforesaid B. that the final clause had not been inserted in the letters of the same judges with the knowledge of the aforesaid judges of Bourges, as is expressed clearly in their depositions; Robert the deacon also, introduced as a witness to prove this, deposed the same thing and added that, when he was to seal those letters, [he] inspected them diligently and did not then find the same clause appended. Whence the other party alleged that, because the aforesaid B. had knowingly used letters thus falsified, he ought deservedly to be repelled altogether as a forger. But we, considering that, even if it were established most evidently that the said clause had been appended to those letters without the knowledge of the aforesaid judges, nevertheless, because proof was not made to us that the said B. appended that clause, or procured that it be placed by another, or even that he knowingly used letters thus falsified, determined that the same man was to be absolved from an accusation of falsity of this kind; especially since, after this was objected against him, he altogether ceased to use them. [In addition, through the witnesses produced by Bocard concerning the principal matter it was shown sufficiently enough that on the fifth weekday—or, to speak more expressly, on the Thursday after the feast of Saint Michael, two years previously—the aforesaid subcantorship had been granted to him. But by his own confession it appeared that the same feast in that year had been celebrated on a Thursday, and thus it was proved by consequence that the said donation was made to B. on the eighth day after the feast itself. Moreover, through six witnesses—namely the cantor, Oliver, W. Gerru, R. Agnellus, I. Marinus, and P. of Marcai—whom the aforesaid P. introduced to prove that the donation made to him had preceded, it was manifestly proved that the often-mentioned subcantorship had been conferred upon him at an earlier time, since Oliver, W., and I. say manifestly that the donation was made to Peter on the second or third day after the said feast, the cantor that it was on the third or fourth day, and P. that it was in the week after the same feast. But by the witnesses whom Bocard introduced to disprove the said witnesses, Oliver and William were discredited as manifest fornicators. The cantor also is convicted by many witnesses of being perjured, because, although he said under oath that he had never given the aforesaid subcantorship to Bocard, it was proved on the other side by many witnesses that the cantor invested the same man in their presence. Moreover, R. Agnellus is known to have deposed nothing concerning the principal matter, although the party of Peter, saying that he had spoken ambiguously, attempted to show that the same witness had said concerning the principal matter that same thing which Riverius and William had said. But the two remaining witnesses, namely I. Marinus and P. of Marcai, remained, and they could not reasonably be discredited. For although the party of Bocard said that faith was not to be placed in the testimony of that P., because he had been a proctor in Peter's case—which it endeavored to establish from the fact that the witnesses of the same Bocard had said that the same I. had carried Peter's letters, sought witnesses, and done certain things of this kind—nevertheless, because it was not established to us that he had been the proctor of the same P., we judged that faith was to be placed in his testimony. We also regarded as frivolous what the same party of Bocard alleged, namely that, because Peter of Marcai said that the donation was made to the often-mentioned Peter in the week after the aforesaid feast, it is implied that that donation to Peter had by no means preceded the donation of B., which had been made on the eighth day after the same feast. For since a week, or seven-day period, is by no means extended beyond the seventh day, it is apparent that the donation made within the week, or even the seven-day period, was certainly made at an earlier time than that which was made afterward on the eighth day.] Therefore, since by the depositions at least of two witnesses, who were in no way discredited, it has been evidently established to us that the grant made to P. preceded, although it deserved to be disapproved because of the unworthiness of the same P., we decree the grant afterward made to B. invalid and void. But because the cantor, to whom the donation of the subcantorship itself is alleged to belong —to say nothing of his perjury, conducted himself so inconstantly in this affair that, as was premised, he attempted to make a second donation before the first had been disapproved, and it is fitting that a person be punished in that in which he is seen to have offended, we have determined that the inconstancy of his variation is to be punished in this: that he is to have no faculty of granting the subcantorship itself on this occasion. By the authority of the present letters, commanding and granting you to assign the same, supported by our authority, the obstacle of appeal being removed, to a suitable person, [restraining gainsayers, etc.]

Collatio beneficii facta indigno occulta cassari debet, et conferens secundo ante cassationem primae collationis privari debet ea vice potestate conferendi. Idem Archiepiscopo et maioris monasterii et sancti Iuliani Abbatibus Turonensibus.

Inter dilectos filios B. et P. canonicos Pictavenses super succentoria Pictavensis ecclesiae quaestione suborta, eorum utroque firmiter asserente, succentoriam ipsam se per Pictavensem cantorem, ad quem eius donatio pertinebat, canonice assecutum, [praedictus Bocardus propter hoc ad sedem apostolicam veniens, coram dilecto filio nostro Guala sanctae Mariae in Porticu diacono cardinali, quem sibi et procuratori praedicti Petri dedimus auditorem, affirmans sibi succentoriam ipsam canonice fuisse collatam, adiecit, quod, etsi cantor eam memorato Petro alias canonice contulisset, donatio tamen ipsa propter indignitatem personae consequi non debebat effectum, quum idem Petrus esset publicus aleator et usurarius manifestus. Licet autem post altercationes multas non solum ad hoc, sed etiam ad principale probandum praefatus Bocardus induxerit quosdam testes, quia tamen tam ipse quam pars adversa super principali et incidentibus plures testes producere intendebat, dilectis filiis decano et cantori sanctae Radegundis Pictavensis et Toarcensi decano causam ipsam commisimus fine canonico terminandam, attestationes praedictas eis sub bulla nostra transmittentes inclusas. Coram quibus postea partibus constitutis, quum iam dictus Bocardus testes suos recipi postularet, fuit ex adverso responsum, quod non erat aliquatenus audiendus, utpote qui per dilectos filios archipresbyterum, magistrum scholarum, et magistrum P. Parvum canonicum Bituricenses, iudices delegatos a nobis, sententia erat excommunicationis adstrictus pro eo, quod ad mandatum eorum Hugonem clericum in canonicum Fayensem admittere recusabat. Quumque postmodum idem Bocardus super absolutione sua literas eorundem iudicum praesentasset, adversa pars eos coepit arguere falsitatis eo, quod clausula finalis earum tam in incausti colore quam in literarum forma a scriptura reliqua discordabat, allegans eundem B. tanquam reum criminis falsitatis ab intentione sua penitus repellendum. Porro post contentiones multiplices et diversas iudices ipsi de voluntate partium testes tam super principali quam incidentibus receperunt. Sed eodem B. postmodum ad nostram audientiam appellante, iudices ipsi partes cum attestationibus et actis iudicii sigillis propriis consignatis ad nostram praesentiam remiserunt. Partes itaque propter hoc nuper apud sedem apostolicam constitutae coram dilecto filio nostro Cynthio tituli sancti Laurentii in Lucina presbytero cardinali, quem ipsis deputavimus auditorem, aliquamdiu litigarunt.] Nos igitur, attestationibus utriusque partis diligenter inspectis, invenimus evidenter esse probatum, eundem P. publicum aleatorem esse ac usurarium manifestum; utpote qui undecim denarios pro duodecim publice mutuaverat in ludo. Unde, licet ad palliandum tantae praesumptionis excessum proposuerit idem Petrus, quod hoc fecerat iuxta consuetudinem Gallicorum clericorum, qua fere universi clerici mutuant sic frequenter et ludunt: nos tamen, qui ex officii nostri debito pestes huiusmodi exstirpare proponimus, atque ludos voluptuosos, occasione quorum sub quadam curialitatis imagine ad dissolutionis materiam devenitur, penitus improbamus, excusationem praedictam, quae per pravam consuetudinem, quae corruptela dicenda est potius, palliatur, frivolam reputantes, quum in illis magis plectibilis sit offensa, per quos ad excusandas excusationes in culpis delinquendi auctoritas usurpatur, quod circa eundem P. de succentoria praedicta factum esse dignoscitur, propter indignitatem et vilitatem ipsius duximus irritandum, quum personis vilibus et indignis portae dignitatis patere non debeant iuxta legitimas sanctiones. Praeterea contra praefatum B. fuit manifeste per testes probatum, quod de conscientia iudicum praedictorum Biturícensium ultima clausula inserta non fuerat in literis eorundem, sicut in ipsorum depositionibus exprimitur evidenter; Robertus quoque diaconus, ad hoc probandum testis inductus, illud idem deposuit, et adiecit, quod, quum deberet easdem literas sigillare, [illas] diligenter inspexit, nec eandem clausulam appositam tunc invenit. Unde pars altera proponebat, quod, quum praedictus B. scienter usus fuerit literis sic falsatis, debebat merito tanquam falsarius omnino repelli. Verum nos, attendentes, quod, etsi constaret evidentissime, quod dicta clausula literis illis fuisset apposita praeter conscientiam iudicum praedictorum, quia tamen fides nobis facta non fuit, quod dictus B. illam clausulam apposuerit, vel procuraverit, ut ab alio poneretur, vel etiam, quod scienter usus fuerit literis sic falsatis, ab huiusmodi falsitatis obiectu eundem duximus absolvendum; maxime quum, postquam sibi hoc obiectum fuit, praetermiserit penitus uti eis. [Ad haec per testes Bocardi super principali negotio productos fuit satis sufficienter ostensum, quod quinta feria et, ut loquamur expressius, die Iovis post festivitatem sancti Michaelis, biennio iam elapso, succentoria sibi concessa fuerat supradicta; sed per confessionem eiusdem apparuit, quod idem festum eodem anno die Iovis fuerat celebratum, sicque fuit per consequentiam comprobatum, quod octavo die post festum ipsum eidem B. dicta donatio facta fuit. Ceterum per sex testes, cantorem scilicet, Oliverium, W. Gerru, R. Agnellum, I. Marinum, P. de Marcai, quos supradictus P. ad probandum, quod donatio sibi facta praecesserat, introduxit, exstitit manifeste probatum, quod anteriori tempore sibi fuerat succentoria saepedicta collata, quum Oliverius, W. et I. manifeste dicant, quod secunda vel tertia, et cantor quod tertia vel quarta die post dictum festum, et P. quod in hebdomada post idem festum eidem Petro donatio facta fuit. Verum per testes, quos Bocardus ad reprobationem testium iam dictorum induxit Oliverius et Willelmus fuerunt tanquam manifesti fornicarii reprobati. Cantor quoque per multos testes convincitur esse periurus, quia, quum iuratus dixerit, quod Bocardo succentoriam nunquam dederat supradictam, per multos testes probatum est ex adverso, quod ipsis praesentibus cantor investivit eundem. Insuper R. Agnellus nihil deposuisse dignoscitur super negotio principali, licet pars Petri, dicens ipsum amphibologice fuisse locutum, ostendere nisa fuerit, quod idem testis super principali dixerit illud idem, quod Riverius et Willelmus. Duo vero residui, scilicet I. Marinus et P. de Marcai, remanserunt, qui nequiverunt rationabiliter reprobari, quia, licet dixerit pars Bocardi, quod ipsius P. testimonio fides habenda non erat, quoniam in causa Petri fuerat procurator, quod ex eo nitebatur adstruere, quia testes eiusdem Bocardi dixerant, quod idem I. literas Petri portaverat, quaesierat testes, et quaedam huiusmodi fecerat, quia tamen nobis non constitit, quod eiusdem P. fuerit procurator, eius testimonio fidem censuimus adhibendam. Sed et illud frivolum reputavimus, quod proposuit eadem pars Bocardi, videlicet, quia, quum Petrus de Marcai dixerit, quod in hebdomada post praedictum festum saepedicto Petro donatio facta fuit, innuitur, quod donationem ipsius B., quae octavo die post idem festum facta fuerat, eadem, Petri donatio minime praecessisset. Nam quum hebdomada vel septimana nequaquam ultra diem septimum extendatur, apparet, quia donatio, quae facta fuerat in hebdomada vel etiam septimana, citeriori utique tempore fuit facta quam illa, quae facta fuit postmodum in octavo.] Quum igitur per depositiones saltem duorum testium, qui nullatenus reprobati fuerunt, nobis constiterit evidenter, quod concessio P. facta praecesserit, quanquam propter indignitatem eiusdem P. meruerit reprobari, concessionem postmodum B. factam irritam decernimus et inanem. Quia vero cantor ad quem ipsius succentoriae donatio spectare proponitur, ut de ipsius periurio taceamus, adeo inconstanter se habuit in hoc facto, ut, sicut praemissum est, prima donatione non reprobata secundam facere attentaverit, et dignum sit, ut in eo quis puniatur, in quo visus est deliquisse, in hoc eius duximus varietatis inconstantiam puniendam, ut concedendi succentoriam ipsam hac vice nullam habeat facultatem, praesentium vobis auctoritate mandantes concedimus, quatenus eandem, auctoritate nostra suffulti, sublato appellationis obstaculo personae idoneae assignetis, [contradictores etc.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: To take cognizance of a matrimonial cause, and likewise to impose public penances and grant indulgences, pertains to the episcopal dignity; whence an inferior prelate ought not to intermeddle in these matters unless it belongs to him by special right.

The same, in the General Council.

From the complaints of bishops coming to us from diverse parts of the world, we have learned of the grave and great excesses of certain abbots, who, not content with their own bounds, extend their hands to those things that belong to the episcopal dignity, by taking cognizance of matrimonial causes, imposing public penances, also granting letters of indulgences, and presuming similar things, whence it sometimes happens that episcopal authority becomes cheap in the eyes of many. Wishing, therefore, in these matters to provide both for the dignity of bishops and the salvation of abbots, by the present decree we firmly prohibit any abbot from presuming to extend himself to such things, if he wishes to avoid his own peril, unless perhaps any one of them is able to defend himself concerning matters of this kind by a special grant or another legitimate cause.

> Cognoscere de causa matrimoniali, item poenitentias publicas et indulgentias concedere spectat ad dignitatem episcopalem; unde inferior praelatus de his se intromittere non debet, nisi ei competat de iure speciali. Idem in concilio generali. Accedentibus ad nos de diversis mundi partibus episcoporum querelis, intelleximus graves et grandes quorundam abbatum excessus, qui, suis finibus non contenti, manus ad ea, quae sunt episcopalis dignitatis, extendunt, de causis matrimonialibus cognoscendo, iniungendo publicas poenitentias, concedendo etiam indulgentiarum literas, et similia praesumendo, unde contingit interdum, quod vilescit episcopalis auctoritas apud multos. Volentes igitur in his et episcoporum dignitati et abbatum providere saluti, praesenti decreto firmiter prohibemus, ne quis abbatum ad talia se praesumat extendere, si proprium voluerit periculum evitare; nisi forsan quisquam eorum speciali concessione vel alia legitima causa super huiusmodi valeat se tueri.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A priest cannot be compelled to reveal a sinner or a sin confessed in penance.

Honorius III, to P., Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Pudentiana, Our Vicar.

The beloved son John, priest of Saint Thomas in Parione, complained in an exposition before us that the rectors of the confraternity of the City, striving to constrain him to reveal the thieves and that which had been revealed to him as a priest concerning a certain theft, or to make satisfaction from it to the person who suffered the loss, pronounced a sentence of interdict against him unless he accomplished one of the aforesaid things within eight days. Therefore, because it would be pernicious for the aforesaid priest to reveal things entrusted to him in such a manner, and again unjust for him to be compelled to pay for that which he did not seize, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, summoning the aforesaid rectors before you, you enjoin upon them that they cease entirely from burdening the aforesaid priest concerning this.

> Ad revelandum peccatorem, sive peccatum in poenitentia confessum, sacerdos compelli non potest.
>
> Honorius III. P. tit. sanctae Pudentianae Presbytero cardinali, Vicario nostro.
>
> Dilectus filius Ioannes, sancti Thomae de Parione presbyter, exposuit coram nobis conquerendo, quod rectores fraternitatis Urbis ipsum ad revelandum fures, et id, quod super quodam furto sibi tanquam sacerdoti fuerat revelatum, vel ad satisfaciendum exinde damnum passo arctare nitentes, in eum, nisi alterum praemissorum intra octo dies efficeret, tulerunt sententiam interdicti. Quia igitur perniciosum esset, praedictum presbyterum sibi taliter credita revelare, ac iterum iniquum, cogi ad id, quod non rapuit, exsolvendum, discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praefatos rectores coram te conveniens, iniungas eisdem, ut a memorati presbyteri super hoc gravamine penitus conquiescant.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Private persons regularly cannot constitute a college and possess the signs of a college unless it is otherwise granted to them.

The same, to Provost R. and Archdeacon I. of Soissons.

Our beloved daughter in Christ, the Abbess of Iotrensis, took care to intimate to us that, although the priests and clerics of the church of Iotrensis in the diocese of Meaux have not been accustomed to have their own seal, nor are they one body such that it might be called a chapter, they nevertheless contend, against the will of the abbess herself, who is their head and patroness, that they are to have a seal to her prejudice and burden; for which reason she petitioned us that this be prohibited to them. But because the aforesaid matters were not established to us, we command your discretion that, after the truth concerning these things has been more diligently investigated, if it shall have been established to you that it is so, you expressly prohibit the said priests and clerics by our authority from presuming either to fabricate a seal anew or to use it if perhaps it has newly been fabricated, restraining them, if they presume to come against our prohibition, from a presumption of this kind through ecclesiastical censures, appeal being set aside.

Privati homines regulariter nequeunt constituere collegium et habere signa collegii, nisi eis aliter concedatur.

Idem Praeposito R. et I. Archidiacono Suessionensibus.

Dilecta in Christo filia abbatissa Iotrensis nobis insinuare curavit, quod, quum presbyteri et clerici Iotrensis ecclesiae Meldensis dioecesis non consueverint proprium habere sigillum, nec sint unum corpus ita, quod capitulum appellaretur, nihilominus tamen contra voluntatem ipsius abbatissae, quae ipsorum caput est et patrona, sigillum habere contendunt in ipsius praeiudicium et gravamen; quare id eis a nobis petiit inhiberi. Quia vero nobis non constitit de praemissis, Discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, inquisita super his diligentius veritate, si vobis constiterit ita esse dictis presbyteris et clericis auctoritate nostra inhibeatis expresse, ne praesumant vel de novo fabricare sigillum, vel uti eo, si forte noviter fuerit fabricatum, ipsos si contra prohibitionem nostram venire praesumpserint, a praesumptione huiusmodi per censuras ecclesiasticas appellatione postposita compescentes.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: One who, contrary to his oath, denies that a prelate is his lord, or complains against him before a secular judge, or attacks him, ought to be deposed.

The same, to the Archdeacon of Saint Aubert, the Abbot of Annona, and the Provost of Cambrai.

We received a grave complaint, not devoid of grief, and surrounded with the stings of insults to the whole clergy: that, when our venerable brother the Bishop of Amiens had conferred a certain vacant benefice, which is called the altar of Villesco, upon a certain suitable person—as he believed it to belong to him—while the Archdeacon of Amiens was absent, the same archdeacon, accompanied by a band consisting of his brother Manasser and certain others, approached the aforesaid bishop and, alleging that he had been wronged by him concerning this, insisted before him that the person instituted by the bishop should be removed altogether from the benefice itself without cognizance of the cause. (And below:) We command your discretion that, if it shall have been established to you that the often-mentioned archdeacon, once and a second time, contrary to the fidelity of the homage rendered and the reverence owed, denied that his bishop was his lord, or lodged an action against him concerning spiritual matters in the secular forum, or furnished either cause or counsel both to the attackers of the bishop and his associates and to his brother or his accomplices, you cut him off perpetually from the church of Amiens as a rotten member, lest by his corruption he contaminate others, and remove him altogether, causing his benefices to be assigned to suitable persons by those to whom their donation belongs; otherwise, because public report labors against him and manifest presumptions appear, impose upon him canonical purgation concerning the aforesaid matters with ten persons of the same dignity, order, and province as oath-helpers. But if perhaps he shall fail in such a purgation within a time to be fixed by you, deprive him of office and benefice, every impediment of contradiction and appeal being removed, nevertheless causing the benefices which the same archdeacon holds to be assigned to suitable persons, as was expressed above.

> Qui contra iuramentum negat praelatum dominum suum, vel coram iudice saeculari de ipso conqueritur vel ipsum invadit, deponi debet.
>
> Idem S. Auberti Archidiacono, Abbati de Annona Praeposito Cameracensi. Gravem et dolore non vacuam, *ac toti clero contumeliarum aculeis circumfertam recepimus questionem, quod, quum venerabilis frater noster Ambianensis episcopus quoddam beneficium vacans, quod altare dicitur de Villesco, cuidam idoneo, prout ad se spectare credebat, absente tamen Ambianensi archidiacono contulisset, idem archidiaconus, stipatus caterva Manasseri fratris sui et quorundam aliorum, accedens ad episcopum memoratum, et proponens, quod ei iniuriatus fuerat super hoc, institit apud eum, ut sine causae cognitione a beneficio ipso prorsus amoveretur ab episcopo institutus. *(Et infra:) Discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, archidiaconum saepe dictum semel et secundo contra fidem homagii praestiti ac debitam reverentiam episcopum suum esse dominum negasse, vel in foro saeculari deposuisse contra eum super rebus spiritualibus quaestionem, aut tam invasoribus episcopi et sociorum eius, quam fratri eius vel complicibus suis causam vel consilium praebuisse, ipsum, tanquam membrum putridum, ne sua contaminet alios corruptela, ab Ambianensi ecclesia perpetuo abscindatis et removeatis omnino, beneficia sua facientes personis idoneis per illos, ad quos donatio eorum pertinet, assignari; alioquin, quia contra eum publica fama laborat, et manifestae praesumptiones apparent, purgationem ei super praemissis canonicam cum manu decima eiusdem dignitatis et ordinis eiusdem provinciae indicatis. Quod si forte in tali purgatione defecerit infra tempus praefigendum a vobis ipsum cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis impedimento sublato officio beneficioque privetis, facientes nihilominus sicut superius est expressum beneficia, quae idem archidiaconus detinet personis idoneis assignari.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: It sets forth fifteen burdens inflicted upon religious, from which it commands prelates to abstain.

Gregory IX, to all Prelates of Churches.

Exceedingly unjust (And below:) Since religious men, wholesomely denying themselves, have chosen to serve poor Christ in poverty according to His pleasure, as having nothing and possessing all things, there are not lacking many, both prelates of churches and others, who, seduced by blind cupidity and regarding whatever the piety of the faithful bestows upon the aforesaid persons as taken away from their own greed, disturb their peace in manifold ways. For, against the rule approved by the Apostolic See and the institutions of their order, they wish, against their will, to hear their confessions, to impose penances upon them, and to furnish them the Eucharist; nor do they wish the body of Christ to be reserved in their oratories. They compel their dead brothers to be buried at their churches and their funeral rites to be celebrated there; and if any one of the dying brothers chooses burial elsewhere than in their churches, they compel the funeral first to be carried to their churches, so that the offering may fall to their uses. Nor, allowing them to possess a bell or a blessed cemetery, do they permit them to celebrate divine things except at certain times. They also wish to fix according to their own will in their houses a certain number of brothers, priests, clerics, and laymen, as well as of candles, lamps, and ornaments, and they demand from them the residue of the candles when new ones are set out. Nor do they permit their new priests to celebrate their first Masses anywhere other than in their churches, nevertheless compelling them to receive and reserve for those prelates' use the offerings in the daily Masses that they celebrate in their own places and at their own altars. They also contend to extort from them under the name of an offering whatever is given to them by the pious devotion of the faithful within the precinct of their houses while they celebrate the solemnities of Mass; and they wrongly claim for their own right what is bestowed upon them unconditionally, both in ornaments of the altar and in ecclesiastical books. Therefore, we command that each and all of you desist from the aforesaid burdens, more strictly restraining your subjects from things of this kind. [The twelfth day before the Kalends of September, 1231.]

> Ponit XV. gravamina, illata religiosis, a quibus praecipit praelatos abstinere.
>
> Gregorius IX. universis ecclesiarum Praelatis.
>
> Nimis iniqua (Et infra:) Quum religiosi viri, abnegantes salubriter semet ipsos, elegerint in paupertate Christo pauperi ad placitum famulari, tanquam nihil habentes, et omnia possidentes: non desunt plerique tam ecclesiarum praelati quam alii, qui, caeca cupiditate seducti, propriae aviditati subtrahi reputantes quicquid praedictis fidelium pietas elargitur, quietem ipsorum multipliciter inquietant. Volunt namque contra regulam a sede apostolica approbatam et sui ordinis instituta ipsis invitis eorum confessiones audire, ac eis iniungere poenitentias, et eucharistiam exhibere; nec volunt, ut corpus Christi in eorum oratoriis reservetur. Et fratres ipsorum defunctos apud ecclesias suas compellunt sepeliri, et eorum exsequias celebrari, et, si quis decedentium fratrum alibi quam in suis ecclesiis eligat sepulturam, funus primo ad ecclesias suas deferri cogunt, ut oblatio suis usibus cedat. Nec sustinentes, eos habere campanam, vel coemeterium benedictum, certis tantum temporibus permittunt ipsos celebrare divina. Volunt quoque in domibus eorum certum numerum fratrum, sacerdotum clericorum et laicorum, nec non cereorum, lampadarum et ornamentorum pro voluntate sua taxare, ac residuum cereorum, quando noviter apponuntur exigunt ab eisdem. Nec permittunt, quod novi sacerdotes eorum alibi quam in ecclesiis suis celebrent primas missas, eos nihilominus compellentes, ut in quotidianis missis, quas in suis locis et altaribus celebrant, oblationes ad opus eorum recipiant et reservent; quicquid etiam eis, dum celebrant missarum solennia, intra domorum suarum ambitum pia fidelium devotione donatur, ab ipsis extorquere oblationis nomine contendentes, quod eisdem tam in ornamentis altaris quam in libris ecclesiasticis absolute confertur, vendicant perperam iuri suo. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus universi et singuli a praenotatis gravaminibus desistatis, subditos vestros ab huiusmodi arctius compescendo. [XII. Kal. Sept. 1231.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: It sets forth twelve burdens upon the Preachers and Minors, from which it commands prelates to abstain.

The same, to all Prelates of Churches.

Exceedingly depraved (And below:) Since certain religious men—namely, the Friars Preachers and Minors, whose order and rule the Apostolic See is known to have approved—serve poor Christ in the most straitened poverty, many prelates and others compel them to attend their synods and to be subject to their constitutions. Not content with these things, they threaten that they will hold chapters and scrutinies in the places of the brothers for the purpose of correcting them, demanding fidelity confirmed by an oath from their ministers and custodians. Likewise commanding them for a slight cause to come with them processionally both outside and within cities, they fulminate a sentence of excommunication against their benefactors; and, threatening the same thing against the brothers, they endeavor to remove them from the places in which they serve the Lord unless they obey them in all the things said above. In addition, prohibiting the brothers from daring to go, when devoutly invited by the people, to more honorable cities and towns where they may dwell religiously and honorably, they presume to promulgate a sentence of excommunication both against the brothers who go and against those who receive them. They also contend to extort from them tithes from the fruits of gardens, as well as revenues from the dwellings of the brothers as from houses of Jews, asserting that, if the brothers did not dwell there, certain proceeds would be paid by other inhabitants. And in order that they may subject them entirely to their dominion, they wish to set ministers and custodians over them at the choice of their own will. Therefore, we command that each and all of you desist from the aforesaid burdens, more strictly restraining your subjects from things of this kind.

> Ponit XII. gravamina Praedicatorum et Minorum, a quibus praecipit praelatos abstinere.
>
> Idem universis ecclesiarum Praelatis.
>
> Nimis prava (Et infra:) Quum quidam viri religiosi, utputa fratres Praedicatores et Minores, quorum ordinem et regulam sedes apostolica noscitur approbasse, in arctissima paupertate Christo pauperi famulentur: plerique praelati et alii eos ad synodos suas cogunt accedere, ac suis constitutionibus subiacere. Nec his contenti, capitula et scrutinia in locis fratrum pro his corrigendis facturos se comminantur, fidelitatem iuramento firmatam ab eorum ministris et custodibus exigentes. Eis quoque, ut tam extra civitates quam intra cum eis processionaliter veniant, ex levi causa mandantes, excommunicationis sententiam fulminant in benefactores ipsorum, et id ipsum fratribus comminantes, eos de locis, in quibus Domino famulantur, satagunt amovere, nisi eis obediant in omnibus supra dictis. Ad hoc, ne fratres ad honorabiliores civitates et villas, ubi religiose ac honeste valeant commorari, a populis devote vocati accedere audeant inhibentes, tam in accedentes fratres quam in receptatores eorum praesumunt excommunicationis sententiam promulgare. Ab eis etiam de hortorum fructibus decimas, nec non de habitaculis fratrum, sicut de Iudaeorum domibus, contendunt reditus extorquere, asserendo, quod, nisi fratres morarentur ibidem, ab aliis habitatoribus proventus aliqui solverentur; et, ut ipsos suae subdant totaliter ditioni, eisdem ministros et custodes volunt praeficere pro suae arbitrio voluntatis. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus universi et singuli a praenotatis gravaminibus desistatis, subditos vestros ab huiusmodi arctius compescendo.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: One who does not observe an interdict is suspended from office and benefice and from all jurisdiction. It says this according to the true understanding.

The same, to the Archbishop of Braga.

So great is the key of Peter (And below:) It cannot fail to come to mind, to the confusion of P., formerly Bishop of Coimbra, how greatly he offended against us and the Roman Church, despised the keys of Peter, and injured ecclesiastical power, since he not only rashly violated the sentence of interdict which he had observed from the beginning, but even induced others—indeed, compelled them—not to observe it. And those whom he could by no means induce by admonitions or bend by threats and terrors to violate the sentence of interdict, after atrocious injuries, loss of goods, and despoiling of kinsmen, he stripped of dignities, prebends, and benefices and compelled miserably to go into exile, conferring those things upon his supporters in this matter not without rash presumption. All these things the same bishop publicly acknowledged in our presence and that of our brothers. Although the aforesaid bishop resigned voluntarily into our hands, nevertheless, unwilling that those who did not fear to violate a sentence of interdict of this kind by their own rashness, and to receive the dignities, prebends, and benefices of others who had been despoiled of them without fault and without reasonable cause, should escape the severity of canonical vengeance, lest the perversity of the deed pass into an example for presumptuous persons, by the authority of almighty God we decree invalid and void every institution, destitution, and conferral of prebends, benefices, and dignities presumed by the same bishop, and the sentences of excommunication or interdict pronounced by him against anyone on this occasion after the violation of that interdict. But because where the offense is greater, there it is to be avenged more severely, we command that, after removing altogether from the benefices themselves, prebends, and dignities, and also from any other benefices and churches that they hold, all whom the aforesaid bishop intruded into the aforesaid benefices, prebends, and dignities, you suspend by apostolic authority from office and benefice both those same presumptuous persons and all others who damnably violated the aforesaid interdict. You shall also compel those who are established to have extended rash hands against the persons and property of the aforesaid canons, prelates, and clerics to come to our presence to receive a sentence according to their deserts, invoking for this, if necessary, the assistance of the secular arm.

> Non servans interdictum, suspensus est ab officio et beneficio, et omni iurisdictione. H. d. secundum verum intellectum.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Bracarensi. Tanta est clavis Petri (Et infra:) Ad confusionem P. episcopi quondam Colubriensis non potest in memoriam non venire, quantum in nos et ecclesiam Romanam deliquerit, despexerit Petri claves, et ecclesiasticam laeserit potestatem, quum non solum interdicti sententiam, quam servaverat ab initio, temere violavit, verum etiam induxit alios, immo compulit, non servare, et quos inducere monitis et flectere minis ac terroribus ad violandam interdicti sententiam nulla potuit ratione, post atroces iniurias, amissionem bonorum, spoliationem parentum, dignitatibus, praebendis et beneficiis spolians, coegit miserabiliter exsulare, ea suis in hac parte fautoribus non absque praesumptione temeraria conferendo, quae omnia idem episcopus in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia publice recognovit. Licet autem memoratus episcopus in manibus nostris spontanea cesserit voluntate: nolentes tamen, ut hi, qui huiusmodi sententiam interdicti non sunt veriti temeritate propria violare, ac recipere dignitates, praebendas ac beneficia aliorum, qui absque culpa et sine causa rationabili eis fuerant spoliati, severitatem effugiant canonicae ultionis, ne facti perversitas transeat praesumptoribus in exemplum, auctoritate Dei omnipotentis omnem institutionem, destitutionem, collationem praebendarum, beneficiorum ac dignitatum praesumptas per eundem episcopum, et excommunicationis seu interdicti sententias, in quoscunque hac occasione prolatas ab eo post interdicti violationem eiusdem, decernimus irritas et inanes. Quia vero, ubi magis exceditur, ibi est severius vindicandum, mandamus, quatenus omnibus, quos praedictus episcopus in supra dicta beneficia, praebendas et dignitates intrusit, non solum a beneficiis ipsis, praebendis et dignitatibus, verum etiam ab aliis beneficiis, si qua obtinent, et ecclesiis prorsus amotis, tam praesumptores eosdem, quam omnes alios, qui praefatum interdictum damnabiliter violarunt, suspendas auctoritate apostolica ab officio et beneficio. Illos quoque, quos in personas et res praedictorum canonicorum, praelatorum et clericorum manus temerarias constiterit extendisse, ad nostram venire compellas praesentiam, pro meritis sententiam recepturos, invocato ad hoc, si opus fuerit, auxilio brachii saecularis.

Title XXXII: On Notification of a New Work

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Even a church built after notification of a new work is to be destroyed at the builder's expense. It says this together with the following chapter.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Padua.

We have understood from your letters that, when the cause which is pending between our beloved sons, the prior of Saint Cyprian of Venice and the clerics of Rodigio, concerning a chapel which was constructed by those clerics to the prejudice of the baptismal church of Costa, as the account of the same prior demonstrated to us, had been delegated to your fraternity by the Apostolic See to be terminated by a canonical conclusion, the parties having been summoned to your presence, it became sufficiently known to you through witnesses that the aforesaid church of Rodigo had begun to build that chapel after an appeal had been made to us and notification of the new work had been given; and on this account the aforesaid prior sought in judgment that whatever had been done in the often-mentioned chapel after the appeal had been made to us and after notification of the new work had been given should be demolished altogether. Concerning this it seemed doubtful to your discretion whether one could proceed to these things by canonical judgment, [and], since nothing concerning notification of a new work has been defined in the canons, you determined that the Apostolic See was to be consulted. But because, just as human laws do not disdain to imitate the sacred canons, so also the statutes of the sacred canons are aided by the constitutions of former princes, by the present letters we command your fraternity that, diligently considering that whatever is built after notification of a new work, whether by right or by wrong, ought according to legal constitutions to be demolished, and because no church is to be constructed to the prejudice of another, you do not delay in terminating the matter itself according to the statutes of the laws and canons, appeal being removed, having associated prudent men with you. For since we believe you skilled in both laws, we deemed it safer for the cause to be terminated through your solicitude—you who will be able more fully to know the truth from the statements of the parties and the bounds and limits of the places—than for anything to be defined by us while we are ignorant of the character of the matter.

DE NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIONE.

Etiam ecclesia aedificata post nunciationem novi operis destruenda est expensis construentis. H. de cum sequenti. Lucius III. Paduano Episcopo.

Intelleximus ex literis tuis, quod, quum causa, quae vertitur inter dilectos filios nostros, priorem S. Cypriani de Venetia et clericos de Rodigio super capella, quae in praeiudicium baptismalis ecclesiae de Costa ab eisdem clericis est constructa, sicut nobis eiusdem prioris relatio demonstravit, fraternitati tuae a sede apostolica delegata fuisset fine canonico terminanda, partibus ad tuam praesentiam convocatis, per testes sufficienter tibi innotuit, quod praefata ecclesia de Rodigo eandem capellam post appellationem ad nos factam, et denunciationem novi operis aedificare coeperat, et ob hoc praefatus prior in iudicio postulabat, quicquid in saepe dicta capella post appellationem ad nos factam, et post denunciationem novi operis factum fuerat, penitus demoliri. Super quo discretioni tuae dubium videbatur, utrum ad haec canonico procedi posset iudicio, [et], quum nihil de nunciatione novi operis sit in canonibus definitum, duxisti sedem apostolicam consulendam. Quia vero, sicut humanae leges non dedignantur sacros canones imitari, ita et sacrorum statuta canonum priorum principum constitutionibus adiuvantur, fraternitati tuae praesentibus literis mandamus, quatenus diligenter considerans, quod post denunciationem novi operis, sive iure sive iniuria aliquid construatur, de legalibus debet constitutionibus demoliri. Et quia nulla ecclesia in praeiudicium est alterius construenda, adscitis tibi viris prudentibus negotium ipsum, secundum legum et canonum statuta appellatione remota non differas terminare. Nam quum te credamus in utroque iure peritum: securius duximus, causam per tuam sollicitudinem terminari qui per dicta partium et terminos et fines locorum plenius poteris cognoscere veritatem, quam aliquid a nobis ignorantibus qualitatem negotii definiri.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the first chapter above.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Since by the office of the apostolate committed [to us, although undeserving, we hold the place of Him who, according to the prophetic word, delivered the poor man from the powerful and the needy man who had no helper, it is fitting that we strive with diligent effort lest lesser persons be oppressed by greater ones, but that prelates so exercise the jurisdiction received over their subjects that they are proved to benefit rather than to preside. Therefore, attending to these things according to the debt of our office,] by a strict command [we long ago] ordered you that, in the affair of the chapel of Lamhee, according to the form contained in the apostolic letters, you cease altogether from oppression of the monks of Canterbury. [Concerning this, our beloved sons B., Abbot of Boxleia, and W., Abbot of Ponte Roberti, your envoys, coming to our presence, endeavored in many ways to excuse your fraternity. In the first place, they alleged that, when Theobald of good memory, Archbishop of Canterbury, and the glorious Thomas, his successor, considering that no one serving as a soldier for God entangles himself in secular affairs, and being unwilling that the monks of Canterbury, abandoning the divine offices, should transfer themselves to secular affairs, had had the will and purpose to build a church in honor of Stephen the Protomartyr and to ordain secular clerics in it, revenues being assigned to them from their proceeds and churches, through whom they could expedite their affairs both at the Apostolic See and before secular courts, the hasty death of the first and the long exile of the second impeded their laudable purpose, as was more fully contained and expressed in the letters of our venerable brother I., formerly Archbishop of Lyons, which were recited in our presence and that of our brothers. Baldwin of good memory, Archbishop of Canterbury, succeeding them as much in purpose as in office and in will as in dignity, began to build a church near the suburb of the city of Canterbury, at a distance of about three or four stadia, in honor of the aforesaid protomartyr and blessed Thomas, an indulgence for this having first been obtained from Pope Urban, our predecessor of happy memory. By his authority it was granted to him that he could both build a church in honor of those martyrs and ordain suitable persons for whom he would provide canonically in ecclesiastical benefices, yet so that the churches should by no means be defrauded of the services owed and the necessary stipends. And although that Urban had repeatedly directed letters against the said B., your predecessor, concerning demolition of the work, they said that, because he made no mention in them of the indulgence already granted, no derogation whatever had been made to it by repeated rescripts; they alleged, moreover, that those rescripts had been obtained both by false suggestion and with the truth suppressed, and had not come to the knowledge of the archbishop himself. Whence, if he had not obeyed them, he could not rightly be reprehended. They likewise produced in their own favor a rescript of Pope Gregory, our predecessor of holy memory, who, although he had granted by general letters that rescripts obtained within three months before the death of the aforesaid Urban, his predecessor, should possess the same firmness, notwithstanding the death of the mandator, that they ought to have possessed if he were then living, nevertheless was unwilling that matters touching the archbishop himself and his clerics be included under the aforesaid generality. By this rescript, they said, he had plainly derogated from his predecessor's letters, which he had directed against the archbishop at the instance of the monks. They said that those letters, and also those of Clement of good memory, his successor, who had been his imitator in this matter, had been wholly derogated from by an amicable settlement then made, by the will of the parties, between the archbishop and the aforesaid monks through our most dear son in Christ R., the illustrious King of the English, our venerable brother Walter, Archbishop of Rouen, and certain bishops and abbots. For when, in the time of the aforesaid B., Archbishop of Canterbury, the aforesaid king, archbishop, bishops, and abbots had come to Canterbury, the parties submitted to them by compromise both the construction of that church and the institution of the prior and certain other questions. They, after diligent deliberation had first been taken, judged together that the archbishop himself had reasonably built the aforesaid church. Nevertheless, for the good of peace, at the instance of the aforesaid king and also of the others, he granted that he would transfer the college of canons to another place which he should choose as suitable. Therefore, your said envoys alleged that by this settlement the monks had renounced the preceding rescripts obtained from the Apostolic See, since thereafter the said archbishop, leaving the former place where he could not build without scandal to the monks, transferred his purpose to the place of Lamhee, fifty miles distant from the city of Canterbury, where he began to build a church, as he had before, in honor of the aforesaid martyrs, so that because of the exceedingly great distance between the places no material for complaint would remain to the monks. Afterward, succeeding him, you wished to perfect what had been done less fully by him; and they endeavored to show that this was lawful for you by the rescript of the letters of Pope Celestine, our predecessor of good memory, who in the seventh and final year of his pontificate, in order to allay every discord between the churches of Canterbury and Lamhee and lest the canons of Lamhee possess the faculty of rising against the cathedral church, granted you free faculty to arrange the church of Lamhee itself internally and externally, notwithstanding letters obtained for our venerable brother the Bishop of Chichester and our beloved sons the Abbots of Waltham and Reading. Therefore, they said that through these letters his preceding writings, which seemed contrary to them, were wholly revoked. Thus your said envoys strove to prove their position through the laudable purpose of the aforesaid pontiffs Theobald and the glorious martyr Thomas, through the indulgences and rescripts of the Roman Pontiffs Urban, Gregory, and Celestine, and through the aforesaid settlement made by the will of the parties. But on the part of the monks the foregoing arguments were answered in order as follows: that we could not and ought not judge concerning the hidden wills of men, which the Lord who searches the reins and hearts reserved to Himself alone, nor were they able to answer such matters, the allegation of which in judgment was nothing other than to divine the secrets of hearts. Indeed, they said that by the indulgence of Pope Urban, our predecessor, which we mentioned above, no derogation whatever had been made to their right, because the canonical assignment of benefices through it was reserved to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who according to canonical constitution could not proceed without the deliberation and assent of the monks; far from consenting to his deed in this matter, they had even expressly contradicted it, as subsequent events showed, and they still persevered in the same purpose. With them thus contradicting, the judgment of the superior was to have been awaited. They endeavored to show the same thing also by this argument: that according to legitimate sanctions, if at any time a principal benefit is granted to someone—for example, the free making of a testament—nothing else seems to be granted than that he may make a testament in a legitimate and also customary manner. Likewise, one who obtained from a prince that he might build in a public place will not be able to build to another's inconvenience unless this very thing also was sought and granted by the prince. They further asserted that derogation had been made from the aforesaid indulgence by the subsequent executory letters of Urban himself, by which he willed that the work itself be held accursed and profane. They alleged that, whether the indulgence had been shown before Urban himself, it was altogether abrogated, since notwithstanding it the demolition of the church itself had been commanded; or whether it had been omitted, this ought to be imputed to its holder, since it is provided even by civil law that lawsuits ought not to be restored under pretext of instruments discovered afterward. They wished to prove the same thing by the letters of Pope Clement, our predecessor of pious memory. When the envoys of the parties were established in his presence, because the said B., your predecessor, had wished contumaciously and pertinaciously to complete the accursed and profane work, he, after the example of Pope Urban, his predecessor, strictly commanded the aforesaid archbishop, on the counsel of his brothers, to take care to demolish without any delay whatever he had done in the named church, revoking altogether as invalid whatever had been wrongly attempted concerning the institution of canons and other matters. There, whether the aforesaid indulgence had been omitted or even alleged, for the reason stated above it could not impede their claim. They said that their party could be burdened in no respect by the settlement itself, which we mentioned above, since it had been violently extorted through fear of the king. For when Pope Clement, our aforesaid predecessor, in order to allay the discord arisen between the archbishop and the monks of Canterbury, had specially sent into England John of Anagni of good memory, then Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Mark and legate of the Apostolic See, but afterward Bishop of Palestrina, after he crossed there, it was brought about by the procurement of the said B., Archbishop of Canterbury, that he was held at the port of Dover against his will for many days, which redounded to the grave injury of the Roman Church. Nor was he permitted to proceed to Canterbury before the monks suffered force and were compelled to sustain all things in the peace which they made with the archbishop through the said King of the English, who at the same time had come to Canterbury with his bishops. Therefore, when he heard this while situated nearby, and afterward knew it while present at Canterbury, he took care to commit it to writing so that the truth of the matter might become known to all and so that what had been done might not generate prejudice to the justice of the monks. And if the archbishop himself or any of his successors should at any time produce a writing concerning the form of the peace, it would be known to all that it had been composed without the consent or knowledge of the brothers of the said church and had not been exhibited to him when he requested it, although he had been sent to the cause by the Supreme Pontiff. Whence he ought either to have confirmed the transaction if it accorded with justice, or, if it had been done otherwise, to have invalidated it. Thus, therefore, knowing that manifest violence had intervened in that deed, by the apostolic authority with which he functioned he established that neither the settlement thus made nor the compromise violently extorted nor any writing thus composed should be valid, and that it should bring no prejudice to those monks in the future, since all things had been completed in his presence and against his contradiction, as is contained in his public letters, which we caused to be recited before us. After these things, when Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, by apostolic authority revoked as invalid all things that had been done by force or fear against the monks by the aforesaid Archbishop B., he expressly decreed to lack force those things in particular which were alleged to have been done against the command of the Apostolic See while the legate of the Roman Church was present and contradicting, as they were contained and expressed in the authentic instrument of the same legate, namely I. of Anagni, formerly Cardinal Priest, who had been sent into England on account of the cause itself, and whatever the same archbishop had obtained contrary to the right of the monks or the tenor of the privileges of the Apostolic See. He further established that no man should draw into precedent those things which he had wrongly done, and that those things which he had obtained from the Apostolic See with the truth suppressed should at no time generate prejudice in any matter to the right or privileges of the monks, just as was established to us and our brothers from the contents of those letters. The monks also asserted that from the very greater distance of the place a greater prejudice had been generated against them, because, since secular clerics were said by your envoys to have been summoned to supply their default, the affairs of the church of Canterbury could scarcely be managed through nearby clerics while the monks were absent, whereas, with those clerics situated far away and the absence of the monks seized as an opportunity, the affairs would be transacted without the monks' knowledge and while they were altogether unconsulted, whence the church of Canterbury would incur loss and damage. Thus nothing accrued to them through this, since the same cause for contradiction remained. They further asserted that the final rescript of the said Pope Celestine, our predecessor, lacked force, as having been surreptitiously obtained through suppression of the truth, since in it no mention was made of the commands that had proceeded from Pope Urban and Clement, nor even of that confirmation which he himself had granted concerning the quashing of the aforesaid settlement, and especially since he is said to have granted that rescript at a time when sickness oppressed him exceedingly. To found their position, those monks produced the rescripts of the aforesaid Roman Pontiffs Urban, Clement, and Celestine, and also our own after those, by which it was commanded most urgently that whatever had been attempted concerning the aforesaid chapel should be held invalid and void.] But when the things we have premised had been prudently alleged by the envoys in our presence and that of our brothers, we, who have received a time for judging justice, wishing to adhere to the footsteps of Him with whom there is no acceptance of persons, whose place, although unworthy, we hold on earth, and so to walk prudently on the royal road that we turn neither to the right nor to the left, and, believing that our predecessors Urban, Clement, and Celestine also were to be imitated more fully, especially in those things which they established after prior deliberation, on the common counsel of our brothers, by apostolic writings command your fraternity and strictly enjoin upon you in virtue of obedience that, every contradiction, excuse, and appeal ceasing, within thirty days after receipt of the present letters, at your expense you cause to be demolished altogether whatever was built in the church of Lamech after notification of the new work—(notwithstanding even if you shall have been absent [from your church], since it is also provided by a legitimate sanction that, if one to whom a new work had been notified builds before remission and then begins to bring an action that he has a right to possess what was thus built, the action ought to be denied him)—altogether reducing to invalidity whatever is known to have been ordained by you or your predecessor concerning the institution of canons there and other things pertaining to that church, their revenues being recalled to their former state. We command that those canons, because they were instituted there, be declared by you, on our authority, absolved from the obligation of the oath rendered. For since the principal matter does not now stand, whatever followed from it or on account of it we decree under the aforesaid strictness is to be invalidated, as has been sanctioned by canonical and civil tradition. [Furthermore, the clerics who celebrated divine offices in that chapel after the apostolic prohibitions, as we commanded through our other writings, you shall hold as suspended until they have made competent satisfaction concerning this. Nor shall you delay in restoring to the said monks all things that were attempted to their burden—namely by the seizure of presents, churches, and other things—which they possessed before the appeal; and henceforth, on occasion of this affair, you shall not presume to innovate anything concerning the state of the monastery against our prohibition. But if (which we do not believe) you shall either contemn or delay to fulfill our command as was premised, you shall know yourself from that time suspended from pontifical office, and for contempt of the apostolic command we will that you come to our presence to answer. By the counsel of our brothers, strictly enjoining in virtue of obedience, we also command our venerable brothers, the suffragans of the church of Canterbury, that, unless you bring our command into effect within the aforesaid time, they render you no obedience or reverence, because it is just that one who scorns to obey his own prelate should not be obeyed by his subjects. But if perhaps not even thus shall we be able to recall you to the good of obedience—for which evil is never committed, but good ought often to be left undone—you shall know that a greater punishment threatens you, since wounds that do not feel the medicine of poultices must be cut away with iron. Indeed, concerning the aforesaid matters, in which

with a safe conscience we could not proceed in another manner, we ask your fraternity not to be saddened in any way, because (God being witness) they proceeded not from any indignation, but because, although insufficient, we have been established in the seat of justice, whence we are bound to preserve the rights of each person unimpaired. We could not, without grave offense to the Creator, show favor to your fraternity, which we embrace very sincerely, since we hold you among our brothers and fellow bishops as an honorable member and an immovable column in the house of the Lord. Nor can you impute anything to us in this matter, since, according to canonical tradition, when counsel cannot be given to anyone except by sinning, then a man ought to judge that he has nothing he may do. It is also found in the secular laws that those things which in deed injure our piety, reputation, and modesty, and generally those things which are opposed to good morals, are to be believed things which we cannot do.] Concerning this also we cannot sufficiently marvel: although the said church had now long been, as it were, a stone of offense and a rock of scandal, on account of which we and our predecessors were so gravely moved against you and your predecessors, and the religious men, equally prudent, the monks of Canterbury, who abandoned all things for Christ, did not hesitate frequently to expose their persons and property to so many labors and pains, so many fears and perils—which without doubt neither the former nor the latter, as was said, would have done unless they knew that the aforesaid matters looked to the grave detriment of the church of Canterbury—to omit other things, at least for the avoidance of so grave a scandal to your neighbors you did not cease from things of this kind that had even been prohibited to you, although you ought to have learned from the testimony of sacred scripture that, while those works which cannot be omitted without mortal sin are not to be abandoned to avoid scandal, nor ought those things which cannot be committed without mortal sin to be committed to avoid scandal, nevertheless one must cease, for the removal of scandal, from those things which can equally be committed and omitted without mortal sin, and one must also persevere in them for the avoidance of scandal. Whence the Apostle says: "If a brother is scandalized, I will not eat flesh forever"; and the Lord in the Gospel says against those who furnish the material of scandal: "Woe to that man through whom scandal comes; it is better for him that an ass's millstone be hung about his neck and that he be sunk into the deep." And although the scandal of the greater is to be avoided, the scandal of the little ones is also to be avoided, according to the testimony of Truth: "Whoever shall scandalize," He says, "one of these least little ones who believe in me, etc." Therefore, let an end henceforth be imposed by you upon the things that have been premised in such a way that the rebellion of past contradiction may not undeservedly be expiated through the virtue of subsequent obedience. [Given at the Lateran, on the Kalends of December, in the first year of our pontificate, 1198.]

> Summatum est supra capitulo primo.
>
> Innocentius III. Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Quum ex iniuncto [nobis apostolatus officio locum eius licet immeriti teneamus, qui iuxta verbum propheticum liberavit pauperem a potente et inopem, cui non erat adiutor, diligenti studio satagere nos oportet, ne minores a maioribus opprimantur, sed ut praelati sic exerceant acceptam iurisdictionem in subditos, ut prodesse probentur potius quam praeesse. Haec ergo secundum officii nostri debitum attendentes,] districta [dudum] tibi iussione mandavimus, ut in negotio capellae de Lamhee iuxta formam in literis apostolicis comprehensam ab oppressione monachorum Cantuariensium omnino cessares. [Super quo venientes ad praesentiam nostram dilecti filii B. de Boxleia et W. de Ponte Roberti abbates, nuncii tui, fraternitatem tuam nitebantur multipliciter excusare. In primis siquidem proponentes, quod, quum bonae memoriae Theobaldus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus et gloriosus Thomas successor ipsius, attendentes, quod nemo militans Deo implicat se negotiis saecularibus, et nolentes monachos Cantuarienses relictis divinis officiis ad negotia saecularia se transferre, ad honorem protomartyris Stephani aedificandi ecclesiam voluntatem *et propositum habuissent, et in ea saeculares clericos ordinandi, de suis proventibus et ecclesiis eis redditibus assignandis, per quos tam apud apostolicam sedem quam apud curias saeculares sua possent negotia expedire, laudabile primi propositum obitus festinatus, secundi longum exsilium impedivit, sicut in literis venerabilis fratris nostri I. quondam Lugdunensis archiepiscopi plenius continebatur expressum, quae in nostra et fratrum nostrorum fuerunt praesentia recitatae. His bonae memoriae Balduinus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus ita proposito ut officio, voluntate ut dignitate succedens, prope suburbium civitatis Cantuariensis quasi per stadia tria vel quatuor ad honorem praefati protomartyris et beati Thomae construere coepit ecclesiam, felicis recordationis Urbani Papae praedecessoris nostri super hoc indulgentia primitus impetrata. Cuius sibi fuit auctoritate concessum, ut in honorem ipsorum martyrum et aedificare posset ecclesiam, et de personis idoneis ordinare, quibus in ecclesiasticis beneficiis canonice provideret; sic tamen, quod ecclesiae debitis obsequiis et necessariis stipendiis minime fraudarentur. Et licet idem Urbanus adversus dictum B. praedecessorem tuum super demolitione operis suas saepius literas destinasset, quia in eis non faciebat de concessa iam indulgentia mentionem, ei dicebant per rescripta frequentia nullatenus derogatum, quae praeterea proponebant et per falsi suggestionem et veritate tacita impetrata, et ad ipsius archiepiscopi notitiam minime devenisse. Unde, si eis non paruerat, de iure non poterat reprehendi. Rescriptum quoque sanctae memoriae Gregorii Papae praedecessoris nostri pro se pariter producebant, qui, quum per literas indulserit generales, ut rescripta, quae a tribus mensibus ante obitum praedicti Urbani praedecessoris sui fuerant impetrata, eandem firmitatem haberent, non obstante obitu mandatoris, quam obtinere, si tunc viveret, debuissent, negotia, quae ipsum archiepiscopum et eius clericos contingebant, sub praemissa noluit generalitate concludi, per quod nimirum rescriptum praedecessoris sui dicebant literis derogatum, quas adversus archiepiscopum direxerat ad instantiam monachorum. Quibus siquidem literis, et etiam bonae memoriae Clementis successoris sui, qui eius in hac parte fuerat imitator, per factam tunc temporis amicabilem compositionem de partium voluntate inter archiepiscopum et monachos memoratos per carissimum in Christo filium nostrum R. Anglorum regem illustrem, et venerabilem fratrem nostrum Walterum Rothomagensem archiepiscopum, et quosdam episcopos et abbates, dicebant penitus derogatum. Quum enim tempore praefati B. Cantuariensis archiepiscopi praemissi rex, archiepiscopus et episcopi et abbates Cantuariam accessissent, in eos fuit tam de constructione ipsius ecclesiae quam institutione prioris et quibusdam aliis quaestionibus a partibus compromissum. Ipsi autem diligenti deliberatione praemissa pariter iudicarunt, quod ipse archiepiscopus rationabiliter aedificaverit ecclesiam memoratam. Ipse tamen pro bono pacis concessit ad praedicti regis instantiam et etiam aliorum, quod canonicorum collegium ad locum transferret alium, quem eligeret competentem. Per hanc ergo compositionem dicti nuncii tui renunciasse dicebant monachos rescriptis praecedentibus a sede apostolica impetratis, quum exinde dictus archiepiscopus loco priore dimisso, ubi aedificare non potuerat sine scandalo monachorum, ad locum de Lamhee per quinquaginta miliaria distantem a civitate Cantuariae, suum propositum transtulisset, ubi et ecclesiam, sicut prius fecerat, aedificare coepit ad honorem martyrum praedictorum, ut sic propter nimiam locorum distantiam nulla remaneret monachis materia conquerendi. Cui postea tu succedens, quod ab ipso minus factum fuerat perficere voluisti, et quod ipsum tibi liceret ex rescripto literarum bonae memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri ostendere nitebantur, qui anno pontificatus sui septimo et extremo ad omnem inter ecclesias Cantuariensem et de Lamhee discordiam sopiendam, et ne canonici de Lamhee facultatem haberent contra cathedralem ecclesiam insurgendi, disponendi de ipsa ecclesia de Lamhee interius et exterius, non obstantibus literis ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Cicestrensem episcopum et dilectos filios de Waltham et de Radinges abbates obtentis, concessit tibi liberam facultatem. Per has ergo literas praecedentia scripta sua, quae his videbantur adversa, dicebant penitus revocata. Intentionem ergo suam probare dicti tui nuncii satagebant per laudabile propositum Theobaldi et gloriosi Thomae martyris pontificum praemissorum, et per Urbani, Gregorii et Coelestini Romanorum Pontificum indulgentias et rescripta, et praemissam compositionem factam de partium voluntate. Verum praemissis rationibus ex parte monachorum fuit ex ordine taliter obviatum, quod de occultis hominum voluntatibus, quas sibi tantum Dominus reservavit, qui renes et corda scrutatur, a nobis iudicari non poterat nec debebat, nec ipsi valebant ad talia respondere, quae proponere in iudicio nihil aliud erat, quam de secretis cordium divinare. Sane per indulgentiam Urbani Papae praedecessoris nostri, de qua praemisimus, iuri suo in nullo dicebant penitus derogatum, quia canonica beneficiorum assignatio per eam Cantuariensi archiepiscopo servabatur, qui iuxta constitutionem canonicam sine tractatu et assensu monachorum procedere non valebat, qui nedum quod ipsius facto in hac parte consenserint, verum etiam contradixerint expresse, sicut sequentia docuerunt, et adhuc in eodem proposito perseverant. Eis ergo contradicentibus, superioris fuerat iudicium exspectandum. Idem etiam ea ratione ostendere nitebantur, quia iuxta sanctiones legitimas, si quando alicui conceditur beneficium principale, puta libera factio testamenti, nihil videtur aliud indulgeri, quam ut modo testetur legitimo, et etiam consueto. Ille quoque, qui, ut in loco publico aedificare posset, a principe similiter impetravit, aedificare cum alterius incommodo non valebit, nisi et hoc ipsum a principe postulatum fuerit et concessum. Per sequentes etiam ipsius Urbani literas exsecutorias, quibus opus ipsum maledictum haberi voluit et profanum, asserebant praescriptae indulgentiae derogatum, quae sive coram eodem Urbano fuerit ostensa, proponebant eam penitus abrogatam, quum ea non obstante demolitio ipsius ecclesiae fuerit demandata, sive fuerit praetermissa, sibi debuit imputari, quum iure civili etiam caveatur, quod sub praetextu instrumentorum postea repertorum lites non debeant restaurari. Id ipsum per literas piae recordationis Clementis Papae praedecessoris nostri probare volebant, in cuius praesentia nunciis partium constitutis, quum dictus B. praedecessor tuus opus maledictum et profanum voluisset contumaciter et pertinaciter consummare, ad exemplum Urbani Papae praedecessoris sui praefato archiepiscopo de consilio fratrum districte praecepit, ut quicquid fecerat in ecclesia nominata curaret sine dilatione qualibet demoliri, quod de instituendis canonicis et aliis fuerat perperam attentatum, in irritum penitus revocato, ubi, sive omissa fuerit praemissa indulgentia, vel etiam allegata, eorum non poterat ratione praemissa propositum impedire. Per ipsam vero compositionem, de qua praemisimus, tanquam regio metu violenter extortam, partem suam in nullo gravari posse dicebant. Quum enim dictus Clemens Papa praedecessor noster pro sedanda discordia inter archiepiscopum et monachos Cantuarienses exorta bonae memoriae Iohannem Anagninum tunc temporis tit. sancti Marci presbyterum cardinalem, apostolicae sedis legatum, postea vero episcopum Praenestinum, in Angliam specialiter destinasset, postquam illuc transfretavit, factum fuit dicto B. Cantuariensi archiepiscopo procurante, quod apud portum Dovoriae contra voluntatem suam per dies plurimos teneretur, quod in gravem ecclesiae Romanae iniuriam redundavit, nec ante permissus fuit Cantuariam proficisci, quam per dictum regem Anglorum, qui eodem tempore cum episcopis suis Cantuariam venerat, in pace, quam fecerunt cum archiepiscopo, monachi vim passi fuerunt, et compulsi sunt omnia sustinere. Quod ideo quum prope positus audisset, et postea praesens apud Cantuariam cognovisset, scripto mandare curavit, ut rei veritas omnibus innotesceret, et quod factum fuerat non generaret praeiudicium iustitiae monachorum, et, si archiepiscopus ipse vel aliquis de successoribus eius scripturam super forma pacis quandoque proferret, sciretur ab omnibus, eam fratribus iam dictae ecclesiae nec consentientibus nec scientibus fuisse confectam, nec sibi exhibitam postulanti, qui ad causam fuerat a summo Pontifice destinatus. Unde vel rem gestam confirmare debuerat, si iustitiae concordaret, vel, si aliter facta fuerat, infirmare. Sic ergo cognoscens intercessisse illi facto violentiam manifestam, auctoritate, qua fungebatur, apostolica statuit, quod nec concordia sic facta valeret, neque compromissio violenter extorta, neque scriptum aliquod sic conceptum, et quod ipsis monachis in posterum praeiudicium non afferret, quum omnia eo praesente ac contradicente fuerint adimpleta, sicut in suis literis patentibus continetur, quas coram nobis fecimus recitari. Post haec, quum bonae memoriae Coelestinus Papa praedecessor noster omnia, quae per memoratum B. archiepiscopum circa monachos vi vel metu acta fuerant, auctoritate apostolica in irritum revocaret, nominatim ea, quae legato Romanae ecclesiae praesente et contradicente contra mandatum sedis apostolicae facta proponebantur, sicut in authentico eiusdem legati, I. videlicet Anagnini quondam presbyteri cardinalis ob causam ipsam in Angliam destinati, continebantur expressa, viribus carere decrevit, et quaecunque contra ius monachorum vel tenorem privilegiorum apostolicae sedis idem archiepiscopus impetrarat. Insuper statuens, ut nullus hominum quae male gesserat ad consequentiam traheret, nec ea, quae a sede apostolica obtinuerat tacita veritate, iuri monachorum vel privilegiis ullo unquam tempore in aliquo praeiudicium generarent; quemadmodum nobis et fratribus nostris ex ipsorum constitit continentia literarum. Ex ipsa quoque maiore loci distantia sibi asserebant monachi maius praeiudicium generatum, quia, quum in eorum defectum, sicut a tuis nunciis dicebatur, saeculares clerici fuerint evocati, vix possent per eos vicinos Cantuariensis ecclesiae negotia monachis absentibus procurari, quae ipsis procul positis et captata eorum absentia sine monachorum conscientia tractarentur et eis penitus inconsultis, unde Cantuariensis ecclesia dispendium incurreret et iacturam. Sic ergo per hoc nihil eis accessit, eadem contradictionis causa manente. Ultimum quoque rescriptum dicti Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri carere viribus asserebant, utpote per suppressionem veritatis surreptum, quoniam in eo nulla fiebat mentio mandatorum, quae ab Urbano Papa et Clemente processerant, nec etiam confirmationis illius, quam ipsemet super cassatione compositionis praedictae concessit; et praesertim, quum rescriptum illud indulsisse dicatur eo tempore, quo eum infirmitas admodum praegravabat. Ad fundandam sane intentionem suam praedictorum Urbani, Clementis et Coelestini Romanorum Pontificum rescripta, nec non et nostrum post illa, iidem monachi producebant, quibus urgentissime mandabatur, ut, quicquid de praefata capella fuerat attentatum, haberetur irritum et inane.] Quum autem quae praemisimus in nostra fratrumque nostrorum praesentia prudenter essent a nunciis allegata: nos, qui tempus accepimus iustitiam iudicandi, volentes illius vestigiis inhaerere, apud quem non est acceptio personarum, cuius locum licet indigni tenemus in terris, et ita via regia prudenter incedere, ut non declinemus ad dextram vel sinistram, praedecessores quoque nostros Urbanum, Clementem et etiam Coelestinum credentes amplius imitandos in illis maxime, quae deliberatione praevia statuerunt, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio* Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus et in virtute obedientiae districte praecipimus, quatenus, omni contradictione et excusatione et appellatione cessantibus, infra XXX. dies post receptionem praesentium quicquid aedificatum est in ecclesia de Lamech post novi operis nunciationem, expensis tuis facias penitus demoliri, (eo non obstante, si etiam absens [ab ecclesia tua] exstiteris, quum cautum sit etiam legitima sanctione, ut, si is, cui opus novum fuerat nunciatum, ante remissionem aedificaverit, deinde agere coeperit, ius sibi esse ita aedificatum habere, sibi debeat actio denegari,) reducens prorsus in irritum quicquid de instituendis ibi canonicis et aliis ad ipsam ecclesiam pertinentibus a te vel a praedecessore tuo cognoscitur ordinatum, eorum reditibus ad statum pristinum revocatis, quos ab obligatione praestiti iuramenti, pro eo, quod ibidem instituti fuerunt, auctoritate nostra per te denunciari praecipimus absolutos. Quum enim amodo non teneat principale, quicquid ex eo vel ob id secutum est, sub praemissa districtione decernimus, irritandum, sicut sancitum est traditione canonica et civili. [Clericos praeterea, qui in capella ipsa post inhibitiones apostolicas divina officia celebrarunt, sicut nos per alia scripta nostra mandavimus, tamdiu habeas pro suspensis, quousque super hoc satisfacerint competenter, et universa, quae in praedictorum monachorum sunt attentata gravamen, exeniorum videlicet et ecclesiarum et aliorum invasione, quae ante appellationem habuerant, non differas dictis monachis resignare; ac de cetero circa statum monasterii contra prohibitionem nostram huius occasione negotii non praesumas aliquid innovere. Si vero (quod non credimus) praeceptum nostrum, sicut praemissum est, vel contempseris vel distuleris adimplere, a pontificali officio ex tunc noveris te suspensum, et pro contemptu mandati apostolici ad nostram venire te volumus praesentiam responsurum. Venerabilibus quoque fratribus nostris Cantuariensis ecclesiae suffraganeis de consilio fratrum nostrorum in virtute obedientiae districte praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, nisi tu infra praemissum tempus mandatum nostrum duxeris ad effectum, ipsi nullam tibi impendant obedientiam vel reverentiam, quia iustum est, quod ei non obediatur a subditis, qui suo contemnit obedire praelato. Quod si forte nec sic te poterimus ad bonum obedientiae revocare, propter quod malum nunquam committitur, bonum autem debet saepius intermitti, maiorem tibi animadversionem noveris imminere, quum ferro sint abscindenda vulnera, quae fomentorum non sentiunt medicinam. Sane super praemissis, in quibus salva conscientia non poteramus alio modo procedere, fraternitatem tuam rogamus nullatenus contristari, quia (teste Deo) non ex indignatione aliqua processerunt, sed quia, quum simus, licet insufficientes, in sede iustitiae constituti, unde iura sua servare tenemur singulis illibata, fraternitati tuae, quam sincerius amplexamur, quum te inter fratres et coepiscopos nostros honorabile membrum et in domo Domini columnam immobilem habeamus, non potuimus sine gravi offensa creatoris deferre. Nec nobis in hac parte potes aliquid imputare, quum secundum traditionem canonicam, quando non nisi peccando alicui consuli potest, tunc aestimare debet homo, quid faciat non habere. In ipsis etiam legibus saecularibus invenitur, ut quae facta laedunt pietatem, aestimationem, verecundiam nostram, et generaliter quae bonis moribus adversantur, nec facere nos posse sit credendum.] Super eo quoque non sufficimus admirari, quod, quum dicta ecclesia iam dudum quasi lapis offensionis fuerit et petra scandali, pro qua nos et praedecessores nostri adversus te tuosque praedecessores ita graviter sumus moti, et viri religiosi pariter et prudentes, monachi Cantuarienses, qui omnia dimiserunt pro Christo, tot laboribus et doloribus, tot timoribus et periculis personas et res non dubitaverunt frequenter exponere, quod procul dubio tam illi quam isti, ut dictum est, non fecissent, nisi cognoscerent praemissa respicere in grave Cantuariensis ecclesiae detrimentum, ut de aliis omittamus, tu saltem pro vitando tam gravi scandalo proximorum ab huiusmodi etiam tibi prohibitis non cessasti, quum sacrae scripturae testimonio debueras didicisse, quod, licet opera illa, quae sine mortali peccato omitti non possunt, non sunt pro vitando scandalo dimittenda, nec ea debeant pro scandalo vitando committi, quae sine mortali peccato committi non possunt: ab his tamen, quae sine mortali peccato committi possunt pariter et dimitti, sit pro scandalo tollendo cessandum, et eis etiam pro vitando scandalo insistendum. Unde Apostolus dicit: "Si scandalizatur frater, non comedam carnes in aeternum," et Dominus in evangelio contra eos, qui scandali praestant materiam: "Vae," inquit, "homini illi, per quem scandalum venit; melius est ei, ut suspendatur mola asinaria ad collum eius, et demergatur in profundum." Et licet maiorum scandalum sit vitandum, vitandum est etiam scandalum pusillorum, iuxta testimonium veritatis, "qui scandalizaverit," inquit, "unum de pusillis istis minimis, qui in me credunt, etc." Finis ergo his, quae praemissa sunt, de cetero taliter a te imponatur, quod praeteritae contradictionis rebellio per virtutem sequentis obedientiae valeat non immerito expiari. [*Dat. Lat. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. I. *1198.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It is in the option of one notifying a new work whether he ought within three months to show his own prejudice, and meanwhile work is to cease, or whether, after security for demolishing the work has been received, he permits building to proceed at once. It says this together with the following chapter.

Honorius III.

From the report of the canons of Saint Opportuna of Paris, it became known to us that, concerning the fact that N. Rufus, a citizen of Paris, was building in a certain open place belonging to their church, situated within their cloister, to their prejudice and burden although they prohibited it, they lodged a complaint before the official of the Archdeacon of Paris. They offered immediately to prove the prejudice and that the open place belonged to their church, and further petitioned that the building be prohibited notwithstanding that the said N. offered security for demolishing the work. And because the same official decreed by an interlocutory ruling that their proofs were to be admitted and that meanwhile rest was to be taken from the work, the same N. appealed to the church of Sens. But when the official of Sens, a kinsman of the aforesaid Nicholas, after revoking that interlocutory ruling solely at the choice of his own will, decreed that, without their proofs having been admitted, the work was to proceed under security for demolishing it, the aforesaid canons appealed to our hearing, whence they petitioned that we command their proofs to be received and the building to be prohibited. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, if it is so, after revoking as invalid whatever you shall find to have been rashly attempted after an appeal of this kind, you establish concerning this what shall be just, appeal being set aside, causing etc.

In optione est nunciantis novum opus, an intra tres menses de praeiudicio suo debeat ostendere, et interim cessetur ab opere; an vero recepta cautione de opere demoliendo statim aedificari permittat. H. d. cum sequ.

Honorius III. Significantibus canonicis sanctae Opportunae Parisiensis innotuit nobis, quod, quum super eo, quod N. Rufus civis Parisiensis in quadam platea ecclesiae suae, infra claustrum ipsorum sita, eis prohibentibus in suum aedificabat praeiudicium et gravamen, deposuerunt coram officiali Parisiensis archidiaconi quaestionem, eis offerentibus in continenti probare praeiudicium et plateam ad suam ecclesiam pertinere, ac petentibus insuper, ut non obstante, quod dictus N. cautionem de demoliendo opere offerebat, aedificium prohiberi. Et quia idem officialis interloquendo decrevit, probationes eorum admittendas esse, ac ab opere interim quiescendum, idem N. ad Senonensem ecclesiam provocavit. Sed quum Senonensis officialis, Nicolai praedicti cognatus, eadem interlocutoria pro suae duntaxat voluntatis arbitrio revocata, decreverit, ad opus sub cautione de demoliendo ipso, non admissis eorum probationibus, procedendum, praedicti canonici nostram audientiam appellarunt, unde petebant, ut ipsorum probationes recipi, ac prohiberi aedificium mandaremus. Ideoque discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, revocato in irritum quicquid post appellationem huiusmodi temere inveneritis attentatum, super hoc quod iustum fuerit appellatione postposita statuatis, facientes etc.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the preceding chapter.

Gregory IX.

The person to whom you allege that you notified a new work is bound, notwithstanding the security which is offered by him for destroying the work if it is found not to have been built by right, to wait for you for the space of three months while you wish to prove the prejudice to your right.

Summatum est supra capitulo proximo.

Gregorius IX. Is, cui opus novum te nunciasse proponis, non obstante cautione, quae offertur ab ipso de opere destruendo, si non iure aedificatum exsistat, tenetur te per trium mensium spatium exspectare, iuris tui praeiudicium probare volentem.

Title XXXIII: On Privileges and the Offenses of Privileged Persons

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Episcopal dignity ought not to be bestowed except upon distinguished and populous places.

Pope Leo.

Episcopal governance ought to preside only over larger peoples and more populous cities, lest that which the divinely inspired decrees of the holy Fathers prohibited—the sacerdotal eminence being bestowed upon villages and estates or obscure and solitary municipalities—and an honor to which more excellent places ought to be committed become cheap through its very multiplicity. [But what now, etc. Given on the fourth day before the Ides of August, 446.]

DE PRIVILEGIIS ET EXCESSIBUS PRIVILEGIATORUM.

Episcopalis dignitas non debet tribui, nisi locis insignibus et populosis.

Leo Papa.

Episcopalia gubernacula non nisi maioribus populis et frequentioribus civitatibus praesidere oportet, ne, quod, sanctorum Patrum divinitus inspirata decreta vetuerunt, viculis et possessionibus vel obscuris et solitariis municipiis tribuatur sacerdotale fastigium, et honor, cui debent excellentiora committi, ipsa sui numerositate vilescat. [Quod nunc etc. Dat. IV. Id. Aug. 446.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Notwithstanding the privilege of forum, a lay malefactor against a church can be punished by the church.

Pope Gregory, to the Subdeacon.

Just as we do not wish to disturb the privileges of laymen in their judgments, so, when they prejudice us, we wish to resist them with moderated authority. Therefore, to coerce violent laymen is not to act contrary to law, but to furnish assistance to law. [Therefore, because God gave, etc.]

> Non obstante privilegio fori potest laicus ecclesiae malefactor per ecclesiam puniri. Gregorius P. Subdiacono.
>
> Sicut in iudiciis laicorum privilegia turbare nolumus, ita eis praeiudicantibus nobis moderata volumus auctoritate resistere. Violentos itaque laicos coercere non contra legem est agere, sed legi facere subsidium. [Quia igitur Deus dedit etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Even exempt religious ought not to receive churches and tithes from laymen without the consent of the diocesan bishops. It says this as far as § Excommunicated Persons. — § 1. Excommunicated and interdicted persons ought by no means to be admitted to divine things, even by exempt religious. It says this as far as § But in Churches. Abbas Siculus. — § 2. Even exempt religious do not institute or remove persons, without consulting the bishops, in churches that do not belong to them by full right; but they exact an account in temporal matters from those instituted. It says this as far as § But If. — § 3. Hospitallers and Templars celebrate once a year in a church situated in an interdicted place; nevertheless, bodies of the dead are not buried there. It says this as far as § Concerning Confraternity Members. Abbas. — § 4. Confraternity members of exempt persons, or their oblates, who have not transferred themselves entirely, can be judged by the ordinaries of the places. It says this to the end. Abbas Siculus.

Alexander III, in the Lateran Council.

Since we ought both to plant sacred religion and to foster it when planted in every way, nowhere do we accomplish this better than if, by the authority committed to us by God, we take care to nourish those things which are right and to correct those which impede the progress of virtue. But from the vehement complaint of our brothers and fellow bishops we have learned that the brothers of the Temple and Hospital, and also other religious, exceeding the privileges granted to them by the Apostolic See, presume many things against episcopal authority which both cause scandal to the people of God and produce grave peril to souls. For they alleged that they receive churches from the hands of laymen; admit excommunicated and interdicted persons to ecclesiastical sacraments and burial in their churches without the bishops' knowledge; institute and remove priests; and, when their brothers go to seek alms, although it was granted to them that at their arrival churches should be opened once a year and divine offices celebrated in them, several of them, coming repeatedly from one or diverse houses to an interdicted place, abuse the indulgence of their privileges in celebrating offices and burying the dead, and then presume to bury the dead at interdicted churches. Also, by occasion of the confraternities which they establish in many places, they enervate the strength of episcopal authority, while under pretext of certain privileges they intend to fortify against the bishops' sentence all who wish to betake themselves to their confraternity. In these matters, however, since the excess arises not so much from the knowledge or counsel of the superiors as from the indiscretion [of certain] inferiors, we have decreed that the things in which they exceed are to be removed and the things which create doubt are to be declared. Therefore, we prohibit both them and also any other religious from receiving churches and tithes from the hand of laymen without the consent of the bishops, relinquishing even whatever they received at any time contrary to this tenor. § 1. We likewise establish that excommunicated persons and those interdicted by name are to be avoided by them and by all others according to the sentence of the bishops. § 2. But in their churches which do not belong to them by full right, they shall present to the bishops the priests who are to be instituted, so that they may answer to the bishops indeed concerning the care of the people, but render to the religious themselves a competent account concerning temporal things. Nor shall they dare to remove those instituted without consulting the bishops. § 3. But if Templars or Hospitallers come to an interdicted church, they are not to be admitted to ecclesiastical office except once in the year, nor then are bodies of the dead to be buried there. § 4. Concerning confraternity members, however, we establish this: that, if they have not wholly given themselves to the aforesaid brothers but have determined to remain in every respect in their own properties, on this account they shall in no way be exempted from the sentence of their bishops; rather, the bishops shall exercise their power over them as over their other parishioners when they are to be corrected for their offenses. What has been said concerning the aforesaid brothers, we command also to be observed by other religious who by their presumption seize the rights of bishops and presume to come against their canonical sentences and the tenor of our privileges. For if they come against this statute, both the churches in which they presumed those things shall lie under interdict, and what they did shall be held invalid and void.

> Religiosi etiam exempti ecclesias et decimas non debent a laicis recipere, sine consensu dioecesanorum. Hoc dicit usque ad § Excommunicatos. - § 1. Excommunicati et interdicti omnino non debent admitti ad divina, etiam per religiosos exemptos. H. d. usque ad § In ecclesiis. Abbas Siculus. - § 2. Religiosi etiam exempti in ecclesiis, non pertinentibus ad eos, pleno iure non instituunt nec destituunt inconsultis episcopis; sed rationem exigunt in temporalibus ab institutis. H. d. usque ad § Quodsi. - § 3. Hospitalarii et Templarii semel in anno celebrant in ecclesia, posita in loco interdicto; ibi tamen non sepeliuntur corpora mortuorum. H. d. usque ad § De confratribus. Abbas. - § 4. Confratres exemptorum, seu ipsorum oblati, qui in totum non se transtulerunt, iudicari possunt ab ordinariis locorum. H. d. usque ad fin. Abbas Siculus.
>
> Alexander III. in concilio Lateranensi. Quum et plantare sacram religionem, et plantatam fovere modis omnibus debeamus, nusquam hoc melius exsequimur, quam si nutrire ea, quae recta sunt, et corrigere, quae profectum virtutis impediunt, commissa nobis a Deo auctoritate curemus. Fratrum autem et coepiscoporum nostrorum vehementi conquestione comperimus, quod fratres Templi et Hospitalis, et alii quoque religiosi, indulta sibi ab apostolica sede privilegia excedentes, contra episcopalem auctoritatem multa praesumunt, quae et scandalum faciunt populo Dei et grave pariunt periculum animarum. Proposuerunt enim, quod ecclesias recipiant de manibus laicorum, excommunicatos et interdictos ad ecclesiastica sacramenta et sepulturam admittant in ecclesiis suis praeter eorum conscientiam, et instituant et amoveant sacerdotes, et fratribus eorum ad eleemosynas quaerendas euntibus, quum indultum sit eis, ut in eorum adventu semel in anno aperiantur ecclesiae atque in eis divina celebrentur officia, plures ex eis, de una sive diversis domibus ad interdictum locum saepius accedentes, indulgentia privilegiorum in celebrandis officiis et sepeliendis mortuis abutuntur, et tunc mortuos apud interdictas ecclesias sepelire praesumunt. Occasione quoque fraternitatum, quas in pluribus locis faciunt, robur episcopalis auctoritatis enervant, dum contra eorum sententiam sub privilegiorum aliquorum obtentu munire cunctos intendunt, qui ad eorum fraternitatem voluerint se conferre. In his autem, quia non tam de maiorum conscientia vel consilio, quam de minorum indiscretione [quorundam] exceditur, et removenda ea, in quibus excedunt, et quae dubitationem faciunt decrevimus declaranda. Ecclesias igitur et decimas de manu laicorum sine consensu episcoporum tam illos quam etiam quoscunque alios religiosos recipere prohibemus, dimissis etiam, quascunque contra tenorem istum aliquo tempore receperunt. § 1. Excommunicatos quoque et nominatim interdictos tam ab illis quam ab aliis omnibus iuxta episcoporum sententiam statuimus evitandos. § 2. In ecclesiis vero suis, quae ad eos pleno iure non pertinent, instituendos presbyteros episcopis repraesentent; ut eis quidem de plebis cura respondeant, ipsis vero pro rebus temporalibus rationem exhibeant competentem. Institutos etiam inconsultis episcopis non audeant removere. § 3. Quodsi Templarii vel Hospitalarii ad ecclesiam venerint interdictam, non nisi semel in anno ad ecclesiasticum officium admittantur, nec tunc ibi sepeliantur corpora defunctorum. § 4. De confratribus autem hoc constituimus, ut, si non se praedictis fratribus omnino reddiderint, sed in proprietatibus suis omnimodo duxerint remanendum, propter hoc ab episcoporum suorum sententia nullatenus eximantur, sed potestatem suam in eos, sicut in alios parochianos suos exerceant, quum pro suis fuerint excessibus corrigendi. Quod autem de praedictis fratribus dictum est, ab aliis quoque religiosis, qui praesumptione sua episcoporum percipiunt iura, et contra canonicas eorum sententias et tenorem privilegiorum nostrorum venire praesumunt, praecipimus observari. Si enim contra institutum hoc venerint, et ecclesiae, in quibus ista praesumpserint, subiaceant interdicto, et quod egerint irritum habeatur et vacuum.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who derogates from the privileges of others is to be deprived of his own privileges.

The same, to the Archbishops and Bishops to whom these letters shall come.

Our beloved sons, the brothers of the Hospital of Jerusalem, have shown by a complaint transmitted to us that you are unwilling to do justice for them concerning their malefactors, contemning the reception of their privileges, and that you in no way permit them to seek alms in your parishes or to bury their brothers. Therefore, because those brothers are fortified with many liberties and privileges by the Roman Pontiffs, which we are unwilling to allow to be infringed in our times, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity, by way of precept, that you cause absolutely no molestation to the said brothers in those things which are known to have been granted to them by the Roman Church, nor presume in any way to contradict or deny those things to them. For if henceforth we shall be able to discover such things concerning you in truth, know for certain that we shall curtail the privileges granted to you, since you do not fear to oppose our authentic writings and those of the Roman Church.

Suis privilegiis privandus est qui alienis derogat.

Idem Archiepiscopis et Episcopis, ad quos literae istae pervenerint.

Dilecti filii nostri fratres Hospitalis Hierosolymitani transmissa nobis conquestione monstrarunt, quod vos eis de malefactoribus suis iustitiam facere non vultis, privilegia ipsorum recipere contemnentes, nec ipsos eleemosynas quaerere in vestris parochiis, aut fratres eorum sepelire aliquatenus permittatis. Quoniam igitur iidem fratres multis sunt libertatibus et privilegiis a Romanis Pontificibus praemuniti, quae ut nostris temporibus infringantur nolumus sustinere, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus iam dictis fratribus in his, quae sibi ab ecclesia Romana noscuntur indulta fuisse, nullam prorsus molestiam faciatis, nec ea sibi contradicere vel denegare aliquatenus attentetis. Si enim de vobis in veritate de cetero talia poterimus comperire, Pro certo sciatis, quod nos concessa vobis privilegia decurtabimus, quum nostris et ecclesiae Romanae scriptis authenticis obviare minime timeatis.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Even privileged persons cannot admit excommunicated persons to burial; and, if they have admitted them, they ought to cast them out from there; and, if they have not done so, the bishop shall supply their omission.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

For this purpose, although undeserving, by the Lord's disposition we have been established in the see of the prince of the blessed Apostles: that we ought to plant the things which look to the adornment of the virtues, and take care to pluck up and root out the things which are opposed to reason and impede the advancement of salvation. Indeed, we have learned that the Hospitallers presume, against the prohibitions of the bishops, to consign to ecclesiastical burial persons excommunicated by name, not considering how grave it is to communicate in death with those whom the Church, while they lived, separated from her bosom for their offenses. Whence, because we neither wish nor ought in any way to tolerate presumption and rashness of this kind, brother, by apostolic writings we command you to order the Hospitallers that, if they have buried in the cemeteries of churches any who died in excommunication, they cast them altogether outside those cemeteries. But if they are unwilling to do so, you shall carry out this very thing, by our authority, the obstacle of appeal being removed, concerning those whom it shall be established to you died in excommunication. [Furthermore, concerning these persons, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the tenth day before the Kalends of April, 1175.]

> Etiam privilegiati non possunt admittere excommunicatos ad sepulturam, et, si admiserint, debent inde eos eiicere, et, si non fecerint, episcopus supplebit.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad haec in beatorum Apostolorum principis sede Domino disponente quanquam immeriti sumus constituti, ut plantare debeamus quae ad virtutum spectant decorem, et evellere et eradicare curemus quae obvia sunt rationi et profectum impediunt salutis. Intelleximus sane, quod Hospitalarii nominatim excommunicatos contra prohibitiones episcoporum ecclesiasticae praesumunt tradere sepulturae, non cogitantes, quam grave sit illis morte communicare, quos, dum viverent, ecclesia a suo sinu pro eorum excessibus segregavit. Unde, quoniam huiusmodi praesumptionem et temeritatem nolumus nec debemus aliquatenus tolerare, frater, tibi per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus Hospitalariis praecipias, ut, si quos in excommunicatione defunctos in coemeteriis ecclesiarum sepelierint, eos extra coemeteria ipsa penitus eiiciant. Quodsi facere noluerint, tu hoc ipsum de his, quos in excommunicatione defunctos esse tibi constiterit, auctoritate nostra remoto appellationis obstaculo exsequaris. [*Praeterea de his etc. - Dat. Ferentini X. Kal. April. *1175.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Prescription runs against the privilege of a church over a period of thirty years, but today over forty, as below in this same title, Accedentibus.

The same, to the Abbot and Monks of Saint Andrew of the Cistercian Order.

If for thirty years you have paid tithes to the canons of Plautio from the land that you possess in their parish, from now on [and] in full [without any] molestation or occasion, appeal being set aside, you shall pay them those tithes, and you shall restore in full those which you are known to have withheld. For although by benefit of the privileges of the Roman Church it was granted to the brothers of the Cistercian Order that they ought to pay no tithes or first fruits from their labors, nevertheless you wished for so long a time to detract from the privilege granted [by] us to you; and, because everyone is free to renounce his own right, you cannot defend yourselves in this matter in that way. [Indeed, unless we loved you and your order so greatly, etc.]

> Contra privilegium ecclesiae praescribitur spatio XXX. annorum, hodie vero XL. ut infra eod. Accedentibus.
>
> Idem Abbati et Monachis S. Andreae Cisterciensis ordinis.

Si de terra, quam habetis in parochia canonicorum de Plautio, per XXX. annos eis decimas persolvistis, eas sibi de cetero [et] integre [aliqua] sine molestatione occasione et appellatione postposita persolvatis, et quas noscimini subtraxisse integre restituatis. Licet enim privilegiorum Romanae ecclesiae beneficio fratribus Cisterciensis ordinis indultum fuerit, quod de laboribus suis nullas decimas vel primitias persolvere debeant: de privilegio tamen [a] nobis indulto tanto tempore vobis detrahere voluistis, quum liberum sit unicuique suo iuri renunciare, eoque modo non potestis vos in hac parte tueri. [Sane nisi nos vos et ordinem vestrum adeo diligeremus, etc.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Judgment is not to be made concerning privileges unless their tenor has been inspected, and according to their contents they are to be observed by all subjects.

The same, to the Bishop of Amiens.

Moreover, although the Templars and Hospitallers have been endowed with many prerogatives of liberty, we do not doubt that they possess a different liberty in those places in which they had been inhabitants before the places came to them. You can perceive all this more fully from an inspection of their privileges, and you shall observe according to what you find. For we wish them to observe the tenor of their privileges in such a way that they are in no way seen to transgress their bounds.

De privilegiis non est iudicandum, nisi eorum tenore inspecto, et secundum continentiam eorum ab omnibus subditis sunt servanda.

Idem Ambianensi Episcopo.

Porro, quamvis Templarii et Hospitalarii multa sint libertatis praerogativa donati, non dubitamus, quin aliam libertatem habeant in locis, in quibus, antequam pervenissent ad eos, fuerant habitatores, quod totum ex inspectione privilegiorum suorum plenius advertere potes, et secundum quod inveneris, ita observes. Sic enim eos volumus privilegiorum suorum servare tenorem, quod eorum metas transgredi minime videantur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Exemption from the jurisdiction of bishops is not proved by payment of a census made to the Roman Church.

The same, to I., Legate of the Apostolic See.

We have received the letters which you directed concerning the churches paying a census in the episcopate of our venerable brother the Bishop of Novara, and from their tenor we have perceived how vigilant you are in preserving our rights. Nevertheless, we wish it not to escape your diligence that, just as not all those who exist specially under the right of blessed Peter pay a census annually to the Apostolic See, so not all those paying our census are held immune from subjection to bishops. Therefore, the privileges of the same churches are to be inspected, and their tenor is to be attended to more diligently, so that, if it shall have been discovered that a church which pays a census exists specially under the right of blessed Peter and that an annual census is rendered as a token of the liberty received, it will not undeservedly be able to enjoy a special prerogative. But if the census is paid as a token of the protection received, nothing is seen on this account to have been withdrawn from the right of the diocesan bishop. Therefore, since it is established that the priest of Saint Peter promised obedience to the aforesaid bishop at his ordination, as he confessed and asserted at law, we are unwilling that you protect him or any others, because, just as we wish our rights to be preserved by our brothers and fellow bishops, so it is fitting for us to guard their rights unimpaired.

> Per solutionem census, quae fit Romanae ecclesiae, non probatur exemptio a iurisdictione episcoporum.
>
> Idem I. apostolicae sedis Legato.
>
> Recepimus literas, quas de ecclesiis censualibus episcopatus venerabilis fratris nostri Novariensis episcopi direxisti, et ex earum tenore perpendimus, qualiter ad iura nostra servanda vigil exsistas. Ceterum diligentiam tuam volumus non latere, quod, sicut non omnes, qui specialiter beati Petri iuris exsistunt, annuatim apostolicae sedi censum exsolvunt, ita non omnes nostri censuales ab episcoporum subiectione habentur immunes. Inspicienda sunt ergo ipsarum ecclesiarum privilegia, et ipsorum tenor est diligentius attendendus, ut, si fuerit deprehensum, quod ecclesia, quae censum solvit, specialiter B. Petri iuris exsistat, et ad indicium perceptae libertatis census annuus conferatur, non immerito poterit speciali praerogativa gaudere. Si vero ad indicium perceptae protectionis census persolvitur, non ex hoc iuri dioecesani episcopi aliquid videtur esse subtractum. Quum igitur constet, presbyterum S. Petri praefato episcopo obedientiam promisisse in ordinatione sua, sicut in iure confessus asseruit, nolumus, quod eum vel aliquos tuearis, quia sicut iustitias nostras volumus a fratribus et coepiscopis nostris reservari, ita eorum iura nos convenit illibata custodire.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A privilege granted to one person cannot be extended to another on account of identity of reason. It says this, and it is customarily cited every day.

The same.

Indeed (And below:) It is rash and unworthy for anyone to presume by his own authority for himself that which the Roman Church, after regard was had to a certain reason, willed to grant to someone by singular benefits.

> Privilegium, uni concessum, non potest ad alium extendi propter identitatem rationis. H. d. et solet quotidie allegari. Idem.
>
> Sane (Et infra:) Temerarium est et indignum, aliquem sibi sua auctoritate praesumere, quod Romana ecclesia alicui, certa ratione inspecta, singularibus voluit beneficiis indulgere.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Public bells cannot be kept in private oratories, even by religious. It says this; and hold this text in mind, for it is cited every day and is in use.

Celestine III, to the Bishop of Ávila.

You desire to be certified by our open letters whether Templars, Hospitallers, and others having oratories in their houses are permitted to place bells in them and ring them publicly. We respond to the consultation which you make, and we say, that they are not permitted to do this; rather, they are to be restrained by you through ecclesiastical censure, appeal being removed, so that they are content with their own right in such a way that they do not impede the justice of others.

> In oratoriis privatis campanae publicae teneri non possunt etiam per religiosos. H. d. et tene menti hunc textum, qui quotidie allegatur et est in usu.
>
> Coelestinus III. Abulensi Episcopo.

> Patentibus literis nostris certificari desideras, utrum Templariis, Hospitalariis et aliis, oratoria in domibus suis habentibus, liceat campanas in eis ponere publiceque pulsare. Respondemus autem consultationi tuae quam facis, et dicimus, quod non licet eis hoc agere; quin potius per te per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota coercendi sunt, ut ita sint suo iure contenti, quod iustitiam non impediant aliorum.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Throughout the whole province those Hospitallers who send persons falsely marked with the cross to collect alms are deprived of the office of exhortation; and, if those sent are laymen, they are excommunicated, but, if they are clerics, they are suspended from office and benefice. Those who celebrate in a polluted church before its reconciliation are punished by the same suspension; persons suspended by bishops cannot be absolved by exempt persons; and confraternity members of privileged persons who do not transfer themselves entirely to them are not privileged.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Lyons.

The tenor of your letters has taught us that the brothers of the Hospital of Saint John send lay and illiterate men to collect alms which the people have been accustomed to send from devotion to the aforesaid place for the sustenance of the poor. But because they are not sufficient by themselves to go about all the places, they associate with themselves clerics, priests, and even rude laymen—not religious, but practiced in wickedness—placing the sign of the cross upon their breasts. And since they serve gluttony and drunkenness, showing themselves very dishonorable in other things, they gravely scandalize the clergy and people, since those laymen perform the offices of priories and are set over both clerics and priests, and they not only exist disobedient to the bishops but also rashly presume to claim for themselves certain immunities as though granted to them by the Apostolic See. For when one of them, recently striking the vicar priest in a certain baptismal church conferred upon them by your predecessor, had polluted the church itself by the shedding of blood, you prohibited divine offices from being celebrated there until reconciliation; but nevertheless they celebrated divine offices in it. Moreover, they receive priests coming to them from anywhere, concerning whose manner of life and ordination there is absolutely no certainty, to celebrate divine office for them, the assent of the bishops not having been sought at all. Other priests, suspended from office by their bishops according to the requirement of their deserts, those same men, although they are laymen, restore to the performance of divine offices. Furthermore, they endeavor so to emancipate certain persons who dwell with their wives in their own houses, because they confer something of their own upon them annually, that they are by no means bound to answer anyone according to the law of the land concerning the things objected against them. But because one who abuses the power permitted to him deserves to lose his privilege, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if you find any clerics, or priests, or laymen falsely marked with the cross by the said brothers for collecting alms, then throughout your whole province, supported by our authority, you prohibit those by whom they are established to have been sent from the office of this kind of exhortation. Those sent also, if they were laymen, you shall strike with the sword of excommunication; if they were clerics or priests, you shall suspend them from office and benefice, with no benefit of privilege or remedy of appeal whatever prevailing. Enveloping with the same penalty of suspension those whom you shall know to have celebrated divine things in the aforesaid church, subject to you by diocesan law, after your interdict, you shall not permit divine offices to be celebrated in it until it has been reconciled, as the sacred statutes command. Priests also suspended by their bishops and rashly restored by the aforesaid brothers to their offices you shall, supported by our authority, return to the same sentence of suspension. But those whom they assert not to be bound for the aforesaid cause to answer others according to the law of the land we are unwilling to have excused; rather, you shall compel them to answer, the obstacle of appeal being removed. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifth day before the Ides of December, 1198.]

> In tota provincia exhortationis officio privantur Hospitalarii, qui mittunt pro eleemosynis cruce falso signatos, et, si missi sunt laici, excommunicantur; si sunt clerici, ab officio et beneficio suspenduntur. Et eadem suspensione puniuntur qui ante reconciliationem in polluta ecclesia celebrant; et suspensi per episcopos exemptos absolvi non possunt; et fratres privilegiatorum, qui ad eos se omnino non transferunt, privilegiati non sunt.
>
> Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo Lugdunensi. Tuarum nos tenor edocuit literarum, quod fratres Hospitalis sancti Ioannis laicos et illiteratos mittunt pro eleemosynis colligendis, quas populus ex devotione pro sustentatione pauperum praefato loco mittere consuevit. Quia vero non sufficiunt per se loca omnia circumire, sibi clericos, sacerdotes, laicos etiam rudes, non religiosos, sed in nequitiis exercitatos assumunt, eorum pectoribus crucis characterem imponentes. Quumque gulae et ebrietati deserviant, se valde inhonestos in aliis ostendentes, clerum et populum graviter scandalizant, quum ipsi laici prioratuum fungantur officiis, et tam clericis quam sacerdotibus praeponantur, et non solum episcopis inobedientes exsistunt, verum etiam quasdam immunitates, tanquam ab apostolica sede sibi indultas, praesumunt sibi temere vindicare. Quum enim in quadam ecclesia baptismali, eis a praedecessore tuo collata, quidam eorum, nuper percutiens vicarium sacerdotem, ipsam ecclesiam sanguinis effusione foedasset, usque ad reconciliationem divina ibidem interdixisti officia celebrari; sed nihilominus ipsi in ea divina officia celebrarunt. Sacerdotes insuper, undecunque venientes ad eos, de quorum etiam conversatione et ordinatione nulla certitudo prorsus habetur, ad divinum officium sibi celebrandum recipiunt, episcoporum assensu minime requisito. Alios vero presbyteros ab officio suspensos per episcopos suos pro suorum exigentia meritorum, iidem, quum sint laici, ad divina officia restituunt exsequenda. Quosdam praeterea, qui cum uxoribus suis in domibus propriis commorantur, eo, quod eis de suis aliquid conferunt annuatim, ita emancipare contendunt, ut aliquibus secundum legem terrae de sibi obiectis respondere minime teneantur. Verum, quia privilegium meretur amittere qui permissa sibi abutitur potestate, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si quos clericos, seu sacerdotes aut laicos a dictis fratribus pro colligendis eleemosynis cruce falso signatos inveneris, his, a quibus ipsos missos esse constiterit, per totam provinciam tuam nostra fretus auctoritate exhortationis huiusmodi officium interdicas, missos etiam, si laici fuerint, excommunicationis mucrone percellas, si clerici vel presbyteri fuerint, ab officio beneficioque suspendas, nullo prorsus privilegii beneficio vel appellationis remedio praevalente. Eos vero, quos in praedicta ecclesia, lege tibi dioecesana subiecta, post interdictum tuum divina celebrare cognoveris, eadem poena suspensionis involvens, in ea, donec reconciliata fuerit, quemadmodum sacros praecipiunt instituta, officia non permittas celebrari divina; presbyteros etiam, suspensos ab episcopis suis, et per praedictos fratres ad officia sua temere restitutos, in eandem sententiam suspensionis nostra fretus auctoritate reducas. Illos vero, quos ad respondendum aliis secundum legem terrae pro praemissa causa asserunt non teneri, nolumus excusari, quin eos ad respondendum sublato appellationis impedimento compellas. [*Dat. Lat. V. Id. Dec. *1198.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: The contents of a lost instrument can be proved through witnesses who read it through, if they depose concerning its tenor and that it was without defect. It says this, and the case is nowhere else so clear.

The same, to the Abbot and Convent of Saint Peter of Gubbio.

When formerly we were established at Perugia and you, son abbot, humbly presented to us the privilege of Pope Lucius of good memory, our predecessor, and petitioned that it be renewed, it was not brought to effect on account of the contradiction of our venerable brother Mark, Bishop of Gubbio, who arrived at that time, asserting that this redounded to his prejudice. [And when each of you complained of the other in our audience, we committed the cause to be heard by our venerable brother the Bishop of Assisi under this form: that he should take care to recall you and the said bishop to concord; otherwise, he should hear the things alleged on both sides and, reducing everything to writing, faithfully disclose to us the course of the matter. When he had inspected the privileges granted to you by the Apostolic See and understood that your monastery pertained specially to the Roman Church, he did not judge, as we have learned, that he should proceed further in the cause. Subsequently, at the petition of the aforesaid Bishop of Gubbio, our letters concerning the mutual questions were directed to our venerable brother the Bishop of Cagli and our beloved son Ar., Abbot of Saint Mary of Vallis Pontis. But because, while the judgment was pending, John the monk carried off the privileges, other charters, and the treasure of your monastery, it was necessary for you, abbot, again to labor to come to our presence, where you obtained letters providing that through a sentence of excommunication those who knew anything concerning the loss of the privilege should be compelled to speak the truth. But because not even thus could you recover the lost privileges, you returned to us anew.] Therefore, when you, with your witnesses, and the proctors of the aforesaid Bishop of Gubbio were established in our presence, we commanded our beloved son B., Cardinal Priest of the Basilica of the Twelve Apostles, to receive diligently concerning the loss and tenor of the privileges the witnesses whom you should deem fit to produce. He, as the diligent executor of our command, with the aforesaid proctors present, faithfully reduced to writing the depositions of ten sworn witnesses. When their depositions had been published, the said proctors sought an adjournment for producing witnesses of the bishop, through whom they might discredit those introduced by the opposing party; which adjournment, a peremptory term having been fixed, we determined should be granted to them under this tenor: that they should prove before the Apostolic See whatever they wished, where the other party had assumed the burden of proof. (And below:) We, however, knowing clearly, both through the depositions of the witnesses and through the assertions of certain of our brothers, that the tenor of the said privilege had been such—namely, that your monastery pertained to the Roman Church with no intermediary; that no bishop was permitted to pronounce excommunication against that monastery and its churches, so that the brothers serving the Lord there, free from the power of all, might enjoy the favor of the liberty of the Roman Church; and that no mention of the diocesan bishop was contained in them—and nevertheless also attending to this: that, as we learned clearly from the statements of certain witnesses, and as many of our brothers who were present at that time recalled, when you, son abbot, in the time of Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, had come to his presence, he, after inspecting the privileges of your church, admitted you to the kiss as one not bound, although you were said to have been excommunicated by the Bishop of Gubbio, which he is presumed not to have done unless he had known that your monastery pertained specially to the Roman Church, on the common counsel of our brothers we decree that it is to be pronounced that the privilege of Pope Lucius of good memory [our predecessor], which appeared without defect of bull, charter, or letter when it was shown to us, had that tenor which it is known through the depositions of witnesses and assertions of our brothers to have possessed. [Therefore, we decree, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Kalends of June, 1199.]

> Contenta in instrumento perdito probari possunt per testes, qui illud perlegerunt, si deponunt de tenore, et quod erat sine vitio. H. d. et non est alibi casus ita clarus.

Idem Abbati et Conventui S. Petri Eugubini. Quum olim essemus apud Perusiam constituti, et tu, fili abbas, privilegium bonae memoriae Lucii Papae praedecessoris nostri nobis humiliter praesentans, postulaveris innovari: propter contradictionem venerabilis fratris nostri Marci Eugubini episcopi, qui tunc temporis supervenit, asserentis hoc in suum praeiudicium redundare, non fuit effectui mancipatum. [Quumque alter vestrum de altero in nostro auditorio quereretur, venerabili fratri nostro Assisinati episcopo causam sub ea forma commisimus audiendam, ut vos et iam dictum episcopum curaret ad concordiam revocare; alioquin audiret utrinque proposita, et omnia in scriptis redigens, nobis processum negotii fideliter reseraret. Qui quum indulta vobis a sede apostolica privilegia inspexisset, intellecto, quod monasterium vestrum ad Romanam ecclesiam specialiter pertineret, in causa non duxit ulterius, sicut accepimus, procedendum. Consequenter vero ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Callensem episcopum et dilectum filium Ar. abbatem sanctae Mariae Vallis pontis ad postulationem praefati episcopi Eugubini literae nostrae fuerunt super mutuis quaestionibus destinatae. Sed quia pendente iudicio Iohannes monachus privilegia, chartas alias et thesaurum monasterii vestri rapuit, te, abbas, ad nostram oportuit praesentiam iterum laborare, ubi literas impetrasti, quod per excommunicationis sententiam, qui de amissione privilegii scirent aliquid, cogerentur dicere veritatem. Sed quoniam neque sic amissa potuisti privilegia reperire, ad nos denuo es reversus.] Te igitur cum testibus tuis et praefati episcopi Eugubini procuratoribus in nostra praesentia constitutis, dilecto filio nostro B. basilicae XII. Apostolorum presbytero cardinali dedimus in mandatis, ut super amissione ac tenore privilegiorum testes reciperet diligenter, quos duceres producendos, qui mandati nostri diligens exsecutor praesentibus praefatis procuratoribus fideliter redegit in scriptis depositiones X. testium iuratorum, quorum depositionibus publicatis iam dicti procuratores ad producendos testes episcopi, per quos inductos a parte adversa repellerent, inducias postularunt; quas praefixo termino peremptorio sub eo tenore illis duximus concedendas, ut apud sedem apostolicam probarent quae vellent, ubi onus probationis pars altera subiisset. (Et infra:) Nos vero, tam per depositiones testium quam per assertiones quorundam fratrum nostrorum liquido cognoscentes, talem dicti privilegii fuisse tenorem, quod videlicet coenobium vestrum nullo mediante ad Romanam ecclesiam pertineret, et quod non liceret alicui episcopo eidem monasterio et eius ecclesiis excommunicationem indicere, ut fratres, illic Domino servientes, ab omnium potestate liberi, Romanae ecclesiae libertatis gratia potirentur, et quod nulla in eis mentio dioecesani episcopi habebatur, illud etiam nihilominus attendentes, quod, sicut ex dictis quorundam testium intelleximus evidenter, et plerique de nostris fratribus, tempore illo praesentibus, recolebant, quum tu, fili abbas, tempore bonae memoriae Coelestini praedecessoris nostri ad ipsius praesentiam accessisses, ipse, inspectis ecclesiae tuae privilegiis, te, licet excommunicatus ab Eugubino episcopo dicereris, tanquam non ligatum admisit ad osculum, quod praesumitur non fecisse, nisi monasterium vestrum cognovisset ad Romanam ecclesiam specialiter pertinere, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio pronunciandum decernimus, privilegium illud bonae memoriae Lucii Papae [praedecessoris nostri] quod sine reprehensione bullae, chartae vel literae apparebat, quando fuit nobis ostensum, illius fuisse tenoris, cuius per depositiones testium et assertiones fratrum nostrorum noscitur exstitisse. [Decernimus ergo etc. Dat. Lat. II. Kal. Iun. 1199.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Renewal of privileges does not bestow a new right, but preserves the ancient one. It says this as regards the title.

The same, to the Bishop-elect of Châlons and the Abbot of Trois-Fontaines.

It was intimated to our ears on behalf of the abbess and sisters of the church of Iotrensis that our venerable brother the Bishop of Meaux, on occasion of a certain commission obtained by letters to delegated judges, in which no mention was made of their privileges—which declare that they and their churches, and the clergy and people of Iotrensis, look to the Apostolic See with no intermediary, privileges of which he was not ignorant—began to molest them gravely by demanding from them and from the clergy and people of Iotrensis, who according to the privileges of the Apostolic See enjoy a similar liberty, obedience and complete subjection to be rendered to himself. [Whence, when they were cited by the same judges, not by joining issue but rather by excepting against them, they said that we were their special lord in judgment and that they owed no obedience to the Bishop of Meaux, because, when our venerable brother O., Bishop of Ostia, then legate of the Apostolic See, had diligently inspected their privileges and learned that their monastery pertained to the right and property of the Apostolic See, in our stead he bestowed the gift of benediction upon the abbess herself, who at that time had newly been elected, and caused her specially to promise obedience to us and the Roman Church, requiring and receiving an oath from her for this.] But when the judges and their assessors burdened them greatly [in that they denied them a delay for exhibiting the privileges of liberty, although their proctors offered them an oath that they did not then have the privileges, nor had it been procured by fraud that they had not carried them to their presence, and they were unwilling to give them brief adjournments,] they fled to the benefit of appeal, [excepting against the same judges: both because they asserted that they were suspect, and especially the Bishop of Paris himself, who had a similar cause against the beloved son the Abbot of Saint Geneviève, and therefore they believed that he was unwilling to give any sentence other than one which he would wish another to give for himself; and because, when he had first wished to pronounce an interlocutory ruling without his fellow judge, and the proctors of the abbess said that they wished his fellow judge to be present, he had answered them that the latter would profit them in nothing, because, when he came, he would do nothing except what the bishop himself wished; and because they afterward denied them reasonable adjournments; and because on occasion of those letters they ought not to proceed in the cause, for the reason that by those letters the Bishop of Meaux demanded that the obedience owed—which the abbess is bound to render to the Roman Pontiff alone—be rendered to him by her and by the clergy and people of Iotrensis, although it was established by the privileges of the Roman Church that they were bound to him in nothing, and no mention of their privileges was made in those letters.] But the same judges, not deferring to the appeal nor having compassion upon the frailty of their sex, pronounced sentences of excommunication against the abbess and of interdict against the clergy and people of Iotrensis. Indeed, when the envoys of the church of Iotrensis had recounted these and many other things in our presence, by which they said that the women and their people had been burdened contrary to the liberty granted to them, they showed us an apostolic privilege through which it was established that the church of Iotrensis pertained specially to the Roman Church. But we, detaining the same envoys longer on account of the aforesaid appeal, because in the end no suitable respondent appeared to defend the opposing party, although afterward a certain simple envoy presented to us concerning this the letters of the aforesaid Bishop of Paris and Abbot of Lagny, determined that the privilege of the Apostolic See granted to the church of Iotrensis was to be renewed, yet in such a way that through its renewal no more right should accrue to that church than it obtained through the privileges of our predecessors, since through this we wish not to grant it a new right but to preserve the ancient one. [Because, however, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Ides of January, in the fifth year, 1203.]

> Innovatio privilegiorum novum ius non tribuit, sed antiquum conservat. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Idem Cathalanensi Electo et Abbati trium Fontium.
>
> Ex parte abbatissae ac sororum Iotrensis ecclesiae nostris exstitit auribus intimatum, quod venerabilis frater noster Meldensis episcopus commissionis occasione cuiusdam, per literas ad iudices delegatos obtentae, in qua nulla mentio habebatur de ipsarum privilegiis, quae illas et earum ecclesias, clerum et populum Iotrensem ad apostolicam sedem nullo mediante spectare declarant, quorum ipse non erat ignarus, eas incepit graviter molestare, obedientiam ab ipsis ac a clero et populo Iotrensi, qui secundum privilegia sedis apostolicae gaudent consimili libertate, subiectionem omnimodam impendendam sibi requirendo. [Unde, quum ab eisdem iudicibus citarentur, ipsae non contestando litem, sed excipiendo potius contra eos, nos sibi specialem in iudicio dominum esse dixerunt, et se nullam obedientiam episcopo Meldensi debere, quia, quum venerabilis frater noster O. Hostiensis episcopus, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, earum privilegiis diligenter inspectis, cognoverit monasterium earum ad ius et proprietatem sedis apostolicae pertinere, ipsi abbatissae, quae tunc temporis noviter erat electa, vice nostra munus benedictionis impendit, et obedientiam nobis et ecclesiae Romanae fecit ab ea specialiter repromitti, requirens ab ea propter hoc et accipiens sacramentum.] Verum, quum iudices et assessores eorum ipsas valde gravarent [in eo, quod negarent dilationem eiusdem ad exhibenda privilegia libertatis, quum procuratores earum illis iuramentum offerrent, se tunc privilegia non habere, nec procuratum dolo fuisse, quominus eadem ad eorum praesentiam detulissent, et ipsi eis breves inducias dare nollent,] ad appellationis beneficium convolarunt, [contra iudices excipientes eosdem, tum quia eos asserebant esse suspectos, et praesertim ipsum Parisiensem episcopum, qui contra dilectum filium abbatem S. Genovefae consimilem causam habebat, et ideo ipsum credebant aliam sententiam nolle dare, quam vellet ab alio pro se dari, tum quia, quum absque coniudice suo voluisset prius interlocutoriam promulgare, procuratoribus abbatissae dicentibus, se velle coniudicem eius esse praesentem, responderat illis, eum in nullo profecturum eisdem, quia, quum ille veniret, nihil faceret, nisi quod vellet et ipse; tum quia illis postmodum rationabiles inducias denegabant; tum quia occasione literarum illarum non debeant in causa procedere pro eo, quod Meldensis episcopus per literas illas obedientiam debitam, quam abbatissa soli Pontifici Romano tenetur impendere, ab ipsa, clero et populo Iotrensibus sibi requirebat impendi, quum per privilegia ecclesiae Romanae constaret, illi eos in aliquo non teneri, et de privilegiis suis nulla in eisdem literis mentio haberetur.] Sed iudices ipsi, appellationi non deferentes, nec fragilitati sexus compatientes earum, in abbatissam excommunicationis, et in clerum et in populum Iotrensem interdicti sententias protulerunt. Sane, quum nuncii Iotrensis ecclesiae praedicta et alia multa in nostra praesentia retulissent, quibus eas et suos contra libertatem, eis concessam, gravatos aiebant, privilegium nobis apostolicum ostenderunt, per quod ecclesiam Iotrensem constabat ad Romanam ecclesiam specialiter pertinere. Nos autem, eosdem nuncios propter appellationem praedictam diutius detinentes, quia tandem nullus apparuit idoneus responsalis, qui partem defensaret adversam, licet postmodum quidam simplex nuncius super hoc nobis praedictorum Parisiensis episcopi et Latiniacensis abbatis literas praesentasset: privilegium apostolicae sedis ecclesiae Iotrensi concessum duximus innovandum, ita tamen, ut per innovationem ipsius eidem ecclesiae non plus iuris accrescat, quam per privilegia praedecessorum nostrorum obtinuit, quum per hoc non novum ei concedere, sed antiquum ius conservare velimus. [Quia vero etc. Dat. Lat. IV. Id. Ian. Ao. V. 1203.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A church using a double privilege of exemption, although it fails under one, can nevertheless aid itself by the other and prevail; nor is an exempt person bound to promise obedience to the diocesan bishop. Nevertheless, by force of exemption he cannot construct a church in a non-exempt place without the license of the diocesan bishop; and, if an exempt person in fact constructs a church in a non-exempt place, it yields to the right of the bishop.

The same, to the Bishop of Coimbra.

When formerly you came to the Apostolic See, and, because of the questions which you had against the beloved sons, the prior and canons of the monastery of Santa Cruz, concerning which appeal had been made to our hearing, you made a longer stay, because no suitable respondent appeared for the other party, we determined that a certain term should be fixed for them, at which they should come or send representatives to receive a definitive sentence concerning all the privileges and liberties which they said they possessed from the Roman Pontiffs or from M., formerly Bishop of Coimbra, and concerning the other questions brought against them by the church of Coimbra. But so that the truth might appear more easily, we commanded under the same strictness that the authentic and original instruments with their bulls be exhibited to us by the same term. Meanwhile, either party was permitted before our beloved sons, the Abbots of Alcobacia and Serra, and F. Menende, monk of Alcobacia, to whom the cause had previously been delegated under a certain form, and witnesses produced on both sides, to allege and prove anything else which it should judge ought to be alleged and proved. [We took care, however, to assign the aforesaid term to them as peremptory, so that, if they should perhaps contemn to come or send representatives at it, we would nevertheless take care to proceed in the same matter so far as we could by law. We also commanded the same judges that, if they proceeded by the will of the parties, after receiving other witnesses, if they should judge that any were to be produced concerning the privileges, liberties, and other articles, and bringing the matter as far as definitive sentence, they should send all the acts under their seals to the Apostolic See. And when afterward you had come to the Apostolic See, two canons of Santa Cruz arrived who neither possessed letters of ratification nor had been appointed proctors for this cause. Whence we, regarding the party of Santa Cruz as contumacious, as it was, since it had sent to us not suitable respondents for the cause but envoys of whatever sort, commanded that the attestations received by the delegated judges be opened, so that at last, if the merits of the cause were clear to us, we might pronounce sentence. But you, wishing to render favorable to you the mind of our most dear son in Christ, the illustrious ... King of Portugal, who had been moved against you on this account, agreed with the aforesaid canons under this form: namely, that the same cause, both concerning the principal and the incidental matter, the obstacle of appeal being removed, should be committed for termination to our venerable brother the ... Bishop of Zamora and our beloved sons the ... Dean of Zamora and the Dean of Orense; yet so that the party of Santa Cruz might, within forty days after receipt of our letters, produce instruments and witnesses concerning those articles in which, during its absence, you had produced your witnesses. Otherwise, it would not be permitted to challenge the attestations already received or to object that there had been proceedings in this cause although issue had not been joined. We therefore commanded the said bishop and deans by way of precept that, if the party of Santa Cruz wished to ratify what had been done by the said canons, after receiving its witnesses and instruments concerning the aforesaid heads —if, nevertheless, it should judge that these were to be exhibited within forty days after receipt of our letters—and after your attestations had been published according to the aforesaid form, they should proceed in the cause and terminate it with a due conclusion, appeal being set aside. But if perhaps it were unwilling to ratify what had been done by the aforesaid canons, since its contumacy would be understood not to have been purged but increased, they should proceed against them as contumacious persons and, after diligently inspecting the attestations received, decide the cause itself, appeal being removed, and order the sentence which they should render to be executed. But because this cause was to be tried outside the kingdom of Portugal, they should first take care to assign the parties a suitable term by peremptory edict, lest because of the remoteness of the places and the distance of the persons you should be compelled to labor longer. And if they could not cite the party of Santa Cruz through others, they should take care, after prior admonition, to compel through ecclesiastical censure, appeal being removed, its canons dwelling in the kingdom of León to present to it the letters of citation, notwithstanding any letters prejudicial to truth and justice which might appear to have been obtained from the Apostolic See. But if not all could take part in executing these things, the bishop should nevertheless execute them with one of the others. When the parties had been summoned to a certain term and had assembled at it, the aforesaid Bishop and Dean of Zamora, because the Dean of Orense could not be present, took care to ask the Prior of Santa Cruz whether he ratified what had been done by his canons. It was answered on his behalf that there was no place for the question, since he was prepared immediately to prove that our rescript had been obtained through falsehoods in the petitions. For when the Dean of Coimbra had brought back against the monastery of Santa Cruz eleven letters of commission to the aforesaid Abbot of Seira and the beloved son P. Froildiz, monk of Alcobacia, although the party of the church of Santa Cruz had at first obtained the requested adjournments, nevertheless, because on the second occasion it could not obtain individual adjournments for the individual commissions, it appealed on this account to our hearing, although appeal was prohibited by our letters. Finally, that party and the Dean of Coimbra took care to submit the matter by compromise to the aforesaid King of Portugal, the Priors ... de Costa and ... de Rimaran., and the aforesaid judges, two sureties on either side being obligated in the name of a penalty; and thus the prior renounced the appeal with the assent of his own men, while the dean renounced our letters. Furthermore, twelve canons on either side swore to render testimony to the truth concerning the whole matter. Therefore, after the witnesses had been received and their depositions reduced to writing, the king was unwilling to take part, but committed his functions to the aforesaid Priors ... de Costa and de Rimaranes, and proposed to the parties that they pursue their right through the Roman Church or through others, since a cause of this kind did not pertain to him. But you alleged before the aforesaid Bishop and Dean of Zamora that neither the renunciation of the Dean of Coimbra, who had been appointed proctor not to renounce but rather to act, nor even the compromise had been valid: both because the judges ought not to have been arbitrators; because ecclesiastical matters had been submitted by compromise to a layman; and also because the same man substituted others for himself, although concerning this there had been no treatment at all in the compromise. But the party of Santa Cruz alleged on the other side that the compromise had been valid, because it said that we had pronounced that an action could be brought concerning its penalty, adding that you had ratified the dean's renunciation and had obtained the aforesaid letters by suppressing this, although you could by no means have obtained them if you had more fully disclosed the truth concerning this to us. And although the same party introduced four witnesses who said simply and absolutely that you had ratified what had been done by the dean, nevertheless six witnesses whom you had introduced took care to depose that you expressed a ratification of this kind not simply but conditionally—namely, if the matter were concluded according to the attestations prepared. Moreover, John Caesar, canon of Santa Cruz, had been introduced as a witness, and Michael Petri and others whom you had introduced deposed under oath that we had caused the whole truth of this matter to be investigated through the first delegated judges and all things to be reported to us, and that, after everything had been diligently inspected, we had thus pronounced that your claim was not impeded by the objections. The same John and Michael Petri also, when asked whether you had ratified the dean's renunciation, said that they knew absolutely nothing concerning this; but on the part of Santa Cruz it was objected against them that they had been contrary to themselves, since they had first said that they reported the whole truth of the matter to us and secondly that they had made no mention of the ratification, which was as it were the principal part of this matter. But you said that the witness whom the party of Santa Cruz had introduced was deservedly to be believed against it. The judges, therefore, attending that appeal had been prohibited in our letters, that the condition under which you had said you ratified what had been done by the dean had not occurred, and that, after the truth of the whole matter had been inspected, we had pronounced that your cause ought not to be impeded by the things which the canons of Santa Cruz had objected; and also considering that the party of Santa Cruz had more fully discredited the aforesaid John, whom it itself had produced and who instructed the judges themselves concerning the things done before us, ruled interlocutorily on prudent counsel that proceedings in the matter which had been delegated to them could not by law be impeded on occasion of the alleged falsity. Then, when they wished to proceed in the principal matter, the Prior of Santa Cruz alleged manifold causes of recusation; because the judges, regarding them as frivolous, were unwilling to admit them, the prior, neglecting every defense of his cause, contumaciously absented himself. But we also afterward regarded the aforesaid recusations as invalid for this reason: that the contumacy of the party of Santa Cruz was not diminished but increased.]

But the judges, believing that the cause had been sufficiently conducted, after diligently inspecting the attestations and arguments of both parties, condemned the monastery of Santa Cruz to pay you the expenses which you swore that you had incurred over four years on occasion of this matter, and which reach the sum of fifty marks of gold, on the counsel of prudent men. By their sentence they invalidated the liberty which the said M., Bishop of Coimbra, had conferred upon the monastery of Santa Cruz to the enormous detriment of the church of Coimbra, the assent of the canons having been extorted through the bishop's herald and the king's porter. Furthermore, because the same M., your predecessor, had been a canon regular and had given to the aforesaid monastery two thousand marabatini which he had acquired after he had already been promoted as bishop, the judges condemned the [monastery] itself to restore them. Moreover, all the tithes as well as the churches which the monastery, without the assent of the Bishop of Coimbra, had received from the hand of the king or of others, whether laymen or clerics, and which it had founded by its own authority in Latren. or other places contained in the attestations—[namely, the chapel of Saint John constructed in the suburb of Coimbra; the churches of Toaveiro de Laurizal, de Mira, de Sorenes, Saint Facundus, the hermitage of Saint Martin de Agoacla, the churches de Mortedi, de Travancha, Saint Marina in Sena, Saint Roman with both rights, Saint Sebastian, and all the churches founded in the castle of Seirene and its boundaries; and also the inheritances contained in the attestations by right of property, namely, the inheritances of Lavaes with its church of Buarchos, de Cassaira, de Eimedi, de Saint Verissimus, and de Cabima]—because the party of Santa Cruz had opposed the proofs made against it neither by prescription nor by another defense, they judged were to be recalled to the right of the church of Coimbra with the fruits of the intervening time, [commanding that the two bodies of dead persons who had died excommunicated be exhumed from the cemetery of the monastery and removed altogether from the monastery. They also decreed that the parts of the parishes of Saint James and Saint Justa which had been divided by royal command without the authority of the Church and added to the chapel of Saint John were to be reduced to the state of their first integrity, and that the chapel of Saint John, so far as pertains to parochial right, was to be subjected to the jurisdiction of the church of Coimbra. They judged that the portion from the goods of the deceased was, according to the custom of the land, to be restored to those churches from which the living had received the ecclesiastical sacraments. They further judged that the vineyard which formerly Dominic Rozocida had held as a prestimony from the church of Coimbra and had conferred upon the monastery of Santa Cruz was to be recalled to the right of the church of Coimbra, and that the church of Coimbra itself was to be restored to the right of possession—to which, as had been proved by witnesses, the canons of Santa Cruz had been accustomed to go every Sunday. They similarly decreed that for the houses of the New Gate, in which the church of Coimbra formerly had parochial right, the monastery of Santa Cruz should compensate it with as much right in another suitable place as the church of Coimbra had lost in the aforesaid houses. But they took care to adjudge to the monastery itself the church de Quiaios, which the aforesaid M., Bishop of Coimbra, had granted to the monastery of Santa Cruz with the assent of his canons. They decreed that the portion of the town de Pavea—although it had been purchased in the name of the church of Coimbra from the money of M., formerly its prior, and afterward left to the same church by testament—was to be restored to the monastery, with the right of ownership of the church of Coimbra preserved, because you nevertheless occupied the monastery while it possessed that portion. But the remaining portion of the town itself, which Pelagius F. had formerly conferred upon the monastery of Santa Cruz, they adjudged to the monastery itself by full right. Furthermore, they judged that three farmsteads in Saint Ioanninus were to be restored to the monastery, with the question of ownership of the church of Coimbra preserved, absolving the monastery from the claim for twelve measures of wheat which you had sought.] > Ecclesia, utens duplici privilegio exemptionis, licet succumbat ex uno potest nihilominus ex alio se iuvare et obtinere; nec tenetur exemptus promittere obedientiam dioecesano; vigore tamen exemptionis non potest sine licentia dioecesani ecclesiam construere in loco non exempto; et, si exemptus de facto in loco non exempto construit ecclesiam, cedit iuri episcopi. Idem Colubriensi Episcopo.

Quum olim ad apostolicam sedem accessisses, et propter quaestiones, quas adversus dilectos filios priorem et canonicos monasterii sanctae Crucis habebas, pro quibus ad audientiam nostram fuerat appellatum, moram feceris longiorem: quia pro parte altera nullus comparuit responsalis, eisdem certum terminum duximus praefigendum, in quo venirent vel mitterent super privilegiis omnibus et libertatibus, quae a Romanis Pontificibus vel ab M. quondam Colubriensi episcopo se habere dicebant, et super aliis quaestionibus, adversus eos a Colubriensi ecclesia intentatis, diffinitivam sententiam recepturi. Ut autem veritas facilius appareret, authentica et originalia cum bullis suis nobis usque ad eundem terminum sub eadem districtione praecepimus exhiberi; Interim autem utrique parti liceret coram dilectis filiis tuis de Alcobacia et de Serra abbatibus, et F. Menende monacho Alcobaciae, quibus sub certa forma causa prius fuerat delegata, et testes utrinque producti, proponere ac probare, si quid aliud proponendum duceret ac probandum. + [Praedictum autem terminum eis peremptorium curavimus assignare, ad quem si venire vel mittere forte contemnerent, nos nihilominus, quantum possemus de iure in eodem negotio procedere curaremus. Eisdem quoque iudicibus dedimus in mandatis, ut, si de partium voluntate procederent, receptis aliis testibus, si quos super privilegiis, libertatibus et aliis articulis, ducerent producendos, usque ad definitivam sententiam producentes, gesta omnia sub sigillis suis ad sedem apostolicam destinarent. Quumque postmodum ad sedem apostolicam accessisses, supervenerunt duo canonici S. Crucis, qui nec litteras habebant de rato, nec procuratores ad hanc causam fuerant destinati. Unde, nos, partem S. Crucis contumacem reputantes, ut erat, utpote quae non idoneos responsales ad causam, sed ad nos qualesquales nuntios destinarant, attestationes receptas a iudicibus delegatis iussimus aperiri, ut tandem, si nobis de meritis causae liqueret, sententiam proferremus. Verum, tu, animum carissimi in Christo filii nostri … Portugallensis regis illustris, qui contra te fuerat ex hoc motus, placatum reddere tibi volens, convenisti cum praedictis canonicis in hac forma, ut videlicet venerabili fratri nostro … Zamorensi episcopo, et dilectis filiis … Zamorensi et Auriensi decanis, tam super principali quam incidenti sublato appellationis obstaculo, causa committeretur eadem terminanda, sic tamen, ut pars Sanctae Crucis infra quadraginta dies post susceptionem literarum nostrarum, super articulis illis, in quibus tu in eius absentia produxeras testes tuos, instrumenta producere posset et testes. Aliter autem, non liceret eisdem attestationes calumniari receptas vel excipere, quasi fuisset in hac causa, lite non contestata processum. Nos ergo, dictis episcopo et decanis praecipiendo dedimus in mandatis, ut si pars Sanctae Crucis ratum vellet habere quod a dictis canonicis erat actum, receptis testibus et instrumentis ipsius super capitulis supradictis, si tamen infra quadraginta dies post susceptionem literarum nostrarum ea ducerent exhibenda, et tuis attestationibus publicatis secundum formam praedictam, in causam procederent, et eam, appellatione postposita, fine debito terminarent. Quod si forsan ratum nollent habere quod a praedictis canonicis erat actum quum eorum contumacia non intelligeretur purgata, sed aucta, in eos tanquam in contumaces procederent et receptis attestationibus diligenter inspectis, causam ipsam, appellatione remota, deciderent, et sententiam quam ferrent exsecutioni mandarent. Quia vero causa haec extra regnum erat Portugallense tractanda, partibus primo competentem terminum sub edicto curarent peremptorio assignare, ne propter remotionem locorum et distantiam personarum laborare diutius cogereris. Quod si partem S. Crucis per alios citare non possent, canonicos eius in regno Legionensi manentes, ad citationis ei literas praesentandas, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam, appellatione remota, compellere procurarent; nullis literis veritati et iustitiae praeiudicantibus, si quae apparerent a sede apostolica impetratae. Quod si non omnes iis exsequendis interesse valerent, episcopus nihilominus exsequeretur ea cum altero aliorum. Partibus ad certum terminum convocatis, et convenientibus ad eundem, praedicti episcopus et decanus Zamorenses, quoniam Auriensis decanus non poterat interesse, a priore S. Crucis quaerere curaverunt, an ratum haberet quod fuerat a canonicis suis actum; quibus fuit ex ipsius parte responsum, quod locus interrogationi non erat, quum paratus esset in continenti probare, rescriptum nostrum per precum mendacia impetratum. Nam, quum Colimbrensis decanus ad praedictos de Seira abbatem et dilectum filium P. Froildiz, monachum Alcobatiae, contra monasterium Sanctae Crucis undecim commissionum literis reportasset, licet pars ecclesiae Sanctae Crucis primo inducias obtinuerit postulatas, quia secundo tamen non potuit pro singulis commissionibus singulas inducias obtinere, quamvis appellatio esset literis nostris inhibita, propter hoc tamen ad nostram audientiam appellavit. Tandem vero, pars ipsa et Colimbriensis decanus in praedictum regem Portugallensem … de Costa, et … de Rimaran. priores, et praedictos iudices compromittere curaverunt, duobus cautis pene nomine obligatis utrinque; sicque prior appellationi renuntiavit cum assensu suorum literis nostris renuntiante decano. Utrinque praeterea duodecim canonici iuraverunt super toto negotio perhibere testimonium veritati. Receptis igitur testibus et depositionibus eorum redactis in scriptum, rex noluit interesse, sed commisit praedictis ... de Costa et de Rimaranes prioribus vices suas et proposuit partibus ut per Romanam ecclesiam vel per alios prosequerentur ius suum, quoniam ad eum causa huiusmodi non spectabat. Tu vero, coram praedictis episcopo et decano Zamorensibus proponebas, nec renuntiationem Colimbriensis decani, qui non ad renuntiandum sed agendum potius datus fuerat procurator, nec compromissum etiam tenuisse, tum quia iudices esse arbitri non debebant, tum quoniam de rebus ecclesiasticis fuerat in laicum compromissum, tum etiam quia idem sibi alios subrogavit, quum de hoc in compromissione tractatum penitus non fuisset. Verum, pars S. Crucis proposuit ex adverso, quod tenuerat compromissum, quia nos pronuntiasse posse agi de ipsius poena dicebat, adiiciens ratam te renuntiationem habuisse decani, et quod, hoc suppresso, praedictas literas impetratas, quas non potuisses aliquatenus obtinere, si super hoc nobis exposuisses plenius veritatem. Et licet pars eadem quatuor testes induxerit, qui simpliciter et absolute dixerunt, ratum te habuisse quod factum fuerat a decano, sex tamen testes, quos tu induxeras, deponere curaverunt huiusmodi rati habitionem te non simpliciter sed conditionaliter expressisse si videlicet secundum attestationes confectas negotium finiretur. Ceterum, Ioannes Caesar, canonicus Sanctae Crucis, fuerat testis inductus, et Michael Petri et alii, quos tu induxeras, deposuere, iurati, quod nos omnem huius negotii veritatem feceramus per primos iudices delegatos inquiri, et ad nos universa referri, sicque pronuntiaveramus, omnibus diligenter inspectis, non impediri tuum propositum per obiecta. Idem quoque Ioannes, et Michael Petri, utrum renuntiationem decani ratum habueris requisiti, dixerunt, se de hoc penitus nihil scire; sed contra hos fuit ex parte Sanctae Crucis obiectum, eos sibi contrarios exstitisse, quum prius dixissent se nobis totam veritatem negotii retulisse ac secundo quod de rati habitione, quae erat quasi praecipua pars huius negotii, non fecerant mentionem. Tu vero dicebas, quod testi, quem pars Sanctae Crucis induxerat, credendum erat merito contra eam. Iudices igitur, attendentes in literis nostris appellationem fuisse prohibitam, nec exstitisse conditionem, sub qua ratum habere te dixeras, quod factum fuerat a decano, et quod nos inspecta totius negotii veritate, pronunciaveramus, causam tuam non debere per ea, quae canonici Sanctae Crucis obiecerant, impediri, considerantes etiam, quod pars Sanctae Crucis praedictum Ioannem, quem ipsa produxerat, et qui iudices ipsos super iis, quae coram nobis acta fuerant, instruebat, plenius reprobasset, interlocuti sunt de prudenti consilio, processum negotii, quod eis fuerat delegatum, impediri de iure non posse occasione oppositae falsitatis. Deinde, quum vellent in principali procedere, prior Sanctae Crucis multiplices recusationum causas opposuit, quas quia iudices frivolas reputantes admittere noluerunt, prior, omni causae suae defensione neglecta, se contumaciter absentavit; sed et nos recusationes praedictas ea postmodum ratione invalidas reputavimus, quod contumacia partis Sanctae Crucis non fuit diminuta sed aucta.] Iudices autem sufficienter actum esse de causa credentes, attestationibus et rationibus utriusque partis diligenter inspectis, monasterium sanctae Crucis in expensis, quas per quadriennium occasione huiusmodi negotii iuraveras te fecisse, et quae quinquaginta marcarum auri summam attingunt, tibi de prudentum consilio damnarunt, infirmantes sua sententia libertatem, quam dictus M. Colubriensis episcopus in enorme detrimentum Colubriensis ecclesiae contulerat monasterio S. Crucis, canonicorum assensu per praeconem episcopi et portarium regis extorto. Praeterea, quia idem M. praedecessor tuus fuerat canonicus regularis, et duo millia Marabatinorum, quae acquisierat in episcopum iam promotus, monasterio dederat memorato, [monasterium] ipsum ad restitutionem eorum iudices condemnarunt. Insuper tam decimas quam ecclesiae omnes, quas de manu regis vel aliorum, laicorum sive clericorum, monasterium praeter episcopi Colubriensis assensum receperat, et quas in Latren. vel aliis locis, in attestationibus comprehensis, propria auctoritate fundarat, [scilicet capellam Sancti Ioannis in suburbio Colimbriensi constructam, ecclesiam de Toaveiro de Laurizal, de Mira, de Sorenes, Sancti Facundi, Heremidam Sancti Martini de Agoacla, ecclesiam de Mortedi, de Travancha, Sanctae Marinae in Sena, Sancti Romani cum utroque iure, ecclesiam Sancti Sebastiani, et omnes ecclesias in castro Seirene et terminis eius fundatas, hereditates quoque in attestationibus comprehensas proprietatis iure, videlicet hereditates de Lavaes cum ecclesia sua de Buarchos, de Cassaira, de Eimedi, de Sancto Verissimo, de Cabima,] quia pars sanctae Crucis nec praescriptione, nec defensione alia probationibus contra se factis obstiterat, iudicarunt in ius Colubriensis ecclesiae cum fructibus medii temporis revocari, [duo corpora mortuorum, qui excommunicati decesserant, de coemeterio monasterii extumulari mandantes, et a monasterio penitus amoveri. Decreverunt etiam partes parochiarum Sancti Iacobi, et S. Iustae, quae de mandato regio praeter auctoritatem ecclesiae divisae fuerant et capellae Sancti Ioannis adiectae, ad statum integritatis primae reduci, et capellam Sancti Ioannis quantum ad ius parochiale pertinet Colimbriensis ecclesiae iurisdictioni supponi, partem de bonis decedentium, secundum terrae consuetudinem, ecclesiis illis restituendam esse censentes, a quibus viventes ecclesiastica perceperunt sacramenta. Iudicarunt insuper vineam, quam quondam Dominicus Rozocida in praestimonio ab ecclesia Colimbriensi tenuerat, et contulerat monasterio Sanctae Crucis, ad ius Colimbriensis ecclesiae revocari, ipsamque Colimbriensem ecclesiam ad ius possessionis restitui, ad quam, sicut fuerat testibus comprobatum, singulis diebus Dominicis ire consueverant canonici Sanctae Crucis, similiter decernentes, ut pro domibus Portae Novae, in quibus olim parochiale ius ecclesia Colimbriensis habebat, monasterium Sanctae Crucis tantumdem iuris loco alio competenti, quantum in praedictis domibus ecclesia Colimbriensis amiserat, recompenset. Verum, ecclesiam de Quiaios, quam praedictus M. Colimbriensis episcopus, de canonicorum suorum assensu concesserat monasterio Sanctae Crucis, monasterio ipsi adiudicare curarunt. Partem de Pavea villa, licet nomine Colimbriensis ecclesiae de pecunia M. quondam prioris ipsius, empta fuerit, et postmodum eidem testamento relicta, quia tu tamen, quum ipsam possideret, monasterium occupasti, salvo iure proprietatis Colimbriensis ecclesiae, monasterio restitui decernentes, reliquam vero partem villae ipsius, quam Pelagius F. olim contulerat monasterio S. Crucis, adiudicantes ipsi monasterio pleno iure; praeterea, tres casales in Sancto Ioannino, salva quaestione proprietatis ecclesiae Colimbriensis, monasterio restitui censuerant ipsum a petitione duodecim modiorum frumenti, quos petiveras, absolventes.]

Finally, when you and the other party had come on account of this to the Apostolic See, the proctor of the monastery of Santa Cruz alleged that the sentence was neither valid nor binding. Even if the aforesaid sentence were otherwise binding, nevertheless, because the monastery had been undefended, as the judges themselves protested through their letters, and the privileges of liberty had not been exhibited before them, lest the offense of a person redound to the damage of the church, it ought to be admitted to the exhibition of its privileges; which it petitioned should be granted to it from the accustomed kindness of the Apostolic See. We, therefore, attending that the same privileges not only supported the liberty of the monastery but also expressed our right and defended the justice of the Roman Church, lest the injury of the monastery redound against us, determined that its party was to be admitted by grace to exhibit the privileges. But so that we might understand more fully the truth concerning the judges' proceedings, we commanded that all the acts, just as they had been done, be exhibited to us by both sides before us. [The proctor of the monastery therefore alleged that the aforesaid M., Bishop of Coimbra, had granted to the monastery of Santa Cruz, with its parishes, parishioners, and confraternity members, full liberty from every episcopal right and exaction; that he had reduced his grant to writing; and that he had strengthened it by the subscriptions of the canons of Coimbra, since they had furnished assent to this. Even if a grant of this kind had perhaps been invalid of itself, nevertheless through the confirmation of Pope A. of happy memory, our predecessor—who had confirmed it by his privilege from certain knowledge to such an extent that he not only expressed its tenor but used its words—it had obtained the strength of perpetual firmness, since Celestine afterward imitated him concerning this and confirmed that grant just as he had confirmed it. But on your behalf it was answered to this that the aforesaid grant was not binding: both because the said bishop could not with effect burden his church so enormously; and because the assent of the canons had been surreptitiously obtained through the frauds of him who, in order to draw them more easily to his assent, asserted that the monastery had always existed free, and had been extorted through the power both of him and of the king, since the king's porter threatened the canons with proscription of their property and the bishop's herald with exile. Moreover, the tenor of that grant could not be fully established, nor was credence to be given to the writing which the party of the monastery presented, since, according to what certain witnesses had deposed, the page of that grant which Michael made had been erased in several lines, and each of the canons who had subscribed had subscribed with his own hand; but in the writing which had been exhibited to us, no erasure whatever appeared and all the subscriptions had been written by the same hand. Nor did it harm your argument that the aforesaid Alexander, our predecessor, had confirmed a grant of this kind so as to use its words, because, although he was aware of the words, he was nevertheless ignorant of the facts, since he did not know that the assent of the canons had been extorted and that the page of the same grant had been altered. Moreover, the other party replied that, even if neither the grant of this kind nor its confirmation had been binding, the true and ancient liberty of the monastery could nevertheless be established through the privileges, since Pope Innocent of good memory, our predecessor, had received it into the guardianship and protection of blessed Peter and, when he declares it tributary, adds: "But as a token of this liberty received from the Roman Church, it shall pay two bezants each year to us and our successors." Lucius, Eugenius, and Adrian of happy memory expressed this in their privileges, although the authentic instruments of Lucius and Eugenius were not presented to us. But against this you, brother bishop, alleged that our said predecessors had granted no liberty whatever to the aforesaid monastery, but had only received it under protection, no mention of liberty having been made except where it is said: "But as a token of this liberty received from the Apostolic See"; and that this could not harm your church if it were subtly weighed. For since the pronoun "this" demonstrates nothing there to the eye, but is known rather to make a demonstration to the understanding, lest the understanding be altogether foreign if it is not formed from the things above, the pronoun itself seems to make, as it were, a relative demonstration and to call the protection and confirmation of which mention is made in the preceding part "liberty," although a certain liberty is conferred together with confirmation: namely, that, according to the sentence of the aforesaid Alexander, no one may be sued concerning those things which have been confirmed to it by the Apostolic See except by the authority of the Apostolic See; and thus what is read in the privilege can be understood concerning liberty of this kind. That this ought to be the meaning is apparent from the privileges themselves, since Innocent both expresses that the reverence of the diocesan bishop is preserved and Lucius and Eugenius, after the protection had been granted and the confirmation of certain churches expressed, preserve his right for the diocesan bishop. Moreover, the other party alleged on the opposite side that, if the aforesaid Innocent had wished to call "protection" by the foreign word "liberty," he could have put "protection" where he put "liberty." Nor does what is alleged concerning the demonstrative pronoun harm its position, since in ancient times the Apostolic See received into special protection and its own guardianship only those churches which it regarded as special and its own. Whence, because both through the first chapter, where the monastery is received into the guardianship and protection of blessed Peter, and through certain other things that follow, liberty is known to have been granted to the monastery itself, the demonstrative pronoun points to the understanding of that liberty, better understood than expressed. For far be it that the Apostolic See should be believed to have wished to circumvent the monastery by receiving a census from it under the name of liberty while granting it either no liberty or a half-full liberty, as was alleged on the other side. Nor does it obstruct, but rather supports, its position that the often-mentioned Innocent willed the reverence of the diocesan bishop to be preserved, since from the fact that he expressly reserved reverence to him, it is understood that he denied the other things. But he wished reverence to be exhibited to him in this: that, as the Roman Pontiffs who succeeded him, wishing to interpret what had been obscurely stated, expressed in their privileges, the canons of Santa Cruz should receive chrism, holy oil, consecrations of altars, and certain other things expressed in the same privileges from the diocesan bishop, if he were catholic, possessed the grace and communion of the Apostolic See, and wished to furnish them gratis and without any depravity. Nor does it similarly harm their position if Lucius and Eugenius, after enumerating certain churches, said that the right of the diocesan bishop was preserved, since they did not understand this concerning the head but concerning the members, just as Adrian also reserved canonical justice to the diocesan bishops. This could not be understood concerning the head, since it is established that none of the churches has several diocesan bishops. But Alexander and his successors, so that they might altogether remove the scruple of doubt concerning this, made mention only of the authority of the Apostolic See. Moreover, if neither so many nor such great things sufficed, prescription alone protected the church of Santa Cruz. We therefore, having heard and understood these and the other things alleged on both sides,] accordingly distinguishing between the liberty granted to the church itself by the aforesaid bishop and the liberty which the Apostolic See granted to it long before the time of that bishop, as is apparent from the aforesaid privileges, because it was evidently established to us that the assent of the canons had been extorted in the bishop's grant, that the page of the grant had erasures in several lines, and that the individual subscriptions had been written by the individual hands of those subscribing, but that the writing which had been exhibited to us neither displayed an erasure nor was varied by diverse hands in the subscriptions, but rather had been written from first to last by the same hand, we decree invalid and void the liberty granted by the bishop himself through extortion, confirming on this point the sentence of the delegated judges. But because we clearly recognized from the privileges that our aforesaid predecessors had granted a privilege of liberty to the church of Santa Cruz, and that it had been in possession of that liberty for so long that, even if other grounds ceased, it would have prescribed, we confirm by apostolic authority the liberty granted to it by our predecessors, imposing silence upon you concerning this. But on this point we derogate in nothing from the sentence of the delegated judges, since they did not take cognizance of this liberty.

[After these things, however, the proctor of the church of Santa Cruz alleged before us that, when the ... Duke of Portugal of illustrious memory had granted to that church all the churches which either had already been founded or were to be founded in the future in the castle of Leiren and its territory, and all ecclesiastical rights, a public instrument having been drawn up concerning this which he said was called a "testament" by the customary word of the land, and both the Archbishop of Braga, metropolitan of the province, and the Bishop of Coimbra had subscribed a grant of this kind, the delegated judges, without inspecting the privileges of Santa Cruz, although the cause had not been specially delegated to them concerning the same churches, pronounced an unjust sentence against the church of Santa Cruz. And although the Bishop of Coimbra, as diocesan, subscribed the aforesaid grant because at that time the Saracens held the city of Lisbon, to whose diocese the churches are known to pertain, nevertheless, when that city had afterward been restored to the Christians through the industry of the duke himself, the Bishop of Lisbon, as true diocesan, confirmed by his own privilege the donation of the ... duke. Pope Adrian, diligently attending to this, determined that all the churches situated both in the castle of Leiren and in its territory, with all things pertaining to them, just as the charter of the duke himself and the confirmation of the aforesaid bishop contained, were to be confirmed to the church of Santa Cruz by his privilege. But on your behalf it was alleged on the other side that the duke's grant was not binding, since a layman did not possess the power to confer ecclesiastical rights, and especially spiritual ones. Nor is it valid that the Archbishop of Braga and Bishop of Coimbra are said to have subscribed in the duke's charter, since neither was the charter itself drawn up by a public hand nor do their seals hang from it, for which reason it altogether forfeits credit. Nor does it harm your position that the aforesaid Pope Adrian confirmed to the church of Santa Cruz the aforesaid churches with their appurtenances according to what is contained in the charter of the duke himself and the confirmation of the Bishop of Lisbon, since he believed that the duke himself granted the right of patronage and the temporal things, and the bishop, as diocesan, the spiritual right. But it is established from the confession of the other party and from the tenor of the privileges of the aforesaid Alexander and Celestine, our predecessors, that the aforesaid churches pertain to the diocese of Coimbra, since, after they and certain others are enumerated in their privileges, it is added that they all lie in the episcopate of Coimbra. Whence, since the other party used those privileges in its own favor and also procured them, it neither ought nor was able to disapprove them in this matter. Therefore, Adrian's privilege had not conferred a new right upon the monastery but had confirmed one possessed; whence the grant of the duke himself, which had previously been invalid, had not received validity from his confirmation. But against these things, the other party replied that the church of Santa Cruz had possessed those churches and the church of Saint John situated in the suburb of the city of Coimbra for so long that it was able to defend itself by legitimate prescription, since even from the time when Adrian had confirmed those churches to it and when they could possess them in good faith, until the time when the suit was joined, forty years and several months had elapsed. Therefore, after everything had been diligently inspected, it was established to us also from the form of the sentence of the aforesaid judges that the monastery of Santa Cruz had obtained possession of the aforesaid churches in the time of the often-mentioned duke, since the judges commanded that all the churches which the monastery had received from the hand of the king be recalled to the right of the church of Coimbra, and receipt is known to pertain to possession. It was also established from the form of your petition, since you petitioned that they be restored to you, that the monastery still possessed those same churches. It was similarly established that it possessed them in the intervening time and that, from the time of the aforesaid Adrian, who had confirmed them to it, a space of forty years had elapsed at the time the suit was moved. And although the other party asserted in judgment before us that G. of good memory, Cardinal Deacon of Saint Angelus and then legate of the Apostolic See, had imposed silence upon you concerning all these matters, and thus it might seem that the suit had been joined before him, nevertheless from the depositions of the witnesses the truth was fully disclosed to us: namely, that neither had the suit been joined nor a sentence promulgated, since, after inspecting the privileges of the Roman Pontiffs, he was unwilling to hear you concerning these things. Therefore, since it is established that long before forty years, and afterward during the intervening time, the monastery of Santa Cruz possessed the aforesaid churches, and now also possesses them, and no interruption is proved on the other side, on the counsel of our brothers we adjudge both the aforesaid churches of Leiren and the church of Saint John of Coimbra to the monastery of Santa Cruz, imposing silence upon you concerning them. In this also we do not derogate from the delegated judges, since Adrian's privilege, by whose authority the canons of Santa Cruz could believe themselves possessors in good faith, was not exhibited before them, nor were the other instruments. But concerning the fact that they condemned the same church to pay you, in the name of expenses, fifty marks of gold and two thousand gold coins which the often-mentioned M., Bishop of Coimbra, had conferred upon the church of Santa Cruz, by the will of the parties we took care so to moderate their sentence that the monastery is bound to pay you twenty of the fifty marks of gold and one thousand of the two thousand gold coins.]

And since we confirm the liberty granted to the monastery by our predecessors, we decree that the monastery is not bound to the right of profession, which is contrary to liberty, not derogating from the delegated judges, to whom the privileges of liberty had not been presented. Moreover, concerning the fact that the same judges decreed that for the houses of the New Gate, in which the church of Coimbra had possessed parochial right, the monastery should compensate it in another suitable place with as much as it had lost in the aforesaid houses, we wholly correct the sentence which they rendered, judging that the monastery is not bound to this. But in other matters we confirm by apostolic authority the sentence rendered by the aforesaid judges both for the church of Coimbra and for the monastery of Santa Cruz. [Therefore, let no one, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the sixth day before the Kalends of July, 1203.]

> Tandem vero, quum tu et pars altera propter hoc ad sedem apostolicam venissetis, procurator monasterii sanctae Crucis proposuit, sententiam non valere nec tenere. Quodsi alias etiam sententia memorata teneret, quia tamen monasterium fuit indefensum, sicut ipsi iudices per suas literas protestarunt, nec exhibita fuerant coram eis privilegia libertatis, ne delictum personae in damnum ecclesiae redundaret, debebat ad exhibitionem privilegiorum suorum admitti, quod sibi concedi de solita benignitate sedis apostolicae postulavit. Nos igitur attendentes, quod eadem privilegia non solummodo pro libertate monasterii faciebant, sed etiam exprimebant ius nostrum et ecclesiae Romanae iustitiam tuebantur, ne in nos monasterii laesio redundaret, ad privilegia exhibenda partem eius de gratia duximus admittendam. + *Ut autem plenius de processu iudicum possemus intelligere veritatem: gesta omnia, sicut acta fuerant coram nobis, utrimque nobis iussimus exhiberi. *[Proposuit igitur monasterii procurator, quod praedictus M. Colimbriensis episcopus, monasterio Sanctae Crucis cum parochiis, parochianis et confratribus suis, ab omni episcopali iure et exactione plenam concesserat libertatem et concessionem suam in scriptis redegerat, et Colimbriensium canonicorum, quoniam in hoc assensum praestiterant, subscriptionibus roborarat. Quod si huiusmodi concessio per se forsan fuisset invalida per confirmationem tamen felicis recordationis A. papae, praedecessoris nostri, qui eam per privilegium suum usque adeo ex certa scientia confirmarat, ut non solum tenorem eius expresserit, sed usus fuerit verbis eius, robur sortita fuerat perpetuae firmitatis, quum Coelestinus eum super hoc postmodum fuerit imitatus, et concessionem illam, sicut ille confirmaverat, confirmavit. Verum, ad hoc fuit ex tua parte responsum, quod praedicta concessio non tenebat, tum quia dictus episcopus non potuerat ecclesiam suam tam enormiter cum effectu gravare, tum quia canonicorum assensus per fraudes eius, qui, ut eos ad consensum suum facilius traheret, asserebat monasterium semper liberum exstitisse, subreptus fuerat, et per potentiam tam eius quam regis extortus quum portarius regis proscriptionem rerum, et episcopi praeco exsilium canonicis minaretur. Insuper, non plene poterat de concessionis illius tenore constare, nec erat illi scripto credendum, quod pars monasterii praesentabat, quum, iuxta quod deposuerant quidam testes, pagina concessionis illius, quam Michael fecerat, in aliquot lineis fuisset abrasa, et singuli canonicorum, qui subscripserant manu propria subscripsissent; in scripto autem quod fuerat nobis exhibitum, nulla rasura penitus appareret, et universae subscriptiones eadem essent manu conscriptae. Nec nocebat quod praedictus Alexander, praedecessor noster, concessionem huiusmodi confirmarat, ut usus fuerat verbis eius, quoniam, etsi verborum conscius fuerit, erat tamen factorum ignarus, utpote qui non noverat extortum fuisse canonicorum assensum, et concessionem eiusdem paginam variatam. Ceterum, pars altera replicavit, quod si nec concessio huiusmodi nec confirmatio tenuisset, poterat tamen per privilegia de vera et vetere monasterii libertate constare, quum bonae memoriae Innocentius papa praedecessor noster illud in B. Petri tutelam protectionemque susceperit, et, quum illud exprimit censuale subiungat: ad iudicium autem perceptae huius a Romana ecclesia libertatis, duos bizantios annis singulis nobis nostrisque successoribus persolvat. Hoc autem felicis recordationis Lucius, Eugenius et Adrianus suis privilegiis expresserunt, licet Lucii et Eugenii nobis non fuerint authentica praesentata. Contra hoc autem, tu frater episcope, proponebas, quod dicti praedecessores nostri nullam penitus praedicto monasterio concesserant libertatem, sed illud tantum sub protectione receperant, de libertate non habita mentione, nisi ubi dicitur: ad indicium autem perceptae huius a sede apostolica libertatis; quod ecclesiae tuae nocere non poterat, si subtiliter pensaretur. Quum enim hoc pronomen "huius" ibi ad oculum nihil demonstret, sed ad intellectum potius demonstrationem facere dignoscatur, ne peregrinus sit penitus intellectus, si a superioribus non formetur, videtur pronomen ipsum demonstrationem quasi facere relativam, ac protectionem et confirmationem, de quibus in parte superiori fit mentio, nominet libertatem, quamvis libertas quaedam cum confirmatione pariter conferatur, ut videlicet, iuxta praedicti Alexandri sententiam, praeter auctoritatem apostolicae sedis super illis non possit aliquis conveniri, quae ipsi fuerint per sedem apostolicam confirmata, sicque quod in privilegio legitur, intelligi possit de huiusmodi libertate. Quod autem is debebat esse sensus, ex privilegiis ipsis patet, quum et Innocentius dioecesani episcopi reverentiam exprimat esse salvam, et Lucius et Eugenius post protectionem indultam et confirmationem quarundam ecclesiarum expressam, ius suum episcopo dioecesano conservent. Porro, pars altera proposuit ex adverso, quod si praedictus Innocentius "protectionem" nominare voluisset peregrino vocabulo "libertatem," ubi "libertatis" posuit, "protectionis" ponere potuisset. Nec nocet quod de pronomine demonstrativo proponitur, quum antiquitus illas duntaxat ecclesias in specialem protectionem, propriamque tutelam apostolica sedes reciperet, quas speciales et proprias reputabat. Unde, quum tam per primum capitulum, ubi monasterium in B. Petri tutela protectioneque suscipitur, quam per quaedam alia quae sequuntur, libertas monasterio ipsi noscatur indulta, libertatem ipsam, intellectam melius, quam expressam, ad intellectum pronomen demonstrativum ostendit. Absit enim, ut apostolica sedes voluisse monasterium circumvenire credatur, ut censum ab eo sub nomine libertatis reciperet, et libertatem ei vel nullam, vel semiplenam, ut est ex adverso propositum, indulgeret. Nec obest, sed prodest potius, quod saepedictus Innocentius dioecesani episcopi reverentiam voluit esse salvam, quum ex eo quod expresse ipsi reverentiam reservavit, intelligatur, cetera denegasse. In hoc autem reverentiam ei voluit exhiberi, ut sicut successores illius Romani pontifices, quod obscure dictum fuerat, interpretari volentes, in suis privilegiis expresserunt, chrisma, oleum sanctum, consecrationes altarium, et quaedam alia in privilegiis eisdem expressa, canonici S. Crucis ab episcopo dioecesano suscipiant, si catholicus fuerit, et gratiam atque communionem apostolicae sedis habuerit, et ea gratis, et absque ulla pravitate voluerit exhibere. Nec nocet similiter, si Lucius et Eugenius, connumeratis quibusdam ecclesiis, ius dioecesani episcopi dixerint esse salvum, quum hoc non intellexerint de capite, sed de membris, sicut et Adrianus dioecesanis episcopis canonicam iustitiam reservavit, quod intelligi de capite non valeret, quum constet nullam ecclesiarum plures episcopos dioecesanos habere. Alexander autem, et successores ipsius, ut penitus super hoc dubitationis scrupulum amoverent, non fecerunt, nisi de auctoritate sedis apostolicae, mentionem. Ceterum, si nec tot, et tanta sufficerent, sola praescriptio Sanctae Crucis ecclesiam tuebatur. Nos igitur, iis et aliis auditis et intellectis quae fuerunt hinc inde proposita,] Distinguentes itaque inter libertatem, per praedictum episcopum ecclesiae ipsi concessam, et libertatem, quam ei longe ante tempus ipsius episcopi apostolica sedes indulsit, sicut patet ex privilegiis ante dictis, quia nobis constitit evidenter, extortum fuisse in episcopi concessione canonicorum assensum, et concessionis paginam in aliquot lineis habuisse rasuras, et subscriptiones singulas fuisse singulis subscribentium manibus adnotatas, scriptum autem, quod nobis exhibitum fuerat, nec rasuram praetendere, nec esse variis subscriptionum manibus variatum, sed a primo ad ultimum eadem potius manu conscriptum, libertatem, ab ipso episcopo concessam per extorsionem, irritam decernimus et inanem, super hoc sententiam delegatorum iudicum confirmantes. Quia vero evidenter agnovimus ex privilegiis, ante dictos praedecessores nostros ecclesiae sanctae Crucis libertatis privilegium indulsisse, et quod in ea possessione tamdiu fuerat libertatis, quod aliis etiam cessantibus praescripsisset: libertatem ei a praedecessoribus nostris indultam auctoritate apostolica confirmamus, tibi super hoc silentium imponentes. Super hoc autem in nullo sententiae delegatorum iudicum derogamus, quum ipsi de hac non cognoverint libertate. + [Post haec vero, procurator ecclesiae Sanctae Crucis proposuit coram nobis, quod quum inclytae recordationis ... dux Portugallensis, universas ecclesias, quae vel fundatae iam erant, vel fundandae in posterum in castro Leiren, ac eius territorio, et universa iura ecclesiastica eidem ecclesiae concessisset, confecto super hoc publico instrumento, quod ipse dicebat usitato terrae vocabulo testamentum, et tam Bracarensis archiepiscopus, metropolitanus provinciae, quam Colimbriensis episcopus, concessioni huiusmodi subscripsisset, delegati iudices, non inspectis privilegiis S. Crucis, licet super eisdem ecclesiis eis causa non fuerit specialiter delegata, contra ecclesiam S. Crucis iniquam sententiam protulerunt. Et licet Colimbriensis episcopus, ut dioecesanus subscripserit concessioni praedictae, quia Ulixbonensem civitatem, ad cuius dioecesim pertinere noscuntur, detinebant tunc temporis Saraceni, ea tamen per industriam ducis ipsius reddita quondam Christianis, Ulixbonensis episcopus, velut verus dioecesanus, donationem ... ducis privilegio proprio confirmavit; quod praedictus Adrianus papa diligenter attendens, omnes ecclesias tam in castro Leiren, quam territorio eius sitas, cum omnibus pertinentiis ad easdem, sicut charta ducis ipsius et praedicti episcopi confirmatio continebant, ecclesiae S. Crucis suo duxit privilegio confirmandas. Verum, pro parte tua fuit propositum ex adverso, quod concessio ducis non tenuit, quum laicus ecclesiastica iura et praesertim spiritualia, conferendi non habuerit potestatem. Nec valet quod Bracharensis archiepiscopus et episcopus Colimbriensis in ducis charta subscripsisse dicuntur, quum nec charta ipsa publica sit manu confecta nec illorum sigilla dependant ex eadem, quare fidem penitus demeretur. Nec nocet etiam, quod praedictus Adrianus papa praedictas ecclesias cum pertinentiis suis, iuxta quod in charta ducis ipsius et confirmatione Ulixbonensis episcopi continetur, confirmavit ecclesiae S. Crucis, quum crediderit, ducem ipsum ius patronatus et temporalia, et episcopum, tanquam dioecesanum, spirituale concessisse. Constat autem ex confessione partis alterius et ex tenore privilegiorum praedictorum Alexandri et Coelestini, praedecessorum nostrorum, praedictas ecclesias ad Colimbriensem dioecesim pertinere, quum eis et quibusdam aliis numeratis in eorum privilegiis subiungatur, quae omnes in episcopatu Colimbriensi consistunt. Unde quum pars altera pro se iis privilegiis uteretur, et illa etiam impetravit, ea nec debebat in hoc, nec poterat reprobare. Propterea, privilegium Adriani novum ius non contulerat monasterio, sed habitum confirmarat; unde, concessio ducis ipsius, quae prius erat invalida, non susceperat ex ipsius confirmatione valorem. Adversus haec autem, pars altera replicavit, quod tandiu ecclesias ipsas et ecclesiam S. Ioannis positam in civitatis Colimbriensis suburbio possederat ecclesia S. Crucis, quod praescriptione legitima poterat se tueri, quum etiam ex illo tempore, quo Adrianus easdem ei ecclesias confirmarat, et quo ipsi bona fide illas potuerant possidere, usque ad tempus litis conceptae, fuissent quadraginta anni et aliquot menses elapsi. Constitit ergo nobis omnibus diligenter inspectis, ex forma quoque sententiae iudicum praedictorum, quod monasterium S. Crucis, saepedicti ducis tempore, praedictarum ecclesiarum fuerat possessionem adeptum, quum ipse omnes ecclesias, quas monasterium de manu regis receperat, ad ius Colimbriensis ecclesiae praeceperit revocari, et receptio ad possessionem pertinere noscatur. Constitit etiam ex forma petitionis tuae, qui eas tibi restitui postulabas, ipsam adhuc easdem ecclesias possidere. Similiter quoque constitit, ipsam eas medio tempore possedisse, ac quod etiam a tempore praedicti Adriani, qui eas confirmarat eidem, spatium quadraginta annorum fuerat, tempore motae litis, elapsum, et licet asseruerit pars altera in iudicio coram nobis, bonae memoriae G. Sancti Angeli diaconum cardinalem, tunc apostolicae sedis legatum, tibi super his omnibus imposuisse silentium, sicque videretur quod lis contestata fuerit coram eo, tamen, tum ex depositionibus testium nobis plene fuit veritas patefacta, videlicet quod nec lis contestata fuisset, nec sententia promulgata, quum, inspectis privilegiis pontificum Romanorum, super his noluerit te audire. Quum ergo longe ante quadraginta annos, et postmodum medio tempore, monasterium S. Crucis praedictas constet ecclesias possedisse, ac nunc etiam possidere, nec ex adverso interruptio sit probata, tam praedictas ecclesias de Leiren, quam ecclesiam S. Ioannis Colimbriensis, de fratrum nostrorum consilio, adiudicamus monasterio S. Crucis, super eis tibi silentium imponentes. In hoc quoque non derogamus iudicibus delegatis, quum coram eis exhibitum non fuerit privilegium Adriani, cuius auctoritate canonici S. Crucis se credere potuerunt bonae fidei possessores, nec alia etiam instrumenta. Super eo vero, quod in quinquaginta marcis auri expensarum nomine, ac duobus millibus aureorum, quos saepe dictus M. Colimbriensis episcopus contulerat ecclesiae S. Crucis, tibi eandem ecclesiam condemnarunt, de voluntate partium eorum sententiam taliter curavimus moderari, ut de quinquaginta marcis auri, viginti, et de duorum millibus aureorum, mille monasterium tibi solvere teneatur.] Quumque libertatem, a praedecessoribus nostris indultam monasterio, confirmemus, ad ius professionis, quod est contrarium libertati, monasterium decernimus non teneri, non derogantes iudicibus delegatis, quibus libertatis privilegia non fuerant praesentata. Ceterum super eo, quod iidem iudices decreverunt, ut pro domibus portae novae, in quibus parochiale ius ecclesia Colubriensis habuerat, monasterium tantundem recompensaret eidem in loco alio competenti, quantum amiserat in domibus memoratis, omnino corrigimus sententiam, quam tulerunt, ad id censentes monasterium non teneri. In ceteris autem latam a praedictis iudicibus sententiam tam pro Colimbriensi ecclesia quam monasterio S. Crucis auctoritate apostolica confirmamus. [*Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Ferentini VI. Kal. Iul. *1203.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Prescription does not run against the privileges of a church in a period shorter than forty years. It says this according to the true understanding.

The same, to the Bishop and Master G. of Limoges.

When the beloved sons Master Zacharias, proctor of the abbot and convent of Nouaillé on the one side, and Brother Peter, proctor of the Templars of Tocen., on the other, came to our presence, we appointed our beloved son I., our subdeacon and chaplain, as auditor, before whom the proctor of the abbot and monks proposed that, since they had peacefully possessed the tithes of the lands of Sarcole for a long time before those lands came under the power and lordship of the Templars, and also, after the Templars acquired the aforesaid lands, had peacefully possessed the tithes from them for forty years and more, the Templars now do not fear to withhold those tithes from them, inflicting serious injuries upon them in other matters as well, [and that, although they had obtained our letters concerning these things and at one time the matter had been submitted by compromise to arbitrators, through the obstructing malice of the Templars they had been unable thus far to obtain their right. On the other side, however, the proctor of the Templars proposed that, since they were fortified by privileges of the Roman Pontiffs that they should not be bound to pay tithes from lands which they cultivate with their own hands or at their own expense, the aforesaid abbot and monks did not cease unduly to molest them concerning this, while proving exceedingly injurious to them in other matters. And when we had determined that the cause which is disputed between them and the aforesaid monks concerning those tithes was to be committed to our venerable brothers the Archbishop of Bourges and the Bishop of Clermont, while the question was being handled before them, certain monks, having associated with themselves a multitude of armed men and violently entered the Templars' lands, carried away from their crops according to the judgment of their own will, burning the remainder with fire.] Therefore, after these and the other things which were proposed before the aforesaid chaplain had been more fully understood, because full proof concerning them could not be made to us, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, after the truth has been more fully investigated, if the abbot and monks sufficiently show that they continuously received the tithes from the aforesaid lands from the Templars for forty years without litigation, you compel the Templars, appeal being set aside, to render those tithes. For since during so long a time they paid tithes contrary to the privileges granted to them, they are presumed tacitly to have renounced those privileges. But if they perhaps fail in their proof, absolve the Templars from their claim, imposing upon them, appeal being set aside, perpetual silence concerning this; concerning the other matters, however, hear what they may determine to propose on either side, and establish what shall be just, appeal being set aside, causing what you decree to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure. [Given at Ferentino, on the Kalends of July, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> Contra privilegia ecclesiae minori spatio quadraginta annorum non praescribitur. H. d. secundum verum intellectum.
>
> Idem Episcopo et Magistro G. Lemovicensibus.
>
> Accedentibus ad praesentiam nostram dilectis filiis magistro Zacharia abbatis et conventus Naugiacensis ex una parte, et fratre Petro Templariorum de Tocen. ex altera procuratoribus, dilectum filium I. subdiaconum et capellanum nostrum dedimus auditorem, coram quo procurator abbatis et monachorum proposuit, quod, quum decimas terrarum de Sarcole diu quiete possederint, antequam ad Templariorum potestatem et dominium pervenissent, et etiam postquam Templarii terras acquisiere praedictas, decimas earundem per XL. annos et amplius pacifice possedissent, nunc eis ipsas decimas subtrahere non verentur, in aliis eisdem graves iniurias irrogantes, [et licet super his nostras literas impetrarint, et interdum in arbitros fuerit compromissum, Templariorum impediente malitia nequiverunt hactenus suam iustitiam obtinere. Ex adverso vero Templariorum proposuit procurator, quod, quum privilegiis Romanorum Pontificum sint muniti, ne de terris, quas propriis manibus vel sumptibus excolunt, decimas solvere teneantur, praedicti abbas et monachi ipsos super hoc indebite molestare non cessant, in aliis eis iniuriosi plurimum exsistentes. Quumque causam, quae inter ipsos et praefatos monachos super decimis ipsis vertitur, venerabilibus fratribus nostris Bituricensi archiepiscopo et episcopo Claromontensi duxerimus committendam, dum coram illis quaestio tractaretur, quidam monachi adhibita sibi multitudine armatorum, terras ipsorum violenter intrantes, de segetibus eorum pro suae voluntatis arbitrio asportarunt, igne residuum comburentes.] His igitur et aliis, quae coram praedicto capellano fuere proposita, plenius intellectis quia de ipsis nobis non potuit fieri plena fides Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, inquisita plenius veritate, si abbas et monachi sufficienter ostenderint, quod a Templariis decimas de terris praedictis per XL. annos continue perceperint sine lite, vos ad praestationem decimarum ipsarum Templarios appellatione postposita compellatis. Quum enim tanto tempore contra indulta privilegia decimas solverint, eis renunciasse tacite praesumuntur. Quodsi forte in probatione defecerint, ab ipsorum impetitione Templarios absolvatis, ipsis super hoc appellatione postposita silentium perpetuum imponentes; *super aliis autem audiatis quae hinc inde duxerint proponenda, et quod iustum fuerit appellatione postposita statuatis, facientes quod decreveritis per censuram ecclesiasticam firmiter observari. *[Dat. Ferentini Kal. Iul. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: One exempt by reason of a certain thing or a certain place is not judged exempt with respect to a further thing or place. It says this, and it is a notable and highly citable text.

The same, to the Bishop of Langres.

Since the chapel of the noble man, the Duke of Burgundy, is said to enjoy a privilege of this kind, that no archbishop or bishop may dare to promulgate sentences of suspension, excommunication, or even interdict against the persons of the canons of that chapel, the dean of the Christianity and certain other canons of the aforesaid chapel, who hold parish churches from you, on occasion of the aforesaid privilege say that they are so exempt even in those matters whose jurisdiction pertains to you that, however gravely they may sometimes offend, they refuse to be subject to your correction and sentence. Whence you humbly petitioned to be instructed by us as to how you should proceed against rebels of this kind. Therefore, by the authority of the present letters, we command your fraternity that, insofar as they are exempt by reason of that chapel, you reverently defer to the apostolic privileges; but insofar as, by reason of the parish churches or otherwise, they are known to fall within your jurisdiction, freely pursue against them the duty of your office. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of March, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> Exemptus ratione certae rei vel certi loci non censetur exemptus respectu ulterius rei vel loci. H. d. et est textus notabilis et multum allegabilis.
>
> Idem Episcopo Lingonensi. Quum capella nobilis viri ducis Burgundiae gaudere dicatur huiusmodi privilegio, quod nullus archiepiscopus vel episcopus in personas canonicorum eiusdem capellae suspensionis vel excommunicationis aut etiam interdicti sententias audeat promulgare, decanus Christianitatis et quidam alii capellae supra dictae canonici, qui parochiales ecclesias a te tenent, occasione privilegii praelibati in his etiam, quarum iurisdictio ad te pertinet, ita se dicunt exemptos, ut quantumcunque graviter interdum excedant, tuae correctioni recusant et sententiae subiacere. Unde a nobis doceri humiliter postulasti, qualiter tibi sit erga rebelles huiusmodi procedendum. Quocirca fraternitati tuae praesentium auctoritate mandamus, quatenus, in quantum exempti sunt eiusdem ratione capellae, apostolicis privilegiis deferas reverenter; sed, in quantum ratione parochialium ecclesiarum vel alias iurisdictionem tuam respicere dignoscuntur, officii tui debitum in eosdem libere prosequaris. [*Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Mart. Ao. IX. *1206.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: By an exemption granted to a monastery, chapels subject to it are not considered exempt.

The same, to the Abbot and Brothers of the monastery of Evesham.

From the mouth of the one sitting upon the throne proceeds a two-edged sword, because from the mouth of the Roman Pontiff, who presides over the Apostolic See, a most upright sentence ought to go forth, which spares no one contrary to justice but renders to each what is his own. Therefore, when a controversy was being disputed between you and our venerable brother the Bishop of Worcester concerning the subjection and liberty of your monastery, and we had committed it to delegated judges for termination, they referred the same cause, sufficiently instructed, to our presence, fixing for the parties a certain term at which they should present themselves before us with instruments and attestations to receive sentence. Therefore, when the parties had been established in our presence through suitable proctors, we furnished them a free and benign audience. And indeed the proctor of your monastery proposed that the monastery itself had existed free and exempt from its very foundation; to prove this he introduced privileges of our predecessors, one of Constantine and another of Alexander, and also indulgences of Clement and Celestine, the continual use of which from long past times he endeavored to show through the depositions of witnesses. [For in the first privilege of Constantine it was expressly contained that Egwin of holy memory, Bishop of Worcester, coming to the Apostolic See, reverently related to our aforesaid predecessor a certain vision in which blessed Mary manifested herself to him; and at that time the English kings Kenred and Offa, with whom the said bishop visited the thresholds of the Apostles, from their own goods bestowed by royal liberality many benefactions at the place shown in the vision, in the presence of our same predecessor, which he confirmed by apostolic authority, so that in the same place a congregation of monks might be established according to the rule of blessed Benedict—which at that time flourished less in those parts—for the honor of the divine name. Whence the aforesaid Pontiff commanded Brithwald, Primate of Britain, by apostolic writings, that, after a council had been assembled, he should establish the fold divinely shown, fortified by apostolic authority and endowed by royal liberality for himself and his successors, especially enjoining upon him, with the aforesaid Bishop Egwin assisting, the care of the souls of that church, so that by the power delivered to him he should defend it from every assault of invaders and incursion of tyrants; but if anything of the sinister part should be discovered to arise there, it should be reported rather to the ears of that primate than that the holy place should be unjustly corrupted through the secret sentence of anyone. Therefore, since the aforesaid kings endowed that place with liberty, our same predecessor also endowed it by the authority of the Apostolic See, so that no man of whatever order should attempt to corrupt and diminish what he had established. In the second privilege of the same Pope Constantine we perceived it to be contained that by apostolic writings he commanded the aforesaid primate to protect and foster the churches of God established throughout Britain, among which he subjected especially to his dominion that church which had most recently been established by the venerable man Bishop Egwin by apostolic and royal authority, so that he should take care to render it free in perpetuity from every assault of adversaries; establishing that the same place should be free under the monarchy of its own abbot from every tyrannical exaction, and that no man of whatever order should presume to bring any burden upon it. The abbot, moreover, according to canonical authority, shall be elected by the brothers either from the monastery itself or from the parish of the Wiccians, and, being freely and canonically blessed in the same church without any exaction, in reverence for the venerable Egwin—who, after resigning the episcopal see, was made abbot in the same monastery—shall use a ring only in the celebration of masses and shall always obtain the first place after the prelate of the Wiccians. From these chapters of the privileges, therefore, the proctor of your monastery endeavored to show that the monastery itself was entirely exempt from every episcopal jurisdiction from its first foundation: first, because it is said to have been constructed by apostolic and royal authority alone, whence it is understood to pertain only to the Apostolic See in spiritual matters and to the royal crown in temporal matters, since the Supreme Pontiff is not accustomed to command that any monastery be constructed by his authority unless it is to be constructed upon ground donated to him; then, because the place itself, which the kings are said to have donated by royal liberality, he also donated, so that, just as they endowed it with liberty as regards temporal matters, so also he should be understood to have endowed it with liberty as regards spiritual matters, since temporal matters pertained to them and spiritual matters to him; also because he especially enjoined the care of the souls of that church upon the Primate of Britain, to whose dominion it is also said to have been especially subjected, so that, if anything sinister should arise there, it might be corrected through his industry and caution, whence he seems to have committed the correction of that place to him alone, and thus to pertain in no way to another; then, because he decreed that the aforesaid place should remain under the monarchy of its own abbot, whence, since monarchy is interpreted as sole principality, it appears that the abbot of that place alone obtains the principal power in that place. That the words of those privileges ought to be understood in this manner the subsequent privileges seem to declare more manifestly; for in the privilege of Innocent of happy memory it is contained that no bishop may presume to celebrate a synod or chapter, ordinations, or public masses in that abbey or its chapels unless invited by the abbot and brothers of that place, and that, when an abbot has been elected in the same monastery, he shall be blessed without any exaction in that church by whatever bishop he prefers, provided that he is catholic and possesses the favor of the Apostolic See. The same Innocent also, adhering to the footsteps of Constantine, decreed that the pastoral care of the whole house and church and of the other places pertaining to that church should remain only with the abbot of that place, and that their ordering should remain in his power alone, just as has hitherto been observed. In the privilege of Pope Alexander it is perceived to be contained that the brothers of that place shall receive chrism, holy oil, consecrations of altars, and ordinations of clerics who are to be promoted to sacred orders from whatever bishop they prefer who possesses the communion and favor of the Apostolic See, with the provision that the Bishops of Worcester shall not unjustly exact anything from them but shall remain content only with those things which it is established their predecessors reasonably rendered to their predecessors. At the end, however, it is added, "that the authority of the Apostolic See be preserved," and it is not said "that the canonical justice of the diocesan bishop be preserved," since, according to the approved custom of the Roman Church, canonical justice is preserved for the diocesan bishop in monasteries which are not exempt. Moreover, in the indulgences of Clement and Celestine of good memory it is plainly intimated that the same monastery pertains to the jurisdiction of blessed Peter with no intermediary, since, after placing this beforehand in the preamble, they infer consequently in this manner: "Induced, therefore, by this reason, we have determined that the use of gloves and ring, dalmatic, tunic, sandals, and mitre is to be granted to you." Therefore, by the fact that the pastoral care of the whole house and church is decreed to remain with the abbot alone, that which had been established by Constantine—namely, that the same place should exist free under the monarchy of its own abbot—is elucidated by Innocent; whence, since the pastoral care of the whole house and church ought to remain with the abbot alone, it is certainly apparent that the bishop ought not to exercise pastoral care there, since the abbot of that place also ought to be blessed within his own church without any exaction. Whence neither profession nor obedience ought to be required from him. But because the abbot cannot exercise by himself certain things pertaining to pastoral solicitude, so that nothing which pertains to the fullness of liberty may be lacking to him, it is granted to him by Alexander that he may freely receive the ecclesiastical sacraments from whatever bishop he prefers who possesses the communion and favor of the Apostolic See. Moreover, by the fact that the same place is asserted to pertain to the jurisdiction of blessed Peter alone, as is intimated in the indulgences of Clement and Celestine, that which Pope Constantine is said to have done in endowing that place with liberty appears to have been more manifestly declared, when he committed the guardianship of the same to the Primate of Britain as his vicar or legate.] Furthermore, in the privilege of Constantine a certain thing is perceived to be contained through which the same monastery appears to pertain to the jurisdiction of the bishop: namely, that the abbot of that monastery should always obtain the first place after the prelate of Worcester. Whence, since he cannot obtain that place in a general or provincial council, because it would be incongruous for an abbot to sit first after him above the other bishops, it therefore remains that he is understood to possess that place in the episcopal synod; for which reason he is bound to attend the episcopal synod and through this to receive and observe its statutes. In the privilege of Pope Alexander another thing is contained through which the diocesan bishop appears to have retained his jurisdiction in that monastery, even if not in all matters, nevertheless in certain matters: since it is said in it that the Bishops of Worcester should not unjustly exact anything from the brothers of that place but should remain content only with those things which it is established their predecessors reasonably rendered to their predecessors. Whence it is established that the abbots are bound to exhibit certain things from their own goods to the bishops. We, therefore, after these and the other things had been diligently heard and perspicaciously understood, since prescription was proved by neither party through witnesses, on the common counsel of our brothers definitively determine that the monastery of Evesham is free at its head, as wholly exempt from episcopal jurisdiction and subject only to the Roman Pontiff and Roman Church, with its guardianship nevertheless reserved to the Archbishop of Canterbury. In its members, however, namely those which are not proved exempt, we decree that it is subject to the diocesan bishop; for which reason the abbot ought to attend his synod and obtain the first place after the Bishop of Worcester. For those members also, as we have said, which are not exempt, the same abbot is bound to exhibit reverence, service, and honor to the Bishop of Worcester, with which being competently exhibited to him, the Bishop of Worcester ought to remain content. [Because, however, etc. Given on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of February, 1206.]

> Per exemptionem, concessam monasterio, capellae sibi subiectae non censentur exemptae.
>
> Idem Abbati et Fratribus Evasensis coenobii. Ex ore sedentis in throno procedit gladius bis acutus, quoniam ex ore Romani Pontificis, qui praesidet apostolicae sedi, rectissima debet exire sententia, quae contra iustitiam nulli parcat, sed reddat unicuique quod suum est. Quum igitur inter vos et venerabilem fratrem nostrum Vigoriensem episcopum super monasterii vestri subiectione ac libertate controversia verteretur, et nos eandem terminandam commisissemus iudicibus delegatis: causam eandem sufficienter instructam ad nostram praesentiam remiserunt, certum partibus terminum praefigentes, quo cum instrumentis et attestationibus nostro se conspectui praesentarent sententiam recepturae. Partibus igitur in nostra praesentia per procuratores idoneos constitutis, audientiam praebuimus liberam et benignam. Et quidem monasterii vestri proposuit procurator, quod idem monasterium ab ipsa sui fundatione liberum exstitit et exemptum; ad hoc probandum privilegia praedecessorum nostrorum inducens, unum Constantini et alterum Alexandri, nec non indulgentias Clementis et Coelestini, quorum usum continuum a longis retro temporibus per depositiones testium ostendere nitebatur. [In primo siquidem privilegio Constantini continebatur expressum, quod sanctae recordationis Egwinus, Wigorniensis episcopus, ad apostolicam sedem accedens, visionem quandam, qua se beata Maria manifestavit eidem, praefato praedecessori nostro reverenter exposuit, et tunc temporis Anglorum reges Kenredus et Offa, cum quibus iam dictus episcopus Apostolorum limina visitavit, in loco visionis ostensae de bonis suis plurima beneficia in praesentia eiusdem praedecessoris nostri regia liberalitate donarunt, quae ipse auctoritate apostolica confirmavit, quatenus in eodem loco monachorum congregatio secundum beati Benedicti regulam, quae minus in illis partibus tunc vigebat, ad divini nominis constitueretur honorem; unde praefatus Pontifex Brithwaldo Britanniarum primati per apostolica scripta mandavit, ut coadunato concilio constitueret ovile, divinitus ostensum, apostolica auctoritate munitum, et regia liberalitate donatum sibi et successoribus suis, memorato Egwino episcopo assistente, curam animarum eiusdem ecclesiae praecipue iniungendo, ut ab omni pervasorum impulsu et tyrannorum incursu potestate sibi tradita defensaret; si quid vero sinistrae partis inibi comperiretur oriri, eiusdem primatis auribus potius deferretur, quam per alicuius occultam sententiam locus sanctus depravaretur iniuste. Ipsum ergo locum quoniam antedicti reges libertate donarunt, et idem praedecessor noster apostolicae sedis auctoritate donavit, ut nullus cuiuscunque ordinis homo quod ipse constituerat depravare et diminuere attentaret. In secundo vero privilegio eiusdem Constantini Papae perspeximus contineri, quod ipse praefato primati per apostolica scripta mandavit, ut ecclesias Dei per Britanniam constitutas protegeret et foveret, inter quas eam, quae nuperrime nunc a venerabili viro Egwino episcopo apostolica et regia auctoritate fuerat constituta, ditioni eius praecipue submittebat, ut eam ab omni adversariorum impugnatione liberam in perpetuum reddere procuraret, constituens, ut idem locus sub monarchia proprii abbatis ab omni tyrannica exactione sit liber, et nullus cuiuscunque ordinis homo aliquid ibi gravamen inferre praesumat. Abbas autem secundum auctoritatem canonicam vel de ipso monasterio, vel de parochia Wictiorum a fratribus eligatur, qui libere ac canonice sine aliqua exactione in eadem ecclesia benedictus, ob reverentiam venerabilis

Egwini, qui, episcopali sede dimissa in eodem monasterio factus est abbas, annulo in celebratione solummodo missarum utatur, primumque locum semper obtineat post praesulem Wictiorum. Ex horum ergo privilegiorum capitulis monasterii vestri procurator nitebatur ostendere, quod ipsum monasterium a prima sui fundatione ab omni episcopali iurisdictione fuit prorsus exemptum; tum, quia dicitur apostolica tantum et regia auctoritate constructum, unde non nisi ad apostolicam sedem in spiritualibus et regiam coronam in temporalibus intelligitur pertinere, quum summus Pontifex non consueverit aliquod monasterium ut sua construatur auctoritate mandare, nisi quod in fundo sibi donato fuerit construendum; tum, quia locum ipsum, quem reges donasse dicuntur regia liberalitate, et ipse donavit, ut, sicut illi donaverunt eum libertate, quantum ad temporalia, sic et iste, quantum ad spiritualia intelligatur libertate donasse, quum ad illos utique temporalia et ad istum spiritualia pertinerent; tum etiam, quia curam animarum eiusdem ecclesiae praecipue iniunxit Britanniarum primati, quam et ditioni eius praecipue dicitur submisisse, ut, si quid ibi oriretur sinistri, per ipsius corrigeretur industriam et cautelam, unde videtur correctionem ipsius loci ei solummodo commisisse, sicque ad alium minime pertinere: tum, quia praefatum locum sub monarchia proprii abbatis manere decrevit, unde, quum monarchia interpretetur unicus principatus, videtur, quod abbas ipsius loci solus in eodem loco principalem obtinet potestatem. Quod autem verba privilegiorum ipsorum intelligi debeant tali modo, sequentia privilegia manifestius declarare videntur; nam in privilegio felicis memoriae Innocentii continetur, ne aliquis episcopus in ipsa abbatia vel capellis ipsius synodum vel capitulum, ordinationes vel missas publicas, nisi invitatus ab abbate et fratribus ipsius loci, celebrare praesumat, et, quum abbas in eodem monasterio fuerit electus, absque omni exactione a quocunque maluerit episcopo in ipsa benedicatur ecclesia, dummodo catholicus fuerit et gratiam habeat apostolicae sedis. Idem etiam Innocentius, Constantini vestigiis inhaerendo decrevit, ut solummodo penes abbatem ipsius loci totius domus et ecclesiae aliorumque locorum ad eandem ecclesiam pertinentium pastoralis cura consistat, et eorundem ordinatio in ipsius tantum potestate permaneat, sicut est hactenus observatum. In privilegio vero Alexandri Papae perspicitur contineri, ut chrisma, oleum sanctum, consecrationes altarium, ordinationes clericorum, qui ad sacros fuerint ordines promovendi, a quocunque maluerint episcopo, communionem et gratiam apostolicae sedis habente, fratres ipsius loci suscipiant, statuto, ut Wigornienses episcopi aliquid ab eis iniuste non exigant, sed iis tantum contenti permaneant, quae antecessores eorum antecessoribus suis constat rationabiliter impendisse. In fine vero subiungitur, "ut salva sit apostolicae sedis auctoritas," nec dicitur, "quod dioecesani episcopi canonica sit salva iustitia," quum in monasteriis non exemptis secundum approbatam ecclesiae Romanae consuetudinem dioecesano episcopo canonica iustitia conservetur. In indulgentiis autem bonae memoriae Clementis et Coelestini patenter innuitur, quod idem coenobium ad iurisdictionem beati Petri nullo pertineat mediante, quum, hoc in prooemio praemittentes, sic inferant consequenter: "Hac itaque ratione inducti, usum chirothecarum et annuli, dalmaticae, tunicae, sandaliorum et mitrae tibi duximus concedendum." Per id ergo, quod pastoralis cura totius domus et ecclesiae penes abbatem solummodo decernitur permanere, illud dilucidatur ab Innocentio, quod fuerat a Constantino statutum, ut videlicet idem locus sub monarchia proprii abbatis liber exsistat; unde, quum pastoralis cura totius domus et ecclesiae penes abbatem solummodo debeat permanere, patet profecto, quod episcopus pastoralem ibi curam exercere non debet, quum et abbas illius loci absque omni exactione infra suam ecclesiam debeat benedici. Unde nec professio, nec obedientia debet ab illo requiri. Quia vero quaedam ad pastoralem sollicitudinem pertinentia per se ipsum abbas exercere non potest, ut nihil ei desit, quod pertineat ad plenitudinem libertatis, conceditur illi ab Alexandro, ut ecclesiastica sacramenta libere percipiat a quocunque maluerit episcopo, communionem et gratiam apostolicae sedis habente. Per id autem, quod idem locus asseritur ad iurisdictionem beati Petri solummodo pertinere, sicut innuitur in indulgentiis Clementis et Coelestini, videtur illud manifestius declaratum, quod Constantinus Papa locum ipsum dicitur libertate donasse, tutelam eiusdem Britanniarum primati tanquam suo vicario vel legato committens.] Porro in privilegio Constantini quiddam contineri perspicitur, per quod idem coenobium videtur ad iurisdictionem episcopi pertinere, videlicet, quod abbas eiusdem monasterii primum locum post Vigoriensem praesulem semper obtineat. Unde, quum locum ipsum obtinere non possit in generali concilio neque in provinciali, quoniam absonum esset, ut abbas primus post illum super alios episcopos resideret: relinquitur ergo, quod locum illum in episcopali synodo intelligatur habere, quare tenetur ad synodum episcopalem accedere, ac per hoc ipsius statuta recipere ac servare. In privilegio vero Alexandri papae quiddam aliud continetur, per quod dioecesanus episcopus in eodem coenobio iurisdictionem suam, etsi non in omnibus, in quibusdam tamen retinuisse videtur: quum in illo dicatur, quod Vigorienses episcopi ab eiusdem loci fratribus aliquid iniuste non exigant, sed his tantum contenti permaneant, quae praedecessores eorum antecessoribus suis constat rationabiliter impendisse. Unde constat, quod abbates episcopis aliqua de suis exhibere tenentur. Nos igitur, his et aliis diligenter auditis et perspicaciter intellectis, quum a neutra parte per testes sit probata praescriptio, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio sententialiter diffinimus, quod Evasense coenobium librum est in capite, tanquam ab episcopali iurisdictione prorsus exemptum, et soli Romano Pontifici et Romanae ecclesiae subiectum, tutela tamen ipsius Cantuariensi archiepiscopo reservata. In membris autem, videlicet illis, quae non probantur exempta, dioecesano episcopo ipsum subiacere decernimus, propter quod abbas ad synodum eius debet accedere, primumque locum post Vigoriensem episcopum obtinere. Pro ipsis quoque membris, ut diximus, non exemptis, idem abbas tenetur Vigoriensi episcopo exhibere reverentiam, obsequium et honorem, quibus Vigoriensis episcopus sibi competenter exhibitis debet manere contentus. [Quia vero etc. Dat. XV. Kal. Febr. 1206.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: One received under the protection of the Pope is not on that account considered exempt. It says this.

The same, to the Bishop of Vic.

It was asked of us on your behalf whether clerics and laymen who show letters of protection in which their persons are declared by express name to remain under apostolic protection with all their goods are exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop. We, however, respond to you in this manner concerning this: that through letters of this kind, which we sometimes grant personally to certain persons, they are in no way withdrawn from the power of their bishops. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of December, 1204.]

Receptus sub protectione Papae per hoc non censetur exemptus. Hoc dicit.

Idem Ausonensi Episcopo.

Ex parte tua fuit quaesitum a nobis, utrum clerici et laici, qui literas protectionis ostendunt, in quibus personae suae expresso nomine cum omnibus rebus suis sub apostolica protectione consistere declaruntur, a iurisdictione episcopi dioecesani sint exempti. Nos autem tibi super hoc taliter respondemus, quod per literas huiusmodi, quas quandoque aliquibus personaliter indulgemus, ab episcoporum suorum potestate minime subtrahuntur. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Dec. 1204.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: Religious to whom it has been granted by the Pope that they may convert churches subject to them to their own uses ought to receive possession of those churches not by their own authority but from the diocesan bishop of the place, unless something else is expressed in the privilege.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

The pastoral office (And below: [cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.]) You asked further whether religious men to whom it has been granted by the Apostolic See that they may convert their churches to their own uses are permitted, when the persons of those churches die, to enter possession of those churches by their own authority, or whether they should rather be inducted into it by the diocesan bishop. To this we certainly respond that, unless perhaps this is expressly contained in the indulgence of the Supreme Pontiff, they are not permitted to enter possession of them without consulting their bishop, because we do not believe that episcopal right is derogated from by an indulgence of this kind. [Solicitously, etc. (cf. c. 9, On Those Things Which Are Done, III. 13.) Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January, 1204.]

> Religiosi, quibus a Papa concessum est, ut ecclesias eis subiectas possint in proprios usus convertere, non auctoritate propria, sed a dioecesano loci possessionem illarum ecclesiarum recipere debent, nisi in privilegio aliud exprimatur.
>
> Idem Elidensi Episcopo.
>
> Pastoralis officii (Et infra: [cf. c. 28. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]) Interrogasti praeterea utrum viris religiosis, quibus a sede apostolica est indultum, ut ecclesias suas in proprios usus possint convertere, decedentibus personis earum, liceat auctoritate propria possessionem earundem ecclesiarum intrare, vel per dioecesanum episcopum in ipsa sint potius inducendi. Ad quod utique respondemus, quod, nisi forte in indulgentia summi Pontificis id contineatur expressum, suo episcopo inconsulto in possessionem ipsarum eis non est licitum introire, quia per indulgentiam huiusmodi episcopali iuri non credimus derogari. [Sollicite etc. (cf. c. 9. de his, quae fiunt III. 13.) Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Ian. 1204.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: If the person because of whose offense an interdict was imposed does not observe it, others are nevertheless bound to observe it; it is otherwise if the person in whose favor it was issued does not observe it.

The same, to the Bishop and Chapter of Tripoli.

You petitioned to be instructed by the Apostolic See whether, when your city is placed under a general interdict because of the Hospitallers or Templars, and those same persons do not observe it, you are bound to observe it. To this we determine that the response is thus: that their offense furnishes you no license to offend. But if the aforesaid Hospitallers or Templars exceed the bounds of their privileges by rashly violating an interdict which had been promulgated for them, lest they appear to laugh at the weeping of others, during as long as they violate the interdict, by our license you may celebrate as a punishment for their presumption. [Given at Segni, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of October, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

> Si is propter cuius delictum positum est interdictum, illud non servat, alii nihilominus servare tenentur; secus, si ille non servat, in cuius favorem latum fuit.
>
> Idem Episcopo et Capitulo Tripolitanis.
>
> Petiistis per sedem apostolicam edoceri, utrum, quum propter Hospitalarios vel Templarios civitas vestra generali supponitur interdicto, eisdem non servantibus, vos illud teneamini observare. Ad quod sic ducimus respondendum, quod illorum excessus vobis non praebet licentiam excedendi. Sed si praefati Hospitalarii vel Templarii privilegiorum suorum fines excesserint, violando temere interdictum, quod pro eis fuerat promulgatum: ne ipsi videantur de aliorum fletu ridere, vos in poenam praesumptionis eorum, quamdiu ipsi violaverint interdictum, de nostra licentia celebretis. [Dat. Signiae XIV. Kal. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A privilege granted to a monastery that its monks cannot be excommunicated is understood concerning monks existing in the monastery or in churches subject to it by both rights. It says this, and it is an everyday case.

The same.

Since, as you intimated to us through your letters, it is established by the confession of the opposing party that the Bishop of Nepi receives episcopal right in the church of Saint Blaise de Flagen., and through this the same church does not pertain to the monastery by full right, we believe that, notwithstanding that chapter of the privilege which was granted to the same monastery—that no bishop may presume to place under interdict churches subject to it by both rights, or to summon to synod or excommunicate a monk or cleric of the same monastery—the aforesaid bishop can place the said church under interdict and excommunicate your monk or cleric appointed to its governance, when either is to be done by law; because that chapter appears to be understood concerning monks or clerics remaining in the monastery itself or sent to churches subject to it by both rights.

> Privilegium concessum monasterio, ut eius monachi excommunicari non possint, intelligitur de monachis, exsistentibus in monasterio, vel in ecclesiis sibi subiectis utroque iure. Hoc dicit, et est casus quotidianus.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quoniam, sicut nobis per tuas literas intimasti, per confessionem constat partis adversae, quod Nepesinus episcopus ius episcopale percipit in ecclesia sancti Blasii de Flagen., ac per hoc eadem ecclesia non pertinet ad monasterium pleno iure: credimus, quod, non obstante illo capitulo privilegii, quod ipsi monasterio est indultum, ut nullus episcopus ecclesias utroque iure illi subiectas interdicto supponere, vel monachum seu clericum eiusdem monasterii synodare vel excommunicare praesumat, praefatus episcopus possit interdicere dictam ecclesiam, et excommunicare monachum seu clericum vestrum ad eius regimen deputatum, quum alterutrum de iure fuerit faciendum; quoniam illud capitulum esse intelligendum videtur de monachis aut clericis in ipso monasterio permanentibus, vel ad ecclesias destinatis, utroque iure sibi subiectas.

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: A bishop who remits episcopal tithes to a certain church indefinitely is seen to have remitted not only past but also future tithes. And it is a notable case.

The same, to the Archbishop of London, Legate of the Apostolic See.

Because concerning (And below: [cf. c. 6, On Bigamists, I. 21.]) Subsequently also you asked whether the monks of All Saints can extend the privilege granted by your predecessor E. of good memory concerning the retention of episcopal tithes to possessions acquired and afterward to be acquired. Concerning this we give your fraternity the following response: that, if the remission of those tithes was made according to the canonical sanctions, since your predecessor, in remitting episcopal tithes to the monastery indefinitely, excepted nothing and could have excepted nothing, and the fullest interpretation is to be applied in benefices, nor ought one and the same substance to be assessed under a diverse right, he is seen to have understood it not only concerning the tithes of possessions of that time but of the future. [Indeed, etc. Moreover, etc. (cf. c. 6, On Consanguinity and Affinity, IV. 14.) Given at Segni, on the fifth day before the Nones of October, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1213.]

Episcopus, remittens alicui ecclesiae decimas episcopales indefinite remisisse videtur non solum praeteritas, sed et futuras. Et est casus notabilis.

Idem Londonensi Archiepiscopo, apostolicae sedis Legato.

Quia circa (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de big. I. 21.]) Subsequenter etiam Quaesivisti, utrum monachi omnium Sanctorum privilegium bonae memoriae E. praedecessoris tui super episcopalibus decimis retinendis indultum, extendere valeant ad possessiones acquisitas, et postmodum acquirendas. Super quo tale damus tuae fraternitati responsum, quod, si decimarum illarum remissio facta exstitit secundum canonicas sanctiones, praedecessor tuus indefinite decimas episcopales monasterio remittendo, quum nihil exceperit et potuerit excepisse, ac in beneficiis plenissima sit interpretatio adhibenda, nec debeat una eademque substantia diverso iure censeri, intellexisse videtur non solum de decimis possessionum illius temporis, sed futuri. [*Sane etc. Porro etc. *(cf. c. 6. de cons. et. aff. IV. 14.) *Dat. Signiae V. Non. Oct. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. *1213.]

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: The council sets forth the order of the four patriarchal sees, up to the word "preserved," where it sets forth their three privileges. First, that they give the pallium. Second, at the word "Lord's," that they cause the cross to be carried before them, except in the cases excepted here. Third, at the words "In all," that appeal is made to them. And concerning this it makes a reservation at the word "preserved."

The same, in the general council.

Renewing the ancient privileges of the patriarchal sees, with the holy universal synod approving, we decree that after the Roman Church—which by the Lord's disposition obtains the primacy of ordinary power over all others, as the mother and teacher of all the faithful of Christ—the church of Constantinople shall obtain the first place, Alexandria the second, Antioch the third, and Jerusalem the fourth, with its own dignity preserved for each, in such a way that, after their prelates have received from the Roman Pontiff the pallium, which is the insignia of the fullness of pontifical office, and have furnished to him an oath of fidelity and obedience, they too may licitly bestow the pallium upon their suffragans, receiving from them a canonical profession for themselves and a promise of obedience for the Roman Church. They shall, however, cause the standard of the Lord's cross to be carried everywhere before them, except in the city of Rome and wherever the Supreme Pontiff is present, or his legate using the insignia of apostolic dignity. Moreover, in all provinces subject to their jurisdiction, appeal shall be made to them when necessary, with appeals interposed to the Apostolic See preserved, to which deference must humbly be shown by all.

Ponit concilium ordinem quatuor patriarchalium sedium, usque ibi: Servata, ubi ponit tria privilegia ipsarum. Primum, quia dant pallium. Secundum ibi: Dominicae, quia ante se crucem deferri faciunt, praeterquam in casibus, hic exceptis. Tertium ibi: In omnibus, quia ad ipsos appellatur. Et in hoc protestatur ibi: Salvis.

Idem in concilio generali. Antiqua patriarchalium sedium privilegia renovantes, sancta universali synodo approbante sancimus, ut post Romanam ecclesiam, quae disponente Domino super omnes alias ordinariae potestatis obtinet principatum, utpote mater universorum Christi fidelium et magistra, Constantinopolitana primum, Alexandrina secundum, Antiochena tertium, Hierosolymitana quartum locum obtineant, servata cuilibet propria dignitate ita, quod, postquam antistites earum a Romano Pontifice receperint pallium, quod est plenitudinis officii pontificalis insigne, praestito sibi fidelitatis et obedientiae iuramento, licenter et ipsi suis suffraganeis pallium largiantur, recipientes pro se professionem canonicam, et pro Romana ecclesia sponsionem obedientiae ab eisdem. Dominicae vero crucis vexillum ante se faciant ubique deferri, nisi in urbe Romana, et ubicunque summus Pontifex praesens exstiterit, aut eius legatus, utens insigniis apostolicae dignitatis. In omnibus autem provinciis, eorundem iurisdictioni subiectis, ad eos, quum necesse fuerit, provocetur, salvis appellationibus ad sedem apostolicam interpositis, quibus est ab omnibus humiliter deferendum.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: A privilege granted to religious that they may bury their confraternity members during an interdict is understood concerning those confraternity members who, although they remain in the world, have nevertheless offered themselves to the order after changing their secular habit, or concerning those who have given their goods to them while retaining the usufruct. This is the first point. A privilege granted to religious by which, when they come to an interdicted place, churches are opened to them once a year so that divine offices may be celebrated in them is understood to mean that only one single church is opened in the place. This is the second point.

The same, in the same council.

So that the privileges which the Roman Church has granted to certain religious [persons] may remain unshaken, we have determined that certain things in them are to be declared, lest, being understood less soundly, they be drawn toward abuse, on account of which they could deservedly be revoked, because one who abuses the power permitted to him deserves to lose his privilege. Indeed, the Apostolic See has granted to certain regulars that ecclesiastical burial shall not be denied to those who have assumed their confraternity, if perhaps the churches to which they pertain have been interdicted from divine offices and it should happen that they die, unless they have been excommunicated or interdicted by name; and that they may carry to their own churches for burial their confraternity members whom the prelates of churches have not permitted to be buried at their churches, unless they have been excommunicated or interdicted by name. We understand this, however, concerning those confraternity members who, while still remaining in the world, have either been offered to their order after changing their secular habit, or who have given their goods to them among the living, retaining for themselves the usufruct for as long as they live in this world; yet let these be buried at non-interdicted churches of those regulars or of others in which they have chosen burial, lest, if it were understood concerning any persons whatever assuming their confraternity, ecclesiastical discipline should alike be dissolved and cheapened for two or three denarii contributed to them annually; nevertheless let them obtain also the certain remission granted to them by the Apostolic See. We also will that the other thing which has been granted to regulars of this kind—namely, that if any of their brothers who have been sent by them to receive confraternities or collections should come to any city, castle, or village, and if perhaps that place has been interdicted from divine offices, in their joyful arrival the churches shall be opened once a year so that, with excommunicated persons excluded, divine offices may be celebrated there—be understood thus: that in the same city, castle, or village only one church is opened to the brothers of that order once in the year, as has been said; because, although it is stated in the plural that churches shall be opened at their joyful arrival, it is nevertheless to be referred by a sound understanding not separately to the churches of the same place but conjointly to the aforesaid places, lest, if they visited the individual churches of the same place in this manner, the sentence of interdict should happen to be excessively cheapened. But those who presume to usurp anything for themselves contrary to the aforesaid declarations shall be subject to grave vengeance.

> Privilegium religiosis concessum, ut possint sepelire confratres suos tempore interdicti, intelligitur de illis confratribus, qui, licet maneant in saeculo, obtulerunt se tamen ordini, mutato habitu saeculari, vel de illis, qui bona sua eis dederunt usufructu retento. Hoc primo. Privilegium religiosis concessum, quo eis, venientibus ad locum interdictum, semel in anno aperiantur ecclesiae, ut celebrentur in eis divina, intelligitur, quod una tantum sola ecclesia aperiatur in loco. Hoc secundo.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Ut privilegia, quae quibusdam religiosis [personis] Romana concessit ecclesia, permaneant inconcussa, quaedam in eisdem duximus declaranda, ne minus sane intellecta pertrahantur ad abusum, propter quem possint merito revocari, quia privilegium meretur amittere qui permissa sibi abutitur potestate. Sane quibusdam regularibus apostolica sedes indulsit, ut his, qui fraternitatem eorum assumpserint, si forsitan ecclesiae, ad quas pertinent, a divinis officiis fuerint interdictae, ipsosque mori contigerit, sepultura ecclesiastica non negetur, nisi excommunicati vel nominatim fuerint interdicti; suos quoque confratres, quos ecclesiarum praelati apud ecclesias suas non permiserint sepeliri, nisi excommunicati vel interdicti fuerint nominatim, ipsi ad ecclesias suas deferant tumulandos. Hoc autem de illis confratribus intelligimus, vel qui adhuc manentes in saeculo eorum ordini sunt oblati, mutato habitu saeculari, vel eis, qui bona sua dederant inter vivos, retento sibi, quamdiu in hoc saeculo vixerint, usufructu; qui tamen sepeliantur apud ipsorum regularium vel aliorum non interdictas ecclesias, in quibus elegerint sepulturam, ne, si de quibuslibet ipsorum fraternitatem assumentibus fuerit intellectum, pro duobus aut tribus denariis annuatim sibi collatis dissolvatur pariter et vilescat ecclesiastica disciplina; certam tamen et ipsi remissionem obtineant, ab apostolica sibi sede concessam. Illud etiam, quod huiusmodi regularibus est indultum, ut, si qui fratrum suorum, qui ab eis missi fuerint ad recipiendas fraternitates sive collectas, in quamlibet civitatem, castellum vel vicum advenerint, si forte locus ille a divinis officiis sit interdictus, in eorum iucundo adventu semel in anno aperiantur ecclesiae, ut exclusis excommunicatis divina ibidem officia celebrentur, sic intelligi volumus, quod in eadem civitate, aut castro aut villa una tantum ecclesia eiusdem ordinis fratribus semel, ut dictum est, aperiatur in anno; quia, licet pluraliter dictum sit, quod in eorum iucundo adventu ecclesiae aperiantur, non tamen ad ecclesias eiusdem loci divisim, sed praedictorum locorum coniunctim sano referendum est intellectu, ne, si hoc modo singulas eiusdem loci visitarent ecclesias, nimium vilipendi contingeret sententiam interdicti. Qui vero contra declarationes praedictas quicquam sibi usurpare praesumpserint, gravi subiaceant ultioni.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: During a general interdict bishops who were not prohibited and who were not culpable for the interdict can celebrate secretly; and today this is not a privilege of bishops but the common law, as in the final chapter On the Sentence of Excommunication in the Sixth Book, and there it is fully set forth whether, when, and in what manner celebration can occur during an interdict.

The same, in the same council.

Extending to bishops, in favor of the pontifical office, that which has been granted to certain religious, we concede that, when a land has been placed under a common interdict, with excommunicated and interdicted persons excluded, they may sometimes celebrate divine offices behind closed doors, and in a suppressed voice and without bells being rung, unless this very thing has been expressly interdicted to them also. But we grant this to those who have furnished no cause for the interdict and have introduced nothing of deceit or fraud, drawing such a benefit toward an unjust detriment.

> Tempore generalis interdicti episcopi non prohibiti, qui non fuerunt culpabiles interdicti, clam celebrare possunt, et hodie istud non est privilegium episcoporum, sed ius commune, ut in c. fin. de sent. excomm. in VI. et ibi plene habetur, an et quando et qualiter possit celebrari tempore interdicti. Idem in eodem.
>
> Quod nonnullis est religiosis indultum, in favorem pontificalis officii ad episcopos extendentes concedimus, ut, quum commune terrae interdictum fuerit, excommunicatis et interdictis exclusis possint quandoque ianuis clausis et supressa voce et non pulsatis campanis divina celebrare officia, nisi et hoc ipsum eis expresse fuerit interdictum. Verum hoc illis concedimus, qui causam aliquam non praestiterint interdicto, nec quicquam doli vel fraudis ingesserint, tale compendium ad iniquum dispendium pertrahentes.

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: Privileges are not to be violated even indirectly. It says this generally.

Honorius III, to the Archbishops and Bishops in whose dioceses monasteries and priories subject to the monastery of Cluny are situated.

The more greatly (And below:) Indeed, the beloved sons, the Abbot and Convent of Cluny, have offered us a grave complaint that certain of you and your officials, since they cannot pronounce sentences of excommunication and interdict against them and the monks of their order because they are fortified in this matter by privileges of the Apostolic See, pronounce the aforesaid sentences against those who grind in their mills or bake in their ovens, or communicate with them in any way by selling or buying or otherwise; and thus, observing not the force and power but the words alone of the apostolic privileges, they in a certain manner excommunicate the monks of the said order when they do not permit others to communicate with them. From this there also results the incongruity that the monks themselves, as regards this, are judged by the judgment of the Jews, and those who communicate with them in the aforesaid matters incur a greater excommunication than they would have incurred even by communicating with excommunicated persons. Therefore, being unwilling to pass over any longer under dissimulation these things already brought to us by frequent cries, we command all and each of you that henceforth you do not issue sentences of this kind in fraud of our privileges, because, if a cry concerning this should again ascend to us, we shall not be able to pass it by with conniving eyes without chastising the promulgators of such sentences with due severity.

> Privilegia non sunt violanda etiam indirecte. H. d. generaliter.
>
> Honorius III. Archiepiscopis et Episcopis, in quorum dioecesibus monasteria et prioratus Cluniacensi monasterio subiecta consistunt.
>
> Quanto amplius (Et infra:) Sane dilecti filii abbas et conventus Cluniacensis gravem nobis querimoniam obtulerunt, quod quidam vestrum et vestrorum officiales, quum in eos et sui ordinis monachos non possint excommunicationis et interdicti proferre sententias, eo, quod super hoc apostolicae sedis privilegiis sunt muniti, in eos, qui molunt in molendinis vel coquunt in furnis eorum, quicquid vendendo seu emendo aut alias eis communicant, sententias proferunt memoratas, et sic apostolicorum privilegiorum non vim et potestatem, sed sola verba servantes, dicti ordinis monachos quodammodo excommunicant, dum eis alios communicare non sinunt. Ex quo illud etiam evenit inconveniens, ut ipsi monachi, quantum ad hoc, iudicentur iudicio Iudaeorum, et qui eis communicant in praedictis maiorem excommunicationem incurrant, quam etiam excommunicatis communicando fuerint incursuri. Nolentes igitur haec crebris ad nos clamoribus iam perlata ulterius sub dissimulatione transire, vobis universis et singulis mandamus, quatenus huiusmodi sententias in fraudem privilegiorum nostrorum de cetero non feratis, quia, si super hoc ad nos denuo clamor adscenderit, non poterimus conniventibus oculis pertransire, quin promulgatores talium sententiarum severitate debita castigemus.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: Those who conduct themselves as laymen in habit, tonsure, and other respects do not defend themselves as clerics when caught in offenses. It is commonly summarized thus.

The same, to V., formerly the illustrious Queen of the English.

It was proposed on your behalf before us that certain literate men, whom neither habit nor tonsure declares to be clerics, dwelling in a land subject to your jurisdiction, when they are caught in certain offenses, in order to elude your jurisdiction and evade the due vengeance for their offenses, assume or even reassume an abandoned tonsure or clerical habit, although before they were regarded as laymen by all, and thus their offenses remain unpunished. Therefore, lest malice be fostered by a tonsure or habit thus reassumed, if you exercise your jurisdiction against offenders of this kind who were caught in an offense without tonsure and habit, we have determined that it is to be tolerated with equanimity, since indulgence ought not to be shown to the malice of men, but it should rather be opposed.

Qui in habitu et tonsura et ceteris ut laici conversantur, deprehensi in maleficiis se pro clericis non defendunt. Ita communiter summatur.

Idem V. quondam Anglorum Reginae illustri. Ex parte tua fuit propositum coram nobis, quod nonnulli literati, quos nec habitus nec tonsura clericos profitetur, in terra tuae iurisdictioni subiecta degentes, quum deprehenduntur in aliquibus forisfactis, ut iurisdictionem tuam eludant et debitam pro delictis ultionem evadant, assumunt seu etiam resumunt tonsuram abiectam seu habitum clericalem, licet ante pro laicis ab omnibus haberentur, et sic eorum delicta remament impunita. Ne igitur tonsura vel habitu sic resumpto malitia foveatur, si tuam iurisdictionem exerceas in huiusmodi delinquentes, qui sine tonsura et habitu in delicto fuerint deprehensi, aequanimiter duximus tolerandum, quum malitiis hominum indulgeri non debeat, sed potius obviari.

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: Civil law ought not to be taught at Paris and in neighboring places.

The same.

Upon the watchtower (And below: [cf. c. 5, On Masters, V. 5.]) Indeed, although holy Church does not reject the service of secular laws, which imitate sufficient traces of equity and justice, nevertheless, because in France and certain provinces laymen do not use the laws of the Roman emperors, and ecclesiastical causes of such a kind that cannot be resolved by canonical statutes rarely occur, so that the sacred page may be attended to more fully, and the disciples of Elisha may sit more freely beside the fullest streams like doves, when they have not found ladders in the doors upon which they may spread their feet apart, we firmly interdict and more strictly prohibit anyone from presuming to teach or hear civil law at Paris or in neighboring cities or other places. And one who acts contrary to this shall not only be excluded in the meantime from the advocacy of causes, but shall also be bound by the bishop of the place with the bond of excommunication, appeal being set aside. [But you, brothers and sons, shall observe the aforesaid things more diligently and cause them to be observed more studiously by others, so that you may deservedly be proved true friends of the bridegroom, etc. Given at Viterbo, on the seventh day before the Kalends of December, in the fourth year of our pontificate, 1219.]

> Parisiis et in locis vicinis ius civile legi non debet.
>
> Idem.
>
> Super specula (Et infra: [cf. c. 5. de mag. V. 5.]) Sane, licet sancta ecclesia legum saecularium non respuat famulatum, quae satis aequitatis et iustitiae vestigia imitantur: quia tamen in Francia et nonnullis provinciis laici Romanorum imperatorum legibus non utuntur, et occurrunt raro ecclesiasticae causae tales, quae non possint statutis canonicis expediri, ut plenius sacrae paginae insistatur, et discipuli Helisei liberius iuxta fluenta plenissima resideant ut columbae, dum in ianuis scalas non invenerint, ad quas divaricare valeant pedes suos, Firmiter interdicimus et districtius inhibemus, ne Parisius, vel in civitatibus seu aliis locis vicinis quisquam docere vel audire ius civile praesumat. Et qui contra fecerit, non solum a causarum patrociniis interim excludatur, verum etiam per episcopum loci appellatione postposita excommunicationis vinculo innodetur. [*Vos autem, fratres et filii, sic diligentius praescripta servetis et faciatis studiosius ab aliis observari, quod veri amici sponsi possitis merito comprobari, etc. Dat. Viterbii VII. Kal. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. IV. *1219.]

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: Renewal of a privilege does not introduce a new right but preserves the old one.

The same, to the Bishop of Bayeux.

Because it was not our intention that, through the renewal which we made of a certain writing of the monastery of Saint Stephen of Caen, which we found contained in the register of Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, the right of the church of Bayeux should be derogated from, since renewal neither confers a new right nor even takes away an old one, we will that you be in that state in which you are known to have existed at the time the renewal was obtained. Moreover, through this we intend to generate no prejudice to any right otherwise belonging to the same monastery.

> Innovatio privilegii ius novum non inducit, sed vetus conservat.
>
> Idem Episcopo Baiocensi. Quia intentionis nostrae non exstitit, ut per innovationem, quam fecimus cuiusdam scripti monasterii S. Stephani Cadomensis, quod in registro bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae praedecessoris nostri reperimus contineri, derogaretur iuri ecclesiae Baiocensis: Quum innovatio nec ius novum conferat, nec etiam tollat vetus, te in eo statu esse volumus, in quo tempore impetratae innovationis dignosceris exstitisse. Ceterum nullum per hoc intendimus iuri, alias eidem monasterio competenti, praeiudicium generari.

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: Privileged persons who may celebrate everywhere with a portable altar can do this without the license of prelates.

The same.

In those things which are known to pertain to divine worship, not a malign but rather a benign interpretation ought to be made. Whence we are compelled to wonder that, although we determined that it was to be granted to the Friars Preachers and Minors that, wherever they should be, they might celebrate with a portable altar without prejudice to parochial right, certain persons, as was recently proposed before us, interpreting our indulgence too strictly, endeavor to assert that through it the aforesaid brothers cannot do this without the assent of bishops, abbots, and other prelates; on account of which they do not permit them to celebrate according to the apostolic indulgence. But since, if the matter stood thus, the aforesaid indulgence would confer nothing upon them, because without it, with bishops and other prelates assenting, this would be permitted to them, we command your fraternity that, after rejecting an interpretation of this kind, provided nevertheless that they wholly abstain themselves from the other things which arise by parochial right, you do not defer to publish by our authority the license to celebrate thus given to them, so that the said brothers may appear to have obtained some favor in this matter from our indulgence. [Given at Rieti, on the fifth day before the Kalends of September, in the twentieth year, 1225.]

> Privilegiati, ut ubique possint cum altari viatico celebrare, hoc possunt sine licentia praelatorum.
>
> Idem.
>
> In his, quae ad cultum divinum facere dignoscuntur, non maligna, sed benigna esset potius interpretatio facienda. Unde mirari compellimur, quod, quum fratribus Praedicatoribus et Minoribus duximus indulgendum, ut, ubicunque fuerint, sine parochialis iuris praeiudicio cum altari valeant viatico celebrare, quidam, sicut nuper fuit propositum coram nobis, nimis stricte interpretando indulgentiam nostram, nituntur asserere, quod per eam praedicti fratres praeter episcoporum, abbatum et aliorum praelatorum assensum facere hoc non possint, propter quod eos celebrare iuxta indulgentiam apostolicam non permittunt. Quum autem, si res taliter se haberet, nihil eis conferret memorata indulgentia, sine qua id episcopis et aliis praelatis annuentibus liceret eisdem: fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus interpretatione huiusmodi reprobata, dum tamen ab aliis, quae iure parochiali proveniunt se prorsus abstineant, datam eis sic licentiam celebrandi auctoritate nostra non differas publicare, ita, quod dicti fratres aliquam ex indulgentia nostra videantur in hoc gratiam consecuti. [*Dat. Reate V. Kal. Sept. Ao. XX. *1225.]

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: A privilege concerning the nonpayment of tithes of noval lands does not comprehend tithes possessed at the time the privilege was obtained and by others, unless mention is made in the privilege of another's possession.

Gregory IX, to the Dean of the greater church and the Archdeacon of the Christianity of Lincoln.

Formerly, when litigation concerning tithes had arisen between the prior and convent of Butele on the one side and the prioress and nuns of Campesse on the other (And below:), on the counsel of our brothers we decree that prejudice ought not to be generated for the right of the aforesaid prior and convent concerning tithes of noval lands of which they were in possession at the time when apostolic indulgences concerning the nonpayment of tithes of noval lands were obtained by the other party, through those indulgences, which make no mention of this.

> Privilegium de decimis novalium non solvendis non comprehendit decimas tempore privilegii impetrati possessas ac aliis, nisi de possessione alterius in privilegio fiat mentio.
>
> Gregorius IX. maioris ecclesiae et Christianitatis Decano et Archidiacono Linconiensibus.

> Dudum inter priorem et conventum de Butele ex parte una, et priorissam et moniales de Campesse ex alia super decimis lite mota (Et infra:) De consilio fratrum nostrorum decernimus, iuri praedictorum prioris et conventus super decimis novalium, in quarum erant possessione tempore illo, quo indulgentiae apostolicae impetratae fuerunt, a parte altera de decimis novalium non solvendis, non debere per eas, non facientes de hoc aliquam mentionem, praeiudicium generari.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: Confraternity members of privileged persons, unless they have transferred themselves to them entirely, are bound to episcopal rights.

The same.

Certain persons, as you assert, received into the confraternity of privileged persons are unwilling to answer you concerning episcopal rights. But for as long as brothers of this kind make their stay in their own houses, you will be able to compel them to pay the said rights to you in full.

> Confratres privilegiatorum, nisi se ad eos in totum transtulerint, ad episcopalia iura tenentur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quidam, sicut asseris, in privilegiatorum fraternitate recepti, nolunt tibi de iuribus episcopalibus respondere. Verum, quamdiu huiusmodi fratres moram in domibus suis fecerint, eos compellere poteris ad dicta iura tibi integre persolvenda.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: As regards the privilege of retaining the tithe, land once noval is always noval.

The same, to the Chapter of Arles.

We respond briefly to your consultation that land concerning which no memory exists that it was ever cultivated, newly reduced to cultivation by religious, ought perpetually to be assessed by law, as regards immunity from paying tithes of noval lands, because otherwise it might sometimes happen that the indulgence concerning noval lands would bring them more detriment than benefit.

> Quoad privilegium retentionis decimae semel novale semper est novale.
>
> Idem Arelatensi Capitulo.
>
> Consultationi vestrae breviter respondemus, quod terra, de qua non exstat memoria, quod aliquando culta fuisset, redacta per religiosos noviter ad culturam, perpetuo debet quoad immunitatem de non solvendis decimis novalium iure censeri, quum alias nonnunquam contingeret indulgentiam de novalibus plus eis dispendii quam utilitatis afferre.

Title XXXIV: On Canonical Purgation

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A defamed person worthy of belief purges himself by oath; otherwise it is the contrary, and one who sins enormously is deemed unsuitable.

From the Council of Tribur.

A noble or freeborn man, if accused in a synod and he denies the crime, if he shall have been known to be trustworthy, shall purge himself with twelve freeborn men. But if previously he was caught in theft, perjury, or false testimony, he shall not be admitted to an oath; rather, purgation shall be imposed upon him as upon one who is not freeborn.

> DE PURGATIONE CANONICA.
>
> Infamatus fide dignus per iuramentum se purgat; alias secus, et censetur non idoneus enormiter peccans.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi. Nobilis homo vel ingenuus, si in synodo accusatus crimen negaverit, si fidelem eum esse sciverit, cum duodecim ingenuis se expurget. Si autem antea deprehensus fuerit in furto, aut periurio aut falso testimonio: non admittatur ad iusiurandum; sed ei, sicut qui ingenuus non est, purgatio indicatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A defamed person who, after being admonished three times, does not correct himself is suspended from office until purgation.

From the Council of Agde.

If any priest, negligent of his manner of life, has permitted evil things to be suspected of him through depraved examples, and the people, bound by the bishop through an oath or ban of the Christianity, have disclosed his infamy, and certain accusers of his crime have been lacking, he shall first be admonished separately by the bishop, then before two or three witnesses; and, if he has not amended himself, [in the assembly of priests] the bishop shall admonish him by public rebuke. But if not even thus has he corrected himself, he shall be suspended from office until fitting satisfaction, lest the faithful people suffer scandal in him.

> Infamatus, tertio monitus se non corrigens, usque ad purgationem ab officio suspenditur.
>
> Ex concilio Agathensi. Si quis presbyter, negligens vitae suae, pravis exemplis mala de se suspicari permiserit, et populus, ab episcopo iuramento seu banno Christianitatis adstrictus, infamiam eius patefecerit, certique accusatores criminis eius defuerint, admoneatur primo seorsum ab episcopo, deinde sub duobus vel tribus testibus, et, si non emendaverit, [in conventu presbyterorum] episcopus eum publica increpatione admoneat. Si vero nec sic se correxerit, ab officio suspendatur usque ad condignam satisfactionem, ne populus fidelium in eo scandalum patiatur.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Regulars also purge themselves of an offense according to the canonical rule.

From the Council of Meaux.

If nuns are accused of serving lusts and cannot be manifestly detected, they shall be compelled canonically to purge their evil reputation in accordance with the rule of their standing.

> Etiam regulares purgant se de delicto secundum regulam canonicam.
>
> Ex concilio Meldensi. Moniales, si libidinibus inservire accusentur, et manifeste detegi non valuerint, erga regulam suae opinionis malam famam canonice purgare cogantur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If the offense is probable, purgation is not imposed; otherwise it is. It says this as regards the title.

From the same council.

If anyone of ecclesiastical rank has manifestly disclosed himself as an assenter to or intermediary for abductors of the betrothed women of others, he shall be repelled from his own rank; and, if he has been assailed by probable suspicions arising from this, he shall canonically purge himself.

> Si delictum est probabile, non indicitur purgatio; alias secus. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Ex eodem.
>
> Si quis de gradu ecclesiastico raptoribus alienarum sponsarum se consensorem vel interventorem manifeste prodiderit, a proprio gradu repellatur, et, si verisimilibus exinde suspicionibus fuerit propulsatus, canonice se expurget.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A defamed person against whom a crime cannot be proved ought to purge himself by an oath concerning the truth, but the compurgators concerning belief.

Pope Innocent, to the Patriarch of Aquileia and the Bishop of Mantua.

We do not believe it escapes you how many times our brother A., Bishop of Trent, has been accused of simony in our presence and yours; but the accusers, bringing a writing, were unable to produce witnesses according to canonical form—namely, that he had given the church of Saint Peter to the priest P. for four measures of grain, which he had received from that church. But because neither the accusers nor the witnesses were able to proceed in that cause according to the form of the canons and the statutes of the holy Fathers, on the common counsel of our brothers we judge that he ought to purge himself of the aforesaid simony with three members of his own order and four abbots and religious priests as oath-helpers, in your presence. The tenor of the purgation shall, moreover, be of this kind: the same bishop shall first swear upon the holy Gospels of God that, for the church of Saint Peter to be given to the priest P., neither he himself, by himself or through an intermediary person, nor anyone for him with his knowledge received a price; then [however] the compurgators shall swear upon the holy Gospels of God that they believe he swore truly. [We therefore, etc. (cf. c. 17, C. II, qu. 5.)]

> Infamatus, contra quem crimen probari non potest, debet se purgare iuramento de veritate, compurgatores vero de credulitate.
>
> Innocentius Papa Aquilegiensi Patriarchae et Mantuano Episcopo.
>
> Quoties frater noster A. Tridentinus episcopus in nostra et vestra praesentia de simonia impetitus sit, vos latere non credimus, sed accusatores, scriptum afferentes, testes secundum formam canonicam producere nequiverunt, scilicet quod ecclesiam sancti Petri presbytero P. dederit pro quatuor modiis frumenti, quos ab eadem ecclesia acceperit. Verum quoniam nec accusatores nec testes secundum formam canonum et sanctorum Patrum statuta in causa ipsa procedere potuerunt, Communi fratrum nostrorum consilio iudicamus, ut tertia manu sui ordinis et quarta abbatum et religiosorum sacerdotum de supra dicta simonia, in vestra praesentia debeat se purgare. Porro purgationis tenor erit huiusmodi: Idem episcopus iurabit primum super sancta Dei evangelia, quod pro ecclesia sancti Petri presbytero P. danda nec ipse per se, nec per submissam personam, nec aliquis pro eo se sciente pretium recepit; deinde [vero] compurgatores super sancta Dei evangelia iurabunt, quod ipsi credunt, eum verum iurasse. [Nos itaque etc. (cf. c. 17. C. II. qu. 5.)]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A bishop compels his defamed parishioner to purge himself before him, unless he has legitimately appealed from him.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Genoa.

We preside among others with supreme dignity, although undeserving, so that we ought to declare things which are doubtful and diligently respond to the consultations of individuals insofar as the Lord has ministered to us, so that questions may be terminated under the examination of the Roman Church, which by the Lord's disposition obtains the primacy among the other churches. Whence, because your fraternity wished to consult us as to whether a bishop can compel his parishioner, when public report accuses him, to purgation, we respond to your consultation in this manner: that, if he labors under public infamy concerning any crime, when an accuser and witnesses are lacking, he is to be compelled to purgation by the bishop himself, unless perhaps he has determined to appeal concerning this to a superior judge. Indeed, if he has appealed, he shall obey the judgment of him to whose examination he has willed to transfer the cause through appeal.

Episcopus parochianum suum infamatum compellit ad se purgandum, nisi ab eo legitime appellaverit.

Alexander III. Genuensi Episcopo.

Nos inter alios praeeminemus suprema, licet immeriti, dignitate, ut quae dubia sunt debeamus declarare, et singulorum consultationibus, quantum nobis Dominus ministraverit, sollicite respondere, ut quaestiones sub examine Romanae ecclesiae terminentur, quae inter alias ecclesias disponente Domino obtinet principatum. Unde, Quia nos tua fraternitas consulere voluit, utrum episcopus parochianum suum, publica fama eum accusante, ad purgationem cogere possit, consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si de aliquo crimine publica laborat infamia, accusatore et testibus deficientibus ad purgationem est per ipsum episcopum compellendus, nisi forte super ipso ad superiorem iudicem duxerit appellandum. Sane, si appellaverit, eius parebit iudicio, ad cuius examen causam voluerit per appellationem transferre.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Compurgators ought to be honorable and to have knowledge of the person whom they purge, and they ought not to be impeded by the judge or another; and one who fails in purgation is punished as convicted.

The same, to the Bishop-elect of Gaeta.

When P. Manconella, priest (And below: [cf. c. 10, On Accusations, V. 1.]) We will, however, that his purgators be of such honor and reputation that it is probable that they would be unwilling to swear falsely through love, hatred, or consideration of money. But so that they may appear suitable, it is necessary that they know the life and manner of living of the person whom they ought to purge. You shall take care to deprive one who fails in purgation of every ecclesiastical office and benefice, taking care by every means that, if any should wish to assist a person purging himself in his purgation, you show them no malevolence or indignation, nor impede them in any manner, or permit them, so far as lies in you, to be impeded by others.

Compurgatores debent esse honesti, et notum habere eum, quem purgant, nec debent a iudice vel alio impediri; et deficiens in purgatione punitur ut convictus.

Idem Gaietanensi Electo.

Quum P. Manconella presbyter (Et infra: [*cf. c. *10. de accus. V. 1.]) Purgatores vero illius honestatis et opinionis esse volumus, quod verisimile sit, eos nolle amore vel odio seu obtentu pecuniae deierare. Ut autem idonei appareant, necesse est, ut eius, quem purgare debent, vitam et conversationem agnoscant. Deficientem vero in purgatione omni officio et beneficio ecclesiastico privare procures, tibi omnibus modis praecavens, quod, si qui purgando in sua voluerint purgatione assistere, nullam eis malevolentiam vel indignationem ostendas, nec eos aliquo modo impedias, vel ab aliis, quantum in te est, impediri permittas.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: An absolution made according to vulgar purgation does not hold, and notwithstanding it purgation can be imposed anew and an accusation is admitted.

Lucius III.

From the contents of your letters we have understood that, when you had suspended the priest H., the bearer of the present letters, from the priestly office because he was defamed concerning homicide, after the counsel of the brothers in your episcopate had been consulted, he produced letters of your predecessor of good memory, from which it appeared that he had purged his innocence by the judgment of cold water and that the bishop had absolved him by his letters; a scholar also, who at the instigation of the devil had perpetrated the homicide, affirmed, after touching the holy Gospels, that he himself was immune from the crime. But because foreign judgments are prohibited, we, judging that the purgation which he furnished was not sufficient, command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if suitable accusers have not appeared who can convict him of the homicide, you enjoin upon him that he show his innocence through canonical purgation with seven or five members of his own order as oath-helpers, as you shall know to be expedient; and when he has furnished it, you shall relax the suspension without delay and difficulty and, announcing him to be a man of good testimony, absolve him from the infamy of homicide, no contradiction or appeal notwithstanding, supported by our authority. The one who is defamed, however, shall affirm by a furnished oath that he is immune from the crime of homicide, and the purgators ought to swear that they believe he swore truly.

Absolutio, facta secundum purgationem vulgarem, non tenet, et ea non obstante potest indici de novo purgatio, et admittitur accusatio.

Lucius III. Ex tuarum intelleximus continentia literarum, quod, quum H. presbyterum latorem praesentium, quia infamabatur de homicidio, communicato fratrum consilio in episcopatu tuo, a sacerdotali officio suspendisses, bonae memoriae praedecessoris tui literas tulit in medium, quibus apparuit, eum iudicio aquae frigidae suam innocentiam purgavisse, et episcopum suis eum literis absolvisse, scholaris etiam, qui homicidium instigante diabolo perpetraverat, immunem se ipsum a crimine, tactis sacrosanctis evangeliis, affirmavit. Quia vero peregrina iudicia sunt inhibita, purgationem, quam praestitit, sufficere non putantes, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si accusatores idonei non apparuerint, qui eum de homicidio convincere possint, ut cum septima aut quinta manu sui ordinis, sicut expedire cognoveris, per purgationem canonicam innocentiam suam ostendat, sibi iniungas; quam quum praestiterit, suspensionem sine mora et difficultate relaxes, et eum testimonii boni virum annuncians, ab infamia homicidii nullius contradictione vel appellatione obstante auctoritate nostra fretus absolvas. Is autem, qui infamatur, sese immunem a crimine homicidii praestito iuramento firmabit, et purgatores, quod eum credant verum iurasse, iurare debebunt.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It suffices that a compurgator be tolerated by the Church, be of good reputation, and not be condemned as suspected of a crime.

The same, to the Bishop of Winchester.

Established in our presence, P. the deacon of Bochan showed us by his assertion (And below:) Furthermore, this induces no small wonder in us: that you were unwilling to receive the offered purgation unless you first commended the names of the individual persons who wished to purge the said P. and first diligently inquired concerning their nations and the other circumstances, as though you were going to make ordinations—would that you discussed ordinands in this way! Indeed, in purgations to be made, since it is sufficient for those who furnish an oath for the person to be purged to swear according to their own conscience and opinion that the person to be purged is immune from the crime or that he furnished a good oath, if the purgators are tolerated by the Church, are of good reputation while ministering in their orders, and have not been condemned in judgment for a crime, they are without doubt to be admitted without any investigation.

Sufficit, quod compurgator sit toleratus ab ecclesia bonae famae, nec de crimine suspectus condemnatus.

Idem Vintoniensi Episcopo.

Constitutus in praesentia nostra P. diaconus de Bochan sua nobis assertione monstravit (Et infra:) Praeterea illud nobis non modicam admirationem inducit, quod purgationem oblatam recipere noluisti, nisi prius commendasses nomina singulorum, qui iam dictum P. purgare volebant, et de nationibus et ceteris circumstantiis prius inquireres diligenter, tanquam esses ordinationes facturus: utinam sic discuteres ordinandos! Sane in purgationibus faciendis, quum satis sit illis, qui pro purgando exhibent iuramentum, secundum propriam conscientiam et opinionem iurare, quod purgandus a crimine sit immunis, vel quod bonum exhibuit iuramentum, si purgatores ab ecclesia tolerentur, et sint bonae famae in suis ordinibus ministrantes, nec in iudicio pro crimine condemnati: procul dubio sunt absque ullius indagine admittendi.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: On account of the magnitude of the crime, a defamed person can be suspended not only from office but also from benefice until he has purged himself. This is the first point. And on this account the number of compurgators is increased. This is the second point. For a cause, someone is sometimes suspended for a time after purgation has been furnished. This is the third point. And one who fails in purgation is punished as convicted. This is the fourth point.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Sens.

Among our solicitudes this ought to be the chief: that we catch the little foxes *which endeavor to demolish the vineyard of the Lord, having certain diverse appearances but tails joined to one another, because in vanity they agree in the same thing. For these are the taverners who mix water with wine, who serve the poison of the dragon in the golden cup of Babylon, who, according to the prophetic word, bend the bow, a bitter thing, so that they may shoot the innocent in secret; their error creeps like a cancer in such a way that, unless the cluster is injured in the flower, it will germinate fruit not only bitter but even pestiferous. The Apostle, an eminent preacher, describes these in his epistle with prophetic speech and teaches that they are to be avoided in every way; against them priests ought to sound with silver trumpets so that, with the people crying out and the ark of the covenant preceding, the walls of Jericho—which had already been condemned by perpetual anathema—may fall, in such a way that, if anyone should presume to steal from it even a golden rule, he shall be overwhelmed with stones with Achor, the son of Charmi. *[You, therefore, as a provident and discreet man, fulfill the office of a true pastor and exercise pastoral solicitude purely and fully over the flock committed to you, while you both are zealous for the law of Christ and, attacking the error of heretics, unsheathe the sword of canonical vengeance against their supporters. For vigilantly you keep watch over your flock, lest, after abandoning the fold of the true shepherd, which is one, the sheep rashly depart after the tracks of flocks which are not of it, or lest the wolf seize and scatter those whom truth has united in the same fold under one shepherd of the catholic faith. Appointed among the chief cultivators of the vineyard of the Lord of Sabaoth, you do not suffer the little foxes which we have described to demolish its appearance, but endeavor rather to catch or drive them away. Indeed, as we have learned from the letters of your fraternity, when at the prayers of our venerable brother the Bishop of Auxerre you had gone to the town which is called La Charité, with him and our venerable brothers the Bishops of Nevers and Meaux present, you caused the people of that town to be assembled together, where, after a diligent inquiry had been held concerning heretics and their doctrines, among others whom you found publicly defamed concerning heretical depravity, you learned that the Dean of Nevers was burdened by common opinion and that through him and in him no small scandal had been manifested in the minds of Catholics. Whence, on account of the vehement infamy and grave scandal, you suspended him from office and benefice, assigning him a certain day at Auxerre on which he should present himself before you to defend himself from the crime charged. And when he had come to your presence at the appointed term, with the said Bishops of Auxerre and Nevers and many persons learned in both laws present, since no certain accuser appeared against him, by virtue of your office you caused witnesses both for him and against him to be received and diligently examined and the attestations also to be published. And when afterward he did not present himself before you on the day granted to him, although you had granted him free opportunity to speak against the witnesses and their statements and to propose his arguments, after certain proofs and allegations had been proposed and he had finally renounced them, he sought a sentence. But you, withdrawing together with our venerable brothers the Bishop of Troyes and the said Bishops of Auxerre and Nevers, after the attestations had been diligently inspected and the counsel of many wise men employed, because the crime against him had not been clearly proved, did not determine that he was to be condemned for heresy. But because from the statements of the witnesses there was much presumption against him, inasmuch as it had been manifestly proved that he had not only had familiarity with heretics but had even knowingly sought it, and since he also labored under public infamy and so great a scandal had been stirred up against him that it could not be erased by canonical purgation, you were unwilling either to absolve him or to receive the purgation which he had offered at the beginning and was then also offering, but determined that he was to be sent to the Apostolic See with your letters, understanding that from the fullness of power granted to us we can dispense short of canonical punishment and increase the rigor of severity beyond it. Moreover, when he had afterward been established in our presence, we granted him a common audience in our consistory, where he endeavored to excuse himself in many ways, alleging especially that, since he offered purgation when no legitimate accuser appeared, witnesses against him ought not to have been admitted in any way.] Therefore, although an ecclesiastical constitution teaches that such persons are to be suspended only from office until canonical purgation, nevertheless, because you suspended him also from benefice on account of the enormity of the crime, we are unwilling to disapprove it; nor do we disapprove even this: that, although no legitimate accuser appeared against him, nevertheless by virtue of your office, with public report making the accusation, you wished to inquire more fully into the truth. Attending, however, to the widespread infamy, grave scandal, and vehement suspicion arising from the statements of the witnesses, which appeared to make against the same dean, since purgation would have to be imposed upon him on account of any one of them, and preserving justice while softening rigor, on the counsel of our brothers, the archbishops [and] bishops existing at the Apostolic See, we have determined that a purgation of the fourteenth hand of his order is to be imposed upon him. Therefore, remitting him to you with apostolic letters so that he may be purged where he is known to be defamed, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, having summoned with you the said Bishop of Nevers and our venerable brother the Bishop of Paris, you receive the purgation imposed upon him by us, yet in such a way that those who proceed to prove his purgation are Catholics in faith and approved in life, who have known his manner of life and life not so much in modern time as in the past; but, when the purgation has been received, do not postpone restoring his benefice to him, lest he be compelled to beg, to the reproach of the clergy. As a punishment, however, for that familiarity which he is known knowingly to have had with heretics, we will that he remain suspended from office until the scandal is quieted, yet in such a way that he publicly abjure familiarity with heretics. You shall moreover strictly command him that in the aforesaid and other surrounding towns he profess and preach the catholic faith, and confound and detest heretical depravity, henceforth adorning his life with good works in such a way that the infamy may be converted into good reputation and every scandal and suspicion may be erased from the minds of Catholics. But if perhaps he should fail in the purgation, you shall strike him with the sword of ecclesiastical discipline and shall not omit to thrust him, deposed from office and benefice, into a strict monastery to perform penance. [Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of May, 1199.]

> Propter magnitudinem criminis infamatus suspendi potest, nedum ab officio, sed etiam a beneficio, donec se purgaverit. Hoc primo. Et augetur propter hoc numerus compurgatorum. Hoc secundo. Ex causa interdum post purgationem praestitam suspenditur quis ad tempus. Hoc tertio. Et deficiens in purgatione punitur convictus. Hoc quarto.
>
> Innocentius III. Senonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Inter sollicitudines nostras illa debet esse praecipua, ut capiamus vulpeculas, *quae moliuntur vineam Domini demoliri, species quidam habentes diversas, sed caudas ad invicem colligatas, quia de vanitate conveniunt in id ipsum. Hi sunt namque caupones, qui aquam vino commiscent, qui virus draconis in aureo calice Babylonis propinant, qui iuxta verbum propheticum arcum rem amaram intendunt, ut sagittent innoxios in occultis, quorum error serpit ut cancer ita, quod, nisi botrus in flore laedatur, fructum non solum amarum, sed etiam pestiferum germinabit. Hos Apostolus egregius praedicator in epistola sua prophetico sermone describit, et docet omnibus modis evitandos, contra quos sacerdotes tubis argenteis clangere debent, ut conclamante populo, arca foederis praecedente, muri corruant Hiericho, quae iam fuerat perpetuo anathemate condemnata, ita, quod, si quis ex ea vel regulam auream furari praesumpserit, cum Achor filio Charmi lapidibus obruatur. *[Tu ergo sicut vir providus et discretus veri pastoris adimples officium, et super grege tibi commisso pure ac plene sollicitudinem pastoralem exerces, dum et legem Christi zelaris, et haereticorum impugnans errorem, in fautores ipsorum exseris gladium canonicae ultionis. Vigilans enim vigilas super grege tuo, ne relicto veri pastoris ovili, quod est unum, oves aberrent, post vestigia gregum, qui non sunt ex eo, temere abeuntes; vel ne lupus eas rapiat, et dispergat, quas veritas in eodem ovili sub uno pastore fidei catholicae counivit. Inter praecipuos quidem vineae domini Sabaoth agricolas deputatus vulpeculas, quas descripsimus, non pateris eius speciem demoliri: sed eas vel capere potius satagis vel fugare. Sane, sicut ex literis tuae fraternitatis accepimus, quum ad preces venerabilis fratris nostri Altissiodorensis episcopi ad villam, quae Charitas dicitur, accessisses, praesentibus eodem et venerabilibus fratribus nostris Nivernensi et Meldensi episcopis in unum fecisti eiusdem villae populum congregari, ubi de haereticis et eorum dogmatibus inquisitione diligenti habita, inter alios, quos super haeretica pravitate reperisti publice infamatos, decanum Nivernensem communi didicisti opinione gravari, et in eo et per eum non modicum fuisse scandalum catholicorum animis declaratum. Unde propter vehementem infamiam et grave scandalum ipsum ab officio et beneficio suspendisti, apud Altissiodorum ei diem certum assignans, quo tuo se conspectui praesentaret ab obiecto crimine defensurum. Quumque statuto termino ad tuam praesentiam accessisset, praesentibus dictis Altissiodorensi et Nivernensi episcopis, ac pluribus in utroque iure peritis, quum certus accusator contra eum minime compareret, tu ex officio tuo testes tam pro ipso quam contra ipsum recipi ac diligenter examinari fecisti, et attestationes etiam publicari. Quumque postmodum non ad concessum ei diem tuo se conspectui praesentasset, quum facultatem ei liberam indulsisses in testes ac eorum dicta dicendi ac proponendi suas in medium rationes, quibusdam propositis probationibus et allegationibus tandem renuncians, sententiam postulavit. Tu vero cum venerabilibus fratribus nostris Trecensi ac dictis Altissiodorensi et Nivernensi episcopis secedens in unum, inspectis attestationibus diligenter, et adhibito plurium consilio sapientum, quia crimen contra eum liquido probatum non erat, ipsum non duxisti de haeresi condemnandum. Verum quoniam ex dictis testium multa erat praesumptio contra eum, utpote quum esset manifeste probatum, eum familiaritatem haereticorum non solum habuisse, sed etiam captasse scienter, quum publica etiam laboraret infamia, et tantum suscitatum esset scandalum contra ipsum, quod non posset canonica purgatione deleri, nec ipsum absolvere, nec purgationem, quam obtulerat ab initio et tunc etiam offerebat, recipere voluisti, sed ipsum cum literis tuis ad sedem duxisti apostolicam destinandum, intelligens, quod ex concessa nobis plenitudine potestatis citra poenam canonicam dispensare possimus, et ultra eam rigorem severitatis augere. Ceterum ei postmodum in nostra praesentia constituto communem audientiam in consistorio nostro concessimus, ubi se multipliciter nisus est excusare, illud praesertim allegans, quod, quum non apparente accusatore legitimo purgationem offerret, testes contra eum non fuerant aliquatenus admittendi.] Licet ergo ecclesiastica constitutio tales ab officio tantum usque ad purgationem canonicam doceat suspendendos, quia tamen eum etiam a beneficio propter immanitatem criminis suspendisti, nolumus improbare; nec illud etiam improbamus, quod, licet contra eum nullus accusator legitimus appareret, ex officio tuo tamen, fama publica deferente, voluisti plenius inquirere veritatem. Attendentes autem vulgatam infamiam, grave scandalum, et vehementem suspicionem ex testium dictis obortam, quae contra eundem decanum facere videbantur, quum propter eorum quodlibet ei esset purgatio indicenda, et servantes iustitiam et mollientes, rigorem, *de consilio fratrum nostrorum, archiepiscoporum *[et] episcoporum apud sedem apostolicam exsistentium, purgationem ei quartae decimae manus sui ordinis duximus indicendam. Ipsum igitur ad te cum literis apostolicis remittentes, ut ibi purgetur, ubi noscitur infamatus, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, accitis tecum dicto Nivernensi et venerabili fratre nostro Parisiensi episcopis, indictam ei a nobis purgationem accipias, ita tamen, ut, qui ad eius purgationem processerint comprobandam, sint fide catholici et vita probati, qui conversationem et vitam ipsius non tam moderno tempore noverint quam transacto; purgatione vero recepta beneficium ei restituere non postponas, ne cogatur in cleri opprobrium mendicare. In poenam autem familiaritatis illius, quam cum haereticis scienter habuisse dignoscitur, eum ab officio volumus manere suspensum, donec scandalum sopiatur, ita tamen, ut publice familiaritatem haereticorum abiuret. Praecipias insuper ei districte, ut in praedicta et aliis villis circumpositis profiteatur et praedicet fidem catholicam, ac confundat et detestetur haereticam pravitatem, sic deinceps vitam suam bonis adornans operibus, ut infamia convertatur in bonam famam, et omne scandalum et suspicio de catholicorum mentibus deleatur. Quodsi forsan in purgatione defecerit, eum ecclesiasticae disciplinae mucrone percellas, et ab officio et beneficio depositum ad agendam poenitentiam in arctum monasterium detrudere non omittas. [*Dat. Lat. Non. Maii. *1199.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: It is brief and cannot be summarized otherwise.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint-Denis and the Priest of Saint Martin.

When the beloved (And below:) We will and command you, however, to attend to this: that such persons as are neighboring and honorable be admitted to this kind of purgation. [But if not all, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the ninth day before the Kalends of April, 1202.]

> Breve est, nec potest aliter summari. Idem Abbati sancti Dionysii et Presbytero S. Martini. Quum dilectus (Et infra:) Illud autem vos attendere volumus et mandamus, ut tales ad purgationem huiusmodi admittantur personae, quae vicinae sint et honestae. [*Quod si non omnes etc. Dat. Lat. IX. Kal. Apr. *1202.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If infamy does not take its origin from probable conjectures, purgation is not to be imposed of necessity; nevertheless, it can be imposed at the insistence of the person to be purged.

The same.

When in his youth (And below: [cf. c. 15, On Presumptions, II. 23.]) But because a father chastises the son whom he loves, for greater caution we enjoined upon the Bishop of Pécs through our letters that, by ceasing from his familiarity, he should conduct himself before God and men in such a way that sinister suspicion concerning him could not be held. But the enemy man, surreptitiously obtaining a rescript of those letters, wickedly published it before the aforesaid king and magnates of the kingdom so that the same bishop should thereby be defamed more greatly, since he appeared to be unbelievable and suspect to us. Whence we, attending to so great a wickedness of his rivals, although we were pressed many times against him, nevertheless could never be moved against him, knowing that a multitude easily follows the statement of one person. But when the same bishop had been postulated to the metropolitan see of Esztergom, certain persons who opposed that postulation, so that they might more easily impede his promotion, endeavored to rekindle the coals of that accusation. Whence a certain proctor of his, established in our presence, on the counsel of certain of his friends who indeed had a good zeal concerning this, but not according to knowledge, began before us in the presence of our brothers insistently to petition that we cause canonical purgation to be imposed upon the same bishop so that he might demonstrate his innocence. We, however, regarding a petition of this kind as insufficiently provident, indeed, as exceedingly improvident, often wished to recall the proctor himself from it, both because the often-mentioned bishop did not appear among good and serious men to be defamed concerning that crime, since his fellow bishops, questioned concerning this by apostolic command, took care to furnish us laudable testimony concerning him, and because such defamation appeared to have proceeded from enemies and rivals, as was expressed above. Whence, since his previous life appeared commendable and a deed of this kind appeared incredible, we did not believe that any purgation was henceforth to be imposed upon him. Moreover, because the proctor insisted, we were compelled, not by necessity of law but by the importunity of the petitioner, to command that purgation be imposed upon him by you with two [bishops and three] abbots, although we had protested to the same proctor that such a petition was then being made insufficiently providently for another also reason: namely, because the suffragans of the church of Esztergom would scarcely at that time purge that man, since they contradicted him in the matter of the postulation, and the suffragans of the church of Kalocsa would then by no means purge him, because a controversy concerning the metropolitan see of Esztergom was being disputed between him and the Archbishop of Kalocsa. Whence, since there are no other pontiffs in Hungary, it deservedly appeared that he could not purge himself in that article through the bishops of his kingdom. [Therefore, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the Nones of July, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> Si infamia ortum non habet ex probabilibus coniecturis, non est de necessitate indicenda purgatio; potest tamen indici ad instantiam purgandi. Idem.
>
> Quum in iuventute sua (Et infra: [*cf. c. *15. de praesumpt. II. 23.]) Quia vero pater filium, quem diligit, corripit, nos Quinqueecclesiensi episcopo per literas nostras ad maiorem cautelam iniunximus, ut ab illius familiaritate cessando apud Deum et homines taliter se haberet, quod sinistra de ipso suspicio non possit haberi. Sed inimicus homo, rescriptum literarum illarum surripiens, apud praedictum regem et regni magnates ipsum nequiter publicavit, ut sic idem episcopus deberet amplius infamari, quum videretur esse nobis incredibilis et suspectus. Unde nos, tantam aemulorum nequitiam attendentes, licet pulsati fuerimus multoties contra eum, nunquam tamen adversus ipsum potuimus commoveri, scientes, quod dictum unius facile sequitur multitudo. Ubi vero idem episcopus ad Strigoniensem metropolim exstitit postulatus, quidam, qui super ipsa postulatione adversabantur eidem, ut promotionem ipsius facilius impedirent, illius criminationis carbones reaccendere sunt moliti. Unde quidam procurator ipsius, in nostra praesentia constitutus, de consilio quorundam amicorum suorum, qui super hoc bonum quidem zelum habebant, sed non secundum scientiam, coepit a nobis in praesentia fratrum nostrorum cum instantia postulare, quatenus eidem episcopo purgationem canonicam faceremus indici, ut suam innocentiam demonstraret. Nos autem, postulationem huiusmodi minus providam, immo nimis improvidam reputantes, procuratorem ipsum ab ea saepe voluimus revocare, tum quia saepe fatus episcopus non videbatur apud bonos et graves de illo crimine infamatus, quum coepiscopi sui, super hoc ex mandato apostolico requisiti, laudabile testimonium de ipso nobis curaverint perhibere, tum quia talis infamatio videbatur ab inimicis et aemulis processisse, sicut superius est expressum. Unde quum ante acta vita eius commendabilis appareret, et huiusmodi facinus incredibile videretur: non credebamus, ei purgationem aliquam amodo indicendam. Ceterum, quia procurator instabat, compulsi fuimus, non iuris necessitate, sed importunitate petentis, ut per vos ei purgationem canonicam cum duobus [episcopis et tribus] abbatibus mandaremus indici, quamvis eidem procuratori fuerimus protestati, quod ex alia quoque causa talis petitio minus provide tunc fiebat, quia videlicet Strigoniensis ecclesiae suffraganei vix eo tempore purgarent eundem, qui in facto postulationis contradicebant eidem, et suffraganei Colocensis ecclesiae ipsum minime tunc purgarent, quia inter eum et Colocensem archiepiscopum de Strigoniensi metropoli contentio vertebatur. Unde, quum non sint alii pontifices in Hungaria, merito videbatur, quod per episcopos regni sui non posset in illo articulo se purgare. [Propterea etc. Dat. Ferentini Non. Iul. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A compurgator swears concerning belief.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tyre.

Concerning witnesses (And below: [cf. c. 29, On Witnesses, II. 20.]) But those who are introduced to purge the infamy of someone are bound to affirm by oath this alone: that they believe that the person who is purged speaks the truth by oath. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Nones of January, 1199.]

> Compurgator iurat de credulitate.
>
> Idem Tyronensi Archiepiscopo.

De testibus (Et infra: [cf. c. 29. de test. II. 20.]) Illi vero, qui ad purgandam alicuius infamiam inducuntur, id solum tenentur iuramento firmare, quod veritatem credunt eum iuramento dicere, qui purgatur. [Dat. Lat. IV. Non. Ian. 1199.]

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A person defamed concerning a defect of birth ought not to be promoted unless he first purges himself.

The same, to the Bishop of Florence.

Coming to our presence, the beloved son T., deacon, your parishioner, showed us by a humble intimation that, when it was said by his rivals that he was the son of a priest, you neither wished to promote him to the order of the presbyterate nor permitted him to be promoted by another, although neither this nor anything else had been proved against him. Therefore, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if the deacon himself was publicly besprinkled with a mark of this kind and it cannot be legitimately established to you concerning it, after purgation has been received from him, provided that no other canonical impediment obstructs, you do not defer on this account to promote him to the office of priest, because, although it is not a mark of offense, it is nevertheless a mark of defect impeding promotion to sacred orders. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the eighth day before the Ides of February, in the ninth year, 1207.]

Infamatus super defectu natalium non debet promoveri, nisi prius se purget.

Idem Florentino Episcopo.

Accedens ad praesentiam nostram dilectus filius T. diaconus, parochianus tuus, humili nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum a suis aemulis diceretur, quod esset filius sacerdotis, tu eum nec promovere ad presbyteratus ordinem voluisti, nec permisisti ab alio promoveri, quamquam vel id vel aliud probatum non fuerit contra ipsum. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si diaconus ipse publice fuerit huiusmodi nota respersus, et de ipsa tibi legitime constare non poterit, purgatione ab ipso recepta, dummodo aliud canonicum non obsistat, ipsum non differas propter hoc ad sacerdotis officium promovere, quia, etsi non sit nota delicti, est tamen nota defectus impedientis ad sacros ordines promovendum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VIII. Febr. Ao. IX. 1207.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Purgation is not to be imposed concerning a notorious crime; and, while a case concerning crimes is pending before a delegate of the Pope, a purgation received concerning them by the ordinary is not valid.

The same, to the Abbot of Eugen. and the Scholastic of Modena.

When, for the beloved sons H. the priest and G., proctor of the cleric O., who had been constituted in our presence, we granted our beloved son T., our subdeacon and chaplain, as auditor, the same proctor proposed before him that, when the said priest had been publicly defamed concerning the crime of incest, the Bishop of Constance of good memory, the ordinary judge, imposed purgation upon him; and, when he had been unable to purge himself, he was by sentence deprived by him in a full synod of his churches, which he nevertheless held for some time, occupied by violence. And when afterwards the same priest publicly kept in his house after bringing her there the wife of one of his blood relatives, at the petition of H., the parish priest of Heniso, and of certain other clerics of the diocese of Constance, we say that we sent our letters to judges in this form: namely, that, if the said priest could not purge himself before them concerning the crime of adultery and incest, they should chastise him with the due penalty. They, proceeding in the business according to the tenor of our mandate, when it was established to them that the same priest, because he had failed in the purgation, had been condemned in synod by the aforesaid bishop, deprived him by sentence, as contumacious, of the aforesaid churches, especially since the crime of incest and adultery, as notorious, was manifestly evident to them; and they granted to the beloved son, the Abbot of Saint Gall, to whom the donation of those churches pertained, free power to confer those churches upon other persons, and he afterwards assigned them to the above-mentioned cleric O. [But the same priest, coming to the Apostolic See and falsely asserting that he had been despoiled with the order of law disregarded, carried back our letters to the abbot of the house of Saint Peter and his fellow judges, who were altogether suspect to the other party. After a copy of those letters had been denied to the same O., and after they had refused to admit his proof concerning the falsity of the letters, they, with the order of law disregarded and after an appeal had lawfully been interposed to us, delivered a sentence of restitution for the same priest, which O. proposed that he would prove at the proper place and time through lawful witnesses.] The said priest, however, among other things, responded on the opposing side that [although he had been defamed concerning the foregoing crimes by hostile enemies, and purgation had on that account been imposed upon him by the chapter of Constance, nevertheless no one wished to receive it, although he had been prepared to furnish it within the term fixed for him; adding that] the proceeding of the aforesaid judges deserved to be retracted because, when joinder of issue had not occurred, and after an appeal had been interposed to us, they had presumed to proceed against him. [Moreover, the said priest proposed by way of complaint that, when he had been despoiled of the aforesaid churches by violence by the aforesaid O. and his accomplices, and, after letters of restitution had been obtained first to the above-mentioned abbot of the house of Saint Peter and his fellow judges, and secondly to the bishop-elect of Constance, he had deserved to obtain the benefit of restitution through both, the same O. did not fear to despoil him repeatedly. Hence, when on this account he and his accomplices, bound by a sentence of excommunication, persisted in their contumacy, we gave orders to the aforesaid bishop-elect and his fellow judges that, supported by our authority, they should more strictly prohibit divine offices from being said in places in which the same excommunicated persons were present, and, with appeal ceasing, should suspend them from divine things until they competently satisfied the often-mentioned priest for the damages and injuries inflicted, or presented themselves before us to answer for so great a contempt. But they, fleeing to the refuge of an appeal, although under interdict, celebrate divine rites contrary to the prohibition of those judges, and they did not take care to send a representative to our presence.] He added that, to abolish every infamy, he had taken care to furnish the purgation imposed by the bishop-elect of Constance; yet the often-mentioned rivals do not cease to defame him. Hence he humbly supplicated us that, absolved from their claims, we should cause him to enjoy peaceful possession of the aforesaid churches, [lawfully punishing those who, excommunicated and under interdict, presumed to celebrate divine offices. To these things the proctor added that the said purgation was received by the bishop-elect while the other party was absent and wholly ignorant, which he also asserted that he would prove.]

Therefore, these and the other things that were proposed before the aforesaid chaplain having been more fully understood, although those letters said to have been obtained to the aforesaid judges, or a transcript of them, had not been shown before us, nevertheless, because from the tenor of their report, which the said proctor exhibited, it was clearly established to us—as if the letters themselves had been shown—that those judges had proceeded with the order of law disregarded, by apostolic authority we retract both their proceeding and the grant of the churches made by the aforesaid abbot at their mandate, especially since the sequence of the report itself contains contradictory and opposing things. For it is said that the crime of the same priest had been public and notorious to such a degree that no place at all remained for denial, seeing that the people of the entire neighborhood were witnesses to it; and yet it is stated there beforehand that they fixed for the same priest a peremptory term in which, if he could, he might canonically purge himself concerning the infamy of the aforesaid crimes; for, assuredly, if the crime was notorious, purgation was certainly not to be imposed upon him, but a sentence of condemnation was to be promulgated against him. [We have also thought that the sentence of restitution delivered for the same priest by different judges ought to be approved, commanding you by the authority of the present letters that you introduce the same priest into corporal possession of the aforesaid churches, with the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal removed, and defend him after he has been introduced; constraining objectors, if there are any, by ecclesiastical censure with appeal postponed, and causing competent satisfaction to be made to the same priest both concerning the fruits received in the meantime from the aforesaid churches and concerning the damages and injuries inflicted. Full restitution having been made, if a lawful opponent appears who can and wishes lawfully to prove that the same priest, because he failed in a purgation lawfully imposed upon him, was condemned by the aforesaid bishop and despoiled of the often-mentioned churches, you shall impose perpetual silence upon him concerning those churches, causing them to be canonically provided with suitable persons by those to whom it pertains.] But if no lawful accuser appears, and you find him defamed among good and grave men concerning the aforesaid crimes, or either one of them, you shall impose canonical purgation upon him, notwithstanding that he is said to have purged himself before the aforesaid bishop-elect; for, while the judicial proceeding was pending before delegated judges, the ordinary ought not to have imposed purgation upon the defamed man. [In which purgation, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourth day before the Ides of January, in the tenth year, 1208.]

> Super notorio crimine non est indicenda purgatio, et, pendente causa super criminibus coram Papae delegato, purgatio ab ordinario super eis recepta non tenet.
>
> Idem Abbati Eugen. et Scholastico Mutinensi. Quum dilectis filiis H. presbytero et G. procuratori O. clerici constitutis in praesentia nostra dilectum filium T. subdiaconum et capellanum nostrum concesserimus auditorem, idem procurator proposuit coram eo, quod, quum dictus presbyter super incestus crimine fuisset publice infamatus, bonae memoriae Constantiensis episcopus, ordinarius iudex, ei purgationem indixit; qui, quum se purgare nequivisset, ab ipso fuit in plena synodo suis ecclesiis sententialiter destitutus, quas ipse nihilominus detinuit aliquamdiu per violentiam occupatas. Quumque postmodum idem presbyter cuiusdam consanguinei sui uxorem adductam in domo publice detineret, ad petitionem H., plebani de Heniso, et quorundam aliorum clericorum Constantiensis dioecesis iudicibus nostras dicimus sub hac forma literas destinasse, ut videlicet, si dictus presbyter super crimine adulterii et incestus coram ipsis se purgare non posset, ipsum poena debita castigarent. Qui, iuxta mandati nostri tenorem in negotio procedentes, quum constitisset eisdem, quod idem presbyter pro eo, quod in purgatione defecerat, ab episcopo memorato fuerat in synodo condemnatus, ipsum, utpote contumacem, praedictis ecclesiis per sententiam privaverunt, maxime quum de incestus et adulterii crimine, tanquam de notorio, manifeste liqueret eisdem, dilecto filio abbati sancti Galli, ad quem illarum ecclesiarum donatio pertinebat, potestatem liberam concedentes, ecclesias illas personis aliis conferendi, qui eas postea supra dicto O. clerico assignavit. [Verum idem presbyter ad sedem apostolicam veniens, et falso se asserens praetermisso iuris ordine spoliatum, ad abbatem de domo S. Petri et suos coniudices alteri parti omnino suspectos nostras literas reportavit. Qui eidem O. literarum ipsarum copia denegata et probationem ipsius super literarum falsitate admittere recusantes, iuris ordine praetermisso post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam restitutionis sententiam pro eodem presbytero protulerunt, quod se loco et tempore probaturum per legitimos testes proponebat.] Dictus vero presbyter inter cetera ex adverso respondit, quod, [licet super praemissis criminibus ab inimicis fuisset aemulis infamatus et a Constantiensi capitulo propter hoc eidem indicta purgatio, ipsam tamen nullus recipere voluit, licet eam paratus fuerit infra praefixum sibi terminum exhibere, adiiciens, quod] processus iudicum praedictorum debebat merito retractari, quum lite non contestata et post appellationem ad nos interpositam procedere praesumpserint contra eum. [Praeterea dictus presbyter proposuit conquerendo, quod, quum a praedicto O. et complicibus suis praedictis ecclesiis fuisset per violentiam spoliatus, et ad supradictum abbatem de domo sancti Petri ac coniudices suos primo, et secundo ad electum Constantiensem restitutionis literis impetratis, per utrosque restitutionis meruerit beneficium obtinere, idem O. eum non est veritus saepius spoliare. Unde quum propter hoc ipse cum complicibus suis excommunicationis sententia innodatus in sua contumacia perduraret, praedicto electo et coniudicibus suis dedimus in praeceptis, ut auctoritate nostra suffulti districtius inhiberent, ne in locis, in quibus iidem excommunicati praesentes exsisterent, divina officia dicerentur et eosdem tamdiu appellatione cessante suspenderent a divinis, donec saepedicto presbytero de damnis et iniuriis irrogatis satisfacerent competenter, vel responsuri de tanto contemptu nostro se conspectui praesentarent. Sed ipsi ad appellationis diffugium convolantes, contra prohibitionem ipsorum iudicum divina celebrant interdicti, nec ad nostram praesentiam responsalem transmittere curaverunt.] Adiiciens quod ad abolendam omnem infamiam purgationem indictam ab electo Constantiensi curaverit exhibere, saepe dicti tamen aemuli eum non desinunt infamare. Unde nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut ab illorum petitionibus absolutum, faceremus ipsum praedictarum ecclesiarum pacifica possessione gaudere, [illos legitime punientes, qui excommunicati et interdicti divina praesumpserunt officia celebrare. Ad haec procurator adiecit, quod dicta purgatio fuit ab electo recepta absente parte altera et penitus ignorante, quod etiam se asseruit probaturum.] His igitur et aliis, quae fuerunt coram capellano praedicto proposita, plenius intellectis licet literae illae, quae ad praedictos iudices impetratae dicuntur, vel ipsarum transscriptum ostensum non fuerit coram nobis, quia tamen ex tenore relationis ipsorum, quam dictus procurator exhibuit, ac si literae ipsae ostensae fuissent, nobis constitit evidenter, iudices ipsos praetermisso iuris ordine processisse: tam processum eorum, quam concessionem ecclesiarum a praedicto abbate de mandato ipsorum factam, auctoritate apostolica retractamus, praesertim quum relationis ipsius series repugnantia contineat et adversa. Dicitur enim, quod crimen eiusdem presbyteri usque adeo publicum fuerat et notorium, quod nullus inficiationi locus penitus exsistebat, utpote cuius universae viciniae populus testis erat, et tamen ibidem praemittitur, quod eidem presbytero terminum peremptorium praefixerunt, in quo, si posset, super infamia praedictorum criminum canonice se purgaret; quum nimirum, si crimen notorium exsistebat, non erat utique illi indicenda purgatio, sed in eum condemnationis sententia promulganda. [Restitutionis quoque sententiam pro eodem presbytero a diversis iudicibus latam duximus approbandam, praesentium vobis auctoritate mandantes, quatenus eundem presbyterum in corporalem possessionem praedictarum ecclesiarum sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo inducatis et defendatis inductum; contradictores, si qui fuerint, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione postposita compescentes, et facientes eidem presbytero tam de fructibus medio tempore perceptis ex ecclesiis memoratis, quam de damnis et iniuriis irrogatis satisfieri competenter. Facta vero restitutione plenaria, si legitimus apparuerit contradictor, qui possit et velit legitime comprobare, quod idem presbyter, pro eo, quod in legitime indicta sibi purgatione defecit, condemnatus fuit a praedicto episcopo et saepedictis ecclesiis spoliatus, vos eidem super ecclesiis ipsis perpetuum silentium imponatis, facientes eisdem, per eos ad quos pertinet, de personis idoneis canonice provideri.] Si vero nullus apparuerit legitimus accusator, et ipsum inveneritis apud bonos et graves super praedictis criminibus vel ipsorum altero infamatum, purgationem ei canonicam indicatis, non obstante, quod coram praedicto electo dicitur se purgasse; quum, iudicio pendente coram iudicibus delegatis, non debuerit ordinarius purgationem indicere infamato. [*In qua purgatione etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. IV. Id. Ian. Ao. X. *1208.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: It is not sufficient for a prelate defamed concerning crimes, when he purges himself, to swear that he is free from those crimes; rather, he ought to swear that he did not commit those crimes after his promotion.

The same.

We received the letters by which you took care to intimate to us that, after the apostolic mandate concerning the imposition of purgation upon our venerable brother, the Archbishop of Besançon, had been received, you cited him as was proper; and he appeared before you on the appointed day, offering an oath of purgation in this form, namely, that he was free from those crimes concerning which he was bound to purge himself. [And when you said that this was not the canonical form, and there had been some dispute concerning this, he at last raised the voice of appeal to us, to which you deferred on the advice of prudent men.] But he, coming to our presence, humbly supplicated that at least concerning the purgation of incontinence we deign to temper rigor, because he ought not to assert that from his birth he had never suffered a lapse of the flesh. Furthermore, since it is not believed that an oath of this kind was required of him, we perhaps presume rather that for another reason he wished to swear according to the prescribed form, namely, that he was free from those crimes concerning which he had been defamed, as though, since they had been remitted through penance, he was now free from them. But to swear this would be an act of no small temerity, since blessed Job says: "Even if I shall have been innocent, my soul itself is ignorant of this," [and Solomon: "Who can say: My heart is clean and I am pure from sin?" Hence the Psalmist said: "Who understands offenses? Cleanse me from my hidden ones, O Lord," while the Apostle bears witness: "I am conscious of nothing in myself, yet I am not thereby justified."] Therefore we reject the prescribed form of purgation, according to which the same archbishop offered to purge himself, as undiscerning, rash, and inept, enjoining upon him that, if he wishes and is able to purge himself according to the following form, he shall do so according to the sound understanding that we have thought ought to be expressed to him: namely, that he swear that he did not at all commit, after he was promoted to archiepiscopal dignity, those graver crimes—that is, simony, the sale of justice, and incontinence—concerning which he stands defamed; and let the compurgators swear in this manner, that they believe that he has sworn the truth. When this has been done, you shall dismiss him in peace. Otherwise, etc. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Nones of January, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1214.]

> Non sufficit praelato, de criminibus infamato, iurare, quum se purgat, quod sit immunis ab illis criminibus; sed iurare debet, quod post suam promotionem illa crimina non commisit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Accepimus literas, quibus nobis intimare curastis, quod apostolico mandato super indicenda purgatione venerabili fratri nostro archiepiscopo Bisuntino recepto, ipsum citastis ut decuit; qui ad diem praefixum comparuit coram vobis, iuramentum purgationis offerens sub hac forma, videlicet, quod immunis erat ab illis criminibus, super quibus se purgare debebat. [Quumque vos diceretis, hanc non esse formam canonicam, et super hoc fuisset aliquamdiu disputatum, ipse tandem ad nos vocem appellationis emisit, cui de prudentum virorum consilio detulistis.] Ipse vero ad praesentium nostram accedens humiliter supplicavit, ut saltem super purgatione incontinentiae dignaremur temperare rigorem, quia non deberet asserere, quod a nativitate sua nunquam passus fuerit lapsum carnis. Porro, quum ab eo non credatur exactum fuisse huiusmodi iuramentum, potius forte praesumimus, quod alia de causa volebat sub praescripta forma iurare, videlicet, quod immunis erat ab illis criminibus, de quibus fuerat infamatus, tanquam, dimissis per poenitentiam, iam esset immunis ab illis. Sed hoc iurare non parvae temeritatis exsisteret, quum beatus Iob dicat: "Etiamsi simplex fuero, hoc ipsum ignorat anima mea," [et Salomon: "Quis potest dicere, mundum est cor meum et purus sum a peccato?" Unde Psalmista dicebat: "Delicta quis intelligit, ab occultis munda me, Domine," Apostolo attestante: "Nihil mihi conscius sum, non tamen in hoc iustificatus sum."] Ideoque praescriptam purgationis formam, secundum quam idem archiepiscopus obtulit se purgare, reprobamus, utpote indiscretam, temerariam et ineptam, iniungentes eidem, ut, si voluerit et potuerit secundum hanc formam se purgare, secundum sanum intellectum, quem ei duximus exprimendum, videlicet quod illa crimina graviora, id est simoniam, venditionem iustitiae atque incontinentiam, de quibus infamatus exsistit, iuret se minime commisisse, postquam ad archiepiscopalem promotus est dignitatem; et compurgatores sic iurent, quod credunt, eum verum iurasse. Quo facto, vos illum dimittatis in pace. Alioquin etc. [Dat. Lat. IV. Non. Ian. Pont. nostr. Ao. XVI. 1214.]

Title XXXV: On Vulgar Purgation

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Duels and other vulgar purgations are prohibited, because through them one who ought to be absolved is often condemned, and God appears to be tempted. This is what the whole title says.

Celestine III.

The care of the government undertaken induces us that we ought to respond to the consultations of our brothers and, so far as human frailty permits, to cut away from them the scruple of doubt. Hence it is that, since your fraternity has thought that the Apostolic See should be consulted as to whether duels ought to be sustained concerning possession of churches, we have thought it right to respond to your solicitude that in that case, or in any others, you ought in no way to tolerate this. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's.]

DE PURGATIONE VULGARI.

Duella et aliae purgationes vulgares prohibitae sunt, quia per eos multoties condemnatur absolvendus, et Deus tentari videtur. H. d. totus titulus.

Coelestinus III. Cura suscepti regiminis nos inducit, ut fratrum nostrorum debeamus consultationibus respondere, et ab eis, quantum humana permittit fragilitas, dubitationis scrupulum amputare. Inde est, quod, Quum tua fraternitas duxerit sedem apostolicam consulendam, utrum super ecclesiarum possessionibus duella debeant sustineri, tuae duximus sollicitudini respondendum, quod in eo casu, vel in aliis etiam hoc non debes aliquatenus tolerare. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above, in the preceding chapter.

Innocent III, to the Prior of Saint Sergius of Spoleto.

You should know that it has come to our hearing through the representations of the layman V. and his brothers that, when a certain man accused them concerning the crime of theft, they were compelled, contrary to the custom of the land, to enter a duel with him; in it they fell, their other sins impeding them, on account of which, after an appeal had been interposed to us, they were despoiled of their own goods by the consuls of Spoleto. But now the theft has been found among others, and, by the Lord's agency, it has been revealed that they were innocent. Hence we gave orders to the consuls themselves that they restore all things taken away [from them]. Therefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if they neglect to fulfill our mandate, you, having summoned the parties and heard what is proposed on both sides, are to decree, with appeal removed, what shall be just, causing what you decree to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure, etc. [Given at the Lateran, on the eleventh day before the Kalends of April, 1203.]

> Summatum est supr. cap. proximo.
>
> Innocentius III. Priori S. Sergii Spoletani. Significantibus V. laico et fratribus eius ad nostram noveris audientiam pervenisse, quod, quum quidam eos super furti crimine accusaret, cum eo praeter terrae consuetudinem coacti sunt inire duellum, in quo, aliis peccatis suis praepedientibus, ceciderunt, propter quod post appellationem ad nos interpositam per consules Spoletanos bonis fuerunt propriis spoliati. Nunc vero furtum apud alios est inventum, et, quod ipsi fuerint innocentes, est faciente Domino revelatum. Unde consulibus ipsis dedimus in mandatis, ut ablata [eis] restituant universa. Ideoque discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus si ipsi mandatum nostrum neglexerint adimplere, tu partibus convocatis et auditis hinc inde propositis quod iustum fuerit appellatione remota decerneres, faciens quod decreveris per censuram ecclesiasticam firmiter observari etc. [Dat. Lat. XI. Kal. Apr. 1203.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It is summarized above, Chapter I.

Honorius III.

Beloved sons newly baptized in Livonia sent a grave complaint to us that the brothers of the Templars professing the order in Livonia, and certain other advocates and judges who exercise temporal power over them, whenever they are defamed concerning some crime, compel them to undergo the judgment of glowing iron; and if any burning follows from it, they inflict a civil penalty upon them, by which matter they strike scandal and terror into converts and those to be converted. Therefore, since a judgment of this kind is altogether forbidden according to lawful and canonical sanctions, as one in which God appears to be tempted, we command that, after admonition has been given, you compel by ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed, the said brothers and others to desist altogether from a grievance of this kind against the converts.

> Summatum est supra cap. I. Honorius III. Dilecti filii noviter in Livonia baptizati gravem ad nos querimoniam destinarunt, quod fratres Templariorum ordinem in Livonia profitentes, et alii quidam advocati et iudices, qui temporalem in eis potestatem exercent, si quando de aliquo alio crimine infamantur, eos ferri candentis iudicium subire compellunt, quibus, si qua exinde sequatur adustio, civilem poenam infligunt, qua re conversis et convertendis scandalum incutiunt et terrorem. Quum igitur huiusmodi iudicium secundum legitimas et canonicas sanctiones sit penitus interdictum, utpote, in quo Deus tentari videtur: mandamus, quatenus dictos fratres et alios, ut ab huiusmodi conversorum gravamine omnino desistant, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota compellas.

Title XXXVI: On Injuries and Damage Inflicted

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Because of its brevity, it is not summarized.

In Exodus.

If men shall have quarreled, and one strikes his neighbor with a stone or fist, and he shall not have died but shall have lain in bed, if he shall have arisen and walked outside upon his staff, the one who struck him shall be innocent, yet in such manner that he restore his lost labor and expenses for physicians.

> DE INIURIIS ET DAMNO DATO.
>
> Propter eius brevitatem non summatur.
>
> In Exodo.
>
> Si rixati fuerint homines, et percusserit alter proximum suum lapide vel pugno, et ille mortuus non fuerit, sed iacuerit in lecto, si surrexerit et ambulaverit foris super baculum suum: innocens erit, qui percusserit, ita tamen, ut operas eius et impensas in medicos restituat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is brief, and therefore is not summarized.

In the same place.

If anyone opens a cistern and digs it, and does not cover it, and an ox or ass falls into it, the owner of the cistern shall render the price of the beasts; but that which is dead shall be his.

> Breve est, et ideo non summatur.
>
> Ibidem.
>
> Si qui aperuerit cisternam, et foderit, et non operuerit eam, cecideritque bos vel asinus in eam: dominus cisternae reddet pretium iumentorum; quod autem mortuum est, ipsius erit.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It is brief, and therefore is not summarized.

In the same place.

If another's ox wounds the ox of another, and it dies, they shall sell the living ox and divide the price; but they shall divide between themselves the carcass of the dead one. But if he knew that the ox had been apt to gore since yesterday and the day before, and its owner did not keep it, he shall render ox for ox and shall receive the whole carcass.

> Breve est, et ideo non summatur.
>
> Ibidem.
>
> Si bos alienus bovem alterius vulneraverit, et ille mortuus fuerit, vendent bovem vivum, et dividentpretium; cadaver autem mortui inter se dispertient. Si autem sciebat, quod bos cornupeta fuerit ab heri et nudiustertius, et non custodivit eum dominus suus: reddet bovem pro bove, et cadaver integrum accipiet.

Chapter IV

In the same place.

If anyone damages a field or vineyard and lets loose his beast so that it feeds upon another's property, he shall restore as the valuation for the damage whatever best thing he has in his own field or vineyard.

> Ibidem.
>
> Si laeserit quispiam agrum vel vineam, et dimiserit iumentum suum, ut depascat aliena: quicquid optimum habuerit in agro suo vel vinea, pro damno aestimationem restituet.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: It is brief and is not summarized.

In the same place.

If fire going out finds thorns and seizes stacks of grain or standing crops in the fields, the one who kindled the fire shall render the damage.

> Breve est, et non summatur.
>
> Ibidem.
>
> Si egressus ignis invenerit spinas, et comprehenderit acervos frugum sive stantes segetes in agris, reddet damnum qui ignem succenderit.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It is brief and almost the same as the preceding chapter.

From the Roman Penitential.

If anyone voluntarily burns someone's house or threshing floor, he shall restore everything removed and burned and shall do penance for three years.

> Breve est, et quasi idem cum praecedenti. Ex poenitentiali Romano.
>
> Si quis domum vel aream cuiusquam incenderit voluntarie, sublata et incensa omnia restituat, et tres annos poeniteat.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A secular power that has placed a cleric under ban ought to be condemned by an ecclesiastical judge according to the valuation of the injury, expenses, and damages. And today add the penalty in Clementines 1, On Penalties.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Bologna.

Formerly, when we wrote to our venerable brother, the Bishop of Modena, that, coming personally to Florence, he should effectively admonish and induce the government, councilors, and people of the city of Florence to make satisfaction for the damages and injuries inflicted upon our venerable brother, the Bishop of Fiesole, and the churches of Fiesole, and, if it should be necessary, should constrain them by ecclesiastical censure, the same Bishop of Modena, more diligently executing our mandate as to the admonition and having granted a period of delay, received witnesses before joinder of issue. Therefore we, having entirely revoked his proceeding because he had proceeded to the reception of witnesses before joinder of issue, have thought that the commune of Florence, because it had placed the same Bishop of Fiesole under ban contrary to God and ecclesiastical liberty, should by sentence be condemned, on account of the injury of the ban and the expenses and damages ensuing on such an occasion, after valuation had first been made by oath, to pay one thousand pounds of current money to the aforesaid Bishop of Fiesole.

> Saecularis potestas, quae clericum bannivit, condemnari debet per iudicem ecclesiasticum secundum aestimationem iniuriae in expensis et damnis. Et hodie adde poenam in Clem. 1. de poenis.
>
> Honorius III. Episcopo Bononiensi. Olim scribentibus nobis venerabili fratri nostro, episcopo Mutinensi, ut, accedens personaliter Florentiam, potestatem, consiliarios et populum civitatis Florentinae moneret efficaciter et induceret ad satisfaciendum de damnis et iniuriis, irrogatis venerabili fratri nostro episcopo et ecclesiis Fesulanis, et, si necesse foret, censura ecclesiastica coarctaret, idem Mutinensis, mandatum nostrum quoad monitionem diligentius exsecutus, datis induciis testes, lite non contestata, recepit. Quare nos, eius processu, quoniam ad receptionem testium lite non contestata processerat, penitus revocato, commune Florentinum, quia banniverat eundem episcopum Fesulanum contra Deum et ecclesiasticam libertatem, propter iniuriam banni, et expensas, et damna tali occasione secuta, taxatione iuramento praemissa, in mille libris usualis monetae praedicto episcopo Fesulano sententialiter duximus condemnandum.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One who swears to a statute concerning damages not to be reclaimed will, notwithstanding this, be able to reclaim expenses. This is what it says; or thus: A statute concerning damages not to be reclaimed does not extend to expenses.

Gregory IX.

You proposed in our presence and that of our brothers that formerly the citizens of Brescia, being very greatly burdened by restorations of damages inflicted upon one another, which they had incurred on account of many civil discords, generally approved and even confirmed by oath a statute issued [by our venerable brother the Patriarch of Antioch, then Bishop-elect of Brescia], [namely] that restorations of this kind were not thereafter to be sought or received from the commune. [But recently, not without our labor and solicitude, you procured that, concerning the discord that gravely troubles those citizens, the consuls and council swore precisely and absolutely that they would obey all your mandates; yet, unless it should happen that provision is made by the commune of Brescia for those suffering damages at least in the expenses that they made on an occasion of this kind, you cannot perfectly quiet that discord without its undergoing a relapse. Concerning this you sought that an apostolic (remedy) be applied.] Therefore, since restoration of damages is one thing and satisfaction of expenses another, and hence it ought not to be understood that the matter of expenses was comprehended in the oath furnished concerning the article of damages, we command [your fraternity by apostolic writings] that, notwithstanding the aforesaid oath, by our authority you provide that, for the good of concord, the said commune contribute something toward satisfaction of the expenses according to the judgment of your discretion, to be moderated by you as shall be expedient. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of April, in the fourth year of our pontificate, 1230.]

Qui iurat statutum super non repetendis damnis, hoc non obstante, expensas repetere poterit. H. d. vel sic: Statutum super damnis non repetendis ad expensas non extenditur.

Gregorius IX. In nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia proposuistis, quod olim cives Brixienses pro restaurationibus damnorum illatorum ad invicem, quae propter multas civiles discordias incurrerant, plurimum aggravati, statutum [per venerabilem fratrem nostrum patriarcham Antiochenum, tunc Brixiensem electum] editum, [videlicet] de non petendo vel recipiendo in posterum restaurationes huiusmodi a communi, generaliter approbarunt et firmarunt etiam iuramento. [Nuper vero non sine nostro labore et sollicitudine procurasti, quod super discordia, quae graviter cives ipsos exagitat, consules et consilium praecise ac absolute iurarunt, se mandatis tuis omnibus parituros, quem tamen, nisi per commune Brixiense damna passis saltem in expensis, quas huiusmodi occasione fecerunt, provideri contingat, perfecte sopire non potes quin sustineat recidivum. Super quo apostolicum (postulasti) remedium adhiberi.] Quum igitur aliud sit damnorum restauratio quam satisfactio expensarum, et ideo in iuramento exhibito super damnorum articulo intelligi non debeat, quod factum expensarum fuerit comprehensum: [fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta] mandamus, quatenus, iuramento non obstante praedicto, auctoritate nostra provideas, quod dictum commune pro bono concordiae ad expensarum satisfactionem aliquid contribuat iuxta tuae discretionis arbitrium, a te, sicut expedierit, moderandum. [Dat. Lat. XV. Kal. Apr. Pont. nostr. Ao. IV. 1230.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It contains several statements and summarizes itself.

The same.

If through your fault damage was caused or an injury inflicted, or perhaps you gave aid to others inflicting them, or these things occurred through your lack of skill or negligence, by law you ought to make satisfaction for them; nor does ignorance excuse you if you ought to have known that injury or loss could probably result from your act. But if you allege that your animals did harm, you are nevertheless bound to satisfaction unless, by giving them to those who suffered the damage, you wish to free yourself; this, however, does not avail for liberation if they were wild animals, or ones accustomed to do harm, and you did not take the diligence that you ought to have taken. Indeed, although one who gives the occasion of damage is seen to have caused the damage, nevertheless it must be said otherwise of one who omitted nothing among the contingencies so that it would not happen.

> Habet plura dicta, et se summat.
>
> Idem.
>
> Si culpa tua datum est damnum vel iniuria irrogata, seu aliis irrogantibus opem forte tulisti, aut haec imperitia tua sive negligentia evenerunt: iure super his satisfacere te oportet, nec ignorantia te excusat, si scire debuisti, ex facto tuo iniuriam verisimiliter posse contingere vel iacturam. Quodsi animalia tua nocuisse proponas, nihilominus ad satisfactionem teneris nisi ea dando passis damnum velis liberare te ipsum; quod tamen ad liberationem non proficit, si fera animalia, vel quae consueverunt nocere, fuissent, et quam debueras non curasti diligentiam adhibere. Sane, licet qui occasionem damni dat damnum videatur dedisse: secus est tamen in illo dicendum, qui, ut non accideret, de contingentibus nil omisit.

Title XXXVII: On Penalties

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A criminal is to be punished as often as he repeats the offense.

From the Council of Toledo.

Things that are repeated by frequent transgression are to be condemned by frequent sentence.

> DE POENIS.
>
> Toties puniendus est criminosus, quoties delictum iterat.
>
> Ex concilio Toletano.
>
> Ea, quae frequenti praevaricatione iterantur, frequenti sententia condemnentur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who kills a priest is to be punished, and part of the penalty is distributed to the church over which he presided, and the other part for his soul.

From the Council of Tribur.

The composition for a slain priest is to be paid to the bishop to whose diocese he belongs, in such manner namely that the bishop shall assign half of his wergild to the uses of the church over which he presided, and shall justly distribute the other half in alms for him, because no one seems to us a nearer heir of his than the one who joined him to the Lord.

> Interficiens presbyterum puniendus est, et poenae pars ecclesiae, cui praefuit, alia pars pro eius anima distribuitur.
>
> Ex concilio Triburiensi. Presbyteri interfecti compositio episcopo, ad cuius parochiam pertinet, solvatur, ita videlicet, ut medietatem werigeldi episcopus eius utilitatibus ecclesiae, cui praefuit, tribuat, et alteram medietatem in eius eleemosynam iuste dispertiat, quia nullus nobis eius heres proximior videtur, quam ille, qui ipsum Domino sociavit.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Prelates ought not to exact money for tolerating criminals, nor, even for the sake of correction, to impose a monetary penalty from cupidity.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Although, according to the Apostle, we ought to reprove, entreat, and rebuke, nevertheless we ought so to correct the excesses of individuals that we are proved to seek not the things that are ours but those that are Jesus Christ's, and that we are seen to preserve moderation and maturity in making correction. We have however received that the archdeacons of the bishopric of Coventry, for correcting excesses and punishing crimes, exact a monetary penalty from clerics and laymen, and in the ordeal of fire and water presume to demand thirty denarii from a man and a woman; and for an annual exaction of money they sometimes suspend persons [and] place churches under interdict; they do not fear also to exact twelve denarii from vicars so that they may permit them to sing in churches; and they do other things that oppose the institutes of the canons and appear to proceed from the root of cupidity and avarice. Therefore, because it is incumbent upon our solicitude to provide with pastoral diligence that nothing be done by the ecclesiastical persons of your province that is subject to reproach or blackens ecclesiastical honor, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity, by way of precept, that you more strictly prohibit this to the archdeacons of the aforesaid bishopric on our part and yours; but if they presume with rash boldness to act contrary to your prohibition, you shall compel them by ecclesiastical censure, with every occasion and appeal ceasing, and cause that sentence to be inviolably observed until worthy satisfaction.

> Non debent praelati pro criminosis sustinendis pecuniam exigere, nec etiam correctionis causa ex cupiditate poenam pecuniariam imponere.
>
> Alexander III. Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Licet iuxta Apostolum arguere, obsecrare et increpare debeamus, sic tamen debemus excessus corrigere singulorum, ut probemur, non quae nostra sunt, sed quae Iesu Christi quaerere, et in correctione facienda videamur modestiam et maturitatem servare. Accepimus autem, quod archidiaconi Conventrensis episcopatus pro corrigendis excessibus et criminibus puniendis a clericis et laicis poenam pecuniariam exigunt, et in examinatione ignis et aquae triginta denarios a viro et muliere quaerere praesumunt, et pro annua exactione pecuniae personas quandoque suspendunt, [et] ecclesias interdicunt, a vicariis quoque duodecim denarios, ut eos in ecclesiis cantare permittant, exigere non formidant, et alia agunt, quae canonum obviant institutis, et de radice cupiditatis et avaritiae prodire videntur. Quia igitur sollicitudini nostrae incumbit pastorali diligentia providere, ne ab ecclesiasticis personis tuae provinciae aliquid agatur, quod reprehensioni subiaceat, vel ecclesiasticam honestatem denigret: fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus archidiaconis praedicti episcopatus ex parte nostra et tua hoc districtius interdicas; si autem contra prohibitionem tuam ausu temerario venire praesumpserint, eos omni occasione et appellatione cessante ecclesiastica censura compellas, et sententiam ipsam usque ad dignam satisfactionem facias inviolabiter observari.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The defeated party is condemned in expenses to the victorious party who is present, even in pecuniary cases; and it excepts one case.

The same, in the Council of Tours.

By condemning in expenses, and by another manifold remedy, the imperial enactment restrains the calumny and audacity of those litigating rashly. Therefore, since it is recognized as consonant with the sacred institutes, we command that henceforth in pecuniary cases the defeated party be condemned in expenses to the victorious party, unless perhaps, as has been provided, sentence is rendered for one absent.

Victus condemnatur victori praesenti in expensis, etiam in causis pecuniariis, et unum casum excipit.

Idem in concilio Turonensi. Calumniam et audaciam temere litigantium condemnando in expensis, et alio multiplici remedio sanctio imperialis compescit. Quoniam igitur sacris institutis consonare dignoscitur, praecipimus, ut de cetero in causis pecuniariis victus victori in expensis condemnetur, nisi forte, sicut cautum est, sententia pro absente feratur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A cleric who furnishes cause or assistance for war is to be deposed.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Nidaros.

In matters of doubt (And below: [cf. c. 30, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V. 39.]) But because priests who steer ships into battle, those who personally engage in the conflict of battle, and those who incite others to fight, all indeed sin enormously, we believe that according to canonical rigor they are to be deposed. [These moreover, etc. (cf. c. 8, On Renunciation, I. 9.) Given at the city of Castella, on the sixth day before the Ides of October, 1198.]

Clericus, causam seu operam praebens bello, deponendus est.

Innocentius III. Midrosiensi Archiepiscopo.

Quod in dubiis (Et infra: [cf. c. 30. de sent. exc. V. 39.]) Quia vero tam sacerdotes, qui gubernant naves ad pugnam, quam qui personaliter exercent pugnae conflictum, et hi, qui alios incitant ad pugnandum, omnes quidem enormiter peccant, de rigore canonico eos credimus deponendos. [Hi praeterea etc. (cf. c. 8. de renunc. I. 9.) Dat. ap. civ. Castellanam VI. Id. Oct. 1198.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A cleric is to be deposed for a great crime committed by him and thrust into a monastery to do penance.

The same, to the Bishop of London.

The prudence of your discretion (And below:) To that moreover which you asked of us in the third place —how clerics detected in robbery or other great crimes ought to be punished—we respond that, degraded from their orders, they ought to be thrust into strict monasteries to perform penance. [But, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Ides of November, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1202.]

> Clericus pro magno scelere ab eo commisso deponi debet, et in monasterio detrudi ad agendam poenitentiam.
>
> Idem Londonensi Episcopo.
>
> Tuae discretionis prudentiam (Et infra:) Ad illud praeterea, quod a nobis tertio requisisti, qualiter clerici in latrociniis vel aliis magnis sceleribus deprehensi puniri debeant, respondemus, quod a suis ordinibus degradati detrudi debeant in arctis monasteriis ad poenitentiam peragendam. [*Ceterum etc. Dat. Lat. VI. Id. Nov. Pont. nostr. Ao. V. *1202.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If each of the contracting parties acts contrary to the contract, each can exact the penalty mutually promised by the agreement.

The same, to the Abbot and Brothers of Grottaferrata.

Having been constituted in our presence (And below: [cf. c. 6, On Religious Houses, III. 36.]) Although in the instrument of the aforesaid bishop's grant there was expressed a certain penalty that the party not observing the contract would pay to the one observing it, nevertheless, since each party is convicted by its own confession of having acted contrary to it—for your party withheld the pension from the Bishop of Lavita, while the bishop exacted a procuration from the same church, as the aforesaid steward proposed—we render each party absolved from it.

> Si uterque contrahentium venit contra contractum: uterque potest exigere poenam, adinvicem promissam ex conventione.
>
> Idem Abbati et Fratribus Cryptae ferratae.
>
> Constitutus in praesentia nostra (Et infra: [cf. c. 6. de rel. dom. III. 36.]) Licet autem in instrumento concessionis praedicti episcopi Lavitani expressa fuerit certa poena, quam pars contractum non servans solveret observanti, quum tamen utraque pars venisse contra illum ex confessione propria convincatur, quum et pars vestra subtraxerit episcopo pensionem, et episcopus procurationem exegerit ab eadem ecclesia, sicut oeconomus proposuit memoratus: utramque partem ab ea reddimus absolutam.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If a witness is imprisoned because of vacillation, he does not incur infamy.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Fridianus and Master B., Canon of Pisa.

Concerning those things about which you wished to consult us (And below: [cf. c. 16, On Accusations, V. 1.]) [We wish you to know concerning this that, in our presence, the case had been begun concerning the business for which you sent us your letters.] But the cleric who, because he had varied and vacillated before you, was captured and detained at our mandate does not incur infamy. But, etc. (cf. c. 8, On Compelling Witnesses, II. 21.) [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Ides of February, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1203.]

> Si testis propter vacillationem incarceratur, infamiam non incurrit.
>
> Idem Priori S. Fridiani et Magistro B. Canonico Pisano.

Super his, de quibus nos consulere voluistis (Et infra: [cf. c. 16. de acc. V. 1.]) [Ad hoc nosse vos volumus, quod super negotio, pro quo vestras nobis literas destinastis, in praesentia fuerat causa coepta.] Clericus autem, qui pro eo, quod variaverat et vacillaverat coram vobis, de mandato nostro captus est et detentus, infamiam non incurrit. Ceterum etc. (cf. c. 8. de test. cog. II. 21.) [*Dat. Lat. III. Id. Febr. Pont. nostr. Ao. V. *1203.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: One bound to pay a certain quantity on a certain day under a penalty is not bound to the entire penalty if he pays part within the term.

The same, to the Bishop of Spoleto.

G. and A., rectors of the clerics of the parish of Saint Fortunatus, transmitted their complaint to us that, when they had been condemned to you by a certain arbitration for forty pounds, and a penalty of thirty pounds had been imposed upon them if they did not pay those pounds to you within the appointed term, after thirty-three pounds had at last been paid in that term, on account of the seven remaining pounds, by means of certain letters of ours obtained with the truth suppressed, you obtained that they be condemned to you for the aforesaid thirty pounds by the delegated judge, our beloved son Paul, our subdeacon. Therefore, because it does not become you to forget episcopal moderation to such an extent that, panting after dishonorable gains, you desire to be enriched with another's loss, we command [and strictly enjoin] your fraternity by apostolic writings that, content with payment of the aforesaid seven pounds, you do not henceforth trouble the aforesaid rectors concerning the penalty of thirty pounds, as was judicially determined by our beloved son G., cardinal deacon of Saint Nicholas in the Tullian Prison. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the third day before the Ides of January, in the ninth year, 1207.]

Obligatus ad certam quantitatem, certa die sub poena solvendam, si partem infra terminum solvit, ad poenam integram non tenetur.

Idem Spoletano Episcopo.

Suam ad nos G. et A. rectores clericorum plebatus sancti Fortunati querimoniam transmiserunt, quod, quum tibi essent in XL. libris per quoddam arbitrium condemnati, essetque ipsis poena XXX. librarum apposita, nisi eas tibi solverent in termino constituto, tandem XXXIII. libris in ipso termino persolutis, occasione septem residuarum librarum per quasdam nostras literas, veritate tacita impetratas, obtinuisti eos in praefatis XXX. libris tibi per dilectum filium Paulum, subdiaconum nostrum, delegatum iudicem condemnari. Quia igitur te non decet in tantum pontificalis modestiae oblivisci, ut inhonestis quaestibus anhelando desideres cum aliena iactura ditari, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus [et districte praecipimus,] quatenus praedictarum septem librarum solutione contentus, super poena XXX. librarum memoratos rectores de cetero non molestes, sicut per dilectum filium nostrum G. S. Nicolai in carcere Tulliano diaconum cardinalem fuit sententialiter diffinitum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. III. Id. Ian. Ao. IX. 1207.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Those who kill a prelate are deprived of the benefices and fiefs that they have from the church over which that prelate presided; they shall not be restored to them or to their heirs, nor ought any others newly to be granted to them. And today similar penalties have been increased for one killing, capturing, or placing a bishop under ban; concerning these, see the Clementine Si quis suadente, under the same title.

The same.

It reached the ears of our apostolate that, when certain of your parishioners had wickedly slain with diabolical boldness I., the late Bishop of Vicenza of good memory, your predecessor, the fiefs and benefices that they held from the Church of Vicenza had been taken from them by sentence after much deliberation. Therefore, since they are to be punished with an even greater [indeed] penalty, we, adhering to the footsteps of Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, by apostolic authority prohibit both you and your successors from restoring the aforesaid benefices [further] to them or their heirs, or from newly conferring any others upon them. [But if anyone, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of April, 1198.]

> Occidentes praelatum privantur beneficiis et feudis, quae habent ab ecclesia, cui praeerat praelatus ille, nec eis vel heredibus restituentur, nec alia de novo concedi debent. Et hodie in occidente, capiente vel banniente episcopum auctae sunt similes poenae, de quibus in Clem. Si quis suadente eod. tit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ad aures nostri apostolatus pervenit, quod, quum quidam parochiani tui ausu diabolico bonae memoriae I. quondam Vincentinum episcopum praedecessorem tuum nequiter peremissent, feuda et beneficia, quae illi a Vincentina ecclesia obtinebant, ipsis per sententiam fuerant cum multa deliberatione sublata. Quia igitur maiori [etiam] sunt animadversione plectendi, nos, bonae memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri vestigiis inhaerentes, tam tibi quam successoribus tuis auctoritate apostolica prohibemus ne ipsis aut heredibus eorum beneficia praedicta restituantur [ulterius], seu de novo eis alia quaelibet conferantur. [Si quis autem etc. Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Apr. 1198.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: One who breaks out against a judge is punished at the judgment of the superior.

The same.

The beloved son James, Bishop-elect of Saint P. at Montes, coming to the Apostolic See, a grave complaint against the beloved sons, the Abbot of Molesme and I., Archdeacon [of Châlons], set forth, asserting that they [against him] had proceeded wrongly in his case, which had been committed to them. And when the beloved son T., a cleric, had come to our presence with their letters containing the proceeding of the case, and the same James endeavored to impugn that proceeding in many ways, asserting that their report was false in certain matters, we, because the aforesaid cleric had no mandate except to contradict or to impetrate, for greater caution thought that the proceeding itself ought neither to be confirmed nor quashed, [commanding you by apostolic writings that, having summoned the parties and heard what is proposed on both sides, if you find that the aforesaid judges proceeded reasonably, you confirm their proceeding and cause it to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure, with the obstacle of appeal removed. Otherwise, having annulled it as shall be just, you are to proceed in the same case according to the form of the former letters, causing what you decree to obtain due firmness. But if you find any of the monks bound by the bond of excommunication on this account, you shall absolve them according to the form of the Church, enjoining upon them what shall by law be enjoined.] But because it often happens that, against the false assertion of an unjust judge, an innocent litigant cannot prove a true denial, since by the nature of things there is no direct proof of a negative fact, lest falsity prejudice truth or iniquity prevail over equity, it seems necessary and equitable that, when someone proposes a lawful exception, prepared to prove it either to decline the judgment or to repel the claim of the other, if perhaps by word or deed he withdraws from it, or does not prove it within a competent term to be fixed by the judge, the restrained judge should not proceed before applying the suitable precaution of instruments or witnesses concerning this, through which, if necessary, the truth can be established, so that, if a dispute arises against his report or proceeding, the assertion of the judge himself may be strengthened by proofs of this kind; so that, with this moderation applied, deference is so given to honest and discreet judges that the justice of the innocent is not injured through imprudent and unjust ones. And, lest judicial authority vanish, when the litigant's dishonesty has been established, one rashly breaking out against the assertion of the judge can be punished with a worthy penalty according to the judgment of the superior. [But the witnesses, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of January, in the thirteenth year, 1211.]

> Prorumpens contra iudicem, arbitrio superioris punitur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Dilectus filius Iacobus, electus sancti P. ad Montes, ad apostolicam sedem accedens, gravem querelam contra dilectos filios Molismensem abbatem et I. archidiaconum [Cathalaunensem] exposuit, asserens, eos [adversus ipsum] in causa sua, quae fuit illis commissa, perperam processisse. Quumque dilectus filius T. clericus cum literis eorundem, continentibus causae processum, ad nostram praesentiam accessisset, et idem Iacobus niteretur processum ipsum multipliciter improbare, relationem eorum in quibusdam asserens esse falsam, nos, quia praefatus clericus non habebat nisi ad contradicendum vel impetrandum mandatum, ad maiorem cautelam processum ipsum nec confirmandum duximus nec cassandum, [per apostolica vobis scripta mandantes, quatenus partibus convocatis et auditis hinc inde propositis, si praefatos iudices inveneritis rationabiliter processisse, ipsorum confirmetis processum, et faciatis illum per censuram ecclesiasticam sublato appellationis obstaculo firmiter observari. Alioquin eo, sicut iustum fuerit, irritato, iuxta formam priorum literarum in causa procedatis eadem, facientes quod decreveritis firmitatem debitam obtinere. Si quos autem ex monachis propter hoc inveneritis excommunicationis vinculo innodatos, secundum formam ecclesiae absolvatis, iniungentes eisdem quod de iure fuerit iniungendum.] Quia vero saepe contingit, quia contra falsam assertionem iniqui iudicis innocens litigator veram non potest negationem probare, quum negantis factum per rerum naturam nulla sit directa probatio: ne falsitas veritati praeiudicet aut iniquitas praevaleat aequitati, necessarium videtur et aequam, ut, quum quis legitimam exceptionem proponit, illam probare paratus vel ad declinandum iudicium vel ad intentionem alterius elidendam, si forsan verbo vel facto ab illa recesserit, vel eam non probaverit infra terminum competentem a iudice praefigendum, modestus iudex non ante procedat, quam super hoc instrumentorum vel testium cautelam adhibeat opportunam, per quam, si necesse fuerit, possit de veritate constare, ut, si contra relationem seu processum ipsius fuerit suborta contentio, huiusmodi probationibus ipsius iudicis possit assertio roborari, quatenus, hoc adhibito moderamine, sic honestis et discretis deferatur iudicibus, quod per improvidos et iniquos innocentium iustitia non laedatur. Et, Ne iudicialis evanescat auctoritas, quum de litigatoris improbitate constiterit, adversus assertionem iudicis temere prorumpentis, iuxta superioris arbitrium digna poterit animadversione puniri. [*Testes autem etc. Dat. Lat. Non. Ian. Ao. XIII. *1211.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Patrons, advocates, or vice-lords who claim for themselves more in churches than the laws permit are restrained by ecclesiastical censure; and if, by themselves or through others, they kill the prelate or a cleric of the church, they lose what they have from the church, and their descendants to the fourth generation are not admitted to the clergy or placed over religious houses.

The same, in the general council.

In certain provinces the patrons, advocates, or vice-lords of churches have raised themselves to such insolence that not only, when vacant churches ought to be provided with suitable pastors, do they introduce difficulties and malicious obstructions, but they also presume to dispose according to their own will of possessions and other ecclesiastical goods; and, what is horrible to say, they do not fear to break out into the slaughter of prelates. Therefore, because that which was devised as an aid for defense ought not to be turned back to the harm of oppression, we expressly prohibit patrons, advocates, or vice-lords from henceforth usurping more concerning the foregoing things than is found permitted in law; and if they presume to act contrary to this, let them be most strictly restrained by canonical severity. Nevertheless, with the approval of the sacred council, we decree that, if patrons, advocates, feudatories, vice-lords, or other beneficiaries of any church presume with nefarious boldness, by themselves or through others, to kill or mutilate the rector or another cleric of that church, the patrons shall entirely lose the right of patronage, the advocates the advocacy, the feudatories the fief, the vice-lords the vice-lordship, and the beneficiaries the benefice. And lest the memory of vengeance be prolonged less than that of the excess, not only shall none of the foregoing things pass to the heirs, but the descendants of such persons to the fourth generation shall in no way be admitted into the college of clerics, nor shall they attain the honor of any prelacy in houses of regulars, unless they have been mercifully dispensed with.

> Patroni, advocati vel vicedomini, vendicantes sibi in ecclesiis plus quam iura permittant, per censuram ecclesiasticam compescuntur, et, si occidunt praelatum vel clericum ecclesiae per se vel per alios, perdunt quod habent ab ecclesia, et eorum posteri usque ad quartam generationem non admittuntur ad clerum, nec in religionibus praeficiuntur.
>
> Idem in concilio generali. In quibusdam provinciis ecclesiarum patroni et advocati seu vicedomini se in tantam insolentiam erexerunt, quod non solum, quum vacantibus debet ecclesiis de pastoribus idoneis provideri, difficultates ingerunt et malitias, verum etiam de possessionibus aliisque bonis ecclesiasticis pro sua voluntate ordinare praesumunt, et, quod horrendum est dicere, in necem praelatorum prorumpere non formidant. Quum igitur quod ad defensionis subsidium est inventum ad depressionis dispendium non debeat retorqueri, prohibemus expresse, ne patroni vel advocati seu vicedomini super praemissis de cetero plus usurpent, quam reperiatur in iure permissum, et, si contra praesumpserint, per severitatem canonicam districtissime compescantur. Sacri nihilominus concilii approbatione statuimus, quatenus, si patroni, vel advocati, aut feudatarii, seu vicedomini aut alii beneficiati alicuius ecclesiae rectorem vel clericum alium ipsius ecclesiae per se vel per alios occidere vel mutilare ausu nefando praesumpserint, patroni ius patronatus, advocati advocatiam, feudatarii feudum, vicedomini vicedominatum, et beneficiati beneficium prorsus amittant. Et ne minus vindictae quam excessus memoria prorogetur, non solum de praemissis nihil perveniat ad heredes, sed etiam usque ad quartam generationem posteritates talium in clericorum collegium nullatenus admittantur, neque in domibus regularibus alicuius praelationis assequantur honorem, nisi cum eis fuerit misericorditer dispensatum.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: While a lord remains excommunicated, his subjects do not owe fidelity; and if he has persisted in it for a long time and, having been admonished, has not obeyed the Church, they are absolved from their obligation to him.

Honorius III, to the Provost, Archdeacon, and H., Canon of Soissons.

We received the grave complaint of the beloved sons of the chapter of Lund that, when the nobleman, the Count of Register, had been bound by the bond of excommunication by judges delegated by the Apostolic See for the many injuries that he had inflicted upon them, he, now persisting in excommunication for two years and more, stubbornly refused to obey the law, contemning the keys of the Church to the loss of his own salvation and the scandal of many. Therefore, although obstinacy of this kind is not free from the suspicion of heretical depravity, nevertheless, wishing to spare the nobility of the aforesaid count if perhaps, returning to his heart, he recovers from his error, we command your discretion that, if the aforesaid count, after having been diligently admonished by you, within fifteen days after your admonition has not fully obeyed the law, you, causing the sentence of excommunication delivered against him, as it was reasonably pronounced, to be inviolably observed until worthy satisfaction, and placing all his land and the places in which the same count shall have stayed under ecclesiastical interdict, shall absolve the churches in which he is known to have some right from their obligation to him, with the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal removed, and shall announce that his faithful men, for as long as he persists in excommunication, are wholly absolved from their oath of fidelity to him. But if perhaps even thus vexation does not give him understanding, he will not without reason be able to fear lest his obstinacy drive him into the infamy of heresy, which, when he wishes, perhaps he will not easily be able to avoid.

> Domino excommunicato manente, subditi fidelitatem non debent, et, si longo tempore in ea perstiterit et monitus non paruerit ecclesiae, ab eius debito absolvuntur.
>
> Honorius III. Praeposito, Archidiacono et H. Canonico Suessionensibus.
>
> Gravem dilectorum filiorum capituli Lund. recepimus quaestionem, quod, quum nobilis vir comes Registrensis pro multis iniuriis, quas irrogarat eisdem, per iudices a sede apostolica delegatos excommunicationis vinculo fuerit innodatus, idem, iam per duos annos et amplius in excommunicatione persistens, iuri parere pertinaciter renuit, claves ecclesiae in suae salutis dispendium et plurimorum scandalum contemnendo. Licet igitur huiusmodi pertinacia non careat scrupulo haereticae pravitatis: volentes tamen nobilitati parcere comitis supra dicti, si forsan ad cor revertens a suo resipiscat errore, discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus, si comes praedictus a vobis diligenter commonitus, infra quindecim dies post commonitionem vestram non paruerit plene iuri, vos excommunicationis sententiam latam in eum, sicut rationabiliter est prolata, facientes usque ad condignam satisfactionem inviolabiliter observari, et totam terram ipsius ac loca, in quibus idem comes fuerit commoratus, supponentes ecclesiastico interdicto, ecclesias, in quibus aliquod ius habere dignoscitur, ab eius debito sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo absolventes, fideles ipsius, quamdiu in excommunicatione perstiterit, ab eius fidelitatis iuramento denuncietis penitus absolutos. Quodsi forsan nec sic tribuat ei vexatio intellectum poterit non immerito formidare, ne sua pertinacia eum in haeresis impingat infamiam, quam quum noluerit forte de facili non poterit evitare.

Title XXXVIII: On Penances and Remissions

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Public penance ought to be imposed for a manifest sin.

Pope Alexander.

Manifest sins are not to be purged by a hidden correction.

> DE POENITENTIIS ET REMISSIONIBUS.
>
> Pro manifesto peccato poenitentia publica imponi debet.
>
> Alexander Papa.
>
> Manifesta peccata non sunt occulta correctione purganda.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It sets down the penance of one who kills a priest.

From the Council of Mainz.

Upon one who kills a priest let a penance of twelve years be imposed according to the canons; or, if he denies it, if he is free, let him swear with seventy-two, but if he is a serf, let him purge himself upon twelve glowing plowshares. One convicted of the offense shall lack the military belt until the final time of his life and shall remain without hope of marriage.

> Ponit poenitentiam occidentis presbyterum.
>
> Ex concilio Maguntinensi. Qui presbyterum occiderit, XII. annorum poenitentia ei secundum canones imponatur, aut, si negaverit, si liber est, cum LXXII. iuret, si autem servus, super duodecim vomeres ferventes se expurget. Convictus noxa usque ad ultimum tempus vitae suae militiae cingulo careat, et absque spe coniugii maneat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: After the circumstances have been considered, a discretionary penance is to be adjudged to one who exceeded the measure in defending himself.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Milan and his Suffragans.

The nobleman P. signified to us that, when F., called emperor, once returned from the City, he denied him the castle of Vernica. (And below:) Hence it happened that, after four castles had been destroyed, more than two thousand houses were destroyed, and many men killed, and other evils are said to have been committed there, which it would be long to recount individually. Therefore, because the aforesaid P. desires to be reconciled to God on this account and to undertake a worthy penance, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you give him counsel concerning this and mercifully impose a penance upon him according to what shall seem good, attending to the fact that he did this for his liberty and for devotion to the Church. Wherefore in these things you ought to have such discretion that both others and he are in no way held back from the service of the Church by the austerity of the penance, nor ought they deservedly to fear any danger to salvation.

> Consideratis circumstantiis arbitraria poenitentia iudicenda est ei, qui modum excessit se defendendo.
>
> Alexander III. Mediolanensi Archiepiscopo et Suffraganeis.
>
> Significavit nobis vir nobilis P., quod F. dicto imperatori, quum olim rediret ab Urbe, castrum Vernicae negavit. (Et infra:) Unde contigit, quod, IV. castris destructis, plus quam duo millia domorum destructa fuerunt et multi homines interfecti, et alia mala ibi commissa dicuntur, quae longum esset per singula enarrare. Quoniam igitur praefatus P. Deo exinde reconciliari desiderat, et poenitentiam dignam suscipere, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus eidem super hoc consilium detis, et ipsi poenitentiam, secundum quod visum fuerit, misericorditer imponatis, attendentes, quod pro libertate sua et pro ecclesiae devotione hoc fecit. Quare in his debetis talem discretionem habere, ut alii et ipse idem pro austeritate poenitentiae a servitio ecclesiae nullatenus retardentur, nec aliquod salutis periculum merito debeant formidare.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Indulgences granted by prelates to those not subject to them do not benefit them unless their own judges grant this.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

But concerning your consultation whether remissions that are made at dedications of churches or to those contributing to the building of bridges benefit others than those who are subject to the persons granting the remissions, we wish your fraternity to hold [firmly] that, since no one can be bound or absolved by one who is not his judge, we judge that the aforesaid remissions benefit only those to whom their own judges specially granted that they should benefit them. And in this understand resolved the question in which it is asked whether one who communicates with an excommunicated person ought to implore the grace of absolution from his own bishop or from the bishop of the excommunicated person.

> Indulgentiae, quae conceduntur per praelatos non subditis, non prosunt, nisi proprii iudices hoc concedant.
>
> Idem Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi. Quod autem consuluisti, utrum remissiones, quae fiunt in dedicationibus ecclesiarum aut conferentibus ad aedificationem pontium, aliis prosint, quam his, qui remittentibus subsunt, hoc volumus tuam fraternitatem [firmiter] tenere, quod, quum a non suo iudice ligari nullus valeat vel absolvi, remissiones praedictas prodesse illis tantummodo arbitramur, quibus, ut prosint, proprii iudices specialiter indulserunt. Et in hoc eam intelligas quaestionem solutam, in qua quaeritur, utrum is, qui excommunicato communicat, a suo episcopo vel excommunicati absolutionis gratiam debeat implorare.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who does not lay aside the intention of sinning is not truly penitent; nevertheless, his confession is received.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

As to the fact that certain persons, as you assert, come to confession concerning crimes and, although they wish to confess, nevertheless assert that they cannot abstain, we respond to your consultation in this way: you ought to receive their confession and furnish them counsel concerning their crimes, because, although penance of this kind is not true, nevertheless their confession is to be admitted, and penance is to be imposed by frequent and salutary admonitions.

> Non est vere poenitens qui peccandi animum non deponit; tamen recipitur eius confessio.
>
> Idem Belvacensi Episcopo.
>
> Quod quidam, sicut asseris, ad confessionem de criminibus veniunt, et, quamvis confiteri velint, se tamen asserunt abstinere non posse, consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod eorum confessionem recipere debes, et eis de criminibus consilium exhibere, quia, licet non sit vera huiusmodi poenitentia, admittenda est tamen eorum confessio, et crebris et salubribus monitis poenitentia est indicenda.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who by way of penance ought to fast on bread and water on a certain day can, when bread is lacking, use other foods.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tribur.

Although the page of both the Old and New Testaments (And below: [cf. c. 3, On Feasts, II. 9.]) But if those who are bound by penance imposed upon them to pass certain days on bread and water do not have bread upon which to feed, let them be refreshed with legumes or fish or other foods if necessity demands it, discretion nevertheless being applied, so that they use these things not for delights but for necessary sustenance alone.

> Qui ex poenitentia debet certa die in pane et aqua ieiunare, potest deficiente pane aliis cibariis utI. Idem Triburiensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Licet tam veteris quam novi testamenti pagina (Et infra: [cf. c. 3. de fer. II. 9.]) Si autem illi, qui aliquos dies in pane et aqua ex iniuncta sibi poenitentia tenentur peragere, panem, quo vescantur, non habent: leguminibus aut piscibus aut aliis cibariis reficiantur, si necessitas id exposcat, discretione tamen adhibita, quod his non ad delicias, sed ad necessariam solummodo sustentationem utantur.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Public penance is not imposed upon a Greek priest who procures, or deliberately neglects to prevent, the smothering of his children; but he ought to abstain from the office of the altar and otherwise do penance in secret. But if the offense is public, he ought to do penance publicly.

Clement III.

It has been asked of us whether public penance is to be imposed upon Greek priests, to whom it is permitted to make use of lawful marriage, if they request that it be imposed upon them for children who have been smothered. Therefore, we respond to your consultation in this manner: if, through their procuring or deliberate negligence, children are found smothered in beds, they ought perpetually to abstain from the office of the altar, and a penance graver than for laymen, but nevertheless not public unless the matter becomes public, ought to be imposed upon them; they, however, shall not only cease from the execution of sacred orders, but, if they are below those orders, they shall in no way be assumed to them. But also, if through their carelessness the children are found dead in cradles, and that matter was hidden, let penance be imposed upon them according to the judgment of the penitentiary, and, for the terror of others, let them abstain from the celebration of Masses for a time. [Given at the Lateran.]

> Sacerdoti Graeco procuranti, vel studiose negligenti oppressionem filiorum, non imponitur poenitentia publica, sed debet abstinere ab altaris officio, et aliter in secreto agere poenitentiam; sed, si delictum est publicum, debet publice agere poenitentiam.
>
> Clemens III. Quaesitum est a nobis, utrum sacerdotibus Graecis, quibus legitimo matrimonio licet uti, poenitentia publica sit imponenda, si eam sibi postulent pro filiis oppressis iniungi. Huic igitur consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si ipsis procurantibus vel studiose negligentibus filii in lectis reperiuntur oppressi, ab officio altaris debent perpetuo abstinere, et eis gravior quam laicis, non tamen publica, nisi in publicum id veniat, poenitentia debet imponi; qui tamen non solum a sacrorum ordinum exsecutione cessabunt, verum etiam, si sunt infra ipsos, ad eos minime assumantur. Verum etiam, si ex incuria ipsorum mortui inveniantur in cunis, et illud fuerit occultum, eis poenitentia pro arbitrio poenitentiarii imponatur, et in terrorem aliorum ad tempus abstineant a celebratione missarum. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A priest ought to determine penance according to the magnitude of the excess, the penitent's contrition, and other circumstances. This is what it says with respect to the title.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Livonia and to the Brothers who are with him.

God, who his Church (And below: [cf. c. 11, On the Life and Honesty of Clerics, III. 1.]) But, since penance is to be moderated by the judgment of a discreet priest not so much according to the magnitude of the excess as according to the penitent's contrition, having weighed the quality of the person and considered all the circumstances concerning fornication, adultery, homicide, perjury, and other crimes, and especially the newness of the Church of Livonia, you shall impose a fitting penance upon offenders as you shall see to be expedient for their salvation. But, adhering to the footsteps of the Apostle, who says, as we said before, "I gave you milk to drink, not meat," you shall instruct them gradually in the faith, carefully teaching them the form of confession, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed. In the meantime, nevertheless, you shall grant the sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord to those reborn in the font of baptism on the customary feast days and at the point of death. [Given on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of May, in the fourth year, 1201.]

> Sacerdos poenitentiam arbitrari debet secundum quantitatem excessus, poenitentis contritionem, et alias circumstantias. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Innocentius III. Livoniensi Episcopo, et eis, qui cum ipso sunt, Fratribus.
>
> Deus, qui ecclesiam suam (Et infra: [cf. c. 11. de vita et hon. cler. III. 1.]) Ceterum, quum poenitentia non tam secundum quantitatem excessus, quam poenitentis contritionem per discreti sacerdotis arbitrium sit moderanda, pensata qualitate personae super fornicatione, adulterio, homicidio, periurio et aliis criminibus, consideratis circumstantiis omnibus et praesertim novitate Livoniensis ecclesiae, competentem poenitentiam delinquentibus imponatis, prout saluti eorum videritis expedire. Apostoli autem vestigiis inhaerentes, dicentis, ut praediximus: "lac vobis potum dedi, non escam," paulatim eos instruatis in fide, confessionis formam, orationem dominicam et symbolum illos sollicite edocentes. Interim tamen corporis et sanguinis Domini sacramentum renatis fonte baptismatis consuetis festivitatibus et in mortis articulo tribuatis. [Dat. XIII. Kal. Mai. A. IV. 1201.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: The confession of a woman who substituted another's child for herself, or conceived her own by adultery, and does not wish to disclose it to her husband, is heard.

The same, to the Cardinal Priest of Saint Lawrence in Lucina, Legate of the Apostolic See.

Of the office (And below: [cf. c. 38, On Election, I. 6.]) You signified moreover that a certain woman confessed to you in penance that, fearing lest her husband's possession devolve upon others, induced by the counsel of a certain sorceress, she drank the juice of certain herbs daily, and thus her belly swelled; and, thereby showing herself to be pregnant, at last she substituted another's child for herself. Fearing her husband, she does not wish to disclose the crime to him, and he believes without any doubt that the offspring is his own. Therefore, because through our letters you ask to be instructed whether penance is to be imposed upon her while this fraud continues, we respond to your inquiry in this manner: just as penance is not to be denied to a woman who, while her husband was ignorant, conceived offspring from adultery, although she fears to confess it to her husband, so penance ought not to be denied to this woman either, especially if by "others" you understand strangers to whom she fears her husband's possession would devolve; but fitting satisfaction ought to be imposed upon her by a discreet priest. Finally, etc. (cf. c. 42, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V. 39.)

Auditur mulieris confessio, quae sibi partum alienum supposuit, vel proprium ex adulterio suscepit, nec illud marito vult detegere.

Idem sancti Laurentii in Lucina Presbytero cardinali apostolicae sedis Legato.

Officii (Et infra: [cf. c. 38. de elect. I. 6.]) Significasti praeterea, quandam mulierem in poenitentia tibi fuisse confessam, quod timens, ne viri possessio devolveretur ad alios, inducta cuiusdam consilio veneficae mulieris, quarundam herbarum quotidie succum potavit, et sic venter eius intumuit, et inde gravidam se ostendens, tandem sibi partum supposuit alienum; timensque maritum, non vult facinus ipsi detegere, qui prolem credit sine dubitatione qualibet esse suam. Quoniam igitur per nostras postulas literas edoceri, utrum ei hac fraude durante sit poenitentia iniungenda: inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, sicut mulieri, quae ignorante marito de adulterio prolem suscepit, quamvis id viro suo timeat confiteri, non est poenitentia deneganda, ita nec illi debet poenitentia denegari, maxime si per alios intelligas alienos, ad quos timeat possessionem viri devolvi; sed competens satisfactio per discretum sacerdotem ei debet iniungi. Postremo etc. (cf. c. 42. de sent. excomm. V. 39.)

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: An abbess cannot bless nuns, hear confessions, or preach publicly.

The same, to the Bishops of Valencia and Burgos, and to the Abbot of N. of the Cistercian Order.

Certain new things have recently been brought to our ears, at which we marvel not a little: namely, that abbesses established in the dioceses of Burgos and Palencia bless their own nuns, also hear their confessions concerning crimes, and, reading the Gospel, presume to preach publicly. Therefore, since this is equally discordant and absurd [and is in no way to be tolerated by us], we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, lest this be done henceforth, you take care firmly to prohibit it by apostolic authority, because, although the most blessed Virgin Mary was worthier and more excellent than all the Apostles, nevertheless the Lord committed the keys of the kingdom of heaven not to her but to them. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Ides of December, in the thirteenth year, 1210.]

Abbatissa moniales benedicere, confessiones audire et publice praedicare non potest.

Idem Valentino et Burgensi Episcopis, et Abbati de N. Cisterciensis ordinis.

Nova quaedam nuper, de quibus miramur non modicum, nostris sunt auribus intimata, quod abbatissae videlicet, in Burgensi et in Palentinensi dioecesibus constitutae, moniales proprias benedicunt, ipsarum quoque confessiones in criminibus audiunt, et legentes evangelium praesumunt publice praedicare. Quum igitur id absonum sit pariter et absurdum, [nec a nobis aliquatenus sustinendum,] discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, ne id de cetero fiat, auctoritate curetis apostolica firmiter inhibere, quia, licet beatissima virgo Maria dignior et excellentior fuerit Apostolis universis, non tamen illi, sed istis Dominus claves regni coelorum commisit. [*Dat. Lat. III. Id. Dec. Ao. XIII. *1210.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: During a general interdict, penance and viaticum are granted to the dying. This is the first point. Clerics who observed the interdict can be buried silently in a cemetery. This is the second. In conventual churches, clerics in twos or threes can say the hours in a subdued voice. This is the third. During an interdict, penance can be granted to those signed with the cross and to pilgrims. This is the fourth.

The same.

As regards you (And below:) But because we have understood that some doubt whether, when viaticum is to be given to clerics or laymen at the end of life, anointing also is to be bestowed, and whether burial together with the other sacraments is to be granted to the dying; whether also in conventual churches divine offices can be celebrated in a subdued voice, with doors closed and those under interdict excluded; and likewise whether penance is to be imposed upon those receiving the sign of the cross and those visiting the shrines of the saints, we wish to cut away an uncertainty of this kind from the hearts of those who doubt. For in that word by which we do not deny penance to the dying, we wish viaticum also, which is furnished to those who are truly penitent, to be understood, so that it also is not denied to the dying. But although through a general interdict both anointing and ecclesiastical burial are denied to all, nevertheless we grant by grace that clerics who die, provided that they observed the interdict, may be buried with silence in the cemetery of the church, without the ringing of bells and with all solemnities ceasing. And in conventual churches, two and two, or three together, may read the canonical hours but not sing them, with doors closed, those under interdict and those excommunicated excluded, and in a voice so subdued that it cannot be heard outside; since it has also been granted to regulars according to a privilege of the Apostolic See that, when a general interdict of a land occurs, it is lawful for them, with doors closed, excommunicated persons and those under interdict excluded, without bells being rung, to celebrate divine rites in a suppressed voice. But we do not deny to those receiving the sign of the cross that penance be imposed upon them, when they request it, out of reverence for the Crucified; and this can mercifully be granted to other pilgrims also.

> Tempore generalis interdicti conceditur poenitentia et viaticum morientibus. Hoc primo. Clerici, qui servarunt interdictum, possunt eum silentio in coemeterio sepeliri. Hoc secundo. In conventualibus ecclesiis clerici bini vel trini possunt horas submissa voce dicere. Hoc tertio. Cruce signatis et peregrinis tempore interdicti poenitentia concedi potest. Hoc quarto.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quod in te (Et infra:) Verum quoniam a quibusdam intelleximus dubitari, utrum, quum clericis vel laicis dandum sit viaticum in extremis, an etiam in unctio impendenda, et an cum aliis sacramentis indulgenda sit decedentibus sepultura; utrum etiam in conventualibus ecclesiis demissa voce, ianuis clausis, interdictis exclusis, divina possint officia celebrari; similiter an suscipientibus signum crucis et sanctorum limina visitantibus sit poenitentia iniungenda: ambiguitatem huiusmodi de dubitantium cordibus volumus amputare. In illo enim verbo, per quod poenitentiam morientibus non negamus, viaticum etiam, quod vere poenitentibus exhibetur, intelligi volumus, ut nec ipsum etiam decedentibus denegetur. Licet autem per generale interdictum denegetur omnibus tam unctio quam ecclesiastica sepultura, concedimus tamen ex gratia, ut clerici decedentes, qui tamen servaverint interdictum, in coemeterio ecclesiae sine campanarum pulsatione, cessantibus solennitatibus omnibus, cum silentio tumulentur. Et in conventualibus ecclesiis bini et bini, vel simul tres, horas canonicas valeant legere, non cantare, ianuis clausis, interdictis et excommunicatis exclusis, et voce ita demissa, quod exterius audiri non possint; quum et regularibus secundum privilegium sedis apostolicae sit indultum, ut, quum generale interdictum terrae fuerit, liceat eis, ianuis clausis, excommunicatis et interdictis exclusis, non pulsatis campanis, suppressa voce celebrare divina. Recipientibus autem signum crucis non negamus, quo minus eis ob reverentiam crucifixi poenitentia, quum postulaverint, iniungatur, quod et aliis peregrinis potest misericorditer indulgeri.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: It is famous and very frequently alleged, and says this: Every person capable of fraud is bound at least once a year to confess to his own priest, or to another with his permission, and to receive the sacrament of the Eucharist at least at Easter. And a priest who reveals a confession is to be deposed and thrust into a monastery to do perpetual penance.

The same, in the general council.

Every faithful person of either sex, after reaching the years of discretion, shall faithfully confess all his sins by himself at least once a year to his own priest, and shall endeavor to fulfill according to his own strength the penance imposed upon him, reverently receiving the sacrament of the Eucharist at least at Easter, unless perhaps, on the counsel of his own priest, for some reasonable cause he judges that he should abstain from a reception of this kind for a time; otherwise, while living, let him be kept from entrance into the church, and, when dying, let him lack Christian burial. Hence, let this salutary statute be published frequently in churches, lest anyone assume a veil of excuse through the blindness of ignorance. But if anyone wishes for just cause to confess his sins to another priest, let him first seek and obtain permission from his own priest, since otherwise that priest cannot absolve or bind him. But let the priest be discerning and cautious, so that, in the manner of a skilled physician, he pours wine and oil over the wounds of the injured man, diligently inquiring into the circumstances both of the sinner and of the sin, through which he may prudently understand what counsel he ought to furnish him and what kind of remedy to apply, using different trials to save the sick man. But let him take care altogether that by word, sign, or any other manner he does not in any way betray the sinner. Yet, if he needs more prudent counsel, let him seek it cautiously without any expression of the person, because we decree that one who presumes to reveal a sin disclosed to him in the penitential judgment is not only to be deposed from the priestly office but also to be thrust into a strict monastery to do perpetual penance.

> Famosum est et multum allegabile, et hoc dicit. Quilibet doli capax tenetur saltem semel in anno confiteri proprio sacerdoti, vel de eius licentia alteri, et eucharistiae sacramentum ad minus in Pascha recipere. Et sacerdos, revelans confessionem, deponendus est, et in monasterio ad agendum perpetuam poenitentiam detrudendus.
>
> Idem in concilio generali. Omnis utriusque sexus fidelis, postquam ad annos discretionis pervenerit, omnia sua solus peccata saltem semel in anno fideliter confiteatur proprio sacerdoti, et iniunctam sibi poenitentiam propriis viribus studeat adimplere, suscipiens reverenter ad minus in Pascha eucharistiae sacramentum, nisi forte de proprii sacerdotis consilio ob aliquam rationabilem causam ad tempus ab huiusmodi perceptione duxerit abstinendum; alioquin et vivens ab ingressu ecclesiae arceatur, et moriens Christiana careat sepultura. Unde hoc salutare statutum frequenter in ecclesiis publicetur, ne quisquam ignorantiae caecitate velamen excusationis assumat. Si quis autem alieno sacerdoti voluerit iusta de causa sua confiteri peccata, licentiam prius postulet et obtineat a proprio sacerdote, quum aliter ipse illum non possit absolvere vel ligare. Sacerdos autem sit discretus et cautus, ut more periti medici superinfundat vinum et oleum vulneribus sauciati, diligenter inquirens et peccatoris circumstantias et peccati, quibus prudenter intelligat, quale debeat ei praebere consilium, et cuiusmodi remedium adhibere, diversis experimentis utendo ad salvandum aegrotum. Caveat autem omnino, ne verbo aut signo aut alio quovis modo aliquatenus prodat peccatorem. Sed, si prudentiori consilio indiguerit, illud absque ulla expressione personae caute requirat, quoniam, qui peccatum in poenitentiali iudicio sibi detectum praesumpserit revelare, non solum a sacerdotali officio deponendum decernimus, verum etiam ad agendam perpetuam poenitentiam in arctum monasterium detrudendum.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Physicians called to the sick ought before all things to induce the sick person to confession, and not to persuade him of anything for bodily health that tends toward danger to souls.

The same, in the same council.

Since bodily infirmity sometimes proceeds from sin, the Lord saying to the sick man whom he had healed, “Go, and sin no more, lest something worse happen to you,” by the present decree we enact, and strictly command physicians of bodies, that, when it happens that they are called to the sick, before all things they admonish and induce them to call physicians of souls, so that, after provision has been made for the sick person's spiritual salvation, they may proceed more salutarily to the remedy of bodily medicine, since, when the cause ceases, the effect ceases. Indeed, among other things, what gave cause for this edict was that certain persons, lying upon a bed of sickness, when they are advised by physicians to make provision concerning the salvation of their souls, fall into a condition of despair, whence they more easily incur danger of death. But if any physician, after this constitution of ours has been published by the prelates of the places, is found a transgressor of it, let him be kept from entrance into the church until he has competently made satisfaction for a transgression of this kind. Furthermore, since the soul is much more precious than the body, under threat of anathema we prohibit any physician from advising a sick person, for bodily health, to do anything that is turned to the peril of the soul.

Medici, vocati ad infirmos, debent ante omnia inducere infirmum ad confessionem, nec quicquam persuadere pro salute corporis, tendens in animarum periculum.

Idem in eodem.

Quum infirmitas corporalis nonnunquam ex peccato proveniat, dicente Domino languido, quem sanaverat: "Vade, et amplius noli peccare, ne deterius aliquid tibi contingat," praesenti decreto statuimus, et districte praecipimus medicis corporum, ut, quum eos ad infirmos vocari contigerit, ipsos ante omnia moneant et inducant, ut medicos advocent animarum, ut, postquam fuerit infirmo de spirituali salute provisum, ad corporalis medicinae remedium salubrius procedatur, quum causa cessante cesset effectus. Hoc quidem inter alia huic causam dedit edicto, quod quidam, in aegritudinis lecto iacentes, quum eis a medicis suadetur, ut de animarum salute disponant, in desperationis articulum incidunt, unde facilius mortis periculum incurrunt. Si quis autem medicorum huius nostrae constitutionis, postquam per praelatos locorum fuerit publicata, transgressor exstiterit, tamdiu ab ingressu ecclesiae arceatur, donec pro transgressione huiusmodi satisfecerit competenter. Ceterum, quum anima sit multo pretiosior corpore, sub interminatione anathematis prohibemus, ne quis medicorum pro corporali salute aliquid aegroto suadeat, quod in periculum animae convertatur.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Collectors of alms ought not to be admitted without letters of the Apostolic See or of the diocesan bishops; and even then they are not to propose anything beyond what is contained in those letters. This is the first point. And they ought to be modest and abstain from unsuitable lodging places and expenses. This is the second. At the dedication of a basilica, remission ought not to exceed one year, and at the anniversary of the dedication, and in letters of indulgence granted by someone other than the Pope, it ought not to exceed forty days. This is what it says to the end.

The same, in the same council.

Since from this (And below: [cf. c. 2, On Relics and the Veneration of Saints, III. 45.]) We also prohibit collectors of alms—some of whom, falsely representing themselves as others, propose certain abuses in their preaching—from being admitted unless they exhibit genuine letters of the Apostolic See or of the diocesan bishop; and even then let them not be permitted to propose anything to the people beyond what shall be contained in those letters. We have thought that the form that the Apostolic See commonly grants to such persons should be expressed, so that diocesan bishops may moderate their letters according to it. It is as follows: "Since, as the Apostle says, we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ to receive according to what we have done in the body, whether it was good or evil, we ought to anticipate the day of the final harvest with works of mercy, and, with a view to eternal things, to sow on earth what, when the Lord renders it, we ought to gather in heaven with multiplied fruit, holding a firm hope and a right confidence, because one who sows sparingly shall also reap sparingly, and one who sows in blessings shall also reap eternal life from blessings. Therefore, since the resources of the hospital itself do not suffice for the support of the brothers and needy persons resorting to such a hospital, we admonish and exhort all of you in the Lord, and enjoin upon you for the remission of sins, that from the goods bestowed upon you by God you furnish them pious alms and welcome aids of charity, so that through your assistance provision may be made for their poverty, and through these good things and [through] others that you shall do by the Lord's inspiration, you may be able to attain eternal joys." But let those who are sent to seek alms be modest and discerning, and let them not lodge in taverns or other unsuitable places, nor make useless or costly expenditures, taking every care lest they wear the habit of a false religious profession. In addition, because through indiscreet and excessive indulgences, which certain prelates of churches do not fear to grant, both the keys of the Church are contemned and penitential satisfaction is enervated, we decree that, when a basilica is dedicated, the indulgence shall not be extended beyond one year, whether it is dedicated by one bishop alone or by several; and thereafter, at the time of the anniversary of the dedication, the remission granted from imposed penances shall not exceed forty days. (And below:) We command that this number of days also regulate letters of indulgence that are sometimes granted for any cases, since the Roman Pontiff, who possesses the fullness of power, has been accustomed to observe this moderation in such matters.

> Eleemosynarum quaestores sine apostolicis vel dioecesanorum literis admitti non debent, nec tunc proponant ultra id, quod in ipsis literis continetur. Hoc primo. Et debent esse modesti, et a locis et expensis incongruis abstinere. Hoc secundo. In dedicatione basilicae ultra annum, et in anniversario dedicationis, et in literis indulgentiarum, concessis ab alio quam a Papa, ultra XL. dies remissio excedere non debet. H. d. usque ad fin.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Quum ex eo (Et infra: [cf. c. 2. de reliq. et ven. sanct. III. 45.]) Eleemosynarum quoque quaestores, quorum quidam se alios mentiendo abusiones nonnullas in sua praedicatione proponunt, admitti, nisi apostolicas vel dioecesani episcopi literas veras exhibeant, prohibemus, et tunc praeter id, quod in ipsis continebitur literis, nihil populo proponere permittantur. Formam vero, quam communiter talibus apostolica sedes indulget, duximus exprimendam, ut secundum eam dioecesani episcopi suas literas moderentur. Ea siquidem talis est: "Quoniam, ut ait Apostolus, omnes stabimus ante tribunal Christi, recepturi prout in corpore gessimus, sive bonum fuerit sive malum, oportet nos diem messionis extremae misericordiae operibus praevenire, ac aeternorum intuitu seminare in terris, quod reddente Domino cum multiplicato fructu colligere debeamus in coelis, firmam spem fiduciamque rectam tenentes, quoniam qui parce seminat parce et metet, et qui seminat in benedictionibus, de benedictionibus et metet vitam aeternam. Quum igitur ad sustentationem fratrum et egenorum ad tale confluentium hospitale propriae non suppetant facultates, universitatem vestram monemus et exhortamur in Domino, atque in remissionem vobis iniungimus peccatorum, quatenus de bonis vobis a Deo collatis pias eleemosynas et grata eis caritatis subsidia erogetis, ut per subventionem vestram ipsorum inopiae consulatur, et vos per haec bona et [per] alia, quae Domino inspirante feceritis, ad aeterna possitis gaudia pervenire." Qui autem ad quaerendas eleemosynas destinantur, modesti sint et discreti, nec in tabernis aut in aliis locis incongruis hospitentur, nec inutiles faciant aut sumptuosas expensas, caventes omnino, ne falsae religionis habitum gestent. Ad haec, quia per indiscretas et superfluas indulgentias, quas quidam ecclesiarum praelati facere non verentur, et claves ecclesiae contemnuntur, et poenitentialis satisfactio enervatur, decernimus, ut, quum dedicatur basilica, non extendatur indulgentia ultra annum, sive ab uno solo sive a pluribus episcopis, dedicetur, ac deinde in anniversario dedicationis tempore XL. dies de iniunctis poenitentiis indulta remissio non excedat. (Et infra:) Hunc quoque dierum numerum indulgentiarum literis praecipimus moderari, quae pro quibuslibet casibus aliquoties conceduntur, quum Romanus Pontifex, qui plenitudinem obtinet potestatis, hoc in talibus moderamen consueverit observare.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: An archbishop can grant indulgences within his province according to the form of the general council. This is what it says. And it speaks concerning the preceding chapter at the end.

Honorius III.

You sought to be made certain by our response whether you can grant general letters of remission throughout your province. We therefore respond briefly to your fraternity that you can freely grant letters of this kind throughout your province, yet in such manner that you do not exceed the statute of the general council.

Archiepiscopus infra provinciam suam potest concedere indulgentias secundum formam concilii generalis. H. d. Et loquitur de cap. praeced. in fine.

Honorius III. Nostra postulasti certificari responso, utrum per tuam provinciam possis concedere remissionis literas generales. Nos igitur fraternitati tuae breviter respondemus, quod per provinciam tuam libere potes huiusmodi concedere literas, ita tamen, quod statutum generalis concilii non excedas.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A bishop and the others concerning whom the letter speaks can choose a provident confessor for themselves without the permission of their superiors.

Gregory IX.

Lest danger to souls threaten because of a delay of penance, we permit bishops and other superiors, as well as lesser exempt prelates, to choose for themselves a provident and discreet confessor even without the permission of their superior.

Episcopus et alii, de quibus in litera, possunt sine licentia superiorum sibi eligere providum confessorem.

Gregorius IX. Ne pro dilatione poenitentiae periculum immineat animarum, permittimus episcopis et aliis superioribus, nec non minoribus praelatis exemptis, ut etiam praeter sui superioris licentiam providum et discretum sibi possint eligere confessorem.

Title XXXIX: On the Sentence of Excommunication

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A prepubescent person who struck a cleric can be absolved by the bishop; and one who strikes a cleric in jest or for the sake of discipline, even if he is of full age, is not excommunicated. But one who does so from hatred is, and is absolved by the Pope.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Sens.

But concerning that matter about which you sought counsel from us—whether scholars, if they strike one another at full or lesser age, or clerics or religious men in a cloister, according to that canon by which it was enacted that those who lay violent hands upon clerics are to be sent to the Apostolic See to be absolved, ought to come to the same see for their absolution; to your inquiry in this manner we respond: if clerics below the years of puberty strike one another, or one strikes another, they are not to be sent to the Apostolic See, because their age excuses them. Nor even if clerics are of full age and it happens that they strike one another not from hatred, envy, or indignation, but from playful levity; nor is a master to be sent if he strikes a clerical scholar with a view to discipline or correction, because in their cases a violent laying on of hands cannot be imputed. But if the same scholars or secular clerics strike one another from hatred, they ought to come to the Apostolic See for their absolution.

DE SENTENTIA EXCOMMUNICATIONIS.

Impubes, qui clericum percussit, ab episcopo absolvi potest, et qui ioco vel causa disciplinae percutit clericum, etiamsi sit maior, excommunicatus non est; qui vero ex odio, sic, et per Papam absolvitur.

Alexander III. Senonensi Archiepiscopo.

Super eo vero, quod a nobis consilium postulasti, utrum scholares, si se invicem percusserint in plena vel minori aetate, clerici aut religiosi viri in claustro, secundum canonem illum, quo statutum est, ut illi, qui in clericos violentas manus iniiciunt, mittantur ad apostolicam sedem absolvendi, debeant pro sua absolutione ad eandem sedem venire, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si clerici infra puberes annos se adinvicem, aut unus alterum percusserint, non sunt ad apostolicam sedem mittendi, quia eos aetas excusat. Nec etiam clerici, si sunt plenae aetatis, et non de odio, vel de invidia, vel de indignatione, sed levitate iocosa se adinvicem percutere contingat, neque magister, si scholarem clericum intuitu disciplinae vel correctionis percusserit, quia non potest in ipsis iniectio manuum violenta notari. Ceterum si ex odio iidem scholares vel saeculares clerici sese percusserint, pro sua absolutione debent ad apostolicam sedem venire.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The abbot absolves monks who strike one another. The same applies to regular canons; and, if the abbot's discretion is deficient, recourse is had to the bishop.

The same, to the same.

But monks and regular canons, in whatever manner they strike one another in the cloister, are not to be sent to the Apostolic See, but are to be subjected to discipline according to the providence and discretion of their abbot; and if the abbot's discretion does not suffice for their correction, the providence of the diocesan bishop is to be applied.

> Monachos, se adinvicem percutientes, absolvit abbas. Idem in canonicis regularibus; et, abbatis discretione deficiente, recurritur ad episcopum.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Monachi vero et canonici regulares, quocunque modo se in claustro percusserint, non sunt ad apostolicam sedem mittendi, sed secundum providentiam et discretionem sui abbatis disciplinae subdantur, et, si discretio abbatis non sufficit ad eorum correctionem, est providentia dioecesani episcopi adhibenda.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A doorkeeper who has struck a cleric, but not gravely, can be absolved by the bishop. This is the first point. An official who deliberately lays a hand upon a cleric is absolved by the Pope. This is the second. One who, repelling force with force, strikes a cleric is not excommunicated. This is the third. One who strikes a cleric found shamefully with a close female relative is not excommunicated; it is otherwise with a remote relative, and a close relative is defined as in the letter.

The same, to the same.

But if someone serving as doorkeeper of some authority, acting maliciously under the pretext of his office, injures a cleric, he can be absolved by his bishop, unless perhaps he gravely wounded the same cleric. But an official cannot merit the benefit of absolution for laying hands upon a cleric without the mandate of the Roman Pontiff, because no layman is given such great authority over a cleric, unless perhaps, when keeping back a rushing crowd, he injures a cleric not deliberately but by accidental mischance. But if anyone repels or injures with force a cleric who brings force upon him, he ought not on this account to be sent to the Apostolic See, provided that he immediately repels force with force, since all laws and all rights permit force to be repelled with force. Nor is one to be compelled to come to the Apostolic See who has laid violent hands upon a cleric found shamefully with his wife, mother, [or] sister, or his own daughter. But if he catches [him] in fornication or adultery that he commits with one who is not related to him by so close a line of consanguinity, or [otherwise] lays violent hands upon him, he will not be immune from that sentence of excommunication.

> Ostiarius, qui clericum percussit non graviter, ab episcopo absolvi potest. Hoc primo. Officialis, deliberate iniiciens manum in clericum, per Papam absolvitur. Hoc secundo. Qui repellendo vim vi clericum percutit, excommunicatus non est. Hoc tertio. Qui percutit clericum, turpiter inventum cum propinqua, excommunicatus non est; secus cum remota, et dicitur propinqua, ut in litera.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Si vero aliquis alicuius potestatis ostiarius, sub praetextu sui officii malignatus, clericum laeserit, ab episcopo suo potest absolvi, nisi forte eundem clericum graviter vulneraverit. Officialis vero pro iniectione manuum in clericum non potest sine mandato Romani Pontificis absolutionis beneficium promereri, quia nulli laico super clericum tanta datur auctoritas, nisi forte turbam arcendo irruentem, non ex deliberatione, sed fortuito casu clericum laedat. Si vero clericum, vim sibi inferentem, vi quis repellat vel laedat, non debet propter hoc ad sedem apostolicam transmitti, si in continenti vim vi repellat, quum vim vi repellere omnes leges omniaque iura permittant. Nec ille compellendus est ad sedem apostolicam venire, qui in clericum, cum uxore, matre [vel] sorore vel filia propria turpiter inventum, manus iniecerit violentas. Ceterum, si [eum] in stupro vel adulterio, quod committit cum ea, quae ipsum ita proxima consanguinitatis linea non contingit, ceperit, aut [alias] in eum violentas manus iniecerit, non erit a sententia illius excommunicationis immunis.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who strikes a cleric while probably ignorant that he is a cleric is not excommunicated; nevertheless, he ought to prove his ignorance by oath, and, if he refuses to furnish this, he ought to be held as excommunicated.

The same.

But if anyone lays violent hands upon a cleric who wears his hair long, being ignorant that he was a cleric, he ought not on this account to be presented before the apostolic presence, nor even to be marked by excommunication, provided that he was ignorant that the man was a cleric; or, if this is doubtful, provided only that he personally furnishes an oath that he had been ignorant that the man was a cleric. But if he is unwilling to furnish the oath, because it is established that he laid violent hands upon a cleric, it is fitting to abstain from him as from an excommunicated person until he is absolved at the mandate of the Supreme Pontiff.

Qui percutit clericum, ignorans probabiliter eum clericum, excommunicatus non est; ignorantiam tamen probare debet per iuramentum, et, si hoc praestare recusat, pro excommunicato haberi debet.

Idem.

Si vero aliquis in clericum nutrientem comam, ignorans, quod clericus fuerit, manus iniecerit violentas, propter hoc non debet apostolico praesentari conspectui, nec etiam excommunicatione notari, dummodo ipsum esse clericum ignoraverit, vel, si hoc dubium fuerit, propria manu duntaxat praestiterit iuramentum, quod eum esse clericum ignorasset. Ab illo autem, si praestare noluerit iuramentum, quia violentas manus constat eum in clericum iniecisse, sicut ab excommunicato, donec de mandato summi Pontificis absolvatur, convenit abstineri.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who strikes a cleric or religious is excommunicated and is absolved by no one other than the Pope, except at the point of death.

The same.

It is not doubtful or uncertain to you, as we believe, that those who lay violent hands upon clerics or canons, or converts of any religious order, incur a sentence of excommunication by the constitution of the council, and cannot obtain the benefit of absolution except at the point of death without the Roman Pontiff.

Percutiens clericum vel religiosum excommunicatus est, nec ab alio quam a Papa absolvitur, praeterquam in mortis articulo.

Idem.

Non dubium est vobis, sicut credimus, vel incertum, quod hi, qui violentas manus in clericos vel canonicos, aut cuiuslibet religionis conversos iniiciunt, ex constitutione concilii sententiam excommunicationis incurrunt, nec nisi in articulo mortis sine Romano Pontifice absolutionis possunt beneficium impetrare.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Women who have fallen under the canon Si quis suadente are absolved by the bishop. The same applies to persons who are not their own masters, or are delicate, concerning whom it is doubtful that they could conveniently approach the curia. And this is what it says down to § Illi. — § 1. One who commands a cleric to be struck is excommunicated, just like the one striking him. This is what it says.

The same.

Women or also other persons who are not their own masters can be absolved by the diocesan bishop if they have laid violent hands upon a cleric. But concerning those who possess great power and are so delicate that they cannot endure the labor of coming to the Apostolic See, if they have laid violent hands upon clerics, we respond that the status of the person and the truth of the affair are first to be intimated to the Roman Pontiff, and according to his counsel such persons are to be corrected for the crime committed. § 1. But those who, not by themselves, but by their authority or mandate, cause others violently to lay hands upon clerics are to be sent to the Apostolic See with every excuse ceasing, since he truly commits the deed by whose authority or mandate the offense is proved to be committed.

> Mulieres, quae inciderunt in canonem: Si quis suadente, absolvuntur ab episcopo. Idem in personis, quae non sunt sui iuris, vel sunt delicatae, de quibus dubitatur, quod non possent commode accedere ad curiam. Et h. d. usque ad § Illi. - § 1. Mandans clericum percuti, excommunicatus est, sicut percutiens. H. d.
>
> Idem.
>
> Mulieres vel etiam aliae personae, quae sui iuris non sunt, ab episcopo dioecesano absolvi possunt, si manus in clericum iniecerint violentas. De his vero, qui magnae sunt potentiae, et ita delicati, quod laborem veniendi ad sedem apostolicam nequeunt sustinere, si manus violentas iniecerint in clericos, respondemus, quod status personae prius et veritas negotii est intimanda Romano Pontifici et secundum consilium eius tales erunt de commisso scelere corrigendi. § 1. Illi vero, qui non per se ipsos, sed eorum auctoritate vel mandato alii violenter iniiciunt manus in clericos, ad sedem apostolicam sunt omni excusatione cessante mittendi, quum is committat vere, cuius auctoritate vel mandato delictum committi probatur.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric, although the matter is hidden, is absolved by the Pope alone.

The same.

Moreover, if any lay violent hands upon their brothers and, led by penance, not convicted but privately, as you assert, seek pardon from you, you ought more earnestly to admonish and induce them to make suitable satisfaction to those whom they injured and to present themselves before the apostolic presence, since they cannot be absolved by you or by any other without a special mandate of the Roman Pontiff.

> Excommunicatus per iniectionem manuum in clericum, licet occultus, absolvitur per solum Papam.

Idem.

Porro, si aliqui violentas manus in fratres suos iniiciunt, et ducti poenitentia, non convicti, sed privatim, sicut asseris, a te veniam postulant, eos monere debes propensius et inducere, ut his, quos laeserunt, congrue satisfaciant, et apostolico se conspectui repraesentent, quum a te vel ab alio quolibet sine speciali mandato Romani Pontificis absolvi non possint.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Even privileged persons are bound to avoid an excommunicated person, and are excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric.

The same.

No Templar monks, however, can protect themselves by a privilege of the Apostolic See so that they need not avoid excommunicated persons and be avoided as excommunicated for a violent laying of hands upon clerics.

Etiam privilegiati tenentur vitare excommunicatum, et per iniectionem manuum in clericum excommunicati sunt.

Idem.

Nulli autem monachi Templarii se possunt privilegio apostolicae sedis tueri, quo minus excommunicatos vitare debeant, et pro violenta manuum iniectione in clericos sicut excommunicati vitari.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: One who strikes a monk or religious convert ought to be publicly announced as excommunicated and avoided until he has been absolved by the Pope.

The same, to the Bishops and other Prelates established throughout Gaul.

But if any of your parishioners lay violent hands upon monks or converts of the aforesaid order, you shall, with the remedy of appeal removed and according to the tenor of the general decree, publicly announce them as excommunicated, and you shall cause them to be more strictly avoided as excommunicated until they make suitable satisfaction to those injured and present themselves before the apostolic presence with your letters.

Percutiens monachum vel conversum religiosum debet denunciari excommunicatus, et vitari, donec fuerit per Papam absolutus.

Idem Episcopis et aliis Praelatis per Galliam constitutis.

Parochianos autem vestros, si qui in monachos vel conversos praefati ordinis violentas manus iniecerint, sublato appellationis remedio secundum tenorem generalis decreti excommunicatos publice nuncietis, ipsosque faciatis sicut excommunicatos arctius evitari, donec laesis congrue satisfaciant, et cum literis vestris apostolico se conspectui repraesentent.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: The form of the precept that ought to be given under the binding force of an oath to one who is absolved after being excommunicated for a violent laying of hands upon a cleric is set down.

The same, to the Archbishop of Genoa.

From the tenor of your letters it became known to us that the canon B. of Saint Mary of the Vineyards laid violent hands upon a certain subdeacon. (And below:) Therefore we command your fraternity that, after receiving an oath from the canon that he ought to obey your mandate, you absolve him in our stead from the sentence by which he is bound, and under the binding force of the oath command him that henceforth he not lay violent hands upon a cleric, monk, Hospitaller, or convert of any religious order, unless in defending himself, or unless he does so by mandate of their prelates, or unless he has a ministry of prelacy or teaching over him, or is known to be his associate in the same church.

> Ponitur forma praecepti, quod sub virtute iuramenti fieri debet illi, qui pro violenta manuum iniectione in clericum excommunicatus absolvitur.
>
> Idem Genuensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ex tenore literarum tuarum nobis innotuit, quod B. canonicus S. Mariae de Vineis in quendam subdiaconum manus iniecit violentas. (Et infra:) Mandamus itaque fraternitati tuae, quatenus, recepto ab eo canonico iuramento, quod tuo debeat mandato parere, ipsum vice nostra a sententia, qua tenetur, absolvas, sibique in virtute iuramenti praecipias, ne de cetero in clericum, monachum, Hospitalarium vel alicuius religionis conversum manus iniiciat violentas, nisi se defendendo, aut de mandato suorum fecerit praelatorum, vel nisi super eum praelationis ministerium aut magisterium habeat, aut cum ipso in eadem ecclesia socius esse noscatur.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A bishop absolves one excommunicated for striking a cleric if he cannot approach the Pope without danger; nevertheless, he ought to command him to approach the Pope when the impediment ceases.

The same, to the Bishop of Le Mans.

Henceforth you should know that, if anyone is bound by the bond of excommunication for a violent laying of hands upon a cleric, and if, having mortal enemies or other just excuses by which he is reasonably excused from the journey, he cannot present himself before the apostolic presence without danger, it is lawful for the diocesan bishop, after receiving an oath according to the custom of the Church, to impart to him the grace of absolution. But it is to be enjoined upon him under obligation of the oath that, as soon as he has an opportunity, he approach the Roman Pontiff to receive the apostolic mandate.

> Excommunicatum pro percussione clerici absolvit episcopus, si sine periculo Papam adire nequit; debet tamen sibi mandare, quod adeat Papam impedimento cessante.
>
> Idem Cenomanensi Episcopo.
>
> De cetero noveris, quod, si quis pro violenta manuum iniectione in clericum est vinculo excommunicationis adstrictus, si habens capitales inimicitias, vel alias iustas excusationes, quibus ab itinere rationabiliter excusetur, ita, quod sine periculo apostolico se nequeat conspectui praesentare, licet dioecesano episcopo, recepto iuramento secundum morem ecclesiae sibi absolutionis gratiam impertiri. Sed est illi sub iuramenti debito iniungendum, ut, quam citius opportunitatem habuerit, Romanum Pontificem adeat, mandatum apostolicum suscepturus.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: When the Pope delegates the absolution of an excommunicated person, he commands that security for obeying the mandates of the Church be received.

Urban III, to the Archbishop of Sens.

To these things however, when [sometimes] a controversy is conducted before delegated judges between [some] of your parishioners, or between them and others, frequently, as you assert, it is enjoined upon you by those judges by apostolic authority that you strike with ecclesiastical constraint one of the parties, perhaps contemning obedience to the judgment, or for another reasonable cause. But those who are commanded to lie under excommunication obtain letters from the Apostolic See to other judges, by whom it is nevertheless commanded to you by apostolic authority that you hold as absolved those who had been excommunicated at the mandate of the former judges. Concerning this your discretion doubts what you should do amid diversity of this kind. To which we briefly respond that, if the letters obtained to the second judges were not obtained with the truth suppressed, you ought to hold them absolved at their mandate, especially since the Roman Church is by no means accustomed to delegate to others absolution from the sentence of delegated judges unless it is expressly contained in the letters of commission that sufficient security is to be furnished by those who ought to be absolved, that they ought to obey the judgment of the Church.

> Quum Papa absolutionem excommunicati delegat, mandat recipi cautionem de parendo mandatis ecclesiae.
>
> Urbanus III. Senonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad haec autem, quum [nonnunquam] inter [aliquos] parochianos tuos, vel inter eos et alios controversia coram delegatis iudicibus agitetur, saepius a iudicibus ipsis, ut asseris, auctoritate apostolica tibi iniungitur, ut alteram partium, forte parere iudicio contemnentem, vel ob aliam causam rationabilem ecclesiastica districtione percellas. Illi vero, qui subiacere excommunicationi mandantur, ad alios iudices literas ab apostolica sede impetrant, a quibus nihilominus auctoritate apostolica tibi mandatur, ut eos, qui de priorum iudicum mandato excommunicati fuerant, habeas absolutos. Super quo tua discretio dubitat, quid tibi in diversitate huiusmodi sit agendum. Ad quod breviter respondemus, quod, si literae, ad secundos iudices impetratae, tacita veritate obtentae non fuerint, eos ad mandatum eorum absolutos habere debes; praecipue quum Romana ecclesia absolutionem sententiae delegatorum iudicum nequaquam consuevit aliis delegare, nisi in literis commissionis contineatur expresse de sufficienti cautione praestanda ab his, qui absolvi debent, quod iudicio ecclesiae debeant obedire.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated under the canon "If anyone, at the devil's persuasion," whether rich or poor, is to be absolved by the Pope or his legate; it is otherwise for a woman, or a sick or mutilated person, who can be absolved by the bishop.

Clement III.

It is known (And below:) Your fraternity, diligently attending to this, certainly sought to be informed concerning those who with some rashness lay violent hands upon clerics, and who do not possess the means to be able to labor to the Apostolic See—namely, how salutary provision can be made for them. Concerning this we have thought that your consultation should be answered in this manner: women whom the frailty of sex impedes, the old and infirm, or those impeded by loss of other members, although they do not come to the Apostolic See, can receive the remedy of salvation from the bishops and by their office be restored to the communion of the faithful, satisfaction having been made according to their means to those upon whom it is established that injuries were inflicted by them. But all others, whether poor or rich, must be presented to the Apostolic See or its legate in order to obtain the benefit of absolution. But if, during an infirmity of this kind, the benefit of absolution is granted through fear of death, after an oath has been furnished it shall be enjoined upon them that, after they have been restored to health, they approach the Roman Church or its legate to receive the apostolic mandate concerning such matters.

> Excommunicatus per canonem: "Si quis suadente," sit dives vel pauper, per Papam absolvendus est vel eius legatum; fallit in muliere, sive infirmo vel mutilato, qui per episcopum absolvi possunt.
>
> Clemens III. Ea noscitur (Et infra:) Quod utique fraternitas tua diligenter attendens, certificari humiliter postulavit de his, qui violentas manus in clericos aliqua temeritate iniiciunt, nec eis suppetunt facultates, ut ad sedem apostolicam valeant laborare, quomodo his scilicet possit salubriter provideri. Super quo Consultationi tuae taliter duximus respondendum, quod mulieres, quas sexus fragilitas impedit, senes et valetudinarii, seu aliorum membrorum destitutionibus impediti, licet ad apostolicam sedem non veniant, ab episcopis valeant salutis remedium accipere, et ex eorum officio fidelium communioni restitui, satisfacto iuxta facultates his, quibus per eos constiterit iniurias irrogatas; alios autem, sive pauperes sive divites, sedi apostolicae vel legato eius, ut beneficium absolutionis obtineant, necesse est praesentari. Si vero huiusmodi infirmitatis tempore timore mortis beneficium fuerit absolutionis indultum, iuramento praestito iniungatur eisdem, ut, postquam sanitati fuerint restituti, ad Romanam ecclesiam vel eius legatum accedant, mandatum apostolicum super talibus recepturi.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: Before denunciation, one excommunicated for a violent laying of hands upon clerics is to be avoided, unless the fact is unknown. This is the first point. One who kills a cleric who, having contemned the clerical habit, involved himself in enormities, is not excommunicated. This is the second.

The same.

Since not by man (And below:) It was therefore asked of us on your behalf whether you are bound to abstain from communion with one who, for a rash laying of hands, fell under the sentence before he is publicly announced as excommunicated; and whether the killers of clerics or of those priests who, having cast aside the ministry of the order received, do not fear to pollute themselves with homicides in public wars or even apart from wars—since in feasting, drunkenness, pillaging, and other enormities they rage equally with laymen, or worse—fall under the canon of a sentence already imposed. Therefore, concerning the second consultation we respond in this manner: you ought to abstain from communion with one who, for a sacrilegious laying of hands upon a cleric, fell under the edict of excommunication, even if he has not been denounced, still unless perhaps this was known to you alone. In that case you will avoid him only privately for as long as he is tolerated by the Church, so that, at least suffused with the blush of shame, he may be compelled in this manner to make satisfaction for the hidden excess. But concerning the article of the second question, we respond that the lay killers of clerics or priests who, as has been said, having contemned the clerical habit, shamelessly involve themselves in tyranny and enormity, are by no means restrained by the canon of a sentence already imposed, in hatred of clerical excess and for the terror and correction of similar persons; nevertheless, let a fitting penance somewhat harsher than if they had committed such things against altogether lay persons be enjoined upon them. Moreover, because no one is to be despaired of while he is established in a mortal body, since that which is deferred is sometimes afterwards completed with more mature counsel. Finally, concerning what you consulted us—whether by common law it is lawful for you and your suffragans to absolve those who are struck by a sentence of excommunication for a rash laying of hands—we answer this more manifestly: that, with the exception of certain persons contained in the decretals of Alexander III being observed, this is lawful for no one unless he enjoys a special privilege of the Apostolic See. Nevertheless, wishing to provide by paternal dispensation for those who dwell in such remote parts of your province, by the present letters we grant to your fraternity that, if bodily impotence, poverty, or some unavoidable and manifest necessity impedes those who are thus excommunicated by the law itself, provided that they make satisfaction to those whom they offended and do some penance for their own correction and the terror of others, you, supported by apostolic authority, may absolve them from the sentence of excommunication, provided that enormous bodily injury or death did not ensue from such a striking. Assuredly, in all these matters, if anyone diligently examines the statutes of the holy fathers, he will find that we have answered nothing new, but have, as though by a certain hand of solicitude, renewed what is ancient.

> Ante denunciationem vitandus est excommunicatus pro violenta manuum iniectione in clericos, nisi sit occultus. Hoc primo. Interficiens clericum, qui, contempto clericali habitu, se enormitatibus immiscuit, excommunicatus non est. Hoc secundo.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum non ab homine (Et infra:) A nobis itaque fuit ex parte tua quaesitum, an tenearis abstinere a communione illius, qui pro temeraria manuum iniectione in sententiam incidit, antequam excommunicatus publice nuncietur, et an incidant in canonem latae sententiae interfectores clericorum aut presbyterorum illorum, qui, abiecto suscepti ordinis ministerio, in publicis bellis vel etiam praeter bella se homicidiis polluere non verentur, quum in comessationibus, et in ebrietatibus, atque rapinis et aliis enormitatibus aeque sunt, ut laici, vel deterius debacchantes. In secunda igitur Consultatione taliter respondemus, quod a communione illius, qui pro sacrilega manuum iniectione in clericum in edictum excommunicationis incidit, licet denunciatus non sit, adhuc debes abstinere, nisi forte id tibi soli pateret. In quo casu ipsum privatim tantummodo evitabis, quamdiu ab ecclesia toleratur, ut saltem verecundiae rubore suffusus pro latenti excessu taliter satisfacere compellatur. In articulo vero secundae quaestionis respondemus, quod occisores clericorum aut presbyterorum, qui, ut dictum est, contempto clericali habitu tyrannidi et enormitati se inverecunde immiscent, in odium clericalis excessus, et in terrorem atque correctionem similium, canone latae sententiae laici minime coercentur; iniungatur tamen eis poenitentia competens aliquantulum asperior, quam si omnino in laicos talia commisissent. Praeterea, quia nemo desperandus est, dum fuerit in mortali corpore constitutus, quum id quod differtur, aliquando consilio postmodum maturiore perficiatur. Ad ultimum quoque quod consuluisti nos, si de iure communi tibi liceat, ac suffraganeis tuis, illos, qui pro temeraria manuum iniectione excommunicationis sententia percelluntur, absolvere, huic manifestius respondemus, quod observata exceptione quorundam quae in decretalibus Alexandri III. continetur hoc nemini liceat, nisi apostolicae sedis gaudeat privilegio speciali. Verumtamen volentes illis, qui in tam remotis partibus tuae provinciae commorantur, dispensatione providere paterna: fraternitati tuae praesentibus literis indulgemus, ut illos, qui taliter excommunicati sunt ipso iure, si corporum impotentia, aut paupertas eos impediat, aut aliqua inevitabilis, et manifesta necessitas, dummodo satisfaciant iis, quos offenderunt et aliquam agant poenitentiam, ad correctionem sui, ceterorumque terrorem a sententia excommunicationis auctoritate apostolica fretus absolvas, si tamen ex percussione huiusmodi laesio corporalis enormis aut mors non fuerit subsecuta. Nimirum in his omnibus, si quis sanctorum patrum statuta diligenter perscrutetur, nihil novum nos respondisse reperiet, sed quod antiquum est quasi quadam manu sollicitudinis innovasse.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: One is not to communicate with an excommunicated person before absolution, although he has sworn to obey the mandates of the Church or has made a settlement with the person offended. This is the first point. One defamed concerning excommunication is not to be communicated with unless he purges himself or is absolved as a precaution. This is the second point.

The same.

Since you desire to be more fully instructed by a rescript of the Apostolic See concerning what your fraternity ought to observe in these matters that contain doubt, we, who, although unworthy, are compelled by the office of administration undertaken to respond to the consultations of individuals, [wish by the present rescript to resolve the knots of your questions, and we commend your prudence in this: that, although you have skill in canon law and enjoy the counsel of prudent men, nevertheless, for greater evidence and to set a form before others, you seek the counsel of your mother, the sacrosanct Roman Church, in which you show that you have the spirit of counsel and fortitude, as a discreet and prudent man.] The tenor of the first question was of this kind: whether others are to communicate with an excommunicated person who swore to obey the mandate of the Church and to whom, before absolution, the bishop restored communion, and whether the bishop ought to do this. To this question indeed we respond in this manner: since the oath of security that those who are excommunicated now furnish was introduced according to the Church's custom as a precaution rather than from the rigor of the canons, and is not reckoned of such force that, unless the benefit of absolution follows, one who is excommunicated ought to be restored to the communion of others—especially since he has not obtained absolution from that oath, and it is established that he was excommunicated, and it is true that he has not been absolved—neither the bishop nor others ought to communicate with him unless, after the oath has been furnished, he has been absolved according to the form of the Church; because according to the canons of the Apostles and the statutes of Pope Fabian, one who knowingly communicates with an excommunicated person is to be deprived of communion; indeed, according to the statutes of Isidore, he contracts the penalty of excommunication with him. Following the statutes of the canons, and especially those of Alexander III of pious memory, our predecessor, we have thought that this conclusion should be imposed upon the second question: if there is public report that someone struck a cleric, neither the bishop nor anyone else ought to communicate with him unless, at the judgment of the bishop, he has purged himself concerning this, or, for greater caution, obtains the benefit of absolution. In the third place your discretion asked whether, if a cleric struck by someone deposited a complaint before his bishop and was prepared to produce witnesses, and through the mediation of the bishop made a settlement with the one who struck him, and the latter was reconciled to him, he ought thereby to be admitted to the communion of others. Concerning this we respond briefly to you that, although the one who laid violent hands appears to have made satisfaction in this manner to the one whom he injured, nevertheless he is recognized not thereby to have made satisfaction to the Church, which he offended; and unless the form of the Church introduced for the absolution of such persons, as was said above, is observed, one is not to communicate with him. Moreover, we resolve all the perplexities of the final question: that one who keeps a cleric captive, even if he has not laid violent hands upon him, is placed in the same category of crime, is to be avoided, and is not to be restored to fraternal communion unless he has been absolved according to the form of the Church, as was said above.

> Ante absolutionem communicandum non est excommunicato, licet iuraverit parere mandatis ecclesiae, vel composuerit cum offenso. Hoc dicit primo. Infamato de excommunicatione communicandum non est, nisi se purget, vel ad cautelam absolvatur. H. d. secundo.
>
> Idem.

Quum desideres, quid tua fraternitas observare debeat super his, quae dubietatem continent, apostolicae sedis rescripto plenius edoceri: nos, qui, licet immeriti, ex suscepto administrationis officio consultationibus respondere cogimur singulorum, [interrogationum tuarum nodos praesenti rescripto solvere volumus, et tuam in hoc prudentiam commendamus, qui quum iuris canonici peritiam habeas, et prudentum consilio perfruaris, ad maiorem tamen evidentiam et formam ceteris praefigendam sacrosanctae Romanae ecclesiae matris tuae consulta requiris, in quo spiritum consilii et fortitudinis, sicut vir discretus et prudens, te habere ostendis.] Fuit autem primae quaestionis tenor huiusmodi, utrum alicui excommunicato, qui mandato ecclesiae stare iuravit, et ante absolutionem episcopus ei communionem reddidit, sit communicandum ab aliis, et an episcopus id facere debeat. Cui siquidem quaestioni taliter respondemus, quod, quum cautio iuratoria, quam hodie qui excommunicati sunt praestant, potius ad cautelam ex consuetudine ecclesiae, quam ex rigore canonum sit inducta, neque momenti tam validi reputetur, quod, nisi absolutionis beneficium subsequatur, ille, qui excommunicatur, debeat communioni aliorum restitui, praesertim quum ex eo iuramento absolutionem consecutus non sit, et constet, eum excommunicatum fuisse, et verum sit, absolutum non esse, nec episcopus nec alii debent communicare eidem, nisi fuerit secundum formam ecclesiae post iuramentum praestitum absolutus, quia secundum Apostolorum canones et Fabiani statuta Pontificis, qui cum excommunicato scienter communicaverit, est communione privandus, immo iuxta Isidori statuta excommunicationis poenam contrahit cum eodem. Secundae quaestioni, statuta canonum et praecipue piae memoriae Alexandri III. praedecessoris nostri sequentes, hunc finem duximus imponendum, quod, si publica fama est, aliquem verberasse clericum, nec episcopus, nec alius communicare sibi debet, nisi ad arbitrium episcopi de hoc se purgaverit, vel ad maiorem cautelam absolutionis beneficium consequatur. Tertio loco tua discretio requisivit, si clericus, verberatus ab aliquo, querimoniam apud suum episcopum deposuerit, et testes producere paratus fuit, et episcopo mediante cum suo verberatore composuerit, et ille reconciliatus sibi fuerit, an per hoc is debeat ad aliorum communionem admitti. Super quo tibi breviter respondemus, quod, licet ille, qui violentas manus iniecit, ei, quem laesit, satisfecisse taliter videatur, ecclesiae tamen, quam offendit, ex hoc non satisfecisse dignoscitur, et, nisi forma ecclesiae, quae pro absolutione talium, ut supra dictum est, introducta est, observetur, non est communicandum eidem. Ultimae praeterea quaestionis omnes perplexiones resolvimus, quod in pari stilo criminis conquadratur, qui clericum captivum detinet, licet violentas manus in ipsum non iniecerit est vitandus, nec est communioni fraternae reducendus, nisi iuxta formam ecclesiae fuerit ut supradictum est, absolutus.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A priest who casts a regular out of a church when she disturbs divine offices is not excommunicated.

The same.

Coming to the Apostolic See, I., the bearer of the present letters, showed us by his assertion set forth that, while he was celebrating the morning offices, a certain nun, entering the same church and playing with another cleric, created an impediment whereby he could not render divine worship to God; hence the aforesaid priest, moved so that he could attend more freely to the celebration of divine things, laid hands upon her in order to put her outside the church and, when she would not leave, by dragging her compelled her to remain outside the church. But on this account you avoided him as excommunicated and caused him to be avoided by others. Therefore, we command you by apostolic writings that, if the matter is so, you do not henceforth avoid him, since we by no means see him as excommunicated on this account.

Sacerdos, eiiciens regularem de ecclesia, officia divina turbantem, excommunicatus non est.

Idem.

Veniens ad sedem apostolicam. I. lator praesentium sua nobis assertione proposita monstravit, quod, quum matutina officia celebraret, quaedam monialis, ecclesiam ipsam ingrediens, cum alio clerico ludendo impedimentum praestabat, quo minus Deo divinum posset obsequium exhibere; unde memoratus sacerdos commotus, ut liberius posset circa divinorum celebrationem vacare, manibus in eam appositis, ut extra ecclesiam poneret, quum nollet exire, in trahendo ipsam coegit eandem extra ecclesiam residere. Sed tu illum propter hoc tanquam excommunicatum evitasti, et facis ab aliis evitari. Ideoque per apostolica tibi scripta mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, eum de cetero non evites, quum ex hoc ipsum excommunicatum nullatenus videamus.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: Those excommunicated for a light laying of hands upon a cleric can be absolved by the bishop. This is what it says according to the common reading, and the text is singular.

The same.

It came to us (And below: [cf. c. 5, On Compelling Witnesses, II. 21.]) But those who, impeded by sickness, cannot labor to the Apostolic See for the benefit of absolution, you can absolve after receiving from them the customary oath, in such manner that, when restored to their former health, they present themselves before the apostolic presence. But concerning this we believe that you can freely dispense sufficiently with the female sex, children, and the old. [Moreover, after the clerics of the city have been summoned, you can cleanse churches that have been polluted by an effusion of blood or semen with a procession and the sprinkling of holy water, as is written in the ordinal.] We have thought that absolution of those also who inflicted upon clerics an injury not enormous but moderate and light should be committed to the judgment of your fraternity.

Excommunicati pro levi manuum iniectione in clericum possunt per episcopum absolvi. H. d. secundum communem lecturam, et est textus singularis.

Idem.

Pervenit ad nos (Et infra: [cf. c. 5. de test. cog. II. 21.]) Illos autem, qui valetudine praepediti pro absolutionis beneficio ad sedem apostolicam nequeunt laborare, recepto ab eis, sicut moris est, iuramento, potes absolvere ita, quod sanitati pristinae restituti apostolico se conspectui repraesentent. Sexui vero femineo, et pueris ac senibus super hoc satis te credimus posse libere dispensare. [Ecclesias insuper, quae sanguinis vel seminis sunt effusione pollutae, civitatis clericis convocatis cum processione et aquae benedictae aspersione, prout in ordinario habetur scriptum, poteris emundare.] De his etiam absolvendis, qui clericis non enormem, sed modicam et levem iniuriam irrogarunt, tuae fraternitatis arbitrio duximus committendum.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: A cleric who knowingly and voluntarily participates with one excommunicated in divine offices is excommunicated by the greater excommunication and is to be absolved only by the Pope. This is what it says according to Panormitanus.

The same.

He signified to us (And below:) But we do not doubt that those clerics [who] knowingly and voluntarily participated with persons excommunicated by us, and received them in the offices, are enveloped with them by the same sentence of excommunication; and we also wish them to be sent back to us, with the information of your letters, to obtain the benefit of absolution.

> Clericus, qui scienter et sponte participat excommunicato in divinis officiis, excommunicatus est excommunicatione maiori, et tantum absolvendus per Papam. H. d. secundum Panorm.
>
> Idem.
>
> Significavit nobis (Et infra:) Verum clericos [illos], qui scienter et sponte participaverunt excommunicatis a nobis, et ipsos in officiis receperunt, eadem excommunicationis sententia cum ipsis non dubitamus involvi; quos etiam pro beneficio absolutionis habendo ad nos volumus cum literarum tuarum insinuatione remitti.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric, or an incendiary after publication, is absolved by the Pope alone.

The same.

Your fraternity was led to consult us whether only those are to be sent to the Apostolic See who, falling under the canon of a sentence already imposed, turned violent hands against clerics, and whether they cannot be freed from the same sentence except by the Roman Pontiff. Hence we respond to your fraternity in this manner: not only those who lay rash hands upon clerics, but also incendiaries, once they have been publicly denounced by a sentence of the Church, are to be sent to the Apostolic See for the benefit of absolution, and are to be absolved only by the Roman Pontiff. But those who presume to receive ecclesiastical benefices from the hands of laymen are not accustomed to labor to the Apostolic See for such an excess. [Concerning the priest, etc.; cf. c. 4, On Sick Clerics, III. 6.]

> Excommunicatus pro iniectione manuum in clericum, vel incendiarius post publicationem a solo Papa absolvitur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, an ii soli sint ad sedem apostolicam destinandi, qui in latae sententiae canonem incidentes, manus in clericos inverterunt violentas, et utrum non possint ab eadem sententia, nisi per Romanum Pontificem liberari. Unde Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod non solum ii, qui in clericos temerarias manus iniiciunt, sed etiam incendiarii, ex quo sunt per ecclesiae sententiam publicati, pro absolutionis beneficio ad apostolicam sedem sunt mittendi, et non nisi per Romanum Pontificem absolvendi. Illi vero, qui ecclesiastica beneficia de manibus praesumunt laicorum accipere, non consueverunt pro tali excessu ad sedem apostolicam laborare. [De sacerdote etc. cf. c. 4. de cler. aegr. III. 6.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: Legates de latere can absolve those excommunicated for laying hands upon clerics.

The same.

Recourse is to be had to the eminence of the Apostolic See whenever an article of doubt emerges, so that a person may receive and observe with a more ready conscience what shall have been answered to him by the Apostolic See concerning a doubtful matter, insofar as the sentence of its truth is known to be strengthened by the more certain prerogative of that dignity, which in blessed Peter, prince of the Apostles, received the breadth of prelacy before all others. But, as it was intimated to our ears on your behalf, it is doubtful to you whether those who incurred excommunication for laying hands upon clerics or other religious persons obtain the benefit of absolution when they are absolved by cardinal legates who are sent from the side of the Roman Pontiff for a time, although those legates do not show an express mandate for themselves concerning this. Concerning this we wish it to be observed by you and your suffragans that you hold, without any scruple of hesitation, as absolved those whom it is established obtained the benefit of absolution from such men. [Given at the Lateran.]

> Legati de latere absolvere possunt excommunicatos pro iniectione manuum in clericos.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ad eminentiam sedis apostolicae est recurrendum, quoties articulus dubitationis emergit, ut tanto quis promptiori conscientia recipiat et observet quod super re dubia sibi fuerit a sede apostolica responsum, quanto praerogativa dignitatis illius certiori noscitur ipsius sententia veritatis roborata, quae in B. Petro Apostolorum principe prae aliis omnibus amplitudinem praelationis accepit. Sicut autem ex parte tua nostris est auribus intimatum, tibi exstat dubium, utrum absolutionis beneficium assequantur qui pro iniectione manuum in clericos vel alias religiosas personas excommunicationem incurrerunt, et a legatis cardinalibus, qui a latere Romani Pontificis destinantur pro tempore, absolvuntur, quum iidem legati mandatum sibi super hoc non ostendant expressum. Super quo id a te ac tuis suffraganeis volumus observari, ut eos habeas absque omni haesitationis scrupulo absolutos, quos constiterit a talibus beneficium fuisse absolutionis adeptos. [Dat. Laterani.]

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A general excommunication binds only the subjects of the one pronouncing it.

The same.

It was asked of us on your behalf whether, if someone pronounces thus, "Whoever commits theft, let him be excommunicated," this general clause is referred to the subjects of the one imposing the excommunication, or is extended generally to all who are not within his jurisdiction. To this we say certainly that only his subjects are bound by this sentence, unless perhaps the greater and broader authority of the delegating person has conferred more upon him.

> Generalis excommunicatio non ligat, nisi subditos proferentis.
>
> Idem.
>
> A nobis fuit ex parte tua quaesitum, utrum, si quis ita pronunciaverit: "quisquis furtum fecerit, excommunicatus sit:" haec generalis clausula ad ipsius excommunicatoris subditos referatur, an generaliter extendatur ad omnes, qui non sunt de iurisdictione illius. Ad quod utique dicimus, quod hac sententia non nisi subditi obligantur, nisi forte plus ei contulerit maior et largior auctoritas delegantis.

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Those who despoil churches by breaking into them are excommunicated and, after denunciation, are absolved only by the Pope.

The same.

The beloved sons, the canons of Reggio, complained to us that I. de Malafrena and his followers violently broke into the church of Viliaco and certain other churches of the bishopric of Reggio, and did not at all hesitate to despoil them, and in no way hesitated to plunder certain men of the Church of Reggio. Therefore, since these things are grave and ought not to be passed over with closed eyes, we command that, if the matter is so, you publicly announce the aforesaid sacrilegious persons as excommunicated, with candles publicly lighted and appeal ceasing, and cause them to be more strictly avoided as excommunicated until they make suitable satisfaction to those who suffered injury, repair the damages caused by them, and present themselves before the apostolic presence with your letters containing the truth of the matter.

> Qui cum effractione spoliant ecclesias, excommunicati sunt, et per Papam tantum post denunciationem absolvuntur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Conquesti sunt nobis dilecti filii Reginenses canonici, quod I. de Malafrena et eius sequaces ecclesiam de Viliaco et alias quasdam ecclesias Reginensis episcopatus violenter confregerunt, easque spoliare minime dubitarunt, et quosdam homines Reginae ecclesiae depraedari nullatenus dubitaverunt. Quoniam igitur haec gravia sunt, nec clausis debent oculis praeteriri; mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, memoratos sacrilegos, publice accensis candelis, appellatione cessante excommunicatos nuncietis, et faciatis sicut excommunicatos arctius evitari, donec passis iniuriam congrue satisfaciant, et damna pro eis data resarciant, et cum literis vestris rei veritatem continentibus apostolico se conspectui repraesentent.

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: One who strikes or even kills a cleric who, having laid aside the clerical habit, involves himself in savage enormities, is not bound to go to the Apostolic See for absolution. Thus it can be summarized generally.

The same.

We have understood from your letters that a certain priest of your diocese, because he presumed falsely to call himself the king's son and, after taking up arms, caused sedition [in the province] and war, was ordered by the beloved son, Count B., to be beaten through the villages; and afterwards, having been handed over to the gallows at his mandate, he expired. Therefore, since you intimated that both the count himself and the other participants in this deed wished to make satisfaction concerning this, by the present page we have thought that your fraternity should be answered that, if the aforesaid priest committed excess in such manner and, bearing arms, was killed not while repelling but while inflicting injury, it does not seem to us that his killers ought on this account to be compelled to approach the Apostolic See to obtain absolution; but you, who know well the merits of the persons, shall enjoin fitting penance upon them. [But, etc.; cf. Compilation II, c. 4, On Vows, III. 21.]

> Percutiens vel etiam interficiens clericum, se, dimisso clericali habitu, saevis enormitatibus immiscentem, non tenetur ire pro absolutione ad sedem apostolicam. Ita generaliter summari potest.
>
> Idem.
>
> Perpendimus ex literis tuis, quod quidam sacerdos tuae dioecesis pro eo, quod se filium regis falso nominare praesumpsit, et, armis acceptis, [in provincia] seditionem fecit et guerram, a dilecto filio B. comite per vicos iussus est fustigari; qui postea eius mandato traditus patibulo exspiravit. Quia igitur tam ipsum comitem quam alios huius facti participes velle super hoc satisfacere intimasti, praesenti pagina Fraternitati tuae duximus respondendum, quod, si memoratus sacerdos tali modo excessit, et arma ferens non propulsando, sed inferendo iniuriam fuit occisus, non videtur nobis, quod interfectores eius propter hoc ad obtinendam absolutionem apostolicam sedem adire cogantur; tu vero, qui merita personarum bene nosti, poenitentiam eis competentem iniungas. [Ceterum etc. cf. Comp. II. c. 4. de vot. III. 21.]

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: An ecclesiastical judge who causes a cleric to be struck by a layman, even for the sake of discipline, is excommunicated; and both he and the one striking are bound to go to the Pope for absolution.

The same.

We received the consultation of all of you, by which you asked us whether that layman falls under the edict of excommunication who, at the order of an abbot in whose service he abides, presumes to lay rash hands upon a cleric, or monk, or convert, especially where there is no cause for which he ought to be beaten. But it seems to us that, unless the abbot does this for the cause of regular discipline in his own person, or, if necessity presses, orders it to be done through a cleric or monk, both the one who commands such persons to be beaten and those who beat them, even if a cause existed, by no means escape the sentence of excommunication until they come to the Apostolic See.

Iudex ecclesiasticus, faciens percuti clericum per laicum, etiam causa disciplinae, excommunicatus est, et ipse, et verberans pro absolutione tenentur ire ad Papam.

Idem.

Universitatis vestrae consultationem accepimus, qua nos requisistis, utrum ille laicus incidat in excommunicationis edictum, qui ad iussionem abbatis, in cuius servitio commoratur, in clericum, aut monachum, aut conversum temerarias manus praesumit iniicere, maxime ubi causa non subest, propter quam debeat verberari. Nobis autem videtur, quod, nisi causa regularis disciplinae hoc faciat abbas in propria persona, vel, si necessitas urget, per clericum vel monachum fieri iubeat, tam qui tales verberari praecipit, quam illi, qui verberant, etiamsi causa subesset, excommunicationis sententiam, donec ad apostolicam sedem veniant, nequaquam evadunt.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: A cleric walking about as a layman who does not come to his senses after a third admonition loses clerical privilege.

The same.

In our hearing a consultation of this kind was proposed on your behalf: whether clerics who, having abandoned the clerical habit, are in no way ashamed to bear military arms ought, if bodily injury is inflicted upon them or they redeem themselves from captivity, to enjoy that immunity of clerics by which one who rashly lays hands upon a cleric is marked as excommunicated by the law itself. To these things we respond briefly to you that, since one who commits against the Church implores the aid of the Church in vain, and the law of secular princes furnishes a sufficiently effective argument for this response—in which it is manifestly provided that a matron whose chastity has been assailed cannot bring an action for injuries if she was found in the clothing of a prostitute—clerics of this kind, if they have been admonished a third time by their prelates and have refused to lay down military arms, ought not to have any assistance from the privilege of clerics.

Clericus, ut laicus incedens, tertio monitus non resipiscens, perdit privilegium clericale.

Idem.

In audientia nostra talis fuit ex parte tua proposita consultatio, utrum clerici, qui arma militaria relicto habitu clericali gestare nullatenus erubescunt, si eis fuerit iniuria corporalis illata, vel se a captione redemerint, illa clericorum debeant immunitate gaudere, qua pro temeraria manuum iniectione, facta in clericum, excommunicatus quis ipso iure notatur. Ad haec tibi breviter respondemus, quod, quum frustra ecclesiae imploret auxilium, qui committit in ipsam, et lex saecularium principum huic responso satis efficax afferat argumentum, qua manifeste cautum habetur, matronam, cuius pudicitia attentata fuerit, non posse iniuriarum agere, si in veste meretricali fuerit deprehensa, huiusmodi clerici, si fuerint a praelatis suis tertio commoniti, et militaria noluerint arma deponere, de privilegio clericorum subsidium aliquod habere non debent.

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric, if impeded from going to the curia, can be absolved by an inferior; but, when the impediment ceases, he is bound to visit the curia to receive the apostolic mandate.

The same.

Because you seek the responses of the Apostolic See even concerning those things about which you do not doubt and have very fully recognized what ought to be observed concerning those very things, we commend your fraternity in the Lord all the more insofar as, in those things that are expressed in the institutions of the sacred canons, you desire and intend to proceed by our authority. Indeed, your fraternity asked us whether [one] who confesses that he has fallen under the canon of a sentence already imposed, and cannot be induced to come to the Apostolic See to be absolved, can or ought to merit the benefit of absolution from the bishop or even from a simple priest; and whether priests who are bigamists or husbands of widows may celebrate the solemnities of Masses after their wives have entered the way of all flesh. But although what ought to be observed concerning these things is defined in the sacred canons, nevertheless we have thought that at present your fraternity should be answered that one who asserts that he has fallen under the canon of a sentence already imposed can obtain the benefit of absolution only through the Apostolic See or its legate, unless perhaps he is established at the point of death, or is so burdened by poverty, infirmity, or old age that he cannot undertake the labor of coming to the Roman Church, or is held back from this by another canonical impediment. But from these persons it is customary to exact in the form of an oath that, when their strength has been recovered and opportunity granted, they ought to visit the Roman Church in person. [Concerning the priests, etc.; cf. c. 3, On Bigamists Not to Be Ordained, I. 21.]

Excommunicatus propter iniectionem manuum in clericum, impeditus ire ad curiam, potest ab inferiore absolvi; sed impedimento cessante tenetur curiam visitare, suscepturus mandatum apostolicum.

Idem.

Quod de his etiam, in quibus non dubitas, et quid de his ipsis observari debeat plurimum agnovisti, sedis apostolicae responsa requiris, tanto fraternitatem tuam magis in Domino commendamus, quanto in his, quae sacrorum canonum institutionibus sunt expressa, auctoritate nostra procedere desideras et disponis. Sane, requisivit a nobis fraternitas tua, utrum [is,] qui se confitetur in latae sententiae canonem incidisse, nec ad hoc potest induci, ut ad sedem apostolicam veniat absolvendus, ab episcopo vel etiam a simplici presbytero absolutionis beneficium possit vel debeat promereri, et utrum presbyteris bigamis vel viduarum maritis, eorum uxoribus viam universae carnis ingressis, missarum liceat solennia celebrare. Verum, licet, quid de his observare debeat, sacris canonibus sit definitum, hoc tamen

Fraternitati tuae ad praesens duximus respondendum, quod is, qui asserit, se in canonem latae sententiae incidisse, non aliter, quam per sedem apostolicam vel eius legatum absolutionis potest beneficium obtinere, nisi forte in mortis sit articulo constitutus, vel paupertate, aut infirmitate vel senectute tanta gravetur, quod ad ecclesiam Romanam laborem subire non valeat veniendi, vel ab hoc alio impedimento canonico retrahatur. Ceterum ab his in forma sacramenti exigi consuevit, ut resumptis viribus et opportunitate concessa Romanam ecclesiam in propria persona debeant visitare. [De presbyteris etc. cf. c. 3. de bigam. non ord. I. 21.]

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: One bound by several excommunications, although arising from the same act, who obtains absolution with one cause or one excommunication expressed, is not held as absolved with regard to another.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop, Dean, and Precentor of Lyon.

When, for the case that was being conducted between the beloved sons G. and F., archdeacons of the Church of Chalon, we granted to them as auditor the beloved son G., cardinal deacon of Saint Adrian, the proctor of G. the archdeacon alleged among other things that, when F. the archdeacon had rashly laid violent hands upon the succentor of the Church of Chalon, who was exercising the office of the diaconate, in the common dormitory, and had dragged him through the cloister while beating him, you, brother archbishop, caused him publicly to be announced as excommunicated for the violent laying of hands and the violation of the immunity of the church. (And below:) We therefore, committing the case itself to your examination, command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if it is established to you that the said F. the archdeacon was excommunicated for a twofold cause and expressed only one in the letters that he obtained from the Apostolic See concerning his absolution, after admonition has been given you compel him as an excommunicated person to make satisfaction to his church for the other cause through ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed. [But the aforesaid, etc. The expenses, etc. (cf. c. 6, On Proctors, I. 38.)]

Ligatus pluribus excommunicationibus, licet ex eodem facto, obtinens absolutionem expressa una causa seu una excommunicatione, non habetur pro absoluto quoad aliam.

Innocentius III. Archiepiscopo, Decano et Praecentori Lugdunensibus.

Quum pro causa, quae inter dilectos filios G. et F. Cabilonensis ecclesiae archidiaconos vertebatur, eis dilectum filium G. sancti Hadriani diaconum cardinalem concesserimus auditorem, procurator G. archidiaconi inter alia allegavit, quod, quum F. archidiaconus in succentorem Cabilonensis ecclesiae, diaconatus fungentem officio, in communi dormitorio manus iniecisset temere violentas, et eum traxisset verberando per claustrum, tu, frater archiepiscope, eum ob violentam manuum iniectionem et violationem immunitatis ecclesiae fecisti excommunicatum publice nunciari. (Et infra:) Nos igitur, causam ipsam vestro examini committentes, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, dictum F. archidiaconum ob duplicem causam excommunicatum fuisse, et expressisse tantum alteram in literis, quas super absolutione sua a sede apostolica impetravit, ipsum tanquam excommunicatum satisfacere ecclesiae suae pro altera, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota cogatis. [Praedictas vero etc. Expensas etc. (cf. c. 6. de proc. I. 38.)]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: With an excommunicated person who dies in excommunication, however contrite he may have died, there is to be no communion before absolution, nor is prayer to be made for him, although he is absolved with respect to God. But if the preceding contrition is established to the Church, he will be absolved even after death by the one by whom he would have been absolved while alive; and his heirs are compelled by the Church to make satisfaction for him.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Andrew.

It has often been asked of us whether, if an excommunicated person in whom there were manifest indications of penance, and through whom it did not stand that he was not reconciled to ecclesiastical unity, died without receiving the benefit of absolution, he is to be held as absolved by the Church, and whether alms are to be received for such a person and prayer made by the faithful. But so that we may express more openly through the supposition of an example what we intend: a certain priest and regular canon, as you intimated to us through your letters, labored under public infamy because he approached a certain married woman; the woman's husband and his blood relatives rashly laid violent hands upon him, on account of which they were denounced by the bishop as lying under the sentence of excommunication. But afterwards they approached the same bishop and, after furnishing in his hands a bodily oath that they would obey the judgment of the Church, received in mandate from him that on this account they should present themselves before the apostolic presence. And when one of them prepared himself for the journey of coming, he was slain by certain of his rivals and buried outside the cemetery of the church. And although the friends and blood relatives of the slain man were gravely moved against the killers, nevertheless they would remit to them every rancor and offense provided that the body of the slain man were handed over for ecclesiastical burial. Therefore, perhaps it would seem to some in this case that, since not an article of necessity but contempt of religion excludes the sacrament, and the divine judgment of the Church [can and] ought to imitate divine judgment, since manifest signs of penance preceded in the aforesaid slain man and he is believed on this account to have been absolved before God, he is also to be held as absolved by the Church. But on the contrary, since one is bound with respect to God before the Church triumphant by guilt alone, but with respect to man before the Church militant by sentence alone, when the bond of guilt is remitted, he is absolved before God, but he is not absolved before men unless and until the bond of the sentence is relaxed; otherwise the absolution of the Church would appear in no way necessary if, by contrition of heart alone apart from the priestly office, the rigor of ecclesiastical discipline were relaxed.

We therefore respond briefly to your consultation by the common counsel of our brothers that the judgment of God always rests upon truth, which neither deceives nor is deceived; but the judgment of the Church sometimes follows opinion, which often happens both to deceive and to be deceived. On this account it sometimes happens that one who is bound before God is loosed before the Church, and one who is free before God is bound by an ecclesiastical sentence. Therefore, the bond by which a sinner is bound before God is dissolved in the remission of guilt; but that by which he is bound before the Church is relaxed when the sentence is remitted. The evangelical account manifests this in the raising of Lazarus, whom the Lord first raised and afterwards commanded the Apostles to loose after he was raised. Hence, however much a person has taken care to humble himself after furnishing an oath that he would obey the mandate of the Church, and however many signs of penance have preceded, if nevertheless, prevented by death, he was unable to obtain the benefit of absolution, although he is believed to have been absolved before God, nevertheless he is not yet to be held as absolved before the Church. Yet he can and ought to be aided by the benefit of the Church,

[namely] that, if the penance of the living man was established by evident signs, the benefit of absolution should also be bestowed upon him after death. Nor is it an obstacle that the power of binding and loosing men upon earth is read as having been attributed to the Church, as though it could not loose and bind those buried under the earth, and that it is written, "Let there be no communion with the dead man with whom there was no communion while he was alive," since, although there was no communion with him, nevertheless there ought to have been communion with one whom not contempt of religion but an article of necessity impeded; and in certain cases designated by the canons the Church is read to have bound and loosed the dead. But so that in one and the same affair we may both preserve rigor and display gentleness, we decree that absolution of that dead man who, while living, would have been absolved by the Apostolic See is to be sought from the Apostolic See; but, for the foregoing cause, we grant that other persons may be absolved by those by whom they would have been absolved while they lived. But let the form of absolution be observed, so that it be done with a penitential psalm and both the Lord's Prayer and another customary prayer. His heirs also, if after admonition they are unwilling, are to be compelled by ecclesiastical constraint to make satisfaction for him. [Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Nones of May, 1199.]

> Excommunicato, decedenti in excommunicatione, quantumcunque contritus decesserit, non est communicandum ante absolutionem, nec pro eo orandum, licet sit quoad Deum absolutus. Sed si constat ecclesiae de contritione praecedenti, absolvetur etiam post mortem ab eo, a quo vivus fuerat absolvendus; et heredes eius compelluntur per ecclesiam ad satisfaciendum pro eo.
>
> Idem Abbati S. Andreae.
>
> A nobis est saepe quaesitum, utrum, si aliquis excommunicatus, in quo indicia fuerint poenitentiae manifesta, nec per eum steterit, quo minus reconciliaretur ecclesiasticae unitati, non suscepto beneficio absolutionis decesserit, pro absoluto ab ecclesia sit habendus, et utrum pro tali recipienda sit eleemosyna, et a fidelibus sit orandum. *Ut autem quod intendimus per suppositionem exempli apertius exprimamus, quidam presbyter et canonicus regularis, sicut per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quum publica laboraret infamia, quod ad quandam coniugatam accederet, maritus mulieris et consanguinei eius in eum manus iniecerunt temere violentas; propter quod per episcopum denunciati sunt excommunicationis sententiae subiacere. Verum ipsi, postmodum ad eundem episcopum accedentes, praestito in manibus eius, quod parerent iudicio ecclesiae, corporaliter iuramento, in mandatis receperunt ab ipso, quod, propter hoc apostolico se conspectui praesentarent. Quumque unus illorum se ad iter accingeret veniendi, a quibusdam suis aemulis est peremptus, et extra coemeterium ecclesiae tumulatus. Et licet contra interfectores amici et consanguinei interfecti graviter sint commoti, eis tamen omnem rancorem remitterent et offensam, dummodo interfecti cadaver traderetur ecclesiasticae sepulturae. Videretur igitur forsan in hoc casu quibusdam, quod, quum sacramentum non necessitatis articulus, sed contemptus religionis excludat, et iudicium ecclesiae divinum *[possit et] debeat iudicium imitari, quum in interfecto praedicto manifesta poenitentiae signa praecesserint, et propter hoc absolutus apud Deum esse credatur, absolutus etiam ab ecclesia sit habendus; sed e contrario, quum ex sola culpa ligetur quis quoad Deum apud triumphantem ecclesiam, ex sola vero sententia ligetur quoad hominem apud ecclesiam militantem, quando vinculum culpae remittitur, absolvitur apud Deum, sed apud homines non absolvitur, nisi quando vinculum sententiae relaxatur; alioquin ecclesiae absolutio nullatenus necessaria videretur, si in sola cordis contritione praeter sacerdotale officium rigor relaxaretur ecclesiasticae disciplinae. Nos igitur consultationi tuae de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio breviter respondemus, quod iudicium Dei veritati, quae non fallit, nec fallitur, semper innititur; iudicium autem ecclesiae nonnunquam opinionem sequitur, quam et fallere saepe contingit et falli. Propter quod contingit interdum, ut qui ligatus est apud Deum apud ecclesiam sit solutus, et qui liber est apud Deum ecclesiastica sit sententia innodatus. Vinculum ergo, quo peccator ligatus est apud Deum, in culpae remissione dissolvitur; illud autem, quo ligatus est apud ecclesiam, quum sententia remittitur, relaxatur, quod in suscitatione Lazari sermo evangelicus manifestat, quem prius Dominus suscitavit, et Apostolis praecepit postmodum solvere suscitatum. Unde, quantumcunque se quis, iuramento praestito, quod ecclesiae mandato pareret, humiliare curaverit, quantacunque poenitentiae signa praecesserint; si tamen morte praeventus absolutionis non potuerit beneficium obtinere, quamvis absolutus apud Deum fuisse credatur: nondum tamen habendus est apud ecclesiam absolutus. Potest tamen et debet ei ecclesiae beneficio subveniri, [scilicet] ut, si de ipsius viventis poenitentia per evidentia signa constiterit, defuncto etiam absolutionis beneficium impendatur. Nec obstat, quod ecclesiae legitur attributa potestas ligandi atque solvendi homines super terram, tanquam non possit solvere et ligare sub terra sepultos, et quod legitur, "Non communicetur mortuo, cui non est communicatum et vivo," quum, etsi communicatum non fuerit, communicandum tamen illi fuisset, quem non contemptus religionis, sed necessitatis articulus impedivit, et in certis casibus a canonibus denotatis ligasse legatur ecclesia mortuos et solvisse. Ut autem in uno pariter et eodem negotio et servemus rigorem, et mansuetudinem ostendamus: statuimus, ut illius mortui absolutio a sede apostolica requiratur, qui, quum viveret, ab ea fuerat absolvendus; aliorum autem absolutionem ex praemissa causa ceteris indulgemus, a quibus, dum viverent, fuerant absolvendi. Absolutionis autem forma servetur, ut fiat cum poenitentiali psalmo, et tam oratione dominica quam alia consueta. Heredes quoque ipsius ad satisfaciendum pro ipso, si monitione praemissa noluerint, per districtionem ecclesiasticam compellantur. [Dat. Lat. II. Non. Maii 1199.]

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: One who keeps a cleric in custody or chains without injury is excommunicated. This is the first point. One who knowingly communicates with an excommunicated person in the crime is excommunicated and, unless difficulty impedes, ought to be absolved by the one who excommunicated him, with an oath. But one who communicates outside the crime can be reconciled by a simple priest without an oath. This is what it says to the end.

The same, to the Bishop of Wrocław.

Recently your discretion asked us what is to be done concerning those laymen who violently, yet without injury, keep clerics in public or private custody, or even thrust them into chains, whether they fall under the canon of a sentence already imposed so that by the act itself they are bound by the bond of excommunication, like those who rashly lay violent hands upon clerics; and whether those who knowingly communicate with persons excommunicated by name can be absolved from excommunication through confession by a simple priest, or absolution ought to be sought by them from the bishop or archbishop; and whether, after penance has been done, you may dispense with those who, although they are not bigamists by law, are nevertheless called bigamists in fact because, while established in sacred orders, they have joined second women to themselves in cohabitation in the manner of marriage. We therefore respond to your inquiry in this manner and in order: concerning the first article of the consultation, we do not believe that laymen escape the penalty of excommunication, although bodily injury did not ensue from their act, short of which violence is very often wickedly perpetrated against clerics. But concerning the second question, we believe that a distinction is to be made: whether one who communicates with a person excommunicated by name knowingly communicates in the crime with the criminal, furnishing him counsel, aid, or favor; or otherwise in prayer or a kiss, or praying with him, or even eating with him. In the first article, since such a person [both] communicates in the crime and participates with the criminal, and thereby by reason of the condemned crime is seen to offend against the one who condemned it, absolution will then rightly be sought from him or his superior, since according to canonical sanctions an equal penalty constrains the one acting and the one consenting. But in the second case he will be able to obtain the benefit of absolution from his bishop or his own priest. For although even then one communicating with an excommunicated person is bound not by a sentence of a judge but of the law, nevertheless, because the maker of the canon did not specially reserve his absolution to himself, he is seen by that very fact to have granted to others the faculty of relaxing it. But the one who communicates with an excommunicated person according to the first manner ought to be absolved with an oath; while the one who, according to the second manner, participates with him can be reconciled without sworn security. But if, for some just cause, it is difficult for the person to be absolved to approach the one who excommunicated him, we grant by indulgence that, after security has been furnished according to the form of the Church that he will obey the mandate of the one who excommunicated him, he may be absolved by his bishop or his own priest. [The third, etc.; cf. c. 4, On Bigamists Not to Be Ordained, I. 21. Given at the Lateran, on the seventeenth day before the Kalends of June, 1199.]

> Detinens clericum in custodia vel vinculis sine laesione, excommunicatus est. H. d. primo. Communicans excommunicato scienter in crimine excommunicatus est, et, nisi difficultas impediat, absolvi debet ab excommunicatore cum iuramento. Communicans vero extra crimen reconciliari potest per simplicem sacerdotem sine iuramento. H. d. usque ad finem.
>
> Idem Wratislaviensi Episcopo.
>
> Nuper a nobis tua discretio requisivit, quid de illis laicis sit faciendum, qui clericos violenter, sine laesione tamen, in custodia detinent publica vel privata, vel etiam detrudunt in vincula, utrum in canonem latae sententiae incidant, ut ipso facto sint excommunicationis vinculo innodati, sicut illi, qui manus iniiciunt in clericos temere violentas; et utrum, qui nominatim excommunicatis scienter communicant, absolvi ab excommunicatione possint per confessionem a simplici sacerdote, vel episcopi seu archiepiscopi sit ab eis absolutio expetenda, et, si post actam poenitentiam cum illis valeas dispensare, qui, etsi bigami de iure non sunt, de facto saltem bigami nuncupantur eo, quod in sacris ordinibus constituti more nuptiali secundas in contubernium sibi mulierculas adiunxerunt. Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter ex ordine respondemus, quod in primo consultationis articulo non credimus laicos poenam excommunicationis evadere, quamvis per eorum factum corporalis laesio non fuerit subsecuta, citra quam violentia saepius circa clericos nequiter perpetratur. In secunda vero quaestione credimus distinguendum, an is, qui nominatim excommunicato communicat, scienter in crimine communicet criminoso, ei consilium impendendo, auxilium vel favorem, aut alias in oratione vel osculo, aut orando secum, aut etiam comedendo. In primo quidem articulo, quum talis [et] communicet crimini, et participet criminoso, ac per hoc ratione damnati criminis videatur in eum delinquere, qui damnavit, ab eo vel eius superiore merito delicti tunc erit absolutio requirenda, quum iuxta canonicas sanctiones facientem et consentientem par poena constringat. In secundo vero casu a suo episcopo vel a proprio sacerdote poterit absolutionis beneficium obtinere. Quamvis enim et tunc non iudicis, sed iuris sententia excommunicato communicans sit ligatus, quia tamen conditor canonis eius absolutionem sibi specialiter non retinuit, eo ipso concessisse videtur facultatem aliis relaxandi. Is autem, qui iuxta primum modum excommunicato communicat, cum iuramento debet absolvi; qui vero iuxta secundum modum illi participat, reconciliari poterit sine iuratoria cautione. Verum, si difficile sit ex aliqua iusta causa, quod ad ipsum excommunicatorem absolvendus accedat: concedimus indulgendo, ut, praestita iuxta formam ecclesiae cautione, quod excommunicatoris mandato parebit, a suo absolvatur episcopo vel proprio sacerdote. [Tertius etc. cf. c. 4. de big. non. ord. I. 21. Dat. Lat. XVII. Kal. Iun. 1199.]

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: The oath of an excommunicated person to obey the mandates of the Church does not have the force of absolution. This is the first point. No one is bound to communicate with an excommunicated person except the excepted persons; otherwise one communicating with an excommunicated person incurs the lesser excommunication and is to be excommunicated with the greater, unless the latter was excommunicated together with his participants, in which case the one communicating would then be excommunicated with the greater excommunication.

The same, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

Because you seek to be made certain in doubtful matters by our rescript, so that according to it you may moderate the judgment of your discretion, we commend your fraternity with worthy praises in the Lord. Indeed, your fraternity consulted us [whether an altar upon which an excommunicated person presumed to celebrate divine rites ought to be reconsecrated, and] whether there is to be communication with an excommunicated person who furnished sworn security that he would obey the mandate of the Church but has not yet obtained the benefit of absolution; and whether any persons can, and which persons are even bound to, communicate with an excommunicated person. It also asked what penalty was to be imposed upon those who communicate with excommunicated persons unwillingly or involuntarily, and what is to be done concerning priests who steer ships into battle and fight, and those who incite others but do not fight. But to these things we respond to your fraternity in this manner: one is not to communicate with an excommunicated person, although he has confirmed by oath that he will obey the mandate of the Church, until he has been absolved by the Church; otherwise absolution would not be necessary after the oath. But whether, if not contempt of religion but an article of necessity excluded the benefit of absolution, it is lawful to communicate with such a person, at least at death, because you did not at all inquire through your letters, we have not thought that it should be answered at present. But no one knowingly is at all bound to communicate with a person excommunicated by name, except certain persons who are specially excused through that chapter of Pope Gregory, "Since many." But those who presumptuously participate with persons excommunicated by name, apart from the persons noted by the said canon, are to be bound by the bond of excommunication unless, after perhaps being admonished, they desist from participating with them. But it is otherwise if they knowingly communicate with one who has been bound by sentence with the bond of excommunication together with his participants; for then they too incur the sentence of excommunication. [But because, etc. (cf. c. 5, On Penalties, V. 37.) Given at the city of Castella, on the sixth day before the Ides of October, 1198.]

> Iuramentum excommunicati de stando mandatis ecclesiae non habet vim absolutionis. H. d. primo. Excommunicato nullus communicare tenetur praeter personas exceptas; alias communicans excommunicato incurrit minorem, et est excommunicandus maiori, nisi ille esset excommunicatus cum participibus suis, qui tunc esset excommunicatus maiori. Idem Strigonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Quod in dubiis nostro postulas certificari rescripto, ut iuxta illud tuae discretionis arbitrium modereris, fraternitatem tuam dignis in Domino laudibus commendamus. Sane consuluit nos tua fraternitas, [utrum altare, in quo excommunicatus divina celebrare praesumpsit, reconsecrari debeat, et] an sit communicandum excommunicato, qui, quod staret mandato ecclesiae, iuratoriam praestitit cautionem, sed nondum absolutionis beneficium est adeptus, et si excommunicato communicare aliqui, et qui etiam teneantur. Quaesivit etiam, quae poena iis fuerit iniungenda, qui excommunicatis nolentes communicant vel inviti, et quid de presbyteris sit agendum, qui gubernant naves ad pugnam, et pugnent, et iis, qui alios incitant, sed non pugnant. Ad haec autem fraternitati tuae taliter Respondemus, quod excommunicato, licet, quod stet mandato ecclesiae, iuramento firmaverit, communicari non debet, donec per ecclesiam fuerit absolutus; alioquin post iuramentum non esset absolutio necessaria. Utrum autem, si absolutionis beneficium non contemptus religionis, sed articulus necessitatis excluserit, tali vel saltem in morte communicare sit licitum, quia minime per tuas literas requisisti, ad praesens non duximus respondendum. Nullus autem scienter omnino nominatim excommunicato communicare tenetur, nisi quaedam personae, quae per illud Gregorii Papae capitulum: "Quoniam multos," specialiter excusantur. Illi autem, qui nominatim excommunicatis praesumptuose participant, praeter personas a dicto canone annotatas, nisi ab eorum participatione commoniti forte destiterint, excommunicationis vinculo sunt innodandi; secus autem, si scienter ei communicant, qui cum participibus suis est vinculo excommunicationis sententialiter innodatus. Tunc enim et ipsi sententiam excommunicationis incurrunt. [Quia vero etc. (cf. c. 5. de poen. V. 37.) Dat. cap. civ. Castellanam VI. Id. Oct. 1198.]

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: Those who were previously bound to an excommunicated person by familiar service are bound to communicate with him; others are not bound by necessity, although sometimes they can do so when urgent necessity exists.

The same, to the Doctors of Decrees at Bologna.

Among other things that our venerable brother, the Archbishop of Esztergom, formerly caused to be proposed to our apostolate, humbly consulting, he also inquired, if we remember rightly, whether anyone can communicate with an excommunicated person and who are even bound to do so; to whom we recall that we responded concerning that article that no one at all is bound knowingly to communicate with a person excommunicated by name, except certain persons who are specially excused through that chapter of Pope Gregory, "Since many." But from this our response, as we have received, a great occasion for disputation arose for certain persons, some conceding that the persons named in the aforesaid chapter are bound to communicate with an excommunicated person, especially those who were previously bound by obligation to communion with them, while others assert that they can lawfully communicate with excommunicated persons if they wish, but are nevertheless not bound to this by necessity. Therefore, so that interpretation may proceed from the source from which the law issued, we have thought that ambiguity of this kind should be resolved in this manner: since certain persons noted previously in the aforesaid chapter were, before the pronouncement of the sentence, bound to adhere in familiar service to those against whom the sentence of excommunication was subsequently delivered, and are not afterwards bound to the contrary, since that same obligation still endures, by the operation of the benefit of the canon they are not released from their former obligation but are bound to familiar service, and consequently are also bound to communion, without which they cannot furnish that service. But we do not believe this should be referred to all the persons of the chapter, so that they are subject to an obligation of this kind, since travelers, pilgrims, and merchants ought to abstain from communion with such persons unless an article of necessity threatens, as is manifestly gathered at the end; but only to those who are bound to such persons, constrained by a closer obligation. Nevertheless, they ought not to communicate with them in those things for which they are marked by excommunication, as in crimes, but ought altogether to abstain from them. Hence we prudently responded in the foregoing consultation that not all persons, but certain ones who are specially excused through that chapter of Pope Gregory, are bound to communion of this kind in the aforesaid manner. But whether those persons also, because of the authority for punishing the crime more severely, should sometimes be prohibited by a sentence of excommunication from communion with such persons—because this was not asked, it was not answered.

> Excommunicato communicare tenentur qui prius erant ei obligati ad obsequium familiare; alii vero non tenentur de necessitate, licet interdum possint de necessitate urgente.
>
> Idem Doctoribus decretorum Bononiensibus.
>
> Inter alia, quae venerabilis frater noster Strigoniensis archiepiscopus dudum apostolatui nostro proponi fecit humiliter consulendo, illud etiam, si bene meminimus, inquisivit, utrum excommunicato communicare quis, et qui etiam teneantur; cui Nos super illo recolimus articulo respondisse, quod nullus omnino nominatim excommunicato scienter communicare tenetur, nisi quaedam personae, quae per illud Gregorii Papae capitulum: "Quoniam multos," specialiter excusantur. Verum ex hac nostra responsione magna quibusdam, sicut accepimus, orta est occasio disputandi, aliis concedentibus, quod excommunicato communicare tenentur personae in praedicto capitulo nominatae, praesertim quae prius ad communionem eorum ex debito tenebantur, aliis asserentibus, eos excommunicatis communicare licite posse, si velint, non tamen ad hoc ex necessitate teneri. Ut igitur, unde ius prodiit, interpretatio quoque procedat, ambiguitatem huiusmodi taliter duximus absolvendam, quod, quum quaedam personae, in praemisso capitulo prius denotatae, illis, in quos lata fuerit excommunicationis sententia subsequenter, ante prolationem ipsius obsequio tenerentur familiariter adhaerere, neque postmodum ad contrarium teneantur, quum adhuc ipsum debitum duret, beneficio canonis id agente, a priore non sunt obnoxietate solutae, sed ad familiare tenentur obsequium, et ita per consequens ad communionem quoque tenentur, sine qua illud nequeunt exhibere. Illud autem non ad omnes personas capituli credimus referendum, ut videlicet obnoxietati huiusmodi sint subiectae, quum viatores, peregrini et mercatores a communione talium personarum, nisi articulus necessitatis immineat, debeant abstinere, ut in fine colligitur manifeste, sed ad illas duntaxat, quae talibus arctiori tenentur obnoxietate constrictae, quibus tamen in his, pro quibus sunt excommunicatione notatae, ut in criminibus, communicare non debent, sed ab eis penitus abstinere. Unde prudenter in praemissa consultatione respondemus, non omnes personas, sed quasdam, quae per illud Gregorii Papae capitulum specialiter excusantur, ad communionem huiusmodi praemisso modo teneri, utrum autem et illae personae propter auctoritatem facinoris severius puniendi a communione talium per excommunicationis sententiam debeant aliquando prohiberi quia quaesitum non exstitit, responsum non fuit.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: If one excommunicated for laying hands knowingly receives orders, if he is a secular cleric, he is to be deposed; if a regular, he is suspended from execution of the order. With one who, in ignorance of the law or fact, receives orders while thus excommunicated, if he is a secular cleric, the Pope alone dispenses; if a regular, the abbot dispenses, provided that the ignorance is probable and the act is not grave.

The same.

Since the absolution of those who incur the stain of excommunication for a violent laying of hands upon clerics is reserved only to the Apostolic See, except in certain cases excepted by our predecessor, some persons, neglecting the ecclesiastical sentence, do not fear to receive ecclesiastical orders while placed under excommunication. But the apostolic oracle is rather often implored as to what ought to be done concerning them. Concerning these we believe that a distinction is to be made, as is found in the things set forth below: such persons either know that they are ensnared by the bond of excommunication; or do not remember the act for which they fell under the canon of a sentence already imposed; or, knowing the act but ignorant of the law, do not know that they are bound by it.

If the first are secular clerics, we decree that they are to be perpetually deposed from the orders received. In the remaining cases, both archbishops and bishops should know that they do not have the faculty of dispensing without a special mandate of the Apostolic See; the absolution of such persons is also forbidden to them, since greater things are understood to be prohibited to those to whom lesser things are forbidden. Nevertheless, persons of this kind can be brought to the ears of the Roman Pontiff, so that a response may issue from him according to rigor or equity, as his discretion shall see ought to be done.

But if persons of this kind are cloistered, although it was enacted by Pope Alexander, our predecessor of good memory, that monks and regular canons, in whatever manner they strike one another in the cloister, are not to be sent to the Apostolic See, but are to be subjected to discipline according to the discretion and providence of their abbot, and, if the abbot's discretion does not suffice for their correction, the providence of the diocesan bishop is to be applied; and elsewhere it is said that an abbot cannot and ought not, without the permission of the Roman Pontiff, to absolve those fleeing from the world who have received the religious habit in a monastery and afterwards confess, among other things, that they committed such an offense by which they incurred a sentence of excommunication by the act itself, although he can punish the presumption of the offenders with due penalty—we, nevertheless, favoring religious life and wishing to display greater grace toward them so that material for wandering may be removed, grant to their prelates that they can also impart the benefit of absolution to such persons, unless their excess was so difficult and enormous, as if it proceeded to mutilation of a member or effusion of blood, or a violent hand was laid upon a bishop or abbot, since such and similar excesses cannot be passed over without scandal. But if any cloistered person lays violent hands upon a religious person of another cloister, let him be absolved by his own abbot and by the abbot of the one who suffered the injury. But if he strikes a secular cleric, he can merit the grace of absolution only through the Apostolic See, so that scandal may be avoided. But if also it happens that these are promoted to orders, then, according to the foregoing distinction, those who knowingly caused themselves to be ordained in contempt of ecclesiastical discipline we decree to remain suspended from execution of the order and office received. But concerning the others, who do not have memory of the act or knowledge of the law, after the utility of the monasteries has been weighed and regular penance imposed and completed, their abbots will be able to dispense, unless the act was grave and notable, or the one who did it was adult and discreet, so that strongly and forcibly a presumption is made against forgetfulness or ignorance. But we command the abbots to observe this form diligently, lest one who abuses the power permitted to him deserve to lose the privilege.

> Si excommunicatus pro manuum iniectione scienter recipit ordines, si est clericus saecularis, deponendus est; si regularis, exsecutione ordinis est suspensus. Qui, ignorans ius vel factum, sic excommunicatus recipit ordines, si est clericus saecularis, dispensat cum eo solus Papa; si regularis, dispensat abbas, si ignorantia est probabilis, et factum non est grave.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quum illorum absolutio, qui pro violenta manuum iniectione in clericos labem excommunicationis incurrunt, praeterquam in quibusdam casibus, a praedecessore nostro exceptis, sedi duntaxat apostolicae reservetur: nonnulli, ecclesiasticam sententiam negligentes, in excommunicatione positi ecclesiasticos ordines accipere non formidant. Quid autem de his fieri debeat, apostolicum saepius oraculum imploratur. Circa quos credimus, sicut reperitur in subditis, distinguendum, quod tales vel sciunt, excommunicationis se vinculo irretitos, vel non recolunt factum, pro quo in latae sententiae canonem inciderunt, vel factum quidem scientes, iuris ignari nesciunt exinde se teneri. Primos, si fuerint saeculares clerici, a susceptis ordinibus censemus in perpetuum deponendos; in reliquis casibus tam archiepiscopi quam episcopi absque mandato sedis apostolicae speciali dispensandi facultatem se noverint non habere, quibus etiam est absolutio talium interdicta, quum maiora intelligantur illis prohibita, quibus vetita sunt minora. Poterunt tamen huiusmodi Romani Pontificis auribus intimari, ut ab eo secundum rigorem vel aequitatem responsum prodeat, prout discretio sua viderit faciendum. Qui si claustrales huiusmodi fuerint, licet a bonae memoriae praedecessore nostro Alexandro Papa fuerit constitutum, quod monachi et canonici regulares, quocunque modo se in claustro percusserint, non sunt ad apostolicam sedem mittendi, sed secundum discretionem et providentiam sui abbatis disciplinae subdantur, et, si abbatis discretio ad eorum correctionem non sufficit, providentia est dioecesani episcopi adhibenda; et alibi dicatur, quod de saeculo fugientes, qui religionis habitum in monasterio receperunt, et inter cetera postmodum confitentur, se tale commisisse delictum, per quod ipso actu excommunicationis sententiam incurrerunt, sine licentia Romani Pontificis abbas non potest nec debet eos absolvere, quamvis praesumptionem delinquentium debita possit animadversione punire: nos tamen in religionis favorem, et ut evagandi materia subtrahatur, maiorem eis gratiam exhibere volentes, eorum praelatis, quod etiam talibus absolutionis beneficium impertiri valeant, indulgemus, nisi excessus ipsorum exstiterit adeo difficilis et enormis, utpote si ad mutilationem membri vel effusionem sanguinis est processum, aut in episcopum aut abbatem violenta sit manus iniecta, quum excessus tales et similes nequeant sine scandalo praeteriri. Si vero claustralis aliquis in religiosam personam alterius claustri manus iniecerit violentas, per abbatem proprium, et eius, qui passus est iniuriam, absolvatur. Quodsi clericum percusserit saecularem, non nisi per apostolicam sedem, ut scandalum evitetur, absolutionis gratiam poterit promereri. Si autem et hos ad ordines promoveri contingat, iuxta praemissam distinctionem, qui scienter in contemptum ecclesiasticae disciplinae se fecerint ordinari, ab exsecutione suscepti ordinis et officii decernimus manere suspensos. Circa reliquos vero, facti memoriam vel iuris peritiam non habentes, monasteriorum utilitate pensata, post iniunctam regularem poenitentiam et peractam abbates ipsorum poterunt dispensare, nisi grave fuerit et notabile factum, aut is, qui fecit, adultus fuerit et discretus, ut violenter et valide contra oblivionem vel ignorantiam praesumatur. Praecipimus autem abbatibus, ut formam istam diligenter observent, ne privilegium mereatur amittere, qui sibi permissa abutitur potestate.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: A nun who strikes another nun, a convert, or a secular cleric falls under excommunication and can be absolved by the bishop of the place.

The same, to the Bishop of Pistoia.

Concerning nuns, your fraternity asked us by whom the benefit of absolution is to be bestowed upon them if they rashly lay violent hands upon one another, their male or female converts, or even clerics serving in their monasteries. Therefore, concerning this we respond to your consultation that, by our authority, they are to be absolved by the bishop in whose diocese their monasteries are situated. [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Kalends of March, 1202.]

Monialis, percutiens monialem seu conversum, vel clericum saecularem, incidit in excommunicationem, et ab episcopo loci absolvi potest.

Idem Pistoriensi Episcopo.

De monialibus tua a nobis fraternitas requisivit, per quem eis sit beneficium absolutionis impendendum, si vel in se invicem vel conversos vel conversas suas, aut clericos etiam, in suis monasteriis servientes, manus iniecerint temere violentas. Super hoc igitur tuae consultationi taliter respondemus, ut auctoritate nostra per episcopum, in cuius dioecesi earum monasteria fuerint, absolvantur. [*Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Mart. *1202.]

Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: Even a contract that cannot be carried out without communion is not dissolved or impeded by an excommunication supervening upon one who is bound to furnish something to a person not excommunicated.

The same, to all the Crusaders.

If truly you repent of the offense and fully propose to make satisfaction for the sin, we believe—indeed, we know—that God is already placated toward you. Therefore, if the Venetians are induced to make satisfaction and merit obtaining the benefit of absolution, you will safely be able to sail with them and fight the battle of the Lord. But if perhaps the Venetians wish neither to make satisfaction nor to be absolved, seeing that they are said not to grieve but altogether to rejoice concerning the offense, we permit you to cross by ship with them as far as the land of the Saracens or the Jerusalem province, according to what was agreed between you and them or shall honorably be agreed, communicating with them as little as you can, yet with grief and bitterness of heart and under hope of pardon. For, since they have already received from you the greater amount of the freight and cannot be induced or even constrained to restore it, if it were done otherwise, you would seem to carry away loss from penance, but they a reward from contumacy, since they remain bound to you to discharge this debt, and that which is owed can be exacted and received from excommunicated persons. But it is provided in law that, if anyone passes through the land of heretics or of any excommunicated persons, he can buy and receive necessary things from them. Moreover, if the father of a household is bound by a sentence of excommunication, the household is excused from participation with him. Therefore, although the Doge of the Venetians, the lord of the ships, persists in excommunication as the father of a household, nevertheless you, as his household while you are in his ships, will not be reached by his excommunication, and you will be excusable before God if, while existing in the ships of excommunicated persons, with grief of heart under hope of penance, you communicate with [the excommunicated persons] themselves in those matters in which you cannot avoid their communion. [But, etc.]

Contractus etiam, qui sine communione explicari non potest, non dissolvitur, seu impeditur per excommunicationem, supervenientem in eum, qui tenetur aliquid praestare non excommunicato.

Idem universis Crucesignatis.

Si vere vos poenitet de commisso, et plene proponitis satisfacere de peccato, Deum vobis credimus, immo novimus, iam placatum. Si ergo Veneti ad satisfactionem induci et absolutionis beneficium meruerint obtinere, secure cum eis navigare poteritis, et praelium Domini praeliari. Quodsi Veneti forte nec satisfacere voluerint, nec absolvi, utpote qui non dolere, sed gaudere dicuntur prorsus de commisso: vobis permittimus, ut cum ipsis usque in terram Sarracenorum vel Hierosolymitanam provinciam, iuxta quod inter vos convenit et ipsos, vel honeste convenerit, navigio transeatis, quanto minus poteritis, cum dolore tamen et amaritudine cordis, et sub spe veniae communicantes eisdem. Quum enim iam a vobis maiorem nauli receperint quantitatem, nec ad eam possint restituendam induci aut etiam coarctari: si aliter fieret, videremini vos damnum ex poenitentia, ipsi vero praemium ex contumacia reportare, quum ad hoc debitum exsolvendum ipsi vobis maneant obligati, et ab excommunicatis exigi possit et recipi quod debetur. Est autem cautum in iure, quod, si quisquam per terram haereticorum aut quorumlibet excommunicatorum transierit, necessaria emere ac recipere poterit ab eisdem. Praeterea, si paterfamilias domus excommunicationis sententia fuerit innodatus, a participatione illius familia excusatur. Licet ergo dux Venetorum dominus navium tanquam paterfamilias domus in excommunicatione persistat, vos tamen, tanquam ipsius familiam, dum in navibus eius fueritis, ipsius excommunicatio non continget, et excusabiles eritis apud Deum, si in excommunicatorum navibus exsistentes cum dolore cordis sub spe poenitentiae [excommunicatis] communicaveritis ipsis, in quibus eorum communionem non potueritis evitare. [Verum etc.]

Chapter XXXV

Latin source headnote: A prelate can and ought to imprison an incorrigible cleric subject to him, and laymen, without fear of excommunication, can with the permission of prelates seize clerics and lead them to judgment.

The same, to the Bishop of London.

That you may take thought for your reputation and salvation, and may so restrain the audacity of the wicked that you protect the innocence of the good from them, you humbly consult us concerning those things that touch the pastoral office, so that, made secure by our response, you may more commendably discharge the duty of the solicitude enjoined upon you. Indeed, you consulted us whether clerics who offend gravely, and who cannot safely be assigned to monasteries to do penance—because, since they do not repent of the things committed, if an opportunity of fleeing were seized they would flee the prison of the cloister and would involve themselves more criminally in their former crimes—can be consigned by you or their other prelates to close custody; and whether laymen, if they detect clerics in great crimes, incur the canon of the sentence pronounced, since they can neither apprehend them nor drag them before judges unless they lay violent hands upon them. To the first, therefore, We respond that, since prelates ought to correct the offenses of their subjects, and it concerns the public welfare that crimes not remain unpunished and that through the audacity of impunity those who had been wicked not become more wicked, they not only can but also ought to detain under close custody superior clerics, after they have been canonically condemned of a crime, who, since they are incorrigible and cannot be guarded in monasteries, would easily lapse into like or worse things. Laymen, however, can without incurring a sentence of excommunication seize clerics and drag them to judgment, if need be, even violently, provided nevertheless that they do this by mandate of the prelates to whose jurisdiction those clerics are subject and to whom it belongs to correct criminals, since not they themselves but those by whose authority they do it are seen to do this; provided nevertheless that their violence extends no further than the defense or rather the resistance of the clerics requires. [Given at Anagni, the fourth day before the Ides of December, 1203.]

Praelatus potest et debet clericum, subiectum incorrigibilem, incarcerare, et laici citra metum excommunicationis de praelatorum licentia capere possunt clericos, et ad iudicium ducere.

Idem Londonensi Episcopo.

Ut famae tuae consulas et saluti, et sic malorum audaciam comprimas, ut ab eis bonorum innocentiam tuearis, super his nos humiliter consulis, quae officium pastorale contingunt, ut de nostra responsione securus iniunctae tibi sollicitudinis debitum laudabilius exsequaris. Sane consuluisti nos, utrum clerici graviter excedentes, qui tute non possunt monasteriis ad agendam poenitentiam deputari, quoniam, quum non poeniteant de commissis, opportunitate fugiendi captata carcerem fugerent claustri, et prioribus se sceleribus scelestius immiscerent, a te vel aliis praelatis suis arctae possint custodiae mancipari, et utrum laici, si clericos in magnis sceleribus deprehendant, in canonem incidant latae sententiae, quum nec comprehendere, nec ad iudices trahere ipsos possint, nisi manus in eos iniecerint violentas. Ad primum igitur Respondemus, quod, quum praelati excessus corrigere debeant subditorum, et publicae utilitatis intersit, ne crimina remaneant impunita, et per impunitatis audaciam fiant qui nequam fuerant nequiores, non solum possunt, sed debent etiam superiores clericos, postquam fuerint de crimine canonice condemnati, sub arcta custodia detinere, qui, quum sint incorrigibiles, nec in monasteriis valeant custodiri, ad similia vel peiora facile laberentur. Laici vero citra excommunicationis sententiam capere clericos, et ad iudicium trahere possunt, si oporteat, etiam violenter, dum tamen id de mandato faciant praelatorum, quorum illi sunt iurisdictioni subiecti, et quorum est corrigere criminosos, quum hoc non ipsi, sed illi, et quorum auctoritate id faciunt, facere videantur; dum tamen non amplius eorum violentia se extendat, quam defensio vel rebellio potius exigit clericorum. [Dat. Anagniae IV. Id. Dec. 1203.]

Chapter XXXVI

Latin source headnote: He is excommunicated who lays violent hands upon a cleric, even one willing, even if he does this in satisfaction for a preceding injury. This is what it says, and it is a notable case.

The same, to the Archbishop of Braga.

It sometimes happens in your parts, and it is held by the custom of the region, as your fraternity intimated to us, that clerics, if they offend someone and wish to make satisfaction to the person offended, according to the custom of the country, which laymen already observe among themselves, voluntarily submit their bodies to thirty or forty or to more or fewer blows of rods, which they frequently receive not under compulsion but willingly, not only from the hands of other clerics but also of laymen. Whence you humbly consulted us whether beaters of this kind incur the canon of the sentence pronounced. We, however, respond to your fraternity concerning this in this manner: that a laying-on of hands of this kind, although not violent, nevertheless appears injurious, since that canon was promulgated not so much in favor of the ordained cleric as in favor of the clerical order. And therefore we both will and command that you prohibit this from being attempted henceforth throughout the province of Braga. But if, after a prohibition of this kind, any cleric voluntarily subjects himself [to such a penalty, or a layman inflicts such a penalty upon him,] both are to be excommunicated, provision being made that the cleric make competent satisfaction to the person who suffered the injury without injury to the clerical order, so that peace may reasonably be restored between them. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, the seventh day before the Kalends of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Excommunicatus est qui in clericum, etiam volentem, manus iniecerit violentas, etiamsi hoc faciat in satisfactionem praecedentis iniuriae. H. d. et est casus notabilis.

Idem Bracharensi Archiepiscopo.

Contingit interdum in partibus tuis, et de consuetudine regionis habetur, sicut tua nobis fraternitas intimavit, quod clerici, si quem offendant, et satisfacere velint offenso, secundum morem patriae, quem inter se laici iam observant, corpora sua sponte supponunt XXX. vel XL. seu pluribus aut paucioribus percussionibus fustium, quas frequenter non coacti suscipiunt, sed volentes, non solum de aliorum clericorum manibus, sed etiam laicorum. Unde nos humiliter consulebas, utrum huiusmodi percussores in canonem incidant sententiae promulgatae. Nos autem fraternitati tuae super hoc taliter respondemus, quod huiusmodi manus iniectio, etsi non violenta, tamen iniuriosa videtur, quum ille canon non tam in favorem clerici ordinati, quam in favorem ordinis clericalis fuerit promulgatus. Ideo et volumus et mandamus, ut id de cetero prohibeas attentari per provinciam Bracharensem. Si quis autem clericus post prohibitionem huiusmodi sponte se subiecerit

[tali poenae, vel laicus in eum talem poenam iniecerit,] excommunicetur uterque, proviso, ut clericus iniuriam passo sine iniuria clericali satisfaciat competenter, quatenus inter eos pax valeat rationabiliter reformari. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VII. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter XXXVII

Latin source headnote: A slave excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric is bound to go to the Apostolic See for absolution. But if from this the master, who was not at fault, would suffer grave loss, or the slave does this in fraud of him, he can be absolved by the bishop, if the injury was not enormous.

The same, to the Archbishop of Lyon.

It has been reported to us that, when some slaves of your province, on account of a violent laying-on of hands upon a cleric, incur the canon of the sentence pronounced, their masters alleging that they are unwilling to be without their slaves, they take no care to come to the Apostolic See to be absolved, evading ecclesiastical discipline by an occasion of this kind. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that you compel them to come to the Apostolic See to be absolved, since more deference must be shown to God than to man; unless they have done this in fraud, so that they might withdraw themselves from the service of their masters, or the masters themselves through this incur grave loss without fault of their own. For then in either case you will be able to absolve them by indulgence of our provision, since they are very far removed from the Apostolic See; but in recompense for the labor that they would endure on the journey, another satisfaction is to be enjoined upon them, provided the offense is not so grave and enormous that, for avoiding scandal and removing an example of this kind, slaves of this kind ought to come to the servant of the servants of God to be absolved. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of January, in the eighth year, 1206.]

Servus excommunicatus pro iniectione manuum in clericum, tenetur pro absolutione ire ad sedem apostolicam. Sed, si ex hoc dominus, qui non fuit in culpa, grave damnum patiatur, vel servus hoc faciat in eius fraudem, absolvi potest ab episcopo, si laesio non fuit enormis.

Idem Lugdunensi Archiepiscopo.

Relatum est nobis, quod, quum aliqui servi tuae provinciae propter iniectionem manuum in clericum violentam in canonem incidunt sententiae promulgatae, allegantibus dominis eorundem, quod carere mancipiis suis nolunt, venire ad sedem apostolicam absolvendi non curant, per occasionem huiusmodi eludentes ecclesiasticam disciplinam. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus eos venire compellas ad sedem apostolicam absolvendos, quum plus sit Deo quam homini deferendum; nisi fecerint hoc in fraudem, ut subtrahant se obsequio dominorum, aut ipsi domini propter hoc sine culpa sua grave damnum incurrant. Tunc enim in utrolibet casu poteris eos ex indulgentia nostrae provisionis absolvere, quum nimis sint ab apostolica sede remoti, sed in recompensationem laboris, quem in itinere sustinerent, alia eis satisfactio iniungatur, dummodo non sit tam gravis et enormis excessus, ut propter vitandum scandalum et tollendum exemplum huiusmodi servi ad servum servorum Dei venire debeant absolvendi. [*Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Ian. Ao. VIII. *1206.]

Chapter XXXVIII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated on account of participation with an excommunicated person, although he afterward attacks him, is not on this ground alone to be held absolved.

The same, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

It has been established by the sacred canons (And below: [cf. c. 12, On Burials, III. 28.]) But although he who had voluntarily communicated with those excommunicated persons who, with all their supporters and participants, are bound by a sentence of excommunication, afterward returning to his heart, has at the mandate of the church attacked the excommunicated persons whom he had previously favored, nevertheless, until he has received the grace of absolution, he is not to be held absolved; nor, if he dies in a war of this kind, are absolutions or offerings to be received for him, or prayers offered to the Lord, unless his repentance while living has been established through evident signs, and the benefit of absolution is imparted even to the deceased according to the tenor of a certain constitution of ours.

> Excommunicatus propter participationem cum excommunicato, licet eum postea impugnet, ex hoc solo pro absoluto non est habendus.
>
> Idem Strigonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Sacris est canonibus institutum (Et infra: [*cf. c. *12. de sepult. III. 28.]) Licet autem is, qui voluntarius excommunicatis illis communicaverat, qui cum omnibus fautoribus et participibus suis excommunicationis sententia sunt adstricti, ad cor postmodum rediens, de mandato ecclesiae excommunicatos, quos prius foverat, expugnaverit: non tamen prius, quam absolutionis gratiam perceperit, habendus est absolutus, nec, si occumbat in huiusmodi bello, sunt absolutiones vel oblationes recipiendae pro eo, vel orationes Domino porrigendae, nisi quum de ipsius viventis poenitentia per evidentia signa constiterit, et iuxta cuiusdam constitutionis nostrae tenorem defuncto etiam absolutionis beneficium impendatur.

Chapter XXXIX

Latin source headnote: A person once excommunicated must always be avoided as excommunicated, unless he lawfully proves that he has been absolved.

The same, to the Bishop of Assisi.

As you intimated to us by your letters, when you subject certain clerics or laymen of your diocese to excommunication, their faults requiring it, they afterward return to you, no satisfaction having been made, without testimonial letters, and say that they have received the benefit of absolution. You humbly asked to be instructed by us whether they ought to be believed in this matter, since, as you say, on account of a cause of this kind your sentences are held in contempt by your subjects. Therefore, unwilling to indulge the malice of men, We respond to your fraternity in this manner: unless those excommunicated by you bring back to you concerning their absolution our letters or those of him to whom we have committed our office in this matter, or it is otherwise lawfully established for you that they have been absolved, you, placing no faith in their absolution, are to hold them as excommunicated just as before and cause them to be avoided. [Given at the Lateran, the second day before the Ides of August, 1199.]

> Semel excommunicatus debet vitari semper ut excommunicatus, nisi legitime probet, se fuisse absolutum.
>
> Idem Assuntinensi Episcopo.
>
> Sicut nobis tuis literis intimasti, quum aliquos tuae dioecesis clericos vel laicos, culpis suis exigentibus, excommunicationi supponis, ipsi, postmodum ad te, nulla satisfactione praemissa, sine testimonialibus literis redeuntes, dicunt, se absolutionis beneficium accepisse; quibus si credi debeat in hac parte, per nos instrui suppliciter postulasti, quum propter causam huiusmodi, sicut dicis, tuae sententiae a subditis contemnantur. Nolentes itaque malitiis hominum indulgere, Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, nisi excommunicati a te super absolutione sua literas nostras, vel illius, cui vices nostras in hac parte commisimus, reportaverint, aut alio modo legitime de illorum absolutione tibi constiterit, tu, eorum absolutioni fide non habita, ipsos pro excommunicatis ut prius habeas et facias evitari. [*Dat. Lat. II. Id. Aug. *1199.]

Chapter XL

Latin source headnote: If one excommunicated by a bishop appeals to the metropolitan, he can be absolved by him; nevertheless the metropolitan, wishing to defer to his suffragan, can remit him to him, when he was excommunicated on account of a manifest offense. And before absolution he who wishes to prove that he was unjustly excommunicated is not heard; it is otherwise if he wishes to prove that the sentence is null.

The same, to the Archbishop of Sens.

By your letters you intimated to us that, when our venerable brother the Bishop of Auxerre had promulgated a sentence of excommunication against the beloved son the Archpriest of Auxerre, the archpriest presented himself before you and offered sufficient security that he would stand by the mandate of the church, humbly seeking that you bestow upon him the benefit of absolution. But you, wishing to defer to the bishop mentioned, admonished him repeatedly that he absolve the archpriest. But because he did not obey the admonitions, you took care to absolve the excommunicated man, whom the bishop does not hold absolved, inasmuch as he alleges that his absolution did not pertain to you. Whence you ask what is to be done henceforth in similar cases. For it appears to some that, since a question is not carried to the metropolitan through an appeal, and an excommunicated person does not have a voice for appealing, inasmuch as he is separated from the church, whether he has appealed or not, the metropolitan ought not to bestow upon him the benefit of absolution. But from the words of a certain epistle, which scholars say is decretal, and allege to have issued from Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, it is held that, if a sentence of excommunication was promulgated against someone before an appeal, the metropolitan, having received from him before joinder of issue an oath according to the custom of the church, ought to absolve him, unless he wishes to defer to the diocesan bishop and remit him to him to be absolved. There it is also consequently inferred that excommunicated persons are neither to be heard before they have been absolved nor to be remitted to those from whom they had appealed. But in the Council of Sardica it is found that he who has been cast off by the bishop is to address the neighboring bishops, and his case is to be heard and more diligently examined; but the bishop who justly or unjustly cast him off is patiently to accept that the matter be discussed, so that either his sentence may be approved by several or may even be amended. Nevertheless, before all things have been diligently and faithfully examined, no one before cognizance of the case is to presume to associate in communion him who had been deprived of communion. We therefore believe a distinction must be made whether someone alleges that he was marked by excommunication after a lawful appeal had been interposed, or that an intolerable error was manifestly expressed in the form of the excommunication; in these cases he ought to be admitted to proof of them even if he does not seek absolution, but until they have been established he ought to be avoided in other matters, although the Apostolic See has been accustomed to absolve even such persons as a precaution. But in other cases, unless he implores the grace of absolution, he ought not to be heard, lest he appear to despise the ecclesiastical sentence and through this be bound more greatly by his contempt. But if he has humbly sought the benefit of absolution, the metropolitan ought to absolve him, unless he has decided that deference is to be shown to his suffragan; but if the suffragan is unwilling to bestow upon him the benefit of absolution according to the form of the church, the metropolitan is nevertheless to absolve him, having received security that he ought to obey his mandate, and thereafter is to hear the case and, with justice mediating, decree what is canonical. But if perhaps the bishop had excommunicated his subject on account of a manifest offense, the metropolitan ought not to absolve him unless the suffragan, having been requested, maliciously denied him the benefit of absolution. [Given at the Lateran, the thirteenth day before the Kalends of March, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1203.]

> Si excommunicatus ab episcopo metropolitanum appellat, ab eo absolvi potest; metropolitanus tamen, volens suo suffraganeo deferre, potest illum sibi remittere, quando propter manifestum excessum fuit excommunicatus. Et ante absolutionem non auditur volens probare, se iniuste excommunicatum; secus, si probare vult, sententiam esse nullam.
>
> Idem Senonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Per tuas literas nobis intimasti, quod, quum venerabilis frater noster Autissiodorensis episcopus in dilectum filium Autissiodorensem archipresbyterum excommunicationis sententiam promulgasset, archipresbyter tuo se conspectui praesentavit, et, quod staret mandato ecclesiae, sufficientem obtulit cautionem, petens humiliter, ut absolutionis ei beneficium exhiberes; tu vero, volens episcopo memorato deferre, ipsum saepius monuisti, ut absolveret archipresbyterum. Sed quia monitis non parebat, excommunicatum absolvere curavisti, quem episcopus pro absoluto non habet, utpote qui proponit, quod ad te illius absolutio non spectabat. Unde quaeris, quid in similibus de cetero sit agendum. Videtur enim aliquibus, quod, quum ad metropolitanum per appellationem quaestio non defertur, excommunicatus autem vocem non habeat appellandi, utpote ab ecclesia separatus, sive appellaverit sive non, metropolitanus ei non debet absolutionis beneficium exhibere. Verum ex verbis cuiusdam epistolae, quam dicunt scholastici decretalem, et a bonae memoriae Alexandro Papa praedecessore nostro emanasse proponunt, habetur, quod, si ante appellationem in aliquem excommunicationis sententia fuerit promulgata, metropolitanus, ante litis ingressum ab eo iuramento recepto secundum ecclesiae consuetudinem, debet ipsum absolvere, nisi voluerit episcopo dioecesano deferre, ipsumque ad eum remittere absolvendum. Ubi etiam consequenter infertur, quod nec excommunicati sunt audiendi, priusquam fuerint absoluti, nec sunt ad illos, a quibus appellaverant, remittendi. In Sardicensi autem concilio reperitur, ut is, qui ab episcopo est abiectus finitimos episcopos interpellet, et causa eius audiatur et diligentius pertractetur; episcopus autem, qui iuste vel iniuste abiecit eundem, patienter accipiat, ut discutiatur negotium, quatenus vel probetur eius a pluribus sententia, vel etiam emendetur, prius tamen, quam omnia diligenter ac fideliter examinata fuerint, nullus ante causae cognitionem communioni eum sociare praesumat, qui fuerat communione privatus. Nos igitur credimus distinguendum, utrum quis proponat, se post appellationem legitimam interpositam excommunicatione fuisse notatum, vel in forma excommunicationis intolerabilem errorem fuisse patenter expressum; in quibus casibus ad probationem eorum, etiamsi absolutionem non petat, debet admitti; sed donec de ipsis constiterit, in aliis evitari debet, quanquam apostolica sedes etiam tales consueverit absolvere ad cautelam. Verum in aliis, nisi gratiam absolutionis imploret, non debet audiri, ne sententiam ecclesiasticam contemnere videatur, et per hoc amplius ex suo contemptu ligetur. Quodsi absolutionis beneficium humiliter postulaverit, metropolitanus eum debet absolvere, nisi suo duxerit suffraganeo deferendum; cui tamen si suffraganeus absolutionis beneficium iuxta formam ecclesiae noluerit exhibere, ipse nihilominus illum absolvat; cautione recepta, quod suo debeat parere mandato, ac deinde causam audiat, et quod canonicum fuerit iustitia mediante decernat. Quodsi forsan episcopus subditum suum propter manifestum excommunicasset excessum, metropolitanus non debet ipsum absolvere, nisi suffraganeus requisitus malitiose sibi absolutionis beneficium denegaret. [Dat. Lat. XIII. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. V. 1203.]

Chapter XLI

Latin source headnote: If the Pope greets an excommunicated person in his letters, he does not absolve him on this account.

The same.

If it should perhaps sometimes happen that our letters are directed with a formula of greeting to those who by apostolic authority are subject to excommunication, the sentence of excommunication is not to be believed relaxed on this account, since it happens that letters of this kind are obtained through ignorance or negligence, excessive occupation, or even through surreption, as is said recently to have happened among the people of Piacenza. Since they are bound by the bond of excommunication on account of the iniquity that they committed against God and his church, they boast that they are as though absolved through letters of this kind, which we are said to have sent to them on behalf of the Templars, although we are not mindful of such letters; for even if they were exhibited to them when already excommunicated, perhaps they had nevertheless been obtained earlier. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that you avoid them more strictly as excommunicated until they recover from their error, observing a like judgment in similar cases if ever a like thing should happen. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, the ninth day before the Kalends of March, 1203.]

Si Papa suis literis excommunicatum salutat, non propter hoc eum absolvit.

Idem.

Si aliquando forte contigerit, quod eis, qui auctoritate apostolica sunt excommunicationi subiecti, nostrae literae cum salutationis alloquio destinentur, non propter hoc excommunicationis credatur sententia relaxata, quum per ignorantiam vel negligentiam, aut occupationem nimiam, vel etiam per subreptionem contingat huiusmodi literas impetrari, sicut nuper in Placentinis dicitur contigisse. Qui quum sint propter iniquitatem, quam in Deum et eius ecclesiam commiserunt, excommunicationis vinculo innodati, se quasi absolutos per huiusmodi literas, quas eis pro Templariis misisse dicimur, gloriantur, quamvis non simus memores talium literarum quum etsi eis iam excommunicatis exhibitae fuerint, forsan tamen prius fuerant impetratae. Quocirca fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus eos, sicut excommunicatos arctius evitetis, donec a suo resipiscant errore, in similibus si quando forte contigerit simile iudicium observantes. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. IX. Kal. Mart. 1203.]

Chapter XLII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated by several prelates for several causes is not to be restored to communion although he wishes to make satisfaction concerning one cause; and, if absolution is obtained while the other causes are suppressed, the absolution is not valid.

The same, to C., Cardinal Priest of Saint Lawrence in Lucina, Legate of the Apostolic See.

Of the office (And below: [cf. c. 38, On Election, I. 6.]) Lastly you asked whether he who for several offenses has been bound by the bond of excommunication by several prelates having jurisdiction over him, and wishes to make satisfaction to one of the prelates concerning only one offense, is to be absolved by him concerning that for which he wishes to make satisfaction to him, and, although he has not made satisfaction concerning another, can be announced to the other as absolved. But because concerning this there are different opinions of different scholars, we, wishing at present to prejudice no one,

Respond to you concerning this article only that an absolution surreptitiously obtained does not profit one who suppresses the truth, and one who understands the truth ought not to grant an absolution of this kind.

> Excommunicatus a pluribus praelatis ab plures causas non est communioni restituendus, licet de una causa velit satisfacere, et, si impetratur absolutio tacitis aliis causis, non valet absolutio.
>
> Idem C. sancti Laurentii in Lucina Presbytero cardinali apostolicae sedis Legato.
>
> Officii (Et infra: [cf. c. 38. de elect. I. 6.]) Postremo quaesivisti, utrum is, qui propter plures excessus a pluribus praelatis, ius in ipsum habentibus, excommunicationis est vinculo innodatus, et uni praelatorum de uno tantum satisfacere vult excessu, ab eo sit absolvendus, de quo satisfacere vult eidem, et, quum de alio non satisfecerit, alii absolutus valeat nunciari. Quia vero super hoc inter scholasticos diversae sunt sententiae diversorum: nos ad praesens, nulli praeiudicare volentes, id solummodo tibi Super hoc articulo respondemus, quod supprimenti veritatem absolutio subrepta non prodest, et veritatem intelligens absolutionem huiusmodi exhibere non debet.

Chapter XLIII

Latin source headnote: The word of God can lawfully be preached to excommunicated and interdicted persons. This is the first point. And during a general interdict baptism and anointing with chrism on the forehead, and penance for the dying, can be granted. This is the second point.

The same, to the Bishop of Ferrara.

You seek to be instructed by our response whether, when the citizens of Ferrara are bound by sentences of excommunication and interdict, it is lawful for you once a week or a month to convoke men and women at some church, to whom you might preach the word of God and induce them to correction. Concerning this we respond to your fraternity in this manner: you will be able to do this without scruple of conscience when you see it to be expedient, provided that no divine office is celebrated for them contrary to the form of the interdict. Moreover, you asked whether, since the city of Ferrara is subjected to interdict and excommunication, and therefore all ecclesiastical sacraments except the baptism of infants and the penances of the dying are interdicted there, it is lawful for you to sign baptized children upon their foreheads. Concerning this we respond to you in this manner: just as children can be baptized, so also those baptized can by you be anointed upon their foreheads with sacred chrism for confirmation.

> Excommunicatis et interdictis praedicari potest licite verbum Dei. Hoc primo. Et tempore generalis interdicti concedi potest baptismus et chrismatio in fronte, et poenitentia morientium. H. d. secundo.
>
> Idem Ferrariensi Episcopo.
>
> Responso nostro postulas edoceri, an, quum Ferrarienses cives excommunicationis et interdicti sententiis sint ligati, liceat tibi viros et mulieres semel in hebdomada vel in mense apud aliquam ecclesiam convocare, quibus praedices verbum Dei, et eosdem ad correctionem inducas. Super quo fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod sine scrupulo conscientiae hoc facere poteris, quum videris expedire, dummodo contra formam interdicti nullum eis divinum officium celebretur. Praeterea quaesivisti, quum Ferrariensis civitas sit interdicto et excommunicationi supposita, et ideo sint ibidem, praeter baptisma parvulorum et poenitentias morientium, universa sacramenta ecclesiastica interdicta, an liceat tibi baptizatos pueros in frontibus consignare. Super quo tibi taliter respondemus, quod, sicut baptizari possunt pueri, sic et baptizati ad confirmationem in frontibus a te possunt sacro chrismate deliniri.

Chapter XLIV

Latin source headnote: If a spouse knows for certain an impediment to the marriage, he ought not to render the debt, but rather to suffer excommunication; but if he believes this from a probable and discerning cause, he can render the debt but not exact it; but if from a slight and rash cause, having put aside his conscience, he can render and exact it.

The same.

Responding briefly to your inquiry, we believe a distinction must be made whether one of the spouses knows for certain an impediment to the marriage on account of which he cannot exercise carnal commerce without mortal sin, although he cannot prove it before the church, or does not know an impediment of this kind for certain but believes it. In the first case, therefore, he ought rather humbly to sustain a sentence of excommunication than to commit mortal sin through carnal commerce. But in the second case indeed we distinguish whether he has a conscience of this kind from slight and rash belief or from probable and discerning belief. And indeed, at the counsel of his pastor, after the conscience of slight and rash belief has been cast out, he can lawfully not only render but exact the conjugal debt. But when conscience strikes the mind from probable and discerning belief, although not evident and manifest, he can indeed render the debt, but he ought not to demand it, lest in either respect he commit an offense either against the law of marriage or against the judgment of conscience. You, therefore, are to proceed according to the response written above concerning that article about which you wished to consult us.

> Si coniux scit pro certo impedimentum matrimonii, non debet reddere debitum, sed potius excommunicationem pati; si autem hoc credat ex causa probabili et discreta, potest reddere debitum, non autem exigere; sed si ex levi et temeraria causa, deposita conscientia potest reddere et exigere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Inquisitioni tuae breviter respondentes credimus distinguendum, utrum alter coniugum pro certo sciat impedimentum coniugii, propter quod sine mortali peccato non valeat carnale commercium exercere, quamvis illud apud ecclesiam probare non possit, an impedimentum huiusmodi non sciat pro certo, sed credat. In primo itaque casu debet potius excommunicationis sententiam humiliter sustinere, quam per carnale commercium peccatum operari mortale. In secundo vero casu distinguimus, utrum habeat conscientiam huiusmodi ex credulitate levi et temeraria, an probabili et discreta; et quidem ad sui pastoris consilium, conscientia levis et temerariae credulitatis explosa, licite potest non solum reddere, sed exigere debitum coniugale. Verum quum conscientia pulsat animum ex credulitate probabili et discreta, quamvis non evidenti et manifesta, debitum quidem reddere potest, sed postulare non debet, ne in alterutro vel contra legem coniugii, vel contra iudicium conscientiae committat offensam. Tu ergo iuxta responsionem praescriptam super illo procedas articulo, de quo nos consulere voluisti.

Chapter XLV

Latin source headnote: Through abandonment of habit and tonsure a cleric does not lose clerical privilege before a threefold admonition.

The same.

It sometimes happens [that, while clerics distinguished by the character turn aside to base profits and involve themselves in secular business, they render the clerical name abominable to the hearts of the weak.] Indeed, as we have learned, the noble man the Count of Flanders [and the noble woman Matilda, relict of the late Philip,

Count of Flanders,] intimating it, there are certain persons in your diocese who show nothing of the cleric either in the manner of their tonsure, in the form of their garments, or in the quality of their business, but display themselves as clerics to evade punishment. For when they are dragged before public tribunals concerning offenses that they commit with secular extravagance, having cut their hair so that they can circumvent vengeance, they represent themselves as clerics, alleging with their lips the privilege of the clerical forum, who by their deeds a little before had denied the clerical state, [and while through a sudden tonsure they evade the punishments that, while untonsured, they merited by perverse deeds, the audacity of offending is nourished in them through confidence of impunity; and while they offend with impunity, they are made a scandal to some and an example to others.] But because he who abuses the power permitted to him deserves to lose a privilege, and he who commits against the law vainly invokes the aid of the law, we will and command that such persons, if after being admonished by you a third time they have scorned to amend themselves, be made bereft of that immunity which is known to have been instituted for the protection of clerics and the restraint of lay violence. [You, finally, etc. Given at the Lateran, the fifth day before the Ides of January, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1213.]

> Per dimissionem habitus et tonsurae non perdit clericus ante trinam monitionem privilegium clericale.
>
> Idem.
>
> Contingit interdum, [quod, dum clerici charactere insigniti ad turpia lucra divertunt, et saecularibus se negotiis immiscent, clericale nomen abominabile reddunt cordibus infirmorum.] Sane, sicut accepimus, insinuante nobili viro comite Flandrensi [ac nobili muliere Mathilda relicta quondam Philippi Flandrensis comitis,] in dioecesi tua quidam exsistunt, qui nec in modo tonsurae, nec in vestimentorum forma, nec in qualitate negotiorum de clerico quicquam ostendunt, ad poenae subterfugium se clericos exhibentes. Quum enim super excessibus, quos saeculari luxu committunt, ad publica iudicia pertrahuntur, circumcisis crinibus, ut possint circumvenire vindictam, se pro clericis repraesentant, clericalis fori privilegium labiis allegantes, qui factis paulo ante negaverant clericatum [dumque repentina tonsura poenas eludunt, quas intonsi perversis actibus meruerunt, per impunitatis fiduciam nutritur in eis audacia delinquendi, et, dum impune delinquunt, quibusdam efficiuntur in scandalum et aliis in exemplum.] Verum, quia privilegium meretur amittere qui permissa sibi abutitur potestate, ac frustra legis auxilium invocat qui committit in legem: volumus et mandamus, ut tales, si tertio a te commoniti se ipsos contempserint emendare, illius efficiantur immunitatis extorres, quae pro clericorum tutela et laicorum violentia coercenda dignoscitur instituta. [*Tu denique etc. Dat. Lat. V. Id. Ian. Pont. nostr. Ao. XV. *1213.]

Chapter XLVI

Latin source headnote: He who did not give prior admonition and communicated with him is repelled from denouncing an excommunicated person.

The same.

In the presence of the beloved son (And below:) Nor can the canons object to their dean that he is excommunicated, since he had neither been admonished nor assailed concerning this, nor had they on this account caused him to be avoided; rather, the bishop at table, and the canons even in divine offices, had communicated with him.

> Ab excommunicati denunciatione repellitur qui non praemonuit, et ei communicavit.
>
> Idem.

In praesentia dilecti filii (Et infra:) Nec canonici suo decano excommunicationem possunt obiicere, quum super hoc nec commonitus, nec impetitus fuerit, neque ipsi propter hoc eum duxerint evitandum, sed episcopus in mensa, et canonici communicaverint ei etiam in divinis.

Chapter XLVII

Latin source headnote: He is excommunicated who deceitfully permits a cleric to be struck, since he could prohibit it and did not prohibit it.

The same.

Of how great a presumption and rashness it is to lay violent hands upon rulers of the church, the Lord testifies in the Gospel, who declares that he is afflicted in his ministers, and elsewhere attested that he is crucified again in the prince of the Apostles. This the quality of the penalty also manifestly declares, since the sentence of excommunication strikes offenders in the act itself if they presume to perpetrate violence not only against our brothers and fellow bishops but even against clerics of lesser order. Moreover, lest the presumption of some suppose that only the authors of violence of this kind are to be punished, catholic authority condemns those doing and those consenting to be punished by an equal penalty, interpreting even those who, when they can, fail to oppose a manifest crime as favoring the offenders. [Considering this carefully hitherto, Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, had announced the authors and supporters of the capture and detention of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Salerno to be bound by the bond of excommunication, etc.]

Excommunicatus est dolose permittens clericum percuti, ex quo poterat prohibere, et non prohibuit.

Idem.

Quantae praesumptionis et temeritatis exsistat in rectores ecclesiae manus iniicere violentas, in evangelio Dominus protestatur, qui se in ministeriis suis affligi asserit, et in Apostolorum principe alibi perhibuit se iterum crucifigi. Hoc etiam poenae qualitas manifeste declarat, quum excommunicationis sententia in ipso actu feriat delinquentes, si non solum in fratres et coepiscopos nostros, sed etiam in minoris ordinis clericos violentiam praesumpserint operari. Ne autem solos violentiae huiusmodi auctores aliquorum praesumptio existimet esse puniendos, facientes et consentientes pari poena plectendos catholica condemnat auctoritas, eos etiam delinquentibus favere interpretans, qui, quum possint, manifesto facinori desinunt obviare. [Quod bonae memoriae C. Papa praedecessor noster hactenus diligenter attendens, auctores et fautores captionis et detentionis venerabilis fratris nostri Salernitani archiepiscopi excommunicationis nunciasset vinculo innodatos etc.]

Chapter XLVIII

Latin source headnote: A prelate ought not to excommunicate a subject unless a competent admonition has preceded, and from a manifest and reasonable cause; and the penalty expressed here is imposed upon one acting to the contrary. Likewise, the subject who falsely complains that he was unjustly excommunicated is punished; and it adds what the law is if a prelate, saying that he erred, wishes to absolve the excommunicated person, and the adversary appeals lest he be absolved.

The same, in the general council.

With the sacred council approving, we prohibit anyone from presuming to promulgate a sentence of excommunication against another unless a competent admonition has preceded, with suitable persons present through whom, if need be, the admonition can be proved. But if anyone should presume to the contrary, even if the sentence of excommunication was just, let him know that entrance to the church is interdicted to him for one month, and that he is nevertheless to be punished with another penalty if it shall seem expedient. He is also to take diligent care not to proceed to the excommunication of anyone without a manifest and reasonable cause. But if perhaps he has proceeded to it in such a manner and, when humbly requested, has taken no care to revoke a proceeding of this kind without difficulty, the person aggrieved is to lodge before the superior a complaint concerning the unjust excommunication. If the superior can do so without danger in delay, he is to remit him with his mandate to that excommunicator, to be absolved within a competent term; otherwise, by himself or another, as he shall see to be expedient, having received sufficient security, he is to impart to him the office of absolution. And when it has been established against the excommunicator that the excommunication was unjust, the excommunicator is to be condemned to pay damages to the excommunicated person; nevertheless, otherwise also, if the quality of the fault shall demand it, he is to be punished at the superior's discretion, since it is no slight fault to inflict so great a penalty upon an innocent person, unless perhaps he erred from a probable cause, especially if he is of praiseworthy reputation. But if the complainant has proved nothing reasonable against the sentence of excommunication, he likewise is to be condemned, for the vexation caused by the complaint of unjust excommunication, through a penalty to pay damages, or otherwise according to the superior's discretion, unless perhaps a probable error excuses him also; and he is to be compelled, after security has been received, to make satisfaction concerning that for which he was bound by a just excommunication, or he is to be reduced to the former sentence, to be inviolably observed until worthy satisfaction. But if the judge, recognizing his own error, is prepared to revoke such a sentence, and he for whose sake it had been rendered appeals lest the judge revoke it without satisfaction, he is not to defer to the appeal in this matter unless the error is such that there ought deservedly to be doubt concerning it; and then, having received sufficient security that before him to whom the appeal has been made, or before one delegated by him, he will obey the law, he is to absolve the excommunicated person. And thus he will by no means be subject to the penalty written above, taking every care that he not, with perverse will and to another's prejudice, falsely assert an error, if he wishes to escape the vengeance of canonical severity.

> Praelatus excommunicare non debet subditum, nisi competente monitione praemissa, et ex causa manifesta et rationabili; et contra facienti imponitur poena hic expressa. Item punitur subditus, qui falso conqueritur, se excommunicatum iniuste, et subiicit, quid iuris, si praelatus, dicens se errasse, vult excommunicatum absolvere, et adversarius appellat, ne absolvatur.
>
> Idem in concilio generali. Sacro approbante concilio prohibemus, ne quis in aliquem excommunicationis sententiam, nisi competenti admonitione praemissa, et personis praesentibus idoneis, per quas, si necesse fuerit, possit probari monitio, promulgare praesumat. Quod si contra praesumpserint etiamsi iusta fuerit excommunicationis sententia, ingressum ecclesiae per mensem unum sibi noverit interdictum, alia nihilominus poena mulctandus, si visum fuerit expedire. Caveat etiam diligenter, ne ad excommunicationem cuiusquam absque manifesta et rationabili causa procedat. Ad quam si taliter forte processerit, et requisitus humiliter processum huiusmodi non curaverit absque gravamine revocare, gravatus apud superiorem deponat de iniusta excommunicatione querelam, qui, si absque periculo morae potest, ad excommunicatorem illum cum suo mandato remittat, infra competentem terminum absolvendum; alioquin ipse per se, vel per alium, prout viderit expedire, sufficienti cautione recepta munus ei absolutionis impendat. Quumque adversus excommunicatorem de iniusta excommunicatione constiterit, excommunicator condemnetur ad interesse excommunicato; alias nihilominus, si culpae qualitas postulaverit, superioris arbitrio puniendus, quum non levis sit culpa tantam infligere poenam insonti, nisi forsitan erraverit ex causa probabili, maxime si laudabilis opinionis exsistat. Verum, si contra excommunicationis sententiam nihil rationabile fuerit a conquerente probatum, idem et super iniusta excommunicationis molestia per poenam ad interesse, vel alias secundum superioris arbitrium condemnetur nisi forsan et ipsum probabilis error excuset; et super eo, pro quo fuerit iusta excommunicatione ligatus, per cautionem receptam satisfacere compellatur, vel in pristinam reducatur sententiam usque ad satisfactionem condignam inviolabiliter observandam. Si vero iudex, suum recognoscens errorem, paratus sit talem revocare sententiam, et is, pro quo lata fuerat, ne absque satisfactione revocet illam, appellet: appellationi non deferat in hac parte, nisi talis sit error, de quo merito debeat dubitari; et tunc, sufficienti cautione recepta, quod coram eo, ad quem appellatum exstiterit, vel delegato ab ipso iuri parebit, excommunicatum absolvat. Sicque poenae praescriptae minime subiacebit, cavens omnino, ne voluntate perversa in alterius praeiudicium mentiatur errorem, si districtionis canonicae vult effugere ultionem.

Chapter XLIX

Latin source headnote: He excommunicates heretics and all violators of ecclesiastical liberty.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Bologna.

Let your fraternity know that we [recently], in the basilica of the prince of the Apostles, in the presence of our dearest son in Christ Frederick, illustrious Emperor of the Romans, ever august [and King of Sicily], during the celebration of Masses, after we placed the diadem of the empire upon his head, by the counsel of our brothers and with candles lighted, Excommunicate on behalf of almighty God, and also by the authority of the [blessed] Apostles Peter and Paul and our own, all heretics of either sex, by whatever name they are designated, and their supporters, receivers, and defenders, and also those who henceforth cause issued statutes and customs, or rather abuses, introduced against the liberty of the church, to be observed, and do not cause them to be removed from their statute books within two months after the publication of a sentence of this kind. Likewise we excommunicate the makers and writers of those statutes, and also the magistrates, consuls, rectors, and councillors of places where statutes and customs of this kind shall henceforth have been issued or observed, as well as those who have presumed to judge according to them or to write the judgments in public form. [Given at the Lateran, the second day before the Nones of January, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1221.]

Excommunicat haereticos et quoscunque violatores ecclesiasticae libertatis.

Honorius III. Episcopo Bononiensi. Noverit fraternitas tua, quod nos [nuper] *in basilica principis Apostolorum, praesente carissimo in Christo filio nostro Frederico illustri Romanorum imperatore semper Augusto *[et rege Siciliae], in celebratione missarum, postquam capiti eius imposuimus imperii diadema, de consilio fratrum nostrorum accensis candelis Excommunicamus ex parte Dei omnipotentis, auctoritate quoque [beatorum] Apostolorum Petri et Pauli et nostra, omnes haereticos utriusque sexus, quocunque nomine censeantur, et fautores et receptatores et defensores eorum, nec non et qui de cetero servari fecerint statuta edita et consuetudines vel potius abusiones, introductas contra ecclesiae libertatem, et nisi ea, de capitularibus suis infra duos menses post huiusmodi publicationem sententiae fecerint amoveri. Item excommunicamus statutarios et scriptores statutorum ipsorum, nec non potestates, consules, rectores et consiliarios locorum, ubi de cetero huiusmodi statuta et consuetudines editae fuerint vel servatae, nec non et illos, qui secundum ea praesumpserint iudicare, vel in publicam formam scribere iudicata. [Dat. Lat. II. Non. Ian. Pont. Nostr. Ao. V. 1221.]

Chapter L

Latin source headnote: Brothers of the Hospital of Jerusalem excommunicated for laying hands upon a cleric or fellow brother can be absolved by their prior, unless the offense was difficult and enormous.

The same, to the Master and Brothers of the Hospital of Jerusalem.

It is provided by a canonical constitution that monks and canons regular, in whatever manner they have struck one another in the cloister, are not to be sent to the Apostolic See, but are to be subjected to discipline according to the discretion and providence of their abbot. But if the discretion of the abbot does not suffice for their correction, the providence of the diocesan bishop is to be applied, unless the offense was difficult and enormous, on account of which recourse ought deservedly to be had to the Roman Church. We therefore, inclining to your supplications, have deemed that a statute of this kind is to be extended to you, establishing by the authority aforesaid that in such a case, unless greater providence is to be required, the benefit of absolution is to be bestowed upon your brothers through your prior, who, as we have heard, ought to be a priest.

> Fratres hospitalis Hierosolymitani, excommunicati pro iniectione manuum in clericum seu confratrem, absolvi possunt per eorum priorem, nisi excessus fuerit difficilis et enormis.
>
> Idem Magistro et Fratribus hospitalis Hierosolymitani. Canonica constitutione cavetur, quod monachi et canonici regulares, quocunque modo se in claustro percusserint, non sunt ad apostolicam sedem mittendi, sed secundum discretionem et providentiam sui abbatis disciplinae subdantur. Quodsi abbatis discretio ad eorum correctionem non sufficiat providentia est dioecesani episcopi adhibenda, nisi excessus difficilis fuerit et enormis, propter quem merito ad ecclesiam Romanam sit recursus habendus. Nos ergo, vestris supplicationibus inclinati, ad vos statutum huiusmodi duximus extendendum, auctoritate praedicta statuentes, ut in tali casu, nisi maioris sit providentia requirenda, per priorem vestrum, qui, sicut audivimus, presbyter esse debet, fratribus vestris absolutionis beneficium impendatur.

Chapter LI

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated or suspended ought not to be absolved unless an oath has first been furnished; if, however, the oath cannot be obtained without scandal, absolution will be able to be made through a promise by hand.

The same, to the Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Praxedes, Legate of the Apostolic See.

Concerning the fact that Greek monks and hermits, bound by a sentence of suspension and excommunication on account of disobedience, are unwilling to return to the mandate of the church except through a promise by hand, we have deemed that this is to be answered to you: that if they can in no way be induced to furnish an oath according to the form of the church, on this occasion you will be able to receive them with a promise by hand, since sometimes, the qualities of places and times having been considered, something must be taken away from severity.

> Excommunicatus vel suspensus absolvi non debet, nisi prius iuramento praestito; si tamen sine scandalo iuramentum haberi non potest, poterit fieri absolutio per manualem promissionem.
>
> Idem tituli sanctae Praxedis Presbytero cardinali apostolicae sedis Legato.
>
> Super eo, quod monachi Graeci et Eremitae, propter inobedientiam sententia suspensionis et excommunicationis ligati, nolunt ad mandatum ecclesiae nisi per manualem promissionem redire, hoc tibi duximus respondendum, quod, si nullatenus possunt induci ad praestandum iuxta formam ecclesiae iuramentum, ipsos hac vice cum promissione poteris recipere manuali, quum interdum, consideratis locorum et temporum qualitatibus severitati sit aliquid detrahendum.

Chapter LII

Latin source headnote: When the force of a sentence is doubted, someone can be absolved as a precaution after furnishing an oath.

The same, to the Deans of Bourges and Chartres and the Subdeacon of Arles.

Our venerable brother the Bishop of Le Mans and the beloved son H., canon of Tours, proctor of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Tours, having been constituted in our presence concerning a certain sentence of suspension promulgated against the aforesaid bishop by that archbishop, we, having heard and understood those things that were proposed by them concerning this before us, because the parties disagreed upon the fact in such a manner that it could not be fully established, by grace relaxed the sentence itself as a precaution, the bishop himself in the presence of the said proctor having furnished a corporal oath that he would obey the mandates that the same archbishop should make to him on account of this, if it should be established that the bishop himself had been culpable in that for which the aforesaid sentence was rendered.

Quum de viribus sententiae dubitatur, potest quis absolvi ad cautelam iuramento praestito.

Idem Bituricensi et Carnotensi Decanis et Subdiacono Arelatensi. Venerabili fratre nostro Cenomanensi episcopo et dilecto filio H. canonico Turonensi, procuratore venerabilis fratris nostri Turonensis archiepiscopi, in nostra praesentia constitutis pro quadam suspensionis sententia, in praefatum episcopum ab eodem archiepiscopo promulgata, nos, auditis et intellectis quae super hoc fuerunt ab eis proposita coram nobis, quia partes dissentiebant in facto ita, quod de illo plene constare non potuit, sententiam ipsam de gratia relaxavimus ad cautelam, ipso episcopo in praesentia dicti procuratoris praestante corporaliter iuramentum, quod parebit mandatis, quae idem archiepiscopus sibi propter hoc fecerit, si constiterit, ipsum episcopum in eo, pro quo fuit lata praedicta sententia, culpabilem exstitisse.

Chapter LIII

Latin source headnote: Officials of places in which there are statutes against ecclesiastical liberty are excommunicated unless they cause them to be erased; and the makers of the statutes are deprived of fiefs of the church.

The same, to the Bishop of Siena.

We have received the grave complaint of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Pisa, that A., B., and certain other citizens of Pisa, deputed by the magistrate and the people to issue the statutes of the city, as though they savor perversely, have presumed to issue such things in derogation of the Apostolic See and subversion of ecclesiastical liberty: that if any cleric or layman obtains apostolic letters to an ecclesiastical judge against any layman of the district of Pisa, he is to be condemned in one thousand solidi unless he has renounced such letters; nor are the revenues of his possessions to be rendered to him, nor his fields cultivated, but rather they are to be subjected to the ban of the magistrate, which will receive no one for the government of the city unless he has sworn that he will observe this; and this and every other magistrate who shall be in office for the time being will cause his successors to swear to the things stated above. They established, moreover, that the clerics at their own expense are to cause the castle of Ripafracta to be guarded. But if they refuse, the magistrate is to be bound to proceed against them according to what the council of the city shall prescribe, all of which the person who now presides over the aforesaid city confirmed by oath that he would firmly observe. Therefore, since the whole city of Pisa, which otherwise has cast aside the fear of God for so long that it is presumed now infected with error or close to infection, and since there is no doubt that both the makers of the statutes and that magistrate have on this account incurred a sentence of excommunication in addition to the mark of infamy, we command your fraternity to take care to promulgate a sentence of excommunication against the councillors and officials of that city unless they cause the statutes themselves to be erased from their statute books, and suitable security to be given, as the matter requires, that they ought not to attempt similar things henceforth. Furthermore, since those makers of the statutes are said to hold many things from ecclesiastical goods in fief, take care nevertheless to announce them deprived of fiefs of this kind.

> Excommunicantur officiales locorum, in quibus sunt statuta contra ecclesiasticam libertatem, nisi ea deleri fecerint; et statutarii feudis ecclesiae sunt privati. Idem Episcopo Senensi. Gravem venerabilis fratris nostri Pisani archiepiscopi recepimus quaestionem, quod A. B. et quidam alii cives Pisani, deputati a potestate ac populo ad statuta civitatis edenda, tanquam perverse sapiant, talia in derogationem apostolicae sedis et subversionem ecclesiasticae libertatis edere praesumpserunt, quod, si quis clericus vel laicus contra quemcunque laicum Pisani districtus ad iudicem ecclesiasticum literas apostolicas impetraverit, in mille solidis, nisi huiusmodi renunciaverit literis, condemnetur, nec reditus possessionum suarum reddantur eidem, vel agri excolantur illius, sed banno potius subiaceant potestatis, quae nullum ad regimen civitatis suscipiet, nisi hoc se iuraverit servaturum; et haec et quaelibet alia potestas, quae pro tempore fuerit, successores suos iurare faciet supra dicta. Statuerunt illi praeterea, ut clerici suis sumptibus castrum Ripae fractae faciant custodiri. Quod si renuerint, contra eos potestas procedere teneatur, iuxta quod dictaverit consilium civitatis, quae omnia is, qui nunc praeest civitati praedictae, observaturum se firmiter iureiurando firmavit. Ideoque, quum tota civitas Pisana, quae alias tamdiu Dei timorem abiecit, quod infecta iam errore vel infectioni proxima praesumatur, et tam statutarios quam potestatem eandem non sit dubium propter hoc excommunicationis sententiam praeter notam infamiae incurrisse: fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus in consiliarios et officiales civitatis ipsius, nisi statuta ipsa de capitularibus suis deleri fecerint, et idonee, sicut exigit res, caveri, quod similia de cetero non debeant attentare, excommunicationis sententiam promulgare procures. Ceterum, quum iidem statutarii multa de bonis ecclesiasticis tenere dicantur in feudum, ipsos fore nihilominus privatos feudis huiusmodi nunciare procures.

Chapter LIV

Latin source headnote: One speaking with an excommunicated person concerning matters tending to the salvation of the soul is not excommunicated, even if he interposes other words. - § 1. Preachers, especially those who cannot otherwise be sustained, can receive alms from excommunicated persons and persons detaining the goods of others. This is what it says. - § 2. It states certain cases in which one who strikes a cleric is not excommunicated.

Gregory IX.

Since wrongful acts are distinguished by will and purpose, he does not incur the sentence of excommunication who participates in conversation with an excommunicated person in those matters that pertain to absolution or otherwise to the salvation of the soul, although he even incidentally interposes other words so that he may profit more with him. § 1. Preachers also, who among excommunicated persons or other detainers of others' property in preachings and confessions act, as it were, the cause or care of those to whom the property itself is known to pertain, can lawfully receive alms from them, especially if they cannot otherwise have sustenance in that place. § 2. But if, by reason of an office that they hold in a church, or even if other senior clerics out of zeal of devotion, have perhaps lightly struck, for the sake of correction, boys or adolescents constituted in minor orders who disturb divine office, and those who under color of prelacy or a master's authority have struck subjects and scholars, they do not incur the sentence of excommunication. This is also to be said of those who have deemed that some persons of their household or relatives of inferior degrees are to be corrected in a similar manner so that they may be restrained from their insolences and be instructed in knowledge and good morals.

> Alloquens excommunicatum in tendentibus ad salutem animae, etiamsi alia verba interponat, excommunicatus non est. - § 1. Praedicatores, praesertim qui alias sustentari non possunt, ab excommunicatis et detinentibus bona aliena eleemosynam recipere possunt. Hoc dic. - § 2. Ponit quosdam casus, in quibus percutiens clericum excommunicatus non est.
>
> Gregorius IX. Quum voluntate ac proposito maleficia distinguantur, excommunicationis sententiam non incurrit qui excommunicato in his, quae ad absolutionem vel alias ad salutem animae pertinent, in locutione participat, licet etiam alia verba incidenter, ut apud eum magis proficiat, interponat. § 1. Praedicatores quoque, qui penes excommunicatos vel alios alienarum rerum detentores in praedicationibus et confessionibus quasi gerunt causam vel curam eorum, ad quos res ipsae spectare noscuntur, eleemosynas licite possunt ab illis recipere, praesertim si alias non valeant in illo loco sustentationem habere. § 2. Si qui vero ratione officii, quod in ecclesia obtinent, aut etiam alii clerici seniores zelo devotionis pueros vel adolescentes, in minoribus ordinibus constitutos, turbantes divinum officium, et hi, qui obtentu praelationis vel magisterii subditos et scholares correctionis causa leviter forte percusserint, excommunicationis sententiam non incurrunt. Quod et de his dicendum est, qui aliquos de familia sua vel propinquos inferiorum graduum simili modo, ut cohibeantur a suis insolentiis, et scientia bonisque moribus informentur, duxerint corrigendos.

Chapter LV

Latin source headnote: One communicating with an excommunicated person in a damnable crime falls under major excommunication.

The same, to the Bishop of Astorga.

If the public concubines of clerics are marked by the severity of ecclesiastical censure, there is no doubt that those same concubinary clerics who, after the sentence has been rendered, communicate in the same crime with the criminals are enveloped by a sentence of major excommunication. [Aqua, etc. (cf. c. 9, On the Consecration of a Church, III. 40.) Given at the Lateran, the twelfth day before the Kalends of June, in the seventh year of our pontificate, 1233.]

> Communicans excommunicato in crimine damnabili incidit in excommunicationem maiorem.
>
> Idem Astoricensi Episcopo.
>
> Si concubinae publicae clericorum ecclesiasticae censurae districtione notentur, eosdem concubinarios non est dubium sententia maioris excommunicationis involvi, qui post latam sententiam communicant in eodem crimine criminosis. [Aqua etc. (*cf. c. *9. de cons. eccl. III. 40.) Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. VII. 1233.]

Chapter LVI

Latin source headnote: One under minor excommunication can absolve someone from excommunication.

The same.

Power having been conferred upon two persons that, if they fall into minor excommunication, they may absolve each other from it, the power does not expire when each is bound by a bond of excommunication of this kind.

> Excommunicatus minori potest ab excommunicatione aliquem absolvere.
>
> Idem.
>
> Duobus collata potestas, ut a minori excommunicatione, si in ipsam inciderint, invicem se absolvant, utroque ligato vinculo excommunicationis huiusmodi, non exspirat.

Chapter LVII

Latin source headnote: Ministers of churches are permitted to celebrate once a week during an interdict, when those conditions stated in the text concur.

The same.

We permit ministers of churches once a week during an interdict, without bells being rung, in a subdued voice, with the doors closed, and with excommunicated and interdicted persons excluded, to celebrate the solemnities of Masses for the purpose of consecrating the body of the Lord, which is not denied to those dying in penance.

> Permittitur ministris ecclesiarum semel in hebdomada celebrare tempore interdicti, concurrentibus his, quae exprimuntur in textu.
>
> Idem.
>
> Permittimus ecclesiarum ministris semel in hebdomada tempore interdicti, non pulsatis campanis, voce submissa, ianuis clausis, excommunicatis et interdictis exclusis, missarum solennia celebrare causa conficiendi corpus Domini, quod decedentibus in poenitentia non negatur.

Chapter LVIII

Latin source headnote: One making satisfaction to a cleric whom he beat cannot on this account be absolved by the bishop, except in the certain cases expressed here.

The same.

Although one who incurs the canon of a sentence already pronounced on account of a violent laying-on of hands makes satisfaction according to his own means to those upon whom he inflicted injuries, nevertheless he cannot in any other way obtain the benefit of absolution than through the Apostolic See or its legate, unless he is hindered from being able to approach the Roman Pontiff by the imminence of the moment of death, sickness, enmity, or poverty, by boyish or old age, by the frailty of sex or another incapacity of the body, or by any canonical impediment whatever, or unless by a benefit of law he is excused from labor of this kind. Moreover, it has been customary to enjoin certain of the aforesaid persons—namely those who labor under a temporal impediment, except boys—under the obligation of an oath that they are bound to furnish according to the form of the church, that, when the impediment ceases, they are to approach the Apostolic See, humbly to receive its mandate.

> Satisfaciens clerico, quem verberavit, non potest propter hoc ab episcopo absolvi, nisi in certis casibus hic expressis.
>
> Idem.
>
> Quamvis incidens in canonem latae sententiae propter violentam manuum iniectionem iuxta proprias facultates eis satisfaciat, quibus iniurias irrogavit: non tamen taliter, quam per sedem apostolicam vel eius legatum absolutionis potest beneficium obtinere, nisi imminente mortis articulo, infirmitate, inimicitia aut inopia, puerili vel senili aetate, fragilitate sexus seu alia corporis impotentia, sive quolibet impedimento canonico retrahatur, quo minus Romanum Pontificem possit adire, vel nisi iuris beneficio a labore huiusmodi excusetur. Ceterum quibusdam praedictorum, videlicet qui temporali impedimento laborant, exceptis pueris, sub debito iuramenti, quod secundum ecclesiae formam praestare tenentur, consuevit iniungi, ut impedimento cessante ad apostolicam sedem accedant, mandatum ipsius humiliter suscepturi.

Chapter LIX

Latin source headnote: An excommunication rendered without qualification is understood as major. This is what it says, and it is a notable text and is alleged daily.

The same.

If it happens that anyone is excommunicated by his judge under this form of words, "I excommunicate that man," or a similar one, it is to be said that he is bound not only by minor excommunication, which excludes from reception of the sacraments, but also by major excommunication, which separates from the communion of the faithful.

> Excommunicatio simpliciter lata intelligitur de maiori. H. d. et est textus notabilis, et quotidie allegatur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Si quem sub hac forma verborum: "Illum excommunico," vel simili, a iudice suo excommunicari contingat, dicendum est, eum non tantum minori, quae a perceptione sacramentorum, sed etiam maiori excommunicatione, quae a communione fidelium separat, esse ligatum.

Chapter LX

Latin source headnote: A benefit granted by reason of minority of age, after it has begun to have effect, is not extinguished although the minor has reached majority of age.

The same.

To boys who have incurred the canon of the sentence promulgated, whether they seek to be absolved before or after puberty, the diocesan bishop can impart the benefit of absolution, since on account of the defect of the age at which the offense was committed rigor is to be tempered with gentleness.

> Beneficium, indultum ratione minoris aetatis, postquam coepit habere locum, non exstinguitur, licet minor pervenerit ad maiorem aetatem.
>
> Idem.
>
> Pueris, qui in canonem inciderunt sententiae promulgatae, sive ante sive post pubertatem postulent, se absolvi, potest dioecesanus episcopus absolutionis beneficium impertiri, quum propter defectum aetatis, in qua fuit commissus excessus, rigor sit mansuetudine temperandus.

Title XL: On the Meaning of Words

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: "Newly broken land" is land newly brought under cultivation.

Jerome, on Hosea.

"Renew the newly broken land." Newly broken land is a field now cut for the first time.

DE VERBORUM SIGNIFICATIONE.

Novale est terra noviter ad culturam redacta.

Hieronymus super Osee.

"Innovate novale." Novale est ager nunc primum praecisus.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Under the appellation of father, in a broad signification, all descendants are included.

The same, on Daniel.

"For King Nebuchadnezzar, your father," that is, great-grandfather, according to the usage of Scripture, which calls grandfathers and those thereafter fathers.

Appellatione patris veniunt in lata significatione omnes descendentes.

Idem super Danielem.

"Nam et rex Nabuchodonosor, pater tuus," id est, proavus more scripturae, quae avos et deinceps patres appellat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: He who immediately died is not said to have been born.

The same, in Proverbs.

"For I also was an only-begotten son before my mother." Why does he call himself only-begotten before his mother, when Scripture testifies that a uterine brother had preceded him, unless because that brother, having immediately been born without a name, departed from life as though he had never existed?

Non dicitur natus qui statim decessit.

Idem in Parabolis.

"Nam et ego unigenitus fui coram matre mea." Quare unigenitum se coram matre nominat, quem fratrem uterinum praecessisse scriptura testatur, nisi quia ille mox, natus sine nomine, quasi nunquam esset, de vita decessit?

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The expression "before" does not always imply.

The same, on Matthew.

From what is said, "before they came together," it does not follow that they afterward came together; rather, Scripture shows that it had not happened.

> Dictio "antequam" non semper implicat.
>
> Idem super Matthaeum.
>
> Quod dicitur: "antequam convenirent," non sequitur, ut postea convenirent; sed scriptura quod factum non sit ostendit.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: He who is born first is called the firstborn, even if no one follows him.

The same, in the same work.

"Joseph did not know Mary until she bore her firstborn son." From this passage certain persons most perversely suspect that Mary had other sons also, saying that one is not called firstborn unless he also has brothers, since this is the usage of the divine Scriptures: that they call firstborn not him whom brothers follow, but him who was born first.

> Primogenitus dicitur qui primo nascitur, etiamsi nullus sequatur eum.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> "Ioseph non cognovit Mariam, donec peperit filium suum primogenitum." Ex hoc loco quidam perversissime suspicantur, et alios filios Mariam habuisse, dicentes, primogenitum non dici, nisi qui habeat et fratres, quum hic mos divinarum scripturarum sit, ut primogenitum non eum vocent, quem fratres sequuntur, sed eum, qui primo natus fuit.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Words are to be understood not according to how they sound, but according to the mind of the speaker.

Hilary.

The understanding of sayings is to be taken from the causes for speaking, because the thing is not subject to the expression, but the expression to the thing.

> Verba sunt intelligenda non secundum quod sonant, sed secundum mentem proferentis.
>
> Hilarius.
>
> Intelligentia dictorum ex causis est assumenda dicendi, quia non sermoni res, sed rei est sermo subiectus.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A fact is not vitiated when it is narrated in a different manner, where the same thing is concluded in substance.

Augustine, on Matthew.

Diversity of narration presents no obstacle where the same things are said, especially since each of the evangelists believes himself to speak in that order in which God willed.

> Non vitietur factum, vario modo narratum, ubi idem in substantia concluditur.
>
> Augustinus super Matthaeum.
>
> Nihil obstat narrandi diversitas, ubi eadem dicuntur, maxime quum quisque evangelistarum eo ordine credat se dicere, quo Deus voluit.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: We ought to consider the sense, not the words.

Gregory.

Therefore, if perhaps it should happen that you receive my lengthy epistle for translation, I ask that not word be translated from word, but sense from sense, because very often, while the propriety of words is attended to, the sense of the truth is lost.

> Sensum, non verba considerare debemus.
>
> Gregorius.
>
> Propterea, si prolixam epistolam meam ad interpretandum accipere te fortasse contigerit, rogo, non verbum ex verbo, sed sensum ex sensu transferri, quia plerumque, dum proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: It states who properly is a provost.

Isidore.

Although all who preside are rightly called persons placed over others, usage nevertheless has obtained that those who bear a certain care of priority over others are called provosts.

> Dicit, quis proprie sit praepositus.
>
> Isidorus.
>
> Quamvis omnes, qui praesunt, praepositi rite vocentur, usus tamen obtinuit, eos vocari praepositos, qui quandam prioratus curam super alios gerunt.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: It does not admit a fitting summation.

The same, in the Book of Etymologies.

The forum is the place for conducting lawsuits, so called from speaking, or from King Phoroneus, who first gave law to the Greeks. This place is also called "before the rostra," from the fact that, when the ships of the Carthaginians had been captured in the Punic War, the beaks were taken away and affixed in the Roman Forum so that they might be the emblem of this victory. The forum, moreover, consists of a cause, a law, and a judgment. A cause is so called from the event from which it comes. For it is the matter and origin of a business, not yet laid open by the examination of discussion; while it is proposed, it is a cause; while it is discussed, it is a judgment [is]; while it is concluded, it is justice. Judgment, moreover, is called as it were a declaration of law, and justice as it were the standing of law. Judgment, moreover, was formerly called inquiry, whence we call both the originators of judgments and those placed over them quaestors or inquirers. A business [however] signifies many things: sometimes the doing of some thing, the contrary of which is leisure; sometimes the action of a cause, which is the quarrel of a lawsuit. And it is called "business" as though "not leisure," that is, without leisure. A business, moreover, is spoken of in causes, but trading in commerce, where something is given that greater things may be gained. A quarrel is so called as though "a chattering about law," because those who plead a cause contend at law. A lawsuit, moreover, first took its name from a dispute over a boundary, concerning which Virgil says: "A boundary had been placed so that it might settle the dispute concerning the fields." A cause consists either of argument or of proof. An argument never gives proof by witnesses, never by documents, but finds the truth by investigation alone, whence also "argument" is so called as though "acutely found." Proof, however, consists of witnesses and the faith of documents. In every business also these persons are sought: judge, accuser, defendant, and three witnesses. A judge is so called as though one declaring the law to the people, or because he decides according to law. To decide according to law, however, is to judge justly. Therefore, he is not a judge if justice is not in him. The accuser is so called as though a causator, because he calls to a cause the one whom he accuses. The defendant is named from the thing that is sought, because, although he is not conscious of a crime, he is nevertheless called defendant as long as he is summoned into judgment concerning some thing. In antiquity witnesses were called "survivors" because they were brought forth concerning the standing of the cause; now, with part of the name removed, they are called witnesses. Witnesses, however, are considered by condition, nature, and life. By condition: whether free, not a slave. For a slave often suppresses the testimony of the truth through fear of his master. By nature: whether a man, not a woman. For a woman always produces variable and mutable testimony. By life: whether innocent and upright in conduct. For if good life is lacking, he will lack credibility. For justice cannot have commerce with a criminal man. There are [however] two kinds of witnesses: either by stating what they saw, or by bringing forth what they heard. In two ways, moreover, witnesses offend: when they either utter false things or cover true things with silence.

> Non recipit congruam summationem.
>
> Idem in libro Etymologiarum.
>
> Forus est exercendarum litium locus, a fando dictus, sive a Foroneo rege, qui primus Graecis legem dedit. Qui locus et prorostra vocatur ab eo, quod ex bello Punico captis navibus Carthaginensium rostra ablata sunt, et in foro Romano praefixa, ut essent huius insigne victoriae. Constat autem forus causa, lege et iudicio. Causa a casu, quo venit, dicitur. Est enim materia et origo negotii, necdum discussionis examine patefacta, quae, dum proponitur, causa est; dum discutitur, iudicium [est]; dum finitur, iustitia. Vocatur autem iudicium quasi iurisdictio, et iustitia quasi iuris status. Iudicium autem prius inquisitio vocabatur, unde et auctores iudiciorum et praepositos quaestores vel quaesitores vocamus. Negotium [autem] multa significat, modo actum alicuius rei, cuius contrarium est otium, modo actionem causae, quod est iurgium litis, et dictum est negotium quasi nec otium, id est sine otio. Negotium autem in causis, negotiatio in commerciis dicitur, ubi aliquid datur, ut maiora lucrentur. Iurgium dicitur quasi iuris garrium, eo, quod hi, qui causam dicunt, iure disceptant. Lis autem a contentione limitis prius nomen sumpsit, de qua Virgilius. "Limes erat positus, litem ut discerneret agris." Causa aut argumento, aut probatione constat. Argumentum nunquam testibus, nunquam tabulis dat probationem, sed sola investigatione invenit veritatem, unde et dictum est argumentum, quasi argute inventum. Probatio autem testibus et fide tabularum constat. In omni quoque negotio hae personae quaeruntur: iudex, accusator, reus et tres testes. Iudex dictus quasi ius dicens populo, sive quod iure disceptet. Iure autem disceptare est iuste iudicare. Non est ergo iudex, si non est in eo iustitia. Accusator vocatus est quasi causator, quia ad causam vocat eum, quem appellat. Reus a re, quae petitur, nuncupatur, quia, quamvis > conscius sceleris non sit, reus tamen dicitur, quamdiu in iudicium pro re aliqua petitur. Testes antiquitus superstites dicebantur eo, quod super causae statu proferebantur; nunc parte ablata nominis testes vocantur. Testes autem considerantur conditione, natura et vita. Conditione, si liber, non servus. Nam saepe servus metu dominantis testimonium supprimit veritatis. Natura, si vir, non femina. Nam varium et mutabile testimonium semper femina producit. Vita, si innocens et integer actu. Nam, si vita bona defuerit, fide carebit. Non enim potest iustitia cum scelerato homine habere commercium. Duo sunt [autem] genera testium, aut dicendo id, quod viderunt, aut proferendo id, quod audierunt. Duobus autem modis testes delinquunt, quum aut falsa promunt, aut vera silentio tegunt.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: It states what a pact is and whence it is so called.

The same.

A pact is said to be a writing agreed between parties out of peace, approved by laws and customs; [and] "pact" is so called as though made out of peace.

> Dicit, quid sit pactum, et unde dicatur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Pactum dicitur inter partes ex pace conveniens scriptura, legibus ac moribus comprobata: [et] dictum pactum, quasi ex pace factum.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Here Isidore gives the etymology of right as it is found in a thing, not as it is a general name.

The same, in the same work.

Right is so called from possessing by right. For that which is possessed justly is possessed by this right; that justly which well; but that which is possessed badly belongs to another. He possesses badly who either uses his own things badly or presumes upon things belonging to another.

> Hic Isidorus ponit etymologiam iuris, prout habetur in re, non prout est generale nomen.
>
> Idem in eodem.
>
> Ius dictum est a iure possidendo. Hoc enim iure possidetur, quod iuste, hoc iuste, quod bene; quod autem male possidetur, alienum est. Male autem possidet, qui vel suis male utitur, vel aliena praesumit.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Whatever a member of the faithful offers to a church is contained under the name of an oblation, and ought not to be possessed by secular persons.

Paschal II, to the Canons of Saint Martin.

The case of the people of Carpi (And below:) Moreover, first fruits, tithes, and oblations are reckoned especially among the goods of churches alone. But we call oblations whatever things from their own lawful property are offered to the church by the faithful. Therefore, whoever obtains them through a secular hand or power, without doubt strives against God and against the sanctions of the holy Fathers; indeed, both he who receives and he who delivers is judged a robber and a sacrilegious person.

Quicquid fidelis offert ecclesiae, oblationis nomine continetur, et a saecularibus possideri non debet.

Paschalis II. Canonicis sancti Martini. Causa Carpensis plebis (Et infra:) Ceterum primitiae, decimae et oblationes in solis ecclesiarum bonis praecipue numerantur. Oblationes vero dicimus, quaecunque de propriis et licitis rebus ecclesiae a fidelibus offeruntur. Quicunque igitur eas per manum vel potestatem saecularem obtinet, procul dubio contra Deum et contra sanctorum Patrum nititur sanctiones; quin immo et qui accipit, et qui tradit, raptor et sacrilegus iudicatur.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A priest alone can confer the sacrament of extreme unction upon a sick person. This is what it says. - § 1. In a leap year the custom of the place ought to be observed concerning the day on which the feast of Saint Matthias is celebrated, provided nevertheless that the vigil is continuous with the feast. This is what it says.

Alexander III.

Your fraternity asked of us whether a priest ought to anoint a sick person when only one cleric is present, and on what day the feast of blessed Matthias ought to be observed in a leap year, especially since certain persons wish to interpose a day between the vigil and the feast, [and whether a woman, etc.; cf. c. 2, On Baptism, IV. 19.] We therefore have deemed that this is to be answered to you: that a priest, when one cleric is present and even alone, can anoint a sick person. § 1. But let the vigil precede the feast of blessed Matthias according to ecclesiastical custom to the extent that it admits no other day between itself and the solemnity, either on account of the leap day or in any other manner; on that vigil, unless it falls on the Lord's day, a fast is to be observed. But whether the feast itself takes place on the preceding or on the following day, which two are reckoned as though one, there is no error, but the custom of the church is to be observed. [But that a woman on account of theft, etc.; cf. c. 2, On Baptism, IV. 19.]

Solus sacerdos potest sacramentum extremae unctionis infirmo conferre. H. d. - § 1. In anno bissextili servari debet loci consuetudo circa diem S. Matthiae festandum, dum tamen vigilia continuetur festo. Hoc dicit.

Alexander III. Quaesivit a nobis fraternitas tua, utrum sacerdos uno clerico tantum praesente infirmum debeat inungere, et qua die festum beati Matthiae in anno bissextili debeat observari, praesertim quum quidam inter vigiliam et festum velint diem interponere, [et utrum mulier etc. cf. c. 2. *de div. IV. *19.] Nos itaque tibi taliter duximus respondendum, quod sacerdos uno praesente clerico et etiam solus potest infirmum ungere. § 1. Festum vero beati Matthiae iuxta consuetudinem ecclesiasticam vigilia eatenus praecedat, ut nec pro bissexto, nec pro quolibet alio modo inter se et solennitatem aliam diem admittat, in qua utique vigilia, nisi venerit in dominica die, ieiunium celebretur. Ipsum autem festum sive fiat in praecedenti die sive in sequenti, qui duo quasi pro uno reputantur, nullus error, sed consuetudo ecclesiae teneatur. [Quod autem mulier pro furto etc. cf. c. 2. de div. IV. 19.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: By the words "I establish and command," a definitive sentence can be rendered.

Celestine III.

In those matters that contain ambiguity, recourse is owed to the Apostolic See, to which in truth, as mother and head of all churches, greater and more difficult questions, just as was established by the ancient Fathers and rightly approved by the usages of those employing them, ought everywhere to be referred. For it became known indeed to our apostolate that, when concerning the controversy that existed between Master M. and the lay brothers of the Hospital of Saint Simplician concerning that hospital, in the presence of our venerable brother O., Archbishop of Milan, a question was being litigated, after cognizance of the case the archbishop himself did not use these words in pronouncing the sentence, so as to say according to civil law: "I condemn this party," or "I absolve this party," but pronounced thus: "I establish and command," that henceforth, and the remaining things that are expressly contained in the instrument. Therefore, because, as we learned from the report of our beloved sons Cynthius, Cardinal Priest of Saint Lawrence in Lucina, and John, Cardinal Priest of Saint Prisca, whom we assigned as auditors for this, there was doubt concerning this pronouncement of the sentence: Considering, therefore, that this word "I establish" according to the law signifies a completed thing and is received with effect, not verbally, likewise that according to Gregory that which is commanded is ordered, and that which is ordered must be done and sometimes, if it is not done, carries a penalty; considering nevertheless that, according to the same Gregory, no one ought to consider the words, but the will and intention, since the intention ought not to serve the words, but the words the intention, we interpret in the present article by the counsel of our brothers, the proctors of each party being present, and define that the words of the aforesaid archbishop, pronounced in such form, possess the firmness of a sentence to remain perpetually valid. We therefore confirm by the present page of the Apostolic See the sentence itself, although it has hitherto been impeded by the obstacle of an appeal, and fortify it by the protection of this writing, establishing and commanding by apostolic authority that the aforesaid brothers of that hospital obey its abbot and his grantors in perpetuity as their prelates and lords, just as the archbishop himself commanded.

> Per verbum: "statuo et praecipio," diffinitiva sententia ferri potest.
>
> Coelestinus III. In his, quae ambiguitatem continent, ad sedem apostolicam ex debito recursus habetur, ad quam re vera, tanquam matrem et caput omnium ecclesiarum, maiores et difficiliores quaestiones, sicut ab antiquis Patribus constitutum est et moribus utentium recte approbatum, usquequaque conferri debent. Innotuit siquidem apostolatui nostro, quod, quum de controversia, quae inter magistrum M. et conversos hospitalis sancti Simpliciani super eodem hospitali haberetur, in praesentia venerabilis fratris nostri O. Mediolanensis archiepiscopi quaestio verteretur, ipse archiepiscopus post cognitionem causae in prolatione sententiae his verbis non fuit usus, ut secundum ius civile diceret: "talem partem condemno, vel talem absolvo," sed pronunciavit ita: "statuo et praecipio," ne de cetero, et reliqua, quae expressim continentur in instrumento. Quoniam igitur, sicut ex relatione dilecti filii nostri Cynthii S. Laurentii in Lucina, et Ioannis S. Priscae presbyterorum cardinalium didicimus, quos ad hoc concessimus auditores, super hac fuit prolatione sententiae dubitatum: Attendentes igitur, quod hoc verbum "statuo" secundum legem rem perfectam significat, et cum effectu, non verbotenus accipitur, item quod secundum Gregorium quod praecipitur imperatur, et quod imperatur necesse est fieri, et aliquando, si non fiat, poenam habet, considerantes nihilominus, quod iuxta eundem Gregorium non debet aliquis considerare verba, sed voluntatem et intentionem, quum non intentio verbis, sed verba intentioni debeant deservire, interpretamur in praesenti articulo de fratrum nostrorum consilio, procuratoribus utriusque partis praesentibus, et diffinimus, quod praefati archiepiscopi verba, tali forma prolata, perpetuo valiturae sententiae obtineant firmitatem. Nos itaque sententiam ipsam licet appellationis obstaculo hucusque fuerit impedita, praesenti pagina sedis apostolicae confirmamus, et huius scripti patrocinio communimus statuentes et auctoritate apostolica praecipientes ut ipsius hospitalis praefati fratres abbati eiusque concessoribus obediant in perpetuum tanquam praelatis suis et dominis sicut archiepiscopus ipse praecepit.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A benefit of a prince ought to be interpreted most broadly.

Innocent III, to the Patriarch of Grado.

We recall that we formerly wrote to you that if the beloved son the archpriest and the canons of Padua, to whom we directed our writings concerning this, did not confer upon the beloved son Master G., canon of Padua, without any delay, the prebend which is conferred from the common property only upon residents, and manual benefices from the common revenues, just as upon one of the others, you were to take care to compel them to this, appeal ceasing. But because, as was reported to our apostolate, certain persons attempt to interpret our mandate otherwise than is fitting, since benefits of princes are to be interpreted most broadly, wishing to remove doubt from our mandate, not to reserve the scruple of a question, so that you may execute what we command more diligently and freely, we have deemed that our understanding in this matter is to be disclosed to you: namely, that we enjoined the prebend which is conferred from the common property only upon residents in food and clothing to be conferred fully upon Master G. himself, just as upon one of the other residents. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, attending to no malicious interpretation in the business itself, you endeavor diligently to execute, after the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal has been removed, what we command you concerning the aforesaid master.

> Beneficium principis latissime interpretari debet.
>
> Innocentius III. Patriarchae Grandensi. Olim tibi scripsisse recolimus, ut, si dilectus filius archipresbyter et canonici Paduani, quibus super hoc scripta nostra direximus, dilecto filio magistro G. canonico Paduano, praebendam, quae tantum residentibus de communi confertur, sicut uni ex aliis de communibus proventibus et manualia beneficia omni dilatione postposita non conferrent, tu eos ad id appellatione cessante compellere procurares. Quia vero, sicut nostro apostolatui reseratum est, quidam mandatum nostrum interpretari aliter, quam deceat, moliuntur, quum beneficia principum sint interpretanda largissime: volentes a mandato nostro dubietatem auferre, non quaestionis scrupulum reservare, ut quae mandamus diligentius et liberius exsequaris, nostrum tibi in eo aperiendum duximus intellectum, videlicet, quod praebendam, quae tantum residentibus in victu et vestitu de communi confertur, ipsi magistro G. plene, sicut uni ex aliis residentibus, iniunximus conferendam. Quocirca fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus in negotio ipso malitiosam interpretationem aliquam non attendens, sic, quod de praefato magistro tibi praecipimus, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo exsequi studeas diligenter.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: An interdict is called general when it is rendered not only against a province, but against a town or castle.

The same, to the Bishop of Coimbra and the other Bishops constituted in the Kingdom of Portugal.

Since in your parts, sins requiring it, it often happens that various places are placed under interdict, we have learned that among you it is called into doubt when an interdict ought to be called general or particular. For those who merited being adorned with a privilege by the Roman Church—namely, that when a general interdict of the land has been imposed, it is lawful for them, with the doors closed, bells not rung, excommunicated and interdicted persons excluded, and in a subdued voice, to celebrate divine offices—assert that they are not constrained by a particular interdict, saying that interdict alone to be general when a kingdom, or at least a whole province, is subjected to interdict. On account of this, justice is more often destroyed and the sentences of prelates are held in contempt, since they celebrate divine offices in other provinces under interdict and, while the organs of others are suspended, they themselves, with bells rung and doors open, indiscriminately receive any persons whatever to divine offices. But since nothing is expressly said in the privileges about a kingdom or province, we will that under the name of land not only a kingdom or province be understood, but also a town and castle, so that in these too that which is said concerning a general interdict has place: namely, that when a town or castle is subjected to a general interdict, the form of the privilege written above ought to be observed. [Given at the Lateran, the seventh day before the Ides of February, 1199.]

> Generale dicitur interdictum, quod fertur nedum in provinciam, sed in villam vel castrum.
>
> Idem Colubriensi et aliis Episcopis in regno Portugaliae constitutis.
>
> Quum in partibus vestris peccatis exigentibus saepe contingat diversa loca interdicto supponi, quando generale vel particulare dici debeat interdictum, apud vos accepimus in dubium revocari, quum illi, qui ab ecclesia Romana decorari privilegio meruerunt, videlicet, ut, quum generale interdictum terrae fuerit, liceat eis, ianuis clausis, non pulsatis campanis, exclusis excommunicatis et interdictis, suppressa voce divina officia celebrare, interdicto particulari se asserant non arctari, dicentes illud interdictum generale duntaxat, quum regnum, vel saltem provincia tota subiicitur interdicto. Propter quod et iustitia saepius deperit, et praelatorum sententiae contemnuntur, quum in aliis provinciis interdictis divina celebrent, et, suspensis organis aliorum, ipsi pulsatis campanis et apertis ianuis quoslibet passim recipiant ad divina. Quum autem in privilegiis de regno vel provincia nil expresse dicatur, nomine terrae non solum regnum vel provinciam intelligi volumus, verum etiam villam et castrum, ut et in his locum habeat quod de generali dicitur interdicto, videlicet ut, quum villa vel castrum generali subiicitur interdicto, praescripta privilegii forma debeat observari. [Dat. Lat. VII. Id. Febr. 1199.]

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: A privilege against a custom opposing the common law is to be interpreted broadly. This is what it says according to the understanding of the ancient abbot, and it is a notable case according to this understanding.

The same, to the Bishop of Auxerre.

Since by the kindness of the Apostolic See it was granted to you that the ordering of the property of clerics dying intestate should remain freely in your power and disposition, wishing to remove every occasion of scandal that has sometimes arisen between you and your people concerning two matters, you wished to consult us, first, whether the appellation of the word "clerics" extends as much to canons as to non-canons; second, whether those who commit their last will to the will and disposition of another, ordering or determining nothing at all by themselves about what ought to be conferred upon what place or person, are said to die intestate. Therefore, to the first Consultation of yours we respond in this manner: that the appellation of clerics comprehends not only others but also canons. Concerning the second, etc. (cf. c. 13, On Testaments, III. 26.) [Given at the Lateran, 1202.]

> Privilegium contra consuetudinem, iuri communi obviantem, large est interpretandum. H. d. secundum intellectum abbatis antiqui, et est casus not. secundum hunc intellectum.
>
> Idem Altissiodorensi Episcopo.

Quum tibi de benignitate sedis apostolicae sit indultum, quod ordinatio rerum clericorum ab intestato decedentium libere in tua potestate ac dispositione permaneat, volens omnem materiam scandali removere, quod aliquando inter te et tuos est subortum super duobus, nos consulere voluisti, primo, an appellatio vocabuli clericorum tam ad canonicos quam ad non canonicos extendatur; Secundo, an illis, qui in voluntate et dispositione alterius suam committunt ultimam voluntatem, nil per se penitus ordinantes nec determinantes, quid cui loco vel personae conferri debeat, dicentur decedere intestati. Primae igitur Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod appellatio clericorum non solum alios, sed etiam canonicos comprehendit. *In secunda etc. *(*cf. c. *13. de testam. III. 26.) [Dat. Lat. 1202.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: One swearing to obey the prelate and the church is bound to obey not the diocesan clergy, but the chapter of the cathedral church.

The same, to the Provost and Chapter of Piacenza.

Since the clerics of Piacenza furnish an oath under this form of words: "I, such a one, from this hour henceforth shall be faithful and obedient to the holy church of Piacenza and to my lord, the Bishop of Piacenza," you wished to consult us by your letters whether the clergy of the whole diocese or only the chapter of the cathedral church ought to be understood. We therefore respond to your discretion by the present page in this manner: that by the word "church of Piacenza" in the form of the oath written above, the clergy of the whole diocese ought not to be understood; and if the chapter of the cathedral church is understood, nevertheless he who furnishes an oath of this kind is principally obligated to the bishop as to the head. [Given at Ferentino, the sixth day before the Nones of July, 1203.]

Iurans obedire praelato et ecclesiae, non clero dioecesano, sed capitulo ecclesiae cathedralis obedire tenetur.

Idem Praeposito et Capitulo Placentino.

Quum clerici Placentini iuramentum praestant sub hac forma verborum: "Ego talis ab hac hora in antea fidelis ero et obediens sanctae Placentinae ecclesiae, et domino meo, episcopo Placentino," per vestras nos literas consulere voluistis, utrum intelligi debeat clerus totius dioecesis, an capitulum tantum ecclesiae cathedralis. Nos igitur discretioni vestrae praesenti pagina taliter respondemus, quod per ecclesiae Placentinae vocabulum in forma iuramenti praescripti non debeat intelligi totius dioecesis clerus; et, si capitulum intelligatur ecclesiae cathedralis, is tamen, qui praestat huiusmodi iuramentum, episcopo, tanquam capiti, principaliter obligatur. [Dat. Ferentini VI. Non. Iul. 1203.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: Under the appellation of ecclesiastical censure are comprehended excommunication, suspension, and interdict.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Fridianus at Lucca.

To one asking what ought to be understood by ecclesiastical censure when we place a clause of this kind in our letters, we respond that by it not only a sentence of interdict, but also of suspension and excommunication can be understood, unless the discerning judge, having investigated the circumstances of things and persons, renders that which he shall see to be more expedient.

Appellatione ecclesiasticae censurae comprehenditur excommunicatio, suspensio et interdictum.

Idem Priori S. Fridiani Lucani. Quaerenti, quid per censuram ecclesiasticam debeat intelligi, quum huiusmodi clausulam in nostris literis apponimus, respondemus, quod per eam non solum interdicti, sed suspensionis et excommunicationis sententia valeat intelligi, nisi iudex discretus, rerum et personarum circumstantiis indagatis, ferat quam magis viderit expedire.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: In privileges concerning tithes of newly broken lands not to be paid, that is called newly broken land of whose cultivation there is no memory, and which previously brought forth little or no fruit.

The same, to the Bishop of Zaragoza.

Your fraternity asked of us what ought to be understood by the word "newly broken land." Although some have said that newly broken land is land cut, which lies fallow for a year, while others assert that land brought under cultivation from a forest after the trees have been uprooted is said to become newly broken land, each of which interpretations is gathered from the civil laws, We therefore respond to your inquiry in this manner: that we believe the intention of our predecessors, when they granted to pious places an indulgence concerning newly broken lands, to have been that they understood by newly broken land a field newly brought under cultivation, concerning which there exists no memory that it had ever been cultivated. But neither do we believe that an indulgence was granted to them concerning every such newly broken land, but only concerning that one whose tithe a religious convent can retain without grave detriment to the parochial church, since there is often such uncultivated land from which the parochial church receives great revenues by reason of tithes. [Given at Viterbo, the eleventh day before the Kalends of September, in the tenth year, 1207.]

In privilegiis de decimis novalium non solvendis illud appellatur novale, de cuius cultura non est memoria, et quod prius modicum vel nullum fructum afferebat.

Idem Caesaraugustano Episcopo.

Quid per "novale" vocabulum intelligi debeat, a nobis tua fraternitas requisivit. Licet autem quidam dixerint, quod novale sit terra praecisa, quae anno cessat, aliis asserentibus, quod ex silva, quae arboribus exstirpatis ad cultam redigitur, fieri novale dicatur, quarum utraque interpretatio ex civilibus legibus colligitur: Nos igitur inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod eam credimus praedecessorum nostrorum intentionem fuisse, quum piis locis indulgentiam de novalibus concesserunt, ut novale intellexerint agrum, de novo ad cultum redactum, de quo non exstat memoria, quod aliquando cultus fuisset. Sed nec de quolibet tali novali credimus eis indulgentiam fore concessam, nisi de illo duntaxat, cuius decimam religiosus potest conventus absque gravi detrimento parochialis ecclesiae detinere, quum talis sit saepe locus incultus, de quo parochialis ecclesia magnos percipit decimarum ratione proventus. [Dat. Viterbii XI. Kal. Sept. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: If a church subject to a bishop is united to another, or is committed to it to be governed, with the right of the mother church preserved, by "mother church" the cathedral, and not the Roman Church, is understood.

The same, to Abbot F. and B., Monks of Alcobaça.

We learned, from our venerable brother the Bishop of Coimbra complaining, that, when the brothers of the Holy Cross recently received under their protection the monastery of Argar, which had been accustomed from ancient times to exhibit episcopal rights to his predecessors, now, after one of their canons had been made prior there without his consent, on the occasion of a certain privilege obtained from Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, with the truth suppressed, it denies that it should exhibit due obedience to that bishop, taking from this the occasion that by "mother church" it understands not the cathedral but the Roman Church. But because it is not our intention that the rights of our brothers in our times [unduly] be diminished, we have deemed that the case itself should be committed to you. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command that, if nothing else occurs to you on account of which the said prior ought not to answer to the diocesan bishop, you compel him by ecclesiastical censure to furnish that obedience to him just as his predecessors furnished it to the predecessors of the bishop, notwithstanding the privilege obtained by surreption to the prejudice of the Church of Coimbra. For we will that by "mother church" the cathedral church be understood, not the Roman Church. [But if not all, etc. Given at Rome, the third day before the Kalends of June, 1198.]

> Si ecclesia, subiecta episcopo, unitur alteri, vel gubernanda committitur, salvo iure matricis ecclesiae: per matricem ecclesiam intelligitur cathedralis, et non Romana.
>
> Idem Abbati F. et B. Monachis Alcobaciae.
>
> Venerabili fratri nostro Colubriensi episcopo didicimus conquerente, quod, quum fratres sanctae Crucis monasterium de Argariis sub protectione sua nuper receperint, quod suis praedecessoribus episcopalia iura consueverat ab antiquis temporibus exhibere, nunc quodam de canonicis suis sine suo consensu ibi facto priore, occasione cuiusdam privilegii, a bonae memoriae C. Papa praedecessore nostro veritate tacita impetrati, eidem episcopo debitam obedientiam denegat exhibere, inde sumpta occasione, quod per matricem ecclesiam non cathedralem intelligit, sed Romanam. Quia vero non est nostrae intentionis, ut iura fratrum nostrorum temporibus nostris [indebite] minuantur, causam ipsam vobis duximus committendam. Ideoque per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si aliud vobis non occurrerit, propter quod dictus prior non debeat dioecesano episcopo respondere, vos eum ad eam praestandam eidem, sicut praedecessores sui praedecessoribus episcopi praestiterunt, per censuram ecclesiasticam compellatis, non obstante privilegio in praeiudicium Colubriensis ecclesiae per subreptionem obtento. Nos enim per matricem ecclesiam cathedralem intelligi volumus, non Romanam. [Quod si non omnes etc. Dat. Romae III. Kal. Iun. 1198.]

Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated or interdicted for contumacy or a doubtful offense is absolved after security has been furnished that he will stand by the law. But if he was excommunicated or interdicted for a manifest offense, then he ought first to make satisfaction before he is absolved. And that is called manifest which is established through confession, lawful proof, or the evidence of the thing. This is what it says, together with the following chapter.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Geneviève, and the Dean and Chancellor of Paris.

On behalf of the beloved daughter in Christ, the noble woman the Countess of Blois, those sent to our presence sought that a hearing be exhibited to her, so that we might hear the injuries that the Church of Chartres inflicts upon her and her people; to them, and to the beloved son S. de Bero, canon of Chartres, who stood for that church, we gave as auditor the beloved son R., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Anastasia. In his presence the envoys of the countess Alleged that, when the provost of the countess of La Ferté in the town of Nolis had seized a certain robber who had committed theft, and justice had thereupon been done, the robber was demanded from the bailiffs of the countess by the chapter of Chartres after justice had been done, because they said that he had been captured in their land; the bailiffs asserting to the contrary that he had been captured in land in which the same countess has the right to capture robbers and other malefactors, because her husband, before he assumed the sign of the cross, was in possession of that right, so that in the place in which the chapter itself said that the robber had been captured, he possessed jurisdiction of this kind; which they were prepared to prove. But when the countess offered security concerning this that she would obey the law, the canons of Chartres nevertheless caused her land to be placed under interdict, which they were unwilling to relax unless amends were first paid. Thereafter our venerable brother the Bishop of Chartres, having been requested concerning this and diligently admonished by letters of his metropolitan that he absolve the land of the countess in such manner as by law he could and ought, refused to do this, having been prohibited by the aforesaid chapter. For they said that this was contained in the privileges of the Church of Chartres: that it was lawful for no one to grant the benefit of absolution without fitting satisfaction to persons excommunicated or expressly interdicted on behalf of the canons of Chartres. But the envoys of the countess, seeing that after security had been given they could not be absolved as they ought, appealed to the hearing of the metropolitan concerning this as well as other cases litigated between the countess and the chapter, placing both the countess herself and her land and bailiffs under his protection. [Meanwhile the Dean of Châteaudun addressed the provost of the countess at Châteaudun so that he would take care to return or restore on security the property of a certain man that he had seized. When he was prepared to restore it on security, the dean, after first inspecting certain letters that he had received on behalf of the chapter of Chartres, was unwilling that the provost himself restore that property on security, but that he return it absolutely. The provost, unwilling to do this lest the right of the countess perish in this matter, prohibited the dean from proceeding further and sent forth a voice of appeal to the hearing of the metropolitan, placing the land of the countess and her bailiffs under his protection and fixing a day for the appeal. But on the next day the dean, just as he had addressed the provost, addressed the castellan of Châteaudun, who, after giving him a similar response, appealed, promising with the provost himself concerning this to stand by the mandate of the church. But the dean, asserting that he had received a mandate from the chapter, placed that castle under interdict in the evening. Therefore, when the parties had been cited by the metropolitan and constituted in his presence, the proctor of the aforesaid countess, complaining on her behalf, alleged that the chapter of Chartres so aggrieved her, although she had not been cited or requested in anything, that it repeatedly placed her land under interdict for any cause whatever without requesting her in any way. He also complained that, when she herself or her bailiffs were cited in the cases of the chapter to answer before the ordinary judge, they were now compelled to answer in the chapter; and that, when the castle of La Ferté had been unjustly placed under interdict, they were unwilling to receive from her the sufficient security to obey the law that she offered, although she was also prepared to prove that she had exercised her own right. They complained further that Châteaudun had been interdicted after the appeal, and she offered suitable proof that in seizing the aforesaid property the countess had exercised her own right, namely that right in whose possession her husband was at the time when he assumed the cross. Furthermore, when certain witnesses had been received concerning this at Paris by the metropolitan, and the proctor of the countess insistently sought that he absolve the land after sufficient security had been received, the proctor of the chapter said to the contrary that it was lawful neither for the metropolitan nor another to absolve the land, alleging the tenor of the aforesaid privilege and wishing to produce witnesses concerning this, just as the countess had produced them. Therefore, another day having been assigned to the parties at Noliacum so that they might produce witnesses and exhibit the privilege,] The metropolitan, when the parties were present on the appointed day, having diligently inspected the privilege, received witnesses on each side. After they had been examined by an official of the metropolitan and another day assigned to the parties, the proctor of the countess insistently sought that the depositions received be published, offering abundantly sufficient security to obey the law, so that the sentence of interdict might be relaxed. But the proctor of the chapter alleged to the contrary that by reason of the aforesaid privilege the land could neither be nor ought to be absolved by him unless amends had first been made to the chapter, interpreting that expression contained in the privilege, namely "fitting satisfaction," as amends. Therefore, after litigation at length concerning a clause of this kind, the aforesaid metropolitan pronounced interlocutorily that he wished to reserve an exposition of this kind to apostolic examination, and concerning this assigned a day to the parties. [Nevertheless, by reason of the aforesaid appeal, he wished to take cognizance by himself or by his official whether those castles had been interdicted unjustly or lawfully. Therefore, when the proctor of the aforesaid countess pressed that, after security had been received and the depositions published, the sentence of interdict be relaxed, the aforesaid Simon, with the proctor of the chapter, sought delays so that they might produce other witnesses to prove that what they had done was just. When these had been granted to him, the proctor of the countess, pressing on the day assigned to the parties concerning this, as he had done more often, sought that the depositions be published and the sentence of interdict relaxed, after security had been received. But the proctor of the chapter, having been asked whether he wished to show through proof before the officials of the aforesaid metropolitan that what the chapter had done concerning this was just, constantly asserted both that he wished to prove nothing and that he would not hear the depositions of the adverse party; but he appealed lest they absolve the land, fixing as the term of his appeal the octave of blessed Martin most recently past. The officials, indeed, attending that an appeal of this kind was not to be deferred to, after receiving security up to one hundred marks to obey the law, absolved the aforesaid land. Therefore the aforesaid Simon, since he did not have the letters of procuration, after assigning as sureties the beloved sons the Abbot of Saint John de Valeta and Thomas, Archdeacon of Dreux, to be condemned in the penalty of one hundred marks if the chapter were unwilling to hold ratified what he himself should do, alleged to the contrary, asserting that, when the aforesaid castles had been interdicted on behalf of the chapter of Chartres, it had been alleged before the metropolitan on behalf of that chapter that by reason of that clause, which is expressed above, he could not and ought not to absolve the land interdicted on their behalf; on account of which he reserved the interpretation of that clause to apostolic examination, but, wishing to take cognizance whether the interdict had been rendered justly or unjustly, assigned a day to the parties. But when the same metropolitan was on the point of coming to the Apostolic See, Master I., his official, whom he had deputed as auditor over the business brought before him, was challenged as suspect by the proctor of the chapter on account of manifest causes which he did not believe to be unknown to the metropolitan himself; but the metropolitan did not remove him altogether from the case, but rather joined to him the Archdeacon of Autun, no mention then having been made of joining another, the parties being present and the archdeacon present and furnishing consent through silence. But afterward the same metropolitan, in place of the archdeacon, as was said by the other party, joined Geoffrey, canon of Sens, if the archdeacon could not be present. Whence the proctor of the chapter, seeing the aforesaid master, who had been challenged, and the said Geoffrey, whom he did not know to have been joined in place of the archdeacon, sitting to take cognizance of the case, asserted that in the absence of the archdeacon he was not bound to answer or make allegations, and contradicted those wishing to proceed without him, interposing a voice of appeal to the Apostolic See. And since it was not lawfully established that Geoffrey had been substituted in place of the archdeacon—through whom the suspicion of Master I. also would not have been suppressed—nor was it canonically manifest that the archdeacon could not be present, those men, namely Master I. and the said Geoffrey, in contempt of the appeal, relaxed the sentence of interdict after receiving security, contrary to the tenor of the privilege of the Church of Chartres and to the prejudice of the interpretation for which the assigned day was pending. Whence the same Simon said that whatever had been done by them concerning this ought to be revoked as void. But the proctors of the aforesaid countess sought that it be opened to them through apostolic interpretation what fitting satisfaction is or how it is to be understood, since on the occasion of this word the canons of Chartres place the land of that countess under interdict when and how they will, and are unwilling that the sentence be relaxed until amends proceed. Moreover, although the countess herself is present in the town that they wish to place under interdict, she is nevertheless neither summoned by them nor lawfully cited; rather, when it pleases them, they summon the provost or one of the bailiffs, saying to him: "Either you will do thus, or we will place the land under a sentence of interdict." And when it is alleged to them on behalf of the countess that what they seek pertains to the jurisdiction of the countess, and they offer to stand by the mandate of the church, they nevertheless interdict the land. And if at any time someone on behalf of the countess is cited by the ordinary judge concerning this on account of the complaint of the chapter, they do not permit him to answer except in the chapter of Chartres. Whence the proctors themselves sought that justice be exhibited to the countess concerning these grievances and others. We therefore, having diligently heard these and other things that were alleged before the cardinal himself, because it was not established for us whether the appeal was lawful, command your discretion by apostolic writings that, after the parties have been convoked and witnesses received on each side, since the production of witnesses has not yet been renounced on either side, you take care sufficiently to examine the case itself and, with the obstacle of appeal removed, terminate it with a canonical end. But if the chapter is unwilling to hold the act of Simon ratified, by our authority, with the obstacle of appeal removed, you are to condemn the aforesaid sureties to the penalty named and cause what you shall establish to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure, reducing to a void whatever was wrongly attempted against the countess herself on behalf of the chapter after her envoys undertook the journey to come to the Apostolic See.] But for understanding the clause of the privilege mentioned, we believe a distinction is to be made whether a sentence of interdict or excommunication was rendered against someone for contumacy alone, namely because, when cited, he was unwilling to stand by the law, or also for an offense, namely because, when commanded, he was unwilling to amend the wrongful act. In the first case we believe that fitting satisfaction is made for a sentence of this kind to be relaxed if sufficient security to stand by the law is first given; but in the second case, if the offense is manifest, we do not believe that fitting satisfaction is made for the sentence to be relaxed unless sufficient amends are first furnished. But if the offense is doubtful, we believe that competent security for obeying the mandate of the church suffices for relaxing the same sentence. [But if, etc. Given at Rome on the Kalends of April, in the eighth year, 1205.]

> Excommunicatus vel interdictus pro contumacia vel offensa dubia absolvitur cautione praestita de stando iuri. Si vero fuit excommunicatus vel interdictus pro manifesta offensa, tunc prius debet satisfacere, antequam absolvatur. Et dicitur manifesta, de qua constat per confessionem vel probationem legitimam vel rei evidentiam. H. d. cum cap. sequ.
>
> Idem Abbati sanctae Genovefae, Decano et Cancellario Parisiensibus.
>
> Ex parte in Christo dilectae filiae nobilis mulieris comitissae Blesensis, ad nostram praesentiam destinati, sibi postularunt audientiam exhiberi, ut audiremus iniurias, quas ei et suis infert ecclesia Carnotensis, quibus et dilecto filio S. de Bero canonico Carnotensi, qui pro ipsa stabat ecclesia, dilectum filium R. tit. S. Anastasiae presbyterum cardinalem dedimus auditorem. In cuius praesentia Proposuerunt nuncii comitissae, quod, quum ipsius comitissae praepositus de Firmitate de villa Nolis quendam latronem ceperit, qui furtum commiserat, et iustitia fuerit inde facta, latro fuit a comitissae ballivis per capitulum Carnotense post factam iustitiam requisitus, quia eum in terra sua captum fuisse dicebant, asserentibus ballivis e contra, ipsum fuisse captum in terra, in qua ius capiendi latrones et alios malefactores habet eadem comitissa, quoniam vir eiusdem, antequam signaculum crucis assumeret, erat in possessione iuris illius, ut in loco illo, in quo captus ab ipso capitulo dicebatur, huiusmodi iurisdictionem haberet; quod erant probare parati. Verum quum super hoc de parendo iuri comitissa cautionem offerret, canonici Carnotenses nihilominus terram eius fecerunt interdicto supponi, quod relaxare noluerunt, nisi prius solveretur emenda. Consequenter venerabilis frater noster Carnotensis episcopus super hoc requisitus, et per literas metropolitani sui monitus diligenter, ut terram comitissae taliter absolveret, sicut de iure poterat et debebat, idem, a capitulo iam dicto prohibitus, hoc facere recusavit. Dicebant enim, hoc in Carnotensis ecclesiae privilegiis contineri, quod nemini liceat excommunicatis vel nominatim interdictis pro canonicis Carnotensibus absque congrua satisfactione absolutionis beneficium indulgere. Videntes autem nuncii comitissae, quod data cautione absolvi non poterant, ut deberent, tam, super hoc quam aliis causis, inter comitissam et capitulum agitatis, metropolitani audientiam, appellaverunt, tam ipsam comitissam quam terram et ballivos ipsius sub eius protectione ponentes. [Interim decanus de Castroduni comitissae praepositum Castroduni convenit ut res hominis cuiusdam, quas ceperat, reddere vel recredere procuraret. Qui quum eas paratus esset recredere, decanus, prius literis quibusdam inspectis, quas ex parte capituli Carnotensis receperat, noluit, ut praepositus ipse res illas recrederet sed redderet absolute; quod praepositus nolens efficere, ne ius in hoc comitissae periret decano inhibuit ne ultra procederet, et ad metropolitani audientiam vocem appellationis emisit, terram comitissae et ballivos ipsius sub protectione ponens eiusdem, et diem appellationi praefigens. Decanus vero, in crastinum castellanum Castriduni, sicut praepositus fecerat, requisivit, qui responso ei dato consimili, appellavit, promittens cum ipso praeposito super hoc ecclesiae stare mandato. Decanus autem, asserens mandatum a capitulo recepisse, castrum illud in vespere supposuit interdicto. Partibus itaque a metropolitano citatis et in eius praesentia constitutis procurator comitissae iam dictae pro ipsa proposuit conquerendo, quod capitulum Carnotense eam non citatam, vel requisitam in aliquo, taliter aggravabat, quod terram eius pro qualibet causa, ea nullatenus requisita, interdicto saepius supponebat. Conquestus est etiam, quod quum ipsa, vel eius ballivi pro causis citantur capituli coram ordinario iudice responsuri, iam coguntur in capitulo respondere et quum castrum Firmitatis iniuste fuerit suppositum interdicto, ab ea nolebant de iuri parendo sufficientem quam offerebat recipere cautionem quum etiam esset probare parata, quod iure suo usa fuisset. Conquerebantur insuper, quod Castrumduni post appellationem fuerat interdictum et probationem idoneam offerebat, quod in capiendis rebus iam dictis iure suo usa fuerat comitissa, illo iure videlicet in cuius possessione vir erat ipsius tempore crucis assumptae. Ceterum, quum a metropolitano recepti fuerint super hoc Parisius quidam testes et comitissae procurator ipsius postularet instanter, ut terram absolveret, sufficienti cautione recepta, procurator capituli dicebat econtra, quod metropolitano vel alii terram absolvere non licebat, iam dicti privilegii tenorem allegans, volens super hoc testes producere, sicut produxerat comitissa. Die igitur alio apud Noliacum partibus assignato, ut producerent testes et privilegium exhiberent] Metropolitanus, quum partes essent in die praefixa praesentes, privilegio diligenter inspecto testes hinc inde recepit, quibus ab officiali metropolitani examinatis ipsius, et die partibus iterum assignato, procurator comitissae cum instantia postulabat publicari attestationes receptas, ex abundanti de iuri parendo sufficientem offerens cautionem, ut relaxaretur sententia interdicti. Sed procurator capituli e contrario allegabat, quod iam dicti privilegii ratione ab ipso terra non poterat nec debebat absolvi, nisi prius capitulo facta fuisset emenda, interpretando verbum illud, quod in privilegio continetur, videlicet, "satisfactione congrua," pro emenda. Litigato igitur diutius super huiusmodi clausula, interlocutus est metropolitanus iam dictus, se velle huiusmodi expositionem apostolico examini reservare, et super hoc diem partibus assignavit. [Voluit tamen cognoscere per se, vel officialem suum, appellationis ratione praedictae, utrum iniuste, an iure castra illa interdicta fuissent. Instante itaque procuratore comitissae praefatae, ut, cautione recepta et attestationibus publicatis, relaxaretur sententia interdicti, praedictus Simon cum procuratore capituli, ut alios testes producerent ad probandum iustum esse quod fecerant, inducias postulavit, quibus concessis eidem, comitissae procurator ipsius, in die partibus super hoc assignato instante, sicut saepius fecerat, attestationes petiit publicari et interdicti relaxari sententiam, cautione recepta. Requisitus autem procurator capituli utrum vellet per probationem ostendere, quod super hoc capitulum fecerat, esse iustum, coram officialibus metropolitani iam dicti, constanter asseruit, nec aliquid se velle probare, nec etiam auditurum attestationes partis adversae, sed ne terram absolverent appellabat, octavas beati Martini proximo praeteritas suae terminum appellationi praefigens. Officiales, si quidem attendentes non esse appellationi huiusmodi deferendum, cautione recepta usque ad centum marcas de iuri parendo, terram absolvere iam dictam. Praefatus igitur Simon, quum procuratoris literas non haberet, dilectis filiis, abbate sancti Ioannis de Valeta et Thoma, archidiacano Drocensi, fideiussoribus assignatis, in centum marcarum poena damnandis, si, quod ipse faceret, capitulum ratum habere non vellet, econtra proposuit, asserens, quod quum castra praedicta pro Carnotensi capitulo interdicta fuissent, coram metropolitano pro ipso capitulo fuerat allegatum, quod illius clausulae ratione, quae superius est expressa, terram interdictam pro ipsis absolvere non poterat, nec debebat, propter quod clausulae interpretationem eiusdem districtioni apostolicae reservaret, sed, volens cognoscere utrum iuste an iniuste latum fuerit interdictum, diem partibus assignavit. Verum, quum idem in procinctu esset ad sedem apostolicam veniendi, per procuratorem capituli, magister I. officialis ipsius, quem super negotiis delatis ad ipsum deputaverat auditorem, tanquam suspectus est recusatus, propter manifestas causas, quas ipsi metropolitano non esse credebat ignotas, sed metropolitanus ipsum non removit prorsus a causa, imo ei archidiaconum Eduensem adiunxit, tunc de alio adiungendo non habita mentione, praesentibus partibus, archidiaconoque praesente ac per taciturnitatem praebente consensum. Postmodum vero, idem metropolitanus loco archidiaconi, sicut a parte altera dicebatur, Gaufridum, canonicum Senonensem adiunxit, si archidiaconus interesse non posset. Unde procurator capituli videns praefatum magistrum, qui fuerat recusatus, et dictum Gaufridum quem loco archidiaconi nesciebat adiunctum, ut de causa cognoscerent, residentes, asseruit, se absente archidiacono respondere vel proponere non teneri, et procedere sine ipso volentibus contra dixit, vocem appellationis ad sedem apostolicam interponens. Quumque legitime non constaret, illum Gaufridum loco archidiaconi substitutum, per quem etiam magistri I. suppressa suspicio non fuisset, nec archidiaconum interesse non posse canonice manifestum exsisteret, ipsi, videlicet magister I. et dictus Gaufridus, appellatione contempta, relaxarunt sententiam interdicti, cautione recepta, contra tenorem privilegii ecclesiae Carnotensis, in praeiudicium interpretationis, cuius dies assignata pendebat. Unde, idem Simon quidquid per eos super hoc factum erat, debere dicebat in irritum revocari. Procuratores autem comitissae iam dictae petebant sibi quid sit satisfactio congrua, vel qualiter intelligenda sit per interpretationem apostolicam aperiri, quum huius occasione vocabuli canonici Carnotenses quando et quomodo volunt, comitissae terram eiusdem interdicto supponunt, nec velint sententiam relaxari, donec procedat emenda. Insuper etiam, licet ipsa comitissa sit praesens in villa, quam ipsi volunt supponere interdicto, non erit tamen vocata per eos nec citata legitime, immo, quum placet eis, vocant praepositum, vel aliquem de ballivis, illi dicentes: Aut tu facies ita, vel nos terram interdicti sententiae supponemus; et quum ex parte comitissae proponatur ab eis, hoc, quod ipsi postulant, ad iurisdictionem comitissae spectare, et se offerunt ecclesiae stare mandato, ipsi terram nihilominus interdicunt, ac, si quando super hoc aliquis ex parte comitissae pro querela capituli a iudice ordinario est citatus, non permittunt, quod ipse respondeat, nisi in capitulo Carnotensi, unde procuratores ipsi super gravaminibus istis et aliis eidem comitissae postulabant iustitiam exhiberi. Nos igitur, his et aliis quae coram ipso cardinale fuere proposita, diligenter auditis, quia nobis non constitit utrum legitima fuerit appellatio, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, partibus convocatis et testibus utrinque receptis, quum nondum sit productioni testium renuntiatum hinc inde causam ipsam sufficienter examinare curetis, eamque, sublato appellationis obstaculo, fine canonico terminare. Si vero capitulum factum ipsius Simonis ratum habere noluerit, vos fideiussores praedictos ad poenam nominatam, auctoritate nostra sublato appellationis obstaculo, condemnetis et faciatis quod statueritis per censuram ecclesiasticam firmiter observari, reducentes in irritum quidquid contra ipsam comitissam, postquam ipsius nuntii iter arripuerunt ad sedem apostolicam veniendi, ex parte capituli perperam fuerit attentatum.] Ad intelligendam autem clausulam privilegii memorati credimus distinguendum, utrum in aliquem interdicti vel excommunicationis sententia sit prolata pro contumacia tantum, quia scilicet citatus stare noluit iuri; vel etiam pro offensa, quia videlicet iussus noluit maleficium emendare. In primo casu credimus congrue satisfieri, ut huiusmodi sententia relaxetur, si prius sufficiens standi iuri cautio tribuatur; in secundo vero casu, si offensa est manifesta, non credimus satisfieri congrue, ut relaxetur sententia, nisi prius sufficiens praestetur emenda. Si vero dubia est offensa, sufficere credimus ad relaxandam eandem, si parendi mandato ecclesiae competens satisfactio praebeatur. [*Quod si etc. Dat. Romae Kal. April. Ao. VIII. *1205.]

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: It is summarized in the preceding chapter above; or say: that is called manifest which is established through confession, lawful proof, or the evidence of the thing.

The same, to the Countess of Blois.

Since formerly on behalf of the canons of Chartres a certain chapter was alleged against you, which they said was contained in the privileges of their church—namely, that it is lawful for no one to grant the benefit of absolution, without fitting satisfaction, to persons excommunicated or expressly interdicted on behalf of the canons of Chartres—[because it was brought into question what fitting satisfaction would be, we recall that, for understanding that clause, we made a distinction whether a sentence of interdict or excommunication had been promulgated against someone for contumacy alone, namely because when cited he was unwilling to stand by the law, or also for an offense, namely because when commanded he was unwilling to amend the wrongful act; believing in the first case that fitting satisfaction was made for a sentence of this kind to be relaxed if sufficient security to stand by the law were furnished; but in the second, if the offense were manifest, saying that fitting satisfaction was by no means made for the sentence to be relaxed unless sufficient amends were first exhibited; and if perhaps it were doubtful, deeming it sufficient for relaxing the same sentence if fitting security for obeying the mandate were furnished.] But because, while we loosen a handle, we are not yet said to have bound, on account of the fact that, when those same canons allege, as you assert, that offense to be manifest, it appears manifest not to the judge nor to another but to themselves alone, a greater scruple of a question arose from that expression, namely "manifest"; inclining to your humble prayers, we write back that we understand that offense to be manifest which has become known either through confession or lawful proof, or [even] by the evidence of the thing, which can be concealed by no evasion. [Given at the Lateran, the eighth day before the Kalends of June, in the tenth year, 1207.]

> Summatum est supr. cap. proximo; vel dic: manifestum dicitur, quod per confessionem vel probationem legitimam vel evidentiam rei constat.
>
> Idem Comitissae Blesensi. Quum olim pro canonicis Carnotensibus quoddam capitulum contra te fuerit allegatum, quod dicebant in ecclesiae suae privilegiis contineri, ut videlicet nemini liceat excommunicatis vel nominatim interdictis pro canonicis Carnotensibus absque congrua satisfactione absolutionis beneficium indulgere, [quoniam fuit in quaestionem deductum, quae foret congrua satisfactio, ad intelligendum clausulam illam meminimus distinxisse, utrum in aliquem esset interdicti vel excommunicationis sententia promulgata pro contumacia tantum, quia videlicet citatus noluit stare iuri, vel etiam pro offensa, quia videlicet iussus noluit maleficium emendare, in primo casu credentes congrue satisfieri, ut huiusmodi relaxaretur sententia, si sufficiens standi iuri cautio praeberetur, in secundo vero, si manifesta foret offensa, dicentes, nequaquam satisfieri congrue, ut relaxaretur sententia, nisi prius sufficiens exhiberetur emenda, et si forsitan esset dubia, sufficere reputantes ad relaxandum eandem, si parendi mandato congruens satisdatio praeberetur.] Quia vero, dum ansam solvimus, nondum dicimur ligavisse, propter hoc, quod, eisdem canonicis, velut asseris, proponentibus, illam offensam esse manifestam, non quae iudici, nec quae alii, sed quae sibi tantummodo manifesta videtur: maior ex illa dictione, videlicet: "manifesta," scrupulus quaestionis emersit, tuis humilibus precibus inclinati offensam illam nos rescribimus intelligere manifestam, quae vel per confessionem, vel probationem legitime nota fuerit, aut [etiam] evidentia rei, quae nulla possit tergiversatione celari. [Dat. Lat. VIII. Kal. Iun. Ao. X. 1207.]

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: The words of privileges ought to be understood so that they assert something and no ambiguity remains; and therefore the words "according to" and "in accordance with" appear to have been added causally, not conditionally. This is what it says, according to Panormitanus.

The same, to the Bishop and Cantor of Arras.

When the abbot of Saint Silvanus at Auchy had formerly entered the way of all flesh, and the monks of that place had elected as abbot a certain person from the bosom of that church, but had been unable in any way to obtain confirmation of that election from the Bishop of Thérouanne of good memory, they sought it from the Apostolic See through their proctor. But the proctor of the monastery of Saint Bertin proposed to the contrary that, since according to approved custom and privileges of the Roman Pontiffs the abbots of Auchy ought always to be taken from the monastery of Saint Bertin, an election of this kind was deservedly to be disapproved, as attempted against long-standing custom and against a privilege of the Apostolic See, and the monks of Auchy ought by law to be compelled to elect for themselves as abbot a suitable person from the monastery of Saint Bertin. (And below:) We therefore, having diligently inspected the depositions of witnesses produced before judges delegated by us, found it to be sufficiently proved that for forty years and less the monks of Auchy had elected for themselves an abbot from the monastery of Saint Bertin, in such manner that within the span of the time written above seven persons were taken from the aforesaid community as abbots of Auchy. (And below:) And when on a certain occasion they had elected Guarin, a monk of Auchy, his election could have no force until, after profession had been made at the monastery of Saint Bertin, after some time, namely when it pleased the abbot and convent of that place, he was taken as abbot of Auchy. From the privileges of the Roman Pontiffs granted to the monastery of Saint Bertin it could also be argued evidently that the abbot of Auchy was to be elected from the college of Saint Bertin. For in a privilege of Pope Paschal of happy memory, our predecessor, a chapter of this kind appears inserted: "We grant that the substitution of the abbot among the monks of Saint Silvanus at Auchy shall always remain in your disposition in accordance with the custom of past time," to whose words Pope Innocent of good memory, our predecessor, adhered completely. In a privilege of Pope Calixtus II, a chapter of this kind is also found: "Moreover, in accordance with the decree of Pope Paschal, our lord predecessor of holy memory, by apostolic authority we decree that the substitution of the abbot among those of Auchy be made from nowhere other than your monastery." But to this the opposing party responded that, even if it were proved evidently through the depositions of witnesses that within the aforesaid span of time the abbot of Auchy had always been taken from the monastery of Saint Bertin, nevertheless no prejudice was thereby prepared for the monks of Auchy, since this was done from no necessity, but from free will. (And below:) But it could not be said that from this some custom had been introduced as though by a contradictory judgment, since in the election of the aforesaid Guarin the proceeding is known to have taken place in such a manner outside judgment for the sake of peace. (And below:) Moreover, since Pope Paschal deemed that the substitution of the abbot of Saint Silvanus should be granted to the monastery of Saint Bertin in accordance with the custom of past time, and proof is not made concerning the custom of past time or usage, no prejudice concerning this could be generated for the monastery of Auchy by his privilege and similar ones. To this it was answered to the contrary that this determination, "according to the custom of past time," can be understood both causally and conditionally, and can be referred as much to a personal as to an impersonal verb. For if it determines the impersonal verb, it is understood conditionally, and such is the sense: "We grant that the substitution of the abbot of Saint Silvanus at the monastery of Auchy shall always consist in your disposition, according to the custom of past time," that is, if the custom of past time was such. But if it determines the personal verb, it ought to be understood causally, so that the sense is: "We grant according to the custom of past time," that is, because the custom of past time so obtained, that the substitution namely of the abbot of Saint Silvanus at Auchy shall always consist in your disposition. But this sense appears more correct, because, since a privilege is a private law, and a law ought not to be obscure or captious but certain and manifest, and it would not be private unless it granted something specially, those words assuredly are to be so understood that the matter at issue can be valid rather than perish; especially since the aforesaid Pope C., who succeeded that Paschal as his nearest neighbor, using more equitable words, removed that determination completely so that ambiguity might be removed, and changed what was said in the grant of Paschal—namely, that the substitution of the abbot of Saint Silvanus among those of Auchy should always exist in the disposition of the abbot and brothers of Saint Bertin—decreeing that the substitution of that abbot was to be made from nowhere other than the monastery of Saint Bertin, so that the election could on one side indeed be reduced to the common law. The subsequent custom, which is said to be the best interpreter of laws, also declares that these same words are to be interpreted in this manner. Therefore, having diligently heard these and other things pertaining to the same case, and having understood them perspicaciously, by the counsel of our brothers, we adjudged a dignity of this kind to the monastery of Saint Bertin: that whenever an election of an abbot is imminent in the monastery of Auchy, the monks of Auchy are to elect for themselves as abbot a suitable person from the community of Saint Bertin; namely in such manner that the monastery itself ought to enjoy this prerogative of honor for so long as regular observance flourishes there, so that suitable persons who can be taken as abbot are found in it. [Therefore, the election, etc. Given at the Lateran, the second day before the Kalends of May, in the twelfth year of our pontificate, 1209.]

> Verba privilegiorum debent intelligi, ut aliquid asserant, et non remaneat ambiguitas, et ideo verba: "secundum" et "iuxta," videntur apposita causative, non conditionabiliter. H. d. Panorm.
>
> Idem Episcopo et Cantori Atrebatensibus.
>
> Abbate sancti Silvani Alciatensis olim viam universae carnis ingresso, quum eiusdem loci monachi elegissent quendam de ipsius ecclesiae gremio in abbatem, et eiusdem confirmationem electionis a bonae memoriae Morinensi episcopo nequivissent aliquatenus obtinere, per procuratorem suum eam a sede apostolica petierunt. Ceterum procurator monasterii sancti Bertini proposuit ex adverso, quod, quum secundum approbatam consuetudinem et privilegia Romanorum Pontificum abbates Alciatenses debeant de monasterio sancti Bertini semper assumi, huiusmodi electio erat non immerito reprobanda, utpote contra consuetudinem diuturnam et contra privilegium sedis apostolicae attentata, et Alciatenses monachi debeant de iure compelli, ut de monasterio sancti Bertini personam idoneam sibi eligerent in abbatem. (Et infra:) Nos igitur, depositionibus testium, coram delegatis a nobis iudicibus productorum, diligenter inspectis, invenimus, sufficienter esse probatum, quod a XL. annis et infra monachi Alciatenses abbatem sibi de S. Bertini monasterio elegerunt, ita, quod infra praescripti temporis spatium de praefato coenobio septem fuerunt in Alciacenses abbates assumpti. (Et infra:) Et quum quadam vice Guarinum Alciatensem monachum elegissent, eius electio robur habere non potuit, donec apud monasterium S. Bertini professione facta, post aliquantum temporis, quando scilicet eiusdem loci abbati et conventui placuit, in Alciatensem exstitit abbatem assumptus. Ex privilegiis quoque Romanorum Pontificum monasterio sancti Bertini concessis argui poterat evidenter, Alciatensem abbatem fore de sancti Bertini collegio eligendum. Nam privilegio felicis recordationis Paschalis Papae praedecessoris nostri huiusmodi capitulum apparet insertum: "Subrogationem abbatis penes monasterium sancti Silvani apud Alciatenses monachos iuxta praeteriti temporis morem in vestra semper concedimus dispositione persistere," cuius verbis bonae memoriae Innocentius Papa praedecessor noster prorsus inhaesit. In privilegio etiam Calixti secundi Papae huiusmodi capitulum invenitur: "Porro iuxta domini praedecessoris nostri sanctae memoriae Paschalis Papae decretum abbatis subrogationem penes Alciaten. non aliunde quam de vestro monasterio fieri apostolica auctoritate decernimus." Ad hoc autem pars adversa respondit, quod, si etiam evidenter per depositiones testium probaretur, quod infra praedicti temporis spatium de monasterio sancti Bertini semper fuerit abbas Alciatensis assumptus, ex hoc *tamen nullum Alciacensi monachis praeiudicium parabatur, quum hoc non ex necessitate aliqua factum fuerit, sed ex libera voluntate. *(Et infra:) Sed dici non poterat, quod ex eo consuetudo aliqua quasi contradicto iudicio fuerit introducta, quum in memorati Guarini electione pro bono pacis extra iudicium processum taliter dignoscatur. (Et infra:) Praeterea, quum Paschalis Papa subrogationem abbatis sancti Silvani monasterio S. Bertini iuxta morem praeteriti temporis duxerit concedendam, nec de more praeteriti temporis seu consuetudine fiat fides: per eius privilegium et similia nullum super hoc Alciatensi monasterio poterat praeiudicium generari. Contra quod fuit ex adverso responsum, quod haec determinatio, "secundum praeteriti temporis morem," et causalis, et conditionalis potest intelligi, et tam ad personale quam ad impersonale verbum referri. Si enim impersonale verbum determinet, conditionalis intelligitur, et talis est sensus: "Concedimus subrogationem abbatis sancti Silvani apud Alciatense monasterium in vestra semper dispositione consistere, secundum praeteriti temporis morem;" id est: si mos praeteriti temporis talis fuerit. Si vero verbum determinet personale, causaliter debet intelligi, ut sit sensus: "Concedimus secundum praeteriti temporis morem," id est: quia mos praeteriti temporis sic obtinuit, surrogationem, videlicet abbatis S. Silvini apud Aliacum in vestra semper dispositione consistere. Hic autem sensus rectior esse videtur, quia, quum privilegium sit lex privata, et lex non debeat esse obscura vel captiosa, sed certa et manifesta, nec esset privata, nisi aliquid specialiter indulgeret, profecto sic intelligenda sunt illa verba, ut res, de qua agitur, valere possit potius quam perire, maxime quum supra dictus C. Papa, qui eidem Paschali e vicino successit, verbis aequioribus usus, determinationem illam prorsus amoverit, ut ambiguitas tolleretur, et, quod dicebatur in concessione Paschalis, ut videlicet surrogatio abbatis sancti Silvani apud Alciaten. in dispositione abbatis et fratrum sancti Bertini semper exsisteret, ipse mutaverit, decernens, surrogationem ipsius abbatis non aliunde quam de monasterio sancti Bertini faciendam, ut electio ad ius commune posset ex una quidem parte reduci. Eadem quoque verba sic esse interpretanda, subsequens consuetudo declarat, quae perhibetur esse legum optima interpres. His igitur et aliis, ad eandem causam spectantibus, diligenter auditis et perspicaciter intellectis, de consilio fratrum nostrorum monasterio sancti Bertini adiudicavimus huiusmodi dignitatem, ut, quoties in Alciatensi monasterio abbatis electio imminet facienda, Alciatenses monachi de coenobio S. Bertini personam idoneam sibi eligant in abbatem, ita videlicet, ut tamdiu monasterium ipsum hac honoris debeat praerogativa gaudere, donec ibidem viguerit observantia regularis, ut idoneae personae inveniantur in illo, qui possint in abbatem assumi. [Quocirca electionem etc. Dat. Lat. II. Kal. Maii Pont. nostr. Ao. XII. 1209.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: It states who are called manifest heretics. Second, what tolls, escort fees, and salt dues are interdicted. Third, it is stated how the precept made to a layman—that he answer those complaining of him in the ecclesiastical forum—is understood. This is what it says.

The same, to the Count of Toulouse.

Since doubt arose among certain persons concerning some articles of the mandates made to you by Milo of good memory, our notary, then legate of the Apostolic See, your devotion sought from us who are to be called manifest heretics. Concerning this we have deemed that it should be answered to you that in this case those are understood to be manifest heretics who publicly preach against the catholic faith, or profess or defend their error, or who have been convicted or confessed before their prelates, or have been condemned by sentence by them concerning heretical depravity; their own goods are confiscated and they are punished according to lawful sanctions. Moreover, since the legate mentioned interdicted to you tolls, escort fees, [and] salt dues, we have deemed that it should be declared by apostolic authority that those tolls, salt dues, [and] escort fees are interdicted that do not appear to have been granted by the largess of emperors or kings or of the Lateran Council, or to have been introduced by ancient custom from a time of which no memory exists. (And below:) But since you received in mandate from the legate that you exhibit justice to those complaining of you according to his judgment or that of another legate, an ordinary judge, or [even] a delegated judge, we determine that this is to be understood in such a manner that in every case which by reason of persons or things pertains to the ecclesiastical forum, and concerning all the chapters that were established for preserving peace by the already mentioned legate, or are to be established by apostolic authority, likewise to widows, wards, orphans, and miserable persons, you are bound to answer in an ecclesiastical judgment. [We will moreover, etc.; cf. Comp. IV, c. 1, On Census, IV. 18. Given at the Lateran, the tenth day before the Kalends of February, (?) 1210.]

> Dicit, qui dicuntur haeretici manifesti. Secundo, quae sint pedagia, guidagia et salinaria interdicta. Tertio dicitur, quomodo intelligitur praeceptum, factum laico, quod de se conquerentibus in ecclesiastico foro respondeat. H. d.
>
> Idem Comiti Tholosano.
>
> Super quibusdam mandatorum articulis, tibi a bonae memoriae Milone, notario nostro, tunc temporis apostolicae sedis legato, factorum, apud quosdam dubitatione suborta, tua devotio postulavit a nobis, qui sint dicendi haeretici manifesti. Super quo tibi duximus respondendum, illos in hoc casu intelligendos esse manifestos haereticos, qui contra fidem catholicam publice praedicant, aut profitentur, seu defendunt eorum errorem, vel qui coram praelatis suis convicti sunt vel confessi, vel ab eis sententialiter condemnati super haeretica pravitate; quorum bona propria confiscantur, et ipsi iuxta sanctiones legitimas puniuntur. Praeterea, quum pedagia, guidagia [et] salinaria tibi legatus interdixerit memoratus: auctoritate apostolica duximus declarandum, illa esse pedagia, salinaria [et] guidagia interdicta, quae non apparent imperatorum, vel regum, vel Lateranensis concilii largitione concessa, vel ex antiqua consuetudine a tempore, cuius non exstat memoria, introducta. (Et infra:) Quum autem a legato receperis in mandatis, ut de te conquerentibus secundum suum, vel alterius legati, vel iudicis ordinarii, vel [etiam] delegati arbitrium iustitiam exhiberes: hoc taliter intelligendum esse censemus, ut in omni causa, quae ratione personarum vel rerum ad ecclesiasticum forum pertinet, ac super universis capitulis, quae pro pace servanda sunt per iam dictum legatum statuta, vel auctoritate apostolica statuenda, item viduis, pupillis, orphanis et personis miserabilibus tenearis in iudicio ecclesiastico respondere. [Volumus insuper etc. cf. Comp. IV. c. 1. de cens. IV. 18. Dat. Laterani. X. Kal. Febr. (?) 1210.]

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: A cleric is delivered to the secular court because he is degraded with the secular power present, to which it is announced that it is to receive him into its forum. This is what it says, as far as § "But concerning that man." - § 1. This section does not pertain to the title, but according to some it states an act of grace.

The same, to the Bishop of Paris.

We know that it is expedient that we explain more openly that expression which is contained [both] in the ancient canons and in our decree also issued against forgers—namely, that a cleric degraded by an ecclesiastical judge is to be delivered to the secular court to be punished. For since certain of our predecessors, when consulted concerning this, gave different answers, and the opinion of certain persons is approved by more persons, that a cleric who has been degraded on account of this or another grave disgrace, not only damnable but harmful, is consequently attached to the secular forum as one stripped of clerical privilege when he has been cast out from the ecclesiastical forum, his degradation is to be celebrated with the secular power present, and it is to be pronounced to it, when the degradation has been celebrated, that it receive the degraded person into its forum; and thus he is understood to be delivered to the secular court. Nevertheless, the church ought efficaciously to intercede for him that the sentence concerning him be moderated short of danger of death. § 1. But concerning that criminal forger whom you caused to be captured at our mandate, we have deemed that you should be counseled to confine him in perpetual prison to do penance, to be sustained on the bread of sorrow and water of distress, so that he may bewail the things committed and not further commit things to be bewailed. [Given at the Lateran, the fourteenth day before the Kalends of March, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1209.]

> Clericus traditur curiae saeculari, quia degradatur saeculari potestate praesente, cui denunciatur, ut in suum forum illum recipiat. H. d. Usque ad § Pro illo. - § 1. Iste § non facit ad titulum, sed ponit gratiam secundum quosdam.
>
> Idem Episcopo Parisiensi. Novimus expedire, ut verbum illud, quod [et] in antiquis canonibus, et in nostro quoque decreto contra falsarios edito continetur, videlicet ut clericus, per ecclesiasticum iudicem degradatus, saeculari tradatur curiae puniendus, apertius exponamus. Quum enim quidam antecessorum nostrorum, super hoc consulti, diversa responderint, et quorundam sit opinio a pluribus approbata, ut clericus, qui propter hoc vel aliud flagitium grave, non solum damnabile, sed damnosum, fuerit degradatus, tanquam exutus privilegio clericali saeculari foro per consequentiam applicetur, quum ab ecclesiastico foro fuerit proiectus; eius est degradatio celebranda saeculari potestate praesente, ac pronunciandum est eidem, quum fuerit celebrata, ut in suum forum recipiat degradatum, et sic intelligitur tradi curiae saeculari; pro quo tamen debet ecclesia efficaciter intercedere, ut citra mortis periculum circa eum sententia moderetur. § 1. Pro illo vero falsario scelerato, quem ad mandatum nostrum capi fecisti, hoc tibi duximus consulendum, ut in perpetuum carcerem ad agendam poenitentiam ipsum includas, pane doloris et aqua angustiae sustentandum, ut commissa defleat, et flenda ulterius non committat. [*Dat. Lat. XIV. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. XI. *1209.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: If the Pope grants to a defendant, who on account of the absence of the plaintiff cannot recover possession, that the lapse of a year not prejudice him, this indulgence is understood according to the common law.

Honorius III, to the Archbishop of Tours.

The beloved son James Barba, proctor of the Church of Saint Mark of Venice, having formerly humbly supplicated us that, since he was prepared to exhibit to you the fullness of justice concerning the Church of Saint Mark of Tyre and other things about which a question was moved between you and the Venetians and the vicar of the Venetians, we cause the possession of that church—which by Pope I. of happy memory, our predecessor, was assigned to you for the sake of custody—to be restored to him, Because, while you were then absent for a necessary cause, the possession delivered to you for the sake of custody could not be restored to the adverse party, we granted to him that the lapse of time should not obstruct him from being able to recover that possession. But since so much time is said to have elapsed before the grant of that indulgence that it could suffice for you to produce the effect of true possession according to the statutes of the general council, and, if perhaps that time had not elapsed before the aforesaid indulgence, it appears that the same indulgence closes to you the way to true possession, since it is simply contained in it that henceforth the lapse of time is not to obstruct that proctor from being able to recover the possession mentioned, we, whose intention it was to assist the right of the said proctor and that church without injury to you and your church, By the authority of the present letters declare that it was not our intention through that indulgence to extinguish the right that belongs to you from past possession or, after your return, shall belong to you from future possession. For the adverse party will be able to impute it to itself if it has been negligent in prosecuting its justice, since, when the impediment of your absence ceased, it had the faculty of convening you.

> Si Papa indulget reo, qui propter absentiam actoris possessionem recuperare non potest, quod ei lapsus anni non noceat: intelligitur haec indulgentia secundum ius commune.
>
> Honorius III. Archiepiscopo Turonensi. Dilecto filio Iacobo Barba, procuratore ecclesiae sancti Marci de Venetiis, olim nobis humiliter supplicante, ut, quum paratus esset tibi iustitiae plenitudinem exhibere super ecclesia sancti Marci de Tyro et rebus aliis, de quibus inter te et Venetos, ac vicarium Venetorum quaestio mota fuit, possessionem ipsius ecclesiae, quae per felicis memoriae I. Papam praedecessorem nostrum tibi fuit causa custodiae assignata, sibi restitui faceremus, Quia, te pro causa necessaria tunc absente, possessio, tibi tradita causa custodiae, restitui parti adversae non potuit: nos eidem indulsimus, ut sibi lapsus temporis non obsisteret, quo minus possessionem ipsam recuperare valeret. Quoniam vero tantum temporis ante concessionem ipsius indulgentiae dicitur effluxisse, quod tibi sufficere posset ad verae possessionis effectum secundum statuta concilii generalis, et, si forte tempus ipsum ante praedictam indulgentiam non effluxerit, videtur, quod eadem ad veram possessionem viam tibi praecludat, quum simpliciter contineatur in ipsa, quod de cetero ipsi procuratori lapsus temporis non obsistat, quo minus possessionem recuperare valeat memoratam: nos, quorum fuit intentio, iuri dicti procuratoris et ipsius ecclesiae sine tua et ecclesiae tuae iniuria subvenire, Auctoritate praesentium declaramus, quod nostrae intentionis non fuit per ipsam indulgentiam ius perimere, quod tibi competit ex possessione praeterita, vel post reditum tuum competierit ex futura. Sibi enim imputare poterit pars adversa, si negligens fuerit in sua iustitia prosequenda, quum, absentiae tuae impedimento cessante, conveniendi te habuit facultatem.

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: Under the name of an oblation is understood whatever is offered to a church in any manner, at Mass or outside it, and in a church or outside it.

The same, to the Prior and Clerics of Saints John and Paul at Todi.

When a question was formerly litigated between you on one side and the abbot of Saint P. of Monte in the Diocese of Spoleto on the other concerning the third part of the oblations and possessions of the chapel of Saint Hilary, and of its cells and certain other things, before Angelo of good memory, cardinal deacon of Saint Andrew, then subdeacon and chaplain of Pope I. of happy memory, our predecessor, granted by the same predecessor as auditor to the parties, and it had been proved by you that for forty years and more your church had received the third part of the oblations of that chapel from the clerics instituted by the abbot of Monte, and that he had sometimes committed that same third to you, son prior, to be collected, Pope I. of good memory, our predecessor, adjudging that third to your church, established that it was lawful for you, prior, to collect through those clerics, as had been customary, the part mentioned, as we saw to be contained in the letters of the same predecessor. But because afterward the priest of the aforesaid chapel—asserting that under the name of oblations were by no means contained those things that on the feast of All Saints are sent to that chapel or carried to it or to the house of that priest with a view to the dead; nor those things that are placed in the treasury, which he takes from the altar and causes to be carried through the church fraudulently by someone; and those things before the cross and at the Mass of the Trinity; and those things given for the betrothed; and lamps with oil that are offered to the aforesaid chapel by certain persons; or things that are given to the messenger who is sent through the parish of the aforesaid chapel to receive such things—and denying that the third part of all these should be exhibited to you, endeavored, from other things to be paid under the name of the third part, to retain proportionately what touched your church for making the necessary expenses of the chapel itself, the said predecessor, that every occasion of scandal might be removed, willed and commanded that the third portion be paid integrally, without any subtraction, both from all the things stated above and from oblations and other things. But the chaplains of the aforesaid chapel, wishing still to raise the tinder of another defense, and saying that first fruits and tithes, or those things offered to priests for Masses for the dead, and things for seventh days, thirtieth days, and anniversaries, breads and other things offered within the week, and testamentary dispositions of the dead, are by no means contained under the name of oblations, are unwilling to pay you the third part of all these things. We therefore will and command that, through your cleric instituted by you in the same church, from all the things stated above and from other oblations, by whatever title they have come to the same church, the third portion be paid to you integrally without any diminution.

> Oblationis nomine intelligitur quicquid offertur ecclesiae quocunque modo, in missa vel extra, et in ecclesia vel extra.
>
> Idem Priori et Clericis sanctorum Ioannis et Pauli Tudertinis.
>
> Quum inter vos dudum ex parte una, et abbatem sancti P. de Monte Spoletanae dioecesis ex altera super tertia parte oblationum et possessionum capellae sancti Hilarii, et cellarum ipsius et quibusdam aliis coram bonae memoriae Angelo, sancti Andreae diacono cardinali, tunc subdiacono et capellano felicis recordationis I. Papae praedecessoris nostri, ab eodem praedecessore partibus auditore concesso, quaestio verteretur, et a vobis probatum fuerit, per XL. annos et amplius tertiam partem oblationum eiusdem capellae vestram ecclesiam recepisse a clericis institutis, per abbatem de Monte, tuisque, fili prior, eandem tertiam te commisisse aliquando colligendam: bonae memoriae I. Papa praedecessor noster ipsam tertiam ecclesiae vestrae adiudicans, statuit, ut tibi, prior, liceret per eosdem clericos, sicut fuerat consuetum, partem colligere memoratam, prout in eiusdem praedecessoris literis perspeximus contineri. Verum, quia postmodum sacerdos praedictae capellae, asserens, oblationum nomine minime contineri ea, quae ipsi capellae in festivitate omnium sanctorum mittuntur, vel portantur ad illam, seu ad domum sacerdotis eiusdem intuitu defunctorum, nec non, quae in cimilini ponuntur, quod de altari suscipit, et facit per ecclesiam in fraudem ab aliquo deportari, et quae ante crucem, et in missa Trinitatis, et ea, quae pro desponsatis dantur et lampades cum oleo, quae praedictae capellae ab aliquibus offeruntur, vel quae dantur nuncio, qui ad recipienda talia per praefatae capellae parochiam destinatur, et de his omnibus vobis tertiam partem denegans exhibere, de aliis, nomine tertiae partis persolvendis, pro rata vestram ecclesiam contingentis, retinere nitebatur ad expensas, capellae ipsius necessarias faciendas: dictus praedecessor, ut omnis materia scandali tolleretur, tam de omnibus supra dictis, quam oblationibus aliisque absque subtractione aliqua integre persolvi voluit et mandavit tertiam portionem. At capellani praedictae capellae, volentes adhuc alterius defensionis fomitem suscitare, ac dicentes, primitias et decimas, vel ea, quae offeruntur pro missis mortuorum sacerdotibus, et quae pro septimis, et tricesimis, et anniversariis, panes et alia, quae infra hebdomadam offeruntur, et mortuorum iudicia oblationum nomine minime contineri, de his omnibus tertiam partem solvere vobis nolunt. Volumus igitur et mandamus, ut per vestrum clericum, a vobis in eadem ecclesia institutum, de omnibus supra dictis et de aliis oblationibus, quocunque titulo ad ecclesiam ipsam pervenerint, sine diminutione aliqua integre tertia vobis portio persolvatur.

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: A lawsuit is said to have been moved when issue has been joined.

The same, to Bishop F. and B. Bertrandi.

It was proposed on your behalf before us that the beloved sons, the provost and canons of Arezzo, endeavoring by a sinister interpretation to lead back into the scruple of a renewed question the sentence that Pope I. of happy memory, our predecessor, promulgated concerning the Church of Saint Gregory, certain lands and part of the mills of Cuprene and of Castrosaxo and the mill situated above the bridge of Calianen., and other various articles comprehended in that sentence, between you and their canonry, assert that the chapter of that sentence in which it is said that the canonry itself is not to impede your monastery from being able to rebuild the aforesaid mill of Calianen. in that condition in which it is known to have been at the time of the lawsuit moved, is to be referred to the time when a little stone was cast in denunciation of a new work; while you assert to the contrary that it is to be understood of the time when issue was joined concerning this between you and the aforesaid canonry. Therefore, you humbly supplicated that we deign to decide an altercation of this kind by an interpretation of the chapter stated above. We therefore, having diligently considered the same sentence, interpret what is said in the aforesaid chapter concerning the time of the lawsuit moved to be referred to the time when joinder of issue was made.

Lis dicitur mota, quum fuerit contestata.

Idem Episcopo F. et B. Bertrandi. Ex parte vestra fuit propositum coram nobis, quod dilecti filii praepositus et canonici Aretinenses sententiam, quam felicis memoriae I. Papa praedecessor noster super ecclesia sancti Gregorii, quibusdam terris et parte molendinorum Cuprene ac Castri saxi et molendino, posito supra pontem de Calianen., ac aliis diversis articulis in eadem sententia comprehensis, inter vos et eorum canonicam promulgavit, per interpretationem sinistram in recidivae quaestionis scrupulum reducere molientes, asserunt, capitulum illud eiusdem sententiae, quo dicitur, ne canonica ipsa impediat, quo minus monasterium vestrum molendinum praefatum de Calianen. reaedificare valeat in eo statu, in quo fuisse dignoscitur tempore motae litis, esse referendum ad tempus, quo lapillus in denunciatione novi operis iactus fuit; vobis e contrario asserentibus, illud esse intelligendum de tempore, quo lis super hoc inter vos et praefatam canonicam exstitit contestata. Quare humiliter supplicastis, ut altercationem huiusmodi per interpretationem capituli supra dicti decidere dignaremur. Nos igitur, considerata eadem sententia diligenter, quod in praefato capitulo dicitur de tempore motae litis, interpretamur esse referendum ad tempus, quo litis contestatio facta fuit.

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: A constitution of a legate concerning the third part of mortuaries to be paid to the bishop ought to be understood of those mortuaries in which it is owed by common law.

The same, to the Prelates of the Community of the French at Constantinople.

It was proposed on your behalf before us that your patriarch, our venerable brother, on the occasion of a certain constitution that our venerable brother the Bishop of Albano, then legate of the Apostolic See in the parts of Romania, issued concerning the legacies of the deceased, and which the beloved son I., cardinal priest of the title of Saint Praxedes, renewed while he discharged the office of legation there, unduly exacts from you a third part of certain things that are bequeathed by dying persons to you and your churches. Therefore, since they, as we learned from their interpretation, did not understand that any portion ought to be paid to the cathedral church from those things that are bequeathed in ecclesiastical ornaments, or for the fabric of a church in need of repair, or for the lights of the church, nor also from those things that are bequeathed for an anniversary, seventh, thirtieth, and twentieth day to be performed, or from those that are bequeathed by anyone to persons specially, unless perhaps this is done by reason of the church, we, holding their interpretation ratified, command that the aforesaid constitution be observed according to it, firmly prohibiting anyone from fraudulently procuring anything in the aforesaid matters to the prejudice of the cathedral church.

> Constitutio legati, de solvenda tertia mortuariorum episcopo, intelligi debet de his mortuariis, in quibus de iure communi debetur.
>
> Idem Praelatis universitatis Francigenarum Constantinopolitanae.
>
> Ex parte vestra fuit propositum coram nobis, quod venerabilis frater noster patriarcha vester, occasione constitutionis cuiusdam, quam venerabilis frater noster Albinensis episcopus, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus in partibus Romaniae, super legatis edidit defunctorum, et dilectus filius I. tit. sanctae Praxedis presbyter cardinalis, dum ibidem legationis fungeretur officio, innovavit, de quibusdam, quae vobis et ecclesiis vestris legantur a decedentibus, tertiam indebite a vobis exigit portionem. Quum igitur ipsi, sicut ex eorum interpretatione accepimus, non intellexerint, quod de his, quae in ornamentis ecclesiasticis, vel ad fabricam ecclesiae, reparatione indigentis, aut ad ecclesiae luminaria, nec non et de his quae pro anniversario, septimo, tricesimo ac vicesimo faciendis, vel de his, quae personis specialiter, nisi forsan id fiat ecclesiae ratione, a quocunque legantur, aliqua deberet solvi portio ecclesiae cathedrali: nos, interpretationem eorum ratam habentes, secundum ipsam constitutionem praefatam praecipimus observari, firmiter inhibentes, ne in praedictis aliquid fraudulenter in praeiudicium cathedralis ecclesiae procuretur.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: In a privilege concerning receipt of the fruits of benefices, the appellation of benefices comprehends even greater benefices when the privilege is granted to a bishop for an honorable and favorable cause. This is what it says, with the supplement of Panormitanus.

The same, to the Bishop of Toulon.

Your fraternity intimated to us that, since for the relief of the burden of debts by which you are oppressed we deemed that it should be granted to you that it be lawful for you to retain for two years the fruits of benefices that happen in the meantime to become vacant in your diocese, certain persons, endeavoring by a sinister interpretation to restrict the privilege of apostolic grace, assert that prebends and greater benefices are by no means contained under the name of benefices; concerning this you sought an apostolic interpretation. We therefore, rejecting the opinion of interpreters of this kind, declare by the authority of the present letters that in this case prebends and other benefices are contained under the general name of benefices.

> In privilegio de percipiendis fructibus beneficiorum appellatio beneficiorum etiam maiora beneficia comprehendit, quando privilegium est concessum episcopo pro honesta et favorabili causa. H. d. cum suppletione Panormitani. Idem Episcopo Tolonensi. Tua nobis fraternitas intimavit, quod, quum tibi pro relevatione oneris debitorum, quo premeris, duxerimus indulgendum, ut fructus beneficiorum, quae interim in dioecesi tua vacare contigerit, tibi liceat biennio retinere, quidam, apostolicae gratiae privilegium sinistra interpretatione restringere molientes, asserunt, praebendas et maiora beneficia nequaquam beneficiorum nomine contineri, super quo interpretationem apostolicam postulasti. Nos igitur, interpretum huiusmodi sententiam reprobantes, auctoritate praesentium declaramus, quod in hoc casu praebendae ac alia beneficia generali beneficiorum nomine continentur.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: The word "moderation" contains diminution, not augmentation.

Gregory IX, to the Dean and Sacristan of Engo.

The letters transmitted to us contained that, when the bishop and chapter of Saintes signified that the number of forty canons instituted in their church could not be observed because the resources of the church did not suffice, we gave you in mandate that, moderating the number of canons and prebends in accordance with the resources of the church, you establish that it be firmly observed. But you found that the resources of the aforesaid church had increased so greatly from the time when the number was established that a greater number could be maintained in it without mutilation of the prebends; therefore you asked whether by the word "moderation" added to our letters you ought to augment or diminish that number. Therefore we command that, if the old prebends have not been diminished, since moderation has no place, you leave their number and the number of canons in the same condition in which it is known to have existed hitherto, converting the increase of their revenues to the benefit of that church until we deem that it should be disposed otherwise.

Verbum moderationis diminutionem continet, non augmentum.

Gregorius IX. Decano et Sacristae Engo.

Transmissae nobis literae continebant, quod, significantibus episcopo et capitulo Xantonensi, quod quadragenarius canonicorum numerus, institutus in eorum ecclesia, non poterat observari, pro eo, quia non sufficiebant ecclesiae facultates, vobis dedimus in mandatis, ut canonicorum et praebendarum numerum iuxta facultates ecclesiae moderantes, statueretis eundem firmiter observari. Vos vero invenistis, praedictae ecclesiae facultates a tempore statuti numeri adeo excrevisse, quod absque mutilatione praebendarum maior haberi posset numerus in eadem: quare quaesistis, an per "moderationis" verbum, literis nostris appositum, eundem numerum augmentare vel minuere deberetis. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si veteres non sunt minutae praebendae, quum moderatio locum non habeat, ipsarum et canonicorum numerum dimittatis in eodem statu, in quo hactenus dignoscitur exstitisse, in utilitatem eiusdem ecclesiae convertentes augmentum suorum redituum, donec duxerimus aliter disponendum.

Title XLI: On Rules of Law

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It cannot be summarized more briefly.

John Chrysostom.

Every thing, through whatever causes it comes into being, is dissolved through the same causes.

DE REGULIS IURIS.

> Non potest brevius summari. Ioannes Chrysostomus.
>
> Omnis res, per quascunque causas nascitur, per easdem dissolvitur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Doubtful things ought to be interpreted in the better part.

Bede, in the Homilies.

"Be merciful, etc." In this passage I judge that nothing else is commanded to us except that we interpret in the better part those deeds concerning which it is doubtful with what intention they are done. For what is written, "From their fruits you shall know them," was said of manifest things that cannot be done with a good intention, such as fornication, blasphemies, thefts, drunkennesses, and similar things, concerning which we are permitted to judge.

> Dubia in meliorem partem interpretari debent.
>
> Beda in Homiliis.
>
> "Estote misericordes, etc." Hoc loco nihil aliud nobis praecipi existimo, nisi ut ea facta, quae dubium est quo animo fiant, in meliorem interpretemur. Quod enim scriptum est: "Ex fructibus eorum cognoscetis eos," de manifestis dictum est, quae non possunt bono animo fieri, ut stuprum, blasphemiae, furta, ebrietates et similia, de quibus nobis permittitur iudicare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Truth is not to be omitted in order to avoid scandal.

The same.

"He who shall cause scandal, etc." It is more useful that scandal be permitted to arise than that truth be abandoned.

> Propter scandalum evitandum veritas non est omitenda.
>
> Idem.
>
> "Qui scandalizaverit etc." Utilius scandalum nasci permittitur, quam veritas relinquatur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: On account of necessity an unlawful thing is made lawful.

The same, on Mark.

Necessity makes lawful what is not lawful by law. For the sabbath also was commanded to be observed; nevertheless the Maccabees fought on the sabbath without fault of their own. So too today, if a sick person breaks a fast, he is not held guilty of his vow.

> Propter necessitatem illicitum efficitur licitum.
>
> Idem super Marcum.
>
> Quod non est licitum lege, necessitas facit licitum. Nam et sabbatum custodiri praeceptum est; Maccabaei tamen sine culpa sua in sabbato pugnabant; sic et hodie, si quis ieiunium fregerit aegrotus, reus voti non habetur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A thing done unlawfully induces an obligation.

Gregory VII.

What has been introduced secretly, or through force, or otherwise unlawfully, ought to subsist with no stability.

> Illicite factum obligationem inducit.
>
> Gregorius VII. Quod latenter, aut per vim, vel alias illicite introductum est, nulla debet stabilitate subsistere.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Tortures are not to be inflicted without judgments preceding.

The same, to the Bishop of Varia.

When in contemplation (And below:) At the very beginning of the case, one is not to begin with tortures.

> Tormenta, iudiciis non praecedentibus, inferenda non sunt.
>
> Idem Variensi Episcopo.
>
> Quum in contemplatione: (Et infra:) In ipso causae initio non est a quaestionibus inchoandum.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: He who offends an ecclesiastical thing or person is sacrilegious.

Pope Stephen.

Those things which are frequently usurped must more frequently be repeated and prohibited. For Whatever is done unjustly against things consecrated to God and against bishops is reckoned as sacrilege, because they are sacred and ought not to be violated by anyone.

> Sacrilegus est offendens rem vel personam ecclesiasticam.
>
> Stephanus Papa.
>
> Quae multotiens usurpantur necesse est saepius replicentur et prohibeantur. Nam Quicquid in sacratis Deo rebus et episcopis iniuste agitur, pro sacrilegio reputatur, quia sacra sunt, et a quoquam violari non debent.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: He who does otherwise than he ought is not said to do.

Augustine.

He who performs a precept from fear performs it otherwise than he ought, and therefore now does not perform it.

> Qui facit aliter quam debet, facere non dicitur.
>
> Augustinus.
>
> Qui ex timore facit praeceptum, aliter quam debeat facit, et ideo iam non facit.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: One committing one sin is guilty of all as regards eternal life.

The same, in the Book on Penance.

Let the sinner bewail that, offending in one, he has been made guilty of all [through ingratitude].

> Committens unum peccatum, reus est omnium quoad vitam aeternam.
>
> Idem in libro de poenitentia.
>
> Defleat peccator, quia, offendens in uno factus est omnium [per ingratitudinem] reus.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Ignorance does not excuse a prelate concerning the sins of his subjects. This is what it says as regards the mystical and moral understanding.

Gregory, in the Register.

Although the consideration of the case [moves me, nevertheless charity also impels me to write, because both once and twice I wrote to my most holy brother, Lord John, but I did not receive his letters. For another secular person spoke to me under his name; and if those were his letters, I was not watchful, who believed concerning him far otherwise than I found. For I had written concerning the case of the most reverend man John the priest, and concerning the questions of the monks of Isauria, one of whom, also constituted in the priesthood, was beaten with rods in your church; and your most holy fraternity wrote back to me, as I recognize from the name of the epistle, that he did not know concerning what case I was writing. At this reply I was greatly astonished, silently revolving with myself whether he speaks the truth.] What can be worse than that such things are done against the servants of God, and he himself, who is at hand, does not know? For indeed there can be no excuse for the shepherd if the wolf eats the sheep and the shepherd does not know. [But if your holiness knew, etc.]

> Ignorantia non excusat praelatum in peccatis subditorum. H. d. quoad mysticum et moralem intellectum.
>
> Gregorius in Registro.
>
> Quamvis causae [consideratio me movet, ad scribendum tamen et caritas impellit, quia et semel et bis sanctissimo fratri meo domino Ioanni scripsi, sed non eius epistolas recepi. Alter enim saecularis mihi sub eius nomine loquebatur, quae, si epistolae eius fuerunt, ego vigilans non fui, qui longe de eo aliter credidi quam inveni. De causa enim reverendissimi viri Ioannis presbyteri scripseram, atque de quaestionibus monachorum Isauriae, quorum unus, et in sacerdotio positus, in ecclesia vestra fustibus caesus est, et rescripsit mihi, sicut ex nomine epistolae agnosco, sanctissima fraternitas tua, quia nescierit, de qua causa scriberem. Ad quod rescriptum vehementer obstupui, mecum tacitus revolvens, si verum dicit.] Quid esse deterius potest, quam ut agantur talia contra servos Dei, et ipse nesciat, qui praesto est? Non enim potest esse pastoris excusatio, si lupus oves comedit, et pastor nescit. [Si autem scivit sanctitas vestra etc.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Homage is not furnished for spiritual things.

Lucius III.

It is unworthy and foreign to the custom of the Roman Church that anyone be compelled to do homage for spiritual things.

Pro spiritualibus homagium non praestatur.

Lucius III. Indignum est et a Romanae ecclesiae consuetudine alienum, ut pro spiritualibus facere quis homagium compellatur.