Book One

Rex pacificus

Gregory,

bishop, servant of the servants of God, to his beloved sons, all the doctors and scholars dwelling at Bologna: greeting and apostolic blessing.

The peace-making King, in his merciful compassion, has ordained that his subjects should be chaste, peaceable, and honorable. But unbridled cupidity, reckless of itself, the rival of peace, the mother of lawsuits, the material of quarrels, daily generates so many new disputes that, unless justice by its own power restrained its attempts and unraveled its entangled questions, the abuse of litigants would extinguish the law of human fellowship, and, a bill of divorce having been given, concord would be exiled beyond the bounds of the world.

Therefore law is promulgated so that harmful appetite may be confined beneath the rule of law, through which the human race is instructed to live honorably, not to injure another, and to render to each person his right.

Indeed, for the common benefit—and especially that of students—we have taken care, through our beloved son Brother Raymond, our chaplain and penitentiary, to have brought together into one volume, with superfluities cut away, the various constitutions and decretal letters of our predecessors that were dispersed among different volumes. Some of these seemed to introduce confusion because of their excessive similarity, some because of contradiction, and others because of their prolixity. Still others circulated outside the aforesaid volumes and, as though uncertain, frequently wavered in judicial proceedings. We have added our own constitutions and decretal letters, through which certain matters that were doubtful in the earlier ones are clarified.

Wishing, therefore, that everyone should use this compilation alone in judicial proceedings and in the schools, we strictly prohibit anyone from presuming to make another without the special authority of the Apostolic See.

DECRETALIUM D. GREGORII PAPAE IX. COMPILATIO

LIBER PRIMUS.

GREGORIUS,

Episcopus servus servorum Dei, dilectis filiis doctoribus et scholaribus universis Bononiae commorantibus salutem et apostolicam benedictionem.

Rex pacificus pia miseratione disposuit sibi subditos fore pudicos, pacificos et honestos. Sed effrenata cupiditas, sui prodiga, pacis aemula, mater litium, materia iurgiorum, tot quotidie nova litigia generat, ut, nisi iustitia conatus eius sua virtute reprimeret, et quaestiones ipsius implicitas explicaret, ius humani foederis litigatorum abusus exstingueret, et dato libello repudii concordia extra mundi terminos exsularet. Ideoque lex proditur, ut appetitus noxius sub iuris regula limitetur, per quam genus humanum, ut honeste vivat, alterum non laedat, ius suum unicuique tribuat, informatur. Sane diversas constitutiones et decretales epistolas praedecessorum nostrorum, in diversa dispersas volumina, quarum aliquae propter nimiam similitudinem, et quaedam propter contrarietatem, nonnullae etiam propter sui prolixitatem, confusionem inducere videbantur, aliquae vero vagabantur extra volumina supradicta, quae tanquam incertae frequenter in iudiciis vacillabant, ad communem, et maxime studentium, utilitatem per dilectum filium fratrem Raymundum, capellanum et poenitentiarum nostrum, illas in unum volumen resecatis superfluis providimus redigendas, adiicientes constitutiones nostras et decretales epistolas, per quas nonnulla, quae in prioribus erant dubia, declarantur. Volentes igitur, ut hac tantum compilatione universi utantur in iudiciis et in scholis, districtius prohibemus, ne quis praesumat aliam facere absque auctoritate sedis apostolicae speciali.

LIBER PRIMUS.

Title I: On the Supreme Trinity and the Catholic Faith

Chapter I

Latin source headnote (Abbas Siculus): It treats of the Trinity and its works; of faith and the articles of faith. In §3 it treats here of the ecclesiastical sacraments.

Innocent III, at the general council, chapter I.

We firmly believe and simply confess that there is one God alone, true, eternal, immeasurable and immutable, incomprehensible, omnipotent and ineffable: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; three persons indeed, but one essence, substance, or nature, altogether simple; the Father from no one, the Son however from the Father alone, and the Holy Spirit equally from both; without beginning, always, and without end; the Father begetting, the Son being born, and the Holy Spirit proceeding; consubstantial, coequal, co-omnipotent, and coeternal; the one principle of all things; creator of all things visible and invisible, spiritual and corporeal; who by his almighty power at once from the beginning of time created from nothing both creatures, the spiritual and the corporeal, namely the angelic and the mundane, and thereafter the human creature, constituted as though common from spirit and body. For the devil and the other demons were indeed created good in nature by God, but they themselves through themselves became evil. Man, however, sinned at the suggestion of the devil.

§1. This Holy Trinity, undivided according to its common essence and distinguished according to personal properties, first through Moses and the holy Prophets and his other servants, according to the most orderly disposition of times, gave saving doctrine to the human race.

§2. And at last the only-begotten Son of God, Jesus Christ, incarnate in common by the whole Trinity, conceived from Mary ever-Virgin with the cooperation of the Holy Spirit, having become true man, composed of a rational soul and human flesh, one person in two natures, demonstrated the way of life more clearly. Although according to his divinity he is immortal and impassible, the very same, according to his humanity, became passible and mortal. He also, for the salvation of the human race, suffered and died on the wood of the cross, descended to the lower regions, rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven; but he descended in soul and rose in flesh, and ascended equally in both, to come at the end of the age, to judge the living and the dead, and to render to each according to his works, to the reprobate as well as to the elect. All of them will rise with their own bodies, which they now bear, so that they may receive according to their works, whether these were good or evil: the former, with the devil, perpetual punishment; the latter, with Christ, everlasting glory.

§3. There is, moreover, one universal Church of the faithful, outside which no one at all is saved, in which Jesus Christ himself is the priest and the sacrifice. His body and blood are truly contained in the sacrament of the altar under the species of bread and wine, the bread having been transubstantiated into the body and the wine into the blood by divine power, so that, for the accomplishing of the mystery of unity, we ourselves may receive from what is his that which he himself received from what is ours. And certainly no one can confect this sacrament except a priest who has been duly ordained, according to the keys of the Church that Jesus Christ himself granted to the Apostles and their successors.

§4. The sacrament of baptism, which at the invocation of God and of the undivided Trinity—namely, of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit—is consecrated in water, avails for salvation when duly conferred upon infants as well as adults, by anyone, in the form of the Church. And if, after receiving baptism, anyone has fallen into sin, he can always be restored through true penance.

§5. Not only virgins and the continent, but also the married, pleasing God through right faith and good work, merit to attain eternal blessedness.

> Firmiter credimus et simpliciter confitemur, quod unus solus est verus Deus, aeternus, immensus et incommutabilis, incomprehensibilis, omnipotens et ineffabilis, Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus: tres quidem personae, sed una essentia, substantia seu natura simplex omnino; Pater a nullo, Filius autem a Patre solo, ac Spiritus sanctus pariter ab utroque, absque initio, semper ac sine fine; Pater generans, Filius nascens, et Spiritus sanctus procedens; consubstantiales, et coaequales, et coomnipotentes, et coaeterni; unum universorum principium; creator omnium visibilium et invisibilium, spiritualium et corporalium; qui sua omnipotenti virtute simul ab initio temporis utramque de nihilo condidit creaturam spiritualem et corporalem, angelicam videlicet et mundanam, ac deinde humanam, quasi communem ex spiritu et corpore constitutam. Diabolus enim et alii daemones a Deo quidem natura creati sunt boni; sed ipsi per se facti sunt mali. Homo vero diaboli suggestione peccavit. § 1. Haec sancta trinitas, secundum communem essentiam individua et secundum personales proprietates discreta, primo per Moysen et sanctos Prophetas aliosque famulos suos iuxta ordinatissimam dispositionem temporum doctrinam humano generi tribuit salutarem. § 2. Et tandem unigenitus Dei Filius Iesus Christus, a tota trinitate communiter incarnatus ex Maria semper virgine Spiritus sancti cooperatione conceptus, verus homo factus, ex anima rationali et humana carne compositus, una in duabus naturis persona, viam vitae manifestius demonstravit. Qui quum secundum divinitatem sit immortalis et impassibilis, idem ipse secundum humanitatem factus est passibilis, et mortalis. Qui etiam pro salute humani generis in ligno crucis passus et mortuus descendit ad inferos, resurrexit a mortuis, et ascendit in coelum; sed descendit in anima et resurrexit in carne, ascenditque pariter in utroque venturus in fine saeculi, iudicaturus vivos et mortuos, et redditurus singulis secundum opera sua, tam reprobis quam electis, qui omnes cum suis propriis resurgent corporibus, quae nunc gestant, ut recipiant secundum opera sua, sive bona fuerint sive mala, illi cum diabolo poenam perpetuam, et isti cum Christo gloriam sempiternam. § 3. Una vero est fidelium universalis ecclesia, extra quam nullus omnino salvatur, in qua idem ipse sacerdos est sacrificium Iesus Christus, cuius corpus et sanguis in sacramento altaris sub speciebus panis et vini veraciter continentur, transsubstantiatis pane in corpus et vino in sanguinem potestate divina, ut at perficiendum mysterium unitatis accipiamus ipsi de suo quod accepit ipse de nostro. Et hoc utique sacramentum nemo potest conficere, nisi sacerdos, qui rite fuerit ordinatus, secundum claves ecclesiae, quas ipse concessit Apostolis eorumque successoribus Iesus Christus. § 4. Sacramentum vero baptismi, quod ad Dei invocationem et individuae trinitatis, videlicet Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti, consecratur in aqua, tam parvulis quam adultis in forma ecclesiae a quocunque rite collatum proficit ad salutem. Et si post susceptionem baptismi quisquam prolapsus fuerit in peccatum, per veram potest semper poenitentiam reparari. § 5. Non solum autem virgines et continentes, verum etiam coniugati per fidem rectam et operationem bonam placentes Deo ad aeternam merentur beatitudinem pervenire.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote (Abbas Siculus): The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, by a true union—not a collective union or one based upon likeness—are one essence, substance, or nature. This substance is not begetting, begotten, or proceeding, because those acts are attributed not to the substance but to the persons; nor on this account is a quaternity inferred in the Trinity. Those holding the contrary are to be deemed heretics unless they recover from their error and submit themselves to the correction of the Apostolic See.

The same, at the same council.

We therefore condemn and reprove the little book or treatise that Abbot Joachim published against Master Peter Lombard concerning the unity or essence of the Trinity, calling him a heretic and a madman because in his Sentences he said: "For a certain supreme reality is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and it is neither begetting, nor begotten, nor proceeding." From this [Joachim] asserts that [Peter] established in God not so much a trinity as a quaternity: namely, the three persons and that common essence as though it were a fourth. He openly declares that there is no reality that is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and that there is no essence, substance, or nature, although he grants that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are one essence, one substance, and one nature.

But he acknowledges that a unity of this kind is not true and proper, but is, as it were, collective and based upon likeness: just as many men are called one people and many faithful one Church, according to the saying, "The multitude of believers had one heart and one soul"; and, "He who cleaves to God is one spirit with him." Likewise: "He who plants and he who waters are one"; and, "We are all one body in Christ." Again, in the Book of Kings: "My people and your people are one."

To establish this opinion of his, he especially adduces the statement that Christ makes concerning the faithful in the Gospel: "I will, Father, that they may be one in us, just as we are one, so that they may be perfected into one." For, as he says, Christ's faithful are not one—that is, some one reality common to all—but they are one in this manner: that is, one Church because of the unity of the catholic faith, and finally one kingdom because of the union of indissoluble charity. In the same way it is read in the canonical epistle of John the Apostle: "For there are three who give testimony in heaven: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one"; and immediately it is added: "And there are three who give testimony on earth: the spirit, the water, and the blood, and these three are one," as is found in certain codices.

§1. We, however, with the holy and universal council approving, believe and confess with Peter [Lombard] that there is a certain one supreme reality, incomprehensible indeed and ineffable, which truly is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit: three persons together and each one of them singly. And therefore in God there is only a trinity, not a quaternity, because each of the three persons is that reality—namely, the divine substance, essence, or nature—which alone is the principle of all things, besides which no other can be found.

And that reality is neither begetting, nor begotten, nor proceeding; rather, it is the Father who begets, the Son who is begotten, and the Holy Spirit who proceeds, so that distinctions are in the persons and unity in the nature. Although, therefore, the Father is one [person], the Son another, and the Holy Spirit another, nevertheless not another [thing]; rather, that which the Father is, the Son is, and the Holy Spirit is wholly the same, so that according to the orthodox and catholic faith they are believed to be consubstantial.

For the Father, by begetting the Son from eternity, gave his substance to him, according to what [the Son] himself bears witness: "What the Father gave me is greater than all things." It cannot be said that he gave him part of his substance and retained part for himself, since the Father's substance is indivisible, being altogether simple. Nor can it be said that the Father, in begetting, transferred his substance into the Son—as though he gave it to the Son in such a way that he did not retain it for himself—for otherwise it would have ceased to be substance.

It is therefore evident that, without any diminution, the Son by being born received the substance of the Father; and thus the Father and the Son have the same substance, and so the Father and the Son are the same reality, as is also the Holy Spirit proceeding from both.

Therefore, when the Truth prays to the Father for his faithful, saying, "I will that they may be one in us, just as we are one," this term "one," when applied to the faithful, is taken so that a union of charity in grace is understood; but when applied to the divine persons, so that a unity of identity in nature is recognized. In the same way the Truth says elsewhere: "Be perfect, just as your heavenly Father is perfect," as though he were to say more plainly: Be perfect with the perfection of grace, just as your heavenly Father is perfect with the perfection of nature. Each, that is, in its own manner; because between Creator and creature no similarity can be observed so great that a greater dissimilarity must not be observed between them.

§2. If anyone, therefore, presumes to defend or approve the opinion or doctrine of the aforesaid Joachim in this matter, let him be avoided by all as a heretic.

Nevertheless, we do not wish on this account to derogate in any respect from the monastery of Fiore, of which Joachim himself was the founder, because there is there both a regular institution and a salutary observance; especially since Joachim himself ordered all his writings to be submitted to us for the judgment of the Apostolic See, to be approved or even corrected. He dictated a letter that he signed with his own hand, in which he firmly confesses that he holds that faith which the Roman Church holds, which, by the Lord's ordering, is the mother and teacher of all the faithful.

§3. We also reprove and condemn the most perverse dogma of the impious Amalric, whose mind the father of lies has so blinded that his doctrine is to be judged not so much heretical as insane.

> Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus vera unione, non collectiva seu similitudinaria, sunt una essentia, substantia seu natura; quae substantia non est generans, nec genita, nec procedens; quia illi actus non attribuuntur substantiae, sed personis: nec per hoc in trinitate concluditur quaternitas. Contrarium sentientes ut haeretici sunt censendi, nisi ab errore resipiscant, et correctioni apostolicae sedis se supponant. Abb. Siculus.

> Damnamus ergo et reprobamus libellum seu tractatum, quem Abbas Ioachim edidit contra magistrum Petrum Lombardum de unitate seu essentia trinititatis, appellans ipsum haereticum et insanum pro eo, quod in suis dixit sententiis: "Quoniam quaedam summa res est Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus, et illa non est generans, neque genita, neque procedens." Unde asserit, quod ille non tam trinitatem, quam quaternitatem adstruebat in Deo, videlicet tres personas, et illam communem essentiam quasi quartam; manifeste protestans, quod nulla res est, quae sit Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus; nec est essentia, nec substantia, nec natura; quamvis concedat, quod Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus sunt una essentia, una substantia unaque natura. Verum unitatem huiusmodi non veram et propriam, sed quasi collectivam et similitudinariam esse fatetur, quemadmodum dicuntur multi homines unus populus, et multi fideles una ecclesia, iuxta illud: "Multitudinis credentium erat cor unum et anima una," et: "Qui adhaeret Deo, unus spiritus est cum illo." Item: "Qui plantat, et qui rigat, unum sunt," et: "Omnes unum corpus sumus in Christo." Rursus in libro Regum: "Populus meus et populus tuus unum sunt." Ad hanc autem suam sententiam adstruendam illud potissimum verbum inducit, quod Christus de fidelibus inquit in evangelio: "Volo, pater, ut sint unum in nobis, sicut et nos unum sumus, ut sint consummati in unum." Non enim, ut ait, fideles Christi sunt unum, id est quaedam una res, quae communis sit omnibus, sed hoc modo sunt unum, id est una ecclesia, propter catholicae fidei unitatem, et tandem unum regnum, propter unionem indissolubilis caritatis, quemadmodum in canonica Ioannis Apostoli epistola legitur: "Quia tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in coelo, Pater, et Filius et Spiritus sanctus, et hi tres unum sunt," statimque subiungitur: "et tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in terra: spiritus, aqua et sanguis; et hi tres unum sunt," sicut in quibusdam codicibus invenitur. § 1. Nos autem sacro et universali approbante concilio credimus et confitemur cum Petro, quod una quaedam summa res est, incomprehensibilis quidem et ineffabilis, quae veraciter est Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus: tres simul personae ac sigillatim quaelibet earundem. Et ideo in Deo solummodo trinitas est, non quaternitas, quia quaelibet trium personarum est illa res, videlicet substantia, essentia seu natura divina, quae sola est universorum principium, praeter quod aliud inveniri non potest. Et illa res non est generans, neque genita, nec procedens; sed est Pater, qui generat, et Filius, qui gignitur, et Spiritus sanctus, qui procedit, ut distinctiones sint in personis, et unitas in natura. Licet igitur alius sit Pater, alius Filius, alius Spiritus sanctus, non tamen aliud, sed id, quod est Pater, est Filius, et Spiritus sanctus idem omnino, ut secundum orthodoxam et catholicam fidem consubstantiales esse credantur. Pater enim ab aeterno Filium generando suam substantiam ei dedit, iuxta quod ipse testatur: "Pater quod dedit mihi, maius omnibus est." Ac dici non potest, quod partem substantiae suae illi dederit, et partem ipse sibi retinuerit, quum substantia Patris indivisibilis sit, utpote simplex omnino. Sed nec dici potest, quod Pater in Filium transtulerit suam substantiam generando, quasi sic dederit eam Filio, quod non retinuerit ipsam sibi; alioquin desiisset esse substantia. Patet ergo, quod sine ulla diminutione, Filius nascendo substantiam Patris accepit, et ita Pater et Filius habent eandem substantiam, et sic eadem res est Pater et Filius, nec non et Spiritus sanctus ab utroque procedens. Quum ergo Veritas pro fidelibus suis orat ad Patrem: "Volo," inquiens, "ut ipsi sint unum in nobis, sicut et nos unum sumus," hoc nomen "unum" pro fidelibus quidem accipitur, ut intelligatur unio caritatis in gratia; pro personis vero divinis, ut attendatur identitatis unitas in natura, quemadmodum alibi Veritas ait: "Estote perfecti, sicut et Pater vester coelestis perfectus est," ac si diceret manifestius: Estote perfecti perfectione gratiae, sicut Pater vester coelestis perfectus est perfectione naturae. Utraque videlicet suo modo: quia inter creatorem et creaturam non potest tanta similitudo notari, quin inter eos maior sit dissimilitudo notanda. § 2. Si quis igitur sententiam vel doctrinam praefati Ioachim in hac parte defendere vel approbare praesumpserit, tanquam haereticus ab omnibus evitetur. In nullo tamen propter hoc Florensi monasterio, cuius ipse Ioachim exstitit institutor, volumus derogari, quoniam ibi et regularis est institutio, et observantia salutaris, maxime quum ipse Ioachim omnia scripta sua nobis assignari mandaverit apostolicae sedis iudicio approbanda seu etiam corrigenda, dictans epistolam, quam propria manu subscripsit, in qua firmiter confitetur, se illam fidem tenere, quam Romana tenet ecclesia, quae disponente Domino cunctorum fidelium mater est et magistra. § 3. Reprobamus etiam et condemnamus perversissimum dogma impii Almarici, cuius mentem sic pater mendacii excaecavit, ut eius doctrina non tam haeretica censenda sit quam insana.

Title II: On Constitutions

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The statutes of canon law bind everyone, and judicial proceedings, both in pronouncing and in deciding judgments, are to be regulated according to their tenor.

From the Council of Meaux.

The statutes of the canons are to be observed by everyone [without prejudice], and no one in ecclesiastical actions or judgments is to be guided by his own judgment, but by their authority.

DE CONSTITUTIONIBUS.

Iuris canonici statuta omnes ligant, et eorum ritu tam in pronunciando quam in decidendo iudicia sunt regulanda.

Ex concilio Meldensi.

Canonum statuta [sine praeiudicio] custodiantur ab omnibus, et nemo in actionibus vel iudiciis ecclesiasticis suo sensu, sed eorum auctoritate ducatur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A constitution has regard to future matters, and not to past ones.

Gregory, in the Register.

Recognizing [what zeal for Christian slaves, whom the Jews buy from the regions of Gaul, has inflamed your fraternity, we indicate that your solicitude has so pleased us that our deliberation also judged that they should be restrained from trade of this kind. But, when Basil the Hebrew came with other Jews, we learned that the purchase of these slaves is imposed upon them by various judges of the commonwealth, and that it happens that pagans and Christians alike are purchased. Hence it was necessary so to dispose the matter by a careful ordinance that neither those issuing the mandates should be frustrated nor those who say that they obey against their will should unjustly sustain any losses. Accordingly, let your fraternity provide with vigilant solicitude that this be observed and maintained: when they return from the aforesaid province, any Christian slaves whom they happen to bring are either to be delivered to those who commissioned them or certainly sold to Christian purchasers within the fortieth day; and, when this number of days has elapsed, none is to remain with them in any manner. But if some of those same slaves should perhaps incur such illness that they cannot be sold within the appointed days, solicitude must be employed so that, when they have been restored to their former health, they are likewise disposed of by every means, because] it is not fitting that a matter which is free from fault be made the occasion of loss. Whenever something new is established, it is customary for it to impose a rule upon future matters in such a way that it does not consign the past to numerous losses. [If any slaves from purchases of the past year have remained with them, or have recently been taken from them by you, while they are in your keeping, let them have permission to alienate them,] lest, before the prohibition, they be able in ignorance to incur a loss which, after they have been prohibited, it is fitting for them to sustain. [It has been reported, etc.]

Augustine, on the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A constitution of a college made to the detriment of some and the advantage of others is not valid when a reasonable cause is lacking. Or thus: Without a reasonable cause, the greater part of a chapter cannot abolish a custom by fostering its private advantage.

Innocent III to the Archbishop of Sens and the Bishop of Troyes.

Since we are all one body in Christ, while individually we are members one of another, the greater ought not to envy the lesser, nor the elder the younger; rather, all who serve the one Lord in one church should rejoice in equal liberty, since weight and weight, measure and measure, are both abominable before God, and the householder of the Gospel rewarded with equal pay the first laborers in his vineyard and the last.

But it has come to our hearing that our beloved sons, the canons of Troyes, intent upon their own advantages and envious of the advancement of others, have made a new constitution in the church of Troyes: that, while they themselves are to receive their revenues in full both when present and when absent, those who were instituted in the same church after that constitution, or who will be instituted in the future, are not to receive revenues from it in their absence, but only when they have been resident there—even though, according to the custom of the church of Troyes, all have customarily been equal in this matter. They also established that, although vineyards are annexed to the individual prebends, with the canons themselves possessing their own vineyards while they live, the vineyards of those who die are not to pass to their successors, but their proceeds are to be divided among the individual canons.

Since, therefore, each person ought himself to use that rule of law which he establishes for another, and the authority of the wise man says, "Submit to the law which you yourself have enacted," by apostolic writings we command your fraternity to make the older canons equal to the younger, and the younger equal to the older, in the receipt of the fruits both of the prebends and of the vineyards, according to the former custom observed until the time of the aforesaid constitution, or according to a reasonable institution to be observed in the future; striking with ecclesiastical constraint any who decide to resist. Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A constitution of laymen does not bind a church or its goods.

The same to the Bishop of Trent.

Things attempted to the prejudice of churches and ecclesiastical men ought not to acquire firmness; rather, they ought to be invalidated for the indemnity of the churches.

Indeed, it has come to our hearing that the citizens of Treviso and Conegliano, rashly usurping for themselves—and would that it were for themselves alone—the jurisdiction of making constitutions, cloak impiety under the name of piety; and, while they strive to show favor to certain persons out of another's property, they are burdensome to churches and ecclesiastical men. For, as we have learned, they established that if anyone credibly alleges that he is tending toward poverty, he is to have free power to alienate a fief which he holds from a church or from others, through officials appointed for this purpose by the citizens of Treviso and Conegliano; nor is the purchaser bound to answer to the former lord except only for a sixth part of the price, which he will tender to him if he wishes to receive it. By this the rights of the Church are injured not a little.

Wishing, therefore, to take thought for the indemnity of churches and to make provision against burdens of this kind, by the authority of the present writings we quash both this constitution and the sales of ecclesiastical fiefs made without the lawful assent of ecclesiastical persons on the occasion of this constitution—or, more truly, this destitution or destruction—and decree that they have no force. [Let no one therefore, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the tenth day before the Kalends of April, 1199.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A dignity removed from a church by a statute of the chapter confirmed by the Pope is not thereafter deemed vacant unless the statute has been revoked by a contrary act.

The same.

When our beloved sons, the archdeacon of Toul and G., proctor of the chapter of Toul, had approached the Apostolic See, we granted them our venerable brother Hugh, Bishop of Ostia, as auditor. In his presence the aforesaid archdeacon proposed that, when formerly certain canons of Toul had intimated to our ears that the offices of primicerius and scholasticus in the church of Toul had been vacant for so long that the grant of those offices had devolved upon us, we commanded our beloved sons, the abbots of Haute-Seille and Beaupré and the dean of the monastery of La Colombe, to inquire into the truth of the matter; and, if it were established that those offices had been vacant for so long that, according to the statutes of the Lateran Council, the grant of them had devolved upon us, they were in our stead to institute suitable persons from the church of Toul or elsewhere in those offices and cause them to possess the same peaceably.

[Those judges, executing the apostolic mandate, cited the parties to their presence. On the appointed day, when the said Master W. and F. appeared before them, John the priest presented himself in their sight with letters of the chapter of Toul, in which that chapter offered as its excuse that, because of the Duke of Lorraine, who had declared himself their enemy, they could not approach the place appointed by those judges without danger to property and persons. The said priest, wishing to confirm this very thing by his own oath, requested a place to which the canons of Toul could safely come. After the said master and priest had litigated over this for some time, that priest, when required to take the oath which he had earlier offered, refused; and, uttering a declaration of appeal, he presented letters of the chapter in which he had been appointed proctor solely for the purpose of appealing.

But the aforesaid judges, regarding both the excuses proposed by that priest and the appeal interposed as dilatory, on the advice of prudent men received the witnesses whom the said master and F. wished to introduce, and appointed another day for the often-mentioned chapter at Saint-Evre. When they did not take care to appear in judgment on that day either, the judges solemnly published the depositions; and, since it was established before them that the office of primicerius in the church of Toul had been vacant for so long that the grant of it pertained to us, in our stead they conferred it upon the aforesaid S., the archdeacon. The same archdeacon asked that this grant be confirmed by apostolic authority.

The said G., proctor of the chapter, answered to the contrary that this grant and the proceedings of the aforesaid judges deserved to be rescinded, inasmuch as those judges had proceeded after an appeal to us had lawfully been interposed on account of various grievances. For in the first citation they had summoned the chapter itself by a peremptory edict; and, although the chapter thereafter sent its own messenger to their presence, and although that messenger diligently requested that a safe place be assigned to the parties, alleging that because of dangers on the roads and deadly ambushes the chapter could not come to the place appointed or send sufficient representatives, nevertheless the said judges disdained to admit this excuse. For that reason the messenger, as he had been commanded, had recourse to the protection of an appeal.

The said proctor added that the proceedings of those judges were to be adjudged invalid for this reason also: they proceeded to the reckoning of the sentence although the issue had by no means been joined. On the part of the archdeacon it was replied against this that no deference at all was owed to this appeal, since it had not been made for lawful reasons but only for delay. For, although the chapter had been summoned by lawful citations, it sent a mere messenger, not a suitable representative. After he alleged the chapter's excuse and offered his own oath concerning it, when required he later refused to take it. Since, therefore, the excuse proposed by that messenger rightly seemed deceptive, the appeal interposed upon it was rightly to be rejected, especially since the messenger presented letters of the chapter in which it was expressly contained that he had been sent solely to make an appeal.

The same party answered that neither could it prejudice the matter that the said judges proceeded when the issue had not been joined, since they had been commissioned not to adjudicate a cause but only to investigate the truth; for this reason the solemnity of judicial procedure was not to be observed in the investigation itself. To this the chapter's party answered that, although the full solemnity of law is not observed in certain investigations, nevertheless the order of law ought to have been observed in an investigation of this kind, since certain persons are peaceable possessors of the possessions and revenues which formerly pertained to the office of primicerius, and they ought not and could not have been despoiled of them without the order of law. Moreover, even if the said judges could have proceeded without adjudicating the cause, they nevertheless chose instead to adjudicate it solemnly, summoning the canons of Toul as a party to their judgment.]

It was further alleged on behalf of the chapter that the rescript obtained for the aforesaid judges had been obtained by a false suggestion. For by the common assent and unanimous will of the canons of Toul it had been established that the dignity of primicerius should no longer exist in the aforesaid church, the proceeds and possessions of that office having been distributed among the canons themselves; and that institution had thereafter been confirmed by Pope Alexander, our predecessor of good memory. For this reason it plainly appears that the office of primicerius had not been vacant for so long, as had been suggested to us by a false representation.

[Against this the archdeacon's party answered thus: because that dignity had been instituted there for the public and common honor of the church of Toul, it could not be abolished in that church without the authority of the Apostolic See. Nor could the confirmation obtained for so unlawful a constitution give firmness to what was invalid by law itself. Moreover, after all these things the same canons jointly elected Archdeacon Terricus as primicerius, and he was thereafter confirmed by apostolic authority; for this reason they appear not only tacitly to have renounced the confirmation they had obtained but also to have revoked their own institution. But to this the chapter's party replied that what was done concerning T. could not prejudice them, since he usurped the office of primicerius for himself not through canonical election but rather through intrusion.]

Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your discretion, after a more diligent inquiry into the truth, that if it is established before you that the canons of Toul jointly decreed that the office of primicerius should no longer exist in the church of Toul, and that the statute itself was thereafter confirmed, as is said, by authority of the Apostolic See, you are to cause it to remain in its force, unless the said canons afterward acted contrary to it, namely by electing someone as primicerius. [But if it has been customary, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Kalends of February, in the ninth year, 1207.]

Quumque super hoc inter dictos magistrum et presbyterum fuisset aliquamdiu litigatum, demum idem presbyter, requisitus praestare iuramentum, quod prius obtulerat, recusavit, et vocem appellationis emittens, literas capituli praesentavit, in quibus ad appellandum solummodo procurator exstiterat constitutus. Verum iudices supradicti excusationes ab ipso sacerdote propositas et appellationem interpositam frustratorias reputantes, de prudentum virorum consilio receperunt testes, quos dicti magister et F. inducere voluerunt, diem aliam apud S. Aprum saepedicto cappitulo praefigentes, qui quum nec ea die curassent in iudicio comparere, iudices ipsi attestationibus solenniter publicatis, quum constitisset eisdem, quod tamdiu primiceriatus in Tullensi ecclesia vacavisset, ut eius ad nos donatio pertineret, ipsum vice nostra supradicto S. archidiacono contulerunt, quam concessionem idem archidiaconus petiit auctoritate apostolica confirmari. Dictus vero G. capituli procurator ex adverso respondit, quod huiusmodi concessio et processus iudicum praedictorum debebant merito retractari, utpote qui post appellationem ad nos pro diversis gravaminibus legitime interpositam processerunt; prima siquidem citatione capitulum ipsum edicto peremtorio evocarunt, et quum postmodum ad eorum praesentiam proprium nuncium capitulum destinasset, licet ipse nuncius, allegando, quod ad praefixum locum propter viarum discrimina et insidias capitales capitulum accedere non poterat, vel sufficientes transmittere responsales, sollicite postularet locum tutum partibus assignari, excusationem tamen huiusmodi dicti iudices admittere contempserunt, propter quod idem nuncius, sicut in mandatis acceperat, ad appellationis praesidium convolavit. Praeterea dictus procurator adiecit, quod eorundem iudicum processus ex ea causa iudicandus erat invalidus, quoniam ad sententiae calculum processerunt lite minime contestata, contra quod fuit ex parte archidiaconi replicatum, quoniam appellationi huiusmodi non fuit aliquatenus deferendum, quum non ex causis legitimis, sed frustratorie duntaxat fuerit appellatum. Quum enim capitulum fuisset citationibus legitimis evocatum, simplicem nuncium, et non responsalem idoneum destinavit, qui, quum excusiationem capituli allegasset, et super ea obtulisset proprium iuramentum, postmodum illud praestare noluit requisitus. Quum igitur excusatio ab eodem nuncio proposita delusoria merito videtur, appellatio super ea interposita fuit merito respuenda, maxime quum idem nuncius literas capituli praesentaverit, in quibus continebantur expresse, quod ad provocandum tantummodo fuerat destinatus. Sed nec illud nocere posse pars eadem respondit, quod lite non contestata dicti iudices processerunt, quum non causae cognitio, sed inquisitio veritatis solummodo ipsis fuerit demandata, propter quod in inquisitione ipsa non fuerat iudiciarii ordinis solennitas observanda. Ad haec capituli pars respondit, quia, quamvis in quibusdam inquisitionibus omnimoda iuris solennitas non servetur, in inquisitione tamen huiusmodi servari debuit ordo iuris, quoniam, quum possessionum et redituum, olim ad primiceriatum spectantium, quidam sint pacifici possessores, eisdem sine iuris ordine non debebant nec poterant spoliari. Praeterea etsi dicti iudices potuerint sine causae cognitione procedere, solenniter tamen de causa cognoscere potius elegerunt, Tullenses canonicos tanquam partem ad suum iudicium evocando.] Fuit insuper ex parte capituli allegatum, quod rescriptum ad praedictos iudices impetratum exstiterit per falsam suggestionem obtentum. Quum enim de communi assensu et unanimi voluntate canonicorum Tullensium fuerit constitutum, ne primiceriatus dignitas esset ulterius in ecclesia memorata, inter canonicos ipsos primiceriatus proventibus et possessionibus distributis, et eadem institutio a bonae memoriae Alexandro P. praedecessore nostro fuerit postmodum confirmata: propter quod evidenter apparet, quod primiceriatus ipse tanto tempore non vacaverit, sicut nobis fuerat falsa insinuatione suggestum. [Contra quod pars archidiaconi sic respondit, quod, quum illa dignitas ad publicam et communem Tullensis ecclesiae honestatem ibidem fuerat instituta, absque sedis apostolicae auctoritate in eadem ecclesia non poterat aboleri. Confirmatio quoque super tam illicita constitutione obtenta firmare non potuit quod erat invalidum ipso iure. Praeterea iidem canonici post haec omnia Terricum archidiaconum in primicerium communiter elegerunt, qui fuit postmodum auctoritate apostolica confirmatus, propter quod non solum confirmationi obtentae tacite renunciasse videntur, sed etiam institutionem propriam revocasse. Sed ad haec pars capituli replicavit, quia quod de ipso T. factum est eis praeiudicare non potest, qui non per electionem canonicam, sed per intrusionem potius sibi prilmiceriatus officium usurpavit.] Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, inquisita diligentius veritate, si vobis constiterit, Tullenses canonicos, ne ulterius in Tullensi ecclesia primiceriatus esset officium, communiter statuisse, ac statutum ipsum auctoritate sedis apostolicae fuisse postmodum, sicut dicitur, confirmatum, vos illud faciatis in suo robore permanere, nisi postea dicti canonici contravenerint, aliquem videlicet in primicerium eligendo. Latin source headnote: Notwithstanding a fixed number of canons, even one confirmed by the Pope, provision is to be made from the surplus revenues for those received beyond that number, especially if they were received voluntarily by the canons.

The same to the Bishop of Chioggia.

When Martin, canon of Ferrara, and F., W., B., and G., proctors of the canons of Ferrara, and Master G., proctor of the chapter of Ferrara, had approached the Apostolic See concerning the dispute which they had with one another over prebends and revenues, we granted them our beloved son, the cardinal-deacon of Santa Maria in Cosmedin, as auditor. Before him the said M., for himself and his four associates, proposed that the canons of Ferrara, so that their revenues might be increased the more as the proceeds of the church which had customarily been divided among many should fall to the use of a few, established in the same church, against ancient custom, only fourteen prebends, apart from what they assigned to the common table. Later, however, voluntarily acting contrary to that very constitution, they received the said five as canons, assigning them no prebends. And although their revenues had been increased not a little, they had not yet been willing to make provision for them from the surplus revenues.

But on the opposing side it was proposed that, long ago, with the common will both of the canons and of the then Bishop of Ferrara, the number of fourteen prebends was instituted in the church of Ferrara after provident deliberation and strengthened by the protection of the Apostolic See. [At length], when one prebend in the same church had become vacant, at the great insistence of certain persons they received two men to it, and later, at the prayers of our venerable brother the Bishop of Ferrara, they received the said M. and another man as canons without prejudice to the said constitution, on the condition that these canons should receive nothing from the canonry until the first two had fully obtained prebends. And when, through the industry of the canons, it had been procured that greater revenues be paid to them from possessions which the [same] church had possessed for a long time, they jointly assigned the surplus revenues to the common table, which had been insufficient. The said five later asked that those revenues be assigned to them as a benefice, contrary to the constitution of the chapter. Because, as that cardinal asserted, full certainty concerning these matters could not be furnished to us, we considered that the cause itself should be committed to your examination.

We command you, therefore, since in the aforesaid constitution and confirmation of the Apostolic See there either was, or ought to have been, as is customary, the express clause, "unless the resources of the church should increase to such an extent that they could competently suffice for more persons," and since the same canons, in derogation of their own constitution, received four beyond the established number for prebends that would become vacant, while the older canons were receiving their customary prebends in full, that, appeal being removed, you cause the surplus revenues to be assigned to the aforesaid canons. This is nevertheless to be done so that, if from those revenues they can obtain prebends equal to the others, what remains over is to be converted to the common uses of the canons, as they had earlier established, or otherwise, as may seem better; all things whatsoever that, after the dispute was initiated before the Bishop of Ferrara, were altered by either party to the prejudice of the other concerning the prebends or possessions being revoked as void. Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A general statute of laymen does not extend to churches or ecclesiastical persons, or to their goods, to their prejudice; nor does a special statute, even if it concerns their advantage and favor. This states the point so far as its meaning is concerned. Abbas Siculus.

The same to the Abbot and Convent of Saint Sylvester.

In the time of the said senator B. Carosomi, the church of Santa Maria in Via Lata brought a claim before Judge L. against I. de Atteia, who was said to be detaining certain of its possessions contrary to justice. In that proceeding the syndic of your monastery stood with the aforesaid I. de Atteia, and certain monks were produced by him as witnesses. But the judge, having heard the arguments of the parties, pronounced a sentence of absolution for the same John; from his sentence the other party issued a declaration of appeal.

When a dispute arose over this, the victorious party proposed that an appeal could not have been taken, since the said L. had been chosen not as a judge but as an arbitrator. The defeated party, on the contrary, asserted that, since the arbitration—which binds the parties only through fear of a penalty, and no penalty had been included in the aforesaid arbitration—had been repudiated, an appeal could rightly have been taken, and all the more so if it had been a judicial proceeding. When the dispute concerning this was therefore brought before the already-mentioned B. Carosomi, he delegated the cause of the appeal to S., the chief of the judges. In his presence, with the parties appearing, the said John de Atteia proposed that he ought not to be sued, since he did not possess what the other party was seeking; rather, the monastery of Saint Sylvester possessed the thing claimed.

Now the said B. Carosomi had issued a certain statute, alike approved and accepted by the Roman people, providing that, if anyone transferred to another a thing claimed from him after joinder of issue, possession was to be given to the claimant, and the other party was to become a claimant instead of a possessor. Since the same I., after joinder of issue, had presumed to transfer the thing itself to the monastery, B. assigned possession of the thing claimed to the aforesaid church. But because the said I. had rendered an annual rent to the monastery of Saint Sylvester from those possessions, B. added that the same was to be done by the church of Santa Maria until the ownership of the estate should be adjudicated; yet the payment which was made [of the rent] was to prejudice in no respect the right of the church of Santa Maria in Via Lata.

[The church of Santa Maria possessed this property undisturbed until the time of John Pierleoni, senator of the City. He graciously admitted the petition of your monastery and committed the same cause to Judge R., who, having heard the matters proposed on either side, pronounced sentence for the monastery itself, renewing what the aforesaid B. Carosomi had decreed against it. Because the church of Santa Maria complained that it had been gravely injured by this sentence, it too petitioned the aforesaid senator, who committed the cause to Judge R. for adjudication. And because the senator's jurisdiction was shortly to expire, his successors, the senators already elected, were petitioned concerning the same cause, and the cause itself was delegated by them to the same judge. The judge, adjudicating by delegation both from the former senator and from the new senators, approved what had been decreed by the already-mentioned B. and restored the aforesaid possession to the church of Santa Maria.

And although the senate had nine councillors, the sentence was entrusted for execution to eight of them. But one of them, who was also the nephew of the abbot of Saint Sylvester, supported by the favor of certain senators, took the possession violently from the church of Santa Maria and gave it to the aforesaid monastery. From this, as the quarrel increased, matters proceeded as far as the clash of arms. Lest something worse occur, Pope C., our predecessor of good memory, recalled the entire affair to his own solicitude. And because the time for gathering the fruits was imminent, he ordered the fruits to be placed in sequestration with the tenants, so that if either party presumed to inflict any violence concerning them, it would suffer loss in its cause. He committed the same cause to our venerable brothers G., Bishop of Porto, and I., now Bishop of Albano but then Bishop of Tusculum of the title of Saint Clement, and to our beloved son G., cardinal-deacon of Sant'Angelo.

When the parties appeared before them, it was objected on behalf of the church of Santa Maria against your monastery that your party had committed violence with respect to the fruits to be sequestered. And when witnesses had been produced by both sides concerning this, because the violence was not clearly proved and was said to have been committed with respect to half a ruglus of barley, and because the abbot had nevertheless forbidden that the wrong of an individual should redound to the detriment of the church, after restitution of the barley it was provided that the cause should proceed to the question of possession. This question was disputed for a considerable time before those same men, after witnesses had been produced and the depositions published.

Thereafter, following the death of our aforesaid predecessor, with the parties appearing in our presence, the church, etc. (compare chapter 4, On a Suit Pending, II.16.) And because in the course of time some of the senators had confirmed the sentence for the monastery and others the one rendered for the church, we, etc. (compare chapter 4 cited above.) Since, therefore, it was established before us, and we gathered from the parties' own confession, that one of the councillors, acting contrary in fact—because he could not do so in law—to the sentence entrusted for execution by the will of eight, violently despoiled the church itself of its possession, and considering nevertheless that even an unjust possessor who has been violently ejected is to be aided by the remedy of restitution, we decreed that the despoiled church was to be restored to the state in which it had been at the time the violence was perpetrated. But because (etc.; compare chapter 4 cited above.)]

And because your often-mentioned monastery complained that it had been despoiled contrary to justice by the aforesaid B. Carosomi, and humbly requested to be restored through our office, it asserted on many grounds that his statute was of no validity.

[For, since the often-mentioned B. had intruded himself into the senatorial dignity and had not had the favor of the Apostolic See, to which the institution of senators belongs, he could not issue a statute that would be valid. Even if he had been lawfully instituted, his statute, although it would bind those subject to him, would nevertheless in no way bind churches, especially since it was contrary to the civil law. That law establishes that another penalty is to be imposed upon those who transfer things in litigation, making this distinction between contracting parties: if anyone, knowingly, has entered into donations, sales, or other contracts, he is compelled not only to redeem the thing but also loses its price—not so that it should fall as profit to the alienator, by whom another equal amount must also be paid to the treasury. But if anyone has purchased a thing in litigation in ignorance, or has received it through another kind of contract, then, when the alienation of the thing has been made void, he will receive its price with an additional third part; and instruments drawn up concerning contracts of this kind are also to have no force. The same constitution, however, expressly excepts from the aforesaid penalties those who have given or received things of this kind by way of dowry, antenuptial gift, transaction, or division of hereditary property, or by reason of a legacy or trust.

Even if the statute could bind churches, the monastery had by no means fallen within that constitution, since the aforesaid I. had transferred no possession at all to it. As a tenant he had held those lands and possessed them not in his own name but in the name of the monastery. Even if he had made such a transfer, because he had first been sued by the monastery before being sued by the church, and because he restored the aforesaid things both through arbitration and likewise by right of a transaction—by which, after joinder of issue, a thing may be transferred to another without the penalty attaching to a contract concerning a matter in litigation—he would in no way have fallen within the aforesaid statute. Indeed, even if he had acted contrary to that statute, because the monastery had been despoiled of its possession although it had neither been sued nor confessed in court nor been convicted, it insistently sought its restitution, since the other party detained it without cause, or at least without a just cause.

The administrator of Santa Maria strove to undermine these arguments in many ways. For, although the said B. had not had the favor of the Apostolic See around the beginning of his prelacy, nevertheless, because he was subsequently received by it and ratification relates back, he was to be regarded just as if he had been lawfully instituted from the beginning. He could not be avoided by the monastery as an extraneous judge, since it is neither new nor unusual that, when clergy are plaintiff and defendant, civil causes in the City are prosecuted before judges instituted by the Apostolic See by delegation of senators who have jurisdiction from it. Hence they are understood to litigate not in another's forum but in the proper forum of the Roman Pontiff, by whose authority the things decreed by senators or judges of this kind appear to obtain effect.

Even if the senatorial forum had been wholly foreign to the monastery, nevertheless, because the administrator of the said monastery, before Judge L.—delegated by the aforesaid B. in the dispute between the church of Santa Maria and the said I. de Atteia—stood with I. himself and defended him at law, the monastery could no longer decline that judge's jurisdiction. The statute of B. himself, of which mention has so often been made, was not contrary to law but rather consonant with it (since it is also provided in canon law that a thing placed in litigation is not to be transferred to another person). It ought to extend not only to possessors but also to those who could be sued by virtue at least of their detention of any thing, such as even temporary tenants are known to be. For perpetual tenants, having at least beneficial possession, can both be sued and transfer to another what they have, as the aforesaid I. had done. Neither the aforesaid arbitration nor the transaction could excuse his act, since they had been undertaken with guile and fraud. For the arbitrator to whom the matter was committed by the parties was said to have been a kinsman of I. himself and a feudal tenant of the monastery, and to have done nothing in public but everything in secret, although arbitrations were introduced after the pattern of judicial proceedings. He also compelled the parties to make a settlement, as appears from the rescript of settlement. And since the parties had not submitted the matter of a settlement to arbitration—a settlement being a matter not of necessity but rather of free will—the administrator asserted that, guile having now been proved as though from manifest contrivances, the settlement was wholly ineffective.

The church also said that the monastery's petition was to be repelled for this reason: because the church had obtained the possession itself by the authority of the praetor without guile or fault of its own, and through this a right had been acquired by it, your monastery ought no longer to be heard concerning the possessory action, while the church was prepared to answer it in the petitory action.]

These and similar matters having therefore been prudently alleged by the parties in the presence of us and our brothers, we, considering that no authority over churches and ecclesiastical persons has been attributed to laymen, even religious ones—whom there awaits the necessity of obeying, not authority to command—and that, if anything is established by them on their own initiative which even has regard to the advantage and favor of churches, it possesses no firmness unless it has been approved by the Church; whence the statute of Basil concerning the non-alienation of the rural or urban estates, vessels, and ornaments of churches was rejected especially for this reason, that it was not strengthened by the authority of the Roman Pontiff; lest it pass into a precedent for presuming similar things, we wholly revoke as void what had been done by the senator to the prejudice of the monastery, although the monastery had neither been sued, nor had confessed, nor even been convicted, and by definitive sentence determine that the same possessions are to be restored to it, and that the possessions themselves, etc. [Compare chapter 3, On a Suit Pending, II.16. enormiter querebatur, et ipsa senatori supplicavit praedicto, qui causam commisit R. iudici cognoscendam. Et quoniam eius iurisdictio erat in proximo desitura, supplicatum fuit ob eandem causam successoribus eius senatoribus iam electis, et ab eis causa ipsa eidem iudici delegata. Iudex vero ex veteris et novorum pariter senatorum delegatione cognoscens, quod a iam dicto B. statutum fuerat approbans, ecclesiae S. Mariae possessionem restituit antedictam. Et quum novem consiliarios haberet senatus, per octo ipsorum exsecutioni fuit sententia demandata; sed unus ex iis, qui et nepos erat abbatis S. Carosomi contra iustitiam spoliatum, et ipsum per officium nostrum restitui suppliciter postulabat, quod statutum eius nullius valoris exstiterit multipliciter asseverans. [Saepefatus enim B., quum se ipsum intruserit in senatoriam dignitatem, nec apostolicae sedis favorem habuerit, ad quam institutio pertinet senatorum, statutum non potuit emittere, quod valeret. Qui etiamsi fuisset legitime institutus, ipsius statutum, quamvis sibi subiectos, ecclesias tamen nullatenus obligaret, praesertim quum iuri civili esset adversum, quod aliam poenam litigiosas res transferentibus statuit imponendam, illa distinctione inter contrahentes adhibita, ut, si quis sciens ad donationes, venditiones seu alios contractus accesserit, non solum redimere rem compellatur, sed etiam pretium eius amittat, non ut lucro cedat alienanti, a quo etiam alia tanta quantitas est fisci iuribus inferenda. Sin autem ignorans rem litigiosam emerit vel per aliam speciem contractus acceperit, tunc alienatione rei facta irrita pretium eius cum alia tertia parte recipiet, instrumentis etiam nullam vim obtinentibus, quae super contractibus huiusmodi statuuntur. Verum eos, qui dotis nomine, vel ante nuptias donationis, transactionis vel divisionis rerum hereditariarum factae, vel per legati vel fideicommissi causam huiusmodi dederint vel acceperint, a praemissis poenis eadem constitutio excipit nominatim. Quodsi etiam obligare posset ecclesias, monasterium in illa constitutione nequaquam inciderat, quum antedictus I. nullam in illud penitus possessionem transtulisset, qui tanquam colonus terras illas tenuerat, et eas non suo, sed monasterii nomine possidebat. Quod etiamsi fecisset, quoniam prius conventus a monasterio quam ab ecclesia fuerat, et per arbitrium et nihilominus iure transactionis, per quam citra poenam litigiosi contractus res potest in alium lite contestata transferri, res restituit antedictas, in statutum praemissum nullatenus incidisset. Quin potius, etsi contra illud fecisset statutum, quoniam nec conventum, nec confessum in iudicio vel convictum possessione sua monasterium fuerat spoliatum, instanter eam sibi restitui postulabat, quam ex nulla, vel saltem iniusta causa pars altera detinebat. Has autem rationes oeconomus S. Mariae nitebatur multifariam infirmare. Quamvis enim dictus B. circa praelationis suae primordia gratiam sedis apostolicae non habuerit, quia tamen ab ea fuit tempore procedente receptus, et ratihabitio retrotrahitur, perinde habendus erat, tanquam ab initio legitime fuerit institutus; qui tanquam alienus iudex non poterat a monasterio evitari, quum nec novum sit nec insolitum, quod, ubi clerici sunt actor et reus, causas civiles in Urbe coram iudicibus, per sedem apostolicam institutis, ex delegatione senatorum ab ea iurisdictionem habentium prosequantur. Unde nec in alieno foro intelliguntur, sed in proprio Romani Pontificis litigare, cuius auctoritate sortiri videntur effectum quae ab huiusmodi senatoribus vel iudicibus statuuntur. Quodsi forum senatorium fuisset monasterio penitus alienum, quia tamen oeconomus dicti monasterii sub L. iudice a praefato B. inter ecclesiam S. Mariae et dictum I. de Atteia delegato, ipsi I. adstitit, et eum in iure defendit, iudicium eius non potuit ulterius doclinare. Statutum autem ipsius B., de quo saepius est praemissum, et quod non iuri adversum, sed consonum potius exsistebat, (quum etiam in iure canonico caveatur, quod res in litigio posita non sit in personam aliam transferanda), non ad possessores solos, sed etiam ad illos decebat extendi, qui tenore saltem detentionis cuiusque poterant conveniri, quales constat esse colonos etiam temporales. Perpetui namque utilem saltem possessionem habentes et conveniri possunt, et in alium transferre quod habent, sicut I. fecerat ante dictus, cuius factum neque praemissum arbitrium poterat, nec transactio excusare, quum in dolum et fraudem fuerint attentata. Iudex namque, in quem fuit a partibus compromissum, consanguineus ipsius I. et infeudatus monasterii dicitur exstitisse, nihilque fecisse in publicum, sed omnia in secreto; quamvis instar iudiciorum sint arbitria introducta. Coegit quoque partes ad transigendum, sicut ex rescripto transactionis apparet. Et quum de transactione non fuerit compromissum, quae non est necessitatis, sed liberae potius voluntatis, dolo quasi ex perspicuis insidiis iam probato transactionem inefficacem penitus asserebat. Illa quoque ratione dicebat ecclesia petitionem monasterii repellendam, quod, quum possessionem ipsam sine dolo et culpa sua obtinuerit auctoritate praetoris, et per hoc ius sibi fuerit acquisitum, monasterium vestrum super possessiorio audiri ulterius non debebat, cui parata erat in petitorio respondere.] His ergo et similibus in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia prudenter a partibus allegatis, Nos attendentes, quod laicis, etiam religiosis, super ecclesiis et personis ecclesiasticis nulla sit attributa facu1tas, quos obsequendi manet necessitas, non auctoritas imperandi, a quibus, si quid motu proprio statutum fuerit, quod ecclesiarum etiam respiciat commodum et favorem, nullius firmitatis exsistit, nisi ab ecclesia fuerit approbatum, unde statutum Basilii de non alienandis praediis rusticis vel urbanis, ministeriis et ornamentis ecclesiarum, illa reprobatum fuit potissima ratione, quod auctoritate non fuit Romani Pontificis roboratum, ne in exemplum transeat similia praesumendi, quod a senatore factum fuerat in praeiudicium monasterii, non conventi, nec confessi etiam vel convicti, prorsus in irritum revocantes, easdem possessiones restituendas sibi sententialiter diffinimus, nec ipsas etc. [cf. c. 3. ut lite pend. Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A penalty imposed simply for contumacy is, in a doubtful case, understood to be temporary and not perpetual.

The same to all the Doctors residing at Paris.

We have learned from the letters of your devotion that, when certain modern doctors of the liberal arts departed from the footsteps of their predecessors especially in three matters—namely, in dishonorable dress, in the order of lectures and disputations not being observed, and in the pious custom of celebrating the obsequies of deceased clerics now being almost wholly omitted through negligence—you, wishing to take thought for your own honor, unanimously chose eight sworn men from among yourselves for this purpose: that, concerning the said matters, on the advice of prudent men they should in good faith establish what would be expedient and honorable, binding you all by an intervening oath to observe it thereafter. The sole exception was Master G., who, refusing and fearing to swear, offered only a surety bond for himself.

Furthermore, as a precaution, after faith had been pledged by you, it was immediately established that if any of the masters decided to resist the others and, after being admonished a first, second, or third time, disdained within three days to obey the community of masters, he should from then on be deprived of the benefit of their fellowship in academic functions. Some of you acknowledge that they understood this last provision without qualification; others, "unless he made satisfaction"; and some, "unless he obtained through us that he be admitted by the others."

But when the aforesaid Master G., after being required, did not obey the community within three days, in accordance with your agreement he was from that time regarded by you as excluded. After he later offered to make fitting satisfaction, by an intervening oath he submitted the matter to four of you, promising that for the good of peace he would alike hold their determination pleasing and ratified. They, having employed the counsel of wise men, jointly promulgated their determination: by virtue of the oath taken, they prohibited the aforesaid master from thereafter resisting the community of masters in lawful matters, and enjoined him to remain in the state in which he then was until, either by himself or through his proctor, he obtained from the Apostolic See that he could be admitted by the other masters, with honor safeguarded in all things.

Hence you humbly petitioned us that, out of the benignity of the Apostolic See, we should cause the same master—a provident and honorable man, who, as a son of obedience, humbly accepted and patiently observes what the aforesaid four enjoined upon him—to be restored to the fellowship of the masters. From the foregoing we therefore understand that the same master was commanded to remain in the state in which he then was until he should be restored to the fellowship of the masters by mandate of the Apostolic See, and that he is prepared to furnish fitting satisfaction concerning the foregoing matters.

Although it was established by you after faith had been pledged that, if any of the masters decided to resist the ordinance of their community and, after being admonished a first, second, or third time, disdained within three days to obey the community of masters, he should from then on be deprived of the benefit of their fellowship in academic functions—and for this reason Master G. was deprived of their fellowship—nevertheless, because it was not established that a deprivation of this kind should endure in perpetuity, and because it is the rule both of canon law and of our custom that one who is deprived of fellowship on account of contumacy obtains restoration when he furnishes fitting satisfaction, by the authority of the present writings we command your community to admit the aforesaid master, who now takes care humbly to obey your statutes, to the association of your fellowship in academic functions.

Ex literis vestrae devotionis accepimus, quod, quum quidam moderni doctores liberalium artium a maiorum suorum vestigiis in tribus praesertim articulis deviarent, habitu videlicet inhonesto, in lectionum et disputationum ordine non servato, et pio usu in celebrandis exsequiis decedentium clericorum iam quasi penitus negligenter omisso, vos, cupientes vestrae consulere honestati, octo ex vobis iuratos ad hoc unanimiter elegistis, ut super dictis articulis de prudentium virorum consilio bona fide statuerent quod foret expediens et honestum, ad illud in posterum observandum vos iuramento interposito communiter adstringendo, excepto duntaxat magistro G., qui, iurare renuens et formidans, fideiussoriam pro se tantum obtulit cautionem. Fuit insuper ad cautelam a vobis fide praestita protinus constitutum, ut, si quisquam magistrorum adversus alios duceret resistendum, et primo, secundo tertiove commonitus infra triduum universitati parere contemneret magistrorum, ex tunc beneficio societatis eorum in magistralibus privaretur, et quidem hoc ultimum quidam ex vobis simpliciter, quidam vero, nisi satisfaceret, et nonnulli, nisi per nos se admitti ab aliis obtineret, se intellexisse fatentur. Quum autem supradictus magister G. infra triduum universitati non paruerit requisitus, iuxta condictum vestrum ex tunc a vobis habitus est exclusus. Qui, quum satisfactioni condignae postmodum se obtulisset, in IV. vestrum iuramento interposito compromisit, illorum dictum pro bono pacis se gratum et ratum pariter habiturum. Illi vero, usi consilio sapientum, dictum suum communiter promulgarunt, memorato magistro in virtute iuramenti praestiti prohibentes, ne deinceps in licitis universitati resisteret magistrorum, et iniungentes eidem, ut tamdiu in eo statu persisteret, quo tunc erat, donec per se vel procuratorem suum se posse ab aliis magistris admitti per sedem apostolicam obtineret, salva in omnibus honestate. Unde nobis humiliter supplicastis, ut eundem magistrum, virum utique providum et honestum, qui tanquam obedientiae filius quod sibi praedicti quatuor iniunxerunt suscepit humiliter et patienter observat, ex benignitate sedis apostolicae faceremus communioni restitui magistrorum. Nos igitur ex praemissis intelligentes, eidem magistro fuisse mandatum, ut tam diu in eo statu persisteret, quo tunc erat, donec magistrorum communioni de mandato sedis apostolicae redderetur, et paratus sit super praemissis satisfactionem congruam exhibere: Licet a vobis fide praestita fuerit constitutum, ut, si quis magistrorum ordinationi universitatis ipsorum duceret resistendum, et primo, secundo tertiove commonitus infra triduum universitati parere contemneret magistrorum, ex tunc beneficio societatis eorum in magistralibus privaretur, et ob hoc magister G. fuit eorum communione privatus, quia tamen constitutum non fuit, ut in perpetuum huiusmodi privatio perduraret, quum tam iuris canonici quam nostri moris exsistat, ut is, qui propter contumaciam communione privatur, quum satisfactionem congruam exhibuerit, restitutionem obtineat: universitati vestrae praesentium auctoritate mandamus, quatenus supradictum magistrum statutis vestris nunc humiliter parere curantem, ad communionis vestrae consortium in magistralibus admittatis.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote (Abbas Siculus): Canons cannot without cause restrict the number of canons or prebends.

Honorius III to the Bishop and Cantor of Chalon.

It was proposed before us on behalf of our venerable brother the Bishop of Autun that the canons of Autun, intent upon their own advantages, have restricted the number of prebends established from ancient times in the church of Autun, although its revenues have not been diminished, so that they may thus abound more in temporal things, while under such a pretext they strive to turn to the increase of the prebends those things from which the customary number of canons can be sustained.

And, in protection of their act, they are said to have obtained from us letters of confirmation concerning this in the common form.

§1. Therefore, not wishing divine worship to be diminished in that church by an occasion of this kind, but rather to be increased, we command your discretion that, if the truth supports the foregoing statements, you cause the ancient number to be observed by our authority. Notwithstanding any constitution made concerning this by the canons themselves, or any confirmation obtained by those same canons from us, you are, after removing the obstacle of appeal, to confer upon suitable persons, with the counsel of the same bishop, the prebends which you find to have become vacant in the aforesaid church since the time of the last statute.

Latin source headnote: A constitution has regard to future matters and not to past ones, unless provision is made in it concerning the past.

Gregory IX to the Archpriest of Santa Maria Maggiore in the City.

Because a constitution of the Apostolic See binds everyone and ought to contain nothing obscure or ambiguous, we declare that the constitution which we recently issued concerning the greater [members] being preferred in the receipt of a portion, and customary services being rendered by the lesser [members], extends not to past matters but only to future ones, since it is certain that laws and constitutions give a rule to future transactions and are not drawn back to past acts, unless provision is expressly made in them concerning the past.

Title III: On Rescripts

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A special rescript, even one making no mention of a general privilege obtained according to the common law, prevails over that privilege. This it says according to the more common understanding.

Alexander III to the Archbishop of Sens.

Just as the Roman Church is, by the Lord's ordering, the mother and teacher of all churches, so also we, who, although unworthy, preside over that Church by the providence of the heavenly disposition, [and] insofar as the Lord shall supply to us, are compelled to answer the consultations of individuals and, by the providence of apostolic circumspection, to clarify the things which appear doubtful. Indeed, it has been asked of us on your behalf whether, if a certain cause between certain persons is committed to delegated judges with the remedy of appeal removed, and the other party is fortified by apostolic letters by which it is generally granted to him that he may freely appeal, if he should break forth into a declaration of appeal, deference ought to be given to his appeal in that same cause.

To this inquiry of yours, therefore, we respond by the present letters in this manner: his appeal in this matter ought not to be admitted after the cause has been committed to judges with appeal removed, because a special mandate derogates from a general one. [Moreover, etc.; compare chapter 5, *On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.*29.]

Sane Quaesitum est a nobis ex parte tua, utrum, si alicuius causa inter aliquos delegatis iudicibus sublato remedio appellationis committitur, et literis apostolicis altera pars munita, quibus ei generaliter est indultum, ut libere sibi liceat appellare, si in vocem appellationis proruperit, an eius in eadem causa debeat appellationi deferri? Huic igitur Inquisitioni tuae praesentibus literis taliter respondemus, quod eius in hac parte appellatio non debet admitti, postquam est causa iudicibus appellatione remota commissa, quia speciale mandatum derogat generali. [Praeterea etc. cf. c. 5. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: In an apostolic rescript the clause "if the petitions rest upon truth" is implied. And if a rescript prohibits cognizance of the cause, it is suspect of falsehood.

The same to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

It has been intimated to our ears on behalf of our venerable brother, the Bishop of Coventry, that, while lawfully adjudicating the cause which is pending between the clerics G. and F. concerning the prebend of Novals, in accordance with the tenor of our letters—which contained that, if it were established that F. himself had been convicted of perjury and had renounced that prebend forever, he was, appeal ceasing, to be removed from it—when this had been adjudicated and proved, he adjudged that same prebend [to G.]. F. himself broke forth into a declaration of appeal and brought back to you our letters directing you to restore the prebend to him peremptorily and without cognizance of the cause, and, with appeal ceasing, to deprive the bishop who had despoiled him of the prebend after the appeal of authority to confer a benefice upon anyone, until he should come to the Apostolic See, in person, through a messenger, or by his letters, to make satisfaction for so great an excess; and to bind the aforesaid G., if he presumed to molest F. in the said prebend, with the bond of excommunication until worthy satisfaction.

But because we do not believe that we wrote so peremptorily, and, if we did write in such a manner, this occurred from excessive occupation, and because in letters of this kind this condition is to be understood even if it is not appended—"if the petitions rest upon truth"—by apostolic writings, commanding, we order your fraternity, after inspecting the letters which we directed to the aforesaid bishop, that if you find that we wrote to him in the aforesaid manner, and appeal was prohibited in our letters, and no mention of the earlier letters was made in the letters which the aforesaid F. brought back to you, you are, every occasion and appeal ceasing, to confirm the sentence of the aforesaid bishop and to compel the often-mentioned F. to come into our presence with our letters which he brought to you.

Verum quoniam non credimus, nos ita praecise scripsisse, et si taliter scripsimus, hoc ex nimia occupatione contigit, et in huiusmodi literis intelligenda est haec conditio, etiamsi non apponatur: "si preces veritate nitantur:" fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus inspectis literis, quas episcopo praedicto direximus, si inveneris, quod secundum praedictum modum ei scripserimus, et in literis nostris appellatio fuerit inhibita, et in literis, quas tibi praefatus F. reportavit, non fuerit habita mentio priorum literarum, sententiam praefati episcopi omni occasione et appellatione cessante confirmes, et saepedictum F. cum literis nostris, quas tibi detulit, ad praesentiam nostram venire compellas.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If, in a second rescript obtained by an adversary, no mention is made of the first, the first is valid and not the second; otherwise, the second is valid. And if the first was obtained by the common consent of the parties, a second obtained by one party while this was concealed is not valid.

The same to the Bishop of Winchester.

Furthermore, if anyone has obtained from the Apostolic See letters of commission to judges concerning a cause, and his adversary afterward obtains the same cause to be committed to others without mention being made of the earlier commission, the first judges may proceed to the decision of the cause, and the second letters obtain no firmness of any force. But if mention of the earlier commission is made in the second letters, the aforesaid cause is removed from the judgment of the first judges, since those same letters were not obtained with the truth suppressed.

But if a cause is committed with the assent of the parties, and in the course of time, or even immediately, either party, without the other's knowledge, obtains the cause itself to be delegated to another judge while the making of the earlier commission is concealed, the person who by such guile or fraud compelled his adversary to labor ought, not undeservedly, to be condemned to pay that adversary's expenses.

> Si in secundo rescripto, per adversarium impetrato, non fiat mentio de primo, valet primum, et non secundum; alias valet secundum. Et si primum fuit impetratum communi consensu partium, non valet secundum impetratum per alteram partem, hoc tacito.

Si vero in secundis literis habeatur mentio de commissione priori, praedicta causa a priorum est exempta iudicio, quum eaedem literae non sint veritate tacita impetratae. Verum si de assensu partium causa committitur, et processu temporis, vel etiam continuo, alterutra pars altera nesciente causam ipsam, tacito de commissione priori facta, alii iudici obtinuerit delegari: non immerito is, qui tali dolo vel fraude adversarium suum laborare coegit, in expensis condemnari debet eidem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If the Pope commands in a rescript that inquiry be made alternatively concerning two matters, proof of either is sufficient for obtaining the specified effect.

The same to the Archbishop of York.

Among your other consultations, [this] was proposed before us: what you ought to hold when certain things are commanded under a disjunction, of which one is true and the other false—for example, if it is proposed that a certain man is the son of a priest and was begotten during his priesthood, who most recently ministered in a certain church, or that he occupied the same church unlawfully. To this question we respond in this manner: it is fitting that, whichever of these matters is established before the judge, the aforesaid church ought to be adjudged to that person. And the same is to be observed in similar cases. Indeed, if, etc. (Compare chapter 8, *On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.*29.)

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: The person to whom a papal rescript is directed ought to obey it or assign a reasonable cause why he cannot obey.

The same to the Archbishop of Ravenna.

If at any time we direct certain writings to your fraternity which appear to exasperate your mind, you ought not to be troubled or moved, or to believe that we wish to render your person contemptible or despised, because we love you with most abundant charity as our dear brother and an immovable column of the Church, and we desire in every way the increase of your honor and exaltation. For although we often write harshly and severely to our brothers and fellow bishops according to the variety of the matters suggested to us, this nevertheless occurs not from diminished affection, but so that we may be proved to give satisfaction to the complaints of those protesting, according to God and according to the duty of our office. Therefore we admonish your prudence and earnestly exhort you that henceforth you be neither moved nor troubled, nor let your mind be cast down, if we write something severe or harsh to you; but, as a provident and discerning man, diligently considering and attending to the character of the affair concerning which it is written to you, you are either devoutly and reverently to fulfill our mandate or, through your letters, to set forth a sufficient and reasonable cause why you cannot fulfill it, because we shall bear it patiently if you do not do what was suggested to us by a depraved representation.

Nam etsi saepe fratribus et coepiscopis nostris secundum varietatem eorum, quae nobis suggeruntur, aspere et dure scribamus, hoc tamen non ex minori affectione contingit, sed ut clamoribus querelantium secundum Deum et iuxta officii nostri debitum satisfacere comprobemur. Quapropter monemus prudentiam tuam et hortamur attentius, quatenus de cetero non movearis, neque turberis, nec tuus animus deiiciatur, si tibi durum vel asperum scripserimus; sed sicut vir providus et discretus Qualitatem negotii, pro quo tibi scribitur, diligenter considerans et attendens, aut mandatum nostrum devote et reverenter adimpleas, aut per literas tuas quare adimplere non possis sufficientem et rationabilem causam praetendas quia nos patienter sustinebimus, si non feceris quod prava nobis fuerit insinuatione suggestum.

Latin source headnote: The Cistercians are privileged so that they cannot be sued through a papal rescript unless mention of their order is made in it.

The same to the Cistercian Brothers.

Since, having professed the Cistercian order, you enjoy the privilege which the other brothers [of the same order] enjoy, when a dispute concerning tithes has arisen between you and other secular clerics, those clerics, concealing the fact that you are of the Cistercian order and obtaining letters from the Apostolic See against you as though against monks of another order, then trouble you with oaths and litigation, as we have learned from your report, and with burdensome expenses. Wishing therefore solicitously to provide for you, lest by the temerity of any persons you be vexed contrary to the tenor of your privileges, by apostolic authority we command you that, if letters have been obtained from the Apostolic See against you concerning tithes or other things which the Apostolic See has specially granted to your order, without mention being made of the Cistercian order, you are by no means bound to answer by virtue of them.

Volentes ergo vobis sollicite providere, ne contra tenorem privilegiorum vestrorum possitis quorumlibet temeritate vexari, auctoritate apostolica vobis mandamus, ut Si contra vos super decimis vel aliis, quae ordini vestro specialiter sedes apostolica indulsit, non facta mentione Cisterciensis ordinis, literae fuerint a sede apostolica impetratae, per eas minime teneamini respondere.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote (Abbas Siculus): If, while a see is vacant, a chapter is written to, as exercising the bishop's functions, that it confer a prebend upon someone, and a bishop is created before the mandate has been executed, then, if the collation of prebends pertains to him, he is bound to fulfill it. This it says according to the commonly approved reading.

The same to the Bishop of Tournai.

Her [or it], you ... (And below:) Some time ago, before your promotion, if we remember correctly, letters issued from us by which we gave a mandate and command to the dean and the church committed to you, while you were still a member of that chapter, that they should receive as a canon our beloved son P., the bearer of the present writings, who derived his origin from the Jewish people and by divine grace humbly and devoutly received the faith of Christ, in consideration of his manner of life and in consideration of his learning, in which he has so advanced that he is not undeservedly considered worthy of an ecclesiastical benefice; and that, upon receiving our letters, they ought generously to confer upon him a prebend, if any were vacant, or the first one which should happen to become vacant. (And below:) But they, as we learned from the report of the same M., having received our letters after your consecration, could not, as they asserted, put our command into due execution, because the grant of prebends pertained to you.

Since, therefore, the aforesaid P., as he asserts, earnestly required you concerning this on our behalf, you answered him that you had received no mandate from us concerning it, and thus you sent him away from you with the affair unfinished. You ought by no means to have done this if you had considered the date of the letters more diligently, since, at the time when those letters were given, you were a member of that chapter, as one who was archdeacon and canon of the same church, although you had not yet been consecrated bishop. (And below:) You ought not to disdain him because he was a Jew. (And below:) We command your fraternity to receive him as a canon of your church and assign him a stall in the choir and a place in the chapter.

Latin source headnote: A rescript obtained for benefices is not valid if the dignity of the person obtaining it is concealed in it.

Lucius III to the Bishop of Lincoln.

It has come to our ears through your report that deans, archdeacons, precentors, or others endowed with ecclesiastical dignities, when obtaining letters concerning lesser benefices through intermediary persons, very often suppress the name of their dignity and designate themselves by their simple name, as though they held no ecclesiastical office; and therefore you ask to be instructed by our rescript whether this fraud of concealment ought to produce prejudice against them.

To your consultation therefore we respond in this manner: since it is not our intention that persons abounding in many revenues should, through our letters, trouble poor clerics concerning lesser benefices, we will that letters in which a claimant suppresses the name of his dignity obtain no force whatsoever. Lastly, etc. (Compare chapter 36, *On Appeals, II.*28.)

But if anyone, drawn into judgment by authority of later letters obtained by his adversary, should object that he has earlier letters of which no mention is made in the later ones, he ought not to be excused if through guile or negligence he postponed using them. If, however, he did so because he was unable to obtain access to the delegated judge, he cannot be sued by virtue of the later letters.

The same.

For this purpose we have been established by the Lord's ordering in the seat of justice: that the things attempted contrary to justice may through our solicitude be recalled to the path of rectitude, etc. (And below:) Accordingly, it has been reported to us that certain persons in parts of your province have, as they assert, received from our chancery letters by which all their affairs are committed to the decision of one judge or of several whom they may choose for themselves. Thus it happens that, if they wish to bring an action against someone, they do not seek the examination of the ordinary judge, but have recourse, for examination of the dispute, to one judge or several delegates favorable to themselves and on that account suspect to the opposing party.

No one who has obtained even a slight knowledge of canonical instruction doubts how contrary this is to God and inimical to the sacred canons. We do not believe that such letters issued from our chancery; or, if perhaps they did issue, they escaped our awareness, which, impeded by diverse occupations, does not suffice for examining each individual matter. We therefore, wishing to oppose this disease with a swift remedy, command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if you find such letters already obtained or to be obtained hereafter in your province, you are by our authority to decree that they lack force, and to prohibit their admission in judgment by anyone concerning any dispute whatsoever.

Latin source headnote: Faulty Latin invalidates a papal rescript. John Andrew says this; the Abbot agrees.

It has come to our hearing through your report that H. of Saint Stephen presented to you, concerning his absolution, letters which at first sight appeared apostolic. Because you regarded them as suspect and did not think that they had issued from the chancery of the Roman Church, you took care to send them back to us, consulting our apostolate—whence we commend your devotion in the Lord—as to whether, by occasion of those letters, you ought to regard the aforesaid man as absolved. Because they contain a manifest error of construction, we will that you place no faith in them.

Latin source headnote: Against a second rescript there can be no objection on the ground that a first rescript obtained by the appellant was concealed, when no mention of his appeal was made in the first. John Andrew says this; Abbas Siculus agrees.

Clement III.

It became known to us on behalf of S., a dignitary of the church of Tarentum, that, although the chapel of Emptonn. belongs by right to the aforesaid church, it has for a long time been unjustly withdrawn from it; and O. the deacon, who detains the said chapel, after making an appeal removed G., the chaplain of that church, who was ministering in it in the name of S. When S. had prosecuted the matter and obtained letters to judges, O. himself did not take care to prosecute his appeal. When by authority of the aforesaid judges he was summoned to court, he said that he had earlier letters of which no mention was made in the later ones. He suppressed them until the third citation and postponed using them through guile or negligence, as appeared from the length of time; in those letters no mention was made of the appeal taken by him, although two years had already elapsed from the time of the appeal.

Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, if it is established that matters stand thus, after restoring to their former state everything which you find to have been attempted after O.'s appeal, you take care, appeal being removed, to restore the aforesaid chapel to the mother church; and, if it is established that O. did not prosecute his appeal, condemn the aforesaid O. to pay S. the necessary expenses.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A rescript addressed to several persons with the clause "But if not all, etc." is understood with respect both to incapacity in fact and to incapacity in law.

Celestine III.

By a petition sent to us, you asked of what incapacity the provision is understood which is often customarily appended in our letters: that if two or three, or even more, to whom the letters are directed cannot be present together for their execution, one or more of those to whom it is written shall nevertheless execute them.

We hold in this matter that the incapacity is understood both in law and in fact. In law, if it is established that any of those to whom the letters are directed is a slave, infamous, or restrained by another lawful impediment; in fact, if it is established that he has died by the event of death, or is impeded by an instance of unavoidable necessity so that he cannot be present—provided that the person who by necessity cannot be present takes care, if he can, canonically to send his excuse to his colleagues, so that the other co-judges or executors may nevertheless proceed to the completion of the mandate enjoined. Nor can a person who merely does not wish to be present be excused in any respect by this interpretation of impossibility, unless perhaps it is expressed in the rescript in this manner: “if not all shall have been present,” or “if they shall have been unable or unwilling to be present together.”

Nos vero in hoc ita sentimus, quod tam de iure quam de facto illa impotentia censeatur. De iure, si aliquem illorum, quibus literae diriguntur, servum, vel infamem aut alio legitimo impedimento detentum esse constiterit; de facto, si constiterit, eum casu mortis occumbere, aut inevitabilis necessitatis articulo impediri, quo minus valeat interesse; dummodo is, qui pro necessitate praesens esse non potest, collegis suis canonice excusationem suam curet, si poterit, destinare, ut alii coniudices vel exsecutores nihilominus ad consummationem iniuncti mandati procedant. Nec ille, qui tantummodo non vult interesse, hac impossibilitatis interpretatione valet aliquatenus excusari, nisi forte sic in rescripto habeatur expressum, si non omnes interfuerint, vel simul nequiverint aut noluerint interesse.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: In a dispute concerning the revocation of rescripts, recourse is had to arbitrators if the judges do not defer to one another in adjudicating the matter and do not agree with one another. This it says as far as § “Since.” — (§ “Since,” etc.): Through a general clause placed in a rescript, before the persons or things are specified, the delegate has jurisdiction in capacity but not in exercise. And special letters derogate from general letters with respect to matters not specified in the latter, although they make no mention of them. The Abbot.

Innocent III to the Bishop of Ely.

The pastoral office ... (And below: [compare chapter 28, *On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.*29.]) Moreover, you asked, when there is doubt concerning the revocation of letters, whether the earlier or the later judges ought to adjudicate the matter, and whether the first letters have been revoked by the second. To this we respond that, unless the later judges decide to defer to the earlier, or conversely, both sets are to adjudicate it together; and, if perhaps they are unable together to agree upon one decision, although there are more judges on one side than on the other, a dispute of this kind is to be quieted through arbitrators chosen jointly by the parties.

Since letters are often obtained from us under a form of this kind, namely, “We have considered that the cause which such a person proposes that he has against such a person and certain others concerning this and concerning certain other things should be committed to you,” you also solicitously asked whether, from a delegation of this kind, the judge has power over the persons or things to be specified before the specification of those persons or things. You added the question whether, before the persons or things have been specified by name, special letters concerning matters not expressed in the earlier commission but generally comprehended in it, making no mention of the earlier commission, should issue from the Apostolic See to other judges and obtain the same force.

We therefore respond to these two matters in this manner: since without doubt a general provision is derogated from by a special one, the jurisdiction attributed by general letters is entirely weakened by special letters as regards the matters which are specially expressed, although they make no mention of the earlier letters. Hence the first question is left superfluous, even though it may rightly be said that, until the jurisdiction is revoked, the delegate possesses it over the articles concerning things or persons that are to be specified; but before the persons or things are specified, the delegate cannot exercise jurisdiction of this kind. [But because, etc. (Compare chapter 28, *On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.*29.) Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of June, 1204.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Through the general clause "certain other persons and other things," neither an unrestrained multitude, nor persons or things greater than those expressed, are included, but only equal or lesser ones.

The same to the Archbishop of Sens.

The Apostolic See is accustomed to show itself liberal to petitioners; but certain persons wickedly abuse its grace, when they twist to malice what it grants out of benignity. For certain persons, wishing to act maliciously, express lesser and more insignificant persons by their proper names in our commissions, but do not designate greater and more dignified persons by specific terms; rather, they comprehend them under a certain covering of generality so that they may more easily obtain the commissions themselves from us, under this form: "Such persons complain of this or that person, and of certain others to be expressed by their proper names, who are exceedingly injurious and burdensome to them concerning such an affair and certain other matters."

We therefore, wishing to oppose their malicious acts, decree that, when only lesser and more insignificant persons are designated in our commissions, greater and more dignified persons are not understood to be included under the general clause. Nor is it permitted, on occasion of generality of this kind, to summon an unrestrained multitude into judgment; nor are those who make mention only of lesser and lighter matters to be heard concerning greater and weightier affairs. But if anyone expresses certain persons not because he wishes to litigate with them in court, but so that he may be able to pass to their equals or inferiors, because fraud and guile ought not to aid him, let him, as a mendacious petitioner, be entirely deprived of the things obtained. Nos igitur volentes eorum malitiis obviare, decernimus, ut, quum in commissionibus nostris minores et viliores personae solummodo designantur, maiores et digniores sub generali clausula non intelligantur includi. Sed nec liceat occasione generalitatis huiusmodi multitudinem effrenatam in iudicium evocare, nec super maioribus et gravioribus negotiis audiantur qui de minoribus et levioribus tantum faciunt mentionem. Latin source headnote: One who obtains and uses different rescripts against one person concerning the same matter before different judges loses the benefit of both.

The same to R. the Cantor and R. the Prior of Mont-des-Lépreux.

From the tenor of the letters which you sent us through our beloved son Ph., the bearer of the present writings, we understood clearly that R., the priest of Colleville, had obtained apostolic letters to other judges concerning the dispute pending between himself and our beloved son, the abbot and convent of Bec, concerning the manor of Colleville and other property. When those judges cited the opposing party, the said priest refused to litigate before them. Later, however, that same priest presented to you our letters concerning the same affair, in which no mention of the earlier letters was made. And when you wished to proceed to cognizance of the cause, the parties having been summoned to your presence, the aforesaid abbot proposed before you that he was not bound to answer the priest by virtue of the letters directed to you, since by other letters he had been cited by other judges, and those letters had not been revoked by authority of the letters directed to you. But because you were in doubt concerning this, you considered that the Apostolic See should be consulted.

We therefore, attending to the fraud of the aforesaid priest, who obtained two commissions concerning the same affair, of which one made no mention of the other, decree—because fraud and guile ought not to aid anyone—that he is to be deprived of the benefit of both. Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A rescript obtained for a benefice is not valid if it makes no mention of the benefice of the person obtaining it.

The same to the Archbishop of Milan.

Since we regulate the writings of the Apostolic See in such a way that we knowingly cause nothing to be appended in them which ought to be reproved at law, we wonder and are moved not a little that, whenever we direct our letters to you or to any persons subject to you, you write back that you wonder at them, as if we were commanding something dishonorable. For you wrote to us that, although the cleric P. had obtained a sufficient prebend for himself in the Modecensian church, you wondered that we had sent apostolic letters to the provost and brothers of the church of Gronzola concerning his reception in that church; although, if you had diligently attended to the sequence of our letters, you would have found nothing at all in them which ought to have offended your mind.

For in those same letters neither was mention made of P.'s prebend, nor was he called a canon of Modecia—indeed, he was not even called a cleric in them—and this condition was appended in the letters themselves: "if he should be worthy to obtain an ecclesiastical benefice, and if the same church had acquired from the gift of his parents a certain chapel with its endowment, and for a time received offerings and mortuary dues from his kinsmen, and tithes annually." You could have understood how those letters had been obtained, in which no mention was made of the benefice of the person on whose behalf it was written. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, whenever apostolic letters are directed to you or to persons subject to you, you diligently attend to their tenor and cause what is commanded in them to be put into effect, provided that they were obtained neither by suppression of the truth nor by expression of a falsehood. [Given at Rome, etc., on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of June, 1198.]

Latin source headnote: The order of a rescript receives its interpretation from the common law.

The same to the Bishop-elect, the Dean, and N., Canon of Cambrai.

We remember that we committed to your discretion the cause pending between the Praemonstratensian and Pramonensian churches concerning the possessions of Anapia, to be terminated by a canonical conclusion. But because we observed that it was inserted in those letters that, if either party, having been lawfully cited, disdained to come into your presence or to obey your judgment, you were nevertheless not to delay in receiving the proofs of the party present and, so far as you could by law, in proceeding to cognizance and decision of the cause, we wish the clause "so far as you can by law"—which ought to have been inserted before mention was made of the reception of proofs—to precede that clause concerning the reception of proofs.

We therefore command your discretion by apostolic writings, understanding it to be placed there, not to delay in proceeding in the same cause according to the tenor of those letters, taking earnest care that, if lawful proceedings have been conducted in the same affair by authority of the earlier letters, they remain firm and stable. Otherwise, if it is established that, on occasion of the aforesaid clause, anything was attempted to the prejudice of the other party, we decree that it shall lack force; wishing nevertheless and commanding that, in deciding the affair itself, as was set forth above, you proceed canonically, appeal being removed, concerning both the principal and the incidental questions. [No contrary provisions, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of April, 1198.]

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: An impetration concerning a church with a fixed number is not valid when no mention of the number is made, if by it the number of canons is broken, although the number of prebends is not broken; and proceedings conducted from it are null. This states the meaning according to Panormitanus.

The same to the Archbishop of Sens.

Appearing at the Apostolic See, the cleric P. formerly proposed before our beloved son G., cardinal-deacon of Sant'Angelo, whom we had granted as auditor to him and to the other party, that Pope C., our predecessor of good memory, had commanded our beloved son, the dean, and the chapter of Bourges to receive him as a canon and brother and to confer a prebend upon him, if one were then vacant in their church or the next one to become vacant, our venerable brother the Archbishop of Bourges having been granted to him as admonisher. When they did not take care to admit his mandate, our predecessor commanded them by way of precept to fulfill what he had commanded them, executors having been appointed for him in this matter.

[Meanwhile, when a messenger of the chapter came to the Apostolic See and suggested that P. himself had prebends in several churches, he obtained the absolution of the church of Bourges from his claim, and also obtained an indulgence that they should not be compelled to receive anyone as a brother within three years. When afterward the same P. returned to the Roman Church and took care to explain to our same predecessor that, although he had obtained in the church of Clermont a certain benefice which is customarily granted even to laymen and is called a familiaritas, nevertheless he could not be fittingly sustained from it or from another which he held, that predecessor enjoined the said dean and chapter, while the aforesaid indulgence remained in its force, to confer upon him the first prebend that should become vacant after the three-year period, and meanwhile to assign him a stall in the choir and a place in the chapter. Execution of this mandate was delegated to our beloved son the provost of Clermont. As was manifestly evident from his letters, after he had diligently admonished the said dean and chapter to fulfill the apostolic mandate and had made no progress at all, by apostolic authority he took care to invest the aforesaid P. with the first prebend to become vacant after the three-year period, granting him a stall in the choir and a place in the chapter.]

But the opposing party answered that, since a fixed number of canons had been instituted in the church of Bourges, confirmed by oath and confirmed by the Roman Pontiff, and since the aforesaid P. had made no mention of this in his letters, it was to be understood that he had circumvented our predecessor and obtained the said letters with the truth suppressed. For although, when a fixed number is established in a church, this condition is appended or is understood to be appended—"the authority of the Apostolic See being preserved"—nevertheless it was not to be believed that he had knowingly commanded that P. be received contrary to their oaths, since nothing concerning this had been expressed in his letters. We therefore, having been instructed concerning the foregoing by the aforesaid cardinal, command your discretion by apostolic writings, by way of precept, that, if it is lawfully established before you that the canonical number which now exists in the same church was confirmed by oath by the dean and chapter of that church before the aforesaid cleric obtained executory letters from our predecessor, you decree that whatever was done on occasion of those letters, which the same cleric is known to have obtained from the Apostolic See, is to be regarded as void and invalid. Otherwise, after removing the obstacle of any appeal, cause a prebend in that church to be assigned to him, if one is vacant. [Those contradicting, etc. Given at Spoleto, on the eleventh day before the Kalends of September, 1198.]

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: A difficult and famous chapter, and the key to this entire title. In sum it says this: one who states a falsehood or conceals a truth in a rescript, if he does so maliciously, is wholly deprived of what he obtained. But if through simplicity or ignorance he would, with the truth expressed and the falsehood suppressed, have obtained at least letters in the common form, the delegate proceeds with the order of law observed and not according to the special form of the rescript; it is otherwise if he would in no manner have obtained letters.

The same to A., Canon of Poitiers.

Concerning letters obtained from us by some persons through malice and by others through ignorance, with the truth concealed or a falsehood suggested, we have understood different persons to hold different opinions. Some assert that they ought to be entirely deprived of every benefit of the letters, since a mendacious petitioner ought to be wholly deprived of the things obtained; others say that, although the special form expressed in our letters ought not to benefit them, nevertheless the delegated judge is to proceed in the affair according to the rigor of law.

We therefore believe that this distinction is to be employed between those who obtain letters from us through fraud or malice and those who obtain them through simplicity or ignorance: those who in the former manner state a falsehood or suppress the truth are, as a penalty for their perversity, to obtain no benefit from those letters, so that, after proof concerning this has been made before the delegate, he is in no way to adjudicate the cause.

Among the others, however, who obtain letters in the latter manner, we have considered that a distinction is to be made according to what falsehood was suggested or what truth was suppressed. For if the falsehood stated or the truth concealed is of such a kind that, although that falsehood had been concealed or that truth expressed, we would nevertheless have given letters at least in the common form, the delegate, not following the form appended in the letters themselves, is to proceed in the cause according to the order of law. But if, through the expression of such a falsehood or even the suppression of the truth, letters were obtained which, had that falsehood been concealed or that truth expressed, we would not have given at all, the delegate is not to proceed in any respect—except perhaps only so far as, after summoning the parties to his presence, he may adjudicate the character of the petitions—so that in both cases the same reason which would move the delegating authority may also move the delegate, and where the delegating authority would refuse its letters, the delegate likewise is in no way to interpose the office of his cognizance. [Given at Ferentino, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of November, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

> Difficile et famosum c. et est clavis totius tituli. Et h. d. in summa: Exprimens falsum, vel tacens verum in rescripto, si malitiose, caret prorsus impetratis. Sed si per simplicitatem vel ignorantiam aut obtinuisset vero expresso, et suppresso falso saltem literas in forma communi, et delegatus procedit servato iuris ordine, et non speciali forma rescripti; secus, si nullo modo literas habuisset.

> Super literis, quae ab aliquibus ex malitia, et a nonnullis ex ignorantia, tacita veritate vel suggesta falsitate impetrantur a nobis, diversos intelleximus diversa sentire, aliis asserentibus, eos debere prorsus carere omni commodo literarum, quum mendax precator carere debeat penitus impetratis; aliis vero dicentibus, quod, etsi forma carere debeant in literis nostris expressa, nihilominus tamen iuxta rigorem iuris sit a delegato iudice in negotio procedendum. Nos igitur inter eos, qui per fraudem vel malitiam, et illos, qui per simplicitatem vel ignorantiam literas a nobis impetrant, huiusmodi credimus discretionem adhibendam, ut hi, qui priori modo falsitatem exprimunt vel supprimunt veritatem, in suae perversitatis poenam nullum ex illis literis commodum consequantur, ita videlicet, quod delegatus, postquam sibi super hoc facta fuerit fides, nullatenus de causa cognoscat. Inter alios autem, qui posteriori modo literas impetrant, duximus distinguendum, quae falsitas suggesta fuerit, vel quae veritas sit suppressa. Nam si talis expressa sit falsitas vel veritas occultata, quae, quamvis fuisset tacita vel expressa, nos nihilominus saltem in forma communi literas dedissemus: delegatus, non sequens formam in literis ipsis appositam, secundum ordinem iuris in causa procedat. Si vero per huiusmodi falsitatis expressionem vel suppressionem etiam veritatis literae fuerint impetratae, qua tacita vel expressa nos nullas prorsus literas dedissemus, a delegato non est aliquatenus procedendum, nisi forsitan eatenus, ut partibus ad suam praesentiam convocatis de precum qualitate cognoscat, ut sic in utroque casu eadem ratio, quae delegantem moveret, moveat etiam delegatum, et ubi delegans suas literas denegaret, delegatus etiam suae cognitionis officium nullatenus interponat. Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: In a cause belonging to a monastery, an abbot is sued through a rescript in which no mention of the convent is made; nor can an appeal be taken for this reason, unless the goods of the abbot and of the convent are wholly distinct.

The same to the Abbot and Convent of Prémontré.

By your letters you asked to be instructed by us whether, by virtue of letters obtained against abbots of your order without any mention being made of their convents, the abbots themselves are bound, in causes which pertain to the convents and to those same abbots, to answer persons complaining against them concerning those causes; and whether, although appeal has been prohibited, they can protect themselves by raising an appeal so that they need not answer.

Concerning this we have considered that this answer should be given to you: those same abbots, unless another reasonable cause supports them, cannot protect themselves through an appeal so as not to be bound to answer lawfully by authority of letters of this kind, since by virtue of their office abbots are bound to manage the affairs of their congregations—unless perhaps the affairs of the abbot and of the convent are wholly distinct. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Kalends of March, in the eleventh year, 1208.]

Super quo vobis duximus respondendum, quod iidem abbates, nisi alia causa rationabilis suffragetur, per appellationem se tueri non possunt, quo minus debeant auctoritate literarum huiusmodi legitime respondere, quum ex officio suo teneantur abbates congregationum suarum negotia procurare, nisi forte abbatis et conventus negotia essent omnino discreta. Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: Proceedings conducted under surreptitiously obtained letters are invalidated; but proceedings conducted contrary to the form of a rescript are declared invalid.

The same to the Archbishop and Master W., Canon of Magdeburg.

When our beloved daughter in Christ R., custodian of the church of Hesia, and the cleric Volpert, proctor of the nun G., had formerly approached the Apostolic See [now] [and] had litigated for some time before us concerning the elections celebrated in that church of the said custodian and nun,

[after diligently hearing the matters proposed both by the proctor himself and by the custodian, we commanded the abbots of Helerward and Herg and the provost of Geismar that, supported by our authority and notwithstanding any contradiction or appeal, they declare void and invalid whatever had been done concerning the election of the said nun; and, after inquiring more diligently into the truth concerning the election of the custodian, if they found her election canonical and her person suitable, they were to confirm her by apostolic authority, restraining those who contradicted through ecclesiastical censure, appeal being set aside.

But when the custodian presented this mandate to the judges, they declared void and invalid what had been done concerning the aforesaid nun. When she refused to relinquish the abbey, the judges bound her with the bond of excommunication and ordered her to be more strictly avoided; but after several days she appealed through a messenger concerning her election, together with those who had elected her. The judges showed no deference to the appeal, especially since her election had been invalidated by our express mandate and appeal was prohibited in our letters. After citing the convent of Herisia, they took care to inquire into the custodian's election as had been enjoined upon them. When they found her election canonical and her person suitable, after taking the counsel of prudent men they confirmed her election and by a definitive sentence adjudged the abbey of Herisia to her by our authority.

Although the diocesan bishop appealed and prohibited the convent of Herisia from presuming to obey her as abbess, the judges nevertheless introduced her with all gentleness into corporal possession of the abbey. She was violently ejected from it by the brother of the aforesaid nun and her supporters; and, in addition to other evils wickedly perpetrated there by them, they compelled R. to confirm by oath that until the next approaching feast of Saint Martin she would not enter the church of Herisia or make use even of the simple house or stipend which she held there.

When R. was gravely vexed concerning these and other matters, she considered that recourse should be had to our presence, the aforesaid nun G. likewise coming. R. proposed a complaint concerning them and requested confirmation of the proceedings of the aforesaid judges and satisfaction for the damages and injuries inflicted upon her. G. proposed to the contrary that, since she had been elected abbess of the church of Herisia by the greater and sounder part of the convent and her election had been confirmed by the diocesan bishop, the custodian obtained letters to the abbot of Conradesburch and his co-judges. When G., having been cited, came into their presence and showed that she had been despoiled on occasion of the custodian, she considered that by sentence of those judges she was in no way bound to answer the custodian unless she were first restored. But the custodian, appealing from that sentence, personally prosecuted her appeal.

Furthermore, although G. sent a proctor solely so that the same sentence might be confirmed, her proctor, exceeding the bounds of his mandate, permitted the custodian to obtain what she wished against G. and brought letters back to the aforesaid judges. One of those judges lay under a sentence of excommunication, as the letters produced before us by our venerable brother the Archbishop of Mainz contained. The other, with the third absent, proceeded irregularly in every matter; and, although both G. and the chapter of Herisia appealed on account of various grievances, they nevertheless proceeded and caused the custodian to be introduced into corporal possession through Albert, her familiar—who, as was proved by the same letters of the aforesaid archbishop, was bound by the bond of excommunication—and B. the parish priest.

To prove that the said proctor had received a mandate to prosecute the appeal interposed, G. produced witnesses before the auditor granted to her. It was answered to the contrary that, even if those witnesses had proved such a mandate, this by no means showed that he had not received another; and therefore, since the presumption was in favor of the sentence, especially because it had been promulgated by us with mature counsel, it could plainly be understood that the aforesaid proctor had received a general mandate concerning the principal affair, as the same custodian demonstrated more fully through the single witness whom she produced.

Having understood these and other matters proposed by each party, we considered that the aforesaid nun G. should be removed by sentence from administration of the abbey. By our letters we commanded our beloved sons, the scholastic of Hildesheim and the custodian and scholastic of Minden, to approach that church in person and take care to commit administration of the abbey to another suitable person, to whom restitution from both sides of the things taken away should be made for the use of the church. Meanwhile, adjudicating the sentence of confirmation rendered by the delegated judges concerning the custodian's election, they were, as justice required, to confirm or invalidate it. That is, if it were established that the sentence should be invalidated because one of the delegated judges who rendered it was publicly bound by the bond of excommunication when it was rendered, as was shown by the metropolitan's letters, or for another cause, they were to quash it and adjudicate the custodian's election anew. Hearing more fully both the matters proposed concerning the facts and concerning the person, they were to invalidate her election if it were found canonical; otherwise, after wholly invalidating it, they were to give the sisters free power to elect and, appeal being removed, confirm the election of the woman whom they should consider regularly to be elected as abbess. They were also to cause provision to be made for the aforesaid custodian's lawful expenses from the goods of the church, and to compel those contradicting or rebelling, through ecclesiastical censure with appeal removed, to desist from their temerity. If named witnesses withdrew through favor, hatred, or fear, they were likewise to compel them, by the same constraint and with appeal ceasing, to bear testimony to the truth.

Those judges summoned both the custodian and the convent of the church of Herisia to their presence and granted them a period of delay. But while the delay was pending, the provostess of Herisia and her accomplices presented our letters to the abbot of Reinvehusen, the provost of the New Church, and the parish priest of Eschenshuseim. In those letters the same judges were commanded, justice being observed, to compel the aforesaid custodian by ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed, to restore certain ornaments of that church, the proceeds of the custodianship pertaining to the use of the church, the revenues from Meinchsern which ought to minister to the sisters' necessities, and certain other things from their prebends which she had maliciously taken through certain robbers and detained at the decision of her own will.

After the custodian was cited by authority of these letters, because she could not appear before the judges on the day appointed for her, after an appeal had been interposed on her behalf by the cleric Lambert they pronounced a sentence of excommunication against her. Although her proctor appeared before them that same day and requested relaxation of that sentence as having been rendered less than reasonably, he was heard in nothing at all; he therefore ratified the appeal interposed by Lambert and withdrew. Showing no deference to the appeal, the judges received the witnesses produced on behalf of the provostess and her accomplices. After publishing their depositions in the custodian's absence, they condemned her and her accomplices to restitution of one hundred and fifty marks and likewise for theft and sacrilege, subjecting them to a sentence of excommunication.

Afterward, when the custodian's proctor presented himself at the appointed time before the aforesaid scholastic of Minden and his co-judges to proceed in judgment on her behalf, those judges asserted that, since the custodian had been excommunicated by the aforesaid judges, just as she could not bring an action, so neither ought her proctor to be heard; by sentence they repelled her from acting. The proctor answered to the contrary that such a sentence of excommunication could harm neither him nor the custodian, since it had been impeded at law by the obstacle of a lawful appeal which preceded it. When the judges, regarding this allegation as frivolous, refused to adjudicate the appeal, the proctor appealed to the Apostolic See. Refusing to defer to that appeal, they received the witnesses whom the other party wished to produce to prove that one of the delegated judges who had rendered the sentence for the custodian had been excommunicated when the sentence of confirmation for her was rendered, taking as their occasion that some of the witnesses had come from remote regions.

For this reason certain sisters of Herisia appealed to the Apostolic See for themselves and the custodian. Disregarding the appeal interposed, the judges removed the nun G. from administration of the church of Herisia and committed it to the provostess of that church, who was to receive certain suitable persons as her assistants. The same judges also omitted the article concerning restitution of the things taken away, which had first been inserted in the mandate of our letters, and received witnesses concerning another article: namely, that a lawful appeal had formerly been taken from the aforesaid abbot and his co-judges because they refused to provide the parties with a copy of our rescript.

Afterward, publishing the witnesses received concerning the aforesaid articles, they wholly invalidated the sentence of confirmation rendered for the often-mentioned custodian. Inquiring nevertheless into her election, they quashed it as having been celebrated less than canonically and granted the sisters free power to elect. Assembling together, the sisters unanimously elected the often-mentioned nun G. The said judges confirmed her election and solemnly assigned her possession of the abbey and its chair, publicly declaring the aforesaid custodian and her supporters excommunicated.

Subsequently, those who had been appointed by the aforesaid judges as auditors concerning the foregoing article, namely the restitution of the things taken away, received the witnesses produced by the aforesaid provostess and her accomplices and transmitted their depositions, enclosed under their own seals, to the same judges. But when the custodian began her journey to come to the Apostolic See, the aforesaid judges refused to publish the statements of the witnesses and sent them enclosed under their seals to our presence.]

We therefore diligently considered these and other matters which both the aforesaid custodian and the cleric I., who had come against her concerning the same affair, wished to propose when recently appearing at the Apostolic See, as well as the records of the judges produced before us by those same persons. We plainly discovered that the aforesaid letters obtained for the abbot of Remech and his co-judges had been obtained by subreption. For cognizance of the article concerning restitution of the things taken away had been committed in them without our knowledge, although that article had been inserted in the earlier letters obtained for the scholastic of Hildesheim and his co-judges, of which no mention was made in the second letters. We therefore considered that what is known to have been attempted on occasion of those letters should be wholly invalidated.

We also found that the said scholastic of Hildesheim and his co-judges had proceeded less than providently. For our letters principally commanded them to approach the aforesaid church in person and commit administration of the abbey to a suitable person, to whom restitution from both sides of the things taken away should be made for its use. But they, transposing the form of the apostolic mandate, omitted that article and adjudicated other articles at great length and out of order. We therefore decree void and invalid their proceedings attempted contrary to the form of our rescript and the order of law.

Accordingly, we command you, after assembling in a suitable and safe place and restoring G., A., and certain other sisters of the same church as justice requires, to observe the form of our mandate with exact diligence and, appeal being removed, to proceed in the affair itself with reason going before, according to the tenor of the preceding letters, so that through your circumspect solicitude a due conclusion may at least on this occasion be imposed upon an affair so long protracted. [But because, etc.]

Et licet dioecesanus episcopus appellarit et inhibuerit. Porro quum dicta R. super iis et aliis graviter vexaretur, ad nostram duxit praesentiam recurrendum, memorata G. moniali similiter veniente. Quumque super iis ipsa R. proposuerit quaestionem, et postulaverit confirmari processum iudicum praedictorum, et ut satisfieret sibi de damnis et iniuriis irrogatis, dicta G. proposuit ex adverso, quod quum electa fuerit in Herisiensis ecclesiae abbatissam a maiori et saniori parte conventus, et eius electio per dioecesanum fuerit episcopum confirmata, ipsa custos ad abbatem de Conradesburch et eius coniudices literas impetravit. Ad quorum praesentiam quum ipsa G. citata veniret, et ostenderet, se spoliatam fuisse ipsius occasione custodis, sententiam ab ipsis iudicibus reputavit se illi nullatenus respondere teneri, nisi foret primitus restituta. Sed ipsa custos ab eadem sententia provocando, appellationem suam est personaliter prosecuta. Ceterum quum ipsa G. ad hoc tantum procuratorem transmiserit, ut eadem confirmaretur sententia, procurator ipsius mandati fines excedens passus est obtinere custodem quod voluit contra ipsam, et ad supradictos iudices literas reportavit, quorum unus excommunicationis sententiae subiacebat, prout literae venerabilis fratis nostri Maguntinensis archiepiscopi nobis exhibitae continebant; cum quo alter eorum, absente tertio, in omnibus inordinate processit, et licet tam ipsa quam Herisiense capitulum pro diversis gravaminibus appellarint, ipsi tamen nihilominus procedentes, eandem custodem per Albertum familiarem ipsius, qui, sicut ex eisdem literis memorati archiepiscopi probabatur, vinculo erat excommunicationis adstrictus, et B. plebanum in corporalem fecerunt possessionem induci. Ad probandum vero, quod procurator iamdictus mandatum tale receperit, ut videlicet appellationem interpositam prosequi procuraret, testes coram auditore sibi dato produxit. Sed e contra responsum est, quod, etsi testes illi mandatum tale probassent, per hoc tamen nullatenus est ostensum, quin aliud recepisset, et ideo, quum esset pro sententia praesumendum, praesertim quum fuisset a nobis cum maturitate consilii promulgata, manifeste intelligi poterat, quod super principali negotio procurator praedictus mandatum receperat generale, sicut eadem custos per testem unicum, quem produxit, plenius ostendebat. Nos autem iis et aliis intellectis, quae fuerunt ab unaquaque parte proposita, praefatam G. monialem ab administratione ipsius abbatiae sententialiter duximus removendam, dilectis filiis scholastico Hildesemensi, custodi et scholastico Mindensibus dantes nostris literis in praeceptis, ut, ad ipsam ecclesiam personaliter accedentes, abbatiae administrationem eiusdem alii personae idoneae committere procurarent, cui ad opus ecclesiae fieret hinc inde resignatio subtractorum; ipsi vero interim de confirmationis sententia, quae super electione custodis lata erat a delegatis iudicibus, cognoscentes, sicut iustum esset, confirmarent vel infirmarent eandem; ita videlicet, quod, si pro eo, quod unus ex iudicibus delegatis, qui eandem sententiam tulerant, excommunicationis esset vinculo publice innodatus, quando sententia lata fuit, sicut per metropolitani literas monstrabatur, aut ex alia causa ipsam constaret sententiam infirmandam, ea cassata cognoscerent iterum de ipsius electione custodis, et quae in factum fuissent proposita vel personam plenius audientes, ipsam, si fuisset inventa canonica, infirmarent; alioquin ea penitus infirmata, darent sororibus facultatem liberam eligendi, et, quam in abbatissam sibi ducerent regulariter eligendam, eius electionem sublato appellationis obstaculo confirmarent, ac praefatae custodi de bonis ecclesiae facerent in expensis legitimis provideri; contradictores nihilominus vel rebelles, ut a sua temeritate desisterent, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota cogentes. Testes etiam, qui nominati essent, si se gratia, odio vel timore subtraherent, per districtionem eandem cessante appellatione cogerent veritati testimonium perhibere. Ipsi vero iudices tam custodem ipsam quam conventum Herisiensis ecclesiae ad suam praesentiam evocantes, dilationis eis terminum indulserunt; sed dilatione pendente praeposita Herisiensis cum complicibus suis abbati de Reinvehusen, praeposito de Nova Ecclesia, et plebano de Eschenshuseim nostras literas praesentavit, in quibus eisdem iudicibus mandabatur, ut supradicta custos quaedam ipsius ecclesiae ornamenta, custodiae quoque proventus ad usum ecclesiae pertinentes, et reditus de Meinchsern, qui debebant sororum necessitatibus ministrari, ac quaedam alia de praebendis earum, quae per quosdam praedones malitiose subtraxerat et ipsa pro suae voluntatis arbitrio detinebat, per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota iustitia mediante restituere cogeretur; quarum auctoritate custos ipsa citata, quum statuto sibi die non posset coram iudicibus comparere, ipsi post appellationem a Lamberto clerico interpositam pro parte custodis eiusdem, in ipsam excommunicationis sententiam protulerunt. Et licet eodem die procurator ipsius comparuerit coram eis, et eandem excommunicationis sententiam, utpote minus rationabiliter latam, peteret relaxari, quum in nullo penitus audiretur, appellationem a praedicto Lamberto clerico interpositam ratam habuit, et recessit. Ipsi vero appellationi minime deferentes receperunt testes a praepositae ac complicum eius parte productos, et eorum depositionibus in ipsius custodis absentia publicatis, ipsam cum complicibus suis ad restitutionem centum quinquaginta marcarum, et de furto ac sacrilegio nihilominus condemnarunt, excommunicationis sententiae supponentes easdem. Postmodum autem quum procurator custodis ipsius praedictorum scholastici Mindensis et coniudicum suorum conspectui se statuto termino praesentasset pro eadem custode in iudicio processurus, iidem iudices asserentes, quod, quum praefata custos excommunicata esset a iudicibus memoratis, sicut ipsa non poterat agere, sic nec eius debebat procurator audiri, eam ab agendo per sententiam repulerunt. Procurator autem ex adverso respondit, quod talis excommunicationis sententia sibi nocere non poterat vel custodi, quum per legitimae appellationis obstaculum, quae sententiam ipsam praecesserat, de iure fuerit impedita. Quumque iudices ipsi, allegationem huiusmodi frivolam reputantes, nollent de appellatione cognoscere, procurator iam dictus ad sedem apostolicam appellavit; sed ipsi appellationi deferre nolentes, testes, quos pars altera producere voluit ad probandum, quod unus ex delegatis iudicibus, qui sententiam tulerant pro custode, tunc excommunicatus erat, quum pro ea confirmationis sententia lata fuit, ea occasione sumpta, quod quidam ex ipsis testibus a remotis partibus venerant, receperunt. Propter quod quaedam sorores Herisienses pro se ac praedicta custode ad sedem apostolicam provocarunt. Qui appellationem interpositam contemnentes, G. monialem ab administratione Herisiensis ecclesiae removerunt, ipsam eiusdem ecclesiae praepositae committentes, aliquas personas idoneas in suum adiutorium recepturae. Iidem quoque iudices articulum de resignatione subtractorum intermittentes, qui primo fuerat in mandato nostrarum literarum insertus, testes super alio articulo receperunt, quia videlicet ab abbate praedicto et coniudicibus suis legitime olim fuerat provocatum, eo, quod rescripti nostri copiam partibus facere noluerunt. Qui receptos testes super praemissis articulis postmodum publicantes, confirmationis sententiam pro saepe dicta custode latam penitus infirmarunt; ac de ipsius electione nihilominus inquirentes, tanquam celebratam minus canonice cassaverunt, concessa sororibus eligendi libera facultate. Chapter XXIII Latin source headnote: A second rescript is valid although it makes no mention of the first, when the person who obtained the first was unwilling to use it within a year.

The same.

It very often happens that certain persons, after obtaining our letters against others concerning certain matters and postponing their use for a long time, finally produce them when, by authority of other letters, they begin to be sued by those against whom they had first obtained letters, saying that the later letters are not valid because they make no mention of the earlier ones. Since human malice is not to be indulged, by authority of the present writings we establish that, if anyone obtaining our letters postpones using them through malice or negligence for a year after he has had access to the judges, he may be sued by authority of the later letters, although no mention of the earlier ones is made in them.

Valet secundum rescriptum, licet de primo non faciat mentionem, quo uti noluit impetrans intra annum.

Idem.

> Plerumque contingit, quod aliqui contra quosdam super aliquibus rebus nostris literis impetratis, illis uti multo tempore postponentes, tunc demum eas exhibent, quum aliarum literarum auctoritate ab eis, contra quos ipsi primitus literas impetrarant, coeperint conveniri, dicentes, posteriores literas non valere, utpote non facientes de prioribus mentionem. Quum igitur non sit malitiis hominum indulgendum, praesentium auctoritate statuimus, ut, si quis nostras literas impetrans infra annum, postquam copiam iudicum habuerit, ex malitia vel negligentia postposuerit uti eis, auctoritate posteriorum literarum valeat conveniri, licet in ipsis nulla de prioribus mentio habeatur.

Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote (Abbas Siculus): If something is commanded to an ordinary by a delegate, he ought humbly to execute it. But if another delegate, through other letters, commands the contrary after execution, or if before execution it becomes known to the ordinary that there is a dispute over jurisdiction between the delegate who issued the command and another, he is to cause copies of both sets of letters to be produced to him—not so that he may adjudicate the matter jurisdictionally, but so that he may inform himself whether the first letters are revoked by the second. If the first are revoked, he is to execute the second command. But if they are not revoked, or if he is in doubt about this, he is not to execute the second command until the dispute over jurisdiction is terminated.

The same to the Archbishop of Rouen.

When it happens ... (And below: [compare chapter 11, *On Age and Quality, I.*14.]) Moreover, when certain persons litigating over a matter obtain letters to different judges, some of whom, obtained by one party, command you to declare that the opposing party lies under a sentence of excommunication, while other judges afterward enjoin you to declare that same party absolved, you ask us whether in this matter you ought to obey both sets, neither, or at least one of them.

Responding concerning this to your prudence, we believe that a distinction is to be made: when you are known to have received the first command, had it perhaps become known to you that a dispute over jurisdiction had arisen between those judges and the others, or did you know nothing at all about this? If nothing at all concerning a dispute of this kind has become known to you when you happen to receive the first command, you ought humbly to put it into execution. But if the contrary is later commanded to you by others, then, after a copy of the letters obtained from the Apostolic See for both sets of judges has been requested—which by authority of the present writings we strictly command to be produced to you—if from their tenor you clearly discover, so that there is no room at all for doubt, that the letters obtained for those from whom you received the second command expressly revoke the letters of the others, you are fearlessly to execute what is commanded to you in the second place.

But if from inspection of the letters it is manifestly established before you that the letters obtained for those who gave the first command are by no means revoked by the others, you are in no way to execute the second command. If you rightly have doubt concerning this, you ought not to proceed to execute the second command until, according to the tenor of one of our constitutions, this dispute between them is quieted. You ought to do the same if, after the first command has been received but before it has been put into execution, it should become known to you that they have begun to dispute among themselves concerning the jurisdiction committed to them.

In all these matters, however, it is fitting that you have a pure and provident intention, lest, in order to decline a command, you say that you are in doubt where no doubt exists, or, in order to execute [a command], assert that you are certain where you ought not to be certain. Although from these things definite instruction is given to you concerning how you ought to conduct yourself in these matters, no power is attributed to you to adjudicate the jurisdictional dispute between the delegates or the parties. [Moreover, etc. (compare chapter 36, *On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.*29.) Given at the Lateran, on the Kalends of September, in the thirteenth year, 1210.]

Super quo tuae prudentiae respondentes credimus distinguendum, an, quum primum mandatum recepisse dignosceris, tibi forsan innotuerit, inter illos et alios super iurisdictione discordiam suscitatam, an super hoc nihil omnino scivisti? Et quidem, si super contentione huiusmodi nihil tibi penitus innotescat, quum primum mandatum recipere te contingat, illud debes humiliter exsecutioni mandare. Sed si postea contrarium tibi ab aliis demandatur, tunc, literarum ad utrosque a sede apostolica obtentarum copia postulata, quas tibi auctoritate praesentium districte praecipimus exhiberi, si ex ipsarum tenore deprehenderis evidenter ita, quod non sit aliquatenus haesitandum, quod literae, quae ad illos, a quibus secundum mandatum receperis, impetratae noscuntur, expresse revocent literas aliorum, tu illud intrepidus exsequaris, quod tibi secundo loco mandatur. Si vero ex literarum inspectione manifeste tibi constet, quod literae obtentae ad illos, qui primum dedere mandatum, per alias minime revocantur, secundum mandatum nullatenus exsequaris. Quod si super hoc tibi merito fuerit dubitandum, ad exsequendum secundum mandatum te procedere non oportet, donec iuxta cuiusdam nostrae constitutionis tenorem inter eos huiusmodi concertatio sopiatur. Et id ipsum facere debes, si primo mandato recepto et nondum exsecutioni mandato tibi forsan innotuerit, quod inter se, super iurisdictione videlicet demandata, coeperint disceptare. Ceterum in his omnibus puram et providam te convenit intentionem habere, ne vel ad declinandum mandatum dubitare te dicas, ubi dubitandum non est, vel etiam ad [mandatum] exsequendum te asseras esse certum, ubi certus esse non debes. Licet autem ex his certa tibi detur doctrina, qualiter in his te debeas habere, nulla tamen tibi attribuitur potestas, ut inter delegatos aut partes de iurisdictione debeas iudicare. Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: When several matters producing different effects are narrated in a rescript, it is not sufficient for the person obtaining it to prove only one of them in order to obtain both effects.

The same to Master G. and P. of Firmisca.

Formerly it was intimated to our ears from the letters of our beloved sons, the abbots of Saint-Nicaise of Reims, Sargiensis, and Vallis Regia, that letters had issued from us to them once and again concerning the fact that P., a cleric of Saint-Remi of Reims, detained the parish of Salice Saint-Remi, which the cleric R. de Clivo proposed had been conferred upon him by the abbot of Saint-Remi through an intermediary person. They cited the parties a first, second, and third time; and because the said P. of Saint-Remi, although cited repeatedly, refused to appear before them in person or through any representative, they bound him with the bond of excommunication and caused the fruits of the parish to be sequestered.

When that same P. afterward approached them, promised that he would submit to the law, and obtained absolution, they granted him letters of absolution and assigned him a day and place on which he should fulfill before them what he had promised. Erasing the day and place from those letters, he wrote in the place of the erasure that they commanded the sequestered fruits to be assigned to him. He ultimately confessed this before two of them, the third having excused his absence by letters.

Since an excess of such temerity was not free from the taint of falsehood, we commanded you that, if matters stood thus, you should impose perpetual silence upon that presumptuous man concerning the said parish and assign it, with the sequestered fruits, to the aforesaid cleric R. de Clivo. But, as you, sons G. and P., intimated to us by your letters, when the said R. had proved the aforesaid erasure before you through suitable witnesses and on this account requested that the said church be assigned to him, you were in doubt whether the clause "if matters stood thus" ought to be understood of all the foregoing matters or only of the article concerning the erasure. You therefore postponed proceeding further in the affair, choosing rather to implore an oracle of the Apostolic See concerning this than rashly to determine anything.

We therefore, commending your diligence in the Lord, respond that the clause ought to be referred to all the foregoing matters in order that the aforesaid church be conferred upon R. For although the vice of falsehood is sufficient to impose perpetual silence concerning that church upon the person who perpetrated falsehood of this kind, the same church is not on that account to be assigned to the adversary unless full proof has been made concerning the other matters. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Nones of March, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

Remigii, quam R. de Clivo clericus per interpositam personam ab abbate S. Remigii sibi collatam fuisse proposuit, detinebat, ipsi partes semel, secundo et tertio citaverunt, et dictum P. de S. Remigio, quia citatus pluries comparere noluit per se vel per responsalem aliquem coram eis, excommunicationis vinculo innodantes, fecerunt fructus ipsius parochiae sequestrari. Quumque postmodum idem P. accedens ad eos se iuri promiserit pariturum, ac obtinuerit se absolvi, ipsi absolutionis literas concedentes diem ei assignaverunt et locum, quibus coram eis quod promiserat adimpleret; qui diem et locum ex literis illis radens, in loco rasurae scripsit, quod ipsi ei sequestratos fructus assignari mandabant, quod coram duobus eorum tandem, tertio sui absentiam excusante per literas, est confessus. Nos igitur, quum tantae temeritatis excessus falsitatis scrupulo non careret, vobis dedimus in mandatis, ut, si esset ita, ipsi praesumptori super dicta parochia perpetuum silentium imponentes, praefato R. de Clivo clerico assignaretis eandem cum fructibus sequestratis. Verum sicut vos, filii G. et P., per vestras nobis literas intimastis, quum dictus R. rasuram praefatam coram vobis per testes idoneos probavisset, et ob hoc postulasset sibi dictam ecclesiam assignari, vos utrum clausula illa: "si esset ita," de omnibus superioribus, an de articulo tantum rasurae deberet intelligi dubitastis; in negotio ipso procedere ulterius distulistis, eligentes secundum hoc potius sedis apostolicae oraculum implorare, quam aliquid temere definire. Nos igitur diligentiam vestram in Domino commendantes respondemus, quod clausula illa ad omnia debet superiora referri, ad hoc, ut ipsi R. praefata ecclesia conferatur; quia, licet vitium falsitatis ad imponendum ei perpetuum silentium super ecclesia ipsa sufficiat, qui falsitatem huiusmodi perpetravit, non tamen propter hoc eadem ecclesia est adversario assignanda, nisi super aliis facta fuerit plena fides. Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: A rescript obtained for restoration to a benefice is not valid when it makes no mention of the cause of the excommunication and removal of the person obtaining it.

The same to the Bishop of Imola.

Our beloved son, the abbot of Saint Stephen of Bologna, intimated to us by his letters that, when he —to whom we committed the office of visitation in the city and diocese of Bologna—had considered that the priests B. and A. should be removed from their churches because of their grave and manifest excesses, those priests obtained from us letters in the common form directed to you concerning their restoration, making no mention at all of the cause of their removal or of the excommunication by which they remain bound.

When the proctors of the neighboring inhabitants and of the churches themselves proposed the aforesaid exceptions in your presence, you decreed that proceedings in the affair should be suspended until you received our good pleasure concerning our will. We therefore, commending your prudence in this, command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if matters stand thus, you decree that the letters themselves, as obtained through suppression of the truth, lack force; and, appeal being removed, command that what was providently done concerning the aforesaid priests by the aforementioned abbot be firmly observed.

Non valet rescriptum super restitutione beneficii impetratum, quod de causa excommunicationis et amotionis impetrantis non facit mentionem.

Idem Episcopo Imolensi.

Dilectus filius, abbas sancti Stephani Bononiensis, per suas nobis literas intimavit, quod, quum ipse, cui visitationis officium in civitate ac dioecesi Bononiensi commisimus, B. et A. presbyteros ab ecclesiis suis propter eorum graves et manifestos excessus duxerit amovendos, iidem presbyteri super restitutione sua nostras ad te in communi forma literas impetrarunt, de amotionis suae causa et excommunicationis, qua tenentur adstricti, nullam facientes penitus mentionem. Procuratoribus igitur vicinorum et ecclesiarum ipsarum exceptiones in tua praesentia proponentibus antedictas, tu supersedendum huiusmodi negotio decrevisti, donec super hoc nostrae voluntatis beneplacitum recepisses. Nos igitur in hoc tuam prudentiam commendantes fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, literas ipsas, tanquam per veri suppressionem obtentas, viribus carere decernas, et quod circa presbyteros praedictos provide factum est, per memoratum abbatem praecipias firmiter observari, appellatione remota.

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: By letters of justice a bishop is not bound to provide for one who has a perpetual vicarage or sufficient patrimony; nor are letters of grace for obtaining a benefice valid when the person obtaining them concealed a perpetual vicarage. This states both meanings comprehensively.

The same to the Bishop of Veratisama.

You asked to be instructed by the Apostolic See whether you are bound, under the common form "Since according to the Apostle," to provide an ecclesiastical benefice for the perpetual vicar of a church who has from the proceeds of his vicarage and his paternal goods that from which he can be fittingly sustained. We have considered that this answer should be given: since, through the aforesaid form, the Apostolic See has considered that relief should be given to the needs of poor clerics who have obtained no ecclesiastical benefice, as it is customary to express there, a perpetual vicar, unless he has made mention of the vicarage, ought to obtain no benefit from letters of this kind, as being obtained with the truth suppressed. For one for whom competent provision has been made from the proceeds of a perpetual vicarage ought not to be said to lack an ecclesiastical benefice. And for one who has the support of a sufficient benefice we do not readily write knowingly concerning the obtaining of another benefice without making mention of the first in our letters. [You, finally, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Ides of January, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1214.]

Per literas iustitiae non tenetur episcopus providere habenti perpetuam vicariam vel sufficiens patrimonium, nec valent literae gratiae ad beneficium obtinendum, in quibus impetrans tacuit perpetuam vicariam. Hoc dicit comprehendendo utrumque intellectum.

Idem Episcopo Veratisamensi.

Postulasti per sedem apostolicam edoceri, utrum alicuius ecclesiae perpetuo vicario, de proventibus vicariae bonisque paternis habenti unde valeat commode sustentari, tenearis per illam formam communem: "Quum secundum Apostolum," in ecclesiastico beneficio providere. Ad quod sic duximus respondendum, quod, quum per formam praedictam necessitatibus pauperum clericorum, qui nullum sunt ecclesiasticum beneficium assecuti, sicut ibidem exprimi consuevit, sedes apostolica duxerit succurrendum, perpetuus vicarius, nisi de vicaria fecerit mentionem, commodum reportare non debet de huiusmodi literis, utpote veritate tacita impetratis. Non enim beneficio ecclesiastico carere debet dici, cui competenter de perpetuae vicariae proventibus est provisum. Et pro habente beneficii sufficientis subsidium ex certa scientia super obtinendo alio beneficio de levi non scribimus, quin faciamus de primo in nostris literis mentionem. [Tu denique etc. Dat. Lat. VI. Id. Ian. Pont. nostri Ao. XVI. 1214.]

Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: Through apostolic letters making no mention of this constitution, no one can be drawn beyond two days' journeys outside his diocese unless the letters were obtained with the consent of the parties. This it says as far as § "There are also others." — §1. Letters obtained for lawsuits without the lord's special mandate are not valid unless they are obtained by a connected person. This it says.

The same, in the General Council.

Certain persons, abusing the favor of the Apostolic See, strive to obtain its letters to remote judges so that the defendant, wearied by labor and expenses, may be compelled to yield in the suit or to buy himself free from the claimant's importunity. Since access to injuries which observance of the law forbids ought not to lie open through judicial proceedings, we establish that no one may through apostolic letters be drawn to judgment more than two days' journeys beyond his diocese unless the letters were obtained with the assent of the parties or expressly made mention of this constitution.

§1. There are also others who, turning themselves to a new kind of commerce, fabricate causes concerning which they obtain letters from the Apostolic See without their lords' mandate, as though they could revive dormant complaints or introduce new disputes. They offer those letters for sale either to the defendant, so that he may not be troubled because of them by the loss of labor and expenses, or to the claimant, so that through them he may weary his adversary with undue harassment. Since lawsuits ought to be restricted rather than enlarged, by this general constitution we decree that, if anyone hereafter presumes to obtain apostolic letters concerning any dispute without his lord's special mandate, both those letters shall be invalid and he himself shall be punished as a falsifier—unless perhaps he is among those persons from whom a mandate ought not by law to be required.

Sunt et alii, qui se ad novum genus mercimonii convertentes, velut sopitas possint suscitare querelas vel novas immittere quaestiones, fingunt causas, super quibus a sede apostolica literas impetrant absque dominorum mandato, quae vel reo, ne propter eas laborum vel expensarum dispendio molestetur, aut actori, ut per ipsas adversarium indebita molestatione fatiget, venales exponunt. Quum autem lites restringendae sint potius quam laxandae, hac generali constitutione sancimus, ut, si quis super aliqua quaestione de cetero sine speciali mandato domini literas apostolicas impetrare praesumpserit, et literae illae non valeant, et ipse tanquam falsarius puniatur, nisi forte de illis personis exstiterit, a quibus non debet exigi de iure mandatum.

Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: If, on occasion of two rescripts—one in the principal cause and the other in the cause of appeal—a dispute arises, not the judge appointed over the principal cause but the one appointed over the appeal ought to adjudicate the validity of the appeal.

Honorius III to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Co-judges.

Our beloved son I. Sarracenus, a cleric, explained before us that, when Jordan, a cleric of Dummel, drew him into a cause before you by authority of our letters concerning the church of Saint Nicholas of Dummel, it was proposed by way of exception on behalf of I. in your presence that he ought not and could not be sued by authority of those letters, because you were distant by more than two days' journeys from the diocese in which the aforesaid church was situated, contrary to the statutes of the General Council, of which no mention was made in those letters.

Because, refusing to admit this exception, you nevertheless proceeded in the cause solely on the ground that I. held benefices in the dioceses of Rochester and Ely, as though from this he were understood to have a domicile there, he appealed to our hearing. But you, disregarding his appeal, decreed that the other party was to be put into possession of that church for the purpose of custody. When I. prosecuted the appeal interposed and obtained our letters concerning the foregoing to our venerable brother the Archbishop of York and his colleagues, you nevertheless continued to proceed in the cause and prohibited those judges from proceeding in the affair committed to them. Therefore we command your discretion, if matters stand thus, to suspend proceedings in that cause, since not you but the said judges ought to adjudicate to whom jurisdiction should pertain.

Sed vos, eius appellatione contempta, partem alteram mittendam in possessionem eiusdem ecclesiae causa custodiae decrevistis. Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: If several persons obtain rescripts concerning the same church, the date is controlling, so that the first person obtaining one is preferred and alone admitted. The doctors commonly summarize it thus, and this summary proceeds according to the common opinion which prevails today because of the new laws.

The same to the Bishop and Archdeacon of León.

The chapter of Holy Cross of Cambrai showed us by a petition produced before us that, after the cleric Callimachus of the diocese of Noyon first obtained our admonitory and then our preceptory letters directed to them concerning his obtaining a prebendal benefice in their church, the cleric B. of the diocese of Tournai obtained from us executory letters against them concerning the conferral of a similar benefice upon him in the same church, directed to I., Archbishop of Tournai, and his colleagues, without mention being made of the aforesaid letters. After an appeal to us had been interposed, those judges pronounced sentences of suspension and excommunication against them. The said C. also obtained our writings to other judges concerning execution of the mandate made on his behalf, and those judges pronounced sentences of suspension and excommunication against the same persons.

They therefore humbly petitioned us that, since there are only twelve prebends in the same church and for that reason they could not provide for both at once without great burden, we should cause those sentences to be relaxed and one of the two to be provided with a prebend in the same church—especially since this clause was inserted in the letters of each: "unless the same church has been burdened by our mandate concerning the reception of another." Therefore we command your discretion, after receiving as canon and brother, and assigning a prebendal benefice to, the one who first brought back the apostolic mandate to them, to relax the aforesaid sentences according to the form of the Church, after removing the obstacle of appeal, and to impose silence upon the other concerning a prebendal benefice in the same church.

> Si plures impetrant in eadem ecclesia, statur datae, ut primus impetrans praeferatur, et solus admittatur. Ita communiter summant doctores, et procedit istud summarium secundum opinionem communem, quae hodie invaluit, propter iura nova.

Unde nobis humiliter supplicarunt, ut, quum in eadem ecclesia XII. tantum sint praebendae, et ob hoc non sine magno gravamine simul providere possent, utique faceremus easdem sententias relaxari, et provideri eorum alteri in eadem ecclesia de praebenda: praesentim, quum in utriusque literis clausula illa contineretur inserta, nisi eadem ecclesia de mandato nostro foret in alterius receptione gravata. Latin source headnote: If one who has papal letters for a benefice renounces them in return for an annual pension, beneficial letters afterward obtained by him with this concealed are not valid.

The same to the Archbishop of Bourges, Legate of the Apostolic See.

It has come to our hearing through your report that certain clerics, after obtaining letters from the Apostolic See concerning their provision in certain churches subject to you by diocesan law, receive annual pensions or other benefices from those churches, withdraw from their claims against them, and renounce the benefit of our letters. They then approach the Apostolic See and obtain other letters from it concerning their provision, without mention being made of the letters previously obtained, and thus, abusing the grace of apostolic benignity, trouble the churches in manifold ways.

Therefore, lest such men glory in the cunning of their circumvention, we command your fraternity to decree that those who, after selling our letters in this manner, shall hereafter obtain—or have hitherto obtained—others without mention being made of the former letters are deprived of the benefit of the latter; and not to permit the churches against which they were obtained to be vexed on their occasion, revoking as void anything which you find to have been done under their pretext.

Ne igitur tales de suae circumventionis astutia glorientur, Fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus eos, qui, post literas nostras taliter venditas, alias, de illis mentione non habita, impetrabunt de cetero, vel hactenus impetrarunt, carere decernas commodo earundem, et ecclesias, contra quas fuerint impetratae, non permittas earum occasione vexari, revocando in irritum, si quid earum praetextu inveneris esse factum.

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: A person received through apostolic letters, although he is awaiting a prebend, ought not to be received in another church through other letters which suppress that fact. This it says by adhering to the words of the letter.

Gregory IX to the Archbishop of Milan.

You proposed in our presence that certain clerics fraudulently obtain several letters from the Apostolic See, although the later letters make no mention of the earlier, so that they may be admitted in several churches. Thus, having sometimes been received in some churches, although they have not yet obtained an ecclesiastical benefice in them, they nevertheless assail and trouble other churches concerning their reception. (And below:) We command you to cause those clerics to remain content with the churches in which they have been received, and not to permit other churches to be troubled by them on occasion of letters of this kind, unless perhaps they made express mention of their reception.

> Receptus per literas apostolicas, licet praebendam exspectet, per alias literas hoc supprimentes in alia ecclesia recipi non debet. Hoc dicit inhaerendo verbis literae.
> Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo Mediolanensi.

In nostra proposuisti praesentia, quod nonnulli clerici a sede apostolica plures literas, non tamen alias de aliis mentionem facientes, impetrant fraudulenter, ut in pluribus ecclesiis admittantur, sicque aliquando in aliis recepti, licet nondum in eis ecclesiasticum beneficium sint assecuti, alias ecclesias super receptione sua nihilominus impetunt et molestant. (Et infra:) Mandamus, quatenus eos clericos ecclesiis, in quibus recepti sunt, faciens esse contentos, non permittas alias ab eis occasione literarum huiusmodi molestari, nisi de receptione forte sua expressam fecerint mentionem.

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: A rescript which a revoked proctor, certified of the revocation, obtained outside judicial proceedings is not valid; it is otherwise, however, if he obtained it in judicial proceedings, provided the revocation had not come to the knowledge of the adversary or the judge. This it says according to the more common reading.

The same to the Bishop of Senlis and the Abbot of Chaalis.

It was proposed on behalf of the dean and chapter of Laon that, after they had pronounced a sentence of excommunication against the nobleman I. by authority of an apostolic indulgence, the proctors of the parties approached the Apostolic See on this account and, issue having been joined concerning various articles, we committed the cause to you for termination, adding that letters obtained without the assent of the parties should not obstruct it.

But the said nobleman, having been cited, proposed that proceedings ought not to be taken under those letters because V., who had obtained them, was a false proctor, since before the letters were obtained the nobleman had revoked the mandate delivered to him on account of the suspicion which he had conceived against him. When they proposed to the contrary that a revocation of this kind had not come to us or to themselves, you pronounced by an interlocutory decree that you ought to proceed under those letters. (And below:) When their proctor then requested that you inspect the aforesaid indulgence, the nobleman's proctor answered to the contrary that proceedings ought not to be taken under the said letters, producing certain other letters obtained later, which contained, among other things, that, if it proceeded from the will of the parties, you were to terminate the cause; otherwise, you were to remit it, sufficiently instructed, to the examination of the Apostolic See together with the aforesaid indulgence.

They said that these later letters were not valid because they had been obtained by the same V. after revocation of his mandate. Since, according to the statutes of the General Council, apostolic letters which someone obtains without his lord's special mandate ought not to be valid unless he is among the persons from whom a mandate is not by law to be required, we command you that, if the revocation of the mandate came to the proctor, then—because letters obtained by one from whom the lord has revoked his mandate ought to possess less validity—you proceed in the affair according to the contents of the earlier letters, notwithstanding the later ones.

Non valet rescriptum, quod procurator revocatus et de hoc certificatus extra iudicium impetravit; secus tamen, si in iudicio, dummodo revocatio ad notitiam adversarii vel iudicis non pervenerit. Hoc dicit secundum lecturam magis communem.

Idem Episcopo Silvanectensi, et Abbati Caroliloci.

Ex parte decani et capituli Laudunensis fuit propositum, quod, quum ipsi auctoritate apostolicae indulgentiae in nobilem virum I. excommunicationis sententiam protulissent, procuratoribus partium propter hoc ad sedem apostolicam accedentibus, et lite super diversis articulis contestata, nos causam vobis commisimus terminandam, hoc adiecto, ut non obstarent literae praeter assensum partium impetratae. Dictus autem nobilis citatus proposuit, quod per illas literas procedendum non erat ex eo, quod V., qui easdem literas impetraverat, falsus exstiterat procurator, quum ipse ante impetrationem literarum ipsarum, propter suspicionem, quam contra eundem conceperat, mandatum sibi traditum revocasset. Eis igitur proponentibus ex adverso, quod ad nos vel ad ipsos huiusmodi revocatio non pervenit, vos, quod deberetis per literas ipsas procedere, per quandam interlocutoriam protulistis. (Et infra:) Petente itaque procuratore ipsorum, ut inspiceretis praedictam indulgentiam, procurator ipsius nobilis ex adverso respondit, quod non erat per iam dictas literas procedendum, exhibens alias quasdam posterius impetratas, inter alia continentes, ut, si de partium voluntate procederet, causam terminaretis eandem; alioquin ipsam sufficienter instructam remitteretis ad sedis apostolicae examen cum indulgentia memorata. Quas literas ipsi ex eo non valere dicebant, quia per eundem V. et post revocationem mandati fuerant impetratae. Quia vero iuxta generalis statuta concilii apostolicae literae, quas sine speciali mandato domini quis impetrat, valere non debent, nisi sit de illis personis, a quibus non est exigendum de iure mandatum, mandamus, quatenus, si revocatio mandati ad procuratorem pervenit, quum minus valere debeant literae, quae impetrantur ab illo, a quo mandatum dominus revocavit, in negotio iuxta priorum continentiam literarum, non obstantibus posterioribus, procedatis.

Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: A rescript obtained against a man of one diocese does not extend to a man of the same name from another diocese.

The same to the Dean and Master G., Canon of Liège.

Know that we have learned from the report of V. that, when R. obtained letters to judges against V. of the diocese of Reims concerning certain cloths and other things, that same V. proposed by way of exception that, since he was not of the diocese of Reims but of Liège, he could not and ought not by law to be sued under letters of this kind, since they made no mention of the diocese of Liège. Because they refused to admit this exception, he appealed to our hearing. Therefore we command you, if matters stand thus, after revoking as void, etc.

Rescriptum, impetratum contra hominem alicuius dioecesis, non extenditur ad hominem eiusdem nominis alterius dioecesis.

Idem Decano et Magistro G. Canonico Leodiensi.

Significante V. nos noveritis accepisse, quod, quum R. contra V. Remensis dioecesis super quibusdam pannis et aliis ad iudices literas impetrasset, idem V. excipiendo proposuit, quod, quum idem non de Remensi, sed de Leodiensi dioecesi exsisteret, per huiusmodi literas, quum de dioecesi Leodiensi non facerent aliquam mentionem, conveniri de iure non poterat, nec debebat. Et quia exceptionem huiusmodi admittere denegarunt, nostram audientiam appellavit. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, revocato in irritum, etc.

Chapter XXXV

Latin source headnote: Through a rescript obtained against the men of a diocese, men of the city cannot be sued.

The same to the Prior of Saint-Laud and the Succentor of Rouen.

Ralph, a cleric and rector of the church of Saint Christopher in the city of Sées, showed us by his representation that, when Master R. sued him before the judges of certain letters concerning that same church under the general clause "certain others"—letters obtained from us against the Bishop of Sées and certain others of the diocese of Sées concerning revenues and other property—the same rector proposed by way of exception that, since he was from the city of Sées and no one of the city itself was understood to be included under that clause, he could not be sued through it. Because the said judges refused to admit this exception, he appealed to our hearing. Therefore we command you, if matters stand thus, to revoke as void, etc.

Et quia dicti iudices exceptionem huiusmodi recusarunt admittere, nostram audientiam appellavit. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, revocetis in irritum, etc.

Chapter XXXVI

Latin source headnote: If a person who was to be sued under a general clause dies while the matter remains untouched, his successor cannot be sued.

The same to the Abbot of Saint James.

The Countess of Namur reported to us that, when on the death of her brother the count she succeeded to his county, G. and B., through certain apostolic letters obtained against the Bishop of Toul and certain other clerics and laymen, sued her before the judges for whom those letters had been obtained, under the general clause "certain others," concerning a certain sum of money which they said that they had lent to her brother, because she had succeeded to the aforesaid county.

Her proctor therefore raised the exception that, because the brother of the same woman was still living when those letters were obtained and had not been summoned to judgment by them while he lived, she could not be sued by their authority. Because the judges would not admit her exception, she appealed to our hearing. (And below:) Therefore we command you, if matters stand thus, after revoking as void, etc.

> Si conveniendus per clausulam moriatur re integra, successor conveniri non potest.
> Idem Abbati sancti Iacobi.
> Significavit nobis comitissa Namutensis, quod, quum mortuo comite fratre suo ipsa in eius successerit comitatu, G. et B. per quasdam literas apostolicas contra Tullensem episcopum et quosdam alios clericos et laicos impetratas, eam coram iudicibus, ad quos obtentae fuerant, super quadam summa pecuniae, quam eidem fratri suo se mutuasse dicebant, per illam generalem clausulam: "quidam alii," quia in praedicto comitatu successerat, convenerunt. Excipiente itaque procuratore suo, quod, quum adhuc frater eiusdem mulieris viveret, quando eaedem literae impetratae fuerunt, nec per ipsas, dum viveret, fuerat ad iudicium evocatus, earum auctoritate non poterat conveniri. Et quia iudices exceptionem non admittebant ipsius, nostram audientiam appellavit. (Et infra:) Ideoque mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, revocato in irritum, etc.

Chapter XXXVII

Latin source headnote: Executory letters in which the person obtaining them falsely said that admonitory letters had preceded are not valid.

The same to the Abbot of Saint Victor.

We learned from the representation of the Bishop of Amiens that the cleric I. obtained preceptory letters directed to him concerning provision for I., and afterward executory letters against him directed to you. (And below:) Therefore we command you that, if no admonitory letters concerning this preceded, you suspend the same executory letters, provided that those executory letters made mention of the admonitory ones; otherwise, proceed in the affair of execution, with reason going before, according to the mandate directed to you on his behalf.

Non valent literae exsecutoriae, in quibus impetrans falso dixit, monitorias praecessisse.

Idem Abbati sancti Victoris.

Ex insinuatione episcopi Ambianensis accepimus, quod I. clericus super eius provisione ad ipsum praeceptorias, et postmodum ad vos exsecutorias contra eum literas impetravit. (Et infra:) Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si nullae monitoriae super hoc praecesserint, exsecutoriis supersedeatis eisdem, dummodo eaedem exsecutoriae de monitoriis fecerint mentionem; alioquin in exsecutionis negotio iuxta directum ad vos pro ipso mandatum ratione praevia procedatis.

Chapter XXXVIII

Latin source headnote: When qualifying clauses are absent, in a doubtful case the Pope does not intend to burden the same collator with provision for two persons; therefore the second person obtaining letters is repelled, whether the first is awaiting provision or has already obtained the favor. This it says according to the understanding of the Gloss.

The same to the Bishop of Noyon.

You are not bound to prosecute the apostolic mandate directed to you—that you cause Master S. to be received as a canon and brother of the church of Noyon, if we have not written there on behalf of another person who is pursuing a favor of this kind—when another person has already obtained a benefice through our letters, since it was not the intention of the mandator that the aforesaid church be burdened with the reception of two persons.

Cessantibus clausulis in dubio Papa non intendit gravare eundem collatorem super provisione duorum; ideo secundus impetrans repellitur, sive primus exspectet, sive sit iam gratiam consecutus. Hoc dicit secundum intellectum Gloss.

Idem Noviensi Episcopo.

Mandatum apostolicum ad te directum, ut magistrum S. faceres in canonicorum recipi et in fratrem Noviensis ecclesiae, si pro alio ibidem non scripsimus, qui huiusmodi gratiam prosequatur, alio iam beneficium per nostras literas obtinente prosequi non teneris, quum super receptione duorum gravandi ecclesiam antedictam non fuerit intentio mandatoris.

Chapter XXXIX

Latin source headnote: A church to which one Pope first gave admonitory letters and another gave executory letters is understood to be burdened by the first Pope, not by the second.

The same.

Apostolic letters having been directed to you that you should receive the cleric G. as a canon and brother unless your church had been burdened by us on behalf of another, we will and command you to execute our mandate, notwithstanding that through our executory letters you received T. the subdeacon, who had obtained admonitory letters from our predecessor H. of good memory, since we were prosecuting the act of our predecessor rather than our own.

> Ecclesia, in qua Papa primus dedit monitorias, et secundus exsecutorias, per primum, non per secundum intelligitur gravata.
> Idem.
> Literis apostolicis ad vos directis, ut G. clericum reciperetis in canonicum et in fratrem, nisi pro alio fuisset per nos ecclesia vestra gravata, mandatum nostrum vos exsequi volumus et mandamus; non obstante, quod T. subdiaconum per nostras literas exsecutorias recepistis, qui a bonae memoriae H. praedecessore nostro monitorias impetravit, quum factum praedecessoris nostri potius, quam nostrum fuerimus prosecuti.

Chapter XL

Latin source headnote: A diocesan to whom it is written that he provide, or cause provision to be made, in his diocese where it has not been written on behalf of another cannot execute this concerning a benefice belonging to the collation of another who has already been burdened on behalf of someone else.

The same.

The rule of law does not permit an abbot who has already received an apostolic mandate that he provide for the cleric S. in one of the churches of his monastery to be compelled, by virtue of general letters obtained to the diocesan bishop that he cause provision to be made in his diocese where it had not been written on behalf of another, or to be burdened further concerning the conferral of churches or benefices, even if by those letters the diocesan has power to make provision.

Chapter XLI

Latin source headnote: By a rescript directed to the person who imposed an excommunication, ordering him to absolve the excommunicated person if he excommunicated him contrary to the council, with executors appointed to execute it if he does not obey, cognizance is committed not to the person who imposed the excommunication but to the executors.

The same.

When an excommunicated person who asserts that he was bound contrary to the statutes of the General Council obtains letters to the person who imposed the excommunication, ordering that person, if matters stand thus, to absolve him without difficulty, and other judges are appointed to execute the apostolic mandate if he does not obey, cognizance is committed not to the person who imposed the excommunication—who ought to be certain concerning his own act, although deference is shown to him in this—but to those judges.

> Per rescriptum directum excommunicatori, ut absolvat excommunicatum, si contra concilium eum excommunicavit, datis exsecutoribus, qui eo non parente exsequantur, non excommunicatori, sed exsecutoribus cognitio demandatur.

Chapter XLII

Latin source headnote: If a person obtaining a rescript for a benefice said that he had no benefice when nevertheless he had one, although a small one, the rescript is not valid.

The same.

If, when someone proposes that he has not yet obtained an ecclesiastical benefice, an apostolic rescript concerning provision for him is obtained which makes no mention that he possesses one, although it is less than sufficient, we declare that rescript invalid as fraudulently obtained.

> Si impetrans rescriptum ad beneficium, dixit se non beneficiatum, quum tamen haberet beneficium, licet exiguum, non valet rescriptum.

> Si proponente aliquo, nondum se beneficium ecclesiasticum assecutum, super provisione ipsius, licet minus competens obtinentis, rescriptum apostolicum de hoc mentionem non faciens impetretur, illud veluti fraudulenter obtentum dicimus non valere.

Chapter XLIII

Latin source headnote: Those who abuse an apostolic rescript in the cases enumerated here are deprived of the benefit of the rescript and condemned to pay their adversary's costs and damages.

The same to the Bishop of Paris.

Because certain persons abuse apostolic letters in various ways, we establish that the following shall be deprived of the benefit of those letters and condemned to pay their adversaries the moderate expenses and damages which it is established they sustained on this account:

- those who deliver letters obtained in their own name to others of the same name, who unduly weary through those letters whomever they wish;
- those who receive them in this manner;
- those who cause persons against whom they have no dispute to be summoned to judgment;
- those who extend the letters to future controversies which had not yet arisen at the time they were obtained;
- those who draw anyone concerning one affair—or even maliciously concerning several personal actions which could more conveniently be tried before one judge—before different judges through various letters, so that, wearied by labor and expense, he may be compelled either to make a settlement or to yield his right; and
- a defendant who causes the claimant to be cited at the same time to different places, or without specification to a town which has a name in common with several towns of the same province, so that, when he does not appear, he may be excommunicated as contumacious and thus repelled from his claim.

Title IV: On Custom

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A custom imposing a burden upon churches ought to be removed by the office of the judge. This it says according to the more particular interpretation.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: By custom an act or solemnity can be introduced through which possession of an absent thing is transferred without an actual taking of possession. This it says, and according to Abbas Siculus it is a singular case.

Innocent III to the Archbishop and Chapter of Lund.

From the letters which you, brother archbishop, sent to us, we have clearly understood that the kingdom of Denmark, as regards matters pertaining to the law of the forum, is governed entirely by its own customs and the institutions of its kings. Hence it happens that the province has no use of wills of the kind that elsewhere is observed according to legal practice in the last dispositions of the dying.

But if anyone, while in good health or when making his last disposition, wishes to confer certain possessions upon cloisters or other religious places for the remedy of his sins, you state that this is the form of conferring them upon a church: in donations of this kind, it is customary for a small quantity of earth to be taken in the hand, or in the edge of a cloak held by the hand of the bishop or of any other prelate of the church, or, wrapped in a small cloth, to be placed with due humility upon the altar itself before witnesses who see and hear, according to the said form, which in the vernacular is called scotatio.

But because, as you assert, a donation of this kind is maliciously obstructed by certain quibblers, you humbly petitioned us to provide with paternal solicitude that religious places and churches upon which many possessions have been conferred under such scotatio cannot or ought not rashly to be disturbed by anyone. Therefore, unwilling that such constitutions—which, as you assert, length of time has maintained and the practice of a custom hitherto approved has preserved—should be weakened by any temerity, we command your discretion by apostolic writings to cause donations of those things which, by virtue of the custom, are piously and providently conferred, or have already been conferred, upon cloisters, churches, or any religious places to be irrevocably observed, since a sign of this kind, which is called scotatio, is clear evidence not so much of a donation made as of possession delivered. If you find any contradictors or rebels, relying upon apostolic authority you are to restrain them through ecclesiastical censure, warning having first been given and the obstacle of appeal removed. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of December, 1198.]

Si vero quis possessiones aliquas claustris vel aliis religiosis locis in bona valetudine vel ultima voluntate constitutus pro suorum vult remedio peccatorum conferre, hanc ecclesiae conferendi formam esse proponitis, quod in huiusmodi donationibus modicum terrae consuevit in manu accipere, vel in extremitate pallii, quod

[Dat. Lat. XVI. Kal. Dec. 1198.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A custom by which the declaration of the people is held as a judgment in ecclesiastical causes is not valid.

The same to the Bishop of Poitiers.

You should know that it has come to our hearing that in your diocese, even in ecclesiastical causes, a less than reasonable custom is observed: when some cause is tried there and the allegations and complaints of each party have been heard, those present—learned and unlearned, wise and foolish—are asked what the law is; and what they, or any one of them after seeking the counsel of those present, have declared is held as the judgment.

We therefore, considering that a custom which conflicts with canonical institutions ought to have no weight, since a judgment rendered by one who is not the proper judge obtains no validity, grant you by authority of the present writings, notwithstanding the aforesaid custom, the power to render judgment in the ecclesiastical causes of your subjects, after their merits have been established before you, as the order of reason requires. [Therefore let no one, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of March, 1199.]

Non valet consuetudo, ut in causis ecclesiasticis dictum populi pro sententia teneatur.

Idem Episcopo Pictaviensi.

Ad nostram audientiam noveris pervenisse, quod in tua dioecesi etiam in causis ecclesiasticis consuetudo minus rationabilis habeatur, quod, quum aliqua causa tractatur ibidem, et allegationibus et querelis utriusque partis auditis, a praesentibus literatis et illiteratis, sapientibus et insipientibus, quid iuris sit quaeritur, et quod illi dictaverint vel aliquis eorum, praesentium consilio requisito pro sententia teneatur. Nos igitur attendentes, quod consuetudo, quae canonicis obviat institutis, nullius debeat esse momenti, quum sententia a non suo iudice lata nullam obtineat firmitatem, ut in causis ecclesiasticis subiectorum tuorum, postquam tibi de meritis earum constiterit, sententiam proferre valeas, sicut ordo postulat rationis, auctoritate tibi praesentium, praemissa consuetudine non obstante, concedimus facultatem. [Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Lat. XII. Kal. Mart. 1199.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Custom cannot have the effect that a cleric who is not a bishop can exercise those things which are reserved to the episcopal order. And this is a notable case. Abbas Siculus.

The same to L., our Vicar stationed at Constantinople.

The higher the place which you obtain from the benignity of the Apostolic See, the more solicitously you must take care to show yourself such in your actions, turning aside neither to the right nor to the left, that you may be seen to discharge the apostolic office no less in reality than in name.

It has indeed come to our hearing that certain simple priests at Constantinople presume to administer to the faithful those sacraments which from the time of the Apostles have duly been reserved to bishops alone. Such is the sacrament of confirmation, which bishops alone ought to confer through the imposition of hands upon those reborn by anointing them with chrism. In order to devise excuses for sins and nourishment for their own error, these priests put forward custom alone, although length of time does not diminish sins but increases them, and they become the graver the longer they hold an unhappy soul bound. Wishing, therefore, that these and other things which offend the eyes of the divine majesty be rooted out of the Lord's field, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, by way of precept, strictly to prohibit all Latin priests stationed at Constantinople from hereafter presuming upon such things by their own temerity.

Although these things are not to be despised by the faithful, it is nevertheless safer that, without danger, they be omitted from necessity—which has no law—than that they be conferred in vain, not without grave danger, by those to whom it is not lawful to confer them, out of temerity—which is condemned by law—since a certain shadow is displayed in the act, but the truth does not follow in the effect. Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A custom by which a sentence of interdict is violated is not valid.

The same to the Dean and Chapter of Le Mans.

When a dispute arose between you on the one side and the canons of Saint-Pierre-de-la-Cour on the other concerning the fact that the said canons of Saint Peter did not observe a general interdict imposed in the city of Le Mans by our venerable brother your bishop or by you, each party sent its messenger to the Apostolic See so that the same cause might be terminated by a due conclusion. The parties, therefore, having appeared in our presence through suitable proctors, we granted them a free and benign hearing.

The proctor of your church stated that, when the church of Le Mans wishes at a fitting time and place to subject the city to an interdict because of the excesses of the secular power, the church of Saint-Pierre-de-la-Cour, like a member not adhering to its head, has not failed to celebrate the divine offices with bells rung and doors open while the others ceased. When our venerable brother Octavian, then Bishop of Ostia, was exercising the office of legation in those parts, they approached his presence and took care to set forth their complaint to him concerning this. Having summoned the parties and diligently heard and considered the arguments of each, since the party of the church of Saint Peter could not show that it was protected by privileges of the Apostolic See, and since it was firmly established before him that they were led to this by pride rather than by a reasonable cause, he definitively determined that, when an interdict had been imposed in the city of Le Mans, that church should observe it. He also subjected to the bond of excommunication and the penalty of order and benefice those who considered that his judgment should be resisted.

Afterward, when the entire city of Le Mans was subjected to ecclesiastical interdict because of certain excesses of the secular power, and the canons of Saint Peter were notified to cease from the celebration of divine offices and to observe the interdict as did the other churches of that city, they added greater temerity to their audacity and performed their office with greater solemnity, not fearing to act against the judgment of the legate.

Their proctor, however, alleged on the opposing side that the church of Saint Peter had been free and exempt from its foundation and had been founded and endowed from the goods of the progenitors of our most dear son in Christ, John, illustrious King of the English. He firmly asserted—and believed that he established his claim by this—that the same king and his progenitors conferred the deanery and prebends of that church without consulting the diocesan bishop. He also alleged that the church had hitherto enjoyed such freedom by custom and that your bishop had acknowledged this many times: namely, that you could place under interdict the parochial chaplain who celebrated outside the choir of the aforesaid church. Concerning the aforesaid custom he alleged that, even under a general interdict, it was lawful for them to celebrate the divine offices with bells rung and in a loud voice, provided that those under interdict and those excommunicated were excluded.

We therefore, recognizing that the sinew of ecclesiastical discipline would be broken by such a custom, if any such custom existed, have considered that it should be wholly invalidated with the consent of our brothers, since it is to be regarded not as custom but rather as corruption. We nevertheless grant the same church of Saint Peter, from the benignity of the Apostolic See, that when a general interdict has been imposed in the city it shall be lawful for them to celebrate the divine offices with doors closed, those excommunicated and under interdict excluded, without bells being rung, and in a subdued voice. [Therefore let no one ... of our definition and concession ...] If anyone, however, [should infringe] the sentence of our definition, etc. [Given on the third day before the Nones of February, in the eighth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: In assigning offices to a new dignity, the custom of neighboring cities is observed. If their customs differ, the more reasonable one, which prejudices no one else, shall be observed.

The same to the Bishop of Ely.

When formerly our venerable brother the Bishop of London intimated to our ears that he proposed to establish a precentor in his church and to assign him a fixed revenue without injury to anyone, we, inclining to his prayers, granted him permission to institute such a precentor, provided that prejudice should be inflicted upon no one in conferring revenues upon him. We nevertheless established that the precentor so instituted should have in the church of London, in sittings, processions, and other matters, the dignity which other precentors have in other English churches.

Afterward it was intimated to our ears that, although the same bishop had instituted our beloved son B. as precentor in that church, he had not taken care to execute what had been established by you concerning the aforesaid dignity, although two years had already elapsed. Therefore we commanded you not to postpone executing it, after removing the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal, restraining contradictors through ecclesiastical censure.

Recently, however, our beloved son the dean and certain others holding personates in the aforesaid church transmitted their complaint to us: customs differ among the English churches, and some precentors have a lesser dignity while others have a greater; nor can their dignities, since they are either diverse or conflicting, be combined into one. Yet the man newly instituted as precentor in the church of London, not content with what he can have without prejudice to others, strives on occasion of our letters to arrogate to himself, to their prejudice, certain dignities belonging to the dean and other persons of that church.

Therefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if you know that precentors have different dignities in the English churches according to the different customs of the places, you cause the said precentor to have in the church of London that dignity, and, appeal being removed, to remain content with that dignity, which he can obtain without prejudice to another while the reasonable and approved customs of the church are preserved. Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: It cannot be introduced by custom that anyone may relinquish a dignity without the permission of his superior, or that a person who has been elected may administer without having received confirmation from the superior.

The same to the Convent of the Monastery of Corvey.

When our venerable brother the Bishop of Ostia and our beloved son L., cardinal-priest of the title of Holy Cross, were formerly exercising the office of legation in the regions of Germany, they found that the abbot of the monastery of Herford—which is known to belong immediately to the Roman Church—had migrated by his own temerity to the monastery of Corvey, which is likewise a special possession of the Roman Church, without either obtaining or seeking permission to leave the former monastery or confirmation from us or from those who were then exercising our office in those regions.

[When he had come to Nordhausen to receive the regalia, although those legates were present there, in order that his contempt might appear the more manifest he took no care to approach them, showing himself in every way a despiser of their mandates. For this reason the said legates firmly commanded our venerable brother the Bishop of Paderborn to summon him into his presence and, after all the aforesaid matters had been set forth more diligently before him, not to delay suspending him from every office and benefice until he presented himself before us to seek pardon for his contempt.

But when he sent his messenger into their presence and excused himself through that messenger concerning all the aforesaid matters, he alleged in his defense the general custom of that land. He asserted that neither the Supreme Pontiff nor his legates were in any way required for confirmation of an election, for obtaining a blessing, or for permission to pass from one monastery to another, since such a custom had hitherto been observed in those regions.

The same legates, however, induced by the prayers of many ecclesiastical and secular princes who most urgently petitioned them on his behalf, relaxed the aforesaid sentence. They commanded the Bishop of Paderborn not to delay enjoining the aforesaid abbot to send his messengers to the Apostolic See by the recently past Sunday on which Laetare Ierusalem is sung, in order to receive our mandate concerning this and the other matters through those messengers. If he should perhaps neglect to do this, the bishop was thenceforth not to delay returning him to the former sentence and causing it to be firmly observed.]

Afterward, when he had sent his messengers to the Apostolic See, those messengers, wishing to excuse him in many ways, alleged in his defense the general custom of that land. Since this is rightly to be considered not so much a custom as a corruption, being plainly hostile to the sacred canons, we command that it not be observed hereafter. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifth day before the Nones of May, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: It can be introduced by custom that one church is bound to elect for itself a prelate from the body of another. And custom is the best interpreter of laws.

The same to the Dean of Salisbury, A. the Archdeacon, and Master P. Penetel, Canon of Paris.

When our beloved son William, a monk of the church of Andres who presented himself as the elect of that same church, and G. Daubins, a monk and proctor of the monastery of Charroux, litigated against one another in our presence concerning the right of electing an abbot in the monastery of Andres and concerning the election of that same William, William petitioned that his election, celebrated unanimously by the brothers of the church of Andres, be confirmed by apostolic authority.

He asserted that, both by common law and by a special privilege granted to them by Pope Alexander of happy memory and afterward confirmed by us, the free authority of electing belonged to those brothers alone.

For by common law every congregation of monks ought to elect an abbot for itself; and it is contained in the privilege of that same Alexander that, when the abbot of the monastery of Andres dies, no one is to be set over it by any cunning of subreption or violence except the person whom the brothers, or the sounder part of them, consider should be elected according to God and the Rule of blessed Benedict. It is also known that we granted the aforesaid brothers that, when their church happens to be vacant of an abbot, it shall be lawful for them by a regular election to set over themselves as pastor a suitable person from the body of that church or from elsewhere, who is to be presented to the monastery of Charroux so that he may receive confirmation from it and show it the reverence which he owes.

The said proctor Geoffrey alleged on the opposing side that formerly, at the petition of Count Baldwin, his wife, and his sons, patrons of the church of Andres, it had been established by G., Bishop of Thérouanne of good memory, that, if the aforesaid place should flourish so greatly by divine favor that a prior or abbot were established there, his election should rest with the brothers of that place and the chapter of Charroux. Under cover of this statute it had been observed from times long past that, when the monastery of Andres was vacant, the brothers of Andres elected for themselves as abbot, in the chapter of Charroux, someone from the body of the monastery of Charroux. Therefore, because the aforesaid election of William had been attempted less than canonically, both contrary to the tenor of the statute and contrary to approved custom—which is the best interpreter of laws—it deserved to be quashed; and the aforesaid brothers should be commanded to proceed to the election of an abbot according to what had hitherto been observed.

[He added that neither the privilege of our aforesaid predecessor nor our confirmation could prejudice the monastery of Charroux, since they had been obtained by subreption without any mention at all of the aforesaid statute and approved custom. The same G. further alleged that the said election should be quashed for another reason also: namely, because it had been celebrated both by persons under interdict and concerning a person under interdict.

For when Lambert, Bishop of Thérouanne of good memory, commanded the aforesaid brothers—as we perceived was contained in his open letters—to go within the space of eight days to the monastery of Charroux, from whose body they ought to elect an abbot, and there to elect as they ought, and warned them that, if they did not do so, they should know themselves to be suspended from every office and benefice and from entry into churches, they despised the bishop's mandate and refused to elect within the appointed time as they ought. Therefore, since after the expiration of the term they began to be bound by the sentence of suspension, the election afterward presumed by them ought to be adjudged invalid.

To this it was answered on the opposing side that, since the monks of Andres were by no means bound to elect in the aforesaid manner, they were not bound to obey the bishop when he peremptorily commanded this without cognizance of the cause; and therefore the aforesaid sentence of interdict could not bind them, as having been promulgated less than reasonably—especially since, within the term established by the bishop, they had gone to the monastery of Charroux and sought permission to elect from their own monastery, although they were unable to obtain it. Against this the other party replied that, even if the said sentence had perhaps been less than just, they were nevertheless bound humbly to obey it, since it had been promulgated by the diocesan bishop.]

Having therefore perceived clearly these and other matters proposed before us on each side, because it was established before us that the election had been celebrated by suspended persons and concerning a suspended person, we quashed it, as justice required, with the counsel of our brothers. [As a precaution, however, we considered that the sentences of excommunication and suspension against William himself and the other monks of Andres, and the sentences of interdict against their churches, promulgated after an appeal to us had been interposed by our venerable brother the Bishop of Senlis and his co-judges, should be relaxed.]

Moreover, since the aforesaid statute—namely, that the election of the abbot should rest with the brothers of that place and the chapter of Charroux—could soundly be understood in such a way that neither common law nor [apostolic] privilege would be derogated by it, namely, that the election of the abbot should belong to the aforesaid brothers and confirmation to the chapter of Charroux, we command your devotion by authority of the present writings, after hearing what is proposed on each side, that, if such a custom as prejudices common law is proved on behalf of the monastery of Charroux, you decree in this respect that the election of the abbot of Andres is hereafter to be made according to that custom.

Otherwise, if no such custom is proved through which common law is prejudiced in this case, you are to take care, after removing the obstacle of appeal, to adjudge to the monks of Andres the right of electing an abbot, so that hereafter they may have free power, through canonical election, to elect as abbot a suitable person either from the body of their own church or from elsewhere. He is to be presented to the chapter of Charroux so that, if the [election] is canonical, it may be confirmed by that chapter. [Moreover, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Nones of January, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1209.]

Textual note: Friedberg's lemma reads clerico, but the apparatus records electo. The latter is adopted here because William appears as the person elected abbot and the litigation expressly concerns his election.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A chapter cannot, without the bishop, make new statutes or customs or alter old ones.

Honorius III to the Chapter of Paris.

Since the authority of custom and long-standing usage is not slight, and innovations very often produce discord, by authority of the present writings we prohibit you from altering the constitutions of your church and your approved customs, or even introducing new ones, without the counsel and consent of our venerable brother your bishop. If perhaps you have made any to the prejudice of that bishop since he obtained the governance of the church of Paris, we decree them invalid. [On the sixth day before the Nones of March, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1221.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A custom by which someone is induced to sin or to dissipate his own goods is not valid.

The same to the Mayor and Burgesses of La Rochelle.

It was proposed before us on your behalf that two abusive customs have hitherto been observed in your country. First, if a native or a foreigner, through the vice of prodigality, through carelessness, or through any other circumstance, should dissipate or lose all his own goods, he alienates at the choice of his own will the goods of his wife—however praiseworthy and honorable her life—both movable and immovable. Consequently it sometimes happens that, when the husband has died, the wife remains without a dowry and the surviving children are subjected to the extreme hardships of poverty.

Second, if a man marries a wife who, violating the fidelity of marriage, manifestly commits adultery, she nevertheless shamelessly demands and wickedly takes half of all the goods which her husband acquired, although she ought rather to be deprived of all her husband's goods. You therefore humbly petitioned that provision be made for you concerning these matters by the Apostolic See. Accordingly, wishing providently to counsel your salvation and advantage, by the tenor of the present writings we declare that you are not bound to observe customs of this kind, as being contrary to law.

Nos itaque saluti et utilitati vestrae provide consulere cupientes, Tenore praesentium declaramus, vos non teneri ad huiusmodi consuetudines tanquam iuri contrarias observandas.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Custom does not derogate from natural or divine law, the transgression of which induces sin; nor does it derogate from positive law unless it is reasonable and has been established by prescription.

Gregory IX.

Since sins are the graver the longer they hold an unhappy soul bound, no one of sound mind understands that natural law—the transgression of which induces peril to salvation—can in any way be derogated by any custom, which in this respect is more truly to be called a corruption. Although the authority of long-standing custom is also not insignificant, nevertheless it shall not have force to such an extent that it ought to generate prejudice even against positive law, unless it is reasonable and has been lawfully established by prescription.

> Consuetudo non derogat iuri naturali seu divino, cuius transgressio peccatum inducit; nec positivo, nisi sit rationabilis et praescripta.

> Quum tanto sint graviora peccata, quanto diutius infelicem animam detinent alligatam, nemo sanae mentis intelligit, naturali iuri, cuius transgressio periculum salutis inducit, quacunque consuetudine, quae dicenda est verius in hac parte corruptela, posse aliquatenus derogari. Licet etiam longaevae consuetudinis non sit vilis auctoritas, non tamen est usque adeo valitura, ut vel iuri positivo debeat praeiudicium generare, nisi fuerit rationabilis et legitime sit praescripta.

Title V: On the Postulation of Prelates

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One who violates an interdict cannot be postulated. This it says in relation to the title; for it contains many other statements which do not pertain to the title.

Innocent III to the Dean and Chapter of Sens.

To these matters in blessed Peter ... (And below:) Indeed, since the church of Sens has always been devoted to the Roman Church, not undeservedly do we share in the suffering of that church and grieve with its sorrows, since it has been bereaved of a pastor who, although noble by birth, was nevertheless, as we believe, nobler in holiness. (And below:) We grieve further that another grief has supervened upon the excessive grief which the church of Sens had conceived at the death of so great a father. For when it had scarcely risen from the funeral office for so mournful a death, and the obsequies of so great a father had scarcely been worthily celebrated, the king himself, unjustly moved, occupied the possessions belonging both to the table of the archbishop and to that of the canons—not as was fitting or as he ought, but as he wished and was able—and also compelled into exile the persons who, by our mandate, had suspended their organs. (And below:)

Since, because of the imminent persecution and the distrust of minds—which zeal sometimes excites in such matters and practice excuses—you could not readily come together in one place and purpose, and an appeal had been made to us by certain persons, at length, not without difficulty, you assembled together and unanimously postulated the Bishop of Auxerre as archbishop. You set forth your postulation through Master R., your precentor, a man learned in both laws, honorable, provident, and discreet, who faithfully prosecuted before us the affair of the promotion undertaken and omitted nothing pertinent; through the abbot of Saint Peter; and also through your letters. You humbly requested that we provide apostolic favor and pious assent to the translation to be made, especially in consideration of the persecution which presses generally upon the Gallican Church and of the necessity which lies particularly upon the church of Sens.

But before the same master had approached the Apostolic See, we had heard from many persons—indeed, it was almost established before us as certain—that the same bishop had not observed the sentence of interdict. The same master did not deny this when questioned by us in our presence and that of our brothers. In excuse of the bishop, he alleged that the bishop was in no way bound to observe the sentence rendered, since it had come to his knowledge neither through our letters, nor through our beloved son P., cardinal-deacon of Santa Maria in Via Lata and then legate of the Apostolic See, who had promulgated that sentence, nor through the mandate or letters of the executor appointed for this purpose; that the king himself had no land of his own in the diocese of Auxerre; and that the same diocese of Auxerre had been placed under interdict for another cause.

[But the messengers of the Archbishop of Reims and of certain others had earlier approached the Apostolic See, putting forward certain frivolous occasions to devise excuses for sins: namely, that the said legate, after an appeal to us had been interposed—to which he had seemed to defer—had rendered the sentence of interdict against the king's land when already outside the boundaries of the kingdom of the Franks; that he had exceeded the proper measure in executing it; and that his letters had not reached certain of them. But if they had considered the truth more diligently, since they knew that a net is cast in vain before the eyes of winged creatures, just as they could not, so they ought not to have excused themselves in this way, since the excuse is turned rather into an accusation.

For although the cardinal himself had departed from the kingdom of the Franks, he had not yet passed beyond the boundaries of his legation, since he had received from us the solicitude of the legation entrusted to him not only in the kingdom of the Franks but also in the provinces of Vienne, Lyon, and Burgundy. Moreover, he did not issue the said sentence of interdict but rather published it; nor was he its author, but more truly its executor. Hence, since according to canon and civil law it is not lawful to appeal from executors unless perhaps they exceed the proper measure in executing, and since in the letters directed to him concerning this we took care to prohibit the obstacle of appeal, deference was not to be shown to an appeal of this kind. The cardinal certainly did not defer to it, but rather delayed so that he might more conveniently fulfill our mandate elsewhere.

Meanwhile it was not for them to interpret our mandate or to challenge the cardinal's interpretation, since they ought rather to have trusted him. When he departed from us he understood more fully the good pleasure of our will concerning the mandate, and he received our mandate from us, through which the meaning of our mind was more clearly revealed to him. Moreover, in doubt the way of obedience was to be chosen as the safer course rather than at last declining into disobedience, since according to the testimony of the prophet, refusing to acquiesce is the sin of divination and refusing to obey is the crime of idolatry.]

Nor is it sufficient—indeed, it does not avail—for the excuse of the aforesaid Bishop of Auxerre and others like him that they allege that our mandate, and that of the cardinal himself or even of the executor, did not reach them through special letters directed to them or through a special mandate. For the same cardinal solemnly and publicly promulgated the sentence of interdict in the presence of many archbishops and bishops, and that sentence of interdict had already begun to be publicly observed by many in the kingdom of the Franks. Nor, when a constitution is solemnly issued or publicly promulgated, is it necessary to impress knowledge of it upon the ears of individuals through a special mandate or letters. It is sufficient that a person who knows it to have been solemnly issued or publicly promulgated is bound to its observance. Canonical authority likewise teaches, against certain persons who did not observe the Council of Sardica on the ground that they did not have or receive it, that they are not readily granted the faculty of believing this, since the same council had been enacted and received among them in their regions.

Nor does the claim avail that the said king is said to have no land of his own in the diocese of Auxerre, since we commanded that all the king's land be subjected to interdict, and the cardinal, interpreting our mandate, promulgated the sentence against the land which at that time adhered to the king. But if the bishop's diocese had been placed under interdict for another cause, he was both more strongly bound and more easily able to observe the sentence of interdict.

It is, however, clearly established from this that the often-mentioned bishop cannot be sufficiently excused: he knew that his metropolitan church had both received and observed the sentence of general interdict. He had therefore been one of those who, deliberating concerning that sentence, decreed by common counsel—although they erred—that they would not observe it. If they had considered more diligently the word of the Apostle Peter concerning Clement, they ought not to have awaited an admonition concerning this, but to have complied prudently and obeyed humbly.

We therefore, who according to the Apostle are ready to avenge every disobedience, have considered the disobedience of the same Bishop of Auxerre, lest obedience should seem to profit the humble nothing if contempt did not harm the contumacious. Since according to the canonical sanctions there are certain faults in which it is a fault to relax punishment, after diligent deliberation concerning this with our brothers, however much we wished to defer to you as sons of obedience, we nevertheless rejected a postulation of this kind as unworthy—not because of the church making the postulation, but because of the person postulated.

Although, because you postulated a man who was not suited to your purpose—since you observed the sentence of interdict but he nevertheless despised observing it—you readily abused the power permitted to you, and for that reason we could not undeservedly deprive you of it, since according to the decree of divine law it is not lawful to put on a garment woven of wool and linen, nevertheless, lest we seem ungrateful for your devotion, from the customary benignity of the Apostolic See we grant that you may provide for yourselves and for the same church through a suitable postulation or a canonical election of a fitting person.

DE POSTULATIONE PRAELATORUM.

Impostulabilis est qui violat interdictum. H. d. quoad titulum; habet enim multa alia dicta, quae non faciunt ad tit.

Innocentius III. Decano et Capitulo Senonensi.

Ad haec in B. Petro (Et infra:) Sane, quum ecclesia Senonensis semper fuerit ecclesiae Romanae devota, non immerito ipsius ecclesiae passioni compatimur et doloribus condolemus, quum eo sit viduata pastore, qui, etsi nobilis esset genere, nobilior tamen fuit, sicut credimus, sanctitate. (Et infra:) Dolemus insuper quod dolori nimio, quem de tanti patris obitu conceperat ecclesia Senonensis, dolor alias supervenit, quum ea vix surgente ab officio funeris tam funesti, vix digne celebratis exsequiis tanti patris, rex ipse iniuste commotus possessiones ipsius tam ad mensam archiepiscopi, quam canonicorum atiam pertinentes, non ut decuit vel debuit, sed ut voluit et valuit, occupavit, et personas etiam, quae de mandato nostro suspenderant organa sua, compulit exsulare. (Et infra:) Quumque propter persecutionem instantem et diffidentiam animorum, quam in talibus et zelus movet interdum, et usus excusat, de facili non possetis in unum locum et propositum convenire, sed ad nos fuisset ab aliquibus appellatum, tandem non sine difficultate convenientes in unum, Altissiodorensem episcopum in archiepiscopum unanimiter postulastis, postulationem vestram per magistrum R. praecentorem vestrum, virum in utroque iure peritum, honestum, providum et discretum, qui apud nos super assumpti promotione negotii fideliter institit, et de contingentibus nihil omisit, et per abbatem S. Petri, et per vestras etiam literas exponentes et petentes humiliter, ut faciendae translationi favorem apostolicum et pium praeberemus assensum, considerata praesertim persecutione, quae communiter instat ecclesiae Gallicanae, ac necessitate, quae incumbit specialiter ecclesiae Senonensi. Verum quoniam antequam idem magister ad sedem apostolicam accessisset, audieramus a multis, immo etiam nobis quasi pro certo constabat, quod idem episcopus interdicti sententiam non servasset, quod etiam idem magister non negavit, in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia requisitus a nobis, in ipsius episcopi excusationem allegans, quod sententiam latam servare nullatenus tenebatur, quae ad eius notitiam nec per literas nostras, nec per dilectum filium P. S. Mariae in Via lata diaconum cardinalem tunc apostolicae sedis legatum, qui eandem sententiam promulgarat, nec per deputati ad hoc exsecutoris mandatum vel literas pervenisset, et quod in Altissiodorensi dioecesi rex ipse terram propriam non haberet, et quod eadem Altissiodorensis dioecesis ex alia causa fuerat interdicta. [Ceterum nuntii Remensis archiepiscopi et aliorum quorundam prius ad apostolicam sedem accesserant, ad excusandas excusationes in peccatis, occasiones quasdum frivolas praetendentes, scilicet quod dictus legatus post appellationem ad nos interpositam, cui visas fuerat detulisse constitutus iam extra fines regni Francorum in terram regis ipsius sententiam tulerat interdicti et modum excesserat in exsequendo, et quod ad quosdam eorum ipsius litterae non pervenissent. Sed si considerassent diligentius veritatem, quum scirent, quod frustra iacetur rete ante oculos pennatorum se sicut non poterant non debuerant taliter excusare, quum in accusationem potius excusatio convertatur. Licet enim Cardinalis ipse regni Francorum exiisset, nondum tamen fuerat metas suae legationis egressus quum non solum in regno Francorum sed in Viennensi, Lugudenensi et Burginensi provinciis iniunctam sibi a Nobis legationis sollicitudinem suscepisset. Praetera dictam interdicti sententiam ipse non edidit, sed potius publicavit, nec fuit dictator ipsius, sed verius exsecutor. Unde quum secundum ius canonicum et legale ab executoribus non liceat appellari nisi forsan modum excederent in exsequendo, et nos in litteris super hoc directis ad ipsum appellationis curavimus obstaculum inhibere, appellationi huiusmodi non fuerat deferendum, cui non profecto cardinalis ipse non detulit sed distulit potius, ut alibi mandatum nostrum commodius adimpleret. Interea non erat ipsorum nostrum interpretari mandatum nec interpretationem arguere cardinalis, cum ei potius credere debuissent, qui quum a Nobis recederet intellexit plenius nostrae super ipso mandato beneplacitum voluntatis, et nostrum mandatum recepit a nobis per quod ei liquidius mentis nostrae patuit intellectus. In dubio insuper via obedientiae tanquam tutior erat eligenda potius quam ad inobedientiae demum declinandum, quum iuxta propheticum testimonium crimen ariolandi sit nolle acquiescere et scelus idolatriae nolle obedire.] Quod nec sufficit, immo nec proficit ad excusationem praedicti Altissiodorensis episcopi, et aliorum similium, quod mandatum nostrum et cardinalis eiusdem, vel exsecutoris etiam ad se per speciales literas ad ipsos directas vel speciale mandatum non pervenisse proponunt; quum cardinalis idem sententiam interdicti, praesentibus multis archiepiscopis et episcopis, solenniter ac publice promulgaverit, et eadem interdicti sententia in regno Francorum iam a multis publice coeperit observari; nec sit necessarium, quum constitutio solenniter editur aut publice promulgatur, ipsius notitiam singulorum auribus per speciale mandatum vel literas inculcare; sed id solum sufficit, ut ad eius observantiam teneatur, qui noverit eam solenniter editam aut publice promulgatam; quum et contra quosdam, qui Sardicense concilium non servabant, tanquam illud non habuerint aut perceperint, canonica tradat auctoritas, quod eis non facile facultas credendi tribuitur, quum idem penes illos in suis regionibus actum fuerit et receptum. Nec valet, quod in Altissiodorensi dioecesi dictus rex terram propriam dicitur non habere, quum nos terram totam regis ipsius subiici mandaverimus interdicto, et cardinalis, nostrum interpretatus mandatum, in terram illam sententiam promulgaverit, quae regi tunc temporis adhaerebat. Quodsi episcopatus eius ex alia causa fuerat interdictus, interdicti sententiam et tenebatur fortius, et poterat facilius observare. Sed inde liquido constat, saepe dictum episcopum sufficienter excusari non posse, quod suam metropolitanam ecclesiam generalis interdicti sententiam et recepisse noverat et servare. Ideoque unus eorum exstiterat, qui deliberantes super eadem sententia communi consilio decreverunt, sed erraverunt, ut ipsam sententiam non servarent, quum, si verbum Apostoli Petri de Clemente dicentis diligentius attendissent, commonitionem super hoc non debuerint exspectare, sed obsecundare prudenter et humiliter obedire. Nos igitur, qui secundum Apostolum prompti sumus inobedientiam omnem ulcisci, eiusdem episcopi Altissiodorensis inobedientiam attendentes, ne nil obedientia prodesse videretur humilibus, si contemptus contumacibus non obesset, quum iuxta canonicas sanctiones quaedam sint culpae, in quibus culpa est relaxare vindictam, habito cum fratribus nostris super hoc diligenti tractatu, quantumcunque vobis tanquam obedientiae filiis deferre vellemus, postulationem tamen huiusmodi non propter postulantem ecclesiam, sed propter postulatam personam repulimus ut indignam. Licet autem ex eo, quod hominem, qui vestro non conveniebat proposito, postulastis, quum vos interdicti sententiam servaretis, et ipse tamen eam contemneret observare, permissa vobis facile abusi fueritis potestate, ac ideo vos ea non immerito privare possemus, quum iuxta divinae legis edictum non liceat vestem induere de lana linoque contextam: ne tamen vestrae videamur devotionis ingrati, de solita tamen apostolicae sedis benignitate concedimus, ut vobis et eidem ecclesiae per postulationem indoneam seu electionem canonicam de persona congrua consulatis.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who renews a postulation quashed because of a defect in the person is deprived of the power of electing and postulating.

The same to the Bishop of Ostia, Legate of the Apostolic See.

We regard it as pleasing and acceptable, and greatly commend your fraternity, that you prudently and effectively attended to the promotion of our venerable brother P., formerly Bishop of Cambrai but now Archbishop of Sens. We learned from your letters that you commanded the canons of Sens—whose postulation had been quashed by our authority, although they had fraudulently suppressed the letters of quashing—to proceed concordantly and canonically to an election. You also added that, unless perhaps they concordantly directed their votes to such a person as ought deservedly to obtain your assent, you would afterward do concerning provision for that church what you believed expedient.

When many of them strove once again to renew the postulation quashed by us, while certain others postulated the Bishop of Cambrai as archbishop, you understood that those who wished in some manner to revoke our quashing had lost the privilege of electing, because they rashly abused the power granted to them from the benignity of the Apostolic See. For that reason, the license of electing or postulating had devolved upon the others, who, although fewer in number, were, so far as this matter was concerned, sounder in counsel. At their insistence, relying upon apostolic authority, you provided the aforesaid Bishop of Cambrai as their pastor and appointed him to the governance of the church of Sens.

We therefore hold this the more pleasing and ratified insofar as, in his promotion, you proceeded by our mandate and good pleasure. We have released him from solicitude for the church of Cambrai so that he may more freely exercise care of the metropolitan church of Sens, confirming by apostolic authority what was done by you at our mandate.

> Gratum gerimus et acceptum, et fraternitatem tuam plurimum commendamus, quod ad promotionem venerabilis fratris nostri P. quondam Cameracensis episcopi, nunc autem archiepiscopi Senonensis, prudenter et efficaciter intendisti. Accepimus autem ex literis tuis, quod canonicis Senonensibus, quorum postulatio, quam fecerunt, nostra fuit auctoritate cassata, licet cassationis literas suppressissent in fraudem, ut concorditer et canonice ad electionem procederent, mandavisti, adiiciens etiam, quod, nisi forsitan in talem personam concorditer vota sua transferrent, pro qua merito tuum obtinere deberent consensum, de provisione ipsius ecclesiae postmodum faceres quod crederes expedire. Quumque plures eorum postulationem cassatam a nobis innovare denuo niterentur, quidam vero episcopum Cameracensem in archiepiscopum postularent, tu intelligens, eos, qui cassationem nostram quodammodo revocare volebant, eligendi privilegium amisisse, quia concessa sibi ex apostolicae sedis benignitate abuterentur temere potetaste, ac ideo ad alios, licet pauciores numero, quantum tamen ad hoc pertinet, consilio saniores, eligendi vel postulandi devolutam esse licentiam, praedictum Cameracensem ad eorum instantiam in pastorem auctoritate fretus apostolica providisti, et deputasti ad regimen ecclesiae Senonensis. Nos igitur, tanto id magis gratum et ratum habentes, quanto in eius promotione de mandato nostro et beneplacito potius processisti, a sollicitudine Cameracensis ecclesiae ipsum reddidimus absolutum, ut liberius gerat curam metropolis Senonensis, quod a te de mandato nostro factum est auctoritate apostolica confirmantes.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A postulation by which a private or lesser advantage is preferred to the common or greater advantage, or which is made by less than a third part of a college, ought not to be admitted.

The same to the Clergy of the Church of Ravenna.

When William, your archbishop of good memory, had entered upon the way of all flesh, you intimated his death to us through your letters. We commanded you to elect canonically as your pastor a suitable person who would persist in devotion to us. Afterward, when, having received our letters, you treated concerning the election of a pontiff to be substituted, your votes were divided in different directions. For certain of you postulated our beloved son S., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Praxedes, while certain others postulated our venerable brother the Bishop of Imola.

When the parties had presented their postulations to us through their messengers, those who had postulated the aforesaid cardinal alleged that more than two-thirds of you had agreed upon him. The other party, however, alleged that the more worthy persons had postulated the Bishop of Imola, and that both canonical form and the tenor of the compromise had been observed in his postulation, since, as a suffragan of the church of Ravenna, he had been postulated from its own body. For it had been committed by compromise that they should elect a suitable person from the body of the church or archbishopric of Ravenna. The other party asserted that this was frivolous, since, even if such a condition had been added, the aforesaid person could nevertheless be postulated from the college of the Roman See on account of its privilege, since the members of the head ought not to be regarded as foreign to the members of the body.

We therefore, having heard what had been proposed on each side concerning the facts and what had further been alleged concerning the law, deliberated with our brothers and also took care that fuller argument be made for each party. We considered that the presence of that cardinal would be more useful not only to the Roman Church but also to the universal Church at the Apostolic See than at the church of Ravenna, and that in an emergency of this kind it was of greater merit to go before the army of Jesus Christ in aid of the Holy Land than to assume the burden of the pastoral office. Hence, not undeservedly preferring the common advantage to the particular and the greater to the lesser, we did not consider that the aforesaid cardinal should be granted to your postulation.

Considering on the other side that the aforesaid Bishop of Imola had been postulated by less than a third part, and that the Apostolic See has not been accustomed to receive postulations of this kind amid so great a division and contradiction—since even when someone is postulated unanimously by others, it is moved to admit their postulation not so much by justice as by grace—we did not consider that his postulation should be admitted.

We therefore admonish and earnestly exhort your discretion, and command by apostolic writings, that within one month after receiving the present writings, together with those who are known to have a voice in the election, you take care to agree concordantly, through a canonical election, postulation, or nomination, upon a suitable person who will persist in devotion to the Roman Church, and that you present your election, postulation, or nomination to the Apostolic See through suitable messengers. Let those messengers come prepared so that, if perhaps—which God forbid—your act must be rejected as justice requires, they may receive the man whom we shall provide for you as pastor. Otherwise, since we desire to provide for that church with greater solicitude, we shall by no means omit to take care to assign it a suitable pastor by apostolic authority.

> Postulatio, per quam privata vel minor utilitas communi vel maiori praefertur, vel quae fit a minori quam a tertia parte collegii, admitti non debet.
> Idem Clericis Ravennatis ecclesiae.
> Bonae memoriae Guil. archiepiscopo vestro viam universae carnis ingresso, eius nobis obitum per vestras literas intimastis. Nos autem vobis dedimus in mandatis, ut personam idoneam, quae in nostra devotione persisteret, vobis eligeretis canonice in pastorem. Quumque vos postmodum, receptis literis nostris, super electione substituendi pontificis tractaretis, vota vestra fuerunt in diversa divisa. Nam quidam vestrum dilectum filium nostrum S. tituli sanctae Praxedis presbyterum cardinalem, quidam vero venerabilem fratrem nostrum Imolensem episcopum postulaverunt. Quumque partes postulationes suas per nuncios suos nobis praesentassent, proponebatur ab iis, qui cardinalem postulaverant memoratum, quod plures, quam duae partes vestrum, convenerant in eundem. Verum pars altera proponebat, quod digniores personae postularant episcopum Imolensem, et quod in postulatione ipsius et forma canonica et tenor compromissionis fuerat observatus, quum tanquam suffraganeus Ravennatis ecclesiae postulatus de ipsius gremio exstitisset. Fuerat enim compromissum, ut de corpore Ravennatis ecclesiae vel archiepiscopatu personam eligerent congruentem: quod pars altera frivolum asserebat, quum, etsi talis conditio fuisset adiecta, poterat tamen de Romanae sedis collegio propter ipsius privilegium praefata postulari persona, quum membra capitis a membris corporis censeri non debeant aliena. Nos igitur, auditis, quae de facto hinc inde proposita et de iure insuper fuerant allegata, deliberavimus cum fratribus nostris, et plenius etiam pro utralibet partium curavimus allegare. Consideravimus vero, quod eiusdem cardinalis praesentia utilior sit non solum Romanae, sed etiam ecclesiae generali, tam apud apostolicam sedem, quam apud ecclesiam Ravennatem, et quod maioris meriti sit in huiusmodi necessitatis articulo praeire in sanctae terrae subsidium exercitui Iesu Christi, quam suscipere pondus pastoralis officii. Unde non immerito praeferentes speciali utilitati communem et minori maiorem, praedictum cardinalem postulationi vestrae non duximus concedendum. Attendentes autem ex altera parte, quod praedictus episcopus Imolensis, a minori quam tertia parte fuerit postulatus, et quod apostolica sedes postulationes huiusmodi non consueverit in tanta divisione ac contradictione recipere, quum etiam quando aliquis ab aliis unanimiter postulatur, ad admittendam postulationem earum non tam ex iustitia, quam ex gratia moveatur, postulationem ipsius non duximus admittendam. Monemus igitur discretionem vestram et exhortamur attentius, et per apostolica scripta Mandantes, quatenus infra mensem post susceptionem praesentium cum his, qui vocem in electione habere noscuntur, per electionem, postulationem seu nominationem canonicam in personam idoneam, quae in ecclesiae Romanae devotione persistat, concorditer convenire curetis, et electionem, postulationem seu nominationem vestram per idoneos nuncios sedi apostolicae praesentetis. Veniant autem iidem nuntii parati, ut si forte, quod absit, factum vestrum fuerit exigente iustitia reprobandum, illum recipiunt, quem nos vobis providebimus in pastorem. Alioquin quum eidem. ecclesiae cupiamus sollicitius providere, nullatenus omittemus, quin ei auctoritate apostolica postorem idoneum assignare curemus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: An archbishop is postulated as archbishop. And once a postulation has been presented to the Pope, those making the postulation cannot withdraw from it, but the judgment of the superior must be awaited. This it says in relation to the title.

The same to the Provost and Chapter of Esztergom.

When William, your archbishop of good memory, had entered upon the way of all flesh, you unanimously directed your votes toward postulating from us our venerable brother the Archbishop of Kalocsa, and you obtained royal assent concerning this. The suffragans of the church of Esztergom, namely the Bishop of Pécs and certain others, took care to oppose your postulation, asserting that it had been attempted in contempt of them, although they had the right of electing with you. Your messengers alleged on the opposing side that the assent of the suffragans had many times been sought as a matter of favor concerning the appointment of a pontiff for you, but that they denied you [both counsel and assistance].

When the messengers had appeared in our presence and the adversaries had proposed certain other matters against the procedure of your postulation—which we remember that we expressed more fully in earlier letters—because the matters proposed were not established before us, we considered that provision should be made as follows. If, while the suffragans persisted in their opposition, you wished to press your postulation, you were to come to the Apostolic See by suitable proctors sufficiently instructed concerning all matters by the then next Septuagesima, so that, with each party present, we might establish what justice advised. But if they ceased from their opposition and you persisted in your purpose, you were to send suitable persons into our presence within the aforesaid term who would make us more certain concerning the pertinent matters. But if, while the aforesaid bishops opposed you, you should happen to distrust your right, lest you undergo labor and grief in vain, you were canonically to provide another suitable person for yourselves as pastor.

But when [H.], King of Hungary of illustrious memory, had entered upon the way of all flesh, certain of you rashly withdrew from your postulation, which you had presented to us in common, while others persisted in it and appealed to the Apostolic See; and those withdrawing postulated the aforesaid Bishop of Pécs as archbishop. None of the suffragans assented to their votes except the Bishop of Nitra alone. And although our dearest son in Christ A., illustrious King of Hungary—then duke and governor of the kingdom of Hungary in the name of King L., his nephew, whose guardianship and the care of the kingdom had been committed to him by his brother—sent to us the first fruits of his prayers on behalf of the aforesaid postulation of the Archbishop of Kalocsa, he afterward humbly petitioned us by his letters that the Bishop of Pécs be transferred to the metropolitan church of Esztergom.

We therefore did not consider that the latter postulation should be admitted, as justice required, because we found that it had been rashly celebrated after appeals had been interposed, amid great disagreement not only among the suffragans but also among the canons of the church of Esztergom, contrary to the form of our mandate, and with regular order omitted. Instead, we commanded you to take care, within one month after receiving our letters, to proceed to provide yourselves a suitable pastor through canonical election or concordant postulation, after seeking the assent of the suffragans if by ancient and approved custom it was required. Otherwise, from that time onward, lest pastoral care be lacking any longer to the Lord's flock, we ourselves would provide for the widowed church according to the duty of our office, from the fullness of apostolic power.

But before our letters reached you, relying upon the earlier mandate, you recalled to concord the suffragans who were present in the kingdom, with the exception of the aforesaid Bishop of Pécs. Thus the bishops of Vác, Veszprém, and Győr—for the present, and saving their right for the future, which they were setting aside because of the affliction and necessity of the church of Esztergom—humbly petitioned us for the translation of the Archbishop of Kalocsa. The aforesaid Bishop of Nitra wrote that, if it did not please us to admit the election made concerning the Bishop of Pécs, he humbly entreated us for the postulation of the other man without prejudice to his right.

After this, when our mandate had been received, those who had agreed upon the Archbishop of Kalocsa did not, as was proposed before us, wish to withdraw from his postulation, but renewed it. Certain of the canons who had declined to the other party returned to them. With the letters of the aforesaid king and the suffragans, they sent our beloved sons A., master of the schools, M. the treasurer, A. the archdeacon, and F. and N., canons of Esztergom, to the Apostolic See to seek the grace of dispensation concerning their postulation.

The others, who had postulated the Bishop of Pécs, assembled together, as was proposed before us on their behalf, and summoned the other canons to the chapter, wishing to proceed within the appointed term to a concordant postulation or canonical election according to the apostolic mandate. But when the others were unwilling to assemble, they understood that the free faculty of electing remained with them alone, because the rest neglected to prosecute their right; and, although an appeal had been made by the others that this not be done, they postulated the aforesaid Bishop of Pécs anew.

When the messengers of each party had therefore reached the Apostolic See, those who had come on behalf of the Bishop of Pécs alleged that their party had proceeded according to the apostolic mandate. They said that the disagreement or contradiction of those who, despising the form of our mandate, had neither canonically elected anyone nor concordantly postulated after receiving it did not obstruct them. Hence their postulation ought to be regarded as concordant, since the others, as despisers of the apostolic command, had deprived themselves of the right of electing and postulating when they were unwilling either to postulate or to elect—indeed, even to assemble in chapter.

To these matters it could be answered on the opposing side that those who had postulated the Archbishop of Kalocsa followed the form given to them by our letters. For, relying upon the earlier postulation, they had, according to the tenor of our earlier letters, made concordant what had previously been discordant when they recalled the suffragans to concord. Nor did the disagreement of those who postulated another obstruct them, since you had all previously agreed together upon the postulation of the aforesaid archbishop, had asked us through common messengers to confirm your consent recorded in letters and strengthened by your own subscriptions, and we had received your postulation to be adjudicated if the suffragans should perhaps persist in opposition, or to be approved if they consented or even yielded.

For if, after a postulation is strengthened by the subscriptions of those postulating and presented to the Roman Pontiff for approval, those postulating could withdraw from it, they would frequently mock us and our judgment would seem to depend upon their will. It could also be added that the other party had not observed the apostolic mandate, since it had celebrated neither a concordant postulation nor a canonical election, when amid greater opposition than before—not only from the canons but also from the suffragans, with the king himself favoring the adverse party—it postulated the aforesaid Bishop of Pécs.

Having therefore heard these and other matters proposed on each side and held diligent deliberation concerning them with our brothers, we understood that, even if neither postulation should be approved, provision for the church of Esztergom would henceforth pertain to us according to the tenor of the later rescript. But because we did not have full knowledge of the persons of that kingdom, and therefore could not with a safe conscience fittingly provide for that church in another person originating from the kingdom of Hungary, and because we were unwilling to set a foreigner over it, although it seemed more regular and honorable for a suffragan to ascend to his own metropolitan see than for an archbishop to be transferred from one metropolitan see to another, we nevertheless chose the preferable course.

Accordingly, we absolve that archbishop—upon whom all those whose consent is required in the election or postulation of a pastor had agreed, although at different times—from the bond by which he was bound to the church of Kalocsa; we transfer him to the metropolitan church of Esztergom and grant him permission to pass to it, intending to send him the pallium for the title and use of that church. [We therefore admonish, etc. Given at Rome, on the second day before the Nones of October, 1205.]

Post haec autem mandato nostro recepto, hi, qui in archiepiscopum Colocensem covenerant, ab eius postulatione, sicut fuit propositum coram nobis, recedere noluerunt, sed innovaverunt eandem, reversis ad eos quibusdam canonicorum, qui in partem alteram declinarant, cum praedicti regis et suffraganeorum literis dilecti filii A. magistrum scholarum, M. thesauranium, A. archidiaconum, et F. et N. canonicos Strigonienses ad sedem apostolicam destinarunt, super postulatione sua dispensationis gratiam petituros. Ceteri vero, qui Quinqueecclesiensem episcopum postularunt, sicut ex eorum parte fuit propositum coram nobis, convenientes in unum, ceteros canonicos ad capitulum convocarunt, ad postulationem concordem vel electionem canonicam iuxta mandatum apostolicum infra praefixum terminum sibi procedere cupientes. Sed, illis nolentibus convenire, intelligentes, penes se tantum remansisse facultatem liberam eligendi, quia reliqui ius suum prosequi negligebant, praedictum Quinqueecclesiensem episcopum, licet ne id fieret fuisset ab aliis appellatum, denuo postularunt. Quum ergo utriusque partis nuncii ad sedem apostolicam pervenissent, hi, qui pro Quinqueecclesiensi episcopo venerant, proponebant, partem suam iuxta mandatum apostolicum processisse, nec obstare discordiam vel contradictionem eorum, qui iuxta formam mandati nostri procedere contemnentes, illo recepto nec elegerant quenquam canonice, nec concorditer postularant. Unde concors debebat eorum postulatio reputari, quum ceteri, tanquam iussionis apostolicae contemptores, eligendi et postulandi se iure privassent, dum nec postulare nec eligere voluerunt, immo nec etiam ad capitulum convenire. Ad haec autem ex adverso poterat responderi, quod illi, qui Colocensem archiepiscopum postularant, formam secuti fuerant per nostras literas sibi datam, quoniam innitentes postulationi priori, iuxta tenorem priorum literarum nostrarum concordem fecerant, quae fuerat prius discors, dum suffraganeos ad concordiam revocarunt. Nec obstabat eorum discordia, qui alium postularunt, quum prius in postulatione archiepiscopi supradicti convenissetis pariter universi, et consensum vestrum annotatum literis, et subscriptionibus propriis roboratum, petiissetis a nobis per communes nuncios confirmari, nosque vestram recepissemus postulationem diiudicandam, si suffraganei forsitan in contradictione persisterent, vel, si consentirent, aut etiam cederent, approbandam. Si enim, postquam postulatio subscriptionibus postulantium roboratur, et praesentatur Romano Pontifici approbanda, possent ab ea recedere postulantes, nobis frequenter illuderent, et iudicium nostrum ex eorum pendere arbitrio videretur. Poterat quoque addi, quod pars altera mandatum apostolicum non servarat, utpote quae nec postulationem concordem, nec electionem canonicam celebrarat, quum in maiori contradictione quam prius, non solum canonicorum, sed suffraganeorum etiam, ipso rege adversae parti favente, praedictum Quinqueecclesiensem episcopum postulasset. Auditis igitur his et aliis, quae fuerunt hinc inde proposita, et habito super his cum fratribus nostris diligenti tractatu, Intelleximus itaque quod, etsi neutra esset postulatio approbanda, iuxta tenorem tamen posterioris rescripti ad nos de cetero Strigonensis ecclesiae provisio pertineret. Quia vero non plenam de personis illius regni notitiam habebamus, ideoque non poteramus salva conscientia nostra eidem ecclesiae in alia persona, quae de regno Hungariae originem duceret, congrue providere, nec vellemus ei praeficere alienum, quamvis regularius et honestius videretur, si suffraganeus ad metropolim suam accederet, quam archiepiscopus a metropoli ad metropolim transferretur, partem tamen elegimus potiorem, et eundem archiepiscopum, in quem omnes, quorum consensus in electione vel postulatione pastoris requiritur, licet diversis temporibus convenerant, a vinculo, quo tenebatur Colocensi ecclesiae, absolventes, ad metropolim Strigonensem transferimus, et ei licentiam tribuimus transeundi, pallium ei ad nomen et usum eiusdem ecclesiae transmissuri. Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A postulation against which proceedings are brought on the ground of contempt can be rejected without prejudice to anyone; it can nevertheless be admitted by special grace. This it says.

The same to the Chapter of Esztergom.

The postulation which you celebrated [concerning the transfer of our venerable brother I., Archbishop of Kalocsa, to the metropolitan church of Esztergom is wholly opposed by our venerable brothers the suffragans of that metropolitan see, namely C., Bishop of Pécs, B., Bishop of Vác, R., Bishop of Veszprém, and I., Bishop of Nitra. They intimated to us through their letters that, when V., your archbishop of good memory, had entered upon the way of all flesh, without consulting them you held diligent counsel among yourselves, sent certain of your fellow canons into the presence of our dearest son in Christ, the illustrious King of the Hungarians, and expressly named the person whom you wished to be set over you.

After no long delay, when the same bishops had solemnly assembled on the feast of blessed King Stephen to treat with unanimous deliberation concerning the election of the church of Esztergom, you were asked by those bishops whom you wished to have set over and appointed to that see. You answered that you would dare to elect no one unless he possessed the king's full favor, and immediately took care to name the aforesaid Archbishop of Kalocsa, adding that the suffragans had no right in the election of the archbishop. The suffragans answered that, from the first establishment of Christianity in the kingdom of Hungary until those times, no one had been elected to the see of Esztergom unless the suffragans elected together with the canons according to canonical custom and approved custom. They also said that it ought first to be inquired whether a useful and suitable person could be found from the body of that church, asserting that in it there were many honorable, discreet, and learned men who could more fittingly preside over that church.

Through the same letters they further intimated to us that, since the aforesaid Archbishop of Kalocsa had until those times asserted that the church of Kalocsa was equal to the metropolitan church of Esztergom and had inflicted various and intolerable injuries upon it both in word and deed, they feared not a little that, if he were transferred to the aforesaid metropolitan church, mindful of his own profession and assertion and as though covered with shame lest he seem contrary to himself, he would undertake the advancement of the affairs of the church of Esztergom less effectively. They feared also that he would not cease to oppress those bishops who, according to their duty, had sometimes sternly resisted his words and acts, although according to the canonical sanctions a judge ought not to be given to persons to whom he is suspect.

But our beloved sons, [name omitted], abbot of Bucco, and Master Peter on behalf of the aforesaid king, and also the [name omitted], provost of Pressburg, and the [name omitted], treasurer of your church on your behalf, arguing to the contrary, steadfastly asserted that the things proposed by the bishops were wholly false. They firmly alleged that the bishops had been solemnly summoned by the same provost and others before the common deliberation and had come, and that their assent had many times been sought as a matter of favor. But when they denied you fitting counsel and aid concerning provision for your church, you, wishing to provide for that desolate church, summoned the aforesaid bishops, assembled together, and unanimously directed your votes, in their presence, toward the aforesaid Archbishop of Kalocsa so that you might postulate him from us. You supplicated them to petition us by their letters on behalf of your postulation, which they wholly refused to do.

When the aforesaid messengers asserted that urgent necessity and evident utility required the transfer of that archbishop, it was proposed before us in the same dispute that the said Archbishop of Kalocsa, to the grave prejudice of the church of Esztergom, crowned the son of the aforesaid king as king, although you protested and displayed confirmations of the Apostolic See, since the coronation of the King of Hungary is known to belong not to the church of Kalocsa but to your metropolitan church. Hence he ought to be gravely chastised as an invader of another's right and a despiser of an apostolic statute. It could also be presumed by probable inference that, since he would not bring a complaint against himself and his own deed, he would leave the right of your church in this matter undefended, through which grave prejudice could be generated against it. To the contrary, however, it was replied that the aforesaid coronation had been celebrated by the whole community without contradiction from anyone and without prejudice to anyone.]

Therefore, although through a postulation of this kind no right has been acquired by anyone, and consequently we could reject the aforesaid postulation without prejudice to anyone, nevertheless, so that we may counsel you by special grace insofar as we can with God, we have considered that provision should be made as follows. If the aforesaid pontiffs persist in their opposition and you continue to press for the obtaining of the postulation, since the foregoing matters have not been established before us, you are to present yourselves before us through suitable proctors sufficiently instructed concerning all matters by the next Septuagesima, so that, with each party present, we may decree what is just. [But if they, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the tenth day before the Kalends of December, 1204.]

Dixerunt etiam, quad prius inquiri deberet, utrum de gremio illius ecclesiae posset utilis et idoneus reperiri, asserentes, quod in ea multi sunt viri honesti, discreti et literati, qui possent illi ecclesiae decentius praesidere. Latin source headnote: A bishop is not to be elected to another dignity, but is to be postulated.

Honorius III to the Chapter of Cagliari.

Although your votes unanimously concurred in electing our venerable brother the Bishop of Sutri as archbishop of your church, since, being bound to his own church, he does not have free flight without our permission, with the counsel of our brothers we have considered that the election made concerning him should be invalidated as having been attempted less than lawfully against the canons, since by no law could he be elected, but rather ought to have been postulated.

Wishing nevertheless to concur with your desires by benign favor insofar as we can with God, we have considered that it should be enjoined upon our beloved sons the subdeacon and B., our chaplain, legates of the Apostolic See, that they both inquire into your wishes concerning him and diligently examine the merits of the person in our stead, sending him to us with their letters containing the truth, so that, if he is found suitable, with the Lord disposing, both he may be usefully provided for in the church and your church in him.

Title VI: On Election and the Authority of the Elected

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A collegiate church ought not to be provided with a prelate through collation or provision, but through a canonical election to be made by the college itself. This it says. Abbas.

Pope Lucius.

In a church where two or three brothers are assembled in a congregation, no priest is to be chosen except by their canonical election, after those brothers and the parishioners have been summoned and have come together in agreement. But if anyone has obtained a church otherwise, because he acquired it through cupidity and acted contrary to the discipline of the canonical rule, let him be expelled.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A person elected in response to the clamor of the people ought not to be confirmed by the superior.

From the Council of Sardica.

Bishop Hosius said: "If anyone should be so rash that, perhaps bringing forward such an excuse, he asserts that he received letters from the people, although it is manifest that many of those who do not have sincere faith could have been corrupted by reward and payment so that they shouted in the church and appeared to seek him as bishop, I judge that these frauds ought entirely to be condemned. Such a man is not even to receive lay communion at the end of his life unless he has repented of this. If this pleases everyone, decree it." The synod answered: "It pleases us."

Si vero omnibus placet, statuite. Synodus respondit: Placet.

Gregory III.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The Apostolic See will not deliver the pallium to a person elected as archbishop unless he first takes an oath of fidelity and obedience.

Paschal to the Archbishop of Palermo.

You signified, dearest brother, that the kings and magnates of the kingdom were moved to wonder because the pallium was offered to you by our representatives on this condition: that you should render the oath which they carried, written by us.

In the pallium, brother, the fullness of the pontifical office is granted, because according to the custom of the Apostolic See and of all Europe, before receiving the pallium metropolitans are by no means permitted either to consecrate bishops or to celebrate a synod. In this matter let them marvel also at our Lord Jesus Christ, who, when he committed the care of his sheep to Simon Peter, imposed a condition, saying: "If you love me, Simon Peter, feed my sheep." If the maker of consciences and knower of secrets used this condition—not only once, but a second time also and even to the point of sorrow—with what solicitude and what providence ought we to impose so great a prelacy of the Church and so great a care of Christ's sheep upon brothers whose consciences we do not see, especially those whom we know through no experience and whose love we wholly ignore?

They say that all oath-taking is prohibited by the Lord God in the Gospel, and that after the Lord it cannot be found established either by the [Apostles] themselves or in councils. What, then, does the same Lord mean when he says immediately afterward: "What is more than this is from evil"? For evil, with him permitting, compels us to require this "more." Is it not evil to draw back from the unity of the Church and from obedience to the Apostolic See? And is it not evil to break forth against the statutes of the [sacred] canons? How many have presumed to do this even after an oath was rendered?

Did not your predecessor condemn a bishop without the knowledge of the Roman Pontiff? In what canons, in what councils, is this read to be permitted? What shall I say concerning the translations of bishops which among you are presumed not by apostolic authority but at the royal nod? An oath of this kind is required to avoid these and other evils.

The Apostle James, adding the words "so that you may not fall under judgment," clearly teaches why the Lord prohibited an oath: lest anyone, as Augustine also explains, through the habitual frequency of swearing slide by custom into perjury. Therefore [one] should not use an oath except from necessity, when one sees that men are slow to believe what it is useful for them to believe unless it is confirmed by an oath. Plainly, by this evil and necessity we are compelled to require an oath for faith, obedience, and unity. Moreover, his own epistles testify that the Apostle Paul swore because of the distrust of his hearers.

They say that no such statute is found in councils, as though any councils had prescribed law to the Roman Church, although all councils have both been held and received force through the authority of the Roman Church, and the authority of the Roman Pontiff is manifestly excepted in their statutes.

[Was it not established in the sixteenth action of the Council of Chalcedon that, before all else, the preeminent honor of primacy was to be preserved for the most reverend Archbishop of ancient Rome according to the canons? Accordingly, because the king and magnates have determined that you should be released from the aforesaid condition of the oath, does this appear to you an evangelical judgment? Does it appear to be the preeminent honor of our primacy? Has that saying of the Lord fallen from their minds: "A disciple is not above the master"? Was it said to the Hungarian prince: "And you, when you have turned again, strengthen your brothers"? Do we require these things for the advancement of our own advantage, and do we not establish them as a bulwark of Catholic unity?]

They can despise the Apostolic See; they can lift their heel against us; but they cannot overthrow or take away the privilege given by God, by which it was said to Peter: "You are Peter, and upon this rock

I will build my Church, and I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven." Nevertheless, by the decrees of the four councils the manner of giving the pallium was prescribed and the order of profession or obedience was sanctioned [as law].

Since, therefore, you seek from the Apostolic See the insignia of your dignity, which are taken only from the body of blessed Peter, it is just that you also render to the Apostolic See the signs of due subjection which declare that you have them with blessed Peter as members from a member and that you preserve the unity of the Catholic head. In these matters such moderation has been employed by our predecessors that nothing injurious and nothing difficult has been imposed which ought not, even apart from our exaction, to be observed by all bishops who have resolved to persist under the obedience and in the unity of the Apostles Peter and Paul.

Do not the Saxons and Danes dwell beyond you? And yet their metropolitans both affirm the same oath, treat the legates of the Apostolic See honorably, assist them in their necessities, and visit the thresholds of the Apostles through their legates not merely every three years but every year. [Thus you, etc.]

> Electo in archiepiscopum sedes apostolica pallium non tradet, nisi prius praestet fidelitatis et obedientiae iuramentum.
>
> Paschalis Panormitano Archiepiscopo.
> Significasti, frater carissime, reges et regni maiores admiratione permotos, quod pallium tibi ab apocrisariis nostris tali conditione oblatum fuerit, si sacramentum, quod a nobis scriptum detulerant, exhiberes. In pallio, frater, plenitudo conceditur pontificalis officii, quia iuxta sedis apostolicae et totius Europae consuetudinem ante acceptum pallium metropolitanis minime licet aut consecrare episcopos, aut synodum celebrare. Mirentur in hac causa et Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum, qui, quum ovium suarum curam Simoni Petro committeret, conditionem posuit, dicens: "Si diligis me, Simon Petre, pasce oves meas." Si conscientiarum factor et cognitor secretorum conditione hac usus est, nec semel tantum, sed et secundo, et usque ad contristationem: qua nos sollicitudine, qua provisione oportet tantam ecclesiae praelationem, tantam Christi ovium curam imponere fratribus, quorum conscientias non videmus? illis maxime, quos nullo usu novimus, quorum dilectionem penitus ignoramus? Aiunt omne iusiurandum in evangelio a Domino Deo esse prohibitum, nec ab [ipsis] Apostolis post Dominum, nec in conciliis inveniri posse statutum. Quid est ergo, quod idem Dominus subsequenter ait: "Quod amplius est, a malo est?" Hoc enim amplius ut exigamus, malum nos illo permittente compellit. Nonne malum est ab ecclesiae unitate et a sedis apostolicae obedientia resilire, et nonne malum est contra [sacrorum] canonum statuta prorumpere? Quod quam multi etiam post sacramentum praestitum praesumpserunt? Nonne praedecessor tuus praeter Romani Pontificis conscientiam damnavit episcopum? Quibus hoc canonibus, quibus hoc conciliis legitur esse permissum? Quid super episcoporum translationibus loquar, quae apud vos non auctoritate apostolica, sed nutu regio praesumuntur? Propter haec mala et alia evitanda huiusmodi iuramentum exigitur. Cur autem Dominus iuramentum prohibuerit, Apostolus Iacobus manifeste adiiciens docet, ut non sub iudicium incidatis, ne quisquam, sicut et Augustinus exponit, assiduitate iurandi ad periurium per consuetudinem dilabatur. Quapropter iuratione [quis] non utatur, nisi necessitate, quum videt pigros homines esse ad credendum quod eis utile est credere, nisi iuratione firmetur. Hoc nimirum malo ac necessitate compellimur iuramentum pro fide, pro obedientia, pro unitate requirere. Porro pro auditorum diffidentia Apostolum Paulum iurasse, ipsius epistolae testantur. Aiunt in conciliis statutum non inveniri, quasi Romanae ecclesiae legem concilia ulla praefixerint, quum omnia concilia per Romanae ecclesiae auctoritatem et facta sint, et robur acceperint, et in eorum statutis Romani Pontificis patenter excipiatur auctoritas.

[Nonne in Chalcedonensis concilii actione decima sexta slatutum est, ante omnia quidem primatus honorem praecipuum secundum canones antiquae Romae reverendissimo archiepiscopo conservari? Itaque quod censuerunt rex et magnates a supradicta sacramenti conditione te quiescere, videturne vobis iudicium evangelicum? Videturne primatus nostri honor praecipuus? Numquid animo cecidit illa sententia Domini: non est discipulus super magistrum? Numquid Hungarico principi dictum est: et tu conversus confirma fratres tuos? Numquid haec nos commodi nostri profectione requirimus, et non unitatis catholicae statuimus firmamentum?] Possunt apostolicam sedem contemnere, possunt adversum nos calcaneum elevare, datum a Deo privilegium evertere vel auferre non possunt, quo Petro dictum est: "Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo ecclesiam meam, et tibi dabo claves regni coelorum." Quibus tamen quatuor conciliorum decretis dandi pallii modus praescriptus est, et professionis vel obedientiae ordo sancitus [est]. Quum igitur a sede apostolica vestrae insignia dignitatis exigitis, quae a beati Petri tantum corpore assumuntur, iustum est, ut vos quoque sedi apostolicae subiectionis debitae signa solvatis, quae vos cum beato Petro tanquam membra de membro habere, et catholici capitis unitatem servare declarent. In quibus a praedecessoribus nostris ea est adhibita moderatio, ut nihil iniuriosum, nihil difficile sit appositum, quod non etiam praeter exactionem nostram ab omnibus debeat Episcopis observari, qui sub Apostolorum Petri et Pauli obedientia decreverunt, et unitate persistere. Numquid non ultra vos Saxones, Danique consistunt? Et tamen eorum Metropolitani et idem iuramentum asserunt, et legatos sedis Apostolicae honorifice tractant, et in suis necessitatibus adiuvant et Apostolorum limina per legatos suos non tantum per triennium sed annis singulis visitant. [Ita te etc.].

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If a schismatic who has returned to the unity of the Church is elected bishop, the election does not hold, but by dispensation it can be confirmed.

Alexander III to Peter, Cardinal-priest and Legate of the Apostolic See.

Because your diligence carefully inquired of us through our beloved son S. whether you ought to confirm the election of a person elected who recently, after abjuring schism, returned to the unity of the Church and to devotion to us, we have considered that this answer should be given to you: if he received no order from a schismatic and his election was celebrated unanimously and concordantly according to the form of the canons, we permit him, by way of dispensation and provided that no other matters impede him, to be confirmed. We command you to cause him to be ordained bishop by the Catholic bishops who are suffragans of the church of Aquileia, saving nevertheless the justice and reverence due to that church when it has returned to Catholic unity.

Si schismaticus ad unionem ecclesiae reversus, eligitur in episcopum, electio non tenet, sed ex dispensatione potest confirmari.

Alexander III. Petro Presbytero cardinali apostolicae sedis Legato.

Quia diligentia tua per dilectum filium nostrum S. a nobis sollicite requisivit, an electionem electi, qui nuper abiurato scismate ad unitatem ecclesiae et devotionem nostram rediit, debeas confirmare: id tibi duximus respondendum, quod, si a schismatico nullum ordinem susceperit, et eius electio unanimiter et concorditer secundum formam canonum fuerit celebrata, eum, dummodo alia non impediant, dispensative permittimus confirmari, mandantes, ut eum facias a catholicis episcopis suffraganeis Aquilegiensi ecclesiae in episcopum ordinari, salva tamen debita iustitia et reverentia eiusdem ecclesiae, quum ad catholicam redierit unitatem.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A person elected Roman Pontiff by two-thirds of the cardinals is Pope, notwithstanding any exception; but a person elected by the smaller number who conducts himself as Pope incurs, together with those adhering to him, the penalties contained here.

The same, in the Lateran Council.

Although sufficiently manifest constitutions concerning the avoidance of discord in the election of the Roman Pontiff have issued from our predecessors, nevertheless, because after those constitutions the Church has often suffered grave schism through the audacity of wicked ambition, we too, to avoid this evil, have decreed with the counsel of our brothers and the approval of the sacred council that something should be added.

§1. We therefore establish that, if perhaps, with the enemy man sowing weeds, full concord among the cardinals concerning the appointment of the Supreme Pontiff cannot be achieved, and, while two-thirds agree, the third part should be unwilling to agree or should presume to name another for itself, the man who has been elected and received by the two agreeing thirds shall, without any exception, be held as Roman Pontiff by the universal Church.

§2. But if anyone, relying upon the nomination of the third part—which cannot have a rational basis—should usurp for himself the name of bishop, both he and those who have received him shall be subject to excommunication and punished by deprivation of every sacred order, so that even communion as viaticum shall be denied them except only at the end of life. If they do not come to their senses, let them receive their portion with Dathan and Abiram, whom the earth swallowed alive.

§3. Moreover, if anyone is elected to the apostolic office by fewer than two-thirds, unless greater concord intervenes he shall in no way be assumed; and he shall be subject to the aforesaid penalty if he is unwilling humbly to abstain. Nevertheless, no prejudice shall thereby be generated against the canonical constitutions or against other churches, in which the judgment of the greater and sounder part ought to prevail, because whatever doubtful matter arises in them can be determined by the judgment of a superior. In the Roman Church, however, something special is established because recourse cannot be had to a superior.

> Electus in Romanum Pontificem a duabus partibus cardinalium, nulla exceptione obstante est Papa; electus autem a minori numero gerens se pro Papa, incidit una cum sibi adhaerentibus in poenas hic contentas.
> Idem in concilio Lateranensi.
> Licet de vitanda discordia in electione Romani Pontificis manifesta satis a praedecessoribus nostris constituta manaverint, quia tamen saepe post illa per improbae ambitionis audaciam gravem passa est ecclesia scissuram: nos etiam ad malum hoc evitandum de consilio fratrum nostrorum et sacri approbatione concilii aliquid decrevimus adiungendum. § 1. Statuimus ergo, ut, si forte, inimico homine superseminante zizaniam, inter cardinales de substituendo summo Pontifice non poterit esse plena concordia, et duabus partibus concordantibus pars tertia concordare noluerit, aut sibi alium praesumpserit nominare, ille absque ulla exceptione ab universali ecclesia Romanus Pontifex habeatur, qui a duabus partibus concordantibus electus fuerit et receptus. § 2. Si quis autem de tertiae partis nominatione confisus, quia de ratione esse non potest, sibi nomen episcopi usurpaverit, tam ipse, quam ii, qui eum receperint, excommunicationi subiaceant, et totius sacri ordinis privatione mulctentur ita, ut viatici etiam eis, nisi tantum in ultimis, communio denegetur, et si non resipuerint, cum Dathan et Abiron, quos terra vivos absorbuit, accipiant portionem. § 3. Praeterea si a paucioribus quam a duabus partibus aliquis electus fuerit ad apostolatus officium, nisi maior concordia intercesserit, nullatenus assumatur, et praedictae poenae subiaceat, si humiliter noluerit abstinere. Ex hoc tamen nullum canonicis constitutionibus et aliis ecclesiis praeiudicium generetur, in quibus debet maioris et sanioris partis sententia praevalere, quia quod in eis dubium venerit superioris poterit iudicio diffiniri. In Romana vero ecclesia speciale aliquid constituitur, quia non poterit ad superiorem recursus haberi.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: Election to the episcopate ought to be made of a person worthy in learning, morals, and age, who has completed his thirtieth year and was born of a legitimate marriage. This it says as far as § "But when." — §1. The benefices of a person elected bishop become vacant through confirmation, acquisition of possession, and subsequent consecration, or after the appointed time for seeking consecration has elapsed. This it says as far as § "The lower." Abbas Siculus. — §2. For dignities and offices below the episcopate and for benefices with cure of souls, the person to be assumed ought to have attained his twenty-fifth year and otherwise be suitable in learning and morals. If he is not in the required order, he ought to cause himself to be promoted at the next ordination times; otherwise, if he does not obey after being admonished, he is deprived of the benefice notwithstanding an appeal, unless he is excused by a lawful cause. This it says as far as § "Clerics." Abbas Siculus. — §3. Those who elect an unworthy person contrary to the form of this chapter are, for the first occasion, deprived of the power of electing; the same applies to a collator. The bishop supplies the defect of the chapter, and conversely. If the chapter is negligent, devolution occurs to the metropolitan. This it says as far as the end.

The same, in the same council.

Since in all sacred orders and ecclesiastical ministries maturity of age, gravity of morals, and knowledge of letters are to be sought, much more ought these things to be sought in a bishop, who, being placed over the care of others, ought to show in himself how others should conduct themselves in the house of God. Therefore, lest what was done concerning certain persons because of the necessity of the time be drawn by posterity into an example, by the present decree we establish that no one shall be elected bishop unless he has already completed the thirtieth year of age, was born of a legitimate marriage, and is also shown to be commendable in life and learning.

§1. But when he has been elected, has received confirmation of the election, and has had administration of the ecclesiastical goods, after the time defined by the canons for the consecration of bishops has elapsed, the person to whom the benefices which he held pertain shall have free power to dispose of them.

§2. Let no one at all receive lower ministries—such as a deanery, an archdeaconry, and others which have the care of souls annexed—nor the governance of a parish church, unless he has already attained the twenty-fifth year of age and is commendable in learning and morals. When, however, he has been assumed, if an archdeacon has not been ordained to the diaconate, and a dean and the others, after being admonished, have not been ordained to the priesthood within the time appointed by the canons, let them be removed from that office and let it be conferred upon others who are both willing and able to fulfill it fittingly. Nor let the refuge of appeal profit them if perhaps they wish to protect themselves through an appeal in transgression of this constitution. We command that this be observed not only concerning persons to be promoted but also concerning those who have already been promoted, if the canons do not obstruct it.

§3. Clerics, indeed, if they elect anyone contrary to this form, should know themselves [to be] deprived on that occasion of the power of electing and suspended from ecclesiastical benefices for three years. For it is fitting that those whom fear of God does not recall from evil should at least be restrained by the severity of ecclesiastical discipline. But if a bishop acts or consents to action contrary to these provisions, he shall lose [his] power in conferring the aforesaid offices and benefices, and appointment shall be made through the chapter, or through the metropolitan if the chapter cannot agree.

> Electio ad episcopatum fieri debet de digno scientia, moribus et aetate, et quod habeat trigesimuro annum completum, et sit de legitimo matrimonio natus. Hoc dic. usque ad § Quum vero. - § 1. Beneficia electi in episcopum vacant per confirmationem, adeptionem possessionis, et consecrationem secutam, vel postquam praefixum tempus ad petendam consecrationem lapsum fuerit. Hoc dic. usque ad § Inferiora. Abbas Siculus. - § 2. In dignitatibus et officiis citra episcopatum ac curatis beneficiis debet assumendus vigesimum quintum annum attigisae, et alias esse idoneus scientia et moribus; et si non est in ordine requisito, debet se facere promoveri in proximis temporibus; alias monitus non parens privatur beneficio, non obstante appellatione, nisi ex causa legitima excusetur. Hoc dic. usque ad § Clerici. Abb. Siculus. - § 3. Eligentes indignum contra formam huius c. privati sunt pro prima vice potestate eligendi, et idem in collatore; et defectum capituli supplet episcopus, et e converso. Et si capitulum negligit, fit devolutio ad metropolitanum. Hoc dic. usque ad finem.
> Idem in eodem.

> Quum in cunctis sacris ordinibus et ecclesiasticis ministeriis sint et aetatis maturitas, et gravitas morum, et literarum scientia inquirenda, multo fortius in episcopo haec oportet inquiri, qui ad curam aliorum positus in se ipso debet ostendere, qualiter alios in domo Dei oporteat conversari. Ea propter, ne quod de quibusdam pro necessitate temporis factum est trahatur a posteris in exemplum, praesenti decreto statuimus, ut nullus in episcopum eligatur, nisi qui iam trigesimum annum aetatis exegerit, et de legitimo matrimonio sit natus, qui etiam vita et scientia commendabilis demonstretur. § 1. Quum vero electus fuerit, et confirmationem electionis acceperit, et ecclesiasticorum bonorum administrationem habuerit, decurso tempore de consecrandis episcopis a canonibus diffinito, is, ad quem spectant beneficia, quae habebat, de illis disponendi liberam habeat facultatem. § 2. Inferiora etiam ministeria, ut puta decanatum, archidiaconatum, et alia, quae curam animarum habent annexam, nullus omnino suscipiat, sed nec parochialis ecclesiae regimen, nisi qui iam vigesimum quintum annum aetatis attigerit, et scientia et moribus commendandus exsistat. Quum autem assumptus fuerit, si archidiaconus in diaconum, et decanus et reliqui admoniti non fuerint praefixo a canonibus tempore in presbyteros ordinati, et ab illo removeantur officio, et aliis conferatur, qui et velint et possint illud convenienter implere. Nec prosit eis appellationis refugium, si forte in constitutionis istius transgressionem per appellationem voluerint se tueri. Hoc sane non solum de promovendis, sed etiam de his, qui iam promoti sunt, si canones non obsistant, praecipimus observari. § 3. Clerici sane, si contra formam istam quemquam elegerint, et eligendi tunc potestate privatos, et ab ecclesiasticis beneficiis triennio noverint se [esse] suspensos. Dignum est enim, ut quos Dei timor a malo non revocat ecclesiasticae saltem coerceat severitas disciplinae. Episcopus autem si contra haec fecerit aut consenserit fieri, in conferendis praedictis officiis et beneficiis potestatem [suam] amittat, et per capitulum, aut per metropolitanum, si capitulum concordare nequiverit, ordinetur.

Latin source headnote: Those who commit an election to another are bound to receive the person elected by the compromissary if she is suitable.

The same to the Archbishop of Ravenna.

Some time ago we committed to your experience for termination the cause which is known to be conducted among the nuns of Saint Margaret concerning the discord and dissension of the election which they made. But because that cause is prolonged to such an extent, and, as we have learned, you have not yet proceeded, and because it is dangerous and damaging to the monastery that the cause is prolonged so greatly, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings to proceed in that cause within forty days, or two months at most, according to the tenor of our other letters.

You are to proceed in such a way that, if the sisters committed the election to the bishop, promising that they would receive the woman whom the bishop provided for them, you cause the woman whom the bishop has provided to be received by them as their abbess, appeal being removed, provided nevertheless that she is suitable. But if you are unable to proceed in the cause, you are to signify on our behalf to our beloved sons I., cardinal-priest of the Basilica of the Twelve Apostles and Legate of the Apostolic See, and the Prior of Saint Victor that they are to proceed in the same cause and decide it with a due conclusion.

> Compromittentes super electione tenentur recipere electum a compromissario, si est idoneus.

> Idem Ravennati Archiepiscopo.

> Causam, quae inter moniales sanctae Margaretae super discordia et dissensione electionis, quam fecerunt, agitari dignoscitur, experientiae tuae iam pridem commisimus terminandam. Verum quoniam ipsa causa in tantum protrahitur, et nondum, sicut accepimus, processisti, et periculosum et damnosum est monasterio, quod causa ipsa in tantum protrahitur, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus infra XL. dies, vel duos menses ad plus, secundum tenorem aliarum nostrarum literarum in eadem causa procedas, ita videlicet, quod si sorores ipsae in episcopum electionem contulerint, promittentes, quod illam, quam episcopus eis provideret, reciperent, ipsam, quam episcopus illis providerit, facias ab eis, appellatione remota, si tamen exsistat idonea, in suam recipi abbatissam. Si autem in causa procedere non poteris, dilectis filiis I. basilicae duodecim Apostolorum, presbytero Cardinali, Apostolicae sedis Legato et Priori S. Victoris ex parte nostra significes, ut in eadem causa procedant, et eam debito fine decidant.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Before confirmation, a person elected cannot confer benefices or otherwise administer.

The same to the Bishop of Worcester.

You know, as a prudent and wise man, that our beloved son G., Bishop-elect of Lincoln, does not have the faculty of granting honors or prebends, or of otherwise disposing of the property of the church, since his election has not been confirmed.

For this reason we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, by way of precept, not to delay more strictly prohibiting the aforesaid elect on our behalf from presuming to confer upon anyone the archdeaconry of Norantine or the prebend which W., archdeacon of that place, held. And if—which we do not suppose—he has granted that archdeaconry or prebend to anyone, we therefore command you to order him by our authority to take care, as quickly as possible and with every contradiction and appeal ceasing, to revoke any grant which he made concerning the aforesaid matters. [But if he delays, etc.]

Inde est, quod fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, ut praedicto electo ex parte nostra non differas arctius inhibere, ne archidiaconatum de Norantine, vel praebendam, quam W. eiusdem loci archidiaconus tenuit, alicui conferre praesumat. Et si eundem archidiaconatum vel praebendam cuiquam, quod non arbitramur, concessit, Mandamus igitur, quatenus ei auctoritate nostra praecipias, ut concessionem suam quam citius, omni contradictione et appellatione cessante, si quam fecit de praedictis, studeat revocare. [Quodsi distulerit etc.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: An election made after an appeal, while the first election had not been quashed, and contrary to the privileges of the church, is to be quashed.

The same.

We considered that the election of John Frontinus had been celebrated after an appeal to us had been interposed and contrary to the tenor of the privileges of your church. We also perceived that the election of B. was made after that election of whatever quality had not been quashed, and also after an appeal through which all things ought to be restored to their former state, and after violence had been inflicted, although the king wholly denies that any violence was ever perpetrated in this matter with his assent or knowledge.

Therefore, with the common counsel of our brothers, we wholly quash each election and grant you free power to agree upon another suitable and honorable person. This is nevertheless to be done so that the reputation of each of the aforesaid men is preserved no less entirely on account of this, and so that they may, if God grants it, be promoted to dignity in other churches. Apart from this disposition for your church, however, it shall be lawful for you, if it is your will, to agree again upon either of them and to provide him canonically as your abbot and master.

> Electio facta post appellationem, et prima non cassata, et contra privilegia ecclesiae, cassanda est.
> Idem.
> Consideravimus, quod electio Ioannis Frontini post appellationem ad nos interpositam et contra tenorem privilegiorum ecclesiae vestrae fuerit celebrata. Perpendimus etiam, quod electio B. post illam qualemcunque electionem non cassatam, nec non et post appellationem, per quam ad suum statum omnia debent reduci, facta fuit, et illata violentia, quanquam rex penitus inficietur, violentiam aliquam in hoc de assensu vel conscientia sua unquam perpetratam fuisse. Quapropter nos utriusque electionem de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio omnino cassamus, et vobis in aliam personam idoneam et honestam conveniendi liberam tribuimus facultatem; ita tamen, quod utrique praedictorum fama sua non minus propter hoc integre conservetur, et quod in aliis ecclesiis possint, si Deus dederit, ad dignitatem promoveri. Vobis autem liceat praeter istam ecclesiae vestrae ordinationem in eorum alterum, si voluntas fuerit, iterum convenire, et eum vobis in abbatem atque magistrum canonice providere.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A confirmed metropolitan, although he has not yet received the pallium, can cause his suffragan to be consecrated.

The same.

It is lawful for the suffragans of a metropolitan, at the mandate of that metropolitan after confirmation of his election, to consecrate a person elected who belongs to his jurisdiction, even if the metropolitan has not received the pallium. When the metropolitan is suffering from illness or otherwise impeded, after his reception of the pallium—and even before it, if his election has been confirmed—his suffragans can, at his mandate, confer the office of consecration upon the person elected.

Metropolitanus confirmatus, licet nondum receperit pallium, potest suum suffraganeum consecrari facere.

Idem.

Suffraganeis alicuius metropolitani, ad mandatum ipsius metropolitani, post confirmationem electionis suae, etiamsi pallium non receperit, licitum est aliquem electum, qui ad eius iurisdictionem pertinet, consecrare, et metropolitano aegritudine laborante vel alias praepedito, post susceptionem pallii, et etiam ante si eius est electio confirmata suffraganei sui ad mandatum ipsius possunt electo munus consecrationis conferre.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A person whose election was quashed not because of a defect in the person but because of the manner of election can be elected again; it is otherwise if it was quashed because of a defect in the person.

Clement III.

Concerning what you wished to inquire—if, after someone's election has been quashed, the same person is elected to the governance of another church, whether his election ought to be confirmed—we wish your discretion to hold this: if the earlier election is quashed not because of a defect in the person but because of the manner of election, it ought not to impede his promotion even in the same church, unless perhaps it is established that some depravity of simony intervened.

Is, cuius electio fuit cassata, non vitio personae, sed electionis modo, iterum eligi potest; secus, si vitio personae.

Clemens III.

Super eo vero, quod quaerere voluisti, si alicuius electione cassata idem ad alterius ecclesiae regimen electus fuerit, an eius electio debeat confirmari, hoc tuam volumus discretionem tenere, quod, si prior electio non vitio personae, sed modo electionis cassatur, promotionem eius in eadem etiam ecclesia, nisi forte simoniacae pravitatis aliquid intercessisse constiterit, non debeat impedire.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A person who has not made profession can be postulated as abbot if a postulation of this kind is made for some good cause. This it says according to the reading which is more particular.

Celestine III.

Since the monastery of Pellicia situated in your episcopate has come to such dissolution, as the intimation of your letters disclosed, that the brothers of that house have cast off the observance and order of religion and, after its goods were squandered and consumed, have hitherto been unable to agree upon electing an abbot for themselves from the body of that church, nevertheless, at the insistence of your admonition and exhortation, they assembled together and unanimously agreed upon a man of good testimony who had lived laudably with his brothers in a hermitage. Postulating him as abbot with all their desires, they asked to be subjected to his disciplines and habit.

You, with the counsel of prudent and discreet men, assented to their postulation and humbly petitioned that the same appointment be confirmed by the Apostolic See. We, liberally imparting our favor and assent to your petition, confirm that appointment as having been canonically made and fortify it with the protection of the present writing. [Concerning that matter, etc. (compare chapter 1, On Confessions, II.18.)]

Since the land which was regarded as the measuring-line of the Lord's inheritance ... (And below:) As we have learned from the tenor of certain letters and the report of many persons, a disease of depraved custom formerly crept into elections: namely, when the election of some prelate is to be celebrated, the convent to which it is known to belong names two persons, who are secretly to be declared in the ears of the patriarch or prince, so that the same patriarch or prince may thus have full power either to choose one of them or wholly to invalidate the entire election.

Since this redounds to the burden and destruction of ecclesiastical liberty, we decree that the aforesaid depravity of custom is to be wholly abolished. We establish that the form of canonical election be observed in all conventual churches: namely, when provision is to be made for a church deprived of the governance of a pastor, the electors are to assemble in one place where the election is to be celebrated and, after the grace of the Holy Spirit has been invoked, solemnly name a person upon whom all, or the [greater] part of sounder counsel, can agree. Without contradiction from anyone, that person is to be admitted to the governance of that church, provided that the person is suitable and the election was celebrated without simoniacal depravity.

But if there was fault in the person or in the manner of election, the electors are to apply diligence of inquiry in the election until they can provide a suitable person for the vacant church according to the aforesaid form. When this has been done, we do not prohibit the assent of the king or of the patriarch then in office from being sought; but we do not wish the election itself to be impeded on this account.

Your affection has now repeated the question which, as you took care to intimate, was previously transmitted to our hearing. You asked what is to be done by you concerning the fact that clerics of your diocese, when they are struck for their excesses by a sentence of suspension, interdict, or excommunication, make light of it, abandon their churches, and transfer themselves to the commercial occupations of laymen. Certain of them also set aside the clerical habit, put on lay garments, and, involving themselves like lay merchants in base gains, join the company of laymen like themselves and elude ecclesiastical correction through contempt. They say that you do not have the power to correct them unless the Apostolic See has specially granted it to you.

We therefore answer that, whenever you find such persons, if after being admonished they are unwilling to be recalled from such base acts, to make full satisfaction for their contempt, and to return to clerical dress, you, supported by our authority, are to subject them to excommunication with appeal ceasing and cause them to be more strictly avoided by everyone until they have purged their guilt by suitable satisfaction, especially if any of them have been established in sacred orders.

You could execute these things even without a special mandate, since from the time when you received confirmation of your election you have free power to establish what is just and accords with ecclesiastical utility concerning such and similar matters, apart from those things which require examination through a greater inquiry and demand the ministry of consecration.

Respondemus igitur, quod, si quando tales repereris, si commoniti noluerint a tam turpibus actibus revocari, et de contemptu satisfacientes plenarie ad clericale schema redire, tu eos auctoritate nostra suffultus excommunicationi appellatione cessante subiicias, faciasque eos arctius ab omnibus evitari, donec reatum suum congrua satisfactione diluerint, praesertim si qui eorum in sacris sunt ordinibus constituti. Etiam haec sine speciali mandato exsequi posses, quum ex quo electionis tuae confirmationem accepisti, de talibus et consimilibus, praeter ea, quae maioris inquisitionis discussionem exigunt, et ministerium consecrationis desiderant, quod iustum est et ecclesiasticae convenit utilitati statuendi habeas liberam facultatem.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: One who renounces an election made concerning himself cannot appeal in order to impede the election of another. And an election celebrated by suspended persons does not hold.

Innocent III to the Abbots of Cella Sancti Petri and Modena.

When a dispute concerning the abbey of Schaffhausen arose between our beloved son R. the elder and R. the younger, and they appeared in our presence, we appointed as their auditors our beloved sons G., cardinal-deacon of Saints Cosmas and Damian, and G., cardinal-deacon of Santa Maria in Aquiro. In their presence [on behalf of R. the elder] there were proposed [the matters which follow.

When H., former abbot of that monastery, had spontaneously resigned the burden of governance against the will of his chapter and had absolved the monks from obedience to him, they unanimously elected the aforesaid R. the elder as their abbot, with the said H. also consenting and obeying him together with the others. Afterward the elect was presented to the diocesan bishop and received from him the office of blessing, administering that church as its proper abbot for two years and more.

But because he placed the nuns of Saint Agnes of that town—who were furnishing the younger monks with material for sin—under stricter custody, the young monks, seizing an occasion from this, stirred up others against him on the ground that the aforesaid resignation of H. had been less than canonical. Hearing this, the aforesaid bishop approached the place and inquired into the cause of the dissension. He paternally rebuked H. as though he had sown an occasion of hatred in the church, but learned from him that such things were not being done through him. When certain of the monks said in the bishop's presence that they had by no means been absolved from obedience to H., H. declared that he had absolved them. To remove every ground of suspicion from himself, he vehemently asserted with an oath before the bishop that he wished henceforth to have neither that abbey nor any other.

After the bishop's departure, however, the monks returned nevertheless to their customary devices and conducted a controversy against R. before the said bishop and the chapter of Constance on the ground that H. had relinquished the abbey less than canonically. When R. was prepared immediately to prove the justice of his position, the monks, seeing the defect in their cause, appealed to the Apostolic See although aggrieved in nothing. Through letters obtained by subreption within the period of appeal, an unjust judgment was promulgated against R. by messengers while he was appealing, and his adversary was restored.

R., prosecuting the appeal interposed through a messenger, obtained letters of commission within the appointed term to specified judges. Those letters commanded that, after what had been adjudged against him on occasion of the earlier commission had been restored to its due state, they should restore the abbey to him and cause the monks to show him due reverence. But the monks remained obstinate and were unwilling to obey him.]

Both parties approached the Apostolic See. Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, appointed as their auditors ourselves—when we were then established in a lesser office—and our beloved son John, cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Stephen. When argument had been made at length on each side before us and we had explained the course of the affair to our aforesaid predecessor, Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, compelled R. the elder, who urgently demanded a judgment, to enter a settlement against his will. Thus, renouncing the abbey, he received from H.'s hand the custodianship and also the priory, to be possessed without any dispute while H. lived.

Although R. consented to this arrangement unwillingly, when he returned home he was unable to obtain the things [granted to him], because his adversaries were unwilling to observe the settlement. Rather, what is worse, they afterward laid violent hands upon him. But, aided by the men of that place and escaping the hands of the monks, he flew to the aid of an appeal.

Meanwhile our beloved son P., cardinal-deacon of Santa Maria in Via Lata and Legate of the Apostolic See, approaching those regions, both suspended the monks and placed the monastery under interdict because of the aforesaid and many other excesses. But they, despising the cardinal's sentence, celebrated the divine offices more promptly than before; and while this suspension remained, the aforesaid adversary of R. was taken from their midst by death.

On learning this, R. came to the church and, when he wished to comply with the aforesaid settlement but the other party was unwilling, placed before them the obstacle of an appeal so that they should not proceed to the election of an abbot until the dispute between them was terminated. But the monks, contumacious in every respect, together elected the said R. the younger and presented him to the diocesan bishop to be blessed. The bishop blessed him after the appeal had been interposed and in a church under interdict.

[For this reason R. the elder, again approaching the Apostolic See, obtained letters from us directing that what had been improperly attempted by the monks after an appeal had been lawfully interposed should be restored to its due state. If it were established that the election had been made by persons suspended and under interdict, the judges were to declare that it did not hold at all; concerning the restoration of R. the elder and the other matters which they considered should be proposed on each side, they were, with appeal removed, to establish what the order of reason required.

When the delegated judges received those letters, they cited the parties into their presence. When the monks wished to prove that the letters had been obtained through suggestion of falsehood, and the judges were unwilling to receive their proof, they appealed to the Apostolic See. But the delegates, because appeal had been removed in the letters, nevertheless proceeded in the cause. When the truth of the affair was established before them through the depositions of witnesses, they rendered judgment for the often-mentioned R. the elder and adjudged the aforesaid church to him. He therefore petitioned that what had been done by delegation of the Apostolic See obtain due firmness through us, so that, after the contumacy of the monks had been repressed, he might enjoy peaceful possession of the abbey.

On the other side, however, it was alleged against R. the elder that, when the former abbot H. had resigned less than lawfully and the monks were treating concerning an election, R. the elder employed fraud and procured that, while vespers were being sung and the election was to be celebrated on the following day, the men of the town approached the church and violently intruded R. there while almost all the monks protested. Afterward, recognizing that the resignation of H. had by no means held and considering also that the monastery could prosper under his praiseworthy conduct, the monks sought him as their proper abbot.

Hence it happened that, after many altercations and commissions, a commission was at length obtained with the assent of each party: if it were established before the delegated judges that the resignation of H. was formless and the substitution of R. the elder useless, they were to remove R. and restore the abbey to H. This was carried into effect.

Afterward, while R. nevertheless murmured, both men together approached the presence of our predecessor, who, as we have already stated, appointed us and the aforesaid cardinal-priest as their auditors. When the cause had at length been conducted for a long time, a settlement was celebrated by our predecessor with the assent of each party: H. was to obtain the abbey, and R. the priory and custodianship, on account of which R. promised obedience to H. When they thus returned home, R. approved the aforesaid settlement before the diocesan bishop. But when afterward he was asked a third time by the abbot whether he wished to have the custodianship and priory, he came after a third citation and said that he wished to have the aforesaid offices not through the abbot but through the Roman Pontiff; and therefore he was unwilling to show the abbot any obedience.

Departing without the abbot's permission, he remained outside the monastery for a considerable time and was bound by H., with the counsel of the brothers, by the bond of excommunication. When he did not return to the monastery for a long time, the abbot, with the brothers advising, assigned those offices to others, who held them peacefully as long as the abbot lived.

When the abbot died, the brothers assembled together in the presence of certain abbots and other religious men who had gathered for the burial of the deceased, and, in the absence of R. the elder, unanimously elected R. the younger as abbot. The diocesan bishop confirmed and blessed him after he had been presented.

Thereafter R. the elder approached our presence and, by falsehood, obtained letters to judges four days' journeys distant and suspected by the monks. A party of the monks approached those judges before any citation and, after obtaining a copy of the commission, alleged that the letters had been obtained through suggestion of falsehood: they said that it was written in the letters that the settlement had not been observed for him, that the monastery was under interdict, and that he had appealed before R. the younger was elected abbot, all of which they asserted to be wholly false. He also concealed that he had been excommunicated by the deceased abbot and certain other matters which, if expressed, would by no means have allowed him to obtain those letters.

When they wished sufficiently to prove everything which we have stated, and the judges refused to receive their proofs on the ground that this had not been committed to them, the monks appealed before entry into the trial, as was proved from the depositions of witnesses. The delegates nevertheless proceeded, received the witnesses of the opposing party, and by judgment decreed that R. the elder was to be installed. The monks humbly petitioned us to invalidate their act as unjust.]

When the aforesaid cardinals had prudently and faithfully reported these and certain other matters to us and our brothers, we, considering that by assent to the settlement received—which our predecessor had also confirmed—R. the elder had lost whatever right had belonged to him, and that on this account he could by no means lawfully have appealed to prevent the monks from proceeding to an election, since those whose interest is not involved are not ordinarily heard when they appeal, declare with the counsel of our brothers that the appeal was not lawful. Hence the election could not be impeded by it.

[But because it was established before us that the monks reasonably appealed before the beginning of the litigation on the ground that the delegates were unwilling to admit proof concerning the suggestion of falsehood, and consequently that, by the very fact that a proper appeal had been made, the jurisdiction of the judges had expired, we declare by judgment that whatever was improperly attempted by them—whether in receiving witnesses before joinder of issue or in rendering judgment —does not hold.]

Although our beloved sons P. the provost and the chapter of Constance inserted in their letters the interdict which the cardinal had imposed, nevertheless, because the fact that the diocesan bishop conferred the office of blessing upon R. the younger seems to conflict with what we have stated—so that either the writing prejudices the deed or the deed the writing—and because, although it was alleged, it was not proved that the election had been celebrated by persons under interdict, we could not invalidate it, especially since nothing was attempted against the person elected.

We have therefore considered that the cause should be committed to you with the assent of the parties under this form: if it is established that the election was made by suspended persons, after it has been wholly quashed and suitable satisfaction has been made, let the sentences of suspension and interdict be relaxed, and let provision be made for the monastery in a suitable person. Otherwise, lest the utility of the monastery be delayed, we wish the aforesaid election to be confirmed by you with appeal removed and R. the younger to enjoy peaceful possession of the abbey, [but the other, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the seventh day before the Ides of April, 1199.]

Quod quum H., quondam abbas ipsius coenobii onus regiminis invito capitulo suo spontanee resignasset, et ab obedientia sua monachos absolvisset, ipsi praedictum R. seniorem, etiam dicto H. consentiente, sibique obediente cum aliis, in abbatem unanimiter elegerunt. Postea vero electus dioecesano episcopo praesentatus, munus ab eo benedictionis accepit, ecclesiam ipsam per biennium et amplius sicut abbas proprius administrans. Verum quoniam moniales S. Quod audiens episcopus antedictus ad locum accessit, causam dissensionis requirens, et praedictum H. paterne redarguens, tanquam odii fomitem in ecclesia seminasset, accepit ab eo, quod per ipsum talia non fiebant. Et ut omnem a se suspicionis materiam amoveret, cum iureiurando vehementer asseruit coram episcopo antedicto, quod neque illam nec aliam habere vellet ulterius abbatiam. Monachi vero post recessum episcopi ad artes solitas nihilominus recurrentes, coram dicto episcopo et capitulo Constantiensi adversus eundem R. controversiam agitarunt, tanquam minus canonice dictus H. dimiserit abbatiam. Ipse vero R. appellationem interpositam per nuncium prosequens, et termino constituto commissionis literas ad certos iudices impetravit, ut quod occasione prioris commissionis contra eum iudicatum fuerat ad statum debitum revocato, et ei restituerent abbatiam, et a monachis sibi facerent debitam reverentiam exhiberi. Sed monachis obstinatis et sibi obedire nolentibus], ambae partes ad sedem apostolicam accesserunt, quibus a bonae memoriae Coelestino Papa praedecessore nostro nos ipsi, dum in minori eramus officio constituti, et dilectus filius noster Ioannes tt. S. Stephani presbyter cardinalis, dati fuimus auditores. Et quum utrimque coram nobis esset diutius allegatum, et eidem praedecessori nostro per nos esset processus negotii declaratus, ipse bonae memoriae Coelestinus praedecessor noster praedictum R. seniorem, sententiam cum instantia postulantem, ad componendum coegit invitum; et sic abbatiae renuncians, de manu eius custodiam et etiam prioratum recepit, ab eo, dum viveret, sine quaestione qualibet possidendos. Cui ordinationi licet consentiret invitus, domum tamen reversus, adversariis compositionem ipsam nolentibus observare, non potuit quae [sibi] concessa sunt obtinere, quin potius in eum, quod deterius est, manus iniecerunt postea violentas. Sed adiutus ab illius loci hominibus et monachorum manus evadens, ad appellationis subsidium convolavit. Interim vero dilectus filius noster P. S. Mariae in Via lata diaconus cardinalis apostolicae sedis legatus, ad partes illas accedens, pro iam dictis et aliis multis excessibus et suspendit monachos, et monasterium interdixit. Ipsi vero contempta sententia cardinalis divina promptius quam antea celebrarunt, et in hac suspensione praedictus adversarius eius de medio est sublatus. Quo comperto ad ecclesiam venit, et, quum vellet praedictae compositioni parere, parte altera hoc nolente, ne ad electionem abbatis procederetur, quousque quaestio inter eos finiretur, obicem provocationis obiecit; sed monachi per omnia contumaces, et dictum R. iuniorem pariter eligentes, ipsum benedicendum dioecesano episcopo praesentarunt, qui post appellationem interpositam benedixit eum, et in ecclesia interdicta. [Unde idem R. iterato ad sedem apostolicam accedens, a nobis literas impetravit, ut quod post appellationem legitime interpositam perperam fuerat a monachis attentatum ad statum debitum revocato, si constaret a suspensis et interdictis electionem factam fuisse, denunciarent eam penitus non tenere, super restitutione vero ipsius R. senioris et aliis, quae utrinque ducerent proponenda, statuerent, appellatione remota, quod ordo posceret rationis. Ceterum iudices delegati literis his receptis, partes ad suam praesentiam citaverunt, et quum monachi per suggestionem falsi probare vellent literas impetratas, iudicibus nolentibus ipsarum probationem recipere, sedem apostolicam appellarunt. Delegati vero, quia remota erat in literis appellatio, in causa nihilominus procedentes, quum per depositiones testium eis de veritate negotii constitisset, pro saepedicto R. seniore sententiam protulerunt, adiudicantes ei ecclesiam memoratam. Petebat itaque quod factum erat ex delegatione apostolicae sedis per nos obtinere debitam firmitatem, ut repressa contumacia monachorum pacifica ipsius abbatiae possessione gauderet. Ceterum contra eundem R. seniorem fuit ex parte altera taliter allegatum, quod, quum dictus H. quondam abbas minus legitime resignasset, et monachi de electione tractarent, senior R. fraude adhibita procuravit, quod, quum vesperae cantarentur, et die sequenti esset electio celebranda, homines burgi ad ecclesiam accedentes ipsum R. fere omnibus monachis reclamantibus ibidem per violentiam intruserunt, Monachi vero postea cognoscentes renunciationem praefati H. minime tenuisse, pariterque pensantes, quod sub eius conversatione laudabili monasterium proficere posset, ipsum tanquam abbatem proprium requirebant. Unde factum est, quod post multas altercationes et commissiones factas tandem de utriusque partis assensu commissio est obtenta, quod, si de informi resignatione H. et inutili substitutione R. senioris constaret iudicibus delegatis, R. remoto, saepe dicto H. restituerent abbatiam, et ita fuit effectui mancipatum. Post haec ipso R. nihilominus murmurante, ambo pariter ad praedecessoris nostri praesentiam accesserunt, qui, sicut iam praemisimus, nos et praefatum presbyterum cardinalem eis tribuit auditores, et tandem causa diutius actitata per eundem praedecessorem nostrum de utriusque partis assensu fuit compositio taliter celebrata, quod H. abbatiam, R. vero prioratum et custodiam obtineret, propter quod ipsi H. obedientiam promisit. Sic ergo eis reversis ad propria, praefatam compositionem idem R. coram dioecesano episcopo approbavit. Sed ab ipso abbate postea requisitus tertio, si custodiam et prioratum vellet habere, post trinam citationem veniens dixit, quod non per eum, sed per Romanum Pontificem volebat habere praemissa, unde nullam obedientiam ei voluit exhibere. Recedens igitur absque abbatis licentia, quum extra monasterium moram faceret longiorem, ab ipso H. de fratrum consilio fuit excommunicationis vinculo innodatus; et quum per longum tempus non rediret ad monasterium, abbas dicta officia, consulentibus fratribus, aliis assignavit, qui, quamdiu abbas vixit, ea pacifice tenuerunt. Abbate vero defuncto, fratres convenerunt in unum, nonnullis abbatibus et aliis viris religiosis praesentibus, qui ad defuncti convenerant sepulturam, et R. iuniorem, seniore absente, in abbatem unanimiter elegerunt, quem praesentatum sibi dioecesanus episcopus confirmavit et benedixit. Consequenter vero senior R. ad praesentiam nostram accedens, literas ad remotos per diaetas quatuor iudices et suspectos monachis per mendacium impetravit, ad quos pars monachorum ante aliquam citationem accedens, copia commissionis obtenta, literas per falsi suggestionem proposuit impetratas pro eo, quod dicebatur in eis, compositionem sibi non fuisse servatam, monasterium interdictum, et se appellasse prius, quam R. iunior electus fuerit in abbatem, quae falsa penitus asserebat. Tacuit etiam, se excommunicatum ab hoc abbate defuncto, et alia quaedam, quibus expressis literas ipsas nullatenus impetrasset. Quumque omnia, quae praemisimus, sufficienter probare vellent, et iudices eorum probationes recipere, tanquam demandatum eis non fuerit, recusarent, ipsi monachi ante ingressum iudicii appellarunt, sicut ex depositionibus testium est probatum. Delegati vero nihilominus procedentes, et recipientes testes partis adversae, seniorem R. instituendum sententialiter decreverunt, quorum factum, tanquam iniquum, irritari a nobis monachi suppliciter postulabant.] Quum autem quae praemissa sunt et alia quaedam praefati cardinales nobis et fratribus nostris prudenter et fideliter retulissent, Nos attendentes, quod ex consensu compositionis receptae, quam praedecessor noster etiam confirmaverat, ius, si quod sibi competierat, R. senior amisisset, ac per hoc, ne monachi ad electionem procederent, de iure minime appellare potuisset, quum, nisi quorum interest, audiri non soleant appellantes, de consilio fratrum nostrorum appellationem illam dicimus legitimam non fuisse. Unde per eam electio non potuit impediri. [Quia vero constitit nobis, monachos ante litis exordium rationabiliter appellasse pro eo, quod super falsi suggestione probationem nolebant admittere delegati, et per consequentiam eo ipso, quod bene appellatum fuerat, iurisdictionem iudicum exspirasse, quicquid ab eis est perperam attentatum, vel de recipiendis ante litem contestatam testibus, vel de sententia proferenda denunciamus sententialiter non tenere.] Sane quamvis dilecti filii P. praepositus et capitulum Constantiense de interdicto, quod cardinalis posuerat, in suis literis inseruerint, quia tamen per id, quod R. iuniori dioecesanus episcopus munus benedictionis impendit, ei videtur quod praemisimus obviare, unde vel scriptura facto, vel factum scripturae praeiudicat, nec probatum fuit, licet obiectum, quod ab interdictis electio fuerit celebrata, ipsam non potuimus irritare, praesertim quum contra personam electi nihil fuerit intentatum. Alioquin ne utilitas monasterii retardetur, praemissam electionem per vos appellatione remota volumus confirmari, et R. iuniorem abbatiae pacifica possessione gaudere, [aliam vero etc. Dat. Later. The same to the Chapter of Penne.

You, as the authors of his election, know more fully how, after the death of the Bishop of Penne of good memory, when your church was vacant, and after first receiving our letters concerning the election to be made, you elected your primicerius as your pastor. But because the man elected by you irreverently involved himself in administration of the episcopate before obtaining confirmation, receiving oaths from both clerics and laymen, and did not consider that, according to the Apostle, no one ought to assume the honor for himself except one who is called by God as Aaron was—especially since he had not obtained the gift of learning fitting for a pontiff, although according to the word of the Lord, "He who shall do and teach shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven"—after you presented that elect to us, and after sufficient examination had first been conducted and the counsel of our brothers shared, we considered that the election made concerning him should be invalidated as justice required. We declare that whatever was done from it and on its account does not hold at all.

Verum quoniam electus a vobis ante confirmationem obtentam administrationi episcopatus se irreverenter immiscuit, recipiendo tam a clericis quam a laicis iuramenta, non attendens, quod secundum Apostolum nemo debet sibi honorem assumere, sed qui vocatur a Deo tanquam Aaron, praecipue quia nec donum scientiae pontifici conveniens fuerat assecutus, quum iuxta verbum dominicum: "Qui fecerit et docuerit magnus vocetur in regno coelorum," postquam nobis praesentastis eundem electum, sufficienti examinatione praemissa, communicato fratrum consilio, electionem de ipso factam exigente iustitia duximus irritandam, quicquid ex ea et ob eam factum est denunciantes penitus non tenere. Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: If persons who need not be summoned to an election are summoned, an election made without waiting for them is valid. This it says according to the common reading.

The same to the Chapter of Capua.

Since among all metropolitan churches Capua is nearer to the Apostolic See, we aspire more particularly to make provision for it, desiring that such a person be set over it as excels other metropolitans in the affection of devotion just as he does in proximity of place, through whom the metropolitan church itself may receive the desired increase in spiritual as well as temporal matters.

We learned through our beloved sons I. and F., your canons, and through the letters which they brought to the Apostolic See, that the dean and your other canons remaining at Palermo intimated to you by letters that, considering the losses of the church of Capua, you should treat concerning the election of a replacement pastor in such a way that you would name no one in their absence. You sent one of your associates to them with letters, assigning a period of twelve days within which, after receiving your letters, they should begin the return journey. Yet ecclesiastical custom does not require that canons so far away be summoned to the election of a pastor, especially those who knew in person of the death of your metropolitan long before you did, some of whom returned to the church of Capua after his death.

Because a longer delay in elections is highly suspect and indeed often damaging, we command and instruct your discretion by apostolic writings, after invoking the grace of the Holy Spirit, concordantly to assume through canonical election a suitable person for the governance of the church of Capua. You are thereafter to send suitable messengers to our hearing, through whom you are to seek assent from us in place of the king and request the grace of apostolic confirmation. You are to provide attentively that you proceed with such zeal of discretion and charity that neither vice in the election nor defect in the person elected can be found. Otherwise, we would both revoke the act of election as void and punish the persons of those electing.

Si vocantur ad electionem non vocandi, valet electio facta eis non exspectatis. H. dic. secundum lecturam communem.

Idem Capitulo Capuano.

Quum inter universas metropoles Capuana sit apostolicae sedi vicinior, ad provisionem ipsius specialius adspiramus, talem ipsi personam praefigi cupientes, quae sicut alios metropolitanos loci vicinitate, sic et devotionis affectu praecellat, per quam et ipsa metropolis tam in spiritualibus quam in temporalibus optatum suscipiat incrementum. Intelleximus autem per dilectos filios I. et F. canonicos vestros, et per literas, quas ad sedem apostolicam detulerunt, quod ad decanum et alios canonicos vestros Panormi manentes, quum ex eorum parte fuisset vobis per literas intimatum, ut ecclesiae Capuanae damna pensantes sic tractaretis super electione substituendi pastorem, quod nullum deberetis in eorum absentia nominare, quendam socium vestrum cum literis destinastis, duodecim dierum terminum assignantes, infra quem post receptionem literarum vestrarum iter arriperent redeundi, quamvis ecclesiastica consuetudo non exigat, ut ad electionem pastoris canonici tam remoti vocentur, et illi praecipue, qui longe antequam vos metropolitani vestri obitum praesentialiter cognoverunt, quorum aliqui post eius decessum ad Capuanam ecclesiam sunt reversi. Quia vero mora longior est in electionibus valde suspecta, immo saepe damnosa, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus atque praecipimus, quatenus invocata Spiritus sancti gratia personam idoneam per electionem canonicam concorditer assumatis ad regimen Capuanae ecclesiae, consequenter ad audientiam nostram nuncios idoneos transmissuri, per quos a nobis vice regia postuletis assensum, et apostolicae confirmationis gratiam requiratis, attentius provisuri ut eo discretionis et caritatis studio procedatis, quod nec in electione vitium, nec in electo defectus valeat inveniri. Alioquin et factum electionis revocaremus in irritum, et personas eligentium puniremus.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: It ought to be considered not whether an election was celebrated after an appeal, but whether it was celebrated contrary to the appeal. And the right of electing remains with those who summon and possess the power of summoning if those summoned disdain to come. It also belongs to the office of the confirmer to examine the person elected, even when no one objects. Unless the person elected is shown to be of lawful age and learning, he is held not to have been lawfully elected.

The same to the Archdeacon and Chapter of Capua.

When formerly the death [of the Archbishop of Capua of good memory had been established before us through both your letters and your messengers, wishing, as the solicitude of our office requires, that a pastor be provided more quickly for the widowed church, we commanded you to make a canonical election of a suitable person through whom the church of Capua could be fittingly governed in spiritual and temporal matters.

You received our mandate humbly and devoutly and assembled in the metropolitan church on the appointed day. When you were sitting in chapter to treat concerning the election to be made, and you, son archdeacon, had begun the hymn invoking the grace of the Holy Spirit, our beloved son M., Archdeacon of Teano and canon of Capua, commanded silence and said: "The Lord Pope has commanded us to make a canonical election, and I prohibit an election from being made unless it is canonical, and I issue the voice of appeal to him." When the aforesaid archdeacon was asked by certain of you what he understood by a canonical election, he answered that, according to the canonical decrees, no one should be elected bishop from another church while a suitable person could be found in one's own.

After a small tumult had thus arisen, when you, son archdeacon, began the hymn again, the Archdeacon of Teano left the choir with certain of his accomplices and began to remain in a corner of the church, while you solemnly completed the hymn in the choir. When, after the grace of the Holy Spirit had been invoked, the election was to be treated, you chose one priest, one deacon, and another acolyte acting in place of a subdeacon—who was also chancellor of the church of Capua—to inquire successively into the votes of individuals. Diligently inquiring into the wishes of everyone, they found all of you who remained in chapter to elect concordant in the election and unanimously naming our beloved son R., our subdeacon and chaplain, son of our beloved son the nobleman P., Count of Celano.

Thereafter you took care through certain of your number to admonish the aforesaid archdeacon and those who had departed with him to come and make the election. But when they wholly refused to come, and the archdeacon said that you had not shown him so much honor and favor that he wished to remain with you in making the election, you published your election, sang Te Deum laudamus, and caused the bells to be rung solemnly so that what had been done by you might become known to the city.

When all the people came to the church at the sound of the bells and heard how the election had been celebrated by you, they commonly approved your act. Certain of them repeatedly pressed the archdeacon and the others who disagreed with the election to return to concord. But, as is alleged, the archdeacon answered that he would by no means consent to the election then, but wished to grant it his assent in our presence; and, as is said, he repeated this again and again in the presence of many persons.

You, son archdeacon, approached our presence with many of the canons of Capua, carrying the decree of election strengthened by the subscriptions of those electing. When you had remained with us for some time, three canons of Capua appeared before us some days later on behalf of the opposing party. When both you and they appeared in our presence and that of our brothers, we instructed each party to tell the truth. So far as the narration of fact extended up to the departure of the aforesaid archdeacon from the choir, neither party disagreed.

The aforesaid clerics nevertheless said that many who had departed with the archdeacon had been induced by threats and terrors to consent to the election afterward made by you. When we diligently asked both you and those clerics how many clerics of Capua ought to have participated in the election, you were not found to disagree in your answer, but both you and they designated a certain number concerning this. When we carefully asked how many had departed with the Archdeacon of Teano when he lodged the appeal, favoring the appeal interposed, the aforesaid three clerics disagreed with you on this point: they alleged that twelve or thirteen canons at most dissented from the election made, while you said there were only five or six. Nevertheless, according to the number of canons expressly given by both you and them, three parts and more were concordant in the election, even if the assertion of the aforesaid clerics—that thirteen canons dissented—were true.

Although, as we have said, we diligently inquired publicly into the truth, nevertheless, lest we appear to omit anything concerning which fuller proof should be furnished to us, we commanded certain of our brothers to examine you and those clerics individually, so that each of you might set forth the truth more fully and securely before them. They found nothing other than what had previously been proposed.

When the aforesaid clerics, who had said that certain canons were induced by threats and terrors to consent, were asked whether they had seen any coercion inflicted upon anyone, they answered that after the election had been made they heard certain canons threatening others and saying: "Let three hundred armed men be summoned from the city, and then it will appear who is unwilling to consent to our election." But although this was said, they did not see anyone coming with arms on this account or inflicting any coercion upon them.]

Since it was established from the assertion of each party that a canonical appeal had been interposed when appeal was made to our hearing, according to the tenor of our mandate, that no election should be held unless it were canonical, it could appear that nothing ought to have been altered in the interval after the appeal. Hence an election of this kind was to be adjudged invalid and void as having been attempted after a canonical appeal had been interposed.

To the contrary, however, since the appeal had been made not that no election should be held but that a canonical election should be held, if the act of election followed canonically, it appeared to have proceeded not contrary to the form of the appeal but rather according to it. Therefore, although the election was celebrated after the appeal, it was not celebrated against it, and for this reason it was in no way to be invalidated.

For although it is established in a canon that a person should then be elected from another church when no suitable person has been found in one's own, nevertheless, since two-thirds and more consented and continue to consent to the election, and since this rule was introduced in favor of the clerics and anyone may renounce a right known to have been introduced on his behalf, you, who were two-thirds and more—since what two-thirds of a chapter do is regarded as done by the whole—could in this matter renounce the right which appeared to operate in your favor and celebrate the election of a person from another church.

This is especially so because that decree appears to have application when an outsider is imposed by the violence of some power against clerics who resist and are unwilling. For this reason it follows in the decree that clerics shall have the faculty to resist if they see themselves burdened, and shall not fear to reject those whom they see imposed upon them from outside.

Moreover, since the Apostolic See is the head of all churches and the Roman Pontiff is the ordinary judge of every individual, when someone from it is assumed as prelate of another church, it does not appear that it can be objected against him, because of the privilege of the head which possesses the fullness of power, that he was elected from another church, since the members ought not to be regarded as foreign to the head.

Likewise, after the appeal had been issued—not that no election should occur, because such an appeal would be null, but that a canonical election should occur—the Archdeacon of Teano departed from the choir with his supporters. You took care solicitously to recall them so that they would participate with you in the election to be made. Because they were unwilling to approach to make the election, they appear to have made themselves strangers to it, for which reason they seemed unable by law to contradict the election concordantly celebrated by you according to the form of the apostolic mandate, especially since the same archdeacon, when afterward questioned, answered that he wished to give it his assent in our presence.

Therefore, since according to the statutes of the Lateran Council, with appeal removed, that which has been ordained by the greater and sounder number ought always to prevail unless perhaps something reasonable has been objected and shown by the fewer and inferior, the election celebrated by you as the greater and sounder part ought and could reasonably be confirmed notwithstanding the contradiction or appeal of the few, since what was objected and shown appears from the foregoing reasons not to have been reasonable.

After these and other matters had been alleged, although nothing was ever said or objected against the person whom you elected, nevertheless, according to the word of the Apostle, "Lay hands hastily on no one," we ought diligently to attend to those matters which were to be investigated concerning the person. We therefore considered that we should proceed from our office, as was fitting.

Indeed, since three matters are especially to be investigated in the person elected—namely, lawful age, honorable morals, and sufficient learning—we can bear praiseworthy testimony concerning his honorable morals, since he lived laudably with us for some time. The person elected is also of learning which, although not eminent, is nevertheless suitable, so that, as we learned more fully from those who knew him better, he ought not to be excluded from election because of a defect of knowledge. But we could not learn the full truth concerning lawful age, about which, as we have learned, you also thought nothing. For although we took care to inquire from many persons how old he was, we never heard from anyone that he had attained the thirtieth year of age.

According to the statutes of the aforesaid council, no one ought to be elected bishop who has not completed his thirtieth year. Although venerable old age is not prolonged nor measured by the number of years, but a man's understanding is his gray hair and an immaculate life is the age of old age, nevertheless, after those three things which Solomon asserts are difficult, he reckons a fourth as almost impossible—namely, the way of a man in his youth—as though it cannot be investigated.

Wishing therefore to provide equally for the church and the person, and to observe both reason and the canons, after diligent deliberation concerning this with our brothers, because we understood your purpose to be provident, and therefore because of the urgent necessity and evident utility of the church of Capua—which we approve rather in this matter—we wish that purpose to endure firmly. With the common assent of our brothers, we grant you our aforesaid subdeacon as procurator, committing to him free administration in temporal as well as spiritual matters. [Therefore, etc. Given at the Lateran, 1220.]

mandatum nostrum suscipientes humiliter et devote, statuto die in metropolitana ecclesia convenistis, et, quum ad tractandum de facienda electione in capitulo sederetis, et tu, fili archidiacone, hymnum ad invocandam Spiritus sancti gratiam incepisses, dilectus filius M. archidiaconus Theatinus, canonicus Capuanus, silentium indicens, sic ait: "Dominus Papa ut faceremus canonicam electionem praecepit, et ego ne fiat, nisi canonica, interdico, et ad ipsum vocem appellationis emitto." Quumque a quibusdam vestrum quaesitum fuisset ab archidiacono memorato, quid intelligeret per canonicam electionem, respondit, ut secundum decreta canonica nullus in episcopum de aliena eligeretur ecclesia, dum in propria posset idoneus inveniri. Et sic aliquantulo facto tumultu, quum tu, fili archidiacone, hymnum iterum incepisses, ipse archidiaconus Theatinus cum quibusdam complicibus suis chorum exivit, et coepit in quodam angulo ecclesiae commorari, et vos hymnum in choro solenniter complevistis. Sed quum post invocatam Spiritus sancti gratiam foret de electione tractandum, unum presbyterum, et unum diaconum, et alium acolythum vicem gerentem subdiaconi, qui etiam est cancellarius ecclesiae Capuanae, ut vota singulorum seriatim perquirerent, elegistis. Qui universorum perquirentes diligentius voluntates, vos omnes, qui ad eligendum in capitulo remansistis, invenerunt in electione concordes, dilectum filium R. subdiaconum et capellanum nostrum, filium dilecti filii nobilis viri P. comitis Celanensis, unanimiter nominantes. Demum vero praedictum archidiaconum, et qui cum eo exierant, per quosdam de vestris admonere curastis, ut ad electionem accederent faciendam. Sed quum ipsi venire penitus recusassent, et diceret idem archidiaconus, quod non ei feceratis tantum honoris et gratiae quod vobiscum vellet in electione facienda persistere, vos publicata electione vestra cantastis "Te Deum laudamus," et pulsari fecistis cum solennitate companas, ut quod per vos factum fuerat innotesceret civitati. Ad quarum sonitum quum universus populus ad ecclesiam advenissent, et audissent, qualiter a vobis electio fuerat celebrata, factum vestrum communiter approbarunt; et quidam eorum, ut archidiaconum et alios, qui ab electione discordabant, ad concordiam revocarent, multipliciter institerunt. Verum ipse archidiaconus, ut proponitur, se tunc ipsi electioni minime consentire, sed in nostra praesentia suum assensum ipsi velle praestare respondit, quod etiam, sicut dicitur, saepe ac saepius in multorum praesentia replicavit. Tu vero, fili archidiacone, cum multis de canonicis Capuanis decretum electionis afferens, eligentium subscriptionibus roboratum, ad nostram praesentiam accessisti, et, quum apud nos fuissetis aliquamdiu commorati, tres canonici Capuara pro parte adversa post aliquot dies nostro se conspectui praesentarunt. Vobis igitur et ipsis in nostra et fratrum nostrorum praesentia constitutis, utrique partium praecepimus dicere veritatem, et quantum quidem erat in narratione facti usque ad exitum archidiaconi praedicti de choro, neutra partium discordabat. Dicebant tamen clerici antedicti, quod multi, qui exierant cum archidiacono, minis et terroribus fuerant inducti electioni a vobis postmodum factae consentire. Quumque tam a vobis quam clericis illis quaesiverimus diligenter, quot erant clerici Capuani, qui electioni debuerant interresse, inventi non fuistis in responsione discordes, sed tam vos quam ipsi certum super hoc numerum designastis. Et quum quaereremus sollicite, quot exierant cum archidiacono Theatino, quum appellationem opposuit, interpositae appellationi faventes, licet in hoc a vobis praefati tres clerici discordarent, quod scilicet XII. vel XIII. ad plus de canonicis ab electione facta proponerent dissentire, et vos eos esse V. aut VI. solummodo diceretis, secundum tamen expressum a vobis et ipsis canonicorum numerum tres partes et amplius erant in electione concordes, si etiam praedictorum clericorum assertio vera esset, quod scilicet XIII. canonici dissentirent. Quamquam autem, ut praediximus, diligenter inquisivimus publice veritatem, ne tamen aliqua videremur omittere, de quibus fides nobis erat plenior exhibenda, per quosdam de fratribus nostris singulatim vos et ipsos clericos examinari praecepimus, ut quisque vestrum coram ipsis plenius et securius exponeret veritatem; qui non aliud, quam ante propositum fuerat, invenerunt. Interrogati vero clerici antedicti, qui quosdam canonicorum dixerant minis et terroribus ad consentiendum inductos, si viderunt aliquibus quamlibet coactionem inferri, taliter responderunt, quod post factam electionem audiverunt quosdam de canonicis aliis comminantes et dicentes: "De civitate trecenti vocentur armati, et tunc apparebit, quis electioni nostrae noluerit consentire." Sed licet hoc dictum fuerit, non viderunt tamen propter hoc cum armis aliquem venientem, vel ipsis coactionem aliquam intulisse.] Quum autem ex utriusque partis assertione constaret, interpositam fuisse appellationem canonicam, quando ne fieret electio, nisi canonica, secundum mandati nostri tenorem, ad nostram fuit audientiam appellatum, videri poterat, quod post eam medio tempore nihil debuit innovari, unde talis electio iudicanda erat irrita et inanis, utpote post appellationem canonice interpositam attentata. Sed contra, quum appellatum fuisset, non ut nulla electio fieret, sed ut fieret canonica, si factum electionis canonice fuerit subsecutum, non utique contra formam appellationis huiusmodi, sed magis secundum eam videbatur esse processum, et ideo, licet post appellationem, non tamen contra eandem fuit electio celebrata, propter quod non erat aliquatenus irritanda. Nam quum duae partes et amplius electioni consenserint et consentiant, licet cautum reperiatur in canone, ut tunc alter de altera eligatur ecclesia, quum nullus in propria fuerit repertus idoneus, quia tamen hoc in favorem introductum est clericorum, et cuique licet renunciare iuri, quod pro se noscitur introductum, vos, qui duae partes eratis et amplius, quum quod duae partes capituli faciunt totum facere videatur, in hac parte iuri, quod pro vobis facere videbatur, renunciare potuistis, et electionem de persona alterius ecclesiae celebrare, praesertim quum illud decretum locum videatur habere, quando clericis renitentibus et invitis per alicuius violentiam potestatis extraneus ingeritur ex adverso, propter quod sequitur in decreto, ut sit facultas clericis renitendi, si se viderint praegravari, et quos ingeri sibi viderint ex adverso, non timeant refutare. Praeterea quum sedes apostolica caput omnium ecclesiarum exsistat, et Romanus Pontifex iudex sit ordinarius singulorum, quando de ipsa quis assumitur in praelatum alterius, ei posse obiici non videtur, propter capitis privilegium, quod obtinet plenitudinem potestatis, quod de alia ecclesia eligatur, quum a capite membra reputari non debeant aliena. Item quum post appellationem emissam, non ut non fieret electio, quia talis appellatio nulla foret, sed ut fieret canonica, archidiaconus Theatinus cum suis fautoribus chorum exiisset, et vos illos, ut interessent electioni faciendae vobiscum, curassetis sollicite revocare, quoniam ad electionem faciendam accedere noluerunt, alienos se fecisse videntur, propter quod electioni a vobis iuxta formam mandati apostolici concorditer celebratae de iure non posse contradicere videbantur, praesertim quum idem archidiaconus postea requisitus responderit, quod in praesentia nostra vellet suum ei praebere consensum. Et ideo quum secundum statuta concilii Lateranensis appellatione remota semper id debeat praevalere, quod a pluribus et sanioribus fuerit ordinatum, nisi forte a paucioribus et inferioribus aliquid rationabile obiectum fuerit et ostensum, a vobis celebrata electio, tanquam a maiori et saniori parte, non obstante contradictione vel appellatione paucorum, debebat et poterat rationabiliter confirmari, quum id, quod obiectum exstitit et ostensum, rationibus praemissis appareat rationabile non fuisse. His igitur et aliis allegatis, quanquam contra personam illius, quem elegistis, nihil unquam dictum fuerit vel obiectum, quia tamen iuxta verbum Apostoli, dicentis: "Nemini cito manum imponas," debemus attendere diligenter ad ea, quae circa personam inquirenda fuerant, duximus ex officio nostro, sicut decuit, procedendum. Et quidem, quum tria sint in persona electi praecipue inquirenda, videlicet aetas legitima, morum honestas, et literatura sufficiens, licet de honestate morum, tanquam ei, qui nobiscum est aliquamdiu laudabiliter conversatus, possimus ipsi laudabile testimonium perhibere, Illius quoque literaturae, licet non eminentis, tamen convenientis electus exsistit, ut pro defectu scientiae, sicut plenius intelleximus ab his, qui eum melius cognoverunt, ab electione non deberet excludi. De legitima tamen aetate scire plene non potuimus veritatem, de qua nec vos, ut accepimus, aliquid cogitastis, quia, quum a multis, cuius aetatis exsisteret, curaverimus indagare, a nemine unquam audivimus, quod annum aetatis tricesimum attigisset. Quum autem secundum praedicti statuta concilii nullus debeat in episcopum eligi, qui tricesimum aetatis non egerit annum, licet senectus venerabilis sit non diuturna, nec annorum numero computata, sed cani hominis sint sensus eius, et aetas senectutis vita immaculata, quia tamen post illa tria, quae Salomon asserit difficilia, quartum quasi reputet impossibile, viam videlicet viri in adolescentia sua, tanquam investigari non possit: Nos ecclesiae pariter et personae providere volentes, et tam rationes quam canones observare, habito super hoc cum fratribus nostris diligenti tractatu, quia propositum vestrum providum intelleximus, et ideo propter urgentem necessitatem et evidentem utilitatem ecclesiae Capuanae, quam in hac parte potius approbamus, volumus ipsum firmiter perdurare, praefatum subdiaconum nostrum de communi fratrum nostrorum consensu vobis in procuratorem concedimus, liberam administrationem ei tam in temporalibus quam in spiritualibus committentes. Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: A person of illegitimate birth can be postulated but cannot be elected; and the electors incur the penalties of the Lateran Council unless they prove that they elected him in ignorance.

The same to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

It formerly became known to us through your letters, those of certain of your suffragans, and those of our beloved sons the prior and convent of the church of Worcester that, when the church of Worcester was deprived of a pastor, the said prior and convent unanimously elected as bishop our beloved son Master M., Archdeacon of York. When his election was presented to you, you deferred confirmation until the arrival of the man himself, who had been elected while absent and unaware.

At length, when he heard what had been done, he devoutly approached your presence and, contrary to the expectation of everyone—who believed that nothing obstructed the immediate confirmation of the concordant and canonical election—showed you by spontaneous and secret confession that his conscience was somewhat wounded by his birth. He declared that he was unwilling in any way to be promoted to the summit of so great a dignity apart from the indulgence of the Apostolic See, even if he found the person promoting him benign and accommodating.

You, as a provident and discreet man, having understood his conscience, were unwilling to proceed immediately to confirmation. Instead, intimating the sequence of events to us through your letters, through them you commended the merits and conscience of the same master. The chapter of that church explained through its letters sent to us that it did not know why confirmation of the election had been delayed by you, and petitioned that his election be confirmed by the Apostolic See, presenting to us the decree of election strengthened by the subscriptions of those electing.

Certain of your suffragans, however, asserted more explicitly in their letters what you appeared to intimate somewhat obscurely in yours: that he was the son of a certain knight and was begotten by him of a certain freeborn and unmarried woman. Meanwhile, that master unexpectedly approached our presence and explained what had been intimated to us concerning his birth through the letters of certain of your suffragans. He added that his father had never had a wife, but had snatched away, as if furtively, the flower of his mother's virginity, and that she did not contract marriage within four years after his birth.

We therefore, after diligent deliberation concerning this with our brothers and rereading the canons, found certain canons which forbid those not lawfully begotten to be promoted to the pastoral office, perhaps deriving their rationale from the divine law through which the spurious and mamzeres are prohibited from entering the church of God down to the tenth generation. We also found others which do not prohibit persons of whatever birth from being promoted to sacred orders, provided that their merits support them, asserting that the fault of parents is not to be imputed to the children.

To prove this they adduce that our Lord Jesus Christ wished to be born not only from foreigners but also from adulterous unions, he who is a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek. They also appear to rely upon divine scripture, in which it is said: "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, and the father shall not bear the iniquity of the son." Through this the ancient proverb which was customarily spoken among the children of Israel appears to be removed: "The fathers ate a sour grape, and the teeth of the children are set on edge."

Certain persons, however, recalling discordant texts to concord, appeared in some manner to quiet the conflict of the aforesaid canons. They said that persons born illegitimately, if they have lived religiously either in monasteries or among canons, are by no means to be removed from sacred ministries. Among persons born illegitimately, certain writers assert that only those who imitate their father's incontinence are to be prohibited from sacred offices. They too appear to rely upon the authority of divine law, in which it is said: "I am a jealous God, visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation among those who hate me [without cause]," as though he said, "among those who imitate their father's hatred toward me."

But a canon of the Lateran Council issued in a general synod by Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, agreeing with the first canons, not only forbids such persons to be promoted as bishops, but also imposes a penalty upon those electing such a person—indeed, it asserts that they incur the same penalty by the fact itself, so that in this respect it appears to be a canon imposing a latae sententiae penalty. Its tenor is as follows: "Lest, namely, what was done concerning certain persons because of the necessities of the time be drawn by posterity into an example, let no one be elected bishop unless he was born of a legitimate marriage"; and near the end it adds: "Clerics, indeed, if they elect anyone contrary to this form, should know themselves then deprived of the power of electing and suspended from ecclesiastical benefices for three years."

The aforesaid canon was issued not by one who did not know the ancient canons, but [by] one who fully knew the canonical sanctions; it was issued in a council of many jurists and strengthened by the approval of that council itself. It appears to have closed every approach to promotion as bishops to those born outside lawful marriage, since it also prohibits from being drawn into a precedent what it intimates had been done in earlier times because of necessity, although nothing more than necessity may induce one dispensing to grant a dispensation.

Moreover, it intimates that the election of such persons is null, since it establishes as a penalty of the electors that they should know themselves then deprived of the power of electing. This would mean nothing if an election did not then have to be held; but that could not occur while the earlier election or even nomination continued in force. From this it is evident that an election of this kind is invalidated by the canon itself.

Although the canon of the Lateran Council issued by Alexander our predecessor so pursues those born illegitimately that it intimates their election is null, nevertheless our faculty of dispensing was not taken away through it. For this was not the intention of the one prohibiting, who could generate no prejudice in this matter against his successors, who after him would exercise an equal—indeed the same—power, since an equal has no authority over an equal. Rather, his intention was only that, because certain persons extended grace into license from the fact that something had once been done by dispensation because of the necessity of the time, took an example from it, believed that they could lawfully elect such persons, and elected such persons indiscriminately, [although] he prohibited such things from being done. Hence he inflicted a grave penalty upon the electors.

We nevertheless deliberated with our brothers whether, in such a case and with such a person, we ought mercifully to dispense or rather preserve the rigor of the law. For we found that Pope Urban of good memory, our predecessor, dispensed in a much more difficult case with the Bishop-elect of Le Mans, who was the son of a priest, and with the Bishop of León, who after his consecration humbly and spontaneously confessed that he had been born of an illegitimate mother whom his father had known while his own wife was living. But Urban prohibited this from being drawn thereafter into a precedent as though it were a rule.

It appeared that, since dispensation had for some time been granted to persons born illegitimately and perhaps would be granted in the future for a definite cause, in this cause dispensation ought the more readily to be granted to the person who had less imperfection and more perfection. Many things appeared to induce dispensation in this case: knowledge of letters, honorable morals, virtue of life, and the reputation of the person, all approved in many ways by certain even of our brothers who had known him in the schools.

Also contributing not a little to this were the concordant election of the chapter of Worcester, the petition of the people, the assent of the prince, your wish, the supporting votes of the suffragans, and the humble devotion of the one confessing, who spontaneously and humbly preferred to confess his guilt rather than ascend the pastoral throne with a wounded conscience.

After diligent deliberation concerning this with our brothers, however, we understood that the chapter of Worcester had not humbly postulated the same master but rather improvidently elected him, although, in order to obtain the benefit of dispensation, it should have proceeded not through a prohibited election but through a permitted postulation. We therefore declare the election quashed by authority of the aforesaid canon to be invalid and void. We spare the chapter of Worcester not a little, since we neither inflict upon them the penalty expressed in the aforesaid canon nor compel them to prove the ignorance which they allege.

Although after a quashing of this kind many persons humbly petitioned us that, for the aforesaid reasons, we deign mercifully to dispense with him—since no case more apt for dispensing in such matters could present itself—nevertheless, because we wish to reserve to the aforesaid chapter the free faculty of electing or postulating, we have not considered that a petition of this kind should be admitted at present. It was not made in the name of the chapter, since the chapter's messengers were sent not to postulate a dispensation but to seek confirmation. We decree invalid and void whatever shall have been attempted concerning the ordering of that episcopate before receipt of our letters.

We therefore will and command that you cause it to be more strictly prohibited on our behalf throughout the province of Canterbury that what is known to have been done irregularly concerning many persons in that province—which we do not say without shame—shall hereafter in no way be attempted contrary to the form prescribed. But if the chapter of Worcester considers that the same master should be postulated because of the prerogative of his merits, let it take care to present his postulation before the Apostolic See.

Illegitimus potest postulari, non autem eligi, et electores, nisi probaverint, illum ignoranter elegisse, incidunt in poenas Lateranensis concilii.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.

Innotuit nobis olim tam per tuas literas, quam quorundam suffraganeorum tuorum et dilectorum filiorum prioris et conventus Wigorniensis ecclesiae, quod, Vigoriensi ecclesia destituta pastore, dicti prior et conventus eiusdem dilectum filium magistrum M. archidiaconum Eboracensem in episcopum unanimiter elegerunt, cuius, quum eius tibi fuisset electio praesentata, confirmationem usque in adventum ipsius, qui absens eligebatur et inscius, distulisti; qui tandem, quod factum fuerat audito, ad praesentiam tuam devotus accessit, et praeter opinionem omnium, qui nihil obstare credebant, quin statim concors et canonica deberet electio confirmari, spontanea tibi et secreta confessione monstravit, quod conscientia eius aliquantisper ex natalibus esset laesa, et, quod ad tantae dignitatis apicem praeter indulgentiam sedis apostolicae nollet aliquatenus promoveri, proposuit, etiamsi promoventem benignum et facilem inveniret. Tu autem, sicut vir providus et discretus, intellecta conscientia eius, noluisti protinus ad confirmationem procedere, sed nobis rei seriem per tuas insinuans literas, et per eas ipsius magistri merita et conscientiam commendasti; capitulum autem eiusdem ecclesiae, quare per te fuisset electionis confirmatio protelata, se ignorare, per literas suas nobis transmissas exposuit, cuius electionem capitulum petiit per sedem apostolicam confirmari, praesentato nobis electionis decreto subscriptionibus eligentium roborato. Quidam autem suffraganeorum tuorum, quod per tuas literas videbaris obscure aliquantulum innuisse, per suas literas in aliquibus asseruerunt, eum fuisse filium cuiusdam militis, et ab eo ex quadam ingenua et non coniugata susceptum. Interim vero idem quoque magister ex insperato ad praesentiam nostram accessit, et quod nobis de nativitate ipsius per literas aliquorum suffraganeorum tuorum fuerat intimatum exposuit, et adiecit, quod nunquam pater eius habuerat uxorem, sed matris eius virginitatis florem praeripuit quasi furtim, et ipsa infra quadriennium a nativitate ipsius matrimonium non contraxit. Nos ergo cum fratribus nostris habito super hoc diligenti tractatu, relectis canonibus, quosdam invenimus, qui non legitime genitos promoveri vetant ad officium pastorale, causam forte trahentes ex lege divina, per quam spurii et manzeres usque in decimam generationem in ecclesiam Dei prohibentur intrare. Invenimus etiam alios, qui undecunque genitos non prohibent ad sacros ordines promoveri, dummodo sibi merita suffragentur, asserentes, quod culpa parentum non est filiis imputanda. Et ad hoc probandum inducunt, quod Dominus noster Iesus Christus non tantum ex alienigenis, sed etiam ex adulterinis voluit commixtionibus nasci, qui est sacerdos in aeternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech. Hi etiam scripturae divinae videntur inniti, qua dicitur; "Filius non portabit iniquitatem patris, et pater non portabit iniquitatem filii," per quam antiquum videtur proverbium removeri, quod inter filios Israel dici solebat: "Patres comederunt uvam acerbam, et dentes filiorum obstupescunt." Quidam vero ad concordiam discordantia revocantes, repugnantiam canonum praedictorum sopire quodammodo videbantur, dicentes, quod illegitime geniti si religiose fuerint aut in coenobiis, aut in canonicis conversati, a sacris ministeriis minime revocentur, et inter illegitime genitos quidam asserunt eos solos a sacris officiis prohibendos, qui paternam incontinentiam imitantur. Et hi quoque videntur auctoritate divinae legis inniti, qua dicitur: "Ego sum Deus zelotes visitans peccata patrum in filios usque in tertiam et quartam progeniem in iis, qui oderunt me [gratis]," quasi dicat, in his, qui circa me paternum odium imitantur. Verum canon concilii Lateranensis a bonae memoriae Alexandro Papa praedecessore nostro editus in synodo generali, primis concordans canonibus non solum tales vetat in episcopos promoveri, verum etiam eligentibus talem personam poenam infligit, immo ipso facto eandem poenam asserit incurrisse, ut secundum hoc canon latae sententiae esse videatur, cuius tenor talis est: "Ne videlicet, quod de quibusdam pro necessitatibus temporis factum est, in exemplum trahatur a posteris, nullus in episcopum eligatur, nisi qui de legitimo matrimonio sit natus," circa finem subiungens: "Clerici sane si contra formam istam quemquam elegerint, et eligendi tunc potestate privatos, et ab ecclesiasticis beneficiis triennio se noverint esse suspensos." Sane praedictus canon, qui non per eum, qui canones non nosset antiquos, sed [per] illum, qui plene noverat canonicas sanctiones, in concilio multorum iurisperitorum est editus et ipsius approbatione concilii roboratus, natis de non legitimo matrimonio omnem videtur in episcopos promovendi aditum praeclusisse, quum id etiam ad consequentiam trahi prohibeat, quod pro necessitate innuit prioribus temporibus esse factum, licet nihil amplius quam necessitas dispensantem ad dispensationem inducat. Praeterea electionem talium innuit nullam esse, dum in poenam statuit electorum, ut tunc eligendi potestate se noverint privatos, quod nihil esset, si tunc non occurreret electio facienda; quod fieri non posset, priori electione seu etiam nominatione durante. Ex quo patet, electionem huiusmodi per ipsum canonem irritatam. Quamvis autem canon Lateranensis concilii, ab Alexandro praedecessore nostro editus, non legitime genitos adeo persequatur, quod electionem talium innuit nullam esse, nobis tamen per eum adempta non fuit dispensandi facultas, quum ea non fuerit prohibentis intentio, qui successoribus suis nullum potuit in hac parte praeiudicium generare, pari post eum, immo eadem potestate functuris, quum non habeat imperium par in parem, sed ea tantum fuerit mens ipsius, ut, quia ex eo, quod aliquando ex dispensatione pro necessitate temporis factum fuerat, quidam gratiam in licentiam extendentes, et inde sumentes exemplum, se licite credebant eligere tales, et indifferenter huiusmodi eligebant, [quum] talia fieri prohiberet. Unde gravem electoribus poenam inflixit. Deliberavimus tamen cum fratribus nostris, utrum in tali casu et cum tali persona deberemus misericorditer dispensare, vel iuris potius servare rigorem. Invenimus enim, a bonae memoriae Urbano Papa praedecessore nostro in casu multo difficiliori cum Cenomanensi dispensatum electo, qui fuerat filius sacerdotis, et Legionensi episcopo, qui post consecrationem suam humiliter fuerat et sponte confessus, quod fuisset ex matre non legitima procreatus, quam pater, vivente uxore propria, cognovisset. Sed idem Urbanus prohibuit, ne id quasi pro regula in poslterum ad consequentiam traheretur. Videbatur enim, quod, quum cum illegitime natis fuisset aliquamdiu dispensatum, et ex certa causa forsitan in posterum dispensandum, in hac causa celerius deberet dispensatio indulgeri, illi personae videlicet, quae minus imperfectionis, plus perfectionis habebat. Multa enim in hoc casu dispensationem inducere videbantur, literarum scientia, morum honestas, vitae virtus, et fama personae, multipliciter a quibusdam etiam ex fratribus nostris, qui eum in scholis cognoverant, approbatae. Faciebant etiam ad id non modicum concors capituli Vigoriensis electio, petitio populi, assensus principis, votum tuum, suffraganeorum suffragia, et humilis devotio confitentis, qui sponte ac humiliter suum maluit confiteri reatum, quam laesa conscientia thronum conscendere pastoralem. Habito ergo super hoc cum fratribus nostris diligenti tractatu, intelligentes, Vigoriense capitulum eundem magistrum non humiliter postulasse, sed improvide potius elegisse, quum ad obtinendum dispensationis beneficium procedendum fuisset, non per electionem inhibitam, sed per postulationem permissam, electionem ipsam praedicti canonis auctoritate cassatam denunciamus irritam et inanem, parcentes non modicum Vigoriensi capitulo, quod eis nec poenam infligimus expressam in canone supradicto, nec probare cogimus ignorantiam, quam allegant. Et quamvis post cassationem huiusmodi a nobis a multis fuerit humiliter supplicatum, ut propter causas praedictas dignaremur cum eo misericorditer dispensare, quum ad dispensandum in talibus nullus se casus habilior posset afferre, quia tamen praedicto capitulo liberam facultatem eligendi vel postulandi volumus reservare, supplicationem huiusmodi, quae nomine capituli non fiebat, quum non ad postulandam dispensationem, sed ad petendam confirmationem ipsius capituli fuerint nuncii destinati, ad praesens non duximus admittendam, decernentes irritum et inane quicquid super ordinatione ipsius episcopatus ante susceptionem literarum nostrarum fuerit attentatum. Volumus igitur et mandamus, quatenus per Cantuariensem provinciam ex parte nostra facias districtius inhiberi, ne, quod de multis in eadem provincia, quod sine pudore non dicimus, inordinate noscitur esse factum, de cetero contra formam praescriptam nullatenus attentetur. Quod si Vigoriense capitulum eundem magistrum propter praerogativam meritorum ipsius duxerit postulandum, postulationem ipsius apud sedem apostolicam praesentare procuret.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: The electors cannot enter into a compromise to the prejudice of the person elected; but, if he has consented to his election or wishes to consent, notwithstanding an arbitral award rendered to the contrary, he is to be confirmed if no other canonical impediment obstructs him, even though he is not from the body of that church, whatever the cause for which an appeal was made by the greater part. And in this last point this text is very notable.

The same to the Archbishop of Genoa and the Bishops of Piacenza and Bobbio.

When a dispute had arisen among our beloved sons the canons of Savona concerning the election of a bishop, the votes of those electing being divided in different directions, our beloved sons S., subdeacon of Savona, and I., proctor of the chapter, approached the Apostolic See. We assigned to them as auditors our venerable brother I., Bishop of Albano, and our beloved son A., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Martin.

The aforesaid proctor proposed that, when each person was asked, all by common assent agreed upon the Provost of Asti, with the exception of the aforesaid subdeacon; and, while he persisted in his obstinacy, the assent of the others was thereafter reduced to a public instrument. But on behalf of the other party it was proposed to the contrary that, since there were seven canons of Savona, they withdrew into chapter to deliberate concerning the future election of a bishop, where different persons were nominated by different men. But when the archdeacon, archpriest, and provost nominated the said Provost of Asti, the aforesaid S. strongly opposed it, asserting that he suffered from epilepsy, for which on another occasion he had been rejected as unsuitable, and that there ought to be no passage to another church until a suitable person was found in the church of Savona.

(And below:) But the Provost of Savona, disregarding the appeals that had been interposed, elected the Provost of Asti, the opposing party objecting that an election of this kind was not valid because of the appeals interposed and also other impediments.

(And below:) But the same provost and all the others also left the city, except for the aforesaid priest and subdeacon, and, without their knowledge, carried the seal with them. Approaching the Archbishop of Milan, they petitioned that the election they had made be confirmed, although it had been made by the provost alone and after an appeal. But because the improper course of the election had previously become known to the archbishop, he did not assent to their petition but sent one of his brothers to Savona to investigate the course of the election. When witnesses were produced before him, however, and it was requested that they should make equal provision for that messenger, the opposing party invoked the aforesaid archbishop, while the other invoked the Apostolic See.

But when at the messenger's command the parties had gone to Milan to seek apostoli—letters permitting prosecution of the appeal—they were diligently admonished by the archbishop to return to peace. The provost steadfastly asserted that he was willing to abide by his arbitration if the opposing party would do the same, which, after taking counsel, the aforesaid subdeacon promised. After this they returned to their own places and were then summoned again by the archbishop. The archpriest, furnished on behalf of the other party with letters of ratification, as he said, and S. himself on his own behalf took care to submit the matter by compromise to the Archbishop of Milan. He gave them as bishop Master G., described in the source as a Modicensis canon, and also confirmed him.

They publicly announced him as elected in the church of Savona, in the presence of the clergy and people of the city and with the customary solemnities employed. But, when the provost appealed to the Apostolic See, the archbishop deferred imposing the hands of consecration upon him.

(And below:) After these and similar matters had therefore been debated at length before the aforesaid auditors, who reported them to us sufficiently and faithfully, because full proof concerning them could not be made to us, we considered that the cause itself should be committed to your examination.

We therefore command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if it is established that the election of the aforesaid provost was celebrated and also subscribed by the greater and sounder part of the chapter, and if the said provost has consented to that election—so that through the mutual assent of the electors and the elected a bond as if of marriage has been spiritually contracted—unless it is sufficiently shown that the same provost suffers from epilepsy, concerning which it is said that an appeal was made against him, you are, relying upon our authority, to confirm his election, removing the impediment of every contradiction and appeal. The objection of the appeal is not to prevent this if perhaps an appeal is alleged to have been interposed for any of the other causes mentioned above, since from what was alleged before us we judge those appeals frivolous for a definite reason. Nor is what is alleged to have been done afterward by the aforesaid archbishop to prevent it, even if the parties submitted the matter by compromise to him, since the electors could not thus withdraw from such an election.

But if his electors did not submit the matter by compromise to the aforesaid archbishop, even if the said provost has not yet consented to the election made of him, nevertheless, if he wishes to consent and provided that he is free from the malady alleged, you are likewise to confirm his election.

> Non possunt electores in praeiudicium electi compromittere; sed, si consenserit electioni suae vel consentire velit, non obstante laudo in contrarium lato, est confirmandus, si aliud canonicum sibi non obsistat, licet non sit de gremio illius ecclesiae, quamcunque ob causam a maiori parte fuerit appellatum. Et in hoc ultimo est iste textus multum notabilis.

> Quum inter dilectos filios canonicos Saonenses super electione pontificis quaestio verteretur, eligentium votis in diversa divisis, ad sedem apostolicam dilecti filii S. subdiaconus Saonensis et I. procurator capituli accesserunt, quibus venerabilem fratrem nostrum I. Albanensem episcopum et dilectum filium nostrum A. tit. S. Martini presbyterum cardinalem dedimus auditores. Proposuit autem procurator praedictus, quod singuli requisiti communi assensu in Hastensem praepositum, excepto praedicto subdiacono, convenerunt, quo in sua duritia permanente, aliorum consensus redactus fuit in scriptum publicum consequenter. Ceterum pro parte altera fuit propositum ex adverso, quod, quum septem essent canonici Saonenses, in capitulum se receperunt, de futura electione pontificis tractaturi, ubi diversi a diversis nominati fuere. Sed archidiacono, archipresbytero et praeposito dictum Hastensem praepositum nominantibus, fuit a praefato S. fortiter obviatum, asserente, ipsum morbo epileptico laborare, pro quo alia vice tanquam inhabilis fuerat recusatus; nec ad aliam ecclesiam debere fieri transitum, donec reperiretur idoneus in ecclesia Saonensi. (Et infra:) Sed praepositus Saonensis spretis appellationibus interpositis praepositum Hastensem elegit, obiiciente parte adversa, quod huiusmodi electio propter appellationes interpositas et alia etiam obstacula non teneret. (Et infra:) Sed et civitatem idem praepositus et alii omnes egressi, exceptis presbytero et subdiacono saepedictis, secum sigillum ignorantibus eis detulerunt, et ad Mediolanensem archiepiscopum accedentes petierunt electionem, quam fecerant, confirmari, licet a solo praeposito, et post appellationem facta fuisset. Sed quoniam indebitus electionis processus archiepiscopo antea innotuerat, petitioni eorum non annuens, quendam de fratribus suis ad investigandum electionis processum Saonam direxit. Sed quum testes producerentur coram eo, et postularetur, ut nuncium pariter ipsum procurarent, pars adversa iam dictum archiepiscopum, altera vero sedem apostolicam invocavit. Sed quum ad mandatum nuncii partes Mediolanum ivissent apostolus petiturae, ab archiepiscopo, ut ad pacem redirent, fuerunt monitae diligenter, cuius arbitrio praepositus se velle stare constanter asseruit, si hoc et ipsum pars faceret adversa, quod deliberato consilio praefatus subdiaconus repromisit. Post haec reversi ad propria, et demum ab archiepiscopo evocati, archipresbyter pro parte altera de rato, ut dicebat, literis praemunitus, ipse vero S. pro parte sua in Mediolanensem archiepiscopum compromittere curaverunt, qui magistrum G. Modicensem canonicum eis dedit in episcopum, et etiam confirmavit, quem in Saonensi ecclesia, praesente clero et populo civitatis, adhibitis solennitatibus consuetis, electum publice nunciarunt, cui archiepiscopus, praeposito sedem apostolicam provocante, consecrationis manus distulit impertiri. (Et infra:) Postquam igitur coram praefatis auditoribus fuit super his et similibus diutius disputatum, qui nobis ea sufficienter ac fideliter retulerunt, quoniam de ipsis nobis non potuit fieri plena fides, causam ipsam vestro duximus examini committendam, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, quum constet, electionem de praeposito memorato a maiori et saniori parte capituli celebratam etiam et subscriptam, si dictus praepositus eidem electioni consenserit, ut per mutuum consensum eligentium et electi quasi coniugale vinculum spiritualiter sit contractum, nisi sufficienter sit ostensum, eundem praepositum morbo epileptico laborare, super quo contra ipsum dicitur appellatum, vos, non obstante appellationis obiectu, si qua forsan ex aliis causis superius memoratis proponitur interposita, quum ex iis, quae coram nobis allegata fuerunt, eas appellationes certa ratione frivolas reputemus, electionem nostra freti auctoritate, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo, confirmetis ipsius, non obstante, quod post talem electionem a praefato archiepiscopo proponitur esse factum, etiamsi a partibus in eum fuerit compromissum, quum electores a tali electione sic resilire nequiverint. Quod si electores illius non compromiserint in archiepiscopum memoratum, etiamsi dictus praepositus nondum electioni de se factae consenserit, eo tamen consentire volente, dummodo a morbo sit immunis obiecto, vos electionem ipsius nihilominus confirmetis.

Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: A person elected by the greater and sounder part of the chapter, if he is and was suitable at the time of the election, will be confirmed. But if he was unworthy in orders, knowledge, or age and was knowingly elected, the person elected by the lesser part, if worthy, will be confirmed.

The same to the Bishop of Palestrina, legate of the Apostolic See.

Some time ago, when a dispute was brought to our hearing because, while the provostship of the church of Cologne was vacant, those electing had divided themselves into two bodies of voters, we considered that the cause should be committed to judges. After hearing what was proposed on each side, if this accorded with the will of the parties, they were to promulgate a definitive sentence; otherwise, they were to remit the cause, sufficiently instructed, to our hearing. They were to establish for the parties a suitable term at which they should approach the Apostolic See in person or through suitable representatives to receive sentence.

Wishing faithfully to execute the apostolic mandate, they summoned the parties before them, received the witnesses produced on each side, examined the consciences of those electing, and heard the allegations on both sides. And because the Provost of Saint George finally asserted that he was unwilling to abide by their sentence, they sent the proceedings to the Apostolic See, fixing for the parties the then approaching feast of Saint Michael as the term for coming to the Apostolic See, [which the Provost of the Holy Apostles, alleging that so prolonged a term had caused loss to the church, shortened to the feast of Saint Servatius.]

When the messengers of the Provost of the Holy Apostles approached our presence at the appointed term, the Provost of Saint George neither came nor sent a suitable representative for himself. [But our venerable brother the Archbishop of Cologne excused his absence, asserting that, after undertaking the journey to come to the Apostolic See, he had been captured and was being detained by the nobleman W., Count of Jülich. Lest we appear to dispose of anything to his prejudice, however, we commanded through our beloved son the Provost of Saint Gereon and B., his fellow canon, that both parties be cited under a peremptory order for the feast of the Lord's Resurrection. As we learned from their letters, they cited the Provost of the Holy Apostles orally, and the Provost of Saint George both by letters and messengers; after receiving the citation, the latter wrote that he would approach the Apostolic See. But since, though awaited both at the term and beyond it for as many as eight weeks, he neither came nor sent a suitable representative, we adjudged him contumacious and condemned him to the opposing party's lawful expenses.]

Having viewed the attestations and diligently inspected the judges' acts, therefore, we found that authority favored the Provost of the Holy Apostles, but the number of electors favored the Provost of Saint George, since the first had been elected by fourteen persons—both dignitaries and canons—who preceded the others in dignity, age, and length of service, while the second had been elected by twenty-four.

Less knowledge, deficiency of age, and the fact that he had been constituted only in minor orders were objected against the Provost of Saint George. Hence, since an archdeaconry was annexed to that provostship, the dignity was not yet to be conferred upon him, by reason of which he was compelled to be promoted to the diaconate within the period fixed by the canons. On behalf of the other it was proposed that he was a man commendable in age, knowledge, and morals. His electors confessed that, led by a better zeal, they had therefore agreed upon him. Not only his own electors but also certain electors of the other asserted that he was more prudent, especially in spiritual matters, although they declared that the other, because of his power, was more useful, particularly in temporal affairs.

But because the allegations proposed before those judges on behalf of the same Provost of Saint George were not presented to us, for which reason we could not know for ourselves what he had objected or what he had answered to the objections, and thus the remitted cause had not been sufficiently instructed, [then] we did not consider that we should proceed to a definitive sentence. Instead, we committed the decision of the cause itself to the judges under this form: if it either was notorious or was established through the matters already stated that, at the time of the election, the Provost of Saint George suffered a defect in orders, knowledge, or age that, according to the canonical sanctions, prevented him from being promoted to such an office, then, removing the impediment of appeal and notwithstanding his bodily absence, they were to impose silence upon him, adjudge the same provostship to the Provost of the Holy Apostles, and, putting him into bodily possession, cause him to enjoy peaceful possession.

Otherwise, since not only more persons but nearly two parts had agreed upon him, and, impediments ceasing, it appeared that they had elected him with good zeal, they were, after quashing the election of the Provost of the Holy Apostles and removing appeal, to confirm his election, cause the aforesaid provostship to be assigned to him, and cause answer to be made to him thereafter as provost, [restraining objectors, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the fifth day before the Ides of April, 1203.]

> Electus a maiori et saniori parte capituli, si est et erat idoneus tempore electionis, confirmabitur; si autem erat indignus in ordinibus, scientia vel aetate, et fuit scienter electus, electus a minori parte, si est dignus, confirmabitur.

Ipsi vero, mandatum apostolicum fideliter exsequi cupientes, partes ad suam praesentiam convocarunt, receperunt testes hinc inde productos, examinaverunt eligentium conscientias, audiverunt allegationes utrinque. Et quoniam praepositus sancti Georgii eorum sententiae se tandem asseruit nolle stare, processum ad sedem apostolicam destinarunt, partibus festum beati Michaelis tunc proximo venturum veniendi ad sedem apostolicam terminum praefigentes, [quem praepositus SS. Verum, quum nec ad terminum, nec ultra terminum, etiam per VIII. hebdomades exspectatus venerit, vel miserit idoneum responsalem, eum reputavimus contumacem, eundem in expensas legitimas parti condemnantes adversae.] Visis attestationibus et Gestis igitur iudicum diligenter inspectis, invenimus, quod pro praeposito sanctorum Apostolorum auctoritas, pro praeposito vero sancti Georgii numerus eligentium faciebat, quum primus a quatuordecim, tum personis, tum canonicis, qui alios dignitate, aetate et tempore praecedebant, secundus vero a viginti quatuor fuisset electus. Obiiciebatur autem praeposito S. Georgii minor scientia, defectus aetatis, et quod in minoribus erat ordinibus constitutus. Unde quum praepositurae illi esset archidiaconatus annexus, nondum erat ei dignitas conferenda, ratione cuius cogebatur infra praefixum a canonibus spatium in diaconum promoveri. Chapter XXIII Latin source headnote: Those who receive a man postulated to a church as instituted or as administrator before the postulation has been admitted by the superior are deprived of the power of electing, and the power of electing devolves upon the others, although they are fewer. And if all are deprived, in cathedral churches it devolves upon the Pope. Say this according to the more principal understanding, which agrees more closely with the text.

The same to the canons of Mainz.

After C. of good memory, Archbishop of Mainz and Bishop of Sabina, entered upon the way of all flesh, your votes divided in different directions. Some petitioned for the Bishop of Worms, while others elected as their pastor our venerable brother, now your archbishop but then Provost of Saint Peter of Mainz. Our beloved son Master P., scholasticus of Mainz, approached the Apostolic See as proctor, together with certain others, for those who postulated the Bishop of Worms; for the others, our beloved sons E. and R., [Mainz] clerics, came, one of whom was appointed proctor.

When the parties were therefore constituted in our presence and had been diligently and sufficiently heard in our consistory, by the counsel of our brothers we commanded our venerable brother the Bishop of Palestrina, legate of the Apostolic See, that, if it were established that the same bishop had received the church of Mainz with respect to temporal or spiritual matters or had administered temporal or spiritual affairs in it, as had been objected by the other side, he should, removing the impediment of every appeal, declare invalid the postulation made of him. By our favor he was to permit the same man to retain the church of Worms. For by the common law, because he presumed to transfer without our authority, he was to be despoiled of both, so that [also] he would lack that which he avariciously coveted and that which he proudly despised. But if he scorned to obey, the legate was by our authority to declare him deprived of both churches.

Then he was to inquire more diligently into the truth concerning the election of the archbishop himself. If the violence which he and his men feared were established to him, he was, notwithstanding that the archbishop's election had been proceeded with after an appeal was interposed to us, to confirm the election, provided that nothing in the canonical institutes obstructed it, removing the impediment of appeal. For the others, who did not consider that they should defer to the appeal interposed to us lest an election be proceeded with without him and his associates, could not use this exception against him, since he who commits an offense against the law invokes the law's aid in vain. Hence it did not seem that they could object that the same man had been elected by fewer persons, according to their assertion, since by contemning the appeal lawfully interposed to us and receiving the aforesaid bishop without our license, they had rendered themselves unworthy.

But if it were established that the aforesaid bishop had neither received the aforesaid church with respect to spiritual or temporal matters nor administered spiritual or temporal affairs in it, the same legate was to hear what was proposed on each side concerning his postulation and the archbishop's election, receive witnesses on both sides, and, after publication of their depositions, proceed as far as the point of definitive sentence. He was to send all the acts under his seal to our presence, fixing for the parties a suitable term at which they should present themselves before the apostolic sight to receive sentence.

Although the matters objected against the said Bishop of Worms and his supporters were notorious, the aforesaid legate nevertheless, for greater caution, received many eminent witnesses produced by the archbishop's party, who gave sworn depositions concerning the aforesaid matters. Hence, proceeding according to the tenor of our mandate, he quashed the postulation made of the Bishop of Worms and took care by apostolic authority to confirm the election of the aforesaid archbishop, although it had been celebrated by very few. He ordained him priest and finally consecrated him archbishop.

The archbishop himself, humbly approaching our presence, petitioned that we confer upon him the pallium, namely the insignia of the pontifical office, from the customary benevolence of the Apostolic See. But a certain simple messenger sent by his adversaries to the Apostolic See presented to us on their behalf open letters with a pendent seal. Through them the same canons signified that the aforesaid legate, corrupted by money, had rendered an unjust sentence. They added that the citizens of Mainz had likewise sworn that they would never have him as bishop and that all the clerics, with a few exceptions, favored their own elect.

When we began to deliberate concerning these matters with our brothers, two things appeared to obstruct the election of the same archbishop: namely, that he appeared to have been elected by very few and after an appeal interposed by himself. For, since the postulation of the Bishop of Worms had been quashed by reason of the preceding appeal, the archbishop's election ought also to have been quashed for the same cause.

But to the contrary, as was expressed above, those who had offended against the appeal could not allege that appeal against the same archbishop. It could also be said that, although the often-mentioned archbishop had been elected after the appeal, he nevertheless was not elected contrary to the form of the appeal, since he had appealed under this form: that the canons residing at Mainz should not proceed with the election without him and his associates. Nor is it harmful that it could be replied by the other side that neither ought he and his associates to have proceeded without them, because, by contemning the appeal interposed before us, they had rendered themselves unworthy and abused their right.

Hence, since it was established in the Lateran Council concerning those who elect certain prohibited persons that they should know themselves then deprived of the power of electing and suspended from ecclesiastical benefices for three years, when the others fell from the power of election as unworthy for a far greater offense, the right of electing remained only with the same man and his associates. Consequently, even if far fewer than did agree upon him had agreed upon him, it must nevertheless be understood that all those who were then able to elect elected the same man.

Against the legate's procedure, however, it appeared to count that he proceeded without citing the Bishop of Worms and his supporters. But according to the canonical sanctions, a notorious excess requires no examination; and in favor of those things done by a judge it is presumed that all were regularly celebrated. Moreover, that they were not cited could not easily be proved, because by the nature of things there is no direct proof of a negative fact. Although each of you could assert of himself that the citation did not reach him, nevertheless each would be a singular witness in his testimony.

They could also, had they wished, have sent a suitable proctor safely to the legate himself, just as [also] they had sent a messenger, as is proved from their letters directed to us. He safely approached the same legate and returned to his own place, since the legate himself was also prepared to provide security in every respect. Nor does it obstruct this that the same messenger is said to have appealed, since he renounced the appeal and the impediment of appeal had been removed in our commission, which each party had carried back. But it also did not appear who could object and prove anything against the legate's act, since not a sufficient proctor but a simple messenger had been sent to us against the aforesaid archbishop.

[Furthermore, even if such a person appeared, he should by no means be heard, since the archbishop's adversaries rendered themselves unworthy of a hearing before us through presumption, contempt, and blasphemy. It was presumption that, contrary to canonical form and without our authority, they presumed not only to elect but also to receive a man endowed with pastoral dignity and joined to another church by spiritual marriage. Contempt was added from the fact that, after their proctor reported our letters, in which it was expressly commanded that, if the Bishop of Worms had received the church of Mainz with respect to temporal or spiritual matters or had administered temporal or spiritual affairs in it, his postulation should be quashed, it did not come into doubt for them but rather was manifestly established that the man of Worms had at least received the temporalities and administered them. Nevertheless, they thereafter rashly obeyed him as their elect, as appears from their letters, in which they call him their elect and assert that they favor him by unanimous assent; and they assented to him, perpetrating spiritual adultery with him, since through the messenger last sent to us they also petitioned in public consistory that his election be confirmed. Blasphemy then followed in that, setting their mouth in heaven and defaming, so far as lay in them, our legate—who exercised our office in those regions and who, even before he was assumed to the pastoral office, had been a man of great religious life, inasmuch as he had first been an abbot in the Cistercian Order—they lied that he had been corrupted by money.]

We therefore, although because of judicial authority we presume in favor of those things done by the legate, nevertheless rely more upon the reason that the archbishop's adversaries, for the three aforesaid causes, rendered themselves unworthy to such an extent that they ought not to be heard against him. Hence, what had been done concerning him could not be impeded by them. Indeed, even if the electors of his party had likewise offended so that they rendered themselves unworthy, provision for the church of Mainz would on this occasion have devolved upon us. Consequently, without injury to the law, we could have placed the said archbishop over that church as its pastor, especially since he had been consecrated Bishop of Mainz by a legate of the Apostolic See.

Therefore, having held diligent deliberation with our brothers concerning these matters, by their counsel we hold ratified the quashing of the postulation made of the Bishop of Worms, confirming the election of the aforesaid archbishop. > Bonae memoriae C. Maguntinensi archiepiscopo, episcopo Sabinensi, viam universae carnis ingresso, quum vota vestra se in varia divisissent, et quibusdam petentibus Wormaciensem episcopum quibusdam vero venerabilem fratrem nostrum nunc archiepiscopum vestrum, tunc praepositum sancti Petri Maguntinensis, sibi eligentibus in pastorem, dilectus filius magister P. scholasticus Maguntinus cum quibusdam aliis pro illis, qui Warmatiensem episcopum postularunt, procurator ad apostolicam sedem accessit; pro aliis vero dilecti filii E. et R. clerici [Maguntini] venerunt, quorum alter institutus fuit procuratur. Partibus igitur in nostra praesentia constitutis, et eis in consistorio nostro diligenter et sufficienter auditis, de fratrum nostrorum consilio venerabili fratri nostro Praenestino episcopo, a sede apostolica legato, dedimus in mandatis, ut, si eundem episcopum quoad temporalia vel spiritualia recepisse constaret ecclesiam Maguntinensem, vel ministrasse in temporalibus aut spiritualibus in eadem, prout obiectum fuerat ex adverso, postulationem factam de ipso, sublato cuiuslibet appellationis obstaculo, nunciaret irritam, de gratia nostra concedens eidem, ut Warmatiensem sibi ecclesiam retineret. Nam de iure communi, quia praeter auctoritatem nostram transire praesumpsit, utraque erat spoliandus, ut [et] ea careret, quam concupivit avare, et ea, quam superbe despexit. Quod si parere contemneret, utraque ipsum ecclesia denunciaret auctoritate nostra privatum. Deinde inquireret de ipsius electione archiepiscopi diligentius veritatem, et, si ei de vi, quam ipse et sui metuebant, constaret, eo non obstante, quod post appellationem ad nos interpositam fuerat in ipsius electione processum, quum alii, qui appellationi ad nos interpositae, ne sine ipso ac sociis eius haberent in electione processum, non duxerint deferendum, uti contra ipsum hac exceptione non possent, quia frustra legis auxilium invocat qui committit in legem, unde nec ab eis posse obiici videbatur, quod idem esset a paucioribus secundum eorum assertionem electus, quum ipsi, appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam contemnentes, et praeter licentiam nostram recipientes episcopum memoratum, reddiderint se indignos, electionem archiepiscopi, dummodo nihil obstaret de canonicis institutis, sublato appellationis obstaculo confirmaret. Quod si nec recepisse praefatam ecclesiam quoad spiritualia vel temporalia, nec in spiritualibus vel temporalibus ministrasse constaret episcopum memoratum, idem legatus audiret quae super postulatione ipsius et electione archiepiscopi proponerentur hinc inde, testes utrinque reciperet, et eorum depositionibus publicatis usque ad calculum sententiae definitivae procedens, gesta omnia sub sigillo suo ad nostram praesentiam destinaret, statuens partibus terminum competentem, quo apostolico se conspectui praesentarent sententiam recepturi. Licet autem essent notoria, quae contra dictum Wormaciensem episcopum et eius fautores fuerant obiecta, praedictus tamen legatus ad maiorem cautelam multos et magnos testes recepit, ex ipsius archiepiscopi parte productos, qui super praedictis deposuere iurati. Unde ipse iuxta mandati nostri tenorem procedens, postulationem factam de Wormaciensi cassavit, et electionem archiepiscopi memorati, quamvis a paucissimis celebratam, curavit auctoritate apostolica confirmare, ipsumque ordinavit in presbyterum, et tandem in archiepiscopum consecravit. Ipse autem humiliter ad nostram praesentiam accedens, suppliciter postulavit, ut pallium sibi, videlicet insigne pontificalis officii, de consueta sedis apostolicae benevolentia conferremus. Verum quidam simplex nuncius ab adversariis eius ad sedem apostolicam destinatus ex eorum parte apertas nobis cum sigillo pendente literas praesentavit, per quas iidem significabant canonici, quod praedictus legatus corruptus pecunia iniquam sententiam protulisset. Addebant etiam, quod Maguntini cives pariter iuraverunt, quod eum nunquam haberent episcopum, et quod universi clerici, paucis exceptis, suo favebant electo. Quum autem super his coepissemus deliberare cum fratribus nostris, electioni eiusdem archiepiscopi duo videbantur obstare, videlicet quod a paucissimis, et post interpositam a se ipso appellationem videbatur electus. Nam quum postulatio Warmaciensis episcopi fuerit praecedentis appellationis ratione cassata, archiepiscopi electio debebat etiam ex eadem causa cassari. Sed econtra, sicut superius est expressum, qui in appellationem deliquerant, appellationem contra eundem archiepiscopum non poterant allegare. Poterat quoque dici, quod, etsi post appellationem, non tamen contra formam appellationis fuisset electus archiepiscopus saepe dictus, quum appellaverit in hac forma, ne canonici Maguntiae residentes sine ipso ac sociis suis haberent in electione processum. Nec nocet, quod posset ex altera parte replicari; quia nec ipse et socii sui debuerant procedere sine ipsis, quia ipsi appellationem apud nos interpositam contemnendo reddiderant se indignos, et abusi fuerant iure suo. Unde, quum in Lateranensi concilio de his, qui quasdam personas inhibitas eligunt, sit statutum, ut eligendi tunc potestate privatos, et ab ecclesiasticis beneficiis triennio noverint se suspensos, illis pro longe maiori delicto tanquam indignis ab electionis potestate cadentibus, penes eundem ac socios suos tantum ius remanserat eligendi. Quare, si multo pauciores in ipsum quam convenerint convenissent, intelligendum est tamen, quod omnes, qui tunc eligere poterant, elegerunt eundem. Contra legati vero processum hoc facere videbatur, quod non citatis Wormaciensi episcopo et eius fautoribus processisset. Porro iuxta canonicas sanctiones excessus notorius examinatione non indiget, et pro his, quae a iudice sunt acta, praesumitur, quod omnia rite fuerint celebrata; quamvis et, quod citati non fuerint, non posset de facili comprobari, quia negantis factum per rerum naturam nulla est directa probatio, quum, etsi quilibet de se posset asserere, quod ad eum citatio minime pervenisset, singuli tamen vestrum essent in suo testimonio singulares. Ad ipsum quoque legatum, si voluissent, secure potuissent procuratorem idoneum destinare, sicut [et] nuncium destinarant, quemadmodum ex ipsorum ad nos directis literis comprobatur, qui secure ad eundem legatum accessit, et ad propria remeavit, quum et ipse legatus paratus fuerit securitatem omnimodam providere. Nec obest, quod idem nuncius dicitur appellasse, quum appellationi renunciaverit, et in commissione nostra, quam pars reportavit utraque, obstaculum fuisset appellationis amotum. Sed nec apparebat etiam, qui contra factum legati quicquam posset obiicere ac probare, quum non procurator sufficiens, sed simplex ad nos contra praedictum archiepiscopum fuisset nuncius destinatus. [Praeterea si appareret etiam, non esset aliquatenus audiendus, quum adversarii eius per praesumptionem, contemptum et blasphemiam audientia nostra se reddiderint indignos. Praesumptio enim fuit, quod virum, pastorali praeditum dignitate, alteri ecclesiae spirituali coniugio copulatum, praeter auctoritatem nostram contra formam canonicam non solum eligere, sed recipere praesumpserunt. Contemptus accessit ex eo, quod postquam procurator eorum nostras literas reportavit, in quibus mandabatur expresse, quod si Warmaciensis episcopus Maguntinam ecclesiam quoad spiritualia vel temporalia recepisset, vel in spiritualibus vel temporalibus ministrasset in ea, ipsius postulatio cassaretur, et eisdem non veniret in dubium, sed potius manifeste constaret, quod Warmaciensis temporalia saltem receperat, et ministrarat in iis, ipsi postmodum tanquam electo suo, sicut ex literis ipsorum apparet, in quibus eum electum suum nominant et ei se asserunt unanimi consensu favere, temere paruerunt, et consenserunt in ipsum, spirituale cum eo adulterium perpetrantes, quum et per nuncium ad nos ultimo destinatum electionem ipsius in publico consistorio postulaverunt confirmari. Blasphemia vero in eo fuerat subsecuta, quod, ponentes in coelo os suum, legatum nostrum, qui fungebatur in illis partibus vice nostra, et qui prius etiam, quam assumeretur ad officium pastorale, multae religionis exstiterat, utpote qui in Cisterciensi ordine fuerat primo abbas, quantum in eis exstitit infamantes, eum corruptum fuisse pecunia sunt mentiti.] Nos igitur, etsi propter auctoritatem iudiciariam praesumamus pro his, quae acta sunt a legato, illi tamen plus innitimur rationi, quod adversarii archiepiscopi ex tribus causis praedictis se usque adeo reddiderunt indignos, quod contra eum non debebant audiri. Unde quod de ipso factum fuerat non poterat impediri per eos, quin etiam si electores eiusdem partis pariter deliquissent, ut se reddidissent indignos, ad nos devoluta fuisset hac vice ordinatio ecclesiae Maguntinensis, quare dictum archiepiscopum sine iuris iniuria potuissemus eidem ecclesiae praeficere in pastorem, praesertim quum per legatum apostolicae sedis fuisset in Maguntinum episcopum consecratus. Super his ergo cum fratribus nostris habito diligenti tractatu, de ipsorum consilio cassationem postulationis factae de Wormaciensi episcopo ratam habemus, electionem memorati archiepiscopi confirmantes. Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: For the elected person to obtain the office, it is sufficient to show that the elector was in quasi-possession at the time of the election, although he does not prove that ownership of the right of electing belonged to him.

The same to the clerics of Saint Agatha.

The complaint which our beloved son G., now cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Vitalis but then cardinal-deacon of Saint Mary in Aquiro, brought through the administrator of your church, of which the same cardinal is governor, against P., now priest but then deacon of the church of Saint Saviour called de Cornutis, before Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, concerning that church itself, Pope C., our predecessor, committed to us, while we were constituted in a lesser office, to be heard and examined.

The same administrator therefore sought the removal of the aforesaid P. from the church of Saint Saviour, which he had presumed to occupy to the prejudice of your church and the injury of the aforesaid cardinal, since the church of Saint Saviour belonged by full right to the church of Saint Agatha. He also sought the restoration to him of the pension of sixteen Pavia denarii owed to the church of Saint Agatha for the same church of Saint Saviour of the Baths, which had newly been withheld.

The aforesaid cleric P., however, answered that he had inflicted no injury upon the cardinal and had not received the said church to the prejudice of your church, since it belonged to it by no right and he owed no pension to it; rather, through election by the people, to whom the election belonged by ancient custom, he had been canonically instituted by the cardinal of Saint Susanna, to whose title the same church of Saint Saviour was subject in spiritual matters as a chapel.

When each party had many times produced witnesses to prove its assertion, we received and diligently examined them, and, when their depositions had been published, we heard disputation upon them. But before a controversy of this kind could reach an end, our aforesaid predecessor discharged the debt of the flesh. At length, however, each party urgently petitioned us that we deign to decide the cause itself.

We therefore, having diligently heard and more fully understood the arguments of each party and taken the counsel of our brothers, absolved the said P. from the claim of your administrator concerning the election and institution made of him in the church of Saint Saviour, and considered that silence should be imposed upon the aforesaid administrator concerning these matters. For it was clearly established to us through suitable witnesses that the people were in quasi-possession of presenting a cleric to that church when they elected the priest himself to it, and that the same church pertains by full right in spiritual matters to the title of Saint Susanna, saving the question concerning the right of patronage between your church and the people of the often-mentioned church of Saint Saviour.

But because it was clearly proved through witnesses greater than every exception that the pension of sixteen denarii of Pavia currency had for many years been paid annually to the clerics of your church for the church of Saint Saviour of the Baths but was newly withheld, we decree that your church is to be restored to the same state of receiving a pension of this kind from the church of Saint Saviour of the Baths. We condemn the aforesaid priest to payment of the pension withheld, saving the question of ownership between the aforesaid churches. [Given on the second day before the Nones of June, 1205.]

Praedictus vero P. clericus respondebat, quod ipse nullam iniuriam irrogaverat cardinali, nec in praeiudicium ecclesiae vestrae receperat dictam ecclesiam, quum haec ad illam nullo iure pertineat, nec aliquam sibi debeat reddere pensionem; sed ipse per electionem populi, ad quem de antiqua consuetudine pertinet electio, a cardinali sanctae Susannae, cui eadem ecclesia Salvatoris, tanquam capella suo titulo, in spiritualibus est subiecta, canonice fuerat institutus. Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: Those knowingly electing an unworthy person are deprived of the power of electing in the election that first occurs to be made.

The same.

When the church of Winchester was without a pastor, the archdeacon with his supporters elected the Dean of Salisbury, while the prior and his associates elected the Precentor of Lincoln as bishop.

[When because of this the parties had approached our presence, since they disagreed not a little concerning the sequence of what had been done, we caused witnesses to be received on both sides and ordered the attestations to be published. Having understood them perspicaciously, after sufficient allegation had been made by each party, we deliberated diligently with our brothers concerning the rendering of sentence. We found that both elections had been attempted contrary to canonical form; and, to say nothing of conspiracies, appeals, and excommunications, we discovered that the first was made through disorderly presumption and the second through violent pressure. Therefore, proceeding by the royal road, we considered that both should by the demand of justice be judicially invalidated.

But after some days, the party that had elected the Precentor of Lincoln approached our presence and produced a certain instrument under the chapter's seal, in which it was expressly contained that the convent of Winchester had committed its authority to the prior and certain brothers concerning the election of a bishop to be celebrated in our presence and had conferred upon them full and free power to elect a bishop for it. It therefore humbly petitioned from us license to elect. We caused the instrument to be exhibited to the other party, and, when it had been approved by all, we asked whether these wished to elect with those or rather without them. Having taken counsel, they answered that, saving the exceptions they had against them, they wished to celebrate a unanimous election with them.]

Therefore, although they all deliberated in common concerning making the election, nevertheless, because they were unable to be concordant, they had recourse to us with the business unfinished. Those who had elected the precentor asserted [firmly] that those who had elected the dean were deprived of the power of electing, especially for the reason that they had knowingly presumed to elect a man not legitimately born. Hence, according to the Lateran Council, they had both lost the power of electing on this occasion and ought to lack ecclesiastical benefices for three years. They humbly petitioned that we deign to pronounce an interlocutory sentence upon this.

The others answered that, although the man whom they had elected had been less than legitimately born, nevertheless he had merited to be legitimated through the favor of the Apostolic See, and they asserted that they would lawfully prove this. We therefore, considering that the former had admitted the latter to celebrating the second election after the first election, and that the decree of the aforesaid council decreed that presumers of this kind were deprived of the power of electing for one occasion only, judged that they were to be admitted to elect, since the election they wished to celebrate before us was now not the second but the third to occur, in such manner that the proctor of the archdeacons should participate without prejudice to the monks.

When they had again assembled in one place to deliberate in common concerning making the election, they were nevertheless unable concordantly to agree upon one vote, although each party agreed in common upon this: that unless the election was celebrated before us, irreparable harm threatened the church of Winchester. But, through him who makes both one, at last they returned to unanimous concord, electing for themselves by equal assent the aforesaid precentor as bishop.

We, wishing to safeguard both our honor and ecclesiastical liberty, decreed that the election should not be confirmed before they had publicly sworn in our consistory that they were neither bound by any obligation nor induced by any coercion to celebrate an election of this kind. The oaths having therefore been received in this manner, we examined both the election and the elected person.

When through the letters of our venerable brother [name omitted], Archbishop of Tours, as well as those of many others, it had been most fully established to us and our brothers that his ordination was canonical and his birth legitimate, and when our dearest son in Christ J., illustrious King of the English—to whom, with willing spirit, we defer as much as we can with honor—had given his assent, as became known to us from his letters patent, with the other requirements regularly concurring, because no delay or difficulty ought to be brought against upright arrangements, lest the Lord's flock long lack pastoral care, we considered that the election itself should be confirmed by the common counsel of our brothers. Latin source headnote: One who knowingly elects an unworthy person as bishop is for this reason suspended from the benefices of the church for three years and cannot meanwhile be elected or assumed to one of its dignities.

The same to the Abbot of Cîteaux and the monks R. and P. of Fontfroide.

Through the inquiry which you conducted at our command concerning the condition of the bishopric and Bishop of Toulouse, we clearly understood that Mascaron the chancellor asserted under oath that he knew for certain that R., formerly Bishop of Toulouse, and his friends had, before his election, held a conference with certain canons expressly named and solicited them with entreaties to elect him as bishop. He also asserted that he had both seen and heard when the aforesaid bishop, while in the house of Saint Peter de Coquinis, acknowledged in the presence of certain canons that he had sworn to those canons who had opposed his first election in the house of Acton de Montibus. He believed for certain that that oath was unlawful and was furnished according to a pact so that the same R. would be elected. He also asserted that, after the first election of that man had been quashed, he himself held the episcopal house in that man's name, receiving certain rents and revenues which, with the bishop's knowledge and assent, he expended in that man's affairs.

Therefore, since by knowingly electing such a person as bishop, as he affirmed by his own oath, he rendered himself unworthy of ecclesiastical benefices, we bear it heavily and grievously that the same Mascaron is said to have been substituted as provost for our beloved son the Provost of Toulouse, who was elected Bishop of Comminges.

Wherefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, entirely removing the same Mascaron from the office of provost, you cause a suitable man to be assumed to that office. [Restraining objectors, etc. Given on the second day before the Nones of July, in the eighth year, 1205.]

Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: If one who is not professed is elected to the governance of a regular church, the election is quashed, notwithstanding a custom to the contrary.

The same to the Prior of Saint Fridianus and G. and G., canons of Lucca.

When we formerly considered that the cause being conducted between Bonus the priest and Brunus, a canon of the church of Saint Peter of Lucca, should be committed to you—concerning the fact that the said priest Bonus is said to have been elected prior by the greater part of the canons of the same church, the aforesaid B. and a certain other dissenting—you took care, as we learned from your letters, to cite the parties, so that according to our mandate you might be able to conclude the cause itself by a canonical end.

When they were constituted in your presence, the said priest Bonus urgently petitioned that by apostolic authority you take care to confirm the election made of him. But the aforesaid Brunus answered to the contrary that he was not worthy of the governance of the priory, objecting against him the crime of simony, and that his election had not been canonically celebrated. And, because he was not professed, he asserted that he was deservedly to be rejected.

But since nothing concerning simony had been proved and nothing had been shown against the manner of the election, the privilege of the church itself greatly moved you. It expressly contained that no one should be placed over it through any cunning of subreption unless the brothers by common assent, or the sounder part of the brothers' counsel, according to the fear of God and the Rule of Blessed Augustine, should provide that he be elected. Although many priors continuously, one after another, had been unprofessed in that church throughout many and long periods, nevertheless, because the aforesaid priest B. has not professed regular observance, you doubt—and rightly—to proceed without consulting us contrary to the privilege granted to the aforesaid church by the Apostolic See.

Therefore, since we ought not to consider only what has been done but rather what ought to be done, we answer your consultation in this way: because according to divine law one must not plough with an ox and an ass, nor ought anyone put on a garment woven of wool and linen, removing the impediment of any appeal, you are to invalidate the aforesaid election. You are to compel the aforesaid priest and the other unprofessed clerics either to profess and observe the Rule of Blessed Augustine established in that church or to leave the church entirely. [Restraining objectors, etc. Given at Ferentino on the eighth day before the Ides of July, 1203.]

> Quum causam, quae inter Bonum presbyterum et Brunum canonicum ecclesiae sancti Petri Lucanensis vertitur super eo, quod dictus presbyter Bonus a maiori parte canonicorum eiusdem ecclesiae, praedicto B. et quodam alio contradicentibus, in priorem, sicut dicitur, est electus, olim vobis duximus committendam, vos, sicut ex literis vestris accepimus, partes citare curastis, ut iuxta mandatum nostrum causam ipsam fine possetis canonico terminare. Quumque in vestra essent praesentia constitutae, dictus presbyter Bonus cum instantia postulabat, ut electionem de se factam auctoritate curaretis apostolica confirmare. Sed praefatus Brunus e contrario respondebat, illum non esse dignum regimine prioratus, crimen ei obiiciens simoniae, quodque ipsius electio non erat canonice celebrata. Et, quia professus non erat, ipsum asserebat merito repellendum. Verum quum de simonia nihil fuisset probatum, nec aliquid contra modum electionis ostensum, movit vos vehementer ipsius ecclesiae privilegium, in quo continebatur expressum, ut nullus ibi qualibet subreptionis astutia praeponatur, nisi quem fratres communi consensu, vel fratrum pars consilii sanioris secundum Dei timorem et B. Augustini regulam, providerint eligendum. Quamvis autem multi priores continue unus post alium in ipsa ecclesia per multa et longa tempora fuerint non professi, quia tamen praefatus presbyter B. non est professus observantiam regularem, dubitatis, et merito, nobis procedere inconsultis contra privilegium sedis apostolicae concessum ecclesiae memoratae. Quia igitur non debemus attendere solummodo, quid factum sit, sed potius, quid sit faciendum, consultationi vestrae taliter respondemus, quod, quum secundum legem divinam non sit in bove arandum et asino, nec quisquam debeat vestem induere de lana linoque contextam, sublato cuiuslibet appellationis obstaculo irritetis electionem praedictam, et compellatis praefatum presbyterum, aliosque clericos non professos, ut vel beati Augustini regulam in eadem ecclesia constitutam profiteantur et servent, aut ipsam ecclesiam omnino dimittant. Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: The nomination or appeal of one who has no interest does not impede an election. But if one who should be summoned is contemned, and he prosecutes the contempt, the election is quashed even if confirmed; and he can prosecute it unless he has consented to the election, which he can do even after the fact. This is what it says down to § Concerning this. — § 1. A bishop, while the Mass of his consecration is being celebrated, or an archbishop before receiving the pallium, ought not confer orders. This is what it says down to the words But as to. — § 2. This passage is not summarized, both because of the diversity of readings and because it does not pertain to the title. Abbas.

The same to I., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Stephen in the Caelian Hill, legate of the Apostolic See.

That, as we learned from your letters [recently presented to our apostolate, after many labors by sea and land and among diverse peoples you prosperously arrived by God's grace to execute the office of legation enjoined upon you, and that you endeavored as far as you could to reform the Irish church for the better, as the manifestation of the work itself makes evident, we hold most gratifying and acceptable, and we greatly commend in the Lord the zeal of your solicitude.

But you were unwilling to conclude without our counsel the business of the church of Armagh, which appeared arduous and difficult to you. Rather, you considered that the sequence of that business should be intimated to us through your letters, so that from our subsequent rescript you might know how you were to proceed in the business itself.

For, as we perceived was contained in your letters, when the Archbishop of Armagh of good memory entered upon the way of all flesh, the royal justiciar summoned the Archdeacon of Armagh so that, for the substitution of a bishop, lest the peace of the kingdom be in any way impeded, he would summon the suffragans of the church of Armagh and all those who ought to assemble to hold a convention. Thus all were said to have been summoned through him. But few of those to whom the election belonged assembled at the village of the Bridge: namely, two suffragans of the church of Armagh, the Abbot of Mellifont, who displayed a privilege that he had the first voice in the election, and the aforesaid Archdeacon of Armagh.

Having taken counsel, they are said to have agreed upon three persons: namely, the Bishop of Meath, who was one of the suffragans, the Archdeacon of Meath, and Master Manfred, the royal chaplain. But one of the two bishops who had assembled for that nomination, when asked, steadfastly asserted that he had been present at that election but had remained silent and had not given his assent in the election itself. The others asserted to the contrary that they believed he had assented because he was present and in no way contradicted it.

Afterward, when many days had elapsed, the aforesaid Archdeacon of Armagh summoned the suffragan bishops at Armagh. All who assembled in the metropolis itself, except the Bishop of Meath and the Abbot of Mellifont, who could not for any reason assemble there among the Irish, elected the abbot of the regular canons of Bangor as archbishop. As they said was customary, they consecrated him bishop on the following Sunday. After his own anointing and before the solemnities of the Masses had ended, he ordained a certain man as acolyte and presumed to administer. When you gravely reproved him concerning this, he said—and others from his regions confessed—that such a custom had hitherto been observed in Ireland.

There was indeed the greatest contention concerning an election of this kind between the Irish and the English, because the English steadfastly asserted that they were wholly unwilling to have any Irishman as their archbishop and would in no way suffer it. Certain English and Irish persons, proposing very many things in this manner in your presence, asserted that, if an Englishman were placed over the church of Armagh, useful provision would not be made for that church and the peace of the whole land.

Afterward, when administration had been forbidden by you to the said elect and granted to the aforesaid archdeacon, one of the suffragans objected against him that he had alienated a certain silver tablet from the church of Armagh. He finally confessed to you that he had received the tablet itself from the clerics and laymen of Armagh and sold it for twenty-five marks, but he steadfastly promised that, whatever should befall him, he would guard against loss to the church itself concerning this.

You signified to us besides that, after the first election was held at the village of the Bridge, an appeal was made to our hearing lest anything be done to the prejudice of that election and of the dignity of the king, who asserts that his assent is required in elections.]

We therefore, having diligently inspected the tenor of your letters, perceive six things contained in them, of which three appeared to operate against the aforesaid elect and three others against his election. The first is the nomination made of three persons, which in your letters you several times call an election; if it was a true election, nothing ought in any way to have been attempted against it before it was quashed. The second is the appeal interposed, which, if lawful, wholly impeded the subsequent election. The third is that the Bishop of Meath and the Abbot of Mellifont, who ought to have participated, did not assemble for the election. Hence, if one or both were contemned, their contempt ought to have impeded the aforesaid election more than the contradiction of many.

The fourth is that the aforesaid abbot, thus elected, presumed to administer before obtaining confirmation. The fifth is that he celebrated orders on the day of his consecration, although he had not yet obtained the pallium. The sixth is dilapidation, because he did not at all fear to alienate the silver tablet.

But since the first election, which was made of three persons, appears rather to be called a nomination, since only four of all those to whom the election belonged assembled—namely, two suffragans of the church of Armagh, the aforesaid Abbot of Mellifont, and the Archdeacon of Armagh —and no right was acquired by the nominated persons from such a nomination, it was lawful to proceed to an election regularly celebrated, especially in the church of Armagh, since according to the canonical constitutions an election ought, if possible, to be celebrated in the cathedral church.

Nor could such an appeal as was interposed impede that election, since nothing in it was attempted to the prejudice of the royal dignity. For not a simple nomination but a solemn election ought to be presented to the prince so that he may give assent to the postulation, even if some persons, through usurpation, sometimes abusively do otherwise.

But if the aforesaid Bishop of Meath and Abbot of Mellifont, who ought to have participated, were not contemned but were summoned to the election—provided that they could have been summoned without danger—then whether they were unable or unwilling to approach for celebrating the election, their absence could not impede the election. For, if they could not safely travel to that place among the Irish, neither could the others securely assemble at another place among the English. Because of this, we believe that you should inquire more diligently into the truth concerning this. If it is established that they were summoned, and if, after being summoned without danger, they were unwilling or unable to come to celebrate the election, then, if no other canonical impediment obstructed it, the election itself ought not in any way to be invalidated because of their absence. But if it is established that they were not summoned but were contemned, the election thus celebrated is to be entirely invalidated, unless afterward, having been diligently admonished for the good of peace, they take care to consent.

Moreover, since that election was celebrated before you arrived in the Irish regions and the elect himself immediately began to administer, you can sufficiently pass this over by dissimulation. For, as you know, the Roman Church tolerates this concerning the metropolitans of England, France, Germany, and other remote regions who are concordantly elected, the utility of the churches having been weighed. For if, during the great length of time until the elect could obtain confirmation with the pallium from the Apostolic See, he did not receive the regalia, the church, which in the meantime would lack an administrator, would incur no slight loss.

§ 1. Concerning the fact, however, that on the day of his consecration, before the solemnities of the Masses had ended, he ordained an acolyte, you are to reprove and chastise him for such an excess, unless perhaps you learn that this belongs to an ancient custom of the church of Armagh. If it is established to you concerning that custom, you will be able mercifully to tolerate what has now been done because of the simplicity and rudeness of that people. You are nevertheless strictly to prohibit on our behalf that anything similar be attempted hereafter.

For only the Roman Pontiff—who, as you know, is consecrated before the angelic hymn and afterward himself begins and, having been consecrated, completes the solemnities of the Masses—can celebrate orders on the day of his consecration. But the others, who are consecrated between the Epistle and Gospel, because after being consecrated they concelebrate with the principal celebrant, ought not then celebrate orders, lest the mystery of unity be divided.

Furthermore, since an archbishop without the pallium is not permitted to summon a council, confect chrism, dedicate basilicas, ordain clerics, and consecrate bishops, he surely presumes greatly who hastens to ordain clerics before he obtains the pallium, since he appears to do this not as a simple bishop but as an archbishop.

§ 2. But as to the fact that he is said to have sold the silver tablet, provided that he renders the church of Armagh free from loss, as he promised, you will be able to pass it over with equanimity, since this proceeded from the will of the clergy and people. Indeed, according to the matters you intimated to us through your letters, we considered that we should write back to you in the aforesaid manner. But since you are able to have fuller knowledge of the circumstances of the same business and we greatly trust in your discretion, we believe that in this and other affairs you will, with the Lord as your author, proceed in such a manner that the prudence of your solicitude can deservedly be commended and your legation will redound in many ways to the honor and advantage of the Apostolic See. [But after the letters, etc. Given. … 1202.]

Nominatio vel appellatio eius, cuius non interest, electionem non impedit. Idem I. tit. sancti Stephani in Celio monte Presbytero cardinali apostolicae sedis Legato.

Quod, sicut ex literis tuis [nostro nuper apostolatui praesentatis accepimus, post multos labores maris et terrae, ac diversitatem gentium ad iniunctum tibi legationis officium exsequendum prospere per Dei gratiam pervenisti, et Hibernicanam ecclesiam studuisti pro posse in melius reformare, sicut ipsa operis exhibitio manifestat, gratum gerimus admodum et acceptum, et tuae sollicitudinis studium plurimum in Domino commendamus. Verum ecclesiae Armachanae negotium, quod tibi videbatur arduum et difficile, sine nostro noluisti consilio terminare, sed nobis eiusdem duxisti negotii seriem tuis literis intimandam, ut ex nostro postmodum rescripto cognosceres, qualiter tibi foret in ipso negotio procedendum. Sicut enim in tuis perspeximus literis contineri, bonae memoriae Armachano archiepiscopo viam universae carnis ingresso, a iustitiario regio vocatus fuit archidiaconus Armachanus, ut pro substituendo pontifice, ne regni pax posset aliquatenus impediri, suffraganeos Armachanae ecclesiae convocaret, et omnes illos, qui ad faciendam conventionem debuerant convenire; ac sic per eum, ut dicebatur, omnes vocati fuerunt; sed pauci apud villam de Ponte, ad quos pertinebat electio, convenerunt, duo videlicet suffraganei Armachanae ecclesiae, abbas de Mellifonte, qui privilegium demonstrabat, se primam in electione vocem habere, ac praedictus archidiaconus Armachanus. Qui deliberato consilio in tres personas, ut dicitur, convenerunt; in Midensem videlicet episcopum, qui unus erat ex suffraganeis, in archidiaconum Midiae, et magistrum Manfredum, regium capellanum. Unus vero de duobus episcopis, qui ad talem nominationem convenerat requisitus, firmiter asserebat, quod interfuit illi electioni, sed tacuit, nec praebuit in ipsa electione consensum; aliis e contrario asserentibus, quod ipsum consensisse crediderant, quia interfuit et nullatenus contradixit. Postmodum autem, plurimis diebus elapsis, praefatus archidiaconus Armachanus apud Armachanum episcopos suffraganeos convocavit, et omnes convenientes in ipsam metropolim, exceptis Midensi episcopo et abbate Mellifontis, qui nulla ratione per Hibernienses illuc poterant convenire, abbatem canonicurum regularium de Benger in archiepiscopum elegerunt, et ipsum, sicut consuetudinis esse dicebant, sequenti die dominica in episcopum consecraverunt; qui post inunctionem suam, antequam missarum solennia finirentur, quendam in acolythum ordinavit, et administrare praesumpsit. Quumque ipsum super hoc graviter redargueres, dicebat ipse, ac confitebantur alii de partibus ipsius, quod talis consuetudo erat hactenus in Hibernia observata. Contentio vero maxima ex electione huiusmodi erat inter Hibernienses et Anglicos, quoniam Anglici firmiter asserebant, se nolle penitus Hiberniensem aliquem eorum esse archiepiscopum, nullatenus paterentur, ac sic multa plurima in tua praesentia proponentes quidam Anglici et Hibernici asserebant, quod, si Anglicus praeficeretur Armachanae ecclesiae, non provideretur utiliter ipsi ecclesiae ac totius terrae quieti. Postmodum autem, quum dicto electo administratio per te interdicta fuisset, et concessa archidiacono memorato, ei unus suffraganeorum obiecit, quod quandam tabulam argenteam distraxerat ab ecclesia Armachana, qui tibi tandem confessus exstitit tabulam ipsam ab Armachanis clericis et laicis recepisse, ac vendidisse pro XXV. marchis eandem, sed firmiter promittebat, quod quicquid de ipso contingeret, ipsius ecclesiae super hoc indemnitatibus praecaveret. Significasti praetera nobis, quod facta prima electione apud villam de Ponte, ne quid fieret in praeiudicium illius electionis et dignitatis regis, qui assensum suum in electionibus asserit requirendum, ad nostram fuit audientiam appellatum.] Nos igitur, literarum tuarum tenore diligenter inspecto, sex in eis perspicimus contineri, quorum tria contra praedictum electum; et alia tria contra eius electionem facere videbantur. Primum, nominatio facta de tribus, quam in literis tuis aliquoties electionem appellas, contra quam, si electio vera fuit, antequam cassaretur, non debuerat aliquid aliquatenus attentari. Secundum, appellatio interposita, quae si legitima fuit, sequentem electionem penitus impedivit. Tertium, quia Midensis episcopus et abbas Mellifontis, qui interesse debuerant, ad electionem minime convenerunt. Unde si contempti fuerunt vel alter vel ambo, plus eorum contemptus, quam multorum contradictio praedictam electionem debuit impedire. Quartum, quia praefatus abbas sic electus ante confirmationem obtentam administrare praesumpsit. Quintum, quia in die consecrationis suae ordines celebravit, quum nondum pallium obtineret. Sextum, dilapidatio, quia tabulam argenteam alienare minime formidavit. Verum quum ex prima electione, quae facta est de tribus, dicenda videtur potius nominatio, non nisi quatuor de omnibus, ad quos electio pertinebat, videlicet duo suffraganei ecclesiae Armachanae, et praedictus abbas Mellifontis, et archidiaconus Armachanus convenerint, et ex illa tali nominatione nihil iuris acquisitum fuerit nominatis, licite procedi potuit ad electionem regulariter celebrandam, praesertim in ecclesia Armachana, quum iuxta constitutiones canonicas, si fieri potest, in cathedrali ecclesia debeat electio celebrari. Nec talis appellatio interposita electionem illam potuit impedire, quum in ea nihil attentatum fuerit in praeiudicium regiae dignitatis, quia non simplex nominatio, sed solennis electio debet principi praesentari, ut postulationi praestet assensum, etsi secus aliquando per usurpationem aliqui faciant abusive. Si autem praefati Miridiensis episcopus et abbas Mellifontis, qui interesse debuerant, non contempti fuerunt, sed ad electionem vocati, si tamen sine periculo potuerint convocari, sive nequiverint sive noluerint ad electionem celebrandam accedere ipsorum absentia non potuit electionem impedire, quoniam, si ad locum illum inter Hibernienses secure non poterant proficisci, nec ceteri ad alium locum inter Anglicos tute poterant convenire, propter quod tibi super hoc credimus veritatem diligentius inquirendam, et, si eos vocatos fuisse constiterit, si vocati absque periculo poluerunt, et illos noluisse, vel non potuisse ad electionem celebrandam venire, propter eorum absentiam, si canonicum aliud non obstitit, electio ipsa non debet aliquatenus irritari. Quodsi eos vocatos non fuisse constiterit, sed contemptos, infirmanda erit penitus electio taliter celebrata, nisi postea propter bonum pacis diligenter admoniti curaverint consentire. Ceterum, quum, antequam tu ad partes Hibernicas pervenisses, illa fuerit electio celebrata, et electus ipse statim coeperit ministrare, tu satis id potes sub dissimulatione transire, quum id, sicut nosti, de metropolitanis Angliae, Franciae, Alemaniae et aliarum partium remotarum, qui concorditer sunt electi, Romana ecclesia patiatur, ecclesiarum utilitate pensata, quia, si tanto tempore, quousque posset electus confirmationem cum pallio a sede apostolica obtinere, regalia non reciperet, ecclesia, quae interim administratore careret, non modicum incurreret detrimentum. § 1. Super eo autem, quod in die consecrationis suae, antequam missarum solemnia finirentur, acolythum ordinavit, pro tali excessu eum corripias et castiges, nisi forte hoc esse de antiqua consuetudine cognoveris ecclesiae Armachanae. De qua si tibi constiterit, quod nunc factum est propter simplicitatem et ruditatem gentis illius poteris misericorditer sustinere. Districte tamen ex parte nostra prohibeas, ne de cetero aliquid simile attentetur, quum solus Romanus Pontifex, qui, sicut nosti, ante hymnum angelicum consecratur, et postmodum ipse missarum sollennia incipit et perficit consecratus, in die consecrationis suae valeat ordines celebrare. Ceteri vero, qui inter epistolam et evangelium consecrantur, quia consecrati concelebrant principaliter celebranti, ne dividatur mysterium unitatis, non debent tunc ordines celebrare. Praeterea quum non liceat archiepiscopo sine pallio convocare concilium, conficere chrisma, dedicare basilicas, ordinare clericos, et episcopos consecrare, multum profecto praesumit, qui, antequam impetret pallium, clericos ordinare festinat, quum id non tanquam simplex episcopus, sed tanquam archiepiscopus facere videatur. § 2. Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: An election made by the lesser part of the chapter is not valid and cannot be ratified by subsequent assent. This is what it says according to the common understanding.

The same to the Bishop of Toledo and the Abbots of Sagon and Ardenne.

Having heard and understood the merits of the cause concerning the two elections celebrated in the church of Bayeux—one of G. the archdeacon and the other of R. the subdeacon—we found that both had been attempted contrary to canonical form. For, when the wishes of each person had been ascertained, the dean with the fewer agreed upon R., and the cantor with the more numerous agreed upon the said archdeacon G. Afterward, when the cantor alone nominated a certain other man, namely Master R. de Algediis, an appeal was made to our hearing that the dean, who had the first voice in the election, should not proceed to an election without the assent of the entire chapter or of its greater and sounder part, so that the door of discord, which already seemed open, might be closed through the impediment of appeal.

But the dean himself, without having the assent of the greater part of the chapter but only that of a far lesser part, suddenly broke forth into an election, appealing that no one should attempt anything against the election itself. This was so although he asserts that immediately afterward several others assented to the election made; nevertheless, what was not valid from the beginning could not acquire validity after the fact, since an election which was invalid by the law itself could not be made ratified through subsequent assent, especially while an appeal was pending.

Therefore, after they returned to their own places, the cantor and the others who had remained in the chapter, after that election had not yet been quashed and an appeal had been interposed to us, withdrew from the nomination of the said archdeacon. Anew they presumed not only to elect the aforesaid subdeacon without the knowledge of the Roman Pontiff or even of their own metropolitan, since he was a subdeacon, but also, with the bells rung and a solemn procession, to conduct him into the church while singing a hymn.

We therefore, having diligently heard these and the other matters proposed before us, considered by the common counsel of our brothers that both elections should be invalidated. [By apostolic writings, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the tenth day before the Kalends of May, in the eighth year, 1205.]

Electio per minorem partem capituli facta non tenet, nec per subsequentem consensum ratificari potest. Hoc dicit secundum communem intellectum.

Idem Toletano Episcopo, et Sagonensi et de Ardenna abbatibus.

Auditis et intellectis meritis causae de duabus electionibus celebratis in ecclesia Baiocensi, unam de G. archidiacono, et alteram de R. subdiacono invenimus utramque contra formam canonicam attentatam. Quum enim, inquisitis voluntatibus singulorum, decanus cum paucioribus in ipsum R., et cantor cum pluribus in dictum G. archidiaconum convenissent, solo cantore postmodum quendam alium, videlicet magistrum R. de Algediis nominante, ad nostram fuit audientiam appellatum, ne decanus, qui primam in electione vocem habebat, ad electionem procederet sine consensu totius capituli, vel maioris et sanioris partis ipsius, ut discordiae ianua, quae iam videbatur aperta, per appellationis obstaculum clauderetur. Ipse vero decanus, non habito consensu maioris partis capituli, sed longe minoris, subito in electionem prorupit, appellans, ne quis contra ipsam electionem aliquid attentaret, quamvis asseveret, quod electioni factae statim plures alii consenserunt; quum tamen ex postfacto nequiuerit convalescere quod ab initio non valebat, quoniam electio, quae fuerat irrita ipso iure, per subsequentem consensum, maxime appellatione pendente, non poterat esse rata. Eis ergo ad propria recedentibus, cantor et alii, qui remanserant in capitulo, post illam electionem nondum cassatam, et appellationem ad nos interpositam, a nominatione dicti archidiaconi recedentes, de novo praefatum subdiaconum absque Romani Pontificis vel etiam metropolitani proprii conscientia, quum subdiaconus esset, non solum eligere praesumpserunt, verum etiam pulsatis campanis cum processione solenni, cantando hymnum, in ecclesiam deportare. Nos igitur his et aliis, quae coram nobis fuere proposita, diligenter auditis, de communi fratrum nostrorum consilio electionem utramque duximus irritandam. [Per apostolica etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. X. Kal. Maii Ao. VIII. 1205.]

Chapter XXX

Latin source headnote: Power given to compromissaries to elect a prelate cannot be revoked when the matter is no longer intact; and the matter ceases to be intact after the compromissaries have begun to deliberate.

The same to the Abbots of Grand-Selve and Belleperche.

In causes which [are referred to the examination of the Apostolic See, the laws ought to be subtly observed, because what is adjudged by the Roman Pontiff in one cause provides a form of judging in other causes.]

Indeed, when the church of Toulouse was vacant, two persons were nominated through the division of its chapter, namely our venerable brother the Bishop of Comminges and our beloved son R., Archdeacon of Agen. R., canon of Saint-Lizier, B. the archdeacon, and R., canon of Saint Stephen of Toulouse, approached our presence on behalf of the said bishop; and on behalf of the other party our beloved son Master P. de Rama and G., his associate, approached. We appointed as auditors for them our venerable brother the Bishop of Albano and our beloved son H., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Martin.

Before them the aforesaid messengers proposed that, when the chapter of the church of Toulouse assembled to deliberate concerning the election of a bishop, they elected two men, namely R. de Ponte and M. the cellarer, to choose five electors from the same chapter. These, after furnishing an oath, were to deliberate concerning the election of a bishop to be substituted. It was established and conceded by each person of the chapter that the person whom those five concordantly, or three of them, elected should, if the person were suitable, be held by them as bishop without any contradiction.

It was also expressly established that, if the five electors could not agree upon one person, when three of them agreed the remaining two would be bound to follow their assent and hold their election ratified. Afterward, when five electors had been selected by the aforesaid two and had withdrawn apart to deliberate concerning the election, but were not all able equally to agree upon one person, three of them agreed upon the aforesaid Bishop of Comminges, who had been archdeacon of the church of Toulouse. Before they announced his nomination, they placed it under apostolic protection; then they published to the chapter the election they had made to postulate the same bishop. The remaining two, subsequently on the third day and together with a few from the chapter while the others were absent, elected the aforesaid Archdeacon of Agen.

The aforesaid R. and the other messengers also added that a special messenger had been sent by that party to our beloved son I., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Prisca and legate of the Apostolic See. Since the bishop himself had to be postulated from us and the legate had no power to grant or transfer him, because a dispensation of this kind is reserved to the Apostolic See alone, the messenger appealed to our hearing lest anything be done to the contrary.

But the aforesaid messengers of the archdeacon answered to the contrary before the aforesaid auditors that, when the aforesaid five electors, to whom the entire chapter had transferred the power of electing, were deliberating separately concerning the election, they dissented among themselves to such an extent that their contentious voices were heard by the brothers who remained in the chapter. The chapter, holding them suspect because of contentions of this kind, sent two canons to them, through whom they prohibited them on our behalf and that of the aforesaid legate from proceeding further in the matter. Thus they revoked the power of electing which they had committed to them, commanding them to return to the chapter and deliberate concerning the election equally with the other brothers.

Two of the electors gave their assent to this revocation, and, while the remaining three did not contradict it, those two returned with the chapter's messengers to the chapter itself. But the other three, having followed them as far as the doors of the chapter, afterward departed from them. The chapter, wondering at their absence, after waiting for their presence for that whole day, on the following day caused the bell to be rung, as is customary, to assemble the chapter. While the aforesaid three with a few of their associates kept themselves contumaciously absent, the prior, sacristan, and greater cellarer of the church of Saint Stephen, because they had a special mandate concerning this from the absent provost, together with the greater and sounder part of the chapter and after summoning abbots, priors, monks, and other religious men, elected the aforesaid archdeacon as bishop.

The messengers of the same archdeacon also exhibited the letters which the aforesaid legate sent to us concerning this. [Their contents were that, when the chapter of Toulouse held deliberation concerning the election of a bishop, with some electing the Bishop of Comminges and the rest the Archdeacon of Agen, it divided its votes in two, and each election was presented to him by the different parties at different times] (and below).

When the aforesaid auditors had faithfully reported the foregoing matters to us and our brothers, we believed for certain that the aforesaid legate had had a pious intention in this matter. Nevertheless, from the very tenor of his letters we understood that he had been circumvented, and we perceived that, with the truth suppressed, whatever had been obtained from him had been elicited and extorted through subreption, since in those letters he had not expressed the form of the postulation.

For the postulation of the Bishop of Comminges had preceded and had been made by those to whom the whole chapter had transferred the power of electing, for which reason it is understood to have been made unanimously by the assent of the entire chapter. The chapter could by no means revoke that power when the matter was no longer intact, because the electors had already proceeded in deliberation and three, while two dissented, had agreed upon one person. This is especially so since the reason was that those five were discordant, whereas in the transfer of that power it had been manifestly expressed that, if it happened that the five dissented, they should hold the election of the three ratified and firm.

Furthermore, it is clear that the same legate was deceived, since in his commission, passing over the election of the bishop—who had to be postulated from us alone—he committed an inquiry under the form expressed above concerning only the election of the archdeacon. They would in no way have proceeded thus concerning these matters if everything had been narrated to him in order, just as it truly occurred.

Hence, after sharing the counsel of our brothers, we decree that the election of the archdeacon himself is to be entirely invalidated, not because of any defect or fault of his own person, but because we recognized that its course was less than canonical and that the legate himself was multiply circumvented.

Wherefore we command and strictly order your discretion by apostolic writings that, if you find the person of the bishop himself useful and necessary for the governance of the church of Toulouse, and suitable both in knowledge of letters and by the example of his manner of life for rooting out from the diocese of Toulouse the perfidy of the heretics, which through the negligence of the prelates has hitherto miserably and damnably sprouted there, and if this is thus established to you, you are by our authority to grant him license, because of the urgent necessity and their utility, to transfer to the church of Toulouse, removing the impediment of every contradiction and appeal. Otherwise, after rejecting his postulation, you are by apostolic authority to enjoin the chapter of the same church to elect a person suitable for this as pastor.

Chapter XXXI

Latin source headnote: By custom the election of canons can belong to the chapter alone. This is what it says, and it is customarily alleged every day.

The same to the Bishop of Florence.

When the church of Volterra had for a long time been destitute of the due service of canons, our venerable brother the Bishop of Volterra, wishing to repair the deficiency of ministers in that church, elected certain canons and instituted them in it. The resident canons refused to receive them, asserting that an election of this kind had been attempted to their prejudice.

When the bishop himself sent us his complaint concerning this, we committed the cause to you to be concluded by a canonical end.

[When the parties were constituted in your presence, the same bishop petitioned you through his representative that you prohibit our beloved sons Master Mitidus, Ildebrandus, Placidus, Ptolemy, and Sofredus from the injury which they inflicted upon him concerning the election of canons of the church of Volterra, and that you cause them to permit him freely to use the right of election and not contradict him when electing or wishing to elect. The same bishop asserted that the right of electing canons belonged to him in many ways.

He proposed that this belonged to him by common law because, as the statutes of the sacred canons declare, a bishop has full disposition, provision, and jurisdiction in his own church. For although any of his subjects might precede in his own office and honor, the bishop is nevertheless provider and ordainer in all things.

He also proposed that, by approved custom, the election of canons in that church belonged to him, as it did to the other prelates of the region, who were accustomed to make elections of clerics either by themselves or with associates. But even if it were doubtful what kind of custom was observed there in such matters, recourse should be had to the Apostolic See, since in other churches subject to a metropolitan, recourse is had in doubts of this kind to the custom of the metropolitan church. Hence, since at the Roman Church the Supreme Pontiff alone elects cardinals, the same bishop proposed that the election of canons in his church belonged to him alone.

He alleged in addition that, even if an election of this kind belonged to him by no law, the authority of electing had nevertheless devolved upon him because of the canons' negligence. For it is permitted by the sacred constitutions that every bishop, with pastoral diligence, supply the negligence of his clerics. It is also known to have been established in the Lateran Council that, when the grant of a dignity or benefice belongs to a chapter, if it delays conferring it within the space of six months, the bishop is to carry this out.

On behalf of the chapter, however, it was answered to the contrary that by common law the election of canons belonged not to the bishop but to the chapter itself, to prove which they alleged certain canons. But since diverse statutes of the canons have been issued concerning this, a diversity of this kind appeared rather to be referred to the customs of the different places: in some places the election of canons belongs to the bishop alone, elsewhere to the chapter alone, and in some places equally to both.

Nor did the custom of the Apostolic See, which the aforesaid bishop introduced on his own behalf, appear able to prejudice the canons. For although the Supreme Pontiff alone elects cardinals, in his own cathedral church—namely, the Lateran—or in the basilica of the Prince of the Apostles, the chapter is accustomed to elect fellow canons for itself. Nevertheless, in those churches as in others, the Roman Pontiff sometimes elects canons from the plenitude of power.

To the objection the bishop then made—namely, that the right of electing had devolved upon him because of the chapter's negligence—the party of the chapter answered that, because of a neglect of this kind, the bishop could not claim the right of electing for himself unless a canonical admonition had first been given. In such a case no time that might supply the place of an admonition or be deemed to make a demand is fixed by the canon, especially since he himself, according to the decision of his own will, refused to confirm those elected by the canons and presented to the bishop.

Since it belongs to ordinary law that admonition ought to precede punishment, and the bishop, under the pretext of negligence and with admonition omitted, inflicted a penalty, the same party proposed that what is known to have been rashly attempted by him should deservedly be disapproved.

The party of the chapter also added that the statute of the Lateran Council claims no place in those churches in which ecclesiastical benefices are by no means distinct, but rather in those in which there is a fixed number of canons and distinct prebends. Furthermore, if according to the tenor of the council the aforesaid canons were found negligent, nevertheless the bishop, who had been negligent for a longer time, acquired no right from this. He should deservedly be punished for it, since no one ought to merit both penalty and reward from the same act. Indeed, in this case the power of electing had deservedly devolved upon the superior, as is manifestly inferred from the tenor of the council, and therefore the bishop ought not to have put his sickle into another's harvest.

When these and other matters had been proposed before you, but you wished to deliberate concerning the sentence to be rendered, because you found councils that were excessively diverse, and almost everyone whose counsel you wished to use in this matter was for some reason held suspect by one or the other party, you remitted the instructed cause to our presence, transmitting under your seal the attestations and allegations of each party.]

We, having diligently inspected the attestations and arguments of each party, by the counsel of our brothers command your fraternity by authority of the present writings that, concerning the first article of the bishop's petition—in which he petitioned you to prohibit the aforesaid canons from the injury which they inflicted upon him concerning the election of canons of the church of Volterra—you are not to delay, appeal being set aside, absolving the often-mentioned canons from the claim of the bishop himself. For, as the rule of law says, one who uses his own right does not appear to inflict an injury, since it was proved by far better witnesses that the aforesaid canons used this right before the aforesaid bishop did.

Concerning the second article of the aforesaid petition, in which the same bishop sought that the said canons permit him freely to use the right of election, you are likewise to take care to absolve the often-mentioned canons, especially if it is notorious that the general custom observed in Tuscany is that, in cathedral churches, the chapter alone, without consulting the bishop, has the faculty of electing canons. [But lest, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of November, in the ninth year, 1206.]

> Quum ecclesia Vulterana debito canonicorum obsequio longo fuisset tempore destituta, venerabilis frater noster Vulteranus episcopus, volens ministrorum defectum in eadem ecclesia restaurare, canonicos quosdam elegit, et instituit in eadem, quos residentes canonici recipere noluerunt, asserentes, quod talis electio fuerat in eorum praeiudicium attentata. Quumque super hoc suam ad nos ipse episcopus querimoniam destinasset, causam ipsam tibi commisimus fine canonico terminandam. [Partibus autem in tua praesentia constitutis, idem episcopus a te per suum petit responsalem ut dilectos filios, magistrum Mitidum, Ildebrandum, Placitum, Tholomaeum et Sofredum ab iniuria, quam ei super electione canonicorum Vulteranae ecclesiae inferunt, prohiberes, et ut ipsum iure electionis uti libere patiantur, nec ipsi eligenti, vel volenti eligere contradicant, asserens idem episcopus, quod ius eligendi canonicos ad ipsum multipliciter pertinebat. Iure siquidem communi hoc sibi competere proponebat, quia, secundum quod sacrorum canonum statuta declarant, in sua ecclesia dispositionem, provisionem et iurisdictionem episcopus plenam habet; nam, etsi subditorum quisquam in suo officio et honore praecedat, episcopus tamen provisor est et ordinator in cunctis. Proposuit etiam, quod ex approbata consuetudine canonicorum electio ad ipsum in eadem ecclesia pertinet, sicut ad praelatos ceteros regionis, qui vel per se vel cum sociis consueverunt electionem facere clericorum. Sed, etsi dubium esset, cuiusmodi consuetudo in talibus servaretur ibidem, ad sedem esset apostolicam recurrendum, quum in aliis ecclesiis, quae sunt metropolitano subiectae, in huiusmodi dubiis ad consuetudinem metropoleos recurratur. Unde, quum apud Romanam ecclesiam solus summus Pontifex eligat cardinales, canonicorum electionem in sua ecclesia idem episcopus ad se solum proposuit pertinere. Allegabat insuper, quod etsi nullo iure talis ad ipsum pertinuisset electio, propter canonicorum tamen negligentiam eligendi auctoritas ad ipsum fuerat devoluta. Sacris siquidem constitutionibus est permissum, ut episcopus quilibet pastorali diligentia suorum suppleat negligentiam clericorum. In Lateranensi quoque concilio noscitur esse statutum, ut, quum donatio dignitatis vel beneficii ad capitulum pertinet, si infra sex mensium spatium conferre distulerit, hoc episcopus exsequatur. Pro parte vero capituli fuit ex adverso responsum, quod de iure communi non ad episcopum, sed ad ipsum capitulum canonicorum electio pertinebat, ad quod probandum quosdam canones allegabant. Verum, quum circa hoc diversa canonum edita sint statuta, videbatur potius ad diversorum locorum consuetudines huiusmodi diversitas referenda, quum canonicorum electio alicubi ad solum spectet episcopum, alibi ad capitulum tantum, et alicubi pariter ad utrosque. Sed, nec consuetudo sedis apostolicae, quam pro se praedictus episcopus introduxit, obesse posse canonicis videbatur, quia, licet summus Pontifex solus eligat cardinales, in sua tamen ecclesia cathedrali, Lateranensi videlicet, vel principis Apostolorum basilica, capitulum sibi concanonicos eligere consuevit, quamvis et in ipsis, sicut et in aliis ecclesiis, Romanus Pontifex interdum canonicos eligat ex plenitudine potestatis. Ad hoc autem, quod episcopus consequenter obiecit, quia videlicet propter capituli negligentiam eligendi ius ad ipsum fuerat devolutum, pars capituli respondebat, quod, propter neglectum huiusmodi episcopus eligendi ius sibi non potuit vendicare, nisi canonica monitione praemissa, quum in tali casu tempus minime sit determinatum a canone, quod vicem commonitionis suppleat, vel interpellare fingatur, praesertim, quum electos a canonicis et episcopo praesentatos ipse pro suae voluntatis arbitrio noluit confirmare. Quum itaque ordinarii iuris sit, ut admonitio debeat praeire vindictam, et praetextu negligentiae, monitione omissa episcopus poenam inflixerit, pars eadem proponebat merito improbandum quod ab ipso temere noscitur attentatum. Adiecit et pars capituli, quod Lateranensis statutum concilii sibi locum non vendicat in illis ecclesiis, in quibus nequaquam ecclesiastica beneficia sunt distincta, sed in quibus certus est canonicorum numerus et distinctae praebendae. Praeterea, si, iuxta tenorem concilii, deprehenderentur praedicti canonici negligentes, episcopus tamen, qui diuturniori tempore fuit negligens, ex hoc ius minime acquisivit, qui propter hoc esset merito puniendus, quum nemo ex eodem facto poenam debeat et praemium promereri; quin immo in hoc casu eligendi potestas ad superiorem exstitit merito devoluta, sicut ex concilii tenore coniicitur manifeste, unde in alienam messem non debuit mittere falcem suam. Quum autem haec et alia coram te fuissent proposita, et tu tamen deliberare velles super sententia proferenda, quia nimis diversa concilia reperisti, et fere quilibet, cuius in hac parte volebas uti consilio, suspectus alterutri parti ex causis aliquibus habebatur, causam instructam ad nostram praesentiam remisisti, sub tuo sigillo attestationes et allegationes partis utriusque transmittens.] Nos vero utriusque partis attestationibus et rationibus diligenter inspectis, de consilio fratrum nostrorum fraternitati tuae praesentium auctoritate mandamus, quatenus super primo articulo petitionis episcopi, in quo postulavit a te, ut praenominatos canonicos ab iniuria, quam ei super electione canonicorum Vulteranensis ecclesiae inferunt, prohiberes, ab impetitione ipsius episcopi saepe dictos canonicos appellatione postposita absolvere non postponas; quia, sicut iuris regula dicit, non videtur iniuriam facere qui utitur iure suo, quum per testes longe melius sit probatum, quod canonici supradicti hoc iure usi fuerint, ante quam episcopus memoratus. Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: Those making a compromise are bound to receive the person elected by the compromissaries if he is worthy, unless he appears to have been elected contrary to the form of the compromise.

The same to the Abbot of Saint Victor, the Dean of Paris, and Master R. Decortonensis, canon of Thérouanne.

When our beloved son the Archdeacon of Thérouanne had intimated to us (And below:) that, the church of Thérouanne being destitute of the consolation of a bishop, the canons of the same church, deliberating concerning the substitution of a pastor, unanimously conferred upon three canons of Thérouanne the power of electing a bishop. With an oath interposed, they promised to receive as pastor the man whom those three should consider should be elected bishop from the body of that church. Afterward, having examined the wishes of each person, those three elected as bishop John, archdeacon of the same church, a learned, provident, and discreet man.

The metropolitan also diligently examined both the election and the person of the elect and solicitously inquired into the truth concerning his age, about a deficiency in which certain persons had doubted. Declaring by sentence that the elect himself suffered no deficiency in age, he solemnly confirmed the election made of him as canonically celebrated.

Afterward, having received the regalia from the king, at the petition of the same chapter he was ordained priest by our venerable brother the Bishop of Arras at the command of the aforesaid metropolitan. For some time, with no one contradicting, he obtained free and peaceful administration of the church of Thérouanne in both spiritual and temporal matters.

Hence those proctors humbly petitioned us that we impose silence upon those who, after all these things and stirred by the goads of envy, presume rashly to come against their own act and raise material for discord against the elect himself; that we approve the aforesaid election, celebrated so concordantly and solemnly confirmed; and that we cause the gift of consecration to be bestowed upon the elect himself. Concerning this, letters were presented to us not only from many abbots and chapters of the city and diocese of Thérouanne, but also from other priests, who bore testimony concerning all the foregoing matters and commended the elect himself to us in many ways for learning, discretion, and honorable conduct.

Indeed, they also offered us letters of the electors themselves concerning this, within which was inserted word for word—as the same electors assert—the tenor of those letters that had been drawn up in chapter concerning the power delivered to them according to the aforesaid form and sealed with the seal of the chapter.

But the aforesaid B., who had come against the aforesaid elect, proposed to the contrary that the power of electing had been conceded to the aforesaid three, after an oath had been furnished, under this form: that the chapter would be bound to receive the man whom those three elected as pastor after he had been nominated from the body of that church by all or by the greater and sounder part. The electors themselves, not observing the limits of the power delivered to them, presumed to elect the aforesaid archdeacon, whom few of the chapter had nominated.

Hence the canons of Thérouanne, afterward wondering how the aforesaid archdeacon had been elected when there were several worthier persons in the same church, began, as they spoke with one another concerning the course of the election, almost all publicly to profess that they had in no way nominated the aforesaid archdeacon. Judging that they had been deceived in this matter, they took care through the same B., to whom they assigned their testimonial letters, to disclose to our apostolate what had been done concerning this.

He solicitously petitioned before us that, after quashing the same election, we cause canonical provision to be made for that church from a suitable person, since, as he asserted, truly all the canons of Thérouanne were prepared to affirm by a furnished oath that they had never nominated the aforesaid archdeacon as bishop. It could lawfully be shown that authority to elect had been conferred upon the aforesaid three according to the aforesaid form: namely, that they should elect from the body of the church the person upon whom all or the greater and sounder part of the chapter agreed. The same B. asserted that he would likewise prove that the often-mentioned elect suffered a deficiency in age.

We, however, considering that it would be a matter pernicious as an example if anyone should ascend to the summit of dignity through the cunning of subreption, considered by the counsel of our brothers that provision should be made in this manner. After the objectors have furnished an oath that they are not maliciously bringing a question of this kind against the aforesaid elect, the aforesaid three electors are to be bound by the bond of an oath to tell the truth concerning how many of the canons agreed upon the aforesaid archdeacon at the time of the examination.

If all three together, or at least two of them, say under oath that the greater part of the canons agreed upon the archdeacon himself, you are to impose silence upon the objectors, since their proof against this would be insufficient because they would each be singular in their testimonies.

But if it is established through their depositions that the often-mentioned archdeacon was nominated by the fewer, you are then at last solicitously to hear whatever each party proposes to prove the form according to which the power of electing is asserted to have been conceded to the aforesaid three electors. If it is sufficiently shown that, according to the form delivered to them, they ought to have elected from the body of the church the man upon whom all or the greater and sounder part of the chapter agreed, you are entirely to quash the election of the archdeacon himself and cause provision of a suitable person as bishop to be made for the church of Thérouanne through canonical election.

Otherwise, holding ratified what was done concerning him, you are, appeal being set aside, to restrain the objectors from their claim against him through ecclesiastical censure. You are to despoil the aforesaid B. of his prebend in the church of Thérouanne, since he bound himself to this penalty if perhaps he failed in his proof. Nor is the objection made against the elect concerning deficiency of age to prevent this, since the same canon did not greatly insist upon this objection and judgment concerning it was rendered by the metropolitan. His sentence passed into a matter adjudged because it was not suspended by a lawful appeal within ten days. [But if not all, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Nones of April, in the eleventh year, 1208.]

Latin source headnote: If, out of seven compromissaries, three elect a fourth, and he consents and is suitable, the election will be confirmed.

The same to the Bishop of Bayeux.

Since you are learned in the law and have an abundance of learned men, we cannot but wonder that you wished to consult us concerning certain articles of law which are known to contain no doubt or very little doubt.

The first article of your consultation contained that, when the dean of a certain church had died, the chapter of the same place submitted the matter by compromise to seven of its canons under this form: that the chapter itself would receive as dean the man whom all of them equally or the greater part of them nominated from among themselves or from others of the body of that church. Hence, when one of those seven was nominated as dean by three of them and another, who was not of their number, was nominated by three others, you asked which of them ought to be assumed by the chapter as dean.

Concerning this we answer you as follows: the man who is known to have been nominated by three of them from the number of the seven ought, according to the tenor of the compromise, to be assumed as dean, provided that he consents to the election made of him and no canonical impediment obstructs him. Furthermore, etc. (Cf. c. 31, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.29.) [Given at the Lateran, on the tenth day before the Kalends of December, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

Unde, quum unus ex illis septem a tribus ipsorum, et alius, qui non erat de numero eorundem, a tribus aliis in decanum fuerint nominati, requisisti, uter eorum assumi debeat a capitulo in decanum. Super quo tibi taliter respondemus, quod is, qui de numero septem a tribus eorum dignoscitur nominatus, iuxta compromissi tenorem debet in decanum assumi, dummodo electioni de se factae consentiat, et aliquod canonicum non obsistat. Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: The election of the emperor belongs to the German princes—three prelates and four laymen—and an election made by the greater part of them, the others not having been contemned, is valid. It belongs to the Pope to examine and approve the elect and, if he is worthy, to anoint, consecrate, and crown him; or, if he is unworthy, to reject him, as because he is sacrilegious, excommunicated, a tyrant, a fool and heretic, a pagan, a perjurer, or a persecutor of the Church. And when the electors are unwilling to elect, the Pope supplies their default. And when the votes of those electing are equal and no greater concord follows, the Pope can show favor to whom he wills. This is what this text notably says.

The same to the Duke of Carinthia.

We benignly received our venerable brother the Archbishop of Salzburg, our beloved son the Abbot of Salem, and the nobleman the Margrave of Austria, who were sent to the Apostolic See as messengers of certain princes, and considered that a benevolent hearing should be granted to them. We also caused the letters which certain noble princes sent through them to be diligently read through, and we noted everything contained in them.

Among other matters, certain princes especially employed this objection, saying that our venerable brother the Bishop of Palestrina, legate of the Apostolic See, acted either in the person of an elector or of a judge. If of an elector, he had put his sickle into another's harvest and, intruding himself into the election, derogated from the dignity of the princes. If of a judge, he appeared to have proceeded wrongly while one of the parties was absent, since it had not been cited and therefore ought not to have been adjudged contumacious.

But we, who according to the office of apostolic service are debtors to each person in justice, just as we are unwilling that our justice be usurped by others, so are we unwilling to claim for ourselves the right of the princes. As we ought, we recognize in those princes the right and power of electing the king who is afterward to be promoted as emperor, to whom it is known to belong by law and ancient custom, especially since a right and power of this kind came to them from the Apostolic See, which transferred the Roman Empire in the person of the magnificent Charles from the Greeks to the Germans.

But the princes also ought to recognize—and certainly do recognize, as they themselves acknowledged in our presence—that the right and authority of examining the person elected as king and to be promoted to the empire belongs to us, who anoint, consecrate, and crown him. For it is regularly and generally observed that examination of a person belongs to the one to whom imposition of the hand pertains.

For if the princes, not only in discord but even in concord, elected as king any sacrilegious or excommunicated man, a tyrant or a fool, a heretic, or a pagan, ought we to anoint, consecrate, and crown a man of this kind? Entirely far from it.

Therefore, answering the objection of the princes, we assert that our legate the Bishop of Palestrina, by approving our dearest son in Christ King Otto and rejecting Philip, Duke of Swabia, acted neither in the person of an elector—as certain princes objected to us through their letters—inasmuch as he neither caused anyone to be elected nor himself elected, and thus in no way intruded himself into the election; nor did he present the person of a judge, since he considered that the election of neither man, with respect to the act of those electing, should be confirmed or invalidated. Thus he in no way usurped the right of the princes for himself or acted against it.

Rather, he exercised the office of a denouncer, because he denounced the person of that duke as unworthy and the person of the king as suitable for obtaining the empire, not so much because of the partisanship of those electing as because of the merits of the elected persons. Nevertheless, more of those who by law and custom possess the power of electing the king to be promoted as emperor are reported to have assented to King Otto himself. And from the fact that the supporters of Duke Philip presumed to elect him while the others were absent and contemned, it is evident that they proceeded wrongly, since it is a rule of manifest law that the contempt of one person obstructs an election more than the contradiction of many.

Hence, because those who abused the power permitted to them merited losing their privilege, it can not undeservedly appear that, notwithstanding an injury of this kind, the others could use their own right. And because the aforesaid duke received the crown and anointing neither where he ought nor from whom he ought, whereas the aforesaid king received both where he ought—namely, at Aachen —and from whom he ought—namely, from our venerable brother the Archbishop of Cologne—we, as justice requires, regard and name not the duke but the other man as king.

In the rejection of the aforesaid Philip, Duke of Swabia, because of the manifest impediments of his person, there was need not of accusation but rather of condemnation, because manifest matters require not accusation but condemnation.

That, when the votes of the princes are divided in an election, after admonition and waiting we can favor one of the parties—especially after anointing, consecration, and coronation are sought from us, as each party has sought them from us many times—is evident equally from law and example. For if the princes, after being admonished and awaited, either could not or would not agree upon one purpose, shall the Apostolic See lack an advocate and defender, and shall their fault redound to its punishment?

The princes know, and your nobility is not ignorant, that, when Lothair and Conrad had been elected in discord, the Roman Pontiff crowned Lothair, and the crowned man obtained the empire, with Conrad only then returning to his favor.

We therefore considered that they should be admonished that, just as we refrain from injury to their right, so should they in no way show themselves injurious to our right. Rather, they should withdraw from the aforesaid duke, rejected by us in a just judgment, and should not refuse to adhere to the aforesaid King Otto, unless at last something lawful should be objected and shown by them against his person or the act.

(And below:) For the impediments of the Duke of Swabia are notorious: namely, public excommunication, manifest perjury, and the widely known persecution which his progenitors and he presumed to exercise against the Apostolic See and other churches.

He was also, because of the invasion and devastation of the patrimony of Blessed Peter, with admonition often first given, publicly and solemnly bound by the bond of excommunication by Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, while he was dwelling in Tuscany. He afterward acknowledged this when through his messenger he sought the benefit of absolution from our same predecessor. Later, after his election, he caused himself to be absolved secretly at Worms by the then Bishop of Sutri, whom we had sent into Germany with the Abbot of Saint Anastasius for the liberation of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Salerno, contrary to the form of our mandate and merely in fact, since in law he could not be absolved. Hence it is evident that he was elected while excommunicated.

It appears not undeservedly that he is still bound for the same cause by the sentence of excommunication, since the aforesaid bishop could not absolve him by his own authority, while by the authority of our delegation he could do no more, nor was he permitted to act otherwise, than had been conceded to him by the Apostolic See.

He is also manifestly believed to lie under the sentence of excommunication from this: the perfidious Markward, enemy of God and the Church, together with all his supporters, both German and Latin, is bound by the bonds of a publicly proclaimed excommunication for the merits of his iniquity. As we remember intimating to you through our letters directed through P., judge of Piacenza and the messenger of Philip himself—which we believe reached Philip's hearing—nevertheless, although this came to his knowledge not only from the report of the judge himself but also through public rumor, he not only communicates with the same excommunicated man but supports him in his malice and, through his messengers and letters, sharpens his fury so that our dearest son in Christ Frederick, illustrious King of Sicily, his nephew, whom he has already deprived of his paternal inheritance, may still be deprived of his maternal possession.

Contrary to his own oath, concerning which he did not seek counsel from the Apostolic See, the same man also presumed through the vice of ambition to usurp the kingdom for himself, rather than elect another as king because of necessity—which would have appeared somewhat more tolerable—although the Roman Church, in which by divine institution the plenitude of power resides, ought first to have been consulted concerning that oath, just as certain persons prudently consulted it.

Nor does it avail for his full excuse if that oath is said to have been unlawful, since he ought nevertheless to have consulted us concerning it before acting against it by his own temerity. This is especially so from the example that, although the Gibeonites obtained an oath from the children of Israel through fraud, nevertheless, after the fraud became known, the Israelites were unwilling rashly to act against it. No one of sound mind is ignorant that whether the said oath was lawful or unlawful, and therefore whether it had to be observed or not observed, belongs to our judgment.

We do not believe that the princes doubt that Philip is descended from a family of persecutors. Henry, who first received the empire from this family, presumed to capture Pope Paschal of good memory, our predecessor, together with bishops, cardinals, and many nobles of the Romans. Frederick, the father of Philip, for a long time fostered a schism against Pope Alexander of happy memory, our predecessor. You know sufficiently how Henry, Philip's brother, conducted himself toward the killers of Albert, Bishop of Liège of sacred memory, whom he had first compelled to go into exile, and how Conrad, who had captured the aforesaid Bishop of Ostia, conducted himself.

We believe it has reached your hearing and that of the other princes how that same Conrad caused our venerable brother the Bishop of Osimo to be struck with slaps, the hairs of his beard to be torn out, and him to be treated dishonorably in many ways; how he also caused certain familiars of the Roman Church to be mutilated in the nose; how he imprisoned the aforesaid Archbishop of Salerno; and how he caused certain ecclesiastical men to be roasted by flames and certain other men to be submerged in the sea.

Moreover, if the aforesaid duke—which God forbid—obtained the empire, the liberty of the princes in election would perish, and confidence of obtaining the empire would thereafter be taken from the others. For if, just as formerly the brother of the said duke succeeded their father, so the duke himself succeeded his brother, the empire would appear to be owed not by election but by succession. It would redound to the prejudice of the princes if it appeared that no one should be assumed to the empire except from the household of the aforesaid duke.

Therefore, since we can by no occasion whatsoever be deflected from our purpose but rather persist in it most steadfastly, and since you have often considered that it should be suggested to us through your letters that we should in no way favor the same duke, admonishing your nobility, we command by apostolic writings that, just as you trust in our favor and we hope in your devotion, you withdraw entirely hereafter from the aforesaid Duke Philip, notwithstanding an oath, if any, which you made to him by reason of the kingdom, since, he having been rejected with respect to obtaining the empire, an oath of this kind ought not to be observed.

But you are openly and powerfully to adhere to the aforesaid King Otto, whom, with the Lord granting, we propose to summon to the imperial crown, so that, when you have adhered to him at our admonition, you may especially merit obtaining his favor and benevolence among the first. For this, out of love for your nobility, we shall employ effective effort. [Given at the Lateran.]

Literas quoque, quas per eos quidam nobiles principes destinarunt, diligenter perlegi fecimus, et quae continebantur in eis, notavimus universa. Inter cetera vero quidam principes hac praecipue obiectione sunt usi, dicentes, quod venerabilis frater noster Praenestinus episcopus apostolicae sedis legatus aut electoris gessit aut cognitoris personam; si electoris, in messem alienam miserat falcem suam, et electioni se ingerens principum derogaverat dignitati; si cognitoris, absente altera partium, videtur perperam processisse, quum citata non fuerit, et ideo non debuit contumax iudicari. Verum nos, qui secundum apostolicae servitutis officium sumus singulis in iustitia debitores, sicut iustitiam nostram ab aliis nolumus usurpari, sic ius principum nobis nolumus vindicare. Verum illis principibus ius et potestatem eligendi regem, in imperatorem postmodum promovendum, recognoscimus, ut debemus, ad quos de iure ac antiqua consuetudine noscitur pertinere; praesertim, quum ad eos ius et potestas huiusmodi ab apostolica sede pervenerit, quae Romanum imperium in personam magnifici Caroli a Graecis transtulit in Germanos. Sed et principes recognoscere debent, et utique recognoscunt, sicut iidem in nostra recognovere praesentia, quod ius et auctoritas examinandi personam electam in regem et promovendam ad imperium ad nos spectat, qui eum inungimus, consecramus et coronamus. Est enim regulariter et generaliter observatum, ut ad eum examinatio personae pertineat, ad quem impositio manus spectat. Numquid enim, si principes non solum in discordia, sed etiam in concordia sacrilegum quemcunque, vel excommunicatum in regem, tyrannum, vel fatuum, haereticum eligerent, aut paganum, nos inungere, consecrare ac coronare hominem huiusmodi deberemus? Absit omnino. Obiectioni ergo principum respondentes, asserimus, quod legatus noster episcopus Praenestinus carissimum in Christo filium nostrum approbando regem Ottonem, et reprobando Philippum ducem Suaviae, nec electoris gessit personam, iuxta quod nobis per literas suas quidam principum opponebant, utpote qui nec fecit aliquem eligi, nec elegit, et sic electioni nequaquam ingessit se, nec cognitoris personam exhibuit, quum neutrius electionem quoad factum eligentium confirmandam duxerit, aut etiam infirmandam. Et sic ius sibi principum nullatenus usurpavit, aut venit contra illud, Exercuit autem denunciatoris officium, quia personam ducis eiusdem indignam, et personam regis denunciavit idoneam quoad imperium obtinendum, non tam propter studia eligentium, quam propter merita electorum; quamvis plures ex illis, qui eligendi regem in imperatorem promovendum de iure ac de consuetudine obtinent potestatem, consensisse perhibeantur in ipsum regem Ottonem, et ex eo, quod fautores Philippi ducis, absentibus aliis et contemptis, ipsum eligere praesumpserunt, pateat, eos perperam processisse, quum explorati sit iuris, quod electioni plus contemptus unius, quam contradictio multorum obsistat. Unde, quia privilegium meruerunt amittere, qui permissa sibi abusi sunt potestate, videri non immerito potest, quod iniuria huiusmodi non obstante ceteri uti poterint iure suo. Et quoniam dux praedictus nec ubi debuit, nec a quo debuit coronam et unctionem accepit, memoratus vero rex et ubi debuit, videlicet Aquisgrani, et a quo debuit, scilicet a venerabili fratre nostro Coloniensi archiepiscopo recepit utrumque; Nos utique non ducem, sed reliquum reputamus et nominamus regem iustitia exigente. In reprobatione vero praefati Philippi ducis Suaviae propter manifesta impedimenta personae non accusatione, sed condemnatione potius fuit opus, quia non accusatione, sed condemnatione indigent manifesta. Quod autem, quum in electione vota principum dividuntur, post admonitionem et exspectationem alteri partium favere possimus, maxime postquam a nobis unctio, consecratio et coronatio postulantur, sicut utraque pars a nobis multoties postulavit, ex iure patet pariter et exemplo. Numquid enim, si principes admoniti et exspectati vel non potuerunt, vel noluerunt in unum propositum convenire, sedes apostolica advocato et defensore carebit, eorumque culpa ipsi redundabit in poenam? Sciunt autem principes et tua nobilitas non ignorat, quod, quum Lotharius et Corradus in discordia fuissent electi, Romanus Pontifex Lotharium coronavit, et imperium obtinuit coronatus, eodem Corrado tunc demum ad eius gratiam redeunte. Eos igitur duximus commonendos, ut, sicut nos a iuris ipsorum cessamus iniuria, sic ipsi contra ius nostrum se nequaquam iniuriosos ostendant, sed a praefato duce, iusto quidem a nobis iudicio reprobato, recedant, et praefato regi Ottoni non abnuant adhaerere, nisi tunc demum contra personam vel factum legitimum quid ab eis obiectum fuerit et ostensum. (Et infra:) Sunt enim notoria impedimenta ducis Suaviae, scilicet excommunicatio publica, periurium manifestum, et persecutio divulgata, quam progenitores eius et ipse praesumpserunt in apostolicam sedem et alias ecclesias exercere. Fuit quoque a bonae memoriae Coelestino Papa praedecessore nostro propter invasionem et devastationem patrimonii beati Petri, commonitione saepe praemissa, publice ac solenniter excommunicationis vinculo innodatus, quum in Tuscia moraretur, quod ipse postmodum recognovit, dum per nuncium suum ab ipso praedecessore nostro absolutionis beneficium postulavit, et postmodum a tunc Sutrino episcopo, quem cum abbate sancti Anastasii pro liberatione venerabilis fratris nostri Salernitani archiepiscopi nos in Theutoniam miseramus, contra formam mandati nostri de facto solummodo, quia de iure non potuit, post suam electionem apud Wormatiam occulte se fecit absolvi. Unde patet, quod fuit excommunicatus electus. Et videtur non immerito, quod adhuc sit ex eadem causa excommunicationis sententia innodatus, quum praedictus episcopus eum sua auctoritate non posset absoluere, auctoritate vero nostrae delegationis nec posset plus, nec aliter liceret hoc ipsi, quam ei fuerat ab apostolica sede concessum. Ex eo etiam excommunicationis sententiae subiacere creditur manifeste, quod, quum perfidus Marcualdus, Dei et ecclesiae inimicus, cum universis fautoribus tam Theutonicis quam Latinis, excommunicationis vulgatae vinculis suae iniquitatis meritis sit adstrictus, sicut iam vobis per literas nostras directas per P. iudicem Placentinum ipsius Philippi nuncium intimasse meminimus, quas ad ipsius Philippi audientiam credimus pervenisse, ipse nihilominus, quamvis id non tantum ex relatione ipsius iudicis, sed etiam per publicam famam ad notitiam eius devenerit, eidem excommunicato non solum communicat, sed eum in malitia sua fovet, et per nuncios et literas suas exacuit furorem ipsius, ut carissimum in Christo filium nostrum Fridericum, Siciliae regem illustrem, nepotem suum, quem iam hereditate paterna privavit, adhuc privet possessione materna. Idem etiam contra proprium iuramentum, super quo nec consilium a sede apostolica requisivit, ambitionis vitio regnum sibi usurpare praesumpsit, non alium causa necessitatis in regem eligere, quod utcunque tolerabilius videretur, quum super illo iuramento prius Romana ecclesia consuli debuisset, sicut et eam quidam consuluere prudenter, apud quam ex institutione divina plenitudo residet potestatis. Nec valet ad plenam excusationem ipsius, si iuramentum illud dicatur illicitum, quum nihilominus super eo nos prius consulere debuisset, quam contra ipsum propria temeritate venire, praesertim illo exemplo, quod quum Gabaonitae a filiis Israel per fraudem surripuerint iuramentum, ipsi tamen cognita fraude contra illud venire temere noluerunt. Utrum vero dictum iuramentum sit licitum vel illicitum, et ideo servandum an non servandum exstiterit, nemo sanae mentis ignorat ad nostrum iudicium pertinere. Quod autem Philippus de genere persecutorum exsistat, principes non credimus dubitare, quum Henricus, qui primus imperium de genere hoc accepit, bonae memoriae Paschalem Papam praedecessorem nostrum cum episcopis, cardinalibus et multis nobilibus Romanorum praesumpserit captivare. Fridericus autem pater ipsius Philippi contra felicis recordationis Alexandrum Papam praedecessorem nostrum longo tempore schisma fovit. Henricus frater ipsius Philippi, qualiter se habuerit circa interfectores sanctae memoriae Alberti Leodiensis episcopi, quem ipse prius coegerat exsulare, ac Conradus, qui praedictum Ostiensem episcopum ceperat, satis nostis. Qui etiam qualiter venerabilem fratrem nostrum Auximanum episcopum alapis caedi fecerit, et pilos de barba eius avelli, et tractari eum in pluribus inhoneste, qualiter quoque quosdam familiares ecclesiae Romanae naso fecerit mutilari, qualiter praedictum Salernitanum archiepiscopum captivarit, et quosdam, viros ecclesiasticos flammis torreri fecerit, quosdam vero viros in mare submergi, ad tuam et aliorum principum credimus audientiam pervenisse. Insuper, si praedictus dux, quod absit, imperium obtineret, libertas principum in electione periret, et imperium obtinendi de cetero ceteris fiducia tolleretur. Nam si, prout olim frater dicti ducis patri eorum, sic dux ipse fratri suo succederet, videretur imperium non ex electione, sed ex successione deberi, et in praeiudicium principum redundaret, si non nisi de domo ducis praedicti videretur aliquis ad imperium assumendus. Quum ergo nos flecti a nostro proposito nulla penitus occasione possimus, sed in ea potius firmissime persistamus, et tu nobis saepe per literas tuas duxeris suggerendum, ut eidem duci nullatenus faveremus, nobilitatem ergo tuam monentes per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, sicut de gratia nostra confidis, et nos de tua devotione speramus, de cetero a praefato duce Philippo recedas omnino, non obstante iuramento, si quod ei ratione regni fecisti, quum, eo quantum ad obtinendum imperium reprobato, iuramentum huiusmodi non debeat observari. Praedicto vero regi Ottoni, quem nos, concedente Domino, ad coronam imperii disponimus evocare, patenter adhaereas et potenter; ut quum ei ad commonitionem nostram adhaeseris, inter primos gratiam et benevolentiam eius obtinere praecipue merearis, ad quod nos pro tuae nobilitatis amore dabimus operam efficacem [Dat. Latin source headnote: Those absent within the province are to be summoned to the election, and the election of the greater and sounder part is confirmed.

The same.

Before our beloved son, the cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Pudentiana (And below:) But if the election of each party has been quashed, you are, after summoning all the brothers who shall be in the province, to cause what you see to please the greater and sounder part of them concerning the aforesaid matters to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure.

Absentes ad electionem de provincia sunt vocandi, et confirmatur electio maioris et sanioris partis.

Idem.

Coram dilecto filio nostro tituli sanctae Pudentianae presbytero cardinali (Et infra:) Si vero utriusque partis fuerit cassata electio, vos, fratribus omnibus, qui fuerint in provincia, convocatis, quod maiori et saniori parti eorum super praedictis videritis complacere, per censuram ecclesiasticam faciatis firmiter observari.

Chapter XXXVI

Latin source headnote: An election made by the greater part is quashed when the lesser part has been contemned, even if it consists of one person alone; nevertheless, the right of electing does not devolve upon the lesser part. This is what it says according to the common understanding.

The same to the Bishop of Parma and his fellow judges.

When S., Bishop of Cremona of good memory, was at the point of death and his recovery was despaired of, the chapter of Cremona caused H., its canon who was applying himself to scholastic studies at Reggio, to be cited for a fixed term on the vigil of Pentecost for the election of a future bishop.

But on the second weekday after Pentecost, when the said bishop had entered upon the way of all flesh, the chapter, before his body had been delivered for burial and while the aforesaid canon was absent, conferred the power of electing a bishop upon four men from the chapter itself and three from the clergy of the city, with the express condition that the lesser part of those seven should follow the greater part in the election.

Accordingly, when deliberation concerning the election of a future pastor had been held after the death but nevertheless before the burial of the bishop himself, and their votes divided into parts—with four assenting to the archpriest, two to the archdeacon, and one to another man—at last, after he had been buried and the judgment of the lesser part acceded to that of the greater, they concordantly elected the same archpriest. The archdeacon assented to this election with the chapter and clergy of the city, no one contradicting.

But Hu., arriving afterward and asserting that he had been contemned and that an election of this kind was therefore of no moment, as though the right of electing had devolved upon him, elected the aforesaid archdeacon by himself as best he could.

When the said H. was constituted before us on behalf of his election and our beloved son I. on behalf of the election of the archpriest, we considered that the election presumed by H. after the election of the archpriest had not been quashed should be invalidated. Although it concerned a man of great learning, honorable life, and illustrious reputation, it had nevertheless been presumed with no little temerity, since H. ought to have awaited our judgment concerning the first election before proceeding to a second. As a penalty we prohibited him from having a voice of contradiction while the chapter persisted in its first assent.

But, as justice required, we quashed the election of the archpriest, although praiseworthy testimony was given concerning him: both because they held deliberation concerning the election itself, contrary to the canonical sanctions, while the body of the said bishop had not yet been delivered for burial, and because H. was found to have been contemned, although he was one person alone, since in such matters the contempt of one is customarily more prejudicial than the contradiction of many—as in the present case.

Nor ought the aforesaid citation to be said to have been valid, because, since it preceded the death of the bishop, it was excessively rash and therefore could not bind the person cited.

Moreover, wishing to provide for the church of Cremona with special solicitude, we grant and command that, if the chapter wishes to persist in its assent, you concede the archpriest himself by our authority as pastor to the church of Cremona. Otherwise, unless within eight days they provide for themselves and their church with a suitable person as bishop through a canonical and concordant election, you are by authority of the Apostolic See to take care to provide for them from the same archpriest or the archdeacon or another suitable man.

Verum secunda feria post Pentecosten, dicto episcopo viam universae carnis ingresso, capitulum, antequam corpus illius esset sepulturae traditum, absente canonico memorato, in quatuor de ipso capitulo et tres de clero civitatis potestatem eligendi pontificem contulerunt, expresso, ut minor pars illorum VII. sequeretur in electione maiorem. Habito itaque post mortem, sed ante sepulturam tamen ipsius episcopi, de futuri pastoris electione tractatu, quum vota illorum scinderentur in partes, quatuor in archipresbyterum, duobus in archidiaconum, uno in alium consentientibus, tandem, illo sepulto, minoris partis arbitrio ad iudicium accedente maioris, eundem archipresbyterum concorditer elegerunt. Cui electioni archidiaconus cum capitulo et clero civitatis nullo contradicente consensit. Verum adveniens postmodum Hu., et asserens se fuisse contemptum ac propter hoc electionem huiusmodi nullius fuisse momenti, quasi ius eligendi devolutum fuisset ad ipsum pro se, prout potuit archidiaconum memoratum elegit. Electionem autem archipresbyteri, quamvis laudabile testimonium perhibeatur de ipso, iustitia exigente cassavimus, tum quia, corpore dicti episcopi nondum tradito sepulturae, habuerunt de ipsa electione tractatum contra canonicas sanctiones, tum quia inventus est H. fuisse contemptus, licet unus solus exstiterit, quum plus in talibus consueverit contemptus unius obesse, quam multorum contradictio in praesenti. Nec praedicta debet dici citatio valuisse, quia, quum episcopi mortem praevenerint, temeraria nimis exstitit, et ideo non potuit arcere citatum. Adhaec volentes Cremonensi ecclesiae speciali sollicitudine providere, concedimus et mandamus ut si capitulum voluerit in suo perdurare consensu, ipsum archiepiscopum auctoritate nostra in pastorem Cremonensi ecclesiae concedatis, alioquin nisi forte infra VIII. dies de persona idonea in pontificem sibi et ecclesiae suae providerint per electionem canonicam et concordem, vos eisdem auctoritate sedis apostolicae de ipso archipresbytero vel archidiacono seu alio viro idoneo providere curetis.

Latin source headnote: One who is not a monk cannot be elected as a regular prelate.

The same.

When it recently came to our knowledge that H., who conducted himself as Abbot of Lisieux, had not been a monk before he was elected, we, considering that this had been attempted contrary to the regular traditions—since one ought to become a monk while having no hope or promise that he will be made abbot—took care, with the assent of our brothers, to invalidate the election made of him.

Wherefore we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you take care more strictly to prohibit on our behalf both the monks and the other faithful of the aforesaid monastery from daring to exhibit any obedience or reverence to the aforesaid H. by reason of the aforesaid election. If by making dispositions he has already wrongly attempted anything in the same monastery, we will that it have the force of no validity but be entirely invalidated. Quocirca fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus tam monachis quam aliis fidelibus monasterii memorati studeatis ex parte nostra districtius inhibere, ne praefato H. ullam obedientiam vel reverentiam propter iam dictam electionem audeant exhibere, et si quid in eodem monasterio, disponendo iam perperam attentavit, nullius robur habere volumus firmitatis, sed penitus irritari. Chapter XXXVIII

Latin source headnote: No one can be elected abbot unless he has been instructed in the monastic rule.

The same to Master C., cardinal-priest and legate of the Apostolic See.

You pursue the praiseworthy action of your office when you petition to be instructed by us concerning those matters about which you are in doubt.

Indeed, you intimated to us through your letters that, when a certain monastery suitably enriched with possessions but situated in the midst of a nation equally wicked and perverse lacked a pastor, the monks, deliberating concerning the election of an abbot, considered it necessary to elect some person through whose power they could be liberated from their persecutors. When they could not find a suitable person of their own order, they directed their eyes toward a certain nobleman through whom they could be better defended. At the counsel of certain men learned in the law, they approached his father, humbly petitioning that he induce his son to assume the monastic habit, giving the father no assurance concerning his promotion.

The father induced his son to do this. The son was provident and discreet, learned, and twenty-five years of age. He became a monk, no hope of elevation having been given to him, as he asserts; but on the day on which he became a monk, he was elected abbot. His election was confirmed by our beloved son G. de Lab., our subdeacon, rector of Messina, and legate of the Apostolic See, who was present for all the aforesaid matters.

Since the same man is prepared to purge himself of having been induced to this by any ambition, you petition through our letters to be instructed whether the said legate was able to confirm an election of this kind or to grant a dispensation, whether what was done can stand, and whether, after the election has been duly quashed, he can again be elected abbot.

We answer your consultation in this manner: since from the things which immediately followed it is shown that such a person cannot be elected abbot in such a manner, especially because he wished to be a master before he was a disciple, we have decreed that the election is invalid and void.

But after he has been competently instructed in the rule, if the urgent necessity and evident utility of the monastery itself demand it, after his purgation has been received he can be assumed as abbot, lest the monastery be oppressed by the incursions of the wicked. [Secondly, etc.—Cf. c. 11, On Testaments, III.26.]

> Officii tui prosequeris laudabilem actionem, quum super illis, de quibus dubitas, per nos postulas edoceri. Sane nobis tuis literis intimasti, quod, quum monasterium quoddam possessionibus convenienter ditatum, sed positum in medio nationis pravae pariter et perversae, pastore careret, monachi de electione abbatis tractantes, necessarium duxerint personam eligere aliquam, cuius potentia valeret a persecutoribus liberari; quum non possent sui ordinis idoneam invenire personam, in quendam virum nobilem oculos direxerunt, per quem poterant melius defensari, et consilio quorundam iuris peritorum patrem adierunt ipsius, humiliter postulantes, quod filium suum induceret, ut habitum susciperet monachalem, nullam patri de ipsius promotione fiduciam tribuentes. Et pater ad hoc induxit filium providum et discretum, literatum, XXV. annorum aetatis, qui effectus est monachus, nulla spe, ut asserit, de sublimatione tributa; sed die, in quo monachus est effectus, fuit in abbatem electus: cuius electio exstitit per dilectum filium nostrum G. de Lab. subdiaconum nostrum rectorem Messanensem apostolicae sedis legatum, qui omnibus praedictis interfuit, confirmata. Quum autem idem sit paratus purgare se, quod nulla fuit ad hoc ambitione inductus, per literas nostras postulas edoceri, utrum dictus legatus electionem huiusmodi confirmare, vel dispensare potuit, vel quod factum est stare possit, et utrum, electione rite cassata, iterum valeat eligi in abbatem? Nos autem consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum ex his, quae in continenti subsecuta sunt, ostendatur, quod talis taliter non possit eligi in abbatem, maxime pro eo, quod ante, quam esset discipulus, voluit esse magister, electionem illam irritam esse decrevimus et inanem. Verum, postquam fuerit in regula competenter instructus, si urgens necessitas et evidens utilitas ipsius monasterii postulaverit, purgatione recepta poterit in abbatem assumi, ne monasterium opprimatur incursibus malignorum. [Secundo etc. - cf. c. 11. de testam. III. 26.]

Chapter XXXIX

Latin source headnote: An election otherwise canonical is confirmed although certain of those electing were bound by a minor excommunication.

The same.

That daily pressure—[namely, the care of all the churches which surrounds the ministry of apostolic service—especially induces us to attend solicitously to their consolation and benignly to pursue their just desires with swift effect when they are destitute of the consolation of pastors, lest for want of a pastor they sustain loss in spiritual and temporal matters and the Lord's flock be left to the bites of wolves if there is no one to keep the watches of the night over it.

Indeed, when our venerable brother Albert, your archbishop, then elect, approached our presence, wishing with paternal solicitude to take counsel for the church of Magdeburg as for a special daughter—which has always shown itself devoted to its mother, the sacrosanct Roman Church, not only in prosperity but also in adversity—we had already some time ago diligently heard and understood what our beloved sons [name omitted], Provost of Saint Sebastian; [name omitted], Provost of Saint Mary; [name omitted], Provost of Mildensee; C. and C., canons of the greater church; Master Gernandus, canon of Saint Nicholas; and Litulfus, canon of Saint Peter of Magdeburg, had solicitously proposed before us both orally and in writing.]

Because we learned for certain that the election made of him had been canonical, we considered that it should be confirmed by apostolic authority, supplying from the plenitude of power any defect that might have existed in it from the fact that certain persons participated in his election who, merely through participation, had fallen into the snare of a simple excommunication, [as, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the sixth day before the Ides of February, in the ninth year, 1207.]

Chapter XL

Latin source headnote: If a postulation concurs with an election, and the number of those postulating is twice greater, and the person postulated is suitable, the postulation is admitted and the election rejected. But if the person postulated is unworthy and the greater part of those postulating were ignorant of this, the postulation and the election are rejected. But if they knew it and the elect is suitable, the election is confirmed; and likewise if the number of those postulating is not twice greater. This is what it says, understood according to what the common law contains.

Likewise to Master Maximus, our notary.

It is written in the Apocalypse of John that in the midst of the throne and around the throne were four living creatures, [full of eyes before and behind. The first living creature was like a lion; the second living creature was like a calf; the third living creature had a face as if of a man; and the fourth living creature was like a flying eagle. And the four living creatures, each of them, had six wings.

This throne is understood to be the Roman Church, which by customary expression is called the Apostolic See—certainly the throne of the Lamb, the throne of the one living forever and ever. In its midst, as if daughters in its bosom, reside, and around it, as if handmaids in service, stand the four patriarchal churches—Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Constantinople—which are designated by those four living creatures.

For Mark founded and governed the church of Alexandria. According to the vision of Ezekiel, he is understood through the lion because he began his Gospel from a roar, saying, "The voice of one crying in the desert"; and because, just as the lion is said after the third day to awaken its cub by its roar, so God the Father, by the power of his divinity, after three days raised his Son from the dead. That Son is described as the lion of the tribe of Judah, and Mark principally treats of his resurrection. Hence, on the day of the Lord's Resurrection, his Gospel is read in the Church by preeminence.

Luke, however, was Antiochene by nation. For that reason he is described in the figure of a calf, in which the priestly offering is designated, because, beginning his Gospel from the priesthood, he treated especially of the sacrifice of the supreme and true priest, who is the saving offering—namely, the fatted calf which the father ordered to be killed for the returning prodigal son. Hence the church of Antioch is well designated through him, for in it the Prince of the Apostles was first elevated by the faithful to the chair of the supreme priesthood.

Matthew indeed was Jewish by nation, and he first wrote the Gospel, even in Hebrew, in Judaea. For this reason he is designated through the likeness of a man, because, beginning his Gospel from the incarnation of Christ, he principally shows his human birth. Christ himself, assuming that birth for us from the Jews and in Judaea, consecrated the church of Jerusalem, the metropolis of the Jews, by his human presence. Concerning it, it had been said through the Prophet: "A man was made in her, and the Most High himself founded her."

John, however, founded the church of Asia, and he himself wrote the Apocalypse to the seven churches which are in Asia. The church of Constantinople, which at length merited to be preferred and set over these and the other churches of the Greeks, is deservedly designated through the eagle. For just as the eagle excels all birds in flight and the ray of the sun does not offend the gaze of its eyes, so John, leaving the other three living creatures upon the earth and ascending above the heavens of the heavens, beheld the true light with unstruck eyes and began his Gospel from the divine birth of the Word. Although he was last in time among all the Evangelists, he was nevertheless foremost in dignity, because, reclining above the breast of Christ at the supper, he drank the streams of doctrine from the very fountain of the Lord's sacred breast.

Thus the church of Constantinople, although later in time, was afterward, because of the honor of the most pious Constantine, elevated above the others in dignity. Thus the first were made last and the last first, so that it is deservedly said to her: "Many daughters have gathered riches, but you alone have surpassed them all."

For the governance of that church, such a pontiff is to be assumed as, in the likeness of those four living creatures, is full of eyes before and behind, so that with full light he may contemplate the mysteries of the Old and New Testaments, seeing past things through experience and foreseeing future things through caution. He ought also to have six wings—namely, knowledge of the six laws: natural, Mosaic, prophetic, evangelical, apostolic, and canonical. Flying between heaven and earth with perfect balance by these wings, he may fly from earthly to heavenly things and from temporal to eternal things.]

Indeed, to this church—namely, Constantinople—two [certain] living creatures have been called, would that they were full of eyes and had six wings: namely, our venerable brother the Archbishop of Heraclea and our beloved son the parish priest of Saint Paul in Venice, as was proposed before us through the proctors both of those postulating the archbishop and of those electing the parish priest.

[The proctors of those electing the parish priest proposed that, when the church of Constantinople was vacant, the canons of that church elected Ph., their dean, as their pastor. We quashed that election because it had been celebrated while certain persons who ought to have been present were excluded. Lest the care of a pastor long be wanting to the flock of the faithful, both the canons and certain others who said that they possessed a right in the election of the Patriarch of Constantinople assembled together to deliberate concerning an election.

When seven persons offered themselves on behalf of seven provosts, and certain others intruded themselves into deliberation concerning the election on behalf of the other prelates, after much contention they received both those seven persons and two others at the insistence of the whole body —those two, however, were to have only two votes—with their right in all respects saved both for the present and for the future, for the good of concord.

But it happened, when the enemy of the human race, who strives to rend the unity of the Church, oversowed tares in the Lord's harvest, that the votes divided into two parts. Nine of the canons and nine of the other aforesaid persons postulated the aforesaid archbishop; while fifteen canons and the Provost of the Holy Apostles elected the aforesaid parish priest. The cantor, who was absent for the utility of the church and before deliberation concerning the election had expressed through his letters his assent concerning the parish priest if he pleased the others, and eight other canons who were not present at the time of the election, furnished their assent. Thus the votes of twenty-four canons and one provost agreed upon the aforesaid parish priest.

They therefore said that the number of those postulating was smaller, since only eighteen postulated the archbishop. They endeavored to exclude certain of those whom they had admitted with the aforesaid reservation of their right—namely, the two Provosts of Blachernae and Boukoleon—because, since through a privilege of exemption obtained from the Apostolic See they had withdrawn themselves from the burden, they appeared tacitly to have renounced the honor, so that they did not pertain to the election of one to whom, once elected, they would in no way be subject.

Four others were not provosts but clerics of other churches who intruded themselves into deliberation concerning the election in the name of their provosts, because their lords were absent to such an extent that they neither could nor ought conveniently to be summoned to deliberation concerning the election. For if absent persons could be present through proctors, the rights of absent persons would scarcely ever devolve upon those present, since it would rarely happen that they could not participate either by themselves or through others.

The seventh, who had been present, had already been elected and confirmed as Archbishop of Verria and, having been transferred to his church, had obtained bodily possession of it.

Although the whole body of clerics had earlier petitioned that four persons be admitted on its behalf, nevertheless, because the party of the canons was unwilling to admit so many, lest the number of the others grow excessively, it was finally ordained for the good of peace that only two of them be admitted with the aforesaid reservation. Therefore, those electing asserted that the two had only two votes and not those of the others, especially since thirty provostships had been reduced to seven, although that reduction had not yet been approved by the authority of their judge.

They denied that there were at that time more than five or six conventual churches; and, if there had been more, they said nevertheless that their prelates were not present at the time of the aforesaid election.

Finally, they sought to convict those postulating of bad zeal because, as they proposed, the latter had knowingly postulated an illiterate and unchaste man. They said that his incontinence could be proved through a son begotten during his monastic life as a witness of his father's lust.

They also marked the same archbishop with ambition because, on the vigil of the Lord's Nativity, he withdrew himself from his church and was in the imperial city where the postulation was then to be celebrated, and he suffered himself, with the hymn "We Praise You, God," to be placed in the throne in which the patriarch was accustomed to sit on ordinary days.

Also, distributing by his own authority the goods of the patriarchate after the death of the patriarch, he violently seized its seal from the chamberlain's chest and sent to Ravenna certain letters upon which he impressed it. By the authority of those letters he caused a certain sum of money deposited there to be brought to him and distributed it according to the decision of his own will, to the prejudice and burden of the church of Constantinople. All this and other matters were proposed in the chapter when certain persons deliberated concerning postulating him.

Hence they petitioned that, since the party postulating the archbishop was smaller in number, inferior in zeal, and had fallen from its right by knowingly postulating an unworthy man, we deign to confirm the election canonically made of the said parish priest. This was especially so because they themselves had used the common law by electing an electable person, which belongs to ordinary law, while the others, despising the benefit of the common law, had flown to an extraordinary remedy.

To these matters the proctors of the other party answered that all the prelates of the conventual churches existing at Constantinople possess a right in the election of the Patriarch of Constantinople through our constitution. Hence, the whole body of prelates, for which express provision is made in that constitution, ought not to be restricted to seven, since by reason of their dignity good provision was made in this matter for the aforesaid church: both so that a sounder deliberation concerning the election might be held, since a judgment confirmed by the opinions of many is complete; and also so that, through the number of prelates, resistance might be offered to those who wished to possess God's sanctuary by hereditary right.

They also added that the two exempt provosts in no way lost the benefit of the aforesaid constitution through the privilege of exemption, since those things which are introduced in someone's favor ought not to redound to his injury, and through the privileges of the Roman Pontiffs additions, not subtractions, are customarily made for those to whom they are specially granted. This was especially so for the aforesaid reason: that they should prudently resist those who strive to usurp the Lord's sanctuary as a hereditary right.

Hence the same provosts could not and ought not to be excluded, also for the reason that seven persons in the name of the seven provosts, and two in the place and name of twenty-three prelates for the whole body itself, were admitted by the canons to deliberation concerning the election. Thus, since the votes of seven provosts and eighteen prelates present, together with those of six others absent whose proctors were present in the city, concurred upon the person postulated through their assent, they alleged a number more than twice greater for their party. For only fifteen canons and one provost had assented to the parish priest at the beginning, and no right accrued to him in this case through the subsequent assent of nine canons who were not present at the time of the election and who neither could nor ought conveniently to have been summoned. This was especially so since eight of them had been absent for so long that, according to the constitution of the patriarch and chapter of Constantinople, they would in no way be held as canons.

They also introduced authority on their behalf, since regularly a prelate is held to have greater authority than a simple canon.

They proved good zeal for the reason that they had postulated a Venetian who, through long association, was known for avoiding scandal, proved in praiseworthy administration, dear to clerics, and acceptable to laymen. The assent of the prince, the votes of the suffragans, and the desire of the people concurred upon him. They ought not to presume anything sinister concerning one whom both the excellence of his dignity and common reputation rendered illustrious.

Nor ought the adversaries, who were silent at the time of his promotion, to be heard unless perhaps they proposed something new or something they had learned afterward. This was especially so because the subsequent honorable conduct of a long period had erased the alleged stain of incontinence, if any perhaps had preceded in him, which they nevertheless wholly denied.

They also proposed that, unless the other party restrained itself from injuries, they intended to propose certain matters against both the persons of those electing and the elect.

For the excuse of the same archbishop concerning the objection of ambition, they proposed that he had come to Constantinople for an honorable and probable cause and had need to approach it frequently, both because of the affairs of the patriarchal church and because of execution of the last will of the deceased patriarch committed to his discretion. Although he participated in vespers and matins in the patriarchal church because of the solemnity of the day, he nevertheless sat in the place of the dean and usurped nothing of the patriarchal things.

They also said that he was learned, although not eminently, nevertheless competently, having sufficient understanding and eloquence concerning the scriptures and in the scriptures.

They alleged nevertheless that, even if certain conventual churches were then vacant or perhaps did not have a number of clerics because of poverty, the chapter itself, or even one person who held the place of the chapter, ought to be admitted to the election in place of the prelate, since in such matters the chapter is often accustomed to supply the place of the prelate, and the name and right of a corporate body often devolve upon one person and are retained in one.

Those electing the parish priest were likewise accused of bad zeal because they had elected a man whom, at the time of the election, they believed to have been constituted in minor orders. They asserted that on the vigil of the Lord's Nativity the other party at Constantinople had assented to the parish priest, who a little earlier had caused himself to be promoted to the subdiaconate at Venice.

From this it was inferred that, if this had been done by agreement, it could not lack ambition. But if it had not been prearranged, since because of the distance between the places this could not have reached those electing in so short a time, it followed that according to their own consciences they were electing an ineligible person. Or, if error—not free from accusation—were alleged as an excuse, negligence would come into the confession, which in these matters does not differ greatly from fault.

They added that it was more extraordinary to assent to a man constituted not only outside the entire patriarchate but even outside the entire empire than to a neighbor and familiar person, a suffragan of the same church concerning whose pastor's election deliberation was being held.

They also marked the person of the parish priest with vehement ambition, saying that through his letters he had expressly asked certain canons of Constantinople to elect him as their patriarch, which the opposing party denied.

Hence those postulating the often-mentioned archbishop petitioned that, since the other party was lesser in zeal, authority, and number, after quashing what had been done concerning the parish priest, we deign to admit their postulation.]

But because full proof could not be made to us concerning the matters brought into judgment through the assertions of the parties—although concerning what was said about the number of those postulating, through a certain public instrument and also through the confession of the proctor of the opposing party, indeed made in court but afterward revoked, the other party asserted that its contention was founded—we considered that the cause should be committed to your discretion.

We command by apostolic writings that you inquire most diligently into the truth concerning these and other matters: at Venice, concerning the merits of the elect and of the person postulated, where they were born and lived for a long time; and at Constantinople, concerning the zeal of those electing and those postulating, and generally concerning everything which can instruct the cause, where a postulation and election of this kind were celebrated.

If the parties assent, you are to proceed in this manner. If it is established that it was agreed by mutual assent that seven provosts should be admitted to the election of the patriarch, whether by themselves or through others, and two others on behalf of the whole body for the other prelates of the conventual churches; and that so many conventual churches then had prelates that, together with the seven provosts and the nine canons who are known to have agreed upon the postulation of the aforesaid archbishop, they would make a number twice greater than the sixteen electors of the parish priest, you are in our place to admit the postulation—unless it is proved that something from the canonical institutes obstructs the person postulated which ought to impede his promotion. After quashing the election of the parish priest, you are to absolve the archbishop himself from the bond by which he is bound to the church of Heraclea and grant him as pastor to the church of Constantinople.

But if all the aforesaid persons together were by no means sufficient to make a number twice greater, whether the person postulated was worthy or unworthy, after rejecting the postulation you are by our authority to confirm the election of the parish priest, provided that nothing obstructs him which renders him unworthy of so great a prelacy.

But if the number of those postulating is found to have been twice greater, as aforesaid, and the person postulated is found unworthy, you are not to delay rejecting both the postulation and the election, unless perhaps all or the greater part of those postulating, with damnable presumption, knowingly postulated an unworthy person, so that on this occasion they ought deservedly to be deprived of the power of electing or postulating. In this case also, you are to confirm the election if it is established that it was celebrated concerning a suitable person. [Moreover, etc. Given at Segni, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of September, in the fifteenth year of our pontificate, 1212.]

> Si postulatio cum electione concurrit, et numerus postulantium est duplo maior, et postulatus est idoneus, postulatio admittitur reiecta electione. Si vero indignus, et hoc maior pars postulantium ignoravit, postulatio et electio reprobatur. Si vero sciebant, et electus est idoneus, confirmatur electio, et idem, si numerus postulantium non est duplo maior. Hoc dicit intelligendo secundum quod continet ius commune.

> Scriptum est in Apocalypsi Ioannis, quod in medio sedis et in circuitu sedis erant quatuor animalia, [plena oculis ante et retro; primum animal simile leoni, secundum animal simile vitulo tertium animal habens faciem quasi hominis, et quartum animal simile aquilae volanti; et quatuor animalia singula eorum alas senas habebant. Sedes ista Romana ecclesia intelligitur, quae usitato vocabulo sedes apostolica nuncupatur, utique sedes agni sedes viventis in saecula saeculorum; in medio cuius quasi filiae in gremio resident et in circuitu adstunt quasi famulae in obsequio quatuor patriarchales ecclesiae, Alexandrina, Antiochena, Hierosolymitana et Constantinopolitana, quae per illa quatuor animalia designantur. Marcus enim Alexandrinam fundavit et rexit ecclesiam, qui secundum visionem Ezechielis accipitur per leonem, eo, quod evangelium inceperit a rugitu, dicendo: "Vox clamantis in deserto," et quia, quemadmodum leo catulum suum post diem tertium suo asseritur excitare rugitu, sic Deus Pater filium suum, qui leo de tribu Iuda esse describitur, de cuius resurrectione principaliter tractat Marcus, divinitatis suae potentia post triduum a mortuis suscitavit. Unde in die resurrectionis dominicae ipsius evangelium antonomastice in ecclesia recitatur. Lucas autem fuit natione Antiochenus; qui propterea in vituli figura describitur, in quo sacerdotalis hostia designatur, quoniam a sacerdotio inchoans evangelium, de immolatione tractavit praecipue summi sacerdotis et veri, qui est hostia salutaris, vitulus videlicet saginatus, quem pater iussit occidi pro filio prodigo redeunte. Unde bene per ipsum Antiochena ecclesia designatur, in qua primum Apostolorum princeps in summi sacerdotii cathedram a fidelibus exstitit sublimatus. Matthaeus quidem fuit natione Iudaeus, et evangelium primus descripsit etiam hebraice in Iudaea, et ob hoc per hominis speciem designatur, quod ab incarnatione Christi suum inchoans evangelium, principaliter humanam eius nativitatem ostendit, quam ipse Christus de Iudaeis et in Iudaea pro nobis assumens, Hierosolymitanam ecclesiam metropolim Iudaeorum sua humana praesentia consecravit, de qua dictum fuerat per Prophetam: "Homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit eam altissimus." Ioannes vero Asianam fundavit ecclesiam, et Apocalypsim septem ecclesiis, quae sunt in Asia, ipse descripsit, quibus et ceteris Graecorum ecclesiis Constantinopolitana tandem praeferri meruit et praeponi per aquilam merito designata, quia sicut aquila volatu omnes aves excellit, et oculorum eius intuitum solis radius non offendit, sic Ioannes tribus aliis animalibus in terra relictis, supra coelos coelorum ascendens, veram lucem oculis inverberatis adspexit, et a divina verbi nativitate suum evangelium inchoavit; qui, licet inter universos Evangelistas fuerit ultimus tempore, praecipuus tamen exstitit dignitate quoniam, in coena supra pectus Christi recumbens, fluenta doctrinae de ipso sacri dominici pectoris fonte potavit. Sic Constantinopolitana ecclesia, licet posterior tempore, postmodum propter honorificentiam piissimi Constantini praelata est aliis dignitate; sicque facti sunt primi novissimi, et novissimi primi, ut merito ipsi dicatur: "Multae filiae congregaverunt divitias, sed tu sola supergressa es universas." Ad cuius ecclesiae regimen talis est pontifex assumendus, qui ad similitudinem illorum quatuor animalium ante et retro plenus sit oculis, ut pleno lumine veteris et novi testamenti mysteria contempletur, per experientiam videns praeterita, et futura praevidens per cautelam. Debet etiam habere sex alas, scilicet sex legum notitiam, naturalis, MosaW?ae, et propheticae, evangelicae, apostolicae et canonicae, quibus perfecto libramine inter coelum volans et terram, de terris ad coelestia et de temporalibus transvolet ad aeterna.] Sane ad hanc ecclesiam, scilicet Constantinopolitanam, duo [quaedam] animalia sunt vocata, utinam plena oculis, et alas habentia senas, videlicet venerabilis frater noster Eradiensis archiepiscopus, et dilectus filius plebanus sancti Pauli de Venetiis, sicut per procuratores tam postulantium archiepiscopum, quam eligentium plebanum fuit propositum coram nobis. [Proposuerunt siquidem procuratores electorum plebani, quod, quum ecclesia Constantinopolitana vacante canonici Ph. decanum suum sibi elegerint in pastorem, et nos cassaverimus electionem eandem, quia quibusdam exclusis, qui adesse debuerunt, exstitit celebrata, ne diu gregi fidelium deesset cura pastoris, tam canonici quam quidam alii, qui se in electione Constantinopolitani patriarchae ius habere dicebant, ut de electione tractarent, adinvicem convenerunt. Quumque septem personae pro septem praepositis se offerrent, et quidam alii pro ceteris praelatis se tractatui electionis ingererent, post multam concertationem tam illas septem personas quam duas alias ad universitatis instantiam, quae tamen duas tantum voces haberent, salvo in omnibus iure suo tam in praesenti quam in futuro, pro bono concordiae receperunt. Sed factum est, quod humani generis inimico, qui unitatem ecclesiae scindere nititur, superseminante zizania messi dominicae, in duas partes sunt vota divisa, novem de canonicis et novem aliis praenominatis personis postulantibus archiepiscopum memoratum, et quindecim canonicis et praeposito sanctorum Apostolorum plebanum eligentibus supradictum; cuius electioni cantor, qui pro utilitate absens erat ecclesiae, et ante tractatum electionis per literas suas consensum expresserat de plebano, si aliis complaceret, et octo alii canonici, qui electionis tempore non fuere praesentes, suum praestitere consensum; et sic in plebanum praedictum vota viginti quatuor canonicorum et unius praepositi convenerunt. Dicebant ergo postulantium numerum esse minorem, quum decem et octo tantum archiepiscopum postularent; de quibus quosdam eorum, quos cum praefata protestatione sui iuris admiserant, excludere nitebantur, duos videlicet de Blakerna et Buccaleone praepositos; quia, quum per exemptionis privilegium a sede apostolica impetratum se subtraxerint oneri, tacite renunciasse videbantur honori, ut ad electionem non pertinerent illius, cui electo nullatenus subiacerent. Alii quatuor non erant praepositi, sed aliarum ecclesiarum clerici, qui se tractatui electionis suorum praepositorum nomine ingerebant, quia eorum domini adeo erant absentes, quod ad tractatum electionis vocari commode nec poterant, nec debebant; quoniam, si absentes possent per procuratores adesse, vix iura devolverentur absentium ad praesentes, quum raro contingeret, quod per se vel per alios interesse non possent. Septimus autem, qui praesens exstiterat, iam electus et confirmatus in archiepiscopum Verricensem et translatus ad suam ecclesiam, possessionem eiusdem adeptus fuerat corporalem. Et licet universitas clericorum quatuor prius pro se postularet admitti, quia tamen pars canonicorum tot nolebat admittere, ne numerus aliorum nimis excresceret, ita tandem pro bono pacis exstitit ordinatum, ut duo tantum admitterentur ex illis cum protestatione praedicta, et ideo eligentes asserebant illos duas tantum voces et non ceterorum habere, maxime quum triginta praepositurae fuerint ad septem redactae, quae tamen nondum fuerunt auctoritate sui iudicis approbatae. Conventuales autem ecclesias ultra quinque vel sex tunc temporis esse negabant, et, si plures fuissent, tempore tamen electionis praedictae praelatos earum dicebant non fuisse praesentes. De malo denique zelo intendebant arguere postulantes eo, quod, ut proponebant, illiteratum et impudicum ex certa scientia postularant; cuius incontinentiam dicebant per filium in monachatu genitum paternae libidinis testem posse probari. Eundem etiam archiepiscopum de ambitione notabant eo, quod in vigilia Nativitatis dominicae se suae subtraxit ecclesiae, et esset in urbe regia, ubi tunc erat postulatio celebranda, et passus est cum hymno "Te deum laudamus" se in sede locari, in qua profestis diebus residere consueverat patriarcha. Qui etiam auctoritate propria bona patriarchatus post mortem patriarchae distribuens, eiusdem sigillo violenter arrepto de scrinio camerarii, literas quasdam, quibus illud impressit, misit Ravennam, et quandam pecuniae summam ibi depositam auctoritate literarum illarum sibi fecit afferri, eandemque distribuit pro suae voluntatis arbitrio in ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae praeiudicium et gravamen, quod totum et alia in capitulo fuere proposita, quum quidam de ipso postulando tractarent. Unde petebant, ut, quum pars postulantium archiepiscopum esset numero minor, inferior zelo, et a suo iure ceciderit postulando scienter indignum, electionem confirmare factam de dicto plebano canonice dignaremur; maxime quum ipsi usi fuerint iure communi personam eligibilem eligendo, quod ordinarii iuris exsistit, et alii iuris communis contempto beneficio ad extraordinarium auxilium transvolarint. Ad haec procuratores partis alterius responderunt, quod universi praelati conventualium ecclesiarum apud Constantinopolim exsistentium per nostram constitutionem in electione Constantinopolitani patriarchae ius habent. Unde universitas praelatorum, de qua in eadem constitutione cavetur expresse, restringi non debet ad septem, quum ratione suae dignitatis in hoc bene fuerit ecclesiae memoratae provisum; tum ut sanior haberetur super electione tractatus, quum integrum sit iudicium plurimorum sententiis confirmatum; tum etiam, ut per numerum praelatorum illis posset occurri, qui Dei sanctuarium iure volebant hereditario possidere. Addebant etiam, quod praefatae constitutionis beneficium duo exempti praepositi per exemptionis privilegium nullatenus amiserunt, quum ea, quae in favorem alicuius introducta sunt, in eius laesionem non debeant redundare, et per privilegia Pontificum Romanorum addi, non subtrahi consueverit illis, quibus specialiter indulgentur, propter praedictam maxime rationem, ut illis obsisterent prudenter, qui Domini sanctuarium moliuntur in ius hereditarium usurpare. Unde iidem excludi non poterant nec debebant, ea etiam ratione, quod septem nomine septem praepositorum et duo vice ac nomine viginti trium praelatorum pro ipsa universitate fuerint a canonicis ad tractatum electionis admissi; et sic, quum in postulatum vota septem praepositorum et decem et octo praelatorum praesentium, et aliorum sex absentium, quorum procuratores erant in civitate praesentes, consensu mediante illorum concurrerint, pro parte sua ultra duplo maiorem numerum allegabant; quum in plebanum quindecim tantum canonici et unus praepositus a principio consensissent, nec aliquid ei iuris accreverit in hoc casu per subsequentem consensum novem canonicorum, qui electionis tempore non fuere praesentes, nec vocari potuerint commode nec deberent; praesertim quum octo ex illis tanto tempore fuissent absentes, quod secundum constitutionem patriarchae ac capituli Constantinopolitanorum pro canonicis nullatenus haberentur. Auctoritatem etiam introducebant pro se, quum regulariter maioris auctoritatis praelatus quam simplex canonicus habeatur. Bonum vero zelum ea ratione probabant, quod Venetum pro vitando scandalo longa conversatione notum, laudabili administratione probatum, carum clericis, et acceptum laicis postularant; in quem assensus principis, suffraganeorum vota plebisque desiderium concurrebant; nec debebant aliquid sinistrum de ille praesumere, quem et excellentia dignitatis et communis reddebat fama praeclarum. Nec etiam erant adversarii audiendi, qui promotionis eius tempore tacuerunt, nisi forte aliquid novum proponerent, vel quod postmodum didicissent, maxime quum obiectam notam incontinentiae, si qua forsitan praecessisset in ipso, quod tamen inficiabantur omnino, subsequens longae conversationis delevisset honestas. Proposuerunt etiam, quod nisi pars altera se ab iniuriis temperaret, intendebant quaedam proponere tam in personas eligentium quam electi. Ad excusationem vero eiusdem archiepiscopi super obiectione ambitus proponebant, quod idem ex honesta et probabili causa Constantinopolim venerat, et habebat necesse frequenter accedere, tum propter negotia patriarchalis ecclesiae, tum etiam propter exsecutionem ultimae voluntatis patriarchae defuncti suae discretioni commissae; qui licet interfuerit vesperis et matutinis in patriarchali ecclesia ob solennitatem diei, in loco tamen decani resedit, nec aliquid de patriarchalibus usurpavit. Ipsum etiam literatum, etsi non eminenter, competenter tamen esse dicebant, sufficientem intelligentiam et eloquentiam de scripturis et in scripturis habentem; nihilominus allegantes, quod, etsi quaedam conventuales ecclesiae tunc vacarent, aut forsan propter pauperiem non haberent numerum clericorum, ipsum capitulum, aut etiam unus, qui vicem capituli retineret, ad electionem pro praelato deberet admitti, quum in talibus saepe capitulum vicem consueverit supplere praelati, et nomen ac ius universitatis multotiens devolvatur ad unum et retineatur in uno. De malo nihilominus zelo arguebantur electores plebani eo, quod hominem elegerant, quem electionis tempore credebant in minoribus ordinibus constitutum, asserentes, quod in vigilia nativitatis dominicae altera pars apud Constantinopolim consenserat in plebanum, qui se paulo ante apud Venetias fecerat in subdiaconum promoveri. Ex quo inferebatur, quod, si hoc actum fuerit ex condicto, non poterat ambitione carere. Si vero praeordinatum non exstitit, quum propter locorum distantiam hoc ad eligentes tam brevi tempore nequiverit pervenisse, sequitur, quod secundum conscientias suas ineligibilem eligebant; vel si error ad excusationem accusatione non vacuam allegetur, in confessionem negligentia veniet, quae super iis non multum distat a culpa. Adiiciebant etiam, quod magis erat extraordinarium consentire in hominem, non solum extra totum patriarchatum, verum etiam extra totum imperium constitutum, quam in vicinum et familiarem, suffraganeum eiusdem ecclesiae, de cuius pastoris electione tractatur. Personam quoque plebani de vehementi ambitione notabant, dicentes, quod ipse per literas suas quosdam Constantinopolitanos canonicos expresse rogaverat, ut eum in suum eligerent patriarcham; quod pars adversa negabat. Unde petebant postulatores archiepiscopi saepedicti, ut, quum esset altera pars zelo, auctoritate ac numero minor, cassato quod factum fuerat de plebano, postulationem ipsorum admittere dignaremur.] Verum quia de his, quae per assertionem partium in iudicium deducta fuerant, nobis non potuit fieri plena fides, quamvis super his, quae de numero dicta sunt postulantium, per quoddam instrumentum publicum, nec non per confessionem procuratoris adversae partis in iudicio quidem factam, sed postea revocatam, pars altera assereret suam intentionem esse fundatam, causam discretioni tuae duximus committendam, per apostolica scripta mandantes, quatenus super his et aliis inquiras diligentissime veritatem, de meritis electi et postulati apud Venetias, ubi nati fuerunt et diutius conversati, de studiis autem eligentium et postulantium, et omnibus generaliter, quae causam possunt instruere, apud Constantinopolim, ubi huiusmodi postulatio et electio celebratae fuerunt, et, si partes consenserint, procedas hoc modo, ut, si constiterit de mutuo convenisse consensu, quod ad electionem patriarchae septem admitterentur praepositi, sive per se ipsos sive per alios, et duo alii ex parte universitatis pro ceteris conventualium ecclesiarum praelatis, totque tunc temporis conventuales ecclesias habuisse praelatos, quod cum septem praepositis et novem canonicis, quos quidem canonicos constat in postulatione praefati archiepiscopi convenisse, duplo maiorem facerent numerum quam sexdecim electores plebani, tu vice nostra postulationem admittas, (nisi probatum fuerit, postulato aliquid obviare de canonicis institutis, quod promotionem ipsius debeat impedire), ac plebani electione cassata ipsum archiepiscopum absolvas a vinculo, quo Eradiensi ecclesiae tenetur, concedendo ipsum Constantinopolitanae ecclesiae in pastorem. Quod si ad faciendum duplo maiorem numerum simul omnes praedicti minime sufficerent, sive dignus sive indignus fuerit postulatus, tu, postulatione repulsa, electionem plebani auctoritate nostra confirmes, dummodo nihil obsistat eidem, quod ipsum tanto praesulatu reddat indignum. Si vero numerus postulantium inventus fuerit duplo maior, quemadmodum praedictum est, et persona postulata reperta fuerit indigna, tu tam postulationem, quam electionem non differas reprobare, nisi forsan omnes aut maior pars postulantium praesumptione damnabili postulaverint scienter indignum, ut hac vice merito debeant eligendi seu postulandi potestate privari. Et hoc quoque casu electionem confirmes, si eam de persona idonea constiterit celebratam. [Porro etc. Dat. Signiae XV. Kal. Sept. Pont. nostr, Ao. XV. 1212.]

Chapter XLI

Latin source headnote: If those to whom the election belongs neglect to elect the prelate of a cathedral or regular church within three months, the nearest superior will order the church; but if he does not do so within another three months, he will be canonically punished.

The same in the general council.

Lest for lack of a pastor the rapacious wolf invade the Lord's flock, or a widowed church suffer grave loss in its property, wishing in this also to meet dangers to souls and to provide against loss to churches, we establish that a cathedral or regular church shall not lack a prelate for more than three months.

Within that period, if a just impediment ceases and an election has not been celebrated, those who ought to have elected shall lack the power of electing on that occasion, and the power of electing itself shall devolve upon the person who is known to preside as the nearest superior.

The person upon whom the power has devolved, having God before his eyes, shall not delay beyond three months canonically ordering the widowed church, with the counsel of his chapter and other prudent men, from a suitable person of that church itself or of another if a worthy person is not found in it, if he wishes to escape canonical punishment.

> Si illi, ad quos spectat electio, negligunt eligere praelatum cathedralis vel regularis ecclesiae infra tres menses, proximus superior ecclesiam ordinabit; quod si intra tres alios menses non fecerit, canonice punietur.
> Idem in concilio generali.
> Ne pro defectu pastoris gregem dominicum lupus rapax invadat, aut in facultatibus suis ecclesia viduata grave dispendium patiatur, volentes in hoc etiam occurrere periculis animarum, et ecclesiarum indemnitatibus providere, statuimus, ut ultra tres menses cathedralis vel regularis ecclesia praelato non vacet. Infra quos, iusto impedimento cessante si electio celebrata non fuerit, qui eligere debuerant, eligendi potestate careant ea vice, ac ipsa eligendi potestas ad eum, qui proximo, praeesse dignoscitur, devolvatur. Is vero, ad quem fuerit devoluta potestas, Deum prae oculis habens, non differat ultra tres menses cum consilio capituli sui et aliorum virorum prudentium viduatam ecclesiam de persona idonea ipsius quidem ecclesiae, vel alterius, si digna non reperiatur in illa, canonice ordinare, si canonicam voluerit effugere ultionem.

Chapter XLII

Latin source headnote: An election in cathedral churches must proceed through one of the three forms contained here—namely, scrutiny, compromise, and inspiration. An election celebrated otherwise is not valid, and those acting contrary to this are to be deprived of the power of electing on that occasion. This is what it says down to § But this. — § 1. It forbids appointing a proctor in the business of an election unless the conditions contained here concur, down to § Elections. Abbas Siculus. — § 2. It commands that elections be solemnly published and that clandestine elections be rejected. This is what it says down to the end. Abbas Siculus.

The same in the same council.

Because, on account of the diverse forms of elections which certain persons endeavor to devise, many impediments arise and great dangers threaten widowed churches, we establish that, when an election is to be celebrated, with all those present who ought, wish, and are conveniently able to participate, three trustworthy persons from the college are to be assumed. Secretly and individually they are diligently to ascertain the votes of all and, having reduced them to writing, immediately publish them in common, with no impediment of appeal whatsoever interposed, so that, after a comparison has been made, the person upon whom all or the greater and sounder part of the chapter agrees may be elected.

Or at least the power of electing is to be committed to certain suitable men, who in place of all may provide a pastor for the widowed church. An election made otherwise shall not be valid, unless perhaps it was celebrated in common by all, as if through inspiration, without defect. Those who attempt to elect contrary to the prescribed forms shall be deprived of the power of electing on that occasion.

§ 1. But this we entirely forbid: that anyone appoint a proctor in the business of an election unless he is absent in a place from which he ought to be summoned and, detained by a just impediment, cannot come. Concerning this, if there is need, he is to furnish proof by oath; and then, if he wishes, he may commit his authority to one person from that college itself.

§ 2. We also reject clandestine elections, establishing that, as soon as an election has been celebrated, it is to be solemnly published.

> Per aliquam de tribus formis hic contentis, scilicet scrutinii, compromissi et inspirationis, procedi debet ad electionem in ecclesiis cathedralibus; aliter electio celebrata non valet, et contra facientes privandi sunt ea vice potestate eligendi. Latin source headnote: One who assents to an election made of himself through abuse of secular power is rendered ineligible for a dignity, and the election is null. Those electing are suspended from benefices for three years and are then deprived of the power of electing.

The same in the same council.

Whoever, contrary to canonical liberty, presumes to assent to an election made of himself through abuse of secular power shall both lack the advantage of the election and be rendered ineligible, nor without a dispensation can he be elected to any dignity.

Those who presume to celebrate an election of this kind, which we judge to be invalid by the law itself, shall be entirely suspended from offices and benefices for three years, being then deprived of the power of electing.

Chapter XLIV

Latin source headnote: If through negligence a prelate has confirmed an unworthy person elected to the governance of souls, he loses the power of confirming that person's first successor and is suspended from receipt of his own benefice, and the person promoted is cast down. But if he did this through malice, he is punished more gravely. Persons elected who are immediately subject to the Pope ought to approach the Pope in person or through instructed persons and seek confirmation. If they were elected in concord and are very remote—namely, situated beyond Italy—they administer in the meantime, in such manner, however, that they alienate nothing; but they are blessed and consecrated as has been customary.

The same in the same council.

There is nothing which harms the Church of God more than that unworthy prelates are assumed to the governance of souls. Wishing, therefore, to apply a necessary remedy to this disease, we sanction by an irrefragable constitution that, when anyone has been elected to the governance of souls, the person to whom his confirmation belongs shall diligently examine both the course of the election and the person of the elect, so that, when all things have duly concurred, he may bestow upon him the gift of confirmation. For if otherwise something has been incautiously presumed, not only is the person unworthily promoted to be cast down, but the person unworthily promoting is also to be punished.

We decree that the latter is to be punished by this correction: when his negligence is established, especially if he has approved a man of insufficient knowledge, dishonorable life, or unlawful age, he shall not only lack the power of confirming that man's first successor but shall also, lest by some chance he escape punishment, be suspended from receipt of his own benefice until, if it is equitable, he can merit indulgence. But if he is convicted of having transgressed in this through malice, he shall lie under a graver punishment.

§ 1. Bishops also shall take care to promote to sacred orders and ecclesiastical dignities such persons as can worthily fulfill the office committed to them, if they themselves desire to escape canonical punishment.

§ 2. Moreover, those who pertain immediately to the Roman Pontiff shall, to receive confirmation of their office, present themselves personally before his sight if this can conveniently be done, or transmit suitable persons through whom diligent inquiry concerning the elections and the elected can be held. Thus at last, through the circumspection of his counsel, they may obtain the plenitude of their office when nothing from the canonical institutes obstructs them. Meanwhile, however, those very remote—namely, situated beyond Italy—if they were elected in concord, may by dispensation, because of the necessities and utilities of the churches, administer in spiritual and temporal matters, in such manner nevertheless that they alienate absolutely nothing from ecclesiastical property. They shall receive the gift of blessing or consecration just as they have hitherto been accustomed to receive it.

Latin source headnote: An election celebrated after an interval following the comparison is not valid. This says, according to the more common opinion.

The same to the Bishop-elect of Lyon.

After the resignation of our venerable brother, the former Archbishop of Lyon, had been urgently sought and at last obtained, the votes of the canons of Lyon agreed unanimously upon you, then their provost. But, when at length we had examined the course of your election, as was fitting, we found that it had been delayed for some time after the publication of the assents and the discussion of the comparison, and that your assent had been sought before you were elected. Justice therefore requiring it, we quashed that election solely because of its disorderly course. [The third day before the Ides of January, in the eighth year—1224.]

Chapter XLVII

Latin source headnote: A monk of one monastery who has been made abbot of another has no voice in the election of the abbot of the former monastery, even if such a right was reserved to him by the abbot and monks of the former monastery.

The same to the Prior of Évreux and Master Guy of Canopo.

When the proctors of our beloved sons, the abbots of Saint-Taurin of Évreux and Saint-Leufroy de la Croix, and of the monastery of Fécamp, had appeared in our presence, we appointed our beloved brother B., cardinal-priest of the title of Saints John and Paul, as auditor. Before him the proctors of the aforesaid abbots alleged that, when the aforesaid monastery—which belongs immediately to the Roman Church—was vacant, the monks of that place, in contempt of the aforesaid abbots, who conveniently could and by right ought to have been summoned, rashly proceeded to the election of an abbot and presumed to elect Ethard, formerly Abbot of Saint-Josse, who was insufficiently suitable for its governance. They therefore sought to have an election of this kind rendered wholly void. But when the proctors of those abbots were ordered to state by what right the abbots themselves ought to take part in the election of the abbot of the monastery of Fécamp, they answered that formerly, when they were taken up as abbots in their own monasteries, it had been specially granted to them by the abbot and convent of the monastery of Fécamp that they should have a voice in the chapter of the same. We, however, judging a reason of this kind frivolous, with the counsel of our brothers impose perpetual silence upon the aforesaid abbots concerning this matter.

Textual note: The source prints Eboracensi and Eboracensis, forms that ordinarily denote York. The Norman institutional context identifies the place here as Évreux (Ebroicensis): Saint-Taurin was an abbey of Évreux, and the dispute concerns Fécamp and Saint-Leufroy de la Croix.

Iudoci ad eiusdem regimen minus idoneum eligere praesumpserunt, quare petebant electionem huiusmodi penitus irritari. Chapter XLVIII

Latin source headnote: An election ought to be made by word, and of him upon whom the greater part of the chapter has agreed, and not with regard to the other factions.

The same to the Chapter of Rouen.

Your church being deprived of a pastor, and your votes being divided in different directions when you were deliberating about the future succession of a prelate, some of you agreed upon Thomas, some upon the chancellor, and particular persons upon particular persons of the same church. But when many things had been alleged on both sides concerning these matters in the presence of us and of our brothers, we found that those who directed their desires toward Thomas, although they constituted the greater faction in comparison with the smaller factions, nevertheless did not amount to the greater part of the chapter. We considered, moreover, that after the publication of the assents and the discussion of the comparison no procedure toward an election had taken place, although the solemn ceremony of conducting him was carried out even after a lawful appeal; it would neither be fitting nor expedient for that ceremony to be held as an election. Hence, with the counsel of our brothers, we quashed what was done concerning the aforesaid T., the petition of those agreeing upon the chancellor likewise not being admitted.

Verum quum super his in nostra et nostrorum fratrum praesentia multa fuissent hinc inde proposita, invenimus, quod illi, qui sua in Thomam desideria dirigebant, licet maiorem partem facerent partium comparatione minorum, non tamen ad maiorem partem capituli pervenerunt. Consideravimus nihilominus, quod post publicationem consensuum et collationis tractatum ad electionem nullus habitus est processus, quamvis deportationis solennitas etiam post appellationem legitimam fuerit subsecuta, quam pro electione nec deceret, nec etiam expediret haberi. Unde de fratrum nostrorum consilio quod factum est de T. praedicto cassavimus, petitione consentientium etiam in cancellarium non admissa.

Latin source headnote: One who has not made profession cannot be elected as abbot.

Gregory IX.

Since one who has not assumed the form of a disciple ought not to be assumed as a master, nor ought one who does not know how to be subject be placed over others, we, having learned from you that in certain religious houses subject to you by diocesan right some persons who have not professed a religious order have been taken up as abbots, command that—since those ought not to be abbots who have not become monks or canons regular by profession—you proceed, the obstacle of appeal having been removed, to the removal of those whom you find to be such.

Chapter L

Latin source headnote: An election made by less than the greater part of the chapter, with the comparison omitted, is not valid.

The same to the Chapter of Como.

The church of Como being deprived of the consolation of a pastor, and those of the canons of Como who were present having assembled on the day fixed for celebrating the election, together with three abbots [namely, those of Saint Abbondio, Saint Carpophorus, and Saint Julian of Como], who are known to have a voice in the election, the chaplains and clerics of the city, saying that they ought to take part in the election, were admitted under this protest: that the vote of those who ought not to take part by law or custom would not be valid. At length, after a scrutiny had been held in accordance with the form of the general council, seven of the canons, one of the abbots, eleven chaplains, and nine clerics agreed upon the archpriest of the same church, while nine canons, one of the abbots, one chaplain, and eleven clerics directed their votes toward the archdeacon of that church.

[And when the proctors of both of them had come into our presence concerning the election, we appointed our beloved son O., cardinal-deacon of Saint Nicholas in the Tullian Prison, as their auditor; and when he had faithfully reported to us the things that had been alleged before him,] since there were eighteen canons, three abbots, twenty clerics, and fourteen chaplains, we found that neither election had attained the greater part of the whole chapter. Nor had it been proved [by the same proctors] that the clerics ought to have been admitted, or that the chaplains had been admitted by custom or by law. For, although the chaplains had taken part in two elections of bishops and had furnished scrutineers of the votes, nevertheless it is not proved that their own votes had been ascertained or that they had elected anyone. But even if their votes had been ascertained or they themselves had elected anyone, it was nevertheless not established by this that such a right belonged to them by law or by a custom already acquired by prescription. Hence we, with the counsel of our brothers, decreed that those presumed elections—made also contrary to the form of the general council, since the comparison in common, which ought to have taken place after publication of the scrutiny, had been omitted—must be judicially rendered void, [and] we deprive the electors of the power of electing on this occasion. [Given at the Lateran, the twelfth day before the Kalends of April, in the second year—1228.]

Iuliani Cumani] qui vocem in electione habere noscuntur, capellani et clerici civitatis, electioni se debere interesse dicentes, sub huiusmodi protestatione admissi fuerunt, quod vox eorum, qui non deberent interesse de iure vel consuetudine, non valeret. Tandem praemisso iuxta formam concilii generalis scrutinio, VII. de canonicis, unus abbatum, XI. capellani et novem clerici in eiusdem ecclesiae archipresbyterum convenerunt, novem canonicis, uno de abbatibus, uno capellano et XI. clericis in ipsius ecclesiae archidiaconum dirigentibus vota sua. Nec probatum fuerat, [ab eisdem procuratoribus] quod clerici admitti debuerint, nec quod capellani admissi fuerint de consuetudine vel de iure. Nam etsi capellani duabus electionibus episcoporum interfuerint, et scrutatores dederint voluntatum, non tamen inquisita vota sua fuisse, vel eos aliquos elegisse probatur. Sed et si inquisita fuissent vota, vel ipsi aliquos elegissent, per hoc tamen non constitit, id eis de iure competere, vel ex consuetudine iam praescripta. Unde nos electiones ipsas praesumptas etiam contra formam concilii generalis, quum collatio in communi omissa fuerit, quae post publicationem scrutinii fieri debuisset, de fratrum nostrorum consilio sententialiter duximus irritandas, [et] electores hac vice eligendi potestate privantes, [Dat. Chapter LI

Latin source headnote: Through an agreement made with a prelate and chapter, the right of electing cannot belong to a layman, even to a patron, in a collegiate church.

The same to the Abbot of Cluny.

The Holy Roman Church (And below:) Indeed, you proposed in our presence that, concerning the appointment of the prior of the monastery of Saint Pancras, which belongs to the church of Cluny, a certain predecessor of yours, with the assent of his chapter, entered into an agreement with the Count of Varenne, its patron, which was contrary to law and harmful to the church itself: namely, that it should be at the choice of the count himself to take for the priorship of the said monastery—only the priors of Cluny and La Charité being excepted—one of the two best men of the whole Cluniac order whom the abbot should consider fit to nominate. (And below:) Considering, therefore, that the right of electing in a collegiate church does not fall to a layman, and that this would consequently be pernicious as an example and would redound to the detriment of ecclesiastical liberty, we will that, notwithstanding that agreement, you may freely make provision for the said priory just as for the other priories subject to you, notifying the patron of the appointment made so that, if he wishes, his honorable assent may be imparted.

(Et infra:) Attendentes itaque, quod ius eligendi in collegiata ecclesia non cadit in laicum, et ideo id esset perniciosum exemplo, et redundaret in dispendium ecclesiasticae libertatis, volumus, ut dictum prioratum libere possis, non obstante compositione ipsa, sicut alios prioratus tibi subditos ordinare, denunciando ordinationem factam patrono, ut suum, si voluerit, honestum impertiatur assensum.

Chapter LII

Latin source headnote: If those having the right to elect are commanded by the Pope to elect with the counsel of certain persons, failing which the counselors are to make provision, the electors ought to seek the counsel during the deliberation concerning the election and await a response for a suitable time; otherwise the election does not hold.

The same to the Dean and Chapters of Saint John and Saint Stephen of Besançon.

Since in the old law (And below:) Indeed, some time ago we commanded you that, within forty days after receipt of our letters, with the counsel of the abbots of Saint-Bénigne and Morimond and of Brother G. of the Order of Preachers, you were canonically to elect a suitable person as pastor; otherwise, the said counselors were to provide you with an archbishop. But on the day fixed for electing, six of you conferred the power of electing, which was to last until the consumption of a certain candle that was then lit there. At length, when electors of this kind had agreed upon the aforesaid Abbot of Saint-Bénigne and had sought the counsel of his associates concerning this, one of them proposed that they should answer after deliberate counsel. While they delayed giving them a prompt response, the aforesaid electors, because the candle was failing, did not await their counsel but elected the said abbot as Archbishop of Besançon. (And below:) Therefore, when the business had been reported to the Apostolic See, we enjoined the Archbishop of Vienne and the Abbot of La Ferté that, if it were established that the same electors had held a deliberation concerning the election and that the counsel of the aforesaid persons had been sought during the deliberation concerning the election, they should confirm the election of the abbot himself if his person was suitable. But if their counsel had not been sought during the deliberation concerning the election, although it had afterward been sought at an unsuitable time and their response had not even been awaited, or if that abbot were not suitable, they were to render void, as invalid, what had been done concerning him. (And below:) Since, however, it was not found that counsel concerning the person of the aforesaid abbot had been sought at a suitable time, and, when it was sought, their response was awaited only for a short time, and since it ought not to be imputed to others that those men had so greatly narrowed the time for themselves, we have decreed that the election of the abbot himself is to be rendered void, not because of a defect in the person, but because of a defect in the election.

Verum die ad eligendum praefixa sex ex vobis potestatem eligendi dedistis, usque ad consumptionem cuiusdam candelae, quae ibidem accensa exstitit, duraturam. Tandem quum electores huiusmodi convenissent in praedictum abbatem sancti Benigni, et super hoc sociorum eius consilium requisissent, proponente uno ex illis, quod deliberato consilio responderent, et differentibus eis festinanter dare responsum, praefati electores, quum candela ipsa deficeret, non exspectato ipsorum consilio, dictum abbatem in Bisuntinensem archiepiscopum elegerunt. (Et infra:) Relato ergo ad apostolicam sedem negotio, archiepiscopo Viennensi et abbati de Firmitate iniunximus, ut, si constaret ab eisdem electoribus de electione tractatum fuisse habitum, et in tractatu electionis praedictorum consilium requisitum, electionem ipsius abbatis, si persona esset idonea, confirmarent. Quod si in tractatu electionis non fuisset illorum consilium requisitum, licet postea requisitum fuerit non competenti tempore, nec etiam exspectatum responsum ipsorum, aut non esset idoneus idem abbas, quod de ipso factum erat tanquam invalidum irritarent. (Et infra:) Quum autem compertum non fuerit competenti tempore requisitum consilium de persona praedicti abbatis, et quando exstitit requisitum, non fuit exspectatum responsum nisi modico tempore, nec debeat aliis imputari, quod in tantum illi sibi tempus arctarant, electionem abbatis ipsius, non personae, sed electionis vitio duximus irritandam.

Chapter LIII

Latin source headnote: If the greater part of a chapter knowingly elects an unworthy person, the election of a worthy person by the lesser part is valid, even if made from the same scrutiny. This it says according to the truer and intrinsic understanding.

The same to the Bishop of Senlis.

When the chapter of Nevers had assembled for the election of a future pastor, thirteen agreed upon the dean and eighteen upon the cantor of that church, the vote of the proctor of a certain absentee being counted. Since more persons had directed their desires toward him and fewer toward the other, the cantor was elected by his own faction as pastor of the church of Nevers. Afterward, the faction of the dean, believing that the others had gravely offended by electing a person devoid of literary learning, by reason of which, according to the statutes of the Lateran Council, those others were deprived by the law itself of the power of electing and the power of electing had devolved upon them, elected as their bishop the dean himself, toward whom they had directed their votes, and appealed to the Apostolic See. (And below:) The others petitioned that we deign to render void the election of the dean, as one attempted by the fewer and after another election had not been quashed, and to confirm the other as one canonically celebrated by the greater number concerning a suitable person. We therefore command that, if the said cantor does not suffer from a defect in literary learning and is otherwise suitable for pastoral governance, you take care by our authority to confirm his election, after invalidating the other. Otherwise, after pronouncing the election of the cantor himself void, by the same authority you shall place the aforesaid dean over the said church, provided that nothing in the canonical statutes obstructs him.

Chapter LIV

Latin source headnote: One who has several dignities or several benefices with cure of souls is ineligible without a dispensation from the Pope. This it says as regards the title.

The same to the Bishop of Senlis, John of Montmirail the Archdeacon, and the Succentor of Paris.

Some time ago, when the church of Rouen was deprived of the consolation of a pastor, A. the archdeacon and certain other canons of that church approached the Apostolic See against an election that had been celebrated in the same church. When the said archdeacon, on behalf of himself and his faction, and G. the archdeacon, proctor of those who had celebrated the election, had appeared in our presence, among the other things that had been objected against the elect, the aforesaid archdeacon alleged that, after the general council, the same elect obtained the archdeaconry of Amiens and presumed to retain it together with several parish churches that he had obtained before that council; and, after relinquishing the archdeaconry, he retained the aforesaid churches.

§ 1. Hence, since it was established in the same council that whoever receives any benefice having the cure of souls annexed to it, if he previously held such a benefice, is deprived of the latter by the law itself, and, if perchance he contends to retain it, shall be despoiled of the other also, the aforesaid elect, by acting contrary to statutes of this kind, incurred from the plurality of benefices the mark of transgression as well as the vice of cupidity, which he ought to have reproved in others. And by retaining benefices that did not belong to him—since after the receipt of the other benefice the former benefices had become vacant by the law itself—he consequently handled the property of another, and thus in a certain manner committed theft or rapine. To the detriment of his own salvation and of many souls he also retained the aforesaid parish churches, although their cure, of which he had already been deprived by the law itself, in no way belonged to him; and thus those souls were damnably deceived through him.

§ 2. But the proctor of those who had elected him, although before us in judicial proceedings he admitted a plurality of benefices of this kind, nevertheless strove in many ways to excuse that elect through a grant of the Archbishop of Rouen exhibited to us. We, therefore, admitting that excuse in no way, as being frivolous, commanded you that, if it were established that, after receiving the aforesaid archdeaconry having the cure of souls, he retained the aforesaid parish churches at the time of the election and did not show that the Apostolic See had dispensed with him concerning this, you should quash his election by apostolic authority. (And below:) When the parties had therefore appeared in your presence because of this, an oath to tell the truth had also been taken, and formal allegations and responses had been made on both sides, at length, when the same dean appealed to our hearing on the pretext of certain grievances, you rendered an election of this kind void and provided the same church with the Bishop of Le Mans. (And below:)

§ 3. Although formal allegations and responses were made before you upon several articles, nevertheless, because we did not find that the issue had been joined—since joinder of issue takes place not through formal allegations and responses made to them, but through a petition proposed in law and a response made—we decreed, with the counsel of our brothers, that those proceedings were to be pronounced void.

§ 4. At length the archdeacon petitioned that the election be rendered void for the aforesaid reason, while the aforesaid elect answered that his election was not to be rendered void. But when the issue had lawfully been joined before us and an oath to tell the truth had been taken by the parties, the same elect, although he admitted that he had held the said benefices at the time of the election, nevertheless strove to excuse himself concerning this, namely because he did not believe that the said archdeaconry had the cure of souls. But since in judicial proceedings he admitted that the Archdeacon of Amiens customarily suspends, excommunicates, and absolves priests and priors, places parish churches under interdict, and also visits, inquires into those matters that he sees ought to be investigated, and receives procurations by reason of visitation, it plainly appears that the archdeaconry has the cure of souls annexed to it. Even if it did not have that cure, he cannot deny that it is a personate, since the same judgment is to be made concerning personates as concerning benefices having the cure of souls.

§ 5. Moreover, we judged invalid the indulgence that he asserts he has concerning this, since in obtaining it he suggested a falsehood and suppressed the truth, although, had the former been concealed or the latter expressed, he would in no way have obtained it. For he suggested that he had canonically obtained the aforesaid parish churches before he was assumed as archdeacon, although no one could hold several parish churches unless one depended upon the other, or unless he had one by title and the other in commendam. Hence, since he had both of those churches by title, he could not have held them canonically. Likewise, by suggesting that the revenues of his personate were slight and meager, he suppressed the fact that he was known to hold other revenues in several churches. He also suppressed the fact that he held several parish churches together with several other benefices in different churches, although it was not our intention to dispense with him in so many benefices, especially those having the cure of souls; nor was it our intention to grant anything new, but only that through the indulgence he might lawfully retain what he already had. (And below:)

§ 6. At length, when nothing remained except that sentence be rendered, of his own free will he relinquished both the right, if any seemed to belong to him, and the suit; we decreed that his relinquishment was to be admitted.

Unde, quum in eodem concilio sit statutum, ut, quicunque receperit aliquod beneficium, curam animarum habens annexam, si prius tale beneficium obtinebat, eo sit ipso iure privatus, et si forte illud retinere contenderit, etiam alio spolietur, praedictus electus contra huiusmodi veniens statuta, transgressionis notam, nec non cupiditatis vitium, quod in aliis reprobare debuerat, ex pluralitate beneficiorum incurrit. Et retinendo beneficia, quae non spectabant ad ipsum, quum post receptionem alterius priora beneficia vacaverint ipso iure, rem contrectavit per consequens alienam, et sic furtum commisit quodammodo vel rapinam. In suae quoque salutis et multarum animarum dispendium praedictas parochiales ecclesias retinebat, quum earum cura, qua iam privatus fuerat ipso iure, ad eum nullatenus pertineret, et sic per ipsum eadem animae damnabiliter sunt deceptae. § 2. Verum procurator eorum, qui elegerant ipsum, etsi pluralitatem beneficiorum huiusmodi coram nobis profiteretur in iure, per concessionem tamen Rothomagensis archiepiscopi nobis exhibitam eundem electum nisus est multipliciter excusare. Nos igitur dictam excusationem, utpote frivolam, nullatenus admittentes, vobis dedimus in mandatis, ut, si constaret, quod idem post receptum archidiaconatum praedictum, curam animarum habentem, praefatas parochiales ecclesias electionis tempore retineret, nec ostenderet secum per sedem apostolicam super hoc dispensatum, electionem illius auctoritate apostolica cassaretis. (Et infra:) Partibus ergo propter hoc in vestra praesentia constitutis, praestito quoque iuramento de veritate dicenda, et factis positionibus et responsionibus hinc inde, tandem eodem decano praetextu quorundam gravaminum ad nostram audientiam appellante, vos electionem huiusmodi irritantes, eidem ecclesiae de Cenomanensi episcopo providistis, (Et infra:) § 3. Licet autem positiones et responsiones super pluribus articulis factae fuerint coram vobis, quia tamen contestationem litis non invenimus esse factam, quum non per positiones et responsiones ad eas factas, sed per petitionem in iure propositam et responsionem factam contestatio litis fiat, eundem processum de fratrum nostrorum consilio irritum duximus nunciandum. § 4. Tandem archidiaconus electionem ex praemissa causa petiit irritari, electo respondente praedicto, quod non erat eius electio irritanda. Lite vero coram nobis legitime contestata, praestitoque de veritate dicenda a partibus iuramento, idem electus, etsi confiteretur, se dicta beneficia electionis tempore tenuisse, tamen excusare se super hoc nihilominus nitebatur, quia videlicet dictum archidiaconatum non credebat curam animarum habere. Sed quum in iure confessus fuerit quod archidiaconus Ambianensis de consuetudine suspendit, excommunicat et absolvit presbyteros et priores, et parochiales ecclesias interdicit, nec non archidiaconus visitat, et inquirit quae viderit inquirenda, et procurationes ratione visitationis recipit, evidenter apparet, quod curam habeat animarum annexam. Quam si etiam non haberet, negare non potest, quin personatus exsistat, quum idem de personatibus, quod et de beneficiis curam animarum habentibus, iudicium sit habendum. § 5. Insuper indulgentiam, quam super hoc asserit se habere, invalidam reputavimus, quum in ea falsitatem suggesserit, et suppresserit veritatem, qua tacita vel expressa ipsam nullatenus habuisset. Suggessit enim, quod praedictas parochiales ecclesias, antequam fuisset in archidiaconum assumptus, canonice fuerat assecutus, quum nullus potuerit plures parochiales ecclesias obtinere, nisi una penderet ex altera, vel unam intitulatam, et alteram commendatam haberet. Unde, quum idem utramque illarum intitulatam haberet, ipsas nequivit canonice habuisse. Item suggerens, quod reditus personatus sui erant tenues et exiles, suppressit, quod alios reditus in pluribus ecclesiis noscitur obtinere. Suppressit etiam, quod plures parochiales ecclesias cum pluribus aliis beneficiis in diversis ecclesiis obtineret, quum intentionis nostrae non fuerit, secum in tot beneficiis, praesertim habentibus curam animarum, dispensare, nec intentionis nostrae fuerit, aliquid de novo concedere, sed ut per indulgentiam posset habita licite retinere. (Et infra:) § 6. Tandem quum non restaret, nisi proferenda sententia, idem tam iuri, si quod ei competere videbatur, quam liti cessit spontanea voluntate; cuius cessionem duximus admittendam.

Chapter LV

Latin source headnote: An election is void if it was not preceded by a comparison, or if it was not made by the greater part of the chapter, or if it was not common.

The same.

In Genesis it is read (And below:) Since provision is made in the council that, after a comparison has been held, he is to be elected upon whom all or the greater and sounder part of the chapter agrees; and since the greater part of the whole chapter did not agree upon G., although he had the greater faction in comparison with the smaller factions; and since there was no full comparison of number with number, because whether G. and H., concerning whom the adversaries raise a question, had a voice in the election was neither deliberated nor determined; and since no comparison was made of zeal with zeal or merit with merit; and since the election was not even celebrated in common—for, although the individuals had each individually agreed upon the same G., nevertheless an individual election ought not to have followed, but a common one, lest either the same thing seem to be repeated or from this there follow the absurdity that there should be as many elections in number as there were electors; nor from individual or particular assents would a universal or common election appear, although each individual assent expresses the truth of its own part, just as a universal proposition does not appear from individual propositions, although true, unless perhaps it is expressed through a universal sign; and since the aforesaid two canons could not be excluded in this way, because the first was in possession or quasi-possession of a canonry, having a stall in the choir and a place in the chapter, reading and chanting as a canon, and had been summoned as a canon to deliberations and elections of dignities and personates that arose to be made from time to time, although on this occasion he was admitted under protest, while the second was in such a place that he ought to have been summoned from it to the election, since by the custom of the Gallican Church absentees are summoned from the whole kingdom of France—we, having understood these matters more fully, with the counsel of our brothers decree the aforesaid election void and empty, as one attempted contrary to the form of the council.

Chapter LVI

Latin source headnote: The election of a bishop made by laymen and canons is not valid, even if custom supports this. This it says, and it is customarily cited every day.

The same to the Chapter of Massa.

When the church of Massa was vacant of a pastor (And below:) By a perpetual edict we prohibit an election of a bishop from being presumed by laymen together with canons. If perchance such an election has been presumed, it shall obtain no firmness, notwithstanding a contrary custom, which ought rather to be called a corruption.

> Non valet electio pontificis per laicos et canonicos faxcta, etiamsi hoc habeat consuetudo. Hoc dic. et quotidie solet allegari.
>
> Idem Capitulo Massano.
>
> Massana ecclesia pastore vacante (Et infra:) Edicto perpetuo prohibemus ne per laicos cum canonicis pontificis electio praesumatur. Quae si forte praesumpta fuerit, nullam obtineat firmitatem, non obstante contraria consuetudine, quae dici debet potius corruptela.

Chapter LVII

Latin source headnote: It is not sufficient for the confirmation of an election that it was made by the greater part of the chapter unless that part is also the sounder.

The same to the Chapter of Châlons.

When your church was deprived of a pastor, you assembled together and, in the absence of G., who was then unwilling to take part, established a date for celebrating the election. But when the date arrived, and the said G., since he was absent, had not been summoned, after a scrutiny had been held according to the form of the general council, fourteen elected Master G., cardinal-priest and your fellow canon, and seventeen elected R., a canon of Reims; afterward, the aforesaid G. furnished his assent to the election of the same R.

At length, when the proctors of both factions had appeared in our presence, it was alleged on behalf of the election of the said R. that, because it exceeded the other by four when the aforesaid G. was counted, it had the greater part of the chapter, and through this his faction ought to be regarded as the sounder, since where there is a greater number, better zeal is presumed. But the other faction attacked that election in many ways, alleging that the aforesaid R. suffered from a defect of age and did not possess sufficient learning for the aforesaid church, whereas the aforesaid cardinal was of mature age and eminent learning; and, since the cardinal's electors excelled the others in merits and authority, especially when regard was had to the person elected, it was established that they had better zeal. It was said besides that the assent of the said G.—whom the faction of the same R. admitted to have been contemned, while the other faction asserted that the chapter had rather been contemned by him—could add nothing, since it was not furnished in the scrutiny but acceded after the election. (And below:)

Finally, the statute of the general council that decrees an election invalid when an offense is committed in an election against the form of that council ought not to be referred to contempt and to other matters that do not belong to the form. Hence, what is said there—that an election celebrated otherwise is not valid—regards only those things that are attempted against the form of the aforesaid council, and not other things that are set down there, such as the requirement that the procedure in an election be held with all those present who ought, wish, and are conveniently able to take part; otherwise, the other things known to have been established elsewhere concerning this would seem to be overthrown by one word. For it is not to be believed that the Roman Pontiff, who protects laws, wished by one word to overturn what had elsewhere been devised through many vigils and discovered.

We, therefore, having more fully understood the things alleged on both sides, since by the Lateran Council the greater and sounder part of the chapter is required in the ordering of churches, and the statute of the general council contains, among other things, that he is to be elected upon whom all or the greater and sounder part agrees, have decreed, with the counsel of our brothers, that the election of the said R. is to be judicially rendered void—not because of a defect in the person, but rather because of a defect in the election—since the greater and sounder part did not agree upon him.

> Non sufficit ad confirmationem electionis, quod sit facta a maiori parte capituli, nisi etiam illa pars sit sanior.
> Idem Capitulo Cathalanensi.
> Ecclesia vestra destituta pastore, convenientes in unum, absente G., qui tunc noluit interesse, ad celebrandam electionem terminum statuistis. Veniente vero termino, et dicto G., quum absens exsisteret, non vocato, praemisso iuxta formam concilii generalis scrutinio, XIV. magistrum G. presbyterum cardinalem, concanonicum vestrum, et XVII. R. Remensem canonicum elegerunt, praefato G. postmodum electioni eiusdem R. suum praebente consensum. Tandem procuratoribus utriusque partis in nostra praesentia constitutis, allegabatur pro electione dicti R., quod, quum in IV. excederet aliam, computato G. praedicto, maiorem capituli partem habebat, et per hoc debebat pars sua sanior reputari, quum, ubi maior numerus est, zelus melior praesumatur. Pars vero altera electionem eandem multipliciter impugnabat, proponens, praenominatum R. in aetate pati defectum, nec esse sufficientis scientiae ad ecclesiam supradictam, quum aetatis maturae et eminentis scientiae praefatus cardinalis exsistat, et, quum electores cardinalis alios meritis et auctoritate praecellerent, habito praesertim respectu ad personam electam, meliorem zelum eos habuisse constabat. Dicebatur praeterea, quod consensus dicti G., quem pars eiusdem R. confitebatur fuisse contemptum, asserente parte reliqua, capitulum potius contemptum ab ipso fuisse, quum non fuerit consensus praestitus in scrutinio, sed post electionem accesserit, adiicere nil valebat. (Et infra:) Denique statutum generalis concilii, quod electionem decernit invalidam, quum contra eiusdem concilii formam in electione peccatur, non debet ad contemptum et ad alia, quae non sunt de forma, referri. Unde quod ibi dicitur, quod aliter electio celebrata non valeat, ea respicit tantum, quae attentantur contra formam concilii memorati, non autem alia, quae ponuntur ibidem, sicut est istud, quod praesentibus omnibus, qui debent, volunt et possunt commode interesse, haberi debeat in electione processus, ne cetera, quae super hoc alibi statuta noscuntur, uno verbo videbantur everti. Neque enim credendum est, Romanum Pontificem, qui iura tuetur, quod alias excogitatum est multis vigiliis et inventum, uno verbo subvertere voluisse. Nos ergo, quae hinc inde fuere proposita, plenius intellectis, quum ex Lateranensi concilio in ordinationibus ecclesiarum maior et sanior pars capituli exigatur, et statutum generalis concilii contineat inter cetera, ut is eligatur, in quem omnes, vel maior et sanior pars consentit, electionem dicti R. non personae, sed potius electionis vitio, quum maior et sanior pars non consenserit in eundem, de fratrum nostrorum consilio duximus sententialiter irritandam.

Chapter LVIII

Latin source headnote: Once the scrutiny has been published, the electors cannot change their votes, but they ought to be compelled to proceed to the comparison and election.

The same.

Once the scrutiny has been published, the electors cannot change their votes, since the comparison is to be made and the election celebrated. If it is necessary, they are to be compelled to this by the superior.

> Publicato scrutinio non possunt electores variare, sed compelli debent ad collationem et electionem.

Chapter LIX

Latin source headnote: When an election has been quashed because of simony, even without fault of the elect, the bishop does not dispense with the person quashed on that occasion; it is otherwise if the elect freely resigned. This it says according to the understanding of gloss 2 at the end.

The same.

If it happens that someone's election is rejected because of simony committed without his knowledge and not ratified by him, the bishop cannot dispense with him on that occasion concerning the prelacy to which he had been elected in such a manner, although, with regard to one who unknowingly receives a simple benefice through simoniacal depravity, a dispensation by the bishop after a free resignation is tolerated.

> Cassata electione propter simoniam, etiam sine culpa electi, non dispensat episcopus ea vice cum cassato; secus si electus libere resignavit. H. d. secundum intellectum glossae 2. in fin.

> Si alicuius electionem propter simoniam, eo ignorante ac ratum non habente commissam, contigerit reprobari, cum eo super praelatione, ad quam taliter fuerat electus, illa vice non potest episcopus dispensare, quamvis circa eum, qui ignoranter recipit simplex beneficium per simoniacam pravitatem, post liberam resignationem episcopi dispensatio toleretur.

Chapter LX

Latin source headnote: Time runs against impeded electors if they are able to remove the impediment.

The same.

For those who are forbidden to presume to elect without the license of a superior, the time established by the canon runs from the point at which they are in delay in seeking such a license.

> Electoribus impeditis currit tempus, si possunt impedimentum tollere.
>
> Idem.

> His, quibus interdicitur, ut absque superioris licentia eligere non praesumant, tempus statutum a canone currit, ex quo in mora fuerint licentiam huiusmodi postulandi.

Title VII: On the Translation of a Bishop

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A patriarch who transfers one confirmed as archbishop to an episcopal see is suspended from the confirmation of bishops. Johannes Andreae.

Innocent III to the Patriarch of Antioch.

Since from that general privilege which our Lord granted to blessed Peter and, through him, to the Roman Church, canonical institutes afterward flowed, containing that the greater causes of the Church are to be brought to the Apostolic See; and since through this the translations of bishops, like their depositions, and changes of sees belong by law to the supreme prelate of the Apostolic See, and nothing concerning these matters ought to be altered without his assent: we wonder not a little and are moved that [you], following the example of your predecessor—who is said, by a movement of his own will, to have transferred the Archbishop of Mamistra to Tarsus—transferred L., formerly elect of Apamea, to the church of Tripoli. Nor was it sufficient for you merely to imitate the aforesaid presumption of your predecessor; rather, to our injury you even surpassed his excess and, by a certain new kind of change, made the greater small and in a certain manner diminished the great, presuming to make an archbishop a bishop—or rather, to un-archbishop him—although your said predecessor transferred the aforesaid archbishop from the church of Tarsus to a church of like dignity.

For although the said L. had not yet been consecrated as archbishop, he had nevertheless received the gift of confirmation and had exercised archiepiscopal functions insofar as it was lawful for him, as became known to us through his own account; for, when he had appeared in our presence, he asserted that he had confirmed the Bishop of Valania. Therefore, lest boldness to perpetrate similar acts be furnished to others if so great an excess should be left unpunished, we have decreed that you are to be suspended from the confirmation of bishops until we establish otherwise concerning this, [knowing, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of April, 1198.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The Pope alone can transfer persons elected and confirmed as bishops.

The same to the Dean and Chapter of Angers.

Between corporeal and spiritual things we have recognized this difference: corporeal things are more easily destroyed than constructed, but spiritual things are more easily constructed than destroyed. Hence, according to the canonical sanctions, a bishop alone can give an honor, but he alone cannot take it away. Bishops also receive the gift of consecration from their metropolitans, but they cannot be condemned except through the Roman Pontiff.

Since, therefore, the spiritual bond is stronger than the carnal, it ought not to be doubted that almighty God reserved for his judgment alone the dissolution of the spiritual marriage that exists between a bishop and a church, for he also reserved for his judgment alone the dissolution of the carnal marriage that exists between a man and a woman, commanding that man not separate those whom God has joined. For a spiritual marriage is dissolved not by human but rather by divine power, when by the authority of the Roman Pontiff—who is established to be the vicar of Jesus Christ—a bishop is removed from a church through translation, deposition, or even resignation. Consequently these three things which we have set forth are reserved to the Roman Pontiff alone, not so much by canonical constitution as by divine institution.

For just as a consecrated bishop ought not leave his church without the license of the Roman Pontiff, so also one elected [and] confirmed cannot, apart from his assent, leave his church, to which he is bound matrimonially. It ought not to be called into doubt that, after canonical election and confirmation, a spiritual marriage is contracted between the persons of the electors and the elect. Episcopal dignity assuredly adds nothing to this, since one endowed with episcopal dignity can nevertheless be the bishop of no church, as happens with one who renounces the burden of the pontificate but not its honor. Hence, since the bond of a bishop to a church is not greater than that of an elect—especially when he has been confirmed—but is entirely the same and not another, the same rule of law obtains in both. Therefore, just as the translation, or even the deposition and resignation, of bishops, so also that of elects after confirmation is, by reason of the spiritual marriage, reserved to the Roman Pontiff alone. Although down to these times what had been provided concerning bishops had not been expressed concerning elects, nevertheless, because of the manifest similarity—or rather identity—it could seem doubtful to no one looking closely, since the same judgment is to be made concerning similar things.

§ 1. Nor could the passage read in the canon concerning an elect support those who understood otherwise: that if through his own negligence he keeps a church widowed for more than six months, he is to receive the gift of consecration neither there nor elsewhere, but rather is to yield to the judgment of his metropolitan. For a church is not understood to be widowed as though it has no spouse, but because, since its spouse has not yet been consecrated, it still remains in certain respects as though deprived of the consolation of a husband; just as, according to the common manner of speaking, that church is called widowed which, although it has a bishop, is nevertheless said to have a useless one.

Nor ought what follows concerning yielding, and was established as a penalty, be drawn into a favor, so that, just as an elect is cast down by the judgment of his metropolitan, he may likewise be transferred to another church—especially since even the aforesaid resignation or casting down does not occur without the authority of the Roman Pontiff, who granted to metropolitans by that canon that they could do these things. Hence, if he had wished the same thing to be done concerning translation as he had said concerning resignation, he could also have expressed it concerning translation. What has not been sanctioned by a decree of the holy Fathers is not to be presumed through superstitious inventions, especially since that which is not found to have been granted is sometimes understood to have been prohibited.

§ 2. Indeed, because the Archbishop of Tours presumed, apart from the authority of the Apostolic See, to transfer the elect of Avranches—afterward confirmed by his metropolitan—to your church and to consecrate him as bishop, and because our venerable brother the Archbishop of Rouen also, without our mandate, released him and granted him license to pass over, the Archbishop of Bourges, according to the tenor of our mandate, suspended the aforesaid archbishops, who ought at least to have consulted the Apostolic See concerning this new matter that had arisen, especially since according to the canonical sanctions the greater ecclesiastical causes are to be referred to the Apostolic See, from the consecration and confirmation of pontiffs alike, and suspended the bishop from the exercise of the pontifical office.

And although the same Archbishops of Tours and Rouen, as the greater persons, transgressed more in the aforesaid matters, while the aforesaid bishop transgressed less, inasmuch as he followed the error of those greater persons, nevertheless, having learned through the letters and messengers of those archbishops of their spontaneous confession and devout supplication, we granted pardon for their error, because they sinned not from malignity but from simplicity.

And because the aforesaid bishop, who had both sinned less and, as appears from the foregoing, had been chastised more severely, approached the Apostolic See, though of his own free will yet not without many labors and expenses, humbly and devoutly acknowledging his guilt, seeking mercy and not demanding judgment, we held a common deliberation with our brothers concerning his deed. Looking closely, we saw that, although the gift of consecration had been bestowed upon him, it had made him the pontiff neither of the first church nor of the second: of the first, because he had not been consecrated for it; and of the second, because, while the former bond endured, he could not canonically be consecrated for it, since he was still conjugally bound to the other.

Nevertheless, prudently attending to the fact that both the urgent necessity and the evident utility of your church—since you could not agree upon another suitable person—required the favor of dispensation, after absolving him entirely, from the plenitude of power, both from the bond of the former church and from the penalty of suspension, we decreed, from the benignity of the Apostolic See, that it should be granted to him that, since the former assent has endured until now, as was intimated to us through the letters of the persons of your church, he is to strive to govern the church of Angers as its proper pontiff, to the glory and praise of God's name, to the honor and exaltation of that church, and to the salvation and utility of himself and of both the clergy and people committed to him, so that, with divine grace preceding and following, he may wish and be able to profit more than to preside [etc. Given at the Lateran, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of February, 1199.]

Quum ergo fortius sit spirituale vinculum quam carnale, dubitari non debet, quin omnipotens Deus spirituale coniugium, quod est inter episcopum et ecclesiam, suo tantum iudicio reservaverit dissolvendum, qui dissolutionem etiam carnalis coniugii, quod est inter virum et feminam, suo tantum iudicio reservavit, praecipiens, ut quos Deus coniunxit homo non separet. Non enim humana, sed potius divina potestate coniugium spirituale dissolvitur, quum per translationem, vel depositionem, aut etiam cessionem auctoritate Romani Pontificis, quem constat esse vicarium Iesu Christi, episcopus ab ecclesia removetur: et ideo tria haec, quae praemisimus, non tam constitutione canonica, quam institutione divina soli sunt Romano Pontifici reservata. Nec quod de cessione subsequitur, et statutum fuit ad poenam, trahi debet ad gratiam, ut, sicut metropolitani iudicio electus deiicitur, ita etiam ad aliam ecclesiam possit transferri, praesertim quum nec sine auctoritate Romani Pontificis fiat cessio vel deiectio memorata, qui, ut haec possent, ex illo canone metropolitanis indulsit. Unde, si circa translationem idem fieri voluisset, quod de cessione dixerat, et de translatione poterat expressisse, et quod non est sanctorum Patrum decreto sancitum superstitiosis non est adinventionibus praesumendum, praesertim quum nonnunquam intelligatur prohibitum quod non invenitur concessum. § 2. Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A bishop who by his own authority transfers himself from his church to another shall lack both.

The same to the Bishop and Peter, Scholasticus of Mainz.

The more sincerely we loved the person of our venerable brother, the former Bishop of Hildesheim, the more confidently we hoped that he would attempt nothing against his mother, the Roman Church, to the prejudice of his order and the detriment of ecclesiastical discipline. But he, as we discovered from the certain assertion of many and likewise learned from the testimony of his own letters directed to us, in which he styled himself Bishop of Würzburg, left the church of Hildesheim, to which he had been joined in marriage by spiritual grace, and by his own authority transferred himself to the church of Würzburg without the authority of the Roman Pontiff, not attending to what the Truth declares in the Gospel: "What God has joined, let man not separate."

[For] the Lord and Master so retained to himself the power of transferring pontiffs that by a special privilege he bestowed and granted it to blessed Peter alone, his vicar, and through him to his successors, and to us ourselves, who, although unworthy, hold his place on earth. Antiquity bears witness to this, to which the decrees of the Fathers sanctioned that reverence should be shown, and the sanctions of the sacred canons plainly affirm it. For it is not man, but God, who separates those whom the Roman Pontiff—who exercises on earth the office not of a mere man but of the true God—releases, after weighing the necessity or utility of the churches, not by human but rather by divine authority. (And below:)

But lest the perversity of the deed pass as an example to presumptuous persons—a deed which, if it is true, cannot but be notorious—by the authority of almighty God, of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and of ourselves, with the common counsel of our brothers, in the power of the Holy Spirit we strictly command him that, upon seeing our letters, all contradiction and appeal ceasing, he entirely abandon the administration of the church of Würzburg in both spiritual and temporal matters.

If, however, which we do not believe, he does not take care humbly to observe this suspension of ours and presumes to usurp what has been forbidden to him, we decree that he is bound by the bond of excommunication. We also command all the clerics and laymen of the diocese of Würzburg, under threat of anathema, that, notwithstanding an oath of fidelity, they withdraw from him all obedience, which he has usurped for himself contrary to the sacred canons, not attending to what the Apostle says: “Let no one assume the honor for himself, but he who is called by God, as Aaron was.”

Moreover, because the canons of the church of Würzburg conferred their votes upon him wholly unlawfully, wishing, as is fitting, that they be punished in that in which they sinned, we suspend them from the power of electing on this occasion. If, contrary to the prohibition of the Apostolic See, they proceed to the nomination of anyone, we decree that what is done by them is void and empty.

And because he most improperly abandoned the aforesaid church of Hildesheim, to which he had been bound and from which, according to the Apostle, he ought not seek release, we more strictly prohibit him, in the power of the Holy Spirit, from returning to it hereafter. For according to the canonical traditions, one who transfers himself to a greater people ought to be driven from the chair of another and to lack his own, so that he may preside neither over those whom he spurned through pride nor over those whom he coveted through avarice. [We also, etc. Given at Spoleto, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of September, 1198.]

Ipse vero, sicut certa multorum assertione comperimus, et suarum didicimus nihilominus testimonio literarum, quibus ad nos directis Herbipolensem se pontificem nominabat, relicta Hildesemensi ecclesia, cui fuerat spirituali gratia coniugio copulatus, ad Herbipolensem ecclesiam sine auctoritate Romani Pontificis auctoritate propria se transtulit, non attendens, quod Veritas in evangelio protestatur: "Quos Deus coniunxit homo non separet." Potestatem [enim] transferendi pontifices ita sibi retinuit Dominus et magister, quod soli beato Petro vicario suo, et per ipsum successoribus suis, et nobis ipsis, qui locum eius licet indigni tenemus in terris, speciali privilegio tribuit et concessit, sicut testatur antiquitas, cui decreta Patrum sanxerunt reverentiam exhibendam, et evidenter asserunt sacrorum canonum sanctiones. Non enim homo, sed Deus separat, quos Romanus Pontifex, qui non puri hominis, sed veri Dei vicem gerit in terris, ecclesiarum necessitate vel utilitate pensata, non humana, sed divina potius auctoritate dissolvit. Omnibus etiam tam clericis quam laicis Herbipolensis dioecesis sub anathematis interminatione praecipimus, ut, non obstante iuramento fidelitatis, omnem ipsi obedientiam subtrahant, quam ipse sibi contra sacros canones usurpavit, non attendens, quod dicit Apostolus: "Nemo sibi assumat honorem, sed qui vocatur a Deo, tanquam Aaron." Ceterum quoniam Herbipolensis ecclesiae canonici vota sua in ipsum prorsus illicite contulerunt, volentes, sicut dignum est, ut in eo puniantur, in quo peccaverunt, eligendi eos hac vice suspendimus potestate, et si contra sedis apostolicae interdictum ad cuiusdam nominationem processerint, quod ab eis factum fuerit irritum decernimus et inane. Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The Pope alone transfers bishops, and an indulgence granted by him concerning such a translation is to be observed according to the letter.

The same to the Bishop of Brandenburg and the Scholasticus of Mainz.

Although to such an extent [the authority of the Apostolic See is regarded that nothing in all the affairs of the churches may reasonably be ordered apart from its authority, inasmuch as it either issued the canons through which the form of the ecclesiastical constitution is expressed or approved them when issued by others, making its own by reception and approval what perhaps appeared to belong to another by invention or issuance;] nevertheless, it has reserved certain things to itself in a certain special and singular manner, so that apart from its special authority they neither ought lawfully to be done nor can be attempted with effect.

Among these things, the translations of bishops in particular have been committed to its power alone, not so much by canonical constitution as by divine institution. Just as man cannot dissolve the bond of a lawful marriage which exists between husband and wife, the Lord saying in the Gospel, "What God has joined, let man not separate," so also the spiritual covenant of marriage which exists between a bishop and [his] church—which is initiated in election, ratified in confirmation, and understood to be consummated in consecration—cannot be dissolved without the authority of him who is the successor of Peter and the vicar of Jesus Christ.

But C., formerly Bishop of Hildesheim, not attending to this, with our license neither sought nor obtained, contrary to the canonical sanctions and to the injury of the Apostolic See—whose assent concerning this was both to be sought and obtained—passed from the church of Hildesheim to the church of Würzburg, not by our authority but by his own temerity; and, intruding himself into its administration, caused himself to be styled Bishop of Würzburg.

Nor does that indulgence of our predecessor Pope Celestine of happy memory, which he is reported to have obtained, excuse his presumption in this matter; rather, it accuses his ambition, inasmuch as it rendered him noted for ambition and did not confer authority to pass to another episcopal church. For it is expressed in that indulgence that, if he should perhaps be called to a greater dignity, it would be lawful for him to assume it, provided that nothing in the canonical statutes stood against him. Hence, although it might perhaps seem to some that by occasion of that indulgence he could pass to a greater dignity, it was nevertheless not lawful for him to pass to an equal one, since a dispensation is more readily customarily made in the case of a greater dignity because of the greater utility.

Moreover, since a postulation, like an election, is customarily examined diligently, and since the tenor of that indulgence appears to reserve not only the examination of the postulation but also that of the person, adding, "provided that nothing appears which stands against you from the canonical institutes," he ought on no account to have passed over before the postulation had been examined by the person to whom it was to be made. [Although, however, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the seventh day before the Kalends of February, 1200.]

Solus Papa transfert episcopos; et indulgentia, per eum super tali translatione concessa, ad literam servanda est.

Idem Branbur. Episcopo et Scholastico Maguntinensi.

Licet in tantum [apostolicae sedis attendatur auctoritas, ut nihil praeter eius auctoritatem in cunctis ecclesiarum negotiis rationabiliter disponatur, utpote quae canones, quibus forma ecclesiasticae constitutionis exprimitur, vel edidit, vel ab aliis editos approbavit, suum receptione ac approbatione faciens, quod adinventione vel editione videbatur forsitan alienum;] quaedam tamen sibi quodammodo specialiter et singulariter reservavit, ut praeter specialem auctoritatem ipsius nec iure agi debeant, nec attentari valeant cum effectu. In his autem specialiter translationes episcoporum non tam constitutio canonica, quam divina eius tantum potestati commisit, ut Sicut legitimi matrimonii vinculum, quod est inter virum et uxorem, homo dissolvere nequit, Domino dicente in evangelio: "Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non separet," sic et spirituale foedus coniugii, quod est inter episcopum et [eius] ecclesiam, quod in electione initiatum, ratum in confirmatione, et in consecratione intelligitur consummatum, sine illius auctoritate solvi non potest, qui successor est Petri et vicarius Iesu Christi. Hoc autem C. quondam Hildesemensis episcopus non attendens, licentia nostra nec postulata nec habita, contra canonicas sanctiones et in iniuriam apostolicae sedis, cuius super hoc fuerat et requirendus et obtinendus assensus, ad Herbipolensem ecclesiam ab Hildesemensi non auctoritate nostra, sed propria temeritate transivit, et administrationi eius se ingerens Herbipolensem se fecit episcopum nominari. Nec illa felicis recordationis Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri indulgentia, quam impetrasse refertur, in hoc praesumptionem excusat ipsius, sed ambitionem accusat, utpote quae ipsum reddidit de ambitione notabilem, non auctoritatem contulit ad aliam episcopalem ecclesiam transeundi, quum in ea sit expressum, quod, si ad maiorem vocaretur forsitan dignitatem, eam sibi liceret assumere, dum tamen nihil ei de statutis canonicis obviaret. Unde, licet forsitan aliquibus videatur, ut indulgentiae occasione ipsius ad dignitatem possit transire maiorem, ad parem tamen ipsi transire non licuit, quum in maiori dignitate propter maiorem utilitatem facilius soleat dispensari. Praeterea quum postulatio, sicut et electio, examinari soleat diligenter, et tenor illius indulgentiae non solum videatur postulationis examinationem, sed personae etiam reservare, subiungens: "dummodo nihil appareat, quod tibi de canonicis obviet institutis," antequam per eum postulatio examinata fuisset, cui fuerat facienda, nulla ratione debuerat transisse. Title VIII: On the Authority and Use of the Pallium

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: An archbishop can use the pallium within any church of his province, but he cannot use it outside the province.

Clement III.

Concerning a certain matter (And below: [cf. c. 8, On the Alienation of Ecclesiastical Property, III.13.]) You also asked how that which is contained in the form for the delivery of the pallium is to be understood, namely: “We deliver the pallium to you so that you may use it within your church.” This is understood thus: “within your church,” namely, within any church of the province committed to you. But if it happens that, clothed in sacred vestments, you leave the church processionally or in another manner, then you ought by no means to use the pallium. [Given at the Lateran, in the third year, 1193.]

Textual note: The source attributes the decretal to Clement III but dates it to 1193, after Clement's pontificate. The translation preserves both printed statements rather than silently reconciling them.

Quod ita intelligitur, infra ecclesiam tuam, videlicet infra quamlibet ecclesiam provinciae tibi commissae. Si vero te sacris indutum vestibus ecclesiam processionaliter vel alio modo exire contigerit, tunc pallio minime uti debes. [Dat. Lat. Ao. III. 1193.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: An archbishop cannot lend his pallium to another archbishop.

Celestine III.

As to the fact that it has been asked of us on your behalf whether it is lawful for you to lend your pallium to another metropolitan if it should happen that he comes without his own pallium to the church committed to you on some principal solemnity and celebrates the solemnities of Mass in that church: although we do not recall having found an express canon concerning this, nevertheless we answer your inquiry in such a manner that it does not seem fitting for you to lend your pallium to anyone, since the pallium does not pass beyond the person, but each person ought, as your discretion knows, to be buried with it.

> Archiepiscopus alteri archiepiscopo pallium suum commodare non potest.

> Ad hoc, quia quaesitum est a nobis ex parte tua, utrum liceat tibi pallium tuum metropolitano alii commodare, si contigerit, ipsum sine pallio suo ad ecclesiam tibi commissam in aliqua praecipua solennitate venire, et in eadem ecclesia missarum solennia celebrare, licet exinde nos non recolamus expressum canonem invenisse, super hoc tamen Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod non videtur esse conveniens, ut pallium tuum alicui commodes, quum pallium personam non transeat, sed quisque cum eo debeat, sicut tua novit discretio, sepeliri.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Through the pallium are conferred the fullness of the pontifical office and the archiepiscopal name.

Innocent III to C., Cardinal-priest and Legate of the Apostolic See.

Unless that special affection (And below: [cf. c. 8, On the Office of a Legate, I.30.]) Indeed, even if the postulation of our venerable brother, the Bishop of Troia and Chancellor of the Kingdom of Sicily, to the church of Palermo had been approved by us, he nevertheless ought not call himself archbishop before he had received the pallium from us, in which the fullness of the pontifical office is conferred together with the appellation of the archiepiscopal name. You, therefore, as a provident and discreet man, are to take care so to cloak what has been done that it does not redound to your confusion and the reproach of the Apostolic See, because, if it is necessary that either we or you be confounded by this business, we shall choose that you be confounded rather than that we injure the dignity of the Apostolic See.

> Per pallium confertur plenitudo pontificalis officii et nomen archiepiscopale.
>
> Innocentius III. C. Presbytero cardinali, apostolicae sedis Legato.
>
> Nisi specialis dilectio illa (Et infra: [cf. c. 8. de off. leg. I. 30.]) Sane, si postulatio venerabilis fratris nostri Troiani episcopi regni Siciliae cancellarii ad Panormitanam ecclesiam fuisset per nos etiam approbata, non tamen deberet se archiepiscopum appellare prius, quam a nobis pallium suscepisset, in quo pontificalis officii plenitudo cum archiepiscopalis nominis appellatione confertur. Tu ergo, sicut vir providus et discretus quod factum est sic studeas palliare, ut id in confusionem tuam, et sedis apostolicae opprobrium non redundet, quoniam, si oporteat, ut vel nos vel tu ex hoc negotio confundamur, eligemus potius te confundi, quam laedamus sedis apostolicae dignitatem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: The Roman Pontiff uses the pallium always and everywhere; others use it only in their own churches and on certain days.

The same.

For the honor of God [almighty, of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, of the lord Pope Innocent and the Roman Church, and also of the church committed to you, we deliver to you the pallium taken from the body of blessed Peter, namely the insignia of the fullness of the pontifical office, which you are to use for the solemnities of Mass within the churches subject to you on the Nativity of the Lord, the feast of Stephen the Protomartyr, the Circumcision of the Lord, the Epiphany, the Hypapante, Palm Sunday, the Supper of the Lord, Holy Saturday, Easter, the second weekday after Easter, the Ascension of the Lord, Pentecost, the three feasts of Saint Mary, the Nativity of blessed John the Baptist, the solemnities of all the Apostles, the Commemoration of All Saints, dedications of churches, ordinations of clerics, the principal feasts of your church, and the anniversary of your consecration.]

Indeed, the Roman Pontiff alone always and everywhere uses the pallium in the solemnities of Mass, because he has been assumed into the fullness of ecclesiastical power, which is signified by the pallium. Others, however, ought to use it neither always nor everywhere, but in their own church, in which they have received ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and on certain days, because they have been called into a share of solicitude, not into the fullness of power.

Mariae, Natali B. Ioannis Baptistae, solennitatibus omnium Apostolorum, Commemoratione omnium sanctorum, dedicationibus ecclesiarum, ordinationibus clericorum, ecclesiae tuae principalibus festivitatibus et anniversario consecrationis tuae.] Sane solus Romanus Pontifex in missarum solenniis

Latin source headnote: An archbishop cannot use the pallium outside his province, even if custom supports this.

The same to the Archbishop of Compostela.

We have learned from the tenor of your letters that, although in the grant of the pallium it was said to you that you were to use it within your church, nevertheless, because you frequently sojourn outside your province both by royal mandate and for attending to the business of your church, it is embarrassing for you to minister without the pallium. Since, as you assert, there is a general custom in Spain that archbishops use the pallium outside their provinces without distinction, you petitioned that the Apostolic See grant you permission to use the pallium outside your province.

Although a use of this kind is an abuse, such a custom is to be called a corruption instead, and those who use their palliums outside their provinces without the special license of the Apostolic See are known to offend gravely, nevertheless, by special grace we grant you that, if at any time, impeded by some necessity, you should perhaps be unable to approach a church subject to you for the purpose of consecrating your suffragans or ordaining clerics, and it should happen that you turn aside for this purpose to the church of another, provided that the person to whom the church belongs permits it, you shall have free faculty to use the pallium in the aforesaid cases. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Nones of April, in the year 1209.]

Since you are in the most remote regions, we hold it pleasing and acceptable that, in your actions, whenever a scruple of doubt arises, etc. (And below:) You should therefore know that, where necessity requires, you may consecrate both several altars in one church and several bishops at the same time; and wherever you are situated in celebrations of Mass, on solemn days you may more freely exercise the use of the pallium, through which the fullness of the pontifical office is signified.

Honorius III to the Archbishop of Lund.

Because we (And below: [cf. the final chapter, On Apostates, V.9.]) We answer your inquiry in this manner: both in your own and in another diocese you can celebrate without the pallium and sandals, for assuredly in your own diocese you ought not always celebrate with the pallium, but only on those days which are expressed in the privileges of your church. And thus the fourth question is resolved, by which you asked whether it is lawful for you to celebrate for the dead with the pallium. Title IX: On Resignation

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Permission to resign is not given to a bishop who wishes to resign because of old age if he is necessary or useful to his church.

Alexander III to the Archbishop of Lyon.

We recently received your letters, full of devotion and not devoid of sorrow, since they both intimated to us your most affectionate charity and sought a resignation from your archiepiscopal office—which we rejoice that you have faithfully discharged and still discharge—that is contrary to the interests of the Church. For you know, as a provident and prudent man, that the evil of the day is so great, and the pressure of persecution against the Church of God so grave and so prolonged, that it would by no means conduce to its advantage if your see should happen to suffer a failure.

But if, perhaps considering either your old age or your insufficiency, you petition to be released as one who has completed his service, know that we believe and hold for certain that it is safer at this time for the church committed to you to be governed under the shadow of your name than for its governance amid so great a crisis to be committed to another, new and unknown person—especially because the vigor of devotion and faith does not fail in you even as your body grows old; rather, as your bodily condition declines downward, the fervor of your spirit ascends toward higher things.

Therefore, lest the sting of this sorrow wound the living charity of our breast toward you, we admonish you not to make yourself troublesome by any importunity concerning this in these days, because it is proved altogether unfitting to unfasten the belt of military service before the adversity of battles yields to the victor. Press on, therefore, like a good soldier of Christ, and persevere in the office of your solicitude, lest, while you seek the desires of your own quiet, you suffer some loss of the talent entrusted to you.

You ought also to attend to this: if you have wings with which you strive to fly into the wilderness so that you may rest, they are nevertheless bound by the bonds of precepts which, as you know, so bind you by the institution of the sacred canons that you do not have free flight without our permission.

Moreover, brother, lest you complain that we burden you intolerably—you who can know the weakness both of your mind and of your body better than we can—we finally grant you this, if in the judgment of your conscience the matter altogether requires it: that, when an opportunity has been received, you be solicitous concerning the substitution of a person, both through yourself and through the prince of the land, or also through your letters and suitable messengers if you are unable or unwilling to exhibit your bodily presence there, and through other religious and industrious men of that kingdom; and that you strive to find such a successor as will neither degenerate from the brightness of the faith nor stray from the path of rectitude and honor. It is also fitting for you to discuss and deliberate with the same persons concerning those things which you consider should be reserved for your necessities, so that, when all these things have become known to us through both your assertion and theirs, we may be able to proceed in the matter so providently and securely that neither we nor you yourself ought afterward to repent of this work.

DE RENUNCIATIONE.

Non datur licentia cedendi episcopo, qui propter senectutem vult cedere, si necessarius vel utilis sit ecclesiae suae.

Alexander III. Londonensi Episcopo.

Literas tuas, nuper accepimus, devotione plenas et dolore non vacuas, quandoquidem et tuam, nobis insinuaverunt affectuosissimam caritatem, et tui archiepiscopalis officii, quod fideliter gessisse, et adhuc te gerere gaudemus, contrariam exigebant ecclesiae utilitatibus cessionem. Nosti enim, sicut vir providus et prudens, quod tanta est diei malitia, et contra ecclesiam Dei tam gravis, tam diuturna persecutionis instantia, ut nequaquam ei cedat ad commodum, si tuam sedem contigerit subire defectum. Quod Si tuam aut senectutem aut insufficientiam forte considerans, te tanquam emeritum postulas relaxari: scito, nos credere et pro certo tenere, quod tutius sit hoc tempore, si commissa tibi ecclesia sub umbra tui nominis gubernetur, quam si alteri novae incognitaeque personae gubernanda in tanto discrimine committatur, maxime quia in te vigor devotionis et fidei etiam corpore senescente non deficit, sed vergente deorsum conditione corporea fervor spiritus in sublimiora conscendit. Ne igitur huius doloris aculeus vividam circa te nostri pectoris vulneret caritatem, Monemus te igitur, ut super hoc diebus istis nulla te facias importunitate molestum, quia incedens omnino probatur, prius solvere militiae cingulum, quam cedat victori adversitas proeliorum. Insta igitur sicut bonus miles Christi, et in tuae sollicitudinis officio persevera; ne dum tuae quietis desideria quaeris, tu aliquid talenti tibi crediti detrimentum patiaris. Illud quoque te oportet attendere, quod si pennas habeas, quibus in solitudinem volare satagis, ut quiescas: ligatae sunt tamen nexibus praeceptorum, quae ita ut nosti, ex sacrorum canonum institutione te vinciunt, ut liberum non habeas absque nostra permissione volatum. Ceterum ne, frater, te intolerabiliter nos gravare causeris, qui melius tui potes tam animi debilitatem nosse, quam corporis: hoc tandem tibi, si iudicio conscientiae tuae res id prorsus exigit, indulgemus, ut suscepta oportunitate, tam per te quam per principem terrae, vel etiam per literas tuas, et idoneos nuntios, si corporalem ibi vel non potueris vel nolueris exhibere praesentiam, aliosque regni illius religiosos, et industrios de substituenda sis persona sollicitus, et talem invenire satagas successorem, qui non a fidei claritate degeneret, neque a tramite rectitudinis et honestatis aberret. De his quoque quae tuis duxeris necessitatibus reservanda, cum eisdem personas tractare et deliberare te convenit: ut quum nobis haec omnia tam tua quam illorum fuerint assertione comperta, ita provide ac secure possimus in facto procedere, quod neque nos, neque te ipsum oporteat huius operis in posterum poenitere.

Latin source headnote: One who has abjured a benefice can lawfully obtain it if he is elected anew.

The same to the Abbot of Dol and the Prior of Artigia.

When a dispute had been conducted for a rather long time in our presence between P. Gaufridi and certain other canons of Saint I. concerning a spiritual benefice—namely, a stall in the choir and a place in the chapter—the business could not be concluded because the other party had not come sufficiently instructed. Therefore, committing the cause itself to your examination, we command you by apostolic writings to summon the parties before your presence and, after inquiring more fully into the truth of the matter, if you find that the aforesaid P. Gau. was invested by apostolic authority with the aforesaid benefice with the assent of the greater and sounder part of the chapter, you are, appeal being removed, to cause him peaceably to possess the benefice itself. For the oath which he is alleged to have taken that he would not seek it further does not appear to us to present an impediment, if the assent of the greater and sounder part of the canons of the church intervened.

Qui abiurat beneficium, licite potest illud, si denuo eligatur, obtinere.

Idem Abbati Dolensi et Priori de Artigia.

Quum inter P. Gaufridi et quosdam alios canonicos sancti I. super spirituali beneficio, scilicet stallo in choro et loco in capitulo, in praesentia nostra quaestio fuisset diutius agitata, quia tamen altera pars sufficienter instructa non venerat, negotium non potuit terminari, Ideoque causam ipsam vestro examini committentes vobis per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus partes ante vestram praesentiam convocetis, et rei veritate plenius inquisita, si praefatum P. Gau. inveneritis de consensu maioris et sanioris partis capituli fuisse de praedicto beneficio auctoritate apostolica investitum, eum faciatis appellatione remota beneficium ipsum pacifice possidere. Non enim videtur nobis impedimentum afferre iuramentum, quod de eodem non petendo ulterius proponitur praestitisse, si consensus maioris et sanioris partis canonicorum ecclesiae intercessit.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who has resigned his benefice cannot reclaim it.

The same to the Bishop of Veroli.

It was intimated to our ears from the transmitted report of the Abbot of Saint Nicholas of Ceprano that the cleric P. Rubeus, when formerly suffering from illness, petitioned at the monastery of the Holy Savior of Telese that the monastic habit be granted to him. After he later recovered his health, he approached that monastery for the purpose of fulfilling his vow and, remaining there for a little while, caused those things which he had conferred upon the aforesaid church of Saint N. to be restored to him. Now, however, having changed his mind, he labors through you and through your friends to be restored in the aforesaid church.

But since the said church is known to have been released from him from the time when, at his own will and petition, it restored to him those things which he had conferred upon it, we admonish and command your fraternity that, if the matter stands thus, you are on no account to compel the aforesaid abbot and his associates, against their will, to receive the aforesaid P., nor are you to permit them to be compelled by the people of Ceprano. You may nevertheless exhort and admonish them, if it matters so much to you, to receive him as an associate and brother, not as one of the church but as though he ought to enter anew.

Qui renunciavit beneficio suo, illud repetere non potest.

Idem Episcopo Verulano.

Ex transmissa relatione abbatis sancti Nicolai de Ceparano nostris est auribus intimatum, quod P. Rubeus clericus, dum olim infirmitate laboraret, apud monasterium sancti Salvatoris de Telesia, sibi petiit habitum monasticum indulgeri, qui, recuperata postmodum sanitate, ad monasterium illud gratia complendi suum votum accessit, et ibidem moram aliquantulam faciens, ea, quae praedictae ecclesiae sancti N. contulerat, sibi fecit restitui. Nunc autem, mutato animo, per te, et per amicos tuos laborat, ut restituatur in ecclesia supradicta. Verum quoniam iam dicta ecclesia ab eo soluta dignoscitur, ex quo illi ea, quae sibi contulerat, ad voluntatem et petitionem suam resignavit eidem, fraternitatem tuam monemus atque mandamus, quatenus, si res ita se habet, praedictum abbatem et socios eius ad receptionem praefati P. nulla ratione compellas invitos, nec a populo Ceparano compelli permittas. Hortari tamen eos et monere poteris, si tanti tibi fuerit, ut illum non tanquam unum de ecclesia, sed, quasi de novo deberet intrare, recipiant in socium et in fratrem.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A beneficed person cannot resign a benefice without the license of his prelate.

The same to the Bishop of Tournai.

The care of the governance we have undertaken admonishes us, and pontifical authority induces us, to be solicitous for the condition of churches and to attend with undiminished zeal to their progress and increase. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity, by way of precept, to establish and ordain by our authority and yours that the ecclesiastical persons of your bishopric shall not dare to make any testament concerning those things which come to them from the goods of churches or which have accrued to them by reason of those churches, but that those goods shall pass to the churches themselves, as is just and canonical. If, however, any of those persons have died intestate, you shall likewise decree that the goods which accrued to them from the churches or by reason of them pass to those same churches. Indeed, concerning those goods which were acquired by right of patrimony or from elsewhere in favor of the person, they shall have free faculty to make a testament.

Likewise, on our behalf and yours, under strict prohibition you shall forbid all ecclesiastical persons of your bishopric to dare, without your assent, to enter or detain churches of your diocese that pertain to your appointment, or to relinquish them without consulting you. If anyone presumes to act contrary to your prohibition, relying upon our authority and yours you shall exercise canonical punishment against him.

Quodsi quis contra prohibitionem tuam venire praesumpserit, in eum auctoritate nostra et tua fretus canonicam exerceas ultionem.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Against one seeking a benefice, the exception of voluntary abjuration is admitted even when the cause of the resignation is not added. Against this the plaintiff will be able to reply that he did not resign voluntarily, and the one who proves his case better will prevail.

Clement III.

Concerning your inquiry whether, against persons reclaiming ecclesiastical benefices, an exception of voluntary abjuration is to be admitted without cognizance of the cause, and whether the proofs of the plaintiff that he did not resign voluntarily or those of the defendant concerning voluntary resignation ought to be admitted, we answer your experience thus: no reason renders it likely that anyone would easily and rashly resign voluntarily, without a weighty cause, a benefice acquired perhaps through many expenses and labors and by which he ought to be supported. Consequently, we do not believe it superfluous for the cause of the renunciation or resignation to be diligently investigated.

If the ordinary or delegated judge should find that cause to be a probable one—that is, one not extorted by force, fear, oppression, the intervention of money, or a promise—and especially if no oath intervened, which is scarcely believed to be made of one's own will and is almost always from evil, he shall not postpone admitting the exception unless a canonical reply has been opposed.

Moreover, although by the nature of things there is no proof of a fact for one who denies it, nevertheless, in the case of one who denies a voluntary resignation, since by replying he implicitly and in a certain manner takes issue with the assertion, we believe that proofs are to be admitted, regard being had to his dignity and reputation.

> Super hoc, quod sciscitaris, utrum ecclesiastica beneficia reposcentibus obiecta spontaneae abiurationis exceptio sine causae cognitione sit admittenda, et an actoris, quod sponte non renunciavit, an rei de spontanea renunciatione debeant probationes admitti, sic tuae experientiae respondemus, quod nulla ratio hoc verisimile reddit, ut quisquam beneficium multis forte expensis et laboribus acquisitum, et quo sustentari debet, facile sine magna causa temere sua sponte resignet, ideoque supervacuum esse non credimus, causam renunciationis vel resignationis diligenter inquiri, quam si forte probabilem, id est, non vi, nec metu, nec oppressione, nec interventu pecuniae, nec promissione extortam iudex ordinarius seu delegatus invenerit, et maxime si non intervenerit iuramentum, quod vix fieri de voluntate propria creditur, quod fere semper a malo est, nisi replicatio canonica fuerit opposita, admittere non postponat. Porro licet negantis factum per rerum naturam nulla sit probatio, eius tamen, qui spontaneam renunciationem negat, quum implicite et quodammodo replicando inficietur super assertione sua, habito ad dignitatem et opinionem respectu probationes credimus admittendas.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who voluntarily renounced an election made concerning him ought not thereafter to be heard concerning that election.

The same.

In our presence [our beloved son R., formerly Abbot of Thorney, appeared and set forth before us that, when you had once come to his monastery, which he himself had enlarged by an income of one hundred marks, and, having entered the chapter of the monks, had begun to make an inquiry against him, he, fearing that he would be aggrieved, appealed to the Apostolic See. You, however, not deferring to the appeal, suspended him from the office of administration; and, after an inquiry was afterwards made in his absence, you shamefully dragged him, unwilling though he was, after you as far as the monastery of Ramsey, and made him swear upon the cross that he would follow you as far as London. Therefore, upon coming to London, he solemnly renewed the appeal that he had previously interposed, and obtained letters of commission to be directed to our venerable brother the Bishop of Winchester and his co-judges, which he delivered to a certain merchant to be carried. You, however, caused him, as he was returning to England, to be seized at London and committed to prison in the monastery of Ely. On account of this, the merchant who was carrying the letters did not dare to come into England. At length, however, having been released from prison, he appealed to the Apostolic See. You, however, not deferring to his appeal, as before, pronounced against him the sentence of deposition itself and caused him, once deposed, to be thrust into prison.

But when he had been released from his bonds, he came into our presence and obtained letters to our venerable brother the Bishop of Durham and our beloved son Master John of London, that they should diligently inquire into the truth concerning the matters set forth, and, if the parties were willing, should terminate the cause itself harmoniously with the proper conclusion; otherwise, they should not delay in remitting the cause to us after it had been sufficiently instructed. The same abbot therefore maintained that all the aforesaid matters had been sufficiently proved before the same judges.

But our beloved son Master Honorius, Archdeacon of Richmond, your envoy, set forth on the other side that, when you once discharged the office of legation, you came to the monastery of Thorney in order to bestow upon it the favor of visitation; and, when you had inquired more diligently into the life of R. himself, his dilapidation, incontinence, and shameful conduct were established for you through the testimony of the monks. Therefore, having taken the counsel of prudent men, you suspended him from the office of administration, since, according to the canonical enactments, one suspected of dilapidation ought to be suspended from administration. Nor had the same abbot appealed at that time; nor, even if he had appealed, had he made known to you that he had appealed, since, as his witnesses assert, having left the chapter, he decided in a private conference that an appeal should be made. But when he afterwards appealed at London, you not only received the appeal interposed but also supplied expenses sufficient for its prosecution.

Then, when through your letters you had made known his enormities to our predecessor of good memory, Celestine, he admonished your fraternity that you should depose him from the office of the abbacy and, having committed him to prison, should detain him so long as his mandate did not again reach you. Therefore, fearing the sentence of deposition, he voluntarily renounced the abbacy in the presence of many bishops and other religious men; but, repenting a little afterwards, he entirely denied that he had renounced. Therefore, since you were his metropolitan, discharged the office of legation, and were specially delegated for this, following the form of the apostolic mandate you took care, because of the manifest character of the crimes, to impose perpetual silence upon him concerning the abbacy.

At length, when cognizance of your sentence had been delegated under the aforesaid form to the aforementioned Bishop of Durham and his co-judge, you proved before them by lawful witnesses that the same abbot had renounced the abbacy; that he suffered from the vice of incontinence; that he had alienated certain vessels of the monastery without the consent of the monks; that you had deferred to his appeal and supplied expenses to him as appellant; that, by the authority of the letters of our aforesaid predecessor, you had proceeded to his deposition because of the manifest character of the crimes and his voluntary cession; and that, by the special mandate of the same predecessor of ours, you had committed him to prison in the monastery of Gloucester, where he had formerly been a monk. Afterwards, however, when the judges themselves had reduced all the proceedings to writing and assigned a term to the parties, the same R. both withdrew from the suit in your hands and voluntarily renounced the abbacy, and you received his renunciation at the great insistence of certain religious men.

But, although the often-mentioned R. had at first denied that he had renounced the abbacy, at length he nevertheless confessed it in our presence, adding that, because he had renounced while despoiled, his renunciation was not valid. Furthermore, since you had promised suitably to provide for him but were unwilling to fulfill the promise, he was not bound to hold as ratified what he had done. Moreover, he had been induced to renunciation by fear, since you had threatened him that, if he came to us with the judges' report, you would obtain from us that we put him in a cage.

Against this, however, the said archdeacon replied that it could not and ought not benefit the same R. that he had renounced while despoiled, inasmuch as it was not an adversary but rather the judge who had despoiled him. Moreover, the fear that the opposing party had alleged could not excuse him, since it ought not to have fallen upon a steadfast man. For what steadfast man would presume that at your wish we would thrust anyone into prison and exercise tyranny against those who prosecute their causes before the Apostolic See? Therefore, the said R. ought not on any occasion to have presumed that we would wish to exercise cruelty of this kind. Moreover, that his presumption was frivolous appeared from what was done afterwards.]

Therefore, although a judge does not always apply his mind to one kind of proof, but forms the movement of his mind from confessions, depositions, allegations, and other matters that are set forth in his presence, and judicial authority is so great that it must always be presumed in its favor until something against it is lawfully proved—wherefore, even if you had proved absolutely nothing against the aforesaid R. before the Bishop of Durham and his co-judges, nevertheless the sentence would have had to stand unless the adversary showed that it ought to be annulled—yet, because in addition to these matters his voluntary renunciation was established through certain letters of bishops and his own confession, we, with the counsel of our brothers, have decided that silence should be imposed upon him concerning the same abbacy.

[We will, however, that, out of regard for divine mercy, you cause suitable provision to be made for him from the revenues of the monastery of Thorney in some religious place. Let no one therefore, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Nones of June, 1202.]

Ipse igitur Londoniam veniens appellationem, quam prius interposuerat, solenniter innovavit, et ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Wintoniensem episcopum et coniudices eius commissionis obtinuit literas destinari, quas deferendas cuidam tradidit mercatori. Tu vero ipsum in Angliam redeuntem capi fecisti Londoniis et in Eliensi monasterio carceri mancipari. Propter quod mercator, qui literas deferebat, venire in Angliam non praesumpsit, tandem vero a carcere liberatus ad sedem apostolicam appellavit. Tu vero eius appellationi non deferens, sicut prius, in ipsam depositionis sententiam protulisti, et depositum in carcerem fecisti retrudi. Ceterum, quum fuisset a vinculis absolutus, ad praesentiam nostram venit, et ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Dunelmensem episcopum, et dilectum filium magistrum Io. de Londoniis literas impetravit, ut super propositis diligenter inquirerent veritatem, et causam ipsam, si partes vellent, concorditer fine debito terminarent; alioquin causam sufficienter instructam ad nos remittere non differrent. Proponebat igitur idem abbas, quod praedicta omnia sufficienter fuerant coram eisdem iudicibus comprobata. Verum dilectus filius magister Honorius, archidiaconus Richemundiae, nuncius tuus, proposuit ex adverso, quod, quum olim legationis officio fungereris, ad monasterium de Tornea, ut ei visitationis impenderes gratiam, accessisti, quumque de vita ipsius R. diligentius inquisiisses, de dilapidatione, incontinentia et turpi eius conversatione per testimonia tibi constitit monachorum. Unde communicato prudentum virorum consilio eum ab administrationis officio suspendisti, quum iuxta canonicas sanctiones de dilapidatione suspectus debeat ab administratione suspendi. Nec appellaverat tunc temporis idem abbas, nec etiam, si appellasset, tibi eum innotuerat appellasse, quum, sicut asserunt testes eius, egressus capitulum in secreto collocutorio duxerit appellandum. Verum, quum postmodum apud Londonias appellasset, non solum appellationem interpositam recepisti, sed ministrasti etiam ad prosecutionem ipsius sufficienter expensas. Deinde quum enormitates ipsius bonae memoriae Coelestino praedecessori nostro per tuas literas intimasses, ipse tuam fraternitatem monuit, ut eum ab officio deponeres abbatiae, ac carceri mancipatum tamdiu detineres, donec ad te mandatum eius denuo perveniret. Ipse igitur depositionis sententiam expavescens, in praesentia multorum episcoporum et aliorum religiosorum virorum renunciavit spontanee abbatiae, sed post paululum poenitens se renunciasse penitus denegavit. Tu igitur, quum metropolitanus exsisteres eius, et legationis officio fungereris, et ad hoc esses specialiter delegatus, mandati apostolici formam sequens, propter criminum evidentiam super abbatia ei perpetuum imponere silentium curavisti. Tandem vero, quum praedicto Dunelmensi et coniudici eius sub forma praedicta sententiae tuae foret cognitio delegata, coram eis quod idem abbas renunciaverit abbatiae, quod incontinentiae vitio laborabat, quod vasa quaedam monasterii praeter consensum monachorum alienaverat, quod tu eius appellationi detuleras et expensas ministraveras appellanti, quod auctoritate literarum praedicti praedecessoris nostri propter criminum evidentiam et spontaneam cessionem processeras ad depositionem ipsius, et de speciali mandato eiusdem praedecessoris nostri eum in monasterio Glocestrensi, ubi prius monachus fuerat, carceri mancipaveras, per testes legitimos comprobasti. Deinde autem, quum iudices ipsi gesta omnia redegissent in scriptis et terminum partibus assignassent, idem R. in manibus tuis et liti cessit, et renunciavit spontaneus abbatiae, tuque renunciationem eius ad multam quorundam religiosorum virorum instantiam recepisti. Ceterum, licet saepedictus R. se renunciasse abbatiae ab initio denegasset, tandem tamen id in nostra praesentia confessus est, adiiciens, quod, quia renunciaverat spoliatus, eius renunciatio non tenebat. Praeterea, quum tu ei congrue promiseris providere, nec volueris adimplere promissum, nec ipse ratum habere quod fecerat tenebatur. Insuper metu fuerat ad renunciationem inductus, quum tu ei fueris comminatus, quod, si ad nos cum iudicum relatione veniret, obtineres a nobis, quod eum in caveam poneremus. Contra hoc autem dictus archidiaconus replicavit, quod eidem R. prodesse non poterat nec debebat, quod renunciaverat spoliatus, utpote quem non adversarius, sed iudex potius spoliaverat. Metus autem, quem allegaverat pars adversa, eum non poterat excusare, quum cadere non debuerit in constantem. Latin source headnote: One who has renounced beneficial letters is not for that reason deemed to have renounced an institution already made.

Celestine III.

Indeed, we remember that we enjoined, by our living voice and by letters, upon our beloved son I., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Pudentiana, then legate of the Apostolic See, that, all contradiction and appeal being removed, he should take care to institute as a canon in the church of Poitiers our beloved son H., a subdeacon, who has served your church from the first flower of childhood; and he, obeying our mandates, instituted the aforementioned subdeacon as a canon there. You, however, showing reverence neither to us nor to the cardinal himself, did not take care to fulfill what the same cardinal enjoined upon you in his letters concerning the already-mentioned Hugh, nor even to observe his suspension in any respect. But afterwards the same H., led by the counsel of certain of you, returned his letters to you and subjected himself to your mercy.

But because he is compelled to sustain loss from that from which he ought to have obtained mercy, we command that, notwithstanding the fact that with his letters he subjected himself to your mercy, within twenty days after the reception of the present letters, all delay, contradiction, and appeal being removed, you admit him fully and completely as a brother and canon according to the custom of the church; and, assigning him a stall in choir and a place in chapter, you take care thereafter to treat him with fraternal charity.

Otherwise, know that we have strictly commanded our venerable brother the Archbishop and our beloved sons the Dean of Bordeaux and the Dean of Saintes that, relying upon our authority, all delay, contradiction, and appeal ceasing, they fully execute this, striking contradictors with ecclesiastical constraint, and that they not postpone sending them, suspended from office and benefice, to the Apostolic See to answer for their disobedience and for the aforesaid suspension in no way having been observed, so that there, with punishment as their teacher, they may learn how dangerous and unworthy it is to oppose apostolic mandates; notwithstanding any letters obtained from the Apostolic See with the tenor of these letters suppressed.

Qui renunciavit literis beneficialibus, non ideo institutioni iam factae renunciare videtur.

Coelestinus III.

Sane dilecto filio nostro I. tituli S. Prudentianae presbytero cardinali, tunc apostolicae sedis legato, nos viva voce meminimus ac literis iniunxisse, ut dilectum filium nostrum H. subdiaconum, qui ecclesiae vestrae a primo pueritiae flore servivit, contradictione et appellatione remotis canonicum in Pictaviensi ecclesia instituere procuraret, qui mandatis nostris obtemperans ibidem instituit in canonicum subdiaconum memoratum. Vos autem nec nobis nec ipsi cardinali reverentiam exhibentes, quod in literis suis de iam dicto Hug. idem cardinalis vobis iniunxit, adimplere non curavistis, nec etiam ipsius suspensionem in aliquo observare. Sed Postmodum idem H. quorundam vestrum ductus consilio literas suas vobis reddens, vestrae misericordiae se subiecit. Quia vero unde misericordiam debuit impetrare, inde cogitur dispendium sustinere, mandamus, quatenus, hoc non obstante quod cum literis suis vestrae misericordiae se subiecit, infra XX. dies post susceptionem praesentium, dilatione, contradictione et appellatione remotis, iuxta ecclesiae consuetudinem ipsum in fratrem et canonicum integre ac plenarie admittatis, et eidem in choro stallum et in capitulo locum assignantes, ipsum curetis de cetero fraterna caritate tractare. Alioquin noveritis, nos venerabili fratri nostro Archiepiscopo et dilectis filiis decano Burdegalensi et Sanctonensi decano districtius mandavisse, ut auctoritate nostra freti, dilatione et contradictione et appellatione cessantibus, id plenarie exsequantur, contradictores districtione ecclesiastica percellentes et ad sedem ap. ab officio et beneficio suspensos de inobedientia responsuros et suspensione praedicta nullatenus observata transmittere non postponant, ut ibi poena docente addiscant, quam periculosum sit et indignum, mandatis apostolicis obviare, nullis literis obstantibus harum tenore tacito a sede ap. impetratis.

Latin source headnote: The Pope grants permission to resign to a bishop who cannot remain in his church without danger of death.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

At the urgent supplication of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Ragusa, we have decided that he should be absolved from the care and solicitude by which he was bound to the church of Ragusa, namely because he could not remain there safely and, if he had access to it, danger of death threatened him. (And below:) But lest the same archbishop suffer a lack in temporal things to the reproach of our ministry, we earnestly admonish your fraternity and command [you] by apostolic writings that you preserve for his support the benefice that has been conferred upon him from royal liberality and your grant in the bishopric of Carlisle and in the church of Malebron. We have granted to him that he may exercise the episcopal office in that bishopric without the use of the pallium, while rendering reverence and obedience to you as metropolitan.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: The weak, the ignorant, one conscious of guilt, the irregular, one whom an evil people hates, and one giving scandals may resign.

The same, to the Bishop of Cagliari.

Unless, when some time ago you entered the pastoral office for divine service, we believed that you had prepared your soul for temptation, and had prudently foreseen that it lies by no means within human frailty to be able to sustain, without the great assistance of God, the various afflictions of anguish that you knew you would suffer in that office, we would certainly fear that afterwards you had neglected to dash your little ones against the rock, and had allowed them to grow so strong against you that you are now scarcely able to resist their insistence as they suggest to you the resignation of the ministry you have undertaken. But because, as we believe, when you knew that you would fight against spiritual wickedness, admonished by the Apostle you put on the armor of God by which you might stand against the snares of the tempter, and, though inexperienced, you were not ignorant of the anguishes of pastoral solicitude, which, now perhaps experienced, you abhor, we do not know why you so insistently wish uselessly to abandon the governance you have undertaken, which you ought not altogether to have avoided undertaking usefully. For if in a resignation of this kind you promise yourself the fruit of a better life, you ought to know that you are not holier than the one sanctified in the womb; and therefore you ought not to desert the ministry of preaching already undertaken, since he at length received the word of God to be preached, whose bearer he had [before] refused to become.

§ 1. But if perhaps for the sake of humility you seek to descend from the pontifical summit, and strive, contrary to the decision of the heavenly will, to abandon through that humility the prelacy given to you, by that very fact you seem wrongly to raise the head of humility, because you show yourself too obstinate in the purpose of resigning. For then you will preserve true humility in yourself, when through it you both flee an exalted place and through obedience do not relinquish it.

Therefore, our venerable brother in Christ, we will you to consider that these are the grounds through which a bishop may seek permission to resign the pastoral office: consciousness of crime, weakness of body, defect of knowledge, malice of the people, grave scandal, and irregularity of the person. But in all these discretion must be employed and caution observed.

§ 2. For because of consciousness of a crime, permission to resign the pastoral office may be sought, and perhaps not because of just any crime, but only because of one on account of which the execution of that office is impeded even after penance has been performed. For since the Lord declares that, at whatever hour a sinner shall have been converted, he will not remember any of his iniquities, and sacred scripture testifies that no one is without sin, it appears that no one ought to resign the pastoral office because of consciousness of just any crime; for if all whom consciousness of any fault accuses were to resign, perhaps few or none would remain in that ministry. For in many things we all offend, and, if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us, because he mercifully excuses the one who wretchedly accuses himself.

§ 3. Another ground is weakness of body, on account of which someone may seek to be absolved from the burden of pastoral solicitude, a weakness that proceeds either from infirmity or from old age; yet not every such weakness, but only that by which he is rendered unable to execute the pastoral office. For if the office of an undertaken service could be abandoned because of any bodily weakness, the Apostle would in vain declare that he glories in his infirmities. And someone burdened with old age ought not altogether to excuse himself from the care of pastoral governance, since sometimes the weakness of old age no more exhorts someone to resign than the moral maturity that is accustomed to exist in the elderly counsels him to remain in his office. For on behalf of such persons the Apostle says of himself, "When I am weak, then I am stronger," because sometimes infirmity of body increases strength of heart.

§ 4. Because of a defect of knowledge also, someone can very often seek resignation from the pastoral office. For, since knowledge is especially necessary concerning the administration of spiritual things and useful concerning the care of temporal things, the prelate, who ought to govern in both respects the church committed to him, beneficially renounces it if he is ignorant of the knowledge by which he may govern it. For, since he has to teach his subjects what they ought to do and what to avoid, he will neither teach them well what he himself has not learned to flee, nor practice what he has not learned. "For you," says the Lord, "have rejected knowledge, and I will reject you, that you may not discharge the priesthood for me." Although eminent knowledge is to be desired in a pastor, nevertheless competent knowledge is to be tolerated in him, because according to the Apostle, "knowledge puffs up, but charity builds up"; and therefore the perfection of charity can supply the imperfection of knowledge.

§ 5. Moreover, because of the malice of the people a prelate is sometimes compelled to withdraw from their governance, [and] this when the people are so stiff-necked and are found so obstinate in their rebellion that he is unable to make progress among them, but, because of their hardness, the more he strives [to make progress], the more by a just judgment he is permitted to fail, the Lord saying through the Prophet: "I will cause your tongue to cleave to your palate, because it is a provoking house"; and the Apostles are read to have said to the Jews: "Behold, we turn to the gentiles, because you have made yourselves unworthy of the word of God." Nevertheless, a pastor ought not to desert his flock for just any fault, lest perhaps he be compared to the hireling who sees the wolf coming, leaves the sheep, and flees; but with the permission of his superior he can at last not so much flee timidly as withdraw providently, when the sheep are turned into wolves and those who ought humbly to have obeyed now irrevocably contradict. Although such persons are to be punished severely for their crime, nevertheless they are usefully to be tolerated for a time, because he draws blood who presses the nose too hard.

§ 6. To avoid a grave scandal also, when it cannot be quieted otherwise, a bishop is permitted to seek resignation, lest he seem to affect temporal honor more than eternal salvation, mindful of what the Apostle says: "If food scandalizes my brother, I will not eat flesh forever," lest I scandalize my brother. But one must distinguish subtly between scandal and scandal, as the Lord himself distinguished. When the Apostles had said to him, "Do you know that the Pharisees are scandalized upon hearing this word?" he answered: "Let them alone; they are blind and leaders of the blind." Elsewhere, however, he said: "Whoever scandalizes one of these little ones who believe in me, it is expedient for him that an ass's millstone be suspended from his neck and that he be submerged in the depth of the sea." For although it is necessary that scandals come, nevertheless woe to him through whom scandal comes.

Irregularity of the person, moreover—as, for example, if someone is a bigamist or the husband of a widow—is a ground on account of which someone can seek permission to resign the pontifical dignity, the Apostle attesting when he says: "A bishop ought to be the husband of one wife." Nevertheless, permission to resign ought not to be granted because of every personal irregularity to one who has ministered regularly, as, for example, if he was not born of a lawful marriage. For, although he could not have kept silent about an irregularity of this kind, nevertheless, if both the fault and its cause lie hidden, a dispensation can be granted to one who has laudably fulfilled his office, after a suitable penance has been enjoined upon him, no less usefully than mercifully. "I am," he says, "a jealous God, visiting the sins of the fathers upon the sons to the third and fourth generation in those who hate me," that is, in those who imitate the paternal hatred against me. From this it is clear that, for those who do not follow their fathers' vices, their own virtues can assist them in such matters, with this moderating exercise of discretion employed: that a distinction be made among nothi and manzeres, natural children and spurii.

But because vices very often falsely represent themselves as virtues to a mind insufficiently provident, you ought subtly to consider whether the purpose of resigning that you appear to carry so fervently in your breast is worthy of God's hatred or love. For if you were seeking to resign for any of the foregoing grounds, we would grieve equally over both the ground and its effect. But lest detestable impiety drive you to resignation beneath the covering of undiscerning piety, we will you to consider that there are also other grounds on account of which someone badly seeks, and still worse desires, to resign an office of this kind.

For if from pusillanimity—perhaps so that he may lay aside labor or escape persecution—or, far be it, from vanity—so that he may more fully have leisure for idleness or indulge in pleasures more freely—someone wishes to desert pastoral care, he does not merit to be absolved from it, although through vanity of this kind, as one who sins mortally, he renders himself unworthy of it; rather, he ought to take pains that, after vanity has been laid aside, he make satisfaction for the sin.

Indeed, we believe another ground for resignation to be utterly detestable: namely, if someone wishes to depart from the pontifical dignity so that he may capture human glory, as though he were choosing to be abject in the house of the Lord rather than to dwell in the tabernacles of sinners; or so that he may not lose the worldly honor that he acquired through hypocrisy, whether because his pretense is now beginning to be revealed, or because his fervor grows lukewarm from any cause and he does not wish it to appear either that he was evil or that he is becoming so, and therefore beneath the pretext of religion he wishes to cover his depravity, so that, as though deserting Martha, he may embrace Mary and, disdaining Leah's weak eyes, may desire Rachel's beauty.

But what if he wishes to resign for this reason: that in a time of prosperity, while fortune smiled, he appeared to minister laudably because all things were succeeding prosperously for him, but when a time of adversity threatens, he fears that, if adverse things occur by any chance, they will be imputed to his negligence? Plainly, if for this reason he seeks to resign, he can be compared to an improvident sailor who, when the sea lay calm, worked the rudder of the ship without much labor, but, when a storm arises, abandons it and allows it to go down into the deep.

We also utterly detest that ground of resignation if perhaps a bishop wishes to resign so that another may succeed him, whether with a view to a price or from carnal affection, or so that, when one worse than himself has succeeded him, he himself may be exalted as though the best. Moreover, we reject and condemn as an impiety the claim that a bishop, because of worldly occupations and secular solicitudes, cannot exercise the pontifical office without crime, since the Church venerates many saints who administered spiritual and temporal things together. Nevertheless, the left hand ought to be under the head and the right hand in the embrace.

But we also will you diligently to consider lest perhaps through this purpose of your disposition you wish to become one of those concerning whom it is said through the Prophet: “The sons of Ephraim, bending the bow and shooting arrows, turned back on the day of battle,” when instead you ought to set yourself as a wall for the house of Israel against those ascending from the opposite side, because according to the pronouncement of Truth it is not the one who has begun, but the one who has persevered, who will be saved. Take more diligent care lest you place a stain upon your glory, not only before men but also before God, because beneath this cloak you will not be able to conceal yourself—not merely before God, who searches the reins and hearts, but not even before men, who suspect such things from probable conjectures. And prudently consider that, according to the pronouncement of the wise man, the spirit of discipline will flee the fictitious and will take itself away from thoughts that stand without understanding.

If, however, you fear to incur the burden of difficulty in protecting the liberty of the Church, you ought not on that account to desert the honor of the prelacy. Consider diligently lest perhaps by a just judgment you are being tempted by him who is the tempter to evils, so that it may be proved whether you are willing to make satisfaction in that matter in which perhaps you transgressed. But one who scorns or neglects to make satisfaction for a transgression stores up wrath for himself on the day of wrath, when God will reveal the hidden things of darkness. Behold, indeed, we have brought a mirror before you, that you may contemplate yourself in it and, having searched your conscience, may recognize from what ground you importunately seek permission to resign. For we—as the Most High knows—are ignorant why you persist in the purpose of resigning, since neither infirmity of body, nor length of age, nor defect of knowledge, nor malice of the people, nor irregularity of person renders you unfit, nor do you confess that you have consciousness of a grievous crime.

§ 7. But if you desire resignation for other grounds, favor is not to be shown to you as you seek it in this matter, since a request of this kind appears not to be discreet. For, to omit as very well known the fact that idleness and pleasure are the weapons of the ancient enemy for capturing wretched souls, you ought not to desert your bride because of the anguishes of labor or assaults of persecution, to whom, by striking your hand with a stranger, you joined yourself by an intervening pledge, knowing that "blessed are those who suffer persecution for justice," because, when they have been proved, they will receive the crown of life that God has promised to those who love him.

§ 8. But you will say that "the spirit breathes where it wills, and you do not know whence it comes or where it goes," and therefore there is no one who can search out the paths of that spirit; and those who are led by the Spirit of God are not under the law, because where the Spirit of God is, there is liberty. Therefore, if permission to resign has not been given to you by man, nevertheless you will resign, because liberty to resign has been given to you by God. Certainly you are foolish if you think thus. For how is one led by the Spirit of God who acts against the Spirit of God? For if the matters we have set forth above are true—indeed, because they are indubitably true—without doubt one who attempts any of these matters against the truth acts against the Spirit of God, because he is the Spirit of truth.

§ 9. But if you say that perhaps there is another hidden ground on account of which the will to resign is inspired in you from heaven, we answer in turn: how do you know that such inspiration is heavenly? Do you not remember what that glorious pontiff said when he began suddenly to be deprived of the strength of his body? "Lord," he said, "if I am still necessary to your people, I do not refuse the labor; let your will be done!" He followed the example of the one who said: "I desire to be dissolved and to be with Christ, but to remain in the flesh is necessary for you."

Therefore, because we have distinguished for you diverse grounds in this matter and are ignorant for which of them you desire to resign, we have decided to commit you to yourself, so that, judging yourself from the tribunal of your own mind, you may see whether you can satisfy the desire of resigning in such a way that you may withdraw without fault from the care of the flock committed to you. For if by resigning you desire to benefit yourself alone, without doubt you subtract as much from your own benefit as you fail to expend upon others what you could expend, because then you would acquire greater gains for your soul when, without your own salvation, you procured the salvation of many. For it is of greater merit for someone to gain very many for God together with himself than to seek his own salvation without those whose salvation is known to pertain to his care.

§ 10. Indeed, however great the flower of virtues with which you shine, if you do not have charity in yourself, you are proved to have nothing. Under what pretext of virtue, then, do you seek to lay aside the burden of pastoral solicitude, which can scarcely be deserted without loss of charity? "For there can be no greater charity than that someone lay down his life for his friends." And since because of this charity it befits you to lay down your life for your subjects, on no occasion, provided that you can benefit them—even if not all, nevertheless many—does it befit you to excuse yourself from their governance. For if you put forward labor as the ground, the Apostle's example will sustain you. He counsels you not to flee labor of this kind when he asserts that he labored more than the rest for the common salvation; for although the result does not always follow the labor, nevertheless the labor itself is meritorious before God, according to what is written: "God will render the reward of the labors of his saints."

But grant that you have labored greatly until now and, with the same Apostle, can say that you have fought the good fight: nevertheless, in order that thereafter the crown of justice may be laid up for you, it befits you to complete the course of a perfect work. For however much, amid the labors of the anguishes that accompany the pastoral office, you number for yourself laborious nights and, like a wearied stag, desire the shade of rest; however much, distressed amid the squalors of the road, you are drawn by love of the homeland and, like a hired laborer who has completed his service, anxiously await the end of your work; nevertheless, it is expedient for you to perfect virtue in infirmity and crown your struggle with perseverance. And, knowing that you struck your hand with a stranger when you received the souls of the flock committed to you into your own soul, you ought not so to desire for yourself the harbor of repose that you allow the children who have sailed with you until now to be tossed, without the aid of an oarsman, upon this great and spacious sea in fear of shipwreck.

§ 11. Nor should you think that Martha chose an evil part, she who was busy about many things, because Mary chose the best part, which will not be taken away from her. For, although the latter is safer, the former is nevertheless more fruitful; and, although the latter is sweeter, the former is nevertheless more useful, since, in fruitfulness of offspring, Leah's weak eyes are preferred to Rachel's beauty. Yet you can be both contemplative and active together at once, after the example of the lawgiver, who at one time ascended the mountain so that there he might see the glory of the Lord with greater freedom, but at another descended into the camp so that he might provide for the necessities of the people with greater usefulness. Therefore, it is more easily permitted that a monk ascend to the prelacy than that a prelate descend to the monastic life.

§ 12. We therefore admonish you that, abhorring that expression of Davidic imprecation and fearing lest it be applied to you through the effect of your deed—the imprecation that the days of the impious man become few, that another may receive his bishopric—you not refuse the labor of pastoral governance. And, casting your thought upon the Lord, determine nothing concerning yourself against the will of the Most High, who, when he sees that you are necessary to his people, perhaps would bear it grievously if it should happen that he himself was neglected by you; lest perhaps he should scorn to receive you with Mary at his feet, when you had scorned solicitously to minister with Martha to him when he turned aside to lodge with you.

This also ought to establish you more firmly in the purpose of ministering: since you have until now ministered laudably in the church committed to you, if—which God forbid—when you resign, another less useful should be assumed to it, assuredly you would be disturbed not a little in the very repose that you desire, when, where you had exercised your ministry well, you would see not without sorrow the failure of a useless minister. And it would happen that you would recognize that as much had been lost to you in the citadel of contemplation as you would see, not without your confusion, had through you been withdrawn from the church over which you preside.

But because, both personally and through your envoys and letters, you have already insisted too much before us in seeking permission to resign, behold, we have decided to leave you to yourself. The grounds on account of which one ought to resign or not to resign having been distinguished for you, if you persevere in a purpose of this kind because of some useful and honorable ground, you may resign with our permission—although you should know that this is exceedingly grievous and troublesome to us. Otherwise, you should know that permission to resign is altogether forbidden to you by apostolic authority, because, even if you have wings by which you strive to fly away into solitude, they are nevertheless so bound by the chains of the commandments that you do not have free flight without our permission. But if, finally, your will should drive you to fly, we will and command that you cause our letters to be recited in the hearing of your chapter. [Etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Kalends of March, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Textual note: In section 9 the source prints sine tua salute ("without your own salvation"), a reading also present in the Friedberg-derived reference text but difficult in context; the following sentence instead speaks of gaining many for God "together with oneself." In multis enim offendimus omnes, et si dixerimus, quia peccatum non habemus, nos ipsos seducimus et veritas in nobis non est, quia misericorditer illum excusat, qui miserabiliter se accusat. § 3. Alia vero causa est debilitas corporis, propter quam aliquis potest petere ab onere sollicitudinis pastoralis absolvi, quae videlicet vel ex infirmitate, vel ex senectute procedit; nec tamen omnis, sed illa solummodo, per quam impotens redditur ad exsequendum officium pastorale. Nam si pro qualibet corporali debilitate susceptae servitutis officium posset deseri, frustra se fateretur Apostolus in suis infirmitatibus gloriari, et senectute gravatus quispiam a cura se non debet omnino pastoralis regiminis excusare, quum interdum non plus hortetur senilis debilitas aliquem cedere, quam moralis maturitas, quae in senibus esse solet, ipsum in suo suadet officio permanere. Pro talibus enim de se dicit Apostolus: "Quum infirmor, tunc fortior sum," quia nonnunquam corporis infirmitas fortitudinem cordis augmentat. § 4. Pro defectu quoque scientiae plerumque potest quis pastoralis officii petere cessionem, quia, quum ipsa circa spiritualium administrationem sit potissimum necessaria, et circa curam temporalium opportuna, praesul, qui commissam sibi debet ecclesiam regere in utrisque, salubriter ei renunciat, si scientiam, in qua ipsam regat, ignorat, quoniam, quum subiectos docere habeat, quid facere debeant, quid cavere, nec bene docebit eos, quod nescierit ipse fugere, nec illud, quod ignoraverit, exercere. "Tu enim," inquit Dominus, "scientiam repulisti, et ego repellam te, ne sacerdotio fungaris mihi." Quanquam, etsi desideranda sit eminens scientia in pastore, in eo tamen sit competens toleranda, quia secundum Apostolum "scientia inflat, caritas autem aedificat," et ideo imperfectum scientiae potest supplere perfectio caritatis. § 5. Propter malitiam autem plebis cogitur interdum praelatus ab ipsius regimine declinare, [et] quando plebs adeo durae cervicis exsistit, et in rebellione sua ita pertinax invenitur, ut proficere nequeat apud ipsam, sed propter eius duritiam, quo magis [proficere] satagit, eo magis iusto iudicio deficere permittatur, dicente Domino per Prophetam: "Linguam tuam adhaerere faciam palato tuo, quia domus exasperans est," et Apostoli leguntur dixisse Iudaeis: "Ecce convertimur ad gentes, quia verbi Dei vos indignos fecistis." Non tamen pro qualibet culpa pastor debet gregem deserere suum, ne forte mercenario comparetur, qui videt lupum venientem, et dimittit oves, et fugit, sed de superioris licentia tunc demum potest non tam timide fugere, quam provide declinare, quum oves convertuntur in lupos, et qui debuerant humiliter obedire iam irrevocabiliter contradicunt; quum, etsi tales sint graviter pro crimine puniendi, sunt tamen pro tempore utiliter tolerandi, quia sanguinem elicit qui nimis emungit. § 6. Pro gravi quoque scandalo evitando, quum aliter sedari non potest, licet episcopo petere cessionem, ne plus temporalem honorem quam aeternam videatur affectare salutem, memor illius, quod dicit Apostolus: "Si esca scandalizaverit fratrem meum, non manducabo carnem in aeternum," ne fratrem meum scandalizem. Sed inter scandalum et scandalum est subtiliter distinguendum, sicut Dominus ipse distinxit, cui quum dixissent Apostoli: "Scis, quia pharisaei audito hoc verbo scandalizantur?" respondit: "Sinite illos, caeci sunt, et duces caecorum." Alibi vero dixit: "Qui scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis, qui in me credunt, expedit ei, ut suspendatur mola asinaria m collo eius, et demergatur in profundum maris." Nam etsi necesse sit, ut scandala veniant, vae tamen illi, per quem scandalum venit. Personae vero irregularitas, ut, si forte sit bigamus vel viduae maritus, est causa, propter quam petere potest licentiam aliquis resignandi pontificii dignitatem, attestante Apostolo, qui dicit: "Oportet episcopum esse unius uxoris virum." Non tamen propter quamlibet irregularitatem personae debet ei, qui regulariter ministravit, cedendi licentia indulgeri, utpote si de legitimo matrimonio non sit natus, quia, licet irregularitatem huiusmodi non potuerit subticere, si tamen et culpa latet et causa, cum eo, qui laudabiliter suum implevit officium, iniuncta sibi poenitentia competenti, potest non minus utiliter, quam misericorditer dispensari. "Ego sum," inquit, "Deus zelotes, vindicans peccata patrum in filios usque in tertiam et quartam generationem in his, qui oderunt me," id est, in illis, qui contra me paternum odium imitantur. Unde patet, quod illis, qui paterna vitia non sequuntur, propriae possunt in talibus suffragari virtutes; illo discretionis adhibito moderamine, ut inter nothos et manzeres, naturales et spurios distinguatur. Quum autem plerumque vitia se virtutes esse menti minus providae mentiantur, subtiliter advertere te oportet, utrum resignandi propositum, quod tam ferventer gestare videris in pectore, dignum sit Dei odio vel amore. Si enim propter causam aliquam praemissarum cedere postulares, tam super causa, quam super eius effectu pariter doleremus. Sed ne sub improvidae pietatis amictu ad resignandum detestabilis impietas te impellat, considerare te volumus, et alias esse causas, propter quas male quis petit et peius appetit officium huiusmodi resignare. Si enim ex pusillanimitate, fortassis ut laborem deponat, vel persecutionem effugiat, aut ex vanitate, quod absit, ut plenius vacet otiis, seu liberius indulgeat voluptatibus, curam vult aliquis deserere pastoralem, ab ea non meretur absolvi, quamvis propter huiusmodi vanitatem, tanquam qui mortaliter peccat, ea reddat se indignum, sed satagere debet, ut vanitate deposita satisfaciat de peccato. Aliam vero cedendi causam omnino credimus detestandam. Si quis videlicet a pontificali velit discedere dignitate, ut gloriam captet humanam, tanquam eligat abiectus esse in domo Domini magis, quam habitare in tabernaculis peccatorum, vel ut mundanum non amittat honorem, quem per hypocrisin acquisivit, sive quod eius simulatio revelari iam incipit, sive quod fervor ipsius ex qualibet causa tepescit, nec vult videri, quod malus fuerit, aut quod fiat, et ideo sub religionis praetextu suam vult contegere pravitatem, ut quasi deserens Martham amplexetur Mariam, et Liae fastidiens lippitudinem Rachelis pulchritudinem concupiscat: quid autem, si propterea velit cedere, quod tempore prosperitatis, arridente fortuna, visus est laudabiliter ministrare, quoniam omnia sibi prospere succedebant, sed adversitatis tempore imminente veretur, ne, si quolibet casu sinistra contingant, ipsius negligentiae imputetur? Plane si propter hoc petit cedere, nautae se potest improvido comparare, qui, quum mari sub tranquillitate iacente sine multo labore navis exercuerit gubernaculum, ipsam tempestate surgente deserit, et devenire patitur in profundum. Illam quoque cedendi causam penitus detestamur, si forte cedere velit episcopus, ut vel alter sibi succedat, vel obtentu pretii vel affectu carnali, vel ut quum peior sibi successerit, ipse velut optimus extollatur. Illud autem quasi nefas respuimus et damnamus, quod episcopus propter occupationes mundanas et sollicitudines saeculares non valeat sine crimine pontificale officium exercere, quum multos sanctos ecclesia veneretur, qui spiritualia simul et temporalia ministrarunt. Verum tamen laeva debet esse sub capite, et dextra in amplexu. Sed et, illud te volumus advertere diligenter, ne forte per hoc tuae dispositionis propositum effici velis ex illis, de quibus dicitur per Prophetam: "Filii Effrem intendentes arcum et mittentes sagittas conversi sunt in die belli," quum potius pro domo Israel murum debeas te opponere ascendentibus ex adverso, quia iuxta sententiam veritatis non qui inceperit, sed qui perseveraverit salvus erit; cavens attentius, ne maculam in gloria tua ponas, non solum apud homines, sed etiam apud Deum, quoniam sub hoc pallio te non poteris occultare, nedum apud Deum, qui renes rimatur et corda, sed nec etiam apud homines, qui ex verisimilibus coniecturis talia suspicantur. Illudque prudenter attendas, quod iuxta sententiam sapientis spiritus disciplinae effugiet fictum, et auferet se a cogitationibus, quae sine intellectu consistunt. Si vero pro tuenda ecclesiae libertate difficultatis onus incurrere pertimescis, non ideo deserere debes praesulatus honorem, considerans diligenter, ne forte iusto iudicio tenteris ab illo, qui malorum est intentator, ut probetur, utrum satisfacere velis in eo, in quo forsan deliquisti. Qui vero contemnit aut negligit satisfacere pro delicto, thesaurizat sibi iram in die irae, quum revelabit Deus abscondita tenebrarum. Ecce quidem admovimus tibi speculum, ut te ipsum contempleris in ipso, tuamque, conscientiam perscrutatus agnoscas, ex qua causa cedendi licentiam postules importune. Nos enim, novit altissimus, ignoramus, quare in cedendi proposito perseveres, quoniam nec infirmitas corporis, nec longaevitas temporis, nec defectus scientiae, nec malitia plebis, nec irregularitas personae te reddit ineptum, nec conscientiam saevi criminis te fateris habere. § 7. Verum si propter alias causas cessionem affectes, non est in hoc tibi postulanti favendum, quum huiusmodi postulatio videatur non esse discreta, quoniam, ut id tanquam notissimum omittamus, quod otiositas et voluptas arma sunt hostis antiqui ad miseras animas captivandas, propter laboris angustias, aut persecutionis incursus non debes deserere sponsam tuam, cui defigendo manum apud extraneum te fide media copulasti, sciens quod, "beati sunt illi, qui persecutionem patiuntur propter iustitiam," quoniam, quum probati fuerint, accipient coronam vitae, quam repromisit Deus diligentibus se. § 8. Sed dices, quod "spiritus, ubi vult, spirat, et nescis, unde veniat, aut quo vadat," et ideo non est, qui possit vias illius spiritus perscrutari; qui vero spiritu Dei aguntur, non sunt sub lege, quoniam ubi Spiritus Dei, ibi libertas. Quare si cedendi tibi licentia data ab homine non fuerit, nihilominus tamen cedes, quia data est tibi libertas cedendi a Deo. Certe desipis, si sic sapis. Nam quomodo spiritu Dei agitur qui contra spiritum Dei agit? Si enim vera sunt quae praemisimus, immo quia indubitanter sunt vera, procul dubio contra spiritum Dei agit, qui aliquid horum contra veritatem attentat, quoniam ipse est spiritus veritatis. § 9. Porro si dicas, quod forsitan alia est causa latens, propter quam cedendi voluntas tibi coelitus inspiratur, et nos siquidem respondemus: tu quomodo scis, quod talis inspiratio sit coelestis? Nonne recolis, quod ille gloriosus pontifex dixerit, quum coepisset viribus corporis repente destitui: "Domine," inquit, "si adhuc populo tuo sum necessarius, non recuso laborem, fiat voluntas tua!" Illius exemplum secutus, qui dixit: "Cupio dissolvi, et esse cum Christo, manere autem in carne necessarium est propter vos." Quia igitur diversas tibi causas super hac causa distinximus, et propter quam earum cedere desideres ignoramus, te ipsum tibi duximus committendum, ut, de propriae mentis tribunali te iudicans, videas, si sic possis resignandi desiderio satisfacere, ut gregis tibi commisi curam sine culpa valeas declinare. Si enim cedendo proficere appetis tibi soli, profectui tuo sine dubio tantum subtrahis, quantum quod impendere poteras aliis non impendis, quia tunc maiora animae tuae lucra conquireres, quum sine tua salute salutem plurium procurares. Potioris enim est meriti secum Deo quemquam plurimos lucrifacere, quam salutem propriam quaerere sine illis, quorum salus ad eius curam noscitur pertinere. § 10. Quippe si quantocunque virtutum flore refulgeas, et in te non habeas caritatem, nihil te comprobaris habere, sub quo virtutis praetextu deponere quaeris onus sollicitudinis pastoralis, quod vix potest absque iactura deseri caritatis? "Nulla siquidem maior poterit esse caritas, quam ut animam suam ponat quis pro amicis suis." Quum autem propter hanc te deceat animam tuam pro subditis tuis ponere, nulla occasione, dummodo proficere illis possis, etsi non omnibus, tamen multis, ab eorum regimine te convenit excusare; quoniam, si laboris causam praetendis, exemplum te Apostoli sublevabit, qui suadet tibi laborem huiusmodi non refugere, dum se asserit pro communi salute plus ceteris laborasse, quia, licet non semper sequatur laborem effectus, nihilominus tamen ipse labor est meritorius apud Deum, iuxta quod legitur: "Reddet Deus mercedem laborum sanctorum suorum." Sed esto, quod multum hactenus laboraveris, et bonum certamen certaveris, cum eodem Apostolo possis dicere, tamen ut corona tibi iustitiae de reliquo reponatur, cursum te decet perfecti operis consummare. Quantumlibet enim in angustiarum laboribus, qui comitantur officium pastorale, noctes tibi laboriosas enumeras, et tanquam fatigatus cervus umbram quietis affectes, quantumlibet inter viae squalores angustians patriae dilectione traharis, et velut emeritus mercenarius operis tui finem anxius praestoleris, expedit tibi tamen virtutem in infirmitate perficere, et pugnam tuam perseverantia coronare, sciensque, quod apud extraneum defixeris manum tuam, quum animas tibi commissi gregis in tuam animam suscepisti, non sic debes portum tibi quietis appetere, ut navigantes hactenus tecum filios sine remigis adiutorio patiaris in hoc mari magno et spatioso cum timore naufragii fluctuare. § 11. Nec putes, quod ideo Martha malam partem elegerit, quae circa plurima satagebat, quia Maria optimam partem elegit, quae non auferetur ab ea; quoniam, licet illa sit magis secura, ista tamen est magis fructifera, et licet illa sit magis suavis, haec tamen magis est utilis, quum in foecunditate sobolis lippitudo Liae Rachelis pulchritudini sit praelata; quamvis simul in unum et contemplativus esse valeas et activus legislatoris exemplo, qui nunc ascendebat in montem, ut ibi gloriam Domini cum maiori cerneret libertate, nunc vero descendebat in castra, ut cum utilitate maiori necessitatibus populi provideret. Quapropter facilius indulgetur, ut ascendat monachus ad praesulatum, quam praesul ad monachatum descendat. § 12. Monemus itaque, ut illam vocem Davidicae imprecationis abhorrens, tibique formidans eam per effectum operis adaptari, quae dies impii paucos fieri, ut episcopatum eius accipiat alter, imprecatur, laborem pastoralis regiminis non recuses, iactansque tuum in Domino cogitatum, nihil contra voluntatem altissimi statuas de te ipso, qui, quum te suo viderit esse populo necessarium, forte grave ferret, quum ipsum a te contingeret esse neglectum, ne fortassis ad pedes suos cum Maria sperneret te recipere, qui sibi apud te divertenti sprevisses cum Martha sollicita ministrare. Illud quoque te debet fortius in ministrandi proposito stabilire, quia, quum hactenus in ecclesia tibi commissa laudabiliter ministraris, si quod absit, alius te cedente minus utilis assumeretur ad ipsam, profecto non parum in ipsa quiete, quam appetis, turbareris, quum, ubi bene tuum exercueras ministerium, non absque dolore cerneres inutilis ministri defectum, fieretque, ut tantum in contemplationis arce tibi deperisse cognosceres, quantum ecclesiae, cui praesides, non sine tua confusione per te subtractum esse videres.

> Quia vero tam per te, quam per nuncios et literas tuas apud nos iam nimis in postulando cedendi licentiam institisti, ecce tibi te duximus relinquendum, ut distinctis tibi causis, propter quas cedere oporteat, vel non cedere si propter aliquam causam utilem et honestam in huiusmodi proposito perseveres, de licentia nostra cedas, quod tamen grave nobis plurimum esse noveris et molestum. Alioquin cedendi licentiam auctoritate apostolica tibi scias esse penitus interdictam, quoniam, etsi pennas habeas, quibus satagas in solitudinem advolare, ita tamen adstrictae sunt nexibus praeceptorum, ut liberum non habeas absque nostra permissione volatum. Quodsi denique tua voluntas te impulerit ad volandum, volumus et mandamus, ut nostras literas in audientia tui capituli facias recitari. [etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Kal. Mart. Pont. nostr. Ao. Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A bishop who resigned his bishopric because of a crime and passed into the religious life cannot be reassumed to a bishopric; it is otherwise if he resigned because of persecution, infirmity, defect of knowledge, simony committed without his knowledge, or another similar ground.

The same, to the Bishop of Faenza, elected Archbishop of Ravenna.

After your translation to the church of Ravenna, when our beloved sons the provost and canons, the abbots and primicerii of Faenza, and the entire clergy of the city, as we have learned through their letters, had unanimously conferred upon our beloved son I., a priest and their fellow canon, free authority to elect, he, after the grace of the Holy Spirit had been invoked, chose our beloved son I., a canon of Saint Fridianus of Lucca and formerly Bishop of Sarno, to be postulated as Bishop of Faenza. Through his circumspect solicitude—he who first as canon and afterwards as provost conducted himself laudably in the church of Faenza—it is hoped that benefits will come to the same church in many ways. Moreover, after the prior of Saint Fridianus, our beloved son, had been consulted concerning this and his consent obtained, the provost and the others named above humbly sought that the same postulation be approved by us.

But at first sight a chapter of the Council of Constantinople seemed to oppose a postulation of this kind. In it, it was established that whoever descends from the pontifical dignity to the life of monks and a place of penance shall by no means rise again thereafter to the pontificate. Therefore, contrary to the said council, since it is one of the four principal councils that the catholic Church venerates as the four Gospels, their postulation seemed in no way admissible.

§ 1. But certain special cases are found in which, notwithstanding the aforesaid council, one who has chosen the monastic life can lawfully be assumed to a bishopric again. For if anyone, while the fury of persecution rages or bodily ill health impedes him, when he cannot make progress in pastoral governance, descends with the authority of his superior to the monastic life, he will be able, when the impediment of persecution or sickness ceases, to rise again to the episcopal dignity.

§ 2. Likewise, if anyone, because of a defect of learning, lest as a blind man he offer guidance to a blind man, has abandoned the place of governance by apostolic authority and betaken himself to monastic leisure, and through the exercise of reading has found the pearl of knowledge, without doubt he will be able, when called anew by the Lord, to ascend again to the pastoral chair.

§ 3. Again, if anyone, through the cupidity of his relatives but entirely without his knowledge, has obtained a bishopric, and, once this is discovered, relinquishing the bishopric itself with his superior's permission, has chosen regular observance, although he cannot afterwards return to the same bishopric according to the canonical enactments, nevertheless he can lawfully be reassumed to another.

§ 4. Although in these and similar cases one who, having relinquished a bishopric, chose the monastic life can rise again to the pastoral office, nevertheless nothing in these cases is understood to be attempted contrary to the aforesaid council, which speaks in the case in which someone, abandoning a bishopric because of some crime, descends to the monastic life for the sake of penance. Hence certain persons have said that the chapter named above speaks in the case in which someone, because of a crime of which he had been convicted or which he had confessed, was deposed from the episcopal dignity and shut up in a monastery to perform penance, or when someone, because of a grave crime for which he could not worthily perform penance while retaining the bishopric, obtained permission to resign and chose the monastic life. Others assert that the aforesaid chapter is to be understood so that he cannot rise again by his own action—that is, reclaim as though it were owed what he relinquished in such a manner—although he can be elected, especially if he resigned only the place and not the order.

§ 5. Therefore, since it could not be fully established for us for what ground the aforesaid I. once resigned the bishopric—for in our letters transmitted concerning this, only this was expressed to him: that we, having received his letters concerning his resignation and commending in the Lord his purpose, because he preferred the salvation of his soul to temporal honor, absolved him from the burden of pastoral solicitude—although it was suggested to us very recently by a certain canon of Saint Fridianus that the said Joachim sought permission to resign for this reason: that it had come to his knowledge that certain relatives of his, so that he would be elected bishop, had given certain things, though few, we command your fraternity by the authority of the present letters that, after the truth concerning these matters has been most diligently investigated, if it should be established for you that the same I. resigned the aforementioned bishopric because of one of the grounds set forth above or grounds similar to them, you, by our authority and with the obstacle of any contradiction and appeal removed, provided that necessity or utility requires it, grant him permission to ascend to the governance of the church of Faenza.

This is especially so if what both the aforesaid provost and canons of Faenza and the prior and chapter of Saint Fridianus expressed to us in their letters is supported by truth: namely, that the said I. resigned only the aforementioned place and not the order, or even the dignity. For then it would have to be very strongly presumed that he migrated to the regular life not because of any crime committed by him, but for the sake of performing penance, especially since, after the resignation, the Apostolic See would have permitted him, if entangled in such a crime, much less than before to minister in the pontifical order. Otherwise, since it would be exceedingly harsh to admit a postulation of this kind contrary to so solemn a council, you shall enjoin upon the aforesaid provost and canons that they elect another suitable person as their pastor. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Ides of February, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

> Episcopus, qui propter crimen renunciavit episcopatui, et ad religionem transivit, ad episcopatum reassumi non potest; secus, si renunciavit propter persecutionem, infirmitatem, defectum scientiae, simoniam ipso ignorante commissam, vel aliam similem causam.
> Idem Episcopo Faventino in Archiepiscopum Ravennatem electo.

Post translationem tuam ad ecclesiam Ravennatensem quum dilecti filii praepositus et canonici, abbates et primicerii Faventini, totusque civitatis clerus, sicut per literas eorundem accepimus, in dilectum filium I. presbyterum eorum concanonicum liberam eligendi auctoritatem unanimiter contulissent, ipse sancti Spiritus gratia invocata dilectum filium I. sancti Fridiani Lucanensis canonicum, olim episcopum Sarnatensem, in Faventinum episcopum postulandum elegit, per cuius sollicitudinem circumspectam, qui primo canonicus, et postea praepositus in Faventina ecclesia fuit laudabiliter conversatus, multipliciter sperantur eidem ecclesiae commoda proventura. Porro a dilecto filio sancti Fridiani priore super hoc requisito et obtento consensu, praepositus et alii supra dicti postulationem eandem approbari a nobis humiliter petierunt. Verum postulationi huiusmodi videbatur concilii Constantinopolitani capitulum prima facie obviare, in quo statutum est, ut quicunque de pontificali dignitate ad monachorum vitam et poenitentiae locum descenderit, nequaquam ulterius ad pontificatum resurgat. Unde contra dictum concilium, quum sit unum ex quatuor principalibus, quae sicut quatuor evangelia ecclesia catholica veneratur, nullatenus videbatur eorum postulatio admittenda. § 1. Ceterum speciales quidam casus inveniuntur, in quibus, praedicto concilio non obstante, is, qui vitam monachalem elegit, rursum licite potest ad episcopatum assumi. Si enim quisquam persecutionis rabie saeviente, vel praepediente invalitudine corporis, quum proficere nequeat in regimine pastorali, de superioris auctoritate ad monasticam vitam descendat, persecutionis vel aegritudinis impedimento cessante ad episcopalem poterit resurgere dignitatem. § 2. Item si quis propter literaturae defectum, ne tanquam caecus caeco ducatum praebeat, locum regiminis auctoritate apostolica deserendo ad otium se contulerit monachale, ac per exercitium lectionis scientiae repererit margaritam, proculdubio poterit denuo vocatus a Domino cathedram reascendere pastoralem. § 3. Rursus, si quis per cupiditatem parentum, eo tamen penitus ignorante, fuerit episcopatum adeptus, et hoc comperto episcopatum ipsum de licentia superioris dimittens, observantiam elegerit regularem, etsi ad episcopatum eundem redire postmodum nequeat iuxta canonicas sanctiones, ad alium tamen poterit licite reassumi. § 4. Quanquam autem in his et consimilibus casibus is, qui episcopatu dimisso monasticam vitam elegit, resurgere valeat ad officium pastorale, nihil tamen in his contra praescriptum intelligitur concilium attentari, quod in eo loquitur casu, quum propter aliquod crimen episcopatum quis deserens ad vitam monasticam poenitentiae causa descendit. Unde quidam in eo casu loqui dixerunt capitulum supra dictum, quum quis pro crimine, de quo convictus fuerat vel confessus, ab episcopali dignitate depositus, in monasterio exstitit ad poenitentiam agendam inclusus, vel quum aliquis propter grave crimen, pro quo episcopatum retinens poenitentiam digne agere non valebat, cedendi obtenta licentia vitam monachalem elegit. Aliis asserentibus, sic intelligendum esse capitulum antedictum, ut per se resurgere nequeat, id est, repetere quasi debitum quod tali modo dimisit, quanquam eligi possit, praesertim, si locum tantum, et non ordinem resignavit. § 5. Quum ergo nobis plene constare nequiverit, ob quam causam praedictus I. episcopatui olim cesserit, quum in nostris literis, super hoc transmissis, eidem hoc solummodo exprimatur, quod nos, literis super sua resignatione receptis, eius propositum in Domino commendantes, quod temporali honori salutem animae praeponebat, eundem absolvimus ab onere sollicitudinis pastoralis: quanquam per quendam S. Fridiani canonicum nobis nuperrime sit suggestum, quod idcirco dictus Ioachim cedendi licentiam postulabat, quod ad notitiam eius pervenerat, quod quidam parentes ipsius, ut eligeretur in episcopum, quaedam dederant, licet pauca, fraternitati tuae praesentium auctoritate mandamus, quatenus, inquisita super eis diligentissime veritate, si tibi constiterit, quod propter aliquam ex praemissis causis seu consimilibus idem I. episcopatui cesserit memorato, tu auctoritate nostra, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo, dummodo necessitas vel utilitas id exposcat, licentiam ei tribuas ascendendi ad regimen ecclesiae Faventinensis, maxime si veritate subnititur, quod tam praefati praepositus et canonici Faventini, quam prior et capitulum sancti Fridiani nobis suis literis expresserunt, quod videlicet dictus I. loco tantummodo cesserit memorato, et non ordini, vel etiam dignitati. Tunc enim esset vehementissime praesumendum, quod non propter crimen aliquod ab ipso commissum, sed causa poenitentiae peragendae ad vitam migraverit regularem, praesertim quum apostolica sedes post cessionem multo minus quam antea permisisset eidem tali crimine irretito in pontificali ordine ministrare; alioquin, quum durum nimis exstiterit, contra tam solenne concilium huiusmodi postulationem admittere, praeposito et canonicis memoratis iniungas, ut aliam personam sibi idoneam eligant in pastorem. Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: One who sought permission to resign is compelled to resign once he has obtained it.

The same, in the General Council.

Certain persons, insistently seeking permission to resign, omit to resign once it has been obtained. But since in seeking resignation of this kind they seemed to have regarded either the advantages of the churches over which they preside or their own salvation, and we do not will that either of these be impeded by the persuasions of certain persons who seek the things that are their own, or even by any fickleness, we decree that they are to be compelled to resign.

Qui petiit cedendi licentiam, ex quo illam obtinuit, cedere compellitur.

Idem in concilio generali.

Quidam cedendi licentiam cum instantia postulantes, ea obtenta cedere praetermittunt. Sed quum in postulatione cessionis huiusmodi aut ecclesiarum commoda, quibus praesunt, aut salutem videantur propriam attendisse, quorum neutrum suasionibus aliquorum, quaerentium quae sua sunt, seu etiam levitate qualibet nolumus impediri, eos ad cedendum decernimus compellendos.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: One who submits himself to the grace of his adversary does not renounce his right.

Honorius III, to the Dean of the cathedral church and Master R., Cantor of Saint Denis of Liège.

Coming to the Apostolic See, I., a poor subdeacon, appeared and set forth in our presence that, when Pope I. of good memory, our predecessor, had by his letters given a mandate to our beloved son the Abbot of Emenco in the diocese of Trier and to the cantors of the cathedral church and of Saint Paul at Trier that, if nothing canonical stood in the way, they should, with the obstacle of appeal removed, assign to the same I. a prebend in the church of Saint Florentin at Koblenz, which James, dean of that church, had resigned into his hands through his letters, the same John showed the letters themselves to the aforesaid dean and the others, but the same dean, perhaps repenting of the resignation, concealed the abovementioned letters. At length, after the aforesaid letters had been restored to the same John, he presented them to the named judges so that they would execute the apostolic mandate.

And when those judges wished to fulfill the apostolic mandate, certain canons of the aforementioned church opposed them, saying that the aforesaid subdeacon had renounced his right that belonged to him from those letters. Therefore, when the said subdeacon denied this, the already-mentioned canons produced certain witnesses to prove it. Since through them it seemed to have been proved that he had committed himself to the grace of the chapter, two of the aforesaid judges—namely, the cantors of Trier—decreed by sentence that the same John could no longer use the abovementioned letters, because the same I. had thus committed himself to the grace of his adversary, through which he seemed to have renounced the right belonging to him from those letters.

The same I., appealing from that sentence, although he had also appealed previously, fixed the most recently past vigil of Epiphany as the term of his appeal. When the same I. had come on that date and narrated to us the sequence of the fact as expressed above, we granted him as auditor concerning this our beloved son Peter of Colle Medio, our chaplain. But when his adversary had not come, though awaited for two months and more, nor did any sufficient authorized respondent appear for him, at length someone having letters to contradict and impetrate appeared before the same auditor. When he was believed in law to be insufficient to conduct the cause, we gave a mandate to the aforesaid auditor, who reported all these matters to us, that he consult some of the brothers concerning this and proceed in the cause according to their counsel. The same auditor, having taken the counsel of our beloved son T., cardinal-priest of the title of Sabina, and also of others, as justice required annulled by sentence the sentence of the aforesaid judges.

We therefore hold as ratified and firm the sentence of the aforementioned chaplain, and command you by apostolic writings that, revoking as void whatever you find was attempted after the appeal interposed to us, notwithstanding the sentence of the judges of Trier, you, by apostolic authority and with the obstacle of appeal removed, confer the aforesaid prebend upon the same subdeacon, unless some other canonical objection has been made and proved why this ought not to be fulfilled.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: If a prelate absolves his subjects from obedience, he does not for this reason renounce the prelacy.

The same, to the Archbishop of Trier.

The letters of your fraternity read before us contained that the Abbot of Saint Peter of Toul, whom you commend for uprightness of conduct and life, humbly confessed to you that, when he was laboring under so grave an illness that his life was despaired of, on the counsel of a certain rival of his —in whom he trusted, since he did not believe him to be a rival—in the presence of certain of his monks, after revoking any sentence of excommunication that he had pronounced against any one of them, he absolved his monks from the obedience in which they were bound to him, and summoned the diocesan bishop so that he might resign the abbey into his hands. Nevertheless, having employed sounder counsel, he did not do this; and, although the same abbot was afterwards restored to health, all and each of the convent, when required by him in chapter, promised obedience and reverence.

Nevertheless, doubting about the fact that he had acted thus, he sought from you that you should counsel his salvation concerning this. On account of this, since, after counsel of those skilled in law had been taken concerning it, different persons thought differently, you sought our counsel as to whether the same abbot had resigned by this act. But we do not see that by such an act alone the same abbot resigned his governance.

Si praelatus ab obedientia subditos absolvit, non propter hoc praelaturae renunciat.

Idem Archiepiscopo Treverensi.

Lectae coram nobis fraternitatis tuae literae continebant, quod abbas sancti Petri Tullensis, quem de conversationis et vitae honestate commendas, tibi humiliter est confessus, quod, quum adeo gravi aegritudine laboraret, quod de vita desperaretur ipsius, ad cuiusdam aemuli sui consilium, de quo ipse, quum non crederet eum aemulum, confidebat, in quorundam monachorum suorum praesentia, excommunicationis sententia, si quam in eorum aliquem protulerat, revocata, monachos suos ab obedientia, in qua sibi tenebantur, absolvit, vocato dioecesano episcopo, ut abbatiam in eius manibus resignaret; quod tamen usus consilio saniori non fecit, et licet eidem abbati postmodum restituto sanitati, universi et singuli de conventu obedientiam et reverentiam requisiti ab eo in capitulo promiserunt. Idem tamen super eo, quod sic fecerat, dubitans, a te, ut super hoc saluti suae consuleres, postulavit, propter quod tu, quum habito super hoc iuris peritorum consilio diversi diversa sentirent, nostrum consilium, an idem abbas ex hoc resignaverit, requisisti. Nos autem ex tali facto duntaxat eundem abbatem suo resignasse regimini non videmus.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: An exempt abbot cannot resign without the Pope's permission.

Gregory IX, to the Bishops of Agde and Uzès.

Our beloved sons, the convent of the monastery of Saint G. of the Deserts, belonging immediately to the Roman Church, have made known to us by their letters that their abbot, feeling himself insufficient for the burden of governing the abbey, resigned into their hands. They also canonically elected as abbot our beloved son G., a monk of Saint Victor of Marseille, supplicating that, sparing their labors and expenses, we cause their election to be confirmed in those regions.

Therefore, since the said abbot could not resign without our permission, we, decreeing both the aforesaid election and resignation to be void and empty, command your discretion by apostolic writings that you cause the abbot himself to be restored to his place and, after he has been restored fully, receive his resignation in our stead.

Title X: On Supplying the Negligence of Prelates

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If the diocesan bishop, when requested, is unwilling to bless a Cistercian abbot, the abbot himself will be able to bless his monks.

Alexander III, to the Cistercians.

We establish, furthermore, that if a bishop, having been requested a third time with humility and devotion, as is fitting, should perhaps refuse to bless your substituted abbots, it shall be permitted to those abbots to bless their own monks and to exercise the other things that pertain to an office of this kind, until the bishops themselves reconsider their hardness and do not refuse to bless the abbots [who are to be blessed]. Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Regulars cannot convert to their own uses churches in which they possess the right of patronage; and if, when those churches are vacant, they do not present rectors to them within the time of the Lateran Council, the superior will ordain those churches.

Clement III.

As your fraternity has made known to us, certain monks and canons regular, having in your bishopric churches that pertain to their presentation, strive to assign them to their own uses, and, when they have become vacant, are unwilling to call persons [suitable] to them. Rather, on the occasion of a grant by certain bishops, they institute and remove vicars in them according to their own will, so burdening those admitted with pensions that they can neither competently serve the churches in their excessive poverty, nor answer to the bishop in episcopal dues, nor bestow hospitality upon travelers, as is fitting.

But, unwilling that the due and ancient condition of a church be overturned through anyone's indolence, we command that, unless the aforesaid churches are exempt from your jurisdiction, you take pains reasonably to correct the aforesaid excesses; and, unless the aforesaid persons present suitable persons to you for the vacant churches within the time established in the Lateran Council, from then on it shall be permitted to you, appeal being removed, to ordain in those churches rectors who know how both to preside over and to benefit them, yet in such a way that from this no prejudice is engendered for the patrons in the future. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Kalends of March, in the second year of our pontificate, 1199.]

Textual note: The source attributes the decretal to Clement III but dates it to 1199, during the pontificate of Innocent III. Both printed statements are preserved rather than silently reconciled.

Nolentes autem, ut status ecclesiae debitus et antiquus per insolertiam alicuius subvertatur, mandamus, quatenus, nisi a iurisdictione tua exemptae sint ecclesiae supradictae, praedictos excessus studeas rationabiliter emendare, et, nisi praedictae personae infra tempus in Lateranensi concilio constitutum ad vacantes ecclesias tibi personas idoneas praesentaverint, ex tunc tibi liceat appellatione remota in

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A superior supplies the negligence of an inferior in conferring benefices if the time of the Lateran Council has elapsed, and a collation afterwards made by the inferior is not valid.

Innocent III.

Although our beloved sons Master H., Archdeacon of H., and R., procurator of R. of Saint Cadimundus, litigated for a rather long time before us concerning the archdeaconry of Richmond, nevertheless it was afterwards made known to our ears that it belonged to neither of them by right, inasmuch as it had been granted to neither within the time defined in the Lateran Council.

Therefore, lest we seem to neglect our own right, we who sustain others in their justice, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, after summoning the same men so that they may set forth whatever they decide should be set forth in opposition, you inquire more diligently into the truth. And if it is established for you that the archdeaconry of Richmond had been vacant for a year, but that the period of six months during which the grant pertained either to the archbishop or to the chapter was computed not from the vacancy but from knowledge of it, since, because the Archbishop of York has no other superior, the grant had from that time devolved upon us, you shall, with the obstacle of appeal removed, impose silence upon both men concerning it, publicly declaring that the archdeaconry pertains to our grant, and decreeing void and empty whatever anyone should afterwards presume to ordain concerning it.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If the one to whom the collation of a benefice belongs confers after the time of the Lateran Council has elapsed, the collation is not valid, unless it is tolerated out of mercy.

The same, to Master P. of Châteauneuf and R., monk of Fontfroide, legate of the Apostolic See.

We have received the letters of your discretion [in which you implore an apostolic response concerning those matters that are doubtful for you, namely], that, when in certain churches subject to your legation certain benefices and dignities had been vacant for so long that both the prelates and the chapters were deprived of the right of instituting according to the tenor of the Lateran Council, after your arrival became known [to them], they presumed to institute less suitable persons in those benefices.

Hence, although you received counsel from men skilled in law that by apostolic authority you should annul such institutions, made by those to whom it did not belong and who by their own fault had deprived themselves of the right of instituting, you first decreed that you would have our counsel in this. You set forth, furthermore, etc. We therefore, responding briefly to your inquiry, command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if you know the benefices or dignities themselves to have been assigned to suitable persons, through tolerance you permit them to be possessed peacefully by those persons. Otherwise, removing the persons themselves entirely from them, you, supported by our authority, shall not delay in ordaining them as quickly as possible with suitable persons, [with no obstacle of contradiction or appeal], [the contradictors, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the eighth day before the Ides of December, in the seventh year, 1204.]

Unde, quum receperitis consilium a viris peritis, ut tales institutiones ab his, quorum non intererat, et qui propria culpa iure instituendi se privaverant, factas, auctoritate apostolica cassaretis, in hoc nostrum prius decrevistis consilium habere. Proposuistis praeterea etc. Nos igitur inquisitioni vestrae breviter respondentes Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si beneficia vel dignitates ipsas noveritis personis idoneis assignatas, eas de patientia permittatis ab ipsis pacifice possideri: alioquin personas ipsas amoventes prorsus ab ipsis, eas de personis idoneis auctoritate nostra suffulti, [nullius contradictionis vel appellationis obstaculo] non differatis quantocius ordinare, [contradictores etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VIII. Id. Dec. Ao. VII. 1204.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: The one to whom the collation of a benefice pertained in the first place will not be able to confer it after the time of the Lateran Council has elapsed.

The same, to the Bishop of Samo.

Our beloved son P., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Marcellinus, having been granted as auditor to S. and R., the procurators of P. and G. appearing at the Apostolic See, the same treasurer set forth before him that, when in the church of Salamanca, in which the election of the cantor belongs jointly to the bishop and chapter, the cantorship was vacant, the said chapter had rather often admonished the bishop that he should assemble together with it to celebrate the election of a cantor. When that bishop neglected to do this within the period of six months, the chapter, desiring to use its right, elected as cantor in the chapter of the aforementioned church, as is customary, the above-mentioned Paschasius, a canon of that place, appealing lest anything be done to the prejudice of the same election. The above-mentioned treasurer sought that this election be confirmed by apostolic authority and that the election that our venerable brother the Archbishop of Compostela had made after an appeal of this kind concerning G., a cleric entangled in many crimes and at that time bound by the bond of excommunication, be annulled as less than canonically celebrated.

But the said Dominic set forth on the other side that, after the period of six months had passed, within which the election of the cantor belonged to the bishop and chapter, the dean and certain canons of Salamanca, without consulting the bishop, the archdeacon, and certain canons who were present in the city, presumed to elect very foolishly and inordinately—not at the customary hour or in the chapter according to custom, but rather in the church, with certain laymen having been called. And when they were unwilling to approach the presence of the already-mentioned archbishop, who had summoned them on account of this, he, understanding that the authority of electing had devolved upon him according to the statute of the Lateran Council, elected the above-mentioned G. as cantor and caused him to be corporally invested with the cantorship.

Afterwards, however, the dean and his accomplices, making no mention to us of these matters and suggesting that the bishop—who, though admonished rather often, had been unwilling to elect within six months, to the detriment of the church—had, after the cantor who had been instituted by the same dean with the greater part of the chapter was despoiled, instituted another as cantor, obtained our letters to the dean, archdeacon, and archpriest of Ávila. When, by the authority of these letters, the above-mentioned G. had been summoned by those judges, he prohibited them from proceeding against him by the said letters, since no mention was made in them of his election made by the archbishop; and, both because of this and [also] because he had been cited peremptorily to distant places by the first citation, and also because the judges were related in the line of consanguinity to certain of the electors of the said Paschasius, he appealed to the Apostolic See. But the judges nevertheless, going to the church of Salamanca, contrary to justice inducted the often-mentioned P. into possession of the cantorship as a measure for preserving the matter.

Therefore, when the procurators themselves had litigated for some time before the same cardinal concerning these and other matters, and he had faithfully reported to us what had been set forth before him, because it was established for us that the dean of Salamanca and his followers, after the period of six months had elapsed—within which the bishop and chapter, insofar as it belonged jointly to them, had neglected to proceed to the election of the cantor—celebrated the election of the above-mentioned P. less than canonically, we decree that election void and empty. We also decree that the appeal interposed by the dean and his supporters could in no way impede the act of the archbishop, to whom the authority of electing had already devolved.

But because certain matters were objected against the person of G. himself, concerning which full proof could not be made for us, [we command your discretion by apostolic writings] that, unless some canonical impediment stands in the way of the already-mentioned G., you confirm the election made concerning him, with the obstacle of appeal removed, causing him to enjoy peaceful possession of the same cantorship; the contradictors, etc. [Given at the Lateran, on the fifth day before the Kalends of November, in the thirteenth year, 1210.]

> Dilecto filio nostro P. tituli sancti Marcellini presbytero cardinali S. et R. procuratoribus P. et G. apud sedem apostolicam constitutis auditore concesso, idem thesaurarius proposuit coram eo, quod, quum in Salamantina ecclesia, in qua cantoris electio ad episcopum et capitulum communiter pertinet, cantoria vacante, dictum capitulum saepius episcopum monuisset, ut ad celebrandam cantoris electionem cum eo pariter conveniret, eodem episcopo infra semestre tempus id facere negligente, capitulum uti cupiens iure suo, in ecclesiae memoratae capitulo, sicut est moris, supradictum Paschasium eiusdem loci canonicum in cantorem elegit, ne quid in eiusdem electionis praeiudicium fieret appellando, quam supradictus thesaurarius auctoritate apostolica petiit confirmari, ac electionem, quam venerabilis frater noster Compostellanus archiepiscopus post appellationem huiusmodi de G. clerico multis criminibus irretito ac tunc temporis vinculo excommunicationis adstricto fecerat, tamquam minus canonice celebratam cassari. Dictus vero Dominicus proposuit ex adverso, quod, emenso VI. mensium spatio, infra quod ad episcopum et capitulum cantoris electio pertinebat, decanus et quidam canonici Salamantini, episcopo, archidiacono et nonnullis canonicis qui praesentes in civitate aderant, inconsultis, non consueta hora, vel in capitulo iuxta morem, sed in ecclesia potius, quibusdam laicis advocatis stulte et inordinate nimis eligere praesumpserunt. Et quum iam dicti archiepiscopi, qui eos propter hoc evocaverat, adire praesentiam noluissent, ipse intelligens eligendi auctoritatem ad se iuxta Lateranensis concilii statutum devolutam, supradictum G. in cantorem elegit, et eundem fecit de cantoria corporaliter investiri. Postmodum autem decanus et sui complices nobis, de his mentione non habita, suggerendo, quod episcopus, qui monitus saepius infra sex menses eligere noluerat in ecclesiae detrimentum, cantore, qui ab eodem decano cum maiore parte capituli institutus fuerat, spoliato, alium instituerat in cantorem, ad decanum, archidiaconum et archipresbyterum Abulenses nostras literas impetrarunt. Quarum auctoritate, quum supradictus G. ab eisdem fuisset iudicibus evocatus, eisdem inhibuit, ne per dictas literas procederent contra eum, quum in eis de sua electione facta per archiepiscopum nulla mentio haberetur, et cum propter hoc, tum [etiam], quia prima citatione ad loca remota peremptorie citatus exstiterat, tum etiam, quia iudices quosdam ex electoribus dicti Paschasii consanguinitatis linea contingebant, ad sedem apostolicam appellavit. Sed iudices nihilominus ad Salamantinam ecclesiam accedentes, saepedictum P. in cantoriae possessionem causa rei servandae contra iustitiam induxerunt. Quum igitur super his et aliis coram eodem cardinali procuratores ipsi aliquamdiu litigassent, et ipse nobis fideliter retulisset, quae proposita fuerant coram eo, Quia nobis constitit a Salamantino decano et eius sequacibus, post elapsum sex mensium spatium, infra quod episcopus et capitulum, prout communiter spectabat ad eos, procedere ad electionem cantoris neglexerant, electionem supradicti P. minus canonice celebratam, eandem decernimus irritam et inanem, et appellationem a decano et suis fautoribus interpositam factum archiepiscopi, ad quem iam erat eligendi auctoritas devoluta, nequivisse aliquatenus impedire. Quia vero contra personam ipsius G. quaedam obiecta fuerunt de quibus nobis non potuit fieri plena fides, [discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta] Mandamus, quatenus, nisi iam dicto G. aliquod canonicum obviet, electionem de ipso factam sublato appellationis obstaculo confirmetis, facientes ipsum eiusdem cantoriae pacifica possessione gaudere; contradictores etc. [Dat. Title XI: On the Times of Ordinations and the Quality of Those to Be Ordained

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Sacred orders ought not to be conferred on Sundays or on the Saturday of Pentecost by anyone other than the Pope.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Bath.

Moreover, let it be permitted to no one except the Roman Pontiff to ordain subdeacons on Sundays, although they have permission on these days to celebrate the consecration of virgins dedicated to God and the conferral of minor orders. Indeed, on the Saturday of Pentecost it shall not be permitted to anyone to celebrate sacred orders, since they are celebrated in the following week after the grace of the Holy Spirit has been received.

> DE TEMPORIBUS ORDINATIONUM ET QUALITATE ORDINANDORUM.

>
> Subdiaconos autem nulli, nisi Romano Pontifici, liceat in diebus dominicis ordinare, quamvis consecrandi Deo dicatas virgines, et minores ordines his diebus habeant licentiam celebrandi. Sabbato quidem Pentecostes non liceat alicui sacros ordines celebrare, quum in sequenti septimana recepta Spiritus sancti gratia celebrentur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A custom that sacred orders are conferred outside the established times is not valid.

The same, to the Bishop of Hereford.

Indeed, concerning the fact that you said it is customary in certain churches of Scotland and Wales, at the dedications of churches or altars, to promote clerics to sacred orders outside the fasts of the Four Times, we signify to your prudence that that custom, as hostile to ecclesiastical institution, is both detestable and utterly to be disapproved. And, unless the multitude and the ancient custom of the land were [the cause], those ordained in such a manner ought not to be permitted to minister in the orders they received. For among us those so ordained would be deposed, and those ordaining would be deprived of the authority to ordain. [But concerning that, etc.; cf. the following chapter.]

> Non valet consuetudo, quod extra statuta tempora sacri ordines conferantur.
>
> Idem Episcopo Herfordensi.
>
> Sane super eo, quod moris esse dixisti in ecclesiis quibusdam Scotiae et Valliae in dedicationibus ecclesiarum vel altarium extra ieiunia quatuor temporum clericos ad sacros ordines promovere, prudentiae tuae significamus, quod consuetudo illa, utpote institutioni ecclesiasticae inimica, et detestabilis est et penitus improbanda, et, nisi multitudo et antiqua consuetudo terrae esset [in causa] taliter ordinati non deberent permitti in susceptis ordinibus ministrare. Nam apud nos sic ordinati deponerentur, et ordinantes privarentur auctoritate ordinandi. [De eo autem etc. cf. cap. seq.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Minor orders can be conferred on feast days, but sacred orders ought to be conferred in the Four Times, or on Holy Saturday, or on the Saturday before Passion Sunday.

The same, to the same.

But concerning what you asked—whether it is permitted outside the fasts of the Four Times to promote some persons as doorkeepers, readers, exorcists, or acolytes, or even to promote subdeacons—we respond thus to your prudence: it is lawful for bishops to promote one or two persons to minor orders on Sundays and other feast days; but no bishop other than the Roman Pontiff is permitted to ordain anyone to the subdiaconate except in the Four Times, on Holy Saturday, or on the Saturday before Passion Sunday.

> Minores ordines conferri possunt diebus festis, sacri vero conferri debent in quatuor temporibus, vel sabbato sancto, vel sabbato de passione.

> De eo autem, quod quaesivisti, an liceat extra ieiunia quatuor temporum aliquos in ostiarios, lectores, exorcistas, vel acolythos promovere, aut etiam subdiaconos promovere, prudentiae tuae taliter respondemus, quod licitum est episcopis, dominicis et aliis festivis diebus unum aut duos ad minores ordines promovere; sed ad subdiaconatum, nisi in quatuor temporibus, aut in sabbato sancto, vel in sabbato ante dominicam de passione, nulli episcoporum, praeterquam Romano Pontifici, licet aliquos ordinare.

Latin source headnote: A secret criminal can be admonished not to be promoted to orders, but ought not to be prohibited.

The same.

From the tenor of your letters we have learned that N., a cleric, transgressed to such a degree that, if his sin were public, he would be degraded from the order that he received and could no longer be promoted to higher orders. But because you said that his sin was secret and private, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you impose upon him a worthy penance and counsel him that, after part of the penance has been performed, he use the order received and, remaining content with it, ascend no further to higher orders. Nevertheless, because the sin is secret, if he wishes to be promoted, you cannot and ought not for any reason to prohibit him. [Given at Benevento, on the fourth day before the Kalends of May.]

Latin source headnote: A religious ought not to be ordained contrary to the prohibition of his prelate.

Lucius III, to the Archbishop of Tours.

Through your report it has reached our ears that certain religious, having zeal for God, desire to be promoted to higher orders, thinking that a greater reward is to be accumulated the higher the office that they, placed in a greater grade, have executed; but their prelates contradict their desires. Therefore, your fraternity decided to inquire whether those constituted in lower orders ought, according to the good pleasure of their prelates, to whom the promotion is displeasing, to abstain from higher orders, or whether they may be promoted despite the resistance of their prelates.

We therefore respond thus to your question: it is more honorable and safer for subjects, by rendering the obedience owed to their superiors, to serve in a lower ministry than, with scandal to their superiors, to seek the dignity of grades. Nor is the desire of the subjects to be fostered in this matter, since it may be that their prelates know secret matters committed by them, from which it is established for the prelates that those subjects cannot be elevated with their conscience safe, because the kingdom of God is acquired not in the loftiness of grades, but in the breadth of charity.

Ideoque tua duxit fraternitas requirendum, an in inferioribus ordinibus constituti iuxta beneplacitum suorum praelatorum, quibus promotio displicet, a superioribus debeant abstinere, an valeant praelatis suis renitentibus promoveri. Tuae igitur quaestioni taliter respondemus, quod honestius et tutius est subiectis debitam praepositis obedientiam impendendo in inferiori ministerio deservire, quam cum praepositorum scandalo graduum appetere dignitatem. Nec est in hac parte subiectorum desiderium confovendum, quoniam esse potest, quod praelati eorum commissa secreta noverint, ex quibus constat eis, quod salva conscientia nequeunt sublimari, quia non in sublimitate graduum, sed in amplitudine caritatis acquiritur regnum Dei.

The same.

If an archbishop has met [his day of] death and another archbishop is to be ordained [having been elected], all the bishops of the same province shall assemble at the metropolitan see, so that he may be elected and ordained by them all. For it is fitting that the one who ought to preside over all of them be elected and ordained by all of them. The other bishops of the province, however, if it should be necessary, can, with the rest consenting, be ordained by three at the command of the archbishop; but it is better if he himself with them all elects the one who is worthy and all together consecrate the pontiff.

Latin source headnote: One ordained outside the proper times is suspended until a dispensation is granted to him, and the one ordaining is punished.

Urban III, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

Since certain Sardinian bishops, as has been set forth to us on your part, have not paid certain persons money that they were bound by oath to pay, and a certain bishop of that land celebrated orders on the day of the dedication of a church, although that day was not established for this purpose, and certain persons have also sometimes sworn that they ought not to speak to a brother or sister, father or mother, or furnish any assistance to them, your fraternity asked us what should be done concerning matters of this kind.

We, therefore, unwilling to deny what, with charity suggesting it, you appear to seek from us, respond to your discretion by the present letters that vengeance is to be taken against those bishops who transgressed their oath, more gravely to the extent that they are eminent in greater dignity and that by their example others could more easily be incited to similar acts. You ought, moreover, to correct by canonical discipline the bishop who celebrated orders on a day on which he ought not to have done so, and to render those ordained unable to exercise the orders received for so long as they do not obtain from us or our successors the grace of restoration. But those who swear not to speak to father, mother, sister, or brother, or to show them the assistance of humanity, are to be absolved from observance of that oath, since it is unlawful and contrary to all reason, although a suitable penance is to be enjoined upon them for having sworn wrongly.

Nos itaque denegare nolentes quod a nobis caritate suggerente postulare videris, discretioni tuae praesentibus literis respondemus, quod in episcopos illos, qui suum transgressi sunt iuramentum, est tanto gravius vindicandum, quanto maiori praeeminent dignitate, et eorum exemplo facilius alii poterunt ad similia provocari. Illi vero qui iurant non loqui patri, vel matri, vel sorori, vel fratri, aut eis humanitatis subsidium exhibere, absolvendi sunt ab illius observantia iuramenti, quum illicitum sit, et omni contrarium rationi, iniuncta tamen eis de hoc, quod male iuraverunt, poenitentia competenti.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Greeks ought not to be ordained by Latins, nor conversely, if they differ in the rite of ordaining.

Celestine III, to the Archbishop of Otranto.

Since, according to ecclesiastical rules and the institutions of the holy Pontiffs, sacred orders are to be conferred at certain times, certain Greek bishops, applying observance of their rite and custom to Latin clerics, indiscriminately promote them to sacred orders, which ought not to be conferred except in the Four Times. Indeed, as we learned from the report of John, the bearer of the present letters, when he had been presented to a certain Greek bishop by a certain lord whom he had served, so that he might celebrate divine offices in that lord's chapel, the same Bishop Cathamarsenis promoted him to the priesthood. His diocesan bishop afterwards believed that he should be suspended from the execution of the office or of the order received in such a manner.

That custom is indeed hostile to ecclesiastical custom, detestable, and utterly to be disapproved; and, unless the multitude and ancient custom were the cause, those so ordained ought not to be permitted to minister in the orders they received. For among us those so ordained would be deposed, and by the censure of the canons those ordaining would be deprived of the authority to ordain.

But because, as is said, in the regions of Calabria Latins are ordained by Greeks and Greeks by Latins according to the observance of the institution of each, and because your fraternity will be better able to discern whether this has been observed from antiquity, we have decided to commit the judgment of the same John to you. We command by apostolic writings, and by the authority of the present letters grant you power, that, after the truth and the observance of the custom have been more diligently learned—if any custom concerning these matters has been received by Latin clerics and approved until now—or if it should appear to you that you should discern otherwise concerning John himself, you do not delay in establishing, with the evasion of appeal ceasing, what you can establish with the salvation of his soul. You shall consider very carefully whether he is to be reordained or ought, without danger to his soul, to celebrate in the order thus received, with the addition, if you know anything that is to be added to complete the order. But we do not will that mixtures and customs of rites in orders be observed hereafter, nor that this case be taken as an example by others if you decide that a merciful dispensation should be granted to this man.

Sane sicut latoris praesentium Io. relatione cognovimus, quod, quum ipse a quodam domino, cui servierat, et ut in capella sua divina officia celebraret, cuidam Graeco episcopo foret praesentatus, idem episcopus Cathamarsenis eum in sacerdotem promovit, quem postmodum dioecesanus episcopus ab exsecutione officii vel taliter suscepti ordinis credidit suspendendum, quae utique consuetudo consuetudini ecclesiasticae inimica et detestabilis est et penitus improbanda, et, nisi multitudo et antiqua consuetudo esset in causa, sic ordinati non deberent permitti in susceptis ordinibus ministrare. Nam apud nos sic ordinati deponerentur, et ordinantes auctoritate ordinandi de censura canonum privarentur. Quia vero, sicut dicitur, in partibus Calabriae ut Latini a Graecis, et Graeci a Latinis secundum alterutrius institutionis observantiam ordinantur, et an sit antiquitus observatum, fraternitati tuae, quae, discernere melius ista poterit, eiusdem Iohannis iudicium duximus committendum, per apostolica scripta mandantes et potestatem tibi praesentium auctoritate indulgentes, ut, cognita diligentius veritate et observantia consuetudinis, si qua super his a Latinis clericis recepta est, et hactenus approbata, vel si tibi apparuerit aliter discernere de ipso Iohanne, quod cum salute animae suae poteris, cessante appellationis diffugio, statuere non moreris, studiosius attendens, utrum reordinandus sit, an sine periculo animae suae in sic recepto ordine debeat celebrare, addito, si quid noveris in supplemento ordinis adiungendum. Latin source headnote: If a monk of one order receives the priesthood in a second order to which he passed, upon returning to the first order he will minister freely in it.

Innocent III, to the Abbot and Convent of Carilocum.

On your part it was disclosed to our apostolate that a certain monk of yours, transferring himself to the Black Monks and assuming their black habit there, was promoted to the order of priesthood in that habit. Hence, because on this point you doubted whether he ought to minister in the order thus assumed, we, resolving the scruple of doubt of this kind, command you by apostolic writings that, unless another canonical impediment stands in his way, you permit that monk freely to execute the office of priest. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, 1198.]

Latin source headnote: If a Greek subject to a Latin bishop is ordained by a Greek without the Latin's permission, execution of the order is forbidden to him; but if it was with permission, he is then tolerated.

The same, to C., Cardinal-Priest and legate of the Apostolic See.

As to the translation of a pontiff—(And below: [cf. c. 4, On the Office of a Legate, I.30.]) But concerning the matter on which you wished to consult us, namely that many Greek clerics dwelling in the dioceses of Latins receive from Greek bishops—not in the Four Times—sometimes all the orders together and sometimes a part of them, and are afterwards prohibited by Latin bishops from celebrating, we respond thus to your consultation: when a Greek cleric subject to a Latin bishop is ordained by a Greek pontiff, unless it is done by the mandate or permission of his bishop, execution of the order thus received is to be forbidden to him, as one ordained by another's pontiff without the mandate or permission of his own bishop.

But if, by the mandate or permission of his own prelate, he was ordained by a Greek pontiff according to the custom of the Greeks, although the Latin bishop who causes his clerics to be ordained by a Greek prelate is to be blamed, nevertheless, for as long as such a custom is tolerated by the Church, the cleric ought not to be impeded from executing the orders thus received. Nevertheless, on this point we have resolved at an opportune time to ordain, with the counsel of our brothers, what shall seem honorable.

Si Graecus episcopus Latino subiectus ordinatur sine Latini licentia a Graeco, interdicitur sibi exsecutio: si vero de licentia, tunc toleratur.

Si vero de mandato vel licentia sui praesulis a Graeco pontifice secundum morem Graecorum fuerit ordinatus, licet culpandus sit episcopus Latinus, qui clericos suos a Graeco facit antistite ordinari, quamdiu tamen talis mos ab ecclesia toleratur, impediri non debet ab exsecutione ordinum taliter susceptorum. Nos tamen super hoc articulo disposuimus tempore oportuno de consilio fratrum nostrorum quod honestum visum fuerit ordinare.

Latin source headnote: One ordained by the Pope is not promoted to higher orders without the Pope's permission.

The same, to the Bishop of Modena.

Since in distributing [orders the canonical constitutions distinguish certain times, which approved custom has taught are to be observed especially concerning sacred orders, we are compelled both to wonder and to be disturbed because, as we have learned from many and as is circulated in common report, the infamous Bishop of Bologna presumed to ordain Albert, bishop-elect of Imola, as deacon and priest at the same time. But because we are unwilling to leave uncorrected things that are attempted contrary to the canonical constitutions—especially where canonical laws are taught with greater renown—lest they pass as an example to presumptuous persons, since these things not only do not lack the mark of presumption and foolishness but also that of ambition and depravity, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, under precept, that you inquire most diligently into the truth concerning these matters, nevertheless hearing the excuses of the one ordaining and of the one ordained, if perhaps they decide to allege any, so that, instructed by your report, we may proceed more fully and securely in the business itself.] For we remember that this was humbly sought from us and mercifully granted: that, because the aforesaid A. was a subdeacon of the Roman Church, we would command him to be promoted by the Bishop of Bologna. Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Two sacred orders cannot be conferred upon the same person on one day, or on two days with the fast continued.

The same, to the same and to Master H., our subdeacon.

We have received your letters in reply concerning the disorderly ordination of [A.], bishop-elect of Imola, whom [G.], Bishop of Bologna, ordained as deacon on the preceding Saturday and as priest on the following Sunday with the fast continued. How greatly each of them transgressed in this matter is clearly understood by one who considers it prudently. For if it was not permitted to confer both orders upon him on the same day, by equal reason it was not permitted that one order be conferred on one day and the other on the next with the fast continued. For, because of the continuation of the fast, by canonical fiction, whether the morning of Sunday is drawn back to Saturday or the evening of Saturday is referred to Sunday, certainly morning with evening, or evening with morning, will be said to pertain to the same day. For if, insofar as this point of necessity is concerned, morning is referred to one day and evening to another, why would continuation of the fast be necessary, since they are understood to be fasting both on Saturday before supper and on Sunday before the midday meal?

But lest, if we passed over a deed of this kind in silence, others, deeming it lawful, should attempt to do similar things, and thus the perversity of the deed be drawn into an example by posterity, we therefore will that the aforesaid Bishop of Bologna, so that he may be punished in that in which he transgressed, remain suspended from the conferral of orders—namely, of the diaconate and priesthood—and the other from execution of the priestly office, until we dispose otherwise concerning them. Therefore, so that the apostolic mandate may obtain its due effect, we command you by apostolic writings that you cause the things set forth above to be published both by the bishops themselves and throughout the dioceses of Bologna and Imola.

Si enim utrumque ordinem eodem die conferre illi non licuit, pari non licuit ratione unum ordinem uno die, et alium altero ieiunio continuato conferri, quum propter continuationem ieiunii fictione canonica, sive mane diei dominicae trahatur ad sabbatum, sive vespera sabbati ad diem dominicam referatur, profecto mane cum vespera seu vespera cum mane ad eundem diem pertinere dicetur. Nam si, quantum ad hunc necessitatis articulum pertinet, mane ad unum diem, et vespera referatur ad alium, cur esset continuatio ieiunii necessaria, quum et sabbato ante coenam, et dominica ante prandium intelligantur esse ieiuni? Ne autem si factum huiusmodi sub silentio transiremus, id alii licitum reputantes similia facere attentarent, et sic facti perversitas a posteris traheretur in exemplum, Praefatum itaque Bononiensem episcopum, ut puniatur in quo deliquit, a collatione ordinum, diaconii scilicet et presbyterii, alterum vero ab exsecutione officii sacerdotalis tamdiu volumus manere suspensos, donec de illis aliter disponamus. Latin source headnote: One who ordains a boy of thirteen years as deacon is suspended from conferring orders, and the one ordained from executing that order until the lawful age.

Honorius III, to the Bishop and Archdeacon of León.

Either the Bishop of Coventry is not master of himself, or he seems to have rejected knowledge too greatly from himself, or he is proved to have sinned from malice. For, to keep silent about the other enormities said of him, he is said, contrary to the institutions of the sacred canons, to have disorderly ordained as deacon M., the boy bearing the present letters, who is still thirteen years of age, in mockery of the clerical order. Indeed, if this were fully established for us, however much we are more inclined toward pardon than even toward due vengeance, we would so chastise this in him that the notorious fault would be rendered manifest by the punishment, and his revealed disgrace would make others more cautious in similar matters.

Unwilling, however, to leave this unexamined, we command your discretion that, after the truth concerning these matters has been investigated and learned, if you find the matter to be so, you suspend the aforesaid bishop from the conferral of orders, with the obstacle of appeal removed, and compel him by ecclesiastical censure, appeal being set aside, to provide a suitable ecclesiastical benefice for the same M., whom, to the disgrace of the one ordaining, we suspend from execution of the office of deacon until the lawful age.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A bishop who confers several sacred orders upon the same person on one day, even if he did this by mandate of the metropolitan, is suspended from the power of ordaining.

The same, to the Abbots of Leton and Cala.

Our beloved son G., a canon of Humilis, some time ago disclosed to our apostolate that, when the church of Humilis had been widowed of its pastor, its canons, treating of the election of a pastor to be substituted, elected him unanimously. Since he was constituted below the sacred orders, our venerable brother the Archbishop of Cashel, their metropolitan, commanded the Bishop of Trecensis to promote him to three sacred orders on one and the same day, which that bishop fulfilled not by his own daring but by the mandate of the archbishop himself.

[At length, when requested, the same archbishop refused to bestow upon him the gift of consecration, putting forward the occasion of an ordination of this kind. Hence, it was humbly supplicated of us that, from the kindness of the Apostolic See, we deign to dispense concerning this with the aforesaid W., especially since it was said that he had hastened to receive the orders in this way not from the haste of his own will, but under so great a necessity and from the useful providence of almost all those present there he had permitted himself to be ordained in this manner, because manifold danger threatened the church of Emly if, while the same W. remained below the office of priesthood, his ordination were delayed.

Although the ecclesiastical norm had been transgressed enormously in the deed itself, nevertheless, from mercy, which exalts itself above judgment, we remember that we gave a mandate to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Armagh, the Bishop of Meath, and our beloved son the Archdeacon of Armagh that, after the truth concerning the foregoing had been more diligently investigated, if they found the matter to stand in such a way and the same W. otherwise suitable and useful to the church of Emly, by way of dispensation they should grant him permission to be consecrated. They were also to make known to us by their letters whatever they found had been attempted in this matter by the same archbishop, so that, rendered more certain by their report, we might take care to provide concerning it as would be expedient.

They, having summoned those whom they knew should be summoned and having investigated the truth more fully, transmitted into our presence the depositions of the witnesses produced on both sides. Having inspected them, we clearly understood that, after the election concerning the aforesaid W. had been celebrated, when on the following day the same W. had been promoted to the order of subdiaconate by the aforementioned Bishop of Roffensis, the same bishop separately summoned the archdeacon and canons of Emly. Saying that, because of the disturbance of the land and the many ill-disposed men who were preparing snares for the same W., he was unwilling to leave him below the order of priesthood, he confirmed by oath that the aforesaid archbishop had commanded this both from fear of the death of W. himself and because of the threatening danger of the church of Emly, and that the official of the same archbishop on his part prohibited the aforementioned bishop from then promoting the already-mentioned W., already ordained as subdeacon, to further orders.

When the same bishop answered him that in this matter he believed the archbishop, who had commanded him this with his own mouth, more than he believed that official, with his hand extended over the altar he swore upon the holy things that the often-mentioned archbishop had commanded it, and thus promoted the often-mentioned W. as deacon and priest.

Moreover, we found it sufficiently proved that the said archbishop enjoined upon John, Dean of Hely, that he prohibit the aforesaid bishop from promoting the said W., on the day on which he was promoted to three orders, to any order except the subdiaconate, nevertheless also prohibiting the same W. from permitting himself to be promoted further. But when the same dean had come to the church of Emly, on the part of God and of the Archbishop of Cashel he prohibited both the often-mentioned bishop—who had already ordained the subdeacons, after those who were to be promoted as deacons had been summoned and silence enjoined upon all—from promoting the already-mentioned W. to further orders, and the aforesaid W. from permitting himself to be promoted further.

It was also established for us from the letters of the aforesaid judges that the often-mentioned bishop, when questioned judicially, answered that the archbishop had not commanded him to promote W. to three orders on the same day, but from the archbishop's words he believed him to will this. The said bishop also made this same matter known to us through his letters. Furthermore, we understood from the letters of those judges that the same bishop spontaneously swore judicially that all the things contained in the attestations of the same W. were true.

We also learned from the letters both of the aforesaid archbishop and of the chapter of the church of Emly that, when a question had arisen between the said W. and the canons before the aforesaid archbishop, at a council celebrated at Kolmoellocum, both concerning the election and ordination of the often-mentioned W. and concerning certain of his excesses, and at length an appeal had been made by both parties to our hearing, the same W., not awaiting the term that he had decided to fix for his appeal, obtained the aforesaid letters from us with the truth suppressed.]

Therefore, since [from the foregoing] it has been established for us that the abovementioned bishop transgressed in several matters—both because, without the archbishop's mandate, as he himself confessed, he proceeded disorderly to an ordination of this kind; and because, even if the archbishop's mandate were established, since a dispensation of this kind is by no means permitted to the archbishop by the canon, and there is no doubt that it pertains to the Roman Pontiff alone, the bishop ought not to have obeyed him in this matter; and also because he varied the guilt of perjury several times, first swearing that the archbishop had commanded it and afterwards confessing judicially that he had not mandated it—we, with the counsel of our brothers, suspend him from the power of ordaining until he shall merit to obtain our grace. [The often-mentioned man also, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of January, in the thirteenth year of our pontificate, 1211.]

Textual note: The source shifts the elect's initial from G. to W., calls the ordaining bishop first Trecensis and later Roffensis, and prints the grammatically difficult phrase tam te magna necessitate. The translation preserves the changes of initial and episcopal designation; it renders the last phrase contextually as "under so great a necessity." The forms occur in both the Latin Library transcription and the Friedberg-derived reference text.

Humiliensis canonicus nostro dudum apostolatui reseravit, quod Humiliensi ecclesia suo viduata pastore, canonici sui, de substituendi pastoris electione tractantes, ipsum unanimiter elegerunt. Qui quum esset citra sacros ordines constitutus, venerabilis frater noster archiepiscopus Cassalensis metropolitanus eorum episcopo Trecensi mandavit, ut eum uno et eodem die ad tres sacros ordines promoveret, quod ille non ausu proprio, sed ipsius archiepiscopi mandato perfecit; [demum idem archiepiscopus requisitus consecrationis ei munus huiusmodi ordinationis occasione praetensa, impendere recusavit. Unde fuit nobis humiliter supplicatum, ut super hoc circa praefatum W. dignaremur de benignitate sedis apostolicae dispensare, maxime quum ad ordines ita suscipiendos non ex voluntatis propriae diceretur festinantia properasse, sed tam te magna necessitate quam de utili providentia paene omnium ibi praesentium se permiserit taliter ordinari, pro eo, quod ecclesiae Ymilicensi multiplex periculum imminebat, si eiusdem W. citra presbyteratus officium ordinatio differretur. Licet autem contra normam ecclesiasticam in facto ipso enormiter fuisset excessum, de misericordia tamen, quae superaltat iudicio, venerabili fratri nostro Armachano archiepiscopo, et episcopo Midensi, et dilecto filio archidiacono Armachano dedisse recolimus in mandatis, ut inquisita super praemissis diligentius veritate, si rem invenirent taliter se habere, ac eundem W. alias idoneum et utilem ecclesiae Ymilicensi, dispensative ipsi tribuerent licentiam consecrandi, et quicquid in hoc per eundem invenirent archiepiscopum attentatum, per suas nobis literas intimarent, ut per eorum relationem certiores effecti providere in eo, sicut esset expediens, curaremus. Ipsi vero vocatis quos noverant evocandos, et investigata plenius veritate, depositiones testium productorum utrimque ad nostram praesentiam transmiserunt. Quibus inspectis intelleximus evidenter, quod celebrata de praedicto W. electione, quum die sequenti fuisset idem W. a supradicto Roffensi episcopo ad ordinem subdiaconatus promotus, idem episcopus archidiacono et canonicis Ymilicensibus seorsim vocatis, dicens, quod propter turbationem terrae ac multos malevolos, qui eidem W. insidias praeparabant, nolebat ipsum citra ordinem presbyteratus relinquere, iuramento firmavit, id supradictum archiepiscopum tam metu mortis ipsius W., quam propter imminens periculum Ymilicensis ecclesiae praecepisse, et quod officialis eiusdem archiepiscopi ex parte ipsius episcopo memorato inhibuit, ne iam dictum W., iam in subdiaconum ordinatum, tunc ad ulteriores ordines promoveret. Cui eodem episcopo respondente, quod plus archiepiscopo, qui hoc ei ore suo mandaverat, quam illi crederet in hac parte, extensa super altare manu per sacrosancta iuravit, quod id mandaverat archiepiscopus saepedictus, et sic in diaconum et presbyterum W. saepedictum promovit. Probatum insuper sufficienter invenimus, quod dictus archiepiscopus Ioanni decano de Hely iniunxit, ut praefato episcopo inhiberet, ne dictum W. eo die, quo ad tres ordines promotus exstitit, nisi ad subdiaconatus ordinem promoveret, eidem W. nihilominus inhibendo, ne se promoveri ulterius pateretur. Verum quum idem decanus ad Ymilicensem ecclesiam accessisset, tam saepedicto episcopo, qui iam subdiaconos ordinarat, vocatis his, qui erant in diaconos promovendi, et silentio cunctis indicto, ex parte Dei ac archiepiscopi Cassellensis inhibuit, ne iam dictum W. ad ulteriores ordines promoveret, quam praefato W., ne se promoveri ulterius sustineret. Constitit quoque nobis ex literis iudicum praedictorum, quod saepefatus episcopus interrogatus in iure respondit, quod archiepiscopus non mandarat eidem, ut W. eodem die ad tres ordines promoveret, sed ex verbis archiepiscopo eum credidit illud velle. Hoc idem etiam dictus episcopus per suas nobis literas intimavit. Praeterea ex ipsorum iudicum literis intelleximus, quod idem episcopus ultro iuravit in iure, quod universa, quae continebantur in eiusdem W. attestationibus, vera erant. Ex literis quoque tam supradicti archiepiscopi, quam capituli ecclesiae Ymilicensis, quod, quum tam super electione ac ordinatione saepedicti W., quam etiam super quibusdam eius excessibus in concilio apud Kolmoelloco celebrato coram praefato archiepiscopo inter dictum W. et canonicos quaestio suborta fuisset, et demum ab utraque parte ad nostram audientiam appellatum, idem W., non exspectato termino, quem appellationi suae duxerat praefigendum, supradictas a nobis literas veritate tacita impetravit.] Quum ergo [ex praemissis] nobis constiterit, supradictum episcopum in pluribus deliquisse, tum, quia sine mandato archiepiscopi, ut ipse confessus exstitit, ad huiusmodi ordinationem inordinate processit, tum, quia, et si de mandato archiepiscopi constaret, quum illi huiusmodi dispensatio a canone minime sit permissa, quam ad solum Romanum Pontificem non est dubium pertinere, ipsi obtemperare non debuit in hac parte; tum etiam, quia reatum periurii saepius variavit, iurando prius, quod archiepiscopus id praeceperat, et postea, quod illud non mandaverat in iudicio confitendo, ipsum de fratrum nostrorum consilio tamdiu ab ordinandi suspendimus potestate, donec nostram meruerit gratiam obtinere. Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: One ordained to sacred orders outside the established times receives the order, and after penance the bishop dispenses with him.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of Bar.

We respond thus to your consultation: there is no doubt that those who received sacred orders outside the established times received the character. For a transgression of this kind, after first imposing a suitable penance upon them, you will be able to allow them to minister in the orders received, [being more diligently provident, etc. Given at Rieti, on the second day before the Ides of November, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1231.]

Ordinatus ad sacros extra tempora statuta, ordinem recipit, et post poenitentiam cum eo dispensat episcopus.

Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo Baranensi.

> Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod eos, qui extra tempora statuta sacros ordines receperunt, characterem non est dubium recepisse, quos pro transgressione huiusmodi, primo eis poenitentia imposita competenti, sustinere poteris in susceptis ordinibus ministrare, [attentius provisurus etc. Dat. Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A secret criminal, except a homicide, after penance ministers in the orders received and ascends to higher orders; before penance he is admonished not to minister even in those received.

The same.

It has been asked concerning priests or other clerics who through the guilt of adultery, perjury, homicide, or false testimony have lost the good of an upright conscience. (And below:) We respond that, if the crimes set forth have not been proved in judicial order or are not otherwise notorious, these persons, except those guilty of homicide, ought not after penance to be impeded in orders already received or to be received. If they have not repented, they are to be admonished and adjured under threat of divine judgment not to minister even in the orders received as a testimony of their own damnation.

Title XII: On the Scrutiny to Be Made in Ordination

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: A bishop questioned in the scrutiny of a bishop to be ordained can answer that he is worthy if he does not know him to be unworthy.

Innocent III.

It was set forth on your part—(And below:) You asked, furthermore, to be taught by the Apostolic See how, with conscience safe, you can respond in questions of this kind when bishops are summoned by an archbishop, or even by another, to the consecrations of bishops, and they present the bishop-elect to the metropolitan himself to be consecrated, saying: "Reverend father, holy mother Church seeks that this elect be consecrated as bishop"; and, when the archbishop asks whether they know him to be worthy, they answer that they know and likewise believe him to be worthy; and you judge that in a response of this kind, lest you offend man, you have offended God, by responding sometimes beyond and sometimes against your conscience, since the conduct of the elect is either less well known or entirely unknown to you.

To this we respond thus to your fraternity: when we promote someone as deacon or priest, the first of the deacons who assists us says: "Holy mother catholic Church seeks that this deacon or subdeacon be assumed to the burden of the priesthood or diaconate"; and, when we ask whether he knows him to be worthy, he answers that, insofar as human frailty permits one to know, he both knows and testifies that he is worthy of the burden of an office of this kind. Hence, in such a response we do not believe that anyone sins, provided that he does not speak against his conscience, because he does not assert simply that the man is worthy, but insofar as human frailty permits one to know, since he ought to deem worthy the one whom he does not know to be unworthy.

Therefore, you will be able to use a response of this kind safely, unless perhaps the unworthiness of the one to be consecrated has been established for you. But if you know him to be unworthy, before the matter comes to a scrutiny of this kind, you should take care secretly to announce or make it known to the metropolitan—although, as we have said, we make a question of this kind not in the consecration of a pontiff but in the ordination of a deacon or priest. [You sought, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of March, in the ninth year, 1206.]

DE SCRUTINIO IN ORDINE FACIENDO.

Episcopus interrogatus in scrutinio episcopi ordinandi, potest respondere illum dignum, si non novit illum indignum.

Innocentius III.

Ex parte tua fuit propositum (Et infra:) Quaesivisti praeterea per sedem apostolicam doceri, ut, quum episcopi ad consecrationes episcoporum ab archiepiscopo vel etiam alio evocentur, et ipsi metropolitano electum offerant consecrandum, dicentes: "Reverende pater, postulat sancta mater ecclesia hunc electum in episcopum consecrari, et interrogante archiepiscopo, si sciant, illum esse dignum, respondeant, quod illum sciunt et credunt pariter esse dignum, et te in responsione huiusmodi, ne offenderes hominem, Deum existimes offendisse, quandoque praeter, quandoque contra conscientiam respondendo, quum electi conversatio aut minus tibi cognita aut penitus sit ignota, qualiter in huiusmodi interrogationibus, salva conscientia, valeas respondere. Ad quod Fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum nos aliquem in diaconum vel presbyterum promovemus, prior diaconorum, qui nobis assistit, dicit: "Postulat sancta mater ecclesia catholica hunc diaconum vel subdiaconum ad onus presbyteratus vel diaconatus assumi," et nobis interrogantibus, si eum cognoverit esse dignum, idem respondet, quod, quantum humana fragilitas nosse sinit, et scit, et testificatur, illum ad huiusmodi onus officii esse dignum. Unde in tali responsione aliquem peccare non credimus, dummodo contra conscientiam non loquatur, quia non simpliciter illum asserit esse dignum, sed in quantum humana fragilitas nosse sinit, quum illum, quem indignum esse non novit, dignum debeat aestimare. Huiusmodi ergo responsione secure uti poteris, nisi forte de indignitate tibi constiterit consecrandi. Si autem illum indignum esse cognoscis, metropolitano, priusquam ad huiusmodi scrutinium veniatur, secreto studeas nunciare vel intimare, quamvis, ut duximus, nos interrogationem huiusmodi non in consecratione pontificis, sed in ordinatione diaconi vel presbyteri faciamus. [Postulasti etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Mart. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Title XIII: On Those Ordained by a Bishop Who Renounced the Bishopric

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A bishop who has renounced only the place can, when invited, confer orders as before. But if he has renounced the dignity also, the ordinand's own bishop dispenses with one ordained by him to minor orders, or unknowingly to sacred orders; he does not, however, dispense with one knowingly ordained by him to sacred orders.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Toledo.

Your fraternity asked us whether clerics who received orders after the renunciation made by your predecessor ought to remain in them or by the law of the canons to be promoted to greater orders. We, therefore, because the truth is not fully established for us, cannot respond to you briefly concerning this. We respond, therefore, by distinguishing whether he renounced only the place or both the place and the dignity together. For in the first case, unless prohibited by the Supreme Pontiff or his legate, when requested by some bishop he will reasonably be able to confer orders as before.

In the second case, however, we think a distinction must be made whether he conferred sacred or minor orders. For if someone received from such a man orders as far as the subdiaconate, because orders of this kind are also sometimes conferred by non-bishops, he will both be able to serve in them and, if suitable, to be promoted to greater orders. Indeed, if someone, after the renunciation had been made, knowingly received sacred orders from the same man, because he rendered himself unworthy, he will not have execution of the office. But where he did not do so knowingly, a discerning pontiff will be able to dispense, unless the ignorance was gross and supine.

> DE ORDINATIS AB EPISCOPO, QUI RENUNCIAVIT EPISCOPATUI.
> Episcopus, qui renunciavit loco tantum, invitatus conferre potest ordines, sicut prius. Si vero et dignitati, cum ordinato per eum ad minores vel ignoranter ad sacros dispensat episcopus suus; cum ordinato vero scienter ad sacros, non dispensat.
>
> Alexander III. Toletano Archiepiscopo.
>
> Requisivit a nobis tua fraternitas, utrum clerici, qui post renunciationem factam a praedecessore tuo ordines receperunt, in ipsis debeant remanere, aut ad maiores de iure canonum promoveri? Nos igitur, quia nobis non plenarie de veritate constat, non possumus tibi super hoc breviter respondere. Respondemus igitur distinguendo, utrum renunciaverit loco tantum, an loco simul et dignitati. Nam in primo casu ordines, sicut antea, nisi a summo Pontifice vel eius legato prohibitus fuerit, rogatus ab episcopo aliquo poterit de ratione conferre. In secundo vero casu distinguendum putamus, utrum sacros contulerit, an minores. Si enim a tali ordines usque ad subdiaconatum aliquis acceperit, quia et huiusmodi ordines a non episcopis quandoque conferuntur, et in illis deservire poterit, et ad maiores, si idoneus fuerit, promoveri. Sane si ab eodem sacros ordines facta renunciatione scienter quis receperit, quia indignum se fecit, exsecutionem officii non habebit. Ubi autem non scienter, poterit, nisi crassa et supina fuerit ignorantia, discretus pontifex dispensare.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is brief.

Gregory IX.

With clerics who unknowingly received orders from an excommunicated bishop, a dispensation will be able to be granted by their own bishops.

Title XIV: On the Age, Quality, and Order of Those to Be Placed in Authority

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: No summary is given.

From the Council of Poitiers.

Let abbots, deans, and provosts who are not priests become priests or lose their prelacies; let those who hold archdeaconries become deacons, and those who hold archpresbyterates become priests or lose the honor. But if, because some just cause prohibits it, they cannot be priests or deacons, let them lose the prelacies.

> DE AETATE ET QUALITATE ET ORDINE PRAEFICIENDORUM.

> Non summatur.
>
> Ex concilio Pictaviensi.
>
> Ut abbates et decani et praepositi, qui presbyteri non sunt, presbyteri fiant, aut praelationes amittant; qui archidiaconatus tenent, diaconi fiant, qui vero archipresbyteratus, presbyteri, aut amittant honorem. Quod si aliqua iusta causa prohibente presbyteri aut diaconi esse non potuerint, praelationes amittant.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A church granted by dispensation to a minor ought to be governed not by laymen but by clerics until he reaches the proper age.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

By reason of the dignity committed to you and in consideration of your legation, you ought to extend the edge of your solicitude to all the churches of your legation, and with pastoral care to correct and amend the things that have been done enormously or contrary to justice, so that you may be able to render a full account before the father of the household concerning the sheep committed to you, and an abundant reward may be accumulated for you in heaven for your labor and solicitude.

We have learned, however, that the Bishop of Coventry, not attending to what the statutes of the sacred canons decree, nor preserving pontifical moderation, granted several churches to boys who are constituted below their tenth year in the archdeaconry of our beloved son R., Archdeacon of Chester, which are administered and disposed not by clerics but by laymen. Hence, because this is hostile to ecclesiastical utility and contrary to reason, and therefore ought not to be tolerated in any way, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that, if the matter stands thus, you rebuke and chastise the aforesaid bishop with a living rebuke; and, all occasion and appeal ceasing and the laymen having been removed, commit the administrations and custody of the aforesaid churches to suitable clerics until the aforesaid boys reach a fitting age.

You shall prohibit the same bishop more strictly from hereafter granting churches to be governed except to persons who possess age and knowledge. But if he acts otherwise, imposing the due punishment upon him, you shall decree his institution and grant altogether to lack force.

> Ecclesia dispensative minori concessa non per laicos, sed per clericos regi debet, donec ille perveniat ad aetatem.
> Alexander III. Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ex ratione commissae tibi dignitatis et consideratione legationis ad universas ecclesias tuae legationis aciem sollicitudinis tuae debes extendere, et quae enormiter seu contra iustitiam facta fuerint pastorali cura corrigere et emendare, quatenus de commissis ovibus coram patrefamilias plenam reddere valeas rationem, et tibi pro labore et sollicitudine tua merces copiosa cumuletur in coelis. Accepimus autem, quod Conventrensis episcopus, non attendens, quid sacrorum canonum statuta decernant, nec modestiam pontificalem conservans, pueris, qui sunt infra decennium constituti, in archidiaconatu dilecti filii nostri R. archidiaconi Cistrensis ecclesias plures concessit, quae non per clericos, sed per laicos dispensantur et disponuntur. Unde quoniam hoc ecclesiasticae utilitati est inimicum et rationi contrarium, et ideo non debet hoc aliquatenus tolerari, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si ita res se habet, praedictum episcopum super his viva increpatione corripias et castiges, et clericis idoneis administrationes et custodiam praescriptarum ecclesiarum, donec praedicti pueri ad congruam veniant aetatem, omni occasione et appellatione cessantibus laicis amotis committas, eidem episcopo arctius prohibens, ne de cetero ecclesias, nisi personis, quae aetatem et scientiam habeant, regendas concedat. Quod si secus egerit, ei debitam poenam infligens, institutionem et concessionem ipsius omnino viribus carere decernas.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Governance of a church ought not to be committed to one under fourteen years of age.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his suffragans.

It is exceedingly indecorous and absurd that those who do not know how to govern themselves should govern churches, since such persons are to be admitted to the governance of churches as excel in discretion and shine in uprightness of morals. Therefore, unwilling to endure that at the prayers or insistence of any persons, as is frequently accustomed to be done in your regions, the governance of a church should be committed to little children, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, [under precept], that you do not presume, for anyone's favor or with a view to it, to grant the personatus of any church to anyone constituted below his fourteenth year. You are to know for certain that, if you presume to contravene our precept in this matter, with the Lord as author we will entirely invalidate what you have done as a result, and will punish your disobedience gravely.

> Regimen ecclesiae minori XIV. annis committi non debet.
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et eius Suffraganeis.
> Indecorum est admodum et absurdum, ut hi debeant ecclesias regere, qui non noverunt gubernare se ipsos, quum ad ecclesiarum regimen tales personae sint admittendae, quae discretione praeemineant, et morum fulgeant honestate. Nolentes itaque sustinere, ut ad preces vel ad instantiam aliquorum, sicut > frequenter solet in vestris partibus fieri, parvulis ecclesiae regimen committatur, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta [praecipiendo] mandamus, quatenus nemini infra annum XIV. constituto personatum cuiuslibet ecclesiae aliquorum gratia vel obtentu concedere praesumatis, scituri pro certo, quod, si praecepto nostro in hac parte contraire praesumpseritis, quod inde feceritis auctore Domino penitus irritabimus, et inobedientiam vestram graviter puniemus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One unworthy in knowledge, morals, or age ought not to be instituted to the governance of churches; and one who has two churches is compelled to relinquish one, unless a cause supports him.

The same.

It befits you to employ such care in ordaining the churches of your diocese that no cleric is ordained in them contrary to the decrees that we promulgated in the Lateran Council, or even contrary to the ancient enactments of the sacred canons; rather, take pains to place in them such persons as can suitably conduct the care of the flock committed to them and invite them to virtues by the example of a good work.

Hence it is that by the present letters we more strictly prohibit you from instituting in those churches persons who are to be ordained to the care of souls in the churches of your episcopate, or permitting them to be instituted on any occasion or even with a view to our letters, if they do not conform in knowledge, morals, and age to the institutions of the council. But you shall also be permitted, appeal being set aside, to compel those having several churches that do not depend upon one another to relinquish whichever one of them they prefer, unless those churches are so slender in substance that they cannot suitably support their own priests. But those, etc. [cf. c. 22, On the Right of Patronage, III.38.]

> Ad regimen ecclesiarum non debet institui indignus scientia, moribus, vel aetate, et qui habet duas ecclesias, alteram dimittere cogitur, nisi causa subsit.
>
> Idem.
>
> Eam te decet in ordinandis ecclesiis tuae dioecesis curam habere, ne ullus in eis contra decreta, quae in Lateranensi concilio edidimus, vel etiam contra antiquas sacrorum canonum sanctiones clericus ordinetur, sed tales in ipsis satagas ponere, qui commissi sibi gregis curam commode gerere possint, et exemplo boni operis ad virtutes invitent. Inde est, quod praesentibus tibi literis Arctius inhibemus, ne personas, quae in ecclesiis tui episcopatus ad curam animarum fuerint ordinandae, in ipsis instituas, nec aliqua occasione, vel etiam literarum nostrarum obtentu institui patiaris, quae scientia, moribus et aetate concilii non congruant institutis. Sed etiam habentes plures ecclesias, quae ex una non pendeant, tibi liceat appellatione postposita cogere ad unam ipsarum, quam maluerint, dimittendam, nisi ita fuerint tenues in substantia, quod proprias sacerdotes non possint convenienter alere. Illas autem etc. [cf. c. 22. de iure patron. III. 38.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who is not yet in sacred orders, if otherwise suitable, can by dispensation be assumed to the governance of a parish church.

The same.

Furthermore, although no one ought to be admitted to the governance of a parish church unless he is at least a subdeacon, nevertheless those constituted in minor orders are customarily assumed by dispensation, provided that they are such as can be ordained priests within a short time.

> Is, qui nondum est in sacris, si alias est idoneus, ad regimen parochialis ecclesiae dispensative potest assumi.
>
> Idem.
>
> Praeterea licet ad regimen parochialis ecclesiae non debeat aliquis, nisi subdiaconus sit ad minus, admitti, dispensative tamen in minoribus ordinibus constituti consueverunt assumi, dum tamen tales sint, quod infra breve tempus possint in presbyteros ordinari.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Because of the necessity and utility of the church, its clerics are compelled to receive orders not annexed to their benefices.

The same.

You ask us what is to be done concerning clerics committed to your jurisdiction who, although they abound in many ecclesiastical benefices, after being admonished by you are unwilling to be promoted to greater orders, saying that they have secretly committed something of such a kind that it does not permit them to be ordained with conscience safe. Therefore, since the sacred canons appear to disagree concerning this case—some saying that they are by no means to be compelled, while others assert the contrary—we resolve every bond of contrariety by the present page, establishing that, if the aforesaid clerics confess themselves to be unworthy to receive greater orders because of their secret sins, their inferiors in the same church whose life is approved shall, according to canonical institution, be preferred to them. And, unless perhaps those who refuse to be ordained for the already-mentioned cause are very useful in other services of the church, let their benefices be taken away and canonically conferred upon others.

But if from their will alone they refuse to be ordained, and the utility of the church counsels it or necessity altogether requires it, provided that they are suitable, you shall, with appeal ceasing, compel them to receive greater orders through loss of the places or orders that they possess and withdrawal of their benefices.

> Propter necessitatem et utilitatem ecclesiae compelluntur clerici ipsius recipere ordines, suis beneficiis non annexos.
>
> Idem.
> Quaeris a nobis, quid agendum sit de clericis tuae iurisdictioni commissis, qui, quum beneficiis ecclesiasticis multis abundent, a te commoniti nolunt ad maiores ordines promoveri, se tale quid secreto commisisse dicentes, quod eos salva conscientia ordinari non sinit. Quum igitur super hoc casu videantur sacri canones discordare, quum quidam dicant, eos minime compellendos, alii vero contrarium asseverant, omnis contrarietatis vinculum praesenti pagina enodamus, statuentes, ut, si praedicti clerici perceptione maiorum ordinum propter occulta sua peccata se indignos esse fatentur, inferiores in eadem ecclesia, quorum sit vita probabilis, secundum institutionem canonicam praeferantur eisdem. Et nisi forte illi, qui ordinari pro iam dicta causa recusant, in aliis ecclesiae servitiis valde utiles fuerint, auferantur eis beneficia et aliis canonice conferantur. Quod si pro sola voluntate renuerint ordinari, et suaserit utilitas ecclesiae, aut necessitas prorsus exegerit, ipsos, dummodo idonei sint, ad maiores ordines recipiendos per amissionem locorum, vel ordinum, quos habent, et beneficiorum subtractionem, appellatione cessante, compellas.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: The event of the death of a sick person does not impede the promotion of his physician who is skilled, solicitous, and observes the traditions of the art.

Clement III, to R., Canon of Cologne.

Through your report it has reached our ears that, since you are learned in the medical art, you have with diligence furnished medicine to several persons according to the tradition of that art, although the result rather often occurred to the contrary, and those to whom you thought you were applying a remedy incurred the danger of death after receiving the medicines. But because, as you assert, you desire to be promoted to sacred orders and wished to consult us concerning this, we respond briefly to you that, if your conscience stings you concerning the foregoing, by our counsel you should not ascend to greater orders.

Eventus mortalitatis infirmi non impedit promoveri eius medicum peritum, sollicitum et traditiones artis observantem.

Clemens III. R. Coloniensi Canonico.

Ad aures nostras te significante pervenit, quod, quum in arte physica eruditus sis, pluribus iuxta ipsius artis traditionem exhibuisti cum diligentia medicinam, licet pluries in contrarium successerit, et quibus putabas adhibere medelam, medicinis perceptis mortis periculum incurrerunt. Verum quia, sicut asseris, ad sacros ordines desideras promoveri, et super eo nos consulere voluisti. Tibi breviter respondemus, quod, si super praemissis conscientia tua te remordeat, ad maiores ordines de nostro consilio non ascendas.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One who has remained under suspension for a year is deprived of the benefice that he previously had and of that which he acquired in the meantime.

Celestine III.

When Pope Clement of good memory, our predecessor, had summoned I. Buccarum, Melearum, Maius Raofaca, and certain other clerics of Bar to come into his presence to answer H., their archdeacon, whom they had gravely injured, because they scorned to come according to the apostolic mandate, he caused a sentence of suspension to be promulgated against them through the Bishop of Vigilia. Remaining under it, as is said, for three years, certain of those suspended obtained another ecclesiastical benefice.

And because you wished to consult us whether benefices received in this manner can reasonably be retained, we respond to you by the notice of the present letters that they are not permitted to retain in any way either the benefices that they had or those that they afterwards obtained. Hence, we gave a mandate to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Bar that for such great obstinacy and apostolic contempt he should not delay in despoiling them of the benefices that they possess, to be detained in his hands until he receives our letters and mandate concerning what he ought to do about these matters.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A subdeacon can be elected bishop.

Innocent III.

Many persons very often doubt whether a subdeacon can be elected bishop. Indeed, Pope Urban I decreed that no one should be elected bishop unless he was found to be in sacred orders and living religiously. "By sacred orders," he says, "we mean the diaconate and priesthood, for the primitive Church is read to have possessed only these. Subdeacons, however, because they too minister at altars, we permit, when expediency requires, to be elected bishops, provided that they are of excellent knowledge and religion; and we do not permit this to be done without the permission of the Roman Pontiff or metropolitan." In these words it is intimated that Urban, referring himself to the state of the primitive Church, in which the order of subdiaconate was by no means called sacred, instituted that an election concerning a subdeacon could not be celebrated except for the sake of utility, and even then only with the permission of the metropolitan or Roman Pontiff.

§ 1. But since today the subdiaconate is counted among the sacred orders, as Pope Urban II expressed in these words: "Let the impious blush and understand that, by the judgment of the Holy Spirit, those who are placed in sacred orders—the priesthood, diaconate, and subdiaconate—if they have not lived chastely, are to be excluded from every dignity of those grades"; and again: "Let no one be permitted to approach sacred order unless he is either a virgin or of proved chastity, and he who, up to the subdiaconate, has had one wife and a virgin"; and since, after the likeness of a deacon and priest, a subdeacon ought to observe continence, as was established in the Sixth Synod, that if anyone of those who enter the clergy should wish to be joined to a woman by nuptial law, he shall do this before the order of subdiaconate; and blessed Gregory is read to have established that bishops should presume to make no one a subdeacon unless he has promised that he will live chastely—

§ 2. We, wishing to cut away the matter of dispute concerning this point, establish that a subdeacon can be freely elected bishop just as a deacon or priest can.

> Subdiaconus in episcopum eligi potest.
> Innocentius III.

A multis multotiens, an subdiaconus in episcopum eligi valeat, haesitatur. Siquidem Urbanus Papa primus decrevit, ut nullus in episcopum, nisi in sacris ordinibus et religiose vivens inventus fuerit, eligatur. "Sacros," inquit, "ordines diaconatum dicimus et presbyteratum; hos siquidem solos primitiva ecclesia legitur habuisse. Subdiaconos vero, quia etiam ipsi ministrant altaribus, opportunitate exigente concedimus in episcopos eligi; si tamen praeclarae scientiae ac religionis exsistant; quod ipsum non sine Romani Pontificis vel metropolitani licentia fieri permittimus." In quibus verbis innuitur, quod Urbanus ad statum primitivae ecclesiae se referens, in quo subdiaconatus ordo sacer minime dicebatur, instituit, ut de subdiacono, nisi utilitatis causa, et tunc etiam, nisi de permissione metropolitani vel Romani Pontificis, non posset electio celebrari. § 1. Verum quum hodie subdiaconatus inter sacros ordines computetur, sicut Urbanus Papa II. sub his verbis expressit: "Erubescant impii et intelligant, iudicio Spiritus sancti eos, qui in sacris ordinibus, presbyteratu, diaconatu, subdiaconatu sunt positi, si caste non vixerint, excludendos ab omni eorundem graduum dignitate," et iterum: "Nemo ad sacrum ordinem permittatur accedere, nisi aut virgo aut probatae castitatis exsistat, et qui usque ad subdiaconatum unicam et virginem habuerit uxorem;" et ad similitudinem diaconi et presbyteri subdiaconus debet continentiam observare, sicut est in sexta synodo constitutum, ut, si quis eorum, qui ad clerum accedunt, nuptiali iure mulieri voluerit copulari, hoc ante subdiaconatus ordinem faciat; et beatus Gregorius statuisse legitur, ut nullum facere subdiaconum praesumant episcopi, nisi qui se caste victurum promiserit. § 2. Nos volentes super hoc articulo disceptationis materiam amputare, statuimus, ut subdiaconus in episcopum valeat libere eligi sicut diaconus vel sacerdos.

The same, to the Cardinal-Priest of the title of the Holy Cross.

We commend in the Lord your diligence, which you are known to employ in reforming the monastery of Saint Quiricus. By the authority of the present letters we command your devotion that, if you cannot provide better for the same monastery with a suitable person, you institute as abbot that monk whom you commended in your letters for uprightness and industry, through whom it is believed that the condition of the same place is to be reformed. You shall have absolutely no regard for the unlawful petition that certain laymen were making, but shall act solely from the office of your own provision, in such a way, namely, that he does not ascend to sacred orders, since, when the point of necessity presses, one constituted even in minor orders can be assumed as abbot. And let the aforesaid laymen not be joined to the aforementioned monk by consanguinity or affinity, such that from their petition any adverse suspicion ought to arise against him.

Latin source headnote: An abbot, if he is a priest and has been blessed, can confer the clerical order.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rouen.

Since it sometimes happens that laymen flying to monasteries are tonsured by their abbots, you sought an oracle from the Apostolic See as to whether clerical order is conferred in the tonsure. Concerning this we respond to you that, since it was established in the Seventh Synod that each abbot is permitted, by imposition of hands, to make readers solely in his own monastery, provided that it is known that imposition of hands was made upon those abbots by a bishop according to the custom for abbots to be placed in authority, and it is established that he is a priest, clerical order is conferred through the first tonsure, according to the form given by the Church, by abbots of this kind. Latin source headnote: If a canon regular, having become a monk, has returned for a just cause to a canonry where he is afterwards placed in authority, he will lawfully be able to hold the prelacy.

The same.

We have understood that, before you were assumed to the governance of the abbey, although you had conducted yourself laudably in your monastery, you went to the monastery of Saint Innocent of such an order. When you had remained for some time in that order, at length, returning to your heart, with the counsel of the metropolitan and other [religious men], you took care to return to the first house. There at length, under the discipline of regular observance, you so pleased God and men that, at the requirement of your merits, your brothers unanimously placed you over themselves as abbot.

Therefore, lest on the occasion of the stay that you contracted in the aforesaid monastery your conscience, as it were, sting you, [and] you grow lukewarm in the care of the administration undertaken, we attend to what is provided in the canon: that no canon regular should become a monk unless perhaps—which God forbid—he has publicly fallen; and, if he has become one, he shall return to the order of canons, remaining last in choir and bearing the cowl as a memorial. We command your discretion that you take pains to exercise indefatigable solicitude concerning the care committed to you, and so continue the subsequent good things with the prior ones that you may be able to expect from God a worthy reward. [Given at the Lateran, on the seventh day before the Kalends of March, in the thirteenth year of our pontificate, 1210.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: One ordained to sacred orders without a title justly seeks a benefice from the one who ordained him.

The same.

We have learned through your report to our ears that certain clerics who were promoted to sacred orders without a title harass you concerning the obtaining of benefices in the church of Braga, although you could not then suitably furnish them from all the revenues of your church, especially since we command provision in necessary things to be made for those who by neither merits nor knowledge deserve ecclesiastical benefices even in parish churches, much less in the church of Braga, and whose life and knowledge are altogether unknown to us. If we had certainty concerning them, we would not command provision to be made for them in either greater or lesser churches. And although, according to the apostolic mandate, you are willing to provide for suitable persons in your chapels and in other parish churches outside the city, since you cannot provide for everyone in the greater church, nevertheless they disdain to receive provision in those churches. The judges also, and the admonitors or executors, to whom they carry our letters, do not admit your lawful exceptions that you set forth in their presence; hence you sought from us that we provide for you more kindly in this matter.

§ 1. Therefore, although in the ordinations of clerics you and your predecessors ought to have employed such diligence that less suitable persons were not ordained by you, and for this reason after their promotion you will not be able to put forward an exception of this kind against them, unless perhaps after they were promoted they rendered themselves unworthy, nevertheless, from superabundance, when it is fitting that we write for such persons, we cause this to be placed in our letters: that if the ordained person for whom we write is held to be suitable and not unworthy of an ecclesiastical benefice, a competent benefice shall be granted to him by the one who ordained him or that man's successor. For, even if we wished to proceed against you at law, we could deservedly compel you to provide for those whom it was established had been ordained by you or your predecessors, especially because you ought to regard as suitable to obtain an ecclesiastical benefice those whom you received into orders. Hence you ought not to bear it gravely, but rather are bound devoutly to incline to us, if we cause those to be examined by others whom we do not believe were ordained without examination, before we wish to compel you to provide for them.

§ 2. We therefore command your fraternity by apostolic writings under precept that you not delay in providing, in the greater church or other parish churches of the diocese of Braga, for those concerning whom it should happen that you receive our mandates in the common form, since we do not will that you be compelled for less suitable persons. But if you put forward any exceptions against such impetrators of our letters in the presence of the delegates, we command that they be heard.

Licet igitur in ordinationibus clericorum illam tu ac praedecessores tui diligentiam debueritis adhibere, ut minus idonei non ordinarentur a vobis, ac ideo post promotionem eorum exceptionem huiusmodi non poteris praetendere contra illos, nisi forte, postquam promoti fuerint, reddiderint se indignos, nos ex superabundanti tamen, quando scribere pro talibus nos oportet, facimus in literis nostris apponi, ut, si ordinatus, pro quo scribimus, idoneus habeatur et ecclesiastico beneficio non indignus, ei ab ordinatore vel successore ipsius competens beneficium tribuatur, quum, et si tecum de iure agere vellemus, te possemus merito ad provisionem eorum compellere, quos a te vel praedecessoribus tuis ordinatos fuisse constaret, eo praesertim, quod ad obtinendum ecclesiasticum beneficium eos debes idoneos reputare, quos ad ordines suscepisti. Unde graviter sustinere non debes, sed nobis potius devote inclinare teneris, si illos examinari per alios facimus, quos sine examinatione non credimus ordinatos, antequam ad provisionem eorum te compellere velimus. § 2. Mandamus igitur fraternitati tuae per apostolica praecipiendo scripta, quatenus eis, pro quibus te contigerit recipere nostra mandata in forma communi, in maiori ecclesia vel aliis ecclesiis parochialibus dioecesis Bracharensis providere non tardes, quum te pro minus idoneis compelli nolumus; exceptiones autem, si quas contra tales impetratores literarum nostrarum in delegatorum praesentia proposueris, praecipimus audiendas.

Latin source headnote: One less suitable ought not to be promoted as priest or assumed to the governance of souls.

The same, in the General Council.

Since the governance of souls is the art of arts, we strictly command that bishops diligently instruct and inform those to be promoted as priests, either personally or through other suitable men, concerning the divine offices and ecclesiastical sacraments, and how they may celebrate them rightly. For if hereafter they presume to ordain the untrained and ignorant—which indeed can easily be detected—we decree that both those ordaining and those ordained are subject to grave vengeance. For it is holier, especially in the ordination of priests, to have few good ministers than many evil ones, because, if the blind leads the blind, both slip down into the pit.

Although many matters were set forth against our venerable brother the Bishop of Calinum, even if none of them had been proved, nevertheless, because he confessed before us that he had never learned grammar nor even read Donatus, and through the evidence of the fact his illiteracy and insufficiency are established to such a degree that it would be contrary to God and the canonical enactments to tolerate so great a defect in a bishop, by the common counsel of our brothers we have decided that he must be removed altogether from execution of the pontifical office and from administration of the church of Calinum, invalidating whatever he shall hereafter attempt in the name of that church or concerning its goods.

Title XV: On Sacred Anointing

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The Church of the Greeks ought in ordinations and consecrations to observe the anointings that the Roman Church observes; moreover, when a bishop is consecrated, he is anointed with chrism on the head and hands; if this has been omitted, it is to be supplied by three bishops. § 5. It treats of the anointing of kings and of the differences in anointing between kings and pontiffs. Pan. § 6. It treats of the anointing of all Christians. § 7. It treats of the anointing with chrism after baptism, which is called confirmation. § 8. It treats of the consecration of an altar. Abbas.

Innocent III.

When our venerable brother the Bishop of Barcar came to the Apostolic See, who had not received sacred anointing in his consecration because among you pontiffs are not accustomed to be anointed when they are consecrated, we commanded that what had been lacking in him be supplied in him, causing his head and hands to be smeared with sacred chrism according to ecclesiastical custom by our venerable brother John, Bishop of Albano, with two bishops assisting him.

For the catholic Church holds this not only from divine precept but also from the example of the Apostles. Indeed, in Exodus it is read that the Lord commanded Moses to anoint Aaron and his sons so that they might discharge the priesthood. And Pope Anacletus, Greek by nation, who was ordained priest by blessed Peter and afterwards succeeded Clement in the office of the apostolate, hands down in his ordinance that bishops are to be anointed after the custom of the Apostles and Moses, because all sanctification consists in the Holy Spirit, whose invisible power is mingled with sacred chrism. Hence:

§ 1. We will you to know that there are two kinds of anointing: the exterior, which is material and visible, and the interior, which is spiritual and invisible. By the exterior the body is visibly anointed; by the interior the heart is invisibly anointed. Concerning the first, the Apostle James says: “Is anyone among you infirm? Let him bring in the priests of the Church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith will save the infirm man.” Concerning the second, the Apostle John says: “Let the anointing that you received from him remain in you, and you have no need that anyone teach you, but as his anointing teaches you concerning all things.” The visible and exterior anointing is a sign of the interior and invisible anointing. But the invisible and interior anointing is not only a sign but also a sacrament, because, if worthily received, it without doubt either effects or increases what it signifies.

§ 2. To furnish the exterior and visible anointing, however, the oil that is called the oil of catechumens or of the infirm is blessed, and chrism, which by mystical reason is made from oil and balsam, is prepared. For by oil the brightness of conscience is signified, according to what is read: “The prudent virgins received oil in their vessels with their lamps”; but by balsam the fragrance of reputation is expressed, on account of which it is said: “Like fragrant balsam, I gave forth an odor.”

§ 3. Therefore, a bishop ought to be anointed with this chrism not so much in body as in heart, so that inwardly he may have brightness of conscience toward God and outwardly have the fragrance of reputation toward his neighbor. Concerning the brightness of conscience the Apostle says: “Our glory is this, the testimony of our conscience,” for “all the glory of the king's daughter is within.”

Concerning the fragrance of reputation the same Apostle says: "We are the good fragrance of Christ in every place, and to some we are the fragrance of life unto life, to others the fragrance of death unto death." For a bishop ought to have good testimony both from those who are within and from those who are without, so that curtain may draw curtain, and the one who hears may say: come.

§ 4. With this ointment the head and hands of a bishop are consecrated. For by the head the mind is understood, according to this: "Anoint your head and wash your face." By the hands works are understood, according to this: "My hands dripped myrrh." Therefore, the hand is anointed with the oil of piety so that the bishop may work good toward all, but especially toward the household of faith. The head, however, is anointed with the balsam of charity so that the bishop may love God with his whole heart, whole mind, and whole soul, and his neighbor as himself. The head is anointed because of authority and dignity, and the hands because of ministry and office.

The head is anointed so that it may be shown that he represents the person of him concerning whom it is said through the Prophet: "Like the ointment upon his head that descended upon the beard, the beard of Aaron." For the head of man is Christ; the head of Christ is God, who says concerning himself: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me; because he anointed me, he sent me to evangelize the poor." The hands of a bishop are anointed so that it may be shown that he receives the power of blessing and consecrating. Hence, when the consecrator anoints them, he says: "Deign, Lord, to consecrate and sanctify these hands through this sacred anointing and through our blessing, so that whatever they consecrate may be consecrated, and whatever they bless may be blessed in the name of the Lord."

§ 5. Hence, in the Old Testament not only a priest but also a king and a prophet was anointed, as in the Book of Kings the Lord commanded Elijah: "Go and return to your house through the desert to Damascus, and when you have arrived there, you shall anoint Hazael king over Syria, and you shall anoint Jehu son of Nimshi king over Israel. Moreover, you shall anoint Elisha son of Shaphat, who is from Abel-meholah, as prophet in your place."

But when Jesus of Nazareth—whom God anointed with the Holy Spirit, as is read in the Acts of the Apostles—was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows, he who according to the Apostle is the head of the Church, which is his body, the anointing of a prince was transferred from the head [namely] to the arm, so that thereafter a prince is anointed not on the head but on the arm, or on the shoulder, or on the upper arm, in which princely power is fittingly signified, according to what is read: "Princely power was placed upon his shoulder, etc." To signify this also, Samuel caused the upper arm to be placed before Saul, to whom he had given a place at the head before those who had been invited. But the sacramental anointing was preserved on the head of a pontiff because in the pontifical office he represents the person of the head. There is a difference, moreover, between the anointing of a pontiff and that of a prince, because the head of a pontiff is consecrated with chrism, while the arm of a prince is smeared with oil, so that it may be shown how great the difference is between the authority of a pontiff and the power of a prince.

§ 6. But because Christ made us in his blood a kingdom and priests for our God, on account of which the Apostle Peter says, "You are a chosen race, a royal priesthood," therefore in the New Testament not only kings and priests are anointed, but also all Christians: twice before baptism, namely with blessed oil, first on the breast and then between the shoulder blades; and twice after baptism, namely with sacred chrism, first on the crown of the head and finally on the forehead.

For the one to be baptized is anointed on the breast so that through the gift of the Holy Spirit he may cast away error and ignorance and receive the right faith, because the just man lives by faith. The one to be baptized is anointed between the shoulder blades so that through the grace of the Holy Spirit he may cast off negligence and torpor and exercise good works, because faith without works is dead, so that through the sacrament of faith there may be purity of thoughts in the breast and through the exercise of work there may be strength for labors on the shoulders, in order that faith may work through love according to the Apostle.

But the baptized person is anointed on the crown of the head so that he may be prepared to render an account of the faith to everyone who asks, because by the head the mind is understood, according to what is read: "The eyes of the wise man are in his head," of which the higher part is reason and the lower is sensuality. Hence, by the crown, which is the higher part of the head, reason, which is the higher part of the mind, is well understood. The baptized person is anointed on the forehead so that he may freely confess what he believes, because "with the heart one believes unto justice, but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation," mindful of what the Lord says: "Whoever confesses me before men, I also will confess him before my Father."

Therefore, before baptism he is anointed with blessed oil, and after baptism with sacred chrism, because chrism belongs to a Christian alone. For Christ is said from chrism, or rather chrism is said from Christ—not according to the form of the name but according to the account of faith. Christians, however, are said from Christ, as though the anointed were derived from the Anointed One, so that all may run together into the fragrance of that ointment whose name is oil poured forth.

§ 7. By chrismation of the forehead the imposition of hands is signified, which by another name is called confirmation, because through it the Holy Spirit is given for increase and strength. Hence, although a simple priest or presbyter may furnish the other anointings, only the high priest—that is, a bishop—ought to confer this one, because it is read concerning the Apostles alone, whose vicars bishops are, that through the imposition of hands they gave the Holy Spirit, as the reading from the Acts of the Apostles makes manifest: "When," it says, "the Apostles who were at Jerusalem had heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent Peter and John to them; and when they had come, they prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Spirit. For he had not yet come upon any of them, but they had only been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus; then they laid hands upon them, and they received the Holy Spirit."

His coming is signified through the ministry of anointing, because the dove in which the Holy Spirit descended upon Christ in baptism, returning in the evening during the flood, brought back a branch of flourishing olive, whose sacrament David the Prophet, foreknowing it, proclaimed that the face would be gladdened with oil.

§ 8. Furthermore, according to ecclesiastical custom, an anointing is performed when an altar is consecrated, when a temple is dedicated, and when a chalice is blessed, not only from the mandate of divine law but also from the example of blessed Sylvester, who, when he consecrated an altar, anointed it throughout with chrism. For the Lord commanded Moses to make the oil of anointing, from which he should anoint the tabernacle of testimony and the ark of the covenant, and the table with its vessels. Concerning these anointings also, if perhaps you should doubt, when we have been consulted by you, we will instruct your fraternity more fully. Nevertheless, the sacrament of anointing effects and figures another thing both in the New Testament and in the Old; hence the Church does not Judaize when she celebrates the sacrament of anointing, as the ancients falsely claim, who know neither the scriptures nor the power of God.

§ 9. We therefore admonish your fraternity and exhort it more attentively, commanding [you] by apostolic writings that, at the mandate of our beloved son the cardinal-priest of the title of the Holy Cross, legate of the Apostolic See, you too receive sacred anointing, lest anything be lacking to you for the fullness of the sacrament. Thus, when you have been smeared with sacred chrism, you shall likewise anoint your archbishops and bishops, and through them cause the hands of priests to be anointed with blessed oil, so that hereafter in ordaining priests and consecrating bishops you observe and cause to be observed the custom that the Apostolic See observes, which, by the Lord's disposition, is the mother and teacher of all the faithful.

Moreover, through the aforesaid cardinal we send you the pontifical ornaments: stockings and sandals, amice and alb, girdle and subcinctorium, stole and maniple, tunicle and dalmatic, gloves and ring, chasuble and mitre. But we had previously sent the pallium through our beloved son John, our chaplain. And although the Roman Pontiff does not use a pastoral staff, both because of history and also because of a mystical reason, which the same cardinal, as he received it from us, will be able to teach, nevertheless you will be able to use it after the likeness of other pontiffs. [Given at Anagni, on the sixth day before the Kalends of March, in the seventh year of our pontificate, 1204.]

> Innocentius III.
> Quum venisset ad apostolicam sedem venerabilis frater noster Barcarensis episcopus, qui in consecratione sua sacram non acceperat unctionem, quoniam apud vos non consueverunt pontifices, quum consecrantur, inungi, nos quod illi defuerat mandavimus in ipso suppleri, facientes caput eius et manus per venerabilem fratrem nostrum Ioannem Albanensem episcopum, assistentibus ei duobus episcopis, secundum morem ecclesiasticum sacro chrismate deliniri. Hoc enim catholica ecclesia tenet, non solum ex praecepto divino, verum etiam Apostolorum exemplo. In Exodo quippe legitur praecepisse Dominus Moysi, ut Aaron et filios eius inungeret, quatenus sacerdotio fungerentur. Et Anacletus Papa, natione Graecus, qui a B. Petro fuit in presbyterum ordinatus, et postea in apostolatus officio Clementi successit, tradit in ordinatione sua, ungendos episcopos more Apostolorum et Moysi, quia omnis sanctificatio in Spiritu sancto consistit, cuius invisibilis virtus sancto chrismati est permixta. Unde § 1. Scire te volumus, duas esse species unctionis: exteriorem, quae materialis est et visibilis, et interiorem, quae spiritualis est et invisibilis. Exteriori visibiliter inungitur corpus; interiori invisibiliter inungitur cor. De prima Iacobus Apostolus ait: "Infirmatur quis in vobis, inducat presbyteros ecclesiae, et orent super eum, ungentes eum oleo in nomine Domini, et oratio fidei salvabit infirmum." De secunda Ioannes Apostolus ait: "Vos unctionem, quam accepistis ab eo, maneat in vobis, et non necesse habetis, ut aliquis doceat vos, sed sicut unctio eius docet vos de omnibus." Unctio visibilis et exterior signum est interioris et invisibilis unctionis. Unctio vero invisibilis et interior non solum est signum, sed etiam sacramentum, quia, si digne sumitur, vel agit vel auget absque dubio quod designat. § 2. Ad exhibendum autem exteriorem et visibilem unctionem benedicitur oleum, quod dicitur catechumenorum vel infirmorum, et conficitur chrisma, quod ex oleo fit et balsamo mystica ratione. Per oleum enim nitor conscientiae designatur, iuxta quod legitur: "Prudentes virgines acceperunt oleum in vasis suis cum lampadibus;" per balsamum autem odor famae exprimitur, propter quod dicitur: "Sicut balsamum aromatizans, odorem dedi. § 3. Hoc ergo chrismate ungi debet episcopus, non tam in corpore, quam in corde, ut et interius habeat nitorem conscientiae, quantum ad Deum, et exterius habeat odorem famae, quoad proximum. De nitore conscientiae dicit Apostolus: "Gloria nostra haec est, testimonium conscientiae nostrae," nam "omnis gloria filiae regis ab intus." De odore famae idem Apostolus ait: "Christi bonus odor sumus in omni loco, et aliis sumus odor vitae in vitam, aliis odor mortis in mortem." Debet enim episcopus bonum habere testimonium, et ab iis, qui sunt intus, et ab iis, qui sunt foris, ut cortina cortinam trahat, et qui audit dicat: veni. § 4. Hoc unguento caput et manus episcopi consecrantur. Per caput enim mens intelligitur, iuxta illud: "Unge caput tuum, et faciem tuam lava." Per manus opera intelliguntur, iuxta illud: "Manus meae distillaverunt myrrham." Manus igitur ungitur oleo pietatis, ut episcopus operetur bonum ad omnes, maxime autem ad domesticos fidei. Caput autem ungitur balsamo caritatis, ut episcopus diligat Deum ex toto corde, et ex tota mente, et ex tota anima, et proximum suum sicut se ipsum. Caput inungitur propter auctoritatem et dignitatem, et manus propter ministerium et officium. Caput inungitur, ut ostendatur illius repraesentare personam, de quo dicitur per Prophetam: "Sicut unguentum in capite eius quod descendit in barbam, barbam Aaron." Caput enim viri Christus, caput Christi Deus, qui de se dicit: "Spiritus Domini super me eo, quod unxit me, evangelizare pauperibus misit me." Manus episcopi inunguntur, ut ostendatur accipere potestatem benedicendi et consecrandi. Unde, quum eas consecrator inungit, "Consecrare," inquit, "et sanctificare digneris, Domine, manus istas, per istam sanctam unctionem et per nostram benedictionem, ut quaecunque consecraverint consecrentur, et quaecunque benedixerint benedicantur in nomine Domini." § 5. Unde in veteri testamento non solum ungebatur sacerdos, sed etiam rex et Propheta, sicut in libro Regum Dominus praecepit Heliae: "Vade et revertere in domum tuam per desertum in Damascum, quumque perveneris illuc, unges Hazael regem super Syriam, et Iehu filium Namsi unges regem super Israel. Elisaeum autem filium Saphat, qui est de Abel-Meula, unges Prophetam pro te." Sed ubi Iesus Nazarenus, quem unxit Deus Spiritu sancto, sicut in Actibus Apostolorum legitur, unctus est oleo pietatis prae consortibus suis, qui secundum Apostolum est caput ecclesiae, quae est corpus ipsius, principis unctio a capite [scilicet] ad brachium est translata, ut princeps extunc non ungatur in capite, sed in brachio, sive in humero, vel in armo, in quibus principatus congrue designatur, iuxta illud, quod legitur: "Factus est principatus super humerum eius, etc." Ad quod etiam significandum Samuel fecit poni armum ante Saul, cui dederat locum in capite ante eos, qui fuerunt invitati. In capite vero pontificis sacramentalis est delibutio conservata, quia personam capitis in pontificali officio repraesentat. Refert autem inter pontificis et principis unctionem, quia caput pontificis chrismate consecratur, brachium vero principis oleo delinitur, ut ostendatur, quanta sit differentia inter auctoritatem pontificis et principis potestatem. § 6. Quia vero Christus fecit nos in sanguine suo Deo nostro regnum et sacerdotes, propter quod Petrus Apostolus ait: "Vos estis genus electum, regale sacerdotium:" idcirco in novo testamento non solum reges et sacerdotes unguntur, sed etiam omnes Christiani bis ante baptismum, scilicet oleo benedicto, primum in pectore, deinde inter scapulas, et bis post baptismum, scilicet chrismate sancto, primum in vertice, demum in fronte. In pectore namque baptizandus inungitur, ut per sancti Spiritus donum abiiciat errorem et ignorantiam, et suscipiat fidem rectam, quia iustus ex fide vivit. Inter scapulas autem baptizandus inungitur, ut per

Spiritus sancti gratiam excutiat negligentiam et torporem, et bonam operationem exerceat, quia fides sine operibus mortua est, ut per fidei sacramentum sit munditia cogitationum in pectore, et per operis exercitium sit fortitudo laborum. In scapulis, quatenus fides per dilectionem secundum Apostolum operetur. In vertice vero baptizatus inungitur, ut sit paratus omni petenti de fide reddere rationem, quia per caput intelligitur mens, iuxta quod legitur: "Oculi sapientis in capite eius," cuius superior pars est ratio, et inferior est sensualitas. Unde bene per verticem, quae est superior pars capitis, intelligitur ratio, quae est superior pars mentis. In fronte ungitur baptizatus, ut libere confiteatur quod credit, quia "corde creditur ad iustitiam, ore vero fit confessio ad salutem," memor eius, quod Dominus ait: "Qui me confessus fuerit coram hominibus, confitebor et ego ei coram Patre meo." Ante baptismum ergo ungitur oleo benedicto, et post baptismum chrismate sancto, quia chrisma soli competit Christiano. Christus enim a chrismate dicitur, vel potius a Christo dicitur chrisma, non secundum nominis formam, sed secundum fidei rationem. A Christo vero Christiani dicuntur, tanquam uncti deriventur ab uncto, ut omnes concurrant in odorem illius unguenti, cuius nomen oleum est effusum. § 7. Per frontis chrismationem manus impositio designatur, quae alio nomine dicitur confirmatio, quia per eam Spiritus sanctus ad augmentum datur et robur. Unde quum ceteras unctiones simplex sacerdos vel presbyter valeat exhibere, hanc non nisi summus sacerdos, id est episcopus, debet conferre, quia de solis Apostolis legitur, quorum vicarii sunt episcopi, quod per manus impositionem Spiritum sanctum dabant, quemadmodum Actuum Apostolorum lectio manifestat: "Quum audissent," inquit, "Apostoli, qui erant Hierosolymis, quia recepisset Samaria verbum Dei, miserunt ad eos Petrum et Ioannem; qui quum venissent, oraverunt pro ipsis, ut acciperent Spiritum sanctum. Nondum enim in quemquam illorum venerat, sed baptizati tantum erant in nomine Domini Iesu; tunc imponebant manus super illos, et accipiebant Spiritum sanctum." Cuius adventus per unctionis ministerium designatur, quia columba, in qua Spiritus sanctus super Christum in baptismo descendit, ad vesperum in cataclysmo revertens, ramum retulit virentis olivae, cuius utique sacramentum David Propheta praenoscens, exhilarandam faciem in oleo praedicavit. § 8. Ungitur praeterea secundum ecclesiasticum morem, quum consecratur altare, quum dedicatur templum, et quum benedicitur calix, non solum ex mandato legis divinae, verum etiam exemplo beati Silvestri, qui, quum consecrabat altare, illud chrismate perungebat. Praecepit enim Dominus Moysi, ut faceret oleum unctionis, de quo ungeret testimonii tabernaculum et arcam testamenti, mensamque cum vasis, de quibus etiam unctionibus, si forsitan dubitaveris, quum a te fuerimus requisiti, fraternitatem tuam plenius instruemus. Verum tamen unctionis sacramentum aliud quidem efficit et figurat tam in novo quam in veteri testamento, unde non iudaizat ecclesia, quum unctionis celebrat sacramentum, sicut antiqui mentiuntur, qui neque scripturas, neque Dei novere virtutem. § 9. Monemus igitur, fraternitatem tuam et exhortamur attentius, per apostolica [tibi] scripta mandantes, quatenus ad mandatum dilecti filii nostri tit. sanctae Crucis presbyteri cardinalis apostolicae sedis legati tu quoque sacram suscipias unctionem, ne quid tibi desit ad plenitudinem sacramenti, ut, quum sacro fueris chrismate delibutus, archiepiscopos et episcopos tuos similiter ungas, et per eos facias manus sacerdotum inungi oleo benedicto, ut illum de cetero in ordinandis presbyteris et consecrandis episcopis morem serves et facias observari quem apostolica sedes observat, quae disponente Domino cunctorum fidelium mater est et magistra. Mittimus autem tibi per cardinalem praedictum pontificalia ornamenta, caligas et sandalia, amictum et albam, cingulum et succinctorium, orarium et manipulum, tunicam et dalmaticam, chirothecas et annulum, planetam et mitram. Pallium vero per dilectum filium Io. capellanum nostrum antea miseramus. Et Licet Romanus Pontifex non utatur baculo pastorali, tum propter historiam, tum etiam propter mysticam rationem, quod idem cardinalis, sicut a nobis accepit, poterit edocere, tu tamen ad similitudinem aliorum pontificum poteris eo uti. Title XVI: On Sacraments Not to Be Repeated

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: In the case of one ordained subdeacon without imposition of hands, and one confirmed with an anointing not of chrism but of oil, there shall be no repetition, but what was omitted shall be supplied.

Innocent III.

The pastoral—(And below: [cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.29.]) Furthermore, you wished to consult us whether one who was assumed to the order of subdiaconate without imposition of hands ought to be permitted to minister, and whether the sacrament of confirmation ought to be repeated in one who through error was smeared not with chrism but with oil. To this we have decided to respond briefly to your fraternity that in such matters nothing is to be repeated, but what had been incautiously omitted is cautiously to be supplied. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January, 1204.]

> DE SACRAMENTIS NON ITERANDIS.
>
> In ordinato in subdiaconum sine manuum impositione, et confirmato non chrismatis, sed olei unctione, non fiet iteratio, sed supplebitur praetermissum.
>
> Innocentius III.
>
> Pastoralis (Et infra: [cf. c. 28. de off. iud. del. I. 29.]) Praeterea nos consulere voluisti, an permitti debeat ministrare qui sine impositione manuum fuerit ad ordinem subdiaconatus assumptus, et si confirmationis sacramentum in eo debeat iterari, qui per errorem fuit non chrismate, sed oleo delinitus. Ad quod fraternitati tuae breviter duximus respondendum, quod in talibus non est aliquid iterandum, sed caute supplendum quod incaute fuerat praetermissum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Ian. 1204.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It prohibits those buried by schismatics from being exhumed, the vestments in which they celebrated from being blessed again, and the altars upon which they celebrated from being consecrated again.

Honorius III, to the Archbishop of London and his suffragans.

You humbly asked us what ought to be done concerning the bodies of the dead who in the time of the schismatic and reprobate Waldemar were buried by schismatics, and concerning the priestly vestments in which, as well as the altars upon which, degraded priests celebrated. We respond briefly to your inquiry that we do not believe that those thus buried are to be exhumed solely on this account, or that such vestments ought to be blessed again, or the aforesaid altars reconsecrated.

Textual note: The source prints Archiepisco Londonensi, although the reference to Waldemar's schism indicates the Archbishop of Lund. The translation preserves the printed addressee rather than silently correcting it.

> Prohibet sepultos a schismaticis exhumari, vestimenta, cum quibus celebrarunt, iterum benedici, et altaria, in quibus celebrarunt, iterum consecrari.
> Honorius III. Archiepisco Londonensi et eius Suffraganeis.

A nobis humiliter quaesivistis, quid fieri debeat de mortuorum corporibus, qui tempore schismatici et reprobi Waldemarii a schismaticis sunt sepulti, et de indumentis sacerdotalibus, cum quibus, nec non de altaribus, in quibus degradati presbyteri celebrarunt. Nos autem inquisitioni vestrae breviter respondemus, quod non credimus, ob hoc duntaxat sepultos huiusmodi exhumandos, aut debere indumenta talia iterum benedici, vel reconsecrari altaria supradicta.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If imposition of hands was omitted in the ordination of a priest or deacon, it shall be supplied at the times established.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of London.

When a priest and deacon is ordained, he receives the imposition of hands by bodily touch according to the rite introduced by the Apostles. But if this was omitted, it is not in any way to be repeated; rather, at the time established for conferring orders of this kind, what was omitted through error is cautiously to be supplied. The suspension of hands, however, ought to be made when the prayer is poured forth over the head of the one to be ordained. [Given at Anagni, on the fifth day before the Ides of December, in the sixth year of our pontificate, 1232.]

Textual note: As in the preceding chapter, the source prints Londonensi ("of London"); the Scandinavian context may instead indicate Lund, but the printed form is retained.

Si in ordinatione presbyteri vel diaconi manus impositio fuerit praetermissa, statutis temporibus supplebitur.

Gregorius IX. Archiepiscopo Londonensi.

Presbyter et diaconus quum ordinatur, manus impositionem tactu corporali ritu ab Apostolis introducto recipiunt. Quod si omissum fuerit, non est aliquatenus iterandum, sed statuto tempore ad huiusmodi ordines conferendos caute supplendum quod per errorem exstitit praetermissum. Suspensio autem manuum debet fieri, quum oratio super caput effunditur ordinandi. [Datum. Anagniae V. Id. Dec. Pont. nostr. Ao. VI. 1232.]

Title XVII: On Whether the Sons of Priests Are to Be Ordained

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: An illegitimate person is not ordained unless he becomes a religious; and even then he is not placed in authority, that is, he is not made eligible for a prelacy.

From the Council of Poitiers.

Let the sons of priests and others born from fornication not be promoted to sacred orders unless they either become monks or live regularly in a canonical congregation. But let them in no way have a prelacy. Nor shall slaves, unless they are endowed with freedom by their masters.

DE FILIIS PRESBYTERORUM ORDINANDIS VEL NON.

Illegitimus non ordinatur, nisi ut religiosus fiat, nec tunc praeficitur, id est ad praelaturam non habilitatur.

Ex concilio Pictaviensi.

> Ut filii presbyterorum et ceteri ex fornicatione nati ad sacros ordines non promoveantur, nisi aut monachi fiant, vel in congregatione canonica regulariter viventes. Praelationem vero nullatenus habeant. Sed neque servi, nisi a dominis suis libertate donentur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: An illegitimate son of a priest who, with this fact suppressed, obtained his father's church through an apostolic rescript is removed from it.

Alexander III, to the Bishop-Elect of Lincoln.

Coming into our presence, R., a priest, having suppressed the fact that he was the son of a priest, fraudulently obtained [letters] from us that he should be chaplain in the church of Bilesby, in which his father ministered. Therefore, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, [under precept], that within forty days after reception of these letters you diligently inquire into the truth of the matter; and, if it is established for you that the aforesaid R. was begotten during his father's priesthood and that his father ministered in the same church, notwithstanding our aforesaid letters, you shall remove him from it, with every occasion and appeal ceasing.

> Illegitimus filius sacerdotis, qui, hoc tacito, per rescriptum apostolicum paternam ecclesiam impetravit, removetur ab illa.
> Alexander III. Linconensi Electo.
>
> Ad praesentiam nostram accedens R. presbyter, tacito, quod esset filius sacerdotis, per fraudem [literas] impetravit a nobis, ut in ecclesia de Bilesbi, in qua pater eius ministravit, exsisteret capellanus. Ideoque discretioni tuae per apostolica scripta [praecipiendo] mandamus, quatenus infra XL. dies post harum susceptionem literarum rei veritatem inquiras diligenter, et si tibi constiterit, quod memoratus R. sit in sacerdotio genitus, et quod pater eius in eadem ecclesia ministravit, non obstantibus praedictis literis nostris, ipsum omni occasione et appellatione cessantibus amoveas ab eadem.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: The son of a priest cannot preside over his father's church. This is said with the following chapter.

The same.

By the authority of the present letters we also command you that you in no way permit the sons of priests to minister in their fathers' churches or to obtain them on any occasion, but, with every obstacle of appeal ceasing, take pains to remove them altogether from the churches in which their fathers are known to have ministered.

> Non potest filius sacerdotis ecclesiae paternae praeesse. H. d. cum sequ.
>
> Idem.
>
> Praesentium etiam auctoritate tibi iubemus, ut filios sacerdotum in ecclesiis paternis ministrare, vel eas qualibet occasione obtinere nullatenus patiaris, sed ipsos ab ecclesiis, in quibus patres eorum ministrasse noscuntur, cessante omni appellationis obstaculo studeas penitus amovere.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: It says the same.

The same, to the Bishop of Worcester.

Through the complaint of M., a cleric, it became known to our ears that, when R., a priest, had for a rather long time held the church of Blessed Mary of Vicum as persona, [and] after his death the same Milo had been presented by Richard Paciford, lord of the soil, R., the son of that priest, begotten during his priesthood, strove to impede the institution of that cleric and aspires by every means he can to have the same church.

Therefore, because it is unworthy and contrary to canonical enactment that sons should succeed fathers in churches, we, wishing solicitously and diligently to attend to the eradication of this enormity, command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that, if it is public and notorious that the father of the aforesaid cleric R. held the personatus in the aforesaid church, you in no way permit his son to minister there or to have the personatus of the same church. And if perhaps [for some cause] he has already been instituted there, you shall not delay in removing him from it by our authority, with the remedy of appeal removed. And, if the aforementioned M. has been presented to you for that church by the one to whom the presentation is known to belong, provided that he is otherwise suitable, you shall not postpone receiving him there, with contradiction and appeal ceasing, and shall cause him peacefully to possess the aforesaid church.

> Idem Vigorensi Episcopo.
> Conquerente nobis M. clerico auribus nostris innotuit, quod, quum R. presbyter ecclesiam B. Mariae de Vicum tanquam persona diutius habuisset, [et] post mortem eius idem Milo a Richardo Paciford domino fundi fuisset praesentatus, R. filius eius presbyteri in sacerdotio genitus institutionem ipsius clerici nisus est impedire, et ad habendam ecclesiam eandem modis omnibus, quibus potest, adspirat. Quoniam igitur indignum est et canonicae obviat sanctioni, ut filii debeant patribus succedere in ecclesiis, nos ad enormitatem istam eradicandam sollicite volentes et diligenter intendere, Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si publicum est et notorium, patrem praedicti R. clerici habuisse in praedicta ecclesia personatum, filium eius ibidem ministrare aut eiusdem ecclesiae personatum habere nullatenus patiaris, et, si forte [aliqua causa] iam institutus est ibi, eum, sublato appellationis remedio, auctoritate nostra inde non differas amovere, et memoratum M. si tibi ad ipsam ecclesiam fuerit praesentatus ab eo, ad quem praesentatio spectare dignoscitur, ibi dummodo alias idoneus sit, contradictione et appellatione cessantibus, non postponas recipere, ipsumque facias praedictam quiete possidere ecclesiam.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A bishop who knowingly conferred the father's church upon the son of a priest cannot afterwards remove him from it.

The same, to the Bishop of London.

Coming into our presence, N., a cleric and bearer of the present letters, set forth to us in a supplicatory representation that, when you had given him a title to the chapel of the church of Saint I. of Newburgh, which you granted and assigned to him, and had ordained him priest for it, you afterwards despoiled him of it because his father had ministered in the aforesaid church. Therefore, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that, if it was known to you when you gave it to him that his father, a priest, had ministered in the said church, you restore it to him, with delay and appeal ceasing, and leave him in peace, removing another if perhaps you instituted anyone in it. But if you did this in ignorance, since you ordained him priest for that church, you shall restore it to him and, until you provide for him in another church from which he can be honorably supported, shall inflict no burden or trouble upon him concerning the aforesaid church.

> Episcopus, qui scienter contulit filio sacerdotis paternam ecclesiam, exinde eum removere non potest.
> Idem Londonensi Episcopo.
> Veniens ad praesentiam nostram N. clericus lator praesentium supplici nobis insinuatione proposuit, quod, quum illum ad capellam ecclesiae sancti I. de Novoburgo, quam ei concessisti et assignasti, attitulasses, et ad eandem in presbyterum ordinasses, ipsum ea postea spoliasti eo, quod pater eius in praedicta ecclesia ministravit. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si tibi innotuerit, quando eam sibi dedisti, quod pater eius presbyter in dicta ecclesia ministrasset, ipsam ei dilatione et appellatione cessante restituas et in pace dimittas, amoto alio, si quem instituisti forsitan in eadem. Verum si hoc ignorans fecisti, ex quo ad ecclesiam ipsam eum in presbyterum ordinasti, eam sibi restituas, et donec in alia ecclesia sibi provideas, unde honeste valeat sustentari, eidem nullum super praedicta ecclesia gravamen inferas vel molestiam.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: It contains a grace and says this: Once the son of a priest has been ordained, he ought not to lack a benefice. Johannes Andreae.

The same, to the Bishop of Oxford.

R., the bearer of the present letters, set forth to us that, when he had been presented to the church of Saleb. by the lord of the soil, you were unwilling to commit the care of souls to him or furnish your assent to this matter because he was the son of a priest. Concerning this, indeed, we commend your discretion in the Lord, as is worthy, and hold your providence exceedingly pleasing and acceptable.

But because with inward affection of mind we have compassion upon his necessities and the labors that he sustained in coming to us, and it is unworthy that he, after he has, as he asserts, been ordained subdeacon, should altogether lack provision of an ecclesiastical benefice, we admonish and command your discretion by apostolic writings that within forty days after reception of these letters, with contradiction and appeal ceasing, you take pains to find, with the assent of the same cleric, some honorable priest to serve the aforesaid church, in such a way that the aforesaid R., while serving the same in his own order, ought, out of regard for God and by our and your authority, peacefully to obtain for as long as he lives one half of all the benefices of the aforesaid church. For a priest alone cannot celebrate the solemnities of masses or other divine offices without the aid of a minister.

> Gratiam continet et hoc dicit: Ex quo filius sacerdotis est ordinatus, non debet carere beneficio. Ioan. Andr.
>
> Idem Oxonensi Episcopo.
> Proposuit nobis R. lator praesentium, quod quum ipse ad ecclesiam de Saleb. a domino fundi fuerit praesentatus, tu curam animarum noluisti sibi committere, vel huic rei assensum tuum praestare pro eo, quod esset filius sacerdotis. Super quo utique discretionem tuam, sicut dignum est, in Domino commendamus, et providentiam tuam gratam gerimus admodum et acceptam. Ceterum, quia necessitatibus eius et laboribus, quos ad nos veniendo sustinuit, interna mentis affectione compatimur, et indignum est, ut ipse, postquam est in subdiaconum, ut asserit, ordinatus, omnino debeat ecclesiastici beneficii provisione carere, discretionem tuam per apostolica scripta monemus atque mandamus, quatenus aliquem honestum presbyterum cum assensu eiusdem clerici infra XL. dies post harum susceptionem literarum, contradictione et appellatione cessantibus invenire studeas, qui ecclesiae serviat supradictae, ita, quod praefatus R. medietatem omnium beneficiorum praedictae ecclesiae, eidem in suo ordine serviendo, divino intuitu, quoad vixerit, nostra et tua auctoritate pacifice debeat obtinere. Non enim solus presbyter missarum solemnia vel alia divina officia potest sine ministri suffragio celebrare.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A son can preside over a church over which his father presided mediately.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

From the complaint of G., a cleric, transmitted to us, we have perceived that you delayed at present to receive him in a certain benefice of the church of N. upon the presentation of our beloved son the Abbot of Castris because a certain [E.], who was said to be his father, ministered in the aforesaid church, but after his death an intermediate person intervened upon whom the aforesaid benefice was conferred. Therefore, we command and order your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if it is so, you do not postpone admitting the aforementioned G. to the aforesaid benefice, with every occasion and appeal ceasing, the decree of the apostolic rescript being no less observed for this reason, which here detests hereditary succession in the Church of God so that it may approve canonical possession. [But if both of you cannot be present to execute these matters, let one of you nevertheless execute them.]

Filius praeesse potest ecclesiae, cui pater praefuit mediate.

Idem Archiepiscopo Cantuariensi.

Ex transmissa nobis conquestione G. clerici percepimus, quod ad dilecti filii nostri abbatis de Castris praesentationem in quodam beneficio ecclesiae de N. eum in praesenti recipere distulisti eo, quod quidam [E.], qui dicebatur pater eius, in praefata ecclesia ministravit, quo defuncto media intercessit persona, cui praedictum beneficium est collatum. Ideoque fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus atque praecipimus, quatenus, si est ita, praenominatum G. ad praefatum beneficium admittere non postponas omni occasione et appellatione cessantibus, non ideo minus observato apostolici rescripti decreto, quod hic successionem in ecclesia Dei hereditariam detestatur, ut canonicam approbet possessionem. [Porro si his exsequendis ambo non poteritis interesse, alter vestrum nihilominus exsequatur.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A son can preside over a church in which his father ministered without a title.

The same, to the Bishop of Worcester.

Appearing in our presence, G., a cleric and bearer of the present letters, showed us in a supplicatory representation that, when he had canonically obtained the chapel of Storton and had possessed it peacefully for several years, R., a knight, despoiled him of it without judgment and justice. And when the aforementioned cleric had lodged a complaint concerning this before you, brother and fellow bishop, it was objected against him that his father had ministered in the same chapel, and he has not yet been able to recover the aforesaid chapel.

But because it pertains to our office to restrain with due severity the insolence of laymen against ecclesiastical men, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that, after the truth of the matter has been diligently investigated and learned, if it is established for you that the same cleric was cast out of the aforesaid chapel through lay power, and that his father was not the persona or perpetual vicar of the aforesaid chapel, although he sometimes ministered in it in the name of the same G., you shall not omit to restore it to him with the revenues received from it, removing another if anyone holds it, with delay, occasion, and appeal ceasing; any letters of ours that may have been obtained not prejudicing truth and justice. And you shall cause him to possess it peacefully, as it was canonically obtained. [If both of you cannot be present to execute these matters, let one, having associated with himself discreet and honorable men, nevertheless execute them.]

> Filius praeesse potest ecclesiae, in qua pater sine titulo ministravit.
>
> Idem Vigorensi Episcopo.
> Constitutus in praesentia nostra G. clericus lator praesentium supplici nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod, quum capellam de Storton. canonice fuisset adeptus, et eam pluribus annis pacifice possedisset, R. miles ipsum ea sine iudicio et iustitia spoliavit. Quumque memoratus clericus exinde apud te, frater coepiscope, deposuisset querelam, obiectum fuit ei, quod pater suus in capella ministravit eadem, et praefatam capellam nondum potuit rehabere. Quia vero ad nostrum spectat officium, insolentiam laicorum contra viros ecclesiasticos debita severitate compescere: Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate diligenter inquisita et cognita, si tibi constiterit, quod idem clericus a capella fuerit praedicta per potentiam laicalem eiectus, et quod pater eius praefatae capellae persona seu perpetuus vicarius non fuerit, licet in eadem nomine eiusdem G. quandoque ministraverit, ipsam sibi cum reditibus inde perceptis, amoto alio, si quis eam detinet, dilatione, occasione et appellatione cessantibus, restituere non omittas, literis nostris, si quae sint impetratae, veritati et iustitiae non praeiudicantibus, et ipsum sicut canonice adeptus fuit, faciatis pacifice possidere. [Si his exsequendis ambo interesse non poteritis, alter adhibitis sibi discretis viris et honestis ea nihilominus exsequatur.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: If one to whom it was granted by the Pope that he could dispense with the sons of priests concerning the immediate holding of their fathers' churches dispenses with someone, that person cannot be removed through letters of justice afterwards obtained against him.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

It was set forth to us on your part that, when formerly in response to your consultation concerning the sons of priests you received such letters from us that you could sustain in the churches that their fathers had possessed without anyone intervening those whom you knew to be of approved life and sound conduct, or whom it was established had held those churches for a long time, certain persons obtained letters to judges that, if it were established that they were the sons of priests or clerics who had held the churches immediately before them, silence should be imposed upon them concerning these matters, with appeal ceasing, and those churches should be assigned to the petitioners, although they could not show themselves to have been instituted in them by bishops.

Concerning this we respond thus to you: if through our earlier letters you dispensed with any clerics, we do not will your dispensation to be invalidated with a view to our later letters, but command that it be preserved unimpaired. But by apostolic authority we prohibit other clerics from being instituted, with a view to a lay grant and without the authority of their own pontiff, in churches subject to parochial law, or, if instituted, from remaining in them.

> Si is, cui concessum est a Papa, ut possit dispensare cum filiis sacerdotum circa ecclesias paternas immediate tenendas cum aliquo dispensat, ille per literas iustitiae postea contra eum impetratas removeri non poterit.
>
> Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.
> Ex tua nobis parte est propositum, quod, quum olim ad tuam consultationem super filiis sacerdotum tales a nobis literas recepisses, ut eos posses in ecclesiis, quas patres eorum nullo mediante possederant, sustinere, quos probatae vitae et sanae conversationis cognosceres, vel quos longo tempore illas tenuisse constaret: quidam ad iudices literas impetraverunt, ut, si constaret, eos esse filios sacerdotum vel clericorum, qui in proximo ante eos ecclesias tenuerunt, super his imponatur eis, appellatione cessante, silentium, et ecclesias istas ipsis assignent, quamvis in eis se ostendere nequeant per episcopos institutos. Super quo tibi taliter respondemus, quod, si per priores literas nostras cum aliquibus clericis dispensasti, dispensationem tuam posteriorum literarum nostrarum intuitu nolumus irritari, sed eam servari praecipimus illibatam. Alios vero clericos laicae donationis intuitu in ecclesiis parochiali iuri subiectis sine auctoritate pontificis sui institui, aut institutos in eis remanere, auctoritate apostolica prohibemus.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: If it is manifest that a son immediately succeeded his father in a church, he shall be removed from it without any reception of witnesses.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his suffragans.

Because it is prohibited by the sacred canons that any persons presume to possess ecclesiastical benefices by hereditary right, and those who were begotten during priesthood ought not to be promoted to sacred orders unless they have lived an approved life in a cloister of monks or canons regular, we command you that, if it is manifest and public that fathers exercised personatus in churches, you altogether exclude the sons from those same churches, even if they have obtained them, with appeal ceasing; nor shall they be assumed thereafter to their governance. For we do not will that a cause be brought into judgment on that account, or that witnesses even be admitted, if this is manifest.

> Si manifestum est, quod filius in ecclesia immediate successit patri, sine aliqua testium receptione ab illa removebitur.
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo et eius Suffraganeis.
>
> Quoniam est sacris canonibus prohibitum, ne qui hereditario iure ecclesiastica beneficia possidere praesumant, nec hi, qui in sacerdotio sunt geniti, nisi probate vixerint in claustro monachorum vel canonicorum regularium, ad sacros ordines debeant promoveri, vobis Praecipimus, quatenus, si manifestum et publicum fuerit, patres in ecclesiis personatus gessisse, filios ab eisdem ecclesiis, si etiam eas adepti sunt, appellatione cessante penitus excludatis, nec ad earum gubernationem ulterius assumantur. Nolumus enim, ut propterea causa in iudicium deducatur, vel testes etiam admittantur, si hoc manifestum exsistat.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: Even a legitimate son is removed from a church in which he immediately succeeded his father as vicar or rector.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

We ought to attend with the zeal of complete solicitude to extirpating successions from holy churches; it also befits you to exhibit vigilant care for this, lest we seem to be less diligent concerning the ministry of the governance undertaken if we permit that vice to sprout in churches or in ecclesiastical businesses and men. Hence it is that we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that, if any sons of priests of your province hold churches in which their fathers ministered as personae or vicars with no intervening person, you shall not delay in removing them from those churches, with contradiction and appeal ceasing, whether they were begotten during the priesthood or not.

But if there are any sons of clerics who obtained, with other persons intervening, churches that their fathers held, provided that they are suitable you will be able to sustain them in those churches; in such a way that, if one man possesses several churches that his father held and one of them can suffice for him, you shall cause him to be content with whichever one he prefers, provided that they are not such that the others are known to depend upon one of them.

> Filius etiam legitimus removetur ab ecclesia, in qua immediate successit patri vicario vel rectori.
>
> Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Ad exstirpandas successiones a sanctis ecclesiis studio totius sollicitudinis debemus intendere; te etiam ad hoc decet vigilem curam exhibere, ne circa ministerium suscepti regiminis videamur minus diligentes exsistere, si id vitium in ecclesiis vel in negotiis ecclesiasticis et viris permittimus pullulare. Hinc est, quod Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si qui filii presbyterorum provinciae tuae teneant ecclesias, in quibus patres eorum tanquam personae vel vicarii nulla persona media ministrarunt, eos, sive geniti sint in sacerdotio, sive non, ab eisdem ecclesiis, contradictione et appellatione cessantibus, non differas amovere. Si vero aliqui sint filii clericorum, qui ecclesias quas patres eorum tenuerunt, personis aliis mediis sunt adepti, eos dummodo idonei sint, in illis poteris sustinere; ita quod si unus plures ecclesias, quas pater eius tenuerat, possidet, quarum una possit sibi sufficere, ipsum una, quam maluerit, facias esse contentum, dummodo tales non sint, a quarum una reliquae, pendere noscantur.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A legitimately born son of a bishop can be promoted to orders and receive a benefice in his father's church.

Clement III, to the Archbishop of Cashel.

In addition, on your part it was reported to our ears—(And below:) Your fraternity asked us whether those begotten by pontiffs can be promoted to sacred orders if they are approved in knowledge and uprightness of morals. Let your fraternity know that, if they were procreated from lawful marriage and no other canonical impediment stands in the way, they can lawfully ascend to sacred orders and obtain a benefice in the same churches over which their parents preside or even presided.

> Filius episcopi legitime natus, promoveri potest ad ordines, et in paterna ecclesia beneficiari.

Clemens III. Cassel. Archiepiscopo.

Ad haec ex parte tua nostris auribus est relatum (Et infra:) Quod a nobis fraternitas tua requisivit, an a pontificibus generati valeant ad sacros ordines promoveri, si scientia fuerint et morum honestate probabiles: sciat fraternitas tua, quod, si ex legitimo sint matrimonio procreati, nec aliud canonicum obviat, licite possunt ad sacros ordines ascendere, et in eisdem ecclesiis, in quibus praesunt vel etiam praefuerunt genitores eorum, beneficium obtinere.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A son cannot be vicar of the church in which his father was the immediately preceding rector.

The same.

Michael, priest of Saint Germanus, showed by a complaint transmitted to us that, when he had canonically obtained the church of Saint I. of Corona in your diocese, M., the son of Antony, who held the personatus of that church immediately before him, asserts that its vicarage pertains to himself.

Therefore, because successions to prelacies and ecclesiastical dignities in a church are condemned by the canonical statutes, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, after the truth has been more diligently investigated, if it is established for you that the same M. was the son of Antony, who, as we set forth above, held the personatus of the same church immediately before, you shall not postpone imposing perpetual silence upon him concerning the same vicarage, with every contradiction and appeal ceasing.

Non potest filius esse vicarius illius ecclesiae, in qua pater proximus fuit rector.

Idem.

Michael presbyter de sancto Germano transmissa nobis conquestione monstravit, quod, quum ecclesiam sancti I. de Corona tuae dioecesis canonice sit adeptus, M. filius Antonii, qui proximo ante ipsius ecclesiae habuit personatum, ad se vicariam ipsius asserit pertinere. Quia igitur in ecclesia successiones in praelaturis et dignitatibus ecclesiasticis statutis canonicis damnantur, Fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, veritate diligentius inquisita si constiterit tibi, ipsum M. fuisse filium Antonii, qui eiusdem ecclesiae, sicut praemisimus, habuit proximo personatum, omni contradictione et appellatione cessantibus, ei super eadem vicaria perpetuum silentium imponere non postponas.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: One illegitimately begotten, even from a wife, cannot without dispensation be promoted to orders or benefices.

The same.

We have received the letters of your affection containing the vow and origin of the bearer of the present letters. Indeed, we have understood that H., begotten during priesthood, born and conceived of a lawful wife, moved by a laudable vow desired from childhood to minister to the Lord in the clerical office. But although paternal incontinence is known to be repelled in every way from the sons, and for the caution of priests their sons are removed from sacred orders according to the canonical enactment, it is not expedient that we assent to the prayers of persons supplicating in such matters in such a way that we seem more easily to furnish to others some hope of obtaining similar things. But lest, because of the affection of his petition, when he has humbly approached the Apostolic See, he should grieve that he was altogether defrauded, by the present writing we signify to you that, provided he is otherwise found worthy, we permit him to be ordained as a cleric and promoted to an ecclesiastical benefice from which he can suitably be supported.

> Illegitime genitus, etiam de uxore, sine dispensatione ad ordines vel beneficia promoveri non potest.
>
> Idem.
>
> Literas dilectionis vestrae accepimus, votum latoris praesentium et eius originem continentes. Intelleximus siquidem, quod H. in sacerdotio genitus, de uxore legitima natus et conceptus, voto laudabili affectavit a pueritia ministrare Domino in officio clericali. Verum licet a filiis paterna incontinentia modis omnibus propellenda noscatur, et propter cautelam presbyterorum filii a sacris ordinibus iuxta sanctionem canonicam removentur, non expedit, ut super huiusmodi ita supplicantium precibus annuamus, quod videamur aliis impetrandi similia spem aliquam facilius impertiri. Sed ut suae postulationis affectu, quum ad sedem apostolicam humiliter accesserit, ex toto defraudari se non doleat, praesenti scripto vobis significamus, quod, si tamen aliter dignus inventus fuerit, permittimus ipsum ordinari in clericum, et ad ecclesiasticum beneficium, unde commode sustentari valeat, promoveri.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: An illegitimate person ought not to be prebended in his father's church.

Innocent III.

Since you ought to love the beauty of the house of God [and the place of the tabernacle of his glory, you must with careful solicitude take precautions lest in the churches committed to you those things be rashly presumed that seem either to extinguish in them the lamp of religion or to stain the purity of the Lord's ministers. For you should know that it has reached our hearing that certain persons established in your dioceses, publicly contracting with women, do not fear to assume ecclesiastical dignities; and that certain canons of churches, whose loins according to the word of evangelical truth ought to be girded and in whose hands the lamps of good work ought to burn, have rotted to such a degree in the filth of luxury that they are not even willing to veil their ignominy and shame. Rather, they draw with them to the ministry of the altar, of which they render themselves unworthy, sons received from an infamous generation—as though their incontinence were not known sufficiently to the reproach of the clerical order unless testimony speaking against them from the sons brought forth in public were proved by continual display.

And since in churches in which clerics of this kind have a place many things are enormously attempted, while in those churches the leavened kinship of fathers and sons, and even of nephews and relatives by affinity, ministers in a disorderly manner—because, with carnal love prevailing, spiritual reverence has grown cold among them, whence not one refrains on account of another from doing anything through their insolence—] sometimes games, etc. (cf. c. 12, On the Life and Uprightness of Clerics, III.1.)

You shall also not permit prebends to be conferred upon the sons of canons in the same churches of which their fathers are canons, since it is indecorous that in the office of the altar an illegitimate son minister to an unchaste father, in which the only-begotten Son of God is offered as a victim to the eternal Father for the salvation of the human race. But the aforementioned, etc. (cf. c. 12, On the Life and Uprightness of Clerics, III.1.) [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the sixth day before the Ides of January, in the ninth year, 1207.]

> Illegitimus in ecclesia paterna praebendari non debet.
>
> Innocentius III.
>
> Quum decorem domus Dei [et locum tabernaculi gloriae suae diligere vos oporteat, accurata vobis est sollicitudine praecavendum, ne in commissis vobis ecclesiis illa temere praesumantur, quae vel in eis lampadem religionis exstinguere, vel munditiam videantur ministrorum Domini maculare. Ad nostram siquidem noveritis audientiam pervenisse, quod quidam in vestris dioecesibus constituti publice cum mulieribus contrahentes, ecclesiasticas non verentur suscipere dignitates, et nonnullarum ecclesiarum canonici, quorum lumbos iuxta verbum evangelicae veritatis deceret esse praecinctos, ac in eorum manibus lucernas bonae operationis ardere, usque adeo luxuriae sordibus putruerunt, quod nec etiam ignominiam suam velint turpitudinemque velare, quin immo filios ex infami generatione susceptos ad ministerium altaris, quo se reddunt indignos, indignius secum trahunt, ac si non satis in opprobrium ordinis clericalis eorum incontinentia foret cognita, nisi natorum in publicum deductorum loquentiumqne testimonium contra ipsos, esset ostensione sedula comprobata. Quumque in ecclesiis, in quibus huiusmodi clerici locum habent, multa enormiter attententur, dum in eisdem fermentata patrum et filiorum, nepotum etiam et affinium parentela inordinate ministrat, quia videlicet, amore praedominante carnali, reverentia spiritualis tepuit inter ipsos, unde nequaquam unus quodlibet facere propter alium praetermittit per insolentiam eorundem,] interdum ludi etc. (cf. c. 12. de vita et hon. cler. III. 1.) Filiis quoque canonicorum praebendas in eisdem ecclesiis conferri non sinatis, quarum sunt canonici patres eorum, quum indecorum sit, ut in altaris officio illegitimus filius impudico patri ministret, in quo unigenitus Dei filius aeterno patri pro salute humani generis victimatur. Praelibatam vero etc. (cf. c. 12. de vita et hon. cler. III. 1.) [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. VI. Id. Ian. Ao. IX. 1207.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: If an illegitimate person, especially a spurious son, is instituted in a church in which his father is instituted, the institution is not valid, and the one instituting is to be suspended from his benefices.

The same, in the General Council.

To abolish the worst corruption that has taken root in many churches, we firmly prohibit the sons of canons, especially spurious sons, from becoming canons in secular churches in which their fathers are instituted; and if something has been presumed to the contrary, we decree that it is not valid. But those who presume to make such persons canons, as has been said, shall be suspended from their benefices.

> Si illegitimus, maxime filius spurius, instituitur in ecclesia, in qua institutus est pater, institutio non valet, et instituens a suis beneficiis suspendatur.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Ad abolendam pessimam, quae in pluribus inolevit ecclesiis, curruptelam, firmiter inhibemus, ne canonicorum filii, maxime spurii, canonici fiant in saecularibus ecclesiis, in quibus instituti sunt patres eorum, et si fuerit contra praesumptum, decernimus non valere. Qui vero tales, ut dictum est, canonicare praesumpserint, a suis beneficiis suspendantur.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: No one other than the Pope dispenses so that a son may immediately succeed in his father's church.

Honorius III.

Our beloved son G., Provost of the church of Saint Mary in Bruges, showed by a petition transmitted to us that Virgil, a priest of the diocese of Tournai, holds to the scandal of many a certain church having the care of souls, which his father held with no one intervening, contrary to the statutes both of the Lateran Council and of the General Council. The same provost diligently admonished him to resign it; but Virgil, asserting that H. of good memory, Archbishop of Reims and then legate of the Apostolic See, dispensed with him, contradicts the doing of this, although a dispensation was not granted to him by the Roman Pontiff.

Wherefore, with the assent of the procurators of both parties, we command your discretion that, after the parties have been summoned and the matters set forth on each side heard, notwithstanding any dispensation that did not emanate from the Apostolic See, you establish what is canonical, appeal being set aside.

> Alius quam Papa non dispensat, ut filius in ecclesia paterna immediate succedat.
> Honorius III.
>
> Dilectus filius G. praepositus ecclesiae sanctae Mariae in Brugis transmissa nobis petitione monstravit, quod, quum Virgilius presbyter Tornacensis dioecesis quandam ecclesiam, curam animarum habentem, quam nullo medio habuit pater eius, tam contra Lateranensis quam generalis concilii statuta obtineat in scandalum plurimorum, idem ipsum monuit diligenter, ut resignaret eandem; sed idem asserens, quod bonae memoriae H. Remensis archiepiscopus, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, dispensavit cum eo, id efficere contradicit, quamquam cum eo non fuerit per Romanum Pontificem dispensatum. Quocirca discretioni vestrae de utriusque partis procuratorum assensu mandamus, quatenus, partibus convocatis, et auditis hinc inde propositis, non obstante dispensatione aliqua, quae a sede apostolica non manaverit, quod canonicum fuerit appellatione postposita statuatis.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: An illegitimate person cannot without the Pope's dispensation be promoted to a dignity, personatus, or benefice having the care of souls.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of Tours.

The uprightness of the Church is excessively deformed in your province by the fact that the sons of priests and others not lawfully born are promoted without a dispensation of the Apostolic See to dignities and personatus, and to other benefices having the care of souls. Wherefore we command that, after the aforesaid persons have been altogether removed from the personatus, dignities, and benefices of this kind, you cause them to be conferred upon suitable persons by those to whom you know their collation belongs by law. And we more strictly prohibit this from being presumed hereafter.

> Illegitimus absque dispensatione Papae ad dignitatem, vel personatum, vel beneficium curatum promoveri non potest.
> Gregorius IX. Turonensi Archiepiscopo.

> Nimis in tua provincia ecclesiae deformatur honestas ex eo, quod filii sacerdotum et alii non legitime nati ad dignitates et personatus, et alia beneficia curam animarum habentia sine dispensatione sedis apostolicae promoventur. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus praedictis personis a personatibus, et dignitatibus, et huiusmodi beneficiis prorsus amotis, ea personis idoneis conferri facias per illos, ad quos collationem ipsorum de iure noveris pertinere. Et ne id de cetero praesumatur, districtius inhibemus.

Title XVIII: On Slaves Not to Be Ordained and Their Manumission

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A slave ought not to be ordained before full manumission.

From the Council of Toledo.

Laymen are furthermore to be instructed so that they know that they can in no way manumit in another place their own slaves whom they have decided are to be gathered into the Lord's camp, except in the sacrosanct church according to the order indicated above. For how can clerics obtain liberty outside the church, who are strangers to worldly law and who are forbidden to proceed to secular judgment? How are they absolved from the yoke of servitude by secular judgment?

But perhaps someone will say: one is not permitted to become a cleric unless, before clerical status, he obtains the dignity of free birth. He says what is truly true. And therefore, what can be invalidated or disparaged ought to be guarded against. Moreover, not only those who are to be promoted to clerical order are to be manumitted in the church, but also those whom anyone wishes to emancipate for the remedy of his soul, because it is so written in the pact of the Franks.

> DE SERVIS NON ORDINANDIS ET EORUM MANUMISSIONE.
>
> Servus ante plenam manumissionem ordinari non debet.
>
> Ex concilio Toletano.
>
> Instruendi sunt praeterea laici, ut sciant, quod nullatenus alio loco manumittere proprios possunt servos, quos dominicis castris adgregari decreverunt, nisi in sacrosancta ecclesia ordine supra notato. Quomodo enim clerici extra ecclesiam libertatem consequi possunt, qui a lege mundana extranei sunt, et quibus interdicitur, ne ad saeculare iudicium procedant, quomodo saeculari iudicio a iugo servitutis absolvuntur? Sed Forte dicet, aliquis: clericus fieri non permittitur, nisi ante clericatum ingenuitatis dignitate potiatur. Revera verum dicit. Et ideo quod infirmari vel vituperari potest praecaveri debet. Non solum autem qui ad clericatus ordinem promovendi sunt in ecclesia manumittendi sunt, verum etiam ii, quos quisque pro remedio animae suae emancipari vult, quia sic scriptum est in pacto Francorum.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A slave ordained without his master's permission is deposed and restored to his master.

From the same council.

Concerning the ordination of slaves, who everywhere are indiscriminately promoted to ecclesiastical grades, it pleased everyone that agreement with the sacred canons [ought to be made, and] it was established that henceforth no bishop should presume to promote them to sacred orders unless they first obtain liberty from their own masters. And if any slave, fleeing his master or lying hidden, or employing witnesses hired by payment or corrupted, or through any cunning or fraud, reaches ecclesiastical grades, it is decreed that he be deposed and his master receive him.

But if a grandfather or father, migrating from one country to another, begets a son in the same province, and that son is reared there and promoted to ecclesiastical grades while ignorant whether he is a slave, and his master, afterwards coming, acquires him by the laws, it is enacted that, if his master wills to give him liberty, he shall remain in his grade. But if his master wills to draw him away from the Lord's camp by the chain of servitude, he shall lose his grade, because according to the sacred canons a person remaining of lowly condition cannot discharge the dignity of the priesthood.

> Servus sine licentia domini ordinatus deponitur, et domino restituitur.
> Ex eodem.
>
> De servorum ordinatione, qui passim ad gradus ecclesiasticos indiscrete promoventur, placuit omnibus cum sacris canonibus concordare [debere, et] Statutum est, ut nullus episcoporum deinceps ad sacros ordines eos promovere praesumat, nisi prius a dominis propriis libertatem fuerint consecuti. Et si quilibet servus fugiens dominum suum, aut latitans, aut adhibitis testibus munere conductis vel corruptis, aut qualibet calliditate vel fraude ad gradus pervenerit ecclesiasticos, decretum est, ut deponatur, et eius dominus eum recipiat. Si vero avus vel pater ab alia patria in aliam migrans, in eadem provincia filium genuerit, et ipse filius ibidem educatus et ad gradus ecclesiasticos promotus fuerit, et utrum servus sit ignoraverit, et postea veniens dominus illius legibus eum acquisierit, sancitum est, ut si dominus eius illi libertatem dare voluerit, in gradu suo permaneat. Si vero eum catena servitutis a castris dominis abstrahere voluerit, gradum amittat, quia iuxta sacros canones vilis persona manens sacerdotii dignitate fungi non potest.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A slave manumitted by the church can be ordained, and what he acquires after his death will belong to the church that manumitted him; if he accuses it or testifies against it, he is deprived of liberty and order.

From the same council.

It shall be permitted to constitute servants of the church as priests and deacons throughout the parishes, [provided nevertheless that rectitude of life and probity of morals commend them], in such a way that they first receive through manumission the status of liberty, [and thereafter succeed to ecclesiastical honors. For it is irreligious for those who receive the dignity of sacred order to remain bound by servitude.]

§ 1. But whatever shall have been granted to such persons through liberty, or become due by succession, or been conferred [by] anyone [in any] manner, it shall not be permitted to them to transmit anything from it to outside persons; rather, after their death all things ought to pertain to the right of the church by which they were manumitted.

§ 2. To these persons, as [also] to the other freedmen of the church, access to accusing or testifying against the church shall be closed. If they aspire to do this, let them lack not only the benefit of liberty but also [also] the grade of honor that they merited not by dignity of nature but by necessity of the time.

Servus ab ecclesia manumissus ordinari potest, et quod acquirit post suum obitum erit ecclesiae manumittentis; quam si accusat, vel contra eam testificatur libertate et ordine privetur.

Ex eodem.

De famulis ecclesiae constituere presbyteros et diaconos per parochias liceat, [quos tamen vitae rectitudo et probitas morum commendat,] ita tamen, ut antea manumissi statum recipiant libertatis, [et denuo ad ecclesiasticos honores succedant. Irreligiosum est enim, obligatos exsistere servitute, qui sacri ordinis suscipiunt dignitatem.] § 1. Quicquid autem talibus aut per libertatem concessum, aut successione exstiterit debitum, aut [a] quolibet [quoquo] modo collatum, eis quippiam inde in personas extraneas transmittere non licebit, sed omnia ad ius ecclesiae, a qua manumissi sunt, post eorum obitum debeant pertinere. § 2. Quibus, sicut [et] ceteris ecclesiae libertis, accusandi vel testificandi adversus ecclesiam aditus praecludatur, ad quod si adspiraverint non solum libertatis beneficio careant, sed etiam [et] honoris gradu, quem non dignitate naturae, sed necessitate temporis meruerunt.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A master can retain spiritual services in a slave whom he manumits.

From the Council at Alichi.

Let no cleric be promoted to the grade of priesthood except as is contained in the canons. For if, from love of God, anyone has chosen one of his slaves, taught him letters, endowed him with liberty, and through intercession with the bishop caused him to be ordained priest, [and according to the Apostles gave him food and clothing], but that man afterwards, raised up into pride, refuses to observe the canonical hours and sing psalms for his master and to obey him justly, saying that he is free, and is unwilling to do so and as though free becomes the man of whomever he wishes, this holy synod anathematizes him and judges that he is to be barred from holy communion until he comes to his senses and obeys his master according to the canonical precepts.

But if with an obstinate mind he also scorns this, having been accused before the bishop who ordained him, let him be degraded and become the slave of that man—that is, of his own master—as he was born. But whoever keeps such a man with himself and, after he has heard the aforesaid matter concerning him, does not return him to his master or cast him away from himself, whether bishop, count, cleric, or layman, bound by fellowship in his anathema, shall undergo the penalty of excommunication.

Dominus in servo, quem manumittit, potest spirituales operas retinere.

Ex concilio apud Alichi.

Nullus clericus ad gradum presbyterii promoveatur, nisi ut scriptum in canonibus habetur. Si enim propter Dei dilectionem quis de servis suis quemquam elegerit, et docuerit literas, et donaverit libertati, et per intercessionem erga episcopum ipsum in presbyterum fecerit ordinari, [et secundum Apostolos victum et vestitum ei donaverit,] ille autem postea in superbiam elatus, domino suo canonicas horas observare et psallere renuerit, et eis iuste obedire, dicens, se liberum esse, noluerit, et quasi libere cuius vult homo fiat: hoc sancta synodus anathematizat, et illum a sancta communione arceri iudicat, donec resipiscat, et domino suo obediat secundum canonica praecepta. Sin autem obstinato animo et hoc contempserit, accusatus apud episcopum, qui ordinaverit eum, degradetur, et fiat servus illius, id est domini sui, sicut natus fuerit. Quisquis vero talem secum habuerit, et postquam rem illius praedictam audierit, et domino suo non reddiderit, vel a se non proiecerit, sive episcopus, sive comes, sive clericus, sive laicus, anathematis illius societate innodatus poenam excommunicationis ducet.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Spurious sons or slaves ought not to be ordained.

Alexander III, to the Archbishop of Tours.

Your fraternity consulted us whether it is permitted to you to promote spurious sons and slaves to orders. Concerning this, indeed, we respond thus to your consultation: you ought to ordain neither spurious sons nor slaves; and, if you remember, it was said to you at your consecration: "See that you do not presume to promote anyone of servile condition to orders."

> Spurii vel servi ordinari non debent.

> Alexander III. Archiepiscopo Turonensi.
>
> Consuluit nos tua fraternitas, utrum tibi liceat spurios et servos ad ordines promovere; super quo utique Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod neque spurios, neque servos ordinare debes, et, si memor es, in consecratione tibi dictum fuit: "Vide, ne quemlibet servilis conditionis ad ordines promovere praesumas."

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One manumitted by a church so that he may become a cleric and perpetually serve that church in divine things cannot transfer himself to another church; it is otherwise if he was manumitted purely. Or thus: it is otherwise if he was manumitted so that he might serve. Johannes Andreae.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Varia.

The more willingly [we respond to your inquiries, the more devoutly you venerate the Apostolic See]. (And below:) You added another question: whether the sons of those who are held to a church in servile condition, delivered by their parents to the clerical military service with the acquiescence of their masters so that they ought to serve God in the same church to which they belong, obtaining liberty on that account, can after a time leave it and transfer themselves to another.

On this point we believe that a distinction must be made: whether they were manumitted under this tenor and bound to the clerical order, that for as long as they lived they ought to furnish service to the church that manumitted them in the services of divine things, in which case permission to transfer themselves to another is to be denied to them; or whether they were manumitted absolutely and thus possess liberty to pass to another. [Given at Viterbo, on the fifth day before the Ides of June, in the year 1207.]

> Manumissus ab ecclesia, ut fiat clericus, et ipsi ecclesiae perpetuo serviat in divinis, ad aliam ecclesiam se transferre non potest; secus si pure fuerit manumissus. Vel sic: secus si fuerit manumissus, ut serviat. Io. Andr.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: The law concerning a slave made a deacon ought also to be understood concerning a subdeacon.

The same.

We wonder not a little [at your prudence that, although the consultation directed by you to us, if you take pains to inspect the canons and laws, is thought to contain almost no doubt, you took care to consult our apostolate concerning what is certain], since it is certain in the constitutions of the ancients when slaves ordained to ecclesiastical grades ought or ought not to be recalled into servitude. [Hence, because we believe that you are not ignorant of the decrees, we will your fraternity to do nothing else on this point except what is found in their enactments.]

Concerning the order of subdeacon, [nevertheless], because no express mention of it is made in the statutes of the Fathers, it seems to us that it too enjoys the same privilege as the grade of deacon. For although it was not regarded as a sacred order in the primitive Church, nevertheless, from the constitution of Gregory and Urban II, it is by no means doubted in modern times to be a sacred grade. [Given at the Lateran in the same year.]

> Ius, quod est de servo facto diacono, etiam de subdiacono debet intelligi.

> Miramur non modicum [de tua prudentia, quod, quum ad nos tua consultatio destinata, si canones et leges studeas intueri, nihil fere dubitationis continere putetur, super hoc, quod certum est, apostolatum nostrum consulere curasti,] quum certum sit in constitutionibus antiquorum, quando servi in gradus ecclesiasticos ordinati debeant in servitutem vel non debeant revocari. [Unde, quia te credimus non ignorare decreta, nil aliud fraternitatem tuam in hoc articulo facere volumus, nisi quod in eorum sanctionibus invenitur.] De subdiaconali [tamen] ordine, quia de eo non fit mentio in Patrum statutis expresse, videtur nobis, quod et is cum diaconali gradu privilegio gaudet eodem. Nam licet sacer ordo non reputaretur in ecclesia primitiva, tamen a constitutione Gregorii atque Urbani secundum moderna tempora sacer gradus esse minime dubitatur. [Datum Laterani in eodem anno.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One born of a father who is a slave and a free mother is free and is lawfully promoted.

Gregory IX, to the Archbishop of Naples.

Our beloved son G., a deacon, set forth that I., a knight, on the occasion that he asserts the deacon's father to be his man, presumes to impede him from being promoted as priest, although his mother, whose condition he ought to follow, is known to be free. Wherefore we command that, if the foregoing is established for you, you restrain the same knight from continuing an impediment of this kind.

Dilectus filius G. diaconus proposuit, quod I. miles ea occasione, quod patrem ipsius hominem suum esse proponit, licet mater sua, cuius debet imitari conditionem, libera esse noscatur, ne promoveatur in presbyterum, impedire praesumit. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si tibi constiterit de praemissis, eundem militem ab huiusmodi impedimento cessare compescas.

Title XIX: On Whether Those Bound to Render Accounts Are to Be Ordained

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: One bound to render accounts can be ordained after laying aside the burden and rendering an account, but not before.

From the Council of Carthage.

Magnus, Bishop of Augusta, said: "What seems good to your affection? Ought procurators, agents, executors, or guardians of wards to be ordained?" Bishop Gratus said: "If, after their burdens have been laid aside and their accounts rendered, the acts of their life have been approved in all things, they ought, if they have been postulated, to be furnished with the honor, with praise to God. For if, before freedom from their businesses or offices, they have been ordained by someone without consideration, the Church is defamed." Everyone said: "Rightly, indeed, has your holiness established this, and therefore such is our judgment."

DE OBLIGATIS AD RATIOCINIA ORDINANDIS, VEL NON.

Obligatus ratiociniis, deposito onere et reddita ratione, ordinari potest; prius vero non.

Ex concilio Carthaginensi.

Magnus episcopus Augustensis dixit: Quid dilectioni vestrae videtur, procuratores, et actores, et exsecutores seu curatores pupillorum si debeant ordinari? Gratus episcopus dixit: Si post deposita onera et reddita ratiocinia actus vitae ipsorum fuerint comprobati in omnibus, debent et cum laude Dei, si postulati fuerint, honore munerari. Si enim ante libertatem negotiorum vel officiorum ab aliquo sine consideratione fuerint ordinati, ecclesia infamatur. Universi dixerunt: Recte quoque, statuit sanctitas vestra, ideoque ita est nostra sententia.

Title XX: On Whether Those Maimed in Body Are to Be Ordained

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A priest who lost part of a finger in a duel can, by dispensation of his bishop, minister in his order.

Alexander III.

But concerning the priest of Campania who voluntarily offered a duel and accepted it when offered, and lost part of a finger in it, as formerly, so also now, we respond to your prudence that, since he, as we ourselves also see, has not lost so much of the finger that he cannot solemnly celebrate without scandal, after penance has been performed you can act mercifully with him and permit him to minister in his order, although his excess was very grave. [But the priest, etc.; cf. c. 7, On Homicide, V.12.]

DE CORPORE VITIATIS ORDINANDIS VEL NON.

Presbyter, qui in duello digiti partem amisit, ex dispensatione sui episcopi potest in suo ordine ministrare.

Alexander III.

De presbytero autem Campaniae, qui duellum sponte obtulit, et oblatum suscepit, et in eo partem digiti amisit, sicut olim, ita et nunc prudentiae tuae respondemus, quod, quum ipse, sicut etiam nos videmus, non perdiderit tantum de digito, quin ipse sine scandalo possit solenniter celebrare, satis potes post peractam poenitentiam cum eo misericorditer agere, et permittere ipsum in suo ordine ministrare, licet eius excessus gravis admodum exstitisset. [Presbyter autem etc. cf. c. 7. de hom. V. 12.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One having a blemish in his eye that does not cause great deformity can be promoted even to the episcopate.

The same, to the Bishop-Elect of Chichester.

When a question had been raised in the presence of us and our brothers concerning your election and that of others who were elected in certain English churches, and certain matters were objected against each of you, it was objected against you that you have a blemish in your eye and that you were the son of a canon. Hence we gave a mandate to the Archbishop of Canterbury, legate of the Apostolic See, that, because you are said to be the son of a canon, he should proceed in your promotion from abundant dispensation. But concerning the blemish that you are said to have in your eye, we commanded the aforesaid archbishop that, with the counsel of his suffragans, and especially of our venerable brothers the Bishops of Worcester and Exeter, he execute what should seem good to him as a result.

You, therefore, brother, shall take pains humbly and devoutly to request the same archbishop concerning these matters. In this, from the greatest dispensation, we have taken care solicitously to provide for you in this matter, inasmuch as we love your person with sincere charity and gladly attend, insofar as we can according to God, to your advantage and honor.

Habens in oculo maculam, quae non inducit magnam deformitatem, etiam ad episcopatum poterit promoveri.

Idem Cisterciensi Electo.

Quum de tua et aliorum electione, qui sunt in quibusdam ecclesiis Anglicanis electi, in praesentia nostra et fratrum nostrorum quaestio mota fuisset, et singulis vestris quaedam obiicerentur: tibi, quod in oculo maculam habeas, et quod filius canonici fueris, est obiectum. Unde Cantuariensi archiepiscopo apostolicae sedis legato dedimus in mandatis, ut pro eo, quod canonici filius diceris, in promotione tua ex multa dispensatione procedat. De macula vero, quam in oculo habere diceris, hoc archiepiscopo praedicto mandavimus, ut cum consilio suffraganeorum suorum, et praesertim venerabilium fratrum nostrorum Wigorniensis et Exonensis episcoporum, quod exinde sibi visum fuerit exsequatur. Tu itaque eundem archiepiscopum, frater, requirere super his studeas humiliter et devote: in quo tibi ex maxima dispensatione in hac parte sollicite curavimus providere, utpote qui personam tuam sincera caritate diligimus, et libenter, quantum secundum Deum possumus, ad tuum intendimus commodum et honorem.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One castrated in his cradle is lawfully promoted.

Clement III, to the Bishop of Varia.

On behalf of Bartholomew, a monk and deacon, a petition was presented to our apostolate that, when he had been castrated in his cradle, afterwards, devoutly serving God under a rule and an abbot, he was promoted to the order of diaconate. Hence he humbly sought that the faculty be granted to him by the Apostolic See that it be lawful for him to be ordained priest.

Indeed, since according to the statutes of the Council of Nicaea those who, while healthy, cut themselves off or desired that they be cut off by others are prohibited from entering the clerical order and, even if they are in the clergy, ought to cease, we do not believe that any impediment is brought against him so that he cannot be promoted, since he was castrated in his cradle. For he does not seem to have desired this at a time when he did not possess judgment of mind, especially since it is manifestly enacted in the canons of the Apostles that a eunuch, if he was made so through the snares of men, or was born so, or even had his male parts cut off in persecution, can, if he is worthy, be promoted as bishop. Therefore, after you have ascertained the substance of the truth, if you know that truth is present in his prayers and he is found otherwise worthy, especially since he has persevered for a long time in the monastic order, by the authority of the present letters we grant permission to promote him as priest.

> Ex parte Bartholomaei monachi et diaconi petitorium fuit nostro apostolatui praesentatum, quod, quum ipse in cunabulis sectus fuerit, postmodum sub regula et abbate devote Deo militans in diaconatus ordinem est promotus, unde suppliciter petiit facultatem sibi a sede apostolica indulgeri, ut sit ei licitum in presbyterum ordinari. Sane quum secundum statuta Nicaeni concilii illi ad clericatus ordinem prohibeantur accedere, et si etiam in clero fuerint, cessare debeant, qui se ipsos sani absciderint, vel affectaverint, ut ab aliis abscindantur, non credimus ei aliquod impedimentum afferre, quo minus possit provehi, qui in cunabulis sectus fuit; quia non videtur hoc eo tempore affectasse, quo iudicium animi non habebat, praesertim quum in canonibus Apostolorum sit manifeste sancitum, quod eunuchus, si per insidias hominum factus, vel ita natus sit, aut etiam in persecutione sint ei amputata virilia, et dignus est, possit in episcopum promoveri. Cognoscenti itaque de substantia veritatis, si precibus eius noveris veritatem inesse, et alias dignus inveniatur, maxime quum diu in ordine perseveraverit monachali, ipsum in presbyterum promovendi licentiam auctoritate praesentium indulgemus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A priest who without cause caused his male parts to be cut off, believing that he thereby merited, will, by dispensation of the bishop, be able to exercise his office apart from the ministry of the altar.

The same, to the Archbishop of Ravenna.

R., Archpriest of Saint Stephen of Longasco, signified to us that B., a priest, believing that he was furnishing service to God, caused his male parts to be amputated. But since the same archpriest is burdened with old age and is unable to do without the aforesaid priest, he humbly supplicated us that we ought to grant the priest permission to minister in those things that pertain to a priest apart from the Mass. Wherefore we command that you diligently inquire into the truth and, if you find the already-mentioned priest otherwise worthy of God, relying upon our authority and your own, grant him the priestly office without any ministry of the altar, as you shall see to be expedient.

> Sacerdos, qui sine causa virilia sibi fecit abscindi, credens inde mereri de dispensatione episcopi suum officium, praeter altaris ministerium, poterit exercere.

> Significavit nobis R. archipresbyter sancti Stephani de Longasco, quod B. presbyter, credens se obsequium praestare Deo, fecit sibi virilia amputari. Sed quum idem archipresbyter sit senectute gravatus, nec relinquere valeat presbyterum memoratum, nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut ei concedere debeamus, ea, quae praeter missam ad sacerdotem pertinent, ministrare. Quocirca mandamus, quatenus inquiras diligenter veritatem, et, si iam dictum presbyterum alias Deo dignum inveneris, ei sacerdotale officium absque omni altaris ministerio, auctoritate nostra fretus et tua, prout videris expedire, concedas.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A priest who for a just cause caused his male parts to be cut off can exercise the priestly office as before.

Innocent III.

On behalf of our beloved son M., a priest, it was set forth in our hearing that, when he felt the danger of leprosy threatening him, on the counsel of a physician he caused his male parts to be cut off so that he could be freed from so grave an affliction of illness, and he humbly sought from us that we provide for him concerning execution of his office. Therefore, because the canons of the holy Fathers do not prohibit him from the ministry of the sacred altar, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that, if it is so and the aforesaid M. is otherwise suitable to execute the office of his ministry, relying upon apostolic authority you grant him free faculty to do so, notwithstanding any contradiction or appeal. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Ides of February, 1198.]

> Sacerdos, qui ex iusta causa fecit sibi virilia abscindi, potest, ut prius, sacerdotale officium exercere.

> Ex parte dilecti filii M. presbyteri fuit in audientia nostra propositum, quod, quum sibi sentiret leprae periculum imminere, de consilio medici virilia fecit sibi abscindi, ut posset a tam gravi infirmitatis vitio liberari, et ut provideremus ei super exsecutione sui officii, a nobis humiliter postulavit. Quoniam igitur canones sanctorum Patrum hunc a sacri altaris ministratione non prohibent, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, et memoratus M. est alias idoneus, ut sui ministerii officium exsequatur, nullius contradictione vel appellatione obstante, auctoritate fretus apostolica liberam ei tribuas facultatem. [Datum Laterani IV. Id. Febr. 1198.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One maimed in a hand, if promoted as abbot, is deposed from the abbacy.

The same, to the Bishop of Mileto.

Appearing in our presence, you explained to us that I., your former predecessor, promoted H. as abbot, not knowing that he was maimed in one hand. But because the abbot himself is known to lack his left hand, you wished to be taught by our response what is to be done concerning this. We therefore respond thus to your fraternity: since, because of so enormous a defect, he cannot be promoted to sacred orders, and he fraudulently kept silent about it at his promotion, he is not undeservedly to be removed from the office of the abbacy. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fifth day before the Kalends of July, 1198.]

> Mutilatus manu, si promotus fuerit in abbatem, ab abbatia deponitur.
> Idem Militensi Episcopo.

Quia vero abbas ipse noscitur sinistra carere, quid super hoc agendum sit, nostra voluisti responsione doceri. Nos igitur fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus quod, quum pro tam enormi defectu ad sacros non possit ordines promoveri, et ipse in promotione sua id tacuerit fraudulenter, ab abbatiae officio est non immerito amovendus. [Dat. Romae ap. S. Petr. V. Kal. Iul. 1198.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: One lacking the nail of his thumb, provided that he is strong in the thumb, is lawfully promoted to the priesthood.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Angoulême.

Thomas, a monk of Saint Amantius of Brixia, set forth before us that, when he was in his boyhood years, a certain iron bar, falling by chance upon the thumb of his right hand, tore the nail from it. But since, as he asserts, he desires to serve the Lord in the priestly office, he humbly supplicated us that we command you, who are his diocesan bishop, to promote him as priest. Wherefore we command your fraternity that, if he is capable in that thumb of breaking the Eucharist and no other canonical impediment stands in the way, you shall not omit because of a deformity of this kind to promote him to the order of priest.

> Carens ungula pollicis, dummodo sit fortis in pollice, licite ad sacerdotium promovetur.

> Thomas Monachus sancti Amantii de Brixia proposuit coram nobis, quod, quum in annis puerilibus esset constitutus, quaedam barra ferrea super dextrae suae pollicem fortuito casu cadens, ungulam avulsit ab eo. Quum autem desideret, sicut asserit, in sacerdotali officio Domino famulari, nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut per te, qui eius dioecesanus exsistis, promoveri eum in sacerdotem mandaremus. Quocirca fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus, si ad frangendum eucharistiam sit in pollice ipso potens, et aliud canonicum non obsistat, propter deformitatem huiusmodi non dimittas, quin eum ad ordinem promoveas sacerdotis.

Title XXI: On Bigamists Not to Be Ordained

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It is brief.

From the Council of Orléans.

Let bigamists, penitents, or husbands of repudiated women not ascend to the priesthood.

> DE BIGAMIS NON ORDINANDIS.
>
> Breve est.
>
> Ex Concilio Aurelianensi.
>
> Ut bigami, vel poenitentes, vel repudiatarum mariti, ad sacerdotium non ascendant.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: No dispensation is granted to a bigamist who has been ordained to sacred orders, and the one ordaining will be deprived of the power of ordaining unless a dispensation is granted to him.

Lucius III, to the Archbishop of Spalato.

Concerning the matter on which your fraternity asked us what is to be done about bigamists, we respond thus to your inquiry: those who ordain them are to be deprived of the power and office of ordaining, and those ordained, if they were promoted to sacred orders, are to be deprived of their orders for this reason, because it is not permitted to dispense contrary to the Apostle with bigamists so that they may be promoted to sacred orders or, if promoted, may remain in them in any way. But a dispensation can be employed with the one ordaining so that he is not deprived of the power and office of ordaining. [Concerning one simoniacally, etc.; cf. c. 22, On Simony, V.2.]

> Cum bigamo, qui ordinatus est ad sacros, non dispensatur, et ordinator privabitur potestate ordinandi, nisi cum eo fuerit dispensatum.
>
> Lucius III. Spal. Archiepiscopo.
>
> Super eo, quod a nobis tua fraternitas quid faciendum sit de bigamis requisivit, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod ordinatores eorum potestate et officio ordinandi, et ordinati, si ad sacros ordines fuerint promoti, ordinibus eis ideo sunt privandi, quia in bigamis contra Apostolum dispensare non licet, ut debeant ad sacros ordines promoveri, vel in eis, si promoti fuerint, possint aliquatenus remanere. In ordinatore autem potest dispensatio adhiberi, ut ordinandi potestate et officio non privetur. [De simoniace etc. cf. c. 22. de sim. V. 2.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A bigamist is not ordained, whether his wife is living or dead.

Celestine III.

Concerning bigamist priests [however] and husbands of widows, we enact altogether the same: that they ought not to be admitted to the celebration of divine things whether their wives are living or dead, especially since this is alien to the doctrine of the Apostle and the institutions of the Church.

> Bigamus, uxore vivente, vel mortua, non ordinatur.
> Coelestinus III.
>
> De bigamis [autem] presbyteris et viduarum maritis idem sancimus omnino, ut nec viventibus uxoribus, nec defunctis, ad divinorum debeant celebrationem admitti, maxime quum a doctrina sit Apostoli et institutionibus ecclesiae alienum.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who, after his wife's death, was promoted to sacred orders and then contracted de facto with a second woman and knew her carnally incurs the penalty of bigamy, although he is not a bigamist.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Regensburg.

Recently by us—(And below: [cf. c. 29, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V.39.]) The third and final point of the inquiry seemed to contain no small question, because in contracting marriages it is not the effect of law but the purpose of the mind that is regarded; hence infamy accompanies the one who has two wives at the same time. This seems in part to be referred to the deed, just as what is read in the canon concerning a priest who is held by unlawful nuptials; by the same censure such persons seem to be reckoned among bigamists.

On the other side, however, it stands in the way that truth is to be preferred to opinion, and that according to the foregoing one who had no wife would have to be reckoned a bigamist, which would occur if someone contracted de facto with different women to whom by law he could not be joined matrimonially. We, however, respond to you in this question that, since it is not permitted to dispense with clerics of this kind as with bigamists—clerics who, insofar as it lay in them, matrimonially joined second women to themselves—although in truth they are not bigamists, this is not because of a defect of the sacrament but because of the disposition of intention with the deed following upon it. [Given at the Lateran, on the seventeenth day before the Kalends of June, 1199.]

> Qui mortua uxore promotus ad sacros, cum secunda de facto contraxit, et cognovit, bigamiae poenam incurrit, licet non sit bigamus.
> Innocentius III. Ratispa Episcopo.
>
> Nuper a nobis (Et infra: [cf. c. 29. de sent. exc. V. 39.]) Tertius et ultimus inquisitionis articulus videbatur habere non modicum quaestionis, quoniam, quum in matrimoniis contrahendis non iuris effectus, sed animi destinatio attendatur, unde illum comitatur infamia, qui duas simul habet uxores, quod partim ad factum convenit retorqueri, sicut et quod in canone legitur de presbytero, qui non legalibus nuptiis detinetur, eadem censura tales videntur inter bigamos reputandi, licet obviet ex adverso, quod opinioni sit veritas praeferenda, et quod iuxta praemissa qui nullam uxorem habuit foret bigamus reputandus, quod contingeret, si quis de facto contraheret cum diversis, quibus de iure non posset matrimonialiter copulari. Nos autem in hac quaestione tibi respondemus, quod, quum huiuscemodi clericis, qui, quantum in ipsis fuit, secundas mulieres sibi matrimonialiter coniunxerunt, tanquam cum bigamis non liceat dispensari, licet in veritate bigami non exsistant, non propter sacramenti defectum, sed propter affectum intentionis cum opere subsecuto. [Dat. Lat. XVII. Kal. Iun. 1199.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: One who contracted with a virgin, although she had previously been espoused by another, is not judged a bigamist.

The same, to the Bishop of Metz.

The debt of the pastoral office—(And below: [cf. c. 4, On Baptism, III.42.]) The second point of your doubt contained the question whether one who matrimonially joined to himself a woman who had been led home by another man but not known carnally by him can be promoted to the priesthood.

Although one who has taken as wife a woman left by another, whether she had been known carnally by him or remained unknown, seems to have taken a widow as wife, inasmuch as her husband was dead when he married her—just as he seems to be a bigamist who lawfully contracted with two wives, whether he knew neither carnally or only one of them, because he was the husband of two wives—we nevertheless have decided to respond thus to your fraternity.

There are two things in marriage, namely the consent of minds and the mingling of bodies. One of them signifies charity, which consists in spirit between God and the just soul, to which pertains what the Apostle says: "He who cleaves to God is one spirit with him." The other signifies the conformity that consists in flesh between Christ and the holy Church, to which pertains what the Evangelist testifies: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Therefore, that marriage which has not been consummated by the mingling of bodies does not pertain to signifying that marriage which was contracted between Christ and the Church through the mystery of the incarnation. Thus Paul, expounding what the first-formed man had said—"This now is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh, and for this reason a man shall leave father and mother and shall cleave to his wife, and the two shall be in one flesh"—immediately adds: "But I say that this is a great sacrament in Christ and the Church."

Therefore, since because of a defect of the sacrament it is prohibited that a bigamist or husband of a widow presume to be promoted to sacred orders—because neither is she the one woman of one man, nor is he the one man of one woman—certainly, where the mingling of bodies is lacking between spouses of this kind, the seal of this sacrament is not lacking. Hence, one who married a woman who had been married by another man but by no means known carnally by him, because neither she nor he divided their flesh among several persons, ought not on this account to be impeded from being promoted to the priesthood. [Given at Faenza, on the fifth day before the Kalends of September, in the ninth year, 1206.]

Textual note: The source prints non deest huiusmodi signaculum sacramenti ("the seal of this sacrament is not lacking"), although the immediately preceding argument may appear to call for the opposite. The printed reading, also present in the Friedberg-derived reference, is retained.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who has had several concubines is not for that reason a bigamist.

The same, to the Archbishop of Lyon, legate of the Apostolic See.

Because human understanding frequently fails concerning the least [and the greatest matters, it belongs to a prudent man to inquire where a scruple of doubt occurs]. Indeed, you sought to be taught by the Apostolic See whether priests successively having several concubines are to be judged bigamists, [so that you cannot dispense with them as irregular persons concerning execution of their office]. (And below:) To this we have decided to respond [thus]: since the aforesaid priests, whether at one or at different times, had several concubines, they did not incur the irregularity of bigamy. You will be able to dispense with them, as men marked by simple fornication, concerning execution of the priestly office, [if they take care to live continently. Concerning priests, etc. Given at Segni, on the fifth day before the Nones of October, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1213.]

Latin source headnote: A subdeacon who contracted with a widow and knew her carnally incurs the penalty of bigamy, although he is not a bigamist.

The same.

It was by us—(And below:) But the man who, constituted in the order of subdiaconate, took a widow as wife only de facto, because by law he could not do so, certainly did not become a bigamist. Nor can he in truth be called the husband of a widow, since no marital bond was contracted between him and her. Nevertheless, contrary to the doctrine of the Apostle, it is not permitted to dispense with him as though with the husband of a widow, not because of a defect of the sacrament but because of the disposition of intention with the deed following upon it.

Subdiaconus, qui cum vidua contraxit, et eam cognovit, bigamiae poenam incurrit, licet bigamus non sit.

Sed nec viduae potest in veritate dici maritus, quum inter ipsum et illam non fuerit vinculum maritale contractum. Cum eo tamen contra doctrinam Apostoli, tanquam cum marito viduae, dispensare non licet, non propter sacramenti defectum, sed propter affectum intentionis cum opere subsecuto.

Title XXII: On Foreign Clerics

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Those from overseas and very remote places ought to prove their ordination through the seals of five bishops.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Le Mans.

Your fraternity decided to consult us concerning what is to be done about clerics who, ordained in remote regions, display letters of those by whom they claim hands were imposed upon them, when it remains uncertain whether the seals that they present are those of bishops. We therefore respond to your consultation by notice of the present letters that it is safer for the statutes of the ancient Fathers to be observed in these matters than for anything new to be established.

It was established concerning those from overseas that they be fortified by the testimony of at least five bishops concerning their ordination, which we believe is also to be observed concerning others if they are similarly unknown, yet in such a way that they are held under suspension for some time, during which those seeing them may be more fully instructed concerning their conduct. Inquiry also ought to be made concerning the lower orders, because it could happen that, with some omitted, they made a leap. These matters having been completed, if they are found worthy, a dispensation can be made concerning them. [But concerning that, etc.; cf. c. 15, On the Office of a Delegate, I.29.]

DE CLERICIS PEREGRINIS.

Ultramarini et valde remoti ordinationem suam probare debent per quinque episcoporum sigilla.

Alexander III. Cenomanensi Episcopo.

Tua nos duxit fraternitas consulendos, quid sit agendum de clericis, qui in remotis regionibus ordinati literas eorum ostendunt, a quibus sibi proponunt manus impositas, et utrum episcoporum sigilla sint, quae repraesentant, incertum exsistit. Tuae igitur consultationi significatione praesentium respondemus, tutius esse, ut in his statuta Patrum veterum observentur, quam novum aliquid statuatur. Statutum autem est de transmarinis, ut ad minus quinque episcoporum super ordinatione sua testimonio muniantur, quod in aliis, si similiter sunt incogniti, credimus observandum, ita tamen ut in suspensione aliquanto tempore habeantur in quo videntes plenius de actibus instruantur ipsorum. Sed et de inferioribus ordinibus inquiri oportet, quia posset contingere, ut aliquibus praetermissis saltum fecissent. His autem peractis, si digni inventi fuerint, circa eos poterit dispensari. [Super eo vero etc. cf. c. 15. de off. deleg. I. 29.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A foreign cleric who swears that he was ordained, unless he proves it otherwise, will neither be received in that order nor promoted to higher orders.

Innocent III, to the Patriarch of Constantinople.

Among four—(And below: [cf. c. 8, On Greater Authority and Obedience, I.33.]) Your fraternity again consulted us whether you ought to promote to higher orders clerics coming to you without letters from those who ordained them and offering to furnish a corporal oath that they are constituted in any one of the ecclesiastical orders. We therefore respond thus to your inquiry: unless their canonical ordination is established for you through suitable arguments, you ought neither to receive them in those orders nor to promote them to greater orders, especially before their conduct has been approved. [To be taught also, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the fourth day before the Nones of August, in the ninth year, 1206.]

Nos igitur Inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, nisi de ipsorum ordinatione canonica per idonea tibi constiterit argumenta, eos nec in illis suscipere, nec ad maiores debes ordines promovere, praesertim antequam conversatio eorum fuerit approbata. [Edoceri quoque etc. Dat. Ferentini IV. Non. Aug. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A foreigner whose ordination is not established is not permitted to celebrate in public, but may do so in secret.

The same, to the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

The discretion of your fraternity sought to be taught by the Apostolic See whether you ought to permit those clerics who come to the regions of Jerusalem without letters commendatory to celebrate divine things, since most of them, whose canonical ordination is not established, as soon as they come presume to celebrate without seeking permission. But we, commending your solicitude in the Lord, respond concerning the first point that, unless their canonical ordination is lawfully established for you either through letters or through witnesses, you ought not to permit those who are altogether unknown to celebrate among your peoples; but if perhaps any of them should wish from devotion to celebrate secretly, you will be able to tolerate it. Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: Inferior prelates cannot institute foreigners in their churches without the consent of the diocesan bishops.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Reginus.

Through your report we learned that certain prelates of churches under your jurisdiction do not fear to institute clerics from other bishoprics in churches committed to them without your knowledge and assent. Therefore, considering that this is permitted to them for no reason, since it is contrary to honor and alien to the institutions of the holy Fathers, after the example of Pope Alexander of happy memory, our predecessor, we respond thus to your inquiry: if any clerics from other bishoprics have been, or shall in the future be, instituted in churches under your jurisdiction without your knowledge and assent, you are permitted by our authority, appeal being set aside, to remove them from there, unless by dispensation you decide that some of them are to be left in those churches.

Attendentes igitur, id eis nulla ratione licere, quum sit honestati contrarium et a sanctorum Patrum institutionibus alienum, ad exemplar felicis recordationis Alexandri Papae praedecessoris nostri inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si qui clerici de alienis episcopatibus in ecclesiis tuae iurisdictionis sine conscientia et assensu tuo sunt vel fuerint in posterum instituti, tibi licet eos exinde auctoritate nostra appellatione postposita removere, nisi aliquos ex iis ex dispensatione in eisdem ecclesiis duxeris dimittendos.

Title XXIII: On the Office of the Archdeacon

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It sets forth what pertains to the office of the archdeacon.

From the Book of the Roman Order.

Let the archdeacon know that after the bishop he is the bishop's vicar in all things, and that all care in the clergy pertains to him, both of those placed in the city and of those known to dwell throughout the parishes, whether concerning their conduct, the honor and restoration of churches, the teaching of ecclesiastical persons, or zeal for other matters; and he will render an account before God for those who transgress. And every third year, if the bishop cannot do so, let him travel throughout the entire parish and, in the stead of his bishop, correct and amend all things that need amendment.

> DE OFFICIO ARCHIDIACONI.

Ponit quae spectant ad officium archidiaconi.

Ex libro Romani ordinis.

Ut archidiaconus post episcopum sciat se vicarium esse eius in omnibus, et omnem curam in clero, tam in urbe positorum, quam eorum, qui per parochias habitare noscuntur, ad se pertinere; sive de eorum conversatione, sive de honore et restauratione ecclesiarum, sive doctrina ecclesiasticorum vel ceterarum rerum studio, et delinquentium rationem coram Deo redditurus est. Et ut de tertio in tertium anum, si episcopus non potest, parochiam universam circumeat, et cuncta, quae emendatione indigent, ad vicem sui episcopi corrigat et emendet.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: It is not summarized, but sets forth certain things that pertain to the office of the archdeacon.

From the Council of Toledo.

The office of the archdeacon is to read the Gospel when he wishes, or to command one of the deacons to do so; and, when the bishop sings Mass, at his command the Levites shall clothe themselves in sacred vestments, in the manner in which they are to proceed to Mass with the pontiff. He himself ought to deliberate, order, and execute every complaint or cause or matter of justice of priests, deacons, or subdeacons. Therefore, as a vigorous, provident, and cautious man acting in place of his bishop, he shall have care of the entire bishopric, and:

§ 1. Providing for every ecclesiastical office, he ought to assign the readings or responsories in the cathedral church and to hear them, to such a degree that no one reads or sings the Gospel, Epistle, responsories, or any reading in the church until he first reads or sings it before the archdeacon and is heard by him.

§ 2. He shall also order the acolytes—which of them ought to carry the candlesticks, which the thurible, and which of the minors ought to perform any offices in the church.

Non summatur, sed ponit quaedam, quae spectant ad officium archidiaconi.

Ex concilio Toletano.

Officium vero archidiaconi est, evangelium quando voluerit legere, vel alicui de diaconis praecipere, et quando episcopus missam canit, ad iussionem illius induant se Levitae vestimentis sacris, qualiter cum pontifice ad missam procedant; omnem querimoniam seu causam vel iustitiam presbyterorum, vel diaconorum, vel subdiaconorum ipse debet deliberare, ordinare et facere. Ideo vero strenuus, providus, cautus, vicem sui episcopi agens, episcopii totius curam habeat, et § 1. Omne ecclesiasticum officium providendo, lectiones aut responsoria in matrice ecclesia dare debet, et auscultare, in tantum, ut nullus evangelium, aut epistolam, aut responsoria, vel quamlibet in ecclesia lectionem legat vel cantet, donec ante ipsum legat vel cantet, et auscultetur ab ipso. § 2. Acolythos quoque ipse ordinet, quis eorum candelabra, quis thuribulum deferre quisve minorum in ecclesia aliqua officia agere debeat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Custody of the vessels of the church pertains to the archdeacon.

Gregory III, to the Archdeacon of Salona.

We grieved when we learned the things that you and your bishop directed in writings to us against one another, because charity recognizes nothing between you. Nevertheless, we command you to administer in the office of your order; and if there, with grace prevailing, the cause of your scandal can be terminated, we believe much to have been gained for your soul. But if discord has so armed its parties between you that your will is to remain in the swelling of scandal, you shall come without distinction to our hearing, and your bishop shall direct for himself whatever instructed person he chooses, so that, after all things have been weighed with subtle reasoning, we ought to establish what shall seem good to the parties.

We will you to know, however, that we will inquire strictly from you because neither the things of your own church nor the treasures collected from different churches are preserved with all solicitude and fidelity. But if anything of them has perished through negligence or anyone's fraud, you are bound by guilt in this, for through the order of the archdeaconry you are more strictly deputed to the custody of that church.

Verumtamen te in officio ordinis tui administrare praecipimus, et, si illic potest superante gratia causa vestri scandali definire, multum credimus vestrae animae acquisivisse. Sin vero ita inter vos discordia partes suas armavit, ut in tumore scandali voluntas vestra debeat remanere, tu ad nostram audientiam indifferenter occurre, et episcopus tuus pro se dirigat quam elegerit personam instructam, ut omnia subtili ratione perpensa constituere quae visa fuerint partibus debeamus. Scire vero te volumus, quod a te districte quaesituri sumus, quia vel propriae ecclesiae, vel ea, quae de diversis ecclesiis cimilia sunt collecta, non sub omni sollicitudine et fide servantur. Quod si quid ex eis vel negligentia, vel cuiusquam fraude deperiit, tu in hoc reatu adstringeris, qui per archidiaconatus ordinem custodiae eiusdem ecclesiae arctius deputaris.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: An archdeacon does not commit the care of souls without the bishop's mandate; that is, he does not possess an institution capable of authorization.

Alexander III, to the Archdeacon of Ely.

Since it is sufficiently absurd and alien to the institutions of the holy Fathers that an archdeacon by his own authority should commit the care of churches to anyone, we bear it exceedingly ill that you commit the care of souls to persons without the mandate of your bishop. Therefore, because you ought not, with a view to any custom, to contravene the constitutions of the holy Fathers and claim what does not pertain to your office, we command that hereafter you not presume to commit the care of souls to anyone without the permission and mandate of your bishop.

debes contra sanctorum Patrum constitutiones venire, et quod ad tuum non spectat officium vendicare, ideo mandamus, ut nemini de cetero sine licentia et mandato episcopi tui curam praesumas committere animarum.

Latin source headnote: An archdeacon visits his province, that is, his parish, once a year unless necessity requires more. This is what it says.

The same, to the Bishop of Coventry and the Abbot of Chester.

We command that you prohibit R., Archdeacon of Chester, from presuming to fine with a pecuniary penalty clerics or laymen who are to be punished for their excesses; to extort anything from any man or woman in an ordeal by fire or water; to suspend persons or place churches under interdict for an annual and undue exaction of money; or to approach the churches of his archdeaconry for visitation except once a year, unless perhaps such a cause has arisen on account of which it is fitting that he visit the aforesaid churches more often. And then let him do so with such moderation of men and mounts that those who dwell in them ought not deservedly to complain as a result.

But if he presumes to contravene your prohibition, you shall strike him with ecclesiastical severity, with every occasion and appeal ceasing, and shall cause the sentence itself to be inviolably observed until worthy satisfaction, so that we are not compelled to avenge this more harshly upon you and them.

Et tunc cum ea moderantia hominum et equitaturarum, quod qui in eis morantur, exinde non debeant merito querelari. Si autem contra inhibitionem vestram venire praesumserit, ecclesiastica severitate percellatis, omni occasione et appellatione cessantibus, et sententiam ipsam usque ad dignam satisfactionem faciatis inviolabiliter observari, ita quod in vos et illos hoc non cogamur durius, vindicare.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: It says first what the office of the archdeacon is and in what respect the bishop is relieved through it. Second, it says that rural deans are to be elected and removed by the bishop and archdeacon if they jointly discharge the functions of both.

Innocent III.

To these things we do not say—(And below:)

§ 1. Indeed, the devotion of your fraternity consulted us as to what ought to pertain to the office of the archdeacon and in what matters the care of episcopal solicitude ought to be relieved through him. We, insofar as we can, respond that, according to the statutes of blessed Isidore, the archdeacon commands subdeacons and Levites; the solicitude and ordering of parishes pertain to him, and he ought to hear the disputes of individuals.

§ 2. Archpriests, moreover, who are called deans by many, should know that they are subject to his jurisdiction.

§ 3. According to the constitution of the Roman Order, he is found to be the greatest after the bishop and the vicar of the bishop himself, furnishing all solicitude and care, both toward clerics and toward their churches, as well as he can according to God, since he will render an account concerning these matters in the judgment of the strict examination.

§ 4. Likewise, in a certain letter of blessed Pope Clement, our predecessor, the archdeacon is called the eye of the bishop, so that, looking throughout the bishopric in the bishop's place, he may correct and amend the things that he sees are to be corrected, unless the affairs are so arduous that they cannot be terminated without the presence of his superior.

§ 5. In a certain constitution of ours, however, we remember that on another occasion we expressed that corporal institution concerning both benefices and dignities ought to pertain to him, as well as the examination of clerics if they are to be promoted to sacred orders. And we believe that this same thing is to be observed in collations of benefices, so that those who are to be placed over ecclesiastical benefices are first examined by their archdeacon and afterwards presented through him to the bishop.

§ 6. Subsequently you then asked whether rural deans, who are appointed for a time, ought to be instituted or removed, if they are to be removed, at your mandate alone, or that of the archdeacon, or even that of both. To this we respond briefly that, since according to the authority of the imperial enactment what touches all ought to be approved by all, and since the dean exercises their common office, he is to be elected, or even removed, jointly.

Dicit primo, quod sit officium archidiaconi, et in quo per illud relevetur episcopus. Et secundo dicit, decanos rurales per episcopum et archidiaconum eligendos et amovendos, si illorum vices communiter gerant.

Innocentius III.

Ad haec non dicimus (Et infra:) § 1. Sane consuluit nos tuae fraternitatis devotio, quid ad officium archidiaconi debeat pertinere, et in quibus per ipsum cura episcopalis sollicitudinis debeat relevari. Et nos, prout possumus, respondemus, quod archidiaconus secundum statuta B. Isidori imperat subdiaconibus et Levitis; parochiarum sollicitudo et earum ordinatio ad ipsum pertinet, et audire debet iurgia singulorum. § 2. Archipresbyteri autem, qui a pluribus decani nuncupantur, eius iurisdictioni se noverint subiacere. § 3. Secundum vero Romani ordinis constitutionem maior post episcopum et ipsius episcopi vicarius reperitur, omnem sollicitudinem et curam tam in clericis quam in ecclesiis eorum, prout melius secundum Deum poterit, impendendo, quum super his sit redditurus rationem in districti examinis iudicio. § 4. Item in epistola B. Clementis Papae praedecessoris nostri oculus episcopi archidiaconus appellatur, ut loco episcopi per episcopatum prospiciens, quae corrigenda viderit corrigat et emendet, nisi adeo fuerint ardua negotia, quod absque maioris sui praesentia nequeant terminari. § 5. In quadam vero nostra constitutione iam alia vice nos meminimus expressisse, quod institutio corporalis tam super beneficiis quam etiam dignitatibus ad ipsum debeat pertinere, examinatio etiam clericorum, si fuerint ad sacros ordines promovendi; et hoc idem in collationibus beneficiorum credimus observandum, ut qui beneficiis ecclesiasticis praeficiendi fuerint a suo prius examinentur archidiacono, et per ipsum postmodum episcopo praesententur. § 6. Subsequenter postea quaesivisti, utrum decani rurales, qui pro tempore statuuntur, ad mandatum tuum solum, vel archidiaconi, vel etiam utriusque institui debeant vel destitui, si fuerint amovendi. Ad hoc breviter respondemus, quod, quum iuxta imperialis sanctionis auctoritatem ab omnibus quod omnes tangit approbari debeat, et quum commune eorum decanus officium exerceat, communiter est eligendus, vel etiam amovendus.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: An archdeacon examines and presents those to be ordained and places prelates in their seat.

The same.

So that our—(And below:) [(cf. c. un., That the Benefices of a Church, III.12.) But because the excesses of greater persons ought to be punished with greater severity, since according to the oracle of divine law, "if the priest who is anointed sins, he will cause the people to transgress," with the common counsel of our brothers we invalidated what you dishonorably presumed concerning the retention of revenues. And, as a penalty for presumption of this kind, so that you may be punished in that in which you had sinned, we have decreed that you are to be suspended from the collation of the dignity or ecclesiastical benefice that shall first become vacant for your grant in your church.

But because, with divine scripture teaching, we have learned that a wise man is better than a strong man, and one who rules his spirit than one who takes cities, however much we have willed or would will—if we could with justice preserved, contrary to which we judge that we cannot act, since we are constituted in the seat of justice—that the aforesaid chancery be conferred upon our aforesaid subdeacon, nevertheless we have not found the often-mentioned H. de Lamp. so blameworthy that, with justice requiring it, we can deprive him of that chancery. For, although his relatives transgressed through simplicity, nevertheless giving or even promising nothing for it, he himself received investiture of the chancery as a true canon and one against whom, by reason of the canonry, no defect could be opposed by law, without any pact or agreement.]

Nor was it [even] sufficiently proved that the chancellor by virtue of his office exercises the spiritual functions mentioned, since rather by common law they pertain to the office of the archdeacon, namely, to present those to be ordained to the bishop and to examine them, and to place abbots and abbesses in their seat. [Since it has been proved that these, etc. Given at Perugia, on the ninth day before the Kalends of October, 1198.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Archdeacons have no jurisdiction in monasteries except insofar as general or special custom grants it to them.

Honorius III, to the Abbot of Arimanum in the diocese of Troyes, and to the Archdeacon and Dean of Saint Stephen of Troyes.

To our beloved son—(And below:) At the petition of the Archdeacon of Sens, who complained that the abbot and convent of the monastery of Saint-Pierre-le-Vif at Sens contrary to justice denied him the annual procuration and certain other things pertaining to him by reason of his archdeaconry, we gave a mandate to the Abbot of Saint-Crépin and his colleagues that they should hear a cause of this kind and terminate it with the due conclusion.

Before them the aforesaid archdeacon sought that, since the same monastery is situated within the bounds of his archdeaconry, the aforesaid abbot and monks should obey him in those things that pertain to jurisdiction, correction, reconciliation, and visitation, which he said belong to archidiaconal right: namely, that they should answer complainants before him, stand to law, and observe his just sentences; and, when cited, should also come into his presence to hear and observe, with their rule and the due obedience of their abbot preserved, his honorable and holy mandates according to God concerning correction of excesses and other matters that archdeacons are accustomed and reasonably able to enjoin.

He sought, moreover, that hereafter, with him passed over, they not cause any persons from the bailiwick of Sens to be convened before the official of the Archbishop of Sens, asserting that they ought first to be convened under him before the aforesaid official, only the special causes of the archbishop himself and of his men and household excepted.

Therefore, issue having been lawfully joined concerning the foregoing before the aforesaid judges and the matters set forth on each side having been heard by them, with the assent of both parties the same judges remitted the cause itself to apostolic examination. Thus, with the abbot and archdeacon themselves appearing in our presence, we, considering that their customs concerning the jurisdiction of archdeacons are diverse, could not reach a final proceeding in a question of this kind, since in this case we did not know the custom that the Archdeacon of Sens employs in the abbeys at Sens of the order of the aforesaid monastery.

But, willing that the due end be imposed upon the same question, with the assent of the abbot himself and the procurator of the other party, we have decided to commit the cause itself to you. Therefore, we command your discretion that you solicitously inquire into the truth concerning these matters through the senior canons of the church of Sens, who ought to possess fuller knowledge of a custom of this kind. Unless within three months after the edict of the first citation it is established for you through them that the aforesaid archdeacon or his predecessors, by a custom peacefully acquired in this manner, have until now possessed some jurisdiction in the monastery itself or in abbeys of this kind, you shall altogether absolve the aforesaid monastery from his claim, imposing perpetual silence upon the archdeacon himself concerning this.

But if it is established for you through the same canons that the archdeacon himself or his predecessors, by a custom acquired in this manner, have until now possessed some jurisdiction in that monastery or in other abbeys of this kind, you shall award him only that same jurisdiction in the aforesaid monastery which it is established that he or his predecessors possessed in the monastery itself or in the same abbeys, imposing perpetual silence upon him concerning the other matters, and proceeding in all the foregoing with the obstacle of appeal removed.

> Archidiaconi in monasteriis iurisdictionem non habent, nisi quantum tribuit eis generalis vel specialis consuetudo.

Honorius III. Abbati Arimanensi Trecensis dioecesis, et Archidiacono et Decano S. Stephani Trecensis.

Dilecto filio (Et infra:) Ad petitionem archidiaconi Senonensis conquerentis, quod abbas et conventus monasterii sancti Petri Vivi Senonensis procurationem annuam et quaedam alia ratione sui archidiaconatus ad ipsum spectantia exhiberi sibi contra iustitiam denegabant, abbati sancti Crispini et collegis eius dedimus in mandatis, ut audirent causam huiusmodi et fine debito terminarent. Petiit insuper, ne de cetero facerent aliquos de Senonensi baillivia eo praetermisso coram officiali Senonensis archiepiscopi conveniri, asserens, illos prius debere conveniri sub ipso, quam coram officiali praedicto, specialibus ipsius archiepiscopi et hominum, ac familiae suae causis duntaxat exceptis. Lite igitur super praemissis coram praefatis iudicibus legitime contestata, et auditis ab eisdem hinc inde propositis, iidem iudices de utriusque partis assensu causam ipsam ad examen apostolicum remiserunt. Volentes autem, ut eidem quaestioni finis debitus imponatur, causam ipsam vobis de ipsius abbatis et procuratoris alterius partis assensu duximus committendam. Ideoque discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus per maiores ecclesiae Senonensis canonicos, qui habere debent de huiusmodi consuetudine notitiam pleniorem, super his sollicite veritatem inquiratis, et, nisi vobis infra tres menses post primae citationis edictum constiterit per eosdem, praefatum archidiaconum vel praedecessores ipsius de pacifica sic obtenta consuetudine iurisdictionem aliquam in ipso monasterio, vel in huiusmodi abbatiis hactenus habuisse, praefatum monasterium ab eius impetitione penitus absolvatis, perpetuum super hoc ipsi archidiacono silentium imponentes. Si vero vobis constiterit per canonicos eosdem, ipsum archidiaconum vel eius praedecessores de sic obtenta consuetudine hactenus habuisse iurisdictionem aliquam in ipso monasterio, vel in aliis huiusmodi abbatiis, eandem iurisdictionem duntaxat adiudicantes eidem, in monasterio supradicto quam ipsum vel praedecessores suos in monasterio ipso vel in eisdem abbatiis habuisse constiterit, super aliis perpetuum ei silentium imponatis, in praedictis omnibus sublato appellationis obstaculo processuri.

Title XXIV: On the Office of the Archpriest

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The archpriest of a city is subject to the archdeacon and principally presides over priests and priestly offices.

From the Council of Toledo.

Let the archpriest know that he is subject to the archdeacon and is to obey his precepts as those of his bishop; and, as pertains specially to his ministry, that he is to exercise care of souls over all priests placed in the priestly order, stand continually in the church, and, in the absence of his bishop, celebrate in his stead the solemnities of Masses and say the collect, or cause the person upon whom he himself enjoins it to do so.

DE OFFICIO ARCHIPRESBYTERI.

Archipresbyter civitatis subest archidiacono, et principaliter praeest presbyteris et presbyteralibus officiis.

Ex concilio Toletano.

Ut archipresbyter sciat se subesse archidiacono, et eius praeceptis sicut sui episcopi obedire et, quod specialiter ad eius pertinet ministerium, super omnes presbyteros in ordine presbyterali positos curam agere animarum, et assidue in ecclesia stare, et in episcopi sui absentia ad vicem eius missarum solennia celebret, et collectam dicat, aut cui ipse iniunxerit.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: To the same effect.

Pope Leo.

The ministry of the archpriest is constituted in this: that with diligent care he provide for the ministry of the cardinal priests, who ought to perform the solemn office in the communion of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, in such a way that he causes them in turn to assist one another so that, beginning from the sacrosanct Lord's day, they persevere unswervingly through all the canonical hours, so that the work of God may be performed worthily and holily by the one to whom it is committed, fearing the judgment of that wisest man where it is said: “Cursed is the man who performs the works of God negligently.”

§ 1. Let the archpriest also provide for the life of the cardinal priests, obeying the precepts of his bishop, lest at any time they withdraw or grow torpid in buffoonery, but let them remember that the lips of priests guard knowledge and that they seek the law from his mouth, who is the angel of the Lord of hosts.

§ 2. If the bishop is absent, excepting those things that are prohibited, let the archpriest provide for all things that ought to be performed in the ministry of priests, [that is]: to bless fonts, anoint the infirm with oil, reconcile an infirm penitent after consulting the bishop, and enjoin upon all other priests the penance that pertains to the purgation of souls.

§ 3. On the principal feasts let him either solemnly fulfill the celebration of Mass himself, or let the one to whom it is committed at the command of his mouth perform it reverently.

Ad idem.

Leo Papa.

Ministerium archipresbyteri in eo constituitur, ut diligenti cura provideat ministerium sacerdotum cardinalium, qui solenne debent agere officium in communicatione corporis et sanguinis Domini nostri Iesu Christi ita, ut vicissim eos sibimet succurrere faciat, quatenus a sacrosancto die dominico incipiendo, per omnes horas canonicas indeclinabiliter perseverent, ut opus Dei digne et sancte perficiatur ab eo, cui committitur, verens sententiam illius sapientissimi, ubi dicitur: "Maledictus homo, qui negligenter facit opera Dei." § 1. Provideat etiam archipresbyter vitam sacerdotum cardinalium, praeceptis sui obtemperando episcopi, ne aliquando cedant, aut scurrilitate torpeant, sed reminiscantur, quod labia sacerdotum custodiant scientiam, et legem requirunt ex ore eius, qui angelus Domini exercituum est. § 2. Si episcopus defuerit, exceptis his, quae prohibita sunt, archipresbyter provideat cuncta, quae in sacerdotum ministerio perfici debeant, [id est] fontes benedicere, infirmum oleo perungere, poenitentem infirmum, consulto episcopo, reconciliare, poenitentiam cunctis aliis sacerdotibus, quae ad purgationem animarum pertinet, iniungere. § 3. In praecipuis festivitatibus aut ipse celebrationem missae solenniter impleat, aut ad oris sui iussionem, cui committitur, peragat veneranter.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It declares what the office of the city archpriest is. Antonius de Butrio.

The same.

It is established that the office of the city archpriest, when the prelate is absent there, is to begin the office in his stead, give priestly blessings in the church, sing Mass when he wishes, or command one of the priests to do so. But when the bishop sings Mass, he ought to instruct the priests to clothe themselves in sacred vestments and how they are to proceed to Mass. For he ought to command the custodian of the church that the Eucharist of Christ not be lacking in the sacristy for the infirm.

He ought to provide for the infirm and, in providing, to command the priests lest perhaps they die without confession or the strengthening of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; and, with all the priests, to receive the confessions of sins of those who come from outside, and thereafter through the provision of the pontiff he ought to employ great care toward them. All things for making Christians, baptizing infants, and bringing aid are also to be done by the priests at his command.

Declarat, quod sit officium archipresbyteri civitatensis. Ant. de But.

Idem.

Officium archipresbyteri de urbe constat, quando ibi praesul defuerit, vice eius officium inchoare, benedictiones presbyterales in ecclesia dare, missam, quando voluerit, cantare, vel cui de sacerdotibus iusserit. Quando vero episcopus missam canit, debet praecipere sacerdotibus, ut induant se vestibus sacris, et qualiter ad missam procedant. Debet enim praecipere custodi ecclesiae, ut in sacrario eucharistia Christi propter infirmos non desit. Debet infirmis providere, et providendo praecipere sacerdotibus, ne forte sine confessione, vel confirmatione corporis et sanguinis Domini nostri Iesu Christi moriantur; confessiones vero peccatorum eorum, qui a foris veniunt, recipere cum omnibus sacerdotibus, et exinde per provisionem pontificis magnam debet illis adhibere curam. Ad Christianos quoque faciendos, et baptizandos infantes, et ad succurrendum, omnia a sacerdotibus per iussionem illius fiant.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A rural archpriest exercises care of the priests and laymen of his plebania; nevertheless, he can ordain nothing contrary to the bishop's decree.

The same, from the synod held at Ravenna.

Let each parish have an archpriest. On account of continual care toward the people of God, we will archpriests to preside over the individual parishes, who shall exercise solicitude not only for the unskilled common people but also guard with continual circumspection the life of those priests who dwell throughout the lesser titles, and shall report to their bishop with what industry each one exercises the divine work.

§ 1. Nor shall the bishop contend that the parish does not need an archpriest, as though he himself were able to govern it, because, even if he is very suitable, it is nevertheless fitting that he divide his burdens; and, just as he himself presides over the cathedral church, so let archpriests preside over the parishes, so that ecclesiastical solicitude wavers in nothing. Nevertheless, let them report all things to the bishop, nor presume to ordain anything contrary to his decree.

Nec contendat episcopus, non egere plebem archipresbytero, quasi ipse eam gubernare valeat, quia, etsi valde idoneus sit, decet tamen, ut sua onera partiatur, et sicut ipse matrici ecclesiae praeest, ita archipresbyteri praesint plebibus, ut in nullo titubet ecclesiastica sollicitudo. The same, from the Book of the Roman Order.

Let the primicerius know that he is under the archdeacon, as is the archpriest, and that it pertains specially to his care to preside over the teaching of deacons or the remaining persons placed in the order of ecclesiastical grades; that he himself is to apply himself to discipline and custody, since he will render an account before God for their souls; and that he himself is to give the deacons the readings that pertain to the night offices of clerics and to have zeal concerning each person, so that, in whatever matter he possesses a capable understanding, he may devote himself without any negligence [to it], or they may be instructed by one whom he commands.

Sole Chapter

From the Council of Toledo.

Title XXVII: On the Office of the Custodian

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It sets forth what pertains to the office of the custodian. This is what it says.

From the Book of the Roman Order.

The custodian of the church, to whom the things belonging to the church are committed to be guarded, ought to obey the command of his archdeacon in all things. At the canonical hours the signals of the bells are to be sounded by him at the command of the archdeacon himself. Let him ceaselessly guard the palls or linens of the altar and all the utensils of the church. Let him be thoroughly vigilant in lighting and extinguishing the lamps and lanterns, lest the oil perish through their shining beyond measure or the church be darker through their shining too little; rather, let all things be done with discretion, which is known to be the mother of all virtues.

§ 1. But if the one to whom the church is delivered to be guarded is less suitable for performing this, let him be restrained by the archdeacon so that he correct himself. But if he remains untamed, let the archdeacon provide, by reporting it to the bishop, that the unfitting man be cast out and a suitable minister be appointed for the house of God, so that all things may be done to the praise and name of God, in such a way that God may be appeased in the church by those serving him.

Si vero is, cui ecclesia custodienda traditur, minus idoneus ad hoc peragendum exstiterit, ab archidiacono coerceatur, ut se emendit. Chapter II

Latin source headnote: To the same effect.

From the Council of Toledo.

The custodian ought to be solicitous concerning every ornament of the church, its lights, and incense; he ought also at all times to have bread and wine prepared for Mass, to sound the signal at each canonical hour with the consent of the archdeacon, and, with the same man's consent while the bishop is absent, to divide among the brothers all offerings, alms, and tithes.

§ 1. Holy mother Church ought to stand upon these three columns of the church, as the holy synod enacted, so that such persons as appear better and holier may be ordained to this work, so that no negligence may appear to exist in the holy Church of God. Let these three—the archdeacon, archpriest, and custodian—joined together with one mind, perform their duties providently and perfectly, and let there be neither envy nor jealousy among them.

Title XXVIII: On the Office of the Vicar

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A vicar, if he afterwards obtains a benefice having the care of souls, will be deprived of the vicarage.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Norwich and G., Archdeacon.

It has reached our hearing that G., a priest, presumes to vex and weary in many ways the monks of Ramsey and Thomas, his clerk, by seeking [his] vicarage of the church of Burnel, from which he withdrew twenty years ago, after obtaining a personatus in different churches. Therefore, because it is not canonical that one who has the care of souls in different churches should exist as vicar in churches belonging to others, we command your discretion by apostolic writings, under precept, that, after the truth of the matter has been more fully investigated, if it is so, you more strictly compel the aforesaid priest to desist from seeking the aforesaid vicarage, with appeal and occasion removed, notwithstanding any letters that he obtained from us through an envoy with the truth suppressed.

For things that proceed from the root of avarice and are contrary to the reason or enactment of the canons ought to be extirpated.

Quia igitur non est canonicum, ut qui curam animarum in diversis habet ecclesiis vicarius in alienis exsistat, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, rei veritate plenius inquisita, si ita est, praedictum presbyterum a petitione supradictae vicariae desistere appellatione et occasione remotis districtius compellatis, non obstantibus literis si quas tacita veritate per nuntium a nobis impetravit. Exstirpari etenim debent, quae de avaritae radice procedunt, et canonum contraria sunt rationi vel sanctioni.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One person cannot have several vicarages.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

You shall provide [however] more attentively that you do not permit anyone to have several vicarages in your bishopric, because, since vicars are bound to serve personae and churches, it is alien to the order of law that anyone have more than one vicarage.

> Plures vicarias quis habere non potest.
>
> Idem Eliensi Episcopo.
>
> Provideas [autem] attentius, ne in episcopatu tuo patiaris aliquem plures vicarias habere, quia, quum vicarii teneantur personis et ecclesiis deservire, alienum est ab ordine iuris, ut vicariam quis habeat praeter unam.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A perpetual vicar instituted by the bishop cannot be removed by the rector or defrauded of his portion.

The same, to the Bishop of Winchester.

In addition, if the persona of any church, with the assent and authority of the diocesan bishop, has assigned a certain portion to a vicar whom he instituted in the same church, the one who, after that persona has died, is substituted into the personatus of that church cannot remove the same vicar from the church or diminish the portion assigned to him, unless he commits something on account of which he is to be condemned by a judge in respect of the vicarage or benefice.

substituitur ecclesiae, non potest eundem vicarium ab ecclesia removere, vel assignatam sibi minuere portionem, nisi aliquid committat, propter quod per iudicem in vicaria sit vel beneficio condemnandus.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A vicar cannot substitute a vicar.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

Do not permit clerics [whether] constituted in the priesthood or in other lower orders to substitute others for themselves in the vicarages of churches that they have obtained, since this is sufficiently discordant and absurd, and contrary to all reason.

Vicarius non potest substituere vicarium.

Idem Norwicensi Episcopo.

Clericos [autem vel] in presbyteratu, vel in aliis inferioribus ordinibus constitutos, in vicariis ecclesiarum, quas adepti sunt, alios sibi substituere non permittas, quum id satis sit absonum et absurdum, et omni rationi contrarium.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: The Pope's vicar has jurisdiction in the City, not outside the City.

Innocent III, to the Abbot of Saint Eugenius and the Plebane of Saint Peter.

Our venerable brother [the Bishop of Volterra caused it to be shown to us by his representation that, when the clerics of the parish of Petiole had sworn to him that they would elect a provost according to the will of laymen, and, after the election had been celebrated in this manner, had presented the elect to him, he not only refused to confirm the election itself but also bound with the bond of excommunication both the consuls and the other laymen who had driven the aforesaid clerics to this and the clerics themselves, for these and other matters in which they had been disobedient to him. And he obtained our writings to be directed to our venerable brothers the Archbishop of Pisa and the Bishop of Lucca, that, as the sentence had been reasonably promulgated, they should cause it to be firmly observed, appeal being removed, until suitable satisfaction.

But the opposing party obtained letters of our vicar, our venerable brother P., Bishop of Porto, to the same Bishop of Lucca and our beloved son P., cardinal-priest of the title of the Basilica of the Twelve Apostles; on the occasion of those letters they absolved the said laymen and clerics, promulgating a sentence against the aforementioned Bishop of Volterra, from which the same bishop, although he believed it to be null for many reasons, nevertheless from superabundance appealed to our hearing.]

We therefore, judging the vicar's letters to have been obtained through surreption, because the jurisdiction of a vicar whom the Roman Pontiff left in the City does not extend outside it unless this has specially been granted to him—especially when he dwells in his special province, namely between the province of Capua and that of Pisa—command your discretion by apostolic writings that you revoke as void whatever was done on the occasion of the letters, and cause the aforesaid sentence of excommunication, as it was reasonably given, to be firmly observed with the obstacle of appeal removed.

Vicarius Papae in urbe iurisdictionem habet, non extra urbem.

Innocentius III. Abbati S. Eugenii et Plebano S. Petri.

Sua nobis venerabilis frater noster [Wulteranus episcopus fecit insinuatione monstrari, quod, quum clerici plebis de Petiole iurassent sibi praepositum ad laicorum eligere voluntatem, et electione taliter celebrata sibi praesentassent electum, ipse non solum electionem ipsius renuit confirmare, verum etiam tam consules et alios laicos, qui ad hoc impulerant clericos supradictos, quam ipsos clericos, pro his et aliis, in quibus eidem inobedientes exstiterant, excommunicationis vinculo innodavit, et ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum archiepiscopum Pisanum, et Lucanum episcopum destinari obtinuit scripta nostra, ut sententiam, sicut fuerat rationabiliter promulgata, facerent appellatione remota usque ad satisfactionem congruam firmiter observari. Pars autem adversa venerabilis fratris nostri P. Portuensis episcopi vicarii nostri, ad eundem Lucanum episcopum et dilectum filium P. tit. basilicae XII. Apostolorum presbyterum cardinalem literas impetravit, qui occasione illarum dictos laicos et clericos absolverunt, contra memoratum Wulteranum episcopum sententiam promulgantes, a qua idem episcopus, licet ipsam multiplici ratione crediderit esse nullam, ex abundanti tamen nostram audientiam appellavit.] Nos igitur vicarii literas aestimantes per surreptionem obtentas, quoniam iurisdictio vicarii, quem Romanus Pontifex in Urbe reliquit, non extenditur extra illam, nisi ei specialiter sit concessum, praesertim quum ipse moratur in sua provincia speciali, videlicet inter Capuanam provinciam et Pisanam; discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, quicquid occasione literarum actum est, in irritum revocetis, praefatam excommunicationis sententiam sicut rationabiliter lata est, faciatis remoto appellationis obstaculo, firmiter observari.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Ordinary vicars are compelled to serve churches through withdrawal of revenues and vicarages.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Worcester.

It was set forth before us on your part that certain persons in churches in which they obtain perpetual vicarages scorn to make due residence and to be promoted as priests. Therefore, unwilling, as indeed we ought not, to tolerate with equanimity an abuse of this kind, we command your fraternity that, appeal being removed, through withdrawal of revenues or of the vicarages themselves you compel the perpetual vicars to reside, as they are bound, in the churches in which they obtain vicarages, and to cause themselves to be promoted as priests, as their cure requires.

Compelluntur vicarii ordinarii ecclesiis deservire per subtractionem proventuum et vicariarum.

Honorius III. Vigorensi Episcopo.

Ex parte tua fuit propositum coram nobis, quod quidam in ecclesiis, quibus perpetuas obtinent vicarias, debitam residentiam facere, ac in presbyteros promoveri contemnunt. Nolentes igitur abusum huiusmodi, sicuti nec debemus, aequanimiter sustinere, fraternitati tuae mandamus, quatenus perpetuos vicarios, ut in ecclesiis, in quibus vicarias obtinent, resideant, ut tenentur, et se in presbyteros, ut eorum cura exigit, faciant promoveri, per subtractionem proventuum vel ipsarum vicariarum appellatione remota compellas.

Title XXIX: On the Office and Power of a Delegated Judge

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A delegate of the Pope has power not only over the parties but also over others who impede his jurisdiction.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of London.

Because it was asked of us on your part what is to be done concerning powerful persons who, when we command justice to be furnished to someone concerning those whom they love or wish to protect, compel the complainants to be silent through their threats or terrors, and thus our mandate is eluded, we respond thus to you: just as those acting and those consenting are punished with equal penalty by the testimony of scripture, so you will be able by ecclesiastical constraint to restrain both those who are drawn into the cause and their principal supporters, if you manifestly know that they impede justice.

> DE OFFICIO ET POTESTATE IUDICIS DELEGATI.
> Delegatus Papae potestatem habet non solum in partes, sed etiam in alios, qui suam iurisdictionem impediunt.
>
> Alexander III. Londonensi Episcopo.
>
> Quia quaesitum est a nobis ex parte tua, quid faciendum sit de potestatibus, quae, quum praecipimus alicui iustitiam exhiberi de his, quos diligunt, aut tueri volunt, minis aut terroribus suis conquerentes silere compellunt, et sic mandatum nostrum eluditur, sic tibi respondemus, quod, sicut agentes et consentientes pari poena scripturae testimonio puniuntur, sic tam eos, qui trahuntur in causam, quam principales eorum fautores, si eos manifeste cognoveris iustitiam impedire, districtione ecclesiastica poteris coercere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: When different letters under the same date and contrary form are obtained and presented by different persons to the same judges, execution of both is suspended until the Pope is consulted.

The same, to the Bishop of Bologna.

Indeed, if letters are first obtained from us concerning some cause and other letters are afterwards opposed, with no mention made of the earlier letters, if this becomes known to the judges, until they consult the Roman Pontiff and thereby learn his will more fully, they shall altogether suspend execution of both letters, lest through the diversity of the letters the conclusions of causes be impeded. Likewise, when, etc. [cf. c. 9, On Sentences and Res Judicata, II.27.]

> Quum diversae literae sub eadem data et forma contraria impetrantur, et praesentantur a diversis ad eosdem iudices, supersedetur utrisque, donec consulatur Papa.

> Idem Bononiensi Episcopo.
>
> Sane si a nobis super aliqua causa literae prius impetrantur, et aliae postea, non facta mentione priorum literarum, literae opponuntur, si iudicibus innotuerit, donec Romanum Pontificem consulant, et suam exinde cognoscant plenius voluntatem, exsecutioni literarum penitus supersedeant utrarumque, ne pro varietate literarum causarum fines valeant impediri. Item quum etc. [cf. c. 9. de sent. et re iud. II. 27.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A delegate of the Pope who is impeded can subdelegate a cause that can suitably be terminated without him.

The same, to the Bishop of London.

If, because of your weakness or any other grave cause or necessity, you cannot be present to conduct causes that are committed to you by the Apostolic See, let it be free to you to commit your functions to discreet and suitable persons, yet in such a way that, if the matter is of such importance, they ought to consult you—unless perhaps the causes are so grave that they cannot suitably be terminated without your presence.

> Delegatus Papae impeditus subdelegare potest causam, quae sine ipso commode terminari potest.
>
> Idem Episcopo Londonensi.
>
> Si pro debilitate tua vel pro qualibet alia gravi causa vel necessitate tractandis causis, quae tibi a sede apostolica committuntur, interesse non poteris, liberum tibi sit personis discretis et idoneis vices tuas committere, ita tamen, quod, si res tanti est, te consulere debeant, nisi forte causae ita graves sint, quod sine praesentia tua non possint commode terminari.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If a cause is committed to be decided before a certain day, unless the parties extend it, the jurisdiction expires through the lapse of the day. § 1. Where no certain penalty is established by law, the delegate imposes an arbitrary one. This is what it says.

The same, to V., Bishop-Elect of Chartres.

Concerning causes that are committed to be decided within a certain term, we will your knowledge to hold this: unless the day fixed by the Apostolic authority is extended by the common consent of the parties, when it has passed, the mandate expires.

§ 1. Upon those also who have neglected to come at your citation for causes committed to you, or to obey your judgment concerning them, if the business is such that a certain penalty for it is expressed in the canons, you shall inflict that penalty; otherwise, you shall take care to punish them according to your judgment in accordance with the quality of the offense and of the cause.

Textual note: A stray ñ separating the two parts of the source headnote was removed as a transcription artifact.

> Si causa committitur infra certum diem decidenda, nisi partes prorogent, per lapsum diei exspirat iurisdictio. § 1. Ubi certa poena per ius statuta non est, delegatus imponit arbitrariam. Hoc dicit.
>
> Idem V. Carnotensi Electo.
>
> De causis, quae infra certum terminum decidendae committuntur, hoc tuam volumus cognitionem tenere, quod, nisi dies ab Apostolico praefixus de communi consensu partium prorogetur, eo transacto, mandatum exspirat. § 1. Illis etiam, qui pro causis tibi commissis ad citationem tuam venire, aut tuo super his parere iudicio neglexerint, si tale fuerit negotium, quod certa exinde poena in canonibus exprimatur, eandem infligas; alioquin ipsos pro delicti qualitate et causae secundum tuum arbitrium punire procures.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Through a simple commission of a cause, a delegate can cite, punish the contumacious, and do the remaining things that pertain to the cause.

The same, to the Archbishop of Sens.

Furthermore, concerning the matter on which you wished to consult us—whether a delegated, non-ordinary judge without letters of commission is permitted to compel a contumacious person to come, or to condemn him if he does not come—let it become known to you by the authority of the present letters that, after a cause has been delegated to him, even simply, by our authority he can sufficiently compel the parties and also restrain the contumacious with ecclesiastical severity, even if the letters of commission do not contain this or the parties do not possess our mandate that they should appear. For from the fact that the cause is committed to him, he receives full power over all those matters that are known to pertain to the cause itself.

> Per simplicem commissionem causae potest delegatus citare, contumacem punire, et reliqua facere, quae spectant ad causam.
> Idem Archiepiscopo Senonensi.
> Praeterea super hoc, quod nos consulere voluisti, utrum liceat iudici delegato non ordinario, sine literis commissoriis cogere contumacem, ut veniat, aut damnare si non veniat? hoc tibi auctoritate praesentium innotescat, quod, postquam ei causa, licet simpliciter, delegatur, satis potest nostra auctoritate partes compellere, et etiam contumaces severitate ecclesiastica coercere, etiamsi literae commissionis id non contineant, aut partes mandatum nostrum non habeant, ut accedant; quia ex eo, quod causa sibi committitur, super his omnibus, quae ad causam ipsam spectare noscuntur, plenariam recipit potestatem.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If a cause has been committed to several persons, even simply, each one can subdelegate. This is what it says, and it is alleged daily.

The same, to the Bishop of Winchester.

Although we are entangled by a multiplicity of affairs and occupied with grave and diverse solicitudes, nevertheless, beyond the common duty, the charity and affection of your fraternity, by which we love your person, compels us to respond to your consultations, lest we seem to leave undiscussed the matters that your discretion wished to present to us to be resolved.

Therefore, let it become known to your solicitude that a judge delegated by us can delegate to others, [to one or several], a cause committed to him: either the entire cause to be heard and terminated; or so that they may hear the allegations and reasons and receive the attestations, reserving the sentence to himself; or so that they may do only some one of these things according to the will and good pleasure of the one delegating. Nevertheless, he cannot delegate the same cause to another with appeal set aside, even if it was committed to him with appeal removed.

But if a cause is committed to two persons, even if it is not added that one may proceed in it without the other, nevertheless either of them can commit his functions in this matter either to his co-judge or to another. [But, etc.; cf. c. 3, On Rescripts, I.3.]

Si causa pluribus etiam simpliciter est commissa, quilibet subdelegare potest. H. d. et quotidie allegatur.

Idem Vintoniensi Episcopo.

Quamvis simus multiplicitate negotiorum impliciti, et gravibus diversisque sollicitudinibus occupati, nos tamen cogit praeter debitum commune tuae fraternitatis caritas et dilectio, qua personam tuam diligimus, tuis consultationibus respondere, ne videamur indiscussa relinquere quae nobis enodanda tua voluit discretio praesentare. Innotescat itaque sollicitudini tuae, quod iudex a nobis delegatus causam sibi commissam potest aliis, [uni vel pluribus,] delegare, aut totam audiendam et terminandam, aut etiam, ut audiant allegationes et rationes et attestationes recipiant, et sententiam sibi servent, vel ut horum aliquid tantummodo faciant iuxta voluntatem et beneplacitum delegantis; quanquam non possit eandem causam alii appellatione postposita delegare, etsi sibi sit appellatione remota commissa. Si vero duobus causa committitur; etiam si non apponatur, ut unus sine altero procedat in ea, nihilominus unus ex ipsis, sive suo coniudici sive alii, vices suas potest committere in hac parte. [Ceterum etc. cf. c. 3. de resc. I. 3.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A delegate of the Pope executes his own sentence when the one to whom he had committed its execution cannot or will not execute it.

The same, to the Bishop of Norwich.

You signified to us through your letters that sometimes a sentence concerning some cause is rendered in vain by a delegated judge when the ordinary judge is unwilling to commit it to execution at his mandate, or cannot bring it to effect because others resist. Concerning this, however, we respond thus to your consultation: if the ordinary judge at the mandate of a judge delegated by us either will not or, because others resist, cannot bring the sentence given by him to effect, the delegated judge can commit it to execution by our authority committed to him; and if any persons resist him, he can restrain them by ecclesiastical sentence. [If at any time, etc.; cf. the following chapter.]

Delegatus Papae exsequitur sententiam suam, quam exsequi non potest aut non vult is, cui eam commiserat exsequendam.

Idem Norvicensi Episcopo.

Significasti nobis per literas tuas, quod interdum a iudice delegato frustra super aliqua causa fertur sententia, quum ordinarius iudex eam ad mandatum ipsius, nolit exsecutioni mandare, aut aliis resistentibus effectui mancipare non possit. Super hoc autem Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si iudex ordinarius ad mandatum iudicis delegati a nobis aut non vult, aut non potest aliis resistentibus sententiam ab eo latam effectui mancipare, delegatus iudex eam auctoritate nostra sibi commissam potest exsecutioni mandare, et, si qui sibi restiterint, eos sententia ecclesiastica coercere. [Si quando etc. cf. c. sequ.]

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If the ordinary knows that one whom a delegate of the Pope orders to be inducted into possession was not canonically instituted, he shall not resist violently, but shall insist with prayers that the delegate defer until the Pope is consulted.

The same.

But if at any time clerics before a delegated judge draw prelates of churches into a cause concerning the churches that they hold, and before the same judge obtain the churches through a settlement or in another manner, in which it is certain that they had no canonical institution whatever, nor even corporal possession, the ordinary judge ought not violently to resist the mandate of the delegated judge, but ought to insist before him that he defer putting them into possession until the truth of the matter becomes known to us.

> Si ordinarius scit, eum non canonice institutum, quem delegatus Papae mandat in possessionem induci, non resistet violenter, sed precibus instabit, ut differat, donec Papa consulatur.
> Idem.
>
> Si quando vero clerici coram iudice delegato praelatos ecclesiarum super ecclesiis, quas tenent, in causam traxerint, et coram eodem iudice transactione vel alio modo ecclesias obtinuerint, in quibus certum sit, eos institutionem canonicam nullatenus habuisse, nec possessionem etiam corporalem, ordinarius iudex non debet iudicis delegati mandato resistere violenter, sed apud ipsum instare debet, ut differat eos in possessionem mittere, donec nobis rei veritas innotescat.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: After a definitive sentence has been committed to execution, the jurisdiction of the delegate expires.

The same, to the Bishop of Brescia.

In the letters that your fraternity directed to us you inserted certain questions concerning which you sought that a solution be furnished to you by us. One of these, indeed, is this: until what time can a delegated judge interpose his functions so that the adjudged matter or settlement is observed? Concerning this we respond thus to your consultation: from the time when the delegated judge personally, or through another if he could, committed the sentence to execution or ordered that it be committed, his authority and jurisdiction ceases, because he has once discharged his office.

> Post diffinitivam exsecutioni mandatam exspirat delegati iurisdictio.
>
> Idem Brixiensi Episcopo.
>
> In literis, quas tua nobis destinavit fraternitas, quaestiones quasdam inseruisti, super quibus solutionem tibi a nobis postulasti exhiberi, quarum siquidem una est, scilicet usque ad quod tempus iudex delegatus partes suas possit interponere, ut stetur rei iudicatae vel transactioni? Super quo utique Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod ex quo iudex delegatus per se, vel per alium, si potuerit, sententiam exsecutioni mandavit vel mandari praecepit, eius auctoritas et iurisdictio cessat, quia semel est officio suo functus.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: When the defendant is absent but not through contumacy, a delegate appointed even for a fixed day shall not restore the plaintiff, although the plaintiff wishes to prove possession and ejectment.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint-Aubin.

By the ministry of the service undertaken, we are compelled to respond to the consultations of individuals, so that, if anything of doubt or question arises in anyone's mind, it may be resolved by the Roman Church, which by the Lord's disposition merited to obtain primacy among the others.

It was asked of us whether, if someone asserting that he was despoiled of a church or any possession without judgment and reasonable cause obtained letters from us to judges that possession should be restored to him within a certain time if it were established for the judge that he was so despoiled, possession ought to be restored to him when the one who holds the church or possession that he reclaims had, before any mention was made of the letters themselves, absented himself for the sake of studies, pilgrimage, or another cause of this kind, and cannot exhibit his presence to the judge within the fixed time.

Concerning this we respond thus to your inquiry: he neither can nor ought to have restitution, although he is prepared before the delegated judge to prove his possession and ejectment by suitable witnesses, unless the one who possesses had absented himself through contumacy. But if the judge extends the term until the return of the one who possesses, his jurisdiction expires, because without the consent of both parties it is not permitted to a judge in any way to extend a term fixed by the one delegating. [Furthermore, etc.; cf. c. 19, On the Right of Patronage, III.38.]

> Reo absente non per contumaciam, delegatus datus etiam ad diem, non restituet actorem, licet possessionem et deiectionem probare volentem.
> Idem Abbati sancti Albini.
>
> Consultationibus singalorum ex ministerio susceptae servitutis cogimur respondere, ut, si quid dubietatis vel quaestionis in mente alicuius emerserit, ab ecclesia Romana solvatur, quae inter alias disponente Domino meruit obtinere principatum. Quaesitum est a nobis siquidem, utrum, si aliquis ecclesia vel possessione qualibet se asseverans absque iudicio et causa rationabili spoliatum, et a nobis ad iudices literas obtinuerit, ut infra certum tempus restituatur sibi possessio, si constiterit iudici, eum esse taliter spoliatum, possessio debeat ei restitui, quum is, qui tenet ecclesiam vel possessionem, quam ipse requirit, antequam de literis ipsis aliqua mentio fieret, studiorum vel peregrinationis, vel alia huiusmodi causa se absentaverit, nec infra tempus praefixum iudici possit suam praesentiam exhibere? Super quo utique inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod nec potest, nec debet restitutionem habere, quamvis paratus sit coram iudice delegato testibus idoneis possessionem et deiectionem suam probare, nisi is, qui possidet, se per contumaciam absentasset. Si autem iudex usque ad reditum eius qui possidet, terminum prorogaverit, exspirat iurisdictio sua, quia sine consensu utriusque non licet iudici terminum prorogare aliquatenus praefixum a delegante. [De cetero etc. cf. c. 19. de iure patr. III. 38.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A delegate of the Pope has jurisdiction in the cause committed to him over an ordinary and any greater person.

The same, to the Bishop of Chartres.

Indeed, because you first wished to consult us how a judge delegated by us ought to compel a bishop who is not subject to him to do or give something when, by our mandate, he undertakes to terminate a cause that is pending between the bishop and a cleric or layman, we have decided to respond thus to your question: a judge delegated by us performs our functions, and hence in that cause he is superior to and greater than those whose cause he undertook to terminate.

Therefore, if a bishop or another person who is not of his jurisdiction should be rebellious or contumacious in a cause that we delegate to him, according to the quality or quantity of the deed he will be able to be compelled by the delegated judge with a sentence either of interdict or suspension, in such a way that the judge, proceeding temperately according to the quality of the business, forbids the bishop either entry into the church or the priestly office, or even subjects to interdict that bishop's land which pertains specially to his jurisdiction. [Concerning witnesses, etc.; cf. c. 5, On Compelling Witnesses (2, 14), in Compilation I.]

> Delegatus Papae in causa sibi commissa iurisdictionem habet super ordinarium et quemcunque maiorem.
> Idem Carnotensi Episcopo.
>
> Sane quia nos inprimis consulere voluisti, qualiter a nobis iudex delegatus episcopum, qui ei non subest, ad aliquid faciendum vel dandum compellere debeat, quum causam, quae inter episcopum et clericum vel laicum vertitur, de mandato nostro suscipit terminandam, id Tuae quaestioni duximus respondendum, quod iudex a nobis delegatus vices nostras gerit, unde in causa illa superior est, et maior illis, quorum causam suscepit terminandam. Ideoque, si episcopus vel alia persona, quae non sit de iurisdictione illius, in causa, quam ei delegamus, rebellis aut contumax fuerit, secundum qualitatem vel quantitatem facti poterit vel interdicti vel suspensionis sententia a iudice delegato compelli ita, quod iudex, secundum negotii qualitatem temperate procedens, episcopo vel ingressum ecclesiae, vel sacerdotale officium interdicat, aut etiam terram illius, quae ad iurisdictionem suam pertinet specialiter, interdicto supponat. [De testibus etc. cf. c. 5. de test. cog. (2, 14.) in Comp. I.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If the first man obtained the first dignity to become vacant in a church, and a second obtained a certain dignity of that church when it became vacant, and it afterwards becomes vacant, it is owed to the first and not the second. This is what it says, and it is a notable decision.

The same, to the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Coventry.

On behalf of N., a chaplain, it became known to us that, when he obtained our letters to you, brother of Coventry, that you should assign him the archdeaconry that should first happen to become vacant in your church, R., his adversary, obtained other letters, as is said, to you, brother of York, with no mention of the earlier ones, that, if his maternal uncle wished altogether to relinquish the archdeaconry that he held in the same church, you should cause it to be assigned to him.

Therefore, because, if we had remembered that we had directed our letters for the aforesaid N., as we have said, we would in no way have written for his adversary, and being unwilling that our letters that we sent for the same N. lack effect on this occasion, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings, under precept, that you assign to the aforesaid N. the archdeaconry of that church, if it is vacant, notwithstanding the later letters.

> Si primus impetravit primam dignitatem in ecclesia vacaturam, secundus impetravit certam dignitatem ipsius ecclesiae, quum vacaret, et illa postmodum vacat, debetur primo, et non secundo. H. d. et est notabilis decisio.
> Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo et Episcopo Conventrensi.
> Ex parte N. capellani nobis innotuit, quod, quum ad te, frater Conventrensis, nostras literas impetraverit, ut ei archidiaconatum, quem in ecclesia tua primo vacare contingeret, assignares, R.

adversarius eius alias ad te, frater Eboracensis, literas, sicut dicitur, impetravit, nulla de prioribus habita mentione, ut, si avunculus suus archidiaconatum, quem habebat in ecclesia eadem, vellet omnino dimittere, ipsum ei faceres assignari. Quoniam igitur, si memores fuissemus, nos pro praedicto N. literas nostras, sicut praediximus, direxisse, pro adversario eius nullatenus scripsissemus, nolentes literas nostras, quas pro eodem N. misimus, occasione hac effectu carere, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo, mandamus, quatenus praefato N. archidiaconatum ipsius ecclesiae, si vacat, non obstantibus posterioribus literis assignetis.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Where a contrary will of the Pope does not appear, a delegate ought to preserve the form of law and admit reasonable exceptions. Johannes Andreae.

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

On your part it has been asked of us whether, when we commit some cause under a certain form, the delegated judges ought so to follow the form committed to them that they do not admit reasonable exceptions. Upon this we answer your question in this manner: even if at times it is expedient for a delegated judge to preserve the form prescribed to him, he nevertheless ought to admit reasonable exceptions and proceed in the cause according to the equity of law, unless it is expressed in our letters that no exceptions ought to be admitted. We believe that neither we nor our predecessors have ever expressed this.

Ubi contraria voluntas Papae non apparet, delegatus iuris formam servare debet, et rationabiles exceptiones admittere. Ioan. Andr.

Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo.

Ex parte tua quaesitum est a nobis, utrum, quum causam aliquam sub certa forma committimus, iudices delegati ita formam sibi commissam debeant sequi, quod rationabiles exceptiones non admittant? Super quo Quaestioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, et si quando iudici delegato expediat formam sibi statutam servare, debet tamen rationabiles exceptiones admittere, et in causa iuxta iuris aequitatem procedere, nisi exprimatur in literis nostris, quod nullae debeant exceptiones admitti. Quod nec nos, nec antecessores nostros credimus unquam expressisse.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A delegation made to a dignity, without a proper name being expressed, passes to the successor.

The same, to the Abbot and Convent of Marmoutier.

Since the Abbot of Leicester, who, after first receiving our mandate, fixed a day for the parties to act, having first taken the counsel of prudent men, joined to himself in cognizance of the cause the newly substituted Abbot of Winchester in place of the judge who had previously died, after our mandate had been presented to him, because the commission of the letters emanated from us under the express names of places and not of persons, we therefore hold their sentence ratified and firm, insofar as it is just.

Delegatio facta dignitati, non expresso nomine proprio, transit ad successorem.

Idem Abbati et Conventui maioris monasterii.

Quoniam abbas Leicestriae, qui prius suscepto mandato nostro partibus diem ad agendum praefixit, praehabito consilio prudentum, abbatem Vincestriae de novo substitutum iudici praemortuo, illi mandato nostro porrecto, quia sub expressis nominibus locorum et non personarum commissio literarum a nobis emanavit, sibi socium in causae cognitione adiunxit, ideo nos sententiam illorum, sicut est iusta, ratam et firmam habemus.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: If the Pope delegates a question concerning the right of presentation, appeal having been removed, and under this form, that the delegate should ordain the church upon the presentation of the one to whom he shall see that it pertains, through this he does not have power to institute, but to pronounce judgment, and the one to whom it pertains shall institute; and, if his right is impaired, he lawfully appeals.

The same.

Concerning what, moreover, you wished to add, namely, if, after a question has arisen among certain persons concerning the presentation of a priest, it should happen that the cause is delegated to someone under this form—that, if it should be established that the right in question pertains to either party, upon that party's presentation he should ordain the church with a suitable person, appeal having been removed—whether it is lawful for the delegated judge, without the diocesan bishop's knowledge, or when the archdeacon or archpriest protests, to put the cleric presented to him into possession of the church, especially if the person presented was unknown or less suitable; and whether, if the archpriest, archdeacon, or bishop to whom institution pertains should appeal, deference is to be given to their appeals: concerning this we wish your discretion to hold that, although we commit to someone for determination, appeal having been removed, the question that is disputed concerning presentation, it is nevertheless not our intention to generate prejudice to the diocesan bishop, archdeacon, or archpriest. Therefore, the one who is to be presented must be presented to him by whom he is to be instituted. And their appeal shall hold if, seeing their right impaired, they should decide to appeal, because the remedy of appeal has been removed not from them, but from the parties between whom the cause was committed. [But concerning churches, etc., cf. c. 9, On Census, III. 39.]

Si quaestionem de iure praesentandi Papa delegat appellatione remota, et sub ea forma, ut delegatus ad praesentationem eius, ad quem viderit pertinere, ordinet ecclesiam, per hoc non habet instituere, sed pronunciare, et is, ad quem pertinet, instituet; et si iuri suo detrahitur, licite appellat.

Idem.

Super eo vero, quod subiungere voluisti, si, de praesentatione presbyteri inter aliquos quaestione suborta, causam contigerit delegari alicui sub hac forma, ut, si constiterit ius, de quo agitur, ad partem alterutram pertinere, ad praesentationem eiusdem de persona idonea ordinet ecclesiam appellatione remota, an liceat delegato iudici, inscio dioecesano episcopo, vel archidiacono vel archipresbytero reclamante, praesentatum sibi clericum in possessionem ecclesiae mittere, praesertim si ignotus fuerit praesentatus, aut minus idoneus, et an, si archipresbyter, vel archidiaconus, vel episcopus, ad quem institutio pertinet, appellaverit, eorum sit appellationibus deferendum, hoc tuam volumus discretionem tenere, quod, licet quaestionem, quae de praesentatione vertitur, appellatione remota committamus alicui terminandam, non tamen est nostrae intentionis dioecesano episcopo, archidiacono vel archipresbytero, praeiudicium generare. Ideoque praesentandus est illi, qui instituendus fuerit. Et tenebit eorum appellatio, si videntes iuri suo detrahi duxerint appellandum, quia non illis, sed partibus, inter quas causa commissa est, appellationis remedium est sublatum. [Ecclesiis autem etc. cf. c. 9. de cens. III. 39.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: If a cause is delegated simply to two persons, the sentence of one does not hold.

The same.

We remember having committed to our venerable brothers, the Bishops of Fréjus and Gap, the matrimonial cause that is known to be conducted between the woman I. and Blanchacius. When they had indeed convened together and, as we have learned, had ordered that woman to be restored to the man, the man so afflicted the woman with torments and lashes that, unwilling and coerced, she confessed a relationship of kinship between herself and her husband. And so it happened that at the judgment of one of them he put away the same woman, who is said to have borne him five sons and to have remained with him for fourteen years without any question.

Hence, because matrimony is proved to be so great a sacrament in the Church of God that it ought not to be dissolved without a reasonable and evident cause, especially since it was instituted not by man but by God, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that you diligently and subtly inquire into the truth of this matter; and, if you find that the aforesaid B. separated the said I. from himself solely at the judgment of one of the aforesaid bishops, because, when a cause is committed to two persons, the sentence of one does not hold, after prior admonition you are to compel him, appeal having been removed, to receive the same woman kindly as his wife and to treat her with marital affection. But if perchance he should disdain to do this, appeal ceasing, you are to bind him and the woman brought in over her with the bond of excommunication. If, nevertheless, any persons should appear who, after she has been received back by him, wish and are lawfully able to challenge their marriage, after the parties have been summoned before you, you are to hear the cause and terminate it with a canonical end, appeal having been removed, employing that maturity and circumspection which it is fitting to employ in the whole business.

Unde quoniam matrimonium in ecclesia Dei adeo magnum sacramentum comprobatur, quod sine rationabili et evidenti causa dissolvi non debet, praesertim quum non ab homine, sed a Deo sit institutum, Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus huius rei veritatem diligenter et subtiliter inquiratis, et, si inveneritis, quod praefatus B. dictam I. ad iudicium solummodo alterius praedictorum episcoporum a se separasset, quia,

The same, to the Bishops of Oxford and Winchester and the Abbot of Hereford.

We committed under a certain form to you, brother bishops, and to our venerable brother the Bishop of London, for termination, the cause that is disputed between the noblemen F. and R. of Ardenna, formerly the son of Agatha, concerning the birth-status of Agatha. But because the same F. of Ardenna held the aforesaid Bishop of London entirely suspect, for the reason that he is the lord of the aforesaid R., we decided that he should be removed and that you, son abbot, should be substituted in his place. The same.

When, by consulting us, you seek to be taught whether it pertains to you to confirm the sentence that judges delegated by us have rendered in causes in your province, although nothing concerning the causes [themselves] was conducted in your presence, we answer your consultation by the present letters that you are not bound to confirm that sentence unless you wish to do so. But know that this is incumbent upon you by duty of office: if the sentence cannot be put into execution at the mandate of those judges, you are to furnish them aid and favor; and you will be able to confirm it if you know that it was rendered reasonably.

Likewise, if, concerning a cause that is committed to you by our delegation, an appeal has been interposed by one or more ecclesiastical persons to whom, so that [meanwhile] you may spare the parties' labors and expenses, you commit cognizance of that cause and examination of the witnesses while reserving the sentence to yourself, you are not bound, in view of an appeal of this kind, to leave the cause itself undetermined.

Latin source headnote: The jurisdiction of a delegate before whom the issue had been joined does not expire upon the death of the delegator.

Lucius III, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans.

It has been reported [on your part that, although the remedy of appeal had been removed in commissions made by Alexander III, our predecessor of holy memory, nevertheless one of the parties alleges that the mandate expired upon the death of the mandator, whether or not the issue had been joined, and therefore, all business having been postponed, you await an apostolic mandate in suspense.] We therefore answer your consultation [by the authority of these presents] that, if the issue had been joined before the death of our predecessor, the mandate in no way expired upon the death of the mandator. But if he died before the joinder of issue, the judges whom he had delegated are not to proceed in that case by virtue of a delegation of this kind. Therefore, appeal ceasing, it will be possible to proceed in that case in which, before the mandator's death, the issue had been joined through statement and answer. But where the mandator's death preceded joinder of issue, the proceeding is to stop altogether, whether or not an obstacle of appeal had been interposed. Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: If the delegate cited the party before the death of the delegator, his jurisdiction has been perpetuated. And one who pursues the suit before the judge from whom he appealed renounces the appeal.

Urban III.

We consider it pleasing and acceptable that you expend due care upon the business committed to your discretion and, in matters that cause doubt, in keeping with the gravity of your office, seek the judgment of the Apostolic See. Indeed, your devotion has consulted us whether, when an edict of citation was issued before the death of the delegator but the issue was joined after the death of the [delegator], the delegated judge ought nevertheless to proceed in the cause; and whether one is understood to have renounced an appeal who, after it had been interposed, sought adjournments for producing witnesses and then, renouncing production and pleading, sought to have the attestations solemnly published, just as you assert that all this happened under your examination around the death of Pope Lucius, our predecessor of good memory, who had delegated you as judges.

We answer your inquiry in this manner: because in the former case, once the citation had been made, the business was, as it were, begun, and especially if the delegate is not certain of the death of the delegator, there can and ought to be proceeding in the cause, and whatever, with justice as guide, shall have been definitively determined through judicial procedure shall hold. But in the second case there appears to have been a withdrawal from the appeal, if it should be established that the one who appealed proceeded in accordance with the matters set forth above.

Si delegatus citavit ante mortem delegantis, perpetuata est eius iurisdictio. Et appellationi renunciat qui coram iudice, a quo appellavit, litem prosequitur.

Urban III.

Gratum gerimus et acceptum, quod in negotiis vestrae discretioni commissis debitam curam impenditis, et in his, quae dubitationem faciunt, pro gravitate vestri officii censuram sedis apostolicae postulatis. Sane consuluit nos devotio vestra, an ante obitum delegantis, proposito citationis edicto, lite vero post mortem [delegantis] contestata, nihilominus debeat in causa procedere iudex delegatus; et utrum is intelligatur appellationi renunciasse, qui ea interposita ad producendos testes inducias postulavit, et demum productioni et allegationi renuncians, attestationes petiit solenniter publicari, sicut hoc totum circa decessum bonae memoriae praedecessoris nostri Lucii Papae, qui vos iudices delegaverat, sub examine vestro asseritis contigisse. Nos autem inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum in casu priori citatione facta negotium sit quasi coeptum, et maxime, si delegatus non sit certus de obitu delegantis, potest et debet in causa procedi, tenebitque quod iustitia fuerit praevia iudiciali tramite diffinitum. In secundo vero casu videtur ab appellatione recessum, si secundum ea, quae praemissa sunt, eum, qui appellaverit, constiterit processisse.

Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: If a cause is committed to three delegates with the clause, "but if not all, etc.," before the incapacity of the third becomes apparent, two cannot proceed, and, if they proceed, they do nothing. This is what it says, as far as § We add. § 1. The clause, "if not all of you are able," includes will under incapacity with respect to perfecting the jurisdiction of the co-judges. The same applies to two appointed with the clause, "but if both." This is what it says, as far as § The sixth. § 2. If the defendant before the delegate objects against the plaintiff that he is excommunicated, but does not prove it within the due time, the plaintiff is heard. But if he proves it, the delegate shall absolve the plaintiff if he was excommunicated on account of the cause committed to him. If on account of another cause, he shall remit him to his excommunicator. If the latter does not wish to absolve him, the Pope's delegate shall absolve him, unless it is among the cases reserved to the Pope. This is what it says. § 3. One absolved by the delegate concerning the cause for which he had been excommunicated shall appear, or answer concerning that cause, before the excommunicator, unless it has been delegated to another; and, if the excommunicator has maliciously delayed, the delegate who absolved him shall take cognizance. This is what it says.

Celestine III.

Your prudence: (And below: [cf. c. sole, On the Amendment of the Pleading, II. 4.]) In the fifth place, moreover, you entreat to be informed whether, when a cause is committed to three or more persons in such a way that, if all are unable to take part, two shall nevertheless execute it, if the defendant has been summoned by only two, he is necessarily bound to come; and, if he has been cited by only two or by more, [and] has appeared before two, while the third or another beyond him neither comes in person nor excuses himself by letter, as is customarily done, whether the two present can proceed in the cause, define it, and terminate it by the reckoning of a sentence.

In this case we answer in this manner: when any one of the delegated judges has not shown through a reliable messenger or an excuse sent in writing that he is unable to take part, or it cannot otherwise be canonically established concerning the same, the remaining judges ought not to proceed to cognizance of the cause. But if they proceed, they shall be reckoned to have done nothing. This indeed was the ancient provision of the Apostolic See, that it would more willingly delegate recognitions [and decisions] of causes of this kind to two persons than to one, and to three than to two, since, as the sacred canons attest, a judgment that is confirmed by the opinions of several persons is complete. For anyone who should presume to judge outside the form of the rescript received would be proved to exceed the bounds of the mandate.

§ 1. We add also that, where it has been set down in the commission that, if all are unable to take part, two shall nevertheless execute it, even if one of them, although he is able, is unwilling to take part, the two are nevertheless to proceed in the cause, although that third person is to be most gravely reproved because he evades or disdains to execute the apostolic mandate. We say that precisely the same is to be observed also in a cause that is committed to two persons with this added: that, if both are unable to take part, the one shall nevertheless execute it.

§ 2. The sixth question proposed to us on your part contained this: when a cause is committed to certain judges, and it sometimes happens that the defendant objects against the plaintiff that he cannot stand in judgment, inasmuch as he is bound by the bond of excommunication, if the defendant is unwilling, or is unable, immediately to prove him excommunicated, whether the plaintiff ought nevertheless to be heard until the truth of the matter that is objected has been disclosed and unraveled. We remove this doubt in this manner: if the one who objects to something of this kind does not immediately, or within a competent term, prove lawfully what he contends, the plaintiff ought to be permitted to be heard without any impediment. But if, either from the plaintiff's confession or in any other manner, it should be lawfully established that the plaintiff is bound by the bond of excommunication, he can lawfully be absolved by the delegated judges according to the form of the Church, [provided] that, if he was excommunicated by an ordinary or delegated judge on account of another just and evident cause, he ought to be remitted to the excommunicator to be absolved. But if the latter has employed malice, the delegated judges are freely to execute this according to ecclesiastical rite, provided that the kind of excommunication is not of that [offense] whose absolution is reserved solely to the Apostolic See; for it is established law that, to delegated judges to whom the principal matter is committed, the accessory matter is also committed.

§ 3. But if he has been absolved by these judges—after, namely, furnishing an oath that he will stand by the mandate of the Church—you ask again [to be taught] whether he is bound to answer concerning the same cause for which he had been excommunicated before the same delegated judges or before the ordinary by whom he had been excommunicated, and by whose judgment or mandate he ought to stand. In this case we answer thus: he ought to stand before the excommunicators themselves concerning that cause for which he had been excommunicated and to observe their mandate, unless that business has been specially delegated to other judges by the Apostolic See. But if the excommunicators have maliciously delayed, then the delegates shall exercise in the accessory matter the same jurisdiction as in the principal matter. In hoc casu taliter respondemus, quod, quum aliquis delegatorum iudicium per certum nuncium vel excusatorem literatorie destinatum non ostenderit, se interesse non posse, vel alias de eodem canonice constare non poterit, residui procedere ad causae cognitionem non debent. Quodsi processerint, nihil reputabuntur egisse; illa quippe fuit antiqua sedis apostolicae provisio, ut huiusmodi causarum recognitiones [et decisiones] duobus quam uni, tribus quam duobus libentius delegaret, quum, sicut sacri canones attestantur, integrum sit iudicium, quod plurimorum sententiis confirmatur. Idem quoque per omnia dicimus observandum in causa, quae committitur duobus, eo apposito, ut, si ambo interesse nequiverint, alter nihilominus exsequatur. § 2. Sexta nobis proposita ex parte tua quaestio continebat, quod, quum aliquibus iudicibus causa committitur, et quandoque contingit, quod reus actori obiicit, quod stare non potest in iudicio, utpote vinculo excommunicationis adstrictus, si reus non velit statim eum probare excommunicatum, sive non possit, an actor nihilominus audiri debeat, donec super eo, quod obiicitur, rei veritas fuerit patefacta et enodata? Hanc dubitationem taliter removemus, quod, si ille, qui tale quid obiicit, statim vel infra terminum competentem non probaverit legitime quod intendit, actor permitti debet, ut sine offendiculo quolibet audiatur. Ceterum, si vel ex confessione actoris, vel alio quolibet modo legitime constiterit esse actorem vinculo excommunicationis adstrictum, a iudicibus delegatis legitime secundum formam ecclesiae valet absolvi, ita [tamen] ut, si propter aliam iustam causam et evidentem ab ordinario iudice vel delegato excommunicatus fuerit, ad excommunicatorem debet absolvendus remitti. Qui si malitiam adhibuerit, delegati iudices id ritu ecclesiastico libere exsequantur, dummodo non sit tale genus excommunicationis illius [criminis] cuius duntaxat absolutio sedi apostolicae reservetur; explorati quidem iuris exsistit, ut delegatis iudicibus, quibus principale committitur, et accessorium committatur. § 3. Si vero ab his fuerit, praestito scilicet iuramento, quod stabit mandato ecclesiae, absolutus, rursus interrogas [edoceri] an coram eisdem delegatis iudicibus, vel coram ordinario, a quo excommunicatus exstitit, teneatur super eadem causa, pro qua excommunicatus fuerat, respondere, et quorum debeat iudicio vel mandato stare? In quo quidem casu taliter respondemus, quod coram ipsis excommunicatoribus super illa causa, pro qua fuerat excommunicatus, stare debet, et eorum servare mandatum, nisi specialiter fuerit illud negotium aliis iudicibus a sede apostolica delegatum. Chapter XXII

Latin source headnote: If a cause is simply delegated to three persons, two cannot proceed without the subdelegation of the third. But if they have done so, appeal can be taken from them. The same applies if they were appointed with the clause, "but if not all." For the proceeding of two without the third having been consulted is not valid. This is what it says, encompassing both understandings.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Reggio and the Bishop of Cefalù.

When the cause that is disputed between our venerable brothers, the Archbishops of Monreale and Rossano, concerning certain tithes had been committed by us to our venerable brothers, the Archbishops of Palermo and Capua, and to you, brother of Reggio, to be terminated with a due end, the aforesaid Archbishop of Monreale, as we learned from his letters, came in response to the first citation of the aforesaid Archbishops of Palermo and Capua. Established in their presence, he proposed by way of exception that, for two reasons, he ought not to stand before their judgment: first, namely, because the cause itself had been delegated to three judges, and he had been summoned to judgment by only those two, while you, brother of Reggio, although present, were unconsulted and unaware and had not committed your authority to them concerning this; and also because, before their citation and knowledge of the letters, he had sent his messenger to the Apostolic See for the same cause, in which matter he affirmed that a decretal of Pope Alexander III, our predecessor of happy memory, supported him more plainly. But the same archbishops, unwilling to admit his exceptions, rendered an interlocutory sentence against him that he should answer; on account of this, the same archbishop, feeling himself aggrieved, appealed to the Apostolic See.

We therefore commit the inquiry into the aforesaid matters and their canonical decision to the examination of your discretion, and by apostolic writings command your fraternity that, after those who ought to be summoned have been summoned before you and the truth concerning the foregoing has been more diligently inquired into, if it should be established to you that the aforesaid archbishops in no way admitted the aforesaid exceptions, notwithstanding what was done by them, you are to cause the tithes themselves—of which the aforesaid Archbishop of Monreale asserts that he was despoiled after his messenger had approached the Apostolic See on account of this, especially since he asserts that the same tithes were confirmed by the Apostolic See both to himself and to his church—to be restored with the fruits received from them, every obstacle of contradiction and appeal having been removed, whether it was done through lay power or even through the same judges; and afterwards you are to hear whatever question remains, insofar as you are able by law, and, appeal having been removed, decide it with a due end. Chapter XXIII

Latin source headnote: If two persons are delegated with the clause, "but if both, etc.," when one has been recused the other can proceed alone, nor does the proceeding hold if he proceeds with the person recused.

The same, to the Convent of Conches.

When a question concerning the abbacy of your monastery had been conducted for a rather long time between you and S., formerly your abbot, [the parties at length approaching our presence, we appointed our beloved son H., cardinal-deacon of Saint Eustachius, as auditor. In his presence it was alleged on behalf of S. in this manner: when our beloved son I., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Pudentiana and at that time legate of the Apostolic See, had entered Normandy and had held a diligent inquiry with the abbot and brothers concerning the condition of that abbey, he found nothing there worthy of reproof, as appears evidently from the letters of Pope C., our predecessor of good memory, in which that cardinal's declaration is inserted.

But after he later departed from the monastery, his letters were fraudulently obtained to our beloved sons, the Abbot of Troarn and the Prior of Saint Barbara, concerning an inquiry to be made into the abbot and the whole monastery, with no power given to the investigators to make any determination against the abbot, as is evidently gathered from the testimony of the same cardinal. Therefore, when the aforesaid investigators approached the aforementioned monastery and wished to exceed the bounds of the mandate in conducting the inquiry without preserving the order of law, the same abbot appealed to the Apostolic See before the inquiry took effect. And although he had begun his journey to come to the Roman Church, the said investigators, deferring neither to the appeal reasonably interposed nor to his absence or any excuses, promulgated against him, contrary to the order of law, a sentence of removal, although the power of pronouncing judgment had not been granted to them, as is plainly declared from the letters of many prelates.

Therefore, when the aforementioned abbot approached the presence of our said predecessor and made him more certain concerning his irregular removal, our predecessor, having annulled all things that had been ordained contrary to the order of law by the said investigators, restored the same abbot by his sentence, committing only its execution to our venerable brother the bishop and our beloved sons L. and H., the Archdeacons of Évreux. But after a day had been assigned to the parties by the bishop alone and both parties came at the term, although the abbot expected that restoration would be made to him according to the tenor of the apostolic mandate, he was unable to obtain it. On the contrary, the bishop labored by prayers, threats, and terrors to induce him to submit to that bishop as arbitrator—not concerning the making of restitution, which was the principal business, but only concerning the deferral of its execution. And because the adverse party had approached that place with arms and a multitude of armed men, it happened that, as stated above, he submitted to the said bishop as arbitrator, faith being pledged in his hand and the letters of restitution being deposited with him, not to be delivered to the adverse party but to be diligently preserved and returned to him at an opportune time. But the bishop himself, not fearing to act contrary to what he had promised, returned the aforesaid letters to the abbot's adversaries.

And thus, with the arbitration violated alike on the part of the bishop himself and of the adversaries, monks approaching the presence of Melior of good memory, cardinal-priest of the title of Saints John and Paul and at that time legate of the Apostolic See, obtained letters of commission to I., formerly Dean of Rouen, concerning the grievance of the arbitration. At his first citation a monk sent by the said abbot was captured by the adversaries and consigned to iron chains; but when the same abbot came at the second citation, he was compelled by pressure to submit to the dean as arbitrator, not concerning the abbacy, regarding which no question was disputed before him, but for the diminution of certain revenues in grain. But because the other party did not preserve its pledged faith concerning observance of the arbitration, as had been agreed, the said S. was again compelled to labor to the Apostolic See, where at length, concerning both the principal question and even the incidental question,] our letters regarding it had been directed to the Bishop of Lisieux and the Abbot of Bec, [that they should strive to elicit the truth concerning the matters that had been intimated to us and should determine what they should see was reasonably to be determined according to God, the order of law being observed in all respects, in such a way that either one should fulfill the apostolic mandate without the other if the other was unwilling or even unable to be present. Mention was made in those letters concerning the pledge of faith violently extorted, as the same S. asserted, and that it concerned not abjuring the monastery but only deferring restitution, as has been said, lest, if these matters were omitted, the commission should appear to have been obtained with the truth suppressed.

But when the parties were established before the delegated judges, the party of the man whom he called an intruder said that the aforesaid bishop was suspect to him for two reasons: both because he had a certain cause against the aforementioned monastery concerning a church, and also because he had not admitted that man, upon his return from the Roman Curia, to the kiss of peace. Hence he was unwilling to stand to law either before them or before either one of them, although he said nothing against the abbot; instead, appealing frivolously, he contumaciously absented himself. But the said executors, by no means deferring to the appeal, which was no appeal at all, having taken the counsel of many prudent men, put into execution the sentence rendered by our said predecessor, restoring the abbacy to the aforesaid S. and imposing perpetual silence upon the aforesaid intruder.

And when the diocesan bishop, although frequently required at their command on the part of the Apostolic See, refused to induct S. himself into corporal possession, they committed its execution to certain deacons. These not only were not admitted, but, afflicted with blows by the monks and their supporters, were consigned to confinement in prison. On this account, a sentence of excommunication was promulgated by the delegates against the intruder, the monks, and their supporters, according to the tenor of the apostolic mandate. But the intruder and monks did not on this account cease to celebrate divine offices; after that intruder had died, they even presumed to elect another excommunicated man, as is evidently perceived from the delegates' letters.

And when not even thus could they be led back to the fruit of a better life, the oft-mentioned S. began a journey to come to the Apostolic See. But messengers of the monks, anticipating him, fraudulently obtained letters concerning the conferral of the gift of benediction upon the one whom they had elected, which they sent to their region more hastily than they ought. The said S. therefore sought that those monks—who presumed to cut out the tongue and tear out the eyes of one of his predecessors, attacked another while he sat at table with swords and clubs, and left another alone in the church prepared to celebrate Mass—be punished with fitting chastisement; that possession of the abbacy be fully restored to him, as had been determined by our said predecessor and afterwards ordained by the delegated judges; and that the intruder who had been assumed after a sentence of excommunication had been rendered against him be condemned by perpetual silence.

But, on the contrary, it was proposed on your behalf in this manner: when the aforesaid Cardinal I. was exercising the office of legate in those regions and committed to the aforesaid Abbot of Troarn and Prior of Saint Barbara for termination the cause itself concerning both the waste committed by S. himself and his incontinence, after ascertaining the truth and observing the order of law in every respect, they rendered against him a sentence of deposition, which was afterwards confirmed by our said predecessor. But S. himself intimated to the same predecessor of ours that he had been unjustly despoiled of that abbacy, the aforesaid cardinal likewise asserting that it had not been his intention that the delegated judges should proceed to the abbot's deposition, although this too had been committed to them, as is found in their letters. Hence, our oft-mentioned predecessor did not restore him in the absence of the other party, but ordered that he be restored by the aforementioned bishop and archdeacons, because it had been concealed from them that the aforesaid cardinal had also granted to the said abbot and prior the power of deposing him.

Therefore, when the parties convened on the day and at the place assigned to them by the delegates of the Apostolic See, the said S., with faith pledged, affirmed in the bishop's hand that he would stand by his arbitration concerning that cause. The bishop diligently admonished the parties to direct themselves toward the things that belong to peace, and such a settlement was made between them that the said S. would withdraw from the abbacy in perpetuity. The delegated judges held that withdrawal ratified, and the same S., as is contained in the delegates' letters, affirmed by oath that he would firmly observe it. And although he had obtained duplicate letters of entirely the same content concerning his restoration, after the settlement was made—which our oft-mentioned predecessor later confirmed—he surrendered one and fraudulently retained the other.

But, after the passage of time, when the settlement had been observed by him for a while, he caused the same cause to be committed, through the aforementioned Cardinal Melior, to the former Dean of Rouen. In the presence of the dean and of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Rouen, the first settlement was renewed, and there the aforesaid S. again abjured the abbacy and corporally furnished an oath that he would henceforth observe the settlement itself, as is contained in the letters of the Archbishop of Rouen himself and could be proved by many witnesses. These things were done before the Dean of Rouen chiefly for this reason: the priory that S. himself was to obtain was situated in the diocese of Rouen. When he had held it for two years and, by living dishonorably, had consumed almost everything, he violently extended his grasp to other goods of the monastery.

And finally, approaching our presence and expressing certain of the foregoing matters but keeping others silent, he carried back our letters to the aforesaid Bishop of Lisieux and the Abbot of Val-Richer, that they should diligently inquire into the truth of all matters and determine what justice demanded. But when they had cited the parties before them, although the bishop was suspect to the other party for the aforementioned reasons and because he answered Abbot R. that, if he could, he would harm him, and although he had been recused by that party and the latter wished to prove this before the co-judge who was not suspect or before arbiters chosen by the parties, the said Abbot of Val-Richer was unwilling to admit this. An appeal was afterwards taken from those two before entry into the cause; they nevertheless decreed by sentence that S. himself was to be restored, imposing perpetual silence upon his adversary concerning the abbacy.

Therefore, when the aforesaid cardinal had prudently and faithfully reported the foregoing and certain other matters to us and our brothers, because it was established to us through the letters of the aforesaid judges, the bishop and Archdeacon of Évreux, to whom the cause concerning the restoration of S. himself had been committed by our said predecessor, that with the assent of both parties a settlement had been made under this tenor: that the Priory of Saint Stephen, with all its appurtenances, and certain other things were granted to him to possess for as long as he lived; that he withdrew from the suit by his spontaneous will; and that he surrendered his instruments into the hands of those judges after breaking the seal that he had used; and because we evidently perceive from the letters of the aforementioned Archbishop of Rouen that he abjured the aforementioned abbacy, we, being unwilling that through us, who punish perjuries, a way be opened to perjuries, since by receiving a settlement of this kind he also renounced the abbacy, with the counsel of our brothers communicated, absolve you and your monastery from the legal attack of S. himself, imposing perpetual silence upon him concerning that question. What was done by the last delegates does not stand in the way, since from these matters it appears evidently that, to say nothing of the others, if the foregoing matters were established to them, they proceeded less than lawfully by restoring one who had no right to seek anything back. And]

Although the abbot alone, before appeal was taken from him, could have proceeded according to the form of our letters, nevertheless, by the fact that he held an interlocutory conference with the bishop himself, he consequently confessed that the appeal earlier interposed from the same bishop had not held and that, by law, he could not fulfill the apostolic mandate without him when he was able but unwilling to take part in the business. Nor was it his intention to decide anything without his co-judge; and with one who had already ceased to be a judge he was unable lawfully to determine anything concerning the aforesaid business. Thus, their will and power were mutually opposed: since he was unwilling to do what he was able to do, and was unable to fulfill what he wished to do, what had been done by the two could not by law obtain effect. Therefore let no one, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Ides of April. [1199.]

The ungrammatical episcopos—which also appears in Friedberg's printed text—has been corrected to episcopus as required by the singular verb esset. The edition's reading Lesionensem has been rendered "of Lisieux"; Friedberg's apparatus records Lexoviensem among the variants, and the same bishop is called Lexoviensis later in the chapter.

Quum super abbatia monasterii vestri inter vos et S. quondam abbatem vestrum fuisset quaestio diutius agitata, [partibus tandem ad nostram praesentiam accedentibus dilectum filium nostrum H. sancti Eustachii diaconum cardinalem dedimus auditorem, in cuius praesentia pro ipso S. taliter fuit allegatum, quod, quum dilectus filius noster I. tit. S. Pudentianae presbyter cardinalis, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, intrasset Normanniam, et super statu ipsius abbatiae cum abbate ac fratribus inquisitionem habuerit diligentem, nihil reprehensione dignum invenit ibidem; sicut ex literis bonae memoriae C. Papae praedecessoris nostri evidenter apparet, quibus ipsius cardinalis confessio est inserta. Eo vero postmodum ab ipso monasterio recedente, literae ipsius ad dilectos filios Troarnensem abbatem et priorem S. Barbarae fraudulenter obtentae fuerunt super inquisitione abbatis et totius monasterii facienda, nulla data inquisitoribus potestate in abbatem aliquid statuendi, quemadmodum ex testimonio eiusdem cardinalis colligitur evidenter. Praedictis ergo inquisitoribus accedentibus ad monasterium memoratum, et volentibus fines mandati excedere in facienda inquisitione iuris ordine non servato, idem abbas, antequam inquisitio sortiretur effectum, sedem apostolicam appellavit, et quamvis iter arripuisset ad Romanam ecclesiam veniendi, dicti tamen inquisitores, nec appellationi rationabiliter interpositae, neque ipsius absentiae vel excusationibus aliquibus deferentes, destitutionis in eum sententiam contra iuris ordinem promulgarunt, licet non pronunciandi potestas eis esset concessa, sicut ex multorum praelatorum literis liquido declaratur. Memorato igitur abbate ad dicti praedecessoris nostri praesentiam accedente, postquam de inordinata destitutione sua eum reddidit certiorem, omnibus irritatis quae contra iuris ordinem a dictis inquisitoribus fuerant ordinata, eundem abbatem sententia sua restituit, exsecutione sola venerabili fratri nostro episcopo et dilectis filiis L. et H. archidiaconis Ebroicensibus demandata. Die vero a solo episcopo partibus assignata, et ad terminum utraque partium veniente, quum exspectaret abbas restitutionem fieri sibi secundum apostolici mandati tenorem, eam non potuit obtinere; quin potius precibus, minis et terroribus eum episcopus inducere laboravit, ut in ipsum, non super restitutione facienda, quod erat principale negotium, compromitteret, sed super exsecutione tantummodo differenda. Et quoniam pars adversa cum armis illuc accesserat et multitudine armatorum, factum est, quod in dictum episcopum, sicut praemissum est, compromisit, fide in manu ipsius praestita, et restitutionis literis depositis apud eum, non tradendis parti adversae, sed diligenter servandis, et restituendis sibi tempore opportuno. Ipse vero episcopus contra id, quod promiserat, venire non metuens, adversariis abbatis literas restituit memoratas, sicque compromisso ex parte ipsius episcopi et adversariorum pariter violato, monachi bonae memoriae Melioris tit. SS. Iohannis et Pauli presbyteri cardinalis, tunc apostolicae sedis legati, praesentiam adeuntes, ad I. quondam Rothomagensem decanum super gravamine compromissi commissionis literas impetrarunt, ad cuius primam citationem monachus a dicto abbate transmissus captus fuit ab adversariis, et vinculis ferreis mancipatus; ad secundam vero citationem idem abbas accedens, per impressionem coactus fuit compromittere in decanum, non super abbatia, de qua sub eo nulla quaestio vertebatur, sed pro quibusdam bladi reditibus minuendis. Parte autem altera super compromisso servando fidem, sicut convenerat, non servante, dictum S. iterum oportuit ad sedem apostolicam laborare, ubi a nobis tam super principali quam incidenti etiam quaestione] demum super ea ad Lesionensem episcopum et abbatem de Becco nostrae fuerant literae destinatae, [ut super his, quae nobis fuerant intimata, studerent elicere veritatem, et statuerent quod secundum Deum viderent rationabiliter statuendum, iuris ordine per omnia observato, ita quod alter sine altero adesse nolente vel etiam non valente mandatum apostolicum adimpleret, mentione facta in literis ipsis de fide violenter, sicut idem S. asserebat, extorta, et non super monasterio abiurando, sed restitutione, ut dictum est, tantummodo differenda: ne, his omissis, tacita veritate commissio videretur obtenta. Partibus vero coram delegatis iudicibus constitutis, pars illius, quem dixit intrusum, praefatum episcopum duabus de causis sibi dixit esse suspectum; tum quia super ecclesia quandam causam habebat cum monasterio memorato; tum etiam, quia ipsum a Romana curia redeuntem ad pacis osculum non admisit, unde neque coram illis, neque coram illorum altero iuri stare voluit, quamvis nihil diceret in abbatem, sed appellans frustratorie se contumaciter absentavit. Verum dicti exsecutores appellationi, quae nulla fuerat, minime deferentes, habito multorum prudentium virorum consilio, sententiam a dicto praedecessore nostro prolatam exsecutioni mandarunt, restituentes praedicto S. abbatiam, et praefato intruso perpetuum silentium imponentes. Quumque ad eorum ex parte apostolica iussionem dioecesanus episcopus saepius requisitus ipsum S. in corporalem possessionem inducere recusaret, id exsequendum quibusdam diaconibus mandaverunt, qui nedum quod admissi fuerunt, verum per monachos et fautores eorum afflicti verberibus, carcerali sunt custodiae mancipati. Quapropter in intrusum, monachos et fautores eorum a delegatis fuit secundum apostolici mandati tenorem excommunicationis sententia promulgata. Sed ob hoc intrusus et monachi non dimiserunt divina officia celebrare; qui etiam ipso intruso defuncto alium excommunicatum eligere praesumpserunt, sicut ex delegatorum literis perpenditur evidenter. Quumque nec sic possent ad frugem melioris vitae reduci, saepedictus S. iter arripuit ad sedem apostolicam veniendi. Sed praevenientes eum nuncii monachorum, de benedictionis munere illi quem elegerant impendendo fraudulenter literas impetrarunt, quas ad partes suas miserunt festinantius quam deberent. Petebat itaque dictus S. monachos ipsos (qui cuidam praedecessorum suorum amputare linguam et oculos eruere praesumpserunt, in alium sedentem ad mensam cum gladiis et fustibus impetum facientes, alium solum in ecclesia dimittentes missam celebrare paratum) animadversione condigna puniri, et possessionem abbatiae plenarie sibi restitui, sicut a dicto praedecessore nostro statutum fuerat et a delegatis postea iudicibus ordinatum, intruso, qui post latam in eum sententiam excommunicationis assumptus fuerat, per silentium perpetuum condemnato. Ceterum pro vobis ita fuit propositum ex adverso, quod, quum praefatus I. cardinalis in partibus illis legationis officio fungeretur, et causam ipsam super dilapidatione ipsius S. et incontinentia pariter praefatis abbati Troarnensi et priori sanctae Barbarae commiserit terminandam, ipsi cognita veritate, et ordine iuris per omnia observato, in eum depositionis sententiam protulerunt, quae a dicto praedecessore nostro fuit postea confirmata. Ipse autem S. eidem praedecessori nostro, quod abbatia ipsa iniuste spoliatus fuerit, intimavit; praefato cardinali etiam asserente, non fuisse intentionis suae, quod ad depositionem abbatis procederent iudices delegati, quamvis et hoc esset eis commissum, sicut in eorundem literis reperitur. Unde saepedictus praedecessor noster eum non restituit altera parte absente, sed restituendum mandavit episcopo et archidiacono memoratis, quia tacitum eis fuerat, quod praefatus cardinalis dictis abbati et priori deponendi etiam concesserit facultatem. Convenientibus igitur partibus ad diem et locum sibi a delegatis sedis apostolicae assignatum, dictus S. in manu episcopi, quod eius super causa ipsa staret arbitrio, fide data firmavit, qui partes ipsas, ut ad ea, quae pacis sunt, intenderent, monuit diligenter; inter quas talis compositio intercessit, ut dictus S. in perpetuum cederet abbatiae. Quam cessionem ratam delegati iudices habuerunt, et idem S. (sicut in delegatorum literis continetur) iuramento firmavit, se illam firmiter servaturum. Et quum super restitutione sua duplices literas eiusdem prorsus continentiae impetrasset, facta compositione, quam saepedictus praedecessor noster postea confirmavit, alteras resignavit, alteras retinuit fraudulenter. Processu vero temporis compositione ab eo aliquamdiu observata, per iam dictum Meliorem cardinalem quondam Rothomagensi decano eandem fecit causam committi, fuitque in eius praesentia et venerabilis fratris nostri Rothomagensis archiepiscopi prima compositio innovata, ubi praefatus S. abbatiam denuo abiuravit, et quod compositionem ipsam deinceps observaret, corporaliter praestitit iuramentum, sicut in ipsius Rothomagensis archiepiscopi literis continetur, et multis posset testibus approbari. Fuerunt autem ista coram Rothomagensi facta ea praecipue ratione, quoniam prioratus, quem ipse S. debuit obtinere, in Rothomagensi erat dioecesi constitutus, quem quum per biennium detinens, inhoneste vivendo fere omnia consumpsisset, ad alia bona monasterii se violenter extendit. Et tandem ad praesentiam nostram accedens, et quaedam de praemissis exprimens, alia vero reticens, ad praefatos Lexoviensem episcopum et abbatem Vallis Richerii nostras literas reportavit, ut diligenter inquirerent de omnibus veritatem, et statuerent quod iustitia postularet. Ipsi vero partibus ad se citatis, quamvis episcopus pro memoratis causis, et quoniam R. abbati respondit, quod, si posset, sibi noceret, esset alteri parti suspectus, et ab eo fuerit recusatus, velletque coram coniudice, qui suspectus non erat, vel coram arbitris electis a partibus id probare, dicto abbate Vallis Richerii admittere hoc nolente, ante ingressum causae fuit ab illis duobus postmodum appellatum, ipsi nihilominus eundem S. restituendum sententialiter decreverunt, adversario eius super abbatia perpetuum silentium imponentes. Quum igitur quae praemissa sunt et alia quaedam praedictus cardinalis nobis et fratribus nostris prudenter et fideliter retulisset, quia constitit nobis per literas iudicum praedictorum episcopi et archidiaconi Ebroicensis, quibus super restitutione ipsius S. a dicto praedecessore nostro fuerat causa commissa, de utriusque partis assensu compositionem sub eo tenore factam fuisse, quod prioratus S. Stephani cum omnibus pertinentiis suis et alia quaedam sibi concessa fuerunt, dum viveret, possidenda, et ipse a lite spontanea voluntate recessit, et instrumenta sua fracto sigillo, quo usus fuerat, in manibus eorundem iudicum resignavit, et quod abbatiam abiuraverit memoratam, ex literis iam dicti Rothomagensis archiepiscopi perpendimus evidenter: nolentes per nos, qui punimus periuria, viam periuriis aperiri, quum et ipse recipiendo compositionem huiusmodi renunciaverit abbatiae, communicato fratrum nostrorum consilio ab impetitione ipsius S. vos et monasterium vestrum absolvimus, perpetuum ei super quaestione ipsa silentium imponentes; non obstante quod factum est ab ultimis delegatis, quum ex his appareat evidenter, ipsos, (ut de aliis taceamus) si eis de praemissis constitit, minus legitime processisse, restituentes illum, qui non habebat ius aliquod repetendi. Et] Quamvis solus abbas, antequam appellaretur ab eo, iuxta formam literarum nostrarum procedere potuisset, quia tamen pro eo, quod cum ipso episcopo interlocutus est, appellationem prius ab eodem episcopo interpositam non tenuisse, de iure sine ipso, quum posset et nollet negotio interesse, per consequentiam confessus est, se non posse mandatum apostolicum adimplere, nec suae intentionis exstitit, ut sine coniudice suo aliquid diffiniret, et cum eo, qui iam iudex esse desierat, aliquid super praedicto negotio rite disponere non valebat, voluntate ac potestate sibi mutuo adversantibus, quum noluerit quod potuerit, et quod voluerit adimplere nequiverit, quod a duobus factum fuerat effectum non potuit de iure obtinere. Chapter XXIV

Latin source headnote: If the delegate's jurisdiction expires at the peremptory term that he assigned to the parties, after a suitable hour of the peremptory day the judge shall not wait for the contumacious party. If it does not expire, he can wait until the next day and cite again, if he wishes.

The same, to the Archbishop of Toledo.

Your fraternity has consulted us whether, when you cite the parties peremptorily for the reception of witnesses, publication of their depositions, or rendition of a sentence, and one of them contumaciously absents itself on the appointed day, you are to proceed in the business at least around the final part of the day or instead wait until the following day; and, if you have waited, whether the contumacious party is to be cited again, since there was no proceeding on the day assigned to the parties.

We, however, believe that a distinction must be made whether the jurisdiction endures after the peremptory term or expires at it. If it endures, equity so counseling, you will be able to wait until the next day, nor, once the peremptory term has elapsed, is the contumacious party to be cited, unless the kindness of the judge grants it this favor. But if it expires, unless the parties—especially when they know this—have presented themselves to you at an hour when you can suitably proceed to execute that for which you lawfully assigned them a peremptory term, from then on you will be able to execute what you intend, lest judicial instance vanish in vain.

But lest ecclesiastical judgment be exercised in darkness, because according to the testimony of the Truth, "he who does evil hates the light," although, according to custom and lawful constitutions in the Roman manner, the day begins from the middle of the night and ends in the middle of the following night, whence legal authority has decreed that what is done in two half-nights is to be held just as if it were done in any part of the daylight, we nevertheless understand that hour for proceeding to be suitable from which you can complete before the darkness of night what is incumbent upon you. Moreover, in assigning a peremptory term, a discreet judge ought not so to constrict his jurisdiction unless necessity requires it.

> Si iurisdictio delegati exspirat in termino peremptorio, quem partibus assignavit, post congruam horam peremptorii iudex non exspectabit contumacem. Si non exspirat, potest exspectare in diem alteram, et iterum citare, si vult.

> Consuluit nos tua fraternitas, utrum, quum ad recipiendos testes depositiones publicandas eorum, vel sententiam proferendam peremptorie citas partes, et earum altera se absentat contumaciter die data, an circa ultimam saltem partem diei tibi sit in negotio procedendum, vel in diem exspectandum potius subsequentem; et, si exspectaveris, utrum contumax iterum sit citandus, quum non fuerit die partibus assignata processum? Nos autem credimus, distinguendum, utrum iurisdictio duret post terminum peremptorium, an exspiret in illo. Si durat, in diem alteram aequitate suadente poteris exspectare, nec erit pars contumax peremptorio elapso citanda, nisi gratiam fecerit ei benignitas iudicantis. Si autem exspiret, nisi partes, maxime quum id noverint, se tibi praesentaverint ea hora, qua congrue possis procedere ad exsequendum id, propter quod eis legitime terminum peremptorium assignasti, ex tunc exsequi poteris quod intendis, ne frustra iudicialis instantia evanescat. Ne vero iudicium ecclesiasticum exerceatur in tenebris, quia iuxta testimonium Veritatis qui male agit odit lucem, licet etiam secundum consuetudinem et constitutiones legitimas more Romano dies a medietate noctis incipiat, et in medio noctis desinat subsequentis, unde quod in duabus dimidiatis noctibus agitur, perinde sanxit habendum legalis auctoritas, ac si qualibet parte lucis agatur, nos tamen eam procedendi horam congruam intelligimus, ex qua possis ante noctis tenebras perficere, quod incumbit. Porro discretus iudex in assignatione peremptorii non debet iurisdictionem suam nisi necessitas exigat, adeo coarctare.

Chapter XXV

Latin source headnote: For a new cause a delegate is removed, even after joinder of issue, and another is substituted.

The same, to the Abbot of Bordellia and the Prior of the Holy Sepulcher.

By the intimation of our beloved son R., rector of the church of Saint Saldatus, it has reached our hearing that, when he had formerly obtained from us that the cause disputed concerning parochial right between himself and T., rector of the chapel of Saint John of Glovernia in the diocese of Worcester, be delegated to our venerable brother the Bishop of Worcester and his co-judges, afterwards, although there had been proceeding in the same question, in the course of time before the reckoning of a definitive sentence was reached, the same bishop admitted the said R. among his familiars. Without that bishop, according to what was commanded in our letters, the other co-judges were unable to proceed in the cause; and one of those co-judges is an official of the aforesaid bishop, on account of which he could be held suspect by the adverse party.

Hence, since for a cause of this kind both the bishop and the aforesaid official—inasmuch as the same R. had sought them as judges and later became their familiar—could deservedly be recused by the adverse party, R. sought that decision of the cause itself be committed to your discretion. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, if it is so, unless after he became the bishop's familiar he consented to litigate before him, you are to proceed in that cause according to the contents of the former letters, reason leading the way and the obstacle of appeal having been removed; otherwise, the parties are to return to the examination of the former judges. [But if not all, etc. Given on the sixth day before the Kalends of February, 1206.]

> Ex nova causa removetur delegatus, etiam post litem contestatam, et alius subrogatur.

> Idem Abbati de Bordellia et Priori sancti Sepulcri.

> Insinuante dilecto filio R. rectore ecclesiae sancti Saldati ad audientiam nostram pervenit, quod, quum olim causam, quae super iure parochiali inter ipsum et T. rectorem capellae sancti Ioannis de Glovernia Vigorniensis dioecesis vertebatur, venerabili fratri nostro Vigoriensi episcopo et coniudicibus suis a nobis obtinuerit delegari, postmodum, licet fuerit in eadem quaestione processum, tractu temporis ante, quam ad diffinitivae sententiae calculum veniretur, idem episcopus dictum R. in suum, familiarem admisit, sine quo alii coniudices, secundum quod in nostris literis mandabatur, in causa procedere non valebant, et alter ipsorum coniudicum officialis est episcopi supradicti, propter quod adversae parti poterat suspectus haberi. Unde, quum ex causa huiusmodi tam episcopus quam officialis praedictus, utpote quos idem R. in iudices postularat, et ipse familiaris eorum postmodum est effectus, ab adversa parte possent merito recusari, decisionem ipsius causae vestrae petiit discretioni committi. Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, nisi postquam familiaris eius est effectus, litigare consenserit coram illo, in causa ipsa, secundum priorum continentiam literarum, ratione praevia, remoto appellationis obstaculo procedatis; alioquin partes ad priorum iudicum revertantur examen. [Quodsi non omnes etc. Dat. VI. Kal. Febr. 1206.]

Chapter XXVI

Latin source headnote: A papal delegate can execute his sentence for as much as a full year. This is what it says, and it is an exceptional case.

The same, to the Prior of Saint Fridianus.

To one asking what is meant by ecclesiastical censure—(And below: [cf. c. 20, On the Signification of Words, V. 40.])—if a delegate appointed by us excommunicates one who disdains to obey a matter adjudged, although it appears to some that he has discharged his office, so that he has no further proceeding by virtue of the jurisdiction delegated to him, while others say that his jurisdiction endures until the sentence is obeyed, so that meanwhile he can absolve one who is willing to obey: we, nevertheless, walking along the path of equity, establish by authority of these presents that a delegate appointed by us can exercise the jurisdiction committed to him for executing the sentence not only for the four-month period that is conceded by law to a defendant for paying a debt, but for as much as a full year, just as is observed in the case of one who is found contumacious before joinder of issue.

Delegatus Papae sententiam suam exsequi potest usque ad integrum annum. H. d. et est casus singularis.

Quaerenti quid per censuram ecclesiasticam (Et infra: [cf. c. 20. de verb. sign. Chapter XXVII

Latin source headnote: A papal delegate can subdelegate the beginning, middle, and end of a cause jointly and separately. This is what it says, as far as § But. § 1. Appeal can be taken from a subdelegate having jurisdiction; it is otherwise if he lacks jurisdiction, unless he exceeds the manner prescribed. For then he can be recused, unless he was appointed with the parties' consent. The Abbot. § 2. From a subdelegate not appointed for the whole matter, appeal is taken to the subdelegator, but not to the original delegator; it is otherwise if he was appointed for the whole. This is what it says, as far as § But him. § 3. An auditor appointed without the parties' consent can be recused as suspect, but not without cause. The Abbot. § 4. If one of two delegates of the prince, with the clause "appeal having been removed," subdelegates to the other who accepts, the one accepting cannot subdelegate or proceed with appeal removed, although he could do so before acceptance. And, if appeal is to be taken from him, it shall be taken to the Pope, even if he was subdelegated not for the whole matter. This is what it says according to the truer understanding. § 5. If a papal delegate subdelegates not for the whole matter, a party cannot appeal from the subdelegate on the ground that he was appointed without the party's consent; he can nevertheless be recused by showing a just cause before the delegate, and then the delegate shall decide. From the delegate, even if he should refuse to admit the recusal, appeal is taken to the Pope. This is what it says.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Concerning the articles of the questions about which you wished to consult us, we answer your fraternity in this manner: by our constitution no derogation whatever is made from the consultation of Pope Alexander III, our predecessor of good memory; rather, the latter is explained by the former, or indeed in the former those things that had been omitted in the latter are more truly supplied. For he answered that, if, concerning a cause that is committed to someone by apostolic delegation, an appeal has been interposed from one or more ecclesiastical persons to whom the delegate, so that he may spare the parties' labors and expenses, commits cognizance of that cause and examination of the witnesses while reserving the sentence to himself, he is not bound in view of an appeal of this kind to leave the cause undefined.

We, however, establish that, although one to whom a cause is committed with appeal removed cannot delegate it to others without the obstacle of appeal, nevertheless, if a delegate appointed by us or any judge should appoint someone not so much as a cognizor as an executor for some certain article, appeal is not permitted from him unless he exceeds the manner prescribed, provided that he is appointed or received with the parties' consent. But if a delegate appointed by us should decide to commit to him either the beginning of the suit or the end of the cause, to say nothing of the whole business, appeal may lawfully be taken from him as from a judge, since issue ought both to be joined before a judge and a cause to be decided by a judge.

Therefore, it was our intention—as can also be plainly perceived from the tenor of the aforesaid constitution—that, so that judicial authority may be exercised more freely, a delegate appointed by us may lawfully delegate to another the beginning, end, and middle of the cause committed to him, not only jointly but also separately. It does not stand in the way that it is said that a judge ought to take cognizance personally at the beginning, middle, and end, since, before he renders sentence, he ought diligently to investigate all things that were done in the judgment.

§ 1. But when he commits the whole cause, or its beginning or end, to someone, appeal can lawfully be taken from that person as from a judge. But when he commits only the middle to someone, appeal cannot be taken from that person as from an auditor, unless he exceeds the bounds of the mandate or is deservedly suspect. Hence, lest he be capable of recusal, we providently establish that he be appointed or received with the parties' consent.

§ 2. Moreover, when a delegate appointed by us transfers his entire jurisdiction to another, if there is to be an appeal, it will have to be taken not to him but to us. But when he reserves some of the jurisdiction to himself, if the cause was committed to him with appeal removed, appeal can by law be taken not to us but to him. Hence, if perchance appeal were taken from one to whom the middle of a cause is committed—whether he is called a cognizor or executor or, what is better, an auditor—on the ground that he either exceeds the bounds of the mandate or is deservedly suspect, nevertheless the delegate appointed by us will still be able, according to the aforesaid consultation, to decide the cause, so that the parties' labors and expenses may be spared.

§ 3. But neither party will be able to recuse the one whom a delegate appointed by us has appointed as auditor unless it shows before him a just cause for recusal.

§ 4. But if two persons have been delegated by the prince and one commits his authority to the other, the latter cannot and ought not to proceed with appeal removed or delegate the cause to another, although it is expressly contained in the commission made to the two that, with appeal removed, either can proceed without the other if both cannot take part together; for what he can do solely by the jurisdiction delegated to him by the prince, he cannot do with jurisdiction committed to him by a co-delegate. Hence, if appeal has been taken from him, although it has appeared to some that appeal can be taken also to the co-delegate, it nevertheless appears to us that appeal is to be taken only to the original delegator, for the reason assigned above.

§ 5. Therefore, the appeal of the one concerning whom your fraternity wrote to us—if, on the occasion of our constitution, he appealed to our hearing on the ground that a delegate appointed by us, reserving the definitive sentence to himself, committed the hearing of the cause to certain persons who were neither appointed nor received with the parties' consent—ought not to have impeded the auditors from proceeding unless he showed a just cause for recusing them, or was prepared to show it before the delegated judge. Even if they had been deservedly recused as suspect, the delegate appointed by us could nevertheless have judicially dispatched the cause itself, with the subterfuge of appeal removed. But if the delegate was unwilling to admit a just cause for recusal and compelled him to litigate before suspect persons, he could lawfully appeal from such a grievance to our hearing, and whatever was presumed to be done after an appeal of this kind ought to be adjudged null and void. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Kalends of April, 1204.]

> Super quaestionum articulis, de quibus nos consulere voluisti fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod per constitutionem nostram consultationi bonae memoriae Alexandri Papae III. praedecessoris nostri nullatenus derogatur, sed illa per istam exponitur, immo in ista verius quae in illa fuerant praetermissa supplentur. Ipse namque respondit, quod, si super causa, quae alicui ex apostolica delegatione committitur, a personis ecclesiasticis una vel pluribus, quibus delegatus, ut parcat laboribus partium et expensis, causae cognitionem ipsius et testium examinationes sententia sibi reservata committit, appellatio fuerit interposita, huiusmodi appellationis intuitu causam indefinitam relinquere non tenetur. Nos autem statuimus, quod, licet is, cui causa committitur remota appellatione, non possit eam aliis sine provocationis obstaculo delegare, si tamen delegatus a nobis vel iudex quicunque non tam cognitorem, quam exsecutorem ad aliquem certum articulum quempiam deputaverit, ab eo, nisi modum excedat, non liceat appellari, dummodo de partium deputetur vel recipiatur assensu. Quod si delegatus a nobis vel litis exordium, vel causae finem, nedum totum negotium ei duxerit committendum, ab ipso tanquam a iudice licite provocetur, quum et lis ante iudicem debeat contestari, et causa per iudicem diffiniri. Intentionis igitur nostrae fuit, sicut et tenore constitutionis praemissae potest liquido deprehendi, quod et, ut iudicialis auctoritas liberius valeat exerceri, delegatus a nobis licite possit et principium, et finem, et medium causae sibi commissae, non solum coniunctim, sed etiam divisim alii delegare, non obstante, quod dicitur, quod iudex debet cognoscere per se ipsum in principio, et in medio, et in fine, quum ante, quam ferat sententiam, universa, quae acta sunt in iudicio, investigare debeat diligenter. § 1. Verum quum totam causam committit alicui, vel principium aut finem ipsius, ab eo tanquam a iudice potest licite provocari. Quum autem alicui medium tantum committit, ab ipso tanquam ab auditore provocari non potest, nisi mandati fines excedat, vel merito sit suspectus. Unde ne valeat recusari, provide statuimus, ut de partium detur vel recipiatur assensu. § 2. Porro quum delegatus a nobis iurisdictionem suam in alium transfert totam, si fuerit appellandum, non ad eum, sed ad nos appellari debebit. Quum autem sibi aliquid de iurisdictione reservat, si causa sit ei appellatione remota commissa, non ad nos, sed ad eum poterit de iure appellari. Unde si forsan appellaretur ab eo, cui medium causae committitur, sive cognitor aut exsecutor dicatur, vel, quod melius est, auditor, pro eo, quod vel mandati fines excedat, vel merito sit suspectus, nihilominus tamen delegatus a nobis iuxta consultationem praemissam causam poterit diffinire, ut parcatur laboribus partium et expensis. § 3. Eum vero, Quem delegatus a nobis deputaverit auditorem, neutra partium poterit recusare, nisi coram eo iustam recusationis causam ostendat. § 4. Si vero duo sunt a principe delegati, et unus committit vices suas alteri, ille non potest, nec debet appellatione remota procedere, nec causam alii delegare, quamvis in commissione facta duobus contineatur expressim, ut appellatione remota alter possit procedere sine reliquo, si non possunt ambo pariter interesse, quia, quod potest ex sola iurisdictione sibi a principe delegata, non potest cum iurisdictione sibi a condelegato commissa. Unde si ab eo fuerit appellatum licet aliquibus visum fuerit, quod ad condelegatum etiam valeat appellari, nobis tamen videtur, quod ad primum duntaxat appellandum est delegantem, propter rationem superius assignatam. § 5. Eius ergo appellatio, de quo tua fraternitas nobis scripsit, si nostrae constitutionis occasione ad nostram audientiam appellavit, pro eo, quod delegatus a nobis, reservata sibi diffinitiva sententia, audientiam causae commisit quibusdam, qui de partium assensu nec dati sunt nec recepti, nisi contra eos iustam recusationis causam ostenderit, vel paratus fuerit ostendere coram iudice delegato, non debuit impedire, quo minus procederent auditores. Qui etiam si tanquam suspecti fuissent merito recusati, delegatus tamen a nobis nihilominus potuisset, sublato appellationis diffugio, causam ipsam iudicialiter expedire. Quod si iustam recusationis causam noluit admittere delegatus, sed coram suspectis eum litigare cogebat, a tali gravamine licite potuit ad nostram audientiam appellare, quodque post appellationem huiusmodi est praesumptum iudicari debet irritum et inane. Chapter XXVIII

Latin source headnote: A papal delegate, unless he is maliciously relieving himself, compels a subdelegate to accept the subdelegation; nevertheless, in coercing him, he shall defer to his dignity and person. This is what it says, as far as § Likewise, when the whole. § 1. Just as a papal delegate can commit the whole cause, so he can commit the citation and punish one who disdains to accept it. This is what the Abbot says. § 2. If the Pope knowingly committed an appeal interposed from his delegate appointed with the clause "appeal having been removed," the jurisdiction of the first delegate is meanwhile suspended with respect to execution. This is what it says according to the true understanding. § 3. An ordinary executes a sentence at the mandate of a delegate even if he knows it to be unjust. The Abbot. § 4. A delegate who is impeded from proceeding on the appointed day shall punish the party who procured this and, with respect to that day, shall commit the cause with appeal removed, in odium of the procuring party, unless the parties extend the business. The Sicilian Abbot.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

The diligence and solicitude of the pastoral office that you exercise concerning execution of our mandates, and the zeal of your rectitude, invite us—even though we are hindered by the manifold occupations of business—to withdraw ourselves from them for the hour in which, intending to answer, we may attend to your consultations. For the discretion of your fraternity has consulted us whether, if a person delegated by the prince should wish to delegate to another a cause committed to him, he can constrain one unwilling to receive the delegation to receive it. We have decided, with the counsel of our brothers, to answer your consultation in this manner: since jurisdiction to appoint a judge is conceded by law to a person delegated by the prince, provided that he does not maliciously seek to relieve himself, he can compel one who resists, because that jurisdiction would appear to be of no moment if it had no coercion. Nevertheless, the aforesaid delegate ought solicitously to provide that, if necessity requiring, he should decide to delegate the business to superior persons, in applying coercion he defer to their dignity and person.

§ 1. Likewise, you subsequently also asked whether a delegate, when he sees it to be expedient, can enjoin whomever he wishes to cite the parties to his presence, and inflict a penalty upon them for contempt if they disdain to obey. To this we answer your fraternity briefly that, since the delegate can commit the whole business to another, as was expressed above, after prior discretion he can entrust the office of citation to anyone and deservedly punish one who shows contempt. [On your part, etc. (cf. c. 11, On the Office of an Ordinary Judge, I. 31.)] (And below:)

§ 2. Moreover, you sought to be taught through the Apostolic See whether, when appeal has been taken from a sentence rendered by authority of our letters in which appeal is prohibited, and letters to other judges have emanated after the appeal, execution of the sentence rendered by the first delegates ought to be delayed at the mandate of the later judges, so that the first judges execute it neither personally nor through others. We answer your inquiry in this manner: when we knowingly commit the cause of appeal to other judges for cognizance, we appear to receive the appeal and revoke the jurisdiction of the former judges, so that execution of the sentence is meanwhile suspended until the merits of the appeal have been more fully discussed. [Moreover, etc. (cf. c. 14, On Rescripts, I. 3.)] (And below:)

§ 3. But because it often happens that execution of a sentence is entrusted to the ordinary, you asked whether, if the ordinary knows it to be unjust, he ought to put it into execution or rather should stop. Therefore, considering that not cognizance but only execution is entrusted to him, we answer your inquiry in this manner: because the ordinary is bound to comply with the delegate, even if he knows that sentence to be unjust, he is nevertheless bound to execute it, unless he can bring it about before the delegate that the latter absolve him from this burden. [To be taught, etc. (cf. c. 11, On the Office of an Ordinary Judge, I. 31.)] (And below:)

§ 4. But since it often happens that, on the day that a judge delegated by us has assigned to the parties, through the procurement of one of them so that the business may be prolonged, the judge himself is summoned away by the king or archbishop, we, wishing to meet the maliciousness of the perverse, decree that, if it is established to the delegate that this was procured by the malice of some party, he is to punish that party with fitting chastisement and, lest it carry away any gain from a fraud of this kind, commit the business to be heard for that day to a person suspect to neither party, who is to proceed in it with appeal removed, unless perchance the parties consent that the business be prolonged. [Moreover, etc. (cf. c. 1, On Sacraments Not to Be Repeated, I. 16.) Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January, 1204.]

Idem Episcopo Heliensi.

Pastoralis officii diligentia et sollicitudo, quam geris circa exsecutionem mandatorum nostrorum, et zelus tuae rectitudinis nos invitant, ut, quamvis simus multiplicibus negotiorum occupationibus praepediti, eis tamen ad horam subtrahamus nos ipsos, in qua tuis intendamus consultationibus responsuri. Consuluit etenim nos tuae fraternitatis discretio, utrum, si delegatus a principe causam sibi commissam alii delegare voluerit, nolentem delegationem suscipere ad ipsam suscipiendam valeat coarctare. Consultationi tuae de fratrum nostrorum consilio taliter duximus respondendum, quod, quum delegato a principe iurisdictio dandi iudicem sit a lege concessa, dummodo ipse exonerare se ipsum malitiose non quaerat, potest compellere renitentem, eo, quod iurisdictio illa nullius videretur esse momenti, si coercitionem aliquam non haberet. Delegatus praedictus tamen debet sollicite providere, ut, si personis superioribus, exigente necessitate, negotium duxerit delegandum, in coactionibus inferendis dignitati deferat et personae. § 1. Item Subsequenter etiam quaesivisti, utrum cui voluerit delegatus, quum viderit expedire, possit iniungere, ut ad suam praesentiam citet partes, et eis, si obedire contempserint, poenam infligere pro contemptu. Ad quod tuae fraternitati breviter respondemus, quod, quum totum negotium alii possit committere delegatus, sicut superius est expressum, citationis officium potest cuilibet discretione praevia demandare, ac punire merito contemptorem. [Ex parte tua etc. (cf. c. 11. de off. iud. ord. I. 31.)] (Et infra:) § 2. Nos autem inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum nos appellationis causam ex certa scientia iudicibus aliis committimus cognoscendam, appellationem videmur recipere, ac iurisdictionem priorum iudicum revocare, ut interim executio sententiae suspendatur, donec appellationis merita plenius sint discussa. [Praeterea etc. (cf. c. 14. de rescr. I. 3.)] (Et infra:) § 3. Quia vero saepe contingit, quod exsecutio sententiae ordinario demandatur, quaesivisti, an si ordinarius ipsam iniustam esse cognoverit, debeat eam exsecutioni mandare, an sit ei potius subsistendum? Attendentes itaque, quod non cognitio, sed exsecutio tantum demandatur eidem, inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum ordinarius teneatur obsequi delegato, etsi sciat sententiam illam iniustam, exsequi nihilominus tenetur eandem, nisi apud eum efficere possit, ut ab hoc onere ipsum absolvat. [Edoceri etc. (cf. c. 11. de off. iud. ord. I. 31.)] (Et infra:) § 4. Quum autem saepe contingat, ad diem, quem iudex delegatus a nobis partibus assignavit, earum altera procurante, ut negotium prorogetur, iudicem ipsum a rege vel archiepiscopo evocari: nos, perversorum volentes malignitatibus obviare, decernimus, ut, si delegato constiterit, hoc fuisse alicuius partis malitia procuratum, ipsam puniat animadversione condigna, et, ne aliquod lucrum ex huiusmodi fraude reportet, personae neutri parti suspectae, quantum ad diem illum, committat ipsum negotium audiendum, quae in ipso appellatione remota procedat, nisi forte partes consenserint negotium prorogari. Chapter XXIX

Latin source headnote: A subdelegate from a papal delegate who does not have jurisdiction can coerce one who impedes him. This is what it says, encompassing both understandings.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Hilary and Master G., Canon of Treviso.

We learned from the letters of our venerable brother the Patriarch of Grado that, when our beloved sons, the primicerius of Grado and the pleban of Saint Sophia of Venice—to whom the cause that is known to be conducted between the clerics of Saint Justina and the priest Albert concerning the fact that the same priest asserted himself to be a cleric of that church had been delegated by us—had ordered the same patriarch to declare that the aforementioned clerics were not bound by the bond of anathema, although they had been denounced as lying under a sentence of excommunication by the Archpriest of Padua, by whom a certain rescript had been obtained from us concerning the same business in which, as is asserted, no mention was made of the former letters, because they would not receive the said priest as associate and brother, the patriarch himself was unwilling to obey those judges in this matter, who were exercising our authority. This was especially so since our venerable brother the Bishop of Castello, although required, did not decide to obey them concerning this. The patriarch announced by his letters to the clerics of Santa Maria Formosa the mandate of the aforesaid judges, which our beloved son the Archdeacon of Castello, pleban of the same church, did not permit to be read publicly before the people.

[And when, after a few days had elapsed concerning this, the same archdeacon had been kindly required by the same patriarch at the monastery of Saint Nicholas, suddenly stirred to anger he assailed the same patriarch with grave verbal injuries in the presence of many.] The patriarch, considering that by such a great excess of injuries the archdeacon had gravely offended not only him but also the church of Grado, or rather us ourselves, subjected both the archdeacon himself and the aforesaid church to ecclesiastical interdict, [especially for this reason: because from ancient custom, as is said, it has been established that letters directed by the Patriarchs of Grado throughout the patriarchate of Grado are admitted without distinction by all.

But, at the insistence of the clerics and parishioners of the aforesaid church, the patriarch relaxed the sentence of interdict with respect to that church, enjoining the same clerics under penalty of excommunication not to presume to participate with the archdeacon in divine offices. But when the aforementioned patriarch, together with the aforesaid bishop, had approached the monastery of the Holy Cross for celebrating the funeral rites of a certain person, and the archdeacon wished to involve himself in the divine offices, the patriarch withdrew to one side to avoid scandal. On account of this the archdeacon began to burden him with grave verbal injuries. Likewise, although the same archdeacon had ceased from divine offices for the space of one day, afterwards, while under interdict, he was not ashamed to celebrate publicly.

In addition, the patriarch laid a grave complaint against the oft-mentioned bishop: although the latter is bound to show obedience and reverence to him and the church of Grado, and although he had commanded him to hold the aforesaid archdeacon as under interdict and the clerics of Saint Mary as excommunicated, and to cause the sentences of excommunication and interdict rendered by him to be inviolably observed throughout the diocese of Castello, the same bishop, to the injury of the patriarch, permitted the archdeacon to minister freely in the church of Castello and commanded the clerics of his diocese under penalty of fealty to announce publicly throughout their churches that the archdeacon and the aforesaid clerics lay under neither a sentence of interdict nor of excommunication. Hence the same patriarch humbly entreated us to take care to punish such great injury and excess, and what had been attempted not only against him but rather against the Apostolic

See by both the bishop and the archdeacon, in such a way that material for committing similar things would be cut away from others.

But the said bishop intimated to us by his letters that, when the patriarch declared that the clerics of Saint Justina were not bound by the bond of anathema—whom the same bishop had earlier declared excommunicated by mandate of the Archpriest of Padua, a judge delegated by us, as is asserted—and a contention arose on an occasion of this kind between the patriarch and the archdeacon, the patriarch, from a certain disturbance, placed the archdeacon under interdict. When the latter fled to the benefit of appeal, the patriarch promulgated a sentence of interdict against the oft-mentioned church, and was unwilling to receive the satisfaction offered by the archdeacon concerning this unless the archdeacon affirmed by an interposed oath that he would obey the patriarch's mandates. The same bishop added also that, fearing lest the patriarch break out into anything that would tend to the prejudice or grievance of the bishop himself, his church, or his clerics, he appealed to the Apostolic See, solicitously entreating us to take care to restrain the patriarch from undue molestation of himself and his church and of the clerics and churches of his diocese.]

Therefore, when there had been litigation for some time concerning the foregoing and other matters between the proctors of each party before our beloved son the cardinal-deacon of the title of Saints Cosmas and Damian, whom we had appointed auditor for them, and he had faithfully reported to us what he heard, because it could not be established to us whether, by the letters said to have been impetrated to the Archpriest of Padua—which were not shown to us—the letters obtained to the aforesaid primicerius and pleban had been revoked, we decided to commit the cause itself to your examination.

By apostolic writings we command that, after the truth concerning the foregoing has been more fully inquired into, unless it should be established to you that the letters said to have been impetrated in the second place to the aforesaid Archpriest of Padua made express mention of the earlier letters obtained to the oft-mentioned primicerius of Grado and pleban of Saint Sophia, so that through the second letters the first letters appear to have been revoked, because it is not doubtful that the first judges had jurisdiction by authority of our letters—which they were afterwards able to entrust to the patriarch with respect to execution of their sentence, from which the same patriarch had also received coercive power, since jurisdiction so entrusted would appear illusory if a subdelegate of this kind had no coercive power—you are to cause the sentence of interdict promulgated by the same patriarch against the Archdeacon of Castello, for the reason that, impeding the execution of that patriarch, he did not permit the latter's letters announcing the mandate of the aforesaid judges to be read publicly, to be inviolably observed, with the obstacle of appeal removed, until sufficient satisfaction has been made to the same patriarch for the injuries inflicted.

But if it should be established that the first letters were lawfully revoked by the second, since it appears that the first judges had no jurisdiction at all and thus it is consequently established that the patriarch himself received no jurisdiction or coercive power from them, you are to declare null and void the aforesaid sentence of interdict rendered by the same patriarch. [Nevertheless, etc. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the eleventh day before the Kalends of January, in the tenth year, 1207.]

[Quumque super hoc paucis diebus elapsis apud S. Nicolai monasterium ab eodem patriarcha benigne fuisset idem archidiaconus requisitus, in iram subito concitatus eundem patriarcham gravibus verborum iniuriis multis praesentibus lacessivit.] Qui considerans, archidiaconum ipsum per tantum iniuriarum excessum non se tantummodo, sed etiam Gradensem ecclesiam, immo nos ipsos graviter offendisse, tam ipsum archidiaconum, quam praedictam ecclesiam ecclesiastico supposuit interdicto, [ea praecipue ratione, quoniam ex antiqua consuetudine, sicut dicitur, est obtentum, ut literae, quae per patriarchatum Gradensem a patriarchis Gradensibus diriguntur, indifferenter ab omnibus admittantur. Verum ad instantiam clericorum et parochianorum ecclesiae supradictae quoad ipsam ecclesiam patriarcha interdicti sententiam relaxavit, sub excommunicationis poena clericis eisdem iniungens, ne archidiacono participare praesumerent in divinis. Quum autem patriarcha iam dictus cum praefato episcopo ad monasterium S. Crucis pro celebrandis cuiusdam exsequiis accessisset, et archidiaconus se vellet divinis officiis immiscere, patriarcha pro vitando scandalo secessit in partem; propter quod archidiaconus ipsum coepit gravibus verborum iniuriis aggravare. Idem quoque archidiaconus licet a divinis per unius diei spatium cessavisset, postmodum tamen celebrare publice non erubuit interdictus. Ad haec de saepe dicto episcopo patriarcha gravem deposuit quaestionem, quod, quum sibi et Gradensi ecclesiae obedientiam teneatur et reverentiam exhibere, quanquam ei mandaverit, ut praefatum archidiaconum pro interdicto, et clericos S. Mariae pro excommunicatis haberet, et faceret excommunicationis et interdicti sententias ab ipso prolatas per Castellanensem dioecesim inviolabiliter observari, idem episcopus in iniuriam patriarchae permittens archidiaconum in ecclesia Castellanensi libere ministrare, clericis suae dioecesis sub fidelitatis poena praecipiendo mandavit, ut per ecclesias suas archidiaconum et clericos supradictos nec interdicti nec excommunicationis sententiae subiacere publice nunciarent. Unde idem patriarcha nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut tantam iniuriam et excessum, nec non in ipsum, sed potius contra sedem apostolicam tam ab episcopo quam archidiacono attentatum castigare taliter curaremus, ut resecaretur in aliis materia similia committendi. Dictus vero episcopus per suas nobis literas intimavit, quod quum patriarcha denunciasset clericos S. Iustinae anathematis vinculo non teneri, quos idem episcopus prius excommunicatos denunciaverat, de mandato archipresbyteri Paduani, a nobis, sicut asseritur, iudicis delegati, occasione huiusmodi inter patriarcham et archidiaconum contentione suborta, patriarcha ex commotione quadam archidiaconum interdixit, quo ad appellationis beneficium convolante, patriarcha in saepedictam ecclesiam interdicti sententiam promulgavit, nec satisfactionem oblatam ab archidiacono super hoc recipere voluit, nisi archidiaconus, ut ipsius pareret mandatis, interposito iuramento firmaret. Adiecit etiam idem episcopus, quod ipse timens, ne prorumperet ad aliquid patriarcha, quod ad ipsius episcopi vel ecclesiae seu clericorum suorum praeiudicium cederet vel gravamen, ad sedem apostolicam appellavit, nobis sollicite supplicando, ut patriarcham a sui et ecclesiae suae ac clericorum et ecclesiarum suae dioecesis molestatione indebita compescere curaremus.] Quum igitur super praemissis et aliis inter utriusque partis procuratores fuisset coram dilecto filio tit. SS. Cosmae et Damiani diacono cardinali, quem auditorem dederamus eisdem, aliquamdiu litigatum, et ipse nobis quae audierat fideliter retulisset, quia nobis constare non potuit, an per literas, quae ad Paduanum archipresbyterum impetratae dicuntur, quum nobis ostensae non fuerint, revocatae fuerint literae ad praedictos primicerium et plebanum obtentae, causam ipsam vestro examini duximus committendam, per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, inquisita super praemissis plenius veritate, nisi vobis constiterit, quod literae, quae secundo loco ad praedictum archipresbyterum Paduanum impetratae dicuntur, de prioribus literis ad saepe dictos primicerium Grandensem et plebanum sanctae Sophiae obtentis expressam fecerint mentionem, ut per secundas primae appareant literae revocatae, quum primos iudices auctoritate literarum nostrarum iurisdictionem non sit dubium habuisse, quam potuerunt postmodum patriarchae quoad exsecutionem suae sententiae demandare, ex qua coercitionem etiam idem patriarcha receperat, quum huiusmodi demandata iurisdictio delusoria videretur, si subdelegatus huiusmodi coercitionem aliquam non haberet, interdicti sententiam ab eodem patriarcha in Castellanensem archidiaconum promulgatam, pro eo, quod ipse eiusdem patriarchae exsecutionem impediens, eius literas, quibus mandatum praedictorum iudicum nunciabat, legi in publicum non permisit, tamdiu faciatis sublato appellationis obstaculo inviolabiliter observari, donec eidem patriarchae de iniuriis irrogatis sufficienter fuerit satisfactum. Si vero constiterit primas literas per secundas legitime revocatas, quum appareat, primos iudices iurisdictionem nullam penitus habuisse, et ita constet per consequentiam, patriarcham ipsum non recepisse iurisdictionem vel coercitionem aliquam ab eisdem, praedictam interdicti sententiam ab eodem patriarcha prolatam denuncietis irritam et inanem. Latin source headnote: The jurisdiction of a delegate expires upon the death of the mandator while the matter is untouched.

The same, to the Bishop of Poitiers.

Although the abundant multitude of business flowing in from every direction does not cease to impel our mind toward various cares, your fraternity, whom we embrace in the Lord with sincere charity, nevertheless compelled us to set aside for a time the solicitude that, by debt of pastoral office, we were exercising in the execution of other matters, and to make your doubt certain by an apostolic answer.

Therefore, since you decided to ask of us whether, if we delegate some cause to three judges, causing that clause to be placed in our letters, “but if not all of you are able to take part in executing these things, two of you shall nevertheless execute it,” and one, after he has committed his authority to one of the others, has been removed from their midst, while the third is deservedly recused as suspect, the surviving colleague can decide the business in his own name and that of the deceased, we answer your inquiry in this manner: if, while his colleague was alive, he did not begin to use the jurisdiction delegated to him by that colleague, because a mandate of this kind expired upon the mandator's death while the matter was untouched, he does not alone have the office of judging. But if, before the other's death, he began to use the jurisdiction thus entrusted, he will be able to fulfill both his own authority and that of the other.

Quum igitur a nobis duxeris requirendum, si causam aliquam tribus iudicibus delegamus, apponi in literis nostris illam clausulam facientes: "quod si non omnes his exsequendis poteritis interesse, duo vestrum nihilominus eam exsequantur," et unus, postquam commiserit cuidam ex aliis vices suas, de medio sit sublatus, tertius ut suspectus merito recusetur, an collega superstes suo nomine ac defuncti possit negotium definire: inquisitioni tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si iurisdictione a suo sibi collega delegata eo vivente uti non coeperit, quia mandatum huiusmodi re integra morte mandatoris exspiravit, non habet solus officium iudicandi; si vero ante mortem illius iurisdictione uti coeperit taliter demandata, vices suas et illius poterit adimplere.

Latin source headnote: No one is believed to be a delegate unless he proves the delegation.

The same, to the Bishop of Bayeux.

Since one learned in law—(And below: [cf. c. 33, On Election, I. 6.])—moreover, you asked: when it is commanded to you by someone under this form, "By the authority that I exercise, I enjoin you to denounce such a person as lying under a sentence of excommunication," and, while you hesitate concerning the apostolic mandate, no proof of it is furnished to you by anyone, whether you are bound to execute a mandate of this kind. Concerning this we give you the following answer: unless you are certain of the mandate of the Apostolic See, you are not compelled to execute what is commanded. [It happens, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the tenth day before the Kalends of September, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

Chapter XXXII

Latin source headnote: Jurisdiction cannot be extended from one matter to another through a proctor who does not have a mandate concerning the latter matter.

The same, to the Bishops of Paris and Troyes and the Abbot of Saint Geneviève.

When formerly our beloved sons, the Abbot and Convent of Vézelay, showed us by their complaint that the nobleman Peter, Count of Auxerre, was endeavoring to construct a certain pond, mill, and house on their land to their prejudice and grievance, we committed the cause itself to our venerable brother the Bishop of Nevers and our beloved son the Treasurer of Nevers. By their letters we learned that, after issue had been joined concerning the church's petitions, witnesses had been received on both sides, the attestations had been published, and afterwards there had been disputation between the parties concerning the witnesses' statements, the count's party finally proposed before them that they ought not to take cognizance of the damage done to the woods and other things, concerning which the witnesses appeared to depose, since there was no mention of damages in our rescript, [adding that the things concerning which the question was conducted were from the fief of the nobleman the Duke of Burgundy, as the same duke acknowledged in his open letters, and therefore recourse concerning them was to be made to the lord of the fief rather than to the said judges.]

To this it was answered on the other side that [even if not expressly, nevertheless tacit mention of the damage done was contained in our letters, since the word "grievance" was inserted in those letters. On that account they could take cognizance of them at least as accessories or appendages of the principal business. Likewise,] since issue had been solemnly joined concerning all the articles about which the witnesses had deposed, the judges were bound to take cognizance of them and pronounce judgment. [But it also asserted that the count was not to be heard concerning the exception of the fief, which was objected far too late, namely after publication of the witnesses.]

To these things the count's party replied that, even if issue concerning the damages had been joined by his proctor, nevertheless prejudice could not be generated against him from this, since the proctor had not been appointed for this but only for that cause expressed in the letters of commission, namely concerning the castle, pond, and mill. To this the other party answered that the count could no longer challenge the proctor's act, which he had by no means decided to revoke until after publication of the witnesses. But the judges, having taken the counsel of discreet men concerning the matters proposed on each side, pronounced interlocutorily that cognizance concerning the damage done by the count pertained to them. Hearing this, the count fled to the benefit of appeal. Hence the judges, after summoning him and when he appeared neither personally nor through a suitable respondent, bound him with the bond of excommunication, [but, when he persisted in contumacy, they remitted the same cause, with the attestations faithfully placed under seal, to our presence.

Moreover, when the proctors of both parties were established at the Apostolic See on account of this, the monastery's proctor proposed before us that, since the town of Vetenedum is common to the monasteries of Vézelay and Saint Germain of Auxerre, in such a way that they have terrage, pannage, lodging dues, rent, thirds, lods, sales dues, and retention in it, the aforesaid count—who had been accustomed to receive nothing other than two denarii annually from each peasant in the name of custody or safeguard—now, usurping jurisdiction over it for himself contrary to justice, extorts five solidi from every villager. In a certain place in the same town, after prohibition had been made both to him and to the Hospitallers, who held that place within the monastery's censual tenure, having received it from them by exchange, he was building a castle, pond, and mill to their prejudice and grievance, with grave damage done to woods, stones, and other things. On this account the same proctor sought that the aforesaid buildings, inasmuch as they were constructed after prohibition and denunciation, be demolished; that the aforesaid count be compelled to cease from molestation of the monastery of Vézelay concerning this; and that he furnish the same monastery suitable compensation for the damage done.

But the count's proctor alleged that, because homicides and robberies were very often perpetrated in the aforesaid place of Vetenedum, which was subject to his jurisdiction, wishing to meet so many and such great dangers, he constructed for the security of travelers a certain house on ground that he had received from the Hospitallers by exchange, where he had learned that a fortified house had formerly stood, with a certain pond and mill built there for the use of the guards of that house. But the aforesaid abbot and convent, falsely saying that they were heavily burdened concerning this, impetrated letters to the aforesaid judges; and although the said count offered to them in the judges' presence that, if they proved that they had sustained any damage on account of those buildings, he would repair that damage to them not only singly but doubly, they utterly rejected both this statement and also other forms of peace.

But when there had been proceeding by the judges in the same cause as far as publication of the witnesses, because, after the attestations had been published, it appeared that they had deposed concerning many articles on which issue had not been joined, the count's party alleged that the judges were unable to take cognizance of them. Hence, when the judges pronounced interlocutorily that they could take cognizance of and pronounce judgment concerning the damage done, challenge was made to our hearing.

But we, having heard these and other things that the proctors took care to propose, and having diligently inspected the attestations of both parties, understood that it had been proved for the monastery that, in the aforesaid town, terrage, pannage, lodging dues, rents, thirds, lods, sales dues, and retentions pertained to the aforesaid monasteries, and that the aforesaid pond and causeway had been constructed partly on the property of the monastery of Vézelay and partly within the censual tenure of it and Saint Germain. Likewise, that a prohibition had been made to the Hospitallers, who paid an annual rent to the monasteries for the aforesaid place, not to transfer that place—namely, the monasteries' censual tenure—to the count, and to the count not to receive that censual tenure.

But it appeared to have been proved for the count's party that jurisdiction over the wood with respect to fortifications is his; that, without injury to anyone, the said count can concede the wood itself for the lodging of the people of that town; and that the count himself has jurisdiction in the town and had been accustomed to receive two denarii from each house of the town for safeguard. Likewise, that the fortification itself was founded in the Hospitallers' meadows, and that whoever has something at rent can, with the rent preserved, concede it to whom he wishes. Again, that a fortified house enclosed by palisades and ditches had formerly existed in the same town.]

But because, before issue had been joined, cognizance concerning the damage done in no way pertained to the said judges, since there was no mention of it in the rescript, nor could jurisdiction be extended to them, since a proctor is understood to be constituted only for the matters that are found expressed in the letters of commission, and because, after the attestations had been published, the count understood that deposition had been made concerning these matters and immediately contradicted it, we pronounced that the same judges had [immediately] pronounced interlocutorily with less than justice, and that the oft-mentioned count, who on this account fled to the benefit of appeal, had not been bound by the sentence of excommunication. [But, etc. Given at the Lateran, in the eleventh year, 1209.]

Per procuratorem non habentem mandatum de re ad rem iurisdictio prorogari non potest.

Idem Parisiensi et Trecensi Episcopis et Abbati sanctae Genovefae.

Quum olim dilectus filius abbas et conventus Vergiliacensis sua nobis conquestione monstrassent, quod nobilis vir Petrus comes Altissiodorensis quoddam stagnum, molendinum et domum in terra eorum construere nitebatur in ipsorum praeiudicium et gravamen, venerabili fratri nostro episcopo et dilecto filio thesaurario Nivernensi commisimus causam ipsam. Per quorum literas accepimus, quod lite super petitionibus ecclesiae contestata, receptis utrinque testibus, et attestationibus publicatis, quum super dictis testium inter partes fuisset postmodum disputatum, tandem pars comitis proposuit coram eis, quod de damnis in nemoribus et rebus aliis datis, super quibus testes deponere videbantur, cognoscere non debebant, quum in rescripto nostro nulla de damnis mentio haberetur, [adiiciens, quod res illae, super quibus quaestio agebatur, de feudo erant nobilis viri ducis Burgundiae, sicut idem dux in patentibus literis fatebatur, et ideo super illis ad dominum feudi potius quam ad dictos fuerat iudices recurrendum.] Ad quod fuit ex adverso responsum, quod, [si non expresse, tacite tamen de damnis datis in nostris literis mentio habebatur, quum nomen gravaminis esset literis ipsis insertum. Propter quod de ipsis cognoscere poterant saltem tanquam de accessoriis seu appendiciis negotii principalis. Item,] quum super omnibus articulis, de quibus testes deposuerant, lis fuisset solenniter contestata, de ipsis cognoscere ac pronunciare iudices tenebantur. [Sed et super exceptione feudi sero nimis, utpote post testium publicationem obiecta, audiendum non esse comitem asserebat.] Ad haec pars comitis replicavit, quod, etsi super damnis a procuratore suo lis fuerit contestata, ei tamen ex hoc non poterat praeiudicium generari, quum ad hoc procurator datus non fuerit, sed ad illam duntaxat causam, quae fuerat in literis commissionis expressa, super castro videlicet, stagno et molendino; ad hoc parte altera respondente, quod procuratoris factum comes ulterius impugnare non poterat, quod usque post publicationem testium minime duxerat revocandum. Iudices autem, super hinc inde propositis habito consilio discretorum, interlocuti sunt, quod super damnis datis a comite ad eos cognitio pertinebat. Quo audito comes ad appellationis beneficium convolavit. Unde ipsum iudices evocatum, et nec per se, nec per responsalem idoneum comparentem, excommunicationis vinculo adstrinxerunt, [eo tamen in contumacia perdurante, causam eandem cum attestationibus fideliter consignatis ad nostram praesentiam remiserunt. Porro procuratoribus utriusque partis propter hoc apud sedem apostolicam constitutis, procurator monasterii proposuit coram nobis, quod, quum villa de Vetenedo Virziliacensi et S. Germani Antissiodorensis monasteriis sit communis, ita quod terragium, spanagium, albergariam, censum, tertias, laudas, vendas et retentionem habeant in eadem, praedictus comes; qui nihil aliud quam duos denarios annuatim a quolibet rustico custodiae seu salvamenti nomine percipere consuevit, nunc in ipsa iurisdictionem sibi contra iustitiam usurpando, ab unoquoque villano V. solidos extorquet, in quodam loco eiusdem villae post inhibitionem tam sibi quam Hospitalariis factam, qui locum ipsum in censiva monasterii obtinebant, ab eis per commutationem recepto, castrum, stagnum et molendinum aedificando in ipsorum praeiudicium et gravamen, in nemoribus, lapidibus et rebus aliis gravibus damnis datis. Propter quod aedificia supradicta, utpote post inhibitionem et nunciationem exstructa, idem procurator petiit demoliri, et compelli comitem supradictum a Virziliacensis monasterii super hoc molestatione cessare, super damnis datis eidem compensationem congruam exhibendo. Procurator vero comitis allegavit, quod, quum in praedicto loco de Vetenedo suae iurisdictioni subiecto perpetrarentur saepissime homicidia et rapinae, ipse volens tot et tantis obviare periculis, quandam domum in solo, quod ab Hospitalariis per commutationem acceperat, ubi domum fortem olim exstitisse didicerat, ad transeuntium securitatem construxit, quodam stagno et molendino ad opus custodum ipsius domus aedificatis ibidem. Verum abbas et conventus praedicti falso dicentes se super hoc praegravari, literas ad praedictos iudices impetrarunt, et, quum ipsis in praesentia iudicum obtulerit dictus comes, quod, si qua damna probarent se ob illa aedificia pertulisse, non solum in simplum, sed duplum ipsis damna eadem resarciret, ipsi tam hoc verbum quam etiam alias pacis species penitus respuerunt. Quum autem per iudices fuerit in eadem causa usque ad testium publicationem processum, quoniam attestationibus publicatis apparuit, eos super multis deposuisse articulis, super quibus lis contestata non fuerat, pars comitis allegavit, quod iudices super illis cognoscere non valebant. Unde, iudicibus se de damnis datis cognoscere ac pronunciare posse interloquentibus, ad nostram fuit audientiam provocatum. Nos autem auditis iis et aliis, quae procuratores proponere curaverunt, et attestationibus utriusque partis diligenter inspectis, intelleximus pro monasterio esse probatum, in supradicta villa terragium, spanagium, albergariam, census, tertias, laudas, vendas ac retentiones ad praedicta monasteria pertinere, ac stagnum et calceria supradicta partim in proprietate Virziliacensis coenobii, et partim in ipsius et S. Germani censiva fuisse constructa. Item, quod Hospitalariis, qui pro praedicto loco annuum censum monasteriis exsolvebant, ne locum ipsum, censivam videlicet monasteriorum, transferrent in comitem, et comiti, ne censivam ipsam reciperet, prohibitio facta fuit. Pro parte vero comitis videbatur esse probatum, quod iustitia nemoris super fortalitia est ipsius, et quod absque cuiusquam iniuria dictus comes ad albergagium hominum ipsius villae potest concedere nemus ipsum, quodque comes ipse iustitiam habet in villa, et pro salvamento de qualibet domo villae duos denarios recipere consuevit. Item, quod in pratis Hospitalariorum est fortalitia ipsa fundata, et quod quicunque aliquid habet ad censum, illud salvo censu potest concedere cui vult. Rursus, quod in eadem villa olim fuerat dormis fortis clausa palitiis et fossatis.] Quia vero super damnis datis, antequam lis fuerit contestata, nequaquam ad dictos iudices cognitio pertinebat, quum in rescripto nulla de illis mentio haberetur, nec ad ipsos potuerit iurisdictio prorogari, quum procurator ad illa solummodo intelligatur constitutus, quae in commissionis literis inveniuntur expressa, et, postquam comes publicatis attestationibus intellexit, super his fuisse depositum, protinus contradixit, nos eosdem iudices [protinus] pronunciavimus minus iuste interlocutos fuisse, ac saepedictum comitem, qui ob hoc ad appellationis beneficium convolavit, excommunicationis sententia non fuisse ligatum. [Ceterum etc. Dat. Later. Ao. XI. 1209.]

Chapter XXXIII

Latin source headnote: One who opened the acts of a cause containing the report of delegated judges by violating their seals is not afterwards heard against those acts.

The same, to the Archbishop of Sens.

When it formerly reached our hearing that our beloved sons Master S. and B. had exchanged an archdeaconry and provostship with one another, [(And below:) [cf. c. 7, On the Exchange of Things, III. 19.] Therefore, because the truth concerning the act of B. himself could not be established to us, we decided to commit the cause concerning this under a certain form to our venerable brothers, the Bishops of Langres and Chalon. Therefore, wishing to proceed in execution of our mandate, after summoning the parties to their presence, they received the witnesses produced on both sides, heard the parties' confessions, and published the witnesses' depositions. And because, on account of a certain article that appeared doubtful to them, they proposed to remit the cause to us after it had been instructed, reducing all the acts to writing they enclosed them under their own seals and assigned them to the parties to be faithfully presented to us.]

But the aforesaid B., not deferring to our delegates, or rather to the delegator, violated their seals and was not ashamed to open the writings that were to have been presented to us. Afterwards, established in our presence while his adversary was present, he proposed before us in his own excuse that the judges had proceeded perversely against him, since they had reduced the acts to writing less than faithfully. Hence, fearing lest he was carrying the letters of Uriah, he opened their writings and discovered what he had suspected.

Indeed, if he had better observed what was expedient, he either would not have received the suspect writings or, having received them, would have faithfully presented them to us and shown before us the cause for his proposed suspicion. Moreover, since he did not complain about the judge whom we granted him on our own motion, but rather about the one whom he himself had decided to choose, and the judges had sent their letters to us through him, likewise complaining about him, we decided that faith was not to be given to his words. But, so that he might at least be punished in that in which he had sinned, we were unwilling—as indeed we ought not—to hear him against the judges' acts that he had rashly violated, lest his fraud appear to have brought him protection. Chapter XXXIV

Latin source headnote: A delegate is not bound to admit a colleague joined to him through surreptitious letters, nor the latter's subdelegate. This is what it says according to one understanding. Or thus: a delegate is not bound to admit the subdelegate of an impeded colleague if the rescript contains the clause “but if both, etc.” This is what it says according to another understanding.

The same, to the Abbot and Chaplain of Saint Mary of Bologna.

Established before our beloved son M., cardinal-deacon of Saint Theodore, whom we granted as auditor to you and to our beloved son H., messenger and cleric of Saint Agatha, your adversary—who had approached the Apostolic See with the instruments of that church but without letters of ratification, although he had given security for ratification by a surety—you took care to propose that, when formerly a certain man in the parish of Saint Mary, after an appeal had been interposed to the Apostolic See, constructed a house and church in honor of blessed Agatha, Pope Alexander of good memory, our predecessor, committed the cause concerning this to T., Abbot of Saint Stephen, and T., Prior of Saint Victor, to be terminated with a due end. After hearing what had been proposed on each side and diligently inspecting the parties' arguments, they rendered a definitive sentence for the church of Saint Mary, which was afterwards confirmed by our predecessors Lucius, Gregory, and Clement of happy memory.

But the chaplain of Saint Agatha disdained to obey the sentence, received the parishioners of Saint Mary to ecclesiastical sacraments, and, while suspended, presumed to celebrate divine offices. And when the parties had disputed the same cause before our venerable brother H., Bishop of Ferrara, for almost a year, with witnesses produced before him, the party of the church of Saint Agatha, suppressing the truth of these matters, obtained that our beloved son Master L., a canon of Bologna, be joined to the same bishop in decision of the cause. When he was unable to take part in the cause, the aforesaid bishop—to whom by subsequent letters impetrated for the third time it was commanded that, if both were unable to take part in executing the apostolic mandates, he should nevertheless fulfill them—after the attestations had been published and the arguments more fully understood, confirmed the aforesaid sentence, enjoining the chaplain of Saint Agatha under penalty of excommunication that he receive none of your parishioners dwelling within certain bounds to divine offices or ecclesiastical sacraments.

To this the said Hugolinus answered on the other side that formerly the Archpriest of Pastino impetrated an indulgence from our aforesaid predecessor Alexander that he might newly found a church in the village of Castellio, in which the multitude of people had grown exceedingly. Hence the Bishop of Bologna at that time, by mandate of our same predecessor, both marked the site and blessed the foundation stone and placed it in the foundation according to custom; and thus for twenty years he justly possessed the chapel constructed in the same place together with the whole parish that the church of Pastino has to this day. Pope Celestine of happy memory, our predecessor, confirmed it to them by his letters, and we received under our protection the chapel made censual to us by the same archpriest.

Hence, formerly a certain regular canon appointed by the Archpriest of Pastino to celebrate divine offices in that chapel, without authority of the archpriest and chapter of Pastino, appeared before the aforesaid Abbot of Saint Stephen and Prior of Saint Victor after being cited by them, but did not undergo judgment before them. On the contrary, from them as reasonably suspect—because they had wished to claim the aforesaid parish for themselves—he decided to appeal to our hearing. But the same judges, not hesitating to exceed the bounds of the mandate, rendered a sentence concerning both the new and the old population, although according to the tenor of the letters directed to them they could have judged only concerning the old.

But afterwards the aforementioned canon, appearing before the Bishop of Ferrara against the will, or rather prohibition, of his archpriest, litigated for a while before him; but at last, discovering that all the bishop's familiars were adverse to him, he caused the aforesaid master to be joined to him. The messenger of the church of Saint Agatha, however, proposed among other things that, when the said Master L. had delegated his authority to another, the bishop refused to admit the subdelegate, but, after appeal had lawfully been interposed to us, proceeded alone in cognizance of the cause.

Hence, against the first sentence they alleged that nothing concerning the commission impetrated to the first judges reached the archpriest's knowledge; that the judges proceeded after an appeal had been lawfully interposed; and that the bounds of the mandate were exceeded in the proceeding. But against the second they similarly proposed that the regular canon who litigated before the Bishop of Ferrara not only had not been appointed proctor for that cause, but had even presumed to involve himself in the suit contrary to the archpriest's prohibition; that the Bishop of Ferrara had proceeded alone, although the cause had not been delegated to him alone and his colleague, even if unable to take part in the cause, had nevertheless committed his authority to another; and that, after appeal had also been interposed to us, the same man of Ferrara promulgated a sentence for the church of Saint Mary.

But to these things the other party replied that the foregoing could not stand, since it ought not to be believed that the adverse party appealed from those judges when it neither knew nor had heard that letters of commission had emanated to them. Furthermore, since the obstacle of appeal had been closed to the parties in the letters of commission, no deference was to be given to the appeal afterwards interposed. Moreover, since, as the adversary confessed at law, although the party of the one who impetrated the letters in order to pursue the appeal nevertheless did not use them, it ought to be held the same as if the appeal had not been pursued. Hence the sentence had already passed into the authority of a matter adjudged, even if it had been rendered contrary to the litigant's right. And since neither the letters of commission obtained to the first judges were presented at law nor was it otherwise lawfully demonstrated that the judges exceeded the form of the mandate, presumption is rather to be made for the sentence.

What is said on the other side—that that canon was not a proctor—does no harm, since by joining issue before the Bishop of Ferrara he was made master of the suit, having been a general proctor of the church from its foundation, and thus acted and contracted as if he truly were lord of the chapel. This is especially so because he was drawn into the cause not so much in the church's name as in his own, inasmuch as he received to divine offices the parishioners adjudged to the church of Saint Mary and furnished them ecclesiastical sacraments. Furthermore, since it had reached the archpriest's knowledge that the cause itself had been delegated to the Bishop of Ferrara, if he was unwilling to undergo judgment through that canon, he ought to have sent another to conduct the cause. Since he did not do so, it is to be imputed to his negligence, or rather to his malice, since he thus endeavored to enervate our commission.

But, to the contrary, it was answered that the Bishop of Ferrara could proceed alone, since issue had first been joined before him and witnesses produced for the cause, and it had been inserted in the letters of the final commission that, if both were unable to take part in executing the apostolic mandates, the aforesaid bishop should nevertheless take care to execute them. This is understood not as "if they were unable to take part personally or through others," because that would happen rarely or never, but "if he could not take part personally." Therefore, no deference whatever was to be given to the appeal interposed for the aforesaid reasons, since they were not sufficient causes.

The same cardinal, therefore, having heard these and other things proposed on each side, by apostolic mandate confirmed the sentence rendered by the same Bishop of Ferrara and decided that perpetual silence concerning this was to be imposed upon the adverse party. We therefore confirm by apostolic authority what was done by him and fortify it with the protection of the present writing.

> Coram dilecto filio nostro M. sancti Theodori diacono cardinali, quem tibi et dilecto filio H. nuncio, et clerico sanctae Agathae adversario tuo, qui cum instrumentis eiusdem ecclesiae, sed absque literis de ratihabitione, ad apostolicam sedem accesserat, sed de rato caverat sub fideiussoria cautione, concessimus auditorem, constitutus proponere curavisti, quod, quum olim quidam in parochia sanctae Mariae, post appellationem interpositam ad apostolicam sedem, in honorem beatae Agathae domum et ecclesiam construxisset, bonae memoriae Alexander Papa praedecessor noster causam super hoc T. abbati sancti Stephani, et T. priori sancti Victoris commisit fine debito terminandam; qui auditis quae fuerant hinc inde proposita, et rationibus partium diligenter inspectis, pro ecclesia S. Mariae diffinitivam sententiam protulerunt, quae per felicis recordationis Lucium, Gregorium et Clementem praedecessores nostros fuit postmodum confirmata. Verum capellanus sanctae Agathae sententiae parere contempsit, et parochianos sanctae Mariae ad ecclesiastica sacramenta recepit, et suspensus divina praesumpsit officia celebrare. Quumque super eadem causa coram venerabili fratre nostro H. Ferrariensi episcopo fere per annum disceptatum fuisset a partibus, productis testibus coram eo, pars ecclesiae sanctae Agathae, horum veritate suppressa, dilectum filium magistrum L. Bononiensem canonicum obtinuit eidem episcopo in causae decisione adiungi. Qui quum causae interesse non posset, praedictus episcopus, cui per sequentes literas impetratas tertio mandabatur, ut, si ambo interesse non possent mandatis apostolicis exsequendis, ea ipse nihilominus adimpleret, attestationibus publicatis et rationibus plenius intellectis sententiam praedictam confirmavit, capellano S. Agathae sub poena excommunicationis iniungens, ut nullum parochianorum tuorum infra certos terminos commorantium ad officia divina vel ecclesiastica reciperet sacramenta. Ad hoc dictus Hugolinus ex adverso respondit, quod olim archipresbyter de Pastino a praedicto Alexandro praedecessore nostro indulgentiam impetravit, ut in vico Castellionis, in quo superexcreverat populi multitudo, ecclesiam de novo fundaret. Unde tunc Bononiensis episcopus de mandato eiusdem praedecessoris nostri et locum signavit, et primarium lapidem benedixit, et in fundamento secundum consuetudinem collocavit, et sic capellam in eodem loco constructam cum tota parochia, quam usque hodie habet ecclesia de Pastino, per XX. annos iuste possedit, quam felicis recordationis Coelestinus Papa praedecessor noster eis suis literis confirmavit, et nos sub nostra protectione recepimus constitutam nobis ab eodem archipresbytero censualem. Unde olim quidam canonicus regularis ab archipresbytero de Pastino, ut divina in eadem celebraret officia deputatus, praeter auctoritatem archipresbyteri et capituli de Pastino coram praedicto abbate S. Stephani et priore S. Victoris ab illis citatus apparuit, sed coram eis iudicium non subivit. Immo ab ipsis tanquam de ratione suspectis, quia praedictam sibi voluerant parochiam vindicare, ad nostram duxit audientiam appellandum. Iidem autem iudices non dubitantes mandati fines excedere, tam super novo quam veteri populo sententiam protulerunt, quum secundum tenorem literarum directarum ad eos non potuissent nisi de veteri iudicare. Postmodum vero memoratus canonicus contra voluntatem, immo prohibitionem archipresbyteri sui coram Ferrariensi episcopo comparens, sub eo aliquantulum litigavit; sed tandem comperto, quod universi familiares eius ei essent adversi, praedictum magistrum ei fecit adiungi. Nuncius vero ecclesiae sanctae Agathae inter alia proposuit, quod, quum dictus magister L. vices suas alii delegasset, episcopus admittere noluit subdelegatum; sed post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam solus in causae cognitione processit. Unde contra primam sententiam allegabat, quod de commissione ad primos iudices impetrata ad archipresbyteri notitiam nil pervenit, quod iudices post appellationem legitime interpositam processerunt, et quia fines mandati fuerunt in processu transgressi. Contra secundam vero similiter proponebant, quod canonicus regularis, qui coram Ferrariensi episcopo litigavit, non solum non fuerat procurator datus ad eam, sed etiam contra prohibitionem archipresbyteri liti se praesumpserat immiscere; quod Ferrariensis episcopus solus processerat, quum non ei soli causa fuerat delegata, et collega eius, etsi causae nequiverit interesse, alii tamen commiserit vices suas, et post appellationem etiam ad nos interpositam idem Ferrariensis pro ecclesia S. Mariae sententiam promulgavit. Ad haec autem pars altera replicabat, quod praedicta stare non poterant, quum credi non debeat, quod a iudicibus illis pars appellaverit adversa, ad quos nec sciverat, nec audierat commissionis literas emanasse. Praeterea quum in literis commissionis appellationis fuisset obstaculum partibus interclusum, appellationi postmodum interpositae non fuerat deferendum. Insuper, quum, sicut adversarius fuit in iure confessus, et si pars eius, qui, ut prosequeretur appellationem, literas impetraret, non tamen illis fuerit usa, pro eodem haberi debebat, ac si non fuerit prosecuta. Unde sententia iam transierat in rei iudicatae auctoritatem, etiamsi contra ius litigantis prolata fuisset. Quum autem nec literae commissionis ad iudices primos obtentae praesententur in iure, nec aliter legitime demonstretur formam mandati iudices excessisse, pro sententia potius est praesumendum. Quod dicitur ex adverso, quod canonicus ille non fuerit procurator, non nocet, quum ipse litem coram Ferrariensi episcopo contestando factus fuerit dominus litis, qui generalis ab ipsius fundatione ecclesiae procurator fuerat, et sic agebat et contrahebat, ac si vere capellae dominus exstitisset, praesertim quum in causam non tam ecclesiae nomine, quam proprio traheretur, utpote qui parochianos adiudicatos ecclesiae S. Mariae ad divina recipiebat officia, et exhibebat eis ecclesiastica sacramenta. Praeterea, quum ad archipresbyteri notitiam pervenisset, causam ipsam fuisse Ferrariensi episcopo delegatam, si per canonicum illum nolebat subire iudicium, ad causam agendam debuerat alium destinare. Quod quum non fecerit, eius est negligentiae imputandum, immo malitiae potius, qui sic commissionem nostram nisus fuerit enervare. Sed econtra fuit responsum, quod Ferrariensis episcopus solus procedere potuit, quum primum coram eo lis fuerit contestata et testes ad causam producti, et in ultimae commissionis literis fuisset insertum, quod, si ambo interesse non possent exsequendis mandatis apostolicis, praedictus episcopus ea nihilominus exsequi procuraret. Quod non intelligitur, ut, si per se, vel per alios interesse non possent, quia id raro vel nunquam contingeret, sed si non posset personaliter interesse. Appellationi ergo interpositae ob causas praedictas, quum causae sufficientes non essent, aliquatenus non erat deferendum. Idem igitur cardinalis, auditis his et aliis, quae fuerunt hinc inde proposita, latam ab eodem Ferrariensi episcopo sententiam de mandato apostolico confirmavit, et adversae parti super hoc perpetuum silentium duxit imponendum. Nos ergo quod ab eo factum est auctoritate apostolica confirmamus, et praesentis scripti patrocinio communimus.

The same, to the Provost of Saint Dominic, our Subdeacon.

Since R., a canon of Genoa, obtained that the pecuniary cause disputed between himself on the one side and P., a citizen of Genoa, on the other be delegated to you, and the same citizen, on account of many grave hostilities in his city, is unable to appear in your presence, as became known to us from the intimation of himself and our beloved sons, the consuls of Genoa, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that you leave to the aforesaid R. an option of this kind: with the canons of Genoa excepted, whom the adverse party deservedly holds suspect because they are his associates, he is to choose a judge in the city or diocese of Genoa—in which, as we hold for certain, there are many provident men—before whom the question is to be terminated. By our authority you are strictly to command that judge to take care to terminate that cause with a due end, appeal having been removed, according to the tenor of the rescript obtained from you.

Chapter XXXVI

Latin source headnote: If a delegated judge is commanded to absolve one who says that he was unjustly excommunicated, he ought to absolve him before proof. But if he says that the excommunication is null, the judge shall admit proof of nullity before pronouncement.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rouen.

Since it sometimes happens that laymen—(And below: cf. c. 24, On Rescripts, I. 3.)—moreover, we were asked: when someone complains that a sentence of excommunication was promulgated against him by his bishop after an appeal was lawfully interposed to us, or was otherwise promulgated unjustly, and by our letters we give our judges a mandate that, if it is so, either they confer upon him the benefit of absolution according to the form of the Church or declare that sentence null, and the bishop is prepared to prove that he rendered a sentence of this kind against him before he uttered the voice of appeal, or otherwise justly, whether, without the proofs having been admitted, it is lawful for the judges to absolve the excommunicated person or declare the sentence null.

To this we answer you in this manner: concerning the aforesaid case, if we remember well, we have not been accustomed to write to judges under the form prescribed above, but under this one: namely, that, if they find that the sentence of excommunication was rendered after an appeal was lawfully interposed to us, declaring it to be entirely null, they are to hear whatever question remains; otherwise, having received security according to the form of the Church, they are to confer the benefit of absolution upon the complainant and, after enjoining upon him what is to be enjoined by law, hear the cause and take care to terminate it with a due end.

But if perchance it should appear that we have at times written in the aforesaid case under the form previously noted, in the one of the aforesaid cases—namely, when someone complains that he was bound by excommunication after an appeal was lawfully interposed to us—the proofs of both parties are always to be admitted before proceeding to decree anything concerning this. By these it will finally appear whether the complainant requires absolution or instead is to be declared not bound.

But in the case in which someone asserts that he was unjustly excommunicated, his proof is scarcely or never to be admitted before he has been absolved, except only when he asserts that an intolerable error was patently expressed in the sentence of excommunication; to prove this he is admitted before he obtains the grace of absolution. But if he proposes simply that he was unjustly excommunicated and the bishop seeks that his proofs be admitted to prove that he justly excommunicated him, the bishop is in no way to be heard before that person's absolution, since, even if it were established for certain that a sentence of excommunication was reasonably promulgated against him, absolution would nevertheless have to be conferred according to the form of the Church upon one humbly seeking it. And therefore, in this case, we believe that he is to be absolved immediately according to the form of the Church, so that only then, when the proofs of both parties have been admitted, it may be decreed whether he was justly or unjustly bound. [Given at the Lateran, on the Kalends of September, in the thirteenth year, 1210.]

> Quum contingat interdum, quod laici (Et infra: cf. c. 24. de rescr. I. 3.) Insuper requisiti sumus, quum quis conqueritur in se a suo episcopo post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam, vel alias iniuste excommunicationis sententiam promulgatam, et nos iudicibus damus nostris literis in mandatis, ut, si est ita, vel iuxta formam ecclesiae absolutionis beneficium illi impendant, vel eandem sententiam denuncient esse nullam, ac episcopus paratus sit probare, se in illum, antequam vocem appellationis emitteret, vel alias iuste huiusmodi sententiam protulisse, an probationibus non admissis liceat iudicibus excommunicatum absolvere, vel denunciare sententiam esse nullam? Ad quod tibi taliter respondemus, quod super iam dicto casu non consuevimus, si bene meminimus, sub praescripta forma iudicibus scribere, sed sub ista, ut videlicet, si excommunicationis sententiam post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam invenerint esse latam, ipsam denunciantes penitus nullam esse, audiant, si quid fuerit quaestionis; alioquin recepta iuxta formam ecclesiae cautione impendant absolutionis beneficium conquerenti, et iniuncto sibi quod de iure fuerit iniungendum, audiant causam, et eandem fine debito terminare procurent. Sed si forsan appareat, nos in iam dicto casu sub praenotata quandoque forma scripsisse, in altero utique casuum praedictorum, quum quis videlicet conqueritur, se post appellationem ad nos legitime interpositam excommunicatione fuisse innodatum, semper utriusque partis probationes sunt admittendae, antequam ad decernendum super hoc aliquid procedatur, per quas denique apparebit, an absolutione indigeat conquerens, vel denunciandus sit potius non ligatus. In eo vero casu, quum videlicet excommunicatum quis se asserit iniuste, vix vel nunquam est eius, antequam absolutus fuerit, probatio admittenda, nisi tunc tantum, quum asserit in excommunicationis sententia intolerabilem errorem fuisse patenter expressum, ad quod probandum admittitur antequam absolutionis gratiam consequatur. Verum si proponat, se simpliciter excommunicatum iniuste, ac episcopus ad probandum, quod iuste ipsum excommunicavit, suas postulet probationes admitti, non est ante absolutionem ipsius aliquatenus audiendus, quum, etsi pro certo constaret, rationabiliter in illum excommunicationis sententiam promulgatam, nihilominus esset ei absolutio secundum formam ecclesiae impendenda humiliter postulanti. Et ideo in hoc casu illum credimus iuxta formam ecclesiae protinus absolvendum, ut sic demum, probationibus utriusque partis admissis, utrum iuste vel iniuste ligatus fuerit, decernatur. [Dat. Lat. Kal. Sept. Ao. XIII. 1210.]

Latin source headnote: If the subdelegate of a papal delegate has begun to use the jurisdiction, he cannot be removed by the delegate; and, if he has acted contrary to the mandate or exceeded the form of the rescript, the proceeding is null.

Honorius III, to the Archbishops of Messina and Reggio.

By our letters we gave a mandate to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Cosenza that he cause our venerable brother the Bishop of Cefalù to be restored to his episcopate and to the other things of which he had been unduly despoiled. When the latter had been fully restored and had obtained corporal and peaceable possession, if he saw that the same bishop was deservedly suspect of waste, as had been suggested to us, he was providently to join to him a provident and honorable man as coadjutor, without whose counsel he should do none of those things that pertain to temporal administration, until, the truth having been discovered, we should decide that provision be made otherwise; meanwhile, by our authority, he was strictly to prohibit every kind of alienation to each of them.

Moreover, the same archbishop, burdened by bodily infirmity, committed his authority in a business of this kind first to the Abbot of the Holy Spirit of Palermo, and then to the Treasurer of Cosenza. With the counsel of our brothers, as justice required, we quashed their proceedings that were exhibited to us: namely, because the abbot, contrary to the tenor of our mandate, proceeded to inquire whether the bishop was suspect of waste when the latter had not been restored; and the archbishop himself, when he had already discharged his office by committing his authority in its entirety to the said abbot, could not entrust a business of this kind to the said treasurer.

Si subdelegatus delegati Papae iurisdictione uti coeperit, a delegato removeri non potest; et si fecerit contra mandatum, sive excesserit formam rescripti, processus est nullus.

Honorius III. Messanensi et Reginensi Archiepiscopis.

Venerabili fratri nostro archiepiscopo Cusentino nostris dedimus literis in mandatis, ut venerabilem fratrem nostrum Cephaludensem episcopum restitui faceret ad episcopatum, et ad alia, quibus fuerat indebite spoliatus; quo restituto plenarie, et corporalem ac pacificam possessionem adepto, si videret, quod idem, episcopus merito esset, prout nobis suggestum fuerat, de dilapidatione suspectus, virum providum et honestum provideret coadiutorem eidem adiungere, sine cuius consilio nihil eorum faceret, quae ad administrationem pertinent temporalem, quoadusque veritate comperta duceremus aliter providendum, interim omne alienationis genus eorum utrique auctoritate nostra districtius interdicens. Porro idem archiepiscopus corporis infirmitate gravatus, commisit in huiusmodi negotio vices suas primo abbati sancti Spiritus de Panormo, ac demum thesaurario Cusentino. Quorum processus nobis exhibitos de fratrum nostrorum consilio cassavimus iustitia exigente, quia videlicet abbas contra mandati nostri tenorem ad inquirendum, utrum de dilapidatione suspectus esset episcopus, eo non restituto processit, et archiepiscopus ipse, quum iam suo functus esset officio dicto abbati committendo in integrum vices suas, huiusmodi negotium dicto thesaurario non potuit demandare.

Latin source headnote: If a delegate has pronounced that he has no jurisdiction, he does not reassume it even with the parties' consent.

Gregory IX, to S., Precentor, and Master N., Canon of Amiens.

Know that, by the signification of the woman M. and F., her son, we have learned that, when the noblewoman I., a widow, falsely representing herself as poor, impetrated our letters against them to judges concerning lands and other things, they took care to propose before the judges by way of exception that, because the said letters had been impetrated by the suggestion of a falsehood—since the aforesaid Juliana, who is noble and rich, called herself poor in them—they ought not by law to be convened before them through such letters unless the lord under whose jurisdiction they stand, and before whom they were prepared to furnish to her the fullness of justice, had first been requested. Hence the said judges pronounced interlocutorily that they ought not to proceed by those letters. (And below:)

Finally, the parties submitted to certain persons as arbiters in such a manner that, if they did not decide the cause within the term expressed in the submission, the parties would return to the examination of the same judges. But when the arbiters neglected to terminate the cause within the term, the said judges reassumed jurisdiction through the form of that submission. Feeling themselves aggrieved by them, because they compelled them to litigate concerning those matters from which they had been absolved by them, those persons appealed to our hearing. Therefore we command that, if it is so, you revoke as null, etc.

When a cause of suspicion has been assigned against a judge, not the judge himself, who perhaps, if challenged, would cause harm, but rather the arbiters before whom the proof is to be made, and to whom all things that contribute to this article are known to pertain, can assign a term for this. By the judge himself also—to whom, just as jurisdiction, so also the other things without which the cause cannot be concluded are understood to have been committed—the same arbiters are to be compelled, if they are in disagreement, to unite in one opinion or concordantly call in a third person with whom two or either one of them may do this, lest on an occasion of this kind the principal business be prolonged beyond what is due.

Latin source headnote: Delegated jurisdiction cannot be extended to persons not expressed in the rescript, even with their consent.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Geneviève.

When P. and G., through apostolic letters, complained before you concerning the Bishop of London that he had not repaid at the promised place and term a loan granted by them, while the judgment was pending the layman I., who was bound to the same merchants for a certain sum, wished, as he asserts, to extend your jurisdiction over himself, so that, if he did not pay the aforesaid sum within the appointed term, you would promulgate sentences of excommunication and interdict against his person and land. We decree that the sentences rendered by you on an occasion of this kind are not valid, since, even if you are said otherwise to preside over a jurisdiction, because you had no jurisdiction over the said I., no extension of jurisdiction is known to have existed, since delegated jurisdiction of this kind cannot be extended to other persons.

Quas huiusmodi occasione a te latas decernimus non valere, quum, etsi alias iurisdictioni praeesse dicaris, quia in dictum I. nullam iurisdictionem habebas, iurisdictionis prorogatio nulla noscitur exstitisse, quum huiusmodi delegata iurisdictio ad alias personas nequeat prorogari.

Chapter XLIII

Latin source headnote: A papal delegate can subdelegate, although he was appointed by virtue of office, or with the parties' consent, or with a clause of preselection, namely, "but if not all, you with another are to execute it, etc." This is what it says, as far as § But he. § 1. One to whom a business is committed for personal execution can delegate it to another if the parties consent. It is otherwise in the cases expressed here. This is what it says, as far as § But. § 2. One to whom a bare ministry is committed for execution cannot commit his authority to another; it is otherwise for a legate of the Apostolic See. And it is a notable text and is much alleged. The Sicilian Abbot.

The same.

Since the Apostolic See intends to provide for business and not for the persons to whom the same business is committed, if a third judge, although appointed by us by virtue of our office or with the parties' assent as a common judge for them, delegates his authority to another, because this is conceded by law to one delegated by the prince, his delegation will be valid. The same is also to be said when a bishop is commanded to execute the apostolic mandate with one of his other co-judges, and then the remaining two will be unable to proceed without a subdelegate from the bishop.

§ 1. But one who is enjoined to execute a business personally can delegate it to others, provided that the parties consent, except if we were to command that an inquiry be made or that provision be made for churches concerning prelates or other ministers, since in all these cases we appear to choose the diligence and faith of the person to whom we commit such things.

§ 2. But, with the authority of the legates of the Apostolic See preserved, let it be lawful for no one to whom it has been committed to preach the cross, to excommunicate or absolve certain persons, to dispense with irregular persons, or to enjoin penances, hereafter to entrust these things to others, because in this matter not jurisdiction but rather a certain ministry is committed to him.

Is, cui committitur negotium, ut personaliter exsequatur, potest, si partes consentiunt, alteri subdelegare. Fallit in casibus hic expressis. Hoc dicit usque ad § Ceterum. § 2. Is, cui committitur nudum ministerium exsequendum, non potest vices suas alteri committere; fallit in legato sedis apostolicae. Et est textus notabilis, et multum allegatur. Abb. Siculus.

Idem quoque dicendum est, quum mandatur episcopo, ut cum altero suorum coniudicum mandatum apostolicum exsequatur, et tunc sine subdelegato ab ipso episcopo reliqui duo procedere non valebunt. § 1. Is autem, cui iniungitur, ut personaliter negotium exsequatur, potest, dummodo partes consentiant, hoc aliis delegare, praeterquam si inquisitionem fieri, vel ecclesiis de praelatis vel aliis ministris provideri mandaremus, quum in his omnibus casibus industriam et fidem personae, cui talia committimus, eligere videamur. § 2. Ceterum, salva legatorum sedis apostolicae auctoritate, nulli, cui commissum fuerit praedicare crucem, excommunicare vel absolvere aliquos, dispensare cum irregularibus, vel iniungere poenitentias, liceat haec de cetero aliis demandare, quia non sibi iurisdictio, sed certum ministerium potius committitur in hac parte.

Title XXX: On the Office of a Legate

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A papal legate can be approached even through a simple complaint.

Alexander III, to all the Suffragans of the Church of Canterbury.

Since you are not unaware that our venerable brother the Archbishop of Canterbury presides over you not only by metropolitan right but also by right of legation, it is sufficiently astonishing that certain of you, as we have heard, presume to assert that the same archbishop ought to hear no cause from your bishoprics by either metropolitan or legatine right unless it is brought to him through appeal. Indeed, although perhaps the same archbishop ought not by metropolitan right to hear causes from your bishoprics unless they are brought to him through appeal, nevertheless, by reason of the legation, he can and ought to hear all causes from those bishoprics that reach his hearing through appeal or the complaint of certain persons, inasmuch as he is proved to exercise our authority in his province. Therefore, we command and enjoin that you leave to his judgment the causes that are brought from your bishoprics to the same archbishop, and that you not attempt to deter or impede any cleric or layman of your jurisdiction from being able, if he wishes, to transfer a cause to the aforesaid archbishop.

> Quum non ignoretis, venerabilem fratrem nostrum Cantuariensem archiepiscopum vobis non solum metropolitico, sed etiam legationis iure praeesse, mirabile satis est, quod quidam vestrum, sicut audivimus, asseverare praesumunt, quod idem archiepiscopus nullam causam de episcopatibus vestris sive metropoleos sive legationis iure debeat audire, nisi per appellationem ad ipsum deferatur. Sane licet forte idem archiepiscopus metropolitico iure audire non debeat causas de episcopatibus vestris, nisi per appellationem deferantur ad eum, legationis tamen obtentu universas causas de ipsis episcopatibus, quae per appellationem vel querimoniam aliquorum perveniunt ad suam audientiam, audire potest et debet, sicut qui in provincia sua vices nostras gerere comprobatur. Mandamus itaque et praecipimus, ut causas quae de episcopatibus vestris ad eundem archiepiscopum proferuntur, eius iudicio relinquatis nec quemlibet clericum vel laicum vestrae iurisdictionis deterrere vel impedire tentetis, quominus causam ad praefatum Archiepiscopum, si voluerit, possit transferre.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A legate cannot intrude himself into a cause specially delegated by the Pope.

Celestine III.

You have been zealous to ask us whether another who is a general legate in the province can take cognizance of a cause that we delegate to someone, either before cognizance or afterwards, or thus impede the proceeding of our commission that we transmit to a delegated judge. Wishing, therefore, to cut this doubt from your mind, we answer that, since a special mandate derogates from a general one, a legate neither ought nor can impede a commission specially made to another or to others. Hence, even if a sentence has already been promulgated according to the expressed form of our mandate, the legate himself will not be able to annul it in any manner unless he has received a special mandate concerning this. Nevertheless, if it was rendered reasonably, he will be able to confirm it and put it into execution.

> Studuisti a nobis quaerere utrum de causa, quam alicui delegamus, alius, qui sit generalis in provincia legatus, vel ante cognitionem, vel postea cognoscere valeat, vel commissionis nostrae processum, quem iudici delegato transmittimus, taliter impedire. Hanc itaque dubitationem de animo tuo amputare volentes Respondemus, quod, quum mandatum speciale derogat generali, legatus commissionem alii vel aliis factam specialiter impedire non debet nec potest, unde, et si secundum formam expressam mandati nostri sententia iam fuerit promulgata, non poterit ipse legatus, nisi super hoc mandatum speciale receperit, eam quomodolibet irritare. Ipsam tamen, si rationabiliter lata fuerit, confirmare valebit et exsecutioni mandare.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: Even a legate a latere, by virtue of a general legation, cannot transfer bishops, subject one cathedral church to another, grant another the right of primacy, unite two bishoprics, or divide one; nevertheless, he can absolve persons excommunicated on account of laying hands upon clerics. This is what it says together with the following chapter.

Innocent III, to the Cardinal-Priest of the Title of Saint Lawrence in Lucina, Legate of the Apostolic See.

Unless that special affection that we have had and have toward your person tempered the just—indeed, most just—movement of our mind, you would learn through instructive punishment how greatly you have transgressed against your own person and how greatly you have offended against the Roman Church, your mother. Although she nourished and exalted you, you appear utterly to have spurned her, since, spurning canonical sanctions and general custom, on your own motion you presumed to do what had neither been done nor heard of: without our special mandate, you transferred in fact—because by law you could not—our venerable brother the Bishop of Troia, chancellor of the kingdom of Sicily, from the church of Troia to that of Palermo. [Indeed, etc.; cf. c. 3, On the Use and Authority of the Pallium, I. 8.]

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's quantumcunquae has been corrected to quantumque, the reading required by the parallel construction and printed by Friedberg.

> Legatus etiam de latere ex generali legatione non potest transferre episcopos, vel unam ecclesiam cathedralem alteri subiicere, et alteri concedere ius primatiae, vel duos episcopatus unire, vel unum dividere; excommunicatos tamen propter manuum iniectionem in clericos absolvere potest. [Sane etc. cf. c. 3. de usu et auct. pall. I. 8.]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: This was summarized above in the preceding chapter.

The same, to the same.

That we are unwilling to hold ratified the transfer of the pontiff from the bishopric of Troia to the metropolis of Palermo made by you was induced in us not by a zeal of bitterness but of rectitude. For, although a general legation in the kingdom of Sicily was committed to you, nevertheless, without our special mandate you ought not to have extended your hands to those things that, as a sign of singular privilege, are reserved only to the Supreme Pontiff. Yet even if certain of those things that were often granted to legates by special concession—namely, the absolution of those who, on account of sacrilegious laying of hands upon clerics, fall under the canon of the promulgated sentence—appear already to be lawful for legates by virtue of the office of legation itself, do you think that, because we committed our authority to you to be executed as legate, you could subject the church of Palermo to Messina, so that you might set the latter over the former by granting to it the privilege of primacy? Do you think that, from the same cause, it is lawful for you to unite two bishoprics or divide one without special license?

Therefore, do not reckon that it was done in hatred of him or to your injury, but so that the privilege of Peter may remain unshaken, since Pope Alexander of happy memory, our predecessor, did something nearly similar by resisting the presumption of a legate whom he had sent into Spain when the legate wished to attempt something similar. [But concerning, etc.; cf. c. 11, On the Times of Ordination, I. 11.]

> Summatum fuit supra in cap. praecedenti.
>
> Idem eidem.
>
> Quod translationem pontificis de Troiano episcopatu ad Panormitanam metropolim a te factam nolumus ratam habere, zelus utique non amaritudinis, sed rectitudinis nos induxit, quia, Licet in regno Siciliae generalis sit tibi commissa legatio, ad ea tamen sine speciali mandato nostro non debuisti manus extendere, quae in signum privilegii singularis sunt tantum summo Pontifici reservata. Tamen Et si quaedam ex his, quae de speciali concessione saepe fuere legatis indulta, ut illorum videlicet absolutio, qui propter sacrilegas manuum iniectiones in clericos, incidunt in canonem promulgatae sententiae, videantur ex ipso legationis officio iam licere legatis, an existimas, quia vices nostras tanquam legato tibi commisimus exsequendas, quod Panormitanam ecclesiam posses subiicere Messanensi, ut illam praeficeres isti, concesso sibi privilegio primatiae? An putas, ex eadem causa tibi licere, duos episcopatus unire, vel unum dividere sine licentia speciali? Non ergo in eius odium, vel ad iniuriam tui reputes esse factum, sed ut privilegium Petri maneat inconcussum, quum et felicis memoriae Alexander Papa, praedecessor noster, quasi simile fecerit, obviando praesumptioni legati, quem in Hispaniam destinarat, volenti simile attentare. [Super eo vero etc. cf. c. 11. de temp. ord. I. 11.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: From the point at which a legate has referred a cause to the Pope, he ceases to be its judge.

The same, to the Bishop of Bologna and M., Chaplain, our Subdeacon.

Although the canons of Trani had dissented at the beginning, nevertheless all at last unanimously consented, electing our beloved son G., brother of the Abbot of Cassino, as archbishop. Our venerable brother the Bishop of Porto, at that time legate of the Apostolic See, ordered his election to be examined and caused the examination reduced to writing to be secured with the seals of our beloved sons the archdeacon and Master Petrarcha, and also with his own seal, to be transmitted to the Apostolic See. He also sent us his letters of entreaty for the said brother of the Abbot of Cassino. Three of the canons of the church of Trani, sent by the whole chapter, humbly presented them to us together with the decree of election strengthened by the subscriptions of all the canons, and also the letters of the suffragans and the people, seeking that the canonical election celebrated concerning a suitable person be confirmed by apostolic authority.

But, for greater caution, we received from the aforesaid canons an oath, not exacted by us but offered by them, and diligently examined the fact of the election, as is both customary and lawful. Meanwhile, the messenger of the aforesaid Abbot of Cassino presented us his letters containing a grave complaint against the aforementioned legate: after he had examined the election and transferred it to the examination of our deliberation, when the messengers had already been directed, he again presumed, with excessive malice, to examine the same election. Hence he sought that the fact itself be diligently inquired into by suitable men free from suspicion.

And when the aforesaid bishop later arrived and we learned from him the things that had been done, with the common counsel of our brothers, we adjudged the second examination null and void, as having been made by one who was not its judge after the business had been transferred to our examination. [Nevertheless, because, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the eighth day before the Kalends of July, 1202.]

Literas quoque suas nobis pro dicto fratre Cassinensis abbatis deprecatorias destinavit, quas cum decreto electionis omnium canonicorum subscriptionibus roborato, nec non et literis suffraganeorum et populi, tres de canonicis Tranensis ecclesiae, ab universo capitulo destinati, nobis humiliter praesentarunt, petentes electionem canonicam de persona idonea celebratam auctoritate apostolica confirmari. Nos autem ad maiorem cautelam a praedictis canonicis in iuramentum recepimus, non a nobis exactum, sed ab ipsis oblatum, et factum electionis, sicut est et moris et iuris, examinavimus diligenter. Interim vero Nuncius praefati Cassinensis abbatis suas nobis literas praesentavit, gravem contra iam dictum legatum querimoniam continentes, quod, postquam electionem examinaverat, et eam ad nostrae deliberationis examen transtulerat, nunciis iam directis, iterum electionem eandem malitiose nimis examinare praesumpsit. Unde petebat per viros idoneos suspicione carentes de ipso facto diligenter inquiri. Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A legate a latere confers a vacant benefice, although it pertains to the presentation of some cleric. This is what it says, and it is a notable case.

The same, to the Abbots of Saint P. and Saint Leo, and R., Archdeacon of Toul.

Our beloved son R., a canon of Metz, humbly intimated to us that, when our venerable brother the Bishop of Palestrina, legate of the Apostolic See, liberally conferred upon him the church of Saint Trudo upon its own pastor's resignation made into the legate's hands, our beloved son B., Archdeacon of Metz, to whom presentation to that church pertained, asserting that it could not be conferred by the legate without his having been consulted, less than reasonably opposing himself to the grant, presumes unduly to molest the canon himself concerning the same church.

Therefore, since the prelate has more right in conferral than the patron in presentation, nor is prejudice done to the prelate if at times a church is granted by a legate of the Apostolic See without his having been consulted, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, after prior admonition, by ecclesiastical censure and with appeal removed, you compel the said archdeacon to desist from his undue molestation concerning this. [No letters, etc. Given at Anagni, on the tenth day before the Kalends of March, in the sixth year, 1204.]

Metensis archidiaconus, ad quem illius ecclesiae praesentatio pertinebat, asserens, quod eodem inconsulto conferri non potuit a legato, donationi eius minus rationabiliter se opponens, canonicum ipsum super eadem ecclesia indebite molestare praesumit. Quum igitur plus iuris habeat in concessione praelatus, quam in praesentatione patronus, nec praeiudicetur praelato, si quando per apostolicae sedis legatum eo inconsulto ecclesia concedatur, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus quatenus dictum archidiaconum, ut ab eius super hoc indebita molestatione desistat, monitione praemissa per censuram ecclesiasticam appellatione remota cogatis. Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A legate appointed for several places can exercise his jurisdiction in any one of the said places in such a way that he can conclude in one place what was done in another. This is what Panormitanus says.

The same, to the Illustrious King of the French.

He who is ignorant of nothing knows that to the royal sublimity—(And below:)—on your part we received a complaint, namely, that, although the legate was suspect to you for a certain reason, after an appeal was interposed to us he promulgated a sentence of interdict against your land outside the boundaries of the kingdom of the French. They also promised and offered to swear upon your soul that you would stand to law concerning this business before our legates and delegates, and that on account of a business of this kind you had been cited neither by us nor by another on our behalf to obey the law, you seeking that the aforesaid sentence be relaxed upon receipt of security of this kind. But to the things that they had objected against the cardinal, we have answered both them and your magnificence: although he had departed from the boundaries of the kingdom of the French, nevertheless he had not yet left the limits of his legation, since he had received from us the solicitude of legation enjoined upon him not only in the kingdom of the French but in the provinces of Vienne, Lyon, and Besançon.

Qui etiam in animam tuam promiserunt et obtulerunt iurare, quod tu coram legatis et delegatis nostris super hoc negotio stabis iuri, et quod propter huiusmodi negotium nec per nos, nec per alium fueris ex parte nostra citatus, ut iuri pareres, praedictam petens sententiam recepta huiusmodi cautione relaxari. Ceterum ad ea, quae contra cardinalem obiecerant, et eis respondimus, et Tuae magnificentiae respondemus, quod etsi fines regni Francorum exierat, nondum tamen fuerat terminos suae legationis egressus, quum non solum in regno Francorum, sed in Viennensi, Lugdunensi et Bisuntinensi provinciis iniunctam sibi a nobis legationis sollicitudinem suscepisset.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: When a legate a latere is present, a lesser legate ought to relinquish execution of his office.

Gregory IX, to the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

Wishing—(And below:)—we have decided that the office of legation in your province should be committed to your fraternity, in such a way, nevertheless, that, if it should happen that a legate a latere is sent to those regions, for reverence of the Apostolic See you are entirely to relinquish execution of that office for as long as that legate is there.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A legate not a latere but by reason of his person cannot, outside the province decreed to him, absolve persons excommunicated for laying hands upon clerics; nor can he do so even within the province if such excommunicated persons come there from elsewhere. But a legate by reason of dignity absolves no such persons. This is what it says according to the common understanding.

The same.

Legates of the Roman Church who are not sent a latere cannot impart the benefit of absolution to persons excommunicated for violent laying on of hands outside the province committed to them, or within it if those who laid hands in this manner should happen to come there from elsewhere. Nor can those who, under pretext of their churches, claim the dignity of legation for themselves impart it even to subjects situated within their province, unless by special grace something more is granted by the Apostolic See to the former and the latter.

> Legatus, non de latere sed ratione personae, extra provinciam sibi decretam absolvere nequit excommunicatos pro iniectione manuum in clericos, nec etiam in provincia, si tales excommunicati aliunde veniant. Legatus vero ratione dignitatis nullos tales absolvit. H. d. secundum communem intellectum.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A legate's statutes endure even after the legation has ended; nevertheless, the jurisdiction of his delegate ends if citation did not precede.

The same.

We wish it to be doubtful to no one that statutes issued by legates of the Apostolic See in the province committed to them endure as perpetual, although they afterwards departed from it. It is otherwise, however, if they decided to delegate causes to certain persons, since the jurisdiction of the latter expires if their citation did not precede the legates' departure.

Title XXXI: On the Office of an Ordinary Judge

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Bishops can inquire into and punish crimes in their dioceses and, when there is need, invoke the secular arm.

From the Synod of Pope John.

A pernicious [custom has grown up: a public judge or minister sells, as though matters for inquiry, the sins of the people that are to be inquired into by the bishops, to whom solicitude for souls is committed; and on that occasion a criminal life is freely increased. If they find adulterous women on the property of a church or cleric, they defame, seize, and tear them until their lords or parents redeem them, on account of which their blood relatives fall into no slight poverty; and in this order, after the sale, they do not fear to fornicate more freely, saying that nothing pertains to the bishop concerning one who is known to have been examined and redeemed by the public authority—which manifestly has grown up in an entirely irregular manner.]

Therefore, let the bishops of the individual cities have in their dioceses free power to inquire into, avenge, and adjudicate adulteries and crimes according to what the canons decree, without impediment from anyone. And when there is need, let them summon public assistance [to repress rebels and contemners], not for doing prejudice but rather for pursuing those things that are pleasing to God [and accord with the salvation of souls].

Et quum opus fuerit, [ad comprimendos rebelles et contemptores] publicum convocent auxilium non ad praeiudicandum, sed potius ad ea, quae Deo sunt placita [et saluti animarum conveniunt,] prosequendum.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: An ordinary who knows—not as judge or man, but as God—that a subject is guilty of a crime can reproach or punish him indeterminately, but not by name.

Pope Eugenius.

If a priest knows for certain that someone is guilty of some crime, or if he has confessed and is unwilling to amend, unless someone can prove it by judicial order, he ought not to reproach him by name but indeterminately, as Christ said: "One of you is about to betray me." But if the one to whom damage was inflicted should seek justice, he can excommunicate the author of the damage, even though he confessed to him. Nevertheless, he cannot remove him from communion by name, although he knows him to be guilty, because he knows it not as judge but as God. But he ought to admonish him not to intrude himself, because not even Christ removed Judas from communion.

> Ordinarius, qui scit, non ut iudex vel homo, sed ut Deus, subditum esse criminis reum, indeterminate poterit, sed non nominatim, eum arguere vel punire.
> Eugenius Papa.
>
> Si sacerdos sciat pro certo, aliquem, esse reum alicuius criminis, vel si confessus fuerit, et emendare noluerit, nisi iudiciario ordine quis probare possit, non debet eum arguere nominatim, sed indeterminate, sicut dixit Christus: "Unus vestrum me traditurus est." Sed si ille, cui damnum illatum est, petierit iustitiam, potest excommunicare auctorem damni, licet etiam ei confessus sit. Sed tamen non nominatim potest eum removere a communione, licet sciat eum esse reum, quia non ut iudex scit, sed ut Deus. Sed debet eum admonere, ne se ingerat, quia nec Christus Iudam a communione removit.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If an ordinary subject to a bishop renders a just ecclesiastical censure against one subject to him, the bishop ought to preserve it and ought not to relax it without satisfaction and the knowledge of the person who rendered it.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Florence.

When an ecclesiastical sentence is promulgated against certain malefactors by prelates of churches, it ought to stand ratified and firm and to be observed inviolably until fitting satisfaction. Therefore, by apostolic writings we [by way of precept] command your discretion that, whenever our beloved son Lan., pleban of Saint P. of Lucar, has reasonably rendered a sentence of interdict or excommunication against his clerical or lay parishioners, you are to cause it to be inviolably observed and not relax it without suitable satisfaction and without the knowledge of the same pleban.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: If the ordering of a vacant church, even one subject to patronage, is deferred for a just cause, a steward is to be placed there by the bishop.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans.

Since it is often necessary for you to defer the ordering of churches for the reason that at times persons less suitable are presented to you, or that at times, for another cause, a root of dissension has emerged between you and those presenting the persons, we must provide that meanwhile, on occasion of this dissension and scandal, the fruits of those churches not perish or grave losses befall them in spiritual things. Hence it is that by apostolic writings we command your fraternity by way of precept that, whenever in those vacant churches in which an ecclesiastical person does not have the presentation you are unable by law to institute persons in them, either because persons less suitable are presented to you or for another cause, with [contradiction and] appeal removed, you are to place stewards who ought to receive the fruits of the churches and either expend them for the utility of the churches or faithfully reserve them for the future persons.

Inde est, quod

fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si quando in illis vacantibus ecclesiis, in quibus ecclesiastica persona praesentationem non habet, vel quia personae minus idoneae vobis praesentantur, vel alia de causa, de iure personas non potueritis in eis instituere, [contradictione et] appellatione remota ponatis oeconomos, qui debeant ecclesiarum fructus percipere, et eos aut in ecclesiarum utilitatem expendere, aut futuris personis fideliter reservare.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: If it is established to the ordinary that one absolved by the Pope suppressed the true cause for which he had been excommunicated, he ought to remit him to the Pope. But if it is not established to him, although there is nevertheless a pressing suspicion against the person, he ought to compel him to purge himself.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

On your part it has been proposed to us by constant assertion that at times certain persons excommunicated for particular causes visit the Apostolic See and, keeping silent the causes for which they are bound by the bond of excommunication, carry back letters concerning their absolution containing that they approached the Apostolic See and, after their confessions had been heard, merited the benefit of absolution. Hence, because you wished to consult us whether the absolution holds of those who, after concealing the excesses for which they had been excommunicated, merited the benefit of absolution through the Apostolic See while putting forward another cause for their excommunication, we answer your consultation in this manner: if it should be established to you that it is so, you ought by ecclesiastical censure to compel them to return to the Apostolic See with your letters containing the truth of the matter. But if this is not established to you and you hold them suspect of not having confessed the truth, you ought to compel them concerning this to furnish purgation before you that they confessed the truth.

Si constat ordinario, quod absolutus a Papa suppressit veram causam, quare fuerat excommunicatus, debet illum remittere ad Papam. Si vero sibi non constat, est tamen sibi urgens suspicio contra eum, debet cogere eum se purgare.

Idem Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo.

Ex parte tua nobis est constanti assertione propositum, quod interdum quidam pro certis causis excommunicati sedem apostolicam visitant, et reticentes causas, pro quibus sunt vinculo excommunicationis adstricti, de absolutione sua literas deferunt, continentes, eos ad sedem apostolicam accessisse, et auditis confessionibus suis absolutionis beneficium meruisse. Unde Quia nos consulere voluisti, utrum illorum absolutio teneat, qui, occultatis excessibus, pro quibus excommunicati fuerant, absolutionis beneficium per sedem apostolicam meruerunt, suae excommunicationis causam aliam praetendentes, tuae consultationi taliter respondemus, quod, si ita tibi constiterit, debes eos ecclesiastica censura compellere, cum literis tuis rei veritatem continentibus ad sedem apostolicam redire. Si vero id tibi non constiterit, et eos suspectos habueris, quod confessi non fuerint veritatem, ipsos compellere debes exinde coram te, quod veritatem confessi fuerint, purgationem praestare.

Latin source headnote: If, through the sloth or malice of a papal delegate, someone perseveres in sin, the ordinary of the place can supply what is lacking, notwithstanding that the cause was committed to a delegate. This is what it says, and it is a notable and exceptional case.

Celestine III.

Your fraternity signified to us that certain of your parishioners, when they are marked by excommunication for an illicit union of consanguinity or affinity, impetrate letters of commission from the Apostolic See to judges farther away. When they have been absolved from excommunication by these letters, because the said delegates neither approach the place where witnesses to the consanguinity or affinity can be produced nor send anyone to receive them, they remain in the aforesaid union of a nefarious conjunction, and the cause does not obtain its due effect.

Hence you sought from us what is to be done by you in such a circumstance. Therefore, because through the malice or sloth of a delegated judge no one ought to find support for remaining in the union of an iniquitous conjunction, in this consultation we give your fraternity this answer: as often as it should happen that the things we have stated above occur in your diocese, you can lawfully recall those so absolved into the former sentence of excommunication and hold them bound by that sentence until the cause begins to have lawful progress in reception of the witnesses and in other matters, or you receive another mandate concerning this from the Apostolic See. [But, etc.; cf. c. 6, On Compelling Witnesses, II. 21.]

Unde postulasti a nobis, quid sit tibi in tali articulo faciendum. Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: An ordinary supplies for the negligence of an abbot who does not recall a wandering monk.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Auch.

The more studiously the devotion of religious men adheres to divine mandates and intends to please its Creator through works of holy conduct, the more the enemy of the human race labors for their seduction by the maliciousness of his fraud, furnishes them in various ways with material for transgressing, and endeavors to ensnare their souls with an inextricable snare. Indeed, know that it has reached our hearing that monks, canons, and other regulars of your province, although they ought rather to keep watch in the cloister in divine services according to regular statutes, after gathering money from obediences and revenues whose care they administered, abhorring the cloister, do not fear to run about through the courts of princes and powerful men. With their gifts they acquire their favor and grace for themselves; relying upon their familiarity, they stir up grave dissensions in their convent and, scorning the humility of the others in a spirit of arrogance, exist as disobedient and contumacious toward the mandates of their prelates and immerse themselves in the solicitudes of secular business contrary to their prohibition.

Therefore, because the order of religion is not a little enervated on account of this, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, whoever you find to be such persons, unless at your admonition they return to soundness—so that they resign their own property without difficulty into the hands of their prelates, to be converted to the utility of the house according to the abbot's counsel, and observe the regular life—if their prelates, after your admonition, negligently omit to execute this, you are to compel those regulars through suspension from office and benefice, with appeal removed. [Given at the Lateran, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of April, 1198.]

Ad audientiam siquidem nostram noveris pervenisse, quod monachi, canonici et alii regulares tuae provinciae, quum deberent potius in claustro iuxta regularia constituta divinis obsequiis vigilare, de obedientiis et reditibus, quorum curam gesserunt, pecunia congregata, claustrum abhorrentes, per curias principum et potentum discurrere non verentur, et muneribus suis illorum sibi favorem et gratiam acquirunt, ac de eorum familiaritate confisi in conventu suo graves dissensiones commovent et ceterorum humilitatem in spiritu arrogantiae contemnentes mandatis praelatorum suorum inobedientes et contumaces exsistunt, et contra illorum prohibitionem saecularium negotiorum sollicitudinibus se immergunt. Quoniam igitur propter hoc ordo religionis non modicum enervatur: fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, quoscunque tales inveneris, nisi ad commonitionem tuam resipuerint, ut proprium suum in manibus praelatorum suorum sine difficultate resignent, convertendum in utilitatem domus secundum abbatis consilium, et regularem vitam observent, si praelati eorum post tuam commonitionem id exsequi negligenter omiserint, per suspensionem officii et beneficii appellatione remota compellas. Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: One excommunicated by one bishop is to be avoided by others. And an archbishop approached by complaint shall not absolve unless he first remits the person.

The same, to the Archbishop of Rouen and his Suffragans.

For repressing the malice of the perverse, certain penalties have been established in the canons. Just as you wish those rendered by you at times against subjects to be inviolably observed, so you ought inviolably to observe those rendered by others. Therefore, by apostolic writings we command that the sentences that our venerable brother the Bishop of Lisieux should decide canonically to promulgate against his subjects, both you yourselves are to preserve and you are to cause them to be inviolably observed by your subjects.

§ 1. But you, brother archbishop, since a sentence of excommunication is not suspended through the objection of an appeal, if anyone excommunicated by a bishop has complained to you concerning an unjust excommunication, are to remit him to that bishop to be absolved according to the form of the Church, deferring to him as a fellow bishop. But if perchance he is unwilling to absolve him, after receiving sworn security you will be able to furnish him the gift of absolution, in such a way, nevertheless, that, unless it should be lawfully established to you that he was excommunicated contrary to justice, by debt of his oath you are to command him to make competent satisfaction to the same bishop concerning that for which he was marked by excommunication. But if perchance he should disdain to do this, do not omit to return him to the sentence of excommunication, with appeal removed. [Given, etc., on the Kalends of June, 1198.]

Qui si forte noluerit ipsum absolvere, tu recepta cautione iuratoria absolutionis munus ei poteris exhibere, ita tamen, quod, nisi legitime tibi constiterit, eum contra iustitiam excommunicatum fuisse, ex debito sibi iuramenti praecipias, ut super eo, de quo fuerit excommunicatione notatus, eidem episcopo satisfaciat competenter. Quod si facere forte contempserit, eum in excommunicationis sententiam appellatione remota reducere non omittas. [Dat. etc. Kal. Iun. 1198.]

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A patriarch does not take cognizance of the causes of the subjects of archbishops and bishops under him except through lawful appeal or by force of custom or privilege.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tours.

Two things together—namely, a consultation and a complaint—were contained in a single petition of your fraternity. Through it you complained concerning our venerable brother the Patriarch of Jerusalem that your clerics were being unjustly aggrieved together with you, since, spurning your judgment, before which they are prepared to furnish the fullness of justice to those lodging a complaint concerning them, he compels them to answer before himself, although the cause is by no means brought to him through appeal; and you sought to be taught by our letters whether they can by law be compelled to this.

Wishing, therefore, to provide for you concerning the aforesaid grievances, we answer your consultation in this manner: since it is defined in the canons that primates or patriarchs have no right beyond others except insofar as the sacred canons concede or ancient custom conferred upon them from antiquity, so that the churches' privileges are preserved according to the Nicene rules—unless the Apostolic See should decree that some church or its rector be honored with some special privilege—we answer with the counsel of our brothers that, for as long as your clerics are willing to stand to law before you, they ought not to be compelled to undergo the judgment of that patriarch unless the cause should perhaps be brought to his hearing through appeal, or unless, which we do not believe, something concerning this has been granted to him by the Apostolic See. [Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of January, 1199.]

Volentes igitur tibi super gravaminibus providere praedictis, Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, quum sit in canonibus diffinitum, primates vel patriarchas nihil iuris prae ceteris habere, nisi quantum sacri canones concedunt, vel prisca illis consuetudo contulit ab antiquo, ita, ut secundum Nicaenas regulas sua privilegia serventur ecclesiis, praeterquam si apostolica sedes aliquam ecclesiam vel rectorem ipsius quolibet speciali privilegio decreverit honorare, de fratrum nostrorum consilio respondemus, quod, quamdiu clerici tui coram te voluerint stare iuri, compelli non debent iudicium eiusdem patriarchae subire, nisi causa forsitan per appellationem ad eius audientiam perferatur, aut, quod non credimus, ei aliquid super hoc a sede apostolica sit indultum. Chapter X

Latin source headnote: An impeded archbishop can commit the consecration of his suffragan to another, and the one to be consecrated is bound to receive the gift of consecration from that commissioner.

The same, to the Archbishop of Tours.

That you consult the Apostolic See concerning those things that are doubtful to you we consider pleasing and acceptable, and your fraternity consequently appears deservedly commendable, since the law of the divine constitution has placed that see as mistress of the whole terrestrial world, so that the reason for whatever is doubted by anyone may at last be sought from it. You indeed consulted us whether, if perhaps, detained by some infirmity or another just cause, you were unable to consecrate one of your suffragans, it would be lawful for you to commit your authority to one of your fellow bishops; and whether an elect who was pressing for consecration ought lawfully to be consecrated by him to whom you had thus committed your authority.

In this we answer your consultation in this manner: when placed in such a circumstance, it is lawful for you to commit your authority, as has been said, and the one to be consecrated ought to receive the gift of consecration from him to whom you decide to commit it, provided that he is held to be Catholic and no impediment from the withdrawal of the grace of the Apostolic See stands in his way. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of June, 1199.]

> Archiepiscopus impeditus potest consecrationem sui suffraganei alteri committere, et consecrandus tenetur ab illo commissario munus consecrationis recipere.

Nos siquidem consuluisti, utrum, si forte aliqua infirmitate vel alia iusta causa detentus aliquem suffraganeorum tuorum consecrare non posses, alicui coepiscoporum tuorum vices tuas committere licitum tibi esset, et utrum electus, qui pro consecratione instaret, ab eo, cui vices tuas taliter commisisses, deberet licite consecrari? In quo Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod in tali articulo constituto et tuas vices, ut dictum est, tibi committere licet, et consecrandus munus debet ab eo consecrationis accipere, cui eas duxeris committendas, dummodo catholicus habeatur, et impedimentum ei ex subtractione gratiae apostolicae sedis non obsistat. [Dat. Lat. XVI. Kal. Iun. 1199.]

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: An archbishop can commit to subjects of his suffragan a cause brought to him through appeal, but cannot compel them to receive it. This is what it says, as far as § Moreover. § 1. When a papal delegate who excommunicated the defendant or inducted the plaintiff into possession has died, if his successor succeeds in the delegation, he will be able to absolve and restore possession; otherwise, the Pope alone shall restore and absolve, except at the moment of death. Nevertheless, lest the annual prescription run, the defendant shall furnish security before the ordinary, or public persons, that he will stand to law. This is what it says.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

Of the pastoral office—(And below: cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.)—on your part it was moreover asked whether, if some cause has been brought to an archbishop through appeal, he can by right of ordinary power delegate it to a subject of his suffragan or punish the same person if he refuses to receive the delegated cause. To this we answer that an archbishop cannot compel him against his will to receive a delegation of this kind, since, except in certain articles, he has no power over him, although his bishop is subject to the archbishop by metropolitan law. [Moreover, etc.; cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I. 29.]

§ 1. Moreover, you sought to be taught whether, without a special mandate of the Apostolic See, it is lawful for anyone, when the delegate who bound the defendant with the bond of excommunication for manifest contumacy or inducted the claimant into possession of the things sought for the purpose of preserving the property has been removed from human affairs, to impart the benefit of absolution to that person when he wishes to obey the law and to restore possession within a year, sufficient security first having been received. To this we say that, since a delegate, with respect to that matter, is greater than the ordinary, one excommunicated by a delegate of this kind cannot obtain the grace of absolution through another without a mandate of the Supreme Pontiff, except at the moment of death, unless perhaps that delegate was of such a kind that another succeeds him in burden and honor. Nor will he be able to recover lost possession through anyone other than the Supreme Pontiff.

Nevertheless, lest the other become a true possessor after a year, he can offer and furnish security that he will obey the law—before the ordinary or, if he is unable to have access to him, before public and honorable persons—as though interrupting the annual prescription, so that after the year he may thus merit to recover possession through the Apostolic See. [You asked, etc.; cf. c. 53, On Appeals, II. 28. Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January, 1204.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Through a rescript by which the Pope commands an ordinary to correct his subjects, the Pope does not thereby make him a delegate; therefore, appeal can be taken from him to the next superior, just as if the Pope had made no mandate. This is what it says.

The same, to the Archbishop of Sens.

Although in correcting excesses according to canonical sanctions the subterfuge of appeal is closed, and therefore our venerable brother the Bishop of Paris received from us a mandate that, with respect both to monks and other religious men and also to secular clerics subject to his jurisdiction who are said to commit many grave crimes that tend not only to the loss of souls but also to the scandal of many, he inquire into and correct, with appeal removed, the things he sees are to be corrected, establishing for their reformation what is regular and honorable, nevertheless, because it neither was nor ought to have been our intention to derogate from your jurisdiction through a mandate of this kind, by authority of these presents we have decided to declare that, if perchance in inquiries to be made by the same bishop not as delegate but as ordinary some case should emerge in which it is lawful to appeal to the metropolitan see, we are unwilling, on occasion of the aforesaid mandate, to derogate in any way from your authority so as to prevent appeal from being taken to you as metropolitan.

You, however, are neither personally to impede nor to cause impediment through others to the same bishop's executing the debt of his office in correcting the excesses of his subjects; and if perchance appeal has been taken to you in a permitted case, you are to proceed prudently and justly in the cause of appeal. Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Prelates correct and reform subjects, with appeal removed and notwithstanding custom. Nevertheless, if a chapter has been accustomed to correct the excesses of canons, and does not do so within a term to be fixed by the bishop, the bishop himself shall do this. This is what it says, as far as § But. § 1. If canons, without a manifest and reasonable cause, especially in contempt of the bishop, cease from divine offices, the bishop shall not observe the cessation, and the metropolitan shall take cognizance in place of the Pope. This is what it says. § 2. A prelate ought, in imposing a penalty, to guard against monetary gain and every other grievance. This is what it says, as far as the end.

By an inviolable constitution we sanction that prelates of churches prudently and diligently attend to correcting the excesses of subjects, especially clerics, and reforming their morals, lest their blood be required from the prelates' hands. But so that they can freely exercise the office of correction and reformation, we decree that no custom or appeal can impede their execution, unless they exceed the form to be observed in such matters. Nevertheless, the excesses of canons of a cathedral church that have been accustomed to be corrected by the chapter are to be corrected by it, in those churches that have hitherto had such a custom, at the bishop's admonition or command, within a competent term to be fixed by him. Otherwise, from then on, the bishop, having God before his eyes, [all contradiction ceasing], is not to postpone correcting them by ecclesiastical censure as the care of souls requires. [And he is not to omit correcting their other excesses as the cause of souls requires, with due order nevertheless observed in all things.]

§ 1. But if the canons, without a manifest and reasonable cause, especially in contempt of the bishop, should cease from divine offices, the bishop, if he wishes, is nevertheless to celebrate in the cathedral church; and the metropolitan, at his complaint, as delegated by us concerning this, having ascertained the truth, is so to chastise them by ecclesiastical censure that through fear of punishment they do not presume to do such things hereafter.

§ 2. Therefore, let prelates of churches diligently provide that they do not convert this salutary statute to monetary gain or another grievance, but studiously and faithfully execute it if they wish to escape canonical vengeance, since, with the Lord as author, the Apostolic See will watch most attentively concerning these matters.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: When within a city or diocese there are peoples of diverse languages, the bishop ought to provide for them through suitable men who celebrate offices for them and minister sacraments according to the diversity of languages. And if necessity is pressing, he shall constitute for himself a vicar-bishop of that language; nevertheless, the same diocese ought not on this account to have two bishops.

The same, in the same Council.

Since in very many regions within the same city and diocese peoples of diverse languages, having diverse rites and customs under one faith, are intermingled, we strictly command that the pontiffs of cities or dioceses of this kind provide suitable men who, according to the diversity of rites and languages, celebrate divine offices for them and minister ecclesiastical sacraments, instructing them alike by word and example. But we altogether prohibit one and the same city or diocese from having diverse pontiffs, like one body having diverse heads, as though a monster. But if, on account of the aforesaid causes, pressing necessity should demand it, the pontiff of the place, with provident deliberation, is to constitute for himself in the aforesaid matters a Catholic prelate conformed to those nations as vicar, who is to be obedient and subject to him in all things. Hence, if anyone should intrude himself otherwise, let him know himself struck by the sword of excommunication; and, if he does not thus return to soundness, he is to be deposed from every ecclesiastical ministry, with the secular arm employed, if necessary, to repel such great insolence.

Textual note: The Latin Library headnote's duos episcopus has been corrected to the grammatically required duos episcopos.

> Quum in civitate vel dioecesi sunt populi diversarum linguarum; episcopus debet providere eis per viros idoneos, qui secundum varietatem linguarum officia eis celebrent, et sacramenta ministrent. Et si urgens est necessitas, constituet sibi vicarium pontificem illius linguae; non tamen propter hoc eadem dioecesis debet habere duos episcopos.
>
>
> Quoniam in plerisque partibus infra eandem civitatem atque dioecesim permixti sunt populi diversarum linguarum, habentes sub una fide varios ritus et mores, districte praecipimus, ut pontifices huiusmodi civitatum sive dioecesum provideant viros idoneos, qui secundum diversitates rituum et linguarum divina illis officia celebrent et ecclesiastica sacramenta ministrent, instruendo eos verbo pariter et exemplo. Prohibemus autem omnino, ne una eademque civitas sive dioecesis diversos pontifices habeat, tanquam unum corpus diversa capita, quasi monstrum. Sed si propter praedictas causas urgens necessitas postulaverit, pontifex loci catholicum praesulem nationibus illis conformem provida deliberatione constituat sibi vicarium in praedictis, qui ei per omnia sit obediens et subiectus. Unde, si quis aliter se ingesserit, excommunicationis se noverit mucrone percussum, et, si nec sic resipuerit, ab omni ministerio ecclesiastico deponendum, adhibito, si necesse fuerit, brachio saeculari ad tantam insolentiam repellendam.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: Bishops who cannot act personally are bound to take suitable men who supply their place with respect to preaching, visitations, and hearing confessions; and, so that bishops can find such men, it commands that such persons be instituted in cathedral and collegiate churches.

The same, in the same Council.

Among the other things that pertain to the salvation of the Christian people, the nourishment of the word of God is known to be most necessary for them, because, just as the body is nourished by material food, so the soul is nourished by spiritual food, because "man lives not by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God." Hence, since it often happens that bishops, on account of their manifold occupations, bodily infirmities, hostile incursions, or other occasions—not to say a defect of knowledge, which is altogether to be reproved in them and is hereafter not to be tolerated—are insufficient personally to minister the word of God to the people, especially throughout large and extensive dioceses, we sanction by a general constitution that bishops take suitable men, powerful in work and speech, to execute the office of holy preaching beneficially. When those bishops are unable to act personally, these men, solicitously visiting in their place the congregations committed to them, are to edify them by word and example; and the bishops themselves, when those men are in need, are suitably to minister necessities to them, lest through a lack of necessities they be compelled to desist from what they began.

Hence we command that suitable men be ordained in cathedral as well as other conventual churches, whom bishops can have as coadjutors and fellow workers not only in the office of preaching but also in hearing confessions, enjoining penances, and the other things that pertain to the salvation of souls. But if anyone should neglect to fulfill this, let him lie under strict vengeance.

> Episcopi, qui per se non possunt, tenentur assumere idoneos, qui suppleant suo loco quoad praedicationes, visitationes et confessionum auditiones; et ut possint episcopi reperire tales, praecipit in ecclesiis cathedralibus et collegiatis tales institui.
>

> Inter cetera, quae ad salutem spectant populi Christiani, pabulum verbi Dei permaxime sibi noscitur esse necessarium, quia, sicut corpus materiali, sic anima spirituali cibo nutritur, eo, quod non in solo pane vivit homo, sed in omni verbo, quod procedit de ore Dei. Unde, quum saepe contingat, quod episcopi propter suas occupationes multiplices, vel invaletudines corporales, aut hostiles incursus, seu occasiones alias, ne dicamus defectum scientiae, quod in eis reprobandum est omnino, nec de cetero tolerandum, per se ipsos non sufficiunt ministrare populo verbum Dei, maxime per amplas dioeceses et diffusas: generali constitutione sancimus, ut episcopi viros idoneos ad sanctae praedicationis officium salubriter exsequendum assumant, potentes in opere et sermone, qui plebes sibi commissas vice ipsorum, quum per se iidem nequiverint, sollicite visitantes, eas verbo aedificent et exemplo, quibus ipsi, quum indiguerint, congrue necessaria subministrent, ne pro necessariorum defectu compellantur desistere ab incepto. Unde praecipimus, tam in cathedralibus quam in aliis conventualibus ecclesiis viros idoneos ordinari, quos episcopi possint coadiutores et cooperatores habere, non solum in praedicationis officio, verum etiam in audiendis confessionibus et poenitentiis iniungendis, ac ceteris, quae ad salutem pertinent animarum. Si quis autem hoc adimplere neglexerit, districtae subiaceat ultioni.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: A bishop ought to be content with episcopal rights in the churches of his diocese, and it declares what the episcopal rights are.

Honorius III, to the Bishop of Assisi.

By the complaint of the steward of the monastery of Saint Benedict of Mount Subasio it became known to us that you, not content with the episcopal rights that you ought to have in the churches or chapels of that monastery, exact procuration from certain of them, which, he proposed, were by no means sufficient to furnish procuration. He sought that, being content with your right, you desist from molestation of the said churches concerning the other matters, seeking also, for cutting away every material for litigation in the future, that you specify what things belong to you in them by reason of episcopal right. After certain of these episcopal rights had been specified, issue was lawfully joined on each side concerning the aforesaid matters.

But we, having inspected the proofs received on both sides and more fully understood the matters proposed by each party, decreed that in the churches or chapels of your diocese pertaining to that monastery you are to have canonical obedience, subjection, and reverence; institution and destitution; correction and reformation; ecclesiastical censure; jurisdiction also over all causes that by law pertain to the ecclesiastical forum; penances and conferral of all sacraments that are to be received from a bishop; a synod; two solidi of Lucchese money in the name of synodaticum or cathedraticum; a fourth of tithes and mortuary dues; and also annual visitation—in such a way that, when you approach to visit them, you exact from them in the name of procuration no more than, after their resources have been weighed, they can moderately furnish, lest they be burdened in any way in procurations beyond the other chapels of the same diocese. And we entirely relieve the church of Saint Paul of Assisi from the burden of procuration.

But you, being content with these rights in the aforesaid churches, are to exact no more from them beyond moderate aid, which, according to the form of the Lateran Council, if a manifest and reasonable cause exists, is to be sought with charity, just as we sustain it from the other churches of the same diocese for the necessity of the time.

> Episcopus in ecclesiis dioecesis suae debet esse contentus iuribus episcopalibus, et quae sint iura episcopalia declarat.
>
> Honorius III. Episcopo Assisinatino.
> Conquerente oeconomo monasterii sancti Benedicti montis Subasii nobis innotuit, quod tu iuribus episcopalibus non contentus, quae in ecclesiis seu capellis eiusdem monasterii debes habere, a quibusdam earum procurationem exigis, quas ad dandam procurationem minime sufficere proponebat, petens, ut iure tuo contentus exsistens a molestatione dictarum ecclesiarum super ceteris desisteres, postulans etiam ad omnem litis materiam in posterum amputandam, ut specificares, quae tibi ratione iuris episcopalis competerent in eisdem, quorum quibusdam iuribus episcopalibus specificatis hinc inde lis fuit super praemissis legitime contestata. Nos autem, inspectis probationibus utrinque receptis, et quae ab utraque parte fuere proposita plenius intellectis, decrevimus, ut in ecclesiis seu capellis tuae dioecesis, ad monasterium ipsum spectantibus, habeas canonicam obedientiam, subiectionem et reverentiam, institutionem et destitutionem, correctionem et reformationem, ac censuram ecclesiasticam, iurisdictionem quoque causarum omnium ad forum ecclesiasticum de iure spectantium, poenitentias et sacramentorum omnium, quae ab episcopo sunt recipienda, collationem, synodum et synodatici seu cathedratici nomine duos solidos Lucensis monetae, quartam decimationum et mortuariorum, visitationem quoque annuam, ita, quod, quum ad eas visitandas accesseris, non amplius procurationis nomine requiras ab eis, nisi quantum, pensatis facultatibus earundem, moderate poterunt exhibere, ne plus ceteris capellis eiusdem dioecesis in procurationibus ullatenus onerentur, et ecclesiam

S. Pauli de Assisia a procurationis onere penitus relevamus. Tu autem his iuribus in praefatis ecclesiis contentus exsistens, non amplius ab eis exigas praeter moderatum auxilium, quod iuxta formam Lateranensis concilii, si manifesta et rationabilis causa exstiterit, cum caritate postulandum, sicut ab aliis ecclesiis eiusdem dioecesis pro necessitate temporis sustinemus.

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A bishop visiting a monastery is not to introduce secular persons, but two or three of his canons together with certain religious persons.

The same, to the Abbot and Convent of Saint Remigius.

So that, according to the edict of that supreme shepherd after Christ, a shepherd is known to have been made a pattern of the flock from the heart, he ought beneficially to visit it not from lust for domination but from love of ruling rightly, so reproving the excesses of delinquents insofar as he can that he does not reveal them, so rebuking that he does not confound them; because, since according to the wise man's edict a friend is to be reproved in secret, he appears to violate the law of friendship if, to the contrary, he reproaches him publicly with upbraiding.

Therefore, considering that it is indecent for secular persons to be present when our venerable brother the Archbishop of Reims exercises the office of visitation in your monastery—persons through whom material for dissipation could arise in the cloister, since they are by no means well introduced among cloistered persons—by authority of these presents we firmly prohibit him hereafter from introducing any secular persons with him into the chapter during the time of visitation, except two or three canons of his church in decent habit, with other men, religious persons whom he sees to be expedient, joined to them.

Episcopus visitans monasterium non introducat saeculares, sed duos aut tres canonicos suos cum aliquibus religiosis.

Idem Abbati et Conventui sancti Remigii.

Ut iuxta illius supremi post Christum pastoris edictum pastor forma factus gregis ex animo dignoscitur, non dominandi libidine, sed amore recte regendi debet illum salubriter visitare, sic excessus delinquentium quantum potest corripiens, ne revelet, sic increpans, ne confundat: quia, quum iuxta sapientis edictum secreto sit arguendus amicus, amicitiae legem violare videtur, si econtra palam arguat exprobrando. Attendentes igitur, quod indecens est, ut venerabili fratri nostro Remensi archiepiscopo in monasterio vestro visitationis officium exercente saeculares intersint, per quos possit in claustro dissolutionis materia provenire, quum nequaquam bene in claustralibus inducantur: auctoritate praesentium firmiter inhibemus, ut nullos de cetero saeculares in capitulum, nisi duos vel tres de canonicis ecclesiae suae in decenti habitu, viris aliis, quos expedire viderit, religiosis adiunctis, secum visitationis tempore introducat.

Chapter XVIII

Latin source headnote: Diocesan law and the law of jurisdiction are distinct; hence, a matter adjudged under one does not stand in the way of one acting under the other.

The same, to the Bishop of Bayeux and the Archdeacon of Rouen.

Our beloved son the abbot of the monastery of Rothomagensis in the diocese of Vannes explained before us that a third part of the amercements that the men of five parishes assigned to the uses of his convent are compelled to pay for their excesses has pertained to his monastery from antiquity; and that, when an ecclesiastical question has arisen among those men, citation pertains to the same abbot, while examination and decision of the question pertain in common to our venerable brother the Bishop of Vannes and the abbot himself.

And when Pope Innocent of happy memory, our predecessor, after the same abbot complained that the aforesaid bishop was troubling him concerning this, gave you a mandate with the parties' assent that, after summoning the parties and hearing the matters proposed on each side, you remit the cause to him sufficiently instructed, the said bishop impeded your proceeding for a rather long time on occasion of a certain sentence rendered for him concerning certain churches with respect to diocesan law. Hence the aforesaid abbot humbly entreated us that, since citation, examination and decision of causes, and amercements are known to pertain to the law of jurisdiction, we not permit the proceeding of the business to be further impeded under pretext of the aforementioned sentence. Therefore, since the aforesaid matters belong to the law of jurisdiction, we command your discretion that, notwithstanding a sentence of this kind, you proceed in the business itself according to the form handed down to you.

Quumque felicis memoriae Innocentius Papa praedecessor noster, conquerente ipso abbate, quod praefatus episcopus super hoc inquietabat eundem, vobis de assensu partium dederit in mandatis, ut, vocatis partibus et auditis hinc inde propositis, causam remitteretis ad eum sufficienter instructam, dictus episcopus processum vestrum diutius impedivit occasione cuiusdam sententiae, quae super quibusdam ecclesiis quoad legem dioecesanam promulgata exstitit pro eodem. Unde praefatus abbas nobis humiliter supplicavit, ut quum citatio, causarum examinatio et decisio, ac emendae ad legem iurisdictionis pertinere noscantur, non sineremus sententiae memoratae praetextu negotii processum ulterius impediri. Quum igitur praedicta de lege iurisdictionis exsistant, discretioni vestrae mandamus, quatenus huiusmodi sententia non obstante procedatis in negotio ipso iuxta traditam vobis formam.

Latin source headnote: Through a rescript by which the Pope commands an ordinary to correct the clerics of his diocese, jurisdiction over exempt persons is not given to him.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Sovana.

We consider it grave [and unworthy] that, although you have no ordinary or even delegated jurisdiction over the church of Saint Mary of Orbetello and certain other churches existing in your diocese and pertaining to the monastery of Saint Anastasius in the City, on occasion of our letters that we transmitted to you concerning correction of clerics, you promulgated sentences of interdict against those churches and of suspension against their clerics, although the abbot of the same monastery is prepared to correct them, [as pertains to him; but because we ought the less to sustain injuries to that monastery insofar as, specially pertaining to us, it regards us after God as its principal helpers, then by apostolic writings firmly commanding your fraternity] we command that, if it is so, prudently correcting personally the things that you less than providently attempted, you relax the aforesaid sentences [within eight days after receipt of these presents] without [any] difficulty. [Otherwise, by our letters we give a mandate to our beloved sons the Abbots of Saint Justus and Albaren., and the Archpriest of Saint John of Montalto, of the dioceses of Tuscania, Sovana, and Castro, that from then on they take care to relax the same sentences by our authority.]

Latin source headnote: An ordinary who has power to absolve from excommunication can entrust absolution to others.

The same.

It is lawful for those to whom, by virtue of office in certain cases, it pertains to absolve persons who fall under the canon of the promulgated sentence for violent laying on of hands to commit absolution of this kind to others when they see it to be expedient.

> Ordinarius, cui competit absolvere ab excommunicatione, potest aliis absolutionem demandare.

Title XXXII: On the Office of a Judge

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It pertains to the office even of a delegated judge to provide an advocate for a party that cannot have one; and he will be able to appoint a member of his household.

Honorius III, to the Archbishop of Saint Leonard and the Abbot of Salerno.

We learned from your letters that, when we decided to commit to you the cause disputed concerning certain possessions of the monastery of Saint Peter of Amalfi between our beloved sons the Abbot and Convent of Fossanova on one side and the Abbot and Convent of the monastery of Cava in the diocese of Salerno on the other—possessions that brother Sylvester of good memory, a monk of Fossanova, when he had visited the same monastery of Saint Peter, sold to the same Abbot and Convent of Cava to the prejudice and grievance of that monastery of Saint Peter—after the parties had been established in your presence, the party of the aforesaid monastery of Saint Peter proposed that it could not have anyone from the city of Salerno as advocate and implored your office concerning this. You, brother archbishop, provided for it Master R. Capuda, Treasurer of Acqui and your cleric, to furnish protection in that cause. But Brother Stephen, Prior of Saint Mary de Dompno, a monk of Cava, proposed for his monastery that this had been done to its prejudice because the said R. was your cleric and member of your household.

We, therefore, being unwilling that decision of the business be impeded by frivolous exceptions, decided to remit the cause itself to you. By apostolic writings we command that, notwithstanding this, granting them the aforesaid advocate, you are to proceed in the business itself, with the obstacle of appeal removed, without the loss of delay, reason leading the way, according to the contents of the former letters. And because the Abbot and Convent of Cava are said maliciously to conceal the instruments of the monastery of Saint Peter that the said S. delivered to them at the time of that sale, after prior admonition you are to compel them by ecclesiastical censure, as shall be just and with appeal set aside, to exhibit them to you.

Latin source headnote: When the noble office of the judge is invoked, joinder of issue occurs; it is otherwise with the mercenary office.

Gregory IX.

The office of a judge, wherever it is proposed in place of an action—as when restitution in integrum is principally sought—requires joinder of issue; in other cases, recourse can be had to it without joinder of issue before and after entry into the cause.

Title XXXIII: On Superiority and Obedience

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The one ordained first, other things being equal, is to be held first and greater.

Gregory, to Augustine, Bishop of the English.

Since it is certain [that ineffable rewards of the eternal kingdom are reserved for those laboring for almighty God, it is nevertheless necessary for us to bestow upon them benefits of good things, so that from remuneration they may be able to labor more abundantly in zeal for spiritual work. And because the new church of the English, by the Lord's bestowal and your labor, has been brought to the grace of almighty God, we grant you in it the use of the pallium solely for conducting the solemnities of Mass, in such a way that you ordain twelve bishops throughout the individual places, who are to be subject to your rule, so that hereafter the bishop of the city of London ought always to be consecrated by his own synod and receive the pallium of honor from this holy and apostolic see, in which, with God as author, I serve.

But we wish you to send to the city of York a bishop whom you yourself shall judge ought to be ordained, in such a way that, if that city together with the neighboring places receives the word of God, he also is to ordain twelve bishops, so that he may enjoy metropolitan honor; for, if life accompanies him, with the Lord's favor we also arrange to bestow the pallium upon him. We nevertheless wish him to lie under the disposition of your fraternity. But after your death, he is so to preside over the bishops whom he shall ordain that he is in no way subject to the rule of the Bishop of London.]

But hereafter let this be the distinction of honor between the bishops of the cities of London and York: that one is to be held first and greater who was first ordained by the counsel of the community and harmonious action. [But your, etc. Given on the tenth day before the Kalends of July, in the nineteenth year of the reign of our lord the most pious Augustus Maurice Tiberius, the eighteenth year after the consulship of the same lord, the fourth indiction, 601.]

DE MAIORITATE ET OBEDIENTIA.

Prius ordinatus, ceteris paribus, prior et maior habendus est.

Gregorius Augustino Anglorum Episcopo.

Quum certum [sit, pro omnipotenti Deo laborantibus ineffabilia aeterni regni praemia reservari, nobis tamen eis necesse est bonorum beneficia tribuere, ut in spiritualis operis studio ex remuneratione valeant multiplicius insudare. Et quia nova Anglorum ecclesia ad omnipotentis Dei gratiam eodem Domino largiente et te laborante perducta est, usum tibi pallii in ea ad sola missarum solennia agenda concedimus ita, ut per loca singula duodecim episcopos ordines, qui tuae ditioni subiaceant, quatenus Londoniensis civitatis episcopus semper in posterum a synodo propria debeat consecrari, atque honoris pallium ab hac sancta et apostolica, cui auctore Deo inservio, sede percipiat. Ad Eboracam vero civitatem te volumus episcopum mittere, quem ipse iudicaveris ordinandum, ita, ut si eadem civitas cum finitimis locis verbum Dei receperit, ipse quoque duodecim episcopos ordinet, ut metropolitani honore perfruatur, quia ei quoque, si vita comes fuerit, pallium tribuere Domino favente disponimus; quem tamen tuae fraternitatis volumus dispositioni subiacere. Post obitum vero tuum ita episcopis, quos ordinaverit, praesit, ut Londoniensis episcopi nullo modo ditioni subiaceat.] Sit vero inter Londoniae et Eboracae civitatis episcopos in posterum honoris ista distinctio, ut ipse prior et maior habeatur, qui prius communitatis consilio et concordi fuerit actione ordinatus. [Tua vero etc. Dat. die X. Kal. Iul., imperante domino nostro Mauricio Tiberio piissimo Augusto Ao. XIX. post consulatum eiusdem domini Ao. XVIII., Ind. IV. 601.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who comes against the decree or constitution of a bishop ought to be excommunicated.

The same.

If anyone should come against a bishop's decree, let him be cast out from the Church. In the Book of Kings it is read: “He who does not obey the prince shall die by death.” And in the Council of Agde, that he is to be anathematized.

Veniens contra decretum vel constitutionem episcopi debet excommunicari.

Latin source headnote: A cleric lacking administration is not bound to an oath of obedience or to make a writing concerning it.

Pope Leo.

It was [also] read in your letters, [which the same deacons brought,] that brother Atticus [had come to Thessalonica, and that he had also signified his consent by a written profession, so that nothing else could be understood by us concerning him than that what he came to do was of his own choice and spontaneous devotion, and that] he had composed a little charter concerning the pledge of obedience, in which a sign of injury was disclosed. For it had not been necessary that one be bound by writing who was already proving his obedience by the very duty of his voluntary coming. [Hence with lamentations, etc.]

Latin source headnote: One who does not obey canonical statutes incurs the mark of disobedience, that is, infamy.

Innocent III, to the Chapter of Würzburg.

That which the Lord in blessed Peter—(And below: [cf. c. 5, On an Excommunicated Cleric, V. 27.])—but he asserted that he had held the fortifications and fortified towns of the church of Würzburg for its utility, lest, if they had perhaps come into alien hands, there would afterwards be no one to liberate them. But since spiritual things are more worthy than temporal things, and obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken more than to offer the fat of rams, the Bishop of Hildesheim ought not, for the temporal advantage of the church of Würzburg, to have incurred the mark of disobedience and contradicted apostolic commands. Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: The empire does not preside over the priesthood, but is subject to it and is bound to obey it. Or thus: a bishop ought not to be subject to princes, but to preside over them. This is what it says, and it is much capable of being alleged.

The same, to the Most Illustrious Emperor of Constantinople.

With the affection of accustomed kindness we received the letters that the imperial excellence sent to us through our beloved son the Archdeacon of Dyrrachium, a provident and faithful man. Through them we understood that the letters that we transmitted to you through our beloved son I., our chaplain and at that time legate of the Apostolic See, had been presented to your empire and read through.

§ 1. But the imperial sublimity marveled, as you conveyed to us through the same letters, that in our letters we endeavored to rebuke you somewhat, although we remember that what we wrote was written not with a mind to rebuke but rather with the affection of admonishing. But the occasion, not the cause, for this wonder of yours was furnished, as we gathered from the same letters, by your reading that blessed Peter, prince of the Apostles, wrote thus: "Be subject to every human creature for God's sake, whether to the king as preeminent, or to governors as sent by him for the vengeance of malefactors, but the praise of the good."

For the imperial loftiness, wishing through these and other things that it introduced to prefer the empire to the priesthood in dignity and power—concerning which we wonder more reasonably—wished to draw a threefold argument from the aforesaid authority: the first from what is read, "be subject"; the second from what follows, "to the king as preeminent"; the third from what is subsequently added, "for the vengeance of malefactors, but the praise of the good." From the first it presumed that the priesthood is subject; from the second, that the empire is preeminent; from the third, that the emperor received jurisdiction over priests as well as laymen, or indeed even the power of the sword. For since certain priests are good and certain of them exist as malefactors, the one who, according to the Apostle, bears the sword for the vengeance of malefactors but the praise of the good can avenge presumed excesses against offending priests with the avenging sword, since the Apostle does not distinguish between priests and others.

§ 2. But if you had more diligently attended both to the person speaking, those to whom he spoke, and the force of the utterance, you would not thus have expressed the writer's meaning. For the Apostle was writing to his subjects and urging them to the merit of humility. For if, through what he said—"be subject"—he wished to impose the yoke of subjection upon priests and confer the authority of prelacy upon those to whom he admonished them to be subject, it would follow from this that any slave had also received command over priests, since it is said, "to every human creature."

But what follows, "to the king as preeminent," we do not deny that the emperor excels in temporal things only those who receive temporal things from him. But the Pontiff excels in spiritual things, which are more worthy than temporal things by as much as the soul is preferred to the body. Nor was it said simply, “be subject,” but “for God's sake” was added; nor was it written without qualification, “to the preeminent king,” but “as” was interposed, perhaps not without cause. But what follows, “for the vengeance of malefactors, but the praise of the good,” is not to be understood as meaning that the king or emperor received the power of the sword over all, both good and evil, but only over those who, using the sword, are committed to his jurisdiction, according to what the Truth says: “All who take the sword shall perish by the sword.” For no one can or ought to judge another's servant, since, according to the Apostle, a servant stands or falls to his own lord.

For this you also introduced that, although Moses and Aaron were brothers according to the flesh, nevertheless Moses, prince of the people, presided over Aaron by the power of the priesthood, and Jesus his successor received command over priests. King David also was preeminent over the pontiff Abiathar. But although Moses was leader of the people, he was also a priest: he anointed Aaron as priest, and the Prophet, recognizing the priesthood in him, says: “Moses and Aaron among his priests.” But what you wrote concerning Jesus—that is, Joshua—for commending his prelacy ought to be understood more according to the spirit than the letter, because, according to the Apostle, the letter kills but the spirit gives life, for the reason that he expressed the figure of the true Jesus, who led his people into the land of promise. David also, although he held the royal diadem, commanded the priest Abiathar not so much by royal dignity as by prophetic authority. But whatever may once have been the case in the Old Testament, now it is otherwise in the New, since Christ was made a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek. He offered himself to God the Father as a victim upon the altar of the cross not as king but as priest, through which he redeemed the human race, especially with respect to the one who is successor of the Apostle Peter and vicar of Jesus Christ.

§ 3. But you could rather have understood the prerogative of the priesthood from what was said: not by anyone, but by God; not to a king, but to a priest; not to one descending from royal stock, but from priestly lineage—namely, concerning the priests who were in Anathoth: “Behold, I have established you over nations and kingdoms, that you may uproot and destroy, build and plant.” It was also said in the divine law: “You shall not disparage gods, and you shall not curse the prince of your people,” which law, placing priests before kings, called the former gods and the latter princes.

§ 4. Furthermore, you ought to have known that God made two great lights in the firmament of heaven: the greater light to preside over the day and the lesser light to preside over the night; each great, but one greater. For by the name of heaven the Church is designated, according to what the Truth says: “The kingdom of heaven is like a man who was the father of a household, who in the early morning hired workers into his vineyard.” But by day the spiritual is understood and by night the carnal, according to the prophetic testimony: “Day pours out the word to day, and night announces knowledge to night.” Therefore, for the firmament of heaven—that is, of the universal Church—God made two great lights, that is, he instituted two great dignities, which are pontifical authority and royal power. But the one that presides over days, that is, spiritual things, is greater; the one that presides over [nights, that is,] carnal things is lesser, so that the difference between pontiffs and kings may be known to be as great as that between the sun and moon.

But if the imperial loftiness prudently attended to these things, it would not cause or permit our venerable brother the Patriarch of Constantinople—a great and honorable member of the Church—to sit at the footstool of its feet on the left side, when other kings and princes, as they ought, reverently rise for their archbishops and bishops and assign them an honorable seat beside themselves. For we believe that your discretion is not ignorant of how much honor the most pious Constantine showed to priests.

§ 5. But although we wrote not by way of rebuke, we could nevertheless reasonably have rebuked, since blessed Paul the Apostle, instructing a bishop, is read to have written to Timothy: “Preach the word; be urgent in season, out of season; reprove, entreat, rebuke in all patience and doctrine.” For our mouth ought not to be bound, but ought to be open to all, lest according to the prophetic word we be mute dogs unable to bark. Hence our correction ought not to have been troublesome to you, but rather acceptable, because a father corrects the son whom he loves, and God reproves and chastises those whom he loves. Therefore, we execute the debt of the pastoral office when we entreat, reprove, and rebuke, and endeavor to induce not only others but emperors and kings, in season and out of season, to those things that are pleasing to the divine will.

§ 6. But the sheep of Christ are committed to us in blessed Peter, the Lord saying, “Feed my sheep,” not distinguishing between these sheep and others, so that he showed that one who did not recognize Peter and his successors as teachers and shepherds was alien to his sheepfold. Let us omit as most well known that which the Lord said to Peter, and in Peter said to his successors: “Whatever you bind upon earth shall be bound also in the heavens, etc.,” excepting nothing, since he said, “whatever.”

But we are unwilling to dwell longer upon these things, lest we appear either to contend or to delight in matters of this kind, since, if it is expedient to glory, one ought to glory not in honor but in burden, not in greatness but rather in solicitude, since the Apostle also glories in infirmities. We know that it is written: “Everyone who exalts himself shall be humbled, and he who humbles himself shall be exalted”; and again: “The greater you are, humble yourself in all things”; and elsewhere: “God resists the proud but gives grace to the humble.” On this account we place our exaltation in humility and reckon our humility our greatest exaltation. Hence we also write and confess that we are servants not only of God but also of the servants of God, and according to the Apostle we are debtors to the wise as well as the unwise.

§ 7. But whether we decided through our letters to invite the imperial excellence to what is good and useful, whether we suggested to you just and honorable things, let your solicitude discern, since we remember inviting you only to aid directed to the utility of the Church and land of Jerusalem. [Therefore may he inspire, etc.]

> Imperium non praeest sacerdotio, sed subest, et ei obedire tenetur. Vel sic: Episcopus non debet subesse principibus, sed praeesse. H. d. et est multum allegabile.

> Solitae benignitatis affectu recepimus literas, quas per dilectum filium archidiaconum Durachii, virum providum et fidelem, imperialis nobis excellentia destinavit, per quas intelleximus, quod literae, quas per dilectum filium I. capellanum nostrum, tunc apostolicae sedis legatum, tibi transmisimus, imperio tuo praesentatae fuerant et perlectae. § 1. Mirata est autem imperialis sublimitas, sicut per easdem nobis literas destinasti, quod te nisi fuimus in nostris literis aliquantulum increpare, licet non increpandi animo, sed affectu potius commonendi quod scripsimus meminerimus nos scripsisse. Huic autem tuae admirationi non causam, sed occasionem praebuit, sicut ex eisdem coniecimus literis, quod legisti, beatum Petrum Apostolorum principem sic scripsisse: "Subditi estote omni humanae creaturae propter Deum, sive regi, tanquam praecellenti, sive ducibus, tanquam ab eo missis, ad vindictam malefactorum, laudem vero bonorum." Volens enim, de quo nos rationabilius admiramur, imperatoria celsitudo per haec et alia, quae induxit, imperium sacerdotio dignitate ac potestate praeferre, ex auctoritate praemissa triplex trahere voluit argumentum, primum ex eo, quod legitur: "subditi estote;" secundum ex eo, quod sequitur: "regi tanquam praecellenti;" tertium ex eo, quod est adiectum subsequenter: "ad vindictam malefactorum, laudem vero bonorum;" per primum subesse sacerdotium, per secundum imperium praeeminere, per tertium imperatorem tam in sacerdotes quam laicos iurisdictionem, immo etiam gladii potestatem accepisse praesumens. Quum enim et boni quidam sint sacerdotes, et quidam eorum malefactores exsistant, is, qui secundum Apostolum gladium portat ad vindictam malefactorum, laudem vero bonorum, in malefacientes presbyteros excessus praesumptos potest ultore gladio vindicare, quum inter presbyteros et alios Apostolus non distinguat. § 2. Verum si et personam loquentis, et eorum, ad quos loquebatur, ac vim locutionis diligentius attendisses, scribentis non expressisses taliter intellectum. Scribebat enim Apostolus subditis suis, et eos ad humilitatis meritum provocabat. Nam si per hoc, quod dixit: "subditi estote," sacerdotibus voluit imponere iugum subiectionis, et eis praelationis auctoritatem afferre, quibus eos subiectos esse monebat, sequeretur ex hoc, quod etiam servus quilibet in sacerdotes imperium accepisset, quum dicatur: "omni humanae creaturae." Quod autem sequitur, "regi tanquam praecellenti," non negamus, quin praecellat imperator in temporalibus illos duntaxat, qui ab eo suscipiunt temporalia. Sed Pontifex in spiritualibus antecellit, quae tanto sunt temporalibus digniora, quanto anima praefertur corpori, licet non simpliciter dictum fuerit: "subditi estote," sed additum fuerit: "propter Deum," nec pure sit subscriptum: "regi praecellenti," sed interpositum forsitan fuit non sine causa, "tanquam." Quod autem sequitur: "ad vindictam malefactorum, laudem vero bonorum," intelligendum non est, quod rex vel imperator super omnes et bonos et malos gladii acceperit potestatem, sed in eos solummodo, qui utentes gladio eius sunt iurisdictioni commissi, iuxta quod Veritas ait: "Omnes, qui acceperint gladium, gladio peribunt." Non enim potest aut debet quisquam servum alterius iudicare, quum servus domino suo secundum Apostolum stet aut cadat. Ad id etiam induxisti, quod, licet Moyses et Aaron secundum carnem fratres exstiterint, Moyses tamen princeps populi, et Aaron sacerdotii potestate praeerat, et Iesus successor ipsius imperium in sacerdotes accepit. David quoque rex Abiathar pontifici praeeminebat. Ceterum licet Moyses dux populi fuerit, fuit etiam et sacerdos, qui Aaron in sacerdotem unxit, et cui Propheta sacerdotium recognoscens: "Moyses" inquit "et Aaron in sacerdotibus eius." Quod vero de Iesu, id est Iosue, ad commendandam praelationem eius scripsisti, magis secundum spiritum, quam literam debet intelligi, quia secundum Apostolum litera occidit, spiritus autem vivificat, pro eo, quod ipse veri Iesu figuram expressit, qui populum suum in terram promissionis induxit. David etiam quamvis diadema regium obtineret, Abiathar sacerdoti non tam ex dignitate regia, quam auctoritate prophetica imperabat. Verum quicquid olim fuerit in veteri testamento, nunc aliud est in novo, ex quo Christus factus est sacerdos in aeternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech, qui se non ut rex, sed ut sacerdos in ara crucis hostiam obtulit Deo Patri, per quam genus redemit humanum, circa illum praecipue, qui successor est Apostoli Petri et vicarius Iesu Christi. § 3. Potuisses autem praerogativam sacerdotii ex eo potius intelligere, quod dictum est: non a quolibet, sed a Deo; non regi, sed sacerdoti; non de regia stirpe, sed de sacerdotali prosapia descendenti, de sacerdotibus videlicet, qui erant in Anathot: "Ecce constitui te super gentes et regna, ut evellas et dissipes, aedifices et plantes" Dictum est etiam in divina lege: "Diis non detrahes, et principem populi tui non maledices" quae sacerdotes regibus anteponens istos Deos et alios principes appellavit. § 4. Praeterea nosse debueras, quod fecit Deus duo magna luminaria in firmamento coeli; luminare maius, ut praeesset diei, et luminare minus, ut praeesset nocti; utrumque magnum, sed alterum maius, quia nomine coeli designatur ecclesia, iuxta quod Veritas ait: "Simile est regnum coelorum homini patri familias, qui summo mane conduxit operarios in vineam suam." Per diem vero spiritualis accipitur, per noctem carnalis secundum propheticum testimonium: "dies diei eructat verbum, et nox nocti indicat scientiam." Ad firmamentum igitur coeli, hoc est universalis ecclesiae, fecit Deus duo magna luminaria, id est, duas magnas instituit dignitates, quae sunt pontificalis auctoritas, et regalis potestas. Sed illa, quae praeest diebus, id est spiritualibus, maior est; quae vero [noctibus, id est] carnalibus, minor, ut, quanta est inter solem et lunam, tanta inter pontifices et reges differentia cognoscatur. Haec autem si prudenter attenderet imperatoria celsitudo, non faceret aut permitteret venerabilem fratrem nostrum Constantinopolitanum patriarcham, magnum quidem et honorabile membrum ecclesiae, iuxta scabellum pedum suorum in sinistra parte sedere, quum alii reges et principes archiepiscopis et episcopis suis, sicut debent, reverenter assurgant, et eis iuxta se venerabilem sedem assignent. Nam et piissimus Constantinus quantum honoris exhibuerit sacerdotibus, tua sicut credimus, discretio non ignorat. § 5. Nos autem etsi non increpando scripserimus, potuissemus tamen rationabiliter increpare, quum B. Paulus Apostolus episcopum instruens ad Timotheum scripisse legatur. "Praedica verbum, insta opportune, importune, argue, obsecra, increpa in omni patientia et doctrina." Non enim os nostrum debet esse ligatum, sed patere debet ad omnes, ne secundum propheticum verbum simus canes muti, non valentes latrare. Unde correctio nostra tibi non debuit esse molesta, sed magis accepta, quia pater filium, quem diligit, corripit, et Deus quos amat arguit et castigat. Debitum igitur pastoralis officii exsequimur, quum obsecramus, arguimus, increpamus, et non solum alios, sed imperatores et reges opportune et importune ad ea studemus inducere, quae divinae sunt placita voluntati. § 6. Nobis autem in B. Petro sunt oves Christi commissae; dicente Domino: "Pasce oves meas," non distinguens inter has oves et alias, ut alienum a suo demonstraret ovili, qui Petrum et successores ipsius magistros non recognosceret et pastores; ut illud tanquam notissimum omittamus, quod Dominus dixit ad Petrum, et in Petro dixit ad successores ipsius: "Quodcunque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum et in coelis etc.," nihil excipiens, qui dixit: "quodcunque." Verum his diutius insistere nolumus, ne vel contendere videamur, vel in huiusmodi delectari, quum, si gloriari expediat, non in honore, sed in onere, non in magnitudine, sed in sollicitudine sit potius gloriandum, quum et Apostolus in infirmitatibus glorietur. Novimus esse scriptum: "Omnis qui se exaltat, humiliabitur, et qui se humiliat, exaltabitur;" et iterum: "Quanto maior es, humilia te in omnibus;" et alibi: "Deus superbis resistit, humilibus autem dat gratiam." Propter quod exaltationem nostram in humilitate ponimus, et humilitatem nostram exaltationem maximam reputamus. Unde etiam servos non solum Dei, sed etiam servorum Dei nos esse scribimus et fatemur, et tam sapientibus quam insipientibus secundum Apostolum sumus debitores. § 7. Utrum autem imperatoriam excellentiam ad bonum et utile per literas nostras duxerimus invitandam, utrum tibi iusta suggesserimus et honesta, tua sollicitudo discernat, quum non nisi ad utilitatem ecclesiae et terrae Hierosolymitanae subsidium nos te meminerimus invitasse. [Inspiret igitur etc.]

Latin source headnote: One ordained by the Pope is not thereby exempted from the jurisdiction of his bishop.

The same, to the Bishop of Florence.

Through your letters you intimated to us that, when certain subdeacons of the Roman Church obtain prelacies in your diocese for which they are bound to show you obedience, if at any time justice requiring, it should happen that you exercise ecclesiastical discipline against them, alleging the privilege of the subdiaconate they assert that they are not bound by it, as though through an office of the subdiaconate of this kind they were exempted from the obedience that they owe you by reason of the benefice obtained. Concerning this you sought to be taught through the oracle of the Apostolic See whether anyone, through the order of subdiaconate received from the Roman Pontiff, is withdrawn from the reverence due to you. To this we answer you briefly that, although it is fitting that among the others subject to you [special] deference be shown by you, insofar as is appropriate, to those whom apostolic kindness has honored by conferral of that order, nevertheless, through it they are by no means absolved from the obedience that they otherwise owe you. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the seventh day before the Ides of April, in the ninth year, 1206.]

Super quo Postulasti per sedis apostolicae oraculum edoceri, utrum quis per ordinem subdiaconatus, a Romano Pontifice susceptum, a debita tibi reverentia subtrahatur? Ad quod tibi breviter respondemus, quod, etsi decens sit, ut illis [specialiter], quantum convenit, a te inter alios tibi subditos deferatur, quos benignitas apostolica collatione ipsius ordinis honoravit, per eam tamen ab obedientia, quam alias tibi debent, minime absolvuntur. Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: When obedience or subjection is at issue, nothing ought to be attempted to the prejudice of the defendant or a possessor who was not cited.

The same, to the Patriarch of Constantinople.

Among the four living creatures that are described in the midst of the throne and around it, the face of an eagle is mentioned by Ezekiel above the four of them, because among the four patriarchal churches—Antioch, Alexandria, Jerusalem, and Constantinople—which are signified by the aforesaid living creatures and which the Apostolic See, having them in its midst, embraces as special daughters, while they are around it like obedient handmaids, Constantinople itself is preeminent after the Apostolic See in excellence of dignity. We aspire to its exaltation the more gladly insofar as, embracing it more closely as a more honorable member of the sacrosanct Roman Church, we know in these times that it needs its aid more greatly, and we arrange more gladly to advance your petitions, since by the Lord's disposition you are known to preside over it, when honorableness does not oppose them and prejudice is not generated against others. For an action of injuries ought not to arise from us, from whom rights are derived to others as from a fountain.

Therefore, although we wish, insofar as we can with God, to defer to your honor and commit your prayers to effect, we nevertheless were unable to hear that petition by which you sought from us that we deign by apostolic authority to annul grants of churches and benefices made by our beloved son P., cardinal-priest of the title of Saint Marcellus and legate of the Apostolic See, when you were present and entirely unconsulted, since he conferred an excessive multitude of churches and delivered them to be possessed by perpetual right without your consent and that of the chapter of the greater church, etc.

Therefore, although on account of the foregoing we were unable to hear your petition according to your desire, nevertheless, wishing to defer to your honor insofar as we can with our honorableness, we have decided to grant your fraternity that those who possess those churches or benefices show you due and devoted obedience, unless perhaps any of those churches had been lawfully exempted from the patriarch's jurisdiction before the capture of the royal city.

But for a twofold reason we decided not to admit the subsequent petition concerning the churches that you sought to be subjected to you, which did not answer to the Patriarch of Constantinople before the city of Constantinople was captured. For the rationale of law demands that we ordain nothing concerning them to the prejudice of those to whom the same churches are subject, since they have been neither cited nor convicted, nor absent themselves through contumacy. [Providence also dissuaded this from being done at present, lest the Pisans, Venetians, and very many others who have churches of this kind at Constantinople be provoked against the empire at this time, since they are rather to be enticed by blandishments until it is strengthened with immovable solidity. But if you should decide to pursue your right against them at an opportune time, with the Lord as author, we shall cause the fullness of justice concerning them to be furnished to you.]

But concerning the obedience that you similarly sought us to cause to be furnished to you by the archbishop and bishops of the kingdom of Cyprus, we decided to answer you nearly the same as in the preceding petition, since they too had been exempted before your promotion—namely, when the church of Constantinople was disobedient and rebellious—and we ought not to have changed anything concerning their condition in their absence. Nevertheless, we shall not deny you justice when you should decide to seek it. [On your part, etc. Given at Ferentino, on the fourth day before the Nones of August, in the ninth year, 1206.]

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: Regular canons disobedient to their prior can be excommunicated by him and, if they are incorrigible, ought to be expelled from the fellowship of the brothers.

The same, to the Abbots of Saint Stephen and Saint Proculus of Bologna.

When in the churches of Saint Victor and Saint John of the Mount—(And below:)—we, therefore, attending with diligent solicitude to the reformation of those churches, which, as their sins require, have both been diminished in temporal things and manifoldly collapsed in spiritual things, gave all the canons a firm mandate that they obey their prior in those things that pertain to him. And when all, with only four excepted, harmoniously answered that they wished to obey his admonitions and precepts, the aforesaid four, raising themselves in pride against the prior, although they had corporally furnished an oath concerning the obedience to be shown to their prior, nevertheless, forgetful of the oath furnished and the strict precept, resisted their prior in all things. And when for their contumacy they could not be recalled to due obedience, with justice dictating, the said prior promulgated a sentence of excommunication against them.

Therefore, when the aforesaid canons approached the Apostolic See, having been made more certain of their contumacy through authentic writings from the testimony of many prelates, after receiving from them corporally an oath according to the form of the Church, we caused the benefit of absolution to be imparted to them, commanding them under debt of the oath that, returning to their cloister from which they had departed, they devotedly and humbly obey their prior according to God.

Therefore, being unwilling that the same canons hereafter wander with such unbridled liberty, by apostolic writings we command your discretion that, relying upon our authority and with the subterfuge of any appeal removed, by ecclesiastical censures you compel the aforesaid canons to return to obedience to their prior; and, lest they be able to glory in their contumacy or malice, compel them, if you see it expedient, humbly to take care to furnish the oath concerning obedience to the prior's mandates that, when seeking the benefit of absolution, they had proudly refused. Otherwise, you are entirely to exclude them from the fellowship of their brothers.

Ioannis de Monte (Et infra:) Nos igitur ad reformationem earundem ecclesiarum, quae peccatis exigentibus et in temporalibus deminutae, et in spiritualibus sunt multipliciter collapsae, diligenti sollicitudine intendentes, universis canonicis dedimus firmiter in mandatis, ut priori suo in his, quae ad eum pertinent, obedirent. Quumque omnes, quatuor duntaxat exceptis, se obedire velle eius monitis et praeceptis concorditer respondissent, praedicti quatuor se contra priorem in superbiam erigentes, licet de obedientia suo priori praestanda praestitissent corporaliter iuramentum, tamen exhibiti iuramenti et districtae praeceptionis immemores, suo priori per omnia restiterunt, et, quum pro contumacia sua nequivissent ad debitam obedientiam revocari, dictus prior in eos dictante iustitia excommunicationis sententiam promulgavit. Quum igitur praefati canonici ad apostolicam sedem accessissent, per scripturas authenticas ex multorum testimonio praelatorum effecti de ipsorum contumacia certiores, recepto secundum formam ecclesiae ab eisdem corporaliter iuramento, ipsis fecimus absolutionis beneficium impendi, praecipientes eis sub debito iuramenti, ut ad suum claustrum, de quo exierant, redeuntes, priori suo secundum Deum devote ac humiliter obedirent. Ideoque nolentes, quod iidem canonici tam effrenata deinceps libertate vagentur, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus nostra freti auctoritate praefatos canonicos, ut ad prioris sui obedientiam revertantur, sublato cuiusvis appellationis diffugio per censuras ecclesiasticas compellatis, et, ne de sua possint contumacia vel malitia gloriari, cogatis eos, si videritis expedire, ut iuramentum, quod de parendo mandatis prioris pro absolutionis beneficio impetrando superbe negaverant, humiliter praestare procurent; alioquin eos de fratrum ipsorum consortio penitus excludatis.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: The priests and clerics of chapels subject to a cardinalitial title owe the cardinal obedience and the other things discussed here. And, when the title is vacant, the chapter of that church succeeds, unless something is excepted for the good of peace.

Honorius III, to G., Cardinal-Priest, and the Chapter of Saint Lawrence in Damaso.

Having diligently heard the matters proposed before us for the church of Saint Lawrence in Damaso on one side and the chapels subject to it on the other concerning scrutiny, baptism, manual obedience, correction, interdict, excommunication, and other articles, by sentence we decreed that the priests and clerics of those chapels are to show manual obedience, reverence, and every honor to the cardinal who is now in that church and to those who shall be there over time; are to convene at that church at the customary times for celebrating scrutiny, baptism, and chapter; are humbly to receive correction from the cardinal himself; and are inviolably to observe sentences of excommunication, interdict, or suspension that he renders against them and their churches. But when that church is vacant of a cardinal, the aforementioned chaplains and clerics are nevertheless reverently to show all the aforesaid things to that church, with only that excepted which, for the good of peace, we reserve to our providence concerning their correction, excommunication, and suspension.

Laurentii in Damaso ex parte una et capellis sibi subiectis ex altera super scrutinio, baptismo manuali obedientia, correctione, interdicio et excommunicatione aliisque articulis fuere coram nobis proposita, diligenter auditis, sententiando decrevimus, ut earundem capellarum presbyteri et clerici cardinali, qui nunc est in ipsa ecclesia, et qui fuerint per tempora, manualem obedientiam et reverentiam et honorificentiam omnem exhibeant, et ad ecclesiam ipsam pro scrutinio, baptismo et capitulo celebrandis conveniant temporibus consuetis, correctionem ipsius cardinalis recipientes humiliter, et excommunicationis, interdicti vel suspensionis sententias, quas tulerit in eos et ecclesias eorundem, inviolabiliter observantes. Quando autem ecclesia ipsa cardinali vacabit, capellani et clerici memorati nihilominus eidem ecclesiae reverenter exhibeant omnia supradicta, eo duntaxat excepto, quod de correctione, excommunicatione et suspensione ipsorum pro bono pacis nostrae providentiae reservamus.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: Although an abbess cannot excommunicate subjects, they are nevertheless bound to obey her.

The same, to the Abbot of Saint Michael in the Diocese of Abradensis.

Our beloved daughter in Christ, the Abbess of Bubrigen., showed by a petition transmitted to us that, when she often suspends her canonesses and the clerics subject to her jurisdiction from office and benefice on account of their disobedience and faults, the same persons, relying upon the fact that the abbess cannot excommunicate them, do not observe a suspension of this kind, on account of which their excesses remain uncorrected. Therefore, we command your discretion that, after prior admonition, by ecclesiastical censure and with appeal removed, you compel the said canonesses and clerics to show the aforesaid abbess due obedience and reverence and to observe her salutary admonitions and mandates. [Given at Alatri, on the second day of the month of June, in the sixth year of our pontificate, 1222.]

> Licet abbatissa subditos excommunicare non possit, ipsi tamen sibi obedire tenentur.

> Dilecta in Christo filia abbatissa de Bubrigen. transmissa nobis petitione monstravit, quod, quum ipsa plerumque canonicas suas et clericos suae iurisdictioni subiectos propter inobedientias et culpas eorum officio beneficioque suspendat iidem confisi ex eo, quod eadem abbatissa excommunicare eos non potest, suspensionem huiusmodi non observant, propter quod ipsorum excessus remanent incorrecti. Quocirca discretioni tuae mandamus, quatenus dictas canonicas et clericos, ut abbatissae praefatae obedientiam et reverentiam debitam impendentes, eius salubria monita et mandata observent, monitione praemissa ecclesiastica censura appellatione remota compellas. [Dat. Allatii II. Mens. Iun. Pont. nostr. Ao. VI. 1222.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: If a metropolitan exacts an oath from a suffragan beyond the form established by the canon, the suffragan is not bound with respect to what is beyond it.

Gregory IX, to the Patriarch of Grado.

Our beloved sons the Archdeacon and Chapter of Castello brought their complaint to us that, when you exacted from the Bishop of Castello an oath beyond the canonical form that other suffragans have been accustomed to furnish to their metropolitans, they, perceiving that prejudice was generated against their church from this, appealed to the Apostolic See. (And below:) Therefore, since it is not fitting that you do to another what you would not wish to be done to you by another, we command that, being content with the canonical form that we receive from our fellow bishops immediately subject to us, under pretext of the oath furnished you exact nothing more from the Bishop of Castello on the ground of any custom, knowing that we have absolved the same bishop from an oath of this kind with respect to the other articles, or rather declared that he is not bound.

(Et infra:) Quum igitur non deceat alii te fecisse quod ab alio fieri tibi nolles, mandamus, quatenus contentus forma canonica, quam nos a coepiscopis nostris nobis immediate subiectis recipimus, nil amplius a Castellano episcopo obtentu alicuius consuetudinis exigas praetextu praestiti iuramenti, sciens, nos eundem episcopum ab huiusmodi iuramento quoad alios articulos absolvisse, vel denunciasse potius non teneri.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: When a bishopric is vacant, the chapter confirms and invalidates elections.

The same, to the Prior of the Friars Preachers and the Archdeacon of Reggio.

When formerly the cause—(And below:)—therefore, we command that, although the convent of the monastery of Saint Savior of Messina is by law deprived on this occasion of the power of electing, nevertheless by grace you are to give them by our authority free faculty to elect or postulate, commanding the same persons that, because the church of Messina is presently vacant, they present their election to the Chapter of Messina to be confirmed as shall be lawful, or even invalidated.

> Vacante episcopatu capitulum confirmat et infirmat electiones.

> Idem Priori fratrum Praedicatorum et archidiacono Rheginensi.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: One who is greater in order, although received later in the church, is preferred in place and portion. This is what it says according to the true reading.

The same, to the Archpriest of Saint Mary Major in the City.

We establish that priests obtain the first place, deacons the second, subdeacons the third, and so on with the rest in order, even if they are admitted later. And we wish one who is greater in order, even if received afterwards, to be superior in receiving a portion, and those of lesser orders to perform the customary services.

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: If a church situated within some archdeaconry is erected as a cathedral, it is exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeaconry.

The same, to the Archbishop of Kalocsa.

Since an inferior cannot absolve or bind a superior, but a superior regularly binds and absolves an inferior, and it appears sufficiently [unworthy and] discordant that [the greater be subject to the lesser and] a son have power over a parent, we marvel [not a little and are moved] that, when you erected the monastery of Cheur, situated in the archdeaconry of Firmiensis in your diocese, as a cathedral church, [consecrating our venerable brother the Bishop of Sirmium as bishop to the title of that church], the Archdeacon of Firmiensis broke out into such great audacity of temerity that he presumes to exercise jurisdiction over the bishop consecrated there and his church. [Therefore, the same bishop humbly entreated us that, since, while the same archdeacon exercises jurisdiction of this kind over him and the said church, he in a certain manner does not exist as bishop in that church, we deign beneficially to provide for him concerning this. We, therefore, compassionating the same bishop and church with paternal affection and entirely exempting them, with all their rights and appurtenances, from the jurisdiction of that archdeacon,] command that you take care strictly to prohibit the aforesaid archdeacon [on our behalf from presuming hereafter to exercise any jurisdiction over them], from whose jurisdiction we declare the said bishop exempted. You are to take care strictly to prohibit this, provided [prudently] that, if the rights of the Archdeacon of Firmiensis are harmed by this, you make suitable recompense to him within your diocese, where you see it expedient, without prejudice to another's right. [Contradictors, etc. Given at Rieti, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of April, in the fifth year, 1232.]

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's provisio has been corrected to proviso, as required by the sentence's construction.

[Quare idem episcopus nobis humiliter supplicavit ut quum eodem archidiacono in ipsum et dictam ecclesiam iurisdictionem huiusmodi exercente, ipse in eadem ecclesia episcopus quoddammodo non exsistat, provideri sibi super hoc salubriter dignaremur. Nos igitur eiusdem episcopi et ecclesiae paterno compatientes affectu, ipsos cum omnibus iuribus et pertinentiis eorundem, a iurisdictione ipsius archidiaconi penitus eximentes] Mandamus, quatenus praefato archidiacono [ne in eis iurisdictionem aliquam de cetero exercere praesumat, ex parte nostra districte studeas inhibere], a cuius iurisdictione dictum episcopum denunciamus exemptum, id districte studeas inhibere; proviso [prudenter] ut, si ex hoc archidiaconi Firmiensis iura laeduntur, in dioecesi tua, ubi expedire videris, absque alieni iuris praeiudicio recompensationem illi facias congruentem. [Contradictores etc. Dat. Reat. XII. Kal. April. ao. V. 1232.]

Chapter XVII

Latin source headnote: A single person whose interest is involved will be able to impede a settlement concerning the right of primacy.

The same, to the Archdeacon of Limoges and the Prior of Saint Radegund of Poitiers.

The humble teacher of doctrine—(And below:)—we command that you seek the assent of the prelates of the province of Bordeaux present in it, of its cathedral chapters, and also of the Chapter of Bourges concerning the provision that we decided should be made between the Archbishops of Bourges and Bordeaux in the cause of primacy. When this has been obtained, you are solemnly to publish our provision. But if any should be unwilling to furnish consent, suspending the aforesaid publication, you are strictly to command them, if they are prelates, to present themselves personally to our sight, or, if others, through suitable proctors, to prosecute before us the right, if any, that they contend they have, and to make satisfaction to the other party in expenses if they succumb.

Compositionem super iure primatiae unus solus, cuius interest, poterit impedire.

Idem Lemovicensi Archidiacono et Priori sanctae Radegundis Pictaviensis.

Humilis doctrina magistra (Et infra:) Mandamus, quatenus praelatorum Burdegalensis provinciae in ea praesentium, et cathedralium capitulorum eiusdem, nec non Bituricensis capituli super provisione, quam inter Bituricensem et Burdegalensem archiepiscopos in causa primatiae duximus faciendam, requiratis assensum, quo habito providentiam nostram solenniter publicetis. Si qui vero consensum praestare noluerint, vos supersedentes publicationi praedictae, districte praecipiatis eisdem, ut personaliter, si praelati fuerint, vel si alii, per procuratores idoneos, nostro se conspectui repraesentent, prosecuturi coram nobis ius, si quod habere contendunt, et satisfacturi parti alteri, si succubuerint, in expensis.

Title XXXIV: On Truce and Peace

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: It establishes the times of truces and the penalties of those violating them.

Alexander III, in the Lateran Council.

We command that truces be inviolably observed by all from the fourth day of the week after sunset until the second day of the week at sunrise, [and] from the Advent of the Lord until the octave of Epiphany, and from Septuagesima until the octave of Easter.

§ 1. But if anyone should presume to break the truces and, after a third admonition, should not make satisfaction, let his bishop declare a sentence of excommunication against him and announce it in writing to the neighboring bishops. Let none of them receive the excommunicated person into communion; rather, let each confirm the written sentence. But if anyone should presume to violate these things, let him lie under peril of his order.

§ 2. And because a threefold cord is broken with difficulty, we command that bishops, having regard only for God and the salvation of the people, with all trepidation set aside, furnish one another mutual counsel and aid for firmly maintaining peace, and not omit this for anyone's love or hatred. But if anyone should be found timid in this work of God, let him incur loss of his own dignity.

DE TREUGA ET PACE.

Statuit tempora treugarum et poenas violantium.

Alexander III. in concilio Lateranensi.

Treugas a quarta feria post occasum solis usque ad secundam feriam in ortu solis, [et] ab Adventu Domini usque ad octavas Epiphaniae, et a Septuagesima usque ad octavas Paschae ab omnibus inviolabiliter observari praecipimus. § 1. Si quis autem treugas frangere praesumpserit, post tertiam admonitionem si non satisfecerit, suus episcopus sententiam excommunicationis dictet in eum, et scriptam vicinis episcopis annunciet, quorum nullus excommunicatum in communione recipiat, immo scriptam sententiam quisque confirmet. Si quis autem haec violare praesumpserit, ordinis sui periculo subiaceat. § 2. Et quoniam funiculus triplex difficile rumpitur, praecipimus, ut episcopi ad solum Deum et ad salutem populi habentes respectum, omni trepidatione seposita ad pacem firmiter tenendam mutuum sibi consilium et auxilium praebeant, neque hoc alicuius amore vel odio praetermittant. Quod si quis in hoc Dei opere trepidus inventus fuerit, damnum propriae dignitatis incurrat.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The persons enumerated here enjoy full security in time of war.

The same.

Moreover, we renew that priests, [clerics], monks, lay brothers, pilgrims, merchants, peasants going and returning and engaged in agriculture, and the animals with which they plow and that carry seed to the field, enjoy suitable security. Nor anyone, etc. (cf. c. 10, On Census, III. 39.)

Title XXXV: On Agreements

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Agreements, however bare, are to be observed.

From the African Council.

Antigonus, Bishop of Madauros, said: I suffer grave injury, and I believe that your holiness grieves at my insult and reckons it a common injury. When Optantius presented himself, he entered into an agreement with me, and we divided [the congregations; our handwritten instruments and documents are held. Contrary to this agreement he goes about the congregations assigned to me and usurps the peoples, so that they call him father and me stepfather. Bishop Gratus said: This deed is to be grieved at,] so that he may entice to himself there the souls of unlearned peoples contrary to discipline, contrary to evangelical tradition, contrary to the covenants of peace. For if anyone reckoned that this could happen to him, surely no one would ever have sinned against a brother. Hence, either let agreements entered into obtain their firmness, or let the person convened, if he does not restrain himself, experience ecclesiastical discipline. All said: Let peace be preserved; let agreements be kept.

> Antigonus episcopus Madaurensis dixit: Gravem iniuriam patior, et credo, dolere sanctitatem vestram contumeliam meam et computare communem iniuriam. Optantius quum se repraesentaret, pactum mecum habuit et divisimus [plebes; manuscriptiones nostrae tenentur et pittacia. Contra hoc pactum circuit plebes mihi attributas, et usurpat populos, ut illum patrem, me vitricum nominent. Gratus episcopus dixit: Factum hoc dolendum est,] ut in se illiciat populorum imperitorum animas contra disciplinam, contra evangelicam traditionem, contra pacis placita. Nam si id sibi posse contingere arbitraretur, nunquam profecto in fratrem aliquis deliquisset. Unde Aut inita pacta suam obtineant firmitatem, aut conventus, si se non cohibuerit, ecclesiasticam sentiat disciplinam. Dixerunt universi: Pax servetur, pacta custodiantur.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: An invalid agreement is validated through the superior's consent.

Gregory.

Whenever our assent is awaited in certain agreements, lest the matters conducted come into doubt, ratification ought to solidify them for the security of the parties. [Accordingly, etc.]

> Conventio invalida per consensum superioris validatur.
>
> Gregorius.
>
> Quoties in conventionibus quibusdam noster exspectatur assensus, ne in dubium veniant quae geruntur, ratihabitio eas debet pro securitate partium solidare. [Proinde etc.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A judge ought to act studiously so that promises are fulfilled.

The same.

In what manner in Sardinia [lesser or poor persons are oppressed by those who are greater there is attested by the letters of our most reverend brother Dominicus, Bishop of Carthage, and of our most eminent son Innocentius, prefect. So that you may know the matters written to us, we have provided that copies of their letters be transmitted to you. And therefore, because the things that are to be sought are offered,] action is to be taken studiously so that the things that are promised are completed in deed.

Et ideo quia ea, quae petenda sunt, offeruntur,] Studiose agendum est, ut ea, quae promittuntur, opere compleantur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: An agreement by which an ecclesiastical benefice is to be resigned for money is not valid.

Alexander III, to the Bishops of Exeter and Worcester.

When formerly the cleric S., proctor of the Prior and monks of Acra, and the cleric P., for the cause disputed between those monks and the aforesaid P. and his brother—on whose behalf he said that he acted—concerning the church of S. and chapel of L., approached our presence together, they agreed between themselves, though not with us as intermediary, that three marks of silver would be paid to P. for the expenses he had made, and that P. would withdraw from the suit and entirely cease from molestation of the monks. And when they brought this settlement to our hearing and sought that it be confirmed by apostolic authority, we decided not to admit it because it appeared to contain a depraved species of illicit agreement.

But we admonished the aforesaid P. that, both for himself and his brother, he leave the monks in peace and entirely renounce that suit. He, therefore, acquiescing in our admonitions and entirely renouncing that suit for himself and his brother, surrendered into our hands the authentic instruments that he had concerning this. Sending them, namely, to the aforesaid prior and monks, we commanded that, since the aforesaid P. acquiesced in our admonitions concerning this, they too attend to our benign prayers and take care to provide P. and his brother with some benefice from which, by apostolic intercession, they might receive a greater gain than ought to have come to them from that illicit agreement.

But because, as we have learned, the oft-mentioned prior and brothers were unwilling to acquiesce, we, compassionating with paternal piety the labors of those clerics, by apostolic writings command you by way of precept that you admonish the prior and monks to confer and assign a decent and competent benefice to the aforesaid P. and his brother. Otherwise, if it is established to you, as they themselves assert, that the oft-mentioned clerics were violently ejected unjustly and without judicial order from the aforesaid church of Sintonia and chapel of Lintona, you are to cause them to be restored to them, notwithstanding the letters of our confirmation that the aforesaid prior and monks are known to have impetrated from us.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's acqiuevit has been corrected to acquievit.

Quumque compositionem istam ad nostram pertulissent audientiam, eamque auctoritate apostolica peterent confirmari, nos eam non duximus admittendam pro eo, quod videbatur pravam illicitae pactionis speciem continere. Monuimus autem praedictum P., ut ipse tam pro se, quam pro fratre suo monachos in pace dimitteret, et eidem liti omnino abrenunciaret. Ille igitur nostris monitis acquiescens, et eidem liti pro se ac pro fratre suo penitus renuncians, authentica instrumenta, quae super hoc habebat in nostris manibus resignavit, quae nos priori et monachis praedictis scilicet destinantes, mandavimus, ut, ex quo praedictus P. nostris super hoc monitis acquievit, ipsi quoque benignis nostris precibus intenderent, et eidem P. et fratri eius in aliquo studerent beneficio providere, de quo maius lucrum valeant apostolica intercessione percipere, quam eis deberet ex illa pactione illicita provenire. Ceterum quia saepe dicti prior et fratres sicut accepimus, acquiescere noluerunt, nos eorundem clericorum laboribus paterna pietate compatientes vobis per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus priorem et monachos moneatis eosdem, ut praefato P. et fratri eius decens et competens beneficium conferant et assignent; alioquin, si vobis constiterit, saepe dictos clericos, prout ipsi asseverant, a praenominata ecclesia de Sintonia et capella de Lintona iniuste et absque ordine iudiciario violenter fuisse eiectos, ipsas eisdem restitui faciatis, non obstantibus literis nostrae confirmationis, quas praedicti prior et monachi a nobis impetrasse noscuntur.

Chapter V

The same, to the Archbishop of York.

We have learned that certain churches have been granted to clerics under such a tenor that, after their deaths, others named individually should succeed them. But because this is iniquitous and hostile to the sacred canons, and therefore ought not to be tolerated in any way, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity by way of precept that, with contradiction and appeal ceasing, you prohibit successions of this kind as detestable and iniquitous, and decree that they are altogether frivolous and empty.

> Idem Archiepiscopo Eboracensi.
> Accepimus, quod quaedam ecclesiae clericis sint tali tenore concessae, quod post eorum obitum alii nominatim succedant. Verum quoniam hoc iniquum est et sacris canonibus inimicum, et ideo non debet aliquatenus tolerari, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus huiusmodi successiones tam detestabiles et iniquas contradictione et appellatione cessante prohibeas, et omnino frivolas et inanes esse decernas.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who obtained a church through an agreement to increase its pension ought to be deprived of it and otherwise canonically punished.

The same, to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his Suffragans.

Since clerics of your jurisdiction, as we have learned, when persons of churches die, make agreements to pay pensions greater than usual from those churches so that they can more easily obtain the same churches, we wish diligent care and solicitude to be employed for extirpating so detestable a vice. Hence it is that by apostolic writings we command your fraternity by way of precept that, publicly and strictly prohibiting all your clerics from presuming to attempt this, if they should presume to come against your prohibition, with appeal ceasing you are as quickly as possible to despoil them of churches thus obtained, otherwise punishing them with ecclesiastical severity for the excess of so great a presumption. In addition, etc. (cf. c. 11, On Census, III. 39.)

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: If a church, when leasing its property or granting it in fief, adds an agreement to the prejudice of the parochial right of another church, it does not hold, and it is compelled to return to that church whatever it received on this occasion.

Innocent III, in the General Council.

Very many regular and sometimes secular clerics, as we have learned, when they lease houses or grant fiefs, add an agreement to the prejudice of parochial churches that the lessees and feudatories pay tithes to them and choose burial among them. But since this proceeds from the root of avarice, we entirely reprove an agreement of this kind, establishing that whatever was received on occasion of such an agreement be returned to the parochial church.

Quum autem id de avaritiae radice procedat, pactum huiusmodi penitus reprobamus, statuentes, ut quicquid fuerit occasione huiusmodi pacti perceptum ecclesiae parochiali reddatur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: An agreement concerning spiritual things, or one that induces sin, or one that is base, concerning a base thing, or impossible by law or fact, is not valid.

Gregory IX.

The agreements made by you, as we have heard, for obtaining certain spiritual things are of no effect at all, since in matters of this kind every pact and every agreement ought altogether to cease. The same is also to be said concerning others that, if observed, tend toward loss of the soul. For even according to lawful sanctions, a base agreement, or one concerning a base thing or something impossible by law or fact, induces no obligation.

Quod etiam de aliis est dicendum, quae observatae vergunt in animae detrimentum. Nam etiam iuxta legitimas sanctiones pactum turpe, vel rei turpis aut impossibilis de iure vel de facto, nullam obligationem inducit.

Title XXXVI: On Settlements

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Instruments and other contrary rights of the parties are taken away by a settlement.

Gregory I, to A., Subdeacon, and Dom., Abbot.

Just as it is grave [and full of reproach that a controversy arisen among persons serving almighty God concerning secular business remain for a long time, so it is praiseworthy and fitting to religious zeal to prefer peace pleasing to God to earthly advantages and, from transitory things, to purchase gains of charity that will always remain. And therefore, because a long contention was drawn out concerning the possessions of Faianum, Nasonianum, and Libinianum, situated in the province of Sicily in the territory of Palermo, between the provosts of the monastery of Saints Maximus and Agatha, which is called Lucuscanum, and, on the other side, the administrators of the hospice established in this city of Rome that is called that of Valerius, but now, with agreements intervening, a salutary decision has proceeded, with God as author, between you, Antonius our subdeacon and provost of the aforementioned hospice, and, on the other side, our most beloved son Dometius, abbot and priest of the aforesaid monastery, it is necessary that every occasion of discord be capable of being forestalled and that the acts conducted be confirmed by intervening authority.]

Accordingly, after the salutary decision made concerning your controversy, we decreed that all instruments, or whatever else exists that could in any manner, whether from prescription of time or otherwise, bring the parties aid from law or any privilege [if, which may it not happen, they wished to come against one another], are to be, just as [also] you seek, void and quashed of every force, and that the page alone of the agreements now made between you obtain valid and perpetual strength. If perchance through carelessness or inexperience something of less firmness has been inserted into it, let it receive the fullest force of cognizance from this authority of ours, [nor to remain, etc. In the month of January, the second indiction, 598.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A settlement concerning tithes made with the superior's assent holds.

Alexander III.

We establish that, if a settlement concerning tithes has been made between you and some ecclesiastical person with the assent of his bishop or archbishop, it is to remain ratified and unshaken in perpetuity.

> Tenet compositio super decimis facta cum assensu superioris.

>
> Statuimus, ut, si super decimis inter vos et aliquam personam ecclesiasticam de assensu episcopi vel archiepiscopi sui compositio facta fuerit, rata perpetuis temporibus et inconcussa persistat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: If a chapter consented to a settlement that a prelate made in the name of the church, it cannot afterwards dissent.

The same, to the Bishop of Dulmensis.

It happens at times that, although an abbot or prior of some conventual church makes a settlement with an ecclesiastical or secular person concerning matters disputed between them before a delegated or ordinary judge, after letters of ratification from his chapter have been shown, the chapter itself nevertheless endeavors to revoke the same settlement. Hence, because you wished to consult us concerning this, we answer you that, if the abbot or prior had letters of ratification from his chapter, the chapter will not be able to revoke the settlement that he made, if it was observed for some years, as though it had not consented to it.

> Si capitulum consensit transactioni, quam fecit praelatus nomine ecclesiae, ulterius dissentire non potest.
> Idem Dulmensi Episcopo.
>
> Contingit interdum, quod, licet abbas vel prior alicuius conventualis ecclesiae cum ecclesiastica vel saeculari persona super his, de quibus inter eos controversia vertitur coram delegato vel ordinario iudice transigat, literis capituli sui de ratihabitione monstratis, ipsum capitulum tamen eandem transactionem nititur revocare. Unde quia nos super hoc consulere voluisti, tibi respondemus, quod, si abbas vel prior a capitulo suo de ratihabitione literas habuerit, transactionem, quam fecit, si fuerit aliquot annis servata, capitulum, ac si non consenserit in eam, non poterit revocare.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A settlement cannot be made concerning an ecclesiastical benefice, even with the interposition of an oath.

The same, to the Abbot of Strat. and the Prior of Saint Eusebius.

Established in our presence, the cleric G. showed us by his assertion that, when a controversy arose between himself and the cleric A. concerning the chapel of Stratis, it was finally quieted through a settlement; and, although the settlement itself had been confirmed on each side by pledged faith, the aforesaid A. nevertheless refuses to observe it. Therefore, because settlements of this kind sometimes contain the appearance of simony, and according to the Apostle it is fitting for us to abstain not only from evil but even from the appearance of evil, by apostolic writings we command your devotion by way of precept that, when you have been required on account of this, you summon the parties before your presence and, after the settlement has been revoked as null, hear the cause more diligently, etc.

>
> Idem Abbati de Strat. et Priori sancti Eusebii.
>
> Constitutus in nostra praesentia G. clericus sua nobis assertione monstravit, quod, quum inter ipsum, et A. clericum super capella de Stratis controversia emersisset, tandem per transactionem sopita fuit, et, licet transactio ipsa hinc inde fide praestita firmata fuisset, eam tamen praefatus A. servare recusat. Quia igitur huiusmodi transactiones speciem nonnunquam continent simoniae, et non solum a malo, sed etiam a specie mali secundum Apostolum nos convenit abstinere, devotioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, quum propter hoc fueritis requisiti, partes ante vestram praesentiam convocetis, et, revocata transactione in irritum, causam diligentius audiatis etc.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Through a settlement made without the bishop's authority, the prelate, but not the church, can be made censual.

The same, to the Bishop of Chartres.

Hereafter, know that, when someone who is afterwards to have some right in the church at issue, after impetrating letters to an extraordinary judge, settles with his adversary, if the settlement is not contrary to law, it is not to be reproved in any way by the bishop of the place. But a payment made under this pretext without episcopal authority by the church over which he presides does not exceed the life of the one who made the payment.

> Per transactionem factam sine auctoritate episcopi potest praelatus, sed non ecclesia constitui censualis.
> Idem Carnotensi Episcopo.
>
> De cetero noveris, quod, quum aliquis ad extraordinarium iudicem literis impetratis cum adversario suo componit, postmodum in ecclesia, de qua agitur, ius aliquod habiturus, si compositio non est iuri contraria, non est a loci episcopo aliquatenus reprobanda; sed census absque episcopali auctoritate cui praeest ecclesiae sub hoc praetextu solutus, vitam eius, qui solverit, non excedit.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If a benefice that is held through a settlement is impetrated as vacant by one who was mediator of the settlement, the impetration is not valid. This is what it says with respect to the title.

The same, to the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Worcester.

We learned from your letters that, when formerly a settlement had long since been made between the clerics R. and A. concerning the church of Vult. and the chapel of Torhec pertaining to that church, before you, brother bishop, who had been delegated as judge, by the authority of G., who at that time was protecting A. in the cause and had been inscribed as a witness, afterwards the same G., coming to our presence and falsely representing himself as a cleric when he had not yet been tonsured as a cleric, impetrated our letters to the Bishop of Durham and the Dean of York, if we remember well, concerning the same church and chapel, with the settlement itself kept silent. But when the same G. and the responsals of the aforesaid R. were finally established in our presence, we, learning the truth concerning these matters from your letters and also considering how the aforesaid G. did not deny that he had taken part in the settlement and had not yet been tonsured when he obtained those letters, decided by apostolic authority to impose silence upon him concerning the aforesaid church and chapel.

> Si beneficium, quod per transactionem habetur, impetratur ut vacans, ab eo, qui fuit transactionis mediator, non valet impetratio. H. d. quoad titulum.
>
> Idem Eboracensi Archiepiscopo et Wigorensi Episcopo.
>
> Ex literis vestris accepimus, quod, quum olim inter R. et A. clericos super ecclesia de Vult. et capella de Torhec ad eandem ecclesiam pertinente coram te, frater episcope, qui iudex fueras delegatus, auctoritate G., qui tunc eidem A. patrocinabatur in causa, et testis inscriptus fuerat, transactio iam pridem facta fuisset, postmodum idem G. veniens ad praesentiam nostram, et se mentiens clericum, quum nondum esset in clericum tonsuratus, ad Dunelmensem episcopum et decanum Eboracensem, si bene meminimus, super eadem ecclesia et capella tacito de transactione ipsa literas nostras impetravit. Quum autem idem G. et responsales praedicti R. in nostra demum praesentia fuissent constituti, nos ex literis vestris veritatem super his cognoscentes, et attendentes etiam, quomodo praefatus G. non inficiaretur, se transactioni interfuisse, et nondum fuisse tonsuratum, quum literas istas obtinuit, ei super praedicta ecclesia et capella auctoritate apostolica silentium duximus imponendum.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A settlement cannot be made concerning an ecclesiastical benefice, but an amicable composition can be made. This is what it says, and it is daily alleged.

The same.

Concerning what you asked—whether a settlement can be made regarding an ecclesiastical benefice brought into litigation—we give the following answer, just as long ago, if we remember well, we gave an answer not dissimilar to another asking: according to the form ascribed by the canons to other settlements, a settlement cannot be made concerning a sacred thing in litigation. For we believe that sacred things being possessed in return for something given, retained, or promised has the appearance of simony. But otherwise, if the litigants compose matters between themselves freely and amicably, we by no means say that this opposes the sacred canons.

> Super ecclesiastico beneficio non potest transigi, sed amicabiliter componi. H. d. et quotidie allegatur.
>
> Idem.
>
> Super eo, quod quaesivisti, utrum de ecclesiastico beneficio in litigium deducto possit fieri transactio, tale damus, sicut iam pridem, si bene meminimus, alii non absimile quaerenti dedimus responsum, quod secundum formam a canonibus in aliis transactionibus adscriptam transigi super re sacra litigiosa non potest. Etenim res sacrae, ut possideantur aliquo dato, vel retento sive promisso, speciem credimus habere simoniae. Alias autem, si gratis et amicabiliter inter se litigantes componant, sacris canonibus nequaquam dicimus obviare.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A settlement made concerning the things of a church by a prelate without the superior's consent does not bind his successor.

The same, to the Abbot of Straphor and the Prior of Phe.

Coming to the clemency of the Apostolic See, our beloved son Master G. of Favill. showed us by his intimation that the monks of Marmoutier cultivate lands in the parish of Saint M. of Marchia, and their tenants receive from that church all ecclesiastical sacraments, both necessary and voluntary, and nevertheless they refuse to pay to that church the tithes established by the canons. But they pay it a third part of the crops and presume to retain two parts for themselves; and of the other minor tithes, such as the offspring of animals and fruits of gardens, they are not ashamed to furnish nothing at all.

But they reckon that they can protect themselves in this by pretext of a certain settlement made between the aforesaid monks and a certain priest, predecessor of the aforementioned G., namely, in such a way that from two ploughlands of land that the monks hold in their demesne, they pay only a third part of the tithes [of the crops], retaining the rest for themselves. Thus it happens that, taking from this an occasion for acting maliciously, the monks convert into their demesne, more astutely than providently, estates devolved to them from a failure of cultivators, and aggregate four or perhaps more ploughlands to the two, furnishing tithes from them no differently than they would have furnished from the two, although according to the tenor of the settlement they would be bound to pay complete tithes from them.

Therefore, since it is fitting for us to provide for churches lest their rights appear to perish for anyone, by apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, when you have been required concerning this, after both parties have been summoned before your presence, you inquire more diligently into the truth of the matter. Unless the aforesaid monks plainly produce before you a privilege granted to them concerning this by [the clemency of] the Apostolic See, or unless the aforesaid monks show that the prescribed settlement was confirmed by apostolic authority, since otherwise it appears to have been made between persons [thus] rather than between churches, and since we do not permit agreements conducted among some to harm others, with every delay and appeal removed, you are to compel them and [their] cultivators with every strictness to furnish perpetually every year to the church of Saint Mary of Marturen. all the tithes [in their entirety] arising from any things whatsoever, completely and without [any] diminution, and [also] to restore to the same church a just valuation of those tithes that they had unlawfully retained.

But if, according to the matters proposed to us, it should appear to your discretion in judgment that the aforesaid monks can justly be pressed only to furnishing a third part of the tithes, then, with appeal removed, by apostolic authority you are to compel the oft-mentioned monks to furnish to the aforementioned church the third part as tithes of all things that the canons have decreed are to be tithed.

> Transactio facta de rebus ecclesiae per praelatum sine superioris consensu non obligat successorem.
>
> Idem Abbati de Straphor, et Priori de Phe.
> Veniens ad apostolicae sedis clementiam dilectus filius magister G. de Favill. sua nobis insinuatione monstravit, quod monachi maioris monasterii terras in parochia sanctae M. de Marchia excolunt, et ab eadem ecclesia coloni eorum omnia ecclesiastica tam necessaria quam voluntaria suscipiunt sacramenta, et tamen eidem ecclesiae suas a canonibus constitutas decimas solvere contradicunt. Sed de frugibus tertiam partem solvunt ei, et duas sibi retinere praesumunt, de reliquis autem minutis decimis, utpote nutrimentis animalium et fructibus hortorum, nil penitus praestare non erubescunt. Arbitrantur autem, ad hoc se posse tueri cuiusdam transactionis praetextu inter praefatos monachos, et quendam sacerdotem memorati G. praedecessorem factae ita videlicet, ut de duabus carruatis terrae, quas in dominio suo monachi tenent, tertiam tantum decimarum partem [frugum] exsolvant, reliquas sibi retinendo. Quo fit, ut, inde occasionem sumentes malignandi, praedia ex agricolarum defectu ad eos devoluta monachi in suum magis astute quam provide dominium convertant, et quatuor vel forte plures carrucatas duabus aggregant, non aliter decimas praestantes de illis, quam de duabus praestitissent, quum secundum compositionis tenorem integras de illis decimationes solvere tenerentur. Quoniam igitur nos convenit ecclesiis providere, ne sua cuilibet videantur iura deperire, fraternitati vestrae per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, quum exinde fueritis requisiti, utraque parte ante praesentiam vestram convocata, rei veritatem diligentius inquiratis, et, nisi privilegium [clementia] apostolicae sedis sibi super hoc indultum coram vobis praefati monachi palam produxerint, vel nisi praefati monachi transactionem praescriptam auctoritate apostolica confirmatam esse docuerint, quum alias inter personas [ita] facta potius quam inter ecclesias videatur, nec pacta inter alios acta aliis obesse patiamur, omni dilatione et appellatione remota ipsos et agricolas [eorum] decimationes [universas] ex quibuslibet rebus provenientes ex integro, absque [omni] diminutione ecclesiae S. Mariae de Marturen. iugi praestatione singulis annis praestare, et [etiam] illarum, quas illicite detinuerant, iustam aestimationem restituere eidem ecclesiae cum omni districtione compellatis. Quodsi discretioni vestrae, secundum ea quae proponuntur nobis, in iudicio visum fuerit, praefatos monachos, non nisi ad tertiae partis decimationum praestationem, secundum iustitiam urgeri posse; tunc omnium eorum, quae canones decimanda decreverint, appellatione remota, saepedictos monachos tertiam partem ecclesiae iam dictae, auctoritate apostolica decimas praestare cogatis.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: Just as a settlement cannot be made concerning the right of presentation, so one cannot be made concerning what is annexed to it, so that a person withdraws from litigation when some temporal thing intervenes.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Ormensis.

Moreover, you asked whether, when a question has arisen between laymen and religious men concerning presentation to some church, a settlement is made between them in such a way that the layman obtains the presentation but the religious men receive a new or greater portion in the church in which they had previously been accustomed to have none or a lesser one, a settlement of this kind holds. Therefore, since the agreement itself deservedly appears simoniacal, we answer that it does not hold by law, nor ought the religious men to obtain any advantage from it.

Sicut super iure praesentandi, ita super annexo non potest transigi, ut recedatur a lite interveniente aliqua temporalitate.

Lucius III. Ormensi Episcopo.

Praeterea, quando inter laicos et viros religiosos de praesentatione alicuius ecclesiae quaestione suborta transigitur inter eos ita, quod praesentationem laicus obtineat, religiosi vero novam vel maiorem percipiant in ecclesia, in qua prius nullam vel minorem habere consueverant portionem, an huiusmodi transactio teneat, quaesivisti. Quum igitur ipsa pactio simoniaca merito videatur, respondemus, quod de iure non tenet, nec ex ea religiosi ullum debent commodum obtinere.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: It is not lawful to make a settlement concerning spiritual subjection.

Celestine III.

Moreover, in the fourth place this question arose: a certain cell wished to be exempted from the subjection by which it was bound to the mother house. And when the cause was proceeding in due contest, the brothers of that cell, confessing at law that they had formerly been subject to that house, reported that a question had long ago been moved concerning this subjection and quieted by a settlement—namely, to the extent that, by rendering a certain annual payment to the mother church, the brothers of the aforementioned little cell were entirely exempted from subjection to the principal house.

But, on the other side, the prior of the greater house alleged two things together: first, that, since they had confessed that they had long been subject to that house and had not been exempted before that settlement, it was established that they had been rebels by the very fact that, before the settlement and exception, they contended that they had been withdrawn from its jurisdiction, nor could the subsequent settlement release them from so great a crime of disobedience. The prior also consequently proposed for the greater church that it was not lawful to make a settlement concerning spiritual subjection contrary to the vow of profession. We answer, therefore, that a sentence ought to proceed against them from the aforesaid confession of the brothers of the cell, especially since that settlement—although it could not be clearly established to us concerning what the cell was determinately bound to render—is thought to have contained simoniacal iniquity.

> Super spirituali subiectione non licet transigi.

> Praeterea quarto loco quaestio talis accessit, quod quaedam cella eximi voluit a subiectione, qua matrici domui tenebatur. Quumque causa debito Marte percurreret, fratres illius cellae, se confitentes in iure illi domui quondam fuisse subiectos, referebant quaestionem olim de hac subiectione fuisse motam, et transactione sopitam, videlicet eatenus, ut quendam annuum censum ecclesiae matrici reddendo fratres memoratae cellulae penitus essent a subiectione principalis domus exempti. Ceterum ex adverso prior maioris domus duo pariter allegabat, unum scilicet quod, ex quo confessi fuerant, se dudum illi domui fuisse subiectos, et non ante transactionem illam exemptos, constabat, illos fuisse rebelles eo ipso, quod ante transactionem et exceptionem se contendebant ab eiusdem iurisdictione esse subtractos, nec transactio subsequens eos poterat a tanto crimine inobedientiae relaxare. Alterum quoque Prior consequenter pro maiori ecclesia proponebat, quod de spirituali subiectione contra votum professionis transigere non liceret. Respondemus igitur, quod ex praedicta fratrum de cella confessione contra eos sententia procedere debeat, praesertim quum illa transactio, licet nobis de illo, quod cella determinate reddere tenebatur, clare constare nequiverit, iniquitatem simoniacam continuisse putetur.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A judge can and ought to interpose himself for making a settlement between the parties, except in cases in which the laws do not admit this, as concerning matrimony. This is what it says.

Honorius III, to I., Cardinal-Priest of the Title of Saint Praxedes.

On your part it was proposed before us that certain Greeks furtively received sacred orders from bishops not their own; certain excommunicated persons also celebrate in churches under interdict and, adhering pertinaciously to Greek rites, are willing in no respect to obey Latin prelates. Furthermore, certain Greek and Latin bishops perform consecrations in the bishoprics of others and receive tithes in them to the prejudice and grievance of the bishops of those places, although the bishops of the Greeks had been accustomed neither to receive tithes nor to celebrate consecrations of this kind. In addition, Greek laymen do not fear to put away their wives according to the movement of their own will and bring in others over them, and to work on Sundays and feast days just as on ordinary days.

Moreover, certain barons and knights, both Latin and Greek, detaining contrary to justice abbeys and other churches together with their men and other goods, do not pay tithes and defend in their error others who refuse to pay; and, if a sentence of excommunication is rendered against them for these or other excesses, they hold it cheap, to the peril of their souls and scandal of others. Hence you desire to be taught by us what is to be done by you in all the aforesaid matters and how the Archdeacon of Neoportensis is to be punished, who did not fear in fact to grant to certain persons license to go with merchandise to Alexandria contrary to the statute of the General Council.

We therefore answer your discretion briefly that, since canonical and civil laws have been issued concerning almost all the articles noted above, you are to proceed in these matters, when necessary, according to canonical and lawful sanctions. You will also be able to interpose your part toward composing matters and at times detract something from severity, insofar as, after the condition of the empire and the multitude of transgressors have been weighed with provident deliberation, you see it to be expedient—except, of course, in cases that do not admit the remedy of composition or dispensation, such as the sacrament of marriage. Since it exists not only among Latins and Greeks but also among believers and unbelievers, it will not be lawful to depart from canonical severity concerning it.

But in those matters concerning which no law is found expressed, you are to proceed with equity preserved, always inclining toward the more humane part, especially on account of the still weak condition of the empire, according as you see persons and causes, places and times demand.

> Ex parte tua fuit propositum coram nobis, quod nonnulli Graeci furtive sacros ordines a non suis episcopis receperunt, quidam etiam excommunicati celebrant in ecclesiis interdictis, et Graecis ritibus pertinaciter inhaerentes in nullo volunt obedire praelatis Latinis. Praeterea quidam Graeci et Latini episcopi consecrationes faciunt in episcopatibus alienis, et decimas percipiunt in eisdem in episcoporum eorundem locorum praeiudicium et gravamen, licet episcopi Graecorum nec percipere decimas, nec consecrationes huiusmodi consueverint celebrare. Ad hoc laici Graeci uxores suas secundum motum propriae voluntatis dimittere et alias superducere non verentur, ac operari dominicis et festivis diebus quemadmodum in profestis. Porro quidam barones et milites tam Latini quam Graeci abbatias et ecclesias alias cum hominibus et bonis aliis earundem contra iustitiam detinentes, decimas non exsolvunt, et alios solvere recusantes in suo errore defendunt, et, si pro his aut aliis excessibus feratur excommunicationis sententia in eosdem, eam in animarum suarum periculum et aliorum scandalum vilipendunt. Unde a nobis desideras edoceri, quid tibi agendum sit in omnibus supradictis, et qualiter puniendus sit Neoportensis archidiaconus, qui quibusdam eundi cum mercibus in Alexandriam contra statutum concilii generalis licentiam de facto tribuere non expavit. Nos ergo discretioni tuae breviter respondemus, ut, quum iura canonica et civilia edita sint super omnibus fere articulis praenotatis, procedas in his, quum necesse fuerit, secundum canonicas et legitimas sanctiones. Poteris etiam ad componendum interponere partes tuas, et interdum aliquid severitati detrahere, prout, statu imperii et excedentium multitudine provida deliberatione pensatis, videris expedire: exceptis nimirum casibus, qui compositionis sive dispensationis remedium non admittunt, utpote coniugii sacramentum, quod, quum non solum apud Latinos et Graecos, sed etiam apud fideles et infideles exsistat, a severitate canonica circa illud recedere non licebit. In his vero, super quibus ius non invenitur expressum, procedas, aequitate servata, semper in humaniorem partem maxime propter statum imperii adhuc debilem declinando, secundum quod personas et causas, loca et tempora videris postulare.

Title XXXVII: On Pleading

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric in sacred orders, or one in minor orders who has a benefice, ought not to plead in a secular forum except for himself, his church, or miserable persons.

From the Lateran Council.

Clerics in the subdiaconate and above, [and] also in minor orders if they are sustained by ecclesiastical stipends, are not to presume to become advocates in secular business before a secular judge, unless they are pursuing their own cause or that of their church, or perhaps acting for miserable persons who cannot administer their own causes. [But neither procurations, etc.]

DE POSTULANDO.

Clericus in sacris vel minoribus beneficiatus in saeculari foro postulare non debet, nisi pro se, vel sua ecclesia, vel miserabilibus personis.

Ex concilio Lateranensi.

Clerici in subdiaconatu, et supra, [et] in ordinibus quoque minoribus, si stipendiis ecclesiasticis sustententur, coram saeculari iudice advocati in negotiis saecularibus fieri non praesumant, nisi propriam causam vel ecclesiae suae fuerint prosecuti, aut pro miserabilibus forte personis, quae proprias causas administrare non possunt. [Sed nec procurationes etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Regular canons, like monks, cannot plead except for the utility of the church or their monastery and at the abbot's command.

Innocent III, to the Archbishop of Compostela.

On your part it was proposed before us that certain regular canons, perhaps so that they may be able to demonstrate themselves learned in law and have material for wandering outside the cloister, presume to exercise the office of advocate not only in ecclesiastical but also in forensic causes. And when it is objected against them that, according to canonical sanctions, they ought not to be undertakers or executors even of forensic or ecclesiastical business unless perhaps the utility of the monastery demands it, with the abbot nevertheless commanding, they propose, to excuse their insolence, that the chapter through which the aforesaid things appear to be prohibited manifestly speaks concerning monks, not regular canons. Hence you wished to consult us whether such persons are to be admitted to advocacy. To this we answer your consultation in this manner: we believe that, with respect to the aforesaid matters, the same judgment concerning regular canons as concerning monks is to be observed, although monks are specially expressed in the canon. [Given at Rome at Saint Peter's, on the Ides of March, in the ninth year, 1206.]

Quumque obiicitur eis, quod iuxta canonicas sanctiones non debent esse forensis vel ecclesiastici negotii susceptores vel exsecutores etiam, nisi forte id monasterii exposcat utilitas, abbate nihilominus imperante, ipsi ad suam proponunt insolertiam excusandam, quod capitulum illud, per quod praedicta prohiberi videntur, de monachis, non de canonicis regularibus loquitur manifeste. Unde nos consulere voluisti, utrum tales sint ad patrocinium admittendi. Ad quod consultationi tuae taliter, respondemus, quod idem iudicium de canonicis regularibus, quod et de monachis, quantum ad supradicta credimus observandum, licet de monachis in canone specialiter sit expressum. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. Id. Mart. Ao. IX. 1206.]

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: It summarizes itself.

Gregory IX.

Since it is the office of a priest to harm no one but to wish to benefit everyone, it is lawful for him to plead only for himself, his church, or, if necessity presses, persons connected to him or miserable persons. (And below:) But a cleric who presumes to be advocate or proctor for outsiders against the church from which he obtains a benefice can, as an ungrateful person, especially if he is a cleric of the same church, be despoiled of a benefice of this kind.

Title XXXVIII: On Proctors

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: No one is heard as another's proctor unless he has a mandate lawfully made.

Gregory the Great to Maximus, Bishop of Salona.

We had indeed caused other [writings to be sent to your fraternity before, but at the time when we wished to release your men whom you sent to us.] We have learned that you wrote to certain of our men that you had not then sent the aforesaid men for the case, and therefore that the things done with them ought not to stand; but Thomas also [the defender of your church] stated that this had been said to him orally by you. For this reason we have now judged that not even the bearers of the present letters ought to be trusted, lest the same thing likewise be said concerning them afterward. Therefore, because this has forewarned us that we ought to be more cautious, if you wish to plead the case, send [henceforth] a person instructed in it, with a mandate lawfully made, confirmed by your subscriptions and those of the priests or deacons and witnesses, and with the proceedings recorded according to custom, so that whatever has been transacted with him may stand in law. Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A sentence, even one condemning a person in costs, pronounced against an absentee lawfully excused through a messenger for a probable cause, is invalid. This states the rule according to its true meaning.

Alexander III.

We have received the complaint of the cleric A. that, although our venerable brother the Bishop of Worcester had undertaken, by our mandate, to terminate with the due conclusion the case which is pending between him and the Bishop of Salisbury concerning the church of Bribec., nevertheless, because that cleric could not present himself to him on the appointed date, inasmuch as he was detained by illness—as he was prepared to prove through a certain priest and deacon whom he had sent into the presence of that bishop—the bishop condemned the same A. to restore the expenses which R., Archdeacon of Lisieux, had incurred by coming then for that case on that date. We therefore command and enjoin upon your discretion that, if the aforesaid bishop has not absolved the same A. from the aforesaid sentence in accordance with our mandate, you, after inquiring more diligently into the truth of the matter, if it is established to you that the Bishop of Worcester condemned the aforesaid A. to restore the expenses for no other reasonable cause than merely because, while detained by illness, he did not come into his presence on the appointed date—since no one can be compelled, unless he wishes, to appoint a proctor in serious cases, and since he sent a priest and a deacon to prove his illness—are not to delay in absolving him from the same sentence by our authority, the remedy of appeal being removed.

Lexoviensis archidiaconus pro ipsa causa ad diem ipsum tunc veniendo fecerat, condemnavit. Mandamus itaque discretioni vestrae atque praecipimus, quatenus, si praefatus episcopus eundem A. iuxta mandatum nostrum a praescripta sententia non absolverit, vos, rei veritate diligentius inquisita, si vobis constiterit, quod Vigorensis episcopus praefatum A. in restitutione expensarum pro nulla alia rationabili causa condemnaverit, nisi pro eo tantum, quod in termino constituto ad eius praesentiam non accessit infirmitate detentus, quum non possit quis cogi, nisi velit, in gravibus causis procuratorem constituere, et quum ipse ad probandum infirmitatem suam presbyterum et diaconum destinaverit, auctoritate nostra sublato appellationis remedio eum absolvere ab eadem sententia minime differatis.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A sentence pronounced with a proctor who has been revoked and informed of this does not prejudice the principal. This states the rule according to the common understanding.

Clement III.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's quadum and quibusdum have been corrected to quadam and quibusdam.

We have received from the representation of our beloved son I., Archdeacon of Séez, that, when a controversy had arisen between him and Master G. de Sang. concerning a certain prebend of the church of Lisieux which is called de Pomeria, G. of Tortona, presenting himself as a proctor of that archdeacon appointed for that case, opposed the same master, who had come to the Apostolic See on this account, with certain letters of ratification, as he said. But when some progress had been made in cognizance of the case, although the aforesaid G. had been expressly forbidden by that same archdeacon, his principal, in the presence and with the assistance of two clerics, to undertake cognizance of the case and to use his letters in court for undertaking the trial, he nevertheless proceeded in that case and, as is said, received an adverse sentence. But because one of the aforesaid clerics is said to have died, [we nevertheless,] considering that the same G. ought not to have proceeded, contrary to the prohibition of the archdeacon himself, to undertake the trial of his case, command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if, as the account stated, the foregoing is established by the oath of the archdeacon himself and of the surviving cleric—namely, that the same archdeacon expressly forbade the said proctor to undertake the determination of that controversy or in any way to use his letters of ratification in court for undertaking the trial—you, notwithstanding the sentence pronounced against him, are to cause possession of the aforesaid prebend, together with the fruits received from it, by whomsoever it may be detained, to be restored by our authority to that archdeacon, provided that no other canonical obstacle stands against his restitution, the obstacle of contradiction and appeal being removed. Once restitution has been made, if the archdeacon himself can prove his canonical institution, you are to decree, as shall be just, that it remain ratified and inviolate, appeal being set aside.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A rescript obtained concerning subsequent judicial proceedings by a proctor who has been revoked and informed of this is invalid, as is a proceeding or sentence issued through him, if the revocation reached the opponent. This states the rule according to the gloss.

Innocent III to the Bishops of Chalon and Catalaun.

Our venerable brother the Bishop of Toul, appearing in our presence, has tearfully complained that, when formerly, in order to conduct the case pending between himself and the dean of Toul of good memory concerning dilapidation, excommunication, perjury, and certain other crimes, he appointed the priests T. and G. as proctors and arranged for them to be sent to the Apostolic See, after he subsequently began to waver concerning their fidelity, he revoked within a short space of time the mandate which he had given them. But they, although they had received the letters revoking the mandate, nevertheless proceeded in the business and, presenting themselves as proctors, entered into litigation with [his] adversary, namely Geoffrey, Archdeacon of Toul; thereafter, together with him, they obtained our letters to our beloved son G., Archdeacon of Paris, and his colleagues, to the prejudice of that bishop.

Although their citation had not been presented to that bishop, nevertheless, when it had come to his knowledge that the case pending between them and the said dean and archdeacon had been committed to them, he hastened into their presence. And when the aforesaid bishop, after much insistence, had obtained a copy of our rescript and was carefully examining its tenor with prudent men, greatly wondering that the above-mentioned priests had obtained letters of this kind as proctors, and requested an adjournment from those judges in order to prove that they were false proctors, they, regarding the exception interposed as useless and superfluous, refused to grant him a delay for proving it. For this reason that bishop had recourse to the benefit of appeal and withdrew from the presence of those judges while appealing. But they, paying no deference to the appeal, presumed to proceed in that business and also, although issue had not been joined and the order of law had been passed over, to receive witnesses against that bishop, [and,] removing him from the church of Toul by sentence, [contrary to the form of our mandate, granted the chapter of Toul free power to elect a pontiff for itself. But when the said bishop and P. the archdeacon had recently come into our presence on this account and had litigated before us for some time concerning the proceedings of those judges, that bishop produced thirteen witnesses—certain abbots and monks of the Black and White Orders and certain secular clerics. When they had been diligently examined, it appeared clearly from their depositions that, when the above-mentioned bishop requested an adjournment to prove the aforesaid exception, the aforementioned judges denied it to him, and that, although that bishop appealed to the Apostolic See on this account, they nevertheless proceeded in the business after the appeal had been interposed to us.]

We, however, although we could scarcely give credence to the assertion that the often-mentioned judges, being learned, provident, and honourable men, had proceeded in the manner stated—especially since, in the report which they transmitted into our presence, they made no mention of an exception of this kind having been interposed—nevertheless, because the bishop gave us full proof concerning the things alleged through religious, provident, and honourable men, of whom it is not likely that, forgetful of their salvation and in contempt of the sanctity of their oath, they bore false witness; considering also that the exception of a false proctor may be raised not only before sentence but even afterward, in accordance with canonical and lawful enactments, since, when it has been proved, the trial is regarded as null and the controversy as of no moment, we have judged that the proceeding of the aforesaid judges must be annulled by sentence, with the counsel of our brothers, [restoring the business to that state, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the Kalends of February, in the ninth year, 1207.]

Latin source headnote: If proceedings for adultery are brought before a secular judge for the legal penalty, a proctor does not intervene; it is otherwise if they are brought before an ecclesiastical judge for separation.

The same to the Bishop of Brescia.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's ecclestiastico has been corrected to ecclesiastico.

Of your fraternity (And below: [cf. c. 10, On Him Who Has Known His Consanguineous Wife, IV.13.]) We respond to your consultation in this way: if a husband accuses his wife of the crime of adultery before a secular judge so that the lawful penalty may be inflicted, because he must then undertake the bond of formal inscription and bind himself to the penalty of retaliation, he must accuse her in person, being personally present, and not through a proctor. But if a husband wishes to accuse his wife of adultery before an ecclesiastical judge so that he may withdraw from cohabitation with her, because then, even if perhaps he must make a formal inscription in order to designate in writing the name, place, and time and all the things comprised in the civil law, he nevertheless ought not in any way to bind himself to retaliation—lest perhaps, even when he has failed in proof, he attain the effect of his intention—it can be permitted, if necessity shall demand it, that he accuse through a proctor, since an accusation of this kind, even though it is made concerning a crime, is nevertheless not criminal but is, as it were, mixed between civil and criminal, although proceedings are conducted more securely in the presence of the principal persons. [You asked, etc. (cf. c. 25, On Betrothals, IV.1). Given at Rome, etc., 1206.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: One who has conducted a case by mandate of the principal recovers from him the expenses incurred on that account.

The same.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's minoris vel sanioris partis has been corrected from Friedberg's maioris vel sanioris partis ("the greater or sounder part").

When the proctors of both parties had come into our presence for the case pending between our beloved sons G. and F., archdeacons of the church of Chalon, [we granted them our beloved son G., Cardinal Deacon of Saint Adrian, as auditor. Before him the proctor of the Archdeacon F. alleged that, when he formerly came to the Apostolic See on account of various burdens which his adversaries were inflicting upon the church of Chalon, he obtained letters to our beloved sons the Abbot of Saint Martin, the cantor of Autun, and the Archdeacon of Flavigny, that they should compel the said Archdeacon G. by canonical coercion to cease from molesting the church of Chalon and the men of a certain obedience belonging to it, which is called Potestas Boiaci, and should compel him to render due satisfaction to that church for the injuries inflicted. And when the judges wished to proceed in the case according to the apostolic mandate, the adverse party appealed to the Apostolic See in order to evade the trial. He added also] that he had obtained letters of confirmation from Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, concerning certain statutes of [that] church established with the common assent of the chapter, through the nonobservance of which the church [itself] was being defrauded of its due service. [Although that predecessor of ours had, at the request of that archdeacon, commanded our venerable brother the Bishop of Autun to cause them to be observed, he nevertheless sent his letters to the chapter of Chalon only once concerning their observance and proceeded no further in the matter.] That proctor therefore sought, on behalf of the aforesaid archdeacon, that the [former] case be committed, that the aforesaid statutes be confirmed, and that those things which he had been compelled to expend for the utility of that church be restored to him.

[But the proctor of the other party answered to the contrary that, when the said Archdeacon F., etc. (cf. c. 27, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V.39). But he, coming to the Apostolic See, confessed that he had laid violent hands upon a cleric; suppressing, however, the fact that he had violated the immunity of a church, he obtained letters concerning his absolution. Nevertheless he remained under excommunication, since he had kept silent about one of the causes for which he had been excommunicated. Hence he said that he could neither stand in court nor appoint a proctor, especially since the man to whom he had entrusted the conduct of his case was held bound by the same sentence for a similar offence. He also alleged that the things which he had obtained from the Apostolic See while placed under excommunication lacked force. Although, for this reason, the said Archdeacon G. was not bound to answer him unless he had first obtained the benefit of absolution, nevertheless he had presented himself before the said judges and had shown through the letters of our venerable brother the bishop and our beloved son the dean of that church that neither he had any dispute against that church nor the church against him, and that the letters which his adversary had obtained from the Apostolic See had not been obtained with the will of the chapter. Therefore, when the next day assigned to them arrived, and the parties were asked whether, despite the chapter's opposition, the said Archdeacon F. should be admitted on behalf of the church of Chalon against the same Archdeacon G., G. himself appealed to the Apostolic See because of his suspicion of the judges. But to the allegations concerning observance of the customs of the church, he answered that, when the aforesaid bishop had commanded the said dean and chapter to observe the aforesaid customs, they answered that they would observe them more willingly were the poverty of the church not an impediment, adding that they should report the condition of the church of Chalon to the Apostolic See by their letters. From these matters he therefore concluded both that the expenses incurred by the said Archdeacon F. ought not to be restored to him, since he had come to the Apostolic See rather in order to be released from the bond of excommunication, and that he ought not to be heard concerning confirmation of the customs of the church, since he could not show letters of procuration, but rather the proctor himself had been appointed by the chapter. For this reason he urgently sought that the governance of the church be committed to the said bishop and dean in such a way that whatever they should establish with the greater and sounder part of the chapter, both concerning the institution of canons and concerning other matters pertaining to the governance of that church, should be inviolably observed notwithstanding the contradiction of a few, and notwithstanding the letters sent to the said Bishop of Autun concerning observance of the aforesaid customs. He sought also that the said Archdeacon F. be declared excommunicated, since he had neither satisfied the person injured nor made any mention of the violation of the immunity of the church. But on behalf of the aforesaid Archdeacon F. it was answered to the objections in this way: although he had been accused concerning the violent laying-on of hands, only entry into the church had been forbidden him; but afterward, coming to the Apostolic See, he had been absolved without any contradiction.]

We therefore, committing that case to your examination, command your discretion by apostolic writings that [if to you, etc. (cf. c. 27, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V.39).] As [for] the aforesaid statutes, if you find that they were made without any depravity with the assent of the greater or sounder part of the chapter, and the means of the church permit it, you are to cause them to be inviolably observed. [In other matters you are to commit the governance of the church by apostolic authority to the aforesaid bishop and dean, so that whatever they, together with the greater part of the chapter, canonically judge ought to be established, both concerning the institution of canons and concerning other matters, shall have firm effect notwithstanding the contradiction or appeal of a few.] But you are to cause the expenses to be restored to the aforesaid archdeacon if he can lawfully prove that he undertook the advancement of the aforesaid business by mandate of the chapter and came to the Apostolic See on that account. [Let no one by letters, etc. Given, etc., 1198.]

[Licet autem idem praedecessor noster venerabili fratri nostro Eduensi episcopo ad eiusdem archidiaconi postulationem mandasset, ut eas faceret observari, ipse tamen semel solummodo Cabilonensi capitulo pro his servandis suas literas destinavit, nec super hoc ultra processit.] Petebat itaque procurator ipse pro archidiacono memorato [priorem] causam committi, confirmari constitutiones praedictas, et ea sibi restitui, quae ad utilitatem eiusdem ecclesiae coactus fuerat expendisse. [Ceterum procurator partis alterius ex adverso respondit, quod, quum dictus F. archidiaconus etc. (cf. c. 27. de sent. exc. V. 39.) Ipse vero ad apostolicam sedem accedens, confessus est, quod in clericum manus iniecerat violentas; supprimens autem, quod immunitatem violasset ecclesiae, super absolutione sua literas impetravit; sed nihilominus in excommunicatione remansit, quum alteram causarum, pro quibus excommunicatus fuerat, tacuisset. Unde ipsum nec in iure stare posse dicebat, nec procuratorem constituere; praesertim quum is, cui causae suae procurationem commiserat, ob excessum similem eadem innodatus sententia teneretur. Ea etiam carere viribus allegabat, quae in excommunicatione positus a sede apostolica impetrarat. Licet autem per hoc dictus G. archidiaconus ei non teneretur, nisi obtento prius absolutionis beneficio, respondere, nihilominus tamen se dictorum iudicum conspectui praesentarat, et per literas venerabilis fratris episcopi et dilecti filii decani ipsius ecclesiae ostenderat, quod nec ipse adversus eandem ecclesiam, nec ecclesia adversus eum haberet aliquam quaestionem, et literae, quas adversarius eius obtinuerat ab apostolica sede, impetratae non fuerant de capituli voluntate. Accedente igitur die altera, quae ipsis fuerat assignata, quum super eo quaereretur a partibus, utrum renitente capitulo dictus F. archidiaconus esset pro Cabilonensi ecclesia contra eundem G. archidiaconum admittendus, ipse G. propter suspicionem iudicum ad sedem apostolicam appellavit. Ad ea vero, quae super servandis consuetudinibus ecclesiae proposita fuerant, sic respondit, quod, quum memoratus episcopus dictis decano et capitulo mandavisset memoratas consuetudines observari, responderunt, se ipsas libentius servaturos, nisi paupertas ecclesiae impediret, adiicientes, ut statum Cabilonensis ecclesiae per suas literas sedi apostolicae nunciarent. Ex his igitur concludebat, nec expensas, quas dictus F. archidiaconus fecerat, ipsi debere restitui, quum potius, ut ab excommunicationis vinculo solveretur, ad sedem apostolicam assessisset, nec eum esse super confirmandis ecclesiae consuetudinibus audiendum, cuius non poterat literas procurationis ostendere, immo ipse procurator esset a capitulo institutus. Propter quod cum instantia postulabat ordinationem ecclesiae dictis episcopo et decano committi ita, quod quicquid de maiori et saniori parte capituli tam super instituendis canonicis quam super aliis ad ordinationem eiusdem ecclesiae pertinentibus constituerent, non obstante contradictione paucorum, inviolabiliter servaretur, nec obstantibus literis super servandis praedictis consuetudinibus ad dictum Eduensem episcopum destinatis. Petebat etiam dictum F. archidiaconum excommunicatum denunciari, quum nec satisfecisset passo iniuriam, et de violatione immunitatis ecclesiae non fecisset aliquam mentionem. Ex parte vero praedicti F. archidiaconi taliter fuit ad obiecta responsum, quod licet super violenta manuum iniectione accusatus fuisset, ei fuit ecclesiae solummodo introitus interdictus; sed postmodum ad apostolicam sedem accedens sine contradictione qualibet fuerat absolutus.] Nos igitur causam ipsam vestro examini committentes Discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, [si vobis etc. (cf. c. 27. de sent. exc. V. 39.)] Praedictas [vero] constitutiones, si eas de assensu capituli maioris vel sanioris partis sine pravitate qualibet inveneritis esse factas, et possibilitas ecclesiae patitur, faciatis inviolabiliter observari. [In aliis ordinationem ecclesiae praedictis episcopo et decano auctoritate apostolica committatis ita, ut quae cum maiori parte capituli tam super canonicis instituendis quam super aliis canonice duxerint statuenda, non obstante contradictione vel appellatione paucorum, obtineat firmitatem] expensas vero ante dicto archidiacono restitui faciatis, si legitime probare potuerit, se de mandato capituli suscepisse praedicta negotia promovenda, et propter hoc ad sedem apostolicam accessisse. [Nullus literis etc. Datum etc. 1198.]

Latin source headnote: A university of scholars also can appoint a proctor to sue and defend.

The same to the Scholars of Paris.

Because in cases brought against you and on your behalf your university sometimes cannot conveniently be present to sue and answer, you have petitioned us that, with our permission, you might be allowed to appoint a proctor for this. Therefore, although by the common law you are able to do this, nevertheless, by authority of the present letters, we grant you the power of appointing a proctor in these matters.

Universitas etiam scholarium potest ad agendum et defendendum procuratorem constituere.

Idem Scholaribus Parisiensibus.

Quia in causis, quae contra vos et pro vobis moventur, interdum vestra universitas ad agendum et respondendum commode interesse non potest, postulastis a nobis, ut procuratorem instituere super hoc vobis de nostra permissione liceret. Licet igitur de iure communi hoc facere valeatis, instituendi tamen procuratorem super his auctoritate praesentium vobis concedimus facultatem.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: If one cited for the whole case appoints a proctor whom he afterward revokes, proceedings may nevertheless be taken against him, insofar as the state of the case permits, without another citation. This states the rule as to its meaning.

Honorius III to the Bishop of Idanha.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's proccessibus and limitatone have been corrected to Friedberg's processibus and limitatione.

After the things alleged before us by the proctors of the parties concerning the proceedings of John, canon of Coimbra, Bartholomew, canon of Idanha, and the Dean of Ciudad Rodrigo and their co-judges, our delegates, in the case pending between you and our venerable brother the Bishop of Coimbra concerning the boundary of the dioceses and other matters, had been heard and understood, you should know that, with the assent of our brothers, we adjudged those proceedings and whatever followed from them or because of them void, notwithstanding the letters which the aforesaid Bishop of Coimbra sent concerning revocation of the mandate of his proctor, since before letters of this kind reached him the matter had been concluded on both sides concerning those proceedings. But we judged that the aforesaid Bishop of Coimbra—who had caused the entire business to be called up for examination by the Apostolic See and afterward, not without contempt of us and loss to you, revoked the mandate given to his proctor—was to be condemned to you for the expenses which you incurred from the time when the revocatory letters reached his proctor and which you will also incur until the day on which that bishop presents himself before us, either in person or through a suitable proctor, to proceed lawfully in the principal business and in matters connected with it. Therefore, lest there be any doubt concerning these matters, we have judged that these letters should be granted.

Ceterum memoratum Colubriensem episcopum, qui procuraverat totum negotium ad examen sedis apostolicae advocari, et postmodum mandatum factum procuratori non sine nostro contemptu et tuo dispendio revocavit, condemnandum tibi duximus in expensis, quas fecisti a tempore, quo ad procuratorem ipsius revocatoriae literae pervenerunt, et facies etiam usque ad diem, quo per se idem episcopus vel per procuratorem idoneum se nostro conspectui praesentabit, in principali negotio et contingentibus ipsum legitime processurus. Ne igitur super his possit aliquatenus dubitari has literas duximus concedendas.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A bishop's proctor sues and defends the causes of the bishopric, although he was not appointed under the name of syndic or agent.

The same to M. and R., Canons of Modena.

Your petition presented to us contained that, when our venerable brother the Bishop of Modena, being about to depart for Livonia, appointed you as his general vicars and proctors, whenever you wish to sue the detainers of the goods of the bishop of Modena or to answer those suing against him, it is frequently objected that you cannot do this because it is not expressed in the instrument of the vicariate or procuration of this kind that the bishop himself appointed you as syndics or agents. You therefore humbly petitioned that, since the utility of the aforesaid bishopric is frequently impeded through exceptions of this kind, we would deign to make salutary provision in this matter. We therefore, knowing clearly from the tenor of that instrument that the intention of the bishop himself was to give you free power to sue and answer on behalf of the bishop himself, wholly reject an exception of this kind.

Quare humiliter postulastis, ut, quum per exceptiones huiusmodi frequenter impediatur utilitas episcopii supradicti, super hoc providere salubriter dignaremur. Nos igitur ex tenore ipsius instrumenti liquido cognoscentes, quod intentio fuerit ipsius episcopi dare vobis agendi et respondendi pro ipso episcopo liberam potestatem, exceptionem huiusmodi penitus reprobamus.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A judge ought to ensure, especially in a matrimonial case, that one appointing a proctor enjoys full liberty.

Gregory IX to the nobleman Ubaldo, a citizen of Pisa.

Coming to the Apostolic See (And below:) We command that you restore the noblewoman D., who is held under your power, to full liberty, causing her to be conducted safely to the castle of Massa in the diocese of Lucca, so that, being free there, she may freely appoint a proctor who may pursue her justice before us. You, therefore, are to send into our presence a suitable proctor concerning the betrothal which is alleged to have been contracted between your daughter and the son of that noblewoman, who is to have full power to sue and answer.

Tu ergo super sponsalibus, quae inter natam tuam et filium eiusdem nobilis contracta proponuntur, procuratorem idoneum ad praesentiam nostram mittas, qui ad agendum et respondendum plenam habeat potestatem.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: If a general proctor is denied an adjournment for consulting his principal, who is absent for a probable cause, the proctor can appeal.

The same to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Our beloved son Master L., rector of the church of Auna, showed in a petition transmitted to us that, when the priest R. obtained our letters to judges against him concerning that same church while he was staying at Bologna for the purpose of study, and the same rector had been cited by authority of those letters by the judges themselves, his general proctor for transacting all his business appealed to our hearing on his behalf because they refused to grant him a suitable period within which he might consult the rector himself as to whether he ought to contest or yield the claim. Therefore we command that, if it is so, after revoking as void, etc.

Quocirca mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, revocato in irritum, etc.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: If a defendant withdraws from court, leaving a proctor only for suing, he is contumacious and is condemned in costs.

The same to the Bishop of Lisieux.

When H., Prior of Séez, and the layman T. had appeared in our presence, we granted them our beloved son O., our subdeacon, as auditor concerning the case pending between them over a certain sum of money. (And below:) Because the prior, after receiving the libel concerning the money in which the said T. said that he was bound to him in his wife's name, withdrew without leave, leaving a certain proctor merely to sue, and because the auditor himself did not see that person to be sufficient under the procuratorial mandate given to him to defend the prior, regarding the prior as contumacious on this account, after making a prior assessment he condemned him to the aforesaid T. in one mark sterling for expenses. (And below:) But we, desiring to put an end to the litigation and approving what is known to have been done by the aforesaid auditor, command that, when the parties have been summoned, etc.

(Et infra:) Nos autem finem litibus imponere cupientes, et quod ab auditore praefato factum esse dignoscitur approbantes, mandamus, quatenus partibus convocatis, etc.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A judicial proceeding conducted with a revoked proctor stands if the judge and the adversary were ignorant of the revocation. This states the rule according to the common and true understanding.

The same.

When the mandate of a proctor has been revoked by the principal after joinder of issue, if this was done without the knowledge of the judge or the adversary, the judicial proceeding which that person afterward conducted as though he were proctor ought to be ratified.

Tenet iudicium agitatum cum procuratore revocato, si revocationem iudex et adversarius ignoraverunt. H. d. secundum communem intellectum et verum.

Idem.

Mandato procuratoris post litem contestatam a domino revocato, si hoc ignorante iudice vel adversario factum fuerit, iudicium, quod idem quasi procurator postmodum expertus est, ratum esse debebit.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A son under paternal power can be a proctor in court, even for future litigation; and a proctor appointed jointly with several others, each for the whole, is preferred if he has first taken charge of the business; it is otherwise if he was appointed at a different time. Likewise, a proctor ought to appeal from a sentence unless he is excused by a cause; in that case he ought to notify the principal of the sentence, but he is not bound to prosecute the appeal.

The same.

The judge did not proceed unjustly when he admitted as proctor a son under paternal power, although appointed for future controversies, who, although appointed at the same time as others, nevertheless first undertook the office of procuration. This could not have occurred in the case of proctors appointed at different times, since upon the appointment of the later one, the procuration of the former would have been revoked. He also could and ought to have appealed to our hearing from the sentence insofar as it was pronounced against him, or, if a just cause excused him, at least to have notified the principal so that he might have recourse to the benefit of appeal, although the proctor was not bound to prosecute the appeal against his will.

Filius familias potest esse procurator in iudicio, etiam ad futuras lites; et procurator datus cum pluribus simul in solidum praefertur, si praeoccupavit negotium; secus, si diverso tempore fuit datus. Item procurator appellare debet a sententia, nisi ex causa excusetur; quo casu debet domino nunciare de sententia; appellationem tamen prosequi non tenetur.

Idem.

> Non iniuste iudex processit, qui filiumfamilias in procuratorem admisit, quamvis ad futuras controversias constitutum, qui, licet simul cum aliis datus fuerit, prius tamen procurationis officium occupavit. Quod fieri nequivisset in procuratoribus diversis temporibus constitutis, quoniam dato posteriori prioris esset procuratio revocata. Potuit quoque is et debuit a sententia in eo, quod lata exstitit contra ipsum, nostram audientiam appellare, vel, si iusta causa excusabat eundem, saltem domino contestari, ut ad appellationis beneficium convolaret, licet appellationem prosequi non teneretur invitus.

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: The proctor of a community whose magistrates and sworn officers are excommunicated is not excluded from obtaining a rescript, unless they are named in the instrument of procuration, or it was made by their authority, or they were knowingly admitted to it. This states the rule and is a noteworthy and subtle decision.

The same.

We were consulted whether a proctor appointed by some community to obtain a rescript ought to be excluded from obtaining it on the ground that the magistrates and sworn officers through whom that community was governed were bound by a sentence of excommunication at the time when the office of procuration was enjoined. We answer in this way: unless those persons were named in the letters of procuration, or the appointment of the proctor was otherwise made by their authority, or the community, knowing them to be such, appointed that proctor together with them, a proctor of this kind is not to be excluded.

> Procurator universitatis, cuius maiores et iurati sunt excommunicati, non repellitur ab impetrando; nisi illi in procuratorio sint expressi, vel eorum auctoritate factum sit, vel ad id scienter sint admissi. H. d. et est decisio notabilis et subtilis.
> Idem.

> Consulti sumus an constitutus ad impetrandum a communitate aliqua procurator ab impetrando deberet excludi pro eo, quod maiores et iurati, per quos eadem communitas regebatur, tempore, quo iniunctum fuit procurationis officium, erant excommunicationis sententia innodati. Taliter respondemus, quod, nisi essent illi in literis procurationis expressi, vel alias eorum auctoritate procuratoris institutio facta fuisset, aut sciens, eos esse tales, ipsa communitas una cum eis constituisset eundem, non est procurator huiusmodi repellendus.

Title XXXIX: On the Syndic

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Religious ought to have a syndic who sues and defends the monastery's cases, even, if necessary, with a salary fixed for him.

Pope Gregory to the Subdeacon, Defender of Sicily.

Just as it ought to belong to our solicitude to remove monks from forensic litigation [so that they may attend piously and diligently to the divine ministries], so it is necessary for us to order by our provision how their business ought to be arranged, [lest the mind, distracted by the cares of various cases, waste away and, enervated, grow sluggish in celebrating its accustomed work. John, the abbot who bears the present letters, asserts that he has very many affairs of his monastery.] For this reason we command you that you ought to speak with Faustus, [who had been chancellor of the magnificent Roman, the former praetor,] and, if he is willing, upon the fixing of a salary you ought to entrust to him generally the affairs of that monastery. For it is expedient that the servants of God should, at a small cost, be free from the tumult of lawsuits.

DE SYNDICO.

Religiosi debent habere syndicum, qui causas monasterii agat, et defendat, etiam, si oportuerit, constituto illi salario.

Gregorius Papa Subdiacono Defensori Siciliae.

Sicut studii nostri esse debet a litigiis forensibus monachos submovere, [ut divinis ministeriis pie ac sollerter invigilent:] ita necesse est nostra provisione, quemadmodum negotia eorum disponi debeant, ordinare, [ne distenta mens per varias causarum curas defluat, et ad celebrandum opus consuetum enervata torpescat. Praesentium itaque lator abbas Ioannes plurima se monasterii sui asserit habere negotia.] Pro qua re tibi praecipimus, quatenus cum Fausto, [qui Romani viri magnifici ex praetore cancellarius fuerat,] loqui debeas, cui, si voluerit, constituto salario, monasterii ipsius generaliter debeas negotia commendare. Expedit enim pro parvo incommodo a strepitu causarum servos Dei esse quietos.

Title XL: On Things Done by Force or Because of Fear

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If anyone professes religious life through fear of death and afterward does not ratify it, she can leave and contract marriage; it is otherwise if she had freely consented either at the beginning or afterward.

Alexander III to the Bishop of Huesca and the Prior of Saint Mary of Zaragoza.

It has been brought to our hearing that, when a certain noble and powerful man named Atorelia held his wife M. in suspicion, his knights, taking her to a certain wood at his command, wished to kill her with a drawn sword; but at last, moved by pity, they spared her upon this condition, that she should assume the monastic habit in the monastery of Colobris. When her husband heard this, because her life had been spared, he bore it very ill, but nevertheless afterward acquiesced. And thus it happened that he brought two bishops, those of Zaragoza and Tarazona, to that monastery so that they might bless her and impose the veil upon her. But the bishops, ignorant of the affair, having been sent by the husband to impose the veil upon her, and regarding the change in her life as suspicious because she was young and had a little son, met with her separately. She disclosed the affair to them in order, stating that she was entering the monastery from fear of death and not with a good intention, and added nevertheless that she would leave it whenever she could. But the bishops, then fearing for her death and unwilling to disclose what they had heard from her, one of the bishops—namely, that of Tarazona—in order that he might appear to satisfy the tyranny of that husband, pretended to impose the veil upon the woman. At last, however, when the husband had been removed from their midst, the aforesaid woman, leaving the monastery, took another husband. At the insistence of the sisters, the Bishop of Calahorra bound them with the bond of excommunication and placed all his land under interdict, being wholly ignorant of how the matter had proceeded; our venerable brother the Archbishop of Tarragona afterward confirmed that sentence.

We therefore, trusting in your prudence and probity, have judged that this case should be committed to your experience and terminated with a due conclusion. Accordingly, by apostolic writings we command your discretion, by way of precept, that you absolve the aforesaid woman and man from the bond of excommunication, after receiving an oath that they ought to abide by your mandate; then, summoning both the woman and the prioress and nuns of the aforesaid monastery before you, you are to hear the case most diligently and terminate it with a canonical conclusion. But if it is lawfully proved that the aforesaid woman did not enter religious life through fear of death, or that she afterward ratified what she had done, you are to compel her by ecclesiastical censure to return to the monastery and resume the habit which she laid aside. [Given at Benevento.]

Quo audito maritus eius, quia reservata erat ad vitam, grave plurimum tulit, sed tamen postmodum acquievit. Sicque factum est, quod duos episcopos Caesaraugustanum et Turiasonensem, ut eam benedicerent et illi velum imponerent, ad monasterium ipsum adduxit. Episcopi vero rem ignorantes, missi a viro, ut ei velum imponerent, et, quia iuvenis erat, et filium parvulum habebat, mutationem vitae suae suspectam habentes, seorsum convenerunt eandem, quae utique ipsis rem per ordinem patefaciens, quod mortis timore et non bono animo monasterium intrabat, proposuit, et quod inde, quandocunque posset, exiret, nihilominus adiecit. Sed tunc episcopis de morte ipsius timentibus, et, quod ab ea audierant propalare nolentibus, alter episcoporum Turiasonensis scilicet, ut viri illius tyrannidi satisfacere videretur, mulieri velum imponere simulavit, tandem autem viro de medio sublato, praedicta mulier de monasterio exiens, alium maritum accepit, quos Calaguritanensis episcopus ad instantiam sororum vinculo excommunicationis adstrinxit, et totam terram eius interdixit, ignorans penitus, quomodo res processisset, quam utique sententiam venerabilis frater noster Tarraconensis archiepiscopus postmodum confirmavit. Nos igitur de prudentia et honestate vestra confidentes, causam ipsam experientiae vestrae duximus committendam, et fine debito terminandam. Ideoque discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus praedictam mulierem et virum, recepto sacramento, quod vestro debeant stare mandato, ab excommunicationis vinculo absolvatis; deinde tam mulierem, quam priorissam et moniales praescripti monasterii ante vestram praesentiam convocantes, causam diligentissime audiatis, et fine canonico terminetis. Quod si legitime probatum fuerit, non timore mortis praedictam mulierem religionem intrasse, aut quod fecit postmodum ratum habuisse, ipsam ad monasterium redire, et habitum depositum reassumere censura ecclesiastica compellatis. [Dat. Beneventi].

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: One who renounces his benefice through fear of losing his patrimony can reclaim it.

The same to the Bishop of Worcester.

The Abbot of Saint Edmund, from whom R., the bearer of the present letters, is known to hold his patrimony, sent his knights and burgesses to his house, as we have received, so that they should expel him from his house and all his possession unless he utterly abjured his church. When the same R., compelled in this way, had done so, the abbot granted the aforesaid church to another. Therefore, because things done through fear and force ought by law to be revoked as void, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you restore all things with their integrity to the aforesaid R., [if it is established to be so].

Quod quum idem R. tali modo coactus fecisset, abbas alii concessit supradictam ecclesiam. Unde, quia quae metu et vi fiunt de iure debent in irritum revocari, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praedicto R., [si ita constiterit], cum integritate restituas universa.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: One who, from terror of laymen, renounces an election made of himself can be placed over the governance to which he had been elected, if the renunciation was not confirmed by oath or pledged faith.

Clement III.

It has reached our ears, as you have reported, that a certain man elected as pleban of a certain church which pertains to your disposition renounced, from terror of the laymen, the election which had been unanimously celebrated concerning him by the clerics, with one exception; but the one who dissented emitted a declaration of appeal to the Apostolic See before the election. You therefore wished to consult whether a renunciation made from terror of laymen prevents the person who had previously been elected from being assumed to the governance of the aforesaid church, and whether the appeal of the one who swore that he would not elect and appealed lest others elect has force. Let it therefore become known to your discretion through the present letters that a renunciation made from terror of laymen, unless perhaps it was confirmed by an oath or by pledged faith, does not prevent the one who renounced the church from being placed over that same church to whose governance he had previously been elected. Nor, because of the contradiction or appeal of one who publicly confessed that he swore he would not elect, is the election canonically celebrated by the others to be annulled. [Concerning this, etc. (cf. c. 12, On Election, I.6).]

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: One who, through fear which could have befallen a steadfast man, swore to renounce his benefice and renounced it can reclaim it.

Innocent III to the Dean and Subdeacon of Lincoln.

It has reached our hearing, as our beloved son the Master of Chevell. has reported, that, when he had canonically obtained the church of Chevell. by authority of the Apostolic See and had possessed it peacefully for some time, at last, compelled by the gravest fear of the king to swear that he would resign it, he resigned it into the hands of those to whom this pertained. But because things done by reason of force or fear ought to lack the strength of firmness, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, if it is established to you that the same master was compelled to make the resignation by such fear as could and ought to befall a steadfast man, notwithstanding the aforesaid oath, by which he was bound only to resign and not to refrain from reclaiming, you are to cause the aforesaid church to be restored to him by ecclesiastical censure, the obstacle of any appeal being removed. [Let no letters, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of February, 1200.]

Qui per metum, qui cadere potuit in constantem virum, beneficio suo renunciare iuravit, et renunciavit, illud repetere poterit.

Innocentius III. Decano et Subdiacono Linconensibus.

Ad audientiam nostram dilecto filio magistro de Chevell. significante pervenit, quod, quum ecclesiam de Chevell. auctoritate sedis apostolicae canonice fuisset adeptus, et aliquamdiu pacifice possedisset, gravissimo tandem metu regis, quod eam resignaret iurare coactus, eam in eorum, ad quos pertinebat, manibus resignavit. Quia vero quae vi metusve causa fiunt carere debent robore firmitatis, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, si eundem magistrum ad resignationem faciendam constiterit vobis per talem metum fuisse coactum, qui potuerit et debuerit cadere in virum constantem, non obstante iuramento praedicto, quo non ad repetendum, sed ad resignandum solummodo tenebatur, praefatam ecclesiam ei per censuram ecclesiasticam sublato cuiuslibet appellationis obstaculo restitui faciatis. [Nullis literis etc. Dat. Lat. Non. Febr. 1200.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A person absolutely compelled to communicate with an excommunicated person is not excommunicated; it is otherwise if the compulsion was conditional.

The same to the Archbishop of Vidron.

By the sacred canons (And below:) We distinguish whether one who communicates with excommunicated persons against his will is constrained by compulsion or induced by fear. In the first case, indeed, we do not believe such a person to be held by excommunication, since he is proved to suffer rather than to act. But in the second case, although fear diminishes the fault, nevertheless, because it does not wholly exclude it—since no one ought to incur mortal sin for any fear—we believe such a person to be stained with the taint of excommunication. [Although, etc. (cf. c. 38, On the Sentence of Excommunication, V.39).]

> Excommunicatus non est qui absolute coactus excommunicato communicat; secus si coactio fuit conditionalis.
>
> Idem Vidronensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Sacris est canonibus (Et infra:) Distinguimus autem utrum is, qui communicat excommunicatis invitus, sit per coactionem adstrictus aut per metum inductus. In primo siquidem casu talem non credimus excommunicatione teneri, quum magis pati, quam agere convincatur. In secundo vero licet metus attenuet culpam, quia tamen non eam prorsus excludit, quum pro nullo metu debeat quis mortale peccatum incurrere, talem excommunicationis labe credimus inquinari. [Licet autem etc. (cf. c. 38. de sent. exc. V. 39.)]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: Relief is not given to one who suffered fear if it was not such as could have befallen a steadfast man.

The same to the Bishops of Marseille and Agde.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's cum venerabili fratri has been corrected to the grammatically required cum venerabili fratre.

When our beloved son [the Abbot of Floreia had recently come into our presence, he carefully explained to us—and the letters of the Abbot of the Islands and certain others contained the same thing—that Cistercian brothers had once dwelt in the Islands of Hyères; but, after they had been led into captivity by pagans, since the place was near the sea, certain canons regular transferred themselves there. Although they had now worn the habit of canons regular for thirty years, they nevertheless performed works contrary to regular life; but, returning to themselves by the Lord's inspiration, they wished the monastic order to be planted there according to the institutions of the Cistercians. The diocesan bishop also desired this. Hence, at the insistence of that abbot, we gave a mandate to our venerable brother the Archbishop of Arles that, if the desires of the diocesan bishop and those brothers agreed upon this same thing, he should establish Cistercian monks on the aforesaid island, doing concerning the canons what he believed expedient according to canonical propriety.

Having obtained these letters, therefore, that Abbot of Floreia, returning to his own region, before delivering them to the said archbishop, went with our venerable brother the Bishop of Toulon to the aforesaid place, and they obtained the assent and favour of all the brothers dwelling there to such a degree that the Abbot of the Islands delivered the keys of the house and himself into the hands of the other abbot, making profession, together with certain of the canons, that the Cistercian order would thereafter be observed. Certain of the canons also confirmed this in the hands of that Abbot of Floreia by an oath given, giving him a kiss that they would remain in that order to the end; others promised by sworn security that they would not thereafter, by themselves or by others, act against what had been done; the rest swore that, concerning provision for them, they would abide by the decision of the aforesaid bishop and of the nobleman G. de Fossa, the sacristan, who was absent, his assent having been proved by witnesses. He later confessed this upon returning.

Thereafter that bishop and the Abbot of Floreia informed the said Archbishop of Arles by their letters that the diocesan bishop and the aforesaid canons unanimously desired the transfer of Cistercian brothers there. Accepting this, the aforesaid archbishop confirmed what they had done by the apostolic authority which he exercised, committing his functions to them in this matter so that, in his place, they might bring to completion what they had well begun concerning establishment of the Cistercian order there. Obeying his mandates humbly and devoutly, they took care to bring the things enjoined upon them to completion, giving a mandate to the general chapter of the Cistercians that it should take care to establish its order in the aforesaid place. It was therefore sought on behalf of the already-mentioned Abbot of Floreia that the transfer made be held ratified by us and confirmed by authority of the Apostolic See, and also that all transgressors and opponents who, contrary to the vows and oaths given, were striving to impede what had been done by those persons be struck with a canonical penalty.

But F. the sacristan, P. Warardi, and P. Guil. represented the course of the business differently before our venerable brother P., Bishop of Porto, whom we gave as auditor to them and to the other party. For when the case had been delegated by us to the aforesaid Archbishop of Arles under the form which we have set forth above, the aforesaid abbot, coming to the place with the Bishop of Toulon before presenting our letters to the archbishop—who, according to their tenor, ought to have inquired diligently into each particular—on his own initiative occupied the island with an accompanying multitude, steadfastly affirming that the same place had been assigned to him by us purely and simply, whether they wished it or not. And when they felt themselves aggrieved in these matters, with their abbot denying them all aid—who was said to have conceived hatred and ingratitude against certain of the canons (whence, to their loss, he did not fear to place armed men upon the fortification, the ladder being removed from it lest the canons have the means to ascend)—they appealed to the Apostolic See.

But the said abbots, nevertheless not desisting from the violence begun, when they could not corrupt certain of them by a promise of money, wished to compel them by violence to abide by the mandates of the Bishop of Toulon in these matters. And when they could not obtain even the adjournment of fifteen days which certain of them had requested for full deliberation, they were compelled to swear that they would obey the mandate of the said bishop and of G. de Fossa, a layman who had threatened them with a fall from a steep rock, concerning the aforesaid questions. Others promised into the abbot's hand, reserving a year's probation for themselves, that they would observe the Cistercian rule. But certain others neither swore nor wished to make any promise.

Thus, with the truth of these things concealed, the aforesaid bishop and Abbot of Floreia suggested to the said archbishop that the diocesan bishop and all the canons of the place agreed unanimously concerning the establishment of the Cistercians, and his confirmation was obtained in this way. But when, after a few days had elapsed, the aforesaid canons informed the archbishop of all that had been done, sympathizing with them, he revoked what had been done to their prejudice, restoring them to all the things which they had at the time when the letters were obtained; although afterward, passing over the order of law, he sequestered their possession, striking all opponents with the sword of excommunication. And when, with the canons pressing for restitution, he had heard the confessions and attestations of both parties, he judged that the business itself should be remitted to us.

Therefore, when the parties had appeared at the Apostolic See, the often-mentioned despoiled canons accused the Abbot of Floreia in many ways. First, because he had endeavoured to obtain letters from us by suppression of the truth and assertion of falsehood. For it had been suppressed in them that the church of the Islands of Hyères belonged to the Roman Church alone, as its privileges—the transcripts of which the aforesaid archbishop sent to us—clearly indicate. The suggestion of falsehood is perceived from the fact that all the canons, together with the diocesan bishop, desired the transfer of the order, although their opposition clearly proved the matter to be otherwise. Nor was the often-mentioned Bishop of Toulon their diocesan, since they belonged immediately to the Roman Church; hence his assent in this matter was to be regarded as altogether nothing. Second, because through force and fraud he both seduced and compelled them, so that some of them emitted a vow and others gave oaths.]

We therefore, having more fully understood the arguments and allegations of the parties through the already-mentioned Bishop of Porto, who presented them to us in writing, because it was established to us concerning the vow emitted and the oath given by the canons of the Islands that they would observe the rule of the Cistercians or that they would in no way impede the transfer of that church to their order, and since observance of either does not tend toward loss of eternal salvation, unwilling to open a way to perjuries, notwithstanding the violence which was alleged to have been inflicted—since it involved neither fear of death nor torment of the body, and therefore ought not to have befallen steadfast persons—and notwithstanding the fraud by which they alleged that they had been seduced—since such fraud ought to be imputed not so much to circumvention by the aforesaid Cistercians as to their own foolishness—we have judged, with the counsel of our brothers, that silence must by sentence be imposed upon them concerning the restitution sought. [But because, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the fourth day before the Ides of June, 1199.]

> Metum passo non subvenitur, si non fuit talis, qui cadere potuit in constantem virum.
>
> Idem Marsiliensi et Agathensi Episcopis.
> Quum dilectus filius [abbas de Floreia nuper ad nostram praesentiam accessisset, nobis exposuit diligenter, et hoc ipsum abbatis Insularum et aliorum quorundam literae continebant, quod in insulis Arearum fratres Cistercienses quondum fuerant commorati; sed eis in captivitatem paganorum deductis, quoniam locus mari erat vicinus, illuc se quidam regulares canonici transtulerunt, qui, licet iam per annos triginta canonicorum regularium habitum portavissent, opera tamen contraria regularibus faciebant; sed ad se Domino inspirante reversi, monasticum ordinem ibidem plantari volebant secundum Cisterciensium instituta. Quod etiam dioecesanus episcopus affectabat. Unde nos ad abbatis ipsius instantiam venerabili fratri nostro Arelatensi archiepiscopo dedimus in mandatis, ut, si dioecesani episcopi et eorundem fratrum in id ipsum desideria convenirent, Cistercienses monachos institueret in insula memorata, facturus de canonicis quod crederet expedire secundum canonicam honestatem. His igitur literis impetratis, idem abbas de Floreia reversus ad propria, prius, quam eas ad dictum archiepiscopum detulisset, cum venerabili fratre nostro Tolonensi episcopo ad locum memoratum accessit, et omnium fratrum ibidem manentium in tantum obtinuerunt assensum pariter et favorem, quod abbas insularum claves domus et se ipsum in manibus alterius abbatis tradidit, professione facta cum quibusdam ex canonicis de Cisterciensi ordine in posterum observando. Quod et quidam canonicorum in manibus eiusdem abbatis de Floreia sacramento praestito firmaverunt, osculo dato eidem, quod usque in finem in eodem ordine permanerent; aliis promittentibus per iuratoriam cautionem, quod per se vel alios contra factum istud de cetero non venirent; iurantibus reliquis quod super provisione sua starent arbitrio episcopi memorati, et nobilis viri G. de Fossa Sacristae, qui aberat, assensu probato per testes. Quod postmodum rediens est confessus. Consequenter vero idem episcopus et abbas de Floreia dicto archiepiscopo Arelatensi per suas literas intimarunt, quod dioecesanus episcopus et canonici memorati translationem Cisterciensium fratrum illuc fieri unanimiter appetebant, quod acceptans archiepiscopus memoratus, factum eorum auctoritate, qua fungebatur, apostolica confirmavit, vices suas eis in hac parte committens, ut quae bene inceperant de instituendo ibi ordine Cisterciensi, vice ipsius perducerent ad effectum. Cuius mandatis parentes humiliter et devote, quae ipsis iniuncta fuerant curaverunt ducere ad effectum, dantes generali Cisterciensi capitulo in mandatis, ut in praedicto loco suum ordinem instituere procurarent. Petebatur itaque pro iam dicto abbate de Floreia translationem factam ratam a nobis haberi, et auctoritate sedis apostolicae confirmari, transgressores etiam et contradictores omnes, qui contra vota et iuramenta praestita nitebantur quod ab iis factum fuerat impedire, canonica poena percelli. Ceterum F. Sacrista, P. Warardi, et P. Guil. coram venerabili fratre nostro P. Portuensi episcopo, quem ipsis et parti alteri dedimus auditorem, processum negotii aliter proponebant. Quum enim praedicto Arelatensi archiepiscopo causa fuerit a nobis sub forma, quam praemisimus, delegata, praefatus, abbas accedens ad locum cum episcopo Tolonensi prius, quam literas nostras archiepiscopo praesentasset, qui iuxta tenorem ipsarum de singulis debebat inquirere diligenter, motu proprio cum socia multitudine insulam occupavit, constanter affirmans, quod eis volentibus vel nolentibus locus idem pure ac simpliciter a nobis sibi fuerat assignatus. Quumque se in his gravari sentirent, abbate ipsorum eis omne auxilium denegante, qui contra quosdam de canonicis odium dicebatur et ingratitudinem concepisse, (unde in ipsorum dispendium super munitione armatos ponere non expavit, amota inde scala, ne facultas esset canonicis ascendendi) sedem apostolicam appellarunt. Sed dicti abbates nihilo minus ab incepta violentia desistentes, quum quosdam ex ipsis non possent corrumpere pecuniae sponsione, quod super his starent mandatis episcopi Tolonensis, per violentiam cogere voluerunt. Quum autem nec quindecim dierum possent inducias obtinere, quas quidam ex ipsis ad deliberandum plenarie postularant, iurare compulsi fuerunt mandato dicti episcopi et G. de Fossa laici, qui eis arduae rupis praecipitium fuerat comminatus, se super praemissis quaestionibus parituros. Alii promiserunt in manu abbatis, probatione sibi annua reservata, quod regulam Cisterciensem observarent. Aliqui vero nec iuraverunt, nec promissionem aliquam facere voluerunt. Horum ergo tacita veritate, nominati episcopus et abbas de Floreia dicto archiepiscopo suggesserunt, quod dioecesanus episcopus et omnes loci canonici super institutione Cisterciensium unanimiter concordabant, et ita fuit eius confirmatio impetrata. Sed quum paucis diebus elapsis praefati canonici archiepiscopo cuncta, quae gesta fuerant, intimassent, ipse quod in praeiudicium eorum factum fuerat, ipsis compatiens, revocavit, restituens eos ad omnia, quae habuerant tempore illo, quo literae fuerant impetratae; licet postmodum possessionem eorum praetermisso iuris ordine sequestrarit, contradictores omnes excommunicationis gladio percellendo. Et quum, canonicis ad restitutionem instantibus, confessiones et attestationes utriusque partis audisset, ad nos duxit ipsum negotium remittendum. Partibus itaque apud sedem apostolicam constitutis, canonici spoliati saepedicti abbatem de Floreia multipliciter arguebant. Primo, quod literas a nobis per veritatis suppressionem et expressionem falsitatis studuerat impetrare. Suppressum enim fuerat in illis, quod ecclesia de insulis Arearum ad Romanam ecclesiam solummodo pertineret; sicut ipsius privilegia, quorum ad nos transscripta praefatus archiepiscopus destinavit, indicant evidenter. Falsitatis vero suggestio inde perpenditur, quod omnes canonici translationem ordinis cum dioecesano episcopo pariter affectabant, quod aliter esse ipsorum contradictio liquido arguebat. Sed neque saepe dictus Tolonensis episcopus dioecesanus erat ipsorum, qui nullo mediante ad Romanam ecclesiam pertinebant; unde ipsius consensus in hac parte pro nullo erat penitus reputandus. Secundo, quod per vim et dolum eos seduxit pariter et coegit, ut quidam eorum votum emitterent, alii iuramenta praestarent.] Nos ergo rationibus et allegationibus partium per iam dictum episcopum Portuensem, qui eas in scriptis nobis exhibuit, plenius intellectis, Quia constitit nobis de voto emisso, et de praestito iuramento a canonicis Insularum, quod regulam Cisterciensium observarent, vel quod translationem ipsius ecclesiae ad ordinem illorum nullatenus impedirent, quum utrumque servatum non vergat in dispendium salutis aeternae, nolentes viam periuriis aperire, non obstante violentia, quae proponebatur illata, quum neque metum mortis, neque cruciatum corporis contineret, et ideo non debuerat cadere in constantes, nec obstante dolo, quo se proponebant fuisse seductos quum talis dolus non tam ad circumventionem praedictorum Cisterciensium, quam ad fatuitatem eorum debeat retorqueri, super restitutione petita silentium eis de consilio fratrum nostrorum duximus sententialiter imponendum. [Verum quoniam etc. Dat. Lat. IV. Id. Iun. 1199.]

Latin source headnote: When violence has been proved through witnesses, the things lost are proved by oath. And, after the judge has first assessed the value of the things lost and the claimant's oath has followed, condemnation is made.

Gregory IX.

Concerning the fact that your adversary complained that he had been despoiled by you through violence, you judge that proceedings were taken unjustly against you, since he proved the individual things which he lost only by his own oath. But after the violence was established through witnesses, and the things lost through his oath, the judge, after making an assessment according to the quality of the persons and the business, could reasonably condemn you in the valuation of the things lost as declared by the adversary's oath.

Probata violentia per testes res amissae probantur per iuramentum. Et super valore rerum amissarum taxatione iudicis praemissa, et secuto petentis iuramento fit condemnatio.

Gregorius IX.

Super eo, quod adversarius vester se conquerebatur a vobis per violentiam spoliatum, arbitramini, contra vos fuisse iniuste processum, quum non nisi proprio iuramento probaverit singula, quae amisit. Verum, postquam de violentia per testes, et de amissis rebus per ipsius constitit sacramentum, potuit iudex, taxatione ab ipso facta, pro personarum ac negotii qualitate vos in aestimatione rerum amissarum iuramento adversarii declarata rationabiliter condemnare.

Title XLI: On Restitution to the Former Condition

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If a church was enormously injured in a contract of sale or lease, it can seek restitution to the former condition against such a contract; the buyer or tenant, however, ought not to be defrauded of his price or of expenses incurred by him.

Alexander III to the Bishop of Alfano.

Your fraternity has asked us what ought to be done concerning possessions granted to laymen for a small rent. You should therefore know that, if the church has been injured and its loss is manifestly apparent, since it is not lawful for the bishop to make the condition of that church worse, and the church, by the law of a minor, ought always to be preserved unharmed, whatever is established to have been granted to its detriment ought to revert to its right and ownership. Provision must nevertheless be made that, if perhaps the tenants have improved those possessions by their expense and labour, they ought not to be defrauded of the expenses which they incurred in good faith.

> DE IN INTEGRUM RESTITUTIONE.
>
> Si in contractu venditionis vel locationis ecclesia fuit enormiter laesa, potest adversus talem contractum petere restitutionem in integrum; emptor tamen sive conductor non debet fraudari in pretio suo, vel in sumptibus per eum factis.
>
> Alexander III. Alphanensi Episcopo.
>
> Requisivit a nobis tua fraternitas, quid agendum sit de possessionibus laicis sub modico censu concessis? Noveris itaque, quod, si ecclesia laesa est, et manifeste apparet detrimentum ipsius, quum episcopo eiusdem ecclesiae conditionem facere deteriorem non liceat, et ecclesia iure minoris debeat semper illaesa servari, quae in damnum eius data constiterit ad ipsius convenit ius proprietatemque redire. Providendum est tamen, ne, si forte coloni possessiones illas expensis ac labore suo reddiderint meliores, sumptibus, quos bona fide fecerunt, debeant defraudari.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A church injured through the negligence of a proctor who did not produce the church's rights is restored.

Innocent III to the Abbots of Saint George and Saint Sergius.

When our beloved sons the elect and monks of Redon came to the Apostolic See for themselves and their monastery, and our beloved son Master A. came for our venerable brother the Bishop of Vannes, we gave them our beloved son G., Cardinal Deacon of Saint George at the Golden Veil, as auditor. Before him that master alleged on behalf of the bishop that, since the monastery of Redon was situated in the diocese of Vannes and subject to the church of Vannes, the aforesaid bishop had hitherto enjoyed undisturbed possession of the subjection. But when, on the occasion of a certain election which had been held there, the parties by common assent obtained letters of commission concerning these and many other matters to our venerable brother the Bishop of Nantes and his colleagues, our beloved sons the Abbots of Mallen. and Granont, two of them, after granting adjournments at the monks' insistence, at last came to the monastery. The intruder, foreseeing their arrival, renounced the election of this kind and absented himself from the monastery.

But the judges, by apostolic authority, enjoined upon the monks that they elect a syndic or proctor who would both act advisedly and answer effectively in the monastery's cases, strictly forbidding them to elect anyone as abbot until fuller cognizance had been taken of the right which the bishop said that he had in the election of the abbot. Yet the monks, although they had elected a proctor at the judges' mandate, nevertheless, being excommunicated, presumed, contrary to their prohibition, to elect an abbot in a monastery under interdict. The bishop sought the invalidation of his election and his own restitution to the possession of which the monks had despoiled him. Then the judges, after hearing and more fully understanding everything which the parties wished to allege, after the multiple delays granted to the parties for producing both witnesses and instruments, with the witnesses received and the attestations published, pronounced a definitive sentence for that bishop concerning the aforesaid articles, quashing that election by reliance upon apostolic authority. The said master urgently sought that this sentence be confirmed by us.

To this it was answered to the contrary, among other things, that the said bishop and the Abbot of Malegio, while the Abbot of Gnanter was absent—who had been chosen by them as judge, though he had neither announced the causes of his absence nor mandated that the others proceed in the case without him—although it had been alleged by the proctor on behalf of the monks that the monastery itself belonged immediately to the Roman Church and was tributary to the Apostolic See, nevertheless began to proceed too vehemently against them. (And below:) We therefore, having heard through that cardinal the things alleged on both sides before him, and having inspected the privileges of our predecessors Leo, Gregory, and Clement, which indicate that monastery to pertain to the right and ownership of the Apostolic See, and understanding that, although the monastery's proctor negligently omitted to exhibit those privileges before the aforesaid judges, he nevertheless protested not so much his own right as ours—namely, that the monastery itself belonged immediately to the Roman Church—lest his negligence redound to the loss both of us and of the monastery, we restored the monks of Redon to a hearing. (And below:) But we have judged that the election said to have been made concordantly by the monks while the controversy upon which it depends was pending should neither be confirmed nor invalidated.

> Restituitur ecclesia laesa propter negligentiam procuratoris, qui iura ecclesiae non produxit.
>
> Innocentius III. sancti Georgii et sancti Sergii Abbatibus.
> Quum venissent ad apostolicam sedem dilecti filii electus et monachi Rothonenses pro se ac pro monasterio suo, ac dilectus filius magister A. pro venerabili fratre nostro episcopo Venetensi, eis dilectum filium nostrum G. sancti Georgii ad Velum aureum diaconum cardinalem dedimus auditorem. Coram quo idem magister pro episcopi parte proposuit, quod, quum monasterium Rothonense esset situm in dioecesi Venetensi et ecclesiae Venetensi subiectum, praedictus episcopus possessione subiectionis usus est hactenus inconcusse. Sed quum occasione cuiusdam electionis, quae ibidem facta fuerat, partes de communi assensu ad venerabilem fratrem nostrum Natensem episcopum et eius collegas dilectos filios de Mallen. et de Granont abbates super his et multis aliis commissionis literas impetrassent, duo eorum, assignatis induciis ad instantiam monachorum, tandem ad monasterium accesserunt, quorum adventum intrusus praesentiens, renunciavit huiusmodi electioni, et se a monasterio absentavit. Sed iudices auctoritate apostolica monachis iniunxerunt, ut syndicum vel procuratorem eligerent, qui in causis monasterii et consulte ageret, et utiliter responderet, districtius inhibentes eisdem, ne aliquem eligerent in abbatem, donec plenius cognosceretur de iure, quod episcopus se habere in abbatis electione dicebat. Monachi vero; etsi procuratorem ad mandatum iudicum elegissent, abbatem tamen in monasterio interdicto excommunicati nihilominus contra inhibitionem eorum eligere praesumpserunt, cuius electionem episcopus petiit infirmari, et se ad possessionem restitui, qua eum monachi spoliarant. Deinde vero iudices, auditis quaecunque partes proponere voluerunt et plenius intellectis, post dilationes multiplices tam ad testes quam ad instrumenta partibus producenda concessas, receptis testibus et attestationibus publicatis, pro eodem episcopo super praemissis articulis diffinitivam sententiam protulerunt, electionem apostolica freti auctoritate cassantes eandem, quam sententiam dictus magister a nobis cum instantia petiit confirmari. Ad hoc fuit inter alia ex adverso responsum, quod dictus episcopus et abbas de Malegio, absente abbate de Gnanter, qui in iudicem fuerat ab ipsis electus, quum nec absentiae suae causas, vel quod alii in causa sine eo procederent, mandavisset, licet per procuratorem ex parte monachorum fuisset propositum, quod monasterium ipsum ad Romanam ecclesiam nullo medio pertineret, et esset sedi apostolicae censuale, dicti tamen iudices contra eos procedere nimis animose coeperunt. (Et infra:) Nos igitur auditis per cardinalem eundem, quae fuerant hinc inde proposita coram eo, et inspectis privilegiis praedecessorum nostrorum Leonis, Gregorii et Clementis, quae monasterium illud ad ius et proprietatem indicant sedis apostolicae pertinere, intelligentes, quod monasterii procurator, etsi eadem privilegia coram praedictis iudicibus exhibere omiserit negligenter, ius tamen non tam suum, quam nostrum fuerit protestatus, videlicet, quod monasterium ipsum ad Romanam ecclesiam nullo medio pertineret, ne ipsius negligentia in damnum tam nostrum, quam monasterii redundaret, ad audientiam restituimus monachos Rothonenses. (Et infra:) Electionem autem a monachis, sicut dicitur, concorditer factam, pendente controversia, ex qua pendet, nec confirmandam duximus, nec etiam infirmandam.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A church injured by omission of necessary proof can seek restitution to the former condition, notwithstanding the legal term precluding proof. And it can seek restitution not only against a private person but also against a church. This states the rule.

The same to the Bishops of Ely and Florence.

Having heard and understood the merits of the case in the question pending between our venerable brother the Bishop of Worcester and our beloved son the Abbot of Evesham concerning the churches situated in the vale of Evesham, which the bishop asserted to pertain to him by diocesan law, while the abbot asserted them to be wholly exempt from his jurisdiction, we clearly recognized that those churches were not withdrawn from episcopal jurisdiction by the privileges of the Roman Pontiffs, unless perhaps the vale of Evesham is that place which was endowed with liberty by two kings, namely Roe and Offa, and which Pope Celestine of good memory endowed with liberty, as is contained in his privileges. But they are proved by witnesses to have been possessed with full right by the abbots of Evesham for so long a time that the episcopal right seems to have been lawfully prescribed in them, unless perhaps the church of Worcester was vacant in the meantime for so great a space of time that, with the period of vacancy subtracted, the prescription was by no means completed. (And below:) Although, however, the case has been concluded on both sides, nevertheless, because each party omitted proof which it asserts to be necessary, we, considering that each church enjoys the law of a minor, after weighing equity, have restored each against the other for proving the omitted ground, lest either party be injured by serious loss because of negligence of this kind.

Ecclesia laesa in probatione necessaria omissa potest petere restitutionem in integrum, non obstante termino iuris probationis exclusivo. Et restitutionem petere potest, non solum contra privatum, sed etiam contra ecclesiam. H. d.

Latin source headnote: Restitution is to be granted for a just cause even to one of full age, provided that a just cause for seeking it is proved; but if it is not proved fully or half-fully, restitution is granted in a favourable cause. This states the rule.

The same to the Prior of Saint Mary at the Prisons and L., Canon of Saint Mary of Mandria.

We learned from the letters of our beloved son the Abbot of Calven. that, when our beloved sons the archpriests Ramisane and Grimol., by our delegation, had pronounced a sentence of separation between the man I. and the woman L., and, upon an appeal being interposed, we judged that cognizance of the sentence should be committed to that abbot and the Archpriest of Padua, the obstacle of any appeal being removed, that archpriest, who could not be present for executing these matters, committed his functions to his co-judge. And when the abbot had assigned a peremptory term to the parties, because the woman's party did not come at the peremptory term, the abbot himself, to whom the other co-judge had committed his functions, after diligently inspecting the allegations of the husband, confirmed the sentence pronounced by the aforesaid judges.

But after eight days, the girl's father, coming to him and learning that he had pronounced the sentence, affirmed by his own oath that a certain man, coming to him and his daughter, fraudulently presented them with false letters in that abbot's name. By these he was instructed that, because the judge could not come on the day which he had assigned, he should present himself before him eight days after the appointed term; and afterward he appealed to the Apostolic See and also supplicated. Although the fraud perpetrated in this manner is not fully established through an oath of this kind, nevertheless, in favour of marriage, from canonical benignity we have admitted the woman's supplication against the alleged fraud and restored her, as one petitioning on behalf of the marriage, to a hearing. We therefore command your discretion by apostolic writings that, taking cognizance of the cause of the former appeal according to judicial order, you are to confirm or invalidate, as shall be just, the sentence promulgated by the first judges, appeal being removed, causing what you decree to be observed by ecclesiastical censure.

Quumque abbas partibus peremptorium terminum assignasset, quia pars mulieris ad peremptorium terminum non accesserat, abbas ipse, cui alter coniudex commiserat vices suas, allegationibus viri diligenter inspectis latam a iudicibus praedictis confirmavit sententiam. Licet autem de fraude taliter perpetrata per huiusmodi iuramentum non constet ad plenum, in favorem tamen matrimonii de benignitate canonica contra fraudem propositam supplicationem mulieris admisimus, et ad audientiam restituimus eam pro matrimonio postulantem. Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A church is restored even against a sentence of the Pope. This is the first point. And the cause of restitution to the former condition ought to be tried with the parties present. This is the second point. It states these two things as regards the title.

The same to the Bishop and Chapter of Huesca.

Both from the letters of Pope Celestine of good memory, our predecessor, and from the things which in his time were transacted at the Apostolic See in your presence, brother bishop, and that of our venerable brother the Bishop of Lleida, we have understood the grave complaint of the church of Lleida, which complained both formerly and even now that it had been enormously injured by a sentence pronounced concerning certain churches by Pope Eugenius of happy memory, our predecessor. Hence, when that same Celestine, our predecessor, during the time of Pope Anastasius of pious memory, our predecessor and the immediate successor of Eugenius, while still placed in a lesser office, exercised the office of legation in the regions of Spain, he began, by delegation from Anastasius, to take cognizance of the aforesaid controversy. Alexander, the successor of Anastasius, also committed that same case to him when he again exercised the office of legation in those same regions; and he would also have terminated it with a due conclusion had an appeal not been made from him on behalf of the church of Huesca. Celestine himself frequently attested to all these things both in his letters and orally before us and our brothers.

That same Celestine, when promoted to the summit of the supreme pontificate, also committed the said controversy to our beloved son G., Cardinal Deacon of Saint Angelo, then legate of the Apostolic See, under this tenor: that, after diligently inspecting the privileges of the church of Lleida and hearing the arguments and allegations of the parties, notwithstanding the aforesaid sentence or any rescripts obtained at any time from the Apostolic See or from anyone else, whether on occasion of that sentence or in another manner, to the prejudice of the right of the church of Lleida, with all contradiction and appeal ceasing and removed both concerning the principal question and concerning an incidental one, he should pronounce definitive sentence and, committing it to execution without any difficulty, cause it to be firmly observed by ecclesiastical censure.

But because the apostolic mandate in this matter was not fulfilled by that legate or by others to whom the same case was committed under the same tenor, although the witnesses produced on behalf of the Bishop of Lleida were received, our beloved son Master A., canon of Lleida, coming into our presence, repeated the foregoing complaint in the name of the church of Lleida, urgently entreating and petitioning that through our office the already-mentioned sentence be reformed for the better and the church of Lleida be restored against it.

We therefore deliberated diligently upon that supplication with our brothers and other prudent men learned in both laws, namely canon and civil law. Some firmly asserted that, since the aforesaid C., our predecessor, appeared to have granted the benefit of restitution to the church of Lleida against the already-mentioned sentence, when, notwithstanding that sentence, he judged that the business should be committed, we also ought to admit the supplication of that church, especially because canon and civil laws agreed together in this. For by the canonical statutes it is not denied that a sentence of the Roman See can be changed for the better when either something has been obtained surreptitiously or it has decreed, by way of dispensation, to order something in consideration of ages and times or grave necessities; and according to the civil laws, princes also have permitted restitution to the former condition to be examined in their audience even against matters twice adjudged.

We perceived also, from the date of the sentence found in the register of the already-mentioned Pope Eugenius, our predecessor, that that sentence was promulgated in the first month of his pontificate, when he seemed not yet to have been fully instructed concerning the merits of that case, relying chiefly on this reason: that the privilege of Urban II produced on your behalf had been subjected to falsification. Yet, by examining its tenor closely in his register, we found it whole and altogether uncorrupted.

But although we wish the rights of the church of Lleida to be preserved unharmed, nevertheless, because we also wish to sustain your church in its justice, at last our deliberation settled upon this: whether restitution against the foregoing sentence was given or ought to be given is to be determined with the parties present, by whose assertions the merits of the causes are disclosed, in accordance with lawful enactments, so that, when we have omitted nothing among the contingent matters, neither party may have anything which it can rightly impute to us.

Therefore we command your discretion by apostolic writings that, by the feast of Blessed Luke next to come, you are to present yourselves before us either in your own persons or through a sufficient and suitable representative, to show, if you can, that the aforesaid sentence ought not to be reconsidered; or, if perhaps justice requires that it be reconsidered, you are to appear, either by yourselves or through a suitable representative, sufficiently instructed so that proceedings may be taken canonically in the principal business. You are to know for certain that, since we desire to put an end to lawsuits and, because of the great distance of the places, recourse cannot often be had to us in the foregoing question without great labours and expenses, if by the aforesaid term, which we assign to you as peremptory, you contemptuously fail to fulfil the things enjoined upon you, we shall nevertheless proceed in that business insofar as we shall be able by law.

But we wonder not a little and are disturbed that you, brother bishop, are said to have obtained confirmation of that sentence and revocation, as though surreptitiously obtained, of all the things which our often-mentioned predecessor C. did for the church of Lleida, since we can scarcely suspect concerning him that he suddenly acted contrary to his writings and assertions—which he frequently presented orally before us and our other brothers—unless he was circumvented.

Tum ex literis bonae memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri, tum ex iis, quae ipsius temporibus in tua praesentia frater episcope et venerabilis fratris nostri Ilerdensis episcopi apud apostolicam sedem gesta fuerunt, gravem Ilerdensis ecclesiae intelleximus quaestionem per sententiam felicis recordationis Eugenii Papae praedecessoris nostri super ecclesiis quibusdam prolatam, se laesam enormiter et olim et nunc etiam conquerentis. Unde quum idem Coelestinus praedecessor noster tempore piae recordationis Anastasii Papae praedecessoris nostri proximi successoris eiusdem Eugenii in minori adhuc officio constitutus in partibus Hispaniae legationis officio fungeretur, et ex delegatione ipsius cognoscere coepit de controversia memorata, cui etiam Alexander successor ipsius Anastasii, officio legationis denuo in partibus eisdem fungenti, causam commisit eandem, quam etiam fine debito terminasset, nisi ab eo fuisset ex parte Oscensis ecclesiae provocatum; quae quidem omnia in suis literis ipse et viva voce coram nobis et fratribus nostris est saepius protestatus; idem quoque Coelestinus, ad apicem summi Pontificatus promotus, dilecto filio nostro G. sancti Angeli diacono cardinali tunc apostolicae sedis legato dictam controversiam sub eo tenore commisit, ut, inspectis diligenter Ilerdensis ecclesiae privilegiis, auditis etiam partium rationibus et allegationibus, memorata sententia non obstante, vel quibuscunque rescriptis, tam occasione illius sententiae, quam alio modo in praeiudicium iuris Ilerdensis ecclesiae quondam a sede apostolica vel a quocunque impetratis, omni contradictione et appellatione cessantibus, tam super principali quam super incidenti quaestione remotis, diffinitivam proferret sententiam, eamque sine difficultate qualibet exsecutioni mandando faceret per censuram ecclesiasticam firmiter observari. Verum quoniam per ipsum legatum, aut per alios, quibus sub eodem tenore causa eadem commissa exstitit, licet testes producti ex parte Ilerdensis episcopi recepti fuerint, mandatum tamen apostolicum in hac parte non exstitit adimpletum, dilectus filius magister A. canonicus Ilerdensis ad praesentiam nostram accedens, praemissam querelam nomine Ilerdensis ecclesiae replicavit, obnixe deposcens postulavit per officium nostrum iam dictam sententiam in melius reformari, et contra eam restitui ecclesiam Ilerdensem. Nos igitur cum fratribus nostris et aliis viris prudentibus et in utroque iure peritis, canonico videlicet et civili, super ipsa supplicatione deliberavimus diligenter, nonnullis firmiter asserentibus, quod, quum praedictus C. praedecessor noster contra iam dictam sententiam visus fuerit Ilerdensi ecclesiae restitutionis beneficium indulsisse, quum, ea non obstante duxerit negotium committendum, et nos supplicationem eiusdem ecclesiae admittere debebamus, praesertim quia in hoc canonica et civilia iura pariter concordarent. Nam et per statuta canonica sententia Romanae sedis non negatur posse in melius commutari, quum aut surreptum aliquid fuerit, aut ipsa pro consideratione aetatum et temporum seu gravium necessitatum dispensative quicquam ordinare decrevit, et secundum iura civilia principes etiam contra res bis iudicatas in auditorio suo examinari restitutionem in integrum permiserunt. Perspeximus quoque ex data sententiae in registro iam dicti Eugenii Papae praedecessoris nostri repertae, quod sententia illa primo mense sui pontificatus fuerit promulgata, quando non plene de meritis ipsius causae fuisse videbatur instructus, illa nitens praecipue ratione, quod privilegium Urbani secundi ex parte vestra productum subiectum fuerat falsitati, cuius tenorem nos in registro ipsius subtiliter intuendo integrum invenimus et penitus incorruptum. Ceterum licet iura Ilerdensis ecclesiae illaesa servare velimus, quia tamen et ecclesiam vestram in sua volumus iustitia confovere: Tandem deliberatio nostra in hoc resedit ut, an data sit restitutio, an danda contra praemissam sententiam, partibus praesentibus decernatur, quarum assertione merita causarum panduntur, iuxta legitimas sanctiones, ut, quum nihil de contingentibus omiserimus, neutra partium habeat quod nobis merito valeat imputare. Quocirca discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus usque ad festum B. Lucae proximo venturum vel in propriis personis, vel per sufficientem et idoneum responsalem nostro vos conspectui praesentetis, quod ante dicta sententia retractari non debeat, si poteritis, ostensuri; vel, si forte exigente iustitia fuerit retractanda, vel per vos, vel per responsalem idoneum appareatis sufficienter instructi, ut in principali negotio canonice procedatur, pro certo sciturus, quod, quum finem litibus imponere cupiamus, et in quaestione praemissa propter multam locorum distantiam non possit ad nos sine magnis laboribus et expensis saepius haberi recursus, si ad praemissum terminum, quem vobis peremptorium assignamus, iniuncta vobis contempseritis adimplere, nos nihilominus in ipso negotio, quantum de iure poterimus, procedemus. Miramur autem non modicum et movemur, quod confirmationem eiusdem sententiae et revocationem omnium, quae saepedictus praedecessor noster C. egit pro ecclesia Ilerdensi, tanquam subrepta fuerint, tu frater episcope, diceris impetrasse, quum vix de ipso possumus suspicari, ut contra scripturas et assertiones suas, quas frequenter coram nobis, et aliis fratribus nostris viva voce proposuit, subito venerit, nisi fuerit circumventus.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A petition for restitution to the former condition against a sentence regularly suspends execution of the sentence pending the outcome of that cause of restitution. This fails if there is a presumption of malice against the person seeking restitution, namely that he seeks it in order to delay execution; in that case execution takes place after security has been given for restoration if the person seeking restitution prevails in the cause. This states the rule according to its meaning when joined with the penultimate gloss; and in this final point this text is very exceptional with respect to both laws.

Textual note: The Latin Library transcription's speciantibus has been corrected to Friedberg's spectantibus.

When a question concerning various articles had arisen between our venerable brother the Bishop of Burgos and the monastery of Oña, [and when our venerable brother the Bishop of Segovia and our beloved son T., Bishop-elect of Palencia, to whom the said case had been committed by our authority, had remitted it, sufficiently instructed, into our presence, we granted a free and benign hearing to that bishop and to the monk L., proctor of the monastery, who had come to the Apostolic See on this account. When they began to litigate principally concerning the status of the aforesaid monastery, which the said bishop alleged to pertain to him by the common law, as it was situated in his diocese —and he affirmed that the church of Burgos had enjoyed the exercise of this right throughout long-past times—while it was said on behalf of the monastery that it had from antiquity been endowed with liberty by secular princes and Roman Pontiffs and had enjoyed full liberty for a very long time, we, after hearing the allegations on both sides, at last, with the will of the parties, judged that a settlement should be providently made between them, as is contained more fully in our other letters drawn up concerning this matter.

But afterward, when the parties prosecuted the question concerning the subjection and liberty of the members of that place—namely its monasteries, chapels, cells, and priories—the said bishop specially claimed for himself four things in the aforesaid places. He said that these pertained to him by the common law, the exercise of which right he had enjoyed from antiquity, asserting that the clerics of those places were bound to attend the synods of the bishops, archdeacons, and archpriests of Burgos, to observe sentences of excommunication or interdict promulgated by them, to furnish annual procurations, and to pay individual gold pieces to a newly installed Bishop of Burgos. To strengthen his own claim, he alleged, concerning the first three articles, the common law—according to which he said that the said clerics, like the others of his diocese, were bound to the aforesaid things—and the free exercise of that right from antiquity, and, concerning the fourth, an ancient and approved custom. He said that proof concerning all these things had been furnished through depositions of witnesses. But the other party alleged to the contrary that the members of the above-mentioned monastery, like the monastery itself, had from antiquity been endowed with liberty by privileges of secular princes and the Roman Pontiffs Urban II, Paschal II, Eugenius III, and Alexander III, and had enjoyed liberty of this kind throughout long-past times, as it said was manifestly established through those privileges exhibited before us, the instrument of Victor, formerly Bishop of Burgos, and the depositions of its own witnesses.]

We therefore, having heard and understood the things which each party alleged before us, condemned the monastery of Oña concerning the four aforementioned articles, with the counsel of our brothers, as justice required. But after sentence had been pronounced, the monastery's proctor, in the name of the monastery, sought restitution to the former condition in order to prove prescription both concerning the four aforementioned articles and concerning certain tithes acquired by the monastery through a settlement and sought on behalf of its churches and tenants. We wished to terminate the controversy concerning these tithes by the decision of a sentence, and the case concerning them had been concluded before the above-mentioned judges. And when there had been litigation before us for some time concerning this, we, after prior deliberation, judged that restitution to the former condition for proving prescription should be granted to that proctor in the name of the monastery, both concerning the four aforementioned articles and concerning the controversy over the tithes, [giving a mandate by our letters to you, brother Bishop of Zamora, and to our beloved sons Masters Maurice, Archdeacon of Toledo, and Michael, canon of Segovia, that you receive the witnesses whom the monastery's party shall judge should be produced to prove lawful prescription concerning the four often-mentioned articles and the issue of the tithes, or whom the bishop shall judge should be produced to prove interruption; and, if it proceeds with the will of the parties, you are to terminate the case itself with a due conclusion, appeal being removed; otherwise, you are to remit it to us sufficiently instructed, fixing for the parties a suitable term on which they are to present themselves again before us to receive sentence, with the Lord's favour.]

But lest, through contrived malice, as seemed from several [certain] presumptions, it happen that the effect of the sentence be impeded to the bishop's loss, and lest the monastery incur loss through execution of the sentence because of various suspicions, we, after weighing equity, judged that provision should be made by law so that, before all else, the above-mentioned sentence pronounced by us be committed to execution [by you]. (And below:) We nevertheless will and command that you receive suitable security from the bishop himself that, if the monastery prevails in that case [by sentence], he will restore to the aforesaid monastery all the things which in the meantime he shall have received on occasion of that sentence. [Given at the Lateran, on the eighth day before the Kalends of May, in the thirteenth year of our pontificate, 1210.]

But after we had ruled against them concerning the delay sought, at last they petitioned that a delay be granted to the church of Braga for instruction of the case through the aid of restitution to the former condition, exhibiting a special mandate from you concerning this. We, with the counsel of our brothers, have judged that this should be granted to you through the benefit of restitution until the octave of Pentecost next to come.

Latin source headnote: A minor is restored concerning what he contracted or omitted if he proves that he was thereby injured and is within the periods for seeking restitution.

Gregory IX.

Master William, appearing in our presence for himself and his brother I., canon of Parros., showed in a petition presented to us that, when they were of minor age and their mother, whose successors they are, had been removed from human affairs, the late William, their father, sold to certain persons, for a certain quantity of money, certain possessions common to both; and, so that a sale of this kind might have the strength of firmness, he emancipated them and caused them to consent to the contract. Therefore he supplicated that we command either that the same sale be declared null, or—since they still remain within the time granted for obtaining the benefit of restitution to the former condition, and under an approved custom of the municipality of Parros. the right of offering the price to the buyers concerning the other share belonged to them as the nearer persons within a year and a day from the time of the contract, which they have hitherto omitted—we would deign, through the same benefit, to give them relief concerning both matters, since they are known to have been injured not slightly in this and are prepared to offer the price to the buyers of that share or their successors. Therefore we command that, if you find the foregoing to rest upon the truth, you take care either to declare the aforesaid sale null as regards the share devolving upon them from the maternal succession, if the due legal solemnity was omitted in it; or, if perhaps it intervened and it is established that they were injured, you are to endeavour by our authority to restore them to the former condition both concerning that share and concerning the remaining share, provided nevertheless that they shall judge that what they offer ought to be done.

Latin source headnote: Restitution to the former condition is to be sought from an ordinary who possesses administrative authority, or from one delegated by him, whether this cause was specially delegated or arises incidentally in a cause generally committed to him. It ought not, however, to be sought from an ordinary who does not possess administrative authority or from his delegate, unless it arises incidentally in a cause. An arbitrator does not take cognizance of a cause of restitution and cannot be assumed in major causes.

The same.

A cause of restitution to the former condition can be tried and concluded before ordinary judges possessing administrative authority or persons delegated by them, whether this has been specially mandated to those delegates or a question of this kind happens to arise in the business committed to them. But persons delegated by ordinaries who do not possess administrative authority, but only the faculty of judging, or arbitrators, cannot take cognizance of this cause unless it has arisen incidentally before them. In a matrimonial, status, or criminal cause also, since they require higher judges, an arbitrator cannot be assumed.

Latin source headnote: Restitution denied to a church is not thereafter granted to it unless for a new cause; it is nevertheless restored for appealing from the sentence of denial.

The same.

When the benefit of restitution to the former condition has been denied to your church in another trial, it appears that restitution can be denied to that same church, except for an omitted appeal, unless it is to be admitted to a benefit of this kind because of new defences.

Title XLII: On Alienation Made for the Purpose of Changing the Court

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: One to whom a thing has been alienated for the purpose of changing the court is sued by a rescript obtained against the alienator.

Alexander III.

We have heard from the certain report of some persons that, when certain ecclesiastical men of your province obtain letters of commission from us for prosecuting their justice, their adversaries, in order to elude our mandate, before our letters reach the judges, or even afterward, before they are cited by them, break forth into a declaration of appeal, or, making an exchange, maliciously introduce certain persons into possession of the things concerning which the controversies are pending. We therefore, wishing with pastoral solicitude to make provision against the aforesaid cunning and craftiness, command your discretion by apostolic writings, by way of precept, that if the adversaries of those between whom and that person a controversy concerning the church has [for a long time] been conducted shall have appealed in this way to nullify our mandate, or shall have made an exchange concerning the possession about which the controversy is pending, or shall have judged that they should maliciously absent themselves, you are, appeal ceasing, to compel those who have thrust themselves into possession of the aforesaid [church] to obey the equity of law under your examination.

Nos igitur contra praedictam calliditatem et versutiam pastorali sollicitudine providere volentes, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta praecipiendo mandamus, quatenus, si adversarii eorum, inter quos et ipsum super ecclesia controversia est [diutius] agitata pro evacuando nostro mandato taliter appellaverint, aut de possessione, de qua controversia vertitur, commutationem fecerint, vel se malitiose duxerint absentandos, eos qui in possessione praedictae [ecclesiae] se ingesserint, appellatione cessante cogatis sub vestro examine iuris aequitati parere.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: A cleric ought not to receive an assignment from a layman for the purpose of changing the court.

Gregory IX to the Abbot of Saint Nicholas and the Dean of Furnes in the Diocese of Thérouanne.

It was alleged on behalf of the aldermen of Ypres that, when questions arise among the laymen of that place which are to be settled by secular judgment, certain clerics cause rights of action to be assigned to themselves, by gift or for a price, by some of those laymen, so that they may draw the adversaries to the ecclesiastical forum and obtain plunder from commerce of this kind. (And below:) Therefore, since lawful enactments prohibit assignments and purchases of lawsuits in such a way that they visit loss of the case upon those who presume in this manner to summon the patronage of more powerful persons for themselves, and since they are also odious because they appear to proceed from the fountain of cupidity, we command that you restrain the aforesaid clerics from presumption of this kind by ecclesiastical censure.

Title XLIII: On Arbitrators

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: Arbitrators are to be chosen in an odd number, and, when they disagree, the sentence of the greater part stands.

From the African Council.

Certainly (And below: [cf. c. 3, On the Competent Forum, II.2.]) But if, by the common agreement of the bishops between whom the case is pending, they choose arbitrators, let either one or three be chosen, so that, if they choose three, they are to follow the sentence either of all or of two.

DE ARBITRIS.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: An arbitral award or arbitral decision containing a sin which cannot be remitted by the parties is null.

Alexander III to the Archbishop of York.

Textual note: The source's evident typographical prebyterum has been corrected to presbyterum.

Not without great necessity and danger to his body, the priest A., bearer of the present letters, wearied by the journey to the Apostolic See, alleged to us in a manifold complaint that, when he had been instituted as chaplain in the church of Saint Alfrid of N. by the hand of R., archdeacon and canon of Suella, the person of that church, after the death of that same R., M., his nephew, who succeeded him in the already-mentioned church, again appointed that priest as chaplain there for greater security. During their times, he asserts that he held the chaplaincy of that church peacefully for thirty years and more.

But at last the same M., wishing to remove that priest from the same church, began to make undue exactions upon him, and a certain man of his, coming out near his house, laid violent hands upon him; and that same M. himself endeavoured to circumvent him so that he should not delay in yielding the aforesaid chaplaincy in return for five marks of silver, which that same M. also promised that he would pay him annually in the name of a pension. But when the aforesaid priest was unwilling to execute his will, the aforesaid M. is said to have done so much that, after many injuries and burdens had been inflicted upon him and all his other things had been seized, he was despoiled of office and benefice.

And when that priest, still living in exile outside your province, could not obtain justice concerning his benefice through you, at last, because, as he asserts, he was pressed by many necessities and could no longer endure his poverty, an oath was extorted from him through the craft and fraud of M. himself, that he would accept and observe the award of two clerics concerning the matter. Favouring the already-mentioned M., they commanded that priest that he should receive only five marks from him and yield the entire claim. Therefore, because it is in no way fitting for you to permit what they wrongly awarded to be left uncorrected, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you earnestly admonish and induce the aforesaid clerics so that, if they recognize that they made so wicked an award in this matter, you are wholly to absolve the already-mentioned priest from observance of the oath by our authority; or, if you know the award itself to rest upon equity, you are to compel both parties to its observance, appeal being removed.

Tandem vero idem M. ab eadem ecclesia volens ipsum presbyterum removere, in eum coepit indebitas exactiones exercere, et quidam eius homo circa domum suam egressus violentas manus in eum iniecit, et ipse idem M. nisus est eum circumvenire, ut pro quinque marchis argenti, quas etiam idem M. ei promittebat annuatim nomine pensionis soluturum, praescriptae capellaniae cedere non differret. Praefato vero presbytero nolente eius exsequi voluntatem, praedictus M. tantum dicitur fecisse, quod post multas iniurias et gravamina sibi illata, occupatis omnibus aliis rebus, ab officio et beneficio est spoliatus. Quum autem idem presbyter per te adhuc extra provinciam tuam exsulans de suo beneficio non posset iustitiam obtinere, tandem quia, sicut asserit, multis necessitatibus arctabatur, nec suam ulterius inopiam potuit sustinere, per dolum et fraudem ipsius M. ab eo est sacramentum extortum, ut arbitrium clericorum duorum exinde susciperet et servaret, qui iam dicto M. faventes eidem presbytero praeceperunt, ut quinque marchas ab eodem tantum susciperet, et toti cederet quaestioni. Quoniam igitur non decet te aliquatenus sustinere, ut quod perperam arbitrati sunt debeat incorrectum relinqui, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus praefatos clericos moneas studiosius et inducas, ut, si se cognoverint praefati clerici in hac parte tam nequiter arbitratos fuisse iam dictum presbyterum ab observantia iuramenti auctoritate nostra prorsus absolvas, vel, si arbitrium ipsum noveris aequitate subnixum, ad observantiam ipsius utramque partem appellatione remota compellas.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: An arbitrator chosen in a cleric's patrimonial cause cannot adjudge property of the church to be possessed, even for the life of the cleric. It says this, and it is a noteworthy case.

The same to the Bishop of Exeter.

It has reached us that, when the cleric W. of Calestin was of minor age, G. of Cal. took the sister of the same cleric G. as wife, and the same G. affirmed by the pledging of faith that he would give five shillings sterling to him annually. Hence, when afterward a controversy had arisen between them concerning the same five shillings, they submitted to four persons, who made an award between them in such a way that the same G. would receive annually, in place of the aforesaid five shillings, the tithes belonging to him and to his peasants which the aforesaid G. is known to have in the parish of Cal. Therefore, because an award of this kind could hereafter prove pernicious to the church of the already-mentioned place, and neither the aforesaid W. nor those persons to whom the matter had been submitted ought in any way to have done this to the damage of the church, we command your fraternity by apostolic writings that you diligently inquire into the truth of the matter and, if you find it to be so, you are diligently to admonish the above-named G., and compel him by ecclesiastical coercion, to leave the aforesaid tithes entirely free to the church of which he is a parishioner, every pretext and appeal being removed, and not presume to claim anything further for himself on an occasion of this kind. But you are to admonish the above-mentioned cleric that he should endeavour to reach an amicable and peaceful agreement with the same G.

Unde, quum postea super eisdem V. solidis inter ipsos controversia mota fuisset, in quatuor compromisere personas, quae utique inter se taliter arbitratae fuerunt, quod idem G. decimas proprias, et rusticorum suorum, quas in parochia de Cal. praefatus G. habere dignoscitur, pro V. praetaxatis solidis perciperet annuatim. Unde quoniam huiusmodi arbitrium ecclesiae iam dicti loci posset in posterum perniciosum exsistere, nec memoratus W. aut personae illae, in quibus compromissum fuerat, id ullatenus in ecclesiae damnum facere debuissent, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus rei veritatem diligenter inquiras, et si ita esse inveneris, praenominatum G. diligenter commoneas, et ecclesiastica districtione compellas, ut ecclesiae, cuius est parochianus, praelibatas decimas omni occasione et appellatione remota liberas omnino dimittat, nec sibi occasione huiusmodi aliquid ulterius vendicare praesumat. Latin source headnote: A submission cannot be made to an individual woman as arbitress; it is otherwise if a woman otherwise possesses jurisdiction by the common law or by custom. For then a valid submission can be made to her even concerning the temporal things of a church. This states the rule clearly.

Innocent III to the Chancellor and Master Loth., Canon of Paris.

Textual note: The source's evident typographical comtemptores has been corrected to contemptores.

Our beloved sons the Abbot and Convent of Scarduna of the Cistercian Order showed us in their complaint that, when a question was pending between them on the one side and our beloved sons the Hospitallers of Ceresiers in the diocese of Sens on the other concerning the right of use in a certain wood at Oscha, which is called Fagetum, and the territory of the valley of Morini, a submission was made on both sides to our dearest daughter in Christ, A., the illustrious Queen of the French. After hearing the allegations on both sides and more fully understanding the merits of the case, with the counsel of very many bishops and other prudent men, she judged that the award should be promulgated by definitive sentence, and caused it, reduced to writing, to be confirmed by her own seal and the seals of the bishops who were present. The Hospitallers do not fear rashly to act against her sentence.

Although, according to a rule of the civil law, women are removed from public offices of this kind, and it is said elsewhere that, even though they are of the highest reputation and most excellently established, if they undertake an arbitration themselves, or if patronesses interpose a hearing among their freedmen, they are to be excluded from every judicial examination, so that from their pronouncement no penalty may be had against those who rightly contemn them, and no exception based on the agreement; nevertheless, because according to an approved custom which is observed as law in the regions of Gaul, pre-eminent women of this kind are known to possess ordinary jurisdiction over their subjects, we command your discretion by apostolic writings that you take care to admonish and induce the aforesaid Hospitallers to observe that award—especially since it was reinforced by the presence and counsel of bishops—as it was providently pronounced without depravity and willingly received by each party, and, if necessary, you are to compel them to this by the penalty established in the submission, appeal being set aside. [But the witnesses, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the second day before the Nones of November, in the fifth year of our pontificate, 1202.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: An exempt church cannot make a submission to arbitration to the prejudice of its exemption. This states the rule, and clearly.

The same to the Abbot and Convent of Pigravia.

When, in the time of Pope C. of good memory, our predecessor, you, son abbot, had come to the Roman curia, you merited to obtain a privilege and other writings from the Apostolic See, [and, as we have received from you, when you had returned to your own region, you caused the said privilege and other writings to be faithfully recited in the presence of your brothers and certain canons of Merseburg who had come there in defence of certain monks. When our venerable brother the Bishop of Merseburg learned this, he announced and wrote to the emperor that you had come to the Roman Church against the honour of the empire and had obtained a privilege to its prejudice. Moved by this, the emperor summoned you to his court and ordered the privilege to be presented to him; having received it, he afterward refused to return it to you. And while you felt yourself aggrieved in these and other matters through the bishop, after interposing an appeal you visited the Apostolic See. When letters of commission had been obtained from it through messengers, the judges cited the parties, intending to proceed in that case according to the form of the apostolic mandate. But while these things were being done, our venerable brother the Archbishop of Magdeburg, at the petition of the aforesaid bishop and by imperial mandate, removed you, suspended from office and benefice, from the administration of the monastery and assigned its care to two knights.]

Hence, fearing that danger would come upon the abbey, since danger also threatened you, concerning the controversies pending between you and the Bishop of Merseburg and certain of your monks, with faith pledged on both sides into the archbishop's hands, you promised that you would observe the award of the Archbishop of Magdeburg. And thus it happened that the archbishop himself, associating with himself both clerics and laymen, [among whom was also the imperial seneschal,] promulgated an award under a certain form.

[After these things, coming again to Rome, you took care diligently to explain to that same predecessor of ours the things which had been done. We ourselves, when we were placed in a lesser office, and our beloved sons I., Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Stephen on the Caelian Hill, and I., Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Prisca, were appointed auditors for you and your adversary, the custodian of Merseburg, proctor of the said bishop. At last, after hearing the things which the parties judged should be alleged, with the parties' assent the case was committed under a certain form to delegated judges, namely, that they should inquire diligently into everything, except that they should reserve entirely for examination by the Apostolic See the investigation of the liberty of that monastery together with two chapels.

Therefore, when the delegated judges had summoned the parties into their presence by apostolic authority, the aforesaid bishop alleged that those delegates were suspect to him and assigned multiple causes of suspicion. Thereafter also, wishing to evade their judgment, he appealed to the Apostolic See; but, having afterward returned before them, he gave the oath against calumny, produced witnesses, and requested and obtained adjournments. Therefore those judges, proceeding in the case, after hearing the arguments of both parties and understanding them more fully, sent all the proceedings, strengthened by the protection of their seals, to the Apostolic See, imposing a term upon the parties on which they were to present themselves personally before the apostolic presence to receive sentence.

You came to that term personally, while the bishop sent on his behalf our beloved sons H., canon of Merseburg, and B., scholasticus of Saint Nicholas of Merseburg, as representatives. They said that the proceedings which the delegates had transmitted ought neither to be published nor any faith at all be given to them, since they had been received and recorded both by suspect judges and after an appeal had lawfully been interposed. Your party petitioned to the contrary, especially because, as it firmly asserted, the aforesaid messengers did not have capacity to stand in court, since they were excommunicated, and it had been enjoined upon the bishop under penalty of suspension that he should come in his own person to conduct the case. Since he had not done so, he had incurred the penalty of suspension. The aforesaid messengers alleged that, because of illness and old age, he could not come personally to the Roman Church, denying the other things which had been objected against them.

On behalf of the bishop they represented the affair in this way: since you had received the abbey and the priesthood from him as from your prelate, as you had confessed in court, because of your depraved manner of life you began to be sued by the monks concerning many enormities. The bishop frequently restored peace and concord among them, admonishing you to pass to the fruit of a better life. But when, because of the things which you continually did, the brothers now had no hope at all of your correction, they alleged against you in synod concerning dilapidation that you voluptuously consumed the goods of the monastery assigned for the uses of the poor, that because of a lack of necessities religious life was wholly perishing there, and they also assailed you concerning sacrilege, simony, and many other crimes, sometimes before the bishop and sometimes in the presence of the cardinal. The bishop endured you for so long that he was said to deny justice to the monks.

When afterward you had been cited by the bishop, you sent a messenger who appealed concerning every grievance which could be inflicted upon you by a sentence of the archbishop. But when neither you nor a messenger came to the archbishop, the archbishop himself judged that no deference at all should be paid to an appeal made so generally to the prejudice of the church. Therefore the bishop, having taken the counsel of prudent men, cited you again and suspended you from office and benefice. Meanwhile our beloved son I., Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Stephen on the Caelian Hill, then legate of the Apostolic See, arrived and came to the said abbey in order to compose matters between you and the aforesaid monks. But while you were hiding in neighbouring villages and Master Ulric was making allegations, the said cardinal confirmed the sentence of suspension pronounced against you.

Thus, coming secretly to Rome, with the truth concealed you obtained letters of commission and, under the appearance of renewal, a privilege which you had never possessed before. And when the delegated judges were suspect to the bishop and the monks, from whom they could not obtain even one day's adjournment, after an appeal had been interposed by the bishop's messengers, immediately when the surreptitious privilege was read, the parties transmitted their messengers to the Apostolic See. With their assent the case was at last committed to other judges under a certain form, as is contained in the letters of commission. But when not all of them could take part in the examination of the case because of the excessive distance, our beloved son the Abbot of Goizoche, together with our venerable brothers the said archbishop and the Bishops of Bamberg and Meissen and very many prelates of churches, restored peace and concord between the bishop, you, and the monks.

But, coming secretly again to the Roman Church and alleging many things against the monks and the bishop, you obtained letters of commission to two of those judges whom we said above were suspect to the bishop and from whom that bishop had recently appealed through messengers. When they would not admit the bishop's just exceptions, which he wished to prove immediately, he appealed to the Apostolic See. But while they nevertheless proceeded in the case, he came to them against his will, fearing that his justice would perish. When, after other things which the judges had done on their own initiative, they fixed a term for publication of the attestations, when the parties came only one of the judges appeared, together with a messenger of the other, who neither had letters for the others nor wished to give security that his principal had committed his functions to the judge present. Thus it happened that the Provost of Naumburg alone, although three seals were affixed, recorded the proceedings which were sent to the Apostolic See. Hence they said that no faith at all ought to be given to them, both because the instrument containing the report of those judges was defective on its face and because it was issued by one whom they say was bound by many bonds of excommunication.

But you firmly asserted that almost all the foregoing allegations made on behalf of the bishop lacked truth. Because, however, the aforesaid bishop, in that he gave the oath against calumny, sought adjournments from the delegates, and produced witnesses before them, appears to have renounced the appeal and consented to their examination, we, after taking the counsel of our brothers, ruled upon the aforesaid incidental question that the things transacted before the aforesaid judges ought to be published, so that our sentence might at last be framed according to their tenor.]

We therefore gave to you and the proctors of the aforesaid bishop our venerable brother O., Bishop of Ostia, and our beloved son P., Cardinal Priest of the title of Saint Cecilia, as auditors. And when they had faithfully reported to us and our brothers the things alleged and shown on both sides, because it was lawfully established both through confessions and through attestations that, with faith given on both sides, a submission was made to the aforesaid archbishop and also to certain others, we, with the counsel of our brothers, decree that the award pronounced by him is to be observed, excepting only those articles expressed in the award which are contrary to the liberty of that monastery and its two chapels. For, even if you wished it voluntarily, you nevertheless could not by law, without the permission of the Roman Pontiff, renounce privileges or indulgences of liberty which indicate that monastery to pertain to the right and ownership of the Roman Church, especially since in the last letters of commission it is expressly contained that our [often-mentioned] predecessor willed that no prejudice should be generated for you or your successors, or even for the monastery and two chapels of Pigravia, from the renunciation which you made concerning the privilege and other writings. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the third day before the Ides of July, 1198.]

Et dum in his et aliis te per episcopum gravari sentires, appellatione interposita sedem apostolicam visitasti, a qua per nuncios commissionis literis impetratis, partes iudices citaverunt, in causa ipsa iuxta formam mandati apostolici processuri. Verum dum haec agerentur, venerabilis frater noster Magdeburgensis archiepiscopus ad petitionem episcopi memorati de mandato imperiali te, ab officio beneficioque suspensum, a monasterii administratione removit, et curam eis duobus militibus assignavit.] Unde timens abbatiae periculum provenire, quum et tibi periculum immineret, Super controversiis, quae inter te et Mersburgensem episcopum, et quosdam tuos monachos vertebantur te promisisti arbitrium Magdeburgensis archiepiscopi fide in manibus eius hinc inde praestita servaturum, sicque factum est, ut ipse archiepiscopus, adiunctis sibi tam clericis quam laicis, [inter quos erat et dapifer imperialis,] sub certa forma arbitrium promulgaverit. [Posthaec iterum Romam veniens quae facta fuerant eidem praedecessori nostro diligenter exponere procurasti, cui et adversario tuo custodi Mersburgensi procuratori dicti episcopi nos ipsi, quum essemus in minori officio constituti, et dilecti filii I. tit. S. Stephani in Coelio Monte, et I. tit. S. Priscae presbyteri cardinales deputati fuimus auditores, et tandem, auditis quae partes duxerant proponenda, sub certa forma de consensu partium causa commissa fuit iudicibus delegatis, videlicet, ut de omnibus diligenter inquirerent, excepto, quod indagationem libertatis eiusdem monasterii cum duabus capellis apostolicae sedis examini per omnia reservarent. Quum itaque iudices delegati partes ad suam praesentiam auctoritate apostolica evocassent, memoratus episcopus delegatos ipsos suspectos sibi proposuit et causas suspicionis multiplices assignavit. Consequenter etiam eorum volens iudicium declinare, sedem apostolicam appellavit, sed reversus postmodum coram eisdem sacramentum calumniae praestitit, testes produxit, petitis dilationibus et obtentis. Ipsi ergo iudices procedentes in causa, auditis utriusque partis rationibus et plenius intellectis, gesta omnia sigillorum suorum munimine roborata ad sedem apostolicam destinarunt, terminum partibus imponentes, quo recepturae sententiam apostolico se conspectui personaliter praesentarent. Ad quem tu personaliter accedens, episcopus pro se misit dilectos filios H. Mersburgensem canonicum et B. S. Nicolai Mersburgensis scholasticum responsales; qui gesta, quae delegati transmiserant, nec publicari debere dicebant, nec fidem eis penitus adhibendam, quum et a suspectis iudicibus, et post appellationem legitime interpositam recepta fuerint et descripta; parte tua contrarium postulante, praesertim quia, ut firmiter asserebat, nuncii memorati personam standi iudicio non habebant, quum excommunicati essent, et episcopo fuisset sub poena suspensionis iniunctum, ut ad causam agendam in propria persona veniret; quod quum non fecerit, poenam suspensionis incurrit, quem praedicti nuncii propter aegritudinem et senectutem personaliter ad Romanam ecclesiam non posse accedere proponebant, alia, quae ipsis obiecta fuerant, denegantes. Qui pro ipso episcopo factum taliter proponebant, quod quum ab eo, tanquam a tuo praelato, abbatiam et sacerdotium percepisses, sicut fueras in iure confessus, propter pravam conversationem tuam super multis enormitatibus coepisti a monachis conveniri, inter quos episcopus pacem et concordiam saepius reformavit, monens te, ut ad frugem melioris vitae transires. Quum autem fratres per ea, quae iugiter faciebas, de tua emendatione nullatenus iam sperarent, contra te proposuerunt in synodo de dilapidatione, quod res monasterii pauperum usibus deputatas voluptuose consumeres, et pro defectu necessariorum religio ibi penitus deperiret, te etiam de sacrilegio, simonia, aliisque multis criminibus impetebant, interdum coram episcopo, quandoque in praesentia cardinalis, quem episcopus tamdiu sustinuit, quod monachis denegare iustitiam dicebatur. Citatus exinde ab episcopo, nuncium misisti super omni gravamine, quod tibi possit inferri per sententiam archiepiscopi, provocantem. Quum autem neque per te neque per nuncium ad archiepiscopum accessisses, ipse archiepiscopus appellationi tam generaliter factae in praeiudicium ecclesiae iudicavit nullatenus deferendum. Episcopus itaque, habito prudentum consilio, citatum denuo te ab officio beneficioque suspendit. Interim superveniens dilectus filius noster I. tit. sancti Stephani in Coelio monte presbyter cardinalis, tunc apostolicae sedis legatus, ad dictam abbatiam accessit, ut componeret inter te et monachos memoratos. Sed te in villis proximis latitante, et magistro Ulrico allegante, dictus cardinalis latam in te suspensionis sententiam confirmavit. Sic ergo latenter Romam veniens, commissionis literas veritate tacita, et sub specie renovationis privilegium, quod nunquam ante habueras, impetrasti. Quumque iudices delegati episcopo suspecti essent et monachis, a quibus nec unius diei poterant inducias obtinere, appellatione interposita ab episcopi nunciis, statim, quum privilegium subreptitium legeretur, partes nuncios suos ad sedem apostolicam transmiserunt, de quorum assensu causa tandem fuit aliis iudicibus sub certa forma commissa, sicut in commissionis literis continetur. Sed quum non omnes possent examinationi causae propter nimiam distantiam interesse, dilectus filius abbas de Goizoche, una cum venerabilibus fratribus nostris dicto archiepiscopo, Babenbergensi et Misnensi episcopis, et quam plurimis ecclesiarum praelatis, inter episcopum, te et monachos pacem et concordiam reformavit. Iterum autem ad Romanam ecclesiam latenter accedens, et proponens multa contra monachos et episcopum, ad duos iudicum illorum, quos superius episcopo diximus esse suspectos, et a quibus nuper ipse episcopus per nuncios appellaverat, commissorias literas impetrasti. Qui quum iustas exceptiones episcopi non admitterent, quas in continenti probare volebat, sedem apostolicam appellavit. Sed ipsis in causa nihilominus procedentibus, invitus accessit ad eos, timens, ne sua iustitia deperiret. Quum autem post alia, quae iudices ipsi proprio motu fecerant, terminum publicandis attestationibus praefixissent, venientibus partibus unus tantum comparuit de iudicibus cum alterius nuncio, qui nec habebat ad alios literas, nec cavere volebat, quod dominus suus vices suas praesenti iudici commisisset. Sicque factum est, quod solus Numburgensis praepositus, licet tribus sigillis appositis, gesta descripserit, quae fuerant ad sedem apostolicam destinata; unde dicebant fidem eis nullatenus adhibendam, et quia ipsum instrumentum relationis ipsorum iudicum fuit in superficie vitiosum, et datum ab eo, quem plurimis dicunt excommunicationis vinculis innodatum. Verum praemissa fere omnia pro episcopi parte proposita, tu veritate destitui firmiter asserebas. Quia vero memoratus episcopus eo, quod iuramentum praestitit de calumnia, et a delegatis inducias postulavit, et testes coram eis produxit, appellationi renunciasse videtur, et eorum examini consensisse, nos habito fratrum consilio in praemissa incidenti quaestione interlocuti fuimus, quod deberent quae coram praedictis iudicibus gesta fuerant publicari, ut secundum tenorem ipsorum nostra tandem sententia formaretur.] Tibi igitur et procuratoribus episcopi supradicti venerabilem fratrem nostrum O. Hostiensem episcopum et dilectum filium P. tit. S. Caeciliae presbyterum cardinalem dedimus auditores; qui quum ea, quae fuerant hinc inde proposita et ostensa, nobis et fratribus nostris fideliter retulissent, Quia tam per confessiones, quam per attestationes legitime constitit, quod fide hinc inde data compromissum est in archiepiscopum memoratum et quorundam etiam aliorum, nos de consilio fratrum nostrorum arbitrium ab ipso prolatum decernimus observandum, illis duntaxat capitulis exceptis, quae contra libertatem ipsius monasterii et duarum capellarum eiusdem in arbitrio sunt expressa, quum, etsi sponte volueris de iure tamen nequiveris sine licentia Romani Pontificis renunciare privilegiis vel indulgentiis libertatis, quae monasterium illud indicant ad ius et proprietatem Romanae ecclesiae pertinere, praesertim quum in ultimae commissionis literis contineatur expressum quod [saepedictus] praedecessor noster super renuntiatione a te super privilegio et aliis scriptis facta nullum tibi vel successoribus tuis, aut etiam monasterio et duabus capellis de Pigavia praeiudicium voluit generari. Latin source headnote: An arbitrator does not have power to judge beyond the matters comprised in the submission; therefore no counterclaim is made before him.

The same to the Bishop of Saint Andrews and the Abbot of Bechot.

When our beloved son [the abbot and canons of Cambuskenneth had, by authority of our letters, drawn our beloved sons the abbot and monks of Dunfermline in the diocese of Saint Andrews into a lawsuit before our venerable brother [name omitted], Bishop of Dublin, and our beloved sons [name omitted], Abbot of Coupar, and [name omitted], Abbot of Scone, of the same diocese, concerning certain tithes pertaining to their church of Eccles and damages and injuries inflicted; and those monks had sued the same abbot and canons by our delegation before our beloved sons [name omitted], Prior of Holyrood, and [name omitted], Dean of Tyninghame, of the aforesaid diocese, and you, son official, concerning the chapel of Dunipace and the tithes pertaining to it, each party, after multiple allegations and altercations, made a submission to you, so that, proceeding in those matters according to the order of law, you would terminate those controversies, concerning both possession and ownership, by judgment or agreement, appeal being set aside. Confirming this by a corporal oath, they affirmed that whatever two of you together with you, brother bishop, should judge ought to be established concerning these things, if you all could not agree together, they would hold ratified and firmly observe, and that they would not impede the arbitral proceeding by fraud or malice.

Therefore, after hearing the allegations on both sides, receiving the witnesses, and publishing their depositions, because you were in doubt concerning four articles, you transmitted the instructed case into our presence, imploring an oracle of the Apostolic See concerning those four doubtful matters. The first question arose before you from the fact that, when the canons sued the monks concerning the aforesaid tithes, the monks wished to sue those canons concerning certain other tithes, although no submission had been made to you concerning them. For the monks' party asserted that, according to lawful enactments, one who is sued before someone can sue the same person before that same judge.] Hence you petitioned that whether there is a place for a counterclaim before arbitrators be explained through the Apostolic See. [But the second, etc. (cf. c. 9, On the Reliability of Instruments, II.23).] We therefore respond to your discretion concerning the first article in this way: although in a judicial proceeding the person who is sued before a judge can counterclaim against the claimant, nevertheless he cannot counterclaim before arbitrators, since arbitrators cannot judge except concerning only those things about which a submission was made to them. [As to the second, etc. (cf. c. 9, On the Reliability of Instruments, II.23). Given at the Lateran, on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of April, in the tenth year, 1207.]

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: One who is bound by an award to elect with the counsel of certain persons is bound to seek their counsel in the deliberation concerning the election, but is not constrained to follow it.

The same to the Rector and Brothers of the Hospital of Saint Bartholomew of Lucca.

When formerly a question was pending concerning the election of a rector and brothers in your hospital between you and our beloved son the Prior of the church of Saint Bartholomew of Lucca, before the Prior of Saint Fridianus and the primicerius of Saint Martin of Lucca, judges delegated by the Apostolic See, and each party, making a submission to them, promised that it would observe their award, and those judges determined that a certain award should be pronounced, a doubt arose on both sides concerning the award pronounced by them, which you petitioned to be clarified through the Apostolic See. We therefore, having diligently inspected the public instrument containing the award, recognized that, according to the form of the award, the Prior of Saint Bartholomew of Lucca is bound to take counsel with the household of that hospital and to deliberate with it concerning finding a rector; but, whether the household agrees or disagrees with that prior, the same prior ought in either case to elect the rector. For this reason we say that, unless the prior has deliberated with the household of the hospital concerning finding a rector and has sought its counsel, he does not have power to elect the rector, and, if he elects him in another manner, his election ought to be regarded as void and empty. But, after counsel has been taken with the household concerning this and deliberation held concerning finding a rector, the prior himself can freely elect a rector, provided only that he is suitable, whether the household agrees or disagrees with him concerning the selection of the rector. [But lest, etc. Given at Sora, on the fourth day before the Nones of August, in the eleventh year of our pontificate, 1208.]

Nos igitur publico instrumento arbitrium continente diligenter inspecto cognovimus, quod secundum formam arbitrii prior sancti Bartholomaei Lucani tenetur habere consilium cum familia hospitalis eiusdem et tractare cum ea de inveniendo rectore; sed sive concordet sive discordet familia cum ipso priore, idem prior eligere debet in utroque casu rectorem. Propter quod dicimus, quod nisi prior super inveniendo rectore tractaverit cum familia hospitalis, et ipsius consilium requisierit, non habet potestatem eligendi rectorem, et, si alio modo eum elegerit, eius electio haberi debet irrita et inanis. Verum, habito cum familia super hoc consilio et tractatu de inveniendo rectore, ipse prior libere potest rectorem eligere, duntaxat idoneum, sive concordet sive discordet familia cum ipso super inventione rectoris. Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A submission concerning spiritual matters cannot be made to a layman.

The same in the General Council.

It sometimes happens that, when to a claimant (And below: [cf. c. 9, On Fraud and Contumacy, II.14.]) For this purpose we generally prohibit a submission concerning spiritual matters from being made to a layman, because it is not fitting for a layman to arbitrate in such matters.

> De rebus spiritualibus in laicum compromitti non potest.
>
> Idem in concilio generali.
>
> Contingit interdum, quod, quum actori (Et infra: [cf. c. 9. de col. et cont. II. 14.]) Ad hoc generaliter prohibemus, ne super rebus spiritualibus compromittatur in laicum, quia non decet, ut laicus in talibus arbitretur.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: By authority even of a delegated judge, a submission concerning a spiritual cause can be made to a cleric and a layman; and, if the award has been accepted by the parties, it ought to be committed to execution by them, although the submission was made through a general proctor. But if the award was not approved and a penalty was added, an action lies for the penalty; otherwise, for the interest. This states the rule generally by adhering to the letter.

The same to the Archbishop of Pisa.

You informed us by your letters that, when you had received letters from us concerning execution of an award pronounced between the Hospitallers of Saint John and the pleban of Pescia concerning the hospital of Saint Allucius, when the parties had appeared in your presence, the Hospitallers sought execution of the award from you, asserting that it ought to be observed because the pleban's proctor voluntarily made a submission to the arbitrators after interposing an oath, since he said that he had received power to make a submission and settlement concerning that business. The pleban alleged to the contrary that he gave the aforesaid proctor a general mandate to conduct the case; nevertheless, he did not mandate him to make a submission or settlement concerning it without his special mandate; and, moreover, the aforesaid proctor had not been appointed with the assent of his canons. And therefore he said that the award was invalid, especially since the proctor had exceeded the limits of the mandate and the award had been promulgated by one cleric and two laymen, although they had pronounced the award with the assent of our venerable brother the Archbishop of Genoa, to whom the case had been committed.

Hence, when doubt had arisen concerning these matters, you petitioned to be instructed by an oracle of the Apostolic See how you should proceed concerning that business. Concerning this we respond to your fraternity in this way: if the award was accepted on behalf of the pleban, it ought to be held ratified without distinction and thereby committed to execution according to the tenor of the apostolic mandate. But if it was not accepted, it matters whether or not a penalty was established for observing it. And indeed, if a penalty was added in the submission, an action can be brought for the penalty. But if no penalty was established, but a submission was made simply that the sentence would be obeyed, the proctor can be sued for the interest, because by his oath he could bind himself personally, but not the church. That it is said to have been pronounced by two laymen and one cleric appears in no way to stand in the way, since it was done by authority of the said archbishop, to whom the cause concerning which the submission is said to have been made had been delegated.

> Auctoritate iudicis etiam delegati potest de causa spirituali in clericum et laicum compromitti, et, si arbitrium est a partibus receptum, debet a partibus exsecutioni mandari, licet per generalem procuratorem factum fuerit compromissum. Si autem non fuit arbitrium approbatum, et poena fuit apposita, agitur ad poenam, alias ad interesse. H. d. generaliter inhaerendo literae.

> Per tuas nobis literas intimasti, quod, quum super exsecutione arbitrii, quod inter Hospitalarios sancti Ioannis et plebanum de Piscia super hospitali sancti Allucii latum erat, a nobis literas accepisses, partibus in tua praesentia constitutis, Hospitalarii a te exsecutionem arbitrii postulabant, asserentes, illud debere observari pro eo, quod procurator plebani sponte in arbitros iuramento interposito compromisit, quoniam dicebat, potestatem compromittendi et transigendi super eodem negotio recepisse. Plebanus proposuit ex adverso, quod ad causam tractandam praedicto procuratori dedit generale mandatum; non tamen ei mandavit, ut sine speciali mandato suo compromittere posset vel transigere super eo; et praeterea procurator iam dictus de assensu canonicorum suorum non fuerat institutus. Et ideo dicebat id arbitrium non valere, praesertim quum procurator fines mandati excesserit et arbitrium fuerit per unum clericum et duos laicos promulgatum, licet ipsi de assensu venerabilis fratris nostri Genuensis archiepiscopi, cui causa commissa fuerat, arbitrium protulissent. Unde, quum super his dubietas fuisset exorta, per apostolicae sedis oraculum edoceri petiisti, qualiter super negotio ipso tibi sit procedendum. Super quo fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si ex parte plebani arbitrium receptum fuerit, indistincte ratum haberi debet, ac per hoc iuxta tenorem mandati apostolici exsecutioni mandari. Si vero receptum non fuerit, refert, utrum fuerit vel non fuerit de observando ipsum poena statuta. Et quidem si poena fuerit apposita in compromissione, agi potest ad poenam. At si nulla poena statuta fuerit sed simpliciter, quod staretur sententiae, fuerit compromissum, procurator ad interesse poterit conveniri, quia iuramento suo se ipsum personaliter, non ecclesiam poterat obligare. Quod autem a duobus laicis et uno clerico dicitur esse prolatum, nequaquam obviare videtur, quum auctoritate dicti archiepiscopi factum sit, cui causa de qua, dicitur compromissum, fuerat delegata.

Latin source headnote: If two persons elected in discord to the same prelacy make a submission to the ordinary, the submission expires upon the death of one of those making it; the ordinary nevertheless proceeds by ordinary power concerning the right of the survivor before passage is made to another election. This states the rule.

Honorius III to the Archbishop of Cologne.

It was intimated to our ears on your behalf that, when the provostship of Saint Cunibert in Cologne was vacant, the canons of that church, disagreeing on the day fixed for the election concerning the appointment of a provost for themselves, divided their votes between two, namely H. of Jülich and C. of Lombardy. When afterward deliberation was held concerning an election of this kind and the parties had appeared in your presence, they at last took care, after pledging faith, to make a submission to you concerning this. After diligently inspecting and ascertaining the merits of the case, with their assent you fixed a day for pronouncing a definitive sentence. Meanwhile, however, after the aforesaid H., elected by one party, had been removed from their midst, you took care to forbid the above-mentioned canons to proceed to make another election while your sentence was pending; some of them nevertheless elected B. of Ahrberg, canon of Cologne. Therefore, on the day when the sentence ought to have been pronounced, when the parties had appeared in your presence and the aforesaid C. petitioned that you pronounce a definitive sentence, the said B., to the contrary, alleged that you ought not to proceed further.

Therefore, to you, who humbly petition to be instructed by us, we respond briefly that, although the arbitration was ended by the death of H. himself, nevertheless you ought first to have taken cognizance of the merits of the first election before a proceeding was made to the second. For if perhaps the said C., who survives, has a right in the election concerning which the submission to you was made, it is established that the second election is wholly invalid. [On the fourteenth day before the Kalends of July, in the second year, 1218.]

Latin source headnote: An arbitrator chosen after a matter has been adjudged, concerning new disputes, cannot alter the sentence by his award, even if he received a mandate from the Pope to compose matters between the parties.

The same to the Bishop-elect and the Abbot of Saint Zeno and C., Canon of Verona.

The petition of our beloved son O., Bishop-elect of Feltre and Belluno, presented to us contained that, when the case which formerly was pending between his predecessor of good memory on the one side and the citizens of Treviso on the other concerning the district, jurisdiction, and other matters had been terminated by the sentence of our venerable brother the Bishop of Ostia, then legate of the Apostolic See, and the predecessor of that bishop-elect had for a long time peacefully possessed the things adjudged to him by that legate, nevertheless the bishop-elect himself, having at last obtained the assent of his chapters, to the prejudice of his churches made a submission with the other party to the nobleman the Duke of the Venetians as arbitrator concerning certain disputes which seemed to have arisen on both sides. Acting contrary to that same sentence confirmed by apostolic authority, the duke, with equity set aside, promulgated an iniquitous award against the aforesaid churches concerning matters adjudged by that legate.

Although we sent our letters to that duke that he ought to labour to compose matters between the parties, nevertheless, since it was not our intention to alter that sentence or to stir up the complaints quieted by it, we command your discretion [by apostolic writings] that, notwithstanding the aforesaid letters, you revoke as void whatever you find to have been done by the award of the above-named duke against the sentence of that legate, strictly forbidding him to proceed further in the submission, and compelling him by ecclesiastical censure, appeal being set aside, to restore the hostages and a certain castle given to him on occasion of that submission so that his award would be observed. Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A submission made to two or more persons, with this added—that in a case of disagreement a third is to be chosen by them or by others—is invalid. This states the rule.

Gregory IX to the Dean and Master P., Canon of Saint Peter in the Diocese of Arras.

It became known to us from the complaint of the layman William that, when the layman O. sued him concerning a certain sum of money before judges by apostolic authority, a submission was at last made by the parties to two arbitrators, but in such a way that, if those two disagreed with one another, the named judges would add a third, nevertheless retaining for themselves the power to compel the parties to observe the award to be promulgated by the said arbitrators. And when a third arbitrator chosen by the aforesaid judges, together with one of the two, condemned him to the other party, he, feeling himself aggrieved by the often-mentioned judges because they were compelling him to observe an award of this kind, appealed to our hearing; but they, in contempt of the appeal, pronounced a sentence of excommunication against him. We therefore command that, if it is so, since it has been established by legal provision that a submission concerning an uncertain person to be assumed into the arbitration does not bind, you are to declare that sentence of excommunication to be wholly null.

Non valet compromissum factum in duos sive plures, hoc adiecto, ut in casu discordiae eligatur tertius per eosdem vel alios. H. d.

Gregorius IX. Decano et Magistro P. Canonico S. Petri Atrebatensis dioecesis.

Innotuit nobis Guilielmo laico conquerente, quod, quum O. laicus ipsum super quadam summa pecuniae coram iudicibus auctoritate apostolica convenisset, tandem fuit a partibus in duos arbitros compromissum, sic tamen, quod, si illi duo adinvicem discordarent, tertium adderent iudices nominati, retenta penes se compellendi partes ad observandum arbitrium per dictos arbitros promulgandum nihilominus potestate. Quumque tertius arbiter a iudicibus praedictis electus cum altero duorum ipsum parti alteri condemnasset, idem, ex eo sentiens se a saepedictis iudicibus gravari, quod ipsum ad observantiam huiusmodi arbitrii compellebant, nostram appellavit audientiam; sed ipsi appellatione contempta excommunicationis tulerunt sententiam in eundem. Ideoque mandamus, quatenus, si est ita, quum legali sit provisione statutum, ut compromissum de incerta persona in arbitrium assumenda non teneat, dictam excommunicationis sententiam denuncietis penitus nullam esse.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: A submission made to one or more persons is valid so that they may decide the case by themselves or through others whom they themselves choose. This states the rule according to the understanding perceived by the gloss here and by Innocent in the preceding chapter, which pleases me. Panormitanus.

The same to the Abbess and Convent of Jouarre.

When it is sought from us (And below:) It was alleged on your behalf that, when formerly a question had arisen between you and the Archbishop of Sens because that archbishop, asserting that your monastery was subject to him by metropolitan right, exacted procurations and other things from you, at last, when a submission had concordantly been made by the parties to R., Cardinal Deacon of Saint Angelo, then legate of the Apostolic See, and it had been promised under a certain penalty that they would obey without qualification his award or ordinance, or that of two mediators whom he should appoint concerning this, Master P., our chaplain, and I., Archdeacon of Sens, mediators appointed concerning this by that legate, terminated a cause of this kind by ordaining and deciding it. We therefore confirm by apostolic authority what was done concerning this by the aforesaid mediators.

Nos igitur quod per praedictos mediatores super hoc actum est auctoritate apostolica confirmamus.

Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: A submission is ended before sentence is pronounced by the death of either of those making the submission; hence it does not pass to their heirs unless provision concerning them was made in the submission. It says this by comprehending the meaning of the chapter.

The same.

A submission does not extend to the heirs of the person making it if provision concerning them is not made there.

Title I: On Judgments

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A contumacious person can be excommunicated for failing to appear or to answer; he ought not, however, to be deprived of a benefice. This is what it says. Abbas Siculus.

From the African Council.

Concerning Quodvultdeus, Bishop of Centuria, whom, when his adversary had petitioned that he be brought before our council, and when he had been asked whether he wished to proceed against him before the bishops, he first promised this, but on the following day answered that this did not please him, and departed. It pleased all the bishops that no one should communicate with that Quodvultdeus until, satisfaction having first been made, he has been absolved. For no one can rightly be considered to have his bishopric taken from him before the conclusion of his case.

>
> De Quodvultdeo Centurensi episcopo, quem, quum adversarius ipsius eum petisset ad concilium nostrum introduci, interrogatus, an cum eo vellet apud episcopos experiri, primo id promiserat, et altera die respondit, hoc sibi non placere, atque discessit. Placuit omnibus episcopis, ut nullus eidem Quodvultdeo communicet, donec satisfactione praemissa fuerit absolutus. Nam adimi sibi episcopatum ante causae eius exitum nulli potest iure videri.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: Laymen ought not to handle ecclesiastical affairs, but they are disposed of by the judgment of prelates. This is what it says. Abbas Siculus.

From the synod of Pope Eugene.

We decree also that laymen are not to presume to handle ecclesiastical affairs. But bishops, abbots, archbishops, and other prelates of churches are not to dispose of ecclesiastical affairs, especially those known to be spiritual, by the judgment of [any] laymen, nor because of their prohibition are they to cease exercising ecclesiastical justice.

> Laici ecclesiastica negotia tractare non debent, sed praelatorum iudicio disponuntur. Hoc dicit. Abbas. Sic.

Ex synodo Eugenii Papae.

Decernimus etiam, ut laici ecclesiastica tractare negotia non praesumant. Sed episcopi, abbates, archiepiscopi et alii ecclesiarum praelati de negotiis ecclesiasticis, maxime de illis, quae spiritualia esse noscuntur, [aliquorum] laicorum iudicio non disponant, nec propter eorum prohibitionem ecclesiasticam dimittant iustitiam exercere.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A cause concerning the right of patronage belongs to the judgment of the Church. This it says specifically and literally.

Alexander III, to the illustrious King of England.

In proportion as divine grace [and highest providence have adorned you with the privilege of greater grace,] so much the more ought you to love religious men with greater charity, and more readily to maintain and foster them in their rights. A cause concerning the right of patronage, however, is so joined and connected with spiritual causes that it can be decided only by ecclesiastical judgment and terminated solely before an ecclesiastical judge.

Causa iuris patronatus spectat ad iudicium ecclesiae. H. dicit specifice et ad literam.

Alexander III. illustri Regi Angliae.

Quanto te divina gratia [summaque providentia maioris gratiae privilegio decoravit, tanto viros religiosos maiori debes caritate diligere, et in iustitiis suis manutenere propensius et fovere.] Causa vero iuris patronatus ita coniuncta est et connexa spiritualibus causis, quod non nisi ecclesiastico iudicio valeat definiri, et apud ecclesiasticum iudicem solummodo terminari.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A cleric convicted of or confessing a crime before a secular judge is not punished by his bishop on that account; but one convicted or confessing before him is punished with the due penalty, unless he dispenses with him, which he can do in adultery and lesser offenses; one deposed, however, is not immediately handed over to the secular court. This is what it says from the beginning to the end. Abbas Siculus. § 1. This section is summarized above at the beginning of the chapter; nevertheless, because it has separate and notable matter, state it otherwise: in adultery and lesser offenses a bishop can dispense with clerics after penance has been completed; but one deposed for his excesses is not indiscriminately handed over to the secular court. This is what it says. Abbas Siculus.

The same, to the Archbishop of Salerno.

But if clerics have been convicted of or have confessed a crime before a secular judge, they are not on that account to be condemned in any way by their own bishop. For just as a sentence rendered by one who is not their judge does not hold, so neither does a confession made before him. But if they have confessed their crimes in court before the bishop, or have been convicted by lawful proof, provided that the crimes are such that they ought to be suspended or deposed on account of them, they are not undeservedly to be suspended from their orders or perpetually removed from the ministry of the altar.

§ 2. Concerning adulteries, however, and other crimes that are lesser, a bishop can dispense with his clerics after penance has been completed, so that they may serve in their orders; but he ought not to hand over to a secular judge anyone deposed for his excesses, since he has discharged his own office and ought not crush that person with a double contrition. [Moreover, if a cleric, etc. (cf. c. 1, On Clerics Fighting in a Duel, V.14.)]

> Clericum convictum vel confessum de crimine coram iudice saeculari ex eo non punit episcopus; sed coram se convictum vel confessum punit poena debita, nisi cum illo dispenset, quod potest in adulterio et minoribus; depositum vero non statim tradit curiae saeculari. H. de usque ad fin. Abbas Siculus. §. 1. Summatus est iste §. supra in princ. c., tamen quia habet materiam separatam et notabilem, ideo dic aliter: In adulterio et minoribus potest cum clericis peracta poenitentia episcopus dispensare; depositum autem pro suis excessibus non tradit indifferenter curiae saeculari. H. d. Abbas Sicul.
>
> Idem Salernitano Archiepiscopo.
>
> At si clerici coram saeculari iudice convicti fuerint vel confessi de crimine, non sunt propter hoc a suo episcopo aliquatenus condemnandi. Sicut enim sententia a non suo iudice lata non tenet, ita nec facta confessio coram ipso. Si vero coram episcopo de criminibus in iure confessi sunt, seu legitima probatione convicti, dummodo sint talia crimina, propter quae suspendi debeant vel deponi, non immerito suspendendi sunt a suis ordinibus, vel ab altaris ministerio perpetuo removendi. 2. De adulteriis vero et aliis criminibus, quae sunt minora, potest episcopus cum suis clericis post peractam poenitentiam dispensare, ut in ordinibus suis deserviant; sed non debet quemlibet depositum pro suis excessibus, quum suo sit functus officio, nec duplici debeat ipsum contritione conterere, iudici tradere saeculari. [Porro si clericus etc. (cf. c. 1. de cler. pugn. in duell. V. 14.)]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A vassal is to be sued before the lord of the fief, even if the lord of the fief is an ecclesiastical person, provided that the claimant can obtain his justice there; otherwise the ordinary of the place can be approached. And according to this it is a notable case. Abbas Siculus.

The same.

Furthermore, because sometimes, as we have learned, a sentence of excommunication or interdict is promulgated, on the occasion of those possessions, against those who are known to hold possessions in fief from your church, we most strictly prohibit this as long as they are prepared to exhibit justice concerning these matters in your presence. But if this has been presumed by anyone with rash daring, let it be lawful for you to revoke that sentence with the remedy of appeal removed. Therefore, let it be lawful for no person to violate this charter of our grant, etc.

> Vasallus coram domino feudi conveniendus est, etiamsi dominus feudi sit ecclesiastica persona, dummodo ibi actor possit suam iustitiam consequi; alias loci ordinarius poterit adiri. Et secundum hoc est casus notabilis. Abbas Sicul.
>
> Idem.
>
> Ceterum quia quandoque, sicut accepimus, in eos, quos ab ecclesia tua constat possessiones tenere in feudum, occasione ipsarum excommunicationis seu interdicti sententia promulgatur, nos id districtius inhibemus, quamdiu parati fuerint super his in tua praesentia iustitiam exhibere. Quod si fuerit a quoquam temerario ausu praesumptum, liceat tibi eandem sententiam sublato appellationis remedio revocare. Nulli ergo hominum fas sit, hanc paginam nostrae concessionis etc.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: A party is not compelled to express the name of the action in the complaint; nevertheless, he ought to set forth the fact so clearly that the right of action may be gathered from it. This is what it says according to its meaning. Abbas Siculus.

The same, to the Bishop of Exeter and the Chapter of London.

Our beloved sons the prior and clerics of Guisborough transmitted to us a very grave and difficult complaint against the Archbishop of York, legate of the Apostolic See. [And below: (cf. c. 1, On Appeals, II.28.)] Take more attentive care not to inquire as subtly as many are accustomed to do what kind of action is being brought, but see to it that you investigate simply and plainly the fact itself and the truth of the matter according to the form of the canons and the institutions of the holy Fathers.

> Nomen actionis in libello exprimere para non cogitur; debet tamen factum ita clare proponere, ut ex eo ius agendi colligatur. Hoc dicit quoad intellectum. Abbas.
> Idem Exonensi Episcopo et Capitulo Londonensi.
>
> Dilecti filii nostri prior et clerici de Guiseburnen. contra Eboracensem archiepiscopum apostolicae sedis legatum gravem admodum et difficilem nobis querimoniam transmiserunt. [Et infra: (cf. c. 1. de app. II. 28.)] Provideatis attentius, ne ita subtiliter, sicut a multis fieri solet, cuiusmodi actio intentetur, inquiratis, sed simpliciter et pure factum ipsum, et rei veritatem secundum formam canonum et sanctorum Patrium instituta investigare curetis.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: An excommunicated person cannot stand in judgment except as a defendant.

The same, to the Bishop of Padua.

We understood from your letters that, when the daughter of a certain nobleman, your parishioner, had contracted marriage with a certain man, and it was afterward discovered that this same man was held bound by the bond of excommunication for the killing of the Bishop of Vicenza of good memory, she raised a question in your presence. Hence, because you petitioned us whether an excommunicated person can stand in judgment, we answer that he can be sued and ought to answer in judgment through another, lest he appear to obtain an advantage from his own malice if by it he should be secure from their proceedings against him.

> Excommunicatus in iudicio, nisi tanquam reus, stare non potest.

> Idem Paduano Episcopo.
>
> Intelleximus ex literis tuis, quod, quum filia cuiusdam nobilis viri parochiani tui cum quodam viro matrimonium contraxisset, comperto postea, quod idem vir pro nece bonae memoriae Vicentini episcopi vinculo tenebatur excommunicationis adstrictus, in tua proposuit praesentia quaestionem. Unde Quia postulasti a nobis, utrum excommunicatus in iudicio stare possit, respondemus, quod conveniri potest, et debet per alium in iudicio respondere, ne videatur de sua malitia commodum reportare, si ex ea fuerit ab eorum impetitione securus.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: A cleric ought to be sued concerning every crime before an ecclesiastical judge, and a contrary custom is not valid.

Lucius III, to the Archbishop of Esztergom.

Clerics, especially in criminal matters, can in no case be condemned by anyone other than an ecclesiastical judge, even if royal custom holds that thieves are to be judged by secular judges. Since the emperor says that even their laws do not disdain to imitate the sacred canons, in which it is generally handed down that a cleric ought to be sued concerning every crime before an ecclesiastical judge, prejudice ought not to be generated against the canons in this respect by any custom.

> Clericus de omni crimine debet coram ecclesiastico iudice conveniri, nec valet consuetudo contraria.
>
> Lucius III. Strigonensi Archiepiscopo.
>
> Clerici vero, maxime in criminalibus, in nullo casu possunt ab alio, quam ab ecclesiastico iudice condemnari, etiamsi consuetudo regia habeat, ut fures a iudicibus saecularibus iudicentur. Quum imperator dicat quod etiam leges eorum non dedignantur sacros canones imitari, in quibus generaliter traditur, ut de omni crimine clericus debeat coram ecclesiastico iudice conveniri, non debet in hac parte canonibus ex aliqua consuetudine praeiudicium generari.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: A judge ought by virtue of his office to provide that the due solemnities are observed in judgments; when these are omitted, the judgment is rendered ineffectual. This is what it says. Abbas Siculus.

Clement III.

Hear the cause that is pending between the brothers of the monastery of Durham and the monks of Saint Albans concerning the church of Cantinz., and terminate it with appeal removed. Among other things, provide this especially: that the brothers of the monastery of Durham enter into the business with the authority and participation of their bishop, lest, if the brothers of Saint Albans prevail, that bishop, presenting himself as abbot of the monastery, be able to revive the settled suit.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: An incorrigible deposed cleric is to be excommunicated and thereafter anathematized. And if he does not thus return to soundness, he is to be restrained by the secular judge. This is what it says. Abbas Siculus.

Celestine III.

Since not by man—(And below:) It was therefore asked of us on your behalf whether it is lawful for a king or any secular person to judge clerics of whatever order when they have been detected in theft, homicide, perjury, or any crimes whatsoever. We answer your consultation in this way: if a cleric constituted in any order has been lawfully detected and convicted in theft, homicide, perjury, or another mortal crime, he is to be deposed by an ecclesiastical judge. If, after being deposed, he is incorrigible, he ought to be excommunicated, and thereafter, as his contumacy increases, struck with the sword of anathema. But afterward, if, descending into the depth of evils, he treats this with contempt, since the Church has nothing further that it can do, lest he be capable of causing the destruction of many more, he is to be restrained by the secular power in such a way that exile is assigned to him or another lawful penalty is inflicted.

> Clericus depositus incorrigibilis excommunicandus est et successive anathematizandus. Et si sic non resipuerit, per iudicem saecularem comprimendus est. H. d. Abbas Siculus.

>
> Quum non ab homine (Et infra:) A nobis itaque fuit ex parte tua quaesitum, utrum liceat regi vel alicui saeculari personae iudicare clericos cuiuscunque ordinis, sive in furto, sive in homicidio, vel periurio, seu quibuscunque fuerint criminibus deprehensi. Consultationi tuae taliter respondemus, quod, si clericus in quocunque ordine constitutus in furto, vel homicidio, vel periurio, seu alio mortali crimine fuerit deprehensus legitime atque convictus, ab ecclesiastico iudice deponendus est. Qui si depositus incorrigibilis fuerit, excommunicari debet, deinde contumacia crescente anathematis mucrone feriri. Postmodum vero, si in profundum malorum veniens contempserit, quum ecclesia non habeat ultra quid faciat, ne possit esse ultra perditio plurimorum, per saecularem comprimendus est potestatem ita, quod ei deputetur exsilium, vel alia legitima poena inferatur.

Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: By a rescript obtained against a violent possessor, one who knowingly succeeds to the wrongful condition is sued. This is what it says according to the common interpretation, which pleases me. Panormitanus.

The same.

Because V., who was said to have violently occupied the church of the cleric P., is dead, as we have learned, and R. afterward entered it, we command that, according to the form of the earlier letters, the business between R. and P. be terminated under the same judges, with reason as intermediary, just as it would have been between the same P. and the aforesaid V. if he were living.

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: The Pope alone, and not an inferior judge, takes cognizance of doubts concerning privileges of the Apostolic See.

Innocent III, to the Abbots of Saint Sergius and Saint George.

When they had come—(And below:) For since a cause concerning privileges of the Apostolic See is pending, we do not wish judgment concerning them to be given by others.

>
> Quum venissent (Et infra:) Quum enim super privilegiis sedis apostolicae causa vertatur, nolumus de ipsis per alios iudicari.

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: An ecclesiastical judge can proceed by way of evangelical or judicial denunciation against any sinner, even a layman, especially by reason of perjury or a broken peace.

The same, to the prelates established throughout France.

He who knows all things, who is the searcher of hearts and knower of secrets, knows that we love our most illustrious son in Christ, Philip, the illustrious King of the French, from a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith, and that we earnestly aspire to his honor, advancement, and increase, considering the exaltation of the kingdom of the French to be the exaltation of the Apostolic See, since this kingdom, blessed by God, has always remained in its devotion and, as we believe, will at no time depart from its devotion; for, although assaults are sometimes made from here and there by evil angels, nevertheless we, who are not ignorant of Satan's devices, shall endeavor to avoid his stratagems, believing that the same king will not permit himself to be seduced by his deceits. Therefore, let no one think that we intend to disturb or diminish the jurisdiction or power of the illustrious King of the French, since he neither wishes nor ought even to impede our jurisdiction and power, and since we do not suffice to fulfill our own jurisdiction, why would we wish to usurp another's?

But since the Lord says in the Gospel: "If your brother sins against you, go and correct him between you and him alone. If he hears you, you will have gained your brother; but if he does not hear you, take with you yet one or two, so that every word may stand in the mouth of two or three witnesses. But if he does not hear them, tell the Church; and if he does not hear the Church, let him be to you as a gentile and a publican"; and since the King of England, as he asserts, is prepared sufficiently to show that the King of the French sins against him, that he himself proceeded concerning him in correction according to the evangelical rule, and that at last, because he made no progress in any way, he told the Church: how can we, who have been called by the heavenly disposition to the governance of the universal Church, fail to hearken to the divine mandate, so that we should not proceed according to its form, unless perhaps he should show before us or our legate a sufficient reason to the contrary?

For we do not intend to judge concerning the fief, judgment of which belongs to him—unless perhaps something has been taken away from the common law by a special privilege or a contrary custom—but to decide concerning sin, the censure of which belongs to us without doubt, and which we can and ought to exercise against anyone. Therefore the royal dignity ought not to consider it injurious to itself if it submits itself to apostolic judgment concerning this matter, since the illustrious Emperor Valentinian is read to have said to the suffragans of the church of Milan: "Take care to establish upon the pontifical seat such a man to whom even we, who govern the empire, may sincerely submit our heads, and whose admonitions, when we transgress as men, we may necessarily receive as the medicines of one who heals."

Nor should we omit that most humble provision which the Emperor Theodosius established and Charlemagne renewed, from whose lineage the same king is known to have descended: namely, "Whoever has a suit, whether he is claimant or defendant, whether at the beginning of the suit or after courses of time have elapsed, whether when the business is being argued or when sentence has already begun to be delivered, if he chooses the judgment of the bishop of the sacrosanct see, immediately and without any hesitation—even if the other party objects—let the matter be directed, with the statement of the litigants, to the judgment of the bishops."

For since we rely not upon a human constitution but rather upon divine law, because our power is not from man but from God, no one of sound mind is ignorant that it belongs to our office to correct every Christian concerning any mortal sin whatsoever and, if he treats correction with contempt, to coerce him through ecclesiastical severity. That we ought and are able to correct is plain from both pages of the Testament, since the Lord cries through the Prophet: "Cry out, do not cease; exalt your voice like a trumpet, and announce their crimes to my people"; and he adds in the same place: "Unless you announce his impiety to the impious man, he will die in the iniquity which he has committed, but I will require his blood from your hand." The Apostle also admonishes us to correct the unruly, and elsewhere the same says: "Reprove, entreat, rebuke in all patience and doctrine." That we also can and ought to coerce is plain from what the Lord says to the Prophet, who was from the priests of Anathoth: "Behold, I have established you over nations and kingdoms, that you may uproot and destroy, scatter, build, and plant." It is certain, however, that every mortal sin is to be uprooted, destroyed, and scattered. Moreover, when the Lord handed the keys of the kingdom of heaven to blessed Peter, he said to him: "Whatever you bind upon earth will be bound also in heaven, and whatever you loose upon earth will be loosed also in heaven." But no one doubts that everyone sinning mortally is bound before God. Therefore, so that Peter may imitate the divine judgment, he ought to bind on earth those who are known to be bound in heaven.

But perhaps it will be said that one must act in one way with kings and in another with others. Yet we know it is written in the divine law: "You shall judge the great as the small, and with you there shall be no acceptance of persons," which blessed James testifies intervenes if you say to the one clothed in splendid apparel, "You sit well here," but to the poor man, "You stand there," or, "Sit beneath my footstool." Although we can proceed in this manner concerning any criminal sin, so that we may call the sinner back from vice to virtue and from error to truth, especially nevertheless when the sin is against peace, which is the bond of charity, [concerning which Christ specially commanded the Apostles: "Into whatever house you enter, first say: 'Peace to this house'; and if a son of peace is there, your peace will rest upon him. But whoever will not receive you or hear your words, go outside and shake the dust from your feet as testimony against them." For what is it for the Apostles to go outside from such persons except to deny them apostolic communion? What is it to shake the dust from their feet except to exercise ecclesiastical severity? For this is that dust which, when Moses scattered ashes from the furnace, became a plague of ulcers throughout all the land of Egypt. How grave a sentence of severity those who do not receive messengers of peace or hear their words are to suffer at the final judgment, Truth himself consequently shows, setting it forth not simply but with a certain affirmation: "Amen I say to you, it will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah on the day of judgment than for that city"; understanding by the city its citizens, from whom he did not except kings themselves. Moreover, since according to lawful enactments another may use against a person whatever rule of law that person has established against another, and the wise man declares, "Submit to the law which you yourself have enacted," and since the same King of the French, against Richard of illustrious memory, formerly King of the English—who, that we may speak with due respect for the same king, was not of a worse condition, since we say this not to his confusion but for our excuse—used our office and benefit in war, how will he not admit against himself on another's behalf what he admitted for himself against that king?] Surely there ought not to be with us weight and weight, measure and measure, each of which is abominable before God?

Finally, since treaties of peace were reformed between those kings and confirmed on each side by an oath personally sworn, but were not observed until the appointed time, surely we shall be able to take cognizance of the sanctity of the oath—which without doubt belongs to the judgment of the Church—so that the broken treaties of peace may be restored? Therefore, lest we appear to foster such discord by dissimulation, to dissemble the destruction of religious places, and to neglect the slaughter of the Christian people, we have given in command to our beloved son the Abbot of Casamari, the aforesaid legate, that, unless the king himself either restores a solid peace with the aforesaid king, or enters into suitable truces, or at least humbly permits the same abbot and our venerable brother the Archbishop of Bourges summarily to take cognizance whether the complaint that the King of the English brings against him before the Church is just, or whether the exception that he caused to be expressed against him to us through his letters is lawful, the abbot is not to omit proceeding according to the form given to him by us.

Therefore, through apostolic writings we command all of you, and strictly enjoin you by virtue of obedience, that, after the same abbot has executed the apostolic mandate concerning this matter, you humbly receive his sentence—or rather, more truly, ours—observe it yourselves, and cause it to be observed by others, secure in the knowledge that, if you act otherwise, we shall punish your disobedience. [Given at the Lateran, ..., in the seventh year of our pontificate, 1204.]

> Novit ille, qui nihil ignorat, qui scrutator est cordium ac conscius secretorum, quod clarissimum in Christo filium nostrum Philippum regem Francorum illustrem de corde puro et conscientia bona et fide non ficta diligimus, et ad honorem ac profectum et incrementum ipsius efficaciter adspiramus, exaltationem regni Francorum sublimationem sedis apostolicae reputantes, quum hoc regnum benedictum a Deo semper in ipsius devotione permanserit, et ab eius devotione nullo, sicut credimus, tempore sit discessurum; quia, licet interdum hinc inde fiant immissiones per angelos malos, nos tamen, qui satanae non ignoramus astutias, circumventiones ipsius studebimus evitare, credentes, quod idem rex illius seduci fallaciis non se permittet. Non ergo putet aliquis, quod iurisdictionem aut potestatem illustris regis Francorum perturbare aut minuere intendamus, quum ipse iurisdictionem et potestatem nostram nec velit nec debeat etiam impedire, quumque iurisdictionem propriam non sufficiamus explere, cur alienam usurpare vellemus? Sed quum Dominus dicat in evangelio: si peccaverit in te frater tuus, vade et corripe eum inter te et ipsum solum. Si te audierit, lucratus eris fratrem tuum; si te autem non audierit, adhibe tecum adhuc unum vel duos, ut in ore duorum vel trium testium stet omne verbum. Quod si non audierit eos, dic ecclesiae; si autem ecclesiam non audierit, sit tibi sicut ethnicus et publicanus, et rex Angliae, sicut asserit, sit paratus sufficienter ostendere, quod rex Francorum peccat in ipsum, et ipse circa eum in correctione processit secundum regulam evangelicam, et tandem, quia nullo modo profecit, dixit ecclesiae: quomodo nos, qui sumus ad regimen universalis ecclesiae superna dispositione vocati, mandatum divinum possumus non exaudire, ut non procedamus secundum formam ipsius, nisi forsitan ipse coram nobis vel legato nostro sufficientem in contrarium rationem ostendat? Non enim intendimus iudicare de feudo, cuius ad ipsum spectat iudicium, nisi forte iuri communi per speciale privilegium vel contrariam consuetudinem aliquid sit detractum, sed decernere de peccato, cuius ad nos pertinet sine dubitatione censura, quam in quemlibet exercere possumus et debemus. Non igitur iniuriosum sibi debet regia dignitas reputare, si super hoc apostolico iudicio se committat, quum Valentinianus inclitus imperator suffraganeis Mediolanensis ecclesiae dixisse legatur: Talem in pontificali sede constituere procuretis, cui et nos, qui gubernamus imperium, sincere nostra capita submittamus, et eius monita, quum tanquam homines deliquerimus, suscipiamus necessario velut medicamenta curantis. Nec sic illud humillimum omittamus, quod Theodosius statuit imperator, et Carolus, innovavit, de cuius genere rex ipse noscitur descendisse: Quicunque videlicet litem habens, sive petitor fuerit sive reus, sive in initio litis vel decursis temporum curriculis, sive quum negotium peroratur, sive quum iam coeperit promi sententia, si iudicium elegerit sacrosanctae sedis antistitis, illico sine aliqua dubitatione, etiamsi pars alia refragetur, ad episcoporum iudicium cum sermone litigantium dirigatur. Quum enim non humanae constitutioni, sed divinae legi potius innitamur, quia potestas nostra non est ex homine, sed ex Deo: nullus, qui sit sanae mentis, ignorat, quin ad officium nostrum spectet de quocunque mortali peccato corripere quemlibet Christianum, et, si correctionem contempserit, ipsum per districtionem ecclesiasticam coercere. Quod enim debeamus corripere ac possimus, ex utraque patet pagina testamenti, quum clamet Dominus per Prophetam: Clama, ne cesses, quasi tuba exalta vocem tuam, et annuncia populo meo scelera eorum, et subiungat ibidem: Nisi annunciaveris impio impietatem suam, ipse in iniquitate, quam operatus est, morietur; sanguinem autem eius de manu tua requiram. Apostolus quoque nos monet corripere inquietos, et alibi dicit idem: Argue, obsecra, increpa in omni patientia et docirina. Quod autem possimus et debeamus etiam coercere, patet ex eo, quod inquit Dominus ad Prophetam, qui fuit de sacerdotibus Anathot: Ecce constitui te super gentes et regna, ut evellas et destruas, et dissipes, et aedifices, et plantes. Constat vero, quod evellendum, destruendum et dissipandum est omne mortale peccatum. Praeterea quum Dominus claves regni coelorum B. Petro tradidit, dixit ei: Quodcunque ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum et in coelis, et quodcunque solveris super terram, erit solutum et in coelis. Verum nullus dubitat, quin omnis mortaliter peccans apud Deum sit ligatus. Ut ergo Petrus divinum iudicium imitetur, ligare debet in terris quos ligatos esse constat in coelis. Sed forsan dicetur, quod aliter cum regibus, et aliter cum aliis est agendum. Ceterum scriptum novimus in lege divina: Ita magnum iudicabis, ut parvum, nec erit apud te acceptio personarum, *quam B. Iacobus intervenire testatur, si dixeris ei, qui indutus est veste praeclara, tu sede hic bene; pauperi autem, tu sta illic, aut sede sub scabello pedum meorum. *Licet autem hoc modo procedere valeamus super quolibet criminali peccato, ut peccatorem revocemus a vitio ad virtutem, ab errore ad veritatem, praecipue tamen quum contra pacem peccatur, quae est vinculum caritatis, [de qua Christus specialiter praecepit Apostolis: In quamcunque domum intraveritis, primum dicite: Pax huic domui, et si fuerit ibi filius pacis, requiescet super illum pax vestra. Quicunque autem non receperint vos, nec audierint sermones vestros, exeuntes foras excutite pulverem de pedibus vestris in testimoniun illis. Quid enim est a talibus exire foras Apostolos, nisi communionem eis apostolicam denegare? Quid est excutere pulverem de pedibus suis, nisi districtionem ecclesiasticam exercere? Hic est etenim pulvis ille, qui Moyse cinerem de camino spargente fuit ad plagam ulceris super omnem terram Aegypti. Quam gravis autem districtionis sententia in ultimo sint examine feriendi qui non recipiunt pacis nuncios, nec audiunt sermones eorum, per se ipsa veritas consequenter ostendit, non simpliciter, sed cum quadam affirmatione proponens: Amen dico vobis, tolerabilius erit terrae Sodomorum et Gomorheorum in die iudicii quam illi civitati; in civitate cives intelligens, a quibus non excepit ipsos reges. Porro quum secundum legitimas sanctiones quod quisque iuris in alterum statuit alius eo uti valeat contra illum, et sapiens protestetur: Patere legem, quam ipse tuleris, et rex ipse Francorum contra clarae memoriae R. quondam Anglorum regem, qui, ut salva ipsius regis pace loquamur, quia non ad confusionem eius, sed ad excusationem nostram hoc dicimus, non eo erat deterioris conditionis, in bello fuit officio et beneficio nostro usus, quomodo quod pro se adversus illum admisit contra se pro alio non admittet?] Numquid apud nos debet esse pondus et pondus, mensura et mensura, quorum utrumque est abominabile apud Deum? Postremo quum inter reges ipsos reformata fuerint pacis foedera, et utrinque praestito proprio iuramento firmata, quae tamen usque ad tempus praetaxatum servata non fuerint, numquid non poterimus de iuramenti religione cognoscere, quod ad iudicium ecclesiae non est dubium pertinere, ut rupta pacis foedera reformentur? Ne ergo tantam discordiam videamur sub dissimulatione fovere, dissimulare religiosorum locorum excidium, et stragem negligere populi Christiani, dilecto filio abbati Casemarii praedicto legato dedimus in praeceptis, ut, nisi rex ipse vel solidam pacem cum praedicto rege reformet, vel treugas ineat competentes, vel saltem humiliter patiatur, ut idem abbas et venerabilis frater noster archiepiscopus Bituricensis de plano cognoscant, utrum iusta sit querimonia, quam contra eum proponit coram ecclesia rex Anglorum, vel eius exceptio sit legitima, quam contra eum per suas nobis literas duxit exprimendam, iuxta formam sibi datam a nobis procedere non omittat. *Ideoque universitatibus vestris per apostolica scripta mandamus, et in virtute obedientiae districte praecipimus, quatenus postquam idem abbas super hoc mandatum fuerit apostolicum exsecutus, sententiam eius, imo nostram verius recipiatis humiliter et vos ipsi servetis et faciatis ab aliis observari, securi, quod si secus egeritis inobedientiam vestram puniemus. *[*Dat. Latin source headnote: A principal party ought to set forth the fact in judgment personally, not through an advocate, unless that party is without discretion.

The same, to the Bishop of Ely.

The pastoral office—(And below: cf. c. 28, On the Office of a Delegated Judge, I.29.) We establish, moreover, that the principal parties are to set forth the fact not through advocates but personally, unless perhaps they are so lacking in discretion that, with the judge's permission, their deficiency is supplied through others. [But since, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourteenth day before the Kalends of January, 1204.]

Principalis persona per se, non per advocatum debet factum proponere in iudicio, nisi sit indiscreta.

Idem Episcopo Heliensi.

Pastoralis (Et infra: cf. c. 28. de off. iud. del. I. 29.) Statuimus praeterea, ut principales personae non per advocatos, sed per se ipsas factum proponant, nisi forte sint adeo indiscretae, ut earum defectus de iudicis licentia per alios suppleatur. [*Quum autem etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. XIV. Kal. Ian. *1204.]

Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: If the action and the claim are inept, or the claim alone, the defendant ought to be absolved from the pending judgment; nevertheless, the claimant will be heard again if he proceeds suitably. This is what it says according to its meaning.

The same, to the nobleman Matthew de Riparia.

Having examined the cause pending between you and the knights of Campania concerning the church of Saint Angelo de Casaperota, having heard the proceedings, confessions, and attestations, and having investigated the instruments and allegations, we perceived clearly that the arbitral award which T., the vice-lord of Sabina, was said to have promulgated concerning that business had been pronounced contrary to the form of law and of the submission to arbitration. Hence, notwithstanding the confirmation of Pope Celestine, our predecessor of happy memory, who had confirmed it as providently rendered and received by each party, we decreed it null and void.

We recognized, however, the action which you brought against the aforesaid knights concerning the right of patronage of that church to be incongruous and inept, because, although you introduced witnesses to prove that, when the aforesaid vice-lord A. received that church as though sequestered, you possessed the right of patronage of that church, you could neither bring a vindication of the thing nor petition for its restitution. Hence we pronounced that your claim in this respect did not hold, absolving the same knights from it, yet in such a way that, if you wish to bring a congruous and suitable action, they shall nevertheless be bound to answer you. [Therefore let no one, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the ninth day before the Kalends of April, in the tenth year of our pontificate, 1207.]

Textual note: The Latin source prints proiecto in the sentence explaining why neither vindication nor restitution was available. The word is syntactically difficult and may stand for profecto; because it does not alter the stated legal consequence, it has not been represented by an additional English adverb.

Angeli de Casaperota, actis confessionibus et attestationibus auditis, instrumentis et allegationibus indagatis, perpendimus evidenter, arbitrium, quod T. vicedominus Sabinensis dicebatur super eodem negotio promulgasse, contra formam iuris et compromissi fuisse dictatum. Unde, non obstante confirmatione felicis memoriae Coelestini Papae praedecessoris nostri, qui confirmaverat illud, sicut provide latum fuerat, et ab utraque parte receptum, decrevimus ipsum irritum et inane*. Actionem autem, quam super iure patronatus eiusdem ecclesiae contra praefatos milites intentabas, incongruentem cognovimus et ineptam, quia, quum testes induxeris ad probandum, quod, quando praefatus A. vicedominus ecclesiam eandem tanquam sequestratam accepit, tu ius patronatus ipsius ecclesiae possidebas, proiecto nec rei vindicationem intentare, nec ipsius restitutionem poteras postulare. Unde intentionem tuam in hac parte pronunciavimus non tenere, absolventes eosdem milites ab eadem, ita tamen, quod si congruentem et aptam intentare volueris actionem, respondere tibi nililominus teneantur. Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: The preceptors of the Temple can sue and defend on behalf of their houses; neither their religious state nor the fact that their origin is unknown stands in their way.

The same, to the Master and Brothers of the militia of the Temple established in Italy.

Since you are appointed to the service of Jesus Christ, who, since he is just, loves justice, and whose countenance beholds equity, we are bound by paternal solicitude to guard against your losses, lest, because you apply yourselves to works of piety, you suffer injury in your justice. We have clearly learned that certain judges, both secular and ecclesiastical, in Italy do not admit the preceptors whom you have in your houses to pursue their justice in causes, as though it were not lawful for those who have resolved to adhere to peaceful pursuits to undertake the care of contentious business. They allege for their exclusion that the origin of those men is not known to them, although, from whatever places they have come, called by divine grace, provided they execute the office of their order laudably, knowledge of their nation is required superfluously. Therefore, by apostolic authority we prohibit anyone from excluding those preceptors from suing or answering in the prosecution of causes on an occasion of this kind. [Therefore let no one, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fourth day before the Ides of April, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Textual note: The Latin Library and Friedberg-derived texts print the apparent typographical form decrecreverunt; the translation follows the evident sense of decreverunt, "have resolved."

Praeceptores templi pro domibus suis agere et defendere possunt; nec obstat eis religio, vel quod ignota sit eorum origo.

Accepimus plane, quod quidam tam saeculares quam ecclesiastici iudices in Italia illos, quos habetis in domibus vestris praeceptores, in causis ad prosequendam suam iustitiam non admittunt, tanquam licitum non sit eis super litigiosis negotiis curam agere, qui pacificis decrecreverunt studiis inhaerere, illud allegantes in repulsionem ipsorum, quod eorum ipsis generatio non est nota, qui undecunque locorum venerint, gratia divina vocati, dummodo laudabiliter exsequantur officium sui ordinis, ex superabundanti requiritur suae notio nationis. Ne quis igitur in prosecutione causarum praeceptores eosdem ab agendo vel respondendo sub occasione huiusmodi repellat, auctoritate apostolica inhibemus. [*Nulli ergo etc. Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. IV. Latin source headnote: Prelates ought to do justice to laymen concerning clerics, notwithstanding a frustratory appeal; clerics nevertheless ought not to be drawn by laymen to a secular forum, even when their prelates are negligent.

The same, to the Bishop of Vercelli and the Abbot of Toleto.

In what manner and when—(And below: cf. c. 17, On Accusations and Denunciations, V.1.) You are to command the prelates on our behalf to cause full justice to be exhibited to laymen complaining against clerics, notwithstanding frustratory appeals which clerics frequently interpose to their grievance, lest, through a failure of justice, clerics be drawn by laymen to a secular judgment, which we prohibit altogether; and you are to strive by every means that this not occur. Moreover, we wish your solicitude to remain vigilant against the deceits of heretics, admonishing and beseeching you in the Lord that you apply yourselves prudently and effectively to uprooting from the Lord's field the tares of heretical depravity. [Given on the fourth day before the Kalends of February, 1206.]

Praelati debent laicis de clericis, appellatione frustratoria non obstante, iustitiam facere; ad saeculare tamen forum clerici a laicis trahi non debent, etiam data ipsorum praelatorum negligentia.

Idem Vercellensi Episcopo et Abbati de Toleto.

Praecipiatis ex parte nostra praelatis, ut laicis de clericis conquerentibus plenam faciant iustitiam exhiberi, non obstantibus appellationibus frustratoriis, quas in eorum gravamen clerici frequenter opponunt, ne pro defectu iustitiae clerici trahantur a laicis ad iudicium saeculare, quod omnino fieri prohibemus, et vos, ne fiat, omnimodis satagatis et ceterum adversus haerecticorum fallacias sollicitudinem vestram vigilare volumus, monentes et obsecrantes in Domino, quatenus ad exstirpandum de agro dominico lolium haereticae pravitatis prudenter et efficaciter intendatis. Latin source headnote: A judge who, as a private person, has an almost similar cause to the one he has as judge is removed from judging. This is what it says.

The same.

We remember having committed to you, sons T. and G., and the Archdeacon of Paris the cause pending between our beloved son the Abbot and Convent of Vendôme on one side and the Archdeacon of Chartres on the other concerning certain procurations. But the said abbot and convent, unwilling to answer the other party unless they first consulted us in accordance with the privileges of the Roman Pontiff granted to their monastery, sent our beloved son W., a monk of that monastery, to the Apostolic See for this reason, petitioning nevertheless that we deign to substitute you, son dean, in place of the aforesaid Archdeacon of Paris for the decision of that business. But because, since an almost similar cause concerns that same archdeacon, he would appear excessively favorable to the other party, substituting you, son dean, in place of that archdeacon, through apostolic writings we command your discretion that, notwithstanding the earlier letters obtained before the monk's arrival, you proceed in the cause, reason leading the way.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: If judges take cognizance of the principal matter and preliminary exceptions at the same time, or receive witnesses concerning the principal matter before issue has been joined, appeal is lawfully taken from them.

Honorius III, to the Archdeacon of Reims and the Dean of Brim in the diocese of Cologne.

A petition presented to us by our beloved son R., elect of Verdun, declared that, when the proctors of himself and of H. the archdeacon and certain canons of Verdun, his adversaries, had formerly approached our hearing concerning the fact of his election, we, having heard the petition of the opposing party and the things proposed by it, directed our letters under a certain form to our venerable brother the Bishop of Paris and his co-judges, containing among other things that, after summoning those who were to be summoned, they should inquire into the truth concerning the matters proposed and other things touching the business, compelling the witnesses who happened to be named to give testimony according to the customary form, and fixing for the parties a suitable term on which they were to present themselves before us, personally or through suitable proctors, to receive a just sentence.

Therefore, after the parties had been cited, no proceeding occurred on the first day. And when ten persons from the opposing party appeared at the second term and were asked in court whether they would oppose the elect, seven of them being unwilling to answer, the remaining three offered themselves to act. But when the same elect objected by way of exception that some of those who were proceeding against him were involved in conspiracy and others in excommunication, offering to prove this, the aforesaid judges ruled interlocutorily that they would inquire simultaneously into these matters and the principal business, concerning which it appeared to the same judges that inquiry should be made. They refused, as though they were not judges but investigators, to admit the proofs of the same elect concerning his said exceptions; instead, perverting the order of law, they intended to inquire personally and simultaneously into the aforesaid exceptions and the principal business, and they proceeded even to the reception of witnesses although issue had not yet been joined concerning that business. For this reason the aforesaid elect appealed to our hearing, humbly petitioning that, since the letters obtained for those judges import not an inquiry but a commission, as appears from their contents, we deign to revoke as void what was done by them after his appeal and to commit the cause to another.

Therefore, because the business was delegated not by way of inquiry but of commission, through apostolic writings we command your discretion that, meeting in a suitable place convenient for the parties, if it is established that appeal was taken on account of the said grievances or any of them, after revoking as void whatever you find attempted after such an appeal, you proceed in the cause itself according to the contents of the earlier letters, with appeal removed, reason leading the way, without the loss of delay.

Virdunensis electi petitio declaravit, quod, quum super facto electionis suae ipsius et H. archidiaconi ac quorundam canonicorum Virdunensium adversariorum suorum procuratores ad nostram olim audientiam accessissent, nos, audita petitione partis adversae, et quae proposita fuerunt ab ipsa, venerabili fratri nostro Parisiensi episcopo et coniudicibus suis sub certa forma literas nostras direximus, inter alia continentes, ut, vocatis qui forent evocandi, super propositis et aliis negotium contingentibus inquirerent veritatem, et testes, quos nominari contingeret iuxta consuetam formam, ad testimonium compellendo, et praefigendo partibus terminum competentem, quo per se vel per procuratores idoneos nostro se conspectui praesentarent, iustam sententiam recepturae. Partibus ergo citatis, non fuit processum in aliquo prima die, quumque decem de parte adversa secundo termino comparuissent, et fuissent, si electo se opponerent, in iure requisiti, septem eorum respondere nolentibus, ad agendum tres se residui obtulerunt. Quum autem idem electus quibusdam ex his, qui contra eum agebant, conspirationem, et quibusdam excommunicationem in modum exceptionis obiiceret, se id offerens probaturum, praefati iudices interlocuti fuerunt, quod de his et principali negotio simul inquirerent, a quibus videretur ipsis iudicibus inquirendum, nolentes, quasi non iudices, sed inquisitores exsisterent, super dictis exceptionibus ipsius electi probationes admittere, sed pervertendo iuris ordinem de praemissis exceptionibus et principali negotio pariter per se inquirere intendentes, et procedentes etiam ad receptionem testium, lite nondum super eodem negotio contestata, quare praefatus electus nostram audientiam appellavit, humiliter supplicans, ut, quum literae ad ipsos iudices obtentae non inquisitionem, sed commissionem sapiant, prout apparet ex continentia earundem, quod ab eis factum est post appellationem ipsius revocare in irritum, et causam alii comittere dignaremur. Quia vero non in modum inquisitionis, sed commissionis negotium exstitit delegatum, discretioni vestrae per apostolica scripta mandamus, quatenus, convenientes ad locum idoneum et partibus competentem, si ex dictis gravaminibus vel aliquo ipsorum appellatum constiterit, revocato in irritum quicquid post appellationem huiusmodi inveneritis attentatum, in causa ipsa iuxta priorum continentiam literarum, appellatione remota, ratione praevia sine morae dispendio procedatis.

Latin source headnote: Notwithstanding the passage of three years, a delegate can proceed in a cause committed to him.

The same, to Master Tancred, Canon of Bologna.

Our venerable brother the Archbishop of Ravenna proposed before us that, although the decision of the cause pending between him on one side and the community of Cervia on the other concerning jurisdiction over the city of Cervia and certain other articles had been prolonged for three years through their subterfuges and cavils, and at last, after joinder of issue and various commissions, we commanded you to remit it to us sufficiently instructed, the said people of Cervia, asserting that the pendency of the judgment had expired through the passage of three years, refused to answer under your examination. Therefore, unwilling that the decision of the same cause be prolonged any further, by authority of the present writings we command that, notwithstanding an exception of this kind, you proceed in that business, with appeal removed and reason leading the way, according to the form handed to you. Chapter XXI

Latin source headnote: A claimant who prevails in a possessory action before the judge of the thing is not bound to answer before that judge concerning ownership if he belongs entirely to another forum. This is what it says, and it is a notable case.

The same, to the Bishop and Masters T. and B. of Prato, residing at Bologna.

The Abbot and Convent of Saint Mary of Florence formerly signified to us that the Florentine podestà promulgated a definitive sentence in their favor against the community of the castle of Signa concerning possession, or quasi-possession, of the right of electing a rector there, which they said belonged to them. But afterward, when that community was unwilling to receive the nobleman B. Vinci-Werra, whom they had elected rector of the aforesaid castle, the aforesaid podestà, although frequently requested, not only took no care to put his sentence into execution and compel the community itself to receive the said nobleman as rector, but did not even permit that community to be constrained to this by the faithful men of their monastery; rather, the podestà improperly compelled the aforesaid abbot and convent to answer the aforesaid community in a secular judgment concerning ownership, or quasi-ownership, of the said right.

Hence, through our letters we enjoined upon you that, if it was so, through ecclesiastical censures you were to compel that community to admit as rector the person elected by the same monks; afterward you were to hear what the parties considered should be proposed concerning ownership, or quasi-ownership, of the said right, and decide the cause as would be just, notwithstanding any statute contrary to ecclesiastical liberty, or the fact that the aforesaid abbot and convent were compelled to join issue concerning this matter in a secular judgment. Recently, however, we learned from the report of the abbot and convent that, when knowledge of the letters obtained from us concerning this matter had reached that community, its syndic, after exhibiting before the judge of the podestà the oath against calumny, caused the abbot to be cited to undergo a similar oath before him, so that by this the same abbot would be understood to have renounced the apostolic letters by the act itself, or, if he refused to do this, would be held as convicted. And when you had cited the aforesaid community to your presence frequently and peremptorily, its syndic declaring that he wished to propose dilatory exceptions, you established a term on which he was to do this or answer concerning the principal business.

But the other party, by way of exception, proposed among other things that it was not then bound by law to answer before you because the time was one of judicial vacation on account of the vintage. The syndic of the monastery answered that this was proposed maliciously so that, with the cause prolonged, the term of the elect's governance might elapse uselessly. This appeared from the fact that the abbot was prohibited by a messenger of the podestà from suing the same community in judgment outside the Florentine district. For this reason the aforementioned abbot and convent humbly petitioned that we deign to oppose malices of this kind. Therefore we command your discretion that, absolving as a precaution, with the obstacle of appeal removed, both the same syndic and the monks of that monastery whose testimony he wished to use, if it should happen that excommunication is objected against them to impede the progress of the cause, lest under such a pretext they be capable of being excluded from suing or testifying, notwithstanding this, you proceed in the business, according to the form of the mandate received, reason leading the way, imposing the due end upon the cause without the loss of delay, so fulfilling the apostolic precept that we ought not to impute to you the difficulty which is known to threaten the said monastery on account of delay. [Given at Rieti, on the second day before the Kalends of November, in the tenth year of our pontificate, 1225.]

Title II: On the Competent Forum

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric ought to be sued before his own bishop.

From the Council of Chalcedon.

If any cleric has a business against a cleric, let him not forsake his own bishop and run to secular judgments, but let the action first be ventilated before him; or at least, with the counsel of that bishop, they shall obtain judgment before others whom both parties choose. But if anyone acts contrary to these things, he shall be subject to canonical corrections.

DE FORO COMPETENTI.

Clericus coram suo episcopo conveniri debet.

Ex concilio Calcedonensi.

Si quis clericus adversus clericum negotium habeat, non deserat episcopum proprium, et ad saecularia percurrat iudicia, sed prius apud ipsum actio ventiletur, vel certe consilio eiusdem episcopi apud alios, quos utraque pars voluerit, iudicium obtinebunt. Si quis autem praeter haec fecerit, canonicis correptionibus subiacebit.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: If a secular judge constrains or condemns a cleric on his own authority, he ought to be excommunicated.

From the Council of Paris.

Let no judge presume on his own authority to constrain or condemn a priest, a deacon, any cleric, or the lesser ministers of the Church without the permission of the pontiff. But if he does so, let him be separated from the Church of God, upon which he is known to inflict injury, until, recognizing his guilt, he makes amends.

Textual note: Both the Latin Library and Friedberg-derived e-texts print Nullus iudicium at the beginning of the decretal. The syntax and the source headnote require a personal subject; the translation therefore renders the evident sense "no judge."

Iudex saecularis, si clericum per se distringit vel condemnat, excommunicari debet.

Ex concilio Parisiensi.

Nullus iudicium neque presbyterum, neque diaconum aut clericum ullum, aut minores ecclesiae sine permissu pontificis per se distringere aut condemnare praesumat. Quod si fecerit, ab ecclesia Dei, cui > iniuriam irrogare dignoscitur, tamdiu sit sequestratus, quousque reatum suum cognoscens emendet.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: By reason of the thing concerning which the action is brought, a person obtains a forum where the thing is. It is commonly summarized thus.

From the African Council.

Certainly, if the bishops between whom a cause is pending are from different provinces, let the primate in whose province the place concerning which they contend is situated appoint the judges. But if, etc. (cf. c. 1, On Arbitrators, I.43.)

> Ratione rei, de qua agitur, sortitur quis forum ibi, ubi res est. Sic communiter summatur.
>
> Ex concilio Africano.
>
> Sane si episcopi, inter quos causa versatur, sint diversarum provinciarum, ille primas det iudices, in cuius provincia est locus, de quo contenditur. Si autem etc. (cf. c. 1. *de arb. I. *43.)

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A bishop recused as suspect, whose grounds for suspicion are notorious, can appoint a delegate who is not suspect to the parties, whose sentence he will be able personally to put into execution.

Gregory, to Boniface, Defender of Corsica.

If anyone has a cause against a cleric, let him approach the cleric's bishop. If the bishop is recused as suspect, let an executor [or] be appointed by him; or, if even this is rejected by the claimant, one is to be appointed by the same bishop who shall compel the parties to choose for themselves judges by mutual consent. Whatever is defined by them is by every means to be completed through the bishop's solicitude, the law having been observed, [so that there may be no cause by which they can weary themselves with litigation. Given in the month of August, in the fourth indiction, 601.]

Dat. mens. Aug. Ind. IV. *601.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: A layman can be sued before an ecclesiastical judge concerning a thing belonging to a church or cleric; but if he plausibly denies that the thing belongs to the church or cleric, he is sued before his own judge in order to decline ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

Alexander III.

If a priest or another cleric proceeds against a layman concerning his own things or those of the church, and the layman asserts that those things are not those of the church, priest, or cleric who proceeds against him concerning them, but are his own, that layman ought, by rigor of law, to be drawn concerning this before the judge of the forum, since a claimant ought always to follow the defendant's forum, although in many regions it is otherwise by custom.

> Super re ecclesiae vel clerici potest laicus coram ecclesiastico iudice conveniri; sed si probabiliter negat, rem esse ecclesiae vel clerici, ad iurisdictionem ecclesiasticam declinandam, convenitur coram suo iudice.
>
> Alexander III.
>
> Si vero presbyter, vel clericus alius aliquem laicum de rebus suis vel ecclesiae impetierit, et laicus res ipsas non esse ecclesiae vel presbyteri aut clerici, qui eum exinde impetit, sed suas proprias asseverat, laicus ipse debet de rigore iuris super hoc ad forensem iudicem trahi, quum actor semper forum rei sequi debeat, licet in plerisque partibus aliter de consuetudine habeatur.

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: If a feudal question exists between a cleric and a layman, the lord of the fief shall take cognizance; but if he is negligent, a papal delegate shall take cognizance, even one appointed before the negligence. This is what it says according to the reading of the gloss.

The same.

From the representation transmitted to us by B., C., and W., knights of your church, we understood that, when R. de Cassaville had drawn them into a cause concerning a certain possession before our venerable brother the Bishop of Troyes, the nobleman de Campis, their lord, [from whom they held the possessions,] prohibited them under the obligation of fealty from answering concerning a secular fief in an ecclesiastical judgment. Therefore the aforesaid bishop promulgated a sentence of excommunication against them as contumacious, etc. (And below:) [We command that you absolve the aforesaid knights from excommunication, contradiction and appeal ceasing, etc.] (And below:) Thereafter you are to command that the cause be terminated through the lord of the fief; and if he has maliciously delayed anything, you are to impose the due end upon it, with the obstacle of appeal removed.

Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A feudal question ought to be terminated through the lord of the fief, whether secular or ecclesiastical, even if the vassals are clerics; and, if several lords are claimed, one cannot take cognizance—especially in the other's absence—whether the fief belongs to him. This is what it says according to the more notable reading.

The same.

But because a question was moved against the same provost concerning certain fiefs, we establish that, once a bishop has been consecrated in that church who possesses full authority and power, cognizance concerning those fiefs is to be taken under his judgment if they pertain to ecclesiastical cognizance; otherwise the question itself is to be left to the imperial pleasure, as shall be just.

> Per dominum feudi saecularem sive ecclesiasticum quaestio feudalis terminari debet, etiamsi vasalli sint clerici, et, si plures praetendantur domini, non potest unus cognoscere, maxime alio absente, an feudum ad eum pertineat. H. d. secundum lecturam magis notabilem.
>
> Idem.
>
> Verum quoniam de quibusdam feudis adversus eundem praepositum quaestio mota fuit, statuimus, ut, ex quo episcopus fuerit in eadem ecclesia consecratus, qui plenam auctoritatem habeat et potestatem, de feudis ipsis sub suo iudicio cognoscatur, si ad ecclesiasticam cognitionem pertineant; alioquin ipsa quaestio imperiali beneplacito, sicut iustum fuerit, relinquatur.

Chapter VIII

Latin source headnote: Malefactors against churches can be sued in either forum.

Lucius III.

Since it is a general rule that the claimant follows the defendant's forum, it is fitting that plunderers first be sued before secular judges. But if they treat the exhibition of justice with contempt, or if the judges are negligent for any cause whatsoever, because they are to be judged sacrilegious by the Church, you will be able to exercise ecclesiastical censure against them concerning that crime. But because secular judges are frequently remiss in exhibiting justice to ecclesiastical persons in judgment, it has now been introduced by custom in favor of the Church that the rectors of venerable places can sue their malefactors, who are to be judged sacrilegious, before whichever judge they prefer.

> Malefactores ecclesiarum in utroque foro conveniri possunt.
>
> Lucius III.
>
> Quum sit generale, ut actor forum rei sequatur, conveniens est, ut apud iudices saeculares raptores prius conveniantur. Sed si iustitiam exhibere contempserint, aut iudices ex quaecunque causa fuerint negligentes, quia iudicandi sunt sacrilegi ab ecclesia, de crimine illo censurem poteris in eos ecclesiasticam exercere. Verum quoniam saeculares iudices in exhibenda iustitia personis ecclesiasticis saepe in iudicio sunt remissi, iam per consuetudinem in favorem ecclesiae est introductum, ut malefactores suos, qui sacrilegi sunt censendi, venerabilium locorum rectores possint sub quo maluerint iudice convenire.

Chapter IX

Latin source headnote: The causes of clerics are terminated according to the laws, not according to the customs of laymen. Or thus: in a place under the temporal jurisdiction of the Church, the causes of clerics are to be terminated according to canon law. This is what it says according to the gloss, and each summary admits of qualification.

Celestine III.

That to clerics—(And below:) No bishop or cleric is to be drawn to secular judgments. For they have their own judges, and they have nothing in common with public laws. Pope Boniface, moreover, and Gelasius and many other of our predecessors, agreeing with the more ancient councils—as is clearly apparent to men skilled in both laws—issued the same provision in sacred constitutions. Therefore, induced by this reason, through apostolic writings we command that, if clerics residing at Paris have any pecuniary causes against others, or others against them, you decide them with appeal removed according to canon law, and do not permit custom to prevail over written law.

> Causae clericorum secundum iura, non secundum consuetudines laicorum terminantur. Vel sic: in loco temporalis iurisdictionis ecclesiae causae clericorum sunt secundum ius canonicum terminandae. Hoc dicit secundum gl. et utrumque summarium recipit determinationem.
>
> Coelestinus III.
>
> Quod clericis (Et infra:) Nullus episcoporum vel clericorum ad iudicia saecularia est trahendus. Habent enim illi suos iudices, nec quicquam est eis publicis commune cum legibus. Bonifacius vero Papa et Gelasius, et alii plures antecessorum nostrorum antiquioribus conciliis consonantes, sicut bene patet viris iuris utriusque peritis, id ipsum in sacris constitutionibus ediderunt. Hac igitur ratione inducti, per apostolica scripta Mandamus, quatenus, si quas causas pecuniarias clerici Parisius commorantes habuerint contra aliquos, vel aliqui contra eos, ipsas appellatione remota iure canonico decidatis, nec permittatis iuri scripto consuetudinem praevalere.

Chapter X

Latin source headnote: A layman cannot sue a layman concerning a civil matter before an ecclesiastical judge unless secular justice is lacking or custom demands it.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Vercelli.

Although, by reason of the office of service we have assumed, we are debtors to all in justice, nevertheless it is fitting for us to provide for certain persons in their own right in such a way that we do not appear to do injury to others, and that—God forbid—matter of scandal is not taken from the source from which it ought to be stilled by provident consideration. You should know that we have learned from the representation of our beloved sons, the consuls and commune of Vercelli, that, although they wish to exhibit the fullness of justice to every complainant according to approved custom concerning each question moved against them before the consuls of justice, certain persons, in order to nullify their jurisdiction and weary them with labors and expenses, obtain apostolic letters concerning matters that do not touch ecclesiastical judgment. Thus, in addition to weakening the jurisdiction of the consuls, they compel them to labor in many ways. Therefore, wishing to consult their advantage in such a way that we do not allow the justice of others to perish, through apostolic writings we command your fraternity that, whenever it should happen that such letters are obtained from the Apostolic See by laymen of Vercelli concerning matters, especially those that touch the secular forum, you decree them by our authority null and void, with the obstacle of appeal removed, provided that the said consuls and commune exhibit complete justice in secular judgment to those complaining against them.

Nevertheless, let it be lawful for those who have considered that they must contend in this way under the same consuls, if they feel themselves aggrieved in anything, to appeal to your hearing, as has been observed hitherto, or to ours if they prefer—especially at this time when, the empire being vacant, those who are oppressed by superiors in their justice cannot have recourse to a secular judge. But if the consuls of justice have been recused as deservedly suspect, let the cause of suspicion be conducted before arbitrators elected in common; and if it is proved to be just, let recourse be had to you or to us for justice, as is expressed above. [Given at Ferentino, on the second day before the Kalends of June, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Volentes igitur sic eorum utilitati consulere, ne patiamur aliorum iustitiam deperire, fraternitati tuae per apostolica scripta* Mandamus, quatenus, si quando a laicis Vercellensibus tales literas super rebus, praecipue quae forum saeculare contingunt, a sede apostolica contigerit impetrari, eas sublato appellationis obstaculo, decernas auctoritate nostra irritas et inanes, dummodo dicti consules et commune de se conquerentibus in iudicio saeculari exhibeant iustitiae complementum. Liceat tamen ipsis, qui sub eisdem consulibus taliter duxerint contendendum, si se in aliquo senserint praegravari, ad tuam, sicut hactenus servatum est, vel ad nostram, si maluerint, audientiam appellare, hoc praesertim tempore, quo vacante imperio ad iudicem saecularem recurrere nequeunt, qui a superioribus in sua iustitia opprimuntur. Si vero consules iustitiae tanquam merito suspecti fuerint recusati, coram arbitris communiter electis de causa suspicionis agatur, quae si probata fuerit esse iusta, ad te vel ad nos pro iustitia recurratur, sicut superius est expressum. Chapter XI

Latin source headnote: A widow cannot sue a layman before an ecclesiastical judge except concerning an ecclesiastical cause or in the absence of a secular judge.

The same, to the Archdeacon and Treasurer of Tours.

It was intimated to our ears from the tenor of the letters of the nobleman G., Count of Brittany, that, when we had committed to you and G. of good memory, master of the schools of Saint Martin, the cause known to be conducted between the noblewoman F. and the nobleman I. de Meduano concerning her inheritance, to be terminated with a due end, the same count commanded that woman—since both she and the aforesaid I. belonged to his forum—to refer the cause to him, promising her that in his court he would cause the fullness of justice to be exhibited to her, taking care nevertheless to intimate to you that a business of this kind ought to be terminated in his court. But you and the aforesaid woman, wholly unwilling to obey him, strive to proceed in the cause and less than reasonably to take his jurisdiction from him. Hence he humbly petitioned us to deign to remit the cause to him, to whom it specially belongs.

Therefore, considering that we are debtors to widows in justice in such a way that we ought not to do injustice to others, through apostolic writings we command your discretion that, unless the cause is of a kind known to pertain to an ecclesiastical judge, you take care to suspend action upon it, provided that she can obtain her justice through a secular judge; otherwise, notwithstanding his contradiction, you are to terminate the cause, according to the form handed to you in other letters, reason leading the way. [Dat. Romae ap. S. Petrum Kal. Ian. A. VIII. 1205.]

Chapter XII

Latin source headnote: A cleric cannot constitute a layman as judge for himself, even if his own oath and the adversary's consent are added.

The same, to the Archbishop of Pisa.

If with diligence—And below: [cf. c. 17, On Prescriptions, II.26.] Concerning this, however, we wonder greatly and are moved that, although we consider you a provident and discreet man, and although, according to the obligation of the pontifical office, the statutes of the holy Fathers ought not to be unknown to you, and you are known to have an abundance of jurists, you asserted that until these times you had held, and held as certain, that it was lawful for any cleric to renounce his right, at least in temporal causes, and to constitute a layman as judge for himself—especially where the adversary's will was added—and by this you tacitly imply that you were reasonably reproved because you answered that an oath interposed concerning this matter ought to be kept, forgetful of that constitution by which it is provided that an agreement of private persons in no way derogates from public law.

Therefore, since this law was specially promulgated at the Councils of Milevis and Carthage—that clerics are not to draw clerics, after abandoning their own bishop, to public judgments, otherwise they lose the cause and are held outside communion; and that bishops as well as deacons, or any clerics, in a criminal or civil business, if they wish to clear themselves in public judgments after abandoning ecclesiastical judgment, even if sentence is rendered for them, lose their place, and this in a criminal action, but in a civil action lose what they have recovered if they prefer to retain their place—it is manifestly plain that they cannot agree voluntarily, any more than involuntarily, to undergo secular judgments. For this is not a personal benefit capable of being renounced, but one publicly [and generally] granted rather to the whole ecclesiastical college, which an agreement of private persons cannot derogate. Nor could an oath lawfully be observed which is framed by unlawful agreements contrary to canonical statutes. [Concerning the other matter, etc. (cf. c. 17, On Prescriptions, II.26.) Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the second day before the Nones of May, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Chapter XIII

Latin source headnote: Clerics are to be sued concerning their excesses before their own bishop, not before those whom they serve, unless custom or privilege introduces otherwise.

The same, to the Bishop of Beauvais.

Since it sometimes happens—(And below: [cf. c. 28, On Oaths, II.24.]) You further petitioned whether, when certain clerics assigned to the service of the Chapter of Beauvais or of other clerics of your diocese are proceeded against concerning excesses, they are to be compelled to answer the complainants before you or rather before those whom they serve, since those persons contend that they have jurisdiction of this kind, although they cannot excommunicate the clerics or otherwise coerce them. Concerning this, we answer your fraternity in this way: the complainants ought to have recourse concerning such matters to you, as the ordinary judge, especially if the clerics are proceeded against concerning crimes which they are known to have committed in your diocese, unless perhaps those whom the offending clerics serve are able to claim jurisdiction of this kind for themselves by an indulgence or special custom. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of January, in the thirteenth year of our pontificate, 1210.]

Quum contingat interdum (Et infra: [*cf. c. *28. de iureiur. II. 24.]) Insuper postulasti, an, quum aliqui clerici deputati servitio capituli Belvacensis aut aliorum clericorum tuae dioecesis super excessibus impetuntur, sint cogendi coram te, vel potius coram illis, quibus serviunt, querelantibus respondere, quum illi sibi iurisdictionem huiusmodi vendicare contendant, licet illos excommunicare non valeant, vel alias etiam coercere. Super quo fraternitati tuae taliter respondemus, quod ad te, utpote ordinarium iudicem, de talibus debent conquerentes habere recursum, maxime si super his criminibus impetuntur, quae in tua noscuntur dioecesi commisisse; nisi forte hi, quibus delinquentes ipsi deserviunt, ex indulgentia vel consuetudine speciali iurisdictionem huiusmodi valeant sibi vindicare. Chapter XIV

Latin source headnote: The bishop of the place of the delict condemns a cleric concerning the delict, but does not deprive him of a benefice situated elsewhere; rather, the bishop of the benefice will deprive him, as though executing the condemnation of the judge of the delict. This is what it says according to one interpretation. According to another interpretation, this is what it says: the bishop of the place of the delict condemns a cleric concerning the delict by depriving him of a benefice situated elsewhere; the real execution is carried out by the bishop of the benefice.

The same.

You petitioned to be instructed by the Apostolic See whether a priest who has a church in one diocese and resides in it, but has a domicile by reason of patrimony in another, and who commits an offense there, ought to be judged for the delict committed there by the one in whose diocese he has the patrimony, especially in causes that demand deprivation of his office or benefice. To this we answer briefly that sentence can be promulgated against him by the bishop in whose diocese he committed the offense. But as regards the benefice, the execution of a sentence of this kind is to be carried out by the one in whose diocese he holds it. You asked, etc. (cf. c. 21, On Homicide, V.12.) [Given at the Lateran, on the third day before the Kalends of May, in the sixteenth year of our pontificate, 1213.]

Ad quod breviter respondemus, quod per episcopum, in cuius dioecesi deliquit, sententia promulgari poterit in eundem. Sed ab eo, in cuius dioecesi beneficium obtinet, erit quoad illud huiusmodi exsecutio sententiae facienda. Quaesivisti etc. (cf. c. 21. de homic. V. 12.) [*Dat. Lat. III. Kal. Chapter XV

Latin source headnote: A person deserving compassion can sue a layman before an ecclesiastical judge by the interdict unde vi, even if the thing taken away is said to be feudal.

Honorius III, to the Archbishop, Dean, and Archdeacon of Tours.

It was proposed before us on behalf of our dearest daughter in Christ B., formerly illustrious Queen of England, that, when by authority of Pope John of good memory, our predecessor, she had drawn before you into a cause concerning this matter the nobleman G. de Guerchia, holder of the castle of Segré, which belonged to her by reason of dower and of which she had been despoiled by him or his accomplices contrary to justice, the said nobleman proposed by way of exception that the apostolic letters were not valid because the castle of La Guerche, where his principal domicile was situated, was in the diocese of Rennes, which was more than two days' journeys distant from Tours; hence, according to the statute of the general council, he could not be drawn there.

But it was replied on the queen's behalf that the same nobleman could sufficiently be sued at Tours according to the statute of the general council, since he was situated not only in the diocese of Rennes but also in the diocese of Angers, because he had several castles and revenues there, and the castle concerning which the question was pending was in that same diocese, which was by no means more than twelve leagues distant from Tours. He also added that, because the said queen ought to have pursued her right before the lord of the fief, the apostolic letters were not valid, since they did not mention that the lord of the fief had been requested and had been negligent or remiss in exhibiting justice to her. He further submitted that those letters had been obtained by the expression of a falsehood, because it had been suggested that the castle belonged to that queen by reason of dower, although neither at the beginning nor during the marriage had it been assigned to her by her husband as a gift on account of marriage.

To this it was answered on behalf of the queen that a despoiled widow could sue the despoiler or holder of the thing before an ecclesiastical judge without first requesting the lord of the fief, since it belongs to that judge to defend widows. Nor does it stand in the way that the castle had not been assigned to her by her husband, since King John of England of illustrious memory, the heir and successor of her husband, granted the aforesaid castle to her in exchange for other dower property, and she had long possessed it peacefully as dower. To these things it was replied on behalf of the nobleman that the aforesaid king had not been the heir of King Richard or the lord of Anjou, but rather the plunderer and invader of that castle, and thus could not transfer to the queen a right which he by no means possessed. To this the queen's party answered that an exception of this kind was not valid against the rescript and ought not to have a place in the possessory action which she was bringing against the said nobleman. Hence, lending your ears to frivolous exceptions of this kind, you have until now delayed proceeding in the principal business, to the queen's considerable grievance and loss.

But we, wishing an end to be imposed upon lawsuits, command your discretion that, if it is established to you that the said nobleman has land and a dwelling in the diocese of Angers, in which he is sometimes accustomed to reside, that the same diocese is not more than two days' journeys distant from Tours, and that the thing in litigation is situated in that diocese, then, notwithstanding the other exceptions—which appear to have a place in the petitory action rather than in the possessory action which the queen was bringing against the same nobleman—you proceed in that business according to the contents of the earlier letters, with the obstacle of every contradiction and appeal removed, reason leading the way, so fulfilling the apostolic precept that the same queen is not compelled through your failure to labor further in coming to us, and that you cannot be reproved for negligence. [Given at the Lateran, on the sixteenth day before the Kalends of February, in the first year of our pontificate, 1217.]

> Miserabilis persona potest laicum interdicto unde vi coram iudice ecclesiastico convenire, etiamsi res subtracta dicatur feudalis.

Honorius III. Archiepiscopo, Decano et Archidiacono Turonensibus.

Ex parte carissimae in Christo filiae B. quondam Angliae reginae illustris fuit propositum coram nobis, quod, quum nobilem virum G. de Guerchia detentorem castri Segrey, ratione dotalitii pertinentis ad ipsam, quo per eum vel eius complices contra iustitiam fuerat spoliata, auctoritate bonae memoriae Ioannis Papae praedecessoris nostri coram vobis super hoc traxisset in causam, dictus nobilis excipiendo proposuit, quod literae apostolicae non valebant, pro eo, quod castrum Guargiae, ubi est eius domicilium principale, consistit in dioecesi Rodonensi, quae ultra duas diaetas a Turonis est remota, unde illic trahi non poterat secundum statutum concilii generalis. Verum replicatum fuit ex parte reginae, quod idem nobilis Turonis satis poterat secundum statutum concilii generalis conveniri, quum non solum in Rodonensi dioecesi, sed etiam in Andegavensi dioecesi exsistat, eo, quod et castra et reditus plures habet in ipsa, et castrum, de quo quaestio vertitur, in eadem est dioecesi, quae a Turonis nequaquam ultra XII. leucas distat. Idem quoque adiecit, quod, quum dicta regina ius suum coram domino feudi prosequi debuisset, literae apostolicae non valebant, quum non faciebant mentionem, quod dominus feudi fuerit requisitus, et ipse in exhibenda sibi iustitia exstiterit negligens vel remissus, subiiciens, quod eaedem literae falsitate expressa fuerant impetratae, eo, quod suggestum fuerat, castrum illud ad eandem reginam ratione dotalitii pertinere, quum nec ab initio, nec durante matrimonio a viro sibi fuerat in donationem propter nuptias assignatum. Ad hoc autem fuit ex parte ipsius reginae responsum, quod vidua spoliata irrequisito feudi domino spoliatorem seu detentorem rei coram ecclesiastico iudice poterat convenire, cuius interest viduas defensare. Nec obest, quod sibi castrum illud a viro assignatum non fuerit, quum clarae memoriae I. rex Angliae, heres et successor viri sui, castrum praefatum in concambium pro aliis rebus dotalitiis eidem concessit, et ipsa illud diu pro dote pacifice possedisset. Ad haec autem fuit ex parte ipsius nobilis replicatum, quod praedictus rex heres non fuerat regis Richardi, nec dominus Andegavi, sed eiusdem castri raptor potius et invasor, et ita ius, quod ipse nequaquam habuit, transferre non potuit in reginam. Ad quod sic pars eiusdem reginae respondit, quod contra rescriptum exceptio huiusmodi non valebat, nec habere debebat locum in possessorio, quod eadem contra dictum nobilem intendebat. Unde vos aures huiusmodi exceptionibus frivolis adhibentes, in principali negotio procedere hactenus distulistis in eiusdem reginae gravamen non modicum et iacturam. Nos vero volentes, ut finis litibus imponatur, discretioni vestrae Mandamus, quatenus, si vobis constiterit, dictum nobilem terram et mansionem habere in Andegavensi dioecesi, in qua interdum consuevit commorari, et ipsam dioecesim ultra duas a Turonis non distare diaetas, et in eadem litigiosam rem esse, non obstantibus exceptionibus aliis, quae in petitorio potius, quam in possessorio, quod regina contra eundem nobilem intentabat, locum habere videntur, in ipso negotio iuxta priorum continentiam literarum, sublato cuiuslibet contradictionis et appellationis obstaculo, ratione praevia procedatis, praeceptum apostolicum taliter impleturi, quod eadem regina pro defectu vestro ad nos laborare ulterius non cogatur, nec vos possitis de negligentia reprehendi. [Dat. Later. XVI. Kal. Febr. A. I. 1217.]

Chapter XVI

Latin source headnote: Laymen who usurp ecclesiastical rights are compelled by an ecclesiastical judge as sacrilegious persons.

Gregory IX, to Brother Palmerius, Canon of the Holy Trinity.

[Our venerable brother] the Bishop of Bologna complained to us that the podestà and commune of Bologna presume violently to usurp the temporal jurisdiction which belongs by full right to the church of Bologna in [Saint John in Persiceto, Unciola, Massumatico, Poggio, Duliolo, Castel del Vescovo, and] certain [other] castles and villages, and in the quasi-possession of which it is known to have been and to be. [They caused a certain man who had perpetrated homicide at the said castle of Saint John to be exhibited to them by the rector of that castle so that he might be punished by them; they still hold him in chains and refuse to return him. Hence, through our letters we commanded them to desist from molesting the bishop, to restore the murderer to the bishop without any difficulty, and freely to permit him to exercise the aforesaid jurisdiction in the said places, while appearing before us by the feast of All Saints then next past to do and receive what the order of law dictated if they proposed that they possessed any jurisdiction in the said castles and villages. Treating this with contempt, as is said, although diligently admonished, they neither restored the aforesaid malefactor to him nor permitted the bishop freely to exercise this jurisdiction in those places, nor sent a suitable representative to us. Rather, heaping sin upon sin, after the messengers of both parties had approached the Apostolic See, the said podestà and commune sent certain persons on their behalf to investigate and punish a certain crime perpetrated in the territory of Duliolo, which belonged to the jurisdiction of that church, concerning which an inquiry had been made through the messengers of the said bishop and pledges and other securities had been accepted from the malefactors. For this reason the messengers of the same bishop humbly petitioned us that we ought to provide concerning these matters for the indemnity of the church of Bologna.]

But since it is very unjust [and an enormous sacrilege] that things conferred upon venerable churches for the remedy of sins, or left to them, or otherwise acquired by them in just ways, [by faithful and Catholic men, by whom it is fitting that they be preserved,] be applied to other uses, the invaders of those things are therefore deservedly, as sacrilegious persons, [unless they restore them, through the rectors of the churches, since sacrilege is an ecclesiastical crime,] to be subjected to anathema until suitable satisfaction. [It is also known to have been introduced in favor of churches that the rectors of venerable places can sue their malefactors before whichever judge they prefer. But, an exception to the forum having been opposed through your messengers, it was urgently petitioned by them that, since a claimant regularly ought to follow the defendant's forum, we should leave a question of this kind to secular judgment.]

[Therefore, after diligent deliberation concerning these matters with our brothers, with paternal sweetness we admonish, entreat, and beseech them, adjuring them by the salvation of their souls and calling God to witness, that, since in this matter it is far more glorious to be conquered than to conquer, they not refuse to receive saving medicine, but, granting us these things by gratuitous liberality in hope of eternal reward, render due satisfaction to God and the Church concerning the aforesaid matters. For with solicitous affection we desire the salvation of the citizens of their city, devoted to the Roman Church, taking care to bind what is broken and bring back what is cast away, and desiring to recall them through our patience to penance. Therefore, unwilling to dissemble the affliction of the same church, to the peril of the said podestà and commune which is involved in it, lest we act contrary to the obligation of our office, knowing that we ought to obey God rather than men, through apostolic writings] we command your discretion that, if the aforesaid matters are established to you, after [your diligent] admonition has first been given, you compel them through ecclesiastical censure, with appeal removed, to cease from conduct of this kind and to make satisfaction for past damages and injuries. [The witnesses, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the sixth day before the Kalends of February, in the fourth year of our pontificate, 1230.]

Textual note: The clause Civitatis enim suorum ecclesiae Romanae devotae is grammatically difficult in both e-texts. The translation follows the contextual sense, taking it to refer to the citizens and their city as devoted to the Roman Church.

Latin source headnote: One privileged not to be bound to answer except in a certain place can be sued there, and also where he has his domicile, if he promises to answer or pay in another place. According to Johannes Andreae.

The same, to the Bishop of Durham.

Our beloved sons I. and A., Roman citizens, showed us by their petition that, when they had obtained letters for the Abbot of Saint Geneviève of Paris against R., your predecessor, concerning a certain sum of money, you caused it to be proposed that it has been granted by the Apostolic See to all Englishmen that they cannot be sued in pecuniary causes on this side of the sea, on account of which the same abbot did not proceed in the business. But because, even if such a privilege had been granted, it nevertheless would not benefit those who promised their adversaries to answer or pay in a certain place, since they can be sued both there and where they have their domicile, we command that you satisfy them, as you are bound, concerning the money itself together with just and moderate expenses and suitable satisfaction for damages, with usury ceasing altogether. Otherwise, through our letters we command the same abbot to proceed without the loss of delay in the business committed to him according to the tenor of our prior mandate, notwithstanding the indulgence proposed on your behalf.

Verum, quia, etsi fuisset privilegium tale concessum, non tamen prodesset illis, qui se certo loco respondere vel solvere adversariis promiserunt, quum ibi et ubi domicilium habent valeant conveniri: mandamus, quatenus eisdem de pecunia ipsa cum iustis et moderatis expensis, et congrua satisfactione damnorum, usuris omnino cessantibus, satisfacias, ut teneris. Latin source headnote: Although laymen can prorogate the jurisdiction of one who is not their judge, clerics nevertheless cannot do so unless the consent of the diocesan bishop is added and the judge whose jurisdiction they wish to prorogate is an ecclesiastical person.

The same, to the Abbot of Troyes.

You signified to us that the cleric P., at the petition of the merchant C., subjected himself to your jurisdiction if he did not satisfy him concerning borrowed money by the term now elapsed. (And below:) We answer your inquiry in this way: although the consent of private persons can constitute as their own judge one who is known to preside over a jurisdiction, nevertheless clerics cannot consent to one who is not their judge unless perhaps he is an ecclesiastical person and the will of the diocesan bishop is added.

Chapter XIX

Latin source headnote: One lawfully cited is bound to prosecute the cause before the judge who cited him, notwithstanding that after the citation he changed his forum.

The same.

You proposed to us that a certain subject of yours, lawfully cited by you to a cause at the petition of a certain adversary of his, intends to decline your judgment because he afterward began to belong to another's jurisdiction. But we do not believe it doubtful to your prudence that in the aforesaid cause he has no right to recall the forum, since he has, as it were, already been forestalled by the other party.

Chapter XX

Latin source headnote: Every cleric can be sued in the Roman curia, although otherwise he does not specifically obtain a forum there; nevertheless, for cause he has the right to be sent back home.

The same.

Although by reason of delict, contract, domicile, or the thing concerning which a cause is moved against a possessor—by which grounds a person regularly obtains a forum—your bishop had not been sued at the Apostolic See, nevertheless, because that same See is the mother and mistress of all churches, he could rightly be compelled to answer his adversaries there, unless he had come for another just and necessary cause; and if he had alleged that cause at the time, his right to be sent back home would have been preserved.

> Quisque clericus potest in curia Romana conveniri, licet alias specifice forum ibi non sortiatur; habet tamen ex causa ius revocandi domum.

> Licet ratione delicti, seu contractus, aut domicilii, sive rei, de qua contra possessorem causa movetur, quibus forum regulariter quis sortitur, episcopus vester apud sedem apostolicam conventus non fuerit, quia tamen omnium ecclesiarum mater est eadem et magistra, rite compelli potuit, ut ibi suis adversariis responderet, nisi pro alia iusta et necessaria causa venisset, quam si tunc allegasset, ius revocandi domum salvum fuisset eidem.

Title III: On the Offering of the Complaint

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: The claimant is bound to present the complaint in writing. Or thus: the judge ought not to admit a claimant to litigate unless he first offers the complaint in writing. This is what it says in other words.

From the council at Saint-Médard.

Bishop Ignarus said: "Do you have a written complaint of protest or petition, as ecclesiastical tradition requires?" But they answered that they had no complaint at hand. Bishop Ignarus said: "The authority of ecclesiastical laws [is such that in causes concerning transactions it always requires writing, to such an extent that one who approaches the sacred font is commanded to give his name; one who is advanced to the highest priesthood is elected by a decree confirmed by the hands of all. One ordained, moreover, is commanded to receive letters from those who ordained him. One who is also separated from ecclesiastical fellowship by any excess is either received or cast out by a written document. But one who is accused, excommunicated, or reconciled is commanded to be accused or reconciled through writing. And thus in other matters of this kind writing is required to such an extent that, as blessed Gregory writes in his memorandum to John the defender, taking from the Roman laws, a sentence pronounced without writing does not deserve even to have the name of a sentence."]

"Therefore, brothers [and sons,] you must, according to ecclesiastical authority, declare your protest in the sequence of a written complaint and present it to the [sacred] synod, confirmed by your hands, so that an answer can then be made to you fittingly and canonically." And then those brothers, drawing up a written complaint [and subscribing their names to it], presented it to Hincmar [the bishop, etc.]

> Ignarus episcopus dixit: Habetis libellum reclamationis vel postulationis, sicut ecclesiastica se habet traditio? Illi [autem] responderunt, se prae manibus nullum habere libellum. Ordinatus autem a suis ordinatoribus literas accipere iubetur. Qui etiam ab ecclesiastica societate quolibet excessu discinditur libellari scriptione aut recipitur aut deiicitur. Sed qui accusatur, vel excommunicatur, seu reconciliatur, per scripturam accusari vel reconciliari iubetur. Et sic in ceteris huiusmodi in tantum scriptura deposcitur, ut sicut B. Gregorius in commonitorio ad Ioannem defensorem ex Romanis legibus sumens scribit, sententia, quae sine scriptura profertur, nec nomen sententiae habere mereatur.*] Quapropter, fratres [et filii,] Oportet vos secundum ecclesiasticam auctoritatem reclamationem vestram libelli serie declarare, eamque vestris manibus roboratam synodo [sacrae] porrigere, ut tunc vobis convenienter et canonice valeat responderi. Et tunc ipsi fratres libellum conscribentes [eique sua nomina subscribentes] porrexerunt Hincmaro [episcopo etc.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: When a real action is brought, it is not sufficient that the thing be sought generally; rather, it ought to be specified in such a way that obscurity and equivocation are avoided.

Innocent III.

It was declared to our apostolate by the representation of the brothers T. and R. that, when a cause had been conducted before our beloved sons the Abbot and Prior of Saint Bartholomew of Noyon, judges delegated by the Apostolic See, between them on one side and V. Turpis de Athechi and his sisters of the diocese of Soissons on the other concerning a certain piece of land, after a complaint had been offered to them, the same T. and R., since they had several lands, petitioned the judges that the land concerning which the question was pending be shown to them. When the others refused to do this and were unwilling to define by sentence whether this ought to be granted to them, those brothers appealed from the manifest grievance to our hearing. Therefore, through apostolic writings we command your discretion that, if it is so, you, after revoking to its due state whatever you learn to have been attempted after an appeal of this kind, etc.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A defendant is not bound to answer a complaint in a personal action if the ground of the claim is not expressed.

Gregory IX, to the Archpriest of Cittanova and M., Canon of Culm.

Our beloved sons, the brothers of the church of Saint Mary de Hispida, showed us by their petition that, when the Prior and Convent of Saint Mary ad Carceres sued them concerning a certain sum of money before the Prior of the Holy Trinity of Verona by apostolic authority, it was proposed on their behalf by way of exception that, since the said prior and convent were unwilling to express in the complaint presented for the action why the said money was owed to them, they were in no way bound to answer concerning it; and because the said judge refused to admit an exception of this kind, they appealed to our hearing. Therefore we command that, if it is so, after revoking as void, etc.

Title IV: On Mutual Claims

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A judge, even a delegated one, compels the claimant to answer the defendant in a cause of counterclaim, and he shall hear both causes together in successive order and terminate them by one sentence. This is what it says.

Alexander III, to the Bishop of Volterra and the Abbot of Spongia.

We learned from your letters that our beloved sons the Abbot and Brothers of the monastery of Maturum are prepared to undergo your examination concerning the questions which the plebanus and clerics of Maturum propose against them if the latter ought immediately to answer concerning their questions. But because the order of reason requires that the plebanus and clerics of Maturum ought to answer the abbot and brothers of the monastery of Maturum in your presence concerning the things which they propose against them, since they petition that justice be exhibited to them by those persons before you as delegates of the Apostolic See, through apostolic writings we command your discretion, by way of precept, that, after the action of the plebanus and clerics has been proposed and an answer made, admonition having first been given, you compel them immediately to answer the said abbot and brothers before you concerning their own questions; and that you, afterward hearing in turn the arguments and allegations of the parties more diligently, terminate the business of both by agreement or judgment.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: The manner of proceeding given by rescript in the cause of the original claim is understood to be repeated in the cause of the counterclaim.

Celestine III, to the Dean of Rouen.

We follow your prudence with due thanksgiving of praise because, in the manner of a prudent man, you consider that the Apostolic See is to be consulted upon points of law concerning which you sometimes doubt, [to which, indeed, the ancient Fathers established that all difficult questions and causes should fittingly be referred.] You consulted us whether, when a cause is committed with appeal removed and the defendant brings a counterclaim against the claimant before the same judge or judges—which can lawfully be done under the constitution of both canon and civil law—and the claimant interposes the obstacle of appeal concerning the counterclaim, deference is to be shown to an appeal of this kind.

We hold that, since in this case the condition or cause of the claimant and defendant is the same, and each ought to be assessed by one and the same law concerning the remedy of appeal, no deference is to be shown to an appeal interposed in this manner. For we have learned, by the testimony of Christ himself, who is Truth, that all things which people wish others to do to them they ought also to do to others. Nor does the jurist dissent from this sentence, because, besides the Authentic which begins "And consequently," in which this is expressly contained concerning the making of a counterclaim, it is established elsewhere that a person is to use the same law which he has determined should be established against another. Therefore, just as the claimant desires justice to be done to him according to the mandator's rescript with appeal removed, in the same manner he ought to answer in justice the one bringing a counterclaim against him. Title V: On Joinder of Issue

Sole Chapter

Latin source headnote: Joinder of issue occurs not through positions and answers but through a petition proposed in court and the answer that follows it; when it is omitted, the proceedings are null.

Gregory IX, to the Abbot of Saint John in the Vineyards.

Formerly, matter for a question arose between the Bishop of Noyon on one side and the Chapter of the Church of Saint-Quentin on the other concerning certain injuries, sentences of excommunication, and certain other articles. (And below:) The judges, after certain positions had been made and answers given to them, and having also heard what the parties wished to propose before them, remitted that cause to apostolic examination. Therefore, when the proctors of the parties had been established in our presence for this reason, although positions and answers had been made on each side before the aforesaid judges concerning several articles, nevertheless, because we did not find that joinder of issue had occurred—since joinder of issue occurs not through positions and answers to them, but through a petition proposed in court and the answer that follows it—we judged, with the counsel of our brothers, that their proceedings were to be declared void.

Title VI: That Before Issue Has Been Joined No Proceeding Is to Be Had to the Reception of Witnesses or to Definitive Sentence

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: If an action concerning adultery is brought for separation from bed, and before joinder of issue the defendant is contumacious, he can be excommunicated; but witnesses cannot be received, nor can the cause be decided.

Innocent III, to the Abbot of Saint Proculus and L. the Canon.

For this purpose God established the governance of the whole Church in the Apostolic See, [so that, because according to Holy Scripture God made man upright, but man involved himself in infinite questions, difficult knots of questions may be referred to it to be dissolved by its upright judgment.] It came to the knowledge of our apostolate through the representation of your letters that, when the cause pending between R. and B. his wife had been committed to you by apostolic authority, the proctor of the same R. was unwilling to answer the wife's complaint, by which she accused her husband of adultery for separation from bed and so that she might recover her dowry, until his advocate should come, and he sought adjournments.

When, by frequently seeking adjournments of this kind, he appeared to mock you, you received the woman's witnesses after taking counsel. At last the proctor, approaching your presence, said that he was prepared to answer; but on the appointed day, when it was believed that he would answer the complaint mentioned above, he first petitioned on the husband's behalf that the wife be restored, appealing lest it be done otherwise. But because the woman said that she held her husband suspect—both because in his house she had been compelled to confess that she had committed adultery with several persons and because he publicly kept a prostitute—and the same proctor neither gave security for the woman's safety nor afterward took care to present himself before you, you endeavored again to receive the woman's witnesses, and, after the attestations were published, diligently heard what was alleged in her name.

But because, when you treated with jurists concerning the rendering of sentence, you found different counsels from different persons—some saying that simple deference was to be shown to the appeal, others that deference was not to be shown to it, and some also asserting that the appeal did not hold at all, since the woman was not to be restored to a husband held suspect unless sufficient security for her safety had been given—you wished to consult us, amid such variety, concerning how one was to proceed in this business. Therefore, with the counsel of our brothers, we answer your consultation in this way: although the judicial order is to be observed in other controversies and is not observed in every respect in matrimonial causes, nevertheless, because in the present business the action concerns not the bond of marriage but the crime of adultery, through which separation of the marriage, not union, is intended, and because witnesses were received and the attestations even published before issue was joined, whether or not deference should have been shown to the appeal, no proceeding is to be had to definitive sentence. The aforesaid R. could nevertheless have been bound by a sentence of excommunication on account of his own contumacy, or even that of his proctor if, knowing of it, he did not purge it. [Given at Perugia, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of October, 1198.]

UT LITE NON CONTESTATA NON PROCEDATUR AD TESTIUM RECEPTIONEM VEL AD SENTENTIAM DIFFINITIVAM.

Si agatar de adulterio ad separationem tori, et ante litis contestationem reus est contumax, potest excommunicari; sed testes recipi non possunt, nec causa diffiniri.

Innocentius III. Abbati sancti Proculi et L. Canonico.

Ad hoc Deus in apostolica sede constituit totius ecclesiae magistratum, [ut, quia secundum scripturam sanctam fecit Deus hominem rectum, sed ipse se infinitis miscuit quaestionibus, ad eam nodi quaestionum difficiles referantur, suo recto iudicio dissolvendi.] Ad apostolatus [quippe] nostri notitiam literarum vestrarum insinuatione pervenit, quod, Quum causa, quae inter R. et B. uxorem eius vertitur, auctoritate apostolica vobis commissa fuisset, tandem procurator eiusdem R. libello uxoris, quo virum ad separationem tori, et ut dotem reciperet, de adulterio accusabat, noluit respondere, donec advocatus eius veniret inducias postulando. Qui quum huiusmodi inducias saepe petendo vobis illudere videretur, vos testes mulieris habito consilio recepistis; tandem procurator ad praesentiam vestram accedens, dixit, se respondere paratum; sed die statuto, quum crederetur responsurus libello, de quo praemisimus, restitutionem uxoris ex parte viri primo fieri postulavit, ne secus fieret appellando. Verum quia dicebat mulier, se virum habere suspectum, tum quia in domo eius coacta fuerat se adulteratam cum pluribus confiteri, tum quia meretricem publice retinebat, et idem procurator nec de mulieris impunitate cavere, nec vestro se curasset postmodum conspectui praesentare, vos testes mulieris iterum recipere studuistis, et attestationibus publicatis diligenter audistis quae fuerunt ipsius nomine allegata. Quia vero, quum de ferenda sententia cum iuris prudentibus tractaretis, diversorum invenistis diversa consilia, quibusdam dicentibus appellationi simpliciter deferendum, aliis autem appellationi deferendum non esse; nonnullis etiam asserentibus, appellationem nullatenus tenuisse, quum mulier non sit viro restituenda suspecto, nisi, de impunitate sufficienti praestita cautione: vos in tanta varietate nos consulere voluistis, qualiter esset in hoc negotio procedendum? Nos igitur Consultationi vestrae de consilio fratrum nostrorum taliter respondemus, quod, licet ordo iudiciarius in aliis controversiis sit servandus, et in matrimonialibus causis non usquequaque servetur, quia tamen in praesenti negotio non est actum de foedere matrimonii, sed de crimine adulterii, per quod ad separationem coniugii, non ad coniunctionem intenditur, quia lite non contestata testes fuerunt recepti, et attestationes etiam publicatae, sive deferendum sive non deferendum appellationi fuisset, non est ad diffinitivam sententiam procedendum.

> Potuit tamen praefatus R. propter suam contumaciam, vel etiam procuratoris, si sciens non purgavit eandem, excommunicationis sententia innodari. [Dat. Perusii XV. Kal. Oct. 1198.]

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: In a cause of restitution, sentence cannot be pronounced against a contumacious person before issue has been joined. This states the rule, comprehending every manner of summarizing it.

The same, to the Patriarch of Jerusalem and the Archbishop of Caesarea.

Approaching our presence, our venerable brother the Bishop of Paphos presented to us letters of our venerable brothers the Bishops of Acre, Tiberias, and Beirut, containing the sentence which those bishops promulgated concerning the cause pending between our venerable brother the Archbishop of Tyre on one side and the plebanus of Saint Mark on the other. The aforesaid bishops asserted through their letters that, when they had undertaken by our mandate to terminate that cause, they summoned the parties to their presence. But the [aforesaid] plebanus was willing neither to receive their letters, in which the tenor of our mandate was expressed, nor to present himself before them; and, when cited a second time, although he had been willing to receive [neither their messenger] nor their letters, he appeared before them, alleging the causes of his earlier absence and, after inspecting the tenor of our letters and also petitioning for and receiving adjournments [from them], departed with permission, promising that he would return to them on the appointed day.

When the Archbishop of Tyre petitioned for the benefit of restitution in the presence of the delegated judges, the plebanus of Saint Mark of Venice, against whom he was proceeding, answered nothing to the objections but appealed to our hearing. And although he had frequently been admonished by them to obey the law, because his appeal did not hold—since in our letters the obstacle of appeal had been closed to the parties, although he had been recalled to judgment through their messengers—he nevertheless was unwilling to answer further or even to appear before them.

But the judges, going to the city of Tyre, when the same plebanus persisted in his contumacy, received the witnesses produced by the opposing party and, after the depositions had been reduced to writing, commanded the plebanus to approach them to object against the persons or statements of the witnesses. When he was unwilling to do this, they pronounced a sentence of excommunication against him, adjudged possession of the parochial right to the aforesaid archbishop, restored him in full so far as lay in them, and, by authority of the Apostolic See, strictly prohibited anyone from presuming to disturb the possession restored to the church of Tyre, to contravene the apostolic institution, or to exercise parochial right at Tyre as plebanus of Saint Mark or as any other person.

[Moreover, they pronounced a sentence of excommunication against all those who thereafter consented to the subtraction of parochial right by that plebanus or furnished aid or assent to him in his malice, establishing the same against the plebani to be sustained (substituted?) for him thereafter. But our beloved sons, the noblemen Orso Badoer and Marino Giacomo, sent to us on behalf of the nobleman Enrico Dandolo, Doge of the Venetians, proposed in our presence that formerly, in the recovery of the eastern land, prelates of churches and secular princes granted to the Venetians by full right a third part of the city of Tyre, which they possessed for a long time without litigation. But after the death of those who had experienced in effect their fidelity, constancy, and aid in the recovery of that land, their successors, either ignorant of or ungrateful for the benefits conferred by the Venetians upon the Holy Land, improperly moved a question against them concerning the parochial right of the church of Saint Mark—which belongs by full right solely to the church of Saint Mark situated at Venice. But when the destruction of the western land supervened, they obtained letters from Clement and Celestine of good memory, our predecessors, that before the recovery of that land they should not in any way be compelled to answer anyone concerning this matter. Hence, when the said archbishop obtained letters of commission concerning it, the aforesaid plebanus, as one who held the judges suspect for certain reason—inasmuch as it was established that two of them were suffragans of the church of Tyre—and also because the letters themselves had been obtained by suppression of the truth, since no mention of the aforesaid letters was made in them, appealed to our hearing. But after an appeal had lawfully been interposed to us, the judges, before issue had been joined, pronounced a sentence of excommunication against him and all his accomplices and presumed to adjudge possession of the parochial right to the aforesaid archbishop and his church. But when he did not obey so unjust a sentence, the same archbishop despoiled his churches of their goods.]

Therefore, since it was established to us by inspection of the sentence that issue had not been joined before those judges; since from the transcript of the letters which those predecessors of ours had granted to Venice it was manifestly apparent that the letters had been obtained by suppression of the truth; since it did not come into doubt but rather was manifest that two of the aforesaid judges—namely, the Bishops of Acre and Beirut—were subject to that archbishop as suffragans to their metropolitan; and since from these things it was established that the same plebanus had lawfully appealed, even if he had appealed less than lawfully, although the judges perhaps could have pronounced a sentence of excommunication against him on account of contumacy, they nevertheless ought not to have pronounced definitive sentence concerning the principal business before issue had been joined. Therefore, with the counsel of our brothers, we quashed the aforesaid sentences rendered by those judges—or rather declared them quashed and void—and we will that no prejudice be inflicted through them upon the church of Saint Mark or its supporters.

Hence we commanded the [said] Archbishop of Tyre to restore to the same church of Saint Mark [both] the instruments and also everything which, on the occasion of a sentence of this kind, he had occupied personally or through others, and not to impede the Venetian church from enjoying possession of its parochial right and other dignities as it had before the sentence was rendered. [Therefore, your fraternity, etc. Given at the Lateran, on the Nones of April, in the third year of our pontificate, 1200.]

Latin source headnote: The reception of witnesses made against a person who is not contumacious before issue has been joined is null in a matrimonial cause.

The same, to the Abbots de Decima and Helemosio of the dioceses of Orléans and Chartres.

Approaching the Apostolic See, our beloved son, the nobleman G., Viscount of Benaicum, [showed us with humble complaint that, when he had lawfully taken the noblewoman Eustachia as wife and had received two daughters from her, at last that noblewoman, at the persuasion of the enemy of the human race, withdrew from him. And when he could not obtain justice concerning this matter from our venerable brother the Bishop of Poitiers, his diocesan, at the petition of his messengers and of the same woman we considered that the cause pending between them concerning their marriage should be committed to our beloved sons the Abbot of Saint-Léger, the Dean of Saint Peter, and the Prior of Saint-Hilaire de la Celle at Poitiers. As they intimated to us through their letters, when it had been clearly established to them that the aforesaid E. had withdrawn by her own authority from her husband, by whom she had received two daughters, after taking the counsel of prudent men they decreed that the same E. ought to return to her husband, with full power reserved to her to accuse the marriage after her return if she wished. When she was unwilling to do this, they bound her by the chain of excommunication and subjected her land and household to ecclesiastical interdict.]

[But when we afterward commanded that sentence to be inviolably observed, as it had reasonably been rendered, until suitable satisfaction, at last the same E., at the suggestion of our venerable brother the Bishop of Angers and our beloved sons the Abbots de Granateria and de Bellofonte, obtained the delegation of that cause to our venerable brother the Bishop and our beloved son G., Archdeacon of Quimper, and Master P. de Buter, Canon of Angers, under this form: that, if it were established to them that the same woman, as the same bishop and abbots had written to us, had been unable on account of wars to approach the aforesaid judges at the place fixed for her, and that she had wished to give the opposing party safe conduct on the border of the bishoprics of Poitiers and Angers and to furnish most sufficient security that she would preserve them harmless, then, after revoking as void whatever they found rashly attempted to her prejudice after an appeal lawfully interposed to us, notwithstanding the aforesaid commission they should summon the parties before them and, after fully hearing and considering the arguments on each side, terminate the cause with a due end, appeal removed, causing what they decreed to be firmly observed through ecclesiastical censure.]

[But they, as we perceived was contained in their letters, after assigning the parties a term at Vouvant and afterward at Luçon, received through letters and a proctor the excuse of the same viscount, who asserted that he did not dare approach those places because his enemies held dominion there and because of the danger of death. The opposing party and the barons who were present there answered him that they had sent that viscount letters of safe conduct, together with letters of the Viscount of Thouars, Seneschal of Poitou, through a messenger. The viscount's proctor replied that he did not dare approach a place suspect to him on account of letters, but petitioned that a safe place be assigned to him and that his wife be restored. He said that, if the judges were unwilling to do this, his lord was being aggrieved; on this account he had recourse to the remedy of appeal and afterward, although requested, was unwilling to answer before the judges, asserting that they were manifestly suspect, and renewed the appeal that had been made. But the judges, believing that the appeal was not lawful and afterward learning through witnesses that sentence had been rendered against the said woman after the appeal, declared that it did not hold at all.]

[At last, after a peremptory term had been assigned to the parties at Pouzauges, [...] the Dean of Tours, uncle of the same viscount, offered that he would come on his behalf if safe conduct were granted him, alleging nevertheless through letters causes of suspicion against the judges: namely, that the bishop was a blood relative of the nobleman G. de Thouars, Count of Brittany, who was involving himself excessively in that woman's cause, and was subject to the power of the same count; that the archdeacon was a cleric and table-companion of the same count; and that Master P. [...] de Buter originated from the woman's land. But the judges, after afterward assigning another peremptory term to the parties, received the woman's witnesses concerning the consanguinity and, after another term had been assigned to the parties at Malleonia, caused the attestations to be published, while the viscount excused himself through his letters.]

[Finally, when a term had been assigned to the parties for receiving sentence, and when the woman's messengers and [...] the Archdeacon of Tours, brother of the viscount, had been established in their presence, the woman's messengers petitioning for sentence and the archdeacon seeking a term on behalf of his brother, with the counsel of prudent men they assigned the parties a term on which they ought to proceed in the cause according to the order of law. But the woman's messengers, departing contumaciously, appealed on the following day to our hearing, saying that grievance was being inflicted upon their lady because the judges had not been present at Malleonia, where they had assigned the term for rendering sentence, and because they were assigning a place outside the province, although they themselves were from the province of Tours.]

[When the judges deferred to the appeal, the woman's messenger, approaching the Apostolic See, proposed that, although in that cause the aforesaid judges had several times cited the same viscount by peremptory process to suitable places and at lawful intervals, the aforesaid woman appearing, the same viscount was unwilling to come or send a sufficient representative. They therefore received the woman's witnesses and cited the viscount again by peremptory edicts to appear before them to speak against the witnesses or their testimony. But when he did not come or send a sufficient messenger, the attestations having been published by them and the parties cited to hear sentence, the same woman, the said viscount contumaciously absenting himself, petitioned that sentence be given to her; but although frequently requested, they were unwilling to proceed to it. On account of this the woman's party, feeling that grievance threatened her, appealed to our hearing.]

[But we, believing that the same woman was laboring in favor of the marriage, considered that at the messenger's petition those judges should be enjoined to proceed lawfully in the same cause according to the attestations received and to terminate it with a due end, the obstacle of every contradiction and appeal having been removed. We nevertheless commanded our beloved sons [...] the Abbots de Granateria, [...] de Insula Calveti, and [...] de Alba Corona that, if the aforesaid judges were negligent or remiss in executing our mandate, they should not delay proceeding to definitive sentence in that business according to the attestations received by those judges, with the obstacle of appeal removed. But the said Viscount of Benaicum, established in our presence,] set forth a grave complaint before us against the said judges: that, since the said Bishop of Quimper is connected in the nearest degree of blood relationship to the nobleman Guy de Thouars, Count of Brittany, and his archdeacon is a cleric and table-companion of that count—who is the viscount's principal adversary, inasmuch as he presumes publicly to detain his wife and land—and since Master P. de Buter, originating from his wife's land, is excessively favorable to her, and all are under the jurisdiction and power of the same G., the aforesaid count, and no access lies open to them except through the count's district, the persons to whom the cause between him and his wife had been committed were never willing to assign him a place and term except in the land of his enemies, which he did not dare approach without danger of death; and although he did not have letters of safe conduct, even if they had been sent to him, he ought not to have entrusted himself to his mortal enemies.

[Moreover, although we had considered that a certain form should be prescribed to them, after an appeal had lawfully been interposed to us, they abandoned the form which we had prescribed to them and, inquiring only into the appeal while passing over the order of law, when it had not been shown that the appeal was lawful or that anything had been rashly attempted, and when they had not inquired into the other chapters enjoined upon them, less than justly declared void the sentence rightly rendered against the woman.] And, presuming before issue had been joined to receive witnesses concerning the principal matter, [and rejecting his lawful exceptions, they omitted from their letters the greater part of his allegations, especially those which supported his cause, while setting forth on behalf of the opposing party many things that had not been alleged before them. Moreover, the opposing party, which had obtained the delegation of the cause to them by false suggestion, fraudulently intending through reprobate witnesses to weaken the viscount's justice under the pretext of a frivolous appeal, secretly obtained letters for those same men and the aforesaid Abbots de Granateria, de Insula Calveti, and [...] de Alba Corona concerning the rendering of sentence, while the viscount was on the road to the Apostolic See to prosecute his appeal.]

[Hence, since the fraud of his adversaries ought not to support them, and since it is established that after an appeal had lawfully been interposed to us the judges, as manifestly suspect, rashly proceeded in the cause contrary to the form of our mandate, the same viscount urgently petitioned that, after revoking as void whatever had been attempted to his prejudice by those judges or others after the appeal lawfully interposed to us, and after also revoking the letters which had been obtained by falsehood while he was coming to us, we deign to compel his wife through a sentence of excommunication and interdict of the land to return to him, compelling those who detained her and the land by the same severity to restore her and the land together with the fruits received from it, and that we cause the sentences to be published every Sunday and feast day throughout the provinces of Tours and Bordeaux and firmly observed until fitting satisfaction.]

Therefore, since in matrimonial causes we ought to be more inclined toward joining than separating, lest perhaps man presume to separate what God has joined, through apostolic writings we command your discretion that, since, as the same viscount asserts, you are nearer to the land of the already-mentioned noblewoman than to his own, the cause can more conveniently be terminated through you, since safe access lies open to you. After summoning the parties on each side and inquiring more diligently into the truth concerning the aforesaid matters, if it is established to you that before issue was lawfully joined, or after the appeal interposed for the aforesaid causes, witnesses concerning consanguinity against the marriage were received without the fault of contumacy, you are to decree attestations of this kind null and void and, appeal ceasing, compel the said noblewoman through ecclesiastical censure to return to the husband whom she left without due consideration, executing the apostolic mandate with the obstacle of every contradiction and appeal removed, so that, after the husband has received full restitution of both wife and land, you hear the cause concerning the marriage and terminate it with a canonical end. [As for contradictors, etc. Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the thirteenth day before the Kalends of March, 1205.]

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Before issue has been joined, witnesses are not regularly received concerning the principal matter. This rule fails in the cases noted here, namely when the death or long absence of the witnesses is feared. For then, with the solemnity set forth here observed, witnesses can be examined even before issue has been joined. This is what it says as far as § Moreover. When an action concerns carnal or spiritual marriage, witnesses can be received and definitive sentence rendered against a contumacious person even before issue has been joined. But if the defendant is absent, though not contumaciously, then in a carnal marriage no proceeding occurs, but the absentee is awaited. In a spiritual marriage, however, if the action concerns one already contracted, the ancient laws shall be followed; if one to be contracted, the absentee is awaited for six months. But concerning this last case, when the action concerns a marriage to be contracted, speak today as in the chapter How Great and the chapter Desiring, On Election, in the Sixth Book, where provision is made otherwise. This is what it says. § 5. For the perpetual memory of the matter, or when proceeding by way of inquiry, witnesses can be received without joinder of issue and even published. This is what it says as far as "But in other cases." § 6. If, before issue has been joined, the defendant is contumacious and a real action is brought, the claimant is placed in possession of the thing sought for the sake of custody. The defendant nevertheless recovers it if he comes within a year, provided that he offers security to stand to the law and restores the expenses; but after a year he is not heard without observing these requirements, except concerning ownership. But if one who possesses in another's name is sued by a real action, he shall name the owner in court, and a term will be established for him within which he shall cause the owner to appear. If the owner does not come within the term, the judge will cite him; if he still does not come, the judge will place the claimant in true possession. But if a contumacious defendant is sued by a personal action, the claimant will be placed in possession of the defendant's goods according to the amount of the debt declared—first movable goods, and second immovable goods if no movables exist—or the defendant will be excommunicated. This is what it says to the end.

The same.

Because it is frequently called into doubt by many whether witnesses can be received before issue has been joined, we have considered that it should be declared by authority of the present writings to be regularly true that, before issue has been joined, no proceeding is to be had to the reception of witnesses, unless perhaps the death or long absence of the witnesses is feared. In these cases, when one is to proceed civilly, lest the truth be concealed and an abundance of proof be taken away by fortuitous events, the elderly, the infirm, and other witnesses concerning whom fear exists for some reasonable cause are without doubt to be admitted even before issue has been joined, whether the party sued is contumacious or is absent without malice so that he cannot be sued. But if the claimant does not sue the adversary within a year from the time when he can be sued, or at least does not announce to him a reception of witnesses of this kind, the attestations so received are not to be valid, lest perhaps he procure this by fraud so that, through the passage of time, lawful exceptions for excluding the witnesses, or others, cannot have a place.

§ 1. Moreover, special causes can occur in which something else is incidentally to be observed, as, for example, if a question is moved concerning someone's election or marital union. For then, lest a church suffer injury in spiritual and temporal things because of long delay, or an occasion of fornication be furnished to a man or woman—especially when a degree of kinship prohibited by divine law is objected—in cases of this kind, if namely the person against whom the action was to be directed appears contumacious, either because, after receiving a peremptory citation, he treats coming with contempt, or because he maliciously conceals himself, or because he impedes the citation from reaching him, witnesses are deservedly to be admitted before issue has been joined, and nevertheless, if the cause is clear, one is to proceed to definitive sentence.

§ 2. But if he is absent otherwise, and the action concerns a spiritual marriage already contracted between a prelate and a church—especially when the election has been confirmed—we will that what is defined in the sacred canons concerning awaiting such persons be observed in this article.

§ 3. But if perhaps the action concerns a spiritual marriage to be contracted, the person elected as prelate is to be awaited for the space of six months, unless, after weighing the circumstances of the business, he is to be awaited for more or less time by the superior's providence.

§ 4. But if an action concerning carnal marriage is to be brought, either spouse is to be awaited until his death is probably presumed. For since he is absent without fault—as if perhaps he is detained by captivity, illness, or another just impediment, or even stays in remote regions by his own but not malicious will, so that he cannot easily or quickly be cited—he ought not to be prejudiced, since perhaps he has lawful exceptions to destroy the opposing claim. It does not stand in the way that lapse of the flesh could be objected, since in marriage many cases occur in which spouses are compelled to remain continent without fault, although not without cause.

§ 5. There are also other similarly special cases, which we remember having distinguished elsewhere, in which witnesses can lawfully be produced without joinder of issue, as when an inquiry into excesses or publication of witnesses is imminently to be made.

§ 6. But in other cases one must prudently consider whether the contumacious person is sued by a real or personal action. If by a real action, the claimant is certainly to be placed in possession of the thing sought, so that the defendant, affected by weariness, may come to answer. If he comes within a year, let him recover possession after furnishing security to appear for judgment and exhibiting suitable satisfaction for expenses. But if he neglects to offer security within a year, after the year the claimant will be constituted the true possessor, with a lawful defense concerning ownership alone reserved to the opposing party.

§ 7. But if anyone is sued concerning immovable things which he possesses in another's name, he ought immediately to name the owner in court, within a certain space of days to be established by the judge, and bring this to the owner's knowledge so that, coming personally or directing a suitable representative, he may oppose the claimant's claim. But if, after the allotted time, he is unwilling to fulfill what has been arranged, as though the suit brought has been joined from the day on which the possessor was called to judgment for the purpose of interrupting prescription of long time, the judge shall summon the owner of the possession by three lawful edicts; and then, if he remains in the same will, after examining the business summarily, the judge shall not delay placing the claimant in possession of the things themselves, with every allegation concerning the principal question reserved to the absentee.

§ 8. But if he is sued by a personal action, either the claimant is to be placed in possession of the defendant's movable goods, or of his immovables if perhaps he has no movables, according to the amount of the debt declared, or an ecclesiastical sentence is to be pronounced against the contumacious person. The judge, namely, is to be content at the beginning with whichever penalty ought to be feared more, proceeding nevertheless to the other if the insolence of the contumacious person merits this. If he comes within a year, or even after a year, he will be heard according to the distinction noted above in the other case.

Sed si actor non convenerit adversarium infra annum, ex quo conveniri poterit, vel saltem receptionem huiusmodi testium non denunciaverit illi, attestationes sic receptae non valeant, ne forte hoc procuret in fraudem, ut processu temporis exceptiones legitimae ad repellendum testes, vel aliae locum habere non possint. 1. Porro speciales causae possunt occurrere, in quibus casualiter est aliud observandum, ut, verbi gratia, si super alicuius electione vel copula maritali quaestio moveatur. Tunc etenim, ne propter longam moram in spiritualibus et temporalibus patiatur ecclesia laesionem, vel viro sive mulieri fornicationis occasio praebeatur, maxime quum propinquitatis gradus opponitur lege divina prohibitus, in huiusmodi casibus, si videlicet contumax apparuerit is, in quem fuit actio dirigenda, sive quia peremptoria citatione recepta venire contemnit, sive quia malitiose se ipsum occultat, sive quia impedit, ne possit ad eum citatio pervenire, testes lite non contestata sunt merito admittendi, et nihilominus, si de causa liqueat, ad diffinitivam sententiam procedendum. 2. Si vero aliter absens fuerit, et agatur de spirituali coniugio inter praelatum et ecclesiam iam contracto, electione maxime confirmata, illud in hoc articulo volumus observari, quod super exspectatione talium personarum in sacris est canonibus diffinitum. 3. Quod si forsan agatur de spirituali coniugio contrahendo, is, qui est in praelatum electus, per spatium sex mensium exspectetur, nisi pensatis negotii circumstantiis per superioris providentiam magis vel minus fuerit exspectandus. 4. Si autem de carnali coniugio sit agendum, tam diu alteruter coniugum exspectetur, donec de ipsius obitu verisimiliter praesumatur, quia, quum sine culpa sit absens, ut, si captivitate, vel aegritudine, aut alio iusto impedimento forsitan teneatur, aut etiam [ex] propria, sed non malitiosa voluntate, in remotis partibus moram faciat, ut de facili vel in brevi citari non possit, ei quidem praeiudicari non debet, quum habeat forsan exceptiones legitimas ad intentionem contrariam elidendam, eo nequaquam obstante, quod de lapsu carnis posset opponi, quoniam in coniugio multi casus occurrunt, in quibus coniuges sine culpa, sed non sine causa continere coguntur. 5. Sunt et alii casus similiter speciales, quos alibi nos meminimus distinxisse, in quibus absque litis contestatione legitime possunt testes produci, ut quando excessuum inquisitio vel testium publicatio imminet facienda. 6. In aliis vero casibus prudenter est attendendum, utrum contumax actione reali, an personali conveniatur. Si reali, mittendus est utique actor in rei petitae possessionem, ut taedio affectus reus veniat responsurus. Qui si venerit infra annum, iudicio sisti praestita cautione, ac exhibita satisfactione congrua expensarum, possessionem recuperet. Quodsi cautionem offerre neglexerit infra annum, actor post annum verus constituetur possessor, super proprietate duntaxat adversae parti defensione legitima reservata. 7. Quodsi super rebus immobilibus quisquam conveniatur, qui eas possidet nomine alieno, debet statim in iudicio dominum nominare, certo dierum spatio a iudice statuendo, eoque ad eius notitiam perducendo, ut vel ipse veniens, vel idoneum dirigens responsalem actoris intentionem excipiat. Si vero post tempus indultum quod dispositum est noluerit adimplere, tanquam lite, quae ingeritur, ex eo die, quo possessor ad iudicium vocatus est, ad interrumpendam praescriptionem longi temporis contestata, dominum possessionis iudex tribus edictis legitimis evocabit, et tunc ipso in eadem voluntate manente negotium summatim examinans, in possessionem ipsarum rerum actorem mittere non tardabit, omni allegatione absenti super principali quaestione reservata. 8. Si autem super personali actione conveniatur, vel mittendus est actor in possessionem mobilium bonorum ipsius, vel immobilium, si forte mobilia non habeat, pro modo debiti declarati, vel in contumacem est ecclesiastica sententia proferenda, ita videlicet, quod alterutra poena, quae magis timeri debeat, iudex a principio sit contentus; ad alteram nihilommus processurus, si hoc meruerit protervitas contumacis, qui veniens infra annum vel post annum etiam audietur iuxta distinctionem in alio casu superius annotatam.

Title VII: On the Oath against Calumny

Chapter I

Latin source headnote: A cleric can commit the oath against calumny to another in a cause of his church, and is not compelled to swear personally, nor ought he to do so without his superior's permission.

Honorius III.

Adhering to the footsteps of our predecessors, who say that graver questions are to be terminated by the Supreme Pontiff, after diligently seeking the counsel of our brothers, with God's help we decide the form of this cause irrefragably. We therefore find it provided in the laws that no cleric is to presume to swear. Elsewhere, however, it is found written that all principal parties are to undergo the oath against calumny at the first beginning of the suit, on account of which it comes into doubt for many whether a cleric ought to furnish the oath or whether it is lawful to delegate this office to another person.

But because that constitutional edict in which clerics are prohibited from swearing appears to have been promulgated concerning the clerics of Constantinople by Marcus Augustus to Constantine, the praetorian prefect, it is therefore not believed to pertain to others. Therefore, so that this doubt may be entirely removed from all, according also to the decision of our son H., formerly emperor, made, as we have learned, at Rimini on the third day before the Nones of April, as is contained there, whose words are these: "We therefore confirm its interpretation and decree that the constitution of the divine Marcus ought to be interpreted in such a way that it is judged generally to pertain to the clerics of all churches. For since Emperor Justinian decreed by law that the canons of the Fathers ought to have the force of laws, and since in certain canons of the Fathers it is found that clerics are altogether not to dare to swear, it is fitting that the whole clerical order be immune from furnishing the oath against calumny."

Moreover, the tenor of the prince's statute in our possession is known to be this: "Therefore we, with the intention of both divine and human law preserved, decree and irretractably define by imperial authority that no bishop, no priest, no cleric of any order, no abbot, no monk, or religious woman is for any reason to be compelled to undergo an oath in any cause or controversy, whether criminal or civil; but if he knows that it is expedient for his church, let it be lawful to delegate an office of this kind to other suitable defenders—yet with this qualification, that a bishop is by no means to dare to swear without consulting the Roman Pontiff, nor any cleric without consulting his prelate."

We command all bishops, all priests generally, and the entire clergy that these provisions ought thus to be observed, so that, if anyone acts against that constitution, he may know that pardon will thereafter be denied him, and so that they do not take as an example or form from us what we recently did in the cause of our brothers and fellow bishops of the churches of Arezzo and Siena, when we assented to their will and petition.

DE IURAMENTO CALUMNIAE.

Clericus in causa ecclesiae suae iuramentum calumniae potest alteri committere, et per se iurare non cogitur, nec debet sine superioris licentia.

Honorius III.

Inhaerentes vestigiis praedecessorum nostrorum, dicentium, graviores quaestiones per summum Pontificem terminari, nostrorum fratrum consilio diligenter inquisito, huius causae speciem irrefragabiliter Deo opitulante decidimus. Legibus itaque comperimus esse cautum, ut nullus clericus iurare praesumat. Alibi vero reperitur scriptum, ut omnes principales personae in primo litis exordio subeant calumniae iuramentum, propter quod plerisque venit in dubium, atrum clericus iusiurandum praestare debeat, aut alii personae liceat hoc officium delegare. Quia vero illud constitutionis edictum, ubi clerici iurare prohibentur, a Marco Augusto Constantino praefecto praetorio de Constantinopolitanis clericis promulgatum fuisse videtur, idcirco ad alios non creditur pertinere. Ut ergo dubietas ista omnibus penitus auferatur, secundum etiam decisionem filii nostri H. quondam imperatoris, ut accepimus, Arimino factam tertio Nonas Apriles, sicut ibi continetur, cuius sunt verba haec: Eius itaque interpretationem corroboramus, et divi Marci constitutionem ita interpretari debere decernimus, ut ad omnium ecclesiarum clericos generaliter pertinere iudicetur. Nam quum imperator Iustinianus iure decreverit ut canones Patrum vim legum habere oporteat, et in nonnullis Patrum canonibus reperiatur, ut clerici omnino iurare non audeant, dignum est, ut totus clericalis ordo a iuramento calumniae praestando sit immunis. Praeterea statuti principis tenor penes nos talis esse dignoscitur: Nos itaque, utriusque divinae et humanae legis intentione servata, decernimus et imperiali auctoritate irretractabiliter diffinimus, ut non episcopus, non presbyter, non cuiuscunque ordinis clericus, non abbas, non aliquis monachus, vel sanctimonialis, in quacunque causa sive controversia, seu criminali sive civili, iusiurandum compellatur qualibet ratione subire, sed aliis idoneis defensoribus, si expedire ecclesiae suae noverit, huiusmodi officium liceat delegare, verum cum hac moderatione, ut episcopus, inconsulto Romano Pontifice, vel quisque clericus inconsulto praelato suo minime iurare audeat. Omnibus autem episcopis, ac cunctis generaliter sacerdotibus, et universo clero haec ita custodiri debere mandamus, ut, si quis in illam constitutionem commiserit, veniam sibi deinceps noverit denegari, non sumentes exemplum, seu formam a nobis, quod in causa nostrorum fratrum et coepiscoporum Aretinae et Senensis ecclesiae nuper fecimus, quando eorum voluntati et postulationi annuimus.

Chapter II

Latin source headnote: In spiritual causes the oath against calumny is not sworn.

The same, to Ordinator, Subdeacon of the Roman Church, and Master Omnibonus.

We kindly received the letters of your kindness, in which you asked whether it is fitting that the oath against calumny be furnished in the cause conducted under your examination between our venerable brother G., Bishop of Bologna, and our beloved son Aldric, Abbot of Padua. Certainly, in those cases in which an action concerns only churches, tithes, and spiritual things, the Roman Church is accustomed neither to give nor receive the oath against calumny, because such causes obtain their due end not from the strictness of the laws but from the equity of the canons; and the canons impose the oath against calumny upon no one at all in causes of this kind. Hence, the contention about furnishing the oath against calumny having been set aside, let your discretion proceed to further matters.

In spiritualibus causis de calumnia non iuratur.

Idem Ordinatori Romanae ecclesiae Subdiacono et Magistro Omnibono.

Literas benignitatis vestrae benigne recepimus, in quibus, utrum in causa, quae inter venerabilem fratrem nostrum G. Bononiensem episcopum, et dilectum filium nostrum Aldricum Paduansum abbatem sub vestro examine agitatur, iuramentum calumniae praestari conveniat, requisistis. Sane Romana ecclesia in his casibus, in quibus de ecclesiis, decimis et rebus spiritualibus tantum agitur, iuramentum calumniae nec dare, nec recipere consuevit eo, quod tales causae non ex legum districtione, sed ex canonum aequitate finem debitum sortiuntur, canones autem iuramentum calumniae in huiusmodi causis nulli prorsus indicunt. Unde, contentione de iuramento calumniae praestando dimissa, ad ulteriora discretio vestra procedat.

Chapter III

Latin source headnote: A principal party is not indiscriminately relieved from the burden of swearing the oath against calumny, although he appears through an oeconomus; rather, after inspection of the quality of the cause and persons, it is to be tendered to him or to the oeconomus. This is what it says.

Pope Eugene.

In handling causes we do not command that the oath against calumny be exhibited indiscriminately, but, when we permit it to be done and after diligent inspection of the quality of the cause and of the principal parties, we command it to be furnished sometimes by the principal parties themselves and sometimes by the oeconomi granted to them, who are not altogether ignorant of the cause, upon the soul of the person swearing. Therefore, so that the cause conducted between the Abbey of the Holy Trinity and the church of Ripoll may, by the Lord's authorship, obtain its due end without delay, by authority of the present writings we command that, as shall appear to you more salutary and suitable, you terminate the cause itself as justice dictates, with appeal removed. We also add that the monastery of the Holy Trinity is in no way to be deprived of its right on account of the injury which, while the Abbot of the Holy Trinity was ignorant, we have heard was inflicted upon the Abbot of Ripoll, if justice is otherwise known to favor it.

Principalis persona non indistincte relevatur ab onere iurandi de calumnia, licet compareat per oeconomum; sed sibi vel oeconomo est deferendum, inspecta qualitate causae et personarum. H. d.

Eugenius Papa.

In pertractandis causis sacramentum calumniae non passim praecipimus exhiberi, sed quum fieri sinimus et causae et principalium personarum qualitate diligenter inspecta, quandoque per ipsas principales personas, quandoque per oeconomos sibi indultos, qui causam omnino non nesciant, in animam iurantis illud praecipimus praestari. Ut igitur causa, quae inter abbatiam S. Trinitatis et Ripulensem ecclesiam agitatur, sine dilatione finem debitum, auctore Domino sortiatur, praesentium vobis auctoritate mandamus, quatenus sicut salubrius et competentius vobis visum fuerit, causam ipsam, appellatione remota, dictante iustitia terminetis. Adiicimus etiam ut propter iniuriam quam ignorante abbate S. Trinitatis, Ripulensi abbati audivimus illatam, si alias ei iustitiam favere dignoscitur, monasterium S. Trinitatis nullatenus suo iure privetur.

Chapter IV

Latin source headnote: A corporation is bound to swear the oath against calumny unless it relieves itself by appointing an oeconomus.

The same, to the Bishops of Maguelone and Nîmes.

The laws of secular emperors and the ecclesiastical constitutions of the holy Fathers protect and defend religious men in the service of almighty God and do not permit any molestation or disturbance contrary to holy order to be inflicted upon them. We have however learned that the oath against calumny is required from the Abbot and Brothers of Clairvaux as it is from others—although this is uncustomary among the brothers of that order—and we cannot and ought not compel them to furnish it.

§ 1. But lest they appear on an occasion of this kind unlawfully to retain the rights of others, and lest they fall from their cause if the aforesaid oath has not been furnished on their behalf when the matter demands it, we command them to appoint in their monastery, as the imperial laws permit, an oeconomus who can claim and except on their behalf and, when necessary, exhibit the oath against calumny. Therefore, through the present writings we command your fraternity that you instruct the same brothers who are in this cause more fully, as reason requires, so that they cannot thereafter lose their rights on this account and ought, so far as justice permits, to satisfy others in such causes.

§ 2. But you, brother Bishop of Nîmes, are to appoint a suitable oeconomus who appears fitting for that monastery in such an office.

> Universitas tenetur iurare de calumnia, nisi relevet se constituendo oeconomum.
>
> Idem Magalonensi et R. Neumausensi Episcopis.
>
> Imperatorum saecularium leges et sanctorum Patrum ecclesiasticae constitutiones viros religiosos in omnipotentis Dei servitio protegunt et defendunt, et nullam eis molestiam vel turbationem, quae sacro ordini contradicat, irrogari permittunt. Accepimus autem, quod ab abbate et fratribus Clarevallis, sicut ab aliis, exigitur calumniae iuramentum, quod quidem inter fratres eiusdem ordinis inusitatum est, et ad quod faciendum nos eos cogere non possumus nec debemus. 1. Sed ne aliena iura videantur huiusmodi occasione illicite detinere, et ipsi a causa sua decidant, si ex parte ipsorum praedictum iuramentum, quum res postulaverit, non fuerit praestitum, eisdem praecipimus, ut in suo monasterio, sicut imperiales leges consentiunt, oeconomum statuant, qui pro eis petere et excipere, atque iuramentum de calumnia, quum necesse fuerit, valeat exhibere. Ideoque per praesentia scripta fraternitati vestrae mandamus, quatenus eosdem fratres, qui in ista causa sunt, sicut ratio exigit, plenius instruatis, ut de cetero sua iura propter hoc non possint amittere, et aliis, quantum iustitia permittit, in talibus causis debeant satisfacere. 2. Tu vero, frater Neumausensis episcope, oeconomum idoneum statuas, qui in tali officio conveniens ipsi monasterio videatur.

Chapter V

Latin source headnote: Clerics also swear the oath against calumny in their causes, notwithstanding a contrary custom.

Lucius III, to the Bishop of Ely and the Archdeacon of Norwich.

Furthermore, because it is fitting that new antidotes be prepared for new diseases, we will and command that, in the cause concerning suretyship pending between R., cleric of Saint Albans, and I. and F., Canons of London, in order to elicit the truth you cause the oath against calumny to be furnished by both parties, appeal ceasing, notwithstanding the custom which is contrary to law. [Given at Rome, at Saint Peter's, on the fifth day before the Ides of December.]

> Clerici etiam in eorum causis iurant de calumnia, contraria consuetudine non obstante.
> Lucius III. Heliensi Episcopo et Archidiacono Norvicensi.

> Ceterum, quia novis morbis nova convenit antidota praeparari, volumus et mandamus, quatenus in causa fideiussionis, quae inter R. clericum de sancto Albano, et I. et F. canonicos Londonenses vertitur, ad veritatem eliciendam appellatione cessante praestari faciatis ab utraque parte calumniae iuramentum, consuetudine, quae legi contraria est, non obstante. [Dat. Rom. ap. S. Petr. V. Id. Dec.]

Chapter VI

Latin source headnote: The proctor or syndic of an ecclesiastical or secular corporation can swear the oath against calumny. This is what it says.

Innocent III, to the Bishop of Piacenza.

When we considered that the cause pending between our venerable brother the Archbishop of Ravenna and the commune of Faenza concerning the village of Lugo and certain other matters should be committed to delegated judges, and those judges had not proceeded in the business, we commanded the parties to present themselves before us for that cause. When their proctors, with instruments of ratification, had been established in our presence, and when there had been argument for some time in our presence concerning joinder of issue, the reception of certain witnesses, and many exceptions, we at last caused the petition of the archbishop to be exhibited through his proctor and the other party to answer it; and, after the interrogations and answers had been reduced to writing and issue had been most fully joined before us, we caused the oath against calumny to be furnished by the proctors themselves on each side. [But because, etc. (cf. c. 37, On Witnesses, II.20.) Given at Ferentino, on the tenth day before the Kalends of July, in the ninth year of our pontificate, 1206.]

Quorum procuratoribus cum instrumentis de rato in nostra praesentia constitutis, quum aliquamdiu super litis contestatione, receptione quorundam testium et multis exceptionibus fuisset in nostra praesentia disputatum, nos tandem petitionem ipsius archiepiscopi per procuratorem eius fecimus exhiberi et ad eam partem alteram respondere, ac, interrogationibus et responsionibus redactis in scriptis et lite coram nobis plenissime contestata, fecimus calumniae iuramentum ab ipsis procuratoribus utrinque praestari. Chapter VII

Latin source headnote: A bishop swears the oath against calumny if he personally chooses to litigate, with the Gospels merely set before him but not touched. But if he litigates through a syndic, he will be able to swear through him. This is what it says. § 1. A claimant who refuses the oath against calumny without cause ought to fall from the action instituted; the defendant, however, ought to be held as having confessed. This is what it says.

Gregory IX, to the Bishop of Beauvais.
